THE LEGITIMATE AND THE HONORABLE.

The legitimate is that which is said, written, acted, or performed within the lines of right, propriety, or necessity, by any person or association of persons, who set themselves before their fellow-men in positions which they deem to be essential to their existence and well-being among their fellow-men.

The honorable is that which conforms to the common; to the understanding of the community, state, or nation, and is within the lines of right thinking, common decency, and the observance of those rules of courtesy and fair dealing between men engaged in different pursuits, having similar interests at stake, and also between those who differ widely in opinions domestic, political, or religious, which partake of the chivalrous nature of the definition of charity by the Apostle Paul in the 13th chapter of 1 Corinthians.

Joseph Smith, the Martyr, fitly summed this up at the close of the "Epitome of faith": "We believe in being chaste and virtuous, and whatsoever things are lovely or of good report, we seek after those things." One of the New Testament writers, referring to the office of the bishop, said, "He should be the husband of one wife of good repute among them without." Another writer of the New Testament in his exhortation to the Saints, said, "Provide things honest in the sight of all men." In what we present under this introduction we desire the readers of the HERALD to think within the meaning of the words used, "that is legitimate and honorable."

We have before us two editions of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, one of them issued by the church in 1835, after the destruction of the press at Independence, and in pursuance of the action of a solemn assembly which met at Kirtland, Ohio, August 17, 1835, to take into consideration the work of the committee appointed the year before. The duty of this committee was to present a compilation of the revelations which had been received through the Prophet Joseph Smith, and to formulate from the revelations a declaration of faith and belief, which was to be presented to the outside world, to those already holding membership in the church, and to the prospective members who should join with the church as the result of the preaching of the word which they had received.

In section 102, par. 8, in this original Book of Covenants, is the following declaration, being a part of the document presented to that solemn assembly in 1835, defining the views of the church, on laws and government:

We believe that the commission of crime should be punished according to the nature of the offense; that murder, treason, robbery, theft, and the breach of the general peace, in all respects, should be punished according to their criminality and their tendency to evil among men, by the laws of that government in which the offense is committed; and for the public peace and tranquility, all men should step forward and use their ability in bringing offenders, against good laws, to punishment.

The other Book of Covenants is an edition published by S. W. Richards, 15 Wilton street, Liverpool, England, in 1852. In this edition, published as stated above, the section is number 110 and the paragraph is number 8, the same as in the original edition of 1835. It must be remembered by the readers of the HERALD that this latter edition was published under the rule of the Church of Utah under Pres. Brigham Young and his associates, and was published the same year that the so-called revelation on celestial marriage, including plurality of wives, was read at the special conference assembled at Utah on August 28, 1852. It is a peculiar and strikingly significant fact that in every edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants containing the revelations of God, through Joseph Smith, a declaration of principles of faith and belief published subsequent to 1852 by the Church of Utah, up to the fall of the year 1876, contained this section from which we have quoted the eighth paragraph, and alongside of this section is the one on the domestic relation, in which it was declared to be the belief of the church that there were to be but two persons acknowledged as parties to a marriage contract, one man and one woman, and that a departure from this rule was a breach of the law by which the church should be governed, and in this section on marriage the departure from this rule is called a crime. This particular statement, that such departure was a crime, was the result, as stated in the article, of the church being "reproached with the crime of fornication and polygamy." Then follows the declaration,

H O Smith
711 So Fuller ave

Inasmuch as this Church of Christ has been reproached with the crime of fornication, and polygamy: we declare that we believe that one man should have one wife; and one woman but one husband, except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again.

As to the right of the church in 1835 to make a declaration of the items of belief, currently understood and acknowledged among them as a church, by which the different officers of the church in their respective places of occupation were to be governed in their work of preaching and proselyting, we presume that there will be no possible dispute. It therefore must be concluded that the solemn assembly was within lines of legality, and its action at the time of making such declaration was legitimate. Further consideration of the subject would place it within the lines of that which was proper, and hence the propriety of such declaration, at the time, must be considered, especially so as they were looked upon with suspicion by their neighbors and those of no religious belief who were hostile to the faith because of their peculiar religious views. Besides being within the lines of what was legitimate and proper, it was eminently honorable on the part of the church to make the declaration referred to as being against the charge of being disloyal, in that their peculiar faith was said to favor and foster practices that were contrary to the rule of good order and conducive of evil. It could be held justly that they should make such declaration, conformably to the common sense of good citizenship, everywhere acknowledged to be principles of right conduct in the citizens of the common country, state, and nation.

Whatever else may be said of the church authorities in Utah, respecting their loyalty to the Government, their reverence and regard for the law of the state and nation, it can not be successfully denied that after the public declaration of the belief and practice of plural marriage, they continue to hold out to the world, through a successive publication of the book of Doctrine and Covenants, the principles of faith and practice publicly stated by the church in solemn assembly August 17, 1835, republished by Joseph Smith in 1844, published again in 1845 and 1846 at Nauvoo, Illinois, and which left a record absolutely clear, at that time, of any just imputation that the body was not living and working within lines of the declaration made by virtue of the authority of the church at that early date.

We have never heard any authoritative reason given by the church officials in Utah why the section on marriage was taken out of the book of Doctrine and Covenants in 1876 and the so-called revelation on celestial marriage, including plurality of wives, instituted in its place; nor have we ever seen by whose order this peculiar change was made. This has a peculiar and striking significance, looking at it from the viewpoint of the legitimate, with which are included the proper and honorable, especially as the section on law and government, from which we quoted paragraph 8, which was enacted by the same authority in 1835, was left without disturbance by the Utah authorities in 1876. The one on marriage was eliminated and the one on laws and government continued to be quoted by church authorities in their public services, as their faith and belief to govern their conduct and practice.

What defense can be made by those prominent church leaders in the Utah church who are living in direct contravention of and disregard for the statute enactment of the lawmaking power under their constitution and the act of admission of the State into the Union, against whom there is no movement made for punishment by the church or by their associates who, by their own declaration, "should step forward and use their ability in bringing offenders against good laws to punishment"?

That the statute enactment of the Utah legislature defining the living in polygamy (that is, with more than one woman as wife) as "unlawful cohabitation," making the offender guilty of misdemeanor, subject to a penalty more or less severe, was a kind of palliate offered by the Mormons to the strong sentiment of those not members of the church and of some members of the church who objected to the continuance of polygamy, would seem to be a correct conclusion; but this does not and can not satisfy the demand of good citizenship that offenders against the law so enacted should be brought to justice. The saying of a leading official, "I hate an informer," is an emotional scarecrow, invented for a specific purpose, calculated to deter those within the circle of polygamous membership, and all others holding membership to whom knowledge should come of such transgression, from making complaint in which offenders might be prosecuted and penalized.

It is utterly useless for anyone to make a statement that there are no such offenders in Utah against such statute enactment. More than one prominent officer of the church stated publicly on the witness stand that he was living contrary to such statute law, and proposed to do so, preferring to take the chances of punishment by the law. It must be a foregone conclusion that if the leading authorities could afford to live in defiance of their statute enactment, every other officer holding position under them, who esteems them as "estimable and honorable men," notwithstanding the known fact of their methods of living, would do the same thing. And when these people presume to charge upon the Reorganized Church faults that may have been committed by some of the members with whom the Reorganization began, such fault being but an effort to find a way out of their religious difficulties that were involving them, such charges not being for immorality or lawbreaking, this rule of faith enacted by that solemn assembly in 1835 being neither infringed nor abrogated, and to hold that these faults are fatal to the legitimacy of their action in aiding a reorganization of the church, it would be well for them to examine more closely the corner stones upon which their own institution rests. The voice of revelation to those earnest workers, which finally led them to that which resulted in the fulfillment of their ardent desires, pointed them to the great fact that the law of God was to be found in the Doctrine and Covenants of the church and that by observing the laws therein given, they would be accomplishing the will of God in that which they sought to do. Their action was legitimate within lines most proper and honorable.

TRACTS ON UTAH MORMONISM.

The tract entitled "Corner stones of the Utah Church," by Elbert A. Smith, recently published in the HERALD, will soon be ready for mailing. Copies of this tract may be secured at the rate of fifteen cents per dozen, or two cents each. Order them in quantities and place them where they will do the most good. This tract is listed as No. 450.

The office has on hand a limited supply of the tracts recently issued, "Duplicity exposed," by Heman C. Smith, and "All Brighamite roads lead to polygamy," by Elbert A. Smith. The first named sells for fifteen cents per dozen, two cents each; the last named is ten cents per dozen, one cent each.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Under date of May 31 Elder E. F. Robertson, missionary to Australia, writes as follows concerning one of the staunch pioneers in gospel work in Australia:

"It falls to my lot to report the loss of one of our oldest and most faithful and efficient workers in Australia.

"Elder John Wright died suddenly of heart failure at his home in Tuncurry, Saturday, May 28, 1910, at 1 o'clock p. m. Brother Wight was born at Keith, Scotland, May 21, 1836. At a very early age he immigrated to New Zealand where he remained a short time, coming to Australia in the late fifties. He was married to Miss Catherine Gill, March 12, 1864, who with six sons and three daughters, mourn their loss. He was among the first to receive the gospel in Australia, being baptized by Elder Glaud Rodger in 1876. His companion was not baptized till the year following. Shortly after uniting with the church, he was ordained to the office of elder, in which calling he occupied faithfully the remainder of his life, being at the time of his death president of the Tuncurry Branch.

"Brother Wright's home has been a haven of rest for weary missionary elders, since the days of Brethren Wandell and Rodger, as may be attested by Brethren Wight, Butterworth, Kaler, Wells, Gould, Hanson, Barmore, Haworth, Jones, Davis, the writer, and others of the present day, not to mention J. W. Gillen, J. F. Burton, T. W. Smith, A. H. Smith, etc., of the past, all of whom have partaken of his hearty hospitality and been cheered by his genial presence and hopeful and optimistic spirit. He was always ready with substantial aid when work necessitating the outlay of money was contemplated and never turned the needy empty away from his door. His ability as a man of business, his sterling worth as a citizen, his high sense of honor, together with the kindness of his nature, secured to him the respect, confidence, and love of all classes with whom his many interests brought him in contact.

"The funeral, which was the most largely attended and most expressive of general sorrow ever witnessed in this part of the country, was conducted by Elder John Jones and the writer. We feel that in the death of Brother Wright, the work in Australia has sustained a great loss, and yet take comfort in the thought that after a long and strenuous life, a great peace has fallen upon him, and as recorded by the Spirit's command so long ago, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth, for they shall rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

The commonest bad habit in life is a bad temper, and the usual place it is indulged in is at home. It is so common that many girls do not consider it a sin at all. They poison the atmosphere of home with fretfulness, faultfinding, and fits of anger. They indulge themselves in evil, and then wonder why they are not happy in their religion. No good Christian has a habitually bad temper, any more than a habit of lying or theft. Bad temper is a sin. The sooner we realize that, the better.

Paul makes plain some of the things that are necessary to the preservation of peace in the spiritual body. For one thing, there is, but one Lord. Whether the disunion be that of congregations or of individuals, the fact of the one Lord has been lost sight of. Church strife usually has its origin in the attempts of men to exercise the lordship which belongs only to the Head of the church. Where there are lords many, there is sure to be confusion.

"The right things are so few and the wrong things are so many that safe principles can only be learned through elimination."

Elders' Note-Book

FINANCIAL ADVANTAGES TO BE OBTAINED UNDER STAKE ORGANIZATION.

PAPER READ BEFORE A MEETING OF THE PRIESTHOOD
OF THE LAMONI STAKE, SUNDAY, JUNE 26, 1910,
BY ELDER R. J. LAMBERT, OF THE LAMONI STAKE BISHOPRIC.

In this short paper I do not intend attempting to separate financial from spiritual advantages, as I am convinced that neither myself nor any other one can successfully undertake this segregating of the financial law. It is a part of the spiritual law of the gospel in just as great measure as is the moral law; in fact, complying with the edicts of the Almighty regarding our earthly store puts us in better standing spiritually and morally, as well as financially. It therefore follows that much of the advantage accruing to us spiritually because of stake organization also affects us financially.

Quite a common viewpoint is this: It is very apparent that financial advantages do accrue to the church as a body under stake organization, but where are the advantages which accrue to the individual? This is an erroneous viewpoint or superficial question, as further thought and more complete investigation will establish the fact that what is good for the body is also for the advantage of the individuals of the body. This, however, involves the use of the word advantage, as a condition favorable to final success; not power of circumstances for the accomplishment of a given purpose, without reference to the character of that purpose.

It is almost universally recognized nowadays, that organization and a degree of permanency and system are necessary to influence, and the accomplishment of any worthy end. I therefore suggest the first advantage which stake organization furnishes us for financial ends, to be organization; the second, permanency; and the third, system; the third being more or less a repetition of the first, and an outgrowth of the first and second.

1. Organization.—The stake organization contemplates at least three men whose first duty to the church shall be that of administering the financial law. A bishop and his two counselors, two of the elders, or high priests, such as he shall select. More than this, the stake high council has financial responsibilities, more especially of a counseling or appellate nature. Among these duties being the settling of matters in dispute between the bishop and any member who calls in question the bishop's judgment as to what shall be dedicated to church uses and what shall be retained by the individual as an inheritance or stewardship; also the building of houses of worship, etc.

These two bodies of men should give safety to every financial undertaking of the church as a church, and if they are used according to the Lord's intention, they will lend safety to individuals as well. One moving into a stake of Zion should be able to find an officer who can give him counsel, from experience and a knowledge of things as they are. For instance, a brother coming to Lamoni, and wishing to invest in land, or to make a beginning in business, has all the advantages of securing advice from agents and individuals that he would have elsewhere, or that anyone not an approved member of the church would have here, and in addition he would be entitled to the special advice and effort of an officer whom the Lord has chosen to be of assistance to those who keep his commandments.

If this officer and his counselors in the office shall fail, or if they are not faithful in this their stewardship, they shall be condemned, and others shall be planted in their stead. Under this organization it becomes a duty of the officers to see that the Saints are not imposed upon in any line of trade. I can not but think that when the Lord commanded that Sidney Gilbert should establish a store in the land of Zion, to sell goods without fraud, in order that he might obtain money and power, that he also had in mind the protection of the weak among his people, that they might not be imposed upon, and their hard gotten moneys spent for shoddy goods, or to add shekels to the already fat store of some unholy combination. In this the Lord set up a pattern for all the stakes of Zion ever after, and no stake organization has fulfilled its mission if, seeing a state of trade existing whereby members are compelled to pay exorbitant prices for goods, or to purchase fraudulent articles, it does not strain every tissue to undo such a state of affairs and relieve the Saints from these burdens.

You have probably come to the conclusion that the writer thinks the church membership should be represented in each line of trade, and in this you are not far wrong. We are a peculiar people (not as much so as we should be), and the world is not looking out for the good of a peculiar people, but for the good of its own kind; and it will favor its own kind. But the duty of this officer is not done when he has seen that our membership is properly represented; he must also see that the membership is coming up to the instruction that Gilbert was constrained to come up to: "Sell goods without fraud, . . . that they may obtain whatsoever things the disciples may need to plant them in their inheritance;" also that fraud is not committed against the dealer; the bishop herein exercising his office as a common judge.

As to general matters, we should say that organization is just as necessary, and possibly more so, than individual matters. I mean by this that when a church institution is to be established, for a general philanthropic end, or for public profit, the officers are present, and the advantage of time is with us. We are ready to commence business when we would be compelled to spend time in organizing, which might mean failure to the venture. We had an example of this kind in Lamoni, in January, 1907, when the Herald Publishing House burned to the ground. Organization, permanency of establishment, and system, along with plenty of action, gave the results we see to-day, and of which we may well feel proud. Where, except in the stakes of Lamoni and Independence, could such an end have been accomplished? Surely not elsewhere in the church.

2. Permanency.—The officers of a stake are not to be changed at every beck and call, as they are likely to be under district and branch organization; neither is the plan of organization a matter of change at the whim of a small set. For this reason one need not fear to work in harmony with the scheme, thinking that loss may follow because of change in plan. Once this advantage becomes fully appreciated, it will be an easy matter, upon the establishment of a new stake, for our people to get in on the ground floor, as the Lord evidently intends we shall.

Another advantage of this permanency of organization is the fact that every day and month and year, we are training men for work in which the best fitted candidates will be used. I am sure this can be counted an advantage.

You remember that every time the Government changes administrations the newspapers are full of talk about it taking from one to two years, or longer, for things to get running smoothly. They say the present administration is just now getting on its feet. Under stake organization, we will have a few years advantage every now and then, and if we use it properly it will be said of us, "Let us not go up against Zion for battle, commercial or otherwise, for the inhabitants of Zion are terrible." I believe this to be one of the many advantages of a system under gospel conditions and permanent organization.

We will not attempt to further mention the advantages of permanency from a financial standpoint. Suffice it to say, their name is legion, and their power tremendous.

3. System.—We will only mention one or two matters in regard to this division of our subject, as our paper is longer than we intended it should be. One of the greatest advantages of organization is the fact that system is comprehended. And a permanent organization gives room for a well developed system. Our movements under stake organization from time to time display themselves as wise or unwise, and if we be workmen that need not be ashamed, we eschew the unwise, adopt the wise; we reject the rasping, inharmonious, jarring methods, and adopt into our system those that are in harmony, and will work smoothly under God's laws. May we be tireless in the development of such a system.

Just one more thought, to start the discussion, if you please, and that is this: No stake will be organized unless at the place of its organization there exists at least quite a respectable following, in members, if not in wealth. This being true, the organization being quite complete, and its permanency more sure than other organizations, we have two out of three of the requisites for successful financial operations, providing always that we have average ability. These three requisites are, in their order of importance:

1. Field of operation,
2. Sufficient body of operators.
3. Capital.

Possessing the first and second, there is no legitimate reason why we should not soon possess the third and thus "Prove me herewith, saith the Lord of hosts."

Original Articles

EQUITABLE OR CRIMINAL.

It has been a source of surprise time and again to find how many elders consider a trial before an elders' court a matter of criminal procedure. So far is this the case, that many think a court has failed altogether, and has only wasted time, unless some one is expelled from the church. Such extreme conditions are by no means general, yet even the past year has brought forward a few such cases.

We would respectfully suggest that an elders' court is not one of criminal jurisdiction. A crime is a wrong against the public laws of the state. There are many serious moral wrongs which are not criminal; while many crimes are not morally wrong, but are crimes, simply because the state has so declared them. The majority of crimes are mala prohibita (wrong because prohibited). The minority are mala in se (wrong in themselves). It is a crime to steal a banana, but it is no crime to borrow ten thousand dollars you do not expect to repay, even if you know it is your creditor's whole fortune. It is a crime to secure money by false statement of past or existing facts, but it is no crime to secure money by any other kind of falsehood. You may let your neighbor's house burn down, while he sleeps therein, and you play the mandolin, yet you may never suffer for it in this world.

It is true that a member may be before an elders' court for an act which is a crime against the laws of the state. Yet even in such a case the person does not appear before an elders' court as a criminal,—no more than he would in a civil case for a tort, or personal injuries, although he may be tried for that same act on a criminal charge before a proper court having criminal jurisdiction. If we understand the laws of the church, an elders' court should rather seek to reclaim wherever possible, to help those who have stumbled. Its purpose should be justice and equity towards all, to the individual as well as to the church. Practical right should be its aim rather than technical formality. In equity, we respectfully submit that before the church courts the complaint and other pleadings should not be ignored because of technical inaccuracies, if they can rightly be understood by a man of ordinary intelligence. Form is not essential.

The rule in Rules of Order and Debate (section 158, paragraph 6, page 99) permits of an appeal when the case is between two members, but where the church is complainant, the right of appeal appears to be limited to the "accused." This means that the accused has seven chances of winning to one of losing, because he has an equal chance before the elders' court. If he wins, that ends the case. If he loses, he may appeal again before the Bishop's court, where he has an equal chance of winning. If again defeated, he may appeal to the High Council. If at any one of these three stages the decision is in his favor, that ends the case, as we are told that he has been tried by a proper court, and can not be placed again in "jeopardy." But how often should the church be placed in "jeopardy"? But often the defendant can not be helped, until he appreciates the fact that he can be reached. But when he does see that action can be taken, and at the same time there is a disposition to help him, he may for the first time seriously consider his error. To say that an elders' court makes no mistakes, would be an untenable position. If such were the case, what would be the need of a High Council, or in fact any appellate court? Some may think that the use of the word jeopardy in connection with the church is erratic. But it is not more so, than to apply it to a member before a church court? "In jeopardy" is strictly a criminal term.

But there is such a general principle, not only in common law, but also in equity. In the laws of most nations, Justice requires that every case should be once fairly tried, and public tranquility demands that having been tried once, all litigation about that case should be concluded for ever between those parties.—22 How. 352.

From the earliest time courts have followed and acted on the rule of conclusiveness of judgments.—Laws of Res Judicata Hukm. Chand.

The Roman Law had also this principle, "Res judicata," as the term itself shows. "Res judicata pro veritate accipitur" (a thing decided is accepted as true). "Interest rei publicæ, ut sit finis litium" (it concerns the commonwealth that there should be an end to litigation). Also, "Nemo debet bis vexari pro eadem causa" (no one ought twice to be troubled for the same cause). And then our own book has it, "And after this decision it shall be had in remembrance,—no more before the Lord."—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 35.

That there should be an end to litigation will be generally agreed. "In jeopardy" and "res judicata" are both founded on this broad principle. But there is just this difference: the principle of "res judicata" does not prohibit an appeal or rehearing on either side. Equity in fact will bring in other parties, in order that the matter may be disposed of once and for all, but gives equal opportunity to all. The term "in jeopardy," being part of the criminal law, has yet been introduced in our church courts to prevent the church from taking an appeal. This, we suggest with all due respect, is not founded on the fundamental law of the church, nor on principles of equity. There does not exist in fact the reason of the criminal law to prevent the church from taking an appeal or asking a rehearing, unless we consider the case to be criminal in character. The oppression which caused this rule to be adopted in the criminal law, does not as a rule exist in a case before the church courts. Nor is there usually the animosity in a case presented on behalf of the branch as in a case between two individuals. In fact, if the officers of the branch show personal feeling, it is made a matter of adverse comment. Furthermore, if the decision is correct, the member is not running a very great risk in having it reheard before the higher courts. If it is not correct, the church has interests to protect, as well as the individual.

The principles of the gospel and of the court of the church are justice, equity, and brotherly love. If the arm of the church is to be shortened, there will be times when it can neither protect itself nor help the individual. We do not urge nor believe as a rule, that an elders' court is actuated by fraud or collusion (Rules of Order and Debate, p. 99); but we do believe very often a serious error is made through misunderstanding and misapplication of the law. Will the member be a better citizen of the kingdom of God, because the matter is dropped, right or wrong? Or is it probable he would be a better Christian, if the matter can be taken up and rightly decided? Can it hurt him in any case? We could cite many instances where such a mistake has been made in all good faith, nor need unnecessary criticism be made. The thought we are now considering, is not the inaccuracies or mistakes of some single decision, but it is a question of the principles involved: Should our church procedure more closely follow that of the criminal courts, or that of equity?

In the courts of the land a case is not presented to the people for their vote, but the decisions of the courts are respected until reversed by a higher court. To require that a branch shall receive and accept the findings of an elders' court, and then use this acceptance to prevent an appeal, if the decision is not satisfactory to the branch or its officers, is to give to the people a shadow, and to deprive them of the substance. We will not object here to the case being presented to the branch, though reason suggests that the court having all the evidence before it, is better able to determine the penalty than is the branch. But we do object to that interpretation of the action of the branch, which deprives them of their rights of appeal from a decision which they believe is not correct. What other committee binds the body so it can not act?

Again, before the criminal courts the defendant is not required to testify. In equity one of the first steps is to require his answer under oath. The law of the church encourages confession and repentance, that if a man has done wrong he should make every effort to right that wrong. It is his privilege to receive the counsel and advice of his brethren, how best to right the wrong, and their assistance as well. As we read our Doctrine and Covenants, it would be quite in order for the elders to call the member before them, and ask him in regard to the truth of certain accusations against him; yet on a criminal basis this would be an error.

It is not the purpose of this article to suggest a few alterations, but rather to consider the principles on which our procedure should be founded. The church may make its own rules of procedure, and is not bound by any particular secular court. Furthermore, although the majority of our members are in this country, the church is universal, and in principle we should consider the law of other governments as well as that of this great land of ours. Still we would respectfully suggest that the principles of equity more nearly accord with what should be our proper procedure, than do those of the criminal law. Yet it is not our purpose to urge the adoption of the rules of equity. Our fundamental law should be the revelations of our heavenly Father to the church. That should be our standard, and the more nearly we can observe its spirit and purpose, the more nearly right will be our efforts in every capacity and department of our work.

ARE WE EVANGELICAL?

EDITORS' NOTE.—The following article is from the pen of Elder W. E. LaRue, pastor of the Central Church, Kansas City, Missouri. During the present year he was denied membership in the ministerial association in his city on the ground that his church was not evangelical. He was not permitted a hearing before the association.

In order for us to properly determine this question, we must go back to the meaning of the word evangelical and we find that Webster defines it as follows: "Belonging to, agreeable or consonant to, or contained in the gospel, or the truth taught in the New Testament; as, evangelical religion. Earnest for the truth taught in the gospel; strict in interpreting Christian doctrine; preëminently orthodox. Contained in or relating to the four gospels."

It might be an easy task for us to establish the fact that our church stands for the truth taught in the New Testament; that as a people we are strict in interpreting Christian doctrine, that all of our faith is in exact harmony with the four gospels. We as a people might easily recognize these things as facts, but can we persuade others to so believe? On our part there is no question over the matter of our being evangelical and orthodox in every particular, but the Christian world at large questions it and refuses to be associated with us to some degree, in performing work in which all churches are interested and in which all churches might coöperate and work together to some extent.

Could it be demonstrated to the membership of our church that our teaching is out of harmony with the truth taught in the New Testament, they would sever their connection with the church at once. While our people may reverence the teaching of other books, there is no book which is so authoritative to us as the New Testament and to be found out of harmony with what is taught therein would put us in an inconsistent and undesirable light. As a people, we have long since cherished the thought that our mission to the world consists in contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, to preach the everlasting gospel; and that work of course includes the attitude of being "earnest for the truth taught in the gospel." As the Master came in his day, not to multiply the number of religious sects, but to bear witness unto the truth among a large number of sects and religious devotees, all of whom were diverse from him in their teachings, so we, as a people, have come on a similar errand, carrying the message of the original gospel and the precious faith once held and observed among the ancient saints, to our present day and time. Here we have reared our standards in the midst of numerous other sects and religionists whose views on Christian doctrines and morals are far from being harmoniously blended.

Strange as it may appear, with some exceptions, all of the various sects of the Jews existing in the time of Christ joined together to wage opposition against him. In the tumult which was raised their petty differences were drowned. Just so has it been in our day. Oh, how good and pleasant it has been for brethren of all denominations (except ours) to dwell together in unity, especially when an effort has been made to counteract our teaching and influence. We have been denied admittance unto the Sunday school associations; our sisters have been scornfully treated (with some exceptions) when they have desired to be associated with the Women's Christian Temperance Union.

Quite recently, the ministers' associations of several cities have rejected the applications of our ministers who deserved to affiliate and cooperate with them in every good work. In some instances our ministers have been turned out of these associations, not because of any unchristian conduct, but for the general reason that they were considered unevangelical. The question might well be asked by those not immediately affected by such action, Who is authorized to sit in judgment and determine who is evangelical?

In nearly every instance where such judgment is passed upon us, there is no reasonable opportunity offered for any exposition or explanation to be made of our faith. Some do not want to hear for fear they will find out that it harmonizes with the truth; others do not want to hear it for fear their own craft will be endangered thereby, so they raise the cry, Away! away! unevangelical!

As a rule, people do not take the time nor make the effort they should to determine what the various churches do believe; what their mission; what the history of their rise and progress and leading facts; and when they hear all the churches combining to raise the cry of unevangelical against us, it usually brings the desired result, to prejudice the people against us so that they maintain an attitude of indifference toward our faith. They know better, and some have learned by sad experience that when an attempt is made to prove by the Bible that we are unevangelical, they are utterly unable to do so. We have never shunned a rigid and thorough investigation of our claims, using the Bible as a standard by which to determine the facts.

It is only a matter of years when all the various Protestant denominations that now flourish in the public gaze were victims of persecution, intolerance, and religious bigotry. Does it not seem strange that they should not have learned by the sad and bitter lessons through which they have passed, to have a proper respect and consideration for those, equally honest in their convictions with themselves, who hold as precious and dear to their hearts a faith which may differ in some respects from theirs?

Let it be understood that, notwithstanding we are not recognized, we do not yield our claim to be strictly orthodox, sound in the Christian faith, and evangelical in the sense that our faith is in strict harmony with the Bible. We are not called upon to sit in judgment upon the faith of others nor should we ever stoop to the ungentlemanly and unchristian attitude of mistreating or abusing those who may differ from us in faith. Let the world see that we have more of manly principle, more respect for the rights of men than ever to attempt to deprive our fellow-man of just and equal privileges. Christ's attitude of rebuking with piercing, burning words of truth, while surrounded by those who were deriding him, shows us clearly what our attitude should be. Of him it was said, "Behold the man," and it is under such conditions that the manhood which should have developed in us through our gospel experiences should assert itself. It may seem that if the manly principle were well developed in professed Christian men they would receive and treat us with that degree of courtesy which is due man from man. They know full well that we stand high in moral principles, on an equality and in some instances above that represented by many churches. They may believe that we are extreme in our interpretation of some portions of the Scripture, they may think that our claims regarding fulfilled prophecy and some of our customs and traditions are strange; but what of that? Shall we be ostracised from the society of good men? Are we entirely past redemption? In the language of one fair-minded minister, who protested against the proposition to reject the application of one of our ministers, "What good shall we accomplish by turning our backs upon these people?" You may search through the pages of history and you will find that the men most worthy of honorable mention therein, are the men who have stood for justice, for human liberty, for equal rights and privileges, for religious tolerance, for respect and consideration, for the opinions of all mankind. Such men believe that truth is its own defense and that its claims can not be dignified nor effectually enforced by oppression nor by ungentlemanly or unmanly deeds.

It is deplorable that in summing up the character of professional men, ministers of the gospel, so-called advocates of modern sectarianism, supposed to be examples of what our manhood should be, should have such a poor rating. In many instances their moral standing is not equal to that of men of no professed faith at all. Search the pages of history and out of the great army of clergymen of sectarian tendency you will find an exceedingly small percentage of those who have distinguished themselves as real benefactors of mankind. Many of them have distinguished themselves as champions of their creeds and many have been known for their intolerance, narrowness, and injustice toward their fellow-men, while occasionally the world has felt the thrill that has come from a great heart filled with compassion, with charity and love for all mankind, who has wrought for justice and equal rights for all and special privileges for none, who manifests real devotion to God and seeks the welfare of fellow-men. All men will be quick to recognize the virtue of such a man without respect to his belief or church affiliation.

The common people of to-day would be pleased to receive and to recognize the good we are doing were it not for the fact that their ministers misguide them in their attitude and seek to make them prejudiced, and for this reason we are pronounced as unevangelical. Some believe it, but they are of the class who are in absolute ignorance of our church and our faith.

Having set forth some of the leading facts regarding the question, it may be well that something be said with reference to our attitude toward other churches. It will be remembered that when Joseph Smith received an answer to his prayers and the visitation of an angel, he went at once to the clergymen who were acquainted with him and told them of the incident. From them he should have received kindly consideration and sympathy. When Samuel heard the voice of the Lord, he went at once to the priest Eli and told him the message. Eli charged him not to "hide anything from me of all the things that he hath said unto thee." And notwithstanding it was a message of condemnation to him because he had not restrained his sons in their evil doing he said, "It is the Lord; let him do what seemeth him good." Instead of the boy, Joseph, being received and treated in like manner, he was thenceforth cast out and regarded as the lowest vile wretch that ever lived. Nothing can be said which has not been uttered in defamation of his character.

Why could not these ministers have manifested the same attitude toward Joseph that Eli manifested toward Samuel? Circumstances have since substantiated the facts that their creeds were wrong and their professors were corrupt to a large degree. Many of them at that time were looking forward and expecting that God would soon begin the performance of a marvelous work, and why should they not treat the testimony of this young boy with care and caution instead of meeting it with ridicule and brute force? I think this incident as above related should furnish us a proper example of what we should do in our attitude toward other churches. We should not withhold our message from them. We should put upon them the responsibility of receiving or rejecting us as they may choose. We should ever extend to them every courtesy and respect which we would desire them to grant to us. If they do mistreat us and manifest contempt for our message, we should not retaliate nor revile those who may revile us. The truth is sure to win its way and when it is enforced by upright and praiseworthy conduct on the part of those who are its standard bearers, it will appeal to the thoughtful and consistent with double power. Are we evangelical then?

We have not presented any of the great array of references that might be offered showing that our faith and practices are identical with that set forth in the New Testament. In the light of the New Testament teaching we claim to be evangelical and as to whether we are or not, men and women must determine by an investigation of our position, and finally our cause with that of all others will be passed upon by the Great Judge of all the earth.

Because we are not considered evangelical by some of the sectarian churches and because we are not accepted by them as worthy of their association, should not be interpreted by any as an indication that we should be condemned as unchristian and our cause treated only with sneer and contempt by the public at large.

MILESTONES OF UTAH CHURCH.

For a starting point in this inquiry we will call attention to some of the statements of the first president of that church just before he arrogated to himself the right to preside over the whole church and assumed the title of prophet, seer, and revelator to the church. He was at this time president of the Quorum of Twelve.

The Lord will not cease to give revelations to the people, unless the people trample on his laws and forsake and reject him. . . . This church has been led by revelation, and unless we forsake the Lord entirely, so that the priesthood is taken from us, it will be led by revelation all the time.—Brigham Young, October 6, 1844, Times and Seasons, vol. 5, pp. 682, 683.

Here we have a rule laid down that they should not go back on, but it no doubt will show up some inconsistencies that will be hard for them to explain, and as they have invited the turning on of the searchlight they should not be opposed to a little investigation along historical lines.

Four years later, after this people had gone west and located in Utah, we have this from one of their own men, as published in one of their own works:

No godly people ever lived in any age of the world without enjoying the spirit of prophecy and immediate revelation. . . . When mankind can not get immediate revelation from God, it both is and always has been a sure token that they had fallen into transgression, and were suffering rebuke and banishment from the presence of God.—Orson Spencer, May 1, 1848, Millennial Star, vol. 10, p. 139.

Four years have passed and we find this people reaffirming the rule laid down by B. Young, now their president, and publishing it to the world. They surely expected the people to believe it and they should have put the measure on closer than they did; had they done so there would not be the necessity for doubt and fear and difference that now presents itself.

The Doctrine and Covenants has the revelations of God to the church and this Utah church professes to believe them. In that book we are told plainly that the Presidency of the church shall be appointed by revelation, sustained by the voice of the people and ordained to that office. (See Doctrine and Covenants 80:1; 99:6; Utah edition 81:106.) This would emphasize the necessity for direct revelation from God, to fill any vacancy that might occur in that office. That such a vacancy did occur is one of the historical facts that makes this investigation necessary; the further fact that the one whom we quoted at the outstart (Brigham Young) was the prominent figure in the first change of presidency that ever occurred in the history of the church in these latter days, makes it very interesting; for he seemed to have forgotten the rule he laid down. And when he and eight others of the Twelve got together at Winter Quarters, December 5, 1847, and proceeded to nominate and elect a President and two counselors, there was not so much as a hint at a revelation from God, and there was no ordination as required by the law of God. (See Life of Brigham Young, p. 188.)

Here is one of the milestones that marks the turning of this Utah church from the law and starts them on the wrong road. Things moved along for several years, when the evidence of the lack of revelation from God began to manifest itself in other ways. This self-elected president who did not consider it necessary to comply with the law of God, was never ordained to the office that he pretended to hold. See his own statement as follows:

Who ordained me to be president of this church on earth? I answer, it is the choice of this people, and that is sufficient.—Brigham Young, Millennial Star, vol. 16, p. 442; Journal of Discourses, vol. 6, p. 320.

Setting aside the law that required revelation from God to call a man to occupy in the office of president of the church, was followed by setting aside the law that required ordination, and that put him outside of the line where we could expect to find revelation, according to his own rule, and made him a transgressor of God's commands. So we are not surprised that in his teaching after this we should find him wandering from the pure teachings of Christ, rejecting the Lord, advocating that Adam was the only God we had anything to do with; also denying that Jesus was begotten by the Holy Ghost (see Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, pp. 50, 51), nor that he should go so far as to teach that men would commit sins that the sacrifice made by Jesus Christ could not atone for, but they must have their own blood shed to atone for their sin or they would be damned for ever. (See Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, p. 220; Deseret News, vol. 6, p. 397.) Again, we need not be surprised that he should have gone further into darkness and partaken of the spirit of adultery, which necessitated the doctrine of polygamy which he introduced publicly on August 29, 1852. We want to notice this carefully for a moment. Up to this time he has only committed the people as a church to his departures in a roundabout way, by sustaining him as the president, prophet, seer, and revelator, but now he presents this relic of barbarism in the name of the prophet who had been dead for eight years, and from that time the Utah church has been held responsible for the abomination. We discover that the departure has been slow. At first the leaders were wrong, then the people accepted them (the leaders) and sustained them in offices where they had never been called by the Lord; this led to more departure until they had fastened the responsibility on the church.

We must come now to another milestone or two. It may not be so far between the milestones now as in the past. Thirty years passed away and President Brigham Young died. The Utah church found themselves without a president, prophet, seer, and revelator, here we come to one of the strange features in this people's work.

Three years passed before they attempted to fill the vacancy made by the death of President Young, and the people became anxious over the matter and of course asked questions. We will ask why, and let George Q. Cannon, one of the counselors to President Young, answer:

For the first time in the history of the church, the Twelve Apostles stepped forward and took the charge of affairs, by the authority of the apostleship, and the authority which they had received from the Prophet Joseph. And for a little rising of three years they led and guided the church, until the Lord inspired his servant Brigham, to organize a First Presidency of the church. . . . Every man who is ordained to the fullness of the apostleship, has the power and the authority to lead and guide the people of God whenever he is called upon to do it, and the responsibility rests upon him. . . . In relation to ordination, a great many people have imagined that it was necessary to ordain a man to succeed another, that it would impart a particular efficacy or endow him with some additional power, . . . but it is not necessary that an apostle should be ordained to stand at the head of the people. When the exigency arises, he has already got the fullness of authority and the power of it. . . . As I have stated, it is not necessary for a man who has received this power and these keys to be ordained and set apart to act, he can act in any position. . . . Was it necessary that Elder Taylor should be set apart to preside over this people? Was it necessary that the Twelve Apostles should be set apart to preside over this people? No, it was not; for they already possessed the power, authority, and ordination. . . . Well, but, says one, why can not you organize a First Presidency now, if the Twelve have the authority? . . . The reason is simply this; the Lord has NOT revealed it to us; HE has not commanded us to do this, and until he does require this at our hands we shall not do it. For the present, it SEEMS to be the mind and will of God, as manifest to us, that the Twelve should preside over the church. And until he does reveal unto his servants that it is right and proper that a First Presidency should be organized again, we shall wait. We shall do nothing of the kind. . . . If three men have the right to govern, certainly Twelve men, all possessing the same keys, have that right and authority.—G. Q. Cannon, in Journal of Discourses, vol. 19, pp. 230-237, October 8, 1877. (Italics mine. F. A. S.)

We are struck at once with the fact that the mistake of the former president in assuming that an ordination was not necessary, is carried into this emergency, perpetuating it of course; but the law of God says he should be ordained. But we are met with another condition: the argument is made that they will not fill the vacancy because the Lord has not revealed it to them. Here they recognize the necessity of revelation to fill the presidency's office, and lest anyone should think we have overlooked the statement that the "Lord inspired his servant, Brigham, to organize a First Presidency," I have but to call the attention of thinking readers to the law of God, as related before. God does not change, so if he had been the source of Brigham's inspiration he would not have forgotten that these officers were to be called of God by revelation, that they should have been ordained. He would have moved in harmony with his own law. Hence it must be evident to every thinker that a mistake had been made when Brigham was made president.

But let us follow this a little farther: On October 7, 1877, we have the following from George Q. Cannon:

Some had been much exercised about a First Presidency being organized. He wished the Saints distinctly to understand that "whenever God commanded a First Presidency to be appointed, it would not be revealed through anyone but his servant who was now God's mouthpiece.—Millennial Star, vol. 39, p. 739.

We have emphasized their position by quoting from Cannon, to the effect that a command from God must come before they would organize another First Presidency; now we will see if they did as they seem to feel was the proper way to do. Did they wait till God commanded them? I will now quote from a sermon by Orson Pratt on October 10, 1880, three years later, and we will see what they did and how much revelation there was in it:

And much might be said of the First Presidency, which quorum presides over all the church of God; . . . We therefore considered the propriety of organizing it at the conference; and Brother John Taylor, by the voice of his brethren, the Twelve, being the person holding the legal right to that office, as the president of the Twelve Apostles, was selected to occupy the position of the President of the whole church, and he, according to the right and authority given to him, suggested his own counselors. They were sanctioned by the Twelve Apostles; hence the First Presidency again, so far as the council of the Twelve is concerned, has been reorganized.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 22, pp. 26-38.

We are face to face with the record again, that this Utah church has done what they said they would not do. No command from God, no revelation, not even to Mr. Taylor, but he is put in because he was the president of the Quorum of Twelve and had a "legal right" to the office. Will our friends tell us where that law is found that gives the president of the Twelve the legal right to succeed to the office of president, prophet, seer, and revelator to the whole church? Another milestone marking their departure from the law of God. But listen to Mr. Taylor on this question:

"President John Taylor said, it was gratifying to him to know that the organization of the church was now provided for. The mind of the Twelve had been exercised on the question of the First Presidency, and what has been done to-day he believed was approbated by the Lord as well as the people. So far as his own feelings were concerned he could have wished to continue his connection with the Twelve, but as was clearly portrayed to us by Brother Pratt, God has an order in his kingdom, and it is our duty to observe it. He therefore acquiesced in the change. When everything was adjusted, it was nothing but right and proper for the quorum of the First Presidency to be filled.—Millennial Star, vol. 42, p. 724.

It is a strange thing that if the revelation was to come through this man he did not say something about it, but he is gratified, and he believed that what had been done would be approbated by the Lord. To the thinking mind if God had spoken to this man he would have been sure that what was done would meet the approbation of the Lord if done according to his commandment. Again we ask, Where is the law that we are required to observe for "the order in his kingdom" that provides that the president of the Quorum of Twelve has a legal right to this office of presidency over the whole church? They must know (if they had not been blinded and in transgression) that there was no such law in the commandments of God anywhere; but instead it was a custom introduced by the usurper in that office (Brigham Young) before this one (John Taylor) was put in and adopted by the Twelve. But this is not the only case: it was but a short time till President Taylor died and this Utah church was without a presidency again. The same rule was followed, no revelation calling a man to the office, no ordination again, as provided for in the revelations of God to the church, and no revelation or ordination for the counselors. President Woodruff lived but a short time, and once more the church was facing the vacancy in the Presidency and again the opportunity to come into harmony with the law was before them; but no, they put Mr. Snow into that office,—no revelation, no ordination. They follow the lead of the usurper who established this custom contrary to his own teaching, and the law already received and believed (professedly) by this Utah church. Mr. Snow's reign was a short one and now we come to the last time they have had occasion to change the occupant of the presidential chair. When Mr. Snow died they found it necessary to proceed somewhat differently from the past two cases. They put Mr. Joseph F. Smith back into the Quorum of Twelve and gave him the honor of being the oldest in ordination in the quorum, which would give him the right to the presidency of the quorum, and then at once elevated him to be president of the whole church and again proceeded to organize the First Presidency without revelation or ordination. In this connection we will examine some of the evidence before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections in the case of Reed Smoot.

SENATOR BAILEY. I do not refer to the counselors. You have already said that the president chooses or designates them. Who chooses or elects the president? For instance, who elected you to your present position?

MR. SMITH. I was nominated by the Twelve Apostles and submitted to the whole church and sustained by the whole church. . . .

SENATOR BAILEY. I understand that. As a matter of fact, the apostles nominate the president and the church elects him. Do I understand that to be the case?

MR. SMITH. Well, yes, sir; that has been the case. And then, again, the senior apostle, through custom of the church since the death of Joseph Smith, has been recognized on the death of the president as the legitimate successor to the president.

SENATOR BAILEY. It is a question of succession rather than of election?

MR. SMITH. Yes, sir. . . .

SENATOR BAILEY. Has that the force of law or has it merely the persuasion of custom?

MR. SMITH. MERELY A CUSTOM. THERE IS NO LAW IN RELATION TO IT.—Vol. 1, pp. 92-3.

Where are we now? The present president of the Utah church affirms there is no law relating to the choosing of presidents of the church. What a spectacle of "trampling on the law!" This milestone would look like they had got so far from the line of truth that they had lost all trace of the right way. To be charitable with this church would be to say that their leaders have led them into transgression and darkness; but we have one more line we wish to notice before we conclude.

I again take up the Smoot case and notice some of the evidence offered by the president of the Utah church:

THE CHAIRMAN. I do not quite understand that—"when it is divine." You have revelations, have you not?

MR. SMITH. I have never pretended to nor do I profess to have revelations. I never said I had revelations except so far as God has shown to me that so-called Mormonism is God's divine truth; that is all.—Vol. 1, p. 99.

SENATOR DUBOIS. Have you received any individual revelations yourself, since you became president of the church under your own definition, even, of a revelation?

MR. SMITH. I can not say that I have. . . .

SENATOR DUBOIS. Then you do not know whether you have received any such revelation as you have described, or whether you have not?

MR. SMITH. Well, I can say this: That if I live as I should in the line of my duties, I am susceptible, I think, of the impressions of the Spirit of the Lord upon my mind at any time, just as any good Methodist or any other good church member might be. And so far as that is concerned, I say yes; I have had impressions of the Spirit upon my mind very frequently, but they are not in the sense revelations.—Vol. 1, pp. 483, 484.

We have followed these men now for some time and in summing up we are struck at once with the array of evidence that, examined in the light of the teachings we started with, shows very clearly that this church has left the commands of God, in practice and in teaching; that darkness has ensued, and as a natural consequence they have gone into transgression. They have trampled the law of God under foot, they have forsaken his teachings, and by that means they have rejected him. The highest officer in that body, who claims the title of prophet, seer, and revelator, and who is sustained by the people of the church, comes out with the clear rejection of God's Son and asks the inhabitants of the earth to hear and believe him as the interpreter of the law and teachings of the Lord, affirming that Adam is our god and the only god we have anything to do with, also denying that Jesus Christ was begotten by the Holy Ghost, making light of it in a disgusting manner, thus throwing ridicule on the teachings of the Bible and the Book of Mormon. And as we move along the line we are painfully conscious that there is a dearth of revelation. The heresy of polygamy was brought in and the church was induced to accept it, and the only thing, with one exception, that they pretend to consider as a revelation in all these years from 1844 to 1910, was a command to stop polygamy. The revelations are all against this church and yet they ask us to accept them as the church of Christ. The rule laid down by their own teachers condemns them: no revelations, departure from the law, rejecting the Lord, forsaking his teachings. According to the test they have forfeited their right to God's recognition, and we have the sure tokens that they have fallen into transgression and are suffering rebuke and banishment from God's presence. How long will you people of the Utah church continue to sustain a man as president, prophet, seer, and revelator who declares that he has never had nor does not pretend to have revelations, who admits that he was not called according to the law, and was not ordained as the law directs, and who confesses he is a lawbreaker?

Again we ask, How long will the Utah church be a party to deception and transgression? Why sustain men who defy the law of God and man as the present president of that church has done? Will you continue to be led by that relic of the Dark Ages, the infallibility of the living oracle? Arouse and assert your rights and say to those leaders, We will not sustain you while you are in open transgression. Only when you come back to the law of God and keep his commands can we give to you the hearty and loyal support that men of God are entitled to.

Turn from your wanderings and come back to God and then will he bless you with revelation from God and direction of the Spirit as at the first, before you turned from the law and trampled it under your feet and rejected the teachings of Christ for the heresies of men.

FREDERICK A. SMITH.

Of General Interest

THE FEDERATION OF THE WORLD.

The foreign relations committee has just reported back favorably to the House of Representatives a bill bearing the name of Congressman Bennet, of New York, providing for the appointment of a commission "to consider the expediency of utilizing existing international agencies for the purpose of limiting the armaments of the nations of the world by international agreement, and of constituting the combined navies of the world an international force for the preservation of universal peace." This bill is a ways and means measure to bring about a world federation, limited to the maintenance of peace, so that our recommendations to the Third Hague Conference of 1915 may be well considered and far-reaching. It is indorsed by the New York Peace Society; the International School of Peace of Boston, and the New England Arbitration and Peace Congress held at Hartford, Connecticut, on May 11. If passed it will be the first time in history that a government has officially recognized that the true philosophy of the peace movement requires world federation as a pre-requisite for universal peace.

In his famous essay, "Perpetual peace," published in 1795, Emanuel Kant declared that we can never have universal peace until the world is politically organized, and it will never be possible to organize the world politically until the majority of the nations have a representative form of government. At last all the peoples of the world have achieved in some measure representative government. Russia has its Duma; China has announced that shortly it will promulgate a constitution, while Turkey and Persia have each just gone through the throes of revolution and emerged with a vigorous parliament. If Kant's philosophy is sound, therefore, the world is at last ready for world organization and universal peace.

The only two powers that ever have or ever can govern human beings are force and reason—war and law. If we do not have one we must have the other. The problem before the world is how to decrease the area of war and increase the area of law until war vanishes and law envelopes the world. At the present moment the world is organized into fifty-nine nations claiming independence and within their territories—nominally at least—organization, law and peace prevail. We have already learned to substitute law for war in cities and states and even up to the fifty-nine nations; but in that international realm over and above each nation in which each nation is equally sovereign, the only way at the present moment for a nation to secure its rights is by the use of force. Force, therefore, or war, as it is called when exerted by a nation against another nation, is at present the only legal and final method of settling international differences. In other words the nations are in that stage of civilization to-day where without a qualm they claim the right to settle their disputes in a manner they would put their own subjects to death for imitating. The peace movement therefore, is nothing but the process of substituting law for war.

But how can we best create law in the international realm. Certainly not by the cumbrous methods of the present. To-day there is no such thing as a code of international law which is binding on the nations. What passes under the name of international law is simply a series of arguments, maxims, precedents, and opinions. It is the work, not of legislators, but of scholars. The nations are at perfect liberty to accept it or reject it as they wish. Before we can have a real international law we must have behind it some conscious political organization to give it sanction and validity, and that implies a federation of the world.

The history of international law presents striking analogies to the history of private law. Likewise, the history of the organization of the "United Nations," which is to give sanction to international law, will correspond to the history of the organization of the thirteen American colonies into the United States. The United States, therefore, furnishes the model for the United Nations. The Declaration of Independence foreshadows the declaration of interdependence.

The beginnings of world organization, however, have already taken place. In the Hague Court and the recurring Hague Conferences we see the germs of the international court and the parliament of man. The problem is how to develop these so that they will become the judicial and legislative departments of a powerful world constitution, just as our Articles of Confederation and Continental Congress developed into the present United States Constitution, which a century of storm and stress has not broken and which still serves as a model to all the republics of the earth.

A careful study of existing arbitration treaties and of the work of the first and second Hague Conferences shows that our international law is at the same stage of development as private law of about the tenth century, while the organization of the "United Nations" has reached the same stage of progress that our thirteen States did before the Constitutional Convention of 1787.

The problem, therefore, before the world is to perfect the Hague Courts and Conferences so that finally, if it be deemed necessary, we may even add a world executive and thus create the united nations in the very image of the United States.

The peace advocates from Penn and Kant and Hugo and Burritt down to Hale and Bartholdt and Carnegie have long realized that world federation is the key to peace and disarmament. Even Mr. Roosevelt in his remarkable Nobel peace address the other day at Christiania goes so far as to urge a "league of peace" to abolish war, paradoxically, by force if necessary. The governments themselves, however, have not yet officially recognized that world organization is the goal of international effort, though they have unconsciously and inevitably been driven much faster and farther along this path than they realize. The passage of the Bennet bill, however, will remedy this. The creation of a world federation commission would guarantee to our own people as well as to the peoples of the world that the United States is in earnest and ready to take the lead in the only practical and promising method of obtaining international peace.

It seems the destiny of the United States to lead in the peace movement. The United States is the world in miniature. It is a demonstration that all the races of the world can live in peace under one government and its chief value to civilization is a demonstration of what this form of government is. We have settled more disputes by arbitration than any other nation. In all history no men have done more to spread the gospel of peace than the two Pennsylvanians, William Penn and Benjamin Franklin. David Low Dodge, of New York, in 1815 founded the first peace society of the world. Two generations ago Elihu Burritt and a dozen others in New York and New England went up and down this country, and even over to Europe, urging and prophesying the formation of an international court which Burritt declared when it came into existence "would constitute the highest court of appeals this side the bar of eternal justice." Coming down to more recent times, it is probably a fact that the late Frederick W. Holls, of New York, had more to do with the establishment of the Hague Court than anyone else, while Mr. Carnegie has given it a palace in which it shall hereafter sit. The United States took the first case to the Hague Court that ever came before it and the American minister at Venezuela sent the second case there, which brought all the great powers before it bar, and established it in the estimation of civilization. Mr. Bartholdt was the first man who ever stood up in a national parliament and suggested turning the Hague Conferences into a real international parliament. Elihu Root planned the idea of having the Second Hague Conference create a world court modeled on the United States Supreme Court, and now Secretary Knox has announced its early establishment. President Roosevelt's Christiania address is nothing else than a plea for the federation of the world. Not since the "Great Design" of Henry IV of France proposed in 1602, has one who has represented a great people ever promulgated so comprehensive a plan for universal peace. Mr. Taft says that if the Bennet bill becomes a law he will appoint Theodore Roosevelt as chairman of the commission. Does not the last sentence of Mr. Roosevelt's address indicate that he would feel compelled to accept the honor? He says: "But the ruler or statesman who should bring about such a combination (league of peace) would have earned his place in history for all time and his title to the gratitude of all mankind."

If the world federation commission is appointed by the United States Government with Theodore Roosevelt as chairman, can anyone believe that the day will not be brought measurably nearer, when as Victor Hugo prophesied in 1849, "the only battlefield will be the market opening to commerce and the human mind opening to new ideas?"—Hamilton Holt, editor of the Independent.

SPECULATION.

Speculation is one of the most intolerable and revolting manifestations of disease in the economic organism. Those profound sages who maintain that everything that exists is super-excellent have also attempted to defend speculation, to justify it, to assert its necessity even to enthusiasm. I will immediately prove to these paregryrists what the principle which they are espousing really is.

The speculator plays in the economic world the part of a parasite. He produces nothing, he does not even perform the questionable service of middleman performed by the merchant. He confines himself to taking away from the real workers, by stealth or violence, the largest part of the proceeds of their labor.

The speculator is a robber who robs the producer of the articles produced by forcing them to accept inadequate compensation for their toil, and the consumers by forcing them to buy from him at an enormous advance. The weapon with which he falls upon the producers and consumers like a highwayman is double-barreled, and is called rise and depression of prices, or cornering the markets. He makes use of this murderous implement in the following manner: When his intention is to plunder the producer, he begins to sell certain goods which he does not possess at a price lower than the current market rates, promising to deliver them to the purchasers a fortnight, a month, or three months, later than the date of sale. The purchaser, of course, buys of the speculator because he asks lower prices.

The producer now has only two courses open to him. If he is rich enough to carry his goods without selling until the day arrives when the speculator is obliged to deliver those he has guaranteed to the purchaser, then the speculator will not be able to get the goods at as low prices as he had hoped, and will be obliged to buy them at the producer's price and lose money on them, thus being robbed instead of robbing. But if the producer can not do this (and this is by far the most frequent case), then he is forced to sell his goods immediately at such prices as the goods will fetch in the market. He must underbid the speculator, who then becomes his purchaser, for the consumer has already ordered what he wants from the speculator. Thus, when the time comes for him to deliver the goods, he is able to buy them of the producer at a lower price than the one contracted for.

The producer may have become bankrupt by the operation, but the speculator has got his pound of flesh and is happy. If his aim is to plunder the consumer, then he buys up all the available goods offered of a certain kind at the producer's price. He can do this without trouble, as the transaction does not cost him a single penny; he pays for his purchase, not in cash, but in promises. He need not settle his account for weeks or months, as the case may be. Thus, without real possession, frequently without going to the expense of a single dollar, the speculator becomes owner of the goods, and if the consumer wishes to buy any of them he must apply to the speculator and pay the price he demands.

The speculator receives into one hand the money given him by the consumer, and after abstracting a portion as large as possible, which he puts into his own pocket, he hands over the remainder with the other hand to the producer. In this way the speculator, without labor, without benefiting the community, becomes wealthy and influential. Capital extends to him the highest favor, i. e., unlimited credit.

Every workingman, everyone without exception, is tributary to the speculator. All our wants are foreseen, all the necessary articles of our consumption are bought up beforehand by speculators, on credit, and sold to us at as high a price as possible, for cash. We can not eat a bit of bread, nor lie down to rest beneath our roof, nor invest our savings in stocks, without paying to the speculators their assessments in corn, in land and buildings and Stock Exchanges.

The taxes which we pay to the State are oppressive, but by no means so oppressive as those exacted from us by speculation. Certain persons have ventured to defend the Stock and Corn Exchanges as necessary and useful institutions. It is a miracle that they were not suffocated by the enormity of their assertions. What! The Exchanges of the world useful and necessary! Have they ever kept within the limits of their legitimate business? Are they ever simply the meeting place of the bona fide purchaser and the bona fide seller, where honest demand and honest supply can come together and transact their business?

The simile comparison of the Commercial Exchange to a poison tree is incomplete, because it only symbolizes one phase of the transactions carried on there, their effect upon the moral nature of the people. The Exchange is a den of robbers in which the modern successors of the robber knights of the Middle Ages make their abode and cut the throats of all who pass by. Like the robber knights, they form a kind of aristocracy, which gets a handsome livelihood out of the people. Like the robber knights, they claim the right to exact contributions from the merchants and artisans. But, more fortunate than the robber knights, they run no risk of being hung high and dry if a stronger person than they comes upon them in their high-handed course of purse-slashing.—Selected.

CONCERNING HELP.

Too much help is no help. The young eagle is taught to fly by being pushed out of the nest. Left to follow its own inclinations it would never learn to leap toward the sun. Parents too often destroy their children because they haven't the wisdom to know what is best for them. They follow the blind dictates of their love, and by doing too much for them make them incapable of doing anything for themselves. But God makes no such mistakes as this. "For whom he loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." He gives him the right kind of training to make a man of him; often throwing him upon his own resources to develop his strength.—Our Young Folks.

Letter Department

DES MOINES, IOWA, June 25, 1910.

Editors Herald: On last Friday afternoon I received a telephone message to come to Runnells that evening, since there would be preaching at the Saints' chapel by the Brighamites. When I arrived they were preaching and I heard among other things the following:

"We treat [teach] the gospel of Christ as taught in former days, and again taught in our day.

"People do not appreciate what God has revealed.

"God is establishing his kingdom never to be thrown down nor given to another people,"—quoting professedly from Daniel 2: 44.

"Discord is a sure evidence of error. One idea only can be right, all others must be wrong.

"Are we sending out enough missionaries to preach the word? Too many are preaching the doctrines of men and advocating broken ordinances.

"We are trying to bring mankind to a knowledge of the Son of God in the proper way.

"I may be wrong in some things I say to-night; if so, I would like to be corrected.

"Every truth is in harmony with every other truth."

1 Corinthians 15: 29 was read, and said that was "a part of the gospel. We should teach and practice this ordinance now, for if one does not start as soon as another he will never in all the ages catch up with the other.

"It may be asked, What is being done in the temple in Salt Lake City? We are working for our dead ancestors, but that is not all, not by any means. People are becoming saviors to their fellow-men. How? By preaching the gospel and administering the gospel ordinances for the dead and the living. On these we differ from you people. We desire to have harmony."

At the close I asked the speaker to read Daniel 2: 44, and I had to urge it read before he would read that verse without special comment. I asked why the words thrown down were used instead of destroyed. "Well," he said, "I think it means the same thing," but he admitted that he had not read it as it was. Then I asked him why the representatives of that church thus quoted that passage when they wished to make an argument against the "Reorganization." I told him that we believed that it, the church, had not been destroyed, but if we believed in their theory we would have to believe that it had been.

He made the same claim that is generally made about building temples, that is that they are always commanded to build, and not always commanded to build. He confessed that we had a record of the command to build the Kirtland Temple, and the Nauvoo Temple, but he did not know where the command was to build the temple in Salt Lake City,—that they did not have the records, all of them.

I asked what other things they did in the temple at Salt Lake City besides work for their dead ancestors, as they had said that was not all they did there. They answered by reading out of the Doctrine and Covenants about washings and anointings, etc. I asked them if that was all they did. They said, No. I inquired what else they did, but they again answered that they did not have all the records, so they could not tell.

I inquired if I understood that they were sent to preach the gospel. They answered, Yes. Do you preach anything but the gospel? I asked. They answered, No. I then asked if they did not preach polygamy privately whenever opportunity offered. They said sometimes they showed it was according to the Bible. Do you ever advocate that principle publicly? They answered, No. I asked if they knew anything about a tract being sent out by the Northern States Mission of their church that advocated polygamy. They at first tried to evade the question, and tried to make it appear that they did not send out such a tract, but they finally acknowledged that they each had one, but that it was a lecture by a non-Mormon. I acknowledged that, but I inquired why they were interested in spending postage in sending it out to our people. They said, to show that the Bible did not oppose polygamy, and that it was so understood by others besides the Mormons. I asked what they called such work as sending out tracts favoring polygamy, if it was not publicly advocating polygamy, but they could not answer. They concluded that the best thing was to discuss the differences publicly, and to that I agreed, but I could not get them to write out a proposition, but said that when Elder Pace was through discussing at Davenport they would send me the same propositions, and took my address ostensibly for that purpose. We will wait and see.

Elder Roberts has accepted of the following propositions to be discussed at Ottumwa, beginning July 25, nothing preventing:

"1. The church of which I, J. F. Mintun, am a member, incorporated under the name of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is the true church of Christ, and in harmony with the Scriptures in origin, organization, doctrine, ordinances, and practice.

"2. The Church of Christ, of which I, W. G. Roberts, am a member, is the church of Christ, and scriptural in organization, origin, name, doctrine and practice.

"3. The Book of Mormon is of divine origin and its teachings entitled to the respect and belief of all Bible believers.

"4. The sixty-six books as found in the King James' Translation and Revised Versions is the perfect revelation of God's will to man and all that is essential to his salvation."

We expect to begin tent meetings in this city the first of next week, to continue as interest may require.

Your tracts entitled, "All Brighamite roads lead to polygamy," and "Duplicity exposed," just received. They will do good. The article on the "Corner stones of the Utah church" should be in tract form.

In hope of the final conflict,

J. F. MINTUN.

FALL RIVER, MASSACHUSETTS.

Dear Herald Readers: So many of the Saints have been in and passed through our city, and quite a number, commissioned with a special charge, have labored in our midst to the end that we might see the beauty of the Christlife and the glorious possibilities of life eternal, that a letter coming from us may be like a voice speaking from the past, awakening in some one's mind, pleasant reminiscences, and for a brief period transporting the mind in thought to the many manifestations of God's Holy Spirit, that are not confined by time or space.

Fall River is a city of hills and vales, a city the land of which must have been shaken terrifically at the time of our Savior's crucifixion, according to the Bible and the Book of Mormon statements, for on every hand the granite rocks have been thrown to the surface, making the cost of working the streets to grade and the putting in of the sewerage system very expensive.

I do not want to speak about the rocks of our city, and its municipal expenses, but about the power of the gospel and resistive forces that this same power meets. A perfect man being placed in an imperfect environment may not be affected by his environment, but place an imperfect man in an imperfect environment and I am sure the environment will make the same impression upon him in the course of time. In looking at the different races of the world they appear to have taken upon themselves peculiarities, manifested mentally and physically, that seem to be confined to that particular portion of the earth upon which each race of people dwells. Now, Fall River, being such a city of hills, vales, and rocks, it almost seems that the people have taken upon themselves the characteristics of their city. Fall River is a city of great cotton manufacturers, a home of cotton goods workers; all except a few having hearts like their native hills, wherein the seed of the gospel can find no root. For the past two or three years our missionary in charge has tried to place before the minds of the people of this city, their position in the kingdom of God, from the Bible standard, sending such able and efficient workers as Brn. A. B. Phillips, and R. B. Howlett to labor in our city, in tent preaching.

When the books are opened at the great judgment day, they will show the earnest efforts put forth and also the results, and while we feel sorry that the results have not as yet matured into obedience to the gospel principles, we feel sure that our city has been salted to some extent by the salt of the earth. Some of the Saints may take the view that it is necessary to preach the gospel to all people, as a witness either to bless or condemn, but personally I want the gospel to be a blessing to the people. If it be necessary that the Saints be divided in the working out of the gospel plan, one part of the Saints standing upon the mount of blessing to bless the acts of obedience, the other standing upon the mount of cursing to curse the acts of disobedience, it is my earnest desire to stand upon the mount of blessing, not with the thought of shrinking the trials incident to the overcoming the lusts of the flesh and the putting on of the nature of Christ, but that my feet may appear beautiful as we walk upon the mount, bringing good tidings.

Well do I remember Bro. David Anderson visiting this city to labor in our midst. I was an attendant but not a member, and how my heart was filled by some influence that was divine in its nature, and how beautiful nature seemed, what wonderful testimonies were opened up to my mental vision, all seeming to testify of a Father's love and care of his creation. Time has found me growing quite accustomed to this marvelous light, and while we may get accustomed to receiving of the Spirit, we never get weary of receiving it, for it comes as an old friend, and yet there is something new with each visit. It is a familiarity that does not breed contempt. How glorious will be the morning when we live in the place that God has set apart for his people and the storehouse of heaven is opened unto us, with Christ in our midst initiating us in the glories of a life in the presence of God.

May the present find us all preparing, and the future find us prepared.

JOHN PILLING.

SAINT BERNARD, OHIO, June 27, 1910.

Editors Herald: I request the prayers of the Saints in my behalf. I will add a testimony concerning my weakness of the flesh. I have not been living right and I am cut off from the church. I know this work is true and my heart's desire is to make all things right and live right and come back. I want all the Saints to pray for me and I will live right, so God will answer your prayers in my behalf. I am the lost one, but pray that I may be found.

Yours in the one faith,

LAFAYETTE GOTT.

ESCATAWPA, MISSISSIPPI, June 30, 1910.

Dear Herald: I have looked for a letter in the HERALD or Ensign for some time, from some of my old friends in Texas, but I see they do not write much. I feel very lonesome here and would be glad to hear from anyone. You can address me at 262 Biloxi, Mississippi, and it will reach me. If Brother Mannerling sees this, or if anyone will notify him of my request, I want him to be sure and write me. I am at Brother Millow's now at Escatawpa, and will try to start a meeting here in a day or two.

I left the Bluff Creek Branch this morning at the close of the Mobile district conference that had been held there. This branch is near Vancleave. The many strangers that I met could think of my name with little trouble. I met many good and faithful Saints. The Saints here are so friendly that one can not help but enjoy himself. We had fasted and prayed the Sunday before the conference for its welfare, and when all the people met you could see the very spirit of charity and love in all. I must say it was a good conference in every way. A fine prayer and testimony meeting was held Sunday with many good prayers and testimonies.

There was a step taken in regard to helping the Mobile Saints buy a gospel tent for that city, to be used at other places at idle times. There were about twelve dollars raised at the conference for that purpose. The conference closed with many sad hearts, warm handshakes, and an urgent invitation to come again, but one of the best parts of the conference was enjoyed Friday night,—an entertainment conducted by Sr. Edna Cochran with the Sunday school and Religio workers. I know it was the best I ever attended. It made me think that it was the drilling of an army for a great battle that awaited them in the future. Sister Edna is to be highly recommended for her faithfulness.

Since coming to this State about two or three weeks ago, I have inducted five precious souls into the kingdom. I feel well in the work of the Lord, but I feel weak and want all the Saints to pray for me. This is a grand work, and we that occupy places therein ought to be faithful. God is smiling on some of the young people here in this district, and the Spirit has designated some that will be called to occupy in the priesthood. May they live faithful.

Your well-wishing brother,

ALBERT VAN CLEAVE.

VALLEY STATION, KENTUCKY, June 23, 1910.

Editors Herald: I will drop a word from this part of the vineyard to your valuable columns. I have been holding meetings in a schoolhouse about twelve miles from the city since the 12th with a growing interest. One very nice lady stood up for baptism last night and her husband has said he was going to go with his wife. I think there will be several others in the near future, as many have confessed that they never heard the gospel before, although they have attended church all their lives.

This place is a new opening. Just last winter I held a week's meetings here. The people are kind hearted and take us home with them. They are mostly members of the Methodist and Lutheran churches and many of them have expressed themselves as not believing the doctrines and baptisms in their churches. The only remedy for them is to come over on the Lord's side and obey his word. Then they can know that the doctrine we preach is true.

May we ever be faithful to this ever true church and be able to build it up. Our branch in the city has such a scattered membership that we can not have any Religio, and we have no success in building up a Sunday school, but we hope for better conditions. May the Lord bless and speed his cause, is my prayer. I am ever praying for the redemption of Zion.

J. W. METCALFE

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA, June, 1910.

Dear Brothers and Sisters: Having passed through trials and sorrows as well as joys in this latter day work, and not seeing any account of the loss that came to me and my family in any of our church papers, I thought I would write to you and let you see that although the dear Lord saw fit to let us go through a severe trial, yet in his great mercy he also poured out his blessings on us.

On the 7th day of December, 1909, two of my sons (George A. and Robert E.) were installing an acetylene gas generator for welding purposes. This was their last day to be at this place where they make safes, and the firm that was buying the welding plant wished it for welding certain parts of their safes together. I had been talking to my son George at 1.15 o'clock p. m., and when he bade me good-bye, he told me that he was going up to the safe works to put on a safety valve on the generator and then they would be ready to turn the plant over to the owners of the safe works. My youngest boy, Robert, had been there two or three days showing their people how to work the plant for welding.

After I bade my son good-bye, I had to meet a party from New York who came to Philadelphia to see me on business. We did not get through our business till 6 p. m. I lived near the church, which is about an hour's ride from my office, so when I got home it was about 7 p. m. I did not know what was wrong, but I could see by their faces that there was something wrong. One of the sisters of the church and my oldest daughter and her husband were there, but I did not see my wife. I asked for her and they said she had gone up stairs and for me to get my coat off first as they had something to tell me. I took off my coat and they told me that my two boys had been blown up in an explosion, killing George instantly and burning Robert almost into a crisp. You may judge what a blow this was to me, to know that when I bade George good-bye near my office, it was the last time I would ever see him alive in this world, and to think that Robert, though his life might be spared, yet he would be disfigured for life and blind, for they said his eyes were blown out.

After I had spoken to my wife, with very poor comfort, as I had none to give, I got ready to go to the hospital to see them and claim George's body. Bro. W. W. Smith came in. He had been down and claimed George's body for us and had seen Robert. When he met me he could hardly talk. He just took me by the hand and said that Robert was still alive, so I went to the hospital and what a sight! Robert was covered with bandages from the top of his head to below his knees, and the doctors told me it would be better for him to die, as his eyes were gone, both blown out of their sockets, and that his back was broken and large holes were cut and burned into his body. While they were working with him he came to and when he did he told them not to bother about him, but to go to his brother George and save him, for he had a wife and child. George was twenty-five and Robert was nineteen.

This explosion happened within two hundred yards of Bro. A. D. Angus' home. When his daughter Jennie heard the explosion she ran out and when she saw it was at the safe works and knowing that my boys were there, she ran down, and the first thing she saw was the men bringing out the body of George. He was dead when they got him out, but it was an hour before they got Robert, for he was covered up in the ruins, there being a large safe on top of him and tons of brick on top of that. When they got him out Sister Angus wanted to go to the hospital to claim the bodies for us, but her mother sent her son Archie to get Bro. W. W. Smith. Bro. Smith went and claimed the bodies of the boys and found Robert still alive. He stayed with him until they had him bandaged up, for Robert's clothes were burned off his body, except his shoes. Brother Smith then went and told George's wife and then came and told my wife, and after he had sent some of the sisters to stay with my wife, he went back to the hospital to see Robert again and to administer to him. Dear brothers and sisters, you will wonder where the blessings of the Lord comes in when here is my oldest son killed and my youngest son with his eyes blown out, his back broken, and this body all cut and burned; but God is good and his promises faithful and true to his children.

When Brother Smith (though tired and worn, for he is not strong in body, but faithful to his calling) went back to the hospital the doctors would not uncover Robert's head for him to anoint him. He found a little spot on his neck that was bare so he anointed him there and prayed over him that he might by the Lord's will and power come out of this with his body in perfect health and strength, with all his faculties. The brothers and sisters were gathered at the church for teachers' meeting but they turned it into a prayer meeting for our boy, and glory be to God, their prayers were heard and answered, for when I went back to the hospital in the morning, the first thing the doctors and nurses told me was that my boy's eyes were all right. They said it was something that they could not understand. They knew his eyes were gone, for when they cleaned his eye sockets out there was not an eyeball to be seen and that they were positive his back was broken, but now it seemed to be all right. This happened on December 7, 1909, and it was not two weeks when I brought my boy home with perfect eyesight and a perfect body, and not anything on his body to show that he had ever been burned. The eyes he had before were somewhat weak, but the set he has now is sharp and strong so you can see that the dear Lord will and does hear and answer the prayers of his children. Dear Saints, is it not worth all our sacrifice to get to serve a God and Father like this, and to give even our life to his service?

My son George makes four boys we have on the other shore to meet us when we come.

We ask an interest in your prayers that we may prove faithful and be able to receive a crown of glory. After the debris was cleaned away, it was found that the plant my boys were installing did not explode, but that a man that worked at the safe works lit a match over a can of benzine, and it was that which caused the explosion.

Yours in gospel bonds,

3419 A STREET.

JOSHUA P. FOWLER.

SIMMS, TEXAS, June 20, 1910.

Dear Herald: A few lines from a poor missionary amid the lone pine hills of northeastern Texas. I am listening to the sighing of the wind as it passes through the tall pine trees, and I think I hear the hum of the mosquito and the crochet of the frog, all of which makes the missionaries think about the millennium.

I left home May 15 for a trip through eastern Oklahoma and northeastern Texas. My first stop was at Fanshawe, where I preached one sermon to a noble little band of Saints. We enjoyed a fine prayer meeting in the evening.

My next stop was at Wister, where I met with Bro. Asa Harder and his noble little wife. They are running a lively paper at this place, called the Wister News. I was royally entertained at the hands of Brother and Sister Harder. My next stop was at old Standley, where Bro. Ellis Short and Bro. W. R. Pickering once had a large lumber business and where there was once a good branch; but all the Saints are scattered and gone now. This is where the Northeastern Texas and Choctaw District was organized. I preached a funeral sermon here to a nice little crowd gathered out at the cemetery. When I got through a lady stepped up and asked me if I was acquainted with Sr. Nora Short. I told her that I was, but that Sister Short had passed over to the other side. She said her kind deeds in that country would never die. Let us all live that way, that our good deeds will never die.

My next stop was at Eubanks where I met with Brother and Sister Wilson, noble good Saints that knew how to make a missionary feel at home, and they placed in my hand something to pay my way on to tell the gospel. I preached here a week to a fine audience. Several will be gathered in here this summer. I blessed four children. This is a new place.

My next stop was at Cedar Springs, where the gospel had never been heard. Here I met with Brother and Sister Chapple whom I baptized a few years ago. I preached a week to an interested audience. I baptized one man and three ladies.

I went from here to old Spencer where the sound of the gospel had never been heard. I preached four days to an interested crowd and I think I will be able to do a good work at this place in the near future.

From there I came to northeastern Texas where the owl hollows loud and the pine trees grow tall and mosquitoes keep you good company during the few hours the poor missionary has to sleep.

I met many Saints I had baptized when I first went into the ministry work, still holding fast to the rod of iron. Some day I hope to meet them all in Zion.

We are preaching every night and two sermons on Sunday and having a good audience. I have met some Saints that have not heard for three years. I preach a few sermons and administer the Lord's supper and have a prayer meeting if I am with them on Sunday, leaving them rejoicing, and pass on. So I am in the battle until the conflict is over and the victory is won.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints, for my health is not good.

Your brother,

E. A. ERWIN.

CLAY CITY, INDIANA, June 21, 1910.

Dear Herald: I so enjoy reading the HERALD and in fact any and all things which have to do with this glorious latter day work. Yet I feel impressed that I should do my part, be it ever so small; and I trust I may perhaps be able to encourage some, even as I have been encouraged and strengthened by the good letters I read from time to time.

I have not always been a Latter Day Saint, having been a member of the Christian Church before uniting with this one. I often feel that I have missed so much in that I never even knew of this church until we moved to Fayette City, Pennsylvania, two and one half years ago. Still I feel that God is wonderfully kind and merciful to me to have led me into this marvelous light—this wonderful truth.

I have four boys from one to five years of age, and my greatest desire is to see them stanch defenders of the truth once delivered to the Saints, and my constant prayer is that God will spare me and so help me to train them that I may see this prayer granted.

We are not close enough to any branch of Saints that I can attend regularly and bear my testimony of this work and to receive strength from such meetings. I have been in this work more than two years. I know this work is from God and therefore true, for God is true. He has blessed me and mine so often and so wonderfully, that never has my faith and joy in the work been greater than now, and I feel to say as did Job, "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

Pray for me that I may ever be faithful, meek, and humble, doing my duty cheerfully at all times. Ever praying for the welfare of the church and for the redemption of Zion,

Your sister in Christ,

Mrs. C. F. DAVIS.

Editors Herald: We are now settled at 802 North Main street, Kewanee, Illinois, in our new home, ready to take up our pastoral duties. The prospects are not flattering by any means, but we are hopeful of better conditions and by the help of the Spirit of the Master we trust to have results.

That Kirbyville Debate.

It is very evident that the millennium has not yet come. Neither have the saints or Christians all come to a unity of the faith. This fact was manifested in the debate at Kirbyville between Elder W. M. Aylor, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, and J. W. Chism, Christian Evangelist for the Church of Christ.

Kirbyville is a lively little city of three thousand inhabitants where Mr. Kirby has a large sawmill. The debate was held in the auditorium with ample seating capacity for five or six hundred, but on account of the prejudice against the local congregation of the Church of Christ and general prejudice against the angel's message, the other churches were prepared with a well-organized boycott in the form of protracted prayer meetings the first week and later by preaching services, but we had a fairly good attendance.

The debate occupied twelve sessions, six on each proposition. Brother Aylor affirmed that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is in harmony with the New Testament church, in origin, organization, doctrine, faith, and practice. Mr. Chism affirmed the same for his church. The people of the Church of Christ have a membership in Kirbyville of perhaps fifty or more. J. W. Chism is recognized by them as their champion debater of Texas, so it was with some degree of pride and happy anticipation that they entered the conflict. We have no members there, therefore we were strangers among strangers in a strange land with a champion to contend with, but we were hopeful nevertheless, and had confidence in our cause and faith in the triumph of truth.

We were kindly cared for at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Gilchrist, our board being paid by the members of the Church of Christ, therefore we can remember with gratitude many features of this conflict. We were hopeful and prayerful that good would result and God's truth be vindicated. We would not enter into details in reporting many minor issues, but there are a few we desire your readers to know. Permit me to say, first, that each time I attend a debate and hear what we call the angel's message attacked, it makes me rejoice to know that my faith and membership are in a church that can be defended honorably and candidly, that we do not need to resort to trickery, quibbling, slander, and sophistry to maintain our cause. I have seen so much of that kind of work, not only in debates but to oppose our efforts all along, that I am at times forced to doubt the sincerity and honesty of those who oppose us. I prefer to believe them honest—honest, but miserably blinded.

Brother Aylor led in the affirmative by explaining the difference between us and the Utah Mormons, reading from court decisions and other extracts to prove our respectable standing where we are known, and that it is only prejudice and ignorance that speak evil of the Reorganized Church. He then gave a description of the New Testament church, what it was in organization, doctrine, faith, and practice, and urged the people to observe that he was to prove that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ was in harmony with it. The church of the first century had in it prophets, apostles, evangelists, bishops, teachers, elders, and deacons; also gifts, prophecy, and tongues, interpretations of tongues, healing the sick, wisdom, knowledge, miracles, etc., with an inspired ministry and the promise of the Holy Ghost to all who would obey the gospel. (Acts 2: 38, 39; John 7: 16, 17.)

The mission of Joseph Smith came in for its share of support, using Daniel 2: 44; Isaiah 11: 10-13; Zechariah 2: 1-5; Genesis 49: 22-27; 48: 12-20; and Revelation 14: 6, 7. These texts, with others, were used to prove that God was to do a work in the last days—in the eleventh hour (Matthew 20: 1-6).

But the champion of Texas therefore disputed the application made and in lieu thereof challenged, defied, and dared Bro. Aylor to prove that they meant what he said they did. Mr. Chism contended that Joseph Smith was a bad man in every respect, and opened his first speech in an effort to belittle Brother Aylor for his knowledge of grammar, logic, etc., and that the Devil appeared to "Joe" in the thicket instead of the Lord. He contended with much energy that "Joe" had added two books to the Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, that he came under the curse of Revelation 22: 18, that the gospel of Christ was complete without these two books. James 1: 25 speaks of the perfect law of liberty, hence the law was perfect and needed nothing further. Timothy had known the Holy Scriptures from a child, "which is able to make thee wise unto salvation," so we don't need "Joe Smith's" revelations nor Book of Mormon. Brother Aylor urged Mr. Chism to explain what scripture it was Paul referred to that make Timothy wise unto salvation. Was it the New Testament? If not (it being not written then) and he was wise unto salvation without it, why do we need it? But Mr. Chism found many other things to talk about, so he did not explain. This same champion also said that Isaiah 29 does not refer to a book at all—no hint there that a book was to come out of the ground or any other way—but something, he didn't say what it was, was to be as a book.

After setting up the church in the first century, Brother Aylor showed where the wicked apostasy was to overcome it and violence take it by force (Matthew 11: 12), and that the church pictured as a woman (Revelation 12) was to flee into the mountains for 1,260 days or years. Then traced the history when it went into the wilderness; in A. D., 570, remaining 1260 years, which would give us 1830 as the date of its return or reestablishment. He then called attention to the proposition, Is this restored church or this reorganized church in harmony with the New Testament church. Notwithstanding we were among strangers and had a champion to contend with, the people began to see from the first session that Brother Aylor was supporting his claims by the Bible, while Mr. Chism was answering him with slander and ridicule and real infidel argument. Mr. Chism delighted to read from such works as, Metropolitan Life of New York, John Hyde, Towne, Brighamites, and others who were turned out of the church and afterwards spoke evil of us. He seems to have no regard for court decisions or witnesses unless they were prejudiced against us, but the effort of Mr. Chism to prejudice the case was a flat failure. The prevailing sentiment of the people is that Chism lost from start to finish. I wish to say, however, for Mr. Chism, that in just one session, during the discussion of the first proposition did he really debate the question at issue. I think he made an honest, able effort to explain 1 Corinthians 13 the way he believes it, but Brother Aylor held the fort and showed the people that the perfect condition has not yet come; therefore these gifts are to continue till we all come to a unity of the faith, until the coming of our Lord in power and glory, when he shall reign as King of kings and Lord of lords. "Then that which is in part shall be done away."

It should be recorded here that Mr. Chism in his attack on Joseph Smith being a prophet, praised the idea that Alexander Campbell was not a prophet, that he was an uninspired man. This statement will be needed later on and will no doubt appear strange, to say the least, especially when we arrive at the end of Mr. Chism's argument in support of the 1827 movement which, as he claims, was established in fulfillment of many prophecies when the sanctuary shall be (was) cleansed and the primitive gospel restored! Just think of it! Prophets as far back as Moses, then on to Malachi and including the apostles, John in the wonderful vision on Patmos, all of them under the inspiring influence of the Holy Ghost—foretelling future events. One event especially: the cleansing of the sanctuary and the restoration of primitive Christianity and yet God using Alexander Campbell to do the missionary work of it and not giving him any inspiration whatever! This modern expression seems to fit right here: "Now, what do you know about that?"

Mr. Chism's attacks on Joseph Smith did not win him any favor, nor his ridicule about him "seeing the Lord in the thicket." He made quite an effort against the Doctrine and Covenants. See section 26, where it says, "Behold, I say unto you that it mattereth not what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink when ye partake of the sacrament, if it so be that ye do it with an eye single to his glory." This was evidently very sweet to Mr. Chism and he seemed to enjoy himself keeping it before his audience. "It makes no difference what ye Latter Day Saints eat at your sacrament services, pork or beans, soup or cabbage, anything, Joe Smith said so." No explanation from Brother Aylor would satisfy this Texas champion. He was determined we should eat pork and beans at sacrament. It should be remembered that this same Mr. Chism was representing a church and people who make the boast that they speak where the Bible speaks and are silent where the Bible is silent, and that they have no creed, no confession of faith, no discipline—nothing but the Bible alone. Of course this idea was paraded for six sessions of the debate with much enjoyment for Mr. Chism and his faithful few. When Chism's church was on trial, Brother Aylor introduced so many other books written by leading lights in this "Church of Christ" movement that it seemed a revelation (as it were) to even Mr. Chism himself. It had been made prominent that the Latter Day Saints had other books beside the Bible, but now when their books were being introduced, several of them, it was a bitter dose for the "faithful few." Can the reader imagine the surprise, the humiliation, and defeat they encountered when Brother Aylor read from one of their own books the following instruction regarding the sacrament: "The best loaf of bread for this service is made like common pie crust, well-baked, not dried or burned." This is found on page 29 of The Christian Minister's Manual, compiled by F. M. Green, assisted by writings of Alexander Campbell, Prof. J. W. McGarvey, F. M. Brunner, T. W. Brents, and A. B. Jones, and from the direct contributions of Thomas Munnell and Robert Moffit.

The above extract about pie crust was simply dreadful to hear after what had gone before, especially as Mr. Chism had read in the Doctrine and Covenants, words that were not there and had boasted with such glee of his Bible and "Bible alone" creed. This is more amusing since it is a fact that for years the members of this Church of Christ have been breaking pie crust every Lord's Day as sacrament and did not know why they did so! But I venture to say that the "faithful few" at Kirbyville for weeks to come will eat their pie crust in remembrance of W. M. Aylor.

Another interesting feature of the debate was the argument of Mr. Chism to do away with apostles and prophets in the church. The apostles were the constitutional committee appointed to form the constitutional government, the church, and therefore these committeemen would have no successors, their work having been finished. Now there is quite a difference in a set of men being members of a constitutional committee or convention and being members of the state or government after the constitution is adopted. Paul says, "God set in the church first apostles," and Chism says, "God called twelve apostles and appointed them as a constitutional committee." I suppose that could be called Chismism. This is a sample of this Texas champion's work all the way through the debate. If our brethren are posted in books, theirs and ours, there is no need to dodge this self-styled "wise-man."

The most glaring piece of his work was his effort to explain Revelation 13 and make the beast therein refer to Joseph Smith. He claims to read Greek as readily as English, so he pretends to furnish the Greek in explaining Revelation 13 and concludes that Joseph Smith is the beast referred to, his name corresponding to Greek numerals to make 666. We had with us the Greek grammar and the Emphatic Diaglot and anyone who knows the English alphabet and can count from one to nine can see that Mr. Chism is wrong in his explanation. In SAINTS' HERALD of January 18, 1905, you will find an article from Bro. H. O. Smith on this same matter which you will find correct. Mr. Chism contends that the word Smith in Greek should have the letter i added in order to "Greekize" it; it would then read "Smithi." Granting this to be true, it requires this additional i supported by the natural 10 to permit this champion to have the full number—666. In the Greek alphabet, the letter o appears twice, once as in omicron which is short o. The other is omega, long o. But we are not left to a matter of preference or taste as to how we pronounce the word Joseph—whether long or short o. For the Emphatic Diaglot furnishes the long o as in omega, its numeral being 800. If Mr. Chism had used this o it would have been fatal to his plan, so he used short o in order to decrease the numeral to 70, then to diminish still further and make his letter scheme work, he uses the vau, the Greek f instead of sigma, the Greek s in the word Joseph. Vau has only six to its credit while sigma has 200 as its natural, so by these cunning changes, together with the added i to "Greekize" the word Smith, he makes out his case. Then to clinch his argument he says, "Can anyone doubt that I am right in it after noting the image?" He then closed his preface with the solemn words, "I am yours for the whole truth." These quotations are from Mr. Chism's book, Campbellism—What is it? On page 195 you find this language after several pages of endeavor to prove that the prophecies of Daniel were fulfilled in 1827 by the cleansing of the sanctuary by A. Campbell and others.

There is a quotation which Mr. Chism should read: "The wisdom of their wise men shall perish and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid." We will not prolong our comments on Mr. Chism's rendering of Greek on the name of Joseph Smith, but simply say, "It is a glaring, deceitful bluff, such as gamblers use when they want to scoop in the other man's money with only a pair of deuces in hand."

On Mr. Chism's proposition, he labored hard to establish his church in fulfillment of prophecy. That it was in harmony with the New Testament church, hammer and chisel cutting down the standard so it would fit his little Pennsylvania town church by Alexander Campbell. Brother Aylor repeatedly kept that before the people, that Chism was cutting down the standard in order that he might be in harmony, etc. The people could see this and it proved a heavy blow to the champion and his "faithful few." We rejoice in the triumph and are happy in the conflict for truth.

In bonds,

"When Phillips Brooks was going abroad," says the "Spectator" in the Outlook, "a friend rallied him about discovering a new religion and bringing it back with him. 'You had better be careful, Bishop,' he said; 'it might be difficult to get a new religion through the customhouse.' 'I think not,' observed Mr. Brooks. 'Any religion popular enough to import would have no duties attached to it,'"

News From Branches

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Although the air is hot and humid, nature is developing a rich growth of all things good for the inner man. At the June business meeting, thirteen were received by letter and one hundred were granted letters, about ninety of which were for those of the South Side Branch. Our present membership is twenty-two hundred.

On Children's Day, the 12th, nine hundred and thirty-three were present. On that occasion, there were a fine large choir of juniors and during the evening's exercises, which were in charge of Bro. H. Barto, four young men delivered excellent, short addresses to good effect. The decorations, which were of flags, oak leaves, ferns, and flowers, were beautiful. At 1.30 p. m., thirteen children were baptized by Bro. D. J. Krahl, Sunday school superintendent, and on the 19th, eight more went forward in baptism.

The Second Independence Branch was organized on the 12th, Elder I. N. White in charge of the ceremony, and Pres. F. M. Smith delivering a welcome address, also a full corps of officers being elected and set apart for services.

On Flag Day, the 14th, were two noted events: the marriage of Bro. and Sr. W. J. Bullard, and in the evening the concert of Professor Carl Bush, in the fine large chorus of which were present seven of our own Latter Day Saint singers. Also on the 21st was another day in our memory of unusual happenings. The excavation for our new government building was begun, a one hundred thousand dollar project.

Srs. O. B. Smith and J. C. May have left us for their long journey to the Society Islands.

Pres. Joseph Smith, speaking to the Saints at the morning service of the 26th, selected for his theme, John 8: 31: "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." The discourse contained a great historical narrative and its lessons have been taught since sixty-six years ago. The fifty years of the speaker's service since then, beginning April, 1860, have been offered, through the help of a higher power, fully and freely, and he would, were he permitted, willingly devote as long a time again, that he might make honorable the name of his father and his co-laborers, and that of every true and faithful Latter Day Saint. Brother Joseph's voice was clear and his words impressive. They combined to make a fitting memorial of the lives and martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and were delivered in a manner fully in harmony with the just yet tender and kindly spirit with which the venerable speaker has ever been inspired.

Conference Notices.

At the last conference of the Toronto District held in the city of Toronto, Canada, it was resolved that the time and place for the fall conference be subject to the call of the district presidency and missionary in charge. Now in order that proper time may be had to make arrangements with railway companies regarding rates and for all arrangements and advertising for said October conference of the Toronto District, we do humbly request that branch presidents bring the matter of inviting said October conference before their branches at the earliest opportunity and as soon as possible inform us. John Shields, Clavering P. O., Cameron, Ontario.

Convention Notices.

The Sunday school convention and the conference will meet with the Clearwater Branch on August 12 and 13, the convention to be held on the 12th and the conference on the 13th. All are invited to come and bring the Spirit with you. Send the branch reports to William Kester, Clearwater, Nebraska.

Two-Day Meetings.

At Beaverton, Michigan, July 30 and 31. All are invited to attend. Saints from the north on Michigan Central and P. and M. line will be met with teams at Gladwin, Friday evening, July 29. George W. Burt, president.

Reunion Notices.

The first reunion of the New York and Philadelphia District will be held at Osborn's Point, Manasquan, New York, from August 27 to September 15, 1910. The last three days will be occupied with the meetings of district conference. The location is a beautiful pine grove overlooking the Manasquan River. Good river bathing. Within two miles of the ocean. Easily accessible to New York and Philadelphia. Trains to these points every hour. Fare from New York, two dollars and return, good till used. From Philadelphia, two dollars and seventy-five cents, via Market street, return trip, good for sixteen days; two dollars and twenty-five cents for five days. Price of board, tents, cots, etc., will be noticed later. A welcome is extended to all the Saints, especially in the East, to meet with us. Arch D. Angus, chairman; Benjamin R. McGuire, secretary.

Pastoral.

Having been placed in charge of the Southeastern Mission, I ask all the Saints in this large field to give all the assistance they can in every legitimate way possible to the missionary force and thus be helpers in making the efforts of the missionary a success. I take this method of asking all who live far away from branches where the work has never been preached to make an effort to get the people interested in our work and also to get church houses and schoolhouses where these can not be secured, if you can only secure a private house, the missionary will be glad to come and preach the word if you can get the people out to hear.

I would be pleased to have any of the Saints or friends of the cause to write me in regard to the conditions where they reside in new places, in order that I may know what the opportunities for labor are in your respective localities and that the demand for labor may be met so far as possible in every place in this field, while the missionaries make a sacrifice of home and loved ones and are faithful and diligent in their work of spreading the gospel. All the Saints are requested to be helpers in every lawful way they can, according to the Lord's plan, and thus be laborers together with him and worthy to share equally when the Lord comes to reward his faithful servants.

In behalf of the missionaries sent to this field I ask the prayers of all the Saints that the kind Father in heaven may bless and direct us in our work, that all may endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, is the earnest prayer and desire of your brother and coworker in Christ. All letters will reach me if addressed to 908 South Crysler street, Independence, Missouri.

The Bible in the Orient.

A large hope of Bible study in the Orient resides with the intelligent Western college men who are teachers in the government schools or representatives of the Student Volunteer Movement. In Asia there are 1,253 student volunteers, many of them strong, far-sighted crusaders whom western educational institutions have contributed to the Far East. But these men, and the men who will follow them, in order to succeed, must have increasingly in mind the necessity of a thorough knowledge of the Oriental, and broad sympathy with him. In spite of recent indications of progress, especially in the great port cities of the Orient, the men who are sent out to teach the Bible and to assist these countries in the application of its principles must appreciate that Eastern society does not admit of sudden transformation. The leaders must be content with a slow march.

The great opportunity of the Bible renaissance of the East lies in its being a movement which is not hampered by creeds or by particular methods. It may include men of every kind of faith or of no faith. It asks only that men come together with serious and practical purpose to learn the facts concerning a great literature. The leaders of this movement of educated men have set their minds in the direction of a few great central ideas, which are being emphasized in carefully arranged courses of Bible study in the native languages of the Orient. All ecclesiastical and sectarian machinery will be omitted both in the preparation of the studies and in their promotion. No priests or temples or formal observances appear in the foreground to distract or prejudice. Over one half of the three thousand Chinese students who voluntarily enrolled themselves in Bible classes during my visit to the institutions of China last year professed faiths other than the Christian religion. The tremendous possibilities of this enterprise appear when one realizes that the number of Oriental students who could be enlisted in this study to-day is dependent almost entirely upon the number and equipment of teachers.

The Bible comes to the East with a personal religion. It brings the gospel of a new individual consciousness and responsibility. One who has not seen the influence of the Bible in Asia can scarcely appreciate the optimism and good cheer which it is bringing to peoples to whom life at best has meant in many cases illusion and despair. These men, who have been accepting our material achievements and our modern civilization, but have been rejecting our creeds, will find by the study of outstanding Biblical truths the real message of Christianity to individual men.—Clayton Sedgwick Cooper in July Century.

Bathing and Health.

It might be said that the power and strength of a nation or a person may be measured by its or his regard for the bath. History furnishes emphatic illustrations of this fact. When Egypt, Greece and Rome were at the height of their ancient power, their citizens made bathing a social function, a municipal duty and a religious observance. The public baths of these nations were magnificent architecturally, and important as centers of hygienic and municipal sentiment. With the decadence of these countries, the world seems to have reverted to a period of mental sloth and physical uncleanliness.

As an authority on the matter puts it: "For a thousand years, there was not a man or woman in Europe that ever took a bath, if the historian of these times, Michelet, is to be believed. The ancient love of the bath seemed to have disappeared from off the land. There was no Greece or Rome to hold up the ensign of cleanliness to the nations of Europe. Small wonder that the peoples of the Continent became physical decadents, as indeed they were in spite of tradition to the contrary. It is not strange that there came the awful epidemics that cut off one fourth of the population of Europe—the spotted plague; the black death; the sweating sickness and the terrible mental epidemics that followed in their train—the dancing mania; the mewing mania and the biting mania. Not only the houses, but the persons of all classes reeked with filth and vermin. The bath was banished and filth was almost deified. Indeed, it was then thought that the sanctification of the body was only accomplished when that body was indescribably dirty.—From July Physical Culture.

Ever Been to Colorado?

No? Then you have an ideal vacation trip in store for you—one that will mean a complete change of scene and of living conditions, as it should result most beneficially.

The grandeur of the majestic Rockies will inspire the mind; the picturesque beauty of forest and stream refresh the soul, while the dry, tonic mountain air will rebuild the worn and jaded body.

Don't take our word for it but go and be convinced. It costs little in time or money (I'll be glad to tell you how much) and you will be a thousand times repaid.

You have perhaps been planning a trip to Colorado for years—make up your mind to-day to go this Summer and let me hand you one of the Burlington Colorado handbooks which tells all about where to go, what to see and what to do, and contains a complete list of hotels, boarding houses, and ranches, with their rates.

Ask me about Estes Park, Colorado, also.

THE MARTYRDOM OF JOSEPH AND HYRUM SMITH.

SERMON BY PRES. JOSEPH SMITH, AT INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI,
JUNE 26, 1910.

If you need a text for the morning's service, you will find it in the eighth chapter of John's gospel, the words of the Savior, of whom the Book of Mormon tells us no man can be saved except through faith in him; of whom Peter says, a better foundation can no man lay than that which is laid in him. In the eighth chapter of John's gospel, the thirty-first verse, the Savior, speaking to those who professedly believed in him, said, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Sixty-six years ago to-morrow, between four and five o'clock in the afternoon, the lives of Joseph and Hyrum Smith were taken by the hands of a violent mob in the county seat of Hancock County, Illinois, and their testimony, whatever it might have been up to that time, was sealed in their death. Whatever may have been the causes primarily that led up to the taking of the lives of these two men, one thing is absolutely sure, that to a greater or less extent, religious and irreligious men were banded together to do that act of violence. There were two of their companions in the jail with them, where Joseph and Hyrum Smith had consented to be incarcerated, having received the faithful pledge of Thomas Ford, then governor of the State of Illinois, that they should be preserved from personal violence, and should be given a fair trial before the courts of the county. Of these two companions, the one, John Taylor, was grievously wounded; the other, Willard Richards, escaped unhurt. These two were of the leading quorum of the church at that time.

You will pardon me this morning if in my remarks they shall tend somewhat to the personal side of the question, for as his oldest son at the time of his death, and now the only surviving one of his immediate family, I have a very striking, a very strong, a very earnest interest in all that appertains to his history, in all that he taught, in all that he left upon record, and one of the persistent aims of my life has been to prove myself worthy of bearing his name, of having heard him teach, and of having been baptized into the church in which, under the ministration of the angelic message, he was the foremost instrument in instituting its faith and organizing its body into an active membership.

I was baptized by him, confirmed by an elder in the church who was our Sunday school teacher, and my membership in that church has never been forfeited by an act of mine, so far as such acts may have come to the knowledge of those who are alike interested in and members of the church. I have never been cited to appear before any ecclesiastical court for personal immorality or evil conduct, nor has a verdict ever been found against me by any such court, by which my membership in that church could be taken from me justly. In my effort to honor and revere his name, I have believed that that reverence and that honor could be more distinctly shown in the strictest adherence to the things which he left on record, which had been held out to the church as the doctrine and faith and practice of the church for the fourteen years which he and his brother and their associates had been engaged in the propagandizing work that had been confided to them by their call to the ministry and their ordination under the hands of those who had been commissioned thus to ordain them.

Words with me mean but little unless they be coupled with acts, and that which is written, taking refuge under that wonderful example given by the Master when tempted and tried, to exercise his power to make bread of stones, to throw himself from the pinnacle of the temple, when offered the temptation of wealth and power and influence of the world, he answered that tempter with the simple statement, "It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." "It is written, thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." "It is written, thou shalt worship the Lord thy God and him only shalt thou serve." I have taken refuge under this example, "It is written."

It had been written, and though I may have been charged with believing too much, I have yet to learn that God has authorized or holy men have written more than was necessary, providing that which was uttered and recorded accorded with that which was written,—authorized to be written, comported itself with that which had been heard and accepted and acknowledged to be of God as his word. Hence, it is with confidence that I express my faith in the text which I have chosen: "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Reverence to the memory of Joseph Smith expressed in word only, and contradicted by acts, amounts to nothing with me, and I am satisfied that they will not when tried before the august court of God on high.

There are three organizations to-day that profess love for Joseph Smith the prophet. They profess to honor and revere his memory, and possibly in each one of these organizations, to-day or to-morrow holding special session for that specific object, the name of Joseph Smith will be emblazoned anew on the roll of fame by worshipers before God and in the name of the Master, who will recount the wonderful qualities of the man, and the fact that he was accounted worthy to receive administration of angels, for the salvation of the children of men, that that promise made to him directly, that had been spoken to Abraham of old, might be fulfilled, "in thee and thy seed shall the kindreds of the earth be blessed."

One of these organizations, one party of those who honor and revere the memory of Joseph Smith, say that he fell from his prophetic calling somewhere between the years of 1832 and 1834, and was thereafter no longer worthy to receive the administration of angels, and that the authority which he held up to that time had become vitiated, and these take his words coming through him to the church up to a certain period of time, and there they draw the line of demarkation, and say, what was received before that time we accept, what was received afterwards, we deny, and hold it to be not binding upon us. They say, The acts performed up to that particular time we acknowledge as having been valid before God, but whatever took place after that in the history of the church is not worthy of our consideration. Practically this is the position taken.

Another body accepts the priesthood of Joseph Smith, denies that he was a fallen prophet at any time in his history, and that his being taken from the earth was the sealing of his testimony, in his blood, and that all that he had done or that he had said up to time should be received and accepted as of God and to that time should be received and accepted as of God and that whatever afterwards might come to light respecting him was also of God and must needs become a part of the curriculum of faith, and be adhered to by them who honored and respected him as a prophet of God. I wish to call your attention to the fact that when Joseph and Hyrum Smith were killed, there were existing publications of the church which were held out to the church and to the world as containing the code of faith, that were given to the church as standards of faith, doctrines, and commandments. Among these were the Book of Mormon, as the angelic message, as the everlasting covenant, as it is named in one of the revelations, and which came as a message, a revelation to the man from God for the special purpose of reinstating the church, restoring the angelic priesthood, and restoring again the means of salvation unto the children of men by declaring the gospel found in the New Testament Scriptures as given of Jesus Christ and taught by his apostles, the apostles of the lamb. The second book in this triune was the book of Doctrine and Covenants, first published in 1835, by the authority of an assembly, a solemn assembly of the church, held August 17, 1835. It was held for the special purpose of taking into account the work of a committee appointed in September, 1834, and this committee reported to that august assembly of 1835, and their work was approved. The then existing Presidency gave testimony of the truth of the book, the then existing Quorum of Twelve gave their testimony to the validity and truth of the book. The existing quorums of seventy did the same thing, and so on from President Joseph Smith down to the deacons represented in that august assembly. This book was being republished at the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. Wm. D. Morton, who was employed in the office of The Times and Seasons at that time, worked on it, and I myself with one of the old-fashioned inkers, inked one of the forms of that Doctrine and Covenants, that it might be published and sent out to the world. And through the efforts of John Taylor in 1845, after father's death, the book went out to the world, containing a declaration of our faith and belief, as arranged by that committee in 1834 and reported in 1835, and accepted by that divine assembly, by that august assembly, August 17, 1835.

Now you may ask what object I have in this. This book was left on record by Joseph Smith, my father, as containing the revelations, a belief in which I had accepted and into which I had been baptized by the hands of my father, with others, in the Mississippi River at Nauvoo. Some curious things take place in this history. Are they of value to us? Let us see. One of the revelations contained in that book of 1835, 1844, and 1845, given unto the church directly, said, "Thou shalt take the things which are written in my scriptures to be my law, to govern my church." And at the close of that statement it is declared to be wisdom in God that such should be the case. Now was that a solemn charge to the church?

Then I present the third in this triune testimony, the Bible Scriptures: "Thou shalt take the things which are written in my scriptures." There was not at that time what is called the Inspired Version. They had only the King James Version. That is all they had at that time, and all they had until 1833. Joseph Smith in his history says he had completed the translation of the Bible, and it was laid up to be kept in security until such time as circumstances or wisdom authorized its being printed and presented to the world. We have, then, these three: The Bible which was first in point of history and fact. We have the revelations of God to man in the Book of Mormon, the everlasting covenant, that that is referred to in the Apocalypse as the everlasting gospel that the angel was to fly in the midst of the earth and preach to every kindred, tongue, and people. We have the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, containing revelations of God to men, for the testimony of himself, and his Son, the words of God. I have taken refuge against the world, so far as my teaching the scripture is concerned, upon the statement of the fact that I was commanded to do it by virtue of direct revelation, the principle that arrayed the whole religious world against Joseph Smith and his confreeres, and which finally resulted in their driving the Saints from one place to another, and making them take refuge where they could. I believed it to be the word of God. I believe it now.

Now it is a singular fact, pardon me, but it is a fact just as clear as any other fact that was ever recorded, that from 1835 to 1876,—please bear it in mind, all of you,—from 1835 to 1876, those revelations continued in the Book of Covenants undisturbed, and with those revelations were some articles of faith and declaration of doctrine that were to control the church, approved by that august assembly in August, 1835, published side by side, the one on general governments, and the other on domestic relation or marriage. Both of these declarations were contained in it. Now mark. Let me repeat it, from 1835 to 1876 there was no change.

In the fall of that year, one of these organizations who say they revere the memory of Joseph Smith, honor him as the instrument of God in bringing to pass the restoration of the gospel in these last days; that body of people, by what authority I do not know,—I have never heard by whose authority it was done,—took out one of those sections, that on marriage, eliminated it from the publication in the fall of 1876, and inserted that that was purported to be from God, but which was never presented to the church and acknowledged as a revelation by that people, by the church. It never went through the trying ordeal of being submitted and tried, to see whether or not it was in accordance with the word of God which had gone before,—eight years and two months after Joseph and Hyrum Smith lay in their graves, and were silenced for ever from standing in their own defense against such representations.

In revering the memory of Joseph Smith, answering for myself as having been baptized into the church, acting for myself as his oldest son without regard for my membership in the church, honoring and revering the memory of Joseph Smith, my father, was I to stand idly by when my majority was attained, without an attempt at least to stand for the faith into which I had been baptized, to honor and revere the name of my father by pursuing the things he had left on record at his death? Answer it, you who will. As to myself, I expect to answer it before God, as I have answered it everywhere I have been. I will present myself before the great throne on high, with the revelations given to the world in the time in which I live and but a little period before I was born, before God who gave that revelation to me and to others of the world, that we were to take the things written in the Bible to govern the church in the operation of the gospel of the Son of God for the redemption of men. I will present that wonderful revelation that has never been successfully controverted by any attack made upon it, the Book of Mormon, and will say, You gave this to the world, and to the church, and held the church under condemnation because they did not the things which were contained therein, and told them to do according to that which was written. As the Son of God when under temptation said, It is written, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God I will present that Book of Covenants, those revelations which he gave to the church through Joseph Smith the martyr; I will present them as we have bound them together, as a record of the Twelve Apostles of the Lamb of God, and the Twelve Disciples in the church in this land, and present them to the Judge, and say to him, "Judge, if thou canst justly condemn me for my conduct in reference to that church thou caused to be instituted in 1830 and left these things on record at the death of my father who baptized me into the faith, if thou canst justly condemn me on these records, I must stand condemned." Now will he do it? Answer who will. Will he do it? Every heart answers, He can not. There is one thing that God can not do. He can not lie. His son is like himself, he can not lie. "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

For fifty years, long or short, I have been standing thus before my brethren and before the world. I pledged myself on the 6th day of April, 1860, that I would promulgate no doctrine that should not be approved by them and the code of good morals. That same body of believers (whom I have mentioned second heretofore) professing to honor and revere Joseph Smith the Prophet and his brother Hyrum, say that I then pledged myself not to proceed as a man of God, but to be dictated to by men. I stated that I came not to be dictated to by men, but that if the same power that sent me authorized them to receive me, I would be with them on my original baptism under the hands of my father. But the pledge I made was this: that I would not promulgate any doctrine which should not be approved by them and the code of good morals. Where was that code of good morals to be found? In the scripture. It was to be found in the Book of Mormon. It was to be found in the direction and commands of God to the world and the church as recorded in the Book of Covenants as published at the death of Joseph Smith, and in the Times and Seasons, the official journal of the church up to that period of time.

For fifty years I have tried to revere and honor my father as a man, keeping myself so far as it was possible for me to do, unspotted from the evils of the world. Does not the confidence of sixty thousand odd people in me, does not that speak of me as worthy to stand in defense of that for which my father suffered and died?

There is another band of believers that profess to honor and revere the memory of Joseph Smith. Now that band of believers took up the work left by Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith as laid down by them, made appeal to God for direction as to the organization of the scattered members, those in Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, and other places, as sheep without a shepherd, and looking for that that was to come to help them. These men had borne the priesthood of God, had acted in its office. When they came to God, following the example of Joseph Smith and others, they received word by revelation, that the law to govern the church was found in the Book of Covenants, that which God has given, told them where to find it, how to examine it, and when they did, the Reorganization was the result, the people who are represented here to-day, with whom I have stood now for fifty years, and, please God, will so stand for fifty years longer, if he will give me that length of time. But whether the period that I shall live may be long or short, here is where I stand, and not in a boastful spirit, but in the strong reliance which Martin Luther had when he was called on to go to Worms where friends told him his enemies would destroy him, when he said, "If there be as many devils in Worms as there are chimney pots on the houses, I would go to Worms." Or as Reverend Dr. Roberts, when leaving Amsterdam for the western world: "Here I stand, God being with me." So in the same spirit in which Joseph bore his testimony, in which Hyrum bore his testimony, I have not yet sealed my testimony with my blood, and from the conditions now I do not expect to do that, as it may not be required of me, but I have never shrunk from duty yet, have never at any time permitted the banner to trail in the dust, have never blanched with fear in the presence of any, and have never been afraid to meet the issues raised by our presenting our views of the truth.

Now this body of people took this Book of Doctrine and Covenants as direct revelation to the church, and they took the Bible scriptures to be of God. They accepted it as the law of God to the church, and in it they found wisdom. They accepted the Book of Mormon, and believing it, they found that God proposed to raise up a righteous seed unto the house of Jacob, and gave commandments by which it was to be done. They accepted the statement that He led Lehi out of Jerusalem that this might be accomplished. They found the statement of Malachi in reference to a righteous seed. They took these words as being of God, arrayed themselves on the side of the scriptures, their understanding of it according to the light they had received up to that time. They took it to contain the words of God, but not all the words of God. They did not take one single line out of that book, but as it has been published again, it contains only such additional revelations as have been received by the church, and have passed through the trying ordeal of being acted upon by all the quorums and the general body, and they have tried to honor God in keeping those commandments.

Now here is one of those commandments: Carefully gather together. Boast not of mighty faith. Talk not judgment. Carefully gather together as many in one region of country as is consistent with the feelings of the people, and continue to plead before the courts and governors, etc., until how long? Until such time as ye shall find favor in their eyes, and they shall hearken unto you, etc. That they have done. That is a splendid tribute of reverence to the memory of the man, tribute of thanks to God, or a tribute of praise to the worthiness of the men through whom this commandment came, and who were martyrs sixty-six years ago to-morrow, to that faith. Thousands have been received into fellowship with this organization.

Now I only promised to talk a little while. I expected Brother Luff to be here, but I make no apology for the thoughts presented to you. I do not believe it right for men to apologize for what God has to say, or to apologize for God in any way. I have never done it, and shall not do it now.

In keeping the memory of Joseph and Hyrum Smith green within our recollection, we have presented these things to you in the light of that statement made by the Master to those who believe in him, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples, indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." We have not thought it to be right, we have not thought it to be just before God that we should change one jot or tittle of the commandments which came to the church from 1829 to 1844, when Joseph Smith laid down his life, nor are we willing to accept of any other, no matter who it may be, that presents to us anything that controverts that which had been received up to that time and were kept constantly before the world until 1876 in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. I have in my possession the Book of Covenants of 1846 and 1852. I have seen the edition of 1856; have seen the one of 1869. These I have seen, and know that they contain those things which I have stated, and that they were never taken out until the fall of 1876, and when I asked one well in authority, by whose authority or command it was done, I will not tell you his answer, but he told me he was at the spring conference and at the fall conference and that not a word had been said, nor was a single action taken by the church at that time, authorizing it to be taken out. Not one.

I have stated these things in the memory of Joseph Smith, my father. As his son I have the right to defend his memory against every unjust attack made by his friends or his foes, and as a member of the church I have the right to defend his memory, and to see that every particle of evidence produced against him, or against the philosophy he left on record, to investigate and see if it was good proof, and good evidence, and if it was found to be not good I am authorized by divine commandment to reject it. "Though we, or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you than that which ye have received, let him be accursed." And Paul repeated that, and I propose to stand close by Paul, if I am permitted in that august assembly, and with whatever judgment is passed on him I will be content in the goodness of God and the mercy of Jesus Christ.

May God's blessing be ours until the fight is ended and the labors closed and the victory won, is my prayer.

"MURDER COMMON IN KANSAS CITY."

"We are wading knee deep in blood in Jackson County. Murder is so common a thing in Kansas City that the newspapers often don't report murder as news. If a packer kills an ox that weighs three thousand pounds, the newspapers will hear about it and print the story, but I know of murders which were not even printed. It is no more to kill a man in Kansas City than to kill a dog. When I was criminal judge we had a murder trial set for every Monday morning. One Monday morning we had five murder trials set for hearing. In one batch of prisoners sent to Jefferson City were seven murderers. The criminal court records of Jackson County should be written in red ink. I investigated the cause of these murders and found but one during the time I was judge that could not be traced directly to intoxicating liquor. The liquor traffic is responsible according to statistics for ninety per cent of the crime, and my experience indicates that the percentage is higher than that."

These things and many other, Judge William Wallace spoke in his address at the First Presbyterian church [Independence, Missouri,] Sunday night, in an argument, compact and logical, in favor of the prohibition amendment. He spoke for an hour. The audience filled the big auditorium, overflowed into the Sunday school room and the galleries. It was a union meeting. The Rev. H. G. Mais, pastor of the Watson Memorial Methodist church presided, and the ministers of the other churches were present. At the close of his address Judge Wallace asked for money to help carry on the prohibition campaign.

Judge Wallace announced in the beginning that he would make an argument for prohibition to appeal to the mind and not to sentiment. He followed this line and his speech was unanswerable.—Jackson Examiner.

CORRECTION.

In the leading editorial, July 6, the quotation credited to section 102 of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants should be credited to section 112. The language referred to in the third paragraph as a quotation should not appear in quotation marks as it is a free rendition of language found in the third chapter of First Timothy. In the same paragraph the words, another writer, should be, "The same writer."

Hymn of Prayer.

O Savior, keep me day by day,
And make me always thine to be;
O guide me through the narrow way,
Till thee in glory I shall see.

And now obeying thy commands,
By holy burial 'neath the flood,
And by the laying on of hands,
I stand redeemed through thy dear blood.

O send the Comforter divine,
With all thy gracious power and love;
Come dwell within this heart of mine,
And fit me for thy home above.

O help me now to learn thy word,
That I might know just what to say
To help some wand'rer who has erred,
And show some one the better way.

And when my work on earth is done,
And when my soul has fled to thee,
I then shall sing the victor's song,
And with the saints in glory be.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

Charter members of the Oskaloosa Branch of the Des Moines District, Iowa, organized in 1862.

We are glad to present to the HERALD readers the following sketch of the Oskaloosa Branch, organized in 1862, thus making it one of the early organized branches of the Reorganization. The mention of President Smith and Bishops Rodgers and Blakeslee is of interest.

Elder C. B. Brown, now president of the Oskaloosa Branch, furnishes us with the information contained in this article.

ELDER C. B. BROWN.

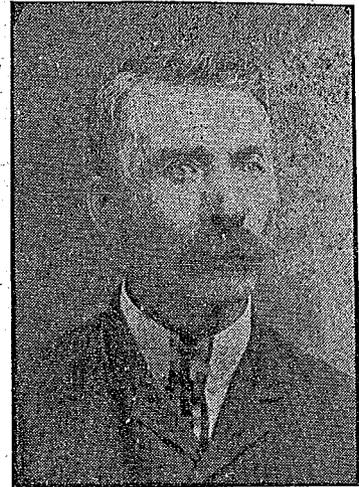

Oskaloosa, Iowa. One of the charter members of the branch organized in 1862.

In the fall of the year 1860, William Brown, with his family, arrived from the East in Oskaloosa, Iowa. He and his wife, Lydia Brown, were members of the old church, having been baptized at Binghamton, New York. At the time of their arrival at Oskaloosa they knew nothing of the church having been reorganized; however, they had never joined any of the factions. Along in the summer of 1861 they became acquainted with William Davis and David Hudson, who were also members of the old church, and learned a little in regard to the Reorganization, but nothing very definite.

In the after part of the winter of that year William Davis had occasion to go to Burlington and there met Elder William Morton who gave him full information concerning the Reorganization, who also sent a number of copies of the TRUE LATTER DAY SAINTS' HERALD.

It was probably through Elder Morton that Elder C. G. Lanphear learned that there were some members in the vicinity of Oskaloosa. He came to Oskaloosa in the spring of 1862 and preached and labored very earnestly and diligently for two months, baptizing some, and ordained William Brown an Elder, William R. Brown, priest; Francis H. Brown, teacher; and David Hudson, deacon; and in June organized a branch with ten members, among whom were two elders, one priest, one teacher, and one deacon. William Davis was ordained an elder in England, where he and David Hudson were baptized. William Davis was chosen president of the branch; William R. Brown, priest; Francis H. Brown, teacher; David Hudson, deacon; Albert P. Brown, clerk.

BRO. ALBERT P. BROWN.
New London, Iowa.

Elder Lanphear went away rejoicing in the result of his labors. In the fall of the same year he, in company with President Joseph Smith, Bishop I. L. Rogers, Bishop Blakeslee, John Shippy, George Rarick, and one whose name I can not now recall stopped over night with the Oskaloosa Saints. They were traveling by team en route to western Iowa to attend conference. It was Sunday evening when they arrived, and an appointment was given out for preaching that night, and word went out that Joseph Smith, president and prophet of the church was there. Meeting was held at the residence of William Brown. The house was not very commodious and the result was that standing room was at a premium, especially near the doors, which were open, and even in the yard. Elder Shippy did the preaching. The writer was quite young at that time and remembers very distinctly wondering in his youthful mind as to how the appearance of the prophet, as he came forth out of an obscure corner at the close of the sermon and arose to make a few remarks, corresponded with what the people really expected to see. I remember him as a young man, with very dark hair, a dark and quite lengthy mustache, and no beard. In my youthful mind a prophet had long white hair, a long flowing white beard, and a robe.

Elder William Stevens, of Des Moines, stopped and preached for us in those days when passing through. He was engaged in hauling apples from southeastern Iowa to Des Moines. Elders Wood and Cureden, of Western Iowa, also did some preaching.

The branch became in an unorganized condition two years after it was organized, all its membership moving away but one family; however, there was preaching done in the vicinity from time to time by Elders Longbottom, Lange, Stamm, and others, and later by

SR. CELIA R. PHILLIPS.
Kansas City, Missouri.

Elders James McKiernan, J. S. Roth, and Nathaniel Miller, and on April 24, 1892, the present Oskaloosa Branch was organized by J. S. Roth. There are now living four of the charter members of the old branch, William R. Brown, of Oskaloosa, Iowa; Elder C. B.

WILLIAM R. BROWN.
Oskaloosa, Iowa.

Brown, of Oskaloosa, Iowa; Albert P. Brown, of New London, Iowa; and Sr. Celia R. Phillips, of Kansas City, Missouri. William R. Brown and C. B. Brown are members of the present Oskaloosa Branch. We remember Elder Lanphear as a very quiet unassuming man, but very earnest and diligent, one whose whole soul seemed to be in the work. Conditions are different to-day from those pioneer days of forty-eight years ago. Then one would travel many miles across the prairies of Iowa on foot or with team and not meet with a Latter Day Saint for days, while now one can travel by team across the State in almost any direction and stay with a family of Saints each night. Elder Lanphear has long since gone to his reward, where all those like him that were pioneers in the long ago will soon pass over to receive their reward. God bless the pioneers.

QUESTIONS TO AND ANSWERS FROM FIVE PROMINENT BRIGHAMITE ELDERS ON ORDINATIONS.

"Ask and you shall receive," proved true when my desire became so strong that over the name of Frank M. Sheldon, Larrabee, Iowa, was submitted the two following questions to Elders Joseph F. Smith, jr., German E. Ellsworth, and A. Theodore Thorup, and Bishops G. Lorentzen and G. W. Coons:

BISHOP C. J. HUNT.

1. Can an elder occupy the position of, and enjoy the rights and privileges of, a seventy without being ordained to that position by the laying on of hands?
2. Can an ordained seventy occupy the position of, and enjoy the rights and privileges of, an apostle and act in the Quorum of Twelve Apostles without being ordained to that position and office by the laying on of hands?

My reasons for asking the above questions to leading ministers of the Brighamite church were, first: they claim that the three leading quorums in Christ's church are the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, and the seventies quorum; second, it is a fact that Joseph Smith, the Martyr, and his counselors were ordained to the position of presidents of the church by the laying on of hands; third, the Brighamite church have repeatedly admitted that from Brigham Young to their present President, not one president or counselor in their First Presidency was ever chosen and then ordained to those positions by the laying on of hands; fourth, in the following answers to the foregoing questions they do admit that an elder, although holding the Melchisedek priesthood, must be ordained by the laying on of hands in order to occupy in, and enjoy the rights and privileges of, a seventy. They also declare that a seventy must not or can not occupy in the office and calling of the Twelve Apostles without being ordained to that office and position by the laying on of hands. Now that the position from elder to that of seventy in the church is only by ordination to that office, and from a seventy to an apostle is also by ordination by the laying on of hands, it ought to be clearly seen by everyone claiming faith in the restored gospel (the Brighamites not excepted) that in order for any apostle or high priest to rightly occupy in the office of the Quorum of the First Presidency, according to God's law, he must be chosen and ordained to that position and office by the laying on of hands. (See Doctrine and Covenants 107: 22, Utah edition; 104: 11, Reorganized Church edition.)

Replying to the above questions, Joseph F. Smith, jr., wrote from Salt Lake City, March 5, 1910:

I do not think it would be in harmony with the Scriptures for an elder or a seventy to act in the Quorum of Apostles without being first ordained to that calling by the laying on of hands.

Pres. German E. Ellsworth of the Northern States Mission, wrote from Chicago, March 7, 1910:

Answering yours of March 1, will say that the duties of an elder and a seventy are especially laid down in the Doctrine and Covenants, pages 125, 387, respectively, and personally we know of no occasion for these officers having to act in any calling higher to which they have not been ordained. . . . I see no occasion for an elder or a seventy or a high priest operating in a calling higher than the one they held, unless called to assist a superior officer.

Elder A. Theodore Thorup, president of the Southern States Mission, writing from Paducah, Kentucky, March 17, 1910, said:

The Elder . . . can not act in the office of the seventy unless he is ordained to that office. . . . Apostles, patriarchs or evangelists, are high priests, but can not act in their respective offices without being chosen and ordained. There being only twelve apostles, should a vacancy be made through death or apostasy, another one would be chosen from the body of high priests and ordained to the office of an apostle to fill the vacancy. The First Presidency also are high priests—they being at the head of that order as well as of the church, and the President is known as the presiding high priest. . . . It must be remembered that each body of the priesthood has a head—men who are chosen out of that body to preside over same, so that all things are done in order.

Bishop G. Lorentzen, of Sevier Stake, Salina, Utah, wrote March 8, 1910, as follows:

The seventy can not act as an apostle without being ordained to that calling only in as far as their calling is the same. . . . The elder, seventy, and high priest hold the same priesthood, but differ in callings in the priesthood.

Bishop G. W. Coons, Richfield, Utah, wrote March 15, 1910, the following plain answer:

The easiest way to answer both questions is to say no. An elder can not occupy the position of a seventy nor can a seventy occupy the position of an apostle without being ordained by the laying on of hands. . . . An elder may be specially directed to do some work that comes under the duties of a seventy and if so specially directed by the President of the church or an apostle has a right to do that work.

The above answers show how thoroughly those men have been schooled in the law governing ordinations, and it will certainly not be presuming too much for them and their fellow-ministers to say that in all probability they have seen and do now see where their church has failed to keep the rule and law governing, by not ordaining men to the office of First Presidency by the laying on of hands. It is a fact that according to their own Doctrine and Covenants their so-called presidents and prophets have not received a revelation from God, for their church, for over half a century, and their prospects for such heavenly favors grow denser and darker. The fact that the popes of Catholicism do not receive divine revelation is evidence in itself that God does not recognize that church as his. By the same logic we infer that the Brighamite church has also apostatized and it has need to more carefully and prayerfully examine the position and standing with God of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which church is the only true Church of Latter Day Saints in succession and ordination from 1830. Its President is Joseph Smith, son of Joseph Smith the Martyr. He was chosen and ordained president and prophet of the church and he is recognized by the Lord in that position by divine revelations. In the words of the poet we urge you to "leave your poor old stranded wreck [church] and pull for the shore,"—and unite with the Reorganized Church, the dear old ship of safety, the one God owns, loves, and directs.

THE DOOR OF MYSTERY.

FUNERAL SERMON OF SR. REBECCA J. JAMISON, LAMONI, IOWA.
JUNE 11, 1910, BY ELDER COLUMBUS SCOTT.

(Reported by Estella Wight.)

Notwithstanding the idea that is sometimes expressed that the world is a fleeting show, there are a few—a good many—great facts, and grand and wondrous and mysterious realities.

ELDER COLUMBUS SCOTT.

To-day we are face to face again with one of these mysterious, incomprehensible realities, insofar as human reason may attempt to analyze or may be able to go. Many men have expended solemn thought touching the mysteries of death, and after all it seems the one condition that mankind ultimately reach when they may lie down and rest after a world of toil, sorrow, joy, sympathy, and of their opposites.

It is not a light effort to-day to attempt to speak a few words on the behalf of those who survive our sister, who has just left us. I have known her for a number of years; have noted her effort toward Christian consistency, and effort to stand by her integrity, and in saying this, I remember that I am in the presence of a number who personally have known her perhaps most of her life, and this is not the occasion to give way to mere sentiment. But, is this the only fact, is this the only reality in store for men,—this mystery of death?

When we note the intelligence (at least it is called that) manifested in the world on the part of man, his mental as well as physical capabilities, his aspirations, and the powers with which he conquers the world in many regards and brings it to his service that tell us that death does not end all; in fact when we think as far as we are able to go, humanly thinking, we are convinced that there is something yet greater and grander than the great possibilities of the human mind in a mortal life. This power of intelligence and its capabilities were not born to just be snapped in an instant at the place called death, and never be permitted to move out and exercise in the world. This one consideration, if there were not others, is sufficient to almost convince a skeptic that man does not stop here for all eternity, when it comes to this supreme moment.

The Apostle Paul, as a great man and a reasoner, had this experience and this inspiration, and he gave utterance to the thought that I would not fail to express at this time under the circumstances. It is found in his second letter to the Corinthians, in the fourth chapter, and I think the seventeenth verse. He says: "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us [worketh for us, this light affliction, evidently referring to his experience and that of mankind who served God during their lifetime] this light affliction which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look [remember it works for us while we look]—while we look at the things which are not seen."

Even inspired men sometimes when wrought up speak in paradoxes. "This light affliction worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look." To us when it works—to us the condition under which this affliction works—while we look not at the things that are seen, but the things that are not seen. Things seen with the eye of faith—the spiritual eye—yet not seen with the natural eye; "for the things which are seen are temporal."

We are witnesses to the truth of that, that the things that we see in this world, especially associated with man, are temporal; they endure but for a little while and then pass away. "The things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal."

I invite attention to this passage because, no doubt, it has been the sentiment of the one whose demise we here solemnly celebrate to-day, or mourn rather, because during life's pathway (that was rugged, and the feet were weary many times) she was afflicted. But there is cheer in the thought that when we entertain the hope of the gospel, "this light affliction worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Well, it seems to me that under the most trying circumstances this statement would contain comfort, if it works for us, if it brings to us, if it sanctifies us, if we are reconciled unto it, if we are willing to say, "Not my will, but thine be done," we are gaining the purpose of affliction, it worketh for us a far more exceeding, exceeding, exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

Another comforting thought associates itself in my mind, and this was expressed by the Apostle John. It is found in the fourteenth chapter of Revelation and the thirteenth verse: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; Yea, saith the Spirit." "From henceforth,"—and I do not know whether to begin to measure that period indicated by the term henceforth from the time John uttered the language, or whether it be associated with that wondrous event that it was associated with in its connection in language, the restoration of the gospel by the angel. Whether this word henceforth relating to time, I say, whether it began with John's expression of it, or at the beginning of the world, or whether it began as he saw in vision, the wondrous era and dispensation that we to-day have the privilege of enjoying, participating in, and bearing a part as well; that dispensation to be brought in by the angel that he saw flying through the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel. But the central thought is, "They rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

I am minded to present just a few thoughts touching the question of our stepping over just through this door of mystery, just onto the other side. You may imagine, if you choose, the weary pilgrims, having handled the sword of the Spirit, fought a good fight, kept the faith, and watched the doors come ajar as they step along the way, as they drop the armor a crown comes down and rests upon their heads, an insignia of faithfulness unto the end—unto the end. "He that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved." He that endureth to the end. What is it just on the other side of this veil that hides the shining way from us when we reach this period? The Scriptures inform us that there is a rest for the weary spirit. Not in inactivity. Not that. Have you ever seen good persons rest while they were in inactivity? Do they not become more weary and restless and dissatisfied resting so, as they sometimes express it, or rather with inactivity, than they become while active? Why, to the industrious, the honest, the upright, the ambitious man, this rest is found in activity and in labor, so to speak. He is greatly in unrest when not engaged in some proper avocation. Is not this our experience? And is it not true? I think everyone who is moved with ambition in this world in laudable undertakings, will agree that our rest is found in our labors and in the duties that we are called upon and under obligation to do. Hence when we step across the shining way, just into the intermediate beyond, I do not apprehend for a moment, that while they are resting, they are resting in the sense of being asleep or inactive, or anything of that kind. Why, that would be contrary to the first ordained law of man's whole being. Think of it! It would be a cessation of his normal condition. As you know, whatever that condition is, while there may be different degrees of normal, normality, yet whatever condition we are in, our normal condition is the best—good spirits, cheer, labor, activity. Is not that true? We think it is. We believe that the whole world bears testimony to it. We are not now speaking of the motives that may move men, but the fact that their normal condition is one of intelligent progression right along on the way. Now you take the intelligent travelers. A traveler surrounds himself with various environments and conditions and he is always learning something new. Some people travel to learn, others, while they may not travel to learn, nevertheless, the more they travel, the more they attain; they attain something additional, they attain additional knowledge, they find out new things. And shall we argue that the passing along through this dark, mystic door to the bright beyond to that glorious condition necessitates no new relations, no new avenues of work and labor and understanding? I may not have a clear mode of expressing the conception, but the conception that comes to my mind is, that it is our business in this life to move along spiritually and morally, and qualify ourselves for work in higher stations on the other side. That he that humbles himself to the duties requisite now, and makes the necessary advancement, is exalted to higher conditions, a grander calling, and more pleasant work on the other side, and I will tell you why.

My conception of the other side of death is, that all intelligences are moved there by the power of divine love. They do whatever they are called on to do by the power of infinite love. They do it because they are anxiously desiring to do it. They do it because they are anxious to glorify God. They are anxious to accomplish their work on the other side. I say anxious, of course we have to use terms that we understand, this anxiety (if you will allow me that expression), this power that moves is the love of God shed abroad in the spirit and soul of his children. Let us not for a moment, while we all concede that the Bible sets forth that man is of a dual nature, in general terms body and spirit,—let us not for a moment imagine that spirit dies. We may not be enabled to analyze the spirit—spiritual substance—any more than we may some other things in this world; but we may read that God is a spirit, that angels are spirits, that the word spirit is the word used in order to define or convey an idea of their nature—the nature of them as immortal beings, their nature as entities—spirit in contrast with flesh, flesh in contrast with spirit. Angels do not die, so to speak. That is, as substances of their being do not die. Spiritual substance can not be dissolved or destroyed. Spiritual substance can not change. Spiritual substance always did exist, does, and for ever and eternally will exist, because it can not, in its nature, dissolve. That is the reason that by and by at the resurrection the body will become a spiritual body; a body changed into spiritual, imperishable, undying substance, immortal, in other words, undying.

Well, if spirit could die, God could die. If spirit could die, angels could die. But they may fall, for angels do not die in this sense, though they may die a worse death than this we call temporal death; they die a death that is a penalty. I do not know that physical death is a penalty in its relation to the kingdom of God, nor do I think of anything in which physical death could be a penalty. Sometimes men think that God has removed from among them an undesirable citizen. It may possibly be, in the divine economy, some man's life may be cut short for the same reason, but death as a penalty, it seems to me, is an untaught question, physical death I mean, for death physical comes to the great and small. The old die, the middle aged die, the youthful die, and the little sinless babe dies. What penalty does death mean to it? It is that more wondrous death, that death that comes to men because they allow themselves to fall, that is the death that becomes a penalty. That reaches away on the other side of this temporal death when it has been brought to an end. This other death—spiritual death—may continue. It is the death to fear.

And so, to my mind, there is comfort in the thought, that so far as physical death is concerned, it is appointed to man once to die, speaking of this death. It is an appointment evidently in the mercy of God and in the interests of immortality. I believe that you will find that idea expressed in the revelation of God, that great, wondrous revelation that came to us in latter days, that this mortality and death is necessary in order to the attainment of immortality on the other side. I believe one of the inspired writers expresses that idea. That man is a composition of body and spirit, we need only to consult the Savior. He says of man, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit."

It seems to me that this ought to be sufficient to the one who has learned what the Savior said that man, whom he created under the supervision and wise recognition of his Father, through the energy of the Holy Ghost, was, and he had a right to pronounce upon man what he is, and of himself he said, speaking even of his own death, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth fruit," and fruit—fruitage—is what the Lord is looking for in the lives of his people, in this earth life, and in all the wonderful life to come—fruitage. And so even the Savior in his physical being submitted to death that HE might bear fruit, that is, fruitage might be seen in the redemption of the nations, the millions, through him, and the glory of the Father through them. "Thus saith the Lord who created the heavens and stretched out the earth, and formed the spirit of man within him," says the prophet. When God formed the spirit of man within him, that spirit had form. This the Savior could have corrected, if it were not true, when on one occasion they saw him coming toward them and they supposed they saw a spirit; but he said to them, "Handle me and see; for spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have." Could he not have corrected the idea, if it is not true that spirit exists independent of the body? If it was not true how easily he could have swept it from the earth, and then stated it to be an error, on that occasion. But he did not correct it. He admits it in the language used, inferentially, that spirit exists independently of body when he says to them, "Handle me [he had been resurrected], and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have." He did not say the spirit does not exist, or that it does not have form.

But again this is very plainly expressed, this distinction between flesh and spirit as existing in man, by the young prophet Elihu when he sat there to correct even Job, the old patriarch some call him, and his comforters, when speaking of the justice— infinite justice of the Almighty, he says: "If he set his heart upon man, if he gather unto himself his spirit AND his breath." I give this passage more particularly because of the use of the two words spirit and breath. Now if breath is all there is of spirit, then indeed it would be tautology, a vain repetition, for the prophet should have said that if he set his heart upon man, if he gather unto himself his breath and his breath, or two words the equivalent of each other in meaning. It would have been mere tautology, a kind of a senseless expression that I would not charge an inspired man with making,— a divinely inspired man, hardly. But "if the Lord set his heart upon man, if he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath; surely all flesh shall perish together."

Man's spirit, then, is gathered into the power, or if you please, the hands of God, and is then cared for according as his justice, for that is the question that Elihu had under consideration when he made the expression, "shall attain to that which his justice requires," and his justice requires him to gather unto himself man's spirit and his breath.

So to-day we do not look upon our sister as having passed altogether into nonentity, but that her spirit has passed on evidently to the paradise of God where Jesus told the penitent thief that he would be with him that day, that is, "in paradise."

It is not mete that I should stop to converse on the subject of the resurrection, and the reunion of body and spirit at the second coming of Christ reserved for the faithful ones, more than to express the thought that that coming is so near at hand now, that the one falling asleep will not sleep in the earth for thousands of years like those who have fallen since Christ, since the time of Christ's resurrection from the dead. They will not sleep thus so long; but entitled to the great power that shall be manifested when the trump shall sound, they shall be resurrected. They will not sleep so long. Paradise, this place where the spirit rests from the time the body dies till the body is made alive again, that is, for the righteous, those that are prepared to take part in the first resurrection. That period is near at hand, as we all believe, we do not know how near, it may be much nearer than we think; but whether it be very near or just at hand, or whether it be delayed for a short time, as we expressed the thought, yet the spirit in its active energy is in its new environments where such sorrows and afflictions as we are accustomed to here never reach, never enter that place of rest. That is, it is rest from the things that make us weary here; but it is active and progressive, and advancing in knowledge, wisdom, understanding divine, and in the labors of service, and this service is prompted by eternal love which flows from the bosom of God, an eternal, perennial fountain.

I speak of this because of what I may now read to you. Our sister just before her demise had a glimpse of this condition and this labor she was to do, and some other things.

Sr. Rebecca Thomas Jamison, daughter of Acquilla and Martha A. Thomas, wife of Bro. George M. Jamison, was born in Belmont County, Ohio, April 1, 1847. In 1857, when she was ten years old, the family removed from Ohio to Warren County, Iowa, settling near the village of Hartford, where her parents now sleep.

She was married to Bro. George M. Jamison in Warren County, Iowa, May 28, 1882, when she was thirty-five years of age. To her and her husband were born two children, a son and a daughter; both, with her husband, survive her. The son, Marshall Thomas, and the daughter, Ursula Pearl, are present. She was the second of a family of twelve children. Five sisters and two brothers, with husband and children, survive her. Her sisters, Mrs. Mary Bassett, Sandyville, Mrs. Martha E. Wicker, Des Moines, Mrs. Eveline Freel, Pleasantville, Mrs. Fannie Chandler, of Des Moines, and Mrs. Harriet M. Chandler, of Lamoni, Iowa, are all present. The two brothers, Wm. Walter and Alvin A., both of Runnells, Iowa, are present to-day. These are the bereaved.

She was baptized near Runnells, Polk County, Iowa, by Elder Isaac N. White, January 16, 1876, and confirmed a member of the church by Elders I. N. White and Nicholas N. Stamm.

Sister Jamison died at Lamoni, Iowa, June 10, 1910, about five o'clock in the morning, after a number of weeks of suffering with a complication of ailments. She was aged sixty-three years, two months, and nine days. She lived a faithful life and true to the gospel and died in the glorious hope of the reward of the righteous.

A short time before the end she saw Zion, the beautiful city as redeemed, clothed in heavenly light, saw the glory and peace that reigned in her courts, and that characterized its inhabitants, and walking in the light of the Lord. And she wondered when she saw this, why it was that the people of God could be frequently so slow and inactive, not more energetic, not more faithful in keeping the law, that these beautiful and wondrous and indescribable conditions might be attained. She saw the peace that prevailed in Zion's courts.

This was a most beautiful thing to me, because all God's faithful children will meet there, nevermore to separate from each other by death. Later she was informed that she could have been raised up again, but a greater blessing than that was awaiting her on the other side. These are the substance of the words that she used, a greater blessing was awaiting her than to be raised up and abide for awhile yet under affliction with her family. A greater blessing than this by passing on. Let us not forget it. On the other side this blessing was awaiting her. On the other side she saw something of the work of faith and labor of love that she was to engage in associated with others in heaven, with the children on the other side. Of course these little children's spirits who die in infancy, they need the association and the care and the development and the bringing up. This is but reason. And as she engages in that on the other side, it inspires us to move along more energetically, more faithfully, and that ought to give us hope and joy rather than sorrow to-day, though this parting may seem severe for a time.

She saw also that she was keeping a record relating to her work. How beautiful that is! Nothing strange with that, and the idea of books and the book of life being kept in heaven and angels writing, ministers writing on the other side. It seems to me to be perfectly consistent, and so we conclude with the thoughts, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth; Yea, saith the Spirit, that they rest from their labors [the labors of this life]; and their works do follow them." They walk in white, they are enrobed in white robes, because the Scripture says in the vision of John that to the souls that were seen under the altar white robes were given to every one of them, and it was said, rest a little while yet. So this little while is only a little more time in the great ultimate and sum of God's ages.

"The task and the duty of each man is to think independently and to live as good and honest and useful a life as he can, believing in eternal justice."

Of General Interest

THE OATH OF A KING.

The modification of the oath which George V will have to take will not contain the insulting references to the Roman Catholic religion which his predecessors for centuries were obliged to make, regardless of their personal feelings.

This is a step forward, and one which is in harmony with the tolerant and fraternal spirit now prevailing between nations and between the peoples of different creeds.

The logical next step is to make religion a private matter by separating church from state, as is the case in this country. The Roman Catholic soldiers and sailors, who stand ready to give up their lives for the British empire, suffer humiliation from the knowledge that the sovereign for whom they are ready to die is by law forbidden to profess their religion.

The spirit of the twentieth century is against all religious proscription. Even Spain is waking up. Her prime minister, Canalejas, has removed the prohibition against religious bodies other than Roman Catholic from affixing to their places of worship insignia announcing the denomination worshipping therein.

The example of American institutions has been the strongest force in promoting religious tolerance among the peoples of the world.—Selected.

OUR NATIONAL ANNIVERSARY.

We celebrate to-day no idle tradition—the deeds of no fabulous race; for we tread in the scarcely obliterated footsteps of an earnest and valiant generation of men, who dared to stake life, and fortune, and sacred honor, upon a declaration of rights, whose promulgation shook tyrants on their thrones, gave hope to fainting freedom, and reformed the political ethics of the world.

The greatest heroes of former days have sought renown in schemes of conquest, based on the love of dominion or the thirst for war; and such had been the worship of power in the minds of men, that adulation had ever followed in the wake of victory. How daring then the trial of an issue between a handful of oppressed and outlawed colonists, basing their cause, under God, upon an appeal to the justice of mankind and their own few valiant arms. And how immeasurably great was he, the fearless commander, who, after the fortunes and triumphs of battle were over, scorned the thought of a regal throne for a home in the hearts of his countrymen. Amidst the rejoicings of this day, let us mingle something of gratitude with our joy—something of reverence with our gratitude—and something of duty with our reverence.

Let us cultivate personal independence in the spirit of loyalty to the state, and may God grant that we may always be able to maintain the sovereignty of the state in the spirit of integrity to the union.

Whatever shall be the fate of other governments, ours thus sustained shall stand forever. As has been elsewhere said, nation after nation may rise and fall, kingdoms and empires crumble into ruin, but our own native land, gathering energy and strength from the lapse of time, shall go on and still go on its destined way to greatness and renown. And when thrones shall crumble into dust, when scepters and diadems shall have been forgotten, till heaven's last thunder shall shake the world below, the flag of the republic shall still wave on, and its stars, its stripes, and its eagle, shall still float in pride, and strength, and glory,

"Whilst the earth bears a plant,
Or the sea rolls a wave."

INDIAN TRIBES JOIN IN GIVING PASSION PLAY.

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON, June 14.—Oberammergau is famed the world over because of the Passion Play; Skwa, the hamlet of the Skale or Fraser River Indians, on the Chilliwack Reservation, is not, but if the wonderful portrayal of the story of the cross as produced by them was as widely known its fame would be greater.

For twenty years these Skale Indians have told the story of the cross in tableau. They were taught the life, teachings and the death and ascension of Christ by fathers from the many mission churches in the Northwest. Every few years they celebrate, and often the Passion Play is a feature.

The Passion Play at Skwa was the closing event and feature of a week of religious celebration at which from thirty-five hundred to five thousand Indians from all over the Northwest participated. Several hundred Indians from Puget Sound journeyed toward the Fraser River by canoe. Indians from reservations in Washington and Oregon got permission to invade Skwa overland by ponies. Indians from Alaska and British Columbia were present.

The tribes taking part in the play and in attendance included the Seechelts from the beaches of Vancouver island, Tlaimens, Sheewans, Port Douglas, Lillooets, Suquamish, Siwash, Tulalip, Lumns, Cowchans and half a hundred visiting nations.

The Skale Indians revere the story of the Christ and try to emulate his life. Daily rehearsals were held. Chief John, of the Euwawas, was Pontius Pilate and wore the same clothes he wore ten years ago. This raiment consisted of an old red tunic with epaulettes, navy blue trousers with a wide artillerymen's stripe and a black helmet. He carried a sailor's cutlass, with the sheath strapped over his chest, similar to the manner pirates carry knives.

A tall, manly Skale Indian impersonated Jesus. His dusky face, somewhat covered with a black beard, was in marked contrast to the white robes he wore. The portrayal of the treason of Judas and the trial before Pilate ended the great play at the churchyard, and the procession that marched toward the crosses at the end of the plain was one of the greatest spectacles ever seen in the Northwest. Every event in the great week before Christ ascended was portrayed.—Boston Traveler.

THE UNTAMED WILDNESS OF NATURE.

(From an oration before the municipal authorities of the city of Boston, July 4, 1854.)

The first struggle of American life was against the untamed wildness of nature. When the Hebrew tribes emerged from the wilderness and set foot in the promised land, they found it in the expressive phrase of scripture, "a land flowing with milk and honey." The art of human tillage, the labors of human industry had preceded them. It was built up with walled towns and stately cities. Its hills were green with the olive—its cliffs purple with the vine. All they had to do was to enter in and take possession. But our land of promise was the wilderness still. As the keel of the Atlantic voyager approaches now these shores he gazes upon broad-armed harbors, inviting him into their peaceful waters as the weary sea bird to its nest, beacon towers, flaming red, warning in the darkness or ringing their chimes through the fog—great cities pushing their adventurous granite, munitions of wealth and trade, far out against the besieging waves—forest-girded with the masts of a world-wide commerce—green heights around adorned with fair villas—smiling valleys retreating back among the hills, continuous gardens—sunlighted streams bearing down to ocean ports the flow of inland wealth—little brooks white from the vexing water wheels—the smoke of tall chimneys beneath whose shadows toils the dusky artificer—the lifted spires of Christian temples—all heralding to that voyager a land of peace and plenty and giving sign of generous and hospitable welcome.

How different this picture from that which frowned before the resolute eyes that first measured the New England coast! Hills robed in forest terrors sloped backward from the water's margin—up the silent valleys there were no tracks save those of savage beasts or savage men—over what hidden perils the harbor tides ebbed and flowed they had yet to learn—whither the valley streams led in their upward course to their fountains none could tell them—the future harvest plains grew the oak harvests of slow centuries. No houses were built for them—matron and maiden, age and infancy, must shelter themselves in tents or beneath evergreen boughs from winter's rigors. Nature in her sternest panoply seemed thus to defy our fathers to the struggle. Sheathed in glittering snows, like a virgin warrior in mail, she seemed to expect by her very aspect to decide the contest. She gathered up the awe of her grand mysterious solitudes to lay upon their spirits. She blew upon them with the chill of her December winds and sought to pierce their hearts with her spear of ice.

But they were no faint-hearted champions that had come over to measure their prowess with her savage wildness. The land was to be possessed. Therefore it was to be explored, subdued and made to pay tribute. Upon it were to rise cities and villages, and roll the yellow harvest seas. They had strong arms and stout hearts and the conflict was joined. The first strokes fell—they rang through the woodland depths and their echoes swept over the sullen waves. The foremost forest ranks bowed to the invasion. Again the ax advanced and again the serried lines of resistance gave way. Still was the onset strengthened by new forces and still the woodland veterans with all their plumed honors went down before them. And so the battle front was rolled on, and so the sturdy giants of the forest and the wild have retreated before it. It has been a continuous conflict and the end is not yet—but victory has always declared for the invader. The ax, the fire, the plow, the spade, those weapons of assault can not be withstood. The noise of the sylvan war is now quite remote.

It has rolled backward on the Alleghanies—it has swept northward and eastward into the fastness of our mountain ranges and the old woods of Maine—it has rushed across the prairies and left them broad oceans of rolling harvest wealth—faint and far we hear the sturdy strokes that tell where the van marches, coming back to our ears from the distant valley slopes that rise from the father of waters—toward the heights that look down upon Pacific seas. In the track of this bloodless contest shoots the green blade of the corn, rise the walls of cheerful and busy hamlets growing soon to emulous cities, where wealth builds and taste and refinement adorn—and bloom and smile everywhere the gardens of peaceful and happy homes.—Andrew L. Stone.

Christ gives new life, hopes, joys, goodness, comforts, beyond all the best men out of Christ can conceive.—F. N. Peloubet.

The fixed distinctions of class are so forced and so unjust that there can be no peace in society until they can be done away.—E. B. Wakefield.

"A man may have perfectly correct opinions, and yet have wrong feelings, desires and even habits. It was once said of a man of this sort that 'he had principles but no morals.' The only way really to hold a principle is to put it into action in one's life."

(Concluded from June 29.)

REVIVAL OF OLD MANNERS.

Now, among our younger men, we see something more like the old time breeding than could have been found a generation ago except among much older men. Here and there one meets a specimen striking enough to impress the average observer.

"There is one nice man!" I heard a girl say not long ago, as I passed by her on the street. Near by stood a fine looking man of about thirty. He was talking to a couple of women, and he was uncovered, holding his hat in his hand, as his grandfather might have done fifty years ago. He seemed to take his action as a matter of course, and there was no consciousness in his manner to indicate that he felt he was doing an unusual thing. He had evidently been trained to such conduct since his boyhood.

The same day I saw another illustration to give one hope for the growth of courtesy. Two small boys were walking with their mother, when she stopped to speak to a friend. Off went their caps, and they stood bareheaded until the brief chat was at an end. They seemed to do it as instinctively as the grown man had done.

EARLY HABITS COME EASY.

As a matter of course, it will not be easy to break into such habits a half grown boy who has always lacked training in courtesy. He will resent them and feel them an imposition. For this reason I urge that the instruction and drill should be begun at a tender age. The boy who has always practiced these small conventionalities will take them for granted, and the habit of them will grow with his growth. If he has been trained to rise when his mother comes into the room, he will not need to be told later in life that he is guilty of a discourtesy when he remains seated at the entrance of a woman. If he is accustomed to draw back his mother's chair at table, to open the door for her, to let her pass in or out ahead of himself, he will do these things with other women. And he will do them naturally, with no show of putting on his good manners for that occasion only. It is like accustoming a child to grammatical speech. He gets to the point when it would be an effort to speak otherwise than correctly.

Some one will ask, however, what is the good of all this. The same good there is in any form of courtesy—to make life easier and pleasanter for others. After all, great unselfishness underlies good breeding and most conventions. It is a gratifying thing to a woman to feel that a man not only respects her sex and her, but that he shows it in his conduct. It brightens life for her to receive the deference manifested in a courteous act. The fact that the courtesy is sometimes extended by those who do not feel the deference has nothing to do with the matter. Hypocrisy is called the homage vice pays to virtue, and it does a man no harm to assume a courtesy he may not feel.

CAUSE FOR THANKS.

Married life would be much easier for many women if their mothers-in-law had taken the pains to teach their boys manners. Only the breeding that was learned so early that it has become instinctive will stand the wear and tear of matrimony. But when a lucky woman marries a man who has such courtesy she should thank all fortunate fates. There are many trials of wedded life she can not escape, but the worst of them are eased to her if she is married to a gentleman.

Of course, he may be a gentleman at heart and yet be lacking in the minor refinements. That is quite possible—and more than probable. A man may show every consideration to his wife so far as practical matters are concerned, without its ever occurring to him that she would love the little delicacies of breeding. If he lacks these she may loyally aver that she does not care for them—and perhaps she does not. Still, she would doubtless like them if he had them.

Certain persons will read this chapter only to scoff at the suggestion of training. "What real difference does it make if a man takes off his hat when he comes into the house, or gets up when his wife comes into the room?" they will ask. Well, if they are sincere in their point of view, they are lucky people. They are much more likely to get what they want than those who declare that it is useless to waste time in writing or reading about the things that everyone knows and does. Both types are represented in almost any part of this land of ours.

GOOD SOCIAL ARMOR.

Apart from the comfort and pleasure it is to have well bred persons about one in one's house, there is another recommendation in favor of good breeding. In this country of rapid changes in social position one can never tell where the next generation may land. The boy who lives in a poor home to-day may be in a high office within the next half century or less. When he comes to it he will need the grace and manners suitable to the position. There will be many a mortification spared him on his way to eminence and after his arrival there if his courtesy is ingrained—a part of himself.

Thus far all the stress has been laid upon the necessity of training in courtesy for the boys. Are the girls to be counted out in the distribution of good manners? By no means. As I said earlier, the girls do not have so many chances for displaying gross breaches of good manners as their brothers. Yet they are not altogether without opportunity, and to do them justice they do not, in some cases, fail to avail themselves of it. A little girl who is really ill mannered can find occasions to display this without difficulty.

Perhaps it is because the mother bestows more attention upon the girl's manners than upon the boy's that these will usually stand ordinary tests. The well-trained little maidens of to-day are taught to make their curtsies, to speak when they are spoken to, and to keep silent when they are not addressed, quite as the girls of old times were.

PERT YOUNG MISSES.

Yet here and there one sees a specimen of the other kind of thing—a child who is pert and forward, who has evidently been allowed to feel that she is of such importance that she can say and do what she pleases without regard to the fact that there are present older persons to whom a meed of respect is due.

Such bad manners in a girl sometimes strike upon one more rudely than a boy's worst breaches of behavior. It is taken for granted that a boy must be a boy, but a girl—"lilies festered smell far worse than weeds," and the woman child should be well behaved, as a matter of course.

Yet her courtesy is not always a matter of course. She requires instruction as much as the boy. She must be drilled in graceful observances, in gentleness, in consideration. While she is yet tiny she should be made to feel that there are upon her certain duties of hospitality. In her mother's absence she must act as mistress of the house and put herself at the services of guests. She must set aside her own inclination for the sake of making people comfortable and be taught to put herself in thought in the place of others in order that she may be helpful to them. Service is bound to be more or less a woman's portion through life, and the sooner she learns its positive duty and its possible joy, the better for her as well as for others.—Christine Terhune Herrick in Record-Herald.

Editors Herald: We are going to commence the two-day meetings at this place July 2, as the notice has already been given, and wish to say to the isolated Saints, we would like you all to attend these meetings that possibly can and pray that these meetings may be spiritual feasts to the Saints and to those that are investigating the work. We hope the Saints in the several branches where the meetings are to be held, will do all they can in advertising the meetings. Remember, you all have a part in the great work and if we all do our part, surely God will do his. As I have been chosen president of the district and have not had much experience in the work, I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that God may give wisdom and strength to preside over the district faithfully, and hope the Saints will all lend a helping hand. Let us work in union and the love of the Master. If you lack wisdom ask God who giveth to all liberally and upbraideth not, and hunger and thirst after the righteousness of God and you shall be filled. O! that we might be humble and faithful that God can use us for the building up of his kingdom.

I baptized a sister at Bicknell, June 15, and a brother and sister at Clay City on the 24th. I want to return to these places as soon as the two-day meetings are over, as there is a good interest there. At Clay City, some of the Utah people are quite interested. I heard some of them say they were done with the Utah church. If Bro. J. W. Wight, our missionary in charge, could visit this place, I am sure good could be done.

Your brother in Christ,

JACOB HALB.

CANTON, ILLINOIS, June 26, 1910.

Dear Herald: I received these pamphlets of Bro. Heman C. Smith, "Duplicity exposed" and "All Brighamite roads lead to polygamy" by Bro. E. A. Smith. I have been favored with so many tracts this spring from our Utah friends who have been trying to make us believe that their crooked way is the straight and narrow way that leads to life eternal. When the testimony of these people is louder than the tracts they send us, I suppose we Saints here, having no meetings for nearly a year, would be ready to take a bite of any kind of food, but thank God, we are not hungry for Brighamite food.

I don't expect to see any great things from the Brighamites. They have about fulfilled the prophecies of Jeremiah. They had nothing to do with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob after they had followed the man who gave them the privilege to follow the flesh, the world, and the Devil, and to become one in the hand of the Devil to do all manner of sin, even to the shedding of innocent blood. This was done by being led by Brigham into the salt land to receive darkness for light. See all those who came into the church, how easily they dropped out. Without the Holy Spirit of the Father, there is no man able to stand. I don't think we need to trouble ourselves the least bit about that, for they have done all in their power to sift the saints of God if they could. The power of God is too great for them. I feel it, that the hand of God is against them. All we want to do is to keep God's commandments and we will be sure to have the light and I feel that the time has come that truth must bring all the honest to victory. I have no doubt but there are hundreds of honest souls in their midst that will come to the fold yet as the darkness disappears.

There had to be a great deal done to get ready to start for the desert. They had to obey orders of the chief of hosts which was that they all had to be baptized into Brighamism and when this was done they were no longer Latter Day Saints but followers of Brigham Young. He was the host to whom they sold themselves and the only deliverance was the mercy of the all-wise God by letting them reach Fort Douglas on the hill above the beehive of Brigham, where the army of the United States was sent for a place of safety for all refugees to fly to for safety from Brigham. This fort was placed here for the safety of the people from having their blood spilled by a lot of bloodthirsty murderers. Where are the corner stones? They clearly rejected them. I thank God for the eye opener which is the operation of the Spirit of the living God.

I was seventy-two years old last April and I feel that I can do some good here yet selling papers. This is the first letter I ever sent to you. I don't know whether you can understand it or not, but I thought I would let you know how I feel about the Utah trash we received. If you wish to publish this letter, you can do so, so that the Utah missionaries may know how we stand as to polygamy.

Your brother,

ISAAC BATH.

BROWN CITY, MICHIGAN, June 29, 1910.

Dear Herald: Three years ago to-day I was buried with Christ in baptism and arose to walk in newness of life. Elder George M. Shippy acted as porter and as we came up out of the water those on the bank started to sing that beautiful hymn, "Nearer, my God, to thee." It was the happiest moment of my life when I heard those words. They seemed to be in exact harmony with the occasion. I was leaving the world and its follies far behind and was indeed drawing nearer my God. I heard the gospel when I was very young, but owing to existing conditions I did not render obedience to it at that time. My mother was and is a Methodist, while father did not then belong to any church, so it would have been rather hard for me had I wished to unite with the church then, however I was much interested in the truth, and I made it a subject of much study and the result was that I was able, with the aid of my older brother Edward, to convince father that the angel's message was true, and on June 17, 1906, he rendered obedience thereto, while I was known to many as a "dry land Saint."

At times I would attend revival meeting in some of the churches in this place and when some of my friends would come to me and ask me to go to the altar and give my heart to God. I would just turn on the light and it was amusing to see how quickly they would give me up as a hopeless case and go to some others who had not been instructed in the way of the Lord or come in contact with the touchstone of truth.

On August 26, 1906, my brother Edward was baptized and during the following winter the Lord showed him a vision in which he was made to know that the hand of God was upon me, and unless I would humble myself and do God's will, I would be lost. When he told me what he had seen, I only smiled, and when he had gone I remarked that Ted was getting "batty," but it was not long until I knew that he had told me the truth. In the spring of 1907 I was taken down with a terrible affliction and for weeks I was nigh unto death. During that time I thought much of my condition and words fail to express the anguish of my soul when I realized that God had warned me and I had heeded not the warning. I understood that I was resting under greater condemnation than I would have been had I not heard the gospel. It was then these words came to me, "Thank the Lord for the plan he has given, that will render us pure as a child." How I wished that I had obeyed that plan. Then my heart turned to God and I prayed for mercy, promising God that if he would spare my life, I would dedicate the remaining years of it to his service. It seems to me now that I could almost hear my Savior say, "Father, I died for him; spare him yet a little while," and God in his tender love and mercy, granted the request and I got better.

Then I went forth and obeyed the gospel and from that time I have been striving to do my duty.

On April 5, 1908, Elder George M. Shippy spoke to me in the gift of tongues, calling me to the office of priest, and since then I have been spoken to twice, so I feel to rejoice and take courage.

Dear Saints, this work is true and while the world may heap all manner of vituperation upon us, we can rest assured that we are safe from the anathema of God, pronounced upon all who dare to pervert the gospel of Christ.

The HERALD, Ensign, and the Journal of History make regular calls and are always welcome. Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, I am, your fellow-traveler in the old, old path.

RICHARD D. WEAVER.

DEDERICK, MISSOURI.

Editors Herald: I left Lamoni on the morning of May 20, bound for my mission field, the Clinton, Missouri, District. I arrived at Veve chapel northeast of Dederick, on the morning of the 21st, where we enjoyed a spiritual conference of the district on the 21st and 22d, meeting several old and making many new acquaintances. After conference Bro. and Sr. Ben Glick conveyed me over six miles south of Dederick to the hospitable home of Sr. and Uncle John Harper, where I began trying to hold up the banner of King Emmanuel.

Since the 1st of May to near the middle of June, it has rained almost incessantly, and for two weeks past the weather has been dry, so that farmers are getting up with the procession again in tending their crops. Wheat is now ripe and oats beginning to turn, and both extra good. Fair prospects for corn, apples are a fair crop, peaches are in abundance, and are now in the market, selling at one dollar per bushel.

I have been quite busy since coming here. Have occupied at Glen Wood for the second time, with good attendance and splendid interest, with many invitations to come again when "we are not so busy, so we can attend regularly." Three different parties out of the church at Oak Grove requested us to come and make our home with them when I came back.

I am being blessed in presenting the truth and am getting the gospel before many of my old neighbors and friends that I got acquainted with while I lived here last year by visiting them at their homes. What would the harvest be if it were not for the disgrace of Brigham Young and his co-laborers brought upon the gospel. But Brighamism really cleansed the church of its corruptions in the forties by taking out those that would not live according to the gospel law after they had come in, and the stigma of Brighamism, generally called "Mormonism," keeps those out of the church that would not walk in the straight and narrow way if they got therein.

I am glad to note that the scattered Saints and others, as well as here, are pointed to as the very best citizens and neighbors. That is very encouraging to the missionary as well as a great help. We wonder sometimes, Why preach to the people when they will not obey, but we read where the Master said, Go teach all nations, baptizing them, and his word does not return unto him void. As Isaiah says this will of course be accomplished and all shall bow the knee and all shall be baptized and walk in the light of the gospel and the Lord Jesus Christ will accomplish fully as much as Satan offered to do, as recorded in Genesis 32. The Psalmist surely told the truth when he said, "All the ends of the world shall remember, and turn unto the Lord; all they that go down to the dust shall bow before him."—Psalm 22: 27-29. Zechariah said the day would come at about the close of the Millenium that it could be said in deed and truth, "By the blood of thy covenant I have [God has] sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water." 1 John 1: 7 tells us how the blood of covenant is applied, by walking in the light as God is in the light, and Jesus said no man could come unto the father except by him. (John 14: 6.) I was never able to find any other plan or scheme devised, only by the gospel plan. Go teach all nations, baptizing them. I noticed one good old brother get a little excited because a Seven Day Adventist had told him that some of our elders had preached that even the Devil would be saved, but don't get worried, Brother Clapp, the Adventists told the same story on me and others, but it was a falsehood made out of whole cloth. We do read of a few who after having obeyed the gospel fall away and become angels to the Devil. (See Hebrews 6: 5-6; Matthew 25: 41; Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4.)

But let us press onward to the mark of our high calling in Christ Jesus and work for the redemption of the whole world from his Satanic power. I would like to say to the Saints of the Clinton District, if you want the work opened up in your vicinity, let us hear from you. We are here to occupy during the conference year and only three of us for this large district, Bro. W. S. Macrae, Bro. James Moler, and the writer. Do not be backward in letting us hear from you so that we can perform our part of our work acceptably to him whom we serve, that all that will hear may hear; that none be left without excuse. My field address will be Nevada, Missouri, and I will be glad to hear from you as I am not acquainted outside of Vernon County. Working and praying for the advancement of the truth, your brother in the gospel covenant,

C. J. PETERS.

Dear Herald: We have just attended a two-day meeting of the Saints at Moorhead. It is needless to say we enjoyed them and received rich food for our hungering souls. We were feeling somewhat discouraged because of our lack of ability to do more for the cause and the sermon of Brother Pitt was a very great encouragement to us. I have heretofore been afraid that we were ever overzealous for God's work, but I now believe that our anxiety for the cause is only the result of his Holy Spirit working with us. We humbly ask the prayers of all the Saints that we may never lose the Spirit or in any way fail to do what he prompts us to do.

Sunday, the 26th, we attended our first sacrament service, also our first prayer meeting. We received many blessings and encouragement at these meetings. We are mere babes in the kingdom and almost strangers in this community, but we praise and thank God for the privilege we have to mingle with his Saints. We find grand and noble people in the Moorhead Branch. We were somewhat disappointed in the prayer meeting, there seemed to us a tendency to quench the Spirit. Having lived among the Methodist so much, you will readily understand my desire to turn the whole affair into a Methodist class meeting and call on each one severally, with the accent on the last syllable, for the Spirit was there in power to bless all who obeyed, and he spoke through a dear old lady and revealed his presence and chided his children whom he was so willing and able to bless. Now, I am not finding fault with any one. I love each and every one, but the people here need a revival. I feel that they are drifting and to drift is dangerous. Just at the present time, there is much uneasiness among us because of the dry weather. This is one thing which causes the depression, fear of a crop failure and financial complications. But let us not worry. God will take care of his own. We can but do our best and trust God for results. If we would only exercise more faith in God!

There was some amusement Saturday afternoon. Brother Knisley spoke on the difference between the Reorganized church and the Salt Lake faction. He made a most able defense of our position, told a few amusing stories concerning our Utah opponents, their faith, belief, and practices, and we were enlightened. He had not reached the door when he was called to task, and he now adds one more experience with the Utah Mormons to his list. He was not aware of the woman's presence, but I believe he would have spoken just as he did and maybe more so had the whole Utah church been there to hear him; but he was somewhat consoled the next day when Brother Chase, on his way to his mission in Utah, stopped and surprised his many friends by attending Sunday's meetings. He was accordingly invited to preach the morning and afternoon sermons, and all unconscious of the lady's presence, he launched out on a vivid description of Utah Mormonism. After the sermon, Brother Knisley took pleasure in introducing him to the sister. God bless her, is my prayer, and I feel to believe that she will get her eyes open to the truth and obey the true gospel. Our Utah brothers and sisters are mistaken when they say we do not love them. We may not love their ways, but we love them and pray for their redemption. Please pray for us that we may ever be found down at the foot of the cross, always leadable and teachable.

Your sister in the great and glorious work,

SADIE BURCH.

KEWANEE, ILLINOIS, June 22, 1910.

Dear Herald: The conference of the Kewanee district is now history, but will long linger in the memory of those who were privileged to be in attendance. I am told that it was one of the best ever held. One thing was especially noticeable, the spirit of unity and peace that was in evidence in all the sessions. The Sunday school and Religio were represented in convention, which was a success. Here was the first opportunity afforded us, to make our maiden effort as a field worker of both auxiliaries since our appointment as such. Altogether we had a good time. The kind Saints of Millersburg spared no means to make us feel at home, and as we heard it expressed by one good brother, the worst feature of all was that the parting time came only too soon.

It was certainly an enjoyable occasion to me, as a new man in this district. With few exceptions all were strangers to me, but we were not strangers long. I was anxious to become acquainted and they did not fail to reciprocate. This seems an easy matter with those who have little or none of that stiffness of disposition. My experience in this city, also in the district, is somewhat limited as yet; but I can truthfully say that so far I never met a more loyal and whole hearted class of people, I do not mean that they are perfect, or else we could say we had got Zion right here in Illinois. In all of us there is still room for improvement.

I reached this place May 17. This being my objective point, I have my family with me, and we are now settled down to housekeeping at 802 North Main street. I have been chosen pastor of the branch, and trust to be worthy of the confidence of those I am called to preside over. Like all other branches this one has seen its dark days, but we believe there are brighter prospects ahead if we are only humble and faithful.

On last Tuesday evening Sister Arber, the children and I, went out with the object of visiting, but no one seemed very anxious for us to tarry long. In fact they appeared to be pushing us toward our home. We had taken precaution to lock up the house, but we have about come to the conclusion we might just as well save ourselves the trouble, for if those coming in our absence want to, they will get in anyway. For as we neared the house to our surprise we saw it all lighted up, and about fifty of the Saints and friends had taken possession. "Did they surprise us?" Well, yes, and in a very substantial way, by having lots of good things to eat. And then we were presented with a purse of silver. We certainly appreciate such kindness, for it helps, oh, so much.

We wish to say to our many friends in western Iowa, we shall not soon forget them and their kindness to us. After an acquaintance of four years of pleasant association, I am sorry I can not write to all who have asked me to do so, but take this means of telling all that we are well and busy in the service of the Master. We shall always be pleased to hear from you. A number have already written, and we will reply just as quickly as possible.

Our desire is to be humble in our work, that we may be accounted worthy when the Master shall come. May the Lord bless all his people until Zion shall be redeemed, when the toilers will be all gathered home.

Your brother in the conflict of truth,

JOSEPH ARBER.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 4, 1910.

Dear Herald: I am lonesome, being alone in this large city. I am at work here and three hundred and fifty miles from home. I have fallen, and I request the prayers of all the Saints in my behalf. I know this work is of God and it is true. I have read the prophecy of Elder John Smith of November 24. It does me good to read it every week. This city is very wicked and a man that has to board can not get a place except at a saloon, so you can see I have great things to overcome. I am mixed with the evil ones, although drinks do not tempt me in the least.

I pray that this letter will be in the SAINTS' HERALD, and I will be glad if some of the dear old Saints would send me some HERALDS to read.

I am going to rent a room to stay, but take my meals at the same place that I now do. I will say right here, I will make all things right in the next eight weeks if God gives me strength.

I have a job at the Globe Soap Company at one dollar and seventy-five cents per day. I will be here until October, as far as I know now.

I know the good Spirit is upon me that leads men to repentance and I will surely do it. I can not do otherwise. I have faith to know that God will hear my prayers and the Saints' prayers and I will put my works with my faith. I have the evidence that all things will be right if I am faithful and fast and pray. I do not know whether there are any Saints in this large city or not. I have asked the prayers of the Saints and I know I can feel the good Spirit upon me.

COYOTE, MONTANA, June 27, 1910.

Editors Herald: When I awoke this morning I found that I had been dreaming of doing something great for the church of Jesus Christ and for the gospel it represents and contends for. This text of scripture was brought to my mind: "He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much." It also came to me that I was lacking in not doing what I could now to prove my faith, in that I had allowed my time to overrun in paying for the HERALD, so I hasten to amend and pay dues for coming year.

Further, in reviewing the past, I realize that I have made many mistakes, and ask pardon of all who have felt aggrieved or injured by any word or fault of mine and will continue to pray that friend and foe may have a clear understanding of the truth and that all may be saved in the kingdom of God.

WILLIAM WATERMAN.

WEST SULLIVAN, MAINE.

Dear Herald: It is not often that I ask for space in which to talk for a little while with my friends scattered from Nova Scotia to Missouri. Just a word in passing. In my seven years battle in the missionary field, I have received few scars. Life has seen the experiences of to-day repeated to-morrow, old faces moving aside to give place to the new, and a continual death and resurrection, like the ever changing shade and sunshine. The enemy has been met and partly conquered, and strange to say, the only hurt has been the blow of the friend. And more rooted is the conviction that misunderstanding of each other's motives is the great cause of disharmony among Saints. Every chapter of life's history teaches the lesson: "God is great! He is terrible and stern, but we know also, He is good," as Carlyle wrote to Emerson.

Maine is peculiar in many ways. It is my native State, so I feel free to criticize it. ('Tis well to bear in mind that criticism does not necessarily mean saying that which is bad.) This State is not so progressive as some States. She is not so prosperous. The long cold winters we read of in the geography and experience in reality are responsible in part for the backwardness of this country. The vegetation of semitropical climate is never raised here. We import the watermelon, peach, and such like, yet the potato and apple seem to offer a fair exchange. There are no large cities here, but miles and miles of ocean-washed seacoast and acres of woods. The summer visitor waxes eloquent when he refers to the summer days in Maine. And what think you? Your writer was preaching not long since, in a country where the bear made his retreat. A neighbor was going to the well when he saw Mr. Bruin. The thirst for water vanished and the man went home with an empty pail. This is also the land of the deer and the moose. Recently a bull moose invited a wood chopper to leave the woods and he (needless to say which one) went. Another man spent a comfortless hour up a telegraph pole, waiting for a moose to say goodbye. But the lakes and the fish, the sighing and scent of the pine trees, cool breezes freighted with bird songs, and the exceptionally fine opportunities of preaching the gospel to the fellow-men, make Maine an ideal place for summer work.

As it was in the days of Christ, the common people hear us gladly, but such people are becoming rare. Pride seems to be a complete barrier between man and Christ, and this is the modern stumbling-block. As Nephi saw, "The Gentiles are lifted up in the pride of their eyes and have stumbled." Pride, false teachers, and false doctrine have corrupted the children of men. Of the high-minded, some become interested, a few convicted, fewer converted, and the majority pass us by. I am thoroughly convinced that one of our writers was correct when she said that our church has a mission of its own and should not expect the support of the general public.

Without doubt, we are living in momentous times; serious problems confront us and we do not fully comprehend how serious, nor do I see that we are so much to blame. The world is big and the signs of His coming have come upon us quietly, in a way. To-day we hear of an earthquake in Italy, yesterday it was a fire in Baltimore, to-morrow it will be a famine or tidal wave somewhere else, and, with the world, we have become accustomed to such things. Yet they are none the less warnings that God has flashed upon the curtain of time, and let him who sees, stand in holy places, for that which has been spoken by inspiration must be fulfilled.

The principle things that we are looking forward to and that God is waiting for, are: More perfect unity among his people; the building of the temple; conversion of the Lamanites and Jews; and the army of desolation is to array itself against Jerusalem after which the sun shall be darkened and the moon shall not give her light; the stars shall fall, and the signs of the Son of Man appear. The angels shall be sent to gather those Saints who, for domestic reasons or otherwise, could not assemble at Zion before. Ah, that midnight cry: "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." And I call my friends to witness that whether on the street at Cape Cod, in the grove at Brooksville, in the tent at Amherst or Quidnick; in the kitchen at Shawmut; in the parlor at Tuckahoe; in the churches at Maine, Massachusetts, etc.; in schoolhouses in Pennsylvania and elsewhere, I have plead with men and women to do right, to clothe themselves with the wedding garment, which is the righteousness of Saints. Everywhere it is the same cry: "Repent and be baptised everyone of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." And to the Saints it is, "That which thou hast hold fast till I come."

This letter, then, is to you all; to tell you that I remember every handshake of friendliness, every kind act, all, in fact, in substance. And on some future day, even that which shall know no night, when that vast multitude of redeemed Saints rush in to clasp the hand of God, we may perchance be permitted to meet. Until that time may we battle on in the present, with brave hearts and pure spirits.

RALPH W. FARRELL.

SANTA ANA, CALIFORNIA.

Dear Herald: Why is it that so many of the isolated Saints feel that they do not have opportunities to grow in grace and to stand in holy places? So often I hear, "We are not very religious, we have been deprived of church privileges so long." True, we are commanded not to neglect the assembling of ourselves together, but will the church save us? If so, why criticise the Catholic who believes the church will save him? From whence is our salvation? "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." Ask of whom? The church? What shall we ask of the church? Where shall we seek? In the church? In the church we hear faith, repentance, baptism and the gospel of the kingdom preached, but have we heard and obeyed?

Knock and it shall be opened? But we have entered the church—at least our names are on the books. Shall we now sit down and let the church save us? Or do these words apply to our soul life? Were they ever intended to apply to our bodily or temporal life? Saint Paul says we should go on unto perfection. Can we stand in holy places only when we are in a church building or among a sufficient number to organize a branch? The greatest saints of all time have wandered in the wilderness, have walked alone, have communed with God the Father. Is isolation the cause of sorrow? Rather let it be a source of joy, and let us walk closer and talk with our Lord more often, yea watching day and night unto prayer. Isolation should be a source of strength and spiritual power, for then we should seek from the fountain head. There are already too many depending upon the church. Oh, no, the church can not save us; neither the branch officers. Know you not that in that day, two men shall be in the field; one shall be taken and the other left? We have all been baptized, received the laying on of hands, have our names on the church books. These things are spoken to the church, not to the world at large. The Doctrine and Covenants makes this very plain, saying the church shall be like unto this parable of the virgins.

Let us hear what the word says. Listen in the silence of your heart with the ear of faith: "In returning and rest shall ye be saved; in quietness and in confidence shall ye flee: and we will ride upon the swift; therefore shall they that pursue you be swift."—Isaiah 30: 15. Return, examine your thoughts, the forces of your life, your affections, do they not flow away from you? Your thoughts, they fly hither and yon, they roam afar. You say you are nervous, restless; the forces of life are in strife and commotion. Your affections or desires are constantly wanting and never satisfied; a new dress or a new house, or a larger farm. Set your affections on things above where moth and rust do not corrupt. Come home, dear soul, come home and sit down and sup with the Master in the midst of your own heart. Fix your mind and heart on the one word Jesus, nor let any other word slip in, and feel all the forces of life begin to return to their center, for God is the center of the universe, the center of all things, and he would dwell in your heart. You may be able to command them only for an instant, but return again and again, until you shall find Jesus within your soul dwelling in your midst. Will that not be a holy place? "To be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith."—Ephesians 3: 17.

In returning and rest ye shall be saved. Has it not been said that if we stand in holy places the desolating scourge shall pass us by? Must we stand in the church building? Or in a branch? Only in union with Jesus have we any unity one with another. Come let us return unto God, now, to-day, receive Jesus into the midst of your heart and remain quietly to sit and sup with him. Let not even the form of a word disturb that peaceful quiet—therein shall ye find great strength. "In quietness and confidence shall be your strength." Do not think this a hard way; far from it, "Take up thy cross daily and follow me,"—patiently and quietly. How many of your duties require your undivided attention? Consider the needless thoughts that float idly through our brains. When you farm, when you drive a team, when you come and go, when you wash the dishes, when you sew, instead of thinking of the latest novel or bit of gossip, or considering the fashions, return to Him, and, as you are able to bear it, he will hold sweet converse with your soul and new realms of beauty and holiness will finally be your everlasting portion. It is the way of the cross, wherein we seek to have no thought, no word, no action, but such as is the will of our Father. All interruptions; all distractions are borne with patience and we immediately return. At first you may be discouraged, but remember the infant lies quiet and receives its nourishment and even sleeps; by and by it grows stronger, it creeps, it walks, it speaks, until it comes unto its full stature. "Except ye become as little children" (Matthew 18: 3, Mark 10: 15). Return, be quiet, be confident, he is faithful. His word is sure. Nothing shall harm us if we abide with him in the secret place of the most High. Blessed be God in all his saints. Amen.

If any one seeks the way of the cross, I would gladly correspond with such that we may be mutually benefited and his righteous cause advanced as the Spirit may direct. I, too, have been an isolated one, away where there was not even a soul who took any thought of our blessed Redeemer. Let all things praise and glorify and eternally exalt our Lord and King, and let us magnify his great and holy name—Jesus in whom is our salvation.

Minnesota Reunion.

The Saints' annual reunion of the Minnesota District was held at Bemidji, June 11 to 22, and now only remains in the pleasant memories of those who attended. The attendance was not quite so large as some former years on account of being quite a distance for many of the Saints of the district to travel. However, some pleasant meetings were held and I think all felt well repaid for the time and sacrifice of attending. The Saints of Bemidji did all they could in many ways to make it pleasant for the visiting Saints. Bro. J. W. Wight, E. E. Long, E. A. Stedman, Birch Whiting, besides many of the local brethren, did all they could to assist in the meetings, including our old time brother of the ministry here in Minnesota, T. J. Martin.

On Saturday, the conference convened, presided over by Bro. J. W. Wight. Bro. Leon A. Gould was elected president. He chose as his assistant, Bro. E. A. Stedman. Brother Leon is a young man with many noble qualities of character and is known to many of the church. We believe the district will be well served by him and we hope the Lord may bless him in his labors. The reunion next year is to be held at Frazee. Let all attend who can. The district conference will be held at Clitherall this fall.

The district conference also sustained Bro. Birch Whiting as Bishop's agent for another year. Saints, do not forget him even though times may seem hard. It will make you feel much better to pay your tithing, and you will have more confidence to trust the Lord through the times to come. We are sorry the church was unable to appoint more missionaries to Minnesota than it did. We think several more could find opportunity for useful labor. We hope that any of the missionaries who may be passing through at any time, will stop and help us what they can. We need it and will be glad to have them do so.

A few in various parts of the district are investigating the gospel and hope in time they may accept. The writer has traveled considerably the past few months and has found many earnest hearted Saints who are anxious to do what they can. Failing years is hindering some who have been willing workers in the past. If the Saints knowing of favorable opportunities for gospel labor will let us know, we will do what we can to assist in it.

I should not forget to mention that Sunday afternoon, the closing day of the reunion at Bemidji, the new church building built by the sacrifices of the small branch of Saints there, was dedicated to the service of the divine Master. It is located about six miles north of the city of Bemidji among the tall pine trees; a sheltered and shady nook in the midst of the great forest of this northern country. It is a nice home for the Saints in all their services. It is not very large, but large enough for many souls to be blessed who might earnestly seek the gospel within its walls. May its missions for good be blessed of him who is able to give every good and needful thing to his Saints. Dedicatory sermon by Bro. J. W. Wight and prayer by E. A. Stedman.

Trying to labor in Zion's cause,

Your brother in Christ,

L. HOUGHTON.

News From Branches.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Our branch is known as Richmond, because it is located in a suburb of that name. It is not in the city proper, although it was at one time. We have a nice brick church built about two and a half years ago. It is located at the junction of Swan and Mary streets. Traveling Saints and friends will please take notice. Elder Barmore has been our missionary for nearly two years. Some fine young people have joined the church during his sojourn here among us. He has been changed to Sydney and will leave for that place shortly. Sister Barmore has already gone. The choir gave her a farewell party Thursday evening, May 26. Many of the other church members were present and a splendid time was enjoyed.

During the last few months we have had several visits from Elders C. A. Butterworth and J. H. N. Jones. Since he went into the field recently, Brother Jones did missionary work in Adelaide, South Australia, where he with Sister Jones' help and the help of the Lord, raised up an excellent branch. Elder J. W. Davis has taken his place there. Of late Elder Jones has labored in Geelong where Elder Butterworth resides, while the latter was absent in New South Wales. Brother Butterworth has now returned. It is therefore probable that Brother Jones will be Brother Barmore's successor here.

Elder David McIntosh, our monthly district and branch president, has for some time been in ill health. He is a valuable gospel crusader and we trust he will, for the work's sake, live many years.

Our former Australian missionaries will be pleased, but perhaps surprised, to learn that a valuable coal field has been opened up in the vicinity of Queensferry. That locality promises to be the New Castle of Victoria. A naval station in the Hastings region is also talked of and will probably include the land now owned by Bro. Ashton Wooley. Indeed, Westernport Bay, the shores of which contain both coal and iron ore, bids fair to become one of the principal shipping and industrial centers of Australia.

Conference Minutes:

SOUTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—The Southeastern Illinois District convened at Dry Fork, June 18 and 19, 1910. District President I. A. Morris, and sub-missionary, H. Sparling, in charge. All the branches reported except two. Ministry reporting: Elders H. Sparling, I. A. Morris baptized 2; P. T. Plumb, F. M. Davis, Samuel Hoover baptized 2, Lloyd C. Moore baptized 1, Henry Walker, J. F. Henson, M. R. Brown; Priests John Fuqua, Fred O. Prickett baptized 1, Henry Rankin baptized 2, Hilliard Henson, A. H. Burroughs; Teachers William Clements, Carroll Dillon, James W. Slover, James P. Brown, James Rockett, and L. M. Edmonds. Bishop's agent's report was audited and found correct. The president called attention to some items of business to be considered. The advisability of changing the reunion from Parrish to Bungay; to decide what to do with the Bilhorn organ; a proposal to buy or build a church in Centralia, etc. The matter of changing the reunion was left to the reunion committee. The branch presidents in the district were instructed to urge the Saints to contribute at once for the purchase of a tent for the district. By vote, the Bilhorn organ was declared the property of the Southeastern Illinois District and the district president was made its custodian. A motion prevailed that the Saints throughout the district lend their support financially and otherwise to help the few Saints at Centralia build a church house. The preaching during the conference was by J. F. Henson, G. H. Hilliard, and P. T. Plumb. Adjourned to meet at the call of the president. A. H. Burroughs, secretary and treasurer.

EASTERN WALES.—A conference of the Eastern Wales District convened at Ledney, June 11, 1910, at 7.45 p. m., Elder Statistical reports from the following branches were read: Spokane, 236, gain 11; Roslyn, 38, gain 1; Sagle, 48, loss 3. Bishop's agent's reports were audited and found to be correct. Request for investigation of troubles in Sagle Branch was read and the matter referred to the district president. Brn. I. Silvers and John E. Turnbull were ordained priests. A. V. Closson was reelected president, N. V. Sheldon vice-president, W. W. Fordham secretary. Motion to sustain present Bishop's agent prevailed. Motion prevailed that we have a reunion and that the president of the district appoint a committee, himself being chairman, to provide for same. Brn. A. J. Smith and Sam Wood were appointed to complete the committee. Preaching in the evening by E. E. Keeler, assisted by W. J. Brewer. Sunday morning, Sunday school in charge of local officers. The church was then dedicated. Sermon by T. W. Chatburn, assisted by A. V. Closson. Dedicatory prayer by Patriarch E. E. Keeler. Three were baptized in Spokane River at the close of the services by A. V. Closson. Prayer and sacrament services at 2:30 p. m. in charge of E. E. Keeler, T. W. Chatburn, and A. J. Smith. Two sick were administered to and one child blessed. Preaching in the evening by N. V. Sheldon, assisted by A. V. Closson. Adjourned to meet at Spokane on Saturday preceding the second Sunday in December, 1910.

Convention Minutes.

PORTLAND.—District Sunday school convention held its semi-annual gathering at Hood River, Oregon, June 24, 1910. A goodly delegation was present representing nearly every Sunday school in the district. The usual routine of business session from credentials on through the regulation business formula was gone through with without a hitch or mishap of any kind, every one performed his duty well and favorably for the good of the cause. A general good time was had, the Spirit of the Master prevailing. A lively interest characterized the session throughout. A joint Sunday school was held on Sunday morning following, with a total representation of eighty participants, young and old. A good interest was manifested in the lesson, which was on temperance; questions and answers followed in rapid succession. Good instruction was meted out and well received. A general good feeling was visibly depicted in every countenance and responded to liberally by every hand in the way of monetary offerings. A collection of $2.39 resulting. Geo. Pearson, secretary pro tem.

NORTHERN ILLINOIS.—The Religio society convention was held Friday afternoon, June 18, 1910, at Mission, Illinois. Sr. F. M. Cooper called the meeting to order. Bro. Joseph Tanner was chosen to preside and Sr. La June Howard to act as secretary pro tem. Voted to resolve the meeting into a mass convention. Reports of officers and local reports read. As the president and vice-president, Bro. Arthur Allen and Bro. J. E. Vanderwood, are now laboring in other districts, Bro. Fred Bone, of Chicago, and Bro. Lester Wildermuth, of Plano, were elected to fill their places. Bro. Glenn Fairbanks gave a very instructive talk pertaining to the normal work. Adjourned to meet at 10 o'clock at the same place as the district conference, the day previous. Blanche Fairbanks, secretary, 7157 Perry avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

Reunion Notices.

Reunion of the Northwestern Kansas District will convene at Alexander, Kansas, August 19, and continue over the 28th. District conference will be held on reunion grounds the 27th at 2 p. m. Please get your reports in on time. Meetings will be held in the district tent. Address of district secretary is Elizabeth Teeters, Ness City, Kansas. John A. Teeters, president.

The annual gathering of the Saints and others of Northern California and Nevada will occur at the same grounds in Irvington, Alameda County, California, on September 2 to 11. The price on tents will be for the entire time: 8x10, $2.00; 10x12, $2.50; 12x14, $3.00; springs or box mattresses, 75 cents. Straw for sale on the ground at reasonable rates.

Herald Publishing House

$100.00 Gold Bonds, bearing interest at five per cent

Dated August 1, 1909

Due August 1, 1914

Redeemable after due notice is given by the Herald Publishing House.

These bonds are offered to the purchaser at par. The interest coupons call for payment semiannually—on February 1st and August 1st.

Both principal and interest payable at the State Savings Bank of Lamon, Iowa.

These Bonds are backed by the very best of security, consisting of assets of $100,000, and afford the purchaser a chance to invest with perfect assurance as to the soundness of the investment.

Note some of the facts about our bonds.

(a) They are of small denomination, thus enabling those of very moderate means to become purchasers.

(b) We ask no premium—your interest is clear.

(c) We have issued only 250 bonds—$25,000 dollars' worth—all of which goes toward payment of our debt incurred in adding improvements since the fire.

Oklahoma City

We have for sale fine farms and also city property in Oklahoma City. Oklahoma City is one of the fastest growing cities of its age in the United States.

We have about 135 miles of paved streets, and about 30 miles under construction.

We have recently gained the Capitol, which makes Oklahoma City the capital city. Anyone wishing to purchase business lots, residence lots, or lots in the manufacturing districts, and wishing to correspond with us, we will certainly give their correspondence special attention. We can sell property by mail as well as if the customers were here.

Our terms on city lots, close-in subdivisions, are $20 down and $10 to $15 per month at an interest of 4 per cent.

Anyone buying property in Oklahoma City now, will certainly reap good returns upon his investment, as we will have a city of two hundred thousand people in 1915.

We can refer you to any bank in the city in regard to our responsibility. Write for a free book of Oklahoma City.

DANIELS REALTY CO.

Oklahoma City is a marvel. I have seen Daniels Realty Company's holdings, and believe them to be safe and all right.

HUBERT CASE,
Kingfisher, Oklahoma.

Those wishing rooms will write J. H. Driver, Irvington, California, the price as arranged by the parties concerned. The usual restaurant department will be maintained with good meals as cheap as possible. Those wishing tents and springs will please order as soon as possible, so we can determine how many to obtain. Bro. F. M. Sheehy and Bishop E. L. Kelley are expected to be present, with other able preachers. The Sunday school and Religio work will occupy a prominent place under able management. The usual joint entertainment will be held. In planning to come arrange to bring along a large quantity of determination to try to make others happy and do all you can to make the meeting a blessing to all. Leave morbid complaints under lock and key at home. J. M. Terry, chairman committee, 1230 Magnolia street, Oakland, California.

There will be a reunion held at Bayard, Nebraska, to assemble on Friday, September 2, and continue over the 11th. All are urged to come and help make the meeting a success. We have written Brother Wight, asking for help in way of good speakers, and no pains will be spared to make it a date to look back upon with pleasure. Bert E. Hart for committee.

The Southwestern Iowa Reunion will be held this year August 13 to 21 in J. E. Claiborn's grove just east of the old camp ground on William Leska's place, near Thurman, Iowa. There will be plenty of shade trees, good water, and good speakers. There will be a boarding house on the ground where meals will be served at 20 cents each to holders of meal tickets, and at 25 cents each to those not taking meal tickets. A stand on the ground will supply bread stuff, canned goods, provisions, and refreshments. Arrangements have been made by the committee to furnish free transportation from McPaul from all day trains on Friday, August 12; Saturday, August 13; and on Tuesday, August 16, for visitors coming to camp, and on Monday, August 22, for those returning home provided notice is given the undersigned before August 10, stating date, train, number of persons, and amount of baggage expected. On other dates than those given, visitors may find transportation at reasonable rates on the regular hack line from McPaul. The ministry will be transported free at all times. Tents and supplies will be furnished campers at the following rates which include freight charges: 9x12, 3 foot wall, $1.40; 12x14, 3-foot wall, $1.75; 12x14, compartment tent, 6-foot wall, $5.00; spring cots, 50 cents; camp chairs, 15 cents. Orders for tents and supplies must be received by the undersigned on or before July 25, owing to the large demand for tents. Complete your plans and send in your orders at once. Do not delay. The committee are doing all in their power to make a successful reunion, and prompt action will help lighten the burden, so let all work together. C. W. Forney, secretary.

Reunion of the Des Moines District will be held August 12 to 22, 1910, at Frazer, Iowa. We wish that all those that expect to camp would order their tents as early as August 1 as the tents will have to be shipped from Des Moines. The ground that has been secured is an ideal place, and we trust that the Saints will make a special effort to be present. The Sunday school work will be represented by district field-worker, Elder J. F. Mintun and the district officials. Do not fail to bring your quarterlies and song books. Prices of tents delivered on the ground: 10x14, 2 rooms, $4.50; 14x16, standard, $3.95; 12x14, standard, $2.85; 10x12, standard, $1.85; 7x9, standard, $1.25. Tents will be set up for an additional charge of 25 cents; cots, 40 cents; cots, wire, single, 55 cents; cots, wire, double, 75 cents; mattresses, single, 45 cents; mattress, double, 60 cents; camp chairs, 15 cents. All orders must be accompanied with money order. A barn will be at the disposal of the campers for their horses and we also expect to have pasture. A bus will convey campers to and from the depot at a small charge, also baggage. Frazer is located on the interurban railroad a short distance north of Boone and has a car each way every two hours. This is a good chance for you Coalville Saints to attend a reunion. Good speakers will be present. Begin now to arrange for a ten-day spiritual feast. All orders for tents, also money for the reunion association, should be forwarded to Elder Wardel Christy, Mineral Ridge, Iowa, or the writer at 105 East Locust street, Des Moines, Iowa. My house address is 1340 East Twenty-fifth street, Des Moines, Iowa. Iowa Phone, 5772. O. Salisbury, for the committee.

The Southern California reunion will convene at Garden Grove, August 12 to 22, 1910. The committee are making all necessary arrangements. It is desired that all who can will come prepared to do their own cooking. For those who are unable to do this arrangements will be made to furnish meals to a limited number. Bring your own bedding and cooking utensils. Tents, cots, and mattresses can be rented on the grounds. For particulars address Nathaniel Carmichael,

Died.

LOWE.—Ada Milstead Lowe was born in Illinois, September 11, 1865, and died June 16, 1910, at her home in Wilber, Nebraska. She came to Nebraska with her parents in 1878. Was married to William Lowe, November 12, 1890. Two children were born to them, a boy and a girl. They are members of the Saints Sunday school. Mrs. Lowe was a member of the Christian Church, having united with them in 1892. Funeral sermon by Elder Samuel Brolihar.

FIELDS.—Henderson Fields was born in Hawkins County, Butcher's Valley, Tennessee, May 19, 1806, and died June 19, 1910, aged 104 years and 1 month. He was married to Alzira Fields who died eleven years ago last March. To this union twelve children were born, seven having gone on before, the remaining five children living in and around Bennet, excepting one, who lives in Nebraska City. In 1834 they moved to Indiana, and eleven years later to Wisconsin. Immediately after the close of the civil war they came to Nebraska, taking a homestead four miles west of Palmyra. Some years later, after the death of his wife, he moved to Bennet, three miles from the old homestead, and it was here that he spent the declining years of his life. When sixteen years of age the deceased united with the Methodist Church, being a member for a number of years. Later he united with the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, being baptized by Gordon E. Deuel, March 15, 1874. He was ordained an elder March 29 of the same year. There are five living children, thirty-six grandchildren, fifty-six great-grandchildren, and nineteen great-great-grandchildren, making five generations, and a total of one hundred and sixteen direct descendants. Funeral service was held at the Presbyterian church at Bennet, June 20, at 3.30 p. m., conducted by Elder C. H. Porter, of Wilber, assisted by Elder W. M. Seif, of Nebraska City.

HAY.—Bro. William Hay departed this life February 13, 1910, at his home at Coalville, at the age of 70 years and 5 months. He was born at Kely, Scotland; baptized August 23, 1892, by Bro. C. E. Butterworth. He was united in marriage to Sr. Mary Muir on the 7th day of June, 1860. To this union were born twelve children, nine of whom remain with the aged widow to mourn their loss. While in poor health for a number of years, yet his death was unexpected and was a great shock to Sister Hay, who had cared for him with all the patience that could be exercised and who feels her loss keenly. Brother Hay was loved and respected by all who knew him. Funeral services were held at the Saints' church in Coalville, the sermon being preached by Elder Samuel Jordison to a large concourse of friends. Interment in Otho cemetery.

BARROWS.—Lucy Hardy Barrows was born October 29, 1838, at Bradford, Massachusetts, and died at Independence, Missouri, June 19, 1910. She accepted the gospel early in life and was a pioneer in Utah, was married to Ethan Barrows at Salt Lake City where they both united with the Reorganization, being baptized by W. W. Blair July 24, 1881. Funeral at Lamoni, Iowa, June 21, in charge of Pres. John Smith and sermon by Robert Elvin. One son, C. H. Barrows, mourns the loss of a loving, kind mother. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

Ever Been to Colorado?

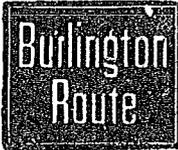

No? Then you have an ideal vacation trip in store for you—one that will mean a complete change of scene and of living conditions, as it should result most beneficially.

The grandeur of the majestic Rockies will inspire the mind; the picturesque beauty of forest and stream refresh the soul, while the dry, tonic mountain air will rebuild the worn and jaded body.

Don't take our word for it but go and be convinced. It costs little in time or money (I'll be glad to tell you how much) and you will be a thousand times repaid.

You have perhaps been planning a trip to Colorado for years—make up your mind to-day to go this Summer and let me hand you one of the Burlington Colorado handbooks which tells all about where to go, what to see and what to do, and contains a complete list of hotels, boarding houses, and ranches, with their rates.

Ask me about Estes Park, Colorado, also.

THE CHILD'S PLACE IN THE GOSPEL ECONOMY.

JESUS VERSUS THE CREEDS.

(Synopsis of a sermon.)

Scripture reading: And they brought young children to him, that he should touch them: and his disciples rebuked those that brought them. But when Jesus saw it, he was much displeased, and said unto them, Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God. Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein. And he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them.—Mark 10: 13-16.

The scripture that I have read presents to our minds one of the most pleasing pictures that can be found in all history. Jesus is talking to the assembled disciples. There are mothers in the audience. Mother like, their thoughts are for their children. They think that if their little ones can only be touched by the hands of the Son of God all will be well. Probably there are mothers here to-day who feel just that way,—if the loving Jesus could only touch their children they think that it would be the finest thing in the world. Well, it is the finest thing in the world, and Jesus is still here to touch and bless the little children, watching over those who are not yet accountable, and blessing and directing those who have reached the years of discretion.

Some of the disciples think that the Master should not be troubled with such trifles and so they rebuke those who are bringing the little children to Jesus. But when the Master sees what is done he is sore displeased and declares, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God."

Jesus was one who could be approached by all classes. His heart was open to rich and poor, young and old, saint and sinner. He was no aristocrat or autocrat. The chief priests and scribes were shocked and horrified when they heard the children in the temple singing and shouting, "Hosanna to the son of David," on the occasion of the triumphal entry. They were greatly displeased and called the Master's attention to the matter. He replied, "Have ye not read, Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise?"

So on this occasion instead of rebuking those who brought the children to him he commended them and took the children in his arms and put his hands on them and blessed them. There were some happy mothers in Israel that children's day.

These were little children that were brought to Jesus. Luke speaks of them as infants. Mark calls them young children. Matthew calls them little children. They were children that might be carried in arms. Jesus did not tell them to repent and be baptized, as he did older people who came to him. They had no need of repentance or baptism. Instead he put his hands on them and blessed them. And he declared, "Of such is the kingdom of God."

Now I wish to compare his teaching on that point with certain ideas that have been widely and zealously preached since his day. Certain powerful religious denominations have held, and probably still hold, that little children, such as were brought to him that day, are naturally and totally depraved and must be baptized or they will be for ever lost. If the parent neglects that rite and the child dies in infancy God will consign it to a never ending hell of fire and brimstone. And we are asked to believe that the mild and gentle Jesus, whose heart was so big that it reached out and embraced all people, the one who never harmed man, woman, or child, or dumb beast, will be a party to such an infancy, and will go on with his redeemed Saints singing joyful pæans of praise to the being who has committed such an act.

Others who hold to the doctrine of predestination, teach that God has divided all people into two classes. The one class includes those who will be saved for ever by the free grace of Christ and not by any merit of their own. The other class includes those who are predestinated to be for ever damned, because there has not been enough of the free grace of Christ to go around, or for other reasons,—I believe that the reason ascribed is that God may be "glorified" by their suffering, "to the praise of his glorious justice." Little children are included in both classes. Those included among the non-elect must perforce suffer untold torture through endless ages as a punishment for sins that they have never committed. The Westminster Confession of Faith says:

Elect infants, dying in infancy, are regenerated and saved by Christ through the Spirit, who worketh when, and where, and how he pleaseth. So also are all other elect persons, who are incapable of being outwardly called by the ministry of the word. Others not elected, although they may be called by the ministry of the word, and may have some common operations of the Spirit, yet they never truly come unto Christ, and therefore can not be saved: Much less can men not professing the Christian religion be saved in any way whatsoever, be they ever so diligent to frame their lives according to the light of nature, and the law of that religion they do profess; and to assert and maintain that they may, is very pernicious, and to be detested.

This doctrine of the creeds was the basis of the statement made by the great Protestant, Jonathan Edwards:

Reprobate infants are vipers of God's vengeance whom he will hold over the pit of hell in the tongs of his wrath until they turn and spit venom in his face.

It was the inspiration of the old hymn that is now mostly mentioned in execration:

"There is a never ending hell,
And never dying pains,
Where infants must with demons dwell,
In darkness, fire, and chains,
Have faith, the same with endless shame,
For all the human race,
For hell is crammed with infants damned,
Without a day of grace."

It may be urged that these things are not believed in now. That reminds me of the poem regarding Calvin, the great apostle of predestination:

"An unelected infant sighed out its little breath,
And wandered thro' the darkness, along the shores of death;
Until the gates of heaven, a gleam with pearls it spied,
And ran to them and clung there and would not be denied.
Though still from earth came mutterings, You can not enter in,
Depart into Gehenna, you child of wrath and sin;
At length the door was opened, and a man with features mild
Stooped down and kissed the weeping and unelected child.
Immortal life thrilled softly down the avenues of bliss
As on the infant's forehead the Spirit placed a kiss.
Who are you thus to hallow my unelected brow?
Dear child, my name is Calvin, but I see things different now."

It is to be hoped that the creed makers see things differently now, though the statement that we have quoted from the Westminster Confession of Faith is still retained in certain circles, and one denomination within the past month spent some time in an attempt to explain that section so as to retain the original wording and at the same time convey a meaning different from the one that was originally intended.

Sentiment is better now, but when the gospel was restored in the early part of the last century these ideas were quite generally accepted. The creeds were in full binding force. And I do not marvel that when Joseph Smith asked of the personage that appeared to him, "What church shall I join?" he had occasion to write, "The personage who addressed me said that all their creeds were an abomination in his sight." Nor am I surprised that having made such a statement, and having caused it to be published widely throughout the world, he should meet with bitter opposition. For I find in the Compendium of the Laws of the Church of Scotland, published in 1844, and perhaps typical of religious sentiment at the time, this law:

It is ordained, That no sort of persons, of whatever quality or degree, be permitted to speak or write against the confession of faith, concluded on by this kirk, both concerning doctrine and discipline; or against that assembly, or any act thereof, upon the pain of censure.

When Joseph Smith wrote and spoke against those creeds he was censured and persecuted. But let us now contrast the words that he taught with the teachings of the creeds on this one subject.

In the Book of Mormon (Mosiah 8: 60) we read: "Little children also have eternal life." Now that sounds better to me than the song that hell is crammed with infants damned without a day of grace.

And in the Book of Mormon I read:

Behold I say unto you, that this thing shall ye teach, repentance and baptism unto those who are accountable and capable of committing sin; yea, teach parents that they must repent and be baptized, and humble themselves as their little children, and they shall all be saved with their little children; and their little children need no repentance, neither baptism. Behold, baptism is unto repentance to the fulfilling the commandments unto the remission of sins. But little children are alive in Christ, even from the foundation of the world; if not so, God is a partial God, and also a changeable God, and a respecter to persons; for how many little children have died without baptism. Wherefore, if little children could not be saved without baptism, these must have gone to an endless hell. Behold I say unto you, that he that supposeth that little children need baptism, is in the gall of bitterness, and in the bonds of iniquity; for he hath neither faith, hope, nor charity; wherefore, should he be cut off while in the thought, he must go down to hell. For awful is the wickedness to suppose that God saveth one child because of baptism, and the other must perish because he hath no baptism.—Moroni 8: 11-16.

In the Doctrine and Covenants there is this statement:

But, behold, I say unto you, that little children are redeemed from the foundation of the world, through mine Only Begotten; wherefore they can not sin, for power is not given unto Satan to tempt little children, until they begin to become accountable before me; for it is given unto them even as I will, according to mine own pleasure, that great things may be required at the hand of their fathers.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 13.

From the foregoing we learned that little children are redeemed from the original sin by the blood of Christ. We get the further thought, that may be new to some, that they are under God's care and Satan has no power over them. And as they grow older there is further provision for them under the gospel law:

And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized; and their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands; and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord.— Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.

Little children are not proper candidates for baptism. Baptism is for the remission of sins and they have committed no sins. They are as pure and sweet and innocent as the flowers, and a god who would cause one of them to burn for ever in fire and brimstone would be an inhuman monster. Our God would not do such a thing and he abhors the creeds that teach that he would.

These little children that were brought to Jesus were as pure as the lilies that figured in his parables. And Jesus took them in his loving arms and blessed them. That is the example that we as a church follow. Mothers bring their little children to the ministers of Christ and they put their hands on them and bless them.

But all must recognize that as the child grows older it reaches a time when it begins to think and to understand. It becomes responsible to a degree for its own acts, and is capable of bearing blame. It can understand what baptism is for and can have faith in God.

When does that time come? Our religious friends have never told us explicitly, but it is revealed to us in the passage that I have read from the Book of Covenants. And as being in harmony with this revelation I present a statement made by one W. I. Thomas, psychologist, as found in the American Magazine, April, 1909:

At the age of perhaps eight the child's brain is practically all in; he is short only in experience and practice. He can understand any abstract principle and any piece of literature.

Psychology is the science of the human mind, and as stated by this man it agrees with revelation, in this particular. The prophet of Palmyra made no mistake when he said that at eight years of age the average child could understand the gospel, if it were taught him in simple terms, and might be in fit condition to be baptized.

At that age, the children who have been taught at home and in the Sunday school know the story of Jesus and can tell what baptism is for. And the word of God makes it the sacred duty of parents to see that their children are taught to understand the gospel and that they are baptized at that age. You may say that you prefer to let your child grow up and make the choice when he reaches manhood. But in that you are out of harmony with the word of God, and if your decision results disastrously you must bear the blame upon your own head.

The Master said that of such is the kingdom of heaven. We talk about the heavenly host, and think how wonderful it would be to see them; but according to this statement, the home that has a little child in it is sheltering one of the heavenly host.

Your child is the greatest treasure that God has intrusted to your care. One poet contrasts his estate with that of his rich but childless neighbor, in words something like this:

"My neighbor owns an automobile that goes
Two score or more of miles per hour—that's fine!
Here comes a brown-eyed boy with freckled nose—
The boy is mine!"

The children that are intrusted to your care are your riches,—and they are also God's riches. He has cattle on a thousand hills and gold untold in undiscovered mines; but his greatest power for good in the redemption of Zion and the world is in the children who will make the church of to-morrow.

What are the ideals that they are receiving from us? One little girl was rebuked by her auntie and told that if she were naughty she would never go to heaven. She replied, "Oh, well, I have been to the theater once and to the circus twice, and I can't expect to go everywhere."

If we are not careful our children will get some such idea, for the mad rush of older people in search of pleasure suggests the idea to them that the main thing is to get to the theater and to other places of pleasure and leave heaven for future consideration as a matter of minor importance.

Why should we love pleasure more than God? Men should rise to a higher plane. If we are to make pleasure our sole aim in life we will find that the hog has us all beat. We can not compete with him. When it is hot he crawls into the mud; when it is cold he crawls into a straw stack. He can eat corn and drink swill and sleep all day long. He is happy, and in a way he answers the end that man has set for him. The bigger hog he is the better he succeeds. And finally he makes a lot of good bacon that is much relished if the eater can forget how it looked when it was alive.

But when man makes pleasure his only aim he defeats himself, for he has a consciousness that ever torments him with the fact that he was meant for higher things. He is tormented with remorse, so that his most coveted pleasures turn stale, and frequently at the last he commits suicide, thus confessing most dramatically that he has failed to attain his aim. Life after all has not been pleasant to him.

We should rise to a higher level and crucify pleasure if necessary. We should pattern after the Man of Galilee who made it his aim in life to do the things that pleased his Father in heaven. Only in that way can we become a proper example to our children,—that even as we obey God so may they obey us.

In a way children are to be an example to us. On a certain occasion when the disciples were crowding around the Master with the query, "Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" Christ called a little child to him and set it in the midst of them. He did not select one of the most learned men as an example, nor yet one of the most wealthy, nor one of the most influential in society. He simply took this little child and set it in their midst and said, "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."

Of course this language has a limited application. We can not become small in stature again and in all things like a child. Evidently the idea was that we must become as pure and free from taint of sin as was the little child that he set in the midst of the disciples that day so long ago.

In other ways we may with profit become more like little children. The average child, up to a certain age, regards his parents as the personification of wisdom. What father says is so. And surely under such conditions no thoughtful father would intentionally deceive his child, though he might do so by mistake. But we have a Father in heaven who not only will not deceive us intentionally,—he is all wise and will make no mistakes. We can afford to accept his word with childlike faith and simplicity. No matter what the world may say, with us it should be the end of controversy.

The average child is constantly seeking after information. He inquires about everything. He is continually asking why. His intelligence is growing. We should be like that in spiritual matters. We should be eager to learn and we should constantly go to our Father in heaven with questions.

Now briefly to recapitulate: Little children when they come into the world are holy and pure. Of such is the kingdom of heaven. As yet Satan has no power over them. To speak of them as reprobate vipers who are the object of God's wrath is blasphemous. To say that they need baptism is foolish, because they neither understand what baptism is for nor do they need it. As well talk about disinfecting a pure and fragrant rosebud. But there comes a time when they can understand the gospel and obey it. It devolves upon the parent to see that they are so instructed that when that time comes they will be ready to yield an intelligent obedience.

COLLEGE AND MORAL EDUCATION.

An inquiry has recently been conducted by a committee of the Oberlin Association into the attitude of college-bred men toward lawlessness and public immorality. A report giving the results of the inquiry has been issued, and several newspapers have commented upon its salient features.

The report is somewhat pessimistic and censorious. The evidence gathered seems to show that college men are not superior morally as college men, to the uneducated or insufficiently educated.

College men are found among the political and commercial "grafters," among the tax dodgers, the breakers of the anti-monopoly acts, the violators of prohibition and other laws. College men, not excepting college presidents and professors, show undue respect for mere wealth and fail to rebuke or discipline the undergraduate sons of rich, influential fathers. College men are found among the supporters of bosses, machines, lobbying for special favors, and so on.

What is the explanation of this moral indifference or worse of so many college men? asks the report, and what can be done to improve their standards and make them real force for righteousness in the state and nation?

Various answers have been given by college men and newspapers to these questions, but little light has been shed on the subject. One editor has pointed out, however, that all great philosophers and moral teachers, from the ancients down to the moderns, have asserted with emphasis that mere intellectual training does not insure superior morality or right conduct. The will, the "heart," the emotions, they have insisted, must be educated along with the intellect. Intelligence and information furnish "tools," but they furnish tools to the criminal as well as to the virtuous citizen, to the selfish reactionary as well as to the earnest reformer. The making of citizens, the building of character, requires particular attention, and can not safely be trusted, "to take care of itself." The kindergarten, the elementary school, the college and the university, and the professional schools beyond as well, must severally teach ethics, individual and social, by precept and example. They must inspire, implant high principles and ideals, in addition to teaching facts, sciences and abstract or nonmoral principles.

All of this should be obvious and trite, but it is not, and hence there is important work to do along the lines of moral, religious and cultured education in school and college.—The Chautauquan, July, 1910.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Under date of July 15 Elder E. B. Morgan writes that he and his wife are to leave New York City July 20, on the steamship, Lucania, bound for his mission field in Wales. They will accompany Bro. Gomer T. Griffiths, who goes to take active oversight of the British Isles Mission.

LETTER FROM THE BISHOPRIC.

To the Saints and Friends in All the World; Greeting: It is with mingled feelings of duty and gratitude to God, that we address you thus formally, being mindful first, that we must faithfully perform our own work if we would have place with the justified when the Messiah shall come, and secondly, thankful that we with you are privileged to live and occupy with Zion's children in the era wherein we are assured: "The set time to favor her hath come."

At such a time and with such opportunity there should be but a single thought dominating the minds of the "children of the kingdom," and that thought should be, "Let me perform first, and fully my duty to the work of Christ, for rightly all things else are, and should be, subsidiary." In the language of Jesus when he taught the importance of duty first to his cause, as essential to making the highest success in life: "Therefore seek ye to bring forth the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you."

Let us not forget, that seeking to build up and establish Christ's work first, we gain all things; but failing to do this and, instead, reaching out and making first the things of the world, which in fact is not our own if we should chance to gain it all, we lose all things, as did the generation which failed to move unselfishly and lay up true treasures when Christ spoke as never man had before.

With united, diligent, and faithful labor the songs of Zion may and will soon be heard around the world; but the heralds of these will not be the selfish or the half-hearted, the jealous, the idler, nor the faithless. On the contrary they will be the courageous and devoted who are ever seeking the interest of the Lord's work first, and who are willing in comparison, to count all else as naught, that it may be established in holiness and peace.

This is preëminently a time when everyone should seek to magnify his own talent,—perform his own work—whatever that may be, or however of little consequence it may appear to us or others. Duty is performed and the merit of reward given, when we have accomplished the task required of us, not by our doing some other thing that was not enjoined. Let the missionary and the home elder perform the work to which they have been respectively set apart to do, each at times as occasion requires assisting the other and aiding the other's work, but neither should be content to let the other do the work of both, nor to have anyone else perform the work for them. When each shall contribute faithfully his share then he is entitled to the commendation, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant"; but not otherwise.

And what is true of the missionary and elder as to the necessity of diligence and earnestness in the performance of their work, is equally true and applicable of every member, whether he is called to labor in spiritual or temporal affairs;—it is not of so much consequence whether we are called to the task of "a sower of the seed,"—a preacher of the word of life,—or placed at the task of furnishing "bread for the sower"; but it is of very great moment to us whether we have faithfully and industriously performed our part of the labor, whatever the task. No principle laid down in holy writ is more plainly or fully set forth, than is that which enjoins honest labor, industry and faithfulness in our places. "Six days thou shalt work." "The idler shall not eat the bread of the laborer." To please God we must not have too many holidays to our credit. We should remember the urgent injunction of Jesus: "Let us labor while it is day, the night cometh when no man can work."

As members of the "household of faith" let us examine ourselves. We may thereby avoid trouble, perplexity, and disappointment both in this life and the next. The apostle urges the matter in this language: "For if we would judge ourselves we should not be judged." To labor for, or with the Master, in his work, it is not sufficient that we occasionally preach a sermon, contribute something of our means and attend church upon the Sabbath day, but that we strive to learn the Lord's will concerning us, and with a soul anxious to fulfill and acceptably perform that will, move out at our own sacrifice and inconvenience, if necessary, to accomplish the work. "As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God."—1 Peter 4: 10.

The work before us to-day is of great magnitude and can only be accomplished by faithfulness and courage and these should be traced in the work of everyone. "He who is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much; and he who is unjust in the least, is also unjust in much."—Luke 16: 10. Whether in much or little then, let us prove ourselves faithful to the trust committed, and never be found as was the man who had been given the "one talent," hiding what little we have away, and filling the niche of the idler and truant.

In preaching the gospel in all the world it must not be forgotten that there is a special duty devolving upon those to whom the minister is sent, additional to the rendering of our accounts in temporal matters to the Bishop. Both are enjoined under the law and it is to the good of the Saints to discharge every duty. The missionary may properly call upon the Bishop for expenses, food, and clothing, but only where the people for whom and among whom he labors have failed of duty on their part. In sending his elders forth among the people, Jesus said, "They shall feed you, and clothe you, and give you money." The law has not been changed. This is as true to day as it ever was. By this, men prove themselves and are proven, to-day as in every gospel age. If the labor of the elder is among the Saints, the Saints should look after these necessities; if to the world, or those not of the household of faith, then the world must look after them and the promise is, "He who feeds you and clothes you and gives you money, the same is my disciple." Christ takes recognition of the faithful service rendered, and he who fails in his life and work to approve himself to the Master by doing these things, loses an everlasting reward.

In stakes and districts as well as in the broader missionary fields, let us wake up to a full appreciation of the opportunities open to us and let no elder who labors among us be compelled to turn back to the church for clothing, or for food, or incidental expenses. If he is compelled to do this, the treasury is depleted and the work of Christ hindered. Can we afford to neglect these little things? No wonder Jesus says: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Let us cheerfully help him then by aiding directly his minister, while the minister faithfully toils to build up the Lord's work in our midst, wherever we are, thus laboring together for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all, instead of a part looking on while others labor.

Special attention is called to the fact that we live in the day—the time—of the coming of the Son of Man. It is truly a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of the Lord's people; and the promise is made that he that is tithed shall not be destroyed at his coming. (Book of Covenants 64: 5.) This is a truth that is equal to any other truth in the gospel economy. It is the instruction of the Christ, and he also taught that, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed." The contrast to this is readily seen. If we do not keep his word then the truth is that we are not his disciples; we have instead, chosen to disobey, and the disobedient are "the children of the wicked one." We are oft charmed in singing: "Is my name written there?" But we should not stop at the inquiry merely; let each examine and see; no person's name is there in the accepted sense who has not kept the law. There ought not to be found a single member of the church who has not complied with Christ's law relating to temporalities. Let us all wake up and "examine ourselves" and prove ourselves by yielding a full obedience to his word.

Another duty, incidental in a way, but which is often overlooked by the Saints, is that of supplying the tract fund, thus helping our friends and neighbors to a knowledge of the truth. Of course, the missionary or elder may write to the HERALD, or Ensign for tracts and get them, having them charged to the Bishop and thus furnish the supply for use in the branches or neighborhoods where he labors.

But who pays for them? Unless the Saints in these places take up a tract collection and send in to the Bishop some one else pays for sending this gospel literature. We can not afford to have this done. It is a loss, not a gain to us, when we quietly let some one else perform the work we should do, especially when we may be better able to bear the burden. The message to the churches through the apostle on Patmos was, "Let no man take thy crown." We should be on the watch tower and let our "light shine," each bear the burden and perform the work that is his own, and thus as good stewards, commend ourselves by giving meat in due season.

These incidental things may often be met by simply denying to ourselves some of the pleasures of life, never reaching the higher condition of sacrifice, but they will prove great factors for our good when we render an account to the Supreme Judge by and by. None can afford to spend what they have in pleasure seeking, and the frivolous things of life in comparison to that which is for their eternal good. By all means let us avoid bringing upon ourselves the severe denunciation of the apostle when he exhorts the Saints to "turn away" from those "who are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God."—2 Timothy 3: 4, 5.

We should not overlook the fact that the church to-day is in the midst of the preparation to be made, for the good of those who embrace the truth, as the missionary performs his work among the nations. Those who accept the gospel message must be looked after, instructed, strengthened, and provided for in the Lord's own way and time. It is not only necessary to bring in the sheep, but we should then "feed the sheep," and also "feed the lambs." To do this it is essential that each one put forth a hand to help with all his might, no one hesitating, none doubting, none fearing, except to "fear God and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man."—Ecclesiastes 12: 13.

The ministry must be sustained, homes secured, the work established, the poor provided for, and the business interests firmly and carefully guarded. There is great demand for the help of everyone, and if everyone will do his or her part, there will be plenty to insure full success.

That feature of our work which is more directly helpful to the poor and needy is in a measure provided for in the work of the benevolent association entitled, "The United Order of Enoch." This order is gathering in preparation for the performance of its work. No thoughtful person will expect it to accomplish the things for which it is instituted and incorporated, without means to assist it in its work. It must have a substantial basis of capital and every brother and friend should have their names as helpers on the books of this order to aid it in its great work.

We bespeak for it your support and at once. If you can send up a thousand dollars, or more, to aid this work, the Lord will greatly bless the deed; but if you can only send up one dollar, or less, do your best and the Lord who knoweth the deeds and desires of all of his children, will greatly bless the deed. The amount necessary to secure the approbation of our heavenly Father is simply proportionate to our ability and willingness to do. No one gives because he has to do so, nor would giving in this way commend him; but what a person does let him do it with a "free heart willingly"; then he will be entitled to reward, for it is written, "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver."

Let us not forget then that simply the organization of the United Order of Enoch, or any other benevolent society, is of itself of especial worth, but to be effective the organization must be supplied with funds so that it may be prepared for good among the people. The Saints for a number of years have hoped for and anxiously awaited the time, and opportunity we trust, to help in such a beneficent and uplifting work as The United Order of Enoch, and now that the work is here and awaiting our action we should prove ourselves faithful to the trust committed and "not only say, but do," what we can to make its work effective in the accomplishment of the things for which it was founded.

The Bishopric thus address you feeling assured that with us you are anxiously waiting and inquiring, "What of the hour?" and as watchmen from the outlook where we are called to occupy, we reply, that it is preëminently the time for unselfish, united labor; everyone putting away from his heart the thought of selfishness, and seeking the good of his brother and neighbor instead of his own; thus manifesting that he is a true disciple of Christ by the rule laid down by the Lord himself, when he suffered for us, and taught: "This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you."—John 15: 12.

Ever striving for the welfare of his children and invoking the divine favor in behalf of each, we are in the gospel hope,

Confidently yours,

AN ESSAY ON BROTHERHOOD.

The possibilities of spiritual and temporal improvement, which repose in this gospel of latter days, in its urgent temporal duties required on the one hand, and its spiritual and moral attainment expected on the other, are practically unlimited, and so far by us as the church have only been fairly begun. With us, a brotherhood with the strongest and most fraternal ties should be no poet's dream, but one of definite reality. The prospects of the world for a true Christian brotherhood are largely chimerical, so far in the distance is its glimmering light; but with the church it should be a condition existing here and now. Many religious people have contented themselves by simply talking about it in a dreamy sort of way. I hope we will never so prostitute our fond ideals with such a sluggish theism. It is high time the Saints of God should make good, and step forth and claim the promised possession. We should therefore strive to recognize this brotherhood not as merely a mirage of the desert,—a phantom of no material tangibility,—a hope never to be realized; but a definite fact, a living reality, a positive certainty. There seems to be altogether too much theorizing on this question and not enough demonstration.

Our conception of the Christian religion should only be one of increased knowledge and growth. Our responsibility and worth is measured, not so much by the expedient of our present attainment and capacity, as by the latent powers we possess and the possibility of bringing life to its fullest development. If we are not awake to our responsibilities and capabilities, we should ask ourselves, How and why are we in this condition and how can such be corrected? We should never excuse ourselves from engaging in God's work on the ground of present incapacity and lack of qualification. This thought should never lull us into an inactivity that is inexcusable. It never should be said of us that we have wasted our opportunities, neither that we lack appreciation of our glorious cause for the reason of ignorance. As we come to know God we will have a grander conception and appreciation of his divine law. God will not supernaturally endow us with wisdom, faith, and ability. If we acquire such a high posture, we must exert ourselves with unfaltering diligence, increasing and strengthening every faculty we have. Our dormant energies must be awakened and then our palsied powers will be merged and there will be evidence of life.

Everyone has a responsibility, and we should qualify, for no one is exempt from duty in this work. It means more than a few unconnected snatches of serious reflection, hastily indulged, or a few half-hearted deeds performed with regret. It must be considered an interest, a business, a vocation. It must ever be the great livelihood of our lives, the profession of the souls of men. It must be started continued, and never terminated. Resolution and persistency of effort are its dominant force, and we are the willing instrument through which these powers have surged. The law of God is our text-book. Prayer is the sacred key. God is the great teacher and Christ the pattern. Our work will show our character, and to build well we must have a character having no tarnish of reproach. Thus practical work of application is the great feature we lack in the realization of this fond hope. We have a revealed policy that if carried out will fulfill our most sanguine hopes and expectations. The duty now before us is to work out and make practical this great law. If we expect to advance such fraternity and gain a Zion condition, enhancing our salvation with us, it must be more than a theory. It must ever be a posture of practical helpfulness and sincere sympathy wherein we see nothing clashing with the highest interests of the entire body.

Our ideals will never be made possible unless we entertain the greatest tolerance and charity. Yes, more than that! We should have a sincere love towards those of our associates. Love is the divine establishment of the Christ life, and peace another one of its humble characteristics. These are the arguments that will make for peace, stability, and tranquility, and such forces will ever carry us onward with ever constant certainty. We will therefore ever seek a reciprocity that is constantly on the alert for opportunities for doing good. We will feel that every association we have with those with whom we mingle, is within itself an opportunity for well-doing. Preëminently above all else is that service we can render others. Service to God is thus demonstrated. We should learn well the lesson how to care for and protect against poverty, as well as sin, if we expect to continue in harmony with the genius of this latter day message. The kind of charity that is the most lasting and beneficial to the men reduced and in temporal straits, is that which coerces them into action by placing the burden of their support upon themselves, by providing them with a reasonable opportunity. It is a fact, human nature is so constituted that the grandest attainment and development is made when man is given a responsibility and must act upon his own resources, and not through a pampered charity unwisely bestowed. We will be promoted towards the ideal through dint of struggle, and not by a succor that calls for no response in return.

Inheritance in Zion should not be sold to the highest bidder; but upon the merits of a well-regulated life in accord with gospel law will be predicated our worthiness to abide. It is not a question of dollars and cents, but consecration to principle that will redeem us in the Lord. It is, however, intolerable to our conception of right religion that many are compelled to wear rags, and dwell in poverty and be miserable, while there is abundance in the Father's house. Surely we can not be in sympathy with the potency of our message when we think one can go hungry and be destitute, while another has plenty and is living in ease. Without replenishing, the Lord's storehouse would be depleted and would thus fail to accomplish the desired end. The existence of such will be a glorious provision, its existence, however, should not be to stimulate a coddling dependency but to emphasize and assist in making self-reliant the constituency of the church. We do not wish to encourage an enervating dependency, but a wholesome brotherhood, self-reliant with the pulse of life and activity. That man is imposing a dangerous innovation who seeks to take away another's privileges, or make others contribute to his wants and necessities and give nothing in return. When there is had no purpose any more than the beetle which wings its droning flight, there should be that encouragement that will prompt to endeavor. God pity that man who insists that all others should act their part of brotherhood and himself do nothing. It is one thing to preach brotherhood and another to carry it out. With us, our career should be one continuous expression of high regard, of love, of service, and of mutual respect and good will to one another.

Ours is a process of building up, not a tearing down. Better do nothing than to do that which is in flagrant disregard of the law. If we can only give forth doubt, denial, and ridicule, it will impart no sustaining power, or material for growth. Every step in advance that points men out from existing errors must be by observing the ever living truth which is enthused by the vitality, life, and divine power of its eternal Author. Religion that makes no demand on one's volition, can not be taken seriously as being the gospel to save. Christ's cause demands active work. It is not a repose, in merely the possession of an abstract intellectual conviction. If the disciple is required to surrender his will to God's will, and step forth to a life of service, there is bright prospect for growth to more perfect conditions. It will, therefore, take earnestness of zeal, or in other words, the fire of sacrificial devotion to "boil the pot."

The real and only position of a saintly brotherhood, is the impersonal standpoint. We labor under a heavy delusion if we think we can gain for ourselves in the long run, when we cheat and dishonestly gain from another. When such an idea is entertained, that man takes a ludicrous and unenviable view of matters, and is undoubtedly leaving out of the reckoning factors of merit which our cause seeks to make lasting in the lives of men. Christianity, when rightly interpreted, condemns such measures, for the real interests of all are not dissimilar, and no man can make a real gain for himself when there is involved a loss in human suffering to our brethren. To be pious will not atone for such unworthy action. You gain and I lose over some deal between us. The fact that because of your shrewd penetration and manipulation you gain an advantage, does not make such to be right and give you a just privilege to bring ruin to me while you fatten on the spoils. I would have no fears of gaining a better verdict than you at the bar of God.

To make complete surrender of self, by adjusting life and its true purposes, it is required of us to learn Christianity's truth, and we can intelligently apply these facts and carry them into higher realms of possibility. There is always surety for that person who knows his duty and does it. The only insecure and indefinite field of activity and pursuit is such a one where the individual has no certainty, nothing stable or tangible upon which to build. So many times in our endeavors to satisfy the longings of the soul for wisdom and the things of most practical benefit to life, we become satisfied too soon with that which is so easily accessible, yet untrue in the field of literature. Many times we accept for granted that which comes to our hands as though there was no question of its reliability and validity as truth. All that sails under the banner of truth, is not true to this banner. We thus sometimes evolve false standards and ideals because we have fed our minds upon the literature wholly incapable of producing it. A condition of brotherhood never can be merged until we become freed from the ruck of worldly things and we have right conceptions, together with a right appreciation of the only law on earth that will bring it. The Holy Spirit in its grand office work is invaluable for it ever guides us to the right standard.

Passive assent to what we know to be of God, will not bring celestial reward, any more than to say that seed corn will grow and then expect a bounteous fruition. We must sow ere we reap. So in our prospect for brotherhood and Zion's weal, there must be intense activity, which will enlist the full energy of all. When we set the pace of such coöperation there will be a mighty impulse that will command the admiration of all the world. Again we express the thought, a brotherhood here and a redemption and glory in the future is wholly contingent upon a proper hypothesis in learning, reasoning, and practical work, which can not be obtained unless we grasp and hold on to the facts as God has given them and make a success of life, as does the man who not only holds a correct conclusion of what duty requires, but carries out by constant living in humble demonstration, making a living reality of the gospel.

We see so much of the false and unreal, the sham in life these days, that we sicken at its magnitude. Such presses backward against the great endeavors at progress. Our onward march under such adversity can only be slow, and if we are not careful we will lose our hold upon Christian life altogether. In such matters, we should not go with the crowd. Our endeavor in life in view of this danger should be to create an environment of our own, free from such contamination, and instead of the world and its folly being an example for us to be profited by, our duty is to make an environment of our own, and that so attractive in righteousness and purity that it will be a pattern for them. However, if we scavenge in the same filthy gutter with the sinful world, what is to hinder us from having the same putrescent smell?

Theory is all right, if true, but practice in harmony with true theory is better. The old saying is a good one, "God helps them that help themselves"; not to help ourselves to that which is not our own, however. Such a course should bear its own condemnation on its face. A true brotherhood, we should say, carries with it the fact of regeneration. If we will regenerate society, it must be a direct personal effort in regenerating the individuals composing it. This should be done by appealing to their soul and honor and not their material interests. Our profession is, therefore, practically worthless, if there is not that sensible persistence in bending our energies in taking advantage of so excellent an opportunity. A wretched hypocrisy, that soothes itself with a sham lullaby in profession, will never do. True religion does not mean the blowing of a horn. It is not a varnish that is to be applied in covering up rottenness of character. It is not a refuge in which we are to be protected while we act a contradiction before the world. There must be actions of right living that touch the high sounding tension of a strenuous life. There must be that incentive that ever spurs us on to higher and nobler achievements. True religion is an inspiration within itself, as well as the Spirit of God, that encourages the greatest and deepest enthusiasm. If it does not rise above all else, it does not hold its proper position in the hearts of men. Such a grand object and attainment are only that which the true religion would undertake to accomplish and expect success. There will ever be disappointment to us if we dissipate our endeavors by bringing to bear that which is foreign to one perfect ideal. Our ideal must be viewed properly from all sides. As we advance, we will see the intrinsic value of a perfect ideal attained only by a perfect law. In endeavoring for this ideal it is self-evident that he who has acquired a degree of the divine and abundant life must give manifestations of all the functions of life that will indicate it. A proxy can never take your place in believing and acting your part any more than another could take nourishment for you. The circulation of your blood, does not build up my system, neither does your breathing supply oxygen for me. So each one has his individual duties to perform. You will never attain your inheritance by leaving undone what the law requires. If we assign the Lord's own property to ourselves, can we rightfully claim Zion's protection? It is not so much a test of faith in giving what we do not miss, and make no sacrifice in giving, as it is when we place our all upon the altar and say, If I am the Lord's, that carries with it my possessions. There is a more advanced lesson to be learned in self-sacrifice and fuller consecration to the cause than we have heretofore learned. The design has been made in our behalf, so let us hold fast our profession.

Should the farmer spend the season in useless dreams of a bounteous harvest without using the tools in plowing, sowing, cultivating, and reaping it would be folly; so with us if we do not move out and use the means at hand to accomplish our task. The gospel alone can accomplish the magnificent ideal. No side issue, in the form of a political party, cult, or fraternity falsely labelled a true brotherhood, can reach such a condition. There is not within the province of their jurisdiction the accomplishment of an ideal that the gospel alone can reach. Undisciplined and ungoverned work must necessarily be considered detrimental as speculative. We are indeed free to think, it is true, but when there is sought to make that which is speculative a part in expression, in aiding God's scheme to materialization, we only hinder instead of help. We have no right to bind on other people that which is experimental outside God's indorsement. Our gospel must ever be the test in fundamentals, as a distinct expedient for all time, and by it our influence and destiny will ever be shaped. We are free men in a gospel sense, it is true, but such freedom is not a license for indulgence in projects wholly speculative outside God's redemptive policy. We see infringements on the divine law perpetrated so often it is getting a very common thing. No matter how near such counterfeit is to the genuine law, it will never be the genuine, neither will it accomplish the desired result; for such is not capable of reaching a condition of absolute unselfishness, because the law they have honored does not cause and require the expurgation of those selfish and evil motives of the heart. The gospel is not at fault because of so many fraudulent imitations upon it. The existence of the counterfeit testifies to the value of the genuine. In fact there would be no counterfeit if there was not the genuine in existence. Calling worldliness and human institutions the gospel does not make it so, any more than to state that black is white. We must not be flattered into an assumption that we are about as good as can be, when we lack the qualities of soul that are necessary. To the principle that right makes might we must render unswerving fidelity. It is unworthy reasoning to say the gospel must pass through a political phase, or a false religious strainer before it is capable of attaining an ideal brotherhood. The ancient gospel is not the latter day gospel, plus some other ingredient. It is not true religion qualified by politics. It is not the sweet, tame olive tree with a wild wood graft. It is truth unsullied by any adulteration. It is evident the gospel offers the only possible means to attain a brotherhood as Christ through the revelations advocates. The political parties as well as the religions of the world will see their natal day in progress towards mutual toleration and brotherhood in fact, when they espouse this, the Lord's own cause.

With us there should be that freedom from sins and contamination that should the Lord come and claim us at any time, there would be no danger of introducing pollution to heaven's atmosphere. Surely our policy is the greatest amount of good to the greatest number. When we allow this grand object to be diminished for any consideration whatever we are acting with stupidity. Our religion will bring the proper relationship of brotherhood, temporally, socially, and religiously, as well as divine relationship in communion with the Holy Spirit. We can not well look for the true Christian brotherhood to obtain without the Spirit of God and fraternal contact with our fellows in harmony with gospel law. As well expect tropical fruit to grow in the frozen North. That we have not seen its full fruition of brotherhood is a poor argument that such will never be. There are some things of this world that have seen a slower materialization.

Nothing could be more erroneous than to confess that it is beyond our interest to have a word of advice on questions of moment on current wrongs and moral reforms. It will ever be shortsighted and calamitous for us to leave to outsiders and unbelievers, and in too many instances those of prejudiced minds, the discussion and enactment of regulations for our government in Zion. The church must lift up a standard for the people in good deportment by being "living epistles" with a sense acute for civic probity and demonstrated righteousness. Zion should not be lacking in any sense of essential virtues and good government as compared to any city of the world. It is our duty to use our utmost to cleanse and make better conditions where we reside.

In our judgment there is danger of the spirit of commercialism and speculation which seems to be devoid of moral or spiritual essence to assume the role which should be held by holier ideals. We should never admit a commercialism which elevates money getting above principles. Such should be considered an evil instead of a virtue. The world is infiltrated with the commercial craze, and in too many instances the standard by which a man's value is determined is rated according to the scale of wage he commands and not by the real character he possesses. Such with us should never be. It would only fire the brain of our young with a false ideal of life by having unworthy and unholy ambitions. The policy will cause us to transcend the scale and bring a confusion of moral values. Neither should we have a different standard of morality and righteousness for business and politics to that we employ in the home and in the church. If we are engaged in business we should value God's only standard of right as highly there as we do in our relations to the church. If we do not, such would only be after the power of a carnal commandment and not after the power of an endless life. In such a case we would find the result to be a dead system, impotent of bringing an ideal brotherhood. Any action on our part in which there is carried out a policy that is not of the strictest honesty and frugality only determines us to be immaculate of divine life and to be masquerading with the fickle instead of acting the part of a true saint.

Welcome is the trend and desire of God's people to-day in endeavoring to put in force the fondest of all hopes in infusing brotherhood into the temporal industries and marts of business, as well as the social life. We are realizing to some extent, as shown by recent revelation and procedure in organizing the United Order of Enoch, that our law has more than a statutory significance. We are very hopeful of the present prospect, yet we hope to see a fuller expression of coöperation. As we deal with these complexities we will know that failure will be prospective unless we willingly surrender that portion that is the Lord's. By the sequence of our committals in rendering an interpretation to the revelations we are bound to the proposition of advancing in gospel work until we have reached the inevitable conclusion, if there be any conclusion to such a grand endeavor. Each one should now speak and act as our message—the Lord's message—requires. It will not do to now shirk so great a responsibility.

The late revelation, and the endeavor in harmony with it to carry it out, can only be interpreted as a healthy sign. Such law is vulnerable only when we fail to make actual its far reaching meaning. We readily see it does not mean a divorcement of religion and life. Its truth is still harmonious. There will be discord only when we fail to apply it or mix it with falsehood. With heroic determination we should take up this stupendous responsibility and carry it on, and on, and on. If we do not it will be our greatest loss. We should shoulder whatever burden is ours. Should we not heed the pleading of those appointed of God to especially direct the temporal work of the church? Their words have gone forth "out of Zion" so repeatedly there should be more heed given. Such must be or else we will be a hindrance to them. Here we should work in harmony and show a blending of interests, then the eternal truth, inherent principles of life, and titanic strength of this latter day gospel will be known far and wide for its excellency and superiority. If we fail, our God who has given us this responsibility will only mete out to us a deserving condemnation for having slept on our passing opportunity. If we sense its magnitude, and make good our cherished wishes and past hopes, our loving Father will give us a just recompense of reward, commensurate to such a worthy endeavor in having done his holy will. This, dear Saints, is our true inheritance. Our fealty only, is due to Christ and loyalty to his perfect law in pursuit of this great and glorious ideal. As we disengage ourselves from all earthly human trammels, our growth will be certain, and the power and greatness of this latter day glory will dawn as never before on the minds of men. Our broad platform and earnest, divine plea is bound to be respected and honored. We can well afford to hold our arms open to receive all in loving fellowship and brotherhood who obey God's commandments by seeing and acting in unison with the genius of this restored gospel in its divine potentiality. It is then our sacred right and privilege to move out and vanguard the Lord's progressing hosts and herald boldly the truth, and sanctify within us the sacred obligations of that truth, showing a filial, godly relationship of endeared brotherhood, then the blessing of the Lord God Almighty in final victory and salvation in ours. This is our bounden duty; this must be our holy aspiration.

CONSUMPTIVES WARNED.

NO MEDICINE A SURE CURE.

DES MOINES, July 15.—So many people suffering with tuberculosis and hopeful of cure are apt to be deceived by advertisements of remedies guaranteed to cure their malady. It is a fact that patients afflicted with tuberculosis are always hopeful of recovery, and consequently very easily deceived. It is also a fact that many of the remedies advertised to cure "coughs," "colds," and "consumption," not only are valueless but are positively harmful.

It has been ascertained that many of the so-called "cures" for consumption contain habit-forming drugs, such as morphine, opium, and chloroform. None of them will cure consumption. There is no sure cure medicine for consumption known to the medical fraternity to-day, and a warning to all persons suffering with tuberculosis is uttered here.

There is another class of "cures" which includes "institutes," "professors," or companies of "doctors," who for a consideration guarantee to cure the consumptive by some secret method of which they are sole proprietors. It is stated that there are nearly one hundred and fifty of these in the United States.

There is also another class of "cures" in which are placed home remedies which, either through ignorance or superstition, have been advanced as treatments for this disease. Some of these are lemons, rattlesnake poison, coal dust, lime dust, pig's blood, dog oil, milk strippings, and alcohol. There is no drug or other material yet discovered which, when eaten, inhaled or injected into the body, will kill the germs of tuberculosis.

If you have consumption you should observe the following rules: Consult a good physician at once, and request a thorough diagnosis, then do absolutely what he tells you. Live and sleep in the open air. Get as much rest as possible. Stay in the sunshine. Be cheerful. Eat an abundance of good, wholesome food. Don't worry. Be sure to inform yourself so that others will be protected against your infection. Fight hard and you will win.—Furnished by Board of Control of Iowa State Institution.

Deceptive Delight.

"The children like it!" "The children were delighted!" These phrases are the teacher's refuge. But the refuge is a death trap.

The little child's expression of delight is too often a siren to the parents or teacher. It is as deceptive as it is alluring. The teaching process is daily suffering wreck by it.

Ought not the child to enjoy his study, or the story that is read to him? Is there any harm in our taking note of his pleasure, and of being in some measure guided by it?

Rather let us say that he ought to enjoy it. If he does not, something is wrong, and, until otherwise proved, the teacher must take it for granted that the fault is with himself.

On the other hand, if the child does evidence pleasure, the teacher must not take it for granted that there is therefore no fault in him as a teacher. In a large majority of cases the pleasure arises, not from what the teacher intends, or even supposes. It has a wholly different basis from the teacher's own conception.

In reply to an animadversion . . . on the unwisdom of attempting to teach the children of the primary Sunday school the doctrinal and ethical abstractions of Paul's Epistles, active primary workers declared that the members of their Primary Union had found those lessons the most delightful series that they had ever had in their schools!

Delightful to whom, and delight in what? I ask. Here lies the pith of the whole matter. Says Rousseau: "There is a considerable difference between being pleased with any occupation and being capable of it. It requires much nicer observation than is generally imagined to ascertain the taste and genius of children; their casual inclinations display themselves oftener than their innate dispositions, and we judge from the first for want of knowing how to study the last."

I have read manuscripts by the hundred and thousand containing stories written for children. Once in a while an author tells me that he has tested his story or bit of rhyme upon real live children with great success. It has interested and pleased the children. Such authors never tell whether they have taken pains to find out in just what the children's pleasure consisted. They probably would not know how to go about it. It is pretty certain that if they could have seen the real source of pleasure in the child's mind, they would have been astonished at its remoteness from any concept, process, or idea in their own minds.

A mother once told me how her boy, at the age of four years, had enjoyed the stories of ancient Israel, its wars and many details of its history, straight from the Bible, as she read to him without either adaptation or explanation. I do not doubt her testimony that he seemed interested in it, and enjoyed it. But I claim the right to ask the question what "it" stands for. Was it the activity of war? War has little, if any, meaning to a boy of four. Was it a matter of results, or causes and effects? Was it a question of nations? No boy of four can form the concept of a nation, a municipality, a commonwealth, a people. Was it a suggestion of the remote in time, the far off in space, of geography, topography? These are not infant concepts. Was it the development of the Lord's eternal plan that interested him? The inner connection of historical linkings is hardly a source of delight to a child of four. Where did the enjoyment come in?

I knew a child who, at that age, astonished his parents once by reciting a book of nonsense-rhymes through from beginning to end. He really did enjoy it. But enjoyed what? He found delight in some words strung together like these: "Hymenoptera, ripiptera, diptera, lepidoptera, coleoptera," etc. Delightful! Now if the first boy seemed to be gaining religious concepts, or concepts of Bible history and Israelitish polity, because he was delighted, the second was just as truly becoming a naturalist because he was enjoying the technology of natural history; and I doubt the first inference largely because I know that the second will not hold. . . .

Great, good, wise Jacob Abbott understood this liability of the gratification or delight of the child to delude the teacher. He speaks of the child's susceptibility to pleasant images awakened in the mind by means of the magical power of certain sounds striking upon the ear. He says:

"There are thousands who have observed the indication of this pleasure who do not understand the nature and the source of it. Every mother, for example, observes that the children love to be talked to, long before they can talk themselves; and they imagine that what pleases the listener is his interest in the particular thing said,—whereas it is probably only his interest in finding himself possessed of the new and strange power of understanding sounds. The mother says, 'Where's father?' 'Where's father?' and imagines that the child is pleased with the inquiry, whereas it is only pleased that the sound, 'father,' striking upon its ear, can produce so strange an effect as to call up to its conception a faint mental image of the man. It is this magic power of a word to produce a new and peculiar mental state which is probably the source of pleasure. Hence the interest which the auditor will take will not be in proportion to the connection, or the point, of a story, but to the frequency of the words contained in it which call up familiar and vivid ideas. Thus a talk like this, 'Fire, fire, pussy runs; tongs, tongs fall down; walk, run; Mary walk, Mary run,'—will be listened to by the child, who is just learning to listen to language, with as much pleasure as the most connected or pointed little story. It is not, therefore, what is understood, but the mere power of understanding, the first development of a new mental faculty, which pleases the possessor."

But, worse than this, the child's pleasure may be in an erroneous and even mischievous conception, suggested by his misunderstanding. Or it may be one of mere sound, without any formed idea at all.

Let us conclude, then, that nothing is more seductive, misleading, perilous, to the teacher than the child's enjoyment or delight in his task. Not that he should not delight in it, but that the delight may mislead us as to its significance. "It is possible," says Pres. G. Stanley Hall, "that the present can be so attractive and preoccupying that the child never once sends his thoughts to the remote in time and place." The "present" may be anything but the concept which is in the mind of the teacher while observing the child.

Yet more. I have known teachers to be so subjective that their own pleasure in the study before the class was their mainspring of action, however unconscious of this they may have been. Being themselves pleased with the line of investigation or study, or with a story, they imagine the little ones pleased also. Perhaps this is the most short-sighted condition of all.

The real question for parent, teacher, or child observer of any kind, is, When, in any particular case, the child gives evidence of interest or delight, what is the real source and significance of that delight?

Answer this question specifically every time, basing your answer upon a close investigation of the conditions, and you will have made a long stride in the direction of being a child's fit teacher and trainer.—Patterson Du Bois in Primary Education.

Letter Department

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, July 2, 1910.

Dear Brother: I received the two tracts which you sent me. One entitled, "Duplicity exposed," by Heman C. Smith, and the other "All Brighamite roads lead to polygamy," by yourself. I wish to thank you for them. This spring I received quite a number of tracts sent out by the Northern States Mission with headquarters at Chicago. I also received calls from several of their traveling missionaries.

One man in particular was very positive in several of his statements regarding our church. In the course of his remarks, he inquired, "Why do you people call yourselves Reorganized and what do you mean by saying Reorganized Church?" My answer was, "Because we are reorganized. Are you not aware that when a society or lodge, take the Good Templars for instance, have lapsed in holding meetings for months or perhaps years, and several of the members wishing to prosecute the work of the order meet together and choose a chairman and proceed to elect a president and all other officers necessary to fill the official chairs; after these officers are duly installed, they proceed to business for the good of the order. The secretary is instructed to send out cards of notification and invitation to all the old members to meet with them at the next meeting as they have again organized under the old charter." I informed him that was exactly what we had done. We believed that from the martyrdom of the prophet, the church was in a disorganized condition and it was necessary for us to again organize according to the old statutes; that in our case to reorganize was correct, but would not have been in any of the "Lo heres and lo theres" who were calling to the scattered Saints to come to them, where they were introducing many new and strange doctrines and baptizing them into their fold. He said, "Don't you know that two of the men who assisted in the ordination of young Joseph had no authority whatever, not being in the church in old Joseph's day? Do you know that many of your people deny that young Joseph was baptized at the time of his ordination?"

"Certainly they do, because he was not."

He said, "Sister, I can prove to you by the history of that meeting that he was." "No, sir, you can not. I have read the HERALD and conference minutes since the beginning of their publication and have heard Brother Joseph make the statement in the early days of the church, that he had never been baptized only by the hand of his father in his boyhood."

"Well, sister, I can bring you the history of his baptism at the time of taking the presidency of the Reorganized Church, which you will surely admit when I produce the record."

"There can be no authentic record of an incident which never occurred; nevertheless, if you can bring any such a statement, you are at liberty to do so."

"Well, sister, I will look it up and will surely bring it to you soon." This conversation occurred about three months ago and he has not brought it yet.

I was not a member of the early church, but my husband was, and he also went to Utah and to California, and before he reached the twenty-fifth birthday, he had passed through four reformatations, with a baptism each time and the introduction of new doctrines, thus obliterating from the minds of the people every feature of the original teaching. The statement was made by their Utah president and other leading officials, that the book was no more to be considered than the ashes of a rye straw, but that the people were to look to the living oracles for their instructions. Thinking that others might be interested in knowing the line of instructions these fellows distribute in their house to house canvass, I send this as a sample of their teaching.

Respectfully, your sister in the gospel,

MRS. E. C. DODSON.

Editors Herald: Feeling that a line from Marion Saints would be of interest to readers of the HERALD, I would say the work is moving along nicely here. About a year ago, the writer and family moved to this place. Bro. and Sr. S. D. Cudney were the only Saints remaining close by. The elders always have found a home with Brother and Sister Cudney. For a number of years the gospel has been preached here. Seemingly the people were not ready to receive it when Bro. and Sr. C. H. Cudney, now living at Lamoni, lived here. Together with his parents, S. D. Cudney held Sunday school for a while and the elders came in and preached once in a while and did their best to open up the work, with the assistance of the Saints and those who have come to our rescue of the ministry. Fourteen have been baptized, nine by W. D. Ellis, four by A. E. Burr, and one by Clyde Ellis.

About a year ago we organized a Sunday school and began to hold regular meetings. The progress was slow and we had many discouraging features. Now our number is twenty. We have a good Sunday school and prayer meetings. We have preaching every Sunday evening. More are near the door and the material we have is doing well. The outlook is good for an organization of a branch, as most all are tax payers here. We were told through prophecy that if we were faithful there would be many added to our number. The larger part of those baptized are heads of families. The young people are beginning to come in. We look forward to the Religio work in the near future. Revival meetings were recently held by M. E. Methodist, a Seventh Day Adventist. Some of their new converts have obeyed the gospel. Others have heard enough of the angel's message not to be satisfied with what they have at the revival meetings.

We pray they will be honest and come to the light. Surely the words of the apostle are true: "If this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to naught; but if it be of God, ye can not overthrow it." I feel very thankful when I read the HERALD and church papers. God blesses his Saints with talent to write and gives encouragement to others. Many times I have been reading the letters and articles written in the HERALD. May God bless the one who contributes to the columns of church papers, thus helping to keep courage in others. I am unable to express in writing the joy and the comfort found in the gospel. My heart goes out to God in humble prayer, for very Saint whose influence brought me to the gospel and has helped to keep me in it.

Very sincerely,

A. M. BOOMER.

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, July 12, 1910.

Dear Herald: Not having seen anything from this metropolis of the great Canadian west, I thought I would drop a few lines. The work is progressing slowly here but surely. We have no church building as yet, although negotiations are pending for a building, which we hope to convert into one. At present we rent a hall.

Our branch is ably presided over by Elder T. R. Seaton, who is also president of Religio. A pleasing event took place at the home of the writer on July 2, when Lora S. Fleming and John Kolman were united in marriage, Elder T. R. Seaton officiating. May peace and happiness be their portion.

Your brother,

W. I. ARNOLD.

736 SINCLAIR STREET.

SPRINGFIELD, OREGON, July 9, 1910.

Dear Herald: I surely enjoy reading your valuable columns, and can say that the pieces recently published on Reorganization and on the tracts recently sent out by the Utah church, are grand, and came to us just when we needed them most. Recently I had about a four-hour talk with a young Utah elder, which to me was very interesting. I took the recent HERALDS and found plenty to expose their doctrine. I believe this elder is sincere, but is terribly misled. He found some things, I think, he had never seen before, while we were talking.

We are a little band of Saints here without a shepherd, as we have no officer here, excepting my husband who is deacon. We have a splendid little Sunday school of about thirty-five scholars. We have excellent prayer meeting, and the Lord spoke to us recently in words of consolation, admonition, and commendation. May we all prove faithful, is my prayer in Jesus' name.

MRS. CHARLES E. WILLIAMS.

PLEASANT HILL, MISSOURI.

Editors Herald: I am anxious to have the Saints locate in this locality so we can have a branch. If any Saints are thinking of locating in the Independence Stake, I would like to have them come and see this part of the country, as I think it a good location. The soil is good and price of land is more reasonable than any place I know of. I am twenty-four miles east of Independence on the Missouri Pacific and Rock Island roads. Our town has a population of twenty-five hundred. If any will write me I will give them any information I can. There are fourteen members here at the present time and with a few more we could have a branch.

Your brother in the faith,

J. M. LANE.

MARION, IOWA.

To the Saints: Bro. J. S. Watson, a butter maker of twenty-five years experience, wishes to get a creamery to run where he and his family (wife and three children) can have church privileges. They are new members and are anxious for the association of Saints. I am well acquainted with them and know them to be fine people. He can give the best of references. He is in charge of the creamery here in Monmouth, Iowa, but because of his interest in this latter day work may have to leave here. I gladly recommend them and hope his services may be secured in a locality where there are Saints. His address at present is, J. S. Watson, Monmouth, Iowa.

ELDER L. E. HILLS.

WEYBURN, SASKATCHEWAN, July 6, 1910.

Dear Herald: The gospel work in Northwestern Canada, though not advancing with leaps and bounds, is still moving along toward the ultimate triumph that we all hope for and pray about.

Recently the Winnipeg District held its semiannual conference and auxiliary conventions with the Rosendale Branch, near Treherne, Manitoba. Owing to a change in the time and circumstances which prevented a good advertisement, the attendance was not large, but those who did attend got busy and made the sessions both enjoyable and most certainly of profit. Credit is due to the resident Saints for hospitality and generosity. Besides the local ministerial force, Bishop R. C. Evans was then the preacher and representative of the financial wing of the gospel message; also J. L. Mortimer, the father of the missionary work in the Northwest, H. J. Davison, in the interest of Sunday school and Religio work. Later came E. E. Long and Smith, the efficient missionaries appointed to the Province of Manitoba. They began making themselves acquainted with new conditions by entering into conference work and left a fair impression among their collaborators—the Saints in general. There is room for improvement, however, all along the line of conference and convention work, but the Saints are alive to that fact and are living up for future perfection.

Later the Saskatchewan District held their conference and conventions at Regina. A goodly number of delegates from different localities were present and the gathering as a whole was a success. Being in a city with only one Saint as a resident there, it is somewhat expensive; still there remains a balance in the hands of the local Bishop's agent, J. A. Beckman.

A good impression was made in the city and the outlook for future advancement in the district is quite encouraging. There is a lot to do though. The numbers are increasing, the body is growing larger, too large now for small buildings, for conference and conventions to be held in. Branches should not be content to keep themselves crowded into small unaccommodating schoolhouses, which can not be controlled by them. We hope to see at least two or three new church buildings on the road to completion this coming year.

Bishop Evans, of Toronto, and F. A. Smith, of Lamoni, were present and some good strong sermons were preached, and while they are respectful to those of other faiths, there is none of the ministerial alliance sentiments about these men. They realize they have the restored gospel to dispense and don't wish to be tied up and handicapped with an affiliation with that which is numerically and popularly strong but not in all points, genuine. Others of the ministry were present to aid in labors and council. The auxiliaries were not emphasized in their work as they should be, but it was their own fault in not arranging preliminary far enough ahead. This we expect to observe at our next gathering. We will understand conditions better and will profit by experience. The officers are beginning to realize that it means something to be an officer in this growing country.

There was a good feeling prevailing, however, and the Saints returned to their homes strengthened and encouraged and are already making plans to attend the next one to be held with the Minnesota Branch near Vanscoy, Saskatchewan, about Christmas time.

COMMITTEEMAN.

CAMERON, ONTARIO, July 12, 1910.

Dear Herald; Messenger of Good News and Solace to the Weary Ones: I break the silence and write you a few lines from this place where many battles have been fought and victories and failures recorded.

On June 25 and 26, I was privileged to attend a two-day meeting here, presided over by our president, John Shields. On Saturday at 2 p. m. a session in the interest of Sunday school work was held. The laws concerning primary teaching were shown and our needs and benefits exemplified. At 8 p. m. the writer preached on the financial law, showing that we are laborers together with God.

Sunday, 9 a. m., we assembled together for prayer and sacrament meeting presided over by Elder Shields. We were made to rejoice for the sustaining power that keeps us in the straight and narrow way. At 11 a. m., Elder Shields addressed the assembly showing what it means to be custodians of the angel's message. The writer spoke at 2.30 and Elder James Pycock spoke at 7.30 to a full house, extolling the love of God and the redemption of mankind.

On the whole, we had a successful two-day meeting, and we hope the Saints may be strengthened for the duties that lie before them, ever recognizing that we are either tearing down or building up this work by our actions. We leave on Friday for Burnt River to open up the work and gladden the hearts of the few isolated Saints.

I am your colaborer,

J. T. THOMPSON.

VANSKOY, SASKATCHEWAN.

Herald Readers: There is now a branch here of over forty members, perhaps fifty, as four have been baptized lately. We are trying to keep the faith the best we can. The homesteaders are apt to be widely scattered, which hinders holding services as often as we would like; however, we keep Sunday school going all the time, every Sunday at half past ten with preaching or prayer service right after and Religio at night. When a missionary is here, which is seldom, we have meetings during the week, sometimes.

We were disappointed again this summer because Bro. R. C. Evans never visited our branch when he was so near, and we could not visit the Iowa Branch, forty miles away, at that time, as there was to be baptism at Pike Lake, and we had no time to go any way. Well, we will try to do the best we can, but we are hoping to see and hear Bro. F. A. Smith soon, as we suppose he is now with the Iowa Branch.

Brother Davison was here to help us last summer a few days and any of the missionaries will be welcome and will be cared for who can make it in this way, to visit our branch. We hoped to see our district president last winter, as he wrote it was his intention to be here, but I have never heard that he came this way at all.

I consider it a blessing from the hand of our heavenly Father, that we were permitted to visit my dear old mother and our daughter Alice and other relatives in Minnesota last winter. Well, good for you, Sr. Rhoda Hunter. Your letter to the HERALD was all right. May we all keep the faith and meet each other with joy in the millennium.

EMMA L. ANDERSON.

All truth always existed.
Truth is right whether it is believed or denied.
Millions of people believing wrong, do not make it right.
Right believed by only a few people, does not make it any the less right.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 13, 1910.

Since my partial recovery from my long and severe affliction, it seems somewhat as though I had just awakened from a long sleep. I make myself think of Rip Vanwinkle, who is said to have slept twenty years and awoke and looked around to find his gun and dog. However, I have not been looking for my gun and dog but for the church and Sabbath School. I recently picked up a Sabbath school quarterly and looked through it. The first one I had looked through for perhaps a year. I found the subjects of repentance, baptism, all things common and so on, so well arranged, and the explanation on these various subjects so true and easily understood that I thought, What a change since I took sick—a change for the better.

The Sunday school work is progressing. Truly the Sabbath school in the church has grown to such proportions that the scope of its work is beyond our comprehension. Only last Sabbath I. N. White was telling a dream in which he saw that the young people of the Sabbath school would redeem Zion in troublous times. The old men were laying the foundation for her redemption, but it was declared to him by the Savior himself that the young now in the Sabbath school would redeem Zion. Surely Sister Salyards and the revising committee are not neglecting the young in the church, as the food for their young minds is well prepared. May God bless and prosper the Sunday school work till its beneficial influence shall reach all the world, is my desire and prayer through Christ.

I am very weak yet. My recovery is slow. Will the Sunday school and church workers remember me at the Sanitarium that if it be the will of the Lord, I may yet be made strong to do the will of God.

C. J. SPURLOCK.

PARIS, TEXAS.

Dear Herald: We feebly step forth once more to bear our testimony to the angel's message, because we know it is true. Each stormy cloud seems to come closer and grow stronger and we know not how long we will be able to stand. I feel that the time is at hand when the midnight cry will soon be heard and the question is, Will we all be ready or will we not? Sometimes it seems like the last feeble prayer has been offered and our strength is spent, no more to rise, and then we see the bright cloud and hear the kind words of the bright May morn nine years ago: "Son, be faithful." And again, while behind the great still bars, we say, "Lord, remember us in thy mercy and put it into the hearts of men to deliver us from this place." We see Him plead our cause and soften the hearts of beasts to the tender heart of a child and when we hear the words, "Come forth," we leave the prisoners within weeping and we meet the sheriff and jailer trembling, and as we pass out they stretch forth their hands with tears and say, "We wish you well," who so short a time ago had said, "We will show no sympathy." And again we are shown the resurrection and again we are restricted and made to see and know a life beyond the grave and with power to ride the wings of the wind where there is no more sorrow and no more pain. Thank the Lord for his goodness, is my prayer. I hope the time will come when we will all meet in Zion and sing the good news. With these few scattering words, I will close, asking the earnest prayers of all the Saints that I may hold out faithful to the end.

Your faithful brother,

G. M. Cox.

Simmons-Setzer Debate.

The Simmons-Setzer debate at Adamson, Oklahoma, began June 15 and ended June 19. Adamson is a small coal camp situated on a branch of the M. K. & T. R. R. There are about four or five hundred inhabitants. Previous to this time, Brother Simmons held a week's meeting here and had a good attendance and of course this aroused the Baptist brethren. Elder Setser was absent at the time. They made the statement that when Brother Setser would come home, he would thrash him. At the close of the meetings Brother Setser came home, saw Elder Simmons and proposed to preach evening about with him, but Brother Simmons being wise caused him to sign propositions for debate.

The subject discussed was the plan of salvation. There being six two-hour sessions, each session was occupied by two half-hour speeches by each of the disputants. Elder Simmons was in the affirmative the first three evenings and Elder Setser on the affirmative the last three evenings. He declared that salvation is by grace through faith and not of works. Elder Simmons handled Elder Setser well. We must say for Elder Setser that the harder he was pressed the stronger effort he would make. He had the dirt and tried to throw, but Brother Simmons quieted him very nicely by saying, "Now, Brother Setser, be good, and if you can't be good be careful."

The main bone of contention was John 3:5. Brother Simmons with other scriptural quotations proved it to be water baptism, while Elder Setser contended it was not water baptism. Brother Simmons roused them up to a high pitch on John 3:5 and at the close of the discussion, Brother Setser's moderator, Elder Nelson, challenged him for an hour and a half discussion on John 3:5. Brother Simmons told him he would just as soon sprag his wheel as anyone else if the missionary of the Baptist church would indorse him for a debate, but they thought best not to, saying he could not do anything with Simmons, as "he is the best they have."

Brother Simmons ably handled the subject. Elder Setser acknowledged on the second evening of the debate, that he was not prepared to meet Brother Simmons. During the fifth session on Saturday morning, Brother Simmons produced evidence from the Philadelphia Confession of Faith, page 70, and also from Baptist History by Vedder, page 162, that the Baptists in the seventeenth century held to the laying on of hands after baptism. This fired Brother Setser and he ran for D. H. Bay's Doctrine and Dogmas of Mormonism, to produce sworn statements that Joseph Smith had five living wives. This being off the subject, he was called to order by the writer, who acted as Brother Simmons' moderator, stating that he had free access to our articles of faith, as polygamy is not the subject on discussion. Then Brother Setser continued to discuss the point at issue. It was a decided victory for the cause. We were cared for and treated well by the Saints scattered around the camp. In bonds,

W. W. PEACOCK.

Curtis-Roberts Debate.

The debate commenced at Higbee, Missouri, June 21, at 8 p. m. and lasted till the 29th. Eight sessions on plain church propositions were debated, Bro. J. F. Curtis affirming the first proposition and Mr. Roberts the second. While the Latter Day Saints' church was on trial, Brother Curtis affirmed it was in harmony with the scripture, in organization, doctrine, practice and teaching. Roberts denied. Mr. Roberts commenced on Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon. One of the best informed men in town came the first night. He got disgusted at Roberts and would not come any more. He told me that he thought he would hear a high class discussion, but there was a good crowd attended all the way through him.

In referring to the position of the Saints, Mr. Roberts called it "Mormon hash," "Slop-doodle-gush," and such things as that. He was always talking of taking Brother Curtis to the hurrah patch, and was going to spank him till he was blue, etc.

The chairman of the debate was a very intelligent and fair man. Because Roberts couldn't do as he pleased with him, he accused him of being a Mormon sympathizer, insulted the man, and he quit. But they selected another man who was good for the place.

All the churches in town opposed the debate all they could, but there was a good crowd attended all the way through. The gospel has been preached in Higbee for twenty or more years, yet there is lots of prejudice there to meet and such is always hard to meet in a debate.

When it came to Mr. Roberts' affirmation, he made one very nice speech on the foundation of the church. Brother Curtis so completely knocked out his position that he jumped on to Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon again and rode it all the way through the remainder of the debate. I presume we might sum up the result about as other debates end: our people felt like the work came out without even the smell of fire on its garments. Those who were not too prejudiced saw the inconsistencies resorted to to oppose us, while others liked the work of Mr. Roberts. Our work will not suffer any loss and it may be of lasting good to it when the people have time to think and consider. Some noble hearted Saints are in this part, but laboring against great disadvantages. May the Lord give us success.

Portland Conference Notes.

The Portland District convened at Hood River, Oregon, June 25 and 26. Being favored with fine weather, a large attendance was noticeable at our gathering. Every one enjoyed himself, seemingly, and a good-time had. We were only sorry to note the absence of our missionary in charge, though others of the traveling ministry cheered and comforted by their presence and able assistance. The business and social sessions were well attended. A marked interest was manifested throughout, facilitating dispatch and decorum, a manifest token of the Spirit's presence. The district officers were all sustained, also significant of fulfilling their functions by duties well performed.

The Sunday morning prayer and testimony meeting was a spiritual feast to all present, the Spirit speaking through two of our brethren to our comfort, consolation, and edification. Both old and young being admonished to faithfulness and patient continuance in trials, with a promise of its ever-present sustaining influence, and of a sure reward. It was good to be there and hear the prayers offered, the praises sung, and the testimonies borne to the faithfulness and sureness of God's promises, to the truthfulness of his word, and to the assured knowledge that this is his work we are engaged in, and to the undoubted goodness and continued mercies of him who is both able and mighty to perform his truth and bring all his works to a successful consumation and our lives with it to a joyous and perfect issue if we but endure faithful and obedient unto the end. Let us go on, therefore, brethren, with a renewed determination to fulfill his blessed will with the reinforced might of his help and of all our soul besides and we shall neither fail nor falter, nor doubt of winning the eternal prize of life everlasting. Thou God of abundant mercy, and grace and love, do thou help us so to do. Let this be our united and most earnest prayer.

Last, but not least, a good word is due to our Hood River brethren for their liberal way in providing the good things of this, the lesser life, and their royal way of entertaining. It was truly a time of feasting in every sense of that term from beginning to end, in partaking of the generous spread of viands provided to feed and sustain the physical man, to the good things enjoyed that feed and sustain the spirit in us. All this we enjoyed and were partakers of with you while in our midst and we desire once more, after first rendering our due and heartfelt thanks and acknowledgements to our heavenly Father for these and all other bounties bestowed for our good, in the next place to tender our thanks to you, one and all, for your unprecedented hospitality, thoughtfulness, and care for us while among you. Our esteem has risen in your favor several notches, because of those savory chickens and toothsome noodles. But, let the good work go on; may we all be once more gathered around the festive board of our heavenly Father's providing.

Geo. Pearson, Assistant Secretary.

News From Branches.

CENTRAL CHURCH, KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

Since our last report we have had cause to rejoice because of additions to our numbers by baptism. On Sunday evening, June 12, Theo. L. Thyous (colored) was baptized; on the 19th Mrs. Jennie N. Hahn and Mrs. Laura M. Hogue; the 26th, Misses Fern and Madge Sollars, Bertha Strickland, and Miller, Dick, and Audrey McVey, all by the pastor, W. E. LaRue. This makes about twenty-five that have come into the church since the first of the year, a number of whom were led to investigate through the Evans' meetings. Others are contemplating taking the step and will no doubt come in in the near future. While there is considerable room for improvement, we feel very much encouraged over the outlook.

Sunday, June 12, was observed all day as Children's Day, the intermediates and primaries rendering the program. Two children were blessed, Bro. and Sr. F. P. Hitchcock's baby boy, the name of Gerald given; also the baby boy of Bro. and Sr. Frank Whitmeyer, the name of Wilber Lorraine given.

Bro. and Sr. L. C. Hughes, formerly of our branch, but now of Independence, are rejoicing over the arrival of their first boy, born June 9.

The infant son of Bro. and Sr. A. L. Lightfoot, which was born on the 5th of June, died on the 12th of the same month, and was buried in the Independence cemetery.

Our pastor has solemnized quite a number of marriages of late, thus with weddings, baptisms, and numerous other duties, you will see that he is a very busy man. Each Wednesday and Friday of the week from 1.30 to 5 p. m. he will be at the church to converse with any that may wish to call on him; also sell or distribute any literature needed.

We are making another strenuous effort to round our lost and strayed members. Any member of the First Kansas City Branch, either in or out of the city, who is not an attendant at Central Church, will confer a great favor by communicating with the pastor, Elder W. E. LaRue, 811 Lydia avenue, Kansas City, Missouri. We wish to know where you are and what you are doing. If you are "dead" we would be pleased to have an opportunity to liven you up, and if "alive," it would give us much pleasure to know it. Those living out of the city and near branches should secure letters.

The church directory is under way and the committee contemplates having it out by the 1st of August. All members of the church living in Greater Kansas City should forward their names and addresses at once to S. S. Sandy, chairman of the committee, 2321 Colorado, Kansas City, Missouri, in order that their names may appear in this directory.

New people are constantly coming amongst us and it will be but a short time when we will have as many or more members than we had before the organization of the Centropolis Branch. Bro. and Sr. C. H. Johnson, of Minnesota, and Bro. and Sr. H. C. Ellsworth, of Michigan, have recently come with us. We extend a welcome to these brothers and sisters and any others that may come, and want them to feel at home in our midst.

Sister Clasby, with the twins, has returned to her former home in Henderson, Iowa, for a few months' visit. Her mother, Sr. Pritchard, who has been visiting her for some time, accompanied her. The twins were blessed at the morning service, the 19th ultimo.

Sr. J. H. McVey is visiting with friends and relatives in Minnesota.

Sunday, June 26, was observed as memorial day, being the sixty-sixth anniversary of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, Pres. F. M. Smith being the speaker in the morning, and the pastor in the evening, his subject being the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

Sunday morning, July 3, our hearts were made glad in listening to a sermon by our worthy Pres. Joseph Smith. We were gratified to see him looking so well, and trust he may be spared to give us many more such words of cheer and advice.

Our Sunday school and Religio are doing fine work, which can only be appreciated by paying us a visit. These organizations at Central are the talk of the stake.

Our Sunday school superintendent, Bro. A. G. Larkey, a few weeks ago took a short vacation, and hied himself away to the mountains of Colorado to rest a short while. This is not all. He took Sr. Vida Reyner, of Independence, along with him and Saturday, June 25, they were married in Denver. We were not at all surprised at this either, as Arthur has had that far away, lonesome look in his eyes for a long time. Both are well and favorably known here and at Independence. They have taken up their home in Kansas City, and we join their many friends in wishing them a long and prosperous life.

The Saints of the Centropolis Branch which was recently organized, are meeting from house to house until they can build a church. They have a nice lot partly paid for. Within a few weeks they expect the stake tent to be moved to their vicinity and a series of meetings will be held. An ice cream social will be given at the first of these meetings to raise money towards putting up their much needed church.

HARVEY SANDY.

NINTH STREET AND LYDIA AVENUE.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Bro. R. C. Russell has visited us and spoke once in the park to a fair sized congregation.

Brother Connoughy, of Akron, was here July 3 with a party of Akron brethren on a visit to Kirtland Temple. He spoke in the park in the afternoon.

July 10, Bro. John W. Topping spoke to a large and interested crowd.

Since Brother Russell was here this branch in general has awakened concerning outside work. Street work is being carried on by Brn. F. T. Haynes, J. W. Topping, A. Thomas, R. Miller, J. McNeil, and F. C. Webbe. An effective method employed is by a long scroll or script, eighteen inches wide and fifty feet long, which we unroll in part or whole on the curb or sidewalk on which is inscribed verses of scripture telling of the early church, how persecuted, time of going into obscurity, etc.; a chart showing the length of time in wilderness and the time of restoration of the gospel in its fullness and purity in 1830, with name of church and address of branch: Wade Park and Seventy-first; also invitation to park services; invitation to question and debate. We give away literature with address stamped thereon.

Elder J. C. Farnfield gave us a visit and also helped in the street work.

Gomer T. Griffiths on his last visit here called out one for the priesthood, Brother Russell ordaining the same.

F. T. Haynes has been reelected president.

FRANK WEBBE.

MYRTLE POINT, OREGON.

We are all alive in this branch and are expecting a good time at our reunion which will meet on July 22 at this place, at which time our new chapel will be dedicated. I have had the privilege of speaking in the neat and unique little place and it is very fine.

Last Tuesday evening I solemnized the marriage of Mr. J. M. Laird and one of our nice young sisters, Miss Verna Weekly. It was a real nice wedding and quite a crowd witnessed the ceremony.

A general invitation is extended to all Saints to attend our reunion.

J. C. CLAPP.

RIVERTON, IOWA.

The Riverton Branch has reorganized the Sunday school by choosing Jesse Donaldson superintendent; Barney Donaldson secretary; Marguerite Comestock treasurer; John T. Comestock assistant superintendent; Delilah Donaldson, teacher primary class; Anna Donaldson, teacher of intermediate class; James Comestock, teacher of senior class. We have prayer meeting regularly every Sunday. Every third Sunday we have preaching by L. C. Donaldson.

REPORTER.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

During the early part of July, with the mercury at about ninety degrees, many kinds of meetings have been held. There has been a fairly good attendance at the preaching and afternoon services, and at the Sunday morning and midweek prayer meetings about fifty and one hundred and fifty respectively, were present.

At the union prayer meeting of the home department Book of Mormon classes, held June 30, Pres. G. E. Harrington, by request, was in charge. There was evidenced by the fifteen present a steady and spiritual interest in the Religio work.

Last Friday evening's session of this society was made especially interesting by Pres. F. M. Smith's geological lecture. On the evening of the third the Stone Church was closed and many of the Saints attended the union prohibition rally at which Judge William Wallace presented many facts of importance. "God help the man," said he, "who is willing for the saloon to run on account of the revenue," and he stated that two billion one hundred and fifty million dollars is the annual bar bill of the United States.

A large number of Saints on the Fourth gathered at Forbis Park, and the Mount Zion Sunday school picnic (although a few of the boys suffered injuries from firecrackers) presented many unusual attractions.

Considerable interest is here being shown in the erection of its new county hospital and McCune Home for boys, and Jackson County, with its wealth and two hundred thousand population can well afford to rejoice over such efforts. While hearing of these two great humanitarian institutions, of the spacious grounds, pleasant rooms, and modern conveniences, of the verandas facing well-kept roads and gardens, the Saints also are glad, and here and everywhere their hearts swell with gratitude in view of the improvements which, through many difficulties, the church has been enabled to accomplish in the building and management of the Independence Sanitarium and Saints' Home, and in the success so far attending other projects entered into at the center place for the carrying on of the work in Zion.

May all the workers for good everywhere be blessed in their every righteous endeavor.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

CENTRAL CHICAGO.

Sunday, July 10. Sermon at 11.15 by Elder J. A. Tanner, which was very interesting and instructive, his theme being, "Judge not that ye be not judged, for with what judgment ye judge it shall be meted to you again." Do we always observe the Golden Rule in this respect?

Visitors at the morning service were: Mrs. O. A. Pennuck, of Elko, Nevada, daughter of Elder W. A. McGahan, who with her husband has been visiting relatives and friends in the city; Sr. Edith Alden and her husband, Mr. H. S. Alden, who now reside at 1518 East Sixty-fifth street, and Bro. Charles Tanner, of Saint Louis, Missouri, son of our missionary.

Elder Pement occupied in the evening, discoursing on the "gift of tongues" to the edification of his hearers.

A son has recently arrived at the home of Bro. and Sr. Ralph Hastings, also at the home of Bro. and Sr. Alma Pitt, whom we trust in time to come will prove valiant workers in the Lord's cause.

Sr. Carrie Vanderhoof and her husband, Mr. Thomas Vanderhoof, with their two little girls, are visiting in Galien, Michigan.

Sister Bradbrook, with her little son Kelso and your correspondent, crossed Lake Michigan last Friday and enjoyed the lake breezes very much. We stopped in South Haven a couple hours, visiting with Bro. and Sr. Addison Frantz and Sr. Maggie Kelso, who truly miss the church privileges.

"Like as a father pitieth his children,

So the Lord pitieth them that fear him,

For he knoweth our frame;

He remembereth that we are dust."

Miscellaneous DepartmentConference Minutes.

LAMONI STAKE.—On June 18, 1910, at 10 a. m., the 28th conference of the Lamoni Stake met at Lamoni, Iowa. The sessions were presided over by the Stake Presidency, and Assistant Secretary C. I. Carpenter acted as secretary. Branches reported showing totals as follows: Centerville, 71; Davis City, 105; Evergreen, 133; Graceland, 24; Greenville, 51; Hiteman, 180; Lamoni, 1,588; Leon, 44; Lucas, 153; Pleasanton, 88; Lone Rock, 86; Oland, 52; Pawnee, 26. Allendale and Ellston no report. Of the ministry reporting there were: Elders John Smith, R. S. Salyards, J. F. Garver; J. R. Evans, D. C. White; M. M. Turpen, Duncan Campbell, J. R. Lambert, William Anderson, R. M. Elvin, G. R. Wells, Joseph Roberts, Price McPeck, T. J. Bell, Parley Batten, H. N. Snively; Priests Nephi Lovell, J. J. Johnson, and A. L. Keen. Report of stake bishopric for five months from January 1, 1910, to June 1, 1910, showing receipts from all sources $3,394.62, including $794.59 which represents January balance on hand; and expenditures, $2,837.03, leaving a balance on hand of $556.59. The Second Quorum of Priests and the Fifth Quorum of Elders submitted reports showing progress in their work. The time and place of holding the next conference were left with the stake presidency. The preaching during the conference was by Elders C. H. Jones, M. M. Turpen, and Heman C. Smith. The attendance was small, but a pleasant and peaceful time was enjoyed by all who were present.

EASTERN MAINE.—Conference convened at Little Kennebec, June 18 and 19, Elder U. M. Kelley in charge. Bro. S. F. Cushman was chosen to preside with Bro. E. C. Foss assistant; Herbert Rogers, chorister; Sr. Cora Rogers, organist. Branches reporting: Olive, 168; Indian River, 60; and Little Kennebec, 68. Official reports: Elders U. M. Kelley, S. F. Cushman, E. C. Foss; Priests L. A. Woodward, Frank P. Smith; Teachers B. F. Foss, A. D. Mattatall, U. E. Rogers; Deacons Albert Marston, G. C. Manchester, and J. L. Woodward. Bishop's Agent's report was referred to an auditing committee, and was reported correct. The name of Lewis

U. Hinkly was presented to conference for ordination to the office of priest. Resolved that the present district officials be sustained. Vote of thanks was given to the Saints of Little Kennebec for their kindness to visiting Saints and friends. The spirit of harmony prevailed, and a spiritual time was enjoyed by all the Saints. Four were baptized. Conference adjourned to meet with Jonesport Saints October next, date to be left with district officials. E. M. Walker, clerk, Jonesport, Maine.

SASKATCHEWAN.—The Saskatchewan district semiannual conference was opened at Regina on July 2, by prayer service at 8.30 a. m., presided over by Elders Walstrom and Beckman. Many prayers and testimonies were offered and the Spirit was present to a marked degree. After prayer meeting a business session was held, T. J. Jordan in the chair. Apostle F. A. Smith, president of the Canada Mission, Bishop R. C. Evans, of Toronto, associated with Elders Jordan and Dodson, of the district, were elected to preside. The presidency was empowered to choose the various committees. The reports of the different branches were read showing that work was progressing. The credential committee's report was adopted and it was ordered by the body that the delegate system be dispensed with and that we have a mass conference. The Bishop's agent's report was read, which shows a substantial balance. The district treasurer's report was read and referred to the auditor. Elder H. J. Davison's report as a delegate to the conference was read, showing that the gospel was spreading its evangelization, both spiritually and financially. Apostle F. A. Smith explained the endowment plan of Graceland College, and told of the great amount of good that was being accomplished by the college. The auditors' report of the Bishop's agent's and district treasurer's reports were read and adopted. The matter of dividing Alberta and Saskatchewan into two districts was brought up and laid on the table. Bro. W. E. Nelson tendered his resignation to Bishop Evans as Bishop's agent for the Saskatchewan District. The Bishop stated that his association was of a pleasant nature and he regretted that Brother Nelson was leaving the district, as he always found him careful and attending to his duties in a satisfactory manner. Elder Beckman was chosen to act as Bishop's agent for the Saskatchewan District by Bishop Evans. The appointment was sustained by the conference. The matter of appointing the speakers and arranging for other meetings was left in the hands of the district presidency. At 1.30 p. m. Apostle F. A. Smith was in charge. The conference set apart $20 for the purchasing of tracts. It was resolved that the branch officers report to the branch president, who in turn will report to the district president, the district president reporting to the First Presidency of the church. The missionary to report to the missionary in charge. The next conference will be held with the Minnesota Branch of the Saskatchewan District on December 29 to January 1 inclusive. Elder T. J. Jordan was elected district president; Elder Dodson, vice-president; Elder Beckman, second vice-president; and Sr. Grace Beckman was reelected secretary. At the afternoon session Bro. C. S. Van Eaton gave an interesting address outlining the benefits derived from Graceland College. Apostle F. A. Smith occupied the pulpit at 3.30 and Bishop R. C. Evans preached in the evening. The last day of the conference was opened by prayer service in the morning at 7 o'clock when the sacrament was dispensed and Elder T. J. Jordan was ordained by Apostle F. A. Smith and Bishop R. C. Evans to the office of high priest, as ordered by the last General Conference. Following the prayer service Bishop R. C. Evans preached on the law of tithing and consecration, which was also followed by an eloquent address before a large number of visitors and Saints in the evening. Apostle F. A. Smith addressed the gathering in the afternoon. C. A. Smith, Regina, Saskatchewan; S. E. Hewitt, Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, press correspondents.

FREMONT.—Conference convened at Saints' church near Thurman, Iowa, Saturday, June 18, at 10 a. m. Called to order by N. L. Mortimore. A motion that N. L. Mortimore and T. A. Hougas preside over this conference prevailed. Lorena Leeka was chosen chorister. Branch reports from Bartlett, 39; Riverton, 54; Henderson, 89; Shenandoah, 125; Tabor, 47; Hamburg, 69; Thurman, 207; Glenwood, 66; Keystone, no report. Ministry reporting were High Priest T. A. Hougas; Elders D. Hougas, N. L. Mortimore, C. M. Roberts, J. C. Moore, James Comstock, Frank Becksted; Priests J. E. Claiborn, L. C. Donaldson, F. B. Knight, J. R. Wright, C. W. Forney, H. N. Pierce; Teacher R. E. Pratt; Deacon S. S. Clark. Membership of district, 729, including 1 high priest, 11 elders, 13 priests, 9 teachers, and 7 deacons. There were reported seventy sermons, 1 blessing to children, 30 administrations to sick, 11 administrations of sacrament, 6 official visits. Lost since last report, 14. Petitions were read from Hamburg and Henderson requesting next conference. Vote resulted in favor of Hamburg. Bishop's agent's report was read: December 31, 1909, balance due church, $407.62; amount received to June 16, 1910, $680.20; expenditures to June 16, $950.75; balance due church, $137.07. Report was referred to an auditing committee. P. M. Hanson and Frank Becksted were appointed by the chair as that committee. Short speeches from P. M. Hanson, H. N. Pierce, N. L. Mortimore, A. A. Reams. At 2.30 the annual election of officers was held when T. A. Hougas was chosen president and C. W. Forney secretary and treasurer. A motion that the Bishop's agent's books be audited but once a year and that be in February, carried. Moved that conference grant the request of the Hamburg Branch and send them a court of elders to settle the difficulties. A substitute was offered and passed that the district president select the court of elders. President announced that he had chosen N. L. Mortimore as his assistant. Preaching at 8 o'clock by H. N. Pierce, assisted by C. W. Forney. Sunday school at 9.30 Sunday morning in charge of local superintendent, C. W. Forney. At 10.30 a children's day program was nicely rendered. Preaching at 11 o'clock by T. A. Hougas, assisted by P. M. Hanson. At 2.30 social service in charge of N. L. Mortimore and John Huston. Preaching at 8 o'clock by P. M. Hanson, assisted by H. N. Pierce. Adjourned to meet with Hamburg Branch at a time to be fixed by district president. C. W. Forney, secretary.

MINNESOTA.—District convened at 2.30, June 18, 1910, during the reunion near Bemidji, Minnesota. J. W. Wight presided. Three branches reported: Union, Bemidji, Audubon. Ministers reporting: L. Houghton, W. C. Griffin, Birch Whiting, L. A. Gould, T. J. Martin, H. Way, F. E. Anderson, D. A. Whiting, G. G. Buell, P. W. Martin, A. W. Whiting. Bishop's agent's report was read, audited, and accepted. A reunion in 1911 was provided for, to be held in Frazee, time to be decided by reunion committee. L. A. Gould was elected president, and the selection of the assistant was left to him, subject to the ratification of the conference. E. A. Stedman was chosen assistant. Hallie M. Gould elected secretary; Eleanor Whiting a member of the library board; Birch Whiting was sustained as Bishop's agent. On June 19, the church just completed by the Bemidji Branch was dedicated; J. W. Wight preaching the sermon. Adjourned to meet at Clitherall at call of district president. Hallie M. Gould.

Reunion Notices.

The Eastern Michigan District will hold a reunion at Port Huron in Pine Grove (two blocks from the Pine Grove depot of the Pere Marquette railroad,) September 2 to 11; conference will be on the 10th. We expect the following missionaries: J. W. Wight, minister in charge, part or all of the time, J. J. Cornish, S. W. L. Scott, also all the missionaries of the district and possibly some others. J. J. Bailey, our patriarch, will have a stenographer on the grounds and will be prepared to give blessings. Tents can be rented at the following rates: 10 by 12 or 12 by 14, $2.50; 14 by 16, $3. The committee will have the tents set up for 25 cents extra, and for $1 you can have a board floor in your tent; springs can be rented for 25 cents; bring your tickets with you and the committee will furnish you plenty of clean straw free. There will be a dining tent on the grounds, also a refreshment stand; meals 15 cents each or 8 for $1, children under 8, half price. Let all the Saints of the district that can arrange to attend the reunion order a tent and stay right on the grounds. We extend a hearty invitation to the Canadian Saints to cross the borders and join us in this reunion. Let all send in their orders for tents, etc., as soon as possible. Send all orders to Elder Arthur Allen, 86 Goodwin avenue, Detroit, Michigan.

The reunion of the Spring River District will be held August 12 to 22, at the beautiful city park of Columbus, Kansas. The grounds are ideal, located inside the city limits, and are in fine condition; plenty of shade and good water. A boarding tent will be on the grounds and meals will be served at fifteen cents or a twenty-one-meal ticket for $2.50. Tents will be furnished at the following prices: 10 by 12, $2.25; 12 by 14, $2.50. Springs and cots will be furnished at the lowest rates obtainable. Saints desiring tents will please notify the secretary, Otto Hempel, 407 North Fairview street, Pittsburg, Kansas, and their wants will be promptly attended to. If tents are ordered and the order not canceled three days before reunion, they will have to be paid for by parties ordering.

same. Saints coming to the reunion without first preparing the way, can not expect good accommodations from the committee. District officers and the auxiliary work will be looked after by an able field-worker. It is the hope of the committee that all the Saints and friends that can will come and stay the whole time, that we may all have a season of rejoicing together. Otto Hempel, secretary.

A reunion, or ten-day meeting, will be held at Blue Rapids, Kansas, beginning Monday, August 28. The district conference meets at the same place on the 26th and 27th. While this meeting is in the Northeastern Kansas District, it is also in convenient reach of many of the Northwestern Kansas District, and an invitation is hereby extended to all the Saints of that district to meet with us for a pleasant, spiritual, profitable time. Let all who have tents, or can secure the same, bring them and thus prepare to camp on the ground. An effort will be made to have the various departments of the work represented there, including both the Sunday school and the Religio. Saints, begin now to make preparation to come, and let us revive the reunion spirit in northern Kansas. Blue Rapids is a beautiful place, and an ideal location for a reunion. Samuel Twombly, president; H. E. Moler, assistant minister in charge.

Reunion of the Ohio, Pittsburg, Kirtland, and West Virginia districts will be held at New Philadelphia, Ohio, August 13 to 28, over three Sundays. Tents for the two weeks or less, $3; cots, 50 cents each. Meals for adults, 55 cents per day; children under ten, 10 cents per meal. Order tent as soon as possible from J. A. Becker, Willoughby, Ohio, R. F. D. No. 2, until August 5; after that date address him at "reunion grounds," New Philadelphia, Ohio, mentioning date you will arrive and the time train gets in. The grounds will be equipped with a telephone. No bedding whatever will be furnished on the grounds, so take what is necessary. Inclose stamps for circulars and additional information to the undersigned. Elders R. C. Evans, R. C. Russell, and other able ministers are expected to be with us. C. Ed. Miller, 72 Miller street, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania.

Those desiring to rent tents for the Lamoni Stake reunion, should make their wants known to the secretary at once. Orders for the rent of these tents should be in the hands of the undersigned on or before the 1st day of August. We can not insure tents to be handled much later than the 1st, as meetings commence on the 12th of August, so all should be in readiness. We will not be able to secure Davis City tents this year as before, consequently shipments must be made from Kansas City, necessitating a longer delay in reaching us. 10 by 12 wall tent, $2.05; 12 by 14, $2.70; 10 by 14, two rooms, high wall, $4.40; 12 by 14, two rooms, high wall, $4.75; 12 by 16, three-room, high wall, $5.30. These prices are at actual cost to committee laid down to you on the grounds. All parties ordering tents will be expected to remit the amounts, whether they occupy the tents or not. Meals may be had on the grounds as also other things incident to camp life. Joseph Roberts, secretary, R. F. D. No. 4, Lamoni, Iowa.

The Saint Louis district reunion will be held at Lansdowne, (East Saint Louis), Illinois, August 12 to 21 inclusive. Parties desiring the use of tents should notify the undersigned at once, so we may be in position to place order for same at an early date. The following prices are quoted for tents as described, delivered on the grounds: 10 by 12, $2.40; 12 by 14, $2.90; cots 50 cents each. We will arrange to have tents and cots on the ground for all parties who notify us promptly, giving number and size which they will require. R. Archibald, president, 5741 Garfield avenue, Saint Louis, Missouri.

The Southeastern Illinois reunion will be held at Bungay, near Springerton, Illinois, beginning August 12, 1910, instead of Parrish. All coming by train will get off at Springerton. Hope to have a good turnout of the Saints. A. H. Burroughs, secretary and treasurer.

The Wilburton, Oklahoma, district reunion will commence August 12 for ten days. H. R. Harder, chairman reunion committee.

Convention Notices.

Religio and Sunday school associations of Chatham, Ontario, District will meet in convention at Bothwell, Ontario, July 30 and 31, 1910. The executive committees of both organizations have met and arranged the following program: Saturday, 10 a. m., Sunday school work, preliminary organization, followed by papers and discussion. At 2 p. m., Religio work, organization, etc., after which papers and discussion. At 8 p. m., entertainment of a literary and musical nature. The Sunday's program is to be arranged by the superintendency of the Sunday school and the presidency of the Religio. G. Orlow Coburn, secretary of Sunday school; Anthony R. Hewitt, secretary of Religio.

Eastern Oklahoma district Sunday school convention will be held with the Wilburton, Oklahoma, school in August, day previous to our district conference. Lula Perkins.

Conference Notices.

Conference of the Northeastern Missouri District will meet with the Saints at Lagonda, Missouri, August 17 and 18, 1910. Conference will open on the 17th at 10 a. m. The election of district officers will take place at this conference. Parties attending conference will be met at New Columbia on August 16 and 17, at 11 a. m., and conveyed to Lagonda by team. Let all those who expect to attend conference make preparations to be at New Columbia on dates and at time mentioned. As the place of meeting is eight miles from station teams will be there only as above stated. Let all attend who possibly can and help to make this a good spiritual gathering. Wm. C. Chapman, secretary, Higbee, Missouri.

Notices.

By concurrence of majority of members in Florida District we have decided to change date of reunion to be held in this district; so the reunion will not convene July 20, as per conference resolution, but if thought advisable will be held at some later date. W. A. West, W. M. Hawkins, reunion committee.

To the Saints of Northern California: As chairman of the committee appointed to collect funds to buy a tent, I wish to report that so far I have collected $65.72. We ought to have $150 dollars to put a good tent in the field equipped for work. We have men anxious to go with the tent, so if you want it sent out, please send your contributions to me at 235 Third avenue, San Francisco, California.

Pastoral.

To All Whom It May Concern: Having been placed in trust with the work in the State of Arizona, I take this means of reaching all who reside in the State or who might be interested in the work in this part of the world. Our desire is to see the work spread and that our work might be made more effectual we solicit the cooperation of all. Our work is an aggressive one and we therefore need to unite our efforts for good and not only improve our opportunity, but go to work and make opportunity and then utilize it.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

Died.

CAUGHILL.—Dallas Paul Caughill, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Caughill, was born November 16, 1909, at Fargo, Oklahoma, and died at the home of his grandparents, near Carson, Iowa, July 3, 1910. Funeral services conducted by Elder J. C. Crabb.

SHARP.—Oren Richard Sharp, son of Ray and Sr. Jessie Sharp, was born March 6, 1908, near Pawnee, Harrison County, Missouri, and died at their home June 30, 1910. Funeral held July 1, 1910, at residence, Elder T. J. Bell in charge of services and Bro. Price McPeck offering prayer. T. J. Bell preached the sermon to a good audience of attentive listeners who were touched tenderly in much sympathy for the parents in the loss of their only child. His little body was laid to rest in East Cemetery at Eagleville, Missouri.

LAWTON.—Sr. Isabel P. Lawton was born in Provincetown, Massachusetts, August 14, 1869; died June 27, 1910; was baptized by Elder H. O. Smith, June, 1899. She leaves a husband and four children. She was a kind, affectionate wife and devoted, zealous mother, highly respected by her neighbors within and out of the church. She was cut down in the prime of life. Her last words were, "Death is swallowed up in victory." She was laid to rest in the beautiful Mount Mora cemetery, and her grave was decorated with flowers. Services in charge of Bro. Hodson, sermon by William Lewis.

FISH.—Joseph Fish was born at Rödstock, England, August 20, 1837, and came to America in 1865. In 1872 he married Mary Hodgson and made their home near Mallard, Iowa, where they raised a family of seven children, five of whom united with the church. In 1898 Brother and Sister Fish were baptized by C. E. Butterworth. For the past seven years Brother Fish was the faithful and beloved president of the Mallard Branch. On June 22, 1910, he called his family to his bedside and gave them loving instruction, and in a few hours passed to his well-earned reward, aged 72 years, 10 months, and 2 days. Funeral sermon at the Saints' church by C. J. Hunt, assisted by M. W. Hartshorn.

JOHN.—Bro. Thomas A. John was born November 29, 1839, near Haverford, West Pembrokeshire, Wales, and died June 3, 1910. He came to the United States in 1866, located at Scranton, Pennsylvania. United in marriage with Miss Mary Davies in 1858. To them were born fourteen children of whom three sons and three daughters are still living. He and his family went to Utali in 1870. He returned to Scranton and, disgusted with Utah Mormonism, united with the Reorganization. He came to Lucas, Iowa, in 1879, where he died. Elder John R. Evans preached the sermon, assisted by Elder E. B. Morgan. He died without pain. Before dying he asked one of his sons, "Why don't you come into the church?"

BRIGGS.—Stephen Briggs, died April 29, 1910. He was born July 28, 1849, at Mount Sterling, Brown County, Illinois; was baptized April 24, 1882, at Echo, Delaware District, Indian Territory, now Delaware County, Oklahoma, by J. O. Stewart. Brother Briggs lived in Miami, Oklahoma, at the time of his death. He was sick about twenty-four hours. He was brought from Miami to Fairland to be placed away to await the resurrection of the just. Said brother was faithful to the latter day work, and was contending earnestly for the cause. He leaves a wife and one son to mourn. Bro. O. P. Sutherland, of Webb City, Missouri, preached the funeral sermon. There were many Saints and friends viewed his face for the last time until the judgment day. Said brother was placed in the Fairland cemetery on the 1st day of May, 1910.

The Twentieth Century Magazine for July contains an illustrated critical dramatic paper by William Maily, entitled "The decadent drama triumphant," in which the author, who is a great admirer of such playwrights as Ibsen, Sudermann, Hauptmann and Maeterlinck, shows how the plays of this school of dramatists, which lay hold of vital present-day issues, are appealing more and more to the imagination of the American people. Thomas Mufson contributes a fine critical sketch of "Walt Whitman, poet of the new age," which merits general perusal. Under the title of "Why we oppose the bills to establish a national department or bureau of health," Mr. Flower contributes an extended essay which in a way complements his paper on that subject in the June issue. It is a thoughtful, closely reasoned argument and will doubtless occasion general discussion. Among the essays on live questions relating to the general weal which call for more than passing notice are "Classes and privilege," by William Kittle, a brilliant and exhaustive discussion of an overshadowing issue; "The only political boss in Switzerland," a most interesting and informing paper by George Judson King, Secretary of the Ohio State Direct Legislation League; "The growth of judicial despotism," by Theodore Schroeder; and "Man's inhumanity to man," by Hon. John D. Works, formerly of the Supreme Bench of California. The issue contains, in the series of papers devoted to "Progressive leaders," an admirable sketch of Senator Robert M. LaFollette, written by Congressman Irvine L. Lenroot, one of Mr. LaFollette's ablest lieutenants, and also an editorial sketch of the life and work of Hon. John D. Works.

$100.00 Gold Bonds, bearing interest at five per cent

Dated August 1, 1909

Due August 1, 1914

Redeemable after due notice is given by the Herald Publishing House.

These bonds are offered to the purchaser at par.

The interest-coupons call for payment semiannually—on February 1st and August 1st.

Both principal and interest payable at the State Savings Bank of Lamoni, Iowa.

These Bonds are backed by the very best of security, consisting of assets of $100,000, and afford the purchaser a chance to invest with perfect assurance as to the soundness of the investment.

Note some of the facts about our bonds.

(a) They are of small denomination, thus enabling those of very moderate means to become purchasers.

(b) We ask no premium—your interest is clear.

(c) We have issued only 250 bonds—$25,000 dollars' worth—all of which goes toward payment of our debt incurred in adding improvements since the fire.

Oklahoma City

We have for sale fine farms and also city property in Oklahoma City. Oklahoma City is one of the fastest growing cities of its age in the United States.

We have about 135 miles of paved streets, and about 30 miles under construction.

We have recently gained the Capitol, which makes Oklahoma City the capital city. Anyone wishing to purchase business lots, residence lots, or lots in the manufacturing districts, and wishing to correspond with us, we will certainly give their correspondence special attention. We can sell property by mail as well as if the customers were here.

Our terms on city lots, close-in subdivisions, are $20 down and $10 to $15 per month at an interest of 4 per cent.

Anyone buying property in Oklahoma City now, will certainly reap good returns upon his investment, as we will have a city of two hundred thousand people in 1915.

We can refer you to any bank in the city in regard to our responsibility. Write for a free book of Oklahoma City.

DANIELS REALTY CO.

Oklahoma City is a marvel. I have seen Daniels Realty Company's holdings, and believe them to be safe and all right.

HUBERT CASE,
Kingfisher, Oklahoma.

This is only a partial table of contents; while the book studies and reviews, the editorials and the news of progressive democratic movements are exceptionally interesting; the whole making a magazine that persons interested in the great issues of the hour can not afford to overlook.

In his recent book, The Chinese, published by the Bobbs-Merrill Company, John Stuart Thompson concludes his appeal for a fleet on the Pacific stronger at all times than Japan's with these pregnant words: "In a Chinese cradle, under the mysterious yellow robe, really lies the commercial future of the Pacific States of America. Shall it be rocked by a faithful hand, made steadier because of the backing of a mighty fleet, or shall the nursing be tumbled out to be jiu-jitsu'd, bear-throttled, or stein-smashed? The fleet shall say." Mr. Thompson argues that the Anglo-British alliance only substituted Japan for Russia as the aggressor against the American doctrine of the "nonpartition of China" in practically occupying those two of China's twenty-one provinces where American trade exceeds that of any other nation. The London Times also is campaigning for Russian and Japanese control of the three Manchurian provinces, "treaties and agreements notwithstanding," on the plea of "economic gravitation." Apparently only America is sincerely allied to the proposition of preserving the integrity of China, and Mr. Thompson's book urges a mighty fleet to back up our altruistic diplomacy on the other side of the Pacific against all comers. The Chinese-American side of the question is certainly the correct one—morally, commercially and ethically—and Japan has been allowed sufficient expansion in the absorption of Korea. China should be saved, not alone because of her immortal past, but because of her glorious future, and this is America's mission across the Pacific to-day.

Reunion Notices.

The reunion of the Clinton, Missouri, District will be held at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, beginning August 19. Those wishing tents will please notify S. C. Williams, Eldorado Springs, Missouri, not later than August 5. Tents with tables and chairs can be had for $2 per week, and we think we can secure them for the ten days for $2. Gasoline stoves, cots, and mattresses can be rented at reasonable rates, and pasture can be had for horses at fair rates. Brn. I. N. and Ammon White and other able speakers will be with us. Please get busy now and let us come together with one accord at the beginning and make the reunion one of the best. James Moler, Box 435, Holden Missouri.

First Sight at the Age of Forty.

In Harper's for August Dr. Edward A. Ayers tells of a remarkable case of a man who, blind until the age of forty, had been able through some remarkable instinct to live a normal life, who could distinguish colors and had the homing instinct.

"This man was well developed, healthy, quick-witted, shrewd, and, we may say, observant though uneducated. He acquired a moderate competence as a farm laborer; could cut wood, nail rails, split shingles, and pick cotton, often eighty-five pounds a day. He wove baskets, gathered rush from the Louisiana swamps, and meshed new bottoms in chairs which had been worn through by lazier fellows. He learned to pick, shuck, and assort corn and pull fodder. He felled trees and split two hundred rails a day. He built rail fences after the 'worm' was laid—his eyeless senses could not line a surveyor's plot without running a string from one corner stone to another. Farmer John did what many a man with five senses and little sense had failed to do—he earned and bought a forty-acre farm, clearing half, which he cultivated with the hearty aid of his wife and five children. What family would not work under the influence of such noble industry! He could not use the plow or hoe, for the plowman must look ahead and the man with the hoe must know 'pussly' from cabbage. He 'specialized' with his neighbors, picking their cotton while they plowed and hoed his fields. He was a rare sportsman, followed the hounds afoot after opossums, coons, and even foxes. He was usually at the finish, often got the brush, and always knew the way home.

"We wonder that the sparrow-hawk, flitting with great speed through the thicket, does not bump its head and fall senseless to the ground. But bird's eyes make very quick change in focus. Farmer John ran after the hounds through thicket and brush and woods without bumping, and he had no eyes to guide him. When he walked down the hospital hall they placed obstructing chattels in his path, but he turned aside and touched none of them. After many turns through the streets of the unfamiliar city of Memphis, and the halls and offices of the hospital, when asked which way lay home he correctly pointed to the south.

“Often, when hunting coons, opossums, or foxes at night, the companions of Farmer John ‘tried to lose him,’ but could not succeed. In fact, he occasionally heaped coals of fire on their obfuscated heads by leading them home when they were lost. On one occasion, after spending half the night chasing a fox, he and his companions, having lost direction, disagreed about it. They went their way and he went his. He went straight home, arriving at noon. They wandered away from home until reaching a railroad, which set them right, they returned only at evening.

“If anything in this world seems wholly for the service of eyes it is colors. Whether they flash iridescently from bubble or dewdrop or opal, or glow in the living coals, or stain green the knees of stumbling youngsters, or hold true to the bottom of a pot of paint, they are all intangible reflections—vibratory waves of light, sensations only in the brain's centers of sight. Yet Farmer John learned to recognize colors in worsteds, hosiery, and scarfs with more accuracy than most men are capable of who are color-blind, and he could not use his eyes. He could not recognize the color of eyes nor the blue of streams and lakes, for they were not to be touched. He started a country store—which differs from a department store mainly in size; and with the aid of his wife sold stockings, woolen skeins, bandannas, and occasionally neckties; and as the most brilliant and elemental colors sold best, he had touch-color lessons of the most kindergarten form. Through constant practice under his faithful wife's guidance, he learned that certain sensations (which he could not name) when handling goods meant red, green, yellow, blue, as the color might be.”

Hardly a week passes without a report of an earthquake disturbance somewhere, and yet the Western World has done little in the study of these phenomena. Here, again, Japan is at the front. The interesting and unique work of the Japanese Earthquake Committee will be described in the August Century by T. A. Jaggar, jr., professor of geology in the Massachusetts Institute of technology, under the title, “Studying earthquakes.” The object of the committee is twofold: in the first place to investigate whether there are any means of predicting earthquakes, and in the second place to investigate what can be done to reduce the disastrous effects of earthquake shocks to a minimum.

Study pure and holy walking, if you would have your confidence firm, and have boldness and joy in God. You will find that a little sin will shake your trust and disturb your peace more than the greatest sufferings; yea, in those sufferings, your assurance and joy in God will grow and abound most if sin be kept out.

Vacation Time Is Here

The present hot weather brings thoughts of where to spend your vacation.

Colorado Yellowstone Park

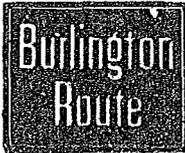

Either place is ideal if you are in search of rest, recreation or an outing.

The cool bracing mountain air, every breath of which gives new life and energy, the dashing streams full of fish, and where game animals of all kinds abound in their native wild state.

Surely these and many other attractions found in the American Wonderlands, should be enough to decide any question of where to spend your vacation.

The Burlington's through, electric lighted trains offer the best service.

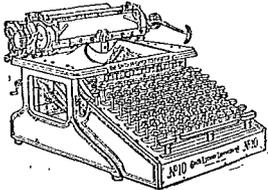

You have perhaps been planning a trip to Colorado or Yellowstone Park for years—make up your mind today to go this Summer and let me hand you one of the Burlington Colorado handbooks or Yellowstone Park folders which tell all about where to go, what to see and what to do, and contains a complete list of hotels, boarding houses and ranches, with their rates. Ask me about Estes Park, Colo., also.

or hear a spoken word, a train of thought is started in our minds, and none knows where it will stop. From a strain of music or a pretty flower to the wonders and mysteries of eternity is a short flight for the human mind.

There is no escape. Here is the possibility of a wreck or of eternal salvation. Well-directed thought may lead to the acceptance of those things that are for our everlasting welfare, while neglected thought is like wildfire, running we know not where, burning up the good, the useful, the worthy, and transforming it into smoke, ashes, and noxious gases.

Clearly there are some thoughts, many of them which we have no right to entertain. It is our positive duty, even from the most selfish point of view, sedulously to avoid them. One bad story leaves a desire for two more. One evil thought goes away, and returns again with seven others worse than its self, laying persuasive hands upon the soul and leading it to deeds terrible for the sober mind to think upon.

The wisely directed thought leads upward, finding in the common, the homely, and the good, the springboard from which it leaps into the higher glories. The soul that has risen above the ignoble and the impure of earth does not return to dwell upon them. His course lies ever above these.

The wise thought goes into the highways and the hedges, into the cities, up and down through the universe gathering friends, the best of its kind, and bringing them in to the feast of the Master. Waiting like a high priest before the altar of the mind, bringing the first fruits of the whole world, of the material, the ideal, the religious, the scientific, it lays them a sacrifice upon the altar for the enrichment of the temple and the dweller therein, for not only is the mind benefited for all time, but the temple of the mind is also made beautiful.

We meet the man of intellect upon the street and we know him at a glance by his refined face. Here is a high spirituality that takes joy in the things of the ideal world and in the pure and beautiful of the material world. Music, pictures, statuary, flowers, scenery, poetry, the truth, appeals to his mind. His heart is open to the sunshine. You see it in his walk, in his gesture, in his face, in his eye from which his soul looks into yours. You see it and you THOUGHT.

In the physical world the gradation toward perfection is upward toward man where it reaches the acme of usefulness in a physical contrivance best adapted to subdue and rule the world. So, in the world of mental activity, we find the same gradation upward toward man where, so far as we know, the perfection of finite mentality is reached. In either realm mere bulk seems to count for little. Skill, celerity, and precision are the factors which conquer.

In the conjunction of the material with the spiritual, that material form is given to each creature which is best adapted to its spiritual development. To man, in whom the material elements are arranged in their most pleasing and useful form, is given the higher mentality, the swift, sure, logical, reasoning power, thought.

It is this mysterious, unending process going on in our minds that is altering, building, and making us what we are, almost despite ourselves, by its qualities of good or bad, its slowness or speed, its certainty or its error.

There is no escape. We read a book, see a picture, know it. Thought, the great artist, has been at work upon this man. The good thought has beautified him.

We meet the man of vicious thought upon the street and we know him just as surely. Not all the paint or powder of the world, not all the Michael Angelos of fame or obscurity could conceal or alter the fact. The improper appeals to his vision; the vulgar, to his ear. His soul has fed upon the impurities of the earth and the haunting shapes that dwell within look forth from his shifting eyes. You see this and know it; for thought has been at work upon this man. The malignant thought has twisted and deformed him.

It may not seem to matter so much what a man thinks, but it does matter. As a man "thinketh in his heart, so is he."

The first requisite is to think. The second to think right. The untrained mind is an undisciplined soldier, head forward, shoulders bent, hands and feet in the way. The trained mind reaches its conclusions by straight, swift marches. Its evolutions are all to the point. Its battles are well planned, skillfully executed.

There is mental as well as physical laziness. If you can persuade a man to remain idle one year, it is not hard for him to idle the next; he has not the interest of the man in the full activity of life, pushing his work. Just so when the mind contends with trifles only, it shrinks from the contemplation of more weighty subjects that are from time to time forced upon it, with as much actual fear and pain as some indolent ones experience in the contemplation of hard physical labor.

The flower draws from the soil its form and color. Whatever the nature of the soil, it is the same flower. The mind is not so happily exempt from the law of influence. It is distinctly colored by that upon which it feeds. Those minds which have struck root into firm, strong soil, are strong and unconquerable. Where persecutions and death have stood in the way such men have continued fearlessly to do duty's bidding in the presentation of those truths which their thoughts have discovered and demonstrated, so that all men in time come to honor their firmness. It is the firmness of conviction, the conviction attendant upon the actual perception of truth through the activity of their own minds.

What a power the qualities of our thoughts are for good or bad in the shaping of our lives. If we look within, we may read our destinies. We are what we make ourselves. Man is the master of his own destiny. He holds within himself the germ of the glorious. Let him see to it that he gives it development.

Who shall cry in the last day, "Lord, my thoughts have been evil because nothing good was given me to think upon"? To how many shall the answer come back, "The world is full of good, but you gave it no heed when it sought you out"?

UNITED ORDER OF ENOCH.

As per promise in previous notice, issued by the executive committee of the United Order of Enoch, we herewith present to the readers of the HERALD a copy of the by-laws which have been adopted by the order. From this it will be learned what is necessary to be done in order to become affiliated with the movement. Quite a number of names have been already presented to the order at recent meetings to be voted on at the next regular meeting. It will be noted that persons desiring to become members must have their names recommended by at least three already in the order, and that name must be presented at least one regular meeting before being voted upon. The next regular meeting of the order will be on the first Tuesday afternoon of August.

The response to the call for aid has been fairly good, donations coming in from amounts varying from one dollar to five hundred dollars.

The order has accepted the offer of the eighty acres of property, mentioned in our last notice, and the tract is being laid out in suitable lots of varying sizes. The order has also arranged to purchase a property on North River Boulevard, between Electric street and Maple avenue, which will be used as headquarters of the order.

Please address all mail matter to the United Order of Enoch, Box 52, Independence, Missouri, and have all mail orders, checks and drafts drawn in favor of the United Order of Enoch.

BY LAWS OF THE UNITED ORDER OF ENOCH.

MEMBERSHIP.

First. Any person not a minor may by a majority vote of the Board of Trustees become a member of the Order of Enoch, by subscribing to its rules and regulations as set out in the Articles of Incorporation of the order, having complied with the conditions therein named. But each candidate for membership must be recommended by at least three members of the order, and the name to be voted upon must be presented to the Board at least one regular meeting previous to the meeting at which the vote is taken.

SPECIAL MEETINGS OF MEMBERS.

Second. At any time it may be deemed necessary for the good of the order, the Board of Trustees may call a special meeting of the members, by giving due notice to each member of time and place said meeting is to be held; due notice referred to herein shall consist of notice published in some newspaper, published in Jackson County, Missouri, for at least two consecutive weeks, the last publication to be at least fifteen days prior to the date of the meeting.

Third. At all meetings of the association, in the proceedings, the general rules of parliamentary practice shall apply, so far as applicable.

TRUSTEES' MEETINGS.

Fourth. The trustees shall hold regular monthly meetings, but may meet oftener on call of the chairman or any three members.

Regular meetings shall be on the afternoon of the first Tuesday of each month at 2 o'clock.

Fifth. The regular meetings of the trustees shall be held at the headquarters of the order, unless otherwise ordered by special vote of the trustees.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,

Secretary of the United Order of Enoch.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Des Moines Capital of July 22 contains the following item regarding the experiences of the Utah Mormons in Germany:

"BERLIN, July 22.—Herr Dallwitz, Prussian minister of the interior, on recommendation of the political police, has signed orders for the expulsion of twenty-one Mormon missionaries, most of whom are Americans or Englishmen, and they will be conducted to the frontier to-day.

"The missionaries had assembled from various parts of Germany at the Mormon headquarters on the east side to meet Superintendent McKay, an American, usually resident in Switzerland.

"The authorities state that in recent years the Mormons have disregarded the understanding of 1903, and from time to time individual missionaries have been apprehended and expelled. In such instances they have not applied to the American embassy for relief, nor made a protest against their expulsion."

Miss Christiana Waller has accepted a position in Graceland College as instructor in the piano. She is the daughter of our well known brother, Elder G. J. Waller, of Honolulu. She is well qualified for the place, having completed her musical education at the University of Leipsic.

Reunion attendants will please take notice that the following reunions will be represented by the Herald Publishing House:

Montrose, Sr. E. A. Smith; Saint Louis and Stewartsville, Fred B. Blair; Moline, E. B. Blett.

Let all who expect to attend these reunions be prepared to renew subscription, etc.

It may be gratifying to the Saints to learn that the Church Recorder reports one thousand baptisms during the first half of 1910.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF RICHARD B. HOWLETT.

ELDER RICHARD B. HOWLETT.

I am the fourth son of John and Elizabeth Howlett. Both parents were of English descent, father from Suffolk, mother from Norfolk. I was born at Eight Kinghenery Street, Mildmay Park, London, England, on the 2d day of June, 1852. Both of my parents were members of the Church of England, so-called. I am sorry to say my father was given to that accursed habit, drink. As a result of this I had to get my own living when nine years old, being deprived of schooling that I should have had. My father was a carpenter contractor, but the evil habit referred to hindered him from giving me an education, or trade, and I therefore started out very young in life without either.

My mother, having a family of thirteen children, found it very hard work to live; but mother was a good woman, and tried to bring up her children in the fear of the Lord as she understood it. Being brought up in London, England, a city of much evil, I remember well, before I was fourteen years of age, of running away from home; and the companions I chummed with, though young were bad, so the theater and other evil places were where I loved to go; and had I continued that life ruin would have been my lot. But as stated, having a godly mother, I remember well one Sunday evening, while I had my hand on the knob of the street door, about to go out to go with my evil companions, my mother said to me, "Richard, why don't you go to the iron room (a place of worship for the poor of the parish).

I said in answer, "What is the use of me going to a place like that?" and I went out and shut the door.

But mother's words followed her son Richard. I reached the top of the street, got to the center of the cross-roads, and stopped; and then my mind began to work with these thoughts: "Go with your companions."

Then mother's words would come to me: "Go to the iron room."

A certain distance to the left was where I was to meet my companions; and about the same to the right was this sheet-iron mission hall, called the iron room. I was some time under these two powers, the evil and the good. I thought of the companions, and our fun. Then I thought of mother, and her kind advice. I must confess I thought much of my mother, and this had its effect. And while I did not then understand the connecting power of the Spirit of God, I have every reason to believe its influence was behind the words of mother, as I was satisfied the evil power sought to lead me to the left. I thank God with my purest feelings, that I was led to take dear mother's advice. So I made up my mind after a struggle, and went to the iron room.

An evangelist, by the name of Aitken, was to preach, a very earnest, zealous man. While preaching, he would lean over the desk before him, and plead with the people to accept Christ as their present Savior. His subject was, "The love of God, and the condition of the sinner."

When he got through, I felt, "Oh, that I could love such a God as that."

But the thought came up in my mind, "I can not; for I am a sinner!"

After the preaching, there was an after meeting, and the minister, with some (that were then called "Bible women,") would come and talk with those who stayed, inquiring as to whether they were saved. I, with others, stayed, and one of these women came to me and inquired of me if I loved God. I told her I would like to; and I felt in my heart that if the world were mine, I could freely give it in order to love God; but I felt that I was a sinner, and told this woman so. Then she told me Jesus had died and as a result all my sins had been washed away; all that was required of me was to accept Christ as my present Savior.

I thought, "If that is true (for I did not know it) then I can love God." So I believed the woman's statement, and went home singing that old hymn, "Happy day, when Jesus washed my sins away."

I must confess it was great joy to my dear mother, though she was in bed, having just given birth to a child; and she stated that two children had been born that day—a fleshly birth and a spiritual birth. I well remember the words. There was indeed a change in Richard, and I sometimes would sing,

"My old companions, fare ye well,
I will not go with you to hell;
I mean with Jesus Christ to dwell;
Let me go; let me go."

From that time a great change was made in my life. I went to Sunday school, and am pleased to say that, while it was forty-two years ago, I still have the first Bible given me as a reward of merit for good conduct, in the Saint Jude's Church Sunday school; and I am pleased to say I have taken it as a lamp to my feet from that day to this, and claim that God's word is our only safeguard to gain life with God.

I became a Sunday school teacher, taught the little ones, and became otherwise active as an exhorter on the corners of the streets; and my spare time on Sundays would be occupied in handing out tracts on the public highway, to those who loved pleasure more than God. From the age of between fourteen and fifteen, till I was eighteen, I remained with the Church of England. I can say truthfully, I tried to be a true church member; but in reading my prayer book with my Bible, I found they did not agree; and when inquiring of those who claimed to be teachers, Why this and that? I was informed that these were the deep things, and for me not to try to get into too deep waters, or I might be lost. My mind became dissatisfied with the church teachings—not with the word of God, however. And as I could not accept the prayer book and Bible, I gave up the prayer book, and this led me out of that church, in the year 1870.

Work in London, at that time, was very slack, especially in the carpenter's trade. I had served a few months in that trade with my father, and was about to be bound for seven years to said trade; but circumstances overruled, and I went into the butcher business. This position I enjoyed, and was doing well; but in the year 1870, an older brother, John, being named after his father, and the oldest child, having learned the carpenters' trade with father while a child, being out of work, and learning that there was lots of it in Canada, wanted to emigrate with his wife and child. His wife would not consent to leave the old land unless Richard (the writer) would come also. My brother John then called upon me, requesting me to come with him, with the proposition that we both take up carpenter contracting, he the leading man. While my brother was out of work most of the time, I was doing well at the butcher business, and it was hard for me to know what step to take, to stay in my good place, or leave to help out my brother.

By this time I had read my Bible some, and at this time of important thought, I was impressed by reading of Gideon, found in Judges 6: 36-40, regarding the fleece, by which he might know that the Lord would save Israel by his hand. This became a sign to him. Then the thought came to me, as Paul informs us in Hebrews 13: 8, "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever." So I thought, "How am I to know if it is right for me to leave a good place and go to a strange land?" I was trying to love God, as I had understood, and had read that if we would acknowledge him in all our ways, he would direct our path. While thinking of Gideon and the fleece, this thought came to my mind, after asking the Lord for light upon the important step. While butchering, our morning meal was brought to us in the front shop: three slices of bread and butter, sometimes meat with it, and a jug of coffee. Sometimes a spoon would be brought with the coffee, more often none. Then these thoughts came to me: "Lord, if it is pleasing to thee for me to leave and go to Canada, let me know by this sign, a spoon in my jug in the morning. This request no one on earth knew then. When the time came for the morning meal, the tray came into the shop, and in my jug was a spoon. This affected my feelings; and thinking of Gideon and the fleece, I asked the Lord, if he would grant me another evidence, that at the next morning meal there be no spoon in my jug, as an evidence it was pleasing to him that I should go to Canada. The meal came, and this time no spoon in the jug of coffee. I was satisfied to move out, leave a good place, and go to a strange land.

A few thoughts just here. I have heard some say, "There is no light or Spirit of God outside of the latter day work." I for one proved there was; for God led me. John informs us that Christ was the true light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. I came into the world; and I was permitted, to a degree, to receive of that light.

The time came when, in the month of June, 1870, we left England, and reached Canada safely. wishing to obtain means for a livelihood till my brother could get things in shape for us to work together, my first job was upon the Grand Trunk Railroad, repairing the road—hard, hot work in the month of July. I worked but a few weeks; for the hot sun, water, and strange work made me sick. I thought I would try butchering, and so hired out at London, Ontario, where we landed the former part of July, 1870. While in this business, my oldest brother, John, saw in a London paper an advertisement, "Carpenters wanted at Amersburg, Ontario," offering fourteen shillings a day. He, thinking they meant English shillings, went; but, to his disappointment, he found they were York shillings, so called,—just half the value. This move of my brother's left me alone, and I never saw him or his family till twelve years afterward. His promise was broken, and I was left to mourn my loneliness in a strange land, at the age of eighteen.

I did not like the butchering in Canada, so got out of the trade; and, not knowing much of carpentering, I worked at what came first till July 17, 1871, when I went to John McClary's stove foundry, and apprenticed myself for three years and all loss time. While serving my time, I connected myself with the Canadian Methodist Church, thinking at that time they taught more in line with the Bible. I took part in Sunday-school work, and became what is called a local preacher, and was connected with said church twelve years, bringing me to the age of thirty.

Some changes took place during those years. A Miss Emma Hocking, of Cornwall, England, who came to London, England, before I left in 1870, thought something of me, and I of her. She, too, was a member of the Wesleyan Methodist Church. We agreed to write to each other, with the understanding we would be made one some day. Am pleased to say we were faithful to our vow, and in 1872 Miss Hocking came to London, Canada, to become some day the affectionate wife of Richard B. Howlett. While my life was somewhat lonely before she came, it was made very pleasant after her arrival. She got work as a cook in London, Canada, and we both attended the Methodist Church together.

Molding was good at those times, and an offer was made to the apprentices to work piece work, after the first six months. The first agreement was, first year two dollars and fifty cents a week; second, three dollars and a half; and third, four dollars and a half. But the new offer after the first six months, the first two dollars we made over that the half; and the first week after my six months I got five dollars. I had a great struggle to get along the first six months, having to pay two dollars and a half a week for my board. I worked around so as to pay for my washing and mending, so that I kept clear of debt. Before the year of 1872 ended, I was earning nine dollars a week, and by the time Christmas came, Miss Hocking and myself had saved seventy-five dollars each, and we made up our minds to become one, after asking the Lord for light. So on the eve of December 24, 1872, the Methodist minister at the parsonage united us, and our savings put together bought the household goods, and a happy life commenced.

We both at this time were strong members of the Methodist Church, becoming acquainted with a Mr. Parker, father-in-law of Apostle Luff and W. Clow, both of Independence, who at that time was a strong Methodist. But in about 1872 he joined the Latter Day Saints, whose church was then and is now on Maitland street. So after Mr. and Mrs. Parker had joined the Saints, just before we got married, we both paid them a visit; and I must say they were both very earnest in their new faith. They did their best to try to show us the pure gospel restored; but I was too full of Methodism, so that it had but little if any effect upon me.

After we were married we went to live next door to a Brother Harvy, a teacher in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. His wife was not in favor of his church teachings, so it made his road rough. However, Elder J. J. Cornish came to visit Brother Harvy, and for the first time Elder Cornish and I had a long talk on gospel lines over the fence, he on one side and I on the other. When I got into the house the wife said to me, "Well, how did you get along with the elder?" I at once said I thought I knew about as much as he, and thought in my heart I was living as good. So you see I was so full of religion (of its kind) that there was no room for the gospel restored. I remember before leaving London for Detroit, I went to the church, when Mr. Deper had a claim on the same.

I served my time out at McClary's—stayed with the firm till the spring of 1876. Two boys were born to us by this time, Horatio and Richard. Both of them were christened in the Methodist Church by the minister who united us, Rev. W. Zoloff.

Would say that while serving my time at McClary's, Mr. W. Clow, who, I understand, runs a foundry at Independence, was serving his apprenticeship in molding at the same time; and at that time I was the means of bringing him into the Methodist Church, through talking to him about his soul. We went, both of us, to the top of the warehouse, and there he claimed to have got saved.

After leaving London, as before stated, Bro. W. Clow joined the Saints, and a little while afterward was called to the office of priest. The time came when he with his wife and child, or children, left London for Independence, and this thought came to him: "Richard Howlett is in Detroit, and we have to pass through there. We must stop over and see them. He was so earnest in trying to show me the Methodist teaching of salvation, it is but my duty to try to show him the angel's message, the gospel in its purity and fullness."

They reached Detroit. Brother Clow having other friends there called them together, thinking he might preach the gospel to us. This meeting, however, was a disappointment to him; for it was turned into a social gathering. But Brother Clow tried again, and this time he preached, and the wife and I were there. I watched him very closely. His countenance would light up under the Spirit of God—but unknown to me at that time. For by this time I was dissatisfied with the Methodist teaching, though going to the Methodist Episcopal Church in Detroit at the time, and was an assistant class-leader.

After the meeting, walking home, the wife said to me, "How did you like Brother Clow's preaching?"

I said, "My dear, that man has got something that you and I have not got." I felt to know that.

Before Brother Clow left Detroit, four of us met, the class-leader, Brother Roush of the Methodist Church, Brother Clow, the wife and the writer; and, before we parted the Spirit of God (for we are to know it by its fruits) rested upon Brother Clow and

I remember well these words: "Two of the three here will some day obey the gospel." We were not informed who the two were. This was fulfilled in 1882. This was the last visit we had with a Latter Day Saint till the year 1882. While in Detroit another son was born. We called him William. I still followed the molding, working in the Michigar Stove Plate Works, and was there till 1878. My religious views were much shaken, and I began to drift, not being able to harmonize the teachings of the church of which I was a member, with my understanding of the word of God. I often would shed tears, and long to know how to become satisfied; but was still in darkness regarding the true plan of God's salvation.

The time came when my father was not expected to live and I was invited to return to England. I was led to pray regarding this move also, and believe God's hand was in it, though no special evidence. We sold our home goods and got ready to start. And just before doing so I lost my ticket for us all from Detroit to London, England. I thought of God answering my prayer in coming out; so I called upon God, and can truly say he answered my prayer, and my ticket was found where least expected.

We arrived safely, and when seeing my parents, they did not know me. I left when eighteen. Was now twenty-six, with wife and three American boys. In a little while my father died. Am sorry to say that drink brought him to an early grave. We stayed in London, England, four years, till June, 1882. A girl was born to us, who died before a year old, having got hurt by being thrown out of a child's carriage. But before we left, another boy was born, whom we named Timothy, after Timothy of old.

The first three years was very unsettled regarding my spiritual progress—could not find food for my soul in the sectarian churches. A Mr. Squires, of the Utah church came to London, who, I learned afterward, was a barber to Brigham Young. He did not teach polygamy; and the teachings he gave us were more in line with truth. He had elders, anointed the sick with oil, baptism, laying on of hands, etc.; so wife and I were baptized by him. It was in a large tank made for that purpose; but he stood outside to do the baptizing. I must say he had more light than the other churches; but it was not long before we found out who he was and came out. This made me feel bad; for I was, as it were, out in the cold. I would go to one church, then to the other, and ask questions; but no one could answer satisfactorily, and my only hope was to live to the light I had and trust God for the rest.

One Saturday night in June, 1882, I was peddling butter, calling at a house where lived a man by the name of William Waterman, who had stepped out from this Mr. Squires. After taking some of my butter, he said to me, "Richard, I have found the true church of Jesus Christ at last."

I said to him, "William, you are a happy man, if you have."

We had a long talk along gospel lines, and I must admit that never in all my life did I feel as much of the influence of the Spirit of God as on that night. It was late before we got through, but before leaving he gave me an epitome of the faith, and said, "Richard, to-morrow is Sunday. Now take my kind advice, sit in the house and read that epitome. Ask God to open your eyes that you may behold the wonders of his law."

I said, "William, I will."

He had prayer, and I left for home at a late hour—or early in the morning. My mind was engaged upon what I had heard. I did not say anything to the wife till daylight. Then I told her that I was going to stop in that morning and read up, informing her of the meeting we had the night before. So after the first meal, I went into the front room; for we had rented three in a tenement house; and all alone I bowed down, asking God to help me by his Spirit in the reading of that leaflet. And I made a vow, telling the Lord if that leaflet was true, I would obey its teachings at any cost; if untrue, and he would help me, I would in a public way expose it, if it took my life, if he would help me.

I took my Bible and the leaflet, and when I got through I was convinced by the Spirit of God that it was divine teaching. My eyes were opened, and I was led to see that I never had been building on the true gospel of Jesus Christ in its fullness, and my old structures had to come down; and I had to seek first the kingdom of God, as taught in the Bible which I claimed to love so much. I could not but thank God for such light divine; and I could not keep from telling it to the beloved wife at once.

She said, "They are Mormons."

I said, "No," and told her I was going to hear them for myself, at a place called Hackney, where Brother Tubb, of Toronto, was then an elder of the branch. While the good wife thought it not wise for me to go, I felt it was my duty to hear for myself. Being satisfied with the leaflet, I wanted to see for myself, so I started on a two-mile journey, reaching the back room where the meetings were held in time for the first meeting at three o'clock, praying as I went for more light, to know my duty to God, as well as to know which was the true church of Jesus Christ, and what the Lord would have me do.

It was a small room, with forms with no backs. As soon as I entered, however, that holy feeling which I enjoyed at Elder Waterman's (for he had been called to that office) was again enjoyed, which was a tower of much spiritual strength to me.

It was sacrament meeting, and of course the emblems were not passed to me. Satan tried to discourage me along these lines; but my object in going was to learn my duty, and to know from God what he would have me do. After this meeting, the evening meal was spread in the same room. Most all the Saints lived far away; so they turned in all their food on the one table, and I was invited to eat with them. All were strangers to me except Brother Waterman; and I told nobody my object in coming till after the prayer meeting which followed the evening preaching meeting. Some went outside to preach or invite the people in. Others made ready for service, which was preaching, followed by a prayer meeting. At the prayer meeting, Sister Bradshaw, wife of Elder Bradshaw, sat two seats behind me, on the east side of the building, while I was on the west. It was not long after the meeting commenced till Sister Bradshaw arose, and, under the power of the Spirit, spoke to me in prophecy. It was wonderful! The words spoken unfolded to me my life from my youth up, and a command from the Lord for me to arise and be baptized, and wash away my sins; for God had a work for me to do. And while he had watched over me, and heard my prayers, the time had come for me to obey the gospel and work for him as his law directed. The Lord said he would bless me in basket and in store; and while many trials awaited me, if faithful to my mission I would be permitted to preach the fullness of the gospel, and to lead many into the kingdom of God. The power of the Spirit of God was so strong that the seat on which I sat shook; and I was lifted to my feet, and I asked permission to speak there. I told my experience, and how the dear Lord had blessed me at Bro. Waterman's; also my study of the leaflet, and my object in coming there, and that I was satisfied God had spoken through his handmaiden in accord with the statement made by Peter as found in Acts 2: 17, that in the last days God would pour out of his Spirit upon all flesh, "and your sons and daughters shall prophesy." I asked for baptism; and the following night, the 5th of June, 1882, Elder W. Waterman baptized me in the River Tee, for the remission of my sins; and Tuesday night was the prayer meeting, and on that evening I was confirmed. With Elder Waterman I was again spoken to, with words of love, with great promises, if faithful. It was a happy time—as we sometimes sing:

"With joy we remember the dawn of that day,
When led by the Spirit the truth to obey.
The light dawned upon us and filled us with love,
The Spirit's sure witness sent down from above."

The wife at this time was much troubled; and while she could see the great change God had wrought in me, she could not see the need of the step to obey. I was at this time in the molding, and coming home at noon for dinner, would go to prayer; and I remember well when the witness of the Spirit came upon me. The Bible was a new book to me. Truly my eyes were opened, and I beheld the wonders of his holy law. This somewhat troubled the good wife; and one morning, after the first meal was over, the dishes still upon the table, she was led to sit down and read her Bible. She opened it to John, where Jesus said to his disciples, "I have many things to say unto you, but you can not bear them now." The beloved wife told me that as she looked upon these words they appeared to her to be raised in letters of gold. It so affected her that she closed the book, and there and then knelt down and began to pray. While doing so she had an open vision. She was permitted to see a beautiful river of water, so clear she saw the pebbles at the bottom, and a man standing in black clothes, in the act of baptizing her therein. It convinced her of the truth of the gospel, and the next evening she was baptized by Elder Bradshaw, then priest; and was confirmed a member of the Church of Christ. This was about the 15th of June. This was a happy season in our home—both in the true church of Christ.

At this time a man by the name of Anderson was paying great attention to my dear mother, who had been a widow over three years; and while I tried in my weak way to tell my dear mother of the light of the gospel, this man, who afterward became my stepfather, was a bitter opponent of the Lord's work, and tried to discourage me with the Mormon question; and while he was not successful in this, yet it seemed to affect my efforts with my mother in receiving the truth.

About this time I had a vision. It was this: I was in a room with a lounge on the east side and a window on the west. I was resting upon the lounge, when my eyes caught sight of a balloon descending from the clouds toward the window. I was led to watch it, and in doing so I found it came to the window and stopped. I did not see any person, but heard a voice which said, "Arise," and I was led to enter. This I did without any fear; and in a little while the balloon went up and went west, and after a while it began to descend, and I was let down upon a lovely land, and the vision closed. I did not understand its meaning. I had read Peter's statement, "Your young men shall see visions," in the last days; but never understood its meaning; for we were taught that all these things were past and gone. However, in a few days a letter came to us from Reverend Sterling Herring, stating he would like to see me. I went about four miles, and after a little talk he said, "I am sending out emigrants to Canada. I hear your wife would like to return, as her people are there. Would you like to go? Yes, or no." I did not know what to say on such short notice. I knew the wife was willing; but having just come into the church, and my people living there, aside from the brother who went with me to Canada in 1870, and none of my people in the true church, I did not of myself want to go. So I said to Mr. Herring, "Will you permit me to go out for one hour, and I will return and decide the important question." He said, "By all means." So I went out, found a park close by, walked therein, then prayed to the Lord for light divine to know what would be for his glory and our good; and in a few minutes the vision came before me, and I learned the interpretation of the same, that I was to go west to Joseph's land; and would be blessed. I returned to Mr. Herring and informed him that we would accept of the kindness; and go. Our tickets were made out, man and wife and four boys—two Canadians, one Yankee, and the English born. We had but three days in which to sell our few things and pack up, to get to Norton Station, then on to Liverpool. To show how the gift coming through Sr. Bradshaw was divine, when through the gift I was told my basket should not be empty, and the storehouse should be filled, I had an egg-shaped bushel basket that I carried my butter in when calling on Elder Waterman. I had a brother-in-law that kept what we call in Canada a general store. He informed me, if I had a basket, and would send it to him or bring it, he would fill it with tastable things for us, as we had to go steerage to London, Canada. This was done, and all made ready, and we reached Liverpool and started for Canada. Who should I find on board ship? Why, the cook that was on the ship when we came to Canada in 1870, twelve years before. He was very pleased to see me, and when he saw my wife and four boys he was surprised. He said, "Richard, I throw good food overboard. Come to me from time to time, and I will help you out." So, with the basket filled by my brother-in-law, and the cook on board, the basket never was empty from the time we left London, England, till we reached London, Canada, about July 4, 1882. So that part of the prophecy came to pass; and in eight years from that time we owned our own homestead, not having a cent to start with—and it has never been empty yet. Coming to London, we soon found the Saints, and had our letters of removal, and put them in at the London Branch; and there they are yet. Our four boys were blessed under the hands of Elders John H. Lake and R. C. Evans, a few days after we landed.

As time went on, I took part in Sunday-school work, teaching a class, till the time came when I was made superintendent of the school; and in 1883 I was called through Apostle J. H. Lake, now patriarch, and ordained to the office of teacher, March 18, under the hands of Elders G. Mottashed and Harrington. In 1884 I was again called through J. H. Lake, and on the 26th of May ordained a priest. And in 1886, at the October conference at St. Mary's, at the early morning prayer meeting, a gift came through J. H. Lake, then president of the Canada Mission, and though I was not in the meeting at the time, but with Bro. William Corbutt on the way driving down from London, we got the evidence while on our way that I would be called to the office of elder. Many gave testimony at the meeting of the call; and we confirmed it when we came in. A vote was taken, and Bro. John Pearson, of Corrinth, and myself, were ordained on the 3d of October, 1886, under the hands of Elders J. A. McIntosh, J. H. Lake, R. C. Evans, and J. Smith. Under all these callings I acted for the London Branch, till I was elected their presiding elder, fulfilling more of the prophecy given through Sr. Bradshaw. While in the eldership I became identified with the Second Quorum of Elders, receiving my license from Elder Arthur Allen, secretary of the quorum.

When returning to Canada, I saw my eldest brother, John, who was to give me my trade—the first time in twelve years; and I have not seen him since. I have tried to bring the gospel before him by correspondence, also to others of the family; but to no avail.

I returned to the molding shop at McClary's till the close of 1899. By this time four daughters were born to us, in the home we still live in. We taught them the truth, bringing them up in the light thereof, both at home and in Sunday school. Though we lived two miles from the church, yet winter and summer I took them to Sunday school. The result was, all of our eight children asked for admittance into the church. Elder R. C. Evans baptized some, and their father the others. Seven are still living. Richard, second oldest boy, enlisted in the American army, and took a disease, and died November 10, 1898. Six of the seven left are now married. The youngest is at home with her mother, unmarried; while our oldest son is to-day the presiding elder of the Fall River Branch.

Leaving the molding December, 1889, I took the missionary field, under the supervision of President R. C. Evans, and am still trying to do my duty as a missionary sent of God and the church.

While laboring as such in the city of Toronto, in 1900, while walking with a Brother Jillot, the Spirit of God came upon me, and I told the brother, who was a deacon, if he was faithful he would be called to a higher office. This came to pass. He was called to the office of teacher through President R. C. Evans. I was informed that if faithful I would be ordained a seventy. I did not tell this to the Brother Jillot; but a little afterward I was permitted to go home to see loved ones; and as Elder R. C. Evans lived then in London, I went to see him. He was glad to see me, and said, "Brother Richard, sit down; I have something good to tell you." I said, "I am a lover of good things. What is it?" He said, "I was praying for my men in the field, and while doing so the Spirit of the Lord came upon me informing me that you should be ordained to the office of seventy." I did not tell Brother Evans of the evidence I had in Toronto till some time afterward; but it was a confirmed one. So at the General Conference of 1900, I was, with others, brought before the body, and my name was accepted, and provision made for my ordination; and at the London District conference, held at Saint Thomas, on the 17th, I was ordained to the office of seventy under the hands of R. C. Evans, Joseph Smith, President of the church, and R. C. Longhurst, president of London District.

Since entering the field, I have been permitted to baptize one hundred and thirty-six, and to organize and help build up the church and kingdom of God.

Much could be said of missionary life. No person knows the up-hill work, as do those who have to travel the same; but believing that the steps of the good man are ordered of the Lord, I still trust him, to endure to the end.

I must say I feel the sacrifice to be a very keen one; for from the day of our marriage I have been a lover of my home. And as my family began to come, we, like Hannah of old, presented them to the Lord. I was, and am still, a lover of children; and to be away from the wife of my youth, and children, is to me the greatest sacrifice I feel I am asked to make.

I could relate many things of interest in answer to prayer; but perhaps I am intruding with my lengthy autobiography, therefore will close with the hope that some one who is starting out in life, may see that God lives to guide and direct the honest in heart to-day as in the past. I ask the faithful prayers of the lovers of truth, that my mission may be rightly filled, so as to hear the "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord."

The stingy man has at least one good trait: He won't pay the cost of folly.

He who will not take advice gets knowledge when trouble overtakes him.

The more one speaks of himself, the less he likes to hear another talked of.

It is not your posterity, but your actions, that will perpetuate your memory.

The most completely lost of all days is the one on which we have not laughed.

Experience is a keen knife that hurts, while it extracts the cataract that blinds.

The difference between having pride and being proud is worth while learning early in life.

With too many persons charity means only the getting rid of what they don't happen to care for.

The man who is always offering to prove what he says himself fixes the public estimate of his morals.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

There is no end to the variety of practical and pressing problems of Sabbath observance that confront one in life; and we should be grateful that this is so. For it helps to keep us clear-headed and discriminating as we seek to know how Christ would have us apply his principles. . . .

There is no such thing as a "necessary" evil; if a thing is necessary, it is not an evil. But there are two evils of which man is in danger.

One is the evil of dulling the keen edge of his conscience, which means, if continued in, breaking down his conscience and character, by entering upon a course concerning the right of which he is not wholly and consciously clear. . . .

The other evil is that of rendering himself inefficient, and thereby greatly hindering his usefulness to God and man by attempting to conform his actions to impossible standards that are not demanded or authorized by the principles of Christ. This was the evil of Phariseism, which Christ especially warned against, and which dishonored the Lord's Day, as it hindered the usefulness of men in God's service. . . .

It is important for him to face the possibility of erring in one or the other of these directions, and then make so sure of God's will for him—as he can—that he shall be saved from either mistake.—Sunday School Times.

WHY ARE ALL CHRISTIAN NATIONS ARMED TO THE TEETH.—NOS. 1 and 2.

(Editor's Note.—The following appeared in the Boston Globe for July 3. Rev. B. F. Trueblood is general secretary of the American Peace Society, and the Reverend Van Allen is rector of the Church of the Advent, Boston. Numbers 3 and 4 will follow next week.)

A SPURIOUS PATRIOTISM.

BY BENJAMIN F. TRUEBLOOD.

That is a hard question to answer. It is easy enough to say that the Christian nations are armed to the teeth simply because they are not Christians. That is certainly true, if the standard of measurement be a genuine, all-round Christianity. But such an answer throws little or no light on the subject.

In their private relations the men of the Christian nations live together largely in a spirit of confidence and mutual helpfulness. They have long ago given up personal fighting and arming themselves for personal defense or the redress of personal grievances and injuries. Questions in dispute between them are settled by direct conference, through the mediation of friends or are carried to the courts, where disinterested judges examine the cases and say where, in their judgment, justice lies. The system of law and of courts for its administration is one of the greatest triumphs of our civilization. In this respect much of genuine Christianity is manifested and the rights of men are for the most part well cared for, in spite of the law's delay and the imperfections of the courts.

In their corporate national capacity, on the other hand, the citizens of the different nations have failed to realize that the spirit and the principles of Christianity know no race and no national boundary. Love and law, brotherhood and coöperation, have been assumed to stop at the border. Ethics have been held practically, if not theoretically, to be national and racial instead of universal.

In their relations to each other the nations, up to recent decades, have indeed behaved toward one another very much like savages and barbarians. Those of other lands and other races have been treated often like wild animals, to be killed off at pleasure and to have their lands appropriated. Might has been selfishly and blindly exalted into the place of right, and in every country a spurious and deadly patriotism has very largely prevailed.

The present system of "armed peace," which is in many respects as ruinous as war, is the result of these perverted and false conceptions and of the bad habits and policies which have grown out of them. Christian men, really Christian in the gospel sense of the term, have protested over and over again against these absurd and scandalous international conceptions and practices, but they have been sent to a back seat by the majority, by those who have been only imperfectly Christian or Christian only in a nominal sense.

The situation into which the nations have thus come is monstrous, both in its absurdity and its iniquitousness. The hopeful thing is that some clear consciousness of this fact is already dawning in most countries. Men are beginning as never before to think of each other across the boundary lines as brothers, as members of a common family, as children of a common father. Justice, love and mutual service are increasingly conceived to be universal and the racial gods are fast disappearing. In other words, men are coming to understand better the spirit and the teachings of the Christ, whom they profess to follow and from whom they derive their name.

A LESSON TAUGHT AT RENO.

"I couldn't come back, boys," Jeffries gasped to his friends as he was lifted off the ropes to save him the humiliation of being counted out. It is the old story, which is still so for ever new that there is always a man ready to believe himself the exception needed to prove the rule. What we have lost of value in the result at Reno is not glory, for there would have been no glory in a Jeffries victory. It is not money, for though money has been lost to individuals, the loss is not to the race. The loss is of a practical demonstration of a means by which a man who has gone the pace can have a reasonable hope of rehabilitating himself. If Jeffries could have "come back," every man who has ever gone a pace would have studied his methods of training and regimen with a view to getting back to what he himself was when at his best. This is a real loss; the loss of a hope to many men that there is a road back and that Jeffries would chart it on the map. They mourn now as those without hope that they may ever again be bad and feel good at the same time. Now they know that they must be good and feel bad at the same time, to the end of the chapter.

If Jeffries had "come back" we might have been afflicted with floods of advertising matter purporting to tell us what he ate and drank during his long walk in getting back. This might have made a new boom in breakfast foods. It might have given a vogue to some sort of aperient water. It might have raised a loud call for some particular style of bath mitts. These possible calamities we are now spared. The black cloud has its silver lining, after all, and it may even have a golden lining if the youth of the land, they who are traveling the gait now, and raising a dust to hide the milestones as they go by them, can grasp the moral of the Reno story, and not wait until they get to the point where the road turns before they turn back. If a man, in turning, turns before his stomach does, it will follow him, and he will then be "coming back." If the stomach turns first, he must follow it and will then be "going back." Jeffries did not turn first, and was really "going back" when he thought he was "coming back."

Every day of wild-oat sowing is sunshiny, no matter what the weather. The seed strikes root in a warm soil, but there is nothing of what farmers call "a crop stand" until after the rainy days begin. The rainy days begin with that change of seasons which brings strange internal emotions and eruptions resulting in strange and unfamiliar sensations of pain. He who waits for the rainy days is lost and can never get back. For with the rains come a seemingly spontaneous upspringing of the crop of wild oats which, having struck deep root in the years of sunshine, is now ripe unto an abundant harvest. A crop of wild oats is the only crop which can be and must be harvested in the rain. And there is no such thing as getting away from the job or doing it under umbrellas. Jeffries waited for the rains and then tried to use an umbrella in his harvesting. If he had stopped sowing before the rains began he would have had no crop to harvest. But we must credit him with proving the impossibility of a man "coming back" after going a hard pace even up to the early age of thirty-three years. We must also credit him with having made the hardest and most earnest fight ever made by a man to restore the powers of youth. The length and earnestness of this long-sustained effort, when set against its complete failure at Reno, shows and illustrates the truth so plainly that any youngster who hereafter persists in thinking that he can harvest his wild oats under an umbrella will have to be set down as of the class of unintelligent individuals of whom it is so often said that they can't be convinced. And so, in passing, prize fighting may have left us something worth while, if American youth are capable of learning the lesson Jeffries went to Reno to teach them. A great lesson was taught at Reno. The same lesson is taught in the Book of Proverbs, but that is only by precept. Jeffries has taught it by example. He fulfills Scripture in going down and out. —Saint Louis Globe-Democrat.

SAILOR'S PRAYER.

BY WILLIAM WHITING.

(William Whiting, for many years master at Winchester College Chorister's school, when he wrote this hymn, in 1861, did not know that it would become a familiar institution of ocean travel. On Sunday, when the passengers gather in the main saloon for divine service, this hymn always is included in the order of worship. Its peculiar appropriateness has associated it inseparably with that occasion in the minds of all travelers. It always is sung to "Melita," by Dykes.)

Eternal Father, strong to save,
Whose arm doth bind the restless wave,
Who bidd'st the mighty ocean deep
Its own appointed limits keep:
O hear us when we cry to thee
For those in peril on the sea.

O Savior, whose almighty word
The winds and waves submissive heard,
Who walkedst on the foaming deep,
And calm amid its rage didst sleep;
O hear us when we cry to thee
For those in peril on the sea.

O Sacred Spirit, who didst brood
Upon the chaos dark and rude,
Who bad'st its angry tumult cease,
And gavest light and life and peace;
O hear us when we cry to thee
For those in peril on the sea.

O Trinity of love and power,
Our brethren shield in danger's hour;
From rock and tempest, fire and foe,
Protect them wheresoe'er they go;
And ever let there rise to thee
Glad hymns of praise from land and sea.

SONG OF THE SERAPHS.

BY MATTHEW BRIDGES.

(Matthew Bridges, born in England July 14, 1800, was educated in the Episcopal Church and afterward became a Roman Catholic. He wrote many beautiful religious poems and in 1852 he published a book containing this hymn. Sung to the tune "Diademata," it is one of the most stirring as well as one of the most beautiful hymns. It is used to-day by churches of every creed and in every land.)

Crown him with many crowns,
The Lamb upon his throne;
Hark! how the heavenly anthem drowns
All music but its own;
Awake, my soul, and sing,
Of him who died for thee,
And hail him as thy matchless King
Through all eternity.

Crown him the Lord of love;
Behold his hands and side,
Rich wounds, yet visible above,
In beauty glorified;
No angel in the sky
Can fully bear that sight,
But downward bends his burning eye
At mysteries so bright.

Crown him the Lord of peace,
Whose power a scepter sways
From pole to pole, that wars may cease,
And all be prayer and praise;
His reign shall know no end,
And round his pierced feet
Fair flowers of paradise extend Their fragrance ever sweet.

Crown him the Lord of years,
The Potentate of time,
Creator of the rolling spheres,
Ineffably sublime!
All hail! Redeemer, hail!
For thou hast died for me;
Thy praise shall never, never fail
Throughout eternity.

EXPERIENCE.

Behold yon rough and flinty road
Where youth, now youth no more,
Gropes whining, seeking crumbs of loaves
He cast away of yore.
—Emma Ghent Curtis in the January Century.

"Quality, not quantity, as a motto for mothers, is a false cry, founded neither on facts of record nor theories of accuracy. Washington was one of a family of ten. Jefferson was one of eight children. The small family is not necessarily of high quality.

"Race suicide fills the homes for crippled children, the asylums and prisons. How respectable women can advocate practices so contrary to the laws of man and of God, is a mystery beyond comprehension."

HOW THE INDIAN CORN GROWS.

The children came in from the field with their hands full of the soft, pale green corn silk. Annie had rolled hers into a bird's nest; while Willie had dressed his little sister's hair with the long, damp tresses, until she seemed more like a mermaid, with pale blue eyes shining out between the locks of her sea green hair, than like our own Alice.

They brought their treasures to the mother, who sat on the doorstep of the farmhouse, under the tall, old elm tree that had been growing there ever since her mother was a child. She praised the beauty of the bird's nest, and kissed the little mermaid to find if her lips tasted of salt water, but then she said, "Don't break any more of the silk, dear children, else we shall have no ears of corn in the field,—none to roast before our picnic fires, and none to dry and pop at Christmas time next winter."

Now, the children wondered at what their mother said, and begged that she would tell them how the silk could make the round, full kernels of corn. And this is the story that the mother told, while they all sat on the doorstep under the old elm.

"When your father broke up the ground with his plow, and scattered in the seed corn, the crows were watching from the old apple tree, and they came down to pick up the corn, and, indeed, they did carry away a good deal. But the days went by, the spring showers moistened the earth, and the sun shone; and so the seed corn swelled, and, bursting open, thrust out two little hands, one reaching down to hold itself firmly in the earth, and one reaching up to the light and air. The first was never very beautiful, but certainly quite useful; for, besides holding the corn firmly in its place, it drew up water and food for the whole plant; but the second spread out two long, slender, green leaves, that waved with every breath of air, and seemed to rejoice in every ray of sunshine. Day by day it grew taller and taller, and by and by put out new streamers, broader and stronger, until it stood higher than Willie's head. Then, at the top, came a new kind of bud, quite different from those that folded the green streamers; and when that opened, it showed a nodding flower, which swayed and bowed at the top of the stalk like the crown of the whole plant. And yet this was not the best that the corn could do; for lower down, and partly hidden by the leaves, it had hung out a silken tassel of pale sea green color, like the hair of a little mermaid. Now, every silken thread was in truth a tiny tube, so fine that our eyes can not see the bore of it. The nodding flower that grew so gayly up above there was day by day ripening a golden dust called pollen; and every grain of this pollen—and they were very small grains indeed—knew perfectly well that the silken threads were tubes, and they felt an irresistible desire to enter the shining passages, and explore them to the very end: so one day, when the wind was tossing the whole blossoms this way and that, the pollen grains danced out, and, sailing down on the soft breeze, each one crept in at the open door of a sea green tube. Down they slid over the shining floors; and what was their delight to find, when they reached the end, that they had all along been expected, and for each one was a little room prepared, and sweet food for their nourishment! And from this time they had no desire to go away, but remained each in his own place, and grew every day stronger and larger and rounder, even as baby in the cradle there, who has nothing to do but grow.

"Side by side were their cradles, one beyond another in beautiful straight rows, and as the pollen grains grew daily larger, the cradles also grew for their accommodation, until at last they felt themselves really full of sweet, delicious life; and those who lived at the tops of the rows peeped out from the opening of the dry leaves which wrapped them all together, and saw a little boy with his father coming through the cornfield, while yet everything was beaded with dew, and the sun was scarcely an hour high. The boy carried the basket; and the father broke from the corn stalks the full, firm ears of sweet corn, and heaped the basket full."

"Oh, mother," cried Willie, "that was father and I! Don't you remember how we used to go out last summer every morning before breakfast to bring in the corn? And we must have taken that very ear; for I remember how the full kernels lay in straight rows, side by side, just as you have told."

Now Alice is breaking her threads of silk, and trying to see the tiny opening of the tube, and Annie thinks she will look for the pollen grains the very next time she goes to the cornfield.—Jane Andrews in the Stories Mother Nature Told Her Children.

WHAT ROOTS ARE FOR.

When a seed sprouts, the root, I have told you, goes down into the ground, while the stalk goes upward into the air. The root goes down because the food of the plant is in the ground. It is the business of the root to suck up this food, so that the plant may be nourished and grow. The root is, then, a sort of stomach to the plant. If it had no root it would not grow, any more than you would if you had no stomach to put your food in.

The root has little mouths in its branches everywhere. It is by these that the food of the plant is sucked up. They are so small that you can not see them without a powerful microscope. They are in the fine parts or fibers of the root that you see hanging to the main branches of it when you take up a root. We are very careful not to break off these fibers when we take up a plant or tree to set it out again in another place, for the more of these little mouths there are, the more likely will it be to live. If all the fibers be broken off from the root the plant can not live, because there are no mouths to suck up the food. It will die just as you would if you should stop eating.

As there are little mouths all over the fibers of a root, there must be a multitude of them. You can not count them any more than you can count the sands on the seashore. These mouths drink up a fluid from the ground. This fluid is the sap that goes up in the stalk to nourish the plant. Everything in the plant—the leaves, the flowers, the fruit—is made, as I have told you before, from the sap that the root sucks up.—From The Child's Book of Nature.

Questions on August Reading.

Mother.—Now, I want you to let that corn silk alone!

Children.—Why must we let it alone?

Mother.—Because I say so.

Which sounds the more familiar, this conversation, or the one between the mother and children in the story? Why is the method employed by the latter mother the better of the two? Of what benefit to the children would such explanations be?

When a seed sprouts what does it send out? What is the work of the roots? How is this performed? What is sent upward from the grain of corn? Of what country is corn a native? What other grain is mentioned as corn in the Bible? What is the office of the corn tassel? What is the form of the silk? What is the destination of the pollen? How is it received? In what are all ears of corn similar? Why is it good for mothers to be prepared with answers to these questions? How are the minds of children affected by gaining information of this kind?

MILLET, ALBERTA.

Dear Herald: I have located here now having bought out Mr. Grant and will in the future make my home at Millet where the family lived for ten years and then moved away for about seven months but was not satisfied, being separated from our church as we were. Here, we have a lively little branch with all officers to fill a branch and a goodly number of members and a fine Sabbath school all working in harmony and we feel grateful to our heavenly Father to once more be associated as we are. If any of our brethren wish any information about this country write me at Millet, Alberta, Canada, and I will advise them the best I know. Crops and everything are fine here and always have been since I have been here. There is plenty of homestead land about fifty miles west of Millet and I would love to see a lot of our saints settle there where they can have good homes of their own. I am willing to do all I can to instruct them about the country. With love and good wishes to all of God's people, and praying always for the advancement of our Father's work and the upbuilding of his kingdom, I am,

Your colaborer,

F. T. COATS.

CHICO, CALIFORNIA, July 10, 1910.

Dear Herald: Chico is still in the fight. We are having interesting meetings at our new chapel and good attendance. We have a good many strangers at our Sunday services from time to time and especially the Sunday school. We have many children there whose parents are not members of the church, but who like our Sunday school better than any other in town. The people are growing more favorable to us than at any time since our work was opened here.

We were called to preach the funeral sermon of Sr. Mary E. Severy, July 4, 1910. Services were in our chapel. Fifty-eight were present, many of them strangers. The many floral pieces bore an eloquent testimony of the high esteem in which our dear sister was held. We have had two funerals and two weddings in two weeks. On Monday, the first wedding was Sr. Inez Morrell and Mr. Harvey, June 20, 1910, and on July 3 we joined Sr. Lillie Shoemaker and Bro. John White in holy bonds of wedlock. The other funeral was one of our shop mates, a member of no church who scoffed at all religion, but when he realized his time had come he said, "John, I want you to pray for me." How often do we find this to be true. Men, when in the full bloom of health, ridicule religion and God, but when their time comes to pass over they happen to see their need of God. Let us be watchful and prayerful, ever abounding in the work of God, so that when our time comes to pass over the dark waters we shall be ready.

Yours in bonds,

J. S. HOMMIS.

ONAWA, IOWA, July 13, 1910.

Dear Herald: When I read of Brother Fowler's letter telling of the wonderful healing of his son I could not help but think, Why is it we never hear of that unless it is through the one healed or some one that wants to give God the glory and praise. I remember one time when my youngest son was small he was quite sick, and his aunt, his father, sister, and my mother-in-law were at our house. His aunt said he looked just like he was dead when he had his eyes closed and she begged me to give him some medicine. I told her that I always trusted to using the consecrated oil and to God to heal us, but she said, "You are out of the oil." I told her God could heal him without the oil, but she insisted so on my giving him something when she went to start home, telling me of a remedy her mother-in-law used, that I thought I would give him some. I started to prepare it for him. As I started to get it the thought came to me that in my prayer that morning for my boy, I had promised that God's name should have the praise if he was healed, and I knew if I gave him anything, God's name would not get the praise, so I just trusted him to God's care and the girl that was working for me said she never saw a child get well so fast.

But what seems so strange to me is that the papers will be full of healing done by such men as Dr. T. E. Yoakum, from California, who was in Sioux City this spring. Every day the Sioux City paper had something about him in it. Some went to him from Onawa and a dear old blind lady living in Onawa was feeling badly because she could not go to him while he was there. Her husband's niece, living in Sioux City, sent her handkerchief that the doctor had blessed and told her to put it on her eyes and pray to God and perhaps she would receive her sight. The paper stated there were several helped and some healed by him while he was in Sioux City. But I was thankful that no one from Onawa was benefited by going to him. Not that I do not want to see all healed in the right way, but I felt that if any healing was done to anyone in Onawa, through that means, it would lead so many from the truth to follow false teachings. I was especially anxious about my blind friend, for she has so many relatives and friends in Onawa who would be led wrong if she had been benefited.

While we were living in Onawa she desired me to get some consecrated oil for her to try on her eyes. She knew that I never used any medicine and when she asked me, I tried to make it plain to her that I could only put the oil on her eyes and pray for her, that it would take an elder with authority to anoint her eyes; that all I hoped for was that the pain would leave. Her niece told me she said when I put the oil on her eyes and prayed for her, it seemed just like she ought to see, but the severe pain grew less in her eyes. After a long time she was sick for a few days and the pain came back. She wanted the doctor to give her something to stop the pain, it was so severe, but he said he was afraid to, for fear it would go to her heart. I was over to see her and she was suffering, so I asked her if she wanted some consecrated oil put on her eyes. I told her we knew if God saw fit to stop the pain it could not hurt her, and she wanted me to, and after I had put the oil on her eyes and prayed for her, she soon went to sleep. She wants to be administered to if she gets the chance. I wish Bro. Hubert Case could administer to her, for we know God can heal her eyes if it is his will. I also desire to see my neighbors and friends in Onawa and all accept the true gospel.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may be faithful. My desire is to be worthy of God's blessings.
MRS. MOLLIE LUKECART.

COOKES POINT, TEXAS, July 12, 1910.

Editors Herald: I have just read a synopsis of a debate held at Kirbyville by Bro. W. M. Aylor and J. W. Chism, of the Christian Church. I once held a debate with Mr. Chism of twelve sessions upon church propositions. He is an able debater. I think I understand his tactics; I see that he continues to contend that Joseph Smith is the beast referred to in the thirteenth chapter of Revelations. His proof for this is that the numerical letters of the Greek alphabet that it takes to spell "Joseph Smith," when added up, make just six hundred and sixty-six, the number of the beast referred to. Now let us see whether Mr. Chism is right or not; we will measure him up by one of his brethren.

I have had a book in my possession written by a Campbellite preacher by name of J. M. Martin. This book is an interpretation of the book of Revelation as given by Saint John; it is a very able work. On page 208 of said book, we have what Elder Martin understood the beast of Revelation thirteen to be: "The Hebrew and Greek letters are all numericals, each letter stands for a number; hence the propriety of saying let the scholar count what the number of these letters are that spell the name of the beast, for it is the number of a man. In the Greek language, the Latin kingdom, when spelled out, and the numbers for which each letter stands placed in a line and added up, is six hundred and sixty-six. Lateinos was the first king of that kingdom; and when the letters that spell his name are placed in a line, and the numbers for which they stand are added together, it is six hundred and sixty-six. But the strangest of it is, that the word Rome, in the Hebrew, when the numbers for which the letters stand are added together, is six hundred and sixty-six. These three could hardly meet accidentally; the chances are against it. It is the Latin kingdom, the number of the beast, six hundred and sixty-six. It is Rome, the number of the beast, six hundred and sixty-six. Scholars have to settle that matter, but it is plain without that. The Latin kingdom took the place of old pagan Rome, and has been wearing out the saints; for twelve hundred and sixty years it drove the church of Christ into the wilderness." The foregoing is a verbatim extract from Elder J. M. Martin's book, the "voice of seven thunders."

We see there is a great difference in the interpretation given by Martin and Chism, both pose as scholars and are representatives of the same church. Which one of them are we to believe? Both can not be right. For my part I rather believe that Elder Martin is nearer right, than Chism; the fact is I know of no better interpretation of the matter than Martin gives. To my mind the interpretation that Chism gives is ridiculous.

I have debated with a number of these Campbellite preachers, and have found that no two of them agree as to the teaching of the church they represent. They remind me of the old saying, They are like the "Indian's flea." When you think you have your finger on them, you will find when you look under your finger, that they are not there.

I have written this letter for the defense of the good cause, and that the brethren may have the privilege of using it when they come in contact with Chism. Remember that the interpretation given is of the beast referred to, in Revelation 13: 18. That is the one that Martin and Chism both referred to.

We expect to attend a reunion near Hearne, in Robertson County, commencing on next Friday, to continue for ten days. Brn. W. M. Aylor and R. M. Maloney are in our neighborhood now, on their way to the reunion. We expect to have a good meeting, and much good to result from it. The work in Texas is and has been rather on a standstill for some time. We are very desirous for a real revival of the work soon. I am yours for the truth and righteousness now and for ever.

E. W. NUNLEY.

PORTLAND, OREGON, July 6, 1910.

Dear Herald: On Thursday, June 23, at 8 a. m. about twenty of the Portland Saints took the new and fast river steamer Chas. R. Spencer for a ninety-eight and one half mile trip up the scenic Columbia River to attend the Portland District Sunday school convention and conference to be held at Hood River, Oregon. At Vancouver, Washington, some ten more Saints came aboard and in company with about one hundred passengers prepared for a day of great pleasure, especially so to a lover of grand and beautiful scenery. The day was perfect and we were not disappointed, arriving at the boat landing at Hood River about 3 p. m.

This is a little city of about three thousand inhabitants situated at the confluence of the Hood and Columbia Rivers among the Cascade range of mountains, beautiful for scenery, with snow-capped Mount Hood just a few miles south and Mount Adams to the north on the Washington side of the Columbia, a place become famous throughout the world for its apples and strawberries which grow in the Hood River valley, but a valley of high altitude, delightful for climate. The city of Hood River is built upon the sloping side of a hill and the district tent had been set up and a dining hall built in a grove of firs on the top of the hill upon land belonging to Elder N. L. Chapman. A cook had been hired and everybody was made welcome and fed free of expense. Each boat and train throughout Friday and Saturday brought more visitors until another store was set up and another cook hired, the brethren and sisters, both old and young, waiting on the tables and washing and wiping dishes. The dining hall was built of boards with canvass roof, decorated with red, white, and blue bunting and American flags and the motto, "Cheer up," in sprigs of evergreen. Two long tables neatly covered with white oilcloth were filled over and over again with the choicest of viands. On Sunday, twenty fat fowls were cooked for dinner and about one hundred and twenty-five were fed at the tables, all free of cost to visiting Saints, the Hood River Saints with their families also eating at the hall, giving all an opportunity to cultivate the social side of life and become acquainted with each other. Bro. H. W. Chapman was steward and right nobly did he fill his position.

The district tent had a large platform built along the side with three arches in front, also decorated with the national colors, the center and tallest arch bearing the word welcome in evergreen. On either side the words, "Our creed, all truth."

On Friday, the district Sunday school association held its convention, beginning at 10 a. m. for a business session in charge of district superintendent. At 2.30 p. m. an educational program was rendered consisting of papers pertaining to Sunday school work, interspersed with music and song. In the evening, an entertainment was given by the Hood River, Portland, and Vancouver Sunday schools, in charge of Bro. N. T. Chapman, assistant superintendent, which was well done and educational in character. On Saturday the district conference was held, both president and assistant being reelected. R. E. Chapman was elected secretary and treasurer and Sr. Mary Harvey as member of library board.

Sunday at 8 a. m. the Saints met for a social service in charge of district superintendent. At 2.30 p. m. an educational program was rendered, which was accompanied by much of the Holy Spirit speaking in commendation of the step taken by a number of the young men, also exhorting them to preparation and diligence for the work to which a number had lately been called, three having been ordained priests and one deacon, just previous to the conference. At 10 a. m. a session of Sunday school in charge of district officers followed by a sermon by Elder N. V. Sheldon. At 3 p. m., Elder T. W. Chatburn gave us a good sermon, although he rather objected to preaching to such a well-filled audience. In the evening Elder E. Keeler preached to a crowded tent, many of them outsiders. Several of the Saints had taken the evening train for their homes, but their places were filled and many gathered outside to hear who could not find room within.

I have heard that the meetings have continued every evening since with good interest, as your correspondent took this boat on Monday morning for Portland. The meetings are in charge of the district presidency, assisted by Elder N. V. Sheldon and Priest Carl Balding, one of the young men lately ordained, who performed his first baptism on Sunday at the conference, baptizing Miss Eva, daughter of Elder H. W. Chapman. Our old friend of many years, T. W. Chatburn, came to Portland with us, visiting for a few days and seeing the sights of the wonderful city, taking the steamer Breakwater on Sunday, the 3d inst., for Coos Bay to his mission field and son Frank and family. Eastern Oregon was represented at conference by Saints from Condon and The Dalles.

Among other kindnesses of the Hood River Saints, who only number about thirty-eight, they hired teams and met us at the boat carrying us and baggage free to and from the tent ground, which was more like a reunion than anything else held in this district, and long to be remembered by those who had the privilege of attending. Our last February conference held at Portland amid storms and rain and wind was an initial one in the powerful influence of the Holy Spirit, straightening out tangles, overcoming difficulties that human wisdom could not overcome. At this one, the weather was ideal and will be one more of the pleasant and happy recollections of the past, hoping that love and harmony will still continue and many more blessed experiences be enjoyed at coming conferences.

REPORTER.

BISBEE, ARIZONA, July 14, 1910.

Editors Herald: On the 16th of June we took our leave from home and loved ones, a wife and three children left to fight the battles of life alone, the eldest child being but four years and the youngest but two weeks old; yet under these conditions we were obliged to go feeling the responsibility of our calling. Bidding them good-bye we took the car for Kansas City where we had intended to take the Southwest Limited for El Paso, Texas. We reached the city in due time and purchased our ticket and made ready to board the flyer, but were informed that the train carried only Pullman passengers and we would have to pay six dollars extra fare. We did not have the price, so had to wait until 3 p. m. and take the slow train. The time went slowly, but it served as a good patience stretcher, and finally we found ourself aboard the train making our way towards our new field of labor.

After riding all that night and the next day we reached El Paso and were there compelled to stay over night, due to the fact that we could not take our first train. We did not have much cash to spare, as we had only received enough to pay our fare, so we had to figure closely; but at length decided to take a fifty-cent room and get a little rest and let supper and breakfast go, thinking we could get along all right without such luxuries as that, since wife had put us up a lunch when we left, the last of which we had eaten the noon previous. As we retired we thought of the scripture which says, "The sleep of a laboring man is sweet, whether he eat little or much," and we therefore had a good night's rest and at 7.30 the next morning we took the train for Bisbee, and of all the rides we ever had this was the dustiest. After an all day's ride over the deserts of Arizona we reached our destination at about 5 p. m.

As we stepped on the platform with our grips a man stepped up and asked, "Is this Vanderwood? My name is Farley." We shook hands and he had my grips, which were filled mostly with books and therefore were anything but light, hauled to his home away up the canyon.

We were then taken into the grocery store and introduced to Brother Lamb, the branch president, and the two took me to the barber shop where the barber removed a little of the Arizona dust from my head and face, after which we were presentable enough to go to supper. Sister Farley, of course, had something good to eat and we felt at home there, as we used to know the "hostess," only by another name, as we always used to call her Sister Condit.

We have found the Saints here worthy the name they bear and we are trying to assist them in building up the work.

They all seem to have the fault (?) of having something good to eat and the result of it is the elder is getting fat, and with the treatment we have received thus far, think we will be able to get along without making any complaints.

Have been preaching on the streets as is customary for me, and also visiting with those who seem to be interested.

We hope by a persistent effort to be able to reach the honest-hearted ones and teach them the gospel of Christ and its power to save men and thus enable them to turn thereto and live.

The language of our Master is worthy of notice which says, "My Father worked hitherto and I work." And it suggests to us the idea of work, that work of love that is able to better the race and fit man for an abode with God. Ever hopeful, I remain your servant,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

MOUNT CARMEL, ILLINOIS, July 19, 1910.

Dear Herald: I am truly glad that I am a Latter Day Saint and am glad that my parents belong. I am staying with my aunt. There is no Sunday school of our own here. All the Sunday school I have is the Bible. I love to read it and try to convince my uncle the best I can. We all have our trials. I know I am not perfect but I try to live better every day. I was baptized when I was nine years old. I have been healed many times by the Lord. The year after I was baptized I nearly had the typhoid fever and I sent for Bro. I. A. Morris. He administered to me and I immediately began to get better and I was soon up. I thank the Lord for the grand things he can do. Dear Saints, pray for me that I may hold out faithful to the end. I will pray too.

Your sister in the one faith,

ROXANNA BING.

SAINT BERNARD, OHIO.

Dear Herald: Permit me to write a short letter to the dear Saints, as I have received a number of HERALDS and Ensigns from them. My cup runneth over with joy, and I feel impressed that I should do my part, be it ever so small, at all times.

Bro. C. A. Martin, of Pittsburg, sent me forty HERALDS. I thank him very much for them and the kind letter he sent me. I received a letter and some papers from J. T. Johnson of Kansas City, for which I thank him very much, also from Bro. J. F. Mintun of Des Moines, Iowa, and from others whom I do not know. I thank them all.

Some of the brethren said they would do anything to help me, but all I ask is to pray for me. God will hear the prayers of the righteous. I know I am in the battle until the conflict is over and the victory is won.

I just received some more HERALDS from Bro. O. T. Williams, and a letter from Covington, Kentucky; also a letter from Wellston, Ohio. I thank them all. I would like to hear from Uncle I. S. Morris, at Xenia, Illinois. The last time I saw Brother Morris in the pulpit, he said if I would straighten up and do right, I had a work to do. I will live to fulfill that word. Pray for me.

CASTANA, IOWA, July 14, 1910.

Dear Herald: Greeting and love to all the Saints. God is manifesting his love for us in many ways and we are more in love with the gospel now than ever. Will Bro. Alvin Knisley please write us, for we have secured an opening for preaching, one candidate for baptism, and two babies to bless.

Yours in the faith,

GEORGE AND SADIE BURCH.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. L. L. Gott, Saint Bernard, Ohio: "My heart has been made to rejoice in the prayers of the dear Saints. God has comforted me with his Holy Spirit and I will say that I know God will redeem me if I will pray and do his will. God has blessed me in times past and at this time he is blessing the labors of my hands at this place."

News From Branches.

FLINT, MICHIGAN.

On reading of the request for branch news in the HERALD and other church papers, our branch appointed a press committee. We are going to send you the items of what we are doing in the great "vehicle city" of Michigan once a month. At present we are holding meetings in a tent near the corner of Dort and Baker streets. We have prayer service at 10 a. m., Sunday school at 11, and preaching at 7.30 p. m. Prayer meeting is held on Wednesday evening at 7.30 p. m. and Religio is held Friday evening at 7.30 p. m. Elder D. E. Dowker is president of our branch. We number about ninety members besides many who have not as yet joined our branch. In all there is about one hundred and twenty-five Saints in Flint.

The work is progressing finely here. All services are well attended. Our tent is filled and a crowd on the outside. Elder Arthur Allen, of Detroit, was with us last Monday evening and we enjoyed a fine sermon. Many are investigating and about a month ago about eight were baptized. Truly God is blessing his people. Many times God has owned and blessed us as his children.

This morning we were greatly blessed in our prayer service. Every word that was uttered was in admonition. We felt that God was with us and it gave us courage to press on.

We have purchased a lot and expect soon to build a church that we may have a meeting place to invite God to and all those who are seeking after more righteousness. We had a fine Sunday school and also a good lively Religio. Our young people have organized an orchestra and we intend to cultivate the gift of music and song as we have been admonished to, by the voice of God's Spirit. I will close now before my letter gets too lengthy. Remember us in your prayers that we may be blessed in our efforts, in the advancement of this glorious work.
I am your sister in Christ,

JENNIE BENJAMIN.

NOTICE TO BRANCH CLERKS.

Members Absent from the Branch: Under this heading on the branch report should be counted and reported only those who reside at a distance from the meeting place which would make it inconvenient or impractical for them to attend the regular services of the branch by reason of such distance. These should be counted and reported each time a report is made to a conference on the regular report form.

Those members who reside near enough to attend the services with reasonable convenience but absent themselves for reasons of their own could not be properly considered absent members, but rather are subjects for the attention of the proper branch officers.

Branches do not have "scattered members," this term properly being applied only to those members who do not belong to any branch.

Died.

SEVERY.—Mary Ellen Severy was born February 1, 1883, at Stewartville, Missouri, and died in Chico, California. She was baptized by Bro. L. A. Parkin at Santa Rosa, California, November 11, 1894, and was married to Bro. F. A. Severy May 26, 1906, at Berkeley, California, by Bro. J. M. Terry.

LANPHIER.—Sr. C. K. Lanphier, of Logan, Iowa, was born July 15, 1843, in Broom, Canada, and died July 2, 1910, at her home, Logan, Iowa. She was married to Edgar R. Lanphier October 17, 1860. To them were born eight children, four having died in infancy. The four remaining are Alberta King, of Visalia, California; Sr. May Benc and Fred Lanphier of Logan, Iowa; and Sr. Little Adamson, of Pomona, California. She was a faithful member of the church, being baptized on June 27, 1879, by Elder J. C. Johnson and confirmed by Elders J. C. Crabb and George S. Hyde. A good mother, a kind and loving sister, and a faithful loyal Saint has gone to her well-earned rest. The funeral service was held at Saints' chapel, Logan, Iowa, July 5, 1910. Funeral sermon by Elder W. R. Adams.

PLAIN.—Near Lamoni, Iowa, May 8, 1910, Sr. Sallie A., wife of Bro. William Plain, died at the age of thirty-four years. She left her husband and five young children. Family lived in Oklahoma for some years and there she was baptized by Bro. J. H. Baker. She was faithful unto death. Funeral services were in charge of Brn. O. A. Bender and D. D. Young, and Bro. H. A. Stebbins preached the sermon.

The People Making a Law.

Sir, let me say, in a somewhat broader view, passing from the historical fact and the immediate subject, that I have no faculties to apprehend what in the world is meant by the people making a law. What a popular law is we all know. We know what an unpopular law is. We know too very well what is meant by the legislature as a convention, or by a convention proper, proposing amendments of the constitution to the people and their adoption of them.

But when gentlemen talk of the people making a law, under the constitution as it is; without change of the constitution; or of uniting with the legislature to make a law which is irrevocable, I am completely mystified. The constitution knows nothing of such a thing as this. The constitution knows no way in which the people can take a power from the legislature but by acting directly on the constitution itself and amending it. It knows nothing about enactments or decrees, or ordinances of anybody, half way between the constitution and the law; neither one nor the other; in form mere statute, in effect omnipotent and irrevocable. It knows nothing of a partnership in law-making, between the people and the legislature; and it is (permit me to say) a disparaging idolatry and not a true religion, which thus confounds creature and creator, and destroys the identity and misunderstands the functions of both.

Sir, that same bill of rights which so solicitously separates executive, judicial, and legislative powers from each other, "to the end," in the fine and noble expression of Harrington, borrowed from the ancient prudence—one of those historical phrases of the old glorious school of liberty of which this bill of rights is so full—and which phrases I entreat the good taste of my accomplished friends in my eye, to whom it is committed, to spare in their very rust, as they would spare the general English of the Bible—"to the end it may be a government of laws and not of men;" that same bill of rights separates the people, with the same solicitude and the same reason, from every part of their actual government—"to the end it may be a government of laws and not of men." And what functions does it reserve or assign to the people? It makes them creators of legislatures.

It leaves to them to make and unmake the frame of the government; to establish, define, and reconstruct its great departments, and clothe them with their several powers to elect to office; to remove from office, to set and keep the whole stupendous agency in motion. And this done the people repose on their sovereignty and supervise their servants each in their several spheres of political employment. They are constituted, and they remain the fountain, the source, of all power; they dispense honor and shame; they create the public opinion which is arbitress of the state. But a legislature they are not; and the only modes known to our system by which they can or do, or ever assumed, or sought to act, on the legislature, are either by petition, remonstrance or instruction, or by changing directly that constitution itself, under which the legislature exists and has its allotment of being and of work.—Rufus Choate.

In the August Century.

The August Century will offer to its readers an authoritative discussion of a vital problem of the day in Dr. Washington Gladden's article on "The municipal church," which he declares is the need of the hour in every town and city. Doctor Gladden's article will discuss in detail some of the causes which make possible the common questioning of the church's efficiency to-day, and will outline a program of the organization, work, and possibilities of the municipal church.

Concerning the entrance into the spiritual kingdom there is no confusion. While some might be led to believe that there was a roval road for the great by-paths for those who wanted to come in some other way, the word of God gives no hint of such a thing. The one baptism is that which is more fully set forth in another one of Paul's letters, where he speaks of its being the believer's burial with Christ. There is only one of all of the ceremonies practiced to-day under the name of baptism which fits the meaning and purpose of the ordinance.

Just a Little Mother.

She's just a little mother in a cabin far away;
Since I kissed her in the gloaming 'tis for ever and a day.
In my dreams I hear her calling, calling o'er the weary sea,
"Come ye back to Ballyshannon, Katy dear, come back to me."

She's standing in the doorway, filling up the little space,
With the kerchief o'er her bosom and the frills around her face;
She is smiling as Our Lady smiles above the Holy Child,
And my heart runs forth to meet her, o'er the waste of waters wild.

Do you know our Ballyshannon, where the very winds are sweet
With the saltness of the sea-foam and the tang of smoldering peat?
Do you know our mists that fold us in a blanket soft and gray,
Do you know our Ballyshannon in the red-rose dawn of day?

Then you've seen the little mother, just herself, so small and old,
With a look I'm sure would warm you were you shivering with the cold,
Oh, so mirthful and so patient, she whose work is never done.
Oh, so ready with her laughter, at the rise and set of sun.

In the great house where I'm serving, folks are ever kind to me.

These bonds are offered to the purchaser at par.

The interest coupons call for payment semiannually—on February 1st and August 1st.

Both principal and interest payable at the State Savings Bank of Lamoni, Iowa.

These Bonds are backed by the very best of security, consisting of assets of $100,000, and afford the purchaser a chance to invest with perfect assurance as to the soundness of the investment.

Note some of the facts about our bonds.

(a) They are of small denomination, thus enabling those of very moderate means to become purchasers.

(b) We ask no premium—your interest is clear.

(c) We have issued only 250 bonds—$25,000 dollars' worth—all of which goes toward payment of our debt incurred in adding improvements since the fire.

Oklahoma City

We have for sale fine farms and also city property in Oklahoma City. Oklahoma City is one of the fastest growing cities of its age in the United States.

We have about 135 miles of paved streets, and about 30 miles under construction.

We have recently gained the Capitol, which makes Oklahoma City the capital city. Anyone wishing to purchase business lots, residence lots, or lots in the manufacturing districts, and wishing to correspond with us, we will certainly give their correspondence special attention. We can sell property by mail as well as if the customers were here.

Our terms on city-lots, close-in subdivisions, are $20 down and $10 to $16 per month at an interest of 4 per cent.

Anyone buying property in Oklahoma City now, will certainly reap good returns upon his investment, as we will have a city of two hundred thousand people in 1915.

We can refer you to any bank in the city in regard to our responsibility. Write for a free book of Oklahoma City.

But they do not guess my yearning for the cabin over sea.
Wage I earn and wage I send her. Yet I can not longer bide.
I must see my little mother, I must nestle at her side.

She's just a little mother in a cabin far way;
Since I kissed her in the gloaming 'tis for ever and a day.
In my dreams she's calling, calling! "Mother, darling, yes,
I'll come.

I'll go back to Ballyshannon, to my mother and my home."

William Kent—Reformer.

A fine type of public-spirited citizen is William Kent, of Chicago and San Francisco. Mr. Kent is a philanthropist who has always backed good men, good measures and good movements and vigorously fought their opponents. Something of Mr. Kent's character and the work he has outlined for himself is described in the August American Magazine. The following is quoted from the article:

"Upon his graduation from Yale, in 1887, he went to Chicago, where he lived for more than twenty years. He was, from the beginning, a leader in the struggle for municipal decency. He found Chicago in the clutches of a corrupt city council, with a public too busy and too complacent to effectively object. He served as an alderman for two years, during which time with voice and pen, in and out of the council, like John the Baptist, he called the council and the people to repentance. He was one of the founders, and afterwards president of the Municipal Voters' League of Chicago, the most successful institution ever organized in America for the purification of the municipal legislature through publicity and effective assistance to worthy candidates.

"Every worthy reform enlists his sympathy, his cooperation and his pocketbook. Absolutely democratic himself, he trusts the people, and is afraid of no reform which increases the power of the people in their own government. Independent and fearless, and endowed with an unusual power of keen analysis with regard to governmental institutions and tendencies, he is admittedly one of the greatest reformers in that band of his contemporaries, who have been chiefly responsible for the moral movement throughout the country known as the 'uplift.' If he were not a reformer, he would be a writer. His literary contributions to many hard-fought political campaigns have exposed the men and issues involved with such picturesqueness, keenness and forcefulness that the best man has won.

"Living near San Francisco for the past two years, he naturally became much interested in the troubles of that unhappy city. His last public appearance has been as a member of the Denman Committee, which has recently published a really notable report on the graft situation in San Francisco.

"Mr. Kent's wife, who is the daughter of the late Professor Thomas Thacher, of Yale University, has ever been his sympathetic adviser in all of his good works. They have a family of seven children. His friends are legion, and his life is one of the best illustrations of the possible power for usefulness of the high-minded, independent, private American citizen.

A New Role for the Church.

DOCTOR GLADDEN PROPOSES RADICAL EXTENSION OF RELIGIOUS LIFE.

It is safe to assert that the state of the Christian Church in this country at the end of the first decade of the twentieth century is not all that could be desired. Without indulging in any pessimistic deplorings or venturing on any percentages or estimates, I am content to rest this statement on the experience and observation of intelligent men. Put this question to any Christian minister: "Is your church to-day sustaining the relation to all classes of the community which you would like to have it sustain? Has it the measure of respect from the high and the low, the powerful and the weak, the learned and the ignorant, that you would like to claim for it? If you are a pastor of a good many years' experience, do you feel that your church is gaining in its hold upon the people round about it?"

The only way to judge of the true condition of the Christian church is to bring it into immediate contact with the character of Jesus Christ. It claims to be the body of which he is the head, the organism in which he lives and through which his life is manifested to the world. The primary question is, therefore, whether its life reproduces his life. By as much as it does not must its strength be impaired and its influence annulled.

I do not wish to understate that part of our Lord's ministry in which he sought to bring men into conscious fellowship with God. That work of restoring the wayward and the disobedient to the joy of sinship and the strength of virtue was never absent from his thought. We must not undervalue this, but we do need to get into its proper perspective before our minds this other phase of our Lord's ministry. And there can be no doubt that his relation to the poor and the friendless was the outstanding fact of that ministry.

We are comparing the life of the church of to-day with the life of its Master. How does it compare in this respect? Is it giving an equal proportion of its ministry to social service? Do the sick and the poor and the despised in our American cities think of the churches of these cities in the same way that the same kind of people in Galilee and Decapolis used to think of Jesus Christ?

Martin Luther's idea was that the care of the sick and the poor ought to be handed over to the community instead of being provided for by the religious organizations. His expectation was, of course, that the community—the municipality or the state—would be so thoroughly Christianized that this work could be safely intrusted to it. That was the idea of the New England churches also. When the town and the church were one, the church had the philanthropic work in its hands; when the church was separated from the town, the church relinquished to the town this part of its function. But it was supposed that the political community would be so fully Christianized that the work would be properly done.

It is highly probable that the first Christian churches were municipal churches; that in every town or city was one church with several local congregations, each with its elder or leader, and all cooperating in the work of the city. The need of the hour is the restoration to every town or city of the municipal church. It ought to include all the Christians of the municipality; every Christian organization should be represented in it.

Its claim to the philanthropic leadership of the community would not be disputed. If it is the body of which Christ is the head, that is its first business. In passing it over to the state the church has divested itself of its most vital function. The loss is lamentable, almost fatal; the weakness of the church in this latter day is largely due to it. The church must recover this function; it is not a mere matter of expediency, it is a question of life or death.

For such a service as this the municipal church would require no creed. Its simple message to the world would be: “We believe in the friendship of Jesus Christ, and we live to make it known to those who need it most.”

Nor would it need any new machinery. In most communities the nucleus of such an organization as is required already exists. There is a local Federation of Churches, or a United Brotherhood, which holds occasional union meetings, and sometimes finds it hard to justify its own existence. Let it assume this task. Let the churches commission it to represent them in this larger service to which Christ is calling them.—Rev. Washington Gladden in August Century.

Each of us has the power of making happier, sunnier, the little spot wherein our life is spent.—Archbishop of Canterbury.

Vacation Time Is Here

The present hot weather brings thoughts of where to spend your vacation.

Colorado Yellowstone Park

Either place is ideal if you are in search of rest, recreation or an outing.

The cool bracing mountain air, every breath of which gives new life and energy, the dashing streams full of fish, and where game animals of all kinds abound in their native wild state.

Surely these and many other attractions found in the American Wonderlands, should be enough to decide any question of where to spend your vacation.

The Burlington's through, electric lighted trains offer the best service.

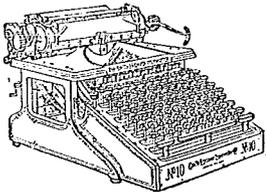

You have perhaps been planning a trip to Colorado or Yellowstone Park for years—make up your mind today to go this Summer and let me hand you one of the Burlington Colorado handbooks or Yellowstone Park folders which tell all about where to go, what to see and what to do, and contains a complete list of hotels, boarding houses and ranches, with their rates. Ask me about Estes Park, Colo., also.

THEIR GOD IS GOLD.

BY CHARLES FLEISCHER.

A curious question, the answer being so obvious: Because these nations are not, in any vital sense, really Christian.

Note the contrast with the so-called heathen peoples, all of whom, excepting Japan, are unarmed, and therefore easily victimized by the armies and navies of marauding Christendom. And Japan has caught the contagion of martial fever from too close contact with "Christian" civilization!

I shall not soon forget a scene in our Twentieth Century club in Boston one Saturday afternoon about ten years ago. We were being addressed, in excellent English, by a cultured Chinese woman, Dr. Yamei Kin, who appealed to us as representatives of the western world not to force China to resume arms, her people having passed ages beyond the barbarism of war.

The irony of the situation impressed me deeply and helped me to realize again the emptiness of the western vaunt of superiority over peoples who have long since lost the savage defects which still disgrace the splendid qualities of the younger races of the world.

Let me offer another bit of personal experience. About seven years ago I was a member of the conference on peace and arbitration at Lake Mohonk, New York. There were present so many professional fighters from our army and navy (among them Richmond P. Hobson, the ridiculous American Cato, whose monomaniacal cry is "Japan must be destroyed, else she will destroy us"), and so warlike were the utterances of practically all the speakers, that I was moved at last to exclaim impatiently, "Is this a conference on peace, or is it a council of war?"

There is no need to ask why all Christian nations are armed to the teeth, when even a Lake Mohonk peace conference plainly apologizes to the Devil for even seeming to believe in the feasibility of peace.

The fact is that the rulers and the people of Christendom are only "fooling" about it. They are not really Christian. They do not believe in peace, nor have they any serious intention of treading too closely upon the heels of the Prince of Peace, or of embodying, in the individual spirit and in the practice of nations, the teaching of the Jew Jesus: "Love one another."

Pessimistic? No; but I hate hypocrisy. And I would like to have Christendom cease to make Christian profession, which it has no intention of giving worth through practice.

Pessimistic? No; on the contrary, I am invincibly optimistic. I hail with the deepest joy the establishment of The Hague tribunal, the organization of the interparliamentary union, and all the practical discussions of peace and arbitration by men who are not dreamers nor avowed idealists.

The "Christian" nations will never disarm, from the teeth downward, until peace commends itself to them, not as a spiritual ideal, but as a practical necessity. Then, out of that necessity (the impossible burden of growing armaments and the ever-present menace to commerce) the hard-headed westerners, whose god is gold, will some day make a shining virtue—which, doubtless, they will then have the hardihood to exalt and exhibit as an original discovery, proceeding to convert to the "new" ideal even the oriental nations, who need not preach because they practice "peace on earth."

INDIAN PERSONAGES OF DISTINCTION.

AN IRIQUOIS ARCHÆOLOGIST.

He signs his letters "Arthur Q. Parker," but in his own home he prefers to be called "Ga-wa-so-wa-neh." In English this means "Snowslide" and is the name given him in infancy on the Indian reservation.

Mr. Parker is proud of the fact that he is a hereditary chief of the ancient Iroquois. He openly proclaims that despite a college education and long association with whites his whole heart and interest are bound up in the people from whom he sprang—"the Romans of the New World," as he calls them.

It is this attitude and its resultant zeal, says the Book-keeper, which have made Mr. Parker a success as state archaeologist of New York, the position he has held with honor for four years.

In New York State there are six Indian reservations containing about five thousand full-blood redskins. These people still maintain a nominal national independence and are self-governing, thus being able to keep alive their ancient customs and religion.

Not until the State decided to appoint a state archaeologist and Ga-wa-so-wa-neh—or Mr. Parker—won the office by virtue of his well-nigh perfect civil service examination did New York really begin to have a place on the archaeological map.

From the moment he undertook the work progress was marked. By virtue of his Indian ancestry he had access to much that had been denied former investigators. Scarcely had he been appointed before he uncovered a village and stronghold of the Erie Indians which had been previously unknown.

He has recorded hundreds of folks tales, translated the rituals of Indian secret and social societies, made photograph records of their ceremonies and songs, photographed their mysterious rites and delved into the secrets of their fraternities. The collection of relics he has gathered, now stored at the state museum at Albany, is one of the finest of its kind.

And all this when he is not yet thirty. Born on the Cattaraugus reservation in 1881, when still quite young Mr. Parker was moved to one of the suburbs of New York. His mother is of Scotch-English ancestry and was for a long time a teacher in the Thomas Indian school, where she had Mr. Parker's father for a pupil and was afterward married to him. The latter is a full-blooded Indian, coming of a long line of chiefs, among whom was General Ely S. Parker, the military secretary to General Grant.

It was from his father that young Parker inherited his affection for the Indian race, and later when he took up the study of anthropology under Prof. Frederick W. Putnam, of Harvard, it became his irrepressible ambition to tell the true story of the people whose "history has been written only by their enemies," as he says. Mr. Parker has written several volumes for the state library and given numerous illuminating Indian lectures.

Mr. Parker's wife was an Indian maiden and a member of the Shenaki tribe.—The Indian's Friend, July, 1910.

PERSONAL ASSURANCE OF THE TRUTH.

In his work entitled, Power and Personality in Speaking, Grenville Klieser, formerly instructor in public speaking at Yale University, says: "No one thing will add so much to a man's power in speaking as the conscious possession of truth."

On the same subject, Cardinal Newman says: "What is so powerful an incentive to preaching as the sure belief that it is the preaching of the truth."

A great fact is set forth in these two utterances. The powerful preacher is the one who thoroughly believes in the message that he is engaged in presenting. But we may extend the thought beyond the pulpit and apply it to those who are interested in the everyday work of living their religion. Those who are thoroughly convinced of the truth and value of the gospel of Jesus Christ will be successful in living it and will be a power for good in the hands of God.

We see Peter on the Day of Pentecost standing up to preach the first great sermon under the commission, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." Peter is the exponent of Christianity, the advocate of Jesus. But see, he is to address Jews,—thousands of them. These are the men who have crucified Jesus. Judging from a human standpoint a single ill-advised word may precipitate a massacre. We say it is a time for diplomacy. But God knows and the disciples know that it is a time for more than diplomacy. For that reason have they kept their mouths closed and have waited for the promised endowment of power from on high.

Peter, clothed with that power, proceeds to deliver an address that judged by immediate results is one of the most powerful sermons ever delivered. Peter has been only a poor fisherman, yet he dominates the multitude. He presents Jesus as the Christ and the Son of God. He plainly accuses the Jews of crucifying him with "wicked hands." The force of his attack is such that he overbears their prejudices, breaks down their defense, and convicts them before the tribunal of their own hearts, so that when his sermon is ended three thousand of them are repented and ready for baptism.

What was the secret of Peter's assurance as he stood before that idly curious yet potentially dangerous mob and realized the possibilities of that day? We have our answer when we reflect that Peter had tested the Christian religion. He knew of the doctrine of Christ. He was filled with the divine assurance that had been poured out upon him and his associates at the Pentecostal meeting, just as Jesus had predicted that it would be. He knew that he was the Son of God and that he had died for men. He knew that those men must repent and be baptized. He knew that if they would repent they would receive the gift of the Ghost. He realized the absolute truth of every promise that he was required to utter, every commandment that he voiced.

Turning our scrutiny to the membership of the church at Jerusalem immediately following the Pentecost we find that they were strikingly successful in living their religion. They were of one heart and one mind. God added to their numbers daily. They had implicit confidence in the gospel that they had espoused, so much so that they placed everything upon the altar, even selling their possessions when required to do so and distributing to those who were in need.

Paul explained the situation later when he said that the gospel came not "in word only, but also in power and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance."

The restored gospel came to the people in later times in a similar manner. One of the songs that the Saints used to delight in singing began like this:

"We as the living witnesses declare the word to you,
And bear our testimony that what we teach is true;
Beware how you receive it, do not yourselves deceive,
For God himself revealed it; we know what we believe."

In order to preach or to live the gospel now we need the same abiding assurance that our fathers had that it is indeed the eternal truth. That assurance can be obtained in the same way in which it was obtained of old. The promise is still in force: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine."

This assurance may be obtained in a twofold way. Peter had listened to the preaching of the gospel. He had examined its tenets and had tested them for himself. He found them reasonable and logical. They appealed to his intelligence. He was intellectually convinced.

H. O. Smith

But Peter also received a further assurance of a spiritual nature that satisfied him concerning certain things that were beyond the reach of his mental research. For instance, when questioned by the Master, he could say, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." And Christ said, "Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." Peter was converted both intellectually and spiritually. He had received a divine assurance even prior to the Day of Pentecost, and that assurance must have been repeated with added force on that day.

Peter's experience was peculiar to himself; other men may receive similar experiences, differing as their natures differ, yet of equal value in being sufficient for their personal needs. If they will study the gospel and obey it they will find that more and more it meets the approval of their intelligence; and they will also be entitled to receive spiritual assurances in some form or other requisite to establish them in the faith, providing they desire such evidences with sufficient ardor to ask for them and live worthy of their reception.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

EUROPE TO OUST MORMONS.

BERLIN, July 24.—(Special cablegram.)—Germany has taken the lead in what would be an international movement against Mormonism and Mormon missionaries. For several years missionaries sent out from America and England have been working diligently upon the continent. Recently Mormonism has grown to such an extent in European countries that the governments took cognizance of protests from various churches.

The campaign to drive Mormonism out of Europe will be systematic. Those who profess to be members of the church will not be molested so long as their religious observances do not interfere with the civil or criminal laws of the country in which they reside. Only the missionaries, who are accused of under tactics in preaching their doctrine, will be ordered to leave the countries.

Of the twenty-one Mormon missionaries whose expulsion from Germany was ordered by the Prussian minister of the interior, there are three young American students who may be allowed to remain. The other eighteen have until Monday to leave German territory.

The police to-day assembled the Mormon missionaries. The three young Americans had, in the meantime, appealed to Charge d'Affairs Irwin Laughlin of the American embassy. Mr. Laughlin, in the absence of Ambassador Hill, requested the foreign office to cancel the orders of expulsion for the young American students until a further investigation could be made. This delay will likely be granted.

Herr Dalwitz, the Russian foreign minister, who has expelled the Mormon missionaries, did not act hastily. It is understood that the French, Italian, Franco-Austro-Hungarian and other governments stand ready to continue the prosecution if it is necessary. It may not be necessary, for word from the foreign capitals said that a number of foreigners who had established themselves as Mormon missionaries had already fled.

Mormonism has attained a stronger hold in Germany and England than many Americans believe. Missionaries first came across the Atlantic many years ago. At first, meetings of the proselytes were held in the home of a member of the new church. Gradually churches have been built and communities had sprung up.

Although the missionaries disclaim polygamy, the civil authorities say that it exists to an alarming extent in some of the Mormon settlements. It was this phase of the matter, together with the growing power of the Mormons, that caused the authorities to take drastic action.—Omaha Bee, July 25.

A grade teacher, after having a medical examination in her room, recently wrote the following note to the parents of a certain little boy: "Your little boy, Charles, shows signs of astigmatism. Will you please investigate and take steps to correct it?" to which she received a note in reply, saying: "I don't understand exactly what Charles has been doing, but I have whalloped him to-night, and you can whallop him to-morrow, and that ought to help some."

The Daily Parable.

As a ruin the cloudy heaven,
Shakes to the wind's wild shocks;
To the echoing bolts of the leaven,
As a wreck the ocean rocks;

And the storm on earth careering
Seems, with its thunderous roll,
The laugh of a monster jeering
At the dreams of the human soul.

But behind the ephemeral thunder
Smiles the eternal sun,
Whose glory provokes no wonder,
Since only a common one.

O Truth, so close at our portals,
With silent but constant sign,
When shall we learn, dull mortals,
The common is divine?

—Henry Austin in July Century.

Elders' Note-Book

MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION.

Under the above title, I wish to express a few thoughts about ministerial associations. From my experience and observation in reference to the Protestant ministry, I divide them into two classes. A percentage of them are honorable men and give our people fair treatment, but by far the greater number will do us all the harm they can; all the mean, little, low down tricks they can think of they will do. Misrepresentation is a common weapon and some of them will lie to accomplish their end.

The Saints in the branches have not seen much of these things, but the missionary out on the firing line is the one that knows by experience what they will do. They run up against the real thing, a live wire that burns. There is such a close resemblance between them and the Pharisees that it is easier to find the common points of agreement than those of disagreement. The Pharisees were the people that went to church, did the praying and preaching and read the scripture, and they were the bitter enemies of Christ and his work.

Who is it gives us fair treatment? The nonbeliever is always our best friend when our enemies assail us. It is the class of men we find in the ministerial associations that blind the eyes of the public and cause them to reject the truth as stated in Doctrine and Covenants 45:4: "They turn their hearts from Me because of the precepts of men." The best thing for us to do with them and their associations is to let them alone. There is no more need for it in our work than there is to join some secret society in order to carry on the work of the gospel. They will do with us as the spider does with the fly, draw us into their clutches and then let us down good and hard.

As men, we should treat them just exactly right, with all the courtesy that is due them according to the golden rule, but it should end there. We can not work with them without compromising the truth. The advertising we can get out of trying to get in, or being put out after we are in, is not worth the time and trouble it takes. A far better advertisement is a consistent, honorable life in harmony with the teaching and example of Jesus Christ. We can do more good without them, and when God is on our side we are a mighty army, and he will be on our side if we put our full trust in him.

LEADERSHIP.

ELDER GOMER R. WELLS.

"Wherever there is true prophet leadership, there is true brotherhood."

"We thank thee, O God, for a prophet
To guide us in these latter days;
We thank thee for sending the gospel
To lighten our minds with its rays."

Thus do the Saints sometimes sing in prayer meetings. There are many to whom this sentiment seems strange. They would accuse us of man worship or pity us for being priestridden. That is a hasty conclusion. Such critics have not studied our principles.

"We thank thee, O God, for a prophet"—what does it signify? It means leadership. It stands for the highest type of organization. Wherever there is true prophet leadership, there is true brotherhood.

Let those who doubt it turn to the pages of history wherein God was directly concerned in uplifting the human race. Prophet leadership is seen in every movement. It is God's way, and "His ways are one eternal round."

In foreshadowing the restoration and conversion of latter day Israel, he says he will make a new covenant with them. This requires leadership now as it did when he brought Israel out of Egypt, "which covenant they broke."

When the British people sing, "God save our king," and bare their heads as he goes by, does that reveal man worship or does it show respect for government and the principle of leadership for which the king stands? It must be the latter, for in the next breath they sing, "Britains never, never will be slaves."

The Americans own no king but God in their national anthem. They sing, "Our fathers' God, . . . author of liberty, to thee we sing. . . Great God, our king."

If this be not lip service and represents a great national ideal, we would like to ask, What, then, does the President of the United States stand for? Does he not represent the principle of leadership? When we cheer his approach and do him honor are we guilty of man worship? or do we not thereby respect leadership and good government?

It is easy to sing the national anthem with patriotic fervor, but it is not so easy to answer the question, How can the divine King "reign over us" in fact except it be by God appointed leadership? If it be not in that way, then we sing a hollow sentiment; his reign is only theoretical. Perhaps the thought is after all borrowed from the good book. It is a beautiful ideal to talk about and sing, but what is there in it that would preclude good citizens as church members singing of a Moses man who stands as leader to the most unique movement of modern times—unique because it represents the Bible plan, and claims to be organized by divine command and sustained from the same omnipotent source. We, too, can sing with true fervor, the same national anthem, because we are willing that God's rule should be real and not theoretical.

Unless this nation will love righteousness more and get into closer touch with their King, he can not rule in fact—it is only a make-believe. The American has a grand and noble ideal—that of being free. But until he is free from the political boss, and the "machine" that runs the elections in far too many States, he is not free. Even when that is righted, he is yet in bondage unless he can get the power of the gospel into his life and then be free from the higher standpoint. Jesus says, "The truth shall make you free"; "If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." The more of truth we live by, the greater the freedom.

As a church, we respect civil authority and believe with Paul that rulers and magistrates, "the powers that be," rule permissively until He comes whose right it is to reign. President Joseph Smith believes this, and so did his father. As leaders of men in a divine movement, neither of them ever presumed to take charge of a conference of the church in an arbitrary manner. The records show that the father of the present incumbent was directed to obtain the consent of the church assembled before presiding. The honored son of a noble sire has strictly observed the same rule. God's appointed servant, but He will the same rule; being God's appointed servant, but He will not force him upon the people. He represents divinely appointed leadership agreeably to the consent of the people. Thus the principle of common consent was from the first established in the church of latter days. It is a principle that has always been an essential part of true priesthood. Said the first Joseph, "Amen to that man's priesthood" who presumes to use the keys or functions of the same except in harmony with this divine principle of common consent. It then becomes priestcraft.

It would be a proud record indeed if our civil government had been as free from "bosses" and the corruption thereof as has been our church during the last fifty years of prophet leadership. It is pertinent to ask: Which more clearly represents a composition of the will of God merged into the consent thereto of a willing free people, the church or the state?

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ELDER I. M. SMITH.

In a little log cabin in Johnson County, Illinois, some four miles west of where Tunnel Hill now stands, I first saw the light of this world, on the 23d day of May, 1853. Tunnel Hill is forty-five miles north of Cairo. I was born in that part of Illinois known as "Lower Egypt."

To my father and mother were born fourteen children, eleven of them are still living. The first child died before he was a year old as also did the two youngest. I was the second child born to them, hence am the oldest of the eleven now living. As a child I was sickly until after I was two years old; after that, however, I was quite fleshy, and was large for my age, but was never rugged and strong. My parents were uneducated, but seeing the necessity of giving their children at least a common school education, they sent us to school, when much of the time we were really needed at home to help do the work. Schools in that country, then, were far inferior to what they are now; and what was worse than that, I did not always take advantage of my limited opportunities, hence my education is quite limited. My environment was not of a character to broaden my mind and give me high ideals; my standard of right and wrong was not, in every respect, what it should have been.

We lived in the back woods, and our neighbors, with few exceptions, were poor and uneducated like ourselves; church and Sunday school influences had but little to do, if anything at all, in shaping the lives of myself and young associates. My Sundays, at least many of them, were spent on the creeks, on the bluffs, and in the woods; and while my intimate associates, as a rule, were respectable, the places we frequented often brought us into contact with that which was not at all elevating. Profanity, vulgarity, and sneers and scoffs at religion were altogether too common and they made their impression upon our young mind and soul, and that for the worse; they lowered our ideals of purity, they lowered our morals, ELDER I. M. SMITH.

"I wish to exhort the young men who are entering the ministry to consecrate themselves to God and to his service, in word, in thought, and in act."

and they strangled, for the time being, all the higher aspirations of our soul. Such associations and influences are bound to bear fruit in any boy's life, and the fruit will always be bitter.

My parents were honest, moral, and well-respected. They always taught their children to shun bad company, but like many other parents, they were not always successful in enforcing their teaching. Their teaching was not altogether lost on my life, even though I did not always obey them. I was like a great many other boys; often thought I knew more than my parents, took my own course and had to suffer the consequences. Notwithstanding all that, I had great respect for my parents, because of their honorable, upright lives; and I am sure that the principles of right which they taught me had an uplifting influence on my life. When I was in my ninth year, the spring of 1862, my father joined the church, being baptized by William H. Kelley. I can well remember when he was baptized, though I did not see the baptism, but so limited was my understanding of such things, I did not even know what baptism was, nor did I have the remotest idea what it was for, and yet I was nearly nine years old. But I was not in "Zion" or in any of "her stakes"; not even in a branch of the church. Ignorance is ignorance, though, wherever it is; and I was certainly as ignorant concerning the gospel as a boy of my age possibly could be. My father had belonged to the old church before I was born. My grandfather and grandmother had belonged to the old church too, as did also many of his relatives, long before he did. They had joined the church when my father was only a boy. My father, although he had belonged to the old church, had never tried to teach the principles of the gospel to his children, hence I have sometimes thought that I must have inherited faith in the gospel from my father and my grandparents, for even after my father had come into the Reorganization, we had no branch of the church there, no Sunday school and no books or papers to teach the little ones the principles of the gospel. My father always advised me to be honest and truthful, read the Bible, think for myself, and do that which is right; and that was about the extent of the religious instruction I received. But I had great confidence in my father, and still have, hence I had confidence in his religion and in the church to which he belonged.

I made no study of religion, however, until I was fifteen years old. At that time, Bro. Benjamin H. Ballome came to our place, and as he and my father talked a great deal on religious subjects, I became much interested. He loaned me the Book of Mormon, The Kingdom of God, by John Taylor, and some other works, all of which I read with much interest. But still I had that erroneous idea that religion was not intended for boys; just for grown people. My father subscribed for the HERALD and while it came I read it, more or less, and I was really a believer in the gospel. There was no church there of our faith and no preaching. I heard no preaching after Brother Ballome was there except one sermon preached by Brother Hilliard, until after I was twenty-one years old.

The winter after I was twenty years old, I taught my first school, and then having money of my own, I decided to learn something of the church. Looking up some of the old HERALDS I found the address, wrote to Brother Joseph, and in due time received a copy of the HERALD. I subscribed for the HERALD, sent for the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, Holy Scriptures, Voice of Warning, and a complete set of tracts, and then began reading. This was in the summer of 1874, hence I was then twenty-one. In August of that summer, Bro. J. C. Clapp came and preached twelve sermons. I heard most of them and was anxious to be baptized; but he gave no public invitation. I did not have the courage to go to him and ask him to baptize me, and so I let that opportunity slip, but in December, 1874, Brn. G. H. Hilliard and I. A. Morris came in there and held a series of meetings, and on the day after Christmas, Aunt Rhoda Kelley, one of my uncles, my mother, oldest sister, and myself were baptized by Brother Hilliard. My health at that time was very bad; I was suffering from nasal catarrh and from throat and bronchial troubles. My condition was considered quite critical, in a sense, for there was danger of the affliction extending to my lungs. A few days after I was baptized I asked the brethren to administer to me, and after they had done so, Brother Hilliard said to me, "You are not going to die now. You will live to preach this gospel." And Brother Morris added, "Yes, that will be your work, preaching the gospel." I was timid, awkward, bashful, of a stammering tongue, and in poor health, and from a human viewpoint that prediction seemed unreasonable, and yet there was an influence accompanied it that caused me to believe it, and I took courage.

That was thirty-four years ago and I have been preaching the gospel more than thirty years of that time.

The next spring after I was baptized, March, 1875, I attended a district conference at Brush Creek, Wayne County, Illinois; my first conference and my first meeting with the Saints in an organized branch. Nothing worthy of special mention occurred, until we met in social service on Sunday afternoon. Then Bro. B. H. Ballome (the same one whom I have already mentioned) got up and bore his testimony; he said there was some calamity coming upon the Saints, but he did not know just what it was, but said it would be severe. He exhorted the Saints to be prepared for it, and said, "I know it will come, for it has been shown to me by the Spirit." That was the first time I had ever heard anyone get up in a prayer and testimony meeting and speak in prophecy, and it seemed very, very strange to me.

The following summer, about three or four months after that conference, Brother Ballome, his wife and two children, and old Bro. Nathan Morris, and a number of his family, died of smallpox. Brethren Ballome and Morris were both elders. Being young and inexperienced in the work at that time, that prophecy and its immediate fulfillment made a deep and lasting impression upon my mind. In August, 1875, the Tunnel Hill Branch was organized and I was ordained teacher, but the next year, 1876, and I think it was in August, too, I was ordained priest, but for some cause I never received any positive knowledge of my call to either of those offices. I believed then and I still believe that I was called, but I did not magnify my calling, I suppose, and I never could say that I knew my call was from the Lord.

In the fall of 1878, Bro. G. H. Hilliard was holding a series of meetings in the Tunnel Hill Branch and he said to some of the Saints that Bro. I. M. Smith ought to be ordained to the office of elder, and when this was told me I said, "No, not until I can receive a knowledge from God for myself that it is the Lord's will." My desire was to serve the Lord in whatever office he wanted me to labor; but having accepted two ordinations without any positive knowledge, it seemed to me that it would be presumption of the rankest kind for me to accept an ordination to the eldership without a knowledge for myself, hence I decided to take that stand, and did take it. During that series of meetings, a day was set apart for the Saints to meet, fasting and praying for light regarding a fuller organization of the branch. We did so and when Brother Hilliard got up in that meeting and said the Spirit indicated to him that Bro. I. M. Smith should be ordained an elder, the Spirit of the Lord rested upon me in power and it seemed to penetrate every fiber of my being, and although I heard no audible voice, I was made to know, beyond a doubt, that the Lord required me to accept that office. I felt assured that it was the Lord's will and I accepted the ordination in November, 1878, and feeling sure, as I did, that the Lord had called me to preach the gospel, I immediately commenced to do so.

I had no appointment from either district or General Conference, but I went to work just the same, laboring under the direction of the branch and district officers. I would study all week and then go out and preach on Sunday evening and frequently on Saturday evening, too. In March, 1879, at the conference of the Southeastern Illinois District, they passed a resolution that Bro. I. M. Smith should devote his entire time to preaching the gospel in that district. Not being in attendance at that conference this resolution was a great surprise to me when notified of its passage, as I had not been consulted beforehand and was not even thinking of such a thing. While it was a great surprise to me, it was certainly a pleasant surprise, for my acquaintance with the Saints in the district was limited, and it pleased me to know that they had that much confidence in me. As I had been practically devoting my entire time to the work, ever since my ordination, it was a pleasure to have the whole district standing by me officially, in my effort to magnify my calling. My labor under district appointment continued until the spring of 1883, stopping only to earn money for personal expenses when I ran short.

In March, 1883, I was married to Malinda M.

Kelley, a sister of T. C. Kelley, who is well known to the church. She was a noble, intelligent Latter Day Saint, also a good wife. Had she lived, my life might have been better and more useful, but she had had two spells of lung fever before we were married and, shortly after our marriage, consumption set in and she never recovered. In November, 1884, her suffering ceased and she passed over on the other side. One child had been born to us, but she died before the death of her mother; hence when my wife died, I was again left alone.

After going to school a few weeks to brighten up I taught two winter terms of school, five months each, preaching under district appointment during the summer when not teaching, and preaching locally on Sunday when teaching. In April, after finishing the last term of school, 1887, I attended the General Conference at Kirtland, Ohio. This was the first General Conference I ever attended, and I there received my first General Conference appointment. My field of labor was the Southeastern Illinois District, the district in which I was born and grew to manhood, where I first heard and obeyed the gospel, and where I was ordained and had been preaching for nearly nine years. In November of that same year I was married again, but this marriage was an unhappy one, and proved to be one of the saddest experiences of my life. As the fruit of that marriage, however, I have one daughter, now Mrs. Gertrude Arthur, of Little Blue, Missouri, who has been and is now a great comfort to me. My labors in the Southeastern Illinois District, under the General Conference appointment, continued for five years, Bro. J. W. Gillen being in charge. Of my experiences while in this field, I think of but little that would be of sufficient importance to put on record, hence I shall not burden the reader with any lengthy details.

During the time in the summer of 1888, in June, Bro. J. W. Gillen and G. H. Hilliard ordained me to the office of seventy, and I was enrolled in the first quorum, the only quorum there was at that time. After being ordained to this office I began to attend the General Conferences oftener than I had before, and as a result became better acquainted with the ministry and also with the general workings of the church. At the April conference, 1892, I asked for a new field of labor. I had been preaching in that one district for nearly fourteen years, part of the time as a local elder, and part of the time under the district appointment, and five years under General Conference appointment, and I felt that a change would be better for me and also better for the work in that district. My request met with favor in the Quorum of Twelve and I was assigned the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District. There I labored for three years, very pleasantly, for me, and I believe for the work, Bro. E. C. Briggs being in charge.

My experiences while there were not of that nature that would interest and edify the general reader. My appointment for 1895 was the Eastern Mission, Bro. W. H. Kelley was in charge, and so I labored under him for the next three years. The first year in that mission I labored in Ohio, Western New York, and Pennsylvania. The next year, my labors extended farther east; did tent work with Brother Robley, on Cape Cod; attended the reunion at Poquonnac Bridge, in Connecticut, and then went into Maine. The next year my labors were in the same territory, much so at least, only I did not go so far to the east as Maine.

One experience of that year might be of interest to some. The latter part of February, 1898, I attended conference at Providence, Rhode Island. On Sunday evening, at the close of the conference, a prayer meeting was announced for the next morning, many of the Saints not being able to get started for their homes until the afternoon. The prayer meeting in prophecy, tongues, and interpretation of tongues, was certainly a Pentecostal outpouring of the Holy Spirit. I shall attempt to tell only that which relates to myself in this paper. I had been undecided as to whether I should attend the General Conference that spring or not. On my way to the prayer meeting that morning, I had decided that I would not go. During the prayer meeting, Sr. Hattie Griffiths spoke in prophecy, and after speaking to Bro. Richard Bullard she turned to me and said, "Verily, thus saith the Spirit unto you, my servant, Isaac Smith, it is my will that you meet with my people in General Conference at Independence, Missouri, and there you shall be blessed, and you shall be sent to another mission; and while you may feel within your heart that you would rather not go, yet you shall be blessed in that mission." She spoke more, assuring me that the Lord would care for and protect my loved ones and telling me to trust him and not doubt. I can't remember just how the latter part of that prophecy was worded, hence I shall not attempt to state it verbatim.

Feeling sure that this prophecy was of the Lord, I attended the General Conference and sure enough, I was sent to another mission, Southwestern Iowa. Although I had been told that I should be sent to another field of labor, and was expecting it, I felt hurt because I could not go back to the East, but I labored in Southwestern Iowa for the next three years, and I can truly say I was never more blessed in all my ministerial work than I was in that mission. Why didn't I want to go? Was it rebellion? Whether it was rebellion or not, I went direct from conference to my field of labor and went to work, and I still feel glad that I was ever permitted to labor in that field.

One experience while in that mission I wish to relate, hoping it may be of some benefit to others who may be hungering after a chosen walk with God. I can not give the date, as it has entirely slipped my memory. It was at a conference of the Fremont, Iowa, District, held at Shenandoah, Iowa. On Sunday afternoon we had sacrament and social service and at the beginning of that service, there came over me such a feeling of hunger for God to come into my soul as I had never before experienced. I seemed to be in absolute darkness, spiritually, with the last ray of hope almost extinguished and such a longing for a word of comfort from my heavenly Father! It seemed to me that unless that word of comfort and assurance came, I could never again go out and try to preach the gospel; that I must stop, leave my field, and do something else. My very soul seemed crushed within me. I sat there and cried like a child while others were bearing their testimony and telling of the comfort and peace they were receiving from the gospel, but for me there was no peace. I seemed cut off and shut out from God, and yet I was pleading, begging for recognition. After this had continued for half an hour or more, I should judge, Bro. Henry Kemp got up and spoke in prophecy assuring me that the Lord had accepted my work and that I should be greatly blessed in preaching the word in the future and that my life should be spared for years, to labor for the Master. With these words of prophecy came the assurance that the Lord was actually speaking to me by his Spirit through his servant. Darkness, doubt, and fears, all fled from my soul and then there came such joy and peace as I have seldom experienced. This experience, I believe to be the strongest assurance I have ever had of the divinity of the gospel of Christ. "Blessed are they that do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled," had been running through my mind during all that hour of suffering and now I knew that that statement of our Savior is absolutely true. The fact that I know there is that within the gospel of Christ which satisfies the longings of my soul is to me the strongest assurance of its divinity I have ever experienced. When the Lord's people become sufficiently hungry for spiritual food, I know he will feed them, but while their souls are satisfied with husks, with the things of this world, it would be useless to give them that which belongs only to the children of light. They would not appreciate it, neither could they use it wisely.

But I am digressing too far. In making out my report March 1, 1901, I asked to be sent back to Western Iowa for the next year, but for some reason, those in authority thought best to give me another change of field, and so I was assigned to Maine. At the suggestion of the minister in charge, Bro. H. J. Davison and I exchanged work for a few weeks of this year, he assisting me in Maine and I assisting him in Nova Scotia. My work in Nova Scotia was among the Saints and was quite pleasant to me, but it is certainly a hard work for the man who tries to push out into new fields. Brother Davison surely deserves great credit for the many, many long years he has spent in that field, under such discouraging and trying circumstances, as do also the few Saints living there. My work in Maine that year was not all pleasant, but on the other hand it was not all unpleasant. Taking the year's work as a whole, I was fairly well satisfied with it and believe that good was done for the cause.

The following year, 1902, I was again assigned to the Eastern mission, but that year I did not go to Maine. I labored in the Massachusetts District, and was fairly successful, I thought, in a way, but not in making converts. At the conference of 1903, I was again assigned to Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana, and was kept there for two years. My labors in that district at this time were not as pleasant and satisfactory as they had been when there ten years before. After arriving in the district I soon found that the spirit of contention and division was making much trouble in some places, and as usual this leaven of contention was spreading, and was affecting the spirituality of the Saints in many places in the district. Bro. Asa S. Cochran was president of the district, if I remember correctly. A more patient, forbearing, God fearing man I have never labored with in all my ministerial experiences. All the missionaries in the district stood together with him, battling against that spirit of contention, but our success was anything but flattering. I wish to say, however, that there are some noble Saints in that district who stood by the work as brave soldiers of the cross, while Satan was trying so hard to destroy the work.

Brother Cochran was president of the district, the greater part of the burden fell on him, yet he never faltered in his labor of love for the little flock placed under his care. I left the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District the spring of 1905, not feeling at all flattered over the result of my two years' work, but I hope the record may show, when the time of reckoning shall come, that some good was done for the cause, even though it be but little.

My appointment for 1905 was Pennsylvania and Ohio, but my labors were mostly in Ohio. I felt somewhat disappointed when assigned to this field, but I enjoyed the year's work, as a whole, and am glad I went. The next year, 1906, they gave me a big surprise; assigned me to the Rocky Mountain Mission. My labor up to this time had been in the Eastern and Central States and thus the Rocky Mountain Mission was to be a new experience to me, and it was, too, for a few months at least. My first point was Salt Lake City. My work there was to continue only until some one else arrived, and I did not know whether that would be one month or six months. I was somewhat embarrassed and hampered in my work. I made one trip into Southern Idaho under the direction of the minister in charge, attending their district conference at Blackfoot, Idaho. Then Brother Layland took me in his gospel wagon on a visiting tour, visiting the isolated Saints.

The last place we visited together was Eight Mile, near Soda Springs, Idaho, where we organized the Eight Mile Branch. From there he went to his home and I went first to Malad City, Idaho, and then back to Salt Lake City, attended the district conference and reunion, at Provo, Utah, and then went to Montana. Utah is not a pleasant field in which to labor, and I was glad when the missionary in charge said for me to move on to Montana. My work in Montana for the remainder of the year and the year following was quite pleasant, and while I realized that some men might have done much better than I did, I felt that some good had been done and I felt, too, that I should try to be satisfied that I could even do a little good. At the conference of 1908, I was assigned to the Spokane, Washington, District. After arriving in my field, taking in the situation as best I could, and consulting the minister in charge, I accepted the presidency of the Spokane Branch. Having been a seventy for twenty years, and my health being worse than usual, I soon found that doing the work of a high priest was very, very trying on my nerves, but having accepted, I did not feel like giving it up, and so I stayed with it during the conference year. I felt, too, that I left the branch in as good condition as I found it, but I prefer laboring in my own calling, believing that the Lord gives to every man that which belongs to his office and calling, if he is faithful in that work.

Emergencies occur at times, I know, but all things being equal, a man is better qualified to do the work the Lord has called him to do, than he is to do the work the Lord has called some other man to do. I tried to do the work of a high priest in the Spokane Branch, and at the end of the conference year, I returned home a physical wreck. I do not know, however, that the nature of my work had anything to do with the condition of my health but I prefer to do my own work so far as I can, in the future, leaving the High Priests and elders to preside over districts and branches.

Not feeling able to bear the strain of a general conference and do my part of the work and not feeling willing to shirk, as I had been compelled to do the last two or three conferences. I did not attend the April conference, 1909, the first conference I had missed since 1897. My mission for 1909 was Montana District which takes in all of the State. On May 13, before leaving home for my field of labor, I was married to Miss Clara McPhee, of Waverly,

Massachusetts, and at this writing we are now located at Deer Lodge, Montana. [The conference of 1910 appointed Brother Smith to Montana, Bozeman objective point.]

This paper is quite brief, I know, for the length of time it covers, but it contains all that is necessary, I think, and perhaps a great deal more. My interest in the gospel of Christ is as strong as it ever was, and I still desire to labor for the Master in this great work. I am glad to see so many young men in the church fitting themselves for the conflict, for I know the Lord has work for all. It is sometimes called a work of sacrifice, but I never felt that I was making any sacrifices for the cause of Christ, nor do I feel that way now. There is no other work in which a man can engage that will yield such immense profits as work done for the Lord, and a man will not have to wait until he gets a reward for the work he does for the Lord either. No, the Lord rewards his servants richly, even while they are doing the work. Not in dollars and cents, but in the glories of the divine life. There is not a single regret in my soul that I have been engaged for so many years in this work, for I look upon it as a glorious privilege to be permitted to labor with the Lord in his vineyard. I do regret very bitterly that my life has not been more fully consecrated to the Lord and his services. I am thankful that I have been permitted to do even a little good in my day.

In conclusion, I wish to exhort the young men, who are entering the ministry, to wholly consecrate themselves to God and to his service, in word, in thought, and in act. Live for God and his truth solely and you will never, never regret it.

In gospel bonds,

ISAAC M. SMITH.

HOW SCIENCE CONFIRMS THE TRUTHFULNESS OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.

"He left not himself without witnesses."—Acts 14: 17. When the latter day message first came forth it was dependent largely on biblical evidence for its support, and it was objected to by a great many on the ground that it spoke of a civilized people on this American continent, which to them was a thing impossible. It was not long, however, until the scientist began to unearth the ruins of the aborigines of America and to-day we have an abundance of archaic ruins to prove the divine authenticity of the angel's message.

The Los Angeles Examiner for Sunday, July 3, 1910, has a lengthy article on the ruins of the ancient American from which we extract a few items that are of interest:

With the treasure hunters will go some of the greatest archaeologists and savants of the world. . . . It is the knowledge of this hunt that has set the Maya Indians in rebellion. For the Mayas are at least partial descendants of the vanished race which built the sunken cities of Caribbean and the buried cities of Yucatan and Guatamala.

And again:

For many years fishermen, miles off the coast of Central America, have from time to time brought up carved stones, vases and small objects of gold and silver. Invariably the fishermen have been Indians, because they know where these articles come from, they consider them sacred, "Given to us by our forefathers," is their invariable formula in speaking of such things.

It is well to note at this juncture that this agrees perfectly with the Book of Mormon account. It will also be remembered by the reader of the Book of Mormon that it speaks of two civilizations and that some of the later cities were built upon the ruins of the older, i. e., that the Nephites rebuilt some of the Jaredite cities. Now note what this writer says:

One must consider the facts a little to see how amazing all this is. For many thousands of years South and Central America was the seat of a powerful and advanced civilization. . . . When the Spanish conquistadores first invaded the country the great cities of Yucatan were in ruins and had been for centuries. In some cases other cities had been built upon their sites; some were considered holy; some were places to be shunned.

Did the Mayas build the ruined cities, those forest-covered and those sunken beneath the sea? It would seem that even before the Mayas these gigantic piles of sculptured stone had been erected and that the Mayas, like the Aztecs, took what they found. It is probable that they merged with the last members of the lost race, and it is possible that they may be its lineal descendants. They think they are.

In addition to the foregoing we desire to call attention to another witness that has rendered us good service in the past when we have had the clergy of the day criticizing the Book of Mormon on the ground that it was impossible for the account of Nephi's temple to be true, as found on page 64 of the small edition which says:

And I, Nephi, did build a temple; and I did construct it after the manner of the temple of Solomon, save it were not built of so many precious things: for they were not to be found upon the land; wherefore, it could not be built like unto Solomon's temple. But the manner of the construction was like unto the temple of Solomon; and the workmanship thereof was exceeding fine.

In the Wonders of America, by James P. Boyd, page 535, we find this remarkable statement:

There are great ruins on Teauhuanuco island, in lake Titicaca (S. A.), not belonging to the Inca civilization, there are ruins of a building built like Solomon's temple. Stones fitted and fastened by bronze pins inserted in holes drilled in upper and lower surfaces.

This confirms the truth of the Book of Mormon and ought to be a means of silencing every tongue that is raised against it.

Ever hopeful in the work.

THE PASTOR AND HIS WORK.

Having had some experience as a pastor, and believing that the church at large might profitably consider some thoughts under the above caption, I will attempt to set forth some of the duties which belong to the work of a pastor, and also speak of the nature and scope of his service.

Our people, as a rule, are so overwhelmed with the idea of missionary work, and missions and missionaries, that the idea of pastors and their work has in a large measure been frowned upon as a sort of innovation. I believe that the need for pastoral work is becoming more and more evident, with the steady growth and progress we are making as a church. There was a period in the history of our church when the work to be accomplished was almost exclusively of a missionary character. Now that we have several large and established congregations in various places it follows that with changing and growing conditions, there will arise needs and demands which we must be prepared to meet.

By reference to the following scriptures, we shall learn that the work of pastors is likened unto that of a shepherd of his flock. Paul, speaking to the elders at Miletus, said:

Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood.—Acts 20: 28.

Peter, in his first epistle, has this to say:

The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed: Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock.—1 Peter 5: 1-3.

In speaking of his people, God has in many instances called them the "sheep of his pasture," as we read:

Know ye that the Lord he is God: it is he that hath made us, and not we ourselves: we are his people, and the sheep of his pasture.—Psalm 100: 3.

For he is our God; and we are the people of his pasture, and the sheep of his hand.—Psalm 95: 7.

So we thy people, and sheep of thy pasture, will give thee thanks for ever.—Psalm 79: 13.

By reference to the following quotations, we shall see the harmony in the thoughts already noted and the provision God has made for the welfare of his people and that the work of pastors is of ancient establishment and not a sectarian innovation. The Lord condemned the shepherds or pastors because they were remiss in duty with these words:

Woe be unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture! saith the Lord. Therefore thus saith the Lord God of Israel against the pastors that feed my people, Ye have scattered my flock, and driven them away, and have not visited them: behold, I will visit upon you the evil of your doings, saith the Lord.—Jeremiah 23: 1, 2.

And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, prophesy against the shepherds of Israel, prophesy, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God unto the shepherds, Woe be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves! should not the shepherds feed the flocks? Ye eat the fat, and ye clothe you with the wool, ye kill them that are fed: but ye feed not the flock. The diseased have ye not strengthened, neither have ye healed that which was sick, neither have ye bound up that which was broken, neither have ye brought again that which was driven away, neither have ye sought that which was lost; but with force and with cruelty have ye ruled them. And they were scattered, because there is no shepherd: and they became meat to all the beasts of the field, when they were scattered. My sheep wandered . . . and none did search or seek after them.—Ezekiel 34: 1-6.

By further investigation, we shall learn from the teaching we find in the tenth chapter of John that Christ speaks of himself as the "Good Shepherd," and as such, he careth for his sheep and in the perfecting of the organization of his church, just previous to his ascension on high, he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ.—Ephesians 4: 11, 12.

Why do many of our people lay such stress upon the fact that God has placed apostles and prophets in the church, and seemingly fail to recognize that God has placed pastors in his church as well? The work of the apostle is to direct the operation of the missionary forces in all the world—the work of the ministry. The prophet and evangelist likewise have their special duties to perform, while it is the specific work of the pastor to labor for the perfecting of the Saints and that he may be able to teach unto the edifying of the body of Christ. It will be readily noted that before a pastor's work is in demand, there must be a flock gathered by the efforts of the missionaries who are to open new fields and gather the lost ones into the fold. Men of experience in this church know well the loss the church has sustained by reason of a lack of men who were competent and available to be placed as overseers over flocks that they might have oversight of them and labor for their preservation and upbuilding. The branches of the church to-day which make the best showing, which are in the liveliest and most up-to-date condition, are those who have the help and assistance of a competent pastor. The law given, of recent date, tells us very plainly:

The twelve and seventy are traveling ministers and preachers of the gospel, to persuade men to obey the truth; the high priests and elders holding the same priesthood are the standing ministers of the church, having the watchcare of the membership and nurturing and sustaining them, under the direction and instruction of the presidency and the twelve.—Doctrine and Covenants 120: 3.

We see that there is a difference in the work of the traveling ministers, but each of them is important and necessary in its place. The pastor is a standing minister and it is his duty to give attention to all details affecting the growth, development, and stability of the church work in the locality where he may be stationed. The Lord has further revealed his will:

The twelve and seventy administering as those prosecuting the work of preaching with the warning voice, baptizing, organizing and setting in order, then pushing their ministry into other fields until the world is warned. It is the will of God that they do this; yea, verily, thus saith the Spirit, If they will now enter upon this work, leaving the burden of care in organized districts, or conferences to the standing ministry, under the presidency of the church; observing the law already given to ordain and set high priests or elders to preside in large branches and in districts.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 8.

Here we note that the Lord repeats the instruction clearly defining the work of the "traveling" and also the "standing ministry." Instruction is here given, in fact, releasing the Twelve from the oversight of the standing ministry and directing that they shall operate "under the presidency of the church." And it will also be noted that such high priests and elders shall be "set" to preside in large branches and in districts. We here note that the Lord definitely directs that only in branches that are large, where the conditions of the work demand the constant attention of the high priest or elder who may be set there to preside, is it necessary or needful for one to give his entire time to this work. Small branches require less attention and can be cared for by men who can spare some of their time aside from their secular pursuits.

Where high priests and elders are sent by direction of the Presidency, Twelve, or the church to labor in connection with the branch, it is wisdom and according to divine direction as above noted that they shall preside. It would be utterly out of place and embarrassing to the local laborer as well as to the one sent, should he who is engrossed and daily occupied with his secular work be called upon to preside over and dictate to the one who, being free to wait on his ministry, is giving his entire time to spiritual work. Both may labor effectually together according as time, circumstances, and conditions may permit, but each in his place.

Against this idea some have urged the objection that by setting men to preside violence is done to the law of common consent. To this objection we have only to say that it could not possibly be left to the people to say who of the number of available men should serve them, for the reason that the whole field at large must be taken into account and this by those who understand conditions and needs. The Lord, who gave the law of common consent, has directed that the Presidency and Twelve shall send men to preside where conditions are such that the needs demand it. It follows that neither the Presidency nor the Twelve would send a man to preside nor indorse him as a representative of the church, unless he was considered competent and worthy. When he comes, then, he does so not by virtue of his own authority, but by direction of those superior officers in the church whom the church at large has by common consent sustained in their offices and callings, and unless it can be shown that he who may be sent proves himself to be unworthy he should be received and chosen to preside, and by so doing the local church simply recognizes the authority of the general church as represented by its officers. Objection might be equally made against the appointment of missionaries to certain States or districts without the consent of the people therein, but it will be seen that the right of appointment rests with the Presidency and Twelve and they are given this right by revelation and by voice of the church. As will be noted in the organization of stakes, the officers are to preside over the branch in the city of the stake or seat of organization, subject to the advice and direction of the general church officers who have general control of the work everywhere by virtue of their office.—Book of Rules 15: 170.

Thus it is well to recognize the fact that the general church officers have control of the work everywhere, and who can point to any serious harm that has come by reason of their having appointed competent pastors to preside in places where needed? Another objection has been urged (notwithstanding revelations given in our day authorize it) that the appointment of pastors to labor in spiritual work and receive remuneration therefor would do violence to the following teaching of the Book of Mormon:

And when the priests left their labor, to impart the word of God unto the people, the people also left their labors to hear the word of God. And when the priest had imparted unto them the word of God, they all returned again diligently unto their labors; and the priest, not esteeming himself above his hearers; for the preacher was no better than the hearer. . . . And thus, they were all equal, and they did all labor, every man according to his strength.—Alma 1: 37-39.

Such teaching as this was given, no doubt, to show the proper contrast from that which was given by the dissenter, Nehor, who had taught that every priest and teacher ought to become popular; and they ought not to labor with their own hands, but that they ought to be supported by the people.—Alma 1: 5.

Who, in our church to-day, is advocating the idea that our ministry should be supported by the people, simply that they might avoid hard work? Is it not a fact that hundreds of our men are doing to-day just as was done in Book of Mormon times, working to support themselves and others, and at the same time they are rendering valuable aid to the church, using what time they may have at their disposal? When it comes to work, can not a man work just as earnestly and faithfully in spiritual work as in any other kind of work? The fact of our church to-day giving men who are laboring exclusively for its interests simply enough to meet their bare necessities while so laboring is quite a different proposition to that which was offered by Nehor. We are giving financial support to our ministry to-day simply from the standpoint of necessity. Many of our men, who have been blessed with a goodly share of this world's goods, have labored just as faithfully for years, asking no remuneration at all, as it was not needed. But, if it is wrong for a pastor to be sustained financially, so that he may perform his work, it is just as wrong to sustain the missionary or the general officers of the church so they may perform their work. We are not living in Book of Mormon times now; however, we are preaching the same gospel and serving the same God, neither God nor his gospel has changed, but the people and the many conditions surrounding them have changed marvelously. God has very wisely given directions to his church in our day, meeting emergencies and conditions as they are, and why not accept his word and be happy in performing that service we can render? No man in our ministry would accept the remuneration given him for his actual necessities, simply for the love of money. If he really loved money, and that is the real sin, he would be foolish to preach for our church for all he would get.

Those who are disposed to pass adverse criticism upon pastoral work would do well to read and consider these words:

Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth.

Perhaps a missionary who counts his success by the number of sermons he reports and the number he baptizes, simply can not understand how a pastor spends his time. Because a pastor does not work along the same lines that he does it does not follow that he is not just as busily employed. Let the missionary bear in mind that he is on duty while in his field and at work, and that the pastor is never off duty day or night and all the time. Let it further be borne in mind that the pastor who does his duty, accomplishes a great deal of missionary work—in fact, are we not all real missionaries, whatever our work in the church may be? How do we spend our time? Read again that beautiful quotation from Ezekiel where he briefly cites every detail of that attention which a shepherd should give his flock. He charged them that did not do their duty by the flocks, which we must interpret spiritually, as applied to the people, for the diseased were to be strengthened; the sick were to be healed; the broken bones were to be bound up; those that were driven away were to be brought back; those that were lost were to be sought after and found. Because of the lack of shepherds, the Lord said his sheep had become meat to all beasts of the field whose aim was to destroy them, and being scattered, the Lord reproved the shepherds because none did search or seek after them.

What does a pastor do? He tries to care for the spiritually diseased; to heal the spiritually sick; to bind up the broken bones and restore the brokenhearted; to reclaim those who are driven away for various causes and bring them back unto fellowship and communion with the church. He seeks after the lost and strayed ones and keeps in touch with them; he labors to so teach and train them not to stay away from the church and become the prey of some fiendish sin or lust that will result in their destruction. He is to feed them, and under this head is included their whole spiritual education. He is to preach such things as he sees are needed and encourage his flock to inform themselves by obtaining the books and periodicals of the church; he is to guide his flock into pastures green where their souls may be satisfied with foretastes of the joys of heaven; he is to promote harmony, peace, and good will and lead his people into conditions so free from trouble as those beside the still waters; his effort is to so acquaint himself with those whom he is leading that he may lead them indeed into the paths of righteousness. Added to this and many other quotations we might make is this very fitting one from modern revelation which says: "Having the watchcare of the membership and nurturing and sustaining them."

Anyone who has had experience in pastoral work, well knows that in the performance of this work he may spend the very best of his bodily and mental powers. He may work just as hard as he may choose and the more that is accomplished, the greater will be the opportunities for service. Having the oversight of the flock, it is well to know their whereabouts and keep in touch with each one. It should be a source of comfort and strength for any member to know that some one is making it his special business to look after him. In order that I may do this effectually, I have devised blanks for use with an indexed loose leaf book, size eight by five inches. The John C. Moor Corporation, Rochester, New York, makes the book and blank leaves and one can get them printed anywhere. The book with three hundred leaves costs one dollar and twenty-five cents and the printing will cost about two dollars.

By using this record, I can instantly locate any member of the branch over which I preside. I can tell the names of each member of the household, their business and location; their spiritual condition; their street and telephone numbers; their record for church attendance; whether or not they take the church papers, and dates when I have called upon them for a visit or when I have written to them. If the name of any member of the family is changed by marriage, or if anyone may die, or be expelled from the church, or move away to other places, I make note of it on the reverse side of the sheet, giving full particulars. I find this record to be very practical, as a pastor's office is a sort of a central bureau of information for the congregation.

So many times, people in and out of the church inquire for certain members of the church and it is very convenient to have the information at hand. Another very desirable advantage of this system is that when a change of pastors is ordered, this record can be given over to the one succeeding and he will at once be put in touch with every member of the flock over which he becomes overseer. In my book I use two hundred white leaves and one hundred blue leaves. The white leaves I use for members of the church and the blue ones for those who hold the priesthood and for friends or prospective converts whom I may wish to follow up. My experience convinces me that a pastor will do his best work where he is best acquainted, therefore I believe that his work should be lengthened out, covering sufficient length of time to enable him to lay and perform such plans of work as in his judgment will bring best results in the church and locality where he may be stationed. It should be remembered that his work is of a standing and not of a traveling character, and his power and influence, his work and plans are sure to be disrupted and foiled if he is called upon to make too frequent moves.

The appointment of pastors being left with the higher officers of the church, they must use their judgment as to the length of time one shall serve in one place, but all being well, I believe a pastor's work will be the most effective when covering a number of years in one place. He is to feed the church of God, and to do this best he must know each one and by continual association, he learns to know them with that accuracy and definiteness that will enable him to adjust his teaching to their deeds.

Of education, Professor Huxley has said:

Education is the instruction of the intellect in the laws of nature, under which name I include not merely things and their forces, but men and their ways; and the fashioning of the affections and of the will into an earnest and loving desire to move in harmony with those laws.

No missionary can possibly get down to the detail of such work as that which a pastor performs, for he has not sufficient time to give to it. I believe the crowning success of a pastor's work is to be able to fashion the affections and will of his flock into an earnest, intelligent, and loving desire to move in perfect harmony with every divine law. If we are to build permanently and solidly as a church, we must put into this great spiritual building every specification as indicated by our Lord, and as there exists everywhere such great need for higher spiritual attainment, it is well that those whom God has designated should give their time and best thought to this work. Both ancient and modern revelation clearly indicate that the burden of this work rests upon those who are called to be pastors. They are to labor in harmony with the direction and instruction of the Presidency, and as Paul says:

And we beseech you, brethren, to know them which labor among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you; and to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake.—1 Thessalonians 5: 12, 13.

Take special notice of the fact that it is for their work's sake that they are to be highly esteemed, not for personal reasons. Again Paul says:

Against an elder receive not an accusation, but before two or three witnesses.—1 Timothy 5: 19.

As a pastor is the leading or central figure upon whom the success of a local church depends, to speak disparagingly of him, or accuse him of things of which he is not guilty, would do him no more personal harm than it would do others, but as it would do a vast amount of harm to the work, no one should speak disrespectfully of or throw discredit upon his work. If he is guilty of any misdemeanor, call the two or three witnesses to hear the accusation and report it to those under whom the pastor labors, otherwise, for the work's sake, keep silent. Paul has further said,

Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially they who labor in the word and doctrine.—1 Timothy 5: 17.

Remember them which have the rule over you, who have spoken unto you the word of God; whose faith follow, considering the end of their conversation; . . . Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves: for they watch for your souls, as they that must give account, that they may do it with joy, and not with grief.—Hebrews 13: 7, 17.

Much of all this instruction, of course, applies to all grades of officers in the church, but I believe that it specially applies to one doing pastoral work. Upon the pastor, or president of the branch, devolves the responsibility of ruling and deciding what shall and what shall not be done. He must protect the rights of the body and of individuals, even though his ruling may seem unkind to some. Of the fitness of one qualified for this line of work, Paul has said:

And the servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth; and that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will.—2 Timothy 2: 24-26.

Men who labor in this capacity are called upon to be an example to the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity.—1 Timothy 4: 12.

While they thus labor for the perfecting of others, God has set a very high standard for them to reach and except they shall succeed in reaching it in a very large measure, the people will not have confidence in them. Not only must they attain to it, but they must maintain a constant consecration of their powers and unswerving loyalty of their attitude toward God and his work.

The pastor and his work being an important part of the whole work, entrusted to our care as a church, let us not hesitate to give it intelligent consideration and support. All departments of service in the church of God should have that recognition which is right and proper, and I firmly believe that the growing and established conditions in our church will soon claim recognition for the needs and merits of pastoral work as never before.

How quick we are to notice the difference between a forced and a spontaneous laugh. It is the latter that falls on the ear like music, and brings an answering smile to one's lips. And the same is true of kindness. If it is forced, mechanical, inspired by a sense of duty, it lacks the charm of the spontaneous kindness which is the overflow of a loving heart.

Life has no other utility or aim than the throwing of one's self heartily into the supreme struggle. Nothing is lost in it—grain of sand or cornerstone; all that man's effort brings to it finds by the eternal laws its appointed place, goes to strengthen either the bulwarks of evil or the City of God. Woe to him who folds his hands because of his insignificance; to do nothing is the very worst fashion of doing evil.—Charles Wagner.

WHY ARE ALL CHRISTIAN NATIONS ARMED TO THE TEETH.—NOS. 3 AND 4.

NO CHRISTIAN NATIONS.

BY EDWIN D. MEAD.

Doctor Hale was once asked in a public meeting, after one of his peace addresses at the time of the first Hague conference, how it happened, if the new peace movement was so strong as claimed, that war is always increasing and there is more war to-day than ever before.

"Because there is not," was his quick and emphatic answer. This fact should never be forgotten. Wars do still occasionally break out, but the decrease of war in recent times has been rapid. A few centuries ago, war was the regular and chief business of all nations; peace was an occasional respite when resources were gathered for further war. War is not to-day the chief business of the United States or England or Germany or any other great nation, and it becomes less and less their business. There was not half so much war in the nineteenth century as in the eighteenth, and there will not be half so much in the twentieth as in the nineteenth.

When I am asked, "Why all Christian nations are armed to the teeth," I answer: Because there are no Christian nations. Doctor Bartol once exclaimed, after listening to a discussion of the failure of Christianity: "Do not talk of the failure of Christianity before Christianity has ever been tried."

Christianity has never been tried in international affairs. Even men whose personal ethics are highly honorable and scrupulous constantly lose every scruple in their capacity as "patriots" when some conflict is precipitated with some millions of "patriots" across the border, over some paltry question of pride or prejudice. Every feeling of humanity goes into abeyance and every impulse of cruelty and greed has full sway with them as members of a nation until the nation against which their passion is roused—every member of which they would personally treat like a gentleman—is humiliated, or has humiliated them.

This describes, with varying accuracy, every so-called Christian nation at this hour. Certain easy contingencies might half a dozen times in the last half dozen years have made it a perfectly true description of England and Germany. It was true of three quarters of the people of England, including three quarters of the bishops, during the Boer war. It was true of a majority of the American people during the Philippine war.

This, I say, is not Christianity. It is barbarism, with a sufficient amount of Christian veneer to stick on in pleasant weather, when the "Christian nation" is under no provocation or temptation. If the nations were really Christian nations, if they once really did "get religion," they would devise some way to bring this "armed to the teeth" condition of things to an end before Christmas. Even Mr. Roosevelt declares they could do it as things are if they had any proper seriousness of purpose.

Every one of them knows perfectly well that their present armaments are a parody upon their professed Christianity. Everyone knows how grotesque and ghastly it would be to set a figure of Christ over the gate of each navy yard and at the prow of each battle ship. I propose that experiment to the sundry "Christian nations" from now to the time of the next Hague conference. It might prove a salutary revelation to them of the true relation of their battle ships to their vaunted "Christianity."

The first answer, therefore, to the question why all Christian nations are armed to the teeth is that they are still largely heathen nations—begging the heathen's pardon—and need converting. Or we can adopt Mr. Roosevelt's phrase and say that the governments have no proper seriousness in the matter.

A second answer is that, in this age of devotion to money making, the building of battle ships—and this is only one item—is one of the most profitable businesses on earth, enlisting immense capital and numberless "vested interests." Quincy, Massachusetts, offers one little illustration—the whole town recently turning out, church bells ringing, young men of the Christian association burning red fire, in a regular Roman triumph for the admiral who had captured for the Fore River shipyards the contract for two battle ships. That meant "business" for Quincy, and Quincy was "solid." Multiply that by a thousand.

A third cause is the immense influence everywhere to-day of the professional military and naval class. It is slight in this country yet to what it is in England and Germany; but Justice Brewer pointed out a little before his death the menace to the country from the seven hundred and twenty-seven active and retired military officers now—an entirely new phenomenon—living with their families in Washington.

"Do you wonder," he asked, "that these, connected as they are with the military and naval forces, are gradually transforming the capital of the country into a military and naval center, and that their influence is constantly pressing upon Congress for continued development and increased expenditures in military and naval lines?"

We must all recognize that all nations have to-day ten times as many points of contact with each other as ever before. The new means of transportation make them all neighbors. Germany and England to-day almost touch each other. Japan and China, which once seemed so far away from us, now seem scarcely farther away than England. All this gives suspicious people a sense of multiplied dangers. This is one reason why they "arm to the teeth." It is a very real reason for better world organization.

I am myself of those who believe that this wild naval rivalry and extravagance is the final spasm of declining militarism. The people everywhere are waking up to the waste and wickedness of it. They see that the great navies have now become vastly more a provocation and a danger than a defense.

At the same time, the legal machinery for the settlement of international disputes is rapidly evolving as never before. More and more the nations are submitting their differences to The Hague tribunal, and learning that this is the effective, sensible and "Christian" way. Their confidence in the international courts will steadily grow. Coincidentally will grow the perception of the folly and uselessness of the exhausting armaments; and in time it is to be hoped that the "Christian nations" will act in a Christian way.

THE BEAST DIES HARD.

BY REV. W. H. VAN ALLEN.

The spectacle of Christendom armed to the teeth, after eighteen centuries of the proclamation of the gospel of peace, is disgusting and scandalous. I do not forget that there are illustrious military virtues, courage, self-sacrifice, obedience, discipline. I remember all the happy warriors, from Cornelius the centurion, to Washington and Lee and Gordon. But God never meant his earth to be an armed camp, his sea a field of battle for mighty men-of-war; and his truth condemns the waste of militarism, the mutual suspicion, the greed and folly of imperialism.

Where lies the fault? In the failure to recognize the essential social doctrine which our blessed Lord revealed, the oneness of mankind, whereby men's real interests are common, not opposed. The beast dies hard; the law of the jungle has been so long affirmed that the law of love is slowly accepted, whether by nations or individuals.

To think of all other men as rivals, and to destroy them if possible, that the fittest to survive might survive; something like this appears through the mists of humanity's emergence. That meant private warfare as the ordinary condition of life; and though the tribe and the nation came into being, the huge castles of ancient times prove how long the old notion prevailed, that a strong man must fight with his own hand.

So, competition in the economic order is a survival of that same savagery—some day, please God, to disappear.

But gradually men learned the majesty of law; they found that peace brought blessings which continual bickerings with their neighbors could never give; and when a clash of interests appeared inevitable, they had recourse to the courts for calm and temperate adjudication by disinterested judges. The man who, in a civilized state, "takes the law into his own hands," under whatever pretext, is an enemy to society and is rightly punished as such; for law is nobler than revenge, and its arbitrament is better than that of physical force.

This is the lesson that nations have not yet learned, because international law has been slow of development, without adequate courts to expound and apply it, and with no police force to execute decisions. Other factors have conspired to perpetuate the old bad order; the ambition of a military caste, the pomp and circumstances which minister to the vanity of kings, the delusion that conquests by war add to national wealth. But underlying all these is the fear that if a country's honor or welfare is jeopardized by a neighbor, recourse must be had to warfare, the last arbitrament of sovereigns, to settle the dispute. We need not be surprised to find it so. The evolution of society is, in the nature of the case, gradual, even as the evolution of the highest individual type. But I believe that when the peace palace is opened next year at The Hague we shall have entered fairly upon the stage of development which will make vast armies and navies as patently absurd and needless as the robber barons' fortresses or the massy armor of their builders seem to-day.

The family of nations is coming to a consciousness of solidarity. If one member suffers, all the members suffer with it. Ties of commerce, finance, sympathy are stronger than offensive alliances ever were. Battle ships never wrought so nobly as those that carried food to Messina last year; soldiers never did more gallant service than those who saved the earthquake's survivors from the ruined cities. Working in the cause of a common humanity old national and racial prejudices disappear, and the full significance of the divine precept is felt: "Honor all men."

Some statesmen (too few, alas!) are learning that politics is the science of human happiness and are turning their attention to the problems at home, where millions are submerged in the slums of great cities by the criminal neglect of their rulers to conserve the nation's most precious treasures; and victories in that battle against poverty and misery and vice will deserve greater glory than victories on battlefields where conqueror and conquered alike are vanquished by cruel and hideous death, and the triumph is as woeful as the defeat.

By the abolition of warfare all nations will gain immeasurably in the energy and wealth set free for constructive service to the state. Even now those tiny European countries whose freedom is guaranteed by international agreement show a joyous prosperity altogether different from their neighbors, where every peasant or artisan carries a warrior on his back. Witness that Arcadian principality, the grand duchy of Luxembourg, with an army of three hundred, who serve as postmen, firemen and policemen except on parade days and where poverty as we know it is unknown.

FAMOUS GEMS OF PROSE.

"MATCHES AND OVERMATCHES."

But the gentleman inquires why he was made the object of such a reply. Why was he singled out? If an attack had been made on the east, he, he assures us, did not begin it; it was made by the gentleman from Missouri. Sir, I answered the gentleman's speech because I happened to hear it; and because, also, I chose to give an answer to that speech which, if unanswered, I thought most likely to produce injurious impressions. I did not stop to inquire who was the original drawer of the bill. I found a responsible indorser before me, and it was my purpose to hold him liable, and to bring him to his just responsibility without delay. But, sir, this interrogatory of the honorable member was only introductory to another. He proceeded to ask me whether I had turned upon him, in this debate, from the consciousness that I should find an overmatch, if I ventured on a contest with his friend from Missouri.

If, sir, the honorable member, modestia gratia, had chosen thus to defer to his friend, and to pay him a compliment, without intentional disparagement to others, it would have been quite according to the friendly courtesies of debate, and not at all ungrateful to my own feelings. I am not one of those, sir, who esteem any tribute of regard, whether light and occasional, or more serious and deliberate, which may be bestowed on others, as so much unjustly withholden from themselves. But the tone and manner of the gentleman's question forbid me thus to interpret it.

I am not at liberty to consider it as nothing more than a civility to his friend. It had an air of taunt and disparagement, something of the loftiness of asserted superiority, which does not allow me to pass it over without notice. It was put as a question for me to answer, and so put as if it were difficult for me to answer, whether I deemed the member from Missouri an overmatch for myself in debate here. It seems to me, sir, that this is extraordinary language, and an extraordinary tone, for the discussions of this body.

Matches and Overmatches! Those terms are more applicable elsewhere than here, and fitter for other assemblies than this. Sir, the gentleman seems to forget where and what we are. This is a senate, a senate of equals, of men of individual honor and personal character, and of absolute independence. We know no masters, we acknowledge no dictators. This is a hall for mutual consultation and discussion; not an arena for the exhibition of champions. I offer myself, sir, as a match for no man; I throw the challenge of debate at no man's feet. But then, sir, since the honorable member has put the question in a manner that calls for an answer, I will give him an answer; and I tell him that, holding myself to be the humblest of the members here, I yet know nothing in the arm of his friend from Missouri, either alone or when aided by the arm of his friend from South Carolina, that need deter even me from espousing whatever opinions I may choose to espouse, from debating whenever I may choose to debate, or from speaking whatever I may see fit to say, on the floor of the senate.

Sir, when uttered as a matter of commendation or compliment, I should dissent from nothing which the honorable member might say of his friend. Still less do I put forth any pretensions of my own. But, when put to me as a matter of taunt, I throw it back, and say to the gentleman that he could possibly say nothing more likely than such a comparison to wound my pride of personal character. The anger of its tone rescued the remark from intentional irony, which otherwise, probably, would have been its general acceptance.

But, sir, if it be imagined that by this mutual quotation and commendation; if it be supposed that, by casting the characters of the drama, assigning to each his part, to one the attack, to another the cry of onset; or if it be thought that, by a loud and empty vaunt of anticipated victory, any laurels are to be won here; if it be imagined, especially, that any, or all these things will shake any purpose of mine, I can tell the honorable member, once for all, that he is greatly mistaken, and that he is dealing with one of whose temper and character he has yet much to learn.

Sir, I shall not allow myself, on this occasion, I hope on no occasion, to be betrayed into any loss of temper; but, if provoked, as I trust I never shall be, into crimination and recrimination, the honorable member may perhaps find that, in that contest, there will be blows to take as well as blows to give; that others can state comparisons as significant, at least, as his own; and that his impunity may possibly demand of him whatever powers of taunt and sarcasm he may possess. I commend him to a prudent husbandry of his resources.—Daniel Webster.

LIBERTY OF THE PRESS.

The liberty of the press is the highest safeguard of all free government. Ours could not exist without it. It is like a great exulting and abounding river. It is fed by the dews of heaven which distill their sweetest drops to form it. It gushes from the rill as it breaks from the deep caverns of the earth. It is augmented by a thousand affluents that dash from the mountain top to separate again into a thousand bounteous and irrigating streams around.

On its broad bosom it bears a thousand barks. There genius spreads its purpling sail. There poetry dips its silver oar. There art, invention, discovery, science, morality, religion may safely and securely float. It wanders through every land. It has a genial, cordial source of thought and inspiration wherever it touches, whatever it surrounds. Upon its borders there grows every flower of grace and every fruit of truth.

Sometimes that river oversteps its bounds. Sometimes that stream becomes a dangerous torrent and destroys towns and cities upon its banks. But without it, civilization, humanity, government—all that makes society itself—would disappear and the world would return to its ancient barbarism.—Edward D. Baker.

DRAGGING A ROAD ACROSS IOWA.

Any man who can transform an Iowa mud road to a nearly perfect highway, three hundred and eighty miles long, at an estimated cost of building and maintenance for the first year of three dollars a mile, has grasped a new idea in the matter of road building. That the road from Council Bluffs to Davenport is a success and is commanding the attention of the entire country and Canada, is shown not only by its splendid condition, but by the enormous mail which pours in upon the Secretary of the River-to-River Dragged Road, which is Mr. Eichinger's official designation—without pay, by the way.

Once Eichinger hit upon the township unit, he promptly proceeded to interest the influential men of the county in the project—farmers, bankers, automobilists, country editors, clergymen, merchants, school-teachers, and scholars, all were pressed into service. Governor Carroll appointed commissioners for each county, every one of whom received a commission bearing the great seal of the State, with a lot of ribbon, and was altogether an imposing document. And these men served without pay. Upon a diplomatic hint the townships of a county through which the road passed were formed into an organization like a company of infantry, with the "Special River-to-River Dragged Road Commissioner" as captain. He had his squads strung out along the road, and upon the word from Secretary Eichinger started them to work dragging the highway. The haughty owner of an automobile, perforce, hitched a drag behind his car and got to work. It did not take long to establish the fact that a motor-car could drag after a rain from eight to ten miles of the highway in an hour, thus leaving the road in excellent condition.

When the feminine portion of the community discovered that the dragged road meant more frequent trips to town, more visitors, and lots of touring cars whizzing by, they spurred the male laggards. Road-dragging parties became the vogue from the Missouri to the Mississippi. The old-time buggy ride, formerly a Sunday luxury, became an every-day occurrence. The farmer and his family started to talk motor-cars—and before they realized it they bought one. More than eight thousand cars have been sold in the State this spring. Up to date seventeen thousand automobiles have been licensed by the State.—Stewart Ives de Krafft, in Harper's Weekly.

GOLDEN SABBATH MORNING IN JERUSALEM.

It is a golden Sabbath morning in Jerusalem. Already in the early dawn there may be seen upon the roads that wind in tortuous fascination amid hills and valleys the coming caravans of festival worshipers. From the fields of the north, from the mountain fastnesses beyond Jordan, and from the slopes of the great western sea there come to the center of the religious and patriotic hope of the Israelites, the sons of Abraham, to their great feast. As one of these little companies approaches the holy city and finally passes through the gates, in the nearer view, we see that suddenly these steps forth from the crowd an aged man. The years have silvered the once raven locks, and in the stern, strong face there are the lines graven deep by years of yearning in captivity. It is a returning exile who, for the first time after many years, stands again within the sacred enclosures and realizes that his pilgrimage is done.

In the hush that falls upon the younger men and the women, even the children are stilled and the little band halts; while from the old man's lips there come the tones of the pilgrim's song:

"Our feet are standing in thy gates, O blest Jerusalem,
O Jerusalem, builded so beautifully strong,
Whither Jehovah's tribes go up, Israel's mighty testimony
For thanksgiving to the Lord."

For a moment a long-suppressed sob breaks forth and interrupts the song, but with a great effort the head is once more lifted and the voice is heard again, and now the pilgrim has touched another theme:

"Thrones are there of judgment true,
Great David's house still rules the land.
I salute in peace Jerusalem,
They must prosper that love thee!"

There is another pause and the strong form quivers as with some deep, inexpressible pain. The light in the eyes, then filled with tears, becomes dim, and when they are clear again they have a dreamy look that tells of companions yet in the far-distant exile. And then again the song, the benediction of suffering:

"Peace be within thy walls,
Prosperity rule in thy palace,
For my brethren and companions' sakes
I will now say, 'Peace be within thee.'"

And the old Hebrew patriot, the long hope of many years fulfilled, sinks to the ground, lost in a flood of devotion to his country and his God.—Adolph A. Berle.

Mother's Room.

He's that boy that lives with his aunt, you know.
I'm awfully sorry for poor Jack Roe;
And he says his house is filled with gloom
Because it has got no "mother's room."
I tell you what, it is fine enough
To talk of "boudoirs" and such fancy stuff,
But the room of rooms that seems best to me
Is mother's room, where a fellow can rest,
And talk of things his heart loves best.

What if I do get dirt about
And sometimes startle my aunt with a shout?
It is mother's room, and if she don't mind,
To the hints of others I'm always blind.
Maybe I lose my things—what then?
In mother's room I find them again.
And I've never denied that I litter the floor
With marbles and tops and many things more;
But I tell you, for boys with a tired head,
It is jolly to rest it on mother's bed.

Now, poor Jack Roe, when he visits me,
I take him to mother's room, you see.
Because it's the nicest place to go
When a fellow's spirits are getting low.
And mother, she's always kind and sweet,
And there's always a smile poor Jack to greet,
And somehow the sunbeams seem to glow
More brightly in mother's room, I know,
Than anywhere else, and you'll never find gloom
Or any old shadow in mother's room.—Author unknown.

No Place for Boys.

Secretary Shaw has a habit of saying things every little while that set his countrymen and country women thinking hard. The characteristic is not a new one with him, nor has it developed since he went to live in Washington. When he was governor of Iowa he had a way of making public announcements that started debating societies going at full speed all over the country.

But he has never made any statement of quite such general and vital interest as he did the other day in Washington, when he spoke before a large number of women on the subject of "Boys." The feature of this address that has caught the ear of a great many fathers and mothers was the sentence: "There is no place for the boy," followed up with this explanation:

"I think that most of us who have been boys and those of us who have watched the boy will have found and recognized that he is, all things considered, the most valuable thing on this earth.

VALUE OF THE BOY.

"The boy is worth more than any other creature that treads the earth, yet far more than any other thing in the world, I think, there is less place for him. Now, don't misunderstand me. He is less welcome anywhere than others; there are less kind words for him than anybody else. I am not saying that the lad measures up to the standard of the girl's life. I will grant you that we are raising a very much better type of young women than we are young men. But we are none the less interested in the young men, none the less interested in the boy.

"From morning to night it is 'stop it' and 'don't do this' and 'don't do that' and 'don't come in here with your muddy feet.'

"He never sees much of his father. The father in gone in the morning and the boy is in bed when father comes home, and all he sees are other boys and some most excellent and very competent women teachers. But you can not rear a man without bringing the boy in contact with man. That is what the family is for. That the boy should be brought into the world and just left to the mother to rear is the darkest error. He must come in contact with both his father and mother."

Now, strange as it may appear in this age of quibble and combativeness, nobody has yet come forward to disagree with the secretary's ideas. Even the mothers take his side and do not attempt to put forth any argument even against the heresy that the boy is a more valuable thing in this world than the girl.

JUDGE DUNNE'S IDEAS.

Judge Edward F. Dunne, the man who made Roosevelt famous, and incidentally jealous, by comparing tallies in Washington the other day, has very decided and very interesting ideas on the subject. When I asked him to answer the question, "What is the boy's place in the home?" he sent along the following. One might write on the subject a whole day and not compass so much of intelligent comment:

"To me the answer seems simple. Any place at home is the boy's place, so long as he is at home. Give him any place in the establishment congenial to his tastes, but see that he remains at home as much as possible. If he studies, give him the softest seat in the house. If he is athletic, give him bats and balls, the punching bag and boxing gloves, but encourage his athletic exercises in the house, the barn or the adjoining lots. If he discloses a leaning toward any special science, art or craft, encourage it, and, so far as you can afford it, give him the appliances, books or mechanism necessary for its development.

MAKE HOME ATTRACTIVE.

"But install them in your home and keep him home as much as possible. Has he a penchant for billiards? Get him a table, even if it be a miniature one. The more hours each day your son spends at home the more and the sooner he develops a clean, healthy social temperament.

"Encourage him to invite clean, manly boys of his own age to his home, and let him return such calls. Spend as much time with your sons at home as business will permit; enter into their studies, their play, their thoughts, interests and ambitions. Take them out with you as often as possible. Encourage an intimacy with them. Make them your companions as well as your sons, as far as practicable.

"From one to five years old the boy differs little in domestic economy from the girl. He is a cherub to be fondled and trundled and kissed. From five to ten he becomes noisy, turbulent, and destructive, with splendid appetite and vigorous digestion. The best treatment during this period is plain corduroy or never-rip clothes, heavy shoes, spring-lock doors, easily opened from the inside, and ever-ready sandwiches and doughnuts. Never bar his egress from the house; it's a waste of time. He won't go far—his appetite won't let him. The spring-lock, however, gives you a chance to look over his muddy boots before they strike the rugs of carpets.

BOZEMAN, MONTANA, July 23, 1910.

Editors Herald: The Bozeman Saints are not dead. I can't say that we are as fully alive to the work of the Master as we should be, but signs of life are visible, and we are hopeful. At our conference, held here on the 18th and 19th of June, our church was dedicated to the Lord; and it is certainly a nice place in which to meet and worship our heavenly Father, and the Saints should take a great interest in making a success in church work in this city. I am glad to say, too, that most of them do try faithfully to do the work assigned them. This is the hot season of the year, and we are not at all crowded at our services, but we are trying to hold on to the "rod of iron" which leads to the tree of life.

The HERALD of July 20 and Zion's Ensign for July 21 are at hand and I have just read the appeal from the Bishopric. It has the right ring and I truly hope it may be read by all the Saints. And not only read by them, but may the truth of the document fire all with love and zeal for the Master's work to that extent that united action may be the result. Surely the time to favor Zion has come. Are we ready? If we are not ready, will we get ready? It is left with us to decide whether we will stand with the Lord and his people or with the world; and our choice will be expressed by our actions, rather than by our words. May the Lord help us to make the wise choice. Asking an interest in the prayers of all of God's people, I am yours in the hope of Zion's redemption.

ISAAC M. SMITH.

23 NORTH SEVENTH AVENUE.

WEST DERBY, VERMONT.

Dear Herald: As I am lonely to-day I will write to you all and tell you how much comfort your letters give me. May God reward you for your sunshine. I am able to sit up a little bit, but am in great pain all the time. I am in hopes to be able to go to the hospital this fall, as I can not get the care I need at home, for my husband can not manage house-work, and when he is away I have to stay alone all day and the days seem so long and weary.

Could some of the sisters send me flower seeds or a rose root? Many thanks for the tracts and good reading. My husband likes to read when he sits down. I can enjoy them too. As I can get postage, I pass them on to the Vermont prison.

I think God wants us all to do what we can to cheer others. No matter what one's lot is, there is a little mission we can pass on and may our heavenly Father help us in all trying circumstances to press onward until we reach that home where pain and want are not known. Pray for us.

SR. ROY COWLES.

BOISE, IDAHO, July 21, 1910.

Editors Herald: Since the 4th of June, I have been associated with Elder S. D. Condit in holding meetings in the gospel tent that was purchased by the Saints of western Idaho and eastern Oregon. Our labors so far have been confined to Boise and Meridian. I have been expecting Elder T. C. Kelley to come to the assistance of Elder Condit and release me from tent work, so I can go to other points in my mission; but to date, he has disappointed me.

The weather is hot and dry here and considerable sickness has resulted from the continued hot weather. The Saints, however, with few exceptions, are in good health. The Saints composing the Boise Branch are a noble band and show their faith by their works, and when they undertake to provide for a conference or for mission work, or for the missionaries, there is no halfway work with them. And notwithstanding they are generally poor and their numbers few, yet in less than a year they have furnished more than fifty dollars for conference expenses and more than one hundred dollars for a tent fund, beside keeping up branch expenses and contributing to other good works; and last, but not least, in the estimation of the writer, they raised a nice sum of money and presented it to the writer, more than enough to buy him a good suit of clothes which he very much needed. May God reward them for their liberality.

For the information of those who desire me to visit them, I can not say just when I will be able to reach them, but I hope to soon be released from tent work, and then I will try to let you know when I can reach you. Hoping and praying for the salvation of the honest in heart, your friend and co-laborer in the gospel,

A. J. LAYLAND.

Dear Herald: I am a resident of Newton County, Arkansas. I live within ten miles of Jasper, the county seat, or seven miles north of Deer, which is my post-office. If there is an elder in this country or near here, I would like him to come here, for I want to be baptized.

Yours truly,

A. D. ZEARLEY.

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS, July 23, 1910.

Dear Herald: It has been some time since I asked for space to let your readers know how the work is progressing in the Clinton, Missouri, District. I believe we are holding our own and in some parts of the field we are making some advancement.

In the latter part of May I held a few meetings at Eldorado Springs with fair attendance and interest. Two were baptized and the Saints were encouraged. My next effort was at Coal Hill. Farmers were very busy, but we had a fair attendance and on Sunday we had an old-fashioned basket dinner and supper, and three meetings besides the Sunday school services were held. There is a live Sunday school there, Bro. Oscar and Sr. Jennie Reynolds being the directors of it. The branch is presided over by Elder W. E. Reynolds with wisdom and care and, Saints, please remember that he is the Bishop's agent and he needs your tithes and offerings badly now to assist him in supplying the dependents. His address is Eldorado Springs, Missouri, R. F. D. 5. Let him hear from you at once.

From Coal Hill I went to Rockville and held three meetings at the home of Bro. Thomas Wright who, on account of affliction, has not been able to leave the house since December 3, 1909. I then went out to the home of Bro. O. J. Tophome, southeast of Appleton City, where I held nine meetings on the lawn. The people were very attentive and Brother Tophome and his neighbors did not forget that a missionary had to pay care fare, as was evidenced by me leaving there with $8.97 more than I had when I went. According to the Master's statement there are disciples there.

I will not ask for space to tell of all my travels and labor, but wish to tell you of the work in this part of the field by the earnest request of Bro. Lee Quick, near Mapleton, Kansas. I visited his home and on the 8th of July we began meetings in Rock Ridge Schoolhouse and on Sunday, the 10th, we held meetings at the home of Bro. W. Elethrop, in his grove. We had a good day with another basket dinner, with Sunday school in the morning, preaching at 11 a. m., dinner at 12.30 for all present; Sunday school, with a real good program, at 2 p. m., and preaching at 3 and 8.30 p. m. We then held forth in the schoolhouse until Wednesday night, and Thursday morning four were baptized and with those who have resided there for some time and the nine baptized last winter, there are twenty-one members living close together and they have a fine Sunday school presided over by Sr. Lee Quick.

Brother Quick and family have lived their religion in that locality and the fruits of their deportment and teaching are beginning to appear. Brother Quick stands high in the estimation of his neighbors, both members and nonmembers, as does also his family. Numbers of others are interested. I was royally entertained both by members and others. I made my home mostly with Brn. Quick and Elethrop, but visited a number of others and was treated kindly by all. They, too, remembered the financial part.

From there, in company with Brother Quick, I went to Hepler where we held four interesting meetings at the home of Bro. and Sr. Stephen Chezem. There are a number interested there. Brother Jenkins will please forgive our trespassing, as this last place is in the Spring River District,—just a little over the line, and it is said that "Over the fence is out."

I am now back in my field but I believe Brother Quick is still in the Spring River District. Since last Tuesday night I have been preaching on the lawns at homes of Brethren Coolman and Balkham, and am having a fair hearing. We are reaching more outsiders than we could reach at the hall. I am having good liberty and attention and the Saints are assisting fairly well. One outsider, an old man, said to Brother Coolman, at the close of the last meeting, "If the gospel ever was preached, that man preached it to-night"; but as in the past, "Many believed, but for fear of the people, they did not confess Him" (did not obey).

I am feeling well in the work and hope to overcome and labor on, though the heat gets real close to me. Now Saints of Clinton District, awake and get ready for the reunion at Eldorado Springs, beginning August 19. Hoping for the final triumph of the work, I am trying to do my part of the work and I believe that I am in the faith.

JAMES MOLER.

MOUNT CARMEL, ILLINOIS, July 19, 1910.

Dear Herald: My heart has been made to rejoice many times that I am a Latter Day Saint. How much joy and comfort we find in this great work if we will only live it and do our duty. I often feel that I can't do as much as others, but God has given each a talent of some kind. Let us use it in the best possible way, so as to bring others into the fold of God. We should never get discouraged. There is nothing to discourage us if we will keep this beautiful gospel ever in our minds. We must not forget we are Latter Day Saints and children of God, and that he watches and cares for us every hour and minute, and is always with us, and in trials and troubles we have a strong arm to lean upon. We all have trials and disappointments along our life's road. God's people must be a tried people. The trials make it easier for us, though they may be hard. Look at the life of Christ, how rough was his road. We must not think that we have a hard time and go around murmuring about it. We should take our trouble to God in prayer. He can help when no one else can.

As I am one of the isolated ones, I have the privilege of attending church only as I make a visit to my dear old home-stead. There I meet with the dear Saints. I think you will agree with me that the difficulty is not in the meeting together, but in parting. The day is fast approaching when we shall meet to part no more; when we shall be fashioned like unto His glorious body, not as the various sects of to-day would tell us, that we shall all be in a spirit form, having neither body nor parts. We know that the resurrection of Jesus Christ, if taken alone, ought to be sufficient in regard to this.

Let us so live that when we pass from this present state of action, the world may be made better for us having lived in it. As the hymn says, "Let us keep our spirits pure." Pray for me that I may be faithful unto the end so as to hear Him say, "Come up higher."

Your sister in the one faith,
MRS. SARAH GREISS.

ALBANY, OREGON, July 12, 1910.

Dear Herald: I am very glad to get the HERALD and to read the good letters from week to week and all the good reading. It makes me feel glad to know that I was led to receive the angel's message and I want to so live that I can receive that word, "Well done." I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may live faithful to the end.

Your sister in Christ,
CLARINDA E. COWDERY.

LENORA, KANSAS, July 24, 1910.

Dear Herald: The Saints are very few out here and they are somewhat scattered. Bro. S. H. Fields called on us and preached several times, the interest being quite fair. On the last night (Sunday) the house was filled to overflowing. While most of the crowd was outside waiting for the time to meet we had quite an interesting time. One neighbor asked Brother Fields if he believed in "Joe" Smith, as he called him, and the Book of Mormon, and why didn't he preach on that? Brother Fields told him that he wanted to get the people to believe the Bible first, then it would be easier for them to believe the Book of Mormon and believe that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. One man in the crowd told Brother Fields he could get a man that could show him he didn't know anything. Brother Fields said that was the kind of a man he wanted to meet, that he would meet any man and prove Joseph Smith was a prophet called and sent of God, and he proposed to prove it from the Bible. This man said, "I don't want any man to stand up and say my parents are not good people because they belong to the M. E. Church and not to the Latter Day Saints." Brother Fields said, "I do not say there are no good people in all churches and sincere in their belief, but they have been traditional and misled by man made doctrines."

At last it was time to commence, and all went in that could get in while Brother Fields occupied one hour and a half. There was perfect order. He spoke on the divinity of the Book of Mormon. According to my judgment he is an able defender of the gospel of Jesus Christ as it is contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants.

I received a card from Brother Fields a few days ago. He and Bro. J. A. Teeters were going to start tent meetings at Seldon, about thirty miles west of me.

Brother Madden called on us a few days ago. He only stopped over night. He went on to Hill City, then to Grenell, then to Hoysa, and I haven't heard anything farther from him.

Brother Showers, from the Nodaway District, called on us on his way out to his farm, ten miles west of where I live. I tell you, dear Saints, it makes my heart rejoice to meet with those of like faith, as we don't have the privilege of meeting with the Saints as we did when we were in Iowa. As I announced in the HERALD some time ago, that if any of the ministry wish to call on us, I would meet them at Penoka or Morland on the U. P. R. R. or at Lenora on the Missouri Pacific. The invitation still stands good. Address me at Lenora, Kansas, Route 2. May God bless his people that they may be brought to see the light, is the prayer of your brother in Christ.

North Dakota Reunion.

The annual reunion of the North Dakota District is now a matter of history, having convened at Dunseith, June 25 to July 3, and by many it will be remembered as a time of rejoicing because of influence of the Spirit that prevailed.

The attendance of Saints was nearly as large as usual, and of nonmembers was better than the last reunions held at that place. The preaching was done by Elders J. W. Wight, Joshua Carlile, Alonzo Whiting, James Waggoner, Elmer Weddle, and the writer, and were of a high order and seemed to be appreciated by all.

Many rejoiced in receiving their patriarchal blessings, because of Father Joshua Carlile's presence.

Some of the social services were very spiritual, the Lord speaking to his people by tongues and interpretation through Apostle J. W. Wight and Pres. J. S. Waggoner, admonishing them that if they desire to be relieved from the power of the droughts, famines, and scourges that are coming upon the earth they must come up higher.

Though the most severe and general crop failure this State has ever known seems to be upon us, yet the Saints here with their usual generosity, met the reunion expenses cheerfully. If all the Saints of the district will manifest that same spirit of willingness to sacrifice a little, and send or give it to the Bishop's agent or his assistants, we are hopeful of keeping the expenses of the district paid even under the severe conditions.

It was voted to hold a semiannual district conference with the Fargo Branch sometime during the winter. Watch for the date. It will be published later.

The next reunion was voted to be held at Milroy, North Dakota, during the summer of 1911, the exact date to be set by the committee and the field minister in charge.

CENTRAL CHICAGO.

Sunday, June 24. The Sunday school accepted an invitation from the West Side to unite with them in a picnic on Labor Day. Morning sermon by Elder J. A. Tanner, theme, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation." Visitors: Sr. M. J. Jenkins, who leaves for her home in Akron, Ohio, this week. Sr. Dorris Seymour, and Bro. James Lang, who on account of Sunday employment can not often be with us. Bro. Henry Keir occupied the pulpit in the evening, choosing for his text a very important subject, "Examine yourselves, to see whether ye be in the faith." Bro. Keir also occupied at West Pullman in the morning.

Sr. Maggie Kelso has returned from her visit in South Haven, Michigan, and is at home to all her friends at the address given below.

Some members of the Searchlight Club spent Sunday at South Haven, and Miss Jessie Pement returned with them from her vacation.

Bro. George Kelso and John A. Lilley returned to their home at Higbee, Missouri, this week, after having spent some months in this city.

We neglected to mention in last week's items that Dorothy Edith, infant daughter of Bro. and Sr. Fred Peslin, and Ralph Victor, son of Bro. and Sr. Ralph Hastings, were blessed on Sunday, July 17.

The attendance at prayer meeting Wednesday evening was much better than usual, Bro. F. G. Pitt and Sr. J. A. Tanner being among the number.

"A sacred burden is the life ye bear;
Look on it, lift it, bear it solemnly;
Stand up and walk beneath it steadfastly;
Fail not for sorrow, falter not for sin,
But onward, upward, till the goal you win."

Stade, superintendent; Joseph Arber, assistant superintendent; Mira Cady, secretary; Willare McNeal, treasurer; Anna Amos, librarian. The following were chosen by the Religio association as officers for the coming year: Amos Berve, president; Joseph Arber, vice-president; Mira Cady, secretary; Alfred Needham, treasurer; Mrs. Nellie Elvin, librarian; Mira Cady, home class superintendent. Elder Joseph Arber was chosen by both associations to assist Sister Etzenhouser in auxiliary work at the coming reunion. In the evening, a program was rendered by the district associations which proved both entertaining and instructive, and though no theme had been chosen, every number seemed fraught with the inspiration of doing. We were favored with some good spirited talks by Brn. Joseph Arber and C. E. Willey during conventions. A good spirit prevailed throughout each session and we trust it may continue with each one through the coming year that much good may be accomplished. Mira Cady, secretary.

PORTLAND.—The Portland, Oregon, District Sunday school association met in convention at Hood River, Oregon, June 24, Supt. Frances L. Keeler occupying the chair. Bro. George Pearson acted as secretary for the meeting, owing to the absence of the secretary. After the general routine business was dispensed with a motion prevailed to extend an invitation to the general officers for one of their number or a representative to be with us at the June convention of 1911. The afternoon session was devoted to institute and normal work which proved to be both interesting and instructive. Mary Harvey Shippy, secretary.

Conference Notices.

To the Saints of the Seattle and British Columbia District: The reunion has been called off for this year, owing to shortage in finances. The conference, however, will be held at Seattle, commencing Saturday, September 17, at 10 a. m. Religio and Sunday school conventions will be held on Friday at the same place, commencing at 10 a. m. All the meetings will be held in the Saints' church located on the corner of Kilbourne and First avenue northwest. The change of date is made that we may have Brn. E. L. Kelley, Presiding Bishop, and F. M. Sheehy, missionary in charge, present at the conference. It will be an opportunity that no Saint in the district should miss. We have never had the pleasure of meeting those brethren at our conference before. Now, take notice, the Fremont-Ballard car runs by the church. This car may be taken two blocks from the depot, one block west and one block north. Remember there are three car lines running to Ballard, but only the one mentioned goes to the church. Let all come who possibly can. Let each one come expecting to receive the blessings of the Spirit. The Seattle Saints will make ample provisions for all. Brethren Kelley and Sheehy, please read. William Johnson, president.

The Southern Missouri District convenes at Beaver, Douglas County, Missouri, August 20 and 21, at 10 a. m. All reports should be sent to the undersigned. Those coming by rail will be met at Cedar Gap on Friday, August 19. We hope that every branch will be well represented at this conference. Benjamin Pearson, secretary.

Reunion Notices.

Reunion of the Utah District will be held at Provo, beginning August 27 and continuing over Sunday, September 4. The conference of the district will be held the last Saturday during the reunion, and Friday will be given to the Sunday school and Religio for conventions. All the missionary force assigned to Utah, together with a number of local elders, are expected to be present. Come, Saints, and let us unite in making this a spiritual feast. Bring your tents and covered wagons, and camp with us and help make the reunion a success. H. N. Hansen, assistant minister; John Hall, vice-president.

The eighteenth annual Northwestern Missouri reunion will be held on the old camp ground at Stewartsville, Missouri, August 12 to 21. Tents: 10 by 12, $2; 12 by 14, $2.50. Those wishing to rent tents should write B. J. Dice by August 6 so we can make arrangements for the required number on hand, cots, etc. Meals at the boarding tent can be had at a reasonable rate. Local and long distance telephone service on grounds. Have your mail addressed in care of camp grounds and it will reach you in good time. The usual number of able speakers will assist the already able force of the district. Come and have a good time by casting your burdens at the Master's feet and bearing a song away. T. H. Hinderks, secretary.

Graceland Boosters.

We understand that in many parts of the country fruit is plentiful. In Lamoni we have none this year. College boosters of limited finance who desire to aid, could do no better than can or dry apples, peaches, etc., and send to the Industrial Department for use in the hotel. Due credit will be given the same as if cash were sent.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT.

The Saints and friends of the Saskatchewan District of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will please take notice that upon the resignation of Bro. W. E. Nelson, as Bishop's agent for said district, Elder John A. Beckman, Nutana, Saskatchewan, has been duly appointed in and for the said district.

Elder Beckman has proved his faith by his works, and we trust that the Saints of Saskatchewan will give to him as hearty support as they gave to the retiring agent.

We regret to lose Brother Nelson, for he was a very efficient agent, but feeling that he was called to leave Canada to labor in the United States, he thought it wise to hand to me his resignation.

The Regina conference tendered to Brother Nelson a hearty vote of thanks for past services, and gave Elder Beckman a right royal welcome, so we look for good results from his selection.

Sincerely yours,
R. C. EVANS, Bishop of Canada.

DAVIS.—Helen Zaloma, infant daughter of Bro. George and Sr. Maggie Davis, died July 9, 1910, at the age of 4 months and 18 days, of pneumonia, after an illness of about five days. She was a very intelligent, sweet spirited child, and had entered deeply in the affections of those who knew her. Funeral sermon at the home, July 12, by Elder J. F. Mintun, in charge of Elder E. O. Clark. A good attendance at the services expressed the love for the child and sympathy for mourners.

Vacation Time Is Here

The present hot weather brings thoughts of where to spend your vacation.

Colorado Yellowstone Park

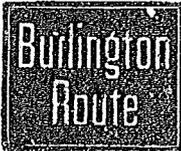

Either place is ideal if you are in search of rest, recreation or an outing.

The cool bracing mountain air, every breath of which gives new life and energy, the dashing streams full of fish, and where game animals of all kinds abound in their native wild state.

Surely these and many other attractions found in the American Wonderlands, should be enough to decide any question of where to spend your vacation.

The Burlington's through, electric lighted trains offer the best service.

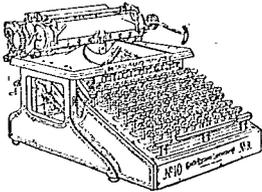

You have perhaps been planning a trip to Colorado or Yellowstone Park for years—make up your mind today to go this Summer and let me hand you one of the Burlington Colorado handbooks or Yellowstone Park folders which tell all about where to go, what to see and what to do, and contains a complete list of hotels, boarding houses and ranches, with their rates. Ask me about Estes Park, Colo., also.

PROOF AND ARGUMENT.

[The following is a short synopsis of a chapter on the subject taken from a well-known book on logic. We take no credit in any way for what is given, and trust it will cause HERALD readers to give some thought to the subject presented. We have contemplated publishing a series of articles along the line of argumentation and debate.—ASSISTANT EDITOR.]

There are three methods or processes by which in a systematic way thoughts and facts are presented. That is, by these processes of description, examination, and exposition we are able to set out a conception of the things connected with a particular subject.

But proof and argument go beyond this. They endeavor to convince, to remove doubt, to give belief and knowledge to the intellect. And it therefore follows that unless it is convincing it is not proof, and what may be proof to one mind may not be to another.

Proof brings assent to the proposition, and assent comes to us in two forms: belief, or probable truth; and knowledge, or certain truth.

Proof as a process, reverses the usual order of reasoning by inference. In the latter we have given to us certain premises from which we reach a certain conclusion. In proof we first have the proposition or conclusion and set out to establish its truth.

There are two kinds of proof, direct and indirect. Direct proof consists in the successful attempt to support a proposition. Indirect proof consists of removing objections to the proposition.

There are three processes of proof or argument. There is a certain proper order for the presentation of proof, and it quite naturally follows that as proof is intended primarily to convince it does not always please. The aesthetic is lost in the practical. In oratory it is different. We recently had two speakers in Lamoni. One gave us a fine oration. It was pleasing to the ear. What he said was true. It was a red-blood talk and not only appealed to us from the side of beauty, but also because we recognized that what he said was true. The second speaker gave us an argument. He took up his proposition in logical order and set out to prove a certain thing. Both efforts were equally enjoyable, though quite different in style and thought.

These three processes of proof are definition, division or analysis, and probation.

Definition is the process of determining the nature of the issue and what is to be proved or disproved. Here is where one outlines the proposition to be dealt with. Supposing the proposition was, "Man is mortal," it would be necessary at once to state whether it was proposed to deal with "man" simply as the animal organism, or as the abstract subject of consciousness, without reference to the animal, or as both. Such a definition on the start makes easier the argument and less likely to confuse, as the reader may have in mind one concept of "man" and the writer another. It makes for directness and is essential in the discussion of most any question.

Analysis is the process of showing how many specific and different aspects of thesis are involved and which can be separated for distinct treatment. This is also quite important as it assists in discussing a part at a time, building up a proposition and verifying it from attacks based upon its generalizing. Thus literature would be divided into 'torical, religious, scientific,' etc., and the value such a process is invaluable, as may be seen upon first thought.

The third process is that a probation, the arrangement of facts and truths which will bring certitude, which will establish belief or knowledge concerning the proposition. The common ground in argument, of course, consists of those axioms or truths which will be accepted by the person to whom the matter is presented. Here we come to the two kinds of reasoning: deduction and induction, both of which are inference, one having greater value and force than the other.

The two kinds of inductive reasoning as stated, are perfect induction and imperfect induction. Perfect induction is really nothing more than generalization, that is, a certain thing being true of each and every member of a class, it is therefore true of the class as a whole. For example: Mercury revolves on its own axis; so do Venus, the Earth, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, and Neptune. These being all the planets, we say, "All the planets revolve on their axes."

Imperfect induction is where the conclusion goes beyond the facts upon which it is based. If for instance, we only knew that four of the planets revolved on their axes, we might infer that all of them did. Now this is true inductive though imperfect reasoning. Perfect inductive reasoning is generally spoken of as deduction. We deduce something from and within the premises, and the conclusion has therefore a certitude which is lacking in imperfect induction.

A common error of those who fail to reason closely is to reach a general conclusion from the particular, when it is not true of the class. If one seeing an individual cliff dweller and noting that he has abnormal ears, should arrive at the conclusion that cliff dwellers have abnormal ears, he would be guilty of what is called "hasty generalization," and is a fallacy. This is characteristic of the insular or provincial mind, and should be carefully avoided.

In probation, the third division of proof, it is essential that the arrangement be suited to the proposition in hand and to the person or persons addressed. We have often heard the remark that Brother Blank has made a logical sermon, or that Elder So and So is such a logical speaker. And I have often wondered why they were considered logical. Upon what grounds was the statement made? Was it because of the order in which the matter was presented? or simply because conclusions reached appealed to one as being correct? I greatly fear that the term logical is used too often without a full understanding of its meaning. For what would be a logical presentation to one audience would not be logical with another. What might fail to convince one audience might not fail with another, for the reason that the "state of minds" varies with different audiences.

Probation is the real proving, the arrangements of facts and truths and the marshaling of the same in the order calculated to produce conviction. It is the work laid out in the other two processes. The proof may consist of axioms, postulates or propositions not in dispute and considered proved, and the object of proof is not only to have correct and true propositions, but to have correct reasoning, and can only work from some middle ground or from that which is accepted by the hearer. And when we come to the real live reasoning we find ourselves back to deductive and inductive arguments which have already been briefly discussed.

In the consideration of the arrangement of matter in debate or argument, there are a number of divisions which my text uses, but we will take time only to name them, and trust we may be able to take them up at some later time. They are, "analytic arguments," "synthetic arguments," "arguments from antecedent possibility," "argument from circumstantial evidence," "personal argument," and "argument from testimony," and these are given for what suggestive value they may have.

And now we find ourselves face to face with the general rule as follows, which we quote:

If the mind addressed be already in a state of belief, and the object of the discourse is to confirm and strengthen it, then the weaker arguments may generally need to be placed first, and the stronger ones last. But if there be an opposing belief to set aside, it will be better to advance the stronger first, in order to overthrow opposition at once. The weaker may follow, which will confirm when they would be of no avail in the first assault. In order to leave a strong impression, however, some of the stronger arguments may be reserved for the close; or what is equivalent, the arguments may be recapitulated in the reverse order.

Of course when necessary for the building up of an argument where one thing depends upon what goes before, the situation will not allow the order to be disturbed or influenced by the state of mind of the audience. But other things being equal, we are given the following rules:

1. Deductive should precede inductive proofs. This assumes that they are both applicable to the issue. In case only one of them is possible, this rule does not apply, and in case that the state of mind is already one of belief, the order should be reversed. Those also who maintain that induction conditions deductions might adopt the reverse order.

2. Analytic proofs should precede the synthetic and all others. The reason for this rule is that the analytic argument naturally follows the process of definition, and prepares the way for the reference to general principles or particular facts antecedent to the proposition stating the issue, while the analytic argument does not go behind the conceptions which define the issue.

3. Antecedent possibility arguments should precede the inductive arguments generally and those from circumstantial evidence in particular. If any presumption against the possibility of the thesis exists, the first thing is to get that out of the way, and the mind is then receptive for the others.

But yet, after all, we are told there are no hard and fast rules. The judgment of the person making the argument must be followed. He must decide whether the state of mind warrants a reversal of order of the cumulative method, which under normal conditions should always be followed, because of the greater value and weight. While circumstances will determine, the usual order is antecedent possibility, testimony, circumstantial evidence, personal argument, and deduction. And this should be concluded by a recapitulation which sums up briefly all of the arguments presented. "Just as definition introduces discourse, recapitulation should close it."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

We are pained to learn of the death on the 3d inst. of Elder E. Harrington, of Independence, Missouri. The HERALD extends sympathy to the family and friends of the brother.

"Some men are so busy planning for to-morrow that they have no time to execute the things which yesterday they planned for to-day."

Elders' Note-Book

ONE WHO HAS GONE TO HIS REWARD.

(Written at the grave of Elder W. C. Duncan, Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence, Missouri, October 7, 1909. Brother Duncan for many years held the gospel banner aloft.)

Beneath me lies the form of one
They say is dead. A noble son
Of toil was he, but now they say
That his great soul has passed away.

That on some distant brilliant shore,
Where sun and moon and stars no more Remembered are, he dwells in bliss;
Nor longer kens a world like this.

No more the soft green coverlet
Of mossy grass he sees; nor yet
The rustling leaves, stirred by the breeze
In yonder thriving maple trees.

No more this pansy at my feet
That lifts its tiny cheek, so sweet,
To meet the tender, soft caress
Of yon bright shining sun, shall bless

His inmost soul, as in the days
When he was here. But where he stays,
His soul delights in singing praise,
While on a golden harp he plays

Some magic tune—no old home lays,
Like those he loved in other days,
But some great song, so vast and grand
No human heart could understand.

No more he loves by rippling stream,
On mossy bank to sit and dream,
While singing birds their melodies
Employ to cheer such hearts as his.

No more? Ah, who shall dare to say
But that on this October day,
He, whose remains below abide,
Is standing at my very side;

And as I write these thoughts of mine,
His eyes are reading every line?
And who shall say but that he feels
The joy that Nature's soul reveals;

And loves, just as he used to love,
The things that raise our thoughts above
The cares and sorrows of the world;
And looks at Nature's flag unfurled;

Rejoices, just as I rejoice,
As now I list to Nature's voice;
And quaffs with me the perfume rare
Borne on the sweet October air?

Oh, what philosopher shall say
That heaven is so far away;
That if the veil were only rent,
We might not find where'er we went,

That heaven is right here at hand,
And not in some far distant land?
And those we love, perhaps we'd see,
Are watching over you and me;

Are all about us, day and night;
Not in some spacious palace bright
With dazzling lights and massive dome,
But right here where they'd feel at home.

I hate to think that when I die,
I must go flying through the sky,
Beyond the bounds of time and space,
E'er I shall find a resting place.

But when I go, it seems to me,
The place that I had rather be
Is right in this loved world of ours,
With birds and bees and trees and flowers.

And to be near those dear to me
Where I their cares and joys might see;
Where I might lend a helping hand
To guide them to the better land.

And so with him, whose body lies
Beneath this spot, the thought I prize
That his bright dwelling place might be
Not very far from you and me.

(MRS.) W. C. DUNCAN.

Original Articles

THE GREAT UNREST; ITS CAUSE.

The world is not at agreement as to the cause of this condition except in a general way. It is claimed that the cost of living has increased without a corresponding increase in wages; but while many have tried to explain why this situation exists, their explanations have differed widely and radically. One article contributed by a liberal number of our leading public and business men to a prominent periodical recently, was noticeable in that each contributor strenuously endeavored to show that the particular business in which he was engaged was not responsible for the undesirable situation, while it was generally admitted that the condition existed.

The fact that this trouble is world wide should caution us against seeking a local cause for it, as far as a principal one is concerned; though contributory ones may be local.

Several things we notice that bear upon the situation.

Organization of industries, and that of labor: It is claimed that this tends to preserve a just balance between the laborer and his employer, and prevent oppression by either. If both sides are equal in the contest this may be the result, but not otherwise unless they both work to the same end. In general, their aims are opposed to each other; for instance, the "captain of industry" endeavors to so organize his forces that he can eliminate competition as far as possible in his business, control the market in his particular line, and cheapen production of his goods as well as the cost of distributing. This requires low wages, and is facilitated by competition among the laborers who, on the other hand, form unions to prevent such competition. These unions naturally seek to secure higher wages and less hours of labor which, of course, increase the cost of the goods made.

Patented machinery and processes: While these tend to lessen the cost of producing articles, the fact that the right to use a patented process is restricted to a few who control it by law, makes it possible to maintain a higher price for the article made than would otherwise be the case; but where several parties obtain patents in a particular branch of industry, that while slightly differing are of nearly equal value, the producers seek to form a combination or to effect an "understanding" whereby the higher prices can be maintained, and the would-be competitor driven out of the market by a temporary lowering of prices if occasion requires.

Improved service to the consumer: The customer wants delivery to suit his convenience; notwithstanding the many sales in the various stores of our cities each day, the number who carry their purchases home with them is very small; the reason assigned would probably be that they have included the cost of delivery in the price of each article, which would cost no less if taken home by the customer; yet the sum paid for such delivery during one year would surprise most of us, probably, if known. The fact that in many places several stores exist where only one or two is needed of a kind, adds considerably to this cost. In view of this fact it should not surprise us to read Secretary Wilson's claim that reports from fifty cities showed that the consumer paid thirty-eight per cent more for beef than did the retailer. The president of Swift & Company states that they make a profit of about three and one fourth cents on each dollar's worth of meat sold. We presume this is the net profit, while the other is not, but even then it indicates somewhat the cost of this "convenient service" to the consumer. A few cents more for an article of consumption seems insignificant, but one cent added to the cost in a ten cent purchase is an increase of ten per cent on what may be consumed in a single day.

Mr. Hill, who owns a railroad amid vast arable fields that he wants some one to occupy and grow produce that can be shipped over his road, claims that the trouble is that we are not producing foodstuffs enough; but a closer examination reveals the fact that too often the farmer is compelled to sell for a low price until some one "corners" the market, whereupon prices soar and foodstuffs are reported "scarce."

Taxation, direct and indirect: The demand by the people for greater conveniences and various other things of public benefit real or imaginary, for town, state, and nation, necessitates enormous sums of money to be raised in some manner. Direct taxes are not difficult to fathom as contrasted with indirect. The latter are usually raised by the tariff principally. It may be so levied that it will protect the prices of goods made in this country, or it may only protect the raw material produced here, which at first thought may seem to amount to the same thing in many cases; but if a combination exists among the manufacturers of certain goods by which they practically control the market here, they may benefit by cheap prices of raw material and still maintain high prices for the finished product; the people as well as the employee receiving no advantage. If the tariff is so placed that the labor instead of the material is the thing protected, it enables the employee to earn fair wages when otherwise he would not be able to do so, but causes the cost to the consumer to be more than it otherwise would be, if the article is produced much more cheaply in a foreign country. With many advocating free trade, some calling for a tariff that will protect the workman, some for one that protects the manufacturer, and others for protection for the people, it is not strange that it is a disturbing factor in the world. The manufacturer in his own defense claims that "natural" goods have relatively advanced far more than manufactured goods, while it is admitted that some things are cheaper than ever before.

Organization and combination: Probably at no time in the world's history have these two conditions been so prevalent as now. When it is remembered that milk selling for ten cents per quart in New York City is sold by the farmer for less than three cents, something must be radically wrong. If all other foods should be so manipulated it would mean starvation for the people. Some are recommending legislation forbidding speculation in foodstuffs and some other necessities of life. There is scarcely a large industry in existence that is not controlled or sought to be controlled by some combination or so-called "trust"; they teach us real lessons in economy, for it is the watchword from start to finish with them. But the consumer usually follows quite a different policy, for he wants all the pleasure he can get from life and pays a good price for it. Places of amusement are on every hand, all sorts of novelties useful and useless are constantly brought to his attention to separate him from his money, little by little it may be, but not the less surely. It becomes an abnormal thirst for pleasure, and his money is soon spent; whereupon he concludes to borrow money, perhaps to speculate in some sure thing that is to make him rich beyond the need of labor. He goes to some loan association, so-called, to be accommodated with a small amount at what seems to be a not very unreasonable rate of interest which, of course, he can easily pay along with the principal from his earnings; but he finds that the little interest is really a small matter compared with the other charges that are raked up in every conceivable manner, which he has to pay. When these charges are paid he has nothing left with which to pay even a part of the principal, and to keep the loan "good" he must renew it for another short term, which means a repetition of all these charges; he wishes to avoid publicity in the matter, hence he renews the loan from time to time until, if he is fortunate enough, he pays back the principal and perhaps two or three times as much more in payment of extra charges. One has but to see the many advertisements of these loan companies to realize to what enormous proportions the business is grown. Are they in business for pleasure? Yes, of a certain kind; and many of them are combined, forming chains of a system.

Meanwhile what is done with the money that is used in speculation, even supposing the business in which it is invested proves to be a profitable one? A corporation is formed by a few who hold the balance of power in their own hands, the public is invited to invest in an enormously profitable business and operations are started; perhaps a small dividend is paid and the public is confident. They wait expectantly for the golden egg, but it is not laid—yet. Unfavorable reports are heard or else all is as silent as death, or perhaps the officials require large salaries that leave no profits, or yet again, possibly the business seems to be going along all right but still it does not quite pay a dividend. Finally the small investor is disgusted, and sells his shares for any price he can get, which is very little. After the manipulators have secured most of the stock back again at a fraction of what they received for it, behold, it pays a large dividend; so large in fact that it looks good to some one who does not know that it may be two thirds "water," and he buys at a high price, though the price seems to him to be low; and then the process will probably be repeated. Of course there is money in the business, but who will get it?

Thus many things enter into this great question that seemingly is more complex as we consider it more carefully, until we wonder where it began and where and when it will end. Behind it all is the distressing fact that if crime is not legalized it is at least tolerated by law to the extent that it does not make these things unlawful.

One thing seems certain, that until the majority of men desire equality it can not exist in our nation. As long as the people seek self-gratification at the expense of others, crime and misery will continue to increase until they are caught in their own snare. True happiness can never come through chasing these elusive rainbows and will-o'-the-wisps, because happiness is not founded on wrongdoing; it lives in a higher atmosphere where dwells love for God and for mankind. Some of the most eminently successful men of the world (measuring success by the world's standard) have admitted their ignominious failure to grasp it. They have pursued it in the manner of the millions who failed before them, have grasped what they pursued but happiness was not there, it still soared pure and unsullied immeasurably above them.

We should be profoundly grateful that so far as we are concerned the solution of this matter is in no other human hands than our own. The divine plan has been unfolded to us, we are assured that we can accomplish it in our own midst, and we are expected to accomplish it. To be occupied in a good cause, to be at peace with God and man, and to be assured of the things required for the comfort of all, is to breathe an atmosphere, a diviner than which no mortal may retain. Reason tells us this is true; the experiences of all throughout all ages witness that it is true; God says it is true. Shall we follow the course of all the miserable failures of the past, or will we choose the pathway where, in the past, God has walked and talked with man. P. A. B.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ELDER GEORGE W. THORBURN.

I was born in Holytown, Scotland, March 26, 1863. My ancestors were born in Scotland as far back as we can trace them. I came to America with my parents in 1869, making our first home in Orangeville, Pennsylvania. In 1873, we came to Boone, Iowa, living there only a short time, then moving to Morgane; from there to Grand Junction, and then to Coalville. In Coalville, I spent my boyhood days, and grew up to manhood. My father followed mining, so when I was thirteen years of age I took up the same occupation and followed it till seven years ago, when I quit to go into the general mission field.

In my boyhood days I had many experiences in common with other boys, which I will exclude from this short sketch of my life. But I desire to relate one or two of them so you can think of them in connection with my religious experience. First, permit me to state that I had a God-fearing father and mother; both at one time belonged to the Presbyterian Church. Father in later years became dissatisfied with their teachings and left the church. Mother continued till a little over a year ago, when I baptized her into the true Church of Jesus Christ.

When about seventeen years of age, I had a longing desire to become a professional baseball player. And, while my liberties at home were not curtailed, I thought by leaving home I would be more able to accomplish my purposes. So one night, unbeknown to my people, I took my departure to fields unexplored by me. My only baggage was my baseball suit. I made my way to Angus, remaining there two or three days. I finally got another young man in the same notion as myself, so we concluded to go south next morning. The morning broke nice and clear. All nature seemed to be rejoicing, and two hearts beat as one, rejoicing over the bright prospects before us. We just got to the depot in time to get our tickets, then rush out to get on the train. There was a large crowd to get on, and all seemed to be trying to get on the front end of the coach. My partner had gotten on; but I got squeezed out, so I ran to the rear end of the car, to get on, when I met my father getting off. Well, I will not attempt to describe the scene. Suffice it to say that after a few minutes' talk, I consented to go home with him. My partner came to the rear end of the train. I waved at him, but have never heard of or seen him since.

After being at home but a short time, and still having the desire to be a professional ball-player, I again took my departure unbeknown to my people. This time I went to Saint Louis, Missouri. Father did not follow me, thinking I would be a better boy after I got a taste of the world. I was gone about two months, and had several experiences in that time that are still fresh in my memory. I am confident I will profit by them in all this probationary life. After many disappointments and trials, like the prodigal son of old, I concluded to "arise and go to my father, and . . . say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son: make me as one of thy hired servants." As in the case of old, to a disobedient son, the love of an earthly father and mother was manifest on my return.

In my younger days my thoughts and desires were not along religious lines. Hunting, fishing, and baseball were the things that engaged my mind mostly. Still I remember at times the thought of a future life would present itself very strongly to my mind. In the town where I was raised, there was a branch of the Latter Day Saint Church, presided over by Bro. James Allen, now of Lamoni. They met in the schoolhouse, and I used to go quite often; and myself and others used to say if we joined any church it would be old James Allen's church.

My first religious impressions, which finally culminated in my coming into the church, came to me in July, 1894. In April of the same year I made up my mind to visit my people, whom I had not seen for about thirteen years. At this time they were living in Union, British Columbia (on Vancouver Island). I went by the way of San Francisco, and took boat from there to Victoria, the capital of the island. While in San Francisco, by request, I went with a young man to hear a lecture by a Buddhist. When we had gotten nicely seated in the large hall, I heard some singing in an adjoining room. I asked the young man who they were. He said, "Oh, they are Mormons." I listened a little closer, and could recognize the pieces they were singing. I knew then they were Josephites. I felt then like they were the people I wanted to cast my lot with; and if I had been alone I should have gone in there. On the 18th of April, I landed safe in Union. After four months of pleasant visit the time came to say good-bye. In bidding father and mother good-bye, mother clasped me in her arms, and, with tears running down her face, she said, "George, I don't think we will ever meet in this life again." As she uttered these words, this great latter day work, with its saving power, came vividly before me; and these are the impressions that were left in my mind. Go you back to Missouri. Join the church. Be faithful to your covenant, and in due time God will call you into the ministry. You will be sent to your people. They will accept the gospel, and in the next world you will be one unbroken family.

I came to Higbee, Missouri, with the full intention of joining the church; but when I got among my old companions, I seemed to forget my former resolution; so for a little over a year I continued in the world. But all that year I could feel a change coming over me. I quit many things which I thought would be hard for me to lay down. The final climax came one night about twelve o'clock, while I was in bed. The voice of God rang in my ears these words, "If it were not for your associates, you would do the will of your heavenly Father." The voice sounded so real, I answered immediately that I would; for that was one of the things I thought I could not break away from, my former associates, which I felt I would have to do in order to be true to God, myself, and them. Waking my companion, I told her what I had heard. She said, "You better be baptized." I thought so too; so on the first day of December, 1895, I went through the waters of regeneration, being baptized by Elder A. J. Cato.

Thus I began my spiritual race, which I hope to continue to the end.

After coming into the church and hearing others testifying how they prayed and read the Bible that they might get a knowledge this work was true, I began to see how the mercy of God had been extended to me; for I did not read a chapter in the Bible; nor did I pray till after I came into the church; but the mystery was partly solved the first night after my baptism. When it came time to retire, my wife (who had been a Latter Day Saint all her life) said to me, "It is a rule in the church to have family prayer. I have been fasting and praying every Saturday and Sunday for three years, asking God to bring about what my eyes have witnessed to-day; so now you are in the church, also the head of the family, it is your duty to lead in prayer." I submitted to the instruction, and offered the first prayer of my life outside of what my mother taught me when a boy,

"I lay me down this night to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep."

My prayer was not very long; but his sweet Spirit was there to comfort and to cheer. There was also a large branch at Higbee. Their prayers were for me, that God might bring me into the church, to be a worker with them in this great latter day work. Surely "the effectual fervent prayer" of the righteous availeth much. I was ordained a teacher in February, 1896, by William Vincent and R. R. James; an elder by I. N. White and Joseph Tanner in June, 1897.

In 1900 I sent my application to the Quorum of Twelve, stating if they saw fit to give me an appointment, I was willing to go. It was accepted and my first mission was North and South Dakota. I was ordained a seventy, by Joseph R. Lambert and W. E. Peak, in April, 1901. Since then I have labored in Minnesota, Scotland, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Washington, and British Columbia. The latter is my present field of labor.

In the spring of 1906 I was appointed to this field of labor. On this trip I met my people for the first time after coming into the church. They were living in Seattle. The first Sunday there I preached in the Seattle Branch. At that meeting my father and mother, and brother, heard me for the first time. As I tried to tell them the gospel story in its simplicity and beauty, that same Spirit that told me thirteen years before that they would accept my message was with them, and also the speaker. I baptized my mother and sister-in-law. My father said he intended to be baptized, so I hope to baptize him and my brother before long.

Going from there to Union, British Columbia, where my sister and her husband live, I preached there five times, and baptized both of them. To show how the Spirit of God worked with those whom God gave me to understand thirteen years before would accept the angel's message, permit to state one instance. During my thirteen years' absence my sister and her husband joined the Presbyterian Church. As before stated I visited them and preached five times, and talked much to them evenings, principally answering questions. I was to leave on the Friday boat, so my brother-in-law said, "Wednesday, I will take you for a drive up Courtney Valley. This is one of the finest valleys on the island." So Wednesday came, and we started early in the morning, taking our dinner along. We drove till two in the afternoon, selecting a lovely place on the edge of the beach to take our dinner. After eating, we prepared to take a bath. The tide was coming in, so the water was fresh and clear. While preparing to go into the water, my brother-in-law said, "George, I have one request to make of you. I want you to baptize me." He said, "I presume I don't know all there is to know about the message you have brought; but I have heard enough to believe it is true. Last night I could not sleep for thinking about it." So I led him into the water and buried him with Christ to come forth a new creature.

We got back home about five o'clock. My brother-in-law went into the kitchen where his wife was. He said, "Mary, you don't know what I did to-day."

"Yes, I do."

"What did I do?"

"You got baptized. That is what I intend to do to-morrow."

So the next day I led my sister into the waters of regeneration, so they are both rejoicing and praising God for the angel's message.

In conclusion let me say these last seven years in the missionary work have proved to me beyond a doubt that this work is divine; and God is true to his promises.

Your brother in Christ,

GEORGE W. THORBURN.

OUR PHYSICAL HEALTH.

THE DEADLY FLY.

The old view of the fly, that he was a scavenger and in one way a blessing because he consumed filth of all kinds, has given way to clear recognition of the fact that the fly is a real menace to health.

He has always been fought by the cleanly housewife, but unfortunately the husband and children did not always sympathize with the effort. Now everybody begins to see that his habits are filthy. He paddles his horrid feet, begummed with vilest matter, in the baby's milk. He probably disseminates every disease, including typhoid fever and tuberculosis.

HOW TO GET RID OF FLIES.

In spite of the warfare so long waged against the fly, few people have any clear idea of how to get rid of them. This is largely because all families are at the mercy of their neighbors. One home may fight them effectively, another home may maintain a place where they breed and furnish more flies than the whole neighborhood can destroy.

Getting rid of flies depends upon three things—prevention of their breeding, killing them after they have bred, and keeping them out of your own home if your neighbor breeds them.

A FEW FACTS THAT WILL HELP.

Breeding Places.—The principal breeding places of the common house fly are in decaying animal and vegetable matter, outside privy vaults, and in barnyard manure, particularly horse manure. It is estimated that from 85 to 90 per cent of the house flies are born and reared in ordinary horse manure.

The average time from the laying of the eggs in the breeding place until the development of an adult fly is about ten days. The eggs hatch in from fourteen to twenty-four hours, producing the larval stage, which are commonly known as maggots or worms. This stage lasts from five to seven days, depending largely upon moisture and temperature. At the end of this period they seem to seal themselves within their skin, forming a hard case around them, and often burying themselves in the soil; they are now known as pupæ, this stage lasting about five days, during which time the remarkable transformation into a fly occurs, when they emerge from their shell in the shape of an adult fly; and thus the life cycle is complete.

The average female lays about 120 eggs, and it is estimated that in the temperate zone of Massachusetts these 120 eggs are multiplied from twelve to thirteen times. Assuming that one half of the eggs produce female flies, and that one half of the total number of larvæ are destroyed by their natural enemies before their transformation into the adult fly, the remaining number of progeny of a single female fly during the course of a summer season would make a total in figures which is appalling. Try to figure it out, and after you have arrived at the correct result you will begin to realize the importance of doing something to prevent the breeding of flies.

Habits.—The odor of food in house and stores, together with the warmth and protection afforded therein, makes these places a desirable home for the fly; and while as above stated he is fond of filth, yet he also relishes most all kinds of foods, particularly those containing sugar or milk, and all kinds of meats. It can reasonably be expected that a fly having just gained entrance into the house has come from some filth producing or disease breeding place, and it is because of this that his presence in the house or in the store or shop becomes exceedingly dangerous. This is particularly true of flies that breed in human excrement, carrying, as they may do, the germs of intestinal diseases, such as cholera, dysentery or typhoid fever, from their breeding place to foods or drinks.

The result of examination of fly specks found upon a lemon pie in a certain bakery, was to the effect that the fly speck contained germs belonging to the fermentation group of bacteria; but what was worse, it also contained a large number of pus-forming germs.

Natural Enemies.—The house fly has a number of natural enemies, which greatly reduces the numbers. First there is the worm known as the house centipede, which devours the fly in great numbers. There are also certain predatory beetles that devour the pupæ, also several fungous diseases, as well as a reddish mite that is very destructive to the fly in the latter part or near the close of the fly season. Flies are often found sticking to the window pane, with a whitish looking material radiating from the fly upon the glass in every direction, which is an illustration of death caused by the fungus growth upon the fly.

THE FIRST STEP IN PREVENTION.

The final solution of the fly nuisance must rest entirely on prevention; that is to say, to do away with his breeding places. His destruction, after being born, can never be accomplished, as they come in such great multitudes as to make that task too great. The majority of the house flies being reared in horse manure would seem to point the way for successful abatement of the fly nuisance. Indeed, it is now thought by sanitarians that if these places were either properly and effectively screened from the fly, or were disposed of by cremation or buried or scattered upon the fields of the farms, and if the outside privy vault was made fly-proof, and every householder was careful that no decaying animal or vegetable matter was permitted upon his premises, the fly would be very largely and quickly exterminated.

Surely the time is coming, since it is now an accepted fact that the fly is a source of danger in the community, that such steps should be taken by the state and municipalities as would without unnecessary delay accomplish his destruction.

Screens.—The next step in prevention is that of thorough screening of all places where foods are manufactured, prepared or sold, including, of course, the home. It is particularly important that the sick room be kept absolutely free from flies, especially where there is one suffering from tuberculosis or typhoid fever. It is quite as important that this should be done as that the mosquito should be kept out of the room-containing the yellow fever or malarial patient.

Until recent years screens have been used principally to exclude the fly and mosquito solely on the ground of personal comfort; but now we know that the principal benefit derived from the use of screens is that of preventing sickness and disease.

Among other preventive measures is that of fly paper, both poison and sticky, fly traps, and the fly-swatter, all of which are of various degrees of utility.

HOW TO KILL FLIES.

To clear room of flies, carbolic acid may be used as follows: Heat a shovel or any similar article and drop thereon twenty drops of carbolic acid. The vapor kills the flies.

A cheap and perfectly reliable fly poison, one which is not dangerous to human life, is bichromate of potash in solution. Dissolve one dram, which can be bought at any drugstore, in two ounces of water, and add a little sugar. Put some of this solution in shallow dishes and distribute them about the house.

Sticky fly paper, traps and liquid poisons are among the things to see in killing flies, but the latest, cheapest and best is a solution of formalin or formaldehyde in water. A spoonful of this liquid put into a quarter of a pint of water and exposed in the room will be enough to kill all the flies. They seem to be fond of this water. Care should be taken to place it beyond the reach of children.

To quickly clear the room where there are many flies, burn pyrethrum powder in the room. This stupefies the flies, when they may be swept up and burned.

If there are flies in the dining room of your hotel, restaurant, or boarding house, complain to the proprietor that the premises are not clean.

RULES FOR DEALING WITH THE FLY NUISANCE.

"Keep the flies away from the sick, especially those ill with contagious diseases. Kill every fly that strays into the sick room. His body is covered with disease germs.

"Do not allow decaying material of any sort to accumulate on or near your premises.

"All refuse which tends in any way to fermentation, such as bedding straw, paper waste and vegetable matter, should be disposed of or covered with lime or kerosene oil.

"Screen all food, whether in the house or exposed for sale.

"Keep all receptacles for garbage carefully covered and the can cleaned or sprinkled with oil or lime.

"Keep all stable manure in vault or pit, screened or sprinkled with lime, oil, or other cheap preparations, such as are sold by a number of reliable manufacturers.

"See that your sewerage system is in good order; that it does not leak, is up-to-date, and not exposed to flies.

"Pour kerosene into the drains.

"Burn or bury all table refuse.

"Screen all windows and doors, especially in the kitchen and dining room.

"If you see flies, you may be sure that their breeding place is in nearby filth. It may be behind the door, under the table or in the cuspidor.

"If there is no dirt and filth there will be no flies.

"If there is a nuisance in the neighborhood, write at once to the health department."—Gospel Trumpet.

AN ILIAD OF AN ANT-HILL.

A crowd of the ants quickly fell to work about the fly, trying to draw it into the entrance of the gallery. At the same time many began to carry away bits of sand to enlarge the opening. Suddenly a larger ant, more than twice as long as any of the others, and which I had casually noticed scurrying about in the edge of the adjoining thickets, dashed into the midst of the laborers and laid hold of the fly, which he tried to pull away. He certainly possessed the requisite size and strength to achieve his purpose, but he had seriously miscalculated the spirit of those whom he meant to rob. Hardly had he fixed his pincers on the prey when he found himself seized by the legs.

And now began a mill as desperate as it was brief, swift, and decisive. The sharp mandibles of the diminutive warriors must have inflicted torturing wounds, for the robber dropped the fly and doubled himself into a knot. He squirmed and twisted, snapping at his tormentors, several of whom he disabled, but he gave up all thought of securing his prey and concentrated his attention upon saving himself. He was marvelously quick in his motions, and a sudden dash set him free, whereupon he ran for the woods like a whipped dog, with such a craven aspect that onlooking Jove shook with Olympian laughter. It was a spectacle which, unlike the struggle with the poor beetle, awoke no painful and conflicting sympathies, and the stout little fighters had all the honors.

At my next visit I supplied the busy citizens with another fly. I threw it down far from any gallery, and near the edge of the valley, hoping, I confess, that the robbers would take a hand in the business; and I was not disappointed. The myrmidons had hardly organized their engineering operations before several of the big thieves began to make dashes for the booty. One of them quickly paid for his temerity with his life, and the rest were driven off in panic. Almost invariably they sought refuge high on the grass stems, and one bore off a myrmidon firmly fastened to a hind leg. Every few seconds he would stop, curl himself up, and bite savagely at his little enemy, but the myrmidon never let go, and, although I followed them for nearly a yard through the "woods," the robber running from stem to stem, when I finally lost sight of them the little chap was still hanging on with unconquerable tenacity.—Garrett P. Serviss in Harper's Weekly.

Religion is the subject of violent debates in both houses of the Cortes. As reported from Madrid on the 6th, the Bishop of Madrid, leading the attack in the Senate, claimed that the laws of the church are the laws of the country, because the constitution makes Catholicism the state religion. Premier Canalejas in reply declared that the invasion of state sovereignty by the church was no longer tolerable. Commercial bodies, according to reports of the 7th, had signed a petition to the government in favor of limiting the growth of monastic orders. They asserted that the orders are monopolizing many branches of industry and commerce. The Republican organizations had pleaded support to the government's religious program. The King signed on the 7th, a bill forbidding further religious orders to enter Spain until the pending negotiations with the Vatican for a revision of the Concordat are ended. The measure was then to be presented to the Cortes.—The Public.

Who Is My Neighbor?

Thy neighbor?—It is he whom thou
Hast power to aid and bless,
Whose aching heart or burning brow
Thy soothing hand may press.

Thy neighbor?—'Tis the fainting poor,
Whose eye with want is dim,
Whom hunger sends from door to door:
Go thou, and succor him.

Thy neighbor?—'Tis that weary man,
Whose years are at their brim,
Bent low with sickness, cares, and pain:
Go thou, and comfort him.

Thy neighbor?—'Tis the heart bereft
Of every earthly gem;
Widow and orphans, helpless left:
Go thou, and shelter them.

Where'er thou meetest a human form
Less favored than thine own,
Remember he thy neighbor is,
Give bread instead of stone.

O, pass not, pass not heedless by;
Perhaps thou canst redeem
The breaking heart from misery:
Go share thy lot with him.—Selected.

No Place for Boys.

THE FIRESIDE CONFERENCE.

"Between ten and fifteen years your son needs special care and attention. During this period he begins to show his natural bent or inclination toward industry or idleness, manliness or effeminacy, integrity or moral weakness. If he is strong and healthy, keep him steadily at school. Give him plenty of time for physical exercise in the daylight, but see that he is at home after dinner. Between dinner and bedtime the boy of this age, if he is a healthy minded lad, can employ himself at home most profitably and enjoyably. His mental labor at school has been relieved by the physical labor of after school sports and games. He has digested his dinner, and physical relaxation is both healthful and pleasing. An hour over his lessons for the succeeding day leaves him another hour before he need go to bed.

"This hour should be regarded by both parents and children as sacred and devoted to the family altar. Mother, father, daughter, and son should for that hour become comrades. A boy of fifteen who spends from dinner to the hour for sleep among his own people in this way will never go wrong.

"From fifteen to twenty comes the first breaking of the family ties, when the answer to this question, 'Where is the boy's place at home?' is most frequently answered by the boy. If his parents are of poor or moderate means he goes to work. If they have ample means he goes to college or the university—and sometimes to the Devil. If, however, he be a boy of manly instinct and honest heart, wherever his province may be, his 'place in the home' is always, in spirit at least, at the side of his mother and sisters.

"Be he in the workshop, the factory, the mill, the college or the university, his place is in his mother's heart and at the family fireside. If in the years he has passed before leaving home he has been made his father's friend and companion, he still remains that friend and companion in spirit, and will on meeting him do as two boys I know—one of sixteen and the other of thirteen—kiss that father and murmur in their slumber, 'There's no place like home.'

AGREES WITH SECRETARY.

Mrs. George W. Trout, a well known member of the Chicago Woman's Club and the West End Woman's Club, has nothing but praise for Mr. Shaw's ideas. She said yesterday:

"Secretary Shaw knew what he was doing when he said what he did about the boy. He knew those simple words 'the boy is the most valuable thing on this earth, but there is no place for him,' would cause a general awakening and a realization of what a dreadful, dreary, unfillable, empty place this would be without this same obstreperous boy.

"Having four boys in our home, the subject to us is naturally a vital and often a strenuous and lively one. 'There is no place for the boy.' The sentiment makes one smile, for the funny part of it is that you can not read it in cold type without realizing that there is not only a place for the boy as a generality, but that there is a place for each individual boy which no other boy in the whole wide world can fill. How many fathers and mothers can recall some particular boy who left them once to take perhaps a higher training, but whose place will always remain vacant until the family is again reunited in that country where the boy long ago preceded them.

EQUAL RESPONSIBILITY.

"Secretary Shaw sounded another great truth when he emphasized the equal responsibility which the father shares with the mother in the bringing up of the boy. A boy needs the influence and companionship of his father, he needs to come into contact with men. And right here let me digress a moment and add that the girl needs her father, too. I can not understand why the boy is treated as an entirely different specie from his sister. He is quite a near relative to his mother, and his sister is quite as close akin to her father.

"The remembrance of these facts will simplify things wonderfully. It is a fatal mistake to map out one line of conduct for the boy and an entirely different one for his sister. However different their tastes, pursuits, or pastimes may be, their training should be judged by the same moral code. Most intelligent fathers and mothers now recognize this fact, and a great deal of useless heartache, regret, and remorse are going to be saved in consequence.

WORSHIPS HIS FATHER.

"The boy loves his mother, but he worships and desires in all things to emulate his father. And I think there are few fathers who would not give up some very undesirable habits, even at considerable self-sacrifice, if they knew how eagerly they would be watched and imitated by their sons. It is a great thing for the complete and happy development of the boy if there is perfect harmony between the father and the mother. If the father's influence in the home is lost, it is often quite as much the fault of the one as the other. It is a great mistake for a mother never to do any governing herself, but constantly to threaten the boy with his father's displeasure, and make the home-coming of the latter a sort of clearing house for the day's offenses.

"Under such circumstances the boy naturally does not look forward to his father's society with unalloyed pleasure. A mother can not be too womanly, but she can be too 'womanly'—for instance, when her boy has a fight with the boy next door, she ought not to immediately jump to the conclusion that the neighbor's son is totally depraved and her own an abused cherub. When she washes her son's disfigured and possibly bloody nose, she says gently, 'Who began it, Johnny?' And Johnny, of course, being a normal boy, always announces that it was the other fellow. A mother ought to try to influence her boy never to fight, if he can possibly avoid it, but if he must fight, to retain his self-respect and fight fair. No sticks or brickbats, but a good, hard pounding and a settlement of the question once for all.

SHOULD BE MANLY.

"But it is a splendid thing to teach the boy that it is a good deal manlier for him to keep his temper and not fight at all than to fight. The father and mother in each family ought to be a sort of Hague Tribunal for the settlement of differences. All that they need in the training of the boy are unlimited tact, force, wisdom, a keen sense of humor, patience, purchased in wholesale lots, and a few other little things of like character.

"But it is comforting to think that we only have to do the best we can and then cheerfully and reverently leave the rest to God."

(Concluded next week.)

Requests for Prayer.

The sister's Prayer Union requests the prayers of the Saints. Bro. Thomas Lewis, of 1814 Holly street, Kansas City, Missouri, who has been a great sufferer for twenty-nine months, would be glad to have your prayers in his behalf.

Mrs. C. E. Smith requests the prayers of all the Saints that if it is consistent to God's will, she may be healed. "I leave it all with him. I can not find any medicine that helps me. Ever your sister in Christ."

Sister Moody earnestly requests the Saints everywhere to join her in fasting and prayer on August 14 in behalf of her niece who is mentally unbalanced. The physicians say she will never recover. She seems to be possessed with evil spirits, from association with spiritualism. Will the ladies of the Prayer Union offer prayer in her behalf at their next meeting that the evil spirits may be cast out and she may be made whole?

Sr. Joanna Goudenback: "On the third Sunday in August, 1910, I have asked the Bay Minette Branch (Alabama) to fast and pray for my baby who some time ago was taken by a fever and she lost the use of one of her limbs. Please join with us that our heavenly Father may send his healing power upon my baby. I expect to have her administered to that day. This is the request of your humble sister in Christ."

All that is unpleasant and inharmonious in the church is due to a lack of oneness with Christ. Paul describes beautifully the growth of those who keep the bond of peace in the unity of the Spirit. Because this blessed state of affairs does not prevail, we have stunted Christians instead of those who have come unto the measure of the unity which is in Christ. In the sixteenth verse we see the body made up of full-grown Christians doing the glorious work for which God called it forth.

Letter Department

GREENVILLE, UTAH, July 29, 1910.

Editors Herald: I arrived in Utah on the 1st of the month, and began my labor in Salt Lake City, Sandy, and Midvale. Late as I was, I found that among the elders appointed to this part of the field, I was the first to arrive. Bro. J. D. Stead arrived shortly after I did, however, and is at work at Ogden and vicinity. I am informed that Bro. John Davis also reached the field last week, but I have heard nothing from him direct.

I came to this place day before yesterday, as I had found considerable interest when here last February, and felt that the work ought to be looked after. The people are anxious that the issues between us and the dominant church should be publicly discussed, and the authorities pretend to be willing, but I very much doubt that they will agree upon any fair proposition. They shall, however, have an opportunity, hoping whatever may happen that good may accrue to the cause of truth.

In consultation with Bro. John Hall, the vice-president of the Utah District, the reunion is appointed to meet at Provo, August 27, and will continue over Sunday, September 4. The conference of the district will convene on the last Saturday during the reunion, and it is hoped that both the ministry and the Saints of this part of the mission will unite in making this gathering a success.

Mail addressed to me at Provo, Utah, will reach me, and I shall be glad to hear from any of the elders as well as from all members relative to the work in which we are engaged.

In gospel bonds,

H. N. HANSEN.

CONIFER, COLORADO, July 27, 1910.

Dear Herald: I have been highly interested in your editorials. I think they are grand and very encouraging to the Saints. I wish to say to all my brothers and sisters, notwithstanding my infirmities, I am still trying to hold up the banner of King Immanuel, preaching the gospel on Sundays, and I am happy to say the Lord is still with us and blessing us with his Holy Spirit.

My heart was made glad a short time ago in having the honor of inducting three precious souls into the kingdom of God, a mother and two little sons, and I wish to say that one of the little boys was quite sick last fall with typhoid fever and not expected to live. He was given up by the doctors, but the mother had faith in God and sent word to us to pray for her child that he might live, and so we took the child's case to the Lord in prayer, not being anywhere near so he might be administered to. The same day we were praying for him, the little boy took a turn for the better and got well. This summer the mother came and brought the family with her and she with the two little boys were baptized, and the youngest, a little girl, was blessed and they went on their way rejoicing, to meet the father of the children. So this is evidence to us that there is a God in heaven who hears and answers the prayers of his Saints. So do not be discouraged, dear Saints, when you are in trouble. Call upon Him who is mighty and powerful to save and he will come to our rescue. He has said in his word that whatsoever we ask in faith believing, doubting nothing, we are to receive. May God help our unbelief is my prayer.

JAMES KEMP.

BUNGWAHL, MYALL LAKES, NEW SOUTH WALES.

Editors Herald: We are the only Saints just here and it has been a nice change for us to be even near a branch. This place, it may be remembered, is one of a good number that Bro. Glauud Rodger visited in Australia, and he came here on foot over rough, hilly country to carry this good news of the gospel to his brother, who with Bro. John Wright (who has recently passed away) was baptized in the lake quite near their residence. Both of these brothers had the pleasure of their wives obeying, therefore their families are all strong defenders of the gospel to-day.

Brother Rodger's house still stands. The photograph of it will appear later, as my husband intends forwarding it through Bro. W. J. Haworth.

After these families removed further north to enable their business to grow, each settled in a different part. Therefore in that way the gospel has new centers and their names will well be remembered by those early missionaries who had few Saints' homes to call at. I am sure Brother Wight will remember the miles of this coast without any Saints to welcome him, but it is very much better now. Brn. J. Kaler and G. R. Wells will also know.

Since the above named Saints left this place the gospel has not been preached here, until two years ago we removed here, and then Brethren Jones and Haworth called on us and preached to a few attentive listeners. It has caused a couple of families to read and investigate, and of course others it caused to stay away for fear they may be caught in the awful (?) mesh.

Last week we were privileged in having Bro. E. F. Robertson and Bro. Victor Seaberg with us. Brother Robertson preached twice in the hall and had one Bible reading in the same house that Bro. Glauud Rodger had first visited. He found the man of the house quite ready with questions that were answered as simply by Brother Robertson as the alphabet would be to us. He could just roll off passages to verify his statements and belief.

We pray God is blessing him on his mission. He is surely sent to us as one of those earnest young men that the Lord loves. We were sorry this time to see him so sad and lonely on receiving his home mail, which brought the sad news of the loss of his sister-in-law. How he grieved with that brother in his widowhood! It made us feel we grieved with him, but as he very nicely put it, what a wonderful difference it is to grieve as the Lord's child and grieve without him.

I forgot to state that Tuncurry Branch is twenty-four miles to the north of us and Bulahdelah nineteen miles west. We drive to the latter place when convenient. In three weeks' time we hope to visit Tuncurry when the new church will be opened and a memorial service preached.

In Bro. John Wright's death, the Saints here have lost a strong defender of the gospel, a true friend, a man who was always a better man than he pretended to be, and the home has lost—well, much more than my pen would pretend to write and more than our imagination could rise to.

Praying that we will be of some use in the Lord's vineyard,
Your sister in the bonds of love,

ANNIE J. PARKER.

LAMONI, IOWA, July 18, 1910.

Dear Herald: I wish I could see you all and speak a word of cheer. There are some of you that I am personally acquainted with. I would be glad to clasp your hand and say, May God bless you; but as I can not do that, I ask that his Spirit may convey you a special blessing. There are some of you I wish I could write to in person, but I have to write so many letters to my children and other relatives that I do not have much more time as I have to do my home work; and there is no one to help me but my husband and he has much to do out doors.

We are here in the land of Zion trying to live faithfully, but there are many things to try us. I have a hard trial to bear at the present time. I have to do a good deal of my work sitting down. I wish that you would all pray for me that God would give me more strength of body. It seems that if I could be stronger I could accomplish more good in every way. We are commanded to ask in faith. Yes, faith is what we want. May the Lord give us living faith so that when we ask we shall receive. We are commanded to love one another and when we love each other as we should, we will not say wrong things about any one. May we all live in love and unity; then when we ask God to heal our sick and afflicted ones, he will do it.

I would like to call attention to this, that we here in and around Lamoni have been blessed with the rain from heaven while many other places are dried up. Some are burned up with the hot winds and sun. Where my boys are, in South Dakota, they are harvesting their wheat with the plow. We lived in North Dakota twenty-three years and I know what it means to lose your crops. We lost a good many crops there, but I wish to say to the Saints there, Be cheerful, God has not forgotten you, but in some way you will be provided for. We lost our crops there for three years in succession and yet we never wanted for bread. Dear Saints, it is my prayer that we may come up higher. May we all be faithful that we may meet our loved ones to part no more.

Your sister in the gospel,

MRS. MATTIE E. S. HOWERY.

NEW LONDON, IOWA, July 28, 1910.

Editors Herald: Bro. Charles Fry and writer came here July 19 and found Brother Willey had announced us for a series of meetings to be held in the city park. It will be remembered that it was here that W. G. Roberts earned a sixty-five dollar purse in January talking about "Mormon hash" and "slop doodle gush" and other nonnutritious substances, and really if the church had paid this sixty-five dollars it would have been a splendid investment. The anti-Christian methods used the last night of the discussion by the minister in charge of the Christian church here, made it necessary for the members of that church to give him his release. We understand he has signed up with a church near Lamoni, Iowa. The man who will take charge of the Christian church here is named Teaser. I think perhaps that should have been the name of the other man, because he certainly worried several good honest souls of his congregation.

The people are coming to our meetings in large numbers and have been constantly in attendance. In all our experience in church work, never have we seen such interest. In fact, it became so unbearable to the M. E. minister, who with the minister of two other denominations are holding Sunday night union meetings, that he took occasion to review us; but his efforts were so weak that it didn't even start either one of us to answer him. We leave here to-morrow for Montrose reunion, but leave an appointment here for August 2. Then if you conclude we are lost, look for us at New London, Iowa. Should you see this, Elder Roberts, you can tell just about what your "slop doodle gush" has done for the gospel of Christ. Go on, if you will, you are doing the work good, for we can do nothing against the truth but for the truth. We are remembering Brother Mintun in our prayers.

Yours for truth,

O. H. BAILEY.

EROS, LOUISIANA, July 23, 1910.

Dear Herald: This is the only organization in Louisiana. I think this is a hard field and the Saints have not lived as near the cross as they should, but trust, as Bro. J. T. Riley has just been here and held a two-week meeting and shook us up in our slothful and disobedient condition, that all have decided to walk in the sunlight that God's children should walk in. It rained all during Brother Riley's stay and there was not much interest had. The Saints are all poor here, and we have not yet reached that exaltation of building a house to worship in, so when it rains we are out of doors, but hope we may be able soon to build.

Kind Saints, I rejoice to see the day when my HERALD comes, to see what the Saints are doing in other parts, for I rejoice to see the number swell, and as I see the leaven grow it makes me more desirous to do the will of the Father, that I may have a right to the tree of life, for I know that the day soon cometh when all who are called Saints must take up their sword, or flee to Zion. The gathering time is now. Ask yourself the question, Whose place is it to purchase lands to gather on? Does the right belong only to those who are wealthy in the church? Can the poor excuse themselves and say they are not able? Do you expect to be there? If so, make yourself able. Remember the widow's mite. Remember how much you spend for that which does not satisfy. All is required of rich and poor. There are nearly seventy thousand members, not one but what can pay one dollar, if he is able to work in any way. If he has to make a sacrifice it is required of him. That would be seventy thousand dollars, which would begin the work at the present time and we can pay more as demand calls. Some may be able to pay ten dollars or some one hundred dollars, but that will not excuse your one. Pay God as well as man, if you expect to inherit eternal life.

Now Saints, when God's people gather I want to be there, but I am poor. I leave off lots of things that some use, so I can now thankfully say to the Herald Publishing House: Find inclosed five dollars for the establishment of the reunited Order of Enoch. May God bless our minds that we may all see that it is our duty to prepare a place for the coming of the Son of Man, Christ our Lord. So we believe in the near future we will have to put forth another effort to build God's temple. So let us be up and doing temporally and spiritually. Let us work, for the eleventh hour is far spent. Ever praying for the speed of the gospel.

W. H. FULLER.

MONROVIA, KANSAS, July 27, 1910.

Editors Herald: This seems to be the off season for missionary work in this country. Farmers are all so very busy that it seems it is almost useless to try to do anything in the country. I have recently visited Denison, where I preached on the streets and made an opening four miles south at a union chapel. Also held a week's meeting at Netawaka, trying to encourage our people there. Brother Ethridge had given them a start by reorganizing the Sunday school there. Most of the members remaining there are old and are increasing in feebleness. Brother and Sister Parker soon go to Atchison to live. Netawaka's loss will be Atchison's gain.

The reunion of the Northeastern Kansas District has been arranged to begin on Monday, August 28, at Blue Rapids, preceded by the conference on the 26th and 27th. The reunion of the Northwestern District begins on the 19th of August. We are sorry that through circumstances which we can not account for, these two reunions are so close together in the matter of time. But we hope that both may be well attended. Sister McNichols, our Sunday school and Religio worker, will be at Blue Rapids, to look after those departments. She should have been with the Northwestern District's reunion at Alexander, but being so close together, it will be doubtful. The Sunday school work needs reviving in the Northwestern District. Let all attend the reunion most convenient for them to attend. Be sure to bring your Bibles, Hymnals, Zion's Praises, Sunday school and Religio quarterlies and thus come prepared for spiritual and intellectual work, no matter which reunion is attended. Let all who can, come prepared to camp on the grounds. Those desiring information about the Blue Rapids location would do well to address Elder F. E. Taylor, Blue Rapids, Kansas. The time is drawing nigh, so it is best to be making our preparations now.

The outlook for the country missionary at present is not very cheering. Should he stay home waiting for the busy season to pass he is liable to censure. If he courageously goes among the people making the effort to get people to listen to the word, he is everywhere met with the statement, "We are all so busy now," which is all true enough. I know not of a single place where preaching is desired now. And when the missionary meets these conditions it makes him feel as though he was regarded as an intruder. Who'll show us just what to do under the circumstances? In the meantime, we'll keep trying in some way, but—

In gospel bonds,

WOODBINE, IOWA, July 28, 1910.

Editors Herald: Will you kindly allow me a brief space in the HERALD for an expression of gratitude to the many Saints and friends, both official and lay members, for their kindly subjecting of myself to such a vast shower of kindly greetings on the eighty-fourth anniversary of my birth.

Beloved Saints, my pen is too feeble to express the gratitude of my heart for the very many beautiful tributes of love showered upon me on that to me eventful day, July 25, 1910, in which expressions I was given the assurance that I had been used as a means in the hands of our divine Father, in blessing you directly or indirectly through pulpit or press, in administration of God's word and ordinance as well as by example, according to the glorious gospel plan. I can only say, my heart is made glad beyond my power of expression. But when I enlisted in this glorious cause, sixty-three years ago, the height of my ambition was to win souls into the kingdom of God. That has ever been my one aim in life. I have felt that that was my only mission on earth, and still feel that I have no other.

I am not blind to the fact that what little good I may have done has been done in great weakness on my part. I have never lost sight of the truth that my strength was only in the Lord, and I have remembered the divine injunction, "If ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach." However, there may have been times when I have mistaken the motions of human desires for the operations of the Spirit of God, but when I have discovered my error, my heavenly Father has accepted my repentance, and has not forsaken me, nor cast me aside as a useless instrument. But in these instances I have learned lessons of humility for which I praise his holy name.

My powers for good are waning as my physical nature gives way under the weight of years, but I thank God I am permitted the use of my mental powers to a fair degree and I pray that I may ever be able to use them to his glory. May the choice blessings of heaven be yours and all Saints to enjoy, is the earnest prayer of your humble brother,

CHARLES DERRY.

WILBURTON, OKLAHOMA.

Dear Herald: You come every week laden with good news to your reader. I do enjoy reading the HERALD so much. It makes us all rejoice to know there is a reality in this grand latter day work, and the more we read and study the word of the Lord the plainer it is to us. I was baptized when I was eleven years old by Bro. A. J. Moore, and I have never regretted the step taken on that day. I look back to my youthful days spent in the church with pride and thankfulness to my heavenly Father for having led me by his Holy Spirit to accept the truth. Many times the woes that I have had to endure and the circumstances that I have been placed in have seemed more than I could overcome, but that same Spirit that led me to accept the gospel has been with me all along these many years, so to-day I am strong in the faith and I can say I have received a testimony that I can say I know this work is true. I have always made an effort to live as best I could. I am still striving to overcome my faults and be able to continue faithful until the end shall come. I want to live and so conduct my life here as to meet the Savior when he shall come. I want to be with him here when he shall come to reign a thousand years on this earth with his saints.

I have been attending the Holy Roller meeting here; the first of them I ever heard, and sorry to say, they caught one of our members, but the scriptures say the very elect will be deceived if possible. It is sad for me to see Latter Day Saints led away with other denominations. I have gone to hear them three times and I can not see or understand how our people can be led away by them. The Lord said that his house must be a house of order and that he is not the author of confusion, but in this meeting you can see everything but order. I noticed last night some were singing, some praying, some speaking in unknown tongues, some confusing the ones that were baptized during the day, and some conversing. All this going at once, so I know this is not of God. And they believe, in order for you to receive the Holy Ghost, you have to have spells that cause you to roll on the floor. It kept several busy last night laying them out just like dead people. They act just like anyone in a convulsion.

We are looking forward to our reunion that is to convene here the 12th of August, and are in hopes our meeting will be a success. Bro. Henry Kemp, one of the patriarchs, was with us in our district conference at this place five years ago, and several got their blessings, and I was one of the number, and I have read and read mine with pleasure. Many promises for me if I am faithful, so this encourages us to press onward and try to do our duty. I am promised in my blessing, if faithful, I would be able to endure and overcome and gain the victory, and when I called upon him in faith he would come to my relief. Dear Saints, let us take courage and try to live for the blessings that are in store for us.

Your sister in gospel bonds,
LULA PERKINS.

PENSACOLA, FLORIDA.

Dear Herald: I have been engaged in this latter day work for about eight years. Although I was raised up with Latter Day Saints, I had not learned much about this church. I never saw a Latter Day Saint Sunday school until after I came into the church. My father used to take the HERALD and when he died mother continued taking it for a while. In the meantime she taught us children some nice pieces to use in school. She taught us to sing from the Saints' Harp. I suppose we would call it the old-fashioned way of singing before music came in style. Finally we moved away where there were no Saints; no one to cheer and to comfort us in the gospel work. Of course, mother having to look out for a living for herself and six children and not having anyone to cheer and comfort her, she became disinterested in the work. She had hands laid on her children and blessed when they were little and now they all belong to the church and most of them are a comfort to her. Of course they are not living on the highest plane of life, but hoping that sooner or later, they will strive lawfully to that end and gain a celestial home.

I was ordained a teacher about six years ago, have tried to fill that office as best I could ever since, but during this time I have met with many difficulties pertaining to the office work of a teacher. Nevertheless, I try to press my way on. I have labored with members and have carried out the law in every detail.

We live in a new place where there is no branch and just a few Saints. We have had some of the best men of the church with us the last year and hope to have some of them back this year.

In conclusion let me ask you to pray for my wife who has been sickly for a long time. Trusting the prayers of the Saints may raise her to her former health.

JAMES COOPER.

WAKEFIELD, ENGLAND, July 16, 1910.

Dear Herald: I feel led by the Spirit to write a letter to you and say a word for my heavenly Father, and though it may seem a simple letter to those brothers and sisters that are well experienced in this latter day work, it is a spiritual one.

I was baptized June 3, 1907, at the Clay Cross Branch, Derbyshire. I am pleased to say that I have never regretted the day I became a Latter Day Saint, because I know this is the true work of God. When a schoolgirl, I used to go to the meetings with a little sister in Clay Cross Branch, and from the first, I was interested and got more and more so, until I felt led to become a sister, and I am pleased to say I have been interested ever since. I stand alone in our family as a Latter Day Saint, but I hope my heavenly Father will give me the health and strength to keep pressing on in this grand and glorious gospel.

I am now living in Wakefield, but my home is at Clay Cross. As yet, I have not come across any Latter Day Saints of the Reorganized Church. There is a small meeting room here of some Latter Day Saints, but a kind sister told me that they belonged to the Brighamites, and I have no desire to mix up with them. I get very depressed at times, I have made a great mistake in coming to live here, but the best of us make a mistake at times. I feel it so because I can not attend any meetings, but I still keep pressing on in the narrow way. All seems bright again when I have had a word or two of prayer with my heavenly Father. God helps them who help themselves. I am pleased to say, brothers and sisters, I have found this to be true. The few months I have lived in Wakefield, I have experienced it, for I have taken more interest in the scriptures. Time after time I offer up prayers to God for more knowledge and understanding in this work, and I know if I am only faithful, God will grant me this privilege. A dear, kind sister has sent me a few HERALDS which I find are very interesting. It is a pleasure to read the letters of those unknown brethren and sisters. It is my desire that I may keep pressing on in this latter day work, that my lamp may be a shining light unto those around about me. I hope by God's help and the prayers of my brothers and sisters and by my faithfulness, that I may continue to be steadfast, unmovable, and ever abounding in this the true work of God until my life's work on this earth is done. May God help and bless all my brothers and sisters that are in his vineyard, both the sick and the afflicted, the tempted and tried. I am pleased to say that God has given me my health, strength, and the use of every limb, for which I give God the praise. This is the prayer of your sister in Christ.

E. A. SMITH.

SOLDIER, IOWA, R. F. D. No. 2, July 29.

Dear Herald: I wish to thank the many sisters and brothers who so kindly responded to Sister Burch's request in my behalf. I can not write each of you separately as I can not use both hands to handle pen and paper, but I have enjoyed your letters and the papers and books sent me from nearly every State in the Union. I received two Books of Mormon. One I shall keep and the other I shall give to one who is interested in this latter day work. I would be glad to write to each of you and I am always glad to receive letters from each of you. My daughter says that she is one of the black sheep now, but she expects to be a member of the church in the near future.

If an elder comes this way he will be kindly cared for. I think we can get the schoolhouse for him to preach in, and if not we could have meetings in private houses and there is plenty of water and a few candidates for baptism.

I would be glad to hear a good gospel sermon again, as I haven't heard a sermon since moving from Wisconsin years ago. My father was an elder. Some of the older Saints will remember him. His name was Reuben W. Newkirk.

Thanking you each for the the kindness shown me, and hoping to hear from you all from time to time and begging your pardon for taking this means of answering your letters, your sister in this one faith and a hope of a glorious resurrection.

MRS. LINDY E. GREENOUGH.

PERSIA, IOWA, July 21, 1910.

Dear Herald: The district conference of the Little Sioux, Iowa, District was held at Missouri Valley, June 5 and 6; attendance good. We had a good, spiritual time. Preaching by Elders J. C. Crabb, Charles Derry, James E. Kelley, W. A. Smith, and Alvin Knisley. The writer was called home on account of sickness in his family.

June 12 and 13 I attended the conference of the Gallands Grove District at Deloit. There also we had a season of enjoyment, spiritually and socially. The Saints of the district appear to be much in earnest in the Lord's work.

Brother Knisley came home with me and preached a few evenings in Persia, to the edification of the Saints and the entertainment of the outsiders, the brother being a very entertaining speaker. He would have preached longer, but the Saints had granted the Seventh Day Adventists the use of the church lot to hold meetings on and they came on and set up their tabernacle, living tents, and are still holding forth, with energy and zeal, but, as we are informed, with a perfect horror at the thought of joint discussion, although a kindly request was made to them for a showing up of the differences between us and them on the Sabbath and other questions. I knew Brother Knisley was just "spilin" for a fight, and went to Brother Metsgar, one of their preachers, and told him how much we would be pleased if they would find some one of their ministers who would discuss differences. The request is not granted. What is the matter with these brethren who are so sure they are right and everybody else wrong. Here we are trying to make our way to a better world; they claim to have the way, the bread and water of life; they maintain that we are radically wrong; we ask them that out of pity for us they will turn on the light; we hold out our hands and in pleading tones ask for light; they say, Come and hear us; we answer, We have heard you, now paint your picture and set it up alongside of one painted by us, so that we can make comparison and come to better conclusions. You won't,—why? "Well, we don't believe in discussion."

Then quit preaching, for the preacher must be a disputant. On the 27th and 28th of June, Brother Knisley and I held a two-day meeting at Moorhead; found the Saints there alive to the work.

Last week I visited the Saints at Missouri Valley, then on to Sioux City and Akron. Found Bro. A. M. Chase at Missouri Valley holding meetings in the open air and holding the crowds, too. Bro. W. A. Smith is now there, operating the tent. Brother Chase has been doing yeoman service at Pisgah and Mondamin, also, while en route to his mission field. I forgot to say that he put in an appearance at the two-day meeting at Moorhead and preached twice.

The Saints at Sioux City are doing well under the leadership of Bro. J. L. Parker, lately ordained an elder, and now that they have the services of Brother Knisley I hope to see an ingathering there. They all speak very highly of Bro. James E. Kelley and regret very much that he was compelled to give up his charge. The few Saints at Akron feel that they are neglected. They are still faithful to the truth, and hopeful that they may be supplied with preaching services. Akron is the home of Sister Christy so long and favorably known to the Saints. She speaks feelingly of the efforts of the elders there, among whom she mentioned Brn. J. M. Baker, W. A. Smith, J. C. Crabb, Charles Derry, and the earlier efforts of Brn. J. R. Lambert and Samuel Longbottom.

A letter from Bro. A. M. Fyrando tells of his continued ill health. Eleven years of continued affliction has greatly tried him, and now he is compelled to resign as Bishop's agent. Saints, I appeal to you, won't you remember him earnestly in your prayers? He is faithful, true, loving, and kind, and would gladly devote his life to this great work. Surely the Lord will hear our prayers in his behalf,

Yours in hope,

SIDNEY PITT.

GRIND STONE CITY, MICHIGAN, July 30, 1910.

Dear Saints: I am going to write a few lines for your columns. I know it is every Saint's duty. I know the Lord has blessed me many times in the past, for I have been healed many times, for which I am thankful. I know this work is true. My heart's desire is to be with the Saints to bear my testimony with them. Pray for me that I may walk upright and just. I am the only child in our family that belongs to this work and I have been in it for eight years, although I am only seventeen. I will never regret the step that I took. Pray for me that I may ever be faithful and my prayers are for the Saints of God. The HERALD is a welcome visitor to me every week. I can hardly wait till it comes.

Your sister in the one faith,

ELIZA HUNTER.

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, July 10, 1910.

Dear Herald: I have been very much blessed in reading the letters of my brothers and sisters which appear in the HERALD, and being so blessed I have a desire to write that others may be blessed. Since I last wrote I have had an experience which caused me to exercise faith in my God and prove him to be a Father and an everlasting Friend.

Twelve months ago, one of my sons, who was not in the church, but knew as much as I did as regard to necessity of obedience to the gospel, was afflicted with a sore affliction, which caused us great sorrow, and in our great trouble we remembered the promises of our Father to his children. We prayed long and often that God would heal him of this affliction and restore him to his wife and three little children. He was very anxious and willing that the elders should come according to the pattern found in James' epistle, though he said he had no faith, but God heard our cry and blessed him with a good night's sleep which he had not had for quite a while. On the following Sunday he stood up in the meeting and gave his name in for baptism, which had an effect on his good wife, who also said she was willing to be baptized, which in due course took place. They had the honor to be the first to be baptized in the New Baths at Bradford. They also had their three children blessed according to the pattern laid down in the Bible. Their presence in the meetings causes tears of joy to run down my face. Surely God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform. I and Brother Schofield promised the Lord a thanksgiving offering of ten pounds, if the Lord would bestow this needed blessing on our son. We gladly kept our promise and thank him daily for his goodness and mercies.

It is with much regret that I learn of the call of our respected missionary, Bro. J. W. Rushton, to go and labor in another part of God's vineyard, and we pray that God's special blessing will rest upon him, as we feel sure our loss is some one else's gain. His ability and willingness at every call has been such that we always felt safe in his presence, no matter who was attacking this latter day work. May God bless his wife and children, is our prayer.

On Sunday last we had our Sunday school anniversary, when we paraded the streets in the vicinity of Bradford, led by a band which was a great attraction to the public, which was also the means of making known to them that there had been Latter Day Saints in their presence for seventeen years. On this special occasion, our Brother Rushton preached two grand sermons which were appreciated by a large gathering. On Tuesday we had four baptized in the baths which belong to the city. The price of two pence is charged for admission. About fifty witnessed our Brother Rushton officiate in the ordinance.

We expect to have a good time at the conference which is being held at Birmingham. May God bless all that shall be said and done. We expect, if all is well, to be present, as our John's daily occupation has taken him to live at Birmingham. May God bless all his people in every land.

Your sister,

MARTHA SCHOFIELD.

35 BARLOW STREET, BRADFORD.

WHITTEMORE, MICHIGAN, August 1, 1910.

Dear Herald: You are a welcome visitor and much appreciated in our home. We are cheered and comforted many times by the words of instruction given through you. This dear latter day work makes life some brighter as we grow older. How we rejoice when we read of the progress of the work in different parts of the world. My companion is meeting with some opposition in telling the angel's message, but I hope and pray that those who are persecuting him and Brother Long will be brought to repentance. I will inclose a letter which I received from him which will show some of the things they have to contend with. We are hopeful. We know they will do much good. This is God's work and it is gaining.

AGNES SMITH.

The letter referred to in the foregoing is the following:

TREHERNE, MANITOBA, July 19, 1910.

MRS. AGNES SMITH,

Dear Wife: Your letter with Neva's card inclosed came to hand last night and found me well and I was glad to hear from home again. I have been out in the country over Sunday where I preached twice to the Saints, and came to town again last night, fully intending to go to Winnipeg to be with Elder E. E. Long, my associate, to assist in street preaching there; but on my arrival here I found a letter from a Sister Wilson, from Cypress, where Brother Long and I met with such opposition, that there are now some people who are anxious for our return and she said they would hire a hall. So you see we will not be compelled to preach on the streets. We certainly had persecution to meet there. Broken bottles were thrown, cigar stubs, small gravel stones, old tin cans kicked up and down the sidewalk, bagpipes were played, phonographs sang silly songs, we were called wolves in sheep's clothing, books were knocked out of our hands, and they threatened to tie us together in a true lover's knot and whip us, and now if I can, I am going back and have it out with them. Their leader was a Presbyterian preacher. I have no fear at all and do not want you to worry one bit. God took care of Paul and Silas while in the dungeon and good came from it and I may yet be instrumental in bringing some poor soul to know what we know to be the gospel. I am sorry you are not well and hope and pray your health will improve and God will care for you all, while I am so far away. I will write you again in a few days. With love to yourself, grandpa, and the children, I am,

Your husband,

DAVID SMITH.

GWYNFA LONLAS, LLANSAMLET, SOUTH WALES.

Editors Herald: We have a nice little branch at Skewen at present. We have rented a chapel in this place for very reasonable prices. The owners of same have been very lenient towards us and they wished us god-speed. The burden of this payment is resting on the shoulders of a few persons. If the Saints would unite in the bonds of love and peace and be coworkers for Christ, I would have no hesitation in saying that the work here ought to prosper. We have baptized four persons here recently and there are signs of more coming very soon. We are doing what we can under the circumstances, but the people are rather indifferent to come to hear the word preached. I hope that God will move on them and give them a pure inclination to seek for the truth as it is in Christ Jesus.

We have meetings here twice in the week, and three times on Sunday, and by coming together faithfully in this manner, we are blessed immensely by the Spirit of truth, and the gifts of the gospel are enjoyed to some degree. We have been privileged to have two district conferences held here since we took the chapel, and the gathering was very good on the whole.

Bro. J. W. Rushton presided over the meetings on each occasion, with full satisfaction to all concerned, and we are very sorry that he is leaving for America. We hope that he will return soon to our midst in Wales, as we are under the impression that "he is the right man, in the right place." I hope that this place will be filled well by his successor, Bro. G. T. Griffiths, who is familiar with a good many of the Saints in Wales.

I am rather surprised to find that the elders in Wales are not appointed to the missionary field in Wales. What is the matter? Is it necessary that they should emigrate to America first? We are under the impression here that it would be far better for the church to appoint men from Wales to labor for the church in Wales, than to send men from America here continually. It would save expenses and quench the spirit of emigration which has been injurious to the work in Wales for many years. I notice during the thirty-five years of my career in the church that no promotion has taken place in the ranks of the officers in this country similar to other nations in connection with the church. I am writing this in zeal for my language, my country, and my nation.

God has blessed his servants here to preach the gospel with eloquence and power to the convincing of many people in the past, and no doubt he will bless his servants in the future more than he did in the past. May that happy time soon appear that the purposes of heaven may be fulfilled on the earth to the glory of God and the salvation of the human family. May the peace of heaven rest upon all the household of faith.

DAVID LEWIS.

NEW YORK CITY.

Dear Saints: The blessed experiences of gospel associations can hardly be related in mere words and at the same time convey the innermost feelings of joy and peace which accompany the same. But of those who have enjoyed the Eastern reunions in the past and have partaken of the good Spirit which flows when conditions of heart and mind are right, this intelligence will disturb the sweet memories of the past and will create a longing for "our next." The dear old spot retains its former charms and brings to remembrance treasurable thoughts of former successes which have all had a purpose in our lives.

We tasted of the joy of the Spirit's presence to the extent that we sensed our unworthiness and were admonished time and again that this was but a foretaste of what was to come provided we awoke to the sense of duty along temporal lines as well as the spiritual. In fact, I believe that there has never been a time in the history of our district that it was so impressed upon us that a strict adherence to these principles ultimately means happiness and prosperity, while a continual disregard outlines sorrow and even death. Let us heed the admonition. The spirit of unity was there. The discordant note was lacking and the willingness to assume a share of the other fellow's burden was pronounced in many ways, hardly mentionable, but open to the vision of our heavenly Parent.

The young people came prepared to be of assistance and it did not take a week for them to come to the front with their offerings to the Master, which showed plainly enough that faith and works had been a part of the preceding year's program in their daily lives. Always room, of course, for advancement, but particularly pleasing to note that progress in the majority was apparent.

I could, in passing, mention many little scenes to illustrate the manner remarkable in which God is working among the young, but the incident of worthy mention which lingers in memory as a powerful event is the picture of about twelve young men who were awakened when sleep is sweetest and marched in file humming softly an inspiring gospel tune, to a quiet, secluded spot some distance from camp, the youngest lad being fifteen years of age, while one or two acknowledged twenty-six. With an opening song and kneeling in a circle their hearts were bared and desires made known to a God who seemed very near. It was demonstrated not many hours after the effect and answer to humble and earnest prayer, some being called and set apart for service in the Master's cause.

Worthy of mention, too, was the demonstration of the Holy Spirit in behalf of the missionary in charge of the Eastern Mission, which admonishes us to heed his counsel as he is led from time to time by the office of the Holy Spirit in his office in calling.

Saints, why has God placed these directing forces in our midst? To disregard their counsel and advice? Let us remember that God's purposes can not be frustrated. So we enjoyed a happy week. The influences for good can never be estimated until the final gathering. The parting hymn at the railroad station, sung as the train bore into sight,

"O! Watch! and fight and pray!

The battle ne'er give o'er," was appropriate to the sentiments of our hearts and expressed wishes. Let it be our fighting song until another year rolls around that when we meet again, we will not be obliged to ask you, "Did you think to pray?" but can sing like the saints of old: "We have fought the good fight with all our might."

Yours in the service of the Master's cause,

ALBERT N. HOXBIE, JR.

In Answer to Bro. C. J. Hunt and Others.

Brother Hunt's question was: "I would like to know if your labors since conference have increased your faith in the genuineness of all that is given out in the book that is already published?"

Yes, decidedly, Brother Hunt. Although I am not as yet rewarded with any more finds, except some fragments of pottery in two counties not heard from before. Residents of these localities have also found such fragments for years past. None of the parties who have been in any way connected with the published relics have operated in any way in these counties referred to. Since returning I have also seen other collections of the times and places of those published and have examined the evidences for and against, the results being safely on the side of genuineness of the relics.

The published ones it will be seen by the associated dates cover more than a decade and the finds had been going on nearly as long previously. Though oft assailed as spurious, no suitable examination of the evidence has appeared. The charge of fraud is a bare and unsupported one.

If they are restless for more finds it should be remembered that in Bible lands, though the finds have been many, they are not of constant occurrence. They are found only at intervals.

Had these relics published (and the hundreds more that are not) been forgeries, concealment so long and so complete, could not under the agitation and circumstances have been possible, the time, nineteen years, too long, and the wide area, more than half a score of counties, too great to admit of it.

Professor Kelsey is out again with a rehash of his unsupported charge of fraud and will be given proper attention in due time. Let none be fainthearted, but render the enterprise loyal support. Let the few who have aided continue and others join in to help and so prepare to enjoy the sure ultimate result.

Northern Wisconsin Reunion.

The second annual reunion of the Northern Wisconsin District has passed into history and will compose one of those bright pages which will be long remembered by all who attended. The preaching was excellent and the interest was good. We believe much good has been accomplished, even though there were no baptisms at the time.

Among the missionaries present were J. W. Wight, J. J. Cornish, W. A. McDowell, W. P. Robinson, J. A. Gunsolley, J. O. Dutton, S. E. Livingston, and P. L. Richardson. Brother Gunsolley gave some very interesting discourses on Sunday school and Religio work, which were appreciated by all present. Bro. J. J. Cornish, who was a new man to all of us, will ever be remembered, as also his cheerfulness, and his excellently delivered lectures, especially noted for the plain and beautiful way he presented them. None could take offense. Many friends will welcome you again, Jack.

Elders Wight and McDowell bore well their part with deep and scriptural sermons none could deny and still hold to the precious Writ. In fact all labored together to the one end, "success."

Among other things to be remembered is the abundance of fish in Lake Chetek (where about two thousand resorters spend the summer each year), hundreds of which suffered at the hands of camping Israel. Much credit is due the worthy who fried them nice and brown to the satisfaction of all (taking over twenty-five pounds of dressed fish each meal).

Soon the ten days had vanished and the sad time of parting drew nigh, many expressing their regret at leaving, but remembering the words of the poet, time passes swiftly and joys can not last, a hearty handshake was passed from one to another, and one by one they departed until what once looked like a camping city now appeared desolate, only the committee being left to complete the desolation very soon. But one bright thought being cherished by all, the hope of returning in 1911. A vote to have a reunion at Chetek in 1911 was carried.

The financial outcome is as follows: Total receipts, including tents sold, is $357.72; expenditures, including tents bought, is $339.04; balance, $18.68; balance on hand from last year, $17.65; total balance, $36.33. While last year we began with $24 on hand and closed with $17.65, this year shows considerable change. Over 1,600 meals were served, over twenty tents pitched, and over one hundred campers. Beautiful weather continued throughout.

Your brother and servant,
LEROY COLBERT, Secretary.

"The Test of Reason."

For some years past we as well as others have wondered how it was that those sent out representing the dominant church in Utah, in presenting their claims and defending their faith, affirm, from the least to the greatest, that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. In each and every instance there had been a personal revelation to bear them out in this statement, was the impression made. In the Liahona for May 14, 1910, we believe there is an article that throws light upon this matter. Elder William Evans, of the Maine conference, has an article entitled, "The test of reason," wherein he says, "The average Mormon in bearing a testimony of his faith and belief in Mormonism, closed with an assertion in strong terms that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. When asked his reasons he will tell you candidly and without reservation that it has been proven beyond a doubt. The ancient test of a prophet as described in Deuteronomy 18:22 is as follows: 'When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken, but the prophet hath spoken it presumptuously: thou shalt not be afraid of him.' What a simple, reasonable, logical test. Truly if a man prophesies and it comes not to pass that man is a charlatan and a fraud. Then applying the rule the other way, if a man prophesies in the name of the Lord and the thing predicted actually come to pass, he surely must be a prophet. What other test can be made? It is the only one that reason suggests. This method applied to the prophecies of Joseph Smith, stamps him as a true prophet," etc., etc.

Now we have no objection to this reasoning; it is but just and right, but when men come to us and leave the impression that each and everyone has received a revelation, that is quite another thing.

"OTHERWISE THEY SHALL HEARKEN UNTO THESE THINGS."

What is meant by these things as spoken of by the prophet? It seems to me there is one answer that is very plain and simple, when we take into consideration what has preceded and what follows. The human mind is prone to wander from its Lord, but when touched by the divine Spirit of God, and he reveals himself in plainness, the darkness disappears and those who would otherwise walk in darkness, behold the light and happily walk therein. So when we hear the prophet's warning voice to flee from sin and death, we take heed thereunto. Otherwise we would listen to the voice that says, "Ye shall not surely die." Now what is the prophet alluding to as mentioned above? Namely this: He was pointing them to the practices of David and Solomon, and condemning, and he emphatically says through the Spirit of God, "I will raise up a righteous seed." How? Why, by commanding one man to have but one wife and concubines none saying, "If I will raise up seed unto me, I will command my people. Otherwise they shall [or will] hearken unto these things." What things? Why, having more than one wife, or in other words, doing the things like unto David and Solomon. The Lord knew their weakness, hence the safeguard.

In order to get a proper understanding of the matter under consideration, Jacob 1: 4 should be read in connection therewith. Wherein Jacob mentions their evil practices and concludes in these words: "And we did magnify our office unto the Lord, taking upon us the responsibility, answering the sins of the people upon our own heads if we did not teach them the word of God with all diligence; wherefore by laboring with our mights, their blood might not come upon our garments; otherwise their blood would, or shall, come upon our garments, and we would, or shall not be found spotless at the last day." Also notice the word shall as used in the sixth line from the close of verse six, chapter two. Again with the restoration of the gospel in these last days, the Lord began to raise up seed unto himself and true to his promise he commanded his people, but Brigham Young could or would not see that way and did otherwise.

F. M. BALL.

A Letter from Puget Sound.

I have been told that it is sometimes a trial for people to get ready to go to church when the church was only a few blocks away, so I thought perhaps it would be of interest to some of the Saints who have all the church privileges at hand to hear how some of we isolated ones manage to go to meeting when we have an opportunity of doing so.

A short time ago, Bro. G. W. Thorburn came to Langley to hold meetings and of course we wanted to go. We live about eleven miles away by land, and about twelve by water, so I concluded to go over in a launch, while Sister Premo and her son and daughter walked over. It was a treat indeed to visit with the Saints and hear such splendid sermons. There are a few people at Langley who seem to be genuinely interested and are reading and investigating. There were not many out at the meetings besides the Saints, just one or two at first, but more kept coming as the meetings went on. A revival at the M. E. church conducted by a coworker of Billy Sunday's was a drawback to us, but a few were enough interested to come out night after night.

I went over on Tuesday and my son came on Saturday and my husband on Sunday to be present at the prayer and sacrament meeting that was held that day. He took Sister Premo and family and Howard (my son) home that evening in the launch, but I stayed until Tuesday to play for the services. We thought the meetings would close then, but some were so anxious for Brother Thorburn to keep on that he decided to stay over another Sunday. It was absolutely necessary for me to go home that day so I walked the first five miles and some kind friends took me the rest of the way, for which I was very thankful.

I promised to go back for over Sunday if possible though, so when I laid the case before my husband, he said he could take me over on Saturday, as he had business there, and we could go in the little launch, if I was brave enough. Although I am very much of a coward on the water, I felt like taking the risk when I thought of all I was missing. When I went over the week before it was on quite a large boat, and that made me nervous, although I knew there was no danger. But I was willing to try the smaller boat and Sister Premo, who isn't afraid of any boat if it will stay right side up, said she would go along. So I got everything ready and on Saturday morning about 8.30 we started out. The water was like glass.

When we start down the harbor, the scenery is beautiful, as only Puget Sound scenery can be, and I never knew what it was to enjoy a boat ride before. There were six of us in the boat, but we had plenty of room. The only drawback was that we couldn't talk much, as the noise that a gasoline engine makes in a small boat is not conducive to conversation. We made the run in a little less than two hours and found a welcome awaiting us. Brother Lovejoy had to go back in the afternoon, but promised to come on Monday for us, which he did, but a north wind come up and I decided that the best thing I could do would be to go home by the overland route. So our party divided up, Howard, Lillian, and I walked (eleven miles I think it is), and Brother Lovejoy, Sister Premo, and Harold went in the boat. They promised to have supper ready when we reached home, but when we got to the harbor they were not in sight and the water was very rough. So we came on home and got our own supper and spent the night worrying about them.

Howard started out by 7 o'clock next morning to look for them, and Lillian (Sister Premo's daughter) and I went up on a bluff with a pair of field glasses to watch for them. About 12 o'clock we saw both boats coming. They had not been in any real danger, but it got worse and worse after they started and they went ashore and some friendly fishermen gave them shelter and supper in their house-boat. Something about the engine got wet, and it refused to work properly, so that delayed them the next morning. They looked very much dilapidated when we met them at the wharf, but they were in excellent spirits and none the worse for their adventure. Harold said the only time he was afraid was when he thought he would not get any supper the night before. Sister Premo's skirt had had an encounter with the engine, and when I saw her I had to dry my tears and join in the laughter with the rest.

We were very happy and very thankful that all were safe. Our trip to Langley and experiences there will always be a bright spot in our memories, and the kindness of the Saints was greatly appreciated by us all. They surely treated us like brothers and sisters. And I am sure that the meetings left us all with a stronger desire to live better lives and more in accordance with the will of the Master. Four young people were baptized, all children of the Saints, and we hope when Brother Thorburn comes again that others will obey the gospel.

The Kentucky and Tennessee Reunion.

Our reunion convened with the Farmington Branch at Oakland, July 16, 1910, at ten o'clock in the morning, but owing to rain, not enough were present to organize, so that matter was postponed until 2.30 p. m., at which meeting Bro. F. M. Slover was chosen to preside. Bro. J. R. McClain was to assist him, also Bro. J. W. Peterson was to be associated with them. Alma Snow was chosen as secretary; Gertie Ward, organist; and Rubie Snow chorister, until Bro. J. A. Dowker came on Monday. All were glad to see him, especially the singers, as he was a great help in singing. We were surprised by Bro. George H. Hilliard visiting us at our reunion. He arrived at the camp Sunday. No one knew of his coming until he was right in our midst. We were pleased also to have Bro. C. L. Snow, of Knobnoster, Missouri, with us again. The preaching was done by G. H. Hilliard, F. M. Slover, J. R. McClain, C. L. Snow, J. A. Dowker, and J. W. Peterson. They were assisted some by the local officers. Brother Shupe and family came on Wednesday with their musical instruments, which was a great help to our meeting.

Thursday was given over to the children, and after a short talk on Sunday school work by Bro. G. H. Hilliard, a splendid and encouraging program was rendered and enjoyed by all. There was a large crowd of outsiders present. There was a large attendance of Saints from the district and at nights and on Sundays a great many outsiders attended.

On the last Sunday of the reunion, July 24, funeral service of Bro. Turner Adair was conducted by Bro. R. C. McClain, assisted by C. L. Snow. There was a large crowd present considering the rain. The reunion committee did what they could to make it pleasant for all who attended.

It was decided to hold the next reunion at High Hill, near Lynnville, Kentucky, on the third Saturday in July, 1911. D. C. Harris, Lawry Lamb, O. S. Caldwell, J. R. Gray, and Robert Warren were chosen the reunion committee for next year.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI.

Brn. S. A. Burgess, R. Archibald, N. W. Cooke, and G. Reeves presided over our monthly sacrament service at which time Brethren Cooke, Burgess, and Archibald confirmed four little buds of promise who had been baptized on Children's Day, June 26. They were John Smith, Russell Archibald, Etta Mercer, and Myrtle Trowbridge, all scholars of the Sabbath school.

The preached word the past month was delivered by Brn. S. A. Burgess, R. Archibald, R. J. Elliot, R. J. Lambert, of Lamoni, Iowa, Harold Burgess, and George Reeves. The last two being recently ordained to the priesthood did nobly in their first attempt, July 24.

On the evening of July 18, the district priesthood meeting was held in Saint Louis, to which young men not of the priesthood were invited. Matters of interest were discussed. The Children's Day program was a decided success. Two names were added to the cradle roll, one child blessed, and four baptized. Four more little ones are to be baptized the first Sunday in August.

The district reunion will be held August 12 to 21 at Lansdowne, Illinois. A good spiritual time is desired. The Sunday school and Religio election resulted in selecting officers who are deemed capable of advancing the work during the ensuing term. The Sunday school picnic, July 4, was reported as having been a success. Brother Sawley was in attendance at our last district conference. He has been doing excellent work in the district since about May 10. His most effective work being at and near Alma, Illinois.

E. M. PATTERSON.

July 27, 1910.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

After the excessive heated season of July, relief came in a copious downpour of rain this morning, reviving and developing the luscious ears of corn and all the fruits and garden vegetables, and breaking the long and weary drought, for which we all are grateful.

The business meeting of August 1 was a spirited one, although rather poorly attended. Branch financial matters were discussed, church improvement decided upon, and quite a number of letters of removal were received.

On the 24th ult., called "The hottest Sunday in July," the Saints listened to excellent sermons from Elders E. C. Briggs and H. W. Hattey, and on last Sunday, Elder John Kaler, with his wonted vim and plainness, talked on practical lines concerning those principles which should govern a self-ordered life. The Sunday school attendance was nine hundred and eight, and the morning prayer meeting and that of the afternoon were full of cheer and comfort to all present. In the evening, Elder Guinand preached acceptably to an unusually small audience of about two hundred and fifty. The auxiliaries, too, have been somewhat awake through the last long heated term, the Laurel Club doing good social work by giving ice-cream suppers on the east lawn every Saturday evening, and chief among the active church societies are the Ladies' Aid and the Daughters of Zion. The latter held its last monthly session on the 17th of July, forty sisters being present and every number of the program was full of profit and interest.

Bro. James L. Gray, who has made the subject of child training a study, in a short, practical speech, presented many good thoughts. A discussion on portions of the Word of Wisdom, interesting comments on the subject of canning fruits, and reports of committees, among them one on library books of the "Purity and truth," series also a very sweet vocal solo, "My ain folk," by Sr. Jeanette Kelley, and besides all this, the reading and discussion of the lesson in the home column, all made up a full and excellent program.

The little prayer circles here and there among them, the Prayer Union, also that at the Saints' Home, the Sanitarium, and on the South Side, are all centers of spiritual growth and encouragement.

At this writing our faithful, aged brother, Elder E. Harrington, is seriously ill; and for him, with all our aged and afflicted ones, the call goes forth to our readers for the Saints' kindly remembrance in prayer.

Conference Minutes.

VICTORIA.—Semiannual conference at Geelong, Victoria, Saturday, March 26, 1910, at 2.30 p. m. President and vice-president of the district, Elders D. McIntosh and M. F. W. Kippe, were chosen to preside. The seventies present, J. H. N. Jones and A. C. Barmore, were chosen to assist the president of conference. The following delegate credentials were submitted: Queensferry Branch, 7 delegates; Hastings Branch, 10 delegates; Richmond Branch, 20 delegates. Brethren Kippe, Walker, and Ford were appointed to examine above reports and while thus engaged the assembly was addressed by Elders Barmore and McIntosh. The credentials committee reported as follows: Queensferry, no report; Hastings, 59 members, entitled to 10 votes; Richmond, 117 members, entitled to 20 votes. By motion speeches during conference were limited to five minutes. Elder Barmore submitted the following report: "To the Conference: We your committee appointed to present a protest against the utilization of any missionary in the Standard Office, such protest to be sent to the general authorities of the church through the missionary in charge, hereby report that we have written out and sent such protest. A. C. Barmore, M. F. W. Kippe, of the committee." The foregoing report was received as satisfactory. The following statistical reports were read: Queensferry, last report, 43, present number 47; including 1 elder, 2 priests, 1 teacher, 1 deacon; gain by baptism, 4; absent, 20. Hastings, 69; present number 67; including 3 elders, 1 priest, 1 teacher, 2 deacons; change, by removals, death 1; absent from branch, 55; new ordinations, 1. Richmond, last report, 114; present number 117; including 1 seventy, 2 elders, 5 priests, 1 teacher, 1 deacon; gain by baptism, 2; removal, 1. Moved and seconded that the adoption of the foregoing report be withheld pending the report of a special committee appointed by the district, consisting of Brethren Kippe, of Hastings Branch, Ford, of Richmond Branch, and Reed, of Queensferry Branch, to examine the statistical reports regarding the numbers of absent members appearing thereon. Ministerial reports were given as follows: Seventy A. C. Barmore; Elders D. McIntosh, Kippe, Wooley, Trembath; Priests P. Rouse, A. H. Ford, G. W. Hailey. The foregoing reports were received as satisfactory. The Bishop's agent's report: Total receipts, £62 5s. 6d.; expenditures, £56 9s. 5½d.; balance in hand, £5 16s. 3d. The members in Victoria contributed £27 15s. 6d. in tithes and offerings, while £34 10s. was obtained from Bishop Lewis to meet the requirements of the work here. The above report was received as satisfactory. A committee was appointed consisting of Brethren Ford, Walker, and Walton, to audit this report. The following resolution was submitted by Elder Barmore. "Whereas there is need for more general mission work in Victoria, and whereas we have a tent for doing such work, which tent must be sustained by funds, therefore be it Resolved, that the sum of fifteen shillings per week be raised by the various branches for that purpose, and the execution of this matter be left in the hands of the district officers and Bishop's agent." This was received and seconded. A communication was received from the Richmond Branch relative to the ordination of Brother Thorpe to the office of deacon. This was referred to a committee consisting of Elders McIntosh, Kippe, Jones, and Barmore, this committee to report on same before close of conference. Election of district officers: President, D. McIntosh; vice-president, M. F. Kippe; secretary A. H. Ford. The above brethren were chosen to represent the district for the term until next conference. The appointing of preachers, etc., during conference was left with the presidency. Was decided to hold the next conference at Richmond. At 8 p. m. met again for preaching service, in charge of Elders Kippe and Wooley. A large and attentive congregation was present. The sermon was instructive. Sunday at 9.30 a. m. met again, in preaching service in charge of Elder J. H. N. Jones, assisted by Elder A. C. Barmore. The preacher gave an interesting discourse on the commission of Christ, and was listened to by a large and appreciative audience. A session of Sunday school at 11 a. m., and priesthood meeting at 1 p. m., were held. The Saints met again at 3 for sacrament and testimony, meeting in charge of Elder McIntosh and Priest P. Rouse. The church was filled to its utmost capacity. The ordinance of administration was attended to, after which the meeting was given into the hands of the Saints. A pleasant and profitable time was spent by all present and each one enjoyed the presence of the Spirit of the Master, which was present in a marked degree. It was indeed a time long to be remembered by all present. Met again at 7 for preaching service in charge of Elder Barmore, assisted by A. H. Ford. A very instructive sermon was presented to a well-filled house of Saints and friends. Presentation of the report on ordination by the committee appointed: "Having investigated the request of Richmond Branch regarding same and not having sufficient information regarding the call, recommend it be returned to Richmond Branch for further consideration, branch to act with discretion and according to the Spirit in his ordination." Report on Bishop's agent's book: "Committee reports that same had been audited and found correct." The foregoing reports were received and adopted and committee discharged. Met again at 10 a. m., Monday, March 28, for social service and prayer meeting, presided over by Brethren Kippe and Jones. A good time was spent in prayer, praise, and testimony, and expressions of satisfaction as to the blessings enjoyed during the conference were given. This meeting will long be remembered by those present. The Spirit of the Master was present and its presence seemed to be felt by all. A vote of thanks was given the Saints and friends for hospitality and assistance during conference. Motion of adjournment to meet at Richmond on or about September 25, 1910, or at call of district president was moved, seconded, and carried unanimously. The singing of "God be with you till we meet again" and benediction by the district president, brought the most enjoyable conference yet held in Victoria to a close. D. McIntosh, president, A. H. Ford, secretary.

SHEFFIELD.—The eighteenth semiannual conference of Sheffield District convened at Sutton in Ashfield, July 9 and 10, 1910. Business session commenced at 7.35 p. m. Carried that J. W. Rushton be associated with Brother Austin in the presidency of their conference. J. W. Rushton then made a few timely remarks. Letter calling conference asked for, and not being at hand, was stated from memory. Resolved that George William Rallings be deacon and organist with power to add, and that Henry Taylor be chorister. Elder C. Cousins was called to assist secretary. District officers reporting were as follows: Elders J. Austin, Vice-president J. Holmes; High Priest T. Taylor. Branch reports: Sheffield, by Elder J. Austin; Sutton in Ashfield, by Bro. R. Rallings; Clay Cross, by Bro. E. Wragg. Reports also by Elder S. Holmes, C. Cousins, J. Naylor; Priests George Gaydon, G. H. Arber; Teacher J. H. Simpson. These were all approved, as also that Brother Meredith, of Birmingham, have voice and vote in this conference. Recommendation from Clay Cross that Bro. Joseph Holmes be ordained a deacon. Considered and resolved that this conference approve the recommendation; that he be referred to the Clay Cross Branch for ordination. Carried that the elders' quorum meet at 9 a. m., to-morrow and all may attend who desire. Notice of an amendment of district rule 15 in regard to collection for district purposes. Carried that the place of holding next conference be left in the hands of the district authorities of the church. Resolved that we tender our hearty vote of thanks to the Sutton Saints for their hospitality to the visiting Saints, also to the organist, chorister, deacon, and Bro. George Ralling for the use of their room for conference purposes. Resolved that we do now adjourn until 4 p. m., to-morrow for business. Elders' quorum meeting at 9 a. m., Sunday. A paper was read by district president, J. Austin. Preaching service, 10.30 a. m. presided over by J. E. Meredith and J. Holmes, preaching by Elder T. Taylor. A noble example and a life of love was portrayed by him. Fellowship service at 2.30 p. m., presided over by E. Wragg and R. Rallings. The testimonies were borne with the power of the Spirit to the edification of all. Business meeting resumed to hear treasurer's report, which was not made out, so was given orally. Moved that we adjourn to meet at the call of the presidency of the district. Evening preaching service at 6 p. m., presided over by C. Cousins and J. Austin. Attention paid the speaker was marked. An outdoor preaching was held in the market place afterwards, when four brothers spoke explaining the gospel. George Gaydon, secretary, 9 Albans road, Nottingham, England.

SASKATCHEWAN.—District conference convened at Regina, Saskatchewan, July 23, 1910. Conference was opened Saturday, July 2, with prayer meeting, presided over by Elders Dobson and Walstrom. Business meeting was opened at 10 a. m., by district president, R. J. Jordan. On motion F. A. Smith and R. C. Evans presided, associated with presidency of district. Elder Josh Dobson gave verbal report. The statistical reports were read and approved. The appointing of all committees was left in the hands of presidency. Committees were appointed as follows: Press committee, H. J. Davison, Brother Hewitt, and Victor Smith. Auditing committee, J. Neill, W. J. Fisher, and William Toovey; credential committee, Elders Mortimer and Beckman, and Sister Ferrie. Administering committee. Elders Walstrom, Dobson, and Beckman; ushers, Brothers Wicksey, Bergersen, and Clarke; H. J. Davison was appointed chorister with power to choose organist. Credential committee's report was read and approved and the committee continued. Delegate system was suspended and business done en masse. Bishop's agent's and treasurer's reports read and referred to auditing committee. Report of Elder H. J. Davison as delegate to General Conference was read and adopted. Auditing committee's report was accepted, also Bishop's agent's and treasurer's. The motion to divide the Saskatchewan District into two districts was laid on the table. The matter of money paid Brother Gunsolley was taken up. Carried that it is the sense of this body that what has been done in regard to this matter be considered done through a misunderstanding and can hardly be refunded and that the matter be dropped. Bishop's agent handed in his resignation and the same was accepted. It was moved that we indorse the selection by Bishop R. C. Evans of Elder J. A. Beckman for Bishop's agent for this district. A vote of thanks was given to retiring agent. At 1.30 p. m., it was carried that the district purchase twenty dollars' worth of tracts, ten dollars' worth besides the ten dollars' worth now on hand, and that they be left in the hands of the district president. Summarized report of district president was read and accepted. Moved and carried that we rescind the motion requiring district presidency to make a summarized report of all branch and district officers to each district conference. Also until further ordered, that each minister be authorized to report to each district conference. On motion it was decided to meet with Minnesota Branch for next conference on Saturday, December 31, and Sunday, January 1, 1911. Carried that we sustain R. J. Jordan as district president. Josh Dobson and J. R. Backley were elected vice presidents. Present clerk was sustained. Elders court held at 3.15 p. m. Preaching by F. A. Smith at 3.30 p. m., assisted by J. W. Diggle. Preaching services at 8 p. m., speaker, R. C. Evans. Sunday, July 3, 1910, prayer meeting at 7 a. m., conducted by R. C. Evans and F. A. Smith. Immediately after prayer meeting, Bro. T. J. Jordan was ordained to office of high priest under the hands of R. C. Evans, and F. A. Smith. Preaching services 9 a. m., conducted by J. A. Beckman; speaker, R. C. Evans; and at 8 p. m., conducted by J. L. Mortimer; speaker, R. C. Evans. A vote of thanks was rendered to all who took part in making the meetings enjoyable and those that found places for Saints to stay. Carried that we adjourn to meet at the time appointed. Mrs. Alvin Beckman, clerk.

SOUTHERN NEBRASKA.—The Southern Nebraska District convened with the Nebraska City Branch July 24 and 25, 1910. Preaching Sunday morning at 11 by Paul M. Hanson, C. H. Porter, district president, in charge; at 3 p. m. by J. R. Sutton, H. A. Higgins in charge; and at 8 p. m. by J. W. Wight, Elder Wilber Savage in charge. Prayer meeting at 9 a. m., July 25, in the church with J. W. Waldsmith and W. M. Self in charge. The business meeting convened at 10:15; Pres. C. H. Porter in the chair. On motion C. H. Porter, president, J. W. Wight, minister in charge, and J. R. Sutton, sub-minister in charge, were associated together to preside over the conference. J. W. Wight took the chair. Paul M. Hanson and J. R. Croft appointed a committee on credentials; H. A. Higgins secretary. Bishop's agent's report was read and referred to a committee on auditing. Statistical reports of the Franklin, Eustis, Blue River, Fairfield, and Nebraska City branches were read. Ministerial reports of J. W. Waldsmith, C. H. Porter, W. M. Self, Wilber Savage, James Thomson, James Huff, H. A. Higgins, and J. R. Croft were read. Paul M. Hanson, A. A. Reams, and J. R. Croft were appointed a committee on auditing. Eustis, Nebraska City, and the Blue River branches were placed in nominations for the place of the next district conference. Eustis was chosen, the time being left to the district president. Elder Paul M. Hanson was elected district president for the ensuing term. H. A. Higgins was sustained as district secretary. C. H. Porter was sustained as Bishop's agent and district historian. J. W. Wight preached at 8 p. m., C. H. Porter in charge. The conference adjourned to meet at some date in January, 1910. H. A. Higgins, secretary.

Convention Minutes.

CHATHAM.—The saints of Chatham District held their semi-annual convention of Sunday school and Religio in the town hall at Bothwell on Saturday and Sunday, July 30 and 31. The convention was opened at 1 p. m., the district officers being placed in charge and a fairly good representation being present. The program for Saturday was along the line of institute work which was educational. An entertainment was given Saturday evening consisting of appropriate recitations, speeches, and songs to a good sized and appreciative audience, and ably presided over by Elder Arthur Leverton. The Lord's day was begun with a prayer and sacrament at 9 a. m. which continued till 10:30. The time from 10:45 to 12 m. was occupied with round table talk upon best methods of teaching and conducting Sunday schools. Field worker A. R. Hewitt being in charge. From 2 to 4:45 p. m. the time was occupied with model Sunday school and Religio sessions. The convention closed with a gospel sermon by Elder G. M. Shippy and all seemed to enjoy the various sessions and expressed themselves as edified and strengthened for christian warfare. G. M. Shippy, Nellie Taylor, press committee.

Saint Louis Reunion Postponed.

Owing to existing conditions it has been considered best to postpone the reunion set for Lansdowne (East Saint Louis), Illinois, August 12 to 21, until some time in the year 1911. All parties interested will please take notice that no reunion will be held this year. This by action of the district officers. R. Archibald, president.

Died.

FEAGINS.—William C. Feagins was born in Ohio, August 2, 1852, and died July 14, 1910, of heart failure. He was sick only about twenty minutes when the end came, and he peacefully passed away with a smile on his face. He came with his parents to Marion County, Iowa, when two years old, and was married January 18, 1880, to Lydia I. Ray. Moved to Douglas County, Nebraska, in February, 1880. To them were born six sons and six daughters. He moved to Wallowa County, Oregon, seven years ago, where he lived until his death.

HALL.—Sarah Hall was born October 14, 1826; died July 26, 1910, at Kingston, Missouri, at the home of her daughter, Sister Bryant, with whom she made her home. She leaves one son and daughter, twelve grandchildren, and twelve great-grandchildren. Has been a member of the church from her girlhood. Of her it can be said, in the language of Proverbs 31:31, "Give her of the fruit of her hands, and let her own works praise her in the gates." She was laid to rest in the Kingston cemetery. Services in charge of William Lewis.

Liberty is the result of law—not, as many suppose, of the absence of law.—Joseph Alden.

Where Is the Moral Curse of Slavery?

(From a speech on an Indian appropriation bill in the United States House of Representatives, December 11, 1854.)

I have no desire to deprive the people of any state or territory in our common country of the right of adopting such institutions for their government, when they become states, as they please. It is anti-American and entirely at war with the spirit of the age about which we hear so much. I ask why the people of any section of the country should be prevented from adopting the institutions of the south if they wish them? Socially, morally, and politically, or in any respect of the question, is there any reason for depriving them of such right? Is it for the sake of humanity that gentlemen are not willing for the people of Kansas to assign the African the same condition there that he occupies in the south if they think it best to do so?

Are gentlemen willing to degrade their own race by not permitting them to vote upon matters relating to their own government while they are endeavoring to elevate the negro to the standard of the white man? You may degrade the white man, but you can not raise the negro to the level you purpose. It is impossible. You have to reverse a law of nature first. Man may indulge in philanthropic speculations as much as they please, but here is the great immutable law of nature, and they can not avoid it. I am not here to argue whether decrees of the most high are right, wise and just. There is a difference, a vast difference, established by the Creator between the different races of men.

For myself, I believe that he who made us all is just, and that he made the white man as he made him—and he made the negro as he made him—for wise and just purposes. Some vessels are made for honor and some for dishonor; one star differeth from another star in magnitude as well as in brilliancy. I believe, too, that the system of government as adopted by the south defining the status or relation of these two races is the best for both of them; and I am prepared to argue that question with the gentlemen, here or anywhere. Take the negroes in Indiana, take them in the north generally, and compare their condition with those of the south.

Take them in Africa; take them anywhere on the face of the habitable globe; and then take them in the Southern States and the negro population of the south are better off, better fed, better clothed, better provided for, enjoy more happiness, and a higher civilization than the same race has ever enjoyed anywhere else on the face of the world. Could Howard, the philanthropist, who has left an undying fame for his deeds of humanity have taken the same number of Africans from their native country and raised them from their barbarous condition to that of the slaves of the south, he would have added much to that stature of immortality which in his day he erected to himself.

But some people say that slavery is a curse to the white man. They abandon the idea that it is a curse to the negro. They say it weakens, impoverishes and demoralizes a State. Let us see. They say there can be no high social, moral, or material development under the institution of slavery. I have before me some statistics on this point—statistics relating to material development. But before alluding to them I will say upon the subject of morals that I saw a table of crimes made out in the census office for 1850.

From those statistics it appeared—I speak from memory; I have not the paper before me—that the number of convictions for crimes of every grade in Massachusetts, the land of "steady habits" and where we hear so much of the immoral effects of slavery, with a population under one million, was several thousand; while in the State of Georgia, with a population not so great, the similar convictions are less than 100. I say, then, upon the score of crime, upon the score of morals, I am ready to compare my State with that of Massachusetts, or any one of the free States. Where, then, is the moral curse which arises from slavery?—Alexander H. Stephens.

The Death-Dealing House-Fly.

The common house fly is coming to be known as the "typhoid fly," and when the term becomes universal, greater care will be exercised in protecting the house from his presence. Flies swallow the germs of typhoid in countless millions while feeding on excreta. They spread a thousand times more typhoid germs in their excreta than on their feet.

As soon as the fly comes out of his shell he is full grown and starts out in the world to make a living, and if your home is not clean, he knows it; for the fly can discern an unclean odor for miles. A pleasant smelling substance—the fragrance of flowers, geraniums, mignonette, lavender, or any perfumery—will drive them away.

The fly lays her eggs in the manure pile or some other filthy place. All the germs—all the microbes—fasten themselves on the spongy feet. The fly brings them into the house and wipes them off. The fly that you see walking over your food is covered with filth and germs. If there is any dirt in your house, or about your premises, or those of your neighbors, he has just come from it. Watch him, as he stands on the sugar, industriously wiping his feet. He is getting rid of disease germs, rubbing them on the sugar that you are going to eat, leaving the poison for you to swallow. This does more to spread typhoid fever, cholera infantum and other intestinal diseases than any other cause.

Don't allow flies in your house. Don't buy food stuffs where flies are tolerated. Don't allow your fruits and confections to be exposed to the swarms of flies. Don't let flies crawl over the baby's mouth and swarm upon the nipple of its nursing bottle. Dispose of waste materials in such a way that the house fly can not propagate, for flies breed in horse manure, decaying vegetables, dead animals, and all kinds of filth. Look after the garbage can, see that it is cleaned, sprinkled with lime or kerosene oil, and closely covered. Screen all windows and doors and insist that your grocer, butcher, baker, and everyone from whom you buy foodstuffs does the same. Remember that a large percentage of flies breed in the stable. There is more health in a well-screened house than in many a doctor's visit.—B. M. Clinedinst, in The Christian Herald.

No free government or the blessing of liberty can be preserved to any people but by a firm adherence to justice, moderation, temperance, frugality, and virtue, and by a frequent recurrence to fundamental principles.—Patrick Henry.

The Floating Hospital.

Boston's floating hospital is one of the greatest monuments in the history of charitable works, and Anne Hathaway tells in Human Life for August, the unique position that it occupies in the world of philanthropy.

"They tell of one mother," says the writer, "who, starved and beaten by a drunken husband, had risen early in the morning, and with her wasted infant in her arms had sped toward the water front, not to find the hospital, but peace beneath the sparkling waters.

"How, putting her baby's tiny hands up to her neck and holding them there within her bosom, she had kissed its face and sped on to the portals of eternity.

"How, when she reached the wharf, she saw a great boat riding an anchor, while hundreds of mothers, poor, humble like herself, were hurrying on board with babies in their arms, sick babies—she recognized that fact and the wonder grew in her eyes.

"At last, mustering courage, she spoke to one of her countrywomen and learned the mission of the boat with the snowy decks, the mission of the spotlessly attired nurses, learned that they were to save sick babies like her own, learned also that she might have a chance like the rest to save her child.

"She did save her child, who is to-day a beautiful and well-grown girl, a living monument to one of the greatest charities of our age and times."

Where Washington Kneled in Prayer.

A few years ago, Valley Forge was one of the most neglected of the nation's historic places. Visitors saw Washington's headquarters and then wandered around aimlessly, regarding with disappointment the rubbish-choked ditches that were pointed out as the entrenchments dug by the patriots of '77. A few vagrant looking sign-boards informed the tourists that the almost obliterated lines were forts, constructed by Washington's soldiers; but the entire camp ground was rapidly dissolving itself into the scenery, and landmarks were becoming more and more difficult to find.

All this has now been changed. The trenches have been cleared of rubbish, the forts restored, monuments erected, markers placed to show where the men of the various States had their headquarters, and the entire camp fairly bristles with signposts to guide the patriotic visitor.

Most notable of all is the Memorial Chapel and Patriot's Hall, erected on the spot where Washington knelt to ask divine aid for his difficult and seemingly hopeless campaign.

The Heaviest Offense.

Under our form of government all authority is vested in the people and by them delegated to those who represent them in official capacity. There can be no offense heavier than that of him in whom such a sacred trust has been reposed, who sells it for his own gain and enrichment. . . . He is worse than the thief, for the thief robs the individual, while the corrupt official plunders an entire city or state. He is as wicked as a murderer, for the murderer may only take one life against the law, while the corrupt official and the man who corrupts the official alike aim at the assassination of the commonwealth itself. . . . The first requisite of successful self-government is unflinching enforcement of the law and the cutting out of corruption.—Theodore Roosevelt.

ANCIENT AMERICANS MIGRATED NORTHWARD.

AMATLAN DE CANAS, TERRITORY OF TEPIC, MEXICO, August, 1909.—About where the imaginary fractional meridian of 104 degrees 30 minutes west intersects latitude 20 degrees 30 minutes north, twelve or fifteen miles W. N. W. from the town of Mascota, in the western part of the State of Jalisco, Mexico, is a record left by some forgotten race which would doubtless prove of absorbing interest to the ethnologist curious as to the mystery of those unknown, pre-Aztec peoples who undoubtedly inhabited certain parts of the west coast of Mexico in the remote ages of the past.

This consists of a well-preserved series of inscriptions deeply and skillfully incised on the face of a porphyry cliff, at present almost inaccessible, but which, judging from the amount of talus at its foot, must, in some far distant period, have been easier of ascent.

From the evenness of the cut and regularity of the individual characters of the inscription it is quite evident that this message from the unknown past was graven in the obdurate stone by no 'prentice hand. This was the decisive, unhesitating work of a master, familiar with his work and competent to convey in permanent, lucid form, some story of seeming import to unborn posterity.

The writing, which is in two distinct sections, runs in regular horizontal lines—but in which direction it should be read it is impossible, of course, to say. In character it appears to have progressed beyond the purely primitive hieroglyphic type, and to have entered that more advanced stage of conventionalized symbolism, where the obviousness of the hieroglyphical significance of the character is subordinated to cursiveness and ease in formation. The general appearance of the writing is even and graceful and the impression left on the observer is that this memorial from the past could not have come from a race in the initial stage of cultural progress. There is too much of finish and decisive definiteness of purpose in the work to admit of this conclusion.

What most impressed this observer in studying the inscription in detail was the frequent recurrence of certain characters strikingly similar in form to some of those shown by Doctor Lumholz, the Norwegian archæologist, in inscriptions discovered by him, in the abandoned cliff dwellings of Arizona and in the ancient cave sepulchres of the Tarahumare pagan tribes of southwestern Chihuahua, on which he mainly relies in his assumption of a common origin. The Mascota inscription appears far less crude in design and workmanship than those discovered by Doctor Lumholz, and comparably are as the tentative efforts of a beginner in chirography to the work of a master in the art.

Owing to the almost insuperable difficulty of ascent of the cliff, observation of the inscription under discussion was made from the precarious edge of a shelf of rock at about a similar altitude, some distance in front, through field glasses, but it is hoped that by the use of a swinging platform, suspended from above, a closer inspection may be made.

The appearance of the characters is indicated by the subjoined detached symbols, which give a general idea of their characteristic forms:

These are not exactly literal, perhaps, but they suggest the peculiarities of the characters, and will serve to substantiate the observer's claim to their resemblance to those found in the ancient cliff dwellings.

Most ethnologists appear to assume that the migration of American aborigines was from the north southward, and that as they moved toward the more fruitful south they progressed in cultural advancement and civilization.

This appears fundamentally wrong in theory. Draper enunciates the doctrine that culture is more uniform and homogeneous in a primitive civilization moving between latitudinal zones than across them, topographical obstacles being equal, and finds climatic reasons for this difference in racial evolution. As a lesson from historical precedent, as we know it, the first civilizations, unassisted by modern artificial aids, developed in southern lands, where the friendliness and fruitfulness of nature afforded more of leisure for observation and mental comparison than did the rigorous exigencies of a northern climate, where the incessant struggle for mere existence gave little time for speculative surmise and contemplative comparison—the very source of intellectual development and progress.

Hence, when we find cognate races of wide differences of social development, and the higher civilization in the blander climate of southern latitudes, while that of their northern brethren is crude and primitive, it appears more logical to assume that the civilization was lost by the latter by a northern migration, rather than that the race had improved its state by coming southward, where, as we know, all unassisted primitive civilization had its origin.

This seems borne out by an observation of Pickett, in his History of Alabama, as far as the aboriginal Americans are concerned, where he mentions the fact that the Muskokis, or Creeks, as the English called them, were newcomers in Alabama, and that their language, traditions and customs were alien, and pointed to a Mexican origin, though they were a much cruder race than their congeners to the south. In other words, in their long wanderings among a ruder people, they had lost much of the cultural advancement of their kindred, as white frontiersmen have frequently done, under like conditions.

From this it is concluded that the mound builders of Ohio and the Mississippi Valley, and the cliff dwellers of New Mexico and Arizona were not the precursors of a race who improved their civilization by southern migration to Mexico and Central America, but that exactly the opposite was the case, and that the former peoples, by a migratory movement to the harder conditions and in the face of ruder dangers of the north, lost wholly or in large part, the civilization with which they left their ancestral homes in the south, and were destroyed or merged with the crude barbarity of the northern tribes.

It certainly seems more consistent to believe that the lost cliff dwellers were finally exterminated by their natural enemies, the Apaches, rather than that they escaped to found a marvelous civilization, as Toltec or Aztec, in Mexico.—San Antonio Light and Gazette, March 6, 1910.

THE ROBERTS-MINTUN DEBATE.

The editors are in receipt of the following letter from Bro. J. F. Mintun, outlining his experiences in the recent debate with W. G. Roberts. The letter was received too late for publication in the regular department, consequently we give it space in the editorial department, as we feel that many of our readers will be interested in learning the outcome of the affair:

A word from me in regard to the late debate that I held with W. G. Roberts may be of interest to some, for it was dissimilar to any I have held, and closed rather abruptly.

He began the debate by giving notice in the Octographic Review that we were "Mormons," and that "It will be a battle for truth against infidelity. They are a set of infidels. If you never heard a debate with an infidel attend at Ottumwa, Iowa, and you will."

Mr. Roberts has no argument, or if he has, he doesn't know how to present it. What he calls argument is mere assertion, and he expects because of the prejudice of the people that they will accept anything he will say as against what scriptures we may present in favor of the faith we represent.

His demeanor from the first was of a silly character, using such expressions as, "I will spank 'em"; "I will skin 'em"; "I know that it hurts, but you will have to take your medicine"; "I have nothing to do but to look nice and sweet and pretty"; which he came over three or four times. "If he is not careful I will tell all that he believes"; "Abominable stuff"; "Mormon howl"; "Mules in Missouri as old as his church"; "Mormon hash fried and dried"; "Universalism"; "Russellism"; "Adventism," etc., etc., etc. Then he would take a position and when its absurdity was shown he would deny that he took such a position, and say, "Why will he thus misrepresent me?" "Don't he know that I would expose him," and then he would make statements, and when the exact statement was repeated he would deny making it. He said several times when quoting from David Whitmer's Address that he was quoting from "one of them," "one of their church," and when I referred to it he denied saying it, but I showed from three statements in one speech that he did say it, and then he would say nothing more about it.

His methods of conducting himself and his uncouth and ridiculous expressions drove the people from the debate till on the last night there were only about thirty present, and they of his people and the Saints.

He was called down repeatedly by the chairman, Mr. J. A. Ballard, a man who has had much to do with the law as justice of the peace, and a very fair man, and of good judgment. At the close of the second proposition I gave notice publicly that if he continued his present dishonorable methods I should call the debate off, for I would not stoop to follow him in his disreputable methods. The board of moderators then took the matter under advisement and after deliberating a half hour decided that he must cease making personal attacks on me, as he had repeatedly done, and of using the term Mormons as a term applied to us as a people, and by insinuating arguments make it appear that we believe in stealing, in the Danite band, and in polygamy. We started upon the third proposition with that understanding, but he had continued but a short time till the same tactics were pursued, and on Friday night he read a quotation made by the Savior while here instructing the people in reference to the promises of God made to Israel through Micah, in which it is said that if the Gentiles did not repent Israel would be among them as a lion among sheep, and then made the application that it was known what that meant, that all believers in the Book of Mormon would be like a lion among sheep, and then with all the vehemence he could exert warned the people as to what they might expect, and what their friends in Missouri might expect, advising them to warn their friends, if they had any in Missouri, to flee out of the State for the reason that they did not know when Independence in all her strength might rise up. He was called to a point of order, and took back what he had said about Independence, but it was said, and what he had said insinuating that the Saints would destroy life, was not taken back. I said nothing, but decided that I would be truthful to my notice, and so prepared my summary on the third proposition, and I declared the debate off, in the following language:

"When I meet an infidel I desire to meet one who honestly professes to be one.

"When I meet a Brighamite I wish to meet a person who professes to be one.

"When I meet a man who professes to be a representative of Jesus the Christ I desire to meet one who does not profess to believe the Bible and in his ways deny it.

"When I debate upon that which is sacred, and so important as that which relates to the salvation of souls, or that which others esteem to be sacred, I will treat the subject with respect, and the person representing it as though he was honest,—not a thief or polygamist, or murderer,—and one who has as good right to his belief as I have, and I expect them to treat me the same, and this treatment has not been accorded me, only so far as Mr. Roberts has been compelled to accord it.

"By reason of the respect I have for Jesus Christ whom I serve; in respect to honorable manhood; in respect to the members of the church here represented; in respect to my brethren and sisters whom I represent as they are in the Lord; in respect to the neighborhood and the city of Ottumwa in which this debate is being held; in respect to the rules of honorable debate so often violated by my opponent,—he giving as his excuse for this condition that the rules could not be observed inviolate; and in respect to the good judgment of those within and without the church of which I am a member who have expressed themselves disgusted with the deportment beheld in this debate by my opponent, some of them having thus expressed themselves being members of the church of which Mr. Roberts is a representative;

"I hereby declare, so far as I am connected with it, that the debate is closed, the contract entered into having been so grossly violated by my opponent that I feel I am freed from further obligation to said contract."

The course I pursued was indorsed by my moderator, the Saints without an exception, the chairman, and all those not members of the church Mr. Roberts represented, and even by some of them, who after coming one or two nights would not return, giving as their reason that they were disgusted with Mr. Roberts' manner of conducting a religious debate and of treating sacred subjects.

The chairman said that it was the only honorable thing left to do, as it was a disgrace to us to have to continue to follow Mr. Roberts in his dishonorable course. He further said that Mr. Roberts could not be held down with a block and tackle, and that if he gave him a chance he would tell him that he was the most unfair man in debate that he had ever seen. He further said that he had not sustained a point in the debate.

Mr. Roberts' stock in trade is assertion, ridicule, misrepresentation, Brighamite arguments, and insinuating arguments of a criminating nature. His methods are too low for one who has respect for the name of Christ, and the intelligent among the people to follow. The result of such proceedings is to lessen respect for that which claims to be sacred, and by being associated with Mr. Roberts as a disputant we are credited with being an accessory in permitting such work being done in the name of the Christ. I am convinced that Mr. Roberts has pursued such a course so long, and is developing along the line of such dishonorable methods, that he himself does not realize to what extent he is carrying it. He is so egotistic, bombastic, and full of ridicule and sarcasm, that he can not treat an opponent with even gentlemanly respect, saying nothing about Christ-like demeanor.

His ignorance, either real or professed, at times is painful, and it is evident that through his opposition to the truth and his great desire to be in debate, it is having a debasing effect on him. His silly demeanor before the public is painful to behold by the more refined and intelligent, and causes those who are of a devoted disposition to look with disrespect upon those who profess to bear the name of Christ.

Brother Berve and I have concluded that the public should be apprised of the character of Mr. Roberts as a debater, and of his deportment. He has but little influence. What influence he has is of such a character as to keep the more intelligent and spiritual minded away from a debate that anyone may hold with him. I heard from several in the city of Ottumwa that the reason they did not come to this debate, was because they knew Roberts and the methods he pursues, and they did not wish to hear him, that his methods were below their respect.

I am sorry that anyone will willingly place themselves at so low a plane intellectually and religiously as Mr. Roberts does, but I have written this to let all know the facts in the case, that they may know how to govern themselves in the future.

The Saints of Ottumwa are coming into a better spiritual condition, and trust that they may fully enjoy the blessings that God has in store for them. They have a commodious place to worship, and there are some very spiritual and devoted Saints there, judging from what I have seen. Though there are but a few of them, yet there was a cheerfulness in the manner in which they met the expense of the debate.

I am under lasting obligations for the help received from my moderator, Elder Amos Berve, and for the evidence that God hears and answers in a marvelous way the prayers of his people. I was continually blessed with the presence and guiding influence of the Holy Spirit, and the abuse that Roberts used towards me did not disturb me, but when he asserted that which gave all to understand that we believed in stealing, polygamy, and murder, then I was moved to give Mr. Roberts a warning, and it was in a measure needed, but he was so imbued with such a spirit of misrepresentation and desirous of inflicting upon others that which would hurt their feelings, that he could not, so he said, keep from that way of doing, saying, "I know it hurts, but you will have to take your medicine."

The Saints in this district are preparing for the reunion to begin next Friday at Fraser, Iowa. The Saints of the city are having a Sunday school picnic to-day, and to take a little rest I shall associate with the children.

With love towards all and with malice towards none, but that truth may be held sacred, I pen the above.

J. F. MINTUN.

THE FORTHCOMING ARTICLE ON SOCIALISM.

Some of our Socialist friends have felt that articles appearing in the SAINTS' HERALD in the past have misrepresented Socialism. In order to be perfectly fair and give these brethren representation, the editors announced some time ago that they would publish the best article on Socialism, from Socialist standpoint, received before June 1. A number of articles were received and were submitted to three disinterested judges, not resident in Lamoni, all of whom are students of Socialism and one of whom is an active Socialist. The manuscripts were numbered and the names of the authors were not made known to the judges. The judges gave first place to article No. 3, written by Victor W. Gunsolley. His article will appear in the next number of the HERALD.

UNITED ORDER OF ENOCH.

It will be of interest to readers of the HERALD to know that the work of the United Order of Enoch is progressing steadily though perhaps slowly. In fact, in view of the nature of the work which the Order will eventually be compelled to undertake it is the better part of wisdom that the Order should move slowly in its developments. Opinions as to the functions of the Order, particularly as to the details of its work, differ widely, as is readily apparent in listening to the comments and criticisms which have been and are being passed upon the Order as at present instituted; but we have been told that in a multitude of council there is wisdom, and perhaps safety lies not so much in following the opinions and dictations of one or two men, as in awaiting for the impulse which must necessarily come from weight of unanimous opinion, maturely ripened.

In negotiating for the tract of land to the south of Independence, known as the Edgefield Addition, the Order has done so with the view to disposing of it in tracts such as are suitable for and desired by persons looking for home spots. The ground is being platted and properly arranged for such home sites, and we are hopeful that it will soon be available for such.

It will be of further interest to those who are watching the developments of the Order to know that headquarters has been secured at 102 North River boulevard, Independence, Missouri, which will be fitted up for suitable office, and for a place where visiting members of the Order can be properly cared for.

At a meeting of the trustees of the Order, held August 6, at Independence, Missouri, sixteen names were voted upon for admission to the Order, and sixteen additional names were presented to be voted upon at the next regular meeting. The addition of the new members to the charter members makes a membership of forty-one, which will undoubtedly be rapidly increased.

Contributions to the Order continue to come in in small quantities and we are pleased to receipt for such amounts as interested friends feel like donating, to get the work well started. As the work of the Order develops and opens before us, the whole duty of those affiliated with the Order will become more and more apparent, and from the present outlook the members will be ready to do their full duty.

With feelings of gratitude that work of a momentous character is being continually undertaken by the church at large, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

FREDERICK M. SMITH,

Secretary of the Order.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

We want to call the attention of our readers to the advisability of addressing their mail properly. This week we are publishing notices that were delayed several days in getting to the printers because parties addressed their letters to individuals instead of to the editors, which necessitated forwarding back to the office after having been forwarded from this office to the editor who had been addressed personally. We assume no responsibility for delay when mail is addressed personally in such a way that it can not be ascertained that it is intended for publication. Letters so sent may be forwarded several hundred miles to reach the parties for whom they are apparently intended, only to be returned, as have several this month, to our office. Those who are wise will remember this injunction.

Under date of July 22, Apostle John W. Rushton writes that he will sail from Liverpool, October 11, on the steamship Ivernia. The Saints in America will welcome him to his new field of labor.

We are in receipt of a copy of Holly Leaves, "published monthly in the interest of the second branch Reorganized Church," Kansas City, Missouri, J. W. Nanny, editor. This number contains a history of the destruction and reorganization of the church, and departments devoted to Religio, Sunday school, and temperance. May Holly Leaves never fall.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ELDER R. M. ELVIN.

In harmony with your kind invitation, I pen this autobiographical sketch for publication.

Far away o'er the rolling wave on the bank of the historic Clyde, in the Trongate, Glasgow, Lanarkshire, Scotland, January 6, 1846—time and place of my birth.

I was the eldest child of Robert C. B. and Martha (Baird) Elvin, and the offspring of anti-polygamous parentage, born in the faith of the restored gospel, I was never taught, neither did I imbibe the doctrine of any other religious society.

When about two weeks old I was blessed under the name of Moroni, and had not my parents and others followed the foolish fashion of shortening the name to "Ronie," I suppose that I would have passed through life with the name of him who delivered the Nephite records to Joseph Smith. When about eight years of age father bought a yoke of oxen, one of which we called "Roan." This so set me against my nickname that I entered a protest, and this was effectual, for a few months later I was permitted to make choice of a new name—the result was the world and the church has a Robert M. Elvin, and this name has been acknowledged from on high in prophecy, tongues and interpretation, and in revelation.

In the fall of 1849 father immigrated to America, via Liverpool, New Orleans, to Saint Louis, Missouri. Our trip across the Atlantic, Caribbean Sea, and the Gulf of Mexico was made in the good ship James Pendle. I was almost four at the time our journey ended. There remains on memory's wall the following:

The steward of the ship, an African servant, gave me a piece of pie. Because his hands and face were black I threw the gift in his face and exclaimed, "Dirty!"

Another incident: Father had me astride his shoulder in a nude state, and some one laughed at me. This made me ashamed, and was a painful experience, but perhaps a blessing in disguise, as I have since been carefully modest in the presence of both sexes.

One of the most pleasant and beautiful sights was a sunfish. I was held up to the ship's side by a sister, Julia Cruse, and there were many gazing at this wonder of sea life. It looked like a great round plate of shining gold in the blue water, some ten or more feet in size.

Our trip up the Mississippi River was on the steamboat Uncle Sam. I remember but one event on that trip: An English brother with a bucket on the end of a rope went to the side of the boat to draw water from the river. The momentum of the steamer and the river being in opposite directions was certainly not understood or realized by the poor fellow, and he went head first into the water. The boat slowed up and deck hands put out in yawls, but his body was not recovered.

My first remembrance of snow was the morning after our arrival at Saint Louis.

Shortly after father came to the last named place, he opened an upholstery and secondhand store on the corner of Ninth and Market streets. We lived in back rooms of the store. The old building still stands, or did in 1904, when I visited it. The only things that seemed natural were the old front doors and the step thereto.

Early one beautiful summer morning in 1850 I was carried away with the excitement and rush of people going to a big fire—the burning of a castor oil factory. The more water that was thrown upon the fire the wider it spread, as the burning oil floated on top of the water. Many buildings and steamboats went up in smoke. As the sun went down in the west I was a lost boy! Hungry and crying I knew not where to go. A big policeman took me up in his arms and asked, "What is your name, my little man?"

"Ronie," was my simple answer.

"Have you no other name?"

"No, sir."

"What is your father's name?"

"Papa."

"Has he no other name?"

"No, sir."

"Well, my little man, where do you live?"

"On the corner of Ninth and Market streets."

"All right, we will go there."

He bore me in his strong arms, and after a long walk we came to the store door. The lights were burning. As the policeman stepped in mother appeared at the partition door crying, and throwing up her hands she exclaimed, "There is my boy!" Father was away hunting the lost.

Some time later I was pushed into an old cellar in which there were about two feet of water. The top of my head was cut open on a broken bottle, and I was taken out of the water and carried home in an unconscious condition. When I came to, men were praying for me with their hands upon my head.

The elders from Utah were constantly exhorting the Saints to move on to Salt Lake, calling Saint Louis by the ugly title of "Hello kitchen," and asserting that Saints could not reside there a year or more and retain their faith. This was partially true; for hundreds and thousands departed their first love of the gospel in that city.

Late in the fall of 1852 my father disposed of his business, and stored in a warehouse to be sent up the Missouri River such goods as he expected to take to Utah the following spring, and he drove through to Kaneshville, now called Council Bluffs, with a horse team. The passengers in the wagon consisted of father, mother, and two children, a Bro. William Gibson, wife, and child. The balance of the load was the necessities for camping and living outdoors during the twenty-one days occupied on the trip. One day while eating dinner we saw many Indians on the opposite bank of the river and our departure was hasty, nor did we stop for supper, but continued our drive away into the night, and no fire was built for fear of attracting the red men. Next morning, long before daylight, we were on the move, and not till near noon did we stop for breakfast.

One day shortly after this scare mother set out afoot just after dinner, and we drove for miles, and not overtaking her we became alarmed lest the Indians had captured her. Father stopped and went back on a horse all the way to where we stopped for dinner. Mother had taken the wrong road, and not seeing us coming had turned back. She was weary and worn when found. Oh, how our little hearts rejoiced on the return of our parents in the gloaming, and our thankfulness was expressed in tears and sobs! Who can tell the hardships and fears of pioneer life but those who have passed the experience thereof?

Our traveling companions left us at Saint Joseph, and we were glad, for it lightened the load, and removed the heart trial of murmuring and complaining.

The last of the journey it was bitter cold, and the last two nights were spent respectively at "Lone Tree," now Hamburg, and "Coonville," now Glenwood, Iowa. At this last stop the principal place of business was an inn, a two-story log house with a tall pole set in front with a stuffed coon on the top thereof. The proprietor was a recusant Mormon, and his chief delight was the exchange of liquid spirits for ready cash.

Our first night in Kaneshville was spent at the hostelry of Elder James Little. His inn stood where the Methodist Broadway church now stands. The next day we located in a log hut on Hyde street.

The word polygamy first impinged upon my hearing—a Sister Piper hung herself because her husband paid too close attention to a young sister.

The goods that father left to be shipped when navigation opened were lost on the ill-fated Selinda, and this loss changed father's program, for he purchased a small farm in Davis' Camp, some three miles from Council Bluffs. One of our near neighbors was Andrew Jackson, a brother-in-law of Oliver Cowdery, and well-to-do. I remember being at Mr. Jackson's and listening to a conversation between my father and the mother of Oliver Cowdery. She was asked the question, "Why did Oliver leave the church?" The answer was, "He lost the Spirit, got into trouble, and thought he was wronged."

As to polygamy she said: "It was never heard of till after the death of the prophet, only in condemnation of those who were secretly guilty, and not until lately was there any who advocated it."

Late in the winter of 1854-55 there came to father's two missionaries, Eli B. Kelsey and Alexander Piper. They urged quite vehemently that father remove the next spring to Utah as that would be the only place for the safety of life and property, and while I sat on the knees of Piper, Kelsey took from his inside coat pocket a written document and read the revelation on the Rebellion, and their argument painted the forthcoming scenes of terror and carnage in a most fearful exaggeration. All were visibly moved with the impetuosity of their fervid testimony. Notwithstanding the long ago of the scene the appearance and emphasis of my father is still fresh upon my mind. He arose to his feet, tears in his eyes, looking and pointing heavenward he said in a strong voice: "The God who could protect me in Utah, can protect me and mine in any other part of the world."

I may add, father was never in Utah till the summer of 1887, and that was on a short visit to my uncle and family. Nevertheless, his best horse and eight head of young cattle went in the spring of 1855 and that without his consent.

In March, 1856, father moved to southeastern Nebraska and settled adjacent to a Pawnee village on the south fork of the Weeping Water. For six weeks we lived in a tent while building our log house. Father paid in advance to have ten acres of the virgin soil plowed, but the man failed to keep his contract until it was too late for us to obtain a crop that season, and the winter of 1856-57 was the most severe for years, and with deep snow on the ground for almost four months. For six weeks of that time our family had nothing to eat but deer meat, not even so much as salt did we have. It was broil, boil, fry, or roast three times a day. The first change of food was sod corn, for which a dollar a bushel was paid, and we carried it on our backs eight miles. After shelling some mother would put it into the oven and parch and then pass it through the old coffee mill. That mill, unlike the mills of the gods, did not grind exceedingly fine, but say! those little corn cakes without salt or soda, made up with water and fried in deer-fat, have never been surpassed by any cake or food of any kind that came between my grinders. Ah, want is what puts the keen edge upon relish!

We continued on the farm until late in the fall of 1860, and I wish to record for the consideration of the young people who may chance to read this, the happiest days of my life and the freest from care were spent in the log cabin on the farm, and notwithstanding the privation of the pioneer, the drudgery of the boy on the farm, the want of associates and society, nevertheless there are unalloyed pleasure and happiness in the absolute freedom of the new country; to ride a swift horse on the wide-spreading, undulating prairie in chase of the deer or wolf, to hunt or fish at will is gratifying, and in the evening gather in front of the fireplace around the family table and listen to father read from the Bible, books, or papers.

At time of last date above we moved into Nebraska City, at that time a small frontier village built up near the original Fort Kearney. For me there were new life and experiences that I will not occupy space to give in detail.

When the war of 1861 swept through our country, it set on fire the enthusiasm of the loyal citizens to "Old Glory," and our village partook of the excitement. A mass meeting was called, war speeches made and cheered. My father being an ex-British soldier was loudly called. He went to the stand and his address in behalf of the flag of his adopted country was the climax of the evening. It was the first time I heard my father talk in public, and I felt proud of him when he was the first man to write his name upon the roll for service. One hundred and eleven others followed, and father, by reason of his military training, was elected captain.

One additional war item. After a great victory by the Union army we celebrated the event one dark, rainy night with bonfire, music, speeches, and a torchlight parade. On going home about midnight, wet, tired, and hoarse, I found mother sitting by the stand sewing and weeping and I exclaimed, "Mother, crying! What are you crying for and everybody rejoicing?"

She pointed to her footstool for me to be seated, and putting her hand upon my damp and hot head said, "My boy, you little know or understand the cost of this great battle. More than ten thousand brave men lie unburied upon the battlefield, and the thousands more who are wounded and perhaps left cripples for life, and the host who are made widows, and the fatherless children. Think of all this and ask why do I cry."

That was the most effectual sermonette I ever listened to. I did think and have thought many, many times since: No great victory, no, not even in spiritual warfare, is won only at the expenditure of life and wealth—yea, without sacrifice and great loss. Well hath the inspired man said: "These are they which come up out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

During the fall of 1865 I had a prolonged siege of typhoid fever and while convalescent I did considerable reading in Cartle's Pictorial Bible.

January, 1866, Elders Wheeler Baldwin and

George M. Rush came to our town and held a few meetings at the home of William Lane. The next month an attempt was made in a more public manner. An old paint shop, centrally located, was fixed up for meetings with a dry goods box for a pulpit, and boards upon nail kegs and soap boxes for pews. Here was where I attended the first service, and I want to tell you about it. I had been singing in the Congregational choir for some time, and was well acquainted with all the young people of the town, so that bright Sunday morning when I went to that old paint shop I felt for some reason that I have never fully understood, a fear or shame come over me, and to have anyone see me go to that "Mormon meeting," oh, that was too much! This strange power or feeling was so strong that I passed by and walked clear around the block. There was a side door to the old paint shop at which I halted. I looked in every direction, and not seeing anyone, I hurriedly dodged in. That service did me no particular good so far as what was said; for my mind was not upon the preaching, but how could I get out of and away from that place without any person seeing me? I was indeed a fish out of water, or a cat in a strange garret. However, I bethought me to move out in the midst of the people and down a side street and thence up an alley and thus make my escape. Over and over again the thought came, or seemed to be whispered, I will never be caught in that crowd again, and when I left home in the evening to attend church it was with the full intention to return to my old accustomed place, but my unruly feet, contrary to my head, brought to me a surprise, for I was back at the old paint shop. No help for me! I had to enter and was interested to a degree in the sermon, noted down all the quotations, and read them before sleeping; but the one thing that made a lasting, lifelong impression was the closing hymn, and the following portion was burned into my very soul:

"We want no cowards in our band,
Who will our colors fly;
We call for valiant-hearted men,
Who're not afraid to die."

Oh, the chain of thought that verse set agog in my brain, and I just loathed myself for the cowardice of the morning; but the crisis was passed and living was a new life, and study had something of eternal value in it.

For the next two months the midnight oil was assiduously consumed while I devoted myself to the reading of all that I could possess or borrow that was exegetical of the doctrine and history of the Church of Latter Day Saints, and the thirst for knowledge and truth begotten at that period of life has never abated an iota, and with avidity have I pursued all that time and money would permit, both favorable to the church, and of the anti-Mormon sort, and I confess that much of the latter may be illustrated like the sturdy miner delving in mother earth, shoveling tons of material to obtain a single grain of gold.

April 8, 1866, the Nebraska City Branch was organized and I was made secretary thereof, and a week later, the 15th, I was the first one baptized at that place. Elder George M. Rush officiated. The work grew quite rapidly, and they still continue to "hold the fort."

Shortly after my baptism came a proposition to ordain me to the office of priest. Immediately there arose within me an opposition to this, and I asked for time to consider and to study the duties thereof. I was never so ordained.

The following dream has been helpful all through my long gospel experience, and difficulties in penury. In dream I was on the hilltop in a narrow path which led directly west, and was both straight and lonesome. At the bottom of the incline was a stretch of flat land that had been timbered, but fire had left only blackened stumps and logs 'mid tall grass and rank weeds. The sun was low in the west when I reached this level spot. To the right of the path I saw a small "comma" marble, and taking one step from the path I picked it up. As I did so I saw a striped marble some two or three steps farther away from the path, and as I picked it up I saw a beautiful china marble. After this I went, and the increased value but whetted my desire for more, and the next attraction was an agate. I was elated as I picked it up. Some fifteen feet further I spied a chunk of gold some two or three pounds in weight. As I held this in my hand contemplating its great value I realized that the sun had gone down and that it was dark and that I could not see or find the narrow path. Oh, the fear and torment of my soul as I knew that I was lost. I awoke in great trepidation of spirit.

Financial temptations coming my way have not been a few during the past forty years. One man offered to start me in business upon a loan of twenty thousand dollars at four per cent without security. On entering the active ministry I turned down a situation of eighteen hundred dollars a year, and twice since I have been in the mission field have I rejected a situation of twenty-four hundred dollars per year. The Christian Church offered me free two years in college and a pastorate at fifteen hundred dollars, while the Baptists made me the offer of three years in college and an annual salary of twelve hundred dollars. Add to these that during my five years in United States Revenue office I handled about two and a half million dollars that was all coming one way, but flowing out or going in the other direction, I have lost nearly all that I possessed in trying to be helpful to others. In all these things of trial or temptation I have never forgotten the warning of the dream.

Praise God for his loving kindness and continued mercy! I am poor in worldly things, but so thankful for the hope of eternal life. So I am willing to struggle on in weakness and poverty.

In October, 1866, through the gift of tongues and interpretation, I was called to the office of elder, and was ordained under the hands of Elders William A. Litz and R. C. Elvin. A few days after I baptized my first candidate, John Liberty Tempest, and he still abides in the faith.

Soon the spirit of the restored evangel took possession of me, and nearly every Sunday found me out somewhere in the surrounding country trying to tell the gladsome news. Wisdom is not always in evidence in a young man's zeal. In those early experiences oft I would leave home fasting, walk twelve miles, and frequently preach three times, and on Monday morning up and walk home so as to open the store a little after five o'clock. Oft of late, by reason of what I suffer physically, am I led to conclude that I was blest with more zeal than wisdom. Of the latter I do not yet possess an overstock. However, my experience has been full of confirmation to the divinity of the work.

I must pass by many interesting events for want of space. In the fall of 1867 I took my first mission away from the vicinity of home, made an overland drive to near Guilford, Missouri, in company with Elders Mark H. Forscutt, John Vanderwood, and James Thompson. We organized the first branch in the northwestern part of the State.

Next was Saint Louis with Brother Forscutt. There are many things connected with this mission that I would like to relate, but will rest satisfied with only one experience. I was at Greenwood, an environ of Alton, Illinois, and promised to preach. About time for the meeting to open there walked in over twenty young men, well dressed, and all looked quite intelligent. Immediately I made inquiry who these visitors were, and was told they were students from the Baptist college. I was scared! Turning to James Whitehead, who had charge of the service, I gasped, "I can not preach!" In his fatherly manner and soothing assurance he said: "Oh, yes, you can!" The best treaty that I was able to make was to obtain a promise that when I failed he would finish the sermon.

When the meeting was opened and I was presented, I stood up, my heart in my mouth and going pit-a-pat, equal to any young man when he pops the question. I trembled like a reed, and my knees knocked together, and in a faltering voice I read the text: "One Lord, one faith, one baptism." Two of the brethren said that I held my Bible upside down while reading, and I have never had courage to deny their assertion, neither do I recall aught that I said to that audience, for it seemed that by some power I was lifted from the floor and stood in the air, and at the end of forty minutes I noticed that nearly all in the room were using their handkerchiefs.

I left Saint Louis about the middle of March and went to Wayne County, Illinois. A circumstance there took place that I will relate: Bro. Mark H. Forscutt had been greatly troubled upon the question: "Was there any priesthood authority in the Reorganized Church that did not come through or from the Utah Mormon Church?" Now when he and I reached the home of Bro. George H. Hilliard; there we found a young sister in fearful agony. It took three or four strong men to hold her in bed. On our arrival a request for administration was made and Uncle Mark was in charge and he found an opportunity to test the mooted question of authority. Bro. Thomas P. Green, who was ordained a high priest prior to 1844, was present, and he had never associated with any faction of the church, and myself who was ordained under the hands of men who received their ordination prior to 1844. The following was the order of the administration: Brother Forscutt offered prayer, after which I anointed, and Brother Green confirmed, or pronounced the blessing and rebuked the power that afflicted the distressed sister. She immediately became calm and in a few minutes arose and dressed herself and assisted in getting dinner ready for the large company who were there gathered, and the next day she rode several miles in a lumber wagon.

While in that region I witnessed the most vivid demonstration of the Utopian idea of the Saints, as taught in the Doctrine and Covenants:

And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them.

I say unto you, Be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine.

Every man equal according to their families, according to their circumstances and their wants and needs.

Behold, this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, even as I, the Lord, have appointed, or shall hereafter appoint unto any man. And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God; yea, neither the bishop, neither the agent who keepeth the Lord's storehouse; neither he who is appointed in a stewardship over temporal things, he who is appointed to administer spiritual things, the same is worthy of his hire, even as those who are appointed to a stewardship, to administer in temporal things; yea, even more abundantly which abundance is multiplied unto them through the manifestations of the Spirit; nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld.

The anxious, earnest, waiting heart of every true Saint asks, When shall these things be? and echo answers, When? The nearest my soul has ever experienced that much desired, prayed for, dreamed of, and God promised equality, was during my short sojourn in Wayne County, Illinois. All seemed to be one, and upon equal social standing; the well-to-do farmer and his hired help, the worthy matron in her comfortable home, with her maid-servant all dressed alike. The men in homespun jeans and the women in linsey. It was the prettiest sight of my life, so far as dressing is concerned, and the only fellow who felt out of place and uncomfortable was I. And do you wonder why? Those people in referring to Brother Mark and myself called us, "Those little fellows in store clothes." For more than forty years it has been the constant, earnest desire of my soul to see the God appointed equality obtain, and I have not entirely lost hope, or concluded that equality in temporal affairs is an empty, chimerical fantasy; but as I see it and understand conditions of the present time, we have drifted and are drifting farther and farther away from the goal of perfection that might obtain among Saints in the earth life.

I attended, and for the first time, the General Conference of 1868 at Plano, Illinois, and was the youngest ordained minister present. While my name does not appear, I served as assistant secretary, and two resolutions were considered at that conference that have never been published so far as I know. I give them from memory, namely: "That George A. Blakeslee be ordained an apostle, because his father held that office." "That no person shall be ordained to the office of an apostle, but by revelation." The first was defeated and the second adopted.

There were present two Indians and their wives, Daniel Covert, and Moses James. The next day after the close of conference they and others were in the Herald Office. Bro. John H. Lake sat upon a counter, his arm resting upon a pile of Books of Mormon. One of these Lamanite brethren sat by his side, the other stood before him, with several of us listening as he talked to the Indians relative to their origin, and the purposes and promises of God concerning them. Of a sudden Brother Lake jumped to the floor, Book of Mormon in hand, and began talking to those Indians in their own tongue, and continued to do so for some twenty minutes or more, explaining the history of their forefathers, and God's will and design relative to them in the latter ages. Those men wept with joy under the power of the Spirit, until the floor was damp with tears where they stood, and I bear record that it was the Spirit of God by which the brother spoke.

My first public discussion was in the winter of 1869 with Edmund Barnes, a recusant member of the church, upon the issue of who was the true successor of Joseph Smith the Martyr. He put up a defense for Amasa Lyman, and I for Joseph Smith, the eldest son of the martyred prophet. Long years ago both Mr. Barnes and his championed candidate have gone to their reward.

The principal field of my labor for several years was southeastern Nebraska and southwestern Iowa, and they were the most fruitful in baptisms of any field in which I have labored.

February 13, 1870, Carterville, near Council Bluffs, Iowa, was time and place of my marriage to Emeline A. Hartwell. We were blessed with four sons and two daughters. Three boys and wife are sweetly resting in paradise and thence our weary feet are tending.

At the semiannual conference of 1879, upon the resignation of Elijah Banta, president of the First Quorum of Elders, I was chosen to fill the position, and was ordained under the hands of Elders William H. Kelley and R. J. Anthony. With a goodly degree of pleasure and satisfaction did I fill this office for eleven and one half years, and I still possess a warm feeling for that faithful quorum.

April 6, 1880, I met in public debate Rev. David R. Dungan, of the Christian Church, at Clear Creek, Nebraska. At that time he held the chair of Greek in a college at Oskaloosa, Iowa. Each defended his church.

The night before the debate I saw in a dream a beautiful cottonwood tree standing where the Christian church stood in Clear Creek. A severe storm came from the northwest, and I saw the tree snap off about three feet from the ground, and upon examination it was found to be rotten through and through, save the bark, which seemed to be perfect and natural.

At time of discussion the Christian people owned a fine large house of worship and had a congregation of over two hundred. We had but three members in the place. Shortly after the contest they fell into disunity and the trustees sold their church to a cattleman for a barn and the organization went to pieces in confusion, and inside of a year we baptized several, and a branch of twenty-two was built up. Well do I remember the closing words to my opponent: "You have the education and I have the truth."

Mr. Dungan had and used a copy of the Holy Scriptures, and it was profusely marked and gave evidence of much use, more so than any that I have ever seen in the hands of our eldership, and he told me it was the best translation he had ever examined.

After the close of the debate, and the responsibility of defending the truth was discharged, I dismissed as best I could the whole matter from my mind, but while on my way from place of debate to Wilber, I stopped over night at Lincoln and that night I dreamed that I saw a very large and beautiful stone building, several marble steps leading up to the front door. There was a burglar proof lock on the door, such as are upon safes. In the face of this lock was an open space, about three by five inches, and in this open space was seen an Inspired Translation, and to everyone who was entitled to enter the house was granted a key. There came a man who did not have a key, but he had a very sharp knife and he undertook to cut the book to pieces and take it out of the lock; for when this would be accomplished any and everyone could go in and out at pleasure. While the keen edge of the knife passed clear through the book it was strange to me that the incision would close as if the book had been water, and the effort to remove the book was in vain. This dream coming after the debate, was to me comforting and satisfying.

Had the ancient prophet written a dissertation in advocacy of the restored gospel, he could not have penned a more truthful statement than,

No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord.

Not with the slightest wish to appear superior to any of my associates in the ministry, nor yet in an arrogant manner, or to pose as an egotistical fellow, do I claim my humble portion of the promised "heritage," and to the praise and glory of God never has he disappointed me while in the forefront of the forensic field. While upon the topic of public discussion I will finish what I have to say thereon.

January, 1883, I met Rev. N. M. Allen, of the Missionary Baptists, at the Bottom Schoolhouse, in Cass County, Nebraska, upon church propositions. During the debate he was constantly switching off in personal attack and abuse of Joseph Smith the Martyr, charging that he taught and practised the crime of polygamy. This was finally formulated into a proposition and some months later we discussed it for seven sessions at the same place as the first debate. He was driven from every position assumed, even the last and most flimsy of all, that he (Joseph Smith) was a polygamist in his heart.

The position that I occupied in that debate I have never had occasion to relinquish, or to be ashamed to affirm before any audience, namely: There is no existing proof that would stand as reputable evidence, and that would stand the test of cross-examination, and be received by an impartial court, that would convict Joseph Smith of either teaching or practicing the crime of polygamy.

December, 1887, I met Rev. M. T. Lamb of the Baptist Church, at Malad City, Idaho, for twelve nights, on the divinity of the Book of Mormon. There was deep snow and bitter cold weather. Nevertheless, the court-house was packed every night and "truth's triumphal car" came out of the furnace of contest without the "smell of fire."

August, 1898, I met Elder Joab Paget, of the Christian Church, at Pollock, Missouri, on church propositions. He was unkind, bitter, vile, and cruel in vituperations against the restored gospel and its ministry, both the dead and living, but the rigid law of compensation was manifested. He that is splenic will ultimately discover that his output will recoil as a boomerang to the destruction of his stronghold.

September, 1901, I met Will E. Ellmore, of the Christian Church, at Davis City, Iowa, on the usual church propositions. He was the most gentlemanly opponent I have ever debated with. By times I almost felt sorry for the poor fellow in his vain attempt to defend a man made plan of salvation.

My last public debate was with Elder Ira C. Moore, otherwise known as "I. C.," of the Helper, a radical Disciple evangelist. We met on Thanksgiving, 1903, at Washburn, West Virginia, and there were fourteen sessions; but I am creditably informed that in that Christian house of worship there has never been a religious service since.

At the General Conference of 1888 the Quorum of High Priests recommended thirteen elders for ordination to their body. I was one of those named. Final action was had two years later when God directed

Those who were presented by the high priests for ordination to their number, if approved by the council of high priests now present and the conference, may be ordained, and from their number may be selected by a committee of conference . . . a sufficient number to fill the vacancies now existing in the high council.

In harmony with the above I was ordained a high priest under the hands of Elders John H. Lake and Charles Derry, and the next day I was ordained a member of the High Council under the hands of Presidents William W. Blair and Joseph Smith, also was chosen as the recording secretary of the council.

My missionary efforts have been in Nebraska, Iowa, Missouri, Illinois, Kansas, Utah, Idaho, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and West Virginia respectively, and in most of these God hath given me souls for my hire as a seal of approval. The Rocky Mountain Mission was the most sterile and unprolific in gospel fruitage,

Opposition from the world has never cooled or daunted my ardent desire and zeal for the truth of heaven as restored by the hand of an angel, but rather has always proved an incentive to my growing zest to spread as far and wide as possible the gladsome news whereby eternal life can be obtained, and in God and his promises I have never been disappointed, and oh, how I wish that it were possible for me to say truthfully the same of all those who make a profession of like precious faith in the living, coming Lord who will render to every man according to his works. We may deceive our fellow-man, yea, deceive ourselves, but it will be utterly impracticable to deceive the Almighty, and none are so in jeopardy as those who in their own estimation are always right. That is not I. Thank God for the ability of understanding wherein I err, and a willingness to confess to both God and man my shortcomings.

That which brings the most unpleasant feelings to me is a disposition upon the part of some to override the privileges and prerogatives of others. Manism in the church is ever subversive of the appointments of God, and will be sure to breed distrust and confusion. The faithfulness of individual duty well performed will bring a rich and abundant harvest to the laborer of grace and peace, and prove a blessing unto many.

To conclude, not for want of material, but for want of space, I submit the following extract from my blessing, received under the hands of Patriarch Alexander H. Smith. He said in part:

I perceive, dear brother, that in the past thou hast had struggles and combats with thyself to overcome, to bring thyself into line of submission, entering in upon the duties devolving upon thee with thy whole heart. Thy surroundings and environments have been such that thou hast been compelled to make sacrifices. Sometimes it has seemed to thee as though they were uncalled for; thou couldst not understand the reason for them. Thy environments controlled, thou couldst not help thyself, and thy heart sometimes trembled with fear in consequence of that which seemed to loom up before thee. All around seemed dark, and thy heart was in despair; trouble and sorrow came upon thee, and thou hadst to bear without murmuring. Sometimes it seemed more than thou wast able to bear. Many of those things which have distressed thee have been the lack of understanding; thy brethren have not understood thee; and for the lack of an understanding of the nature and the things which thou art undergoing, sometimes thou hast felt hurt and sad. Sometimes it has been a cross for thee to bear patiently that which has been imposed upon thee. I bid thee to be comforted, however, inasmuch as thy integrity has been such that the Lord has been pleased to recognize thy work, to give thee testimonials of his approval. Do thou go right forward in the discharge of the duty that has been placed upon thee, with the understanding which he has given thee. Thou canst not use the understanding of others in thy labor. For thy ministry thou mayest use thine own. God will hold thee responsible for thine own judgment, in the use of it.

I bid thee to be humble; be meek, and yet be firm. The dark hours of the past, and the trials and the sacrifices which have been made shall all be recompensed unto thee, and thou shalt receive from the Lord the welcome plaudit, when thou shalt come into his presence, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many."

From the long years of experience there has been much more omitted than is herewith submitted, but this must suffice for the present. The sole labor of life is my service to God and my fellow-mortals. It is all that I have to live for, as I have sought to crucify every selfish and earthly wish and ambition.

Hopefully,

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

GETTING EVIDENCE AGAINST MALEFACTORS.

Is it wrong to get evidence against wrongdoers in order to put a stop to their wrongdoing? This question is a very practical one in certain communities, and enters prominently into the life and work of those engaged in certain lines of suppression of evil. A physician in one of our Southern States which has recently enacted prohibitory laws against the liquor traffic has an interesting instance of this question to present, out of his own experience. He writes:

We have a law in ——— prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, or the keeping of such in one's place of business, or even giving it away for the purpose of inducing trade. The law has been openly and continuously violated here for months, and the officials were, to say the least, indifferent. Various efforts were made at different times to stir the officials, but they gave numerous flimsy excuses, and allowed conditions to get worse. We appeal to the solicitor-general of the city court, and he said there had been a good many cases brought in his court, but that the character of the witnesses was so vulnerable, and prejudice against the law so strong, that most of them had to be dropped or abandoned. After consultation with two of the best lawyers here, who advised that we would have to get some reputable citizens to make cases against the offenders, I volunteered to get some men to do the work.

I had associated with me three men from our men's Bible class, the teacher of a woman's class in the same school, two stewards from my church, a pastor of another church (who was never put up as a witness in any of the cases, however, as he wasn't needed), and two members of another church in the factory section of the city, one of the men being superintendent of a cotton mill. These were all men whose character was above reproach. We went into the so-called "near-beer" saloons (the legislature made a grievous blunder in licensing these dens for "blind tigers"), and bought liquor in whatever quantities we desired, usually half pints, though we were assured we could get it by the jug.

We have made cases against thirty of the violators. Most of them have entered pleas, one has been tried and convicted, one is being tried as I write.

We have been severely condemned by the sympathizers with the liquor men, and also by some who stand high here.

They claim that we betrayed the confidence of the men from whom we bought the liquor, even though we did not practice any deception or tell any lies to get it, for they say the liquor men took our order for liquor on the assumption that we would not report the sale.

When a man comes to me and requests that I give him an hour of time, and pays me for services rendered, I do not consider that by so doing he pledges himself as my friend, and will not report me if I am practicing without a license or am guilty of malpractice. I would value your opinion.

A lawbreaker always acts on the assumption that he will not be reported, or found out, or convicted; but this assumption is one of the extremely uncertain risks of lawbreaking. If the assumption is one that must be honored and safeguarded by the law-abiding community, then the sooner we do away with our law courts, prisons, police protection, and the like, the better. Of course, such talk is veritable twaddle. The day has not yet come when the lawbreaker's business is to be counted as sacredly immune from the rough handling of law-enforcers. The city from which the southern physician writes ought to be proud of him and his coworkers in their running to ground of the anarchists who assumed that they were safe in the hands of American citizens.

It is interesting and important to note just here the distinction between the decoying of a man into doing wrong, and the getting of evidence against a man who is already doing wrong. The first is indefensible, and wrong in itself. The second is not only proper, but often an urgent duty.

Mr. Anthony Comstock, who as secretary of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, has devoted thirty-eight years of his life to running out of business thousands of men who were making a living by illegal practices that depended on character-wrecking for their success, long ago had to become quite clear in his own mind between the two things. The entire value of Mr. Comstock's efforts in behalf of purity and in protecting the children and young people of our land against impurity lies in his ability to secure legal-evidence: evidence on which an honest court can not but convict and punish. The securing of such evidence often means that either Mr. Comstock or a reliable deputy must prove by having had business dealings with these law-breaking dealers in obscene matters that they are regularly engaged in such traffic. Their goods must often be purchased, through the United States mails or in the usual channels of trade. Such purchasing Mr. Comstock does not hesitate to do, using methods which, without the use of lying or any other form of wrongdoing, conceal his identity and his ultimate purpose from the lawbreaker. And the highest courts of the land have declared that such securing of evidence, as Mr. Comstock has conducted it and as the southern physician conducted it, is legal and justifiable; while one's own common sense and conscience affirm the righteousness and duty of such a course.

But Mr. Comstock would not tolerate the decoying or tempting of a man into engaging in this business and then arresting him. That would make one a partner in wrongdoing, which the mere securing of evidence does not do. In the case of the decoy, a man may be led into wrongdoing when he would not otherwise have done the wrong,—as, for example, if the southern physician had persuaded a citizen not engaged in the liquor business to secure liquor for him, and had then prosecuted him. Such an act would be indefensible and intolerable. But the proper securing of evidence is simply the dealing with a man who is regularly engaged in the business of lawbreaking; and this is done, not for the purpose of tempting him, but of putting a stop to his tempting others.

Evidence getting is a vital part of the enforcing of our laws, and our country is becoming a better place to live in because there are more and more men who are willing, like this southern Christian gentleman and his friends, to expose themselves to slander and unpopularity by insisting that the laws shall be obeyed.—Sunday School Times.

THE "WHITE SLAVE" REPORT.

The presentment of the grand jury headed by John D. Rockefeller, jr., which recently ended its investigation of "white slavery" in New York City, is found somewhat puzzling by several of the newspapers printed outside the metropolis. The Pittsburg Sun, for instance, frankly admits an inability to understand the purport of this "distinctly inconsistent, contradictory, and unsatisfactory" report. This uncertainty seems to be largely caused by the jury's finding, "no evidence of the existence in the County of New York of any organization or organizations, incorporated or otherwise, engaged as such in the traffic in women for immoral purposes," or "of an organized traffic in women for immoral purposes." Yet it does appear, we read further, "that a trafficking in the bodies of women does exist and is carried on by individuals acting for their own individual benefit and that these persons are known to each other and are more or less informally associated."

In discharging the grand jury, Judge O'Sullivan called their answer to what he considered the "main question submitted," a "merited rebuke to the slanderers of the cleanest, and greatest city in the world." The Times and The Citizen in Brooklyn heartily agree with the judge, and the New York Morning Telegraph, a Tammany organ, exults in "the end of a malodorous myth." This paper continues:

It will be remembered that not long ago there appeared in a certain magazine a filthy article filthily written, asserting amid sensational and portentous innuendo the flourishing existence of the very thing that legal investigation has shown to be nothing but the hallucination of a gangrened and purulent imagination. It will also be remembered that a particularly cowardly use was made of these foul inventions in the mayoralty campaign of last autumn.

The Morning Telegraph has maintained from the first that the "white slave traffic" was a myth, and a myth that could only be believed either by those who had a material interest in holding such an opinion or by those uncommonly good, virtuous, and reformatory people who find a strange pleasure in imagining the world—and particularly their neighbors and compatriots—to be infinitely worse than they really are. And these same virtuous, reformatory people are really a little disappointed and heartsore when their worst estimate of human nature is found unjustified by facts.

On the other hand, even if vice is not "organized," The Tribune insists that the conditions actually found by the grand jury were such as no self-respecting community should tolerate. The Evening Post regrets that Judge O'Sullivan "should have been so preoccupied with the importance of confuting the slanderers of the city as to have overlooked every aspect of the grand jury's report except that which may be utilized for this purpose." There may have been exaggerations in some of the published accounts relating to this evil. But this is by no means the main question, asserts The Evening Post, and it adds:

All that the grand jury's report does, on the negative side, is to admit that there is no evidence of an organized traffic in the commercial sense of the word—a full-fledged combination, with regular division of profits or the like. But on the positive side it is evident from the grand jury's report that there must be a large number of persons more or less closely associated with each other, who carry on the infamous business; and furthermore, not a word is contained in the report to diminish the well-grounded belief that it is through the protection of district leaders and their influence in the police force that this is made possible.

After stating the case regarding the actual "organization" of the traffic, as quoted above, the report goes on to set forth some of the conditions revealed by its "careful investigation" of the subject and concludes with six recommendations, which were published as follows by the press:

First.—That no effort be spared in bringing to justice the panders. When the character and prevalence of these creatures are more fully realized and public sentiment aroused regarding them, the inadequate punishment now imposed should be increased and every legitimate means devised and put into execution to exterminate them.

Second.—That the existing laws be more rigidly enforced to safeguard the patrons of moving picture shows, and that parents and guardians exercise more careful supervision over their children in connection with their attendance upon these shows.

Third.—That vigorous efforts be made to minimize the possibility of the Raines law hotel becoming a disreputable house and that where necessary proper supervision and inspection looking toward that end be provided.

Fourth.—That the so-called massage and manicure parlors be put under the control of the health department; that a license from this department be required for their operation; that certificates be granted to operators only by some approved medical authority, and that proper measures be taken to enforce these laws.

Fifth.—That the laws relating to disreputable women in apartment and tenement houses be rigidly enforced, and that the present laws be supplemented if necessary.

Sixth.—That a commission be appointed by the mayor to make a careful study of the laws relating to and the methods of dealing with the social evil in the leading cities of this country and of Europe, with a view to devising the most effective means of minimizing the evil in this city.—Literary Digest, August 6, 1910.

The great curse of the laboring man is intemperance. It has brought more desolation to the wage earners than strikes, or war, or sickness or death. It is a more unrelenting tyrant than the grasping monopolist. It has caused little children to be hungry and cold; to grow up among evil associates, to be reared without the knowledge of God. It has broken up more homes and wrecked more lives than any other cause on the face of the earth.—Cardinal Gibbons.

REASONS FOR CHURCHGOING.

People who stay away from church "seem always prepared to make an eloquent defense of their inaction," observes a writer in The Woman's Home Companion. The challenges that they often meet prepare them with reasons good or bad, but the churchgoer is rarely asked to account for his action. Reasons inspired more or less by malice are often imputed to him, but this journal has instituted an inquiry, with results that are interesting religiously and psychologically as well. The question why is answered by one in saying: "Because it seems to me that the church bears the same relation to right living that the flag does to patriotism—it upholds an ideal." A lawyer, who says that perhaps he "should not be expected to go to church at all," replies that he also in church observance follows an "ideal." He writes:

Briefly, I go to church to worship God and because I know that I can live a higher, a broader, and a better life as the result. I am in action a busy man and my religion is rational rather than emotional. But I know that "ideals" are the lever which moves the world, that behind every ideal lies a religious inspiration, and that churchgoing is the practical support of all religion.

Another has three reasons:

1. Because of what it stands for. With all of its human imperfections the Christian church stands for the best elements of life and the highest conception of God known to mankind.

2. Because of its offspring. Nearly all the institutions and agencies interested in the uplifting of humanity are the product, directly or indirectly, of the Christian church. And most of the people who give their time, talents, and money to the support of these beneficent institutions are members of, or results of, the life and work of the church. I want to have a part in this general uplift.

3. Because of its enemies. If a man is to be judged by his enemies, why not the church? The foes of the home, marriage, and righteousness are also foes of the church. All forces which seek mankind's destruction seek the church's vilification.

A farmer's wife gives a mingling of religious and worldly reasons that bear a very human stamp:

I am the wife of a farmer living in a thinly settled section of the country. I go to church services held in a log shack, to hear sincere, if not always brilliant, sermons; to sing; to wear my best clothes, and to see other people.

One who answers the question admits that his (or her) reasons for going to church are un-Christ-like as can well be imagined. Thus:

I have been reared to think that all well-bred people go to some church. It doesn't take very much time out of your Sunday—two hours or so—and you leave an impression that you are distinctly high-toned and perfectly proper.

No cold cream to hot flesh ever produced such soothing sensations as this churchly application will to your soul.

Now Mr. Editor, that is the square, honest reason why thousands of people go to church. But if you are hunting for a "true religious uplift," you'll squirm and be afraid to publish this.

Fifteen letters were sent to fifteen young men, known to be churchgoers. These were the questions asked:

"Name? Age? Married or single? Occupation? About how many Sundays of the year do you attend church? Why do you go to church? Please confine your answer within one hundred words." Fourteen out of the fifteen replied. Seven express a desire to exert a good influence over others by the rightful observance of the Sabbath. Ten believed that church attendance is a duty, and eleven speak of church attendance as a privilege. Only four speak of the sermon, and one touches a keynote when he says, "I never go away without a blessing. It matters not who the preacher is, whether he be an eloquent or scholarly orator or not. If he be a Christian at heart, he will bring us the blessing that we need."—Literary Digest.

If We Knew.

If we knew the cares and crosses
Crowded round our neighbor's way;
If we knew the little losses,
Sorely grievous, day by day;
Would we then so often hide him
For his lack of thrift and gain,
Leaving on his hearth a shadow,
Leaving on his life a stain?

If we knew the clouds above us,
Held by gentle blessings there,
Would we turn away all trembling,
In our blind and weak despair?
Would we shrink from little shadows,
Lying on the dewy grass,
While 'tis only birds in Eden
Just in mercy flying past?

If we knew the silent story
Quivering through the heart of pain,
Would our manhood dare to doom them
Back to haunts of guilt again?
Life hath many a tangled crossing,
Joy hath many a break of woe,
And the cheek tear-stained is whitest—
This the blessed angels know.—Selected.

No Place for Boys.

(Concluded.)

Prof. Graham Taylor of Chicago Commons, who, in addition to rearing boys of his own, has had a tolerably large handful of youngsters of the neighborhood more or less under his care, and who is loved by all of them, has very decided views on the subject. His statement shows that he has studied every phase of the matter deeply and understands the truth about the situation:

HALF ORPHANED BOYS.

"American boys, both rich and poor, suffer more from too little father than from anything else. Enough mother is all that saves most of them, but it does not give any of them their full rights. Men have no right to make half orphans of their children. A child's birthright is to fatherhood as well as motherhood. The money a rich man gives or leaves to his child is no substitute for his companionship if he is the right sort of man. His boy would be a great deal better off all his life for more of his father's time even at the cost of less money.

"It is a sorry substitute for his share of fatherhood to be sent to one of those military schools which are coming to be private reformatories for rich men's sons who have become incorrigible—often because of their fathers' neglect. I know a former superintendent of an eastern state reform school who left that institution to establish a private enterprise for this avowed purpose. Some poorer men are just as negligent, but many of them are literally forced almost to abandon their fatherhood by the requirements of their industrial occupation.

EVILS THAT RESULT.

"To earn the family's bread many a worthy man must be away from home at work all the hours his boy is awake, to return only after he is asleep. The Saturday half holiday is a remedy more immediately available for this very real and desperate situation. It is hollow cant to deny it to all because some misuse their leisure. In examining for several years prisoners about to be discharged from an eastern state prison I found nearly half of them wholly or half orphaned. A prison or reformatory is too far down stream to check the flood of wild, growing boys. It should be checked, or rather rightly directed, at its fountain head in the fatherhood and motherhood of the home."

Professor Taylor's last statement, though it goes to the extreme of gravity, bears the same moral as the lighter touch placed on the argument by Mr. Shaw, a moral that stands out strongly no matter from what aspect we view the subject. Indeed there is something of vast interest and concern to all of us in the half contemptuous, half jocular snubbing and too frequent neglect that are the lot of a great proportion of the boys of America.

A CRAWLING BUTTERFLY.

These things tend to age a lad in the most cruel and crushing fashion, and to give him a mental environment of melancholy that all his freshness and natural buoyancy of spirit can not overcome. And some of us may remember the brilliant note of earnest protest that Jean Paul Richter, humorist though he was, sounded on this very phase of the subject:

"I can bear a melancholy man, but never a melancholy child. Into whatever quagmire the former sinks he may raise his eyes either to the realm of reason or that of hope. But the child sinks and perishes in the little black poison drop of the present time. Only imagine a butterfly crawling like a caterpillar with his four wings pulled off and you will feel what I mean!"

SOME OF THE OFFENSES.

There is a boy in Chicago who for the first eight years of his life fully believed his name was Jimmy Don't, this being the only way in which he ever remembered being addressed during that time by his father, mother, and sisters.

The man who can look back on his earlier days and recall no memories of gentle nagging has a great deal to be thankful for. A few hours spent among the boys of a public school the other day brought out the fact that the occasions for the employment of this nagging process are the same old fearful crimes that they were a generation ago. The indictments, prepared by the boys themselves, include:

- Lugging pets into the house.
- Eating with the fingers.
- Twiddling the thumbs.
- Asking fool questions.
- Snuffling.
- Whistling.
- Taking the clock to pieces.
- Whittling furniture.
- Muddy boots.
- Losing buttons.
- Handling percussion caps.
- Sulking.
- Loud talking.
- Fighting.
- Making faces.
- Teasing the cat.
- Breaking windows.
- Dawdling on errands.
- Walking over the garden.
- Stealing preserves.
- Going swimming.
- Cutting wire with the best scissors.
- Scaring sister.
- Sliding down the banister.
- Playing the harmonica.
- Jumping down stairs.
- Hammering boards.
- Smashing his sister's dolls.
- Sitting on the roof.
- Wiping shoes with a towel.

And there are many others, all as heinous and all helping toward the condition of perpetual hot water which is the lot of far too many of our boys. The only interest they have in their fathers is the result of the threat that comes from many mothers at regular intervals: "Wait till your dad comes home; he'll wallop you well for this." If "dad" didn't do something of this kind once in a while they would forget that he was alive.

BOYS TEACH A LESSON.

There is no one more to be envied than a good-natured man watching the workings of boys' minds or overlooking their play. Their eagerness to encompass by a quick imagination what they see but a part of, their fanciful combinations and magic inventions, creating out of ordinary circumstances and the common things which surround them strange events and little ideal worlds, form study enough for the most acute minds, and should teach us also not too officiously to regulate what we so little understand.

The still musing and deep abstraction in which they sometimes sit, affect us as a playful mockery of older heads. But these young philosophers have no foolish system, with all its pride and jargon, confusing their brains. Theirs is the natural movement of the soul, intense with new life and busy after truth, working to some purpose, though without a noise.

We are apt to deplore the tendencies of boys in a big city to loaf on street corners or join gangs that form caves under sidewalks which they fill with the proceeds of petty thefts. But no boy ever left an attractive home for adventures of this kind, and none ever yet preferred them to even a poor home, where he could find love and sympathy and a little genuine understanding of his many needs and his boisterous spirit.

"We are respectable and honest people, and yet our boy has gone astray and disgraced us." This pitiful expression almost invariably comes from the lips of parents of boys like our car barn murderers; every judge on the bench has heard it over and over again.

The sire of a destructive and wayward puppy has a better understanding of the responsibilities of fatherhood than this. He at least not only reprimands his offspring when it is necessary, but also gives him much of loving companionship and advice.—John R. Rathom.

FALL RIVER, MASSACHUSETTS, July 31, 1910.

Dear Editors: Having a few hours to spare, I want to inform the Saints of the existence and progressiveness of Fall River.

During the past week, all who could possibly attend were gathered at the annual reunion of the Eastern Mission held at Highland Lake, Massachusetts. The camp is beautifully situated in a large pine grove while on either side is a pond. To call them lakes might be to exaggerate. A large meadow suitable for baseball purposes is quite near, also a railroad track, while the depot is but a three-minute walk from the grove. The grove is centrally located and everything considered it forms an ideal spot for the annual reunion of the Saints. Last Sunday there were four baptisms, one of them being a young girl from Fall River, Miss Mildred Chestworth. As I was only privileged to attend that day, I do not know the number of those who have been baptized since. I should judge that there were between two hundred and fifty and three hundred Saints at the reunion.

This is the daily routine of the campers: At 6 o'clock in the morning all are awakened either by bell or bugle so that they may be in time for breakfast which is served at 7 a. m. At 9 o'clock all are called to prayer service, which is in session until 10.30, and from then until noon there is preaching by one of the missionaries. After dinner some have a nap while the majority go in bathing. Then the rest of the afternoon is spent by having a walk with your dearest friend, taking a short trip to some of the neighboring towns, or in participating in or watching the games.

Baseball is the favorite pastime. It is either a nine composed of the Fall River boys against the pick of the camp or the best players in camp against some of the surrounding towns. At 6 p. m. all are called to supper. From 7.30 to 8 is song service in which all are invited to join and then follows preaching until 9 o'clock. Between 9 and 10, instrumentals, solos, and the singing of hymns by the entire camp make the time swiftly pass. At 10 o'clock the signal is given to retire for the night, which is soon followed by the signal for "all lights out." Then after giving thanks to the Lord for all of his blessings and the camp has become quiet, one lies awake thinking and thinking and — then, "Come Alma, get up, there goes the bell. You'll be late for breakfast." So passes, too quickly, the happiest days of the year, and the thought comes, "If heaven is anything like reunion, I want to be there." Then we depart to our homes built up physically, but better still, strengthened spiritually and feeling that we are better able to bear the sneers and silent contempt of those who are so unfortunate as not to be able to realize that which we possess.

But I fear I have digressed somewhat from my original subject, Fall River. On the 4th of July, we hold our semi-annual picnic at a grove on the other side of Watuppa Lake, a large body of water from which Fall River obtains this necessity of life. We had an enjoyable time. Prizes were given to the winners in the races, which pleased the children greatly. In the baseball game, the single men proved to the married men that the life of a bachelor is the most desirable.

On the 29th day of June we had a most unpleasant experience. Our chapel was entered and the savings of six months for the Christmas Offering were stolen. While the thieves were caught, the sum of money recovered did not represent half of that which was stolen. As young boys were the offenders, a good deal of the money had been spent on Indian suits, etc., and consequently could not be recovered.

On Monday, July 11, 1910, was held the semiannual election of officers, and business meeting. The following are the names of the officers of the Fall River Branch for the next six months: H. W. Howlett, pastor; John F. Sheehy, first priest; John Pilling, sr., second priest; William Wiley, first appointed teacher; George Sinclair, second appointed teacher; William Baldwin, third appointed teacher; James W. Heap, first appointed deacon; Moses Sheehy, second appointed deacon; Hattie J. B. Howlett, secretary; James W. Heap, treasurer; William Baldwin, book agent; Alma M. Coombs, correspondent; John Pilling, library committeeman; John Pilling, sr., and George D. Sinclair, auditing committee; H. W. Howlett and John Pilling, sr., and Dr. John Gilbert, trustees.

Fearing that I have used too much space, I will now bring this message to a close. Personally I think it would make it more interesting if a representative of every branch would furnish the HERALD with a few gleanings of a social and spiritual nature from the lives of the Saints as a whole in their locality, at least once or twice a year. With a desire at all times to be, to the best of my ability, a faithful servant of our best friend, 82 BARRE STREET.

Your brother,

ALMA M. COOMBS.

PERRY, IOWA, July 1, 1910.

Editors Herald: I wrote you a short time ago of our progress. I want to tell you now of our success. Brother Roth came in a week ago Monday, from Des Moines, telling us that Brother Clark had asked him to fill his appointment here and do some baptizing, so long as he was coming anyway. We are sure Brother Clark gave the instructions as reported, but do not believe he told him to throw a bomb into the Holiness camp so hard that the pieces would hit the Campbellites, Methodists, Dunkards, Catholics, and others, but he did it anyway.

He began preaching a week's series of meetings. The people began coming and we had all kinds. The sermon was two hours long Sunday night and despite the fact that we were on the top floor of a building, with a skylight drawing the sweltering sun through the day, the room was cool and comfortable and no one was tired. Never did Brother Roth do better. One of the train dispatchers said it was the only real gospel sermon he ever heard. A card was handed in saying: "Why do you not get a salary if you are a worthy preacher?" Brother Roth had just finished his regular theme and was all aglow with the Spirit. He took up the card, surveyed it for a moment and began his argument. This brought much demonstration from the audience, repeated amens and groans from the Holiness people and a nodding assent from others. He baptized six and there are four more about ready. The confirmations were wonderful, no two alike.

While Brother Roth was preaching on his first theme, he declared there was no man living a perfect life. One man who calls himself a preacher of God, objected, saying he was without a sin. Brother Roth stopped a moment, looked amazed, and charged his people to bid him good-bye as he (the Holiness man) was apt to be translated before morning. After the sermon was over, the man still declared he was perfect and undertook to haul Brother Roth over the coals. He gesticulated wildly and misquoted scripture, but was completely subdued, and it is doubtful if he ever again attempts to argue with a Latter Day Saint minister.

People took special pains to make things pleasant for our brother. One old man who is extremely hard on preachers sent Brother Roth a card of honey and had his daughter invite him up to see them. He went and was well treated. The family is a fine one and I am sure Brother Roth will baptize the daughter, who is a shorthand reporter, and talented on all lines. The girl's mother (a Campbellite) is also investigating and declares she is a Latter Day Saint now in belief.

When our brother stepped into the cab to take his departure, he expressed himself as so happy. He said, "You don't know how much better we can preach when we are made to feel welcome and at home." I wondered if it could be possible that any of our own people had ever shown a disposition to the contrary, but if they have, they must meet it some day. Our ministers have a hard enough time as it is.

NELLIE M. MARTIN.

RIBSTONE, ALBERTA, July 29, 1910.

Editors Herald: With much pleasure I take my pen to inform your readers that I am once more engaged in actual mission work after about four years release from the field and I feel as if it will take some time for me to get back that old missionary spirit that I enjoyed and wonder where the responsibility will rest at that great day when accounts are rendered.

My first stop after leaving home was here at Ribstone, where I labored for nearly two weeks and made one new opening south of here. There I met our beloved Bro. and Sr. J. Daylon, whom I baptized out at Sulphur Creek, Manitoba, the spring of 1906. They were much encouraged by my visit and preaching. The Ribstone Branch is ably presided over by Elder Beckley, and is the most spiritual branch I have visited. Many of the old Saints from Gilbert Plains, Manitoba, and Sulphur Creek reside here.

From here I went to Edgerton, labored there for a while and baptized one fine man, head of a family. I joined our young missionary here, Bro. Fred Rowe, a priest, and we took our departure for Edmonton and on to Bonnacord. Brother Fred and I parted there, he going on to Cardiff and I remaining at Bonnacord for two weeks. I did not find the branch in a promising condition and outsiders were poisoned by harsh preaching and sayings. I tried to comfort and cheer the Saints and do what I could to repair the branch. I administered to their sick and left many cheered and encouraged to fight the battles of faith.

I came back to Ribstone by invitation of Elder J. R. Beckley, president of Wisconsin Branch, to help them out in their two-day meeting held on the 23d and 24th of August. Here I had the pleasure of meeting our esteemed president of the Canadian Mission, who endeared himself not only to me, but to all the Saints here, and they did wax strong in love towards him. Yea, they did esteem him, for they did not find in him the spirit of an autocrat but one full of love and justice, and by his wise council and inspiring sermons many were made glad and rejoiced and were made strong in love to God.

The Saints met for prayer service Saturday morning at 8.30, presided over by Elder Clyde Walrath. Many soul cheering testimonies and prayers were offered. At 10.30 the writer occupied, assisted by F. A. Smith. At 2.30 F. A. Smith occupied, assisted by Elder A. W. Borton. Sunday, the 24th, prayer service at 8.30, preaching at 10.30 by F. A. Smith. After this service we retired to a grove where the sisters had prepared dinner which we all enjoyed. At 1.30 there was a short Sunday school session, Apostle F. A. Smith presiding, and many questions along church work were asked which Brother Fred answered readily. At 2.30 p. m., the writer occupied, assisted by Elder Beckley. After this service many proceeded to the water where baptism was to take place, but there came such a downpour of rain the ordinance was postponed till the 27th. The evening cleared up so we returned to the schoolhouse to hear F. A. Smith. This was the climax of the two-day meeting. Brother Fred held his large audience spellbound for about two hours. His theme was, "Charity preventeth a multitude of sins." Many were heard to say, "Was not that grand?" and so it was. Surely Bro. F. A. possesses a great deal of that old prophetic fire and zeal that was with his father and grandfather. Monday, the 25th, we had to say good-bye to him, but we hope to be associated with him again both here and in eternity. May God preserve him for years to come, is our prayer.

I am still here at Ribstone doing what I can for the work. Yesterday morning I was summoned to the bedside of Sr. George Burton, who was not expected to live. Brother Beckley, a brother, and myself administered and, thank God, she recovered and is doing nicely.

Crops are quite good here and Saints are hopeful. I have collected some funds for the college and I hope to get more. I feel that I am in need of the prayers of the church that I may forget the cruel dark past and have courage to press onward and do good. With greetings of love to all, I remain,
THE LONE NEPHITE.

STONINGTON, MAINE, July 24, 1910.

Dear Herald: The comfort derived from you more than compensates one for the money. When laboring in places obscure from the gaze of the world, and seemingly exiled in a far away country, I find its pages are most gratifying. May it ever realize its purposes and be ever a solace to the weary traveler.

This letter finds me among the pines of Maine. God's handiwork in nature is evidenced upon all sides, as the picturesque shores of the many islands along the Maine coast loom up in such grand array. It is here we are made cognizant of the great power and magnitude of God's wisdom. This is the place, as most all HERALD readers know, where Brother Macgregor had such good success during last conference year.

The Stonington Branch, under the leadership of Elder (Captain) George Knowlton, seems to be in a prosperous condition. The majority of the Saints are giving their assistance in making the missionaries' work a success. Since the great ingathering here last year, business has retrogressed greatly, and many of the Saints have gone to other places to seek employment. A few others who have tasted of the word of life have fallen back into the same old carnal ruts.

The conditions, as I discern them, necessitate our instructing the flock concerning their work as members, and the weeding out of those who have not shown a disposition to live up to the light of the gospel. In times past some have been baptized contrary to the sentiment of the branch. Those objecting have been termed as narrow minded Saints. In fact the whole district has been declared as such. But permit me to say that the officers of this branch now are having trouble in putting out of the church those who have been so liberally considered.

Brother Macgregor's energetic way in getting the work before the people has won for him the praise of the Saints, who are anxiously awaiting his return. Elder U. W. Greene and my big brother Gus held a series of services in the church which I think was productive of much good. The street services held prior to those in the church attracted large and interested audiences. Gus did the solo work, as Brother Greene says that his own "base" singing would be offensive. Brother Greene did the preaching, because Gus did not know just how the "masts should be regulated" to make his destination.

I was sent to Mountainville for a few nights to see what could be accomplished there. Good audiences greeted the speaker, and last Sunday night the little chapel could only comfortably seat the people. The Little Deer Island Saints called for some one to assist them, and a few meetings were held. They are progressing rapidly with their new church which they should be proud of, as it is being built by sacrifice, and is a credit to the few enthusiastic workers residing there. During the celebration of the Fourth, twenty dollars were made selling ice cream, to defray the expenses of the pulpit. Ye missionary conducted the races and the rest of the sports, while Brother Eaton dished out the ice cream to the contestants to cool them off.

My wife is at present enjoying the association of the Stonington Saints with me. I am preaching in places that can be obtained for this purpose and am contemplating opening up in Oceanville, a little town near Stonington. Places can be obtained in all of these little towns, if you have money enough to rent halls, but you have to get out when the people want a dance. There are schoolhouses galore around here, but the trustees say they don't want to let them for religious purposes, saying, "We have not let them to other religious denominations, hence we don't wish to extend to you this privilege." They don't let them to other denominations, because others can get the church buildings. This is certainly a poor excuse; but it necessitates the missionary, who has not an abundance of money, preaching on the streets or holding cottage meetings. Such is the predicament we are in. As we have become hardened to these experiences we do not bemoan our lot, but are willing to put forth our best in accomplishing the designs of God.

As I am a new man in this district, I trust that the Saints who live here in this district may direct me or inform me concerning places where good can be accomplished. Address communications to Stonington, Maine, Route 1.

Your brother,
H. ARTHUR KOEHLER.

TWIN LAKES, CALIFORNIA, July 31, 1910.

Editors Herald: I was baptized in 1895 and have enjoyed the Spirit and comfort ever since, except a few times. Our heavenly Father is so good he would forgive me. I have never lived where there was a branch of the church. I like to sing poetry. I liked Bro. Elbert A. Smith's poetry in Autumn Leaves, "Hill Cumorah." When I first sang those words I was so overjoyed I would say, "God bless Brother Elbert." I am all alone. My wife died three years ago last May.

SELDEN, KANSAS, August 6, 1910.

Dear Herald: I wish, through your columns, to say to the Saints and friends in Northwestern Kansas District that I would like to hear from any desiring preaching. The way seems to be greatly hedged up and we need the cooperation of the Saints. The three conference appointees have been laboring in the district trying to get openings, but have found it up-hill work. If you know of a place in your locality where preaching can be done, let us hear from you. We must keep always and everlastingly at it if we wish to accomplish desirable results. If in your locality preaching has been done and things do not look prosperous, keep pounding away, educating until the minds of the people can grasp our teachings.

I have been preaching this week at this place, in the district tent, ably assisted and seconded by my brother who resides on a farm here. The audiences have ranged from ten to thirty. The attention is good. We expect to continue here until after the 13th when we go with the tent to our home town to engage in reunion. We are hopeful of having Elder Columbus Scott with us, also the missionaries of the district. After reunion we will be ready to attend to calls for preaching.

There has been a severe drought over the western part of the district, which contributes to the hindrance of the work. Will the Saints please remember the tithing law and their duties thereto? The writer is agent for the district. Will any Saints who may have an offering to send for expenses of tent work or reunion, please send it to the undersigned at my home, Alexander, Kansas, marked "conference matter"? I am hopeful for the triumph of the kingdom and the increase of righteousness among careful, honest souls.

In bonds,
JOHN A. TEETERS.

Downs, Kansas, August 5, 1910.

Editors Herald: We have a small branch here, but are quite scattered. We don't have meeting very often. Bro. S. H. Fields preached in our house twice in May. He is a good speaker. Bro. S. J. Madden preached one good sermon for us in June. We are glad to hear a good sermon. All our meetings are held in our house. We have no church building in the branch. My health has been very poor lately and I ask all the Saints to pray for me that if it is the Lord's will, I may have better health and that I may live faithful and try to do the will of my heavenly Father.

Your sister in the one faith,
MYRTLE COOP.

HAMILTON, MISSOURI.

Dear Herald: We never see anything from this part of the country, so I thought a few lines to your columns would not be out of the way, if it does not find its way to the wastebasket. I and family left Minnesota the 13th of last November and started for Hamilton, Missouri. Four miles south of town we found a little band of faithful workers who made us welcome not by empty words, but in spirit and true deeds. All that could be done to make us feel at home, was done. Bro. Coleman Snider is our branch president. He is a good Saint and a wise leader.

God has certainly set him apart to build up a large branch here. It is a fine looking and good farming country. We have a new church, all paid for and in good repair. The membership is about fifty. We all try to do the best we can, to come up higher. We have Sunday school and preaching every Sunday and prayer meeting Wednesday nights. Sometimes an elder drops in and as a rule gives us from two to six sermons. It is heavenly food to live in a place like this and among such good, kind people. I thank God and fully appreciate his loving-kindness in permitting us to come back to this land, most precious of all lands.

Dear Saints, how thankful we ought to be to our heavenly Father for the plan of salvation and the blessings it brings to his faithful followers. I know this work is of God, and God has spoken to us time and again in different ages of the world to be good and faithful so he can bless us. We must not have any other God but him. Let us see to it that we do not love some one or something else better than him; if we do God is under no obligation to us and he can not bless us. We do like this country well, have never been homesick, but we remember our folks and the dear Saints of Minnesota. I say to one and all of you that it was a great blessing to me and family to come back to this land. May the day soon come when some of you will come this way. Hoping the Lord will keep you all from harm and danger, is our wish.

Bro. John Davis is our deacon, a good and faithful brother is he. We are very sorry to lose him and his good companion and the dear children. Brother Davis has made up his mind to leave us this fall. Chances are he will locate in Independence. There are some small and some good sized farms for sale and some close to the church. If anyone is moved to come this way, address Bro. Coleman Snider, Hamilton, Missouri. Love to all the Saints.

Your brother,
O. A. ERICKSON.

PENSACOLA, FLORIDA.

Dear Editor: I take pleasure in writing to the HERALD because I feel it is my duty to do all I can for God this morning. I am behind the bars of the county jail of Escambia and I ask the prayers of all the true Saints, because I am in trouble and praying to God that I may overcome.

MALCOLM BOOKER.

GILROY, CALIFORNIA, August 4, 1910.

Dear Herald Readers: I see by reading my church papers that I am not the only one who has been receiving tracts from the Northern States Mission of the Utah church. When I received the first I supposed they had been sent through Elders Gaylor and Decker whom I had entertained previously, but I find now that they have been sent broadcast among the Saints everywhere. I hope no one has been misled by their deceptions, and if they have read the two tracts, "Duplicity exposed," by Heman C. Smith, and "All Brighamite roads lead to polygamy," by E. A. Smith, and all that has been written concerning them in our church papers, they certainly have no reason to fear.

It is more than a year ago that I had the privilege of entertaining the two elders mentioned. They came to the door about the middle of the afternoon saying they were Latter Day Saint elders traveling without purse or scrip and went two by two through the country telling their mission and inviting to attend their meetings for two evenings on the streets of Gilroy and at a hall Sunday afternoon, at which time there would be sixteen speakers. Said I, "You are elders of the Utah church, are you not?" They said, "Yes." I said, "Well, I am a Latter Day Saint, but I have no use for polygamy and its kindred evils."

However, I invited them in and we talked on our differences, and after saying they traveled without purse or scrip they said that while in the country they expected people to extend their hospitality gratis, but when they had to go to a hotel they paid their way as they couldn't expect to be kept at such places free of charge, but they tried to sell enough of their literature to meet expenses. They said they sold more Books of Mormon than anything else, for which I was glad.

Finally Elder Decker said they had better be going as they would have to find a place to stop over night, and if they had to go back to town it would be late. I told them I believed the golden rule and if they could put up with what I had to offer, they need not go any further that day, so they gladly accepted and we talked on, and during the conversation Elder Decker said: "There was a curious coincident happened at one of our conferences." (He couldn't just remember the date, but at any rate it was when Joseph Smith and his son, Fred M., of the Reorganization, were there.) "When the vote to sustain the authorities of the church was taken, Joseph voted to sustain them."

Said I, "I don't believe it."

"O yes, he did, for my grandfather — Smith [the given name has slipped my memory now], who is Hyrum Smith's son and a cousin to Joseph, took particular notice to see if Joseph raised his hand and he did."

I told him Brother Joseph wouldn't do such a thing, as he knew better than to take part where he had no right, and I didn't believe it. Said I, "I'll write and ask Brother Joseph."

Elder Taylor remarked, "Of course that is your privilege." I said, "Certainly it is."

So I did, and Brother Joseph replied, authorizing me to brand it as a lie without a shadow of a foundation.

Before they left next morning, while we were still at the breakfast table, I told them I had something to read to them if they would listen and they said they would, so I got Bro. R. C. Evans' tract, "Latter day polygamy, its origin," and read it from beginning to end to them. I feared if I gave it to them to read they wouldn't have time, at any rate both might not have taken time to read it, and I wanted both to receive the benefit. So they sat and listened till I had finished, then Elder Taylor remarked, "Yes, they fix up some nice little stories about us," and this was all the reply they made. Elder Decker then said he would like to read something to me from the Doctrine and Covenants, and I promised to listen and at the same time got my Doctrine and Covenants. He then turned to the revelation on polygamy and began to read. I told him my book didn't read that way. He said, "O well, this was given after the revelation in your book," I said, "You think, then, that God changed his mind? And my Bible says, 'I am the Lord, I change not; and if he has changed his mind he has ceased to be God and I don't care to worship such a being.'" I also told him it was only another evidence that Brigham Young was the author of the polygamous revelation. They then thought they must go, as it was late, but wished to thank me for my hospitality, and hoped I would consider I had entertained two of God's servants. I said I hoped I had entertained two honest-hearted men. They invited me to attend their services in the evening, which I did, but a drizzly rain set in, so not many lingered till they were through.

Each speaker took his turn and bore his testimony to the divinity of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon and that they were ministers of Christ traveling without purse or scrip, and closed their meeting, distributed tracts, and invited people to attend their services at the hall at 2 o'clock next day. We didn't go next day and heard afterward that there was but one gentleman aside from themselves that attended the meeting. It might have been a little different had the weather been fair, but I must say it doesn't take much of an excuse to keep people in Gilroy from church, especially if it be a Latter Day Saint or "Mormon," as they will call us.

I am glad to say I am still in the faith and trying to keep up courage, distributing literature whenever opportunity offers, hoping that some day it will be the means of helping some to see the truth. I ask an interest in the prayers of all God's people in behalf of my family that we may all be more faithful in discharging our duty, that not one be lost. We have no church privileges here of our own, and anyone that has had the trial of it knows how hard it is to keep children interested along gospel lines when there is so much to draw them aside. Occasionally we go to San Jose to church, which is our nearest branch, but that is thirty-five miles away. Last year I attended the reunion at Irvington the entire time, but husband could only go on Sunday, as he was in the rush of fruit drying; and it will be the same this year. Don't know yet as either of us will be able to leave.

Trusting I have not wearied you, I beg to remain,

Your sister in Christ,

SARAH J. ROSS.

BLISSFIELD, MICHIGAN, August 8, 1910.

Editors Herald: We have at present twenty-one Saints in and around Blissfield. I myself can look back and remember the time when I was the only Saint in this part, but now we have a Sunday school of about thirty members and a Religio of about nineteen. It will be only two years next December since the first was baptized, and they have been coming in one, two, and three at a time. Our missionary, Bro. S. W. L. Scott, of Coldwater, has been here with us again and stayed this time three weeks, leaving everything in good shape, and preaching twenty-six sermons while with us. We all hated to see him go, but other business called him away, leaving here on the morning of August 1 with the intention of going to Indianapolis to organize a branch. We pray for his speedy return.

I can now begin to realize what Christ meant when he said, "The kingdom of heaven is like unto a mustard seed," but grew to be a big tree. I was here alone at one time and now we are twenty-one inside of two years, and more close to the water, and again I do realize that this Christian life is a war, not with man, but with sin and principalities in high places, and we can always know when God is doing something. Then is when the Devil will shove his cloven foot in, in some form, or probably in the way we are least expecting.

I have been in this church fifteen years and have seen quite a little of the ups and downs of the life of a Saint, but there is nothing that can daunt my faith in Christ and this latter day gospel. I feel more to be faithful than ever, for I can say with Job of old, I know that my Redeemer liveth, and if faithful to the covenant made at the water, I shall be one of the first resurrected and will reign with Christ a thousand years, at the end of which I shall see God. Asking the prayers of all of God's people for us in general here in this place, that we all may be faithful and be found worthy of the words, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter into the joys of your Lord," and my prayers are for the redemption of Zion.

Your sister and coworker with Christ,
MRS. C. B. TONG.

On Board Express Liner "Lusitania."

(Twenty-two hundred miles from New York.)

Dear Herald: This is the ninth trip for me across the Atlantic. Bro. E. B. Morgan, missionary to Wales, wife, and self sailed from New York at 9 a. m., the 20th inst. It was a great as well as a grand sight when the largest ship in all the world pulled out from the dock with her cargo of thousands of human beings on board. It was also a pathetic sight to see the hundreds of friends who had gathered on the piers to bid farewell to their friends and loved ones. Handkerchiefs and hats were waving in the air until the monster vessel disappeared from view. The sun was shining brightly and the water seemed as smooth as glass as the gallant ship sailed majestically up East River, and out upon the briny deep. It was with sadness that we gazed upon the Statue of Liberty as we passed close by, for my mind wandered back home. I could not help but feel that I would experience a happier feeling in my soul when I will be permitted to gaze upon the same statue when homeward bound. However, I felt happy in the thought that he who had called me to go to a distant land to labor in the interest of his cause would care for my loved ones and protect the writer from every danger to which he may be exposed. It is good to trust in one whose promises are true and faithful and who is able to save to the uttermost.

We have experienced a very pleasant voyage so far, only a few have been made to pay tribute to Neptune. We have encountered some rough seas, but our gallant ship plows right along and maintains its equilibrium amid the billows. Our fellow-travelers are a good natured lot of people, very sociable and courteous to each other, notwithstanding there is a conglomerated mass of nationalities. There is also a great variety of professional men aboard, viz, doctors, clergymen, nuns, merchants, actors and actresses, saloon keepers and gamblers. An orchestra makes fine music twice daily to entertain the passengers, which is highly appreciated by the people.

We have with us a number of aged people. One old Welsh lady over eighty-seven years old is going back to visit her native land. How is that for the Welsh?

We anticipate landing at Liverpool early Tuesday morning. I herewith append a few items which I believe will be read with some degree of interest, especially by those who are not acquainted with ocean life, relative to the magnificent steamer Lusitania and her sister ship Mauritania. Both are express turbine steamers. They are 790 feet long, 88 feet wide. If stood on end would tower more than 100 feet over the highest tenement building in the world, the Singer Building. The depth to boat deck is 80 feet. The keel is 37 feet below the surface when the ship is fully loaded, displacing 45,000 tons of water. The horse power is 70,000, requiring 32 engineers. One hundred and seventy-five firemen are necessary to keep up steam. The height to the top of the funnel is 155 feet and to the masthead 216 feet. Her speed is 26 knots an hour. She carries 550 first-class passengers, 500 second-class passengers, and 1,300 steerage, and a crew of 900 persons. Those steamers are veritable palaces as to equipment, beauty, and appointments. It consumes 1,000 tons of coal a day.

Monday, July 25. Weather fine overhead, but the sea is awfully rough, and has been all night, and the ship is rocking terribly. We have just seen land on the Irish shores and the people are happy. We will not land until to-morrow at 8 a. m. Mission conference convenes Saturday, the 30th inst. I go to Manchester, thence to Birmingham. With love to you and HERALD force.

Your brother in the one faith,
GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

Tennessee and Kentucky Reunion.

The reunion of the Tennessee and Kentucky districts which was held near Farmington, Kentucky, has just closed. The writer, J. R. McClain, and J. W. Peterson were chosen to preside. The Saints did all they could to make everybody feel at home, which was a great help in making the meeting a success.

The speakers during the reunion were G. H. Hilliard, J. W. Peterson, J. R. McClain, C. L. Snow, J. A. Dowker, and the writer. All were blessed in preaching the word of God while the people were blessed in hearing. Brother Hilliard presented the financial law in regard to tithes and offerings and also the duties of Saints in regard to the Word of Wisdom in a very plain and comprehensible manner, and I believe that some will be greatly profited by what they heard by reason of obedience to the advice given.

The light of Zion will shine in every locality where Saints yield a faithful obedience to the law. We have on the wedding garment as long as we are keeping the law of God. As long as we are obedient we have oil in our vessels and we are accounted among the number as wise virgins. It has been truly stated by the wise man of old that the path of the just is as the shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. I pray God to bless Zion's children everywhere and help them to appreciate and to improve upon the grand opportunities which are theirs. The eye of God is upon us in all of our work and all should be very humble and prayerful in order that they may not offend him in the least.

Bro. J. W. Peterson and the writer have been associated together in gospel work the greater part of the time since we came to this field. He has now gone to open up the work in a new place, while Bro. J. R. McClain and I will labor here for a time, after which Brother Peterson and I will go to Southern Alabama to attend a reunion which will begin at McKenzie, August 12.

I have a great desire to continue on in the good fight until the victory is won and be worthy to receive the crown of eternal life when Christ shall come to reward his faithful Saints.

F. M. SLOVER.

Corrections.

In my autobiography in HERALD for August 3, 1910, page 753, first column, tenth line from the top, "our young mind and soul," should be, "our young minds and souls," as it included my intimate associates, as well as myself. Same page and also page 754, the name "Benjamin H. Ballome" should be "Benjamin H. Ballowe." (Bal-loo.) He was an uncle to W. H. and E. L. Kelley. Page 756, second line of first column from top, "a chosen walk with God," should read, "a closer walk with God." Page 757, seventeenth line from top of second column, "and a man will not have to wait until he gets a reward for the work he does for the Lord either," should read, "and a man will not have to wait until he gets over on the other side before receiving a reward for the work he does for the Lord either."

News From Branches

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

The Cleveland Branch is holding the gospel banner aloft in the downtown section of this city Saturday nights, Brn. F. T. Haynes, Robert Miller, and F. C. Webbe assisting. We get good audiences. We have an attractive banner and give away tracts.

Elder Samuel Brown, of Ontario, was with us Sunday and occupied the stand out in Wade Park in the afternoon to a good audience. Bishop Becker, of Kirtland, occupied the previous Sunday.

We baptized three members of the Sunday school into the branch, two of whom were on the home department.

Reunion Notices.

The reunion of the Southern Nebraska District will convene September 9 to 18, 1910, in the W. M. Self grove, one mile south of the court-house on the Eleventh street road. There are good shade, good water, and other accommodations equally inviting. Good speakers and those prepared to carry on the Sunday school and Religio work will be in attendance. We will have a boarding tent and will furnish meals at a reasonable rate, which will be as near cost as we can determine. There will be a stand on the ground where provisions may be had by those who do not care to take their meals at the boarding tent. Tents will be furnished at the following rates which include freight: 10 by 12, $1.50; 12 by 14, $2; 14 by 16, $2.50. All orders must be accompanied by cash and placed in the hands of the treasurer on or before September 1, 1910. Those coming to spend but part of the time, who do not care to rent tents will be cared for at a reasonable rate, but must notify the committee on or before September 1, 1910. The above rule also applies to single persons. Come with us and spend your time enjoying a spiritual feast, the preaching of the word, the Sunday school and Religio work, and the pleasantness of the association of the Saints. Anyone desiring any further information, communicate with E. D. Briggs, or H. A. Higgins, at Nebraska City, Nebraska. E. D. Briggs, president; J. R. Jones, secretary; H. A. Higgins, treasurer; Samuel Broliar, W. E. Grubb, Robert Burgess, committee.

Those expecting to attend the reunion or ten-day meeting at Blue Rapids, Kansas, beginning August 22, and wishing to camp on the grounds, can get nice large tents for $3. We have a very beautiful camping ground. Also good pasture where horses may be had in convenient reach of grounds. Those wishing tents should write to Bro. Henry Bivens at once. Also those wishing board and lodging or board alone, please write Brother Bivens or the undersigned that full arrangements may be made to accommodate all. Prices reasonable. F. E. Taylor, president Blue Rapids Branch.

MONTHLY FINANCIAL REPORT.

The monthly reports from agents, as provided by blanks for the purpose the present year, have been of great assistance to the office in advising us of the true state of the treasury, taking into consideration every part of the country, and we are glad to know that most of the agents are prompt in forwarding these reports.

There are two things to be gained in this. First, it makes it less liable for the agent to make a mistake in making up his report at the end of the year. Second, it furnishes such account to the Bishop that it makes mistakes in his account at the end of the year with agents less liable. These, together with the fact that it is necessary that the Bishop be informed of the financial condition of the work in all parts of the country at all times should be sufficient to awaken an interest in everyone and see that the report is in hand at as early a time after the first of each month as is practicable. It only takes a few minutes to make out the report and it is the saving of hours and sometimes days of time at the end of the year to the agent in making up his report. Stakes and districts reporting for month of July up to this date are as follows:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, August 6, 1910.

AGENT'S NOTICES.

To the Saints of Seattle and British Columbia District; Greeting: I wish to make an appeal to you in behalf of our funds. They are exhausted and the elders' families must be taken care of if the elders are to remain in their fields of labor. So let us each make some effort and sacrifice something for the Master's cause, for we read in Psalm 50:5: "Gather my saints unto me, those who have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." So if we wish to be among his children we must sacrifice something for this work. It is a sacrifice on the part of the elders and their families when they leave home and loved ones to declare this gospel to the world, so let us try and do our part in sustaining them with our means, for we are all workers together with God for the advancement of the gospel cause and while we are at home enjoying the comforts of life let us not forget those whom we should sustain with our tithes, offerings, and consecra-tions, that they may also enjoy some of the comforts. The Lord has said in Doctrine and Covenants 64:5: "Behold now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man) and verily it is a day of sacrifice and a day of tithing for my people, for he that is tithed shall not be burned at his coming." I am unable to supply those whom the Bishop has placed upon this district for support. Hoping you will each try to do your best and not forgetting that you have done well in the past, let us each continue to improve and strive to fulfill the whole gospel law that in the end we may receive that welcome plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter into the joys of thy Lord," is my prayer. Address all remittances to Frank Holmes, Roslyn, Washington, Lock Box 78.

Editors Herald and Saints of Northern Nebraska District: A few words in regard to tithes and offerings from this district will not be amiss, I hope. I have not spoken to you through the paper yet, but will try to reach as many as I can through the HERALD, hoping you will give ear to what is said, for I believe you all know your duty. You have been instructed through preaching and the papers, so there would be a waste of space for me to tell you what to do. Just do what you know how to do and God will bless you. The work needs you and you need it. I think it is us who need it the most, for God can get along without us, but we can not do without him. So let us do all we can for him and also let him do for us the things we can not do for ourselves. I am not traveling this year, but have a helper, Bro. R. O. Self, who has been appointed to look after the work among the scattered ones where I can not reach you; but don't hold your money for some one to come after it. Get a money order or draft and send it to me and Brother Self will receipt you wherever he finds you. Bro. M. A. Peterson is sub-agent for the Omaha Branch and Lloyd Marteeny for Decatur.

Praying that God may prosper all the Saints,

Your brother in bonds,
H. S. LYTLE.

Died.

MORGAN.—Zelda Irene Morgan, daughter of Charles and Sr. Grace Morgan, died at her home August 1, 1910, aged 2 years, 3 months, and 8 days. Little Zelda Irene was taken sick while on a visit with her mother in Des Moines, Iowa. After her return she lingered about nine days when death claimed her. Services were held at the home August 3, by Elder William B. Richards, assisted by Elder F. T. Mussell.

FEAGINS.—Bro. William Carey Feagins died suddenly of heart failure at his home near Wallowa, Oregon, July 14, 1910. He was born August 2, 1852; married Miss Lyda Isabella Ray, June 13, 1880, in Taylor County, Iowa. They were baptized in 1901. He leaves wife and six children, five of them being married, and the youngest, Joseph Henry, nearly grown. Funeral services held at the Wallowa cemetery by Elder H. E. Meryman. Address of widow, Mrs. W. C. Feagins, Box 29, R. F. D. No. 1, Wallowa, Oregon.

THOMPSON.—At Liberty Home, Lamoni, Iowa, August 1, 1910, Gustavus Thompson, born March 24, 1826, at Sanford, Maine. He was an early settler in Nebraska, and he and wife were baptized at Wilber, October 23, 1881, by Robt. M. Elvin. Funeral was at Liberty Home, the 2d, in charge of Henry A. Stebbins, and the sermon from Luke 12:48, was by Robt. M. Elvin. A good man who loved peace, of strong hope in the promises of the gospel, has gone to rest. Burial in Rosehill Cemetery.

ANDERSON.—Bro. Silas Edward Anderson died at the home of his parents at Miller, Illinois, July 31, 1910, of acute appendicitis. Deceased was born January 12, 1833, in the same neighborhood where he died. Was baptized by Elder John Midgorden, October 14, 1899. He was a young man of excellent habits and died as a Christian philosopher dies. Shortly before death he said to a dear friend: "You, too, must pass through the suffering incidental to death; I am nearly through it all. What is this life compared to the life beyond? If it is God's will for me to die, it is my will."

On Sunday morning he said to his mother, "I have seen a star in the east and will follow it soon." He called each member of the family to his bedside and bade them a tender farewell. He leaves his father and mother, one brother, and four sisters to mourn. The funeral services were held in the Saints' chapel, August 4, in charge of Elder John Midgorden. The sermon was delivered by Elder F. M. Cooper, to an audience of about five hundred people.

MATTHEWS.—John Edward Matthews was born in Birmingham, England, May 22, 1876, and died June 3, 1910, aged 24 years and 9 days. Was united in marriage to Sr. Annie Oliver, August 6, 1901; came to America in 1904. He was baptized by Bro. Ephraim Webb, in Birmingham, England, when 10 years old and was ordained to the office of priest in 1903; he died strong in the faith. He leaves to mourn a wife, father, mother, brother, and sister. Funeral service held in Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, Bro. M. H. Bond in charge; sermon by Bro. Joseph Luff. Laid to rest in Mound Grove Cemetery.

BERRY.—Little Bettie Berry, the three-year-old daughter of Bro. and Sr. L. D. Berry, died after a few days' sickness of diphtheria. She leaves father and mother, three sisters, and three brothers to mourn. The funeral was preached by J. W. Metcalf.

REDFIELD.—At Bucklin, Kansas, July 26, 1910, Bro. George Z. Redfield, born December 8, 1838, in Caldwell County, Missouri. He joined the Reorganized Church in 1864, remaining true to his faith, his fellows, and his God. He was married to Miss Imogene I. Austin, January 26, 1865, at Nauvoo, Illinois, by Pres. Joseph Smith. Of this union were born twelve children, seven of which are still living. He came to this place from Kingman County, Kansas, in the fall of 1902, and continued to live here till stricken with apoplexy at his ranch southwest of Dodge City, Kansas. He died suddenly. He leaves a wife, four sons, and three daughters. Funeral services by Elder B. J. Scott, from the M. E. church in Bucklin, the pastor and choir assisting.

American Woman Teachers.

But the great burden of American school education has been borne by American women, who in every State and Territory, and under every vicissitude of climate, weather, prosperity, and even danger, have done work which has never been adequately recognized and seldom adequately paid.

Often misunderstood and misrepresented, generally handicapped by poorly kept buildings and insufficient furniture and appliances; exposed to extreme cold and heat, and terrific storms, and sometimes to insult and danger from savage Indians, and not less dangerous outlaws and criminals, the endurance, courage and devotion to duty of the American woman teacher is one of the first elements of the prosperity of the Republic, and the intelligence, morality and patriotism of its people.

In the biographies that to-day describe the career of so many thousands of American citizens, who in war and peace have been eminent servitors of their nation, state or city, there are relatively few individual histories which do not, or should not, record the fact that the subject of the sketch began his education in the public schools. Myriads of successful merchants, manufacturers, lumberers, miners, etc., never received any further education than that conferred in the "little red schoolhouse," except that later secured in the way of business, and the general information and reading of maturer years.—Charles Winslow Hall, in the National Magazine for September.

Rev. Dr. Charles Scaddings, Episcopal Bishop of Oregon, understands journalism and knows how to make use of the newspaper as an ally in progressive work.

Addressing a national missionary organization, he said: "Newspaper men should be located as allies instead of as spies and impertinent meddlers in things which do not concern them. We can take them into comradeship in the work we are doing, and by treating them as friends, instead of enemies, secure their confidence, good will, and cooperation."

This is all so obvious that it is strange any other view could ever have obtained a foothold. And yet the numerous outbreaks of yellow pulpitering on this subject of late, go to show that Bishop Scaddings' counsel is greatly needed.

As a class newspaper men are just like other men—good, bad, and indifferent; there are black sheep and white. As a corps they are trying to do their work on the highest possible plane, just like preachers, doctors and lawyers.

Many complaints of inaccuracy and inexactness in news reports might be avoided if people who have news to give out would do it frankly and not obscure the issue by silly irrelevances like those Bishop Scaddings describes. A reporter's greatest difficulty is to get a man or woman to tell a plain story plainly, and the worst offenders in this respect are by no means found among the ignorant and inexperienced.

The only aim of the editor is to give the news, the whole news, and nothing but the news. If he fails it is due, in part, to the fact that reporters are sometimes inexperienced—like other young men, but in greatest part to the fact that few persons know how to describe a fact or relate an event intelligibly. The obscurity of many news reports as they appear in newspapers, is only the reflection of the obscurity in the minds and speech of the persons who supply the information to the reporters.—Saint Louis Post Dispatch, May 22, 1909.

The spirit of liberty is not, as multitudes imagine, a jealousy of our particular rights, but a respect for the rights of others.—Channing.

THE DUTY OF THE TEACHER.

We have received a letter from a brother of which the following is an extract:

President Joseph, please give me an outline of a teacher's duty, as you see it. They have placed me as presiding teacher, with two others in the branch. What should be my attitude towards such in branch work?

We think it possible that what we might write to this brother in reference to the duties of the teacher might be of some value to other teachers under similar conditions. We therefore take this method of replying to him, and thus possibly avoiding having to write to several others upon the same topic.

We are admonished in the law to this effect, "Now therefore let every man learn his duty." It is understood from this that all have an equal opportunity to read and examine the law and draw conclusions therefrom. What we write here therefore is as the brother suggests, as we see it, and is not in the way of dictation or under the supposition of our having superior wisdom.

Paragraph 11, section 17, of the Doctrine and Covenants reads thus:

The teacher's duty is to watch over the church always, and be with, and strengthen them, and see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking; and see that the church meet together often, and also see that all the members do their duty, and he is to take the lead of meetings in the absence of the elder or priest, and is to be assisted always, in all his duties in the church, by the deacons, if occasion requires; but neither teachers nor deacons have authority to baptize, administer the sacrament, or lay on hands; they are, however, to warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come unto Christ.

The evident intention of this teaching is, that the teacher is not a traveling minister, acting as a missionary to preach the gospel. He is essentially a local officer of the church. As such it is understood that his duties lie with the church; that is, such portion of it as may be associated with the branch or congregation to which he belongs, or of which he is a member. In this capacity of local officer he is to be identified with them in their church relationship, and is supposed to be qualified by his temperament and the spirit of his office to strengthen and aid them in their church duties, and both by precept and example to lead them into right ways of thought and conduct as children of the covenant and members of the body of Christ. He is not a visiting officer in the same sense that the priest is, but in the discharge of his duty he may visit the membership when occasion requires, or when in his judgment he may benefit the membership by such personal visits.

To answer this requirement the teacher should provide himself with a list of the membership of the branch living within the precincts of the branch, this list to contain the names, the place of abode, and the post-office address of each family or isolated member whose name is on the branch record. He should by observation or proper inquiry inform himself of the business, occupation, and calling of those members of the branch who have business, occupations, or callings. He should do this with becoming a busybody, a Paul Pry or impertinent addler in the affairs of the brethren. He need not know the private business of any member unless a member may choose to inform him of such a wish him to know, nor is it essential that he should inquire into the details of the business of a member. If one of them wishes him to know how his business is prospering or failing, such a member with propriety may inform the teacher with as much as he wishes him to know. A teacher may also inform himself by examination of the branch record and consultation with the secretary as to what members of the branch are absent from the branch and their whereabouts, if such is known, that correspondence may be had with them if necessary.

It is the teacher's duty to be at the various meetings of the church when it is practicable, where he will take notice of those who are present, thus informing himself as to who are absent. He can then make proper and judicious inquiry and can ascertain whether such absences as he may note are the result of sickness, necessary cares, of home or business matters, or from spiritual indifference and neglect of duty. He can make these inquiries without making himself an obnoxious intruder into other men's affairs, and when informed in regard to these things, he should be very careful in dealing with them, that he does not do more harm than good, by his interference. A whip may be a necessary thing to have in the house as a show of authority of the master of the house, but it is a poor instrument with which to incite love and tender regard for the rules of the household. A teacher should always remember this: "A soft answer turneth away wrath, but grievous words stir up anger."

A teacher should never indulge in talking about the affairs of the membership of the branch, to others, either in the church or out of the church, except in cases where church discipline may seem necessary, and then only to a fellow-teacher or the authorities of the branch, should he have anything to say, and should then only say just so much as may be necessary to give the officers a proper understanding of what he knows or may have discovered. Should the teacher discover that a member was doing wrong or had been guilty of wrongdoing he should first be reasonably sure, and should then carefully visit and talk with the one supposed to have done wrong, and seek by wise counsel and proper sympathy to win such person back to right ways. He should not by any means betray the confidence that may be placed in him by telling to others of such wrongdoing or confession of wrongdoing, and thus make himself a party to tale-telling and backbiting.

A teacher should not listen to talebearers, and if approached by a member with a story of wrongdoing upon the part of another, by which the member has been offended, he should refuse to hear such statement, except in the presence of another, and if the charge be serious he should require the informant to make it in writing, and should refuse to hear a statement of complaint, upon which he is requested or expected to act, unless it be reduced to writing. The ears of a teacher should be open to appeals for spiritual aid and comfort, and to statements of physical sickness, hunger, thirst, or suffering for the necessities of life; and in such cases should give relief if he can, or inform the presiding elder of the branch or the bishop or bishop's agent, if there be one in the branch, and should see so far as is in his power, that the appeals for aid should be heard and supplied.

In the duties referred to above one of the essential aids provided in the law, of which the teacher may avail himself is the deacon or the deacons. In the absence of the presiding officers of the branch who hold higher authority than the teacher, the teacher is to take the charge of meetings at which he may be present, he being the teacher of the branch. Should there be officers in the church present who hold the higher priesthood, and who may not be officers of the branch, courtesy would require that he should invite one of these to occupy the pulpit, or to take charge of the meeting if he so desired. However, he may remember that he is the proper presiding officer, and as such he may interfere to prevent disorder in the congregation and may open and close the meeting, retaining the presiding authority so far. If he be so led by the Spirit he may occupy the stand himself, or ask a fellow-teacher who expects to be present, but should use this privilege in wise discretion, lest he should be called discourteous or presumptive. In the absence of officers holding higher authority it is the duty of the teacher when present at meetings to preside, and he may be assisted by an associate teacher or deacon, who may open and close the meeting upon request of the presiding teacher.

In the duties heretofore mentioned, with such addition as may be suggested by careful thought, the teacher will find ample scope for the occupation of his time and the exercise of his abilities, whether they be small or great. The closing portion of the paragraph in the Book of Covenants suggests the wider scope for the abilities of the teacher in that it opens a door for him to occupy the pulpit where opportunities may offer or where branch authorities may need such assistance to warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come to Christ. In order to warn he must himself feel that he has been warned and that there is a necessity for warning others. In order to exhort, he must himself feel that he is in a great degree a proper example, or his exhortation would be apt to fall upon deaf ears, those who heard him would set his example before his precept and decline to follow where he did not lead. In this respect he should be as blameless as either priest or elder. In order to teach, the teacher must study, read, think, and inform himself, not only upon the necessities for teaching, but as to the subjects he should teach and the best manner of teaching. He should make himself as attractive in his speech as he is able to do, and should avoid what would be calculated to drive men from the truth rather than attract them to it. In this respect he may be accounted in a sense as a preacher of the word.

Where necessity in church work requires or opportunity offers, in order to invite all to come to Christ he may properly address those outside the church as well as those in the church; that is to say, those who are not members of the church as well as those who are. He must himself feel that he has come unto Christ and properly become a member of the church, the body of Christ, and can assure those whom he invites that they can find room in the church through obedience to its teachings, the Spirit of comfort and of peace and a knowledge of the things of the kingdom of God.

The presiding teacher of a branch may ask the assistance of other teachers in the branch, if there be others, for their assistance in whatever he may be called upon to do in which their assistance may be required. He may be called upon by an offended member to visit with such offended member of the church who has offended him, in which case he should go cheerfully, if in his power to go, and should by wise and calm counsel help to secure an adjustment of the difficulty, but before going he should ascertain if the offended member has complied with the law, and properly have tried by himself to secure a settlement, and if he has not so done, the teacher should refuse to go.

It is the duty of the teacher to assist the presiding officer of the branch in his official capacity, to serve notice upon offending members who are required to appear before the courts of the church in the branch, and to serve such notices and other papers as may be required in such cases. There is one clause that seems to be especially difficult of comprehension, and of definition as to how far the duty of the teacher may go. He is to see that there is no iniquity in the church and that other members do their duty. The evident meaning of this, so far as we are able to construe it, is to this effect: that the teacher being a standing officer to the church is by wise supervision and by the intuitive perception of his office, to observe the conduct and attitude of members in a spiritual and moral sense, and by such efforts as he may be able to put forth to prevent the occurrence of bad or evil conduct; and so far as it is possible for him to do, by wise counsel, and example free from blame, prevent the incoming of anything of a nature to injure or destroy the membership and thus injure the church.

A wise teacher may, by habit of observation and clear thinking, discover lapse of duty on the part of members without making himself a busybody, and without taking upon himself the duty of the priest as a visiting officer. He certainly will know if he attends the meetings whether the membership are all there, especially upon sacrament service, and may ascertain upon proper inquiry whether sickness or other causes have hindered their attendance; and if such members have absented themselves because of the offences of others, misunderstanding with the church officers, or from a personal sense of want of worthiness, he can then lend such aid to such members as may lie in his power, or secure the attention of the presiding authorities of the branch. This is especially true of small or comparatively small branches. In larger branches a proper division of labor and responsibility will accomplish the intended design.

The teacher of a branch may take the branch report of membership to the different conferences if they have no branch secretary or clerk, to whom this duty is specifically assigned. The presiding teacher may also issue certificate of removal that may be ordered by the branch, providing such branch may not have a secretary or a clerk to whom the branch has delegated this duty. He should not, however, presume to issue letters except upon order of the branch by vote.

The teacher may also respond to the request of proper authorities of the branch or district to assist officers holding the higher priesthood in preaching service with such assistance as is necessary.

We think the foregoing suggestions as to duty may assist the brother whose request we have responded to, to learn by proper research and study what the teacher may or may not, should or should not, do. He should remember that he may do all these things, but may not administer the sacrament, baptize, or lay on hands, for either confirmation or healing of the sick.

JOSEPH SMITH.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Our respected Bro. F. G. Pitt, who is about to depart for his far away mission field in Australia, has decided that after all it is best to travel two by two. He has made his own choice of traveling companion without consulting General Conference. However, under the circumstances, he can not be blamed. He has the good wishes of the SAINTS' HERALD and its many readers. That the Saints may be further informed we quote from a letter written by Elder J. A. Tanner:

"A very beautiful and peaceful wedding took place at the home of Sister Parks at Joliet, Illinois, August 17, 1910, at 4.30 p. m., in which Elder Frederick G. Pitt, of Chicago, and Sr. Rosa J. Parks, of Joliet, Illinois, were the contracting parties, the ceremony being performed by Elder Joseph A. Tanner. About fifty relatives and friends were present and all partook of the nice wedding supper, served on the beautiful lawn of Sister Parks. Brother Pitt and bride are well known throughout the church, especially Brother Pitt, who is one of the church's faithful ministers. He has served on the high council and as president of the Quorum of High Priests for a number of years, and is now a patriarch, appointed on a mission to Australia. Brother Pitt and wife leave the 18th for Niagara Falls, then on to New York, and will probably attend the Philadelphia and New York District reunion. They will sail September 3 for London, England, spending a couple of weeks there, and then on overland to Naples, from where they will go to the Holy Land, where Brother Pitt will baptize some and do other church work, after which they will go to Australia, their field of labor. The best wishes and prayers of the Saints who know them go with them on their journey, and may God protect them."

SOCIALISM AND ITS RELATION TO CHRISTIANITY.

In presenting the philosophy of Socialism before the people, we find at least three classes of opponents, the largest of which is composed of individuals who know practically nothing about it, and have either no time or disposition to investigate it. Another class is composed of persons who have read what has been written against so-called Socialism and have settled convictions against the popular conception of what Socialism teaches. The third comprises a vast number of good, honest people who are fair enough to investigate both sides of the question and consequently admit that the doctrines of Socialism are all right, but we never can put them into operation. For the benefit of the first mentioned class, I desire to call attention to a few facts that are really familiar to most of us, but which have become so common amongst us that we pass them over as being natural and unavoidable, and which we claim would be abolished by the introduction of a Socialist form of government.

Fact No. 1. The unprecedented accumulation of large fortunes by a few, at the expense of privation, suffering, and unthinkable misery on the part of thousands and thousands. Socialism teaches that this great gulf is the outgrowth of what has been called surplus value. Briefly stated, surplus value is that value produced by the worker which he does not get, but which goes to the employer, and constitutes his profits. According to government statistics, the worker, on an average, receives only about one fifth of the value of his output.

Fact No. 2. The social evil. In other words, the white slave traffic, one of the blackest blots upon the pages of American history. So black, that when the results of government investigation of the traffic was published recently, effort was at once made to suppress it. Write your representative for a copy of it, U. S. Senate document No. 196. Here is a quotation from page 46 of this document which indicates what we claim is the chief cause which leads women to enter this shameful profession (from examination of professional prostitute, by commission agents): "I don't want to go into the dressmaking business and earn $8 or $9 a week, when I can make that every day on Broadway."

Fact No. 3. The domestic evil,—unhappy marriages and divorces. Among the extremely rich, marriage for love seldom occurs. Among the extremely poor, the same is largely true, for they are kept in such gross ignorance that they do not know the meaning of love. And in all classes, when a young woman marries, her friends on learning of it, at once ask, "Has he got anything?"

We, as Socialists, claim that the large majority of unhappy marriages and of the ever increasing number of divorces, are directly traceable to economic causes. We may admit the truth of what is said about "love in a cottage" if the cottage is not simply a rented shack, and the young husband has an income that doesn't make a slave of him and a drudge of his young wife, but we insist upon the truth of the other proverb that "When poverty comes in at the door, love usually flies out at the window."

Fact No. 4. The liquor traffic. Capitalism creates the brothel and the saloon. By preventing marriage it creates the brothel. The saloon would not exist for a day if the profits of the business were to cease. Capitalism lives on profits, and it is for this that the saloon is maintained, and drinks are sold.

Fact No. 5. Selfishness and pride. These two evils are especially apparent to religious people, and we have been warned that herein is one of the greatest dangers confronting the church to-day. Capitalism develops selfishness and opposes the sentiment of brotherhood. Everybody is trying to get what everybody is trying to keep everybody else from getting. You are "held up," and you politely hold up others, for large sums and small, under the profit-making system. I believe nearly all Latter Day Saints will agree that a proper execution of the law of equality will abolish from the church the chief source of selfishness and pride. Socialism presents a plan directly in harmony with this.

Fact No. 6. The tramp. Capitalism creates a constantly increasing army of unemployed. In 1890, 85 per cent of the workers in the United States had steady employment, in 1900 only 78 per cent, and in 1903 only 50.2 per cent. There are 2,000,000 constantly unemployed.

Fact No. 7. Child labor. Sixty thousand children between six and sixteen years of age work twelve hours per day in Southern cotton mills. In New York State there are 92,000 child laborers; in the United States 1,500,000. These children grow up illiterate, many of them dwarfed in mind and body.

For the benefit of that class of individuals who have read only the attacks upon Socialism, and who are consequently misinformed as to its true teachings, it is necessary to present a few statements as to what Socialism is not. However we shall content ourselves with simple reference to a few very common objections made by the average Latter Day Saint. It is said by many that Socialism is a destructive philosophy. That we are wrong in our efforts to destroy existing institutions without presenting a tangible plan of reconstruction. We are proud to plead guilty of trying to aim sledge hammer blows at every existing institution that is antagonistic to the principles of right, of justice, and of equality, no matter how popular some of these may be. If we discover that an enterprise depends for its success upon the confiscation of the major portion of the earnings of its employees, or the employment of helpless women and children at a mere pittance, we hesitate not to hurl against it the battering ram of truth. But think not, my brother, that we are unprepared to step in among the ruins of any of these temples of greed with plans and specifications for a structure that shall be a monument of justice to future generations. In fact the Socialist Party presents the most definite plan and the most precise philosophy of economics that has ever been presented in the political world.

Another objects to the Socialist propaganda because of the harsh attacks that are made upon everything but Socialism. Do not Latter Day Saint elders meet with the same criticism regarding their preaching? No matter how mildly they may point out the errors of other systems of religious belief they can not avoid voicing the sublime statement of inspiration, "Their creeds are all wrong."

It is well enough to talk about presenting these debatable questions in an affirmative manner, but it seems there is not much consistency in trying to persuade a man to let you build him a new home until you have shown him the leaks in his own. At least, we feel safe in following the example of the "undesirable citizen" of Galilee in this respect, and we remember how he occasionally made use of such terms as "hypocrites," "whited sepulchers," "devourers of widows' houses," etc. However, if one will take the pains to analyze these attacks he will discover that they are based upon a position that is charitable indeed, for almost invariably the writer will blame the system under which we are living rather than the individual.

Another common charge is that we are advocates of violence, an appeal to arms in order to accomplish our plans. The writer has read everything for and against Socialism he could get his hands on for the last fifteen years, including some of the most radical publications that are printed, and only once has he found a single statement encouraging a resort to arms. If there is one thing emphasized more than another by the Socialist press, it is the idea that the people must become educated in the philosophy if we would hope to realize our dreams of industrial liberty.

Some people who even admit that the Socialist doctrine is all right, refuse to take an active part in supporting it because of fear that it will wean them away from the church.

I can not understand upon what grounds such a fear could be based. Certainly the plan of temporal and spiritual salvation as presented in the three books is far more enticing than the ideal of any Socialist dreamer. It might be that some impatient Saint, observing the fact that now half a century has passed, and scarcely the first essential step has been taken toward establishing the principles of equality, while in the meantime the Socialist movement has sprung into existence, and with its assurance of temporal salvation has won its adherents to the number of over ten million souls, would become discouraged with the slow progress and financial impotence of the church and lie down upon his spiritual oars, so to speak.

Another objection is that we propose, after we have secured the reigns of government, to force every individual into communistic relationship, and that to do this would be slavery. That would be the same kind of slavery that is instituted now every four years when the large minority are compelled against their will to submit to the will of the G. O. P., only there would be this difference: under the present system the people are entirely at the mercy of the millionaire senators and representatives who are either corporation stockholders or attorneys, or are more or less under the control of their wealth; while the Socialist platform arms the people with the "initiative and referendum" and the "recall" by which they may defend themselves against the infidelity of the men they have placed in office.

I herewith present a condensed statement of

THE SOCIALIST PLATFORM.

Principles.

Human life depends upon food, clothing, and shelter. Moral and spiritual development depends largely upon the material conditions. To secure the means of life, land and machinery are needed. Whoever owns or controls the land and machinery controls labor and consequently human life and liberty. To-day the land and machinery are owned by a rapidly decreasing minority, and necessarily a rapidly increasing majority are passing under the control of the minority, thus becoming the helpless slaves of industrial masters.

A bitter struggle over the division of the products of labor is constantly waged.

The fact that a few capitalists are permitted to control the world's industrial resources and tools, for their individual profit, is at the bottom of all the social evils of our time.

The wage workers can not be freed from exploitation without conquering the political power and substituting collective for private ownership of the land and means of production used for exploitation.

The Socialist party is primarily an economic and political movement. It is not concerned with matters of religious belief.

In the struggle for freedom, the interests of all workers are identical. The struggle is international.

To unite the workers of the world and their allies, and sympathizers of all other classes, is the mission of the Socialist Party. In this battle for freedom, it does not strive to substitute working class rule for capitalist class rule, but by working class victory, to free all humanity from class rule and to realize the international brotherhood of man.

PLATFORM FOR 1908.

The Socialist Party, in national convention assembled, again declares itself as the party of the working class, and appeals to all workers and their sympathizers for support.

General Demands.

1. Immediate government relief for the unemployed by building schools, reforesting waste lands, reclamation of arid tracts, building of canals, etc.
2. Collective ownership of all railroads, telegraph, telephones, steamship lines, etc.
3. Collective ownership of all industries which are organized on a national scale.
4. Extension of the public domain to include mines, quarries, oil wells, forests, and water power.
5. Occupancy and use of land to be the only title to possession.
6. Absolute freedom of press, speech, and assemblage.

Industrial Demands.

Improvement of the condition of the workers:

7. a. By shortening the work day in proportion to the increased productiveness of machinery.
- b. By securing to every worker a rest period of not less than a day and a half each week.
- c. By securing better inspection of workshops and factories.
- d. By forbidding the employment of children under sixteen years of age.
- e. By forbidding interstate transportation of the products of child labor, convict labor, and uninspected factories.
- f. By abolishing official charity, and substituting compulsory insurance against unemployment, illness, accidents, invalidism, old age, and death.

Political Demands.

8. Inheritance taxes.
9. Graduated income tax.
10. Equal suffrage for men and women.
11. Initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall.
12. The abolition of the Senate.
13. Abolition of the power of the Supreme Court to pass upon the constitutionality of legislation.
14. The Constitution to be made amendable by majority vote.
15. Further measures for general education, and for the conservation of public health.
16. Separation of the Bureau of Labor from the Department of Commerce and Labor, and the establishment of a department of labor.

17. Election of judges by the people for short terms, and that the power to issue injunctions be curbed.

18. The free administration of justice.

Socialists believe that Socialism, by abolishing the profit making competitive system, and by establishing the coöperative commonwealth, will remove more than anything yet proposed, the motive as well as the opportunity for political corruption and economic wrongs; and that without destroying individual liberty or the incentive to worthy effort.

The Encyclopedia Britannica says: "The ethics of Socialism are closely akin to the ethics of Christianity if not identical with them." Prof. R. T. Ely says: "It is applied Christianity—the Golden Rule applied to everyday life." Rev. Father McGrady says: "Under Socialism religion will conquer the globe, education will expand, science will dazzle the world with its glittering sheen."

Socialists present the following three great truths as underlying the development of the social revolution:

1. The class struggle. There has been all through history a struggle between oppressor and oppressed, master and slave, employer and employee. Each economic period ends in a revolutionary reconstruction of society. The present struggle will end in the establishment of a coöperative commonwealth in which justice and equality will prevail.

2. Surplus value. Labor applied to nature is the only source of wealth. Those who do not labor productively live upon the labor of those who do. It follows, therefore, that those who labor do not get what they produce. Socialism contemplates the public ownership and operation of the means of production and distribution, which will make it impossible for any set of men to live on the labor of others.

3. Economic determinism, or the materialistic interpretation of history. In any given epoch the most important element in shaping social, legal, and political institutions is economic. It does not deny that there are other factors, even ideal elements in history. It asserts that for men in the mass, economic interests are decisive.

The Socialists unhesitatingly charge that the existing social order is practically all wrong and propose to substitute for the competitive, profit making, private monopoly system, a social order based upon coöperative production for use through collective ownership.

The latter day work was introduced with the declaration that all the creeds were wrong and presented a philosophy embracing the principles of "common consent" (coöperation), consecration of property (church ownership), and stewardships (service for needs).

Strong charges have been made against Socialism on the grounds that government ownership would prevent the operation of the plan of inheritances. On the contrary this is one of the strongest points of our philosophy. Referring to article five under "General demands" we find this clause: "Occupancy and use of land to be the sole title to possession." This would prevent the acquirement of land for speculative purposes and guarantee to every man at least a plot of ground upon which to erect a home. Associate with this the further provision that every worker shall receive the full results of his labor, and we begin to see how that instead of this principle being a hindrance to the operation of the divine plan, it will untie the hands of thousands of us poor, struggling victims of capitalist greed, so that instead of being a burden upon the church treasury we could turn in dollars where we now give but pennies for carrying on the Lord's work. The following statement may make this point clearer: "Socialism provides for the collective ownership and democratic management of all the means of production and distribution that are collectively used; the private ownership of all property that is privately used."

The latter day revelations emphasize the principle: He that will not work neither shall he eat. While due provision is made for the invalid, the unfortunate, and the aged, it is demanded that all who are able shall render faithful service as stewards.

Socialism demands that if there is any "surplus value" there is one thing it shall not do; it shall not be used in the hands of one or more men as a means of exploiting those who may not have been able to develop a surplus.

The principle of economic determinism opens up a phase of the Socialist philosophy which has met with very active opposition. It is simply the question of environment. As it is at this point where Socialism comes so close to the field of the gospel work of human salvation, we may well pause a moment to examine it.

It is in the light of this principle that the Socialist, while condemning in the strongest terms the system under which he operates, sees in such characters as Rockefeller, Grosscup, Aldrich, Taft, as well as those at the other extreme, the common tramp and petty criminal, simply the pitiable victims of a corrupt and soul-stifling environment.

By reference to what we all know of the natural world we gather a lesson of considerable value in this connection. The natural world is divided by the scientist into three kingdoms; mineral, vegetable, and animal. The mineral kingdom is inorganic, or lifeless, but when we enter the vegetable world we discover there exists a principle of life which reaches down into the insensible clay and up into the air and sunlight, gathering various elements together, it organizes a visible body which performs certain functions necessary to its growth. Passing on to the third kingdom we find here a higher form of life associated with various degrees of intelligence. On observing its activities we discover that it, too, stoops down, partakes of the materials prepared by the vegetable life, and with portions of the mineral world and the atmosphere in which it lives and moves, it performs the functions necessary to animal life and growth.

Now would anyone be so foolish as to assert that the tree could grow without the air and sunlight above and the earth beneath from which to extract the elements that enter into its composition? Surely there will be no opposition to the thought that the nature of the soil, the condition of the atmosphere, the intensity of sunlight, all are controlling influences in the life of that tree.

In the animal world we discover the same law operating. Areas of the earth's surface which are marked by different climatic conditions are inhabited by animals of correspondingly different characteristics; and if a resident of one district is suddenly transported to another locality it will not thrive and will likely succumb to the conditions to which it is not adapted.

Thus it appears that we are justified in our conclusion that the spiritual man, or that form of life operating in what we call the spiritual world, is influenced, yes, is governed almost entirely by the material soil and atmosphere in which it is planted. The Scriptures furnish us with abundant proof that our position is correct.

It is interesting to note that while the incident of the fall of man from paradise is often used as evidence that man acts independent of environment, yet a closer analysis of the subject discloses the fact that this Garden of Eden episode is the strongest kind of proof that it was the environment and the environment only that led to the expulsion from the garden. Adam and Eve remained pure and innocent so long as the atmosphere was uncontaminated. When there entered into their society another influence, that of Satan, Eve at once yielded to the influence and acted as she did as a direct result of the changed environment. Then God, recognizing that a change in their condition was necessary to restore them to their former position, at once commences the work of the redemption of man, preparation for which was made from before the foundation of the world. In the plans for the accomplishment of this great work, what do we find? A man stepping out from among the hordes of despised Roman slaves boasting his power to make his own environment, and manufacture his own circumstances, an all but god, presenting monumental evidences of man's inherent greatness? Let us see.

An angel from heaven appears to a young Jewish virgin and tells her that she is to be the most favored of all women—that she shall be overshadowed by the power of the Highest, and that she is to become the mother of one who should be King of the Jews, the Savior of the world, the Son of God, Jesus, the Christ. Not a man in all Judea could be found pure enough to be honored with the fatherhood of this wonderful child that was to be. What greater precautions could the Father have taken for the perfection of the prenatal environment of this man with a mission? And when he begins his life work, presenting himself to the world, does he come boasting of his inherent greatness? Not at all. On the other hand he says, "I do nothing of myself"; "My doctrine is not mine but His that sent me"; "Thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory."

Certainly nothing can more effectually feed the fires of human pride and class hatred than this pernicious doctrine of man's inherent greatness. And nothing can more certainly smother this same fire and kindle the warm glow of brotherly love than the Socialist doctrine of economic determinism.

The latter day revelations are very clearly in harmony with the foregoing. Before the church was a year old, detailed instruction was given looking toward the alleviation of the condition of the poor, the giving of inheritances, the gathering, and the laying of the foundation of the city of Zion. (Section 38: 5, 8; 42: 8-10; 48: 2.)

While it may be true that men have preached the doctrine, based on the text, "Zion is the pure in heart," that we must become pure in heart, free from selfishness, pride, hypocrisy, envy, and attain to a high degree of spirituality, before we are entitled to the temporal blessings provided for in the celestial law, yet we find very strong statements to the effect that the temporal advantages are given as a means of acquiring to spiritual excellence, as it is expressed in section 42: "And this I do for the salvation of my people." What further salvation does a man need in this life if he has obeyed the outward ordinances, purified his heart, and attained to a high degree of spirituality?

Section 70: 3 states in plain words as follows: "Nevertheless, in your temporal things ye shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld." Doesn't this make the spiritual blessings dependent upon the material condition? It is only another way of expressing the law of economic determinism.

Now let us make a more careful comparison of the two subjects. The first principles of the gospel which pertain to the spiritual man particularly are entirely beyond the realm of Socialism, so we need examine only that portion which deals with man's relation to his fellow-man. The spiritual law is summed up in these few words, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy might, mind, and strength"; the temporal in these, "and thy neighbor as thyself." Socialism has nothing to say about the first, but declares that the second shall become a grand reality instead of a fruitless theory, as it has been with but few exceptions from the days of Jesus until the present time.

Referring to the law as given in section 42, we find the following crimes forbidden in paragraph 7: murder, theft, lying, and unfaithfulness to wife.

Socialism declares that the wholesale slaughter of men on railways, in mines, and in factories, due to criminal negligence in providing safety appliances, sanitary conditions, etc., in order to save a few dollars' expense, is murder, and they propose that it shall cease. They claim that the employment of women and children at long hours and small pay on farms and in sweatshops, thus wearing out their lives by slow degrees at work that they were never designed to perform, is one of the most accursed forms of murder, and they propose a system of industry whereby one man may by his own labor provide for his family in abundance without the help of his wife and babies and still have time and opportunity for moral, intellectual, and spiritual development.

Socialism also calls attention to the fact that sneaking into your neighbor's house and carrying off his valuables is not the only kind of stealing. It contends that if the average product of the workers of the nation, after all running expenses are paid, is over $2,000 per year, then each worker on an average is robbed in broad daylight of about $1,500 a year, if he receives in wages only $500.

Little boys are not the only ones who tell lies. When four merchants in one town advertised each a brand of goods as being the best on the market, "somebody lied." Indeed, when a careful examination is made it will be found that the whole system of competitive advertising is a huge lie, allowing, of course, for some exceptions. Bear in mind, I said competitive advertising.

But what has Socialism to do with a man's love for his wife? Oh, that I had the tongue of an archangel and the trump of God to proclaim to the millions of wretched hovels, mistakenly called homes, what Socialism even, to say nothing of how much more the gospel in its fullness, has to do, if applied, with a man's love to his wife! The love of a man and wife can not thrive amid squalor, wretchedness, hunger, privation, hopeless indebtedness, overwork, and endless worry. Socialism will remove the cause of most of this in the same way that the gospel will do it, by the establishment of economic justice, guaranteeing to every man his just wants and needs.

Paragraph 8 starts out by making the observance of the temporal law a sign or token of our love to God. A careful examination of this paragraph with those following discloses the following points: It is every man's duty to lay his property before the bishop and his counselors, who then appoint him his stewardship and assign him his inheritance, "inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family." This arrangement plainly establishes church or collective ownership of capital, and private ownership of homes. Socialism differs from this only slightly; it allows every man to retain all he can produce while the temporal law of the church involves the spiritual obligation of turning into the church treasury all above necessities. There is no conflict, the gospel plan is just that much higher. Here appears one of the grandest phases of the Socialist doctrine. As I have mentioned before, under the present capitalist system the average wage of the workers of this country is less than $500 per annum, while the average of his products is over $2,500. Under Socialism, even with the present wasteful methods of production and distribution, he would receive this average value instead of the idle capitalist, and there would be the possibility of an almost unlimited increase in his income as a result of improved methods and the elimination of profits and the waste of advertising, transportation, and many other ways. Thus the church could receive from its members in tithing and consecration many times the amount that it now receives.

The idea of coöperation as against competition is held out all through the Scriptures: "We are laborers together with God for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all." The Golden Rule will not fit any transaction under competition in either commerce or industry. It will be the very essence of the coöperative commonwealth under Socialism.

But, says some objector, "The theory of Socialism may be all right and in harmony with the gospel, but if we have it all and more too in the gospel, why not let's work it out in the church? I don't believe church members ought to dabble in politics."

Very well, let us work it out in the church in so far as we may under present unfavorable conditions. But the church as a body is not in politics, and can only bring the benefits of this philosophy to its own members. The only way to assist in advancing these principles of justice and equality in the world in general is to act through a political organization. Now we have one party and only one that is pledged to the execution of these principles and determined to lay the ax to the foot of the old corrupt tree of capitalism that has flourished so long and brought forth such an abundant crop of graft, debauchery, war, and famine, and we have failed to discover one good reason why a Latter Day Saint should refuse to cast his vote for a party that is committed to the enactment of laws aimed to help to bring about the conditions provided for in the law pertaining to temporalities in the church, and choose to cast his vote and influence with parties pledged to the opposite principles.

Much has been said about the danger of going into politics, and examples are cited of persons who suffered spiritual death as a result of such steps. But that does not condemn all politics. It proves only that this particular politics were bad. Surely if there is no political organization with which a Christian may affiliate without becoming contaminated, it is time Christian people were getting busy and starting such a movement.

Section 95:2 has something upon this point. Referring to the "law of the land which is constitutional, supporting that principle of freedom," we are advised to "befriend" that law. It is further stated "and the law also maketh you free; nevertheless when the wicked rule the people mourn; wherefore honest men and wise men should be sought for, diligently, and good men and wise men, ye should observe to uphold." How can we carry out this instruction without taking more or less active part in politics? If it is so important that we should search out good men, how much more important, is it not, to seek men who are pledged to the enactment of laws that guarantee life and liberty as vouchsafed in the Constitution!

Another significant statement is found in section 98:10: "Therefore it is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another. And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood."

The prophet no doubt had special reference in this statement to the institution of chattel slavery. But who will say that the yoke of bondage is any the less galling because the slaves have their political liberty? What is the difference whether the master owns the bodies of the workers, or the land and tools, or machines, with which to provide the means of life? In the latter case the master does not need to use the lash to compel his servants to do his bidding, he may simply say, Very well, if you do not wish to comply with my terms and accept what I offer, there are plenty of men who are ready and anxious to step into your place. And so to-day we have hundreds of thousands of men, women, and children who are absolute, helpless, hopeless, slaves, wearing away their lives at long hours of hard labor for which they receive a mere pittance; while the man, or men, who own the machines and land, literally roll in wealth and vie with each other in their efforts to spend the largest sum of money that might properly be said to represent the very life, the tears, and the cries of these wretched victims of capitalism.

The Lord, through his latter day prophet, said this bondage is wrong, and told us how to guarantee liberty indeed to every faithful Saint. Almost a century has passed and the people to whom this declaration was made have scarcely taken one essential step towards relieving the condition of these poor victims of human ignorance. Over ten million Socialists throughout the world are agreed that this condition of human bondage is wrong, and they are determined that the system under which it has grown up and through which it now thrives, shall be utterly destroyed, and a system of justice, equality, and liberty shall be implanted in its stead, founded upon the God-given principle of universal brotherhood.

Now where is our duty as men of this church? Shall we be found lending our support to a system which has produced the present shameful condition of social and political corruption, or shall we be consistent with our profession of faith, and seek to align ourselves with the great mass of the under world who are struggling, sometimes almost hopelessly, to reach up into the sunlight of truth where they may enjoy the realities of life, liberty, and happiness?

The church does not hesitate to speak out against the liquor traffic; yet it has become a political issue. It can easily be shown that the extremes of wealth and poverty are productive of far greater evils than is the liquor traffic; in fact it is becoming more apparent every day that these two extremes are largely responsible for the drink evil itself. Why then should the church of Christ be silent in the face of the greatest evil in the world simply because it has become a political issue? May the Spirit of the Master who had not where to lay his head lead us to see the truth and live it.

HAVE FAITH IN GOD.

The above is the statement of Jesus the Christ as we find it recorded in Mark 11: 22, and again in John 14: 1 he says, "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me." Thus we are commanded by the Master to have faith in God, also in Jesus Christ our Lord. Now the question arises in my mind, How much faith have we in God and Christ? We as a people have been taught, and do believe that faith must be made manifest by our works, otherwise we do not believe the Scriptures. James says,

Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works. Thou believest that there is one God; thou doest well: the devils also believe, and tremble. But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead? Was not Abraham our father justified by works, when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar? Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect? And the scripture was fulfilled which saith, Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness: and he was called the Friend of God, ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only.

So we see by these statements that it is not enough for you or me to say, "We believe in God." It is easy enough for us to say so and at the same time have not the necessary faith in God and Christ to claim the fulfillment of his promises made to us if we had faith in God and Christ. We would be ready and cheerfully willing to do what they have commanded us to do, like Abraham of old. To my mind there is quite a difference between faith and belief. I plant my crop believing I will raise or reap a harvest from it, but will I have the necessary faith amid all the drought and hindrances that may arise after I have planted in belief to raise that crop? Paul says, "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Abraham had an assurance that when God made the covenant with him "that in him and his seed should all the nations of the earth be blessed" he believed or had faith what God said would surely come to pass. When God commanded him to offer his son Isaac a living sacrifice upon the altar, he did not refuse to obey God, but trusted in him to provide and had sufficient faith and assurance in God that he would fulfill his promises, and asked no questions about it. In Genesis 22: 3 we read:

And Abraham rose up early in the morning, and saddled his ass, and took two of his young men with him, and Isaac his son, and clave the wood for the burnt offering, and rose up, and went unto the place of which God had told him. Then on the third day Abraham lifted up his eyes, and saw the place afar off. And Abraham said unto his young men, Abide ye here with the ass; and I and the lad will go yonder and worship, and come again to you.

Abraham was perfectly sure the lad would return with him. What mighty faith he had in God!

And Abraham took the wood of the burnt offering, and laid it upon Isaac his son; and he took the fire in his hand and a knife; and they went both of them together. And Isaac spake unto Abraham his father, and said, My father: and he said, Here am I, my son. And he said, Behold the fire and the wood; but where is the lamb for a burnt offering? And Abraham said, My son, God will provide himself a lamb for a burnt offering: so they went both of them together. And they came to the place which God had told him of; and Abraham built an altar there, and laid the wood in order, and bound Isaac his son, and laid him on the altar upon the wood. And Abraham stretched forth his hand, and took the knife to slay his son. And the angel of the Lord called unto him out of heaven, and said, Abraham, Abraham: and he said, Here am I. And he said, Lay not thine hand upon the lad, neither do thou anything unto him: for now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son, from me. And Abraham lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold behind him a ram caught in a thicket by his horns: and Abraham went and took the ram, and offered him up for a burnt offering in the stead of his son. . . . And the angel of the Lord called unto Abraham out of heaven the second time, and said, By myself have I sworn, saith the Lord; for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son; that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea shore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed, because thou hast obeyed my voice.

The promises are to us just as much as to Abraham, and God is just as faithful to fulfill when we are willing to obey his voice and have faith in God and Jesus Christ. Now we read in Daniel, when he was cast into the den of lions and the king because of it was sore distressed, he spake unto Daniel and said, "Thy God whom thou servest continually he will deliver thee." This shows that this king had faith in Daniel's God, notwithstanding he was looked upon as a heathen, and had the assurance that Daniel's God was a God that could save, and that he would save Daniel from the lions' mouths.

The king went to his palace, and passed the night in fasting: neither were instruments of music brought before him: and his sleep went from him.

And I presume he must have coupled his fasting with prayers to the God of Daniel, that he would close the lions' mouths. This was a wonderful thing for a heathen king to do. He certainly had more faith in Daniel's God and the same God we worship than some of us Latter Day Saints to-day. Why can't we believe and have faith in God, who hath counseled and admonished us to do thus and so, yet we heed it not? Dear Saints, how much faith have we? Have we as much as the heathen king who went early the next morning to the den of lions expecting to find Daniel alive according to his faith; or as much as good old father Abraham, who knew God would provide the sacrifice in place of his son? "O for a faith that will not shrink." Have we enough faith to believe in God's promises? In Malachi 3 we read:

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts.

Let us have faith that God means what he says when he speaks and come up to the help of the Lord; that he is a God of truth and can not lie. We have so little time to do the very best we know how. Then let us be up and doing and work while the day lasts that we may be counted worthy to eat the good of the land. May we heed the admonition to come up higher; stand upon holier ground; keep all of God's commandments, and show by so doing that we love him and have faith in him and his blessed son Jesus Christ, such a faith as Abraham and all the others had. We shall have to come to it. Why not begin now? If we expect an inheritance in the kingdom of God, "Love God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man." It will not benefit us to be just hearers of the word. We must do the works we have been commanded to do that we deceive not ourselves. May God bless and help us all to think less of self and more for the work of our blessed Master, he has assigned us to do, is my prayer.

WHAT OF THE UNITED ORDER OF ENOCH—IS IT AN IMPORTANT, NECESSARY, AND NEEDED ORGANIZATION?

I shall endeavor to offer a few suggestions relative to this order, believing that it is necessary and needed; believing that God does not counsel or command things to be performed which are not important, necessary, or needed.

Latter Day Saints arraign others who are slack in the observance of some of the commandments of God, therefore we who believe in and do receive from the great fount of life and truth the precious word, who also receive direction when direction is needed, should be most careful to observe his counsel and commands when given.

Section 128, paragraph 1, which was given by the Lord to his servant after continual supplication and prayer by the people during the assembly of the conference at Lamoni, Iowa, April, 1909, says:

The conditions surrounding the work, the increase of the membership of the church, the increasing desire for gathering together, and the necessity existing for the obtaining places for settlement in the regions round about, under the existing laws of the United States, and especially the State of Missouri, requires that the Bishopric be authorized to take such measures as will bring to pass the organization of those who are desirous and willing to form parts in colonization under terms of association in different localities where settlements may be made and may lawfully secure and hold property for the benefit of themselves and their fellow church members, and the whole body of the church when organized.

You will note the Lord in the foregoing states in plainness why the organization should be effected, and gives the people to understand that those conditions require that the Bishopric be authorized to take such measures as will bring to pass the organization of those who are desirous to form parts in such colonization, for the benefiting of themselves and their fellow church members. We believe that a very large majority of the Saints have with fond desire and anxiety been looking forth with faith and confidence for the coming of these conditions, provided for in this revelation and this organization, namely, that a general coöperative work, according to the will of God, and in his way, should be entered into. Some have asked, "Why should such a work be inaugurated, and how, and whom will it affect?" In reply to such inquiry I will answer by referring the inquirer to section 51. There you will note the people were to be organized, otherwise they would be cut off; and every man was to receive according to his circumstances and wants, and as the old law of circumstances and wants still exists, the necessity for supplying still exists, and the word of the Lord, counseling organization, stating conditions and surroundings making organization necessary, should be accepted as ample reason for this organization. Aside from the above-named reasons, should not the direct counsel of God when given to a people be accepted, even should no positive and definite reason be given? We think so. The martyred prophet's statement relative to the baptism and confirmation of himself and Oliver Cowdery on that very important and solemn occasion is, "We were so commanded." No definite reason given. On that very command, authority, and counsel rests the superstructure of our work to-day, and will for all time to come. Thousands have and are now believing it, and have received the Spirit confirming their belief, as a result of that command and work of the Lord's messenger, John the Baptist.

The Lord counseled his people relative to authorizing the Bishopric, which they did, and with such authority delegated by the Lord and approved by the people, the Bishopric moved out, met obstacles, overcame them, and effected an organization of men who are ready and willing to say, "Speak Lord, thy servant heareth," most all of whom have already made donations to assist the work now in hand. The organization under the direction of God for the carrying out of his work in both spiritual and material things, is one of the cardinal principles of this church, without which no great spiritual development can be expected. The preaching of the gospel in all the world, the gathering of the Saints, the building up and redemption of Zion, the perfecting of the Saints, providing for the poor, etc., all comprehend organization. Hence we should welcome with gladness an opportunity that will lead us up to a higher plane, that will increase our desires to serve God, and that will result in the betterment of mankind.

First we cite you to the articles of association as published in both Ensign and HERALD, calling your attention to the preface, which reads as follows:

The United Order of Enoch is a helping and benevolent association, organized for the benefit of the poor and needy, dispensing its charity by furnishing equal opportunities to the needy, upright and industrious, in a financial, educational and social way, with those who are more fortunate, and supplying of stewardships and homes or inheritances to the worthy who may lack.

It is through this order we believe that the law of God, if faithfully honored, can be made more operative pertaining to the protection of those that may need care and oversight, and God has certainly enjoined this care and oversight upon those of his people who are able to assist. See section 101. Here the Lord states that it is his purpose to provide for the Saints, but it must be done in his way, and his way as stated is, that if any man shall fail to impart his portion according to the gospel law unto the poor and the needy, that man is likely to get into serious trouble and torment. The Lord demands that the worthy poor must have their wants and necessities supplied, inasmuch as their wants are just.

Now an organization would not have been counseled had that not been the Lord's way. The order can not move in its work unless the people make it possible for them to so do. Lands for homes must be provided; both city and farm industries stimulated. Great faith and confidence will be necessary and valuable factors. The Lord's work is an educational work, and men must not expect great results in too short a time. Section 98, paragraph 9, reads:

Again, verily I say unto you, I will show unto you wisdom in me concerning all the churches, inasmuch as they are willing to be guided in a right and proper way.

Are we to-day willing to be guided in a right and proper way, in the way the Lord directs? If so, let those that can spare money send it to those who have been set apart to receive it, that lands may be bought, and the way prepared so that those who desire may go upon them and establish themselves.

It is hoped that some large tracts can be secured in time and those who have means to secure their own homes will assist in the purchasing of such large tracts, and in this way form permanent settlements and abiding places, and thus labor together with God for the establishing of the work intrusted to all, and do this in God's own way. One beautiful tract of land containing eighty acres has been arranged for, and is being platted. This land is close to the South Side Church, and from two to six blocks from the street car line. Any of the Saints who can send means to assist in payment of this land, either by donation or having lots set off to them, will be working in hearty coöperation with the order, and with the work of God.

Is your field of labor too small? Do you long for greater opportunities? Remember that God sometimes puts a wall around a life and confines it to a narrow field because he knows the value of concentrated effort. Fill the field in which you are set to labor, and a larger will open for you as soon as you are prepared to enter.

Of General Interest

THE PILGRIM MONUMENT.

It is fitting that a granite shaft of dignified design should be dedicated, on the shore of Cape Cod Bay, at Provincetown, to the memory of the brave men and women who came to these shores nearly three centuries ago to find "freedom to worship God" according to the guidance of their own unfettered spiritual inclination.

It took a supreme faith in themselves and in the righteousness of their Christian hegira to bring the Pilgrim fathers—and mothers—to the untenanted, uncharted desolation of the North American wilderness in 1620. It meant what many an ease-loving descendant of the Puritans would consider and inordinate sacrifice of worldly prospects, as well as an inevitable rupture of close ties of association and long-standing friendship; it surely entailed a final severance, for most of the Mayflower's company, from their beloved mother country, for between England and some of her children, who felt the filial relationship most keenly, the destiny of America ordained that there should be for evermore "the unplumb'd, salt, estranging sea."

The Pilgrims did not come here to enrich themselves, to enlarge the dominions of a royal lord and master, to subjugate the Indian and the wilderness with ruthlessness and violence in the satisfaction of the lust of predominance and power. They came here to found a commonwealth, with the Bible as the corner stone of whatever firm foundation might be established. They builded better than they knew. We have seen fit, in our day and generation, to mitigate some of the asperities and austerities of their secular and spiritual code. Religion and statecraft in our eyes are no longer inevitable yoke-fellows. We read our Bibles with a wider latitude of interpretation, and the Sabbath is no more made a bugbear to children with the protracted announcement, in an all-day session, of the torment of sulphurous flames and the undying worm for hell-deserving sinners.

But if we have modified some of their theological notions, we have not found ourselves able profitably to dispense with the finer qualities of the Puritan character. We can not do without their inexorable sense of justice, of the equality of every man with every other, of the little vital difference there is in the sight of God between the best of us and the most hardened criminal. If we are to realize the loftiest ideals as a nation or as individuals, we can not far depart from the established ways of the forefathers; we must conserve the Puritan tradition; we must keep alive the memories of the Pilgrims, not alone in monuments of granite, but in our daily performance as living men.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

A LITTLE LAY SERMON.

There will meet in the city of Saint Louis August 25, 26, and 27, a convention of the leading negro educators and representatives of their race in other walks of life, the chief purpose of which will be to arrive at a working basis for the negro's efforts to deserve the friendship and good will of the white race in his struggle to better his condition. Frankly admitting the faults emanating from the negro himself and retarding this progress in the past, the leaders of the movement, which originated chiefly in Kansas City, appeal to the best instincts of the best elements of the white race for encouragement and assistance in this most laudable endeavor. That this appeal is being responded to in a manner befitting its almost pathetic importance is evidenced by the fact that President Taft has appointed delegates from the District of Columbia and the governors of all the Southern States have likewise not only appointed delegates but have assured the leaders of their heartiest coöperation in forwarding the objects of the convention.

At this meeting the following will be the principal topics of discussion:

1. How can we inspire more confidence on part of people for our professional men?
2. How can negro journals best help solve the race problem?
3. Does a college education pay?
4. To what extent should manual training be taught in our public schools?
5. Are we losing ground as a serving class? If so, why? What is the remedy?
6. How can we get our people to engage in farming?
7. What is there in the text books now in use in our public schools to inspire the negro youth?
8. Should the church go beyond its pews in the work of saving souls?
9. What can we do to minimize crime among negroes?
10. Do the courts give us justice?
11. Are we making progress in our home life?
12. Should the negro confine his residence to any particular section of the country?
13. Has his activity in politics been hurtful to the race?
14. Who should teach school?
15. Who should preach the gospel?
16. How can we help our business men?
17. The negro mechanic.
18. Is the press of the Nation fair to the negro?

Down in Oklahoma last week the so-called "grandfather clause" was adopted as an amendment to the State Constitution, the practically openly avowed purpose of which is the disfranchisement of the negro as a voter. This is the more insidious blow at the spirit of our institutions since it aims by a pretense of legality to nullify the plain provisions of the Constitution of the United States. The time would seem to be approaching for the final adjudication of this constitutional problem, for another Dred Scott decision which shall establish once and for all the right or the lack of the right of a State to override the federal Constitution's declaration that no State shall disfranchise any citizen on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude and at the same time retain the representation in Congress enjoyed at the time of such disfranchisement. The federal Constitution should be obeyed, the States which nullify it should be deprived of the fruits of their nullification and defiance of the supreme instrument of our popular Government or the Constitution should be amended so that States may not abrogate the solemn agreements into which they entered when they obtained admission into the Union.

The country has been unspeakably disgraced during the past few weeks by massacres of defenseless and innocent negroes in Texas which transformed the Lone Star State into a shambles rivaling the butcheries of history. The ruthless Turk never committed outrages so atrocious as those committed by blood-maddened mobs which pursued negroes who were guilty of no crime but that of color, shot them down like wild beasts and left their bodies unburied for the vultures to devour. This happened in America, not in Armenia. The original cause of the bloodiest of these crimes was a murder by a negro over a promissory note, not the conventional crime which infuriates the whites and rouses the worst passions of the people. With negroes being slaughtered by wild and irresponsible mobs on the one hand and disfranchised by voting mobs on the other, it would appear that it is high time for conventions of some sort.

The civilized powers of the earth have intervened and importuned the "unspeakable Turk" to cease the Armenian massacres. Why not appeal to America to stop the massacres within its own borders? Because one negro was guilty of an unprovoked and utterly indefensible murder, more than a score of negroes who had committed no crime whatever were slaughtered in a horrible orgy of bloody fury that places those guilty of the atrocities outside the pale of civilization.

It is in the midst of such conditions as these, not confined by any means to one section of the country, that the best elements of the negro race are appealing to the white people for help in repressing crime among the black race, of uplifting the whole race and making it more worthy the assistance of the whites. This is the element of the pathetic that enters into the situation—a race pleading for a chance. A glance at the subjects of the convention referred to will show that the fault does not altogether lie with the blacks. There is crime among the whites as well. The truth is that there is no color to crime or criminals. A white man's crime is as black as that of the blackest negro who ever took the life of his fellow-man. During his fifty years of freedom the negro has made wonderful strides and if a proportionate amount of preventive effort was used in behalf of the negro as compared with the same sort of effort in behalf of the whites, the showing would be still more gratifying.—Kansas City Journal.

If the Baby Would Sleep.

Oh, the oceans of work that could be done,
The garments cut and the long seams run,
The blankets woven of yarn homespun,
And the silk quilts pieced, not yet begun,
To be placed in the chests of cedar deep—

If the baby would only sleep!

How the rooms could be swept and dusted and aired,
The windows cleaned and the curtains repaired,
The stockings darned that have poorly fared,
The visits paid and the pleasures shared,
For the sun to the west would slowly creep,

If the baby would only sleep!

Then, the books with uncut pages read,
The flowers attended in garden bed,
The doggies trained and the cats well bred,
The naked clothed and the hungry fed—
For the charity fairs would fortunes reap,

If the baby would only sleep.

Oh, the pictures painted, the music learned,
The stories writ and the sonnets turned,
The questions discussed that women concerned,
The money spent that her pocket burned,
As life went by with a dance and leap—

If the baby would only sleep!

Ah, poet, think you 'twere heaven on earth
If the baby's prattle no longer made mirth?
If the little papoose from the hour of its birth
Could take care of itself, would mother be worth
The love she bestows on cap and bib,
As baby crows and cooes in its crib,

If the baby did nothing but sleep?

How Faith Came Back.

The corn waved and the tall wheat began to turn from green to gold. The farmers gathered in the horse sheds before the Sunday morning service and talked hopefully of the crop. Then they went inside and listened to the sermon, and returned home with feelings of comfort and satisfaction. In that quiet, prosperous, and upright farming community, with corn still in the cribs and harvests hopeful, it was easy to believe God good.

The heat grew. The day became sultry and the night was hot. The next day thick clouds shut in the hot air and reflected it back and forth from earth to sky, and as the day wore on, the breathless calm grew oppressive. An hour before the sun went down there came a sudden darkness, and out of the west stalked a great, whirling funnel, reaching from sky to earth. It came on with an ominous hum that increased to a roar. In its track were desolation and terror. Night fell an hour before its time, and a fearful night it was. The blackness seemed unnatural in its intensity, and the absence of familiar objects sent men groping, bewildered, through the wreckage of their own dooryards.

Soon lanterns flickered, and little parties of men gathered to give assistance where it was needed. The rain beat upon them, and the lightning that now and then rent the darkness gave them momentary visions that struck terror to their hearts. Fences were gone, trees were uprooted or twisted off, crops were completely ruined, buildings were demolished or unroofed. Now and then a cry out of the blackness guided the searchers to where a neighbor lay imprisoned in the wreckage of his house, or crushed and suffering under a fallen tree. By noon the next day forty-three bodies had been recovered, and every house that was left standing was a hospital.

When the farmers went forth after that awful night, and looked again on the earth so changed, a sudden and overpowering atheism came over their minds. Where was God? How could such things happen if God really lived and loved? During the next days this undefined and muttered feeling swept through the whole community. It rose all unbidden and unexpected, like the tornado itself, and like that desolating cloud, it swept over men's souls. The minister, who had been with the searchers all night after the storm, and since then had gone from home to home, stood, within the space of two days, beside forty-three new graves, and heard women wailing and saw men sitting stolid and tearless. How could he make them believe that God was good? The words he sought to utter would not come at his bidding. He read the promises of God, and poured out his heart in prayer. But his listeners sat stolid and tearless, or wept with a grief uncontrolled and uncomforted.

But one great and pressing need was upon them all, and all who were alive and able gave themselves to meet it. There were wounded to be nursed and homeless to be sheltered and houses to be made habitable; and so the living members of the community joined in a new and closer brotherhood for service. Nor were they alone in this. From distant farms and from other communities came offers of help, and help without offers. Help came, more than could be used, food and raiment and labor. In the track of the storm sprang up and bloomed the seeds of unexpected kindness. A week before, every man had wrought for his own household and farm. Now there was labor and love for all.

It was this that brought the reaction. The whole community felt it, and responded to it. The minister felt it, and it opened his lips with a new message. Another Sunday came, and they gathered again in the little church. The steeple was gone and the windows were broken, and many seats were empty. But when the minister thanked God for human kindness that helped men to believe in the love of God, there was an outburst of grateful tears. The people had found again their faith in God.—Selected.

Do Your Best.

Some people will never assist in any good work, unless in doing so they can outshine everybody else. If they can not excel as singers, they will not sing at all; and if they can not speak in meeting better than anyone else, they will remain silent; if they can not teach a Sunday school class as well as the most expert and experienced, they decline teaching altogether. Now, this is as if a man should refuse to be good or do any good whatever unless he could be and do more good than anyone else. This is just what the unprofitable servant did. We all know what he got for declining to do the best he could with his one talent. The widow's mite was more than all who gave of their abundance. The poor woman of Bethany shines as a star for ever and ever because she did what she could and what no one else would. God requires of no one impossibilities. He simply demands of us according to our capabilities. He asks only a return of what he has already given us—nothing more. To refuse to give this because it is not equal to what others may render, is sinful in the highest degree. Let us do what we can. To do less than this will bring upon us condemnation. To do our best—no matter how small that may be—is our imperative duty.—Selected.

Herald Editors: I am on the battle ground where the fight is to take place August 29 between W. H. Boles, Campbellite, and the Englishman for the Saints. For two or three years the Campbellites have been in the habit of spewing out something about our church. So at last our people took the matter up and propositions agreed to. W. H. Boles is the man to do the thing up just right. Curtis and Moore have debated with him in the past. We came out with our colors still flying with the best thinking people on our side and baptized eight fine people, all grown and three of them Missionary Baptists, and one of them the sister of Reverend Tucker, the man that raised the fuss. This Reverend Tucker is an apostle of the Baptist Church, so Moore said, when driven to the wall on every other point.

This Reverend Tucker has been using the Saints' church each month, and the Saints thought he was getting too fresh sailing into our people, so this debate was gotten up; the Baptist submitting the proposition, with ours last. That gave Moore an advantage to sling mud, which was his stock in trade, and like all the kind, he knew more about that than the Bible. But Frank met him on everything and the truth was nicely set forth and by the results it is plain that there were some, even among the Baptists, who did not indorse Moore's methods and especially that part when he offered Brother Curtis a bottle of arsenic labeled, "Poison," from a Missionary Baptist druggist.

All passed off very nicely until the close, when they wanted the bottle back, but Brother Curtis would not hand it over. Moore and his moderator got quite warm and called us thieves and other pretty names, and in fact they got scared up over the bottle.

This is some of the goods the Baptist promised to hand over, and so they did, and we have the goods, bottle and all. I am glad that God is raising up such men as Frank to defend our cause. The work is safe in God's hands with Frank as mouth-piece.

Dear Herald: As my subscription to your welcome pages has almost expired, I thought I would renew at once as I do not want to miss a copy. The HERALD and Ensign are a great comfort to me. I don't know how I would get along without them, being isolated from the Saints as I am. I long for the association of the Saints and wish I could live where I could attend meetings.

We have but very little preaching of any kind at this place. The Methodists have preaching the first Sunday of each month and the Baptists the third Sunday from now on, I understand. I would be so glad if some of the elders could get down this way. I haven't heard a sermon by the Saints for twelve years this month. I think good might be done here if the elders would come. I feel to say that the Lord has been good to myself and children since I have been trying to live nearer to him. In the years 1906-7 he saw fit to take three members of my family by death. While it was hard to part with them, I feel that there was an all wise purpose in it, and I feel resigned to say, Thy will, O Lord, be done, not mine. Dear Saints, it is my desire to live a pure, upright life, so that when the summons comes I will be ready to meet my dear Savior.

I inclose a card given to me by one of my neighbors. It was given to her father several years ago by two elders who were traveling through the country where they then lived. I told her that they were Salt Lake Mormons. She said she did not see anything wrong with that doctrine, meaning that on the card. I told her they did not live up to the teachings on that card. This spring I received a number of their tracts, but they did not convert me to their belief. I appreciated the tracts sent out by the Reorganization in reply to them.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may have wisdom to teach my dear children the principles of the gospel and that they may accept the gospel and be saved with the redeemed of Israel. It is my daily prayer.

Yours for the truth,

MRS. L. A. TYSON.

FAIRFIELD, ILLINOIS, August 10, 1910.

Saints' Herald: This finds me in the Southeastern Illinois District. Just closed a six day debate with Elder W. J. Moore, of the Missionary Baptist Church. Five persons have united with us since the debate started, two of them from the Missionary Baptist Church. One lady (who is now a sister), Mattie A. Colvin, is a sister to the leading Missionary Baptist preacher in this part of the country. His name is Tucker. The debate here was held in the Saints' church at Dry Fork, and was well attended. The house was full and overflowing. The Saints feel encouraged and several who were prejudiced against us before are now our friends, and we may have to trouble the waters again before we leave.

Just before the debate here I held another meeting at Brush Creek church where so many were baptized last year. Seven were baptized this time, making over one hundred there during the last year. Since the debate at Higbee, Missouri, that I held with W. G. Roberts, of the Campbellite Church, I see by his paper, the Octographic Review for July 19, 1910, that he has published a statement that misrepresents the facts in the case. His statement in his paper is as follows: "The debate at Higbee, Missouri, closed last Tuesday night with a full house and everybody glad but Apostle J. F. Curtis and his brethren. The apostle was mad all the way through. One night he jumped up while I was speaking and wanted to fight, it seemed, but I was too big a coward. He struck at me, or my arm, but did not hit me. A miss is as good as a mile, hence I am still alive. Well, I gave him a little lecturing and he tried to be good most of the time after, but could not keep in a good humor. The audience broke loose and cheered me a few times until they could be heard most all over town. The apostle could not raise a laugh among his own brethren. One Mormon left them during the debate."

The debate lasted eight nights. Mr. Robert Marton, superintendent, was chairman of the debate the first four nights and resigned because of the bad conduct of Mr. Roberts. Dr. G. M. Nichols was then selected and acted as chairman the next three nights. Being called out of town to answer a sick call, Rev. C. S. Hargis, a minister of the Free Methodist Church acted as chairman the last night of the debate. On seeing Mr. Roberts' statement I wrote to Elder William Kelso, who is president of our branch of the church at Higbee, and he called on the three men that acted as chairman and showed them the statement published by Roberts. They gave to Brother Kelso the following statement:

"HIGBEE, MISSOURI, July 26, 1910.

"MR. WILLIAM KELSO,

"HIGBEE, MISSOURI.

Dear Sir: Replying to your request for a statement regarding the truthfulness of the printed statement in the Octographic Review given me and which I have read carefully, I must say, it is certainly a very wild distortion of the facts. The conduct of Mr. Curtis during the time I was chairman of the meeting described was that of a perfect gentlemen at all times, and was in marked contrast to that of his opponent, Mr. Roberts, to whose very ungentlemanly conduct at all times may be ascribed my refusal to act any longer as chairman during the debate.

"Yours very truly,

"ROBERT MARTON,

"Superintendent Northern Central Coal Company."

Dr. G. M. Nichol's statement is as follows:

"HIGBEE, MISSOURI, July 26, 1910.

"To Whom it May Concern: This is to certify that I was chosen chairman at the debate held at my town by Brothers Roberts and Curtis for three nights and I can cheerfully state that Brother Curtis was not angry while I was chairman and was a perfect gentleman in every respect. While he was roughly treated on several occasions he maintained control of himself perfectly every time.

"Respectfully,

"G. M. NICHOLS, M. D."

The third and last chairman, Rev. C. S. Hargis, states as follows:

"HIGBEE, MISSOURI, July 27, 1910.

"To Whom it May Concern: This is to certify that I attended the debate at this place between J. F. Curtis and W. G. Roberts, four nights, acting as chairman one of the nights, and can truthfully say that said J. F. Curtis acted the gentleman in every respect, and was a fair and logical debater.

"C. S. HARGIS, Chairman."

The three men were not connected with either church. Brother Kelso says that the statement of Roberts that "One Mormon left them during the debate" is not true.

Yours for the truth,

J. F. CURTIS.

SEDLEY, SASKATCHEWAN, August 12, 1910.

Editors Herald: Ofttimes we have felt to write your valuable columns the progress of the work in these regions and throughout the Saskatchewan District in general. As a whole, we believe the work is in a progressive state, and many new openings are being made and a number coming forward and accepting the angel message. Branches are being organized; some called to the priesthood; thus the work is progressing.

The writer was invited to Weyburn Branch a few days ago and said the words that joined together for life, Sr. Lizzie Neill and Mr. Andrew Jansen, both of Weyburn Plains. They start their journey through life together amid the best wishes of their many friends.

Apostle F. A. Smith has been in our district since June. He has the confidence, respect, and love of all whom he has met and is accomplishing good as he journeys from branch to branch. Our missionaries are all busy in their respective fields of labor, and are making friends for the gospel. A number of the local priesthood have made some splendid openings of late and we look for a nice ingathering as the result of their efforts. Temporarily things are prosperous most all over Saskatchewan.

Faithfully,

T. J. JORDAN.

WAKEENEY, KANSAS, August 15, 1910.

Dear Herald: I am still in the field of the Northwestern Kansas District, trying to push my work as a missionary, but so far as I can see, am doing but little good. Somehow it seems that most every condition that exists here is against the progress of the work. The man who labors as a missionary in this field has to learn to content himself with many fruitless efforts. The people here who are not of the faith are clever and friendly enough, but are almost absolutely unconcerned in the gospel work and I think they aim to remain so.

There are two things that are plentiful out here and I suppose they are very necessary; they are wind and territory, and it takes both of them to run a missionary's business successfully, still I would greatly appreciate a few more favorable conditions.

The Saints are so scattered that there are not enough of them in one community to do very much in church work among themselves. There are two Sunday schools in the district, one at Alexander and one at Wakeeney. I visited their place the first of June and found three or four families of Saints in this part surrounded with people who care nothing about our work, but in spite of all this, the Saints have organized and are running a little Sunday school here. Yesterday, the 14th, was their second lesson since organized and the writer was permitted to meet with them in their little Sunday school work. It was indeed a bright and happy day to me and I think it was the same to the little band present. Most everyone seemed to be fully enthused with the spirit of the lesson, that being the spirit of unity and the good Lord poured out his Spirit upon us in such a degree that I was sorry when the lesson hour closed.

Bro. Charley Ethridge, of Cameron, Missouri, was with us, which added much to our pleasure, as we believe him to be a true man of God. This is the first Sunday school of the Saints that I have met with in this district and it was so enjoyable that I forgot all about the unpleasant conditions that surround us and enjoyed to a great degree the sweet and peaceful influence of the good Spirit throughout the day in each service; so I really felt encouraged in the great gospel work, though I have preached but few times this summer. I expect to push on and do what I can though it be little and leave the result with the Lord. Those who like big reports need not come to this field. May the work of the Lord move on to victory and bring peace and happiness to everyone of his Saints is my prayer, in the name of Christ,

In gospel bonds,

S. H. FIELDS.

DUNSMORE, SOUTH DAKOTA, July 31, 1910.

My mind has been filled with the thought of writing to you all morning and so much so that I have taken up my pen and began. The thought that has been in my mind is relative to the tracts that were sent out last winter by the Northern States Mission, and the comments that have been made and published. While I have been interested in each comment and the attitude of the different Saints that have spoken, and do not feel to criticize, there comes a thought to me that we should not spurn the idea of some one presuming to tell us where we are mistaken or in the wrong, and from my experience the safest course is to listen to anyone who thinks he has a message for us. It does not follow that we must adopt what they bring to us, but to prove a thing seems wisest, in view of the fact that the truth can not suffer eventually by anything that can be said against it. The truth seeker should not feel alarmed, because all things support and verify the truth if but pressed far enough, and we should not feel nettled that some one should send us a tract that conflicts with the truth as we understand it, or say stinging words. It may seem very absurd and irrational; it may be a falsehood, but to have the best effect upon those that might be in a condition to weigh matters and be benefited by what we might say, it is best to speak in a simple and considerate manner, with feeling for those in error.

It is a good thing to expose error and present the truth with enthusiasm and interest, but to do so and retain the consciousness that we have not injured the cause nor our own standing by our demeanor is one of the fine arts and truly a blessed one. For my part, if anyone feels he has something of interest to me and thinks enough of me to send me a tract of whatever nature, I will gladly accept it, but must reserve the right to act upon my own judgment and feelings. The tracts in question have been a source of education, for no doubt all who received them and read their contents began a diligent search for facts with which to reinforce their position, and in so doing, if the search is continued sufficiently, will discover what they were looking for and praying for, the truth. I heartily agree or concur in the expressed view that "All Brighamite roads lead to polygamy"; but reading the tracts, "Corner stones of the Reorganization," "Reorganization weighed," "The Reorganization vs. salvation for the dead," and "Polygamy from a non-Mormon view point," bring out old and in some instances new the evidences both pro and con and undoubtedly will bring out tracts setting forth fully the answers, which will be a support to those who have not hitherto known the details in the case; and surely in this case, the Reorganization has not suffered. For instance, "Reorganization weighed" means that every other organization must be weighed, and who of the Reorganization would object to such a thing? And who could possibly be injured by such an event? Because when we read all the history of authority and succession and the revelations upon the subject and compare the two organizations, a preponderance of evidence is strongly in favor of the Reorganization.

Again, "Corner stones,"—Who will object to knowing all that can be revealed about William Marks, Zenos H. Gurley, W. T. W. Blair, and Samuel Powers; for the most striking suggestion in the tract is, Who are Joseph F. Smith, Reed Smoot, Roberts, and others that have gone before and those now living of the Utah organization? From whence came their authority according to the true history of the church and revelation? Who will suffer by a comparison? And again, "Reorganization vs. Salvation for the dead": Have not all who wish to become posted upon the subject read up on the subject, learned under what circumstances the rite may be performed as well as the place where, and that to do so otherwise would be of as little benefit as to be baptized by a sectarian minister? Has not the tract been a decided benefit to all "Reorganites" and in fact to all who read by even suggesting a consideration of the question? For instance the position taken by the Reorganization is that it is a local commandment and has a specific meaning and application. "Local" means in a certain locality, in a certain place. Read the revelation on the subject and see if there was not a place designated by the Lord where such a rite might be performed, and further, to show that it was (is) a privilege as well as a commandment and must be exercised under special endowment. How am I to know when I am to be baptized for my dead friends and for which ones and when and where that it may be acceptable to the Lord, without special endowments? Has there been any other place designated by the Lord than the one mentioned in the revelation? If so I have not seen it. Then who is right in the face of the evidence?

Then, the crowning effort comes in the tract, "Polygamy, from a non-Mormon view point." While it seems a travesty of, or upon, the subject and imposition upon all that have read and understand the subject as revealed in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, nevertheless it is a fulfillment of the Scripture, That which is spoken in secret shall be revealed from the house top.

Who is there that is willing to take as conclusive the resolutions of the different denominations mentioned in the tract? While I am sorry to see any following such an erroneous doctrine, I feel to rejoice that it reveals more fully, by contrast, the true light, and I say to the Northern States Mission, Send along any tract you may feel like sending. I will read them carefully and give you credit for whatever good I may receive. Brethren, let us advertise the truth to the ends of the earth.

Have just received the tract, "Corner stones of the Utah church," and how anyone can chide the "Reorganite" people in the face of the history is a mystery to me. Two of the Utah church were in Seneca, that is our town, preaching on the streets, which gave occasion for me to point out the differences and at the same time make a strong talk for the restored gospel, which I hope soon to follow up and let them hear some further facts. How blind the world seems, all denominations, when you speak to them of the priesthood, authority, definite church organizations, and so many other points. How stubbornly and blindly they resist such fact, but they claim their churches all right and their work approved of the Lord. That we may all come and succeed to perfection is my prayer.

Your brother in bonds,

C. F. PRATT.

KINISTINO, SASKATCHEWAN, August 7, 1910.

Dear Herald: You are a welcome visitor to my home; in fact I don't know what I should do without you, as there are no Saints within twenty miles that I know of. I with my family moved here last spring from Union, Ontario, where I had lived for seven years. I was baptized in Saint Thomas fourteen years ago, by Elder Evans, and confirmed by him. Since then I have received many blessings. I have no desire to go back to the world but rather go on in this work and do all I can to help build up Zion. I feel sometimes as though the Lord was not pleased with my efforts, but one night last week while meditating upon these thoughts, I prayed to God that if he was pleased with me to give me some manifestation, and asked that a certain thing be granted me within twenty-four hours as an evidence of the same, and long before that time had elapsed my prayer was answered. Thank God, for he is ever ready to own and bless all who try to do his will and keep his commandments.

Your sister in the one faith,

FANNIE JEWELL.

HENRYETTA, OKLAHOMA.

Dear Herald: I love this work and want to do all I can for it, yet I realize that will not be much. One night I was thinking, "If I could only do something for this work." I went to sleep and dreamed that something said to me, "You will help spread this gospel from pole to pole." When I awoke, I thought, I can't do that, for I am a woman, and I studied about it, so told mother my dream and she said, "Yes, it is possible to help spread the gospel by warning our neighbors and speaking a word for the Lord when opportunity affords us a chance." I have several chances here and will try to tell you of them, with the help of the Lord.

The first was at a cottage prayer meeting at Sister Davis' house. It was a Holiness prayer meeting, but there were a few Methodists and a few Latter Day Saints there. The lady presiding read a chapter in the Bible and made the statement that there was enough in that chapter to save anyone. Yes, she said, even in one of these prayer meetings if we would live up to it. Toward the last, I got up and said I thought we should take the Bible as a whole, that most anything could be proven by picking out passages here and there, and that I knew that there was only one true church on earth and that it was set up on Christ, set up with apostles, prophets, priests, teachers, and deacons, and with the same gifts and blessings that he put in it.

After the meeting a Holiness missionary lady was sent to my house to show me where I was wrong, I suppose, and in our talk she asked me the question, "Do you think water baptism essential to salvation?" I assured her that I did; if I believed the Bible I would have to.

She said, "Why, that is taking all the honor from the blood of Christ, for he shed his blood for the sins of the world."

I said, "So he did, but baptism is one of the requirements of the law of God and God does not give any foolish commandments, and if it was necessary for Christ, a perfect being, to be baptized to fulfill all righteousness, how much more necessary for us!"

She said, "Do you think it is for remission of sins?"

I said, "I do." She said it wasn't in the Bible, so I told her to turn to Acts 2: 38. She did so and seemed perfectly surprised, and read it over and over. I then asked her if the church was set up with apostles, prophets, priests, teachers, and deacons, and she said, "We don't have priests, that is too much like Catholicism and that isn't in the Bible." We searched the Bible, but could find nothing about priests, so I told her I knew it was there or pretty sure it was, and would come to Grandma Hicks', one of their sisters, the next night to their prayer meeting and that I would have it looked up by that time and show her.

She said, "I don't think you can find it, and if you can't your church must be wrong." I went the next day to Brother Day's, and went the next night, as I promised, but she was not there. I told them of the discussion we had had the day before. I told them that I was mistaken as to how it read, but the Bible said in many places that priests were necessary. The Bible said, "God set some in the church," etc., but that it didn't name deacons there any more than priests, but almost all churches believed in deacons, and I showed them in other passages of scripture even how their wives should be. A Methodist preacher got up and said if we were earnest and sincere, we were all right, no difference what church we belonged to. I asked him, "What are you going to do with that passage of scripture where it says, one God, one faith, and one baptism? You know there are many different ideas of God to-day; many different faiths and many different modes of baptism on earth to-day." He said, "I didn't come here to argue scripture." I told him I didn't either, but the Bible says, "Bring forth your strong reasoning." He again asked, "Do you believe we will be raised with these same bodies?" I said, "Job says, 'Though skin worms eat this body, yet in my flesh will I see God.'" He said, "Do you believe it will be the same identical body, not changed?" I said, "It may lack the blood, I don't know; but when Christ came to his disciples and they were afraid, thinking he was a Spirit, he said, Handle me and see. Spirits have not flesh and bones as you see me have."

If I were a man and were called to preach the gospel, nothing on earth would make me happier. I don't see how some can feel to shrink from it. It doesn't seem like I would, unless I felt the Spirit's presence was not with me, then it would be something to be dreaded. I would rather be a preacher of this blessed gospel, if I could have the Spirit's presence with me like our elders have, and such good understanding and knowledge, than to be President of the United States or even king of the whole earth. These would seem but small honors in comparison, but if we all could but have the Spirit's presence with us all the time our trials and temptations that now seem like mountains would seem but mole-hills.

Yours in gospel bonds,

ROSA FRANCIS.

Righteousness.

If we as Saints of the most high God were to search for something better than righteousness, where will we find it? We may seek after pleasures of this world, but it will not bring so much pleasure and peace to the soul or inner man as will righteousness, yet we know that righteousness is not popular among worldly pleasure seekers of to-day. A righteous person should not be bound among the class that are not trying to follow after the things of God. Can a person live a righteous life? is a question that is often asked. The Bible says we can awake to righteousness and sin not. (See 1 Timothy 6: 11.) The question may be asked, Why do we not all live righteous lives in this world, "For the grace of God" and the plan of salvation are free to all men, "teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world" (Titus 2: 11, 12)? How long can a person live righteously if he desires to do so? "Blessed are they that keep judgment, and he that doeth righteousness at all times."—Psalm 106: 3. (See Luke 1: 74, 75; 1 Peter 2: 22; 1 John 3: 3; 1 John 3: 7; 1 John 4: 17.)

What must we hunger after? "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled."—Matthew 5: 6.

What is it that we are persecuted for? For teaching the truth and striving to serve the Master: "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 5: 10. "But and if ye suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye."—1 Peter 3: 14.

What is the effect of righteousness? "And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance for ever."—Isaiah 32: 17. "And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace."—James 3: 18.

What kind of paths must we make for our feet? "And make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way; but let it rather be healed."—Hebrews 12: 13. "He leadeth me in paths of righteousness for his name's sake."—Psalm 23: 3.

The prayers of whom does the Lord hear? "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."—James 5: 16. "The righteous cry, and the Lord heareth, and delivereth them out of all their troubles."—Psalm 34: 17. "The desire of the righteous shall be granted."—Proverbs 10: 24.

Reader, are you hungering and thirsting after righteousness that ye may be filled and have quietness and assurance for ever, or are you trying to prove to your neighbors that no one can live righteously in this world? Once I did not believe nor try to obey the teachings of the Bible. But I am thankful the Lord did lead me to obey the angel's message. I did not believe in the Bible nor the teachings of the Bible. After hearing the gospel preached, I soon learned that the Bible was full of such doctrine, and the only thing I could do was to believe the doctrine or disbelieve the book. Thank the Lord that the gospel is again restored in its fullness, with signs following the believer, and that God called men to preach and to lift up righteousness and to fight sin. If you desire to make sure of heaven you had better live right and do as the Bible teaches, letting the Bible be your guide. Not what some man writes, advertises, or tells.

Your brother,

W. R. RUSH.

Reunion at Myrtle Point, Oregon.

On July 22, at 2.30 p. m., J. H. Hunt, of the reunion committee of the Southwestern Oregon District, called a meeting for the purpose of organizing for the reunion. Apostle F. M. Sheehy was elected to preside with T. W. and F. J. Chatburn as assistants; Frances L. Keeler as secretary; F. J. Chatburn as chorister, who selected as organist Maude McCracken, and assistant, Kate Chatburn; Frank W. Dygert as usher, and assistant, H. Hunt; Elder A. A. Baker, president, as marshal and H. Hunt assistant. The best of order was maintained throughout the reunion. The services were held in the new church building while an adjoining grove furnished ample room and beautiful shade for the campers, who with many others domiciled in the town, enjoyed the ideal weather of this fine climate. The meetings were spiritual and uplifting, all enjoying the especially grand sermons of our minister in charge. Other speakers were: T. W. Chatburn, "Jots Man," F. J. Chatburn, J. C. Clapp, E. Keeler, A. A. Baker, and T. B. Nerrenlate, of Colorado.

Five were baptized by F. J. Chatburn, president of the Myrtle Point Branch. Six children were blessed and a number of administrations to the sick and afflicted. On Sunday, July 31, the church building was dedicated at 11 a. m. The sermon being by our venerable Bro. J. C. Clapp, a pioneer missionary of Oregon, assisted by F. M. Sheehy. The dedicatory prayer was offered by T. W. Chatburn, sub-missionary in charge. This building is unique in design and a credit to the Saints of Myrtle Point and friends who so generously contributed toward its erection. The attendance of the town people was large, especially so on evenings and Sundays. Much has been done here in a few years in overcoming great prejudice and the Saints stand well in the community. Elder E. Keeler and wife, now of Portland, were in attendance, who greatly enjoyed meeting old friends and neighbors, they having lived here for four years, doing much toward building up the work at Myrtle Point. One marriage was solemnized directly after the reunion by Elder E. Keeler, Elder A. A. Baker, district president, taking for his assistant, Sr. Lena M. Christensen, of Bandon, Oregon. May God's choicest blessings be theirs.

F. L. KEELER, Secretary.

News From Branches

CENTRAL CHICAGO.

Sunday, August 7. Very few tardy marks at Sunday school and trust we will be able to report that some Sunday there were not any. Sacrament service was in charge of Elders F. G. Pitt and P. Pement, very good spirit, and Brother Pitt left his parting blessing on the branch. How many blessings are promised if we are only humble and prayerful, filled with love, and dwell together in unity. Brother Pitt has given us much good counsel the last few months and we regret his departure soon to his mission field in foreign lands, but our prayers will ascend for him that he may be protected and blessed at all times. Brother Pitt occupied in the evening, the leading thought being, "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good."

Many visitors in our city attending the Knights Templar Conclave, and so many people are anxious to attend the different receptions, etc. Will the time ever come when so many will be interested in the eternal life? Illuminations were very fine, and the decorations beautiful. No visiting Saints at our prayer meeting Wednesday night, so wonder if there are many in the city.

Mr. Paul Parkhurst and his wife, Sister Frances, are spending their vacation this week away from the noisy city.

Our Religio have been planning a picnic next Saturday afternoon and evening at Jackson Park.

Sr. Henry Keir, with her four children, are sojourning in South Haven, Michigan, this week, her cousin, Mrs. George Brown, and daughter Sadie accompanying them on their trip on Friday, the 5th, and returning Monday.

The reunion of the Northeastern Illinois District will be held at Plano, Illinois, from the 19th to the 29th of August, and we trust a number of the Chicago and West Pullman Saints will be able to attend.

Sunday, August 14. Elder Pitt preached his farewell sermon this morning. He starts on his long journey of some sixteen thousand miles this week. He says that inasmuch as the church failed to furnish him an associate as the law, "Two by two," provides, it seemed necessary for him to choose a companion for himself. His choice being Sr. Rosa Parks, of Joliet, Illinois, who besides being a cultured lady is an active church worker. Besides her musical talent she is now studying shorthand and typewriting in order to be of further assistance to her companion. We understand the wedding will be at Joliet, August 17, after which they will immediately start on their journey.

The following is from the Joliet News of August 4: "Miss Rosa J. Parks, daughter of Mrs. Agnes Parks; 111 Blackman avenue, will be married August 17 to Frederick G. Pitt, at the home of her mother. Miss Parks is a popular teacher in the Joliet Conservatory, having been graduated in music under the famous August Hylstedt, now of Glasgow, Scotland. Mr. Pitt is an evangelist and singer, who has traveled extensively in the United States and Europe. Immediately after the wedding they will leave on a trip around the world, expecting to be away two or three years. They will start east, stopping en route at Niagara Falls, Buffalo, and Albany, New York, reaching New York City via the Hudson River. About September 3 they will sail for Liverpool, and after visiting several cities in England they will travel through France, Switzerland, Italy, to Rome and Naples, and then sail for Alexandria. A short stay in Egypt will be followed by a visit to Palestine for a few weeks. From there they sail for Australia, and will perhaps spend a year or two teaching through that country, then return home by way of San Francisco."

Elder Tanner united the above mentioned couple in marriage at 5 p. m. Wednesday.

"God be with you till me weet again."

Elder Tanner occupied in the evening, taking for his subject, "Charity," and we learned how much we lack that Christian grace in many ways. If we had charity, the true love of God, how much we might be able to accomplish in our daily work.

At the close of prayer meeting Wednesday evening a short business session was held, delegates were elected to the conference at Plano, and Elder Pement resigned as president of the branch on account of not having time to devote to the work. Elder J. A. Tanner was elected to fill the vacancy.

Convention Minutes.

SASKATCHEWAN.—The second semiannual convention of the Saskatchewan District Religio met at Regina, June 30, 1910, Sr. Nellie Ferrie, district president, in the chair, and H. J. Davison assisting. First session, devotional exercises and addresses, was very enjoyable. At the business session, reports from General Convention delegates were read, financial and otherwise. Balance returned from amount paid delegate, $2. Officers elected as follows: Sr. Nellie Ferrie, president; Bro. A. R. Toovey, vice-president; Sr. Mae Williams, secretary; Bro. John R. Neill, treasurer; Sr. A. E. Nunn, librarian; Sr. Estella Toovey, home department superintendent. By order arrangement was made to meet at next convention on Thursday, preceding the next district conference. The conference arranged to meet on December 29, 1910, with the Minnesota Branch near Vanscoy, notice to be published at least four weeks previously. Resolved, That the convention defray traveling expenses of the secretary. Reports and addresses show that the work is growing and hopes are large for a good convention next winter. Mae Williams, secretary.

Conference Notices.

The New York District will convene at Greenwood, New York, September 17, 1910, at 10 a. m. All branch clerks will see to it that reports of their respective branches are in the hands of the district secretary, Sr. Lyla Schofield, 101 North Ashland avenue, Buffalo, New York, in time to be presented to the conference. It would be better to send them a week ahead; if this is impracticable, send or bring them to the conference. Hyrum O. Smith, president, Buffalo, New York.

The New York and Philadelphia District will convene in conference at Bass Point, near Manasquan, New Jersey, on the 3d of September, 1910, at 10.30 a. m. Branch clerks will kindly mail statistical reports to district secretary at as early a date as possible. R. E. Hockman, secretary, 213 West Penn street, Germantown, Pennsylvania.

The Northeastern Kansas district conference will begin August 27 instead of August 22, as first published. F. E. Taylor.

Conference of the Northeastern Illinois District will meet with the Plano Branch, August 27, 1910. Send all reports to W. E. Williamson in care of Bro. F. M. Cooper, Plano, Illinois. W. E. Williamson, secretary.

Convention Notices.

Eastern Colorado District Religio and Sunday school will meet in joint convention at Denver, Colorado, corner of Speer boulevard and Logan street, Thursday evening, September 3, at 8 p. m., and continue over Friday. C. E. Crayne, Religio president, Louisa Fishburn, Sunday school superintendent.

Reunion Notices.

Those coming from or via Philadelphia, travel over Pennsylvania railroad from Market street wharf, leaving there at 9.28 a. m. and 1.30 p. m. Those coming from or via New York travel over either Pennsylvania railroad, leaving Cortland street at 9 a. m. and 12.30 p. m., or by New Jersey Central railroad, Sandy Hook route, leaving foot of Cedar street at 9.15 a. m. and 1 p. m. Tents, cots, and board during sessions of conference only on September 3, 4, and 5. Those expecting to attend who have not received an order blank, kindly notify Bishop John Zimmermann, 1512 Allegheny avenue, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, prior to August 25. After that date to Manasquan, New Jersey, in care of John A. McGuire. Elders U. W. Greene, F. G. Pitt, William Anderson, and W. W. Smith, and others, will be present. All are welcome. Benjamin R. McGuire, secretary reunion committee.

The western Iowa reunion will be held at Little Sioux, Iowa, from September 9 to 18 inclusive. Besides district workers, we will have with us, J. W. Wight, Heman C. Smith, and expect S. W. L. Scott. Sister Etzenhouser will have charge of the Sunday school and Religio work. Meals, fuel, and feed for teams will be furnished as cheaply as possible. Those wishing board and lodging please make your wants known as soon as you can to S. J. Linn, Little Sioux. Rent for tents is as follows: Wall tents, 10 by 12, $1.75; 12 by 14, $2; compartment tents, 12 by 14, $3.75; 10 by 20, $4.25. No charge for setting up. That there be no disappointment, please order your tents accompanied by the cash by the 1st of September. We expect this to be one of the best reunions held in western Iowa, and if you will all come with the Spirit of the Master, our expectations will be more than realized. Geo. Miggers, secretary, Little Sioux, Iowa. 34-2t

Two-Day Meetings.

There are hereby appointed two-day meetings in the following named branches of the Nodaway, Missouri, District: Sweet Home Branch, August 27 and 28, in charge of Elders T. A. Ivie and E. S. Having purchased the Oxford Café in Albia, Iowa, we will be pleased to have all those traveling in the interest of the cause, stop with us.
BRO. AND SR. D. MILLER.

Request for Prayer.

Sr. Margaret Lewis, 1224 Luzerne street, Scranton, Pennsylvania, writes: "Sr. Mary Lewis, of Scranton, Pennsylvania, earnestly desires all the Saints everywhere to pray for her that if it be the will of the Lord, she may be healed of an affliction that has troubled her for over two years. It is evident that she has gone beyond the aid of the physicians and surgeons and patiently waits upon the Lord to restore her to health if it be his will."

Died.

DAVIS.—Mr. Dwight Davis died at Oskaloosa, Iowa, July 30, 1910, of Bright's disease, aged 55 years, 9 months, and 1 day. He had a long illness, yet was quite resigned and submissive. Not a member of the church, but Sister Davis is the daughter of Sr. Marietta Walker, the well-known author of many writings for the gospel work. He leaves wife and three sons, noble boys of six, twelve, and sixteen years. Mr. Davis' body was brought to Lamoni for burial. Bro. H. A. Stebbins preached the sermon, and Bro. J. F. Garver had charge of the service.

PARKER.—Mary E. McDonald Parker died at Mountainville, Maine, July 4, 1910, of tuberculosis. She was born at Oceanville, Maine, May 5, 1852. Married Mr. Edward Parker in 1882. She leaves husband, three boys, and one girl to mourn. She was baptized at Mountainville, Maine, in 1901. Funeral sermon by Elder U. W. Greene.

BEAL.—Eldon W. Beal was born November 4, 1900, at Beals Island, Maine. A rugged boy, full of life, he was killed by a heavy log falling from a rock upon him. He was a member of the Sunday school. Funeral at the Saints' church; sermon by U. W. Greene, assisted by William Bradbury.

ALLEN.—Beede Everett Allen was born in Cove, Ohio, February 16, 1869. He was baptized April 30, 1884, at Limerick, Ohio. Brother Allen has always been a hard working man, a good citizen, a faithful Saint, a kind neighbor. He leaves two children, Vernie May and Orville Everett. He died May 13, 1910, of pneumonia. Funeral held in the Temple in Kirtland, Ohio. Sermon by Elder U. W. Greene, assisted by Elder J. H. Lake.

ALLEN.—Joel Allen died in Kirtland, Ohio, May 24, 1910, from a combination of diseases brought on by exposure during the war. Forty-six years he had been a sufferer, seventeen years confined to his chair unable to walk. He was baptized June 8, 1878, at Cove, Ohio, by Elder L. R. Devore. Ordained to the office of elder October 29, 1879. He leaves a wife, with whom he had lived fifty-two years, four boys, one girl, and ten grandchildren. Funeral in the Temple. Sermon by U. W. Greene, assisted by J. H. Lake.

MCINTOSH.—Emma McIntosh was born August 11, 1838, at Caldwell County, Missouri. Death came to her July 31, after an illness of eleven months as the result of heart trouble. Married John P. Stephens, October 14, 1856. To this union eight children, five girls and three boys were born, of whom seven survive. Her husband died August 24, 1875. She united with the church January 30, 1865, baptized by C. G. McIntosh at Provo, Utah. Married C. G. McIntosh, August 15, 1886, at Council Bluffs, Iowa. This husband and the surviving children deeply mourn her departure. She was a worthy member, true mother, a loving friend. Funeral services held at L. D. S. church, Crescent, Iowa, August 2, Elder D. R. Chambers officiating.

HALL.—Sr. Mary C. Evans, daughter of Bro. and Sr. T. A. Evans, was born at Arnot, Pennsylvania, May 8, 1881; was married to Mr. G. W. Hall, January 1, 1901. After an illness of three weeks she passed away August 2, 1910, leaving husband, two small children, parents, five sisters, and three brothers to mourn. Funeral services at the Saints' chapel, Bevier, Missouri, August 4, 1910, by W. B. Richards and F. T. Mussell.

MOORE.—Irene Bernice and Eileen Inza were twins, born to Bro. and Sr. George E. Moore, on July 19, 1908. They were blessed by J. M. Terry, May 23, 1909. They were both taken back to the Father from their home in Berkeley, California, the former April 29, and the latter August 4, 1910.

Both buried from the same undertaking parlors. The arrangement and services were quite the same. The sermons by J. M. Terry. This double affliction falls heavily upon these tender-hearted parents, but with resignation upon their part.

Retaliation.

There is a glory among us of getting even by retaliation. We, as a rule, think that things swing more evenly this way than any other.

If somebody does something to us that is disagreeable we think: "Oh, never mind, something will happen to him some day just as bad."

We do not think of punishment for the sake of making the world better, but for the sake of getting even with just this one man.

What a lot of barbarism there is left in this world after all. How many of us are really living for making the world better, or to show that we have had a good influence?

Would you rather suffer something if by doing so you might make the community understand that you were taking your stand for the right, or would you hang back, preferring a little flash of honor or conspicuousity?

If a man over whom you have control does something wrong, what will you do with him—discharge him? Or do you inquire into his surroundings, his needs and his companions?

How do you know but he has a wife, sick or hungry, and a pile of debts from former illness weighing him down until he doesn't know which way to look?

Maybe he takes five dollars of yours from the desk and puts it in his pocket, fully expecting to return it when things straighten a little for him. The good times do not come to him and he is finally found out. Now, do you stop to find out all about this, or do you say? "Take him away. I can't have dishonest people working for me. If he'd take a small sum he'd take a bigger one and he's a bad risk." So he is sent to jail, where he can not contribute to the support of this family of his which has brought him into all this trouble.

Have you been bettered by the episode? May you not get somebody in his place who will rob you of large sums, instead of five dollars? Would it not have been a better investment for you to look up the reasons for his fall and cancel them by your own aid until he has no pressing anxiety on his mind about his family, then take him back?

Have you thus helped to make the world better? You know that you have made a friend who is yours for life and will help to protect your business from harm instead of ever injuring it.

The longer anybody stays with a business, the more he feels as if it belonged to him, and there is never anybody so faithful as the human being who has been forgiven by the right sort. Men under the circumstances of need become mad and should be healed instead of punished.

There are many judges now who make this a great factor in their judgments, for environment makes crime that would never in the world be committed without it, and feeling that you have gotten even with somebody for something they have done to you, by retaliation, is not to be considered as a remedy.

This retaliation is a humbug, anyway, for what good does it do you to "get even" with somebody by working your head off to get something to happen to them for whatever they've done.

Better start at once to see what is the matter with the man. What has he to aggravate him until he can't be civil? What is there in his life that brings up the pride in a great, big choke in his throat whenever he thinks of it and makes him unsovable.

Send to your companions some. Make them like to have you around. That's the secret, for if people like you, you will have no trouble with them.—Arletta B. Canfield.

The story is told that, upon one occasion, a farmer in the neighborhood of the desolate camp at Valley Forge, observed the commanding general dismount from his horse and disappear within an adjacent grove. Drawing nearer, the awed farmer patriot beheld Washington kneeling upon the frozen snow, his hat removed, and his face lifted in the reverent attitude of prayer. It is easy to trace the unflinching patience and determination with which the great man upheld the shivering, starving soldiers who loved him, to his own reliance upon the Source of all strength and wisdom.—The Christian Herald.

Tuberculosis Leads all Contagious Diseases; Very Infectious.

DES MOINES, August 15.—Tuberculosis still leads all contagious and infectious diseases as a death-dealing agent, barring pneumonia. For the first six months of the year 1910, the health department of Iowa shows there were 724 persons died of tuberculosis, 688 having died of tuberculosis of the lungs. In the same period there was none who died of small-pox, 57 of scarlet fever, 42 of measles, 56 of whooping-cough, 91 of diphtheria, 123 of typhoid fever, 78 of appendicitis—a total of 447. From all of these contagious and infectious diseases, together, with appendicitis thrown in for good measure, compared with the number dying of tuberculosis, it will be seen that the white plague is still easily the "captain of the men of death." That this disease is exceedingly infectious is witnessed by the fact that it leads all of the contagious and infectious diseases by a very large per cent. The stealthy character and insidious nature of tuberculosis, destroying as it does, without exciting attention, makes it imperative that restrictive measures be established in every community throughout the State. The people should use the knowledge which they now have on the methods of preventing the spread of this plague. The public drinking cup should be abandoned. It is the most unsanitary thing imaginable. It is an abomination, and no intelligent community should tolerate it. Children in particular should be guarded against its dreadful danger.

The tuberculous dairy cow presents another aspect of danger, which may be considered serious when viewed in the light of the above startling statistics. That tuberculosis abounds in dairy districts is a fact, and the tuberculous animal is a serious menace to the health of a community, this particularly with reference to little children, whose food supply is obtained largely from the dairy.

Anti-spitting ordinances should also be rigidly enforced, and there should be a renewed agitation concerning the perils of careless expectoration in public places.

There are many other ways in our social life through which tuberculosis is spread and it is incumbent upon health and administrative officers in cities and towns throughout the State to diligently endeavor to prevent this scourge from further possibilities of destruction. Economically considered, tuberculosis in the first six months of 1910 cost Iowa $1,574,700, for it should be remembered that tuberculosis is a disease among the young, and that a large percentage of those dying are in the earlier productive years of life. This is a conservative estimate, and would be placed much higher by the most noted authorities conversant with the ravages of this disease.

Let no one be deceived—tuberculosis still easily leads as the most dreadful scourge of mankind, and it is foolish for any community to permit this preventable disease to destroy its best manhood and womanhood. Arise and smite it!

What Makes Mirrors Reflect.

Mirrors that are made of glass have metal placed on one side of the glass. The light will pass through the glass, but will not pass through the metal backing. Light has the property of bounding from a surface that it can not penetrate, the same as a ball would when thrown against a surface that it can not penetrate. The light passes through the glass of the mirror, meets the metal backing, and then bounds from it. This bounding of the light from the metal surface is called reflection, and mirrors are said to reflect.—From "Nature and science" in September Saint Nicholas.

The Twentieth Century Magazine gives more attention to the discussion of social, economic and political problems than any other American review. Each month will be found in its pages, in addition to a number of important essays, a digest of the principal news relating to industrial coöperation, land and taxation, conservation, public ownership, direct legislation, municipal progress, proportional representation, socialism and woman's progress.

The August number will appeal strongly to all persons interested in political and economic questions discussed from a liberal viewpoint. Among the important papers devoted to these subjects are "railway rate extortion," a carefully written, timely and somewhat startling discussion of this very important and live issue, by L. S. Lewis; "Insurance against unemployment," an interesting account of successful experiments being made in the Old World, by Odon Por; "Teaching the young idea how to shoot—civically," a valuable contribution to the progressive municipal literature of the hour, by Glacier Returns Bodies.

Within the past fifty years five hundred tourists and guides have perished on Mont Blanc and the body of every one has been brought down on its slow journey of forty years' duration with the glacier on its movement to the sea. Forty years ago the 7th of next September, John C. Randall of Quincy, Massachusetts, Dr. James B. Bean of Jonesboro, Tennessee, and the Rev. George McCorkindale of Scotland, with a number of guides, were lost in a snow storm on Mont Blanc. On the 16th of the month a rescuing party found Mr. McCorkindale and two of the guides about seven hundred and fifty feet from the summit; about three hundred feet higher they came upon Mr. Bean and another guide seated, the former with his head supported by one hand and his elbow on a knapsack. They hunted in vain for Mr. Randall and the rest of the guides. For four decades Mr. Randall's body has lain in a slow-moving coffin of ice, progressing inch by inch a few hundred feet each year; about him, entombed in ice, are five guides faithful to the last, escorting him back to Chamonix, the place from which they started forty years ago. The Bossons glacier will give up its dead this year within a few days, or weeks at most, of the anniversary day, September 7. Four children await the return of the body of their father. Mr. Randall's widow died in 1891, but Miss Edith Randall, the second child, twice has been abroad to look with awe on the slow-moving ice tomb of her father.—Rev. F. C. Iglehart, in The Christian Herald.

Prayer in Modern Life.

The pious man will not pray for a violation or suspension of any of those fixed expressions of the divine will which we call "the laws of nature." A true instinct warns us not to pray that the law of gravitation may cease to operate when we pass by, nor to pray that the moon should fail to attract the tides, nor to ask that the buried dead should rise from their graves. Prayers for changes in the weather held their ground much longer than other indiscriminating forms of petition, because people did not realize that the apparent irregularities of the weather are as much the result of fixed laws as the revolution of our earth around the sun or the rise and fall of the tides.

On the other hand, we know that no man has ever prayed sincerely without effecting changes in his character that otherwise would never have taken place; and unless all the teaching of modern physiological psychology be false, no man can affect his character without effecting his nervous system, and through the nervous system his entire physical organism.

Psychology has done much to vindicate the reasonableness of prayer by coordinating it with other familiar phenomena of our mental life. For example, some of the workings of prayer are analogous to the results brought about by suggestion and self-suggestion. A man, let us suppose, prays, and invites others to pray with him, that he may have strength to overcome the craving for alcohol. These petitions act as powerful suggestions which, if they are continued long enough, and assuming that there is no serious lesion of the brain, will accomplish the desired result. We know, too, that prayer under certain conditions has in cases of sickness a therapeutic efficacy. The lives of great religious personalities, such as Augustine, Francis of Assisi, and Luther, and the growth of faith-healing and prayer-healing cults in our own time, offer such abundant proof that only ignorance and prejudice can any longer affect to doubt the reality of the alleged phenomena.—From "The new belief in prayer" by the Rev. Samuel McComb, D. D., in September Century.

Loch Leven.

On the memorable night of Queen Mary's escape from Loch Leven Castle a hundred horsemen were concealed among the hills, and several were at Kinross near the loch. As they waited, at half past seven when the guards went to supper they saw a skiff dart out from the island. One of the rowers was Mary herself, who helped the lad who took the precaution of locking the castle and then unnecessarily threw the keys into the loch. Jane Kennedy, one of the Queen's maids, came with her. As the boat touched shore an alarm was sounded from the Castle but it was too late. Mary, mounted on a swift steed, was galloping away with her faithful followers to safety—safety however only for a moment.

Early in the nineteenth century during a drought the bed of the loch appeared and the keys of Loch Leven Castle were found. They are one of the precious relics at Abbotsford. The tale of Mary's imprisonment and escape is entertainingly told in "The Abbot."—From "Aberdeen deeside and central Scotland." "A reading journey through Scotland," Chautauquan, August, 1910.

A VISIT TO THE FEDERAL PRISON AT LEAVENWORTH.

On Monday, the 15th inst., a little party composed of the following named persons visited the Federal prison at Leavenworth, Kansas, in charge of Major R. W. McClaughry: Bro. F. M. Smith and wife, Ruth, and daughter, Alice; Bro. B. M. Anderson, son-in-law of Pres. Joseph Smith, his wife, Audentia, their daughter, Doris, and son, Duane; and Pres. Joseph Smith, his wife, Ada, and their sons, William Wallace and Reginald Archer.

A previous arrangement for this visit had been made with the warden, Major R. W. McClaughry, by letter from President Smith, and the party reached the prison a little after 11 o'clock a. m., and after passing the guards who had been informed of the visit of the party, the visitors were met at the inside entrance by Major McClaughry who gave them a hearty and cordial welcome and proceeded to show the visitors the premises and describe and explain as the party proceeded. We were shown the immense dining room in which tables are provided for the accommodation of the inmates, and is capable of seating some two thousand persons. The room is covered with four rows of narrow tables, capable of seating six persons each, all facing a balcony from which the warden or other officers who may be in charge look down upon the prisoners as they march in and are seated, and while they are eating. The occupants of the tables do not face each other, but all face one direction, so that the officers may at a glance see every face at the table.

There are at present fourteen hundred inmates of the prison, all suffering confinement and restraint from their liberties on account of breaches of the Federal law of the Government. The offences for which they are serving time range from murder all through the list of breaches of national legislation.

The following items were noticed in the conversation which ensued: Of the fourteen hundred inmates thirty-three per cent are negroes. These are imprisoned for various offences. There are one hundred and thirty-five whose terms are life imprisonment. There are forty bankers, cashiers, and clerks, or other malefactors who have in different ways broken the Federal banking laws, varying from stupendous bank swindling down to petit larceny. There are two hundred and fifty Catholics, but the numbers of Protestants from the various denominations and those of no religious faith were not stated.

After a brief inspection of the dining room the party visited the kitchen which was in charge of a steward who with his assistants made up the culinary staff. This department was especially interesting to the women of the party, who took as minute notice of what was shown them and the statements made in regard to it as the time permitted. Among these were coffeepots or vessels for making coffee, holding one hundred and fifty gallons each. The coffee is made from the best of material by the filtering or dripping process, in which the hot steam or water is turned in upon the ground coffee, and drips into a receptacle below and probably at the sides of the receptacle holding the ground coffee, which produces a liquid which as a beverage made from the berry is equal to any that can be served anywhere. It is rich in color and is clear from sediment and to those who are lovers of the drink it is, as one of the party said, "lovely," and was voted "delicious," by those who drink it with cream and sugar. The party were given cups of this liquid together with pieces of what was called their "Sunday bread"; that is, the bread that is served to the convicts on Sunday with their mid-day meal. It is slightly sweet in taste, made of excellent flour, and well baked in the form of large cakes like thick ginger bread.

This little lunch was refreshing coming, as it did, after a forty-mile ride by trolley car, involving two changes the last stage, being a little over a mile of way between the terminus of the trolley line between Kansas City and Leavenworth and the great Federal prison. This last stage was made in what is affectionately called "the bobtailed car," through a heated atmosphere made bearable only by the breeze which the rapid speed of the car made in passing through the air. Part of the way on the main line of the trolley an interesting race between a freight train on the Missouri Pacific and the trolley car gave zest to the ride.

All this increased the appetite of the little party who had left their homes in Independence a little after 7 o'clock in order to reach the prison in time to witness the filing in of the convicts, and taking their midday meal. Among other implements of the culinary department the party were shown huge kettles, some of them capable of holding from five to ten bushels of vegetables, such as beets, potatoes, or any other vegetable served at their meals. There were other kettles much like these combination cookers which the housewives value so much, in which meat may be roasted and other things cooked of that character, by steam heating without coming in contact with the moisture or the steam, the product of all of which is simply to give the wards of the Nation the best of food prepared in the most satisfactory manner, healthful and good, both in product and in preparation.

The bread as made in the institution was shown to the party, and the women folks were shown bread in the process of being made, and the warden took from a cupboard or box one of the loaves, which was over a foot long and probably weighed two and one half or three pounds. The manner of slicing this bread by a machine was also shown, and it was done so quickly that one of the ladies asked the attendant if he ever cut his fingers. He laughed and said, "No."

The party was also shown the cooler, or cold storage room, in which the meats intended for consumption are kept. The warden explained that the Government required these meats to be of the most excellent quality. The beef carcasses which are furnished by contract must weigh six hundred pounds, nothing less than that being accepted. They are specially inspected and none but the best are accepted. The younger portion of the party noticed the arrangement of the meats cut to supply the tables prepared for cooking, and were instructed and delighted by the statements made by the attendant. It appears that one of the convicts was a chef in a somewhat fashionable restaurant and he had a faculty of preparing the meats and making them appear attractive in appearance. When stepping into the cold storage those of the little party who went in were cautioned to keep moving and not stay too long in the cold atmosphere, as it was chilling to one coming from the heat without.

The little lunch was served after these things had been shown, the coffee being served in heavy white ware, mugs, holding about the usual amount of other coffee cups, with excellent cream and sugar in connection with the "Sunday bread."

By this time the hour for the midday meal had come and in company with the warden the party was seated in a balcony above the dining room, and in a very few minutes the gong was sounded and the march into the dining hall began. The long file came in from the farther end of the room, filed in and took their places, slipped into their seats, until the first table at the right was filled. They all filed in from one side of the long row of tables and a guard followed a certain number of men and took his place against the wall on the opposite side of the table. There were twelve of these guards armed and in uniform, who stood watching the men as they seated themselves and while they were seated and while going out. After the first table at the right was filled the gong sounded again and the march was begun for the second table, and so each table was filled, no food being served until all the tables were filled and quiet had ensued.

The attendants upon the tables are made up apparently of a class of men among the convicts who it may be said came from the better ranks of life outside, if it can be said of such men that they came from the better ranks, and these stood at the far end of the room while the tables were being filled. They were sufficient in number to serve the tables in dispatch, and wearing a white cap and a round apron or jacket, these attendants went to the cooking department and returned with large square cans holding several gallons each, supported by a strap over one shoulder, and beginning at certain places passed down the line depositing upon the plates the food; that is, the cooked food; the bread, salt, and pepper, and such condiments being already placed upon the table. The tables are so arranged that one attendant upon either side serves three plates and passes on to the next table. There is no restriction placed on the appetites, as far as quantity is concerned, and the food served is of the best of its kind. The writer did not see whether knives were among the things furnished to eat with at this meal, but he was told that only forks and spoons were provided. The meal consisted of pork and beans, and whether it tasted good or not, it was evident to at least one of the party that it was good, for "it smelled good." It was observed by some of the party that some of the eaters were helped three times by the passing waiters. Water was the beverage served for drink. When it was apparent that all had finished the gong sounded and the men filed out, followed by their guards in sections in the order in which they had come in, without noise, without confusion, everything working with absolute precision.

While they were eating a running conversation was kept up between members of the party and the warden, and items of interest gathered from him, some of which have already been given. As the men filed in it was noticeable that here and there a bald or partially baldheaded man appeared, his scalp shining white, showing cleanliness, the whole appearance of the men indicating that attention to cleanliness was enforced upon all. It was stated by the warden that no prison uniform was specially enforced as a mark of imprisonment except upon those who came under the term, "incurable," and these are marked with the striped garment, and the writer was informed that some of those who came in were hampered with ball and chain or something like it, and had the letter "E" on the backs of their jackets or uniform which it is supposed meant to show that the party bearing this had made an effort to escape, and had been caught and returned to the prison. The other items in regard to numbers were given by the warden in the course of conversation.

After the men had retired from the dining room the warden conducted us along the corridors and into the cell department, and we were shown the mattresses and cot arrangements and the arrangements of the cell for sanitary and cleanly purposes. Some of the party noticed in some of the cells they were shown the individual belongings of the occupants—books, pictures, papers, and one thing and another. In describing these cells, one of which was but a pattern of all others, the warden stated that by a proper arrangement of electric fans air was forced through these cells in such a way that the air was changed every seven minutes during the night when the doors of the cells were closed. Owing to the number of inmates and want of sufficient number of cells the management was under the necessity of confining two in each cell, but care was taken not to mix the white and the black together, so far respecting existing race prejudice. This arrangement is possible in assigning cells, but is not possible in assigning the work or in the feeding of the convicts, where they are under the necessity of mixing indiscriminately. The warden informed some of the party that there were no women convicts in the prison.

There is one man in the prison whom the men of the party knew, and who was once a member of the Reorganized Church, a fair and able preacher, though always more or less eccentric. While laboring in Nebraska under the administration of Elder James Caffall, of the Quorum of Twelve, this man stirred up trouble in one or two of the branches in Nebraska, of the Northern District, and it was necessary to enforce the discipline of the church upon him, and the hand of fellowship was withdrawn from him. This occurred several years ago, just how many the writer does not remember. He was known among us as J. S. Lee, "The hunter." He and two of his sons are serving a term of imprisonment for counterfeiting the coins of the United States, and were sent to the Federal prison from the courts at Helena, Montana.

When this man was received at the prison, he had a long, white beard, and his white locks were long also, he being seventy-nine years of age. According to the rule of the prison the lower part of his face was shaven clean. Out of deference to his wish his mustache was left and his hair cut reasonably short. This must have made a change in his appearance. We did not seek an interview with Mr. Lee for this reason, that just after his arrest, and while he was waiting preliminary examination in the prison at Helena, Montana, President Smith wrote him in care of the sheriff of the county, the letter to be given to him if the rules of the prison permitted. To this letter President Smith received a very curt reply, indicative that he did not care for any communication with us; and the further thought that he might misunderstand our motive in wishing to see him or have an interview with him, and thus we might irritate rather than do him any good. The men folks of the party remembered J. S. Lee, "The hunter," when he was active among us, and while we commiserated his condition and the humiliation of his situation in his old age, we could not sympathize with him respecting his punishment for breaking United States' law, for we felt that he knew better, and that his act must have been a deliberate disregard of the restrictions of the statute.

After the dismissal from the balcony at the close of the dinner hour the party visited the chapel of the institution, a capacious room capable of seating some two thousand, eighty feet wide and one hundred and forty feet in length, with a floor rising from the speaker's stand with comfortable seats of the opera house pattern similar to those used in the church at Lamoni. This chapel, as might be expected from the nature of the institution in which it is found, is non-denominational, and all classes of speakers are invited and expected to visit and address congregations meeting there, upon invitation or permission from the warden. The music is well appointed for congregational and worshiping purposes, and is used for literary and theatrical and musical performances as well, it being the design of the management to interest, amuse, and instruct those who are forced inmates of the institution. Able lecturers are from time to time invited to visit the prison and address the convicts, so also are readers, elocutionists, singers, and musicians. Whether any of these are paid for their services by the Government we did not learn, but we would suppose from the nature of the institution that such services would be supposed to be of a gratuitous nature, such request for service being granted and rendered out of love for humanity and out of regard for those suffering imprisonment.

One unique feature has been introduced by Warden McClaughry, resulting from a conflict as to time of service between the Protestant denominations and the Catholic Church. To avoid this conflict in appointments, and out of regard for the large proportion of Catholics held in confinement, the warden had a chapel fitted up for this branch of religious service alone, placing it at the disposal of the church dignitaries. Warden McClaughry rather in a joking way stated that a number of the men sent by the Catholic authorities to occupy the chapel had given evidence of littleness of mind, perhaps being too conservative of the rights of the Catholic Church to supremacy. Taking notice of this the warden in consultation with Bishop Lillis requested him to send only broad minded men, as he thought such men would better serve the reform movement in prison discipline than would the others, and the warden also requires this of the Protestant denominations who may be represented by those who come to address the convicts. We thought this view imminently proper, as it is known Warden R. W. McClaughry is among the foremost advocates of the larger and more liberal and more beneficial treatment of the unfortunate among men who fail to yield to proper restraint to the laws of society, and by conviction of crime are made the wards of the State or the Nation by force of circumstances. His view is, that punishment, while commensurate with the magnitude of the crime committed, should be for reformation,—a return to right ways of thinking and of conduct, with a view to make a reformed criminal a fit member of society again, as well as being punitive for those who prove incorrigible, reserving the severity of punishment for those who remain brutal and vindictive or sullen and sour under the restraint of law. The little chapel fitted up for Catholic service is fitted up in a characteristic manner so far as it is compatible with the rules of safety governing in the institution. That a comparatively large number confined in this prison are Catholics does not necessarily prove that the teaching of the church is more productive of wrongdoing than the teaching of Protestantism, but rather that this particular church is the largest single association from which this class of clientage is recruited. It would be interesting to read the occasional reports from the prison as to the different faiths which have been held by the prisoners, when access can be had to such reports.

After leaving the chapel we passed along the corridors to the place of entrance, where we parted from the warden with usual expressions for the courtesy shown us by this busy man. In parting, one of the party jocularly remarked to the warden, that he was pleased that out of the fourteen hundred inhabitants of this national institution who were confined to its walls, he knew of but two with whom he had had personal acquaintance and knowledge. These were Joseph Smith Lee and the warden; the one an inmate from compulsion of the law, the other by choice of work and duty.

One thing that made this visit to the national prison at Leavenworth of special pleasantness is the fact that the warden, R. W. McClaughry, and Pres. Joseph Smith were old acquaintances and official friends in Hancock County, Illinois, where the warden was for a term or two clerk of the circuit court, and the President was for two terms justice of the peace, and frequently had business at the county seat in connection with his office and other duties which called him to the different sessions of the court. The warden was also connected with Judge George Edmunds, attorney at law at Carthage, Illinois, in quarrying stone from the bluffs just below Nauvoo, and while engaged in the duties of this quarry, he boarded at the Nauvoo Mansion with Sr. Emma Bidamon and her husband.

Warden McClaughry speaks in high terms of the mother of President Smith, and has always stood by the friendliness to the family wherever he had been. It was good to see these aged men who had met after many years of separation chatting together like boys, recalling the scenes of the past and the men of the period in which they occupied association as citizens and men of affairs in the county where they lived. R. W. McClaughry was also warden of the penitentiary at Joliet, Illinois, where some of the elders of the church had visited at the prison in his charge, one of whom he remembered, Bro. John S. Patterson, who had spoken in the prison chapel on one or more occasions, with the warden's permission. There are not many now living who were part of the circle of acquaintanceship of that period. Judge Edmunds is living at Chicago, nearing his ninetieth anniversary, and President Smith will soon be seventy-eight, and Warden McClaughry, the youngest of the three, is seventy-one. We trust that Warden R. W. McClaughry may be permitted years of activity in the possession of his faculties and in pursuit of his chosen calling, to perfect his studies into the human nature of those intrusted to his care by force of law, and to give to the people of the United States the results of these studies, which will be calculated to assist in the amelioration of the condition of the unfortunate, and help to reform the prison discipline of the various States and of the Nation.

WRITERS ON SOCIALISM, ATTENTION!

Some weeks before the convening of the late General Conference we announced through the HERALD that we would give space to the best article on Socialism to be received prior to June 1. Several articles were received and were submitted to competent judges who awarded first place to the article written by Victor Gunsolley. Accordingly his article was published in the HERALD, August 24. Now there are in the church those who are quite ardent opponents of Socialism. They hold that while some of the ideals of Socialism may be very commendable, the proposed methods of Socialism are inherently inadequate to ever bring about a realization of those ideals. They also hold that God has given to the church a plan that if put in operation will reform the individual and society and bring economic justice and equality, and that this plan is at some points in conflict with and superior to Socialism. We have had a defense of Socialism from a Latter Day Saint standpoint, now it might be in order to have an article on the other side. If any care to write on this subject we will publish the best article on the subject, "The weakness of Socialism from a Latter Day Saint standpoint," to be received by us prior to January 1, 1911. All articles must be typewritten. They must not be in direct reply to articles that have appeared in the HERALD, but must take up an independent line of argument.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The poem appearing in "Elders' Note-book" for August 10, entitled, "One who has gone to his reward," is credited to Mrs. W. C. Duncan; however, we find that the author is Bro. C. L. Potter, a son-in-law of Sister Duncan. Our readers will please note the correction.

We wish to say a word in regard to our department called, "Hymns and Poems." We have not tried to present something along this line every issue, because we do not get enough original matter and we prefer to let our readers select for themselves such other poetry as they wish to read. As a matter of fact, we get considerable in the way of original poetry, that is, matter which outwardly resembles poetry. But we want our readers to understand that there is really a large proportion of this which we do not consider usable. It is not really poetry. There is an attempt at rhyme—too often a very clumsy attempt. We do not wish to offend any of our contributors, but we believe much that is sent us, if published, would bring anything but credit to those who sent it in, and they might be embarrassed to see their productions in print. We reserve the right to use any or all that is sent us, or to reject any or all.

Now, many of the productions sent us are those pieces inspired by the death of a relative or a friend, or lines read at the funeral of a brother or sister. We can not dodge the fact that much of it is not "good poetry," that it is lame and weak, and our candor and the situation prompt this plain speaking. Besides, the death notices are in another column of the paper, where a certain number of words are published free, a charge being made for items in excess of the stipulated number. Is it not manifestly unfair, then, to ask us to give in addition a half page of poetry about the party's death and funeral?

But, says one, we see an occasional poem concerning some one's death. True, but the conditions and circumstances have warranted giving the space to it. This involves a prerogative which belongs peculiarly to the editors. We doubtless make mistakes, err in judgment, but kindly give us a "square deal." Do not condemn us until you know we unjustly discriminate between persons. We are trying to judge things on their merits, and if somebody appears to have been given an undue advantage over you, please consider that there doubtless are circumstances peculiarly within our knowledge which justify. Our position in a few respects is pleasant; our work in some ways places us in a delicate position. We are often between desire and duty. Please be charitable with us and give us credit for doing the best we can.

Some days ago a Canadian gentleman, not a member of the church, wrote to the office for literature on the question of differences existing between the Reorganization and the Utah church. He had received some of the tracts recently issued by the Northern States Mission. We sent him tract No. 450, better known as "Corner stones of the Utah church," now on sale by the Herald Publishing House. He now writes us as follows: "Yours with form No. 450 at hand, which is simply a knockout. I have received several tracts of the opposite party; have investigated both sides in fairness, but your form 450 is a clencher. Let the good work go on." Readers of the HERALD will do well to order a supply of these tracts. They are on sale for fifteen cents per dozen.

Every man is a priest, even involuntarily; his conduct is an unspoken sermon, which is for ever preaching to others, but there are priests of Baal, of Moloch, and of all the false gods. Such is the high importance of example. Thence comes the terrible responsibility which weighs upon us all.—Henry Amiel.

The desire to be greatest is in every one of us. What shall we do with it? When men find a torrent of water running down hill they do not stop it, but they build channels, and harness the power for industrial purposes. Thus that which seemed useless becomes a blessing. What this age needs is, not men to decry the age and destroy ambition, but men who will give our ambitions proper direction and harness them to high purposes.

The readiest and surest way to get rid of censure is to correct ourselves.

A BETTER HOPE.

SERMON DELIVERED AT LAMONI, IOWA, GENERAL CONFERENCE, SUNDAY, APRIL 11, 1909, BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH.

It is with some regret that I undertake the task of filling the morning hour as the speaker. It ought necessarily to follow that a man who has been preaching for nearly half a century, and a quarter of that number of years in one place, should repeat himself to a greater or a lesser extent in traversing the gospel economy in thought, to think with the same thoughts that other men have thought, to speak the same words that other men have spoken, and follow the lines of argumentation that other men have followed in the presentation and defense of what he understands to be the truth. It ought to be readily impressed on every man's mind, that sooner or later there will be an adjustment of the great contrariety of things that are transpiring in this world, and that all men, no matter where they live, or who they are, or the position which they hold in society, must answer, whether they now think that they will or not, whether they shall be then prepared or unprepared, for that adjudication which must surely take place. And a concurrent thought and understanding with these should be, that when that which is true, when that which is real, judging from divine record, will continue, and whatever the condition that may await those who are dwelling upon the earth, the only thing which lies in their power here is to prepare themselves to live under those influences which are good; as they know, must know, only those conditions will be allowed to obtain on the other side.

We have been long contending against error and wrong. We have tried to proceed from the affirmative standpoint to preach the gospel of the Son of God for the redemption of the human race without objectively and obnoxiously attacking the things which we see in those around us who may hold different faiths from ours, for the purpose of destroying their confidence and faith in them. If we have wandered from this path, whoever among us may have done this, they have, to a certain extent, debarred themselves from the attention of their fellows who differed from them and have injured the influence that they might have otherwise had with them, and this should be a source of regret to everyone.

As a people, we are concluded before our fellowmen in several positions. We have stated to the world for over three fourths of a century ourselves, and those who have preceded us in like faith, that we believe that God does reveal himself to man. While many around us concede that he has revealed himself, we contend that he does reveal himself and will continue to do it in his own way until the earth shall have finished the object of its creation and the conditions that are to follow are upon us. By virtue of this voice of revelation to us, clearly acknowledged, from which there is no practical retreat, we are pledged to sustain the Scriptures as they have come down to us, and the commandment was given to us when we had nothing but the King James Version of the Bible. It might be understood from my statement that we are pledged to the King James Version of the Bible, but because we have made this statement we are not necessarily pledged to accept all the interpretations that those who assume the same position of belief, have advanced, and are holding in the world. We hold ourselves amenable to no such rule and for some of the plainest reasons, which we are prepared, if challenged, to present, but which do not necessarily enter into this morning's service, for reasons.

The first manifestation of this voice of revelation among us was that those to whom it came were to take the things that were given to them in the New Testament Scripture as the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ and preach it to the world, to make no apology for it, precluding them from turning aside either to the right or to the left the just conclusions which the texts themselves would convey to human minds. This view has won to the cause from every class and community, and, I came very near saying, from every phase of belief in the word of God. It has commended itself to the old, to the middle-aged, and to the young; and its devotees, whenever they have stood by their convictions, have never yet been under the necessity of retracing their steps.

Unfortunately, as it is looked upon by some, we believe a great many things, and we have been frequently told that we believe too much, but when I think about what has been stated in the book itself, the New Testament Scripture, one of the writers says that if all had been written which Jesus both said and did, or began to say and do, the world itself would not contain the books which should be written. Does it not occur to you that if the world itself would not contain the books, that the one witness found in the New Testament Scripture, backed up by all that might be taken from the Old Testament word, prophetic foreshadowing of the message of Christ into the world, it is an unfortunate witness when brought into court and depended upon only by the feeble intellect, unfired by the Spirit of the Master, whose words and whose acts are therein restated?

Now, if you want the text, I will give it to you, and I hope you will remember it. I have heard people say a sermon was a wonderful thing, and I have asked for the text and they could not tell it. We have used the text frequently and probably will use it a great many times more; so will our brethren:

"For the law made nothing perfect; but the bringing in of a better hope did."

Such a condition of things was shadowed forth away back yonder in the fields of prophecy when it was stated that the time would ultimately come when there would be a new covenant made with the house of Israel. Not like the covenant which God made with them when he took them by the hand to lead them up out of the land of Egypt, which covenant they broke; but this will be that covenant: "I will put my law in their inward parts, and write my law in their hearts; . . . for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them." When the Apostle Paul wrote one of his epistles, writing evidently under the inspiration of the Spirit that had been with him and that had taught him so successfully, when after fourteen years of his ministry he had gone to the disciples at Jerusalem and they added nothing to him; referring to this, he said: "This is the covenant"—mark the terms, prophecy said it would be, Paul said that it was—"I will put my laws in their mind, and write them in their hearts."

By what process was this to be done? Was it to be by the Spirit which moved their forefathers but which was withheld from them? The New Testament warrants us in believing that the same Spirit that moved upon those men that spake as holy men of God in olden times, was with these movers in these New Testament times, and by virtue of that Spirit truth that had been uttered by the forefathers beyond them, a long time beyond them, was understood and its application made with them. "This is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel; and it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams: and on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days my Spirit; and they shall prophecy." How far-reaching was that word! And is it not strikingly significant that when there rises up at any period of the earth's history, among any class of men, individuals who say while they read that word, that the Spirit has spoken to them and has borne testimony to them of those things which their forefathers in the times when Christ and his disciples were here received under the inspiration of that Spirit, and they should be told, all the Spirit that can move upon men now is that which is in the word, upon the hypothesis that "My words, they are spirit and they are truth"?

We do not plead for the world to pity us. We have never done it. But we have pleaded for a space in the arena of conflict, religious controversy, where we might be heard by these, our religious confreres, and that which they held to be the word of God might be examined by us in their presence, as of right; and allow it the interpretation of that Spirit, under the influence of which it was given. That has been our plea.

We have quoted the statements of the Master when he was assailed by temptation of first one kind and then another, when he, not forgetting the mission upon which he was sent, stated, "It is written," and taking refuge under that which was written was justified of his Father in so doing. Now, if any of these elders here choose to adjudge me a heretic, I hope they will begin, but after they have made their indictment I hope they will give me a chance to plead to it before a common jurisdiction.

Why was it that the law made nothing perfect, and what law was it that was referred to? We have told the people, in our controversy with them, that one of the reasons why we do not accept Saturday, or the seventh day, as the Sabbath of the Lord, is because we have been given to understand that it is not binding upon the Christians, that while it may have been given to those away back yonder who came under this regime of the Mosaic economy, it was not continued in the New Testament times, but that the time on which we should assemble ourselves together was the Lord's day, in contradistinction to the Sabbath, Jewish Sabbath. We have said to them, and I fancy that I utter the statements that many of you men have made in the field and would make again when you come into controversy in regard to this matter, that when the Savior came, and when Jesus was put upon the cross, that law was nailed to the cross and was to be succeeded by a different order of things. Any objection to that? If that nailing to the cross abrogated that which was understood to be an enforcement of the Sabbath, seventh day, as the Sabbath of the Lord, and that it was to become binding upon all who professed belief in the word, by what rule of right do we hold that any other provision of that law is to be continued binding and operative upon us? By what right? Would not those who contend against us turn our own argument upon us and say that we were inconsistent, from our taking one single portion out of that law and saying that it was nailed to the cross; but that all the rest was continued? It strikes me that would be the legitimate argument that they would use against us. I think I would hear some say, "Why, Brother Smith, you are striking at the moral law." Will some one of you tell me what the moral law is? Is not that to which you refer when you use the statement "moral law" a conception formed in your mind of some restricting force of commandment or power or some suggestive and directive portion of the word, to do against which would be a wrong and to follow which would be a right? How is that? My understanding of that moral law, in brief, is this: That when the commandments were enacted, written by the finger of God in the imperishable tables of stone, Moses, by accident or purpose, broke the table and subsequently it was reenacted in a similar way; that it formed the basis of what is known among us and the world as the Mosaic code; and we frequently use the expression, "As long as the moral law," a continued reiteration of what we should do and what we should not do, restrictive, mandatory, and otherwise.

Every statute enactment of the State of Iowa and the State of Missouri and other States respecting human conduct has its basis resting in the Mosaic code, and it was based upon the ten commandments. You may ask me, Do you intend to do away with the ten commandments? If that law was nailed to the cross, what right have we to take it from the cross? By what process can we take it from the cross? Do you not know that so far as the church is concerned we can put no man in jeopardy of his life, or his property, by force? Do you know that? Our declaration of belief says so. It therefore is reserved for the State, for the Nation, for the citizenship of which we form a component part, to put into operation the legislative deductions from the moral code, using the word to signify the Mosaic economy, based upon the ten commandments. No, I do not purpose to attack their validity. I leave them for the carrying out by the forces which were evidently designed of God to do so, when he raised up wise men to make the Declaration of Independence and furnished the men who wrote the Constitution, the wisdom under which they wrote that Constitution which has passed through more than a century of trial, executive, judicial, and otherwise, and has been so far enabled to withstand the attack of time, the development of events among the children of men.

I purpose, so far as I am concerned, to insist that there should take place among us and be felt in its operative force, that better law by which we draw nigh unto God, and how far is that reaching? And, how far-reaching is that? If the statement itself is of avail, "All shall know him from the least to the greatest," by what purpose will they acquire this knowledge? And what rules of law shall we make use of to enforce the sentiment upon ourselves and those who hear us?

Let me see: "As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them." What rule is that? Is that called the Golden Rule? I am living among my neighbors. Occasion arises for me to direct my conduct with regard to them. I deal out to them certain words or certain deeds. They may be considered by others exorbitant; they may be considered by some cruel. I take myself, and wrap myself around with the thought that I have treated that neighbor just exactly as I would that neighbor should treat me, under similar conditions. And the wickedest man in society can do that, a man absolutely free from every moral or religious restraint can do that, can he not? And take shelter under the Savior's words, "As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them." Did you ever think of it? Take a mandatory transaction. Take the sale of land, the asking for it no more than it is worth, the taking from your neighbor whatever you may covet and paying him an inadequate recompense for it, and you have done to him as you would that he should do unto you under different conditions. Now I know somebody down there says, "Well, the result of that would be, as you think a man would do unto you, do unto him, but do it first." Now you know that is not good. Well, it is not always stated alike. "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do you likewise unto them." That is itself based in the ethics which Christ came to bring, which Jesus started to enforce, a spiritual law to take the place of the so-called moral law; to make a law that should be resident in those upon whom this wondrous law,—shall I say law? No? Yes?—This wondrous law that the Lord would put into the hearts of his people, that wonderful, restrictive, urgent principle by which men should be moved upon, a spiritual ethic far better, far nobler far more widely reaching than anything that has ever come from the Mosaic economy. I do not wonder that Paul should have written touching that: "They gave us statutes which neither we nor our fathers could bear." I do not wonder that he should have so written, that he should have written that that law should "make nothing perfect, but the bringing of a better hope did, by the which we draw nigh unto God." And can you not see that when that principle is at work in the human heart, its work is to eliminate from the heart, from the brain, every incentive to do wrong of any kind, unto our fellows; that a man who is moved by that spirit takes the proper cognizance of his relation to those by whom he is surrounded, and is not at war with the moral law, nor is the moral law at war with him; because he walks the ways of life in every way conservative of the principles upon which the Master acted when he gave his life for mankind.

We have told the world that this Spirit accompanies the preaching of the gospel, and that it is at the mercy—nay—at the will of the Master, who has promised when a person is converted—and how frequently we have heard the expression used and sermons preached from the text, "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul,"—when the soul is converted under that administration, then comes the divine presence of that Spirit which was with the Master; and those men and those women upon whom this has its beneficent effect, go forward and walk in the light of the Spirit and there is no terror in the law for them.

But certain things that have been found in the moral law have been found in the spiritual law, and Jesus has told us by revelation that he "has not given at any time a law that was temporal, but spiritual." Hence this is to become part of the spiritual law. They are not parts of the moral law. When a man asks me to conform to the moral law, and says that I am breaking a portion of it, or I am not living in accordance with a portion of it, I have a right to ask him to tell me the specific rules of the moral law upon which he relies for authority to condemn me, or commend me for my course. But if he comes to me and quotes the spiritual enactment and holds me to the spiritual performance of that law and that spiritual law has had that spiritual reflex in me, then I can understand what he means and what he intends to convey.

One of the most consistent things found in the finding of the Book of Mormon, one of the most consistent things in its testimony unto the law is the confirmation of the fact that Jesus was the Christ. Professor Hayden, who wrote the history of Discipleship in the Western Reserve, and a celebrated professor, who wrote a similar work of the same characteristic religious work—each of them used an expression in reference to the Book of Mormon, and it was practically this: That the Book of Mormon was written expressly to bolster up the so-called Mormon confession that Jesus was the Christ, and the other party wrote that the book was written to bolster up the confession that this Christian Church made that Jesus was the Christ. Both of them give credit to the same motive, and yet the Book of Mormon distinctly affirms that no man can be saved without a positive belief in Christ, just precisely what the Bible affirms, that "A better foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, even Jesus Christ, the righteous."

I am persuaded that when we examine it closely, when we see how far-reaching it is, we will be better prepared to defend the proposition that the gospel was intended to beget faith in those who heard it, and that a proper observance of the commandments of the gospel, of the requirements of the gospel and its authoritative administration unto those who believed it and desired to put themselves under its influence, would prepare them to come nigh to God. And when they did this, there should be his Spirit taking cognizance of their act and the authoritative performance of the agent by whom the act was consummated, and there would come a testifying evidence of the Spirit of God, making known the power of the truth. Arm a man or a woman with an absolute consciousness within that Jesus was the Christ and that there has been fulfilled unto them the word that was uttered away back yonder by Christ, that he and his Father would take up their abode with them who loved him, and his Spirit should testify of him, and that they should also testify of Christ, because—for reason of the evidence, or cause to show that when this gospel is to be declared in the power and efficacy of that Spirit which accompanied it then, and which must accompany it until the last son and daughter of Adam has had an opportunity to hear and either disregard or obey,—arm an individual with that absolute consciousness (and that is what it amounts to—sooner or later), they may go where they will, they see what is presented to them, they may hear whatever may be expressed in their hearing, and they have a right to search and research everything everywhere that either professes to be against it or for it; and to determine, and not one single one of them will ever be led astray or to deny that sacred truth that Jesus is the Christ.

What a wonderful revelation that is! You know that it has been said that the sheep referred to shall go in and out and shall find pasture. The simple meaning of that is that an individual who is a sheep of the Lord, in that he has followed him through the doors into the sheepfold, partakes of the Spirit of the Shepherd, of the wisdom of the Shepherd, and they may go out and pasture where they will, they will feed on that which presents to them, that builds them up, just like the shepherd's sheep feeding upon the mountains will reject the poisonous vegetations, but they will eat that which is good for them. Is that worth striving for, my hearers? Is that worth striving for, you to whom I have preached for over forty years and who have constantly known the testimony that I have borne in regard to these truths? You who have heard me at times who do not hold to my faith or the faith of those with me, is not such a condition as that worth listening to? Is it not worth obeying? Is it not worth finding one's self in sympathy and touch with, because it is in sympathy and touch with the Lord Jesus Christ?

I make no apology for the word of God. If any man asks me if I believe the Bible, I tell him, Yes.

If he asks me if I believe that the sun stood still at the command of Joshua, I tell him, Yes. I do not understand how it was done, but the Being which hurled it into space and ordained the laws which had breathed upon inanimate man, could put his hand upon the machinery and stop it without damage to man as easily as he could have hurled it into existence at the beginning.

If you ask me if I believe in the resurrection of the dead, I tell you, Yes. I do not understand it, how it may be accomplished; except that I follow the example of the Master and the statement made concerning him, that if the Spirit which was in him and which raised him from the dead be in you and abide in you, it shall also quicken your mortal bodies. I may not understand these things. Many of them I do not; but because I can not, shall I put a limit to God's power? Nay—shall I say that he can not do such things as he has promised? No, he has done much for the world and he will continue to do it. He has ruled well while I have been in it. He ruled well before I came into it; and, I thank God, he will rule it well after I go out.

Let us then be patient and hopeful. You who have been striving together so long, many of whom I see before me whose hair and beards are white, whose years are reaching to their close, and who only stand waiting for that silent monitor to come and bid these busy pulses to cease, and us to lie down to our rest. It is not far to any one of us—and, some of us are nearer than others; but let me adjure you, that when there come to you matters which you are called upon to decide, put self and humanity out of sight, and judge from the spiritual intuition of that Spirit which has been promised and to the law and testimony. If that which you hear or read does not accord with that, you know very well that there is no light in them.

But what is law? It is that which has been written; and our Christian ethics under Jesus Christ and his enactments have taken the place of that moral code which has been so long held over the world.

Testimony is that which has been written of the endurance of other men, a history of things which have been wrought in the world by them, the testimony that has been borne to them and they bear it. It has come down to us through the revelation of God, and when others say we believe too much, we tell them that so far as the Bible is concerned, we believe it to contain the word of God. They do no more than that. We believe the Book of Mormon to be also the word of God. They say they do not, and yet it is affirmative evidence of the truths of the gospel as found in the New Testament Scripture, and some of our able men can tell you that the things which have transpired in the researches of wise men in the earth in archæology, these relics that are found, are confirmative to the testimony that the Book of Mormon bears to the inhabitants of this land years and years ago.

Well, we have nothing to fear except our own failure to fill the measure of our days acceptably to God, to fail to accomplish that which he has intrusted to our care, and to do it either because we have been fearful or because we have carelessly lent our aid to the inward commotion which has destroyed our identity.

It is our privilege to examine whatever is presented to us, but it is not our privilege, as I understand, to attack those of our companions in the spirit of enmity, or to be exercised unduly by the spirit of resentment. The Savior endured the contradiction of sinners against himself. I am sometimes at fault because I fail to endure the contradiction of friends to myself. The rebuke of a friend is better than the kiss of an enemy, and how unwilling I am that my brethren should rebuke me!

Let us take the lessons taught to heart. Let us be patient. Set a good example, maintain the integrity of our standing before God, and trust him and the Master for the issue, and not one of us will lose or be lost.

WHO SHOULD BE BAPTIZED, AND RECEIVE THE LAYING ON OF HANDS FOR THE GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST?

This is a very important question, and we will answer it by the Holy Scriptures contained in the standard books of the church: Those and only those who have complied with the prerequisites to baptism. First they should hear the gospel, and believe it,—that is, believe in God and Christ, and repent of their sins. And they should manifest it by their fruits before baptism. John the Baptist told those who came and demanded baptism at his hands, to bring forth fruits meet for repentance (Matthew 3: 8). Peter preached: "Repent ye therefore, and be converted" before baptism. (Acts 3: 19).

Let us see what the Book of Mormon says: "See that ye are not baptized unworthily" (page 500, small edition). This forbids all but those who have complied with the prerequisites to being baptized. We will now draw attention to the Doctrine and Covenants for a plain explanation of the qualification that all must have before they are baptized. Section 17: 7:

And again by way of commandment to the church concerning the manner of baptism:—All those who humble themselves before God and desire to be baptized, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and witness before the church that they have truly repented of all their sins, and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end, and truly manifest by their works that they have received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into his church.

The above is so plain it needs no comment; all those who come forth and desire to be baptized bringing the fruit above required, are proper subjects for and should be baptized, and none else. I have baptized many persons who did not bring forth fruit meet for repentance, as required in the Scriptures. If asked why I did it, I will answer, Because it was and is a custom of the elders to do so. I never intend to do so any more; I see as a consequence of failing to strictly conform to the law that we have a large number of unconverted members in the church, who have never received the remission of their sins. Ten thousand baptisms will not remit sins of those who have not complied with the prerequisites to baptism that are required by the law. When a person has obeyed that form of doctrine contained in the gospel, including baptism, they receive a remission of their sins. Such persons are in a proper condition to receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, after they have been properly taught. What are they to be taught? Let us turn to Doctrine and Covenants, 17: 18, and we will see:

The duties of the members after they are received by baptism:—The elders or priests are to have sufficient time to expound all things concerning the church of Christ to their understanding, previous to their partaking of the sacrament, and being confirmed by the laying on of the hands of the elders; so that all things may be done in order. And the members shall manifest before the church, and also before the elders, by a godly walk and conversation, that they are worthy of it; that there may be works and faith agreeable to the Holy Scriptures, walking in holiness before the Lord.

When a baptized person has been taught as above required, and manifests that he has received the instructions, he is then ready to receive the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, and he will receive that gift that he needs at the time he receives the laying on of hands, without any exception. But if he has not been taught and qualified he does not, nor can receive the promised gift of the Holy Ghost.

In the above I think I have set forth the qualifications of those who should be baptized and receive the laying on of the hands of the elders for the gift of the Holy Ghost. I am a believer in and contender for the faith once delivered to the Saints. I will say in conclusion, that according to their fruits there are many in the church that have not received the remission of their sins nor the gift of the Holy Ghost; because they have not been properly taught before they were baptized and received the laying on of hands. As a rule just as soon as any person will permit an elder to baptize him, he does it, and at once hands are laid upon him to confirm him a member of the church, and in consequence of this practice we have a goodly number in the church that are only nominally members, but spiritually dead while they live. God hath said that when we do what he has commanded, then he is bound; otherwise he is not bound to do that which he has promised.

THE CRITIC.

"The malignant deity Criticism dwelt on the top of a snowy mountain in Nova Zembla; Momus found her extended in her den upon the spoils of numberless volumes half devoured. At her right sat Ignorance, her father and husband, blind with age; at her left Pride, her mother, dressing her up in the scraps of paper herself had torn. There was Opinion, her sister, light of foot, hoodwinked and headstrong, yet giddy and perpetually turning. About her played her children, Noise and Impudence, Dullness and Vanity, Positiveness, Pedantry, and Illmanners."—Swift.

That was a pretty severe arraignment of criticism, and we would hesitate to subscribe to the same. Criticism too often is born of ignorance and nurtured in pride. It may be light of foot, perpetually turning, giddy and yet headstrong. In its train may be found noise, impudence, dullness and illmanners. Positiveness, pedantry, and vanity may be its offspring. Yet criticism plays an important part in the world, and we could by no means get along without it. The more we have of it the better off we are, provided it is of the right kind.

Critics are easily divided into the useless and the useful.

The useless critic has several aliases. He may be known in the vicinity of his pernicious activity as a kicker, a grumbler, a knocker. The grumbler is a halfbreed, and the knocker is a degenerate, a kicker gone to seed. His habitat is anywhere, his calling anything. His auditors are many, his friends are few. He is "a brisk little somebody, critic and whipper-snapper in a rage to set things right." His condition never satisfies him. The present is always the worst. And if Providence should grant his every request, he would still, like Oliver Twist, be asking for more. He is so sure that the world is going to ruin that he resents every attempt to console him as an insult to his sagacity. Longfellow compares him to a chimneysweep who puts out the fire and frightens the swallows from their nests, scrapes a long while, and covers himself with soot. And what does he carry away? A bag of cinders, and then forsooth, proclaims himself the architect of the building. He is pleased to find fault, and would be just as much displeased at finding perfection. He is never happy unless he is miserable. He would kick even if he were hanged at the county's expense. He complains because it is his habit, developed into second nature, and no longer subject to his control. He is inspired to pry into abuses, and discovers them where they are not. He holds his farthing candle to the sun and complains because men fail to use it as a lamp to guide their feet. Or he may be like a pair of snuffers which put out the flame but never strike a light. Neither talent nor education is needed to set him up in business. The height of his mental stature is reached when he becomes an intellectual brusher-off of flies. In the bottomless pit of his own littleness he can only attract attention by croaking, and he knows as little of the world's progress as frogs in a well know of the high seas. The last thing on earth that he desires is to have the cause of his complaints removed, for then he would be out of business. He is good only by reason of his exceeding badness. Grumbling is the only incense he has to offer in return for the blessings he may enjoy. He travels from Dan to Beersheba through a land flowing with milk and honey, and cries it is all barren. The man who becomes a critic by trade ceases to be one at all, and his usual fortune is to excite more of contempt than pity. He deserves to be operated on surgically, for his trouble is chronic. His name is Legion, and the reason is that it is so much easier to be critical than to be correct.

The malignant, malevolent, malicious critic does not dwell in a far-off country. It requires no search warrant to find him. He is both seen and heard.

He is in our very midst. There are few branches of the church which have not at least one member who should be quarantined; for he is not only infected, but infectious. His contagion is liable to spread among others of low mental and moral vitality. If the branch president calls a fast on Sunday, the critic will say, What is the use of asking us to fast while some of the officers and leading members are working to make money on Sunday? He says every expenditure for local improvement is money thrown away. Every scheme to promote the growth and prosperity of his branch is branded a flat failure in advance. Every entertainment given by the Sunday school or Religio is of the wrong kind or given at the wrong time. Every talk made (except his own) is mere wind. The branch itself is the poorest in the church. Its officers are not of the right stamp. If the officers were more spiritual, the gifts would be more manifest. The whole thing should be remodeled, but he stays in the church because he can not afford to drop out. Like the devilfish, he accomplishes nothing except to muddy the waters about him, and then try to escape under their cover.

But there is another kind of critic who is just as useful as the first is useless. The useful critic is not the one who criticises because he has nothing else to do, or because it is his habit. He is a man who finds fault when fault should be found, and has the moral strength to say disagreeable things even at the cost of his own popularity.

Somebody has said, "Civilization is the work of the kickers." They are the advance agents of progress. Take it in our civic affairs, when we see things which are not right done under our very eyes, it is our duty to criticise, and to speak up loud enough so people can hear. Even as the mountains were brought forth by the unrest in the earth's bosom, so every reform which has come to the world has come because somebody objected to the existing order of things, and objected so strenuously to that which was wrong that a wave was started which set things right. Our independence as a nation came because the sturdy colonists were not afraid to criticise the unjust acts of a king.

The same is true of the individual. Perhaps the greatest impetus for good comes through kindly criticism of our faults. There is no man so perfect that another can not pick a flaw. As long as a man is growing and mentally alert (which he should be at all times), he should be ready to accept honest criticism, and profit by it. If no one ever called attention to our shortcomings, we would soon become too arrogant to be endured.

The sentiment of the above quotation holds true of the church. God started the Reorganization as a criticism and a protest against the methods and systems of the old churches. And with the growth of the Reorganization came criticism, yet it has the vitality to live and grow. A church which is growing will not resent criticism within its own ranks. The church which has no differences of opinions is in heaven with Enoch.

The changes for the better in the vast majority of cases have followed criticism of methods once in vogue. A Saint objected and said he had something better, and not until then did the better appear. The old churches have been our consistent and persistent critics from the beginning. Yet that very criticism has been an aid to our salvation, as the Nephites were brought from their fallen condition by the scourging they received from the Lamanites.

Just as nearly every branch has a useless critic, who is a nuisance to everybody, including himself, so there will be found in about every branch one of the other kind. He is willing to approve the right, but is not afraid to criticise the wrong. He is not willing to handicap every effort for the promotion of the work by criticism in advance. Not every entertainment is useless in his opinions. If he finds some talks or sermons a bore, he also finds some which are helpful. He believes the church itself is all right, although some of its acts may be all wrong, and like the other fellow, he, too, has his influence. He encourages others in the faith, just as the useless critic discourages. He does not believe in the superlative wisdom of the minority, but acquiesces when the vote is against him, and waits to see if he may not have been wrong. His criticism is born of love for the cause. The fellow who kicks at everything is disloyal.

The Lord speaking to the Religio said,

I will use this organization for the establishing of Zion. Therefore cease to complain of each other, and be one, even as I have commanded you, and clothe yourselves with humility as with a mantle and come up to the light which has been given you and your souls shall rejoice with greater power from your Father than you have ever received before.

And this is applicable to the church in general, in regard to ceasing to complain of each other, and coming up to the light which has been given us.

The highest type of criticism is constructive and not destructive. It was Michel Angelo, poet, painter, and patriot, who said, "I criticise by creation, not by finding fault." Let us refrain from criticising that done by others when we have nothing better to offer.

Our criticism should be of means and measures, rather than of men. But there come times when it is necessary to criticise men and their motives, as well as means and measures.

And lastly, have some objective good in view when finding fault. The strength of criticism lies in the weakness of the thing criticised. Do not kick for just the exercise. It is dreadful wrenching to kick against nothing.

GOOD INDIANS WHO ARE VERY MUCH ALIVE.

(By T. R. Porter, Omaha, Nebraska, in New York Press.)

The Western Indians are turning the tables on the white man, and the race which has for half a century pushed the red men back from the great plains and forced them on to reservations is now having its own fields invaded by these same red men, and Indian lawyers, doctors, teachers, preachers, judges, and stenographers are becoming common in the trans-Missouri country.

One of the foremost lawyers of eastern Nebraska is Tom Sloan, an Omaha Indian. Sloan has been United States Commissioner and has held offices of trust. His clients are not all Indians, by any means, as he has a large practice among the whites in the towns near the reservation. Sloan has been admitted to practice before the United States Supreme Court and is often before that tribunal in Washington. He is a college graduate and is a sharp, shrewd lawyer. He is well read and is a cultured and polished man, but prefers to spend his time with his own people rather than to reside in a city among white men.

Every Indian reservation in the Northwest now boasts several Indian doctors. Not the old-time "medicine man," with his charms and his magic, but the modern, educated, intelligent physician who uses the white man's methods. The practice of these Indian doctors is limited largely to the educated younger class of Indians—young men and young women who have been to eastern schools. The older braves and squaws yet believe in the tribal "medicine man" and prefer him and his methods to anything that the modern doctor can do for them.

Dr. High Eagle, one of the best known physicians and surgeons of southern Montana, is a Crow Indian. He has a large practice among the whites as well as among the younger and educated Indians. Dr. High Eagle was one of the pioneer educated Indians and has been a practicing physician for more than thirty years.

On the Northwestern Railroad running into the Black Hills there is a swarthy locomotive fireman who answers to the name of "One Bull." He has been at the job several years and is slated for the "right side" of the cab at an early date. One Bull may not, perhaps, be thought much of by white men other than his employers, but when he goes to the Sioux reservation for a holiday, he is received with the greatest respect. He is the oldest son of the famous medicine man, Sitting Bull, one of the most redoubtable military strategists the Sioux tribesmen ever knew. One Bull may some day be chief of the Sioux, but just now his highest ambition is to be a locomotive engineer. His first employment on the railroad was as a section hand.

Three years ago a grandson of Red Cloud, the great chief of the Sioux tribe, learned shorthand in an Omaha business college. He returned after graduation to the Indian agency, where he has since kept books and done stenographic work for one of the large trading firms at the post. One of the most successful teachers in all the Indian service is a man named Lewis—a full-blooded Indian. Lewis teaches on the Pine Ridge reservation among the Sioux, and while there are many white teachers on that reserve, Lewis's school is the model one to which all visitors are taken. Lewis is a serious-minded, well read man.

Tripp County, South Dakota, one of the counties carved from the Sioux reservation some years ago, is officered almost entirely by Indians. There are almost as many Indians as whites in that county, and these Indians, by voting together, have repeatedly elected their own candidates. And there is not even a whisper of any sort of graft since the Indians took up the reins of government. Of preachers and missionaries there are any number among the Indians. The most notable of these is probably Mr. Coolidge of the Cheyennes and Arapahoes of Wyoming. He married a prominent and wealthy society girl of New York, and the two have devoted their lives to missionary work among the Indians.

Pine Ridge agency of the Sioux Indians, in South Dakota, boasts of a court presided over by an Indian judge. This man, Judge Thunder Hawk, is empowered to hear any case except one of murder, and his decision is final. There is no "stay" of any kind whatever, no appeal and no delay, once Thunder Hawk has handed down his decision. Backing him up is the famous Indian police of the reservation, who stand ready to obey any order given them by the court. Judge Thunder Hawk is a man of great dignity and takes himself, as well as his position, very seriously.—The Indian's Friend.

THE UNRULY MEMBER.

"But the tongue can no man tame."

It is quite evident that there were talebearers and scandalmongers in the days of the Apostle James because in the preparation of his epistle he devotes considerable space to a discussion of the evils of reckless speech.

Were the Apostle James to come to earth twenty centuries after his apostleship in the early church perhaps he would be startled or saddened to discover that mankind does not seem to have improved very much in that respect.

There are certainly few evils under the sun which may be more far-reaching in their consequences than that which arises from ill-considered and indiscriminate accusations of another. Men and women, sometimes thoughtlessly and sometimes with malicious intent, will set their tongues in motion and a few poisonous words will drip from the end thereof. From these arise a miasmatic stigma which attaches itself to the reputation of some other man or woman and the damage is done. If the slander is baseless the injury is accomplished, and it often requires years to remove the misconception which has thus arisen in the public mind. Sometimes it can never be dissipated, but remains a cloud upon the individual's life until the shelter of the grave has been reached.

The reader does not need to be flooded with specific illustrations in order to understand the evil to which we refer. In every community there are people in both public and private station who are victims of what we might term the "they say" element. We all know of the rank injustice which is frequently done to innocent people through the activities of the neighborhood gossip. We all know how one idle remark may damage a pure girl. We all know how one false rumor might lead to the ruination of a business enterprise or close a bank. We all know how a malicious publication might end the career of a public official.

It is true, as the inspired writer proclaimed, that the tongue is an unruly member and one which no man can tame, but we have equal authority for saying that charity, which is a synonym for love, is the first-named virtue in the trinity of Christian graces and that "love worketh no ill to his neighbor."

From this teaching we may derive the plain lesson that the man or woman who would meet the highest ideals of life, so far as the limitations of weak human nature will admit, will cultivate the habit of carefully weighing words to the end that reputation, which is really the most priceless possession which a man hath, be not needlessly tarnished by the poison of reckless speech.

Cultivate the art of saying good things about people. Give them the benefit of the doubt when evidence at least which the courts would demand is lacking to substantiate a charge.

Shakespeare never said a truer thing than in the words with which we are all familiar:

"He who steals my purse, steals trash; but he who filches from me my good name, robs me of that which ne'er enriches him and makes me poor indeed."—Editorial in Des Moines Capital.

GENERATING NEW THOUGHT.

I.

New thought is that which causes a man to rise every morning with the conviction that he can make a fresh start.

The dead weight of yesterday has dropped away.

The dream that troubled his sleep is forgotten. He is a Columbus sailing unknown seas in search of a new world.

He begins to think this new thought the moment he awakens. He is thankful for the opportunity of another day. He feels the past is forgiven and forgotten. He is eager to meet the world with a glad heart and a smile of welcome. He has no time for his own troubles, but plenty of time for yours. Above all he wants to get to his work and give himself expression through its demands.

The environment crowds upon him its countless suggestions and temptations. He goes through it as through a jungle, making his path, admiring, perhaps, the beauty that lies about him, but keeping on and winning his goal at every step.

II.

In living thus, day by day, the maximum of a man's energy is employed. New thought vitalizes him. An inexhaustible reservoir of power is open to him.

Living in the old way fills the streets with people long since dead; people who, not knowing they are dead, continue to wander aimlessly about. Old thought, old fears, old negations have killed them.

New thought makes a new man, creates a new and inspiring countenance, gives life to the eye and a zest to all being.

Hence new thought is the oldest thought in the world. Noah had it when they said of him, "He walked with God." This means he kept close to the source of his being. The Savior referred to it when he said, "Knock, and it shall be opened." The thing to be knocked is the portal of the kingdom of heaven, which, by the way, is within us, and by seeking we find this kingdom. To acquire an abundance of new thought is simple.

Don't nurse dead griefs and yesterday's troubles.

Don't mistrust yourself or suspect your neighbor.

Don't look for the kingdom of heaven somewhere in town. The guide may lead you into an amusing place, but the address you are after is inside. A trusty servant with a still, small voice will answer if you knock.

All negatives and minus quantities are the brigands and highwaymen of mental life. Slay them. The law, being on your side, will protect you.

Positive thoughts of hope, faith and cheer are ministering angels. The portal, having been opened, they fly back and forth from the inner kingdom.

The lusterless eye, the death mask face, the inactive body, all spell separation. With these one is like a bay of stagnant water, unmoved and unsweetened by the flow of the great tide impulse. He may think he is independent and unobserved, that he can look smug and do things on the side, but, in reality he is separated and cut off from the source. He is for ever at low tide, and the odor of his separation is bad for the nostrils.

Let him break the barrier between himself and the ocean of life and he will again be moved by its tide throbbing, once for the hours of the day, once again for the hours of the night.

Make a fresh start every morning and sail the seas in search of a new world. It is somewhere ahead.

GRAPE FRUIT.

Who discovered grape-fruit? A writer in Leslie's Weekly says: "Few of the thousands who daily enjoy the wonderful tonic found in those big, buttercup-yellow globules that have become a breakfast necessity to Uncle Sam's discriminating children know that they are indebted to a woman for discovering the value of the once despised fruit as a table delicacy. Not more than fifteen years or so ago the grape fruit was a thing without value—a product interesting because of its decorative appearance. Now the number consumed annually in the United States exceeds four million boxes, which means approximately a half a billion grape fruit. About one million of these are grown in Florida, from which comes the story of the grape fruit's bow to the epicurean world. The woman to whom grape fruit growers should take off their hats is Mrs. Frank Leslie. She was on a visit to Henry Plant, the builder of the East Coast railway, in Florida. James E. Ingraham was then, as now, the vice-president of the road, and it was in his car that Mrs. Leslie and her party traveled. On reaching the home of Mr. Plant, the travelers were first introduced to the delights of the refreshing citric fruit, which hung in clusters on the trees, bending the branches down almost to the ground. Thousands of bushels lay on the ground under the trees, from which they had fallen. There was no market for them. Only a few of the native Floridians liked them, so the fruit that could not be eaten by Mr. Plant's immediate friends was left where it fell. Nearly every plantation in lower Florida had numbers of the grape fruit trees, and under each one was the same display of golden-yellow balls which had fallen from the branches. Passing one of these plantations, Mrs. Leslie asked the planter what he would take for his crop. 'Why, madam, there is no market for it. Nobody wants grape fruit. Help yourself.' The party helped itself, and grape fruit was thenceforth a regular part of the daily menu. So much did Mrs. Leslie appreciate the fruit that she decided to introduce it to her friends up north. She carried home several boxes, and later Mr. Ingraham sent her forty barrels, which she distributed among her friends, with instructions how to prepare them for the table. Encouraged by the unanimous praise which issued from each recipient of the fruit, Mr. Ingraham had a famous New York physician make an analysis of it and to certify to its remarkable qualities as a tonic, especially in the spring. As a result of this combined effort of Mr. Ingraham and Mrs. Leslie, a demand for grape fruit grew rapidly."—The Commoner.

THE SPIRIT LAND.

"Their angels always see the face of my Father who is in heaven."—Matthew 18: 10.

Always, and not less now, men, consciously or unconsciously, have turned inquiring glances toward that other world where the Deity reigns and his cohorts deploy their activity in his service.

This curiosity has never been shaken off. It is an inheritance of our nature, and, be he religious or irreligious, everyone is helpless against its resistless fascination. It is all no weak proof that this haunting desire springs from the fact that we have not been made for this world, but are destined, thanks to the gracious God therefor, for a goal higher and more lasting.

Men run in vain solicitings to science and to uncredentialed oracles for some utterance to satisfy this restless, chafing curiosity, when with Bible in hand every reverential Christian may in prayerful meditation learn all that it behooves to know and more than blatant charlatanry can ever reveal.

Innumerable passages in Holy Writ give the story of that supermundane sphere. The Son of Man in his eternity saw Satan and his minions fall like lightning from heaven. There is flashed upon us that region with its two kingdoms, the kingdom of light and the kingdom of darkness. In one the powers are set against God and all that is godly. The powers on the other are champions of the rights of the Divinity and protectors of all who rely upon their succor. God's commands are being executed with more than Ariel swiftness, and no mortal is unsafe save the one who refuses the blessed ministrations of those who were faithful from the dawn of time. If the child has his angel, how much more certainly has the man, for the man needs him more. There are angels for all—for the child, the man, the family, the State, the Church—and they all see always "my Father's face."

Much and everything needful does Scripture tell us. Its pages are vocal with the melody of the rustling of angel wings. In fact, the uplifting and helpful story is narrated in its entirety as those spirits energize in those vast stretches of duration from the angel of the flaming sword to the bright one, who came to John and unveiled all the glories of the New Jerusalem. There is no story, save that of him crucified, more satisfying, more consoling, more invigorating. Why search elsewhere than in Scripture? As early as Deuteronomy the world was warned against trifling with those realms so near and yet so far away. "Neither let there be found one among you that seeketh the truth from the dead. For the Lord abhorreth all such things." (Deuteronomy 18:12.)

The attitude the Scriptures urge is so simple, so sublime. That attitude is one of prayer and worship. Such an attitude takes so much away from the loneliness of our pilgrimage. Wait and be contrite and humble and our angels, when the summons sounds, will lift us gently from our couch of death and place us in the arms of the loving Father, whose face they always see.—Rev. P. A. Halpin in New York Herald.

"Abide in Me."

That mystic word of thine, O sovereign Lord!
Is all too pure, too high, too deep for me;
Weary of striving, and with longing faint,
I breathe it back again in prayer to thee.

Abide in me—o'ershadow by thy love
Each half formed purpose and dark thought of sin;
Quench, ere it rise, each selfish, low desire,
And keep my soul as thine—calm and divine.

As some rare perfume in a vase of clay
Pervades it with a fragrance not its own—
So, when thou dwellest in a mortal soul,
All heaven's own sweetness seems around it thrown.

The soul alone, like a neglected harp,
Grows out of tune, and needs that Hand divine;
Dwell thou within it, tune and touch the chords,
Till every note and string shall answer thine.

Abide in me: there have been moments pure,
When I have seen thy face and felt thy power;
Then evil lost its grasp, and, passion hushed,
Owned the divine enchantment of the hour.

These were but seasons beautiful and rare;
Abide in me—and they shall ever be;
I pray thee now fulfill my earnest prayer,
Come and abide in me, and I in thee.

—Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe.

The Living Word.

"The Word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever."
How many of us have found this to be most certainly true!
A large proportion of human books are long ago dead, and even shriveled like the Egyptian mummies; the mere course of years has rendered them worthless, their teaching is disapproved, and they have no life for us. Entomb them in your public libraries, if you will, but henceforth they will stir no man's pulse and warm no man's heart. But this thrice blessed book of God, though it has been extended among us these many hundreds of years, is immortal in its fire, unwithering in its strength, the dew of its youth is still upon it, its speech still drops as the rain, fresh from heaven, its truths are ever flowing founts of fresh consolation. Never book spake like this book; its voice, like the voice of God, is powerful and full of majesty.

God does not speak to-day what he meant not yesterday, neither will he to-morrow blot out what he records to-day. When I read a promise spoken three thousand years ago, it is as fresh as though it fell from the eternal lips to-day. There are indeed no dates to the divine promises; they are not of private interpretation, nor to be monopolized by any generation. I say again, as fresh to-day the eternal word drops from the Almighty's lips as when he uttered it to Moses, or Elias, or spoke it by the tongue of Isaias, or Jeremiah. The word is always sure, steadfast, and full of power. It is never out of date. Scripture bubbles up evermore with good matters; it is an eternal geyser, a spiritual Niagara of grace, for ever falling, flashing, and flowing on; it is never stagnant, never brackish or defiled, but always clear, crystal, fresh and refreshing; so, therefore, ever living.—C. H. Spurgeon.

The question was once asked Napoleon: "What is the great need of France?" He answered: "Mothers." It was a pertinent reply, for he had sacrificed millions of the best sons of the nation to his insatiable ambition.

The same answer can be given to the question, What is the great need of the United States? Mothers. But we must also add fathers.

We need mothers who welcome "love children" as the greatest gift of the God of love. And this of necessity means fathers who shall inspire the deepest love in the mother's heart.

Every child must be well born. And this almost entirely depends, in spite of the heredity from remote ancestors, upon the father and mother themselves.

It must be received into a congenial home, one in every particular worthy the name of American. There must be no grind of depressing poverty in it. The mother must not carry a wearing financial burden. She must not be compelled to leave her home to help earn the child's support, and thus leave it to the care of others. The welfare of the child thus depends upon right economical conditions.

The father and the mother have the inalienable right to determine in obedience to divine law the number of children that shall gladden the home. The mother's health and her consequent power for good must not be impaired by excessive child-bearing. Neither religion nor common sense demands it.

It is the quality of offspring in which the individual and the nation are concerned, and not mere numbers. The very best should be the end aimed at in paternity and maternity, to be afterward taken care of in the best manner possible. If there can be many best, who shall be able to receive proper food and raiment and attention and harmonious home development, then let the prayer be breathed for the household quiver to be full of the pledges of divine and human love.

The highest crown that can be placed upon the head of woman is that of motherhood. The mother is both priestess and queen in the home. If she has been unutterably wronged through some despicable "satyr in broadcloth," let sympathy and helpfulness and love go out toward her, with no bar sinister upon the escutcheon of her child.

I would have every father and mother in the country read and follow out the teachings of Luther Burbank in his most commendable work on "The training of the human plant." A new heaven and a new earth would result from it.—Sel.

Letter Department

RIBSTONE, ALBERTA, CANADA.

Dear Herald Readers: When I sent my last letter we belonged to the Fork Branch of Michigan and many were the blessings we enjoyed there, but two years ago this October we came to Ribstone, Alberta, and we belong to the Ribstone Branch. Dear Saints, I was sad to leave my old home and branch, but how my heart rejoiced after reaching this place to see so many good Saints that welcomed us on every side. It was only another evidence of the grand old gospel, pure love that comes from God.

We have a nice little branch of forty-six here. We have preaching each Sunday at 2 p. m., sacrament each month, Sunday school at 1 p. m., prayer meeting and Religio on Wednesday evening. All are moving nicely. My companion is the presiding officer and he has baptized twelve since we came in this branch, and others are nearing. The Saints have been made to rejoice by reason of God's power in helping the afflicted through the ordinance of God's house. My companion has made one new opening and preached a few sermons in another place, but on account of backbiting and prejudice on every side, he could not do much.

This is a new country. Only five years ago this spring since the first settlers came in. Bro. George Burton and Bro. Thomas Smith were the first and Sr. Annie Burton wrote a letter to the HERALD and soon others came. We also have another branch about seven miles away. The Edgerton Branch, mostly from Michigan, are all alive to the work.

We have been very fortunate in having some one to cheer us up. A year ago last winter Apostle U. W. Greene was with us and gave us sermons and advice and seemed to be pleased in the way we were getting along, also Brother Mortimer, and last winter we had our district conference here and we had J. L. Mortimer, Brother Davison, Brother Tomlinson, and T. J. Jordan, our district president, also Brother Dobson, and our district secretary, Sr. Grace Diggle then, but now Beckman. Not a large conference, but a real good one. Our branch was not divided till then.

We were sorry to part with some of our branch, but knew it was for the best, (so far to go,) and on July 23 and 24 we had a two-day meeting. Brother Tomlinson was with us again to help out, and last but not least we had our worthy Bro. F. A. Smith. It would be useless for me to try to tell the good he did. Only eternity will tell, but all that ever saw him will know the benefit we got. All the regret we had, was the stay was too short. I hope he may be returned to us next year.

Branch officers are doing what they can for the spread of the gospel.

We like our new home and are getting along fine, as also are all the Saints. It seems to be a great place to get a start quick. Crops are not quite as good as last year here, but are about ready to harvest. Nature has on her best dress at present. Waving fields of grain and the prairies covered with wild flowers and lots of fat cattle, but homesteads near here are very scarce. If this should meet the eyes of Pro. David Smith, hope he will send my companion a few lines for old times' sake. I wish him success in his new field of labor, as also all of the vineyard laborers in God's work.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

GRACE BECKMAN.

DENVER, COLORADO, August 19, 1910.

Editors Herald: I was somewhat late getting into field assigned, Colorado, this year. After an absence of eleven months to a day last year, I arrived at home April 19, after attendance at the General Conference. Having some repairs to make on our little home, was unable to get at it until after a three weeks' illness of our daughter with pleura pneumonia.

I was at home, Lamoni, and spent the 4th of July with patriotic citizens of that little city and loved home ones for a change. Our traveling ministry are frequently denied special privileges like this. I enjoyed it, attending the celebration of the day as carried out by a goodly number of the citizenship.

I left home July 7, reaching Burlington, Colorado, on the 8th. Was met at the city by Alma Caley who took me to the pleasant home of Bro. F. B. Shumate, where I made headquarters while laboring in that vicinity. On the way west I was very agreeably surprised to meet Bro. John Davis, who was on his way to his field of labor, Utah, and who stopped over for two days, and preached once for us about nine miles north of Burlington, where the preaching was done while I was there. I was pleased to hear Brother John's effort. He belongs to the Second Seventy and it was the first time I had ever heard him preach. His theme was baptism, was good and altogether appropriate. It was just the food some there needed. Brother and Sister Shumate have not labored there in vain and they have endeavored to enforce their teaching by good examples.

Additional to preaching occasionally, Brother Shumate is superintendent of a Sunday school and Sister Effie is the Bible class teacher. The school is union, has an attendance of some thirty to fifty scholars, and they use Latter Day Saint quarterlies and Zion's Hope. The members of the school prefer these helps to others.

While at Burlington, I had the pleasure of baptizing five persons, a Brother and Sister Meunter, and two of their daughters, Violet and Anna, also a young man who lives with Brother Shumate, Emil Gompt, by name. Brother Meunter was born in Sweden fifty years ago and his wife is German. They all received the truth without hesitancy and are rejoicing in the work. Brother Shumate and the Saints had them along the way of truth when I arrived there. Blessed liberty was allowed me of the Father while delivering the message of the latter day work and the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith the Martyr to the people of that community. A few other Saints live scattered over the prairies around Burlington and it may be that a branch may be organized there later along.

Sr. Annie Wineger-Stephenson, a sister to Sister Shumate, living four miles west of Burlington, has the superintendency of the union Sunday school in her community and serves very acceptably. Let not the ministry forget these Saints when passing, but stop off and extend help to them. Bro. F. O. Shumate is an elder and had charge of all the services while I was there. I left the 17th inst. and came on to Denver. Bro. R. Bullard and I expect to leave the 20th for Fort Collins, where a gentleman has supplied a tent and seats for it, to conduct a series of tent meetings. I learn from Bro. C. E. Everett, since moving in the city that Bro. George F. Burnett, whom I saw Bro. Everett carry down into the water and hold him in his arms while saying the ceremony, and then baptize him, and carry him out of the water to the automobile, has died since I left here last February. Brother Burnett came here from southeastern Kansas, was formerly a Catholic, but died strong in the faith of the gospel as restored. Brother Everett preached the funeral. Sister Burnett is faithful to the gospel covenant and has the word preached to her friends in her home from time to time.

We are feeling well in the work, are hopeful for the success of the cause; the United Order of Enoch, in its labor of love and true benevolence and redemption of Zion. Craving an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

Your servant for Christ's sake,
C. SCOTT.

MALAD, IDAHO, August 16, 1910.

Dear Herald: I think it will be all right to give a little of my experience in this part of the field. After arriving in this field, I met Bro. J. D. Stead, so he and I together started to speak on the streets in Ogden. I might say that Bro. Marshall Jamison, formerly of Lamoni, went with me to the chief of police and got permission to speak anywhere in the city, except on the corner of Twenty-fifth and Washington and Twenty-fifth and Grant streets, these being the busy corners and the most dangerous; so we avoided those, as I did not want to be in any danger at all. The chief also suggested that we see the mayor, and speak from the city hall steps, so Brother Jamison and I went and saw the mayor and he said it was up to the chief, and if there was any trouble, he would have to do the arresting. By that answer we saw our way clear to occupy where we thought best. Well, we got started and we got stopped, too, and I had to march with the park policeman over to police headquarters and answer to certain complaints. I did not get back soon, so Brother Jamison, Brother Stead, and Brother Hedlund came to see where I was. By the way, I was accused of speaking in the park. I told him I was not in the park, I was on the curbstone. The park policeman said, "You was looking in the park." I said, "That did not hurt the grass to look at it." The chief said to go and apologize and it would be all right. Brother Stead said, "We have nothing to apologize for." He said Brother Stead was a little woolly. I think a person needs to be a little hairy as well as woolly to cope with the situation in this part. We expected to see the fur fly, but the wind did not raise. I understand since that one of them was fined ten dollars for acting smart.

I came to Malad on the 5th of this month, and as my manner is, I began to tell the Mormons what they believe. This was on the streets, so I was told to preach what I believed and let them alone. Yes, I said that was the best argument that the Devil could produce to Jesus, Let us alone. I thought they looked a little lonesome, so I thought I would keep them company on the streets for at least two weeks, so kept telling them what they believed. One of the speakers said that I ought to be kicked out, but apologized for it the next night, and inferred that his animal nature predominated over his better nature. I told them that Abraham committed adultery. They just thought that was terrible and said, Won't Mr. Davis be ashamed to meet Abraham in the next world after making such a statement about him? I said, "No, if anyone will be ashamed, it will be Abraham." So that night they wreaked their vengeance on our little chapel and broke five panes of glass. Sunday they came to the position that the church house was not susceptible to pain, so they adopted another plan and threw eggs at us as we were on our way home from church. They missed us and hit the tree by the wayside. Bro. and Sr. Allie Richards were in the number. To me that was a rotten argument, but I guess it is the best they have.

We will be in the conflict all this week. These are some of the many things that we have to put up with among the Mormons. Now, do not understand me to say that they all are this way. There are some good people among them and how they do like to bear their testimony about something that they know nothing about. I see by the Salt Lake Tribune that there have been one hundred and thirty-two polygamous marriages since the manifesto of 1890. Am told that the manifesto was for the United States, not Mexico. Polygamous children are coming to the United States as well as Mexico, and they tell me that it is a dead issue, and still it is bringing forth live children all the time. I am glad that the name of Pres. Joseph Smith is coming to honor in the East among his followers, though it is in disgrace here.

Hoping that Zion will put on her beautiful garment.

Your brother in the one faith,
JOHN DAVIS

MCPHERSON, KANSAS, August 14, 1910.

Dear Herald: The last time I wrote you was from Hesperia, California. I am now located at the above named place. If there are any Saints in McPherson County or near by, I would be glad to hear from them. Better still, would like for them to come and see us. We have Sunday school every Sunday morning at 9.30. Would like to have others meet with us if convenient for them to do so.

This is a beautiful city, noted for its fine schools and colleges. It seems to me that there should be some of our people at or near here. If so, let us get together and work together that our faith might be increased in God, that we might bring others to see the truthfulness and harmony of this latter day restored gospel. We know that we have the truth and that it is the truth that is to make men free; one in purpose as God the Father and his son Jesus. I would be glad to get a letter from any of my old time associates, especially from the president of the branch at Holden, Missouri, as I want to correspond with him.

There are seven of my family that belong to the church. We have a good Latter Day Saint Sunday school of our own. We desire to do all that we can for the cause of truth. Any of the ministry passing through here that can stop off would be more than welcome by us. We live one block west and three north of Santa Fé depot, close to the Missouri Pacific and union depots; about nine blocks from Rock Island, corner of Woodside and Locust streets. May God bless and prosper the right.

Your brother,
T. GOMER TURPEN.

MERRILL, MICHIGAN, August 22, 1910.

Dear Saints: I come to you by letter to let you know how I love to read the many cheering letters coming through the HERALD, and giving me so much comfort in this great work.

I have just returned home from the reunion held at Bay City, Michigan, and it recalls to my mind the words of the poet, "How good it is to be a saint in latter days." We had a very enjoyable time indeed, and met some old-time Saints, which gave us much joy. May God bless the reunions, and may they long continue. God is certainly blessing his people in these last days. And how unworthy I feel when God pours his Spirit upon me many times. How thankful we should be since God has permitted us to live in these latter days, when his gospel is again restored to earth in all of its purity, loveliness, and soul-saving grace.

Dear Saints, let me say to you, believe your beliefs, and doubt your doubts, but never make the fatal mistake of doubting your beliefs and believing your doubts. Much skepticism has its root in sin. Men hold down the truth in unrighteousness, and do not like to retain God in their knowledge. The great truths of the Bible are bought because they expose sin and threaten it with punishment. Men first make a shipwreck of conscience, and then make a shipwreck of faith. A belief is to be well examined before it is to be discarded. A doubt is to be well scrutinized before it is to be encouraged.

He who seeks honestly to be godlike will find little to stumble over in the godlike teachings of Jesus of Nazareth, but he who would live a sinful and selfish life may well desire to believe that there is no God, no life beyond, and no judgment to come.

Dear Saints, let me bring a few things before our minds that we ought to forget if we would increase our happiness and prolong life: We should forget our neighbor's faults, and advise an exchange; forget the temptations, forget the fault-finding; give a little thought to the cause that provoked it. We should forget the peculiarities of our friends, and only remember the good points which make us fond of them. Forget all personal quarrels or stories you may have heard by accident, and which if repeated would sound a thousand times worse than they are. Blot out of memory, as far as possible, all the disagreeable occurrences of life. They will come, but they will grow larger when you remember them, and the constant thought of the acts or meannesses, or worse still, malice, will only tend to make us more familiar with them. Obliterate everything disagreeable from yesterday. Start out with a clean sheet to-day, and write upon it for Jesus' sweet memory's sake, only those things which are lovely and lovable; remembering that Holmes wrote poems, Shakespeare wrote dreams, but Jesus lived a poem, and his life was a drama. Can we not live like Jesus did?

Your brother in hope,

F. P. JUBB.

VANCOUVER, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Dear Herald: My two years' experience in the church have really been the best two years of my life. I consider I have seen more and felt more at home among the people called Saints than I can give account for. I am on my way to Vancouver, having left Owen Sound, perhaps never to return. If that be the case, many of the dear brothers and sisters I may never see again on this land, until the millennium; but my earnest prayer is that our lives will follow the narrow path in which we have started. If we do, I know I will see them all again, for the promise is as sure as the word.

The Saints at Owen Sound were very good to us indeed. We shall never forget their kindness and love and respect toward us. Even when we were saying good-bye at the wharf, my little boy Robbie said to me, "Daddie, I don't like saying good-bye. It makes me sorry and I feel lonesome." The parting was quite sad, but in it was true love for each other. I shall never forget it. The next day a lady on the boat said to me after we were acquainted, "I felt very sad indeed. I cried when I saw a little bunch of people bidding each other good-bye. It looked so sad." Oh, I do hope I will always love my brothers and sisters so much.

We had a Sunday school teachers' meeting in the hall the evening before we left Owen Sound. Elder Grant St. John was there, also the presiding elder, Benson Bellrose, and we were presented with a beautiful Inspired Version of the Bible from the Saints, presented to us by Elder Bellrose. He spoke very highly of my wife, children, and myself; and gave us much good encouragement and advice, which I intend to try to follow; and may God bless him, for he is pulling hard against the stream. Many odds are against them and Satan tries so much to overthrow them, but my prayers and sympathy and love are ever for them.

We are getting on our way very nicely and one of the first things I will do when we get to Vancouver is to look for the people called Latter Day Saints.

I certainly do not regret the step we took when we obeyed the first principles of the gospel of Christ, and my desire is to continue to the end, and I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints, for we are going to a new place and know not what is before us. I would like to know the address of some of the Saints of Vancouver and where the meetings are held, etc., through the HERALD if it is convenient.

I will draw to a close now, as it is near tea time and the boat is rocking a little.

Your brother in the gospel,

W. C. REED.

TRYON, NEBRASKA, August 13, 1910.

Dear Herald: As I have not seen anything from this part for some time I thought it might please some to know that the few Saints here are striving to do their duty. Although it is from five to seven miles for some of the Saints to go to church, they attend Religio every Saturday night, and Sunday school.

Bro. Will Godfrey is the president of the Religio, also superintendent of the Sunday school, and does his work in the fear of the Lord, and is a very zealous worker. I do not go as much as I would like as my health is very poor and other things over which I have no control hinder me, and though my life seems dark and dreary, still I trust in God and believe he doeth all things well, and that if I had been more firm in the past, I might have received greater blessings. But I am now determined to humbly endure the trials that God sees best to send upon me, and not try to cast them aside, for in so doing, oftentimes, the Devil steps in and causes the weak one to fall into the snare he has laid for him, which must surely bring bitter sorrow and remorse as long as life shall last even though they repent and are forgiven.

May God help us as his children to be willing to say, "Thy will be done, not mine." And may we that think we are strong never cause others to fall, but rather hold them up, for some day we must stand before the great and just Judge who knoweth the desire of each heart.

May God bless all his children and help them to withstand the fiery trials of this life.

Your sister,

E. A. PAYNE.

CASTANA, IOWA, August 18, 1910.

Dear Herald: I wish to make a report through your columns of some very satisfactory work done just recently. The writer has the writing habit and as it seems to be about the only thing I can do for the Master at present, I hope you will bear with me even if I come quite often. My letter a few weeks ago asking Bro. Alvin Knisley to write to us was answered at once and Brother Knisley, although very busy at present in Sioux City and vicinity, came to our rescue and was rewarded by leading three precious souls into the waters of baptism on August 16, and he blessed two babies, also left some near the kingdom and others investigating the truth. Those baptized are Mrs. Bernice Clare Kearns, Miss Linda Lucenda Greenough, and Miss Hazel Delight Greenough, whose addresses are Soldier, Iowa, R. F. D. No 2. This, I believe, is just the beginning of the end in that neighborhood.

Bro. Burch gave a talk on the restoration of the gospel to a small and very interested audience last evening, left some tracts, and hearts anxious to hear more about this great latter day work. These new members will be added to the Moorhead Branch, Moorhead, Iowa; so brothers and sisters, you see while we have not been able to meet with you as often as we would like, we are not idle. We intend to be even more busy in the future. If you enjoy seeing souls born into the kingdom as we do, you will each make yourself a committee of one to try at least to lead some soul to Christ, and do not leave all the preaching, teaching, and practicing to the elders, for God will bless your every effort to help spread the truth. We hope that our little victory for Christ will encourage others to put on the whole armor of righteousness.

Sr. Bernice Clare Keairns is the daughter of Sr. Linda Greenough, who said in last week's paper that she was a "black sheep," but expected soon to be a member of the church; and she is. All glory to God. Ever hoping and praying for the redemption of Zion.

Your brother and sister in the one faith,
GEORGE AND SADIE BURCH.

CLEARWATER, NEBRASKA, August 16, 1910.

Editors Herald: I came to this place on last Friday to be in attendance at the conference of the Central Nebraska District. On Friday, the 12th, the Sunday school association of the district held their business session and in the evening a Sunday school entertainment, and I feel to commend the effort of the Saints here for producing one of the best entertainments that it has been my privilege to attend in a long time. The Sunday school at this place is in a real good, healthy condition, if the judgment of your writer amounts to anything, and the superintendent, Thomas Rutledge, seems to have the school in good command, while the teachers go at their work in that spirit of true devotion that would evidence to their scholars that they love Christ and their work.

The conference was not very well attended by the Saints from abroad, but those who came I feel quite sure felt well repaid for the effort they had to make to reach here. I would not appear in this letter as a fault-finder, dear Saints, of the conduct of those who profess to love Christ in this district, as well as in other places in the State. But I do wish to call your attention to that which appears to me a feature of carelessness upon your part. When due notice has been given in the church papers of the time when your district should be represented in conference and you know that the ministry, both local and general, will quite likely be in attendance, and would love to meet you at that place, and witness upon your part an exhibition of willingness to help make the conference a success, and you are conspicuous by your absence, what must be the disappointment of the ministry when they see possibly eight or ten Saints in attendance at the business sessions of conference out of a membership of three or four hundred in the district? What will you answer the loved Master in that day of accounts when you realize that your dwelling place in eternity will be determined by work done and the opportunities for work afforded you that may have been miserably neglected. At these conferences, matters of grave import arise affecting the work not alone of the district, but individually the whole church, that your voice and vote should help determine. And we sometimes hear a brother or sister say, "Well, if I had been at that conference, I could have opened the ears of the Saints by a statement of facts that would have possibly prevented the passage of a measure seemingly very hastily passed upon by the conference." Could you not have been there? What has been the impediment in your way? Possibly three days of time spent and a couple of dollars car fare. Is that any consideration to put up against the work that cost Jesus the Christ so much? We all want to see Zion redeemed and her converts armed with righteousness. Attending General Conference once a year, hearing big resolutions discussed and passed, fine discourses upon what we will be, will never redeem Zion. Read what the Lord said to the Saints in 1834 (Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2). Saints, we will soon hear the wonderful and soul-stirring announcement:

"Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." Let us have on the wedding garment and be ready.

Brother Kester is the president of the branch here, and I notice that though he lives in the country three or four miles, his whole family are always in to meeting and always on time, an example worthy to be emulated.

Elder J. F. Grimes and myself are holding meetings here this week and will continue over next Sunday. Our congregations are not large, but they are orderly and seem interested. The Saints in the branch are generally giving us good assistance. From this place I will go toward the reunion of the Western Nebraska and Black Hills District, to be held beginning September 2 at Bayard, Nebraska. Come, Saints, from near and far, and let us have a time of real enjoyment and spiritual uplift.

Elder C. W. Prettyman and the writer held a very good series of meetings at Comstock, Nebraska, during the forepart of August. Four were baptized and others are certainly very near the kingdom. There is a lovely band of Saints at Comstock. All seem so willing to take hold and help move things. At Grand Island we were permitted to organize a very nice Sunday school on August 11; Bro. Charles Madsen, superintendent; W. S. Spanswick, assistant; Sister Caiffiere, secretary. We are trying to keep busy and are enjoying reasonably good health.

J. R. SUTTON.

If there are any Saints living in or near Silverton, Oregon, please write me or notify me through the HERALD.

MRS. MARY ROBINSON.

ROME, MISSOURI, August 17, 1910.

Dear Herald: I have lately become converted to the thought that the church is not yet entirely out of the wilderness, but she is still coming out, and will continue to come, until Christ comes the second time. One of the strongest proof texts that we have in favor of this point is the parable of the ten virgins: "Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom. And five of them were wise, and five were foolish. They that were foolish took their lamps, and took no oil with them: but the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps. While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept. And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him. Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps. And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out. But the wise answered, saying, Not so; lest there be not enough for us and you; but go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves. And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage: and the door was shut. Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us. But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, I know you not. Watch therefore; for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh."—Matthew 25: 1-13.

The Inspired Translation gives a little different rendering: "You never knew me."

These foolish virgins, then, represent a class of people that have not received a knowledge of the gospel. Or in other words they have not been converted by the law of the Lord. As David declares, The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple."—Psalm 17: 7.

The lamps in this illustration no doubt represent their individual capacity for the receiving of light and truth. The oil is a symbol of the Spirit of the Lord. It is folly for us to claim that the Spirit of God aids no one but the Saints. The record teaches: "That was the true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world."—John 1: 9. But there is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding."—Job 32: 8. So then a portion of divinity follows every man into this world of sin and sorrow. There is a part of God in every man, as man was made in the image of God. And Paul declares he is not far from every one of us (Acts 17: 27).

But their lamps had gone out, because the Spirit had quit striving with them! The Spirit will not always strive with man. It will plead with us from time to time to come to repentance and prepare for the greater responsibilities in the kingdom as the wise virgins were permitted to enjoy. These wise virgins were not supposed to exhaust their supply of light by giving their oil to the foolish virgins, as this oil must be obtained at the fountain head, even from God. "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you."—John 14: 26. Again: "And we are his witnesses of these things; and so also is the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him."—Acts 5: 32.

In Revelation 12 we learn that the church went into the wilderness where she was to stay 1,260 years and she was to be nourished and fed of God during this period of time. Of course she had lost her visible organization, but she existed in the form of the good, honest people that we find in the world. Some may object and say this is too much like the Baptist found it in the Bible.

Again we read in Revelation 18: 4: "And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." So according to this the Lord has a people in the Babylon world, and the church is coming out of the wilderness now as they accept the gospel. The following scripture is conclusive proof: "Behold, this is my doctrine: Whosoever repenteth and cometh unto me, the same is my church; whosoever declareth more or less than this, the same is not of me, but is against me; therefore, he is not of my church. And now, behold, whosoever is of my church, and endureth of my church to the end, him will I establish upon my Rock, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against him."—Doctrine and Covenants 3: 16, 17.

No doubt there are some people in other churches that repent of their sins before they ever hear the gospel preached in all of its fullness. For instance, there was Sidney Rigdon. The Lord said unto him: "Behold verily, verily I say unto my servant Sidney, I have looked upon thee and thy works. I have heard thy prayers and prepared thee for a greater work. . . . Behold, thou wast sent forth even as John, to prepare the way before me, and before Elijah which should come, and thou knew it not. Thou didst baptize by water unto repentance, but they received not the Holy Ghost; . . . and they shall receive the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, even as the apostles of old."—Doctrine and Covenants 34: 2. So here we find the Lord recognized the good that this man had done, and his people, even when they were in the "Campbellite" church.

"And my vineyard has become corrupted every whit; and their is none which doeth good save it be a few; and they err in many instances, because of priestcrafts, all having corrupt minds. And verily, verily I say unto you, that this church have I established and called forth out of the wilderness; and even so will I gather mine elect from the four quarters of the earth, even as many as will believe in me, and hearken unto my voice."—Doctrine and Covenants 32: 1, 2.

From this reading we understand the Lord has an elect people out in the wilderness, and he is calling them out. Then they become the visible church. So there are a few out in the wilderness that are doing good. And it is a few that find their way into the kingdom of God.

Doctrine and Covenants 5: 3: "And to none else will I grant this power, to receive this same testimony, among this generation, in this, the beginning of the rising up, and the coming forth of my church out of the wilderness; clear as the moon and fair as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners."

This language shows this church had an existence even before she was organized by Joseph Smith. And the church is still coming forth out of the wilderness as honest people accept and obey the gospel. When they do this the church assumes a brighter and more brilliant form.

Now in Matthew 7 we find a certain class will come before the Lord and say, Open unto us. Have we not done certain wonderful works in thy name? just as the parable of ten virgins indicates will be done. They will not have the oil in their vessels and therefore will not be permitted to enter into the marriage supper.

In gospel bonds,

A. M. BAKER.

BELLAIR, ILLINOIS, August 22, 1910.

Saints' Herald: I am still in the faith in hope of eternal life. When I see the beckoning hand of the Master who says, "Follow me, I am the way," reflecting upon scenes of life, and wondering that while the way is so plain that the way-faring man, though a fool, need not err therein, the world is still rushing heedlessly on. What kind of a scourge will it take from the hand of the Almighty to cause the people to pause and look to see the awful gulf into which they are heedlessly flinging? The warning voice is daily in storm, fire, water, and blood, yet the world will heed it not. We are rushing down the broad way, not stopping to notice the straight gate and narrow way, careful and troubled about many things, not choosing the one thing needful, the thing which all men should be securing to themselves and more to be valued than the riches of this world, that of eternal life.

Read Ephesians 4: 18-20. How necessary it is for us to keep the house clean, swept and garnished, that when the elders return, should they bring fruits of labor, they could point them with pride and say, "There is the house we have been telling you about." It has been said that the soul of improvement is the improvement of the soul. The doctrine of Christ still lives, and though hindered for a time by circumstances adverse to its advancement, it has rallied and is marching onward as never before.

My Father has a great many of the finest suits for both men and women, and as perfectly adjustable to a child. They are neat, clean, and graceful. Anyone who has ever once put on a full uniform has never regretted it. It is within the reach of all to become good. He that by overcoming the evil in himself has become good, is in a degree great. We hope and pray the Lord will bless the work at this place, and open the way for the gospel to be preached to the honest in heart, that many may be made to see the truth of the glad message. We hope on in the work of our Master. Pray for us that we may live faithful to the end and be accounted worthy to stand with the redeemed when he comes.

I am in the midst of persecution, but feel glad that I am counted worthy to be persecuted for righteousness' sake. Being reviled, we bless; being persecuted, we suffer it; being defamed, we entreat. Unity is becoming in the body of Christ, because it in all things stands for unity. "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."—John 17: 3.

The command to warn our neighbor is one of the most exacting that has been given to the Saints in the latter day. The Saints of Bellair are in earnest to build a chapel. I have one dollar for tithing and hope before General Conference at Lamoni, Iowa, I will have more to send. Some have done quite well in paying their tithing.

I ought to feel interested in those who are carrying the gospel to others and be willing to do all in my power to help them, if I have the work at heart; if I appreciate as I ought the blessings I enjoy, and have that love in my soul for others that I should have, I feel anxious for everyone to hear it and come to the light, that they may enjoy with me and many others the great blessing that it brings. We know that our heavenly Father is no respecter of persons; that one soul is as precious in his sight as another; for the selfsame end has he created them that they might serve him and finally gain an inheritance in his kingdom. Yours for truth,

MRS. MARY A. FERGUSON.

Cheer Up.

Does it not seem strange, dear friends, how many, many times we grow discouraged and "blue" and feel that we are forsaken by friends and loved ones, and even God? How sometimes, the very birds sing discordantly to our ears, the sky is not so blue, the sweet flowers and sparkling brook hold no interest for us?

We often make a fatal mistake in allowing some sorrow to blight our lives; we can not see that perhaps this very trouble is for our soul's best good. God has given us our lives and we can make them what we will. These troubles will only make us stronger men and women, if we meet them in the right way. Let us be courageous and say within ourselves, "God is caring for me and he knows what is best; I will try to do my part." And so when we grow despondent and feel that our troubles are more than we can bear, let us think of that beautiful poem, written by an unknown author:

"Sometime when all life's lessons have been learned,
And sun and stars for evermore have set,
The things which our weak judgments here have spurned,
The things o'er which we grieved with lashes wet,
Will flash before us out of life's dark night,
As stars shine most in deeper tints of blue;
And we shall see how all God's plans were right,
And how what seemed reproof, was love most true."

News From Branches

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

August, with all the delights Dame Nature brought, also started out with a most cheering outlook for the Saints. Our fast accumulating number was added to on the 1st instant by four, and on the 7th six more entered the fold by baptism; but of course the going out as well as the coming in continues. Sunday, the 7th, was a most enjoyable day; Bishop E. Short preached in the morning with good liberty, closing with an exhortation to the Saints to study carefully what had recently been written concerning the Order of Enoch,—its organization and the benefits accruing thereto, and to prepare themselves to take part in this high and all important movement. There was an unusually large number at this meeting. At the same hour the Band of Mercy met in the hall and elected its officers and we may add that it is daily in evidence on the streets here that there is need of an active society of this kind in this city.

In the evening, Bro. John Kaler again presented the word of counsel with his usual force and clearness, and the necessity of a true, spiritual life, actuated by a living faith, was the basis of his sermon. On the 14th instant he continued the series, preaching on repentance, and on last evening on baptism. The midweek prayer meeting was in charge of Brn. E. H. Garrett and J. Luff, jr., and other young men have been lately called to preside, namely John Gardner and Harry Hattey, and the peaceful presence of the Spirit was attested to.

Bro. J. E. Page, whose zeal for the welfare of poor Lo led him to further conduct a missionary work in Oklahoma, quite recently accompanied Elders I. N. and Ammon White there, but we regret to note that he has returned under an affliction, which we trust will speedily be removed through the prayers of the Saints.

On yesterday the mercury indicated 93 degrees of temperature, but the electric fan at church on the platform, as well as a generous supply of the other kind, were in commission at the morning service, and moreover the Saints were spiritually refreshed by the word spoken by Bro. M. H. Bond, assisted by Pres. Joseph Smith.

The Daughters of Zion and the Men's League occupied the church during the latter part of the afternoon. On Saturday the 20th the funeral of our faithful Bro. David Thomas took place, Elder E. C. Briggs and Brother Joseph in charge. He was kindly cared for at the Sanitarium recently, and bore his sufferings patiently.

The Sanitarium and Saints' Home continue to open their doors to those overtaken by accidents and life's varied misfortunes and it is well that they are spoken of as institutions that are "blessed and God ordained." The Saints will no doubt be glad to hear the particulars of Brother Joseph's trip last Monday to Leavenworth, and also of his missionary trips from time to time, the last of which was to Malvern Hill on Sunday the 14th inst. Many of the veterans are still actively engaged who have heeded the Spirit's call,

"Come with the strong sinew,
Nor faint in heat or cold,
And pause not till the evening
Draws round its wreath of gold."

Editors Herald: Since our last report five of our little Sunday school scholars were baptized by Brother Cooke at the Sunday school session of August 7. They were confirmed at our monthly sacrament service by Brn. T. J. Elliott, N. N. Cooke, and S. A. Burgess. These little ones were Ruth and Helen Reeves, Roy and Goldie Crowley, and John Radford.

Three sweet little babies were blessed: Joseph Tibbles, son of Bro. Joseph Swift, jr., and wife; William Russell, son of Bro. and Sr. W. R. Cowlshaw; and Emma May Prall, daughter of Brother and Sister Whitney. Blessed by Brn. S. A. Burgess and N. N. Cooke.

Instruction was received the past month through Brethren Davis, of Dayton, Ohio; Archibald, Reeves, S. A. Burgess, and our pastor, T. J. Elliot.

The district priesthood meeting was held the evening of August 15. The subject under consideration was the Church

Conference Notices.

The conference of the Eastern Michigan District will convene with the Port Huron Branch, September 10 and 11. Branches will please be prompt; send in your reports early. William M. Grice, president.

Reunion Notices.

The Eastern Michigan district reunion will be held at Port Huron, Michigan, beginning September 2, and continuing for ten days. During the second Saturday and Sunday, September 10 and 11, of reunion time, will be held the conference of the Eastern Michigan District. We hope for a full and complete report from all the branches. Let your reports close with August 31. These reports may be sent to me at Applegate, or handed in during reunion. Ministerial reports should be in the hands of district president, William Grice, Crosswell, Michigan, or district secretary before convening of conference. Do not fail to elect your delegates to conference and see to it that they are supplied with proper credentials. If need permits we will have blanks in the hands of branch secretaries to be used for reporting delegates. T. O. Benedict, Applegate, Michigan, R. F. D. No. 1.

The western Iowa reunion will be held at Little Sioux, Iowa, from September 9 to 18 inclusive. Besides district workers, we will have with us, J. W. Wight, Heman C. Smith, and expect S. W. L. Scott. Sister Etzenhouser will have charge of the Sunday school and Religio work. Meals, fuel, and feed for teams will be furnished as cheaply as possible. Those wishing board and lodging please make your wants known as soon as you can to S. J. Linn, Little Sioux. Rent for tents is as follows: Wall tents, 10 by 12, $1.75; 12 by 14, $2; compartment tents, 12 by 14, $3.75; 10 by 20, $4.25. No charge for setting up. That there be no disappointment, please order your tents accompanied by the cash by the 1st of September. We expect this to be one of the best reunions held in western Iowa, and if you will all come with the Spirit of the Master, our expectations will be more than realized. Geo. Miggers, secretary, Little Sioux, Iowa. 34-2t

Resolution.

Resolution of the Eastern Michigan district conference at Minden City, June, 1910:

"Whereas, the General Conference resolutions providing that membership shall be where residence is, or as nearly so as possible, and this is in many cases lost sight of, violated, as also such sentiments as, 'To the work, to the work, we are servants of God'; 'Am I a soldier of the cross, a follower of the Lamb'; 'Where duty calls or danger, be never wanting there'; 'Why stand ye idly waiting, for reapers more to come'; 'Send me forth to active service'; 'Here am I, send me'; 'All are called according to the gifts and callings of God unto them'; 'Thrust in thy sickle, thrust in thy sickle and reap'; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the district secretary notify such members so situated and ask their prompt compliance, thereby maintaining more fully their good standing by conforming to right rules of discipline as enacted by the church for the conservation of order."

In complying with the requirements of the above resolution we take this means of notifying all Saints in the district who are residing within the jurisdiction of branches that they do not fail to comply with the above request.

F. O. BENEDICT, Secretary.

College Opening.

The session of 1910-11 will open Tuesday, September 6, at the college chapel, 10 a. m. A program of music, readings, and speech making will be rendered, and the public is cordially invited to be present. Monday, the 5th, will be largely devoted to registration, and it is desirable that as many of the students as can do so consistently should register on that day. Regular class work will begin Wednesday morning, and it is quite important that students should be with their classes at their first session. J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

TWO STORIES WITH A MORAL.

THE STORY OF KING SAUL.

The Lord commanded King Saul to utterly destroy the Amalekites. The Amalekites were a depraved and degenerate race that must be purged away to make room for better things. The treatment was heroic, but the disease was malignant.

The Amalekites were to be annihilated; but the Lord did not wish his people to become a race of pirates or brigands who would go to war for the sake of the spoils, and so he commanded that there should be no spoils in this particular case, even the flocks and herds were to be destroyed.

Accordingly, with all the pomp and ceremony of war, King Saul marched away at the head of two hundred and ten thousand fighting men. It looked bad for the Amalekites. In a very short time Saul had desolated their country and smitten them even from Havilah unto Shur.

So presently Saul came marching home again, with all the flourish and jubilation of victory. On the way he was met by the Prophet Samuel, who was the spokesman of the Lord. When Saul saw Samuel he began to very much disturbed in his mind; but like many another offender, he decided to put on a bold front. He was not the first man or the last one to attempt to deceive God himself.

So he hailed Samuel with considerable effusion, crying unto him, "Blessed be thou of the Lord: I have performed the commandment of the Lord."

Samuel cut him short with the query, "What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear?"

Then devolved upon Saul the disagreeable and trying task of explaining why he had not kept all of the commandment of God. He and his people had found a way that seemed to them to be better. They had decided to spare King Agag as in interesting prisoner of war. The best of the flocks and herds and other spoils they had kept, destroying only the diseased, ill-favored, and valueless.

They cherished the idea that if some of the plunder thus reserved were sacrificed to the Lord in Gilgal it would square accounts and everything would be all right. In other words, the Lord had outlined a certain plan that seemed good to him; but they had a substitute that seemed better to them. Half-way methods were deemed just as acceptable as whole-hearted obedience.

Theirs is a mistake that humanity often makes, and it will be profitable, for us to heed the answer that Samuel gave to their arguments in self justification. Samuel said:

Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams.

The favor of God, when lost is disobedience, can not be purchased by sacrifice.

After pronouncing the judgment of God upon Saul, Samuel turned to depart. When Saul reached forth his hand to stay the prophet and seizing the skirt of his mantle caused it to rent asunder. Then in the dramatic style of the old prophets, Samuel informed Saul that in a similar manner God had rent the kingdom from him because of his heedless and disobedient spirit.

In the hour of victory Saul was defeated. Samuel's predictions were fulfilled. Saul lost his kingdom. He lived to see his sons killed in battle, and finally he himself filled a suicide's grave.

And thus ends the story of King Saul.

THE STORY OF NAAMAN.

Naaman was a great man in his own country. He was captain of the hosts of the king of Syria. When the king of Syria spoke, Naaman gave heed; and when Naaman spoke, others hastened to discover and execute his will. He was a brave man and an honorable man. Moreover, the Lord of Hosts had used him in his own way to carry out his own designs. At Naaman's command armies marched and countermarched, fought battles and won victories, and perhaps he never suspected that a greater than he inspired him to think out the plans and stratagems that won the victories and brought deliverance to Syria.

But Naaman himself had been attacked by a secret and terrible foe. Against this foe shields and helmets were no defense. Spears and battering rams were useless. Naaman was a leper.

Some one has painted an effective word picture of Naaman riding away at the head of his beplumed and bespeared hosts, a man honored and feared, yet a man of sorrow. In departing he might wave a farewell to his wife, but he dare not kiss her. His body was beginning to rot with a loathsome and contagious disease that would kill him by inches.

It happened that in his household there was a little Hebrew maid who waited upon Naaman's wife, and she one day made bold to say, "Would God my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria! for he would recover him of his leprosy."

This conversation came to the ears of Naaman, with the result that in due time he departed in search of this wonderful prophet. He took with him gold and silver and many changes of raiment, and, doubtlessly was accompanied by an imposing escort of soldiers.

Presently Naaman, with his cavalcade, his men and horses and chariots, stood before the door of Elisha, the prophet of God. Evidently he expected some demonstration of welcome, such as he thought befitted his station, but in that he was disappointed. He had yet to learn that in this instance it was not his to command; he was there to supplicate. Suppliants may not dictate terms. Moreover, Elisha was of an independent and democratic turn of mind, and it is not on record that he even came to the door to greet the distinguished leper.

He did, however, send a messenger, and this was the message: "Go and wash in Jordan seven times, and thy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean."

Naaman was angry in a minute, and departed, raging as he went. This remedy seemed too absurd. What, should he, Naaman, dirty his august body in the muddy Jordan? Why did not Elisha come out and go through some wild and mysterious incantation, and smite the sores, and command them to be healed?

Fortunately for Naaman, there were among his servants men of rare good sense who came to him and expounded the following excellent philosophy:

"If the prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldest thou not have done it? how much rather then, when he saith to thee, Wash, and be clean?"

Naaman heeded this counsel, as well he might, and went and dipped seven times in Jordan, according to the saying of the man of God, and truly his flesh came upon him again and he was made clean.

That must have been a great day for Naaman. I fancy that as he rode homeward the chariots lagged in their courses, and that the spirit of Naaman chafed at delay. He could kiss his wife now. There was no longer a barrier between him and his children. He was going home a clean man.

And thus ends the story of Naaman.

THE MORAL.

The moral of these two stories is obvious. The salvation of man is found in complete obedience to God.

Saul chose to disobey God; Saul perished. Naaman chose to obey God; Naaman lived and was greatly blessed. You and I have the same privilege of choice, and the consequences of our choice are just as important to us individually.

Yet how often do men lose sight of that great fact. God outlines a certain policy, or commands certain specific acts; but man reasons out another policy that seems to him to be much more desirable, and he is willing to risk the results of pitting his own judgment against God's judgment.

That fact is brought forcibly to our minds when we are trying to teach sinners the way of salvation and life. We tell them that they must be baptized. Like Naaman, who stood on the banks of Jordan and advocated the superior virtues of Abana and Pharpar, they hesitate and palaver, and finally reject their opportunity, unless perchance they have the saving grace of common sense that the servant used to such good advantage when he persuaded Naaman to take the Lord at his word.

But how is it with us, after having entered the church? Do we sometimes hesitate and doubt? When God outlines a certain policy do we cherish an opposite one that seems to us to be better? Do we think that we can yield a partial obedience and later on explain the matter to the satisfaction of God?

The time draws nearer for the second coming of Christ and the culmination of our work. Perhaps more than at any time in our past history the church needs men and women who will consecrate all that they have and are to the service of God, keeping all of his commandments without mental or material reservations.

The burden rests upon all. Ministers, merchants, farmers, bankers, fathers and mothers, young people, all are required to give their brain, muscle, and money to the cause of God.

What are you holding back?

Surely in the past we have made the mistake of partial obedience, for the Lord said on a certain occasion that there was within the church an abundance to redeem Zion, but Zion is not yet redeemed. Let us not repeat the error. The experiences of Saul and Naaman teach the lesson of complete obedience.

THE NEW POSTAL LAW.

A few weeks ago a new law took effect touching periodicals being mailed at second-class postage rates of one cent per pound. This law affects all subscribers to the SAINTS' HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and in fact all of our periodicals. We give the extract that affects us most, as follows:

"A reasonable time will be allowed publishers to secure renewals of subscriptions, but unless subscriptions are expressly renewed after the term for which they are paid, within the following periods:

"Dailies, within three months; triweeklies, within six months; semiweeklies, within nine months; weeklies, within one year; semimonthlies, within three months; monthlies, within four months; bi-monthlies, within six months; quarterlies, within six months, they shall not be counted in the legitimate list of subscribers, and copies mailed on account thereof shall not be accepted for mailing at the second-class postage rate of one cent a pound, but may be mailed at the transient second-class postage rate of one cent for each four ounces or fraction thereof, prepaid by stamps affixed. The right of a publisher to extend credit for subscriptions to his publication is not denied or questioned, but his compliance or non-compliance with this regulation will be taken into consideration in determining whether the publication is entitled to transmission at the second-class postage rates."—P. L. & R. 436: 3.

From the above it will be seen that we can not continue our publications at our own pleasure, but we must comply with the law. No true Latter Day Saint will object to this, as they have been contending for a strict compliance with law. Now, if any of your publications are discontinued at any time; don't blame the force at the Herald Office for it, as they are governed in such matters by the postal laws. Just make a little extra effort and pay your subscriptions promptly and all will be well.

Your colaborer in bonds,

The first and most seductive peril, and the destroyer of most young men, is the drinking of liquor. I am no temperance lecturer in disguise, but a man who knows and tells you what observation has proved to him; and I say to you that you are more likely to fail in your career from acquiring the habit of drinking liquor than from any or all other temptations likely to assail you. You may yield to almost any other temptation and may reform—may brace up, and, if not recover lost ground, at least remain in the race, and secure and maintain a respectable position. But from failure caused by the drink habit recovery is almost impossible. I have known but few exceptions to the rule.—Andrew Carnegie.

METHOD IN PREACHING.

I know of no department of human activity, from the governing of a great nation to the doctoring of a little body, where the disposition is not constantly appearing to invent some sudden method or to seek some magical and concise prescription which shall obviate the need of careful, comprehensive study and long continued application. But this disposition is nowhere so strong, I think, as in the ministry.

There is a certain air of spontaneousness; a certain dislike of rule and system which belongs to a great many ministers' fundamental conception of the work of preaching. Rightly studied and weighed, no doubt, the teachings of Christ and of the whole New Testament all look one way. They all involve the simple truth that he who works for God must work with his best powers; and since among the effective powers of man the powers of plan and arrangement stand very high, the whole of the New Testament really implies that he who preaches must lay out the methods and ways of preaching, as a merchant or a soldier lays out a campaign of the market or the battlefield. But at the same time there are many passages in the New Testament which seem to have in them something like a promise of immediate inspiration.

Christ forbids his disciples: "Settle it, therefore, in your hearts not to meditate before what ye shall answer. For I will give you a mouth and wisdom which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay nor resist." These words, and others like them were spoken indeed to certain disciples, and in view of certain special emergencies of their life. They have been easily appropriated by many a poor uninspired creature who has found himself the subject of ordination, and a general impression of the piety of extemporaneousness, has spread more widely and reached more thoughtful and intelligent men than we suppose.

I think, too, that the revolt of Protestantism against the minute and overstrained organization of the Romish Church has had very much to do with the creation of that distrust of methodicalness which prevails so largely among preachers. However it has come about, the fact is clear enough. Look at the way in which the pulpit teaches. I venture to say that there is nothing so unreasonable in any other branch of teaching. You are a minister, and you are to instruct these people in the truths of God, to bring God's message to them. All the vast range of God's revelation and of man's duty is open to you. And how do you proceed?

If you are like most ministers there is no order, no progress, no consecutive purpose in your teaching. You never begin at the beginning and proceed step by step to the end of any course of orderly instruction. You float over the whole sea of truth, and plunge here and there, like a gull, on any subject that either suits your mood, or that some casual and superficial intercourse with people makes you conceive to be required by a popular need. No other instruction ever was given so. No hearer has the least idea, as he goes to your church, what you will preach to him about that day. It is hopeless for him to try to get ready for your teaching.—From Phillips Brooks Yale "Lectures on Preaching."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

When Sultan Abdul Hamid was deposed, numerous involuntary grass widows were created. The Turkish Government has set about the task of pensioning these unfortunate women, and finds to its astonishment that they number seven hundred and forty-six. It is reported that during the next ten years these women will receive pensions monthly, ranging in amount from four to twenty-one dollars.

We have received local newspapers from Moline, Illinois, Eldorado Springs, Missouri, New Philadelphia, Ohio, Montrose, Iowa, and numerous other points, commenting upon our church reunions held at these several points. These newspaper comments in most cases are very friendly and favorable and will certainly help to put the cause in a better light before the people.

The last monthly meeting of the priesthood of the Lamoni Stake continued its discussion of the Order of Enoch. This subject has been before the meeting for several months now and interest is very keen, so much so that it is difficult to find men to fill preaching appointments in the regions around about Lamoni on the Sundays when the priesthood is to meet. It is expected that Bishop Kelley will be present at the next meeting.

In order to complete their files the HERALD editors desire to secure two numbers of Autumn Leaves, October, 1900, and July, 1899. If any of the Saints have these numbers to spare they will confer a great favor on the editors if they will forward them.

The president of the Independence Stake writes as follows regarding our recently issued tract: "I am much pleased with your clean cutting process in dealing with the western abominations. Your latest, Corner Stones of the Utah Church, is immense. It ought to make them sit up and take notice. It has given me great pleasure to note your method of treatment of their case." This tract, No. 450, is now on sale at the rate of fifteen cents per dozen. Address Herald Publishing House,

The newspapers are giving publicity to two rat stories. One concerns the experiences of a young lady whose jealous sweetheart attempted to kill her. He fired three shots, but the bullets all lodged in the interior of her abundant factory made coiffure, and she escaped unhurt. There was so much "rat" and so little head that he did not know where to shoot. This might encourage the purchase of even larger bullet-proof toilets, were it not offset by the other story of the girl who felt peculiar sensations in her head, and removing her "rat" found a live moccasin snake coiled in its interior. These stories may or may not be true.

LIFE'S MIRROR.

There are loyal hearts, there are spirits brave,
There are souls that are pure and true;
Then give to the world the best you have
And the best will come back to you.

Give love, and love to your life will flow,
A strength in your utmost need;
Have faith, and a score of hearts will show
Their faith in your word and deed.

Give truth and your gift will be paid in kind,
And honor will honor meet;
And a smile that is sweet will surely find
A smile that is just as sweet.

For life is the mirror of king and slave,
'Tis just what we are and do;
Then give to the world the best you have,
And the best will come back to you.

THE SHEEP LOOK UP.

"The sheep look up and are not fed."—Lycidas.

Beating the air with threat'ning hands,
The demagogue defiant stands,
Shouting beside the busy street,
While round him hundreds hungry bleat,—
"The sheep look up and are not fed."

With eyes on manuscript attent,
On theologic doctrine bent,
The preacher often scowls his views,
Nor knows the starving in his pews,—
"The sheep look up and are not fed."

And oft in academic halls,
Hid from the world by cloist'ring walls,
The teacher, in his learning's pride,
Forgets the pupil at his side,—
"The sheep look up and are not fed."

O men of Christ, sent forth to preach
The better way, the truth to teach,
Still is He asking, "Lov'st thou me?"
Still is our proof of loyalty

That those who hunger shall be fed.—John Finley.

Elders' Note-Book

THE LORD'S WORK FIRST.

De Lawd, he had a job for me,
 But I'd so much to do,
 I tole him, git somebody else,
 Or wait till I get froo.

I don't know how de Lawd come out,
 But he seemed to git along,
 But I felt kin' o' sneakin' like,
 Kase I knowed I'd done him wrong.

One day I need de Lawd myself—
 An' need him right away;
 He never answered me at all,
 But I could hear him say,

(Way down in my accusin' heart)
 I'se got too much to do;
 You bettah git somebody else,
 Or waits till I gits froo.

Now, when de Lawd he have a job,
 I never tries to shirk;
 I draps whatever I'se on hands,
 An' does de good Lawd's work.

My own affairs kin run along,
 Or wait till I git froo;
 Nobody else can do de job
 De Lawd lays out for you.

SHOULD WE STUDY THE WORD OF WISDOM AND THE LAWS OF HEALTH AND TEACH THEM TO THE SAINTS?

(A paper read before the Eighth Quorum of Priests.)

I for one firmly advocate the study of the Word of Wisdom, and also believe the ministry should preach and teach it. In reading it, we find that it is not only in harmony with the best that medical science and hygiene have to offer, but that it is a revelation from God to the children of light, for their benefit, both physically and mentally.

We notice in the preamble to section 86, (Doctrine and Covenants,) that it is given for a principle, with promise, and showing forth the order and will of God, in the temporal salvation of all Saints in the last days. If this Word of Wisdom is given as a principle it seems to me that the ministry who are coworkers with the Christ for the salvation of men, should study and understand it and then teach it. I am of the opinion that a great deal of the sickness and suffering of our people is due to the fact that we are not keeping this Word of Wisdom. How inconsistent it is, when we disobey God's laws, (relative to our health) and we get sick and have to suffer, that we call upon the elders to administer and expect God to heal us! I do not mean to assume that he will not heal, but does it not seem inconsistent?

All of God's laws are essential, and given for man's benefit, and so God, in his great love and consideration for his children, gave us this law, that we might be the better and happier for it. If the church in these latter days is to fulfill the work allotted to it, each individual in it must give his quota of strength, both physical and spiritual, and how can we give either or both, if, through transgression, neglect, or ignorance we become incapacitated?

Anyone who has to stand a great deal of physical and mental strain must maintain his health, if he would continue, and nowhere do we have greater strains placed upon us than when we are actively engaged in the Master's service. Hence, how essential is a strong and vigorous constitution, that we may serve our Father well and do his will acceptably. Unless we are physically fit, great mental exertion will soon undermine our health.

Now let us notice the promise made to those who keep this law. "And all Saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel, and marrow to their bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint; and I, the Lord, give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them. Amen."

A wonderful promise this, and I feel that many have not fully appreciated its importance, relative to our experience in this sphere of action.

Do we want health? Do we wish to be wise? Do we desire to have even hidden treasures of knowledge? If so, let us take God at his word, and I am assured he will make good his promises.

Let the ministry, as leaders and under shepherds, not only study and teach, but also live this law, and thus setting the example, I am confident we can lead the church to a higher spiritual plane, and God's great work be consummated on the earth.

FRED ADAM.

THE STORY OF THE BILIOUS BOLT.

The sun shone brightly upon the billowy, golden wheat field. Three strong horses drew the noisy reaper on its way. The farmer whistled as he drove. The keen sickle flashed to and fro, cutting the fully ripened wheat stalks.

These stalks passed up through the body of the machine and were gathered into a sheaf and tightly compressed. With almost human intelligence the steel fingers of the "self-binder" wrapped a heavy cord around the sheaf, drew it tight, and deftly tied a knot. The sheaf was thrown out to make way for the next,—and so on and on.

But in this machine there was one bolt, a little, bilious, pessimistic fellow, who had long cherished the idea that things were going wrong. He realized that it was his duty to regulate affairs. He was jealous of the bright sickle that seemed to get more than its just proportion of credit in the reaping of the grain. He argued that the big wheel, which supported the binder and drove its machinery, held too much power for one wheel to have.

So in a moment of unusual depression this bilious bolt shook loose from his burr, dropped out of his place, and started on his tour of regulation.

There was the clang of a loosened bar falling from its place. A rattle and jar of disordered machinery followed. Soon the reaper came to a full stop. The farmer got down from his seat and began the long and exasperating task of repairing damages.

Meanwhile the sun began to decline in the west. The night drew rapidly nearer. The wheat stood waiting for the reaper.

Presently the farmer found the recalcitrant bolt, wedged among the cogs that it had attempted to regulate. Somewhat bruised, it was restored to its place, with a sharp and deserved rap on the head to settle it in position.

The machinery moved again; but there had been a costly, vexatious, and unnecessary delay.

The moral is: Don't be like the bilious bolt.

Often we see the church work in some locality moving on very nicely. The harvest is being reaped. But presently some particular member becomes jealous and disaffected. Everything is going wrong. So this particular member drops out of his accustomed and God-appointed place and starts on a course of trouble making.

The machinery stops, and valuable time is wasted while those in charge adjust matters. The harvest field stands waiting. The trouble must be searched out. The member must be urged and coaxed back into position (it is not always advisable in this case to administer the sound rap on the head that inclination would indicate).

Presently the machinery is adjusted. The work goes on again. But valuable time has been lost. A vexatious, costly, and unnecessary delay has occurred. Heed the lesson of the dissatisfied bolt.—E. A. S. in Autumn Leaves.

AN EXCELLENT OPPORTUNITY.

During the warm weather, on Sundays, in the city parks, the summer resorts, and other places of outdoor gatherings, or any good place to advertise, have a booth with a good attraction, first a large canvas with scripture quotations such as, "What must I do to be saved," "Prove all things, and hold fast that which is good," etc. Then a table with plenty of Voice of Warning and tracts spread on it. Make the table attractive, with a colored cloth spread over it, and the literature on top.

Now, have your canvas stretched above your place, a loud phonograph with sacred selections, only.

You must be an entertainer, pleasant and approachable always. Be bright, active, and go about into the crowd, give out your tracts in a pleasant way, never feel annoyed if you are fired at, have a pleasant word and a smile for everyone, and keep on at your duty.

Use the Voice of Warning to give to those you can induce to read it. Take their names and request their return after they are through reading them. Have your prospects ask questions and follow up those to whom you have given the Voice of Warning. This plan is especially for local workers.

Each city could have a hundred places of this plan, towns could have twelve, and in the country many a shady spot could be made use of in this way with good effect.

This would open up the way for the missionary. Just think, if this plan were carried out with the hundreds and thousands of places as mentioned above all being pushed, what good could be accomplished in this way.

It would make the machinery of the Herald Publishing department hum getting out the Voice of Warning and tracts to supply the demand.

Let us warn our neighbors and keep the work moving. I remain,

J. H. TYRRELL.

HOW TO HOLD THE CHILDREN UNDER HOME INFLUENCES AND AWAY FROM PLACES OF QUESTIONABLE CHARACTER.

As children is a word of common gender, and as my experience will in no way qualify me to speak of the girl side of the question (for I must after all draw some on experience) I may be pardoned if I limit the subject somewhat and confine myself to a discussion of boys in their relation to home influences.

"How to keep the children under home influences." A noted American statesman once said the way to resume is to resume. The way, then, (with apologies to Mr. Sherman,) to keep children under home influence is to keep them from getting out from under it. And if you as parents think that can be done as well by force as any other way, then, doubtless (and that in spite of the quantities of good advice I calculate to give you) force is what you will use. But it strikes me that the question is briefly answered by saying, Make the home so attractive to your boys that they will never want to leave; then its influence will be an ever-present factor in their lives. Adapt the home to them and their needs as developing future citizens, and they will in turn adapt themselves to their home.

A boy might be retained at home by dint of physical restraint—by tying him, or by fencing him in, or building what is presumed to be to him an insurmountable wall. I say he might be kept at home by such methods; but a poor stick he would be! Or he might, for some years at least, be kept at home by fear of physical pain inflicted upon him by a physically superior being when he attempted to infract the rigid mandate not to leave home to go to the places where he might come under the influences "of questionable character." But to the average boy, of the stuff of which the men we admire are made, fear is a misfitting garment, incongruous to his proper development, and which he sooner or later will throw off defiantly; or, broken in spirit, ruined in integrity, the consequences of disobedience will be circumvented by deceptive intrigue.

And what consequences follow the breaking loose from under restraint in the one case, or the growing powers of deception in the other! No, no! Fear is not the tie, though discipline is a most important factor. The cable which would bind the boy always to the influences of home must be the golden chain of pleasant, congenial environment, which will bind him to the family, the home, in such a way as to make him feel or know that he is an essential factor, that he has a specific function in the make-up of that home—made to feel that he is a welcome adjunct and a congenial, integral part of the home. Then never will a single link of that golden cable be filed or cut in an attempt to free himself from home influences, but he will remain a glad prisoner. And when, perchance, time introduces the ever active elements of mutations, and the golden chain is finally thrown off to take on one of newer forging—when the childhood home is left to form with a companion a new home—the old chain will be laid down reverently and tenderly, and the new one taken on with solemnity and firm resolve,—the old giving place to the new only because the new attracts with a broader significance.

Possibly the best way I can impress my idea of how this can be accomplished will be to tell one or two of the ways the home loses its hold upon the boy. Let us for a moment look at the picture of a home which is far too often found in this land of ours. Mother and father are good as the average goes, and possess traits of character which promise well as heads of a family; are at least comfortably well-to-do, possessed of good intentions, and on the whole pass as good or at least not bad parents. We see their oldest child, a daughter, as the average American girl goes. Their next is a boy, and he—well, his is the description. We see father and mother quartered, as well might be expected, in the best rooms in the house. And Mary, after father and mother have set apart a spare room, and a parlor, and some one or two other rooms demanded by custom or Dame Fashion, has her pick of what is then left, while Johnnie—well, if there is still another room left, gets that, and if there is not, he gets a snug corner in the garret. Mary's room must be furnished, and have you ever heard the expression, "This pretty little chair is just the thing for your room, Mary?" And when Johnnie wonderingly asks why he does not have a nice chair for his room, he is told that out in the woodshed is a nice old chair which his grandfather or great-grandfather has had, and which he might have for his room if he thinks he can be very careful with it. "That's good enough for Johnnie's room, for you know he is so hard on furniture." Why, bless your soul, of course he is hard on furniture, especially when he is putting the finishing touches on some wornout family heirloom or remnant which the family only discovers is wornout when Johnnie has fallen through the bottom, or cracked off a worm-eaten leg. And then we hear, "Oh, John, you are so hard on furniture!" And when Mary, from the frugal savings of the good housewife, is furnished with a neat new wardrobe, or chiffonier, or something with a nice sounding name, and Johnnie again wonderingly asks why his room is not furnished with something to answer his needs in the same line, he is consolingly told by the doting mother, "Never mind, John. Mother has saved some nice boards from the old piano box, and some day she will make you a nice bureau." And of course he is consoled (?)—he knows his mother's wonder-challenging skill (?) with the saw and hammer, and besides, he knows it is no use to say more. Mary is not to be blamed for this, (though sometimes Johnnie wonders if she in some way is not the real cause,) for with the wifely instincts that by nature are hers, she tidies her room, while Johnnie, poor lad, with the natural constructiveness and inclinations toward the utilitarian idea which betokens the future provider, is prone, especially when he realizes that his room is filled with the cast offs, to use the various articles in his room for sundry other purposes than those for which they were specially designed. He knows there is something wrong, for he is scolded, and chided, rebuked, and lectured, and the failure of century-old furniture is laid to his lack of orderly instincts or his failure to appreciate the strength of materials otherwise than by trying them. And sooner or later he feels that he is out of place, that he is in the way, that boys and homes are in some way incompatible. With oft-repeated forgetfulness he walks onto his mother's clean floors with soiled boots, and becomes almost calloused to the rebukes and oft-repeated insinuations or open statements that he is by nature qualified for habitation with swine or cattle, until he almost believes it, and grows indifferent.

Now that we have used John, let him represent a class, and let us follow him some day as he wanders from the house feeling that he is not and never has been since he can remember, fully a part of the home, but that he is an infliction that people of older years must endure. Let us follow him, I say, as he passively wanders down the street, and at the solicitation of some older lad, who perchance has had much the same experience, he enters a saloon, a place which is without doubt one of these places "of questionable character." As he enters upon the highly polished floor, though with an instinctive start he may glance at his feet, he does not hear a petulant though perchance a tired voice calling attention to his soiled boots and ordering him to go out at once and not come in till his feet are fit to cross the scrubbed floors. No, his feet are not looked at, and he finds the furnishings all of the finest, and soon learns that he can use the furniture there, that he can occasionally even put his feet on the chairs without rebuke. In fact, he is made welcome, and, unconsciously to himself perhaps, he has made the mental observation that that place, though it may be a "place of questionable character," performs a sociological function which to him is absent in his home. Is it to be wondered at that he comes again, and still again, and is it to be wondered at that he gradually passes out from under the influences of the home only to permit the gradual domination of the influence of one of the worst places "of questionable character"? Because the saloon has thus filled a void in the lives of too many of our boys of this land, a void due to the absence of home influences which ought to be within the reach of every lad, thousands of bright promises for future useful manhood have been transformed into creatures fit only for the slums and final filling of a pauper's grave or a drunkard's inheritance.

While the boy in passing from the home influence under that of some other place or places, may not always turn to the saloon, the foregoing illustrates how the home influence may gradually give way to other influences not desirable.

To say what should be done in a specific way to keep the boys at home would necessitate an enumeration for every boy's case, for what will answer in one instance to keep a boy at home and make him feel to be a part of that home, might fail absolutely in another. The parent must, as said before, adapt the home to the boy in order to have the boy adapt himself to the home. This demands a perfect knowledge of the nature of the boy, and as no two boys are of quite the same nature, it follows that there can be no hard and fast rules laid down to suit all cases.

Let us take for example the case of two boys. The one has naturally inclination towards the mechanical or practical arts. His natural bent will make him what in the eyes of the punctilious housewife is a very disorderly person, always having his room littered with parts of something he desires to construct and make "work." The life of such a lad can be made extremely miserable by parents who can not understand such a nature, and soon he would be looking for some place other than home where his inclinations could be humored. Such a boy should be given quarters in the home where he could feel he was free to do as he pleased, so far as he kept within certain bounds prescribed by the demands of justice and consideration for others.

On the other hand, there might be with the same family of boys another whose inclinations are those of a student of books only, and naturally his ideas of a room and how it is kept would be more nearly in harmony with the views of the careful housewife, and unless the parents were of a carefully observing kind, without meaning to do so in the least, they would be found favoring the one lad with his orderly instincts and making the other lad feel that there was not a place for him in the home with his brother.

But why attempt to illustrate all such examples? They could be multiplied. It is sufficient to say that the peculiar disposition of each member of a family of children should be carefully studied, and so far as is possible to do so each child should find within his home just such conditions as would make him feel truly "at home" there. Of course there could justly be no such thing as allowing each child to go his way in the home without respect to the wants and needs of the others. Such a course would be prolific of the development of the spirit of selfishness, something which would not be for the good of the child or those with whom he would be surrounded in future life. Each child should be taught that while his inclinations must be curbed to some extent, that restriction is placed upon him for his own good and for the good of others as well. Where is the child who is wholly unreachable by reason, and who will not respond to the method of being treated as an equal. On the other hand, where is there a child of spirit who will not resent being made an exception and discriminated against?

Again we answer the question of how we shall keep the child under the influences of home by saying, Make the home so attractive to him that he will not want to leave its influences. To do this necessitates each home adapting itself to each component part of that home.

"AN ENEMY HATH DONE THIS."

FUNERAL SERMON OF EFFIE L. BENEDICT, LATE OF HELENA, MONTANA, AT CHRISTIAN CHURCH, AT 2 P. M., MARCH 13, 1910, DELIVERED BY ELDER G. R. WELLS, OF LAMONI, IOWA.

Effie L. Benedict, whose death we mourn to-day, was born February 20, 1861, at Logan, Iowa. She was therefore a few weeks over forty-nine years of age when she laid down her armor last Thursday, March 10, at 7 p. m.

She was reared by godly parents at Logan, Iowa, and there received her elementary education. Financial reverses prevented her father, Brother Adams, from giving her the education that she desired. Then, by dint of her own perseverance and energy, she finished her education at Knox Seminary, at Galesburg, Illinois. Following this, for five or six years, she taught in the public schools of Logan, in the same building in which she and her lover and then future husband had spent happy school days together. Her remains are soon to be laid away, almost in the shadow of that same school building, where a host of relatives, former pupils, and brothers and sisters in Christ will mourn the great loss now sustained by her beloved husband and family, the church, and society.

Effie L. Adams was married to Mr. Louis P. Benedict, at Logan, Iowa, November 16, 1892. They came west and made their first home in Butte, Montana, where they lived for several years. They then moved to Helena, their home for the last thirteen years. To this union there were born three very intelligent children: One daughter and two sons, who with their father are present with us to-day.

Sister Benedict was born and reared entirely under the influences of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, whose headquarters are in her native State, at Lamoni, Iowa, where your speaker resides. Her parents and grandparents were conscientious members of that church. She is therefore a product of that faith, as far as religion can mold the character or affect the life of an individual. Early in life she united with the church. Her minister could have said to her, as Paul said to his young convert, Timothy: When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother, and thy mother, Almira, and I am persuaded is in thee also, I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God which is in thee by the putting on of my hands. For God has not given us the spirit of fear but of power, and of love and of a sound mind. Be thou, therefore, not ashamed of the testimony of our Lord . . . who abolished death and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. She came as near fulfilling such an admonition as any mortal could. The church can ill afford to lose such a shining light as our sister has been.

She was a fearless and active worker and writer. When home duties would permit, she was always happy in the opportunity to distribute literature wisely among her friends, or speak earnest, convincing words to others about "the faith once delivered to the saints" and redelivered in these latter days. She believed in the Christianity of Christ. Her force of character and individuality were so strong, and her explanations so lucid, that she left a lasting impression on those who talked with her. In the language of the Apostle Peter, she did "sanctify the Lord God in her heart" and was "ready always to give a reason for the hope that was in her." The result of this was, that souls were won to Christ through her efforts. Her husband knows and rejoices in the fact that her religion made her a good wife and mother. Her children are a credit to her and a comfort to their father. Who knows but that she was permitted to do such lasting work in their souls as will demonstrate in days to come that her main work on earth was accomplished. They will miss her, but they will never be able to forget her noble example, her teachings, and her devotion to duty. We are sure she left the world better than she found it, and therefore (to quote the words of her husband), "to be compelled to stand by helplessly and witness the human shell empty its spirit of beautiful character and noble womanhood was a trying ordeal." But the ordeal is past. Our loss is her gain,—one well worth the sting which death inflicted. She has "fought a good fight; she has kept the faith; and there is laid up a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give her at that day [his second appearing]—and not to her only, but to everyone also who loves his appearing." Although her reward is sure, she understood that she does not enter immediately into it at death, but "at that day" when he shall "judge the quick and the dead."

My acquaintance with the sister dates back to seventeen years ago, when we and hundreds of others enjoyed the spiritual and bodily refreshing of a ten days' reunion at the Logan camp grounds. Again, nine years ago I was privileged to speak to a large circle of her friends and neighbors here on Ninth avenue, Helena. During my stay with them as their guest I learned again her sterling worth, and found in her husband a man whom it was a pleasure to know. On my return to Australia, I had correspondence with them both, which made personal friendship still more pronounced. I am in the State in answer to a sick call to my aged parents. Learning of this she requested that I be sent for. I was with her in her last hours—hours that I shall never forget. She had a natural desire to live. All that prompts a loving and devoted wife and mother made her loath to go; but she met death like a true soldier of the cross. Death is always death—dark and mysterious, but the journey through the valley of the shadow is often lighted up by the torch of faith and hope. It is a person's previous life that makes the deathbed a sublime tragedy. Every time I witness a struggle with that "king of terrors," the conviction grows stronger and stronger that the body and spirit were made to go together as natural elements; and that the spirit would never leave the body unless forced to do so by the dissolution caused by broken law. You can dissipate water into gas or steam by operation of heat, but its elements will again reunite. You might destroy the form, or separate many of the things God has created, but they invariably reunite. It is so with man. The race has been at least six thousand years trying to get accustomed to death, but we shrink from it still,—it is and ever will be unwelcome to our proper, natural mind. Our natures are wonderfully adaptive. We can learn to tolerate all kinds of unfavorable and undesirable environment, including poverty. Children may be born in it and regard it as the natural thing, but the race has never gotten used to death. It is an intruder! The Bible calls it an "enemy." (1 Corinthians 15.) The promise is that it shall be "abolished"—nay, this has already been demonstrated in the case of our Redeemer, who "has the keys of death and of hell." "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." (1 Corinthians 15: 26.) I am therefore justified, on this authority, in saying that in the vast economy of God, its reign is only temporary. Our sister understood this, and it comforted her in life and in death. She did not regard the pangs of death as the work of God. Neither could I, as I witnessed them. We hoped and wished that she might be spared them and loosed from them. We should never forget that God is a builder, and not a destroyer. He creates; evil agencies destroy. If his power came into death at all, it would make him a party to it. He sends his angels to care for the spirit, but they must wait for it. They must not interfere. God placed it there, it will not leave until dissolution forces it out. It is subject to law to the last. We should, therefore, not wonder or feel hard when we see our loved ones suffer. Death has its "sting." If God had not done his work so well in creating, there would be no sting. It would be natural and proper. Some think this sting has been taken away by the Redeemer. Not so. It is written: "So WHEN this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, THEN shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." Our victory is yet future, but it is sure. "O grave, will be thy destruction." (Hosea 13: 14.) Paul understood the sting will be removed when death is abolished. "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ. Therefore, my beloved brethren, by ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain."

As our sister began to sink, death was not an impenetrable wall or dark, unfathomable abyss. It was a change. Her religion had fortified her against resentment. I heard her say in calm, firm voice: "I love the restored gospel; and though I suffer a thousand deaths I would not renounce it. God is not a cruel God: He is just and merciful." But when she knew that she must go she was eager to be away, and the pangs of death tried her—therein was the trial—not that she feared the result. It was her last trial in life. As I prayed with her and witnessed her behavior, I saw a heroic battle, of patience, of firmness, and integrity. I shall never forget it; it will inspire me through life.

She was conscious to the last. Once she said: "I seem to be talking to you from the other side." Again, "You can't see through the veil." It was not all suffering; there were many moments of ease and happiness; of ecstasy. She tried to sing, "Let us pray for one another, for the day is fading fast," but her breath was too short to finish it. "We are walking down time's vista; we are very near the end." She realized this as never before. She wanted us to sing, "Lead kindly light, amid the encircling gloom," but we could not. It has been sung here to-day by this trained quartet. Oh, how she would have enjoyed hearing it as we have! But she may be privileged to hear now with clearer ear and join with sentiments that the "gloom" is past for ever. Another favorite hymn was, "Jesus, lover of my soul." It will be sung at the close.

You came here to-day, dear friends, to hear a sermon, I presume. I feel that for the present, her life is all the sermon worth presenting. "She being dead yet speaketh." I reverently bow to that and give it the preference. The regular sermon will be preached at Logan, Iowa, where she wished to be interred. For the present let me say that our sister believed in the statement that "as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall ALL be made alive. But every man in his own order." That "there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust." (See Acts 24: 15.) That God is so just that he will not let even the giving of a cup of cold water go without its reward. Still he could not give people something they never prepared themselves for; hence the necessity for various "orders" in the resurrection. She understood that there is to be an order or glory comparable to the sun, another of the moon, and another as diversified as the stars of the firmament. (See 1 Corinthians 15: 22-42.) But as it is a fact that the sun on the dullest winter day is six thousand times as bright as the moon at its brightest, so she understood the relation of the highest and best glory to the next "order" below it. It was her understanding that even a careless, indifferent, or rebellious person shall be redeemed from the grave, (and that may be called salvation or redemption of the flesh or body.) She lived and longed for more than that! She wanted her body and soul redeemed to be again reunited with her Maker, where she could eat of the tree of life and live for ever in fullness of life—life not only physically but spiritually (in God's presence). This was her guiding rule: "Blessed are they that DO his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." (Revelation 22: 14.)

As I am a stranger in Helena, I feel very grateful for the use of this house of God for our service today. Allow me to thank you, also these friends who have rendered so beautifully these favorite hymns of our deceased sister. I appreciate it; and so far as I can speak for the bereaved family, let me thank all who have sympathized and helped in this time of grief.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ELDER C. C. JOEHNK, MISSIONARY TO GERMANY.

I was born July 2, 1860, in the northern part of Germany. My parents had a large family and were poor in this world's goods. As soon as we children were able to work we had to earn our own living. When ten years old I was hired out to a farmer to work continually on the farm till I was fifteen. I also learned then the trade of boot- and shoemaker. My parents, like nearly all the people there, (except Jews, and a few Catholics, and Baptists) belonged to the Lutheran Church, consequently we children were baptized by sprinkling when a few weeks old, which is the mode of baptism in that church. I am sorry to say that my parents did not teach us to pray at home, or insist on our going to church, except on Christmas Eve or some other feast day. Like nearly all the children there, I went to school from the time I was six years of age until I was fifteen. We learned some of the Bible in the public school, especially the historical part of it, but very little of the real doctrine of Christ, which we must obey if we desire to inherit eternal life.

When I was about twenty years old it came into my mind to go to the United States. I do not know what caused me to have this desire. No men or women had talked to me or persuaded me relative to this matter; I had no friends or relatives here in this country. I do not know why it was, unless it was the Spirit of God directing me to come to this land of liberty (as Nephi saw in his time in the Book of Mormon) and so intense was the desire to go that I was willing to take the risk of running away before the years of my military service had expired. The laws in Germany are very strict and severe in regard to the military service. If anyone goes away before he has been in the army, he is not permitted to return to live there again. To my father it is due that I remained till the years were over, and I am glad now that I listened to his counsel, otherwise I could not now go back there and remain to preach the gospel. This desire to come to America stayed with me till all obstacles were removed, and on the 19th of March, 1884, I left Hamburg, and landed in New York on the 2d of April. I went straight through to Iowa, to Keystone, in Benton County. I was fortunate in securing work immediately. I stayed there about one year and a half when I had a desire to see more of the western country, so I left there, and for the following nine years was moving from place to place, finding rest nowhere, always dissatisfied and discontented. It was not that I had no work or money. I was at times quite prosperous, and had business of my own; but something was lacking that I did not know at that time. I have often wondered why I did not get acquainted with the church sooner than I did. I have been in many places where the church has quite a membership, but it may be that I was not ready to receive the truth.

In the autumn of 1894 I heard the first Latter Day Saint sermon preached, and it was so convincing to me and it took such a hold upon me that I could not shake it off. I was led to investigate it, and found it to be the truth. Up to that time I thought that I was satisfied that there was nothing in religion, that the Bible was not the word of God, as it claimed to be, and I doubted that there was a Supreme Being. I had seen so much evil and wrongdoing among those who claimed to be the servants of the Most High, especially in the old country, that I was very skeptical in regard to all religion.

I was baptized on the 6th day of May, 1895, at Roseville, California; confirmed the next day at Sacramento, California. The Lord had shown me that it was the truth, and had given me evidence that the Book of Mormon is divine. After I was baptized and confirmed a change came over me. Peace—yes, sweet peace—had entered into my heart and mind. I had found rest and peace to my weary soul. I was contented now, satisfied that I had done right, that I had obeyed the truth; and from that time until now my faith and confidence in God and in his word have increased.

The promise that the Lord has made to the human race has been verified to me, that if we will obey his doctrine we shall know the truth; and I can truthfully say that I know that this Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the church of God. In it we find the gospel, as it was taught by Christ and his apostles. I have learned that in the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ is the foundation of all true science; that it embraces all; that it commences in the education of a child of God. It teaches the child of God concerning the kingdom of God in the latter days. It goes beyond the latter days. It teaches us concerning the life that is in the world to come. It enlightens our minds; it broadens our comprehensions; it enables us to understand God. In it is the promised light and wisdom that shall lead the children of God onward and upward into the very presence of God himself, to dwell with him and Christ.

On the 6th day of September, 1896, I was ordained to the office of teacher, at Sacramento, California. I worked in that office, in the Sacramento Branch, until I was ordained to the office of priest on the twelfth day of December, 1900, at Sacramento, California. Was appointed at the General Conference, 1901, to labor in the Northern California District, and in 1904 to Germany. Was ordained to the office of elder on the twenty-third day of July, 1905, at Hamburg, Germany, by Brn. Peter Anderson and J. A. Becker.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—Bro. Joehnk is at this writing under appointment as missionary to Germany.

TOBACCO AND THE WORD OF WISDOM.

Some time ago a brother asked this question, "Is it right for Saints to engage in the tobacco traffic?" The law is plain about the use of the weed. It is not right merely because the law of the land permits it. The question is, Is it legitimate under the gospel law? I read that we should get all the money that we can, honestly. Is the tobacco traffic an honest one any more than the traffic in whisky?

A man would be better off if the money spent for tobacco should be stolen from him, provided this would prevent him from using it, and yet we call this way of obtaining money stealing. If we take a man's money and give him worse than nothing in return, have we dealt honestly with him? Well, but men will have the weed, and as long as I am in business, I may as well have the revenue. If we want to conduct a business for profit, why not engage in the liquor business? The law of the land makes it legitimate. I think the church has taken no action on the matter, and the business yields a much larger profit.

Now I will give a few facts as gathered from a work by Mrs. Lawrence in 1882. The annual production of tobacco is four billion pounds. This mass, formed into a two-inch roll, would encircle the earth sixty times; manufactured into cigars and chewing tobacco, it costs the consumer $93,500,000. A man of my acquaintance told me that he and his brother spent more for the weed than they did for flour, and the family consisted of six children, from one to ten years, and three adults. Rather expensive, but that is not the only expense. If we had the statistics showing the losses by fire caused by lighted cigars and matches, it would be surprising. Here is one, "Twenty or more lives were lost in a fire in Chicago which destroyed a furniture building, March, 1910. Loss, $300,000. Most of the victims were girls. Fire started by a cigar lighter."

So much for expense, now for the returns. There are a few in the form of diseases, "Facial neuralgia, insomnia, dyspepsia, sciatica, color blindness, delirium tremens, heart disease, smoker's cancer, shattered nerves, insanity, convulsions, and fits." Not a few physicians regard much of the invalidism and ill health of women as due to the poisoned atmosphere created around them by the smoking members of their household.

Tobacco contains seven per cent of nicotine, a deadly poison which determines its strength. Doctors say that nicotine primarily lowers the circulation, quickens respiration, and excites the muscular system; but its ultimate effect is general exhaustion, and a small dose will cause a man's death in from two to five minutes.

Doctor Parker: "Tobacco is ruinous in our schools and colleges, dwarfing body and mind." At an examination for admission to the Free College of New York, out of nine hundred girls, six hundred and sixty, or seventy-one per cent passed, while only forty-eight per cent of the boys passed, on account of the stupefying effect of tobacco. Doctor Constan: "Its influence clogs all the intellectual faculties; especially the memory."

It is claimed that the use of tobacco leads to drink, and I have wondered why; but here is the reason. In the manufacture of chewing tobacco, the following flavoring is used: sugar, honey, orange peel, lemon peel, mace, cloves, spices of all kinds, vanilla, licorice, valerian, tonka-bean, laudanum, Spanish wine, Santa Cruz rum, and liquor of all sorts. Out of six hundred in the state prison at Auburn, New York, sent there for crimes committed through strong drink, five hundred testified that it was tobacco which led them to intemperance.

This is not all. It affects innocent parties. Listen. A leading doctor: "But I have never known a habitual tobacco user whose children, born after he had long used it, did not have deranged nervous systems and sometimes evidently weak minds. Shattered nervous systems for generations to come may be the result of this indulgence. How like the scripture statement: "The fathers have eaten sour grapes and the children's teeth have been set on edge." But here is another one. I can point you to two families right under my eye, where in each case there is a nest of children rendered idiots by the tobacco habits of their parents. We all know that it is a filthy habit, that no one can use it and be perfectly clean; that it is an expensive one, giving no good in return, but a great deal that is bad.

I might multiply evidence of the above kind until the reader would tire of reading, but this is enough to convince anyone whether or not the tobacco business is legitimate.

Of General Interest

LIQUOR DRINKING DECREASING AS SHOWN BY REVENUE COMMISSIONER'S REPORT.

The beer and whisky interests are trying hard to squeeze some comfort out of the preliminary report of the commissioner of internal revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910. Because this report shows an increased withdrawal from bond of 12,007,611 gallons of distilled spirits and an increase in the amount of revenue paid for beer over 1909, there is a great effort made to grow hilarious and to declare the former decrease was due to hard times and not to the spread of prohibitory laws or the widening of "dry" territory. The liquor journals will make much of these figures, and so will those daily papers which lend or sell themselves to the liquor interests. For instance, here is the Cincinnati Enquirer with these headlines:

"INCREASE

"Of Liquor Drinking

"According to Report of Revenue Department

"Came with the Return of Industrial Activity

"Decline of Three Years Due to Hard Times

"And Not to Spread of Prohibitory Laws—Production as Well as Consumption Is Larger."

Let us look at the figures of the internal revenue commissioner, analyze them and compare them with the figures of other years. Of course, the figures of the commissioner are compared with those of 1909.

In 1909 the withdrawals of whisky from bond aggregated 116,650,165 gallons. In 1910 the withdrawals were 128,675,776 gallons. According to the commissioner's figures revenue was paid on 59,485,117 barrels of beer in 1910 against 56,303,497 barrels in 1909, an increase of 3,181,620 barrels, or 98,630,220 gallons.

You say that looks bad. You say you thought there would be a decrease. If you are weak-kneed, you say it does not pay to fight the traffic and you throw up your hands and become a croaker. But if you are intelligent and are of an inquiring disposition, you will investigate, and when you do, you will find this alleged increase is no increase at all, and that instead of being discouraged there are reasons to be encouraged.

Let us make some comparisons. Here are the figures for the years 1907, 1908, 1909, and 1910; these figures covering withdrawals of distilled spirits from bond and beer on which revenue tax was paid:

1907.....2,019,691,111 gallons.

1908.....2,006,233,408 gallons.

1909.....1,935,544,113 gallons.

1910.....2,046,181,943 gallons.

Do these figures prove that the people of this country are drinking more liquor? Not at all.

Bear in mind that withdrawals from bond and payment of revenue tax does not mean that all these intoxicants have been sold and consumed. Because of a desire to make a good showing in the report of the internal revenue commissioner, dealers loaded up heavily, and millions of gallons of spirits withdrawn from bond and of beer on which the tax has been paid have not been consumed. There is a difference between withdrawals for consumption and actual consumption.

Another thing. A large amount of whisky and beer included in the report was shipped abroad. Producers are pushing their export trade and all exports are a part of the aggregate as shown by the report.

President Gilmore, of the Model License League, predicted there would be an increase in withdrawals, or consumption, as he calls it, this year over last. He is not a good prophet. The consumption, using his term, per capita is less than last year and shows a big slump compared with recent years. Here are the figures:

Year.	Per capita.
1907	23.54 gallons
1908	23.02 gallons
1909	21.86 gallons
1910	21.4 gallons

If the per capita for 1910 was as great as for 1907, the figures of the internal revenue commissioner would have been increased by 180,000,000 gallons. The per capita consumption slumps as the population increases. Is there anything in these figures to discourage temperance people? Is there anything in them to encourage the liquor interests?

But this is not all. The average yearly increase in beer and whisky for eight years preceding 1908 was over 96,000,000 gallons. Even though the aggregate for 1910 equals that of 1907, there remains the loss of that average yearly increase for three years, which is 288,000,000 gallons, which, added to the actual decrease in 1908-1909, makes a total loss for the three years of approximately 375,000,000 gallons.

So what have the liquor men to brag about for the past three years? They have fallen short hundreds of millions of gallons in consumption, while there has been a steady decrease in the use of intoxicants per capita. Even the influx of 1,000,000 foreigners a year with their almost universal drink habit fails to bring the per capita use up to what it was a few years ago, or even to what it was last year.

It is a safe guess the liquor interests will not attempt to prove an increase in consumption by districts. They will content themselves yelling that in spite of local option and prohibition the consumption for 1910 shows an increase, but there will be no effort on their part to show any increase in local option districts, for the very good reason they can not do it.

The increase has been in the great liquor centers, where those elements congregate which are prone to indulge and where the brewery interests are in fierce competition with each other. There will be found, when the commissioner's figures are analyzed, that there has been a tremendous slump in consumption in saloonless territory. If this were not true, why would the liquor men fight the spread of local option and prohibition?

On the whole, it is encouraging to the opponent of the saloon to know the per capita decrease continues and that there is a shortage for the past three years of 375,000,000 gallons over the consumption in the years prior to 1908.—The American Issue.

THE FAMOUS "FLOOD TABLET" FROM NIPPUR.

Professor Hilprecht's latest "find"—a broken tablet, containing part of an account of the Deluge—is here reproduced photographically. It is the property of the University of Pennsylvania. The writing, which is cuneiform, contains what is believed to be the oldest account (from Babylonian sources) of the Flood that has yet been discovered.

It was found among the remains of the Temple Library of Nippur (the modern Niffer), and was so covered with crystals of nitre and other sediment that at first only a few cuneiform signs could be recognized. The word A-bu-bi (deluge) was clear.

Professor Hilprecht then cleaned the tablet, uncovering one cuneiform character after another, until he had deciphered every sign. Then it was that he found that the fragment of unbaked clay (2¾ inches at its greatest width, 2⅜ inches at its greatest length, and ⅞ of an inch at its greatest thickness) was a piece of the earliest version of the Babylonian Deluge story thus far known—about 1,500 years older than similar fragments known from the library of Ashurbanapal (668-626 B. C.).

The fragment has the parts of fourteen lines. Professor Hilprecht personally presented it to the Temple Library of Pennsylvania University. It is not a very formidable looking affair, yet, small and incomplete as it is, the world's leading authorities unite in regarding it as the most important find, in the last quarter of a century at least.

Professor Hilprecht's translation gives this version of the writing on the tablet. The first line is obliterated and undecipherable. The others are shown line for line, which readers may contrast with the Bible story.

The passages in brackets are supplied by Professor Hilprecht to complete the meaning of the tablet. They are, of course, conjectural.

WHAT THE TABLET ACTUALLY SHOWS.	THE GAPS AS SUPPLIED BY PROF. HILPRECHT.
2 . . . "I will loosen."	"[the confines of heaven and earth] I will loosen,
3 . . . "It shall sweep (or 'take') away all men together."	"[a deluge I will make, and] it shall sweep away all men together;
4 . . . "life (?) before the deluge cometh forth."	"[but thou seek]life before the deluge cometh forth; .
5 . . . [over] "as many as there are, I will bring overthrow, destruction, annihilation."	"[For over all living beings], as many as there are, I will bring overthrow, destruction, annihilation.
6 . . . "build a great ship, and"	"build a great ship and
7 . . . "total height shall be its structure."	"total height shall be its structure.
8 . . . "it shall be a house-boat carrying what has been saved of life." 9 . . . "with a strong roof covering it."	"it shall be a house-boat carrying what has been saved of life. "with a strong deck cover [it].
10 . . . the boat] "which thou shalt make."	"[The ship] which thou shalt make.
11 . . . ". . . ing the beasts of the field, the birds of heaven."	"[into it br]ing the beasts of the field, the birds of heaven,
12 . . . "instead of a number."	"[and the creeping things, two of everything] instead of a number.
12 . . . "and the family"	"and the family" . . .

Several critics have protested against these conjectures in the bracketed passages, as too speculative to be accepted seriously. One of these critics, Prof. George A. Barton, claims that the tablet is of much later date than Professor Hilprecht believes, and that while probably genuine, it is by no means the oldest known Flood record. The highest authorities, however, hold that it is the earliest Flood record yet recovered.—The Christian Herald, May 4, 1910, page 439.

THE CARRYING TRADE.

Who wants to engage in the carrying trade? Come, Lottie and Lula and Nina and Mary, all bring your maps, and we will play merchants, and see what is meant by the carrying trade.

Lottie shall have the bark "Rosette," and sail from Boston to Calcutta; Lula, the steamer "North Star," from New York for Liverpool; Mary shall take the "Sea-Gull," from Philadelphia to San Francisco; and Nina is owner of the "Racer," that makes voyages up the Mediterranean. Are we all ready for our little game?

Lottie begins, and she must find out what Boston has to send to Calcutta. Don't send indigo or saltpeter or gunny bags or ginger; for, even should you have these articles to spare, Calcutta has an abundance at home, and you must discover something that she needs, but does not possess. "Ice," says Lottie. "Yes, that is just the thing, because Calcutta has a hot climate, and does not make her own ice: so load the 'Rosette' with great blocks well packed, and start at once, for your voyage is long."

And now we will go with Lula to the North River pier, where her great steamer lies, and see what she intends to carry to Liverpool. Bales of cotton, barrels of flour, of beef, and of petroleum. All very good, so good-bye to her. In a few weeks we will see what she brings back.

Come, Mary, what has Philadelphia for San Francisco? Oh, what a load the "Sea-Gull" must take of machinery, steam engines, tobacco, and oil; and such a quantity of other things, that the "Sea-Gull" will need to make many voyages before she can take them all. We load her at this busy wharf, where the coal vessels are passing in and out for New York and Boston, and the steamers are loading for Europe, and the little coasters crowding in one after another; and away we go for the voyage round the "Horn," where the "Sea-Gull" will meet her namesakes, and perhaps some stormy winds besides.

Meantime Nina's "Racer" has been stored full of cotton cloths and hardware, and has raced out of Boston harbor so swiftly that fair winds will take her to Gibraltar in three weeks.

And so you have all engaged in the carrying trade; but as yet you have carried only one way. To complete the game, we must wait for Lottie to bring the "Rosette" safely home with saltpeter and indigo and hides and ginger and seersucker and gunny cloth. And the "North Star" must steam her quick way across the Atlantic, and return with salt and hardware, anchors, steel, woollens, and linens. Mary must beat her way around Cape Horn, and home again with wool and gold and silver. And the swift "Racer" must quickly bring the figs and prunes and raisins, and the oranges and lemons, that will spoil if they are too long on the way.

So children may play at the carrying trade, and so their fathers and uncles may work at it in earnest; and so also hundreds of little workers are busy all the world over in another carrying trade, which keeps you and me alive from day to day; and yet we scarcely think at all how it is going on, or stop to thank the hands that feed us.

England and Italy are kingdoms, and the United States a republic, and they all engage in this business, and are constantly sending goods one to another; but there are other kingdoms, not put down on any map, that are just as busy as they, and in the same sort of work, too.

The earth is one kingdom, the water another, and there is the great republic of the gases surrounding us on every side; only we can't see it, because its inhabitants have the fairy gift of being invisible to us. Each of these kingdoms has products to export, and is all ready to trade with the others, if only some one will supply the means; just as the Frenchmen might stand on their shores, and hold out to us wines and prunes and silks and muslins, and we might stand on our shores, and hold out gold and silver to them, and yet could make no exchange, because there were no ships to carry the goods across. "Ah," you may say, "that is not at all the case here; for the earth, the air, and the water are all close to each other, and close to us, and there is no need of ships; we can exchange hand to hand."

But here comes a difficulty. Read carefully, and I think you will understand it. Here is Ruth, a little growing girl, who wants phosphate of lime to build bones with; for as she grows, of course her bones must grow too. Very well, I answer, there is plenty of phosphate of lime in the earth; she can have all she wants. Yes, but does Ruth want to eat earth?—do you?—does anybody? Certainly not: so, although the food she needs is close beside her, even under her feet, she can not get it any more than we can get the French goods, excepting by means of the carrying trade. Where now are the little ships that shall bring to Ruth the phosphate of lime she needs, and can not reach, although it lies in her own father's field? Let me show you how her father can build the ships that will bring it to her. He must go out into that field, and plant wheat seeds, and as they grow, every little ear and kernel gathers up phosphate of lime, and becomes a tiny ship freighted with what his little daughter needs. When that wheat is ground into flour, and made into bread, Ruth will eat what she couldn't have been willing to taste, unless the useful little ships of the wheat-field had brought it to her.

Now let us send to the republic of the gases for some supplies, for we can not live without carbon and oxygen; and although we do breathe in oxygen with every breath we draw, we also need to receive it in other ways: so the sugar cane and the maple trees engage in the carrying trade for us, taking in carbon and oxygen by their leaves, and sending it through their bodies, and when it reaches us it is sugar,—and a very pleasant food to most of you, I dare say.

But we can not take all we need of these gases in the form of sugar, and there are many other ships that will bring it to us. The corn will gather it up, and offer it in the form of meal, or of cornstarch puddings; or the grass will bring it to the cow, since you and I refuse to take it from the grass ships. But the cow offers it to us again in the form of milk, and we do not think of refusing; or the butcher offers it to us in the form of beef, and we do not say "no."

Alice wants some india-rubber shoes. Do you think the kingdom of air and water can send her a pair? The india-rubber tree in South America will take up water, and separate from it hydrogen, of which it is partly composed, and adding to this carbon from the air, will make a gun which we can work into shoes and balls, buttons, tubes, cups, cloth, and a hundred other useful articles.

Then, again, you and I, all of us, must go to the world of gases for nitrogen to help build our bodies, to make muscle and blood and skin and hair; and so the peas and beans load their boat-shaped seeds full, and bring it to us so fresh and excellent that we enjoy eating it.

This useful carrying trade has also another branch well worth looking at.

You remember hearing how many soldiers were sick in war time at the South; but perhaps you do not know that their best medicine was brought to them by a South American tree, that gathered up from the earth and air bitter juices to make what we call quinine. Then there is camphor, which I am sure you have all seen, sent by the East India camphor tree to cure you when you are sick; and gum arabic and all the other gums; and castor oil and most of the other medicines that you don't at all like,—all brought to us by the plants.

I might tell you a great deal more of this, but I will only stop to show a little that we give back in payment for all that is brought.

When England sends us hardware and woolen goods, she expects us to repay her with cotton and sugar, that are just as valuable to us as hardware and woolens to her; but see how differently we treat the kingdoms from which the plant ships are all the time bringing us food and clothes and medicines, etc. All we return is just so much as we don't want to use. We take in good fresh air, and breathe out impure and bad. We throw back to the earth whatever will not nourish and strengthen us; and yet no complaint comes from the faithful plants. Do you wonder? I will let you into the secret of this. The truth is, that what is worthless to us is really just the food they need; and they don't at all know how little we value it ourselves. It is like the Chinese, of whom we might buy rice or silk or tea, and pay them in rats which we are glad to be rid of, while they consider them good food.

Now, I have given you only a peep into this carrying trade, but it is enough to show you how to use your own eyes to learn more about it. Look about you, and see if you can't tell as good a story as I have done, or a better one if you please.—Jane Andrews in Stories Mother Nature Told Her Children.

Questions on September Reading.

What games similar to this of the carrying trade might be employed both to amuse and to instruct the children? At what age will children be likely to understand concerning the three kingdoms of the natural world, the mineral, vegetable and animal kingdoms? Will not the introduction of this story make it easy to understand? What may be said in the story of the loading of the wheat ships by the roots? What members of the vegetable kingdom are mentioned as furnishing oxygen in the form of sugar? What others give us oxygen in the form of starch? From what sources in the animal kingdom does the story tell us we receive this gas needed by the body? What does nitrogen help to do in our bodies? What vegetables bring this food to us? What more do the plants bring from the earth for our bodies?

Program.

Hymn; prayer; reading from Home Column with discussion; paper, "The usefulness of story telling"; roll call; business; closing hymn and prayer.

Letter Department

UNA, SASKATCHEWAN, CANADA.

Dear Herald: Away up here the rain has been scarce this year, and the outlook for temporal things is not as flattering this fall as in other years. We are still hopeful for the future, however, with two railroads heading our way, which in a year or so will reduce our journey to the nearest town from fifty miles to less than ten.

Meanwhile spiritual matters are moving along favorably. Quite recently, Apostle F. A. Smith, accompanied by H. J. Davison, E. E. Williams, and young Brother Toovey came among us, and the Saints in this region, numbering twenty, were organized into a branch, to be known as the Sunny Vale Branch, after the name of the post-office that is to be established here shortly. Elder John Wahlstrom was elected president, E. R. Davis and W. Francis Jordan were ordained to the offices of priest and teacher respectively, and were duly elected to preside in the branch.

Elder Smith preached two fine sermons and gave some excellent instruction and advice, and returned with Brethren Toovey and Williams, the latter of whom presides over the Twin Hill Branch, leaving Brother Davison with us for a while. He has preached several times and has baptized two and we expect one or more in addition before he leaves. The Sunday school, under the leadership of E. R. Davis, is progressing nicely, and we have no cause for complaint.

I would like to say, however, that I am growing old, and the burden of farming is too heavy for me, and I am about to make some change. I have a homestead "quarter," also a preëmption which is not yet all proved up. I would like to rent to the right kind of a man. I have team, implements, and quite a roomy house, with preparations for quite a large crop next year, and a chance to arrange bigger ones later on. I would like to correspond with a man who has a wife, if they desire to get a start in Canada; Latter Day Saints preferred.

Anybody knowing of such a man will kindly refer him to this letter, and it might serve each of us profitably. The above address will reach me all right, for a while. Sunny Vale will be my address a few weeks later.

Yours in gospel bonds,

JOHN WAHLSTROM.

SAYERS, TEXAS, August 26, 1910.

Dear Herald: The conference and reunion of the South-western District of Texas, held with the Bandera Branch, August 12 to 21, has now passed into history and will doubtless be long remembered as the dawning hour of a great awakening of the Saints in this section.

Except on Saturdays and Sundays, there was not a large attendance, owing to the fact that sufficient water could not be obtained at a convenient place. A number of families of Saints from San Antonio and a few others,—something more than fifty in all—camped on the ground.

Of the priesthood we had with us Bro. W. M. Aylor, missionary in charge; Bro. W. C. Carl, district president; Bro. D. S. Palmer, district vice-president; Bro. W. H. Mannering, missionary to Mexico; Bro. J. P. Neal, president of First San Antonio Branch, and Bro. T. J. Jett, our leading elder in preaching to the Mexicans in San Antonio. Each of these contributed valuable aid toward making the reunion a success.

The regular order of service was prayer and testimony meeting in the forenoon, preaching at 11 o'clock, services at 2.30, and preaching again at 8.30. Conference convened at 2.30 p. m., Friday, August 19. Among the reports received were those of First and Second San Antonio branches; those of the priesthood named above, also of Brn. O. D. Johnson and W. H. Davenport, and the report of Bishop's agent, Bro. D. S. Palmer.

The reports were encouraging. Other items of business transacted were the granting of priest's license to Bro. A. R. Wheeler; the ordination of Bro. Glaud Kuykendall to the office of priest, and the repeal of a formerly adopted resolution that no one be ordained to any office except by the vote of the district conference. The Second San Antonio Branch was chosen as the place for holding the next conference, which will begin on the Friday before the full moon in February. It was also decided to hold another reunion next summer, time and place to be left to missionary in charge and the district officers.

All are agreed that the reunion and conference was a great success. It is true there was only one addition to the church, Bro. Henry Dorow, a young man of high standing, and of distinguished family, but others have become intensely interested and will likely unite with us soon. Besides this, an interest and a feeling of responsibility have taken hold of the Saints to a degree hitherto unknown.

We regret to close this with mention of the fact that our faithful Sr. Cora Hodges was seriously sick during the entire series of meetings, and therefore unable to be with us.

Your brother in Christ,

CARL F. WHEELER, Secretary pro tem.

REAGAN, TEXAS, August 22, 1910.

Dear Herald: I receive much comfort and strength from the many encouraging letters in your pages.

We do not meet together as often as we should, and it seems that our Sunday school has gone down, but some of the older members are trying to hold to the rod of iron. We have our family prayers, and have preaching once a month by Bro. Frank Spicer, and Bro. Riley Standefer. We will be glad to see things revive in this branch again, and we ask the prayers of the Saints in our behalf, that we may all arouse to diligence.

I hope that if any of the old Florida Saints see this letter they will write to me. I would love to get a letter from Bro. and Sr. F. P. Scarecliff, of Mobile, Alabama, as I read the work is onward in that part of the country, and where we used to live in Santa Rosa County, Florida, and though we are far apart, let us keep our camp fires burning and ever march onward until the perfect day.

Your sister in the faith,

M. F. SQUIRES.

BAYARD, NEBRASKA, August 19, 1910.

Editors Herald: We are busy making preparation for our reunion to be held here, September 3 to 12. We feel to urge all to come and be with us. We are promised a good spiritual time, and think that we will have plenty of good speakers. We hope to see the work here on better footing after the reunion.

For myself, I can truly say, I know this work is of God, and that I am in the conflict for life, standing ever for the advancement of the One Cause.

BERT E. HART.

GULFORD, MISSOURI, August 15, 1910.

Saints' Herald: I write to let the Saints know that we are still alive to the interests of the church and Sunday school, and I do not think I exaggerate any if I say I think a better interest is shown at present than there was during the winter months. I think our Sunday school is doing nicely for a small Sunday school. It is one of the greatest pleasures for us to attend church and Sunday school. I enjoy the association of the Saints very much, and would be very lonesome if I could not attend our own meetings, but I always hope to live among the Saints, that my boy and girl may have the association of Latter Day Saint children.

This has been a dry country this summer, and the corn crops have been damaged to some extent, but we have not lacked anything yet. The Lord has been very good to us and has supplied us with the necessaries of life so far, and we trust him for the future. This is the third summer the corn crops have come short, but we do not want to complain. We should cease to complain. My desire is to live a true and Christian life and be numbered with the faithful when Christ shall come to this earth. Pray for us, that we may walk in that straight way that leads to everlasting life. I love all the Saints and desire God's choicest blessings upon his children.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. P. H. SCHMIDT.

CABOOL, MISSOURI, August 25, 1910.

Dear Herald: A few lines from these parts may be of interest to some of your readers. The gospel work is moving along quite nicely. We just closed our conference at Tigris, Missouri. The earnest effort the Tigris Saints made to entertain the conference is certainly commendable. It's a rough country, but they certainly, by the dinner on the ground last Sunday, demonstrated the fact, that this is the land bountiful. Even Bro. W. P. Bootman's face would have turned blushing red, I am sure, if he could have thought of his recent "toast" in the Ensign on southern Missouri. It was a toast,—he just about burned everything to a crisp. We have not many big red apples this year, but other staple articles of produce are in abundance; best season we have had for years.

Tigris is a coming village, located about twelve miles from the railroad, and the brethren met all the visitors and brought them back and forth. They all seemed to enjoy Elder C. L. Snow's preaching. Sunday afternoon Elder Pearson baptized three little girls, and in the evening three promising young ladies were led into the waters of regeneration. Our prayer and testimony meeting was spiritual. We all left conference feeling strengthened in the great work of the Lord.

At present we are domiciled at Sr. E. S. Davis', five miles from Cabool, preaching every night. Expect to hear from Elder Fred Moser to-night.

Let us not give up the fight, but labor faithfully to the end.

Yours truly,

A. M. BAKER.

August 20, 1910.

To the Herald Readers Who Are Interested in Alberta, Canada: To answer all your letters personally would be impracticable, so I thought it best to answer them through the columns of the HERALD.

This country, generally speaking, is very good; mostly a black, sandy loam, or a gray soil. The only way I can determine its fertility is by its products of vegetation, which are bountiful, of grass, pea vine, and timber, etc. There is plenty of timber here for fencing and building purposes, and you can secure good water by digging from twenty to thirty feet deep, and I think it is as healthful a place as I ever lived in. I have lived here over ten years and speak from actual experience. Plenty of fish and game can be found here, and all kinds of vegetables, and also all kinds of small fruit. Wheat, oats, barley, and timothy do well here.

Now as to the law of homesteading; any man over eighteen years of age can homestead, and any widow who has young children depending upon her can also, providing they reside on the land six months out of each year; you must clear and put into crop thirty acres, and must have some improvements made, with at least eighty acres fenced before you can prove up. You do not have to become a citizen before you file, but you do have to become one at the end of three years, or before you can prove up. There is scarcely any of this land very near a railroad, but roads are being built very fast in this country now, and I consider this country a good place for a man with small means to come. The Lord has blessed me financially since I came here, and also this is the place where I received the knowledge of the angel's message.

Yours in bonds,

F. T. COATS.

ESCATAWPA, MISSISSIPPI, August 25, 1910.

Dear Herald Readers: I have just returned home from McKenzie, Alabama, after enjoying ten days of reunion near there. I am glad to say this is the third reunion I ever attended, but if God spares my life and I can, it will not be the last one.

HERALD readers will discern that the South is coming right in with the north and east and west in reunion work, and that God's hand is at work down here as well as elsewhere. The reunion lasted ten days, with good attendance, good order, and extra good preaching. I don't believe I ever heard better or more spiritual sermons. The prayer meetings were good and spiritual all the time of the reunion, and one morning one young sister spoke by the Spirit, exhorting the people as to their pride and selfishness, telling them to put away such and the Lord would bless them. It is grand to see the young active in such a good work.

We had our worthy field normal worker, Bro. W. E. Peak, and our state normal worker, Sr. Bertha Harper, with us, and this work was interesting and encouraging. McKenzie has some good Saints who are trying to live their religion.

Many pleasant little outings were enjoyed during the reunion, and while viewing the natural scenery, we remembered the statement that this was a promised land, and no wonder the Jaredites and Nephites were so anxious to reach it.

In gospel bonds,

A. G. MILLER.

TUFF, TEXAS, August 26, 1910.

Editors Herald: I have been very busy in this field this year. There are many calls for preaching, and few to do the work. I was surprised to read a statement from one of our missionaries of Kansas, that the people were so busy they could not attend meeting, and it seemed hard for him to find places to occupy. At the same time we are making excuses to the people for not coming to them. Come over and help us in Texas.

We have held two reunions this year; one near Hearne, Central District, and the other on the Medina River, near Pipe Creek, in the Southwestern District. The one in Central was not as well attended by the members as it should have been. They did not seem to see the necessity of coming prepared to camp on the ground. The reunion near Pipe Creek was quite a success. We held our conference during the time. One young man was ordained to the priesthood, Glaud R. Kuykendall, of San Antonio. The Spirit was present in the ordination, and if he is faithful, will make a power for good.

The night the reunion closed, Bro. Arthur Adams loaded the tent in his wagon, and with his mother-in-law and her granddaughter and myself, we left for a thirty-five mile drive up the river to Tuff. We drove ten miles that night. Immediately upon our arrival, I received a phone message from Pipe Creek, the place we had started from, that Sister Cora Hodges had died that morning, and they wanted me to come and conduct the funeral services. Brother and Sister Love started with me, back over the same road. I did all I could for them, under the circumstances, and all seemed to appreciate my effort. Sister Cora was twenty-four years old, and a devoted Saint. She had been sick for eight months, and a constant sufferer, but had borne it with patience. She has gone to the paradise of God to await the first resurrection.

After the above services were over, we drove back to our starting point, and I commenced meeting that night. This made three trips over the same road, a distance of more than one hundred and twenty miles, and it was hot and dusty. They have had no rain in this part of the State since the 18th of May.

I expect Bro. D. S. Palmer in a few days, and then we will move the tent to Utopia. I am still in the conflict but worn and weary.

W. M. AYLOR.

LLANSAMLET, SOUTH WALES, August 23, 1910.

Editors Herald: It is now some time since I sent you a few lines, but I note with pleasure the various interesting letters in your columns; not least among them is the letter of Sister Schofield, of Manchester, and another from our local branch president, Bro. David Lewis. All seem to be unanimous that the work is safe in the care of our beloved Bro. J. W. Rushton, whose devotion to its interests is beyond the comprehension of any, except those of us who know him, and have some idea of the sacrifices he has made for the welfare and good of others, and it is of special interest to note the testimony of Bro. David Lewis, who, after thirty-five years experience in Wales, is of the opinion, like myself, that Bro. Rushton is the right man in the right place; and although he can not yet talk in the Welsh language, he is a very fit and proper person to have the oversight of the work in this land, and that the time has not come for Wales to be an independent mission, as some would have us believe, with a Welsh president and Welsh bishop, etc.

As separation means death, and union is life, and those of us here who have the work at heart are satisfied there has not previously been such an inclination as now exists to unite our forces and our powers in one concentrated effort for the benefit and good of the people who have not yet found the narrow way, that they shall rejoice with us in the message restored to the earth by Joseph the Seer. Surely "God is marshaling his army" here, as well as elsewhere, and he has caused men to come into the church who, by reason of their past stability, are fully competent to look after the work, under the direction of those whom God has set in his church as apostles.

For my part, I can not see why the gospel is not restored in its fullness to Wales as well as England and elsewhere, and if so, does not God qualify men here as well as in America? We do not object to our brethren coming here from America, as we have learned to love Brn. Morgan, Newton, and others, not forgetting Brother Caffall, who has gone on to his reward; but what we do object to is the very short time some stay here after being appointed, and the great expense entailed to come and return. The men here are already on the spot, and all their interests are here; as, for example, Bro. T. Jones, who is doing a remarkable work at Lydney, in the Eastern District of Wales, which is gradually bearing fruit. There are others we can mention, whose untiring efforts are commendable, and I venture to assert the work has no more zealous officer than our worthy Bro. F. Simmonds of this branch. We have had eight added to the branch by baptism, during the last three months, and others are interested. May God speed the right, is my prayer, and may the day hasten when there shall be a reign of peace and blessedness.

Yours in the conflict for truth,

HENRY ELLIS.

DICKINSON, NORTH DAKOTA.

Dear Herald: We are some of the isolated Saints, and we do not know what it is to be associated with Saints. I just came into the church last May, and I am not sorry so far, although I am the only one of my people who belong to this church. I hope to see the day when all the rest of them will be united with the true church.

Would like to have some one write in regard to what is sinful, in the sight of the Lord, to attend on the Sabbath. I will close by asking all the Saints to remember us in their prayers.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. A. P. LANGDON.

Dear Herald: The Saints of Belding, Michigan, had the privilege of enjoying a grove meeting on the 13th and 14th of August, with good interest and attendance. We feel that a great good might yet be done in that neighborhood. Elders present were: S. W. L. Scott, Brethren Lambkin and Mc-Night, besides our local elder and priest.

MRS. M. F. HILL.

Des Moines Reunion.

The reunion of the Des Moines District was held at Fraser, Iowa, from August 12 to 21, 1910. The organization took place Friday afternoon, August 12. The following officers were elected: President, J. F. Mintun, with C. J. Hunt and Wardell Christy assisting; secretary, Alice E. Mintun; chorister, Wardell Christy; and marshals, J. Daugherty and F. Walters.

The number of services held is as follows: prayer services, 9; normal, 5; preaching services, 23; Sunday school sessions, 2; and business sessions, 2. Two were baptized on Sunday, August 14.

We had the pleasure of having with us C. J. Hunt, Elbert A. Smith, J. S. Roth, Wardell Christy, O. Salisbury, and J. F. Mintun. The meetings were all very instructive and the order was excellent. The attendance was very good throughout the meetings, the best attendance being in the evenings and on Sundays. The reunion for 1911 will be held at Colo, Iowa, beginning the last Friday in August. We hope that all the Saints will plan to be with us at that time.

ALICE MINTUN, Secretary.

Stewartsville Reunion.

The Saints of northern Missouri began their eighteenth annual reunion August 12, 1910. Organization was effected, choosing B. J. Dice, C. E. Harpe, and T. T. Hinderks as the presidency of the reunion, they to arrange for speakers, etc. It was counted the most spiritual reunion ever held in these parts. The tent used several years ago was 26 by 36 feet; but the attendance has increased to the extent that a tent 52 by 80 feet will nothing like accommodate the people, evenings and on Sundays. The pioneer committee are resting now and enjoying what they at one time saw by the eye of faith. Bro. A. W. Head and Uncle Charlie Faul, are all we remember of said committee.

Bro. David Powell and B. J. Dice are still rolling the wheel by keeping their shoulders to it.

The committee spared neither time nor means in making things comfortable for the reunion, and the committee was again chosen for the year 1911 at Stewartsville, Missouri.

The word was dispensed by I. P. Baggerly, I. N. Roberts, W. P. Pickering, Archie McCord, T. A. Ivie, J. A. Roberts, W. H. Kelley, Roy Slye, F. B. Blair, William Lewis, and the writer. Thursday was known as children's day. The prayer services were good, and the Saints were strengthened by the manifestations of the Spirit. Brother Faul, Bishop's agent, held two meetings, expounding the financial law, answering questions pertaining thereto. Patriarch Lewis was also kept quite busy in his line of work. Three were baptized by Andrew St. Lewis, and Bro. J. A. Roberts and Robert McFall were ordained elders.

The Saints seemed loath to say good-bye and will have many pleasant memories of the reunion of Stewartsville. Two letters were read from former missionaries of the Far West District, F. C. Keck and T. W. Chatburn, and the Saints felt glad that they were remembered, as will your writer when he is called to go to other fields.

Yours for the committee,

CHAS. E. HARPE.

From Australia.

As an earnest Saints are anxiously watching the progress of this latter day work, I thought I would drop a few lines from this corner of the Master's vineyard, and let you know that we are still holding on to the rod of iron that leads to the tree of life, and doing all we can to further the cause of truth among the people. The few missionaries we have are busily engaged in trying to interest the people with tracts, conversation, and by preaching as the way opens up, but they find it most difficult to get an audience, excepting on Sunday, then the number present is often very small. As the fullness of the Gentiles comes in, the desire of the multitudes for light and truth seems to grow less and less, until there are a very few who are really hungering for righteousness. A fight, a football match, or anything worldly will readily attract a great crowd of people, which clearly indicates the flow of the tide. "As a man thinketh, so is he." And as he thinks, so he acts, and the actions indicate his standing before the Lord. Teaching can only be made effective by example, and those who fail to teach in this way will surely end in failure.

The religious world professes, but fails to do according to what is written, and can not reasonably expect to hear the "well done" in the end. I am satisfied that even among our own people, there will be many who will allow themselves to be beguiled of their reward by drifting away from the light and joining hands with the things of the world until it is too late to meet the Bridegroom. "The mortar that is not tempered, and the bricks that are not burned," can not have permanent place in the Lord's house, for the angels must be sent forth to gather out of his kingdom all who offend, and those who will not cease from doing evil, that the Bridegroom may come to a church whose actions are righteous.

I have just been to the opening of our new church at Tun-curry, and to attend the memorial service of our late Bro. John Wright, one of the noble, tried, and true Saints of this mission; and we had a pleasant and profitable time together. Sister Wright is recovering from the shock of his sudden and unexpected death, and is likely to spend many useful years with us yet. Brother Robertson was present and preached the opening sermon, which was much enjoyed by all. He sometimes gets lonely, and a little homesick, but still plods away in the Master's work. We are all anxiously waiting some news from Brother Pitt, so as to learn the plan of his intended movements.

New Zealand sends a call for help, and we hope to be able to assist them. More young laborers are sadly needed to carry the good news to all who now sit in darkness, and are longing for the light.

I am well, and doing what I can to keep harmony, and the work on the move.

Yours in the faith,

C. A. BUTTERWORTH.

Conference Minutes.

CENTRAL OKLAHOMA.—District conference convened at Morrison, Oklahoma, August 20, 1910. District president E. H. Smith, and Hubert Case presiding. Reports were offered by Elders E. H. Smith, J. E. Yates, Hubert Case, T. L. McGeorge, H. C. Hughes, Orrel Carter, and H. S. Bayless; deacon, E. K. Bair. Branches reporting: Terlton, Oak Grove, Ripley, Piedmont, and Holdenville. Rock Creek Branch did not report. A request was read from Terlton that H. S. Bayless be ordained to the office of elder. On motion it was ordered that he be so ordained, which was done the day following. The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: For president, J. E. Yates; vice-president, Ed. Dillon; secretary, Alice M. Case; treasurer, J. E. Hughes; librarian, Orrel Carter. A collection amounting to $1.92 was taken up to procure supplies for secretary. The next conference was voted to be held at Holdenville, the time to be determined by the district presidency and missionary in charge. Alice M. Case, clerk.

SOUTHERN MISSOURI.—District conference convened with the Beaver Branch on Saturday, August 20, 1910, at 10 a. m. District president, J. C. Chrestensen in the chair. After the opening exercises, the chairman suggested that sub-missionary A. M. Baker, preside over the conference, and on motion he was so chosen. Statistical reports were read as follows: Springfield, last report 82, present number 169, absent 72; Pomona, last report 82, present number 86, absent 48; Beaver, last report 71, present number 78, absent 31; Thayer, last report 27, present number 29, absent 5; West Plains, last report 49, present number 48, absent 31. Ministry reporting: Elders A. M. Baker, preached 82 times, assisted 35, baptized 15, confirmed 10; J. C. Chrestensen, preached 57 times, assisted 23, baptized 3, confirmed 1, and blessed 3 children; C. L. Snow, preached 107 times, baptized 5, confirmed 7, administered to sick 32, blessed 4 children; J. F. Cunningham, preached 33 times, ordained 1 elder, blessed 1 child; O. E. Ensley preached 2 sermons, presided 6 times, other meetings 12; Benjamin Pearson presided over Beaver Branch, preaching the 2d and 4th Sundays, and administered the sacrament the first Sunday of each month, and attended to other duties; J. W. Quinley, preached 21 times, services attended 88, confirmed 3, administered to sick 11; Priest Fred Moser, jr., preached 8 times, administered the sacrament 3, other meetings 9, and labored as Sunday school superintendent. The tent committee reported, receipts $103.45. Expenses $115.70. Due A. M. Baker, $12.25; the committee continued. Bishop's agent's report: Receipts, $73.55; expenses, $260.10; leaving a balance on hand of $13.45. Report audited and found correct. The secretary reported that Bro. and Sr. D. W. Thomas were sent to the Sanitarium, as per conference resolution, but the doctors never gave any hope of recovery, and that the brother passed away to his reward on August 17. A motion prevailed that the secretary draw up a resolution of condolence expressing our sympathy for the bereaved one, and to have copies of the same sent to the widow of the deceased, the church papers, and spread upon the conference minutes. A petition from Pomona Branch, asking conference to provide for the ordination of Fred Moser, jr., to the office of elder, was granted. District officers elected were: President, J. C. Chrestensen; vice-president, J. F. Cunningham; secretary and treasurer, Benjamin Pearson. A former resolution, prohibiting users of tobacco from laboring as officers in this district, was repealed. At 1:30 p. m., on Sunday, baptism of three young sisters from the Sunday school, by Elder Pearson. At 7:30 Elder Baker baptized three, and they were confirmed at the service at 8:30. Adjourned to meet at Thayer, November 12, 1910. Preaching during conference by Elders Cunningham, Baker, and Snow. Benjamin Pearson, district secretary.

Conference Notices.

The conference of the London District (Ontario, Canada,) will convene on Saturday and Sunday, October 15 and 16, at Stratford. Please send all statistical reports, and other business papers for conference action, to the undersigned by the 10th of the month, that each branch may be properly represented and no delays occasioned. It is hoped that this conference will witness a "record breaking" attendance of the London District. Board and lodging will be provided ac-ording to the old original plan—free of charge—by the Stratford Saints, who hereby desire to extend a cordial and pressing invitation to all members of the various branches of the London District to attend this conference. P. H. Philip-pin, district secretary, 92 Chesley avenue, London, Ontario.

The Massachusetts district conference will convene at New Bedford, Massachusetts, Saturday and Sunday, October 1 and 2, 1910, at 3 p. m. All branch clerks are requested to send in their statistical reports at least ten days in advance. All elders, not General Conference appointees, are required to report their labors. Address all communications for conference to the district clerk, W. A. Sinclair, M. D., 166 Pearl street, Winter Hill, Massachusetts.

The Central Michigan district conference will be held at Whittemore, October 15 and 16. Would like to receive all branch reports by October 3. Elsie Janson, district secretary.

Pottawattamie district conference will convene at Boomer, Iowa, at 10 o'clock, Saturday, October 1, 1910. Please send all reports to the undersigned on or before September 25, 1910. J. Charles Jensen, secretary.

Convention Notices.

Zion's Religio-Literary Society, of Central Michigan District, will meet in convention at Whittemore, Friday, October 14, at 9:30 a. m. Elsie Janson, secretary.

Central Michigan District Sunday school association will meet in convention at Whittemore, Friday, October 14, at 2 p. m. Would like to see each school represented. Cora Janson, secretary.

The New York District Sunday school association of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, convenes Friday, September 16, at 10 a. m. Charles C. Koehler, secretary.

Reunion Notices.

The Florida District will hold a reunion at Santa Rosa Branch, October 14 to 23, 1910. The district conference will also hold its session at place of reunion, Saturday, October 15. We expect to have at least three missionaries at the reunion. W. A. West, W. M. Hawkins, reunion committee.

The Bishopric.

AGENTS' NOTICES.

Owing to ill health, we submitted our resignation as Bishop's agent for Little Sioux District, to Bishop E. L. Kelley. At his request, and the importunities of authorities in the district, we have consented to act, until further notice, in hope of better conditions. Pray for us. We herewith invite all Saints of the above district to send all your tithes, and other funds to us, and we will do our best.

Notices.

Those who desire to locate now or hereafter at Independence are advised that the United Order of Enoch have platted, and have on the market for sale, the lots in Edgefield Addition, which is one of the most beautiful tracts to be found. The lots are in size fifty feet by about one hundred and forty feet, price $4.50, $5, and $6 per foot, with streets graded and granitoid walks. Three to five blocks from car line, and same distance from new Latter Day Saints' church on the South Side. We can only give bond for deed now, as we must have money to finish paying for the land before titles can be given. Those who can pay only a part let us know, and we will try to arrange for you. Now remember, this is not a speculative scheme, but a coöperative move and in the Lord's way, for the general benefit of the work of God.

UNITED ORDER OF ENOCH.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Request.

To the Members of the Sixth Quorum of Priests, and All the Priests of the British Isles Mission, Greeting: The above quorum held its annual meeting at the Saints' chapel, at Birmingham, on August 1, 1910, during the mission conference session. The items on Agenda were: first, secretary's report; second, Future of Quorum, Shall it continue? third, Election of officers. The following brethren were present:

Edward Maloney, Albert Hall, Robert W. Smith, Arthur Mayne, David Edwards, A. T. Trapp, George Gaydon, Brother Edwards (Birmingham), and by invitation High Priest H. Greenwood, president of Manchester District, and Elder G. W. Leggott of the missionary staff. The advice of these brethren was very valuable indeed. The secretary gave a clear definition of the position of quorum, which was not promising, as the quorum was without finance and had no officers; the whole of the business being transacted by the writer until further notice. After much discussion it was decided to continue the quorum and the following brethren were appointed: Albert Hall, 56 Bradford Road, Manchester, president; Robert W. Smith, 83 Queens Road, Harpurhey, counselor; A. T. Trapp, Stanborough, Tewesbury Road, Gloucester, counselor; Edward Maloney, 20 Chipping Street, Longsight, secretary. The new president clearly outlined future of quorum, and appealed for support of all the priests in mission, and it was resolved that the annual fee of six shillings be levied. Will every priest in the mission kindly communicate with the secretary, stating full particulars of branch of which they are members, birthplace and date, when baptized, when ordained, and by whom? as we wish to get the records of quorum up to date. Those who are not members can obtain all particulars from secretary's membership. It is the desire of the officers to make the quorum of great value to each member; so please rally round, and success will attend our united efforts. Circular letters will be posted to all, as we receive their addresses. May the blessing of our Father rest upon the labor of the priests of the mission, and success attend the work in general. Yours in gospel bonds,

A. HALL.

Independence Sanitarium.

TRAINING SCHOOL FOR NURSES.

The Sanitarium offers a three years' course of instruction to ladies desiring to become trained nurses. The first month is probationary. The nurse in charge has full power to decide as to their fitness for the work, and to the propriety of retaining or dismissing them at the end of the month's probation. She can also at any time dismiss them for misconduct or inefficiency.

Room, board and laundry (except collars and cuffs) is furnished for the term, and an allowance of five dollars per month additional, after the first month. Except as above, no wages will be paid. The instruction, knowledge, and experience furnished, are considered full compensation.

The day nurses rise at 6 a. m., breakfast at 6.30, on duty from 7 a. m. to 7 p. m., with two hours in afternoon for rest and study. One half day is allowed each week, and four hours on Sunday. Two weeks vacation each summer.

The candidates for admission must be unmarried women between twenty and thirty years old, and must possess a good common school education. They are required to furnish a physician's certificate of sound health and two certificates of good character. Those who have had partial training in any other institution, or correspondence school, for training nurses, are not eligible.

The applicant should bring two dark wash dresses, four white aprons, two inch waist bands and five inch hem plain underclothing, and rubber heeled shoes for probation. After being accepted for training, they are required to wear the uniform of the training school.

Those graduating after passing the final examination at the close of the three years' term will receive a diploma, certifying to their character, proficiency, and period of training.

Applicants should address Independence Sanitarium, West Blue avenue, Independence, Missouri. 36-3t

Resolution of Condolence.

The Southern Missouri District, in conference assembled, passed the following resolution: "That, whereas, it hath pleased God, in his infinite wisdom, to remove, by death, our brother and collaborer, Elder D. W. Thomas; and whereas, we recognize that we have lost a faithful brother, and his wife a faithful husband; therefore, we extend our sympathy and condolence to his widow, who now remains to fight the battle alone, and pray that the same God who sustained the widow of Sarepta, may sustain her, until such time as he sees fit to call her home."

Done at the Beaver Branch of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, August 20, 1910.

Died.

BA'LOU.—At Saint Joseph, Missouri, August 23, 1910, of tuberculosis, Sr. Myrtle Ballou, daughter of Bro. and Sr. Archibald Ballou, aged 22 years, 8 months, and 14 days. She was baptized when nine years old by Bro. S. V. Bailey. Her illness lasted more than a year. The parents brought the body to Lamoni for burial by the side of other children of theirs. Bro. R. M. Elvin had charge of the service at Bro. Edward Ballou's home, and Bro. H. A. Stebbins preached the sermon.

THOMAS.—Sr. Nydia Thomas, beloved wife of Bro. E. E. Thomas, died at her home, Bevier, Missouri, August 14, 1910, aged 32 years, 4 months, and 14 days; leaving to mourn a husband, two children, an invalid mother, three sisters, and a host of friends. Funeral services August 16, from the Saints' chapel, in charge of Elder W. B. Richards; sermon by F. T. Mussell, to a large concourse of people.

WESTLAND.—At Manila, Philippine Islands, May 28, 1910, Fred A. Westland, aged 33 years, 9 months, and 26 days. He was baptized by Elder R. J. Anthony when 11 years of age, and was one of the charter members of the Denver Branch. He was a man in every sense of the term, and leaves a clean record behind him. He was connected with the adjutant general's office of the United States Army for over fifteen years, beginning as messenger boy, and receiving promotion, until at the time of his death he was one of the chief clerks in that department. He was with the department in Denver, Oklahoma City, Saint Louis, Havana, and about eighteen months ago was transferred to the Philippines. He is survived by a wife, who was with him at the time of his death; also father, mother, and one sister. The body was brought to Denver for burial, the funeral being from Horan's undertaking parlors, July 20, in charge of Elder C. E. Everett, and the sermon by Elder E. F. Shupe. There was a large attendance of Saints and friends, and many beautiful floral pieces. Interment at Fairmount.

TRIPP.—Algerine O. Tripp was born July 11, 1834, at Westport, Massachusetts. He was baptized July 20, 1882, at Fall River, Massachusetts, by Elder John Gilbert. Ordained a priest March 16, 1884, at Little Compton, Rhode Island, and passed from this life April 20, 1910, at his home in Westport, Massachusetts. Funeral sermon by Elder John Gilbert, M. D., assisted by Elder H. W. Howlett.

LAMSON.—Mary E. Lamson was born August 8, 1843, at Jonesport, Maine, and died March 31, 1910. Was baptized September 5, 1886, by F. M. Sheehy. She was a good, consistent Latter Day Saint, a kind, affectionate mother, and one true to her friends. The world needs more like her. Sermon by S. F. Cushman.

JOHNSON.—Mattie Alice Johnson was born in New York, August 4, 1859. Married to John J. Johnson, December 29, 1881. Baptized September 15, 1895. She passed beyond, Sunday, August 14, after a lingering illness of consumption, leaving husband, four daughters, and two sons. While our sister had lived a humble life, judged by exalted social standards she was a good mother, kind neighbor, and faithful member. The funeral service from the Saints' church, at Magnolia, Iowa, August 16, was especially impressive. Sermon by Alma M. Fyrando, at her request, assisted by Paul M. Hanson.

GOODENOUGH.—Bro. Chancy E. Goodenough was born June 4, 1836, in Chenango County, New York. Came to Michigan in 1846, and has lived in Marcellus and vicinity all these years. He was married to Miss Mary Eliza Barel, April 6, 1856. This union was blessed with nine children, one of whom passed away in June, 1874. Those surviving are Eva, Elder E. J., Esther, James C., Katie, Grace, George, and Glenn. Brother Goodenough affiliated with the Disciple Church for a season, but hearing the restored gospel he yielded obedience to the same in March, 1884. He was president of Marcellus Branch for seven years. His sickness dated from the fall of 1909, suffering rheumatism and later a paralytic stroke, being confined to his bed since latter part of February, 1910; unable to move since last June. He was conscious to the last, and desired to go home, asking prayers that the end might come, which was realized August 13, 1910. He leaves a patient companion, eight children, two brothers, twenty-six grandchildren, twelve great-grandchildren, and a large circle of friends and acquaintances who held him in esteem, as attested by the very large attendance at funeral. The obsequies were conducted on the beautiful lawn by Elder S. W. L. Scott. "A good man has gone to a bright reward," was the comment on his life and character.

HALL.—Rebecca Hall was born September 12, 1828, and died May 17, 1910, aged 81 years, 3 months, and 26 days. Was married to Daniel F. Hall May 13, 1847. Nine children were born to them, five girls, and four boys. She became a Latter Day Saint thirty-seven years ago and has lived a faithful and devoted Christian life. Many will rise up at the judgment and acknowledge gifts in time of need from her liberal hand. Her testimony and presence are much missed. Late in life the loss of sight was an additional affliction, giving its finishing touches to an already developed life. Funeral address by S. F. Cushman.

WILSON.—Austin L. Wilson was born June 17, 1883, and died July 16, 1910, aged twenty-seven years. For twelve years he has been slowly declining with tuberculosis. His life has been gradually oozing out day by day. However, his faith and fortitude enabled him to endure to the end. His sweet, cheerful countenance was an indication of an inward peace and hope. He was an example of Christian fortitude. An appropriate address was given at the funeral by Elder U. W. Greene, assisted by S. F. Cushman.

Prison Reform in England.

The Right Hon. Winston Churchill, in the few months that he has been at the Home Office, has boldly done what many English prison reformers had been vainly endeavoring to get done for many years.

This son of an American mother has announced a sweeping series of reforms in the British penitentiary system. Mr. Churchill's attention was directed to the subject by seeing a performance of John Galsworthy's play "Justice" at the Duke of York's Theater. In the speech announcing his plans the Home Secretary referred to the fact that the evil of solitary confinement had been brought home to the public and to the Home Office by various able writers in the press and by exponents of the drama.

The first two acts of Mr. Galsworthy's play appear in the September American Magazine, and these are to be followed by the rest of the play in the October issue. Mr. Galsworthy's play tells the story of a terrible punishment resulting from solitary confinement. It is a tragic, compelling drama—as strong if not stronger than his "Strife," which awakened such widespread discussion.

Woman's Home Companion for September.

Women are planning their fall wardrobes now and rejuvenating their houses, and the beautiful September issue of the Woman's Home Companion comes to us in the nick of time. Miss Gould, the fashion editor, shows all the points of the autumn styles, and a new department, "Home decoration and handicraft," will serve as an inspiration for the home lover.

In this issue begins an unusually thrilling story of the stage by Hulbert Footner, entitled "True love." Short stories by Mary Hastings, Annie Hamilton Donnell, and Grace Keon, together with another installment of "Brothers four," which is drawing to a close, complete an assortment of fiction rarely found in a magazine.

Appendicitis.

Appendicitis is usually first manifested by the presence of a keen, severe, stabbing pain in the region of the right groin. Combined with this symptom there may be colicky pain in the region of the bowels. One may notice extreme tenderness upon pressure in the region indicated. In many cases the patient has a severe chill, followed by a quick, high fever. The patient becomes rapidly ill in some instances, and at times enters a state of utter collapse. The pulse becomes rapid, and although strong at first, soon becomes feeble. Invariably there is nausea; and sometimes severe vomiting. Constipation is always present. The abdomen frequently becomes swollen and the skin over it tight as a drum head. The pain is often spasmodic in character, not continuous.

When threatened with appendicitis, the first thing to do is to thoroughly knead the abdomen in a circle, going up the right side; across the upper side from right to left; down the left side; across the lower part from left to right. Frequently the symptoms of the disease will quickly disappear under this kneading process. Of course, this treatment is impossible after the disease has thoroughly developed.

When the disease has fully developed, the very first remedy that should be used is a copious flushing of the lower bowels, that it may be cleaned absolutely of fecal matter.—Bernarr Macfadden, in September Physical Culture.

The Interstate Commerce Commission's Duties Under the New Law.

The commission must consider the probable effect of its orders on railroad earnings, both because, as an administrative body, it is its duty as much as that of the President, to use its authority to promote the public welfare, and because the Supreme Court of the United States has held that railroads can not constitutionally be deprived of the right to earn a "fair return." The Supreme Court, in the Consolidated Gas Company case, indicated that six per cent is the minimum to which a public service corporation can be restricted. Just what return the Interstate Commerce Commission regards as the maximum which in the interest of public expediency railways should be allowed to earn, it has never said, but in its original opinion in the recent Spokane rate case, it did express the view that the net earnings of the Northern Pacific and Great Northern, which for five or six years had averaged from twelve to fifteen per cent, were excessive.

The rates of all competing railways must be the same; otherwise all the competitive traffic will go to the road whose rates are lowest. But the net earnings of competing roads vary widely; in the same territory there are found roads which are earning 20 per cent and others that are earning nothing, or perhaps 2, 3, or 4 per cent. Now, if the commission reduces a rate it reduces the earnings of the weak as well as of the strong competing lines; and if it permits a raise of rates the earnings of the strong as well as of the weak lines will be increased. The commission has repeatedly said that where the earnings of an entire group of roads will be affected by its order, it must take into account the entire situation; it will not reduce rates because the earnings of some one road or roads in a group are high, nor refrain from reducing them because the earnings of some road or roads are already low.—From "Ought the railroads to advance their rates?" by Samuel O. Dunn, in the American Review of Reviews for September.

Mayor Gaynor on City Government.

What William J. Gaynor, mayor of the city of New York, has to say on "The problem of efficient city government," is of interest to every American citizen. His discussion of the problem will be one of the features of the September Century, dealing with the training needed for a mayor; the first duty of officials, the folly of partisanship, the passing of boss-control, and other civic matters of vital interest.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

We are in receipt of the following letter of inquiry from a brother in a prosperous branch, and our object in our replying through the HERALD is, that others asking the same or similar questions may read what answers are herein given, and save us the labor of writing personal letters, explanatory. We wish it distinctly understood that we do not make pretense to being able to answer questions that involve an attempt to state why the Lord did this or did not do that, instead of doing what it plainly appears he did do. We are not qualified to state what may have not been or now may be in the mind of the Lord, and of which he has placed no revelation on record among them. What he has revealed it is within the province of man to become acquainted with. What he has not revealed or does not presently reveal it is evident he chooses to retain within himself. What is written belongs to men; what is not written belongs to the Lord. He has said to the waves of the sea: "Thus far shalt thou go and no further." He has said to the ambition of men, "I place the fountains of knowledge within thy reach, but, the knowledge of the sources whence these fountains flow must remain with me." The old line remains true: "If seeking to be gods angels fell, seeking to be angels men rebel." It is safe for us to remain within the lines allotted to us, rather than to beat our wings against the empyrean heights beyond which we can not go.

Dear Brother: I am looking for the correct answers to some questions, which I consider are important ones; ones upon which there should be no division at all among the Saints, and least of all, among the ministry. For this reason I take the liberty of addressing them to you, leaving the matter entirely with you as to whether you publish them in the HERALD, or do me the very great favor of sending me your personal reply.

1. Christ did not die for our sins, because they were not committed at the time of his crucifixion. But provision is made in the gospel whereby our sins are remitted.

Christ did die for our sins, whether they were or were not committed at the time of his crucifixion. They were the same as committed with God, knowing as he did that they would be committed; and the sins for which provision is made in the gospel as above are the sins we commit after becoming Saints, and that even these could not be remitted save through the death of Christ.

Which is the correct position?

2. Can it be correctly stated, no matter how it may be worded, that if it were a question of getting an answer from heaven as to the baptism of John, "Is it from heaven or of men," that this question would never be answered; and that our only hope of a solution to this question is to go to the word?

3. Does not this church teach that heaven (God) is ready to answer to-day any question involving his eternal salvation, which may be directed to him by the earnest seeker after truth?

Has not God given an answer to this question in latter day revelation in the fact that he acknowledged Brother Jose^e the Martyr's, translation of the Scriptures?

4. Our Savior, Jesus Christ, was tested severely; so much so that upon one occasion he nearly went under!

"Christ was fully, perfectly, altogether equal to his wonderful work, and never upon any occasion manifested any weakness. Had his task proven to be ten times more distressing and difficult, he would have been equal to it! No sign, not the least sign of weakness is anywhere evident in the sacred history of his life's work. The weakness here referred to, obviously, is not 'physical' but 'spiritual' weakness, and evidently the 'one occasion' referred to above would be that wherein he prayed, 'If it is possible, let this cup pass from me.' Is this prayer, or the petition of our Savior, necessarily a sign of weakness on his part?

5. Did God create or imply organize the spirit of man?

6. Does the church hold it to be truth that the spirits of men coexisted from all eternity with God, and that he can not annihilate or destroy them if he would?

7. The teacher's duty in part as outlined in the Doctrine and Covenants is that "He shall see that there is no iniquity in the church," or words to this effect. Does this mean that the teacher's hands are tied so that he can take no steps whatever in the way of carrying out the law of offenses until charges are preferred against the offenders?

8. Is it wisdom to appoint an elder to be the priest of a branch, where there is a priest eligible to the office? Is it as much in harmony with the law, as the election of the priest to the office of the priest would be?

1. In replying to this question it must be understood that the brother is presenting two statements made by different speakers, each expressing the opinion of the speaker; and evidently used in an argumentative presentation of the gospel, given through the teaching and example of Jesus Christ, for the benefit and salvation of men. Probably it would appear paradoxical to this questioner, that we should say, that if the whole statement of each of the speakers appeared in connection with the statements made, both might be considered correct. It is evident that the effort made by each speaker or writer was to show his conception of the manner in which Jesus Christ became the mediator for man in the plan of redemption, and by the offer of his life in his service and death, to become a propitiation for the sins of the world. The expression of John the Baptist, "Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world," points effectively to the full completion of the work of redemption. The fact that the body of Christ was of the nature of Abraham's seed, subject to death, shows that the reasoning of one of the apostles, that, "By the disobedience of one sin entered the world, and death by sin, so by the obedience of one, many were made righteous unto salvation," show clearly that in some way the interference of the man, Christ Jesus, was to affect the releasing of men from their sins, that they might have salvation.

H. O. Smith
111 So Fuller ave

The ancient mystery of God manifest in the flesh appears in the supposed difference between the statements of these two reasoners both reaching the same conclusion, that the gospel was instituted to affect the same purpose.

Paul, writing to the Corinthians, the fifth chapter and twenty-first verse, clearly shows, that unto this body of Abraham's seed, into which the spiritual man, Christ, was born, was by that act under the providence of his Father, "made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him."

It would seem needless for us to attempt, by the expression of our opinion, to settle a query like this one in such a way that our expression of opinion might not be controverted. It would require a direct enunciation of the lawgiver, and such we do not know is in existence. To our thinking, the sin of the world is disobedience, and that when Jesus took his body into the waters of baptism at the hands of John, he redeemed that body under the righteousness of the gospel law, as by the shedding of his blood upon Calvary's cross he paid the penalty under the law; thus being made free both under the law and under the gospel. The difference of statement is only apparent. Each may have been warranted in following the line of argument in the speaker's mind. We personally should dislike to pass upon isolated statements like those of the question, and by our ipse dixit attempt to carry conviction to the minds of those who might read or hear. The chances are, if these speakers should meet and carefully canvass the matter between them, they would finally conclude alike and say the same thing. For these reasons we refrain from stating that either is right or that either is wrong.

2. We should answer this question as Jesus answered the tempter during the forty days of his trial, or at the close of it, "It is written." There is no plainer inference or clearer implication of any statement in divine writ than that the baptism of John was from heaven. Mark states, "John did preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins," and Luke repeats the statement that John did preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. Both testify. Jesus the Christ bore witness to his baptism as being from heaven by submitting to it, and God, his Father, gave the witness of the Spirit after his baptism. Under the influence of the strong prophetic statement of Isaiah to the law and the testimony, we may safely point the inquirer for the answer to this question. It has been answered, and needs no further answer except through the testimony of the same Spirit which bears witness to the believer after obedience to the word of God. The question carries its own answer by the introduction of the word if in one portion of it. It is like the following question and answer.

A preacher of the latter day gospel, at the close of an impassioned argument in favor of baptism by water, was challenged by an inquirer at the close of his discourse, thus: "If baptism was for the remission of sins, what was Jesus Christ baptized for?" The preacher instantly replied: "For the remission of sins, of course, sir!" The questioner was silenced, and the preacher was told that he was the first man that had ever answered the querist successfully, as he was an inveterate questioner at preaching services where new men entered the town. His question carried its answer with it.

3. The church as a body has not specifically stated by resolution that heaven, using the word equivalent to the word God, is ready to answer all questions that may be considered by individuals as essential unto their satisfactory knowledge, but the concensus of opinion among the entire eldership would be, that the Father, through the Son or the Holy Spirit, is ready to give to petitioners, whether individual or collective, such answers as in the wisdom of God are essential unto their eternal welfare. It does not follow, however, that the same importance will be attached to the question or petition, by him of whom they are asked, as does the inquirer. It is quite possible for men to ask amiss, to transcend the bounds of legitimate inquiry, and to face the impenetrable mystery, which God has reserved the knowledge of to himself. It would seem that we might safely conclude that where a question may be answered by an appeal to the word, that the Holy Scriptures (Inspired Version) might be relied upon as the end of controversy, so far as the church is concerned.

4. Our reply to question number four would be this: If we consider the man Jesus, who in all things was made like unto his brethren, we may conclude that the expression used, "Let this cup pass from me," was an exhibition of weakness, but the strong doubt, expressed in the terms, "if it is possible," would signify a reserve of strength and resolution sufficient for the resistance against weakness. The expression made by Jesus upon the cross, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me!" would come nearer to expressing an exhibition of weakness, for it was the supreme moment of his great struggle in the flesh; but "unto thee I commend my spirit," again possesses redeeming power, and signifies the height of his divine trust with the Father. There is nothing derogatory of the character of Christ Jesus to admit his recognition of weakness. Indeed, it is helpful to humanity now, that he out of weakness was made strong, that he might be an example unto all those to whom he said, "Come, follow me." Such expressions as some of those used previous to this inquiry would sound coarse to men of refinement of temperament, and would grate harshly on their ears, but we dare not make a man an offender for a word.

To us the difference of expression only reflects the light of the different lines of thought which the speakers were pursuing, taken with their context it would probably be discovered that the speakers were reaching for the same thing, the final triumph of the spiritual strength of Christ Jesus our Lord.

5. We do not know. The Holy Scriptures seem to state, so far as this world is concerned, that all things that were created materially were first created spiritually. At the time that the committee was preparing the manuscript of the Holy Scriptures for publication the committee, consisting of Ebenezer Robinson, W. W. Blair, and Pres. Joseph Smith, discussed the matter pretty freely, and the seeming conclusion reached was that the spiritual creation referred to was, that of the material things which were placed upon the earth, the crowning creation of which was man, as a material being. The committee did not then understand, nor does President Smith now understand, that it referred to the spirit of man. The creation as given in Genesis was of this material world, and that it was organized out of material already existing, and the word create is understood to be equivalent to the word organize. We once heard a young Holiness preacher talking with a young comrade in a barber shop where we were having our hair cut and beard trimmed, say that there was a difference between the word create and the word make; that it was stated in Genesis that God made man, but does not state that he created him. After the barber was done with us, we asked the young preacher whether we understood him correctly, and then stated what he said, as we understood it. He replied that we had correctly understood. The barber happened to be a member of the church, and always had his Bible ready for a chance conversation or a possible discussion. So, asking for the Bible, we took it, and read for the young preacher and his companion whom he was instructing, "And God made man out of the dust of the earth; male and female created he them," the record giving the words create and make as synonymous.

Whence came the breath of life, which God breathed into the nostrils of man according to the record, we do not know, but have been inclined to believe that it was coexistent with God, as the principle of life must always have existed, and Christ, by whom all things were made, is the Lord of life and glory. From what knowledge we have upon the matter we must repeat that we can not answer this question.

6. The church has taken no action as a body upon the subject-matter of the question. Many of the elders take the ground of the preëxistence of the spirit. Others do not take so pronounced a position. Still others believe that only Christ preëxisted. We know of no declaration made by the church that warrants a statement upon our part.

It appears from the New Testament record that the Sadducees denied preëxistence and the resurrection, while the Pharisees confessed both. We do not know as the question is any nearer settlement than it was then. It seems to be a matter remaining within the mind of the Almighty.

7. (See HERALD for August 24.)

8. The wisdom of selecting an elder to act in the office of priest must be determined by the conditions existing in the particular case. Other things being equal, a priest should be chosen to act as priest, and each other officer in the office to which he has been ordained. To choose a priest to act as the priest of the branch is in harmony with the law. Divergence from this would be justified by conditions only.

We do not make these answers dogmatically or with an idea that the expression upon the questions asked is a finality and conclusive. We answer them as the Editor of the HERALD, more as a help to thought rather than to put a stop to thought or inquiry. The eldership comprises a great many men of inquiring, observant, and thoughtful character, differing widely in temperament, methods of thought, and necessarily of different conclusions upon topics, upon which there has not been so far as known a conclusive declaration of the scriptural word. For this reason we have held that as each of these men must answer to the Great Judge for the use of the faculties with which he has been endowed, and has also conferred individual identity and imposed individual responsibility, it is out of character for any one human being to assert dictatorial authority as to the opinions every other of his associates should hold, and thus interfere with the privilege and responsibility conferred upon each.

The great body of the church holds there is one Lawgiver, the Father, one great Exponent of divine law, the Son, and one intermediate source of communication, the Holy Spirit, and that God in his wisdom as the Creator has reserved certain matters of knowledge to himself, both as to intention and purpose as well as fact,—knowledge concerning which men aspire to reach by inquiry and research, which effort must necessarily fail. Man can not know the absoluteness of things, which are not measured by the use of the senses which he is credited as having, except by the revelation of God to him; and this revelation must invariably reach man as a result of the wisdom of God in decision as to its effect upon those to whom it is directed. What is withheld it must be concluded would not be for the best interests of those seeking to know. There are many things of which men may inquire, which if they were permitted to know would only add to their knowledge without adding to their usefulness to their fellow-men or to the honor and glory of God. What God wishes them to know he will impart.

It is with this understanding that we associate with our fellow-men of the ministry, taking it for granted that each is as honest in his belief and convictions as every other, and that each loves his fellow-man equally well, and is equally desirous to honor and glorify God. There will come a time that all will know alike, when the restrictions resulting from differences of organization, temperament, environments, and education will be removed. Until then, if we by virtue of the gospel, its spirit and teaching, are permitted as an association to hold the revelations of the word in unity of understanding, will, and purpose, we are doing well, and what God evidently designs we should do, and thus fulfill the purpose unto which he has called us.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Associate Editor spent a part of last week at Independence. While there we attended the meeting of the trustees of the United Order of Enoch. The meeting was held in the new office building of the order. This building is a remodeled dwelling house, only a stone's throw from the church. No business of special importance was transacted, owing to the fact that four of the trustees were out of town. We feel that the order is making progress, though not the kind that might appeal to those who love the spectacular and rapid expansion characteristic of mushrooms and balloons. It must be remembered that the trustees have problems to solve that the thoughtless wot not of. These problems may be of sufficiently grave import to encourage the development of gray hairs. But one thing we are pleased to report is that the members of the order are alive to the situation and are giving it their very careful and prayerful thought, both day and night. Where human intellect and piety are thoroughly enlisted, God will not refuse to guide the way. Those who opposed the granting of the charter are still predicting ruin and failure, but their nightmares should not trouble us, as it has been demonstrated thus early that they are false prophets, they having gone on record in a most positive manner with a prophecy that the charter would not be granted.

While at Independence we visited the Sanitarium. Doctor Messenger, as house physician, is undoubtedly the right man in the right place. As nearly as we could learn, the institution is moving forward to a still better and fuller occupancy of its special field of service. The number of patients varies from ten to eighteen. Probably the building could accommodate three times as many patients as it has ever yet had at any one time. However, the institution is just getting on its feet, as it were, and the time probably will come when its capacity will be tested. Five nurses are employed. Those in charge desire to establish a "waiting list" of girls who wish to become trained nurses, and ask us to call attention to their card of instructions appearing in another part of the HERALD.

Elder Charles Lake is taking treatment at the Sanitarium. It is hoped that he will eventually recover his health. A conversation with him developed some interesting facts regarding the island mission. Among other things he mentioned the fact that in selecting officials among the natives the French Government shows marked preference for our people, owing to their superior intelligence and trustworthiness. Among seventeen islands on which we have a membership there are eleven whose governors are affiliated with the church.

Elder E. A. Stedman, member of the Quorum of High Priests, departed this life at his home in Lamoni, September 8. The funeral was held Sunday. This closes a long and useful life.

Graceland College people gave a very interesting entertainment and reception at the Lamoni church Thursday evening. Those taking part on the program were the new members of the faculty: Miss Christiana Waller, of Honolulu, instructor in piano; Miss Coralie F. Eastwood, of Canada, instructor in voice; and Miss Lena Lambert, of Lamoni, instructor in oratory. The entertainment was excellent, and those taking part created a very favorable impression.

THE EVANGELIZATION OF THE WORLD.—PART 1.

BY JOHN C. GRAINGER.

INTRODUCTION BY S. A. BURGESS.

In the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew, we are told, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness." This does not necessarily mean conversion, but it does mean evangelization.

The so-called Christian world is making extensive efforts in this direction, yet small when we consider the work to be done and the vast number who know not the Bible. But while they are ready to convert others in their own rank, we find confusion and failing interest. Those awake to the situation desire a return to the Gospel of Truth.

We claim to have the Truth. What preparation are we making to carry out this so necessary work on a large scale? Are we in such agreement as to be able to do it, even with the necessary financial help? To the early church there was a command to organize a school of the prophets, in order that the ministry might be better instructed "in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law, and all things that pertain unto the Kingdom of God." The promises in this connection, and in connection with the temples, are truly wonderful. The Reorganized Church in 1869 took the subject up for consideration, and of late years there has been much more of thought and realization of our needs in this direction. We can not take the final steps until commanded, but we can put ourselves in a position of worthiness to receive that great endowment which will surely be given to the people of God, that they may become truly a royal priesthood to the nations of the earth. But first comes instruction and the school of the prophets.

We do not expect through the school of the prophets to come at once to a perfect understanding, but only to make a nearer approach thereto.

Theology, the idea of God, can never be fully comprehended till we reach his level and are like him. Until then, every conception of him and his nature must of necessity be an approximation, more or less crude. But we may, and trust will, make far more rapid approach to truth and unity on the basis of truth. Dogmatic utterances, we do not ever expect or desire. We do expect in that school to gain in knowledge, light and truth—in other words, intelligence, and we also may expect much more rapid growth. S. A. B.

And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.—Matthew 24: 14.

Let us take a survey of the work being done in the field, and the efforts that are being made in the attempt to fulfill the above prophecy of our Lord.

The influence of the thoughts and actions of the Latter Day Saints have been instrumental in partially reforming the lives and faith of many souls who have continued to hold membership in various Christian denominations and sects throughout the world, but God knows the exact range of that influence. He said, "In the last days I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams." (See Joel 2: 28 and Acts 2: 17.)

The object of preaching "this gospel of the kingdom" is that there may be evidence, or a witness, and this testimony shall face all mankind at the last judgment day, to their condemnation or exaltation. "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."—Matthew 24: 14.

The Saint Louis Republic, May 16, 1909, contained this editorial comment:

At the annual meeting of the Saint Louis Conference of the Methodist Church, South, on Tuesday, Mr. W. R. Stubbs, general secretary of the Layman's Missionary Movement, unfolded his plans for the evangelization of the world in this generation. It calls for 27,000 additional missionaries, of which the Methodist Church, South, is to furnish 16,000, the Southern Presbyterian 1,000, and the rest of Christendom 9,000. These details speak eloquently for the faith and hope of the promoters of the plan. If this one communion can furnish 16,000 volunteers it would seem that two thirds as many might be recruited elsewhere.

The same issue contained a half page illustrated write up concerning the "Disciples of Christ," giving particular emphasis to the centennial anniversary convention of their church, which took place at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, in October of last year.

The following excerpt is taken from the article mentioned, and indicates the general trend of thought of some who are engaged in the consideration of religious world problems:

SEEK A WORLD CHURCH.

For years the Christian Church has had in mind the adoption of some plan by which all the churches of the world could be united under one name, claiming in this purpose that there can be but one church of God, and that such a consolidation would result in better church work than is now dispersed through the many different denominations. Just how they expect to be gratified in this herculean task can not be learned, because no material plan has as yet been decided upon, though it is understood that at the convention in Pittsburg in October many speakers will offer suggestions toward such an end.

This action for consolidation and unity on the part of the Disciples of Christ in no way smacks of bigotry, as the Christian Church claims that all of the churches of the different denominations are effective in their work; that all are working with God's purposes in mind, and all are serving Christ.

This fact, the Christian Church argues, makes all churches practically one, and such being the case there is no need for denominational differences. To bring about this great unity is one of the main purposes of the church.

Who can say to what extent the fullness of the gospel has been preached?

Who but the heavenly recorder keeps the statistics of men's hearts?

How many sermons have been preached by the followers of Jesus Christ, to the inhabitants of the celestial and terrestrial spheres?

The Christian Standard for August 7, 1909, says:

Among some of the churches, if we may trust the symposium, there is a desire for unity; but with many others, unfortunately, their highest conviction is that something is out of joint. Others, again, are wholly indifferent to the problem, affirming their belief that a divided church is more effective for good than a united one could be. These are they who see the church as an army, with every denomination a regiment contributing to the general good, even when turning its guns on a friendly camp. These good people have worked under unnatural conditions so long that their judgment is inverted. The discordant voices have become sweet music in their ears, and why should they desire psalmody when discord satisfies? They see order in chaos, success in dissensions, and regularity in riot. They will not see the strife and contention, the wasted money and the wasted effort, the hopeless confusion that often leads to indifference and unbelief; nor will they allow their sober judgment to appraise the extent of the disaster that must finally come from the assaults of the powers of darkness against ranks, thinned by division, that ought to present a united and irresistible front. There are those who see glory in further dividing the seamless robe, or in keeping it rent, and in breaking anew, to little purpose, the body that so oft has been broken. Every man who professes to be content with the present status of Protestantism is under the spell of a fatal optimism. He might be full of eyes before and behind, and yet be as blind as the man on whose eyes the sun had never risen."

Other men's opinions are indicated in the following press dispatch:

CHICAGO, June 6.—The Rev. Herbert Hensley Henson, canon of Westminster and rector of Saint Margaret's Church, Westminster, has caused much comment by his fearlessness in attacking religious problems that other men have left severely alone. Five years ago in The Contemporary Review he attacked the Bible, especially the Old Testament, declaring "its incredible puerile, or demoralizing narratives a pack of lies too gross for toleration." He concluded the remarkable article with the question:

"Is the faith of the church in the divine Christ, living, present and active, really built on an empty tomb?"

Although Canon Henson has boldly questioned some of the generally accepted teachings concerning the "canonicity" of the Bible, he has always been careful at the same time to affirm his belief in the Scripture as the source of light and power that shall yet redeem the world.

Union among Christians, as it is being promoted by The Ministerial Alliance, The Federal Council of Churches, and other similar organizations, is an iridescent dream. Such union is impossible because their premise is wrong. The union for which Christ prayed shall be founded on truth, and not on men's theories or opinions.

When men who claim that the canon of scripture is full and who deny the presence of direct revelation, draw themselves into a ring and set themselves up as a tribunal to decide who are orthodox and who are heterodox, under whose authority are they acting?

What right have that class of people to say which things are essential and which are nonessential to our salvation?

God will speak to men when he wants them to represent him, and his communications will be just as intelligent and distinct as those given in ancient times.

There is no logical reason why God should not talk to men now, as he has done in times past, through inspiration, revelation, visions, dreams, angels, prophets, and his personal appearance. Such manifestations are certainly needed to settle the controversies that now exist in the religious world.

The instruction God will give in our time will harmonize in every particular with the instruction he has given at every other time.

Latter Day Saints demonstrate that the true gospel of Jesus Christ has been restored to the earth, and God does speak to us and direct us in the execution of his will. This is the only road to unity. By this means the school of the prophets shall be established, to teach truth and decide differences, with a divine guarantee that the decisions shall be true.

In learning how to do right it is always desirable to be informed as to the ways in which we are likely to go wrong. In describing to a man the road which he should follow, we ought to tell him not only the turnings which he is to take, but also the turnings which he is to avoid.

An editorial in The Sunday School Journal and Bible Students' Magazine, (Methodist,) merits the attention of all Latter Day Saints. This article impresses the fact that pastors should be trained men, in order to train others in human endeavor:

Some time ago we urged the necessity of the training of laymen for evangelistic service. We pointed out that the unwillingness of many laymen to attempt any effort along this line is not because of lack of sympathy with the work but because they do not know how to do it. They feel incapable, and they are not willing to try to do such important work ignorantly and blunderingly. They need to be shown how to do it. They should be trained to do it wisely and effectively.

Now what is true concerning the necessity for the training of laymen for evangelistic work is equally true with reference to all other lines of church work. Men can not do the highest work in the church without instruction and training any more than they can do it in any other field. It is characteristic of the business life of the present day that it demands special training. Railroads, banks, insurance, journalism, manufacture, merchandise, farming, more and more demand expert training. This springs out of present day business and industrial conditions. Untrained and ignorant service now means failure.

The chief responsibility for this training must necessarily rest upon the pastor. He must be the trainer of his people for doing the various kinds of work which must now be done by the church. Of course this means that the pastor must himself be a trained man. The man who is proposing to serve in the Christian ministry from this on must face this necessity. He must be a master workman competent to train other people into skilled workmen. The men who are now in the ministry, if they are not so trained, should lose no time in securing the training that will fit them for this large task of superintendency. The man who will not make this preparation for his work in the church of the present day might as well at once write failure in large letters across the face of his ordination papers.

The old figure of the parish as the pastor's field and force is a very vital one. The first year in a pastorate will acquaint a man pretty thoroughly with the needs of his field. He will discover the more or less crude human material which he is to work on and with, which must be refined by the living

Spirit of God, under his shepherding. He will gradually stumble upon the specific problems that are likely to hinder his success: the forces that are arrayed against the cause of righteousness in his parish; the hindrances and obstacles—some natural, some human, some inherited from the past, some superficial—easy to overcome, others deep-seated—rooted in prejudice and in bitter grudge and strife; the local characters who are ringleaders in opposition, or ridicule, or mere social competition. This year's experience will reveal to him the social castes, circles, classes, the gangs of boys and their heroes, the secret springs of influence bearing reciprocally on different lives, the silken clew which leads through many a social maze and human enigma. He will come to know the secrets of many hearts, the working principles of many lives. He will learn their special talents, capacities, adaptabilities. In short, a year's study of his field, with all the discriminating care of the true sociologist, will reveal to a pastor the objects of his special service, and the subjects, the possible recruits who best can help him accomplish what is needing to be done. He will then be able to select, enlist, draft if necessary, his force out of his field.

The selection of suitable workers for special tasks is half the task. It requires insight, the prophetic vision, the intuitional knowledge of human nature, and keen sympathy with people. Every successful pastor who is a true bishop has this subtle talent. Then the grouping of these selected leaders is speedily accomplished; it is always being accomplished—it runs parallel with other activities in the busy pastorate.

Authoritative interpretation of the Scriptures and the use of tradition will have considerable influence in the evangelization of the world.

Rev. Xavier Sutton, in Clearing the Way, sets forth the position of the Roman Catholic Church in regard to this subject. His quotations and references are in the Douay Version of the Bible. I present it without further comment:

THE CHURCH OUR GUIDE.

"And if he will not hear the church, let him be to thee as the heathen and the publican." (Matthew 18: 17.)

Q. What is the root and foundation of our justification?

A. Faith.

Q. What do you mean by Faith?

A. I mean a firm belief in all that God has taught and revealed for man's salvation.

Q. What are the grounds for such a faith?

A. The authority of God; I believe the mysteries of faith, purely because God has revealed them.

Q. How shall I know with certainty that God has revealed them?

A. By the authority and testimony of the holy Catholic Church.

Q. Is not this trusting to a human authority?

A. No; it is a divine authority established by Christ, and upheld by his divine power; as the authority of the apostles and the church in their time was not a human but divine authority.

Q. Can I with perfect security believe the Catholic Church in all matters of faith?

A. Yes, it is an article of the Apostles' Creed; I believe the holy Catholic Church.

Q. May not the church lead me into error?

A. No, we have the promises of Christ, who is eternal truth, that his church shall never fail, but teach all truth to the end of the world.

Divine faith is a firm belief in all those truths which God has revealed for our salvation. It is the gift of God, and justly does the Council of Trent say that it is the beginning and foundation of man's salvation and the root of all justification (Sess. 6c. 8). Without faith it is impossible to please God, as we read in Saint Paul to the Hebrews (11: 6): without it none can be a disciple of Christ, or a Christian. Behold, then, of how great importance it is to hold the true faith! You can not be negligent or indifferent in the search of it, without peril to your salvation and injury to the Christian religion.

Now this faith must come to us by a divine authority. I mean that the divine mysteries and divine truths we are to believe must be taught by some authority which God has appointed to teach them before they can be the object of our faith. Christ had this divine authority, having been sent by the Father. The apostles had it, having been sent by him. "As the Father hath sent me, I also send you" (John 20: 21). And the bishops of the Catholic Church, with the pope as their head, have it by lawful election and ordination as their successors.

As, therefore, those who heard the apostles, and believed the doctrine of the church in their times, believed upon a divine authority and had divine faith in what they believed, hence at present those who believe the divine mysteries of the Christian religion upon the faith and testimony of the Catholic Church, also believe upon a divine authority, and have a sound faith.

But those who believe according to their own private interpretation of Scripture, or that of some particular church, to which they adhere in opposition to the universal church, believe upon an authority that has not a divine mission to teach; wherefore, their belief can be no more than persuasion, or opinion; that is, can not be a truly Christian faith.

Those who have received authority from Christ to teach his gospel and doctrine have received also authority to decide all disputes about the sense of it and to distinguish truth from error; for to teach the faith and to expose the heresies contrary to it is one and the same act in a teacher.

There is, therefore, only one safe and secure way of believing, viz: that way which God has appointed; and this is, first to hear the apostles, and after them the church which the apostles established. By this means the world became Christian, and by this alone we are secured from error.

That this submission and obedience of the faithful to what the church teaches might be rational and their faith firm and certain, when the apostles were sent by Christ to teach all nations, he added this solemn promise: "And behold I am with you all days, even to the consummation of the world" (Matthew 28: 20). Also a little before his passion, he made them another promise—of sending the Paraclete: "And I will ask the Father, and he shall give you another Paraclete, that he may abide with you for ever, the Spirit of truth" (Saint John 14: 16). "But when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will teach you all truth" (Saint John 16: 13).

It is acknowledged by all Christians that the church in the time of the apostles was made infallible or unerring, by virtue of these promises of Christ; for surely his perpetual presence and the perpetual assistance of the Holy Ghost could not fail to make it so.

For the same reason it has been infallible in all times. For the church was no temporary institution, made only for some particular time or people; but it began with the apostles, and was to continue in their successors who were to teach the gospel to all nations and ages to the end of the world. As, therefore, the authority which Christ gave to his apostles to preach the gospel and baptize was conferred also upon their successors, so also his promise made to the apostles to abide with them was extended to their successors.

Now you can understand how men who are fallible by nature may be divinely assisted to teach the oracles of divine truth without erring. In this sense Moses, the prophets, the apostles and the church in their times, are acknowledged to have been infallible even by our adversaries; and in the same sense we maintain the Apostolic Catholic Church to have been ever unerring by virtue of the aforesaid promises; so that the infallibility of God's church rests, as it did in the days of the apostles, upon the divine assistance of Christ and the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of truth ever directing and leading the church into all truth.

In consequence of this divine authority and infallibility of the apostles and the church, they are truly called "the ministers of Christ and dispensers of the mysteries of God" (1 Corinthians 4: 1), their whole knowledge of the truth being from God, as well as their power and authority to teach it. Wherefore, it is written: "He that heareth you, heareth me" (Luke 10: 16).

The church in holy writ is spoken of as the "pillar and ground of truth" (1 Timothy 3: 15); "the glorious church not having spot or wrinkle" (Ephesians 5: 27); "the spouse of Christ betrothed to God in righteousness, and for ever" (Osee. 2: 19). These titles exclude all notion of error and corruption in her.

We conclude, then, that the present Catholic Church can no more deceive us than the primitive church which the apostles founded; for the same promises of assistance were made to the church for all times. "Behold, I am with you all days, even to the consummation of the world" (Matthew 28: 20). This church, then, can not deceive us, for she relies on the promises Christ has made to be with her; and so our faith rests more on his infallibility than on hers.

Thus, the authority of the apostles and of the church being divine, and both being appointed by Christ to teach all the world the mysteries and truths revealed by him for our salvation, we not only may safely trust, but are absolutely commanded to hear and receive their doctrine, under pain of eternal anathema: "Go into the universal world and preach the gospel to every creature; he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be condemned." (Mark 16: 16.) Here the Savior of the world promises heaven as the reward of submission and faith; and threatens hell as the punishment of those who do not believe.

Although many in the times of the apostles sought other ways of coming to the truth, there was no other safe way of coming to it but to hear the apostles and the church. In like manner at the present time there is only one safe way to know the truth, that is, to hear and follow the doctrine of the One Holy Catholic Church. As it was the distinctive mark of the heretics in those primitive times not to hearken to the doctrine of the apostles and the church, so in all times it is a sure mark of heresy not to hear the church.

As all are to learn their faith from the church, it is necessary that all should become members of it; and therefore this article is inserted in the Apostles' Creed: "I believe the holy Catholic Church." Thus the world is taught, by this public profession of faith, the certain and only way of coming to the knowledge of truth, and is directed thither where it is to be found. Accordingly, we read in the Acts: "The Lord increased daily together such as should be saved" (Acts 2: 47).

Have we not indeed received our faith, and all the mysteries of religion, from this holy Catholic Church? Our belief in the Trinity, Incarnation, Baptism, the Holy Eucharist, and all other articles of our holy religion, together with the Apostles' Creed, and the Scriptures themselves; none of these could be believed with divine faith unless we had first believed the unerring authority of the holy Catholic Church, which recommends them as divine truths.

Moreover, the church of Christ has been established to instruct all nations in the truth of the gospel; and this being as necessary at one time as at another, it is essential that such a church should never fail, but should continue for the instruction of all people as long as there remain people to be instructed. Hence its divine Founder declared that he would build it upon a rock, and that the gates of hell should not prevail against it. (Matthew 16: 18.)

To conclude: if the primitive church was thus divinely assisted, the pastors thereof had a right to be believed, and to require of the people whom they instructed to receive their doctrine, for it was the word of God; the church has the same right and authority in all times.

Nor can this be called "Tyranizing over our judgments"; but rather, if God has provided for us such an unerring guide as this church, those who know how to confide in God may with great security believe all it teaches, and should consider it the best security and the greatest blessing he could provide for his people; for by this means all the members of his church, though of the meanest capacity, are as safe and secure in their belief as those of the highest capacity; all have the same unerring guide to follow, and all, as long as they follow it, partake of its infallibility so far as never to err in matters of faith.

To follow such an authority is not indeed to lay aside reason, as our adversaries would insinuate, but to act with the most perfect reason; it is not exposing ourselves to the hazard of being led into error, but providing a security against error and against the delusion of our own private judgment; against the errors into which private churches, when dissenting from the universal church, are ever sure to fall.

THE BIBLE ALONE NOT OUR GUIDE.

"Understanding this first, that no prophecy of Scripture is made by private interpretation" (2 Peter 1: 20).

Q. Are not the Scriptures a sufficient guide in religion?

A. No; they are not, without an authentic interpreter.

Q. Where shall we find an authentic interpreter?

A. In the Catholic Church.

Q. Are the Scriptures not a safe guide when they are plain?

A. Yes, but they are not always plain; when they appear to be plain, and when they are plain, they are not always followed by those who pretend to make them their rule and guide.

Q. Are not the Scriptures the pure word of God?

A. The Scriptures are indeed the word of God; but if the Scriptures are wrongly interpreted, they become the word of man.

The word of God, as the Protestant Bishop Walton says, does not consist in mere letters, whether written or printed, but in the true sense of it.

Christians admit they must believe what Christ has taught. He has declared it. "He that believeth shall be saved. He that believeth not shall be condemned."

But how are we to know what Christ taught? What guide will lead us into this sanctuary of truth? "The Bible, the Bible alone," says the Protestant. As salvation depends on believing what Christ taught, the Guide we are to follow must be universal as to time and persons, and a sure guide.

Is the Bible such a guide? Is it universal as to time?

Christ never wrote anything. He did not instruct his apostles to write. He did say, "Go preach," "Go teach," but not a word about writing. The New Testament was not given to the people immediately after Christ had left this world.

Saint Matthew wrote his gospel about six years after Christ had ascended into heaven; Saint Mark, ten years; Saint Luke, twenty-four years; Saint John, sixty-three years. What guide did the people follow during these years? How did they learn the truths of Christ?

In the year 393 the Catholic Church held a Council at Hippo in Africa and decided what writings were inspired. The New Testament was then given to the world. For very near four hundred years, therefore, the world was without the New Testament. If the Bible alone is our guide, all those people who lived during those years did not have a guide; they could not learn the truth in order to believe and therefore they must have been lost. Who would say this?

Were these Christians who lived during the first four centuries true followers of Christ?

Certainly, many of them shed their blood for Christ's sake. Yet not one of them ever saw a New Testament. How did they become Christians if the Bible alone is our guide?

The Bible is not universal as to time. Is it universal as to persons? We all have an equal right to salvation. The guide, therefore, which God would give must be one that will be suitable for all classes of people, rich and poor, learned and ignorant. The art of printing was invented in the fifteenth century. The labor of writing books was very great and made them very expensive; only the very wealthy could possess a Bible. The Bible is a silent teacher: it does not speak to you; to learn what it contains you must take it up and read it. The ignorant, therefore, can not use it. It can not be a guide for them. Hence the Bible is not a guide for all classes of people, because the poor for centuries could not possess one, and the ignorant in all ages could not use one. How could they learn the truths of Christ, if the Bible alone is our guide? The Bible is not a universal guide as to persons.

Is it a sure guide? If so, it will lead all to the truth, now truth is one. What happens to those who take the Bible alone as their guide?

One man reads the Bible and believes that Christ is God and man; another reads the Bible and thinks that Christ is only a man. Here is one denomination that tells us that it is plain from Scriptures that all men are born wholly depraved; and, from the same source, it is affirmed, by a large and intelligent class, that men are born altogether good. One society tells you that only the few, the elect, will be saved; and the Universalist answers by saying no one will be damned. One proclaims if a man only believes aright he will be saved, and another maintains that it is no matter what a man believes, if he only acts rightly. One asserts that the only way to be baptized is by immersion in water; and another says it is enough to be sprinkled with water; while a third declares that no water at all is necessary, baptism being altogether spiritual. These are only a few examples of the contradictions we behold in those who use the Bible alone. It is not, therefore, a sure guide. As it is not a sure guide, nor a guide suitable for all people, and at all times, the Bible can not be the guide given to us by God to teach us what we are to believe.

But Christ himself tells the Jews: "Search ye the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me" (John 5: 39).

And the inspired writer commends the Jews of Berea because "they received the word of God with all eagerness, daily searching the Scriptures, whether these things were so" (Acts 17: 11).

What do these texts prove? "Search the Scriptures." What Scriptures? The New Testament? No, for it was not yet written. "Search the Scriptures!" and for what? Because "they testify of me." You will find in them proof sufficient that I am the Christ, the Savior. The Bereans were commended because they searched the Scriptures, i. e., the Old Testament, to verify what had been told them about Christ being the Messiah. We still refer Jews and infidels to the same proofs of Christianity.

But does not Saint Paul praise Timothy for using the Bible as a rule? "And that from a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus. All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works" (2 Timothy 3: 15).

Certainly every part of divine Scripture is useful and profitable, we admit, but it alone is not our rule. What Scriptures did Timothy read? Not the New Testament, for it was not written. Are we then to take the Old Testament as our guide? The Bible is the inspired word of God, but he never intended we should use it without an interpreter, the church.

Moreover, Scripture is not always followed by those who pretend to make it the rule of their faith.

Nay, it may be easily proved that the sectaries, who pretend to build their faith on Scripture and on no other grounds, not one in fact does build on it; for with a little reflection it can be seen that they follow it only as it is expounded to them; some expounding it according to their own private judgment; others, according as they hear it interpreted by some teacher or particular congregation. So that they do not in truth follow the pure word of God, but only that sense which some of these interpreters, who, by their contradictions, have given full proof to the world that they do not all expound it in the right sense, attribute to it.

Wherefore, their followers, in this case, are not guided by the pure word of God, but by the authority of mistaken men, and upon this their religion is built. This is evident. I may add that none of them, in fact, have learned their religion by reading Scripture, but by the instruction of parents, ministers, and catechisms; and all choose their religion before they have ever read the Scriptures or are in any way capable of understanding them. Thus it is far from the truth that Protestants all build their faith on the Scripture, and on nothing but Scripture.

When, therefore, you take the written word for your rule, let the church be your judge for the sense of it, and you will have nothing to fear. The church is the only authentic judge of what books are to be held as canonical Scripture, of what translation is to be received, and of what is the true sense of the text in controverted points.

By the church we mean the bishops, with the pope as their supreme head, the successor of Saint Peter. These have received from Christ a divine authority to teach and to be believed—to teach, I say, the written word, as well as the unwritten, and consequently to expound it when the sense is disputed; for to teach the word of God, and to expound the true sense of it is one and the same act in the teacher, as I noted above.

The sacred text itself teaches that the Scriptures are not to be interpreted by private judgment. "For," says Saint Peter, "no prophecy of the Scripture is made by private interpretation. For prophecy came not by the will of man at any time; but the holy men of God spoke inspired by the Holy Ghost" (2 Peter 1: 20). Here the reason is given why the Scriptures are not to be expounded by every man's private judgment, viz: that every part of the Scripture was delivered by the Holy Ghost, by whom the sacred writers were inspired.

By whom, then, are they to be interpreted when their sense is disputed but by those to whom the Holy Ghost was promised and given for the teaching of all truth—the apostles and their successors? "But when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will teach you all truth" (John 16: 13). This promise was not made to every particular person that undertakes to expound Scripture by his own private judgment, but to the church alone."

Catholics believe that non-Catholics who are baptized, who lead a good life, love God and their neighbor, and are blamelessly ignorant of the just claims of the Catholic religion to be the only true one (which is called being in good faith) are not excluded from heaven, provided they believe that there is one God who will reward the good and punish the wicked; that Jesus Christ is the Son of God made Man, the Savior of Mankind, in whom we must trust for our salvation; provided that they repent sincerely of ever having offended God by their sins.

Catholics believe that persons who have these dispositions, and who have no suspicion of their religion being false, and who have no means to discover, or have failed to discover, although they made efforts to do so, the true religion, and are so disposed in their heart that they would at any cost embrace the Roman Catholic religion if they knew it to be the true one, are Catholics in spirit and in some sense within the Catholic Church without knowing it themselves. We hold that these Christians belong to the "Soul," as it is called, of the Catholic Church, although they are not united to the visible body of the church by external communion with her and by outward profession of faith.

The case is different, however, when a person neglects to learn from the proper sources what the Catholic Church holds and teaches, fearing that, were he to become convinced of the truth of the Catholic faith, he would be compelled by his conscience to abandon his old form of worship, at the loss, perhaps, of friends and worldly goods.

This very fear shows that such a person is not in good faith, and that his ignorance is not of such a nature as will excuse him before God. He is one of those who "Love darkness rather than light" (John 3:19); and you know that the Master has said: "He that believeth not is condemned."

Consequently, if we were to judge such a person by the words of divine truth, we should say that he is lost. However, even such an one may, at the last moment, repent of his negligence in this matter.

SOME FACTS ABOUT THE OPERATION OF PROHIBITION IN MAINE.

When the United States Brewers' convention was in session in Washington in June, Mr. Holman F. Day addressed the convention and sought to comfort and encourage the brewers by statements unfavorable to Maine's liquor laws.

Mr. Day said that during the half century that Maine has had a prohibitory law there has been no attempt to enforce the law with absolute honesty. He declared that in the various Maine counties arrests for intoxication have increased beyond the number when open barrooms were tolerated. He said that while it is a fact that the saloon as Maine has known it in former years has been abandoned, there has come in its place dives selling compounds called whisky, and that the evils arising from the sale of such liquors in this prohibition State have grown because there has been no enforcement of law.

Mr. Day also told the brewers that the large centers of population in Maine are in open revolt against any attempt to enforce the prohibitory law, and that there is a constantly increasing sentiment for a re-submission of the question to the voters of the State.

A writer in the Civic League Record published in Maine, takes exceptions to Mr. Day's statements. This writer says it is true that for many years little effort was made to enforce the prohibitory law in some sections of the State. However, even where the law was not enforced conditions were by no means as bad as when the saloons were running wide open. However, there has been a tightening of lines the past two or three years with most beneficial results. A crusade for law enforcement was made and officers in the performance of their duties were backed by the citizens of the State.

The city of Bangor had open bars until the enforcing deputies went there in August, 1907. Under the practically open barrooms the arrests in Bangor for intoxication increased from 826 in 1900 to 2,513 in 1907, but under enforcement they dropped to 1,812 in 1908.

In 1909, according to this writer in the Civic League Record, Maine had its liquor laws enforced in varying degrees of effectiveness in twelve counties, with lax enforcement in the other four. In the four counties with lax enforcement, the total jail committals for all offenses increased 19 per cent over those of 1908, and for drunkenness the increase was 36 per cent over those committed in 1908. But in the twelve counties with enforcement the total jail committals for all crimes decreased in 1909, 15 per cent over those of 1908, and for drunkenness the decrease was 18 per cent over 1908. In 1907, in four counties a total of 137 was sent to jail for liquor selling and only 103 for intoxication.

In the old days it was the rule to arrest only the intoxicated persons who could not get home, and many so arrested were sent home when sober without a record of their arrest being made. Under enforcement a much larger proportion of those intoxicated, are arrested, and in some centers this is deliberately done to discredit enforcement.

This writer further declares that carpenters and contractors in all the centers where the law is enforced speak in the most positive and emphatic manner of the improved condition of their employees and the greatly lessened trouble arising from the use of liquor under the present enforcement of the liquor laws.

Continuing his answer to Mr. Day, the writer in the Record says that his work takes him throughout the State and he finds that the churches, the grange, the contractors, the business men, the wives and mothers in all centers of population are indorsing the enforcement of law and are in open revolt against those who would nullify the law. In closing he says:

"The people of Maine want prohibition and want it enforced. The liquor laws of Maine instead of being a farce are as effective as any law against vice or crime, are better enforced than many other criminal laws, and are as well enforced as any criminal law."—The American Issue.

Are We Keeping the Law of the Lord?

Dear Sisters: Are we, that rock the cradle keeping the law of the Lord in that "let all of your garments be plain," or are we letting the vanities of this world predominate in our hearts,—this world that has so little use for the people of God? Will we, daughters of Zion, ape after such a world? Are we successors of those spoken of who run after others for their favor? Do we realize that this world would, as a rule, clap their hands to see us, as a church, fail, or misfortune overtake us? Have we no more independence than to follow after their vanities and follies? A world that we expect to see overtaken with the judgments of God, yet we follow in their train. Now, where does that place us? It looks to me as though it places us in their scale. We wonder why they can not see the gospel light. Now, what is the trouble with our eyes that we can not see that we come far short of the standard, far short in seeing the gospel in its fullness? Dear sisters, who are at the head of the nation, is it is not they that rock the cradle? We women lay the foundation of morals; we mothers put on our infant the first fancy, expensive garment. Why do we not say as Hannah of old, her heart flowing over with gratitude to God, that our children shall be consecrated to God? But instead, we start them out to serve the world by dressing them after the follies of the world to be sure they meet the approval of it, in place of sowing in their hearts the seed of the gospel to the exclusion of finery. Why do we not teach them that we are not keeping God's law when we are spending money for needless clothing? Why do we not teach them first about their Lamanite brothers and sisters that have so little, and do not even know the dear Jesus? Why do we not teach them that we can not buy fine, needless clothes and send God's servants to the poor, darkened people? Why do we not teach them that these souls will be required at our hands just so far as we spend our means for unnecessary things? Why? Well, because we are slaves. Slaves are all bound to their masters, we all know. Yes, we are taught the gospel makes us free. Then why are we slaves? Because we choose to be so. Then if we are slaves to the world that knows not God, how can we have the Holy Spirit to teach those given to our care?

How many of us ever sat down and counted the cost of needless clothing we buy just because our old garments are not in the style of the world? Have we really counted the cost of trimmings, sometimes very expensive? We did not need them; and then think if every sister, old and young, no matter how young, would go without that stylish coat, hat, or dress, how many elders could be sent into the field that otherwise could not go! Then think of the souls brought into the kingdom, and they go on and on teaching others. Now think of the thousands of dollars that go to enrich merchants that should go to the Bishop, then go into your closet and ask God to create in you the right spirit to serve him and not a sin cursed world. Remember we are servants to whom we obey. Suppose we take the gospel to the Lamanites and they accept the Book of Mormon. They read it, then look at us. Can they say we live up to its teachings, with all our costly apparel? Suppose they are converted and come among us, when they look around, how can they see that we look any different than the sect that taught them false doctrine?

Now, dear sisters, tell me wherein we have a right to expect the blessings of the gospel to any great degree. Can we go to our heavenly Father with a clear conscience and ask, and if not feeling worthy how can we ask in faith? Yet we are taught it is vain to ask without faith. Do we not see why the blessings are so often withheld? Now, would we rather have fine furniture and fine clothing, or the Holy Spirit as an abiding comforter? So when we try to teach others, it will be in vain because of the lack of the Spirit in us. How can we teach others that we have something far ahead of anything they have, and still not rise above them in the foolish vanities of a world soon to be destroyed because of sin.

The Spirit once spoke to a company of Saints at a reunion, and told them if they did not come up higher and make the sacrifice and give up the foolish things of the world, that catastrophes would soon overtake them and they would lose their possessions, that they would be taken from them and they would get no reward; while if they would make the sacrifice willingly, they would gain a reward. While the sister spoke by the Spirit to them, another sister, coming into the meeting late, saw the one speaking encircled in a cloud of light, and only about four years from that time earthquake and fire robbed many of their earthly possessions.

Of course the innocent often suffer with the guilty, but they get their reward. So it will be again if Saints do not make the required sacrifice. Their possessions will be taken from them and they receive no reward. This is a day of sacrifice. We have been told by our kind Father, that he will save us if we choose to let him, and if not, we must suffer and no need to complain. Long the children of Israel of old wandered in the wilderness unnecessarily, because they would not obey, and were always complaining after the old things of darkened Egypt, and many of modern Israel are hungering for the things of the darkened world to-day, and thereby hindering themselves and Zion from being redeemed.

Now, we have the God-given Order of Enoch. How many will avail themselves of this opportunity to help redeem Zion? Mothers, Will we, that have children to teach, remember that it was to woman our dear Savior deigned to speak first of all after his resurrection? Woman first looked upon his glorified face; woman sent by him to tell his apostles he was risen. Why then shall not woman arise and say, I will not be a slave to the world, but will fill my mission and teach and set a better example? Woman that has been given the sacred place in the home to mold souls, to work for Jesus or serve a frivolous world.

Mothers, arise and be faithful to your calling. I hope and fervently pray that when fall comes with all of its rich harvest, that merchants will receive less of God's money and the Bishop's hands will not be tied because of low funds, and when another General Conference shall convene, that there will be less new coats, dresses, and hats, and more shining faces, because of the law in its fullness being kept. I hope we will hear less crying because "My companion is not in the church," and hear more of "I tried to keep the law more perfectly, and God has answered my prayers and wonderfully blessed me." I don't think that anyone had a stronger liking for nice clothes than I did, but I had a deep love for the gospel work, and as I strove to come up higher, I saw my weakness and went to God with my trouble, for it did trouble me, and he gave me more love for him, and my love for perishing things faded fast.

I know this world is one grand dressing room, but, Saints, let us dress not for it, but for the next, as a bride for the bridegroom. Then and only then, will we be acceptable to him. Sisters, it will pay you just to go and ask your kind Father, who knows your hearts, to help you. He will, and for your sacrifice he will give you his Spirit as a living spring, always bubbling up and running over with a testimony to those with whom you come in contact. You will feel more than repaid. You remember I asked you to pray for the work in Three Oaks. God is answering your prayers, for then there were only three Saints here, and now there are six. The seed being sown is taking root, so pray for us still.

Your sister for the gospel work,
ADDIE DAVID.

Letter Department

MCGREGOR, MINNESOTA, August 31.

Dear Herald: As this is the only way I have of bearing my testimony, I will take the opportunity of writing to the HERALD. This is a glorious work, and it makes my heart rejoice when I think upon its beauties, and feel to praise God more and more every day. Without the hope of the gospel, I do not know what we would do at times.

It has been an unusually dry summer up here; a light rain once or twice a month, and a light frost to follow. We have had a light frost every month this year until this and last week, it was so bad it killed the corn in places.

We had a few sermons about the middle of this month from Bro. Leonard Houghton, and they did us good. It was the first we had heard here since last October. One man said, "That was a sermon worth going to hear, and I would go ten miles to hear another like it." Another man, a Methodist, said that the two sermons had more gospel in them than the whole year's preaching of their own preacher had.

The night before Brother Houghton came, there were two Utah elders to come, and they stayed all night, and I gave them one of father's cards with the epitome of faith on the back, in hopes they would say something about it, and I was not disappointed, for one spoke up and said that we did not have some things in our epitome that they had on theirs, and I told them, "No." And I said, "We have some on ours that you have not on yours." They said, "No," and I said that it was on the marriage question. They said "it was not on theirs," and I said further, "You know what Joseph F. Smith testified to before the Senate, about having five wives and living with them." The younger man said yes, he knew it; and he says he is in fact proud of it, and also that the elders in that church believed in it, and defended it, and that they were sent out to preach that it was not essential in this day and age. I asked them the next morning how they made that doctrine agree with the Book of Mormon, and they said they did not try to make it agree, and that they placed the Book of Mormon ahead of the Bible. They then wanted to know if we did not believe in more than one God. We told them, "No," and then I took the Inspired Translation and read them the twenty-first paragraph of the revelation given to Joseph the Seer, where it says "worlds without number, have I created." He had said that there was one father or ruling God over each earth, and that we would all become gods after while, and then when I read that to them, he dropped that subject, and asked if we really believed that Adam was made out of the dust of the earth. I turned to Genesis, and read that to them, and they said they believed he was taken from another world. You see they get things mixed up pretty badly, and as I would answer or read them an answer, they would turn or ask another.

They wanted to know how Marks could ordain the present Joseph to preside over the church after he had been in so many different churches. They said the Doctrine and Covenants said that if a man joined any other church, that he was cut off from this. We could not find that in our book. I read them some of the letters from the Journal of History and all I could find in favor of the Reorganization. I feel that it was God's Holy Spirit that helped me to talk to them in the way I did. My husband bought a Doctrine and Covenants and a Pearl of Great Price from them so we can prepare ourselves to show them the difference between us and them.

May God help this glorious work to roll on, is my prayer,
MRS. LILLY A. PEEK.

STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA, August 31, 1910.

Editors Herald: The work in the Northern California District seems to be on the upward trend, at least in some localities, and we have hopes of better things soon.

The writer, in company with Bro. J. F. Wiles, spent the month of June in Nevada, trying to revive the work there, but it has been so long neglected that we were unable to accomplish much; found some spiritually dead, some were working with other churches, and a few faithful ones were stanchly trying to keep their lamps burning.

Those two faithful old standbys, Brother Jones, of Waterloo, and Sister Gault, of Reno, are still valiantly striving in the Master's cause, and were on hand to assist the missionaries all they could.

On account of his wife's illness, the writer was called home about the first of July, and has labored mostly in the city of Stockton since that time. The work in the latter place is getting into excellent condition, a noble band of willing workers stand ready to assist the efforts of the missionary, and the work, so long dead in this place, is now (since the disciplining of some unruly spirits) in excellent condition. A beautiful new church building is about ready for occupancy, and will be dedicated September 18. It is built in the mission style, 30 by 40 feet, with a nice entry and steps to match, the interior is finished in weathered oak, mission style, seats, pulpit and all; and taken altogether, is about the handsomest Latter Day Saint church on the Pacific coast.

They insist that the writer preach the dedicatory sermon, and although we would prefer some one else, we will comply with their desires, and also begin a series of meetings on that date, to continue as long as the interest holds out.

Our district reunion convenes September 2, and we are expecting a good, spiritual time, and large attendance. Brn. F. M. Sheehy and E. L. Kelley will be with us.

Praying for the welfare of Zion,

Your brother,
FRED B. FARR.

BARTLETT, IOWA, September 2, 1910.

Editors Herald: Prayer is the keynote to success in this latter day work, as it is the only way to get in close communion with God. The Savior said in Matthew 26: 41: "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation; the Spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak." It seems to be necessary to "pray always," or we may be led away from the Lord. The definition of prayer is, the soul's sincere desire uttered or unexpressed, and we should try to live in accord with our prayer. The Lord will help us if we ask him, and we can not expect the Lord to do it all; we must do our part. We must work as well as pray, and must do righteously, for the prayers of the wicked are an abomination in the sight of the Lord. We must be pure in body, in mind, in thought, for the Lord can not dwell in unholy temples. We must have faith in God, so when we come to him for a blessing he will be able to give it to us.

The Savior has said, "If any man will do the will of the Father, he shall know of the doctrine." What a grand thought! It was by "doing his will," and not defiling himself with the king's portion of meat, that Daniel saved himself and friends from death and was able to interpret the king's dream. The Lord does hear and answer prayers to-day, as in former days. I have had my prayers answered immediately, and how thankful I am that I am serving such a loving Father. Another reason that the Savior wanted us to "watch and pray" was that we may not "enter into temptation." Let us put ourselves in the same position or attitude the Savior placed himself in, when in the Garden of Gethsemane—"If possible, let this cup pass from me; nevertheless, thy will be done, not mine."

In the Book of Mormon, Alma 16: 219-221, we find these words as Alma gave them to his people for their instruction, "humble yourselves, and continue in prayer unto him; cry unto him when ye are in your fields; yea, over all your flocks; cry unto him in your houses, yea, over all your household, both morning, mid-day, and evening; yea, cry unto him against the power of your enemies; yea, cry unto him against the Devil, who is an enemy to all righteousness. Cry unto him over the crops of your fields, that ye may prosper in them: cry over the flocks of your fields, that they may increase. But this is not all: ye must pour out your souls in your closets, and your secret places, and in your wilderness; yea, and when you do not cry unto the Lord, let your hearts be full, drawn out in prayer unto him continually for your welfare, and also for the welfare of those who are around you."

The Lord never leaves us without a guide to direct us in the way he wants us to serve him, and he says if we will keep all his laws and commandments, and do them, he "will open the windows of heaven and pour out a blessing we are not able to receive." We are told in Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2: "And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day." And we should fit and prepare our minds, and take the Spirit with us, and then we will receive the necessary strength and blessings. He has commanded us to stand in holy places, so when affliction and trials come upon us, he can come to our help and rescue. There is a work for us to do, and God can not give us salvation unless we do these things. He also says in Doctrine and Covenants 90: 8: "What I say unto one I say unto all: Pray always, lest that wicked one have power in you, and remove you out of your place." It is not only necessary for us to pray, but to live unspotted from the world. James says, "He that lacks wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not."

Let us attend to our prayers, and live as we should, that we may feel the blessed influence of God's Spirit, and to the end that we may be laborers together with God, to build up his kingdom here on earth as it is in heaven.

HARRY N. PIERCE.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Editors Herald: This being Labor Day, I thought it might be well that in some way I might make it a day of labor for our Master, in some respects, and one in particular which I have felt it my duty to mention for some time past; it is the subject of placing our church literature with news agencies, that it may be handled on railway trains and through news stands.

Some time since, I was in "the railway news service," and I thought from what experience I had gotten from this kind of labor, that such would not only be profitable to the church, but that it would tend to help spread the gospel, as it will no doubt, arouse curiosity to some extent, to even hear the name Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, or Inspired Translation of the Bible, saying nothing about HERALD, Ensign, Autumn Leaves, etc., and then, in each place some appropriate tract that would appeal to the prospective purchaser.

I have oftentimes wondered how many Saints, and especially the elders, when traveling, would not feel like giving twenty-five cents, if necessary, to get hold of the latest HERALD, Ensign, Leaves, or some other of the church works, at a more advanced price, if it were possible for them to buy them from a train news agent or news stand.

Trusting I have been of service to our Master's cause by mentioning this, and that I may, with you, live to see that day when all the honest in heart may be gathered into one fold.

Yours for advancement,
1225 WEST WALNUT STREET. OLIVER R. ATWELL.

ROCK ISLAND, ILLINOIS.

Dear Herald: I will write a vision which I received recently, and hope it will be a benefit to some, as I know it is strengthening to me. I was in a very large building. It seemed to be a church building, and upon the pulpit were five or six of the priesthood, and myself, while more of brothers and sisters sat very near to the front, and I turned around in my seat to look back of me, and I thought the sisters who sat back of us were all dressed in the same color of garment; that color being a bluish gray, similar to that of a soldier's uniform, and very plainly made.

And I thought I felt out of place to see that we sisters who sat near the front were dressed in the fashion of the world, while the sisters who sat back of us were so plainly dressed, as I thought Saints should be dressed.

So, after the meeting was over, which seemed to be of a business character, I went back to make myself acquainted with the sisters, and while I was going from one to the other, I could feel the Spirit of God among them, and some of the mothers held tiny infants in their arms, who were dressed in the same color of garment, and they also held out their tiny hands to shake hands with me; and while we were talking and getting acquainted, one of the priesthood called with a loud voice, "All ye that are ready to go in the first wagon come, for Jesus Christ is going to be with his people."

And I thought we all made a rush for the door, and when we got outside, there stood a very large wagon with a white horse at the right, and a black at the left; and I thought I was ready to go in the first wagon with the Savior, when all at once I thought of my clean garment that I had left in the church, as it seemed that we all had to take clean garments with us, and I ran back to the church to get my clean garment. I could not find it, so I ran out again, as I was so anxious to go in the first wagon with the Savior, and when I got out again the wagon was gone. I could see it going westward at a distance. The churchyard was full of Saints, and I could see them coming back in groups, those who had started after the wagon, and who were not permitted to go.

All those who had the plain garments on had gone on in the first wagon, and I stood there wondering what I would do, or where I would go, when all at once it began to grow dark, and a form came and stood at my side, and I could see that he had the same colored garment on that the sisters had on, and he said to me, "Where are you going?" I then spoke and said, "I don't know where to go; even my companion has gone with the Savior, and I could not go." He then spoke again and said, "Well, why did you not come with the rest of us?" Then I recognized the voice of my companion, who had come for me, and I told him that I was ready to go in the first wagon, but had forgotten my clean garment, and had gone back to the church to get it; and when I came out of the church the wagon had gone.

Some think this is given expressly for myself, but I do not feel that it is, as there were some whom I thought would sure be ready to go with the Savior, who were left behind. I do not want to be one who will not be permitted to go with him at his coming. I try hard to overcome pride, and many of my weaknesses. There is so much comfort in the gospel, for he hears and answers us when we cry unto him. I have had many testimonies when I have been in prayer unto him, and I know that this is the true church, and I know when I am watchful and prayerful that I am blessed. I ask the Saints who read this to pray for me.

HATTIE BARNES.

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA, September 6, 1910.

Saints' Herald: Wife and I located here on June 14, and bade farewell to a noble band of Saints at New Albany, Indiana.

We found a few loyal Saints holding a Sunday school in the home of our worthy brother, Charles H. Fish. On August 7 we organized ourselves into a Worker's Band, chose a committee, and raised funds, rented us a hall, and by now our work is in fine progress. Our meetings last Sunday were a great success, as our hall was full of interested listeners. We feel sure that with encouragement we can do a good work here, but the writer does not want all the praise, for a more noble and energetic band of Saints I never met than are here; even though few in number, each has that firm determination that always makes God's work prosper.

No doubt this will be good news to many, as this is the first public effort made here that we know of. We have about two hundred and fifty thousand people here, and by far the largest city in Southern Indiana District. We ask the prayers of the Saints in our behalf, in this effort.

PINE GROVE, MICHIGAN.

Saints' Herald: We have been enjoying a two-day meeting, the first we have had, as we are a new branch. Five elders, three priests, and two teachers were present at the meeting. Ten sermons were preached, and two prayer meetings and one sacramental service were held, which were thoroughly enjoyed by the sixty persons who attended.

In our last prayer meeting all felt God's Holy Spirit present. A gift of prophecy was given through a visiting Saint, concerning our branch, and given to the teacher of our branch, and the priest of Comins Branch, also to the missionaries. At the close of the meetings all felt a sadness that we had to part, and that we might all never meet again in this life; but God alone knows and will guide us aright.

Yours in the gospel,

MRS. H. E. FARRAR.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, August 30, 1910.

Dear Herald: The writer has just returned from Bandera County, where a reunion and district conference were held, at a place located on the Medina River. The majority of the membership in attendance were of the First San Antonio Branch, there being eighteen in number. The ministry in attendance were Bro. W. M. Aylor, missionary in charge, who presided, assisted by our district president, Bro. W. C. Carl.

Those of the missionary force were Brn. D. S. Palmer and W. H. Mannering; those of the local force were Brn. J. P. Neal and T. J. Jett.

Bro. Glaude Kuykendall was ordained to the office of priest, and occupied the stand at the next service held after his ordination. He preached on the divinity of the Book of Mormon, occupying about three fourths of an hour, with good liberty. The brother is only nineteen years old, and we felt to rejoice to see one of our young coming so boldly to the front. Each morning, at 9.30, the Saints met in prayer and testimony meeting. While there was no manifestation of the gifts, most of the members took an active part, and a goodly degree of the Spirit was felt at each service.

There were four services held each day. The sermons were good and instructive. The afternoon sessions were also profitable, being occupied in songs, speeches, talks, etc. After the last service on Sunday night, the tent was pulled down and Brother Adams took it to a place called Tuff. On the morning after the meetings closed, just at sunrise one soul was led into the waters of baptism by Bro. D. S. Palmer. After the brother was confirmed, we started on our homeward journey. Brother Palmer, after returning home with his family, joined Brother Aylor at Tuff, accompanied by Bro. Glaud Kuykendall. They intend making several points with the tent before returning. Bro. W. H. Mannering started in another direction to a place called Kicaster.

Your sister,

RUTH GIFFORD.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, September 1, 1910.

Editor Saints' Herald: The 1910 southern California reunion is now history. Speakers: E. L. Kelley, F. M. Sheehy, C. E. Crumley, Peter Kaufman, Nathaniel Carmichael, and the writer. Sermons up to average. A general acceptance of instructions of Brother Kelley. His sermons were plain and comprehensive, leaving little to be guessed at along general lines. One "Round Table" served to quell apprehension, dissipate doubts, and eliminate impossible issues. We look for results in things financial in this district. Brother Sheehy was his old time, jolly, cheery, happy self, and won his way into the hearts of Saints and friends with comparative ease. A much larger attendance than we expected. Considerable interest centered in the proposed purchase of fifteen acres at Shakespere Beach. Two afternoons were consumed in discussion. Proposition finally accepted. A committee was appointed who will plat and sell one thousand lots in the tract at prices ranging from ninety-five dollars to one hundred and twenty-five dollars, realizing something over ten thousand dollars. This will pay for the ground and leave about five thousand dollars for building auditorium, cafeteria, and improving grounds, etc. We will have seven acres left intact for general grounds. Most of the other lots will be purchased and owned by the Saints. We hope to be in a position to entertain a General Conference in a year hence. Why not? Most all other organizations are realizing the advantages of Los Angeles as a convention city. Delegates could come here and camp in a tent in April and be comfortable. Could you say as much as this even in August anywhere in the middle west?

Several baptisms; seven ordinations. Bishop Kelley went to San Diego on Monday, August 22. Returned to San Bernardino August 23, remaining until August 25, preaching twice. He was the speaker in Los Angeles, morning and evening, Sunday, August 28. F. M. Sheehy went to Santa Ana occupying morning and evening. Through the courtesy of local brethren, Brn. Kelley and Sheehy were privileged to take in southern California sights. Bro. Kelley left for northern California Tuesday morning, and Bro. Sheehy on Wednesday evening. The coming of these brethren has been salutary; their work acceptable; their presence an inspiration; their example commendable; their zeal contagious; their kindness and good cheer subduing. May God go with them in their work.

All the local brethren acquitted themselves as becoming men of God during the reunion.

The district is in excellent condition and we are hoping to make a good fall and winter campaign for the truth.

Yours for the right,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

New Philadelphia Reunion.

The Reunion of the Pittsburgh, Kirtland, West Virginia, and Ohio districts was held August 13 to 28, at New Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, running two weeks. It was demonstrated by experience that the ten day gathering is the most satisfactory. Considerable spiritual instruction was given and the gifts were in evidence, with very little adverse criticism concerning them. The birthday of Apostle R. C. Russell arrived at an opportune time, as did the eleventh anniversary of Bishop J. A. Becker and wife, affording the campers the opportunity for fun, speechmaking, and the presentation of presents. Brother Russell receiving a watch chain, and Brother Becker and wife a silver tea set.

Elder O. R. Miller, of Knobnoster, Missouri, and Sr. Verna M. Jones, of Dayton, Ohio, met their fate at the reunion, and were publicly married by Apostle Russell on the last Sabbath evening after the preaching service, in the presence of a large gathering of Saints and outsiders. The papers gave front page article, quoting the marriage ceremony of the church. On the last Sabbath, at the prayer meeting, Brother Lake, patriarch, said he felt impressed to bless the audience and he asked the congregation to stand, and asked God's blessing upon the people. It was an impressive event, which will not soon be forgotten. At this meeting he sang two verses in tongues, the interpretation being given through Sr. G. T. Griffiths, and is hereby inclosed. It was sung to the tune of, "Come Thou Fount of Every Blessing."

After testing the matter during two reunions, we find the following program most satisfactory: Mornings devoted to prayer meeting, summer school, preaching service. Afternoon given over to recreation. Evening preaching service. The summer school was in charge of Sister Griffiths, and consisted of classes of the Bible and Book of Mormon normals, pedagogy, and an intermediate normal. A kindergarten school was organized for the children and held sessions during the preaching service.

The equivalent of sixty-two tents were required to house the campers. The elders present were R. C. Russell, J. A. Becker, R. Baldwin, F. J. Ebeling, J. C. McConaughy, L. D. Ullom, J. C. Farnfield, F. N. Booker, J. M. Stubbart, S. Brown, John Lake, O. R. Miller, C. Ed Miller.

C. ED. MILLER, Secretary.

The Blue Rapids, Kansas, Reunion.

The reunion was called to order on Monday, August 29, at 9.15 a. m., by Bro. S. Twombly, district president. Bro. H. E. Moler and Swen Swenson were elected presidents of the reunion. Mahlon Smith was elected secretary.

Motion carried to hold the reunion in the church instead of in the park, as advertised. This was considered necessary on account of the condition of the old district tent, which, though on the ground, was not thought fit to use.

Sr. F. McNichols was chosen organist and chorister. Bro. Henry Bivens was chosen to act as usher. On motion the chair appointed Ina Bivens, Arthur Smith, and B. F. Jackson a committee to raise funds to defray the expenses of the reunion. The presidency announced the order of exercises as follows: Prayer and testimony meeting each morning at 9.30; preaching at 11 a. m.; normal work at 3 p. m., in charge of Sister McNichols, and preaching at 8 p. m., each service to be preceded by fifteen minutes of song service. This program was carried out throughout the reunion.

Elders H. E. Moler, Swen Swenson, and S. J. Madden were present throughout the reunion; Elder Twombly during the first half, and Ammon White during the last half of the reunion. Also local elders and priests, F. E. Taylor, B. F. Jackson, Arthur and Mahlon Smith and Henry Bivens, were present during the most of the time. Elders Moler, White, Swenson, Madden and Twombly did the preaching, assisted by the local brethren.

The meetings were well attended throughout, and at times the church was filled to its seating capacity. We had heavy rain storms nearly every day, which prevented some scattered brethren from coming who were intending to come, but there was a fair representation from different parts of the district. Besides those already mentioned we noticed the following: Bro. and Sr. Bolly and Sr. Beardsley, from Washington; Bro. Robinson, from Topeka; Bro. Phinney and Sr. Carstelson, from Marietta; Sr. Willey, from Oketo; Sr. Kendall, from Barnes; Bro. Ora Wilson, from Beatrice; Sr. Ettie Kent, from Woodward, Oklahoma; Sr. Johnson and children from Cleburne; Srs. McDougall and Hagar from Centralia; Bro. and Sr. John McDougall, of Centralia; Cassie Rogers, of Clay Center; Srs. Nunamaker, of Manhattan, and Mrs. Willey, of Oketo.

Bro. A. A. Reams, representing the Herald Office, came in on Thursday and remained through the reunion. His sales of books amounted to about thirty dollars.

Brother White was also busy imparting the blessings of his office to those who had not yet received the same. The reunion was a success in every particular.

It was a season of joy and rejoicing to all who attended, and much good was accomplished by the preaching of the word. The branch was ready to turn on forty electric lights, and turn the park into a veritable fairyland at night, and to install electric lights in the tent if it had been in a condition to use. We may have an opportunity to do this some time in the future, when the new tent is purchased, provision for the purchase of which has been made. Sufficient funds, some $25, were raised to defray the expenses of the reunion without any trouble, and more would have been forthcoming if needed.

At a business meeting of the reunion, September 3, at 7 p. m., it was moved and carried that we hold a reunion in 1911, the time and place to be left to the missionary in charge of the district, and the presiding elder of the same. Moved, That a committee of three be appointed to confer with and act with the above in arranging for said reunion. Several nominations were made for this committee, and a vote was taken, resulting in the election of Arthur Smith, Mahlon Smith, and John McDougall as said committee.

At Sunday evening service a vote of thanks was passed for the abounding kindness and hospitality of the Blue Rapids Saints. The work of Sister McNichols from Saturday to Saturday in song service and normal work was highly appreciated and commended by all.

M. SMITH, Secretary.

The inside story of Doctor Cook's arrival and stay in Copenhagen, has been written for the September Century by Maurice Francis Egan, our minister to Denmark. It is interesting to have Mr. Egan's word that the majority of the Danes seem to think that the explorer deceived himself; and as for their share in the affair, "they know they acted generously and courageously, and that is enough for them and the rest of the world."

News From Branches

CENTRAL CHICAGO.

Friday, September 2, after an interesting Religio study, two young ladies, Miss Anna P. Keir and Miss Florence A. Durfee, were baptized by Elder J. A. Tanner.

Sunday, September 4. As there were a number of hard showers during the day, our attendance at services was quite small. Sacrament service in charge of Elders J. A. Tanner, Robert Burwell, and James Keir. The two young sisters that were baptized Friday evening were confirmed by Elders Tanner and James Keir, the witness of the Spirit being present.

Elder Burwell presented many good thoughts to his hearers in the evening on "A living faith," showing that some must be in possession of a dead faith, which is not of much consequence.

Tuesday evening, September 6. Regular branch business meeting, conducted by Pres. J. A. Tanner, and H. P. W. Keir, clerk. A committee was appointed to take charge of the advertising for the special meetings to begin next Sunday evening.

Wednesday evening, prayer meeting quite well attended, in charge of Brethren Wainwright and Sherman, after which choir practice was conducted by Sr. Marguerite Wickes, and Sr. Fannie Prentis McGahan, organist. The Searchlight Club and some others are endeavoring to furnish special music for the meetings next week.

"Workmen of God, oh, lose not heart,
But learn what God is like!
And, in the darkest battlefield,
Thou shalt know where to strike.

"Oh, blest is he to whom is given
The instinct that can tell
That God is on the field, when he Is most invisible."

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Between the oft-recurring electric showers, bad roads, and chilly days in the midst of summer's heat, and the bustle attending the annual elephant show, the Jackson County Fair, and County Teachers' Institute, Labor Day, Plainsmen's Reunion, and the rally round the speech making grandstand of such distinguished visitors as Roosevelt and Bryan, to one marching in this long procession of events within the last two weeks, life has indeed been somewhat strenuous.

And now cometh the quarterly conference, to be held at Knobnoster, next Saturday, and the Sunday school association on Friday.

Moreover, within our little church circle acquaintances have been renewed in the visits and in the coming and going of the home folk, who went on various summer trips, either for rest or duty's sake.

Sr. E. J. Waller and family, from Honolulu, and Bro. and Sr. C. H. Lake, with their bright young native son from the South Sea Islands, were with us last Sunday, and besides these, several from different places were mentioned as visitors at the Sunday school. The secretary registered attendance 753, offering $16.78. Thirteen were in the cradle roll class, the youngest present being not quite two years old.

Other pleasant experiences have been intermixed: in the line of business, we note the satisfactory work done by the committee on furnace repairs, and that of other committees and societies, namely, the Laurel Club, the Sunshine Band, and the Ladies' Aid.

Brother Kaler, every Sunday evening lately, has been delivering good gospel sermons, and on the 28th Bro. J. F. Curtis' sermon, based on the text, "Trust in God," was full of instruction, inspiring to activity in gospel work. Brother Joseph, on last Sunday morning, preached another one of his special sermons; and within hearing of the echoes from all the noble speeches of the honorable ones, we can say, in gospel truth, we still find taught on the rostrum of the church all that which will most truly edify and uplift. The best of counsel was given to both old and young, personal responsibility being the theme, based on the texts, "Man, know thyself"; and from Job 32: 8, "There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." It did us all good to hear of the noble work done by the Saints in the prohibition line, in Plano, in days agone; and this was accomplished through a sense of personal responsibility.

The old rally song, by our poet laureate, Brother Joseph, called "Old King Rum," still rings in memory's ear.

The institute work spoken of, on the 23d and 24th ult., was enjoyable; as Sr. Ethel Davis was a member of the association, we note that last year she taught in a public school of Oklahoma, and, like others of our young people, will work as teacher for higher grades the coming year.

We are glad to hear that Sr. Irma Shaver and others from hereabout are pressing onward to Graceland.

The program rendered by some of the teachers, principals, and professors, at the convention in the high schools here was appreciated, from the fact that many of these at an earlier date lived and grew up to a noble manhood and womanhood on the humble farms of Jackson County. The subjects discussed, among others, were: "Morality, farming, civics and health."

Pres. F. M. Smith, who at the Stone Church, on July 8 gave a most interesting lecture and stereopticon view of Graceland, said with emphasis, in harmony with the policy of our college, "Let us give our boys and girls a full course of education, not the rush of a short term in some special line."

In Graceland's favor and in view of our brother's success as a student, let us repeat, "A good example is an unanswerable argument."

ABBIE A. HORTON.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

The Iowa State Fair was attended by several of the Lamoni people, but we failed to receive a call. We would have been glad to have seen them at our home and place of worship. We noticed that the fair had greater attractions to some of the local Saints than had the prayer meeting last Wednesday evening, yet with all this we had an excellent service in which everyone present took part.

The choir is planning to have a platform in the church suitable for their use. A sociable was held at the residence of Bro. E. O. Clark a few days past, and over twenty dollars were realized, to assist in paying the expense of the improvement contemplated.

Bro. and Sr. D. C. White and their daughter, Blossom, and son, Dewey, of Lamoni, have been on a visit to their daughter, Sr. May Skinner, and Sister May contemplates going home with her mother to spend a few weeks with home folks.

The missionary has been absent from the city for about five weeks and finds himself somewhat nonplussed to know just how to take hold of the work, or to get the work in a shape to take hold of so as to do effectual work. Will occupy at the C. B. Harding neighborhood, where we learn that a few are much interested.

Several of the Saints from the city enjoyed an outing at the Fraser reunion held from the 12th to the 21st, and enjoyed the spiritual ministrations of the services.

The next reunion of the Des Moines District is located at Colo, and the committee appointed to arrange consists of Brn.

Frank Lhommedieu, Henry Dewey, John Thornton, Charles M. Richeson, and J. F. Mintun. The committee met at Boone last Sunday afternoon and organized by selecting J. F. Mintun president, and C. M. Richeson, secretary and treasurer. Committees were also appointed to look after the advertising and to secure speakers and musicians.

Elder J. S. Roth is making an effort to hold tent meetings near Garwin under most trying circumstances, so he writes. The few Saints there were very anxious for tent services, but we learn that it was a very inopportune time to hold it, or has been so far. We hope for more successful report later.

Bro. Robert Chenis, who was formerly a member and a representative of the Utah-Mormon church in the South, and his wife who believed with him, were baptized into the true Church of Jesus Christ at the reunion, and two happier people I have rarely seen. He says that there are many of those who have become convinced of the restoration of the gospel and the truthfulness of the claims made for the Book of Mormon and have accepted of these truths who are as anxious as was he to find the church which teaches these truths without the contaminations that are attached to them in Utah.

The present branch officers are making quite an effectual effort to eliminate unfaithfulness and iniquity from among the Saints, and as a rule the Saints are sustaining them. Not much sickness among the Saints at the present writing. Do not hear of any having infantile paralysis, but know of some who have the symptoms of spiritual paralysis. Now that the reunion and state fair are over we hope to see normal conditions prevail in the services. We hope to revive the normal class and pursue the study to completion.

Srs. Alice and Ruth Mintun went Friday to their school work for the year, the former to Kirkman and the latter to Somers. Any Saints near these places should make themselves known.

We just learned that Sister Shaver, formerly of Colorado, now of Bondurant, is quite sorely afflicted, and has not forgotten the source of blessings. Her husband is very much interested in her welfare, and a believer in the faith. Their son is desirous of becoming a child of God.

The secure hold that ex-President Theodore Roosevelt has on the common people was evidenced while the writer was at Boone last week, when thousands gathered to get a view of him as he passed through, and if possible hear him talk for ten minutes. I was fortunate to be located where I heard all the speech and could see all his contortions, and by every movement of his body and expression of his face he gave evidence that he fully believed what he said.

J. F. MINTUN.

On Reaching the Masses.

How shall we reach the masses? Well, our receipt is: "To reach the masses, one must reach for them." Dr. Charles E. Jefferson has expressed the idea by saying: "It is easier to put up a sign, 'Strangers Welcome,' but one hand with human blood in it speaks a warmer welcome than all the signs which were ever printed or painted. . . . One hand throbbing with the lifeblood of a heart which loves will do more to reach the unchurched masses than all the printing presses in the town. . . . There are men who have ceased to believe in the Bible and in the sacraments and in the creeds and in all existing religious organizations, but no one has yet been found who does not believe in a strong and uplifting hand. We shall have a new book of the Acts when the church goes back to the Gate Beautiful and gets a fresh glimpse of the gospel as preached by the apostolic hand." Not theory, but the practice of those elemental acts of personal interest which everybody knows and everybody responds to. One thing is fairly certain: to reach the masses we must reach for them. The evangel of the hand has still its pathetic power.

The conference closed to meet with the Frankfort Branch, and the time to be set by the president, W. A. McDowell. J. A. McGinnis, secretary.

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—Conference of the Northeastern Illinois District, met at Plano, Illinois, August 27, 1910. Elders J. W. Wight and F. M. Cooper were chosen to preside. Statistical, ministerial, and Bishop's agent's reports were read, and the bishop's report gave a balance on hand of $646.61, and the district treasurer's report gave a balance on hand of $2.66. It was decided to hold another reunion on the third Friday in August, 1911, at Chicago. The following brethren were chosen as the committee: J. A. Tanner, C. Hartshorn, E. J. Lang, W. I. Cochran, and James Keir. The reunion committee was authorized to solicit means in the district for reunion expenses the coming year. It was also decided to hold the next conference at First Chicago Branch, the time to be left to the minister in charge and the president of the district. W. E. Williamson, secretary.

Convention Minutes.

CENTRAL OKLAHOMA.—District Religio association met in convention at Morrison, Oklahoma, August 18, Pres. J. E. Hughes in charge. Reports from the different locals were read and approved. There being no special business, the afternoon was devoted to talks on the Book of Mormon. Bro. James E. Yates, Hubert Case, J. E. Hughes, and Sr. McGeorge favored us with some good, spirited talks, which proved both entertaining and instructive. Motion was then made to adjourn, to meet at the place of next district conference. Athalia Hughes, secretary.

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—District Sunday school association convened at Plano, Illinois, August 26, 1910, at 11 a. m. The general routine business was transacted, in which steps were taken to expedite business after this, and not keep the body waiting upon committee work. Prior to the business session, the Sunday school conducted during each day of the reunion, institute and normal work, under the direction of the field-worker and Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser. Adjourned, leaving the time and place of next meeting with the superintendent and secretary, and they to publish. LaJune Howard, secretary.

SOUTHERN NEBRASKA.—District Sunday school convention was held at Nebraska City, Nebraska, July 22 and 23, 1910. Friday evening was occupied with a program. Saturday forenoon a session of institute work was held, Z. L. Goldsmith presiding. The subject, "Organization and the conducting of the Sunday school," was freely discussed. Afternoon was devoted to routine business, Z. L. Goldsmith in the chair, and H. A. Higgins secretary pro tem. It was moved and carried that the plan of assessment of the district be changed from a quarterly to a semiannual assessment. By motion the evening session was occupied by preaching services. Adjourned to meet two days prior to the next district conference, and at the same place. Blanche I. Andrews, district secretary.

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—Convention convened Friday forenoon, August 26, 1910, at Plano, Illinois. The following officers were elected: President, Lester Wildermuth; vice-president, Fred Bone; secretary, Blanche Fairbanks; treasurer, Hazel Maginnis; home department superintendent, Glenn Fairbanks; librarian, Frank Sly. The time and place of next convention left with the president, and to be published later. Blanche Fairbanks, secretary.

CENTRAL OKLAHOMA.—District Sunday school association met at Morrison, Oklahoma, August 19, 1910, at 2 p. m., with district superintendent Alice McGeorge in charge. Reports for first and second quarters were read from Morrison, Terlton, Shawnee, Holdenville, Kingfisher, and Ripley schools. Report for first quarter only, read from Rock Creek and Piedmont schools. Oral reports from the different local superintendents and workers showed an increased interest in Sunday school work during the year. The treasurer reported the amount in treasury, $1.14. We have eight schools, with a total membership of 299. In harmony with the General Convention resolution, a motion was made and carried that this district hereafter be known as the Central Oklahoma District Sunday School Association. It was decided that our district has qualified upon all points necessary to make it a first grade district. A paper was read entitled, "Order in the Sunday school room." Convention adjourned to meet the day previous to the next district conference of the Central Oklahoma District, and at the same place. Annita Reid, secretary.

Pastoral.

To the Officers and Members of the Branches of the Far West District: I wish to inform you that I am contemplating holding a series of meetings in the various branches of the district, and to do such other labor as will come under the jurisdiction of the office I am called upon to occupy. (See section 125, Doctrine and Covenants.)

Will you kindly consider the advisability of holding a series of meetings, and get an expression from your branch and notify me of the result at your earliest convenience. Bear in mind that there are about seventeen branches in the district, and I intend to visit all, so I ask that you do not confine me to any special date, but give me as much latitude as you can, and I shall give you sufficient time to notify all concerned.

An early reply will be appreciated. I remain,

Your brother in the gospel,

WM. LEWIS.

306 W. FIFTH STREET, CAMERON, MO.

Quorum of High Priests.

To My Brethren: This will inform the membership of the Quorum of High Priests that about ten days ago I mailed to each member a copy of the program for 1911, and herewith request the families of those who may be absent from home on missions, to forward the program. Would say: if any fail to receive the copy sent, and they will let me know, another will be mailed.

Brethren! when you change your permanent address, do please inform me of the new address. This conference year I will have to address you twice more, and it is my desire to reach every member.

Your fellow-servant,
ROBT. M. ELVIN, Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, August 31, 1910.

Corrections.

Will you please make the following corrections in my autobiographical sketch: Page 801, second column, and eighth line from the bottom, for "Hello kitchen" read, "Hell's kitchen." Page 802, first column, and ninth line from bottom, for "ill-fated Selnda" read "ill-fated Seluda." Page 803, first column, and second line from bottom, for "Cartle's" read, "Castle's Pictorial Bible." Page 807, first column, and twelfth line from top, for "I. C." read, "I. C. * * *" to be read, "I see stars." I made a winning hit on this, as Ira C. Moore had written an article for the Helper and signed said article, "I. C. * * *" I quoted the article, emphasized the signature and added: "Yes! he will see Moore stars."

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

In the SAINTS' HERALD for August 17, 1910, on page 813, in a letter from Ribstone, Alberta, on the seventh line reading upwards from the close of the letter, concerning administering to Sr. George Burton, it should read, "A. Burton," instead of "a brother."

Independence Sanitarium.

TRAINING SCHOOL FOR NURSES.

The Sanitarium offers a three years' course of instruction to ladies desiring to become trained nurses. The first month is probationary. The nurse in charge has full power to decide as to their fitness for the work, and to the propriety of retaining or dismissing them at the end of the month's probation. She can also at any time dismiss them for misconduct or inefficiency.

Room, board and laundry (except collars and cuffs) is furnished for the term, and an allowance of five dollars per month additional, after the first month. Except as above, no wages will be paid. The instruction, knowledge, and experience furnished, are considered full compensation.

The day nurses rise at 6 a. m., breakfast at 6.30, on duty from 7 a. m. to 7 p. m., with two hours in afternoon for rest and study. One half day is allowed each week, and four hours on Sunday. Two weeks vacation each summer.

The candidates for admission must be unmarried women between twenty and thirty years old, and must possess a good common school education. They are required to furnish a physician's certificate of sound health and two certificates of good character. Those who have had partial training in any other institution, or correspondence school, for training nurses, are not eligible.

The applicant should bring two dark wash dresses, four white aprons, two inch waist bands and five inch hem plain underclothing, and rubber heeled shoes for probation. After being accepted for training, they are required to wear the uniform of the training school.

Those graduating after passing the final examination at the close of the three years' term will receive a diploma, certifying to their character, proficiency, and period of training.

Applicants should address Independence Sanitarium, West Blue avenue, Independence, Missouri. 36-3t

Marriages.

SPEAKMAN—STOILER.—At the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Elsworth, Sr. Mabel Stoiler and Mr. Harry Speakman, of Nebraska City, Nebraska, were, on August 16, united in the holy bonds of matrimony, Elder W. M. Self officiating. They are both worthy young people, well and favorably known, and their many friends unite in wishing them a safe and happy journey through the voyage of life. They will make their home in the city.

Died.

DOWEN.—Francis J. Dower, was born January 30, 1901, baptized January 31, 1909, by Elder G. J. Waller, and died August 19, 1910, at Honolulu, Hawaii Territory, as the result of falling from a second story window and breaking his skull. He follows his mother and brother, who passed to the other shore about three months ago, and leaves a sister and two brothers to mourn. Services in charge of Elder M. A. McConley. Interment at Nuuanu cemetery.

BURCH.—Sr. Sarah A. Burch, of Pollock, Missouri, departed this life September 2, 1910. She was born near Zanesville, Ohio, January 18, 1825. She was a devoted mother, a true Saint, and died in full faith of a reward among the just. She selected the hymns to be sung at the funeral, also chapters to be read, and M. M. Turpen to preach the sermon.

LANE.—Bro. David Lane was born in Council Bluffs, Iowa; died August 26, 1910, at his home, near Dixon, Nebraska. He was married to Mary Ann Hays, of Crescent City, Iowa, 1870, to which union were born five children; David, Eva, Joseph, Mary, and Nellie. They resided in Council Bluffs till 1905, when they removed to Dixon. He leaves a wife and four children. He was baptized July 24, 1910, while at Saint Vincent's Hospital, in Sioux City, by Alvin Knisley, who also preached his funeral sermon in Council Bluffs on August 30.

TOMLINSON.—Richard Charles, eldest son of Elder and Sr. George Tomlinson, died at the home of his parents, in his nineteenth year. Deceased was blessed by Elder R. C. Evans, and baptized by Elder E. K. Evans, when eight years of age. Died August 27, 1910, after a short illness with typhoid fever. Services in charge of Elder William Flegg. Our late brother was ticket agent at Saint Mary's, for the T. T. R., and was lately promoted to late position in the city of Brantford. He was active in Sunday school and Religio work.

PENDLETON.—William Pendleton died at his home, two and one half miles south of Farmington, Iowa, August 25, 1910, from an injury received last October, when his team ran away and threw him to the ground from a load of wood. He was born in Armagh County, Ireland, July 4, 1830. In 1845 he went to Brampton, Canada, where he was married to Miss Sarah Warnock on December 22, 1863. He was baptized at Brampton in 1870, and came to Farmington, Iowa, in May, 1877. Funeral services were held at the home at 2 p. m., August 27. Elder James McKiernan in charge, assisted by Elder M. H. Siegfried. Interment in Farmington Cemetery.

WICK.—Walter Wick died at the home of his parents in Ladd, Illinois, August 31, 1910, aged 21 years, 3 months, and 8 days. Deceased was born in Victoria, Knox County, Illinois. His parents located at Ladd when Walter was four years of age. He was an excellent young man and was devoted to his mother. He was buried from the Methodist church, Ladd, Illinois, September 3. Services were in charge of Elder Frank Izatt, of Taylorville, Illinois. Funeral sermon was delivered at 2 p. m., by Elder F. M. Cooper, of Plano, Illinois.

HANCE.—Edgar L. Hance died at Pecatonica, Illinois, August 21, 1910. Deceased was 46 years, 11 months, and 27 days old. He entered Union Law School, at Chicago, when twenty-one years of age,—graduating two years later. He followed the profession of law in the city where he graduated, until stricken by the disease that terminated his life. He leaves his wife, father, mother, one sister, and niece to mourn his departure. He was buried from his father's home, Pecatonica, Illinois, August 23, 1910. Funeral address was by Elder F. M. Cooper, of Plano, Illinois.

GREGSON.—Anthony Valentine, was born in Holy Island, England, February 5, 1818. With his family he moved to America in 1849. Came to Essex, Illinois, in 1861, where his wife died in 1888. July 11, 1889, he was united in marriage to Sr. Carry Gregson. He was a man of business all his life, also a man of deep religious principles, and was always hospitable to our elders when they visited us. For six months his brilliant mind had failed. Died in Englewood Hospital, Chicago, August 25, and was buried in Essex, Illinois. He was 92 years, 6 months, and 20 days old.

HILLEBRANT.—Sr. Susan Eleanor Hillebrant was born at Schenectady, New York, May 10, 1827, and died at Denison, Iowa, September 6, 1910. Miss Susan Eleanor Van Epps was of Dutch parentage, and her family record is traced back to the year 1620. She was married to Mr. Peter Hillebrant, near Albany, New York, in 1846. Nine children were born, two of them having died in early childhood. Seven remain to mourn the loss of a worthy mother, as follows: Mrs. Susan Chambers, Seattle, Washington; Mrs. Mary Tarry, Denison, Iowa; Peter Hillebrant, Denison, Iowa; Frank Hillebrant, Seattle, Washington; George Hillebrant, Oakland, California; Mrs. Emma Alexander, Dow City, Iowa; and Sr. Vina Goff, Pittsburg, Kansas. Sister Hillebrant was baptized at San Bernardino, California, in 1890, and has been a faithful member of the church ever since. Funeral services were conducted at the home, Denison, Iowa, in the presence of a goodly number of relatives and friends, Wednesday, September 7, by Elder Charles E. Butterworth. The remains were laid to rest in the Denison cemetery.

LOY.—Ollie Loy, of Kansas City, Missouri, was born July 2, 1882. She died September 6, 1910, of consumption, and was a firm believer of the latter day work. She was married to Tom Loy, in September, 1900. Her father and mother, Andrew and Elizabeth Johnson, belong to the church. Funeral sermon was preached to a goodly sized congregation by Elder J. C. Foss, assisted by Priest L. A. Fowler.

SCOVIL.—Loomis T. Scovil died at the home of his youngest daughter, Lottie E. Whitestone, of Sioux City, Iowa, April 10, 1910, at the age of 88 years, 7 months, and 19 days. He was at Kirtland in 1837, and viewed the temple, was with the Saints at Far West, and at Nauvoo. At the latter place he was married to Miss Elizabeth Cole. Both were members of the church, and came to Western Iowa at an early date, and entertained the first ministers of the Reorganization. He was baptized about 1862, by Elder W. W. Blair. To his union with Miss Cole there were born eleven children, all of whom are living except one who died in the civil war. He remained true to the gospel covenant till death. He was buried by the side of his wife at Sargeant Bluffs, Iowa, she having died about twenty years ago, since which time he has lived with his children. A good man has gone to rest.

CHANDLER.—Sr. Phebe Rebecca Chandler died of tumor from which she had suffered for several years, at the home of her son, Fred Chandler, in Des Moines, Iowa. The three living children, Brn. Fred and W. R. Chandler, the latter living at Lamoni, and Mrs. Medora Peters, of Saint Charles, Iowa, were present at her death. She was born in Oneida County, New York, September 8, 1832, and at death was within four days of 78 years of age. Her maiden name was Mason. She was married to William Chandler, who died several years ago, since which time she has lived with her children, who have cared for her faithfully. She was a most patient sufferer till death. Funeral services at the home of Bro. Fred Chandler, conducted by Elder J. F. Mintun. She was buried by the side of her husband at Cambridge, Iowa. She died a faithful member of the church, with which she had been identified for years.

The citizens of Madrid, on one occasion, refused to clean their streets because the dirt was the dirt of their ancestry. The Chinese farmer persisted for generations in plowing with a forked stick, because his fathers plowed that way. Ancestral worship is degrading and a positive hindrance to development when it becomes a dominant force in the thoughts and lives of men. We condemn it in those who have a definite system of ancestral worship. May it not be possible that we cling to some expressions and customs in our church for no other reason than that they were handed down to us from our fathers?

The writer is aware that it is true that there can be no new discoveries in theology, in gospel revelations, for God has given us the best and highest revelation of the gospel in the life and labors of the Incarnate One, but there may be new visions by men of gospel truth, there may be new conceptions.

The elemental aspects of the gospel in its application is twofold, human and divine. The divine side is perfect and needs not to change, but the human side is not perfect and does need sometimes to be changed to newer and more correct gospel truth. No church in its ecclesiastical government, forms or pronouncements, may claim to be perfect until it is ready to claim in fallibility for fathers of the church. We as a church know no infallible saints. Therefore, it may not be unreasonable, nor radical, nor revolutionary in any man to conclude that certain changes in our ecclesiasticism may be needed as the church progresses with the passing ages. —Texas Christian Advocate, April 7, 1910.

The Fear of Change.

The son of an old German farmer was getting the grain ready for mill. He made the astonishing discovery that the sack would ride as well on the horse's back by dividing the load as by putting a stone in one side and the grain in the other. His father's attention was triumphantly called to the improvement, but the old farmer exclaimed: "Hans, your vafer and your grandvater and your great-granvater vent to mill mit dot sthone in der sack, und vat was good enough for tem ish good enough for you. Put back dot sthone." Some men are constitutionally opposed to change. Whatever has been is, for them, right and good. They love the old house because it is old; they love old tools, old laws, old creeds. They have a distrust of any who make innovations.

But a way is not best merely because it is an old way. It may be that for a long time we have done a thing badly because we did not dare to change. We have gotten into ruts. Some one has said that a grave differs from a rut only in its depth. We are partially dead already when we are dead in progress. Do not be afraid of any change that promises better things. Make experiments boldly. It is better to make mistakes than to stagnate. Are we not disciples of him who saith, "Behold, I make all things new"?—The Sunday School Advocate.

The House of Studebaker.

The sturdy, thrifty Hollanders have been the progenitors of many men foremost to-day in the ranks of American captains of industry. Thomas Dreier has a strong and compelling story in Human Life (Boston) for September of the founders of a great industrial enterprise known in every hamlet in the land—the House of Studebaker.

Back in the eighteenth century it was that the first Studebaker set sail from the land of canals and windmills for the shores of America, and as far back as 1798 his descendants were wagon-builders. As the world moved, the Studebakers kept, if anything, a step or two in advance of the march of progress, and thereby proved their right to be considered captains of industry.

John Studebaker, the best wagon builder and blacksmith in his community in the early part of the last century, may be considered the corner stone of the present great house that bears his name. The heritage he left his sons was those bed-rock qualities of honesty, industry, courage, and progressiveness—mighty levers in the hands of modern world-movers of invention and business.

The inventors of the telegraph, the telephone, the submarine cable, and the various machines that minister to the needs of mankind are as truly and as grandly missionaries to the race as those who give their lives to enlightening the nations that sit in darkness. The inventors, the manufacturers and the distributors of the commodities of the world are instruments of destiny to bring mankind closer together, and the story of the rise of this great commercial House of Studebaker, and of its founders and builders, is fuller of romance and live human interest than anything the novelist's pen may attempt.

Mayor Gaynor Says:

(From William J. Gaynor's "The problem of efficient city government" in the September Century.)

"Corrections and improvements in government, as in all things, may not be done at once, but only patiently and gradually, and . . . charitably, explaining and teaching as you go."

"The great problem of all is to get the government of large cities into honest and competent hands. It is in this that we have long since signally failed."

"No one has the right to aspire to be the mayor of a city without having first qualified himself by studying law and government, and by practical experience therein."

"The chief obstacle to the nomination and election of fit men to city office is national and state party prejudice or bigotry carried into local politics."

"Nothing should influence the votes in a local election except the local questions of men and measures which are up for consideration."

"Government, like water, does not rise higher than its source."

A Lesson from a Burning Match.

A lighted match fell across a little chasm—as great a chasm to the inflamed match as the Colorado Canyon to a giant redwood. The flame was at one end; and as I watched that end turning to charred coal and ashes I looked for the whole match to crumble and fall through the opening. But no. The conflagration progressed slowly; it passed the center, it crept steadily to the opposite end, and only as the flame reached the far end did the remains (ashes and charred match) crumble and fall into the tiny abyss.

As it fell the moral dawned on me. Some men are of such tenacious fiber that they cling together till the whole of life has been burned out, and not till the very last of they drop out of sight or cease to give light from their tiny flame of life. The boys who are to burn that way in the far-off years of the future are the boys of pure thoughts, of temperate habits and steadfast purpose to-day. The women whose old age is to be tenacious of beauty and light to the next generation are the girls of to-day whose lives are full of sweetness, love, and spiritual power.—The Visitor.

What Marriage Should Mean.

A man who marries for the sake of what his wife can do for him is not doing what he ought to do for the woman he marries. That marriage so far as he is concerned begins as a failure, whatever it may come to be in time. A young man writes thoughtlessly to an acquaintance: "I expect to take a better half. I need some one to help me. I hope this young lady will prove a prize to me." The real question for that young man is whether he will prove a prize to the young lady. Marriage ought to mean to him a God-given opportunity for service to the woman he loves. To be one and not two, to live day by day the together life, instead of the apart lives; to cherish oneness of aim and faith and work; to give and not to get, in loving service each for the other,—that is marriage. A young man who thinks of marriage as anything less than this will be something far less than a prize to the woman he marries.—Sunday School Times.

"In Dreams We Are Always Reasoning."

Only to a few people there comes occasionally in dreams a dim realization of the unreality of the experience. "After all, it does not matter," they are able to say to themselves with more or less conviction. "This is only a dream." Thus one lady, dreaming that she is trying to kill three large snakes by stamping on them, wonders, while still dreaming, what it signifies to dream of snakes; and another lady, when she dreams that she is in any unpleasant position—about to be shot, for instance—often says to herself: "Never mind, I shall wake before it happens." This duality of dreaming consciousness is a manifestation, and the chief one, of what is called dissociation. In dissociation we have a phenomenon which runs through the whole of the dreaming life and is scarcely less fundamental than the process of fusion by which the imagery is built up. The fact that the reasoning of dreams is usually bad, is due partly to the absence of memory elements that would be present to waking consciousness, and partly to the absence of sensory elements to check the false reasoning which without them appears to us conclusive. That is to say, there is a process of dissociation, by which ordinary channels of association are temporarily blocked through exhaustion of the nervous elements, and the conditions prepared for the formation of the hallucination.—From "The logic of dreams," in The North American Review for September.

The man who can see nothing in the life of Jesus which nerves him to try to do something for the good of others does not know Jesus.

"Indian Autonomy."

A native of India, Saint Nihal Singh, thus writes: Considered from the viewpoint of salary, the natives of India are mere drawers of water and hewers of wood: regarded from the standpoint of exercising control over their own affairs, the Indians are little better than slaves. The laws are made for the people of Hindostan by the English, the natives having a limited share in the lawmaking, even under the neo-Morleyan reform scheme. The taxes are levied on the Indians by the English, the people of India having no voice in the taxation. The finances of Hindostan are spent by the English without the Indians exercising any control over their revenue which they have paid into the government treasury. The Indians do not have anything to say about their tariff. Even the universities of Hindostan are governmental affairs, in which the native is practically unrepresented. It is the virtual reversal of this state of affairs for which the East-Indian is agitating. Indian autonomy essentially means this: and the agitation in India is fated to continue so long as the majority of the governmental positions carrying the higher salaries and the executive, administrative and financial authority are not held by the natives of the land. Educated Indians urge that they are capable of efficiently discharging the duties connected with the responsible governmental positions. The controversy about Indian autonomy rages around this claim. Plainly interpreted, India's political aspirations mean the substitution of native in lieu of the present-day alien administrative agency, East-Indians not objecting to run their government under the guidance of the British.—From "Just what does India want politically?" in The North American Review for September.

The Angel of the Battlefield.

On the day of the great battle of Inkermann, Florence Nightingale and her nurses, thirty-seven in number, landed at Scutari. There were two miles of sick-beds; wards were rank with fever and cholera and the odor of undressed wounds. Into what Russell calls "this great temple of pain and foulness," moved the slight and delicate form of the English lady and her company of nurses. Kitchens were established, and intelligent routine took the place of the bungling red tape.

But all this was not accomplished without much of that friction which has ever accompanied the entrance of woman into new and wider fields of activity. Miss Nightingale had a terrible struggle. Surgeons and officers fought her every effort, but with the courage of a lion she fought back and held her own.

If there were no officer at hand with authority to unlock a storehouse she took with her a few Turks and stood by while they broke it open. Her organizing and executive ability were everywhere manifest. She brought comfort, succor, rest into the wards; she established laundries and kitchens for the hospitals, and herself found time to superintend them and their workers. She organized the work of the nurses and their assistants and had surgical appliances prepared and ready to meet emergencies. All day long and far into the night her work continued.

In company with the army chaplains she established a library and schoolroom, and she had evening lectures to amuse the convalescent men. She attended to the correspondence of the wounded soldiers, and in short was what the soldiers christened her, the "Angel of the Crimea."

MacDonald drew this picture of her as she went about her work in the great Scutari Hospital: "As her slender form glides quietly along each corridor, every poor fellow's face softens with gratitude at sight of her. When all the medical officers have retired for the night, and silence and darkness have settled down upon the miles of prostrate sick, she may be observed alone, with a little lamp in her hand, making her solitary rounds." There were miles of beds, thousands of sick men; she could not reach each one in a single round, but, said one poor fellow, "We could kiss her shadow as she passed."—Kate Upson Clark, in The Christian Herald.

A Still Unexplored Land.

In size Arabia is an immense country, for it is as large as all of the United States east of the Mississippi River, or larger than all of the countries of Europe combined, with the exception of Russia and Scandinavia. In that country, almost without rivers, and until recently without railroads, and where the only ship which sails over the great desert sea is the camel, plodding along at scarcely more than two miles an hour, it is a journey of eighty days along the Red Sea coast from Suez to Aden, or it is a journey of forty days from the Red Sea to the Persian Gulf, or to follow about the coast line of the country, as an Arab sometimes does, it is a journey of an entire year.

While travelers have frequently penetrated the desert south of Palestine, or crossed its northern part from Damascus to Bagdad, but two or three explorers have succeeded in reaching the city of Mecca, and the South Arabian city of Sana, which was the home of the Queen of Sheba. As yet no Christian has succeeded in traversing the land from the north to the south, from Damascus or Bagdad to Aden. Arabia, then, presents a field for exploration more extensive, more promising in valuable results, and perhaps more dangerous, than any other portion of the world.—Prof. E. J. Banks, in The Christian Herald.

The Century Company will issue this fall a gift-book edition of James Whitcomb Riley's "A Hoosier Romance," with pictures in color and in black and white by John Wolcott Adams. The text will be printed against a background of delicate pearl-gray, each page showing a typical Hoosier farm scene.

Success of County Option.

The statistics, published elsewhere in this paper, concerning the operation of the county local option law are certainly surprising and convincing. During seven months in 1909 with saloons there were 102 arrests for intoxication and 221 commitments to jail for all offenders. For the same time in 1910, with the saloons gone, there were only eleven arrests for intoxication and only fifty-five arrests for all kinds of crimes. Such facts are arguments that no "wet" advocate can answer. They should shut the mouths of all carping critics and weak apologists for the saloon.

We often hear the statement that there is more liquor sold and more drunkenness under a "dry" administration than under a "wet" one. The above records disprove this fact conclusively. There is no question but that some liquor is illegally sold, that blind tigers and bootleggers are in operation. But the amount of this business is greatly exaggerated. It is the policy of the "wets" to make the option law odious, and so they have encouraged and aided the violaters of the law and then howled long and loud about the failure of local option. The people should not be deceived by such talk. Conditions are better in this county now than ever under the saloons. Jail and other expenses have been cut off; our business men are having better trade than ever before and losing less in dead beat accounts; our young men are free from the temptation of the open saloon and none of them are seen drinking or intoxicated. In fact, we believe there is a general uplift in the business and moral conditions of this city and county. The idea of going back to the open saloon will not be considered for a moment by the best people of this county, irrespective of party affiliation.—Noblesville Daily Ledger.

Let reverence of law be taught in schools and colleges, be written in primers and spelling books, be published from pulpits and proclaimed in legislative houses, and enforced in the courts of justice; in short, let it become the political religion of the nation.—Abraham Lincoln.

The Honor of Washington.

After the Revolution Congress voted to Washington a statue and a large sum of money. He at once declared that he would not accept a single cent. They reminded him that he had served eight and a half years without pay, and plead earnestly to win his consent, but in vain. Then the sum which had been voted was invested by order of Congress in some government undertaking in Washington's name, and he was told, after the deeds were made out, that now it was too late to refuse—he would simply have to accept it. But he still refused inexorably. It was a gift, but he felt it to be like a bribe. The whole nation seemed in a conspiracy to heap riches upon him; but it could not be done without his consent, and he said "No" to the last. He may have acted unwisely, according to the modern view, which is unfortunately more commer-

$100.00 Gold Bonds, bearing interest at five per cent

Dated August 1, 1909

Due August 1, 1914

Redeemable after due notice is given by the Herald Publishing House.

These bonds are offered to the purchaser at par.

The interest coupons call for payment semiannually—on February 1st and August 1st.

Both principal and interest payable at the State Savings Bank of Lamoni, Iowa.

These Bonds are backed by the very best of security, consisting of assets of $100,000, and afford the purchaser a chance to invest with perfect assurance as to the soundness of the investment.

Note some of the facts about our bonds.

(a) They are of small denomination, thus enabling those of very moderate means to become purchasers.

(b) We ask no premium—your interest is clear.

(c) We have issued only 250 bonds—$25,000 dollars' worth—all of which goes toward payment of our debt incurred in adding improvements since the fire.

cial than patriotic; but he won the nation's undying respect and admiration for his determination not to make money out of his official position. His attitude is in the sharpest contrast to that of some of the legislators and officials of these days, who are keenly alive to the opportunities that arise to enrich themselves secretly. With Congress and several of our State legislatures investigating wholesale bribery charges and other forms of official corruption, we are reminded of the fact that we have fallen on degenerate days, as far as the standard of public honor and official integrity is concerned.—Selected.

Be not proud and do not be fond of fine clothes. The peacock has a very gaudy plumage and proud gait; yet he is a very disagreeable bird.

Individual Citizenship.

We are proud of our schools and of the trained intelligence they give our children the opportunity to acquire. But what we care for most is the character of the average man, for we believe that if the citizen is sufficiently high, if he possesses those qualities which make him worthy of respect in his family life and in his work outside, as well as the qualities which fit him for success in the hard struggle of actual existence—that if such is the character of our individual citizenship, there is literally no height of triumph unattainable in this vast experiment of government by, of, and for a free people.—Theodore Roosevelt.

There is to be a new book of Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, eighty-one years young last February, this fall, a collection of short stories of mystery. The book will be one of The Century Company's October issues.

How to Help the Minister.

Make it a rule to pray before each sermon that he may preach such doctrine, and in such a simple, forcible and convincing manner, that sinners will be compelled to forsake their sins and cleave to the cross of Jesus Christ.

2. "During the sermon make a note of any particularly helpful remark, and speak about it at the after-meeting, or at the next prayer meeting. This will encourage him, prove that his words are falling into good ground and bringing forth fruit.

3. "If you do not get a chance to thank him personally for the blessings you have received from his day's work, or to testify to it in the after-meeting, tell his wife, and she will see that it reaches him.

4. "Talk about him and his work to your associates in business and social life, and so increase his popularity and thus fill the church.

5. "Search out the unconverted who sat nearest to you, and by following up any convincing point which the pastor made, seek to clinch the truth, and bring it home to them directly.

6. "When any thought occurs to you for the upbuilding of the church, do not allow it to die from suffocation. Give it air, tell it to the pastor, then help him to put it into effect, if he deems it advisable.

7. "Call on him frequently, not to hinder his time, but to ascertain if you can be of any use to him—if he wants some work carried out which he can not do, and you can.

8. "Do not bother him with idle tales but replenish the storehouse of his brain with any especially interesting bits of Christian experience which come to you from time to time.

9. "Whenever you see anything in the newspapers in praise of his work, or taken from his sermons, cut the items out, write the name of the paper and date upon them, and either take or mail them to him. All pastors are helped by the knowledge that they are noticed by the press.

Citizenship the Test.

The perpetuation of the republic depends on good government in low as well as high places.

Good government of the city is as essential to the future of the republic as good government of the nation, and without good citizenship there can not be good government.

Men must take as much interest in the government of the city as they do in the government of their own household, they must be prepared to defend one as passionately as the other against the influences of the corrupt.—Lincoln Steffens.

LIFE IN LAMONI.

THE HOMELY YET WHOLESOME PHILOSOPHY OF THE SMALL TOWN.

On occasions too numerous to count we have taken part in a dialogue something like this:

"Do you live in Lamoni?"

"Yes."

"How large a city is it?"

"Oh, it has about eighteen hundred inhabitants."

"Is that all! Any street cars?"

"No; we don't need them. We can reach any place in town by the simple process of putting one foot in front of the other until we arrive. We never have the vexation of waiting on some street corner twenty-five minutes in order to ride ten minutes."

But our interrogator shakes his head. If he does not say as much, it is as plain as can be that he feels sorry for one who lives in a little "one horse town" like that. He never could be satisfied in such a small place. What is there to do? Where do you spend your evenings?

Such is the attitude of the man who feels that one is not alive unless he is surrounded by miles and miles of piled up brick and mortar. We are duly humbled when we are told that the entire population of Iowa could move into New York City to-morrow and never be noticed. But then, the entire population of Iowa will not do any such thing.

What has the small town to offer one that will make life worth while? What is there anywhere that makes life worth while? Looked at from the outside, many places have a very forbidding aspect, and after all, our interrogator has but voiced a feeling that we have entertained regarding dwellers in other places. Looking from the car windows as we whirl through the suburban districts of some large city we note the rows of small and shabby tenements, all much alike, each with its little, disorderly back yard, its postage stamp lawn, its general air of squalor. We shudder at the idea of living in such a place. Again we note, in the popular residence district, some big and imposing but cold and forbidding pile of granite or sandstone, by the grace of God called a home, to us no more inviting than a penitentiary. Who could live there and be happy?

Out on the barren plains of eastern Colorado we note a little dry goods box of a shack; on the prairies of Dakota, as level as a floor, we find a little weather-bleached cluster of houses surrounding one general store. How do people live there? Yet in all these places we will discover, if we inquire, men, women and children who are very happy and contented.

The same thing that makes us happy in surroundings that do not appeal to others makes others happy in surroundings that do not appeal to us. That thing is human interest. You can not find out what makes people happy by looking in at their front windows; you must get into their homes to learn the secret.

To illustrate: My neighbor, Bro. A, is married. He thinks more of his wife than he does of any other woman in the world, or of any other dozen women. He would rather spend the evening with her than to entertain some painted chorus girl at a midnight supper in some swell restaurant. Bro. A's wife thinks just as much of him as he does of her. Her affections are as fixed and unwavering as the north star. Their house is an affair of only four rooms, and needs painting. They live in Lamoni where there are no street cars. Yet they find Lamoni a pretty good place in which to live; their home is the best place in the world. Human interest, you see.

My neighbor, Bro. B, is similarly situated, only in addition he has a boy that he and his wife are trying to raise up to be a God-fearing and pure minded man. Neighbor B does not find Lamoni a slow town. The past ten years have gone by so fast that it makes him sober to think about it. And, by the way, when that boy goes down town he does not have to pass a half mile of open saloon doors. When he comes home a little late at night he may have been stealing water melons, which is bad enough, but he has not visited the red light district, there to contract some foul and awful disease.

Neighbor C, who is also a "brother," is situated much as neighbors A and B, only that he and his wife have three boys and two girls. They are in love with life, and Lamoni looks good to them. One of their children is in college, two are in the high schools, the rest are in the grades, moving up a grade each year.

H. G. Smith

Neighbors A, B, and C, also have their circle of friends, and their few chosen, especial cronies. They meet these friends most every day for a few words. They know their next door neighbors? If Bro. C observes his neighbor in the act of mowing the weeds alongside his lot with a new scythe, he is not afraid to hail him with: "Look out, Dave, or you will cut your legs off." Then Dave laughs and tries to get it back on Bro. C. Human interest again. If they lived in Chicago in the same flat they would pass each other in the hallway with a cold and glassy stare.

Human interest is a great thing. Love is the great lubricant. Rob life of fellowship and affection, and nothing worth while is left. Heart strings are the only strings that bind and do not chafe. They are the cords that tie a man to his home town. If there are those in Lamoni who love no one and who are loved by no one, they probably are unhappy, but they would be unhappy anywhere. The man who loves no one and whom no one loves does not need to die to go to hell,—he is there now.

So these little, humdrum, drab-colored existences, (as they appear to the casual observer) are glorified and made jubilant to the participants by human interest,—love of husband or wife or sweetheart, son or daughter, brother or sister, or chosen friend. Long live Brn. A, B, and C; they are the salt of the earth, the dorsal vertebrae of the nation, the pillars of the church. Their lives are clean, wholesome, and useful. They are mentioned only as examples. The golden thread runs through the lives of D, E, F, G, H, I, and J.

Then, again, when one is busy and enjoys his work, he is quite contented, as a rule, even in a small town. Practically everybody in Lamoni is busy. We have no leisure class, excepting infants and aged people, and one of these, an old great-grandmother in Israel, eighty-nine years old, has just finished piecing a "nine-patch quilt," and is feeling pretty well, thank you. Brother Gaulter, ninety-three years of age, can still do more work in a day than some folks ever did in a month. Our men are doctors, lawyers, merchants, carpenters, masons, mechanics, farmers, editors, preachers, what not, as the case may be, and are busy enough to keep out of mischief. Our women are not much vexed with the servant problem. They know how to do their own work and are not ashamed of the fact. They can cook anything, from ordinary baked beans to angel food cake that almost suggests the rustle of wings. (See Graceland College Receipt Book.)

Lamoni, like many other small towns, is an ideal place in which to cultivate interesting and profitable hobbies. Neighbor D goes in for fancy poultry. He has as fine a flock of blooded birds as you can find. He takes a good deal of pleasure in their care, belongs to several progressive poultry associations, and has won many ribbons, cups, and badges. His family has fresh eggs for breakfast at seasons when our interrogator is eating cold storage eggs of the edition of 1902. Neighbor E keeps one or two fine Jersey cows. His children eat good sweet butter on home made bread. They have cream on their oatmeal and plenty of milk to drink. They do not know how formaldehyde tastes. Neighbor F has a fine garden in which he cultivates sweet corn, tomatoes, carrots, egg plants, okra, celery, string beans, and sundry other vegetables. He enjoys working in this garden of an evening, and takes as much pleasure in watching these vegetables grow as his city cousin might take in a promenade down Broadway, inspecting thousands of passing bipeds whom he does not know and who do not know him.

Now we come to the religious life of the community, and here we strike one force that draws many to Lamoni and keeps them there. Here they find the fellowship that they crave with other members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Here they are entirely free to worship the God of their fathers after the way that some call heresy. The church is their rallying point; and as the expression goes, there is always something going on at the church,—on Sunday, preaching and prayer services; and during the week, prayer services, choir practice, Religio, teachers' meeting, and other services; besides entertainments, lectures, musicals, etcetera.

By way of dissipation we can go to town of a Saturday evening and listen to the band concert. We have a very good band. Perhaps it is not in the same class with the band that plays for you in the big city park, but then we like to hear our band play. You see most of the band boys grew up in Lamoni. The town produced them. It is town talent. In a way we are tooting those horns, or rather they toot them vicariously,—these band boys toot for the whole town. We know them. But your band perhaps is a foreign importation that toots for a cash consideration.

Then there is the intellectual life. The great dailies, the standard magazines, the reviews, convey just as much intelligence to us in Lamoni as they do to our brothers in the Hub of the Universe. We read just as good books and enjoy the mental stimulus just as keenly. We try to keep in touch with world movements. And we have our own local, intellectual atmosphere due to the presence of three good town schools with their instructors, Graceland College, with its faculty and student body of bright young men and women, a large number of resident ministers of the gospel, and many workers in Sunday school and Religio who are keen students.

Visiting lecturers, clergymen of other churches, and political speakers who speak here, invariably comment on the fact that they have had an unusually appreciative and critical audience. It pleases us to think that they tell the truth. Our people are naturally critical. They watch the speaker, and if he makes a failure or a mistake it is noted instantly. But if he makes a good point they are right there with their appreciation; he does not have to wait a week for it to soak in.

Roosevelt says that boys and girls are the best crop that Iowa produces. We believe that our main crop grades up pretty well. Thirteen students from Lamoni are doing work in the State University of Iowa at the present time. We do not believe that there is another town of the same size that has so many representatives in its state university, or in any other institution of higher learning of equal standing. Can New York or Chicago or San Francisco produce as many university men in proportion to their total number of inhabitants? Not yet; too many slums, tenements, sweat shops. Lest we be misunderstood by advocates of Graceland, let us state here that, with perhaps three exceptions, on which we will not comment, these students are taking studies that they could not get at Graceland,—for instance, four are studying law, another is taking postgraduate work, etc. Some day we hope that Graceland will be equipped to carry students as far as they care to go.

In a limited way we have analyzed life in Lamoni to show how one can be happy, busy, and very much alive in a small town. Of course the cities have attractions and advantages that we do not have. They also have other things that have led one writer on economics and education to term them "great sores upon the body politic."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

COLLEGE DAY, SUNDAY, OCTOBER 2.

College Day, the day set apart by General Conference when a collection should be taken in all the branches of the church for the benefit of Graceland College, comes this year on Sunday, October 2. Branch presidents can very materially help this cause by announcing this matter at the meetings between now and that date, so that all will be prepared to assist. Any of the Saints who can not attend a branch meeting on that day can send their offering to the college treasurer, F. B. Blair, Lamoni, Iowa.

It is very desirable that the collection be large enough to pay all of the running expenses, so that the Temporary Endowment Fund can be applied on the college indebtedness. It is very encouraging to see the liberality of some of the Saints toward Graceland, but the thing most needed is not one or two liberal donations, but a united effort by all, and the results will do us all good. The college is reaching out for the young people of the church and encouraging them to better prepare themselves for life's struggle at a school where they are surrounded by the influences of the church. Why convert strangers and neglect our own? If we can save our children the church will multiply in numbers very fast. We want the benefits to be had at Graceland brought within the reach of every boy and girl in the church. To do this we need the financial and moral support of every Saint. Will you help accomplish so worthy an aim? Remember, Sunday, October 2, gives an opportunity to all.

In gospel bonds,

F. B. BLAIR, Treasurer.

CORRECTION.

In the article from the committee of seventy, occurring on page 565 of the HERALD for June 8, 1910, there is a very misleading error, in the quotation from the minutes of the General Assembly of the Church, held August 17, 1835. In the first column, in the next to the last line of the next to the last paragraph, the name of John Whitney occurs as testifying to the truth of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as reported by the committee appointed in 1834. No such person is named in the minutes as they occur in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants of 1835. It should be John Whitmer. This may have been a mistake of the committee in transcribing the minutes or it may have been an error in copying or printing.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Church members may be interested in knowing how our aged Saints fare at the Saints' Home. Monday of last week Pres. F. M. Smith and the Associate Editor dropped in at the Home and took dinner with the old people. They did not give sufficient warning of their approach to admit of extra preparation. The dinner was well cooked, well served, and there was plenty of it. It did not have a boarding house flavor, but rather the good taste of home cooking. They were served with potatoes, green corn in two styles, baked beans, a salad of cucumbers and onions, their choice of brown bread, white bread, or biscuits, with good sweet butter; and their choice of water, milk, or coffee. The inmates are comfortably situated, excepting that the crowded condition of the Home makes it necessary for some of the men to sleep in the basement. Sister Dancer, as matron, is always kind, considerate, and patient. It would be very difficult to fill her place. She does the work of the Master quietly and without expectation of earthly reward. The management is hampered by lack of funds with which to repair the building and outbuildings.

It is stated that the late Prof. William James, of Harvard, authority on questions of psychology, was interested in Spiritualism, and that prior to his death he expressed a determination to communicate with his friends after his demise, if possible. Certain Spiritualists now claim to be in communication with him. Whether tests were prearranged by which his identity could be established we do not know. However, communications received so far are decidedly noncommittal, not to say evasive, and fall exceedingly flat. M. S. Ayer, a Boston Spiritualist, claims to have heard from Professor James, at second hand through another spirit. Spirit No. 2 gave no credentials. The message follows:

"I am at peace, at peace (here followed some words that could not be distinguished) with myself and all mankind. I have awakened to a life far beyond my highest conception while a denizen of the earth. Tell my brothers that I will transmit a message through this instrument that will prove my individuality when I can manifest more clearly than at this time. I did not realize how difficult it would be to manifest from this plant of life to the mortal plane. There is much, very much for me to learn and many conditions to overcome."

The Little Sioux, Iowa, reunion, just closed, was quite successful. There were about sixty tents on the ground. Several visitors from Lamoni were present, including Bro. and Sr. Heman C. Smith, Bro. and Sr. J. W. Wight, Bro. and Sr. Thomas Moore, and Sr. Jessie Morant, Sr. Laura Thompson, Bro. H. Hale Smith, Sr. Inez Smith, and Elbert A. Smith.

REVELATION.

Tune, "The story of wonderful love."

'Twas Daniel of old to whom God did unfold,
That his kingdom on earth would appear
In latter days, when 'twould be set up again,
All the faithful to bless and to cheer.

Chorus:

O! bright is the gleam of this marvelous stream,
Flowing from the pure fountain above,
Revealing God's will, and his power to fulfill
Every promise of wonderful love.

Long ages have past, and his word has at last
Been fulfilled to our souls' great delight,
For the angel has flown, as to John it was shown,
And has banished for ever our night.

Our pæans of praise to the Father we'll raise
For the glorious work he's begun,
Let angels proclaim, with hosannas his fame
And his will now and ever be done.

JAMES L. EDWARDS.

NORTH WEYMOUTH, MASSACHUSETTS.

JESUS, LOVER OF MY SOUL.

Filled with a weariness and pain,
Scarcely strong enough to pray,
In this twilight hour I sit—
Sit and sing my doubt away.

O'er my broken purposes,
Ere the coming shadows roll,
Let me build a bridge of song:
"Jesus, lover of my soul."

"Let me to thy bosom fly."
How the words my thoughts repeat;
To thy bosom, Lord, I come,
Though unfit to kiss thy feet.

Once I gathered sheaves for thee,
Dreaming I could hold them fast;
Now I can but idly sing;
"Oh, receive my soul at last."

I am weary of my fears,
Like a child when night comes on,
In the shadow, Lord, I sing:
"Leave, oh, leave me not alone."

Through the tears I still must shed,
Through the evil yet to be,
Though I falter while I sing,
"Still support and comfort me."

"All my trust on thee is stayed."
Does the rhythm of thy song,
Softly falling on my heart,
Make its pulses firm and strong;

And is this thy perfect peace
Now descending while I sing,
That my soul may sleep to-night,
"Neath the shadow of thy wing"?

"Thou of life the fountain art,"
As I slumber on thy breast,
And I sing myself to sleep—
Sleep and death alike are rest.

Through the shadows overpast,
Through the shadows yet to be,
Let the ladder of my song
"Rise to all eternity."

Note by note its silver bars,
May my soul in love ascend,
Till I reach the highest round,
In thy kingdom without end.

Not impatiently I sing,
Though I stretch my hands and cry,
"Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly."

GRACELAND'S INDUSTRIAL DEPARTMENT.

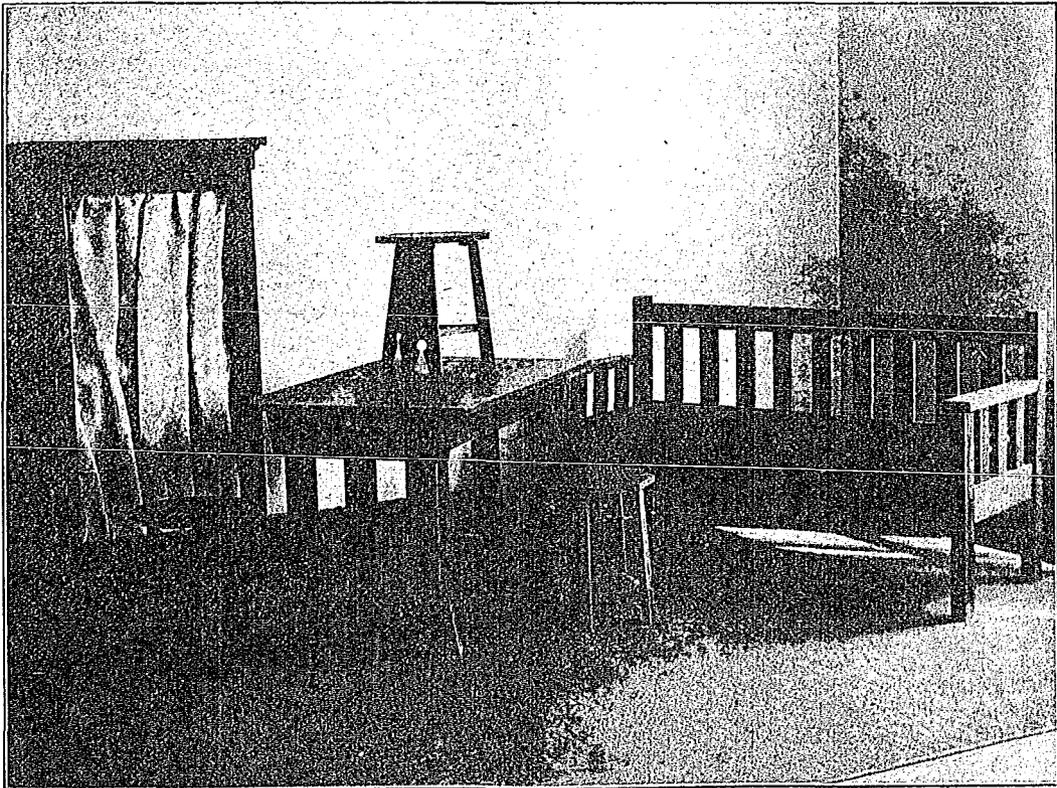

In the past year there has been added to the list of occupations open to young men in the Industrial Department, our planing mill and furniture factory.

The previous manual training equipment, including benches, hand tools, lathes and saw, made a good beginning for the shop.

The increasing and imperative demand for occupation for young men, made development along some practical line necessary. An appeal to friends of our industrial movement in various States, especially in Michigan, secured funds with which a planer, jointer, and swing saw, were purchased and cles on the market, but at present it is difficult to finance such a scheme. For the present we shall be glad to make to order any article within our reach, desired by those who are willing to patronize our industry.

When desired, articles will be so constructed as to be readily "knocked down" for shipment, the freight rates being much lower than on crated furniture. In every case, each article will be accompanied with careful instructions for setting up. The finish is a rich, velvety, mission stain, any color ordered. No shellac or varnish is used, so there is no danger of scratching or marring. An occasional application of any good furniture wax will keep the finish in excellent condition. The upholstering is of the high-installed. This added materially to the scope of our manual training courses, and at once allowed us to bring in two young men, who practically earned their way for the year in shop work.

The accompanying illustration represents the type of furniture produced. These pieces were purchased by the college board, and placed in the new music studio of the college. The construction is all hand work, and on the mission order, for the production of which we are fairly well equipped. The number of young men whom we can employ is limited only by the sale of our product.

We plan to put a line of desirable, ready made arti-est order in all cases, the quality of material used depending upon the price of the article. We will finish in varnish if you desire, or finish ready for varnish and let you put it on yourself, which would eliminate much danger in transportation.

We have now on hand five taborets, similar to those in the illustration, price, knocked down and packed ready to ship, $2 each. We have also a library table, the exact counterpart of the one illustrated, but in a lighter stain, for $16.

We want to employ two young men, or more, the coming year, but we must first find sale for our product. Our prices are as low as the regular retail prices, quality of goods considered. We guarantee every article to be as represented. Let us know your needs and we will promptly tell you whether we can do your work or not. We will submit plans and quote you a price on "made to order" articles.

Purchase from the Industrial Department, and you not only get good value for your money, but you help industrious and needy young men to get an education; and at the same time you aid in establishing an industrial Zion. Address all communications to C. B. Woodstock, Director.

THE EVANGELIZATION OF THE WORLD.—PART 2.

BY JOHN C. GRAINGER.

Charles W. Eliot, president of Harvard University, in a discourse on religion, speaks of the efforts of uninspired men to interpret inspired writings. I quote Professor Eliot because his remarks have a bearing on our subject:

Then let us always be careful to observe the distinction between a mystery—a genuine mystery—and a mystification. That is a very important distinction. God has surrounded us with mysteries; but it is man that has made mystifications. There are real mysteries in the conduct of the universe at which we must look bravely and resignedly, with humble minds. Such are useless pain, the sufferings of the innocent, the shortness of human life, the broken career, and premature death. These are real mysteries, in the presence of which we must often be dumb. But there are many things in this world that are called mysteries which, in fact, are only human mystifications; and among them are the chief theological doctrines built up by men round about the teachings of Jesus. I refer, of course, to such purely human inventions as the doctrines of transubstantiation, justification by faith, the Trinity, and the numerous other theological devices of human logic applied to premises altogether of human selection. Give a very fallible but opinionated creature the power to select his premises, and then to apply to them his own logic, and we must not be surprised if he often arrives at a mystification or a paradox which he erects into a dogma. Therefore let us keep clearly in our own minds the distinction between a genuine mystery and a mystification.

After reviewing the history of the Lutheran Church in Germany, and of the Reformed Church in Switzerland, up to the year 1817, in his recent tract, The Evangelical Church, David Bruening continues thus:

It was a great misfortune for the young Protestant Church, that its leaders in the years following the Reformation paid more attention to this old dispute, (about the Lord's Supper), than its importance in the Bible scheme of salvation warranted. As is often the case in the affairs of men, trivialities were insisted upon, while essential things were neglected. For while the reformers admitted that the points on which their opinions diverged were of minor weight, and each conceded that a man could be saved even though he held the opposing view, their successors placed these differences in the very foreground, and orthodoxy was made the prime condition for salvation. It fills us with sadness to note, that the Lutheran and Reformed churches were not only divided in opinion, but that an outspoken and bitter antagonism developed between them.

Each claimed to be the "only saving church." Those who disagree with them were termed lost, the Lutherans condemning the Reformed and vice versa. They hurled all manner of abuse at each other and the very pulpits in the churches were desecrated by their heated and intemperate language. The zeal for the purity of doctrine was great, but the love of God and the fellow-man was but weak. The rabies theologorum, the fury of the theologians, made the Word of God almost as scarce in the land as it had been prior to the Reformation. There was much dispute but little preaching. In the interest of truth it must be conceded, that the leaders of the church in that dark time were theologians of the head,—and will anybody deny that they were hard ones?—rather than the loving heart.

But while this froth appeared on the surface, there was a strong undercurrent of piety in the church. The number was great of those who deplored the lamentable quarrel and hoped that God would soon effect that union for which many had prayed ever since the Reformation. Nor were there lacking those who endeavored to reconcile the old difference. But not till the year 1817 were any of these attempts successful. And then again, as in the case of the almost successful conference at Marburg, it was not a theologian, who became the human instrument of God to bring the controversy to a close, but a pious, God-fearing king. It was Frederick William III of Prussia, whom God had selected for this office. Thus, in the year 1817, the third centennial of the posting of the ninety-five theses by Luther on the church door at Wittenberg, Frederick William III of Prussia succeeded in bringing together a number of the most prominent preachers of his kingdom and in having a book of worship compiled which could be used in churches that had been Lutheran and Reformed. And no sooner had the initial step been taken, than congregation after congregation joined the rapidly growing ranks of the Evangelical Church, for that was the name of the new church. From principality to principality the movement spread, till soon the whole German empire had heard of it and its churches were to be found in most of the cities, villages, and hamlets of the whole land.

Men and women wept with very joy that at last the word of God was restored to its rightful position and the learned disquisitions and impassioned invective of the so-called orthodox preachers debarred from the pulpits.

And leaving the barren wastes of theological discussion, the Evangelical Church entered the much more promising, long neglected field of active service of God and the fellow-men. The church became a missionary church. Foreign lands heard the good news of the crucified One, and the sheep from the other folds were brought in one by one to the great Good Shepherd. Schools, hospitals, homes for the aged, orphan asylums, and many other charitable institutions sprang up as testimonials to the active love of Christ, which recognized in every needy brother an opportunity to serve the Christ himself. Poetry, ever dear to the German heart, was again taken into the service of Christ, and hymns incomparable for depth of sentiment and beauty of form told of a love-too great for ordinary speech. And no man will gainsay the statement that it was the Evangelical Church that saved the day for God's cause during the cynical, chilling time of rationalism just past!

But on what ground was the union effected? Ah, it was simply done. The Bible was that ground. This Bible, the revelation of God's goodness, was made the only arbiter of faith. Whatever was not taken from the Bible was esteemed as of little consequence, no matter how brilliant in conception or presentation. But scant attention was paid to the results of speculation and Christian philosophy. On the sure foundation of God's word the new church was grounded. And to this day the Evangelical Church stands on this immovable foundation, as witness the following declaration of our principles: The Evangelical Church holds that the Holy Scriptures of the Old and the New Testament are the only and infallible guide to faith and practice. We accept the interpretation of the Holy Scriptures as laid down in the symbolical books of the Lutheran and Reformed churches, in so far as they agree. Principal among these symbolical books are Luther's Catechism, the Augsburg Confession, and the Heidelberg Catechism. In the points on which these books disagree, we rely entirely on the passages of the Holy Scriptures relating to the same, and thus avail ourselves of the liberty of conscience, which characterizes the Evangelical Church.

These principles were brought over from Germany by our forefathers. Though they left behind them home and fatherland, they took their faith, their dearest and most precious possession, with them. And in the land of the politically free they planted the church of those whom Christ has by his truth made spiritually free. But though we give scope to the individual, constraining the conscience of no man in the non-essentials of faith, yet we are no more a church of license than our Government is one of anarchy. For we are limited in the exercise of our liberty by the healthful restraint of the Bible. Be it said again, the word of God is our standard of faith. This is evidenced by our name, the Evangelical, the Gospel Church. Others may call themselves Lutheran for a man; Reformed for an incident in history; Episcopal or Presbyterian for a form of church government, or Baptist for one of Christ's sacraments,—we know nothing superior to the Bible, and the whole of it. And calling ourselves for the very heart of the Bible, we recognize the sway and power of the Bible as the God-given guide to salvation.

But why have Luther's Catechism, the Augsburg Confession, and the Heidelberg Catechism at all? Isn't the Bible sufficient? Yes, the Bible would be sufficient were all men unprejudiced and single-minded in their endeavors to find the truth and the whole truth therein stated. But so much that is false and erroneous has been taught about the Bible;—in the course of the centuries past the sacred book has been interpreted to suit so many men's idle whims and perverted notions;—parts of it have so frequently been disconnected from the whole and made to fit into the pet scheme of some misled teacher, that it is necessary to have some general interpretation of the salient truths of the Bible. And the above books contain the interpretation which we accept. And though they are old, there is no necessity for their revision or displacement. They were written in the time of great light from God. They contain all that is necessary to refute the errors of that time and the times preceding. And since the mind of man runs in ruts, whatever has disquieted or alarmed the church since that time, can easily be recognized as an old fallacy in a new garb. "There is nothing new under the sun," in the line of fallacious teachings alleged to be based on the Bible! The ingenuity of the Evil One has long ago exhausted itself in this direction. And in these books we have the Bible doctrine as free from error, misunderstandings, or imperfection as man can make it. Therefore we hold to them, placing them next to, but below the Bible in point of importance, in the matter of the regulation of our faith. And as proof for our allegiance to the Bible, we claim the privilege of going back to the precious word itself in those points in which these books do not perfectly tally with one another.

As is evident, our Evangelical Church thus is composed of people of Lutheran and of Reformed inclination, but joined in that harmony of spirit which the Psalmist commends to all in Psalm 133, "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" Nor is our union a cloaked disunion. We do not need to preserve a semblance of unity in our church by muzzling our members or by throttling their consciences. Those of Lutheran inclination among us do not look askance at those of our people of Reformed inclination, and vice versa. Realizing that the differences are on points non-essential to salvation, we not only tolerate each other, but respect each other so much the more highly as we note the earnest endeavor of our fellows to find the truth. And while we do not encourage debate on the points of variance between the Lutheran and Reformed doctrine, we do not evade it, where it can be entered and carried on in the truth-seeking spirit. For all things are ours: Paul and Peter, Luther and Zwingli, Melancthon and Calvin; but Christ being all in all, these, where they diverge, can not divide us. And in a spirit of unfeigned submission to the word of God, we hold to Christ above all and present to God and the world a people of single purpose: heaven; of single faith: Christ; and of simple love to all men. Nothing could be plainer and simpler; nothing greater and more glorious.

And happy are we to note, that these differences which once divided the church in Europe are much less prominent to-day than they formerly were. For there in free America a new generation is growing up which has buried the arms of religious warfare. Nor are we busy about keeping their grave green. Let others invoke the thunder of God upon those who believe not as they would dictate, we would rather emulate the example and follow the precept of the sanctified John, whose exhortation is: "Little children, love one another!" And what gratification to note, that the evangelical spirit has forged its way into wider fields of activity, in that the efforts of many Christians all over the globe are to-day directed towards reaching that ground, so long familiar to us, toleration and coöperation in the cause of God.

May his kingdom come! And when eventually the grand day shall dawn on which the desire of Christ will be gratified, "Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are," we believe, in all humility be it said, that the Evangelical Church in America will be counted among those forces that have helped to bring about this happy union of the hearts of all that love the eternal Christ.

The Saint Louis Republic, May 28, 1909, under the caption "Righteousness by compulsion," touches on our subject. Speaking of the Presbyterian General Assembly in its recent session at Denver:

The fact remains, however,—and in this is seen the secret of the downfall of heathenism before Christianity—that no society was ever legislated out of wickedness into righteousness by the severity of penalties and the enforced observance of times and seasons. The history of Rome is the classic example of this. The censors and moralists had the whole force of the Empire behind them in their attempts to secure purity of morals; they affixed rewards to good actions and punished evil—and Rome went steadily down hill.

How, then, does true religion work? By a positive enthusiasm. If a baseball game on Sunday is immoral you can never cure the evil by laws against it. Fill the man with a great positive religious enthusiasm and the things inimical to religion will wither away and die in its presence.

Ian Maclaren (John Watson) in "Respectable sins":

Sin lies not in being accomplished, but in yielding to temptation, and, as a rule, we fall because we have prepared ourselves to fall. One may be tempted either on his own ground, in which case he is likely to stand, or on the enemy's ground, when he will likely be overcome. When a young fellow tells you that he dare not leave his room for an evening lest a
