During the afternoon, Brother Walter took a bad turn. We administered to him with no results. The doctor informed Sister Smith that the only chance was an operation. He called a professor in and Brother Smith was taken to the hospital at midnight and immediately operated upon. We were permitted to see him in the afternoon after his operation and found him in very bad shape. Peritonitis had set in and his life was held in the balance from then till Monday night. In the meantime the branch officers had consulted and Monday was set apart as a day of fasting and prayer and a meeting on Monday night to be devoted to prayer. The Elk Mills Branch was asked to join us and they did so. The meetings were both good, and while we were laying the case before the Great Physician, three earthly physicians were consulting together with little or no hope of recovery. But we are glad to report that the Lord heard our prayers, and just as we were about to close, the doctor phoned to say that there was a marked improvement in his patient, and I understand that he has given the honor to God. And so we can now report that Brother Smith is on the way to recovery and will soon be home again. We write this because Walter is widely known and loved.

As for the meetings, well, they were not a success. The writer seems to be a Jonah to that city. When I arrived in Philadelphia last May meetings were arranged for and the trolley men went out on a strike and militated against us.

This time I arrived in the morning and the trolley men went out on a strike in the afternoon; so I guess they saw me coming. So with the strike and Brother Walter's sickness, our effort was not a success. I have come to the conclusion that the Philadelphia Branch better leave me out the next time they have a special effort.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. Ira Mullin, Exline, Iowa: "I moved from Dean here, where I am located on Brother Birch's place. Last October Bro. Gomer Wells came to my place at Dean and held a few meetings, but with little interest, it seemed, though very good crowds. He was called home, and the last of November and first of December Bro. E. B. Morgan came and preached a few times and it began to rain again, so we did not have much success. Bro. David Wheatley lives close to Dean, and any elder will be welcome there, and they might do a good work at Dean. There is some opposition, it being a Christian stronghold. I received a letter from Bro. C. E. Willey a few days ago, and he said he would come by and hold some meetings as he went home to Lamoni, and I told him to come and that I would do all I could to get the work before the people."

Bro. Harry Jones, Beardstown, Illinois: "When I first came to Beardstown I heard the first Latter Day Saint sermon. It was not as the world had told me about their people, and I was in doubt about which church God recognized, as the one that he recognized is the one that I wished to join. I prayed to know which was right and one evening while I was praying after I had returned from church, an angel appeared unto me. He was clothed in beautiful white cloth. His arms were stretched forward, but finally he dropped one arm and with the other pointed to the east where the Latter Day Saint church stood, and then he disappeared. Soon after this I was baptized by Elder M. R. Shoemaker. I hope and pray that I may hold out faithful to the end."

Sr. Lovina Drake, Victor, Idaho: "On the night after Thanksgiving, after retiring I could not sleep. My thoughts were far away with the Saints at Independence, when I became conscious that I was there. The scene that was before me was the house of worship. I stepped up to the door and looked in and it seemed as though the seats were all filled with people. They all had their hats off and sat with bowed heads and were perfectly quiet. About half way down the aisle I found a vacant seat and sat down, waiting, as the rest seemed to be, for something. A man appeared with long hair and whiskers, and dressed in a long, gray gown. He moved along just above our heads until he came to the southwest corner of the room, when he began to write in large gold letters with his finger. This is what he wrote: "The time is near at hand when Israel will be free." Then everything vanished. I have thought a great deal about it and would like to know what to call this. I know it was not a dream, for I was not asleep."

Miss Maymie Reynolds, Beardstown, Illinois: "I am a young sister of fourteen. My father is a priest and president of this branch. I have two grown brothers that take a great interest in serving our Master. I also have a younger sister that belongs to the church, and three others that I hope will follow the step the others have taken. I hope God will guide and direct my footsteps in the way I should go and in the path our dear Savior has trod."

Bro. H. V. Brown, Naylor, Missouri: "We had a nice branch meeting yesterday, and they sustained all of their branch officers from president down to deacon. We now have regular branch meetings and communion meetings with a pretty good spirit. As to my missionary work I had several disappointments. I had to go alone, and some things were not as nice as I would like. I did not get to preach as much as I would have liked, though I preached some in Arkansas, Illinois, and the most in southern Missouri, all in new openings. I baptized one at Marston, the wife of Bro. W. C. Cook."

Bro. E. B. Hull, Stonington, Maine: "Here on Deer Isle and Little Deer Isle a great work has been going on. Bro. Daniel Macgregor and his wife, with the help of God and the Saints, have been able to convince eighty-one souls at Stonington and thirty-eight at Little Deer Isle of the necessity of obeying the gospel, besides baptizing some at other places. Some of the other elders on these islands have also been baptizing, until about one hundred and fifty have been added to the church since last summer. The honest in heart are not all gathered in, as many are investigating and will be baptized in the near future. The opposite power is not asleep; many false stories have been circulated about us, but this only goes to show that this is God's work."

Sr. Rebecca Atkinson, Lamb, Missouri: "We have moved from Mint, Missouri, to the vicinity of Lamb, Missouri, and as the people here were anxious to hear us preach, Bro. George Anderson and my husband, J. C. Atkinson, preached at our schoolhouse Saturday night and Sunday at eleven. Had a large crowd Saturday night, and a fair crowd on Sunday, among which were some very attentive listeners. The people want us to start a union Sunday school and want my husband to superintend it. Of course it won't suit us like a Saint Sunday school, but I hope the Lord will bless us in our effort to show the people the true gospel light, for I know we are in the true church. We would be glad to receive a card or letter from all the Saints that know us, or from any of the Saints."

Sr. Dorá McKinnon, East Jordan, Michigan: "I dreamed the sun was shining most beautifully. I opened the outside door and saw a cloud and wondered what it meant. While I was wondering I saw a personage in the cloud. The cloud was coming in toward me and I said, 'It is Jesus coming to earth the same as he said he would.' Then I thought of all my brothers and sisters and the people that had not obeyed the gospel, and I called upon God in mighty prayer to have mercy upon them. I was caught up in the air to meet the Savior and was still praying that my brothers and sisters would be in a condition to meet him too. It was then that I realized the love I had for them. Words could not express the joy I experienced. When I awoke, I wondered what the dream meant, and it was made known to me that we must all be in a praying condition and have that love in our hearts for one another which I experienced in my dream, in order to be ready to meet the Savior."

Sr. Mary E. Smith, Howell, Michigan: "There are only a few of God's children here, but when we meet together in Sunday school and prayer meeting we enjoy the Spirit and have a good feast. I wish to do right and let my light shine so when my Savior comes I will be ready to meet him. I have been afflicted much, but it draws me nearer to him. Pray for me that I fail not, for I love my Savior and want to meet him."

Sr. Sarah Hedrick, Tulare City, California: "I want to ask the prayers of all the Saints in my behalf that I may be restored to health if it be God's will. I am broken down, and have a complication of diseases."

Sr. Emma Blakesley, May, Oklahoma: "There are only a few members here besides our family. Our names are on the Elmwood Branch records, but as that is about forty-two miles from us, we do not get to meet with them often. Husband's health has been poor for some time. Also one of his eyes has been painfully sore for some time. About four years ago while herding horses, one picked up a corn stalk and struck him in the eye with the sharp end. We thought it was out at the time, it bled so, but we poured oil on it and prayed that God would spare it, and it soon got better. It got so bad again this winter that he thought he would lose it. While it is some better at this time, it still gives him pain. Will the dear Saints pray for him?"

News From Branches

SAN FRANCISCO ITEMS.

Our branch is in a prosperous condition, and the outlook is very encouraging. We have recently been favored with a visit from our minister in charge, Bro. F. A. Smith. While here he preached some good sermons for us, which were both instructive and edifying. He also attended two priesthood meetings in our branch, thus giving our local ministry an opportunity to gain much information that will be useful in the performance of duty. Brother Smith is the right man for the work here, as he has the confidence of all.

Patriarch E. Keeler has also been in our midst lately, actively engaged in his line of work, giving about thirty blessings in this city. The blessings given have been a great benefit to the Saints, especially the young have been encouraged and strengthened. The effect is noticeable in our prayer services by an improved spiritual condition, and a tendency on the part of some to become active who have before been silent. Brother Keeler also preached for us a few times while here, and it is a pleasure to note that he has not lost any of his power in presenting the word.

Our last sacrament meeting was one of marked spirituality. While the outward gifts were not manifest, yet the Spirit was there in power to the peace and comfort of all present.

Last Sunday was also a history making epoch in our branch. At the close of the 11 o'clock service the writer had the pleasure of leading four precious ones in through the door of baptism. The baptizing took place in the font in the church, most of the morning congregation remaining to witness the ceremony and the confirmation which followed. The candidates were George Hewson, Clyde Hoffman, Edward Hoffman, and Hazel Brown, all grandchildren of Sister Knight, who was one of the pioneers in the latter day work and who has remained faithful through many years of service. There were also three children blessed at this service. One of them, Frank Allison Teal, is also a grandson of the same venerable sister. The others, Varley and Christiana Nicol, are children of nonmembers, a promising boy and girl who are being cared for by our Sr. Mary Baker, through whose influence they were brought to the church.

The Sunday school, with Sr. Saxe as superintendent, is doing excellent work, and the Religio, under the presidency of Bro. Kenneth Richmond, is keeping pace with the forward movement.

So the work moves. May we all see the necessity of filling our own place, and doing the work that is ours to do, for the time is coming when we will be called to give an account of our stewardship. Will we be ready?

JOHN A. LAWN.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.

Since the "spokes" of our "hub" extend to such a distance over the country, even to the isles of the sea, we feel it a duty as well as a pleasure to keep them informed of our doings. We have a tale of gladness, and a tale of sadness.

You may remember my telling you last November of hearing wedding bells in the distance. They chimed outright on November 17, 1909. The home of Myron C. and Florence Fisher was the scene of festivity when the Saints and some few outside friends were gathered to witness the solemnizing of the marriage vow between Ada B. Sanford and Lloyd Newcomb. Ada surely looked charming in her bridal attire. She was accompanied by Ada M. Lewis, and Garfield Newcomb, brother of the groom, was the best man. After the ceremony, congratulations and refreshments, they were driven away. Where they would stop for the night we did not know, but we had our suspicions. One of the young men had by strategy obtained the key to their suite, and soon after the bridal party left, we adjourned to their new home to bid them welcome on their arrival an hour or so later. Ada has given up her position at the Y. M. C. A. of Somerville, where she had grown almost indispensable, and freely admits she is living the "charmed life." If Lloyd makes as excellent a husband as he does branch book agent, we will not have reason to worry about his reward in the next world.

In a late HERALD, you will notice a paragraph on the death of Bro. Earl Newcomb. We could not mourn his passing over the river, his suffering had continued for so many months. Bro. Ralph Farrell's words over his body were most appropriate, and met a responsive chord in the heart of each one present. Sr. Nora Newcomb, at whose home he spent the last months of his life, did all in her power to relieve his suffering, almost endangering her own health in caring for him.

The Organized Class has gained a firm hold on our Sunday school. We believe it is an aid to our interest; our attendance one Sunday within a month was one hundred and six. We plan to hold Easter exercises. In January, the Keystone Class, consisting entirely of young married women, about twenty in number, in charge of Albert Sanford, gave a social at the home of M. C. Fisher for the purpose of liquidating our organ debt. For the same purpose the senior men's class, whose teacher is Dr. W. A. Sinclair, held a social at his home. The method of procedure in these affairs would surely interest you, but my space is limited. Sr. Clara Bradt's class called A. R., consisting of the senior women, gave their supper last Friday night, at the Newcomb (O. L.) home. The Three T's (young ladies' class belonging to Ada Newcomb) are to give a peanut social April 19, at the home of its president, Ada M. Lewis. The money over the amount needed to raise the organ debt goes toward our chapel debt. The Sunday school has also made a ruling to contribute part of its collections each Sunday to the church debt.

The Religio items I believe you will find in the Autumn Leaves shortly.

At our late conference held in Providence in February, Bishop M. C. Fisher was made president of the district. He is combining the work of bishop and presidency, and there is no grass growing under his feet.

At our last branch business meeting, E. H. Fisher was made president of the branch, and Albert Sanford presiding priest. Harry Kozman was relieved of deacon's work until he is through with his studies in school. Quite recently several of our young men were called to the priesthood by the voice of the Spirit.

As a branch we are far short of what we should be, but we see a brighter day ahead. Our new presiding priest, Brother Sanford, gave us a rousing sermon last Sunday morning, or rather one week ago. We were made to see the cause of our past mistakes, and also see where we can profit by them.

Sr. Grace Glover, who for years was with her uncle and aunt, Bro. and Sr. John Bradt, was married on January 15, 1910, to Robert Ivester. Mr. Ivester is not one of our church boys, but a fellow of good habits and good character. Their wedding was a nice affair. They are keeping house in Dorchester.

A surprise recently greeted our ears, when we learned that on Easter Sunday, we are to lose our sister, Louise Delano, to Providence, the fortunate young man being Alma Bearse. We feel we can scarcely spare Louise; she is indeed an excellent Saint. We congratulate the Providence Branch, as well as Brother Bearse.

One week ago last Sunday, we had with us Brother Hanson, who is direct from the Scandinavian Mission; he spoke to us in the evening, giving some of his experiences, and it was an added testimony to those who were present to hear how the Lord had blessed him in his efforts.

Last Sunday Bro. Arthur Koehler spoke to us both morning and evening. He is, we understand, on his way to General Conference. Ralph Farrell is already on his way, via Brooklyn and Philadelphia.

Boston will be represented at General Conference by four and possibly more of its members. Some of us wish it were not so far "from Palmyra to Independence."

We hear Albert N. Hoxie, jr., says he wouldn't go back to Boston to live. Who would expect him to prefer Boston to Philadelphia under the circumstances? Not long since we read the announcement of the engagement of the last named brother to Sr. Clara Zimmermann, daughter of Bishop Zimmermann.

As we suggested in the beginning of our letter, our members, and exmembers are to be found in many parts of the country. Bro. Raymond Knowlton, a former Boston boy (from Maine), has recently been married.

We are counting the months when we may be privileged to once more greet our South Sea Island missionaries—the Lakes. We trust our kind Father will bear them in safety to this country. But we shall be sorry for the natives and the missionaries left there.

Sr. Tamzie Newcomb is in Philadelphia this winter with her daughter, Mrs. E. L. Traver, who last fall forsook Boston for Philadelphia where Brother Traver is in business.

Sr. Margaret Wood has this last fall returned to us from Philadelphia, a nurse. She is fortunate in having all she wants to do in that line.

Sr. H. J. Davison and her daughter Nina are still in the land of Evangeline, but we are expecting their return now any day, as they are to keep house for Sr. Nora Newcomb while she attends General Conference. Brother Davison we do not forget, though he is up in that northwest country long gone from us.

Neither do we forget our Brother Bullard, who with his wife went west last July. Sister Bullard is making her home in Independence, since returning from her daughter in California where there has been a new arrival, Charles Richard Warren. Walter is also in Independence with his mother. Brother Bullard is laboring in Colorado. I know I express the feeling of the entire Massachusetts District when I say that we miss him, remembering well his faithful service with us, and often wish we might again see him.

Yours as ever in the one faith,
MARY O. LEWIS.

CENTRAL CHICAGO.

Sunday, March 20, fine spring day, only quite windy, and colder in the afternoon. Sunday school quite well attended. Bro. Harry Passman, from the West Side, spoke to our edification in the morning, and Bro. Henry Keir in the evening. Sister Buckley, from Seattle, Washington, worshipped with us in the morning.

Elder Allen returned from Belvidere Monday, and reported two baptisms, Prof. Wm. D. Putland and Mrs. Cora-Bell McElroy, both of Belvidere. These parties have been investigating for quite a while, and the recent portrayal of the truth seemed to have brought them to a decision. The Belvidere Saints are rejoicing over the additions to their membership.

We neglected to mention that Brother Cochran preached at West Pullman Sunday morning.

Bro. and Sr. Wm. Merrick and Bro. and Sr. Fred Peslin are now numbered as our neighbors, being located at 6608 Winchester avenue. Some others have signed leases to homes, and will record their names later.

Mr. George Warlick, husband of Sr. Maggie Warlick, has been on the sick list for some time. Bro. Wm. Strange is reported better, also little Kelso Bradbrook, who was quite ill Sunday.

Elder Daniel Macgregor and wife landed in the "windy city" Wednesday, Sr. Macgregor departing in the evening for Cameron, Missouri, and the missionary to remain a few days. Possibly we may be privileged to hear some of those persuasive sermons that induced one hundred and twenty-one people to be buried in the waters of baptism in the old New England State.

L. Kelley, to take such steps as may be deemed necessary to the end that a chapel may be erected which shall serve as a headquarters for the Utah Mission. A pastoral from the Bishop's agent was read and referred to a committee of three: O. W. Newton, John Hall, and Joseph B. Smith, who recommended its publication in the church periodicals, the rereading of the pastoral on Sunday, and encouraged the Saints to make unusual efforts to assist the Bishop's agent. On Sunday the pastoral was read and $137.50 subscribed by those present. An excellent spiritual session was had on Sunday afternoon, at which the spirit of prophecy and revelation was experienced. Conference adjourned subject to the call of district president. Time and place to be designated by them. G. J. S. Abels, secretary.

Garrett, B. J. Scott, T. W. Chatburn, A. H. Parsons, and George E. Harrington. A request from the Independence teachers for a reporting blank to be in harmony with teacher's diary was introduced. A substitute was offered that a committee prepare suitable reporting blanks for each department of the priesthood in the stake which also could be used to report to General Conference, which was referred to the presidency for consideration and report. A recommendation from the Eastern Iowa District by D. D. Babcock and S. C. Andes, recommending for ordination to office of elder J. W. Wilson, was placed in hands of missionary in charge and the presidency of the stake. W. S. Brown was elected secretary for the ensuing year. Preaching, Sunday, 13, by M. H. Bond, G. H. The Bishopric.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of Western Nebraska and Black Hills; Greeting: "But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the word, this man shall be blessed in his deed."—James 1: 25.

The blessings are what we desire to obtain, and because of that desire we are prompted to look into the perfect law of liberty, but only those who are not forgetful hearers, but doers of the word shall be blessed in their deed.

"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."—Malachi 3: 10. Can we expect to receive the blessings without complying with the conditions upon which they are promised? Will we have faith enough in his word to comply with the conditions? If there were no other blessings promised, the hallowed peace that comes to us as a result of a duty well and cheerfully performed should be sufficient to prompt us to the keeping of the law.

Let us not make excuses to ourselves and the Lord that we have nothing to spare, for we must expect to make sacrifices, and that which we can easily spare does not become a sacrifice. "Behold now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man) and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned."—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5.

Dear Saints, I pen these few lines to stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance. We need your assistance and cooperation in the financial part of the Lord's work; our funds are exhausted and we are forced to call upon our beloved Bishop to pay the missionaries' families, which ought not to be. Please let me hear from you, and give us unto the Lord and thus do your part in carrying on the work which we all love.

Yours in gospel bonds,
R. S. MENGEL, Bishop's Agent.

United with the church September 30, 1879, at Gallands Grove reunion. Was married at Logan, November 16, 1892. To this union four children were born. Three, Esther, Platt, and John survive her. Most of her married life was spent in Helena; but they resided also in Butte, Montana, Chicago, Illinois, Terre Haute, Indiana, and Seattle, Washington. A faithful wife, good mother and exemplary Latter Day Saint. Interment took place at Logan, Iowa, from home of her sister, Mrs. W. H. Wood, Elder Charles Derry preaching the sermon. Service was also held in Christian church, Helena, Montana, March 13, by Elder G. R. Wells.

The Beast and the Jungle.

JUDGE LINDSEY DEFINES HIS ATTITUDE ON TAINTED MONEY.

One of the officers of the Democratic party of the City Hall came to me and said: "You ought to go and see Mr. Field, president of the telephone company. He's willing to help you out." I did not go, but subsequently I accepted an invitation from a friendly county official to meet Mr. Field at luncheon, and I found him very suave and conciliatory, despite the fact that I had been publicly naming him, with Evans and Cheesman, as one of the corporation rulers of Denver.

Mr. Field is a desiccated, small man who came to Colorado as a "lunger" and here regained his health. He was known in Denver then (as he is now) to the politicians as "the brains of the System." Before I had been talking to him very long I guessed that he had been deputed to "take me in hand," to try friendship and gentleness where force and enmity had failed.

He blamed "Will," as he called Evans, for having opposed me in 1904; and he said he remembered well the conferences between Evans, Cheesman, and himself about my candidacy for a return to the County Court, and he confessed that they had played "poor politics" in opposing me. He did not think, however, that I quite understood the gentle Will—who was "really a good man" and wanted to help me. They all wanted to help me. They all admired the work I was doing in the Juvenile Court. But they all felt I was mistaken in my charges against the corporations.

However, he concluded by agreeing that I ought to have help in my court work, and he promised that he would take the matter up "with Will" on the following Sunday, when he and Evans were to meet. He subsequently sent me a check for $250 toward the expenses of the Juvenile Improvement Association. Did I accept it? I certainly did. Why? For the same reason that I once accepted the aid of a woman in Denver who conducted a disorderly house.

I sent for that poor creature, and an officer of my court brought her to my chambers. I took her by the hand, looked her in the face, and said: "Madam, I want to thank you for your good deeds and I want to tell you how I despise your evil ones. I accept the good you did, but I shall not shut my mouth about the evils of your business." She was a procuress, but her business was no worse than that of the corporations. She corrupted young girls; they corrupt whole communities.

(A secretary of Mr. John D. Rockefeller once wrote me from New York to ask my views upon "tainted money." I replied with this story about the procuress. He did not send me a contribution, but if he had done so, I should have accepted it.)

THE BEAST IN THE CHURCH.

I yield to no man in my admiration of what "the church element" has done to fight the saloon and the gambling house and the brothel in Denver. It was these good Christian people who conquered for us in all our earlier encounters with the "wine-room gang" and the political supporters of protected vice. It was they who helped the women and children to save the Juvenile Court when the attempt was made to destroy it. They are the hope of society in every fight for public decency and moral reform. But in a community where the "cohesive power of public plunder" has united criminal corporations with criminal politicians and the criminal poor—has put the dive into alliance with the dishonest public official, the unjust court, and the predatory millionaire—in such a community do you suppose that the churches by some miracle have escaped clean? I know that they have not. I know that the agents of the Beast have even dared to enter the house of God itself—to intimidate the minister—to cajole and deceive the congregation—and to use the religious organizations of a Christian community to increase the vicious power of the System and to punish its opponents. And I shall tell how I know.

THE BEAST AND THE COLLEGE.

Yes, and the Beast and the college! During the Peabody campaign, according to The Rocky Mountain News, a young student named Reed had been practically driven from the Denver University because he criticized the corporation Governor. Later, a university professor was sent to Europe to gather data which was used in the campaign against municipal ownership in Denver; and the professor was exposed but not forced into retirement. Later still, Buchtel reprimanded a student for volunteering as a worker in one of our Juvenile Court campaigns. Mr. Evans was president of the Board of Trustees of the University, and the Reverend Henry Augustus Buchtel was his Chancellor.

Everywhere people said to me: "Why, the Chancellor will never stand for the sale of the senatorship to Guggenheim!" Or the "dear Chancellor" will never permit this or that undesirable thing in politics. But Buchtel had already admitted to a ministerial friend that he believed Guggenheim ought to be elected—though he said nothing of it from the platform, you may be sure. After he was Governor, he not only indorsed Guggenheim but vigorously defended the legislature for electing Guggenheim, honored Evans with a place on the gubernatorial staff, and gave a public dinner to the corporation heads who had most profited by the rule of the System in the State. They reciprocated by sending the Denver University handsome donations; Evans led with $10,000, and Guggenheim, Hughes, and others followed with fat checks.

The keeper of a gambling hell, whom I summoned to my court and forced to make restitution to the wife of one of his victims, said to me: "I have some respect for Mayor Speer. He tells these preachers that he believes in our policy of open gambling. But I have nothing but contempt for that old stiff up in the State House who talks about the 'word of God,' and gets his nomination from a boss who protects us, and gets elected on money that we contributed to the organization!" It is one of the saddest aspects of this use of the Church that the Beast gains respectability thereby and the Church contempt.

THE Y. M. C. A. AND THE BEAST.

These young men of the Y. M. C. A., who are banded together as the Christian Citizenship Union, have done more for the enforcement of the laws and the maintenance of public decency in Denver than any other similar body of young men that I know of in any city in the United States. I could say nothing too much in the way of grateful praise of them or of the association that gave them their ideals. But what I wish to say is that even they found the influence of the Beast above them, met it in the management of the churches of which they were members, and were punished by it in the houses of business in which they worked—for two of them received "notice" from their employers because they had been conspicuous in the work for reform.

WHO ELECTS THE UNITED STATES SENATE?

Do you suppose that he is the only member of the Senate in Washington who has been so elected? Do you suppose that senators, so elected, represent anyone in the Councils of the nation except the Powers that put them there? Whether these men be called Republicans or Democrats, do you think their votes are cast for any law, any tariff, any reform that will hurt "the interests" whom they represent? If you do, you do not know the Beast. It is not only Denver that lies beneath its paw. It is not only Colorado. It is this whole nation. The System controls the machinery by which we elect our national representatives as well as our State and city representatives as far as possible. It picks the same sort of legislators to rule in the Capitol at Washington that it picks to rule in the Capitol at Denver. Those men so elected give to the nation the same sort of government that they give to our State. And our fight in Denver is not a fight to free Denver alone—nor to free Colorado alone—but to help free the whole nation, and to reestablish a free government of a free people in a country that shall be free. It was for this we fought in 1906. It is for this that we are fighting still.—From "The beast and the jungle," by Judge Ben B. Lindsey, in Everybody's for April.

"All the days"—in winter days, when joys are fled; in sunless days, when the clouds return again and again after rain; in days of sickness and pain; in days of temptation and perplexity, as much as in days when the heart is as full of joy as the woodlands in spring are full of song. That day never comes when the Lord Jesus is not at the side of his saints.

Lover and friend may stand afar, but he walks with them through the fires; he fords with them the rivers; he stands by them when face to face with the lion. We can never be alone. We must always add his resources to our own when making our calculations.—F. B. Meyer.

Do It Now.

The Independence Branch appointed a reception committee for General Conference, and instructed the committee to advertise the following rates for conference:

Lodging only $1 per week; lodging and all meals $4.50 per week at residence. Meals will be served in the Dining Hall in the rear of the church as follows:

Breakfast 10 and 20 cents and all other meals 20 cents each. Those expecting to attend conference should make their wants known to the secretary at once in order that they may have places provided for them.

Yours truly,
B. C. LOAR, Secretary Com.

P. S.—Please attend to this at once. Do it now. On arriving in Independence you will find the committee at the church. 11-3t

My soul, if thou wouldst muse more, the fire would burn more. Why dost thou not retire oftener with thyself? Thou wouldst be better fitted for the world if thou wert less worldly. If thou hadst more heavenly fire, thou wouldst have more earthly power.

Is there no secret pavilion into which thou canst go and warm thyself? Is there no holy of holies where thou canst catch a glow of impulse that will make thee strong? Is it not written of the Son of Man that "as he prayed the fashion of his countenance was altered"? Yes; it was from his prayer that his transfigured glory came. It was from the glow of his heart that there issued the glow of his countenance. It was when he was musing that the fire kindled.

O my soul, wouldst thou have thy life glorified, beautified, transfigured to the eyes of men? Get thee up into the secret place of God's pavilion, where the fires of love are burning. Thy life shall shine gloriously to the dwellers on the plain. Thy prayers shall be luminous; they shall light thy face like the face of Moses when he wist not that it shone. Thy words shall be burning; they will kindle many a heart journeying on the road of Emmaus. Thy path shall be lambent; when thou hadst prayed in Elijah's solitude, thou shalt have Elijah's chariot of fire.—George Matheson.

The Most Precious Metal.

In this age of electricity, copper has become one of the most indispensable of the metals. If civilization to-day were confronted with the ultimatum, "Give up your gold or give up your copper," probably the world's gold mines would be deserted in preference. Last year the production of copper in the United States exceeded by far that of any year in the history of the metal. The year's total, as compiled by the geological survey, was 942,570,721 pounds. Consider This Should you wish to buy land for a home or, as a paying investment in Iowa, Nebraska, or South Dakota, write for my large list.

I can prove that I have sold as high as 5 farms in one day, and over 8,000 acres in Harrison County, Iowa, alone, besides over 40 houses and lots in the town of Logan, the town in which I reside, in little over two years, which ought to be an evidence to you that I am able to secure bargains and terms satisfactory.

I work on this principle: Treat everybody as I would like to be treated, and to secure for every one of my customers a bargain if possible whereby they can make money, and when I have done this, I know that you will become my friend and will tell others; therefore my business grows and it pays me to so treat you. Write to me to-day.

As against this production of the refined metals, the apparent consumption was 479,955,318 pounds. From returns made by the smelting and refining companies the stocks of refined copper on January 1, 1909, showed a decrease of 3,869,037 pounds over the stocks of January 1, 1908.—Chicago Tribune.

What Do You Know?

How about the schoolhouses in your town? What sort of a class room is provided for your son or daughter to work in, five or six hours per day? Do you know whether fresh air is admitted or prohibited in that room? Do you know whether the room is properly cleaned or is it germ-laden with sweepings? And if you don't know, why don't you know?

Why do you watch your child's scholastic progress, as shown in weekly or monthly reports from the teacher, and neglect to ask what care is given to his body from 9.00 to 12.00 and from 1.30 to 3.30, five days each week?

If you heard that little Jimmy Brown, who sits at the desk next to your son, was carrying diphtheria germs from the bedside of his sick father into that class room, you would be the first to appear before the city physician or board of health to file a complaint. Well, Jimmy's father has a disease just as infectious—tuberculosis—and Jimmy Brown is carrying into that close, unventilated class room tuberculosis germs in his clothing.

Why don't you do something to prevent such dangerous contact for your boy?

Why don't you demand in your town notification and registration for the father and fumigation and segregation for the son? What right have you, as an intelligent father or mother, to let your child take such chances?

These are straight-from-the-shoulder questions which you, as a parent, should consider and answer. They contain the reason for physical examination of school children. This does not work a hardship on the few, and it does save the many. Better that the school board of your town be forced to spend a few dollars each month for a class of segregated tubercular children than that your children and a score of other healthy children should be infected with the White Plague.—From Woman's Home Companion for April.

Oh, the glory of the message! For fifteen centuries Israel had a sanctuary with a Holiest of All, into which, under pain of death, no one might enter. Its one witness was: Man can not dwell in God's presence; can not abide in his fellowship. And now how changed is all! As then the warning sounded: "No admittance! enter not!" so now the call goes forth: "Enter in! the veil is rent; the holiest is open; God waits to welcome you to his bosom; henceforth you are to live with him." This is the message. Child, thy Father longs for thee to enter, to dwell, and to go out no more for ever.—Andrew Murray.

Points for Success.

The president of the London Chamber of Commerce gives twelve maxims which he has tested through years of business experience and which he recommends as tending to insure success:

1. Have a definite aim.
2. Go straight for it.
3. Master all details.
4. Always know more than you are expected to know.

5. Remember that difficulties are only made to overcome.
6. Treat failures as stepping stones to further effort.
7. Never put your hand out farther than you can draw it back.
8. At times be bold; always prudent.
9. The minority often beats the majority in the end.
10. Make good use of other men's brains.
11. Listen well; answer cautiously; decide promptly.
12. Preserve, by all means in your power, "a sound mind in a sound body."

In a world where there is so much to ruffle the spirit's plumes, how needful that entering into the secret of God's pavilion, which will alone bring it back to composure and peace! In a world where there is so much to sadden and depress, how blessed the communion with him in whom is the one true source and fountain of all true gladness and abiding joy! In a world where so much is ever seeking to unhallow our spirits, to render them common and profane, how high the privilege of consecrating them anew in prayer to holiness and to God.—Archbishop Trench.

AN HISTORIC ADDRESS

EXTRACTS FROM THE ADDRESS DELIVERED BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH
AT THE AMBOY CONFERENCE, APRIL 6, 1860.

I WOULD say to you, brethren, as I hope you may be, and in faith I trust you are, as a people that God has promised his blessings upon, I came not here of myself, but by the influence of the Spirit. For some time past I have received manifestations pointing to the position which I am about to assume.

I wish to say that I have come here not to be dictated by any men or set of men. I have come in obedience to a power not my own, and shall be dictated by the power that sent me.

God works by means best known to himself, and I feel that for some time past he has been pointing out a work for me to do.

For two or three years past deputations have been waiting on me, urging me to assume the responsibilities of the leadership of the church; but I have answered each and everyone of them that I did not wish to trifle with the faith of the people.

I do not propose to assume this position in order to amass wealth out of it, neither have I sought it as a [source of] profit.

I know opinions are various in relation to these matters. I have conversed with those who told me they would not hesitate one moment in assuming the high and powerful position as the leader of this people. But I have been well aware of the motives which might be ascribed to me,—motives of various kinds, at the foundation of all which is selfishness,—should I come forth to stand in the place where my father stood.

I have believed that I should come without the guarantee of the people, I should be received in blindness, and would be liable to be accused of false motives. Neither would I come to you without receiving favor from my heavenly Father.

I have endeavored as far as possible to keep myself unbiased. I never conversed with J. J. Strang, for in those days I was but a boy, and in fact am now but a boy. I had not acquired a sufficient knowledge of men to be capable of leading myself, setting aside the leading of others.

There is but one principle taught by the leaders of any faction of this people that I hold in utter abhorrence; that is a principle taught by Brigham Young and those believing in him. I have been told that my father taught such doctrines. I have never believed it and never can believe it. If such things were done, then I believe they never were done by divine authority. I believe my father was a good man, and a good man never could have promulgated such doctrines.

I believe in the doctrines of honesty and truth. The Bible contains such doctrines, and so do the Book of Mormon and the Book of Covenants, which are auxiliaries to the Bible.

I have my peculiar notions in regard to revelations, but am happy to say that they accord with those I am to associate with, at least those of them with whom I have conversed. I am not very conversant with those books, [pointing to a volume before him.] Not so conversant as I should be and will be. The time has been when the thought that I should assume the leadership of this people was so repulsive to me, that it seemed as if the thing could never be possible.

The change in my feelings came slowly, and I did not suffer myself to be influenced by extraneous circumstances, and have never read the numerous works sent me which had a bearing on this subject, for fear they might entice me into wrong doing. It is my determination to do right and let heaven take care of the result. Thus I come to you free from any taint of sectarianism, taints from thoughts of the varied minds I have come in contact with; and thus hope to be able to build up my own reputation as a man.

It has been said that a Mormon elder, though but a stripling, possessed a power unequalled by almost any other preacher. This arises from a depth of feeling, and the earnestness with which they believe the doctrines they teach, and it is this feeling that I do not wish to trifle with.

I know that Brigham Young is considered a man of talent, by some a bold and fortunate man, and by others an unscrupulous and bad man, accordingly as circumstances differ.

Should you take me as a leader, I propose that all should be dealt by in mercy, open as to Gentile or Jew; but I ask not to be received except as by the ordinances of the church.

Some, who had ought to know the proprieties of the church, have told me that no certain form was necessary in order for me to assume the leadership—that the position came by right of lineage; yet I know that if I attempted to lead as a prophet by these considerations, and not by a call from heaven, men would not be led to believe who do not believe now. And so I have come not of my own dictation to this sacred office.

I believe that we owe duties to our country and to society, and are amenable to the laws of the land, and have always considered it my duty to act upon this principle; and I do say that among the people where I live I have as many good and true friends as I could desire among those of any society.

In conclusion, I will come to you if you will receive me, give my ability, and the influence my name may bring, together with what little power I possess; and I trust by your prayers and faith to be sustained. I pledge myself to promulgate no doctrine that shall not be approved by you or the code of good morals.

I do not care to say any more at present, but will simply add that if the same Spirit which prompts my coming, prompts also my reception, I am with you.

THE PRELUDE.

OUR MAGAZINE NUMBER; INTRODUCTION.

This is the first of our special Magazine Numbers. It is our intention to publish others at intervals,—perhaps two or three each year. In each number a special section will be devoted to some particular topic of interest, as, for instance, it is proposed to devote some space in the next magazine issue to our church courts, their nature, methods, jurisdiction, and authority. We are sure that these special tude and especially a look in the eyes characteristic of him while listening to matters of business presented by visitors. For a number of years much of his work as President of the church as well as his editorial work was done in this room.

FROM AMBOY TO INDEPENDENCE.

It happens that our issue for this week falls upon the 6th day of April. This is an important anniversary. Fifty years ago to-day the Amboy Conference (at Amboy, Illinois,) was in session. To that conference Joseph Smith came at the invitation of the church, in harmony with the urgent command of the Spirit, and in fulfillment of repeated prophecy. He was accepted by the church as its presiding officer, and as a prophet, and under God the spiritual director of the church.

He was ordained at the afternoon session of that conference, and for fifty years has administered wisely and faithfully in his high and sacred calling. The SAINTS' HERALD (on the responsibility of the associate editors) congratulates the church on the fact that her President has been spared for so long and useful a period of service; and we pray that it may be extended yet many years.

It is a long journey from Amboy to Independence. It has taken us a half century. Remarkable changes have occurred in that time, both in the church and in the world.

At that time the church had before it a great deal of the work of reorganizing, establishing, and building up the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve Apostles, Order of Evangelists, Quorum of High Priests, the bishopric, seventies, and quorums of elders, priests, teachers, and deacons; that work is now practically completed, much of it years ago, under the leadership of President Smith, and in harmony with divine direction. Within the church there have grown up such associations as the Sunday School Association, Zion's Religio-Literary Society, Daughters of Zion, and such institutions as Graceland College, the Saints' Homes, the Sanitarium, the Herald Publishing House, and Zion's Ensign Publishing House. Missions, districts, and branches have been organized numbers will be a feature of our policy that will appeal to HERALD readers. We shall endeavor to make them of sufficient interest to be worth in themselves the subscription price of the entire year.

As the first illustration in this number we present a picture of President Smith taken at his desk in the First Presidency's room in the old Herald Office building. This shows President Smith at his work, and we prize the picture because it preserves an attiin America and the Old World. The gospel has been preached far and wide. In membership there has been a growth from an estimated membership of five hundred (see article by H. A. Stebbins, Jubilee HERALD) to a membership of sixty thousand, nine hundred and nine, as will be announced by the

during the year 1873, as it shows the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric as then constituted.

In the center of the second row President Joseph Smith is seen with his two counselors, W. W. Blair and David H. Smith, who were called and ordained at Church Recorder at this General Conference. We believe that the membership has grown in spirituality, morality, and intellectuality, and that the times are ripe for further advancement.

THE RETURN.

When the Amboy Conference met, so far as the church was concerned, Independence was a wilderness and a desolate place. A little over twenty years had elapsed since the people had been driven from Missouri with frightful loss of blood and treasure. There was no room for them in Zion.

To-day Independence Stake has a membership of over four thousand. To-day we meet in General Conference capacity and celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the Amboy Conference. To-day two members of the First Presidency, two members of the Presiding Bishopric, and other leading church officers live in Independence on the best of terms with the citizens, and freely carry on the business of the church. To-day at least two important church institutions (Ensign Publishing House and the Sanitarium) are located at Independence.

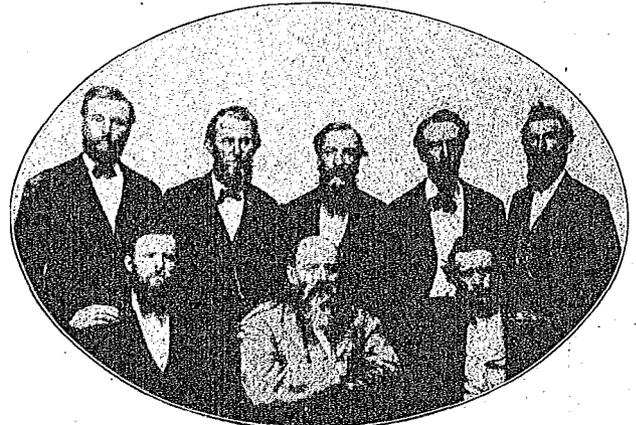

All of this is in harmony with the prediction, "Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy."—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4.

ANOTHER LEAF FROM THE OLD FAMILY ALBUM.

The publication of an old photograph in the Jubilee Number gave so much pleasure to some of the old time Saints that we feel moved to reproduce another leaf from the old album.

This photograph was probably taken some time the spring conference of that year. In the front row we see Bishop I. L. Rogers with his two counselors, Elijah Banta and David Dancer. Bishop Rogers was ordained at the Amboy Conference, fifty years ago, April 7. The two other members of the group are Apostle W. H. Kelley (at the left), now president of the Twelve, and Patriarch E. C. Briggs (at the right). Two of the men shown in this picture, Joseph Smith and E. C. Briggs, are now (of the ministry) the only two surviving members of the Amboy Conference.

These old pictures are eloquent of change. They are an exhortation to all to work while the day lasts. Men toil and strive a little while and then graduate from the school here below, and if faithful, pass on to the higher duties and greater honors.

FROM BELOIT TO AMBOY.

From June, 1852, when the Beloit conference was held, to the Amboy Conference in April, 1860, was not a long period of time, as compared to the fifty years which have come and gone since the latter date. And while those years occupy not a great many pages among the many of church history, they were years of great anxiety and doubt and prayer among the Saints who remained steadfast. In the limited space assigned me I will attempt only a brief outline of events.

The Beloit conference was held with the Newark Branch in June, 1852, Jason W. Briggs in charge; John Harrington, clerk. The following resolution was passed:

"Resolved, that this conference regard the pretensions of Brigham Young, James J. Strang, James Colin Brewster, and William Smith and Joseph Wood's joint claims to the leadership of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, as an assumption of power, in violation of the law of God, and consequently we disclaim all connection and fellowship with them.

"Resolved, that the successor of Joseph Smith, junior, as the Presiding High Priest in the Melchisedec Priesthood, must of necessity be the seed of Joseph Smith, junior, in fulfillment of the law and promises of God. . . .

"Resolved, that we believe that the Church of Christ, organized on the 6th day of April, A. D. 1830, exists as on that day wherever six or more Saints are organized according to the pattern in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants."—History of the Church, vol. 3, pp. 209 and 210.

A pamphlet was ordered written by Jason W. Briggs and his work was reported at a later conference, when it was ordered printed.

Beginning with that year a semiannual conference was held in October, and each spring the Saints met in regular General Conference, so that in all there were some sixteen conferences intervening between the Beloit and the Amboy conferences. These were mostly held at Zarahemla, Wisconsin. There was also a special conference or two, among them the notable conference held in June 10 to 14 at Amboy, the first at this place, when better organization was effected, a treasurer and a recorder being chosen, a hymn book was provided for, a considerable number baptized and others admitted on their original baptisms.

The most important conference, as we view it, was held in a grain barn belonging to Israel Rogers near Sandwich, Illinois, in October, 1859. Considerable progress had been made by those who had been sent on missions at the preceding conference, and the first step was taken toward the publication of the HERALD, a committee being appointed for the purpose which was empowered to begin publication.

A number of important actions were taken at these various conferences, and we can not give space to a title of what was done. Among them was the following:

"Resolved, that the highest authority among the priesthood represents the legitimate President as a presiding authority." —Passed October 6, 1852, at Yellowstone, Wisconsin.

A question which troubled them a great deal during those years of struggling was in regard to authority, but it was finally settled, and the following from the pen of Zenos H. Gurley shows how:

"When the commandment to organize first came we thought it impossible for us to obey, not having authority to ordain apostles, etc.; but we learned what every Latter Day Saint must learn, that a command from God is authority to do all that he requires, be it more or less."—History of the Church, vol. 3, p. 221.

Note the following:

"Upon motion it was resolved to reaffirm the resolution adopted at a conference held at Beloit, June 12 and 13, 1852, affirming that the successor of Joseph Smith must come from his seed."—Passed at Zarahemla, semiannual conference, October 6, 1855.

We would like to give the names of all the men taking part in this early movement, but space forbids, and we respectfully refer our readers to that portion of the History of the Church covering the years from 1851 to 1860.

The Independence Section

EARLY DAYS IN INDEPENDENCE.

The gospel was first brought to Independence by missionaries to the Lamanites. In the fall of 1830 the church, by divine direction, appointed Parley P. Pratt, Oliver Cowdery, Peter Whitmer, and Ziba Peterson, to take their journey westward as evangelists to the Indians.

After pausing for a time to establish the work in a wonderful manner at Kirtland, Ohio, this little band pushed on early in 1831. They journeyed on foot over trackless wilds of snow, suffering considerable hardship, until at length they reached Independence.

Of this event Elder Pratt writes:

After much fatigue and some suffering we all arrived in Independence, in the county of Jackson, on the extreme western frontiers of Missouri, and of the United States. . . . This was the first mission performed by the elders of the church in any of the States west of New York, and we were the first members of the same which were ever on this frontier.

In June, 1831, Joseph Smith, with a party of church members, left Kirtland and journeyed westward, arriving in Independence about the middle of July. They came by wagon and canal boat to Cincinnati, by steamboat to Saint Louis, and the balance of the way on foot.

Soon after their arrival a revelation was received pointing out the spot where the temple should be built. August 3 this spot was dedicated in the presence of eight men, including Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, Edward Partridge, W. W. Phelps, Oliver Cowdery, Martin Harris, and Joseph Coe.

The first Sunday after their arrival W. W. Phelps preached to a mixed audience of negroes, whites, and Indians. Two were baptized.

This movement of the church to Independence was sanctioned by revelation, as follows:

Hearken, O ye elders of my church, saith the Lord your God, who have assembled yourselves together, according to my commandments, in this land which is the land of Missouri, which is the land which I have appointed and consecrated for the gathering of the saints: wherefore this is the land of promise, and the place for the city of Zion. And thus saith the Lord your God, If you will receive wisdom here is wisdom. Behold, the place which is now called Independence, is the center place, and the spot for the temple is lying westward upon a lot which is not far from the courthouse; wherefore it is wisdom that the land should be purchased by the saints; and also every tract lying westward, even unto the line running directly between Jew and Gentile. And also every tract bordering by the prairies, inasmuch as my disciples are enabled to buy lands. Behold, this is wisdom, that they may obtain it for an everlasting inheritance.—Doctrine and Covenants 57: 1.

Joseph Smith writes that on the 2d day of August he assisted the Colesville Branch (from Colesville, New York,) to lay the first log for a house, "as a foundation for Zion." This was in Kaw Township, twelve miles west of Independence.

The church was rapidly built up by emigration from the East. A printing press was established, and in June, 1832, the Evening and Morning Star, the first periodical to be issued by the church, made its appearance.

By July, 1833, those on the grounds estimated that the church membership in and around Independence was about twelve hundred. (See Evening and Morning Star, July, 1833.) This must be considered a strong membership when we remember that Independence at that time was on the frontier.

Unfortunately extreme friction soon developed between the Saints and other citizens of Jackson County. It is not necessary to discuss the causes that led up to that friction with its consequent sad results. Suffice it to say that July 20, 1833, a committee of citizens waited upon the leaders of the church in Independence and demanded the suspension of the Evening and Morning Star, the immediate removal of church leaders from the county, and the suspension of emigration into the county. The Saints asked for time and were given fifteen minutes.

The conference broke up and the enraged citizens proceeded to destroy the printing plant of the Evening and Morning Star. They also tarred and feathered Bishop Partridge and did other damage. Bishop Partridge was thus maltreated in front of the courthouse, only a little distance from the present location of some of the chief offices of the church and stake.

We do not care to dwell upon the scenes that ensued. Suffice it to say that the church was speedily expelled from the county. Not one church member was permitted to remain. INDEPENDENT.

HISTORY OF THE INDEPENDENCE STAKE AND BRANCH INDEPENDENCE BRANCH.

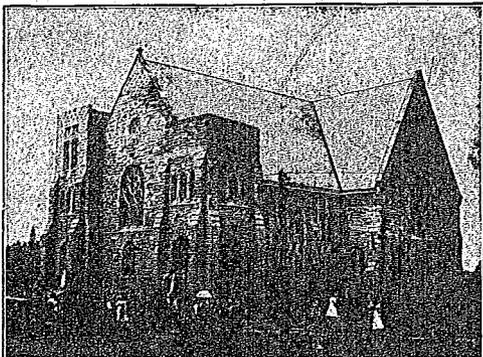

(The quotations used are from Independence Stake History as written by Elder A. H. Parsons.)

BY MRS. J. C. NUNN, STAKE HISTORIAN.

Much has been written about the early days of the church in Missouri, and the reader's heart aches when reading the accounts of the sufferings and injustice endured by the Saints when robbed and driven from Independence.

Many years passed by before it was practical for the Saints to return. At last, about thirty years after they were expelled, in the fall of 1867, the family of Bro. Albert W. Noble, consisting of himself, wife, and seven children, came from Grantville, Utah, and located about four miles northeast of Independence. "The mob spirit was not dead, as will be seen by the following incident": When it was known that a Latter Day Saint was located near town a band of rough characters visited Brother Noble and gave him due notice to leave the country in five days. To this invitation the brother kindly informed them that he had come to stay, and so he did, until removed by death August 24, 1872.

The disturbing effect of the civil war was still felt at that time and it was a common thing to see men with one or two revolvers strapped to them, walking the streets of Independence.

Two years after Brother Noble, came the families of Brn. Isaac Bailey and Frederick Campbell, who located about five miles southeast of Independence, and it was nearly three years before they knew that there was another Latter Day Saint family (that of Brother Noble) near Independence.

There was little to encourage them,—no branch, no preaching services. However, two years later, the following letter was written by Elder Joseph Smith Lee:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 16, 1871.

Last Sunday I had the happy privilege of preaching to a large and attentive congregation at the Rush Bottoms School-house [Brother Noble lived near this place]. After meeting we went to the river [Missouri] and baptized Peter Johnson Hole and his wife. They formerly belonged to the Methodist Church.

This was the first preaching in this vicinity by the elders of the Reorganization and the first baptisms.

Occasionally an elder came this way or a Saint moved in, but there was no branch organization until May 25, 1873, when at the conclusion of a series of meetings held by E. C. Brand and Joseph S. Lee in the court-house, the brethren proposed to organize a church to be known as the Independence Branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

The following members were present: Henry Etzenhouser, Hannah Etzenhouser (his wife), his two sons, Daniel and Rudolph, Peter J. Hole, Mrs. Maria C. Noble (her husband having died before this date), her two sons, Albert R. and Osmond S., and two daughters, Locinda and Louisa, making in all ten souls. Bro. Henry Etzenhouser was ordained priest of the Aaronic order, and Bro. P. J. Hole was ordained teacher.

For a time the services were held in the court-house, and later a hall over the Chrisman-Sawyer bank was rented.

The year 1873 brought its trials to this little flock, and when the spring of 1874 was introduced it was thought best to discontinue the meetings on account of the long distance to travel, as part of the membership lived several miles south-east of town and one family was three miles northeast of the place of meeting.

The effect of this move is largely told in a letter written by Bro. Henry Etzenhouser, July 23, 1874:

I will write you a few lines to let you know of our whereabouts. Our getting along is slow, we have to stop at times to know whether we are in the right road or not; and so we are trying to struggle through. We are strong in the hope of our salvation although we have not much encouragement. Some outsiders would have joined us if an elder had been here to preach by the Spirit.

During the month of October, 1874, Brn. Hugh Lytle, C. F. Stiles, Charles Herzing, and B. B.

ELDER RODERICK MAY.
Bishop of the Independence Stake.

Brackenbury visited Independence. They continued their efforts until November, when they called the Saints together and reorganized the branch with the old members and two (Brother and Sister Pilgrim) recently baptized; and the branch organization was established the second time with seemingly no better prospects than at its first organization. (In 1878 there is an allusion by Apostle James Caffall to its having been organized by him, but we fail to find any definite statements about a third organization.)

During the spring of 1877 President Joseph Smith visited Independence and did some preaching and work needed at that time. Of this visit President Smith said:

We found a few Saints in charge of Bro. G. W. Pilgrim, the husband of a niece of Elder John E. Page, one of the early apostles of the latter day work. We found Brethren Parker and Clow with their families from Canada at Independence. We also found Hedrickite, Brighamite, Whitmerite, Framptonite, Morrisite, and Strangite brethren, all with the Josephites indulging a fond hope that the full time for favoring Zion, the land of Zion, has fully come.

These various factions were unfriendly to the Reorganization, which encountered opposition not only from the worldlings but from those who could be termed "misguided brethren."

The first account (as mentioned before) was that they met in the court-house. At that time the public building was a much smaller structure than the court-house which occupies the public square at the present time.

Next they held services in a hall. Later they made an effort to secure a building of their own. We give the report of the building committee to the district conference, June 1, 1879:

We have decided to build a brick building forty by sixty feet, and have let the contract and the work will be pushed as fast as possible.

During the year of 1879 the bricks were burned and the building started. This building was dedicated July 6, 1884. At that time there was a membership of about one hundred and seventy-five souls. At a prayer meeting in this church a prophecy was given that the building would not hold the people, and by the year 1887 it was fulfilled, a larger structure was needed, and the branch met and appointed a committee to look up a new location, and empowered them with authority to sell the old church and build a larger one.

Bro. Daniel S. Bowen offered to donate to the branch for the church site a lot eighty feet by one hundred and fifteen feet on West Electric street in the west part of town, just opposite to the Temple Lot. This generous offer was accepted. The corner stone of the present Stone Church was laid April 6, 1888, and in 1902 the land adjoining the church was purchased from Brother Bowen for four thousand dollars.

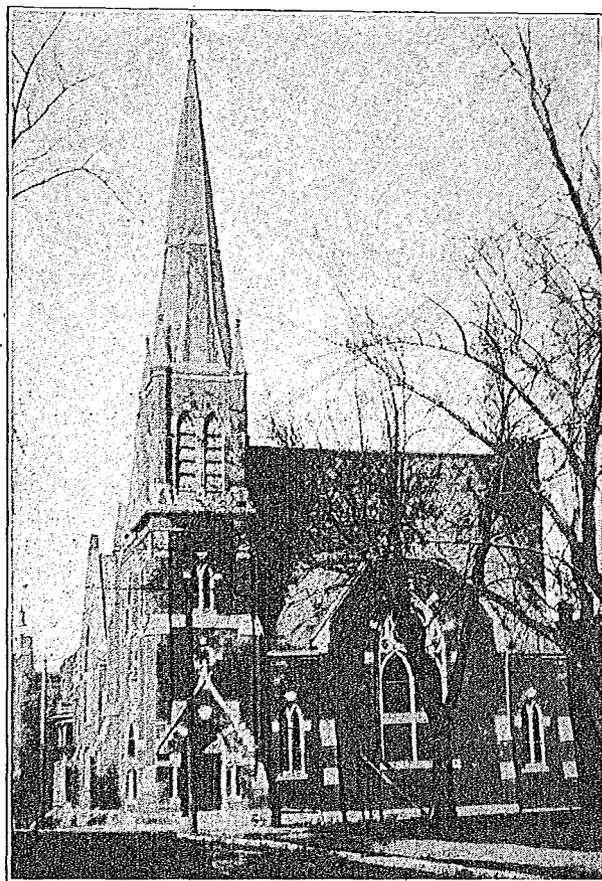

Within the last five years a commodious annex has been built at the rear of the Stone Church. This is used during conference as a dining hall for the accommodation of those attending conference; however, it is occupied by the various auxiliary societies for socials, bazaars, entertainments, and by the young people as a gymnasium.

People are gathering in from the North and the South, the East and the West, and it is encouraging to know that a large percentage of the Saints here own their homes.

The necessities have required additional church facilities and in the south part of the city there is a new church building in course of construction which will seat about five hundred people when completed.

Thirty-seven years ago the branch numbered ten members with no house of worship; to-day the membership is two thousand three hundred and six and the Saints have two buildings for divine services.

Many of the Saints who assembled in the "little brick church" have lived to see the fulfillment of the prophecies with reference to the gathering of the church members to this place and they can say from their personal experience, "The word of the Lord is true."

THE INDEPENDENCE STAKE.

Many years had passed since the organization of the Independence Branch. By their honorable lives the Saints had won the respect of the people among whom they dwelt so that the organizing of a stake was under far more favorable conditions than those experienced in the early days of the branch.

During the conference of 1901 President Joseph Smith presented the word of the Lord to the church assembled as follows: "My people are directed to establish two stakes." Here was a direct command to an advanced step, for hitherto he had said, "It is not expedient in me that there shall be any stakes appointed until I command my people."

In accordance with this command to organize a stake, during the afternoon of April 24, 1901, the work was accomplished. Elder George H. Hulmes was elected president of the stake with Elders W. H. Garrett and J. D. White as counselors.

Bro. Roderick May had been ordained to the office of bishop April 21, 1900, at Lamoni, Iowa, and having selected Brn. W. H. Pease and W. N. Robinson as his counselors they were chosen as the bishopric of the stake.

Since the organization of the stake there have been some changes in the original high council and the present members are: H. R. Mills, W. R. Pickering, James Moler, Alexander McCallum, J. W. Layton, R. J. Parker, W. H. Williamson, Alfred White, C. G. Gould, F. C. Scarcliff, W. O. Hands, and Robert Winning.

The first conference of the stake convened at Holden, Missouri, September 21, 1901. The stake at that time had a membership of less than two thousand five hundred, including one hundred and twenty ministers. At the present time there are the following officers of the ministry living in the stake: First Presidency, 2; apostles, 2; bishops, 3; patriarchs, 2; seventies, 45; high priests, 28; elders, 108; priests, 140; teachers, 65; deacons, 51.

The Independence Stake is composed of seven counties (Jackson, Lafayette, Saline, Cooper, Cass, Johnson, and Pettis) in the State of Missouri; and three counties (Miami, Johnson, and Wyandotte) in the State of Kansas.

The following branches and missions are within the Independence Stake:

Argentine Branch, organized May 4, 1902, owns its church building, membership at last report fifty-six; Armstrong Branch, organized May 10, 1883, owns place of worship, membership at last report two hundred and sixty-nine; Chelsea Park Branch, organized June 16, 1895, possessor of nice chvrc'h building, membership one hundred and thirty-five; Fourth Kansas City Branch, organized January 13, 1907, owns church building formerly occupied by First Kansas City Branch, having bought it from that branch and moved it to the present location. membership at last report eighty-one; Holden Branch, organized 1868, present membership four hundred and thirty-seven, own very nice church building; First Kansas City Branch (now known as Central Branch), organized February 27, 1878, membership at last report three hundred and seven, owns large church; Grandview Branch, meets in a hall, thirty-five members at last report, but in a disorganized condition at the present time; Independence Branch, organized May 25, 1873, owns two church buildings, membership at last report two thousand three hundred and six; Knobnoster Branch, organized May 26, 1889, membership at last report two hundred and eighty, owns church building; Lees Summit Branch, organized January 16, 1873, owns place of worship, membership at last report eighty-one; Malvern Hill Branch, organized September 7, 1909, owns lot for church building, membership at last report twenty-four, Pleasant View Branch, organized February 21, 1893, membership at last report forty-four, hold services in a schoolhouse; Post Oak Branch, organized November 2, 1901, owns six lots and contemplates building a church; Second Kansas City Branch, organized January 12, 1896, owns new church building, membership at last report one hundred and ninety-nine; Warrensburg Branch, organized May 30, 1909, negotiating for lot for church building.

Besides the above-named branches there are several missions in the stake as follows:

Centropolis Mission is near the large machine shops in the eastern part of Kansas City; the Saints there meet in a hall. East Independence Mission is about two and one half miles east of the Independence city limits. The services are held in the homes of the members. Englewood Mission has a regular attendance of Saints and some outsiders who meet in a small chapel about one mile west of Independence city limits. Orchard Home Mission, northeast of Independence, owns a neat chapel and has regular services. Bates City Mission, in the eastern part of the Independence Stake, has an unusual history. During the year 1902, Elder A. H. Parsons preached at this place and a good interest obtained; however, the ministers of the different denominations (perhaps because of the interest the people were mani-

Thirty-seventh Quorum of Deacons, and First Quorum of Teachers.

At Kansas City there have been organized the Seventh Quorum of Priests and the Sixth Quorum of Deacons.

At Holden were organized the Fourth Quorum of Priests and a quorum of teachers.

Since the organization of the stake some changes have taken place. The counselors to Bishop May having resigned, Brn. A. H. Parsons and B. J. Scott were selected to complete the bishopric.

Bro. G. H. Hulmes was removed from the presidency by the hand of death January 24, 1906, and at the following General Conference held at Independence, April, 1906, Bro. G. E. Harrington was called to the office of president of the Independence Stake. He chose for his counselors, Brn. W. H. Carrett and M. H. Bond.

This gives only a meager account of what has been done during the past nine years in the history of the Independence Stake.

PRESENT STATUS OF THE INDEPENDENCE STAKE.

BY ELDER G. E. HARRINGTON, PRESIDENT OF THE STAKE.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—The editors regret that they failed in their effort to secure a photograph of the third member of the Stake Presidency in time to use in this number.

The Independence Stake has a membership of approximately 4,500; fourteen branches; five missions; and covers a territory of ten counties, seven in Missouri and three in Kansas. Independence, the largest branch, has a membership of over half of the stake, numbering over 2,300 members; Holden comes next in number; the First Kansas City Branch next. Independence has the largest number of auxiliaries, viz:

(1) Sunday school, with normal class; (2) Religio-Literary, with normal class; (3) Daughters of Zion; (4) Men's Study League; (5) Sunshine Band; (6) Band of Mercy; (7) Ladies' Aid Society; (8) Laurel Club; (9) South Side Ladies' Club; (10) Sisters' Prayer Union.

In the two Kansas Cities we have seven branches and one mission, and regular Sunday service on the Market Square, weather permitting.

We are crowded in several branches throughout the stake for church room. In the large branches where organization is mostly systematized, complaints are being made for lack of proper conveniences for satisfactory work, particularly so with reference to Independence, where the Sunday school is becoming a great educational power in the church, and it is noticeable in other branches that the attendance is growing, indicating a disposition to study the word of God in all three books. The Religio work is also gaining strength and becoming festing in his preaching) refused to allow him the use of their church buildings for services. The citizens (outsiders) thought he had been treated unjustly, so they contributed labor and financial assistance and thus helped the few Saints who lived there to erect a church for the latter day work. The church is twenty-four feet wide by thirty-five feet long, is a neat, attractive building and was dedicated during the summer of 1909 by President Joseph Smith.

The General Conference of 1907, held at Lamoni, Iowa, recommended that new quorums of the priesthood be organized in such localities as would be most convenient for the majority of the members belonging. Accordingly at Independence there have been organized as follows: First Quorum of Elders, First Quorum of Priests, First Quorum of Deacons, a vigorous aid to development in the lines of its purpose.

It is apparent to us that we should study accommodations and conveniences, so that our future church buildings will afford better advantages for more so in the large branches where necessity exists for organized efforts.

One thing that lifts the soul closer to its Maker, is music; we are slowly moving to the best that is to be secured. Still, an increase in musically inclined Saints is needed and may be obtained by the labors of some of our trained singers and musicians. Greater numbers of voices in intelligent praise to God should be had, and I feel they are coming.

The missionary work in the stake, it is believed, could be carried on to a greater extent if more facilities were at the disposal of that arm of service, such as halls, tents, musical instruments, books, literature, and tract workers,—all now being in demand. Much might be done without them; much more with them.

Advertising is being done in the stake on a larger scale than heretofore, especially so in Kansas City, where so many churches exist and the liability to oblivion from the public knowledge without it.

Elder W. E. LaRue is to be commended for his energetic advertising, and others are falling in line. We find that where subjects of interest are advertised we attract people to our meetings.

The presidency and bishopric of the stake have adopted a schedule which has been approved of by the stake, by which we are, some one or more of us, visiting each branch once in six months, and oftener as occasion requires. (Until recently Patriarch Henry Kemp was upon the schedule, but by reason of age, he had to withdraw). By this means the body was put in touch with the influences of the officers regularly and we believe to their advantage.

The presidency has encouraged the following procedure to be carried out by the officers: The priests to be certain that they have visited the entire membership once in six months, and more as occasion requires. The teachers to visit the membership till they are acquainted with them and as often as directed and necessity requires. The deacons to learn all the membership and visit to this end as occasion requires. By law the priests are to visit the house of each member; the teacher to see that the Saints meet together often; the deacon to see to the financing of the branch, looking after the physical comfort of the membership in public meetings and at educational purposes; for general assemblies, Sunday school classes, Religio classes, priesthood quorum meetings, and other auxiliaries, so that any class of work desired and helpful may be carried on with the greatest facility and effectiveness.

The gathering together in Zion is affording a wonderful opportunity for development. The concentration of forces upon permanent objects is sure to produce excellent results,—by classification and specialization in subjects, dividing responsibilities. Nothing else can equal the results obtainable under such conditions, and we see the tendencies in this direction growing. Some minds are being attracted to one class of information, others to another, and so on, until we are in such varied states of mental activity that it keeps one busy to keep in touch with the doings of the people.

The localization and reorganization of the quorums in accordance with the provisions made by General Conference, are steps toward bringing about an increased knowledge in the priesthood, which is absolutely essential in a growing body, such as is in the center stake. The importance of this step will not be appreciated till some experience has been had.

Systematizing work is going on in our branches, their homes—hence our counsel. The elders in branches are to administer to the sick, arrange for prayer meetings and preaching services where places are available in districts outlined for their operation. Priesthood meetings are held monthly in large branches in quorum capacity, also once a month as local workers; general priesthood meetings quarterly; in the smaller branches, regular monthly priesthood meetings. We believe the priesthood should have a course of study provided to make it more progressive.

With many good Saints dwelling in peace; with splendid workers in the auxiliaries and some excellent church officers; with the Sanitarium, Physician to the church; with members of the First Presidency, Presiding Bishopric, Quorum of Twelve, and Order of Evangelists; with the prospect of the establishment of the Order of Enoch, we have many advantages over the Saints of the past. Encouraging thoughts come to us. Believing that a large percentage of the membership in the stake are trying to live in the light of God, we feel to say, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

BRIEF HISTORY OF "ZION'S ENSIGN."

BY ELDER W. H. GARRETT, FORMERLY EDITOR OF "ZION'S ENSIGN."

To Bro. William Crick, formerly of Plano, Illinois, later of Lamoni, Iowa, and now of Independence, Missouri, is largely due the credit for the inception of this now widely known and influential paper. While at work as a compositor on the HERALD at Lamoni, the need of a publication of this character occurred to him, and while some others at the time thought it impracticable, his active brain saw the wide field of usefulness open for a publication that would represent the interests of the church at Independence.

Removing with his family to Independence in the year 1888, he purchased the Independence Gazette, a weekly secular paper, taking possession August 3 of that year, and continuing its publication until fall, when he disposed of his interest to Bro. Joseph Luff. About a year later he formed a partnership with Bro. Elias Etzenhouser in the repurchase of the Gazette, and some time after suggested to Brother Etzenhouser his cherished plan of a church paper at Independence, which after due consideration they decided to attempt.

The matter of a proper title being duly considered, one proposed by Bro. John A. Robinson, "Zion's Ensign," met with most favor, and on January 3, 1891, number 1, volume 1, of Zion's Ensign, was issued with the names of Brn. John A. Robinson and F. G. Pitt editors, Brother Crick having charge of the business and mechanical departments.

Of course there were difficulties to meet, and doubts were expressed by some of their friends that the publication would meet with sufficient encouragement to justify the venture at that time. But Brother Crick was impressed with the need of a representative at the "center place" in its development from time to time, and having confidence that it would succeed, agreed to assume all responsibility for the first two years of its existence. At the following April conference at Kirtland, Ohio, he secured nearly one thousand subscribers, and some donations, one brother giving him fifty dollars to encourage the work. This gave them a substantial basis upon which to work.

The first number was issued on the Gazette form, a six column, four-page paper, sixteen by twenty-two. This form continued until the close of the first volume, July 18, 1891, volume two beginning with the next week's issue, July 25, when the form was changed to a five-column, eight-page paper, thirteen by eighteen, an entire new "dress" having been provided,—headings, and body type, giving its face a bright, clean appearance. "Our motto: 'All truth,' " in the heading, has changed to "Our creed: All truth," as it now is. While the first volume was a "patent inside" (the paper bought with the inside pages already printed), the new volume was all "home print," and has so continued.

With the close of volume 1, Brn. J. A. Robinson and William Crick retired, and the interest of the latter was taken by Bro. Elias Etzenhouser, Bro. Pitt continuing as editor, and Brother Etzenhouser as business manager. But with the issuing of volume 3, number 1, Brother Crick was again business manager, with Brethren Pitt and Etzenhouser as editors. At the General Conference at Independence that year, Brother Pitt was assigned a mission to Northern Illinois, and Brother Etzenhouser was editor and Brother Crick business manager, though Brother Pitt did not cease editorial work until about July. The first "daily" was issued this year with a list of four thousand subscribers, during the conference.

January 20, 1894, Brother Etzenhouser severed his connection with the Ensign, Brn. William Crick, R. May, F. G. Pitt, and W. H. Williamson being the new owners, Brother Crick taking charge as managing editor and business manager. November 3 of that year, Bro. Joseph Luff secured the interests of Brethren Pitt, May, and Williamson, Brother Luff assuming editorial control, Brother Crick continuing as associate editor and business manager. Soon after this the old Presbyterian church on the corner of Osage and Lexington streets, was purchased and remodeled, and the Ensign plant was then removed to that building. Brother Luff purchased the interest of Brother Crick, who retired February 29, 1896, but his health failing, Brother Crick again took up the work as sole owner, and so continued until the sale to the church. On June 13, of that year (1896), Bro. W. H. Garrett was placed in editorial charge, continuing in that capacity until June 24, 1909, when he retired to devote his entire time to the increasing demands of the stake work as counselor to the president of the Independence Stake.

Sometime during the year 1898, a new building was erected by Brother Crick for the Ensign, on the west boundary of the same lot on which the old building stands, which is still occupied, although it is now much too small; more room is badly needed.

November 10, 1898, Brn. E. L. Kelley and Frank Criley, on behalf of the committee appointed by conference to arrange for the purchase of the Ensign plant, took possession. Bro. J. W. Luff, who had been with the paper from the first issue, was made business manager, who retired to accept service with Brother Crick in the foundry business, June 13, 1901, being succeeded by Bro. C. Ed Miller, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. Brother Miller resigned and returned to Pittsburg, October 29, 1903, and Bro. W. H. Deam, of Chicago, Illinois, was appointed to succeed him, and is still occupying successfully.

Upon the retirement of Brother Garrett as editor, Bro. Heman Hale Smith, of Lamoni, was appointed editor, and continued until September 2, 1909, when he returned to Iowa to fill his engagement as principal in one of the public schools at Harlan, Iowa, and Brother Deam was made managing editor, Brn. Gomer Wells, H. O. Smith, Mark H. Siegfried, T. W. Williams, and H. Hale Smith being appointed contributing editors, which is the present arrangement.

The Ensign has steadily increased in favor, as its subscription lists show. Thousands have been strengthened and comforted by its weekly visits, and very many have been brought to accept the gospel of Jesus Christ solely through its influence, not hearing a sermon until after their baptism. It is the missionary paper of the church, and is effectively occupying the field it was intended to reach. Only eternity will reveal the good it has accomplished under the blessing of the heavenly Father, to whom be the glory and the honor. W. H. GARRETT.

"In the afternoon of the 6th, conference having convened in the city of Amboy, Joseph set forth his call and claims to the presidency of the church. . . . Upon the close of his address he was, upon motion, received as the president of the church and was ordained under the hands of President William Marks, and Apostles Z. H. Gurley, Samuel Powers, and W. W. Blair."—Memoirs of W. W. Blair.

THE SANITARIUM.

BY ELDER JOSEPH LUFF, PHYSICIAN IN CHARGE OF THE SANITARIUM.

Thus saith the Spirit unto the church:

1. It is the will of the Lord that a sanitarium, a place of refuge and help for the sick and afflicted, be established by the church, at Independence, Missouri, as my servant Joseph Smith has already stated to you. This should be done as soon as it is found to be practicable, and without unnecessary delay. The Presiding Bishop and his counselors and the bishopric of the Independence Stake should take counsel together in locating and establishing this sanitarium.

2. It is also expedient that these should be assisted by the advice and counsel of one of my servants who is acquainted with the laws of health and the practice of medicine, and who may have charge when the institution is established. It is in accordance with the instruction given to my servant Joseph Smith that my servant Joseph Luff, who has been giving his attention to the study of medicine and has been preparing himself for usefulness in this direction, be associated with this sanitarium as a medical director and physician to the church and be put in charge, that he may be an assistant to those who seek the aid of this institution of the church, in his spiritual office and his calling as a physician, with those who from time to time may be called to administer in laying hands upon the afflicted and sick, where they may be removed from the influences and environments unfavorable to the exercise of proper faith unto the healing of the sick. And this my servant Joseph Luff may do and retain and exercise his apostleship:

Obedient to the above, received through President Joseph Smith, and approved by the General Conference of April, 1906, the designated parties have been active, and the church is to-day in possession of a sixty-five room structure (including closets, baths, and other accessories), its basement built of rock and its three upper stories of brick, partially furnished and equipped, and in operation as per the divine requirement—incorporated and known as the "Independence Sanitarium."

It is situated on an elevated piece of ground about one mile west of the public square, and about half a mile from the Saints' church, on what is known as the Blue Avenue boulevard. Its dimensions are sixty by one hundred feet, exclusive of the porches which are built around each story and extend across the entire front, and backward on each side. Five acres are included in the grounds connected, and its location is about central thereon.

The one indicated in the foregoing communication has been placed in charge, and is giving a portion of his time each day to the duties demanding his attention. Doctor (Brother) W. E. Messenger has been installed as house physician and business manager, Sr. Jennie Weed is matron and chief nurse, and Bro. David Reese is in charge of the building and all mechanical features connected therewith. Several young ladies have been admitted to be trained as nurses, and arrangements are under way for regular lectures to them by competent physicians upon required subjects. A medical council for consultation in cases demanding its action has been selected, consisting of the house physician and physician in charge and Doctors (Brethren) Joseph Mather and G. Leonard Harrington.

It may be of interest to your readers to know that every morning at eight o'clock all the attaches of the institution and all patients who are at liberty and willing to do so, attend a meeting for prayer in the class room, just as a family of Saints would do at home. Also on Sunday afternoons at 2.30 o'clock, religious exercises consisting of prayer, song, and a short address, are occasionally held as the conditions of inmates may permit. Necessarily the number attending from without the building at these services must be limited, so as to avoid noise or excitement.

Connected with the work of incorporating the institution a board of directors was chosen, consisting direct command of God—one in Kirtland, Ohio, and the other in Independence, Missouri. A temple and a sanitarium. One having special reference to the needs of the souls, and the other of the bodies of men, yet each so correlated in service as to include in its general mission the aim of the other.

Three quarters of a century of history lies between the laying of the foundations of these two structures, and few pens would be equal to the task of portraying in deserved color and detail what the pages of that history represent. Retrospective thought takes us back to gaze upon a child of destiny—a lad within his teens, unpanoplied save by truth, and unfortified save by conviction, that he had been entrusted with a commission and a message from God, essaying to lay the foundation of the most stupendous work of the age, and asserting unhesitatingly that into that work all the characteristics of President F. M. Smith, Elder G. E. Harrington, Bishops E. L. Kelley, G. H. Hilliard, Ellis Short, R. May, and the writer. The first three, in the order named, to be president, secretary, and treasurer, and all to serve until and subject to General Conference action at its next sessions.

Prior to the dedication of the Sanitarium, which took place December 15, 1909, (of which a full account was published recently in both of the church papers and is here unnecessary,) the Board of Directors received by revelation, through President Joseph Smith, instructions as to the purpose, character, and management of the institution. These are incorporated in the minutes of the proceedings kept by the secretary and will govern the management in their work.

The Reorganization is therefore to-day in possession of two structures which have been built by of former dispensations of divine grace and all the essential features of present fact and future development in that line would dovetail in demonstration of his claim. Illiterate as the world goes, yet putting his proposition against the letters and judgment of the race. No human treasury from which to draw the essentials for even his first advance step, yet confident that what he had been entrusted with carried with its faithful execution a draft upon the treasury of miracle and grace in heaven which would be honored at every presentation, and prove the means of access to all needful support on earth. Brander by the self-constituted custodians of religious sentiment as a "false prophet,"—an impostor, an ignoramus, and a knave—too insignificant to be worthy of more attention than a street waif, yet startling the civilized nations into active antagonism, protest, denunciation, and more than all into a profound and persistent examination into the foundations upon which the soul hopes of nations had for centuries been resting and pioneering a movement which was to prove inconoclastic to established creeds, and eventually secure for itself "the right of way" in its claim to be the "marvelous work and a wonder" of Isaiah's prophetic forecasting—the kingdom and government of God in absolute verity.

Hurriedly skipping from page to page of that history, in our zeal to learn what have been the corroborative testimonies as to previous interest and coöperation in this strange movement; what the riper judgment of the world's Dianas regarding this "freak" in religion, and also what the developing character, experience and later complexion of the movement itself, we stand almost transfixed before the spectacle that rewards our search, and are constrained to admit that the habitation of God has surely been with men and all creation has borne witness of the attendance of his power upon this supposed anomaly.

The unparalleled record of achievement for years along its missionary lines is accounted for only by a recognition of the divine accompaniment to its march of service. The answer of skies and air and sea and land to the requirements of its prophecies, the solemn and voluntary testimony of more than a hundred thousand human witnesses of its divine attestations to them upon observance of its conditions, the eager march of creeds toward the dissecting table to be dismembered in some degree, that they may be freed from the incubus of some feature or features once sworn to as divine, but now adjudged in the light of advancing intelligence and science to be damnable heresies, or at least unworthy of belief; the attitude of nations and individuals who look or list with bated breath upon every gathering cloud above or tremor of the ground beneath; the unmistakable voice from Palestine, that tells of rejuvenation, rehabilitation, and reoccupation by the posterity of her long scattered and downtrodden refugees; the spots on free America's soil that have been sown with saintly flesh and watered with martyr's blood; the "dark and cloudy day" within the church's realm, with its details of worldly ambition, selfishness, apostasy, and crime; the rise and sway of aspirants and impostors, the desecration of the heritage of God by the introduction of corruptive doctrines and practices, making the name of Latter Day Saint a nauseating stench to mankind, and the final rejection by God of the church of his creation; all this and a thousand other untouched details go to make up the score of history till we reach the page which records the dawn of the morn of reorganization, and judged in the light of the advance movements of the young man whose lamp of earth life went out at Carthage, Illinois, in 1844, proclaim him to have been a seer and his work an ordination of God.

With the sounding of the tocsin of reorganization in 1852 begun a reënunciation of the old truths and a retraveling of the old paths,—a raising of the old standards, a denunciation of the evils that had invaded the estate of Zion, and a consecrated effort to redeem the name of Joseph the Seer and the church of God created through his instrumentality from the odium of infamy, heaped upon them by those whom his death gave opportunity to swing into place and power. The son of the Martyr is now at the helm assigned of God—the prophet and president of the church—and history begins anew and has continued till in this year of divine grace, 1910, the nation is ready to give credit to what its courts have declared to be a truth, viz, that Mormonism, so-called, as proclaimed, lived, and defended by its human founder, and as published and lived by the Reorganization, is a religious institution against which no charge of disloyalty or unchristian demeanor can truthfully be maintained. This recognition is the direct result of and has been earned by the efforts of the Reorganization during the fifty-eight years of its existence, and without the surrender of a single item of the faith of the church in the days of the Seer. Into every nation and city and hamlet and home where its representatives have gone, the spiritual instructions which characterized the labors of the early church have followed the Reorganization, and their identity in faith and fruits has been attested. It is not in the writer's power to give the exact number of church buildings erected throughout the United States or elsewhere, but they are quite numerous and its strongholds and warmest welcomes from those without its ranks are to be found where their people are best understood, and especially in the places from whence they were once driven, because misunderstood.

Our Sanitarium, at its dedication, was lauded and welcomed by city officials and professional men, regardless of religion or other learning—and stands out by its very existence and location, and with joy the citizens and surrounding country people welcomed its advent, another evidence of the divinely prophetic character of the utterance of the departed Seer through whom the Lord said to the Saints in June, 1834: "Carefully gather together as much in one region as can be consistently with the feelings of the people: and behold I will give you favor and grace in their eyes, that you may rest in peace and safety."

The prophet, through whom the command to build came, has grown old and is enfeebled and unable to much longer carry the weight of official responsibility, having entered his seventy-eighth year, and closed the fiftieth of his presidency over the church; but his soul is made glad over the construction of the building and the conditions that have made it practicable, and he can lay down his implements of service at the bidding of him who gave him life and official responsibility, with the comforting knowledge that his prophecy delivered many years ago has been fulfilled; namely, that he did not know just how many years he would live, but that it would be at least long enough for it to be possible for a man to walk from Lamoni, Iowa, to Independence, Missouri, and take his meals at regular hours, and spend his nights at the home of Latter Day Saints along the entire route, and also till the name of Latter Day Saint was made honorable in the world. Thank God, the fulfillment is in evidence.

The position of physician in charge of the Sanitarium is accepted as a divine trust by the writer, and his work therein will be done in all its details in the hope that its entirety will bear the inspection and elicit the approval of God. The intention is to make it comply with the environments of the word given—"a place of refuge and help for the sick and afflicted . . . where they may be removed from the influences and environments unfavorable to the exercise of proper faith with the healing of the sick." All those coming under the immediate supervision of the one in charge may look upon him as "first a minister and next a physician." To preserve and nourish their faith in God and Christ and in his ordinances will be the first aim, auxiliary to this will be the medical service if desired. Care will be taken to exclude everything that would create an "environment" or "influence" "unfavorable" to this. It is desired that an atmosphere as intensely and profoundly spiritual as might be expected in the Kirtland Temple shall pervade the place, and that it shall be in reality a sacred resort. Church privileges will be supplied in prayer meetings or otherwise to the extent justified by the general condition of patients from time to time, and every effort will be made to preserve homelike surroundings as nearly as practicable.

To us it is a house of God, and our ingoings and outcomings should all accord with that idea. We shall not feel ourselves held necessarily by any rules that usually govern public hospitals, for the word of the Spirit to us is that it should not be utilized as such. Hence, whoever labors within it must expect to subordinate all preconceptions to the one paramount thought of honoring God by blessing his suffering children. To this end it was commanded to be built. To this end it was dedicated. To this end our counsels within and regarding it are being held. To this end we are laboring and earnestly praying, and to this end we ask the moral support and prayerful interest of all. If all are faithful to this trust the Sanitarium and its internal record will prove it to be a blessed factor in promoting the spiritual interests of the church and the well-being of its members—a monument to the praise of God.

MY ACQUAINTANCE WITH PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH AT HOME AND ABROAD.

BY BISHOP R. C. EVANS.

Saturday morning, June 8, 1878, I left the city of London, (Ontario), with a party of Saints en route to the Corinth conference. We changed cars at the city of Saint Thomas. Entering the car I beheld President Joseph Smith for the first time. The prophet was then but forty-five years of age. His hair was black; his eyes dark and piercing; his voice tender and friendly. His laugh was like a sweet melody. When I was introduced to him he grasped my hand in his big, strong hand. Looking me straight in the eyes, he said, "Good morning, Brother Richard,—glad to meet you." Oh, that "Good morning," so kindly spoken, seemed to change the surroundings, and I was made to feel that I was in the presence of a true man.

Arriving at Corinth, the conference was organized with President Smith, W. H. Kelley, and Bishop Blakeslee in the limelight. Brother Joseph preached but once. I do not recall much of the sermon, but one thing impressed me then (and it has often been made apparent since), that he was a man of just principles, love animated his heart, sympathy for the weak and depressed was breathed out in every sentence of his speech. Those early impressions have been confirmed as the years have glided by. In the years of our close association I have found him to be a man of excellent wisdom, always just, considerate, patient, upright, generous, and kind.

Years glided by with flying footsteps. In 1882 I was called to the ministry. From that time till the present, his letters, (and our correspondence extends over a quarter of a century) are all carefully preserved. I regard them as being among the most sacred of my possessions, freighted as they are with wisdom and knowledge, illuminated by tenderness and affection; strong because of their spiritual adaptability under the many soul-trying experiences that I have been called to pass through, as a branch, district, and mission president, also as one of his counselors in the First Presidency.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH AS A PRESIDING OFFICER.

I have been honored in that I have occupied a position by his side, while he presided over district, mission, and General Conferences, and there perhaps as much as any one place has he revealed his real character. There have his faith in God, his proverbial patience, his matchless courage, and unblemished honor been tried and tested. If ever the divine paradox of saintly power in frail humanity was exemplified, it has been in him,—gentle, yet forceful, loving yet determined, bold yet cautious, mindful of many interests yet responsible alone to God. Like a guardian angel he has stood mid stormy scenes in defense of the weak, the friendless, and times hot tears would channel down his sad face. Some one has said, "There is a sacredness in tears, they are not the mark of weakness but of power, they speak more eloquence than ten thousand tongues. They are prevailing orators. Tender, holy, and sanctifying are human tears,—crystals of affection and pity, jewels of the soul."

As a parliamentarian, he has had few, if any equals in the church. Who that has attended the General Conferences, can fail to recall how when others were in the chair and the way was dark and all was tangled up, when Joseph took the chair soon he had matters straightened out and sweet deserted. He has ever been the defender of the downtrodden and oppressed. He has thrown himself in the thickest of the battle to protect those who have been misunderstood in the hour of their adversity.

I have gazed upon him when merciless and cruel criticism was hurled against him from where it should never have been expected. There he stood, dignity and pity shining from his tear-stained face, till instinctively my mind reverted to the Master of men, and in soliloquy I have said, There is the most perfect representative of the manger-cradled King who taught, saying, "Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth: but I say unto you, That ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. . . . Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you."

While most men would have retaliated, he pardoned, pitied, and rendered good for evil, while at peace came in and all were glad that Brother Joseph still lived.

I have been with him in some of the most difficult cases that have been before the High Council of the church. As he performed the task his high calling imposed upon him, he was justice and pity personified, while guarding the sacred honor of the church, yet his great heart was ever throbbing in sympathy for the misguided one who perhaps had stumbled amid the darkness and storm of human temptation.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH IN HIS HOME.

For years I have been a guest at his home at intervals. While we must tread softly o'er the threshold of his private life, yet justice prompts me to record some special pen pictures of his home life. Some one has said, "The home that has honored God with an altar of devotion, may well be called blessed, it is this which makes home a type of heaven, the dwelling place of God." Through the years, while I from time to time have been under the home tree, Joseph's custom was to have family worship.

Another habit of his was to be the first to rise every morning. Always something to do,—the cow and horse to attend to or wood to saw and carry in. It seemed good to see the cow and horse, and even the feathered flocks all run to him as he approached. How different with some men,—the animals run from them, fearing a blow, but Joseph was kind and gentle to those dumb animals, and even they bear testimony, in no uncertain way, as to the man. Those who have seen the prophet sawing the wood and carrying it in to the wood box will certify that he was a splendid chore boy.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH ABROAD.

When I have been with him in our travels through Canada, many parts of the United States, England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales, he was always generous, thoughtful, and unselfish.

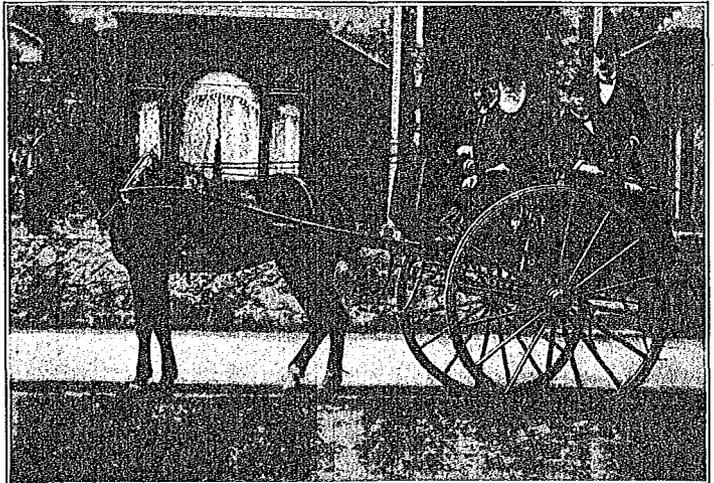

Well do I remember acting as his guide around the historic and world-famed Niagara. We arrived at the battleground of the war of 1812. At Lundy's Lane, I faithfully pointed to the different places where the British soldiers had defeated the American men of war, showing where the British had killed the Americans, and then piled them together with fence rails and burned them, while others were forced over the bank into the Niagara River. Joseph mildly turned on me and quietly said, "Come with me to Bunker's Hill, Lexington, and Concord, and I will show you where the Americans did not run." Ah, there was his weakness, he was an American!

When it was decided that Joseph and I should go to the British Isles, we left New York, and the first night on board I took sick, I soon gave evidence of my well-known generosity in that I gave my all to feed the fish. Burns said that "toothache is the hell of all diseases." Surely the bard was ignorant of the tortures of mal de mer. The first night out, Brother Joseph took my shoes off and helped me into bed, and in every way possible ministered to my needs. He was kindness personified during the entire trip, and I tried to repay him, in that while he was sick on land I did my best to fill some of his appointments. All through the voyage he never lost a meal, and once he rose at three o'clock in the morning to see the sun rise. Well, in this, at least, we differed. I had full confidence in the brilliant king of day, and was satisfied that he would rise all right, and so I snoozed on.

While in London we saw King Edward and his good queen, as also many of the great ones of the earth; but we did not speak as they passed by. Here I must give you another pen picture of the man of God: While in Ireland we saw many beggars on the streets. One in particular we refer to, who was a young girl without shoes or stockings; she had no hat and very little clothing of any kind. She approached us, and holding up a beautiful rose, requested us to buy, as she was hungry and tired. The rain was falling and it was cold. Joseph's heart was touched, tears filled his eyes, his hand found the bottom of his pocket, and out came all the change he had. He gave her the money. When she had gone, I said, "Joseph, she may work that game on hundreds every day."

He turned upon me and said, "R. C., that may be true; but I would rather be imposed upon a thousand times by the undeserving than to refuse to help one poor soul that was in need." I was silenced, but he was glad I was there, for I it was who had to pay the tram fare to our place of abode,—he was "broke." Again it could have been said, "Behold the man."

One day while looking over London for the last time, Joseph said, "R. C., what do you think of London?"

I replied, "The half hath not been told me. London, mighty London! What do you think of it, Brother Joseph?"

He smiled and said, "Well, it is a pretty nice place, but I don't think I'll buy it."

President Smith has been like a father to me, and in a thousand ways has endeared himself to me by ties that are stronger than death. Under his hands I was ordained to the office of apostle in 1897. He also ordained me as one of the First Presidency in 1902; and last of all, he it was who ordained me bishop in 1909.

His long and useful life has been a benediction to his fellow-men. He now with dimmed vision and faltering step is growing weary 'neath the weight of seventy-eight years,—years full of kind words, honest deeds, and pure thoughts.

The world's way has been to kill the good, the true, the noble, and in after centuries, remembering their virtues, they chisel on ice-cold stone, the warm love words that should have cheered them adown life's thorn clad path.

Let the love-rose bloom for Brother Joseph now! Truth is not flattery! Come, let us, on the day of his fiftieth anniversary as a priest and prophet of God (April 6, 1910), crown the living martyr with the well-merited title, Saint Joseph the Just.

From the West and East we have received from time to time information that is calculated to gladden the hearts of the Saints. The ministry of Bro. E. C. Briggs in Iowa, is creating a lively interest, attended with great success, aided by Brn. John McIntosh, George Morey, Leland, and others. From Brother Burnley, Erie County, Pennsylvania, we have received information that he and others in that region have held on to the faith, and he has been preaching zealously the old doctrine. In Illinois and other regions the work is moving onward.—SAINTS' HERALD, April, 1860.

The Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will be held at Amboy, Lee County, Illinois, to continue four days, commencing April 6, 1860.—SAINTS' HERALD, April, 1860.

A GROUP OF WELL-KNOWN PASTORS.

During the past few years there has grown up in the church a very wholesome respect for the importance and effectiveness of the pastoral arm of church work. Probably more able men are now devoting all or a part of their time to pastoral work than at any other time in our history.

The group here presented is not intended to cover the ground exhaustively. Probably there are others engaged in this class of work who are just as widely and favorably known as those here represented. The group is merely representative. It covers a field from Los Angeles to Philadelphia, and Toronto to Saint Louis.

Elder T. W. Williams, member of the Quorum of High Priests, is pastor of the church in Los Angeles, California. He has been president of that branch since January 26, 1900. Prior to that time he was pastor of the church in Council Bluffs for a period of five years. Under his presidency the church in Los Angeles has increased from a membership of one hundred and forty-five to a membership of over three hundred. Of pastoral work Elder Williams says:

The man who can set ten men to work and keep them at it is of far more worth to any institution than the man who will try to do ten men's work himself.

The pastor must be himself. He must be humble and unassuming. He must be patient, yet firm and decisive; non-committal, yet ready to speak out with no uncertainty when occasion demands. He must be dignified, yet approachable.

He must be original. While recognizing that he is but an infinitesimal part of an infinite whole, he must be and act that part. He must give attention to details. His ear must be closed to personal criticism, and his tongue paralyzed when scandal is abroad. He must endure all things, bear all things. He must be kind and long-suffering. He must bear everybody's troubles as well as his own. He must listen to a recital of the trials of everybody else, but woe betide him if he communicates his difficulties to another.

Some of these traits a pastor should have. I am talking about the other fellow, not myself. My deficiency has enabled me to realize what a successful pastor should possess in native and acquired qualifications.

Elder Williams gives a good sentiment to those mistaken mortals who think that a city pastor has a "soft snap." No one will impeach Brother Williams, because he is known as a worker, as are the other members of this group. He says:

ELDER J. M. TERRY,
Oakland, California.

No man should attempt the work of a pastor if he thinks he is to have a life of ease. There is no work in the church which makes a greater draft on the nervous and mental powers of an individual.

Walter W. Smith, of the Quorum of High Priests, has been pastor of the church at Philadelphia for about six years. Brother Walter is well known to the church at large, partly because of his work in Sunday school and Religio normal work, and his position as vice-president of Zion's Religio-Literary Society.

At the time when this article was prepared Brother Walter was in the hospital, having just undergone a serious and almost fatal operation. Consequently he could not respond to our request for a paragraph on pastoral work. His work in Philadelphia will speak for itself and the value of systematic pastoral work. He has the hearty, loving support of his church; and with them we pray that he may soon be restored to health.

Elder J. A. Tanner, member of the Quorum of High Priests, is pastor of the church at Saint Louis, Missouri. This is his fourth year in that city. Prior to that time he labored for ten years as president of the Northeastern Missouri District. He says of pastoral work:

One thing that will give a minister an opportunity to get close to the people is to so live and work that he may gain their confidence. As the sick man lays his case before the physician, or the business man in need his case before the lawyer, so does the member lay his case before the pastor, very frequently making his life bare because he feels the need of spiritual help, and feels that he must have a spiritual adviser. He who will not betray this expressed confidence can do good and prepare souls for God's kingdom.

since March 5, 1906. In a way his work has been different from that which comes to the average pastor. Under his presidency the branch membership has increased from one hundred and fifty to six hundred and sixty-six.

Bishop R. C. Evans began his campaign in the Majestic Theater in the winter of 1905, and has just closed his sixth season. These meetings have been largely responsible for the increase of membership, and yet a great deal of the success of the meetings is the result of Elder McLean's ability as an organizer. Under his direction and presidency about one hundred Saints are personally engaged in assisting in these meetings, some as bill-posters, some as ushers, others in the choir, and so on. The expenses of the campaign average about one thousand dollars per season, and the financial part is managed by Elder McLean, who says that he has never had any difficulty in securing sufficient money.

The work of caring for the incoming members is important, and under his direction the local priest-the autumn of 1906 and the winter of 1907; its total value said to be about eighteen thousand dollars with only one thousand dollars indebtedness at the present time.

Elder McLean acknowledges the help of the auxiliary societies and also the Ladies' Aid Society. He says: "Anybody with a grouch against the sewing circle is no friend of mine." Also:

I have aimed to keep the priesthood in unity, and the branch in harmony with all auxiliary societies. This being done, the rest works out easily and pleasantly. In my experience I have not yet known what it is to struggle to keep up an interest, but I do know what it is to hustle to keep up with the interest, especially when Brother Evans keeps on preaching to many hundreds of outsiders every Sunday. As yet I have seen no sacrifice. It has been a busy, happy time. If you want a good time, just live in a big branch of good Latter Day Saints and you will find life worth living.

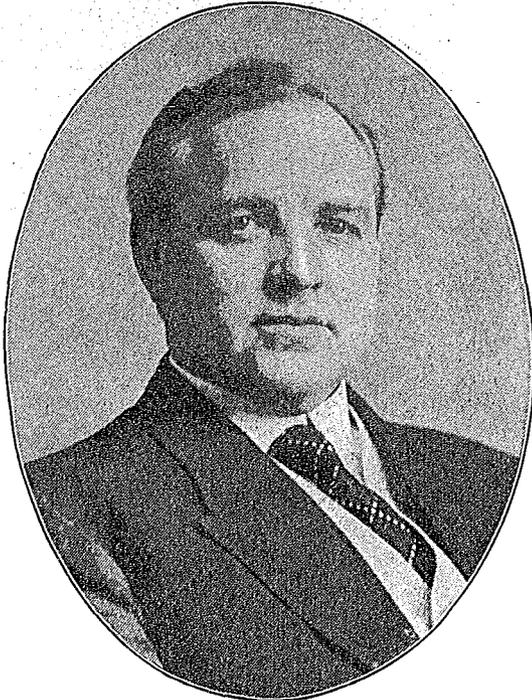

ELDER T. W. CHATBURN,
Salt Lake City, Utah.

Elder Charles Fry, of the Quorum of High Priests, has been pastor of the church at Burlington, Iowa, since the spring of 1907. He has also done pastoral work in Omaha and Council Bluffs. He says of pastoral work:

No work requires a more complete consecration than that of the pastor over the flock of Christ. He must come in close touch with those whom he would help,—closer than any other can come. To be able to thus come close to humanity he must first get close to God,—the closer to God, the closer to humanity. He must work with God for the uplifting of men.

ELDER V. M. GOODRICH,
Saint Joseph, Missouri.

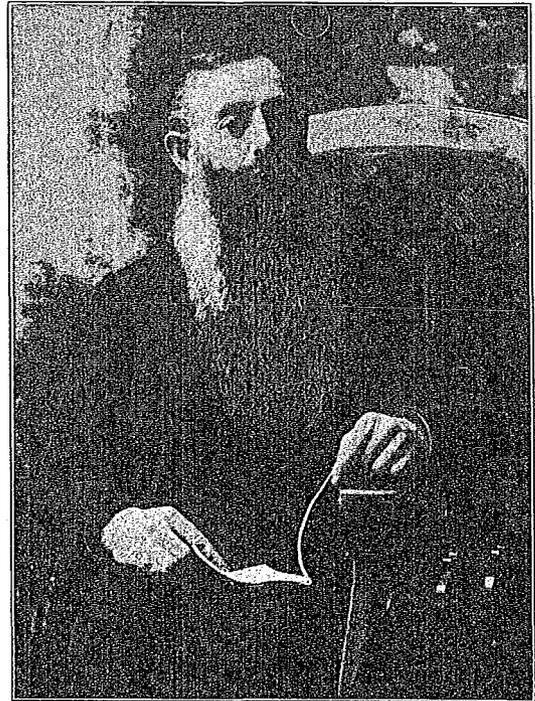

Elder V. M. Goodrich, member of the Quorum of High Priests, has been pastor of the church in Saint Joseph, Missouri, since 1907. He has also labored in Kirtland, Ohio, District, and the Saint Louis District. He says of pastoral work:

A pastor to be successful must have a love for this kind of work, and be willing to do it. He must love his brethren and humanity, and be ready to do anything for them when opportunity affords. If the pastor will keep in close touch with the local ministry, advising with them in all lines of work and measures to be adopted, he will find this not only of great benefit to himself, but it will greatly aid in unifying both the priesthood and the membership. My experience is that where the priesthood are at an agreement, there will not be much difficulty in keeping the membership in peace and unity.

Elder J. F. Mintun, one of the seven presidents of seventies, has labored in Des Moines for nine years. He has also labored in Omaha and Sioux City. Technically he is not in pastoral work, he is laboring as city missionary, but so much of his work is pastoral in its nature that he is given a place in this group. He says of the city missionary:

One to be an effective city pastor or missionary must be full of love, but of quick discernment, and not hasty in judgment; patient with those who are out of the way, yet not shrink to see that the law is executed; have faith sufficient that though the way in which he may be led seems dark and without promise of immediate results, he will not be less enthusiastic in his labor. One occupying such a responsible position should be a wise servant, yet harmless as a dove.

ELDER J. F. MINTUN,
Des Moines, Iowa.

Elder W. E. LaRue, member of the High Priests' Quorum, is pastor of the Central Church of Kansas City, Missouri. Before coming to Kansas City he was engaged in pastoral work in Rock Island, Philadelphia, Jonesport, Stonington, and Cleveland. Elder LaRue says:

The missionary of the church is to break the ground and sow the seed; the pastor is to watch, nurture, and cultivate the tender plants of God's kingdom, and carefully enlarge the borders of the field of service. The missionary lays the foundation; the pastor builds upon it. He develops, polishes, and prepares and fits the "lively stones" of God's "spiritual house"—the church. The missionary blasts the rough stone from its position; the pastor as the sculptor hews and polishes it. The pastor is the under shepherd of the flock; Christ is the chief shepherd, and under the leadership of his Spirit the pastor must lead his flock out into pastures green and feed the lambs and the sheep with suitable diet adapted to their condition.

But how do men become pastors? Some will say by special favoritism; but I should say that the competent pastor is the man whom God has called and given qualifications and a heart for the work.

Elder J. M. Terry, member of the Quorum of High

Priests, has been pastor of the Oakland church since May, 1902. Prior to that date he had labored in Saint Joseph, Chicago, Stewartsville, Millersburg, and other cities. He says of pastoral work:

In all my pastoral work I find the keynote to success and growth in love, and the motto has been, "Tis better far to rule by love than fear." I have ever tried to impress upon the Saints that their service should be voluntary and moved by a love for God and his people, also the divinity of the grace of patience and endurance. While at times the stern letter of the law must be enforced, yet as a rule we think better to follow the blessed example of our Savior when he said to the sinning woman, "Neither do I condemn thee; go thy way and sin no more." This is good advice: "Be ye merciful as your Father in heaven is merciful." In all my duties I am blessed, but ever deplore my weakness and ignorance when I contemplate the greatness and purity of this glorious and beautiful latter day revelation.

ELDER W. E. LARUE,

During the past year Elder T. W. Chatburn, member of the Quorum of High Priests, has occupied in Salt Lake City, Utah. Previously he had done excellent work as pastor in Spokane. The greater part of his ministerial life has been spent in active missionary work on the frontier. He has spent twenty years of his life in gospel work, having traveled in eighteen States and in Canada.

He makes the following very characteristic remarks concerning pastoral work:

To get closely to the people in gospel work the missionary must be sociable and genial under every condition, not puffed up, "with a high hat on and a white choker and gloved hands, for people to look at and shy around"; and above all other things he should not be lazy, but a worker in the vineyard of the Lord. My present charge is Salt Lake City, Utah, "The mountain of the Lord's house (?) in the tops of the mountains."

PREVENTION AND CURE OF CRIME; SOME MODERN METHODS.

(By Elbert A. Smith.)

BETTER ENVIRONMENT AND EDUCATION.

Everybody's Magazine.

A WARD OF THE DENVER JUVENILE COURT.

We have written on this subject in the March number of Autumn Leaves; but additional research since that article was prepared has brought new and interesting facts to our attention.

The current number of the Homiletic Review (March) contains an article by Josiah Strong, a well-known sociologist, in which he says:

Undoubtedly the supreme thing to do for the criminal is to prevent his becoming a criminal. . . . This includes provision for healthy homes for children and right moral instruction in our public schools.

This statement is more radical than may appear at first thought. The modern idea, gradually taking form, endeavors to strike at the roots of crime, and the plans formulated go about as far in that direction as social reformers can go in any movement that is not associated with that which we as church members consider the supreme and indispensable regenerative powers of the gospel.

While too much stress is laid upon environment by those who look to an improved environment as the chief means in saving fallen man, perhaps too little importance has been credited to it by those who advocate individual regeneration as the result of religious experience. There is no denying the fact that environment exerts a profound influence upon character. And the more thoroughgoing reformers are beginning to look even behind the juvenile court in their efforts to divert the young from a criminal career. The report of the commissioners appointed by President Roosevelt in 1908 to investigate conditions in the penal institutions in the District of Columbia contains this significant statement:

The problem of crime among these people can not be considered apart from the general problem of their housing and their surroundings. It is impossible to understand any man apart from his surroundings, and especially apart from what he calls his home. Most of these people who find their way into the criminal court and eventually into prison, may be traced back to the miserable alleys and hovels which exist in such large numbers in our city and which are a reproach to our civilization. No one who knows how these people live wonders at their habits or their crimes. While we are striving for penal and reformatory institutions worthy of our people and our time, let us not neglect to remove these breeding places of vice and schools of crime, and to put in their place clean and wholesome dwellings. . . . Washington ought not to be in one part a show place and in the other part a loathsome alley.

PLAYGROUNDS OF THE POOR IN PITTSBURG.

These are conditions revealed by the noted "Pittsburg Survey" in the criminal breeding districts of Pittsburg and discussed in the "Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America." This cut was secured from the Literary Digest.

Some months ago that which is termed the "Pittsburg Survey" was undertaken, with a view to determining the social conditions of wage earners in that great "iron city" of which Prof. John R. Commons says:

"Gigantic in its creation of wealth, titanic in its contests for the division of wealth, Pittsburg looms up as a mighty storm center of capital and labor. Here our modern world achieves its grandest triumph and faces its gravest problems."

The closing number of the report of those engaged in the "Pittsburg Survey" appeared in Charities, March 6.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, a great federation of the various Protestant denominations, has taken this report into consideration in an attempt to discover means by which breeding grounds of crime, such as are portrayed in the accompanying cut, may be regenerated. Children must have decent surroundings in which to live, work, play, and study, if the chances are to be at all in favor of their becoming good citizens. It is bad policy to give them a crooked deal at six and jail them at sixteen.

Failing in its efforts to prevent crime, the initial step that society now takes in many cases in its effort to cure crime is taken in the juvenile court. Perhaps the most noted of these courts is that conducted in Denver, popularly known as Judge Ben Lindsey's Court, called by Denver boys the "kid court."

About forty cities and twenty-two States now conduct such work; and the idea has been taken up in Canada and Great Britain. Judge Mack, of Chicago, alone hears four thousand cases annually.

The idea of the juvenile court is to bring the childish offender before a man who is interested in him, who will give his particular case a careful study, and be his friend; to keep him from contact with hardened criminals and the degrading influences still prevalent in many jails and penitentiaries.

This form of work among children is especially valuable in the prevention of crime, as it is said that one half of the inmates of all our reformatories, jails, and prisons are under twenty-five years of age; and it is said that the Earl of Shaftsbury, after careful study, declared that not two out of any hundred criminals in London had formed the habits that led to a criminal career after their twentieth year.

PROBATION.

First offenders, both young and old, are now frequently placed on probation. The idea is that society receives its best protection when the criminal is reformed. If he shows any inclination to reform, give him a chance. Accordingly the court passes sentence, but the offender is not sent to the penitentiary. He is placed on probation under the watchcare of an officer who undertakes to act as a true friend to him, finding him employment, and helping him to walk the narrow path of rectitude. If he falls from grace his sentence goes into effect and he is sent to jail.

Massachusetts was a pioneer in this form of work and under her rules the probationer must engage in lawful work, keep the peace, be of good behavior, and report to the probation officer at such times as may be stipulated. The method is now employed in Kansas City, Denver, and many other cities.

THE INDETERMINATE SENTENCE.

Under the indeterminate sentence idea criminals actually committed to the penitentiary or reformatory are not sentenced for a determined time that can not be changed. They are given a maximum sentence and by good behavior and industry they may materially reduce the time to be served.

Various grades are established and the prisoner is so placed on entering the institution that he can work his way up or down as he may elect. He becomes his own judge and jailer, and can work out his own salvation if he chooses to do so.

REFORMATORIES.

A recent writer says:

"The progress of humanity is most notable in the treatment of first and juvenile offenders. The former are no longer sent to prison for felonies, but to reformatories."

There are now many reformatories scattered over the land. Usually age and former record determine whether the individual shall be sent to the reformatory or to the penitentiary. One of the most noted of these institutions is the Elmira Reformatory (New York). This institution made use of the indeterminate sentence as long ago as 1877.

Statistics show the magnitude of these establishments. September, 1908, Elmira had 1,429 inmates. Nine years ago 65 reformatories in the United States reported a total of 19,410 inmates. The number must be much greater now.

EDUCATION AND HUMANE TREATMENT.

Even in the regular orthodox penitentiaries where the most hardened criminals are segregated wonderful changes have taken place. An appeal is made to the better nature of the inmates. An effort is made to educate them so that when discharged they will stand a better chance to become useful citizens.

A typical case is the Lansing Penitentiary (Kansas). Over a year ago it was reported that only twenty striped uniforms were to be seen in that institution (stripes are reserved for the incorrigibles). Night school was held three nights each week.

In the Fort Madison (Iowa) Penitentiary a school is conducted regularly six nights each week and all the leading branches of learning are taught. First grade prisoners may wear plain clothes; second graders wear checkered clothing; third graders must wear stripes. The prison now has a fine library.

Prison schools are one of the most striking features of the reform movement.

According to Warden John Frances, of the Western Penitentiary of Pennsylvania, there are at least two hundred inmates of that institution who are suffering from tuberculosis. With anyone of these men, under old-time methods of close confinement, even a short sentence may well be equivalent to capital punishment. But with proper treatment and outdoor work they may return to society able and disposed to earn an honest living for themselves and their families. Similar conditions exist elsewhere.

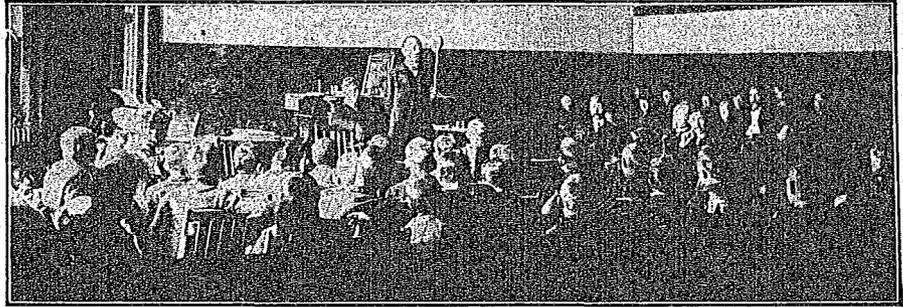

In harmony with this idea we find that to-day Massachusetts has a penal farm at Bridgewater, some forty miles from Boston, consisting of one thousand acres.

A similar farm of two thousand acres is located near Cleveland, Ohio, and Warden Sanders of the penitentiary at Fort Madison, in our own State, is pleading for the purchase of a farm for the use of his institution. The National Government has arranged to purchase two one thousand acre tracts for the use of the District of Columbia.

Kansas City has a farm the operation of which is described by Charles Dillon in the March Delineator under the caption, "A new way to save men." Mr. Dillon says:

"The city bought a farm of one hundred and thirty-seven acres near Leeds, a village ten or twelve miles from Kansas City. On this land it is proposed to build a house of correction and a tuberculosis hospital. Knowing that the farm was being neglected, the board induced the city authorities to send certain prisoners there from the workhouse for observation. . . . Prisoners who had been in the workhouse so often and so long that they had acquired a residence there, who were "down and out," were called men, not prisoners, and assigned to work that suited their physical condition and their capabilities, in the sunlight and pure air of the country. It was a mighty experiment; it built up men from wrecks. . . .

"In the quarry the men are getting out the stone for the tuberculosis hospital and the house of correction and other buildings. They are building a fine rock road to connect with the county turnpike. They are to be used, later, in the actual construction work on the proposed buildings.

"Why, then, if these men are fit for such labor, should they not build for the city the roads, which now cost thousands of dollars a mile, to join the city streets with the county highways? Why should they not lay the streets and carry on a large part of the public works which impose heavy taxes on the people?

IN HARMONY WITH VIEWS ADVOCATED BY JOSEPH SMITH.

As we have pointed out in a former article these changes were advocated by Joseph Smith as long ago as 1844. It is interesting at this juncture to quote his views, italicizing certain portions to which we wish to call especial attention:

"Abolish the cruel custom of prisons, (except certain cases,) penitentiaries, and court-martials for desertion; and let reason and friendship reign over the ruins of ignorance, and barbarity. . . . Advise your legislators when they make laws for larceny, burglary or any felony, to make the penalty applicable to work upon the roads, public works, or any place where the culprit can be taught more wisdom and more virtue; and more enlightenment. Rigor and seclusion will never do as much to reform the propensities of man, as reason and friendship. Murder only can claim confinement or death. Let the penitentiaries be turned into seminaries of learning, where intelligence, like the angels of heaven, would banish such fragments of barbarism."—From "Joseph Smith's views on the government and policy of the United States," Times and Seasons, May 15, 1844.

RESULTS.

In a recent number of the Outlook, January 29, 1910, Lyman Beecher Stowe said:

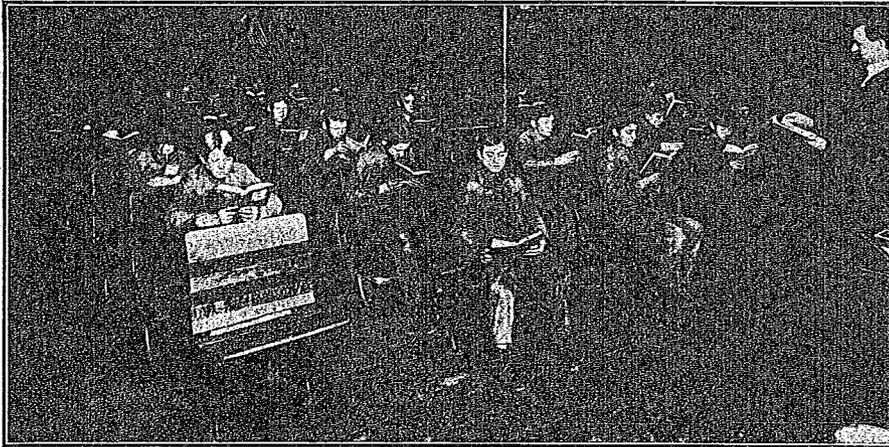

"Prisons can not and do not protect society unless they reform the prisoners to the fullest extent possible. Abuse and neglect not only do not reform prisoners, but have exactly the opposite result. And, finally, the more revoltingly uninviting prisons are, the more people tend to crowd into them—in other words, the more crime increases.

This is the reverse of the old idea. It was thought that prisons could be made so terrible that all would shun them. In fact they so degraded their inmates that they perforce returned, dragging others with them. In the North American off in every way, to take up the struggle that had been too much for him before.

Two methods are now successfully employed to help the prisoner's family during his incarceration and to save him after his discharge. Various institutions now make an intelligent effort to find honest employment for the discharged convict. And during the time of his sentence he is given employment and the proceeds are divided between himself and the State, or between the State and the family, if he has a dependent family.

A typical instance is found in the penitentiary at Baltimore, Maryland. During 1908 the prisoners in this penitentiary earned for the State over thirty-seven thousand dollars, and for themselves and their families over twenty-eight thousand dollars. During 1907 the showing was even better.

THE REFORMATORY AT GOLDEN, COLORADO.

In the class room of the Industrial school.

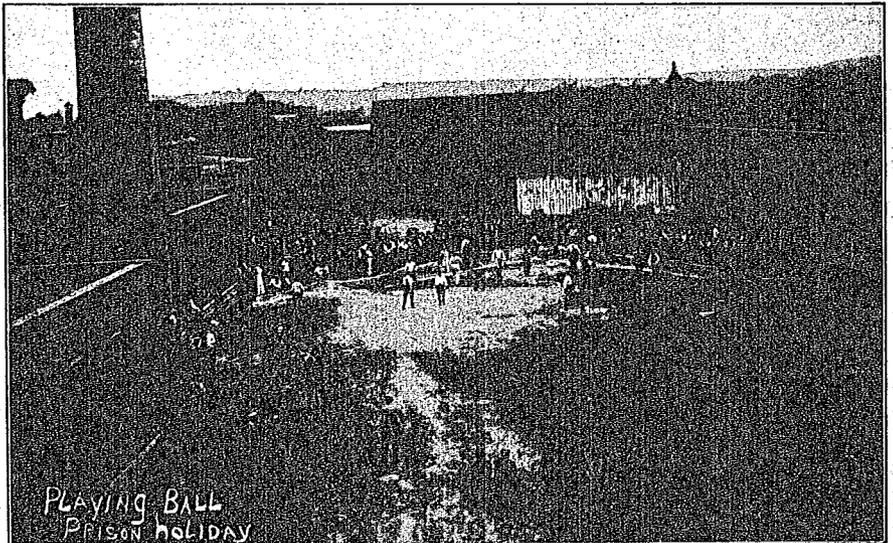

Review, August, 1904, Carlton T. Lewis contrasted the two systems in an interesting manner, and concluded:

"For a generation past, these two kinds of prisons have been standing side by side in New York, Massachusetts, and other States. Each of them has received many thousands of criminals under sentence for grave offences. Each of them has sent out thousands of inmates into the world of human society, with whatever impress the life, teachings, and associations of the institutions could make upon their natures, as a preparation for their after career. What is the result? It is definitely known to everyone who has taken the trouble to study the official and recorded facts, that a large majority of those who have been sent to the traditional prison and discharged after serving the prescribed terms, have returned to a criminal career and have taken their places among the habitual and, so to speak, the professional enemies of society; and that a large majority of those offenders who have been sent to the second class of institutions, have been successfully trained to industry and to lawful living, and have become self-supporting citizens."

THE PRISONER AND HIS FAMILY.

Under the old regime, still maintained in some States, when a man, perhaps under stress of poverty, turned thief, he was sentenced to a term in the penitentiary where he was sure of food, clothing, and shelter, while his helpless wife and children, not so assured, were left to shift for themselves. The judge, in fact, passed sentence upon the family, as they were the keenest sufferers. At the expiration of his sentence the man was discharged, a little worse to those who were disposed to reform, Christ said, "Go thy way and sin no more." More of the Christ spirit in affairs both civil and religious would be better for this old world. The problem confronting those who deal with crime is to forestall its propagation if possible; and failing in that, to seek out and save those fallen ones who will reform if given a fair fighting chance. It is really surprising to find how

The Religio Convention.

(Reported by Mark H. Siegfried.)

APRIL 2.

The fifteenth annual convention of the Zion's Religio-Literary Association met in the basement of the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, April 2, 1910, at 2.30 p. m. Bro. J. A. Gunsolley acted as chairman and Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser as secretary. No. 166 of Zion's Praises was sung, after which Brother Gunsolley offered prayer. No. 96 was then sung.

The matter of organization was then taken up by the body, and Brother Gunsolley elected as permanent chairman and Sister Etzenhouser permanent secretary. The chair was given power to appoint chorister and organist. He appointed Sr. Flo McNichols as chorister and gave her power, unless objected to, to choose organist. The report of the credentials committee was read.

By motion the body instructed the president to send by wire the regrets of the convention to Bro. Walter W. Smith, vice-president, who could not be present; also our wishes for his speedy and full recovery to health. The vote was unanimous.

Bro. W. H. Garrett, W. H. Deam, and M. H. Siegfried were appointed to act as press committee. R. B. Trowbridge and S. A. Burgess were named by the chair as his associates in the presidency of the convention.

An official report was read from Pres. J. A. Gunsolley. Among many other good things he directed our attention to the good work done by the Arena of the Autumn Leaves, edited by Elbert A. Smith; the good work of Sister Louise Palfrey Sheldon, editor of the Quarterly. He stated that he felt the time was not opportune for the publication of a junior quarterly; mentioned the fact that the fund for the translation of the Book of Mormon had increased but little the past year; also the fact that money was appropriated last year for exploration purposes and was turned over to Bro. R. Etzenhouser; stated that the normal work is winning its way and overcoming the objections first urged, W. W. Smith having charge of this work; that he had spent his vacation from college work last summer in field work in the interests of the Religio and Sunday school, traveling about six thousand miles, and occupying upward of one hundred times, and reported a constant and substantial growth and spread of the Religio work.

Walter W. Smith, vice-president, made no report of work done, but sent a letter stating that he had recovered from his prolonged and serious illness, and hoped soon to be well again and at his regular work. He had spoken a good word for the Religio work whenever proper and opportune.

The secretary, Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser, reported. She stated that every Religio district had reported; a net gain in home class members of 448, besides many locals having been organized from that department; two new districts were organized; Canada leads in matter of growth of membership, Australia having gained 152, and Little Sioux holding third place with a gain of 107; satisfactory work being done in Hawaii.

R. B. Trowbridge, treasurer of the association, reported a total of $2,908.63 receipts; expenditures $1,411.12; balance on hand $1,497.51.

The librarian, S. A. Burgess, reported that the work in general would be reported by the Library Commission.

Home department superintendent, Sr. Altha R. Deam, reported a net gain of 503, some having been received since the report was published. Independence Stake has an enrollment of 299 and Lamoni 238. Sister Deam is a faithful and earnest worker and her reëlection was recommended by the president of the association.

The good literature bureau superintendent reported that he found an abandonment of this work in nearly every district, but was able to see some advancement. 45,083 tracts, 1,630 Ensigns, 1,431 HERALDS, 1,213 Hopes, have been distributed, together with many books and other publications. The revising committee reported but little work done, the manuscripts submitted to them having been quite complete and satisfactory.

The superintendent of normal work, Walter W. Smith, reported a rapid and sure growth, beyond the most sanguine hopes. He stated that he thought the normal work was a good one, wide in its scope and mighty in its influence. Sr. Flo Nichols as a field worker reported considerable work done at Nevada, Missouri; Provo, Utah; Salt Lake City, and the Northeastern Kansas District, having been in the field about five weeks. The committee appointed last year to investigate into the delay in the publication of the Book of Mormon in the German language reported that the work is now about one half done, and 2,000 copies will soon be published and ready for use, the translating and proof reading having been under the direction of Bro. Alex. Kippe.

The chair announced that unless objected to the program as published would be followed out.

The convention again assembled at 7.30 p. m. No. 207 of the Praises was sung after which Bro. R. Bullard offered prayer. No. 228 was used as a second song, Bro. J. A. Becker of Kirtland, singing the song to the chorus, in which the congregation joined.

The minutes of the afternoon session were read and after a few amendments stood approved. The chorister announced that she had chosen for organists, Paul Craig and Sister Brocaw.

Bro. Daniel Macgregor gave to the secretary a communication which dealt largely upon the thought that we, as a body, are overlooking one of the most important features of the work that lies within our power, that of cultivating the missionary spirit in the active members of the association. He suggested that we consider the advisability of organizing ourselves into quorums for the aggressive distribution of tracts. A communication from the executive committee touching in part upon these points was read: the establishment of a permanent fund to promote the translation of the Book of Mormon into other languages; that the method of raising this fund be by an annual Thanksgiving offering from the membership and from individual donations at any other time during the year; that the advertising and collecting of said funds be under the direction of the treasurer of this society; these funds to be deposited as a trust fund with the Presiding Bishop subject to the General Convention and the General Conference; that the quorums of First Presidency and Twelve be consulted and their approval secured before publication in any language be ordered by the convention and therefore funds appropriated; whenever a translation is determined upon and ordered, the publication thereof be under the direction of the Board of Publication and the Religio Executive Committee; that each year a report from each mission to the general librarian respecting the number of volumes on hand and the state of the finances therein be required, and a similar statement or report be required from the Presiding Bishop as to the amount in this fund. This was adopted.

The revising committee recommended that a committee be appointed to suggest subject-matter for the Religio Quarterly. The recommendation was adopted and a committee of five consisting of L. A. Palfrey Sheldon, J. A. Gunsolley, F. M. Smith, M. A. Etzenhouser, and Altha Deam was chosen.

A request was read from Bro. C. C. Joehnk from Germany, asking that an appropriation of $25 be made to assist in the translation of the Religio Quarterly into German. This request was granted and the appropriation ordered. A resolution was passed providing for a committee to take under advisement the matter of the Religio devoting some time to the study of subjects heretofore avoided, which tend toward the development of character, this committee to report at the next annual convention.

APRIL 3.

The regular prayer meeting was held at 8 o'clock this (Sunday) morning, in charge of G. H. Hilliard, H. W. Hansen, and A. Warden.

At the Sunday school, of which the local officers had charge, there was an attendance of 1,092 with a collection of $19.27. Bro. A. N. Hoxie, jr., of Boston, Massachusetts, rendered special assistance with his violin. This was surely a treat to any lover of music.

The eleven o'clock service was in charge of Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, while Bro. S. A. Burgess, the General Librarian for the Religio, gave a very interesting and instructive address along the line of literary and educational work, dwelling particularly on the combination of the spiritual and mental education. One thought among the many other good ones was that when we begin the study of a book on any particular subject we can only safely do so by first going in earnest, devoted prayer to God, asking him to help us detect the error that may be in it, and to assimilate the good.

The 2.30 p. m. prayer and sacrament service was in charge of Bro. T. A. Hougas and the Stake Presidency.

In the evening at 7.15 Elder T. A. Hougas was in charge of a very interesting program consisting of an anthem by the men's chorus, followed by remarks by Brother Hougas, explaining that the theme for the evening was "Duty," which would be considered from three views of the subject,—parental, social, and religious. "Parental Duty" was reviewed by Bro. Gomer R. Wells in a very appropriate paper, interspersed with remarks by himself. The social side of the question was by Sr. Vida E. Smith in a very interesting, applicable paper, read by Sr. Flo McNichols. Bro. Ammon White read an interesting paper on religious duty. Bro. Paul Craig sang a solo, and Brn. D. J. Krahl, Clarence Resch, H. P. Bullard, and A. J. Koehler sang a quartet; Bro. A. N. Hoxie, jr., gave another of his soul-stirring violin solos; and Sr. Grace Kelley gave a reading, "Jean Valjean," very well rendered.

APRIL 4.

Monday morning the last business session of the 1910 convention opened at 8.30 with J. A. Gunsolley in the chair. After the opening exercises financial reports were read from the president, superintendent of Home Department, and Normal superintendent, and having been audited by the committee, were adopted, as also the report of the auditors.

A committee of three brothers and three sisters was appointed for the purpose of taking into consideration the matter acted upon Saturday relative to considering matter and subjects heretofore untouched by the Religio; such as, personal purity, maternity, paternity, etc., to report to this body at the next annual convention.

A communication was received from the First Presidency through Elbert A. Smith, containing no recommendations but acknowledging the important work the society is engaged in and doing.

A resolution concerning the publication of a Juvenile History of the Church was referred to the General Conference with an expression of our willingness to appropriate $150 for the prosecution of the work.

The printing of the names of the delegates to future conventions before the convening of the body was ordered, said printed list to be distributed.

A resolution asking the Presiding Bishop to turn over the balance that may be left from the amount heretofore appropriated for the publication of the Book of Mormon in the German language to the permanent translation fund was passed. Also the General Conference was requested to place the German translation of the Book of Mormon under the permanent translation fund, so that the proceeds from the sale thereof shall go into that fund.

The matter of a Book of Mormon Chronology compiled by W. C. Flanders, presented by T. W. Chatburn and J. W. Peterson, was referred to a committee of five, among which was to be the author, Brother Flanders.

A lengthy report from Bro. R. Etzenhouser on his work of exploration, to whom this matter was referred last year, was read. He reports the work progressing nicely and the book which himself and colleagues have published is being distributed widely to libraries and scientists, and is now on sale.

Song No. 166 of Zion's Praises was sung at 10.30, following which the election of general officers took place as follows:

For president, J. A. Gunsolley; vice-president, R. T. Cooper, of Los Angeles, California; secretary, Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser; treasurer, R. B. Trowbridge; librarian, S. A. Burgess; Home Department superintendent, Sr. Altha R. Deam.

Privilege was granted Bro. F. M. Sheehy to make a statement regarding our work among the Spanish speaking people of the world, especially the Mexicans. Following this a motion prevailed referring the matter of the translation of the Book of Mormon into Swedish and Spanish languages to the First Presidency and the Quorum of Twelve, pledging the society to an appropriation not to exceed $750 for this purpose, whenever these quorums shall direct the translations.

$300 was appropriated for general expenses during the year.

$50 was appropriated for the benefit of Graceland College Library.

$100 was appropriated for general library work,—this amount to be understood to include $50 appropriated last year but not used.

Suitable closing remarks were made by the president, Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, after which a motion to adjourn carried. Song No. 201 was sung, benediction by J. A. Gunsolley. The convention was well attended and harmony and good will prevailed throughout.

The Sunday School Convention.

APRIL 4.

The nineteenth annual session of the Sunday School Association held its first session in the basement of the Stone Church, April 4, at 2.30 p. m., T. A. Hougas in charge. Song No. 96 of Zion's Praises was sung, and prayer by Brother Hougas. No. 207 was then sung. T. A. Hougas was elected to preside, being granted the right to choose his assistants.

D. J. Krahl was granted right to choose assistant secretaries.

Bro. Orville James was elected chorister with power to choose an assistant. He chose Bro. G. R. Wells.

Paul Craig and Belle James were elected organists. Ushers and janitor were also provided for. This completed the permanent organization. The chair was empowered to appoint a press committee.

The credentials committee not being ready to report, the superintendent called upon Bro. T. W. Chatburn, and Sr. Anna Salyards for remarks. The credentials committee reported the printed report correct except in a few minor points.

T. A. Hougas, the General Superintendent, among other things said there had been a general awakening along the line of normal, institute, financial work, etc. However, he suggested that we do not launch upon any new lines of work requiring added appropriations, stating also that the general expenses of the association are increasing. At reunions the institute work is being recognized, in most places, as a necessary factor. He emphasized the necessity for the use of the Exponent in the preparation of the lessons. It is not yet on a paying basis. He reaffirmed his confidence in the good the "standard of excellence" is doing and may yet do. He thought there was nothing out of the ordinary to come before the convention.

A report was read from Bro. Gilbert J. Waller, who is in charge of the Sunday school work in Hawaii. He states that there are three schools in that territory, with a membership of 157.

Mrs. T. A. Hougas, superintendent of Home Department, reported the work advancing steadily in all lines, and she felt encouraged in the work.

A report on the "standard of excellence" was read, showing two first grade districts; one second grade district; twenty-four third grade districts; and eleven other districts (reporting) lower than third grade. The results show that the work is doing much good.

Bro. Walter W. Smith, superintendent of the Normal Work, reported the work doing fine, there being a total enrollment in this department of 1,359, with 225 graduates, and during the year closing March 31, there were 475 pupils enrolled. He believes this work will be a wonderful power for good and a remarkable feeder to the church in the future. Almost the entire United States has been assigned to state superintendents, greatly aiding the General Superintendent.

APRIL 5.

The morning session of April 5 opened at 8.30, called to order by Bro. Daniel Macgregor, assistant superintendent of the association. Brother Macgregor offered prayer after the congregation sang No. 101 of Zion's Praises. Additional report from the credential committee was read.

The secretary, Bro. D. J. Krahl, reported in addition to the printed report distributed at the afternoon session of yesterday. He thought the prospects for work the coming year were good. Also in mentioning the interstate institute held at Independence, Missouri, last year, he stated that he considered that it accomplished good.

Bro. Oscar W. Okerlind reported the state of the Sunday school work in Sweden, stating that there are now four schools in Sweden, one organized in 1908, one in 1909, and the date of the other two not given. Good is being accomplished.

A financial report from Bro. W. W. Smith, superintendent of the Normal Department, was read and referred to the auditing committee, which subsequently reported on the matter.

A report from Daniel Macgregor was read stating that his work had been almost entirely in Maine. Whenever possible, in connection with his missionary work, he had done work for the Sunday school.

He still believes the Sunday school to be the "backbone" of any branch.

A report was read from the lessons committee, stating that a course of lessons was decided upon, including the fourth quarter of 1910, and the lessons are written to October, covering the first thirteen chapters of Acts.

A resolution concerning the division of the Territory of Oklahoma Sunday school was passed, making two districts where there had been but one.

A resolution was passed authorizing the appointment of a historian for this association by the Executive Committee and the General Church Historian.

The revising committee reported the matter for lessons revised to September, 1910.

The treasurer, John Smith, reported a total of receipts, $7,246.58; total expenditures, $5,007.49; leaving a balance on hand of $2,239.09.

A resolution was read and passed referring the drafting of a book on normal lessons on the Bible by some one of our own church members, to the executive committee of this association and of the Religio association.

Several constitutional amendments were presented and passed. Article 4, section 1, was amended by adding after the word secretary, the words, home department superintendent. Article 5 was amended by changing sections 4 and 5 to sections 5 and 6, and inserting as section 4, the duty of the home department superintendent.

Article 3, section 1, of the constitution for districts, was amended by adding the name of the home department superintendent as one of the officers. Article 4, of the constitution for district association, was amended to conform to the same article of the constitution for the general society.

The by-laws for Sunday schools, article 1, was amended by inserting after the word secretary, the words home department superintendent. Also article 2 was amended, making it conform to the amendment of the constitution of district associations. The constitution from pages 15 to 20, relative to the home department, was amended, making it conform to the amendments already passed. Article 11, page 7, was amended to read instead of Herald three, The official organ of the Sunday School Association two.

The courtesies of the floor were extended to all visiting brethren not delegates or ex officio members of the convention.

Article 9, section 1, relative to representation, was amended, making it read, ten members or fraction over one half.

Article 5, section 2, of district constitution was amended. In line 6, after the word thereof was inserted over one half.

A resolution was brought before the assembly in which it was sought to appoint at least two delegates, one of whom should be Sr. Anna Salyards, to the World's Sunday School Convention, to be held at Washington, District of Columbia, May 19 to 24, 1910. A lengthy discussion followed until adjournment at 12 m.

Bro. Daniel Macgregor called the session together at 2.15.

The Library Commission reported that, soon after adjournment last year, they had appointed H. Hale Smith, librarian, and Inez Smith, assistant librarian. Bro. Hale Smith declined to serve, and Inez Smith soon after resigned. Later Brn. Israel A. Smith and R. J. Lambert were appointed to take charge of the library, and since then there have been several important changes made, among which were the addition of considerable shelf room and the placing of rare volumes in the vault of the Herald Office for safe keeping.

The special order for 2.30 was the election of officers and was at that time taken up, resulting as follows: Superintendent, Daniel Macgregor, of Canada; first assistant superintendent, W. N. Robinson; second assistant, Gomer R. Wells; secretary, D. J. Krahl; treasurer, John Smith; member of library commission, E. H. Fisher; home department superintendent, Maggie Macgregor.

A vote of thanks was unanimously tendered Bro. T. A. Hougas for his long service as superintendent.

Bro. Oscar Anderson was elected a member of the auditing committee to succeed himself.

R. S. Salyards, A. Carmichael, and John Smith were elected members of the revising committee.

Elbert A. Smith was elected a member of the lessons committee.

The matter of contingent expenses was taken up, and an appropriation of $500 was made.

The library commission asked the association for an appropriation of $50 which was granted.

The matter pending at adjournment was now taken up, and quite a lengthy discussion followed, when Sr. Anna Salyards, Bro. Daniel Macgregor, and Walter W. Smith were elected delegates; and the credentials committee was authorized to issue credentials to any and all other members of this association who may be going.

A resolution similar to the one passed by the Religio relative to a juvenile history of the church was passed, and $150 was pledged to aid in the work of publishing such a book.

The following was moved: "Whereas, Our district associations and schools have been invited to join the International Sunday School Association, and many have become identified therewith, and

"Whereas, Our lesson texts are not in harmony therewith, causing great inconvenience in our institute and convention work and also union schools, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we adopt the International Lesson Text and treat it from our viewpoint."

This was referred to the lessons committee.

Adjourned at 5.20 p. m.

The evening session of April 5 was called to order by the newly elected superintendency at 7.30, F. G. Pitt offering prayer. Thirty minutes were given to round table work conducted by Bro. Hougas, the retiring superintendent. This proved to be quite interesting and instructive. At the close of the round table one verse of 110 of Zion's Praises was sung, and then the assembly proceeded to the disposal of the business left on the table at the close of the afternoon's session.

The matter of making latter day events a part of the lessons in the quarterly, and preparing an advanced course of study, deferred from last year was taken into consideration, and after some discussion was laid upon the table.

An appropriation of $25 was asked for and granted with which to purchase Books of Mormon to be distributed among the Indians of Oklahoma, under the direction of the missionary in charge of Oklahoma.

Article 5, section 1 of the by-laws for local schools, was amended by adding, or at such times as the school may designate.

This closed the business of the convention and the question box work was resumed at the hour of 9.15 p. m.

Sunday School-Religio Normal Graduation.

APRIL 4.

Monday evening at 7.15 the graduating exercises of the Normal Class were held in the upper room of the church. There were 142 members of the graduating class of 1910; and 57 post graduates for this year. Quite an interesting program had been previously arranged, consisting of papers on interesting subjects, talks, solos, and choruses, and the presentation of diplomas by T. A. Hougas, superintendent of the Sunday School Association.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The management of the Sanitarium desires to get some of our church members among the women, between the ages of twenty and thirty, who will take up work at the Sanitarium with the object of becoming trained nurses. Any desiring to investigate should address the Independence Sanitarium.

Brother Macgregor informs us that about twenty more were baptized at Stonington and Little Deer Isle, Maine, since last report was published.

General Conference.

APRIL 6.

The fifty-seventh annual conference of the Reorganized Church convened to-day at Independence, Missouri, at the Stone Church, with President Joseph Smith in the chair. Song No. 158 was sung, and Elder William H. Kelley offered prayer.

The First Presidency was chosen to preside during the sessions and to make appointments of conference officers.

Frederick M. Smith took charge.

Appointments were made as follows: Secretaries, R. S. Salyards, assisted by Charles Fry and M. H. Siegfried. Stenographers, Sr. O. L. James, W. R. Dexter, and Sr. Blanche Allen. Press Committee, I. A. Smith, W. E. LaRue, and A. F. McLean. Choristers, O. L. James and Frank Russell, they to choose assistants. Organists, R. G. Smith, Paul Craig, Miss Jeanette Kelley, and Roy Morgan. Janitor service and ushering to be looked after by the local deacons, with such help as they need from visiting deacons.

U. W. Greene rose to a question of privilege and presented a gavel to the First Presidency. He spoke as follows:

Mr. Chairman, beloved Saints, and fellow-workers in the gospel of Christ: This is one of the historical days in the history of the church, when we are to extend our congratulations to our beloved President for the fifty long years that he has so ably and justly presided over this organization. I call to mind the fact that this is also the eightieth anniversary of the organization of the church, then consisting of six members, when under the directions of the Spirit of God the brethren who constituted the ministry in that day moved forward, some of them journeying toward the western country, especially blessed in their labors, succeeded in and around Kirtland, Ohio, in converting upwards of one thousand people in the space of a few months.

My beloved former president and martyr, Joseph Smith, and family moved to Kirtland, and he, after so doing, received a special communication from God for the erection of a house and temple; and that band of faithful, devoted people moved earnestly forward in that way—the men making every sacrifice possible, working in the quarries and upon the walls of the building; and the wives and daughters working in the fields and spinning and weaving, that their husbands and sons might continue the erection of that house of God. Some of the leading ministers frequently, when funds were low and there was a scarcity of voluntary labor, would visit the walls of that temple, and prayers were offered that God would send the means for the completion of that house; and tears wet the walls, and it was speedily completed in harmony with divine commandment.

The time came when there was such an outpouring of the Holy Spirit as caused that entire section of country to marvel and, as is still mentioned by some of the old residents to this day.

About seven years ago the prince and power of darkness for the third time sought the destruction of that house; and notwithstanding the corner of the temple building was struck by lightning, the damage was slight; but yet again a visit of lightning split the corner, and from it a piece of timber was taken and has been in my possession for some time past, or, that is, has been where I knew of its location.

Now it pleased several of the brethren living at Kirtland to suggest that from that timber we have a gavel made and presented to the Presidency. The brethren consisting of Francis Ebeling, Eben Miller, B. F. Hulmes, Bishop Becker and myself, have had this work accomplished, and I take pleasure on their behalf, this morning, in presenting this gavel to the Presidency, not only because of its historical associations, but because we love our brethren, and trust that its acceptance from us may be a pleasure upon their part, and its use always in the interest of right and justice in the assembly of the Saints.

Brother President, on behalf of the brethren named, I present in behalf of the First Presidency, this gavel.

This gavel is made from wood torn from the Kirtland Temple by lightning. President Joseph Smith responded as follows:

I was born, not in the shadow of that house, but at the foot of the hill upon which it stands, in a small frame house in a little corner room of that house up stairs, used for a store-room, two years and a little more after the organization took place. My memories of Kirtland are not very many nor very vivid. I have not had the curiosity that many men have had to visit historic places and gather relics. I do not excuse myself for not having this peculiar mania or curiosity nor do I make any apology to any that love historic places.

I take pleasure in accepting from the hand of these brethren who have been cognizant of the fortunes of that house and have preserved enough of it, in broken condition, to make this present practicable. There are, I believe, but three persons in this room who were present at the convening of the conference fifty years ago, Brn. E. C. Briggs, Davis Rogers, one an elder, the other a deacon, and myself. I know of no others present. I have seen these.

For many years a pencil, or a pocket knife, sometimes a book answered the service of the presiding officer for a gavel. I do not remember the date of the one which I surrendered to the board last spring, but it came from Texas from the Saints of Texas. The hand that bore it and presented it to the conference was that of Davis H. Bays, now gone to his rest. It served the purpose until a present was made to one of my colleagues, Counselor F. M. Smith, and the condition which surrounded and governed at the time seemed to show that the term of service in which I had been so long engaged was nearing its close, and by consultation I surrendered that gavel to those to whom it was presented and they made such disposition as pleased them, putting it in the archives of the church to keep as a memorial of what active service it had been used in. It was made from the native woods of Texas, from lignum vitæ, and osage orange.

I take pleasure at the close of fifty years of service to accept at the hands of this brother, representing those who have been named, who kindly present to the Presidency as a show, a token of confidence and acknowledgment of the motives that should govern presiding officers, and as I hold this gavel in my hand I look upon it as an emblem of the authority of the Master confirmed by divine will upon those chosen by himself to preside from time to time over the interests of the church and at the various gatherings, at the assemblies of their fellow-counsels therein.

I present it to you with the thought that this authority has been acknowledged by his people and they have used the gavel as a token of rule of order under the sentiment that order is Heaven's first law; and you have in the past so frequently, and often under trying circumstances when clouds seemed to threaten from the outside and terror from within, lest that which had been entrusted to our care should go astray and we lose the labor that we had done,—you have so frequently yielded to the peaceful suggestion of the instrument held by your presiding officer, to the law which should govern men of God. I after so long a service can lift a thankful heart to God that that which has been conferred upon us by his will has been supplemented by the presence of his Spirit in every soul who has been called upon to answer the call of the gavel; hence

I accept with pleasure this token of the authority of God and the people of God and I need not remind you, for it is well known to many of you, that for fifty years I have missed but one session of the annual conference, that of 1889, and with thanks to God, gratitude in my heart for the life which has been given me, I thank these brethren for the thoughtfulness and for the love which they have shown for the cause and which they exhibit in giving to the Presidency this token.

I pledge myself as I did fifty years ago that the cause which we represent shall not be brought into disrepute by act or teaching of mine contrary to the standard books of the church and the code of good morals. I renew that pledge at the beginning of this session of conference. I do it from many considerations, one that has been with me all my life, a resolution formed when I was but a boy after my baptism by my father, after the death of himself and my Uncle Hyrum, when I faced the world and was recognized everywhere as the son of the Prophet, sometimes in language unfit for men to name and under the influence of which I was always a marked boy and a marked man. That resolution was this,—I have uttered it in the hearing of many of you. I do so again. That was, that if there was truth in the axiom, "Like father, like son," on man, speaking from my conduct, should call my father a bad man. After fifty years of co-service you know whether I have kept that pledge or not.

As for my compeers I thank God that when from this frame there falls the burdens which I have tried to bear as best I might, that burden will fall upon younger and stronger shoulders than mine; and if there has been any portion of wisdom given me to exercise the rule of president, it has been from the Master and at his good will, and it shall be my prayer that upon these younger men who take such place, there shall be given such portion of that wisdom coming from God that is first pure, gentle, and easy to be entreated, and that those burdens may be borne and the authority resting with them be exercised as the Master would have his servants to be, honorable, Christian gentlemen, lovers of truth, fearless in its defense, and willing to make the sacrifice that God requires of human ambitions for human things, of the love of power for power's sake, of the love of wealth for its surroundings, always seeking to discharge those duties imposed by his divine calling in such manner that when at last the shades of night gather over their weakened frames, as they are gathering over mine, they shall still be found men of truth, able and willing to trust in him; that when he comes whose right it is to reign, who will exercise the royal gavel of control over the world, he may have it to say in answer to the question put by himself, "When the Son of God cometh shall he find faith on the earth?"

Report of the credentials committee was read, and after authorizing the delegations, where too many delegates had been reported, to confer with the credentials committee in taking off names, the report was adopted.

A petition from the Saint Joseph Branch was referred to a committee consisting of F. F. Curtis, Paul Hanson, and F. B. Farr, to report as to consideration of the same.

Reports were then read from the following quorum: First, Second, and Sixth of Priests, Second, First, and Nineteenth of Teachers; Second, and Thirty-seventh of Deacons.

A motion then prevailed to authorize the Presidency to provide for time and character of meetings and speakers during the conference.

It was then moved and seconded that a committee be appointed to draft resolutions to present to the conference in regard to the death of brethren during the conference year. The motion prevailed and Joseph Luff, George Harrington, and John Smith were made this committee by the chair.

The order of seating was announced.

Hymn No. 134 was sung and closing prayer offered by William H. Kelley. Adjourned to meet at 2 p. m. April 7.

JUBILEE ANNIVERSARY PROGRAM.

The jubilee services, commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of President Smith's acceptance of the presidency of the High Priesthood, have been carried out practically as announced in a former HERALD. Space will not permit us to give an extended account of these two memorable meetings. However, all papers will be preserved and all speeches have been reported and we hope to give our readers the benefit of their publication later.

The large auditorium was crowded to the utmost at both the afternoon and evening meetings, and the church was beautifully decorated with flowers. A large banner was placed across the room over the rostrum, on which was the inscription, "1860-1910. Our beloved President."

There were present of those who attended the Amboy Conference the following who occupied seats on the platform: Joseph Smith, E. C. Briggs, Davis Rogers, Mrs. W. W. Blair, Charles E. Blair, W. I. Taylor, Mrs. McFarland, Mrs. Strickland, and Mrs. George Burton.

Bro. W. I. Taylor, one of these, gave a short and interesting talk of his remembrance of the conference and the ordination of President Smith.

All the papers were well prepared and well read, and the large congregation was quiet and contented to listen throughout the long programs.

After the paper by Bro. E. C. Briggs, an item of business was presented, which was in the form of a resolution of respect and confidence in President Smith. It read as follows:

Whereas, President Joseph Smith was ordained president of the High Priesthood at Amboy, Illinois, April 6, 1860—fifty years ago to-day, and whereas, under his administration, supported by the faithful ministry and loyal membership, the faith of the church has been vindicated, the confidence of the people restored, the work honored and extended at home and abroad,

Resolved, That in connection with the celebration of the semi-centenary jubilee anniversary we commend the administration of President Smith and express our continued confidence in his integrity.

Resolved further, That we commend his spirit of Christlike service in the interests of the work and of the people of God; that we pledge him our continued support in the further performance of his duty; praying that God may bless him with that measure of health and grace that shall qualify him to continue in the administration of his important office until in the wisdom of God his labor shall be full and complete.

To this President Smith feelingly responded as follows:

Time has been well employed and as is the custom of time, has had no regard to men and women. I might speak at considerable length. Time again admonished me that there is a fitness on such occasions as these to observe what time admonishes us of,—the brevity of human life. I find myself in the position of the apostle who, standing before the king, said he counted himself happy to represent the cause of which he was a representative.

I count myself happy to-day that my friends have not waited until I was deposited in the grave before placing flowers upon it to manifest their good will and the love and regard which they had for me while I was living. They have offered me a tribute to-day that surpasses all these floral offerings ever placed upon the tomb of any man, who had lived and died, and I would be unworthy of the name I bear, unworthy of the association in which I have spent my life, unworthy of the confidence and trust which you have expressed toward me, unworthy of any tribute that any heart has offered to-day, if I would not say to you I appreciate what you have done.

It has not been the fortune of many men to sit and listen to such encomiums as have been passed upon me and receive such tribute for the feeble efforts which I was able to make, as I have been permitted to hear this day. Sitting in your midst and listening to that which has been said, retracing the history of the past, the work which we have been striving to do, I feel a sense of unworthiness so complete that I am almost tempted to put my hand upon my mouth and say, "Unclean," and yet, in harmony with the statement that was made by two of those who have spoken, as I had stated it at the Amboy Conference, I feel the assurance that the spirit which dictated my reception at that time has borne witness all the way along, and I believe before God it will continue to do so; hence I have confidence in saying that when this spirit fails to testify, men fail to receive the knowledge which has been promised by Jesus Christ, the Great Mediator, the Great Ambassador, one upon whom alone we can trust for the complete establishment of that rule and that reign which shall bring peace, universal peace to mankind.

I congratulate you this day, not upon the fact that I have lived to meet with you, but that God has been pleased to add such a representative assembly of witnesses to bear testimony to these few and myself of what was done fifty years ago, and as the Spirit has testified to these, as you have had from the lips of Bro. E. C. Briggs, so has that Spirit testified to you, and I bear you this tribute that in all my labors, in all my journeying, I know not a place among the people called Latter Day Saints where I have not and I am not now welcome as a co-worker and as an associate. I claim no greatness in myself. I know how feeble I am; I know how weak are the efforts which have been made, but I have been pleased to put myself at the dictation of the forces that must govern those who appreciate the truth, and I feel the consciousness with me that my motive has been always correct and good. My efforts may have been feeble; I may have made mistakes, but I feel absolved from blame so far as the motives underlying it are concerned, and I conclude by quoting a portion of a poem which I remember hearing Bro. Zenas H. Gurley repeat, at times expressing the peculiarity of the judgments of men:

"Cruel and cold are the judgments of men,
Cruel as winter, cold as the snow;
But by and by will the deed and the plan
Be judged by the motive that lieth below."

May God's peace be with us and his Spirit continue until the last effort has been made, until there shall come the glad sound, "Return, thy work is done," and the reign of righteousness and peace be ushered in for evermore.

The only digression from the printed program in the evening was a short talk by Brother Rogers, one of those present who attended the conference at Amboy.

The musical numbers were all fine, and the tone of the anniversary services was grand and sublime. In the words of one old soldier of the cross, this one day's proceedings were worth all the sacrifice and all the labor endured for the cause.

The following cablegram was read at the evening service:

"GROSSLICHTERFELDE, GERMANY, April 5, 1910.

"President Joseph Smith:

"Hearty congratulations from German Saints.

"ALEX KIPPE,

"C. C. JOEHNK."

THE WORD OF WISDOM.

"For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts.—Isaiah 55: 8, 9.

It is natural for mankind under various conditions and circumstances, to look upon his ways, thoughts, and beliefs as the best. Perhaps this is due to the fact that it is also natural to see plainly the faults and imperfections of others, even of a higher type, to the utter exclusion of our own of a like nature or worse. For these reasons, if no other, we as Saints often look upon the laws and commands of the Almighty with a feeling, oftentimes unexpressed by us, that those laws are at fault and we can substitute something as good or better instead. Especially is this true when considering the temporal things of life—money, possessions, food, drink, pleasures, etc., and this fact can be emphasized in no better way than by comparing the ideas and actions of men with the Word of Wisdom as given to God's people in these latter days.

Section 86 of the Doctrine and Covenants reads as follows:

Behold, verily thus saith the Lord unto you, In consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days, I have warned you, and forewarn you, by giving unto you this word of wisdom by revelation, that inasmuch as any man drinketh wine or strong drink among you, behold, it is not good, neither meet in the sight of your Father, only in assembling yourselves together, to offer up your sacraments before him. And, behold, this should be wine; yea, pure wine of the grape of the vine, of your own make. And again, strong drinks are not for the belly, but for the washing of your bodies. And again, tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man, but is an herb for bruises, and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill. And again, hot drinks are not for the body or belly.

And again, verily I say unto you, All wholesome herbs God hath ordained for the constitution, nature, and use of man, every herb in the season thereof, and every fruit in the season thereof. All these to be used with prudence and thanksgiving. Yea, flesh also, of beasts and of the fowls of the air, I, the Lord, hath ordained for the use of man, with thanksgiving. Nevertheless, they are to be used sparingly; and it is pleasing unto me that they should not be used only in times of winter, or of cold, or famine. All grain is ordained for the use of man and of beasts, to be the staff of life, not only for man, but for the beasts of the field, and the fowls of heaven, and all wild animals that run or creep on the earth; and these hath God made for the use of man only in times of famine and excess of hunger.

All grain is good for the food of man, as also the fruit of the vine, that which yieldeth fruit, whether in the ground or above the ground. Nevertheless, wheat for man, and corn for the ox, and oats for the horse, and rye for the fowls, and for swine, and for all beasts of the field, and barley for all useful animals, and for mild drinks, as also other grain. And all saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel, and marrow to their bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint; and I, the Lord, give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them. Amen.

In the above quotation we are plainly told by the Lord just what we should do and what to avoid in both food and drink, to receive the very best result both physically and spiritually.

Firstly, why is this law given? "In consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days."

Seemingly this explains about the whole matter, and shows why God's ways and thoughts are so much superior and in advance of ours, because of his foreknowledge and divine insight of the future, even to existing conditions in these present days. Because of the love of money and worldly gain, mankind is willing to adulterate and substitute in the manufacturing of human food and drink to such a degree that in many cases it is positively poisonous to take such into the human stomach. And aside from God's warning, science and investigation have proved plainly, beyond a reasonable doubt, that tea and coffee, as sold to-day, are so far from being pure as to be almost unrecognized when compared with the true article. Chicory, beans, peas, etc., are added to coffee in large quantities, with slight risk of being discovered by the average user, while tea is composed of many kinds of dried leaves, artificially colored so as to avoid detection. This, with the tannin that it already contains, makes a poison that not only injures the stomach, but also helps to ruin the nervous system, as well as work harmfully upon the other delicate organs of the body and brain.

And what is true of these is also true in a general way of all alcoholic drinks, as well as tobacco in whatever form it may be. True it is that we often see men and women and children who are addicted to the use of some or all of these, who are apparently well and strong; but we do not know how much better they would be without them or how much longer their years would be lengthened, or how surely the poison may be working in their system to finally form some cancerous or other fatal disease, which they might not otherwise have and which often is attributed to quite another cause.

Again meat (and by the term is meant the flesh of all living creatures of earth and air) is mentioned as harmful to mankind except under certain conditions. A reasonable amount of meat eaten sparingly in cold weather is beneficial to the system in many ways; while if used in the same way in warm weather or in large amounts at any time, it proves to be harmful; hence the wise objection and directions for its best use by the Lord. In place of the above harmful articles he has told us what to use that we might be best benefited thereby. In foods is mentioned as most important the herb family, which consists of the products of the vegetable kingdom, including grains and cereals of all kinds in a pure state; also fruits of the vine, while drink may be provided from grains which when properly prepared is as palatable as any drink on earth, and far more beneficial than some in any and every way. The above diet of food and drink as outlined by the Lord in his divine judgment and wisdom, is also conceded by research and study of man to be the best in every way for the proper development of the muscles, flesh, blood, and brain of the human body in the young, and equally good for the maintenance of the same in the aged, promoting life in its fullest and broadest sense, and giving a power and clearness of mind and intellect never observed in those evading this law. And to add further to its value, we are promised by the Lord that if Saints keep this law and comply with its requirements, they shall not only be a healthy people but shall possess wisdom and knowledge, and shall be wonderfully blessed in matters of endurance; "Shall run and not be weary; shall walk and not faint." But better than all that, the destroying angel of disease shall pass them by even as the children of Israel.

One other passage that I wish to call attention to will be found in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 38:

Cease to be idle; cease to be unclean; . . . cease to sleep longer than is needful; retire to thy bed early, that ye may not be weary, arise early, that your bodies and your minds may be invigorated.

This should have consideration with the passages before quoted, because it is so closely connected therewith. An individual, young or old, who is properly employed, clean in body as well as mind, sleeping just the amount that the natural requirements of the body demand, in connection with keeping the law already referred to in this article, will not only have a body strong and healthy, but a mind clearer, an intellect brighter, and a life more enjoyable in every way than the one who disregards such essentials of true living. Many otherwise noble and beautiful intellects have been dulled and in some instances ruined for life by disregarding the call of nature for rest and sleep, which pleasures and amusements have deprived them of. And on the other hand, what would have been a dull, listless individual has turned out to be a bright, active one by observing these simple (and to some foolish) laws of the natural as well as spiritual life.

And yet in the face of such arguments and divine and human proofs as this, we find many, alas, too many, even among the Saints, who in part or wholly disregard these commandments or laws, and yet can not understand why their bodies are weak or easily overcome by prevailing diseases, or why, when administered to by the elders, they do not find the cure and health they long for and expect.

"Be not deceived, God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." If we, contrary to all warning, human and divine, will openly and continually break the laws of God and nature, can we expect nature's God to aid us in time when such violation has brought upon us distress and suffering? Would he be right and just,—in fact, would he be God if he did so? For as surely as the human limb is burned when thrust into the fire, so will violation and disregard of God's and nature's law bring upon man suffering, death, and the angel of destruction. That we may be wise in time for our present and eternal good, is my prayer in Jesus' name.

FIFTY YEARS OF THE PRESIDENCY OF JOSEPH SMITH.

(Paper read by Elder Heman C. Smith at Independence, Missouri, April 6, 1910.)

To properly understand the work of the half century of President Smith's occupancy as the chief presiding officer of the church, during which time he has commanded the confidence of his collaborators to the extent that there has never been a negative vote on the question of sustaining him, it is necessary to take a retrospective view of conditions at the time he assumed this position.

From the time his honored father commenced the work which he is now to take up, the combined powers and influence of the Christian churches had been in opposition to the extent that it sometimes assumed the form of violence resulting in the death of many adherents to the faith, including President Smith's own father, who was stricken down while scarcely in the prime of life.

This opposition, not always scrupulous in the means employed and now encouraged by its success in removing the leading men of the movement, had poisoned the public mind so that the people over which President Smith was now called to preside had little standing in the Christian world. Dark as this picture seems, a still sadder chapter, it is our duty to record, viz, that some of the adherents of the latter-day message, including men who were prominently known as its leading defenders, had by reprehensible methods, dishonorable conduct, and immoral practices brought shame upon the fair name of the church, reflecting upon the memory of her early defenders. This had strengthened the opposition from without and served to make those who had hitherto hesitated enlist their sympathies and active coöperation with the opposition. It was truly a time that tried men's souls, and the faith of many was overthrown.

Many leaders had arisen, some no doubt trying honestly and bravely to stem the tide of apostasy and corruption, others ambitious for power were preying upon the credulity of the trusting, confiding Saints. This condition of things had made even those who were true to the faith suspicious of any man who aspired to lead or advise them.

This was the condition which faced President Smith, on the 6th of April, 1860, when a young, untried, inexperienced man of twenty-eight years, Without was a determined, strongly entrenched foe; among those professing faith in the latter day dispensation was a strong, well-organized opposition under the dominion of a corrupted priesthood. In a scattered, disheartened, chaotic, suspicious yet honorable contingency the hope of Israel rested. Chiefly from this element must come the support which would make a reorganization possible. Preparation had been made for his reception by a small band who had been struggling for several years against almost crushing opposition from without and dissension from within.

The history of the half century of President Smith's incumbency would be incomplete without mention of such names as William Marks, Jason W. Briggs, Zenos H. Gurley, sr., Samuel Powers, William W. Blair, Samuel H. Gurley, Edmund C. Briggs, Israel L. Rogers, James Blakeslee, Josiah Ells, and many other strong men and true who though often deceived and disappointed rallied to the support of the young prophet. Nor would the efforts of these men have been effectual but for the loyal support of the rank and file who closed up to the gospel banner to renew the struggle for the faith so dear to them.

As applied to this condition how appropriate are the following words from the first general epistle of Joseph Smith dated July 19, 1861:

In the name of the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob, I now call upon all the scattered Saints, upon all the broad earth, to arise, and shake off the sleep that hath bound them these many years, take on the armor of the just, calling on the name of the Lord for help, and unite once more for the emancipation of the honest in heart from the power of false doctrines and the shackles of sin.

In the name of bleeding Zion, I call upon all those who have been wandering in by and forbidden paths and have been led astray by wicked and designing men, to turn from their scenes of wickedness and sins of convenience, to turn from their servitude to Satan, in all his seductive devices; from vice in every phase, and from the labor of sin, the wages whereof are ever death, unto their true and delightful allegiance to the principles of the gospel of peace, to the paths of wisdom, to the homage of that God that brought the children of Israel out of bondage; to turn and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon; to lay hold anew upon the rod of iron which surely leads to the tree of life; to remember that those who live to the Lord keep his commandments, and that the promises are unto the faithful, and the reward unto those that endure unto the end.

And in the name of the Lord of Hosts, I call upon all the inhabitants of the earth to repent, believe, and be baptized, for the time cometh when the judgments of God are to be poured out upon all nations, and the besom of God's wrath shall smoke through the land; when men shall know that there is a God in Israel, and he is mighty to punish or to save; that the prayers of those under the altar have been heard, and a swift retribution is to come, when the despoiler will be despoiled; when those who denied justice shall be judged, and the measure meted unto others shall be meted unto them; when the prisoner shall go free, the oppressed be redeemed, and all Israel shall cry, "Glory to God in the highest be given, for he that is long-suffering and slow to anger, has arisen, and shall bring again Zion." Amen and amen.

Those who have watched anxiously though perhaps suspiciously the culmination of events will recognize the fact that the young prophet had grasped the situation, and thousands who have not yet awakened to the importance of this message will yet recognize in these words the voice of God to them.

The success of President Joseph Smith and his associates depended solely upon the inherent power of truth in the message they bore upheld by him in whose name they lifted the banner of justice and truth, for there was no other source to which they could appeal for help, and to realize the full benefit of these they must not only be in harmony with the word of truth, but must be imbued with the spirit of truth.

Realizing this President Smith struck the keynote of success in his speech of acceptance delivered fifty years ago to-day at Amboy, Illinois. He said:

I would say to you, brethren, as I hope you may be, and in faith I trust you are, as a people that God has promised his blessings upon, I came not here of myself, but by the influence of the Spirit. For some time past I have received manifestations pointing to the position which I am about to assume.

I wish to say that I have come here not to be dictated by any men or set of men. I have come in obedience to a power not my own, and shall be dictated by the power that sent me.

God works by means best known to himself, and I feel that for some time past he has been pointing out a work for me to do.

For two or three years past depositions have been waiting on me, urging me to assume the responsibilities of the leadership of the church; but I have answered each and everyone of them that I did not wish to trifle with the faith of the people.

I do not propose to assume this position in order to amass wealth out of it, neither have I sought it as a profit.

I know opinions are various in relation to these matters. I have conversed with those who told me they would not hesitate one moment in assuming the high and powerful position as leader of this people. But I have been well aware of the motives which might be ascribed to me,—motives of various kinds, at the foundation of all which is selfishness,—should I come forth to stand in the place where my father stood.

I have believed that should I come without the guarantee of the people, I should be received in blindness, and would be liable to be accused of false motives. Neither would I come to you without receiving favor from my heavenly Father. . . .

Should you take me as a leader, I propose that all should be dealt by in mercy, open as to Gentile or Jew; but I ask not to be received except as by the ordinances of the church.

Some, who had ought to know the proprieties of the church, have told me that no certain form was necessary for me to assume the leadership—that the position came by right of lineage; yet I know that if I attempted to lead as a prophet by these considerations, and not by a call from Heaven, men would not be led to believe who do not believe now. And so I have come not of my own dictation to this sacred office.

I believe that we owe duties to our country and to society and are amenable to the laws of the land, and I have always considered it my duty to act upon this principle; and I do say that among the people where I live I have as many good and true friends as I could desire among those of any society.

The people of Hancock County have been strongly anti-Mormon, and there I know of no enemies. I have been engaged in business with anti-Mormons, I have mingled with them, and have not only been obliged not to make any remarks, which might give offense, but also to smother my own feelings, if I had any. I hold no enmity to any man living who has fought this doctrine; nor do I know any who hold enmity towards me. I hope there are none.

In conclusion, I will come to you if you will receive me, give my ability, and the influence my name may bring, together with what little power I possess; and I trust by your prayers and faith to be sustained. I pledge myself to promulgate no doctrine that shall not be approved by you or the code of good morals.

I have my shortcomings, but I trust as a leader I shall do nothing to lead astray. If I do so, I shall expect condemnation; for I am satisfied that this people, governed by the same policy, would serve me worse than they have Brigham Young before, for I would be wholly deserted. . . .

I do not care to say any more at present, but will simply add that if the same Spirit which prompts my coming, prompts also my reception, I am with you.

It is but proper to say that these high conceptions of honor, fidelity, virtue, and truth were not only the results of inherent forces transmitted by an honorable and virtuous father, and a saintly and virtuous mother; but that these forces were directed by the wise, constant, and undeviating hand of that faithful and devoted mother upon whose care he had been thrown by the cruel death of his father, and who on this auspicious day was by his side encouraging him to stand for God and the right. Nor was President Smith in this conflict against overwhelming odds subject to the embarrassment that the Master was of whom it is said, "Neither did his brethren believe on him," for very soon after his resolve to stand by and defend the discredited faith to his fathers, his loyal brothers, Alexander and David were at his side with him to share whatever of shame, contumely, or honor might be his portion, and there unflinchingly they stood so long as life and reason remained.

The call to repentance was also heard by some among the factions who turned from their allegiance to erring or designing leaders and took their place among the leading representatives of the church, prominent among whom appear such honored names as Charles Derry and James Caffall, each of whom occupied with credit in the Quorum of Twelve.

We can not here speak of all who nobly worked for the success of the cause; nor can we go into the details as to the result obtained. We have but to contrast present conditions with the picture we have presented to give an idea of the results of fifty years of the presidency of Joseph Smith.

It was to be expected that in the practical workings of the church difference of opinion would arise which would sometimes produce bitterness and distrust; nor would it be wise or true to state that President Joseph Smith, his colleagues, or the body as a whole have made no mistakes, yet notwithstanding this formidable array of opposing forces, and the inherent weakness of her devotees, the church has moved steadily onward, redeeming her pledges, sustaining her faith, making honorable her name, until to-day her representatives are honored almost universally and her reputation for good is known throughout the world, or so far as Christian civilization has extended its benign influence.

Though President Smith has reached the advanced age of nearly seventy-eight years and his bodily powers are becoming impaired, he has lived to see one of his earliest predictions realized, viz, that he would live to see the name of a Latter Day Saint honorable among men; and he has had the satisfaction of seeing the little band with whom he cast his lot fifty years ago become a mighty host, and the message they bore carried triumphantly to almost every part of his native land, to many parts of Europe, to far away Australia, and the islands of the sea. To see this mighty host well organized and disciplined marching on to victory, a solid phalanx keeping step to the music of the angel message, must be a cheering sight to one grown old in service who has given his powers to the establishment of the cause, as he must to a great extent see the burdens he has so faithfully borne placed upon other shoulders.

Though in the sunset of his life he can but regret that his failing powers remove him largely from active service, sweet indeed must be the retrospect that presents to his mind the thousands whose faith has been saved, and whose hopes have been renewed through his fifty years of service; and "as ways have grown short that seemed once to be long," gladly he joins "in that triumphant song," as "tenderly, tenderly God leadeth him on."

Though many brave men, including his two beloved brothers who have fought side by side with him to achieve these glorious results, have gone down in death, and left him to keep a more lonely vigil, they are waiting to welcome him to that shining shore where the seducers of his honored name can no more intrude and he may receive the full fruition of his long cherished hope.

And now, President Smith, let me assure you that not only in the assembly but wherever in this wide world there beats the heart of a true Latter Day Saint, you enjoy the confidence and the sustaining prayers of that heart, and permit me to assure you that all the mental and bodily powers of this mighty host, together with all we possess, are laid upon the altar of God and his truth, and are consecrated to the success of that cause to which you have given your life powers.

POSITIVE VS. NEGATIVE.

A gentleman once owned a park. He opened it to the public with the restriction: "Keep off the grass," but, strange to say, the people still walked on the grass. In fact, the sign just seemed to suggest to some that the grass would be preferable to the walk. It rather annoyed them to be told "not" to do a thing—some people are like that, you know. In fact, this feeling of wanting to do the thing that is not allowable is so common that it has been said to be "human nature." So the sign did not have the desired effect. The gentleman saw this and, being himself somewhat of a student of human nature, he changed the sign to: "Please keep on the path," and was delighted to find that this sign accomplished his purpose.

Children, as well as grown persons, often resent being told "not" to do things. The feeling is probably stronger with them than with adults, for they are governed largely by their feelings—they do not reason about things, as we do. So, instead of telling a child "not" to do a thing, if we reverse it and say: "Please do so and so" it will have a much better result.

Did you ever watch yourself to see how many times in the day you say "don't" to your children? We are so likely to say:

"Don't slam the door!"

"Don't touch that book!"

"Don't spill your milk on the tablecloth!"

"Don't call your little brother names!"

"Don't scratch that chair!"

Now every time we say "don't" we could just as easily reverse it to a "do," and the effect on the child would be much better.

Children who are constantly being nagged at with "don't do this" and "don't do that," are sure to become faultfinders themselves, always looking for flaws, always criticising others. The world has already plenty of such people. Let us strive to have the children belong to the bright, cheery, optimistic class, always on the lookout for excellence—the most beautiful of all characters, seeing all men as "made in the image of God" and in each life, if they look for it, finding something of that image.

Amongst the passengers on board a train one day were a mother and her pretty little girl of about four years of age. The child was so bright and attractive that she soon drew to herself the attention of all the passengers. She was evidently what is commonly known as a "spoiled child," for the mother could be heard telling several of her fellow-passengers that she "never saw such a child," she "could do nothing with her." The little girl was waltzing up and down the aisle of the car, and the mother kept calling,

"Elizabeth, come here at once," in a peremptory tone. Elizabeth for a long time did not pay the slightest heed to this command; finally the mother went and dragged the child to her seat. After that the commands from her mother came thick and fast—"Don't put your feet on that seat!"—"Don't untie your bonnet!"—"Don't open that parcel!"—"Don't handle my muff," etc., etc. Finally the child herself could stand it no longer and she said, "Mother, I won't do one thing more unless you say please."

Can any mother expect her child to say "please," if she, herself, fails to do so in making requests of the child?

Is it any wonder that a bright, healthy child, under such circumstances, would be what is commonly considered so "bad"? Children must have some outlet for their activity. It is very unreasonable to expect children, even on a railway train, to sit on their seat and do nothing—to just "be still." If, instead of saying, "don't do this," and "don't do that," the mother had only—if but once—given the child something to do, or turned her attention in another direction, with such remarks as: "What funny windows these are!"—"Here is a piece of paper and you can play you are making tickets for all the passengers!"—"Here is a pencil so that you can mark on your tickets where they are for," etc. Oftentimes, the "bad child," so considered, is only the child who is thoroughly healthy or unusually bright, but is given no outlet for her physical or mental energy. The "mischief" into which she gets is simply her only available means of employing her natural activity.

Not long ago I heard of a girl who said to her aunt with whom she was visiting, "I like to live with you, for you make me mind."

When in her own home she had been governed largely by her own caprice, but this aunt was firm in permitting her niece to do only what was best.

Let your commands be firm and given only for the child's best welfare, always remembering that children possess a child's nature and not that of an adult. Then—expect obedience and have it.—Marion Wathen in American Motherhood.

HOW JOHNNIE LEARNED TO WIPE HIS FEET.

"Did you wipe your feet, Johnnie?"

"No, mamma; I forgot."

"Run back and do it then, please."

"Yes, mamma."

There was a prolonged and energetic scraping and rubbing of two obedient feet on the hall rug.

"Mamma, won't you tell me why you have to wipe your feet every time you come into the house?"

"Yes, if you can not find out for yourself."

Johnnie looked interested. Mamma always let him find out things for himself when he could. He had found already that there was always a reason behind her commands, and he enjoyed hunting for it.

"Where can I begin?"

"Well, walk all around the rooms, and, when you are near the beginning place, I'll say 'Warm!'"

That was just like mamma, and Johnnie knew he was going to have a good time. He went through the two parlors, but mamma was silent. Johnnie was watching her over his shoulder, and hardly knew when he crossed the threshold into the library.

"Warm!" cried mamma, suddenly.

Johnnie halted promptly and looked all about him.

"Don't look too high for the reasons of things," said mamma with a smile, as Johnnie, not budging an inch, stood rolling his eyes toward the ceiling.

"Warmer!" as the little lad began to look toward the floor.

"Oh, I spy!" said Johnnie suddenly. And he picked up a big cake of dry mud from the carpet. "I've found out, mamma!"

"That is one reason, but there are others."

"In the house, mamma?"

"Yes, but you can't see them just yet."

"Why can't I see them now, mamma?"

Mamma laughed and gave Johnnie a kiss. Then she handed him pencil and paper.

"I will write a question on this paper, and you may have until to-morrow night to answer it,—'What makes mud?'"

"Ho! that's easy! Water and dirt!"

"Yes. Write it this way: 'What makes mud?' '1. Moisture. 2. Dirt.' Write down everything that you see dropped and left on the sidewalk or in the street. If it is wet, like water, put it under 'Moisture'; if not, put it under 'Dirt.'"

"Oh, mamma, what a nice play!"

Johnnie moved over to the window.

"Hullo, here's the sprinkler! Do you spell 'water' with an 'a' or an 'o' mamma?"

"W-a-t-e-r," said mamma, without a smile.

She never laughed at Johnnie's mistakes, and that was what made Johnnie think that she was "lots nicer'n other boys' mamas."

Presently the city carts came along to gather up the garbage. The barrels were heavy, and the men, to save lifting them, emptied the contents upon the street, and then shoveled it into the carts. They left a good amount behind them, however, and Johnnie got quite excited over trying to write down all the different things of which he saw remnants. Mamma suggested that "garbage" would cover it all, so Johnnie, after much wrinkling of his forehead and twisting of his tongue, wrote "Gobbige," for mamma was called away just then.

The ashman came down the street, and he, too, tipped over the barrels, and shoveled the ashes into the cart,—all but what blew away; for the wind was high, and a large part of every shovelful went flying over the street.

Mamma was gone a long time, but when she returned, Johnnie called her to the window.

"I don't know how to say things, mamma. There are the sewer men cleaning out the sewers, and they spill the dirty stuff on the street. Then a wagon went by full of old bones and meat from the market, and some of that dropped from the cart. Then there are the horses and dogs and cats, and oh, mamma! I don't think mud is nice; do you?" Johnnie's little nose was all puckered up with disgust.

"No, Johnnie."

Mamma smiled meaningly.

"Oh, mamma! I've found out already, haven't I, mamma?"

"Yes, part of it."

"What else is there, mamma?"

"Draw two circles of the same size on your paper."

So Johnnie got the compasses which mamma had given him for a birthday present,—they had so many circles to draw that mamma taught Johnnie how to do them—and drew two circles each about an inch across.

"Put eleven dots in one. Just scatter them about anywhere. Now put two hundred dots in the other."

"My, what a lot for that little circle!"

"Now, suppose that every dot is a grain of dust. Would you rather breathe air with eleven grains of dust in it or air with two hundred grains in it?"

"I guess the two hundred dots would choke us,—don't you, mamma?"

"That depends. Will you close the blinds to that front window, where the sun shines so bright?"

When the blinds were closed, mamma hung a dark cloth over the window, and cut a little hole in it right over a crack in the shutters, so that the bright sunlight came through in a long pencil of light. Then Johnnie saw myriads of little dust particles, so small that he had not known they were there until the strong sun lighted them up.

"You see, Johnnie, the mud and dirt brought into the house are ground up fine by our feet, and then set moving about in the air by the movements of people and the drafts through the room. The more mud brought in, the more dust for us to breathe. Now that you know what mud is made of, you can see that it is not very good stuff to take into our lungs."

"Oh, mamma, you won't have to tell me to wipe my feet any more. I'll do it every time, if I don't forget."

Just then mamma took a little red note book from her work basket and wrote something in it. Johnnie thought that she wrote down his promise. Mamma did that sometimes and had a queer way of letting Johnnie look over her note book about the time when he had failed to keep his word. To-day, however, she wrote:

"Get a good microscope for Johnnie's Christmas present. If he forgets to wipe his feet, show him the dangers of dust."

And that is the way Johnnie's mother helped her boy to remember to wipe his feet.—The Sunday-School Times.

Questions on May Reading.

Why was the notice, "Please keep on the path," more effective than the one "Keep off the grass"? How are both children and adults affected by prohibitory commands? What could be substituted for the negative commands here enumerated? What is the probable result of nagging at a child? What shall we teach our children to look for? What is displayed on the part of the parent who says he can do nothing with his child? Why should a parent say please to his child? What is the best course to pursue with a restless, active child? Why did the child like the aunt who made her mind? Which teacher do children at school like best, the one who requires obedience or the one who does not? How does it affect a child whether or not the one commanding him expects to be obeyed?

What is the attitude of this mother toward her boy? What had he learned was always behind her commands? In what way did he come to understand these reasons? What benefits would the boy derive from this game while searching for mother's reasons? How would this mother's method compare with the negative method of attempting to control a child by "don'ts"? How did she treat her boy's mistakes? What do you think of her reminders from the notebook? How could her method of teaching her boy in regard to dust be applied to other things?

Request for Prayer.

Sr. Annie Roberts, Dayton, Nevada, asks for prayers that she may get well. She has suffered for ten years.

"We may not put our burden on our brother, but we may lean on God. He knows us personally. He does not know the ocean only, but the drop; not the Milky Way, but the star; not the meadow, but the flower; not the mass, but the atom; not the million, but the man. He knows your name, your street, your number, your trade. He knows you and knows you altogether. And he can bear your burden. It would crush your neighbor, but it will not crush him."

Letter Department

Editors Herald: I want to thank the Saints and friends who have so lavishly bestowed tokens of love and friendship upon us as a family in our protracted affliction and bereavement. For four years my wife battled with that dreaded monster, cancer, which had taxed the skill of all whom we had enlisted in the way of physicians and nurses. For three years the Saints and friends of Nanaimo, British Columbia, manifested their love by untiring efforts to comfort and cheer, for the suffering one. It not only alleviated pain, but there was that spirit of sympathy so prominent that every word and every act left a lasting impression, and many times when left to ourselves my wife would remark: "What a comfort they are to me."

In July, 1909, we moved to Seattle, Washington, with a view of being better able to perform the duties placed upon us, but her health was such as to make it impossible for me to leave her. She was able to attend our reunion held during August, and bore up well until the last day. From September her strength waned rapidly, until on the first Sunday in September the Seattle Branch fasted for her. From that time on improvement was noticeable, and on the 13th of February she attended meeting at the church, bearing a testimony to the mercy and love of God. On the 17th she took a severe spell and continued to sink, dying on the morning of the 23d. We can never expect to repay the Saints of Seattle for their kindness in every respect. May God reward them (and he will) for their kindness. They never came empty handed.

My second reason for penning this letter is to confess before God and man the opportunity I have missed in life of developing the Christ-like spirit of resignation. How often, yes, repeatedly, have I complained because of my companion's condition, and how often she admonished me to be patient, because there was a wise purpose behind it all. I could not see it, but oh, how forcibly it was impressed upon me when the end came, that an opportunity had passed for ever. Dear Saints, whatever may come to you in life over which you have no control, try to be patient.

I adopt this means of thanking Saints and friends who wrote words of comfort to us. We again take up the work that it has pleased God to impose upon us, and solicit the prayers of all for our ultimate success in this warfare. With confidence in this as the marvelous work and a wonder,

WILLIAM JOHNSON.

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA, March, 3, 1910.

Dear Herald: When the dear HERALD falls into my hands, I am hungry to receive any and all of the blessed things it contains, which are many. The soul stirring letters that appear from the brothers and sisters certainly cheer the heart and make a person more determined to press on to the end of this earth life. I was much impressed with a letter in the issue of February 16, 1910, by Bro. Edward Rannie, touching upon the work of the Interstate Institute, held at Independence, Missouri, December 28 and 29. Regarding the innovation of having members of other churches take part in the exercises, it may be an innovation if others choose to call it such; but it is the only way to interest people in what we have to present to them, to get them to see and also to feel that it is our desire to do them good, and make them feel that there is something besides cold formality. I am truly sorry that such a sentiment exists in the mind of a Latter Day Saint, that there is no room for one not of our faith to work with or amongst us.

The thought brings to mind an incident which occurred some time ago in a western village where there was a thriving Sunday school composed of Latter Day Saints and non-Latter Day Saints working together for good. The time came when one of the faith gave out that there was enough of the Latter Day Saints to run the thing and the outsiders were not needed, which was equivalent to saying "not wanted." The good that the school might have done became limited from that time and even to this day the people of the community have not forgotten the insult, as they called it.

I believe that there is room in this work for all, and in the great heart of God and his Christ there is room for every honest, earnest worker, and if the children of the kingdom wish to reflect the eternal light to those who sit in darkness, they will have to learn that it can not be done while they, themselves, possess the spirit of "Keep away from me, for I am holier than thou." They must cultivate the spirit of "Come, let us reason together." Invite them, and if they have views to present, let them present them; if they wish to assist in the singing, let them assist inasmuch as their doings are in no way detrimental to our great work, and if they are seeking to become better informed, opportunity will be given to correct any error that may occur, and thus it will enable us to teach them the very things that God has put into our hands to deliver to the nations.

We are all human and the cold, formal ostracism of the world affects us. How gladly we would be heard in other houses of worship, or institutes, or Sunday schools, if opportunity was offered, and how keenly we feel the spirit of "We do not need that any teach us; especially you." I call to mind not long ago when I was sent as a delegate to the Lake County convention of State Sunday schools, and was not permitted to speak, nor even asked to come forward to take my place among the other delegates and the only place my voice was heard was in the class as a scholar. From that time I decided never to use anyone in such manner, for if we ever expect to win people to Christ it must be done through the same Spirit that was manifested in Jesus Christ when he said, "When I am lifted up I will draw all men unto me." But I see there is a possibility of us being lifted up in our own imagination, and thereby make others feel out of place in our presence, by virtue of our not being in possession of our understanding the spirit that led the Christ to talk with his enemies, the Samaritans, the ostracised publican; to talk with and instruct the sinner; to comfort, heal, and bless those who were not of the faith. How my soul was made glad only a few days ago when it was my privilege to talk in the house of a friend, who is not in this church, when I heard him speak so kindly of the elders who had been there and especially when I heard him say to his wife, "Now, look here, I am going to have a room fitted up, so that when the elders come to visit us, they can stay with us." Such statements as those are as refreshing to the soul of an elder as the water from the Rock of Horeb to the famishing Israelites, and it does one's soul good to talk with such a person who is willing to be taught the things of a higher life. May God abundantly bless all such and help us not to chide or snub them, and make them feel they have no room in our hearts or conventions, institutes, or in fact any of our doings. We have now a number of homes of people of other beliefs open to us for preaching, which we are pleased to take advantage of, and have instituted Bible readings, or classes where a goodly number meet every Tuesday evening for study. Honest and good people meet at these places and good is being accomplished, and if properly continued will mean the education of and gathering into the church some that will be an honor to this cause. They are given place, they are privileged to ask questions, to express their opinions just as freely as if they were members, and they surely appreciate it.

We deplore the spirit of intolerance; it should not have place in the heart of one who calls himself a Latter Day Saint. Let us seek to become more like our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. Allow him to lift us by exalting us, because of our humility, and when thus exalted we shall be able to see the good in all men, and work for the advancement of that which is good. May God help us so to do.

May the Father in heaven so bless us with divine grace, that we may endure in the conflict of life and finally be found to be worthy of a crown of life, is my prayer.

A. E. STONE.

SENTINEL BUTTE, NORTH DAKOTA, March 3, 1910.

Editors Herald: In reading my HERALD over this morning I see a letter from one Bro. W. S. Powers, of Portland, Maine, under date of January 22, 1910, in which he tells his experience with the usual method the Methodist ministry adopt in pulling people into their net. These things I have met with hundreds of times. I will tell my policy and give my reasons. When they ask these questions I sit still and make no response unless directly asked as the brother was, then I depend upon the aid of the Spirit to assist me in whatever conversation may take place.

In refusing to respond to their questions I hold I do not commit myself to any propositions. Their questions are only their requests. In other words, they simply request you to stand "if you want to go to heaven." If you do not stand up, it does not necessarily signify that you do not want to go to heaven. It means that you refuse to tell him whether you want to go to heaven or not. In other words you do not regard that it is any of his business. At the worst, your conduct might be considered only an incivility.

Now reasons: First, the method is a trap to draw the unwary into their clutches where they can either embarrass them or humiliate them before an audience, or compel them to acquiesce in what he may be preaching, and is of the Devil, seeking to take advantage of those who are not able to defend themselves before an audience. In rising you lend him influence in that any friend having confidence in you may be led into his power by your action. I am only a lay member and of course my position would not have the weight of that of an elder. There is one further reason: they do not only seek to get your friends but they seek to get you. Now comes the next question after the heaven question: All those desiring to go to heaven are requested to come up to the altar while we engage in a season of prayer. Now there comes a time when you have got to part with their ways. It is better to begin before you have lent them any aid, and before you have submitted yourself to any temptation. Their doctrine is a deception and I feel certain of it, and so I positively refuse them aid in it, so far as it seeks to lead people after it.

We are having fine weather now; have had lots of snow this winter and sometimes pretty cold, but there has been no suffering among the farmers. Sheep and range cattle have had a hard time this winter, because they had to live out on the range all the season, and the pasturage has been covered too deep for them. I have just received a letter from Brother Houghton, of Clitherall, Minnesota, one of our missionaries. He was here late last fall, and gave us a few sermons which were bread in due season. He preached able sermons and got some few interested. But the weather then being so cold, we thought perhaps a warmer season would be more appropriate for reaching the people. There are three or four families of Saints within a distance of ten miles around here, and we have an elder about twenty miles south, Brother Baughman, formerly of Gallands Grove, Iowa. To the Gallands Grove Saints reading this we extend greetings. I am the oldest son of Nathan Lindsey, whom the older Saints of Gallands Grove will remember. To them I will say we have a fine country up here. Brother Baughman and myself and everybody else in this country are doing well. One of Brother Baughman's sons died last fall. We knew him by the name of Chan. This was a very sad bereavement to the family and of regret to all who knew him. One other of our members passed into the realm of the future a week ago, Sister Kirkpatrick, who lives three miles west of here. The family was under quarantine at the time and none were allowed to attend the funeral. But Brother Kirkpatrick and family have the sympathy of the entire community in this hour of bereavement.

May we all be found worthy of God's mercy and love,

Yours in gospel bonds,

G. W. LINDSEY.

WIRT, INDIANA, March 2, 1910.

Dear Herald: I have enjoyed reading the good sermons, articles, and letters contained in your columns, which have many times brought joy and peace to my soul and I feel I want to contribute a few lines this time. It will be two years on May 19 since I embraced the everlasting gospel. About twelve years ago I commenced reading the Bible, and I got so taken up with it that I would spend every spare moment in reading it, and I soon got to feeling that I would some day preach the gospel, although I had never heard more than two or three sermons, preached by a Lutheran minister. I soon informed my mother of the deep impression made upon me by reading the Bible, and she rejoiced to learn that she had one son who would some day preach the gospel. My parents were both very religious, but as they belonged to the Congregational Church and there was no church near us, they did not attend any. Well, mother said to preach the gospel I should go to college and study for the ministry, but said they were not able to help me, so I would have to wait. I went away from home to earn money to go on and I went where there was a Congregational Church. I worked there two years and by this time I got quite well acquainted with the teachings of the Bible, and I got to feeling that to go to college was not God's way of sending out his servants, and I told the ministers how I felt.

Well, they said that was all right for the days of the apostles, but it would not do now, as the times have changed. So I let them persuade me to go, although I went against my convictions. I went to German-English College, at Wilton Junction, as I was going to study the German. I studied in college four years, but was dissatisfied all the time I was there. The students and teachers and I could not agree very well, as I believed the Bible and they only about half of it. So I left college, although they wanted me to take four more years of it, and shortly after leaving it they gave me a church to preach in and I was not even ordained. I preached about five months for them with quite good success, yet I felt there was something lacking, and I was always looking for the church of Jesus Christ, built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, and thinking I had found it I united with what they call the Church of God. I was soon disappointed with it, but thank God for his guidance.

In May, 1908, at Valley Junction, Wisconsin, I was privileged to hear the fullness of the gospel, as Elder W. P. Robinson was there holding some meetings in a schoolhouse. The first sermon I heard I felt that it was what I had been looking for for years, and after hearing a few sermons, I could not wait any longer, and was baptized on May 19; and on June 14 I was ordained a priest. Twice I was spoken to and told that if faithful I would yet take the angel's message to Germany. Since July, 1909, I have been appointed to labor in the Southern Indiana District, and as Elder William Dowker and I have labored together most of the time since I came into the district, and as he wrote a letter to your columns just before the holidays telling of our labors together, I will take it up where he left off.

At the time he wrote I had just gone up to Indianapolis to spend the holidays. I enjoyed the two weeks spent with the Saints very much. The elders that are acquainted with Bro. and Sr. Charles H. Fish, know that they know how to make the elders feel at home, and the writer was well remembered with Christmas presents. Leaving Indianapolis on January 2, I stopped over night with Tempests at Terre Haute and the next day I went to Clay City, where Brother Dowker and myself again took up the work. Had some interesting meetings there and left some near the kingdom. Bro. Charles T. Davis, who is presiding priest, is faithfully feeding the little flock on the bread of life every Lord's day. From Clay City we went to Cincinnati, where we got the use of the Union Church. As we could get no place to stay but in the hotel, and not having the means to go on with the work in that way, we went to Hyatt, where we continued meetings for about ten nights, with a full schoolhouse. There are some here believing the work, but they are not willing to obey it. There was quite a branch a few years ago, but most of the Saints have moved away. Leaving Hyatt, we went to Washington, where we stopped over night, and from there Elder Dowker went to New Harmony and the writer to Borden, where he held some meetings at the home of Felix Barksdales. There are some very near to the kingdom in this place too. There are only two families of Saints here, Barksdales and Sheldons, but they keep up their Sunday school. On February 1, I took the train for New Albany, where I took down sick with la grippe and the quinzey and was well taken care of.

The New Albany Branch is about the most lively branch in the district. They have their regular preaching services, prayer meeting, Religio, and Sunday school. Brother Zahnd has trained the Saints to put their shoulder to the wheel and push the work along. I have recovered and am again out in the battlefield. I am now holding meeting at Wirt, where I was ordained an elder October 17.

My love for the Master and his work is growing stronger, because he has first loved me, and although I feel that I am one of the weakest of his servants, I want to scatter a few flowers among the living, as there are some that will appreciate them more now than if you decorate their graves when they are dead. Pray for me that I may ever be faithful.

Your brother in like precious faith,

JACOB HALB.

Editors Herald: In the winter of 1909, I left New York for the West. A short time after arriving in Seattle, I was permitted to attend the convention of the Reorganized Church. Though I was deprived of my outward vision, I was not spiritually blind. I have been for many years a seeker for all truth. After investigating their claims, I was willing to accept the old Jerusalem gospel. At the reunion at Alki Point, I was baptized by Brother Johnson. I am sending you my dream, which was not revealed for me alone, but was meant to be unfolded to others, that they might enjoy the pleasures that I did.

When all were fast asleep and the hours of night were deepening, it seemed as though I was slowly rising, going upward and upward, until I was far above the damp atmosphere of earth, until I found myself amidst the fleecy clouds. I could see them sailing onward in their course. I continued passing on upward and upward until suddenly I could go no further. I seemed to be nearing the sky. Upon being filled with wonder to know what it all meant, the sky having attracted my attention mostly, I questioned the guide regarding my surroundings. He informed me that I was nearing the entrance of heaven. Suddenly I heard sweet voices singing soft and low, as if coming from afar. I turned my eyes in the direction from whence I heard the singing and saw a boat just turning the bend, coming nearer to the place where I was resting. Slowing a little as it came nearer, so as to give me a chance to see it better, I observed the boat was filled with people, the most of whom were women, who seemed to be the principal singers. Suddenly they sang out louder and grander and then sailed away. I watched them out of sight, and sweet melody dying out in the distance, with them. I turned to the guide and asked what it was; he informed me that the boat rested upon air, the same as I was resting upon. He bade me behold the scenery, rest and be quiet, and the boat would come our way again soon. As I had learned in earth life that obedience is one of the grand laws to be observed, I immediately obeyed, casting my eyes in the direction from which the boat would come. I again heard the sweet voices and knew the boat was coming my way. It soon appeared in the distance, slowing gradually as it neared, until it stopped in front of me as before, thus giving me another opportunity to view the occupants. The outside of the boat resembled the color of the sky, the bow being somewhat higher than any other part of it. The design was the grandest I had ever seen; the decorations were white and gold, bearing the name peace in gold letters. I then observed that the boat was greater in length than in width and that it had wings fastened at each side. On the stern I observed a small flag bearing the stars and stripes.

While I was observing this fantastical object it again sailed off, the voices singing more angelic than before. I called out to them, but they did not hear me. I turned again to the guide and said, "I recognize some of those people; why may I not enter in?" He answered me, "There is an entrance through the immortal King, for those who seek to enter in."

Then I sank back lower and lower until I felt again the damp atmosphere of earth. I then awoke and found myself pillowed up in my bed, the dream being vividly impressed upon my mind. My first thought was to recite it to those around me, which I did. They said: "This is more than an ordinary dream; I believe you have had a vision; I hope you are not going to die." But I answered them, "It would not be death if one could enter there."

I notice in the HERALD for March 2, 1910, an article from a brother in England on keeping the Sabbath. Now, while I have all due respect for the brother's regard for the Sabbath, and am a firm believer of the observance of the Sabbath day, yet I think the good brother has overstepped the mark a little, and is likely ignorant of the condition in America, as compared with Old England. We must remember that a rule that applies to the thickly settled regions of England, where most of the people have but a few blocks to go to the place of meeting, can not be applied to the sparsely settled regions of America, where some often have eight or ten miles to travel, and very few are within walking distance of the place of meeting.

God has given us the horse for our use, but we should use wisdom in this as in all other things and not abuse or ill use our animals, but give them the required amount of rest and recreation to keep up their strength and vitality. I am sure it would not be more acceptable in the sight of God, for us, after working hard all the week, to start out on Sunday with our families to walk two or three miles to church or Sunday school, than for us to hitch up our horse or team and drive that distance. Are we supposed to absent ourselves from the services of the Lord in order to give our animals the desired rest, just because we are unfortunate enough to live beyond walking distance from the meeting place? We can not all afford to have automobiles, bicycles, or airships, and even such things require a certain amount of energy and labor to propel them. On the other hand a great many country people have an extra horse or team that is idle part of the time during the week, or if they have not, they should try if possible to give one or two of their animals a few hours' rest during the week, to make up for the time they are to be used on Sunday driving to and from religious services.

In studying the Scriptures we should not try to apply the law of Moses, given the children of Israel in the wilderness, to ourselves who are under the gospel law of Christ. According to the law of Moses if a person were even caught picking up sticks, or kindling a fire on the Sabbath day, he was condemned to death, and there were many other stringent laws regarding the Sabbath, which it would be out of reason for us to try to observe.

Remember Christ's answer to the Pharisees, when they found fault with the disciples for plucking the ears of corn on the Sabbath day, and with himself for healing on the Sabbath day, as recorded in Luke 6; and again for pulling an animal out of the ditch on the Sabbath day as recorded in Luke 14. Now the good brother would have us leave the animal in the pit and trust to the Lord for its welfare until the Sabbath was over.

On page 361 of the Doctrine and Covenants we read: "The Saints are to observe the first day of the week commonly called the Lord's day, as a day of rest; as a day of worship, as given in the covenants and commandments. And on this day they should refrain from unnecessary work; nevertheless, nothing should be permitted to go to waste on that day, nor should necessary work be neglected. Be not harsh in judgment but merciful in this, as in all other things. Be not hypocrites nor of those who make a man an offender for a word."

And again on page 149 it says: "Thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day; for verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High; nevertheless thy vows shall be offered up in righteousness on all days, and at all times; but remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy sacraments, unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord."

Now if we were to follow the brother's ideas a great many of us would have to reject these commands of the Lord, as we could not go to the house of the Lord without working our horses. But I look at this as coming under the head of necessary work, but for the Saints to hitch up their animals and drive to their neighbors visiting, or the pleasure resorts, of anything of like nature, on the Sabbath day, would come under the head of unnecessary work, and would not be pleasing in the sight of the Lord.

Now I hope the brother will not take any offense at the stand I have taken, and hoping these few words may benefit some one, and bring to the minds of some the wisdom and righteousness of God's laws, I remain,

Yours for truth and righteousness,
E. R. DAVIS.

NEBO, ILLINOIS, March 20, 1910.

Editors Herald: Since last writing to your columns some things of interest have transpired. Bro. J. W. Paxton came here in February and held meetings in a schoolhouse about five or six miles from here and baptized three. The Devil got mad, raised objections, and one of the number was not confirmed. The house was closed, but we have a number of friends there.

On Sunday, March 6, I baptized six at or near our own church, and several more are talking of taking the forward step. I have lectured in three different churches at request of precinct officers on local option, Brother Paxton going with me to Campsville, Illinois. We both occupied in the Baptist church with plenty of compliments. The work surely does move.

On Monday, March 7, I went to Beardstown, Illinois, to engage one Elder H. S. Derr, Baptist, in debate for five nights. Well, I suppose ere this an account has reached your columns. Bro. C. H. Burr was my moderator and did his part well and gave me some valuable assistance, (with the ready and voluminous reserve he has so handy when this work is assailed). To tell the truth this was a happy week for me, and the Saints one and all, as Brother Burr and I were leaving the house, gave us friendly handshake, and "God bless you"; also some outsiders and some Baptists. No man can ever grow large enough to overthrow the truth or the work of its great author. One Baptist preacher said he hoped they would either convert me or get me out of the way of others. I told him I expected to continue until others believed and obeyed. One young man told me he was not a member of our church now, but hoped to be the next time I saw him.

On Sunday, March 13, in response to invitation of Bellevue precinct of International Sunday School Association, I spoke to a full house with satisfactory liberty. Brother Shoemaker, of Beardstown, had loaned me two of his charts, also some of his notes on Sunday school work, all of which was the warp and woof of what was complimented all sufficient, (along beside that of two other ministers of more popular churches who spoke on the same occasion). I was yesterday handed a roll of R. B. Neal's Swords of Laban. They had come the rounds from a minister, who, I am told, wants to debate with me. So I guess if life and health continue I will have to accommodate the gentleman.

Ever praying for abundant success to the work of the Lord,
I am still in the faith. W. A. GUTHRIE.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI, March 14, 1909.

Dear Herald: After I obeyed the gospel my desire was that I might obtain celestial glory. Often did I read from the books seeking to learn what there is written there for me to pattern my life by in order that I may become Christ-like.

I sought to set apart a portion of each day for secret prayer and in my weakness to do what I could to help in the work. For some time I have tried to live from one sacrament Sunday to the following sacrament so as to retain a remission of my sins in the sight of our heavenly Father.

Lately I have grown somewhat careless and God gave me a spiritual dream to show my condition. I know God gave me the dream because he is feeling after me, calling me back to the narrow way.

I wish that when the time really comes for me to pass over into the other world I can sing, "The pearly gates are open and I can enter in."

I know that where God and Christ are, where Enoch and his city are, we can not come unless we are prepared for celestial glory.

Your sister in the conflict,
LOUISE C. WILSON.

Errata.

Two errors crept into Bro. D. E. Tucker's letter in our issue of March 23. Near bottom of page, "railroad regulation," should be "government regulation." Near close of paragraph 5, "New York City" should be "New Zealand."

Marriages.

CLEMENT—CLIFT—VASSMER—CLIFT.—On March 22, 1910, the writer solemnized a double wedding in Durango, Colorado, in which Bro. A. F. Clement and Sr. Hollon Clift, and Bro. H. C. Vassmer and Sr. Ethel Clift were the contracting parties. The brides are well known and highly respected ladies of Inca, New Mexico. Brother Vassmer is a man of sterling character and is highly respected by a wide circle of friends in Durango. Brother Clement, a former student of Grace-land, holds a position of trust and responsibility in Portland, Oregon. We predict a brilliant future for the young people, and any community would be honored by their citizenship. Brother Vassmer and Sister Hollon were recently baptized by the writer and we feel for them a fatherly regard. The kind wishes of many friends follow them to their new home in Portland. May God's blessings also attend. S. M. Reiste.

Died.

SMITH.—Mrs. Letha A. Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Neuton J. Burklow, was born August 23, 1885, and died March 8, 1910. She was united to Mr. Franklin Smith February 21, 1909, and to this union one child was born. She was baptized November 2, 1902, and lived a faithful and active member until death. Her exalted character will live in the hearts of those who knew her. She was preceded in death by her father and sister Sarah not many years ago. She leaves husband, mother, two brothers, one sister, a little babe, and a host of relatives and friends to mourn. A vacant chair is left in the earthly home, but a place in heaven prepared for a noble soul is now occupied. Funeral conducted by Elder Peter G. McMahan in the presence of a large and sympathizing audience of friends and relatives. Remains laid to rest in the Chapman Cemetery.

JOHNSON.—Sr. Sarah Jane Johnson (nee King), wife of Elder William Johnson, was born December 20, 1859, at Carbondale, Pennsylvania, and died at her home, 811 Howard street, Seattle, Washington, February 23, 1910. She leaves to mourn, husband, three sons (Ralph, William J., and Alma), three brothers, one sister, daughter-in-law, two grandchildren, and a host of friends. The deceased united with the Primitive Methodist Church, in Boone County, Iowa, in 1886, and continued in fellowship with said church till April, 1887, when she was baptized by William Thompson into the Re-organized Church, at Angus, Iowa. She has been a devoted member and has lived a most exemplary life. Sister Johnson died of cancer, from which she was a great sufferer for more than two years; in all her suffering she was never heard to murmur or complain; in the trial she developed the greatest patience ever observed by us in any human being; she certainly possessed her soul in patience. Funeral from undertaking parlors in Seattle, Sunday, February 27; sermon by Elder J. D. Stead, assisted by Elder F. W. Holman.

Retaining Youth.

Whether you are forty or fifty, or even seventy, you can be young. You can actually secure the return of youthful powers. Of course, this can not be accomplished in a day or a week. But those who are passing or who have already passed into old age can be promised renewed youth.

Do not bother for a minute about the theory of germs in the intestines as the cause of failing bodily powers. To be sure, diet may have a great influence in shortening one's life, but it is not germs in the intestines that actually cause decay. It is simply and solely the harboring of dead cells. Now how can we get rid of these cells? There is only one way to entirely eliminate them from the body and that is through the activity of the muscular system. Do not pay the slightest attention to that senseless twaddle to the effect that when you are fifty or sixty years of age you should cease all physical effort. Conclusions of that kind are simply the maunderings of vapid brains. Activity means life. Activity is always a part of youth. To live up and make youthful the tissues throughout the entire body, every muscle of the body must be brought into thorough activity at fairly regular intervals. It is not necessary for you to make laborious work of your exercises. Make them as pleasurable as possible. But you must not for one moment divert from the main conclusion that to retain the suppleness and activity of youth every part of the body must be used. It does not make a great deal of difference what system of exercises you may adopt so long as you give reasonable attention to the necessity for spinal strength. In fact, many recreative exercises can be used in order to bring about the desired effect.—Bernarr Macfadden, in Physical Culture for March.

Thoughts from My Workshop.

Men are just as narrow as their creeds.
 All labor is equally honorable if equally useful.
 To die is not to fail if death finds you with your face toward the goal.
 True success consists not in having done most toward the accomplishment of selfish ends, but to have done the most toward the improvement of the world.
 Truth begets faith and confidence, but infidelity is born of falsehood and error.
 It seems that God has given to the leaves and flowers and the very grass we tread beneath our feet, the privilege of preaching the resurrection of the dead.
 The rough foundation stones lying below the surface are never admired, but they sustain the grand structure whose beauty compels the admiration of all beholders. So in society and in the Church of Christ.
 Archimedes said, "Give me a place on which to stand and I will lift the world." On the eternal rock, Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God, men have stood, and have lifted the world.
 Education is not so much the mastery of the thoughts of others, as the ability to think for one's self.
 Being "wise beyond that which is written" is ignorance of the most dangerous type.
 Not all that wears the name is progress.—Selected.

Doctor McCarthy Talks About the Great Work of a Great University.

In the department of "Interesting People" in the American Magazine for April, John M. Siddall writes about how an important woman's club in New York asked Dr. Charles McCarthy, a lecturer on political economy in the University of Wisconsin, to come and tell them about the work that his university is doing. The following is quoted in point from the article:
 "It is curious how deep a hole a speaker can get himself into and then pull himself out of. McCarthy went the limit—both ways. After that bad quarter of an hour he fell suddenly to telling naturally and fervently the great story of the great work of the University of Wisconsin.
 "Here is a university with a large and growing group of enthusiasts in it who, like McCarthy, believe that a university should be like a great bank—always taking in, but always giving out. If the learned men in a university find in their laboratories and books how to prevent tuberculosis, how to make good butter, how to improve the soil, how in various ways to serve the people, let them go to the people with what they have and not wait for the people to come to them. Therefore the University of Wisconsin has forty-five traveling professors who are going into every corner of the State carrying to the people the suggestions and facts, and some of the less tangible forms of uplift, which have been produced at the university. McCarthy can show you photographs of factory workers in cities far distant from the university sitting in their work clothes around a professor who has been sent two hundred miles to teach them. On top of all this the university has established a great correspondence department through which thousands of queries from the people are answered at the university. Books also are shipped to the most remote corners of the State for the country people to read. Material is sent to hundreds of country centers to be used by farmers' sons in their local debating clubs. Experts at the university help the State Legislators to draft laws properly, so that the laws will not be found unconstitutional and useless. This is a part of the work that McCarthy does. Taken all in all, the idea of the university is to advertise, advertise! If you have something worth while, promote it. Don't stand still and wait for people to come and get it. McCarthy says that the quack remedy for tuberculosis does not wait for people to come to it. It advertises—goes to the people. Why, therefore, should a university fail to carry to the people suggestions for right living which will decrease tuberculosis, suggestions which disinterested experts at the university develop out of their study and experience? Why should not many of the ideas and much of the culture of the university be taken to the people? All the people can not go to the university. Very, very few can. The plan is to have people studying at home while they are earning a living. 'You can have your feet in clay and your mind on higher things,' says McCarthy.

"Of course the idea of all this is to promote civilization by educating the people—giving them definite facts and assistance which, applied to their daily lives, will help them to keep well, to make the most of themselves, to have more real prosperity. It is a plan to keep wealth of all kinds divided

Long time payments, no interest from the Government, low rate of interest where lands are bought from irrigated companies or individuals. Just think of $3,000.00 worth of potatoes on 10 acres; of $10,000.00 worth of sugar beets raised on 115 acres; of $900.00 worth of onions on less than an acre; of twenty-seven cantaloupes on one vine, and more than a peck of choice, ripe tomatoes on one vine; of 126 bushels of oats and 60 bushels of wheat per acre; of clusters of apples on five-year-old trees so thick that the branches would break, were they not propped up, and added to this, the most beautiful, healthful climate.

Many an old civilization went to pieces because too much of the wealth, culture and happiness got into the hands of a few, leaving a great poor population to suffer and, finally, to rise up and smash things. The Twentieth Century Magazine contains each month a number of strong and timely papers on questions relating to fundamental democracy, civic efficiency and clean and progressive government. It is also the only magazine of opinion that monthly gives its readers the news, gathered from all parts of the world, relating to such progressive measures as direct legislation, public ownership, cooperation, municipal advance, woman's progress, conservation, etc. It is, indeed, a sort of clearing house for the news of democratic, economic and social advance which can not be obtained in the daily or other periodical literature. In the April issue there are a number of papers of real merit, perhaps the most notable being "Postal savings banks and the people," "Grand Junction's democratic charter," "Portland, the gateway of the Columbia," "Some fruits of landlordism," "The progressive movement and this year's campaign," "Modernism," "Charles Wagner, social mystic," "The social valuation of truth," "The perils of our public school," "The progressive Republican movement and its significance," and "Morgan, the master of America." In this last paper, which is from the pen of the editor, Mr. Flower shows how thirty years ago statesmen and jurists warned the people of the menace of the rapid concentration of wealth through corporate power, that was then in progress. Here are quoted the utterances of Garfield, ex-Supreme Court Judges Jeremiah Black and David Davis, and Senator Windom. The writer next shows how this concentration has increased until to-day we are in the presence of one man practically holding the commercial destiny of the nation within his grasp. It is a startling and disquieting showing and will tend to further arouse the American electorate.

NUMBER 186

General Conference.

MONDAY, APRIL 11.

President F. M. Smith called the afternoon meeting to order and presided throughout.

Song No. 158 was sung and G. T. Griffiths offered prayer.

After the reading of the minutes, a report from John W. Rushton, missionary in charge of the British Mission, was read.

The Sunday School Association reported.

Committee on concordance to the Book of Mormon reported and asked for more time. Request was granted.

The committee to whom the matter of report blanks had been referred made report, suggesting certain changes in the present system, to include the name of county, etc. The report was adopted.

The committee on conference resolutions reported having finished their work up to date.

The Bishop's report of finances was read, and among other things the Bishop said there was a more general readiness on the part of all to pay their tithing. He also said that the time had arrived when it was necessary to build offices for the church officers living and having their offices in Independence.

The Quorum of High Priests made report, and recommended the following named brethren to be ordained high priests: Elder John Jones, of New South Wales, Stewart Lamont, Canada, and B. R. McGuire, of Brooklyn. After statements had been made concerning these brethren, all being absent, the recommendation was adopted and their ordination was left to the missionaries in charge of these fields.

The committee to whom had been referred the matter of petitions coming before the body made report, outlining a plan for the handling of such, making immediate reference to the proper quorums possible without taking away the right for any member or members to petition the conference. This report was adopted.

The matter of ordination of A. C. Silvers to office of seventy was taken up, and after a statement by the brother, the recommendation that he be so ordained, coming from the Seven Presidents of Seventies, was adopted and his ordination was ordered.

The invitation of the Lamoni Stake and Branch was then taken from the table, and was accepted without opposition.

A motion was made to support the Bishop's move toward the erection of a new office building in Independence, but after a little discussion was referred until after the auditors make report.

The time limit for the introduction of new businesses was left with the conference presidency.

A resolution was then offered that a juvenile history be written by Sr. Anna Salyards. An amendment was offered that it be written by Sr. Vida E. Smith, and after considerable discussion the whole matter was referred to the Board of Publication and the Church Historian with power to act. And a further resolution was passed that action be taken as soon as possible.

At 7.45 the services were in charge of Pres. J. A. Gunsolley, and the evening was devoted to a Graceland College program. Speeches were made, reading given, and several musical numbers offered. A very interesting and entertaining time was had by Graceland and her friends.

TUESDAY, APRIL 12.

The morning prayer meeting was in charge of A. H. Parsons and Joseph S. Sniely. The morning preaching was by F. B. Farr, assisted by L. E. Hills.

At 2 p. m. President Joseph Smith called the Saints to order. Song No. 21 was sung and prayer was made by U. W. Greene. Minutes were read and approved, and E. A. Smith took charge.

Bro. Ed. Rannie made a correction of error in statement in speech on Monday, and submitted a copy of the statement to the secretary.

The committee on petition from party in Saint Joseph Branch reported that in their judgment, on account of circumstances surrounding the petition, it should not be entertained. The report was adopted.

The memorial committee, appointed at an earlier session, made the following report which became the action of the body by a rising vote:

APRIL 12, 1910.

To the General Conference: We, your committee appointed by your honorable body to draft resolutions expressive of

First in mind we recall the loss of our beloved and venerable Patriarch Alexander H. Smith, who departed this life August 12, 1909, by which the church has suffered the loss of a father, a wise counselor, a cheerful and gracious soul, a strong advocate of righteousness, a true man who will be missed by us all; and we feel we can truthfully say our brother held us close to his generous and sympathizing heart, and his absence is keenly felt by all.

We also realize that his loss is a great one to his family, to whom we extend our deepest sympathy.

We hereby express our mingled feelings of sorrow and gladness because of our loss and his gain. Sorrowful because we miss his cheerful countenance, his pleasant hand-clasp, his unostentatious nature; he was one of us and free from any assumed dignity because of his position in the church; ready to bless us, counsel us, and chide us when our natures were not properly controlled. We thank God for his life among us, our memory of him will be ever dear, and while we lose much by his departure from us we rejoice that he ran his race well and we feel assured of his triumphant entry into the bright paradise of rest, freed from mortal sorrow and pain.

Another of our most esteemed and brave workers of the Patriarchate, Joseph F. Burton, has slipped from our ranks, having died October 1, 1909. He was known for his extended service in the interest of the natives of the Society Islands; and it was he who guided our little craft—the Evanelia—from our shores to those islands in safety; away from the beloved associations of his brethren and countrymen, he remained among those isolated bands of Saints to do them good, with a fullness of love for their eternal welfare down to the verge of the grave; sincerely we can say a noble and true man has gone to a well-earned rest.

With his brave and loving wife, with members of his family we mourn his loss, and convey in this manner our sincere sympathy, feeling the utmost confidence in his fitness for the higher life.

The recorder of death places another name among the list of the workers for the Master in his vineyard here—Johnson Hay, of the seventy, who died June 16, 1909. We have learned that he was an active young man, faithfully performing his duties; starting in the ministry as a priest, later ordained an elder, and finally a member of the Quorum of Seventy.

His ministerial activities were in the State of Texas, and an excellent report comes to us of his work there; hence among others of the faithful we may confidently expect him to be in the great beyond.

To those left of kindred ties we send our love and offers of sympathy, believing our brother to have been a noble Saint.

The list keeps growing, and again we write another name, that of Arthur E. Mortimer, of the High Priests' Quorum, who died May 8, 1909. Though frail of body but of a strong spirit, together with a great love for the work of his Master, he moved forward to aid in the emancipation of the race from the curse of sin.

By his loss the church loses a painstaking and fearless advocate, and as with those preceding him, we can say we have no fears of his acceptance among the redeemed of God.

With his loved ones we sympathize, sending this encouraging hope as a church.

Among the faithful of other lands the record tells of the departure of another most valued and noted man, who a few years ago visited our land and rejoiced with us, going home with added zeal for the cause—Bishop Metuaore—a man loved by his race of the South Sea Islands, who died April 18, 1909.

We mourn with them the loss of such a man and extend the sympathizing hand in spirit, with the same assurance expressed for others that his faithful service in the cause of his Master will warrant an abundant entrance into the kingdom of God.

Still another of the staunch defenders of the faith and a figure noted among his brethren in our General Conferences by the ready expression of his views, and his long and firm standing in the church, Elder John Hawley, who died April 17, 1909, has gone to his long home, and we regret that the pleasure of his greeting and earnest manner of address are no longer to be had among us; but we shall ever cherish in our minds the cheerful and helpful associations of the past with him.

Our sympathy goes to his loved ones and we have the satisfaction of feeling that his life was a worthy one, and his reward is sure.

Elder D. S. Crawley, known to many of the Saints, is among the list of the departed within the last year, having died May 5, 1909, an elder who, by the relation of his spiritual experiences, has been a source of strength to the Saints. He was a brave defender of the faith, also of his own convictions, and worked hard to spread the angel's message. He feared no man, in or out of the church, and his courage won for him the admiration and respect of his brethren.

Our trust is that we shall meet again where his bright and vigorous spirit will shine in greater splendor than here.

To the bereaved our feelings of sympathy go, and desire for them the comfort that comes from the consciousness of the trueness of the life of our faithful brother.

To complete the list of distinguished ministers among us up to the present known to us as having passed into the beyond, we add the name of Amazon Badham, who died November 16, 1909.

He was a man noted as a peacemaker and was successful in this regard. He was esteemed very highly for his Christian life, while acting as a local minister he was widely and favorably known, and in his absence the church has lost a worthy and useful minister.

Therefore we, in General Conference assembled, acknowledge the foregoing as expressive of our feelings, and authorize the publication of the same in the SAINTS' HERALD and Zion's Ensign, and copies to be sent to the members of the various families bereaved.

The Trustees of Graceland College reported. A motion was made to make an appropriation of four thousand dollars to Graceland, in accordance with the request of the trustees. This brought on a lively discussion, which lasted until adjournment. Closing song was No. 52, benediction being offered by Bishop G. H. Hilliard.

The evening sermon at the Stone Church was by H. C. Smith, assisted by H. O. Smith. At South Side Church, Paul Hanson was the speaker, assisted by John Harp. The Board of Auditors made report on the Bishop's accounts. This showed net assets of $184,188, as against $152,095 in 1909, and liabilities at $161,333, as against $162,266 one year ago. The report was adopted.

The matter of a new building, left over from the Bishop's report, was taken from the table, and after considerable discussion was referred to the First Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishopric, with power to act.

Terry, Arthur Leaverton, and William Lewis. After statements from Brethren Pitt, Leaverton, and Lewis, the recommendation was adopted and their ordination was ordered. In the case of Brother Terry ordination was ordered subject to his acceptance of the call.

At this juncture by motion the assembly arose and sang, "God be with you till we meet again," because Brother McKim, who had been appointed to Hawaii, was leaving the room, as a farewell of the conference to himself and to Brother McConley, who is in Denver. The old song was sung with feeling and sweet peace was with the congregation.

At eight o'clock ordination services were held in the basement under direction of the Twelve. Joseph R. Lambert was ordained to the office of Presiding Patriarch, under temporary selection and appointment by the body to serve until a successor to Alexander H. Smith be named, under the hands of Joseph Smith and I. N. White, the former being spokesman; F. G. Pitt as patriarch, by F. A. Smith, spokesman, and G. T. Griffiths; A. Leaverton as patriarch, by G. T. Griffiths, spokesman, and F. A. Smith; William Lewis as patriarch, by F. A. Smith, spokesman, and G. T. Griffiths; W. E. LaRue as high priest, by I. N. White, spokesman, and J. F. Curtis; Holmes J. Davison as seventy, by J. W. Wight, spokesman, and U. W. Greene; Jesse W. Paxton as seventy, by F. M. Sheehy, spokesman, and R. C. Russell; W. P. Bootman as seventy, by U. W. Greene, spokesman, and J. W. Wight; A. C. Silvers as seventy, by R. C. Russell, spokesman, and F. M. Sheehy; and J. C. Chrestensen as high priest, by J. F. Curtis, spokesman, and G. T. Griffiths.

At the same hour in the auditorium a prayer meeting was held in charge of C. E. Butterworth and T. U. Thomas.

At 11 o'clock E. L. Kelley was the speaker in the auditorium, assisted by E. A. Blakeslee; C. J. Hunt preached in the basement, assisted by W. W. Whiting; and at South Side Branch, R. Bullard was the speaker, assisted by David Smith.

At 3 p. m. the speaker in the auditorium was A. Carmichael, assisted by C. A. Parkin; and in the basement, J. A. Becker, assisted by Eben Miller.

The speaker at 7.45 in the auditorium was R. C. Evans, assisted by S. M. Reiste; in the lower room,

M. C. Fisher, assisted by Earl D. Bailey; at South Side, R. May, assisted by B. J. Scott.

Speakers at Central Kansas City Branch were U. W. Greene in the morning, assisted by R. Etzenhouser; and in the evening, H. C. Smith, assisted by W. E. LaRue.

CONFERENCE NOTES.

President Joseph Smith has been in attendance at all the business sessions and at many of the preaching services. During the weeks previous to the convening of conference he had suffered much and was worn in body and spirit; but almost with the beginning of the first sessions he has been feeling better, and has been able to take charge of the business meetings at times during the transaction of routine business. The Saints and delegates are very thankful indeed that they can have President Smith with them, and can hear his wise counsel at times. While his sight is dimmed and his hearing quite defective, he is strong in body, his step elastic and quick for a man of his years, and he retains his courage as of yore.

The discussion of the appropriation for Graceland College assumed some peculiar features. On Tuesday it seemed that most were favorable to the movement, but when Wednesday's session began it seemed there had been a decided change of sentiment, the proposition was discussed from a somewhat different standpoint, and while the vote was remarkable in a sense, there was a wonderfully good feeling over the result on the part of all. Let us hope that time will show that the decision of conference was a wise one, as we believe it will.

The weather has been almost ideal, there having been but one day thus far that was in any way bad.

Conference business seems to be going along quite slowly. A resolution comes before the body for consideration. A few speeches are made, members rise to their feet sharply upon the close of a former speech and demand the floor, the chair is kept busy in locating the first man, and soon the afternoon is gone in the consideration of one subject of the many to come before the conference. But it is the universal verdict that the discussions result in better understanding and feeling.

The weather continued almost ideal up to Saturday when it turned cold and rainy, and we had a few flurries of snow. Sunday morning came still cooler, temperature hovering around freezing point, and some snow flying.

A very peaceful conference has been had so far, and while a few sharp tilts have been engaged in in some of the matters discussed, a wonderfully good feeling prevails. This is as it should be. One of the American characteristics is the ability to take a good hard rap and give one in return, brush off the dust of conflict, and be good friends with the one who opposed you.

Sunday, as will be observed by looking over the speakers, was a general field day for the bishops, all taking part, with the exception of those at the Central Kansas City Branch, being bishops or bishop's agents.

On Monday the Saints were pleased to get acquainted with a brother from Oklahoma, Richard Davis by name, who is a full-blood Cherokee Indian.

All the Kansas City papers have been sending their reporters to furnish their readers with items of the conference. These reporters have been quite fair in their write-ups of the sessions, and there have been very few attempts to "feature" any of the peculiar characteristics of our people. We are becoming too well acquainted for them to attempt to make a play on such things.

Of General Interest

EQUALITY.

By James Bryce, author of "The American Commonwealth," "Suppressions of South Africa," etc.

It is now a century and a half since the idea of equality among men began to be constantly discussed, and to influence the world of practice as well as that of abstract thought. It has inspired many schemes, and has been taken as an ideal to be pursued not only in law and politics, but also in sociology and economics. More than once it has become a revolutionary force of tremendous power. Yet the great bulk of mankind have seldom stopped to analyze it, that is to say, to distinguish the various senses in which it is used, and the different bearings it has when applied in different fields of human life. Indeed, much confusion and some error have arisen from the habit of assuming that because equality is desirable and attainable in certain matters it is desirable and attainable in other and dissimilar matters, also, while the excesses of some who have fallen into this error have disposed others to regard it as a foolish and pernicious notion, which ought to be resisted whenever resistance is possible. It is, therefore, worth while to subject the term equality to analysis and examination, with the view of distinguishing the different meanings it bears, or, more precisely, the different import and effect of the conception according as it is applied in one or another kind of subject-matter. One can not hope to present any really new ideas on such a topic. That which may be aimed at is rather to give definiteness and precision to ideas which most of us are apt to hold in a somewhat vague form, and in particular to estimate, in each of the matters whereto it is applied, the practical value of the conception as an ideal toward which the efforts of social or political reformers may be directed.

Let us begin by inquiring what are the various senses in which the phrase equality between men is, or may be, employed.

Six senses may be enumerated in which the phrase is currently used. Two of these refer to man as a pure product of nature, the other four to man as a social being existing under civil institutions of some sort or kind.

The first meaning, though very familiar, is one for which it is hard to find a truly descriptive name, but we may call it spiritual equality. There is a sense in which all men are naturally equal, because all have alike an individual personality which is of supreme value to each. All are alike when they come out of the darkness into this world as mewling babes; all are alike when with failing breath they return again into the darkness. This is the kind of equality denoted by the phrase, "All men are equal in the sight of God." The Almighty is so infinitely above his creatures that the distinctions between them are as nothing in his eyes. Each is a life-spark, and nothing more. In each, as certain philosophers have said, there dwells a tiny fragment of the universal soul of things. In each personality there is a mystery and even a dignity—the dignity of moral freedom, the importance of which transcends the disparities of man and man, and gives to every life, the every personality, a kind of sacredness. This conception, though one finds it recognized in classical antiquity, derives most of its power from the teachings of Christianity, and has become to most men a distinctly religious conception. Each and every human soul is precious, because each is in direct relation to God, and because each has been deemed to have an infinite future of weal or woe before it.

The other sense in which equality might be said to exist between men, and to be a natural equality, is equality of gifts, physical, intellectual, and moral. Were men equally endowed with strength, intelligence, courage, force, and tenacity of will, there would be a genuine natural equality among them.

As we know, there is no such natural equality, but, on the contrary, the greatest possible disparity, and that even between the nearest kinsfolk, and between persons brought up under the same education and social influences. Nevertheless, obvious and familiar as is this fact, it has made far less impression on the popular mind than the external points of resemblance between one man and another on the one hand, and, on the other, that equality of personality which we have just been considering. It is only when diversity and inequality appear in the form of differences of sex, or of race and color, that they receive due recognition; yet differences of sex and of race and color are not greater than the differences which separate the higher from the lower individuals of the same sex and race.

Thus we have, as regards natural man, two salient facts: Between each man, simply as a man, and every other man, there is an equality of soul, an equal worth of personality. There is also between men an inequality of gifts, each man differing from his fellows in physical strength and in physical needs, in intellectual strength and in intellectual tastes, in force of will, in industry, in perseverance, in rectitude, in capacity for emotion, whether good or bad.

We come now to the four kinds of equality which exist, or may exist, between men in their social as opposed to their purely natural state. These are usually described as civil equality, political equality, social equality, and economic equality.

By civil equality we understand the possession by each man of similar and equal legal rights in the sphere of private law; that is, equal rights to freedom of speech and action, to personal safety and protection, to the enjoyment of a position in the family, to the holding and disposal of property. This kind of equality is so far from being natural that it is found only in advanced civilizations. Slavery was the rule all over the world, not perhaps among pure savages, but certainly among barbarous and semicivilized peoples, and has prevailed even in some highly civilized states. Even where slavery has ceased, great disparities as regards private legal rights long continued to exist, as, for instance, in France down to the Revolution. In Britain this equality was established, except between men and women, at a comparatively early epoch, and its full recognition has been, both there and in the United States, a very potent and beneficial factor in preventing social bitterness and political unrest. We even extend it, for almost all, if not absolutely for all, purposes, to those who are not citizens or subjects of the state.

The term political equality describes the equal enjoyment by all who are citizens of the state of a share in its government, including both the right of voting for persons to be invested with executive or legislative functions, and the right of being one's self eligible for such an executive or legislative post. This is a totally different thing from equality of private legal rights, has been later in its growth, does not prevail so extensively, and does not necessarily or logically follow from civil equality, because the grounds which recommend it are not the same. It is in no country complete as between the sexes. Nevertheless, it tends more and more to make way, and is generally supposed to be the goal toward which nations are traveling.

The term social equality is much more vague, because here we quit the sphere of law to enter that of social intercourse. It denotes the kind of mutual courtesy and respect which men show to one another when each feels the other to be "as good as himself"—a respect which stands between condescension, on the one hand, and submissiveness, on the other. The extent to which it goes depends, of course, upon the particular form of intercourse. There may be a social equality between men as directors of a company or members of a political committee which would not extend to dining at one another's houses, still less to marrying one another's sisters or daughters. Its growth is generally in proportion to the growth of the last two mentioned kinds of equality; yet it might exist without political equality, and the latter without it.

Lastly, there is economic equality, that is to say, the possession by every man of an equal quantity or value of property, none being either richer or poorer than his neighbor. This state of things has never yet existed, and has no necessary connection with the other kinds of equality, though of course it is only under a régime of political equality that it would be likely to come into being.

So far we have been endeavoring to distinguish and define the different kinds of equality which do exist, or may exist, among men. Now let us inquire what are the import, the value, and the practical attainability of each of these kinds. Most people tend to assume a priori that every species of equality has a sort of presumption in its favor; that it is likely to yield better fruits, both ethically and politically and socially, than inequality; and that it is therefore desirable for all communities to try to work toward it. This tendency deserves to be explained, this alleged presumption to be scrutinized.

That which has been called spiritual equality, the equal worth of each personality or human soul, is now generally admitted by all civilized men, and has become so much a part of our thinking that we forget that there were times when it was not accepted at all. The latest serious attempt to deny it was made in the last days of slavery in the United States, when some few persons, professing to be anthropologists, attempted to show that African negroes were not members of the human family, but rather a species of highly developed apes. The conception is one which the three great religions of the world all virtually embrace, Mohammedanism having taken it from the Jews and the Christians; and the power it exerts is mainly due to its incorporation in Christian doctrine. The unity of man is correlative to the unity of God. The value of man's soul is measured by the death of the Savior. It is indeed the sheet-anchor of humanity; for we owe to it all the efforts that are made to help or reclaim those criminals and outcasts whose acts excite repulsion, but who are nevertheless, in another sense, men like ourselves. It is the force which restrains, however imperfectly, the disposition of the stronger races to trample on the weaker, to reduce them to slavery, deny them civil rights, use them like beasts of burden for the benefit of those who need their labor. It is now so firmly rooted everywhere that its continuance may be deemed certain; and no more need here be said regarding it than that it has been the chief cause of that presumption in favor of every sort of equality which has been already referred to. The admission of this principle seems to throw upon any kind of inequality the onus of justifying its existence.

Men reason thus: "All men are born equal; all men die equal; all souls are immortal, and Christ died for all. We brought nothing into the world, and it is certain that we can carry nothing out of it. Why, then, should there be such differences of good and evil fortune, of wealth and poverty, between men? Why should not all have equal rights, equal possessions, equal happiness?" The New Testament, the American Declaration of Independence, the French principles of 1789, seem to concur in prescribing equality as the normal condition of mankind, or, at any rate, the proper starting-point for every community. Even Bentham's doctrine that the aim of society is to secure the greatest happiness of the greatest number is obliged to assume the equal value of each person, and of the capacity of each for happiness, else the doctrine fails altogether to supply the practical guidance it has undertaken to give. The power which this view of equality as the natural state of men has exercised is unquestionable. But in trying to apply it to existing social phenomena we are immediately confronted by the other fact, already dwelt upon, viz, the inequality of men as regards their physical and mental powers. Equality of gifts and abilities does not exist, and, so far as we can foresee, never will exist. It does not even seem to come nearer, except to some slight extent, as between the different races of mankind; for though some individuals of remarkable capacity have arisen from among the colored races, no colored race as a whole has brought itself nearly up to the level of the leading white races.

The problems that lie before human society in its onward march are all concerned or involved with these two salient natural facts, and admitted equality between men in one aspect, and a no less palpable inequality between them in another aspect; and as these moral or social problems, like physical problems, can be solved, not by running counter to nature, but only by obeying her, like regard must in every effort at a solution be had to both facts.

We may now go on to inquire how these two facts seemingly opposed, yet both true, have worked upon the relations of men in the social sphere. And this brings us to the four forms of equality which exist in that sphere, viz, civil, political, social, and economic equality.

Civil equality, equality of rights in the field of private law, is so generally admitted to be wholesome for the whole community as to have become a good practical test of the higher or lower level of civilization which any state has reached. It is now virtually universal in Europe (except, of course, in semicivilized Turkey), and in all the colonies of European nations. Its acceptance has been due partly to sentiment and sympathy, but largely also to an experience of the evils of inequality as giving rise to arrogance and injustice on the part of privileged classes, and exposing the less privileged to harsh treatment. The sense of wrong produces discontent, and discontent disturbs the state. The very term equity, which our lawyers have drawn from the favorite expression of the Roman lawyers, aequum et bonum, indicates the tendency to find in equality of treatment a foundation for justice, and the easiest way out of the endless complications and difficulties to which the preference of one class of persons over another gives rise. The tendency to level down and level up became strong in jurisprudence before it had established itself in politics. Economic changes worked the same way; for when wealth was acquired by persons belonging to the inferior classes, they used it to evade and ultimately to overthrow those provisions of the old law which placed them at a disadvantage compared with men of higher rank. To one who reviews the progress of the world during the last four centuries, no small part of that progress seems to consist in or to issue from civil equality, and its steady and quiet growth is a striking illustration of the power of moral forces, of truth, reason, and good feeling. These have been more important agents in creating it than any revolts of the oppressed; and, indeed, it was they that enabled some of those revolts to succeed.

The equality of men in respect of political rights has made far slower advances, and involves considerations very different from those which govern our view of equality of civil rights. We may define it as meaning the equal right of every citizen to share in the government of a state, whether as a voter or as eligible for any office or post. The idea of such equality is very modern, the realization of it still more recent, and hardly anywhere complete. So far from its having been the original condition of mankind, it would seem to have never existed in any primitive people which had reached even the rudest political organization. The dominance of one man, or a few men, over the majority is everywhere the patent fact, and the circle of those who share in political power is very slowly extended. Such extension usually comes, as in the case of the equality of private civil rights, partly through the discontent of the excluded mass, who see, or think they see, that the authority of the privileged few is used to their prejudice, partly by a feeling, which gradually spreads among the most enlightened members of the privileged class, that no set of people can be trusted to legislate for others, and that a government is more stable when its base is broad. Where the few rule the many, the many will always blame the few for any mistakes or misfortunes. When they obtain their share, they have only themselves to blame. Accordingly there has been established in modern times and in advanced nations a sort of presumption in favor of a wide political franchise and universal eligibility for office, as making probably for the general good, but anyhow for the general contentment. This, however, is only a presumption. There is another side to the question. Equality of civil rights is almost certainly a good thing, for it can hardly be misused. Equality of political rights may readily be misused; for it requires capacity, and capacity may be wanting where a political power is committed to a mass of people who are ignorant and untrained, and where this mass is not disposed to be guided by those who are wise and more instructed, it may choose bad rulers and sanction foolish measures. Thus a suffrage suitable to the white population of Massachusetts may not be suitable to the predominantly colored population of Louisiana. In every case the risk of this evil must be set against the presumptive advantages already mentioned; and the difficulty of balancing them may be illustrated from the division of opinion among intelligent men and women which exists on the question of woman suffrage. There is, therefore, no general rule to be laid down on the subject. In every case a balance must be struck between probable gains and probable dangers. Regard must be had to time, place, and circumstance; the application of abstract principles and a priori doctrines, such as were so potent among the French from 1789 to 1792, and in the United States for two generations after 1776, must be carefully eschewed.

We come next to social equality, and find ourselves passing out of the sphere of law into that of general human intercourse. Is it desirable that there should be no social ranks or grades, and that (apart from office and from age, two things which have usually and rightly commanded deference) each man should treat every other man as being absolutely on his own level?

Here we are confronted by the old contradiction between natural equality, in the sense of spiritual equality of every human being, and natural inequality, in the sense of the great diversity of intellectual and moral gifts between different persons. The former would seem to forbid social distinctions; for if each personality is of the same value, it ought to obtain the same respect from others.

The latter, however, shows us some persons immensely superior in integrity, in force of character, in all the powers which enable a man to lead or to edify or to delight his fellow-men. The instinct which defers to such kinds of superiority is both natural and reasonable, and the instinct which defers to wealth and power is, at any rate natural. Moreover, differences of intellect and of education produce differences of taste; differences of wealth produce differences of habits of life; and such differences necessarily affect social intercourse. The establishment of economic communism, or of an absolute equality of conditions, would remove the latter; but the former would still subsist, and would create, if not a barrier, at least a certain disinclination to intimacy between the person who loves literature or art and the person who loves only foot-ball or his dinner.

The tendency to establish distinctions of rank is deep-rooted and universal. Some of us would not consider that there was much difference, if any, between the vocation of a seller of peanuts and that of an organ-grinder. The former is nearly as nomadic a person as the latter. Nevertheless, in New York the distinction is so great that the former does not permit his children to play with the children of the latter. When a tendency is naturally so strong, the attempt to ignore its results may produce an artificial state of things disagreeable to everybody, as the attempt of some idealists to make their domestic servants sit down to meals along with them has been resisted by the servants themselves.

These are some of the difficulties which surround the question. An examination of them may lead us to the following conclusions:

The more social equality we can secure without running counter to nature, the better. Mutual respect for one another's feelings, mutual courtesy in forms of address, mutual recognition of the equality which lies beneath all the inequalities, are good for the so-called superior and the so-called inferior. They check arrogance and assumption on the part of the one, cringing and servility on the part of the other. They make the one remember that he is no more, the other than he is no less, than a free man.

On the other hand, more harm than good will be done by trying to force into a kind of intimacy which they feel to be unreal, because not grounded on sympathy of thought and tastes and habits. When these are widely divergent, social intercourse can not be so easy, or, at any rate, can not cover so much of life. You may be perfectly friendly with the coachman who drives your carriage, but you do not wish that he should spend the evening in your drawing-room, or marry your daughter. He may be more honest or more wise, or both, than you are yourself; nevertheless, the difference in tastes and in ways of life sets certain limits to intimacy. But the recognition of these differences does not diminish either the duty or the value of politeness on both sides.

As regards the weight to be attached to natural inequalities, wealth ought to count for least, except, of course, so far as it involves disparity of habits. Intellect may properly entitle its possessor to a certain amount of deference; but, taken alone, and apart from the attainments or the refinement which it may produce, it ought not to be a basis of social distinction.

What is to be said of what Europeans call rank, i. e., of the conventional orders and degrees in society produced by titles, whether hereditary or personal?

Where they are personal their value depends on the care with which they have been bestowed, or, in other words, on the amount of personal excellence they indicate. There is nothing in the doctrine of natural equality to dissuade the rendering of special deference to special excellence.

Where they are hereditary, as among the nobles of Europe, they do not indicate any measurable amount of excellence, for the presumption that the good qualities of ancestors reappear in descendants is hardly stronger than the presumption that those who have been brought up in comparative indolence and under the influence of caste sentiment will suffer from both causes. That the evils of hereditary titles exceed their advantages is the judgment of nearly all impartial observers. In Germany and the Austrian dominions they foster a spirit of haughty exclusiveness among those who possess them. In Great Britain, they produce snobbishness both among those who possess them and those who do not, without (as a rule) any corresponding sense of a duty to sustain the credit of the family or the caste. Their abolition would be clear gain.

The elaborate system of artificial rank which prevails in Europe is, however, by no means so offensive as many Americans fancy. Even in England social precedence is so much a part of the recognized conventions of the country, and is so fully discounted by a regard to the intrinsic merit of the person who does or does not enjoy it, that, though it may seem absurd enough that the Prime Minister should, if a commoner, walk out of the room behind an insignificant young peer, and the Prime Minister's wife have no rank at all, nobody deems this to be any disparagement of the Prime Minister. If it were a rule that all red-haired people should take precedence of black-haired people, this, too, would so soon seem a matter of course that the black-haired would accept their position, and cease to feel aggrieved. When there is substantial work to be done, social precedence usually goes to the wall. Almost the only survival of its importance is to be found in the disposition to prefer a peer for the office of governor-general of India, or Ireland, or Canada. In some parts of Europe, however, birth and rank still count for much. Thirty years ago, I was told in Vienna that not long before, at the court balls there, the daughter of the then Prime Minister was seldom asked to dance, because her father, though he was expected to save the monarchy from the perils that then encompassed it, was not a count but a simple Freiherr. In Prussia people do not to-day, like the Westphalian baron in "Candide," forbid their sister to marry a man who can not show sixteen quarterings; yet in Prussia to-day it is all but impossible for a Jew, however rich, to obtain a commission in the army.

There is a curious distinction between Eastern and Western countries in this regard. In the East the sovereign, being a despot, is held so immeasurably superior to his subjects that they all seem comparatively equal before him, and he can so easily make the beggar a prince, or the prince a beggar, that the European ideas of status are inapplicable, and there is little difference between the laborer and the employer. In Europe, on the other hand, while distinctions between classes are much regarded (even in republican Switzerland the old families enjoy great respect), the chief social line is that which separates those who are called "gentlemen" from those who are not so called, and the sovereign is deemed to be only the most highly placed gentleman, and not exempt, as in Turkey or Persia, from the obligations attaching to a gentleman. This is a result—of the few that still survive—of the so-called system of chivalry, which created a sort of equality on the basis of knighthood.

ALCOHOL AN OBSOLETE REMEDY.

Forty years ago no scientist of standing could be found in the world who was willing to undertake the defense of temperance on purely scientific grounds. Scientific men believed and taught that alcohol was a food, a stimulant, a remedy of the highest value; that it was indispensable in the treatment of collapse, surgical shock, in fevers, in blood poisoning, in pneumonia, in tuberculosis or consumption, in weakness from whatever cause, as a preventative in exposure to contagion, in protection from fevers, in heart weakness from hemorrhage or other cause; in fact, alcohol was the one universal remedy, the first item on the list of emergency supplies, the biggest item next to foods in the hospital expense bill, the most frequent prescription of the medical practitioner, and the prescription which he nearly always took himself. The use of alcohol as a remedy was most emphatically indorsed by scientific men and supposed to be backed up by scientific evidence.

To-day all this is changed. The laboratory researches conducted by the aid of instruments of precision, the same sort of instruments which measure the velocity of light, the movement of the stars, and by which the occult forces of nature have been revealed and studied—these same methods' and instruments have been brought to bear upon the study of alcohol and its effects upon the human body, and the result has completely reversed and upset the old beliefs and the old teachings.

Every function of the body has been subjected to the minutest scrutiny; every bodily activity and energy has been calipered with the finest precision. By this means we have become acquainted with the normal man. We know how long it takes him to think, to feel, to see, to smell, to hear, to taste. We know how much fuel in the shape of food is required to maintain body heat and to enable the body engine to do its work. We know how much oxygen is consumed, how many foot pounds of work can be done in a minute or in an hour or in a day. With a normal man before him, measured, calipered, tested and charted in every conceivable way, the modern laboratory physiologist has made a study of the influence of alcohol upon the human body, its tissues and its activities. The result has been the discovery that alcohol damages every tissue and impairs every function; that it is a universal poison; that it is of no advantage or assistance to the body under any circumstances whatever; that it is not capable of increasing strength or endurance or vitality one iota, but the very opposite.

Here are a few of the things which science has demonstrated that alcohol does to the body: In doses so small as one twenty-five hundredth of the body weight, that is one ounce for a man weighing one hundred and fifty pounds—alcohol shrivels the nerve cells and impairs every mental function. In a normal man the nerve impulses travel at the rate of ninety-one feet per second; under the influence of alcohol the rate of transmission is reduced to thirteen feet per second, or one seventh; in other words, it takes a man under the influence of alcohol seven times as long to hear, to feel, to smell, to taste, to see, to think, as a normal man.

By similar careful measurements it has been found that under the influence of alcohol the fires of the body burn low, the amount of oxygen consumed is less, and the tissue activities are slow.

Thus it appears that alcohol is not a stimulant or a tonic in any sense of the word. It is a depressing agent, an anesthetic, a narcotic; it is the mother of anesthetics.

The old idea that alcohol strengthens the heart, and that hence it is just the thing to use in case of fainting, shock or collapse, has been shown to be utterly fallacious. A two per cent solution of alcohol has been shown by Professor Kronecker, of Berne, Switzerland, to paralyze a frog's heart. Such solution has the same strength as the common Bavarian beer. Ordinary beer and hard cider contain two or three times as much alcohol; wine five to ten times as much; brandy and whisky twenty to twenty-five times as much. Hence the paralyzing effect of these strong liquors is proportionately as great. It was formerly supposed that alcohol aids digestion because when taken into the stomach it causes it to pour out gastric juice. But Radzikowski, a Russian physiologist, has shown that the gastric juice produced by alcohol contains no pepsin; it is produced simply as an action of defense to dilute the poisons to which the living tissues are exposed.

One of the most notable discoveries made by the modern scientific study of alcohol is the fact that it lessens vital resistance. Animals under the influence of alcohol are a more likely prey to germs. For instance, pigeons, which are ordinarily proof against bacteria which produce malignant carbuncle, under the influence of small doses of alcohol are easily affected and die.

In the light of these facts, it is not at all surprising that observing physicians should have begun to question the value of alcohol as a remedy in the treatment of pneumonia, typhoid fever and tuberculosis and other grave disorders. Hundreds of physicians have had the courage to undertake the treatment of these diseases without alcohol, and the result has been a wonderful reduction in the rate of mortality. Alcohol was formerly considered a sovereign remedy for consumption because a few suffering from this disease took whisky and recovered in spite of it. Now no one thinks of giving alcohol for this disease, for it has been positively proved that habitual drinkers suffer more frequently and more fatally from tuberculosis of the lungs than do abstainers. Consumptives are treated by the out-of-door method and sixty per cent recover.

Typhoid fever under the alcohol treatment was an extremely fatal disease. Twenty to thirty per cent of the patients died. Under the nonalcoholic treatment which substitutes water for alcohol, ninety-seven per cent recover. Pneumonia under the alcoholic treatment was still more fatal. Under rational treatment, without alcohol, the mortality has been reduced to five or six per cent.

In surgical shock, alcohol, instead of being prescribed is absolutely forbidden. The use of alcohol is indeed pronounced by the best authorities to be about the worst thing that could be done, since it increases shock through the weakening of the heart and the paralyzing of the nerve centers. An increasing number of intelligent physicians are taking a decided stand against the use of alcohol as a remedy. It has even been proposed that alcohol should be dropped from the materia medica. It may almost be said that alcohol as a remedy is dead. The corpse still lingers about the drugstores and in some physicians' offices, but the time can not be far distant when this drug will be decently buried and cease to appear among remedies which are accorded respectable standing as having the support of scientific authority.—Good Health Magazine, March, 1910.

SHALL THE FAMILY LIFE BE PRESERVED?

(By F. W. Blackmar, Professor of Sociology and Economics, University of Kansas, Lawrence.)

The mainstay of modern society is the family. Its discipline, its association, its love, its inspiration to normal social life make it of first importance of all social groups. Hence if we wish social progress to continue, every effort should be made to retain it in its purity and efficiency. Clustering around it are so many sympathies, a life of such delicate nature that it is difficult to improve it by any determined effort. It is preëminently a private life, more private than any other institution. Yet its importance makes it a matter of great public concern.

As the normal family in the home represents that which is most sacred and best in modern life, so the broken family and ruined home represent the most deplorable social condition as well as the greatest of social evils. The separation of man and wife, the helplessness of children, the destruction of tender ties and sympathies, and the breaking of ideals lead in general to individual misery and social deterioration.

Yet it is difficult to maintain this delicate fabric by force of law alone. Granted that the breaking of the home is an evil, there are conditions in which a divorce is humane. To forbid divorce entirely would not prevent the evil and would lead to other worse conditions. To have a lax divorce law, allowing people to separate at will, would destroy the solidarity of the home and among the ignorant and unthinking, be used to degrade the home life. Hence a clearly defined divorce law, neither too severe on the one hand nor too lax on the other, made universal and uniform throughout all the States is a much to be desired protection to the family life.

While divorce as generally practiced must be recognized as productive of evil results, little good can be accomplished by attacking divorce as an institution. True legal reform lies in the provision of a wise, even-gauged law. For divorce is but an index of a deeper seated wrong which must be remedied and prevented by other means than forbidding its practice. The evil originates and is developed long before the divorce.

Foremost of all is education of the right sort, an education which will give to men and women knowledge, and a baptism of moral and intellectual integrity, and increase tolerance and common sense.

More careful study preparatory to home life, and of the difficulties and trials that must be encountered there, would lessen the difficulties and add to the charm of the home. Our educational institutions in the past have been giving better preparation for almost every other mode of existence than for this most important condition of social life. Recently more attention has been given to home building and household economy and management, to questions of sanitation and hygiene, to anatomy, physiology, and the science and art of child raising. These should be more specific in their nature and more universal in their application.

While education should be placed first as a means of overcoming the evils that lead to divorce, well regulated laws of a mild nature would aid and support the educational program. A law requiring the candidate for matrimony to pass an examination in knowledge of anatomy, physiology and hygiene, in special application to the family and home life, would be a step in the right direction. When persons were not able to receive the required instruction, municipal night schools should be provided for this purpose.

A law requiring a medical certificate of mental soundness and freedom from virulent disease should be enacted, to do away, if possible, with the present slipshod methods frequently employed in the probate court.

A system of registration of all people, that a record of "who is who" might be obtained, would prevent deception, and a previous announcement of the marriage some weeks before the event would prevent hasty marriages.

Also a more stringent law preventing persons who have no actual means of support, either in property or earning capacity, from marrying, would be of service.

Such laws as those enumerated above would not in themselves work a reform, but backed by education, intelligence and public sentiment, they would help to remedy evils that lead to divorce.

To those who consider matrimonial union an entirely private matter, such laws seem undesirable. But matrimony and especially the perpetuity of the family in its purity and importance is of great public concern and the public must arouse itself to renewed action on a higher plane if it wishes to preserve the family in its useful state. Besides, the science of eugenics (race or stock culture) will without doubt become more prominent in the future, which will lead people to be more thoughtful on the subject.

Finally, while divorce is recognized as an institution essential to the protection of modern society, and while it is an index of evils rather than an evil in itself, except in a secondary sense, the law should be firm enough so as not to encourage divorce. While some people might have the intelligence and character to decide when they should be separated, without the consent of society, a larger number would be encouraged to throw off restraint under a lax divorce law. Society through law, should help such to exercise restraint—a restraint which is necessary to civilization and progress.—

RELIGIOUS BODIES IN UNITED STATES.

GRAND TOTAL SHOWS 61.6 PER CENT PROTESTANTS AND 36.7 PER CENT ROMAN CATHOLICS.

That the church members in the United States numbered nearly 33 millions in 1906; that there were a billion and a quarter dollars invested in church edifices; that every day eight new churches sent their spires skyward; that males formed considerably less than half the total church membership; that a larger percentage of Catholic males than Protestant males were members; that in 16 States the majority of the total church membership were Roman Catholic; but that of the grand total of church members reported for the United States 61.6 per cent were Protestant and 36.7 per cent Roman Catholic; these are the salient and conspicuous facts appearing in the proof sheets of a United States Census Bureau bulletin, prepared by Chief Statistician William C. Hunt of the division of population of the United States Census Bureau.

The bulletin will be issued this month. It is in the nature of an abstract of the comprehensive report, now in press, giving the results of the fifth census of religious bodies in the United States.

FEWER MALE THAN FEMALE MEMBERS.

It is stated that United States census statistics of church membership by sex were collected for the first time in 1906. Of the total number of members reported by the various religious bodies and classified by sex 43.1 per cent were males and 56.9 per cent females. Among the Protestants the difference was greater, only 39.3 per cent being males. In the Roman Catholic churches there were relatively more males, the number forming 49.3 per cent of the total membership.

Fewer males than females were found among the Latter Day Saints, the Lutherans, Disciples, Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, and Protestant Episcopalians, the percentages of male members decreasing in the order shown, and there being but 35.5 per cent male among the Episcopalians. Among the Christian Scientists, only 27.6 per cent were males; and of the Shakers but 21.3 per cent; but, in the Greek Orthodox church, 93.9 per cent were male, as practically all Greek immigrants have been males.

PROPORTION OF CHURCH MEMBERS.

Of the total estimated population of continental United States in 1906, the church members formed 39.1 per cent, as against 32.7 per cent for 1890, amounting to 6.4 per cent more in 1906 than in 1890. Of this 6.4 per cent increase the Roman Catholic Church is credited with 4.4 per cent, and the Protestants with 1.8 per cent; the remainder being divided among all other denominations.

It is stated in the bulletin that the total number of members reported by the various religious bodies for 1906 was 32,936,445, of which number the Protestants were credited with 20,287,742 and the Roman Catholics with 12,079,142. Of the Protestant bodies the Methodists numbered 5,749,838; the Baptists, 5,662,234; the Lutherans, 2,112,494; the Presbyterians, 1,830,555, and the Disciples or Christians, 1,142,359.

Of the total of 32,936,445 church members, 61.6 per cent were Protestants, 36.7 per cent Roman Catholic, and 1.7 per cent members of other religious organizations. The rate of increase shown for the Roman Catholic Church is 93.5 per cent, which is more than twice that for all the Protestant bodies combined. The Methodists reported 17.5 per cent of all Protestant church members; the Baptist, 17.2 per cent.

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF ORGANIZATIONS.

The total number of local religious organizations in 1906 is given as 212,230, an increase since 1890 of 47,079, or 23.5 per cent. The Protestants are credited with an increase in this particular amounting to 27.8 per cent; the Roman Catholic Church, 21.9 per cent; the Jewish congregations, 231.9 per cent; and the Latter-day Saints, 38.3 per cent.

The Methodists reported the largest number of local organizations, 64,701; the Baptists reported 54,880; the Presbyterians, 15,506; the Lutherans, 12,703, and the Roman Catholics, 12,482.

Other interesting features of the bulletin are those showing that the total seating capacity of churches was 58,536,830, an increase over the 1890 United States census figures of 34.4 per cent; that the rate of increase was practically the same for both Protestants and Roman Catholic, and kept pace with the increase in population; and that $1,257,867 was invested in church edifices in 1906. The total amount of debt was $108,050,946, or 8.6 per cent of the total value; of this total the Protestant bodies owed $53,301,254, and the Roman Catholics $49,488,055. In 16 States a majority of the church members were Roman Catholic; in 29 States Protestant, and in 1, Utah, Latter-day Saints.—Selected.

NEW JERUSALEM OF JEWS TO BE GREATER NEW YORK.

Modern Judaism is destined to find its world-capital, its New Jerusalem, in Greater New York, according to the General Anzeiger des Judentums, a German publication. Basing its prophecy on statistics of population, that journal states that there are 800,000 Jews living in New York, the greatest number ever congregated in one place in either ancient or modern times. Even Warsaw, the largest Jewish city next to New York, is said not to have more than 300,000 Jewish inhabitants. The Jewish population in the United States is computed to be 1,500,000; consequently, more than one half of it is living in Greater New York. Every fourth inhabitant of Manhattan borough, the oldest part of the city, is a Jew, while every fifth inhabitant of the city, taken as a whole, is Jewish.

The Jewish population increases more rapidly than the non-Jewish, there being thirty-five births to twenty deaths among the Jews. Every year 70,000 Jewish immigrants arrive from Europe. Basing its calculations upon these figures, the German journal asserts that "if this ratio should continue, New York will have in ten years 1,500,000 Jewish inhabitants and will exceed the total population of the capital of Russia."

Continuing, the article shows that the first Jewish settlers—twenty-seven persons who arrived in New York from Portugal in the year 1655—were reluctantly granted a few acres of land outside the city limits. To-day the Jews are in all parts of the city and some of them have palatial residences in Fifth avenue.

Not England, France, Germany, nor Austria, in which countries Jews have the same rights as other citizens, but principally Roumania and Russia have sent most of these Jews to the New World. One could assert that the creators of the Jewish districts in New York are the Czars Alexander III, Nicholas II, and their counselors in the political measures regarding the Jews.

Before the immigration of the Russian Jews began in 1881, only about 50,000 Jews lived in New York. They came mostly from Germany and Austria. At that time when, by the edicts of Alexander III., the condition of the Russian Jews became unbearable, they came to these hospitable shores, and whenever the mobs in Odessa or Kischineff took delight in robbing and murdering the Jews, thousands of them sought and found refuge in the East Side of New York.

As the government of Russia had done everything possible to keep down these Jews, their education and deportment is different from that of the Jews who have immigrated from western and middle Europe, especially from Germany. The latter are more liberal in their religious beliefs, whilst the Russian Jews remain strictly orthodox. The two parties keep away from each other in New York. Inter-marriages between the German and Russian Jews are as scarce there as are the marriages between Catholics and Protestants in Europe.

"Notwithstanding his poor education and his repulsive exterior when he arrives on the shores of America, and as little as he seems fit to become an American citizen," proceeds the General Anzeiger des Judentums, "the Russian Jew knows how to become rich and to attain a respected station in his new fatherland, thanks to his natural gifts not blunted by persecution lasting hundreds of years. In no small degree does he contribute to the economic development of the land of his adoption. He is not only a merchant; though the greatest number of the newly arrived Russian immigrants begin their careers as peddlers, thousands of them are tailors and shoemakers, cigarmakers, paper box manufacturers, carpenters, masons, locksmiths, paper hangers, saddlers, wagon builders, etc. In the manufacture of clothing they have attained the first rank. This industry is the largest of New York and employs about 175,000 workmen."

Many Russian Jews have made large fortunes in other businesses, notably in real estate. Shares do not seem to them representative of real wealth; only real estate is considered property, and to get it the newcomer is willing to undergo all kinds of hardship. At first he lives in one of the cheapest, and therefore one of the dirtiest, quarters of the city; he and his family take hardly any rest from work; he denies himself nutritious food and manages to save $1,000 to $5,000. Then he rents a house for a term of four or five years and he and his family occupy the cheapest apartment. He becomes landlord and his wife and daughters attend to the cleaning and do other necessary work around the house. He becomes his own painter, carpenter, decorator, tends to all repairing himself, and thereby reduces his expenses to the smallest possible cost. Of course, he collects the rents due regularly, in this way he manages to save a few hundred dollars every year, and when his lease has expired he is able to buy an apartment house by paying part of it in cash, and borrowing the remainder on a mortgage. In his own house he does as he did in the rented apartment, and in this way is able to pay off the mortgage. But still he is not satisfied, but uses the rent money to buy more apartment houses.

"The question might be asked," continues the German journal, "Will the Russian Jews adapt themselves to their new surroundings? Have they the mettle in them of which the Americans are made? One thing at least justifies the affirmation of the first of these questions and that is the unlimited enthusiasm of the immigrated Russian Jew for America. Ardently he longs for the day when he may make application for his naturalization papers, he assumes the customs of the Americans, and tries to get rid of everything which might designate him as a descendant of a Russian Jew, even of his name, which he Americanizes as soon as possible. Former Davidowicz becomes Davidson. Jacobson is transformed to Jackson. If he has a German name it is also changed. Weiss becomes White, Reis is turned into Rice, Preis into Price.

"This desire of becoming Americanized is also extended to their dwellings. The ambition of everyone living on the East Side, in Hester, Suffolk, and Essex streets is to leave these poorer quarters and to move into more fashionable ones. As soon as they have learned some English, they do not speak the Yiddish any more. The girls are dressed in the latest fashion. But they remain religiously orthodox, and therefore separated socially from the Jews of German descent.

"Taking into consideration that new streams of immigrants from Russia will follow, who have the same customs and are of the same mental complexion, it is not out of the way to assert that Greater New York will some day become the New Jerusalem of the future."—Chicago Record-Herald.

THE REVIVAL OF RELIGION.

MEN ARE THINKING MORE SERIOUSLY AND FEELING MORE DEEPLY ON THE GREAT THEMES OF LIFE.

Careful students of social tendencies report a reaction against the prevailing laxity in conduct and opinion. This is sometimes characterized as a moral renaissance. It goes deeper; it is nothing less than a revival of religion. Yet it does not appear to be the result of any of the ordinary evangelistic efforts or agencies. It is springing up in unwonted places, and is finding utterance by unprofessional and unfamiliar voices.

Anyone who has ears to hear must catch now and then in the common speech of men, a note of unusual seriousness. The facts which have been coming to light during the last few years respecting the terrible infidelity and abuses of power in high places have touched the heart of the common man with a sense of solicitude. In days like these the airy optimism which can see no perils in the path of the nation is an impertinence. Sensible men are not ashamed to confess their fears, and in their study of existing conditions the truth is brought home to them that the remedy which is needed is a deepening of the life of the people—something organic and elemental which shall change the common currents of thought and feeling and renovate the springs of character.

MORAL MOTIVE POWER.

No doubt some correction in the common moralities is needed. To our complex and cryptic financial system we must learn to apply the principles of ethics; the eighth commandment needs a large new annotation. Human invention was never so prolific as it is to-day, and its resources have been taxed in devising new ways of stealing. They must be searched out and legibly labeled: that is the business of the law-makers. But when all this shall have been done, the deepest need of the people will still be unsupplied. That is the awakening in their consciousness of the sense of the great loyalties on which life is built. Moral rules are not enough; what is needed most is moral motive power—the love of righteousness, the impulse to integrity, the enthusiasm of virtue. And this, as even the common man is beginning to feel, is kindled only by religion—by fellowship and communion with that "Power not ourselves which makes for righteousness."

Thus, even those who have been supposed to be farthest from the common creed are clearly recognizing that a merely secular mortality is not enough; that there must be something sacred and supreme in it, else it will have little meaning for us and little power over us. Dr. Felix Adler, in his book on The Religion of Duty, in which he powerfully argues that duty must include a religious element, says:

"The moral law is not a convenience nor a convention; it is not imposed in order that we may achieve happiness for ourselves or others. The moral law comes out of the infinite depths and heights. There is a voice that speaks in us out of the ultimate reality of things. It is not subject to us, but we are subject to it and we must bend our pride."

Dr. Stanton Coit, of London, another leader of the same school, declares:

"The whole of the moral law is by no means contained under the conception of love to one's neighbor. . . . If Christ meant righteousness, when he spoke of 'the Lord thy God,' if he meant righteousness worshiped as the sovereign reality of life, we must assent to his declaration that the first and great commandment is 'Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy mind.'"

THE DEEPER NOTE.

All this means that religion is, after all, the principal thing; that a mere readjustment of ethical formularies is not enough; that a deeper note than this must be struck if we hope to restore the lost harmony to the human soul and the social order. There must be something to worship, something that kindles our purest love and marshals our highest loyalties. Nothing less than this will meet the social need of the time, which is a call for radical change in ruling ideas, for a mighty reconstruction of ideals, for new conceptions of the meaning and value of life.

The call is heard, as we have already said, in many unexpected quarters. A daily newspaper, published in Wall Street, declares that there is nothing the country needs just now so much as a revival of old-fashioned religion. A daily paper, published in the interior, has taken every morning for a week the subjects of its leading editorial from the phrases of Paul's praise of love as the greatest thing in the world. The last Christmas number of a western daily journal had a brilliant editorial three columns long upon "The Holy Spirit," written by one of the strong journalists of America, and full of the passion of a genuine religious faith. These are signs of the times. Men are thinking seriously and feeling deeply on these great themes of the inner life. Even those who have not philosophized much about it have the impression that help must come from this quarter in resisting the encroachments of the dominant materialism, and in bringing the people back to the ways of sanity and integrity.

THE SOCIAL WELFARE.

One phase of this revival of religion is significant. Its main concern is less for individual than for social well-being. The two can not well be separated, and doubtless those who are earnestly promoting it have a consciousness of their own personal need of deliverance from the engrossing mammonism. But the emphasis rests on the common danger, and the salvation sought is primarily a social salvation. The notion seems to be gaining that the moral health of the individual can not well be preserved in a fetid social atmosphere. Heretofore there has been much protest against any close contact of religion with business or with politics. Now it seems to be assumed that nothing but religion can renovate brutalized business and corrupt politics. It is a great enlargement of the popular conception of religion, and ought to gain for it some new consideration.—April Century.

THE RETURNED INDIAN GRADUATE.

The returned student is veritably "a man without a country," having no place amongst his people of the immediately preceding generation, or amongst his white brothers; and who has not yet discovered his own place and fitted into it. He is the victim of the transitional period in the history of his race, and forms indeed, as one discerning missionary has said, "the most neglected class of Indians."

The Government is willing to cooperate so far as the law allows, with any person, institution or association offering a feasible answer to the question, "What can be done for the returned student?" The church at large does not seem to have discovered this open door, perhaps because it is so busy supporting and directing its missionaries and scores of other devoted workers in the usual channels of beneficent activity.

ASSOCIATION WORK VALUABLE.

The Y. M. C. A. has had a decade or more of usefulness amongst the Indians of the North and Northwest, and the Y. W. C. A. has recently established a special bureau for this purpose under the secretaryship of Miss Edith M. Dabb. These associations are especially valuable aids.

Miss Dabb says:

"These young people must have an opportunity to know the true God. . . . Pastors may go out and hold services occasionally, but we do not think this sufficient for our girls, even in denominational colleges. The teachers need an agency through which to work, and the girls need one in which to work and receive training for present and future service."—The Indian's Friend, March, 1910.

When it was announced that the 1909 Nobel prize for literature, consisting of a medal and $40,000 in cash, had been awarded to Selma Lagerlof, the whole world began asking why the English, American and Continental writers, whose names are on everyone's tongue, should have been passed over, and a Swedish author not widely known outside of her own country chosen for this high honor.

But if Selma Lagerlof is little known to the readers of prose and verse in this country, her name is familiar enough to the boys and girls of Sweden, for it was she who inaugurated the movement of teaching geography and other supposedly difficult studies, by the means of text-books that are as enticingly entertaining to the children who use them as if they were fiction instead of cold, hard facts.

Herein is shown her intuitive grasp of the great principle underlying all true education,—that of keeping alive within the mind of a child the quickening power of curiosity.

When Selma Lagerlof first conceived the idea of making the school child's lesson so entertaining that he could not fail to remember it, even if he tried, the educational authorities of Sweden thought the plan very amusing. The author, however, had more confidence in the practicability of her unique idea, and being a poor school-teacher herself, she dared to take the initiative and test her method of instruction upon her own pupils.

The result was so far beyond even her own expectations that it was not very long before the school authorities of Sweden adopted her novel storybook geography, and a few months ago all the school children of that land held a big reception in honor of the woman who had made studying as easy as play for them.

Important as Selma Lagerlof's educational work has been, however, she has done many other things besides writing geographies. For fully twenty years she has been writing books and short stories for children that, for a time, puzzled the critics greatly—they were so different from the books that other persons wrote. So far as the children were concerned, there was no question as to the merit of the work. They hailed her as their own favorite author, and to-day all Scandinavia agrees that no writer of modern times has exerted "so positive an influence upon the national character," which is simply another way of saying that the optimism and patriotic spirit conspicuous in all her writings have appealed so strongly to her readers that their effect is already discernible in the character of the people of the present generation—the men and women of to-day who, as the children of yesterday, studied Selma Lagerlof's text-books and read her stories.

Not only is Madame Lagerlof the most mystical writer in Sweden, but she is also the best. There is absolutely no difference of opinion on the subject. She early determined to turn aside from the beaten paths of all previous writers, and she has blazed a distinctly new trail in literature. Her manner of writing is so original that at first the foreign reader scarcely knows what to make of it or how to class it. "Is it a fairy story or a novel?" he asked in bewilderment. Gradually, however, her peculiar style grows upon him, and without quite understanding why, he succumbs to its fascination.

That touch of nature that makes the whole world kin is the golden thread that runs through all her writings, no matter whether she places her story in the olden days of serfdom in Sweden, or whether her characters grace the stage of modern times. Through the magic of her pen the most commonplace lives are invested with the glamor of romance, while the romantic and improbable assume an air of probability.

Personally Selma Lagerlof is a modest and rather shy woman, of very attractive personality. In her school days she was the despair of her teachers, owing to the fact that it seemed impossible for her to outgrow her childish style of writing. For years, however, she was haunted by the desire to put the ancient sagas and the delightful customs of her country into such prose that the children could read and remember them. It took her years to prepare her first book, and it might never have been published if "Idun," a Swedish woman's journal, had not offered a prize for the best Scandinavian story.

Selma Lagerlof won this prize with her book, "Gosta Berling's Saga." Of this, her first venture on the sea of literature, one of her countrywomen wrote: "The wonderful in this story is the soul of the one who created it. . . . She seems to understand the most widely differing emotions of the human soul—wild anger, sorrow and mirth, innocence and guilt, the lawlessness of frivolity and the despair of sin. She knows love and loneliness, the fullness of life and the mysterious greatness of death, and she has the gift of calling all these by their right names. She has shown us in 'Gosta' how nobly she could speak of the ignoble."

This book is considered her masterpiece, but those which have appeared since have not disappointed her public. Her books are not numerous, but they are exceedingly well worth while. "The Wonderful Adventures of Nils" was the result of years of study of animal and bird life by the author, with legends and folklore which are woven together in the charming story of little Nils, turned into an elf, traveling on the back of a goose with a flock of wild geese, and understanding the speech of birds and animals. Its foundation is built upon national characteristics.

Her "Christ Legends," taken mainly from the apocryphal New Testament, are borrowed legends of the life of Christ, which she has expanded into stories near of kin to Swedish folklore tales. They breathe that spirit of joy and reverence which from time immemorial has imparted its gladness to the Yuletide season.

But the magic of her genius shines brightest in her short stories, and of these the most popular is a little sketch written in memory of Frederica Bremer, called "Mamselle Fredrika." It describes her last Christmas Eve, with the dreams she had of the past, ending with a description of the great book she had meant to write but which remained unwritten because Death, the Dark Knight, had come to take her away.

Selma Lagerlof's earnings with her pen long ago enabled her to give up teaching and devote herself to literature, and her days are peacefully passed, in company with her mother, in a charming, flower-embowered cottage, near Falun in Sweden.

A word about the world-famous Nobel prizes may be of interest here. Nine years ago Dr. Alfred Nobel, a Swedish engineer and chemist, left a generous yearly bequest to be divided in prizes among those persons who had rendered the greatest service to the world, during the year, in five fields of useful endeavor,—namely, physics, chemistry, medicine, literature and peace.

Women have now won prizes in three of these fields: Madam Curie in physics in 1903, for her discoveries in connection with radium; Baroness von Suttner of Austria in 1905, whose book, "Ground Arms," was adjudged the greatest contributor to the cause of international peace; and Madame Lagerlof in literature in 1909.

It will be recalled that in 1906 the peace prize was bestowed upon President Roosevelt in recognition of his offices in bringing about the peace between Russia and Japan.—Edwin Wildman.

Dear Herald: There are still a few Saints here trying the best they can to keep the gospel banner waving. Bro. S. H. Fields has been here holding meetings with very good crowds. He preached some very spiritual sermons and the Saints feel spiritually renewed. There was a Baptist preacher attended some of the meetings, and Brother Fields gave him some of his time, which nearly led to a discussion. He said he was not coming for argument's sake but was coming to learn something. He has read the Book of Mormon through and some tracts, one of the final destiny of man, which gave him more light, he says, than anything he ever read on the subject. I think ere long he will be baptized.

We live in a very prejudiced community of Campbellites and Free-will Baptists and the Saints have lots to bear, but we know that if we live faithful, the Lord will bless us in our efforts. Dear Saints, pray for us that we may hold out faithful.

Your brother and sister in the gospel,
MR. AND MRS. MET ROBERSON.

MERRILL, MICHIGAN, February 27, 1910.

Editors Herald: This finds me a long way from my old home in Brant, where I lived when I first heard the gospel in its full saving power. It was preached by Bro. Hiram Dickhout, of Canada. I knew it was right, but I did not obey until two years later. My wife and I were then baptized by Brother Dickhout and God blessed the act, and I received great light of this latter day work. Soon after there was preaching by Elder Levi Phelps and quite a number were baptized, but the work did not move along very much, for there soon arose great troubles for the people of God. Many times I was threatened with tar and feathers, and even had a notice served on me to abandon the work at once or my buildings would be burned. I took no heed, but went on the best I could, trying to keep the light shining. Persecution became greater and the work died down. From 1896 to 1908 there was no preaching, no prayer meeting, no sound of the gospel heard in Brant. During this time I had my doubts; was sometimes hot and sometimes cold, but never lukewarm.

In the spring of 1907 there came a family of Saints from Iowa to Brant, by the name of Dempster. I did not meet them until late in the fall, when Mr. and Mrs. Demster came to my place and wanted me to help them get the work started in the place again. I declined, telling them that I had become discouraged and knew it was no use, but still believed the work was right. Later, I volunteered my services and we invited all the people that had been Saints to attend the prayer meeting. None came at first but Brother Demster's people and myself and wife. We started the prayer meetings and God blessed our every effort, and we were made to rejoice.

In July following Brother Dickhout came to see us and did some preaching and baptized two and otherwise encouraged us. He was followed by Bro. O. J. Hawn, who took the field and went on with his work, and he was certainly blessed and brought forth much fruit, quite a number being baptized, and in the fall of the same year there was a branch organized there by Elders O. J. Hawn and George Burt. Myself and wife were not permitted to become members of said branch for some unexplainable reason, but God let the light shine upon my mind and showed me that my work was done in Brant. So I offered my farm for sale one morning in July, 1909, and two hours later it was sold to an adjoining neighbor, not knowing where I was going.

After a long and unsuccessful search for a farm, I began to think that I had been led by the wrong spirit, but one morning my son and I started for Merrill, and here we found a garden, not the Garden of Eden, but the garden of Michigan. I bought a farm home, and it is a beautiful country here. I am on the Saginaw and Grand Rapids division of the Pere Marquette Railroad. There is no branch here that I know of, but I am told that there are a few Saints living north of here. I intend to go and see them as soon as I can and I hope if Brother Wight sees this he will help me to get a branch started here, as this is a beautiful country, thickly settled with fine people.

I do not know how the branch is getting along at Brant, but I think it must be getting along fine, as it was organized under the best of circumstances and in a good neighborhood. I wish some of the brothers and sisters there would write to the HERALD, and tell us how they are getting along, as I have never seen anything from there since the branch was organized for which I labored hard for sixteen years.

When I obeyed the gospel the latter day work was entirely unknown in this part of Michigan. My wife and I were the first to receive it and we know what it is to get the work started in a new place. God has blessed me with marvelous and wonderful light and knowledge concerning this work. I saw Joseph the Prophet in a vision soon after I had come into this work so plainly that on one occasion I was telling how I had seen him in vision and Elder Horton asked me if I would know him if I saw his picture, and I said I would. One day as I sat at the table, Sister Frisby brought me a photograph and asked me if I knew this person, and I looked at it and said, "Yes, that is Joseph Smith, the Prophet, or else I have been led by the wrong spirit."

Elder Horton said, "Brother, the Spirit of God has revealed the truth unto you; this is Joseph's true picture!" This is only one of the many great and marvelous evidences that I have had of the latter day work. I was also shown by whom he was killed, or the instigator in the plot, but will not give particulars at this writing.

My desire is to see a branch organized here, and hoping to receive some help in thus accomplishing this, I am

Editors Herald: About seventeen years ago I was much distressed of mind. Early one morning I arose from my bed, saddled my horse, and left home unbeknown to any of my family, going eight miles to the railroad station, wishing never to return to my home unless my mistress was removed from me. I had two places in view. I reached Keithsburg, Illinois, and my mind led me to go to Lamoni, Iowa. I went there, met with W. W. Blair, and told him my business. He wrote a few lines and sealed it up and told me to hand it to John T. Kinnaman, who was to preside over the meeting that morning. I did so, and in that meeting I asked the prayers of the Saints in my behalf. Afterwards I was administered to by Bro. R. M. Elvin, assisted by two other elders. Choice blessings were pronounced upon my head. One was: "You shall never be any more as you are now." That was literally fulfilled. My mind grew better, but I was very weak. In a short time, I was wishing to go home more earnestly than I did to leave it. In company with Elder E. E. Wheeler and Elder Carpenter we started to our homes.

That night quite a talk took place between Brother Carpenter and a stranger who quoted scripture his way. Brother Carpenter said it read differently in the Bible. The stranger said he was educated in college especially for a minister, you know. A stranger left the car and returned with a Bible, which he handed to Brother Carpenter, who opened it and read as he had quoted. The learned man's countenance dropped to rise no more. During their talk I heard heavenly messengers over my head singing, "Down through the clouds he will come," etc. The tone was very fine, like unto the tinkling of a fine brass bell. I rejoiced all the way home.

Recently, early in the morning, I had a talk with a Presbyterian minister. He said he hated to see a people like us deceived by such a book as the Book of Mormon, for it would not hold water. I told him to appoint a time and we would meet in debate, but he said he would not talk with any of us. Said he would prove the book was false. Not a moment's time was given me till my hand went up before his face, and I said: "As sure as God lives the Book of Mormon is true, and my word is true and will be true in the day of judgment." All that day there was a burden upon me. That night I had a dream. I will relate the last of it. I was walking, a woman by my side. I stopped and she reached her hand up the full length of her arm, took down a vesture, handed it to me and said, "You may have this." I never saw as nice a coat. The beauty of it I shall never forget: as white as snow. I took for granted that God was pleased with what I had told the minister. That is the third testimony that the Book of Mormon is true that I have received. Praise God from whom all blessings flow.

The above may let some of the Saints here know how I am feeling. To-day is my birthday, seventy-five years old, and quite well. My last days are my best. I feel to praise God all the day long. God is blessing his work.

MOUNDS, OKLAHOMA, March 14, 1910.

Editors Herald: I am still trying to do what I can to tell the gospel story. I find plenty of opposition and some are ready to listen but slow to hear and understand. I am not situated so I can do very much church work just now, but hope that some day I will be able to do more. I am very poor in this world's goods, though I have the encouraging hope that some day I will get an inheritance that will pay amply for all that I have done. I know the Lord is just and will reward for every good work done. I can look back and see where I could have done a great deal more than I did, but the only way to remedy the past is to improve the future. I am sorry for my errors and know that I continue to make mistakes. I will continue to be sorry in the future, and to be sorry and grieved is not benefiting. So let us work to the end that we may be rejoicing instead of sorrowing.

I sometimes imagine I am discouraged; then there comes a thought that drives away old Satan's promptings and I feel that there is nothing that could discourage me. I love this great work and every truth in the great chain of all truth. I love the gospel work for more than one reason. Yes, because I know that God is prompting every good move, and God loves his work, and Satan hates the gospel plan that our Master gave us. That is one reason I love the gospel, because Satan does not. I have seen God's power manifested a great many times, sufficiently miraculous to dispel any possible doubt of the inspiration of the gospel in all its claims. I know that the Lord gives me his Spirit to aid me in my efforts to preach; still I, like many others, do not appreciate the Lord's interest in me. He knows our weaknesses and will always give us strength to tide us over the rough and rugged steps in our journey if we ask him in faith, and put forth our strength in doing our part. We can afford to sacrifice for this work. Christ died for the gospel and sinful men. The apostles, many of them, gave their lives before they would deny the gospel. Yes, thousands have sealed their testimony with their righteous blood, and we can afford now to stand firm.

In this last dispensation, we know that the reestablishing of God's kingdom on earth has cost the best blood of the age; and oh, dear Saints, let us show by our every walk and act that we appreciate the price of this grand message that we possess under these more favorable conditions. I have been over the bloody field of the Haun's Mill tragedy many times in my boyhood days, and how it brings tears to my eyes and sorrow to my soul when I pick up the history and read of the awful deeds perpetrated there by these fiends in human form, and then, I can say in my heart how glad I am that my lot is cast with instead of against those poor, persecuted, sacrificing men and women, and I am sure if I am faithful I will be permitted to associate with those noble servants of God.

I am in the fight to stay; have been a member of the great church for about twenty years, and never for one moment have I regretted the step; no, a thousand times no. Now, dear Saints, pray for me that I may so live that my reward will be sure when the Master comes to reign. How grand the thought: to be with him on earth in peace, love, joy, and righteousness. May God bless every department of the work, and every individual that stands identified with this great church, with choice and wonderful blessings, is the prayer of your humble and well-meaning servant and coworker.

J. N. PERKINS.

Dear Herald: I wish to speak to the Saints through your columns. We have only been in the church six months, but we love our new name, Latter Day Saint, and our wish is that we may prove faithful throughout this life that we may have part in the first resurrection. And in order to do this we must let our light shine. The very fact that we have received light from God to be the very least among the Latter Day Saints, is proof that we have superior light and God will not bless us or add more light to us unless we let our light shine, that others may see and know that we have been in sin, and have learned of Him.

We have been, until now, among the isolated Saints, and I wish to ask you why so many members of the church keep their identity covered up? Are they ashamed to tell the world that they have taken upon themselves the name of Latter Day Saint? I can not think so. Or are they afraid of what outsiders will say? If this be the case, I must say, "O, ye of little faith." The God who so loved you as to bring you out of darkness is surely able to take care of you and protect you from the slurs and insults you may have to bear for his sake.

I lived next door to Latter Day Saints years ago and never knew they belonged to the church until recently, although they were the best of neighbors and lived good moral lives. They were in reality doers of religion, but they failed to let their light shine or give God the glory. What good they might have been to the people around them, if they had told to the world that they were Latter Day Saints, and then told them why. I just love to tell people why we became Latter Day Saints, and to take my beloved Bible and prove to them that ours is the church of Christ, that the Book of Mormon is of divine origin, and that Joseph Smith was a true prophet of God.

It costs some money and takes some time to study the Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, Church History, etc., but dear Saints, we are among the very poorest of God's children so far as worldly goods are concerned, yet we have managed to buy and read the greater part of the church books, tracts, and periodicals. We hand them to others to read with the request that they send them on; and while we can not travel and preach the gospel, we can write letters to our friends and relatives and tell them the glad story of salvation and how they may obtain it.

I will tell you of one of our correspondents, a sister of ours, who has been a Free Methodist for years. We commenced by telling her that we were investigating the truth, and she sent us right away a paper with an account of Joseph F. Smith and his five wives. Next we told her we were baptized and sent her some tracts, and she answered that she was so glad she belonged to a good, clean church, the Free Methodists, and that we had no Bible for the things we told her; but that she had been praying for us and would keep on praying for us.

Then we began giving her lessons out of her own Bible. Her next letter told us that she had been reading the Scriptures this winter more than ever before, and the more she read the more disgusted she was getting with the church she belonged to; that she believed God had one true church, and she meant by his grace to find it. Then she asked us to tell her more about the Latter Day Saints, all of which we gladly did. Some things we teach she has a hard time to believe, but she is coming our way, or God's way, so fast that she believes we have found the true church, and she says if one of the elders will come there, she will provide for his temporal welfare, and get him a place to preach, even if they have to hold the meetings in her house. She is Mrs. John Garde, 1401 North Third West, Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Any elder seeing this address and being near, please go, as I believe the seed has been sown and is ready for watering, and it is not on shallow ground either. So, dear Saints, you see my letter writing has done some good, and any one of you can do as much or more if you just have "faith in God," and do his bidding and trust him for the results.

We are all anxious for the restoration of Zion and let me exhort each of you to appoint yourself a committee of one to learn all you can about God's plan of salvation, and then tell it to everybody you meet. Don't be afraid people will call you "crazy"; they said the same thing about our Savior. Live good Christian lives and tell the story every chance you get, and I am sure God will bless you. Go among your neighbors and be bold for Jesus' sake. Just tell them whom you represent, and ask them to read some of your papers or tracts. Chances are they will be antagonistic at first; but remember God is on your side, and he will bless your efforts, and when an elder comes your way I am sure he will bless you very much for the effort you have made.

My heart is full of joy because of God's love for me and all mankind. Please pray for me that I may ever be found at the post of duty, and keep the banner flying.

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. SADIE BURCH.

MCKENZIE, ALABAMA, March 14, 1910.

Editors Herald: Thought I would write you a few lines w let you hear from this part of the Lord's vineyard. We are trying to do what we can for the work, though everything is not as lovely as we would like it to be. Some are not doing unto others as they would have others do unto them. Bro.

T. C. Kelley was with us from February 21 to 28 and added one to our number by baptism. We were sorry to have him leave with the expectation of not returning. May the Lord bless him wherever he goes.

We were all made very sad on the morning of the 4th, on receiving a telegram from Independence that Bro. Joseph S. Wiggins had had an accident that was likely to prove fatal. About thirty minutes later we received another that he was dead, and that the corpse would be brought to McKenzie. This surely did cause our hearts to ache, knowing how affectionate Brother Joseph and his wife were, we knew it would be a heavy loss to Sister Jennie. I went to the Lord in her behalf that she might be able to make the trip all right. I not only asked the Lord to bless her, but I did about all I could to help her. I met her in Montgomery, Alabama, the following Sunday evening; was glad to find her getting along so well. I sent a telegram to Father Wiggins stating when we would be at Garland with the corpse. When we arrived we found a large crowd of relatives and friends waiting for us. About two hours later we were at Father Wiggins'. On Monday, March 7, Brother Joseph's remains were followed to the Pleasant Hill Cemetery.

We hope to so live that we may be able to meet him in that morn of morns, when the trumpet shall sound and the dead in Christ shall come forth. May the Lord bless Sister Jennie and her little baby, Colotta. She has not words to express her thanks to those who were so kind in helping her in the hour of grief.

Your brother in Christ,
A. A. WEAVER.

INMAN, NEBRASKA.

Dear Herald: The fact that I have not oftener written to your valued pages should not be taken as evidence that I do not appreciate your weekly visits. I am beginning to consider myself a back number since there are so many able contributors to your columns. But for some time I have been thinking that our part of the world is not often heard from, and perhaps I ought to write. During the past year I have visited various parts of Central Nebraska District, as well as a few places in the Northern Nebraska District, and am glad to be able to say that wherever Saints are found, there is found, in a greater or less degree, the same love of the truth and the same self-sacrificing spirit which causes them to assist with their substance in support of the work of the Lord. I have been cheered and comforted by the associations of the Saints as well as by the kindly recognition of the Master while endeavoring to present the work entrusted to me. It has not been my privilege to see a large increase in the membership of the church as the result of my labors. Yet I have had the privilege of opening the door to the kingdom to a few precious souls, who I trust may prove faithful to their trust and thus obtain eternal life.

While at Comstock, Nebraska, in November last, I found the Saints still rejoicing over the work of Elder W. E. Peak in discussion held at that place, and those baptized by him were full of zeal for the truth. I think I may truly say there is a forward tendency of the work throughout the district. The Saints manifest a desire to live more nearly in harmony with the law, so that their lives may be a living testimony to the truth. If there are exceptions to this rule they need not be mentioned here. The Lord has graciously honored the ordinance of laying on of hands for the healing of the sick in a number of instances which have come under my observation in the last conference year, for all of which I desire to be duly thankful, and to render suitable obedience to such a loving Father.

The conference of the Central Nebraska District held at Inman on the 5th and 6th, passed pleasantly to those in attendance. It was thought best to release me from my duties as district president that I might be more free to prosecute my duties as a missionary of the church. Elder J. H. Jackson, of Meadow Grove, was chosen as my successor in that office and I solicit for him the support of the Saints of the district by their faith and prayers. Elder J. W. Smith and the writer are holding services at Meadow Grove nightly to small but growing audiences, some interest being manifested by those outside the fold. What the harvest shall be is known only to the Lord of the harvest.

I wish the Saints of the Central Nebraska District to remember that I still hold the office of Bishop's agent, and anything sent to me at Inman, Nebraska, will reach me in due time and be receipted for. You had better send by bank draft, post-office, or express money order, and now as we are nearing the beginning of another conference year, let us each strive to get more fully into the spirit of the work, and indeed to be "laborers together with God in the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all."

AYL BURTON, LYANEY, GLOUCESTER, ENG., March 11, 1910.

Editors Herald: The conference of the Cartsen, Wales, District held at Nantyglo February 26 and 27, was accompanied, among other things, with a splendid effort to reach the people of the world, as we say. Strangers were present in the three Sunday services. Brn. William Newton and Rees Jenkins, also J. W. Rushton, acquitted themselves nobly in preaching. On the Monday night Elder Rushton had the pleasure of addressing a fair audience in the Baptist church, loaned us for the occasion. I note this because it is a departure from the orthodox method of procedure with us as a people. The minister was out and congratulated our brother on his effort and, in fact, thanked him for the able address given.

I was rather amused at reading Bro. W. S. Powers' protest against Dr. D. S. Tay's revival tactics. We had a variety of that kind of test during the Evan-Roberts revival in Wales.

In the mines safety lamps were raised by those purporting to be on the Lord's side. One of the brethren asked: "Where in the Bible do you find that command?" He didn't get an answer. The same brother attended a revival service in a Methodist church. At test time he sat down when all the rest stood up. A girl came and knelt by him to pray for him; the minister came and did likewise; then he calmly asked the minister: "What is the matter?" An argument followed in which the minister felt worsted and retired. After several doses of that kind another excitement in another place of worship came. The brother sat down and the scrutinizers saw a vacant standing place; off they went to the gallery, and you can imagine their rebuff and disappointment. The wary one seemed to enjoy the business. Anyhow, it sometimes serves as a rebuke to their unbiblical methods of doing.

Yours in Christ,

THOMAS JONES.

OAKESDALE, WASHINGTON, March 18, 1910.

Editors Herald: The Spokane District is still on the map and it is about time for some one to break the long silence. Our conference does not care to write up district news, as they say they do not want to toot their own horn. I suppose they make noise enough when they preach, but it does not reach all in the district who are interested in what is being done. The writer has about completed his first missionary journey alone, lasting over two and a half months, and the results are very satisfactory. Many seem interested in the great gospel message. I have preached in eleven places, made four new openings, and called on members in the following places: Gilfred, Reubens, Lewiston, Clarkston, Jerry, Dayton, Walla Walla, Freewater, Pasco, Kennewick, Page, Revere, Garfield, and Latah.

By persistent labor the financial interests have been awakened and this is a good indication of spiritual advancement. A personal application of the free gospel law brings results. I have located some isolated members who seldom see an elder. Brother "Jots" will please take notice that one of his disciples is not on record. This may be the result of a hasty departure. If there is anything in the name it occurred at Hardscrabble, Iowa. However, "Jots man" will have a chance to make good after a quarter of a century. The writer is homeward bound anticipating attending the General Conference. Many would be glad to hear from others in the Spokane District. Don't be afraid to blow your trumpet at least once a year.

Your colaborer,

W. W. FORDHAM.

Editors Herald: In the HERALD of the 9th instant, a letter appears from Bro. J. H. N. Jones relative to the supplying the Book of Mormon to Prof. W. V. Tunnell, of Howard University, Washington, D. C. I ordered this sent from Herald Office, but in a letter from Professor Tunnell, he informed me he had received an Inspired Translation of the Bible. I wrote you again asking you to make an exchange with him, which no doubt was attended to.

Brother Jones wishes mention made in HERALD if I supplied the Book of Mormon to Professor Tunnell. Will you kindly make mention of the same?

As I am arranging my poems with the expectation of having them printed in book form, and as there are two of my pieces that were printed in the HERALD before the fire, of which I have no copies, I ask any of the Saints who have copies of them to please send me the words or the HERALDS containing the pieces, and I will return by mail any price they deem fair for them. One piece is entitled, "A plea for mothers," and the other one is a Santa Claus piece, about a little boy who did not believe in children being deceived.

Editors Herald: I have been requested to put forth an effort to have some of our ministry preach the gospel in Black River Falls, Wisconsin, as Mrs. O. A. Hegen and others desire to hear the gospel, as they are investigating. Any elders going there are invited to make their home with this lady while there.

To the Saints in West Virginia.

Some of the Utah missionaries are sending out a tract of about sixteen pages from Chicago. It is entitled "Corner stones of the Reorganization." In some way they have obtained a list of the names of Saints in the district. The object of this work is to weaken your confidence in the leaders who repudiated the apostate organization of the church under Brigham Young and others of his kind, and by the help of the Lord reorganized the Saints who were left in a confused condition, after the death of the president and the persecution that followed. It is expected that when you read this deceitful and false production you will be led to believe the Utah church is the true and real church as at the first (1830) organized. Remember that we stand upon the original foundation, both in organization, faith and doctrine. They departed from the faith and the doctrine. They even denied the Lord who bought them and taught blood atonement for salvation, and that Adam was our only God. They taught a plurality of Gods and the dreadful and shameful doctrine of polygamy. If they should convince me that the Reorganized Church is wrong, it would not prove they are right. One thing is certain, whether we are right or wrong, they can not be right.

These tracts are written by men who are capable of preaching the abominations of Utah as having been instituted and commanded by our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. They call evil good, and darkness they say is light. Pay no attention to these papers. God has confirmed us in the faith of fellowship of the Saints and we need no help from such men. Let us be faithful and be sure of this, that we keep the faith and that blessed hope.

Yours as ever in the Lord,
D. L. SHINN.

MILROY, INDIANA.

Editors Herald: My wife and I are the only Saints in this part of the country. We became children of God in 1890, at Union branch, Indiana. We lived with the Saints there three years, and those were the happy days of our lives, but as we were poor and made our living by labor we were compelled to go where the country was good for labor, and we were so far from the church we could not get back. Now we are here and no Saints for miles around us. We are all alone. My brother, James Eulitt, sends us the HERALD to read once in a while and it is received with pleasure. It seems as a message sent from God. We love to read the letters in the church papers; it gives us strength and courage to go on and never turn back. We love to hear that others have the privilege of going to the meetings of the Saints. We are trying to live the life of a Saint. Sometimes we neglect our duty and fall, but we never forget to get on our feet again. God has answered our prayers in many ways. I believe our son was healed through our faith, although we had a doctor, for God will do his part if we will do ours. If Bro. S. W. L. Scott should read this letter, we would love to have him write to us as he was my playmate in the days gone by. We send our love to all the Saints and ask the prayers of all of them that we may live more worthy before God.

Your brother and sister,
R. F. D. 16. JOHN EULITT AND WIFE.

SAN BERNARDINO, CALIFORNIA, March 25, 1910.

Editors Herald: The fourteen-night discussion between Rev. S. O. Pool, of the Church of Christ (nonprogressive branch of Campbell's organization), and Elder T. W. Williams, ended with a good and cheerful feeling among the Saints. Reverend Pool made the best of what we consider a weak position. He contended that his church was the identical New Testament church. Christ and the apostles are still in it "in spirit," as in 1 Corinthians 5:3 Paul was with the Corinthians. Brother Williams asked him to "line up" with the headquarters.

Brother Pool seems to be a graduate from the Splashover School of Mimicry, of Wenatchee, Washington, his home town. Ingersoll's oratory was imitated; T. W. was imitated in voice and gesture according to the splashover method. A high-stepping trotter, which represented our first prophet, as we see him or speak of him, was imitated in about ten feet of pulpit space. A broken down cripple then nearly fell in pieces, coming back over the same space. This last represented the prophet as they (Pool's side) see him.

Brother Williams made public confession that we did not have an apostle in the church who could represent the bogus so well.

Brother Pool is an adept at giving loving insults. From the deep fountain of his heart's love for us sprang such words as Joe and sheep-thief, etc.

The discussion included five nights on Book of Mormon, three on the completeness or incompleteness of the canon of scripture, and three nights each on church propositions.

Although Reverend Pool made a courageous fight with his Sword of Laban (R. B. Neal's paper), and with such other material as he felt he could use, he did not keep up with T. W., at least, we think so.

Brother Williams held our colors high and rode the "high stepper" to victory. As for Brother Pool, it was a case of Scripture to the right of him,

Logic to the left of him,
Into the camp of Saints
Reverend Pool thundered.

Small was the height of him,
But great was the sight of him,
As on his high horse,
Onward he blundered.

Odd were the acts of him
When Williams fired facts at him,
Fighting though shattered
Like the famous six hundred.

Now, with his colors down,
Rides back to Wenatchee town,
On a horse that is broken down,
The man who has blundered.

Yours for joyful warfare,
CHAS. E. CRUMLEY.

A Message for Australia.

Not having the address of Brother Butterworth, our missionary in charge, I take the liberty of writing to him and the Saints of Brisbane through the columns of the SAINTS' HERALD. Here is my message: Our brother, Teacher John Smith, his wife, two sons and seven daughters, left England on February 26, 1910, for Brisbane, Queensland, Australia, where they expect to arrive about the last of March. I promised Brother Smith that I would write you giving his address, so that the Saints of Brisbane, together with Brother Butterworth, might get into touch with them. Brother Smith will be found at the home of Bro. Lewis Davidson, 13 Harcourt street, New Farm, Brisbane, Queensland, Australia.

The Saints of Brisbane will find in Brother John a real live Latter Day Saint, one who has stood the test for the last fourteen years. We have pleasure in recommending our brother to the Saints at Brisbane. Brother Smith carries with him testimonies of our appreciation, esteem and respect for his sterling qualities. As a teacher he has worked faithfully and true to his calling, and I do not know who will or can fill his vacant place at present. The North Manchester Branch has lost a teacher indeed. May God bless him and his family to continue the good work upon the great continent of Australia.

Your brother,
W. H. GREENWOOD.

NUMBER 17

Editorial

REMARKS OF PRÉSIDENT JOSEPH SMITH, AT THE CLOSE OF THE CONFERENCE, AT INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, APRIL 18, 1910.

I don't know but what I have said all that I ought to say to this conference. I have been intensely interested in what has been going on; and so far as I have understood it, have tried to take a part in its proceedings.

We have had during the last year, quite a number of debates in different parts of the country, and I am quite pleased to know that those who have stood in defense of our faith have proved themselves to be worthy of the appellation of "Christian gentlemen." I hope that the year that is now before us will continue the record; that no man who is a called and trusted minister for Christ shall ever forget, under any circumstances, that he is a Christian gentleman, professing to follow the Master, emulating his virtues so far as he comprehends them.

I have seen in the past the evil effects upon our work of what I can not help but think of as a relic of official jealousy; and though it is frequently denied by individuals, I see what suggests to me the thought that some seeds of it remain. Every man may be a good man; not all men may be great men, and one of the grandest exhibitions of greatness that I know of in a human being, and especially one who stands in the defense of what he understands to be truth, is to bear with patience the contradictions of sinners against himself in emulation of Christ. Equally grand is an exhibition of patience, forbearance, and refusal to be unduly disturbed by the contradiction of friends and coworkers. We are differently constituted, you will tell me. That is true. If I understand the office work of the Holy Spirit, it is to reform within us what is necessary to be reformed. It is to convict us of those things which we should overcome, entirely banish them from our hearts and minds. To illustrate this: You have paid a compliment to me for my long continued service, and yet many of you have not really known me, for I am a very quick-tempered man. My brother Alexander once said of me in a moment of quick resentment, "Oh, yes, you think my brother Joseph is a very easy man, but you will find him just as obstinate as I am." Brother Alexander knew me a good while ago.

Another thing in connection with this, the grand characteristic of a great man is not to allow himself to be moved by the speech or even debate of one who is an associate worker with him in a great cause. And he will forgive before ever it is suggested to those who may have assaulted him or injured him (as he feels) or are conscious of the wrong they have done him. And I have found by experience that the sweetest enjoyment that has come to me has been when I have passed over and forgiven in my heart those things which may have been said or done that might have affected me for ill.

I am old-fashioned—almost seventy-eight years ought to make anybody old-fashioned, but I have found that the feelings of honorable conduct toward my fellow-man, formed when I was a young man, have served me well, but I regard my associates in a common cause on an equal footing. We do not all see alike. I have been opposed sharply, but I have never yet—and I appeal to you men on the floor everywhere in this building if I have ever treated one of you, an associate in the work, with a spirit of resentment, or ever withheld from you the confidence and trust which one associated should entertain for another. If there is such a man here I would like to have him say when and where this may have occurred. I have always understood them to be just as honest, just as true to their convictions as I was to mine, and if there were differences between us it largely resulted from standing on opposite sides of the shield. You may remember that legend, when two knights of the olden time approached each other before a house to which a sign was swinging, and one of them made a remark about the beauty of the silver finish and the other one denied its being a silver finish—it was a gold finish, and so they drew their spears and ran a tilt at each other, and as they turned to come back, each discovered that there had been two sides to that shield, and they were friends thereafter. Their quarrel was ended.

There is no absolute tribunal this side of the great judgment day that is authorized to determine exactly who is right and who is wrong in a dispute or controversy, such as arises frequently in our midst. Hence it devolves upon us to carry our differences without animosity, without fault-finding, without charging evil intent or purpose upon those who may differ from us. I have tried to impress this thought upon you and upon others, and I want now to have you think upon it. I would to God that all the defenders of Israel were great men. Paul was anxious that all might be saved. I would to God that all Israel should be saved, as did the apostle. I would like to feel now and for future time, so long as I may be permitted to live, that when I shall finally depart hence, I shall leave a band of men and women associated together in a cause that we have held to be so sacred and for which so many have sacrificed so much, who will not allow internal dissensions to spoil the wonderful work that has been done since the angel brought the gospel message to earth.

H. O. Smith

I don't want to lie down in death, come it soon or late, with the consciousness upon me that when I pass off there will arise contending hosts and divided bands through the body, and scatter it—not an apostasy as the term is used by me and those associated with me, but because of internal dissension from human ambition or an effort to control in their personal views, those by whom they are surrounded.

There are just measures, evolving from the things that may have been believed and some of the practices that may have been observed, that will finally bring complete order, if we go together in patience.

The terms of the revelation under which we have been moving during my association with you, tell us that we are not to talk judgment nor boast of mighty faith, but we are carefully to gather together in the regions round about, as many in one place as may be consistent with the feelings of the people while we are appealing to the different organizations of departmental service in the state, to the nation, and asking them to redress us of our wrongs. The wrongs of the past have been carried to the great throne, and there they ought to remain until the time comes for that judgment to sit, and it is not wise in us to continually bring these things up and for them to rankle in our minds as against them who have passed off, and at whose hands these wrongs were inflicted.

There is a conflict still before us. You will remember, some of you, that I predicted more than twenty-five years ago, that the time would come when we would stand before the great jury of the American people as to our attitude, as to our position as exponents of a faith, and that we were to be careful, that men should be prepared and ready to take part in that appeal or in that hearing before this great American jury. I do not know whether you have realized that that time has been passing and now is. Standing as I have done somewhere near—I was going to say the top of the hill, or the top of the mountain—I have seen it, and the sons and the grandsons of the early defenders of the faith, and our sons and grandsons have been preparing themselves and are now preparing to properly represent the faith that is sacred to us.

Another thought and that is this; there is a prophecy on record, not delivered by modern prophets but by one of old, of good authority, that the Gentile shall assist in the rebuilding of the waste places of Zion. That prophecy may be rendered as having application to any place where a people who might have been the pure in heart, may have been assembled from the time that the prophecy was uttered until now, and it holds good until the Savior comes whose right it is to reign; hence it is not wise for us to put any barriers between the kindly offices of them that are without who are willing to recognize us as having won a standing place in the arena of conflict and are willing to extend unto us the right hand of help, whether they accept our faith and our philosophy, or not.

There is no tribunal—I want you to remember this affirmation and I hope these representatives of the press will quote me as I state it now—there is no tribunal, this side of the great judgment bar, that has the authorized right to sit in judgment upon the faith of men and say whether or not they are heterodox or orthodox. The right is reserved for that great Judge and that tribunal which shall try all mankind and adjudge unto them that which belongs unto them of reward for merit or punishment if it be deserved.

Men may assume to say that they will not court opposition with them in any association that they may choose to organize and to maintain. They have the right to do so. We have no right to complain especially of it, but the final arbitrament rests over yonder where we shall all give an account for our individual belief and our associated acts. One of the grand underlying principles upon which the whole structure of Christianity must rest, is that which is found in the 20th of Revelation where the judgment was to sit, a judge upon the throne, and every man was judged out of the things which were written in the books, according to the deeds which were done in the flesh.

This makes every man responsible to God. He has a secondary responsibility to those with whom he is associated and to those around him with whom he may now be associated in labor or work, to observe their rights, while assuming those which he deemed to belong to himself. Hence it follows that the final arbitrament must be there; hence we are almost sure of our footing over yonder if we behave ourselves properly and maintain the faith of Jesus Christ, according to the manner in which he gave it and in which it has been restored, as we understand it, without reference to those men who may not feel or see as we do, believing that when the time shall come, the award will be just, that they receive what is theirs or we receive what is ours.

Let us live in accordance, then, with the proper observance of the rights of others, while endeavoring to maintain with the dignity and the characteristic qualifications of Christian gentlemen, those rights which seem to belong to ourselves as individuals and as an association.

May God in his infinite mercy, be with us, and may that energy that has characterized us this last year and has been resultant in such wonderful exhibitions of progress, rise to the occasion and take the supervising wave of religious excitement, if we may call it that, that is now coming over the world, and make proper use of the talents entrusted to us, maintaining our character for sobriety, the friends of those who need friendship, and those who expect to be judged by that which has been confided to them and that which we have professed to believe before our fellow-man. Amen.

BENEDICTION BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH, AT THE CLOSE OF CONFERENCE,
APRIL 18, 1910.

Our Father who art in heaven, whose supremacy we acknowledge. In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, grant unto those who go hence and to those who stay, the good word of thy blessing, conferring upon us the spirit and power of our office and our calling, that each may discharge the duty devolving upon him as becometh a man of God.

Wilt thou grant, O Lord, to order our days in such manner that we may make successful the cause which thou hast entrusted to our care in uprightness of heart, in the priestly demeanor of those who love the truth and are willing to serve thee in the light thereof.

Grant unto us that thy love shall continue with us, thy Spirit guiding and controlling our thoughts and our deeds and helping us to live before thee and our fellow-men as to show that we indeed have been with our Master and have learned of him.

Unto thee do we commend our cause, and ourselves, in Jesus' name, Amen.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

PEORIA, ILLINOIS, March 21.—Without the last rites of the church and with only four mourners surrounding the grave, the body of Mrs. Anna Davies, who died a pauper in the deaconess home in Lincoln, Illinois, Thursday, was buried here at twilight to-night. Mrs. Davies was the only surviving daughter of former Governor Thomas Ford, of Illinois, who likewise died in poverty.

The spectre of poverty which has beset the family for a half century also found a victim in Mrs. Davies' only daughter, Mrs. Watson, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, who for weeks before her mother's death sought funds with which to purchase a coffin. Up to the time of Mrs. Davies' death she had been unsuccessful, but following the demise citizens contributed enough to make possible the obsequies which took place to-night.—Saint Joseph Gazette, March 23, 1910.

We learn by letter from Elder C. C. Joehnk that he has been expelled from Germany. The action of the German Government in this matter is the result of confusing our people with the Utah people. It is to be hoped that the matter may be speedily adjusted so that Brother Joehnk may return to Germany and engage in his missionary work. He expresses his intention to labor for a time in Switzerland.

April 16 Judge Brumback, of Kansas City, granted a-pro forma decree of incorporation to the United Order of Enoch. It is our intention in the near future to publish the articles of association as revised to meet the demands of the court.

Articles are in course of preparation in reply to tracts issued by the Utah people and scattered broadcast among our church members. These articles after appearing in the HERALD will be put into tract form and will be at the disposal of those who wish to meet the Utah people. We have nothing to fear from a comparison of views. Their campaign of misrepresentation can only result in good to us. Our first article in reply will probably be one in answer to their tract entitled, "Corner stones of the Reorganization."

At the April conference of the dominant church in Utah, John Henry Smith was chosen as second counselor in the Presidency to succeed John R. Winder, deceased. Joseph F. Smith, jr., was placed in the Quorum of Twelve to fill the vacancy thus occasioned.

Saints are requested to notice the following from Columbus, Ohio, April 18, 1910: "Publishers Herald: On April 16, 1910, a man giving his name as Robert Carroll, from New York Branch, a practical leather tanner, very familiar with the church work, and knowing several of the traveling ministry, U. W. Greene, R. C. Evans, and others, came here and gained my confidence by using the names of the church and its members. He is a man about thirty-five years of age, dark complexioned, brown eyes, dark hair, weight about one hundred and eighty-five or two hundred pounds, wore a dark suit, oxblood shoes, clean shaven and a very smooth talker. I think it would be wise to warn the brethren of the church through the church paper of this rascal. Very truly yours, A. Sherman, 2620 North High street."

"Three or four years ago there was a receipt published in the HERALD called, 'Sure cure for cancer.' I cut it out so as to be sure that it would not get lost, but now I have occasion to use it and I fail to find it. If any of the Saints have it will they please be so kind as to send it to me or publish it again in the HERALD? My address is M. C. Hannah, Los Angeles, California, R. F. D. No. 6, Box 77.

Sr. Addie V. Hoxie, Brockton, Massachusetts, desires the prayers of the Saints that she may be healed and thus be enabled to attend meetings of which she has been deprived for six months. She has had a long siege of sickness and is still confined to the house.

Another brother, James O. Coshow, Lloyd, New Mexico, writes us as follows: "I wish to say through your columns that I am at home now after an absence of five months, and will be pleased to have any elders come and preach for us whenever they can."

The following request for prayer has been received: "Will the prayer unions and Saints in general kindly remember in their supplications the case of a respected brother and sister whose little infant is a sufferer from deformed feet. Friends have advised hospital treatment, but I have been led to lay the matter before the Saints instead, in the humble hope that the Lord will graciously hear his children's prayers and will heal this little child."

MONDAY, APRIL 18.

F. G. Pitt and Arthur Leverton were in charge of the morning prayer service. Preaching at eleven by Richard Baldwin, assisted by F. J. Ebeling.

President Joseph Smith called the meeting to order at 2 p. m. Song No. 148 was used in opening and prayer was offered by R. C. Russell. Minutes were read and approved.

F. M. Smith took the chair by request.

The Ladies' committee reported nineteen hundred dollars raised on Graceland endowment fund.

A. E. Stone expressed his willingness to accept ordination as seventy, and it was so ordered by the conference.

Committee on Quorum Organization reported progress and asked for more time. This was granted.

F. A. Russell resigning as member of Auditing Committee, G. W. Eastwood was chosen to fill the vacancy.

The Quorum of High Priests recommended the ordination of F. J. Ebeling and W. H. Deam as high priests. The recommendation was approved.

H. C. Smith was chosen member of the Library Commission.

The Presidency reported that they had directed that section 22 of the Doctrine and Covenants be corrected according to the version in the Inspired Translation, which is according to the original manuscript. This matter had been referred to the Presidency at the General Conference of 1909.

The Presidency, Twelve, and Board of Publication reported in regard to matter referred to them at last conference. In their judgment it was not advisable to reverse the Book of Covenants. Clerical and typographical errors would be corrected under the supervision of the Presidency, Board of Publication, and Historian. This was approved by the conference.

The Joint Council reported that they did not feel it practicable to advise a change of editors for the Gospel Standard; and this report was also approved.

The Joint Council also reported that owing to certain restrictions in the offer of the Religio of funds for publication of the Book of Mormon, thereby placing Religio authorities over the general church authorities, the document was returned to the Religio society with disapproval. A minority report was presented, but the majority report was adopted.

Roderick May presented his concordance to the Doctrine and Covenants, and offered it to the church. It was referred to the First Presidency, to be passed on by them, and referred to the Board of Publication if in their judgment it should be published.

A report from Children's Home Committee was read and approved.

The quorums and departments of the church were then approved.

The Presidency were authorized to fill vacancies in the High Council.

President Joseph Smith addressed the conference. (This appears in our editorial columns.)

Appointments of the Presidency, Presidency and Twelve, and the Twelve were then read and approved. (Published in last week's issue.)

Hymn No. 134 was sung, President Joseph Smith pronounced the benediction, and the General Conference of 1910 adjourned.

On Monday evening an ordination meeting was held, the Quorum of Twelve in charge, when the following were ordained: F. J. Ebeling, high priest, by U. W. Greene and F. A. Smith; Charles Fry, second counselor to president of High Priests' Quorum, by F. A. Smith and U. W. Greene; W. H. Deam, high priest, by I. N. White and J. F. Curtis; J. A. Tanner, president of Quorum of High Priests, by J. F. Curtis and I. N. White; V. M. Goodrich, first counselor to president of the Quorum of High Priests, by U. W. Greene and F. A. Smith.

THE REORGANIZATION.

(Reported by Leon A. Gould.)

I am glad to-night again to meet so many here, and I am especially glad to occupy the position that I do in speaking affirmatively in regard to the work in which we are engaged. I like the affirmation better than I do the negation.

This situation confronts us. The work we call, all of us, the latter day work, is a work in which we have risked our all, not only our all in this life, sacrificing the prospects and the possibilities, many of us, of things of this world, but we have risked our condition in eternity upon it. And I presume that all who claim to believe in this latter day work are satisfied with the investment, and are confident of what the result will be. Yet, it is a serious matter. We can not afford to be wrong where we have risked so much. And when the question is before us for investigation, we can not be too careful in our investigation. Therefore I say that I am thankful to-night for the privilege of presenting to you what is called the Reorganized Church and its claims for recognition upon the part of the Almighty, as well as upon the part of the people.

The church, from the beginning, in 1830, contended against odds; but there were heroic men in those days that stood against the combined efforts of the world and of Satan, to establish this latter day work in the earth. They were wondrously blessed in so doing, and those who stood nearest to the principles of truth that were revealed through the Prophet Joseph Smith fared the best in the end. There were occasionally those who tired of the persecution, and, timid in regard to the things that confronted them, fell by the wayside, but they did not prosper. Those who were faithful to their trust were those who finally overcame. And, by the way, notwithstanding the world was frowning upon the people of God, and their names were cast out as evil, those who stood for the work through all those trying scenes in the end thought more of by the world than those who did not. They were faithful in performing whatever work the Lord required at their hands. There came a time, when they reached the city of Nauvoo—I have not time to go through all their wanderings—when special work was required at their hands, and they were told that that work would be required of them, and that they must accomplish it within a specified time, or they would be under condemnation. The revelation upon this subject I desire to call your attention to, or a paragraph containing the point I have reference to. It is in the one hundred and seventh section of the Doctrine and Covenants I believe. It reads like this:

And again, verily I say unto you, Let all my saints come from afar; and send ye swift messengers, yea, chosen messengers, and say unto them, Come ye, with all your gold, and your silver, and your precious stones, and with all your antiquities; and with all who have knowledge of antiquities, that will come may come, and bring the box tree, and the fir tree, and the pine tree, together with all the precious trees of the earth; and with iron, with copper, and with brass, and with zinc, and with all your precious things of the earth, and build a house to my name, for the Most High to dwell therein; for there is not a place found on earth that he may come and restore again that which was lost unto you, or, which he hath taken away, even the fullness of the priesthood; for a baptismal font there is not upon the earth; that they, my saints, may be baptized for those who are dead; for this ordinance belongeth to my house, and can not be acceptable to me, only in the days of your poverty, wherein ye are not able to build a house unto me. But I command you, all ye my saints, to build a house unto me; and I grant unto you a sufficient time to build a house unto me, and during this time your baptisms shall be acceptable unto me. But, behold, at the end of this appointment, your baptisms for your dead shall not be acceptable unto me; and if you do not these things at the end of the appointment, ye shall be rejected as a church with your dead, saith the Lord your God.

That was a solemn warning that they must go to work, and with all their might, mind, and strength, with their riches, that they should build that house; and the Lord told them, I will give you a sufficient time, and if in that time you do not accomplish that work, you shall be rejected as a church with your dead. It was a serious thing. And had that people sensed it as they should, it seems to me there would have been greater exertion than there was to accomplish the work required at their hands. And you will pardon me if I invite your attention to one particular thing that I think interfered with them. There was not only the church organization there, but there was an organization of the Masonic fraternity in Nauvoo. And many of the church members and the leaders of the church were associated therewith. And right in the time that they should have been building this temple, and were to some extent working upon it; they built a Masonic building, an institution there, quite an expensive one. That expense, it seems to me, if nothing else, at that time, might have been used in performing work which they were called to accomplish. Other things might be mentioned, but I mention this simply as an instance where they failed to go to with their might and do the work the Lord had required at their hands.

That the leaders of the church, at that time, understood that that important work was a critical one, and work that endangered the life of the church, is evident from an epistle that was written less than a year after the revelation was given. The revelation bears the date of January 19, 1841. In an epistle written on the 12th of December, 1841, published in Times and Seasons, volume 3, page 625, and signed by Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Orson Pratt, William Smith, Lyman Wight, Wilford Woodruff, John Taylor, George A. Smith, and Willard Richards, we find this statement:

The building of the Temple of the Lord, in the city of Nauvoo, is occupying the first place in the exertions and prayers of many of the Saints at the present time, knowing as they do, that if this building is not completed, speedily, "we shall be rejected as a church with our dead," for the Lord our God hath spoken it.

Now they understood, in December, 1841, that the church would be rejected if that temple was not completed. Some of the signers of this document recognized the fact later on that they had not done their duty, and that the threatened manifestation of God's displeasure had fallen upon them. Two, at least, of the Twelve have put themselves upon record as being convinced that they had failed. There was in 1845, a letter written and published in the Millennial Star for May, 1846, signed by one James Kay, who did not accept the idea that the church was rejected, and he writes of William Smith, one of the Twelve, in this way:

Doubtless you will have heard of William Smith's apostasy. He is endeavoring to "make a raise" in this city. After he left Nauvoo he went to Galena, when he published a "proclamation" to the church, calling upon them to renounce the Twelve as an unauthorized, tyrannical, abominable, blood-thirsty set of scoundrels.

That is pretty strong language; I hope stronger than was justified.

I suppose you have his pamphlet. I did think to send one the day he landed here, but felt inclined to hear and see his course a little while. Reports are daily coming from east to west of William's unmanly conduct; sorry I was to hear them, they seemed so well authenticated. He contends the church is disorganized, having no head; that the Twelve are not, nor ever were, ordained to be head of the church; that Joseph's priesthood was to be conferred on his posterity to all future generations, and that young Joseph is the only legal successor to the presidency of this church, etc.

The point I want to call your attention to is that William Smith is represented there as having accepted the situation that was threatened in the revelation, and that the church was disorganized. Lyman Wight, another member of the Quorum of the Twelve who signed that epistle warning the church that they would be rejected, in 1851 wrote:

The church mostly went from there [Kirtland, Ohio,] to Missouri, where they commenced another house from which they were driven to the State of Illinois, where we were commanded to build a house or temple to the most high God. We were to have a sufficient time to build that house, during which time our baptisms for our dead should be acceptable in the river. If we did not build within this time we were to be rejected as a church, we and our dead together. Both the temple and baptizing went very leisurely, till the temple was somewhere in building the second story, when Bro. Joseph from the stand announced the alarming declaration that baptism for our dead was no longer acceptable in the river. As much to say the time for building the temple had passed by, and both we and our dead were rejected together. . . . The church now stands rejected together with their dead. The church being rejected now stands alienated from her God in every sense of the word.

There were at least, then, two of the Twelve who had joined with others in warning the people that such a disaster awaited them, if they did not finish the temple and do it quickly; who recognized that that was the condition of things. Later, Joseph Smith, then editor of the Times and Seasons, (later than the epistle of the Twelve, I mean,) in October, 1842, wrote an editorial entitled, "The Temple," which commences with these words: "If there is any subject in which the saints of the Most High are interested more than another, it is the completion of that edifice," etc. In the same article, occurs the following:

The word of the Lord is build my house, and until that command is fulfilled we stand responsible to the great Jehovah for the fulfillment of it, and if not done in due time we may have to share the same fate that we have heretofore done in Missouri.—Times and Seasons, vol. 3, p. 939.

Now, if they shared the same fate that they formerly did in Missouri, the inference is that they did not complete the work in the time. For the plain inference by Joseph Smith is that if you do your work you will not suffer as you did in Missouri, and history will not repeat itself in your being driven from this place. The very fact that they were driven is evidence that they had not completed the work within the given time.

That the temple was never completed, we have abundance of evidence. I will read to you two or three statements from parties who know. First, on June 26, 1897, Pres. Joseph Smith made the statement on this subject, from which we quote the following:

I knew of the work being done on the temple at that place from the time it began until the building was burned in 1848. It was not finished. The basement was fitted for occupation, and the baptismal font was ready for use. The auditorium on the first floor was completed sufficiently to be seated and occupied for assembly purposes. The stairway on the south side was completed for use. The auditorium on the second floor, the stairway on the north side, nor any other portion of the building except as above-mentioned were completed; though the small rooms above the second floor auditorium were used by President Young and the resident church authorities for various purposes.—Church History, vol. 2, p. 563.

There is a statement from a man who was there all the time. He says it was not completed. Therefore, they did not do what the Lord required them to do. Here is another statement made on July 2, 1897, by Patriarch Alexander H. Smith. You know him. If you do not, come forward, and I will introduce you.

The offices in the corner to the left of the main entrance on the ground floor were finished, but not furnished. The auditorium or main meeting room was temporarily finished; the seats and pulpit were only temporary. The upper auditorium; the plastering was not done, the floor was only the rough boards, intended only for the lining, was laid, and from this floor upward the stairs, except in the tower, or circular main stairs, were also temporary; the upper floor which was to have been divided into numerous rooms was laid, and partitioned off with cotton factory cloth, and used for some purposes before the saints were driven away. . . . To my knowledge the temple never was finished, and those who have been led to believe it was, have been deceived. I make this statement freely for the benefit of the present and future generations.—Church History, vol. 2, pp. 564, 565.

Here are two men connected with the Reorganization, in a situation to know, who say that it was not finished. I will give you another, connected with the church in the valley, Pres. Brigham Young. In a sermon delivered in Saint George Temple, January 1, 1877, he says:

Joseph located the site for the Temple Block in Jackson County, Missouri, and pointed out the southeast corner of the temple in the year 1831; also laid the corner stone for a temple in Far West, Caldwell County, Missouri. These temples were not built. We built one in Nauvoo. I could pick out several before me now that were there when it was built, and know just how much was finished and what was done. It is true we left brethren there with instructions to finish it, and they got it nearly completed before it was burned; but the saints did not enjoy it. Now we have a temple which will all be finished in a few days, and of which there is enough completed to commence work therein, which has not been done since the days of Adam, that we have any knowledge of.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 18, p. 304.

Now, he says it was nearly completed. And he says, In a few days this temple at Saint George will be sufficiently done that we may commence work therein which has not been done since the days of Adam that we have any knowledge of. Then the temple at Nauvoo was not sufficiently completed to do work therein, if Brigham Young is good authority, for he said that had not been done since the days of Adam, that he had any knowledge of.

This seems like a very strict requirement upon the part of the Almighty. But it was not peculiar to the temple of Nauvoo. I do not know whether you ever noticed that or not, but according to testimony which we are going to give you, the same restriction was placed upon the people at Kirtland. And they were given a specified time, with the understanding that if they did not build that temple within the specified time, the salvation of the church depended upon it. Did you ever notice that? I am going to give you the testimony of Heber C. Kimball upon that. In The Life of Heber C. Kimball, by Orson F. Whitney, published by the Kimball family, at Salt Lake City, Utah, and printed at the Juvenile Instructor office, I find this statement, quoted from Elder Kimball, page 81. He gives an account of their working upon the temple. While Zion's Camp went to Missouri, and Sidney Rigdon was left in charge, he tells of their efforts there, of the privations and sufferings they endured in the erecting of Kirtland Temple, and when they came back how they all went to work with all their might. Joseph Smith, as foreman in the rock quarry, he said put on tow pantaloons and tow frock, and President, high priests, and elders did likewise, and with all their mights they went to work to finish that temple, and the church was saved. I will give you his words:

Elder Rigdon, when addressing the brethren upon the importance of building this house, spake to this effect: That we should use every effort to accomplish this building by the time appointed; if we did the Lord would accept it at our hands; and on it depends the salvation of the church, and also of the world.

They were told, too, that they must finish that temple within a specified time. If they did it would be accepted, and if they did not then the salvation of the church and the world depended upon it. That is the same thing that was required at Nauvoo. The only difference was that they completed the Kirtland Temple, but they did not complete the Nauvoo Temple. The result was different, because the work accomplished was different; but the same restriction was placed in one case as in the other, if Brother Kimball was right.

It being an established fact that there was a rejection of the church, that they were no longer recognized of God as an organization—mind you now to keep the distinction: I do not claim that every individual was rejected of God. No, far from it. I do not claim that the authority that individuals held was taken from them. But the organization, as such, was rejected. The Lord said he would reject the church if they did not complete the temple in a given time, and they did not. They have not to this day. So if the church ever existed again, a reorganization was necessary, and all factions of the church have admitted it. There is not an exception anywhere but what have gone to work to reorganize the church, at one time or another. Just what was demanded, no doubt, by the circumstances of the case.

Parley P. Pratt was the first man that spoke of the reorganizing of the church, and that was immediately after the death of the Prophet Joseph and Patriarch Hyrum Smith. He was coming home after hearing of that sad event, as it was his duty to do. And he tells us that as he was passing over the prairies, sad and lonely, his heart was lifted to God, and that he prayed. I will give you his own words so there may be no mistake about it. He said—and he was one of the signers of that letter that warned them of this condition—and he says, while “weighed down as it were unto death,” he cried unto the Lord for direction, asking these two questions:

Shall I tell them to fly to the wilderness and deserts? Or, shall I tell them to stay at home and take care of themselves, and continue to build the temple?

He wanted to know of the Lord what he should tell the people when he got into Nauvoo. “Shall I tell them to fly to the wilderness and deserts? Or, shall I tell them to stay at home and take care of themselves, and continue to build the temple?"

The answer, he says, came to him by the voice of inspiration, as follows:

Lift up your head and rejoice; for behold! it is well with my servants Joseph and Hyrum. My servant Joseph still holds the keys of my kingdom in this dispensation, and he shall stand in due time on the earth, in the flesh, and fulfill that to which he is appointed. Go and say unto my people in Nauvoo, that they shall continue to pursue their daily duties and take care of themselves, and make no movement in church government to reorganize or alter anything until the return of the remainder of the Quorum of the Twelve. But exhort them that they continue to build the House of the Lord which I have commanded them to build in Nauvoo.—Autobiography of Parley P. Pratt, p. 371.

He asked the question, Shall I tell them to fly into the desert, into the wilderness, or shall I tell them to stay in Nauvoo? The answer, if he can be credited was, Stay there; not flee into the deserts. Stay there and continue to build the temple at Nauvoo. He recognizes in that the necessity for a reorganization, which carries with it a recognition of a disorganization! for without a disorganization a reorganization would not have been necessary.

The people were at sea, as you might suppose, how to reorganize. What to do was the question they were trying to determine, no doubt. It was a time that tried men's souls. I do not wonder that some fainted by the way and thought that all was lost. I do not wonder that mistakes were made. I can see how it would be possible, in that condition, with a disorganized church, rejected of God, and in a condition that they must take some steps to get back into his favor, that there would be a great many differences of opinion. I do not wonder that they broke up into factions, and scattered here and there. They were, you may say, honestly striving to solve the problem and do the work that would be acceptable in the sight of God the Almighty.

There was one point, however, that was revealed in the revelations prior to that time that ought to have served, and did serve with some, to be a point around which they could rally, where they could have an idea what their duty was in the premises. The Lord had, by revelation prior to that time, pointed out who the successor of Joseph Smith should be. There might be differences of opinion in regard to other things, but there ought not to have been difference of opinion in regard to that. For I read here in Doctrine and Covenants 107: 18, what the Lord said in regard to the matter. And in giving instruction in regard to building the Nauvoo House, which by the way was never completed, there the Lord said:

I say unto you, as pertaining to my boarding house, which I have commanded you to build, for the boarding of strangers,

This was given in 1841, the same time as that which I read before.

Let it be built unto my name, and let my name be named upon it, and let my servant Joseph and his house have place therein, from generation to generation; for this anointing have I put upon his head, that his blessing shall also be put upon the head of his posterity after him; and as I said unto Abraham, concerning the kindreds of the earth, even so I say unto my servant Joseph, In thee, and in thy seed, shall the kindred of the earth be blessed. Therefore, let my servant Joseph, and his seed after him, have place in that house, from generation to generation, for ever and ever, saith the Lord, and let the name of that house be called the Nauvoo House; and let it be a delightful habitation for man, and a resting place for the weary traveler, that he may contemplate the glory of Zion, and the glory of this the corner stone thereof; that he may receive also the council from those whom I have set to be as plants of renown, and as watchmen upon her walls.

You will notice there that the Lord declares that the blessing of Joseph should be upon his seed after him, and that that house was to be a place where they should have the privilege of remaining from generation to generation—and why? That it might be a place for the weary traveler to rest while he was investigating the glory of Zion, and the glory of this the corner stone, that they might learn from those "whom I have set to be plants of renown, and as watchmen upon her walls." That is why the posterity of Joseph was to be in that house. The weary traveler came there to be instructed, and he was to be given this instruction by those who were set as plants of renown, and as watchmen upon her walls. Then his posterity was to have the blessing of Joseph Smith placed upon them. The revelation says further, it shall be upon Joseph, and "upon the head of his posterity after him."

The blessing of Joseph—there ought to be no quibbling in regard to it. The blessing bestowed upon him was that he was made the prophet, seer, and revelator of the church, and to be president of the Melchisedec priesthood, presiding over the church; and his blessing was to be upon the head of his posterity after him, and they were to have place in that house, where people could come to learn of Zion, that they might hear of those who were plants of renown, and watchmen upon the walls of Zion.

There is no escape from that, and yet we have still further evidence upon this subject, for we are told that Joseph was to appoint his successor. Turn to the forty-third section of the Doctrine and Covenants, and second paragraph, and there you will read where the declaration is made emphatically that Joseph was to have the privilege of appointment:

Verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him,

He is before speaking of Joseph and his gift—for if it be taken from him he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead; and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations, or commandments; and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived, that you may know they are not of me. For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me, shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed.

There was a safeguard. There the Lord told them that Joseph was to appoint his successor, and he says, I give you this that you may not be deceived, and that you shall not receive the teachings of any of those who shall come to you as revelators, as commandments, except it be the one so appointed, according to the law of God. They had before them this statement, and had any other claiming to be the president of the church, the prophet, seer, and revelator, come to them with revelations and commandments, they would have known they were not of God, for they had been warned that unless the party was appointed by Joseph Smith, who had the power to appoint, that they were not of God, and they were not to hear them.

And here is another point I want to call your attention to in this revelation in passing, and that is that the successor of Joseph Smith was to teach what? He was "to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed." Now that successor was to come and teach the revelations that Joseph had received, and would thereafter receive, and I submit to you if anything came contrary to the revelations that Joseph Smith had received, that his successor could not teach both. Therefore the man that was the successor must be himself in a place that he could teach the revelations that God had given to Joseph, and in the future would give to him. If they conflicted it would be impossible for him to do both. He could not abandon those which had gone before, for he was to teach them, as well as those that were to follow.

And there is further evidence that Joseph Smith did set apart his son to be his successor, that he had blessed him and conferred upon him this appointment, that when he should depart, Joseph Smith, the son of the Prophet, was to succeed him. Let me call your attention to just a few of the many references; for I have not time to-night to follow in detail all the evidence there is upon this subject. I quote from the private journal of Lyman Wight. Under head of Sunday, December 8, 1850, he says:

Bore testimony that Joseph Smith appointed those of his own posterity to be his successor.

And in July, 1855, from Medina River, Texas, he wrote a letter to the Northern Islander, a Strangite paper published in Beaver Island. He says:

Now Mr. Editor, if you had been present when Joseph called on me shortly after we came out of jail, [Liberty jail, Missouri.—Ed.] to lay hands with him on the head of a youth, and heard him cry aloud, "You are my successor when I depart," and heard the blessings poured on his head,—I say had you heard all this, and seen the tears streaming from his eyes you would not have been led by blind fanaticism, or a zeal without knowledge.

That was taken from his private journal which was in my possession for several years, and I read it time after time. There he testifies that he laid his hand with Joseph upon the head of a youth, and that to that youth Joseph Smith said, "You are my successor when I depart." Who was that youth? When we first quoted this statement, it was objected to by certain parties, saying it was not definite enough. It did not say who it was. But I will make it a little more definite. For in 1851, to quote directly from the original manuscript written by Lyman Wight, he is telling what ought to have been done at the death of Joseph Smith, and he says:

The fifties assembled should have called on all the authorities of the church down to the lay-members from all the face of the earth, as much as was convenient, and after having taken sweet counsel together, in prayer and supplication before God, acknowledged our sins and transgressions which had caused our head to be taken from our midst; and then have called on young Joseph, and held him up before the congregation of Israel to take his father's place in the flesh.

Now he tells who it was. They should have called upon young Joseph, and held him up, he says. Testifies that he was present when the blessing was given him shortly after coming out of Liberty jail, Missouri. He also testified that such a blessing was bestowed upon him in Liberty jail, which I will not take time to follow out in all its details, but I will quote in connection with this the testimony of Joseph Smith himself in regard to the matter, found in the HERALD for October, 1868, and he says:

In Liberty jail the promise and blessing of a life of usefulness to the cause of truth was pronounced upon our head, by lips tainted by dungeon damps, and by the Spirit confirmed through attesting witnesses. This blessing has by some been called an ordination, from the usual predilection to confound names and terms. The blessing which marked Moses as the deliverer from Egyptian bondage, was not that which Jethro pronounced upon his head. Subsequent to our baptism in 1843, upon two occasions was the same blessing confirmed by Joseph Smith, once in the council room in the brick store on the banks of the Mississippi, of which we have no doubt there are witnesses who would confirm the present testimony; once, in the last interview Joseph Smith held with his family before he left Nauvoo to his death. A public attestation of the same blessing was made from the stand in the grove in Nauvoo, some time prior to the murder in Carthage.

Without stopping to read, as I can not quote largely in the time to-night, I will say that the statement of Joseph Smith was confirmed by James Whitehead, whom you knew, that he was present, and saw this blessing bestowed upon him. It is confirmed by a gentleman by the name of Carter, living near Provo, Utah. It was testified by him in the investigation of the Temple Lot case, that he was present at that grove meeting, and heard Joseph say, pointing to his son, "This is my successor when I die." There is testimony that he set apart Young Joseph as his successor.

Now, who should the Lord reveal himself to in this connection, when the time came for reorganization, but the man who had been designated as the man that was to succeed Joseph as the prophet, seer, and revelator to the church? Joseph says in his autobiography, published as an appendix to the Tullidge History here, that in 1859, when seriously considering whether he should take any part in the work of the church or not, his father's work, and remembering that another before him, referring no doubt to his father, had, when lacking wisdom, appealed to God, he appealed to God, as his father had, and asked him for direction, and in answer to that prayer, in answer to his supplication, as the father was answered so the son was answered, and he says that the answer was in the following language. I will not quote it all, but I quote a vital point in the matter. He said the answer to him by the voice of the Spirit was:

The Saints reorganizing at Zarahemla and other places, is the only organized portion of the church accepted by me. I have given them my Spirit, and will continue to do so while they remain humble and faithful.

There was the voice of God to the appointed successor, that the only part of the church accepted of him was that portion of the church. The only organized portion was those who were reorganized at Zarahemla and other places in Wisconsin. There had been a movement some years before that, and they had reorganized. And when he was directed to those people, he found they too had been moved upon, and they were prepared for the messenger when he came, sent of God, to take his father's place. For as early as 1851, if I remember correctly, a revelation—yes, November, 1851, a revelation had been received by one Jason W. Briggs, and in that revelation the Lord said to him:

In mine own due time will I call upon the seed of Joseph Smith, and will bring one forth, and he shall be mighty and strong, and he shall preside over the high priesthood of my church, etc.—The Messenger, vol. 2, p. 1.

Here now is harmony between the revelation given to the appointed successor himself, and the revelation given to the people to whom he was directed to go, and whom the Lord acknowledged as being the only organized body accepted of him. Further on, Zenos H. Gurley, sr., in 1852, claims that he had a manifestation in which the following language was given to him:

The successor of Joseph Smith is Joseph Smith, the son of Joseph Smith, the prophet; it is his right by lineage, saith the Lord your God.—The Messenger, p. 9.

So here the Lord is communing with the people to whom the messenger is to be sent, and with the messenger, and their testimony agrees. And that body there in Wisconsin, striving to get back into favor with God, passed this resolution in harmony with these revelations, and in harmony with the appointment given before time of God, in June, 1852:

Resolved, That the successor of Joseph Smith, junior, as the Presiding High Priest in the Melchisedec priesthood, must of necessity be of the seed of Joseph Smith, junior, in fulfillment of the law and promises of God.—The Messenger, vol. 2, p. 9.

Thus you see the Lord was working together with these believers, bringing them together to reorganize the church. Why he chose this people might be made to appear, but it does not make any difference to us why he did. It is sufficient for us to know that he did.

The passion for social equality has always been less strong among the Teutonic than among the Celtic and so-called Latin peoples, as, indeed, all movements take among the former a less acute form. Everywhere, however, even in France and in the United States, this passion seems less strenuous than it was formerly. The complete equality of civil rights, and the almost complete equality of political rights, which have been attained in nearly all civilized countries, have diminished the zeal to achieve it; for men now perceive that those kinds of equality may exist without it, and that their attainment does not necessarily bring it much nearer. There is, indeed, no necessary connection between freedom and equality, according to the lines of Milton:

"... If not equal all, yet free, equally free, for orders and degrees jar not with liberty, but well consist."

With the other members of the famous trio there is close relation. Social equality would be a long step, though only a step, toward fraternity, and fraternity would in its fullness almost imply social equality. But the longing for fraternity has also declined. It has never really emerged—and indeed could not, except through the influence of religion, hope to emerge—from the field of aspiration into that of reality. Of late years it is seldom named, except in religious addresses. The strife of rich and poor, and the effort to bring men to a level in respect of material conditions, together with those animosities of race which have so largely taken the place of animosities of creed, have discouraged it. Something may also be due to the more frequent contact of civilized men with savage and other backward peoples, especially those of a different color: The European settler feels no sense of "solidarity" with the Chinese or the Hindu or the Malay, still less with the Kafir. Even in the United States the enslaved negro appealed to sentiment as "a man and a brother" more than the liberated negro seems now to appeal.

On a review of the whole matter, it would appear that, while the principle of social equality does point to the extinction of all artificial and legal distinctions of rank, already accomplished in the United States, and does prescribe the same courtesy and consideration toward all persons alike, it can not venture to ignore differences which spring from diversities of knowledge, culture, and taste; for these, too, are natural, and operate outside the sphere of law or social custom. Neither has it been able to overcome the differences for which wealth, as affecting men's habits of life, is answerable. The apostles of equality may, however, reply that inequalities of wealth are themselves artificial, and ought to be got rid of. And this brings us to the last kind of equality we have to consider—that of economic conditions.

The desire to establish an equality of property has become so strong in modern times that before we examine the desirability or the attainability of the state of things aimed at, a few words ought to be said on the sources whence the desire springs.

Although, as we shall presently note, history does not record economic equality as having ever in fact existed, still it is deemed to be the natural state of man. Since all men come equal into the world, their chances of well-being ought, so it is argued, to be equal, and therefore those external goods which contribute to well-being should be allotted to all in equal measure. If it is observed that Nature distributes her gifts unequally even at birth, because one man is born with a healthy, another with a weak or diseased, body, one man has a cheerful, another a querulous, spirit, the reply is that this fact makes it all the more fitting that every means should be used to rectify the injustice of chance by securing equality in one sphere, at least—that of material conditions.

There is also the presumption in favor of equality generally drawn from the admitted benefits of civil and political equality. Contrasting the society of our own times with the society of two or three centuries ago, nothing seems to show a more palpable advance than does the elevation of the ordinary private citizen to the level formerly held only by the few privileged persons. May not a like progress in the well-being of humanity be expected from the further application of this wholesome principle?

The desire for material well-being is all the stronger because the general demoralization of society, the greater publicity of life, the attainment of immense wealth by men sprung from the lower ranks, have stimulated the appetite of those humbler classes whose ancestors contentedly acquiesced in an inequality of conditions as part of the order of nature. And as the other world is less in men's thoughts than it was some centuries ago, they have become more eager to make the best of this world.

Perhaps, however, the strongest influence in bringing this question to the front has been the complete attainment by the masses, in most civilized countries, of political power. Their fathers strove for it in the belief that it would immensely improve their condition. Now that they have got it, the old inequalities of wealth remain; and though the poor of to-day are in most countries better off than were the poor of a century ago, those inequalities are full as palpable. "Of what use, then"—thus do many feel and say,—"has it been to conquer political power, if we are not by means of it to better our own condition?"

These ideas, which are not confined to the poor, but are reinforced by the sympathy of imaginative and benevolent minds among the wealthier class, have now much force at their command. They meet us everywhere. They raise in many forms what is the main question that occupies the thoughts of thinking men. And they have behind them—do not let us, whatever error or confusion may be found to lurk in them, forget this fact—they have behind them the notion that they are suggested by nature, by justice, and by the largest conception of the common good of mankind.

When, however, we come to criticise these ideas and the source assigned to them, the following observations occur.

First of all, be it noted that there never has been in the world such a state of natural equality as many have dreamed of. Even in the stone age, one savage had more flint hatchets or a bigger deerskin than the other tribesmen. As soon as a race begins to have any sort of organization,—as soon, for instance, as it reaches the stage in which the Romans found the Britons of antiquity, or in which our settlers have found the North American Indians and the Kafirs,—inequalities of property are conspicuous.

Secondly, it is not law that creates inequality of property. It is, in the first instance, strength, physical or intellectual; that is to say, inequality is due to natural, not to artificial, causes. When law appears, it does no more than recognize and protect the inequality which it finds subsisting; and if we can imagine law withdrawn, inequality would be greater than it is now, because the weaker would have no security for what they possess, since force, whether of body or of craft and will, would dominate. If equality of goods is ever to be established, it will have to be established by law, either by forbidding the appropriation of any articles, i. e., by destroying the conception of private property, and giving each man the protection of the state in taking a part of whatever his neighbor has, or else by continually restoring through legal action an equilibrium of goods which naturally causes are perpetually disturbing. This will be the hardest task the law has ever undertaken, because law will have to steer straight in the teeth of the strongest blast of nature. If ten men were to be started, on Monday morning, with equal property, and left to themselves for six days, no two would be found to have equal property on Saturday night, because in no two would the faculty of acquiring and the habit of spending be the same.

Thirdly, where the enforcement of law is perfect, that is to say, where the action of courts, and of the authority which carries out their decisions, is certain, the qualities which tend to produce inequality of property are different from those which produced it in rude and disorderly times. In those times physical strength and physical courage were the most important factors. In perfectly settled societies intelligence and the habit of saving most tell. Will evidently tells in all states of society, and will is one of the qualities in which men most differ from one another. Of course it is not necessarily the highest forms of intelligence that most subserv the acquisition of property. No poet before Tennyson ever made a fortune by his gift. No philosopher has ever yet grown rich by philosophy. Only in very recent times have a few great inventors been able to reap the harvest of their intellectual labors. It is by the power of devising schemes and conducting large commercial or financial operations that the largest masses of property are accumulated in one hand, and the type of capacity that leads to wealth is to be found in such a man as the late Mr. Jay Gould. This has caused a certain prejudice against the working of laws which permit a capacity not necessarily beneficial, and possibly harmful, to mankind to achieve conspicuous success. But no one has shown how this capacity can be held in check without overthrowing the entire legal basis on which modern communities rest.

When we scrutinize the grounds of the desire for equality, a fourth observation presents itself. Inequality of property is not an evil per se. It is not in itself harmful to A—that is, it is no diminution of his happiness—that B should have more grain or more cattle or more money than he has himself. A may have other things which are better than B's property, even as the psalmist says: "I had more joy than they when their corn and their oil were increased." M may have stronger health, or a better wife or children, a greater faculty of intellectual enjoyment, than P has,—things which have more to do with happiness than has any amount of property,—and M's possession of these advantages does not diminish P's happiness or increase his wretchedness, for they depend on what P himself has or lacks. So if I have $1,000, I am none the worse off because you have $10,000. It is not your excess that affects my well-being, but my own sufficient or insufficient provision. That which is desirable is to have enough, not as much as another man has or needs, but as much as I myself need. But what is enough? It is a variable conception; it is, in point of quantity, no more the same for every man than is a man's stature or his appetite. It depends for each upon his physical and intellectual needs and tastes, and the wise man is he who regulates his conception of it by his own needs and tastes, and not by those of his neighbors, which may sometimes enlighten, but are just as likely to mislead, his own judgment. Many persons who perceive that M has less than enough and P more than enough, jump to the conclusion that the proper way to rectify the mischief is to take from P his superfluity and bestow it upon M. But though this is a very common confusion of ideas, it is, none the less a confusion. It may be bad for a man to have too much. It is certainly bad for him to have too little. But the evil lies not in the inequality of possessions, but in the excess or defect; and the only sense in which poor M suffers from witnessing P's wealth is that the spectacle accentuates by contrast the evils of his own condition. Just in the same way P, who is stiff with rheumatism and has been forsaken by his wife, may envy the robust health and happy home of M.

Here, therefore, we note a capital difference between inequality of economic conditions and inequality of civil rights or of political rights. In the two last named cases, one man's gain is another man's loss. If X has a wider compass of civil rights than Y, Y necessarily suffers, because the law enables X to prevail against him when a dispute arises. In Turkey, for instance, a Mussulman may with practical impunity kill a Christian rajah, but a Christian rajah can not with impunity kill a Mussulman. So if X (a class of persons) enjoy suffrage, and Y (another class) do not, it usually happens that the legislation which class X enacts is calculated to benefit the privileged and to depress the excluded class. As one of the scales rises, so the other sinks. With property it is otherwise. Except in one class of cases, P's abundance does not come from M's deficiency, and P's share might be reduced without increasing M's. That one class of cases is where the thing of which men hold unequal amounts is itself limited in quantity. If P draws off two thirds of the water of a stream to irrigate his meadow, he leaves only one third to be used by M, and the only way to give M an equal share is to deprive P of the one sixth which represents his excess. The great instance of this sort of thing is of course land, and the contents of land; and accordingly the observation just made can not be applied to land in any country where it has become scarce.

It may be said that in any given industrial undertaking, such as a factory, the profits are limited, and therefore the more P gets, so much the less is there for C, D, and E. It would lead us too far afield to enter this field of controversy, and in particular to discuss the nature of capital. But it deserves to be noted that in most industrial undertakings the contributions of the different co-workers differ in value. P may bring scientific genius, C may bring commercial experience, D may bring consummate manual skill, while E, F, G, and H have only physical strength to contribute; and of the whole profits of the undertaking, three fourths may be traceable to P's inventive genius, which a reward of one seventh of the profits would not be sufficient to secure.

Are there then no real objections to inequality of economic conditions? Certainly there are; but they are objections grounded not on abstract considerations of nature and justice, but upon the results which inequality has been found in practice to produce. Neither are they objections to inequality per se, but only to its extreme forms, where accumulations of property in a few hands are huge and conspicuous. Such accumulations create a highly luxurious class, many of whose members remain idle and useless all their lives, while others form habits and try to follow a style of living unsuited to their means. The holders of vast fortunes acquire undue power, they have undue influence with rulers, they may corrupt legislators, they may pervert the power of a state to serve their selfish ends. Their wealth, if ostentatiously displayed or squandered upon unworthy objects, excites envy, breeds discontent, and may furnish incitements to the spirit of plunder. There have no doubt been states in which great inequalities of fortune existed, but which were nevertheless comparatively stable and well governed. In such states, however, the inequalities of fortune corresponded to inequalities in political power and social influence. Very different is the condition of some of our modern states, wherein fortunes still more disproportionately huge are disjoined from any power and any respect save that which mere wealth may command. There is therefore a prima facie case, grounded nowise on abstract principles, but on observation and experience, not indeed for a compulsory equalization, but for a reduction of extreme inequalities, of wealth. How can such a reduction be effected? The problem is a difficult one, for you interfere with nature, and there is always a presumption that when you begin to interfere with nature you will get into trouble. Moreover, you may injure the man who has too little, whom you wish to benefit, as much as, or more than, the man who has far too much. Indeed the latter, though the defenders of the present system are chiefly concerned on his behalf, is less likely to suffer, for the luxury bred by excessive wealth is a bad thing for him, since it increases his temptations. The main difficulties are ethical, and I state them rather than the economic difficulties, because the latter would require a more elaborate examination. If by legislation you take property away from the rich man, the property he has earned or inherited, you shock confidence, and you weaken the motives for thrift and foresight which operate on the mind of the rich. If by legislation you give property to the poorer man, you weaken the natural incentive to exertion which the need of providing for himself creates. It is no doubt said that before long a new set of ethical views and habits will arise which will supply the place of those thus set aside. This is a question too large to discuss here, and it is, of course, a highly speculative one, outside the range of such experience as mankind has so far enjoyed.

Attempts have been made to deal with the problem, but rather in the form of efforts to reduce inordinately large fortunes, than in that of giving help to extremely small ones, seeing that during many centuries both humanity and political expediency have suggested the necessity for aiding those who have least. Many ways of solving it have been tried—ways which are not alternatives, for several may be applied together. There is the Christian solution, that those who have should freely give to those who have not. It is a method which has often been ill worked, but when wisely worked it is obviously the best. There is the plan of a poor law, whereof the English poor law is a type, which out of taxation secures a minimum of subsistence to the most needy. Nearly all economists have condemned it as unsound in principle and prone to abuse in practice, but it seems to be inevitable in countries like England, unless a scheme of organized private charity, such as Chalmers established in Glasgow some seventy years ago, can be substituted for it. There are various schemes for providing pensions available in sickness and old age. There is the plan of exempting smaller incomes from taxation and throwing it with progressive weight upon the larger ones. The method, however, which most nearly touches our present subject is that which seeks to provide gratuitously out of public funds an equal supply to all citizens of certain things which all may be taken to need. Elementary education has thus been in the United States, and now in Great Britain also, supplied to all; and it has been proposed that gas or electric light, water, the means of locomotion, and many other things, should be similarly supplied at the public expense.

Strong arguments may be used in support of this policy. The things enumerated are already provided, not by each man for himself, but by public bodies or by great private corporations. Most of them are things not likely to be squandered or abused. To supply them would not seriously impair the stimulus to exertion which the need for food and clothing, and other necessities or comforts, secures. The force of these considerations has so far prevailed that many municipalities now do provide public parks and recreation-grounds, public baths, and wash-houses, free public libraries and free music, things which elevate and brighten the life of the poor man, and enlarge his conception of what civilized life ought to be, while they help to make all the citizens feel themselves members of one community. A few municipalities have even provided workingmen's dwellings or public lodging-houses at rents only a little above cost price. The risks incident to such schemes are obvious. There may be extravagance, because the ordinary citizen has but a slender interest in keeping down expenditure. There may be a perversion of public funds to political objects, an attempt to corrupt the people by the lavish use of money, or to reward political adherents by the bestowal of places or contracts. There is the risk of demoralizing the poorest class, as the populace of Rome was demoralized by the free distribution of corn and by the sums squandered on public amusements. And although these risks are less when the experiment is made in a small local area within the state than when it is tried by the state itself, still it is only where the citizens can rely upon the integrity and the competence of their municipal governments that they ought to permit even municipal governments to go far in this direction.

In Glasgow, however, as in several other European cities, the experiment has been tried, with results so encouraging that other European cities are moving in the same direction. A priori doctrines must not be allowed to stand in the way. Politics is an experimental science, and he who tries to show that abstract theory does not justify the attempt to introduce economic equality must also urge that abstract theory ought not to prevent us from doing what can prudently be done to reduce the evils which excessive inequality has been proved to produce, and from trying to guide into safe channels the strong stream of sentiment which condemns such inequality.

Society seems to be now entering a new period, and the altered aspect of this fundamental question of equality illustrates the change. Civil equality is now all but complete in almost every civilized country. Even the colored races (since the extinction of slavery in Brazil a few years ago) now enjoy it. Social equality makes daily progress, even in countries which still tolerate hereditary distinction of rank. Political equality has been fully established in the United States, in Britain and her self-governing colonies, in the nations of western and central Europe. In most of these countries the machinery of government is deemed to need improvement; but the main controversies turn, and are likely in the future more and more to turn, on the use to be made of government for social ends.

The question that now lies before the world is, How shall political equality, for which many generations strove, be now, when it has been achieved, made to bear wholesome fruit? How shall it be used to better the condition of the masses without attempting to override the laws of human nature? These laws are just as sovereign in their sphere as those of the material universe, and the effort to overcome them will be just as futile. But there is one great difference between the two sets of laws. The properties of oxygen and carbon are (so far as we know) always and everywhere the same. But though there are some elements in human nature which remain the same, there are others which change, and are susceptible of improvement by instruction and by experience. The chief interest of politics as an experimental science lies in discovering by what means this improvement can be effected, and how far it may go. The habit of order, the habit of patience, the faith in science, the disposition to listen to reason, are all points in which history records progress; struggles for civil, or for political, or for social equality, have all at one time or another been the source of far more trouble than they cause in our own time; and it is possible that the question of economic equality also may, when its various aspects have been more calmly and carefully discussed, and the method of experiment has been more fully applied to it, prove less menacing to the peace of society than many deem it to-day.—The Century Magazine, July, 1898.

A PHYSICIAN'S VIEWS OF CHRIST'S MIRACLES.

(Doctor Kelley is recognized as being, in his special branch, the foremost physician and surgeon in America. In a personal note to the Editor he says: "My whole attitude toward the Bible is that of the simple faith of my grandfathers, and any other side that is a critical means of investigation, has never appealed to me in the least." It is interesting to note, among other professional and scientific items in Doctor Kelley's life and work, that he has been honored by honorary or other membership in professional and scientific societies in America, England, Scotland, Ireland, Italy, Germany, France, and Austria.)

What a humdrum, wearisome routine our lives would become if we had no other inspiration than that which we call science! Man would then be but a sort of a machine, set going within a greater machine, destined to drag his way through the dull routine of this mortal existence until the dreadful final struggle sets his tortured molecules free to rest awhile in the bosom of the earth, until they are perchance incorporated in another organism, again to begin the monotonous round of an organic life. But in the midst of this colorless, uninspired life, here are the miracles of Christ and his matchless personality, marvels such as man never dared dream of, more wonderful than all the fairy tales of childhood come true, inspiring hopes of infinite glories laid hold of here on earth and inconceivable glories yet to be revealed.

When John the Baptist, not knowing the interval which would separate Christ's first coming in humiliation to bear our sins from his second coming in glory, was distressed and in doubt because of his imprisonment, and sent to him to ask, "Art thou he that cometh, or look we for another?" he received the one effective answer, far more convincing than a categorical "Yes" or "No."

"Go and tell John the things which ye hear and see:

"The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear and the dead are raised up, and the poor have good tidings preached to them. And blessed is he whosoever shall find no occasion of stumbling in me."

THE MIRACLES WITNESSES TO JESUS' DEITY.

The miracles have ever remained the unassailable witnesses to the deity which he claimed for himself. For this reason it has continued in the past and will continue in the future to be the effort of all who are opposed to his being accepted as the Christ, the Son of the living God, to discredit and break down the authority of the miracles.

Blot out all the miracles, and with them all the precious record of the humility and love and compassion of Christ and the most important lessons as to faith and his power as he walked on earth would be obliterated. We should then have only his words without his works, but no revelation of the new, tender and close relationship between God and man, as was shown by his thus bearing our infirmities and taking our sicknesses upon him.

The miracles of Christ in the Bible are called "signs" because, like finger-posts, they point to some greater fact beyond them, namely, that the Son of God is indeed come down to dwell among men (Immanuel, God with us). They are called "powers" because the power of God is manifested in saving man from bearing the consequences of sin, from demonpossession, from disease and from death; also, because the power of the Creator was present to do with his creatures,—the water made wine, the sea calmed, the walking on the sea, the fish supplying the piece of money,—as he would. They are "prodigies," because all the people said, "we never saw one of this wise before." So strong in character are the miracles that they are the very bulwark of this doctrine that then as now it upholds the miracles.

Some object to miracles as setting aside the immutable laws of nature. That is a valid objection to all man-made miracles, but the objector has forgotten that here we have to do with God, who made all things, "in whom all things consist," and who "upholds all things by the word of his power." Not, I say, the anthropomorphic God imagined by the scientist, but the God of the Christian revealed in the Bible. If I am dealing with God it is futile for me to ask how he acts. He surely can check the sun in its course without disrupting nature as easily as a child can stop a ball without producing a cataclysm.

So many and so wonderful were the miracles that no enemy ever rose up in his life time to contradict them; driven to bay, they tried to explain them blasphemously, saying that Satan was casting out Satan. It is a greater mistake, still, to imagine that the miracles can be detached from their setting in the gospels and considered apart. Do as I have done, take a fine pen and black ink and underline, everything miraculous in the gospels, and then turn the pages over rapidly and see how saturated they are with miracles. Such a little study as the one suggested also strikingly shows this fact, that, as the gospels themselves manifestly have each a different purpose, a different aspect of Christ's life and work to be set before us, so often the same miracles are differently grouped and used as they subserve this main purpose. The Christian discovers that the whole atmosphere of the gospels is that of the miraculous.

Glance for a moment at the use of the miracles in Matthew's gospel; this, as is evidenced in the very first verse, is the gospel of God's promised King sent down to earth in due time to rule. His Magna Charta is found in chapters 5, 6, 7; such a declaration of principles as earth had never heard before, has never heard seriously proposed since, and has never attempted to follow.

In the first miracle in Matthew Christ touched every member of the human race as he put forth his hand and touched the leper, saying, "I will; be thou made clean." Note the significance of the command, "See thou tell no man; but go show thyself to the priest, and offer the gift that Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them." What a sign! A leper cleansed! The King was surely among them, duly presenting himself first to the rulers of the people who ought to have been ready to receive him.

Look again at the book of Mark, the gospel of Christ the servant of God, as announced in chapter 1, verse 1: "The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God." Here we have not the measured service of a hired servant, but the immeasurable, loving service of a son rendered in grace. Here also we plunge in medias res; all is action. There is not a chapter from one to eleven that does not record one or more miracles.

The first miracle here is a type of the world without God, gravitating into a mire of uncleanness; even that which professes to be religion is defiled.

The miracles became touchstones whereby the godliness of those who had before appeared most righteous is laid bare. This is evident in the healing of the man with the withered hand, in the third chapter where the hardness of their hearts is revealed and the religious Pharisees make common cause with the worldly Herodians, that they may compass his destruction. Unclean spirits and devils, self-righteous formalists and godless men, are the forces Jesus had to contend against. (Mark 8:19.)

The last two miracles are strikingly typical. On his way up to Jerusalem Jesus cures the blindness of Bartimæus who cries after him, "Jesus, thou son of David, have mercy on me."

What a picture for the nation, all blind, and among them the Son of God whom they knew not, able and willing to cure their blindness! Then follows the miracle of the fig tree (chapter 11)—leaves, but no fruit, profession only.

Then, as the dignity of the subject demands, Jesus approaches that highest act of fidelity of a son rendering perfect service, faithfulness even unto death. A hush falls over the gospel, and in the succeeding chapters there are no more miracles related, until the great miracle, which thus stands pre-eminent alone—his death and his resurrection.

In John's gospel the word sign is used almost exclusively (seventeen times), as Trench says, as "a token and indication of the near presence and working of God. In this word the ethical end and purpose of the miracle comes out the most prominently, as in 'wonder' the least."

In John's gospel Christ's deity is prominent throughout. We might perhaps deny his deity had we only the gospel of the kingdom (Matthew), the gospel of service (Mark), and the gospel of his humanity (Luke), but never with this gospel in hand, and that is the reason Satan so persistently attacks the authenticity of the fourth gospel.

The miracle of the cure of the impotent man, thirty-eight years in his infirmity, at the Pool of Bethesda on the Sabbath day, brought out the assertion of Jesus' sonship and equality with God, and from this flows the marvelous discourse touching the witnesses to his deity, among which he cites his works.

The miracle in the sixth chapter, the feeding of the five thousand near Passover time in the mountain, plainly told the people that a greater than Moses was among them. The miracle of the loaves and fishes has been taken by Christians as the type of Christ now in heaven and feeding his people day by day with their supersubstantial bread.

The healing of the man born blind teaches the nation that the power of God is with them to heal, and that the humblest may come to him for blessing, for light for the body and for light of the Spirit, while the greatest among them, if they are self sufficient, are lost.

Three times Jesus raised the dead; once the daughter of Jairus who had just died; then the son of the widow of Nain, as he was being carried out to his burial; and lastly Lazarus, dead three days and passed into corruption. This greatest of all signs was done in his own power and name as with a mighty voice he cried, "Lazarus, come forth." It has been well said that if Jesus had not mentioned Lazarus by name, all the graves of the earth would have given up their dead in response to that voice.

The climax of all miracles is Christ's descent into hell, his taking captivity captive, his bursting the chains of death, and his resurrection and ascension. These are the great events toward which all the gospels move with majestic march; without them there can be no gospel. The thrill that is felt at the very outset as Christ emerges from the waters of baptism, anointed by the Spirit, and as he meets our great enemy as he fasts in the wilderness, and as he then moves among men doing all his countless and marvelous miracles, is due to the fact that he is going to a predetermined end to accomplish the mightiest work of time or eternity.

THE GREATEST MIRACLE.

Why have we no miracles to-day? I do not know. I can not even say that there are none, but I believe that if there are, they must be for the individual who turns and thanks his Father for his grace, but makes no public announcement. Satan has been busy with bastard miracles throughout the centuries that have passed, but they do not appeal to the intellect and to the heart as do the real ones in the gospels.

Many of those who believe in these modern, so-called miracles are, I find, wrapped up in their miserable bodies, and their spiritual vision does not seem to get much above their stomachs. The true Christian, when ill, asks God to cure him, and, whether visible means, have or have not been used, he thanks his Father for the result, and is equally sure that it is of his peculiar grace he is permitted to live and to continue to serve him.

I do not surely know demon-possession is still to be found in China and India and Africa, but I am prepared to believe it. I should not be at all surprised if a wiser age would differentiate many of our cases of insanity in this way.

The greatest possible miracle to the Christian is the wonderful change effected in the conversion of a soul from the service of Satan and sin to Christ. The greatest miracle to a heathen is the manifestation of the life of Christ in that of his true follower, by which he too is led to say Abba, Father.

"He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto the Father." Modern missions are the fulfillment of this promise.—Sunday School Times.

REPORTS OF CRIMES.

The numerous reports of tragedies and crimes of various kinds printed in the daily press have given many persons the idea that, generally speaking, crime is increasing alarmingly, and some men and women of more than average strength of character have allowed themselves to become depressed and discouraged in the cause of philanthropic endeavor on account of this supposed fact. And yet the idea is without basis, as proved by the statistics of every organization which has any bearing upon the subject. The world is growing better every day, and particularly so in the organized work for its betterment, which is multiplying by leaps and bounds on every hand. It is true that the prominence given to crime in the yellow newspapers, and to a certain extent in all newspapers, has operated by a process akin to autosuggestion in increasing the tendency to criminal acts among a certain comparatively small class of individuals, but this class is so small and insignificant in comparison with the millions of happy homes filled with strong-minded, honorable men and pure-hearted, virtuous women that it is relatively unimportant. The fact is not that crime is on the increase, but that the facilities for gathering news as to the world's doings have increased so greatly in the past few decades that every morning the daily paper presents an almost complete picture of the happenings of the previous day. The regular press associations have correspondents in every city and hamlet, and these, assisted by the special correspondents, so thoroughly cover the ground that even a tragedy at a dance in the heart of Hungary, or a fresh discovery in the wilds of Africa, is reported at once for the edification of the morning newspaper's readers. This picture is so complete and vivid in its details that not even the loss of a little four-year-old in the heart of a big city is overlooked or missed in the day's summary of world-wide events. Even the reports of the boodling cases in the various large cities of the country are not to be accepted as disheartening or indicative of a growth in callous crime. It means only that these big cities are undergoing an administrative house-cleaning. They are getting rid of their boodlers and municipal criminals, throwing them down and out, as Lucifer was cast down from the battlements of heaven. England underwent such an experience a generation or more ago and from being the most corruptly administered country in the world it has now become probably the cleanest and most honest. It is a rare thing to hear of public corruption in the mother country to-day, and ten years hence that fact will be equally true in America. The time is fast approaching when a municipal boodler will be a public curiosity and crime in public or private form will have so abated that the columns of the daily press will contain much fewer accounts of such occurrences. The world is getting better with steady strides, and perhaps even this publicity which now discourages many weak-hearted persons will have played no unimportant part in helping to clear the records, by showing how generally retribution overtakes the evil doer.—Kansas City Journal.

RODE ON THE FIRST LOCOMOTIVE.

There died the other day in Des Moines, Iowa, Edward Entwhistle, aged 94, who had seen the steam locomotive from the start to its modern perfection, for as an English boy of sixteen he rode with George Stephenson on the trial trip of the "Rocket," the first locomotive ever built. When that epoch-making trip was made from Manchester to Liverpool in 1831, Stephenson's hand was on the throttle and young Entwhistle was the fireman. After the first few trips had been made, Stephenson turned the care of his invention over to his assistant, and Entwhistle made two trips daily over the first railroad for nearly three years. After attaining his majority, Entwistle came to the United States and in 1856 settled in the Iowa city. His first employment in this country was as an engineer on the steamer Troy, running on the Hudson River, and later he removed to Chicago, where he served as engineer on lake steamers for several years. In Des Moines he was in charge of the engines in various large mills. Mr. Entwistle retained until his last illness a clear memory of his trial trip with Stephenson, and the story is thus told in the Des Moines Register and Leader:

"The train of little cars behind the 'Rocket,' as Stephenson's locomotive was called, carried distinguished Englishmen, including the stockholders and promoters on the new railroad company. Crowds cheered the party at Manchester when the train started, and other crowds gathered at the stations on the way to Liverpool, where a monster reception was extended to the train when it arrived. A fatal accident occurred at Grand Junction, about midway between the two cities. Lord Huskinson, one of the stockholders in the railway company, was standing in the second car, bowing to the people at the station, when he fell to the ground and was run over by the third car. His death resulted almost immediately and his body was carried to Liverpool on the train. Despite this fatality, however, the trip was a pronounced success, for it marked the beginning of a new era in the progress of the world."—Home Herald, January 5, 1910.

BLESSINGS OF EDUCATION.

No doubt you have all personally considered—no doubt you have all personally experienced—that of all the blessings which it has pleased Providence to allow us to cultivate, there is not one which breathes a purer fragrance, or bears a heavenlier aspect than education. It is a companion which no misfortune can repress, no clime destroy, no enemy alienate, no despotism enslave; at home a friend, abroad an introduction, in solitude a solace, in society an ornament; chastens vice, it guides virtue, it gives at once a grace and government to genius. Without it what is man? A splendid slave! a reasoning savage, vacillating between the dignity of an intelligence derived from God, and the degradations of passions participated with brutes; and in the accident of their alternate ascendancy, shuddering at the terrors of a hereafter, or embracing the horrid hope of annihilation. What is this wondrous world of his residence?

"A mighty maze, and all without a plan," a dark and desolate and dreary cavern, without wealth, or ornament, or order.

But light up within it the torch of knowledge and how wondrous the transition! The seasons change, the atmosphere breathes, the landscape lives, earth unfolds its fruits, ocean rolls in its magnificence, the heavens display their constellated canopy, and the grand animated spectacle of nature rises revealed before him, its varieties regulated and its mysteries resolved! The phenomena which bewilder, the prejudices which debase, the superstitions which enslave, vanish before education. Like the holy symbol which blazed upon the cloud before the hesitating Constantine, if man follow but its precepts, purely, it will not only lead him to the victories of this world, but open the very portals of omnipotence for his admission. Cast your eye over the monumental map of ancient grandeur, once studded with the stars of empire and the splendors of philosophy. What erected the little state of Athens into a powerful commonwealth, placing in her hands the sceptre of legislation and wreathing round her brow the imperishable chaplet of literary fame? What extended Rome, the haunt of banditti, into universal empire? What animated Sparta with that high, unbending, adamant courage which conquered nature herself, and has fixed her in the sight of future ages, a model of public virtue and a proverb of national independence? What but those wise public institutions which strengthened their minds with early application, informed their infancy with the principles of action, and sent them into the world, too vigilant to be deceived by its calms, and too vigorous to be shaken by its whirlwinds!—Charles Phillips.

I Am With Thee All the Way.

I am with thee on the mountain,
In the valley down below;
I am with thee in the desert,
Ev'rywhere that thou dost go.
And my loving arms outstretching
Gently shield thee day by day;
Tho' the road be long, depressing,
I am with thee all the way.

I am with thee when the sunshine
Brightly gleams along thy road;
I am with thee in the shadow
As thou bend'st beneath thy load,
And my loving arms outstretching
Gently shield thee day by day;
Tho' the road be long, depressing,
I am with thee all the way.

I am with thee when thy footsteps
Lightly trip the path along;
I am with thee when the tear drops
Fill thine eyes and choke thy song;
And my loving arms outstretching
Gently shield thee day by day;
Tho' the road be long, depressing,
I am with thee all the way.

In the light or in the darkness,
Ever near to hear thy call;
When death's shadows close about thee,
I am with thee through it all;
And my loving arms outstretching
Gently shield thee day by day;
Tho' the night be long, depressing,
I am with thee all the way.

ERMINA PERKINS KEARNEY.

CLINTON, MISSOURI, August, 1909.

Her First Convert.

She was young and very enthusiastic, and so, encouraged by the evangelist's kindly interest, she was confiding to him her plans for coming usefulness.

"I shall be a settlement worker," she told him. "I mean to go among the very poor and tell them the story of the Christ. I think perhaps it is meant that I shall work a little differently than most settlement workers do, for I believe it is more important to attend to spiritual matters first than to teach."

It was the following day that Marguerite Mathews began her chosen work, calling first upon an old and decrepit couple in a forlorn attic. She announced her errand bravely. "I have come to read the Bible to you," she said, gently. "I want you to be Christians and the Bible tells how to be."

The man eyed her sharply, shrewdly. "How," he demanded, "how do you know we ain't?"

Startled, the girl could only gasp.

"Well," the man said, after watching her for a moment with something akin to amusement in his faded eyes, "ef it'll do you any good to know, I ain't. She is, though. An' I'm goin' to tell you what made her. We was both sick an' a minister come to see us. I expected he'd do jest as you hev. 'Nd I got ready to say some pretty big words to him soon as he fetched out his Bible. 'Stead o' that, what did he do but shake hands as if we was friends o' his'n, and then says he, 'May I build the fire?' an' out he went an' come back with kindling an' other things, an' before he left we was fixed up comfortable. Nex' day he come agin, an' the next. An' in all the time he kep' comin' he didn't read a word out o' the Book we both knew he took orders from. An' one day my wife—she's par'lyzed now so she can't talk—she said to him, 'Why don't you read the Bible to us?' An' he smiled an' says, says he, 'Be you ready to hev me?' Then he read an' prayed, an'—well, miss, she's be'n a Christian ever sence—an' sometimes I—"

Marguerite Mathews' brown eyes shone with a new light, as she quietly unfastened her long cloak. "I'm so glad I came here first," she said simply, "for this truly is my very first missionary call. You have helped me so much, Mr. Garnet. May I do something to help you? May I not brush your wife's hair while you are thinking of something else you'd like done? And then I hope you'll be ready to tell me that you, too, have decided to be what you say your wife is, what I am trying to be, and what your good friend the minister was."

The old wife laid her hand upon the man's bowed head, while she tried to speak. John Garnet nodded understandingly.

"I said when I found two folks that would help before they preached, I'd think it was real," he said slowly, "an' I've be'n waitin'. Ef the Lord wants me I'm ready to believe in him. The' has be'n lots o' folks here who've read the Bible to us, but you've done what the' ain't another one has done, girl. She's—she's—wanted her hair fixed nice—fore she was sick no one ever kep' their hair nicer 'n she did—but my rheumatiz won't let me do much fancy, an' so she's had to get along with just plain comb'n."

The woman in the bed smiled wistfully and gratefully at the sweet face of her visitor, while the unintelligible voice addressed the old man.

"She says the' ain't no backin' out for me," he said. "No, dear heart, the' ain't. An' I ain't goin' to, neither."—Bertha Burnham Bartlett.

Faith is practical choice. If you stop short of actual choice, you may call it "desire" or "aspiration"; but it is not faith. Choose.

The best employed people in the world are those who devote their lives to doing good.

The poorest man may give as much as the richest, if he will give all he can.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 15, 1910.

Editors Herald: In reading the Magazine Number of the HERALD of April 6, in the article referring to my pastoral work, I notice credit is given me for work which I did not do. Those who take part or assist in the Princess Theater work are not under my direction or presidency, but under that of Bishop R. C. Evans, who organizes each season those who assist him in the work. I have assisted him on the platform, also acted as secretary and treasurer, receiving collections and paying all bills authorized by him for payment.

During these services the number of names entered on our branch roll has increased to six hundred and sixty-six, but owing to removals, deaths, etc., our membership is about five hundred and fifty. Trusting these few items will prevent the readers of the HERALD forming an opinion of me to which I could not measure.

Your brother,

A. F. MCLEAN.

SAREPTA, ONTARIO.

Editors Herald: As I take a backward look I find that over thirty years have passed since I could truly testify that I know the gospel is again preached in its purity. It was in this way that I found the true church: My sister had been visiting among the Latter Day Saints, and while in conversation with Elder John J. Cornish was convinced that what he told her was true, but not being baptized at that time she has not yet received the gospel. I was trying to convince her that the Latter Day Saints were the deceivers that were to come in the last days, but failing in my argument, I retired to my room, and there upon my knees made a covenant with God that I would give up card playing, tobacco, whisky, and all my companions. Then I experienced the most wonderful experience I had ever had. I am unable to describe it but I was moved upon to pray aloud. When Sunday came, I went to the Methodist church, thinking that that was all that was necessary, and stopped in for class meeting. I told the class leader what I had experienced and he assured me that my sins were forgiven. But before another Sunday came I had received another manifestation and, like Paul, was told to go down to one Samuel Brown and be baptized for the remission of my sins on the morrow. This was a doctrine that I don't think I had ever heard preached, as I had only heard two Latter Day Saint sermons, one by W. H. Kelley, and the other by H. M. McIntosh, both of which I tried to oppose. When the message came to me bidding me to go down to Carlingford and be baptized for the remission of my sins, I did not doubt, but in the morning started for Brother Brown's. I found Mr. Brown and Samuel filling in ditch, and so told my errand. They were very much surprised, as was also my sister, Mrs. George Brown, now living in Missouri, and Sister R. J. H., afterwards Mrs. Alford Davis. Next morning I found my way to my brother's and he and his partner were soon ready for the water. This was December 12, 1879, and the changes thirty years have brought around!

ROBERT GRAY.

SAREPTA, ONTARIO.

Dear Herald: As we are the only Latter Day Saints here we are anxious to distribute the literature of the church. We always subscribe for Autumn Leaves and HERALD, and they are such good literature to distribute. But some who contribute have their articles so mixed by applying the name Mormon to our church that anyone reading them who was not conversant with the Reorganized Church would think we sanctioned the name Mormon, and this when classed with the Utah faction means a great deal. If I understand it correctly the name Mormon is imposed on us by the world, and when they read our literature they say, "Why, they call themselves Mormons," and they get the Utah faction and the Reorganized Church as one. Their minds are poisoned and they don't want to investigate further.

While speaking to one of our missionaries three or four years ago, about the disadvantage of handing our papers to honest people as well as those who are not, who never had any opportunity of knowing anything about the restored gospel, he said that the enemy side of our story is always circulated ahead of the gospel, and that our literature needs to be selected.

This is written with the kindest of feelings and love for the truth.

With best wishes, I am,

ADDIE GRAY.

KNOBNOSTER, MISSOURI.

Editors Herald: When we ask the question, What is justice? few men are agreed. We look into the meaning of the word. It is giving or rendering to everyone what is his due; rectitude in the dealings of men with each other in accordance with truth or facts. The simple idea is that justice is the right that wrongs no man. The fathers wrote a rule of right in their Declaration of Independence: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." And the Master Teacher gave us what is known as the Golden Rule: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them." He also said the greatest commandment in the law was, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Do men to-day in their dealings with each other ever ask as to the righteousness of their doings? Be it in act or word, the truth or the right is seldom in their consideration, but they do try to make it lawful or as having that appearance, so they can be legally justified. This is said to be a land of freedom and equal rights. The workman asks, Where are my rights; since some have possession of all the factories, lands, mills, or mines, we work in others. The houses we live in, what rights have we that the owners are bound to respect? If we fail to pay the rent, our goods can be taken, and they can turn us out upon the highway; if we work in the factory, mill or mine, it must be in accord with their orders, and take as pay in wages what they are willing to give; as we can not buy land, if we wish food to sustain life, we must pay the producer his price; and as far as we can see, all the freedom is a choice of masters, but it is work or starve for me and at their prices.

The men of the South had a wicked war with the men of the North about a black slave; now the men of the South look over to the men of the North, saying, We are brethren, shake hands, we are glad to know that we can have slaves without the trouble and care of having to buy them as we do our mules; and if they get sick or fail to come to work we don't need to care for them, they are free. And this is a Christian land where men do preach and pray.

The ownership of land should be limited, and they who have no houses should have houses at cost as their equal right. As it is to-day, the landlord lives at his ease without labor, by compelling the renter to pay all he may choose to ask and there is no burden to-day so heavy on the back of the working man as the burden of rent. The rule of the rich to-day is the rule of tyrants of the most ignorant kind. Think of it, the great nations spending millions of dollars yearly building useless warships, while the poor and needy go hungry and homeless. Companies have been known to pay from fifty to one hundred per cent yearly dividends, but when was the stockholder known to say enough,—ease up on the back of the working man. We sometimes hear the elders say, Why don't men receive the gospel? Aye, why don't they? Just because they have gotten tired of the song, "You must be a lover of the Lord if you want to go to heaven when you die." Sunday Saints there are in plenty, they who praise the Lord, but where is there a man who loves his neighbor as himself?

The order of the day is doubt and infidelity. The nation is on trial, not by men but by Jesus Christ. He said he had reserved this land for a righteous people, that they who dwell thereon must serve him, else they would be swept off the face of the land. Two nations have so suffered. What will become of us as a nation? To-day it is secret combinations everywhere. Men say you must join our union or you can't work. What do we see in those unions? Contentions and strife, and bitter accusations everywhere, and while their works are in the dark, and they know every man his brother, they have no love for each other, for as we have seen, if those who have received the gospel are the leaven, pray tell me if they can leaven the lump? If not, then the nation must go to pieces, for unless we build on the laws of God we build in vain. The true foundation, the only foundation that can endure, is mercy, justice, and truth. The Jews, Jaredites, and Nephites failed because they forgot those things. Let us take heed lest we also fail.

W. PENMAN.

A Widow's Prayer.

We beseech thee, O Lord, who hath created the heavens and the earth, that thou will deliver us. We are trying to serve thee as best we can, with our weak and frail bodies we are trying to provide food and raiment and educate these little ones thou hast given us, as best we can under all the oppressions and small wages for services rendered. We are not disheartened, although grafters corner the market on the necessary food we have to buy, and the high price of labor oftentimes prevents us from getting our small places cultivated as they should be. "Those that are so fortunate to own property,"—thus our homes are in a dilapidated condition and our children too young to assist in the labor necessary to bring profit and income.

As a servant I have seen that blessed Book, praised and read at the Sunday morning breakfast, and I was kept in the kitchen until late in the afternoon preparing the most elaborate meal of the week. Another place the Bible was read every morning and liquor served on the same table every day.

Because I was apt in business I have had responsible business to see to and recommended as a very honest person. Yet I have been oppressed and downtrodden by the rich. For years I patronized the rummage sales that I might get a garment to make over and keep up appearances, because I was skillful in making over. My tithing was paid years ago, and when I had paid what I owed what I now give is an offering; several times I gave one dollar and fifty cents, earned by gathering old bottles, etc.

As treasurer of our branch I have visited and solicited many times to encourage the Saints to live up to the whole law of the Lord and obey the commandments as the books teach, and to sell many of the church books. Some say, I will, sister; when the Spirit directs me I am going to read more and pay more. And they want to do but put it off. Blessings are to those who do, without being told. (Doctrine and Covenants 58: 6.) Christ said to Thomas, Blessed are they that have not seen and yet have believed. (John 20: 29; 1 Peter 1: 7, 8.)

Therefore let us study to know the will of the Lord and do it. Many times have I solicited of those that had to spare, to supply the needs of the poor. And how wonderful is God's way that things just come to me to supply the needs of others. How pleased an elder was when his coat was cleaned and rebound and new buttons, and he said, Neatly done. Therefore, in whatever we do let us be perfect, prompt, and on time. A careless servant does not keep her place long in a well regulated house. So with the work of the Lord, each can do something. Exercising at all times good judgment and wisdom, we are all lacking in some way, but let us so try to live that our good deeds and intentions shall enable us to be an example that our religion has made us better. Lord, we pray, confessing our shortcomings before thee, that thou will deliver us that we may not have to beg or steal but have our needs supplied.

That now old age is approaching and our bodies are growing feeble and our hand no longer able to accomplish as much as we see might be done, deliver us; and may we be found worthy to dwell in Zion and in the association of the Saints and where our loved children may grow under the influence of the church. How oft has our prophet entreated us to come up higher and still many fail to live up to the more perfect way. Many have not the ability to stand up for their rights, yet their hearts are true and faithful. From the North to the South and from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the plea of the widow and the fatherless is, How long, O Lord? Ye know the Lord's work will roll on and we hope to see all united and making a sacrifice with our might, mind, and strength.

We are not having church services now, and for the past month I have been quite sick with cold, but we can praise the Lord, and I hope my petition will arouse some to intelligently consider the situation of many, who can offer a more eloquent petition to our heavenly Father. May we so live to be worthy to go to Zion, that we may make a sacrifice pleasing to the Lord, that when the destroyer comes we will be found worthy to escape. "Gather my Saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."

May the Saints be found living in a condition to justify God's protecting care. I thank thee, O Lord, for all thy mercies.

A SISTER.

Divorce.

We as a people teach from press and pulpit, "Give us something better than that which we preach to the world, if you desire to convert us to your way of thinking." So with this fact in view, I wish to present to Latter Day Saints a few thoughts on the divorce question, which is causing so much comment throughout the world by Christian and non-Christian people. While I admit that the situation is grave and serious, I can't help but compare it to the results that prohibition has brought about,—devastation and ruin almost to the nation. Now don't say, "a whisky lover," for I hate the stuff. I even despise the very smell of it. But I would crush the stuff another way than by the prohibition route, or by giving women the right to vote, or by making more laws for men to break. In the first place, of what use are laws if not kept? And, secondly, if we want a law to keep, why not obey those that God gave to men in the first place, and simplify the matter? Man's way of trying to reform the law God has given, has in all ages of the world proved disastrous to humankind. How can man improve the divorce measure by making new laws to prohibit divorced people from marrying, when the confusion that exists to-day is the result of breaking the great fundamental rule that God gave to the world in the beginning of time?

I once heard a noted evangelist say that "the dance hall had sent more men and women to hell than any other one evil." While he made a good argument, he wound up with this remark, "It is nothing but a hugging school." Now my argument is this, if men and women have the desire to hug and be hugged, they will find a place, whether they ever hear of a dance hall or not. It is the desire that moves people to do things, if you please. Teach men and women to control their desires and I will show you people upon whom the dance hall will have no effect.

What causes divorce? Who is responsible for divorces? How can Saints or anyone else prove that it is wrong to grant divorces or wrong for divorced people to marry again? All Saints know there is only one true church, and that the fundamental principles underlying it, as we teach, are in harmony with those taught anciently by the Master, and that we constitute the true church of Christ; consequently that which is contrary to it is wrong. Now God made the law governing marriage, even as the law for the organization of his church, and the failure to keep one is just as wrong as the other; consequently to build up another marriage covenant beside that which God said should govern marriage (love) would be just as false as a church built on another foundation than that which Christ laid.

Man tried to reform the church of Christ, and brought apostasy. Man tried to reform the marriage covenant and brought divorces; and now the earth is rolling to and fro like a drunken man in consequence. And yet we cry, "More laws to reform." Our nation is groaning under laws. And since when did man even keep any of them, if he did not so choose, provided he had his moral agency? Can any Saints answer that?

Take from man his free agency, then you can make laws, but give him his liberty, the right to choose for himself, without first governing his desires, and no legislature will ever fashion a law that will be kept, if one does not want to. Now think you if we had a law prohibiting divorced people from marrying again, would it do so? Would it better conditions? And would it stop the divorce evil? No, a thousand times no. It would make a bad matter worse.

As long as there are male and female on earth, there will be a desire to be together; no law ever enacted by community or congress can prevent it. If they can not live together legally, they will do so illegally. Just like the liquor question, if one can not buy liquor legally, he will steal it. The desire is there—appetite—craving, and unless the desire for right living is stronger, implanted by previous teaching, man will fall. What we need to do is to go back to the old paths, and keep the law already given, and not reform or make new ones.

I know Saints who think their sons and daughters too nice to marry into families of poor Saints; they want a rich husband or wife; the children are taught these things, even to look outside of the church, the desire for money is so overpowering. Then when a divorce occurs we want more laws to prevent them. Saints, think of these things aright. Let your sons and daughters marry the girl who washes and scrubs, or the boy who is poor, if they love one another. That is God's law.

Jesus said it was what came out of man that defiled him and not what went in, and the same rule will apply here. It is not the large bank account or fine clothes that make real, true men and women, but a true heart, true principles on the inside; real diamonds with rough coats. Teach your children the true principles of life, and to honor God's law above all else, and it will not be necessary to legislate laws to live together. They will do so for love's sake. God wants his people to obey his laws from a sense of right, and because it is right, and not from the force process. People who have to be forced to do right are worth very little to Him or to a community.

I hope our ministers will teach the principles of marrying for love from the pulpit; that it is a sin to do otherwise; that the teachers in their official visits to the Saints, will teach it and impress it upon them. It is just as important as the law of tithing, and more so, for it is either the making or breaking of our nation and God's kingdom.

What is done by previous teachings of generations past can not be undone by one stroke of law, but we as a people of the everlasting gospel and children of light and of the true church can go to teaching and training the coming generations the true principles of life and the awful results of breaking God's laws. Begin at home. Let the world see God has a peculiar people, and let us learn from the past experience and condition of things how to draw the right exegesis of these things. I think this reforming is to be done mostly in our own homes; and it depends largely on the woman, as she alone is more nearly to blame for the conditions that prevail at large, and also in the home as they exist to-day. Oh, yes, I can. I can prove by the Bible to any right thinking man or woman that I speak the truth. But I will prove you to be a home keeping woman, wise and sober thinking, sweet and refined, cheerful and happy in your duty to loved ones, and not trying to vote, make laws, reforming that which you have already ruthlessly torn down.

When a law is made that prohibits divorces and prohibits divorced women from marrying again, if they so desire, you will experience a far worse condition of affairs than exists now. The Devil will achieve a great stride forward when such a law is made. He is working for it; it just suits his purpose. Teach the people that the foundation for marriage is the one that God set up. It is written: "teach them to obey it, that none other will answer," and the divorce problem almost solves itself.

A LATTER DAY SAINT WOMAN.

An Appeal for Help.

My Dear Editors: Will you kindly allow me space to tell your dear readers about my suffering and sadness? Fourteen years ago I fell and hurt my side, and for over ten years I have been confined to my bed. I can not sit up, nor walk, and never leave my bed, only when I am carried like a little baby.

I will tell you about my home, or the place I live at, as I have no home. I live away up in the cold mountains in an old, desolate log cabin, which is about ready to tumble down; and when it rains the water comes down on me and my bed.

Sometimes in winter my bed is frozen hard and covered with snow. I have no chance to recover under these circumstances, but I must not complain, but must be patient and trust in God and bear my burdens as best I can.

I hope some day to have a nice home and plenty to eat. I have no one to provide for me but my poor, old, dear mother, who in summer time gathers roots and herbs for a living, but she can not get me much to eat, and I get so weak and hungry.

A kind hearted friend heard of me being poor, lonely, shut in, and sent me your paper, and I do enjoy reading it. I get very lonesome, as I have to be left alone so much.

I want you all to write to me, and remember me in your prayers, and may God bless you all, and I hope some day to be comfortable and have plenty to eat.

Your friend in misfortune,

TRADE, TENNESSEE.

rapher for the company, this time to Washington, District of Columbia, and it surely was an interesting and enjoyable time. We arrived Tuesday morning, April 12, and left Friday, worked part of the time, but had about a day for sight-seeing. Visited the Supreme Court, Senate, and House when in session, which was a dream of my childhood realized. Saw many fine paintings and statues, but of the latter only one State honored a woman, Illinois, Frances Willard. Glad I am from Illinois. Was in the east room of the White House, and had a magnificent view of the city, Potomac River, Arlington, and Georgetown from the Washington Monument, five hundred feet above mother earth. Went out in a tourist automobile at ten o'clock, returning at two, which visited the principal buildings and heard so many interesting things, but space will not permit if my memory were not at fault. The Congressional Library is the most finely finished building in the interior of any in the world, and is considered more beautiful at night with the electric lights. Trust our newly elected delegates will have an opportunity to see many of the places of interest, and will give us the benefit of their information. Would suggest to one and all, do not miss an opportunity to visit Washington, as it is classed the most beautiful city in the United States.

FOR SALE LOTS AND ACRE PROPERTY

Having bought the Edgefield property containing 80 acres, I now offer this property to the Saints at low figures. This is one of the most sightly and finest tracts now on the market, being high and dry. This property is located on the south side of the city of Independence, being from 2 to 6 blocks from the new South Side church and same distance from the street car line, and $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile from the public square in Independence. The price of lots is from \$3 to \$5.50 a front foot. We discourage the Saints buying this property for speculation. Those wanting to secure one lot or more and can not personally inspect them the Stake or General Bishopric will locate them for you, and should anyone after examination not be pleased their money will be refunded on demand. For the correctness of this statement we refer you to the Presiding General Bishopric.

IS THE BISHOP THE ONLY MAN OF FAITH?

The question frequently recurs to us while listening to complaints made respecting the finances of the church, Is the Bishop the only man who is legitimately expected to exercise faith touching the necessary supplies to the treasury?

It should be known to all that the church finances are not gathered by taxation as in the nation, state, county, and municipality. The money needed for the expenditures of the Government in all its departments is gathered by virtue of the right to assess against each man's possessions a sum supposed to be an equal and proportionate amount to that imposed upon every other man, and the amount so assessed is gathered by local authority, to be put into the treasury at times and places provided for by the Government, and if for any reason there is a failure upon the part of any who are assessed to meet the demand made upon him, the administrators of the law are authorized to take of his possessions whatever may be required to be sold to meet and liquidate the demand.

On the contrary, the church has no authority, neither power, by which to assess a definite amount against any member and collect the same by any process whatever. It therefore remains a matter of voluntary acquiescence in the primal law formally stated in revelation to the church, whether the members of the church will or will not contribute of their substance to the replenishment of the church treasury.

The Bishop is but the chosen and designated individual to dispense the funds so collected as a result of voluntary action upon the part of the members, and to liquidate such claims upon the treasury as are provided for by virtue of church organization.

It follows as a matter of necessity that if there is no fund, whatever necessity may be depending upon the treasury, the Bishop is powerless to meet the demand unless he has private means of his own which he willingly contributes to the necessities of such demand.

A little thought upon this subject will show to each thinker that no matter how urgent the demand may be or wherever it may exist, the one entitled to receive upon such demand is dependent upon the fact that there has been a sufficient amount of the means of the membership deposited and at the command of the Bishop or he can not meet the requirements of such demand. The supplies to the treasury being dependent upon the will of the several and aggregated membership of the church, it may happen, whether it be expected or not, that there may be times when the treasury may be depleted. The Bishop has no ability to guarantee unto anyone who may be entitled to receive by virtue of his necessity, whether of an official or a personal character, the absolutely definite payment of the sums necessary to meet those demands. He does not personally know, so far as the future is concerned, whether at any given time subsequent to the present moment there will be an adequate supply of means in the treasury to meet any or all of the demands which have been created through which to carry on the essential work of the church. To expect the Bishop to guarantee the meeting of demands because of his official capacity is to ask him to do that which he can not do. The promises which he may make or which may exist, either by direct statement or because of his office and calling, are conditional, necessarily, and depend upon the fact that the necessary voluntary contributions of the membership characteristically continues and the treasury is kept adequately supplied by those contributions to meet all necessary demands.

Neither can the Bishop justly make deposits at given times and at stated points in advance to meet the accruing demands made or existant by virtue of church work, to the order of the several individuals who may be entitled to receive from the treasury such amounts as their labor in the church work may require. This would create a peculiar inequality, for the necessities of all in respect to their work are alike, subject to the exception in favor of the few who possibly may have in their own right a greater or less amount of means which they would be willing to advance to meet their own requirements until such time as the supplies of the treasury would enable the Bishop to liquidate them.

This brings up the question again, if the Bishop should guarantee specifically the meeting of certain specific demands at given times and places, the only basis upon which he could do that would be the fact that he had a store in his own private right on which he could draw for the necessary amount to meet the requirements of his guarantee, or the existence and exercise of superabundant faith in himself.

H O Smith

It is a fact which every man ought to recognize that no man can pledge his spiritual standing or his faith, however great it may be, in the money markets, and realize material sums upon such hypothecation. Hence, even if the Bishop were compelled to make such specific guarantee when he had not the material possessions or monetary substance upon which he could release himself when required by the time such demands became due, he would be utterly powerless to make good such specific demands. This again brings the question, Is the Bishop the only one who justly may be expected to exercise faith?

It may be said that the administration of the Bishopric may be faulty, basing the statement upon the fact that he may not in the past have met all the just requirements which have been created by church action, and that individuals who have been engaged in church work have been put at great disadvantage and have been humiliated because they had not received the means to which they were justly entitled, and that such fact may exist at the present and may recur in the future, and that therefore the administration should be changed for the better. This suggests the question whether the change of administration or the change of administrators would change the facts that the treasury is sometimes well supplied with means and at other times it is empty. Could any change in the proceedings of the administration or the administrators of the law of finance in the church bring to pass any greater assurance and accuracy in the payment of the voluntary supplies by which the treasury is sustained, and would such change give any assurance that there would not occur the failure on the part of the Bishopric to meet the necessarily recurring demands as they become due, the fact remaining that the ability of either the present or any future administration depends upon the condition of the treasury at the command of the administration?

If the failures which have occurred are the result of inattention on the part of the administrators, or of willful neglect to meet the requirements as they have accrued, then blame for official misconduct may attach to the administrators. On the other hand, if such failures have been the result of a lack of adequate means in the treasury with which the administrators could supply the demands which were made upon the treasury through their official action, then blame does not justly attach.

From what has preceded we may conclude with some degree of reasonableness that the Bishop ought not be the only one who is expected to exercise faith. Those who are entitled to depend upon the treasury because of their proper services rendered in the work of the church are necessarily in a condition to exercise faith and to look forward under the same conditions as does the Bishop, cognizant of that same fact and the same contingencies, present and future, and with equal ability to determine as to the condition of the treasury at any given future. The inference amounting to almost an absolute and definite conclusion justly will be that those who pay of their substance into the treasury, doing so voluntarily because of their connection with and interest in the church work, should exercise faith when they take the considerations stated into examination and thereby receive the added impetus to the exercise of their faith in the business promptness and accuracy of the administrators of the financial law in meeting from the treasury the necessary demands of their coworkers and fellow-servants who by reason of their office and calling are dependent, not upon their own efforts in worldly and material affairs, but upon the amounts contributed by their fellow-men with whom they are equally in service, and thus save to their fellow-laborers the mortification of having to meet their necessities from a fluctuating treasury, sometimes full and sometimes empty, for which those of their fellows who are administering in financial affairs of the church are not personally responsible. For those who willingly contribute to withhold amounts which they are able and willing to contribute, because they are not fully cognizant of and satisfied with the methods of the administration, is to make a failure upon the part of the administrators to meet the demands made upon the treasury absolutely certain, and though there might be partial supplies in the treasury, all demands can not be met, and if all would withhold, there would be none whatever.

The fact that there has been and is a reasonable opportunity for persons to know that the sum which they voluntarily paid are being distributed with the intention and purpose to be fair and honest in the handling of the means on the part of the administrators, should quiet every doubt and fear as to there being any intention of willful disregarding or neglecting any just responsibility or duty devolving upon the Bishop and his assistants.

These suggestions bring again the question, Is the Bishop the only one who justly can be expected to exercise faith? Does not an equal obligation rest upon those who are entitled to receive that which sustains them in their work and those who voluntarily contribute to the treasury, to exercise faith in the work in which all are engaged,—a fair, just, and discriminate faith with a willingness to bear equal responsibility? We think so, and so believe.

GRACELAND COLLEGE NEWS.

Last General Conference was a source of much encouragement to those having in charge the affairs of Graceland College. When the trustees of Graceland College formulated their report, it was with the anxious desire that some plan might be formulated for the securing of more means for the development of the educational work that would enlist the united effort of every member of the church.

There were many members of the church, among whom were some of our leading financiers, who were of the opinion that the expenses of Graceland College should be paid from the offerings received by the Presiding Bishop of the church. In order that the conference might have an opportunity of expressing itself upon this subject, the trustees in their report requested an appropriation of $4,000 for the use and benefit of Graceland College. Two days were spent in debating this proposition on the conference floor, and the college interests were thoroughly represented during that time, and the general expression of a desire to further the interests of the school was a source of much encouragement to its friends, although there were different opinions as to the best way of securing that support.

The proposition for the appropriation was voted down and the following day the trustees suggested the plan of a temporary endowment fund, which means the securing of five hundred annual subscriptions of $10 each from individuals or societies, which will be the same in result as a permanent endowment fund of $100,000. In fact, some think this would be better than a permanent fund of such an amount, as the temporary endowment fund plan would enlist the active support all over the church of five hundred of her members. The plan was indorsed by the Bishopric and in two days at the General Conference pledges were taken amounting to nearly $2,000. Since the adjournment of conference the Board of Trustees have passed the following resolution, which you will notice has the indorsement of the Presiding Bishop:

"In order to place the college in a position to carry on its work and avoid any further indebtedness in running expenses, thus developing the general fund as per action of the General Conference,

"Resolved, That the Executive Committee of the college be authorized and instructed to circulate subscription lists in all the branches of the church within the next thirty days, and take subscriptions and also endowment lists for future use of the college, of those who are willing to contribute for this purpose, and thus at once place the college upon a sure and stable basis."

Steps will be taken at once to have some one appointed in every branch to carry out the terms of this resolution and the temporary endowment fund. We have a good many members who are not living in branches and who receive the HERALD or Ensign and we would be pleased if they would forward their pledges direct to the College Treasurer, F. B. Blair, Lamoni, Iowa.

This plan will not in any way interfere with the regular college collection which is taken up in October of each year; but it is thought that if the plan can be successfully carried out that enough will be realized to finally pay off the college debt, and at the same time, place the school in possession of sufficient funds to successfully carry on its work.

Those present at the late conference could not but feel the enthusiasm that was manifested in the great opportunity now afforded the church of building up and developing the young people of the church. From all over the church there came reports of the effectual work being done by former students. We believe that with the united support, Graceland College can be developed until every boy and girl in the church can receive of her benefits, whether they be rich or poor. This is the object had in view by those having charge of the college work, and we earnestly solicit the support of every friend of the young people.

These pledges are made payable semiannually, viz: January 1 and July 1, hence nothing will be realized from them until July 1, of the present year, and it is therefore necessary for us to ask for special contributions at once to meet present emergencies, and keep the college in operation until July 1; after which, if we get the five hundred or more pledges, we feel sure we will not be under the necessity of calling for special donations. We feel encouraged with the prospects, for the future seems bright if the members of the church and friends of Graceland come to the rescue at once.

We hope to have a liberal response at once both in special contributions for present emergencies and in pledges for temporary endowment.

TALK ON BOOKS.

To fall in love with a good book is one of the greatest events that can befall us. It is to have a new influence pouring itself into our life, a new teacher to inspire and refine us, a new friend to be by our side always, who, when life grows narrow and weary, will take us into his wider and calmer and higher world. Whether it be biography, introducing us to some humble life made great by duty done; or history, opening vistas into the movements and destinies of nations that have passed away; or poetry, making music of all the common things around us, and filling the fields, and the skies, and the work of the city and the cottage, with eternal meanings—whether it be these, or story books, or religious books, or science, no one can become the friend even of one good book without being made wiser and better. Do not think I am going to recommend any such book to you. The beauty of a friend is that we discover him. And we must each taste the books that are accessible to us for ourselves. Do not be disheartened at first if you like none of them. That is possibly their fault, not yours. But search and search till you find what you like. In amazingly cheap form—for a few pence indeed—almost all the best books are now to be had; and I think everyone owes it as a sacred duty to his mind to start a little library of his own.

How much do we not do for our bodies? How much thought and money do they not cost us? And shall we not think a little, and pay a little, for the clothing and adorning of the imperishable mind? This private library may begin, perhaps, with a single volume, and grow at the rate of one or two a year; but these, well chosen and well mastered, will become such a fountain of strength and wisdom that each shall be eager to add to his store. A dozen books accumulated in this way may be better than a whole library. Do not be distressed if you do not like time-honored books, or classical works, or recommended books. Choose for yourself; trust yourself; plant yourself on your own instincts; that which is natural for us, that which nourishes us, and gives us appetite, is that which is right for us.

We have all different minds, and we are all at different stages of growth. Some other day we may find food in the recommended book, though we should possibly starve on it to-day. The mind develops and changes, and the favorites of this year, also, may one day cease to interest us. Nothing better, indeed, can happen to us than to lose interest in a book we have often read; for it means that it has done its work upon us, and brought us up to its level, and taught us all it had to teach.—Henry Drummond.

FROM HIS HOME TOWN.

It must have been a great joy to the Rev. Joseph Smith, for fifty years the head of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, when at the close of half a century of ministry he heard the good words of his people, the story of his lifework told by men with whom he had been associated and saw the hundreds of faces before him, each one glowing with love and everyone with an unspoken prayer welling from the heart. It is not given many men to hear these things about their own life and work. They are usually reserved for the funeral.

Joseph Smith is not a rich man as the measure of this world's riches is. He has accumulated no millions, has wrecked no lives to make wider the gains of money making institutions. He has endowed no colleges with great wealth. He offers no millions to be incorporated for the creation of a mirage of help for those who refuse to help themselves. He has failed of success as marked by the yard stick of present day builders.

If we could have measured the joy in the heart of President Smith as he looked back over fifty years, as he looked at his people responding in prosperity to the results of arduous, oftentimes dangerous, always determined, work of a long life, as he remembered that his mantle was settling upon the shoulders of a son well qualified in every way to continue the work and make it more fruitful, we would have been unable to calculate the depth and the wealth of one life. Is it success? We leave that decision to each reader for his own determination.—The Jackson Examiner, Independence, Missouri, April 15, 1910.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

In our write-up of conference news, we gave the name of W. I. Taylor as one of those present at the Jubilee exercises who attended the Amboy Conference. Brother Taylor's initials are W. S. instead of W. I., and we write this by request of the brother.

Bro. E. W. Nunley writes from Cookes Point, Texas, that we have two brothers there who are in business: Bro. C. M. Mitchell, postmaster and merchant; and Bro. C. A. Sherrill who is a doctor. This in answer to a recent inquiry in the HERALD.

Bro. John Scott, of Lamoni, passed away April 29. Brother Scott was born November 3, 1840, at South Shields, Durham County, England; baptized in Nebraska City in 1866, by R. C. B. Elvin. For many years he was foreman of the composing room of the Saints' Herald Publishing House. He was connected with the HERALD in Plano, Illinois, and came from there with the office in October, 1881, when the plant was moved to Lamoni. For some years he has been one of the proprietors of the Lamoni Chronicle.

At a meeting of the Board of Trustees of Grace-land College recently held, Heman C. Smith was elected chairman of the board. At the Boosters' meeting held in the church Thursday evening last, under the management of the trustees, a committee of ten sisters was appointed to canvass the town for subscriptions to the temporary endowment fund. Speeches were made by Frederick M. Smith, Heman C. Smith, J. A. Gunsolley, W. V. Holmes of the student body, and literary and musical numbers were rendered.

When there is a great illness in the family, a loving neighbor comes in; but he does not presume to prescribe. He will run for the physician. So do angels minister to "the heirs of salvation."—Arnot.

God estimates charity not from the size of the gift, but from the size of the heart that gave it.

One spirit with the Lord, we are privileged to share the very blessedness that fills his heart.

THE REORGANIZATION.

The position occupied by this people there in Wisconsin was consistent with what was to be required of the successor of Joseph Smith, for the successor of Joseph Smith was to teach the revelations of God—not to lead the people to believe there was something beside the written word—to teach the revelations of God given through the former president, through his father, his martyred father. He was to teach those revelations, and this body, to whom he was directed, had placed themselves in that position that if he came to them he could do that. Let me read to you what position these men took in regard to the books, and other matters, and you will see that the way was being prepared that this man, this successor of Joseph Smith, could come in and perform his duty as teaching the law of God as contained in the books. In the History of the Church, volume 3, page 209, we have a series of resolutions passed by them in June, 1852, and these are the resolutions:

Resolved, That this conference regard the pretensions of Brigham Young, James J. Strang, James Colin Brewster, and William Smith and Joseph Wood's joint claims to the leadership of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, as an assumption of power, in violation of the law of God, and consequently we disclaim all connection and fellowship with them.

Resolved, That the successor of Joseph Smith, jr., as the presiding High Priest in the Melchisedec Priesthood, must of necessity be the seed of Joseph Smith, jr., in fulfillment of the law and promises of God.

Resolved, That, as the office of First President of the Church grows out of the authority of the Presiding High Priest, in the high priesthood, no person can legally lay claim to the office of First President of the Church without a previous ordination to the Presidency of the High Priesthood.

Resolved, That we recognize the validity of all legal ordinations in this church, and will fellowship all such as have been ordained while acting within the purview of such authority.

Resolved, That we believe that the Church of Christ, organized on the 6th day of April, A. D. 1830, exists as on that day wherever six or more saints are organized according to the pattern in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

Resolved, That the whole law of the Church of Jesus Christ is contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

They go back to the old law, and put the successor as he comes to them free to teach the revelations which had been received prior to 1831, which would be received through Joseph Smith the Martyr, which was to be his duty. And now these people resolve that the whole law of God is contained in these books. They did not go outside of them for the law of God:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this conference, there is no stake to which the Saints on this continent are commanded to gather at the present time, but that the Saints on all other lands are commanded to gather to this land preparatory to the reestablishment of the church in Zion, when the scattered Saints on this land will also be commanded to gather and return to Zion, and to their inheritances, in fulfillment of the promises of God; and it is the duty of the Saints to turn their hearts and their faces towards Zion and supplicate the Lord for such deliverance.

Resolved, That we will, to the extent of our ability and means, communicate to all the scattered Saints the sentiments contained in the foregoing resolutions.

Resolved, That this conference believe it the duty of the elders of the church, who have been legally ordained, to cry repentance and remission of sins to this generation, through obedience to the gospel as revealed in the record of the Jews, the Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and not to faint in the discharge of duty.—Church Record.

And thus they put themselves squarely upon record, that they would go back and stand by the books, and that the law of God contained in the books was the law upon which they would build as the reorganized body. There was no other safe ground. Those who took other ground than that were led into things that were contrary to the law of God. And this people was accepted of God, no doubt, and the prophet was sent to them, because they had taken the right position, that they would build upon God's law.

Joseph, therefore, cast his lot with the Reorganized Church, in harmony with the revelation given to him in 1859, that he should go to them, that they were the people pleasing in the sight of God. In April, 1860, he appeared to that people in Amboy, Illinois. There he was recognized as the presiding head of the church, and there he made a statement of his position, a position which he intended to occupy, and made among other statements the following statement which I want to call your attention to. In Church History, volume 3, page 247:

I would say to you, brethren, as I hope you may be, and in faith I trust you are, as a people that God has promised his blessings upon, I came not here of myself, but by the influence of the Spirit. For some time past I have received manifestations pointing to the position which I am about to assume. I wish to say that I have come here not to be dictated by any men or set of men. I have come in obedience to a power not my own, and shall be dictated by the power that sent me. God works by means best known to himself, and I feel that for some time past he has been pointing out a work for me to do. For two or three years past deputations have been waiting on me, urging me to assume the responsibilities of the leadership of the church; but I have answered each and every one of them that I did not wish to trifle with the faith of the people. I do not propose to assume this position in order to amass wealth out of it, neither have I sought it as a profit. I know opinions are various in relation to these matters. I have conversed with those who told me they would not hesitate one moment in assuming the high and powerful position as the leader of this people. But I have been well aware of the motives which might be ascribed to me,—motives of various kinds, at the foundation of all which is selfishness,—should I come forth to stand in the place where my father stood. I have believed that should I come without the guarantee of the people, I should be received in blindness, and would be liable to be accused of false motives. Neither would I come to you without receiving favor from my heavenly Father.

The whole address is along that line, and I want to call your attention to the fact that he came there by direction of the Spirit of God. He came not of himself. He was directed there, and the people were directed to receive him, and there he took the position that his father had occupied before, which position he occupies until this day. He was ordained at that conference, to be the president of the Melchisedec priesthood, by virtue of which office he was to be the president of the church.

By what authority, we are asked, was he ordained? I answer, by the authority of God. There is nothing higher than that. By the authority which was given by revelation from on high. And exactly in harmony with the way that the ordination to this place was made in the years before, when his father was ordained as the president of the high priesthood of the church. I want to call your attention to a few things, going back a little beyond his ordination to the ordination of those that ordained him. A revelation given unto this people who had reorganized in Wisconsin, says:

Verily, thus saith the Lord, as I said unto my servant Moses, "See thou do all things according to the pattern," so I say unto you, Behold, the pattern is before you. It is my will that you respect authority in my church; therefore let the greatest among you preside at your conference. Let three men be appointed to select seven men from among you, who shall compose a majority of the Twelve Apostles; for it is my will that that quorum should not be filled up at present.

How were the Twelve chosen in 1835? A committee was appointed consisting first of David Whitmer and Oliver Cowdery, and subsequently Martin Harris was added to that committee, and by that committee the Twelve, in 1835, was selected. That was the way that God did when the Quorum of Twelve was organized. And now he says to this people organizing in Wisconsin, You do according to the pattern. Choose a committee of three and let them select seven men to be ordained apostles, and they proceeded to do according to the pattern that was given in 1829, and appointed that committee; and that committee selected seven men, and those seven men were set apart as apostles of the church of the Lamb of God.

What became of the former apostles, some one asks? They had joined another church, as I showed you the other night.

This, as we remarked before, is exactly in harmony with the pattern by which things were done before. And furthermore, when Joseph Smith was ordained at the Amboy Conference, in April, 1860, three of these apostles laid their hands upon him. We are not dependent alone upon the authority that men had and carried with them from the old organization. No. That is not so. It never was so claimed. But he was ordained by apostles appointed according to the pattern that was given in 1829, and acted upon in 1835, and under that apostolic authority he was ordained president of the high priesthood. Thus the general authorities acted in the ordination as provided for in the law, and in addition local authority was recognized in the person of William Marks who laid his hands upon the head of Joseph Smith, with the Twelve; he being a high priest and president of the stake of Nauvoo at the time Joseph Smith was living. The authority that William Marks held was in harmony with the authority that ordained the first president of the church; for Joseph Smith in his history, found in Times and Seasons, in speaking of his going to Missouri says:

On the 26th I called a general council of the church, and was acknowledged as the president of the high priesthood, according to a previous ordination at a conference of high priests, elders, and members, held at Amherst, Ohio, on the 25th of January, 1832. The right hand of fellowship was given to me by the bishop, Edward Partridge, in behalf of the church. The scene was solemn, impressive, and delightful. During the intermission, a difficulty or hardness which had existed between Bishop Partridge and Elder Rigdon was amicably settled, and when we came together in the afternoon, all hearts seemed to rejoice.—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 624.

He was ordained president of the high priesthood, he says, at a conference at Amherst, Ohio, January 25, 1832, and ordained in a conference of high priests and others. A high priest laid his hands upon the head of Young Joseph, and three apostles with him, so the authority was just the same and he was ordained by the same pattern that his father was ordained. These are facts of history that there is no use trying to dispute.

There was a resolution passed in the early time of the Reorganized Church, that I had marked to read, but I passed it by, and will simply mention it now; that the Reorganization decided that the ordination of men who were ordained in the days of Joseph Smith, when the church was accepted of God, should be recognized; and they took the position that joining factions would not invalidate, for the reason that those factions, rejected of God, could add nothing to or take nothing from. You see that is a proper position to take. Why? Because these factions, being rejected of God, whoever they were, could not rob a man of the priesthood. The idea that they could take it from him, you could not entertain for a moment. And so men who held authority retained that authority, and were recognized by the church. And their baptisms were recognized. All that was asked was that their baptism be proved to be legal; and if baptized by those who held authority to baptize then they were not required to be rebaptized. Sometimes people were rebaptized because they requested it, and preferred it, and thought they would feel better if they were rebaptized, but no such requirement was ever made by the Reorganized Church. There was a good deal of discussion about order of ordinations, and it is possible to find upon record the statement of men stating that joining with factions destroyed their authority, but the church never said it. The church said the opposite, said their authority should hold good, and joining a faction did not take it away.

But we are told there were some of the men who were prominent in the Reorganization that had been very unstable, and they had been joining first one faction and then another, and discredit is thrown upon them because of that fact. To my mind it was a credit to them. I want to call your attention just briefly to some things that were said in history of such men. In regard to William Marks, and in regard to Briggs. I want to state to you their own declarations in regard to this, and also a prophecy that was given. I want to call your attention to the prophecy in regard to William Marks, for it shows, to my mind, that he would be tossed to and fro for a time, but that the Lord would restore him, and make him a blessing to the people. That prophecy was fulfilled to the letter. In a letter written by Joseph Smith on March 29, 1838, he said:

I would just say to Brother Marks, that I saw in a vision while on the road, that whereas he was closely pursued by an innumerable concourse of enemies, and as they pressed upon him hard, as if they were about to devour him, and had seemingly obtained some degree of advantage over him, but about this time a chariot of fire came, and near the place, even the angel of the Lord put forth his hand unto Brother Marks, and said unto him, "Thou art my son, come here," and immediately he was caught up in the chariot, and rode away triumphantly out of their midst. And again the Lord said, I will raise thee up for a blessing unto many people. Now the particulars of this whole matter can not be written at this time, but the vision was evidently given me that I might know that the hand of the Lord would be on his behalf.

That is what the Lord said through Joseph Smith in regard to William Marks. He would be closely pursued, and they would apparently gain advantage over him, just as has been stated before on this stand. He first gave credence to the claims of Sidney Rigdon and stood up against the unwarranted measures that were taken against Sidney Rigdon in Nauvoo; and afterwards convinced that he was wrong, he acknowledged the leadership of the Twelve, he then became connected with James J. Strang, and afterwards with Charles B. Thompson. Then he united with the organization that he and several other men in Northern Illinois accepted, for the purpose of trying to keep the people in line of the faith that had been delivered unto them in the books of the church. I want to read to you a letter that he wrote himself, or part of it, under date of July 26, 1855. After having passed through these things, having conceded that they were wrong, and turned from them, he wrote James Adams, of Western Iowa, (some of you know him,) and Marks said to him:

My mind has never been at rest since the breaking up of the church (or the death of Brother Joseph). I have always had fears that all was not right, but I am satisfied now that all of the false prophets have arisen that can with any degree of plausibility, and if there can be any system adopted that will be calculated to mitigate the condition of the faithful Saints that are scattered about on the face of the land it would rejoice my heart. I would state my views and then I should like to get the views of my brethren on the subject, asking our heavenly Father to direct us, and claim the promise, If any man lack wisdom let him [ask] God.

I have that letter, the original in my hands, that you can see if you want to. In that Marks said he was also deceived, and feared that something was wrong, and he was looking for the light, and when he found he had made a mistake he turned from it, as any honest man ought to do. Is that against his character? I say, No. It is for him. It is in his favor. Now let me read to you (and I will not detain you longer upon this point) a statement made by Jason W. Briggs in the Temple Lot case, in regard to this matter, and where he told of the changes that he made, and he incidentally mentions Zenos H. Gurley. On page 401 of the Plaintiff's Abstract of Testimony, Jason Briggs says:

I united with the church in 1841, and I remained with it. I have accounted myself a member of that church from that time on, from 1841 to 1885, but I have been in different organizations at different times, as I have already stated; but when in each of these organizations I supposed I was under the church. When I found out that they were teaching anything that was not authorized by the church before 1844, as the law is set forth in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, why, I left at once.

Is not that an honorable thing to do? "When I found they were not teaching the law as found in the books I left them at once."

I always supposed when I belonged to these different organizations that they were the true and direct descendant of the original church, and as soon as my error was revealed to me, I left them,—left them as soon as I found out they were not under the church. These parties whom I have mentioned as having been members of the original church, under my administration in Wisconsin, and afterwards united with me under the banner of some of these other men, was not the true church, did not pretend to be the true church; but it was their belief and faith in joining these various organizations that they were representing the original church. When I joined the organization as led by James J. Strang I accepted him as head of the church; that is, I accepted him as the leader and president of the church, as the successor of Joseph Smith in the presidency of the church; and in accepting James J. Strang as head of the church we accepted him as being the regular, genuine successor to Joseph Smith; that is my understanding of it. I always understood that Strang claimed to be the successor of Joseph Smith by virtue of an appointment which he had received from Joseph Smith, to be his successor. It was through and by virtue of that letter of appointment that Strang claimed to have received (that is what I understood his claim was based upon) a letter from Joseph Smith. And as soon as myself and others who had joined his organization found out that he had been teaching other things not authorized by the church, we discarded him; yes, sir, we did.

Thank God there were such men, who would discard error when they saw it, and not stand up and defend that which was contrary to the will of God:

Zenos H. Gurley, who raised up the branch at Palestine, and who I answered I thought was a member of the Strang church in my examination in chief, was an authorized minister in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints before the death of Joseph Smith, an elder in that church at least, and might have been one of the Seventy, but I can not say that he was one of the Seventy or was not, still he might have been. He was made a president of the Seventy after the death of Joseph Smith, and I think from that, that it is altogether likely that he was a Seventy before the death of Joseph Smith; still I do not know.

I think that is the solution of that problem. Our records show that he was ordained a seventy in 1838, and records elsewhere say he was ordained in 1844. I think he was ordained a seventy in 1838 and a president of seventy in 1844, and so he held the authority of a seventy. But it does not matter as to that.

He was an elder of the original church, there is no manner of question about that, and that would give him the right to organize that branch, being an elder in the original church; but whether joining with Strang invalidated that eldership is a question to be determined, I suppose; but I will say that at the reorganization and at no time since have we understood that it invalidated an eldership in the church. Gurley simply acknowledged Strang as his leader for a time, and when he found out his pretensions to be the leader of the church during his life, then Gurley rejected him and his leadership. That is the same way we looked upon and accepted the claim of William Smith. It was for a short time, and when we found out what his pretensions were, and that they were false, we repudiated him. I did not understand at that time that my authority to build up the church was derived from William Smith or Strang. I had that authority by virtue of my eldership in the original church. It was in 1844 the church split up into these different factions. These people with whom I was associated in Wisconsin were people who were contending for the original doctrine of the church, in its purity. When I say that I withdrew from Brigham Young and others I simply mean I repudiated them; I repudiated their claims to the Presidency as false, on the grounds that they were teaching false doctrine, and something that the church did not authorize; and when I say that I withdrew, I simply mean that I repudiated them, but I refused to have anything to do with the church as represented by them; that is, by Brigham Young and his adherents. And further we were claiming all the time to be the church in succession from 1830, or were following what represented the church in 1830. All the time we claimed that the church we represented was the church in succession established in 1830. I claimed that I belonged to the original church; although we were under different leaders we claimed to belong to the original church, and as soon as we learned that any of our leaders were teaching false doctrine, we left it. That is the reason we left Strang, and Smith, because we considered they were teaching false doctrine, or doctrine that was not authorized by the original church. It did not make any difference to us, for we still considered that we were in the church, although under these different leaders. The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints could not properly be called a new movement or new organization, for that would mean a new organization of the church, which this was not; at least I never considered it so, nor did the church as an organization. It always contended and believed that it was the original church in succession; that was my individual opinion, and that was the attitude of the church as an organization. The church was simply reorganized and placed on a new footing as was necessary after the disruption, and I was one of the principal officers in it at that time. I was one of the seven chosen at that conference.

In answer to the claim that Briggs subsequently repudiated the Reorganized Church and its position as he had others, I quote from his own words as given at the time he stated the foregoing:

I have not stated that all of the parties who took part in that conference of 1852 had been united with with some other branch of the church; if I did I did not mean to make the statement in that way, and these parties I mentioned as having taken part I simply gave them the same credit I asked for; that is, the credit of good intentions; that is that each of them at the time believed it was the true church, that they were joining, and that they were in the church all the time.

I can not say, of course, as to the secret motives, but I know that in my action, I thought it was the church that I joined, else I should not have joined them. These people were simply members of the organized church and were looking for the proper leader of the church. I thought I had found the true leader in Mr. Strang, and as soon as I found out I was mistaken I repudiated Mr. Strang, and I do not understand that I left the original church when I left Mr. Strang and I never did.

REDIRECT EXAMINATION.

Q.—I will ask you to state, Mr. Briggs, at the time you left the Reorganized Church, if you found out that you had made the same mistake with regard to young Joseph Smith being the leader of the church, as you found out about Strang and these other men?

A.—No, sir, I have already stated substantially why I withdrew from the Reorganized Church, and I do not conceive that it is necessary for me to state other reasons, for there may be other reasons besides that, but not questions or reasons involving the Presidency. That point did not figure at all when I withdrew.

I understand that there is a difference between a General Conference and a General Assembly; there has never been, as I understand it, a General Assembly of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; the laws of the Reorganized Church provides for calling one, whenever it is thought necessary by the body to do so. I have always understood that it was competent for the church to call a General Assembly whenever it was deemed necessary. That has always been my understanding of it.

The laws of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints are just the same as the original church; there is no question about that; they were exactly the same. There was never a General Assembly of the original church during the time that I was a member of it from 1841 to 1844.—Plaintiff's Abstract, pp. 406, 407.

That was the attitude of these men. A noble attitude to take. While they contended for the original church and its doctrines and retained their authority and membership, whenever they gave credence to a leader and they found that he was teaching anything contrary to the will of God they left, and left at once, and we wish there had been thousands of such men.

In conclusion to-night, I want to invite your attention to the proclamation made by the Prophet of God, successor of Joseph Smith, soon after having taken upon him the responsibility of his position, when he appealed to all Latter Day Saints in regard to this latter day work. I have not time to read it all, but I will read a small portion of the closing portion of that appeal, and I want to say to every individual here to-night that it is the message of God to you, and as you receive it you will be judged in eternity. Page 294 of volume 3 of the History, I find the declaration of this man of God, chosen to succeed the Prophet, Seer, and Revelator, Joseph Smith. He says:

Now I have not a word to say in advocacy of my right, or my calling. I ask none to believe upon my say so; let each and all examine carefully and without prejudice, asking his God for wisdom to judge aright, and as I have said, so say I now, I have no fears as to the result. I would not that men should hastily run without tidings, nor do I ask that any should place the stake of their salvation upon an earthly arm. "Cursed is he that putteth his trust in man, and maketh flesh his arm." I ask and desire that all may place their stake of salvation upon the author and finisher of our faith—upon the promises and principles of the gospel, pure as preached from the Savior's lips, for in him was no guile, and in his teachings there was no deceit. In the name of the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob, I now call upon all the scattered Saints, upon all the broad earth, to arise and shake off the sleep that hath bound them these many years. take on the armor of the just, calling on the name of the Lord for help, and unite once more for the emancipation of the honest in heart from the power of false doctrines and the shackles of sin. In the name of bleeding Zion, I call upon all those who have been wandering in by and forbidden paths, and have been led astray by wicked and designing men, to turn from their scenes of wickedness and sins of convenience, to turn from their servitude to Satan, in all his seductive devices; from vice in every phase, and from the labor of sin, the wages whereof are ever death, unto their true and delightful allegiance to the principles of the gospel of peace, to the paths of wisdom, to the homage of that God that brought the children of Israel out of bondage; to turn and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon, to lay hold anew upon the rod of iron which surely leads to the tree of life; to remember that those who live to the Lord keep his commandments, and that the promises are unto the faithful, and the reward unto those that endure unto the end. And in the name of the Lord of hosts, I call upon all the inhabitants of the earth to repent, believe, and be baptized, for the time cometh when the judgments of God are to be poured out upon all nations, and the besom of God's wrath shall smoke through the land; when men shall know that there is a God in Israel, and he is mighty to punish or to save; that the prayers of those under the altar have been heard, and a swift retribution is to come, when the despoiler will be despoiled; when those who denied justice shall be judged, and the measure meted unto others shall be meted unto them; when the prisoner shall go free, the oppressed be redeemed, and all Israel shall cry, "Glory to God in the highest be given, for he that is long-suffering and slow to anger, has arisen, and shall bring again Zion." Amen and Amen.

That is the voice of God through his Prophet to latter day Israel; and latter day Israel, wherever they may be found, will be held to account for the manner in which they receive that message. That man was authorized of God, pointed out in the days of his father as the successor. He comes to his place regularly ordained by the authority of high heaven, and gave that message, dated Nauvoo, Illinois, July 19, 1861; and Israel, so far as they heed that message from the man of God will be accepted of God, and if not the condemnation of Israel's God will rest upon them. I thank you for your attention.

CENTRAL CHURCH, KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

By special request the mission services conducted by Bishop R. C. Evans, March 13 to 27, were continued a week longer than as advertised and closed with a large audience Sunday evening, April 3.

We can now look back upon the effort feeling that it was successful from several viewpoints.

The interest manifest by those outside the faith was very gratifying and we hope the membership will retain the revived feeling which they manifested. Altogether thirteen were baptized, but we do not mention this as an indication of the success of the meetings, it was only an incident. The Central Church Bulletin had the following to say of the effort:

We gained our point in that everything was just a little if not a great deal better than last year—our preparations were more extensive—the preaching was better so many have testified—if no other testimony the fact that people sat for nearly one hour and a half and listened with unabated interest—that shows whether they were interested or not, and the fact that several came forward at the close of the sermon and asked for the privilege of being baptized speaks well for the kind of preaching done.

The meetings were held in the main for the purpose of winning souls to Christ and several, mostly young people, we are glad to note, bravely took up the cross of the great Master and we welcome them into the fold and shall strive to help them to walk in the "narrow way" that they may with us wear the crown of duty done by and by.

We believe that the attendance was considerably better as a whole this year than last—we had more nonmembers and fewer members from our other churches in the city and vicinity—the church was well filled at every service and the order maintained was a subject of favorable comment from our visiting friends. Nearly every bit of the large amount of advertising matter which we had prepared was used—more invitations were given by mail and by house to house canvass than ever before—some have said it was the greatest missionary effort ever made by our church in Kansas City.

We had feared that we would have an over supply of literature on hand, but not so, it is nearly all gone—and you that gave your means to help buy this literature what a satisfaction it surely will be to you to know that some of those who were baptized prefaced their request for admittance into the church by saying, "I have listened to the preaching and I have read this literature and it teaches as I believe and now I want to be baptized."

Much credit is due to all who helped to make these meetings successful—any movement of that kind must and will be successful where all the people are interested and work with the same system and diligence that we have put into our efforts.

May the good influences that have come from these meetings remain and inspire us to move right forward in the line of steady and continual progress.

Announcement was made in the HERALD to the effect that my application for membership in the Ministers' Alliance would come up for a final hearing on April 4. It had been referred back to the executive committee who at the previous meeting had asked for an interpretation of the rule of the alliance to the effect that "Any minister in good standing in his denomination shall be eligible for membership." At the meeting on April 4, the committee brought in a report which read as follows: "The executive committee recommend that the application be rejected." This was quickly put to the house and all but one of the fifty or more ministers voted very heartily for the recommendation. I arose and asked the chairman if there was any reason or reasons why my application was rejected, and he told me I was referred to the executive committee, and with that I thought it was about time for me to depart, so I retired at once. The inconsistency of their action appears, when notwithstanding I assured the committee that my application was subject to any inquiry or investigation they might wish to make, they simply treated it as only worthy of sneer and contempt. Following this action I have been interviewed by reporters from each of the Kansas City papers and all of them expressed their sympathy with me and disgust with the ministers, and have given our church in this city such an advertising that we will gain instead of losing by this incident. Many have been free to express their interest and sympathy over the matter among my neighbors and friends and unite in pronouncing my rejection as an exhibition of religious bigotry and intolerance with which the world has been cursed in the ages of the past and from which it ought to be free in this age of enlightenment and liberty.

On Sunday evening, April 10, I spoke on the subject, "Rejected by the Ministers' Alliance; Why?" and was assisted by Elders J. F. Mintun, of Des Moines, Iowa, and Amos Berve, of Rock Island, Illinois, both of whom belong to the ministers' associations in those cities. The papers gave us a very fair representation of this effort also, and several of our neighbors were present who are members of other churches and were eager to commend the spirit which was manifest in the service and did not hesitate to express their displeasure at the action of the alliance.

Some of our own ministers have asked me why I wanted to join this association of ministers? Well, I am here to do good in every way that I can and am willing to cooperate with others, so far as possible, who claim to be doing likewise, and I determined that if the ministers of this city would not recognize the good we are striving to do, nor permit us to work with them, I would make them say so and throw the responsibility upon them. Now it is up to them to meet it before consistent men in this world and before God in heaven. To be received or rejected you can not hurt a Latter Day Saint.

A very nice representative body of the married people of the church met in the church parlors March 9, under the auspices of pastor's Bible class and the Ladies' Aid Society and enjoyed a well prepared supper, then some after dinner speeches as follows: "Resolved, That it is the duty of all church men to ally themselves with the Sunday school for Bible study," by Seth Sandy. "How may the pastor and the men of his pastorate become more closely associated that they may meet each other's needs," by Walter Lewis. "How to build the spirituality of Central Church," by George H. Hidy. "How much can one lift, or after baptism, what?" by W. R. Pickering. "What need does the Bulletin fill in our church life," by Harvey Sandy. "How to improve the music of Central Church," by Mrs. O. H. Riggs. "How may we individually help in the coming two weeks' meetings," by the pastor. This meeting with W. R. Pickering as toastmaster was very interesting and we should have more such occasions so that we might get closer together socially.—Bulletin.

Our branch has had a net gain in membership of one hundred and fifty by letter and by baptism since November 1, 1908. We then numbered one hundred and eighty-nine and we now number three hundred and thirty-nine, a substantial case, as shown by the Sunday school, as we noted on the blackboard last Sunday an attendance of two hundred and ten, as compared with an attendance of one hundred and fourteen a year ago.

Bro. and Sr. W. N. Robinson, of Tulsa, Oklahoma, have recently located in this city, having purchased a home at 2823 Harrison street. We are delighted to have them with us, for they are willing workers. Sister Robinson we expect will have charge of the music at the church with Sr. Amy E. Winning who acts as organist.

A reception in honor of Bro. and Sr. R. C. Evans was held at the home of Bro. and Sr. W. R. Pickering, 2827 Forest avenue, on the evening of April 4. About seventy-five were present, enjoying the program of music and speeches and also refreshments, and all report a good time.

We were favored with a sermon by our newly elected General Sunday School Superintendent, Elder Daniel Macgregor, Sunday morning, April 10.

A great number of our people have been in constant attendance at the sessions of the General Conference at Independence.

Ugly Hands.

The roughened hands that never shirked,
The plain brown hands that planned and worked
Are folded now, in peace and rest,
Upon the wayworn, weary breast.

O'er ivory keys they never strayed;
Embroidery, lace, they never made.
Poor, tired-out hands, on one of them
Flashed never brilliant, shining gem.

They cooked and washed, they scrubbed and mended,
Unto the children fondly tended;
They soothed the head that ached and beat,
And gently bathed the fevered feet.

They gladly toiled from morn till night
That they might other hands keep white,
And tried so hard to roses spread
Adown the path for loved one's tread.

They were so tender, quiet, we Ne'er noticed how unselfishly
They clasped each cross with trust and prayer,
And burdens bore more than their share.

Aye, ugly, coarse, unlovely quite
They look to our defective sight;
But to their mission dutiful
In God's eyes they are beautiful.

Theories.

Theory is a pleasant possession. It saves thinking and seems to offer absolution from responsibility as to results, yet it has in many ways figured larger as an obstruction than as a chariot of progress. The pagan has crude theories of his gods, and is kept in moral darkness. A farmer once had a theory of cutting his oats off when a few inches high, thinking when it came up again it would be better off for the cutting. As results he harvested only a fair crop of straw. We smile at this but it is merely a case of letting blank theory work its logical work.

The true scientist may have theories about what he does not know, but as he studies and comes into facts, his theories melt into thin air if they do not agree with the facts. The teachable mind, sitting reverently before nature, has been able to rise up and lead the human race on the forward march.

As a rule, parents are more or less under the spell of the theory in regard to dealing with children. Not always are they conscious of this. They simply think they know a law or two that can be depended on to work out the child's salvation, and that if it does not the child, not the law, is "out of the way."

The test as to theory holding, is to inquire whether one is or is not really trying to study the child, is willing to lay aside all he thinks he knows and try to get at facts, or whether one is trying to bring the child into harmony with certain iron bound rules that one has, without question, accepted from others.

We praise the man who is reverent toward nature, who studies her ways in tree or vine. Acting on similar principle, "let the human child blossom under your eyes." Let your chief text-book be the child. Then how wise to study God's thought patiently, lovingly, optimistically, instead of trying to reform the child according to some musty old theory under whose reign too many lives have been dwarfed. Let us study till we can give the child the heart and mind nurture, the love's sunshine that his individuality demands.

WILLOUGHBY, OHIO, April 24, 1910.

Editors Herald: As this is a cold, rainy day, and I can not walk over to Kirtland meeting, I feel like writing a few lines in reference to experiences had in the past few years. Up to the past few years I have lived in North Mentor, the place where the name of Latter Day Saint is a hiss and a byword, where they turned down such men as Columbus Scott, E. L. and William H. Kelley, U. W. Greene, and others. I oftentimes longed and prayed that God would open up a way for myself and family to either leave or sell our farm, and move to a more congenial clime. Those good enough people after turning us out of their schoolhouses and churches for three successive years, chose me as their Bible class teacher in the union Sunday school. This spring when organizing, they wanted me to be superintendent and Bible class teacher. I told them I would if I remained on the farm. There have been but two sermons preached in the church since our elders preached there. At present the Sunday school is closed, and myself and family are living in Willoughby. Like Ephraim of old they are left to their idols.

One day over a year ago while working in the field, I kneeled behind the harrow and asked God to open up a way for us out of our then present environment. The Spirit said, Be content where you are. I told my wife we would stay where we were for the present. Like Joseph down in Egypt, the Lord was always mindful of us and also of our prayers, and was shaping all things for our good and we knew it not. This spring he caused a man to come to us to whom we leased our farm, and we are now two and one half miles from Kirtland and twenty-five cents will pay our fare to Cleveland whenever we want to meet with the Saints there. I obtained steady employment the year around at light labor, with good wages, and now we are happy.

While living in North Mentor, I always spoke a word in behalf of the angel message where opportunity afforded, and shall continue to do while here.

In conclusion, "Let patience have her perfect work, and trust in the Lord and do good and thou shalt dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed." Ever praying for the welfare of Zion and asking the prayers of the Saints in behalf of myself and family, I remain your brother in the faith,

Saints' Herald: The HERALD is indeed a welcome visitor, laden with its pages of food for the hungry soul. I have read with great interest the many letters and testimonies regarding this great work and I desire to add mine. I know this work is true, and as the times go by and I see more of its works, the more confirmed I am as to its divinity.

Wife and I were permitted to attend the General Conference at Independence, and greatly enjoyed ourselves and felt it was good to be a Saint in latter days. Brethren Whiting, Downey, and Logeman did all they could to show us points of interest, and also land and some homes in the city, and we hope to have a home in Zion or regions round about as soon as wisdom may direct. Brother Whiting, who lives on West Walnut street, in Independence, does a little along real estate lines and we cheerfully recommend him to Saints as a brother worthy of your confidence and trust, and he has a nice rig, and can show you anywhere you may wish to go.

While at conference we were permitted to hear the gifts of the gospel, and all through that vast assembly you could hear the evidence that it is indeed the work of the living God. We are glad to have such knowledge and to know we are numbered among the children of God, and earnestly pray that we may do nothing in word, thought, or deed that will bring reproach upon this work we love so well.

Wife and I are members of the Clearwater Branch of the Central Nebraska District, and as we live ten miles from church we do not get to services as often as we would like to. As our branch is struggling hard for existence, I ask an interest in the prayers of all your readers that we may hold on until such times as God will deem wise to come to our relief and remove those things that bring gloom and sadness to our hearts. We would say to ye missionaries who have been assigned to Central Nebraska, there are Saints at Clearwater who would be glad to see you, and also those outside of the church will give you a hearing. So don't forget us as we need all the help you can give us.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
F. S. GATENBY.

TROCHU VALLEY, ALBERTA, April 3, 1910.

Dear Herald: As this is the first Sunday in the month, the day when the people of the Lord will assemble together to partake of the emblems of our Savior's blood that was shed on Calvary's cross to redeem a ruined world, and as I am isolated away out here in this far away Alberta, far from the association of Saints and loved ones, I wish I could be where I could enjoy church privileges. There are lots of preachers here, but they can't take the place of our preachers. The Lord has not forgotten us, but we have been greatly blessed since coming here. We take the HERALD and Autumn Leaves and I am sure we would be lonesome without them, as we read so many letters from different parts of the world, and can see how the work is progressing. It was glorious news to read about the Order of Enoch being established, as I believe it foretakens the redemption of Zion. I long to live worthy to be a member of that order. Surely the Lord is remembering Zion and bringing her comforts once more.

This part of Alberta is pretty well settled now and school-houses all around us. There will be two or three new railroads opened up in this part of the country this summer. One crosses our place and they say it must be finished this summer. So any of the elders who pass through Alberta will have no trouble in finding where we live. I am sure they will find a welcome, as we would like to have the gospel opened up here as soon as possible. I believe there are some who will obey if they hear the gospel. Some of the people here say they never heard of Latter Day Saints. It seems so strange that so many have never heard the angel's message. It makes me feel like doing all I can to help others to hear it. I have had many beautiful dreams and visions which I would like to relate, but will not at the present time. Now if any of the Saints see this letter please do not pass us by, as we live about four miles from Trochu Valley.

MARTHA THORP.

FANSHAWE, OKLAHOMA, April 6, 1910.

Editors Herald: As I have had many letters in answer to one which I published in the HERALD, and as I find it impossible to answer them separately, I will ask space in your paper to more minutely describe our country to those who have written me, and all who may be interested. First, we have a government townsite and can give warranty deeds to our lots. We have good uplands adjacent to our town which is now designated coal land, and when this land is placed upon the market it will be sold at the government classed price, which is from twenty-five cents to four dollars per acre, and will give thousands of homes to the homeless. This strip of land is over one hundred and twenty-five miles long and always from one to six miles wide. At our town it is one and one half miles wide. This land is expected to sell soon. South of our town the great Fauch River bottom and valley land, which is always from four to six miles in width, is fine land and has been selling from ten to twelve and one half dollars per acre. But there is half of this vast body of land that is not allotted, which means that it is still vacant and belongs to the Indians in common, but will soon be on the market.

We have good schools in our town. The population is two hundred. We have a nice Latter Day Saints' church with an organ in it and a branch of forty-seven members. The water is good; there is lumber at hand to build with, dressed at from fifteen to eighteen per thousand; rough at ten to twelve dollars per thousand. The sawmills which are running near here are all the public works that we have here now since the coal miners struck on April 1. We have coal works three and one fourth miles from here and coal right in our town, undeveloped, but in paying quantities. A man can come here and buy land by watching his chances, and when all the above land is on the market, can get a choice tract of land. The Government has promised us an addition to our town in the early summer. This will give people a chance to buy unimproved lots at government prices.

As our winters are mild those of the North can find shelter during the cold winter months by locating here.

I am very anxious to see Saints locate here. I want to see the homeless get homes. Of course it might be that some coming here might not find just what their hearts desired, but I am sure they could get land and farms when all this land is on the market, which will not be long. We believed this Congress would place it upon the market, but so far it has not been done. When I wrote the HERALD before I thought it would be on the market in three months.

As I have given a minute description of our town and the lands surrounding it, I hope all who wrote me personal letters will see this. I am greatly interested in the restored gospel, and desire our town to be a home for as many Saints as it is God's will.

Yours in bonds,
J. H. LEWIS.

SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS, April 18, 1910.

Dear Herald: We are few in number, but feel that God is watching over us. We have organized a ladies' prayer union and meet each Thursday, and God has always been ready to do his part when we are humble before him. When I look back over my past and see how little I have done, I feel sad. At a prayer meeting in Oklahoma seven years ago, I asked the Saints to pray for my husband and dear old Brother Montague told me by the voice of the Spirit that if

I would live humbly I would yet see him in the church. Thanks be to God he has come in and was baptized last February at Taylorville, Illinois. I can not express the joy I have felt since that time.

My mind often goes back to Brother Montague, who has gone on before, when he told us his time was short and told us of the beautiful vision that God has shown him. He showed him that he had never stepped aside from the path of duty and his work was accepted. I have often thought, oh, that I could live in this life so that I could come forth in that great morning to reign with God and his Saints. I am trying in my weak way to live this beautiful gospel which is all the world to me. Pray for the Saints here in Springfield that we may live to hear the words, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

Your sister in the precious faith,
ANNAS HOLNEY.

514 WEST VINE STREET.

HOOD RIVER, OREGON; April 3, 1910.

Dear Herald: This is one of the lovely Sabbath days that God has given us to worship him. I was not able to go, and one boy twelve years old is staying with me. I have eight children, and four of them belong to the church. I teach my children to ask the Lord to help them choose their life companions. I know he will direct in such matters if we will put our faith in him and abide the time.

Two years ago we were just about to move to this State from Iowa, and were thinking of dividing our family, part staying in Iowa with their father and the rest coming to Oregon. But the Lord spoke to us through administration and told us we were not to divide our family, but to go with godspeed. Our hearts have been made to rejoice, as we have a branch here, and there have been quite a number baptized, and several ordained. There can be two officers sent out to preach the gospel to the world and leave us three at home to look after the Saints in the branch.

I love to read the letters from the Saints and will say that I feel that I am one of the weakest of God's children, and hope that you will pray for me that I may become stronger and live close to him who is the God of all who humbly seek him in time of trouble.

Your sister,
MARIA HOWARD.

Editors Herald: What shall I say to express my appreciation of the feasts of reading-matter provided of late in the church publications? Something ought to be said in acknowledgment of the extra labor and painstaking if only "thank you." It seems to me that if ever there was a time when a member of the church could feel an honest pride in being numbered with the people called to be Latter Day Saints, it is now. Truly, "Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face now wax pale." The reading of the four editorials, "Early ideals of the church," and the latest magazine number of the SAINTS' HERALD will certainly cause the weakest Saint, that is weakest in the faith, to feel as if he were strong.

And they who through long years of labor under trying circumstances have done their part toward bringing about the present condition, must feel glad and thankful that through the help of God, they shrank not to improve the opportunities set before them, and now after the summing up, they can see how great the work was, though at the time it may have seemed discouragingly slow.

And what an incentive those reviews will be to the more youthful of the church to thrust in their sickles and labor with their might while the day lasts, that they, too, may be found among the honored ones at the last grand review, and hear the Master say, "Well done, enter into the joy of thy Lord." None then will wish to be among the faltering ones who must stand back while the faithful workers step forward to receive their crown.

The conference news has been keenly enjoyed by many who could not attend, the writer among them, especially that of the first day, April 6. And we wait for more. The influence that comes from this last conference, is to the writer at least just the opposite to that of last year in this one respect: last year seemed to convey the feeling of a soon closing up of all things, as if the sands of time had nearly run out. But this year seems to indicate an entering upon a new era, or rather a renewed lease of life and activity, not to any individual, but to the church. I presume the two "gavels" have been the cause of these influences. May this new one be wielded in the hand of our aged and esteemed President many times, and its ring call forth the activity of by-gone years, and that a renewed vigor of both body and mind may be in store for him.

In the hope of eternal life,
E. BURTON.

DES MOINES, IOWA, March 26, 1910.

Editors Herald: Last Sunday it was my good pleasure to lead into the waters of baptism two old people, Brother and Sister Norton, aged respectively seventy and sixty-four, whose hearts have been made joyous and glad at the privilege granted them of receiving gospel privileges while yet life is spared. They have been associated with other religious organizations, and thought that they had been wholly sanctified, but they now rejoice that they have learned the way of life more perfectly. It does one's heart good to hear them express the joy and satisfaction they feel in having found the living Christ. They had thought that when they found those who had enjoyed gospel privileges they would find a loving and united people, but to find it otherwise has caused them some degree of sorrow, but with all this knowledge that some have not at all times manifested the Spirit of Christ they are convinced that it is not the fault of the gospel, nor of God's servants who minister the word, but the result of human weakness. How devoted should all of God's people be to God and each other so as not to cause sadness in the hearts of babes in the kingdom, or to cause others nearing the kingdom to stumble, as has often been the case, and thus the work of preaching the word has been hindered. God is truly blessing his Saints to understand the workings of the Spirit better, and to have greater charity for those who are in darkness, or influenced by an unwise or unrighteous spirit.

The Healer's Convention held in this city from the 17th to the 25th was something out of the ordinary. It demonstrates that one with a specialty or hobby can draw the crowds, and secure the applause of the common people. Judging from what I could observe during my attendance at four of the services I conclude that Dr. F. E. Yokum and his associates are honest, but woefully deceived. They certainly have a sympathetic interest in humanity's great need of physical relief, and wrought with all that was in them to that end. There was no special indications that they were laboring for personal aggrandizement, but for what they thought was the uplift of humanity. Associated with Doctor Yokum was an Episcopal minister and his wife, a Christian minister, a Baptist, with a large following of the Pentecostal people, who were credited with having the gift of tongues some time ago in the city revivals here. There was no claim that one church was any better than another, but that they were advocating the building up of the church or kingdom of God in the heart, the invisible church. No claim was made as to the source of the present movement, but that it was the outgrowth of what people had longed for and what the Scriptures taught as a part of the Christ-work, and should have always been preached.

No claim is made for any special authority through which the sick are healed, but that anyone who is a doer of what the Scriptures advocate in regard to healing is used of God to bring about the results. The leader, Doctor Yokumi, is a Methodist, but claims no special authority from that source, but claims that he has been healed through the prayers and the laying on of hands of a member of the Catholic Church who could not read a word, but simply by doing what he had requested he was immediately healed, because this person was a doer of the word relating to healing. He told of other healings that had been done by those who made no previous pretensions of religious service, but on the contrary had been dissipated and vicious people.

They claim the right to lay hands on anyone whom the Spirit directs,—and they claim that God reveals nearly everything for them to do,—and sends them to go and heal anyone no matter where located or whatever the disease. They claim that physicians or hospitals were never built for a Christian. If a person is really a Christian they will have no need of either.

I decided that the power by which whatever healings came, if any did come, was through mental suggestion and personal magnetism. I think more through mental suggestion than any other way.

I decided that it did not come from God, for the reasons that they misapplied nearly all the scriptures that they quoted relating to the church and the gifts of healing connected therewith; they did not comply with the law relating to healing fully; they did not recognize the authority of the church through which God had promised healing; and they claim that healing would follow anyone who had hands laid on them with prayer whether they believed in the gospel who laid on hands or not, or whether the person who was sick believed the gospel or not. Another feature that showed that the work was not in accord with the Spirit with which Christ operated while here on earth, was that whenever anything that would indicate that some blessing had come to any, they instructed them to go out and tell others, and bring them to be healed, and they made a public demonstration of all acts that had the appearance of healing, while Jesus said, "Go, and tell no man."

A claim was made that Doctor Yokumi learned first of the power of healing through the Dowie movement. The movement that brought about the Healer's Convention began here some time last October.

They claim all sickness is of the Devil, and they claim to cast out devils when they heal a person of drunkenness, pride, the morphine habit, the tobacco or opium habit, of paralysis, etc. They claim that the basis of all healing is, "Upon this rock I will build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." It is the rock that will heal. He claims that every wicked person is one of the gates of hell, and that the rock is Jesus. They bless handkerchiefs, and send them to be laid on the sick, and claim healing the same as when hands are laid upon them.

They slap their hands and repeat continuously, "Glory to God," "Glory," "Praise God," "Yes, Lord," and such expressions. One of the leaders claimed that she was saved, not at the anxious seat, not at conversion, not when she gave her heart to God, but nineteen hundred years ago. It was when Jesus said, "It is finished." By the blood are we healed and are we saved, is the claim.

It is advocated by them that the "Unity of the spirit in the bond of peace" is not brought about by legislation or any special theory, thus denying that Jesus Christ came with any special doctrine, that through it unity would be brought about.

Christian Science and healing by mesmerism or hypnotism is denounced, and they deny that there is any fanaticism connected with their work, but that they just hold up Jesus.

They took up no collections, but put a hat on the platform and claimed that it was the duty of every one, if they wished to be healed, to lay all at the apostles' feet, thus assuming that they were apostles, and when I inquired how they became apostles, I was answered that because they healed therefore the signs of an apostle existed. That if one had the gift of tongues or the interpretation of tongues or healed the sick therefore they were apostles.

This will give a general idea of the work at the Healer's Convention, and assist in determining its godliness.

I will preach my closing sermon in the city for the conference year to-morrow morning. When I scan the work of the year, though I have not seen the results that I desired, yet I enjoy the fact that I have occupied the time and opportunities that have been presented, and have enjoyed the approval of my heavenly Father as much as any year that I have ministered during the thirty-two years of my ministerial work. The prospects for an ingathering are brightening. The greatest need of the church to-day is to follow the oft-repeated invitation of the loving Father, "Come up higher." We must make the church a place where those who enter as babes in the kingdom may find spiritual nourishment and care, a place of refuge in time of trouble, and then invite the wanderers in. Though weak material and inconvenient places for occupancy may be all that is offered for us to use, yet with God's blessings the Saints and God's ministers can build up the kingdom of God and establish his righteousness. The source of all blessings is of God. Only those who are led by the Spirit of God are his children. We are not in the line of our childhood when led by any other spirit, and the Spirit will fill us with the love of God, and love for our neighbor, but more especially for our brethren, and through this means alone can we assist to bring about God's purposes. Though we may have the gift of prophecy, speak with the tongues of angels, understand all mysteries, have faith to remove mountains, bestow all our goods to feed the poor, and our body to be burned, yet if we have not the pure love of God, it will profit us nothing, so says inspiration. Though we may have prophesied and done many wonderful works, yet if we work after the secret working of Satan to destroy the influence of a brother, or even an enemy, then will we be unworthy the welcome of our God. Though we may with eloquence proclaim the message of the gospel, if it is done for any other reason than to build up the kingdom of God, it will profit us nothing, though it may be the means of helping others to see the truth. How slow, it seems, are the children of God to fully enter in and occupy as the Spirit of God directs, and to shun not to declare the whole counsel of God, because of what others may say. To labor with an eye single to the glory of God is oftentimes forgotten in the zealous labor we may perform. We too often get our eye on self, or some selfish interest and that stands between us and God. When these thoughts have passed through my mind, I feel so unworthy to be a child of God. I praise God for his great condescension, and long-suffering to us. O, that men would praise the Lord for his goodness and his wonderful works to the children of men.

With hope and praise I continue in the service of the Master, desiring to finish the work he has given me to do.

J. F. MINTUN.

MOUND CITY, KANSAS, April 23, 1910.

Dear Saints: God works in mysterious ways among his children. I went to Scammon, Kansas, to work, and a few days afterwards was taken sick with appendicitis and the doctors said I would never get well without undergoing an operation. I sent for my father, and he went to the hospital at Pittsburg to see another doctor, and he also said I would have to be operated on; said if I wasn't operated on now, it would come back and might kill me, so the day was set for the operation. All the Saints in Scammon felt sad, and commenced praying that something would turn out so I would not need to undergo the operation. At first I was very sick, had hard pain, and also sinking spells, so I was willing to give my consent for the operation, but when the Saints commenced praying for me, my mind was changed, and I told them I would rather die than to have an operation. I was administered to every night, and the pain left me and I could sleep well all night. In the morning before starting to the hospital, I was administered to by Brother Martin, and he spoke in prophecy and said that God's hand had been over me in the past and if faithful he would be with me in the future and I would receive a blessing. I received many blessings, and got up out of bed and commenced to gain strength and started on the train for home, a distance of over forty miles. I feel weak yet, but am thankful to our heavenly Father and I ask the prayers of all the Saints in my behalf.

LILLIE SIMPSON.

The Field Like the Church.

I live on a farm, and the many kinds of soil and its many conditions remind me of the many kinds of persons who join the church, and of their various conditions and surroundings in life.

The up-to-date farmer's duty is something like the up-to-date church official's. He has something else to do besides studying the government bulletins, and having faith in the best method of raising crops; he must also have works, for "faith without works is dead." In the spring time the farmer observes the "roll weeds" and the Russian thistles blowing across his field, not only scattering foul seeds by the wayside, but all over his field. His neighbors' horses and cattle also insist upon making a pasture of his farm and in trampling his best soil harder and harder, and for convenience the public makes a cut-off highway across his land. He not only objects to all of this, but gets to work and builds a strong wire fence all around the farm. Sometimes the public does not like this and pulls it down in order to travel the cut-off road and save time. The farmer now feels it his duty to get on the fighting line and builds his fence higher and stronger than ever, a kind of "high protection"; then he puts up a prohibition notice which reads: "All trespassers (sinners) will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law." Sometimes the enemy will threaten the life of the farmer, and for this they are sent away into the everlasting punishment (State prison).

After he succeeds in shutting all enemies out of his field, the up-to-date farmer next turns his attention to the enemies within. The weed seeds which were scattered all over his farm, he covers with hay, straw, and stubble and then sets them on fire, burning and heating them until they can not grow. In raising his crop the farmer accepts the services of his entire family. The women folks have charge of the small seeds, the flowers, and the kitchen garden (kindergarten), some of the truck patch, and small fruits. Some of these they start early in hot beds and cold frames. The farmer now prepares the soil by plowing (in a dry country) seven to eight inches deep in order to hold the moisture during the dry part of the season, and in order to give the young plants depth of soil. Thorough work at this time often saves a good crop at the harvest time.

Again the farmer, like the church official, does not plow very deep until he strikes stony ground and his plow jumps out. He now calls one of his sons to come with pick and shovel and remove the stone to a depth of eight inches. The farmer's plow next strikes a thicket of thorns and the horses refuse to go through them. Other sons are called upon and set to work digging out the enemy and cutting off the roots. He now plows into a very wet ravine where the soil is too moist to raise a full crop. He now sends for more help, makes a sewer ditch through the center and a prohibition ditch around on the hillsides, which relieves the good soil of too much foul moisture (tea and coffee habits). By carefully plowing for over a month, the farmer finds the soil in his field well prepared for the sowing of the good seed, except on the old cut-off road extending from east to west across his farm. It becomes quite a puzzle to the farmer and his sons just how best to get rid of the hard soil in this highway. Finally the farmer telephones his troubles to the government experimental station for help. The experiment station soon makes known to him over the same wire that they have an old soldier, an experienced nurseryman, used to handling Judson and high explosives, sometimes called the Jotsman, whom they can send in a few days to pulverize the hard pan in the wayside.

In a few days "Jots" arrived at the farm, and after introduction to the farmer, told him that he was from Missouri and to show him the cause of his difficulty. The farmer, after telling the official how bad he felt when there was extreme opposition, debate, etc., going on, took the Jotsman to the old trail across the field. Here they soon jotted in a row of holes about three feet deep and twenty feet apart from the west to the east side of the farm. The official told the farmer that they would now put in the Judson powder, explosives, and the fuse, but the farmer politely told "Jots" that he would rather see him afar off with quite a gulf between them. Before leaving, Jots asked the farmer the name of the old trail across the land and also how far it extended from east to west. The farmer replied: "It is called the old Mormon trail, first made by Brigham and those who 'departed from the faith,' and extends from Nauvoo to Salt Lake City, Utah." The last time the farmer remembers of seeing the "Jotsman," he was going on West, down the firing line towards Salt Lake City, blowing the old polygamus trail into smithereens (the one-wife system as originally taught by the old church while under its leader, Joseph Smith).

After the heavy explosions and cannonading made by this official, the clouds gathered and a copious rain fell on the unjust trail, and filled up all the holes and soaked the hard hearted soil until it became moist enough for the farmer and his sons to thoroughly cultivate and get in readiness for sowing time. The work of thoroughly preparing the soil now having been completed, behold an up-to-date sower went forth to sow, drill, list, etc., and as he sowed the pure, government-tested seed, it fell upon good soil, well prepared, and brought forth an abundant crop, thirty, sixty, and a hundred fold, and the farmer and his helpers gathered the grain into the storehouse, and the good steward (Bishop) said: "Well done, good and faithful sons and daughters; enter into the joy of thy Lord" (Zion).

W. D. MCKNIGHT.

LOGAN, OKLAHOMA, March 10, 1910.

Extracts from Letters.

Mrs. Emma Basquin, Edgewood, Iowa: "We live four and one half miles from town, and there is one family of Saints in town. I get quite lonesome sometimes for the company of other Saints, and the need of an elder, but try to do the best I can and hope for a better chance when we have fulfilled our duties here. I am the only one in our family and have no relatives in this faith; so you see it is pretty hard for me sometimes, but God has been so good to me that I hope that the rest may yet see and believe too. I have been healed since coming into this faith. I was so sick that I could not work at all and part of the time could not walk, but thanks be to God, I am now as well as ever and do all my own work with my daughter's help. We rented a small farm last spring and God has blessed us in many ways since then. I was baptized two years ago, May 20, 1908, by Bro. S. M. Reiste. Since then I have a dear little baby girl to care for, and I thank God every day for his mercy and kindness. I am so sorry that my husband does not belong, as then I could do more for the church in other ways. He will not believe there is a living God, but calls it all chance."

J. C. Christensen, Joplin, Missouri: "My home address, till further notice, will be 2225 Empire street, Joplin, Missouri. I am greatly in need of the History of the Disciples in the Western Reserve of Ohio, by A. Hayden. Where can I get a copy? Who can and will respond?"

Bro. Noel Thornton, Nebraska City, Nebraska: "I was baptized August 1, 1909, at Nebraska City, by W. M. Self, and confirmed by J. R. Sutton and G. H. Hilliard. I was born at Fairfax, Missouri. I love to be with the Saints of Nebraska, and I want to be found working for the good of the church. I go to Sunday school, prayer meeting, and church. I love to go where I can work for my Christ and do good."

Bro. R. W. Taylor, Stafford, England: "Our district conference met at Priestly Road, Birmingham. I had the pleasure of attending all the meetings. I especially enjoyed the testimony meeting on Sunday. I felt as Peter said to the Master at the time of the transfiguration, that it was good for us to be there. It is the first conference that I have attended since I have been in the church. It puts me in mind of the gatherings at the Saints' church in Lamoni. We never see such large numbers at the meetings here. We are but few in number at the Stafford Branch, but I believe we are all trying to do all we can for the good work. We meet together from time to time, remembering the Lord's promise that where two or three are met together in my name, there am I in the midst of them."

Bro. Allen McAlister, Alvarado, Texas: "I want to tell you a few of my experiences in the faith: I have seen my grandmother healed with the power of God, and I saw a lady who was blind administered to and now she can see. I want all of the Saints to pray for me that I may be a shining light. I am twenty years of age. I have had the oversight of my mother, four sisters, and two brothers ever since I was sixteen years old. My trials are great, but I have a desire to serve the Lord. The trials of life have almost choked out the good seed that was sown in my heart; however, there is a sweet morsel of God's love that I enjoy when I arouse myself to a sense of my duty, and by the help of God I hope to overcome the wicked one. I was baptized in my fourteenth year by W. R. Standefer. I have seen many of the gifts of God manifested among his dear Saints. When I think of those days it makes my soul rejoice in the Lord and I wonder why I have strayed away from him. I desire all of the Saints to pray for me."

Bro. W. H. Davenport, San Antonio, Texas: "The work is in fair condition here, the Second San Antonio Branch. We have four meetings every Lord's day; Sunday school at 10 a. m.; preaching at 11; prayer meeting at 3 p. m.; and preaching again at 8 p. m.; prayer meeting every Wednesday night; sacrament monthly. Our worthy branch president.

Bro. Ed. N. McRae, has not been well for quite a while. Our district conference was held with the First San Antonio Branch, March 18 and 20. The speakers were Brn. W. C. Carl, D. S. Palmer, W. H. Mannering, and O. D. Johnson. The officers elected for the ensuing year were as follows: W. C. Carl president; D. S. Palmer vice-president; Hal Hamilton Davenport secretary; Otho Adams assistant secretary."

Bro. John H. Tibbles, Ohio, Missouri: "A few weeks ago I wrote you about how our Sunday school outgrew our room capacity, and that we had provided the schoolhouse for Sunday school, and how some had hurt our school by accusing me of being a Mormon. Well, these parties kept agitating the matter until we were locked out for a couple of Sundays. Then the house was reopened, but the people demanded a reorganization, which meant that they wanted me to resign. Of course, I accommodated them and we have resumed our Sunday school class at home. I might have held on, but I have always thought that there was more lost than gained by tenacious contention."

News From Branches.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND.

On Easter morning a quiet but pretty home wedding was solemnized when Elder J. D. Suttill impressively joined in happy wedlock Bro. Alma Bearse and Sr. Elouise Delano of the Boston Branch.

On the evening of Easter Day the Providence Sunday school gave a concert quite worthy of note, consisting of appropriate selections by the primary department and a song story rendered by adults and both senior and junior choirs, under the efficient direction of our Sunday school chorister, Sr. Ora Holmes.

Our primary superintendent, Sr. Cora Main, introduced a beautiful original tableaux of a white cross veiled in white, and at the account of the triumphant entry into Jerusalem the children of the department arose and with palms in hand waved the same to the tune of "Hosannah" which they and the chorus sang. As the song and chorus progressed to the portrayal of the death on calvary, the larger girls of the primary department veiled the cross in black, and Sister Main arrayed in Grecian garb of white, with scarf draped in graceful folds from the shoulder, was seen leaning in an attitude more eloquent than words, against the shrouded cross in utter misery and sadness over the death of the Beloved One who, in the story, had healed the blind beggar boy who was lamenting the death of his kind master. When the story recounted the restoration to life again of His Beloved, the children were in evidence again to unveil the glorified cross, and the aforementioned gleaming cross with its pink flowers and Easter lilies was exposed to view, while the little ones knelt with a lily in each hand outstretched toward the cross in an attitude of homage and adoration, while the chorus sang the last hosannas. There were many moist eyes to testify of the pathetic beauty created in the beautiful tableaux that were presented, and the impression of the tragedy on Calvary was so vividly made on the mind of the beholder, that one of the little girls three years old cried aloud, and when her parents asked her what made her cry, she said, "It is so sad."

We feel to congratulate the Providence Sunday school on its efficient superintendent and assistant and collaborators, and on the successful Easter concert and the beautiful decorations that the assistant superintendent, Bro. Charles Ira Brown, had designed for the occasion. We also feel thankful to the Giver of all precious gifts for the pleasure that our Sister

Cora gives us in the cultivation of the beautiful gifts of song, poesy, and drama, with which she is blessed, and which the Spirit assists her to arrange for our edification and pleasure at the social events which we endeavor to have in our midst.

The elderly and sick ones of our people were also remembered by the Sunday school superintendent, Brother Fox, and his assistants, with bouquets of flowers, and pots of azaleas and Easter lilies; and the children of the primary department each Easter are each given a potted plant to take home instead of an Easter card, as they prefer them.

A few of the adult classes of the Sunday school are endeavoring to increase their Christmas Offering by giving attractive little suppers. The last one we heard was spread in the basement which had been tastefully decorated with red, white, and blue bunting. The table was spread the full length of the room, and each guest's place was designated by a cord with a picture or sentence thereon which they were supposed to decipher for themselves, and if they made a mistake and selected the wrong place they were fined ten cents.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CORRESPONDENT.

FALL RIVER, MASSACHUSETTS.

Fall River, the border city of Massachusetts, the spindle city of America, extends to every town or village wherein a body of Saints may dwell, its best wishes, and expresses the hope that happiness and progress may continually be the lot of its brethren on other portions of the earth's surface. By Fall River I mean the branch of Saints residing there. We are still trying in our feeble way to please the Lord. We err at times, but our desires are the major part of the time to do right.

The different departments of the church are progressing. Several members have been added to the Sunday school. The primary department is increasing rapidly. Many children, whose parents are not regular attendants or members of the church, attend because they are pleased with the manner in which the department is conducted, and also because of the many innovations there; innovations that are instructive as well as entertaining. Two Sundays ago at the request of their superintendent they assembled outside of the church and had their pictures taken. Last Sunday the superintendent presented each teacher and scholar with one of the pictures on a post card. This was a present that was very much appreciated by the children and it represented a sacrifice on the part of the superintendent, as the primary department is quite large.

Charles Cockcroft, superintendent, informs me that the Sunday school is growing. Why shouldn't it? See who are at the head of it. Though neither one of the young men has voted as yet, what they lack in years they make up in energy. Last Sunday we were favored with a visit from one of our district officers of the Sunday school, Miss Lucy Sears. We would be pleased to see our district officers more frequently.

In a week Class No. 4 will assemble at the home of William Roberts, one of its members, to celebrate the anniversary of its birth. This is a class of young men about ten in number, and whose average age is about twenty-one years. Whenever one of their number is favored with a birthday the rest of the class, with their friends of the gentler sex, assemble at his home, and with songs, jokes, and amusements of various kinds, and refreshments, the evening is pleasantly passed. The host is always presented with a token of esteem by the class and a box of chocolates to keep him sweet. It usually falls to the lot of John Sheehy to present the chocolates.

When any member of the church is known to be sick, the class sends flowers to the afflicted one. Post cards are sent by the class and also individually whenever a birthday occurs. At picnics and at reunions they play baseball together and are nearly always victorious. Class organization has proven a great blessing to Class No. 4. Our pastor being also our teacher, is president of the class and is a very popular one.

Recently our city chose "Fall River looms up" as its slogan, partly because it is situated on three hills and to the traveler even at a distance it looms up, and partly because of its principal industry.

The young people and the older ones as well are patiently waiting for reunion days, the happiest days of the year. If you wish the young people to become more interested in the gathering in of Zion, just point out to them that it is a reunion on a large scale, and you will always have an attentive audience. The best prayer meeting I ever attended was at a reunion, and I was not even a member of the church at that time.

May we strive continually to acquire all that would improve and eliminate all that would injure our characters. May we place our trust in the Lord at all times and be willing to say, even as a child:

"Help us, Lord, to love thee more,
Than we ever loved before;
In our thought and in our play,
Be thou with us through the day."

With best wishes for the success of this great work, I am,
Your brother,
ALMA M. COOMBS.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI.

We have been privileged to enjoy visits from quite a few who were passing through to General Conference the past month. Bro. H. O. Smith, C. Ed. Miller, R. Etzenhouser, and J. M. Stubbart gave us information and instruction worthy of consideration. Brethren Tanner, Archibald, and Elliott also fed us with the bread of life. Sr. Swift, the superintendent of the cradle roll department, gave a baby party to the mothers and babies of the Sunday school recently at the home of Bro. and Sr. G. S. Trowbridge, and all had a pleasant time.

Bro. and Sr. R. Trowbridge had a little baby girl come to take up its abode with them April 22.

On the evening of April 20 Sr. Essie Radford and Mr. John Bunch were united in matrimony by Bro. R. Archibald. We wish them much joy and prosperity.

While some are in joy, others are in sorrow and mourning; such are the ways of life. We regret to record the unlooked-for death on the evening of April 9 of Mr. Robert De Jong. He leaves to mourn his departure his beloved wife, Sr. Sarah De Jong, and four children, Anna, Nellie, Daniel, and the undersigned who was a stepdaughter, though only in name. He was also loved by a host of friends because of his honorable and upright life. He was always a friend to God's servants and people, who ever found a welcome in his home, and he ever had a good word for our work. The services were held from his home at 2739 De Jong street, April 12, Bro. R. Archibald speaking words of instruction and comfort to the bereaved ones, after which the Masonic Lodge, of which Mr. De Jong was an active worker for forty-one years, took charge. After the Masonic rites were completed, Brother Archibald pronounced the benediction.

Sr. De Jong, who has been so sorely afflicted in body, needs the faith and prayers of God's people with this added burden to bear.

Sr. Billinsky is reported to be improving nicely.

Your sister in Christ,
E. M. PATTERSON.

2739 DE JONG STREET.

FIRST KANSAS CITY.

Our protracted meetings are over and we are all quite well satisfied with the results. Bro. R. C. Evans felt well and his efforts were all that could be desired. He preached every night except Saturday, and twice on Sunday for three weeks. The attendance was good. Our beautiful house was full nearly every meeting. The Saints were much built up and educated in the restoration of the gospel, the blessings to be enjoyed by us in this life by obedience thereunto. Brother Evans had the strongest support possible of all the Saints, which, no doubt, was the reason he enjoyed such excellent liberty in presenting the beautiful gospel of the Son of God. Thirteen precious souls were baptized by him while here and many more were brought nearer the kingdom. But the greatest good was to the members of the church, myself included; it was indeed a feast of fat things to us all. As we sang at the close, "God be with you till we meet again," it was clearly visible that it was the prayer of the heart of all. Many wore the expression, "I wish we could have him with us all the time to reach the outside people." Since then conference is in session and most of our people are attending there in Independence, and our meetings have not been so well attended.

Sr. G. H. Hidy met with an accident in getting off the street car, but through the holy ordinance she soon recovered.

Russell H. Warnky, wife, and son are here from Brooklyn, New York, for a visit with their parents. L. E. Warnky is also home. Both the boys are members of the Central Automobile Company.

The weather during all these meetings is fine and the health of the Saints generally is good, as is also their spiritual condition. The prospects for a big crop of fruit and grain in this country were never better.

F. C. WARNKY.

ELK MILLS, MARYLAND.

We would like to have space in your columns to let your many readers know that we have a very fine band of Saints here under the leadership of Bro. William Anderson. It has been about twenty-five years since the gospel first came to this place. We have had our many hardships and we, too, have had our many blessings; so we are rejoicing in the gospel. We have a very fine Sunday school with Bro. John Lawrence as superintendent. The Religio is doing nicely with Bro. Henry Carr, jr., as president.

All our sick are on the mend, for which we are very thankful. One little boy, a member of the Sunday school, whose parents do not belong to the church, was wondrously healed when earthly physicians had given him up. He called for the elders, and we were made to confess that there is not such faith in all latter day Israel as was exhibited by this little boy. He is now leading the family into the church. Just as soon as he gets a little stronger they will enter the kingdom. So you see the good work is rolling on.

In conversing with a man the other day, not a member of the church, he said to me, "There is a man of God," referring to Brother Anderson, our pastor. We are glad that we have such a shepherd leading the flock, one who has won the confidence and respect of even those not of the faith and is loved dearly by those in the fold.

Peace and unity seem to be existing among the priesthood. Bishop Zimmermann, of Philadelphia, paid us a flying visit, giving us timely instruction which was enjoyed by all. District president, A. D. Angus, was a visitor a short time ago, also district superintendent, A. T. Christy. Both seemed pleased with the progress we were making. We have just seated our new church with opera chairs, which makes a big improvement; also a fine bell has been donated by two of the brethren. It sounds beautiful to hear the chimes of the bell on Sabbath morning.

The Saints are heeding the instruction that has been given: "Let him that is warned, warn his brother or neighbor." We see a few of the Saints bring their friends with them almost every meeting. Thus the gospel seed is being planted, and we pray before long it shall take root and grow.

Last Sunday, April 10, was a busy day for us. Three sermons were given by our pastor, which were full of instruction. At 2.30 p. m. the lodge of our town turned out in a body and was addressed by our pastor. He showed how the Lord had provided in the gospel the law of equality; every man should be equal.

Our choir is doing nicely, so you see we are coming right up the line.

Yours in gospel bonds,

IRA W. HUMES.

redeemed by the love of our Savior, Jesus Christ. She died April 18, 1910, in Farnam. Funeral conducted by Elder G. W. Johnson, assisted by G. Keller. Interment at Farnam cemetery.

SHELLEY.—Sarah Ann Parkinson was born February 26, 1828, in Green County, Pennsylvania, and died November 29, 1909, in John Day, Oregon. She was married to Jonas Carstena, March 21, 1847, who preceded her in death in 1864. To this union were born eight children, six sons and two daughters, four of whom preceded them in death. She was united in marriage to J. H. Shelley June 25, 1868, who with the remaining family are left to mourn the loss of a good wife and mother. She was among the first settlers in this country and experienced the hardships of pioneer life. Was baptized by Elder J. C. Clapp. Two years ago she suffered an attack of paralysis from which she rallied, but a second attack came about three months ago from which she could not rally. The funeral services were in charge of Rev. Mrs. M. Grove, pastor of the Advent Church in John Day.

HARTZ.—The Akron, Ohio, Saints have been called upon to mourn the loss of another dear brother, Perry C. Hartz, whom it pleased the Father to call away from earth March 25, 1910. Brother Perry had been sick a little over a year with Bright's disease. This brother was born May 29, 1870, and was married to Miss Cora Snider. To this union were born seven children, two boys, and five girls, all but one of whom survive their father. He was baptized by James E. McConaughy, July 29, 1900, and he lived a consistent life and died firm in the faith with the hope of a glorious resurrection. Funeral in charge of Bro. D. E. Tucker, sermon by James C. McConaughy.

FERGUSON.—Alicia A. Hunt was born September 1, 1851, at Hocking, Ohio. She was married at the home of her father about two miles southeast of Wilber, Nebraska, March 28, 1872, to E. W. Ferguson. To this union eleven children were born, seven of whom survive her, also the companion of more than thirty-eight years, and nine grandchildren, as also members of her father's family. She, with her parents before marriage, and later with her husband and children, went through the varied and trying experiences incident to a new country, living in the home where she became a bride, and from which she departed this life, after a protracted illness, April 20, 1910, aged 58 years, 7 months, and 19 days. She became identified with the Reorganized Church September 1, 1892, being baptized by Elder C. H. Porter. She passed away in full communion with the church of which she is a member. Funeral service at the Saints' church at Wilber, April 22, conducted by Elder C. H. Porter. The very large attendance and the display of flowers attested the esteem in which she was held.

RADLEY.—Susie Radley was born June 4, 1869, in Poland, and came to this country when a child. In 1885 she was married to Mr. Radley and to them were born two sons. In 1904 she heard the preaching of the gospel by Bro. F. C. Warnky and was baptized by him July 14, 1904. She died at Kansas City, Missouri, March 17, 1910, after an illness with heart trouble for two months. She was a noble woman in whom there was no guile. She was true to God and man, never known to speak evil of anyone, but always ready to do good to those in need of comfort and to speak a kind word to all. She leaves to mourn two sons, one sister, two step sons, and a multitude of friends. Funeral at the Ivenhoe church, sermon by Elder Warnky, assisted by Elder H. Goold; buried at the Union Cemetery.

FOOTE.—Robert Foote was born October 16, 1825, in Kings County, Nova Scotia. When a young man he moved to Washburn, Maine, where he became a prosperous farmer. His life was characterized by honesty and uprightness. He was baptized March 9, 1910, by Elder C. H. Rich. His death occurred April 3, 1910, caused by acute bronchitis. He leaves a widow, three sons, and three daughters to mourn. Funeral services April 5, in charge of Reverend Smith, of the Baptist Church.

GREGORY.—Elder Knudt Gregory was born September 5, 1847, in Jordan, Green County, Wisconsin. Was baptized by Elder W. A. McDowell, September 20, 1896, at Portor, Rock County, Wisconsin. Was ordained an elder by J. H. Lake and C. H. Burr, at Portor, Wisconsin, September 26, 1897. Died at Plano, Illinois, February 23, 1910, aged 62 years, 5 months, and 23 days. The deceased leaves his wife, one son, Bro. Roy Gregory, Sandwich, Illinois, and Sr. W. F. Sanderson, of Key West, Canada, to mourn. Brother Gregory was a great sufferer for years. His rest is sweet. Funeral address by Elder F. M. Cooper, March 2, 1910, at Plano, Illinois.

He was married December 24, 1882, to Miss Ellen Vantasell. There were born to them one son, J. L. Parker, and two daughters, Mrs. J. V. Newberry and Miss Ruth Parker, all of Sioux City. He leaves wife, one son, and two daughters, four brothers, two sisters, other relatives, and many friends to mourn. Funeral service February 21 and 22, at Saints' church, Sioux City, Iowa, and at the M. E. church at Climbing Hill, Iowa, by Elder J. M. Baker.

To this union were born five children, four girls and one boy, all of whom are living. He was converted and united with the Missionary Baptist Church about the year 1878. Afterward he became dissatisfied and became a member of the Reorganized Church where he lived a faithful consecrated member until called to his reward. He seemed to have premonition of his death. cient Savior, and died in full triumph of a living faith. He leaves a companion, five children, and a great number of relatives and friends to mourn their great loss. His funeral sermon was preached by W. E. Shaw at the residence, December 16, 1909.

SMITH.—Elizabeth Stricker Smith died March 22, 1910, at her home in Wayne County, Illinois. She was born July 22, 1834, in Switzerland. Married to John G. Smith July 25, 1886, at Saint Louis, Missouri. Baptized in 1883, at Carrollton, Missouri, by Elder Caleb E. Blodgett into the Reorganized Church. She suffered a long, lingering illness of some three years.

CORLISS.—Shilson H. Corliss was born October 18, 1834, at Orford, New Hampshire, and died February 3, 1910. He leaves a widow and five children, John Corliss, of Saint Agath, Canada; William Corliss, of Erhard, Minnesota; Eben Corliss, of Seattle, Washington; and Mrs. William Shockow and Mrs. Charles M. Brown, of Fargo, North Dakota. He united with the church late in life. All his children are Saints. Funeral from the residence of William Shockow, 1313 First avenue, North Fargo, North Dakota. Sermon by Elder J. E. Wildermuth.

TILLMAN.—John W. Tillman departed this life November 24, 1909, in a hospital at Mobile, Alabama; born at Wheelerville, Alabama, October 14, 1848; baptized by Elder G. T. Chute July 15, 1893, at Theodore, Alabama. Brother Tillman was assaulted on November 22, 1909. He was flagman on Bay Shore railroad, stationed where it crosses the Louisville and Nashville, some ten miles below Mobile. It is a lonely place, in a flat, open country, nearly a mile from his home. This day mentioned was pay day. The morning train passed, but left him no check. When the evening train came up no flagman appeared. The men went to see what was the matter, when they found Brother Tillman murdered in his little flag house, and dead (as they thought). Windows and doors broken in. Upon close examination he was found to be alive, bruised and bleeding, and close by, a bar of iron with a large nut on one end with blood and hair on it. He had lain there several hours, it was thought. The train took him to Mobile and placed him in a hospital, where he lived about thirty-six hours. He never regained consciousness. He was a man of exemplary life, had no enemies. He was not physically strong, having been afflicted with rheumatism. His hair and beard were white as the snow. His wife preceded him some years. He leaves three sons and three daughters, Oscar, an elder; Carrol, Edgar, Offa Stiner, Vadna Booker, and Adena Tillman, and a host of relatives in and out of the church. The relatives and friends sent for Elder G. T. Chute, on the morning of Thanksgiving Day, to take charge and preach his funeral that day. He had not heard of it until they came after him. It was such a great shock to him that he did not feel that he could do justice to the occasion, but he did the best he could. Several parties have been arrested on suspicion and discharged. It looked for a long time as though the guilty parties would not be found. It is said murder will out, and parties are now under arrest awaiting trial. They had a preliminary trial, were found guilty, and bound over without bond to the grand jury.

INMAN.—Sr. Carrie A. Inman passed away in Santa Rosa, California, on April 12, 1910, at the age of 56 years, 5 months, and 25 days. She was baptized in 1896, by Elder William Newton. The funeral was held in the undertaker's parlors on the 14th, in charge of Bro. B. N. Fisher, the sermon by Bro. J. M. Terry.

CUSHMAN.—Warren Cushman, Monday, March 14, at his home in Rockford, Illinois. Brother Cushman was born in Camden, western Canada, February 1, 1831. He was the oldest of eleven children, three of whom survive him. Brother Cushman was of the Puritan stock, his ancestors coming on the Mayflower. Robert Cushman, a minister, preached the first sermon on Plymouth Rock. Brother Cushman's great-grandfather lived to the age of one hundred and twenty years. Warren Cushman was baptized by C. H. Burr, November 5, 1899. He has lived faithful to the covenant made with his Feeding the Sick.

I would like to place in every household a discourse on how not to tempt the invalid. I would like to impress every person with the necessity of giving the digestive organism a complete rest while suffering from acute disease. This rule must be followed if one expects to recover speedily, and without needless suffering. Disease is prolonged, the system is weakened, and death is far more liable to ensue, if this policy is not adhered to. Let the invalid wait for an appetite, let this desire for food be strong and even intense, and when he can enjoy every morsel, then, and not until then, is he really ready to assimilate food of any kind.

Do not tempt a reluctant appetite. Do not force the stomach to digest food for which it has no need. Thousands of sufferers have been sent to early graves through self-poisoning of this sort. When you eat without appetite, you are simply poisoning yourself. You are filling the blood with all sorts of effete matter, the elimination of which often results in the appearance of serious symptoms of some disease.

There is a mystery about human life, and the wonderful processes that are associated with the various phases of disease, that even the most skilled physician knows little about. A physician stands beside a sick bed; he sees the patient there struggling for life; he sees the vital spark fast fading away. At such a moment, if he is possessed of intelligence, he realizes his impotence, his inferiority, his inability to understand the great mysteries there before him.—Bernarr Macfadden, in May Physical Culture.

Nothing Better Than Work.

Recently a man wrote to the New York Times saying that he was a little more than fifty years of age, and having worked all of his life to acquire enough money to make him independent, and having succeeded, he had retired, and was now trying to make himself happy with nothing to do. He passed five hours a day in reading, three hours in exercise and eating, which left him eight hours, which he found it hard to dispose of. His letter was in the nature of a lament. His bubble had burst. What he had dreamed of being able to do all his life had come true, and was an empty vanity.

Foolish man! The independence that money brings with it is the least of all our independencies.

You can not become one of the tools of the infinite if you flee from his anvil.

No advantage is smaller than that gained by taking advantage of a friend.

The man who always does what he wants is rarely wanted for what he does.

ALL BRIGHAMITE ROADS LEAD TO POLYGAMY.

HAVE YOU READ THEIR TRACTS?

During the past few months the Northern States Mission of the Brighamite Church has been wasting considerable money in a vain attempt to proselyte members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints by flooding them with tracts issued from the mission headquarters in Chicago.

The net result to date is to show us that which we already knew, namely, that they have nothing to offer us that we do not already have, excepting certain things that no good man wants.

The first of these tracts was devoted to showing the connection that William Marks, Zenos H. Gurley, Jason W. Briggs and others prominent in the Reorganization, had held temporarily with James J. Strang and others, ere they finally found the truth as taught by the Reorganization. To the "Josephite" mind that connection does not seem nearly so discreditable as the adulterous connections that B. Young was in the meantime entering into with some eighteen or twenty women of various names.

If it comes to a question of discussing character we are ready for the test. It will be discovered that Marks, Gurley, and Briggs were moving here and there in search of truth, a quest that ended successfully in the Reorganization. They wanted to find God's way. Brigham, in the meantime, was interested only in Brigham's way,—Brigham first, God second, as note what he said when designing the Salt Lake Temple:

In a few days I shall be able to give a plan of the temple on paper, and THEN if all heaven, or any good man on the earth will suggest any improvements, we will receive and adopt them.—Millennial Star, vol. 15, p. 391.

The latest tract in the series (at this writing) is affirmative, and advocates polygamy, which they seem to think is the most important of their tenets. We knew that if given rope enough they would hang themselves. There is not a member of the Reorganization who has received their literature who is so dense as to fail to see how carefully these tracts have been arranged to lead up to the introduction into his home of that vile doctrine.

This is what all their proselyting leads to sooner or later. With them, all roads lead to polygamy,—and many of their elders are willing enough to travel the road. You could not stop them with a club. No law has been discovered to stop them. The president of their church himself declared before the United States Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, in the Reed Smoot case, that in that particular he intended to continue to defy the law.

This tract, entitled, "Polygamy from a non-Mormon viewpoint," is quite characteristic of their way of "privily bringing in abominable heresies." Notice: Whereas their former tracts all bore the address of the Northern States Mission, this one (in a pitiful attempt to evade responsibility) was sent out absolutely without an address to show who its publishers are. But the general make-up of the tract, the style of type, paragraphing, etc., is identical with the tracts that preceded it and show beyond doubt that it came from the same source.

The doctrine, the trend of argument, the quotations from William Marks, the use of the term Reorganite, and similar very familiar stereotyped phrases, show that the author was a Brighamite, or at least hopelessly "under the influence," though the tract purports to be a transcript of an address delivered by a non-Mormon named V. S. Peet.

The whole thing reminds one of Ruth McEnery Stuart's verse to the mule:

"Ef you quiz Mr. Mule, you'll find dat he Gits mixed on de subject of 'is fam'ly tree;
He'll brag about 'is mammy with a noble neigh,
An' deny 'is own daddy wid a gинуine bray."

The verse closes thus: "But he ain't by 'isself in dat." Nor is this tract by itself in that. There have been many such attempts to slyly teach polygamy and at the same time fasten the odium on others. The first effort being by Brigham Young, who attempted to teach it on the responsibility of Joseph Smith the Martyr.

The tract in question simply proves that which has often been charged, that the Brighamite elders still teach polygamy.

They teach it when they dare, and practice it when they can.

And they do not come at it openly, like men, but in devious, obscure, underhand ways, intended to accomplish results without being caught in the act.

H O Smith
711 So Fuller ave

We are not especially interested in the views of V. S. Peet, non-Mormon, on the marriage question. It will be more profitable to learn God's will on that subject.

It is always his right to teach that will to his people. In fact in the Book of Mormon he says:

For if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me, I WILL COMMAND MY PEOPLE: otherwise, they shall hearken unto these things.—Book of Jacob 2: 39, authorized edition.

This is not a statement that God will ever command his people "otherwise" than he then commanded them. The point is that when engaged in the work of raising up seed unto himself, he at his own will, commands his people, revelation is continued. Pending such commandment they must hearken to the things written. When revelation is received it will not contradict that which is written and call that sacred which he has before pronounced abominable.

At that very time he was trying to raise up "righteous seed" to himself, and so he commanded the people as follows:

David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord. . . . I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: for there shall not ANY MAN among you have SAVE IT BE ONE WIFE; and concubines he shall have none.—Jacob 2: 33-36, authorized edition.

Beginning with the restoration of the gospel in 1830, the Lord renewed his effort to raise up a righteous seed unto himself; and in harmony with his statement he "commanded" his people. The commandments are as follows:

Marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have ONE WIFE, and they TWAIN shall be one flesh.—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3.

Thou shalt love THY WIFE with ALL thy heart, and shall cleave unto HER and NONE ELSE.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7.

Now compare the foregoing with the teaching of our Utah friends on the same subject, as found in their notorious revelation on celestial (?) marriage:

If any man espouse a virgin, and DESIRE TO ESPOUSE ANOTHER, and the first give her consent; and if he espouse the second, and they are virgins, and have vowed to no other man, THEN HE IS JUSTIFIED; he can not commit adultery, for they are given unto him; for he can not commit adultery with that that belongeth unto him and to no one else; and if he have TEN virgins given unto him by this law, he can not commit adultery, for they belong to him, and they are given unto him, therefore is he justified.

Let the Brighamite elders take about a thousand years off and attempt to reconcile this doctrine of theirs with the law of God, then they may with propriety resume their arduous work of mailing tracts. The law says that a man shall have but one wife; they say that he may have ten or more.

Our readers will be interested in a word picture of the actual workings of polygamy in Utah. It comes from the lips of "one who was there." The sisters, especially, will find it fascinating reading.

Four years after polygamy was formally adopted by the church in Utah, domestic affairs reached such a state that Brigham Young publicly threatened to divorce every wife in the Territory and start all over. He said:

Men will say, "My wife, THOUGH A MOST EXCELLENT WOMAN, has not seen a happy day SINCE I TOOK MY SECOND WIFE;" "No, not a happy day FOR A YEAR," says one; and another has not seen a happy day for FIVE YEARS. . . . I am going to give you from this time to the 6th day of October next, for reflection, that you may determine whether you wish to stay with your husbands or not, and then I am going to set every woman at liberty. . . . And my wives have got to do one of two things; either round up their shoulders to endure the afflictions of this world and LIVE THEIR RELIGION, or they may leave, for I will not have them about me. I WILL GO INTO HEAVEN ALONE, rather than have SCRATCHING AND FIGHTING AROUND ME."—Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, pp. 55-57.

Why do the elders of the Northern States Mission put it up to V. S. Peet, a non-Mormon, to tell of the joys of "celestial marriage"? Let Brigham Young tell it; he had experience at first hand.

Brigham Young did not exaggerate the situation. His associate, President J. M. Grant, in a sermon in Salt Lake City, September 21, 1856, declared:

If they could break asunder the CABLE of the Church of Christ, THERE IS SCARCELY A MOTHER IN ISRAEL but would do it this day. And they talk it to their husbands, to their daughters, to their neighbors, and say they have not seen a week's happiness since they became acquainted with THAT LAW, or since their husbands took a second wife."—Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, p. 50.

In all Utah there was scarcely one mother that would not have broken the polygamous yoke and destroyed the doctrine if she could have done it. But they could not. And when some of them began to dream of the rights of a true wife under gospel law; Brigham Young's other counselor, Pres. Heber C. Kimball, in a public sermon, in which profanity jostled piety, declared: "It is the duty of a woman to be obedient to her husband, and unless she is, I would not give a damn for all her queenly right and authority."—Sermon of November 9, 1856, Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, p. 82.

Any attempt to introduce this doctrine into the home will always result as it did in Utah.

It resulted precisely that way in Book of Mormon times when Jacob rebuked the men because of their "grosser crime" of polygamy, and said, "Ye have broken the hearts of your tender wives, and lost the confidence of your children."—Jacob 2.

God pitied these women; but Brigham said, Let them "round up their shoulders" and take it.

If there are in the Reorganization members so unstable as to be corrupted by such doctrines and the methods that are used in their propagation, we shall be well rid of them, and doubtless they will find more congenial associates among the ministry of the Northern States Mission of the Utah Church.

Those who love pure doctrines that do not require men to violate the law of God or their native land, those who approve of honorable and open methods, will remain content with their membership in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

BRANCHES, TAKE NOTICE.

The full set of legal forms have at last been printed and now are for sale by the Herald Publishing House. These blanks were ordered by General Conference and should be used by all branches in the church. There are twenty-three different forms providing for every necessary action in proceedings against offenders. These are sold in full sets. Each set containing twenty-three different blank forms, and each form containing twelve, making two hundred and seventy-six forms in all. The whole set costs $2.50. Every branch should order a full set.

TRACTS.

The article from Bro. Heman C. Smith appearing in this issue will be published in tract form; also the editorial entitled, "All Brighamite roads lead to polygamy."

Prices on these tracts will be announced later. It is intended to mail single copies of each to subscribers free.

We have in preparation an editorial that will appear later as a tract. It will be entitled, "Cornerstones of the Brighamite Church."

Our Utah friends say, "When men come as servants of God, claiming a divine commission to reorganize the Church of Christ, the searchlight of investigation should be turned upon them."

Acting on this kind suggestion, we intend to turn on the searchlight.

WATER.

Sweet, beautiful water—brewed in the running brook, the rippling fountain and the laughing rill—in the limpid cascade, as it joyfully leaps down the side of the mountain. Brewed in yonder mountain top, whose granite peak glitters like gold bathed in the morning sun—brewed in the sparkling dewdrop; sweet, beautiful water—brewed in the crested wave of the ocean deeps, driven by the storm, breathing its terrible anthem to the god of the sea—brewed in the fleecy foam and the whitened spray as it hangs like a speck over the distant cataract—brewed in the clouds of heaven; sweet, beautiful water! As it sings in the rain shower and dances in the hailstorm—as it comes sweeping down in feathery flakes, clothing the earth in a spotless mantle of white. Distilled in the golden tissues that paint the western sky at the setting of the sun, and the silvery tissues that veil the midnight moon—sweet, health-giving, beautiful water! Distilled in the rainbow of promise, whose warp is the raindrop of earth, and whose woof is the sunbeam of heaven—sweet, beautiful water.—John B. Gough.

LAMONI ITEMS.

The Lamoni Saints on last Sunday were privileged to hear two discourses by Bro. Rudolph Etzenhouser on archæological and Book of Mormon subjects. His talk in the evening lasted about one hour and a half and was listened to by a large audience with interest.

Brother Etzenhouser gave a very entertaining account of his work in Michigan with other archæologists and men of science. With characteristic zeal and foresight he secured some good photographs of their finds in the fourteen counties visited and he now has a collection of these reproduced in half tone illustrations on good plate paper, appropriately and neatly bound in book form, and he presents these for sale among the Saints, the proceeds to be applied toward reimbursing him for the heavy expense involved and to push forward the work along these lines.

From Lamoni the brother goes to other points among the Saints where he will present his work and exhibit his relics, as he is doing here.

Hymns and Poems

Heralds of Salvation.

Go forth, ye heralds of salvation,
Each to your field in Jesus' name,
Aloud to every tribe and nation
The blessed gospel truths proclaim.

CHORUS:

O haste with the message, by land and by sea,
The harvest is ripe and waiting for thee;
Go publish the beautiful gospel of peace,
The sick and the weary from bondage release.

Seek for the sheep, who now are straying
Far from the fold and Shepherd true,
Be not discouraged, Saints are praying
To Israel's God, for them and you.

Raise high the standard, tell the story
Of love divine, the wondrous plan
Arranged above in courts of glory
To reach and save poor fallen man.

When fruit is gathered, harvest ended,
The conflict o'er and victory won,
You'll hear, with heavenly music blended,
The welcome plaudit of, "Well done."

DUPLICITY EXPOSED.

A REVIEW OF THE TRACTS ENTITLED "CORNER STONES OF THE REORGANIZATION," AND "REORGANIZATION WEIGHED."

Recently there have been two tracts published by the Northern States Mission of the Utah church, 110 South Paulina street, Chicago, Illinois, in which duplicity and misrepresentation are the chief features. Those who are acquainted with church history and doctrine need no refutation of these publications, but as they are being generally circulated a brief notice may be beneficial. The title of the first of these tracts is as follows:

"CORNER STONES OF 'REORGANIZATION,' A FEW FACTS CONCERNING ITS FOUNDERS COMPILED FROM EARLY CHURCH HISTORY"

The first quotation after this statement that the compilation was "from early church history" is inserted without any citation as to where it can be found and is as follows:

Whatever can be the matter with these men (Law and Marks)? Is it that the wicked flee when no man pursueth? that hit pigeons always flutter? that drowning men catch at straws? or that Presidents Law and Marks are absolutely traitors to the church, that my remarks should produce such excitement in their minds? The people in the town are astonished, almost every man saying to his neighbor: Is it possible that Brother Law or Brother Marks is a traitor and would deliver Brother Joseph into the hands of his enemies in Missouri? If not, what can be the meaning of all this? The righteous are as bold as a lion.

We challenge the production of any early church history containing this quotation.

There is, however, an early historical statement regarding William Marks made by Joseph Smith which partakes of the nature of a prophecy, and conveys the unmistakable declaration that Marks should overcome and under God should become a blessing to many people.

I would just say to Brother Marks, that I saw in a vision while on the road, that whereas he was closely pursued by an innumerable concourse of enemies, and as they pressed upon him hard, as if they were about to devour him, and had seemingly obtained some degree of advantage over him, but about this time a chariot of fire came, and near the place, even the angel of the Lord put forth his hand unto Brother Marks, and said unto him, "Thou art my son, come here," and immediately he was caught up in the chariot, and rode away triumphantly out of their midst. And again the Lord said, I will raise thee up for a blessing unto many people. Now the particulars of this whole matter can not be written at this time, but the vision was evidently given to me that I might know that the hand of the Lord would be on his behalf.

This bears date of March 29, 1838, and was published by the Utah people themselves, March 4, 1854. See Millennial Star, volume 16, page 131.

In the vain effort to find something against the character of William Marks the writer of this tract cites evidence that he was dropped from his position as president of Nauvoo Stake, October 7, 1844. We need only say that this was after the death of Joseph Smith and after Brigham Young and supporters had assumed control, and had adopted the policy of removing from office everyone who was not subservient to their dictation. This is therefore a credit to William Marks, and will be so regarded by those who have made a study of the dictatorial policies of Young and his associates.

This writer then invites attention to the record of William Marks as having first affiliated with Sidney Rigdon, second with the Twelve under Brigham Young, then with James J. Strang, then with Charles B. Thompson, and then associated with John E. Page and others before uniting with the Reorganized Church.

There is no effort made, however, to show that he at any time sacrificed his honor or was false to his faith. He was seeking the right and as soon as he was satisfied that these factions were going astray he left them, and continued his search for light, thereby manifesting a courage rarely exercised in those days of blind obedience to priestly authority.

We have in our possession an original letter written by William Marks, from Shabbona Grove, Illinois, July 22, 1855, addressed to James M. Adams in which he says:

My mind has never been at rest since the breaking up of the church (or the death of Brother Joseph). I have always had fears that all was not right, but I am satisfied now that all of the false prophets have arisen that can with any degree of plausibility and if there can be any system adopted that will be calculated to mitigate the condition of the faithful Saints that are scattered about upon the face of the land it would rejoice my heart.

This was about the time of his uniting with John E. Page and others and shows the purpose of the association was to "mitigate the condition of the faithful Saints."

This seeming instability was then only an honest and persistent effort to find the right, and the courage of honest conviction runs through all his experiences. It is a striking fulfillment of the prediction of Joseph Smith that he should be pursued by an innumerable concourse of enemies who would press upon him hard as if about to devour him, and seemingly obtain some degree of advantage over him. But this prediction declares that he was caught up in the chariot and rode away triumphantly out of their midst.

William Marks was received into the Reorganized

Church, June 11, 1859, and from that time until his death, May 22, 1872, was constant, firm, and undeviating in his devotion to the church to which he had given his allegiance in his early life. Nine years of this time he was counselor to Pres. Joseph Smith. He was a wise counselor and a true man and thus was the other part of the prediction of 1838 verified which said, "I will raise thee up for a blessing unto many people."

The writer then takes up the records of Zenos H. Gurley and Jason W. Briggs, and shows that they too gave adherence to different factions before uniting with the Reorganized Church, but without following his assertions in detail and without agreeing to all he asserts of these men we will say that the case of William Marks is the case of these men. They were seeking for light and turning from darkness whenever and wherever it manifested itself. In his testimony given in the Temple Lot Case in 1892, Jason W. Briggs said:

I united with the church in 1841, and I remained with it. I have accounted myself a member of that church from that time on, from 1841 to 1885, but I have been in different organizations at different times, as I have already stated; but when in each of these organizations I supposed that I was under the church.

When I found out they were teaching anything that was not authorized by the church before 1844, as the law is set forth in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, why, I left it at once.

I always supposed when I belonged to these different organizations that they were the true and direct descendant of the original church, and as soon as my error was revealed to me, I left them,—left them as soon as I found out they were not under the church.

To call these men who adhered to the original faith and promptly discarded those who they discovered were departing from it apostates, is a gross and malicious misrepresentation. Not one of these men departed from the faith. Marks, as we have seen, continued steadfast and immovably fixed in the faith through all his days of severe trial and died in the hope of a glorious future.

In the first edition of "Corner stones of Reorganization," the assertion was made that Zenos H. Gurley became doubtful of his work, and in connection with Jason W. Briggs withdrew from the church in 1886. When it was shown that the Zenos H. Gurley withdrawing was not the same man, but a son of the man in question an evasive change was made in the next issue, so as to make it uncertain and obscure, but not correcting the former error.

The Zenos H. Gurley, who was one of the early and prime movers in the Reorganization, remained firm in the faith through all the dark days that tried men's souls, and was faithful in his adherence to the church until his death, which occurred near Joy, Illinois, August 28, 1871.

Jason W. Briggs was also unwavering in his faith, while passing through scenes of disappointment, and though often deceived by men faltered not in his devotion to truth. Though he withdrew from the church in 1885, it was not because of any loss of confidence in the doctrine taught, or the faith he had espoused in early life. In his testimony in the Temple Lot Case he says, when questioned upon this point:

There were no changes in the doctrines of the church that my action was based on in separating from the church; I did not say that there was any change in the doctrine of the church that influenced my action. There was nothing changed that I would consider vital at all in the doctrine.

A few weeks after I separated I had an article published in the SAINTS' HERALD, in which I stated in these words, substantially, "That had the decision of the Reorganized Church been made as made in answer to my request to withdraw from the church, there possibly would have been no occasion for my withdrawal." That is substantially what I stated. I did not withdraw because of any change in doctrine, or because anything new was brought in, but it was in the interpretation put upon certain lines of policy and doctrine; and while others were allowed to discuss those lines of policy, I was not permitted to do so, but was shut out.

It was not therefore because of apostasy, but on account of disagreement on interpretation and policy.

Had the church in 1844 been composed entirely of such stanch, true, and brave men as these the record of shame, treachery, and disgrace subsequently made in Utah would have been impossible.

But says the writer of this publication, We find something in the SAINTS' HERALD, the official organ of the church, to the effect that when a man unites with any of the factions they become divested of all priesthood. Here is the quotation:

"Whenever individuals claiming authority under the church as organized by the first Joseph became members of any faction, they immediately became divested of all authority." (SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 4, no. 10, p. 158.)

A few years ago this was brought forward with the assertion that it was the language of Pres. Joseph Smith. We promptly pointed out that Elder John A. McIntosh, then president of Gallands Grove District, was the author of the language if such language was ever used. Later they have omitted the name of Pres. Joseph Smith and simply say it is from the official organ, though we are credibly informed that they still tell privately that it is the language of President Smith. The quotation is from the minutes of a special conference held at Gallands Grove, Iowa, in October, 1863.

The report does not claim to be verbatim, but only the substance of what President McIntosh said. Further, this quotation made in this tract is segregated from a sentence, both commencing and ending where there is no punctuation whatever. This distorts the meaning of the statement by removing qualifying words.

The complete report as published in the HERALD is as follows:

The president then (in substance) made the following remarks: All official acts of any elder, while acting under authority of the old church, are recognized by us as valid; but the acts of those elders who received their authority from any of the factious organizations, such as Brigham's, Brewster's, Strang's, etc., etc., are not recognized by us as valid; for whenever any of these factions were organized each member received his authority from that faction, hence whenever individuals, claiming authority under the church as organized by the first Joseph, became members of any faction they immediately became divested of all authority except that received from the faction to which they had joined themselves. Thus when Brigham Young usurped the presidency of the church at or near Council Bluffs, the disorganization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was thereby effected, and Brigham's church was brought into existence. The same is true of all the factious organizations. Therefore from the time they set up for themselves their acts in a church capacity are spurious.

By the above it will be seen, first, that we have not a verbatim statement of President McIntosh's words. Second, That the quotation made by these Utah emissaries is a segregation from the middle of a sentence. Third, that he was speaking first of those who received their authority from the factions, and second that the context qualifies the radical statement quoted by applying it to "acts in a church capacity."

However, conceding that John A. McIntosh may have been extreme in his views (a very natural result when we consider the scenes of oppression through which he had passed under the rule of Brigham Young), it does not commit the church to his conclusions. It was simply the opinion of Elder McIntosh.

The church has spoken definitely upon this subject, but these deceivers, though pretending to write on "Corner stones of Reorganization," ignore the official acts of the Reorganization, and quote individual opinions, and even distort them.

The statement made by John A. McIntosh was made on October 26, 1863. To what extent this opinion was entertained by others does not appear, but later the church spoke authoritatively upon the subject and on April 11, 1866, in General Conference assembled, adopted the following:

While we deeply deplore the great apostasy and turning the truth into lasciviousness, which has occurred in the church of Christ in years gone by, resulting in the organization of numerous factions and schisms, yet we can not shut our eyes to the great truth that the priesthood which was conferred by the ministration of the angel of God, upon the head of our martyred prophet, Joseph Smith, and Oliver Cowdery, in May, A. D. 1829, when he said, "Upon you my fellow-servants in the name of the Messiah I confer this priesthood, which shall remain on earth that the sons of Levi may yet offer an offering to the Lord in righteousness," still remains, and has continued to remain from that day to this. Therefore we believe it to be our duty, as individuals having received that priesthood, to hunt up and minister to the spiritual wants of the scattered sheep of the house of Israel, those who manifest by their fruits that they have received of the Spirit of God and have maintained their integrity before him, therefore

Resolved, That we recognize no other rule by which to test the validity of the baptism of persons who have embraced the gospel, except the fruit and manifestation of the Spirit. Therefore, the question of rebaptism is a matter of conscience.

Resolved further, That a connection with those factions during the dark and cloudy day, does not necessarily invalidate the priesthood; holding as we do, that these factions could neither confer nor take away the priesthood.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 9, p. 124, also Book of General Conference Resolutions, pp. 10 and 11.

We submit that the honorable course for one writing on "Corner stones of the Reorganization" would be to quote the official action of the body under consideration, instead of ignoring such action to quote the opinion of individuals.

Such a course is despicably low and tricky.

The other tract bears the title of,

"Reorganization Weighed PRESIDENCY—PERMANENCY," and is about as evasive and deceptive as the one already examined.

We shall not attempt to follow it through all its intricate mists of sophistry and misrepresentation, but will merely point out enough of its duplicity to expose its character.

The arguments concerning succession are not new and have been refuted many times, therefore we omit any refutation in this paper, as the reader can find our position in many publications. There is only one new thing on this point. In speaking of the provision that Joseph Smith should appoint his successor, the writer says:

During all the trying scenes of life the Prophet did not transgress, but proved his worthiness before God; therefore, there was no necessity for him to confer upon his successor the keys and authority of his office on account of any transgression during this early period before the various quorums of the priesthood were organized as we have them to-day. Our Reorganization friends admit this to be the fact. We read in the SAINTS' HERALD of August 18, 1838 (this being the official organ of the Reorganite Church), the following:

"Joseph Smith was taken away, dying a martyr, of which death he was conscious, and made preparation before it occurred. He was not accused by the Lord of transgressions, and the gift that had been conferred upon him taken from him; nor was there a command given him to appoint another in his stead, because he had been unworthy, and the Lord proposed to depose him from his office. It was only in the event of the gift being taken from him, that he was to so appoint another. This event did not occur." (Vol. 35, no. 33.)

Technically this is correct. Joseph did not transgress to the extent that there was necessity for him to confer upon his successor the keys and authority of his office on account of any transgression. The Reorganized Church has admitted and does admit this. The insinuation that this is the issue is low and deceptive. The real issue is whether Joseph Smith had the prerogative to appoint his successor in case of death or only in case of transgression.

The article from which the above quotation is taken is a long dissertation on "The power to perpetuate the church," and that the writer held that Joseph Smith retained and exercised the authority to appoint his successor even though he did not transgress, is evident from the following quotation from the same article.

In pursuance of the principle shown in the above statement, Joseph Smith prophetically blessed his son and stated what his calling was to be. First. In the jail at Liberty, Missouri. Second. In the office or council room in the brick store at Nauvoo, Illinois, some time in 1842 or '43, at which a number of the then prominent men of the church were present, James Whitehead, N. K. Whitney and others among them. Third. On the stand near the Temple at Nauvoo, where, in the presence of hundreds, he stated that Joseph, his son, should be his successor, should he be taken away. Fourth. In the parlor of the Mansion House, in June, 1844, just prior to the last and fatal journey to Carthage, Illinois, whence he was brought to his burial, on which occasion he again blessed his son Joseph by the laying on of hands, and stated again that he it was who was to be his successor if he was taken. All this was done in the presence of witnesses casually assembled and not chosen by favoritism or in secrecy.

The above is but an instance of the duplicity used by these perverters of early church history.

All other points in this tract sought to be made on succession are answered in our work on True Succession.

On the subject of ordination the same points found in "Corner stones," are largely relied upon and have been considered in this paper.

However, one misrepresentation of the testimony of Pres. Joseph. Smith we will briefly notice. As evidence that President Smith was not designated by his father as his successor the following is quoted from his testimony in the Temple Lot Case:

"No, sir, I did NOT state that I was ordained by my father; I did not make the statement. I was NOT ordained by my father as his successor,—according to my understanding of the word 'ordained' I was not." (Plaintiff's Abstract, in Temple Lot Suit, page 79, paragraph 162.)

To show the unfair and dishonest methods of these manipulators it is only necessary to quote more fully this testimony of President Smith:

No, sir, I did not state that I was ordained by my father; I did not make that statement. I was not ordained by my father as his successor; according to my understanding of the word ordain, I was not. I was blessed by him and designated, well in a sense chosen, and the word ordain could not be applied in any other sense than by the act of pointing out or indicating only, and he indicated or designated me as his successor.

In this quotation Joseph Smith sets forth the position the Reorganized Church has always occupied, and to quote him in part leaving out the real point at issue we do not hesitate to brand as dishonorable.

We have not space here to follow the arguments in favor of the organization having its headquarters in the mountains, all of which has been frequently met and overthrown, but we submit that men guilty of such duplicity and sneaking tactics as exposed in this paper are not representatives of the pure, loving, and undefiled Christ.

THE PERFECT LAW.

"The law of the Lord is perfect; converting the soul." "The words that I speak unto you, they are Spirit, and they are life." "Whosoever hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me."

To be obedient to the will of God has ever been the safety of man. To fail to be obedient has as often proven to be seriously detrimental and in the end, if continued, ruinous.

As Latter Day Saints we have from the first taught that only complete obedience brings complete salvation, and in view of this truth, we have asked the world not only to believe on Jesus Christ, that he is the Son of God, but to go forth in obedience to the glorious gospel, not one principle having been done away; not one principle but that is necessary to eternal salvation.

Would it not be a pity, dear brethren, if when we stand before the judgment seat of Christ, it should appear that we to whom the message has come, and we who have professed faith therein, have failed to obtain the "great salvation," and that because we have been unwilling and disobedient to some of the requirements of this perfect law?

We point the world to the words of the Savior: "Except a man be born again he can not enter into the kingdom of God," and emphasize the teaching of the Perfect One by showing that this birth is of the water and of the Spirit, affecting the whole man, body and soul. The writer believes the message is an authoritative one and should be delivered in plainness and force, but did you ever think of what one of the sacred writers said about the word being like a two-edged sword, dividing asunder both joint and marrow? Then while we preach to the world, let us occasionally view ourselves to see if we are among "the willing and obedient," for they are represented as the only ones who shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days. Our obedience to the perfect law should be complete. At least we should never allow ourselves to offer an excuse for noncompliance. If we find that our obedience is imperfect, there is only one way out of the difficulty,—repent and forsake our sins, whether they have been committed by leaving undone the things we ought to do or by doing the things we ought not to do. If there is any one principle which it is hard for some to comply with, it is the law which affects us financially.

But can any law which affects only in dollars and cents be of God? To this question we would answer that we know of no such law. We are a full believer that God has never given a temporal law, and that all his laws are spiritual. To illustrate: The converted sinner who repents is baptized in water for the remission of sins. The physical form is laid below the substance of water. Yet which of us will be willing to say that a spiritual law has not been complied with?

Even so it is when the heart is reached by the soul-convincing statements of Holy Writ and he takes of the things which God has intrusted to his care and imparts of his substance to those who have need. Through those whom God has called to the work of receiving and disbursing, he has complied with one of the spiritual laws and he is affected spiritually thereby.

On the other hand, if, after we have become acquainted with what God requires of us in temporal things and refuse to comply, is it not reasonable to believe that we shall again rest under condemnation? Malachi, in the third chapter, accuses Israel of robbing God and commands them to bring all the tithes into the storehouse and prove God. I have often wondered at the strength of this command and the wondrous scope of the promises, and though I may never have the opportunity of seeing its entire fulfillment in this life, I shall hope to in eternity. But why not in this life? The statement was made to a nation accepted of God as his people who were in condition to fully comply if they would. Hence the charge of robbery if they failed. Does this statement apply to us as a people, and does the Lord hold us responsible as he did ancient Israel? Let us now turn to the Book of Mormon. Book of Nephi, chapter 11, gives us a portion of the teaching of Christ when he appeared to the people on this continent after his ascension. Verse 2 is a commandment to write the words which the Father had given to Malachi which he should tell unto them. He then gives them chapters 3 and 4 of the book about as they appear in the Bible, which contain the strong language referred to above, and then follows with this statement:

These scriptures which ye had not with you, the Father commanded that I should give unto you, for it was wisdom in him that they should be given unto future generations.

This makes the statement binding upon us who believe in the Book of Mormon, and there is no way of escaping this charge, commandment, and the miraculous promises therein contained.

But are we to expect that the Lord will open the windows of heaven and pour us out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it? We answer yes, if we fulfill the perfect law. Witness these two statements in the New Testament:

If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you.

If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place, and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you.

But says the objector, "I would not think of asking God for a blessing so great that there shall not be room enough to receive it, nor do I see the wisdom of God so doing." This command was originally given to ancient Israel. Peter declares, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him." It seems plain that if ancient Israel had been obedient and brought "all the tithes into the storehouse" and thus have put God to the test, there would not be room enough to receive it inside the church, that this overflowing blessing would have reached the outside world and they have been brought, or some of them, to a knowledge of the truth.

We think it a mistake to confine the fulfillment of this statement to temporal things alone. Clearly then the overflowing part of this promise is not objectionable, but marks it as divine; "for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust."

The commandments of God to the church in our own day agree with what he said to Malachi, only varying in that they are more explicit and teach us what is meant by "tithe." Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5 reads:

Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming); for after to-day cometh the burning: this is speaking after the manner of the Lord; for verily I say, To-morrow all the proud and they that do wickedly shall be as stubble; and I will burn them up, for I am the Lord of hosts; and I will not spare any that remaineth in Babylon.

If there are those who object to this on account of the fire part of it, let them turn to the beginning of the fourth chapter of Malachi, and it will be seen that quite as strong and very similar language is used. Section 42: 8 declares:

If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which can not be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me, and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors, two of the elders, or high priests, such as he shall or has appointed and set apart for that purpose.

Now we can not bring our houses and lands and lay them before the Bishop; but we can do so by statement or inventory and we can all do this, whether our property be little or much, and thus fulfill a part of the law of the celestial kingdom. Joseph the Martyr, through whom the foregoing was given, has this to say about inventories: "The fact is a man is bound to consecrate to the Bishop before he can be considered a legal heir to the kingdom of Zion." See volume 1, page 300 of Church History. Read all the page. It will help you to an understanding. Paraphrase 9 of section 42 reads:

And it shall come to pass that after they are laid before the bishop of my church, and after that he has received these testimonies concerning the consecration of the properties of my church, that they can not be taken from the church, agreeably to my commandments; every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration, inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family.

From this part of the law we are made to see clearly that God claims us as his children and having made us "heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ" he claims what we have of this world's goods.

We are stewards over it whether we render our account to the Bishop or not. The only difference is that thereby rendering our account, we acknowledge that God's law is right.

Some seem to fear to render their accounts thinking that the Bishop would take advantage of them and require them to do more than they think God would require. To such I would say that I do not think your fears are well founded. So far as I have been made acquainted with the Bishopric of the church, they evidently have the love of the work at heart. And having been called of God to this work, through the President of the church, it seems quite proper that the membership, one and all, should move forward in obedience and thus honor God, the law, and the men whom God has called.

It seems that as late as 1838 members of the church did not fully understand what was required of them, for we hear the revelator asking the Lord to "show unto thy servants how much thou requirest of the property of thy people for a tithing." Note the answer:

Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to put into the hands of the bishop of my church in Zion, for the building of mine house, and for the laying the foundation of Zion, and for the priesthood, and for the debts of the presidency of my church; and this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them for ever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 106: 1.

It seems that the Lord requires "all their surplus property." This we understand to be the consecration mentioned in section 42 and referred to by the revelator in his remarks as referred to on page 300 of the first volume of history. The word interest means the net increase after we have deducted the expense of an ordinary living.

Shall we comply and thus prove the Lord whether he will open unto us the windows of heaven? Or shall we continue to neglect our duties and rob God, and thus rest under condemnation? "Choose you this day whom ye will serve"; "Ye can not serve God and mammon."

Bishop of the Nauvoo District.

Of General Interest

WHAT WE SHOULD READ, AND WHY TO READ IT.

There are more books worth reading than any man can find time to read.

For that reason it is never worth while to read worthless books.

One of the greatest values of literature is the quality of the style in which a book is written.

The subject-matter is, of course, the real "meat and sinew," but, like a good meal, the feast needs to be well prepared.

To ignore or disregard literary style is to miss half the joys of literature.

Jeremy Bentham was one of the most valuable men in the nineteenth century.

He lived, labored and wrote to a great purpose, but despite his Westminster education and Oxford training his writing was crude and his style awkward.

That we have, in delightfully readable form, the forceful, helpful, comprehensive writings of that subtle thinker and reformer is due to the gifted editorial pen of M. Dumont.

"If M. Dumont had never been born," says Macauley, "Mr. Bentham would still have been a very great man. But he would have been great to himself alone."

The literary style of Dumont gave permanent life to the valuable ideas of Bentham.

The study of style—which is in a measure the habits of writers—is an intensely interesting occupation.

Both Emerson and Carlyle now and then lead you through such a maze of words that you get lost in the jungle, only to come suddenly upon a sentence that more than repays for the journey.

Kipling's greatest individual literary characteristic is reiteration; and Donald G. Mitchell, who never failed to write something worth reading, was strongly addicted to the parenthesis.

To the exquisite drolleries that, as Matthews puts it, "lie in ambush on every page of Tristram Shandy," Sterns owes the major part of his fame.

Speaking of Montaigne's style, Emerson says: "The sincerity and marrow of the man reaches to his sentences. Cut these words and they would bleed; they are vascular and alive."

Yet he tells us that Montaigne's writings have no enthusiasms and that only once—in his admiration of Socrates—does his style "rise to passion."

One of the most unusual of literary habits is Ruskin's frank way of criticising himself. He seems by that method to unlock all doors and introduces you to himself in a way that is fascinating.

At the time of the publication of one of James Lane Allen's novels, a few years ago, considerable was said of his prolix sentences, but these hold no place beside some of the passages of Herodotus, which are "nearly as long as acts of Shakespeare."

Macauley calls Livy's history "a bad thing well done," because of his beauty of style and his disregard of fact.

And, speaking of Macauley's biographies, Taine says, "They are less portraits than judgments."

The thought is the real heart beat of a book; but if that hearts beats in unison with a beauty of style it makes its truths doubly appetizing and therefore doubly effective.—Saint Louis Post-Dispatch, by John K. Le Baron.

THE FUTURE HOPE.

(From eulogy on the life and character of Senator James B. Beck of Kentucky, in the United States Senate, August 23, 1890.)

The right to live is, in human estimation, the most sacred, the most inviolable, the most inalienable. The joy of living in such a splendid and luminous day as this is inconceivable. To exist is exultation. To live for ever is our sublimest hope. Annihilation, extinction and eternal death are the forebodings of despair. To know, to love, to achieve, to triumph, to confer happiness, to alleviate misery, is rapture. The greatest crime and the severest penalty known to human law is the sacrifice and forfeiture of life.

And yet we are all under sentence of death. Other events may or may not occur. Other conditions may or may not exist. We may be rich or poor; we may be learned or ignorant; we may be happy or wretched; but we all must die. The verdict has been pronounced by the inexorable decree of an omnipotent tribunal. Without trial or opportunity for defense; with no knowledge of the accuser, or the nature and cause of the accusation; without being confronted with the witnesses against us we have been summoned to the bar of life and condemned to death. There is no writ of error, nor review. There is neither exculpation nor appeal. All must be relinquished. Beauty and deformity, good and evil, virtue and vice, share the same relentless fate. The tender mother cries passionately for mercy for her firstborn, but there is no clemency.

The proscription extends alike to the individual and the type. Nations die and races expire. Humanity itself is destined to extinction. Sooner or later it is the instruction of science that the energy of the earth will be expended, and it will become incapable of supporting life. A group of feeble and pallid survivors in some sheltered valley in the tropics will behold the sun sink below the horizon and the pitiless stars glitter in the midnight sky. The last man will perish and the sun will rise upon the earth without an inhabitant. Its atmosphere, its seas, its life and heat, will vanish, and the planet will be an idle cinder uselessly spinning in its orbit. Every hour some world dies unnoticed in the firmament; some sun smoulders to embers and ashes on the hearthstone of infinite space and the mighty maze of systems sweeps ceaselessly onward in its voyage of doom to remorseless and unsparing destruction.

With the disappearance of man from the earth all traces of his existence will be lost. The palaces, towers and temples he has reared, the institutions he has established, the cities he has builded, the books he has written, the creeds he has constructed, the philosophies he has formulated—all science, art, literature and knowledge will be obliterated and engulfed in empty and vacant oblivion.

"The great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve,
And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack behind."

There is an intelligence so vast and enduring that the flaming intervals between the birth and death of universes is no more than the flash of fireflies above the meadows of summer; a colossal power by which these stupendous orbs are launched in the abyss like bubbles blown by a child in the morning sun, and whose sense of justice and reason can not be less potential than those immutable statutes that are the law of being to the creatures he has made, and which compel them to declare that if the only object of creation is destruction, if infinity is a theater of uninterrupted series of irreparable calamities, if the final cause of life is death, then time is an inexplicable tragedy, and eternity an illogical and indefensible catastrophe.

No, Mr. President, this obsequy is for the quick and not for the dead. It is not in inconsolable lamentation. It is a strain of triumph. It is an affirmation to those who survive, that as our departed associate contemplating at the close of his life the monument of good deeds he had erected, more enduring than brass and loftier than the pyramids of kings, might exclaim with the Roman poet, Non omnis moriar. So, turning to the silent and unknown future, he could reply with just and reasonable confidence upon that most impressive and momentous assurance ever delivered to the human race, "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

OLD AGE.

Doctor Eliot, retired president of Harvard, an old man, constructs a "new religion," plans a popular method of education in literature, looks to the future and is eager to work. Doctor Angell, eighty years old, just retired from the presidency of the University of Michigan, says he will lay out a plan for his future activity. "I shall now begin to live," is his strenuous and buoyant attitude.

Count Tolstoi, another old man, vigorously announces one spiritual truth after another. One of his latest is a powerful attack on the principle of violence, which, in his opinion, underlies war and governments. Communities are ruled by violence and not by love. The era of love's rule will bring in the great revolution. The great Russian, who has had probably the fullest experience of any living man, is as full of life as ever. Perhaps his interest now, being deeply religious, is richer and fuller than ever. What young man can compare with this old giant in range and power and depth of vision?

Professor Metchnikoff, a scientific man, is at work on a specific for old age. He believes old age is a disease, due to poisoning caused largely by the great intestine, and that counteracting diet and habits may put off death. He thinks he is on the verge of a discovery that in importance will far exceed all the inventions of our wonderful day. Cook and Bleriot and Wright and Curtiss will seem playful sports in comparison—even Hudson and Fulton names of trifling importance.

But, even before the discovery of Professor Metchnikoff's specific, we have men who have practically conquered old age. Men who perform this feat, who at death, or near it, have a serene and wide philosophy, the result of rising always from one experience to a higher, these men have conquered old age. Who will not admit that the Russian seer knows no senility? Such it is to be truly great. To live a life that does not flash out in the pan of youth, no matter how brilliantly, but is built on an art that constructs all one's experiences on wider and wider foundations, so that progressive strength, rather than progressive weakness, is insured—this is not only the conquest of old age, but, in a real way, it is the conquest of death, since it removes its sting.—New York Press.

One trouble with the habitually crooked man is that he never knows which way he is turning.

Editors Herald: I enjoy reading the HERALD very much, but we would enjoy more living where we could attend church. It has been two years now since we have been where there was a branch. There is only one other Saint here besides myself and husband, so we can not even have Sunday school, though my boy and I keep up the lessons the best we can. We have had some preaching here during the summer months by Elders Rannie and Knisley and others, and much prejudice has been removed, though some still call us Mormons.

We have many friends here who seem willing to listen to the truth, even if they do not accept. Some are asking when the elders are coming back, but whether they will come to hear them when they do is hard to say. We trust some good work may yet be done here and others be brought into the light. We ask the prayers of the Saints that we may be more faithful and set a worthy example before those around us and be able to train our children aright. Being isolated from the Saints and from church privileges, it seems harder to always live as we should and we are apt to become careless, but we trust God may give us strength to endure to the end and that we may be able to do more for the cause.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. J. E. FARBER.

NUNEZ, LOUISIANA, April 20, 1910.

Dear Herald: I am for the first time going to tell you some of my thoughts and experiences. First of all I must say how welcome you have ever been and what an old friend you are to me. I think my father, Alexander Struthers, subscribed for you from the first. With what joy and sadness, too, I read your pages. I see many old friends have passed away and I feel sad at our loss, but rejoice in their gain. Among the number, was Bro. Benjamin Durfee, who used to live in Keokuk, Iowa, and Alexander Smith. These two brothers administered to me in 1892. I did not think I ever would get well. Brother Alexander asked that I might be made well from the crown of my head to the soles of my feet. He told me to have patience and in time all would be well with me. I got so tired waiting it seemed I never would be well again; but I am. I am well and strong and my faith is stronger, believing as I do that although unworthy, my heavenly Father hears my prayers and cares for "even me."

I am glad to know that Bro. John Lake is still with us. He immersed me in the waters of baptism at Keokuk, Iowa, July 14, 1878. Most of all, I am thankful to have the HERALD telling me as it does of our beloved President's still active life; also the many messages of life and salvation for us all. If this should be read by Brn. Edgar H. and James M. Smith, who were with us, preaching six good sermons, more than a year ago, let them take notice. We are back at the same place and the people and the place are awaiting their return to preach to them again. Go on little HERALD with your message of love, cheer, and good tidings, is the wish of your sister in Christ.

MARGARET S. KITE.

ELDORADO SPRINGS, MISSOURI, April 24, 1910.

Editors Herald: I consider myself happy to be a member of the Church of Jesus Christ which has been reorganized in these latter days, and that God has again empowered men to proclaim the gospel and administer the ordinances thereof, and to set in order those things that are needed.

We have lately received three tracts or pamphlets written against the church presided over by Bro. Joseph Smith, son of Joseph the Martyr, entitled "Corner stones of the Reorganization," the "Reorganization weighed," and the "Reorganization versus salvation for the dead." These contain the strongest arguments against the church that I ever heard, but they have not shaken my faith enough to cause me to jump out of the frying pan into the fire. I believe in baptism for the dead, and I sometimes wonder when it will be practiced again. But I think it necessary that such things be revealed or our dead friends might be baptized before they had repented.

They say that the son of the Prophet has presided over the church for forty-five years without baptizing for the dead or building a temple. It should be remembered that he and his associates in the ministry have had many odds to fight against, both from within and without, and it takes a great deal of preparation to get into such a condition that God can trust this part of his work to the Saints. I believe that we as Saints are making this preparation. We want to build on the rock and do our work well as we go along and this takes time, but it is time well spent and not wasted as our Utah friends would have us believe. They attack our President because he makes no big talks about the keys, powers, and authority of priesthood, but says his father named him as his successor and was blessed for that purpose.

We read in Mother Smith's History of the Prophet where she gives the blessings that were pronounced upon the martyrs, Joseph and Hyrum, Joseph's seed being blessed with him but no mention of Hyrum's offspring. "O well," they say, "that is something you Josephites have hatched up or you Reorganites," as they now prefer to call us. They reject Mother Smith's history and they deny the law of lineage to all except patriarchs and bishops, and say that the eighteenth paragraph of the revelation given January 19, 1841, reading (speaking of the Prophet): "For this anointing have I put upon his head, that his blessing shall also be put upon the head of his posterity after him," is only making provision for his family or posterity to have place in that boarding house which the Saints were commanded to build for the boarding of strangers, and has no reference to the prophetic office going from father to son; but we notice that the blessing, whatever it was, was placed upon the head of his posterity after him. The head of his posterity would be the firstborn, which is the present occupant of the presidential chair of the Reorganization. But supposing their contention be true, what is the meaning of the words, "following these"? The Lord says, "And as I said unto Abraham, concerning the kindreds of the earth, even so I say unto my servant, Joseph, In thee, and in thy seed, shall the kindred of the earth be blessed. Therefore, let my servant Joseph, and his seed after him, have place in that house; from generation to generation, for ever and ever, saith the Lord."

Surely nothing could be plainer. They were to have place in that house, because in him and his seed the kindred of the earth should be blessed. It is a significant fact that all of the Prophet's posterity belong to what our friends in the salt land (Jeremiah 17: 5, 6,) love to call "reorganites." The best proof to my mind of a man's call is in what he teaches: "He that is sent of God speaketh the words of God." In the Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, p. 50, I find the following language used by Brigham Young: "Now hear it, O inhabitants of the earth, Jew and Gentile, saint and sinner, when our father Adam came into the garden of Eden, he came into it with a celestial body, and brought Eve, one of his wives, with him. He helped to make and organize this world. He is Michael, the archangel, the ancient of days, about whom holy men have written and spoken. He is our father and our God, and the only God with whom we have to do." Down a little farther he says that Jesus was not begotten by the Holy Ghost. This book was published in Liverpool in 1854, not by the Reorganization but by our Utah friends, so that it does not come secondhanded to me, but I read it in their own publications.

On the other hand (though I am young and inexperienced in years, I have done a great deal of reading and studying along this line) I have never yet heard or read anything from the tongue or pen of our beloved President, the son of the Prophet, that was contrary to the Prophet's teachings as contained in the three books and published before his death, or that was contrary to the code of good morals as contained in those books. May he go to his rest in peace, is my prayer.

Your brother,
JOHN T. WOOD.

DICKINSON, NORTH DAKOTA, April 28, 1910.

Saints' Herald: The HERALD is the light of the world to my wife and me. My wife is not a member of the church, nor has she heard a sermon preached to my knowledge. Brother Houghton stopped at our place on his way north. He did not preach here, but gave us some good advice and prayed for us, and got me to subscribe for the HERALD and Autumn Leaves. Since then my wife has been reading them and also the Testament and she says she will become a member as soon as she can. By her reading and talking to me because I did not live a good, Christian life, I began to think over my past life and to ask God to forgive me and to guide my footsteps through life, and help me lead a better, cleaner life. He certainly has done it and I thank him for it.

But, dear Saints, to ask God's forgiveness we must humble ourselves. I found that out through a vision last night. I will relate it to you, thinking it will help some one to go to God and seek. I saw Pres. Joseph Smith with a large book reading out of it to two of his followers. He did not know me nor my name, and I saw him talking to these two men, and praying with them and singing. I went where they were and sat down with them. None of them spoke, but the one I was sitting beside held the book over so I could see and sing. After it was over I started to go home, but Brother Smith called me by name and said, "Brother Langdon, come back and pray to God for your sins." I went back and prayed to God that he might forgive me and help me, and I cried awfully and got down on my knees and looked into heaven. Brother Smith put his hands on my head and blessed me and told me not to cry any more, that God would help me. How grand President Smith looked! I would love to see him.

I ask an interest in your prayers for my wife and myself.
A. P. LANGDON.

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO, April 14, 1910.

Dear Brothers and Sisters: Permit me in your valuable journal to make a few remarks about unity among the brethren. Are unity and love among the first principles of a true Christian faith? If so, then we ought to cultivate those principles. My personal opinion is that a man can not be in the right track and be contentious in any way, either in the house of God or outside with his brothers or sisters. Will it not bring discredit on a brother or sister for me to mention anything to an outsider? My duty is to lift the fallen; not to trample them down. The greatest of commandments given by Christ is to love one another. Think of this, dear brother. Our united effort and love for one another never were more needed than at the present time. Brethren, let us lay aside dissension. Let us as brothers and sisters walk in love even as Christ loved us and as he laid down his life for us. So says the Apostle John: "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren."—1 John 3: 16.

Now brothers and sisters, let us all who have the advancement of this gospel at heart, call upon God to cleanse our hearts from all unworthiness; ask God to give unto us his Holy Spirit, and the fruits of that Spirit are goodness and righteousness and truth. God's word tells me if any man has not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his. My opinion is that this refers to you and me who have pledged ourselves to serve God, for those outside of the church have not the Holy Spirit.

My prayer is that we may see that it is our duty to love one another and cheer and lift a fallen brother, so that when we meet together, we shall meet for that express purpose and in one accord, and the Lord will fulfill his promise, when he says if two or three are met together in his name he will bless them.

Your brother,
1138 FIRST AVENUE. ALEX. S. A. WHITE.

FRANCIS, SASKATCHEWAN, April 15, 1910.

Editors Herald: I have been thinking for some time that a few lines from this country would be of interest to some of your readers. Judging from the number of people that are coming to this country a person would think that the eyes of the whole civilized world were directed toward northwest Canada. While at Weyburn a few days ago I saw in one day cars from twenty-five different railroad systems in the United States. A few of these cars contained goods that Canada imports from the United States, but most of them brought settlers who had bought cheap land or were going out onto homesteads that they had previously taken up. The cars came from a scope of country stretching from Vermont to North Dakota and from Minnesota to Oklahoma. Last January the Hart-Parr Company, of Charles City, Iowa, shipped a train load of gasoline engines to Alberta, the value of which amounted to one hundred thousand dollars. This will give some idea of the widespread interest that the people of the United States take in Canada. The railroads are vying with one another to get their lines built into the more fertile districts, in fact they are building them faster than they can equip them and ballast the roadbed. Last March I had occasion to take a trip one hundred and thirty miles southwest of Saskatoon on a new line. The last fifty miles of this road are still in the hands of the construction department, and at one time it actually took us seven hours to make a run of twenty-one miles. The roadbed was so soft that a crew of section men had to go along with a supply of planks and timbers. Whenever we came to a soft place they would go ahead of the train, raise the track and block it up so it would be level enough for the train to pass over. They would do this "while you wait."

By the time the settler is at the end of this journey he has been on the road from four to ten days and he is glad that it is at an end although as yet he may not have "where to lay his head." By the end of two or three weeks, if his homestead is not too far from the railroad, he will have a good share of his goods hauled out and some shelter for his horses. If he has no tent you would most likely find a bunk nailed up in one end of the stable while the balance of the homestead still remained free to be used as a dining room. At the end of three years he can get a title to his land, which is worth from twenty-five hundred to four thousand dollars. But this is not all clear profit. He has value received for his money, time, and hardship.

As Bishop's agent, I wish to thank those of the Saskatchewan District who made such liberal offerings for the benefit of the church during the first year of our organization. You paid fifteen hundred and sixty-seven dollars and five cents; besides that sent direct to Bishop Evans, to the Presiding Bishop at Independence, and to various others. This is a good showing and a most excellent beginning. We have abundant reason to take courage and press forward.

For your further encouragement and information I would like to make a short analysis of my report which you will find included in the Presiding Bishop's report. As near as we can estimate there are about three hundred members in our district. Of this number forty-three names appear in this report. Two persons paid twenty-five per cent of the amount mentioned and eleven persons paid eighty-three per cent. So it will be seen that there is still much room for improvement. Now please do not think that I am finding fault because some of your offerings were not larger. I am certain that it required as great sacrifice in some cases for you to pay one, five, or ten dollars as for others to pay their hundreds. It shows that you have made a start, that you are interested in the Lord's work, that you are doing all you can to comply with the whole law. I hope and trust that many new names will appear on the Bishop's books at the end of this year. Your offerings of whatever amount are always acceptable. The Lord has, in time past, blessed those who have paid into his storehouse and he has promised to bless your efforts also.

Again thanking you for your noble work and wishing you success and many rich blessings in your future efforts, I am,

Yours truly and sincerely,

W. E. NELSON.

TORONTO, ONTARIO, April 24, 1910.

Dear Herald: It is an aphorism that "nothing succeeds like success," and it is also another aphorism (especially in scientific circles) that "nothing is so certain to happen as the unexpected." One would hardly think it of the SAINTS' HERALD, but it is something to be assured upon the highest (editorial) authority, that our beloved and erstwhile staid and ultra-conservative official organ, the SAINTS' HERALD, of Lamoni, Iowa, has now succeeded in harnessing the lightning of heaven and God's own thunderbolts. (See HERALD, vol. 57; p. 85, and column 2.) Lamoni has now acquired a new and altogether unique distinction as the "land without a storm," for of course, if the HERALD has monopolized all the electric power and meteoric currents of Lamoni and its environs, it is perfectly obvious that there can be no thunderstorms in that thrice happy land.

But personally I must say that I find the utmost difficulty in assimilating such truly American beefsteak of the highly seasoned and extra tough literary variety, though I have certainly enjoyed my share in years gone by of the "roast beef of Old England," as the song has it. Ho, this news is either too good to be true, or too true to be good.

I am sadly afraid it is an editorial dig or jibe at a certain obscure astronomical writer for the SAINTS' HERALD, who originally hailed from old England, and now hangs out at a certain terrestrial spot in the Western Hemisphere, not one thousand miles from Toronto, Canada; and, strange to say, happened to use those very words in the course of an astronomical article he wrote some time ago upon the impending return of Halley's Comet in 1910. But we will let that pass, as the man said when he hastily and most courteously jumped over a five-barred gate to allow a passing wild bull the entire monopoly of the sidewalk!

[The writer is in error. The editors had forgotten that Brother Tubb had used the expression referred to, if indeed they ever gave it any special thought.—E. A. S.]

Lightning plays such truly remarkable and extraordinary pranks with poor humanity, that I have thought in the near future to pen a brief but interesting article for your beloved columns upon "Some wonders of meteorology," unless, indeed, your many readers are altogether tired to death of the writings of this F. R. Tubb, whoever he may be.

Now that such amicable and brotherly fiscal relations are happily established between Canada and the land of the Stars and Stripes, and that so many thousands of Americans are discovering for themselves the extraordinary fertility of Canadian soil and its richness in mineral ores, and the precious metals, not to speak of the many other attractions in the land and the people, and are buying up farms and stock and fruit growing lands in western Ontario, a new vista of hope and prosperity is opening up on all hands. Oh, if only the SAINTS' HERALD could manage to spare some of its harnessed electricity and superabundant thunderbolts to muzzle the tongues and the pens of certain oceanic demagogues, who know far better how to run their country than the Government itself, and who seem to imagine that there is no truth in the Reorganization at all, and no successorship in the first-born son of the anointed prophet of the Most High. (Albeit, he was never even accused, let alone convicted, of crime or cut off from the church.) There is one sure and certain hypothesis that puts out of court all such adverse claims and predictions as are being heard on every hand but never proved. It is this: When did God ever reject the firstborn of a prophet save for open rebellion or for flagrant iniquity of life? Neither of which has ever been demonstrated in relation to the head of the Reorganized Church. Secondly, Can they truthfully affirm that "The seed of the Martyr reigns over the church? (over their church, I mean) for we all know that the prediction is that "The seed of the Martyr shall rule over the [true] church." Lastly, we hear such an avalanche of criticism and invective hurled against our church and our leaders, accompanied with the apparently incontrovertible dictum that they of the mountains and valleys of Utah are the first organization, whereas we of the Reorganization are only the second; (ergo, of no account in the ecclesiastical economica of the Lord of hosts,) that it becomes to our young people most bewildering.

One day when traveling along the streets of a great city, much cast down in spirit by the apparently insuperable weight of this objection, there suddenly rushed into my mind, like an electric flash, these words: "But did not my servant, Paul, say: 'He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second?'" God is doing that, and your humble oldtime correspondent is more than satisfied that it is so indeed. Yours in the glorious certainty of revealed truth,

F. R. TUBB.

REUBENS, IDAHO, April 19, 1910.

Dear Saints: I thought I would write a letter on the subject of fault-finding. I believe this does more to create division among the Saints than any other evil. We are bound to notice one another's faults, but I think we should abstain from making unkind remarks about them. Jesus said: "These things I command you, that ye love one another. If the world hates you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you."—John 15: 17, 18. Also we should consider Christ's answer to Peter about how often he should forgive his brother's trespasses. Jesus said unto him: "I say not unto thee, Until seven times; but, Until seventy times seven."—Matthew 18: 22. How many of us are willing to obey these two commandments which mean love and patience?

"He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." Do we love Jesus? If so let us show our faith by our works, and support and help the weak brethren and sisters. And while we are doing this, let us also show due respect to those in authority, and if we notice their faults, let us remember that although they may be stronger and better than we, they are at best only mortals, looking forward to the time when this mortal shall put on immortality, and we shall all become perfect in Christ.

I will close with a familiar verse:

"There is so much bad in the best of us,
And so much good in the worst of us,
That it hardly behooves any of us
To talk about the rest of us."

Your sister in Christ,
ZELPHA M. ZIGLER.

LEES SUMMIT, MISSOURI, April 25, 1910.

Dear Herald: I wish to speak a few words on authority. Act with authority. It is so often seen in this broad world, so much business actions trying to be carried on without the slightest authority. To act and work for the building up of God's kingdom, initiating anyone into the kingdom and giving him full fellowship in the kingdom, that he may be a member of the kingdom, should be done by authority from God. We often come in contact with so many claiming to have a right. After questioning their authority we find that it is based upon the authority from man and the consequences are that they are citizens of the kingdom of man, being called members of the church or kingdom of God. No wonder, dear reader, so many claim the kingdom of God is in their hearts. Maybe it is. Surely you are not in the kingdom of God, being initiated in by a man not even claiming to have authority from God. This, to my mind, would prove that there is a lacking, and where is the shortage? It is by authority. Even the very ordinary calling of a town constable can not be assumed at the pleasure of presumption. He must first be appointed thereto. It is by authority that kings rule, generals command, parliamentarians make laws and magistrates enforce them. Even the humblest of our public school instructors are restrained from teaching therein until authorized by the provincial power.

This great question surely concerns the kingdom of God, for do we not read, "How shall they preach except they be sent" (Romans 10:14, 15)? Moses of old did not dare to officiate in his office until appointed thereto by an angel; neither did Aaron occupy as a spokesman until directed by revelation from God. It was the plan in the New Testament times.

High or low, rich or poor, none are privileged; a divine call is exacted, so this makes revelation from God necessary. It must be, God must speak to man as man speaks to man. How unlike our modern ministers. Aaron was not called, was not ordained, because of some beating in the heart. The records read that God revealed himself through another already occupying, and through no other. Applying this test to the different churches of to-day, what a contrast we have. Where among them is their mouthpiece of the Almighty through whom God may communicate his will by giving revelation, speaking to man? They tell us that there is no revelation needed since the revelation given to John upon the Isle of Patmos, over eighteen hundred years ago. How then are ministers to be called and how do they retain authority to represent Christ's work for him and help to build up his kingdom on earth without authority given from God through revelation, a manifestation by the voice of inspiration? The facts are that if the attractions of society and salary were removed, there would be fewer calls.

Place the ministers on a Bible basis, of going without purse or scrip; and, to my mind, they would stop making merchandise out of the word of God. Here we are in a sorrowful situation: a land full of churches claiming the power of God and none of them claiming revelation from the Lord. No wonder it has happened, even as the prophet foretold: "For this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears."—Matthew 13:15.

Let us trace to the source of ordination. The Lutherans go as far back as Luther, the Calvinists to Calvin, the Presbyterians to John Knox, the Episcopalians to Henry VIII. The question is, Where and how did these men spoken of receive their ordination? Surely if a church can be started without ordination, it could continue without ordination; but what would an ordination from unordained gentlemen impart? It is nothing more nor less than "having a form of godliness and denying the power thereof." Empty of ordination themselves how could they pour out on somebody else that which they did not possess? It is hard for a son to inherit the fortune of his father save the father possess one.

W. R. RUSH.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI.

Dear Herald: I have in my possession some papers that represent a comfortable sum of money under favorable circumstances, their present value unknown. I have on many occasions asked the dear Father to make known to me if they would ever become valuable, and have promised to share with him should they ever increase in value. I have done this several times and have waited for an answer to my prayer. Some time ago I received the following: I thought I was in a railroad depot. Seemingly I had not stepped from the car. There was the usual hurry and bustle. The baggage was being removed from the car, when one of the men approached me with a large box, beautifully finished, polished, and bright and shining. It was of dark color, like rosewood, and about four feet long and two feet square. He placed the box on the floor in front of me, and laying his hand on my shoulder, said, "Madam, this is your property, yours." I looked down at the beautiful thing, and bent over it, placed my hands upon it and lifted its cover, seemed to know it was mine. The cover was fastened like a trunk with hinges, and supported on its back and end so that it stood upright. I gazed a moment at its appearance before touching its contents. It was packed completely full. On the top and in the center was another box, like unto the box itself, only about half as large, finished about the same, differing only that the inner box had a projection at each end, seemingly intended to use in handling.

I lifted the small box and stood it across the corner of the large one, and drew out the handles which proved the box to be inclosed in a sheath covering, and the handles were hollow tubes. The inner box was full also. The first thing I removed was a small glass bottle, sealed and labeled, "Radium, 1 ounce"; the next was also a bottle, but much larger, containing gold dust, or particles of gold like bird gravel, about sixteen ounces, and sealed and labeled "gold dust." I placed this bottle beside the radium bottle and picked up another bottle containing precious stones of every kind, among which I recognized the diamond, ruby, pearl, amethyst, topaz, the blood red garnet and many others. I placed this down and pushed my hands into the ends of the box, into the handles and drew out typewritten papers that impressed me as being very valuable, but the nature of which I did not just understand. I felt so surprised and astonished at what laid before me that I trembled and felt awed. The large box was packed with parcels done up in paper and sealed, papers of different colors, like the colors of the precious jewels in the large bottle. The packages I did not displace, but felt that they each contained a treasure of some great value. My heart began to swell with gratitude to God for an especial blessing, the real nature of which I did not and could not fathom.

I write this dream, hoping that some one may be able to give me the full interpretation. Hoping to hear from one of the Saints who has the gift of interpretation, I await an answer.

Your sister,
EMMA W. SIMPSON.

Environment.

Before entering into a discussion of this subject, we will refer to the circumstance of Adam and Eve. Tradition has had more to do with our education along these lines than books. The usual impression made on our mind is that our forefathers did some terrible thing in the Garden of Eden, and if they had not done so, we would have all been good and would have done no wrong. We would have been the nice boys and girls that our Sunday school teachers have always taught us to be. Let us see what the books say on the matter. One ray of light from them is better than all the speculation of men influenced by the education received from the mother church and her daughters.

"And in that day Adam blessed God, and was filled, and began to prophesy concerning all the families of the earth; saying, Blessed be the name of God, for, because of my transgression my eyes are opened, and in this life I shall have joy, and again, in the flesh I shall see God. And Eve, his wife, heard all these things and was glad, saying, Were it not for our transgression, we . . . never should have known good and evil, and the joy of our redemption, and the eternal life which God giveth unto all the obedient."—Genesis 4: 10, 11, Inspired Translation.

"Adam fell that men might be; and men are that they might have joy."—Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 1: 195, authorized edition.

"And the Lord appeared unto them, and they rose up and blessed Adam, and called him Michael, the Prince, the Archangel."—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 28.

It is not our intention to enter into an examination of what might be allegorical language, our knowledge is too limited, but a fall that makes people rejoice, that makes it possible for them to exist and have joy, and finally become angels, is not one that we should complain about.

What about environment? Let us look for some examples: A kind of corn planted in the ground will grow and produce other corn when it has moisture and heat from the sun. Why? Because it is in proper environments. Take away any one of the three, earth, heat, moisture, and you destroy the environment needful to make the corn grow. Oranges can not be grown in a cold climate because the necessary environment is not there. There is earth and moisture, but not heat.

When the writer was a boy the use of tobacco was very common in his father's home, in the coal mines where he worked, in the schools, in church, sometimes the preacher in the pulpit and during revivals used it, on the street and on the playground. So he did what the crowd did. When about eighteen years old, he changed his environments and went West among civilized people. Their example and his attention being called to the filthiness of it, he became ashamed and quit.

Here is a supposed case. A teacher of the branch calls on Sister Blank, and after the usual salutation, he says to her: "Sister, I came to talk to you about your boy Steve. I have seen him at the depot among very immoral boys. They smoke cigarettes, swear, steal, climb the cars, play hooky from school; they are dirty, and all around bad boys." With a pleasant smile she answers the teacher that she was aware of all that. He suggests that it would be best for the boy to be kept away from such places, but she assures him that she once thought so, but she had been reading the new doctrine, that the good environment theory was knocked in the head, and had received its death blow in the Garden of Eden, and that it was a great burden off her mind, and that Steve was so happy and contented that she did not care to disturb him.

Another common case: Bennie Stone calls on Tom Brown, and asks him if he would not like to attend church with him, the Religio and Sunday school also, that besides the good lessons he would learn, there would be such a good environment to be in, so many nice young people that were trying to read upright and honorable lives. He replies that the up-to-date idea is that good company don't help a young man any, that it is only molly-coddle that needs a good environment to help him be good.

The good environments created by the Religio and Sunday school have been a very great factor in saving our young people to the church. I look back for thirty years, and recall a number of families with children who had a branch but no Religio or Sunday school, and all are lost to the church. If the recorder could separate those coming into the church through the auxiliaries from those gained by missionaries, it would show a very large percentage as coming from among the young people.

It would be unreasonable to believe that environment had absolute control over our lives, but it has much to do in molding them. The best boys and girls come from homes where the mothers and fathers live the simple, lowly, pure, and humble life of the Nazarene; not homes of luxury and gilded vice, or wretched homes of poverty and crime in its most revolting forms. The strong, spiritually, physically, and morally can overcome their environments, but they are few compared with the masses, and without them the world would make no advancement. It matters not where we look in the world we see evidences of the effect of environment upon the people. The people from the East going West, soon adapt themselves to western ways. They do not learn it from books, but because of the environment in which they move. A young man may read of the cowboy with buckskin breeches fringed down the sides, bowie knives and revolvers in his belt, a bottle of whisky in his hip pocket, and fire in his eye ready for fight; books and papers have given him that idea, and he believes it, and with timid feelings he approaches his haunts on the rolling prairie or in the rocky canyon, but a few weeks of companionship, environment if you please, gives him a better education than all the books he has ever read. He finds a different type of a man. He may have the buckskin breeches, but just as likely to have on a pair of brown overalls. He has a revolver, but it will be used more on jack rabbits and coyotes than on men; he loves his pony; he is open-hearted and generous; his hospitality is of the western type; you can feel at home in his cabin and are welcome to his plain but substantial food.

If the doctrine of environment is dead, why be so much concerned about the evil around us; why try to get rid of the saloon; why not let our boys go there, and our girls to the red light district; why do we want to have our homes in the best part of the city instead of in the slums? How many boys and girls would remain pure under such conditions even with the best of parents and good religious opportunities?

Another strong evidence of the power of environment is shown in the assimilation of emigrants. They soon adopt our ways of doing things, and this is especially true of the younger people, who come more in contact with the new conditions. The Lord emphasizes the need of a good environment in the revelation concerning the building of the Sanitarium, wherein he says, "Where they may be removed from the influences and environments unfavorable to the exercise of proper faith unto the healing of the sick."—Doctrine and Covenants 127: 2.

Admitting that Adam and Eve were in a good environment in the Garden of Eden or somewhere else, just as soon as Satan entered it was changed, in like manner as if a saloon were opened in a church, and the bartender got behind the bar to deal out the liquor.

Yours for a good environment,
EDWARD RANNIE.

Sheffield Reunion.

The reunion of the Sheffield District convened in the Saints' church, Clay Cross, Derbyshire, England, on Sunday, April 10, 1910. Morning service commenced under the presidency of Brother Johnston, assisted by Elder T. Taylor, of Leeds, and Brother Meredith, president of the Seventh Quorum of Elders, Birmingham. During the morning service a paper was given by Elder C. Cousins on "What are the duties of the district president?" This resulted in a discussion which ended in good to all and edification to the less learned.

Afternoon meeting at 1.45, under presidency of Brother Meredith, was a priesthood meeting. Subject, "Unto what were we called? To administer the word of Almighty God." One question was raised amounting to this: "Is the Church History as authentic as the publishers' preface would suggest when comparing the words as recorded therein by Joseph Smith on page 561, concerning the ordination of seventies until there are one hundred and forty and four thousand, and those contained in the Doctrine and Covenants, section 106, page 43?"

Fellowship at 3 p. m., presided over by J. Holmes and G. Gaydon. One prayer and ten testimonies were given, a good spiritual time enjoyed, and the two children of a sister were blessed by Brethren Meredith and T. Taylor. Priesthood meeting continued at 4.45, and preaching meeting at 6, preaching by Brother Meredith, assisted by T. Taylor. Much advice and instruction on the needs of the world and the church were given and a good spiritual time enjoyed. Closing prayer by Bro. C. Cousins. G. GAYDON, Secretary.

NOTTINGHAM, ENGLAND, April 12, 1910.

Extracts from Letters.

A. B. Kirkendall, Creola, Ohio, April 6, 1910: "My mind to-day has been on the transactions of eighty years ago,—such a small beginning, scarcely noticed in the world at large; yet what importance to us who have proved it. There are stirring times before us in many ways and this work is the only solution to many of the problems. Shall we meet them "like men of war," or will the Lord have to raise up others? I hope to live the next twenty years and see the one hundredth anniversary of the work's beginning. I hope to see wonderful progress. May we have the true spirit of the gospel and contribute our part towards its consummation."

T. S. Brown, Hemet, California: "I am inclosing you a Brighamite tract. Am getting something on this order frequently of late. Evidently the parties putting this last one out are ashamed to give their name or printing location." [Sure they are. Who would not be, considering its character? —EDITORS.]

W. S. Moore, Ainsworth, Nebraska: "I have been receiving a number of tracts from the Brighamite people of late. They amount to nothing as evidence against us, but thought you might wish to see them, and so send them on."

News From Branches

CENTRAL CHICAGO.

Sunday, May 1. Good attendance at Sunday school and more interest seems to be taken. We have begun to practice on the music for our children's day program, Sr. Fanny Prentiss McGahen being named as chairman of the committee. Sacrament service well attended, although we wonder why some others were not there. If all the Saints could appreciate the blessings they miss when not attending this service, we feel there would not be so many absentees. Elders McGahen and Burwell were in charge and gave some good instruction. Elder P. Pement was the speaker in the evening.

Mrs. Fannie and Miss Pearl Schwartz, mother and sister of your correspondent, arrived in the city last week, and may remain for the summer. My friends may be aware that my two married brothers, Elmer and Grant, live in Chicago.

Sr. Addison Frantz, with her little daughters, Margaret and Vivian, departed for their home in South Haven, Tuesday, the 3d.

Sr. James Cuthbert has been staying at the home of her sister, Sr. T. Vanderhoof, for the last few weeks, and her presence has been much appreciated at the church services.

Bro. William Lilly, who has been visiting at the home of Sister Keir, departed for Gardner, Illinois, this week to visit relatives.

Brother Sherman, who was on the sick list last week, stated at prayer meeting Wednesday evening that he had received a great blessing through administration on Sunday. We were much rejoiced to note that little Eva Sherman was in attendance at services Sunday, after such a long illness. There was a better attendance at prayer meeting Wednesday evening than we have had for months. Trust the time is near at hand when the majority of Saints, instead of the minority, will consider that they have a regular engagement at the prayer meeting.

"Workmen of God, oh, lose not heart,
But learn what God is like!
And in the darkest battlefield,
Thou shalt know where to strike.

"Oh, blest is he to whom is given
The instinct that can tell,
That God is on the field, when he Is most invisible."

HISTORY OF THE DES MOINES, IOWA, DISTRICT.

During the years 1903 to 1905 we succeeded in gathering notes from which we were able to compile a fairly complete historical sketch of the Des Moines District.

The first chapter covers the years from 1860 to 1866, and we make the following extract from the chapter.

The first reference to any work of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in what is now the Des Moines District, was at the semiannual conference of the church held at Gallands Grove, Iowa, in October, 1862. A report from the Oskaloosa Branch was presented to this conference. The earliest historical note which we find is the baptism of Martha Standeven, at Adel, Dallas County, Iowa, in 1860, by C. G. Lanphear. The said sister later united with the Boonesboro Branch.

On May 19, 1862, John X. Davis and Mary Davis were baptized at Newton, Jasper County, by Elder Thomas E. Jenkins. Elder Jenkins also baptized William Stevens, in 1862, the place of baptism not being recorded, either Newton, or Fort Des Moines. We have no further mention of the said Elder Jenkins in the district.

A branch of the church was organized at Oskaloosa, in June, 1862, and reported to the October conference of that year. Elder C. G. Lanphear perfected the organization, which had ten members.

At the conference of October, 1863, Elders Ebenezer Page and John Swain were appointed to labor in Guthrie, Dallas, and Polk counties, Iowa.

In the assigning of missions at the June conference of 1863, Elders J. A. McIntosh, John Swain, Lehi Ellison, Spencer Smith, and A. B. Kirkendall were appointed to labor in Shelby, Audubon, Guthrie, and Dallas counties.

At the semiannual conference held in Pottawattamie County, Iowa, in October, 1863, the following appears in the minutes:

"Resolved, That the counties of Shelby, Crawford, Audubon, Guthrie, Dallas, Polk, and Sac, be under the presidency of J. A. McIntosh."

At a special conference held at Gallands Grove, October 25 and 26, the following appears in the minutes: "In the assigning of missions; R. D. Butterworth, Dallas and Guthrie counties; William Davis, Dallas County; William Stevens, Des Moines and vicinity."

The record shows one baptism performed by Elder McIntosh in the city of Des Moines during his mission here.

The labors of the several elders in Polk County resulted in the organization of a branch at Fort Des Moines, on July 10, 1864, with six members. The following minutes are taken from the record book of that day, which is still preserved:

"JULY 10, 1864.

"We, the undersigned members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, assembled,

"Resolved, That we organize a branch of said church at Fort Des Moines, to be called the Polk County Branch of said Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

"Elder John Sayer, William Stevens, Elizabeth Sayer, Sarah Ann Sayer, Sarah Elizabeth Stevens, and Electa Benedict.

"Resolved, That Elder Stevens preside over the branch.

"Resolved, That Elder Sayer act as secretary, and counselor to Elder Stevens."

At the annual conference held at Plano, Illinois, in April, 1865, a report was received from the Fort Des Moines Branch, although it had been organized under the name "Polk County Branch" the year previous. Of these first members of the Polk County Branch we record that John Sayer and Sarah Ann Sayer had been baptized on December 18, 1860, by Elder John Shippy, but we do not have the date of their locating at Fort Des Moines. Elizabeth Sayer was baptized in 1861 by John Sayer. For Electa Benedict there are no items. Five persons were baptized in Des Moines during the remainder of 1864, and seven members were received into the branch by vote. During the year 1866 four persons were baptized in the city. The TRUE LATTER DAY SAINTS' HERALD, of July 1, 1866, contained the following editorial paragraph:

"We have been notified that Bro. Gordon E. Deuel is at Fort Des Moines, and that he is doing a good work there."

At the annual conference of 1868, in the assigning of missions, Elder G. E. Deuel was to labor in Polk, Jasper, Dallas, Story, Hardin, and Marshall counties. It appears from the above quotation that Elder Deuel had been laboring in this part of the State since 1866.

The first record book of the Fort Des Moines Branch only contains minutes down to 1866. This entry appears upon the title page of the book:

"Record book of the branch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Des Moines, Iowa."

Mention is made above of Elder J. A. McIntosh being appointed to preside over certain territory in which Polk County was included, and the following entry appears in the book, evidently in the handwriting of the said brother:

"Direct, John A. McIntosh, Manteno, Shelby County, Iowa."

Sr. Elizabeth Sayer Sheeler was one of the members of the branch organized as above stated. She has continued her residence near Des Moines since that time, and is still a member of the branch. She came to Des Moines before the opening of the civil war. She had been a resident here several years when the first railroad train entered the city. Her life in the church has almost covered the entire period of the Reorganized Church. As the evening shades gather about her she is a living example of a faithful child of God.

The Bishopric.AGENT'S NOTICE.

(The following is an extract from a report of Brother Abels as Bishop's agent in Utah District.)

To the Saints of the Utah District; Greeting: I must invite your earnest attention to a very peculiar coincidence. A close observer will note the best observers of the law of tithing are found away from the regularly organized branches and the query might therefore be propounded; What do you ascribe as the cause thereof? I can not ascribe it to lack of knowing the law of Christ as it pertains to temporal matters, nor to a lack of coöperation in church matters; for quite a number who do not make an effort to live this law are regular attendants at services, both preaching and prayer, or attend Sunday school and loyally support the cause of the Religio workers. Again, what then might be the cause of all this indifference and lethargy pertaining to finances so much experienced in organized branches? Are scattered members more abundantly blessed with earthly goods? Is their income larger? Are they more spiritually minded? All of these questions require an answer.

My personal observation leads me to presume that the average member in any organized branch has quite as much of this earthly goods and besides has all the advantages of a continual exhorting to be spiritual and to have the doctrines of the church expounded, but temptation to yield to pleasure and to the possession of luxurious comforts and to eat the very dainties of life are ever present and the inclination to live only for what good there is in it for one's self, is one we must combat every day, besides some there are in cities who have but very meager incomes to subsist on and can not be expected to retain any surplus.

The injunction however is to all of us to make the effort to see how near we can live the celestial law of the kingdom that we might be prepared to become subjects of such a kingdom. It is the bounden duty of each of us to learn to live economically, that we might have a surplus to assist the cause of the Master.

Why not all resolve to make the effort during the coming conference year.

How many of us surrounded with the comforts of life propound the question occasionally to ourselves: Has the Bishop's agent sufficient means on hand to meet all necessary expenditures, such as the care of poor, the care of elders' families or current expenses of elders to carry the gospel sounds to the pure in heart, or for general and special taxes, and yet this would be a very proper question and perhaps quite profitable.

Says one, Let us call on the Bishop of the church for assistance and surely he will come to our rescue. But how is this going to affect us? We are all anxious that this field shall be kept open and that a progressive campaign shall be waged against error and delusion and that four or more elders shall again return to this field to labor among us, yet in the next breath we admit that notwithstanding our numbers we can not take care of our own district? Can we reasonably expect that others will think well of us, when we practically ask the church to carry our burden and express a willingness that the crown of diligent labor shall be taken from off our heads and placed upon others? Naturally our faith is measured by our works and unless we determine to become self-supporting we can not well expect the Bishop to think well of us.

Probably there are yet a few who forward their tithes and offerings to the Bishop direct, but this should not be encouraged, as we fail thereby to honor those whom the Bishop has designated to be his representatives, and besides we fail to secure for the district the benefit of disbursing funds received or to secure for it the credit due it.

Before applying to the Bishop for funds, I wish to learn from the Saints themselves if they wish me to do this or if they wish to make some provision by which funds immediately needed shall be forthcoming. Let every one of us learn to do his part and do it well.

Trusting the cause of the Master may be ever foremost in our hearts.

Yours in gospel bonds,

G. J. S. ABELS, Bishop's Agent.

Special Notice.

In harmony with the action of the late General Conference providing for the organization of a district in the State of New York, arrangements have been made for the convening of a special conference for this purpose, Saturday, June 4, at 2 p. m. at the Saints' church, Willow avenue, Niagara Falls,

New York. We trust the branches in said State will send delegations to represent them, and complete statistics of their membership for use of the secretary. Let all come bringing the Spirit of the Master, that we may have a season of rejoicing together in the Lord.

WILLOUGHBY, OHIO, May 4, 1910.

ULYSSES W. GREENE.

Minister in charge of the Eastern States.

Order of Evangelists.

Dear Brethren: The conference is over, and another year is before us. It is with profound gratitude that we note the goodness and wisdom of God in the calling out and ordination of four good men (high priests) who have been added to the order (with the exception of Bro. J. M. Terry who has not yet been ordained). God saw our weak and needy condition, and listened to our cries. As in other departments of the work, so it was with us, our extremity was God's opportunity. We are thankful for what we have received, but shall still pray for more.

The Order has made provision for report blanks which will, some time within the year, be sent to every member of the Order, so each will know what is required of him in the way of reporting.

No one should be in ignorance concerning the important duties of our calling. They are plainly set forth in the revelation of April 15, 1901. (See Doctrine and Covenants, sec. 125.) We also call attention to "The Patriarchate," a little booklet on sale at the Herald Office, (price ten cents,) a portion of which was written by our esteemed and departed brother, Alexander H. Smith. This little work was gotten out and indorsed by the Order of Evangelists, and will prove a help to all who read it carefully. It should be in the hands of the membership of the church, everywhere, so that they may be more fully informed.

The demand for patriarchal blessings, in the future, as in the past, will sometimes exceed the supply. Do not attempt to do more than you are able to do faithfully and well. A kind of wholesale business in this direction is altogether out of order. Two or three blessings at one time is sufficient, in my opinion, as a rule, though it may be that some can properly give more. I seldom give more than two at one time, never more than three. A strong man could, of course, hold two blessing meetings per day, when necessary, thus giving from four to six blessings per day. Of late, I only hold one meeting per day, as a rule.

According to the instruction and arrangement of Bro. Alexander H. Smith, the patriarchs are required to keep duplicate copies of all blessings, and from time to time, forward them to the office of the Presiding Patriarch, at Lamoni, Iowa. These copies should be arranged in the order of their dates, and they should all be numbered. We have received copies of blessings which were given in March, 1910, and the next time, and afterwards, those bearing dates of January and February, and even back to November, 1909. How can we file them away in the order of their dates, when they are not so arranged and sent, nor are we notified that copies of an earlier date are yet to be sent? This is very annoying indeed.

But this is not all. I took out the paper fasteners and read several copies (yes, five or six,) and found three of them were not put together in the right order of their pages, and they contained quite a number of mistakes, some of them bad ones, which had evidently been made by the stenographer and should have been corrected. All blessings should be carefully proof read and the mistakes corrected. Perhaps few of us, if any, are professional proof readers, but we can surely point out the material errors and have the stenographer correct them. Everyone receiving a patriarchal blessing is entitled to a copy as soon as practicable, made out in due form, and materially correct.

In order to bring about uniformity as nearly as we can, we advise that the blessings be written by the typewriter on paper eight and one half inches wide by fourteen inches long, and of medium weight,—not too light nor too heavy. Provide a suitable cover for the back, and a sheet of the same kind of paper as that upon which it is written for the front, with these words written upon it: "Patriarchal Blessing of

Each blessing should have a proper heading, containing the name of the party to whom it belongs, name of the patriarch, time when and place where the blessing is given, and the name of the church. If the party holds some official position in the priesthood, the name of office can be inclosed in curves at the end of the name. As a rule, it is better to give the name in full, rather than initials.

Duplicate copies, of course, do not need covers. In giving blessings, it is important that the patriarch cultivate the habit of speaking slowly and distinctly. Several important advantages will result from this habit, one of which is, that it gives the stenographer a much better opportunity to secure a complete and correct report.

The following is about the form which the heading assumes when typewritten, with such variations as may be found necessary:

Patriarchal blessing of John Jones (elder),
Given at Independence, Missouri, April 15, 1910,
By Joseph R. Lambert, Patriarch, Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We have no disposition to bind others to do just as we do, but at the same time, uniformity in some things connected with the work, is desirable, and we desire to have others do as well or better than we do.

As to how expenses are to be met, etc., we refer you to "The Patriarchate," pages 49 and 50. When at all practicable, do not permit any person or persons to donate on expenses till after the blessing, or blessings, have been given. It is unwise to do so.

Dear brethren, think well on the power of example. We have been called with a holy calling, to act as spiritual fathers to the church. The words of Paul to Timothy will apply well to us: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." And, we may add, rightly and faithfully attending to all the duties which belong to our office and calling.

This year, we shall hope and pray for a record of faithful, careful labor from each member of the Order who is able to enter into the work.

Your brother and fellow-workman in Christ,
J. R. LAMBERT.

Requests for Prayer.

Mrs. Alden B. Herman, Glenwood, Iowa: "I wish to ask the prayer unions and Saints in general to remember in their supplications to our Father in heaven, the case of my afflicted daughter who is in the Clarinda State Hospital, that her mind may be restored to her again, and all praise be to God."

Jennie Athey, Calhoun, Missouri: "I wish to ask the Sisters' Prayer Union to remember me in my affliction, as I am in sore need of it."

The Library Commission.

The commission took its present form with five members just two years ago, so we are pleased with the progress so far made. However, we hope the coming year will be made especially noteworthy in getting the work of the library in the best shape it has ever been.

There are five members of the commission.

Frderick M. Smith is chairman, and has general supervision.

E. A. Blakeslee, of the Presiding Bishopric, is treasurer, and has charge of the finances.

E. H. Fisher, 100 Sycamore street, Winter Hill, Massachusetts, is secretary, and as such has charge of the minutes, and general supervision of district and local boards. You should write him for any information desired concerning the local library work.

Heman C. Smith, Lamoni, Iowa, has general supervision of the General Church Library. The detail work is in charge of the librarian and his assistants, but Brother Smith has charge of books and magazine purchases; in fact, acts on behalf of the commission so far as the General Library is concerned.

S. A. Burgess, 1626 Pierce Building, Saint Louis, Missouri, was appointed editor, and has charge of the publicity feature. Any questions that you would like to have answered through a question box you may send either to him or to the secretary as given above.

The Library Commission held its latest meeting on April 17, 1910, at Independence, Missouri. The items given below from the minutes of the commission is the latest action taken in each case.

Israel Smith is librarian or custodian of the General Church Library, with power to choose assistant.

A hat rack and an umbrella case were ordered placed in the library room. Locks were ordered placed on the three doors of the library, and that the room be kept locked unless in charge of the librarian or some one appointed by him. Under this rule the library is open to the general public from 2 to 5 p. m. This is subject to modification by the member of the commission having the library in charge.

Dewey and Cutler's Accession books, card index with ten thousand cards, and ten-foot steel book stack were ordered. A book case to be placed in the vault was made by the industrial department of Graceland College, and all very rare volumes were ordered placed therein.

The matter of church publications to be placed in the library, books and magazines to be purchased for the library, the care of duplicate copies of rare volumes, were all referred to the commission member having the supervision of the library.

The matter of allowing volumes to be taken from the library to be used in debates was also referred to the member of the commission in charge of the library, he to say what volumes shall be accessible and when.

All reports must be in the hands of the General Secretary on or before March 20 each year. This includes a report from each member of the commission.

The list of two hundred volumes of use in local libraries was ordered published as soon as practicable.

It is our desire to make this work as effective as possible in every department. To this end criticism, suggestions and questions are desired and requested. Prompt consideration is assured to all inquiries, and we trust that the close of the conference year may find work in better condition than ever before.

On behalf of the commission,
S. A. BURGESS.

Died.

STRICKMAKER.—Zachariah Strickmaker was born December 11, 1831, and died April 14, 1910, at the home of one of his sons with whom he lived. He was married to Miss Rosabel Carrell May 13, 1853, and to the union nine children were born, six sons and three daughters, seven of whom are living, but none being members of the church. He was baptized and confirmed by Bro. James Carlisle. The funeral was from the home, sermon by D. E. Tucker; after which the G. A. R. post took charge of the services. Benediction at the grave by D. E. Tucker.

MAEDEL.—Edith, youngest daughter of Bro. and Sr. William Maedel, died of brain meningitis, March 21, 1910, at her home in Cash, Michigan. Edith was born July 6, 1896, and baptized November 11, 1906. She was assistant organist and librarian of the Sunday school. She was a sweet child, loved by all who knew her. Three weeks prior to her sickness she wrote her brother that she was going to die, and he came home the same week, but did not see her alive. She leaves to mourn a father, mother, one brother, one sister, and a host of other relatives and friends.

BOWER.—Rosettie E. Bower, born December 17, 1866; died March 30, 1910. Sister Bower has lived a Christian life since childhood. She became a member of the church in December, 1895. She died firm in the faith, with joyous hope of the first resurrection. Elder R. M. Maloney conducted the funeral services at the Munis schoolhouse.

WALSH.—Nancy Jane Walsh died April 10, after a long illness at her home in Grant, Huron County, Michigan, aged 46 years, 8 months, and 8 days. She was baptized in 1894. She was married to Phineas B. Walsh in 1879; to this union were born five sons and two daughters, one having preceded her to the other shore. She leaves a husband, father, mother, four sisters, and two brothers to mourn. Services were conducted in Canboro church by Myron Carr, April 13. Funeral was largely attended. She was laid to rest in Oliver Cemetery.

GILLESPIE.—Mary C. Gillespie departed this life at the home of her son, Harry Gillespie, in Kirtland, Ohio, on April 18, 1910. Mary Gillespie was born in Dundee, Scotland, January 31, 1833. Was married to John Gillespie September 5, 1859. Was baptized into the Brighamite church in Scotland, January 31, 1864. With her husband she came to America with the intention of going to Salt Lake City. On arriving in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, they first learned of the apostasy. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on January 31, 1869, by Elder Jacob Reese and remained a faithful and consistent member of the church to the time of her death. There were born to them eleven children, four sons and seven daughters, of whom seven remain, four daughters and three sons. The sister passed peacefully away, firm in the faith and hope of a glorious resurrection. Interment in the cemetery at Kirtland; sermon by Elder L. W. Powell, assisted by Elder John H. Lake.

HIGGINS.—Richard Earl, infant son of Mr. Robert and Sr. Nellie Higgins, was born near North Henderson, Illinois, November 27, 1909, and died April 17, 1910, as a result of measles which developed into pneumonia and peritonitis. Richard was blessed February 25, 1910, by Elder O. E. Sade. He was a very bright and attractive baby for his age, exhibiting an intelligence rarely seen in one so young. Our Father in heaven saw fit to take him from this world of sin to a place of joy and peace. Funeral held at the home of his parents in North Henderson, April 19, 1910. Elder O. E. Sade, of Joy, Illinois, officiating.

JUBB.—Miss Hattie F. Jubb, of Merrill, Michigan, died of appendicitis April 19, at 2.30 a. m. at Saint Mary's Hospital, after an illness of one week. She was born March 24, 1890, at Brant, Saginaw County, Michigan. She is survived by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Jubb, two brothers, Edward E. and Harold B., of Merrill, and one sister, Mrs. Myrtle Aldrich, of Brant. Funeral took place at her father's residence, near Merrill. Services were conducted by Elder Barret, of Brant. The remains were laid to rest in Brant Cemetery beside her sister Bertha who preceded her fourteen years ago.

Women the Physical Equals of Men.

Mr. George Willis Cooke concluding an interesting series of articles upon "Woman in the progress of civilization," makes in the May Chautauquan an interesting explanation of the present physical inferiority of women in civilized countries and the probable correction of this inferiority in the next few generations. Says Mr. Cooke:

"We can easily imagine how much more happy would have been woman's career, and how much more effective in the advancement of civilization, had the shut-in life of the home and the harem never been hers. Had education from the first been open to women as to men, had women been free to engage in any occupation or profession as they are now in this country, how much better it would have been for them, as well as for men! But we have not to deal with what might have been, only with what has actually occurred, in so far as we can discover it from the dim records of the past. We must assume, then, that for a very long period descent was reckoned on the side of the mother. The process of the transference of descent to the father was a very slow one, but it brought about a revolutionary change in the position of woman. It brought her into subordination to man, and her life in some respects became similar to that of the slave. In fact, slavery and war were undoubtedly potent forces in determining woman's position during the patriarchal period. The complete dominance of man had many far-reaching effects which continued down to the modern era, and are as yet only modified, not outgrown. One of the most evident of these effects is seen in the physical inferiority of woman. In the early ages, among primitive races, and among peasant and other women who live an active out-door life, and share in the occupations and interests of men, they are nearly as strong and vigorous as their masculine companions. They can accomplish as much work and as easily; and in the case of conflict with men, the women stand an equal chance of coming off victorious. The evidence for his conclusion is so large in amount and varied in character that there can be no doubt as to its correctness. Already, under modern conditions, two or three generations have been sufficient to recover to women something of this early robustness and vigor."

In the June St. Nicholas.

There are nine serial features now running in St. Nicholas—six stories, De Witt Clinton Falls's "Leaves from the Journey Book," and Palmer Cox's and Mrs. Ruth McEnery Stuart's series of jingles. In addition to the June chapters of these serials and plenty of short stories and verse, the June St. Nicholas will have much interesting information for its young readers about comets in general and the Halley Comet in particular. "Nature and science" will discuss the broad subject of comets in a way young readers can easily understand; and A. Russell Bond will tell the story of Halley's Comet, and just where and when to see it, with reproductions of a number of photographs taken by Professor Barnard.

It is a dangerous thing to be prosperous. The crucible of adversity is a less severe trial to the Christian than the refining pot of prosperity. It needs more than human skill to carry the brimming cup of mortal joy with a steady hand; yet Paul had learned that skill, for he declares, "In all things I am instructed both to be full and to be hungry." When we have much of God's providential mercies, it often happens that we have but little of God's grace; satisfied with earth, we are content to do without heaven. Rest assured, it is harder to know how to be full than it is to know how to be hungry, so desperate is the tendency of human nature to pride and forgetfulness of God. Take care that you ask in your prayers that God would teach you "how to be full."—Spurgeon.

It can scarcely be doubted that our lack of faith in persons and things might often be traced to the lack of desire for the things in which faith is wanting. We say of some sanguine people that they have faith in the possibility of doing some things because they are desirous that they should be done. Now, there is such a thing as allowing desire to warp judgment, but the mistake is oftener on the other side. Down at the bottom of our lack of faith in the ability of some one to succeed is the lack of desire that he may do so. A bit of unworthy jealousy often destroys our faith in others. The man who begins to prophesy failure as soon as another takes up a work needs to stop and examine himself whether or not the wish has not prompted the thought. It is an exceedingly bad sign when faith in the success of worthy people and worthy projects is the exception rather than the rule.—Look-out.

Books on Religion.

Five books of a religious interest have recently been published by the Macmillan Company. Each is possessed of unusual merit; either the author has presented thoughts which go out of the beaten path, or has clothed old thoughts with new garments. The value of religious criticism is well recognized by every sincere scholar; only out of much discussion can clarified ideas and higher aims come.

Dr. Andrew Martin Fairbairn's Studies in Religion and Theology is mainly a treatise on the great fundamental forces, doctrines, and personalities that underly the Christian Church. The Christian Work and Evangelist in commenting upon the value of the book says that "It is refreshing to turn from the many somewhat platitudinous and hortatory religious books pouring from the press to a great, solid, philosophical, scholarly treatise of religion such as is this. The great thinkers are not dead. . . . The book will be as good as a year in a theological school to the preacher."

Dr. Samuel J. Smith, who is head of the department of sociology and anthropology of the University of Minnesota, and teacher of the Bible in the People's Church at Saint Paul, has in his Religion in the Making expressed the conclusions which he has arrived at from his two fields of endeavor. Starting with the premise that one of the greatest influences in modern life flows from the Hebrew life and literature, he discusses the development of the idea of God; the making of the priest in the early days; the development of the prophets; the origin of the altar, the temple and the synagogue; early sacrifice and the religion of fasting; the ark and other sacred materials; the Hebrew conception of sanctity; and some resultant conclusions.

The Northwestern Christian Advocate says that "In almost every Sunday school a class of more intelligent persons might use Religion in the Making as a text-book to admirable advantage. Doctor Smith's order, style and manner are particularly suited for such use." The Courier Citizen adds that "it is a most suggestive and stimulating work, especially for the lay reader;" and the Westminster, of Philadelphia, speaks of it as "an earnest effort, making an exceedingly interesting study with much food for careful thinking."

One of the most prolific as well as scholarly writers of books marked by deep religious feeling is Henry Churchill King, the president of Oberlin College. His latest work is called The Ethics of Jesus, and is issued as a volume in the New Testament Series. "It is," writes the Congregationalist and Christian World, "a thoroughly interesting, instructive and stimulating piece of work, with much fresh and important exegesis. Copious footnotes direct the reader to other authorities, not to inaccessible writers in foreign languages but to the works of such men as Rauschenbusch, Stevens, Peabody, Glad-den, Dods, and Hastings's Bible Dictionaries."

The Rev. Horace G. Underwood and Dr. J. J. M. De Groot, have written books which are similar in interest, both of them being concerned with the religions of the vast number of peoples in Eastern Asia.

Doctor De Groot has confined himself to The Religion of the Chinese. Of this book the Westminster says: "The general reader will, by its perusal, clarify his concepts of the meaning of the oft-repeated terms, 'ancestor worship,' 'Confucianism,'

'Taoism' and 'Buddhism,' with Shinto and devil worship thrown in as side issues, each and all mysterious enough in their indefiniteness to the positive occidental mind. This treatise should be in every missionary library.

Under the title of The Religions of Eastern Asia, Rev. Horace Grant Underwood, D. D., a missionary in Korea and a scholar of rare parts, takes up the same subject as De Groot, but includes Korea and Japan. The purpose of the author is to demonstrate what conceptions of God these three nations display in their religions and practices. Like Doctor De Groot's work this book is indispensable in the missionary library, and, used as a complement to The Religions of the Chinese, will illumine the subject completely.

A book of a little different nature from any of the foregoing is The Development of Religion, by Dr. Irving King, of the Iowa State University. As types for study, Doctor King has chosen the American Indian and the Australian Aborigine, as they represent the lowest level of existing humanity. "In the author's skillful hands," says the Christian World and Evangelist, "his subject becomes of intense interest not only to the scientist, but to the reader interested in all phases of human nature."

The First Thanksgiving.

It will be only twelve years until the ter-centenary of the first Thanksgiving Day will be celebrated. The conditions under which the annual festival of gratitude will be celebrated this year are so radically different from those which brought about the first observance nearly three hundred years ago that a few reminders from the stormy story of the Pilgrims' struggles may not be out of place. Some tales, even though oft told, will bear repeating.

It was in the middle of the bleak New England November that the coast was sighted from the Mayflower, and it was a month later when the Pilgrims landed, after various explorations. The voyage across the Atlantic had been a hard one, very different from the five and six-day trips in the ocean liners of to-day. The time of landing was the most inauspicious of the whole year, and the place probably the least hospitable to be found on the entire American coast.

In four months after the landing, nearly half the entire number of Pilgrims had died, and the first spring came to a little band of about sixty people, stout-hearted and undismayed by either the struggles they had made or the harder struggle yet to come. With the first March sunshine and warmth they planted their little store of seed and made preparations for their first harvest.

All through the winter months the Mayflower had ridden at anchor off the shore, the one tangible bond between the New and the Old World of the Pilgrims. The southern settlements were far away from the bare New England hillsides, and when the Mayflower in April sailed away to England; it must have seemed to the Pilgrims that they were indeed alone. Like an ill omen came the death of Governor Carter on the day after the Mayflower weighed anchor, but there was another to take his place, and the summer months passed slowly and hopefully away, the Pilgrims being occupied in tilling the soil, nursing the coming harvest, treating with the Indians, and making various expeditions to the present sites of such cities and towns as Boston, Eastham, Middlesborough, and Charlestown.

Measured by standards which obtain to-day, there was little cause for giving thanks as the second winter drew on. From the standpoint of the farmer of to-day, spinning through the most fruitful agricultural land in the world in automobiles, there was little to be thankful for as the scanty harvest was gathered. The old records have it that the corn yield was good, the barley poor, and peas a failure. Winter was coming on, such a winter as Longfellow pictured with such vivid power. The Mayflower was over the sea. All the ties had been severed for the time being. On Cole's Hill were many graves. The bins were poorly stored with grain.

Yet the Pilgrims drew from the oncoming of the "cold and cruel winter," from the rocky hillsides, from the little city of the dead, from the hopes that haloed the headstones, from the mighty sense of freedom they enjoyed, from the Providence that had cared for them thus far and promised greater blessings for the future—from all these the Pilgrims drew inspiration for thanksgiving, and Governor Bradford sent four huntsmen into the forest for wild fowl to furnish forth a feast as the symbol of plenty and gratitude for plenty. The hunters returned with an abundance of game, very probably chiefly wild turkey. At any rate, wild turkeys were a staple source of food supply for many years throughout the entire American settlements. And this is how the first Thanksgiving Day was celebrated and why turkey is the national bird to-day, so far as the Thanksgiving table is concerned.—Kansas City Journal.

True Liberty.

People talk of liberty as if it meant the liberty to do just what a man likes. I call that man free who is able to rule himself. I call him free who fears doing wrong, but fears nothing else. I call that man free who has learned the most blessed of all truths—that liberty consists in obedience to the power, and to the will, and to the law that his higher soul reverences and approves. He is not free because he does what he likes; but he is free because he does what he ought, and there is no protest in his soul against that doing.

Some people think there is no liberty in obedience. I tell you that there is no liberty except in loyal obedience—the obedience of the unconstrained affections. Did you ever see a mother kept at home, a kind of prisoner, by her sick child, obeying its every wish and caprice? Will you call that mother a slave? Or is this the obedience of slavery? I call it the obedience of the highest liberty—that of love.

We hear a great deal in these days respecting the right of private judgment, the rights of labor, the rights of property, and the rights of man. Rights are grand things, divine things, in this world of God's; but the way in which we expound those rights, alas! seems to be the very incarnation of selfishness. I can see nothing very noble in a man who is for ever going about calling for his rights. I can not see anything manly in the ferocious struggle between rich and poor—the one to take as much, and the other to keep as much, as he can. The cry of "My rights and your duties," we should change to something nobler. If we can say, "My duties and your rights," we shall learn what real liberty is.—Frederick William Robertson.

A-Battle.

Nobody sees a battle. The common soldier fires away amid a smokemist, or hurries on to the charge in a crowd which hides everything from him. The officer is too anxious about the performance of what he is especially charged with to mind what others are doing.

The commander can not be present everywhere, and see every wood, watercourse, or ravine, in which his orders are carried into execution; he learns from reports how the work goes on. It is well; for a battle is one of those jobs which men do without darning to look upon.

Over miles of country, at every field-fence, in every gorge of a valley, or entry into a wood, there is murder committing—wholesale, continuous, reciprocal murder. The human form, God's image, is mutilated, deformed, lacerated, in every possible way, and by every variety of torture.

The wounded are jolted off in carts to the rear, their bared nerves crushed into maddening pain at every stone or rut; or the flight and pursuit trample over them, leaving them to writhe and groan without assistance; and fever and thirst, the most enduring of painful sensations, possess them entirely.

Thirst, too, has seized upon the yet able-bodied soldier, who, with bloodshot eye and tongue lolling out, plies his trade; blaspheming, killing with savage delight, callous when the brains of his best-loved comrade are spattered over him! The battlefield is, if possible, a more painful object of contemplation than the combatants. They are, in their vocation, earning their bread. What will not men do for a shilling a day?

But their work is carried on amid the fields, gardens, and homesteads of men unused to war. They left their homes, with all that habit and happy associations have made precious, to bear its brunt. The poor, the aged, the sick are left in a hurry, to be killed by stray shots or beaten down, as the charge or counter-charge goes over them. The ripening grain is trampled down; the garden is trodden into a black mud; the fruit trees, bending beneath their luscious load, are shattered by the cannon shot; churches and private dwellings are used as fortresses, and ruined in the conflict; barns and granaries take fire, and the conflagration spreads on all sides.

At night the steed is stabled beside the altar, and the weary homicides of the day complete the wrecking of houses to make their lairs for slumber. The fires of the bivouac complete what the fires kindled by the battle have not consumed.

The surviving soldiers march on, to act the same scenes over again elsewhere; and the remnant of the scattered inhabitants return, to find the mangled bodies of those they had loved amid the blackened ruins of their homes; to mourn, with more than agonizing grief, over the missing, of whose fate they are uncertain; to feel themselves bankrupt in the world's stores, and look from their children to the desolate fields and garners, and think of famine and pestilence, engendered by the rotting bodies of the half-buried myriads of slain.

Give me the money that has been spent in war and I will purchase every foot of land upon the globe. I will clothe every man, woman, and child in an attire of which kings and queens would be proud. I will build a schoolhouse on every hillside and in every valley over the whole earth. I will build an academy and endow it, and a college in every State, and fill it with able professors. I will crown every hillside with a place of worship consecrated to the gospel of peace. I will support in every pulpit an able teacher of righteousness, so that on every Sabbath morning the chime on one hill should answer around the earth's wide circumference, and the voice of prayer and the song of praise should ascend like a universal holocaust to heaven.—Charles Sumner.

Many people believe that milk is ready-made and stored in the udder of the cow simply awaiting the milker. This impression is corrected by the statement of the well-known scientist, John Burroughs, who says: "Most persons think that giving down or holding up the milk by the cow is a voluntary act. In fact, they fancy that the udder is a vessel filled with milk, and that the cow releases or withholds it just as she chooses. But the udder is a manufactory; it is filled with blood from which the milk is manufactured while you milk. This process is controlled by the cow's nervous system; when she is excited or in any way disturbed, as by a stranger, or by taking away her calf, or any other cause, the process is arrested and the milk will not flow. The nervous energy goes elsewhere. The whole process is as involuntary as is digestion in man and is disturbed or arrested in about the same way.—Indiana Farmer.

It is not enough that a man know the evil of his own time; he must know the remedy of it. It is not enough that a man set himself to right the wrongs of the world, he must find the power outside himself that makes for righteousness. Thus alone is he equal to the task. Here is the secret of strength, the hope of success in our service for men: that a man have a great faith and an unflinching trust in God; a great faith in the redemption power of Jesus Christ; that he is a perpetual force for righteousness in the world; a great faith in man, that slowly but surely man is yielding to the spiritual forces of life.

THE SPIRIT AND THE LETTER.

BOTH ARE ESSENTIAL TO THE SAFETY AND GROWTH OF THE SAINTS.

Some people seem to suppose that if they have the word of God as set forth in the Bible they need no more and can expect to receive no more. They feel that the canon of scripture is full. All that may come to them claiming to be new or additional revelation is heterodox.

As a result of this belief, while they may be great sticklers for the word of God as it was revealed in the past and as it has been preserved in tradition or on the printed page, they may actually be in open and bitter rebellion against the word and will of God as he is teaching it to the people now.

Such people have lived in all ages of the world. The Jews in the days of Christ were a notable example. They revered Moses and the prophets, but spurned the Lord Jesus. They would have died for the pentateuch; but they rejected the word of God as we now have it in the New Testament Scriptures.

They studied the cold letter of the law very closely, and carefully observed a multitude of ordinances taught therein and in the traditions that had attached themselves to the law, so that their religious exercises became a burden. The letter, deprived of the spirit, killed them spiritually. At the same time their hearts were closed to the Spirit that would have made them alive. They could not accept the invitation, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden." No, to them it was not orthodox, because the rabbi had not read it to them from the writings of Isaiah or from the Books of Moses.

The restoration of the gospel in later times found many in the world who were willing to swear allegiance to the letter of the law as they had it in the King James Version of the Bible. They were very partisan and zealous in their defense of that good book. They did not realize, or know, or understand much that was in it, yet they fiercely resented the idea that the word of God might come to them in any other way, or that anything could be revealed to in any way supplement that which had been given so long ago. Precisely like the Jews they rejected the prophets that came to them, the while they were professing to believe those that had come to a past generation. It is true that they rejected a man, while the Jews rejected the Son of God, yet the principle was the same, and in both cases the message of the Lord was repudiated.

Such a course must always result disastrously. Those who cling to the cold letter of the law and reject its spirit are out of harmony with the God who reveals here a little and there a little, line upon line and precept upon precept, while his great work "goes marching on." They simply commit spiritual suicide. They try to defend themselves with a weapon that must be handled by a higher power, a power that they have ruled out of their lives; for it is written, "The sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God."

The letter does not kill when it is animated and used by the Spirit. It kills only when we try to banish the Spirit and use the sword in our own way.

On the other hand, some have made the opposite mistake, perhaps having misunderstood the declaration, "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." They have concluded that they might safely cast the written word to one side and depend wholly upon such spiritual forces as might move them to action. As a result of their thus lightly forsaking the laws of God, as formulated in the Scriptures and given them for a guide, the Spirit has refused to continue with them. They have been left without either the Spirit or the letter. The one they have forsaken; the other has forsaken them. Consequently they fall a victim to evil spiritual influences and to their own wayward fancies, and rush into all manner of folly, carrying their followers with them to shame and ruin.

There was a time in the history of this great latter day work when some of the Saints themselves made this error, as great as the one committed by their sectarian friends in rejecting further revelation. That error consisted in adopting the idea already outlined,—of supposing that they could cast the written word aside, thinking the books to be of no more value "than the ashes of a rye straw"; while they themselves posed as the "living oracles" whose every impulse must be heeded as divine. The results of that course were as we have indicated. The evil that ensued can not be undone this side of eternity.

The only safe policy is that policy which was adopted and is still maintained by the Reorganization. That position in substance was that they would be guided by both the letter and the spirit of the law, and by the Holy Spirit as it might be given to them. They held themselves open to receive the will of God by revelation or by any spiritual manifestation that he might be pleased to give. Yet they held that the written word was in full binding force upon them as their law; and they did not propose to receive any doctrine upon the word of any man, or upon the recommendation of any spirit, to themselves or to anyone else, if such doctrine were found to be in conflict with the law as stated in the three books.

That was a safe and wise stand to take. We, of the younger generation, should be profoundly grateful that our fathers were divinely led to take their stand upon such safe ground. We should be very careful that we never stray therefrom.

GRACELAND COLLEGE NEWS.

The readers of the HERALD will be interested in knowing that appointments have been made in most of the districts for the securing of pledges to carry out the conditions of the TEMPORARY ENDOWMENT FUND. In response to the articles in the HERALD of last week pledges are already being received from HERALD readers who are not located where they are attending branch meetings. This early response is very encouraging.

Each one who is able should ask himself the question, Is it not worth twenty cents of my money each week to see the young people of the church have the privilege of a mental training surrounded by proper environments? Over two hundred pledges have already been secured, and if all who are able will respond promptly, the project will be a great success.

Do not wait until some one asks you to sign a card, but write to the treasurer, F. B. Blair, Lamoni, Iowa, and he will forward you a subscription card for your signature. Will you be one of the loyal five hundred to make this TEMPORARY ENDOWMENT FUND a success?

THE PERSONAL PROPERTY OF JOSEPH SMITH.

The following interesting and rather amusing item appears in an epistle of the Twelve published in the Millennial Star, volume 2, page 122.

"When Brother Joseph stated to the General Conference [1841] the amount and situation of the property of the church, of which he is trustee in trust by the united voice of the church; he also stated the amount of his own possessions on earth; and what do you think it was? We will tell you. His old horse Charley, given him in Kirtland; two pet deer; two old turkeys, and four young ones; the old cow given him by a brother in Missouri, his old dog Major, his wife, children, and a little household furniture. This is the amount of the great possessions of that man whom God has called to lead his people in these last days; this the sum total of the great estates, the splendid mansions and noble living of him who has spent a life of toil and suffering, of privation and hardships, of imprisonments and chains, of dungeons and vexatious suits, and every kind of contumely and contempt ungodly men could heap upon him, and last of all report him as rolling in wealth and luxury which he had plundered from the spoils of those for whose good he had thus toiled and suffered. Who would be willing to suffer what he has suffered, and labor near twenty years as he has done, for the wealth he is in possession of?"

PREAMBLES AND RESOLUTIONS.

(Adopted by the Independence Stake Bishopric.)

Inasmuch as the law of God provides that the Bishopric shall assist the Saints in locating in the land of Zion;

Therefore, it is the opinion and judgment of the bishopric of the Independence Stake that it is their duty, under the direction of the general Bishopric, to care for the Saints who may desire their assistance to locate in said stake.

REALTY AND BUSINESS PROPOSITIONS.

Therefore, be it Resolved, That we, the stake bishopric, deem it wisdom to open a realty exchange and for other business propositions, but not as a competitive business, but on the basis as those engaged in administering spiritual things.

NO COMMISSION.

Be it further Resolved, That inasmuch as it is the duty of the bishopric to counsel and advise, in the sale and purchase of real estate no commission be charged; and in all cases the price of the seller must be less the commission. The buyers being the beneficiaries they will be required to pay to this office the actual expenses accruing by the sale or purchase of real estate or other business propositions.

BUREAU OF LABOR AND INFORMATION.

Be it further Resolved, That the stake bishopric open at their office an information bureau for the benefit of those who may need general information; and a labor bureau where those who want help may lodge their needs, and where those who are seeking employment may receive information as to where employment may be found.

ALL THINGS PREPARED BEFORE YOU.

Be it further Resolved, That we advise Saints contemplating moving into the Independence Stake that they counsel with the general or stake bishopric before moving, that "all things may be prepared before them"; otherwise, take their own responsibility.

Furthermore, that these preambles and resolutions be published in the HERALD and Ensign, that the Saints may know their privileges, and our desires to assist them.

WANTED; VOLUMES OF THE "JOURNAL OF DISCOURSES," "TIMES AND SEASONS," AND "MILLENNIAL STAR."

Persons having volumes of the Journal of Discourses for which they have no present use can be of material service to the church by placing them in the editorial library, either temporarily or permanently.

We have frequent occasion to verify quotations made from these books. It is not safe to use these quotations without verification. At present we must resort to the private libraries of persons who do not wish to part with the books.

If you have such books that you will place in the library they will be held subject to your call, unless you feel inclined to place them there permanently. In that event you will have the satisfaction of knowing that the books are placed where they will do more good than they ever can in any private library.

We should also like to secure volumes of Times and Seasons and the Millennial Star. Would be pleased to correspond with anyone having any of the books named.

GRACELAND COLLEGE.

The Board of Managers of Graceland College appointed by the new board are using every exertion to get the affairs of the college on a satisfactory business basis and have encouragement that through the temporary endowment fund we will receive means to place our credit upon a safer basis, but none of this fund will be available until July 1; we are therefore under the urgent necessity of raising means to tide over until July 1. If any of the Saints, or friends, have a thousand dollars or any less amount which they would loan for six months, or one year at six per cent, it would be greatly appreciated, and would assist us in tiding over the present emergency and in sustaining a worthy cause.

Or should any person be able and willing to make a special donation for this purpose it would be gladly received at the present time. If anyone wishes to purchase scholarships in advance we would be glad to communicate with him. Please let us know at once what you can do for Graceland College, and in what way you can help us.

Respectfully submitted,

AN INDIAN STORY FROM AN INDIAN PEN.

There is a short legend prevalent among the Menominee Indians which occasions a yearly celebration which corresponds to that of the white man's Lenten season.

Long ago, after the children of the Great Spirit had suffered hunger and plague which swept across their lands and visited the wigwams claiming their loved ones, the red children gathered their scanty store and assembled to pray to the Great Spirit for mercy.

When their prayers and offerings had been made and given, it suddenly grew dark. All remained as night and not a sound was to be heard.

Then a faint sound was heard in the distance. All the tribe listened. At last it became clearer and seemed to come from above.

A dim light stole in among the darkness and the sound grew louder.

The old chief arrayed in his festal garments and richest headdress, stepped out before his people, and lifting his hand to shade his eyes, looked toward the east from whence the sound came.

All his tribesmen followed his example. Suddenly a dark spot was seen coming nearer and nearer. A low chorus was heard. The singing was sweet and low and mournful.

As the object came nearer it was discovered to be a canoe. In it were seated several chiefs.

The canoe sailed swiftly onward and the occupants raised their voices in a song of triumph.

It floated toward the awe-struck people. They gazed in wonder at the sight. Suddenly it vanished.

The flying canoe and its occupants was a good omen. It was a word of promise sent them from the Great Spirit for they sang of the coming harvest and the destruction of the plague.

From that time on this tribe has kept the season as sacred.

Every year the fast is begun about the same time as that of Lent.

Any stranger or opposing tribe can come among them during this time unmolested.

The fast lasts ten days.

This custom is still practiced among the Menominees.—Carlyle Greenbrier, Menominee, in The Indian's Friend, published in New York City, March, 1910.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Bro. A. A. Reams has been appointed as special agent for the Herald Publishing House and expects to travel continuously in its interest. We bespeak for him the patronage of the Saints. They can confidently transact any business connected with the Herald Publishing House with Brother Reams. Give him your orders when he calls.

We receive frequent requests for a cancer cure which was published a few years ago. Some person kindly sent us a copy of it and it will be found in another column in this issue.

Under date of May 9, Bro. James McKiernan writes the HERALD conveying the sad news of the death of Sr. Ellen H. Hills, mother of our missionary, Elder L. E. Hills.

The Sanitarium desires to secure the services of young ladies (members of the church) who wish to become trained nurses. Those who desire to obtain work and experience in that line should write to the Independence, Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri. Some may obtain positions at once, others will be placed on the waiting list.

We learn by letter from Independence, that The United Order of Enoch received its charter May 13, duly signed by the proper State officials. We shall probably be in a position to publish the articles of association in our next issue.

Elder G. J. Waller, of Honolulu, was a welcome visitor in Lamoni, Friday and Saturday last. He went from Lamoni to Chicago, where he is to spend Sunday. From Chicago he goes to New York and on to Paris, to join his family. It is a matter of regret with the Saints of Lamoni that he could not be with them longer.

J. N. Boyd, Lenora, Kansas, writes: "I thought it might do some good toward the spread of the gospel to have a notice put in the papers telling where I am located. I am eight miles south of Lenora, on the Missouri Pacific, ten miles from Penokee and Moreland, on the Union Pacific. If any of the missionaries come out this way and will notify me at Lenora, R. F. D. No. 2, I will meet them at either of the points mentioned. We have a schoolhouse one half mile from us where we can hold preaching meetings. We are in a Danish settlement, and they are mostly Adventists or lean that way. So far, I have found them to be a good moral class of people and good neighbors in every way."

Hymns and Poems

Forth to Battle, Sons of Zion.

(Tune: "Just before the battle, mother.")

Forth to battle, sons of Zion,
See the war is raging on;
And the truth must reach all nations
Ere the reign of Christ shall dawn.
Nations all are in commotion,
And in heaven signs appear.
But, oh, beware, the darkness round you
Tells that Satan's hosts are near.

CHORUS:

You can never, you can never
Serve a nobler, better cause.
Then, oh, my sisters and my brothers,
Be not wavering, do not pause.
Out of Zion, God is sending Soldiers in these latter days,
That he might prepare a people,
Counseled in his righteous ways,
But our veterans he is calling,
Calling home to paradise;
And will their youthful comrades hasten
To their place of sacrifice?

CHORUS:

Some from all four winds will gather;
But the people of our God
And the just will rise perfected
From their graves beneath the sod.
Then the conquest will be over,
And the hosts of Satan bound;
But, oh, we must be faithful servants,
If in Zion we are found.

CHORUS:

LEONARD S. RHODES.

Endowment.

(A promise to Kirtland that she would soon be organized and formed into a stake suggested the following lines):

Zion's borders yet shall flourish
All her stakes shall prosper well;
Then the word of God shall nourish
Every soul who there may dwell.

That rejoicing, when 'tis ordered,
Shall commence in that first stake
Which the mighty waters bordered,
Called in words of men a lake.

In the temple there erected,
While the church was yet in youth,
Shall our warfare be perfected,
The endowment of the truth.

When the ministry thus armored,
Shall assault the works of sin,
Youth and age shall fight untired,
Then refining shall begin.

Every soul must hear the message,
Be permitted to select
Beneath what standard he would wage,
Satan's choice or God's elect!

Blessed moment, we await thee,
When the Spirit shall declare,
"Now the power's bestowed completely,
Let the entire earth prepare!"

JOHN T. CURRY.

Original Articles

OUR DEFENSE.—PART 1.

BY ELDER J. R. LAMBERT.

"But we desire to hear of thee, what thou think-est; for as concerning this sect, we know that every-where it is spoken against."—Acts 28: 22.

"I speak as to wise men; judge ye what I say."—1 Corinthians 10: 15.

The primitive Christian church was generally opposed, unjustly represented, and bitterly and cruelly persecuted. To this, all Bible believers will agree. But why was it so?

First, because Christianity, as taught by Jesus Christ and his apostles, came in contact with every other system of religion known among men. It came from God (John 7: 16; Deuteronomy 18: 18, 19; John 12: 48, 49). It was, and is, nothing less than pure truth (John 18: 37; 17: 17; 8: 32; 1 Peter 1: 22-25), and, therefore, could not and can not afford to compromise with any other system of doctrine; yet true Christians are always tolerant and free from bigotry. It should not be difficult to understand that when truth begins to compromise with error, even in the slightest degree, it there and then ceases to be unalloyed truth. Thus we see that the Christian system of doctrine was brought in direct conflict with all that was carnal and sensual among men. Under these conditions, a conflict between the divine on the one hand, and the human and satanic on the other, there was but one proper and safe thing to be done, and that was to exercise such faith in God as would enable those to whom the message of truth and light came, to have a greater love for God and his truth than for anything else. This alone would result in safety and righteousness.

The things of God are understood by the Spirit of God (1 Corinthians 2: 11-14; Romans 8: 6, 7), and the Spirit is given to those who desire the truth, and who keep the commandments of the Lord Jesus as fast as they become acquainted with them. (Matthew 5: 6; John 14: 15-17.) It was, therefore, and it is, an easy matter for those who love self and the world more than God and his truth, to rise up in opposition to the Christian religion, and become exceedingly bitter against its adherents and representatives. Jesus knew what would be the results of his mission and the declaration of his truth in the world, and foretold them in the following significant words:

Think not I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword. For I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law. And a man's foes shall be they of his own household.—Matthew 10: 34-36.

Not that Jesus desired division and strife in the family, and bloodshed; far from it: his mission was one of peace and good will, and his message never fails to improve the moral and spiritual condition of those who properly receive it. But the above scripture is simply a prediction of what would be done by those who should choose to array themselves against the system of truth which he taught.

Those who received the message of the gospel, honestly and intelligently, were impressed and led by the Spirit of truth; those who opposed it and persecuted the disciples of Jesus—even unto death—were led and impressed by the spirit of error. Under the influence and inspiration of this false spirit, Jesus, the Christ, was maligned, persecuted and killed; the apostles were treated in like manner, and the precious message of love and good will to man was hated and rejected!

We have heard and read the announced reasons and purposes for opposition to the latter day work, or the faith and doctrine of the Latter Day Saints, as furnished by those who were so unfortunate as to believe they were doing "God service" while engaged in the most cruel and unrelenting opposition; we have tried to note carefully the character of the indefensible defense put up by those who stand on the wrong side of any important question; and in the light of these experiences it is certainly instructive to read the attempted defense of those who chose to persecute and oppose Jesus Christ and his apostles:

If we let him [Jesus] thus alone, all men will believe on him: and the Romans shall come and take away our place and nation.—John 11: 48.

Then the high priest rent his clothes, saying, He has spoken blasphemy; what further need have we of witness? Behold, now ye have heard his blasphemy.—Matthew 26: 65.

He was regarded as a great impostor, and the voice of conscience was hushed by an attempt to furnish the evidence.

This fellow said, I am able to destroy the temple of God, and to build it in three days.—Matthew 26: 61.

So Jesus, the Christ, who had left the realms of glory with the Father, that he might come into this world of sin and sorrow, and teach men how to live for the accomplishment of good, and enforce his teachings by a noble and perfect example, was rejected of men, crucified between two thieves, while Barabbas, the murderer, was released! What a lesson!

But the Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baser sort, and gathered a company, and set all the city on an uproar, and assaulted the house of Jason, and sought to bring them out to the people. And when they found them not, they drew Jason and certain brethren unto the rulers of the city, crying, These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also; whom Jason hath received: and these all do contrary to the decrees of Cæsar, saying that there is another King, one Jesus.—Acts 17: 5-7. (Paul and Silas were the troublesome fellows referred to.)

This fellow [Paul] persuadeth men to worship God contrary to the law.—Acts 18: 13.

And they gave him audience unto this word, and then lifted up their voices, and said, Away with such a fellow [Paul] from the earth: for it is not fit that he should live.—Acts 22: 22.

For we have found this man [Paul] a pestilent fellow, and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout all the world, and a ring leader of the sect of the Nazarenes.—Acts 24: 5.

It is well for us to note that no proper effort was made—we might say no decent effort—by those opposers, to refute and put down the doctrine taught by Jesus and Paul, using the Scriptures as authority.

The second reason, or occasion, for this unholy warfare against the church of Christ, was the bad conduct of many of its professed adherents. This, in several respects, is more serious than the first. It has been repeatedly said to us, "We judge a system of faith by its results"; and when the works of the careless and indifferent, of the hypocrite and deceiver, and of the actual criminal are brought prominently before them, by those who seem to be among the most active and zealous advocates of the faith, the effect is bad, even upon those who desire the truth.

Christianity, in the days of Jesus and his apostles, was very unpopular. Those who are not sincere in their opposition to the truth, always take advantage of this condition, and succeed in securing the services of many well-meaning people in their unholy cause.

God conversed with Adam and Eve. He told them what they might do and what they should not do. But they transgressed his holy commandment, and had to be driven out of the garden and kept out. Does this prove that God never spoke to Adam? and that he was not a patriarch and prophet? What Bible believer will claim that it does? (For proof read the first chapters of Genesis.)

Noah was the head of the only family that survived the ravages of the flood. He was a "preacher of righteousness" (2 Peter 2: 5).

By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith.—Hebrews 11: 7.

And yet this same man, after the floods subsided, planted a vineyard, made wine and drank it till he became intoxicated, and lay "within his tent" more like a beast than a man of God!

Was Noah a minister for God for about one hundred and twenty years? Notwithstanding this lapse in his moral conduct, is the statement true that "Noah was a just man and perfect in his generation, and walked with God?" What do Bible believers think about it?

Later in the world's history, God destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah, but showed mercy unto Lot and his family, providing for them the means of escape through the ministrations of angels. But Lot's wife broke the commandment and was turned into a pillar of salt. Lot and his two daughters dwelt in a cave where they were guilty of drunkenness and incest! (See Genesis, chapter 19.) Does this prove that the story of the angels' visit to Sodom, and their conversation with Lot, are false? Hardly.

David and Solomon were both chosen of God for the accomplishment of important work. The recognition they received from the divine Being was very strong. Yet, at times, they were found guilty of much folly and great wrong. Both men were polygamists, but this was not all. David, the man whom the Lord sought and found to succeed Saul as king of Israel ("a man after his own heart"), was exposed to temptation, yielded at the time of his weakness, and thus became guilty of two of the leading crimes in the catalogue. He was guilty of adultery with Bathsheba, after which he willfully planned and executed the death of her husband (2 Samuel, chapter 11).

The Lord appeared twice unto Solomon, blessed him with wisdom, and in many other ways, but he departed from God and his heart became corrupt. There is no evidence, that we are aware of, that he died in favor with God. The eleventh chapter of the first book of Kings informs us that he had "seven hundred wives, princesses, and three hundred concubines: and his wives turned away his heart."

We can not wonder that his wives turned away his heart. There were certainly enough of them to do it, and especially when we consider that they were princesses and idolaters. The wonder is that he had any heart left.

Will Bible believers refuse to believe that God chose these men for his servants? Will they refuse to believe that he revealed himself to them? Will they deny that, when these men were obedient to him, they were successfully used in the building up of his work?

This is a mere glance at some parts of Old Testament history. We take the account of the children of Israel, which occupies such a large portion of Old Testament history, and we find it to be very largely a history of folly, wrong, and sometimes, the grossest of crimes!

We now come to the New Testament, which like the Old, has been furnished to us by friends, not enemies, to the cause of God therein represented. Jesus Christ came into the world, not to do his own will, but the will of Him who sent him (John 5:30). Before choosing his leading ministers, he went up into a mountain and there he remained all night in prayer to the Father.

And when it was day he called unto him his disciples: and of them he chose twelve, whom also he named apostles.—Luke 6: 12, 13.

These were his leading ministers, and no Bible believer can doubt that they were designated by divine wisdom. Yet Judas Iscariot was a traitor. He sold his Master for thirty pieces of silver (Matthew 26: 15). Peter, one of the chief apostles, denied his Lord at the trying hour, made oath to his false statements, and when accused the third time denied again and cursed and swore! (Matthew 26: 69-74.) Others of the primitive apostles, though good men, gave strong evidence of fallibility and weakness (Luke 9: 51-56).

But this does not represent the worst conditions that obtained in the Christian church at the very times when the gospel with its primitive light and power was the law of life which was made binding upon all the members of the church.

It is reported commonly that there is fornication among you, and such fornication as is not so much as named among the Gentiles, that one should have his father's wife. And ye are puffed up, and have not rather mourned, that he that hath done this deed might be taken away from among you.

I wrote unto you in an epistle [one which is not found in our Bible] not to company with fornicators: yet not altogether with the fornicators of this world, or with the covetous, or extortioners, or with idolaters; for then must ye needs go out of the world. But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such an one no not to eat.—1 Corinthians 5: 1, 2, 9-11.

It is evident from reading the first chapters of Paul's first letter to the saints at Corinth, that while the glorious fruits of obedience to the Christian religion were made manifest by one class of the membership, there was another class who indulged not only in folly and wrong, but in actual crime. One man had married (or taken without marriage) "his father's wife" (his stepmother, we presume). Some were covetous. And in that very church, raised up and nurtured by the watchful care of an inspired apostle, there were fornicators, extortioners, idolaters, railers, and drunkards! Just think what opportunity this condition of affairs afforded the enemies of the Christian religion! They could point to this class of church members and say: "These are Christians. These things are the real fruits of the Christian religion. Is it desirable? Is there any good in it?" Then, by a cunning appeal to the ignorant masses and to their basest passions, which has always been the policy of leaders when they were determined to put down by force, that which could not be overthrown by scripture and logic, and the work was done. The innocent and pure, as well as the careless and guilty, were in the hands of ravening wolves! We quote again:

From whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members? Ye lust, and have not: Ye kill, and desire to have, and can not obtain: ye fight and war, yet ye have not, because ye ask not. Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts. Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God.—James 4: 1-4.

This epistle of James was addressed to "the twelve tribes scattered abroad, greeting"; that is, to the Hebrew or Jewish disciples in all the world. John Wesley said that at the time this epistle was written (about A. D. 60), the tares had sprung up with the wheat and produced a plentiful harvest.

About six years after James had so clearly revealed the awful condition of at least a part of the Christian church, Jude wrote his epistle "to them that are sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ, and called." He described the increase of apostasy and wrong in the church of God in the following strong terms:

For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ. . . .

These are spots in your feasts of charity, when they feast with you, feeding themselves without fear: clouds they are without water, carried about of winds; trees whose fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots. Raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever.—Jude 1: 4, 12, 13.

About A. D. 96, or 98, John wrote the book of Revelation on the Isle of Patmos, addressing his letter to the seven churches which were in Asia. Only two of these churches had complete recognition by the divine being; five were in a state of apostasy, more or less. The church at Ephesus was given proper credit for having tried those who claimed to be apostles, but were not. The word of the Lord to those Ephesian saints is very instructive, and when necessary, furnishes us with an excellent precedent:

I know thy works, and thy labor, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil: and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars: and hast borne and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast labored, and hast not fainted.—Revelation 2: 2, 3.

Nevertheless, a serious charge was brought against them. They had left their "first love" and were commanded to remember from whence they had fallen, to repent and do "the first works," with a threat that if they did not obey, they should be speedily removed (verses 4, 5). We are also informed in verse 6, "But this thou hast that thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitanes, which I also hate."

It is not certainly known what the deeds of the Nicolaitanes were. Some authors claim that they practiced polygamy as introduced by one Nicholas, who had been chosen by the church and ordained by the apostles (Acts 6: 1-5); others, that they introduced into the Christian church, in a general way, the licentiousness of the heathen nations. Whatever their deeds might have been, it is enough for us to know that the Lord "hated them." This determines their character. To the church at Pergamos were sent these words:

But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balac to cast a stumbling-block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication. So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes, which thing I hate. Repent; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight against them with the sword of my mouth.—Revelation 2: 14-16.

The church at Thyatira permitted Jezebel, a false prophetess, to act as one of their teachers and seduce the Lord's servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols (verses 20, 21). The message to the church at Sardis, in part, is as follows:

For I have not found thy works perfect before God. Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard; and hold fast, and repent. . . . Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white; for they are worthy.—Revelation 3: 2-4.

The church at Laodicea was neither hot nor cold, but luke warm, and the Lord said, "I will spue thee out of my mouth." This surely means rejection. But this is not all.

Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked: I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thy eyes with eye salve, that thou mayest see.—Revelation 3: 17, 18.

Smyrna and Philadelphia were the only two churches that escaped severe criticism, although the good that remained in six of them was plainly and graciously acknowledged.

The church went from bad to worse, rapidly, fulfilling many of the predictions of the prophets and apostles, one of which we will quote. Peter, writing to the scattered saints about A. D. 66, makes the following clear and instructive statements:

But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of. And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you.—2 Peter 2: 1-3.

This falling away from the simplicity and purity of the primitive faith commenced, as we have seen, and made terrible inroads on the church, while more or less of the apostles were yet living. But after they were gone, iniquity came in like a flood; and it can truly be said that the history of the Christian church, excepting what we have in the New Testament, is more a history of the apostasy than of the church of Jesus Christ as established by himself and his apostles, and as recognized of God.

A few quotations from church history will enable us to see how completely the prophesy of Peter was fulfilled, causing the "way of truth" to be "evil spoken of." The same cause in our day, under like conditions, would, of course, produce the same effect. We will make our quotations from Mosheim, the great church historian. Of the first century, in part 2, chapter 5, he says:

The Christian church was scarcely formed, when, in different places, certain pretended reformers, who, not satisfied with the simplicity of that religion taught by the apostles, meditated changes of doctrine and worship.—Verse 1.

The influence of these new teachers was at first inconsiderable. During the lives of the apostles, their attempts to pervert Christianity were attended with little success. They, however, acquired credit and strength by degrees; and, even from the first, imperceptibly laid the foundations of those sects whose animosities and disputes produced afterwards such trouble.—Verse 2.

The Gnostics corrupted the doctrine of the gospel by a profane mixture of Oriental philosophy with its divine truths.—Verse 3.

The Christian religion was in its rise corrupted by the mixture of an impious and chimerical philosophy with its pure and sublime doctrines.—Verse 10.

Among the chief of the sectaries were the Gnostics and the Nicolaitanes, whom Christ himself, by the mouth of his apostles, mentioned with abhorrence.—Verse 15.

Notice how completely these statements agree with the historical and prophetic statements of the New Testament. Second century, part 2:

This venerable simplicity was not, indeed, of long duration. Its beauty was gradually effaced by the laborious efforts of human learning, and the dark subtilities of imaginary science. This disadvantageous change, this unhappy alteration of the primitive simplicity of the Christian religion, arose partly from pride and partly from a sort of necessity. The former cause was the eagerness of certain learned men to bring about a union between the doctrines of Christianity and the opinions of the philosophers. For they thought it a very fine accomplishment to be able to express the precepts of Christ in the language of philosophers and rabbis. The other reason was the necessity of having recourse to logical definitions and nice distinctions, in order to confound the sophistical arguments which the infidel and the heretic employed.—Chapter 3, verse 2.

There is no institution so pure and excellent which the corruption and folly of man will not in time alter for the worse, and load with additions foreign to its nature and original design. Such, in a particular manner, was the fate of Christianity. In this century many unnecessary rites and ceremonies were added to the Christian worship, the introduction of which was extremely offensive to wise and good men.—Chapter 4, verse 1.

Third century, part 2.

The face of things now began to change in the Christian church. By imperceptible steps the ancient methods of ecclesiastical government varied from the primitive rule, and degenerated. . . . This change was soon followed by a train of vices. . . . Bishops assumed a princely authority. A throne, surrounded with ministers, exalted above his equals the servant of the meek and lowly Jesus, and sumptuous garments dazzled the eyes and minds of the multitude. Presbyters, neglecting the sacred duties of their station, abandoned themselves to the indolence of an effeminate and luxurious life.—Chapter 2, verses 3, 4.

Fourth century:

There is no doubt that the victories of Constantine, the fear of punishment, and the desire to please this mighty conqueror, were the weighty arguments that moved whole nations as well as particular persons to embrace Christianity.

—Part 1, chapter 1, verse 23.

At the conclusion of this century there remained little more than a mere shadow of the ancient government of the church.

—Part 2, chapter 2, verse 2.

Much more might be presented, but this will suffice. It was in this century, we believe, that the emperor of Rome (Constantine the Great) caused to be read in the public assembly the following edict:

“CHRISTIANITY IS THE RELIGION OF ROME.”

From this date many have traced, as they thought, the triumphs of the Christian religion; but in fact, they were the triumphs of an apostate and corrupt church. The great world, up to the present time, has never practically acknowledged the church which was established by Jesus Christ and his apostles, and probably never will, this side of the time when “the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever.” (Revelation 11: 15.)

It is important to notice that just in proportion to the increase of iniquity in the church, there was a decrease in the fruits and gifts of the Spirit. Why? Because the Holy Spirit, the source and cause of these blessings, being grieved, withdrew. The cause being removed, the effect ceased, and at the very time when, as claimed by some, “they were done away, because no longer needed!”

Do you say we have drawn a dark picture? True, but we might have made it darker without any conflict with the facts. What shall we do? and how shall we extricate ourselves from the difficulty which confronts us? For it is quite evident now, that if we are required to prove the conduct of the men who have been called of God to high and important positions, to be perfect, and at all times free from leading follies, wrongs, and crimes, in order to defend the work of God and the Christian religion, then it can not be defended.

Further, if we are required to defend the conduct of the worst class of God's people among the Israelites and in the primitive Christian church, in order to defend the church as a divine institution, and the truth, as it is with God, then we can not defend them. Still further, if from this viewpoint we are required to defend, not only is the work of God as represented in the Bible indefensible, but where is the church, Catholic or Protestant, that can be defended? We find much imperfection all along, and such honored characters as Luther, Calvin, Wesley, and Campbell were guilty of grievous folly and wrong, more or less. What about the horrors of the Inquisition and all the dark deeds of the Dark Ages, when the rule of the mother church was almost, if not quite, supreme?

HEAVEN.

DO YOU WANT TO GET THERE?

Some years ago, I heard an elder of the church, an able man, and a good man, say: “I don't want to go to heaven. Old Missouri is good enough for me.” And then I remember hearing another elder, who occupied in one of the leading quorums, say he didn't like to sing that hymn, “I have a home above,” because he believed the Saints' home will be here upon the earth, and not “above.” And in the HERALD of a certain date, another brother tells us that, when asked if he didn't “want to go to heaven,” he shook his head.

Now, I understand the position of those brethren, and I have no fault whatever to find with the doctrine that “we shall reign upon the earth”: I believe it. And I am willing, too, to concede that “old Missouri is good enough for me”—hope I may be worthy of a home there; but I do “want to go to heaven,” and I hope you will give me space to tell your readers why.

1. Heaven is a place where God and the angels dwell.

And he [King Lamoni] said, Yea, I believe that he created all things which are in the earth; but I do not know the heavens. And Ammon said unto him, The heavens is a place where God dwells, and all his holy angels. And King Lamoni said, Is it above the earth? And Ammon said, Yea, and he looketh down upon all the children of men.—Alma 12: 107-110. (Italics in this and the following quotations are mine. All Book of Mormon quotations are from the authorized edition.)

2. The Savior dwells there, too:

And may the grace of God the Father, whose throne is high in the heavens, and our Lord Jesus Christ, who sitteth on the right hand of his power, until all things shall become subject unto him, be, and abide with you for ever. Amen.—Moroni 9: 28.

And he dwelleth eternally in the heavens.—Moroni 7: 28.

God and Christ and all the holy angels dwell in heaven; and they have prepared a place for the children of God, as is witnessed by the following:

And I also remember that thou hast said that thou hast prepared a house for man; yea, even among the mansions of thy Father, in which man might have a more excellent hope; wherefore man must hope, or he can not receive an inheritance in the place which thou hast prepared.—Ether 5: 32. (See also verses 33, 34, 38.)

1. This place is with God:

But Alma said unto him, The Spirit constraineth me that I must not stretch forth my hand; for behold, the Lord receiveth them up unto himself, in glory.—Alma 10: 50.

And if our brethren destroy us, behold, we shall go to our God and shall be saved.—Alma 14: 41.

And we know that they are blessed, for they have gone to dwell with their God.—Alma 14: 50.

But behold, how many of these have lain down their lives, and we know that they have gone to their God, because of their love, and of their hatred to sin.—Alma 14: 122.

While many thousands of others truly mourn for the loss of their kindred, yet they rejoice and exult in the hope, yea and even know, according to the promises of the Lord; that they are raised to dwell at the right hand of God, in a state of never ending happiness.—Alma 15: 49. (See Alma 19: 49.)

2. This place is with the Redeemer:

And I soon go to the place of my rest, which is with my Redeemer; for I know that in him I shall rest.—Enos 1: 45.

3. This place of rest is called paradise:

And then shall it come to pass that the spirits of those who are righteous, are received into a state of happiness, which is called paradise; a state of rest; a state of peace, where where they shall rest from all their troubles, and from all care, and sorrow, etc.—Alma 19: 44.

Yea, even a hundred years had passed away, and the disciples of Jesus, whom he had chosen, had all gone to the paradise of God, save it were the three who should tarry.—4 Nephi 1: 15.

And now I bid unto all, farewell. I soon go to rest in the paradise of God, until my spirit and my body shall again reunite.—Moroni 10: 31.

4. This place of rest is called heaven:

And if they hold out faithful to the end, they are received into heaven, that thereby they may dwell with God in a state of never ending happiness. O remember, remember that these things are true; for the Lord God hath spoken it.—Mosiah 1: 90, 91.

Therefore, I would that ye should be steadfast and immovable, always abounding in good works; that Christ, the Lord God Omnipotent, may seal you his, that you may be brought to heaven, that ye may have everlasting salvation and eternal life.—Mosiah 3: 21.

Wherefore I would speak unto you who are of the church, that are the peaceable followers of Christ, and that have obtained a sufficient hope, by which ye can enter into the rest of the Lord, from this time henceforth, until ye shall rest with him in heaven.—Moroni 7: 3.

And in this state they were to remain until the judgment day of Christ; and at that day they were to receive a greater change, and to be received into the kingdom of the Father to go no more out, but to dwell with God eternally in the heavens.—3 Nephi 13: 53.

5. It is above the earth:

That I might go down in peace, and my immortal spirit join the choirs above in singing the praises of a just God.—Mosiah 1: 66. (See again Alma 12: 109, 110.)

In Doctrine and Covenants it is said: "David Patten have I taken unto myself."—107: 40.

And again the Lord tells Lyman Wight to do certain things, that I may receive him unto myself, even as I did my servant David Patten, who is with me at this time, and also my servant Edward Partridge, and also my aged servant Joseph Smith, sr., who sitteth with Abraham, at his right hand, and blessed and holy is he, for he is mine.—Section 107: 7.

And, in connection with the statement that these men are with our Savior, sitting with Abraham, read this:

And it came to pass, that the beggar died, and was carried by angels into Abraham's bosom.—Luke 16: 22. And Abraham says of him, "but now he is comforted" (verse 25), notwithstanding he had received his full share of "evil things" during his "lifetime." And then the Apostle John says: I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held: . . . And white robes were given unto everyone of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow-servants also and their brethren, who should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled.—Revelation 6: 9-11.

And the altar is "before the throne" (Revelation 8: 3) and "before God" (Revelation 9: 13); and the throne is "in heaven" and the Lord "sat on the throne" (Revelation 4: 2); hence those souls must have been "in heaven."

The Savior said:

And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.—John 14: 3; 12: 26; 17: 24.

And the Savior said to Peter:

Whither I go, thou canst not follow me now; but thou shalt follow me afterwards.—John 13: 36.

Paul says:

For we know that if our earthly hour of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.—2 Corinthians 5: 1. Read also the next seven verses.

And Peter says the Lord has begotten us to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you.—1 Peter 1: 4.

Yes, brethren, I want to go to heaven. I believe "the meek shall inherit the earth," in the Lord's own good time; but until that time comes, that place of "rest" which the Lord has prepared for the souls of the righteous "in the paradise of God," "with my Redeemer," "with God in heaven," would certainly be a delightful place in which the souls of the righteous might "rest from their labors." When this earth is "burned up," and made new, purified by fire, I believe it will be a fit abode for man, in his glorified condition; but I have never felt like saying, "I don't want to go to heaven." In fact, I believe the earth will be a heaven for God's people who now live upon it when the proper time comes; but we should remember that heaven "is a place," too, "where God dwells, and all his holy angels," and that it would certainly be a glorious place for those who have "become partakers of the divine nature" to dwell. In copying the foregoing texts from the three books, I have refrained from commenting upon them, or stopping to make any argument; have simply copied the text, underscored the thought to which I wished to call special attention, leaving the reader to make his own comments. And I wish to say, in conclusion, that we are all liable to become so enthused over one beautiful gospel truth, so carried away with it, as to cause us to overlook some other truth that is just as beautiful; and in this way, we are liable to become extremists. Hence there is great advantage in an exchange of views, when conducted in the proper spirit and with the proper object in view. We, as a church, believe in the statement of our Savior that "the truth shall make you free"; hence we are anxious that our creed, collectively and individually, should be "All truth."

DIVINE HEALING.

Some days ago it was the privilege of the writer to listen to a talk given by Gen. J. B. Weaver on the subject of divine healing at the First Christian Church of Des Moines, preparatory to the call of a general convention of all divine healers in the United States to be held in this city. He read for a basis of his talk, Acts 14: 8-10, as follows: "And there sat a certain man at Lystra, impotent in his feet, being a cripple from his mother's womb, who never had walked; the same heard Paul speak; who steadfastly beholding him, and perceiving that he had faith to be healed, said with a loud voice, Stand upright on thy feet. And he leaped and walked."

Attention was called to the apparent fact that the most important thing said or done in the gospel ministrations by Paul at this place was that he healed this impotent man. He said, "This proves that healing was a part, and an important part of the gospel, that part which is being omitted in the ministrations of the majority of the ministry of to-day, and our effort is to call to their attention the fact that this feature of the gospel should be preached as well as that which they are already preaching."

Attention was called to 1 Corinthians 12: 28, and read with emphasis on the fact of there being apostles in the church in which there were gifts of healing, and that to represent an apostolic church and the gospel advocated by that apostolic church of the past, we must preach that the sick may be healed, and in the same way that they were healed then, by the anointing with oil and the laying on of hands with prayer. The speaker asked, "Who set these gifts in the church?" and said that we need faith above everything else, faith to believe in every promise of God, and everything that he did. He further asked, "Isn't it about time for some one to tell us who set these gifts out of the church?" He said, "The church of Christ is a continuing church. The church of to-day must be an apostolic church if it is the church. Christ is the head, the church is his body. The church should be, like Christ, the same to-day. We have no right to carry a meaning into the chart, the New Testament, nor any meaning out of it. I stumbled over this subject of divine healing. I said that I would liked to have lived in the day when Jesus was here. Jesus is the same to-day, and has the same power. We need a revelation as they received it in the past. Sick or well we are thinking most of our bodies. God knew that we would do this. We don't need to get sick to enjoy Christ, but if we are sick Christ stands ready to heal."

The speaker here said that he did not believe in Christian Science, that that system was neither Christian nor scientific. It was not Christian for the primary reason that they denied that Christ came in the flesh.

He gave the conditions upon which we could expect to be healed, or the scriptural rules that should govern in our preparation for healing:

"1. We must be fully persuaded that healing is taught in the word of God," and referred to James 5: 14, 15 as evidence, and said that 'James was, in this instruction, carrying out the great commission to "teach them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."'

"2. We must believe that it is now the will of God to heal the sick, that it is his will, not 'if it be his will' as so many say." Here the speaker made one of his mistakes, as I view it. He said, "The Bible is the last will and testament of the Lord. There is none other source to ascertain the will of God." But his conclusions were somewhat convincing. He said, "Since this is the only will of God, and it emphatically says that God heals the sick, and gives us the manner how, we should believe that he will, and not allow the doubt to come into our mind, if he will."

"3. We should be certain about our relations with God."

He further said, "There is a difference between wanting, and by faith accepting and taking. If Jesus was here we would believe everything he said." This was another one of the wrong conclusions that the speaker arrived at, and I thought that what he said to follow would have convinced him of that. He said, "Just as sure as you are here Christ is here." But all did not believe everything said, and that is the reason that everything that Jesus said when he was here was not believed.

"He further said that "we must not look upon the symptoms of disease, such as headache. We must say it is done, and it's done." This is in the line of mental suggestion, but the speaker disclaimed any belief in simply mental suggestion, but expressed his belief that by faith we should say it is done.

Of late there has come into my hands a small tract on "The doctrine of divine healing," published at Anderson, Indiana, in which is found a strong defense for the healing of the body as well as the soul through the atonement, or that through the atonement there was made provision for the healing of the body as well as the spirit, and quotes from the sayings of Jesus Christ this familiar passage found recorded in Matthew 8: 17, as quoted by him from the prophecies of Esaias, and applied to his mission to the world: "That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses." In this tract we find utterances like this: "There are among the religious classes of people of to-day multitudes of skeptics regarding faith healing, or healing of the body by the means set forth in the Word of God. . . . People have been eye witnesses to the healing of the body, yet in the face of all this, many will not believe. . . . The word of God is the true basis upon which its principles are founded, and it is presented in the strongest terms from Genesis to Revelation. . . . God who worked miracles in the past, still retains the same power, and will work through his true children; and none can hinder.

"Those who try to study out a way to heaven, or the principles of divine healing, through some scientific method will make a failure, unless they broaden their science enough to accept the miraculous performance of God's power, and fall in line with the teachings of his word."

The writer refers to Abraham praying for Abimilech, and he was healed; to Moses who prayed for Miriam, and she was healed of leprosy; and to the promises of the Lord to Moses in reference to his healing Israel, when they obeyed his commands and ordinances; and to David who said that men should bless the Lord for all his benefits, and mentions the healing of diseases as one of them; to the answer to the prayer of Hezekiah for healing when fifteen years was added to his life. Then he refers to Asa who sought not the Lord but the physicians and he died, and then adds that "In those days it was safe for the children of God to trust in him for the healing of their bodies; and coming down to the time of Christ we find him healing all manner of diseases. . . . Likewise his apostles went forth healing the sick, and doing wonderful things in the name of Jesus, and their work was wrought by the power of God. So we find the doctrine of divine healing is no new doctrine, as it is a part of the word of God, and it has been the privilege of his faithful children in all ages past to claim his promises, and be healed of their diseases."

In all this there is nothing that could be objected to. All is for or in favor of what God has promised, but it is misleading in this that it does not refer to the word of God that gives the instruction relative to the healing of the sick of God's children, only that it is in answer to prayer. This establishes one fact of scripture, but does not go as far as Mr. Weaver in his advocacy of divine healing when he refers to James 5: 14, 15, but while this reference is made by Mr. Weaver, yet he does not believe in the necessity of "divinely appointed elders," as those who should be called, but on the day of his lecture that I above refer to it was announced that the oil had been brought so that if there were any present who had faith in its use and desired its application they were there ready to anoint with oil as well as pray for them. None appearing I was not privileged to see how they applied it. As I view it they had no intelligent understanding of the authority of an elder, but like a good many others believed that an elderly man or woman was all that was necessary in order to fulfill the instruction, "Send for the elders of the church."

Upon the question of divine authority is and more prominently will be the religious conflict to be waged, and these peculiar claims to healing will make the deception deeper, and harder to remove, for even some of God's children can hardly see the necessity of calling "for the elders," but that they can do the anointing just as well, and their prayers are just as effectual; and some of them cite to cases where in answer to prayer special blessings have been secured for the sick. Even some think that since the sisters can talk just as well, and understand the scriptures just as well, therefore why should they be restricted from preaching? This only emphasizes the truth that many do not understand the value of divine authority, nor the divine order that has been instituted therein, and shows the necessity of the ministry emphasizing this feature of God's work.

Divine healing as well as preaching depends upon one sent of God doing the administering. Without divine authority there can not be what is scripturally termed "the gifts of healing," or preaching of the word, the latter of which is emphasized by the interrogative argument of Paul when he said, "How can they preach except they be sent?"

THE TWELVE APOSTLES OF THE LAMB.

TO JUDGE THE WHOLE HOUSE OF ISRAEL—THE HIGH ESTEEM AND HONOR IN WHICH THEY ARE HELD—WILL JUDAS ISCARIOT BE ONE OF THEM—WHY SO CALLED—AN ERROR CORRECTED—HOW THEIR JUDGMENT WILL REACH ALL ISRAEL—THE NATURE AND PURPOSE OF THEIR JUDGMENT.

Every close reader of the revelations of God, as contained in the three standard books of our faith, the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, has discovered this fact, that the twelve men chosen by Jesus Christ as his apostles, when he established his church at Jerusalem nineteen hundred years ago, are to act a great and important part in the final event connected with the salvation of the Saints. Jesus in addressing them says:

Ye which have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel.—Matthew 19: 28.

May 18, 1910

Luke in recording the same statement declares:

That ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel.—Luke 22: 30.

The angel who conversed with Nephi in his wonderful vision of all future generations said unto him:

Thou rememberest the twelve apostles of the Lamb? Behold they are they who shall judge the twelve tribes of Israel; wherefore, the twelve ministers of thy seed shall be judged of them: for ye are of the house of Israel: and these twelve ministers whom thou beholdest, shall judge thy seed.—1 Nephi 3: 26.

About three hundred and sixty years after the appearance of Christ here in America among the Nephites, Mormon, one of their prophets, gives this view of the subject:

Behold, I write unto all the ends of the earth; yea, unto you, twelve tribes of Israel, who shall be judged according to your works, by the twelve whom Jesus chose to be his disciples in the land of Jerusalem. And I write also unto the remnant of this people, who shall be judged by the twelve whom Jesus chose in this land; and they shall be judged by the other twelve whom Jesus chose in the land of Jerusalem.—Book of Mormon 1: 9.

Again, in a revelation given to six elders in Fayette, New York, through Joseph Smith, in September, 1830, we find the following declaration:

And again, verily, verily I say unto you, and it hath gone forth in a firm decree, by the will of the Father, that mine apostles, the twelve which were with me in my ministry at Jerusalem, shall stand at my right hand, in the day of my coming, in a pillar of fire, being clothed with robes of righteousness, with crowns upon their heads, in glory even as I am, to judge the whole house of Israel, even as many as have loved me and kept my commandments, and none else.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 3.

Thus we have outlined the great and important work they are to perform in the redemption of the Saints. They are to sit in judgment upon the works of the whole house of Israel. And the high esteem in which they are held and the great honor due them is manifest by the fact that the twelve great foundations which underlie the massive walls surrounding the beautiful city, New Jerusalem, will have the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb in them. (Revelation 21: 14.)

From the plain and concise wording of the Doctrine and Covenants, some people have formed the idea that Judas Iscariot, the Savior's betrayer, will be one of the apostles who will come in glory to judge all Israel. They claim that his only sin was avarice; that he had seen the miraculous power of Jesus manifest so many times, that he fully believed he would baffle his enemies and escape, and that his deep repentance and suicide were sufficient to blot out all his wrongdoing, and that he would come and sit in judgment with all the others. Those holding this view are certainly not conversant with the Scriptures on this matter. We will refer briefly to a few of them. First, we will notice what has been written of him prophetically, which Peter declared the Holy Ghost spake by the mouth of David. (Acts 1: 16):

When he shall be judged, let him be condemned; and let his prayers become sin. Let his days be few; and let another take his office. Let his children be fatherless, and let his wife be a widow. . . . Let there be none to extend mercy unto him; . . . because that he remembereth not to show mercy, but persecuted the poor and needy man, that he might even slay the broken in heart. As he loved cursing, so let it come unto him; as he delighted not in blessing, so let it be far from him.—Psalm 109.

We will notice a few statements of the Savior in regard to him.

The Son of man goeth as it is written of him: but woe unto that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! it had been good for that man had he not been born.—Matthew 26: 24.

Jesus answered them, Have not I chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil? He spake of Judas Iscariot the son of Simon.—John 6: 70, 71.

Those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition; that the scripture might be fulfilled.—John 17: 12.

What salvation can be expected for a man that would have been better off had he never been born? Or what salvation is there for a devil or a son of perdition? The sons of perdition in this life are those that sin against the Holy Ghost, and they are not forgiven in this world or in the world to come. Aside from all these evidences, as to whether Judas will be one who sits in judgment on Israel, Peter's quotation from the Psalm ought to settle the matter once and for all. "Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein, and his bishopric let another take."

Judas' bishopric, of course, was the same as that of the other apostles, and a part of it was to sit in judgment upon the whole house of Israel. But it was taken from him and given to another, even Matthias. When Jesus made the statement that the twelve apostles who were with him in his ministry at Jerusalem, should be with him at his coming in glory, he was no doubt speaking of them as a body or quorum, and not individually.

And now as to why these twelve men were designated as the "twelve apostles of the Lamb." In the first place we notice that in all the revelations of God, both ancient and modern, there is no other class of men, at least to the writer's knowledge, so designated. The twelve Nephites whom Jesus chose as his ministers when he established his church here in America were never so called. They were termed the twelve ministers of the Lamb. The twelve apostles placed in the church organized by Joseph Smith in 1830 were never so called. It is true that in the preface to section 105, Doctrine and Covenants, they are mentioned as such, but this preface was not given by revelation, and is only the opinion of the one placing it there. If we should ask the question why these men were so called to the exclusion of all others, the answer would probably be, because they were chosen personally by the Lamb. While it is true they were thus chosen by him, it is also true that the twelve Nephites were also chosen by him, and if the personal choosing made them apostles of the Lamb, then the Nephites would be entitled to that honor as well as the others; but as we before stated they were never so called, and we generally know what things are by what they are called.

To the writer's mind, there is but one plain, consistent reason for them being so called, and that reason is, these twelve men he chose at Jerusalem were all the apostles he had when here on earth, and being chosen by him they were, in very deed, "The twelve apostles of the Lamb." There were others chosen in succession to them, but not while the Savior was here on the earth, that is, barring Matthias. The grammatical construction of the sentence forbids any more. The definite article the placed in front of it limits the number to twelve. Had it simply been written "twelve apostles of the Lamb," there could and might have been others, but when the little word the is attached, that settles the number. When we say the twelve sons of Jacob, that means all the sons Jacob had; but were we to say merely twelve sons of Jacob, that does not limit the number, and he might have had twelve, twenty, or even fifty. When you put the little article the in front of it that limits the number, and so with the apostles of the Lamb.

While we are discussing the subject of apostolic numbers, we wish to disagree for a moment and correct what we believe to be a great error in regard to the number of apostles immediately succeeding the original twelve. Some writers (and to use a homely phrase, the woods are full of them, swarming around with the apostolic tag dangling to them) quote 1 Corinthians 15: 5-9, as substantiating their belief. It is the language of Paul and was written in relation to the numbers that had seen the Savior after his resurrection.

And that he was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve: And after that, he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen asleep. After that, he was seen of James, then of all the apostles. And last of all he was seen of me also, as one born out of due time.

That the parties referred to in this quotation, with the exception of Paul and the five hundred brethren, were the original twelve is almost too plain for comment. Christ's appearance to Cephas or Peter is recorded in Luke 24: 34. The twelve saw him at the time he gave them their commission to preach the gospel in all the world. (Matthew 28: 16, 17.) The time is not recorded when James saw him, but he being one of the apostles, how natural it would be for the writer (Paul) to say, "then of all the apos-ties," that is, of course, including James. This they did at his ascension. (Luke 24: 50.)

We will now give proof that this view of the matter is correct. After the first five parties, Cephas, the twelve, the five hundred brethren, James, and all the apostles, had seen the resurrected Christ, Paul declares he was seen of him, as one born out of due time; that is, after all the others had seen him, Paul saw him. Now when did Paul see him? Undoubtedly at the time of his conversion. (Acts 9: 26, 27.)

And Barnabas took him, and brought him to the apostles, and declared unto them how he had seen the Lord on the way, and that he had spoken to him, and how he had preached boldly at Damascus in the name of Jesus.

When was Paul converted? According to the chronology given in King James' Version it was in the year 35. This was just two years after the crucifixion. Yet in that short time, according to the erroneous idea, there were numbers of apostles swarming around that did not belong to the original twelve. The only extra apostle that history mentions in those two years is Matthias, chosen in Judas' place, and all of those other apostles, if they were indeed apostles, mentioned in the history following as Paul, Barnabas, the Lord's brother, Sylvanus, Timotheus, Apollos, Sosthenes, Andronicus, and Junia, were those who took the places of the original twelve as they were destroyed. At least this is the writer's view of the matter. Relying on the history given of these times, the only chance possible for others to come in during those two years, would be the unauthenticated opinion that Peter, James, and John were taken from the apostleship and made a First Presidency and others chosen in their places, and even if this be true, it would by no means justify the idea that there were so many of them.

The reader should bear distinctly in mind that the power of these twelve men to judge is to extend over all Israel, and as their judgment relates to Israel's works or actions (Book of Mormon 1: 9), how are they, the twelve, brought to a knowledge of those words, seeing that at the time they were here in earth life, Israel was scattered almost to the four quarters of the earth? One branch was here in America, with wild and unexplored oceans rolling between them, and the ones who were to judge had no earthly means of communication with them. Ten tribes were carried away and bottled up in the far north country, where the foot of man had never trod. Has there been no way by which the difficulty may be overcome? There has. In regard to the branch here in America (and we suppose it will be the same with the other ten tribes) the angel who talked with Nephi in his wonderful vision (1 Nephi 3: 26) tells plainly how it will be accomplished. The process is simply this: As there was no human means of communication between those judges and those to be judged, Christ himself acts as a medium of intercourse between them. He chooses twelve men of Nephi's posterity, who are termed "the twelve ministers of the Lamb," gives them power and authority to judge the branch here in America, and these twelve ministers are to be judged by the twelve apostles of the Lamb. Mormon confirms this method of judging in his first chapter, ninth paragraph. Hence we see it is by proxy, substitution, or deputation, whatever word may fit best, that they judge the distant branches of Israel. And acting in the capacity of substitutes for the twelve at Jerusalem, it can be plainly seen that they did not hold the apostolic office. This, we suppose, is the reason that they were never called apostles, and it confirms what we have before stated, that the twelve at Jerusalem were called the twelve apostles of the Lamb because they were the only ones he had.

We will make this point plain by a simple illustration. A county sheriff has authority to keep the peace of all under his jurisdiction. While he may be restoring peace in one part of his country, other trouble breaks out in some distant part, which he is unable to attend to. What does he do? He deputizes others giving them the same power he holds to put the disturbance down. These deputies go to the scene of the trouble, judge its nature, restore peace, and come back and report to the sheriff, who judges their work and if rightly done, approves it. Now notwithstanding these deputies held the same power as the sheriff, they did not hold the office of sheriff. They held their power only by deputation. And so it was in regard to judging the works of Israel in America. The twelve Nephites had power to do the work of the apostles, but did not hold the apostolic office; and as the Savior commissioned them to do the same work as apostles how easy for him to say, "For thus do mine apostles."

As these twelve apostles of the Lamb are to judge the whole house of Israel, it may be interesting to know who are meant by Israel, as there are two entirely different classes designated as Israel, literal or the descendants of Abraham; and spiritual, or those who become so by an obedience to the plan of salvation. Which of these two classes, now, will the judgment be passed upon, or will it be both?

In the quotation we made from Doctrine and Covenants 28: 3, near the beginning of the article, in speaking of Christ's coming, and the twelve with him in glory, it is declared: "To judge the whole house of Israel, even as many as have loved me and kept my commandments, and none else." This quotation, then, settles the matter as to which class of Israel is to be judged, that it is spiritual and not literal Israel, and any conclusions that have been formed from supposing it to be the latter had better be abandoned. Having before stated the nature of this judgment, that it is to be passed upon the works of Israel, we will next determine for what purpose it is thus passed. There is but very little given in the revelations of God in answer to this inquiry, but sufficient, however, for us to form quite a definite idea as to what it is. We quote again from Doctrine and Covenants 28: 3:

To judge the whole house of Israel, even as many as have loved me and kept my commandments, and none else; for a trump shall sound, both long and loud, even as upon Mount Sinai, and all the earth shall quake, and they shall come forth, yea, even the dead which died in me, to receive a crown of righteousness, and to be clothed upon, even as I am, to be with me, that we may be one.

We draw the conclusion, then, that these twelve apostles sit in judgment upon the works of all Israel, to determine who is worthy to come forth in the first resurrection. We presume they judge the records, and thus determine who are worthy. Or in other words, it is the great judgment day to all saints, to determine their fitness to thus come forth, and enter into the peace and bright joys of the great millennial era of a thousand years.

May our records be such as will stand the crucial test.

CURE FOR CANCER.

(Republished by request.)

I have often noticed in your columns deaths from cancers, and I have often thought to send you a remedy that has proved successful in many hands in every case that I have applied it to cancers.

The remedy is this: Spread a plaster of common sticking plaster, cut a hole a trifle larger than the cancer, so that there will be a small margin of good flesh, about the sixteenth of an inch, all around the cancer. Apply the plaster over the cancer, leaving the cancer and this small margin exposed; then apply over the cancer and resting on the plaster the cancer plaster, composed of one part of wheat flour, one part bloodroot (sanguinaria) ground fine, one part chloride of zinc.

Mix the sanguinaria and flour with water, then the chloride of zinc. Mix well and apply over the cancer, letting it remain from twenty-four to forty-eight hours, according to the time the cancer has been standing. Then take off the cancer plaster, and dress with any good healing salve. In from a week to ten days the cancer will drop out. (Don't try to press it out.)

Then heal with any good salve. Probably the best healing salve is the All Healing or Black Salve. It is best for a cancer, which I will furnish the receipt of to anyone writing for it, inclosing a two-cent postage stamp to pay postage.

BLACK SALVE.

Take rosin and beeswax two ounces each, sweet oil eight ounces. Melt them together, stirring in while near the boiling point four ounces red lead; stir until brown, and when nearly cool add two drachms pulverized camphor and stir until cold, then box for use.

All those who have written for the recipe will please note this.

To pulverize the camphor put a few drops of alcohol upon it when it will readily powder under pressure of a table knife.

I remain your brother in Christ,

IDOLS.

It is a grave thing when a state puts a man among her jewels, the glitter of whose fame makes doubtful acts look heroic. The honors we grant mark how high we stand, and they educate the future. The man we honor and the maxims we lay down in measuring our favorites, show the level and morals of the time. A name has been in everyone's mouth of late, and men have exhausted language in trying to express their admiration and their respect. The courts have covered the grave of Mr. Choate with eulogy. Let us see what is their idea of a great lawyer. We are told that "he worked hard," "he never neglected his client," "he flung over the discussions of the form the grace of a rare scholarship," "No pressure or emergency ever stirred him to an unkind word." A ripe scholar, a profound lawyer, a faithful servant of his client, a gentleman. This is a good record, surely. May he sleep in peace. What he earned, God grant he may have. But the bar that seeks to claim for such a once a place among great jurists must itself be weak, indeed. Not one high moral trait specified; not one patriotic act mentioned; not one patriotic service ever claimed.

Look at Mr. Webster's idea of what a lawyer should be in order to be called great, in the sketch he drew of Jeremiah Mason, and notice what stress he lays upon the religious and moral elevation, and the glorious and high purposes which crown his life. Nothing of this now; nothing but incessant eulogy. But not a word of one effort to lift the yoke of cruel or unequal legislation from the neck of its victim; not one attempt to make the code of his country wiser, purer, better; not one effort to bless his times or breathe a higher moral purpose into the community. Not one blow struck for right or for liberty, while the battle of the giants was going on about him; not one patriotic act to stir the hearts of his idolaters; not one public act of any kind whatever about whose merit friend or foe could even quarrel, unless when he scouted our great charter as a glittering generality, or jeered at the philanthropy which tried to practice the sermon on the mount.

Suppose we stood in that lofty temple of jurisprudence—on either side of us the statues of the great lawyers of every age and clime:

Rome points to a colossal figure and says, "That is Papinian, who, when the Emperor Caracalla murdered his own brother, and ordered the lawyer to defend the deed, went cheerfully to death, rather than sully his lips with the atrocious plea; and that is Ulpian, who, aiding his prince to put the army below the law, was massacred at the foot of a weak but virtuous throne."

And France stretches forth her grateful hands, crying, "That is D'Aguesseau, worthy, when he went to face an enraged king, of the farewell, his wife addressed him: 'Go, forget that you have a wife and children to ruin, and remember only that you have France to save.'"

England says, "That is Coke, who flung the laurels of eighty years in the face of the first Stuart, in defense of the people. This is Selden, on every book of whose library you saw written the motto of which he lived worthy, 'Before everything, Liberty!' That is Mansfield, silver-tongued, who proclaimed, 'Slaves can not breathe in England; if their lungs receive our air, that moment they are free.'"

"This is Romilly, who spent life trying to make law synonymous with justice, and succeeded in making life and property safer in every city of the empire. And that is Erskine, whose eloquence, spite of Lord Eldon and George the Third, made it safe to speak and to print."—Wendell Phillips.

ELOQUENCE.

In every enlightened age, eloquence has been a controlling element in human affairs. Eloquence is not a gift, but an art—not an inspiration, but an acquisition—not an intuition, but an attainment. Excellence in this art is attained only by unwearied practice, and the careful study of the best models. The models lie all around us. The rest is within us. Demosthenes and Cicero will be household words, in all climes, to the end of time. But the more one studies the masters of Grecian and Roman eloquence, the more readily will he yield to the growing opinion that England, France, and America, during the last sixty or seventy years, have produced a greater number of eloquent orators than flourished in all Grecian and Roman history. As objects increase in size when seen through a mist, so men tower into giants when seen through the haze of antiquity.

Without neglecting the ancient models, let us study those of our own times. From both we may catch some of that inspiration which bound the audience to the orator, and bade him play upon their emotions as the master touches the keys of his familiar instrument—which subdued them to tears or convulsed them with laughter—which bore them aloft on the wing of imagination, or blanched them with horror while narrative threw the colors upon the canvas which held the judgment and the fancy captive, as reason forged the chain of argument, and poetry studded its links with the gems of illustration—which poured over the subject a flood of rare knowledge, laden with the contributions of all sciences and all ages—which gamboled in playful humor, or opened the sparkling fountain of wit, or barbed the point of epigram, or sketched the laughing caricature, gliding from grave to gay, from lively to severe, with majesty and grace;—that inspiration which, as Paul reasoned of righteousness, temperance and the judgment made Felix tremble; as Demosthenes anathematized Macedonia, made the Greeks cry out, "Lead us against Philip"; at the thrilling tones of Henry, made America ring with the shout, "Give us liberty, or give us death"; when the thunder of Danton shook the dome of the Convention, roused all Paris to demand the head of Louis; and lashed into fury or hushed into repose acres of wild peasantry, as the voice of O'Connell rose or fell.

THE CRY OF PERSONAL LIBERTY.

No sooner is mention made of laws affecting the liquor traffic than its cry of protest quickly reaches our ears. It speaks, it tells us, in the name of personal rights and personal liberty, violated by the laws which we would enforce or enact. Personal liberty! It ever was the fashion of wrong to bedeck itself with righteous name. Liberty is dear to the American people—so dear that the name is a passport to all hearts. But will we allow slavery and vice and death to borrow the precious name and to make their own the privileges and the rights of liberty? It is liberty herself that commands law to press down heavily to-day upon the liquor traffic. The first duty of the liberty-loving citizen is to hold more precious than the apple of his eye the life of the Republic, the mother and the guardian angel of liberty, to war against its enemies—and the enemy of the Republic is not more he who opposes her flag on the battlefield than he who scatters moral poison through her towns and villages, and defies in his daily avocation her laws and her law-making powers. Liberty means the right of all men to enjoy without disturbance, life and property; not a title for one portion of the community to prey as hungry beasts upon the other.

Liberty, O sacred name! To what base service they chain thee! They ask for liberty to rob of soul and life the minor and the habitual drunkard; to break in with riot and shame upon the quietness of our Sunday; to track to his home and workshop the poor laborer, lest he bring bread to starving wife and children! They ask for liberty to trample underfoot the laws of the land, to level against the Republic death-dealing blows! Not more audacious would be the clamoring of the spirit of the furious waters of our great rivers demanding liberty to sweep away whole cities, and to engulf in the maddening abyss hecatombs of human lives. No, no—we know and love liberty, but the cry of the traffic is not the cry of liberty.

The optimist lives under a clear sky; the pessimist lives in a fog. The pessimist is confused; he hardly knows where to go, what to do or how to act; the optimist is in tune with the harmonies of nature and discerns distinctly the onward path that lies before him. The pessimist hesitates, and loses both time and opportunity; the optimist makes the best use of everything now, and builds himself up, steadily and surely, until all adversity is overcome and the object in view realized. The pessimist curbs his energies and concentrates his whole attention upon failure; the optimist gives all his thought and power to the attainment of success, and arouses his faculties and forces to the highest point of efficiency. The pessimist waits for better times, and expects to keep on waiting; the optimist goes to work with the best that is at hand now, and proceeds to create better times. The optimist is an inspiration to everybody; the pessimist is a wet blanket. The pessimist pours cold water on the fires of his own ability; the optimist adds fuel to those fires. The pessimist links his mind to everything that is losing ground; the optimist lives, thinks and works with everything that is determined to press on. The pessimist places a damper on everything; the optimist gives life, fire and go to everything. The pessimist repels everything; the optimist attracts everything. The pessimist fights the wrong; the optimist works to increase the power of the right. The optimist is a building force; the pessimist is always an obstacle in the way of progress. The pessimist lives in a dark, soggy, unproductive world, the optimist lives in that mental sunshine that makes all things grow.—The Progress Magazine.

We complain frequently of the heavy crosses we are compelled to bear in Christian service. But let us remember that it is not God who makes many of the crosses that we find in our way and of which we bitterly complain. The Savior says the yoke he would have us take upon us is easy, and the burden which he imposes light. The Heavenly Father makes "straight paths for our feet," and if we would go his way, if we would straighten our wills to his will, and lay them side by side, there would be no crosses. But when the path that God points out goes north and south, and our stubborn will leads us east and west, the consequence is a "cross"—a cross of our own making, not that which our Master bade us "take up and carry after him," and of which it has been well said, "He always carries the heaviest end himself."

To do right is the only real obligation that faces us. A thief, defending himself by saying, "But a man must live," was met with the answer, "I do not see that." There is no necessity to live, but there is a supreme necessity to do right. Thousands of men and women have laid down their lives rather than do wrong.

MULHALL, OKLAHOMA.

Dear Herald: It sometimes seems harvesters are few. We have been doing a little to get the truth before the people, as my husband is a priest and he has preached during the summer months. We are aiming to have grove meetings in June, if we can get one or two preachers to help us. If this notice comes before the missionaries of Oklahoma, we wish they would help us. If they can not, we would like some one from Kansas or some near place to let us know regarding this matter and we will pay their expenses if they can come in June. Our missionaries in Oklahoma seem to have all the work they can do, so we ask those of the neighboring missions to come and help us if they can. Ever praying for the welfare of God's people and the redemption of Zion,

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. LIZZIE GRAY.

R. F. D. No. 4.

CENTERVIEW, MISSOURI, May 6, 1910.

Dear Brother and Sister: Since reading Sr. Louise Wilson's letter, I feel more anxious than ever to live prayerfully and watchfully that I may become prepared to merit the great blessings promised to God's people.

I had a dream once, which I will relate to you. I saw a number of people throwing dust in each other's faces, and I thought to restrain them from acting so unbecomingly; and raised my hand as if to stop them; when a brother stepped forward as if to slap me for interfering. But before either of us did the unkind act we had started to do, we were both filled with the thought that our course was altogether wrong; that they who wish to set aright those who are in error must do so in the spirit of love and humility.

The scene then changed and I was at a feast which was ready for the guests. I saw those who had been throwing dust come, expecting admittance, but were refused, and they turned disappointedly away.

When I awoke, the dream lingered long in my mind, and I felt impressed that the dust signified gossip and idle talk. I do not know whether or not this was a spiritual dream; but hope that some one may be benefited by reading it.

With kindest regards and best wishes for all,

Your sister in the faith,

MRS. GEO. HARRING.

GILLESPIEVILLE, OHIO.

Dear Brethren and Sisters: As I go back twenty-eight years to our little Union Grove Branch in West Virginia, I think of how few of us are left. Father Beatty and wife, John L. Williams, Sister Moler, and Sister Zearley and perhaps more are dead. We are left to dress ourselves for heaven and help others to do the same.

My husband has been dead four years, and I have four children with me; two of my own and two grandchildren that I care for the same as I do my own. When my husband died I was left without money and the land that we had was not cleared and the house not finished. I did not know which way to turn, yet I let God direct me and I kept my children together, although it has been a hard row to hoe. When I hear wives saying, "O, I have to work so hard, I don't see how we can live," I just think if my husband was here to earn the bread and be with us, how thankful I could be. When I was left I was where all were strangers. There was only one Saint here during my husband's sickness. When he was laid to rest, the lonesomeness seemed unbearable; but this is something we have to endure, so let us be kind and gentle with our families. I will not complain, for things could be worse. If we could only think wisely and not complain, how much better it would be. Go to Galatians 5: 22, 23 and see what the fruits of the Spirit are. This latter day work is of God and keeps us from so many sinful things, yet we are liable to slip and stumble, but let us cling to some branches of the overhanging boughs and hold fast, for we shall not be tempted above that which we are able to stand. I feel sad and ask for myself if the cloud will ever pass me by.

If any dear old brother or sister sees this, I wish they would write me a line; it would surely be appreciated by me. We are of the scattered Saints. I have lived close to a branch only one year since I came here. I do not take the HERALD, but hope I can before long, for I love to read its columns. Asking the prayers of all, yours in the true gospel,

SAREPTA REEVES PRATT.

BOZEMAN, MONTANA, May 7, 1910.

Editors Herald: My address is 23 North Seventh avenue, Bozeman, Montana, and I am in my field ready for another year's work. Our branch is new and small; but we have some good workers and are pushing ahead, trying to let our light shine. The sisters' aid society is only one month old; but it has decided to repaint the church and parsonage, and has about one third of the money already raised. Yes, and paid nine dollars for hymnals, too. How could the church be run without the sisters?

We are badly in debt, as a branch, but are determined to succeed, if the Lord will help; and we believe he will.

Our district conference is to be held here in Bozeman, June 18 and 19, and we hope to see a good representation from all parts of the district.

In gospel bonds,

ISAAC M. SMITH.

BOISE, IDAHO, May 2, 1910.

Dear Herald: Now that the General Conference is over and the possible eagerness of your readers has relaxed to some degree at least, I thought perhaps a line from Boise would be relished by the Saints.

We are striving to gain a foothold and uphold our Master's banner of truth in one of the outposts of "Utah Mormonism," and while we have met with a considerable degree of success, it has been no easy climbing. The main opposition has been practically this: The Utah people claim to be "the church" and the sectarians say, "They are all the same, Mormons," and consequently the way of truth is evilly spoken of, and it is very hard to get the people out to hear us. We are progressing, however, and some are very near the fold. We as Saints sometimes wonder why the people do not take up with our religion almost instantly. Should we wonder at this? Did our Savior appeal to everyone in his day? Nay, verily, but the sacred pages of Holy Writ tell us that the "Lord added unto the church daily such as should be saved." Thus Boise Saints are thankful for those he gives unto us.

Our little branch, though small and scattered, is as a rule spiritually inclined, feeling always to trust their Master in times of need as well as in times of plenty; seem to be daily overcoming and learning the better way of life "to go on unto perfection." Many things that have seemingly threatened us at times have turned out to be blessings and have shown more fully the impregnability of our position. Our sick have been healed, some miraculously; for all these we abundantly praise our heavenly Father, and not only for these, but for all his recognitions, which are many indeed. In the history of the church at large, we see numerous attempts made by those who have ventured to overthrow the work by their many publications and, while so engaged in doing, in the main, they have only proven its stability. Scientific research has in itself, without our interference, made them remodel or destroy the very essence of the works and depart to other fields, only to be again driven therefrom while we still cling to the "old Jerusalem gospel," still undaunted and undismayed in the blessed hope that it brings.

Through some method, the Utah people have gotten hold of the names and addresses of some of the Saints here and have endeavored to flood us with such tracts as "Corner stones of the Reorganization," "The Reorganization weighed," "The Reorganization versus salvation for the dead," etc. To my mind such as these only show the apparent weakness of their position. Listen, dear Saints: To prove us wrong (which thing they have yet to do) does not prove them right by any means. What standard do they wish us to judge them by? Let them name it! If polygamy, Adam-god theory, blood-atonement, would have proved an apostasy nineteen hundred years ago, we most surely think it would prove nothing else than apostasy to-day. Listen again: They say that the priesthood does not have lineal descent; i. e., does not come down from father to son, etc., and in order to bolster up such sophistry, quote Inspired Translation, Hebrews 7: "Without father, without mother, without descent." If this proves anything, what becomes of their teachings on the patriarchate and the bishopric? Are these offices included in the priesthood? If so, have they not judged themselves when they sought to judge others? They are certainly good beggars when it comes to begging the question of church succession. They preach salvation for the dead, but damnation for the living! Dear Saints, let us be careful and carefully weigh such spurious doctrines. Our Father recognizes good and noble lives everywhere. Let us keep our garments unspotted. Let us work the works of our great Advocate while it is yet day, that when the night is past, and the great light of that glorious morning shall appear, we may rise from our beds, like the lily, clothed with heaven's adorning. May God bless all his dear Saints.

Your brother in bonds,

R. OWEN.

An Open Letter.

To the Northern States Mission of the Salt Lake Church, at Chicago, Illinois: I have never troubled myself in regard to "Reorganization weighed" or "Corner stones of Reorganization"; but have taken for granted that Joseph Smith, of Lamoni, was the rightful successor of his father, Joseph Smith the Prophet, always providing he was worthy; for God has said his Spirit can not dwell in impure temples.

I am not acquainted, personally, with Joseph Smith, of Lamoni, but I do know people of strict integrity who have known him all their lives, who testify he has always lived a wise counsel, I thank my heavenly Father that he is the life of honor, has proven himself worthy to carry on the work his father laid down; and when I read his pure teachings and leader or president of His church here on the earth. He does not send his ministers out into the world with the angel's pure message as a cloak for their iniquity, to deceive the children of men.

I also have another witness, for God in his infinite mercy has given unto us to know for ourselves, if their doctrine be true or not. He has said in his holy word, If any man, even though he be an angel from heaven, comes to you with any other gospel than this ye have received, "let him be accursed." I thank God for this assurance, else one would be blown about by every wind of doctrine.

God is unchangeable. He is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. He does not give pure commandments to one race of people, then turn around and break them, and give a new code of laws to another generation, just to gratify the sinful lust of men. If there ever had been the slightest doubt in my mind as to who should possess the authority to lead the church, I would never look for it among the libertines of Salt Lake, either past, present, or future.

I will say in conclusion, do not send any more of Brigham Young's literature here to us, for I consider his very name as an insult to every pure minded woman or man on the face of the earth.

Yours respectfully,

MRS. RHODA HUNTER.

News From Branches

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Cleveland Branch has been favored by a visit from Elder I. C. Fairfield. He now leaves here for fields anew, his mission being Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. Since last writing we have had visitors from Chicago, New Philadelphia, Kirtland, Mentor, Akron, and other places. We are now commencing our open-air meetings in the park, which have been carried on for years every Sunday afternoon when the weather permits. Brother Whiteaker is coming to help with this work.

Sunday school has increased very much lately, it reaching the highest mark on our record. The home department has doubled and trebled. Here is where the Saints can work in the vineyard to advantage by getting outsiders interested in the Gospel Quarterly, which is a great instrument for presenting the truth and building up the kingdom.

The Bishopric.AGENT'S NOTICE.

As another conference year is well under way, I take this occasion to greet you one and all of the Southern Indiana District. I will see all that I can in person, but I have written many and have received most gratifying responses. We need more money, and need it right away. All that have an interest in God's work I am sure will respond. Let everyone that responded last year not forget that we want to make a better showing this year. Let us show our faith by the money we can give to support the work. This is one good way to prove ourselves. I am sure that many that have never yet given to support the work in the district will see that I am still hoping to see them enroll in this cause. Now let me hear from you, one and all; if you can only send five or ten dollars, remember it will be highly appreciated and helpful.

With love to all,

JOHN ZAHND.

Pastoral.

To the Ministry, and Saints of Texas: Having been placed as subminister in charge of the State, I take this opportunity and way to write you all. We hope all will make an effort to do their part this year to carry the gospel to the people in this great State of Texas. Those that stay at home and labor in the business affairs of men can pay their tithing and consecrations, and in that way be coworkers together with those that preach, and with God.

We expect to have two reunions this year. One will be in Central District near Hearne, Texas, July 15, and last ten days. The other in Southwestern District, near Pipe Creek, Texas, August 12, and last ten days. We would like to urge all in a radius of a hundred miles of these points to attend. Come at the beginning and remain to the end, also come prepared to take care of yourselves; and bring tents if you can. Services will be held day and night.

To save expense to the missionaries in traveling, we will divide the field as follows: Bro. B. F. Renfro, Davidson, Oklahoma, will labor in the northern part of the State, including the Pan-handle. Bro. E. Bates, Munday, Texas, will work in the same part as Brother Renfro.

Bro. R. M. Maloney, Seiling, Oklahoma, will have the eastern part of the State to the Gulf. Bro. John Nunley, Hearne, Texas, will occupy in the Central District, as he is now Bishop's agent of that district.

Bro. D. S. Palmer, San Antonio, Texas, 341 Stace street, will take Southwestern District. He is Bishop's agent of that district. Saints wishing preaching in their part will please write these men. I have given their home addresses. We invite the local men to help us all they can. In addition to the reunions we aim to have arbor meetings all summer.

I am to hold a debate with J. W. Chism, at Kirbyville, commencing May 31, lasting twelve sessions. We have no members at this place, and am sorry to say can not invite the Saints to attend.

Let us all be active this year, and report from forty to sixty sermons a quarter. Your brother and colaborer,

W. M. AYLER.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 824 SOUTH CRYSLER STREET.

To the Priesthood of the Lamoni Stake.

At the joint quorum meeting in February it was decided by vote that in future these meetings be conducted as general priesthood meetings in charge of the stake authorities. A program committee was appointed consisting of Elder J. F. Garver, of the stake presidency, Elder C. I. Carpenter, president of the elders' quorum, Brn. E. F. Hall and S. D. Shippy, presidents of the priests' quorums, John Weedmark, president of the teachers' quorum, and C. F. Church, president of the deacons' quorum.

The next regular meeting will be held on Sunday, May 22, at 2.30 p. m., in the basement of the church at Lamoni, and the subject for discussion will be "Stake organization, its object and value." A fifteen-minute paper will be read by Elder G. W. Blair, and the discussion will be led by one of the brethren selected, after which the question will be open for general discussion.

All of the brethren holding any order of the priesthood are requested to be present. These meetings are not for the Lamoni Branch alone, but for any of the ministry who may be in the stake at the time.

Forger Beating Saints.

The Saints are hereby warned again that a man is preying upon our people in particular, and has lately operated in Columbus, Cleveland, and Willoughby, getting in the good graces of our members and passing forged checks, etc., through their indorsement. Description: Dark, medium height, stockily built, dresses well, pleasant and smooth talker, well acquainted with the Saints' work, but evasive when closely questioned regarding the place he gives as his home branch. We have learned that his relatives are in the church and are caring for a wife and child deserted by him. He is a persistent crook and travels close to our people. So let branch officers anticipate a visit from him and stop his work for once and all. Let Saints everywhere be more suspicious of plausible stories by "saints" unknown.

brook, Manchester, after a long and painful illness, the result of an accident while attending her church service. The remains were interred at Barton church, Brethren Rushton and James Baty officiating. The deceased was baptized November 21, 1887, and for twenty-two years lived a faithful and useful life as a Christian and was never ashamed to confess her faith as a Latter Day Saint. In her most painful experiences and even when death had laid his icy grip upon her frame, she would encourage her husband to attend his meetings and was always anxious for the welfare of the church. She was for forty-three years a loving and faithful wife, and together with her husband made many sacrifices for the Master's sake. Death came as a merciful release, and while her departure is mourned, her entrance into the "rest of the Saints" is not begrudged. The memorial service was held at the South Manchester Branch, of which our sister was a member, on Sunday, April 24, J. W. Rushton preaching the sermon.

HINKLEY.—Clement Hinkley was born in Addison, Maine, and died February 26, 1910, at Jonesport, Maine, aged 73 years, 11 months, and 12 days. He was married to Miss Julia Kelley fifty years ago. To them were born six children, four boys and two girls, all living. This was the first death in the family. He joined the Latter Day Saint Church in 1880; served faithfully as deacon for many years. He was a man of positive convictions along religious lines. For twenty years he has been disabled and most of the time confined to the house and unable to walk. As a sailor for a few years, he had some very trying experiences. His wife survives him to battle a little longer. She faithfully ministered to her suffering companion for many years. Services at the house, conducted by Elder S. F. Cushman.

PERSONS.—Sr. Cynthia Brook Persons was born March 16, 1832, at Eugene, Vermilion County, Indiana, and died of dropsy July 27, 1909, near Dean, Missouri. She was married to John Brook, who preceded her in death, date not known by me. Second marriage to George Persons, October, 1901. She united with the church October 14, 1879, and died firm in the faith at the age of 77 years, 4 months, and 11 days. She left a will that provides for the payment of her tithing on property to be sold. Funeral services by Arthur Hailey.

KERR.—Bro. David Kerr was born April 24, 1830, in Kilsyth, Scotland; was baptized into the Reorganized Church February 5, 1871, at Wesley, Mill County, Illinois, by L. B. Scott, and died February 6, 1910, at Eustis, Nebraska. Prayer at the house by G. Keller, sermon at the church by J. F. Grimes, assisted by G. W. Johnson. Grandpa Kerr was a Saint to the full meaning of the word. He came to our meetings as long as his strength would permit. His mite was never forgotten. He was beloved by those that knew him. In the last three months of his earthly life, he suffered much until his spirit departed from the mortal body into the peaceful realm of paradise.

He who truly gives sympathy makes some personal bestowal of himself—of his own strength, his own life—into the weakness and deadness that he tries to help. It is, indeed, a wondrous gift from man to man.—Phillips Brooks.

The Great Question of Life.

The following is reproduced from The Outlook and few there are who can read it without turning themselves over in their own minds and being benefited by the retrospection:

WHO ARE YOU?

That seems an easy question to answer; but of all questions it is one of the most difficult. There are a great many people who could not answer it if you put it to them. The story is told of the philosopher Schopenhauer that, while walking abroad during one of his melancholy moods, he almost stumbled over a boy on the street. The boy sprang aside and said, "Who are you?" The philosopher shook his head sadly and answered, "How I wish I knew!" There are a great many of us who do not know who we are; we live in certain houses on certain streets; we pursue certain vocations; but we do not know who we are. But while it happens that a man does not know who he is, his acquaintances know, because, whether we wish it or not, whether we are conscious of it or not, every man is always answering that question. In any assemblage where men of distinction sit together, you pick out one man and ask who he is, and your question is answered by name. That name is all you wish to know. It tells you who that man is because it tells you what that man is. Abraham Lincoln means one kind of a man to you, and Aaron Burr means another.

That question is answered very differently at different periods in life. There are two natures in every one, struggling together; sometimes one nature is in the ascendant, sometimes the other, and we are different persons at different times. Re-read that striking psychological story of Edgar Allen Poe, "William Wilson," in which he describes a boy at school in an old Elizabethan manor-house, later at Eton, afterwards at Oxford, and then as a young man in Paris; describes him contending against his better nature personified in another personality; these two boys, looking alike, wearing the same clothes, having the same manners, in constant conflict, the baser nature fighting against the higher nature. Finally, in a moment of passion, the baser boy slays the higher boy, and then becomes William Wilson. You remember that striking story of Stevenson's, "Doctor Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." If you had asked Doctor Jekyll at the beginning who he was, he would have told you that he was a man of gentle impulses, of scholarship, refinement, and beneficence. If you had asked him that question the day he died, he would have told you that he was a scoundrel; that he was cruel, brutal, and a murderer; and both answers would have been true.

COURT PROCEDURE

26 pages of instructions and blank forms about how to proceed in church trials.

No. 149. Paper. 10 cents.

"Who am I?" I am fundamentally what I love. Do I love truth? Then sooner or later I shall become true. Do I love nobility? Then ultimately, with much stumbling and many faltering steps, I shall climb to the height where nobility dwells, above the strife for place and power, above low aims and self-seeking. Where your heart is, there, ultimately, you shall be also.

"Who am I?" I am what I believe. Not what my lips say I believe, but what my character proves I believe. You may repeat a thousand times the Apostles' Creed, beginning "I believe," and yet you may not believe a word of it. It is idle to say that you believe in the forgiveness of sins when in your heart you can not forgive the friend who unintentionally harms you. You may declare that you believe in the life of the world to come; but if you live wholly in this life, like the worm in the ground at your feet, then you do not believe it. Character, and character alone, is belief; that is to say, conviction reinforced by will. And it is not a question of what you are to-day; it is a question of what you are becoming. We are all put to the test; but the test is not conformity to moral rules to-day; the test is, "Which way are you going?" You may fall a hundred times and then in the end you may climb to a height never reached by many a man or woman who has never been guilty of an overt sin. What you wish passionately to become, you will ultimately be; and in the strife to become what you wish your real self will emerge.

A gifted man had one great and tragic weakness, as his father had had before him—a man of great distinction and genius, but with a passion for drink. He once said, "I was born with a tiger in my blood." Often he fell terribly because he fell on a great stage, and there were those who spoke of him as a lost soul. But he never ceased to strive, and in the end he overcame. Who was he? At first he was a stained and broken man, on the road apparently, to complete wreck; at the end he was not only one of the first artists of his time, but a loyal, victorious, generous, inspiring human spirit.

Marking the Oregon Trail.

During the years that followed the finding and marking of this pathway to the Northwest, traders, trappers, gold-seekers, soldiers, missionaries, and colonists plodded over the long road by the hundreds and thousands. First were the explorers, then the hunters and trappers and fur traders. Then came the building of the forts in the thirties—Fort Laramie, Fort Bridger, and all the rest, whose names are historic. Thus the Oregon Trail grew and became a highway that was as easy to follow as a country road. Along it surged for years the advance tide of a nation's traffic. With the building of the railroads the old highway, no longer used, became obliterated. Its very whereabouts began to be forgotten and to be the subject of unending disputes. Four years ago an old man, almost eighty, began a movement for permanently marking the route of the Oregon Trail. Since then the matter has grown into a national affair.

This old man was Ezra Meeker. He started from his home in Puyallup, Washington, in January, 1906, and retraced, in a prairie-schooner drawn by oxen, the journey that he had made from Missouri over the Oregon Trail in 1852. He spent a year on the road. Everywhere he stopped and urged the people whose fathers and grandfathers had followed the Oregon Trail as pioneers to erect monuments and markers so that all memory of the great historic highway might not be lost. When he reached Independence, Missouri, he did not end his journey there. Still driving his oxen, he plodded on to Washington, D. C., and got the matter before Congress. No legislation was enacted at that time, however.

Until the people along the road learned who he was Meeker was mistaken for a herb doctor, a patent medicine vender, the prophet of a new religion, and a lunatic. When they knew his mission, however, great was the enthusiasm that arose.

The result of this old man's work is to be found in a measure before the present session of Congress to appropriate fifty thousand dollars for the permanent marking of the old trail. This act provides for the appointment of a commissioner who shall, "under the direction of the Secretary of War, erect such monuments and markers of granite and other materials as will designate and locate the general route of the Oregon Trail and fittingly commemorate the valorous deeds of those who traversed it." A proviso of the bill is that the States through which the trail passes—Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Wyoming, Idaho, Oregon, and Washington—shall raise sufficient funds to complete the work which the Government will start.—Harper's Weekly.

"I guess my father must have been a pretty bad boy," said one youngster. "Why?" inquired the other. "Because he knows exactly what questions to ask when he wants to know what I have been doing."

THE UNITED ORDER OF ENOCH INCORPORATED.

Some time in the summer of 1909, as soon after the closing of the session of conference on April 21 as was found practicable, the Bishopric set about forming and securing an incorporation. A number of the brethren favorable to the movement were called together at the office of the General Bishop, and the articles were drafted and agreed upon and were presented to the circuit court of Jackson County, sitting at Independence, Missouri. These articles were filed in the court before the judge then presiding, and were met by a protest upon the part of persons who had sought and obtained articles of incorporation, called the United Order of Equality.

The court under the provision of statute appointed an attorney, known as amicus curiæ (friend of the court), to whom was delegated the duty to examine such articles and report to the court after such examination as to whether the articles were within the limitations of the statutes of the State providing for incorporations and proscribing the rules governing them, and to make such recommendation as his duty and understanding made requisite, either recommending the issuing of a pro forma decree or recommending the denial of such a decree. The attorney appointed by the court reported unfavorably to the articles which were filed and the pro forma decree was denied.

Subsequently the persons desiring to incorporate held a meeting and took the objections raised against the articles which had been filed into consideration, formulated new articles thought to be in harmony with the statutes, and filed the same in a division of the circuit court at Kansas City, petitioning for the pro forma decree as before. The court appointed another attorney as "a friend of the court" who made an unfavorable report to the court.

The same parties who had protested at Independence, Missouri, again entered protest. Upon consideration of the report and the protest the court listened to arguments both for and against the issuing of the order, and after hearing the arguments and taking the matter into consideration, he overruled the report and directed the issuing of the pro forma decree granting the incorporation.

The articles were sent to the Secretary of State of the State of Missouri for attaching the certificate, but the persons objecting to the issuing of the order interposed by an appeal, setting forth their reasons for the denial of a charter. The matter was sent to the Attorney General, who, it is presumed, took the matter of the articles into consideration, as well as the objections made against the granting of the charter for the incorporation, the result being that on Friday, May 13, 1910, the articles were returned to the Bishop with a certificate of the Secretary of State attached thereto, and as far as the statutes provide the incorporation of the United Order of Enoch was complete.

We take pleasure in giving to the readers of the HERALD the articles of incorporation upon which the pro forma decree has been issued, together with the necessary papers attached by the requirements of the statutes. Doubtless the persons who have objected to the issuing of the order before the courts will be disappointed that the articles have been approved and the order issued, and that the association has become an active working body having the sanction of the laws of the State of Missouri. It is fortunate for us that this protest was made, for it brought the object of the incorporators of the association into direct notice of the Secretary of the State and the Attorney General, the last named being the officer whose duty it is to look after such corporations as are formed and do business in the State of Missouri, and who must, by virtue of his office, be thoroughly informed in regard to the rights and privileges of incorporators.

I do not feel to attach any blame or find any fault with those who were objecting to the incorporation of the Order of Enoch, as they availed themselves of their privileges under the laws of the State, and were entitled to be heard. We are pleased, however, that the wishes and views of the incorporators' rights and privileges under the statute were not found to be so far astray from what could be granted under the statute as to prevent the carrying into effect the provisions of the action of the conference of 1909. It now remains for those upon whom devolves the carrying of the provisions of these articles into operation according to the intents and purposes thereof, to do so in such a manner as to approve themselves in the consideration of the Master and all good men.

While we deplore the delay that may have occurred, in a sense we are pleased to know that the incorporators have taken the matter patiently, have made no statements of impatience or faultfinding, but quietly waited the action of the courts, as they were in duty bound to do, believing that the right would triumph at the last, and trusting to the direction of the Good Spirit in the affairs intrusted to them.

As soon as practicable, there will be a meeting of the incorporators, and steps will be taken to authorize the Board of Trustees and their executive committee to begin active work of incorporation.

We commend the reading of these articles to the patrons of the HERALD, and especially those who feel disposed to become benefactors under their provisions.

The articles are given below, together with the papers necessary to complete the incorporation.

JOSEPH SMITH.

ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED ORDER OF ENOCH.

A BENEVOLENT SOCIETY IN THE INTEREST OF THE POOR AND NEEDY.

The United Order of Enoch is a helping and benevolent association, organized for the benefit of the poor and needy, dispensing its charities by furnishing equal opportunities to the needy, upright, and industrious in a financial, educational, and social way, with those who are more fortunate, and the supplying of stewardships and homes or inheritances to the worthy who may lack.

D. 1909, authorizing further organization by the Bishopric of said church of those who may desire to so associate themselves) for purposes of transaction of business interests for the benefit of the poor and necessitous, and the general work of improvement and settlement of the worthy, who need homes and help.

Reese, G. H. Hilliard, D. J. Krahl, W. R. Dexter, Frederick M. Smith, Elbert A. Smith, E. L. Kelley, J. Mather, W. E. Messenger, W. B. Kelley, J. T. Curtis, Edward Rannie, being desirous of forming a corporation under the laws of the State of Missouri, and more particularly under the provisions of article 11, chapter 12, Revised Statutes, 1899, providing for associations of a benevolent and educational character, do hereby associate ourselves for the purpose of becoming a body corporate for the benefit of the poor and industrious who need, and the transaction of business necessarily connected therewith as herein set forth.

Article 3. Object in outline.

The purpose of this corporation shall be to aid and assist the worthy needy and poor in obtaining employment and homes, help the sick and afflicted and unfortunate in times of need, promote temperance, morality, and equality, and provide against the evils of selfishness, covetousness, anarchy, and crime of every description, and thus conserve, to a degree, the good of the community, and the good of the State, by a voluntary coöperation in the use, application, and distribution of the wealth, for the objects named, of those who may be members of the association, and who shall contribute for the purpose, and of the means which is gained by the association in its legitimate work and business, and also the application of that which may be voluntarily contributed or consecrated for these benevolent purposes by those who do not hold membership in the organization.

Article 4. Name and term.

Article 5. Nature and work.

This association shall have no capital stock divided into shares, it shall not be run for individual pecuniary profit, but for the objects herein set forth; the properties of the same shall not be individual, or held in severalty, but in common. The homes, or inheritances, however, which are provided for under the founding and management of the order, shall be individual, that is, held in severalty, each person or family holding in fee simple unless otherwise arranged at the time of setting the same apart, or when making the final settlement. The object of the association not being communistic as that term is usually understood, but a benevolent, helping order.

Article 6. Special statement of work and powers. The purposes of the association are:

First, to provide the advantages of permanent employment and thereby permanent homes, for those found worthy, but who are unable to arrange for steady employment and who are without sufficient means to procure homes for themselves.

Second, to furnish educational advantages for the youth of both sexes when parties or parents are unable to do so themselves, either by rendering to the parties such assistance as will give to them equal opportunities in the public schools, or in providing for them the advantages of the higher, or special institutions of learning.

To accomplish this work, it will be necessary to acquire by gift, purchase, devise, or other legal and just methods, real and personal property; also acquire lands suitable for carrying out the benevolent purpose and object set forth in these articles of association, and for suitable homes or inheritances, and, when desirable to improve and convey the same; but the properties, accumulations or gain from all or any of such transactions shall be held and used in maintaining and carrying out the benevolent work herein provided for, and in no case to be given or used for the pecuniary profit or benefit of any person or persons, corporation or corporations, but solely for the aiding and maintaining of the proper stewardships of the needy, and of its members in the benevolent, beneficial, and helping purposes herein set forth.

Article 7. Membership.

Membership in the order requires as a prerequisite a full compliance with the law of Christ, both as relates to duties known as spiritual, and those referred to under said law as temporal; that is, the precepts and ordinances of the gospel having been fulfilled through acceptance and obedience to the same as set out in the Holy Scriptures, also, the following specific duties set forth in the law of equality, to-wit:

A. To render a just and true account of the condition and business of his or her stewardship annually, setting forth the amount, or value, with the loss or gain of the same for the period named, together with a faithful estimate of necessities, and the amount required for repairs of stewardship, or the enlarging or extension of the same when proper, for the succeeding year.

B. Stated or annual settlement as provided under the law, by turning into the treasury or storehouse any surplus or talents remaining after a due fulfillment of the law as before set forth.

C. In case of a lack or shortage, after a faithful and attested performance of duty in his or her stewardship for a time, or a year, such steward to receive from said treasury or storehouse, such a proper and just supply as the law directs according to "his needs and wants, inasmuch as such wants are just."

D. That in all labor and association, each and everyone shall seek the interest or good of his neighbor, "doing all things to the glory of God."

E. In case of withdrawal, or transgression and expulsion, such person or persons shall retain that which has been set apart or deeded to him or her or them, for a home or inheritance, but shall have no further claim upon the common treasury and shall not be entitled to any withdrawal, benefits, or interest in the common fund or storehouse, whatever.

Article 8. Management.

A. The affairs of this corporation shall be under the supervision and management of a board of twelve trustees, to be selected by the members of the order from among their number, according to the rules and regulations of these articles and the by-laws of the association, who shall organize by the selection of a president, a secretary, and a treasurer, and perform any and all business necessary for the good of the order, a two thirds' majority of said board thus constituted and voting as a unit, being necessary for the transaction of all business of the order at any meeting of the same, but a less number may adjourn from time to time.

The trustees may also appoint an executive committee to act in business matters when the board is not in session.

B. The members of the Board of Trustees shall be elected at the annual meeting of the members of the association to be held the first Monday in April of each year or at an adjourned meeting of the order held subsequent to the said first Monday in April, and shall hold their offices until their successors are chosen and qualified. Vacancies occurring in the board may be filled at any time by the unanimous action of a majority of the members of the board, properly constituted, being present and voting.

C. The Board of Trustees may adopt by-laws, not inconsistent with these articles and the statutes of the State, as may be deemed necessary for the management of the affairs of the corporation and the carrying out of the work of the order.

D. The president, secretary, and treasurer herein, shall perform the duties usual to such offices in similar associations in addition to the specific duties named herein providing such duties are not inconsistent with the rules of the association.

E. The officers of this order shall also make report of the work and condition of the same annually to the General Conference of the said Reorganized Church.

Article 9. Property, rights and conveyances.

This incorporation shall be, in law, capable of holding, purchasing and conveying any estate, real, personal, or mixed, for its use in carrying out the benevolent work herein set forth and shall hold and enjoy in its corporate capacity, all the property, real, personal, or mixed which said society may now have or hereafter may acquire.

This corporation shall have a seal, and all conveyances of real estate shall be approved by the Board of Trustees of the order or association, and be signed and sealed by the president of the same. And such association may sue or be sued in its corporate name, and all claims made against it shall be made in the corporate name, and the individual or private property of the members shall in no case be held liable for the debts of the association.

Article 10. Dissolution and distribution thereunder.

It is hereby expressly provided and made a part of the conditions of this order, that in case of the dissolution, or abandonment of the work of the same, the properties of the order, after satisfying all just debts of the same, shall be turned over to the Presiding Bishop and Trustees of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, to be distributed to the poor and needy according to the rules and regulations of said society for aiding the poor and needy.

Article 11. Trustees.

CONCERNING AUDITORS' REPORT.

It will be remembered by those who read the auditors' report, upon the report of the Presiding Bishop's accounts, that the report mentioned having made a separate report to the Presidency of something which they found and which they thought might be made the subject of proper inquiry.

The Presidency took the matter up after some consideration with the Twelve in Joint Council, on Wednesday, April 20, at which time Bishop Kelley gave a verbal statement in explanation of the things named in the report to the Presidency, and offered to make a written reply, to which the council agreed.

This reply was submitted to the council on Friday, April 22, and a committee consisting of J. W. Wight, F. M. Sheehy, and F. A. Smith, was appointed to make proper inquiry into the matters covered by the report and the Bishop's reply. The committee was assisted in this inquiry by Bro. Robert Winning, who was one of the Board of Auditors, and was also assisted by Bro. G. H. Hilliard and the Bishop's bookkeeper, Bro. David J. Krahl, being cordially received and every facility afforded them for their inquiry.

The committee reported to the council on Saturday, the 23d, making such report as covered the subject-matters of the inquiry and explanation completely, which report was approved by the council as entirely satisfactory. This report of the committee and the action of the council in approving the results of their inquiry exonerates the Board of Auditors from animus and also clears the Bishop of any intention of wrongdoing in carrying into effect of the measures made necessary by the duties of his office.

The committee also made some suggestions which will result in attaining and carrying into effect the objects to be reached.

The Presidency takes pleasure in presenting this statement to the Saints, trusting that the Spirit of the Master is still supervising his work, and will give us the victory in due time.

JOSEPH SMITH, for the Presidency.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 27, 1910.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Rev. J. F. Mintun, pastor of the local Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, was dropped to-day as a member of the ministerial association of Des Moines.

The dropping of Reverend Mintun as a member of the association comes as a result of the recent agitation to let down the bars of the association and make it possible for all religious leaders to become members. When the plan to broaden the scope of the association was defeated, it became necessary to drop Reverend Mintun's name.

Rule 2 of the association's by-laws, which provides that only ministers of evangelical churches shall be eligible for membership is responsible for the action of this morning. Reverend Mintun has been a member of the association for about a year. Members of the association claim they did not know what denomination Reverend Mintun belonged to when he became a member.

Rev. Emory Miller made the address before the ministers to-day.—Des Moines Capital, May 16, 1910.

Elder Heman C. Smith took train Saturday for Dow City, Iowa, where he was to deliver the baccalaureate address before the graduating class of the high school at that place. On the same day Elder Elbert A. Smith went to Little Sioux, Iowa, on a similar errand.

Original Articles

R. E. GRANT, AND OPEN LETTER NO. 2.

True men, who are engaged in a true and righteous cause, are only anxious that the people should be correctly and fully informed. This being accomplished, they are quite willing to submit their cause to the judgment of the people. This is my only reason for having anything to say concerning the wild ravings and scurrilous charges set forth by Mr. Grant.

Concerning the statements published in the SAINTS' HERALD for March 9, 1910, pages 257, 258, it is only necessary to say, that I shall not shirk my full share of responsibility for the publication of the article and the writing of the introduction; but for the subject-matter of the lower and higher courts, I am in no respect responsible. The courts are responsible for this, and they can well afford to carry the responsibility.

1. The article does not claim to be a defense of the faith and doctrine of the church, and any effort to put it in this light is entirely out of order. The writer had furnished Mr. Grant with his personal reasons for refusing to enter into controversy with him, and had they been received in good faith, it would have saved him trouble.

2. The article states its own position and purpose. Why is it not met on its own claims, instead of on false ones, manufactured for the occasion? Here is our statement:

"This paper will show why Mr. Grant has not received more consideration and recognition from the church. He is not one of us, because he was found wholly unworthy to remain with us. He has no claim whatever upon the church, until he is willing to repent and do that which is right."

3. Just once, only once, do I state that R. E. Grant had been convicted of unchristianlike conduct and adultery. Not five times as stated in "Open Letter No. 2." The repetition of the charge in court proceedings, as Mr. Grant well knows, is necessary and not at all unusual. I have no thought or feeling of ill will towards Mr. Grant. I have no acquaintance with him, more than having merely seen him two or three times. Why he chose me as the proper one to whom he should address his open letters, is best known to himself. He may tell us, however, in Open Letter No. 3. I had never had any controversy with him, nor even correspondence on any subject whatever, until he sent me letters 1, 2, and 3. Nevertheless, I am quite willing that he should, if he shall feel so disposed, after completing his uncalled for and brazen attack, enter into his closet, and after he has shut the door, offer fervid thanks to God that he was led to make such a wise choice.

Mr. Grant would have us believe, from statements made in "Open Letter No. 2," that our "church courts could not, and did not, from the facts in the case" find him "guilty of any charge." If people will only exercise a little common sense when they read "Open Letter No. 2," they will see that it is one of the most fallacious documents ever submitted to the public eye. If "Open Letter No. 3" should prove to be as bad or worse than this one, I should think it would be about all the "open letters" Mr. Grant would need to write, on this case, at least. Nor is there any excuse for the bad work which Mr. Grant has done, for he informs us that he has in his "possession every letter, document, and report pertaining to this case from the beginning to its close," etc.

As a complete refutation of the claims made in "Open Letter No. 2," and to show just what kind of work Mr. Grant is doing, and to further show how foolish and wrong it is for people to sustain and assist Mr. Grant in this work, we herewith submit in full a copy of the findings of the lower court. Please remember that the High Council simply affirmed the decision of the Elders' Court.

The Valley Branch of the Reorganized Church of J. C. of L. D. S., of Bay City, Mich.

Elder R. E. Grant.

This case came up for hearing at Grand Rapids, Michigan, beginning August 8th, 1898, before a duly organized Elders' Court, said court consisting of Elders E. A. Blakeslee, S. W. L. Scott, and E. K. Evans, all present.

In this case "the Valley Branch" charges Elder R. E. Grant First, with Adultery and Bastardy. Second, with Lying. Third, with being a bad adulterous man in purpose and intent. Fourth, with being a hypocrite and deceiver in purpose and intent.

Before rendering a decision the court feels that it can not pass unnoticed an apparent attempt to influence its decision, and the court views with strong disfavor the effort of those of the prosecution, who by criticism and threat attempted to frighten and intimidate the court into giving a finding against the defendant, after the case had been tried and submitted to the court for final determination.

In passing upon the case before us the court regrets that it could not have had two important witnesses before it, and offered every advantage within its power to have them appear but without avail. There were presented purported statements from both, and in one instance two statements, one directly contradicting the other, when under such circumstances, and in a case where the charges are such, that if true, the accused must be of a terribly depraved character. The good of the church and justice to the defendant as well as witnesses, demands that the accused be permitted to face the witnesses, as in this case he claimed to be willing to do, and the failure and refusal of the witnesses to appear under the circumstances is unfair and unjust to the church of which they are members, and can but work favorably to defendant, however seriously charged, because he is entitled to the presumption of innocence until proven guilty by proper and competent evidence.

The court, therefore, can not from the evidence presented, find defendant guilty as charged in complaint, but from evidence furnished finds that he is guilty of unchristianlike conduct and adultery, and sustains the charges in these.

The court therefore recommends that the silence as a minister in the Reorganized Church of the defendant, R. E.

Grant be continued, and that if restitution by proper confession and repentance is not made in such time as may be affixed by the branch of which he is a member, unless appeal is taken by defendant, that he be dealt with according to the laws of God.

In case of appeal, the branch should reserve its action until after decision of appellate court.

(Signed)

E. A. BLAKESLEE.

S. W. L. SCOTT,

E. K. EVANS.

Dated at GALEN, MICHIGAN, Dec. 10, 1898.

From this report we note the following points:

1. The charges preferred against Mr. Grant by the Valley Branch, consisted of four counts. The material part of the first charge was sustained, but the other three were not. That is, the charge of "adultery and unchristianlike conduct" was sustained.

2. Paragraphs 3 and 4, quoted by Mr. Grant and made to apply to the decision of the court on the entire case, only applied to counts 2, 3, and 4, and not to any extent to "unchristianlike conduct and adultery," which is the material charge. Thus Mr. Grant has sought to mislead and deceive, by quoting such parts of the report as referred to that which was not proven against him, and withholding all that referred to the charge upon which he was convicted!

3. The foregoing is bad enough, God knows, but Mr. Grant caps the climax in low down trickery, when he furnishes the reader with his garbled extract from paragraph 5. This paragraph is composed of but one sentence, less than one half of which is quoted by Mr. Grant. This is the portion which he quotes:

"The court, therefore, can not from the evidence presented, find defendant guilty as charged in complaint."

There is only a comma after the word complaint, which is followed by the conjunction but. Mr. Grant ignores the conjunction and all the balance of the sentence which comes after it, and makes the comma into a period! Why does he do this? The balance of the sentence, herewith submitted, shows why:

"But from evidence furnished finds that he is guilty of unchristianlike conduct and adultery, and sustains the charges in these." (The italics are mine.)

I understand that Mr. Grant has been approved by the "Anti-Mormon League." Perhaps the report is true. He works like he was in their actual service now. Surely the league must be badly in need of approved workmen!

Now, I suppose Mr. Grant will attempt to explain, so we may look for "Open Letter" No. 3, "written to Joseph R. Lambert, of Lamoni, Iowa." Question, Will he explain as he already has done in "Open Letter No. 2"?

Yours in the belief that truth and right will ultimately triumph, and all error and wrong will be overthrown. I am ever striving to be the friend of God and man.

J. R. LAMBERT.

LAMONI, IOWA, April 28, 1910.

DIVINE LOVE.

"In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him."—1 John 4: 9. Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of our heavenly Father, willingly left the "courts of glory"; willingly descended from "the realms of peace and happiness" that lie above "the firmament of the heavens," to wander upon this earth as the poorest and most despised and rejected of men; that he might, by offering himself as "a bleeding sacrifice" and becoming a curse for us, redeem us from the curse of the law (Galatians 3: 13, 27) and make it possible for us to obtain "life eternal if we only would" (1 John 2: 25).

True his "Satanic Majesty," then an angel of light, offered to save the children of men, if the glory of the same might be given to him, but "Jesus, our loving Savior," said, "Father, send me, and thine be the glory." Oh, what great and tender love! So willingly he came to bear our griefs and carry our sorrows; to be wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities—not in the form of a rich man's son, but in the more humble and lowly form of a poor carpenter's son—whose birth was in a manger, upon whose head rested the chastisement of our peace, and by whose stripes we are healed.

His path, while here below, did not lie in pleasant places, for he was a man of sorrows, acquainted with grief and severe trials; and those whom he had come to save, hid as it were their faces from him and esteemed him not. Jesus himself said, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." His life's story as handed down to us in the record, is one so beautiful by loving deeds of extreme mercy and kindness shown to all, that we can faintly comprehend how tender is that love for us. Truly it is higher than the highest heavens, deeper than the deepest sea.

A sorely afflicted sister once wrote me that it had been made known to her that the angels in heaven had wept over her in her affliction. It is written in the record that there is great rejoicing in heaven when one sinner comes to Christ; so in like manner there must have been sorrow in heaven when that one was wandering in sin, and just so truly is there sorrow brought to our Redeemer's heart when we become negligent of our duties and thoughtless and forgetful of the great price that was paid for our redemption.

Can we, as Saints, afford to let ourselves become cold and indifferent? May God help us to wake up and see our duty, and may we never be guilty of bringing more sorrow to that tender heart who has already endured so much for us. Let us be strong and remember we must live faithfully each hour of every day if we would bring joy to our Savior by gaining the greater inheritance, which he has given us the privilege of obtaining if we only will. When temptations and trials of this life lay thick before us may we look to Jesus for strength, "for in that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted" (Hebrews 2: 18).

Let us follow closely in the footsteps of Him who was set as an example for us. "For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps."—Peter 2: 21.

"For ever faithful, loving, true,
O Christ, my love, my life, are due
Alone to thee, most holy friend,
Be with' and keep us to the end."

OUR DEFENSE.—PART 2.

BY ELDER J. R. LAMBERT.

This brings us to the juncture where it becomes necessary for us to make a few observations and lay down a few propositions.

Observation 1. Partial representations are almost always misleading. This is especially true when they are made by an enemy with a view to mislead. The whole story needs to be told in order that correct conclusions may be reached.

Observation 2. This is an application of the statement just made. The transgression of Adam does not represent the character of that noble man's life. Far from it. The same is true of other ancient worthies, heretofore mentioned, in a greater or lesser degree. The same principle applies to the conduct of the primitive Christian church, until they had gone so far in the way of apostasy and sin, that iniquity and crime became the rule, where before-time they had been the exception.

Observation 3. All men are fallible and in some things weak. It may be said that some men are strong. They are as compared with other men, but when compared with the perfect standard of truth and right, revealed in the gospel, all are found to have their weak points. In this connection we should make some allowance for environment. Many of the surroundings of those ancient worthies represented in the Bible, were very unfavorable as incentives to right doing. The king, especially in the days of David and Solomon, was exposed to continuous and strong temptation. Nevertheless, it was neither necessary nor right for them to give way to temptation.

Observation 4. We can not depend upon the representation of enemies. To do this would compel us to reject the gospel of the New Testament, and condemn Jesus Christ, his apostles and the primitive saints. Enemies as a rule (and especially in religion and politics) are unfair, unjust, and bitter. It is too common for them to employ falsehood, misrepresentation, popular views, without due regard to truth; in fact almost anything which seems to promise success. With them, "the end justifies the means." Therefore, testimony from this class of opposers is not conclusive.

Observation 5. What then should be the attitude of all lovers of and searchers after truth? This: They should draw a clear and sharp line of distinction between men and principles. If any system of doctrine is true, the bad conduct of professed adherents can not make it false. If any system of doctrine or religion is false, the good conduct of its disciples can not make it true. We should condemn that which is false and evil, wherever we find it, but at the same time, be careful to not overlook the good. There is now, as there always has been, more or less, a crying demand for this important line of distinction to be made. Whoever fails to make it, sincerely and intelligently, is in danger. No one can afford to reject the claim that God called David and Solomon to be his servants; that he spake to them and through them to the people, notwithstanding the fact, that, at times, they were guilty of grievous wrongs. On the other hand, no one can afford to condone the wrongs they did because God had called them to high positions and had committed to them his truth and his work. Why will not men learn to be wise, as well as good, and to be governed strictly and solely by principle?

The above observations lead us to consider a few important propositions, the mere statement of which should be sufficient to command them to the judgment of the reader.

Proposition 1. Every organization among men, whether social, political, or religious, has the inherent right to represent its own system of faith or doctrine, through its own chosen representatives and standard publications. By this self-representation, and no other, is every organization bound, histories and encyclopedias to the contrary notwithstanding.

Is it just to go to the Roman Catholic Church to find out what the Lutheran Church believes? Is it just to go to the Lutheran Church to find out what the Catholics believe? Here, in the United States of America, should we go to the Democratic Party to find out what the Republicans believe, and to the Republican Party to find out what the Democrats believe? Do we go to the Jews when we wish to find out the faith and doctrine of the primitive Christian church? No man makes a valid argument against the early Christian church, till he is able to show that the doctrine taught by Jesus Christ and his apostles is false.

The idea of telling us what we believe, and then compelling us to defend it whether it is correct or incorrect, carries with it its own refutation. No intelligent representative of any system of faith or doctrine, should be caught in this contemptible trap.

Proposition 2. If we desire to judge the fruits of any system of faith by the conduct of its professed adherents, we can only do it by the conduct of those who are living in obedience to the principles of their profession. Otherwise, our conclusions will always be erroneous. The abuse of anything is no argument against the thing itself. Because a man and his wife quarrel and sue for divorce, it does not prove that when the conditions of true marriage are properly observed, they will fail to produce bliss. When a man has to leave and violate the principles of his faith in order to do wrong, it is very poor evidence against his faith, but good evidence against him. On this ground alone can the faith of the primitive Christian church be defended. On this ground alone, can any church, Catholic or Protestant, defend itself. If any church, or any other organization for that matter, is to be judged by the conduct of its worst members, the imperfections and moral lapses of its best, and by what its opponents and enemies say of it, what will be the verdict? But this dangerous and unnecessary mistake has its most striking exemplification when the faith or doctrine announced is very unpopular. Why not "have faith in God," which also necessitates confidence in the great system of truth revealed by him to man? It is "the gospel of Christ" which is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth" (Mark 11: 22; Romans 1: 16).

THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS—HER FAITH AND DOCTRINE.

This church was organized on April 6, 1830, a short time after the translation and publication of the Book of Mormon. At this time the Bible and Book of Mormon were considered to be the sacred and authoritative standards in all matters of faith, doctrine and practice.

It is quite true that the Latter Day Saints believed then, as they do now, in the doctrine of present or continued revelation. But they accepted this doctrine strictly from a Bible point of view, and believed then, as they do now, that they were not justified in accepting anything which was found to be in conflict with the teachings of the Bible. In announcing their belief in this unpopular doctrine, they placed themselves in harmony with the teachings of the Bible, historical and doctrinal, on a great cardinal principle of faith, and no amount of special pleading can destroy this fact.

In 1835, at Kirtland, Ohio, there was added to these two books the Doctrine and Covenants, which is a collection of revelations which had been given to the church prior and subsequent to 1830. These three books have always been the sacred standards of evidence with all true Latter Day Saints. They have been made so binding that those who depart from them in teaching and practice, but still claim to be Latter Day Saints, seldom dare to repudiate their authority in theory.

It is also true that, in June, 1830, Joseph Smith, the young seer, commenced the translation or revision of the Bible. This work was completed on July 2, 1833, and is known as the Inspired Translation. By this work we are also bound, as it has been subsequently indorsed by the church.

What our attitude has been, and is now, toward the Bible, should be better and more fully known. As early as February, 1831, the Bible (King James' Translation) received divine indorsement, and at the same time, and by the same authority, the Inspired Translation received prophetic and divine approval. (See Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5, 7, 15, 16.) Do you wonder how this can be? The explanation is easy. Both translations teach the same doctrine. It matters not which one we use we teach precisely the same doctrine. But, as we believe, in the new or Inspired Translation, we have a better (hence more correct) rendering of many historical and doctrinal passages than in King James' Version. And this better rendering removes some contradictions, a number of (so-called) infidel objections, and in some parts of the history and doctrine of the Old Testament, raises the moral tone and standard, in the changed wording, very materially. All this can be easily proven at any proper time. Hence, so far as the Inspired Translation of the Bible is concerned, it simply serves to emphasize and make more plain the high standard revealed in the gospel, as expressed in the common version of the Bible.

In 1835, at Kirtland, Ohio, the church met in General Assembly and formally indorsed the book of Doctrine and Covenants, with the understanding that they were already bound by and committed to the teachings of the Bible and Book of Mormon. By the authority and teachings of these three books, then, we must stand or fall. For all that results from an intelligent and sincere belief in and practice of the principles of our faith, as set forth therein, we are responsible; but for all that is taught and practiced in opposition thereto, whether by design or in ignorance, we are not responsible. Only the guilty ones who so teach and so practice, are culpable and responsible. No infidel writer or speaker ever made a point against the Christian religion by simply citing the great wrongs which have been done by professed Christians, and in the name of the Christian church. Let him show, if he can, that the wrong done was the result of an intelligent and sincere belief in and practice of the teachings of Jesus Christ and the apostles. Right here he will fail. But if the foolish and criminal conduct of professed Christians is a valid argument, then the whole Christian system can be overthrown in a few moments of time. It is a grave reflection on the intelligence or sincerity (one or both) of any man who will try to destroy any system of faith in this way, and comes with especially bad grace from those who profess to be ministers of the gospel. Can the wrong acts of men make the truth of God invalid and void? Never.

WHAT THE BOOKS TEACH.

The reader will please not forget that the Bible is the leading text-book of authority with all true Latter Day Saints. We unhesitatingly affirm that one can not intelligently and sincerely accept the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants for what they purport to be, without confirming and increasing his faith and confidence in the Bible. This is due, first, to the positive and strong indorsement of the Bible by these books; and, second, to the close, and proper connection existing between the sentiment set forth in these books and the history, teachings, and prophecies of the Bible.

The God and Christ of the Bible, in whom we must believe to be saved, are the same God and Christ presented to us in the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants, and their true character and what we are required to believe and do, are made still more plain. The justice, love, impartiality, power, and unchangeableness of God are clearly and forcefully presented. The atonement of Jesus Christ, together with his merits as our only Savior and Redeemer, are kept constantly before us. No promise of eternal salvation, or the enjoyment of God's promised blessings in this world is guaranteed unto us, except we exercise true faith in the true God and in Jesus Christ, and become obedient to the divine law, known as the gospel.

The system of ethics enjoined is of the highest and best known to man. Some of our opponents, though bitter and persistent (at least some of them), have felt compelled to concede the high standard of morals enjoined in the Book of Mormon.

The Book of Mormon is not of itself immoral. There is no polygamy in it. On the contrary it is expressly prohibited. The Mormons have been slandered and traduced, unjustly and without warrant, for an immoral Bible. Whatever their practices may be under the doctrine of a "new revelation," however, which springs directly from their intervention of the Book of Mormon itself, there is nothing immoral in the book.—"The origin of the Book of Mormon," by Perry Benjamin Pierce, in American Anthropologist for October, 1899, page 694.

As to the ethical status of this book [the Book of Mormon], I think no unfavorable comment can reasonably be made. Its moral precepts are unquestionably good. They are all that its friends claim for it, and, indeed, superior in some respects to those of the Bible.—D. H. Bays in his resignation paper, dated at Kalamazoo, Michigan, April 1, 1892.

Elder Bays in the closing years of his life was one of the most bitter and persistent opposers of our faith.

Space will only permit us to give a few quotations from the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, but let it be remembered that the Book of Mormon has been before the world since 1830, and the Doctrine and Covenants since 1835; that both books are on sale at the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and may be had at any time and anywhere, by anybody. Our statements may all be tested.

The Book of Mormon teaches us that in the days of Jacob, the son of Lehi and brother of Nephi, (about 545 B. C.,) the people of Nephi, located on this continent (the prehistoric people of America), began to depart from God by going into iniquity. Jacob was their leading minister and teacher. He wrote one of the books of the Book of Mormon, called the book of Jacob. He says:

And now it came to pass that the people of Nephi, under the reign of the second king [Nephi was the first king], began to grow hard in their hearts, and indulge themselves somewhat in wicked practices, such as like unto David of old, desiring many wives and concubines, and also Solomon, his son: yea, and they also began to search much gold and silver, and began to be lifted up somewhat in pride; wherefore, I, Jacob, gave unto them these words as I taught them in the temple, having firstly obtained mine errand from the Lord.—Jacob 1: 4, Book of Mormon.

Then Jacob proceeds to preach to them one of those practical gospel sermons which have characterized the labors of the ministers of Jesus Christ in different ages of the world. Chapter 2: 3 reads as follows:

Wherefore, I must tell you the truth, according to the plainness of the word of God. For behold, as I inquired of the Lord, thus came the word unto me, saying, Jacob, get thou up into the temple on the morrow, and declare the word which I shall give thee, unto this people.

He then proceeds to condemn pride in strong terms, as it had manifested itself in the wearing of costly apparel, the greed for gold, and the establishment of caste in their midst. In paragraph 6, he mentions another sin of which they were guilty, and very properly designates it a "grosser crime."

And now my brethren, I have spoken unto you concerning pride; and those of you who have afflicted your neighbor, and persecuted him, because you were proud in your hearts, of the things which God hath given you, what say ye of it? Do ye not suppose that such things are abominable unto him, who created all flesh? And the one being is as precious in his sight as the other. And all flesh is of the dust; and for the self same end hath he created them, that they should keep his commandments, and glorify him for ever. And now I make an end of speaking unto you concerning this pride. And were it not that I must speak unto you concerning a grosser crime, my heart would rejoice exceedingly, because of you. But the word of God burthens me because of your grosser crimes. For behold, thus saith the Lord, This people begin to wax in iniquity; they understand not the scriptures: for they seek to excuse themselves in committing whoredoms, because of the things which were written concerning David, and Solomon his son. Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord, wherefore, thus saith the Lord, I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem, by the power of mine arm, that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph. Wherefore, I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken unto the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women. And whoredoms are an abomination before me: thus saith the Lord of hosts.

Paragraph 8 is addressed to the ones who were not guilty, but who were sorely oppressed by the rich, the influential, and the corrupt, who constituted the more popular class. Notice how peculiarly suitable are the injunctions and promises of this paragraph:

But behold, I, Jacob, would speak unto you that are pure in heart. Look unto God with firmness of mind, and pray unto him with exceeding faith, and he will console you in your afflictions, and he will plead your cause, and send down justice upon those who seek your destruction.

In paragraph 9, Jacob again refers to the guilty ones, and leaves the matter in such good shape that it is simply impossible for anyone who intelligently and sincerely believes in the Book of Mormon, to accept the doctrine of Polygamy as divine. Here is what he says:

Behold, the Lamanites, your brethren, whom ye hate, because of their filthiness and the cursings which hath come upon their skins, are more righteous than you; for they have not forgotten the commandments of the Lord, which was given unto our fathers, that they should have, save it were one wife: and concubines they should have none; and there should not be whoredoms committed among them. And now this commandment they observe to keep; wherefore because of this observance in keeping this commandment, the Lord God will not destroy them, but will be merciful unto them; and one day they shall become a blessed people. Behold, their husbands love their wives, and their wives love their husbands, and their husbands and their wives love their children; and their unbelief and their hatred towards you, is because of the iniquity of their fathers; wherefore, how much better are you than they, in the sight of your great creator?

This shows, among other things, that the commandment prohibiting polygamy and concubinage had been delivered unto their fathers; hence it serves to expose the absurd and indefensible interpretation which has been placed on a statement found in paragraph 6, by the Salt Lake Mormons and ministers of other churches, to the effect that the statement leaves a loophole for the introduction of polygamy. The statement reads as follows: "For if I will, saith the Lord of Hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people: otherwise they shall hearken unto these things."

The commandment had already been given, and for the specific purpose of raising up a pure seed unto God. The Book of Mormon tells us that God speaks unto one nation like unto another, and thus proves unto them that he is the same unchangeable God. There are several other places where the Book of Mormon speaks of polygamy, historically, and condemns it; but there is no passage in the book which enjoins or permits its practice. (See Mosiah 7:1; Ether 4:5.)

We have been thus particular on this point, because polygamy and its kindred evils have been charged against us.

We quote again from another leading writer of the book.

For behold, my beloved brethren, I say unto you, that the Lord God worketh not in darkness. He doeth not anything save it be for the benefit of the world; for he loveth the world, even that he layeth down his own life, that he may draw all men unto him. Wherefore, he commandeth none that they shall not partake of his salvation. Behold, doth he cry unto any, saying, Depart from me? Behold, I say unto you, Nay; but he saith, Come unto me all ye ends of the earth, buy milk and honey, without money and without price. Behold, hath he commanded any that they should depart out of the synagogues, or out of the houses of worship? Behold, I say unto you, Nay. Hath he commanded any that they should not partake of his salvation? Behold, I say unto you, Nay; but he hath given it free for all men; and he hath commanded his people that they should persuade all men to repentance. Behold, hath the Lord commanded any that they should not partake of his goodness? Behold, I say unto you, Nay; but all men are privileged the one like unto the other, and none are forbidden. He commandeth that there shall be no priestcrafts; for, behold, priestcrafts are that men preach and set themselves up for a light unto the world, that they may get gain, and praise of the world; but they seek not the welfare of Zion. Behold, the Lord hath forbidden this thing; wherefore, the Lord God hath given a commandment, that all men should have charity, which charity is love, and except they should have charity, they were nothing; wherefore, if they should have charity, they would not suffer the laborer in Zion to perish. But the laborer in Zion, shall labor for Zion; for if they labor for money, they shall perish.—2 Nephi 11:15.

Now these priests who did go forth among the people, did preach against all lying, and deceivings, and envyings, and strifes, and malice, and revilings, and stealing, robbing, murdering, plundering, committing adultery, and all manner of lasciviousness, crying that these things ought not so to be; holding forth things which must shortly come; yea, holding forth the coming of the Son of God, his suffering and death, and also the resurrection of the dead.—Alma 11:8.

The Book of Mormon, like the Bible, is a book of history, doctrine and prophecy. It claims to have been given to the prehistoric people of America, who came here at different times, from the tower of Babel and the land of Jerusalem. Hence, if true, it is another witness for God, Christ, and the gospel.

That the book is true, is quite evident. First, American archaeology, in its best and leading proofs, published since the publication of the Book of Mormon, sustains it.

Second, it agrees with the Bible in history and doctrine. That is, when touching on the history given in the Bible, they are in harmony with each other, and in its additional history there is no conflict. The doctrinal teaching, concerning God and Christ and the gospel, (which includes the duty of man to his God and his fellow-men,) is in complete harmony with the teachings of Christ and his apostles, as set forth in the New Testament.

Third, prophetic evidences. There are many plain and significant predictions in the Book of Mormon. Some of these were to be fulfilled in connection with and subsequent to the coming forth of the book. These, of course, can be tested. Numbers of them have been and are being fulfilled. None have failed.

Candor requires us to state in this connection, that the Book of Mormon is not so plain or complete on some topics as the Bible; but it is more complete and plain on others. It should be remembered, however, that the people whose history is given in the Book of Mormon, had the five books of Moses and some of the leading prophets, also their own inspired prophets and apostles.

As we have already seen, the Book of Doctrine and Covenants was accepted by the church in General Assembly, at Kirtland, Ohio, in 1835. Let us take a glance at its teachings.

As early as November, 1831, an effort was made to publish the revelations and commandments which had been given to the church and the world. At this date, the Lord gave a preface to the prospective book, and while it has its direct application to the revelations which had been given up to that date, it also properly applies to those revelations which have been added and accepted by the church. This preface indicates the character of the book, in its doctrinal and prophetic statements. It stands as section 1.

Strong and general objection has been urged against a statement found in paragraph 5. Referring to the restored church, the Lord is represented as saying, "The only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth, with which I, the Lord, am well pleased," etc. When the statement is quoted in full, we are compelled to believe it to be consistent, whether or not we believe it to be true. Here it is:

And after having received the record of the Nephites [the Book of Mormon], yea, even my servant Joseph Smith, jr., might have power to translate, through the mercy of God, by the power of God, the Book of Mormon; and also those to whom these commandments were given might have power to lay the foundation of this church, and to bring it forth out of obscurity, and out of darkness, the only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth, with which I the Lord am well pleased, speaking unto the church collectively and not individually; for I the Lord can not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance; nevertheless, he that repents and does the commandments of the Lord shall be forgiven; and he that repents not, from him shall be taken even the light which he has received; for my Spirit shall not always strive with man, saith the Lord of Hosts.

In paragraphs 3, 4, we are informed that certain things are coming upon the earth, and because of these conditions which were to obtain, the Lord had spoken from heaven to Joseph Smith and others:

Wherefore I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, jr., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments, and also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world; and all this that it might be fulfilled, which was written by the prophets; the weak things of the world shall come forth and shall break down the mighty and strong ones, that man should not counsel his fellow-man, neither trust in the arm of flesh, but that every man might speak in the name of God the Lord, even the Savior of the world; that faith also might increase in the earth; that mine everlasting covenant might be established; that the fullness of my gospel might be proclaimed by the weak and the simple, unto the ends of the world, and before kings and rulers.—Paragraph 4.

From the above quotations it is plain that "the only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth, with which I, the Lord, am well pleased," was the restored church with the "everlasting covenant" established, and the fullness of the gospel proclaimed. It was the church referred to in Doctrine and Covenants 17:1, which was "established agreeably to the laws of our country, by the will and commandments of God in the fourth month, and on the sixth day of the month which is called April." And so far as the indorsement referred to the personnel of the church, it only applied to those who were avoiding sin and making commendable efforts to live in complete harmony with the divine order of the gospel. In other words the church referred to is the one spoken of by Paul:

Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular. . . . But now are they many members, yet but one body. . . . For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit.—1 Corinthians 12:27, 20, 13.

If, then, the New Testament teaches us that there is but one true church, in the same sense that there is but one true God, and one Lord, one gospel, and one Spirit (Ephesians 4:4), is it not consistent for the Lord to say that he is not "well pleased" with any other? What else could we expect him to say?

Moreover, if the church was organized and established according to the will of God in fulfillment of plain Bible predictions, the one true gospel was and is preached, by its ministry, and the one Spirit was and is enjoyed by its membership, then the objectionable statement is not only consistent but true.

If the church referred to above is not the church of God in fact, and is not in harmony with the teachings of the New Testament, in doctrine and organization, let these claims be exposed by our opponents. Up to this time every effort in this direction has been a failure, and our opponents are becoming extremely shy about debating any proposition which involves these claims, and some of them persistently refuse to do so!

We will have room for only one more quotation before proceeding to examine other statements of the book.

Hearken, O ye people of my church, saith the voice of him who dwells on high, and whose eyes are upon all men; yea, verily I say, Hearken ye people from afar, and ye that are upon the islands of the sea, listen together; for verily the voice of the Lord is unto all men, and there is none to escape, and there is no eye that shall not see, neither ear that shall not hear, neither heart that shall not be penetrated; and the rebellious shall be pierced with much sorrow, for their iniquities shall be spoken upon the house tops, and their secret acts shall be revealed; and the voice of warning shall be unto all people, by the mouths of my disciples, whom I have chosen in these last days, and they shall go forth and none shall stay them, for I the Lord hath commanded them.—Doctrine and Covenants 1:1.

Thus we see that the God who, we claim, restored the gospel to the earth in these last days, acts like the God of former days, thus proving that he is immutable in his character. He chooses his own instruments through which to accomplish his own work, and then provides that the saving message of his truth shall be offered to all men. Every eye shall see, every ear shall hear, every heart shall be penetrated; and then, as one of the results, "the rebellious shall be pierced with much sorrow, for their iniquities shall be spoken upon the house tops, and their secret acts shall be revealed."

The greatest of all rebels, in a gospel sense, are those who have been enlightened by the gospel, who have been made citizens of the kingdom of God, and afterwards deny the truth which made them free, directly or indirectly, and thus pass into that awful darkness of which Jesus spake when he said, "How great is that darkness."—Matthew 6:23.

When Brigham Young attempted to fasten polygamy to the faith and doctrine of the Latter Day Saints, at Salt Lake City, Utah, in August, 1852, eight years after the death of Joseph Smith, he was clearly guilty of introducing "damnable heresy" (2 Peter 2:1-3), and thereby placing himself and all others who knowingly joined him in the plot, in rebellion against God and his truth. This doctrine is neither enjoined nor permitted in the faith and doctrine of the church. Whatever Joseph Smith may or may not have done in the closing years of his life, at Nauvoo, one thing is clear, namely, that this diabolical attempt was but the announcement of a false claim, founded upon a false revelation.

We have given enough to show that, so far as this preface is concerned, the teaching is all in harmony with the gospel of the New Testament. All sin is condemned; the whole gospel order, as taught by Jesus and his apostles, is enjoined; clear and important predictions are made, which have been receiving a signal fulfillment ever since 1831. The one point which is perhaps more prominent and general than any other, is that the entire document, by paragraphs and as a whole, is found to be in complete harmony with the claim of a restored gospel!

It was perfectly consistent with the claim of restoration that the Lord should reveal, at an early day, the standard for ministerial qualification, and for all others who should assist in the building up of the restored church. Here it is:

Now, behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men, therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind, and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day; therefore, if ye have desires to serve God, ye are called to the work, for, behold, the field is white already to harvest, and lo, he that thrusteth in his sickle with his might, the same layeth up in store that he perish not, but bringeth salvation to his soul; and faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work.

Remember, faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence. Ask and ye shall receive, knock and it shall be opened unto you. Amen.—Revelation to Joseph Smith, sr., given February, 1829, Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1, 2.

The above is given in full that the reader may have the benefit of the connections. In section 10, given in May, 1829, we learn of the calling of Hyrum Smith to the ministry. He is informed that "whosoever will thrust in his sickle and reap, the same is called of God; therefore, if you will ask of me, you shall receive, if you will knock, it shall be opened unto you" (paragraph 2). In paragraph 8, he is instructed as follows:

Behold, I command you, that you need not suppose that you are called to preach until you are called: wait a little longer, until you shall have my word, my rock, my church, and my gospel, that you may know of a surety my doctrine; and then, behold, according to your desires, yea, even according to your faith, shall it be done unto you.

We close this reference with the important instruction contained in paragraph 6:

And now, verily, verily I say unto thee, Put your trust in that Spirit which leadeth to do good; yea, to do justly, to walk humbly, to judge righteously, and this is my Spirit. (The italics are mine.)

We close on this important point with the instruction given to Joseph Knight, sr., May, 1829, quoting the last three paragraphs:

Now, as you have asked, behold, I say unto you, Keep my commandments, and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion. Behold, I speak unto you, and also to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish this work; and no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, have faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be entrusted to his care.—Doctrine and Covenants 11: 3, 4.

The quotations made, together with other statements found in the revelations from which they have come, set forth these leading and essential qualifications for the ministry:

First, the candidates must have a pure desire to serve God, that is, to thrust in their sickles and reap, or to bring forth and establish Zion.

Second, they must receive a divine call to this work.

Third, nothing less than true faith, hope, charity (using this term as it is generally understood), knowledge, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, temperance, and love, would qualify them for their work. They were required also to take the Holy Spirit for their guide—that Spirit which leads "to do good, yea, to do justly, to walk humbly, to judge righteously." This is declared to be God's Spirit.

These principles, or Christian virtues, are the ones which have moved the world for good, they have transformed the human character into the Christlike, and without which, no man can see God. God would have his ministers believe and obey the truth, that their work for the salvation of others may be effectual.

It is sometimes claimed that Latter Day Saints are too narrow in their faith and practice. Their faith as presented to us in the sacred books of the church, is not narrow in the true sense. It is only narrow in the sense of excluding all error and wrong. Better have a bridge wide enough for all to pass over in safety, and every plank sound, than to have it one fourth or one third larger, and every other plank rotten.

Gospel of Christ.

Oh how sweet is the gospel to those who believe,
And the principles of Jesus in faith receive;
And rely on the promises contained in God's word;
And pray to him often in the name of the Lord.

If all the commandments we faithfully keep,
You shall find me, says Jesus, if you faithfully seek.
Then strengthen us, dear Father, that we may all stand
Faithful to thee and work hand in hand.

As the gospel requires may we all impart,
And worship together with hand and heart;
May malice and anger for evermore cease;
We shall then have God's favor and enjoy perfect peace.

THE GREAT MOTHER AS AN EDUCATOR; OR, THE CHILD IN NATURE'S WORKSHOP.

Since all thoughtful people recognize the great influence of education and environment upon the shaping of the future life of the child, making him a blessing or a curse to self and society, it seems almost incredible that generation after generation should pass and so little be done on the part of parents and teachers to awaken, stimulate and cultivate the deeper springs of being and to replace the feverish, abnormal, artificial, and demoralizing influences of modern urban life, that appeal to the young on every hand, with food for the mind that would appeal to the eager and alert imagination in a wholesome and normal way,—feed it in a manner that must inevitably strengthen and bring out all that is finest and best in the young life. This can be done in many ways, one of the most helpful being the bringing of the child into intimate rapport with nature. The marvelous transformation scenes here ever being presented are unmatched in man-made imitations.

Nature is a true teacher to the normal mind. In her we find at once simplicity and profundity, beauty and sanity. Emerson, who probably more keenly appreciated the potent influence of nature in nourishing the imagination and feeding the soul than any other nineteenth-century philosopher, speaks beautifully of the harvest to be gleaned from the field, very different from that garnered by the farmer; and yet to the soul of the poet it was a source, of food and delight. And Lord Byron voiced what thousands of others have felt when under the spell of the witching influence of nature, in these well-known lines:

"There is a pleasure in the pathless woods;
There is a rapture on the lonely shore;
There is society where none intrudes,
By the deep Sea, and music in its roar:
I love not man the less, but nature more,
From these our interviews, in which I steal
To mingle with the Universe, and feel
What I can ne'er express, yet can not all conceal."

And Longfellow, in one of the sweetest little personal poetic gems in American literature, written to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the birth of one of his dearest friends, the scientist, Louis Agassiz, most happily pictured nature as the teacher and guide par excellence, in the following lines:

"And Nature, the old nurse, took
The child upon her knee,
Saying, 'Here is a story-book
Thy Father hath written for thee.

"Come wander with me,' she said,
'Into regions yet untrod;
And read what is still unread
In the manuscripts of God.'

"And he wandered away and away,
With Nature, the dear old nurse,
Who sang to him night and day
The Rhymes of the Universe.

"And whenever the way seemed long,
Or his heart began to fail,
She would sing a more wonderful song
Or tell a more marvelous tale."

Parents and all who have the priceless treasure of childhood entrusted to their care should make it a glorious labor of love to drive out the false, the artificial and the morally enervating influences that invade the child-mind, by flooding its imagination with the light, the beauty and the wonder of nature.

If one lives near the ocean, short excursions should be taken at various intervals between spring and autumn. A little of the time which parents are wont to spend in more selfish recreations—a few days from fashionable resorts or shooting excursions, a few afternoons from favorite pastimes—will afford the opportunity to bring the plastic mind of the child under the magic influence of nature in her multitudinous and ever-varying moods.

All that is needed is a little less self-absorption and thoughtlessness and a keener appreciation of the duty and responsibility imposed by the Infinite upon his children, and the way will appear. During these little journeys to some of the workshops of nature, the imagination of the child should be enlisted or stimulated at every point.

Take the sea for example. Let not the day's outing be listlessly spent, but on the other hand, do not allow the child to imagine you are going to play teacher. We would suggest that before anything is said to the child, the parent should enjoy the wonder and mystery of the great deep for a few moments, until he or she comes under the exalting and intoxicating spell of the ocean, and then out of a mind touched by the mystery, the glory and the majesty of nature, call the attention of the child to the wonder of it all. Tell him of the immensity of the sea. Explain how, far away, its waters wash the shores of many lands; some fringed with great forests; some citadels with mighty rocks, while here and there are cities and villages; that many are the peoples to whom the sea sings her ceaseless lullaby, some as white as he, others black or brown. Tell him that in the lands of the black man and the brown are the homes of the lion and the tiger, the spotted leopard and the elephant; they live in jungles and forests. Sometimes the waves of the sea wash great desert lands across which move caravans of camels and dromedaries and where grows the date-palm. Tell him of India and the Spice Islands; of the wonders of the frozen Northland, with its continents and its long nights made weirdly beautiful by the Northern Lights.

You will now have filled his mind with interest and wonder, and it will never be satisfied until it has gained more knowledge. You will have thrown a fascinating spell over geography that will invest it with the charm of romance and story when he comes to study it.

Then turn to the poetic aspect; the crooning of the sea, nature's mighty lullaby or cradle-song. Explain to him how at dawn and evening often the mirror-like surface of the ocean reflects the splendor of the sky, taking on the multitudinous tints, until it is a vast sheet of glory, sometimes resembling a sea of molten fire. But when night comes, all is changed. The moon and stars give strange beauty to the vast expanse, but with the night ever comes the sense of mystery, and a minor note seems to be sounded, not present in the day. And there are times when night settles over the ocean with no stars or moon to illumine its vast expanse; when the lullaby the crooning and the moaning are lost in the hoarse, wild, furious roarings that keep accompaniment to the thunder in the skies. Tell him how at such times the sea becomes very terrible. Describe its awe-inspiring majesty, and tell him something of the tragedies accompanying ocean storms.

Explain the coming and going of the tides—"Eternal outgo and recall"; show him how the salt water keeps all things fresh and sweet.

Tell him of the myriad living things found in the ocean. Show him the sea-shells with their many shapes and delicate tints, and reveal to him something of the vegetation of the deep, so rich in color, so varied in shape, and often so delicate and lace-like in tracery.

Point out the curious pebbles and rocks, which will attract his attention, and then awaken his interest in the strata of the earth, and while he little suspects it, you will have given him a preparatory lesson in geology, and what is more, you will have thrown over the study a poetic or idealistic interest that perhaps will ever linger in his mind.

These are only a few brief hints. Other things will occur to the parent, as, for instance, a description of the great ships that ply the sea; the wonderful voyages of the past; the sailing of Columbus and the discovery of the New World. And thus in many ways the day can be filled with such interest and charm that it will be to the vivid imagination of the young mind a veritable visit into fairyland; and what is more, its memory will remain an oasis, fair in retrospect as an oriental garden of roses.

Furthermore and of still greater importance, in all his after life never will he see the ocean with indifferent interest or without remembering with delight his childhood hours spent with the loved parent who may perchance long since have passed from view.

In the same ways little journeys should be taken into the country, where the mystery and miracle of nature, if less majestic, is none the less marvelous. The magic transformation of the seed into the beautiful plant, clothed in emerald and robed in the beauty of bloom, will afford delight while awakening a healthy speculative interest in something that, being invested with the element of mystery which appeals so irresistibly to the young imagination, will provoke thought and develop the faculties of reason and observation.

During these excursions the child's attention should be called to the variety and beauty of leaf and flower; the different kinds of trees in the forest, and their value and peculiarities should be dwelt upon; and the bird and other animal life will also afford sources of pleasure and information. In so far as possible lift the veil and let him see the great Artist-Artisan in the wonderful workshop of Creation, and teach him to enjoy the many voices and songs of nature.

If it is possible to take the little one to the mountains, new revelations and wonders will await him. But whether it be at the seaside, in the lowlands of the country, or amid the solemn sentinels of time that spire-like rise heavenward, in every instance the youthful imagination will be brought en rapport with nature. Only pure, elevating and wholesome ideals, images and lessons will have been impressed on the brain, and the child so instructed in early life is thrice blessed. All after years will be rich in memories of the beautiful hours when the panorama of nature was first unfolded and her wonders explained.

To such a one nature will ever appeal with irresistible power; her spell will haunt him throughout life. It matters not when or where he may seek her, he will always find that she has a banquet spread for his imagination and a message for his brain, and he will also find that the contemplation of her phenomena will stimulate profound musing on the deeper things of life.

Thus the splendor of autumn will show him that nature is most glorious in the hour of her departure. He will note that when the mission of the flower, plant and tree has been for the time being fulfilled, and the hour of exit has arrived, nature robes herself in the regal glory of a victor and departs mantled in crimson and russet, in scarlet and gold.

Even the humble and modest little plants in the meadows are attended in their departure by the waving plumes of the purple asters and the golden-rod; while the grass-carpeted slopes, still brave in emerald, are sprinkled with gold by the fall dandelions, and the buttercups as well fleck the same grass with sunlight.

Here is no sign of sadness, no craven slinking away. No garments of black or sable plumes companion the fallen leaves; but clad in a wealth of colors that baffle the painter's art, they fall as men should fall, glory-crowned victors, garmented in beauty and without a suggestion of sadness or gloom.

And so every year, season, day and passing hour will bring new wealth to the imagination, new lessons, suggestions and meanings to the mind, making of the one-time listless and unobserving child a man or woman who is at once a philosopher, an idealist and a lover.—B. O. Flower, in Arena.

Questions on June Reading.

What exercise for the imagination is here suggested? For what purpose? In what way does nature teach? In harmony with this nature teaching would it not be profitable to read concerning the life of this famous naturalist as a preparation for this culture of your children? (One mother used this poem by Longfellow as a nursery rhyme with her children.) What use can be made of these suggestions concerning the ocean by parents to whom the ocean is inaccessible? If accurately portrayed, with what interest may the ocean be invested even to children who have never seen it? In what ways may interest be awakened in the mystery and miracle of inland nature? What will this tend to develop? It may form an interesting game while walking or riding, to have the children tell the different kinds of trees or plants or grasses, making it a contest which shall recognize the most, the father or mother judging in differences. Even in winter the trees may be determined by their bark. Whom should the children be taught to recognize in the works of nature? What will opening the eyes of the child to the phenomena of nature accomplish for him in later life? What is the lesson in the gorgeous coloring of autumn?

NEW LONDON, CONNECTICUT, May 10, 1910.

Dear Brethren: I have been a constant subscriber to our valuable paper for about seventeen years and can testify to the spiritual growth of our periodicals, as we take Ensign, Hope, Autumn Leaves, and HERALD. I also have four volumes of Church History and a number of other church books which come in very handy in showing the elders of the Utah church which is really the true church. There are two elders of the Mormon church stopping in New London at present. They took a five-mile walk out to my place to see a Latter Day Saint. My wife met them and had a little talk with them. They said they would like to see me. (That was Friday, a little over two weeks ago.) So on Sunday I went with Brother Colin to see them and found them to be really fine men who, I believe, want all the truth. The next Sunday they walked out to our place and we put in six hours in conversing, mostly upon the scriptures quoted from Brother Clapp's article in Autumn Leaves, and from Church History, volume three; Emma Smith's testimony concerning the revelation on marriage, which Brigham Young said she destroyed. Also where Joseph Smith, jr., wrote to Henry Clay and to the historian in 1844, in which he stated that it is lawful for a man to have but one wife and for a woman to have but one husband, and they are not to part for any other cause than adultery or fornication. They said they had never heard our side of the question. We had a very good visit and were all blessed and strengthened in the true gospel and they received new light. They took volume three of Church History home with them. They intended to come out again last Sunday, but the stormy weather prevented them from coming. Their mission president was up to see them Saturday and they tried to have him stay over Sunday and come out to see me, but he had to go to Providence, Rhode Island. They expect him back in about four weeks and then they are intending to preach on the streets or rent a hall.

They don't seem to be informed upon the points of doctrine that separate us from them and I think they would accept of the true faith if they could see a copy of Journal of Discourses containing Brigham's speech concerning blood atonement and Adam-god, etc. I told them that they have either to confess Brigham Young to be a liar or claim that Emma Smith was a liar when she said that she did not destroy the revelation on polygamy that Brigham Young foisted upon them in 1852; and that Joseph Smith must have been a liar and hypocrite when he wrote in 1844 to Henry Clay and the historian wherein he said that the church believed that a man could have but one wife and a woman but one husband while either were alive except one was guilty of adultery, etc. I told them of Brother Clapp helping to cart the stone for the temple and then after a quantity had been hauled Brigham used it for an amusement hall or theater; also that the ditch to float stone for the temple was used for a mill race. They asked their president about it and he, a man of twenty-seven years, told them that there had been no such a ditch dug. Brother Clapp should see this letter. I wish he would write me a personal letter telling me about his experience with the Mormon church. Also if some brother has an original copy of Journal of Discourses and will mail the same to me, I will show it to them, for they have never seen it. I will be careful to return it soon. I showed them the place in Jeremiah where it speaks of the man whose heart departeth from the Lord and trusted in the arm of flesh and should make his habitation in a barren and a salt land. They took notes of these things and I have great hopes of doing them good. Would some brother who has been a member of the Utah church write a good, kind letter to one of them? It might do them good. Address, Mr. Hackett, care of Mrs. Pickett, Washington street, New London, Connecticut.

I feel thankful for this beautiful gospel and ask the prayers of all the Saints that I may be humble and faithful and of service to mankind in turning them to the truth. With love to all, I am your brother in Christ,

THOMAS W. WHIPPLE.

PAPETE, TAHITI, April 19, 1910.

Editors Herald: Another mission conference has come and gone in the South Sea Islands and we are alive to tell the tale. It was held in Manihi, the island upon which we have the largest branch in the mission, and where no other church is represented, with the exception of two or three Catholics.

We left Tahiti on the 11th of December with the intention of going to Amanu, to attend the dedication of their new chapel, but when we reached Niau, it was thought best for wife and me to stop there, and for Brethren May and Savage to go on to Amanu. We had packed all our supplies with no intention of separating, so that the two new missionaries had to open every box and sort the goods. They are good sailors, however, and were not long in getting all our things ashore. The vessel left the next day, and after thirty-one days from Tahiti, reached Amanu, seventeen days late for the dedication. When we learned that, we were very glad indeed that we had stopped in Niau.

Before the brethren left, the branch in Niau made us an offering of money and food; twenty dollars and thirty cents in money, two bags of flour, one bag of rice, one box of brown sugar (over sixty pounds), four dozen one-pound cans of beef, besides butter, milk, tomatoes, cabbage, etc.

We had just been there a week, when there was a wedding and feast. The bride and groom had been living together for years, and had a number of children, but through the insistent labors of the branch officers, they had finally consented to marry. At the feast they had five or six roasted pigs, an equal number of chickens, with other good things too numerous to mention, including the piece de resistance—poi.

The week following was Christmas, with its accompanying feast, when thirteen good sized pigs were slaughtered and baked in the native oven. Everyone on the island was invited to this feast, which was followed by another of like dimensions on New Year's Day.

One small boat had brought Saints from Kaukura to take part in the Christmas entertainment, so that we had a chance to make arrangements with the captain, Tepoaitu, to come for us at the end of January, which he did, and we left Niau on the 31st of the month, reaching Kaukura the same day, where we camped over night at the pass, arriving at the village where the natives were making copra the next day.

After they had made a new sail for and painted Putoa's boat, we went on to Apataki. After getting out of the pass at Kaukura, and while we were still in sight of land, we met a heavy squall from directly in front of us, so that we had to furl all sails and run before it back through the pass into Kaukura, where we camped two nights, and when we left again, it was to meet with adverse winds, so that we spent the whole day getting fifteen miles, arriving just at dark. There was no one at the village, all being at the other end of the island making copra. Tepoaitu owned a frame house there which was soon broken into and placed at our disposal. As neither of us eat anything while at sea in these small boats, we went to bed hungry that night, but next morning had a nice chicken stew for breakfast. We also had plenty of nice ripe papaws, which were indeed a luxury to us. We then had a nice smooth sail on the leeward side of the island to the camp where the Saints were awaiting us.

"While there we went after birds' eggs, an experience well worth remembering. When we landed at the place where the birds were, the noise of their screeching was deafening, and the sun was clouded with them. There must have been millions of them scattered for a half mile along the narrow strip of land where their eggs were deposited among the rocks with no signs of a nest. It was hard to keep from stepping on the eggs and the young birds, they being so nearly like the stones among which they lay. We could scarcely make ourselves heard above the noise of the mother birds, as they would dart about, their wings often brushing our hats. We soon had our baskets and boxes full of large speckled eggs. They have very thin shells and pink yolks, with a slight fishy taste, and are very good eating when made into an omelet or scrambled.

After we had been there three days, all the natives went across the lagoon to another part of the island which had just been opened for the making of copra, we staying near the pass waiting for a favorable wind to take us to Manihi, where the conference was to be held; but the wind was continuous from the north, so that we followed the Saints to the other part of the island and spent Sunday with them. Next day the wind was quite mild, although from in front of us, but I felt that it would change when we got out to sea, and sure enough it did, so that we were enabled to steer a straight course for Manihi. It was just dusk when we left the pass, and we were congratulating ourselves that we would be at our destination the next morning, but were doomed to disappointment, because the captain mistook Ahe, another island, for Manihi, and headed his boat for there. When he discovered his mistake, he went on clear around the island, so that we did not reach Manihi until after dark. We had fasted for a day and a night, so that we went to bed hungry again, but were refreshed with a water cocoanut. We were kindly cared for by Hotu, who is like a father to the white missionaries.

Everyone was working hard to get their large building finished and ready for the conference. It is indeed a fine building, about twenty-five by eighty-five feet, looking massive and durable, with its numerous pillars of the round trunk of the cocoanut tree, smoothed until they almost glistened, with a double wall about three and one half feet high, made of narrow strips of the straight roots of the pandanus tree, with lifts above that, that could be raised or lowered at will, and a roof of woven cocoanut branches. It was by far the nicest building of the kind I have seen in the islands.

Brethren May and Savage had not as yet reached Manihi, and we were somewhat concerned about them, yet hoping all the time that they would arrive in time.

After two weeks and over of anxious waiting, they came sailing in on a small boat from Takaroa. In the meanwhile, about thirty of the Saints had come from Niau, and soon after came a boat from Fakarava, and three others from Kaukura and Apataki, so that the large building was nearly filled with happy Saints, ready for the conference to begin.

I had been wondering as to what would come up for discussion, thinking that there would not be much business before the conference; but animated discussions were not lacking. The old threadbare subject of the elders who had been silenced because their children were living in adultery was brought up, and the discussion was red hot for two days. Some favored repealing the law passed at the conference in Anaa, in 1904, but the final outcome was that the law was left as it was originally.

On the next to the last day of conference, Turatahi, and three of the brethren from Rairoa came in on the boat that was to take us to Rairoa. They had also come from Tahiti the week before, and we had two months' mail to read between meetings. We were glad to know that on January 21, Brother Joseph was much better, and that God had heard the prayers of the Saints who had fasted on the day set apart for that purpose. We had heard through one of the Brighamite elders that he was quite sick, and that a fast day had been appointed. We only received the January and February mail, the boat having left Tahiti the day the Mariposa came in. We felt like kicking some one for not having waited a few hours, and bringing the last mail, but were very thankful to get what we did.

Turatahi also brought some business to be presented before the body. One item that caused considerable discussion, was a resolution that each branch send two families to live in Taronia one year, to be succeeded by two others the next year, and so on, the object being to enlarge our branch there. Another was, the subject of building a new chapel in Taronia, to cost between four and five thousand dollars of French money, and each member in the mission was assessed five dollars, the cash to be on hand before work is begun. A committee was also appointed to divide the land in Taronia between the different districts, when each branch is to build a house on their allotted portion.

On the 13th we left Manihi for Rairoa, where we now are. This is one of the richest islands in the mission, and we have been abundantly supplied with money and food, and we are able to buy things we need at Tahitian prices, with the exception of suitable shoes, which are not to be had at any price.

BAYARD, NEBRASKA, May 11, 1910.

Editors Herald: Not seeing anything from this locality for some time I will try to pen a few lines. We are not like those without hope, although we sometimes feel discouraged. We came here last December mainly for the purpose of being near a band of Saints. We find many noble souls here.

About the first of the year we organized a Latter Day Saint Sunday school, which is still in progress. We have some good workers, but we need a good leader. The Olive Branch here is in need of a good live president that can live among us. We need a good church building of our own. Several have stated their willingness to help substantially if one could be built.

We all rejoice at the reappointment of our missionaries. We hope to see a more determined effort on the part of the Saints here in the North Platte valley.

I for one am determined that nothing shall stand between me and the cause in which I have enlisted for life. My hope is to so live that the all wise Creator will be pleased with me, let men think as they wish. God will give if we ask. Always have I found him ready to bless when I ask of him with earnest heart and good purpose. Moreover, I have learned that if we live for his blessings they will come.

I believe we as Saints should realize that we are expected of the Father to convert by our living lives that become a Saint of God, by our earnest application of the gospel principles to our everyday life, the honest in heart with whom we come in contact. May God help us to do always our whole duty in the cause which has made us what we are.

Your brother,

BERT E. HART.

Editors Herald: In a letter in a recent HERALD we find these words: "Sunday Saints there are in plenty, they who praise the Lord; but where is there a man who loves his neighbor as himself?" Believing as we do in the all wise God, and knowing him to be a kind and loving Father, we do not think his commands to the children of men demand things which are impossible of attainment, therefore we believe the query above to be based on a rigid interpretation.

of the word love. Laying aside the love of sexes, Webster says love is strong attachment, devotion to another, affection, kind feeling, friendship, fondness, good will, to have strong liking for or intent interest in. Surely all men should have a strong liking for or interest in their neighbor, a feeling of kindness and friendship for them. Not only for their immediate neighbors but for all men, especially the unfortunate and needy.

What, then, is it to love our neighbor as ourself? If you see him in distress, relieve him; if he is sick, visit him and assist in caring for him. Let him feel that he has your sympathy and good wishes. If he is farming or in any other business and needs to borrow tools or needs other assistance, render that assistance. Surely if I loan my neighbor my tools or any other needed article and charge him nothing for their service, I am loving my neighbor as myself. Why? Because I love my money invested in these goods; I stand the wear and usage of them when I use them myself. Surely, when my neighbor uses them I am placing him on the same level as myself. If I discover stock breaking into my neighbor's grain, I stop and drive them out and notify both the owner of the stock and the grain, I have saved both men loss, one of grain and the other of stock. I have lost my time, preferring my neighbor above myself. Surely this is loving your neighbor as yourself.

This is written with feelings of kindness and love and it is accompanied with a prayer that all men may recognize the eternal fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man and understand the ground truth that no man liveth unto himself. He is a very small atom in the vast creations of God. He ought to be willing to recognize the existence of other atoms and that it takes all the atoms of God's creation to make the great and complete whole of his creations and then we will be in condition indeed and of a truth to love our neighbor as ourselves.

In bonds of love and good will,

HOPILOPILO, RAROIA, April 20, 1910.

Dear Herald: It has been some time since the Saints have heard from the island missionaries and believing that a great many will be pleased to hear from us concerning our long trip throughout the islands, I shall undertake to inform them in connection therewith.

We left Tahiti on the 11th of December, bound for the island of Amanu, at which place a new church was to be dedicated December 25. Upon reaching the island of Niau, it was decided between us that Brother Savage and myself should continue upon our journey to Amanu, while Brother and Sister Lake would visit several of the various islands of the eastern part of the Tuamotuan group between that time and the convening of conference upon the island of Manihi in the month of April.

In leaving Brother and Sister Lake upon the island of Niau, we again experienced such feelings as were resident within us when we left loved ones in the land of Zion upon entering into the missionary work. Nevertheless, we have realized that things are not always of a pleasant nature with the missionary, and we are often cheered and comforted in the thought that it is all for work of God.

After a very pleasant visit with the Niau Branch for three days we bade our brother and sister good-bye and boarded the ship bound for Amanu.

In our journey from Niau to the island of Amanu we stopped off at several islands on the way, it being a trading vessel upon which we were journeying.

We met with the Saints in Manihi, Taega, Tauere, Raroia, and Hao before reaching Amanu. We were kindly treated by all whom we met. Although our stays at the various islands were but short, meetings were held upon the most of them and offerings were given us to assist us upon our journey.

In Manihi, where we were privileged to spend one Sunday, a memorial service was held in honor of Bro. Joseph Burton. It was a very enjoyable meeting, many of the Saints speaking of the great work done by our brother who had departed. He was a man whose life shall not be forgotten among this people, because of his good works and great faith as a servant of God. Many testified of blessings received through administration and others spoke of his noble character.

From there the next stop of note was in the island of Raroia where we sheltered from a storm. We spent New Year's Day at this island, and the Sunday following we expounded the word of God to them as best we could in their tongue.

We here organized a Sunday school and were called upon to baptize four into the kingdom of God. We left this island feeling greatly encouraged with the work done in our short stop there. We did not arrive at the island of Amanu until the 11th of January, which was about two weeks after the dedication of their new chapel there.

We could not have been more cordially received than we were here at this island.

We were well cared for and treated by all as though we were a member of their own family. We were so pleased to find them so actively engaged in the service of the Lord, having built a very fine chapel, one that many of our branches in the large cities of America would be proud of. We are proud of it. It has a concrete floor, concrete steps, and is in a very fine location in their village.

We were in Amanu for about two months, during which time Brother Savage and myself conducted as well as we could, teaching services, in the morning and afternoon of each day.

During our stop there a memorial service was held in honor of Brother Burton, which was similar to the one in Manihi and to the same extent enjoyable. Many things of interest transpired, but I will not at this time burden your columns by mentioning all. In the early part of March we left the island of Amanu upon a trading boat, heading towards Manihi where we held our conference. On our way to Manihi we stopped in Takaroa about ten days, after which we went to Takapoto and from there to Manihi, where we met Brother and Sister Lake. Words can not express how pleased we were to meet them and others of the Saints who had gathered for the conference.

In our trip from Tahiti to Amanu we were one month upon the waters and in our trip from there back to Manihi we were about eleven days. The writer is pleased to say that since leaving California last August he has not experienced any sickness upon the waters. Brother Savage is also a good sailor. The Lord has blessed us in this respect.

After reaching Manihi it was not so very many days before the Sunday school and Religio conventions. Bro. Himnam Savage was selected as president of the Sunday school organization of the Islands Mission and the writer was elected president of the Religio society for this mission. Conference minutes will be sent to the papers by Brother Savage, who was appointed as the foreign secretary, so I will not in this letter burden your columns with the conference news. However, I will say that we are greatly encouraged with the outlook and the meetings were all enjoyed by us and we trust that brighter days are ahead of us and that through the help of God we may become instruments in his hands of elevating this people to the standard that shall please their Creator.

After conference we left the island of Manihi and arrived here last week. We have baptized twelve here in the past two weeks. We are contemplating staying for about four weeks, after which we shall visit two other islands, probably reaching Papeete, Tahiti, by the early part of June.

The Saints in Los Angeles will remember the promises of the Lord given to Brother Savage and the writer in their chapel through Bishop Bullard by prophecy. Brother Savage was told that if he was faithful his tongue would be loosed in this language. During conference, while considering a resolution upon adultery, Brother Savage arose and delivered a warning to the Saints concerning that evil. It was well understood by all present, and before the service had ended a native arose and stated that Brother Savage's tongue had evidently been loosed, that at other times he had not been able to understand him as he had at that special time. This was a literal fulfillment of the prophecy, for the reason that the native, who knew nothing of the prophecy, used such words in connection with Brother Savage's talk as were used in the promise given to him.

We trust that the blessings of the Lord shall continue with us and that the time shall speedily come when all of the islands of the sea shall hear the gospel.

There is a great work to be done by many of the young men of the church and it is necessary that they should prepare themselves for the same. The gospel is to be preached in all the world, and before this is done the writer looks for the calling of an army of young men who shall labor as servants of the Lord.

The admonition of the Lord given in the Doctrine and Covenants 87:5 could well afford to be heeded by all, wherein it says: "Study and learn, and become acquainted with all good books, and with languages, tongues, and people." It would be well for the young men to consider this admonition. Read also in the same section, paragraph 4, wherein it says that every man shall hear the fullness of the gospel in his own tongue, and in his own language, through those ordained unto this power.

The church was commanded in 1887 in section 119:8: "Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may." We should keep in mind these things, realizing as we do the great work that is yet to be done.

This writing leaves us in the best of health. Brother Lake looks as though the upper islands agree with him. His wife is in good health. They are always busily occupied in the service of the Master. They may leave us this year. Who will be sent here to take their place? May it be others as efficient as they.

May the blessings of the Lord be upon his people,
Your brother and Christ's servant,
J. CHARLES MAY.

BOONE, IOWA, May 13, 1910.

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

COOKES POINT, TEXAS, May 15, 1910.

Saints' Herald: Inasmuch as I have not seen anything from our part of Texas for a long time, I concluded to write you a short note. We are still in the faith; have a nice Sunday school, good attendance and interest all the time; also good interest and turnout at each service. The writer is the president of the branch and Sunday school superintendent. While we have lots of opposition internally and externally to contend with, yet we expect by the grace of God to come out victorious in the end. I am yours in the conflict for the faith once delivered to the Saints.

E. W. NUNLEY.

COLTON, CALIFORNIA.

With heartfelt gratitude to the brethren of the Order of Evangelists, and also of the Quorum of High Priests, and all the brethren and sisters of the conference who, through the secretaries of the above named order and quorum, have forwarded to me and my family expressions of their sorrow, as well as their confidence, love, and esteem for their departed brother, J. F. Burton, and their sympathy and condolence to us who mourn the loss of husband and father, we acknowledge their kindly remembrance of both the living and the dead. The tokens of remembrance were gratefully received and appreciated, and we herewith tender our thanks for the same, praying God to preserve, direct, and bless you all. In behalf of my family and self,
EMMA BURTON.

Dear Saints: I was over to Flint, Michigan, the 1st of April attending meetings on Sunday. I met many Saints I had previously known, and we had good cottage meetings there. The Saints at Huron are trying to buy a chapel. They talk of building a five thousand dollar church at Flint. They have a large sum subscribed and they own a lot to build it on.
As ever your brother in gospel bonds,
EUGENE.

NELSONVILLE, OHIO, May 9, 1910.

I enjoy reading the HERALD very much. It is one of the most welcome visitors that comes to the home. I rejoice to say that I have accepted the marvelous latter day gospel, although I have not received the manifestations of the Spirit that some say they have received. I have belonged to the church for four years and have no reason to doubt so far, and if I continue faithful I do not think I will have any reason to doubt. I feel and know that God has blessed me many times, but I have missed many blessings through my disobedience.

We have Sunday school and prayer services here Sunday at 2.30 p. m., also prayer meeting on Wednesday evening. We have no special place to hold meetings so have to hold them at private houses, but the Lord does all things well and I realize that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him, and he works all things together for our good.

Your sister,
ROSA CUSLER.

One Night in the Nebraska Penitentiary.

The above caption will inform you where I have been, but I hardly need assure you that it was by invitation and not by compulsion. Our brother, Elder James Huff, has gained some notoriety as chaplain of that institution, because of the unwise opposition of some of the ministers of some of the Protestant churches of Nebraska on the ground that he was a Mormon, which, no doubt, caused many not well informed to associate him with the people of Utah, but happily for him and the church, there were many intelligent, fair-minded people who knew differently, and when they had an opportunity to express their minds in the public press, the storm was soon allayed. Nearly thirty years of acquaintance with Brother Huff has brought a personal friendship that can not be broken for light and transient causes. Before he was a member of the church I preached the funeral sermon over the remains of his mother-in-law, and twenty years later he did a like service when my mother was laid to rest. When I accepted the invitation to visit the prison, I felt that I was going to the home of an old friend.

On May 7 he met me and together we went to the prison and I was his guest and the guest of the warden's family until Sunday afternoon. After enjoying a good, hearty meal with the warden and his family, he took me into the places of interest in the prison proper, and cell house, the chapel, and the library. I observed that a very kindly feeling existed between Brother Huff and the prisoners and officials of the institution, and that in his work he sought in a practical way to assist the former to a better realization of their duties as men to society and to God as a whole, and to God in particular, and cooperated with the officials in their work without making himself offensive by persisting in presenting his religious views in a dogmatic manner to the exclusion of the more practical.

From what I saw and heard the warden is a kind, yet firm and practical man. The maudlin sympathy that is so often bestowed on the wrongdoer, and many times to his injury, has no place in his heart. He manifested his good will toward them by showing his appreciation of all meritorious conduct in acts that bespoke confidence in them when they sought to improve their condition by faithfulness to duties assigned them. All his immediate family seemed to be imbued with the same practical ideas. What I saw and heard convinced me that the motive in their work is to lift up, to make them better, and not to humiliate them because of their unfortunate condition.

While observing the conditions that surrounded the three hundred and forty-five inmates in reference to their health, morals, and religion, my mind took a retrospective view, and I thought of Paul and Silas in the Roman prison, the stripes, the filth; I thought of the days of the Reformation, the dark dungeons, the rack, the thumbscrew, and the many other cruel tortures that only a depraved mind fed by ideas from the infernal regions could think of. I thought of the many dark and terrible deeds in the prisons all over Europe, such as would make the Devil blush if it were his nature to do so. I thought of the Quakers in our own country tied to the back of a wagon, and driven through the streets and lashed at every step. My mind took me to a dungeon in Missouri where some of our brethren lay on the cold stone floor, and handcuffed together, were offered human flesh to eat. The questions came to my mind, Is the world trying to get better? Has the angel's message brought any good to the world other than to our own people? Have the ideas of the young Prophet had any influence in molding the public mind? Did his stand against the slavery of the black man, the evil of intemperance, and cruelty in our prisons have any influence for good? Let the pessimist answer the above questions. I am an optimist. I remember the words of Holy Writ that the wicked should grow worse and worse. There are yet very many dark spots in this old world, but there are a great many more bright ones than at times in the past, and by faithfulness to the gospel message which we have received we can increase that number. My visit taught me that my belief that others are doing good in this world, and that I am a mere speck, a grain of sand in the great ocean of humanity, has had additional confirmation. We are workers together with God, as expressed by Paul.

Extracts from Letters.

L. L. Wight, Sweet Water, Texas: "More startling than a thunderbolt from a cloudless sky, comes the announcement flying over the wire, that the little baby grandson of twenty-two grandchildren, was dead. This sad news, and in my feeble condition it seemed more than I was able to endure. If it were not for the light of revelation I certainly could never be reconciled. We hear in the dim distance of the past, 'Suffer little children to come unto me.' I learn by letter that the funeral services of our little boy were ably rendered by Brn. W. H. Mannering and Hubert Case. I hope to reach San Antonio in the near future to commune with my many friends. In Sweet Water, my home is with my oldest son. I want for nothing in the way of comfort. He gives me anything, even though it costs him sacrifices. All my children are the same, and even friends outside of my immediate family. God is my refuge and helps in times of need, in him will I trust."

Pastoral.

To the Saints, Ministry, and Friends of the Canadian Mission, Greeting: The work of the General Conference is over, and among the changes wrought I find one that effects me: it associates me with the people of the Canadian Mission for the coming conference year as the minister in charge of that mission. It will be new territory to me, so it will be necessary for the people of that field to exercise some patience with me until I can get better acquainted with the condition and needs of the field. I am not an entire stranger to the most of the missionary force and hope that a better acquaintance with them will only increase my respect for them, also that I may be able to conduct myself so in harmony with the Lord's will that the confidence, esteem, and friendship of both the ministry and members, towards me may increase and abide.

I regret that conditions at home along financial lines have hindered me from getting into the field as soon as I had hoped.

I shall not appoint any assistants in charge, unless some emergency should arise later on that would demand it, but I do not anticipate anything of this kind now. All reports should be made to me direct, promptly on July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1. The report on the 1st of March should be for the period of the whole year, an annual report. Please take notice, try and get all reports to me on time so I can make my report to the First Presidency on time.

We desire the hearty cooperation of all the local ministry whenever and wherever they can possibly give it. We do not mean by this that you are to neglect your proper work to assist in the general ministry, but much good can be done by the local brethren in the localities where they live if they will only try as they should; if at any time a local man can give two or three months' work to the mission field we would be glad to correspond with him, and will try and give him something to do.

Bishop R. C. Evans will have charge of the financial work in the mission and all matters pertaining to that line will be under his direction and should be referred to him or his agents; address him at 35 Huron street, Toronto, Ontario. Remember your duty along the financial line.

The missionary work and all matters that belong to the spiritual line, the general interests of the church in the mission, will be under the supervision and direction of the minister in charge, and should be referred to him. By paying heed to this you will save confusion and your thoughtfulness will be appreciated by both Bro. R. C. Evans and myself, very much, and save us considerable work, too, at times.

My address will be Lamoni, Iowa, for the present; a letter sent to that address will always reach me, but you must allow for a little time when writing to that address. I will publish a field address as soon as I can get where I can establish one. I would be glad to hear from any of the scattered Saints as to the opportunity for work in their vicinity.

The branches will be under the immediate direction of the district presidents, and such supervision, counsel, advice, or direction of the minister in charge, as the emergencies in the case may necessitate. I shall stand ready to assist in any line of work where I can legitimately do so, but will expect every officer to do his own work, unless emergencies should arise that would prevent, and then the proper officers should be appealed to for the necessary help and it will be given as soon as possible.

I hope that all the ministry and members will feel free to counsel with me, if they desire to do so, at any time, either in person, or by letter, and I will give them every consideration at my command.

I desire that the missionary force push the mission work with all the energy and zeal they can in wisdom; don't leave a good interest too soon, nor waste time on a place where there is no interest. I admonish all the missionaries, not to allow themselves to be drawn into any of the controversies that may arise in the branches, unless sent there for the purpose of adjusting troubles, by those in charge. There are so many calls, that we need every man in the field that can be spared from other work that can go, hence our anxiety that no missionary should become tangled up in any way that would hinder his work as a missionary. Don't spend time around home in idleness, but be diligent and faithful. Remember that idleness on the part of the missionary discourages the tithe payer and in that way you not only injure yourself, but all the rest of the mission force and the church as a whole.

The missionaries will labor as follows until directed otherwise by me:

- S. W. Tomlinson and Fred Rowe in Alberta.
- J. L. Mortimer and H. J. Davison in Saskatchewan.
- E. E. Long and David Smith in Manitoba.
- James Pycoc, J. T. Thompson, John Shields, and G. T. St. John in the Toronto District.
- R. C. Longhurst, G. M. Shippy, and James Davis in the London and Chatham districts.
- G. C. Tomlinson in the Manitoulin Island and North Shore Mission.

Arthur Leverton will labor in all of Ontario as an evangelical minister.

I regret very much that we have so few men, but we will have to make up for the lack in number, by the energy and quality of those we do have, to some extent at least, and may God bless us with his Spirit and direct in the work, going before us as he has promised; if we live as we should he will open the way before us and we will be able to make a fine report at the close of the year.

With best wishes and a prayer for the success of the mission I am your brother and co-worker,

FREDERICK A. SMITH,
 Minister in charge of Canadian Mission.

To the Ministry of Mission No. 3, Comprising the Following Territory: Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Central and Southern Illinois; Welcome Greeting: Our heavenly Father, through the instrumentality of the "powers that be," has seen fit to return us to this mission, to be associated with you brethren of this ministry; and if possible to take the oversight with you of this important field.

We therefore desire a hearty cooperation, that we may be enabled to make ourselves felt for good to this great church of God in carrying the angel's message to every nook and corner of this field, so far as it lays in our power to do. Therefore, in order to do this, we have thought best to put the following brethren of the ministry in charge of such and such parts of the field as our assistants: Charles E. Harpe, Far West District; Henry Sparling, Saint Louis and South-eastern Illinois districts; A. M. Baker, Southern Missouri District, and the fifteen counties in Southeastern Missouri not in organized territory; W. S. Macrae, Clinton District; George Jenkins, Spring River District; H. E. Moler, Northeastern and Northwestern Kansas districts; Lee Quick, Eastern Oklahoma District; Hubert Case, Central and Western Oklahoma districts; J. T. Riley, Arkansas and Louisiana; W. M. Aylor, Texas; F. C. Keck, Southern Kansas, (the twenty-four counties not in organized territory); A. C. Silvers, Nodaway District; E. L. Henson, Northeastern Missouri District; R. T. Walters, Central Illinois District.

REPORTING.

The time for reporting is as heretofore—July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1. All the ministry in our charge should make their reports direct to I. N. White, 1000 West Maple, Independence, Missouri, who will attend to that department of the work.

REUNIONS.

To make reunions profitable, and without unnecessary trouble and expense in securing speakers, we should be notified at an early day of the contemplated time and place of holding them, as we may be able to offer some timely suggestions to avoid an unnecessary conflict, if at all possible.

DEBATES.

We want to urge upon both the local and traveling ministry, not to compromise the church in debates. You can afford to wait long enough to take the matter up with the ministers in charge, or with their assistants, who have had years of experience along these lines, before signing propositions and rules.

Let us all trust and pray that we may have a harmonious ministry throughout the entire year—doing unto others as we would have them do unto us; or in other words, do the best we know how.

May grace and truth abound with us to the inviting of the Holy Spirit in our trials as well as in our triumphs.

We are your brethren in the great conflict,
I. N. WHITE.
J. F. CURTIS.

Notice of Appointment.

To Whom it May Concern: Bro. Ben St. John having been referred to us for appointment, we hereby notify that he has been appointed to labor in Northern Michigan District.

Very respectfully submitted,
J. W. WIGHT, Minister in charge.
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

LOYALTY.

For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek.—Romans 1: 16.

The latter day gospel is pure gold. It rings true. It has stood the "acid test" of time and persecution. It asks for and is worthy of the undivided love and loyalty of all Latter Day Saints. Adherence to an unworthy or mistaken cause may become fanaticism, but a worthy cause claims a fixed and unwavering devotion.

Our men and women must not forget that they are parts of a closely allied fighting force, the church militant. They should not disown their church membership, remain silent concerning their faith, or fail to improve a good opportunity to do something to advance the work.

We can not excuse ourselves on the plea that there are no opportunities. There are more opportunities than we are willing to admit. The Lord has commanded that those who are warned should warn their neighbors,—he will help us to make opportunities if we want them. The trouble is that we sometimes weakly shrink from improving a splendid chance to speak a word for Jesus and his kingdom as restored to the earth.

We are prone to make concessions to the world. The world believes that we are fanatics and we concede the point and think to keep entirely still about our church membership in order to retain the good fellowship of our neighbors. How about the good fellowship of our God?

Our neighbor believes that we are wrong. We know that we are right! We have the scriptures, logic, and personal testimony on our side. Why should we yield an inch? When the test comes let us not evade or retreat. If we tell our neighbor plainly what we are and why we are what we are, and back the statement up with a heartfelt testimony, standing ready to explain and defend our position, we will hold his good fellowship, if it is worth holding; if otherwise, let it go. And there is always a fighting chance that we will win him into the true church and fold of our God and his Christ.

One young sister entered into a persistent correspondence on religious topics with a certain friend. She finally converted him and he became a Latter Day Saint, in time an elder, and in his ministry he converted and baptized probably at least one hundred and fifty people. The sister was Carrie A. Church, author of the hymn, "In the light"; the man was Elder Charles Brown. Both have gone to their reward, laden with sheaves, all because she was not ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the power of God unto salvation. Many such cases could be cited where by a resolute testimony and fearless defense of truth one has been converted, and in the way thus opened (or through his ministry) hundreds have come in.

Can we afford to miss the golden opportunities that are around us? Our boys and girls, our young men and women, should be talking to their friends about the gospel, giving out tracts, praying with and for those who are in darkness, living in and loving the gospel light. 'Tis a glorious thing to be in the light.

Our young men who hold the priesthood should be busy magnifying their calling, seeking opportunity to preach in schoolhouses, churches, or on the street corner. You are inexperienced? That is the way to get experience. Do not fear. We have a plan of salvation that is defensible. If you study hard and pray earnestly God will not leave you to be overthrown. He will help you to declare his word in such a way that others will be touched thereby. There are many honest people everywhere and it will be the happy lot of some one to take the message to them. Will you go?

The world has a thousand devices to test the loyalty of the young Latter Day Saint. If a frown will not intimidate, a smile and a little flattery may prevail. Here is the test of character? Some stand proudly fast when among the home folks and with the people of God. When out in the world they adopt the customs of the world and are no better than worldly people. Such men and women are weak in character. The test of strength is to stand by the right when the right is unpopular.

We must be loyal to our profession and to our church. We can not join hands with the world. We never can meet the world on common ground until the world changes ideals or the church abandons her ideals. We do not need to change our ideals. If we stand by them resolutely, in time the whole world must come to our standard. In fact, the world has to an extent changed its base. Things that we defended in 1830, and for which we were assailed, are now quite generally accepted. Things that we defend to-day will be accepted fifty years from now,—possibly at a much earlier date.

We must be loyal in deed as well as in word. One man was reviling the Saints and declaring that they were an ignorant, fanatical, and dishonest lot. Another replied, "I know better than that. They are an honest, intelligent, and good class of people."

"How do you know?"

"I have lived among them and had them for my neighbors."

That is the best possible argument in defense of our position. The ignorant, tobacco-stained, lazy "old settler" who lived (according to his story) in Kirtland, or Missouri, or Nauvoo and now delights to paint his own picture when describing the Saints who lived in the days of Joseph Smith gets no encore when his audience has had an opportunity to observe the consistent, Christian life of a true Latter Day Saint. Be loyal all the time.

The Evangelical Free Church Catechism (London) says, "The essential mark of a true branch of the Catholic church is the presence of Christ, through his indwelling Spirit, manifested in holy life and fellowship."

We admire the sentiment, and change the wording to read, "The essential mark of a true member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the presence of Christ, through his indwelling Spirit manifested in holy life and fellowship." E. A. S.

REJECTED BY THE MINISTERIAL ALLIANCES.

Jesus Christ had no standing with the ministerial alliance of his day. The rabbis did not consider him "evangelical," and they passed some very severe strictures upon his personal character. It afforded them considerable pleasure to cast him out and turn him over to the Romans for crucifixion.

Now the chief priests, and elders, and all the council, sought false witness against Jesus, to put him to death.—Matthew 26: 59.

Somewhat later it was written:

The stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner.—1 Peter 2: 7.

History repeats itself, and it need not surprise us to-day to find that Christ, as represented by his ministry, is rejected by the modern ministerial alliances.

When the Federal Council of Churches, representing some thirty denominations, met in Philadelphia, in 1908, our delegates were excluded. The council gave no reasons, but the chairman, Doctor William H. Roberts, stated to Bishop Kelley that no church would be admitted that claimed to have received revelation from God since the days of the apostles. The council in Jerusalem cast Jesus out; the councils of to-day exclude all who have intercourse with him by way of revelation.

In many of the large cities there are associations composed of the pastors of the various Protestant churches of the community. In some of these cities our ministers have sought membership in these associations or alliances, with the idea that they could at least labor together with the other pastors in the interest of social improvements. In some instances they have received very fair treatment; in others they have been treated with discourtesy, and have encountered the same spirit of intolerance that was shown toward Jesus by the ministerial alliance in Jerusalem.

Some time ago Elder V. M. Goodrich, representing the church in Saint Joseph, Missouri, was denied membership in the ministerial association in that city. During the present year Elder W. E. LaRue was excluded from membership in the association at Kansas City. And now Elder J. F. Mintun has been ousted from the association in Des Moines, Iowa, after having held membership for some time.

The ministers composing these alliances are of rock-bound and hide-bound "orthodoxy" and they vote us out on the supposition that we are not evangelical. Evidently they go on the theory that it were better to exclude a dozen good, evangelical ministers than to run the risk of admitting one who is heterodox, because (if we are correctly informed) in every case our men were voted down without being given any opportunity to explain their belief before the assembly. They were tried and condemned without counsel or representation. In the case of Elder Mintun the alliance improved an opportunity to turn him out while he was absent from the city.

Such conduct may be considered "evangelical" by certain broadcloth gentlemen in Des Moines, but it hardly appeals to us as being in harmony with the idea of fair play and common decency.

Elder Mintun has succeeded in getting into the leading dailies of Des Moines with a forceful presentation of our position. He also took up the question in a sermon in which he set forth the idea that if we are to be judged from a scriptural standpoint we are strictly evangelical and orthodox. The sermon was quoted at length in the Register and Leader.

Elder Mintun also addressed the following letter to the association under date of May 18:

To the Des Moines Ministerial Association: On my return about midnight last night from Pacific Junction, where I had been to perform my ministerial duty in comforting bereaved ones who had lost both father and mother within a week, I learned, if I am to believe the newspaper reports, that, without previous notice, I had been judged by a majority of the membership present that I was not worthy of membership in the association. I am loath to believe that men who claim to represent the one who is to be judged of all the earth would take an action so contrary to the golden rule and the spirit of civil jurisprudence. In order that I may do those with whom I have been associated for about two years no injustice, I request to know from you the reasons for such action without giving me notice, and to know whether you have been reported correctly in the reason assigned by the newspapers for my expulsion. The reason assigned is that I am "apostolic," and hence not "evangelical." Is this report correct?

It is also reported that I have used my membership in the association to make converts, by boasting of this relationship. Are you reported correctly in this? If so, a false report has come to your notice. I have not even thought of placing such an estimation on membership in the association. I have spoken to some of my membership in the association as an evidence of what I esteemed the fair-mindedness of the ministers composing it, and never once thought that such would result otherwise than to encourage others to be as fair-minded. A minister of the gospel would have a very low estimate of conversion to conclude that membership in the Des Moines Ministerial Association would result in such divine fruitage. A correct and authoritative representation of the perfect law of the Lord is the only way to convert the soul.

It is true that I do not represent the same faith that those who represent other churches do, but where is your authority to decide that I am not a representative of an "evangelical church"? And what is your definition of an "evangelical" church? I have been made painfully aware that a few of the members of the association were so prejudiced that they could not help but show it, but I am surprised that the association as a body would take such an action without giving me due notice and permitting me to be heard in my own defense. Am I to understand that I am to have no privilege to be heard before the association? I do not wish to intrude my presence in your meetings unless the privilege is granted by an act of the association. I want to hear from you, that I may understandingly give answer; and I want you to hear my answer, and let your judgment be rendered thereon.

Unless these men have been misrepresented by their own act, it were better for us to be voted out than to be voted in. In any event we shall suffer no loss if the affair serves to bring our position before the public.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Bro. A. H. Parsons, Bro. Daniel Macgregor, Sr. Anna Salyards, and probably others of our church people whose names we have not learned, have been in attendance at the World's Sunday School Convention, held in the city of Washington, May 18-24. The gathering was an immense affair. Some ill feeling seems to have been engendered by the action of the committee in excluding certain colored schools from the parade. The convention should have been too big in every sense to say to the colored folks, "You can't walk in the street with us." However, better feeling obtained later when Booker T. Washington was accepted as a life member. Life membership costs one thousand dollars, and in his case the sum was raised mostly by Southern people.

At their recent conference held in Tennessee the Cumberland Presbyterians arranged to send missionaries to Iowa to try and build up their disorganized work in that State.

The assembly of the Presbyterian Church (south) in Lewisburg, West Virginia, encountered some hard sledding in an effort to revise the confession of faith in its utterances on infant salvation and damnation so as to retain the original wording and yet convey the idea that all infants are "elect" and will be saved. It would be better to admit an error and get right.

Memorial services were held in the church at Lamoni Sunday morning in charge of Pres. John Smith, assisted by Comrade Stebbins. The sermon was by Reverend Shipman, pastor of the local Methodist church. Monday forenoon was devoted to suitable memorial services. Daniel Lambert was the orator of the day.

The baccalaureate sermon for the graduating class of Graceland College was preached by Elder Heman C. Smith, in the Brick Church, Sunday evening.

Right and wrong, justice and crime, exist independently of our country. A public wrong is not a private right for any citizen. The citizen is a man bound to know and do the right, and the nation is but an aggregation of citizens. If a man should shout, "My country, by whatever means extended or bounded; my country, right or wrong," he merely repeats the words of the thief who steals in the street, or the trader who swears falsely in the customhouse, both of them chuckling, "My fortune; however acquired."

Thus, we see that a man's country is not a certain acre of land—of mountains, rivers, and woods—but it is principle; and patriotism is loyalty to that principle.

In poetic minds and in popular enthusiasm this feeling becomes closely associated with the soil and symbols of the country. But the secret sanctification of the soil and the symbol is the idea which they represent; and this idea the patriot worships, through the name and the symbol, as a lover kisses with rapture the glove of his mistress and wears a lock of her hair upon his heart.—George William Curtis.

To be always intending a new life, but never to find time to set about it—this is as if a man should put off eating and drinking and sleeping from one day to another till he is starved and destroyed.—

He who has no mind to trade with the Devil should be so wise as to keep away from his shop.

OUR DEFENSE.—PART 3.

Doctrine and Covenants, section 76, treats on rewards and punishments. It tells us there are three distinct glories, the celestial, terrestrial, and telestial. The first is the greatest, and is typified by the sun. Only those who obey the celestial law, can secure celestial glory. That is, the gospel law, as it was and is, must be properly observed in order to receive celestial reward. The second is prepared for designated classes who fail to live up to the requirements of the highest law. This glory is typified by the moon. The third glory is for those, who, after having received due punishment for all their sins, are found worthy of the lowest reward. This glory is typified by the stars. According to this vision, all will be redeemed, sometime and somewhere, except the sons of perdition. Is this narrow? Does it not agree with what is written in the Bible? This revelation throws a flood of light on the judgment and final destiny of man, but does not conflict with what has been given to us in the Bible. Take the teachings of the book, as a whole, so far as they relate to the conduct of man, and we find that all that is good is enjoined, and all that is evil is forbidden.

And I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall forsake all evil and cleave unto all good, that ye shall live by every word that proceedeth forth out of the mouth of God.—Doctrine and Covenants 95: 3.

As it appears to us, forsaking all evil and cleaving unto all good, is not too narrow. To believe the whole truth, and practice it in our lives, is the whole duty of man. (Ecclesiastes 12: 13, 14; Luke 8: 21; Matthew 4: 4; John 8: 31, 32.)

Doctrine and Covenants, section 42, given in February, 1831, contains a very important part of the restored gospel, so far as record is concerned. A careful examination of this revelation, with some statements which preceded it, will show that the God of the Saints knew what he was talking about; that he foresaw the peculiar conditions that would arise and made proper provision to meet them. Thus the safety of God's people, in a moral and spiritual sense, and the perpetuity of his work, notwithstanding the wickedness of men within and without the church, were assured.

In this revelation is announced the law in plain terms, which was to govern the church till Christ should come to rule over his people in righteousness and in glory. Because of the statements of this and other revelations, we are fully justified in the conclusion that no other thing in contravention of this law, or any part of it, could possibly obtain, without the church incurring the disfavor of God and losing the rights and privileges which belong to the children of God.

In January, 1831, one month before section 42 was given, the following was received:

But verily I say unto you, that, in time, ye shall have no king nor ruler, for I will be your king and watch over you. Wherefore, hear my voice and follow me, and you shall be a free people, and ye shall have no laws but my laws, when I come, for I am your lawgiver, and what can stay my hand? But verily I say unto you, Teach one another according to the office wherewith I have appointed you, and let every man esteem his brother as himself, and practice virtue and holiness before me.—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 5.

About seven months later the following commandments and instructions were given:

Let no man think that he is ruler, but let God rule him that judgeth, according to the counsel of his will, or, in other words, him that counseleth or sitteth upon the judgment seat. Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be, till He reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet. Behold, the laws which ye have received are the laws of the church, and in this light ye shall hold them forth. Behold, here is wisdom.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5.

Putting this instruction together, which relates to the same point, the following deductions are clear:

No king or ruler, political or spiritual, should rule over the saints of God in the land of Zion in America; but by obedience to the word of Jesus Christ, and following him, they would become a free people. They were to be governed by the laws of the church, given of God for the regulation of their moral and spiritual conduct, but were virtually notified that he would give them no law which would require them to break the laws of the land in order to keep it. They were forbidden to break the laws of the land, but were informed that in eternity they would be governed solely by the laws of Christ. Their spiritual leaders were not permitted to rule as kings or dictators, but simply and only as teachers and administrators of the law of Christ, every man esteeming "his brother as himself," and practicing "virtue and holiness" before God.

In section 38, already referred to and quoted from, we have the following significant instruction:

And now I show unto you a mystery, a thing which is had in secret chambers, to bring to pass even your destruction, in process of time, and ye knew it not, but now I tell it unto you, and ye are blessed, not because of your iniquity, neither your hearts of unbelief, for verily some of you are guilty before me; but I will be merciful unto your weakness. Therefore, be ye strong from henceforth; fear not for the kingdom is yours: and for your salvation I give unto you a commandment, for I have heard your prayers, and the poor have complained before me, and the rich have I made, and all flesh is mine, and I am no respecter of persons.—Paragraph 4.

And that ye might escape the power of the enemy, and be gathered unto me a righteous people, without spot and blameless: wherefore, for this cause I gave unto you the commandment, that ye should go to the Ohio [Kirtland, Ohio]; and there I will give unto you my law.—Paragraph 7.

In these paragraphs we have a revelation of the character of what was already going on in the secret chambers, with a view to the destruction of God's people and the restored church. Not their sudden and immediate destruction, but gradually, that is, "in process of time." The way of escape is plainly indicated. Through the law which the Lord now promises to give, and the endowment of the Holy Spirit, they might "escape the power of the enemy" and be gathered unto God "a righteous people, without spot and blameless." Now it follows as a logical sequence, that the leading sins mentioned in the law, when it shall be given, are the very things had in the secret chambers to bring about the destruction of God's people.

They went to the place designated, according to the commandment, and on February 4, 1831, received the following:

Hearken and hear, O ye my people, saith the Lord and your God, ye whom I delight to bless with the greatest blessings; ye that hear me; and ye that hear me not will I curse, that have professed my name, with the heaviest of all cursings. Hearken, O ye elders of my church whom I have called: Behold, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall assemble yourselves together to agree upon my word, and by the prayer of your faith ye shall receive my law, that ye may know how to govern my church, and have all things right before me. And I will be your ruler when I come; and, behold, I come quickly; and ye shall see that my law is kept. He that receiveth my law and doeth it the same is my disciple; he that saith he receiveth it and doeth it not, the same is not my disciple, and shall be cast out from among you; for it is not meet that the things which belong to the children of the kingdom, should be given to them that are not worthy, or to dogs, or the pearls to be cast before swine.—Doctrine and Covenants 41: 1, 2.

It is needful for us to emphasize a few points set forth in the above extract.

1. The purpose of the law. It was, and is, that the church might be governed according to the will of God, and that they might have all things right before him. That which should be done, thereafter, in harmony with the law, would be right; but if in conflict with the law, it would be wrong.

2. Duration of the law. "And I will be your ruler when I come." This implies that the law must govern and direct till Jesus Christ comes in glory, to rule over his people in righteousness. But as this point is a very important one, we quote from a subsequent revelation, given in December, 1832:

And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom, even that of a terrestrial kingdom, or that of a celestial kingdom. For he who is not able to abide the law of a celestial kingdom, can not abide celestial glory; and he who can not abide the law of a terrestrial kingdom, can not abide a terrestrial glory; . . . therefore, he is not meet for a kingdom of glory. Therefore, he must abide a kingdom which is not a kingdom of glory.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 5.

3. Viewed from a Latter Day Saint point of view, who are the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, proper? The answer is plain. They who teach and obey the law which is now about to be given to the church. "He that receiveth my law and doeth it, the same is my disciple; and he that saith he receiveth it and doeth it not, the same is not my disciple, and shall be cast out from among you." This settles the third important point, positively and emphatically. If any people should arise at any subsequent time or place, and ignore the law, in part or as a whole, by claiming that it is not essential, because we are governed by the "living oracles" now, or by substituting something of a dissimilar character, and still claim to be the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, the claim would be false. Retaining or accepting and using the name does not make it the church of Jesus Christ, any more than calling a thistle a rose would make it one. "And ye shall see that my law is kept," is the language of the Master to the elders of the church.

Five days after receiving the important instruction contained in the above paragraphs, the elders assembled together as they had been instructed to do, and the following recognition, instruction, and promise were given:

Hearken, O ye elders of my church, who have assembled yourselves together, in my name, even Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God, the Savior of the world, inasmuch as they believe on my name and keep my commandments; again I say unto you, Hearken and hear and obey the law which I shall give unto you; for verily I say, as ye have assembled yourselves together according to the commandment wherewith I commanded you, and are agreed as touching this one thing, and have asked the Father in my name, even so ye shall receive.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 1.

Paragraphs 2 and 3 contain instructions to the elders to go forth and preach the gospel, and to Edward Partridge to stand in the office to which he had been appointed, etc. Paragraph 4 instructs the church concerning who may be sent forth to preach the gospel. It must be known by the church that they have proper authority, and have been properly ordained. Paragraph 5 is a commandment to the ministers of the church to preach the principles of the gospel as contained in the Bible and Book of Mormon, "in which," it is declared, "is the fullness of the gospel." They were to live in obedience to the covenants and church articles, and teach as they should be "directed by the Spirit." Under the influence of this Spirit, they were to "speak and prophesy as seemeth me good; for behold, the Comforter knoweth all things, and beareth record of the Father and of the Son."

After the important instructions and commandments contained in the first five paragraphs had been given, the language is addressed more directly to the church as a body, which, of course, includes both ministers and members. This announces the precepts and rules of the law in the phraseology of "thou shalt" and "thou shalt not."

And now, behold, I speak unto the church. Thou shalt not kill; and he that kills shall not have forgiveness in this world, nor in the world to come. And again, I say, Thou shalt not kill; but he that killeth shall die. Thou shalt not steal; and he that stealeth and will not repent, shall be cast out. Thou shalt not lie; he that lieth and will not repent, shall be cast out. Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit; and if he repents not, he shall be cast out. Thou shalt not commit adultery; and he that committeth adultery and repenteth not, shall be cast out; but he that has committed adultery and repents with all his heart, and forsaketh it, and doeth it no more, thou shalt forgive; but if he doeth it again, he shall not be forgiven, but shall be cast out. Thou shalt not speak evil of thy neighbor, nor do him any harm. Thou knowest my laws concerning these things are given in my scriptures; he that sinneth and repenteth not, shall be cast out.—Paragraphs 6,7.

In the above paragraphs all the leading sins in the catalogue are condemned and prohibited, while all other sins are covered with the statement, "He that sinneth and repenteth not, shall be cast out."

At the time when this revelation was given, (less than two years after the organization of the church with six members,) there was no visible evidence of an existing demand for many of the prohibitions of the law as quoted above. Why, then, were they given? The answer is, that God foresaw the terrible work of apostasy in the restored church, which, in time, would create an urgent and extraordinary demand. So, like himself, he made proper provision for this future emergency, which, from a merely human point of view, was as strange as it was unexpected. But by this provision of divine wisdom, the people of God are saved from ruin, and the restored church perpetuated.

As early as 1831, no one, so far as we know, had the remotest thought of such heresies as polygamy, stealing, and killing, ever being taught in the name of our holy religion, except the few who were already doing the work of Satan in the "secret chambers." But, as heretofore stated, polygamy was first made public and accepted as a doctrine of the church in August, 1852, at Salt Lake City, Utah, under the presidency of Brigham Young. If taught or practiced (one or both) to any extent before this date, it was done the same as other crimes are practiced, that is, in secret and in the dark! If such a movement was set on foot in Nauvoo, as is claimed by many, it was an individual movement, made in opposition to the laws of the church and the laws of the land. If any minister of the church, or anybody else, has been proven guilty or can be, let the culpability and condemnation which properly belong to them, rest where they belong. The faith and doctrine of the church are in nowise responsible, any more than the laws of the land are responsible.

Surely, God exhibited his wisdom and foresight, when he commanded his servants and people to do all things according to his word, and in harmony with the laws of the land. Individuals may have gone wrong, it is very common for them to do so;

but when they have to violate the principles of their faith in the doing of the wrong, it is certainly a poor argument against the faith. "Let God be true," though every man should be proven to be a liar. The great and vital question is this: Is God in this latter day work? He surely is. It requires more blind credulity to believe he is not, than intelligent faith to believe that he is.

After the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in June, 1844, the church was broken up into factions, the leading one being led and presided over by Brigham Young. This man was never a legal successor to Joseph Smith in the presidency of the church. Not only polygamy but other false doctrines were taught and established under his rule. Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Jedediah Grant, all leading men, taught that doctrine which has been known as "blood atonement." It is this: Some men are so wicked that Christ's blood will not save them. Their own blood must be shed! If a man's blood needs to be shed, "shed it," taught Mr. Young. "This is loving your neighbor as yourself." The evidences to support these statements is found in their own Journal of Discourses, as published by themselves, and it is more than evidence, for it is absolute proof.

In connection with this monstrous heresy, it was taught that apostasy was a great, if not the greatest sin of which a Brighamite could be guilty. So, you see, those who accepted Brigham Young as a servant of God and president of the church, were not at a loss to know how to get rid of apostates, when necessary and practicable. Apostasy was, of course, a repudiation of the distinctive claims and monstrous doctrines taught by Brigham Young and his leading supporters.

It was also taught by leading men in this Brighamite faction, and in one or more of the other factions, that, under certain circumstances, it is all right to steal—that is, to consecrate the property of the Gentiles for the building up of the Lord's work. In the same manner it was taught that it is right to lie, under certain conditions, the end justifying the means! And these things were not only taught, but practiced, especially polygamy and lying.

Every system of doctrine must be tried upon its true claims. Let us presume, therefore, that the gospel had been restored to the earth in fulfillment of the prophetic word, and the church of Jesus Christ organized according to the will of God, in April, 1830. In the light of these claims, was it strange that the God of heaven should warn his people of impending danger? Was it strange that he should tell them about the arch enemy who was doing his work in the "secret chamber," in the dark? Was it strange that he should make all the provision that could be made, consistently with the agency of man, for their purity, righteousness, and safety?

We notice that killing is not only forbidden, but the prohibition is made emphatic by repetition with some change in the form of the expression:

Thou shalt not kill; and he that kills, shall not have forgiveness in this world, nor in the world to come."

And, again, I say, Thou shalt not kill, but he that killeth shall die.

We notice, too, in this connection, that Christ was not only particular that his word should be obeyed, but that the laws of our country should be honored in all things:

And it shall come to pass, that if any persons among you shall kill, they shall be delivered up and dealt with according to the laws of the land; for remember that he hath no forgiveness; and it shall be proven according to the laws of the land.—Paragraph 21.

In the latter part of paragraph 22, we are told that if a man or woman shall rob, steal, or lie, "he or she shall be delivered up to the law of the land," after which we have this comprehensive statement for the guidance of the church: "If he or she do any manner of iniquity, he or she shall be delivered up unto the law, even that of God."

We call attention to a few more points before leaving section 42. It will be admitted by all careful Bible believers and students, that love is the greatest principle in the divine plan. We would reasonably expect, then, that this principle would be made emphatic and prominent in the restoration, and so it is:

If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which can not be broken; and inasmuch as you impart your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me, and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors, two of the elders, or high priests, such as he shall or has appointed and set apart for that purpose.—Paragraph 8.

Thou shalt live together in love, insomuch that thou shalt weep for the loss of them that die, and more especially for those that have not hope of a glorious resurrection.—Paragraph 12.

A few months later a number of revelations were given in the State of Missouri, from one of which we quote:

Wherefore I give unto them a commandment, saying thus: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart, with all thy might, mind, and strength; and in the name of Jesus Christ thou shalt serve him. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Thou shalt not steal, neither commit adultery, nor kill, nor do anything like unto it. Thou shalt thank the Lord thy God in all things. Thou shalt offer a sacrifice unto the Lord thy God in righteousness; even that of a broken heart and a contrite spirit.—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2.

Thus we see from these extracts, and what has gone before, that love is given its proper place in the work of salvation. We see more than this, for we are plainly told some of the leading ways in which the love of God in the soul will manifest itself. Every man must esteem his brother as himself; the poor and needy must be cared for; we must "live together in love"; (how much does this mean?) we must love our neighbors as ourselves, as Jesus taught, therefore, we must not steal, commit adultery, "nor kill, nor do anything like unto it"; for whoever does these things, not only sins against himself and God, but also against his neighbors. The lesson is extremely practical and valuable. No man has a right to do wrong.

As to the nature of the marriage covenant, what could be plainer? "Thou shalt love thy wife [not wives] with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her [not them] and none else."

Subsequent to the time when section 42 was given, (February 9, 1831,) the following instruction was delivered to the elders who had been commanded to go and preach the restored gospel to the Shakers, a people who do not believe in the ordinance of marriage:

And again, I say unto you, that whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made.—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3, given in March, 1831.

This places us on firm and defensible ground, and we can well afford to move forward with true faith in the living and true God; with confidence in his word, (and hence in the restored gospel,) and without fear from the opposition that may be waged by men or devils, so long as we do what is right.

Coming back to section 42, we notice again, for the sake of the connection, that the Holy Scriptures contained in the Bible, are strongly indorsed:

Thou shalt take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee in my scriptures for a law, to be my law, to govern my church; he that doeth according to these things, shall be saved, and he that doeth them not shall be damned, if he continues.—Paragraph 16.

Surely this is sufficiently strong and expressive to satisfy the most exacting.

One more quotation touching the binding character of the marriage vow, the sacredness and purity of the ordinance which was "ordained of God unto man," etc., and then we must drop this department of our subject:

Behold, verily I say unto you, that whatsoever persons among you having put away their companions for the cause of fornication, or in other words, if they shall testify before you in all lowliness of heart that this is the case, ye shall not cast them out from among you; but if ye shall find that any persons have left their companions for the sake of adultery, and they themselves are the offenders, and their companions are living, they shall be cast out from among you. And again I say unto you, that ye shall be watchful and careful, with all inquiry, that ye receive none such among you if they are married, and if they are not married, they shall repent of all their sins, or ye shall not receive them.—Paragraph 20.

Such rules of law and order as we have adduced from this section, are in harmony with the character of God, his word as found in the Bible, and with the highest code of morals known to man.

WAS JOSEPH SMITH A TRUE PROPHET?

The claim that Joseph Smith, "the Palmyra Seer," was a prophet of God, is a great stumbling-block to many. We are reminded at once that we are thoroughly warned against the dangerous work of false prophets, in the Bible, all of which is conceded. We are as anxious that the people should not be deceived by false prophets, as we are that they should be benefited by the good work of true ones.

Are we warned against true prophets in the Bible? If false ones will lead us away from God and down to ruin, will not true ones lead us toward God and in the way of salvation? "But," we are told, "the day for true prophets has passed away, never more to return." If this be true, the warning should be against prophets, not merely false ones, and all the instruction given in the word, that we might be able to know the false, is all out of place. Jesus said, when speaking of false prophets, "wherefore by their fruits, ye shall know them" (Matthew 7:20). If you are imposed upon by a counterfeit bill and spurious coin, do you stop receiving money of any kind? or do you try to be more careful to accept only the genuine and reject the false?

Doctor Nelson tells us in his Cause and Cure of Infidelity, that almost everything with which we are acquainted is counterfeited, more or less, and that the rule is, the better anything is the more it is counterfeited. Well, Jesus said, "And many false prophets shall arise, and shall deceive many" (Matthew 24:11). The counterfeit succeeds best with a people who believe in the true, but are not always prepared, for various reasons, to decide correctly between the true and the false. No danger of deceiving a people with false prophets, who do not believe it possible for any true one to arise in our day. They will reject all prophets without reference to fruits or anything else!

How shall we know the true from the false? It will not do to try that which claims to be divine by human standards. A divine proposition must be supported by divine proof. God has always refused to permit himself or his work to be tried and committed by the wisdom of men. He, himself, has originated and revealed the tests by which alone we are permitted to try him and prove him, which rules and tests we must apply to the work of all who claim to have been sent by his command.

It is fair to presume that all who have true faith in God, and confidence in the Bible as a true record, which contains a necessary and suitable revelation of God's will to man, will be entirely willing to settle the question, "Was Joseph Smith a true prophet?" and all similar ones by this divine standard. If not, it must be because we prefer to settle this divine proposition in the wisdom of man, rather than in the wisdom of God. It is, indeed, a serious reflection on the faith of ministers of the gospel and professed Bible believers, when they deliberately choose this latter course. Why not have faith in God and his word?

A true prophet, according to the Bible, is a teacher, servant, or minister for God. (Amos 3:7.) It is his duty and calling to faithfully teach the truth, as it is with God, with the help afforded by the Holy Spirit. It is also his duty to give to the people from time to time, the word of God, as God shall give that word to him. From this we are logically led to state two rules by which his claims may and should be tried. There are other valuable tests, but these two are sufficient at present.

Rule 1. Every true prophet, since the days of John the Baptist till now, will teach the old Jerusalem gospel as the means of salvation unto man. He will not simply teach it in a fragmentary way, but as a perfect system of truth, with every principle in its proper place. That is, he will present to the people the "perfect law of liberty" in its completeness. (James 1:25; John 8:31, 32.) He will also teach in harmony with the character of God as revealed in the Bible.

Rule 2. The Fulfillment of prophecy. Every true prophet will receive more or less from God, which he will be required to give to the people. If from God, whatever predictions are found in the messages received, will be fulfilled. But the character of the prediction must be carefully noted, treating ancient and modern prophets alike.

In one sense, rule 1 covers the whole ground; for not only the predictions, but the doctrine contained in them, must also be true as provided in rule 1. Now let us support these positions with Bible proof:

"To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isaiah 8:20.

"For he whom God hath sent, speaketh the words of God."—John 3:34. This was spoken by John the Baptist concerning Christ; but will apply to everyone who is intrusted with a message of truth for the people. The fact that the rule is made to apply to Christ and angels, in the New Testament, shows that it is of universal application.

"And if I say the truth, why do ye not believe me? He that is of God heareth God's words: ye therefore hear them not, because ye are not of God."—John 8:46, 47.

This shows that the rule is not only a test which is to be applied to all who claim to be ministers for God, but it also applies to all who claim to be disciples of Christ, or the children of God. It should also be borne in mind that the phrases "the truth," "the gospel," "the word of God," "the doctrine of Christ," "the perfect law of liberty," and some other similar phrases, are used synonymously and more or less interchangeably in the New Testament.

To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice.—John 18:37.

If the Christ of God came into the world for the special and leading purpose of "bearing witness to the truth," for what purpose are his ministers sent?

He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him; the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day. For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting: whatsoever I speak, therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak.—John 12: 48-50.

John, in his second epistle, was evidently writing of the doctrine taught by professed ministers of Jesus Christ, when he said:

Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son. If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house [as a minister of Christ] neither bid him godspeed.—Verses 9, 10.

This language clearly shows that Christ and his doctrine are inseparably united in the great work of salvation. (See Acts 8: 5, 12, 35-38.) He who preaches Christ, preaches the doctrine; he who preaches the doctrine, preaches Christ.

Paul marveled that the saints at Galatia suffered themselves to be imposed upon by "another gospel."

I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel: which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed.—Galatians 1: 6-9.

Thus we see that the teaching of the gospel of Christ or the truth as it is with God, is the great test of all tests. It must be applied to angels as well as men, who claim to be ministers of salvation. It was through the instrumentality of an angel from heaven that the gospel was to be restored to earth in the last days, and it was to constitute the leading sign of Christ's second advent in glory, and was to be preached as a witness unto the people. (See Revelation 14: 6, 7; Matthew 24: 3, 14.)

It is not strange that this is the test which God has authorized us to apply to all who come to us as divine messengers, for the truth, and the truth only, can be of any real benefit to man. God is a God of truth. Jesus Christ was full of grace and truth. By the truth we are sanctified and saved. (Deuteronomy 32: 4; John 1: 14; 17: 17; 8: 31, 32; Ephesians 1: 13.)

When a true prophet comes to us, he comes with the message of God's truth. Therefore, he teaches that which will always bring us nearer to God, and lead us to love him, serve him, and know him, according to his word. In this connection we find room for one more text:

If there arise among you a prophet or dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a sign or a wonder, and the sign or wonder come to pass, whereof he spake unto thee, saying, Let us go after other gods, which thou hast not known, and let us serve them; thou shalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams: for the Lord your God proveth you, to know whether ye love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul. Ye shall walk after the Lord your God, and fear him, and keep his commandments, and obey his voice, and ye shall serve him, and cleave unto him.—Deuteronomy 13: 1-4.

It may be urged that as we are not under the law of Moses, this scripture does not apply; that if this law governing the teaching of prophets is binding now, then the penalty for teaching contrary to it, is also in force. That is, the false prophet should be put to death. (Verse 5.) To this objection it is only necessary to say, that we cite this scripture because it is excellent proof in support of a test rule which applies everywhere and under all conditions—under the law of Moses and under the gospel alike. Who will take the position that it does not? We are entirely safe in this, because of the character of the doctrine which the true prophet is to teach, that is, the opposite of what is herein forbidden, is enjoined in the gospel code by no less authority than the Son of God. Note carefully what he says:

Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.—Matthew 22: 37-40.

We have already shown by quotations from the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, that Joseph Smith taught in harmony with all these divine injunctions. The fact that he taught the great law of truth as it emanated from God, and as it is recorded in the Bible, is the best of evidence that he was sent of God. In addition to the evidence which has been already adduced, we now emphasize by citing again the Book of Mormon published in 1830; the Doctrine and Covenants published in 1835; the Inspired Translation of the Bible, published in 1867. These records teach in harmony with the character of God, the gospel of Jesus Christ, and the truth as it is also contained in other translations of the Bible.

On rule 2, "the fulfillment of prophecy," we must necessarily be brief, though there is ample material for a whole volume on this topic alone. The Bible shows that the fulfillment of prophecy is evidence of divinity. However, it must be conceded that the things foretold must be of that character that human sagacity alone could not discern them, and that the doctrine incorporated with the prophecies must be true. We quote a few texts:

And if thou say in thine heart, How shall we know the word which the Lord hath not spoken? When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken, but the prophet hath spoken presumptuously: thou shalt not be afraid of him.—Deuteronomy 18: 21, 22.

When this cometh to pass (lo, it will come,) then shall they know that a prophet hath been among them.—Ezekiel 33: 33.

Now I tell you before it comes, that when it is come to pass, ye may believe that I am he.—John 13: 19.

Joseph Smith made many predictions, some of which, to say the least, could not possibly have been foreseen by the uninspired mind. Some of these predictions have been literally and signally fulfilled, others are being fulfilled, and so far as we know, none have failed. Space will only permit us to call attention to a few cases, but we invite thorough investigation along this line, as well as on other lines, having full confidence in the correctness of our positions.

In 1831, Joseph Smith prophesied that the restored gospel would continue to be preached to the people by the ministers whom God had called, and that none would be able to prevent the accomplishment of this work.

And the voice of warning shall be unto all people, by the mouths of my disciples whom I have chosen in these last days, and they shall go forth and none shall stay them, for [because] I the Lord have commanded them.—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 1.

When speaking of the purposes for which the gospel was restored and the church of God organized among men, the Lord says, among other things, "that the fullness of my gospel might be proclaimed by the weak and the simple, unto the ends of the earth, and before kings and rulers" (closing portion of paragraph 4).

The only fair way of interpreting a prediction like this is, first, that so long as God's people as a whole, should do his will and honor his cause, all opposition should be unsuccessful. And, second, that even though folly and wrong might obtain within, and unrelenting cruelty and opposition be waged from without, yet in the wisdom and power of God, in his time, the restored gospel would go forth to the nations of the earth, and all kinds of opposition combined would be unable to prevent it.

We would interpret Matthew 16:18, in a similar manner: "And upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

The writer believes that "the gates of hell" represent the opposition waged against the church in this world, not in the next. So long as the church of Jesus Christ was a faithful probationer, and built according to the instructions and commandments of the great Master Builder, the gates of hell did not prevail; but when she was not, they prevailed, temporarily. The same authority that uttered the words of the text just quoted, also said: "And from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force."—Matthew 11: 12.

In this text, as in some others, the phrase "kingdom of heaven," refers to the church. The words of Jesus in the first text quoted are prophetic as well as doctrinal, and they inform us that in the great conflict of ages between the church of God and all opposing powers, the church will finally be victorious.

But to return. What evidence of a merely human character did Joseph Smith have, in 1831, that the proclamation of the restored gospel to the people of the world could not be prevented? From the first time that he claimed to have been in communion with God, (in 1820,) the opposition became intense, unrelenting, cruel, and general in its character.

Before the Book of Mormon went into print, all kinds of obstructions were thrown in the way. The people of Palmyra, New York, called a public meeting, resolved themselves into a committee of the whole, and then resolved that if the book was printed, they would not read it nor permit their children to read it! The combined powers of wealth, learning, and human prestige were arrayed against the illiterate young seer and his coworkers.

At Kirtland, Ohio, persecution raged, and mob violence was employed; in 1833, the Saints were driven out of Jackson County, Missouri; in 1838, they were driven out of the State of Missouri; in 1844, Joseph and Hyrum Smith were assassinated, at Carthage, Illinois, by a painted and disguised mob; in 1846, the Saints were forced to leave their city, Nauvoo, and the State of Illinois, at which time they commenced their westward course. Everything was done that could be done, with popular belief and effort all on the side of the opposition.

But the message went forth, and many believed and embraced it. In 1844, the church numbered from one hundred to one hundred and fifty thousand baptized believers. Missionaries had been blowing, and were blowing, the gospel trumpet in the East and in the West, the North and the South, and also in the Old World. The disciples whom God had chosen continued to "go forth" and no power was able to "stay them!" The prophecy was literally fulfilled.

But let us go a step farther. The prediction would apply in reality to the ministers chosen of God, after 1831, as well as to those chosen before. Now that a gradual drifting away from the true faith had been going on among the Saints before the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, is evident; but after their removal, iniquity came in like a flood, and, as we have seen, under the leadership of Brigham Young, polygamy and other heresies were introduced.

Only eight years after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and the same year that Brigham Young made polygamy a tenet of his church, a conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was held at Beloit, Wisconsin. This conference was composed of persons who had never followed the fortunes of Brigham Young, though most of them, if not all, had held membership in other factions of the church for a little season.

About two months previous to the introduction of polygamy into the leading faction of the church, the work of reorganization was going on. The gospel had been preached in "the dark and cloudy day," by elders who had been regularly ordained in the lifetime of Joseph Smith. At this conference quite a number of important resolutions were passed, three of which we herewith present:

Resolved, that this conference regard the pretenses of Brigham Young, James J. Strang, James Collin Brewster, and William Smith and Joseph Wood's joint claims to the leadership of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, as an assumption of power, in violation of the law of God, and consequently we disclaim all connection and fellowship with them.

Resolved, that we believe that the church of Christ, organized on the 6th of April, A. D. 1830, exists as on that day wherever six or more Saints are organized according to the pattern in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

Resolved, that the whole law of the church of Jesus Christ is contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants.—Church History, vol. 1, pages 209, 213.

These resolutions show that the Reorganized Church was standing on solid ground, for they effectually shut out for all time, every doctrine that is opposed to the law of God or the laws of our country. Several branches (churches) had continued intact from the days of Joseph the Seer. A number of elders, too, retained their authority, not having tarnished or vitiated it by assenting to or practicing any false or immoral doctrine. So the fact remains that the church, though badly demoralized, and split up into factions to a great extent, was never wholly disorganized.

Since 1852, the ministers of the Reorganized Church, standing on the same platform that the original church stood, have been going forth to the East, West, North, and South, Great Britain, Australia, Scandinavia, and the Sandwich Islands, etc., with the same proclamation.

We see, therefore, that although the work was seriously threatened by opposition from without and within, the ministers of the church continued to go forth and tell the glad message of truth to the people, and many believed it.

Space will not permit us to adduce further evidence on this point. The reader will bear in mind that we have already shown, that the young seer warned the church of the work of "the enemy in the secret chamber," telling them plainly of his purpose and how they might escape his power. This was an extraordinary prediction which received an extraordinary fulfillment.

If the reader wishes to pursue the investigation further, along this line, he is referred to such works as Joseph the Seer, by Elder W. W. Blair, and the Truth Defended, by Elder Heman C. Smith. They are on sale at the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

There is another test rule given in the New Testament, for while it may not be so formally stated as others, it is, in reality, one of the best, to those who are in a position to apply it. So we will add this one to the list, and call it

Rule 3. The testimony of the Holy Spirit. The prophet of God is not only required to teach the truth which has been revealed, and which shall be revealed to him, but as already stated, he can not do this, or any part of it, acceptably to God, except under the influence of the Holy Spirit. This is what Jesus calls "the Comforter," "the Spirit of truth," "the Holy Ghost," and "the promise of my Father." (John 14: 16, 17, 26; Luke 24: 49.)

This Spirit, because of what it will accomplish for us, is one of the richest, if not the richest, provisions in the divine plan. It is graciously promised to all who will live in obedience to the divine law. (John 14: 15-17; Acts 2: 38, 39; 5: 32.)

Jesus describes the leading office work of the Holy Spirit in the following language, as recorded in the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth chapters of John's gospel:

But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.

He shall testify of me.

He will guide you into all truth.

He will show you things to come.

He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine and shall show it unto you. All things that the Father hath are mine: therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and shall show it unto you.

It is this Spirit that makes us new creatures in Christ Jesus our Lord. Paul teaches that the things of God are discerned and understood by the Spirit of God; that the carnal mind can not comprehend them, "and that no man can say [knowingly, of course,] that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." (1 Corinthians 2: 10-16; Romans 8: 6-9; 1 Corinthians 12: 3.)

Our position is that the promise of the Holy Ghost is a conditional one; that the conditions are expressed in the gospel, and form the only limitations to the promise. It is not limited by time or location. All the faithful receive its ministrations as their work and needs require.

Every true prophet, as well as every true minister for God, is not only willing but anxious to be tested in the way that God has provided. It is decidedly to his advantage, and to the advantage of the cause of truth, that he should be subjected to these divine tests. Joseph the Seer really invites the application of these tests in his revelations:

But ye are commanded in all things to ask of God, who giveth liberally, and that which the Spirit testifies unto you, even so I would that ye should do in all holiness of heart, walking uprightly before me, considering the end of your salvation, doing all things with prayer and thanksgiving, that ye may not be seduced by evil spirits, or doctrines of devils, or the commandments of men, for some are of men, and others of devils.—Doctrine and Covenants 46: 3.

By reference to paragraph 1, we see that this revelation was given for the benefit of the whole church: "Hearken, O ye people of my church," etc.

In May, 1831, the Seer taught the elders of the church that they were not justified in receiving, as from God, spirits which they could not understand. He informed them that the divine message must be preached by the Spirit of truth, and received by the same Spirit, else the work of those who preached and received, was not of God. By the Spirit of truth, which is the Spirit of light and knowledge, they were to cooperate to the glory of God and their salvation.

Wherefore, he that preacheth and he that receiveth, understandeth one another, and both are edified and rejoice together; and that which doth not edify, is not of God, and is darkness: that which is of God is light, and he that receiveth light and continueth in God, receiveth more light, and that light groweth brighter and brighter, until the perfect day. (See Doctrine and Covenants 50: 1-6.)

A number of the revelations close with the following statement, or statements similar to it: "I, the Lord, have spoken it, and the Spirit beareth record. Amen."

Thus we see that this latter day work, like the former day work, in the days of Jesus and his first apostles, is a kind invitation or challenge to us to place ourselves in a position to receive the testimony of God, that we may know. This has been the protection and strength of God's work in all ages and all climes. "If any man will do his [the Father's] will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself."—John 7: 17.

Thousands of good and intelligent people claim to have received the testimony of the Holy Spirit, in support of the prophetic claims of Joseph Smith and the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. Their testimony, as has been shown, and may be shown at any proper time and place, and as is largely proved by this article, is in complete harmony with the word of God found in the Bible. What will we do with it? When God's word and the Holy Spirit testify, who will reject or ignore the testimony?

When Joseph Smith went wrong, because of human weakness, at different times and in different ways, his own revelations condemned the wrong.

The works, and the designs, and the purposes of God, can not be frustrated, neither can they come to naught, for God doth not walk in crooked paths; neither doth he turn to the right hand nor to the left; neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; therefore his paths are straight and his course is one eternal round.

Remember, remember, that it is not the work of God that is frustrated, but the work of men; for although a man may have many revelations, and have power to do many mighty works, yet, if he boasts in his own strength, and sets at nought the counsels of God, and follows after the dictates of his own will, and carnal desires, he must fall and incur the vengeance of a just God upon him.

Behold, you have been intrusted with these things, but how strict were your commandments; and remember, also, the promises which were made unto you, if you did not transgress them; and, behold, how oft you have transgressed the commandments and the laws of God, and have gone on in the persuasions of men: for, behold, you should not have feared man more than God, although men set at naught the counsels of God, and despise his words, yet you should have been faithful and he would have extended his arm, and supported you against all the fiery darts of the adversary; and he would have been with you in every time of trouble.

Behold, thou art Joseph, and thou wast chosen to do the work of the Lord, but because of transgression, if thou art not aware thou wilt fall, but remember God is merciful; therefore, repent of that which thou hast done, which is contrary to the commandment which I gave you, and thou art still chosen, and art again called to the work; except thou do this, thou shalt be delivered up and become as other men, and have no more gift.—Doctrine and Covenants 2: 1-4, given in July, 1828.

There are those who have sought occasion against him [Joseph Smith] without cause; nevertheless he has sinned, but verily I say unto you, I, the Lord, forgiveth sins unto those who confess their sins before me, and ask forgiveness, who have not sinned unto death.—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 2, given in September, 1831.

And now verily I say unto Joseph Smith, jr., you have not kept the commandments, and must needs stand rebuked before the Lord. Your family must needs repent and forsake some things, and give more earnest heed unto your sayings, or be removed out of their place. What I say unto one I say unto all: Pray always, lest that wicked one have power in you, and remove you out of your place.—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 8, given in May, 1838.

Let us suppose for the sake of the argument, that the popular view is the correct one, namely, that Joseph Smith was a wicked impostor in the hands of the Devil, seeking nothing higher nor better than to gratify the desires of his own carnal and corrupt mind. If this be true, then we have the Devil, in the first place, holding before Joseph Smith, the church, and the world, the high standard of the gospel, and keeping it constantly before them. In the second place, we have the Devil condemning Joseph Smith, and some other leading men in the church, as the last revelation cited shows, for not living up to this high standard!

This would be a clear case of the Devil laboring to build up the kingdom of God, and break down and destroy his own kingdom! Does the Devil do this kind of work? Let us see.

The Pharisees claimed that Jesus cast out devils "by Beelzebub the prince of devils"; but Jesus "knowing their thoughts," made reply and smashed their illogical logic all to pieces:

Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand: and if Satan cast out Satan, he is divided against himself; how then shall his kingdom stand?—Matthew 12: 25, 26.

Do false prophets present revelations to the people which indicate their own weak points, in common with other men, and positively and strongly condemn them? Did Mahomet, John Alexander Dowie, J. J. Strang, or Brigham Young? When Jesus spoke of false prophets, and told us we should know them by their fruits, he did not refer to them as men in private life, but as professed ministers for God in the prophetic office; therefore, "their fruits," refer to their official work, and not to the private acts of their lives. If the people are required to know the character of the private life of the prophet, or minister, who brings to them a message which claims to be divine, they are surely in an embarrassing and dangerous situation.

God has a better way, as we have already seen. "If I say the truth," said the Great Teacher, "why do ye not believe me?" "He whom God hath sent, speaketh the words of God." "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine [the doctrine of Christ], receive him not into your house [as a minister of the gospel], neither bid him godspeed."

In the very nature of the case we can know but little about the private life of anyone with whom we do not live; and what is called history, is often little more than a collation of rumors, favorable or unfavorable to the individual whose history is presumed to be given. The character of what is said, depends very largely upon the popular estimate placed upon the individual and his claims, rather than the facts in the case. Who does not know that the New Testament is full of very bad things which were said about Christ and his apostles? Because of these bad things, they persecuted them and put them to death. This was the way they attempted to settle the divine proposition presented to them! Was it settled right? Will we repeat their folly?

It will not do to say that we are afraid to have the character of Joseph Smith investigated and brought to light. This is not true. The difference between them and us is this: We propose to settle the question by the wisdom of God, while they propose to settle it by the wisdom of man. Which is right?

If the rules and tests which God has furnished us in his word, are in favor of the claims and work of a prophet, or minister, it is positive proof, that, in the judgment of God, he is good enough to do the work. Which is the safer way, to take the estimate of the divine Being, as to fitness, or the estimate of man? If Joseph Smith was good enough for God, he ought to be good enough for you and me. Why not? For all the acts of men's lives they must answer to God in the judgment, whether they are popes, apostles, or prophets. More than this, Joseph Smith, likewise every other minister of the church, was amenable to the church, for his conduct, where he lived and was known. If he transgressed and was not dealt with as the law of the church requires, it was because of the weakness and folly of the men in charge, for which God and the doctrine of the church were in no wise responsible.

It is unwise, unnecessary, and unsafe for either the friends or foes of Joseph Smith to place him to the front in this controversy. God, and Christ, and the gospel, should be placed at the front, and every other thing and every man relegated to its or his proper position. The work of all true ministers of the gospel is to teach the truth and oppose error, without any regard for the temporary conditions which may result from such a course.

The writer does not believe that Joseph Smith was a polygamist; he does believe that he was a good man. He believes that, aside from the gifts and callings of God unto him, he was like other men—in some respects strong, in others weak. Just how far he may have gone wrong in the latter years of his life, we are not prepared to say; but we are prepared for a complete revelation of the truth, whatever it may be.

We have made this defense strictly upon principle, and the writer, like one of old, more able and worthy than he, is anxious that man's "faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." The truth and order of God, as revealed in the word, are always the best; "that no flesh should glory in his presence," and that "God may be all in all."

He who would pray aright must pray for something—that is a truth as simple as it is often neglected. If prayer for missions is not to be empty of meaning, and is to be preserved from the danger of becoming mere phraseology, we must possess some knowledge of missions, some particular knowledge, moreover, in order to know for what to pray at this present moment, in order to be able to make definite needs, definite necessities, and definite people the object of supplication and intercession; only such knowledge renders it possible to make prayer concrete and individual.—Professor Warneck.

Of General Interest

COMPROMISE OF PRINCIPLE.

In the march of nations our country has kept step. We know it by the victory of ideas, by the recognition of principles instead of mere policies. The tree of life, whose leaves were not for the healing of the nations, has been evilly dealt with. Its boughs have been lopped, and its roots starved till its fruit is knurly. But now again it blooms. The air is fragrant in its opening buds; the young fruit is setting. God has returned and looked upon it, and, behold, summer is in all its branches!

I do not wish you to think that the background is not dark; for it is. There is excitement. There is brewing mischief. The clouds lie lurid along the southern horizon. The Caribbean Sea, that breeds tornadoes and whirlwinds, has heaped up treasures of storms portentous that seem about to break. Let them break! God has appointed their bounds. Not till the sea drives back the shore, and the Atlantic submerges the continent, will this tumult of an angry people move the firm decrees of God. Selfish interests, if they are our pilots, will betray us. Vainglory will destroy us. Pride will wreck us. Expedients are for an hour, but principles are for the ages. Nothing can be permanent and nothing safe in this exigency that does not sink deeper than politics or money. We must touch the rock or we shall never have firm foundations.

It is rank infidelity, stupendous infatuation, to suppose that the greatness of this nation ever sprung from the wisdom of expediency, instead of the power of settled principles. Your harbor did not make you rich; you made the harbor rich. Your ships did not create your commerce; your commerce created your ships, and you created your commerce. Your stores did not make traffic. Your factories did not create enterprise. Your firms, your committees, your treaties, and your legislation did not create national prosperity. Our past greatness sprung from our obedience to God's natural and moral law. We had men trained to courage, to virtue, to wisdom. And manhood—manhood—manhood—exercised in the fear of God has made this nation.

When night is on the deep, when the headlands are obscured by the darkness, and when storm is in the air, that man who undertakes to steer by looking over the side of the ship; over the bow or over the stern, or by looking at the clouds or his own fears, is a fool. There is a silent needle in the binnacle which points like the finger of God, telling the mariner which way to steer, and enabling him to outride the storm and reach the harbor in safety. And what the compass is to navigation, that is moral principle in political affairs.—Henry Ward Beecher.

"How did you do so much work in a day?"
Not long ago I heard a man say,
Just as the sun was beginning to set.
The earnest young fellow I see even yet,
As he glanced at the man with a look of surprise,
Honesty shining in both of his eyes:
"I don't call it much," with a shake of the head,
"But—I threw off my coat and kept at it," he said.
"I wonder," I thought, as I went on my way,
"If most of the failures we hear of each day Don't come from the lack of a stick-to-it plan!"
Then why not endeavor (as every one can),
To keep at it bravely when tasks we've to do,
With coat off, if need be, till each one is through!

An Appeal to Parents.

Are you interested in raising the standard of home life? Are you satisfied with your success in the training of your children? Have you ever received help from the suggestions of others or from something you have read that has enabled you to better fill your place in the home circle? Is there anything in your own experience, either of success or of failure, that might prove helpful to others if you would pass it along? Will you consider seriously the thought that a Daughters of Zion meeting is a good place in which to get and to give such help?

Have you a Daughters of Zion organization in your branch? Are you standing with the movement that has for its object, "Truer parenthood, better children, happier homes, purer society"? Could we not make greater progress by a united effort in this direction? Do not the times call for more than ordinary preparation for the resisting of evil and the establishing of good?

Will you not lend your influence to the promoting of this work for the home, realizing that all true development, in the church and in society must be based upon right conditions in the home?

For advice in regard to organizing and carrying on this work, address the general secretary, Mrs. D. J. Krahl, 724 Chrysler street, Independence, Missouri, or the president, Mrs. B. C. Smith, 214 South Spring street, Independence, Missouri.

ADVISORY BOARD.

The Moral Training of Our Children.

American parents generally lack the moral courage to refuse the requests of their children for pleasures which will interfere seriously with their school work. The result is lawlessness, and this applies as well to girls as to boys. The typical American mother is represented by a woman sitting on the front porch of a seaside hotel, whose boy comes with a request to go in swimming. Without considering that mother is apt to reply that the boy can not go in swimming—"because, and when I say because I mean because." My experience in school has been that boys like discipline and obedience and can be trusted to obey when left to themselves. At Groton I used often to argue with a teacher who maintained that the primary thing was love. I declared that obedience came first, and after years of experience I hold the same opinion.

Parents should begin early the training of their children. Reading aloud is one of the best possible ways to cultivate in a child a love of good literature. Too many boys are satisfied when they barely pass their examinations; if you examine into the home lives of such boys you will find that their mothers and fathers have never trained that boy to expect or try to become a scholar. We criticise boys that at table or other gathering places they never talk of anything but athletics. You will find that in their homes the subjects of table talk are the malfeasances of the cook, the fluctuations of the stock market, or the doings of the neighbors. Instead of these trivial matters there should be some discussion of larger interests, of the welfare of the country, of literature, of morals.

There is no different state of affairs in regard to the moral welfare of our boys. Some time ago a father brought to Groton school a boy who had gotten into trouble for using profanity. That father admitted that he had himself been responsible for the boy's profanity, but he said that he and the boy had agreed together to stop swearing.

Most important cause of the evil conditions among boys is the fact that men leave to their wives the moral training of their sons. Men do not see that the boy will do what he sees his father do, or that their influence is worse than their lack of interest in the children. Boys trained in religion by their mother grow up to think religion an effeminate matter to be abandoned at a suitable age. I know of a mother who did not teach her boys to pray, because, she said, she could not give them a satisfactory philosophic basis of prayer.—Dr. Endicott Peabody.

Dear Herald: We are so isolated that your sermons and general good news are to us like bread to the famishing. Once a month, the little handful, as it were, of a branch meet for prayer and sacrament administered by my companion (now a priest), but we hunger for good sermons from some elder. It seems to us that Bro. F. Wiles and his traveling companion, who promised to be with us several months ago, have shaken the dust of this place from their feet, as we have heard no more from them.

The Brighamites have been solicitous for our welfare, sending several tracts to enlighten us concerning the errors of the Reorganites. We are so "sot in our ways" that they had better save their postage stamps for literature of a more interesting character. We have greatly enjoyed and have been benefited by reading Bro. Elbert Smith's splendid reply to the Brighamite tracts, also the able sermon of Bro. Heman Smith to the sixteen Utah elders. How very convincing of our position! I can not see how any man present from the dominant church in Utah could listen and not be moved if he were honest in heart and desired the truth.

Brother Terry has also promised to visit the few Saints here, but it seems he has forgotten all about us, so we have anchored our hopes upon being able to attend reunion at Irvington next September. We are enjoying very delightful weather. The fields of grain look well and soon the mower will be laying low the crop for hay. I ask an interest in the prayers of those who read the HERALD. I am your sister in the hope of a glorious resurrection.

Dear Herald: Having read in HERALD of recent date the items concerning Graceland College, showing her need of temporary endowment, I was wondering in my mind what was being done by the faculty and students of Graceland to forward her interests. The college is and will be largely what its faculty and students make it. If we, members of the church, are interested enough in the college to give it our financial and moral support, then surely we believe the students and teachers will do their part. All must work together. For morality and mental work Graceland College should be second to none in the land. Each teacher and student should in his department do all he can to aid every other one in the institution. If there is a clog in the wheels of Graceland

College, who is it that causes it? Let there be no clogs, but let us pay off the debt already contracted, pay the running expenses, and thus let her go free that she, by the help of Him who ordained that men should gain knowledge both by study and by faith, may be a success and a credit to the church.

SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA, May 8, 1910.

Dear Herald: Like a flower in the happy springtime comes the HERALD to our home. Like the sweet song of the birds after the morning rain are its letters to us, so full of encouragement and food for the hungry soul. Many are the times I seemed to be lifted from the dismal swamps of doubts and fears by reading the experiences of others, and striking an attitude of determination, I have journeyed on. Like a mighty stream that derives its source from a hundred rivers, is the population of our country, and yet in this ever restless, moving, endless throng, how many do we find who are willing to forsake all and follow him who has said: "I am the light of the world"? Beloved Saints, are we doing what we can to spread the angel's message? Let us strive to give this gospel to those who do not have it, and place around the homes of all those who have received it the proper influences that will tend to strengthen and deepen this faith.

Let us find out what this everyday religion is like, then live it. This means, mothers, that you must take Christ into the kitchen to help prepare the morning meal; it also means, fathers, that you must take Christ with you to help harness the horses and mow the grain. We are all growing old. With some it is the saddest days of their lives when they discover silver threads upon the brow, when faculties begin to fail, and to know that you have to ride where once it was a pleasure to walk. Yet, friends, amid the decaying faculties of old age, our faith in God should become stronger and our lives made brighter by a long life of actual usefulness and service. Young brothers and sisters, will you not, while you are physically strong, take Christ as your partner in business? Always be up and doing. Consult in regard to your plans and you will see your future unfolding with brighter prospects. To all who have met with adverse circumstances, I would say, look up when the last petal has fallen from the flower of your life, look up. When your happy springtime has faded and the autumn winds of adversity are sighing mournfully along your path, look up. When the burden of your life begins to drag you down; doubts and afflictions cast their shadows about you and your sun is going down, look up. Trust God and pray often, for in the trying hours of our life through prayer to God peace will come to the tried soul. The calm and gentle quiet that comes after a storm will be ours. Make the sun shine. Always be cheerful. Do you know you can bring sunshine with you or carry a cloud?

I remember, not very long ago, I became very despondent. Everything seemed to lose its luster, but after spending a few hours in a home where all was cheerful, my despondent soul seemed to drink in the sunlight found there and as I walked out and turned into the road, I could hear the birds singing in the trees and I thought, am I not as happy as they? Some of the hills along life's journey are steep and hard to climb, and if we try to make the trip, independent of the Savior, we shall stumble into the deep darkness of eternity's night.

Our bodies should be the temples of the Holy Ghost and when the Holy Spirit enters the body, heaven enters the heart. God never comes to us without his attendants. Repentance cleanses the house, faith provides for the house, watchfulness, like a porter, takes care of it, and prayer is the messenger that brings the blessings of God.

At present I am laboring in the San Diego mission, established by Bro. F. G. Pitt. We have a nice Sunday school, of which I have been elected superintendent. There is much interest among the Saints, and especially among the young who are active in the work. Praying for the progress of the glad message, I remain your brother in Christ.

LOGAN, KANSAS, May 22, 1910.

Dear Herald: I have some experiences I will tell in as few words as possible. On the night of February 27, 1910, I was awakened by some one laying a hand on me. When I was fully awake I knew that no one was near me, but a voice said to me, "Write these things." I got a paper and pencil and the voice said: "Now behold, thus saith the Lord, those of the same faith that are not of this church, those will I bring and they shall hear my voice. Their works are before me, for they administer unto me in temporal things but not in spiritual things. I will bring them to a knowledge of the spiritual things and there shall be one fold and one shepherd." This is what I made out of the writing. I wrote it in the dark and it was very hard to read, as some of the words were almost on top of each other, but that was all I had to go by, for by morning I could remember none of the words. I only knew I had been awakened and told to write them. I do not understand what it means, but hope I will some day. I ask the prayers of all the Saints:

Your brother,
H. A. PALME.

BROCKTON, MASSACHUSETTS, May 20, 1910.

Dear Herald: I lately sent in a request for prayers for my son's daughter, Louis, who is thirteen years of age. She has spinal trouble. While at prayer to-day, a short but beautiful vision was shown me. The hand of the Lord was extended toward me holding a cup full and running over with clear, sparkling water. A circle of light was around it so the water that flowed over the cup looked like diamonds. The voice of the Spirit said, "It is the cup of healing for my believing children." I felt to praise the Lord.

Yours in the faith,
MRS. ADDIE V. HOXIE.

NEBRASKA CITY, NEBRASKA, May 21, 1910.

Dear Saints: I was born at Fairfax, Missouri, in 1865. I joined the Christian Church when I was seventeen years old. God has blessed me many times and has shown me the light of the true gospel. I joined the Latter Day Saints' Church in August, 1909. I enjoy being with the Saints very much. I want to live a true Saints' life every day so I will receive God's blessings, and may I ever be found working for my Savior's cause. Pray for me, that when I go back to my home in Missouri, I can tell it to the people that have never had an opportunity to hear it.

May the grace of God be with all the Saints,
Your brother in Christ,
NOEL THORNTON.

I am receiving so much religious literature from various churches, the Church of God, the Church of the First Born, and other churches of God. They send the Gospel Trumpet and other tracts too numerous to mention. Some of it is good, especially letters from some of the Saints who, I believe, are earnest in believing they have found the straight and narrow way. But what a delusion! How I wish we could reach this people with the true gospel, even though it is hard to convince them it is true. This church of the First Born sends their "divine certificate and table of contents," of the "kingdom of heaven," "Church of the First Born," and a copy of some letters written to Pres. Joseph Smith and answered by Bishop E. L. Kelley; also testimonies as to their upright characters; also a revelation given by the Spirit through Bro. Joseph Luff. They draw a pen line through the name, Joseph Luff. These people may be very good people for all I know, but it seems to me they are taking rather an unfair method of getting their cause before the public. I believe our people have had strong reasons or they never would have excommunicated these people.

There is an old lady here whose life has been a very hard one. Her father was an elder, so she was raised in the church and she still remains a Saint in every sense of the word. Her husband is an infidel and has been very cruel to her. She has been a helpless paralytic for ten or twelve years. Her eyes are good and her mind active and she likes to read. Since my husband and I joined the church we have been sending her part of our papers. She is poor, but she wishes to read the Book of Mormon or any church books or papers she could get. If anyone has books or papers to spare, please remember this dear old sister. She needs our prayers, and I believe if an elder could visit her and administer to her, she might be healed. All doctors have given her case up as hopeless. Her name is Mrs. Lucinda Greenough, Soldier, Iowa, R. F. D. No. 2.

I receive many letters asking for guidance along gospel lines, all of which I am pleased to answer. Sometimes I am so short of means that I have to wait a while, but God always hears and answers prayers. I have been trying to remove prejudice and am getting very interested in the work. I am working for an opening in this neighborhood. Some of the people are beginning to digest some truth, and I would like to see them take an interest in the work. We are all willing to work for the Lord at any place, at any time, and in any way he can use us, for the upbuilding of his kingdom. We are farmers and are also trying to help spread the gospel, but it seems that we are doing so little and there is so much to do. "O! for a thousand tongues to tell my great Redeemer's love."

Pray for us all, your sister in the one faith,
MRS. SADIE BURCH.

PARKSIDE, SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

Dear Herald: I thank God for having brought me into this latter day work. It has been and is life and strength to me. I know now what was wanting in my life. I was brought up in the fear and knowledge of God. I went to church and Sunday school and at the age of sixteen was confirmed a member of the Church of England. I wanted to live a consistent Christian life, but soon found that if I knew the catechism and belief, attended services occasionally (providing I did not sit in a rich man's pew), that was all that was required of me. I found myself in just the same place as I was before, that same empty void, there was nothing to grasp and hold on to, no one came with a word of cheer or help, and I gradually left that church and went to another.

To show just where I was, I will give a little incident that happened about nine years ago. We were living at Housington Park and attended the Methodist church on East Parkside. The minister of that circuit called once and his helpers called a few times at our house. One day a member of the visiting committee called to see me, sat down, asked me a few questions and then said: "Are you a Christian?"

I said, "No." I could not tell her how I felt, so she quoted me a few texts and left me. She meant well, but I was not comforted. A week or more elapsed and she came again and after a few minutes talk said: "Do you believe in God?"

I said, "Yes."

"Do you believe that he answers prayer?"

I said, "Yes, I do, as I had many prayers answered."

She answered me quite crossly, "Well, why did you not tell me that before?"

None of the visiting committee of that church came to see me again. I believed, and to them that was enough. I struggled on, feeling that there was something that I didn't have, and that I should have before I could conscientiously call myself a Christian, and so things went on for years, till I met and joined the Latter Day Saints. Since then I have lost that empty void and am always ready to give an answer to every man that asks a reason for the hope that is in me. I pray that the Lord will give me strength and courage to hold on to that which I have found, and help me to live a true Latter Day Saint life. I have many imperfections,—that means many battles to fight, but He who gave us our different natures knows we are not perfect, yet honors our efforts. We meet with some who tell us it is quite possible to live a perfect life here in this world. I think if we take each day and live it out as true Saints should, we will find more imperfections in our unworthy selves than we ever thought we had, and I think we will find, too, that perfection will not be reached till we have lived our lives here, and then it rests with God to say who is perfect in his sight.

I have been reading a prophecy in the HERALD delivered by Elder John Smith on November 24, 1909, where the Lord is exhorting his children to be more faithful and diligent, and he says that the pages of past history are black with disaster and suffering, but that is nothing compared to what the future will bring. Yet those who are faithful will win the eternal crown. God grant that we may all be found among the faithful and that we may hold firmly to that which we have found, which no man gave and no man can take away.

Your sister in the faith,

FOSTER STREET.

L. DYKE.

I wish to say to the dear Saints of whom I requested prayer in my behalf, that I feel thankful to my heavenly Father that he has heard and answered their prayers. I am much better and feel that soon I will be able to attend meeting. A good Christian friend, though not a member of the church, asked me if they would pray for her. She has rheumatism so badly that she is entirely helpless. Doctors can not do her any good. She says only God can cure her. She pleadingly said, "Please ask them to pray for me." My niece, thirteen years of age, has lately been stricken with spinal trouble. I wish the Saints would remember her in their prayers. Elder Bond and wife and others will remember John Hoxie, of Brockton, Massachusetts. He is now in Carman, New York. He would like to have an elder visit him.

Yours in the faith,

MRS. ADDIE V. HOXIE.

MONTEBELLO, CALIFORNIA, May 10, 1910.

Dear Brother: I wish to thank my sisters and brothers for so kindly responding to my advertisement in HERALD for cancer receipt. I could not answer all of the letters I have received, so take this means of thanking all. May the Father bless you, is my prayer.

MRS. M. C. HAUNCH.

McKENZIE, ALABAMA, May 18, 1910.

Dear Herald: I am not a member of the church, though I hope to be as soon as Elder Slover comes back here again. I hope he will come soon, for I want him to baptize me. I have been seeking the truth for a long time, and now I believe I have found it. I am fully convinced now that the latter day work is the true work of God.

I was very sick a few weeks ago and I told my family to pray for me. It came to my mind that there were elders to administer to the sick, so I called Mr. Hawkins, but they were sick and could not come. I soon got much better and by morning was well. Mr. Hawkins came over the next morning and said that he prayed for me at home.

I joined the Baptist Church when I was thirteen years old, but I believe it will take more than the Baptist Church to save me.

Yours in the faith,

ZILLIE COOK.

AKRON, OHIO, May 19, 1910.

Dear Herald: As I have been appointed to labor in my home district, I am anxious to do all I can to get the gospel before the people, especially in my home town. It is a city of about sixty thousand and it is almost impossible to get the people to attend church. I have a permit to preach on the streets. This is a hard territory to labor in, as it is almost impossible to get an opening. I will try to do some work on the street any way. This will be hard for me, as I have throat trouble, but I will try and do the best I can.

I baptized a fine man and his oldest son last Sunday. I baptized his wife about two months ago. The Methodist preacher is reading the Book of Mormon and we may hear from him in some way. Wishing you godspeed in your labor of love,

Your brother in Christ,

898 COBURN STREET.

JAMES MCCONNAUGHY.

NEW ALBANY, INDIANA, May 19, 1910.

Dear Herald: As it has been some time since reporting our work here we will again assure you that New Albany Branch is very much alive. Sr. Annabel Boss was baptized last Sunday. She is indeed most worthy to our cause. She gave us a most noble example by starting her new life by paying tithes.

District conference convened here May 14 and 15. We were glad to see so many present. All the homes were filled and I had to go to a hotel. Many a spiritual feast was enjoyed during the conference.

The writer with his companion will leave New Albany soon and take up permanent abode in the city of Indianapolis, Indiana. We do this with regret, as we have much to remember during our three years' of spiritual association here. Our work started with so many discouragements, but now we have the most prosperous branch in the district. If all could see the importance of work. To the New Albany Saints we say: Stand faithful to whomsoever God may place in our stead, and you will continue to receive many blessings.

JOHN ZAHND.

2010 EGIN AVENUE.

CANTON, OHIO, May 19, 1910.

Dear Herald: I am on my way to the southern part of the State to take up the labors of another year. I am glad to begin the year's work with such bright prospects. After resting three weeks from the activities of the General Conference, I am anxious to get into my field, as I can only be happy when trying to make others happy. The entire sum and substance of true religion is simply doing something to better the conditions of our fellow-men. If the underlying thought in every sermon we preach, every prayer we offer, every visit we make, every dollar we give is self, our efforts are in vain. The whole mission of Christ was to serve some one else and not to be served. The best way I know to save ourselves is to work to save some one else. The greatest blessing that can come to us is to try and bring blessings to some one else.

My last year's work was pleasant, most of the time among kind and affectionate people. I baptized twenty-eight souls into the kingdom, and married three couples, among which was Brother Kimball's daughter. She is an estimable young lady with many friends, who showed their friendship by the many valuable wedding presents she received from them. She did not fail to let them know that she was a Latter Day Saint. She takes up life anew in Saint Louis.

I spent last Sunday with the Akron Saints, who are always glad to see me, and who seem to reciprocate with true saintly spirit. They are making commendable efforts toward building a new church. Akron is a lively city, full of industries that know no shut down. There is plenty of work for boys and girls over fourteen years of age, if there are any unfortunate ones who have to go into public work at that age. I am glad our State laws prohibit them from working in factories at an earlier age. I wish there had been such laws when I was a boy. I might have been in school at the age of nine and ten instead of in the coal mines and factories, but perhaps my influence will benefit my boys. Let others think as they may, but the farm is the place for me. Man made the cities, but God made the country. For further information as to work in this city, write to the branch president, A. R. Manchester, who will kindly assist you in connection with the other brothers.

We had an awful disaster here Tuesday. I visited the wreck to-day and it presents a most pitiful sight. Nothing but wreck and ruins for squares around. Seven large boilers in the American Sheet and Iron Works blew up at once, killing thirteen and injuring a number of others. Some things were almost beyond belief. Had I not seen it myself I could not have believed it. The engines were blown through the upstairs of the house, went through the weatherboarding on one side and came through the other, striking the sidewalk across the street, and bounding like a gum ball through the fence into another yard. A large piece of boiler came through the roof of a house where two men lay sleeping. It struck the bed, killing both men, and went down through two floors into the cellar. One man was found as perfectly scalped as though it had been done by a surgeon's knife.

We are truly living in a day of great horror. It is becoming so common they seem to lose their terror. I am inclined to think that many who go unpunished here will have to answer for murder hereafter. Men who put dollars ahead of life will be made to feel the heavy hand of justice some time. Is not all this wonted neglect where human lives pay the penalty; enforced idleness where children go hungry; child labor which has put the stepping-stone to hell; organized capital against organized labor like the marshaling of great armies in the final struggle for victory; is not all this but a loud and appalling call for the Lord's Zion, where human greed, industrial strife, social inequality, shall be supplanted by the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. May the Order of Enoch be hastened by a chosen walk with God and that our children may find a place where life, morals, and intelligence shall find place above dollars. May we, as God's ministry, called to be examples to the flock, put our brother's interest above our own or as far, at least. I love my brethren with a deep and abiding love, and my heart goes out in sympathy when I see one carried away in the great whirlpool of selfish ambition. No criticism,—only warning.

I am going from here to Highland to deliver a memorial address. I love the old soldiers and bow in humble reverence to the blue, through their sacrifice in preserving the great nation of this God-favored land. I am enjoying divine privileges. To the brethren who are associated with me in Ohio District, I wish to say, I have been placed in charge by Brother Russell, and you have my confidence. There are great opportunities for work in said district. Truly the harvest is great and I trust that each of us will make good use of our time. Don't go from place to place, but stick to one place as long as there is a chance to do good. Most anywhere in the district you will find plenty to do as long as you desire to stay. From most every direction in all the branches there are churches in which to preach. I am well acquainted with the district and will take pleasure in assisting you all I can. Don't hesitate to trouble me. We have a splendid force and we want to make a good showing at the end of the year. Make out reports and send to me the last day of June, September, December, and February, so it will give me time to make my report to missionary in charge.

Praying God's Holy Spirit to attend us all in waging war against sin, and for the establishing of Zion, I remain your coworker in gospel bonds,

F. J. EBELING.

GRESHAM, OREGON, May 12, 1910.

Editors: In looking over the columns of the HERALD we are unable to find anything from the "Rose City," therefore we assume the task of sending a few lines to remind the interested ones that there are a few Saints in the beautiful city of Portland.

It is a pleasure to tell the Saints of good things present and of the prevailing optimism as to the future of the church in the city of "rose festival fame."

Portland is, indeed, a city beautiful, progressive and aggressive (if you don't believe it ask one of our Seattle neighbors), and we are pleased to report that this "onward march" spirit is not confined alone to the men of commerce and finance, but the Saints can boast of those who are on the initiative, whose best thoughts seem to be spent in the interests of "the Master's business."

At present there seems to be a general revival spirit prevailing among church members of all denominations. The enlargement of the borders of Christian influence seems to be the general slogan. If the Saints had the financial backing other organizations have I venture to say they would not be one whit behind in their efforts to spread the "angel message." We have men eager for the fray, pleading for opportunity, but there are three requisites that make for success in the work, spirit, effort, and finance, the latter seemingly lacking to a great extent. However, results are following the sowing.

Sunday morning, on the 1st instant, as the great orb shone beautifully upon the scene, all nature beaming forth the new life, we were drawn quite close to the Master, the peaceful influence settling down upon the little group as Bro. W. A. Goodwin led four souls down into the beautiful pool of Hawthorne Park. It was a good day for each one present, but especially for Elder Goodwin; he was very happy and remarked, "Brother Shippy, I wish I could do this kind of work all day." These last four make thirteen Brother Goodwin has baptized since he took charge of the work at Riverside, a suburb of Portland; in fact, I believe he is largely responsible for the opening made there. We hope that many more will be added to the church at that place.

We are pleased to report the Portland Branch of Montavilla in the march of progress. Outgrowing of quarters is a very good index as to how things are moving. Brother Barker as branch president and Bro. M. H. Cook as missionary are largely responsible for the work being accomplished there. The branch has recently acquired property twice the size heretofore owned and moved their place of worship to it and now have plenty of room for expansion. New seats, foundations, etc., make it much more pleasant. Words of comfort and hope have been given to the Saints through Bro. Cook and Bro. N. T. Chapman by the divine Spirit and we trust that we may all profit by such.

We look for much growth in the church in these parts and Saints in the East who may be contemplating moving to Portland need entertain no fears of being out of a job, so to speak, in the lines of work in the church.

Such are the observations of a member at Gresham.

L. B. SHIPPY.

XENIA, ILLINOIS, May 17, 1910.

Dear Herald: There are many Saints in Taylorville, from where we recently moved, that would, no doubt, like to hear from us as well as the Saints in other places, and here I can write to all at the same time. Although we were glad to leave town and go back to the country, we were sorry to have to leave so many Saints who treated us so kindly. We shall ever remember them for their kindness toward us and hope they will be blessed for the same, especially Brother and Sister Simpson, Bro. Charlie Simpson, Sister Lilly, Sister Peters, Sister Jones, Sister Noren, Sister Waltenbaugh, and Brother Stanley and others. I would say that we were never treated better anywhere, with the exception of Saint Louis Branch, than we were while we resided in Taylorville.

They have a fine branch, there being so many young people, and if it were not for the snares that are set in the city to catch the young, such as the pride of the world, the skating rinks, the ballrooms, the poolrooms, and others, more good could be done by the young. We that are to be the light of the world have not the means to spend in such services, no matter how much we have, neither have we time or talent to waste in that way. We are commanded to keep ourselves unspotted from the world. How are we to teach others and do the same thing ourselves? If we will quit thinking that the world has the only pleasures and keep the commands and follow the plans and examples that were set for us, then we can indeed sing: "We feel it a pleasure to serve thee, and love to obey thy commands." In the first place older ones should not attend such places of pleasure. I have heard children say, "Papa and mamma go," or "Brother So and So goes," or "Sister So and So goes," and the church workers have a much harder time teaching them the harm of it.

Let us all, Sunday school teachers, Religio workers, and church workers, teach them to put on the whole armor of Christ, not a part of it, by our own example as well, and to try to shun the very appearance of evil. Now is the time for the young to work in the service of the Lord. Later on a great many will have families of their own and will require more of their time and attention. By beginning now we will be better qualified to train them aright.

When I was a young girl I had none of our church privileges, only Sunday school and the Epworth League of the sectarian churches, and they did not think it was so wrong to attend these places of pleasure. If I could have had the privileges then, I would have made use of them and would have been qualified for work now.

The Brush Creek Branch here seems to be in a better condition than it did when we left over two years ago. Quite a number have been baptized; the sisters have their prayer union. The Daughters of Zion had their first meeting this month. Even the young sisters attend the prayer union and all take part. There seems to be nothing hindering the progress of the work here. Though we are poor in this world's goods we are trying to put ourselves in a condition that we will be permitted to dwell in the land of Zion.

I hope that what I have written will be of some good to some one. I have learned from experience that we must learn to improve our time as well as our talent. This is a grand work.

Your sister in bonds,

LAURA R. BING.

TOPLIFF, UTAH, May 12, 1910.

Dear Herald: I am still trying to live a righteous life, a life that will bring no reproach upon the cause all Saints love so well. Being out here among so many who claim to be Saints and lights to the world, who claim to be in possession of the holy priesthood, I would naturally expect them to show it in the lives they live, but alas! I find it is hard to distinguish the difference between the larger percentage of our Mormon friends and other sinners around them.

My wife and I have been receiving recently some Mormon tracts from Chicago, but we know too much about them to be led astray by any of their arguments. I don't aim to be a pessimist, but I have seen enough of these Mormon people to convince me that they belong to an apostate church. I am not sorry I came to Utah, for my few years out here among the Mormons will help me wonderfully in drawing satisfactory conclusions. A person can appreciate and enjoy the genuine more fully after being in contact with the spurious article for a while. One of the Salt Lake City papers declared, and I believe it is true, that an eruption in the Mormon church in the near future is inevitable.

We learn with pleasure that Elders A. M. Chase, J. D. Stead, H. N. Hansen, and John Davis are to labor in Utah this year. The Saints of this district are to be congratulated on receiving such able assistance. I feel that I am a weak brother, but if I can be useful in the service and gain eternal life in his kingdom, I will not have spent my life in vain. We read with pleasure, the account of the Saints' Jubilee celebration, of April 6, and I am sure God was pleased with the sentiments expressed.

May the blessings of the Lord attend the efforts of the Saints this year and comfort their hearts.

Your brother in Christ,

C. A. LAYTON.

Lines from Lamanite Lands.

Being intrusted by the church through its 1910 ministerial council and conference, with a share of gospel responsibilities to the Lamanites, we have begun the year's work among that people. As many of the Saints are aware, we have arranged to supplement the preaching to the Indians by modern illustrative methods of mechanical picture work. We report to those interested, that the experiment so far seems to indicate this supplementary feature will be a valuable factor in introducing the work among them, at least, if those who love to bear a part in working out the eternal purposes of God, and who are financially able to hold up our hands, will do so in such a liberal way that without let or hindrance we may push into new points and break the sectarian mesh and false doctrine which enthrall the sons and daughters of prodigal returning Laman. We pledge ourselves to the limit of our ability by the grace of God to emblazon the name of the Reorganized Church upon the minds of hundreds of youthful dusky stalwarts in whose plastic minds even now the destiny of their race is being cast.

We should not permit the years to creep by and be content to lull our senses into hazy stupidity in the lullaby dream, for God is going to raise up and do mighty things to emancipate and make delightful this branch of Israel, some time. God will do a mighty work right now through us if we will throw ourselves into the work in a practical business way, but woe betide us if we be content to let the Lord raise up from the very stones, as it were, a people who will move out in the fulfillment of the prophecies concerning the conversion of Laman to the knowledge of his fathers. What shall the record of the year be? If it is a good one in the interest of truth, and the increase of rewards in store for eternity, what part of the good record may you rightly lay claim to?

We take the liberty to repeat here as many have heard expressed by the writer in public at Independence and elsewhere, that it will take systematic work, diligence, patience, perseverance, and dollars to get returns out of this Lamanite mission work. What we mean by this is, to get the gospel before any considerable number of them, that it may bear the fruits of righteousness to the salvation of souls. In writing these lines, it was not the purpose to solicit for the sinews of war, but if any should take it that way, all we have to say is, our address is Ripley, Oklahoma, and that as conference appointees, we are expected to give a faithful accounting of all contributed funds, who from and for what expended. Elder C. Ed. Dillon, of Oklahoma City, a recent convert under the preaching of Bro. Hubert Case and the writer, who was called to the ministry shortly after his baptism, was sent out by the recent conference with us in this Indian work, and is doing efficient work for the Master.

In the past the Indian measured his success in battle by the number of white scalps at his belt. We will now return the compliment by taking the Indian's scalp, in a gospel sense, and we are glad to hereby hang one scalp within the lines this early in the year's campaign, that of Wa-kun-da, or David Pettit, of the Otoe tribe. The meaning of the name Wa-kun-da is god, or godlike. One year ago J. E. Page first began teaching Brother Pettit, or Wa-kun-da, giving him a Book of Mormon with this inscription in pencil on the fly leaf: "Presented in the name of Jesus Christ."

Yours in the hope of eternal life,

JAMES E. YATES.

News From Branches.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND.

Little "Sister Rhoda" wants to tell you a few more of her doings, for some of her children "have gone to lands far distant, and with strangers made their homes." We can trace them north, east, south, and west. We think they remember our Wednesday evening prayer meetings. These are still well attended and are the spiritual life of our branch to both old and young. Many of our veterans are still on duty with the testimonies, "I know this work is true."

Aunt Foster's celebration was given in honor of her seventy-fifth birthday, on the 23d by the Sunday school. One hundred and fifteen met on the occasion, and after lessons an appropriate musical and literary program was rendered, including a sketch of her life. At the age of sixteen she was baptized and afterwards saw and mourned the scattered condition of the church in the dark days, until the recall, when she joined the Reorganization with seven others at Dennis Port, Massachusetts, and was chosen as one of the first Sunday school teachers at that place. She has been and is still an example to us all. After the program she was presented with a bouquet of seventy-five pinks.

The Saints are receiving reading matter in the form of tracts. "Polygamy" has been ably answered by Elder Suttill on Sunday evening a few weeks ago. It reminded us house-keepers of house cleaning; and the arguments were met and overcome to the satisfaction of all.

The late Attleboro Convention: It was a success. Special mention should be made of the entertainment of so many visitors by so few local Saints. Thirteen families, I am told, cared for all. The little chapel was very prettily decorated. Two pillars of white from each side supported a large half circle, in the center, bearing the inscription in red letters, "Unity is strength"; and on either side was a smaller circle bearing the words, "Sunday school and Religio."

We are still awaiting the arrival of our pastor's wife, Sr. Edith Roberts, one of our delegates at the General Conference. The Saints' Aid has taken a new life under the management of its new president, Sister Gundolf. Their donations help the branch very often. We have shingled our chapel and it now awaits a new coat of paint, outside and inside. We expect continued aid from the auxiliaries. Reunion will soon be here.

Our Religio has lost some of its interest and attendance. Why? We await with pleasure the arrival of Brother Howlett, of Canada, who will be our speaker for some Sunday in the near future.

Yours in bonds,

GEORGIE M. SPINNETT.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI.

Messages of truth were delivered here for the past month by Brethren Tanner, Elliott, Archibald, Dowker, and F. M. Smith. The evening prayer services have not been as well attended as they should be on account of the Saints living so far from church, and it was very hard for them to attend all the services.

At our branch business meeting the following officers for the ensuing term were elected: President, T. J. Elliott; presiding priest, S. A. Burgess; teacher, A. W. Smith; deacon, W. R. Cowlishaw; secretary, G. S. Trowbridge; library board, R. Archibald; the undersigned, correspondent; auditing committee appointed by the chair, George Reeves, H. C. Burgess, and L. P. Smith.

Brother Tanner preached his farewell sermon the morning of May 15. Friday, the 20th, a joint meeting of district, branch, Sunday school, Religio, and Mite Society was held, at which time appreciation of Brother Tanner's efforts among us was shown. A beautiful chain and locket was presented him by the church, Sunday school, Religio, and Mite Society. Brother Tanner has our sincere desires for a successful future.

Brother Archibald united in marriage, on May 17, Sr. Gladys Gall and Mr. Fitzgerald. They have our best wishes. Children have been born recently to Sr. R. Archibald, Bro. and Sr. L. Joerndt, of Landsdowne, and to Bro. and Sr. Clyde Baker, of Cheltenham.

The Sunday school is decidedly on the increase. The Religio is moving, though not with the rapidity of the Sunday school.

Your sister in Christ,

E. M. PATTERSON.

CENTRAL CHICAGO.

Sunday, May 15. Bro. F. G. Pitt occupied both morning and evening to the interest and enjoyment of his hearers. Sr. F. H. Johnson, of La Grange, favored us with a solo in the morning and Brother Pitt in the evening, which were very much appreciated.

Bro. Henry Keir preached at West Pullman in the morning. Brother and Sister Jarvis, from Burlington, Iowa, were visitors at the morning service. We understand that Lyman Johnson, son of Bro. and Sr. F. H. Johnson, has been suffering with rheumatism, but we hope and pray for his speedy recovery.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Brown, of Braidwood, Illinois, who with their three children have been visiting at the home of Bro. and Sr. Henry Keir for a few days, took their departure Tuesday of this week. Mrs. Brown and Sister Keir were schoolmates.

The Gleaners met at the home of Sr. T. Vanderhoof, 6615 Paulina street, on Thursday, the 19th.

We understand that Bro. LeRoy Wood, of Omaha, has accepted a position in this city, and trust we will have one more worker on the South Side.

REPORTING.

Arrangements having already been made with the missionaries relative to reporting, the branches and districts will please observe the following: Branch presidents will please be prompt in reporting as per blank forms (obtainable at Herald Publishing House) to the district presidents for the following terms, for four months ending June 30, three months ending September 30, three months ending December 31, and two months ending February 28.

The district presidents, upon receipt of the branch reports, will as soon thereafter as possible, forward their complete district report to the secretary of the First Presidency, Pres. F. M. Smith. But in cases where the law and usages of the church are involved to the detriment thereof, and difficulties of long standing are remaining unsettled, the authorities whose duty it is are requested to inform as soon as convenient, the minister in charge (see Doctrine and Covenants 120: 7.) Where the assistance of the missionaries is required at conferences, two-day meetings, and reunions, it would be well for those having charge thereof to consult as early as possible with the minister in charge, that the requisite arrangements may be made.

ELDERS' COURTS.

Owing to the effect that elders' courts have towards prejudicing more or less of those affected thereby, against the elders taking part therein, I would advise that the missionary force—not holding positions whose duty is to so engage—would as far as possible leave the care of such to the local forces.

To those not engaged in the active missionary labor: As we are fellow-travelers to the great tribunal bar, where reward shall be given according to works, remember that the missionary is not without his human weaknesses and has such to contend against; therefore do not ask him to listen to tales of sorrow reflecting upon the weaknesses of others. But rather strengthen his faith and good opinion of you and your brother or sister by relating the sunnier side of life and the beauty marks in the oasis of your neighbor's life. Then when he stands to feed the congregation the bread of life, if the Spirit of the Lord that indites the thoughts wishes to chide, the mouthpiece of the Lord is unprejudiced and does not quench the Spirit, and thus the desired end is accomplished, and good is the result.

We trust that the greatness of the harvest and the fewness of the laborers will appeal so effectively to every Saint that they will show their appreciation of God's goodness to them by paying their tithes and offerings, so that not only may the widow and orphan and the missionary's wife and child be given their daily bread, but also the nations who are hungering and thirsting after righteousness be also supplied.

We also solicit the assistance of the local priesthood that new openings may be effected wherever possible and should you require the assistance of a missionary, consult as soon as possible the proper parties and your wants will be supplied when practicable. And thus by a united effort in all the varied lines, the church, assisted so nobly by her daughters, the Sunday school and the Religion, as she has hitherto been, may accomplish all that the Lord in his love has designed that she should.

Your colaborer for the ultimate triumph of our cause,

R. C. RUSSELL,

Minister in General Charge.

ARTHUR, ONTARIO, May 12, 1910.

To the Saints of Northern Kansas: We have again been assigned to the Northeastern and Northwestern Kansas districts and therefore ask your cooperation in an endeavor to get this gospel before the people. Bro. John A. Teeters, S. J. Madden, and S. H. Fields have been assigned to the Northwestern Kansas District, and Bro. S. Swensen and the writer to the Northeastern Kansas District. Bro. O. W. Okerlund has been appointed to the State of Kansas and will likely be with us part of the time. We have two elders in the field this year who can preach in the Swedish language and any openings that can be found of the same please inform me of them. My address is Box 396, Holden, Missouri, and all letters sent to that address will be promptly forwarded to me in my field. Will all Saints who desire preaching in their localities or who know of new openings, please notify us as soon as possible? Let us all, Saints, local ministers, and missionaries, do all we can for the work of God.

H. E. MOLER.

LOTS AND ACRE PROPERTY

Having bought the Edgefield property containing 80 acres, I now offer this property to the Saints at low figures. This is one of the most sightly and finest tracts now on the market, being high and dry. This property is located on the south side of the city of Independence, being from 2 to 6 blocks from the new South Side church and same distance from the street car line, and 1/4 of a mile from the public square in Independence. The price of lots is from $3 to $5.50 a front foot. We discourage the Saints buying this property for speculation. Those wanting to secure one lot or more and can not personally inspect them the Stake or General Bishopric will locate them for you, and should anyone after examination not be pleased their money will be refunded on demand. For the correctness of this statement we refer you to the Presiding General Bishopric.

EVERY MAN ACCORDING TO HIS CALLING.

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them.—Doctrine and Covenants 119:8.

But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it pleaseth him.—1 Corinthians 12: 18.

In the church there are many men of many minds. They differ in disposition and in ability. Not all of them could do any one class of work; and perhaps no one of them is adapted to all classes of work. It remains for the Infinite One to set each man his task according to his individuality and mete out to him such spiritual gifts as he shall need in that work.

But we, short-sighted mortals, sometimes feel that all men should be cast in one mold,—and that after our own pattern. When we find individuals differing radically from us we are surprised, and at times irritated. We feel that such men are a menace to the work,—that they should be crowded out. We do not realize that God can find a place for them to labor where even their peculiarities shall praise him and rebound to his glory.

Two men of widely differing temperaments find that they can not get on together at all. They rub each other at every angle. Each sees the faults and failings of the other; and each wonders what earthly good the other can be to the church. Yet God will take these men, and using them in different fields, he will accomplish a wonderful work with both of them. This has been done repeatedly. Our readers have but to cast about in their minds to recall such instances that they have observed.

It is a constant marvel to the thoughtful man to observe how God accomplishes so much with individuals that he himself had mentally catalogued "n. g." The man's style of preaching is not my style; it bores me; I decide that he would make a poor missionary. But lo! he is led to a certain locality, and presently I am rudely surprised to find that his preaching has stirred that community to its depths, and many are coming forward for baptism. The secret of it is that the man has worked according to the gifts of God unto him, not according to the gifts of God unto me. God set that man where it pleased him; not where it pleased me.

After all, God is the best judge of men; and he calls them and blesses them according to their various temperaments. Here is one man who is naturally a Protestant. It is his strong hold to protest against evil, to resist that which he even suspects of being evil, either outside or inside of the church. As a result of his strenuous and constant opposition to various measures which he considers wrong, he becomes known as an objector and is quite offensive to some individuals. Here is another man whose nature it is to affirm. He preaches an affirmative gospel, and perhaps neglects to negate certain errors that may be creeping into the church. It may be that the man first mentioned comes to regard him as an individual who is inclined to smooth things over, to shrink from exposing evil; while the last named individual regards the other as a confirmed crank and "knocker." Perhaps in some instances both are correct to a degree, in their opinion; but in other instances they are decidedly wrong. In such instances God has been using both men very successfully in his work. He has given them work according to their temperaments. One has been the able and eloquent exponent of truth; the other has been the stubborn and successful opponent of error.

These are but typical instances. Our readers may enlarge upon the theme at their leisure. It all goes to show that we need a broader charity. We must learn that honest men may differ from us widely in opinion, policy, and personality, and yet in the hands of God be of immense service to the cause that we all love.

THE PARABLE OF THE VIRGINS.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Question.—Will you please tell when the time will be that the church, as represented in Matthew 25, as the ten virgins, is to slumber,—as it seems by reading that parable that all the virgins, both wise and foolish, were asleep when the cry came, "Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him"? Now in verse 13 of the same chapter, we are commanded to "Watch, therefore, for ye neither know the hour, nor the day wherein the Son of Man cometh." Also please tell me where the five foolish virgins could go to buy oil? for it seems the wise ones told them to go and buy for themselves. That they did, seems to me to be assured, by their coming back and striving to have the door opened for them. Don't think I ask these questions to get up an argument, as I do not have that motive. I am superintendent of a little, weak Sunday school held at my house, and the school asked that question in the last review and I could not answer it. We number about thirty-five and have a splendid interest.

H O Smith

Answer.—We are not prepared to say to whom in the church the appellations "wise virgins" and "foolish virgins" apply; nor are we prepared to say, whether the time in which the distinction is to be so sharply made is now come or is yet future. To us it seems unfortunate, for our own advancement and spiritual increase in knowledge and power, that we should so industriously seek to classify and identify the classes or individuals in these modern times, these "latter days," to whom the Savior may have specifically intended this and some other of the parables to apply.

Our opinion is, that this parable applied to the people in the age and time when the parable was spoken, has continued to apply in each period of time, and to each people to whom the message of salvation has come; that it applies now and will continue to apply until the marriage feast is spread ready for the guests. The evident intention of the Savior in using this parable was to impress upon the minds of those to whom he spake the principle that men were to be ever ready for the coming of the end of the world, the apportionment of the reward of merit, for upright thinking and good lives, or for the loss which must inevitably accrue to them if they fail to make the wise choice, and fritter their lives away in careless disregard for the truth, lost in the pleasures and evils of the world.

It is easy enough to distinguish the difference between these two classes in principle. The one class is ready; their lamps are trimmed and burning; their lamps have oil in them; and they have other oil in vessels ready for use, when necessity occurs. The other class, equally virtuous at the start and probably worthy the name of virgins, have lived carelessly, thoughtlessly, and have suffered their lamps to become dim by disuse, or soiled by accumulation of dirt, and have failed to keep them trimmed, filled with oil, and burning. They must have known at the start where they could have purchased oil or they would not have left their companions to go and purchase when rebuked and told to go and procure oil for themselves, lest both would be too late to welcome the bridegroom when he should come, such delay being caused by the labor of cleaning the soiled lamps, filling them, and depleting the supply of oil which the wise had provided. The principle applied then when it was uttered, and it applies now. The key to the understanding of the intention of the Savior is found in the injunction, "Be ye also ready, for ye know not the day and the hour when the bridegroom cometh." Also in the injunction, "Occupy till I come."

The Savior said in the 24th chapter of Matthew that no man knoweth the day nor the hour which the Father has fixed in his power, no, not even the Son. Still the injunctions hold good, "Be ye ready"; "Occupy till I come"; "Have oil in your vessels"; make no unnecessary delay, for it would certainly mark us as unwise if the sounding of the trumpet announcing the coming of the bridegroom should find us unprepared. The knowledge as to the specific individuals who might be styled "foolish virgins," or those who might be styled, "wise virgins," or whether the exact and specified time should apply to the church, if there was any set time for it, might add a little to our store of knowledge; but we doubt if we would even then be any wiser than we are now. It is said that knowledge is power, but the right use of knowledge is wisdom. Solomon tried to impress upon his son, that the principal thing was wisdom, and charged him to get wisdom, and with all his getting to get understanding. Why should we quibble or cavil about the specific application of this parable as to identified classes and time when the principle taught by the Master in the parable is so plain? Why not at once place ourselves in the place of wise virgins, in which class if we remain true to the knowledge of the gospel of the Son of God and obedient thereto, we shall be sure of the abundant entrance referred to by the apostle? Let us be wise virgins and be ready always.

THE BEAUTIFUL IN CREATION.

Were all the interesting diversities of color and form to disappear, how unsightly, dull, and wearisome would be the aspect of the world! The pleasures conveyed to us by the endless varieties with which these sources of beauty are presented to the eye, are so much things of course, and exist so much without intermission, that we scarcely think either of their nature, their number, or the great proportion which they constitute in the whole mass of our enjoyment.

But, were an inhabitant of this country to be removed from its delightful scenery to the midst of an Arabian desert, a boundless expanse of sand, a waste, spread with uniform desolation, enlivened by the murmur of no stream, and cheered by the beauty of no verdure; although he might live in a palace, and riot in splendor and luxury, he would, I think, find life a dull, wearisome, melancholy round of existence; and, amid all his gratifications, would sigh for the hills and valleys of his native land, the brooks and rivers, the living luster of the spring, and the rich glories of the autumn.

The ever-varying brilliancy and grandeur of the landscape, and the magnificence of the sky, sun, moon, and stars, enter more extensively into the enjoyment of mankind, than we, perhaps, ever think, or can possibly apprehend, without frequent and extensive investigation. This beauty and splendor of the objects around us, it is ever to be remembered, is not necessary to their existence, nor to what we commonly intend by their usefulness. It is, therefore, to be regarded as a source of pleasure gratuitously superinduced upon the general nature of the objects themselves, and, in this light, as a testimony of the divine goodness peculiarly affecting.—Timothy Dwight.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Through the kindness of our British brethren we have received numerous profusely illustrated British periodicals describing the burial of King Edward VII. Through this medium we are able to see, as it were, the pageantry and the solemn ceremonials that accompanied the burial of the great king of a great nation. King Edward was known as a peacemaker, and it is evident that he had the love of his people; their mourning is real. These periodicals also contain articles descriptive of the man upon whom has fallen the solemn duty of the kingly office, George V. We trust that the ruler will fill well his station and that his people may be prospered in all good works.

Elder J. F. Mintun is to debate with Rev. W. G. Roberts, the redoubtable survivor of former encounters with S. W. L. Scott, E. E. Long, and O. H. Bailey.

Elder A. H. Parsons writes that he was not in attendance at the World's Sunday School convention in Washington, D. C. He had arranged to go, but was notified that no Latter Day Saint delegates would be admitted.

In a recent number of the Des Moines Capital, Elder J. F. Mintun appears with an open letter to the ministerial association of his city, from which he was recently expelled on the ground that he did not represent an evangelical church. The letter closes with the following challenge:

"I believe that I represent an evangelical church, and I am ready to prove it by the word of God as contained in the Old and New Testament Scriptures, if ever an opportunity is granted me, and if any of the membership committee wish I will enter upon a public examination of the question with him or them: 'Does J. F. Mintun represent an evangelical church, the word of God contained in the Old and New Testaments to be the standard of evidence.'

"This is submitted in all respect to the members of the ministerial association and to all others whom this may concern."

A notable feat accomplished during the closing days of May was the flight of Glen H. Curtiss from Albany to New York City in his aeroplane. The distance is one hundred and twenty-seven miles. The actual time of flight was two hours and forty-six minutes. The time made between these points on different notable occasions is given below:

September 12, 1614.—Hendrik Hudson in the Half Moon sailed from New York on its first voyage to Albany in five days.

August 17, 1807.—Robert Fulton's first trip to Albany on the steamboat Clermont took thirty-two hours.

October 23, 1835.—Steamboat Champlain raced to Albany in nine hours and thirty-one minutes.

1900.—The fastest railroad time from New York to Albany, two hours and forty minutes.

April, 1910.—Edward Payson Weston walked from Albany to New York in five days.

The Herald Publishing House again wishes to call the attention of the Saints to the work Bro. A. A. Reams is now doing in western Iowa. Brother Reams is a special traveling agent for the Herald Publishing House. He has been well received so far and we hope all the Saints where Brother Reams works will avail themselves of the opportunity of securing any of the church publications. Brother Reams is authorized to collect and receipt for any of the Herald Publishing House papers and books.

Man's essential greatness and sovereignty remain sure. Social progress has not lessened Christ's estimate of the value of the human soul. Though this world were turned into one flashing gem, it were as nothing, put over against the man who carries eternity and God in his heart. Some materialists insist that evolution exhibits man as an educated animal, a refined beast, a cultivated biped. They say man is as much better than a trained horse or sheep as he has more nerves and larger bulk in proportion of brain. The measuring rod is physical magnitude expressed in terms of the nervous system as the mechanism of thought. But this judgment is as superficial as it is false. Because it contrasts man's little physical stature with the elephant's big bulk, while his essential supremacy is moral. Pascal's thought still holds—man may be as frail as the reed, but when the reed is bruised he knows what enemy injured him. Man's eyes may be darkened by an eclipse of the moon, but he can measure the moon, foretell the eclipse, weigh the sun in scales, put Uranus in the balance, and blow the rest of the planets out of the scales like dust and sand.—Selected.

Elders' Note-Book

THE BOOK OF COMMANDMENTS AND THE BOOK OF DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS RENDITION OF THE REVELATION CONTAINED IN SECTION FORTY-TWO.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—There are certain differences between the Book of Commandments and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants in the rendition of certain revelations. For instance, section 42, paragraph 8, of the Doctrine and Covenants says: "And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them." In the Book of Commandments this was rendered, "And behold, thou shalt consecrate all thy properties, that which thou hast unto me." During the recent conference the matter was taken up by the First Quorum of Seventy and they appointed a committee to investigate. The committee reported and their report was adopted by the quorum and a copy was ordered furnished the SAINTS' HERALD for publication. The report follows:

We your committee on matters pertaining to the Book of Commandments report as follows:

We your committee find that there are wide differences in the wording of the revelation found in the "Book of Commandments" as compared with the one found in section 42, Doctrine and Covenants, and the same revelation was published in the Evening and Morning Star, July, 1832, as follows:

If thou lovest me thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and deed which can not be broken—and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me—and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors, two of the elders, or high priests, such as he shall or has appointed and set apart for that purpose.—Morning and Evening Star, vol. 1, p. 30, of July, 1832.

We find the above quotation from the Evening and Morning Star is the same in wording as found in section 42, paragraph 8 of the Doctrine and Covenants as published by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and as found in the first edition of the Doctrine and Covenants published in 1835. The "Book of Commandments" was published in 1833.

In regard to the correctness of the 1835 edition we call your attention to the following testimony found in the Truth Teller:

It contains the revelations to the church as far as has been correctly published: also some of their proceedings during the first four years of the church. This book of covenants was received and acknowledged by all the leading authorities of the church, in a general assembly at Kirtland, Ohio, in the year 1835, as found on page 255 of the first edition. . . . For the benefit of those who wish to read and see for themselves, they will please remember the second edition, herein referred to, contains all the former or first edition of the Book of D. C., both being published as one book together, and all those contradicting revelations referred to can be found in every second edition of the book of D. C., commencing generally at section 101, and continues down to section 107, numbering only six revelations. . . . Truth Teller will advocate the primitive organization of the Church of Jesus Christ.—

Truth Teller, July and August, 1864, published by the "Hedrickites."

The first committee appointed to publish the Doctrine and Covenants was William W. Phelps, Oliver Cowdery, and John Whitmer, "published by W. W. Phelps & Co." (See Church History, vol. 1, p. 249.)

The above committee published what is now known as the Book of Commandments. The work done by this committee was never indorsed by the church. The Book of Commandments, so far as we know, never in early days received the indorsement of a leading man of the church, so far as the correctness of the revelations are concerned. (See Church History, vol. 1, p. 578.)

The above committee published what is now known as the Book of Commandments in 1833, Independence, Missouri. The printing press was destroyed before the work was completed:

There lay the printing office a heap of ruins; Elder Phelps' furniture strewed over the garden as common plunder; the revelations, book work, papers, and press in the hands of the mob as the booty of highway robbers.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 353.

A second committee was appointed to do the work. This committee was Joseph Smith, jr., Oliver Cowdery, Sidney Rigdon, and F. G. Williams.

In this council Elders Joseph Smith, jr., Oliver Cowdery, Sidney Rigdon, and F. G. Williams were appointed a committee "to arrange the items of the doctrine of Jesus Christ," for the government of the church; with the provision that, "These items are to be taken from the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the revelations which have been given unto the church, up to this date, or shall be until such arrangements are made." To this the committee was intrusted the duty of arranging and publishing the "Book of Covenants."—Church History, vol. 1, p. 523.

W. W. Phelps was added to this committee:

Frederick G. Williams was appointed to edit the Northern Times, a weekly newspaper, which we had commenced in February last, in favor of democracy; and W. W. Phelps (with his son Waterman) made his home with my family, and assisted the committee in compiling the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 564.

This committee was appointed by a General Assembly of the church.

At a General Assembly of the Church of the Latter Day Saints, according to previous notice, held on the 17th of August, 1835, to take into consideration the labors of a certain committee which had been appointed by a General Assembly of September 24, 1834, as follows. (See Doctrine and Covenants, p. 326.)

The above committee was appointed September 24, 1834. (See also Church History, vol. 1, p. 573.)

In the second committee there were two of the members that were in the first committee, Oliver Cowdery and W. W. Phelps, with an addition of three more members, Joseph Smith, jr., Sidney Rigdon, and F. G. Williams.

The work committed to this committee was done by them and presented to the church and dedicated to the church by Joseph Smith, jr. (Times and Sea- sons, vol. 5, p. 512, May 1, 1844.) Accepted and indorsed by the church August 17, 1835. "At a General Assembly of the Church of the Latter Day Saints, according to previous notice, held on the 17th of August, 1835, to take into consideration the labors of a certain committee which had been appointed by a General Assembly of September 24, 1834, as follows:

The venerable assistant president, Thomas Gates, then bore record of the truth of the book, and with his five silverheaded assistants, and the whole congregation, accepted and acknowledged it as the doctrine and covenants of their faith, by a unanimous vote. The several authorities, and the General Assembly, by a unanimous vote, accepted of the labors of the committee.—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 572, 575. Also Doctrine and Covenants, pp. 329, 330, as found in the 1835 edition of Doctrine and Covenants.

It was accepted by the Quorum of Twelve (Doctrine and Covenants, p. 328).

Bishop N. K. Whitney bore record of the truth of the book, and with his counselors accepted and acknowledged it as the doctrine and covenants of their faith, by a unanimous vote. (Doctrine and Covenants, p. 329.)

W. W. Phelps bore record that the book presented to the assembly, was true. President John Whitmer also arose and testified that it was true. Elder John Smith, taking the lead of the high council in Kirtland, bore record that the revelations in said book were true, and that the lectures were judiciously arranged and compiled, and were profitable for doctrine; whereupon the high council of Kirtland accepted and acknowledged them as the doctrine and covenants of their faith, by a unanimous vote. (Doctrine and Covenants, p. 328.)

President W. W. Phelps then read the written testimony of the twelve, as follows: "The testimony of the witnesses to the book of the Lord's commandments, which he gave to his church through Joseph Smith, jr., who was appointed by the voice of the church for this purpose: We therefore feel willing to bear testimony to all the world of mankind to every creature upon the face of all the earth, and upon the islands of the sea, that the Lord has borne record to our souls, through the Holy Ghost shed forth upon us, that these commandments were given by inspiration of God, and are profitable for all men, and are verily true (Doctrine and Covenants, p. 328).

Afternoon.—After a hymn was sung, President Cowdery arose and introduced the "Book of Doctrine and Covenants of the Church of the Latter Day Saints," in behalf of the committee. He was followed by President Rigdon, who explained the manner by which they intended to obtain the voice of the assembly for or against said book: the other two committee, named above, were absent. According to said arrangement W. W. Phelps bore record that the book presented to the assembly, was true. President John Whitney also arose and testified that it was true (Doctrine and Covenants, pp. 327, 328).

The quotation from the Evening and Morning Star, as above quoted, was published July, 1832; while the Book of Commandments was not published until 1833, the next year after the revelation appeared in the Evening and Morning Star.

The Evening and Morning Star having it in there before the printing of the "Book of Commandments," and the Doctrine and Covenants published after the Book of Commandments (1835), and accepted by the church in the year of 1835, having it just the same as the Evening and Morning Star published in 1832; hence it must be right as it appears in the Doctrine and Covenants; and as it appeared in the Book of Commandments it was wrong and not as it was given by the Lord to the church.

THE BETTER PART.

Perhaps no revelation in the Book of Covenants has received greater comment than section 86, containing a word of wisdom for all the Saints in the latter days. Some persons have not stopped at comment; they have actually ridiculed and denied the inspiration of this revelation. Men who would feel insulted if you were to accuse them of quibbling, have distorted this revelation, and, be it said to their shame, have taught their children to break it.

With the Jews it was not because the Scriptures were not plain concerning Christ, but because they were blinded by tradition, willful hearts and carnality, that they did not receive the Son of Man when he came; hence they must suffer. This word of wisdom, "showing forth the order and will of God in the temporal salvation of all Saints in the last days," is plain enough. If a person wants to break this order, disregard the will of God, why does he not do so like a man, instead of presenting excuses? There is no excuse for neglecting proper attention to the body. God tells us that he has never given us instructions that we can not keep; and this word is "adapted to the capacity of the weakest of all Saints."

If there were need of this word of wisdom eighty years ago, who will say there is not double need of it now?

STRONG DRINKS.

It seems plain that this language refers to all alcoholic drinks. They are not good. God says so. And he always says that they are for the washing of the body; external use, but not internal. They "are not for the belly." It is easily proven by statistics that alcohol is one of the greatest evils of this day. It has been shown that it is next to impossible to procure unadulterated liquors. The most disgusting things are employed by unprincipled men, (and who ever saw an honest man dealing in this hell-broth of iniquity?) with which to adulterate the stuff. The brandy, poured into the mouths of our patients in some hospitals, is nothing but inferior liquor doctored up with the essence of black ants or similar foreign substance. In the distillers' secret book, such things as the following are recommended: logwood, gooseberry juice, tobacco, pepper, kerosene, cockroaches, and the like. Such concoction as this (and there is comparatively none other) is the cause of so much sickness and death resultant from its consumption. The old fashioned New England rum was bad enough, but hardly to be compared with the liquors of to-day that are responsible for a large percentage of our insane, many of the horrible crimes of this age, and the pitiful wrecks that literally wear out their own hearts, struggling to escape from some hallucination that perches upon the mantle or crawls upon the wall.

And the Lord has said it is not for the belly—then why use it for such? Can't we take him at his word? If it could be employed in small doses, then why does he not so specify? Must countless men and women, and worse yet, little children, suffer and even die from the effect of this poison until the chains of superstition are rent asunder, and the administration of alcoholic stimulants in the routine of medical practice be placed on the shelf where rest the fads of bleeding and exorcism? I could quote many statements touching on this point, but suffice it to mention that since the large New York hospital eliminated all forms of alcohol from its internal treatment, the death rate has fallen four per cent.

TOBACCO.

This stuff is for neither body nor belly. God says it is not good for man. Then it must be bad for man. And yet we hear persons trying to justify its use. Says one, "Well, I can't see that it hurts me." Another, "I can't quit using it." What are you going to do with the Lord's words, my brother? "It is not good for man." "The weakest of all Saints" can live by the word of wisdom.

HOT DRINKS.

And here we get the quibbling. This statement in the revelation is not all that we have by which to determine its meaning. On November 7, 1837, at a General Assembly of the church, at Far West, Missouri, the following resolution was passed:

The congregation after a few remarks by Sidney Rigdon, unanimously voted not to support stores and shops selling spirituous liquors, tea, coffee or tobacco.—Church History, vol. 2, page 120.

Joséph the Seer was alive then, and if a mistake were made in this matter, why did he not correct it? Both tea and coffee contain drugs; I mean drugs in the worst sense. Persons who use these drinks use them for the drug that they contain. Remove caffeine from coffee, and you have a harmless drink; but what coffee toper would care for it then? And the same with tea. There is a direct action on the brain, then the heart is forced to do extra work, the kidneys also, and the whole system is deranged. The tannin in the tea attacks the red blood; the outraged nervous system cries out, and the foolish man deals it another blow. The good Father was right, "hot drinks are not for the belly."

HERBS, MEATS, GRAIN.

One very important statement in this paragraph is often overlooked or disregarded; viz: that fruits and herbs should be eaten in their season. There are mighty reasons for this observance. The Creator has placed in each herb and fruit that particular substance which is adapted to the needs of the body at the time that the vegetables grow. For instance, in the heat of summer, when man needs to be protected from sun prostration, etc., he partakes of the cooling peach, melon, cucumber, summer apple. In the early summer when the strength of the blood needs modification, the strawberry does its work; so in the early fall does the luscious blackberry soothe and invigorate. As the days grow cooler, the pumpkin, squash, new corn meal, and early nuts, begin to thicken the blood and prepare the body for winter. Then the heat producing foods are served. Dried peas and beans, nuts rich in oil, potatoes now more concentrated than in summer, the winter apples, cranberries, stronger vegetables, etc. All in their season, as God has said. Then why bring up the canned stuff. Better to let it ferment in the cellar than in the stomach. Pears, blueberries, strawberries, pickles, and all things that must be artificially prepared were never meant for winter use. In eating them thus prepared we consume an abnormal amount of sugar. The system rebels against it as it would against the drinking of clear grease. Sugar is composed largely of carbon. If the money spent for sugar, glass jars, rubber rings, to say nothing of the fussing in preserving, and the like, were invested in the fruits that were intended for winter consumption, such as cranberries, apples, late pears, prunes, raisins, etc., we would be far better off physically and spiritually, for no man with a sour stomach can be a real sweet Saint.

Why not profit by this wonderful revelation? Why so much stubborn disregard of the will of God? The Seventh Day Adventist is putting many of us to open shame on the question of diet. All grain is good for the food of man, but wheat should form the basis; it is the staff of life. And here there is no need of quibbling. Wheat means wheat, not a part but the whole. That stuff with the life bleached out, strength gone, containing little blood, muscle, or nerve food, that comes to us under the names of "—'s Best," "King —," etc., is not wheat; it is a counterfeit, and one that we accept at the expense of teeth, starving nerves, muscles, and bones.

Purchase entire wheat flour and learn to make good bread. Persist in doing right, the reward is sure.

Why is it so difficult to break away from traditions, to get out of the ruts made by past generations? Some people feed their horses corn meal because their fathers did, or because so-called scientific experiment has recommended such act. Is all this superior to the wisdom of God? "Oats for the horse." In all the poultry farms I have visited, and the numbers are not few, I have never seen the fowls fed that kind of grain they need so much,—rye. And the same with the swine. Some people are ever learning, but never able to come to a knowledge of the truth.

And what a war of words has been waged over the meat question, and yet I ask any neutral Latter Day Saint if anything could be stated more plainly than that concerning the eating of meat found in section 86, paragraph 2. The flesh of beasts and fowls is to be used sparingly and that only in winter, times of cold and famine. It is not for hot or warm weather, hence restricted from the diet of tropical countries, except in time of famine, and in the north only in times of cold. The wild animals that run or creep on the earth are to be used only in times of famine or excessive hunger. A volume could be written on this subject, but it may suffice to close in the language of one not familiar with the word of God as revealed to us.

Dr. D. H. Kress, superintendent of a sanitarium in Washington, D. C., and a man of profound experience in the diet question, expresses the following, as given by the Boston Globe, January 31, 1910:

Food has as great an influence on the health and disposition of an individual as has drink. No man can be in health who has a sour stomach, and no one can have a sour stomach and a sweet, amiable disposition at the same time.

Is it not time to recognize that the same intimate relation that exists between the diet and the health exists also between the diet and the morals? If it is necessary to give attention to diet in order to promote health, it will be found equally important to give attention to diet in order to elevate the morals.

Undoubtedly many a crime and many a sin have been committed on the impulse of the moment simply because the brain was under the narcotic influence of poisons generated in the stomach and intestines. The impatience of the mother, the unreasonableness of the father and the rebellious nature of the children may frequently and correctly be attributed to the food prepared by a well-meaning but ignorant cook.

In order to have health and peace in our homes, the preparation of the food must receive consideration. Cookery will in the near future be regarded as one of the greatest and most highly educated and accomplished young women.

Doctor Kress cited various authorities to show that flesh foods tend, whether in animals or men, to develop the most undesirable traits of character. He quoted Doctor Gauthier to the effect that "a flesh diet is a more important factor in determining a savage or violent disposition in any individual than the race to which he belongs."

"In conducting experiments in his laboratory on various creatures" Doctor Kress continued, Gauthier observed, that animals when fed upon grains remained gentle, but when given flesh to eat they became quarrelsome, unmanageable and destructive. He discovered that he could change their disposition at will merely by changing the quality of their food.

This fact is made use of by dog-trainers; it is the greatest pity that it is neglected by trainers of human beings. In my journeys through Europe and Australasia, studying the influence of food on the habits, disposition and physical endurance of the people, I have always found the stronger, healthier, and happier among those who eat sparingly of meat.

Meat has concealed within its fibers poisonous wastes which exert a narcotic influence on the brain similar to that of alcohol. For this reason the meat habit is quite as difficult to give up as the alcohol habit; but it must be given up to reach the highest ideal in health or in morality.

There exists no doubt in the minds of men of science that too much meat is being consumed by the average American, and that many of our modern diseases are due chiefly to its excessive use. If the present boycott does no more than to call attention to this fact it will accomplish good, for it will lead to greater modification in its use.

Meat should be regarded only as an emergency diet. In the absence or scarcity of better foods man is justified to slay and eat, but it is not to his own interests to subsist on an inferior food so long as more suitable foods, the simple products of the earth, are obtainable.

HELL—IS ITS FIRE LITERAL?

It is not my intention to enter into controversy on this subject, as Bro. J. R. Lambert has ably presented the matter in Zion's Ensign for September 17, 1908, and August 5, 1909, but my object in writing this is to show an experience had with some who claim to so believe, and my defense.

During the latter part of July, 1909, a boy twelve years of age and styled as the "world renowned boy preacher" came to our village. I listened to him seven nights during which time he talked principally from Romans and Hebrews upon the law and sacrifices and did fairly well. Later he was requested to preach in the church of East Delevan of which I was a member for three years. The presiding-elder, a young man who had put in one winter in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, having a zeal but not according to knowledge, said he would stand back of every word the young preacher said. This particular Sunday night the subject was hell, and he pictured it as being literal and real fire, much to the satisfaction of the elder in charge, whose hobby was eternal punishment.

Notwithstanding the fact that he had read several of our publications along this line, well understanding our position relative thereto, and had taken the opportunity when the Saints were present to say that hell was not a place of correction as some believed, but a place of never ending punishment and that those that entered there were never to expect alleviation, but a never ending burning throughout eternity.

After the boy had read from the work of some noted reverend that there might be a possibility of counting the blades of grass and the stars and the grains of sand upon the seashore, affirmed that after an individual had been in hell a million and a billion of years, his suffering was no less and he was no nearer a condition of coming out than he was when he went in; then he emphatically affirmed that hell was literal fire, and was about to proceed after a pause, the room being as still as death, when I felt impressed to say these words, "You can not prove it."

The young preacher asked, "Who said that hell fire is not literal?"

Partly rising to my feet, I said, "You can not prove it by the Bible; it does not so teach." He said the Devil had all kinds of matches, and I told him there would be no matches there at all and that literal fire would not burn spiritual bodies. He proceeded to picture hell and the lake of fire the same as before. Before pronouncing the benediction the presiding elder scored me and sanctioned every word the boy said. I requested the privilege of speaking, but it was refused, and the service closed.

I heard nothing more of the matter until Friday, five days later, when I was summoned before a justice. The deacon of the church, after consulting a justice in the neighborhood and a lawyer in a near by town, who refused to listen to him, went to Elkhorn, five miles distant, and hatched up a story, misrepresenting, and the papers were served. The trial was set for two weeks later. In the meantime there was a division among the Baptists, some of the members going to Elkhorn and requesting that the charges be withdrawn. One woman wrote the following notice in the East Delevan items in the county paper, the Delevan Republican.

"Elder Joseph Raycroft, the twelve-year-old boy evangelist of Chicago, preached both morning and evening to a full house. His theme in the evening was the rich man and Lazarus. He handled it skillfully and proved by God's word that hell is a literal fire. A shameful but unsuccessful attempt was made to frustrate the little preacher, and disturb the meeting, but it seemed to only make the boy more bold for the truth. His mother was afterward heard to say, 'It was not he, but God.' In closing he gave a contrast between hell and heaven, using several passages from Revelation, among them Revelation 21: 8, commencing, 'But the fearful and unbelieving and the abominable and murderers'; and called the attention of the audience to the fact that murderers do not head the list of those who shall have part in the lake of brimstone, but the fearful and unbelieving. He said, 'Many do not believe in hell, because it does not suit them, but they do believe in heaven because it does suit them.'"

When the day of the trial arrived, mine accusers were not present. They had disappeared like those who came before the Master when he wrote upon the sand. The justice summoned the deacon to his office and after a severe scoring for misrepresenting, dismissed the case. In the next week's issue of the Enterprise, not being able to get the article in the Republican, I printed the following challenge and have heard nothing from the matter since:

"We hereby challenge any man, woman, or child to prove that the Bible teaches hell to be literal fire.

"We affirm that hell is a place of correction; an intermediate state between death and the second resurrection, the Lord holding the keys of hell in his possession (Revelation 1: 18; 20: 1, 2).

"Hell and the lake of fire are two different conditions, hell being the pit or prison-house where the gospel is proclaimed to the spirits confined therein (1 Peter 3:18, 20; 4: 6; Psalm 28: 1), the lake of fire being the second death, and the Bible does not teach the second death to be literal fire.

"We herewith submit a few texts, showing that the word fire is not always used in a literal sense: Matthew 3: 11; Acts 2: 3; Malachi 3: 2; James 3: 6. Neither the word bosom: Luke 16: 22; John 1: 18.

"We further affirm that there are degrees of punishment and degrees of reward: Matthew 5: 25, 26; 23: 15; Mark 6: 11; Luke 10: 14; 23: 43; 2 Corinthians 12: 1-4; 1 Corinthians 15: 29; 15: 40, 41; Mark 9: 41; Revelation 20: 12; Matthew 16: 27."

"OTHERWISE THEY SHALL HEARKEN UNTO THESE THINGS."

What are "these things" here referred to by Jacob and why does the prophet here call the attention of the Nephite congregation to them? Certainly "these things" could not be the commands which Jacob was about to deliver or the errand which Jacob had obtained of the Lord, for, in the errand was the manifestation of the Lord's desire and effort to "raise up seed unto me" (the Lord), and even had the transgression of this people gone so far that the efforts to raise up a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph had to be abandoned, still the obligation to "hearken unto these things" would be upon them. Before we undertake to answer this, let us take a look at one of the customs of Israel of old, for this of which we write occurred about 545 B. C. and only fifty-five years after these people had left Jerusalem.

In the wilderness, Moses was commanded to make an ark, and in it was to be placed "the testimony that I shall give thee" (Exodus: 25: 16; Deuteronomy 31:26). When the temple was built, this ark, with the testimony also, found its resting place therein. Accordingly, when Josiah, after years of neglect by his people, repaired the temple, Hilkiah the priest found the book of the law in the house of the Lord (1 Chronicles 34:15). Also, in harmony with this custom, Paul declared, "For Moses of old time hath in every city, them that preach him, being reread in the synagogues every Sabbath day" Acts 15:21). Indeed it is and probably was a custom observed by all people who were far enough advanced to have established laws and religions, to keep their sacred records in their temples or places of worship. In this, probably the Nephites, five hundred and fifty-five years before Christ, were no exception. When Nephi, by command of God (see here an evidence of God's desire to raise up a righteous seed) had separated from his brethren, he was careful to take "the records which were engraven upon the plates of brass" (2 Nephi 4:17). Next we see a temple erected "after the manner of the temple of Solomon, save it were not built of so many precious things" (2 Nephi 4:22). Soon after this, came the command to "make other plates" upon which were engraven "many things which are good in my sight." "And if my people desire to know the more particular part of the history of my people, they must search mine other plates" (2 Nephi 4:46-50).

We have been careful to give these citations for this reason: The particular portion of the Book of Mormon scripture under consideration (Jacob 2:39), as indeed all of the record from 1 Nephi to the words of Mormon, are a translation of these "other plates" and not an abridgment from the "plates of Nephi" kept from near the first of the wanderings of this people. Hence, if we fail to find in this record "these commandments which were given to our father Lehi" until we find them here, we need not be surprised. But now we have reached the time of Jacob's administration of the priest's office. We behold him going up to the temple where these sacred records—especially the plates of brass—would be kept. Here he delivers his errand and here he calls attention to "the things," evidently the scriptures kept in the temple for the use of those whose duty it was to read and preach every Sabbath day. With these plates or scriptures under his hand, what would be more natural than that the prophet should call the attention of the people to their responsibility, not to follow the examples of David and Solomon as given in the historical portion of the record, but to keep in harmony with the commands that they had known before (Jacob 2:44), and that were given to Lehi. It seems to us that it is very clear that "these things" referred to in verse 39 are simply the scriptures had and read in the temple there, and the principle announced was that the people of Nephi should always walk in harmony therewith or come under condemnation, even though they got so far from God that he ceased to send his prophets with their warnings and threatenings.

A. M. CHASE.

SUNDAY THE TRUE SABBATH.

In presenting this subject to the public, I insert a quotation from Mrs. E. G. White, of fame among Seventh Day Adventists, and regarded by them as a prophetess. On page 588 of The Great Controversy, published in 1907, she says:

Through the two great errors, the immortality of the soul, and Sunday sacredness, Satan will bring the people under his deceptions. While the former lays the foundation of spiritualism, the latter creates a bond of sympathy with Rome. The Protestants of the United States will be foremost in stretching their hands across the gulf to grasp the hand of spiritualism, they will reach over the abbeyes to clasp hands with the Roman power, and under the influence of this three-fold union, this country will follow in the steps of Rome in trampling on the rights of conscience.

I suppose she intends that we shall take this as divine revelation, as she said several years ago:

I do not write one article in the paper expressing merely my own ideas. They are what God has opened before me in vision, the precious rays of light shining from the throne.

While resting from ministerial duties for a few days, I busied myself for a part of the time reading J. N. Andrews' History of the Sabbath, claimed by our Seventh Day Adventist friends to be their most able and complete work on that subject. Mr. Andrews states on page 3 of preface:

The patriarchs could not possibly have been ignorant of the facts and obligations which the fourth commandment shows to have originated in the beginning.

Why Elder Andrews makes such a positive statement here, he has left us to conjecture. Certain it is that he does not cite any proof to justify the statement. He further says:

Indeed, the entire church of God embraced within the record of inspiration were Sabbath keepers.

Of course his statements and arguments are all an effort to prove that Saturday is the Sabbath, for with them "Saturday is the Sabbath from Genesis to Revelation." But I call attention to the essential fact that they have never proven their Sabbath doctrine. The nearest approach to it they have ever made is their bare assumption. On page 16: "Hence it was on the first day of the second week of time that God blessed the seventh day."

We have Elder Andrews' word alone for this important statement, and the interval of time between him and the time of which he speaks is so great that I doubt very much if he knew anything about it. After saying a great deal about those times, he says on page 28:

After this sad aspotasy, no further mention of the Sabbath occurs until Moses, on the sixth day said, "To-morrow is the . . . Sabbath." (See Exodus 16:23.)

It is remarkable that he makes the statement, "No further mention of the Sabbath occurs," when the quotation cited is the first one to be found in the Bible that mentions the Sabbath, and he had to follow the history of the race for twenty-five hundred years to find that, and then it fails to be a Saturday Sabbath, as may be easily seen by reference to the Scripture.

The fifteenth day of the first month was always Sabbath under the law. (See Exodus 12:17; Numbers 33:3.) This is the Passover Sabbath (Leviticus 23:5-7); and when Israel left Egypt "on the fifteenth day of the first month" (Numbers 33:3), that day was Saturday. "On their flight from Egypt, the Jews made Saturday the last of their week."—Don Cassius, by S. W. Gamble, page 60. McClintock & Strong, vol. 4, p. 665. From what the Lord said to Israel at the falling of the manna, (Exodus 16:5, 22, 26) it appears that they knew nothing of any Sabbath or Sabbath law. The reason for this condition is accounted for in the fact that the law was not given until the fifth day of the next month. (Exodus 19 and 20.) And the Sabbath given at the falling of the manna was a temporal Sabbath given to Israel "that I may prove them whether they will walk in my law or not" (Exodus 16:4), when it should be given. But when the true Sabbath was "made known" (Nehemiah 9:13, 14), and its observance enjoined, it was for a decidedly different purpose. (See Exodus 20:11.) That this manna Sabbath fell on Monday may be determined by counting. The fifteenth day of the first month is a Saturday Sabbath; the 22d, and 29th, and the 6th and 13th of the second month are Sabbaths. "Israel came into the wilderness of sin on the fifteenth day of the second month, Monday. The manna fell that night. They were to gather it six days. (Exodus 16:5.) Now add six to fifteen and it makes twenty-one; the next day would be the Sabbath, the 22d day of the second month. But it falls on Monday. So our Saturday Sabbath friends will have to look elsewhere for proof of a Saturday Sabbath.

On page 80 he says, "Thus have we traced the Sabbath through the book of Moses. We have found its origin in paradise." That may be true (?), but if it is, he has certainly failed to furnish any proof for the statement in his book.

On page 83, he has quite a little to say about "feasts" and "annual Sabbaths," but he does not set aside the fact that the Sabbaths from Moses till Christ were fixed date Sabbaths, the seventh day Sabbath being a fixed date Sabbath as well as the others, which may be determined by reading Leviticus 23 carefully. Read also Exodus 12:3, 6. Here are special labor days. The labor on these days was to be done as long as the Sinaitic code was operative, so that they never could be Sabbaths under the law. (See Exodus 20:8-10; 23:12; 35:1-3.)

On page 127 Andrews quotes modern authority, "Sabbath examined," to show the fatal work of the pope on the church. The writer has this to say of conditions the latter part of the second century:

By this time the invocation of Saints and of consecrated oil had become established practices, and pretended miracles were confidently adduced in proof.

Yes, they said earlier than that, that Jesus cast out devils by the prince of devils (Matthew 9:34). In 1 Corinthians 12:28 I read that God set miracles in the church. In James 5:14, 15, I read that the sick were to be anointed with oil by the elders of the church. Jesus says, "And these signs shall follow them that believe." So in his efforts to bring something against the pope (that didn't exist at that time) he attacks the practice and teaching of Christ himself. And then Elder Andrews forgets all about that, and on page 284 he says:

The early preachers, elders, or bishops of the church of the Romans were modest, unassuming ministers of Christ.

On page 286, Andrews quotes from "The fathers of the first three centuries," the writer of which speaks of "An assembly on that day (Sunday) in which the Bible was read and expounded, and money collected." Yes, that is the way Paul said they should do (1 Corinthians 16:2). It seems that Andrews got on the wrong side of the question here.

On page 287, he quotes Tertullian, who says, "I will not say your own days, but, more, too; for to the heathen each festive day occurs but once, annually." And on page 351, Andrews says:

We have also shown that heathenism, in the person of Constantine, first gave to Sunday its Sabbatical character, . . . thus establishing a heathen Sabbath.

Put this with his quotation from Tertullian, "For to the heathen each festive day occurs but once, annually," and Andrews makes it out that we Sunday folks have a Sabbath only once a year, and if our Sunday Sabbath comes but once a year, then Saturdays (Saturday) would come but once a year, also. So his argument to destroy the Sunday Sabbath would be equally fatal to the Saturday Sabbath.

On page 305, Andrews says, "We know that God at the beginning did appoint the Sabbath to a holy use." He doesn't tell us how he knows it, nor does he tell us what day of the week he knows to be the Sabbath. On the same page he pronounces a number of Tertullian's statements to be false, but he doesn't tell us how he knows them to be false. It is unfortunate for our Saturday folks that they have to attack the character of the early Christian fathers to try to maintain their Saturday theories. It seems that they are at war with all reliable books, the Bible not excepted.

"And upon the first day of the week (Sunday) when the disciples came together to break bread."—Acts 20:7. They say, "No, not on the first day of the week; not on Sunday; it was Monday or Tuesday."

On page 310:

The reasons offered by the early fathers for neglecting the observance of the Sabbath, show conclusively that they had no special light on the Sabbath by reason of living in the first centuries which we in this later age do not possess.

The acknowledgments made here, it seems to me, are ruinous to the whole Sabbath theory. First he tells us that "the early fathers neglected to keep the Sabbath" (Saturday Sabbath), and then he assigns as a reason that it is because "they had no special light that we in this later age do not possess." And that was not sufficient to direct them to keep Saturday. He then charges them with false reasoning. Of course everything is false that is out of harmony with the Saturday Sabbath idea of our Saturday friends. On page 313 he says, "Novatian makes striking remarks concerning moral law." Novatian doesn't mention the moral law in the quotation cited. On pages 331 and 332, speaking of the change of the Sabbath, he says,

But so great a work required the united action of powerful causes: 1. Hatred toward the Jews. . . . 2. The hatred of the church of Rome toward the Sabbath, and its determination to elevate Sunday to the highest place. . . . 3. The voluntary observance of memorial days. . . . 4. Making tradition of equal authority with the Scriptures. . . . 5. The entrance of the "no law" heresy. 6. The extensive observance of Sunday as a heathen festival.

It is surprising that Andrews would make such charges as these against the early church of Rome, after telling us on page 284, "The early preachers or elders or bishops were modest, unassuming ministers of Christ."

On pages 335 to 338 he quotes a number of authors, none of whom prove the Saturday Sabbath observance. On page 346 he says of Constantine's edict, "Yet we have the most indubitable proofs that this law was a heathen enactment." Andrews seems determined to have us believe that Constantine's Sunday law was heathenism pure and simple. His object in this is to make it appear that Sunday observance was a heathen practice, and was enforced by Constantine while yet a heathen, before his conversion to Christianity. But Elder J. H. Waggoner, a coworker with Elder Andrews, tells us that this terrible heathen enactment bears date of March 7, 321 ("Origin of Sunday observance," page 24). This puts the heathen edict from nine to fifteen years after Constantine became a Christian. When Constantine was marching to Rome to punish Maxentius, he is said to have been converted to Christianity by the supernatural appearance of a fiery cross in the heavens, with this inscription, "in hoc signo vinces."

The sight of this sacred symbol, we are told, made such an impression on his mind that the next day he publicly embraced the Christian faith. The forces of the rival emperors met almost at the gate of the capital. Maxentius was defeated 312 A. D. (Elements of Universal History, W. White, p. 174.)

Constantius, having died at York in Britain, A. D. 306, he was succeeded in the government of the west by his brave, astute, and ambitious son, Constantine. He had been converted to Christianity by his mother, Helena. (History of the World, N. Robinson, vol. 1, p. 72.) This latter authority puts the conversion of Constantine previous to 306, the former at 312. But what did Constantine do? He legalized the Sunday Sabbath that had been kept by Christians for more than two hundred years before he made it the legal Sabbath of the Roman Empire, by "transferring the Roman Nundinae to Sunday."—McClintock and Strong, vol. 2, p. 318. As quoted by S. W. Gamble, p. 153.

The Bible Sabbath was not transferred to Sunday, but the pagan Nundinae was; Sunday was made equal to the pagan Nundinae, hence two sets of numbering of days had to be placed in the Roman calendar. This law became too burdensome, and Theodosius the Great is supposed to have suppressed the pagan Nundinae, and to have accepted the Christian Sunday Sabbath, not only as "a legal" but as the "only legal Sabbath of the Roman Empire" (G. W. Gamble, pp. 152 to 153). Speaking of Bishop Sylvester, Andrews says, "He changed the name of the day, giving it the imposing title of the Lord's day."—Page 351. Sylvester ministered in the fourth century, A. D. Elder Andrews tells us that Tertullian, who wrote about A. D. 200, gave the day "the imposing title of the Lord's day." (See Testimony of the Fathers, pages 63, 64.) Also others used the same title in the first and second centuries. See Revelation 1:10; "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." This was about A. D. 96. Ignatius Martyr, a disciple of Saint John, says, "Every lover of Christ celebrates the Lord's day, consecrated to the resurrection of Christ, as the queen and chief of all days. (Enright letter No. 3, S. W. Gamble, page 150, A. D. 194.) Clement, of Alexandria, Egypt, A. D. 306, in fulfillment of the precept, according to the gospel, kept the Lord's day (Book 7, chapter 12, quoted by D. M. Canright, page 189). It seems to me that this ought to be sufficient to show that Sunday had acquired "the imposing title of Lord's day," and was generally and familiarly known as such long before the time of Bishop Sylvester.

On page 357, Andrews says, "Before Constantine's time there is no trace of the doctrine of the change of the Sabbath." I have already shown that the only thing Constantine sought to do was to do away with the Roman calendar, to stop the trouble and confusion of double counting, virtually keeping two calendars. And in the Christian calendar, their Lord's day Sabbath came every seventh day, but the heathen Nundinae of the Roman calendar came every eighth day. From this confused state of affairs, Constantine sought to relieve his people by suppressing the Nundinae, "eighth day Sabbath." There is no intimation that Constantine ever interfered with the Lord's Sabbath, the first day of the week, Sunday. This Sunday seems to be the real and true Sabbath from the beginning, and was to be kept by Christians when all the other Sabbaths went down as predicted of them. (See Isaiah 1: 13; Hosea 2: 11.)

The Sabbaths referred to here are evidently the ones Israel were required to keep under the law, and had no reference to the true Sunday Sabbath, the Lord's day. The mistake Elder Andrews has made in his book, is that all the way through he has assumed the very thing that he should have proven, namely, that there was a Sabbath in Eden, that that Sabbath was Saturday, and was to survive the going down of all the other Sabbaths we read about in Leviticus 23: 27-32; 25; and elsewhere. These were all to go down at the cross, but the true Sabbath, the Lord's day, Sunday, was to remain to be joyously kept by Christians. As Elder Andrews' book defeats the object of its author, I will follow him no further.

I have called attention to these statements of our seventh day friends in order that the weakness of their position may be seen, not that I have any ill will for the people; on the contrary, I wish that I might be able to cause them to see their errors in such clearness that they would forsake the same and accept the truth. They have been very aggressive in the past, with reference to their Sabbath doctrine, and in their blind zeal have resorted to things that illy become them as professed Christians, seeking thereby to sustain their Sabbath position. I have in mind now the one thousand dollar bluff that they picked up from a Catholic priest by the name of Enright. Twenty or more years ago, in a sermon preached by T. Enright, he made this statement:

I have repeatedly offered one thousand dollars to anyone who can prove to me from the Bible alone that I am bound to keep Sunday holy.

The Seventh Day Adventists have picked this up and put it into a leaflet, and since its utterance have circulated more than a hundred million of them, while they must know that there is nothing but gust and bluff in it. It simply serves them with a class who do not notice the wording, and they unblushingly use it; while they know to their shame and sorrow that if they or their Father Enright will allow a candid public to decide the matter, they will only have to let it be known, and they will be met. But notice, Enright says, "Prove to me." With the same show of fairness I might offer one thousand dollars or more, for that matter, to prove to me that I am bound to keep Saturday holy, or even to prove that Saturday is the Sabbath, or that it ever has been the Sabbath any more than any other day up to the coming of Christ. These are among the things they have never proven, and are vital necessities to their Saturdarian theories. One thing more, equally as bad as Enright's statement is a tract of sixteen pages they are circulating entitled "Rome's arraignment of Sabbath breakers." The tract is a sermon by J. O. Keefe, a Catholic priest, and appears to have more abuse and unwarranted statements in it than any tract of its size that I have ever read that was written by themselves. Because the priest has greater ability than they may be one reason why they publish it. In connection with this, I quote from Waggoner, page 48. He says,

Perhaps the first edict of Constantine was not so well known in Morer's day as it is in ours, and his mutilation would not attract much notice. Dishonest as it manifestly is, it is in perfect keeping with the purity of all ages in this particular, for the Sunday Sabbath is a fraud at best. It has been constantly upheld by fraud, and nothing but fraud can give it even an appearance of an institution entitled to our respect.

It appears that they want to defend their position by abusing all authors opposed to them, and all others who practice Sunday observance. It is lamentable that our Saturdarian friends are driven to such straits. If Saturday is, or ever was the true Sabbath, they should be able to prove it without introducing this ultra abuse, which among sensible people never is argument. So far as Bible proof is concerned that Sunday is the Lord's Sabbath, we certainly think there is an abundance of proof for it.

True enough the Lord says, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," and our Saturdarian friends tell us that means Saturday because our calendar is so arranged that Saturday is the seventh day of the week. But the fact is that it all depends on where you commence to count as to which day of the week will be the seventh day. The seventh day did not always mean Sabbath. (Leviticus 14: 9, 39, 42; Numbers 6: 9.) Nor does Sabbath always mean one day. It may mean one day (Leviticus 23: 3); or it may mean two days (verses 15, 21; "Rome's challenge," p. 17), or it may mean one year (Leviticus 25: 4); or it may mean two years (Leviticus 25: 8-11; 19-22); or it may mean seventy years (2 Chronicles 36: 21). These could not all have been Saturday Sabbaths, but among these are to be found, no doubt, the Sabbaths that Hosea (2: 11) refers to that were to cease, and that is testified of by New Testament writers as having ceased. See Colossians 2: 14, 16, 17:

Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to the cross, . . . Let no man, therefore, judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of a holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days, which are a shadow of things to come, but the body is of Christ.

With other Jewish ordinances, the Sabbath (see Leviticus 23 and 25) "was blotted out, nailed to the cross." Therefore no man is to judge us about keeping the Sabbath days. The statement is positive and plain. In Galatians 4:10, 11, the apostle sets aside the keeping of the Jewish Sabbaths, and all those holy days of the law.

Ye observe days and months and times and years; I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain. That this refers to the Mosaic law seems quite clear, for that is what he is dealing with.

For the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster.—Galatians 3:24, 25.

Therefore the law has ended at the cross, as Paul said in Colossians 2:14, 17; "Also tell me, ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law?"—Galatians 4:21. "Ye are not under the law."—Galatians 5:18. So then he means the holy days of the law, and these included the Sabbaths as perhaps the chief of all.

In 2 Corinthians 3:7-13 Paul speaks plainly about the abrogation of the law, he says it is abolished. I notice further in a gospel sense, that covenant or law contained not "the righteousness of faith," and the "Gentiles, which followed not after righteousness," by doing the work of the law, "did attain unto the righteousness of faith" by obeying the gospel, while the Jews who sought after righteousness by the work of the law, failed. (Romans 9:30-32.)

The law is not of faith.—Galatians 3:12.

But now the righteousness of the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets.—Romans 3:21.

So we are not to be justified by the works of the law, "Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight."—Romans 3:20. But we may be justified and saved from our sins by obedience to the gospel of Christ.

Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins: and by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses.—Acts 13:38, 39.

The fact of redemption through Christ and his gospel is declared here, and with it we find the true Sabbath, the Lord's day, Sunday.

Israel left Egypt on the fifteenth day of the first month (Exodus 12:2; Numbers 33:3). That day was always to be a Sabbath under the law (Leviticus 23:6, 7, 10, 11, 15.) Now, as this fifteenth day of the month Abib was always to be a Sabbath, it could not come regularly on any particular day of the week, but would change from one day to another, the same as your birthday does. And from the duties that were required of Israel to perform on the tenth day of this month Abib, it could never have been a Sabbath under the law. (See Exodus 12:2-5.) Here labor was required to be done on this particular day always. "It shall be a statute for ever in all your dwellings throughout your generations." And Exodus 20:10 tells us very positively that there should be no work done on the Sabbath. Also, the fourteenth day of this same month there was work to be done that barred it from ever being a Sabbath under the law. (See Exodus 12:6, 9.) As this was to be a day of butchering and cooking, it could not be a Sabbath under the law. (See Exodus 35:2, 3.) The sixteenth day of the month Abib, or the morrow after the Sabbath (Leviticus 23:11), was another labor day; it could never be a Sabbath under the law.

From this date Israel was to count seven Sabbaths, "Even unto the morrow after the seventh Sabbath shall ye number fifty days." (Leviticus 23:15, 16.) This fifteenth day from the passover Sabbath was always to be a Sabbath, (see verse 21,) and it always fell on the fifth day of the month Sivan. That being true, the seven Sabbaths that had to be counted reaching up to Pentecost (for Sivan five was Pentecost), would also fall on fixed days of the month, and would not be governed by any particular day of the week. From the foregoing facts, and many more that might be adduced, the conclusion is forced upon me that the Sabbath kept by the Jews from Moses to Christ was a fixed date Sabbath, and came on different days of the week, the same as your birthday, Christmas, or any other fixed date affair, and that Tertullian knew what he was talking about when he said, "Those of you who devote the day of Saturn (or Saturday) to ease and luxury go far away from the Jewish ways of which you are ignorant." The Lord was to become disgusted with the great array of Sabbath service under the law as may be seen by reference to Isaiah 1:13. "And He will cause all her Sabbaths to cease" (Hosea 2:11). It appears that the Jews under the law were not required to give the true Sabbath any more respect than they were any other day, for each day of the week was Sabbath in their turn, and each respected alike by the Jews on the date that they became Sabbath. But it will be seen that the day the Lord designated as his Sabbath, was the day we call Sunday. In the third month, when the children of Israel were gone forth out of the land of Egypt, "the same day came they into the wilderness of Sinai" (Exodus 19:1). Now as they reached the mount on the third day of the month Sivan, and were to sanctify themselves on that day and the next day, the fourth day of the month, and be ready against the third day (Sivan 5) (verses 10, 11). "And on this morning, the third day after they arrived at the mount, Moses brought the whole camp out and they stood at the nether part of the mount."—Ibid., 16, 18. This was the first Pentecost, the day of giving of the law. Remember that this was Sunday, they did not work, for Israel "stood" that day at the nether part of the mount. The message Moses brought to them that evening embraced Exodus 20: 21-24, and the Lord says in Exodus 20: 8-10 that they should remember the Sabbath day, and again he repeats it in chapter 23: 12. "Six days shalt thou do thy work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest," and when Moses delivered the message that evening, all the people answered with one voice and said, "all the words which the Lord hath said will we do." Bear in mind that this is Sunday and Israel is standing at the nether part of the mount not at work. But the Lord says this is the day they must remember (Exodus 20: 8-10; 23: 12), because it is the Sabbath. Nehemiah 9: 13, 14 says, "Thou camest down also upon Mount Sinai, and speakest with them from heaven and madest known unto them thy holy Sabbath." What holy Sabbath was this? It was the Pentecost Sabbath, the Lord's day, Sunday. They were to do no service work on that day. Why?

For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the seventh day, and hallowed it.—Exodus 20: 11.

Now the people said, "All that the Lord hath said will we do," so they must have gone to work the next morning after receiving the law, and that was Monday; and when they had labored six days, the next day would be the Sabbath, the Lord's day, Sunday. This is in harmony with Nehemiah: 13, 14. From all these facts it seems that if there was a Sabbath in Eden it was Sunday and not Saturday, and as a consequence we might expect that there would be some disagreement between Christ and the Jews about the Sabbath, and there was, as may be seen by reading John 5, especially verses 17 and 18. When they found fault with him for working on the Sabbath, he answered, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." Here Jesus reveals the fact that he was doing as his Father did in regard to labor and rest; and as this particular Sabbath seems to have been Thursday and not Sunday, Jesus was not particular about keeping it. Hence the answer, "My Father worketh hitherto and I work."

Paul seems to understand this, for he said, "For He that is entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own work as God did from his.—Hebrews 4: 10. Then as God rested, so did Jesus. What day did Jesus enter into his rest? Upon the first day of the week very early in the morning (Sunday morning) (Luke 24).

Did you never read in the Scriptures, the stone which the builders rejected is become the head of the corner? This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes.

When did Jesus become the head of the corner? Was it on that fatal Saturday when he was in the narrow confines of the tomb, in the cold embrace of death, when the last lingering hope of his best friends gave way to despair; when men and angels wept, and devils rejoiced? No, but it was on the glorious Lord's day, Sunday, so we may say with the Psalmist, "This is the day which the Lord hath made, we will rejoice and be glad in it."—Psalm 118: 24. Thank God for this glorious day that set the flame of hope burning in the human soul, lighting up the pathway to eternal life by the triumph of Jesus over death, hell, and the grave.

Now, to sum up, God honored Sunday by the giving of the law on that day, and gave as a reason for so doing because "He rested on that day." Jesus entered into his rest on that day as God did. Jesus broke the bands of death on that day, and became the head of the corner. God sent the Holy Ghost to his people on that day (Acts 2: 1-4). And the saints kept that day from the resurrection of Christ as their Sabbath, the Lord's day, as see John 20: 19, 26; Acts 2: 1; 20: 7; 1 Corinthians 11: 1, 2.

May God bless and comfort his people in keeping his commandments, and enable them to do his will in all things.

WOULD NOT KNOW WHAT TO DO WITH SLAVERY.

Before proceeding let me say I think I have no prejudice against the southern people; that they are just what we would be in their situation. If slavery did not now exist among them they would not introduce it. If it did now exist among us, we should not instantly give it up. This I believe of the masses North and South. Doubtless there are individuals on both sides who would not hold slaves under any circumstances; and others who would gladly introduce slavery anew if it were out of existence. We know that some southern men do free their slaves, go north, and become tiptop abolitionists, while some northern ones go south and become most cruel slave masters.

When southern people tell us they are no more responsible for the origin of slavery than we, I acknowledge the fact. When it is said that the institution exists and that it is very difficult to get rid of it in any satisfactory way, I can understand and appreciate the saying. I surely will not blame them for not doing what I would not know how to do myself. If all earthly power were given me, I should not know what to do as to the existing institution; my first impulse would be to free all the slaves and send them to Liberia—to their own native land. But a moment's reflection would convince me that whatever of high hope (as I think there is) there may be in this, in the long run, its sudden execution is impossible. If they were all landed there in a day they would all perish in the next ten days, and there are not surplus shipping and surplus money enough in the world to carry them there in many times ten days. What then? Free them all and keep them among us as underlings? Is it quite certain that this betters their condition? I think I would not hold one in slavery at any rate; yet the point is not clear enough to me to denounce people upon.

What next? Free them and make them politically and socially our equals? My own feelings will not admit of this, and if mine would, we well know that those of the great mass of white people will not. Whether this feeling accords with justice and sound judgment is not the sole question, if, indeed, it is any part of it. A universal feeling, whether well or ill founded, can not be safely disregarded. We can not, then, make them equals. It does seem to me that a system of gradual emancipation might be adopted.—Abraham Lincoln in a speech at Ottawa, Illinois.—Lincoln-Douglas debate—August 21, 1858.

Questions and Answers.

The questions, "What is the character of the work contemplated by the Daughters of Zion?" and "What are they doing that the Sunday school and Religio are not doing?" are among the first usually asked by those whose interest we seek to enlist.

In the earlier days of the Sunday school the same questions (differing slightly in form) met the worker there, and later on the worker in the Religio was expected to answer similar ones. "Does not the gospel cover it all?" was often asked.

Let us say briefly that the gospel does cover it all. It is gospel work,—all of it, hence it is good work and greatly needing to be done; but as the body has many members, so has the work of the body many divisions, and that the work of the body may prosper, the work of each division needs to have its due share of attention in order to be thoroughly done.

In answering the first question, namely, "What is the character of the work contemplated by the Daughters of Zion?" let us say, it is FOUNDATION WORK, and contemplates the laying of a solid, firm foundation upon which a beautiful superstructure of character may be reared.

"Ah, but is not this mainly the work of parents?" you reply. And we answer, "It is." How then can it be done by the Daughters of Zion or by any other organization? We are persuaded that it can be done only by parents, and done thoroughly only by thoughtful, devoted, God-fearing parents. What then remains to call for the work of this organization?

Simply the work of parenthood united for the accomplishment of the highest results. Parenthood taking counsel together and together, not only praying for wisdom to guide, but seeking wisdom out of all good books as God has commanded. Parenthood thoroughly alive to the responsibility resting upon it, and baptized with the Spirit of Christ sufficiently to understand that, to a certain extent, all parents are responsible for the welfare, not alone of their own children, but for the children of other parents as well. Parenthood which realizes the right of every child to be well born; which realizes the responsibility and power which God has laid upon it in entrusting immortal souls to its guidance; which has a realizing sense of the strict account God will demand at its hand for the manner in which this responsibility has been met.

There are children born to parents in the church who are straying from the fold, indifferent to the faith, and often even opposed to it. There are others who, though they remain with the church, are not the blessing to themselves and others that the children of the covenant ought to be. Does not this indicate that somewhere there is neglected work.

"If one member suffer, all the body suffers with it." Let us illustrate:

"Boys will be boys," says a thoughtless young mother, not realizing that to a very large extent she has it in her power to determine what kind of boys her boys shall be, nor does she realize how much their future depends upon what kind of boys she causes them to be.

She has not studied, she has not been taught the laws governing her own being, and she has a vague, indefinite idea of her duties and responsibilities. She does not realize that in all his creations God governs by immutable laws; that obedience to these laws places her in harmony with him, and that violation to them (no matter how ignorantly done) brings discord and sin, with sorrow and suffering in their train. Thus in her child, or children, are perpetuated the mistakes of her own ignorance, and many times such mistakes bring trouble, even disgrace and reproach upon the entire body—the church.

Is it not good to unite in an effort to avoid these dangers? Is this work to be done in the Sabbath school among the children? Can it be done in the Religio among the young?

Yes, a part of it may be done even there, but it can never be done thoroughly by anyone but parents or guardians, and to such the Daughters of Zion say: "Come and let us counsel together, pray together, and together labor for the advancement of the cause we love—the cause of Zion, the pure in heart.

Requests for Prayer.

Sr. L. Gamet, Inman, Nebraska, writes that Bro. J. H. Jackson, of Meadow Grove, Nebraska, is seriously ill and requests the prayers of the church in his behalf.

Sr. Annie Johnston, Huron, South Dakota, writes: "Sister Marsent has been afflicted with rheumatism since last Thanksgiving. She is able to walk with crutches, but the knee is still stiff. She wishes fasting and prayer that if it is the Lord's will she may be healed."

Letter Department

MCGREGOR, MINNESOTA, May 25, 1910.

Dear Herald: We are still striving to do God's will. We have not the church privileges, as a good many of you have, and of course it seems harder to live our religion, but I hope and pray that we may not falter by the way, but ever be found doing God's will. It is hard to always live right. We meet with so many discouragements on account of our lack of faith. We want to come to Zion as soon as the Lord can open a way for us. May God hasten that glad day when he will make his appearance, is our earnest prayer.

There were two Mormons here and left some tracts for us to read. One was called, "The plan of salvation," and the other was called, "The Reorganized Church vs. salvation for the dead." They were told that there were some Latter Day Saints here, but they said, "They are different from us." I was glad they said it, for some in the neighborhood said that we were all the same.

They came back in about a month wanting to get a drink. They wanted to know if we had read their tracts. I told them that I read part of them and then they wanted to know what I thought of them. I told them that we belonged to the Latter Day Saints, and that there was a great difference between us. They said, "O yes, certainly, there is just as much difference between us as there is between the two Catholic churches," and several others they named. They said, "We did not come to discuss religion, but to get a drink and find out the nearest way to the railroad." I wanted them to stop where my husband was working and have a talk with him, but they did not stop.

We take the HERALD, Ensign, Journal of History, Autumn Leaves, and Hope, and think they are all of the best reading. This spring I was very sick.

I would take cramping spells which would be much worse from about ten to twelve in the morning and from five to eight or nine in the evening, and was steadily growing worse. They sent a telegram to my father, but he could not come, for mother was sick. Two days after that when I was the worst, about noon, the pain suddenly left me and I was given to understand that prayers had been offered for me. The old lady that stayed with me noticed the difference as soon as she came into the room. To God we give all the glory.

Remember us in your prayers, for we know by the united prayers of the Saints much can be accomplished.

Your sister in the one faith,

BICKNELL, INDIANA, May 31, 1910.

Dear Herald: There are quite a few Saints here. Brother Rogers lost his wife, May 7, and the remains were sent to Portsmouth, Ohio, for burial, where she and Brother Rogers were raised. We tried in our weakness to show what a contrast there was in the way God deals with men in the hereafter and how men say, We believe some good was done and if so, we want God to have all the honor and glory.

I visited Brother Tempest and family, also Sister Nelson in Terre Haute. They are strong in the faith. They are also receiving tracts from Utah that are not appreciated. The Saints of God do not need the doctrines of devils. All their tracts lead to polygamy.

May God bless his Saints everywhere is the prayer of your brother in Christ.

ARLINGTON, SOUTH DAKOTA, May 30, 1910.

Dear Herald: I commenced tent work here yesterday. It is out in the country on the farm of Sr. Celia McCallum. A Sunday school has been kept in her home for about one year with an enrollment of thirty-six. Yesterday forty-two were present in the tent. I preached to an audience of about twenty-five in the morning service and forty at night. It is more pleasant and attractive than in the schoolhouse. The great drawback is the pleasure of the world. The only difference between the country and city is as to the number.

My mission address is 706 West Sixth street, Madison, South Dakota.

DAHINDA, ILLINOIS, May 26, 1910.

Dear Herald: The HERALD is a welcome visitor to us. We enjoy reading the letters from the different brothers and sisters, telling of the truthfulness of this work. We feel thankful to our heavenly Father for the gospel that brings so much peace, joy, and happiness to the lives of so many. This great latter day work makes Saints feel that the longer they are in it the better they like it, and they long to do and keep all of God's blessed commandments. We are frail and prone to wander, but we do not know that God can strengthen us to overcome all that will hinder our sweet communion with him.

Not long ago, I was asked what church I belonged to. I said, "To the Latter Day Saints." They said it was too bad, but I told them that I did not think like that, and it does me good to think I am associated with this glorious gospel.

It is my prayer that I along with you may let my light shine in the straight and narrow way that leadeth to life everlasting, that others seeing our good works may be led to a knowledge of the same. My husband has been in this work for over twenty years. He is an elder, and is also president of this branch. We have good prayer meetings here as well as other good meetings. At times there are quite a number present and we feel that the good seed is being sown here, and we pray it will yield an abundant harvest. I believe that the Saints here are trying to walk in the light. We have two little boys and it is our earnest desire and prayer that they may grow up in grace and have a knowledge of the truth and be bright and shining lights in proclaiming this gospel to the sons and daughters of men.

Your sister in the faith,

HESPERIA, CALIFORNIA, May 21, 1910.

Dear Herald: You are one of my most welcome visitors, and when you fail to put in your appearance, I am surely much disappointed, and keep close watch on the office until my paper puts in its appearance. How those that are denied the privilege of hearing the gospel preached can do without the dear HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves, is past my understanding.

Like many others I am one of the scattered, living out on the Mojave desert of California. But I can truthfully say that God is here as well as elsewhere, if we exercise the proper faith, keep his commandments, and walk in the path "that leads to life everlasting." The way is so clearly blazed before us by the Master who said, "Follow me," that we could hardly make a mistake if we would ever watch "unto prayer," as he has also said, "Men ought always to pray, and not to faint," remembering "that the prayer of the righteous availeth much," while the prayers of the wicked "are an abomination in the sight of the Lord."

I am track foreman here on the Santa Fé, have been sorely and wrongfully persecuted by outsiders, but God has ever been my shield and guide. And so long as God is on our side we do not fear the persecutors, no matter who they are. He has always heard and answered our prayers, when we exercised the proper faith by a close walk with him. Those of our family that have been sick and afflicted have been miraculously healed,—to God be the praise.

At one time last summer, while praying to God at the dead hour of midnight for light on a certain subject, I was in the Spirit told that, "I, your God, have heard your prayers," and that those I loved would shortly obey the gospel. Less than six months after that time five of my children were led into the waters of baptism by Bro. C. E. Crumley, of San Bernardino. How we did rejoice to see those dearer than life (this life) "born of the water and of the Spirit."

Pray for us that God will bless us with knowledge and wisdom, that we through him may be able to ever keep them in the straight and narrow way. We realize the fact that our responsibility has now only begun.

We, too, like a great many of the brethren, have been receiving "plenty" of the literature of the Salt Lake kind. But they would do better if they would devote their time and money to caring for the poor and afflicted, and possibly gain some converts to thinking that they were trying to follow that meek and lowly one, Christ Jesus. As for us, judging the future by their past, as well as the misleading statements that are in their literature, we can't possibly see where any well-informed "Reorganite" could or would be converted to "join in with them,"—not I at least. Knowing their history as we do, we voice the sentiment of Brother Smith: We can well afford to lose anyone that desires to follow after those that are practicing and teaching the abomination that David and Solomon practiced, which was an "abomination in the sight of the Lord."

Take for an illustration the epitome of faith, as compiled by the "Seer." Read it carefully; then write by its side their Adam-god, blood atonement, nefarious, so-called revelation on celestial and polygamous marriages, "destroying angel," etc. You will then be able to clearly see who, what, and where the true and only original church is, and I flatter myself with the idea that the name that would appear before our Salt Lake brethren would stand out in bold relief, and spell "Reorganite" to them as well as it does to us. May God ever keep, guide, and protect those that pray and strive to follow him, is the prayer of your brother in bonds of the restored gospel.

In a dream that my son had, it spoke of a slaughter house. I think it meant the hospital where I was taken to be operated on. I was there a month. No one thought I would live. I was sixty-seven years old last January, but thanks be to my heavenly Father and the good nurses and doctors, I am so I can wait on myself and do the work for my son who is at home on the farm with me. May God bless all his Saints and all the honest in heart.

MAQUOKETA, IOWA.

Dear Herald: We are very thankful to our heavenly Father for the blessings he has bestowed on us from time to time and for a knowledge of the gospel. Our number is small in this place, but we are trying to keep the camp fires blazing. We have prayer meeting every week and a Bible and Book of Mormon class. Bro. John Heide, of Fulton, has been very faithful to us for a year in coming to talk to us, and his sermons and kind and brotherly counsel, with the other elders who come occasionally, have given us much strength and encouragement.

When we read of so many isolated ones who hear a sermon only once in a long while, we feel very unworthy and think we do not appreciate our privileges as we should, but we hope by God's help to overcome all our imperfections.

Sr. Minnie Davis, who has had poor health and is blind at times, asks the prayers of the Saints that, if it be God's will, she may be restored to health again.

Your sister in the faith,
MAE DAVIS.

TRYON, NEBRASKA, May 24, 1910.

Dear Herald Readers: I like the HERALD very much. I think there are so many instructive and helpful letters and articles in it. If we wish to enter the great feast when Christ comes, we can not expect to do so if we are not faithful. We can not go to the great marriage feast of the Lamb, unless we have on the robe of purity.

I want to ask the prayers of the Saints in behalf of my uncle, Henry W. Godfrey, who is in the insane asylum at Pueblo, Colorado, that if it be the Lord's will, he may be healed of this affliction. He has been in the insane asylum for some four or five years. If there are any Saints living in Pueblo, I know he would be very glad to have them call and see him at the asylum, as he is very lonesome.

We have a little Sunday school and Religio here. Although the attendance is small, I hope that it may increase and that the Lord's work may go onward and upward. I have been in the church six years and I have never regretted the step I took when I was eight years old.

PEARL STODDARD.

GAMBURG, RIPLEY COUNTY, MISSOURI.

Dear Herald: I have been appointed to southeastern Missouri, and as I want to get acquainted with all the Saints in my field they will do me a favor by writing to me at Naylor.

By so doing, I can make arrangements for meetings in their part of the territory and in this way we can all help in this great work, if we can not all preach. We can all help the minister and help open the way for others to see the light so that we will be coworkers for good. May the message of God be pure and simple and easily understood.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
H. V. BRAUN.

JOPLIN, MISSOURI, May 28, 1910.

Dear Herald: I find on every hand willing and eager readers for Latter Day Saint literature, prejudice giving way to eager listeners. Creeds are crumbling to pieces; spiritual rebellion is growing worse; the fall is sure and near at hand and great shall be the fall. Great and noble men of this condition in forms of godliness will turn to the fullness of the gospel. For the past eighty years the pulpit and press have failed in their rejection. Churches were built up for gain. Their craft was in danger, but now they have changed their attempt to carry on man made religions, built upon the sands for foundations. All men were commanded to repent.

The gospel is preached as a witness in the world and to all nations, kindred, tongue, and people. A nation born out of all nations, a designed ensign set up, the Book of Mormon and the Bible, and proof shall continue to be turned to public gaze.

The arming of all nations under the guise of peace is only a cry of peace, and there shall be no peace. An awful doom awaits the wicked nations of the earth. The arm of God will ere long fall upon them and they who can not take up sword to defend themselves must needs flee to Zion. The awful decree that the wicked shall perish leaves no way of escape, but the great and noble men, even the kings and princes out of all nations, come with their gold and silver and precious things to offer at the feet of Ephraim in Zion, a marvelous and matchless wonder to all nations in Zion, and the hill of Zion will be a pillar of fire by night.

Our Lord and Christ will come and reign over many nations for a thousand years and those that are faithful to the end will sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven, for all things will be gathered in both heaven and earth.

Let us warn our neighbors that there may be many stars in our crown.

Faithfully yours in Christ,
A. N. HOXIE.

PERRY, IOWA.

Dear Herald: The work in Perry has taken on a new impetus. We have secured the Commercial Hall of the business college for services and everything seems now to be in our favor. Brethren Clark and Salisbury have each made a trip from Des Moines to dispense the true word to us and both sermons were greatly enjoyed. Brother Clark's principal theme was the eleventh hour. Brother Salisbury portrayed the plan of salvation. Many outsiders have promised to attend our services. We all hope they will keep their promises.

Our people here are hospitable and kind. There are no slanderers or devourers of any kind among them and each one seems to have his mind wholly on the work. The Brighamites had seven men here last fall, but they were asked to move on and nothing was heard from their sermons. People in general know no difference between us, and the student of nature does not care to hear the other side discussed, while those who are not church goers are not interested in either side.

We expect a couple of baptisms here soon. Perry is the old stamping ground of Brn. John Roth, Billy Johnson, James Morgan, and some others. All these men were favorites in this community and correspondence with these brothers is asked for. Here is where Brethren Roth and Sedgwick worked together for the benefit of outsiders and were not appreciated until their departure. We hope to meet with the conference people in Des Moines on June 8.

NELLIE M. MARTIN.

JOHNNIE, NEVADA.

When I read the letters from the Saints it makes me feel as though I would like to write all the time. We came here with Elder James Mead, from near Flint, Michigan. We are the only Saints here. I am thirteen years old, and am learning fast so I can come to Graceland College some time soon. Pray for us, as there is no church nor Saints with whom we can associate.

Your brother in Christ,
EDWARD W. JONES.

MOOSE JAW, SASKATCHEWAN.

I will be pleased to learn if there are any Saints in or near Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan.

S. E. HEWITT.

CLINTON, MISSOURI, May 24, 1910.

Dear Herald: I am unable to work at all, so I can't make my own living. I have to live with my children and friends. My children are all poor and hardly able to support their families, now that work is so scarce. One of my sons was crippled last November in the mines. He is not able to be out of bed yet. His wife and children have to depend upon the mercies of the people to be supported. His wife belongs to the church. She was baptized by Bro. I. N. White. When she was a child, she and her brother and myself belonged to the Deep Water Branch. I have the rheumatism so badly that I am unable to comb myself or dress myself. I ask the Saints to pray for me that I may be healed if it be the Lord's will, and that I may hold out faithful to the end.

ANNA M. HUTCHINS.

CENTRALIA, WASHINGTON, May 22, 1910.

Editors Herald: Please note the following corrections to my hymn, "Forth to battle, sons of Zion," on page 492 of the HERALD for May 18. The first two lines of third stanza should read:

"Soon from all four winds will gather
Out the people of our God."

Yours in the faith,

LEONARD S. RHODES.

From Canada.

We are still in the faith, doing what our hands find to do, all for the good of the work we love. A few words of information concerning the West might be appreciated by the readers of the HERALD. Any having a desire to come west should be certain that God's hand is doing the directing. This being the case, there should be no fear of coming west.

Railroads are being built every year, penetrating in new localities where thousands of acres of land can be homesteaded and bought. Coal is found in abundance in nearly every part of the Northwest. Grain growing is a success. Some have been hailed, but not general. Occasionally early frost has occurred in this vicinity, has not damaged anything except on low ground. Grain on higher ground ripens in nearly every case.

This is the greatest dairy and stock country in the world, in my judgment. There are also thousands of horses raised that haven't cost their owner a bushel of oats or a shingle for shelter. Horses graze the year around on prairie hay. They bring from one hundred and fifty to seven hundred dollars a pair; oxen from one to two hundred and fifty dollars a pair; cows thirty to sixty dollars. Draft horses are in great demand this year.

Grain ranks first in the world in yield; wheat went over forty bushels to the acre and oats in many parts went over eighty bushels. Other grains accordingly as well. Timothy hay is a success. Roots, such as turnips, carrots, beets, potatoes, and cabbage do excellently. The seasons are short and the nights too cool for corn, tomatoes, cucumbers, pumpkins, although many have had fine success with them.

Parties coming here should have means according to their families. Where families are all grown so that they can earn something, there are practically no funds needed, as there are always opportunities for work. One needs some funds so as to travel to find the best locality for homestead entry. Parties desiring information further should write to Frank Oliver, minister of interior of Ottawa, Canada. Also get from the above named, name and address of agents in the State which they may wish to reside, and rates and any information will be cheerfully furnished.

Trusting the foregoing will be useful to some, I am ever your brother and colaborer.

FRED A. ROW.

News From Branches.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI.

Regular sessions of the Religio have been held since last report; attendance and interest have been fair, though there is room for improvement.

On the evening of May 20, our regular meeting night, the Sunday school and Mite Society joined us in giving Brother Tanner, who has been an active Religio worker while among us, a farewell program. Talks were given, representing each organization, the branch and district also being present. Vocal and instrumental music was enjoyed and a nice little token was given Brother Tanner, to all of which he responded in a feeling manner. Such manifestations as this, evidence the fact that our young people are heeding the instructions received in their lessons and showing their faith by their works.

One of our Religians, Sr. Anna Mowry, was baptized the evening of May 18. We are always pleased to see our young people serving the Lord in their strength.

Your sister and coworker,

E. M. PATTERSON.

2739 DE JONG STREET.

CENTRAL CHICAGO.

Friday, May 27. Our Religio program regarding Memorial Day was quite interesting and very enjoyable.

Sunday, May 29. Very excellent sermon by Elder F. G. Pitt. Appropriate remarks regarding our heroes and the trials and conflicts of war and then as to our spiritual welfare. Are we fighting the good fight of faith? Are we putting on the whole gospel armor, and lastly the shield of faith that we may be able to withstand the fiery darts of the Evil One? If our shield is strong enough, we should never fall, no difference how much we are criticised, shunned, or forsaken. May we grow stronger as the months and years pass by and be valiant soldiers in the gospel army. Bro. Harry Passman occupied in the evening, also favoring us with a memorial sermon which was much appreciated.

Monday, Decoration Day. Very cold and disagreeable, but not raining. Quite a fair attendance and a very enjoyable time reported at the union picnic held at River Forest. The tables were turned, however, regarding the ball game, the West Side winning this time, but not nearly so great a victory as for the South Side at the last picnic.

Wednesday, June 1. A good attendance of young people at the prayer meeting, which was spiritual and we feel much enjoyed by all. We were very glad to see Elders F. G. Pitt, James Keir, and Brother Bone, and to meet our new missionary, Elder Tanner.

Sr. Maggie Kelso leaves to-day for South Haven, Michigan, to visit her daughter, Sr. Addison Frantz. The Gleaners met to-day (Thursday) at Sister Pement's home, 5217 South Forty-fourth avenue, and were entertained at luncheon.

We understand little Eva Sherman is quite sick again, also Alexander Keir at our home. We hope and pray for their speedy recovery, and also others who may be suffering.

"So day by day and step by step, sustain thy failing strength;
From strength to strength indeed, go on through all the journey's length.

God bids thee tarry now and then, forbear the weak complaint;

God's leisure brings the weary rest, and cordial gives the faint:

God bids thee labor, and the place is thick with thorn and brier,

But he will share the hardest task, until he calls thee higher.
So take each disappointment, friend; 'tis at the Lord's command!

Shall God's appointment seem less good than what thyself had planned?"

Pastoral.

To the Ministry, Saints and Friends, of the Utah Mission; Greeting: As I am once more to be associated with you as a missionary, and by the general minister in charge appointed to take the oversight of the work in Utah, I take this method to communicate with you.

I desire to hear from all of the ministry, both general appointees and the local force, that we may become closely in touch with each other and thus be able to accomplish the most good possible. I trust also the Saints and friends will give their hearty cooperation so that by united effort good may be done, and the gospel message proclaimed to the erring ones.

Brethren, we have much to encourage us. Truth is our message, and the Lord has directed us to continue the conflict. Let us take courage, trusting the Lord, and with renewed effort do all in our power to move onward the cause of Zion, that the honest may find comfort and joy in the gospel of peace.

All information from Saints or friends with reference to opportunities for labor will be thankfully received. I hope to be with you in the field shortly, but for the present address me at my home, Weston, Iowa, and it will reach me.

Your brother in the conflict,
H. N. HANSEN.

To the Saints and Friends of Southern Missouri District and Southeastern Missouri; Greeting: Having been appointed in charge of the above mentioned territory I write these few lines that we may labor more effectively for the advancement of the gospel work. We only have four traveling missionaries in this large field. Therefore we want to earnestly encourage all the local forces to thrust in their sickles and reap the golden grain. There are three missionary families to sustain, and also the freewill offerings to the ministry that they might get to their appointments and also receive money for clothing and incidental expenses. This is one of the commands, and it is a means of grace to every child of God who will observe to do these things. Last year the Bishop commended us for our efforts in temporal things; let us labor to keep our record clean. Those who desire to send tithes and offerings will see my address below. Let all the Saints who have places of interest for the missionary to visit, write me and we will try our best to reach your locality.

Yours in gospel bonds,
A. M. BAKER.

WILLOW SPRINGS, MISSOURI, R. F. D. No. 2, Box 63.

To the Saints of the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Slope Mission; Greeting: You have doubtless ere this noticed the changes made at the late General Conference. The two above named fields have been joined, with Bro. J. W. Rushton and the undersigned as associates in charge. With you we hope for congenial relations, with mutual forbearance, inclusive of that charity becoming disciples of the Christ. Paramount respect for our great Teacher will overshadow all minor considerations. May gratefulness for Christian fellowship as our boon arouse us for proper appreciation of our holy privileges. The following arrangements, we trust for the benefit of the work intrusted to us, are offered:

W. H. Mannerling and W. S. Pender will labor together in their new appointments, the Republic of Mexico. Later directions as to detail will be given them. In the meantime they can be concluding their labors in the missions of last year.

W. S. Simmons and T. J. Shepard will associate as circumstances will allow in New Mexico.

The work in Arizona will be cared for by Bro. J. E. Vanderwood.

In Colorado, F. A. Russell and J. D. Curtis will pair off as during the latter part of the past year. S. M. Reiste, J. H. Petre, and Columbus Scott continue their labors as heretofore. If occasion requires, Brother Scott may help either of the last two mentioned. Bishop R. Bullard will give attention to the duties of bishop as wisdom may direct. L. G. Holloway, who has removed to Colorado for business reasons, will do what circumstances permit him to do in the ministry.

In Utah, H. N. Hansen will be in charge. M. F. Gowell located at Provo; A. M. Chase in Salt Lake City; J. D. Stead at Ogden and vicinity; John Davis labor in a general way as missionary.

Hale W. Smith and W. P. Bootman work together as much as possible in new openings in Montana.

In Idaho, S. D. Condit, with T. C. Kelley to operate the tent in Idaho District. A. J. Layland, Eastern Idaho and Wyoming.

T. W. Chatburn in charge of Southwestern Oregon District. M. W. McConley and B. J. McKim under the direction of G. J. Waller in Hawaii.

J. M. Terry will continue as now laboring in Northern California District. When Brother Cady is ready, if he will notify me, provisions can be made for him.

The above outline is regarding principally the changes made; those not mentioned in the above will labor as per certificate of appointment. I have not been able to consult with Brother Rushton in these arrangements. When he arrives from Europe, there may be other changes.

Fraternally submitted,
F. M. SHEEHY.

903 WEST WALDO AVENUE, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Having been appointed again to act as assistant minister in this field, we desire to greet you once more, as fellow-workers in the Lord, and ask your cooperation in all the work intrusted to our care. Write us at any time, on the needs of the work. Also as Bishop's agent, we need your cooperation. The Clinton reunion will be held September 2 to 12, at Morrison, about August 1. Watch for notice. Brethren Yates, Dillon, Fisher, S. S. Sand, E. H. Smith, are our coworkers as missionaries. Give us your faith and prayers, and lend a helping hand. Let everybody work.

Your colaborer,
HUBERT CASE.

KINGFISHER, OKLAHOMA, May 27, 1910.

To the Saints and Friends of the Spring River District; Greeting: The appointing authorities have seen fit to return us to this field for another year. In order that we may accomplish the purpose of thus sending us back we ask the hearty cooperation of the Saints and friends, that we may work together to that end, of carrying out the angel's message to the world. We desire to do all the good we can in getting this work before the people. To the scattered Saints I would say, Do all you can to get places for the missionaries to occupy and write us and let us know of the prospect of gospel work in your neighborhood. By so doing we can get the work out over territory that has not yet been canvassed. Address Bro. E. A. Davis, the district president, at Pittsburg, Kansas, and Bro. J. Arthur Davis also at Pittsburg, Kansas. My address is Holden, Missouri, Lock Box No. 306. You can address either of us in regard to your needs of having work done in your community. We will try to give it prompt attention.

Let us all go to work in earnest and do all the good we can, remembering that when the year has passed we can never live it over again, for we only pass this way once.

Let the watchword be first, last, and all the time, the salvation of poor souls, and every move that we make let it be to save. As ministers for Christ let us not wait for something to turn up, but get busy and not let one moment be lost for the work the Lord has intrusted to our care, and we must answer to God for our stewardship while here. Let us ask ourselves the question, how many souls will there be around the pleasing bar of God that will have the crown of everlasting life placed upon their heads by reason of our assistance to them in helping them over the rough places in life. May the good Lord add to each such blessings as will be for his good and his glory. Your brother and collaborer for the great work of God.

GEORGE JENKINS.

It has become the custom to issue pastoral letters, the better to acquaint the church and collaborers with the plans for work, and the disposition of men.

The past year was one rich in blessing, and phenomenal success in several districts of the mission, and we trust, under the blessing of God, to make this year one of the landmarks in the history of the mission.

Our ministerial force has been increased somewhat, and with the local ministry constitutes a splendid corps of workers.

It is thought advisable not to appoint assistant ministers in charge. We therefore request every man to keep in touch with us as to conditions where they labor. We expect those assigned to missionary work to open new places, leaving the care of branches to local officers as provided for in the law.

REPORTING.

Brethren will remember that reports are expected promptly July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1. On the last date in addition to the quarterly, an annual report is expected. Every branch officer and member of the priesthood, no matter what office held, is expected to report on the above dates, to the president of his branch, or to the president of his district. Branch presidents should see that these reports are summarized and their reports forwarded to the district president not later than the tenth of the months provided for reporting. All missionary reports will be sent to the minister in charge.

MARITIME PROVINCES.

It has been thought advisable for Elder S. O. Foss to labor in Nova Scotia. We trust the Saints there will render him needed assistance, and that God will open the way for a harvest of souls.

MAINE.

For the present Elder S. F. Cushman will labor in the Eastern District; Elders E. B. Hull and H. A. Koehler in Central Maine; Elder R. W. Farrell in Western Maine.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Elders A. B. Phillips, D. Macgregor, R. B. Howlett, and J. A. Gillen. Elder Phillips will endeavor to open the work in New Hampshire.

NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA.

Elder W. W. Smith, Philadelphia objective point; A. E. Stone, Scranton objective point; W. Anderson, Gus. Koehler, and J. B. Lentell.

NEW YORK DISTRICT.

H. O. Smith, Buffalo objective point; Alma Booker.

Changes may be made in these assignments as the exigencies of the work suggest.

May God richly endow with his Spirit that we may meet at the close of the year bringing precious sheaves to the garner of the Lord.

Your brother in Christ,

U. W. GREENE.

To the Saints of South Dakota; Greeting: The new conference year is now upon us. What will it be? It is in our hands to make a good record. The last year has been one of advancement. The church as a whole has moved forward, and in some localities the special favor of God has been shown in behalf of the ministry and people. The future is bright for the spread of gospel truth, and we are all coworkers with God (1 Corinthians 3:9), and all are called to be laborers in his vineyard (Doctrine and Covenants 119:8). The work is not confined to the ministry, each and all have a part to perform. If we expect to get our penny (Matthew 20:10) or reward we must do our part faithfully. Many were faithful during the past year, and as they sought to bless the household of faith a loving Father with lavish hand remembered his children. If any were thoughtless during the past year, and forgot their duty to the church, let them examine themselves carefully and see if they are in the faith or not. Do not delay, commence at once to plan and act to be numbered among the faithful ones.

The families of the missionaries must be cared for, and the missionaries must depend on your generosity to supply their wants. Both are making sacrifice that they might win souls to Christ, and also bless the household of faith. The poor and the widow and orphan must also share with them.

It is for these purposes that your tithes and freewill offerings are used.

We will use the gospel tent the coming year, and we need your assistance in small donations to meet the incidental expenses connected therewith. We hope to hear from all during the year.

Your collaborer in the gospel work,

EDWARD RANNIE, Bishop's Agent.

MADISON, SOUTH DAKOTA, 706 WEST SIXTH STREET.

Notice of Appointment.

Respectfully,

J. W. WIGHT, Minister in Charge.

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

CAMPBELL.—April 18, 1910, at Fulton, Iowa, son of Bro. Clarence and Sr. Lydia Campbell, after the short life of one hour. Prayer at the home by George W. Blair; service at the church, prayer by Columbus Scott, sermon by R. M. Elvin, from Isaiah 61:2. Prayer at grave by Asa S. Cochran, and interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

Richards. Sermon preached by Elder John Davis to a host of sympathizing friends. Interment in the Malad Cemetery.

ANDERSON.—Emma A. Anderson was born May 27, 1884, at Greenwood, Cass County, Nebraska. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church July 29, 1894, by Elder George W. Chute. Steveson, June 17, 1891. To them were born seven children, six of whom remain with the husband to mourn the loss of a kind and loving wife and mother. She also leaves to mourn, father, mother, five sisters, two brothers and a host of friends. She was looking for the comforts of others before the comforts of herself. She was stricken with that dread disease, tuberculosis, about one year before her death. All was done that loving hands could do, but God saw fit to call her home. She united with the church in 1888, being baptized by Bro. James Moler. Funeral at M. E. church. Sermon by A. B. Kirkendall, assisted by Reverend Carroll, pastor of the M. E. church. The very large attendance and the beautiful floral tribute showed the high esteem in which she was held.

CLAWSON.—James Peter Clawson was born February 9, 1824, on the island of Gothland, Sweden. He was married to Miss Mary Margret Sandel in 1850, and to this union two sons were born, Nichols Peter and John, who with their mother survive him. He embraced the gospel by being warned in a dream twelve years in advance of its coming. It was told him that in twelve years the judgment would come and about that time the Mormon elders came to the island and he was among the first to obey the gospel. He immigrated to Utah from Sweden in 1864 and in 1874 was baptized into the Reorganization by Elder H. N. Hansen. From Utah he came to Nebraska City, Nebraska, placing his letter with the Nebraska City Branch in 1885, where he has since held membership. Brother Clawson died Thursday, May 6, 1910, aged 86 years, 2 months and 26 days. The funeral services were held from the Saints' church, Sunday, May 8; conducted by Elder H. A. Higgins, assisted by J. S. Meyer. Beautiful floral offerings and the large attendance manifested the esteem in which Brother Clawson was held by Saints and friends. He passed away with the hope of eternal life.

CORNER STONES OF THE UTAH CHURCH.—NO. 1.

The Scriptural Test.—Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.—2 John 9, 10.

In the introduction to a tract called "Corner-stones of the Reorganization," widely circulated by the Northern States Mission representing the dominant church in Utah, we find these words:

When men come as servants of God, claiming a divine commission to REORGANIZE the Church of Christ, the SEARCH-LIGHT OF INVESTIGATION should be turned upon them.

Having given this advice, our friends of the Utah church can not consistently feel resentful if they find themselves under the direct rays of the search-light of investigation, as they were among the first and most radical advocates of "reorganization."

Parley P. Pratt claimed that he received from some spiritual source the following instruction, only a very short time after the death of Joseph Smith:

Go and say unto my people in Nauvoo, that they shall continue to pursue their daily duties and take care of themselves, and make no movement in church government to REORGANIZE or alter anything UNTIL the return of the remainder of the Quorum of the Twelve.—Autobiography of Parley P. Pratt, p. 371.

Some time thereafter, as early as December 23, 1847, at Winter Quarters, Brigham Young and his associates issued a general epistle in which they said:

We now, having it in contemplation soon to REORGANIZE THE CHURCH according to the original pattern, with a First Presidency and Patriarch, feel that it will be the privilege of the Twelve, ere long, to spread abroad among the nations.—Millennial Star, vol. 10, p. 86.

This work of reorganizing was carried forward in the various quorums, from the First Presidency down, so far as it could be carried among those who followed Brigham Young. Parley P. Pratt says:

February 12, [1848].—I met in council with the First Presidency and members of the Twelve, in which certain vacancies in our quorum were filled. We were then instructed to assist in REORGANIZING THE DIFFERENT QUORUMS HERE, and in establishing righteousness.—Autobiography of Parley P. Pratt, p. 407.

Nor was this work confined to the membership in Utah. Under date of August 28, 1851, Parley

P. Pratt wrote from San Francisco to Brigham Young, concerning the church at that place:

We have rebaptized many of them, and have REORGANIZED the church.—Autobiography of Parley P. Pratt, p. 432.

Brigham Young carried this work so far that he caused himself, his fellow-officers, and the membership in his following to be rebaptized, reconfirmed, and reordained, after they had reached the Salt Lake Valley. The following is from Wilford Woodruff, at one time president of their church:

We soon repaired to the water, and President Young went down into the water and baptized all of his brethren of the Twelve present. He then confirmed us, and sealed upon us our apostleship and all the keys, powers, and blessings belonging to that office. Bro. Heber C. Kimball baptized and confirmed President Brigham Young. . . . On the next day (Sunday, August 8) the whole camp of Israel renewed their covenants before the Lord by baptism.—Life of Brigham Young; or, Utah and Her Founders, pp. 180, 182.

It will now be in order for us to turn the search-light upon some of the "corner stones" of this institution.

Kind reader, please read all of this article ere you cast it aside. Do not become offended, or attempt to quarrel with facts.

THE CASE OF BRIGHAM YOUNG.

The epitome of faith as adopted by the church during the days of Joseph the Martyr declared, "We believe in God the eternal Father."

But there came a time when Brigham Young transferred his allegiance from God the eternal Father, and became a worshiper of Adam, and Adam alone. Hear him in his own behalf:

Now hear it, O inhabitants of the earth, Jew and Gentile, Saint and sinner! When our father Adam came into the Garden of Eden, he came into it with a celestial body, and brought Eve, one of his wives, with him. . . . He is Michael, the Archangel, the Ancient of Days! about whom holy men have written and spoken—He is our Father AND OUR GOD, and the ONLY GOD WITH WHOM WE HAVE TO DO. . . . Now, let all who may hear these doctrines pause before they will prove their salvation or damnation.—Sermon, preached April 9, 1852, Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, pp. 50, 51.

The epitome of faith, before referred to, said:

We believe in God the eternal Father, and in his SON Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.

That statement was in harmony with the Scriptures:

H O Smith
711 So Fuller ave

Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost.—Matthew 1: 20.

And behold, he [Christ] shall be born of Mary, . . . she being a virgin, a precious and chosen vessel, who shall be overshadowed, and conceive by the power of the Holy Ghost, and bring forth a son, yea, even the Son of God.—Alma 5: 2.

But there came a time when Brigham Young concluded that Christ was not conceived of the Holy Ghost; that he was merely a son of Adam, and was not the Son of God the eternal Father. Hear him:

When the Virgin Mary conceived the child Jesus, the Father had begotten him in his own likeness. He was NOT begotten by the Holy Ghost. AND WHO IS THE FATHER? HE IS THE FIRST OF THE HUMAN FAMILY; and when he took a tabernacle, it was begotten by his Father in heaven, after the same manner as the tabernacles of Cain, Abel, and the rest of the sons and daughters of Adam and Eve, from the fruits of the earth, the first earthly tabernacles were originated by the Father, and so on in succession. Now, remember from this time forth, and for ever, THAT JESUS CHRIST WAS NOT BEGOTTEN BY THE HOLY GHOST.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, p. 50.

The doctrine of Christ forbids murder, but there came a time when Brigham Young concluded that under certain conditions he could save men by killing them. In a sermon, February 8, 1857, he said:

This is loving our neighbor as ourselves; if he needs help, help him; if he wants salvation and it is necessary to SPILL HIS BLOOD on the earth in order that he may be saved, SPILL IT.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, p. 220.

In a sermon preached September 21, 1856, his counselor in the presidency, J. M. Grant, (another corner stone,) told how this killing should be done, not by an executioner carrying out a sentence imposed by a civil court, but by a committee appointed by the ecclesiastical leaders,—a purely church affair. He said:

I say that there are men and women that I would advise to go to the President immediately, and ask HIM to appoint a committee to attend to their case; and then let a place be selected, AND LET THAT COMMITTEE SHED THEIR BLOOD.—Deseret News, vol. 6, p. 235; Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, p. 49.

It was the idea of the church originally that the gospel was the "power of God unto salvation," and that salvation came through righteous obedience thereto. But in the document introduced by Brigham Young, August 29, 1852, and advocated as eternal in its nature, this extraordinary promise is found:

Verily, verily I say unto you, if a man marry a wife according to my word, and they are sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, according to mine appointment, and he or she shall commit ANY SIN OR TRANSGRESSION of the new and everlasting covenant whatever, and ALL MANNER OF BLASPHEMIES; and if they commit no murder, wherein they shed INNOCENT BLOOD—yet THEY SHALL COME FORTH IN THE FIRST RESURRECTION, AND ENTER INTO THEIR EXALTATION; but they shall be destroyed in the flesh, and shall be delivered unto the buffetings of Satan, unto the day of redemption.—Utah Doctrine and Covenants 132: 26.

On the important question of marriage the church early received pure and explicit instruction. That has been the custom whenever God has had a people, as appears from the following:

For if I will, saith the Lord of Hosts, raise up seed unto me, I WILL COMMAND MY PEOPLE: otherwise, they shall hearken unto these things.—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 6; later edition 2: 39.

When the Lord is raising up seed unto himself he commands his people, pending such instruction they must hearken to the things that are written; and when the instruction comes, it will harmonize with that which is written.

At that very time the Lord was raising up seed to himself, and so he commanded his people:

David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, WHICH THING WAS ABOMINABLE BEFORE ME, saith the Lord. . . . For there shall not ANY MAN among you have save it be ONE WIFE: and concubines he shall have none.—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 6; later edition 2: 33-36.

Again, with the restoration of the gospel in these last days, the Lord began to raise up seed unto himself, and true to his promise, he commanded his people, "otherwise" they should have hearkened only to the things that were written aforetime. But he commanded his people, and the commandment was in harmony with the written words:

Marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have ONE WIFE, and THEY TWAIN shall be one flesh.—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3; Utah edition 49: 15, 16.

Thou shalt love THY WIFE with ALL thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and NONE ELSE.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7; Utah edition 42: 22.

And yet, at a conference held in Salt Lake City, August 29, 1852, Brigham Young introduced a document the teachings of which were absolutely opposed to these plain commandments. Under his presidency and leadership those teachings became the practice of his church, and were taught and are still taught as a law to that church. That document taught as follows:

And again, as pertaining to the law of the priesthood: If any man espouse a virgin, AND DESIRE TO ESPOUSE ANOTHER, and the first give her consent; and if he espouse the second, and they are virgins, and have vowed to no other man, THEN IS HE JUSTIFIED; he can not commit adultery, for they are given unto him; for he can not commit adultery with that that belongeth unto him and to no one else; and if he have TEN VIRGINS GIVEN UNTO HIM BY THIS LAW, HE CAN NOT COMMIT ADULTERY, for they belong to him, and they are given unto him, therefore is he justified.—Utah Doctrine and Covenants 132: 61, 62.

It is true that Brigham Young claimed to have received this document as a revelation through Joseph the Martyr. That claim is challenged, and has never been sustained by proof.

But the human origin of the document is of secondary importance. The question of primary importance is, Did it contain true doctrine? We say that it did not.

When Brigham Young and his associates brought that doctrine forward, and they and the church in Utah practiced its teachings, they, all together, were guilty of a terrible transgression and departure from the doctrine of Christ, and they are still suffering the penalty.

Their Book of Covenants remains barren of revelation from God from that day to this. Their "prophets and seers" have not received and do not receive the word of the Lord, as we shall prove by their own testimony.

THE NATURAL RESULT OF SUCH DEPARTURE.

The teachings above quoted are found in the standard works of the Utah church and can be verified in almost any good Brighamite library.

It seems from them that in Brigham Young's scheme of things Adam took the place of God the eternal Father.

Jesus Christ became merely a son of Adam, and not being conceived of the Holy Ghost, he was only an illegitimate son of Mary.

Marriage and the home were degraded to the level of the barnyard.

Sins that water could not wash away might be remitted, providing the apostate sinner were killed by a committee appointed by the president of the church.

The gospel and righteous living ceased to be of moment. If one were married to a woman according to this new law and sealed by the Holy (?) Spirit of promise, he might commit all manner of sin and blasphemy (with one single exception) and yet come forth in the first resurrection with the good and pure and pass by gods and angels to an unmerited exaltation.

Brigham Young married some nineteen women. According to the terms of his own law a man married to one woman might espouse other women providing they were virgins. But among the women that he married were those who had engaged in varied marital ventures until it would have required a search warrant to discover any traces of virginity. He cohabited with women who according to their own testimony had been sealed to other men for eternity by a covenant that death could not abrogate. One of these women he married while she had a husband living from whom she had not been divorced (see Whitney's History, vol. 2, p. 758). If he didn't know it, it was a bad joke on the god of this celestial marriage business; if he knew it——!

His connection with these women was such as to entail the penalty stated in the following law:

Thou shalt love THY WIFE with ALL thy heart, and shall cleave unto her AND NONE ELSE; and he that looketh upon a woman to just after her, shall deny the faith, and SHALL NOT HAVE THE SPIRIT.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7; Utah edition 42: 22, 23.

The natural result of such departure from the doctrine of Christ both in teaching and practice, was that God ceased to be with Brigham Young. Nor has he been with his successors in office.

The Utah church has had "prophets, seers, and revelators" in plenty; but revelation none.

That people have not received through their "prophets" one single revelation during the past sixty-three years that has been considered worthy a place in their Book of Doctrine and Covenants where revelations are published.

If they have received any revelation at all from God since they accepted the doctrine of polygamy it was contained in the Wilford Woodruff Manifesto, which was forced upon them, and which told them that they should stop their polygamous marriages, a fact that the Reorganization had dinned into their deaf ears for nearly forty years.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Nine Mormon elders of the Western Iowa conference assembled in Lamoni Saturday. They held services on the streets Saturday afternoon and evening and in the park Sunday afternoon and evening. They did not ask for the church, stating that they preferred to hold open air services. Elder Amos Chase followed them at each service, in reply. The discussions were spirited and resulted decidedly to our advantage. The evening service at the church was dispensed with Sunday and the people of Lamoni and vicinity attended the park services. Elder Chase followed the Utah speakers and at the close of his remarks Elder Heman C. Smith read and commented on the report that our Utah friends wrote to the Improvement Era last year concerning their visit to Lamoni. He extracted from the leader, Elder Clarke, an acknowledgment that many of the statements were overdrawn, and some of them were false, and a promise to endeavor to have them corrected. Our Utah friends did not seem comfortable or happy during the comparison of views and departed Monday for other fields.

The quorum of priests of the Lamoni Stake, will meet in the church at Lamoni, Saturday morning, June 18, at 9 o'clock. The date was omitted from this notice in our last issue, by mistake, and we take this way of correcting the error.

The Harrison County News, Missouri Valley, Iowa, has a column devoted to a very favorable review of the recent conference of the Little Sioux District.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS.

(Prepared as a Memorial Address, and delivered at Wilber, Nebraska, May 29, 1910, by C. H. Porter.)

"Our Father which art in heaven,
Hallowed be thy name.
Thy kingdom come.
Thy will be done in earth,
As it is in heaven.

For thine is the kingdom,
And the power, and the glory,
For ever. Amen."

In this prayer we find the fatherhood of God recognized; also that we are looking for the coming of a kingdom in which his will shall be done in earth, even as it is done in heaven; also an acknowledgment that the kingdom is his, with the power and the glory for ever.

"Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people" (Proverbs 14:34), said the wise king of Israel.

When our fathers declared themselves a free and independent people, they said, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."—Declaration of Independence.

These men could see that life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, were good for them, and believed it to be self-evident that these rights were inalienable, because all men were born equal, and had been endowed with these of right by their Creator; but they seemingly took no account of the one hundred and thirty thousand negroes who prior to 1740 had been brought to this country, and were at this time in slavery. And yet this proved to be the "dead fly" in the "ointment of the apothecary" that caused such a "savour" (Ecclesiastes 10:1) to arise from the cotton and rice fields of the South that its fame went forth into all the earth, and which nearly rent this great and growing nation into fragments, which caused four years of bloody war, and which causes us to this day to hold memorial services in honor of our heroes who died that the Union might live and men be free.

Slavery was always wrong, and legislation could not by any possibility make it right. It was a national sin, and the nation had to pay a fearful price for its indulgence in it. It commenced, as many another matter has, in a small way, and because it proved profitable it took firm root until it became a national institution; and in our halls of legislation, in our papers, and in the pulpit, it commanded the attention of our ablest men. No account was taken of the suffering of these men of color who were ruthlessly captured in their home land, and forcibly brought to this so-called land of the free and compelled to serve their white masters. But God rules supreme and though "the mills of the gods grind slowly, they grind exceeding fine," and the time came when with groans, and tears, and bitter cries, the nation was called to pay the penalty of its great transgression, and drink the bitter cup of sorrow to the dregs, that it might no more be polluted by this great crime—the traffic in human life.

Let us look briefly into the history of our nation in connection with negro slavery.

SLAVERY.

A Dutch man-of-war landed twenty negroes for sale at Jamestown, August, 1620, and so introduced negro slavery and the slave trade.

The negroes proved profitable, and people of all nationalities indulged in the traffic; and as early as 1706 we find the statement made that "the colony of Carolina swarms with negro slaves."

This was also true as touching other colonies.

The first stand against negro slavery seems to have been made by Oglethorpe, who sailed from England with about one hundred and twenty emigrants, November, 1732, and landed at Beaufort, South Carolina, and selected the site of Savannah, Georgia, where the colonists arrived, February 12, 1733. He prohibited negro slavery.

In 1734 "Van Reck, a German traveler, estimated the negroes in South Carolina at thirty thousand, and the annual importation at nearly three thousand."

In 1740 Louisiana had two thousand five hundred negroes.

In 1738 Oglethorpe again prohibited slavery.

Up to 1740, about one hundred and thirty thousand negroes had been introduced into the colonies.

In 1734 Connecticut took preliminary steps to abolish slavery within her limits.

Congress passed an ordinance July 31, 1787, establishing a form of government for the territory northwest of the Ohio, but before passing it "the provision that after the year 1800 there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in any of the States," was stricken out.

The first fugitive slave law was passed by Congress February 12, 1793.

In 1800 a petition was presented to Congress asking that the way might be prepared for emancipation. Congress refused to refer the petition to any committee.

In 1807, by the unanimous vote of Congress, the importation of slaves was forbidden from January 1, 1808.

A convention between the United States and Great Britain was held March 13, 1824, for the suppression of the slave trade.

In 1834 the antislavery agitation created mob violence; leading abolitionists were brutally attacked, and their dwellings, together with a number of churches, schoolhouses, and negro houses in various parts of the country were destroyed.

November 7, 1837, Rev. E. P. Lovejoy, publisher of an abolition newspaper at Alton, Illinois, was killed by a mob, and his property destroyed.

In May of 1854 a fugitive slave named Burns was arrested in Boston, and a riot ensued. United States troops were sent from Rhode Island to sustain the officers of the law, and the local militia was called out to protect the court and its witnesses. The United States commissioner decided that the slave must be returned to his owner, and Burns was conveyed to Virginia in a government vessel.

In 1858 Abraham Lincoln and Stephen A. Douglas held a series of debates which proved to be of national importance; especially because of their bearing upon the subject of negro slavery.

Stephen A. Douglas stated in debate at Jonesboro, "I, for one, am utterly opposed to negro suffrage anywhere and under any circumstance."

Abraham Lincoln in reply said, "In so far as he (Douglas) has insisted that all the States have the right to do exactly as they please about all their domestic relations, including that of slavery, I agree entirely with him."

"I have upon all occasions declared as strongly as Judge Douglas against the disposition to interfere with the existing institution of slavery." (A. Lincoln at Alton.)

The great contention at this time was that no more slave territory should be permitted within the bounds of the United States, and that the people of the new territory of Kansas and Nebraska should not be allowed to decide the matter for themselves by vote. Douglas contended that they were entitled to the right of choice. Lincoln denied the right to extend slave territory.

The question of slavery led to secession, and secession brought war.

SECESSION AND WAR.

In 1860 Abraham Lincoln and Stephen A. Douglas were rival candidates for the presidency. Both were able men but represented different policies. The masses of the people were greatly stirred; and in the South complaint was made that the Republicans were determined to destroy the slave system. As the day of election drew near, the conflict waxed more fierce. The idea of secession as the result of the election of Lincoln was freely discussed, and the declaration made that if Lincoln was elected the South would leave the Union.

Lincoln was elected and secession quickly followed.

The first shot of the Rebellion was fired January 9, 1861, when the Star of the West arrived off

Charleston, to relieve Fort Sumter, and was fired upon by the forts on Morris Island, and driven back to sea.

April 11, General Beauregard demanded the surrender of Fort Sumter.

April 12, General Beauregard, at 4.30 a. m., opened fire on Fort Sumter. This was the beginning of the civil war.

April 14, Major Anderson and his men marched out of Fort Sumter, bearing the torn flag, and retired to the government vessels outside the harbor, and sailed immediately for New York. "Precisely four years afterwards he took it back, and raised it again over the fortress, then an almost shapeless mass of ruins."—Lossing, p. 553.

April 15, President Lincoln issued a proclamation calling for seventy-five thousand men, of the militia of the country, to suppress the rising rebellion.

In the free-labor States there was a wonderful uprising of the people. Nothing like it, in sublimity of aspect, had been seen on the earth since Peter the Hermit and Pope Urban filled all Christian Europe with religious zeal, and sent armed hosts to rescue the sepulcher of Jesus from the hands of the infidel (Lossing, p. 554).

While the loyal troops were passing through Baltimore to defend the National Capital they were assailed, April 19, by a fierce and angry mob. A scene of indescribable confusion ensued. Men were killed and wounded on both sides. The mayor of Baltimore informed the President that no more troops could pass through that city without fighting their way.

"Fifty thousand men may be raised in an hour to march through Baltimore" exclaimed one, and Bayard Taylor wrote:

"Bow down in haste thy guilty head,
God's wrath is swift and sure;
The sky with gathering bolts is red—
Cleanse from thy skirts the slaughter-shed,
Or make thyself an ashen bed
O Baltimore!"

—Lossing, p. 557.

Thus was war with all its horrors ushered in. Four years of fighting, such as the world has seldom witnessed, was the result.

"Early in May, 1865, the armed rebellion was ended.—Lossing.

The whole number of men called into the service during the war, was 2,628,523.

Of this number, nearly 60,000 were killed on the field, and about 35,000 were mortally wounded. Disease in camps and hospitals slew 184,000. It is estimated that 300,000 Union soldiers perished during the war. Full that number of Confederate soldiers perished; and the aggregate number of men, including both armies, who were crippled, or permanently disabled by disease, was estimated at 400,000. The actual cost to the country, of able-bodied men, in consequence of the rebellion, was full 1,000,000.

On the 2nd of June General Grant issued the following farewell address:

Soldiers of the Armies of the United States: By your patriotic devotion to your country in the hour of danger and alarm, your magnificent fighting, bravery, and endurance, you have maintained the supremacy of the Union, and the Constitution, overthrown all armed opposition to the enforcement of the laws, and of the proclamation for ever abolishing slavery—the cause and pretext of the rebellion—and opened the way to the rightful authorities to restore order, and inaugurate peace on a permanent and enduring basis on every foot of American soil. Your marches, sieges, and battles, in distance, duration, resolution, and brilliancy of results, dim the luster of the world's past military achievements, and will be the patriot's precedent in defense of liberty and right, in all time to come. In obedience to your country's call, you left your homes and families, and volunteered in her defense. Victory has crowned your valor, and secured the purpose of your patriotic hearts; and, with the gratitude of your countrymen, and the highest honors a great and free nation can accord, you will soon be permitted to return to your homes and families, conscious of having discharged the highest duty of American citizens. To achieve these glorious triumphs, and secure to yourselves, your fellow-countrymen, and posterity, the blessings of free institutions, tens of thousands of your gallant comrades have fallen, and sealed the priceless legacy with their blood. The graves of these a grateful nation bedews with tears, honors their memories, and will ever cherish and support their stricken families.—Lossing, p. 723.

Let me call your attention briefly to the following statement as just read, "In obedience to your country's call, you left your homes and families, and volunteered in her defense. . . . You will soon be permitted to return to your homes and families conscious of having discharged the highest duty of American citizens."

We may expect to find deeply implanted in the heart of every true man the love of home, and love of country; and in the higher type of human life we will also find, to supplement these, the love of God.

Of the love of home and country Sir Walter Scott has said:

"Breathes there a man with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said,
This is my own, my native land!
Whose heart hath ne'er within him burned,
As home his footsteps he hath turned,
From wandering on a foreign strand!
If such there breathe, go, mark him well;
For him no minstrel raptures swell;
High though his titles, proud his name,
Boundless his wealth as wish can claim;
Despite those titles, power, and pelf,
The wretch concentered all in self,
Living, shall forfeit fair renown,
And, doubly dying, shall go down
To the vile dust, from whence he sprang,
Unwept, unhonored, and unsung."

These soldiers, whose lives were spared, gladly returned home. They rejoiced not alone in victories gained, but in the consciousness of duty well done. They had a right to expect fair treatment from a grateful nation, and they asked for no more. Today, after the lapse of almost half a century, we have with us a few of these men who in the days of their youth responded so nobly to the call of their country, in the hour of its danger; and who fought so gallantly for the cause of freedom and right. Soon they will be called to follow their comrades who have passed on before, and the Grand Army of the Republic will be on the other side of the river of death; but their deeds of prowess will be remembered so long as the history of this country shall be read; and we are satisfied that a grateful nation will always remember with pride the achievements of this glorious army which suffered so much that the Union might live, and a race of men be made free.

In conclusion, a few words in reference to the love of God which should supplement the love of home and love of country; as a Christian nation we recognize almighty God as "our Father." Let us therefore reverence his name. Let us continue to pray that his kingdom may come, and that his will may be done in the earth, as it is in heaven. Remembering that in his sovereign hand is the destiny of all nations; and that in due time we must all stand before him, and receive a just reward for the deeds done in the body; for to him belongs the kingdom, the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

If in the field of religious thought, there is one question more misunderstood than all others, and upon which the minds of the learned men of the world seem to be most darkened, it is in regard to the kingdom of God; what is it, where is it to be found; and what are its effects upon the finder? These are some of the questions to which the most contradictory and absurd answers have been given, and so completely mystified have people in general become, that a large class of religionists, comprising all of the so-called evangelical churches (and some others) describe it as an indefinite "something that comes into the heart of the converted individual, making him happy and full of zeal." Some candidly confess their inability to find it by affirming that it is not on earth, nor will it be until Christ shall come again.

The importance of finding it is emphasized by the Savior in these words, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God" (Matthew 6: 31), and we believe that our soul's salvation depends upon our finding and understanding it, also that in our definition of it is revealed our religious status and standing with God.

Some time ago we were discussing religious topics with a minister of a certain popular church, and after he had been driven from one theological intrenchment to another, he finally took a firm stand: "Well," said he, "I know I have the kingdom of God in my heart."

"I am very sorry if that is the case," we replied.

"Why?" in a surprised tone.

"Because there is small possibility of my ever getting in it, or even finding it if you have it in any part of your physical anatomy."

"But," he asked, "doesn't the Bible say the kingdom of God is in the heart?"

"Where?" we questioned.

"Why, I think it's in Luke somewhere."

"We turned to Luke 17: 20, 21, and read:

And when he was demanded of the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation; neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you.

"There," said he, "didn't I tell you it said the kingdom of God was in the heart?" We explained to him that the term "within you," was no more definite in its description of his heart than his stomach, and that we must be excused if we looked elsewhere for that which Jesus told us to "seek first." Neither would we look for it in the hearts of "Pharisees, hypocrites." I called his attention to the marginal reference which says, "or among you"; referred him to the Revised Version which he had just been defending, which also says, "among you," and gave him the rendering of the Greek text: "He bassilea tou theou entos humon estin." The kingdom of God is in the midst of you." He had to go—"getting so late."

It is evident that Jesus meant "among—in the midst of" their city or country, instead of their physical anatomy. It is a strange thing that when men think or speak of an earthly kingdom, there is always the concomitant association of a king or ruler, laws and officers to execute them, territory and subjects, but let the kingdom of God come under consideration and it immediately becomes divested of all its natural parts, and becomes an intangible "something in the heart." Do you suppose that Jesus used the term "kingdom of God" to help men to find it, instead of for the purpose of mystifying them? And that when found it will have a similar construction to an earthly kingdom, with subjects, territory, laws, officers, and a great king? Christ's avowed object was to establish the kingdom of God in the earth, and he told men:

The Law and the Prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it.—Luke 16: 16.

Not every one that sayeth unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.—Matthew 7: 21.

But woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in.—Matthew 23: 13.

The foregoing texts are surely sufficient to show that the kingdom of God is something we are to "press into," to "enter," and in the light of them the position of so-called orthodoxy, that you must get the kingdom in you is worse than absurd. It reminds us of a set of pictures we once saw in a juvenile paper, a snake was coiled around a poor little frog, his mouth wide open to swallow him, in the next picture the snake had struck, but as the frog had jumped, he missed him and caught his own tail in his mouth, the last picture showing just a bunch of snake—he had swallowed himself.

One of the surest indications of a great apostasy, and of the religious darkness in the world to-day, is found in the descriptions of the kingdom of God, given by their religious leaders. No less a person than the renowned John Ruskin says:

If you do not wish for his kingdom, don't pray for it, but if you do you must do more than pray for it; you must work for it. And to work for it you must know what it is: [This is very true.] We have all prayed for it many a day without thinking. [True again.] Observe, it is a kingdom that is to come to us; we are not to go to it. Also, it is not to come outside of us, but in the hearts of us. "The kingdom of God is within you." And, being within us, it is not a thing to be seen; but to be felt; and though it brings all substance of good with it, it does not consist in that. [Italics mine.—F. B. F.]

He says, "It is to come to us, we are not to go to it," yet Jesus said, "Enter in at the straight gate," "Seek ye first the kingdom of God"; and "Knock and it shall be opened unto you, seek and ye shall find." Again, note that Ruskin says, "and being within us, is not a thing to be seen, but to be felt." The Savior told the ruler who came questioning in regard to the kingdom, "Verily, verily I say unto thee, Except a man be born again he can not see the kingdom of God."—John 3: 3. Antithetically then, He who can not see the kingdom of God, has not been born again, and those who assert that, "It is not a thing to be seen," and "It is in the hearts of us, are giving good proof that they are not only unable to discern the kingdom of God, but that they have not been born again.

Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God.—John 3: 5.

By this he not only made plain that it was something for man to enter, but showed the way by which he was and is to enter. Of course if the kingdom of God is in the hearts of men, it is hardly necessary for them to be born again (baptized) of water and of the Spirit in order to enter the kingdom of God, and there follows as a natural consequence, the statement that baptism is only "an outward form of an inward grace, and not necessary to salvation." But Jesus did not say this, and it is poor logic, based upon false premises, and is daily leading thousands into darkness and away from God.

Perhaps the kingdom of God can not be better illustrated than by parable. The Savior used them and why shall we not? A great king, desiring to enlarge his kingdom and give his subjects greater opportunities for development, announced that he was going to colonize a beautiful country, and that those who chose to go there and bear their share in building up his kingdom, would receive certain great privileges and blessings. The announcement was received with shouts of joy and songs of praise to the great king. "But," said he, "Those who go there will forget about this land, lose their remembrance of former things, and be compelled to labor under adverse circumstances, but you shall have great reward if faithful and I shall send my servants to you from time to time to help you."

Many chose to go, and in due time the colony was founded under auspicious circumstances, but troubles began to beset the kingdom. One of his subjects, a great noble, rebelled, drawing away a third part of the kingdom with him, and thinking to gain greater power and further harass the king, went to the little colony, and by subtlety and deceit persuaded them to give up their liberty and equality, and becomes servants and slaves to him and one another, actually convincing them that the king was an unjust monster, that to serve him was a hardship, and that to become perfectly happy and free they must be rebellious like himself. Knowing that one of the first laws of the kingdom was unity and equality, he taught them how to get power over one another, and by trickery and murder to obtain possession of the property of their fellows. And they, thinking they had discovered the secret of happiness, became willing tools in his hands, robbing and plundering each other, and thereby bringing want and misery into the land; the robbed were unhappy because of their oppression, and the robbers were unhappy because of their wickedness and fear of each other, the strong oppressed the weak, and murder and bloodshed were everywhere. The king kept himself informed of the conditions of the colony, and from time to time sent messengers to it, who tried hard to get the people to return to the king and obey his laws, but the adversary persuaded the people that the king's servants were sent to bring them into bondage, and they cast them out, maltreated and killed them. Finally the king said, "What shall I do? I will send my only son, and he shall teach them my laws, and perhaps when they see how great my love for them is, and it exemplified in him, they will return to me." The son went, he taught them the laws of the kingdom, showed them the true character of the adversary, and how he was a liar from the beginning, told them that in order to be happy they must love the king and each other, and to the extent they could, undo the evil they had done; to be unselfish, help the poor and relieve the oppressed; that they must not seek power over one another, but over themselves, and that they must be equal.

He reorganized the colony after the pattern the king had given him, and found a few who would serve the king, only a few, however, and they among the poor and oppressed, for the rich were selfish and could not bear to give up their great possessions, having been taught by the usurper, that "might is right," and "all you can get is yours." In their blindness they hated him because of his teaching, and instigated by the adversary laid a plot to kill him, and so far as they were concerned and able to do so did kill him. But he escaped and returned to the king telling his followers that he would return, forcibly take possession of the kingdom and overthrow the power of the adversary. He told them he knew that the little colony which he had reorganized could not stand the tide of oppression long, and that the adversary would soon wear out the people of it, for, said he, "It has suffered violence ever since I came, and the violent will take it by force." However, he gave them the assurance that just before he came again, he would send messengers who would reorganize his colony, and publish this fact and the news of his coming through all the land, and then he would come in great power with legions of followers from the king's country, overthrow the forces of the usurper, and himself rule over them in righteousness for a long time, and until all traces of the pernicious influence of the adversary were removed, when his father the great king would come, and the colony become fully merged into the one great and glorious kingdom.

This, dear reader, as you have possibly discovered ere this, is a history of the world told in parable. We are told in scripture that when God laid the foundations of the earth, all the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy. (Job 38: 4-7.) Why should they do this but because there was to be an opportunity for the development of the spirits to be sent here; by coming in contact with evil they were to obtain the power of resistance? Lucifer, "the star of the morning" "fell and drew the third part of heaven with him." He it is who has brought all the misery and woe into the world, he it was who suggested to Cain that he might overpower his brother Abel, and get possession of his goods by killing him. He is inordinately ambitious, and he taught evil ambition to others, and all those who manifest such greed for the possessions of others, and work so hard to get power over their fellow-men, are only his poor dupes, and following in his footsteps. Oh yes, we know there are some whom Satan has blinded to his own existence and who deify a personal devil, but the forces of evil are far too well organized to have come by chance, and we say of him as we do of God, that contrivance proves a contriver.

At different periods God has sent his servants, holy men, to call men to repentance and back to him; and they were cast out, despised, whipped, stoned, and slain. In five different dispensations he sent laborers into his vineyard (Matthew 20:1); they were to come at different hours of the world's day. In the ninth hour he sent his son (Luke 20:9-15), and they crucified him. Christ came preaching the glad tidings of the kingdom, and reorganized the colony of the kingdom, which is the church, after the pattern laid down by the Father, placing in it as officers, apostles (Matthew 10), prophets (1 Corinthians 12:28), seventies (Luke 10), bishops or financial overseers (1 Timothy 3:1-4), evangelists, pastors, and teachers (Ephesians 4:11), elders (Acts 14:23), and deacons (1 Timothy 3:8). All men having by sin become aliens, they must obey the laws of naturalization if they would enter into the colony, and become citizens of the kingdom. These laws were, faith (Hebrews 6:1-4), repentance (Luke 24:46, 47), baptism (John 3:5), laying on of hands (Acts 18:1-7). They must believe in the resurrection of the dead and prepare for the great judgment. Jesus told them that they should not be left without guidance, but the Comforter, the Holy Ghost, would be sent to take his place, and would guide them into all truth, bring all his teachings to their memory, and show them things to come (John 16:13). That certain signs would follow them to certify of their citizenship in the kingdom, and that the Comforter would bring gifts and blessings to them. (See Mark 16:15-18; 1 Corinthians 12.) He taught them the doctrines of love, equality, and self-abnegation. He told his disciples, "Let he that is greatest among you become the servant of all," and when a rich young man came desiring to follow him he said, "Go, sell all that thou hast and give to the poor, and come, follow me." The young man turned sorrowfully away, "For he had great possessions," and Jesus said, "How hardly shall a rich man enter into the kingdom." He told them to "love your enemies, bless them that curse you, and pray for them that despitefully use you, and persecute you."

The world could not endure such teachings, men had been educated by the evil power, "the prince of this world" (John 12:31), that "all you can get hold of keep, for it is yours," and the thought of giving it up, so that others who were in need and want could be supplied, was harrowing to their souls. There is enough in the world so that all could have plenty, if it were not for the greed, lust, and selfishness of men who desire to heap up great possessions for themselves. O that men could see that great possessions and wealth do not bring happiness. He who is the greatest miser, is the poorest man on earth, and is the most completely deluded by Satan. All the happiness he has is the poor consolation of heaping up wealth so that he can keep others from using it. He who is the richest in this world's goods is by no means the happiest. A short time ago one of the richest farmers in northern Iowa was compelled by the courts to pay fifteen thousand dollars alimony, and a beautiful home was left desolate. The other day a man who lives in the finest mansion on one of Chicago's most fashionable streets, paid his wife seventy-five thousand dollars to walk out of it. Satan taught men to "get all you can," the Savior, to give all you can, and therein lies the secret of true happiness. Oh, the barrenness of a life lived for self! Oh, the poverty of selfishness! To-day we honor the rich and arrogant who place themselves above their fellows and compel them to work and drudge that the high born (?) may have race horses, yachts, pleasure, and parties, and many thousands really believe that God placed those people in their exalted positions. But they draw their power from the opposite source, and when the kingdom of God shall fully come, the proud, selfish, and arrogant will be an outcast there, and receive least honor. Verily, "the last shall be first and the first last." The divine right of kings! No man has a divine right to lord it over another. The kingdoms of this world are dominated largely by the one who showed them to Jesus saying, "All these will I give thee, if thou wilt only worship me," and whom Jesus called "the prince of the world."

Stung and maddened by the rebuke in the teachings of the Son of God, wicked men misrepresented, lied about, and crucified him, and his doctrine being a standing rebuke to them, they, under the guise of friendship to him, perverted and changed it, telling men they need not look for the kingdom of God, as it could not be seen, mystifying them so they could not find it, and telling them to be content with the way Satan is running things, for "the world is getting better every day." "Saying peace, peace, when there is no peace." Greed and graft are prevalent everywhere, and is it any wonder that James was led by the spirit of prophecy to say,

Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth. Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter. Ye have condemned and killed the just; and he doth not resist you. Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord.—James 5: 1-7.

The Son returned to the Father, and Satan waged relentless warfare upon the little colony of the kingdom of God, a tide of bloodshed and murder swept in and overwhelmed the little church, and in a short time about twenty of the apostles chosen of God were slain and thousands of disciples suffered martyrdom; false doctrines were taught by men who were professed friends of the kingdom, but who in reality were the emissaries of Satan, and by the year 570 A. D. not a remnant of that colony could be found. And what had become of the kingdom of God? Surely we would all desire to find it, we read about it in the Scripture and can see now how much happiness, peace, and joy are to be found in it, how the poor are provided for with loving hand, how equality would exist, the law of love would be the rule, and love the motive of action, that he who is greatest would be so because he was of greatest service to his fellow-men and could help them most, and our hearts yearn for that kingdom. Looking about us in our search, we behold a great and powerful organization with its seat of government in Rome, a great king sits upon a splendid throne, and kneeling worshipers beg for a chance to kiss his foot. He lives in luxury and is supported by the poor of the earth. He calls himself the "vicar of God," and the ruler of all the earth, proudly affirming that it is his right to depose kings at will, and make them crawl at his feet. His proud and arrogant clergy extort money from the poor, and fare sumptuously every day. Instead of equality there is oppression, and men groan with their burdens. We see no such organization as Christ gave to the colony, the Comforter guiding into all truth and showing things to come, is not there, and we turn sadly away. Many others come to us with similar claims, but upon investigation they prove to be only offshoots of the "mother" at Rome, and the burden of their message is that the kingdom of God is not to be seen, and we must not expect to find it.

In astonishment we ask, Why is this? Is it possible that the kingdom of God is no longer on the earth? Let us turn to Scripture for our answer:

And there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars.—Revelation 12: 1.

Most theologians agree that this represents the church, with the old Mosiac covenant under her feet, twelve apostles as the stars, and clothed with the glorious light of the Holy Spirit.

And she being with child cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered. . . . And she brought forth a man-child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne.—Verses 2 and 5.

This represents the church bringing forth the kingdom of God with much travail and suffering.

"But," says one, "I thought the man-child was Christ." Did the church bring forth Christ? Just the opposite of this, Jesus said, "I will build my church."

"Well," says another, "I thought the church and kingdom of God were one and the same thing." When the king of England founded a colony in Australia, was not that colony and the kingdom of Great Britain, to all intents and purposes, one? And was not that colony endeavoring to bring forth the kingdom of that king and establish it in the new land? Well, just so did the church, which was the colony of the kingdom of God, bring forth and establish that kingdom in the earth. The Inspired Correction says,

And the dragon prevailed not against Michael, neither the child, nor the woman, which was the church of God, who had been delivered of her pains, and brought forth the kingdom of God and his Christ.—Verse 7.

So the church brought forth the kingdom of God, with much tribulation, and Satan, working through the papal power, stood ready to devour it.

Now, mark you, the kingdom of God exists wherever and whenever there is a man called, sent of God, and clothed with authority to represent him. So the kingdom was on earth in the days of John the Baptist (Matthew 11: 12; John 1: 6); and as no man can be clothed with authority unless he is "called of God as was Aaron" (Hebrews 5: 4), and as revelation is the only way by which God ever called and authorized man to represent him, then the day that revelation ceased, God began to take to himself the "man-child," and when the last man who had been "called of God as was Aaron" died, then was the kingdom of God no longer on the earth.

The claim of apostolic succession by the Roman Catholic, Greek Catholic, Episcopal, and Baptist churches is preposterous, for it makes no difference who the man is, be he apostle or heathen, angel or devil, should he lay on hands from the time of Peter until Gabriel sounds the knell of time, he can confer no authority to represent God, unless God himself has spoken and called the individual. He can not confer his own priesthood upon another, for it is not his to give, "No man taketh this honor," etc. Hence as the above-named, with most other churches, claim that revelation ceased with John the Revelator, they can have no authority to represent God.

The thirteen colonies rebelled against the English king and set up a government of their own. It is not patterned after that government and has different laws, and no one would be silly enough to claim that the officers of this United States now have authority to represent the king of England simply because they happen to have a book containing the statutes of England. Yet this is what the churches do in regard to the kingdom of God. They are not organized after the pattern of Christ's church, they have different doctrines and laws, yet they say, "We have the Bible, and it gives us the right to represent God."

God saw that Satan was about to devour the little kingdom, so he caught it up to himself (without authority there can be no kingdom on earth) and the church, typified by the "woman," fled into the wilderness.

And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days.—Revelation 12: 8.

We have often heard people speculating as to what the wilderness might be. Turn with us to Ezekiel 20: 35, 36:

And I will bring you into the wilderness of the people, and there will I plead with you face to face. Like as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I plead with you, saith the Lord God.

God took the elements of earth and formed man, breathed into him the breath of life, and man became a living soul, capable of answering the purposes of his creation. He sinned, his spirit was taken from his body, and the elements that composed his body returned to the chaos from whence they were taken. We call this death. When Christ organized his body, the church, he took elements of the earth, lowly fishermen, breathed upon them and said, "Receive ye the Spirit." Upon Pentecost we see that body alive and answering the purposes of its creation. But sin entered in, and the Spirit was taken away. John Wesley said:

It does not appear that these extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost were common in the church for more than two centuries. . . . The real cause was the love of many waxed cold. . . . The Christians had turned heathen again, and had only a dead form left.—Sermon 94.

The elements returned to the wilderness from whence they were taken,—the wilderness of the people. A resurrection is necessary for both.

Following the narration in Revelation 12 a little further, we read of a great battle in heaven, how Satan was cast out into the earth, and when the dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth, he persecuted the woman which brought forth the man-child. And to the woman were given the wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent. No one who has read the terrible persecutions of the early church is in doubt as to whether this prophecy of John came true or not.

The serpent cast out of his mouth water as a flood after the woman, that he might cause her to be carried away of the flood.—Revelation 12: 15.

What would be the nature of anything coming out of the mouth of Satan? Even in the days of the apostles, false doctrines and lies were being taught as truth, and as Paul prophesied, evil men and se-ducers waxed worse and worse until the whole world went into darkness, mental, moral, and spiritual, indulgences to sin were sold by a hireling, corrupt clergy, the Bible was chained like a wild beast, and men and women tortured, murdered, and burned at the stake in the name of religion. In connection with this we read,

And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them: and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations. And all that dwell on the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.—Revelation 13: 7, 8.

But listen:

And the earth helped the woman; and the earth opened up her mouth, and swallowed up the flood which the dragon cast out of his mouth. And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ.—Revelation 12: 16, 17.

At a time when all Europe was under the sway of Rome and men dared not differ from her or disobey her ecclesiastical mandates, and while Satan was hunting down the remnant of the faithful in Asia, a humble man inspired of God we believe, and in the face of great opposition and religious bigotry, prejudice, and superstition, braved the terrors of the unknown sea, and sailing across the Atlantic, discovered a new world. "The earth opened up and helped the woman," and the first permanent settlement of any consequence upon this continent, was by people who came here to escape religious persecution. America became the refuge of the oppressed, men came here and braved the wilderness that they might "worship God according to the dictates of their conscience," and the first nation to be set up here proclaimed in her constitution that, "All men are free and equal."

Yes, the earth opened up, but how did that help the "woman," or church, in her chaotic state?

This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.—Matthew 24: 14.

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people.—Revelation 14: 6.

After twelve hundred and sixty prophetic days, which most theologians agree represent a day for a year, making twelve hundred and sixty years, the woman is going to come out of the wilderness. Counting from 570 A. D., the time when the apostasy became complete and all authority lost, we find that the woman is to come forth in 1830. Where would she come forth but in a land of religious freedom and toleration? The earth opened up to help her, and should she not avail herself of that help?

In 1820 a young man in the backwoods of New York, prayed to know which of all the churches was the right one, and God spoke to him telling him to join none of them, for all were wrong, but that the young man himself should soon be an instrument in his hands for a reorganizing of the church, and to preach the true gospel, and thereby bring forth the church out of the wilderness, and build up the kingdom of God again on the earth. In 1830, by command of God, the church was reorganized after the pattern of old, with apostles, prophets, seventies, bishops, evangelists, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons. With the restored gospel principles (Hebrews 6:1-4) the gifts of the gospel were again given, men were called of God as was Aaron by revelation to go forth and "preach this gospel of the kingdom in all the world for a witness to all nations." The doctrine of equality was more fully explained, and men asked to consecrate their surplus property to the Lord, that the poor and needy might be cared for, and all might receive according to their needs. The doctrine of love, unselfishness, and self-abnegation was emphasized, and men were told that to love their neighbor as themselves meant to help him all you can.

Yes, the gospel, church, and kingdom have been restored. Some of us have found it, have pressed into it, and are now trying to eliminate from our hearts all traces of the reign of Satan, trying to eliminate self, learning the sweet lesson that it is more blessed to give than to receive, learning to love as Christ loved, trying to "come up higher"; and God is helping us, his loving hand is guiding us, and we are coming nearer day by day. Dear reader, do you not wish to find it? "Seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you."

IN JEOPARDY.

(Note.—This will be followed by an article entitled, Equity, by the same author.—EDITORS.)

This term is used to express the danger of conviction and punishment, which the defendant in a criminal action incurs. The general idea back of it is, that a man should not be harassed for the same cause again and again. Hence this idea runs through all the law and equity, and appeals also to man's sense of justice. Jeopardy, though, is restricted to criminal cases, "nor shall a defendant be placed twice in jeopardy of life and limb for the same offense," i. e., criminal offense.

In general, in its broadest statement, it means that a man shall not be twice tried for the same offense, but there are many qualifications. Some States keep it to its strict form: "life or limb," which means that it applies only to felonies, but in most States it is extended also to misdemeanors.

There is also quite a difference of opinion as to whether preliminary examination and acquittal bars indictment and trial, with a strong tendency to the contrary.

Another qualification is: That jeopardy has not attached so as to prevent a new trial, unless the defendant has been placed in real danger of conviction. So it has been held repeatedly, that although indicted and the jury sworn, still if anything occurs to prevent a verdict, jeopardy has not attached so as to bar further prosecution. Misconduct or incapacity of the jury prevents jeopardy from attaching. And it has been held, that the bar is not completed even after the case has been submitted to the jury. But once the jury has brought in its verdict, even through a mistake of law on the part of the court, further trial is barred, though a fraud of the accused preventing a fair trial may permit the case to be reopened for retrial.

In case the defendant appeals from verdict and judgment of conviction, of course he can not plead this in bar of a new trial, if the case is remanded by the appellate court. It has been held very clearly in Missouri and elsewhere, that if the defendant takes an appeal to an intermediate court of appeal and there a judgment of conviction is reversed, the State may then take an appeal to the highest appellate court on the law and such action is not placing twice in jeopardy. (62 Missouri; 40 O. St. 253; 47 O. St. 477; 107 New York 607; 99 New York 610; 97 New York 63.)

In the Federal courts, in Iowa and in many other States, the State is allowed to take an appeal even in criminal cases, in order to have the law and procedure determined for subsequent cases. Such appeal, however, can not affect the liberty of defendant, once acquitted. Furthermore we may remark in passing, that a State may appeal any case, the same as an individual suitor, unless the case is criminal. This restriction of jeopardy applies only to cases criminal in their character. The State also has the right to appeal the law points, as for instance the quashing of the indictment, and yet reindict and try the defendant, since he has not yet been placed in jeopardy. The New York code allows an appeal from the supreme court to the court of appeal in the following cases: 1. Judgment affirming or reversing judgment of conviction. 2. Judgment affirming or reversing judgment for defendant on demurrer on indictment or an order of the court arresting judgment. 3. From final determination affecting the substantial rights affecting the defendant an appeal may be taken by the defendant. (New York Criminal Code, 519 seq.)

It should be further noted that the legislature may carve out of a single act several crimes, so that the individual may at the same time commit several crimes, in which case acquittal or conviction of one will not be a bar to indictment for another. It is not prosecutions for the same act that is barred, but it is that no man shall be brought twice in jeopardy for the same offense. One act may constitute several offenses. Also the conviction or acquittal in one State is no bar to action in another State, for the same offense, even growing out of the same facts and acts. Nor is conviction or acquittal by a State or municipal court a bar to a trial for the same act before the other, since in the eyes of the law it is not the same offense. Conviction and sentence by the House of Representatives against a non-member for assault and battery on a member is not a bar to indictment for the same offense. A judgment reversed on appeal is no bar even though defendant has served part of the sentence.

We suggest the above, somewhat briefly, it is true, as the law in regard to jeopardy, since there seems to be some misapprehension. It will be noted that like other parts of the criminal law, it is very technical and every condition must be fulfilled before a bar attaches. Also there is a difference existing between the various States of the Union, as to just when jeopardy attaches, so as to effect a bar of further prosecution. Some States express it: "Shall not be placed twice in jeopardy for the same offense"; others and the United States Constitution have it: "Shall not be placed twice in jeopardy of life or limb for the the same offense."

The above is suggestive for a consideration in connection with our work in the courts of the church.

We may note again, in conclusion, that while the term "in jeopardy" only applies to criminal cases, the principle of res judicata applies in civil cases and that the same general principle and estoppel is also extended into equity.

One of the dangers of this busy, bustling age is that we shall give ourselves so exclusively to busy work for Christ as to neglect that quiet communion which is necessary to prepare ourselves for the best work.—A. N. Gilbert.

WHY DO MEN DRINK?

"O God, that men should put an enemy into their mouths to steal away their brains! To be now a sensible man, by and by a fool, and presently a beast?"—Shakespeare.

To me there is no more interesting problem in psychology!

Come to think of it, this whole question of alcoholism is one of the most astounding puzzles in moral inconsistency and intellectual perversity that has ever come before the intelligent world for solution.

Why we should tolerate this accursed stuff among us, with the evidences of its cruelly destructive nature confronting us at every turn, is a question that should scare us as to our own personal sanity!

In its initial stages alcoholism is the birthplace of moral and physical degeneracy, later on the hotbed of dishonor, dishonesty and disloyalty; and, at the last, the sad burial ground of wrecked hopes, of ruined careers, of lost souls, and all that might, but for it, have been so beautiful and good and true.

Why do men drink? It is the dew that moistens the roadway to hell! Yet we nurture the germs of our future hopes and fears in its foul pollution, we suckle it to our innocent babes, and proffer it to one another at the most sacred rites of our religious beliefs! Why do we do it?

"Wine throws a man out of himself, and infuses qualities into the mind which she is a stranger to in her sober moments."—Addison.

Why do men drink? Ask the "total abstainer" who smilingly offers it to his guests.

Ask the "moderate drunkard," who, sneering at his more involved brothers, wickedly boasts that he "can take it or let it alone."

Ask the "convivialist" who, swearing love and loyalty for the companions of his debauch, takes to the tall timber at the first sign of trouble.

Ask the "dipsomaniac" who periodically kisses death in a perfect Niagara of the vile stuff he abominates.

Ask the poor "chronic inebriate" who but "marks time" in the morass of alcoholic bilge till the reaper gathers him in.

"Who hath woe? Who hath sorrow? They that tarry at the wine. It biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder."—The Bible.

Why do men drink? Of what use is medical science if this question can not be answered? We are given countless good and sufficient reasons why men should not drink, but no one seems ever to have sounded the depths of human perversity for one good and sufficient reason why men do drink!

The fact of the matter is that, with few exceptions, everyone who comes within the alcoholic atmosphere falls under its control—they become obsessed with a moral obliquity, or what may be perhaps more correctly termed an intellectual strabismus—the axis of their mental vision has become deranged by alcoholic hypothesis, and their logical instinct a nonresponsive blur.

Nature has supplied an antidote for all her ills,—Is there no immunity from the infatuation of this mirage? No redemption for those who have fallen? No hope for the lost?

"Drunkenness is nothing else than a voluntary madness."—Seneca.

Let us be truthful—we do not want to escape it! Our fathers pledged their friends in it, and our mothers wet our lips with it on the tips of their rosy fingers. What was good enough for them is good enough for us! Our mental process will not, or can not, travel farther.

We have been unfairly dealt with by the countless generations who have traveled ahead of us. Even before birth, and during our helpless childhood, the fine clockwork of our mental balance has been tampered with, and thrown awry by alcoholic stimulants; and now, we have ears that hear not, and eyes that see not. We welcome bestiality with an inane smile, and extend the glad hand of shame and ruin!

"Oh, wad some power the giftie gi'e us,
To see oursel's as ithers see us!"

Is there absolutely nothing in all this wide, wide world that can free us of our asses' ears?

"Soon as the potion works, their human countenance,
Th' express resemblance of the gods, is changed,
And they, so perfect in their misery,
Not once perceive their foul disfigurement."

—Milton.

I class alcoholism under two distinct headings—"Criminal" and "Irresponsible."

Criminal alcoholism may be subdivided into "moderate drunkenness" and "convivialism"; while irresponsible alcoholism includes "periodic dipsomania" and "chronic inebriacy."

Moderate drunkenness is the persistent use of alcoholic stimulants in small quantities. It is a vice in its very essence, being void of excuse—sensible or otherwise. "Moderate drunkenness" may be fitly described as the criminal culture of alcoholic insanity, and the man who vapors and boasts that he "can take it or let it alone" is the self-convicted missionary of intemperance, who willfully makes of his body the spawning bed for immorality, hypocrisy, untruthfulness, deceit and disloyalty.

Convivialism is the horn of the fool and the resource of a weak mind. It is the vapid imitation of a merriment that has no more of substance than the crackling of thorns under a pot. Convivialism is the alcoholic assumption of an ability that we do not possess, the treacherous manifestation of a friendship that does not exist, the garden of lies, the ephemeral realization of a heaven in hell.

"Almighty God! If it be thy will that man should suffer, let the cold hut of poverty be my dwelling place and the wasting hand of disease inflict its painful torments. Take from me the friends of my confidence. When I anticipate good, let evil annoy me. When I look for light, let darkness come upon me. Do all this, but save me, merciful God! Save me from the fate of a drunkard."—Talmage.

Periodic dipsomania is an unexpected and uninvited derangement of the mental balance, wherein the will power, which a few short moments before was as adamant in its revulsion of liquor, is now reversed in irresistible, unreasoning desire. The characteristics of this phenomenon are its sudden appearance, its equally abrupt exit, and the fearful agonies of remorse and mental torture that follow in its wake. On subsidence of the attack the sufferer loathes the bare odor of liquor, and passes long intervals of time in black but happy total abstinence. "Periodic dipsomania" is, more often than not, the result of severe emotional disturbances that, in some as yet obscure manner, have deranged the mechanism of the brain. Primarily, however, the ground has been made receptive by the evil practice of moderate drunkenness.

Chronic inebriacy is but an aggravated form of moderate drunkenness. In this unhappy condition the purblind mortal can not distinguish friend from foe. His poisoned system continually craves for "another hair of the dog that bit him." Most forlorn of mankind, he has no lucid intervals in which to realize his condition and strike out for the shore. A foolish parody on the delusions of his "moderate" brother, he proudly boasts that he, also, "can take it or let it alone"; even carrying the absurdity to its limit by scornfully referring to his brother inebriates as "tanks" and "bums"—and that, at a time when he is footlessly drunk himself!

"Where drunkenness reigns, there reason is an exile."—Quarles.

We have here an exceedingly complicated study in psychology. A disease more mental than physical, and one which the dominant power of religious impulse has again and again conquered, thereby demonstrating its mental origin. Is it possible that nature has made an exception, in this particular case, and provided no physical remedy?—Absurd!

But knowing, as every drinking man does know, the delusive pleasures of liquor, the dangers that beset its path, its disastrous ending, and the cruel wrong to generations as yet unborn; the question stands out in letters of fire—Why do men drink?

The answer, it appears to me, will be found around the family fireside. Moderate tipping, under the fostering encouragement of home influences, has there sown the seeds of alcoholic insanity—for insanity it undoubtedly is.

"Woe to him that giveth his neighbor drink, that putteth the bottle to him and maketh him drunken."—The Bible.

Let me put before you the truly pathetic case of the dipsomaniac.

He is smoothly sailing on the peaceful and pleasant waters of sobriety. Months have intervened since his last debauch—it is but a disagreeable memory. Liquor he abhors—the very name brings a furrowed frown to his brow, while the foul odor from a passing saloon sends a nauseating horror through his stomach. Trouble is coming. Shadows begin to cloud the sunlight of his happy day. Strange chords within twang memories of the forgotten past, and, with hellish persistence, "harp" on things which "might" have been—the man is lost!

"It" has again enshrouded him—for "mights" have no place in a sane man's vocabulary—and, though the symptoms are ever the same, he is now blind to the presence of his enemy.

If he is unmarried, he takes a downward plunge by assuming his utter unworthiness to be entrusted with the future of any good woman! If he has a wife, he is possessed with indescribable dread lest harm should come to her for her faith is such a wretch as he! The apologetic courtesy with which "his people" hold aloft their brimming glasses, and commend his total abstinence, cuts him like a sharp razor! The "moderate drunkard" smites him unmercifully across the mouth with the vain boast that he "can take it or let it alone," and the ladies talk pitifully of him as "a man of straw." The light of day is fading, and his heart grows smaller, and yet smaller.

"'One soweth and another reapeth,' is a verity that applies to evil as well as to good."—George Eliot.

"He will be a man, though!" "Yes! If he die for it he will at least die sober!"

The lights and shadows of other days are again crowding him, and a never-ending "wail of the Banshee" sings into his ears of an evil day dawning nigh! No proffer of friendly sympathy will now avail for his comfort, and his pillow is wet with the tears of a sleepless, unmeaning sorrow! The man is lost!—and he does not know it!

Is there nothing that can reawaken him and side track the demon who has filled him with this folly? Is there none to warn and help him? Absolutely none, but God—and he is forgotten!—The man is down!

The leaden cap has been whisked from off his aching brow! The tears have been dried from eyes that now dance in the delirious ecstasy of a heavenly relief! A great love for all mankind now floods his bursting heart! The sun is shining and all the earth joins with him in happy, joyous song. He is drinking!—drinking!—drinking! How it came about he knows not, nor does he care so that he drown!—drown!—drown!

He has reawakened! Some one asks him: "Do you want another drink? or could you venture on a small cup of broth?" He turns his face to the wall! "What have I done? Oh! what have I done!"

Hell opens wide its portals with all the tortures of the damned, and this poor suffering mortal walks dumbly in with head bowed down.

"We blame the drunkard and despise him, but why? The folly and the guilt lie in the tampering, all the rest is law."—Abraham Coles.

Why do men drink? It is certainly not with "malice aforethought;" it is certainly not from cowardice; it is certainly not from lack of will power—for alcoholics are usually obstinate, self-willed men—then, why do they do it?

Men drink, because the alcoholic follies of their forefathers have biased their line of thought. Men drink, because their mental equipoise has been thrown awry by alcohol, during their conception. Men drink, because their moral and physical stamina has been undermined by alcohol in the early days of their childhood. Men drink, because their adolescent brains must "ape" the manners and customs of their day.

Men drink, because drink is their master!—The Bowery Beacon.

Daughters of Zion Reading for July.

One of the most interesting and instructive phenomena in the lessons of nature is the falling of the dew—a seeming miracle which begins with the setting of the sun, and goes on mysteriously, collecting and distributing its countless exquisite water jewels, all through the long stillness of the night, only to be dispelled again by the heat of the rising sun.

A walk in the country or park, in the early midsummer morning just after the sun has risen, will enable you fully to appreciate its charms; especially if the dewfall during the preceding night has been a copious one. Every bit of plant life and vegetation will sparkle and twinkle in the early sunshine, hung and embellished with millions of glittering jewels. The very smallest grass blade, you will discover, has not been neglected by the Dew Fairy. And even the delicate, gossamerlike spider's web swung from twig to twig, or caught among the grass, is dew-laden, and an object of beauty well worthy of consideration.

The phenomenon of the dew is simply explained, and well worthy of a short study, as it is really a most important factor in nature's laws. Simply explained, the dew is really an actual deposit of water from the atmosphere upon the surface of the earth, and is formed when the earth is sufficiently cooled during the night by radiation.

Upon a pleasant day during the summer, especially if the sun shines brightly, much aqueous vapor or mist is held suspended in the air, and if the temperature at sunset falls below the dew point, that vapor can no longer be retained in suspension in the air, and falls to the earth. The dew is the vapor in the air. When the temperature falls below the dew point, or thirty-two degrees, the dew then becomes converted into frost, and we have a deposit of hoar frost, instead of dew.

Dew has frequently been quoted as "A shower from heaven," but this is not literally correct. True, it appears rather mysteriously from a clear sky, and upon a still, cloudless night covers thickly every blade of grass and plant life with seeming raindrops, and that frequently where rain clouds rarely appear, and the rain seldom falls. In such climates, where a rainfall is rare, it is certainly a most beneficial and wise provision, for it gathers upon all herbage and vegetation in sparkling, refreshing profusion; while it avoids instinctively all barren, rocky formations, and all things which could not be benefited by its grateful, cooling moisture. Also, in cold, damp climates, where the air is constantly saturated with moisture, and where an additional amount is not required, the gathering clouds and the dampness of the chilly atmosphere prevent a radiation of heat from the earth, and the dew never falls in such climates.

There are three requisites which appear to be essential for the formation of the dew: First, that the air should be moist; second, that the surface upon which it falls shall be cold, and, third, that the sky be clear.

It has been remarked that certain plants possess greater powers of radiating heat and of expelling moisture through evaporation process than others; upon such plants the dew deposit is always more profuse, while those plants possessing less powers of radiation and evaporation, collect little dew.

There are very many plants whose leaves are downy, with a thick growth of tiny vegetable hairs; the mullein leaf is a good example. Its thick, velvety leaves are thickly covered with this growth of vegetable down, and present a velvety surface; these leaves always collect a fine display of dew jewels. . . .

During still nights in the early spring and fall, when there are no disturbing winds, the water molecules, or dewdrops in countless numbers form one upon another, all night long, and settle upon blades of grass and all growing plants, and in the morning sunshine dance and sparkle in strings of scintillating diamonds from every pasture and hedge row.

The sharp-pointed grasses collect the dew very copiously and in a most interesting manner. Dewdrops formed upon the grass blades, it will be observed, are arranged in a truly wonderful symmetrical fashion, and one marvels at the orderly arrangement. Frequently one large dewdrop, clear as a diamond, is deposited upon the very tip of the little grass blade, sometimes two and even three large drops are held in suspension thus, while upon the extreme sharp edge of one or both sides of the blade a collection of small bead like drops cling in orderly, precise fashion, strung from tip to root of the grass blade. A broken or blunted blade of grass collects no dew, or very little. When the large dewdrop perched upon the tip of the grass blade decides to fall, it descends rather slowly at first, following the extreme edge of the blade in its course, and thus meets and collects all the other dewdrops which it encounters strung along the edge of the blade, until, forming at least one heavy drop, it suddenly falls to earth, where it is instantly absorbed, and goes to give life and strength to the very roots of the plant.

Cobwebs attract the dew in a rather singular manner. It is yet to be discovered why the dew forms only on the horizontal threads of a spider's web, while the vertical threads, though smaller, collect no dew deposit. This curious fact is well shown in the photograph of the entire spider's web, also in the section of a web, showing the dew deposit in detail. Wonderfully beautiful are these dew-laden webs. It will be observed that each drop is similar in size, and closely resembles several strings of well-matched pearls, although in the sunshine they appear as clear, flashing diamonds. Certain leaves collect the dewdrops in a novel manner, notably the strawberry leaf, and similar plants having serrated edges. The strawberry leaf, besides being plentifully decorated upon its surface with water beads, holds in each tiny serration about its edge, a large, clear, sparkling dewdrop, which gives the leaf a wonderful jeweled effect.

We are all familiar with the so-called "sweating" of a glass or pitcher, or a metal pipe containing cold water; this is another phase of the dew, and may be observed in the daytime.

A cool night in spring or autumn, after a hot day, we usually receive a more copious fall of dew, which gradually increases as the night becomes cooler. Should clouds gather, the precipitation of the dew at once ceases. Wherever a bush or bit of vegetation overhangs a spot, it has a similar effect to that of a cloud, and the dew does not collect at all, or not as copiously, in that spot.

In the tropics, and in certain countries where there are no rain clouds, where they rarely have rain for many months at a time, the dewfall is so heavy that it quite supplies the lack of rainfall. If it were not for this providential visitation of the dew, all vegetable life must certainly perish, scorched and withered by the torrid heat.

In the East, in the region of Palestine, the dew frequently is so heavy that it closely resembles rain. Upon the great burning deserts alone the dew never falls, for the moment the dew vapors or molecules encounter the scorching breath which arises from the face of these barren seas of sand, they evaporate and are redissolved, dissipated, and consumed by the heat. So it will be seen that the fixed molecules which compose vegetation alone have the power to attract and arrest the water molecules of the air with which they come in contact, and thus form, in combination, the dew.

Another interesting fact, and one which is known to few of us, but which may readily be seen, if we take time to study the dewdrop minutely is, that each tiny drop of dew is in itself a miniature mirror, for upon its clear, crystal-like surface it holds and faithfully portrays upon its rounded form the image of any near by object. The picture is, of course, naturally inverted. But you will find it; a bit of blue sky holding a scrap of fleecy cloud, or a pigmy forest of trees caught and mirrored in the dewdrop. Often sleeping and dormant insects when caught out in the open during the night, receive a copious deposit of dew. . . .

Nature in all her moods, and they are many, is always entertaining and instructive, and perhaps one of her greatest marvels is that which takes place in the silence of the brooding night—the falling of the gentle dew.—Jean M. Thompson in American Motherhood.

Questions on July Reading.

Have your children ever asked where the dew comes from? Could you tell them? You may be barred from the walk in the country, but do you notice the dew miracle in your own back yard? Do you also call your children's attention to it? Where does the dew come from? What is the process by which the moisture in the atmosphere is converted into dew? From what condition does the hoar frost result? Why does dew collect on vegetation more than on barren and rocky formations? What are the requisites for the formation of dew? What kinds of leaves collect the most dew? How is the dew deposited upon grass blades? How is the grass root served by the dewdrop on its tip? How do cobwebs attract the dew? What threads collect the dew? What is the arrangement of dew on a strawberry leaf? What is the cause of the sweating of a glass pitcher? What causes prevent the fall of the dew? What purpose does the dew answer in certain rainless countries? Have you shown the children the dewdrop mirrors?

Request for Prayer.

Sr. America I. Thompson, Alexander, Kansas, asks the Saints in general to pray and fast for her son Heman, who is seriously afflicted. He has been administered to several times for the affliction and has been helped.

Letter Department

SCAMMON, KANSAS, June 4, 1910.

To the Saints in the twenty-five counties in Southwestern Kansas: Having been appointed sub-minister in charge of that unorganized territory, I desire the cooperation of the Saints, and especially of the priesthood to assist us all they can. Please let me hear from you what the chances are for preaching in public buildings, on the streets, in private houses, or any place where we can get people to hear us.

We may have some one to help us and we may not. Let us unite our faith and prayers that we may have success. One thing we do know: if we do our part God will do his. My home address is Nevada, Missouri, 629 North Main street. Mail sent there will reach me. After I get acquainted with the field I will have a mission address.

Your brother in the conflict,

F. C. KECK.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, June 4, 1910.

Dear Herald: I like to read the church papers, more especially since I have been unable to attend all the services on account of poor health. I hope, however, that when the weather becomes more pleasant and I regain my strength, I shall be able to attend more regularly. I had to give up a class in Sunday school because I could not attend regularly.

All who have obeyed the gospel from sincerity of purpose have a testimony to its divinity either in one way or another and should be willing to acknowledge the same. I feel that we are indeed a blessed people that we have been privileged to hear the gospel in its purity and were led to obey it. I am made sad to see those who were once faithful in the cause, become careless. We know the race is not to the swift but to those who endure to the end. If we all can not do as much as we desire to in this life, we can do our part well. Having done our best under present surroundings we can trust God for the future. I want to be true to my God, honest in my endeavors to serve him, truthful to those with whom I associate, diligent in my services before him, and truthful under all conditions.

May the Lord bless his people with faith to endure to the end. I desire an interest in the prayers of all the Saints for my permanent recovery.

Hopefully,

SR. H. H. ROBINSON.

We are doing what we can to live the lives of Saints and to present before the children of men the truth as we find it. As a branch, we are not fully organized here. We are lacking the most essential officer of a branch, namely a teacher, who could find a lot to do at present. Four were baptized May 23 to walk in newness of life. When they were confirmed there was great evidence of their acceptance, for the room was filled with the Spirit of God. We were told by the Spirit that our toiling and laboring should continue in steadfastness and then our efforts would be crowned with success, that God would honor his servants and their ministrations, inasmuch as they were faithful and labored with an eye single to his glory. There are more here now who are near the kingdom who bore testimony of the power and influence at the confirmation, which they had never experienced before. This makes us all feel happy and encourages us to press onward to do the Master's bidding.

We have just had a visit from Bro. Rees Jenkins and Brother Rushton who has given us a few of his masterful sermons which have been food for the soul. We are sorry to see him leave for his western mission, but our prayers are that God will preserve him and use him to assist to gather into the fold all those who have a desire to serve God on his footstool, that they may be qualified here in this life for the life that comes beyond the grave when all our sorrows, troubles, trials, and difficulties will be ended, and all will be joy, peace, and blessedness.

The Western Wales district conference was held here on May 14 and 15. The business part was conducted in a good spirit. In prayer and testimony meeting the gifts of the gospel were enjoyed in tongues, interpretation, and prophecy. The preaching service was full of light and instruction and was much appreciated.

My desire is to continue in the work of the Lord to the end of my days. May God bless all his people is my prayer. I am your brother in gospel bonds,

F. SIMMONS.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, June 8, 1910.

Dear Brother Smith: Your letter of the 2d was duly received. In reply will say I shall take pleasure in writing for the church papers relative to places and scenes visited in my long journey. I am very anxious to learn all I can of conditions in and about Jerusalem, and I have no doubt that others are as anxious as I am, and I shall keep this in mind when I visit the places where so much interest is centered.

The exact date is not yet settled, but I expect to leave in September via London. I go overland from London to Naples, thence by steamer to Port Said, and from there to Jerusalem, reaching the latter place, if I can, in October. If conditions are favorable for the work there, I may remain some little time; that is, as long as the interest of the work will seem to justify. I have a good camera that I expect to make use of and hope to be able to send you some interesting pictures.

I rejoice to say that I have fully recovered my health, and I never felt better in my life. I am looking forward with much pleasure to my long journey, and to my new mission field, and trust the Lord will enable me to make my work there a success.

I am having a little visit with my loved ones in this city while aiding in gospel work here and in the district as well.

In gospel bonds,

F. G. PITT.

HARBOR BEACH, MICHIGAN, May 30, 1910.

Dear Herald: I enjoy reading the HERALD very much. I am a member of the Rose City Branch, but have left that place, and came to this city September 1, 1909. I have not heard the Latter Day Saints' gospel preached since I came here. Many times I have been lonesome, but after reading the letters in the HERALD, would feel encouraged. I went back to Rose City in the early spring on a visit, enjoying it very much. I returned though, in about six weeks. Soon after Bro. W. Morgan told me that Bro. O. J. Hawn and Bro. W. Davis were coming here to preach. They held services about a week. We were very sorry to see them go away so soon. I was very glad to see Brother Hawn, for I had not seen him for about two years, and through him I received this glorious gospel. The Lord has blessed me many times since I came into the church and I am very thankful that I heard and accepted this message.

Pray for me that I may live more worthily before God.

Your brother in the gospel,

FRED SCHENKEL.

The joint convention of Sunday school and Religio of the Massachusetts District was held Saturday and Sunday, May 14 and 15. It will be noticed that we believe in women's rights in this district, there being ten ladies among the twelve district officers in the Sunday school and Religio.

The program was a well-planned affair. At 2.30 p. m. Saturday was the Religio business meeting with Susie E. Jordan presiding. The Sunday school business meeting was held at 7.30 p. m. with Superintendent Lucie H. Sears, of New Bedford, in charge. I heard the remark after the meeting that the ladies could run a business meeting better than the men. I believe there is some truth in this statement. Our district superintendent is also editor of the District Gleaner. She and her staff of reporters worked hard on it and when she had it to her satisfaction, she went to do some shopping and returned to find her paper destroyed. She was very disappointed, but she set to work and wrote another one and read it, although it was not as good as the first would have been.

Sunday morning, at 8.45 Brethren Howlett, of Canada, and Koehler, of New Bedford, had charge of the prayer meeting. Here the Spirit was felt very much. Bro. Howlett spoke to us in tongues. The interpretation was that we had made great sacrifices, that we are pleasing in the sight of the Lord, offering our superintendent and editor a mild rebuke for not having confidence in him. He sought to encourage her in her work.

At 10. a. m. Sunday school was in charge of local Sunday school officers. Several papers were read which showed good judgment of those having it in charge. Ora V. Holmes, district secretary, read a paper, "The importance of secretary work," showing how important it was to give a full report to her, so she in turn could give a full report to the General Secretary. Edna W. H. Cochler wrote a paper, "The typical teacher." She being a day school-teacher handled her subject well, showing how important it is to train ourselves and understand how to teach. Rena Rich is interested in the Religio normal work. Emma Dobbins, of the Religio home department, had a paper on this subject. Primary methods were in charge of Alice Fielding, who is primary teacher at Fall River. Lucie H. Sears, an intermediate teacher, had a paper on, "A plea for intermediates." Mary O. Lewis and M. C. Fisher gave us some interesting points from General Convention. There was a question box in charge of Mary O. Lewis.

JOHN SIDDALL.

BALDKNOB, ARKANSAS, May 27, 1910.

Dear Herald: The branch at this place is still alive though not gaining ground very fast. I think we are holding our own, but we hope and pray that the time is near at hand when we may all be aroused to the full sense of our duties and that the work may be prospered at this place and that every hindering cause may be removed from among us as a branch. I am oftentimes surprised at my own weakness. When I stop to consider the blessings I have enjoyed in this grand work, to know of the bright testimony I have concerning this latter day work, I am made to wonder at the weakness of human nature. I know that the blessings of God are for his people if they will be faithful and live worthily, and my desires and prayers are that I may be able to overcome every weakness and everything that is displeasing in the sight of the Lord, that I may be instrumental in causing others to know and accept this blessed work.

I will say to some of the missionaries of Tennessee that I would be pleased to have some of them call and preach for some of my relatives who live near Hixson, Tennessee. I have been sending them the church publications and they seem to be interested and say they would be glad to hear some preaching. If you can arrange to go there, inquire for Kinney Hixson or James Hixson, either one will do.

LEONA MARTIN.

ARLINGTON, SOUTH DAKOTA, June 1, 1910.

Dear Herald: I have carefully read Talks about Joseph Smith, and I am greatly pleased with it. It ought to be read by every Latter Day Saint and especially by the young. They would obtain from it a correct view of the life of Joseph Smith, for his worth as a man of God and a good citizen is clearly portrayed. His foreknowledge of the evils resulting from the use of liquor, tobacco, tea and coffee, so widely pointed out by our own most eminent physicians and surgeons, is truly marvelous. His insight concerning the best means of dealing with the criminal classes and its adoption by our most humane and progressive judges, confirm the thought that he was inspired of God to be a blessing to the human race.

With best wishes for the spread of its truth, your brother
EDWARD RANNIE.

Dear Herald: It is strengthening to me to read in the HERALD so many letters from the Saints I know. It has been long since I heard one of our elders preach and I would enjoy hearing a sermon. Sometimes it seems as though it is a hard test to live as we ought to, but when I think how merciful the Lord is to his children, it puts courage in my heart to do what is right. I have been a member of the church for about twenty years. My husband also has been a member for nearly thirteen years. We have four boys and we desire to raise them in the way the Lord would have them go, that they may be true workers for his cause. We have no Latter Day Saint Sunday school here, but we send our children to other denominations. Pray for me that I may ever be turned Zionward. I feel as though some one ought to be sent here to preach this glorious gospel, so that the people would throw away their prejudices and listen to the truth. I ask an interest in your prayers, that I may live faithful till the end.

MRS. BELZARA BASS.

FALL CREEK, PENNSYLVANIA, May 21, 1910.

Dear Herald: We enjoyed the last number of the HERALD very much. I came here from Lowry City Branch, Missouri, almost four years ago. Have not been in a Saints' meeting since coming here, except when we had Bro. L. D. Ullom, of Wheeling, West Virginia, come up to administer to our little daughter who had been stricken with paralysis of the hand and arm. He held a few services at our house and at some of the neighbors' houses. The people here do not seem to be interested in their souls' welfare although some have inquired when our preacher is coming back.

We have Sunday school every Sunday at 2 o'clock in our house. I have read so much lately about the tracts issued by the Northern States Mission of the Utah church.

We were so fortunate (?) as to receive three of their tracts. I read the second one out of curiosity, to see what new method they would take to lie in an underhanded way, and villify the truth. They were trying in the tract to make out that the Reorganization was not the true church. When I had finished reading the tract, I was thinking that if there was a Saint who was not well informed in church history and who had not received a spiritual knowledge that we are in the right, they might be in some little danger of becoming doubtful where to stand in regard to succession. That night, just after falling asleep, I dreamed that I stepped just outside our door onto the porch and saw a nice, clean, bright dish piled high with every kind of fruit. I was pleased and I at once took the dish into the house and passed it to my husband and the children. I handed it to him first and he asked me what that was I was carrying the dish in. I looked and sure enough the dish was in a dirty, filthy, discolored dish, and it was in another which was clean but had a few remnants of fruit sticking to it. I was made to understand that the outside dish was the original church and all which was left sticking to it was good. The second dish was the church of Utah. The dish itself being discolored and dirty, within and without, and all that had stuck to it had become mouldy and rotten. The third or top dish was the Reorganized Church and was so pure and bright and clean that the dirt would not adhere to it, even when it was sitting exactly on it. The dream was so plain, I laughed aloud, which woke me.

Two or three days later we got another tract about polygamy. I read it and was thinking of their misrepresentation and of my dream. I again dreamed. In this dream I seemed to be driving a very spirited team of horses and I saw a very large wagon coming at an angle towards me. The wagon was exceedingly large and powerfully built and was of a bright red color, except for a very small stripe of white, almost invisible. I was afraid it would run into my carriage and mar the beauty, but it ran so fast its driver lost control and it ran away with all on it to destruction. I was wondering what the bright wagon represented when Bro. T. R. White came up and I asked him. He laughed to think I did not know and said, "The wagon is the Utah church, the red is the evil, and the white the good in it." I instantly awoke and could still seem to hear the rumble as it went down to destruction, with its big red stripes and a tiny streak of good, or of white. As they tried to harm us by running into us they lost control of their own wagon and it ran away with them. I can also seem to see and hear Brother White laughing to think I didn't know what the ugly wagon was.

Your sister in Christ,
R. F. D. No. 1, Box 24. MRS. RENA GRAY ANTHONY.

CRESCENT, IOWA, May 30, 1910.

Hear Herald: Our district conference and Sunday school convention met here. The conference was good and the Saints were blessed and strengthened in the work. God is always ready and willing to bless his people if they do their part. I think there should be more interest taken in our conventions. Every Sunday school worker should make an effort to be there and take an active part. It would then be a success and we would receive spiritual strength and we would be able to do more good and have far better success in the Sunday school work. We have started our Wednesday evening prayer meetings and the Spirit of God has been poured out over us at times and we have been greatly blessed. Two have been lately baptized and I believe there are others that will soon come if the Saints will do their duty. I fully believe that through the means of prayer meetings the spiritual condition of the branch is kept up to a greater extent.

I have lately been called to go through great trials and suffering and on the 15th of last month had to submit to a painful operation. It was indeed one of the hardest trials of my life, but I earnestly plead with God that he would direct me what I should do. When the doctor told me that nothing else could save my life and that I could live only a few days in my condition, it was revealed to me that I should go and that he would be with me and all should be well. I was so weak I could not get to the hospital till I received strength. I asked the Saints to fast and pray for me and I sent for the elders, who administered to me twice a day before I went to the hospital.

When I was laid on the operating table I committed myself into the hands of God and prayed his guardian angel might be there to care for me. I went fully trusting in God and he has greatly blessed me. My health is much better now. I ask the prayers of the Saints that if it be God's will, I may be restored to health again.

CHRISTINA RASMUSSEN.

OTTAWA, KENTUCKY, May 22, 1910.

Dear Herald: God is pouring out his blessings on this little branch. A few nights ago there were two persons healed, one of heart trouble and the other of throat trouble. In prayer meeting the writer spoke in prophecy to the one that was healed and commanded him to abstain from the use of tobacco. May the brethren who use tobacco, lay down the lust of the flesh and serve the Lord in spirit and truth.

We would be pleased to have an elder come and hold a few meetings here. May the honest in heart be gathered home to Zion is my prayer. Pray for us that we may be faithful. I feel the Lord is blessing me every day with his Holy Spirit. A few weeks ago I was very sick and I asked the Lord to heal me. I was commanded to rise and wash my hands and face and I would be healed. I was healed and I give God the glory.

Your sister in the faith,

PEARL OLIVER.

From Massachusetts.

The Sunday school and Religio convention which was held at Attleboro, Massachusetts, May 14 and 15, was a decided success. The active workers of this convention were mostly sisters taking their right place, demonstrating their efficiency to work along the only lines open to women to use the missionary spirit. We were very much gratified to see the sisters qualifying themselves to care for the youth of the church, to train them to be missionaries to go into the world to gather more students to care for and educate in the gospel. After the close of the convention the Sunday school superintendent extended invitations to all to attend his Sunday school the following Sabbath, as he had a surprise for them, which we later found to be the celebration of the seventy-fifth birthday of our beloved Sister Reumant, who had been in the church fifty-nine years, and as in the words of the original paper by Sr. Florence Leckney, "A beautiful and successful life is made up of small things. Little words of kindness, little helps to the discouraged, a cheerful countenance when the sun of life is hidden and the clouds of severed earthly ties and shattered hopes hang low, yet looks up to God in trusting faith." Of this we can say of our dear sister: Truth is not flattery, so let us be generous in our appreciation, as a rose to the living where they can enjoy its fragrance.

Our sister joined the church when she was sixteen years old, most of the time attending the Sunday school where you see her to-day. Can we look upon our sister and say her path has been a flowery one? If we should ask her, she might show many a thorn that bruised her weary feet and sometimes left deep scars, but I think she would say, "God's supporting arms have given me strength." In the dark days of the church, when they were like sheep without a shepherd, she stood still and watched for the salvation of God and the redemption of his people. No doubt she has felt in her heart to say, "Why has my path been so hard?" Perhaps some day he will tell her why he has tried her, and let her look back on her life story and see the golden thread of his fatherly love and care, shining over and around it all.

"For the test of the heart is trouble,
And it always comes with the years,
And the smile that is with the praises of earth—
Is the smile that can shine through tears."

Of this, I think we can say—our sister has been cheerful in her warfare. Of such is a triumphant victory, "Well done."

After the lesson, she was presented with a bouquet of seventy-five pink carnations. To also please her, our superintendent had arranged a short program. Brother Fox said he had lived with the sister twenty years ago and it was through her instrumentality in God's hands, that had brought him into the church, for which he is now grateful. Brother Fox had sent invitations to the relatives of our aged sister, to attend the Sunday school and the celebration, to which they goodly responded, and thus the membership and offering of the day were greatly increased. The following Thursday evening a class supper was held to increase the Christmas offering fund for Sister Whipple's class. L. A. B.

The Temperance Forces and Their Work.

Temperance is one of the characteristics of the "fruit of the Spirit," and we are clearly informed to "be not deceived; neither fornicators, . . . nor drunkards, . . . shall inherit the kingdom of God." For these reasons above all others it is a part of the duty of every representative of the "kingdom of God" to advocate temperance in the most effective way, as the Spirit will outline the way to advocate the principle, either by supplementing every effort made by the public of a general or special character, or so labor as to permit these forces to supplement our efforts to represent this feature of spiritual development, and of civic righteousness.

We can not render our full quota of influence for good among men in any direction unless we encourage every effort of our fellow-men to promote civic and moral reforms, and to make the most telling efforts we must acquaint ourselves with all movements made in the interest of humanity and their betterment.

Our citizenship requires of us and obligates us to the various arms and forces of government to which we are related as citizens, that looks to the enacting of better laws or of executing those already enacted. The best way to show the deficiencies of any law is its enforcement. This shows just what the deficiencies are, where they exist, and how best to proceed to eliminate them.

To fulfill the God-given injunction, "Wherefore, honest men and wise men should be sought for diligently, and good men and wise men, we should observe to uphold; otherwise whatsoever is less than these, cometh of evil," requires a study of men, and to seek for honest and wise men diligently to occupy in the various offices of government; and in order in conscientiousness to "submit to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake," we must see that those who are to bring into existence these ordinances are such ones as will give us good ordinances. A good man is not only one with good intent, but a man with good thought which he is willing to place where it will do the most good, and a wise and good man is one who has studied the conditions so that he may be able to see that the good he would do finds its place in the laws, for the laws can not make us free if they are vicious laws, and to be free from intemperance we must not only have good laws, but we must have men in the executive department of government who will be good enough to see that good laws are executed, and wise enough to resist all bribe or influence. When the righteous rule the people rejoice, but when the wicked rule the people mourn.

There is on the statutes of Iowa a law called the Mule tax law, which is but another name for indulgence; and while it has some features that are better than some license laws, yet it is surprising that so many who are such bitter opponents of indulgences should favor this law. It does indulge the people under certain conditions to break the statutory provision to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicants under penalty. It both permits them to break, and also to set aside the penalty, providing a certain majority desire to break the law. This in a way establishes the principle of state rights, by setting aside the general law of the commonwealth, providing a part of the commonwealth desire it set aside and so request. In this case the commonwealth of the State of Iowa has said that the sale and manufacture of intoxicants should be prohibited, but the policy of politics is that the right is resident in any county or city of this commonwealth to live a legal transgressor of the general law of the State if a certain majority of them request to so live.

The policy of politics is too treacherous to deal with a church question, and since it is the policy of the "land of the free" to keep church and state entirely separate, we conclude that no political party now existing or that may exist should be entrusted with the legislation of righteousness, or the execution of such laws, and that the divine policy to uphold good and wise men of whatever party, both by our votes and by our influence, faith, and prayers after they are elected, is much the wisest course to pursue.

There are two general organizations in the State of Iowa, both claiming to be outside of politics, one the Anti-Saloon League, and the other the Iowa Constitutional Prohibitory Amendment Association, both having their headquarters in Des Moines. One (the former) is United States wide, the other relates only to the State at the present time. To understand the object of each will aid the membership of the church to concentrate their efforts where they will accomplish the most good.

The Anti-Saloon League is the federation of all the religious and temperance forces, and men and women of temperance proclivities, to remove the saloon from the State and nation, and to educate the people to have no desire for it. The Iowa Constitutional Prohibitory Amendment Association is an outgrowth of the allied forces, although not supported as an organization by a large portion of the membership of the organizations comprising the allied forces.

Both these organizations are seeking to elect legislators who are favorable to the adoption by the State of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors within the State. Both urge the repeal of the mule tax law, but neither are satisfied with that alone, for that would only give to the State statutory prohibition, while constitutional prohibition is the objective, and the only objective that will fully satisfy the earnest temperance workers in either of these organizations.

The Anti-Saloon League has an enforcement feature in its work that the other does not consider as a part of its work.

The Anti-Saloon League favors the calling of a constitutional convention by the votes of the people this fall, while the other has resolved to use its efforts to defeat the calling of such convention, and rests all its hope on the legislature giving the desired amendment. It is possible that both houses of the next legislature may not be in favor of submitting a constitutional amendment to the people, but do as they did last fall, while at the same time the people by their votes may favor a constitutional convention. Should the people say that such a convention shall be called then it is the duty of the legislature to provide for it. It is just as easy to vote for men for the legislature who are in favor of submitting a constitutional amendment to the people for their vote, and at the same time vote to favor a constitutional convention, then if they fail in securing a favorable legislature, nevertheless they, the legislature, are compelled to arrange to choose delegates to compose such convention, and by this means secure constitutional prohibition much the sooner.

From the present outlook the legislature will be more strongly in favor of giving the people the privilege to vote on an amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicants, but the senate will, without much doubt, remain opposed to submitting such amendment to the vote of the people. This being the case it is safer to vote for both favorable legislators and the constitutional convention, for if both are defeated then we will have the same privilege that if the former only is defeated, for which both organizations are laboring, and then will have to wait two years hence to secure a favorable legislature, and ten years for the purpose of securing a constitutional convention. But if we should have both a favorable legislature and the privilege of a constitutional convention then we would be yet more secure in obtaining the one thing desired, constitutional prohibition, and to obtain it the more speedily.

It should, then, be the effort to select wise and honest as well as good men to occupy in the next legislature, in both houses, and to secure the constitutional convention, and thus show by all that there is in us that we are in favor of speedy temperance legislation.

Another thing the Anti-Saloon League is laboring for that will be of great benefit in securing temperance for the State, and that is the enactment of an interstate law governing the shipping of intoxicants into States that have prohibitory laws. Because of not having this law is where the intemperance element made it appear that statutory prohibition did not prohibit, but if it had been so deficient, and so favorable to the sale of intoxicants without the payment of license, they would not have worked so hard against it.

In the cause of temperance,

J. F. MINTON.

A Letter from Mexico.

In reading the account of past events concerning the former inhabitants of America, I could not help but observe the painstaking manner in which the writers kept in sight the things that we at this late period would most need to vindicate their words. They plainly saw that the people in general would not accept the record as true, notably in respect to the location of cities and physical features of the land. Repeatedly they, thinking we might have become confused, stopped in the narration and gave us a new start by stating just where the scene of action lay. Can it be that they saw down the stream of time and saw what a powerful factor the subject of archæology might be in establishing the truth of the record? I think they did. It is written that they saw our day, and I think they saw the conditions in general about as clearly as you or I can see them to-day.

How shall we accept all this evidence as seen in the ruins of their cities, the inscriptions carved in stone, the certain message read in the different writings upon the walls of the temples; the evidence daily excavated from some buried city or village forming an avalanche of proof of the truth of the Book of Mormon? God works in mysterious ways his wonders to perform. The destruction of the face of this land at the crucifixion of Christ has its import. Cities were sunk, some buried, and water came up in the place of some. The following quotation may be of interest to some:

"A mile and a half before it is reached the train passes a clear lake in the bottom of which is a submerged village. Not even the top of its church steeple is visible above the water's surface, but any who trouble to row out from the shore can see the whole village more than a hundred feet below them. It must have had a population of five hundred or more but its name is now as much a mystery as is the manner of its burial. A deep-sea diver might make some interesting discoveries down in these inland depths.

"At present no satisfactory accommodations exist at the lake, but it has attracted so much attention that at this writing plans are on foot for the building of a hotel there. It is but five miles from Puente de Ixtla, a town of four thousand population with hotels and daily train service."

I expect to sift this matter to see whether the village referred to is modern or ancient. The pyramids have a great significance, I am sure. Here is a quotation concerning one:

"The Cholula pyramid adjoins the city of Cholula and is ascended by a thirty minutes' leisurely climb up a massive stone stairway which has been the route of great religious processions for five hundred recorded years and probably twice as many more that are unrecorded. Every September thousands of the faithful come miles and miles to climb this stairway (many of them upon their knees) to worship before Nuestra Senora de los Remedios (Our Lady of the Remedies) who is the virgin presiding above the altar of the church on the pyramid's summit."

I can not but connect these pyramids with the hills spoken of in the Book of Mormon, viz, Ramah, Shun, Connor, etc. It seems to me that it would be a matter of patriotic interest to say the least, that we try to locate the hill upon which was spilled the blood of two nations. Let us forge this mighty sword placed in our hands and wield it manfully in this great last battle of the world.

I am happy to be among the Lamanites and am learning their language. Please send any suggestions you may have.

News From Branches

DES MOINES, IOWA.

The city is in the throes of a political strife, to be settled at the primaries to-morrow partly. The temperance forces are making an effort to inform the voters which of the candidates have been good in the past, and who it is that has shown their interest in the temperance work.

Elder C. E. Butterworth will hold a series of services in the local church, assisted by the city missionary and the local ministry this week.

Conventions of the District Religio-Literary and Sunday school associations were held in this city Friday. During the business the secretaryship of the Religio Society was made vacant by resignation, and Sr. Sarah Rogers, of Boone, was elected to fill the vacancy. Two took the first examination in normal work and passed by a good percentage. An effort was made to revive an interest in the normal work with but little apparent results. The convention of the Sunday school association voted one pledge for the temporary endowment fund. Several were interested enough to say that if they felt that they could they would make a pledge for this fund. There are many that look upon this effort with much favor.

The quarterly conference of this district selected as officers of the district, Elder O. Salisbury, president, with Elders

W. Christy and E. O. Clark associated, and E. O. Clark, secretary.

It was reported from several sources the wrong conclusions that had been formed in the minds of those not of the church in reference to the action of the ministerial association in dropping the city missionary from its membership, and to correct these misunderstandings the conference took decided action, and in emphatic terms made it clear that that action had not affected the membership or ministerial standing of the brother, as some had concluded, and had reported, and that they protested against any human organization passing judgment upon their evangelical standing.

There will be meetings held at Rose City, Michigan, on July 3 and 4. All are cordially invited to come and have a spiritual feast. We have obtained good speakers. George Burt, president.

Correction.

My letter in the HERALD of June 4 should read as follows: "Sr. Anibel Carr was baptized," instead of Annabel Bass. Also, "All the homes were filled and we had to put nine in the hotel" instead of, "I had to go to the hotel."

JOHN ZAHND.

Notice.

I notice a mistake in the notice published in the last issue of the HERALD. The notice should read as follows: "The Fremont district conference will convene with the Thurman Branch June 18 and 19, 1910. Let all officers report this time." C. W. Forney, secretary.

Pastoral.

To the Officers and Members of the British Isles Mission: I anticipate being present at the mission conference to be held at Birmingham. The traveling ministry will continue to labor in their respective localities assigned them by Brother Rushton. I have requested Brother Rushton to remain in England until after the conference. Different arrangements may be made affecting the traveling ministry at the time of our gathering. I sincerely hope that the priesthood will put

Died.

EPPELSON.—Orphelia Arthusa Epperson was born December 20, 1838, in Oswego County, New York. Died May 8, 1910, at the age of 71 years, 4 months, and 18 days. She came with her parents to Mills County, Iowa, in 1846, where her home has been since, and where we met to express our respects to the departed. She was married to Charles Lee Epperson August 16, 1860, to which union two daughters and three sons were born, Clara Lenna dying in infancy; David, Elias, Charles Guy, and Anna Effie Hunter reside near the old home, and Johathan Roy resides in Des Moines, all of whom feel the loss of mother very keenly, but their mourning is mingled with a bright hope for the departed one. She was baptized at Thurman, Iowa, by Elder T. W. Williams, August 16, 1896, and has proved her faith by her works. She was a homemaker, cherishing with mother-love the privilege of giving of her best and all that was of her for those whom God had in his kindness granted her the privilege of caring for. The appreciation of which love and care is shown in the effort unitedly made to make her last moments all that she would wish them to be, considering her every anticipation in the preparations for this sad rite. She passed peacefully to rest, to await in the paradise of God the glorious resurrection of the "blessed and holy." Funeral services were held at the home near Pacific Junction, conducted by Elder J. F. Mintun, of Des Moines, Iowa, after which the remains were laid in the lot already prepared by the thoughtful husband with a monument to mark their last resting place, in the Glenwood cemetery, Tuesday, May 10.

EPPELSON.—Bro. Charles Lee Epperson was born in Montgomery County, Indiana, July 30, 1836, dying at the age of 74 years, 9 months, and 14 days, on May 14, 1910, only about six days after seeing his loving companion taken from the home and laid in the tomb. He was taken sick about the same time as his wife that had so recently deceased, and the sorrow of that event, no doubt, hastened his death. All was done to alleviate his distress and relieve him, but it was willed that he should not abide here in loneliness. Previous to his death all the sting of this change was taken from him, and he died as one going to sleep. He came with his father's family to Iowa in 1837, and to Mills County in 1853. This death of father coming so soon after the death of mother was a sad blow to the children now left to mourn, mentioned in the obituary of the mother, but they bore this sadness with calmness indicative of faith in God. He had made provisions for the service, which were fully complied with by the children. He was baptized in Harrison County, Iowa, by Elder J. F. Mintun, September 8, 1897, since which time he has occupied every opportunity to permit his neighbors to know of the blessedness of his faith in Christ Jesus. He was plain and outspoken to all, a man everywhere known for his honesty, and his devotion to his home and church. Funeral services were conducted by Elder J. F. Mintun, the Glenwood Saints again rendering the music, and the same pallbearers bearing his body, as had rendered such service in the burial services of his wife, and the services conducted at the old home as had been his wife's. After the sermon the body was laid by the side of his companion, the flowers on her grave as yet but little wilted. The heartfelt sympathy of the whole neighborhood where they had made their home for many years was fully shown.

The Annual Fourth of July Killing.

It may surprise many a citizen to know that a very rational and earnest movement against the use of fireworks on Independence Day is now in its seventh year; nor is it universally realized among us how many of our children have, by reason of these yearly celebrations, suffered the most cruel death known to medical science. Were any such emotion possible in the English breast, that of satisfaction for the losses and humiliations endured by England in the war for Independence,—at least so far as human life is concerned,—could hardly be more thoroughly justified; for, taking no account whatever of our national losses of many decades past, but only of those incurred in the last three yearly celebrations and in the metropolis alone, we find that 1,339 have been killed and injured,—more than the casualties in the Revolutionary battles of Lexington, Bunker Hill, Fort Moultrie, White Plains, Fort Washington, Monmouth, and Cowpens combined. Nor have these losses been among fighting men, but rather among little children; and of the latter wounded on Independence Day many that have not died have nevertheless been dreadfully maimed and disfigured for life.—From "Independence Day,—The modern Moloch," by John B. Huber, M. D., in the American Review of Reviews for June.

CORNER STONES OF THE UTAH CHURCH.—NO. 2.

THE CASE OF JOSEPH F. SMITH.

How is it with the present successor to Brigham Young? Is God with him? Is he indeed receiving light as a prophet, seer, and revelator? We will permit him to answer for himself. We quote from his testimony before the United States Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, as published by the United States Government:

Mr. Taylor.—Are you a prophet, seer, and revelator?

Mr. Smith.—I am SO SUSTAINED AND UPHELD BY MY PEOPLE.

Mr. Taylor.—You are possessed of the same powers that they [Joseph Smith the Martyr and his associates] were possessed of?

Mr. Smith.—Yes, I am SUPPOSED to be possessed of the same authority that they were.

Mr. Taylor.—You believe yourself to be, do you not?

Mr. Smith.—I THINK I do believe so.

—Reed Smoot Case, vol. 1, pp. 80, 81.

Senator Dubois.—Have you received ANY revelation from God, which has been submitted by you and the apostles to the body of the church in their semiannual conference, which revelation has been sustained by that conference, through the upholding of their hands?

Mr. Smith.—Since when?

Senator Dubois.—SINCE YOU BECAME PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH.

Mr. Smith.—No, sir; NONE WHATEVER.

Senator Dubois.—Have you received any INDIVIDUAL revelations yourself, since you became President of the church under your own definition, even, of a revelation?

Mr. Smith.—I CAN NOT SAY THAT I HAVE.

Senator Dubois.—Can you say that you have not?

Mr. Smith.—No; I can not say that I have not.

Senator Dubois.—Then you do not know whether you have received any such revelation as you have described, or whether you have not?

Mr. Smith.—Well, I can say this: That if I live as I should in the line of my duties, I am susceptible, I think, of the impressions of the Spirit of the Lord upon my mind at any time, JUST AS ANY GOOD METHODIST or any other good church member might be. And so far as that is concerned, I say yes; I have had impressions of the Spirit upon my mind very frequently, but they are NOT in the sense revelations.

—Reed Smoot Case, vol. 1, pp. 483, 484.

A CORNER STONE WHO "THINKS" HE BELIEVES THAT HE HAS HAD "IMPRESSIONS."

In the foregoing we discover several important things regarding one prominent "corner stone."

According to his own testimony he is not a prophet, seer, and revelator. He is merely sustained as one.

He does not have the authority that Joseph Smith the Martyr had. He is merely supposed to have that authority.

He is a "revelator" who never has received a revelation.

He thinks that as a prophet, seer, and revelator he is about on a par with any good Methodist, but perhaps that is an injustice to the good Methodists.

Is God with Joseph F. Smith, president of the dominant church in Utah? NO! Not according to God and Joseph F. Smith.

Why not? Simply because like his predecessor he has failed to abide in the doctrine (and for other reasons). He still indorses the doctrines taught by his predecessors. He still practices those doctrines, having been convicted and fined in his own State for not "cleaving unto one wife and none else." The human penalty was a fine of some three hundred dollars; the divine penalty was, "He shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit."

CORNER STONES THAT DO NOT OBEY THE LAW.

If a man does not keep the law of the land he can not keep the law of God. The law of God says clearly:

Let NO MAN break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God HATH NO NEED to break the laws of the land.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5; Utah edition 58: 21.

Now we will listen to the testimony of the president of the Utah church. When he was before the Senate committee he was asked why he did not cease to have children by five different women. We quote:

Mr. Smith.—I have chosen not to do that, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman.—You have chosen not to do it?

Mr. Smith.—That is it. I am responsible before the law for my action.

The Chairman.—And in not doing it, you are VIOLATING THE LAW?

Mr. Smith.—The law of my State?

The Chairman.—Yes.

Mr. Smith.—YES, SIR.

Senator Overman.—Is there not a revelation published in the Book of Covenants here that you shall abide by the law of the State.

Mr. Smith.—It includes both unlawful cohabitation and polygamy.

Senator Overman.—Is there not a revelation that you shall abide by the laws of the State and of the land?

Mr. Smith.—YES, SIR.

Senator Overman.—If that is a revelation, are you not violating the laws of God?

Mr. Smith.—I have ADMITTED that, Mr. Senator, A GREAT MANY TIMES HERE.

—Reed Smoot Case, vol. 1, p. 334.

At the same time the president of the Quorum of Twelve was questioned on the same subject:

Mr. Tayler.—Then you did wrong?

Mr. Lyman.—Yes, sir; according to the law.

Mr. Tayler.—According to the law?

Mr. Lyman.—Yes, sir.

Mr. Tayler.—It was wrong according to the church law as well?

Mr. Lyman.—It was wrong according to the rule of the church.

Mr. Tayler.—So you violated BOTH laws?

Mr. Lyman.—Yes, sir.

Mr. Tayler.—The law of the land and the rule of the church?

Mr. Lyman.—YES, SIR.

The Chairman.—I wish to ask a question right here. You are now continuing in this polygamous relation?

Mr. Lyman.—YES, SIR.

The Chairman.—And intend to?

Mr. Lyman.—I had thought of NOTHING ELSE, Mr. Chairman.

—Reed Smoot Case, vol. 1, p. 428.

These men claim that they got into trouble through observing a law of God. But he that "keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land." So they are forced to admit that they have violated the laws of God and man; and, further, that as a natural consequence they no longer receive the divine manifestations that their people expect them to receive.

TWELVE CORNER STONES CHOSEN OF MEN.

In the days of Joseph the Martyr the Twelve Apostles were at first called through a committee of three appointed by direct revelation and inspired to designate those who should be ordained. Subsequently the Lord called members by direct revelation through the Prophet, and that rule continued until his death. The same general custom has obtained in the Reorganization.

But the man who is "sustained" by the Utah Church as a prophet never receives revelations. So note how their apostles are selected:

Senator Hoar.—I understand you to say that the original Twelve Apostles were selected by revelation?

Mr. Smith.—Yes, sir.

Senator Hoar.—Through Joseph Smith?

Mr. Smith.—Yes, sir, that is right.

Senator Hoar.—Is there any revelation in regard to the subsequent ones?

Mr. Smith.—NO, SIR; it has been the choice of the body.

Senator McComas.—Then the apostles are perpetuated in succession by their OWN ACT and the approval of the First Presidency?

Mr. Smith.—THAT IS RIGHT.

—Reed Smoot Case, vol. 1, p. 92.

Mr. Smith says that there has been no revelation calling apostles to office since the days of the Martyr. Probably he will be accepted as authority in Utah.

HOW DID THE PRESIDENT OF THE UTAH CHURCH RECEIVE HIS CALL?

The law says that the president of the high priesthood must be called by revelation, and his two counselors in like manner. The law also says that the president shall be ordained according to the law (see quotations given further on).

But no man has EVER been called by revelation to occupy as president of the Utah church; and no man has EVER been ordained to that office. Note the case of the present incumbent:

Senator Bailey.—Who chooses or elects the president? For instance, who elected you to your present position?

Mr. Smith.—I was NOMINATED by the Twelve Apostles and submitted to the whole church and SUSTAINED BY THE WHOLE CHURCH.

—Reed Smoot Case, vol. 1, p. 92.

These apostles (twelve corner stones), themselves called and chosen of men, proceed to "call" and choose Joseph F., and the church elects him.

People of Utah, do you realize that from year to year you sustain twelve men as apostles of the Lamb and three men in the First Presidency, and that you can not point to a revelation from God calling a single one of these men to such office?

These men are elected, the same as any sectarian officer might be elected. There has been no revelation calling them. The chiefest among them, the one who should receive revelation, says that he has never received one, either for himself or for the church.

And this thing began a long time ago when Brigham Young said:

Who ordained me to be First President of this church on earth? I answer, it is the choice of this people, AND THAT IS SUFFICIENT.—Millennial Star, vol. 16, p. 442.

Having turned the searchlight on these "corner stones" we find that they have "transgressed" and have failed to "abide" in the doctrine.

Applying the scriptural test we conclude that God is not with them.

When placed upon the witness stand they confess that our conclusions are correct.

AN INVITATION.

Kind reader, if you are a member of the dominant church in Utah, are you satisfied with the conditions that are revealed when the searchlight is turned on? If you are satisfied, that is your affair. But if you are not satisfied, we invite your attention to the message of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

This work of reorganizing the church after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith began among men with whom God was working. These men were searching everywhere among the many conflicting factions, trying as best they could to find the truth. Finding by personal investigation and by revelation that the truth was not with these factions, they, possessed of their membership and priesthood obtained in the church during the days of Joseph Smith, and also by the authority conveyed to them by direct revelation from God, proceeded to reorganize the church.

They took the stand that they would teach all of the doctrine of Christ as found in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants; and that they would for ever oppose doctrines that were in conflict with these three books. The Reorganization has ever maintained that stand.

In 1860, Joseph Smith, oldest son of the martyred Prophet, took his father's place at the head of the church, as had been predicted:

For this anointing have I put upon his [Joseph Smith's] head, that his blessing shall also be put UPON THE HEAD OF HIS POSTERITY AFTER HIM; and as I said unto Abraham, concerning the kindreds of the earth, even so I say unto my servant Joseph, In thee, AND IN THY SEED, shall the kindred of the earth be blessed.—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 18; Utah edition 124: 57, 58.

Prior to his tragic death Joseph Smith the martyr had blessed this son and set him apart to that calling, as is attested by many witnesses, and was in harmony with the law:

And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations UNTIL HE BE TAKEN, if he abide in me. But verily, I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift EXCEPT IT BE THROUGH HIM, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead.—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 1, 2; Utah edition 43: 3, 4.

Joseph Smith the Martyr was to appoint his successor. This right of appointment was to be his even if he were to transgress. Certainly it would be his in the event of his continuing faithful. That right he exercised in the appointment of his son.

Thus having been called by "revelation" and not by the will of "the people" alone, Joseph, the son of Joseph, was duly ordained President of the high priesthood, at the conference at Amboy, Illinois, April 6, 1860. This fulfilled the church law:

The president of the church, who is also the president of the council, IS APPOINTED BY REVELATION, and is acknowledged, in his administration, by the voice of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 99: 6; Utah edition 102: 9, 10.

He that is ordained of me, shall come in at the gate AND BE ORDAINED AS I HAVE TOLD YOU BEFORE, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed.—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 2; Utah edition 43: 7.

At the very beginning of his leadership he made this declaration:

In the name of the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob, I now call upon all the scattered Saints, upon all the broad earth, to arise and shake off the sleep that hath bound them these many years, take on the armor of the just, calling on the name of the Lord for help, and unite once more for the emancipation of the honest in heart from the power of false doctrines and the shackles of sin.

In the name of bleeding Zion, I call upon all those who have been wandering in by and forbidden paths, and have been led astray by wicked and designing men, to turn from their scenes of wickedness and sins of convenience, to turn from their servitude to Satan, in all his seductive devices; from vice in every phase, and from the labor of sin, the wages whereof are ever death, unto their true and delightful allegiance to the principles of the gospel of peace, to the paths of wisdom, to the homage of that God that brought the children of Israel out of bondage; to turn and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon; to lay hold anew upon the rod of iron which surely leads to the tree of life; to remember that those who live to the Lord keep his commandments, and that the promises are unto the faithful, and the reward unto those that endure unto the end.

Thus occupying in his God appointed place, and having continued to "abide in the doctrine of Christ," he has had "both the Father and the Son." Through him God has continued to give his people revelation, from time to time, even as in days gone by, and the church has continued to enjoy the gifts of the gospel and the blessings of the Holy Spirit.

GRACELAND COLLEGE NEWS.

We presume that many are wondering in reference to the success that the temporary endowment plan is meeting throughout the church. We are glad to report that the plan seems to be meeting with favor wherever it is understood. Several missionaries have sent in endowment cards signed up, and those appointed to labor in districts and branches in many cases have responded in a very satisfactory manner. One small district having only three hundred members has already sent in six subscription cards signed up for ten dollars each, and the solicitor has requested that twenty-five more cards be sent to him. One branch having a membership of one hundred and seventy-two has signed and sent in fifteen subscription cards for the full amount of ten dollars each.

These cases merely show what can be done when the disposition to do is not lacking. The opportunity is with us to accomplish splendid work in the interests of Graceland College, and through the college for our young people, and we trust that wherever the Saints have been appointed to take charge of this work, they will give the time and attention necessary at once so that the work may not be delayed.

The outlook for the coming year is very encouraging indeed. We expect to have a strong faculty and a large enrollment, and if we can fully carry out the temporary endowment plan, there is no reason why Graceland College should not fill its place in the church. Those who have not done their part should write at once to the treasurer, F. B. Blair, Lamoni, Iowa.

WITHOUT GOD AND WITHOUT HOPE IN THE WORLD

In my morning's mail to-day was a postal card picture of a Navajo Indian with this laconic, but pregnant, sentence written at the foot in the well-known hand of a friend, a consecrated worker in that tribe, "Without God and without hope in the world. Why?" It is not difficult to supply the answer. It is found in those words of the Apostle Paul written to the Romans regarding the pagans of his day, but equally applicable to the pagan Indians of our own land and time: "How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?"

This great Navajo tribe is but one of the many tribes, or portions of tribes, in our land still without a knowledge of even the historic Christ around whose manger-cradle our thoughts cluster at the Christmas time. It is perhaps needless to say they know nothing whatever of the transforming power of that gospel of "Good news" which he brought to the world. When I took up my pen to write these "notes" I had no intention of being didactic and I crave the indulgence of my readers if what I say appears to be such. But the question asked by my friend is one which Christian America must answer. Why is it, that to-day there are thousands of native born Indians living in our midst not only utterly ignorant of the blessings of Christianity, but in the grossest superstition and in bondage to the arts of their medicine men? . . .

These pagan Indians are ready to hear the gospel message if it is sent to them. They are pagans because it has not been sent. The National Indian Association will shortly open at least one new mission among them. Will the readers of these "notes" help us in this pioneer work?—The Indian's Friend, January, 1910.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Elder James E. Yates writes from Red Rock, Oklahoma, under date of June 12, as follows: "We report the baptism of three more Otoe Indians here to-day. There were about one hundred in attendance and witnessed the baptism. As our results are brought to notice in this locality, by these results, opposition increases and springs from new sources, but of course we may expect that."

Bro. Elbert A. Smith, associate editor, left on Saturday for a short visit among Saints and friends at Burlington, Iowa.

The Saints at Lamoni are holding Sunday night services in Central Park.

The Register and Leader, Des Moines, has an account of the conference of the Des Moines District. They give special prominence to the fact that the conference sustained Elder Mintun in his conflict with the local ministerial association.

The class of 1891, the second class to graduate from the high school of Lamoni, held a class meeting in Lamoni, June 10, at the home of Elbert A. Smith. This was their first meeting in nineteen years. Only one member, Pres. F. M. Smith, was absent.

SAFE HOME.

[This is one of the spirited translations from the Latin made by Dr. John Mason Neale (London 1818-1866). The monk who first wrote it lived somewhere in the ninth century; he was also the author of the original of "O, happy band of Pilgrims." Sir Arthur Sullivan composed an exquisite and appropriate tune for this song of the wanderer at rest.]

Safe home, safe home in port!
Rent cordage, shattered deck,
Torn sails, provisions short,
And only not a wreck;
But O! the joy upon the shore
To tell our voyage perils o'er!

The prize, the prize secure!
The warrior nearly fell;
Bare all he could endure,
And bare not always well;
But he may smile at troubles gone
Who sets the victor garland on.

No more the foe can harm;
No more of leaguered camp,
And cry of night alarm,
And need of ready lamp:
And yet how nearly had he failed—
How nearly had that foe prevailed.

The lamb is in the fold,
In perfect safety penned;
The lion once had hold,
And thought to make an end:
But one came by, with wounded side,
And for the sheep the Shepherd died.

The exile is at home!
O nights and days of tears,
O longings not to roam,
O sins, and doubts, and fears:
What matter now this bitter fray?
The King has wiped those tears away.

THE TEMPORAL LAW OF GOD.

PAPER READ AT IMPROVEMENT CLASS, PRIESTLEY ROAD, BIRMINGHAM, ENGLAND.

Dear Saints: It is with pleasure I greet you this evening, and pray the blessings of heaven may be in our midst at this meeting, and trust the Spirit's guidance may assist in our consideration of the subject. We read in Hebrews 12: 6:

For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth.

Furthermore we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live.—Verse 9.

It is a grave question unto the Father if we have always given our earthly parents reverence, and feel sure we have not always had respect for the God of heaven. It is very necessary that our attention should be called to the laws that are placed on record for our guidance in life's journey to prepare us for the future life and be in the presence of the Lord.

In the 11th verse are these words:

Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby.

What do we understand by the last two words, exercised thereby? Well, from my feeble observation it impresses me that it means that those who are moved to obedience to the request or laws made, see the necessity of obedience and therefore feel their punishment was just and necessary. The punishment the heavenly Father metes out to his creatures is not as unwise and as severe as those we mete out to each other, therefore it is necessary we look into the Book of Books and see what is written for our guidance through life. We so far have complied with the spiritual law, and it is necessary we understand some of the temporal laws as given for God's children. God is our creator who has given us life, and he has intrusted us with a few things in earthly possession for a time while life may last, and we are given a free agency to act and do as we think well, but have laws given to which we are expected to be subject or obedient.

The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein.—Psalm 24: 1.

For we are laborers together with God.—1 Corinthians 3: 9.
Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first-fruits of all thine increase.—Proverbs 3: 9.

Jacob made a vow or promise thus (Genesis 28: 22):

And of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee.

Further the Lord gave commandments to Moses (Leviticus 27: 30):

All the tithe of the land whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's, it is holy unto the Lord.

And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the flock, even of whatsoever passeth under the rod, the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord.—Verse 32.

Thou shalt truly tithe all the increase of thy seed, that the field bringeth forth year by year.—Deuteronomy 14: 22.

And thou shalt eat before the Lord thy God, in the place which he shall choose to place his name there, the tithe of thy corn, of thy wine, and of thine oil, and the firstlings of thy herds and of thy flocks; that thou mayest learn to fear the Lord thy God always. And if the way be too long for thee, so that thou art not able to carry it; . . . Then shalt thou turn it into money, and bind up the money in thine hand, and shalt go unto the place which the Lord thy God shall choose. And thou shalt bestow that money for whatsoever thy soul lusteth after.—Verses 23-26.

Also see further instructions and advice in the following quotations: Matthew 3: 8-11; Luke 11: 43; Hebrews 7: 2-4; 8: 9; Book of Mormon, Alma 10: 1; Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5; 106: 1.

I, the Lord, stretcheth out the heavens, and buildeth the earth as a very handy work; and all things therein are mine; and it is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine; but it must needs be done in my own way; and, behold, this is the way, that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my saints: that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low; for the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare; yea, I prepared all things, and have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves. Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.—Doctrine and Covenants 101.

Much more could be written and said on this subject, but time at present does not permit. May we be blessed with bright eyes to see, minds to be able to understand, and inclinations to comply with God's temporal laws with love and cheerfulness.

The bishops and his agents are the ones who are commanded to look after the temporal affairs, in caring for the families of the missionaries and the poor.

THE BONDWOMAN'S AWAKENING.

Am I to blame that I am a bondwoman? Why should I be banished to the desert solitude? Have I not ever served my mistress faithfully? Even my person was claimed by her and at her behest was yielded up to the embrace of my master; and yon, sleeping youth, is the heritage of that claim!

Did I choose my lot? Was I not born a slave? Even the free breezes of fair Egypt used to mock my thralldom!

Then came the time when my mistress placed me in the arms of her lord! For a while I thought I knew what it was to be loved—an honored wife; but man's affections can not be divided, and woman's heart can no more brook displacement from its throne than can yonder God whom I have been taught to worship. And though at my mistress' command I had yielded my person to his embrace as a wife, I soon found that I was still a slave! Even the angel that met me at the well called me, "Sarai's maid," and bade me return and submit myself under her hand; and I, fearing to disobey the Lord, returned, feeling that henceforth I must ever be a bondwoman! Still, when the child was born, I thought, "Surely the mother of his son shall ever have a place in his household!"

But God who hath decreed that man shall cleave unto his wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, hath given my mistress a new name, and I am cast out!

I have endured and served, finding my only consolation in the son whom the angel promised should one day dwell in the presence of his brethren. And now the decree is that we must be gone, and the declaration is made that God—that God whom I have been taught is a God of justice—sanctions this decree! Did I not know that he hath looked after me hitherto, I should surely cry out against such an object of worship!

Whither shall I go? Where shall I find water and food for the lad? Little does my proud mistress care for us now! There was a time when she called my son her own; but now there is not place for him in her tent, and he—with me—is an outcast!

The loaf is not consumed; but the water jug is empty! The sun shines down upon us like the eye of some pitiless god—one of the gods whom I was taught to worship in Egypt!

The lad is tired and thirsty. My heart aches for him. Is it not enough that I should be a slave, without my son feeling the sting of being an outcast? See, he stirs in his slumbers, ever and anon crying for water!

O thou God above, let me not see the death of my son! I had thought that thy promise was sure, and that my son should have an honored place among the seed of him whom thou hast chosen to be thy prophet; but I had forgotten that I was a slave! But hush, my heart—there comes to me a voice—that voice that once before spoke to me in mine hour of trial! I will bow my head and hear, for "thou, Lord, seest me!"

Mine eyes are open! There is water for the lad, and freedom! The freedom of the desert for us both! The Lord has again spoken, and my son—for now he is my son; before the fiat of this day he was Abraham's son, and I,—I was Sarah's bondwoman; but now my liberty is purchased, and he is my son! No longer is the taint of bondage in his veins! We will dwell in the wilderness, and some day yon sturdy lad shall more than repay his brethren for all this day hath meant!

EQUITY.

(This will be followed by an article entitled, "Equitable or criminal," by the same author.—EDITORS.)

In the early history of the Roman law we find that causes of action before the magistrates or courts had fallen into certain definite forms. Certain writs were issued and wrongs could only be righted, when a suitable writ could be found therefor. The writs were in set form and inflexible, and not readily adapted to a large part of what would otherwise have been causes of action.

Later these five actions were supplanted by formulæ. These formulæ were brief statements, clear and to the point, and were referred to by the judez with a brief statement of the rule of law applicable. Although this relaxed somewhat the arbitrariness of the former actions, which before this time had been enforced, still there were many rights not thereby sufficiently protected. The prætors were the highest magistrates of the law. They boasted almost legislative power, in that by their edicts certain other rights of action and defense were given and defined.

Still later the prætors exercised extraordinary jurisdiction and tried both law and facts, especially in cases where no suitable remedy was provided by the regular formulæ. And in time this extraordinary method of hearing by the prætors became almost the only method, because it sought for justice—æquitas. The principles that governed the prætors in these hearings were those of common right and justice. The principles they enunciated were found upon examination to be the great fundamental principles back of the law of all nations. Also these principles were found almost identical with those set forth by Aristotle, as the law of nature or abstract justice. Hence we find equity sometimes referred to as the law of nations, or as the law of nature. And again we find it set forth that the Roman law was primarily morality, that it did not distinguish so strictly between law and morals, as do our present law philosophers. "Jus est aus bonum et æquum"—the law is both good and just. We find in this word æquitas the idea of equality before the law, more so than in the common or in the criminal law. The Roman law is referred to as "not only just externally, but good internally as well." Jurisprudence was defined as "the knowledge of divine and human things, the science of right and wrong." "Justice was not merely external legality of acts, but the accord of external acts with the precepts of law prompted by internal impulse and volition." Much more might be said, but lest some be deceived we hasten to add that these remarks refer not to the early Roman law, but to the law as administered by the prætors later; in other words, æquitas (equity).

The early law of England was doubtless affected by the Roman law, but later there came a sort of antipathy for everything Roman. Thereafter, we find the English common law like the old Roman law: taking set forms, in which no variation was permissible. As an instance of this strictness coming down to the present day, we may refer residents of Missouri to the case of the State vs. Warner decided during the month of May by the Supreme Court of Missouri. This case was reversed and remanded for retrial, not because of any want of proof of guilt, but simply because, that at the very end of the indictment the stenographer left out the word the. "Against the peace and dignity of State," instead of "Against the peace and dignity of the State." Under the law this defect is fatal to the indictment. It is the law to-day, but in early England it was the same with every cause of action. The exact form and writ had to be followed verbatim. The allegations had to be made in a certain form, regardless of whether in fact true in the particular case at bar or not, much as it is now in a criminal case.

There are also many cases, where the common law failed to give any relief whatever. Still other cases in which relief was not adequate. By the time of Edward III these cases, in which the law provided no sufficient remedy, were turned over to the keeper of the king's conscience, the lord high chancellor. In fact this had been done prior to this time, since all the courts sat in the name of the king, and where no writ issued from Westminster to cover the particular case, appeals were taken to the king's conscience. These cases were in time turned over to the lord high chancellor. The chancellor belonged, as a rule, to the clergy in those early times, nor was it necessary even later that he be a practitioner of the common law. Though in later times this became the practice. As a representative, then, of the clergy, he had been well instructed in the canon law, which was founded on the Roman law. So in his jurisdiction he applied those principles of equity and good conscience, which had been formerly enunciated by the prætors.

The early chancellor also acted on the "conscience of a good man"; "Honesty, Equity, and Conscience" were their watchwords. Thus there was gradually built up parallel with the common law this system of equity, which provided, first, for those cases where the law gave no relief; secondly, for those cases where the relief was inadequate. Naturally there was much opposition in the early years, but with the power of the king behind him, and as keeper of the great seal of England, the chancellor was able to enforce his decrees from the first. Equity also recognizes the principle of res judicata and estoppel, even more so than the common law. Where the common law permitted repeated suits, equity permitted one action to quiet title once and for all. It permitted the joinder of plaintiffs and defendants, where the common law would not, to prevent not only successive but also simultaneous actions. It also permitted other parties having like rights, to be joined, in order that in one hearing all claims concerning the same special matter might be at once settled for good.

But equity as now practiced has been gradually affected by the principles of the common law, while at the same time the common law has been influenced by the principles of equity. During the last century, and especially the latter part of the century, most of the United States and England provided by statute that there should be but one cause of action for civil suits, whether formerly designated legal or equitable. The result has been to largely mitigate the harshness of the common law; but it has also had the effect of hastening the solidification of equity. Equity no longer means the general open principles of justice, but it is a part of human law, having set principles and definite rights of action. It has not as yet adopted that formalism which has been found so objectionable in the early Roman law and in England. So a cause of action, however informally brought, will not be thrown out, if a substantial right and wrong is set forth.

"Human law is not the moral law, the natural law, or the divine law." The divine law or moral law contains principles both jural and non-jural. The jural principles are those which should be embodied in human law, and have been in good part. But of all the different parts of law, equity is the nearest to the fountain head. Equity partakes the most of the great principles of natural justice. "The great underlying principles of equity, the roots of its particular rules, are unquestionable principles of right, justice, and morality." It is more just and moral in its creative department, than what we call the law or common law. Still, it is not identical with natural justice or morality, as a considerable part of it is held to be founded upon expediency and policy, rather than upon any abstract right (Pomeroy).

An appeal, however, is freely granted in cases of equity. When a case goes up in equity it is heard de novo; in other words, a new trial or hearing is given. When an appeal is taken, however, to a general court of appeals, they do not call before them the witnesses at the time. But they will consider all the evidence, not only that which was admitted, but also that which was excluded by the trial court; and they will admit evidence wrongfully excluded, and reject evidence improperly admitted, without, however, reversing the judgment for that reason, as they are able to hand down the decision that should have been given. Also rehearings are granted an appeal in courts of equity upon showing clearly that some question (decisive of course, and duly presented by the counsel) has been overlooked by the court. The court will also of its own motion grant a rehearing for many causes, especially if it appears to one of the judges that more light is needed or advisable. There is considerable liberality, both in appeal and in granting re-hearings.

Equity, therefore, has high antecedents, and although it is by no means identical with natural law or abstract justice, still it more nearly approaches thereto than any other department of human law.

"THE CHILDREN OF THEM WHO KILLED THE PROPHETS."

There have been regrets expressed in the church papers of late because certain of our elders had failed to "cut the raffle" with certain of the reverends, the preponderance of which should be, that they ever tried it. It seems that we, as a church, should offer the hand of fellowship to our contemporaries and league for the doing of good. There could be nothing more fair when considered from the great plan of brotherhood which Jesus came to teach. But men have formed their circles upon a moral and spiritual plane far below that occupied and recommended by Christ. They have organized fraternities, formed alliances, clubbed in conclave and orders without one spark of the true spirit of brotherhood as taught by Christ and revealed throughout Holy Writ.

Jesus sent men to save, but they have vilified and murdered. He taught the golden rule and the brotherhood of men, but they have disseminated hatred and deceit. Instead of warring with Satan, they have wounded their fellow-man without cause or just provocation. There is no light in them. They do exactly as the "children of darkness" did in days of old. They stone and kill the prophets. Then why should our elders seek alliance with them?

Our gospel is an aggressive force; God told us that the creeds of men were wrong; and further that we should call upon them to meet with us and bring forth their reasonings that the rays of truth might have access to the hearts of men. What fellowship can you have with unbelievers? We affirm our divine calling, our authority as ministers of Christ; they deny it. We say Joseph Smith was a prophet; they say he was an impostor. "Be not unevenly yoked together with unbelievers." If our doctrine is right, theirs is wrong. They war against and persecute us.

Ministerial alliances! Who organized and ordained them? Did God? If not, why should we waste time with such things. Some may argue that to be a member of a ministerial alliance would be a means of advertisement; would be an introduction into circles otherwise inaccessible; that it would open up avenues, "lay dust," oil things up in general, and insure easy sailing in erstwhile troublesome waters. But their conclusions are reached from a point of deduction not known to the writer. Controversies are settled only upon an adjustment of the original differences, and that difference with other churches, in our case, is that we claim more than they are willing to concede. We say that our church is organized from God; they dispute it. Members in every ministerial alliance in existence would either have to dispute it or surrender to us that which would dissolve their own churches and brand their ministers as false teachers acting without authority. Are they going to do that? Have they ever for once admitted the slightest possibility of our being divinely authorized? No, nor will they until they are baptized with the same baptism with us and receive the same spirit,—the spirit of life.

When we become willing to broaden out and lop off here and there and concede differences, then the sectarian clergy might extend to us, with a lingering misgiving still, the hand of fellowship. But can we do that? Overtures and concessions belong to those who are in the wrong and wish at last to strike league with the right. There is nothing for us to concede had we the disposition to do so. Compared with the Scripture, our organization and priesthood is faultless and the denominational ministry know it. Added to that, is the Holy Spirit's presence among us guiding the church as a body and edifying the members in particular. Can any church organization except our own claim the same? At least we can not admit as much, nor have we grounds to do so. None claim nor profess to desire prophets, aposbles, gifts, and miracles. This has been our message from the beginning and they have disputed it; called us deceived and deceivers. They have fought us on every hand and gloated over our reverses.

Our message is the message of peace, the same peace which the angels announced to the shepherds when they sang tidings of great joy, peace on earth and good will toward men. We have ever taught peace, lived peace, and desired peace. But they have returned our truce with a full measure of war. We have carried our message into almost every town and hamlet, in country place and large city, and preached there the same gospel of peace that Jesus preached, and the ministry of the churches have ever crossed our path and challenged us. Against our crusade for peace and brotherly love they have turned loose the dogs of war and hurled at our feet as the gauge of battle our prophet's blood.

What harm have we ever proposed to the world? What idle doctrine have we ever advocated or weakness revealed? Everywhere our elders have gone they have preached the pure gospel of Christ, backing the word with a consistent daily life. Where among the clergy have we been "gladly received"? And what harm have we done them that such a spirit should be manifest as was in the late experiences our elders have had with the ministerial alliances? O for a Jesus to stand again on the Areopagus of the world and hurl his ringing adjectives at spiritual Babylon!

Ministerial alliances! What bond of sympathy has there ever been between us? What token of respect have their churches ever shown us? The Book of Mormon was not translated before they were at our heels like ravenous wolves. What offense had we offered prior to that, or since?

Jesus said, "Think not that I have come to bring peace, but a sword." He knew that his doctrine would be assailed, and by whom? By Satan, through his human agencies. Man made creeds may sound a moral key, look well on dress parade, but they know not the bugle call of the Master. Theirs is a human institution and it will do battle for human ends. Jealousies stir their ranks, and they can not stand the fire of truth. They fly the open field and take to ambush, night attacks, and massacre.

They begrudge our every foot of advance. Ours is a doctrine that, if once becoming popular, will throw them into eclipse. The doctrine of Christ swept Judea in its day, and only for the Roman wars would have gradually consumed the whole house of Israel, ordinary circumstances considered. So it was with our own church. While iniquity to a certain extent disunited the body and weakened it, had our neighbors let us alone, these things might gradually have been purged away, and the church left to work out its destiny.

Our efforts have ever been for the establishment of peaceful communities, the preaching of the gospel. In this we have been met with the sword, and would be to-day were it not for the high tide of common sense and love of justice that prevails among men of the world. The religious bodies would bring the torch and tar bucket against us. Then why should our elders desire to "cousin" in with such?

Granted that you are a full-fledged member of a ministerial alliance, have your card and credentials, what advantage will it secure with those of the "hedges and highways" to whom we are sent to preach? Our gospel is an aggressive gospel. We are to go and preach repentance to these very ministerial alliances, to their flocks, and to unbelievers. Will men have any more confidence in you after you have joined hands with a class of men with whom you have hitherto been at war?

Realizing the fact that we are looked down on by other churches and their ministry, we have done altogether too much "pussy footing" at their heels for petty favors. When their "divines" come in our midst we are too quick to surrender our pulpits. They would not do the same in return, and after we have showered favors and kindnesses upon them, they go away and laugh at us, misrepresent, and abuse us. Of all representative men in the world, men of class and profession, the clergy is at the lowest ebb, so far as principle between man and man is concerned. They are less united among themselves; have less real communion and cooperation. The business world, though competitive in a measure, maintains a uniformity, and for the interests of all, deals at a fixed standard. Education is agreed, inventors and the trades are in sympathy with each other. Political parties meet upon friendly ground and settle their differences peaceably. The liquor traffic is agreed upon all points of interest; the sporting world is regulated to a fine art and seldom comes to a cavil. But how is it with the churches and their representatives? It is war with the knife and the knife to the hilt!

There is no man who stands so low in the estimation of thinking men, as the preacher who will stoop to do little things in the name of religion. And there is no one who will do it so quickly. As a rule, your Mr. Preacher is nosing about looking for trouble. He is ever preyed upon by a consuming jealousy of his contemporaries. And he either strikes them outright or lifts his dainty nose in shameful disdain and passes on. "Oh, ye,"—I was about to say what Christ would say.

Ministerial alliances! I wonder if they had such things in the days of Christ and the apostles? And did those noble founders of our faith seek alliance with them? No! Imagine Paul or Peter stepping over the contested line and seeking admittance to a corrupt priesthood! We have no such instances on record. Nor have we any concept as gleaned from their record that they had the disposition to do so.

Think of the breadth of our organization, the glory of the message, and the commission we bear. It is they who should seek us. And they have done it in a way, by modifying their creeds to a status more in keeping with the biblical church than when first we taught them the lesson. Let them come on nearer and nearer, but let us not give one inch. Our uniting with them will not change their policies, nor broaden ours. Their plan of evangelizing is not in keeping with that taught in the Bible or as practiced by us. Then how are we to derive any benefit from associating ourselves with them?

Brethren, our old enemy is before us! The same sword that Jesus saw suspended in the heavens is there to-day. It belongs to the enemies of God, and they are they who teach for doctrine the commandments of men.

The ministers of other churches have laughed at us and heaped upon us persecutions. We have suffered much from violent hands and the heel of the clergy has been upon us. What condolence did they offer when our city was in mourning for the prophet they had killed? Since when have their lachrymal glands begun to leak forth a carressing tenderness toward the widows and orphans their cruelty left us? When and where have they sought to correct the errors their falsehoods have written into histories and encyclopedias? Or do they know or care? No! At our expense they laugh; and when the vampire of persecution hung over us and sucked our very blood, there were snickering in the synod and smiles in the court! But some day, some day our vindication will appear, when looking to the east we behold emancipation written across the sky!

PESSIMISTIC.

Does a man show a well-balanced mind in prophesying of calamity in the very near future? We attended a social meeting on Sunday, June 5, at Independence. One brother, seemingly moved upon by a force not of himself, warned the people of coming calamities that were very near at hand; but not giving detail what they were. The next day in conversation a brother who had attended a social gathering of Saints in Kansas City, at the same hour as that held at Independence, made mention of two individuals in the congregation, each had by a spirit not of themselves declared calamities were near at hand. The exhortation in each of these was to the Saints to be very diligent in their worship of God, and their lives to be pure and good, that they may escape, or be cared for by the loving Father in time of these coming troubles.

Now, how shall the Saints be profited by these admonitions? is a very perplexing question for us to solve. We are fully persuaded that there must of necessity be something more than moral excellency abounding within the church collectively, as also individually; both need to obey the injunction of the Apostle Peter; "Add to your virtue [moral excellency] knowledge."

Without a knowledge of the impending calamities more in detail, and why they should come, and the results of their coming, we can see but very little profit. The Saints should so acquaint themselves by a perusal of the prophecies and revelations of modern times, that they may know how, and know when they can "Enter into their chambers and shut their doors about them for a little moment, while the indignation of the Lord be overpast" (Isaiah 16).

We think it is pointed out very clearly, that as Israel suffered at the time of their fullness A. D. 60 to 70, just prior and at the destruction of Jerusalem, calamities multiplied upon them, such as they had "not known since they were a nation,"—extremely appalling according to the history of those times. Even so in like manner, now in the fullness of the Gentiles there is to be "a day of vengeance" upon the Gentile nations, that shall be more calamitous than Israel's day. As Israel was completely broken as a nation, even in like manner shall the Gentile nations be broken when Israel's time be come in. And the knowledge as to which of the nations is to be broken first should be resident in the church; as also the knowledge of the holy place for God's people to flee unto; and how, and when.

Book of Mormon, Jacob 3: 102-114, and Jeremiah 31: 9, give us to understand that Ephraim will establish the kingdom of Israel, and that kingdom will not be under any Gentile domination. And because of this breaking up of Gentile law and rule, whereby the kingdom of Israel can be set up, it will be a day of trouble such as that nation in which it takes place has never before known.

But Ephraim must have a knowledge as well as moral excellency in order to be able to enter in and occupy. This is imperative. And the signs of the times are, that this can take place in a very short time; the harvest is ripening very fast, so fast that our old men may live to see the kingdom of the ancient of days set up. "God will hasten it in its time."

The establishing of this kingdom as spoken of, and seen in vision by the ancient prophets, was prophesied of by them as the coming of Christ. And we should so understand the fulfillment of the Scriptures relative to his coming means to us a period of time, and he that lives to see this kingdom set up as before stated lives till the coming of Christ.

MARCUS SHAW.

ARE WE EVANGELICAL?

(Only recently Elder Mintun was dropped from the Ministerial Alliance, of Des Moines, Iowa, on the ground that he did not represent an evangelical church. The following article is his defense. Other brethren who have had a similar experience will write on the same subject.—EDITORS.)

We are advised by apostolic instruction that "If we would judge ourselves we should not be judged," and hence to answer this question in judgment on ourselves would be the right kind of judgment to indulge in, providing we may have the Spirit's assistance that we may be righteously led in our conclusions.

No satisfactory answer can be given as long as there is not an agreement as to the meaning of words relating to the question to be answered, hence we must decide as to the meaning of the word evangelical in this question, to arrive at the most satisfactory and beneficial conclusion. We are aware that to answer selfish religious purposes there are several definitions, such as:

1. "It does not make any difference what you believe, just so you are honest." To believe that this is a correct answer we must believe that it does not make any difference whether we believe as Christ believed and taught, or not. We would be justified in believing that it had been better that Jesus Christ had taught nothing, if this answer be true. Those who give this answer are as a rule very tenacious in denouncing as non-evangelical those who declare a disbelief in Jesus being the Christ.

2. "To believe the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible." Those who are the loudest defenders of this idea, always add to the first part of this definition, "as we interpret it"; to the second, "that is not done away"; and to the third, "that claims to be given of God, or by inspiration." To accept this as conclusive in its abstract sense is to accept the thought that God, Christ, the angels, or the Holy Spirit do nothing now, that all they are to do is to give us the Bible. But I find that these same religionists have as many books written in explanation of what they believe about the Bible as any other class of religionists, and while they in words denounce creeds and disciplines, this denunciation is only words, for they have both, both printed and unprinted, and no two of the unprinted ones agree, and most of the unprinted ones do not agree with their printed ones.

3. "To believe that the complete canon of scripture is contained in the Old and New Testaments." To this is attached always, "as interpreted by us in our creeds, written or unwritten."

4. "To believe that you are right, but not the only ones that are right." This expresses the meaning that a person may be right, and one who may differ from him be right also, thus making two or more standards of what is right. This can not be true, for if a thing or declaration is right, it is right, and all that is contrary to it is in another column,—the column of wrong. Only one religious system is right and that is the system that was believed in and advocated by the Lord Jesus Christ.

To none of these definitions of what is evangelical can I agree, but believe that they are the outcroppings of priestcraft, but I can agree with the definition that is given by one of the greatest philologists of this age, Noah Webster, who gives this as the primary definition to the word evangelical:

According to the gospel; consonant to the doctrines and precepts of the gospel published by Christ and the apostles.

This might be more fully represented in the following language:

That system of which Jesus Christ is the author, and that was advocated by him while here on earth, and by his disciples who immediately followed him, a part of which system is published in the New Testament.

No system can be evangelical that is out of harmony with, or contradictory to, what is taught by the New Testament.

In this standard of evidence we find taught that we will find eternal life in searching the Old Testament Scriptures, or the scriptures that the Jews had when Jesus was instructing them, and this is declared in this clear language: "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." To believe on the one testified of, Jesus Christ, is eternal life, but this carries with it the belief in that testified by him. We strengthen this conclusion by the statement of Paul to Timothy in which he says:

And that from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus.

Now, it is known by all that at the time Jesus spoke to the Jews, as quoted, and when Paul spoke to Timothy, as quoted, none of the New Testament had been compiled, and from Timothy's childhood he had not had access to even a knowledge, except it be through the scriptures had previous to the compilation of the New Testament, that there was or was to be a Christ, and yet we are here informed that from a child he had known the holy scriptures that was able to make him wise unto salvation. It is then evangelical to believe that which the Old Testament testifies of concerning Jesus Christ and his work.

Then we are informed by the New Testament that not all that had been written by the inspired men of old, and that had been done and said by the Christ, is in the New Testament, but that some of it that is quoted, and some referred to by inspiration is not associated with that which refers to it. As proof we invite the reader to the following passages:

I wrote unto you in an epistle not to company with fornicators: yet not altogether with the fornicators of this world, or with the covetous, or extortioners, or with idolaters; for then must ye needs go out of the world.—1 Corinthians 5: 9.

This shows that Paul had written a previous epistle to the one that is found in the New Testament, and it contained things of such importance that he refers the Saints to it. Had we it we would, without doubt, find benefit by referring to it also.

How that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery; (as I wrote afore in few words, whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ.)—Ephesians 3: 3, 4.

This gives the importance of that previously written, as given by revelation, and through the reading of which they could understand Paul's knowledge in the mystery of Christ. If it would give them this understanding, it would also give us the same, hence its importance.

Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints.—Jude 1: 3.

Whatever it was that Jude had written was needful for the good of the Saints, and if good for the Saints then would be good for Saints now.

To be evangelical, then, is to believe that all inspired writings are not found in the New Testament, and the Old Testament testifies of several books written by inspired men living at that time which are not found compiled with the books found there, but reference is made to them.

Now that we have concluded what the standard is to which reference is to be made in proof of what is evangelical and what is not, we must decide another equally important matter, and that is, by what means shall we interpret that which is written, or by which that which is written will be interpreted to us, as God intended that we should understand it? That this interpreter is not operative, or not listened to by many, is evidenced by the many contradictory theories as to what the gospel is, and what God requires of mankind as essential to their salvation. The Bible alone, without any interpreter, is meaningless, and the Bible alone with other than the divine interpreter is of no special value in giving to us the divine mind. To enjoy the divine interpreter, the Holy Ghost, is to believe in more than the Bible alone. Paul says, "Even the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God."—1 Corinthians 2: 11. To believe in the revealed meaning of the written word as given by the Holy Ghost is a part of evangelical Christianity, and in this we are evangelical.

The New Testament unfolds to us the following principles as believed in and published by Christ and the apostles.

1. To believe in God as the Creator (Acts 17: 24, 26), who is, and who is a rewarder of those who diligently seek him (Hebrews 11: 6): whose promises are yea and amen (2 Corinthians 1: 20); and one to whom all may come and receive wisdom (James 1: 5). In this we are evangelical.

2. To believe in Jesus Christ by whom all things were created (Colossians 1: 16); who is the Savior of all men, specially of them that believe (1 Timothy 4: 10); the author of eternal salvation unto all that obey him (Hebrews 5: 9); and who will come again with his angels in the glory of his Father to reward every man according to his works (Matthew 16: 27). In this we are evangelical, for we thus believe and teach.

3. To believe in the Holy Ghost as a gift promised to every baptized believer (Acts 2: 38, 39); as the Spirit which guides into all truth, and will show things to come (John 16: 13); as that which leads the sons of God and bears witness to their spirits that they are the children of God (Romans 8: 14, 16); and as that medium through which God reveals the things that he has prepared for them that love him, and by which all the things of God are made known (1 Corinthians 2: 9-11). Thus we believe and teach, hence, in this we are evangelical.

4. To believe the gospel of Jesus Christ is the power of God unto salvation (Romans 1: 16); that it must be obeyed to escape punishment (2 Thessalonians 1: 7, 8); and that it comes in word, in power, in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance (1 Thessalonians 1: 5).

To believe that the gospel of Christ and the doctrine of Christ are the same, for they both promise salvation (Mark 16: 15, 16; 1 Timothy 4: 16); by doing of which doctrine we shall know whether it is of human or divine origin (John 7: 16, 17); by abiding in which we have both the Father and the Son, but to transgress which we have not God (2 John 1: 9). 'Tis thus we preach, and are evangelical.

5. To believe that the gospel or doctrine of Christ is a unit, composed of certain fundamental principles briefly defined by the Apostle Paul (Hebrews 6: 1, 2); and that out of such as believed the church was organized, and to that church others were added who thus believed unto salvation (Acts 2: 36-47); which church must be heard in its disciplinary authority or such ones who do not hear shall be as though they had never obeyed (Matthew 18: 15-18).

6. To believe that not only God communicates his will through the Holy Ghost (John 14: 26); but that the Devil can and does converse with humanity (Genesis 3: 1-5; Job 2: 1-6; Acts 19: 15); that while God's word is truth, and, hence, always in agreement with itself, and endures the same for ever (John 17: 17; 1 Peter 1: 25); the Devil is the father of lies (John 8: 44). We thus believe.

7. To believe that angels have been used as instruments in God's hand of ministering to fallen humanity, as is witnessed from the beginning of Genesis to the close of Revelation, and that their special business is to minister to those who shall be heirs of salvation (Hebrews 1: 13, 14). So we believe.

8. To believe that God authorizes men to minister the word of salvation (Mark 16: 15); but that he does not always choose those considered the wise and noble (1 Corinthians 1: 26); but that no one has the right to preach unless he is sent of God (Romans 10: 15; John 20: 21); and that to receive those sent in the faithful discharge of their duty is to receive Christ (John 13: 20); and to further believe that none can officiate in the higher offices of the priesthood unless they are called of God (Hebrews 5: 4). To this instruction we humbly submit.

9. To believe that there has been a complete apostasy, and the authority of God has been taken from among men (Revelation 12: 1-5; 13: 7, 8; Matthew 11: 12).

To believe that because of this apostasy there must be a restoration of the gospel in word, in power, in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance, the same way the gospel came in New Testament times (Revelation 14: 6, 7); that in that restoration the same fundamental principles will be taught, even faith, repentance, baptisms, the laying on of hands, the resurrection, and eternal judgment, as was taught by Christ and the apostles, and that those who believe these principles will be governed by the same organic law, and the same offices be filled with men to whom Christ will give the same gifts to officiate as in New Testament times, even apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, etc., that the saints may be perfected, the work of the ministry effectually conducted, and the body of Christ or the church edified (Ephesians 4: 8-13); and the same manifestations of the Spirit's work as in the church before apostasy caused these manifestations to cease (1 Corinthians 12: 1-11). We thus teach, and enjoy all these privileges.

10. To believe that Jesus Christ is the head of the church as the husband is the head of the wife, which means that the church like the woman has a head, divinely fixed, and that this woman has Christ as her husband-head, to give counsel and advice, and to protect from the destroyer (Ephesians 5: 23-27). We thus believe, and conclude that there can be but one church; if otherwise, for a man to have more than one wife is right, and we know that such an act is polygamy, and condemned of the Lord.

11. To believe that marriage is a sacred as well as a civil contract, and the law governing is that one man should have but one woman as a wife, and one woman but one man as a husband (Genesis 2: 24; Matthew 19: 4, 5; Ephesians 5: 31).

12. To believe that we should do good to all men (Galatians 6: 10); even to our enemies (Matthew 5: 44, 45); and that we should overcome evil with good (Romans 12: 19-21); that intemperance is an evil, and it is our duty to overcome it with the good, by suppressing the temptation to intemperance in every way that is held out to us. We show our faith in these things by our works.

13. To believe that all men should be subject to those in governmental authority, and uphold good and wise men in official positions and duty (Romans 13: 1-8; 1 Peter 2: 13-17); and that we should be honest, and owe no man anything (Romans 13: 8). Our patriotism is evidence of our belief in this, and we believe that a debt affects one's standing in the church.

14. To believe that marriage is for life, and that there is but one class of sin that entitles a husband or wife to a divorce that permits them to marry again (Matthew 19: 9; Mark 10: 11, 12; Luke 16: 18); that if one has other women more than one that he claims as his wives when the gospel is believed he must put away all except his legal wife, and arrange as best he can to care for those who are illegally made claimants upon him for support.

In short we believe that for anyone to live to all the privileges that God has ordained we may enjoy we must live by every word that God has given to govern his children, and in all this we are evangelical as a church, and only such members of the church are in practice non-evangelical as do not so live. God grant that all men may recognize our evangelical standing.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN'S PLACE IN HISTORY.

Human glory is often fickle as the winds; and transient as a summer day; but Abraham Lincoln's place in history is assured. All the symbols of this world's admiration are his. He is embalmed in song, recorded in history, eulogized in panegyric, cast in bronze, sculptured in marble, painted on canvas, enshrined in the hearts of his countrymen, and lives in the memories of mankind. Some men are brilliant in their times, but their words and deeds are of little worth to history; but his mission was as large as his country, vast as humanity, enduring as time. No greater thought can ever enter the human mind than obedience to law and freedom for all. Some men are not honored by their contemporaries and die neglected. Here is one more honored than any other man while living, more revered when dying, and destined to be loved to the last syllable of recorded time. He has this threefold greatness—great in life, great in death, great in the history of the world. Lincoln will grow upon the attention and affections of posterity, because he saved the life of the greatest nation, whose everwidening influence is to bless humanity. Measured by this standard, Lincoln shall live in history from age to age.

Great men appear in groups, and in groups they disappear from the vision of the world; but we do not love or hate men in groups. We speak of Gutenberg and his coadjutors, of Washington and his generals, of Lincoln and his cabinet; but when the day of judgment comes, we crown the inventor of printing, we place the laurel on the brow of the father of his country, and the chaplet of renown upon the head of the savior of the republic.

Some men are great from the littleness of their surroundings, but he is only great who is great amid greatness. Lincoln had great associates—Seward, the sagacious diplomatist; Chase, the eminent financier; Stanton, the incomparable secretary of war; with illustrious senators and soldiers. Neither could take his part nor fill his position. And the same law of the coming and going of great men is true of our own day. In piping times of peace, genius is not aflame, and true greatness is not apparent; but when the crisis comes, then God lifts the curtain from obscurity and reveals the man for the hour.

Lincoln stands forth on the page of history, unique in his character and majestic in his individuality. Like Milton's angel, he was an original conception. He was raised up for his times. He was a leader of leaders. By instinct the common heart trusted in him. He was of the people and for the people. He had been poor and laborious; but greatness did not change the tone of his spirit or lessen the sympathies of his nature. His character was strangely symmetrical. He was temperate, without austerity; brave, without rashness; constant, without obstinacy. He put caution against hope, that it might not be premature; and hope against caution, that it might not yield to dread or danger. His marvelous hopefulness never betrayed him into impracticable measures. His love of justice was only equaled by his delight in compassion.

His regard for personal honor was only excelled by love of country. His self-abnegation found its highest expression in the public good. His integrity was never questioned. His honesty was above suspicion. He was more solid than brilliant; his judgment dominated his imagination; his ambition was subject to his modesty, and his love of justice held the mastery over all personal considerations. Not excepting Washington, who inherited wealth and high social position, Lincoln is the fullest representative American in our national annals. He had touched every round in the human ladder. He illustrated the possibilities of our citizenship. We are not ashamed of his humble origin. We are proud of his greatness.—Bishop John P. Newman.

ON REARING A CHILD.

GUIDING MAXIMS FOR PARENTS WHO WOULD BE WISE.

Don't coddle the child. Gratify many wants and you will make a slave of the boy. Your husband is probably a better man than your boy is likely to become, because he had to rough it.

Live in simplicity. Stick to nature, and you are sure not to go far wrong.

Don't dismiss your child to an ignorant hireling. If you have never seriously tried the companionship of a little child you have missed one of the greatest pleasures of life.

Join in the child's games. Solve his doubts. Answer his questions. Become a child again.

Don't deceive your child. Keep your promises. Let your word to your child be your bond.

Don't make your child an epicure. Better for his health and happiness that a child be brought up more as a Spartan than as a sybarite. Simple food is best for the health. Don't lead him to the belief that he lives merely to eat and not that he eats to live.

Don't tell ghost stories. The Pennsylvania Dutch used to delight in ghost stories. And how many horrible nights I spent as a boy in consequence! I used to be distracted at the figure of a tree or the shaking of a bulrush, and affrighted at my own shadow.

Don't surfeit your children with too severe religion, unless you want to turn them against it.

Don't make home irksome. If you would not have your children lost to you in after life, make home happy to them when they are young.

Don't force the children to look elsewhere than at home for pleasure.

The home evenings present a field rich with possibilities of lasting influence. It is one of the misfortunes of our times that neither men nor women spend many evenings at home.

In neglecting the culture of our homes we let our children slip from us for ever. The boy or girl whose evenings are spent on the street almost inevitably turns out bad.

How can we keep our boys off the streets? Make the home life for the evenings so pleasant, so attractive, that the children will not want to leave it for any amusement outside.

Don't grow away from the spirit of childhood. Never become old in heart. Swedenborg wrote of heaven that there the oldest angels are the youngest.

Grow always toward youth. If you grow old it will be bad for your households.

In some homes children are expected to wear a countenance grave enough to break an undertaker's heart. All the joyousness of their nature is suppressed.

It is a crime to repress gladness and make children stately. Make childhood joyous, playful, bubbling over with laughter. Put as much sunshine into childhood days as possible. Provide all the games you can afford and let your children have so much fun at home that every place outside will seem dull to them.

Don't exaggerate. The great want of Americans is accuracy. If a man is to be accurate he must be taught it in his childhood or he will never learn it. As a small mistake in leveling an arrow at the hand makes a great difference at the mark, so a small mistake in the notion of truth makes a wide difference in the telling of the truth.

Don't be affected. A child is never affected naturally; he must be made affected by imitation or by instruction. When Cicero consulted the oracle at Delphos concerning what course of studies he should pursue the answer was: "Follow nature." Let everyone do this and affectation will be unknown.

Don't be bigoted. Bigotry is the whole man put into a Chinese slipper and kept there.

It is a stint upon the human name, and makes man unlovely wherever there is light and nobleness. A great deal of bigotry comes from wrong education in the home circle. Parents, never caricature or jeer other denominations that differ from yours. That kind of education often results just opposite to what was expected.

The children grow up to see for themselves and find that the people in those churches love God and keep his commandments, and by natural reaction they join those churches.

Bigotry often starts early in the home. There are tens of thousands of bigots eight years old.—Written for the Post-Dispatch by Rev. Madison C. Peters.

Father (meaningly).—Who is the laziest boy in your class, Tommy?

Tommy.—I don't know, pa.

Father.—I should think you would know. When all the others are industriously studying or writing their lessons, who is it sits idly in his seat and watches the rest, instead of working himself?

Tommy.—The teacher.

Did Tommy mean you?

A Plea.

I plead with those whose lives are bright,
For those who dwell in gloom,
On whom there breaks no starry rift
Of hope beyond the tomb.
I plead with those whose homes are fair,
For those whose homes are dim—
O guide them in the way of Christ,
That they may learn of him.

A Little Sermon to Little Folk.

There is a little insect which you may often see fluttering slowly about the room, especially in spring and early summer—I mean the little gray clothes moth. These tiny visitors give a great deal of trouble, for they do damage out of all proportion to their size to carpets and rugs and clothes. Prudent housewives use all kinds of means to drive them away, such as camphor and pepper and insect powders. And if any are caught they generally suffer speedy execution as a penalty for the mischief they do. Perhaps you wonder why such troublesome creatures as moths were ever created. But be sure of this, that everything has a purpose. Moths are often spoken of in the Bible, both in the Old Testament and in the New. These little moths that make havoc among our nice things are solemn little preachers, and the Lord Jesus bids us listen to them.

But first let me tell you the story of a moth's life. You will treat them with more respect when you know more about them.

A moth starts its career as a little white caterpillar, lying snugly in the soft folds of a woolen rug, or carpet, or curtain. As soon as it is born it begins to make clothes for itself, which is more than you or I did. And very cleverly it makes them at our expense. The little fellow looks about right and left for pieces of wool for his coat and vest, and he is delighted to find beautiful wool close to his side. He has no idea it belongs to anyone else. He thinks it has been put there expressly for his convenience, and he sets to work at once to weave a suit of clothes. The suit is rather like a long ulster coat, with openings at both ends, one for the head and the other for the feet. Our little friend cuts out threads with a sharp pair of scissors called mandibles, and then he weaves them into a piece, and turns the ends neatly inside for a lining. A very convenient coat it is, almost as wonderful as the magical coats in fairy tales—and this is a real coat. The soft lining is nice to eat, and the owner makes his meals off the inside of his coat. Is not that curious?

Some boys and girls are so fond of good things to eat, that if their sleeves were sweet and tasty I am afraid they would soon be out at elbows. But our smart little tailor can sew in new linings as fast as the old disappears, and, more than that, he can enlarge his coat. He has a good appetite, and he grows bigger and stouter very fast. Have you ever seen a boy who was growing so quickly that his clothes had become too small for him, and his sleeves were halfway up to his elbows? Well, soon the young moth is in the same condition. But what do you think he does? He takes his suit to pieces and makes it up again. He slits his coat from end to end, and puts in pieces at both sides to make it more roomy and comfortable; in fact, he makes it quite new again.

How it would save your father's purse and your mother's fingers if you were as good at cutting out and making up as the moth you can crush so easily!

This clever little insect lives happily in his long coat until the "appointed time" comes for him to pass into a higher stage of being (Job 14: 14). And then a most wonderful thing happens. The coat is turned into a coffin. The insect creeps up to a wall or ceiling, and hangs the coat up, and closes the ends with a fine silk shroud. For three weeks he quietly sleeps a sleep like death, till his great change is complete. Then he comes from the grave clothes a new creature; no longer a worm that must crawl and grovel, but a full-blown moth, moving, with delicate wings, in a new world, a citizen at last of the free air of heaven.

Now, has not the moth a strange history? And the Lord Jesus shows us that this quiet-robed preacher, in his gray coat, teaches us a great lesson. The moth "corrupts" or "consumes" (Revised Version). It destroys fine clothes and furniture by tearing away their threads. God means the moth to destroy them, for he does not intend earthly things to last. And he does not want us to have earthly things all to ourselves, lest we set our hearts upon them. Red rust eats away the iron, and dark tarnish clouds the silver and the brass. Wood rots, and even stone wears away. Fine clothes become threadbare and moth eaten. And all these decaying things bid us seek treasures in heaven, where moth and rust do not consume. God has "an inheritance" for them that love him, "incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away." (1 Peter 1: 4.)

Don't you see, dear boys and girls, how silly it is to seek first things that last only a short time? Suppose a boy were offered the choice between a packet of sweetmeats and a splendid gold watch, which ought he to choose? Every sensible boy will say: "The watch." The sweets would soon be eaten and gone, and nothing would be left but the crumpled paper. But the gold watch would last all his life through. . . .

But the little fluttering moth leaves us a warning. Like many larger people, the moth is very clever in some respects, and very foolish in others. The silliest habit it has is that of rushing straight into the naked flame of any candle it may happen to catch sight of. If the window is left open on a warm summer evening, after the lights are lit, you may often see moths flying in, and dashing themselves against the gas-light or lamp. They will try again and again to make their way past the glass globe, and often, in spite of all some kind person may do to drive them away, they will persevere in their folly till they drop, burnt, and shriveled, on the table. Poor, silly moth! He gets excited by the glare and dazzle, and he little thinks he is rushing madly to death. You think you would never be so stupid as a crazy moth. But even grown men and women, who know better, are often every bit as foolish. God has given them minds and consciences, and yet they let themselves be dazzled and destroyed by the fascination of sin, as the moth is by the flame. The drunkard will go back again and again to the fatal cup he knows is destroying him. A boy will play with forbidden gunpowder, till the explosion bursts when least expected, and he injures for life himself or his companions. Many bad thoughts and wrong things look as attractive at first as the forbidden fruit to Eve in the Garden, or the bright light to this foolish insect. But "sin when it is finished bringeth forth death" (James 1: 14, 15).

And every scorched moth warns us to keep as far as possible from the perilous places of temptation, and to beware of "the deceitfulness of sin" (Hebrews 3:13).—Selected.

Letter Department

MCKENZIE, ALABAMA.

Dear Herald: We take the HERALD. I enjoy reading it very much, especially the letters and the sermons that are written by our brothers. My heart rejoices to think that I am a Latter Day Saint, and my desire is that we may all prove faithful throughout our life that we may have part in the first resurrection and in order to do this we must let our light shine. I can see where I could have lived better, but the only thing to do is to improve the present. My desire is to live that I may be worthy of the blessings that are promised us if we keep his commandments.

I feel sad to think that our brother, T. C. Kelley, will not be with us this year. May God bless him wherever he goes. I ask an interest in your prayers that I may remain faithful to the end when I can say, "O how sweet to toil and suffer for the sake of Jesus' love, pointing men of Christ the Savior to the blessed home above." My soul is filled with gladness when I think of that blessed day when with pain and sorrows ended, God shall wipe all tears away.

Your sister in Christ,

KATIE BOOKER.

MIAMI, OKLAHOMA, June 6, 1910.

Dear Saints: For several years there has been a small branch here, but owing to the persecution and lack of preaching (we hear on an average about six sermons a year) the Saints have not prospered spiritually as they should. Having recently lost our branch president by death, we are very much in need of assistance, for there isn't even a teacher here.

If some officer who is a good, willing worker and able defender of the faith, patient and indefatigable (this would be very necessary in a place like Miami, where the gospel has been rejected so often), could be sent here to live, a house would be provided for him and his family free of charge. We must have help if the church is to be built up here. This is a little city of eight thousand inhabitants and as can readily be seen, there are many honest souls among them who need to be taught the truth. There are only twenty or less Saints in Miami, although there are several of the members of the branch who are absent. We realize more fully than ever the meaning of Luke 21:16, for we are having some experience in that line. However, we are still true to the doctrine of Christ; some of us at least.

For further information concerning the needs and condition of this branch, address me and I will answer all letters, endeavoring to do justice to everyone concerned.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

VIDA CATO.

To the Saints in the West Virginia District: The members of the Clarksburg Branch hereby respectfully solicit aid from you and all the friends of our cause in the building of a church building. We have the lot and some means in the treasury, but in order to complete the building by September 1, we make this appeal to you. Also to the Saints and friends who may feel impressed to contribute sums from twenty-five cents to twenty-five dollars may be sent to the secretary, F. L. Shinn, Clarksburg, West Virginia, Stately Addition, or to D. L. Shinn, R. F. D. No. 1, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

NEW SALISBURY, INDIANA, June 6, 1910.

Dear Herald: Is baptism one of the essentials of our salvation? Yes, for without it no person can be received into God's kingdom here on the earth. It is essential to enter the kingdom here on the earth and keep the commandments of God, in order to be accepted of him while we remain on this sphere. Jesus says, you must be baptized for the remission of sins. Jesus answered, "Verily verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of the water and of the Spirit, he can not enter the kingdom of God." It takes the water and the Spirit to constitute the second birth, which is the saving baptism. We must put on Christ. The way to put on Christ is to live according to his teachings and obey his commandments. He says to all, "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus."

There are many ways taught by the religious world that are advocating their theory of religion to get into Christ, but there is only one way to get into Christ, that is to be baptized by a minister for the remission of sins by one having authority and the laying on of hands for the receiving of the Holy Ghost. It takes that to get into the kingdom of God.

PERSIA, IOWA.

Dear Herald: After three months at home in Independence, the longest stay I have made since entering the missionary field in 1901, the building of a shack as a temporary dwelling of a basement and an unfinished house two blocks from the Sanitarium, I broke my home ties, left wife and babe, and went for my field of duty once more. An eventful home going it was this last time, and a very eventful home staying it proved to be. I went to Missouri Valley in time to preach the last sermon of their peaceful and spiritual conference, and in time to hear a good sermon from one who is on the ascent instead of the decline in the Reorganization.

I had been officially invited before I left home to attend the Gallands Grove conference to be held in Deloit the next Saturday and Sunday. With my new colaborer and sub-missionary in charge, Bro. W. A. Smith, who is the father of many score of gospel children through this region of country, I went to Deloit on the 9th. We stopped between trains at Dow City, a name I had seen for many years in the HERALD, but unvisited until that day. While there I had a long visit with a dear brother who had also been familiar to me only by name. I refer to Bro. Romanan Wight, once a missionary of power, and not long since one of the seven presidents. The poor man sits in the robes of an invalid, burning with zeal and desire, but endeavoring to be resigned to inexorable fate. We could but think, "The spirit is willing but the flesh is weak," and wish that that large but infirm body with its Daniel Webster head, would soon again go in partnership with its intelligent inhabitant to do gospel labor. What a good cook he has and what a good dinner we had!

The description of Missouri Valley conference describes the conference at Deloit. Deloit is the home of Bishop Hunt, upon whom the conference also bestowed the responsibility of district presidency. I returned to the Little Souix District on the 13th and went home with Sidney Pitt, who has a comfortable home near Persia. We begin a series of meetings here to-night. We called to-day, on the local M. E. exhorter, who published a challenge in last week's paper to any Latter Day Saint in this vicinity to meet him in debate on baptism. We had in for publication a cheerful acceptance of his challenge. He refused to sign his own proposition. The reason he would not sign or stand by his published proposition was because he said the editors did him injustice in putting quotation marks in the wrong place. He is held fast. They showed me his copy in the office and it was just as published and they will not spare him. We have met many of the old timers, some of whom are tottering near the portal of the grave. We administered to Brother Galland who is in the nineties and who was in the early church and well acquainted with the martyrs. My permanent address is Independence, Missouri.

ALVIN KNISLEY.

GALES FERRY, CONNECTICUT, June 9, 1910.

Dear Herald: It is with profit that I have read the editorials in the HERALD and Ensign. The last Ensign had an article on the Utah temple builders. I hope the Saints have read the various articles concerning the succession to the presidency of the church that have recently appeared in our church papers in answer to the various tracts with which the Utah church has recently been flooding the Reorganized Saints' mail boxes. These tracts are very misleading and the Saints should be on their guard and not allow themselves to be misled.

There have been three different Mormon elders at my place recently and they have tried to bolster up their claims to the presidency and the succession to the original church. I answered all their arguments and showed them their false position. One of them said he did not believe in polygamy and they sent him away to New Haven, putting another polygamous Mormon here in New London. They must have been afraid that I would convert him. I believe he is an honest man. The other two elders believe in blood atonement and polygamy.

I showed them by the history from the Doctrine and Covenants, Book of Mormon, and Bible and church literature printed before the prophet's death, that they had departed from the faith and had tried to organize a church after they left Nauvoo. I showed them where, only four months before the prophet's death, he and Hyrum Smith both publicly denounced polygamy and that John Taylor and Orson Pratt also denied that the church practiced it. A society of ladies renounced polygamy in 1842 by publicly having a document printed in the church papers at that time and signed by the leading women of the church. Wilford Woodruff's wife, Heber C. Kimball's wife, and Emma Smith were among the number. It was also publicly printed in the church papers that polygamy was not and should not be practiced in the church at Nauvoo. They read statements from their tracts and showed me what purported to be statements from Strang, Weight, and others endeavoring to show that polygamy was practiced at Nauvoo before Joseph's death, and that Hyrum knew all about the revelation that Brigham Young claimed Emma burned.

I asked them when those statements were written, and found that it was years after Joseph's death. I told them that unless they could produce some written statement made by Joseph or Hyrum Smith before their death, in which they advocated polygamy, I should have to believe that they said what they meant and were honest in their denunciation of polygamy which they made so short a time before they were murdered. I know that we have the truth, but why are we so slow to come up higher? I for one see in myself the need of a closer walk with God.

Let us allow nothing to tempt us to sin, but may we continually examine ourselves and see if we are walking in the light as Christ is in the light, that we may have fellowship with each other, and then the blood of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, will cleanse us from all sin. Hoping to endure faithful to the end.

THOMAS G. WHIPPLE.

MAY, OKLAHOMA, June 9, 1910.

Dear Herald: We are isolated from all church privileges, but we know that if we live up to the law He has laid down for us he will own and bless us as his children. My husband and myself and my parents, Brother and Sister Blakesley, and one sister, Sr. Rosa Hall, and Bro. Willie Barrett are the only Saints in the neighborhood. Most of the people here are Baptists, and there is much prejudice among them, but we hope to set a good example before the people.

There was a good debate here last fall between Bro. J. E. Yates and C. C. Platt of the Church of God. As a result my companion was baptized. I was baptized twelve years ago. We have never regretted the step we took and hope that we may live worthy of the name we bear. We have two little girls. Our desire is to raise them up to be true followers of the Lord Jesus Christ. We have many loved ones we would like to see obey the gospel. We are longing for the time when we can move to Zion and associate with the Saints. If anyone knows of some one who wants to buy three quarter sections of land, will they please communicate with W. C. Newcomer, or C. H. Blakesley, May, Oklahoma. Almost anything that is grown can be grown here. Prospects are good both for grain and fruit. We would consider a trade for either a smaller farm or for town property, preferably in Lamoni.

Ever praying for the redemption of Zion.

ADDIE B. NEWCOMER.

LENORA, KANSAS, June 7, 1910.

Dear Herald: I was appointed three years ago to labor as a missionary in southern Illinois. I found a field in the southern part of the State where I spent most of my time. I did some very hard labor there, sometimes almost fainting by the wayside, but the Lord was always near me. One time when I was traveling along on foot in the rain and mud until I was almost broken down, I sat down on a log to rest and to think over the matters as to whether the results would ever equal the labor, but so far I could see no results. At that point there was a voice saying, "When Brother Snow comes he will tell you something." I had written to Brother Snow to come and help me in a meeting and I was on my way to meet him. The Lord showed to Brother Snow that night in a dream that there were hundreds of people that would be brought into the light of the gospel through the work that I had done there in southern Illinois. If it had not been for the help of the good Lord I could not have met the issue. As there were very few railroads in that country, I had to walk many places where I felt I ought to go. By the divine Spirit I was able to make a good many friends and some Saints. I am attached to the people in that part, and it is hard for me to reconcile myself to the idea of going out from among them. I walked and preached and talked among them till some of them showed their appreciation of the angel's message by being baptized. I was able to open up the work in so many places that I thought I would have a pretty good time this year working in those openings and not have the sticks to break so much, and so I was surprised and disappointed very much when I was sent to another mission. I could have sat down and cried bitterly if it could have helped the matter any.

I do not want to lay down or sit down on anything that comes along, so it only remains for me at present to extend my heartfelt thanks to the Saints and friends who treated me so kindly. Many true and faithful Saints did I find in southern Illinois and I shall ever remember them. The scene has changed and I am in northwestern Kansas, doing the best I can. I find the work in very bad condition. It seemed very strange to me when I first came out here and found no branch organization that was doing any good. There are only two church buildings that belong to the Saints in this district, one being entirely abandoned and a family living in it. The land is mostly owned by big landlords with hundreds of acres under their control, which is farmed by renters, thus making a floating, moving population, so the branches can not be held together very well. They seemed to be scattered all over and their interest seems to be more scattered than the people, but still I find some good people in and out of the church. The people that I have met are very kind and friendly, especially so with a stranger. The people have to make their living by renting, and they say they have no time to go to meeting.

I am stopping at J. N. Boyd's, at Lenora, the west side of the district. They are doing what they can to help get the angel message before the people. If all the Saints in their district will follow their example and put a little notice in the HERALD or Ensign to let the missionaries know where they are and the opportunities of work around them, the scattered condition of the Saints might work good, to some at least.

I want all the Saints to cooperate with me in this great work, that we may be truly collaborators in the work of the gospel. The Lord requires a united effort on the part of the people. We need unity to build up the work in this district.

May the Lord pour out his blessings on every honest effort that we make until the work and designs of God are fully accomplished.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
S. H. FIELDS.

BULWELL, NOTTINGHAM, ENGLAND.

Editors Herald: I am sorry my position is not of such a nature to be able to support my family and have a surplus with which to obtain church literature. I have True Succession, by H. C. Smith, which is very helpful to me in my isolated position among a hotbed, as it were, of Utah Mormons. I have received many of their tracts lately. In the tract, "Reorganization weighed," is a quotation as stated, taken from SAINTS' HERALD of August 18, 1888, as follows: "Joseph Smith was taken away, dying a martyr, of which death he was conscious, and made preparation before it occurred. He was not accused by the Lord of transgressions, and the gift that had been conferred upon him taken from him; nor was there a command given him to appoint another in his stead, because he had been unworthy, and the Lord proposed to depose him from his office. It was only in the event of the gift being taken from him, that he was to so appoint another. This event did not occur." This in large type was written in a booklet published by Northern States Mission, Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, German E. Ellsworth, president, 110 South Paulina street, Chicago, Illinois. I would be glad if some able Saint would supply me free with above HERALD or a true reading of quotation referred to.

I am thankful our district is on the upward trend, both spiritually and numerically, but am sorry we are going to lose one of our able missionaries, Brother Rushton. We feel that what will be our loss will be some one's gain. I sincerely pray that the Lord may spare him, that he may enlighten the minds of so many darkened ones of this world. I do not regret that I embraced this gospel. The Order of Enoch is truly a work of God and I am ready to comply as soon as established. I realize I am bought with a price and am not my own, and not one hour is spent in idleness, for the time is far too short for me. Let us pray for one another that we may remain faithful and partake of that life our Master has provided.

Your brother in Christ,

GEORGE GAYDON.

EUBANKS, OKLAHOMA, June 10, 1910.

Dear Herald: Bro. E. A. Erwin came here June 4 and preached five good sermons to a small but attentive audience. Brother Barnum came up from Antlers, Sunday, and stayed till Monday. Good was done for the cause. Brother Erwin left here June 9 and went to Texas. May God bless him and his efforts as he goes on to tell the good news of the angel's message in other places. I ask an interest in the prayers of God's people, that we may so live as to have a part in the first resurrection.

Your sister in the faith,
MRS. E. C. WILSON.

FRESNO, CALIFORNIA, June 3, 1910.

Dear Herald: In your issue for May 25, is a letter signed by Thomas W. Whipple, giving an account of a conversation between him and some Utah elders, and something was said about what I had written in my autobiography and the Utah brethren said it was false, or at least words to that effect. I ask just a little space in which to say that what I said was all truth, but I did not say all the truth by any means. If anyone will get the Autumn Leaves for December, 1907, and read what I said there, and then say that it is not true, he will tell an unqualified falsehood, I don't care who he is or where he is. Then I wrote that I fully expected that it would be read by many of the Utah people and I knew it could not be controverted by those who know the facts, but expected it would be denied by some of the young and ignorant ones that are sent out to represent the church of Utah.

I recollect, a few years ago, going with Bro. William Schade to call on the elders of the Utah church in Los Angeles. I think their mission is on Tenth street. The president of the mission is or was, Elder Watts, a son of Elder Watts, shorthand reporter, who used to report all the sermons of the Utah church, and Elder Watts denied that there ever was a work published by them entitled, Journal of Discourses; said it was a forgery, and that blood atonement was a Josephite lie gotten up to slander the people of Utah. And there we had with us the Journal of Discourses with the very article referred to in it, with the statement, "Reported by G. D. Watts." Truly "they have made a refuge of lies and under falsehood have they hid themselves."

I affirm that anyone who knows anything about it knows that every word I wrote is truth and will not dare to contradict it, but these young zealots are trained to lie to cover up some of the bad work of their fathers, and the more they squirm the deeper they get into the mire. I can say that I wish them nothing but good, but I despise their hypocrisy and their attempts to mislead the people. I am not able to write anything very lengthy, but I will give anyone liberty to ask questions concerning my experience in Utah and I will try to answer them or tell why I don't answer them.

With a deep, settled love for the truth and the church, I am,
R. F. D. No. 3, Box 84. J. C. CLAPP.

WOODBINE, IOWA, June 11, 1910.

Dear Herald: As I read your pages from week to week, illuminated as they are by the light of God's word, and backed up by the testimonies of his faithful children, I sometimes think it my duty to contribute my mite as evidence of the blessedness and power of the truth, but realizing my insufficiency to convey my thoughts as lucidly as many of my brethren, and desiring not to "darken counsel with words without knowledge," I forbear many times when, perhaps, it is my duty to do the best I can. My eyes have lost their keenness and my hand is less certain than in the years gone by.

My observation tells me that there are many devoted and earnest Saints to whom this work is the dearest thing on earth, not only in this branch, but throughout the district, while I am painfully aware that there are some who, if their outward lives are a true index, have but little realization of the blessedness of the gospel. Either they have never been fully converted, or they have lost their first love. Is there such a thing as being converted to a man and when his voice is not heard and his influence not felt by them that they pine away and die? I sometimes fear that such has been the case, but God is the judge and it is written, "He will not judge after the sight of his eyes nor reprove after the hearing of his ears." I rejoice that he is the judge. Where there is safety in his judgment, there is liability of wrong in mine. O charity, thou precious boon, the crown of every excellence fill thou my heart so weak and prone, so judge by my own feeble sense.

We have been bombarded by the literature from the Utah church. Four shells have been poured into our camp, but they being filled only with chaff, no damage has been done to my knowledge. I have neither met with nor heard of any wounded from their guns, but rather it has had a tendency to cause such as were not well-acquainted with both sides of the controversy to look more carefully into the question, and it has caused them to see greater beauty in the cause they have espoused, which is always the case when the truth is opposed. Our people do not believe that the unchangeable God, the infinitely wise Being, gives one law for the salvation of the race and then finds himself under the necessity of introducing another diametrically opposed to the one he issued before the foundation of the world. A very slight knowledge of humanity would satisfy all men that there would be no need of an angel with a drawn sword to persuade a man to gratify his lower passions. One incontrovertible evidence against polygamy is the nearly equal number of the sexes, the preponderance, if any, is on the side of the male. I express my pity for the young men who have been raised and tutored under the darkening influence of the Utah system and sent out to propagate a system that bears upon its face the evidence of falsehood. I thank God that he has reserved unto himself men who had the manhood and the sterling love for God and his cause, sufficient to impel them to search diligently into the phantom lights that were being held up until they were satisfied that God was not there, and continued to seek unto God until they found the true light. The charge of apostasy against such men falls harmless at their feet and only shows the weakness of the enemies of truth.

Our district conference was held in Missouri Valley and I believe it was the largest conference ever held within this district. Sidney Pitt and the assistant minister were in charge. The business was transacted without a jar. The prayer meetings were good, and the preaching by J. C. Crabb, W. A. Smith, and James E. Kelley was also good. I could see the fire and determination of the latter's worthy father in his efforts, but I fear his physical strength is not equal to his zeal. Elders Knisley and Smith preached a few nights after I was gone. The officials of the district were all heartily sustained.

I am still trying to uphold the sacred banner. I have no intention to let it trail in the dust. I know my efforts are feeble, but my desire to do good, increases with my years. I want to say to my Utah friends, I thank God for the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ. Had I never met with it I must have been walking in the dark, foul quagmire of infidelity,—yes, atheism, for I could not believe that the God who created the heavens and the earth could be so weak and unfair as to change his plan or stoop to falsehood. But He who heard a widowed mother's prayer and accepted her gift in my early infancy, led me and helped me to see the true light, and in that light I rejoice.

CHARLES DERRY.

Why I Am a Latter Day Saint.

I was baptized when I was eight years old. I spent my young days in the Sabbath school. Years passed by and finally I reached the age of twenty-one when I was married to Miss Sprott, of Montrose, Iowa. We moved to Fort Madison where I have remained till the present time. After coming to this place, I was on the way home one night, when I was impressed to try and get a place and have some of the elders come and hold meetings. I was granted the privilege of using the hall and I at once sent for the elders, who came at once and commenced a series of meetings. After about two weeks' preaching, ten were baptized, my wife being one of them.

I set to thinking and wondered, "Is this church the right one just because my father and mother belong to it and are good people?" If I thought my father and mother were right and I was satisfied, others of my companions might take a similar stand. But no, this will never satisfy me. Then I read, "The gates of hell will not prevail against the church of Christ," and I read again, "And I will be with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Then I thought, How shall I know the church of Christ? How my heart did ache! I said to myself, I will lay aside all religion and give myself to prayer. I promised the Lord that if he would show me the church that he had established I would join that church if I lost all the friends I had.

Then came the testimony that I had longed for, in the form of a dream, and I thank God for the light and knowledge which I received, for then I saw that the gates of hell did not prevail against it, but that Christ entered and preached to the spirits in prison and that he will be with his church till the end of the world. Hence I am not a Latter Day Saint because my father and mother taught me it was right, but I have many evidences of this latter day work, for which I am thankful.

News From Branches.

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

According to agreement quite a large number of Saints met at the house of Brother Selby, at 7404 East Fifteenth street, May 29, 1910, I. N. White and A. H. Parsons presiding. We were organized into a branch, to be known as the Centropolis Branch. D. F. Winn was chosen as presiding elder; W. W. Leaton, priest. Brother Selby was ordained and chosen teacher, and Brother Cleveland was ordained and chosen deacon; Sr. Lola Bolinger was chosen to act as clerk. A most excellent spirit prevailed and twenty-six members were enrolled by letter and nearly as many more live in that neighborhood who will get their letter and unite later on.

F. C. WARNKY.

6223 EAST FIFTEENTH STREET.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Of the ministerial force, we have had the pleasure of hearing Elders E. C. Briggs, W. M. Aylor, J. W. Wight, F. A. Smith, F. M. Sheehy, C. Scott, and A. H. Parsons. Rev. R. Mais, pastor of the Watson Memorial Church, delivered a memorial address before the G. A. R. Among the archæologists as speakers, we mention C. Ed. Miller and Prof. K. B. Millard. Our brother, in the interest of our young people, has recently delivered in the auditorium a series of stereoptican lectures full of instruction and interest relating to the American Indians and their ruins now existing. It was a good effort and was well appreciated. Last Sunday, Professor Millard presented himself for the third time before about two hundred of the Saints as a traveler and lecturer on archæology. He talked on the pyramids and wonderful structures and builders, its hieroglyphics, and the powerful men of that remote age, chief among them Noe. At the close of the lecture that was delivered by him, he spoke in high commendation of the Saints and this was courteously responded to by taking up a collection to help defray expenses.

There are three more public speakers worthy of honorable mention, who have lent dignity to the L. D. S. pulpit in the Stone Church quite recently. There are Edwin R. Weeks, president Kansas City Humane Society, Senator H. R. Wamsley, and our own beloved brother, Pres. Joseph Smith. On the 5th instant the Saints' Band of Mercy presented itself in public and was represented by both aged and youth. Elder W. H. Garrett led in the opening prayer. Mr. Edwin R. Weeks gave a lengthy lecture on humane education, it being read from a manuscript, and Senator Wamsley, a very fluent speaker, discoursed on the rights of our dumb friends. The program was made complete by recitations by Miss Mabel Briggs and Miss Messenger, also by several young people who displayed much talent in song and reading. On May 8, Mothers' Day, there was rendered a fine musical and literary program, also Pres. Joseph Smith delivered an appropriate and interesting address in which he paid memorable tribute to Sr. Emma Smith of days gone by, his own beloved and gifted mother. At the afternoon service four little ones were blessed, also four more were presented for blessing on the 29th of May. There is much for the Saints here to rejoice over, although they are subject to many of the afflictions that flesh is heir to. We ask the prayers of all the Saints for all who seek an interest in our prayers, the aged ones, and the lonely, the sick, and afflicted.

May the Good Spirit comfort and bring peace to all the Saints, is our sincere desire.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

June 12, a fine Sunday, and being Children's Day, the whole morning was given up to the children's exercises. The attendance was a record breaker for our Sunday school.

The weather being favorable we started our open air services in the public park to-day at 2.30, having again obtained permission from the city to use the facilities provided, which consist of a speaker's stand and a large supply of seats. We started up with a little music to attract attention and Bro. F. T. Haynes addressed the congregation.

Bro. R. C. Russell dropped in on us at our branch meeting in the evening, just in time to be the speaker. There was a good attendance and a troupe of visitors from Ringling Brothers helped swell the crowd of listeners.

We are located on Wade Park avenue, at 715.

FRANK C. WEBBE.

CENTRAL CHICAGO.

Sunday, June 12. The Children's Day program occupied the Sunday school and morning service hour, and we feel that all enjoyed the exercises and were benefited as well. Elder F. G. Pitt's sermonette was quite instructive regarding the growth of a seed, and what is necessary in order to grow spiritually. How many of us are more prayerful and humble than a year ago? We often think of the question, "What kind of a church would our church be, if all the members were just like me?" In some cases it might be necessary to dispense with the prayer meeting, Religio, and Sunday school, but let us examine ourselves to see whether we are in the faith. Edith Dorothy, youngest daughter of Bro. and Sr.

Loyd Lang, was blessed Sunday morning. Elder P. Pement was the speaker in the evening, assisted by Brother Newton.

The Northeastern Illinois convention and conference will be held at Mission, Illinois, June 17, 18, and 19. Those who anticipate attending from our branch are Brethren Pement, McGahan, Wainwright, and Cochran, and Srs. Ed. Lang and Florence Wainwright. We pray for a peaceful and spiritual gathering.

The measles and mumps are keeping the boys home from school at Bro. Henry Keir's, and we understand that Sr. Maggie Kelso is quite sick at her daughter's, Sr. Addison Frantz, South Haven, Michigan.

Sr. Dorris Seymour, from Kansas City, Missouri, is now making her home with us, and may remain in the city for some time.

A new sign has recently been placed on our church, and Mr. George Warlick has donated some carpet for the aisles as well as furnishing the sign, and deserves the thanks of the branch. We trust all appreciate the kindness of those who lend assistance and will remember them in their prayers.

"Perfect obedience would be perfect happiness if only we had perfect confidence in the power we were obeying."

Who is the happiest of men? He who values the merits of others and in their pleasure takes joy, even as though 'twere his own.

Conference Minutes.

NAUVOO.—District convened at Fort Madison, Iowa, June 4 and 5. C. E. Willey and James McKiernan presided and M. H. Siegfried and Charles Fry acted as secretaries. O. H. Bailey acted as chorister and Madge Siegfried organist. The morning session of the 4th was devoted to routine work, hearing reports from the following branches: Montrose, Keokuk, Farmington, Rock Creek, and Burlington. Presidents of these branches and of the Ottumwa Branch, which did not send a statistical report, reported the condition of the branches and the work done there during the last four months. Ministerial reports additional to those of the presidents of branches, were made by George P. Lambert and M. H. Siegfried. The treasurer reported a balance on hand of $15.06. This report was referred to an auditing committee consisting of O. H. Bailey, W. T. Lambert, and S. Tripp. They reported it correct, together with the book. All visiting brethren were given right of voice and vote. The secretary and historian presented a bill for $1.32, which was allowed, and an order drawn on the treasury. At 2.30 p. m. officers were elected for one year as follows: Charles Fry, president; M. H. Siegfried, secretary; George P. Lambert treasurer. The president nominated for his associate, M. H. Siegfried, which nomination was ratified by the conference. The reunion committee reported that the date for the reunion was set for July 29 to August 7 inclusive, to be held at Montrose, Iowa. By resolution the branch presidents were directed to report quarterly to the district president hereafter, and not to the conference direct. The following resolution was passed unanimously by a rising vote: "Resolved, That we extend to Bro. C. E. Willey our appreciation of his long and faithful service as president and missionary in our district, and that as he goes out to other fields of labor, we hereby express our earnest good will and wishes for his welfare and success; and pray that the blessings of our heavenly Father may continue with him in all his work. Resolved further, That we extend to Brother Willey a standing invitation to visit us at any time." At 7.45 p. m. on Saturday, Brother Fry preached, with W. T. Lambert in charge. Sunday, the 5th, the district superintendent had charge of the session of Sunday school at 9.30 a. m. Bro. O. H. Bailey preached at 11 o'clock, with F. M. McDonald in charge. At 1.30 Brother Fry administered the ordinance of baptism to three individuals. They were confirmed at the prayer meeting at 3 o'clock, in charge of Geo. P. and W. T. Lambert. In the evening Brother Willey preached his farewell sermon to the district, Bro. James McKiernan having charge of the meeting. A vote of thanks was extended the Fort Madison Saints and friends for the hospitality extended the visiting Saints. Adjourned to meet in Farmington, Iowa, October 1 and 2. M. H. Siegfried, secretary.

To the Presiding Officers of the Branches of the Clinton, Missouri, District: I have been selected to preside over the district for another year, and I am under obligation upon the 1st day of July, October, January, and March to make a report to the secretary of the First Presidency of the conditions of each branch, with the work done each quarter; therefore, to assist me in making my report, I kindly ask that upon the 25th day of June, September, December, and February, you forward to me a report of the condition of your branch with the work done. Address me at Holden, Missouri, Box 435, and the same will be forwarded to me at once.

Please remember that the district reunion will be held at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, beginning August 19, 1910. All the Saints and friends are urged to be present. Notice will be given later in regard to tents, etc. It is also requested that the presiding officer of each branch make an effort to raise funds to assist in defraying the expenses of the reunion and bring or send same at the beginning of the reunion.

JAMES MOLER, President.

ROCKVILLE, MISSOURI, June 8, 1910.

To all who are interested in the Des Moines District Mission: In the love of God I greet you. I have delayed issuing this letter hoping to hear that another or others had been appointed to labor in this district, for since the General Conference Bro. W. Christy has entered into business of such a nature that it has taken him out of the active field-work, leaving only Elder C. E. Butterworth and myself in this large district with the city of Des Moines as objective point of my labor, and I had hoped to have something of a more encouraging nature to write about,—and we still hope for more laborers to be sent to assist us. However, until such time let us keep the work moving, and so labor that the interest now existing may not decrease.

The work is the Lord's, and to him we should go for direction and strength. Any of the local ministry who can spend a month or more in the active work will please report to me at once. We can only bid you who are anxious for special work in your vicinity to be patient, and seek the Lord that he may direct those who are laboring in the district, and that he may send more laborers into the vineyard. And as you pray, so labor by not only paying that which is due the Lord, but by encouraging all others to do likewise. The Bishop's agent's address is W. Christy, Mineral Ridge, Iowa.

For a time it is thought best that Brother Butterworth attend to his special work as a patriarch and minister to the reviving of the Saints. Any special desire for his service may be sent to him at Dow City, or to me, and I will inform him. Please inform me of any special interest and desire for labor, and I will, with the help of God, satisfy it as soon as it is possible.

Any of the Saints having friends in the city of Des Moines, or that may be coming to the city for a few days or weeks, please inform me, and inform them of the location of the Saints' chapel at East Fourteenth and Lyon streets.

With God's help much can be accomplished that it may appear to us impossible, and without him we can do nothing. To assist in this work, we are informed by the revelation of God that we must "be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to our care," and so I hope and pray we all will be.

My address is 1205 Filmore street, Des Moines, Iowa; Iowa Phone No. 2335.

Hopefully in Christ,

J. F. MINTUN.

Notice to the Priesthood of the Lamoni Stake.

At the meeting of the priesthood last month it was decided by vote to hold the meetings monthly instead of quarterly.

The next meeting will be held at the church in Lamoni at 4.15 p. m., Sunday, June 25, and the matter for consideration will be a paper by Elder E. A. Smith, of the First Presidency, on the spiritual advantages of stake organization, and if time permits, also a paper by Elder R. J. Lambert, of the stake bishopric, on the temporal advantages of stake organization.

Every member of the priesthood in the stake should be interested in this subject, and should make any reasonable sacrifice necessary to attend this meeting. All are welcome and a large attendance is desired.

Plenty of Room for the Italian.

The East is protesting against the Latin. There is boundless room for him in the Southwest. His former environment ideally fits him for the section. There's a wage waiting for him, an acre to till and a chance to own a home. Italy could empty herself into Texas alone, and Texas would still have room for Germany and France to boot.

Distributive immigration would benefit alike the densely populated coast and the empty plains. With Galveston as a port of entry, the South Europeans could be diverted from the New England and Middle States, and landed in a region of farms.

The cry against immigration is nothing less than a protest against the increase in the number of bread eaters without a corresponding addition to the bread raisers.

We want the European, but we don't wish him to remain European in his instincts and his habits; he must settle where he will be most useful and best serve his adopted country. In the beginning, the Southwest may meet him with a prejudice; but prejudice against the stranger is a matter neither of geography nor of period.

In 1817, a writer in Niles's Register declared: "We have room enough yet; let them come . . . but the immigrant should press into the interior. In the present state of the times, we seem too thick on the maritime frontier already. Within there is ample and profitable employment for all, in almost any branch of business, and strangers should be encouraged to seek it there." History repeating itself! Ninety-seven years ago, the East had no room!

My First Job.

Forty-eight hours without food! For two days and nights Bob and I had tramped through the snow and slush—Bob with his thin, scant tail bobbing back and forth whenever I glanced down at his shaggy form, myself with my head bent wearily to escape the blasts and to hide something of my heartache from the jostling world around me. Bob was an optimist. The spirit of the optimist pervaded every hair of his back. What mattered it though he did fail to find a bone for dinner? There was always supper to look forward to. This was Bob's philosophy, and I verily believe he tried to impart it to me during those weary days of tramping through the friendless streets of the great city.

I was out of a job, out of money, out of friends, or so I thought—and almost out of hope and ambition, and when I closed my second breakfastless, dinnerless, supperless day and faced a blizzardly night without either food or bed, I was as discouraged a youth as ever trudged the Bowery. Bob kept faithfully at my heels, drawing his great, shaggy tongue over my hand whenever I chanced to drop it at my side. He was my only friend—a dog! Never did the world look drearier and more hopeless than when I sank exhausted in a doorway of the Cooper Institute and drew my shivering body out of the reach of the needle-like snow.

It is in this desperate plight that a man who is now a highly successful journalist and author is introduced to the readers of Human Life for June in an article by Hugh C. Weir entitled "My first job," being a series of personal interviews with noted men in various lines.

DO WE UNDERSTAND THEM ALIKE?

There are two passages of scripture which are frequently misquoted by some of the elders, and it is possible that in misquoting them we do not get a unity of understanding, though we may not be very far apart in either case.

One is the one so frequently quoted from John 17: 3: "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." This is usually quoted thus: "This is eternal life, to know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." As quoted last above it would seem that all that was essential to eternal life, was to see and know God and Jesus Christ, but elsewhere in the Scriptures it appears that even evil spirits knew who Jesus was, and surely they have not eternal life in the sense in which the words are used in the quotation.

Our understanding of the text is that it is essential for persons to reach a certain condition through obedience, in order that, being placed in such condition, they have an opportunity and the ability given them in order that they know God, the one true God, and Jesus Christ, whom God had sent. Jesus says in the 14th of John, that it was necessary for him to go away, and that if he went away, he would prepare a place for them (that is, his disciples to whom he was talking), that where he was, there they might be also. We believe that this is the correct understanding to be had of the text. It may be said that the attaining of a knowledge of God is a sufficient qualification to entitle one to eternal life, but we think not. It is said in prophecy that every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess to the glory of God, and that a certain class shall be overcome with terror when he appears, and shall call for the rocks and mountains to fall upon them to hide them; certainly hardly compatible with the promise of eternal life. The condition coincident with the ability to see and know God, that is, eternal life, is to use the better understanding of the term.

Matthew 26: 52, K. J.; 26: 50, I. T.: "Put up again thy sword into its place; for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." This is frequently quoted, "They that take the sword shall perish by the sword," carrying the inference that the sword will be the means used for their destruction. The meaning of the term to our understanding is that the condition of things created by the power of might typified by a sword should pass away and those who trust in that power will be overcome; that the lesson intended to be taught by the Savior was a broad one to the effect that the sword was typical of an earthly power and they who trusted in that power would necessarily be overcome and perish with the power which the sword typified. We once heard this quoted in this way, by a man who sought to prove that Joseph Smith was a man of blood instead of being a true prophet and elder of God's people, because he used a small pocket pistol which had been dropped into his pocket by a brother in the church on the morning of the day that he consented to take refuge in the jail at Carthage, at the solicitation of Governor Ford. His argument was that Joseph Smith, by reason of his attempting to defend his life with the weapon, thereby came under the condemnation of this passage of scripture, signifying that he should perish by the sword. We think the meaning of the Savior was broader than this and commend our thoughts upon the subject to the attention of the eldership, suggesting that it is better to make the quotations as they are in the book, rather than by the change of a word to make it fit a temporary understanding or implication that might be in the elder's mind at the time.

SUPERIOR SPIRITUAL CONDITIONS TO OBTAIN UNDER STAKE ORGANIZATION.

(READ BEFORE A MEETING OF THE PRIESTHOOD OF THE LAMONI STAKE, SUNDAY, JUNE 26, 1910.)

In considering this question we must, to an extent, at least, speak of that which may be, and not of that which is or has been. If we were actually to select any one stake and use it as a basis for our judgment as to the superiority of stake over district organization, we might be unfortunate in our selection and so might reach a wrong conclusion.

Individuals of a pessimistic turn of mind might look at the Lamoni Stake in its present stage of development and decide that little is to be gained by stake organization. In fact some have alleged, without reason, we believe, that the Lamoni Stake is in no way in advance of the old Decatur District. We will not argue that point at this time. If it is in no way in advance of the old district, then it is far beneath its privileges and should not be used as a basis in forming a conclusion regarding possibilities under stake organization as opposed to possibilities under district organization. One might select the Zarahemla Stake, which reached such a low state that it was disorganized in 1842, and from it argue that stake organization is a complete failure; another might look at some more prosperous stake and reach a very different conclusion.

Though some may have been discouraged, possibly without sufficient cause, when they have considered that which has been accomplished by the stakes at Lamoni and Independence, when we consider that which may be accomplished, there is no denying that the possibilities for growth and development are vastly greater under stake organization.

SUPERIOR ORGANIZATION.

The secret of superiority is in superior organization. Simple and primitive organizations can never accomplish the work that can be done with ease by more complex and highly developed organisms.

Our mayor and town council could not possibly administer the affairs of the United States Government. It requires the President of the United States, the Senate, and House of Representatives, the judiciary, and the various departments with their respective officers, to carry on affairs of the National Government.

The president of the Evergreen Branch, with his corps of priests, teachers, and deacons, could not direct the affairs of the general church. In that work the Presidency, the Twelve, the Bishopric, the Seventies, and other officers and quorums must participate.

One man, as district president, with perhaps an assistant and a Bishop's agent, can not properly preside and conduct the affairs of the church in a locality where many Saints are congregated, and where others are constantly gathering in accordance with revelation.

Such a situation demands more perfect organization, and the Lord meets the demand by giving us the form of government prescribed in the law for stakes.

THE PREACHING OF THE WORD.

Such a gathering of the Saints as we have mentioned, such as is now going on in the regions around Lamoni and Independence, brings together a great body of individuals who need to be taught from the pulpit and in the home regarding things temporal and things spiritual.

Stake organization provides a president with his two counselors, a standing council of twelve high councilors, and a bishop with two counselors. Here we have eighteen men who are preachers. They are authoritative preachers. They are called of God and they go with authority as officers of the Stake in which they labor. We can not estimate the good that can be accomplished by these men when all are in a position to occupy as needed in the various branches and throughout the territory embraced in the stake.

IN ADMINISTRATION.

The administration of affairs in a stake requires a settled and wise policy. The mapping out of such a policy is not left to the brain of one man. The stake president assisted by his two counselors primarily directs in the matter in relation to spiritual things. The stake bishopric, consisting of the bishop and his two counselors, has charge of temporal matters. And in addition we have the high council of twelve. In a multitude of counsel there is safety. Such a body of men can formulate and carry out a policy that will be safe and effective much more readily than one man could.

These men are not placed in office at random, nor are they elected periodically as is a district president, so that the dangers and disadvantages of shifting and changing administrations and policies are avoided. They are called of God and sustained by the people during good behavior. If advisable, they remain in office indefinitely, or for life. They have every worthy incentive to activity that an elected officer could possibly have, and in addition they have the opportunity to develop and carry out permanent and well defined policies.

IN OPPOSITION TO EVIL.

It is reasonable to suppose that the Devil has his forces well organized. It is evident that he concentrates them on the Saints who are in a gathered condition, as we are here in the Lamoni Stake. It devolves to a large extent upon the priesthood in such places to meet him and defeat his plans. The members of the priesthood are in much better condition to do this when they are closely organized. They may fail then; they are sure to fail otherwise.

There is still work to do in the way of discerning spirits; in the way of casting them out; and in the way of defeating their plans. Eighteen men holding the high priesthood of the Son of God, living prayerfully and spiritually, and closely bound together in their work as administrators of the affairs of a stake, form a fighting force that may well make Satan tremble.

THE RESULTS.

We have briefly stated the reasons why conditions obtaining under stake organizations are better than those under district organizations. Superior organization is the keynote.

When the forces of stake government are working as they should we will surely have the following results: A body of Saints of a high order of intelligence, the result of having been properly instructed and directed by the ministry who are set to do that work. Spiritual gifts of whatever nature shall be exactly adapted to accompany the intellectual development of the Saints. Power to detect, resist, and cast out evil spirits and evil influences. And last, but not least, the opportunity and ability to organize in temporal matters, in harmony with the law, so as to secure equality in temporal things, a condition that must be reached before satisfactory spiritual conditions can obtain.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE UNITED ORDER OF ENOCH. WORK OF THE ASSOCIATION.

To organize for the purpose of carrying out benevolent work for the good of a community, or people, is one thing, but to successfully take up and carry forward to completion this same work is quite a different task. With a diligent and united effort, however, no good and worthy undertaking is too great for an earnest, upright, and intelligent people; and the helpful, charitable work provided for in the articles of this association is so apparent to everyone who is desirous of the welfare of his fellows as well as that of himself that there ought to be but little question as to the final results to be attained by this under proper effort.

The honorable judge who passed upon the legal phases of the incorporation stated in the course of the examination:

In reading over these articles I do not find anything but what appears to me to be commendable; but whether those who have charge of the work shall successfully carry it out is another question. But they are responsible for that. I do not have to pass upon it.

It will thus be seen that the opportunity is afforded us for work and to show our faith by our works; and to the members and friends of the United Order of Enoch is laid the task of demonstrating what the harvest shall be.

To move in such a work we must have means to do with; it requires some capital to help in the work and much honest labor. All should put forth an effort and help what they can now. It is absolutely necessary first to place ourselves in a working condition; it will be time enough then to determine just what shall be the order of procedure.

By due instruction of the association and directors, the undersigned are authorized to call for such special gifts, donations, and freewill offerings as the people may feel able to give in order that there may be formed a substantial basis for the work. Everyone who is a friend of the policy of laboring for the good of his neighbor as well as himself should show his faith by his works,—and NOW.

The establishment of the United Order of Enoch has long been looked forward to by thousands, by many with fond and big anticipations; and now that it has been established those who have long been patiently waiting should become energetic, zealous supporters. We are aware that other movements have in the past borne this name, but we feel safe in assuming the position that not since the revelation given in an early day touching on the Order of Enoch has there been a movement of this kind other than the present started by direct command of God and under the laws of the land governing corporations.

The officers of The United Order of Enoch at present are: President, E. L. Kelley; secretary, Frederick M. Smith; treasurer, Ellis Short. The executive committee consists of the three officers, Roderick May, and Joseph Mather.

The order has an option on a tract of eighty acres of land lying contiguous to and within the corporate limits of the city of Independence. We consider the offer a very liberal proposition, but to avail ourselves of it we must have capital at once in order to develop and carry forward the work that will be required if we accept; hence this call. Let those interested in the movement respond heartily.

All funds should be sent to "The United Order of Enoch, Box 52, Independence, Missouri," and all letters of inquiry and all mail matter intended for the order should be addressed to the order as before indicated.

That those desiring to become affiliated with the movement may know what has been done and what is necessary for them to do relative to membership we shall at an early date publish the by-laws which have been adopted by the order.

Let your response to this appeal be ample, hearty, and prompt.

JEW'S INVITED BY TURKEY TO LOCATE IN MESOPOTAMIA.

The movement for the formation of a great colony of Jews has, in these days, received a strong push forward, and representatives for the great international colonization organizations have come together to consider the invitation to the Jews to settle in Mesopotamia. The invitation to colonize this in ancient time so fertile spot has come from Ahmend Riza Bey, president of the Turkish Parliament under the new young Turkish rule. It is sent through the chief rabbi over the whole world with promise from the Turkish government of complete self-government.

At the head of this movement to accept the invitation stands the rich banker, Jacob H. Schiff, of New York, who is now on a visit in Europe, and Israel Zangwill, head of Jewish territorial organization. Private information from London tells of a meeting of the last named organization, wherein Mr. Zangwill, Sir Andrew Wingate, Meyer Spielman, and others declare that in colonization of Mesopotamia will be found the solution to the difficulties which have surrounded the Jews ever since they were driven from Palestine.

Mr. Schiff is now expected in London for the conference with the men, who have received assurances from the Turkish government that the Jews can have the privilege of settling in Mesopotamia and formulating a state of their own. There are four organizations which are concerned with plans securing the Jews a home of their own. These are the Zionist, The Jewish Territorial Organization, The Jewish Colonization Association, and the Alliance Israelite Universelle. The first of these organizations was founded by Dr. T. Herzl over twelve years ago. The second is really only a branch of the first and separated itself from the mother organization under the leadership of Israel Zangwill, over five years ago. Zangwill and his followers would not take the position that the colony should be absolutely in the Orient, but that it could be some other place just as well, just so they secured self-government. The Zionists on the other hand were for Palestine or neighboring countries. There are in the United States, three hundred and thirty Zionist associations with an aggregate membership of fifty thousand. The Jewish Colonization Association was founded by the late Baron de Hirsch, who willed it fifty million dollars, or the greatest part of his wealth. The French organization was founded fifty years ago, and has especially directed its work in building and maintaining of schools in the Orient.

All these organizations whose aggregate financial resources are estimated at one hundred million dollars present themselves favorable toward this undertaking. The Zionists are satisfied, as Mesopotamia is not far from Palestine, and the others have no objection since preliminary examination has proven that the land is suitable for settlement.

It is estimated that it will cost at least forty million dollars to irrigate the territory but after this expense has been placed upon the land, it is estimated that it will support ten million inhabitants. No immigration is expected from the United States, but the colonization plan is especially directed to help the five million to six million Jews who are in a pitiful condition in Russia as also about four hundred thousand Jews in Roumania.—Translated from Sandhedens Banner of April 1, 1910; by S. K. Sorensen.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The lawyers of the Iowa State Bar Association spent some time at their recent meeting discussing the alarming increase of divorces in the State. They passed resolutions recommending more stringent laws. The Kansas City Star for June 20 comments on a similar situation in Missouri, and states that during the past year there were three thousand, nine hundred marriage licences granted in Jackson County, while during the same time there were one thousand, five hundred, fifty-five applications for divorce.

Bro. M. A. McConley writes from Honolulu, in sending in a death item: "I hope this will be the last death I will have to report this year. We want the reports to show baptisms instead of deaths, but guess the Lord knows best."

The associate editor, Bro. Elbert A. Smith, occupied the pulpit at Burlington, Iowa, Sunday morning and evening, June 19. He also solemnized the marriage of Sr. Edith A. Jarvis, of Burlington, and Mr. Harry S. Alden, of Chicago. The marriage occurred at 8 o'clock in the evening, June 22, at the home of Bro. H. E. Jarvis. The young people will locate in Chicago.

Again, there is no confusion in the teaching of the Holy Spirit. Growing out of the fact that the church has but one head, there must be also one faith. We see here no hint on the lame theory which justifies sectarianism. A man once said, when some one was deploring the spirit of sectarianism, "Oh, well, we have all kinds of people in the world, and we need all kinds of churches to put 'em in." On like grounds Paul might have justified the presence of the many gods in the city of Athens. The faith once delivered to the saints is the one in which the saints of to-day may hope for unity.

Unity is becoming in the body of Christ, because it, in all things, stands for unity. When Jesus prayed that his followers might be one, it was "as I and the Father are one." The divine teachings are never conflicting. When the church is spoken of as a body, we get an idea of the absolute necessity of unity in the doing of its work. When the members of the body are at war with each other, the result is costly and deplorable. No member of the body can do its work well when there is lack of harmony. The comparison between this state of affairs and that of the church with warring members needs only to be mentioned.

Original Articles

WARN YOUR NEIGHBOR.

The command to warn our neighbor is one of the most exacting and far reaching in its scope that has been given to the Saints in these latter days. "It becometh every man who hath been warned, to warn his neighbor; therefore, they are left without excuse, and their sins are upon their own heads."—Doctrine and Covenants, 85:22. If our neighbor is not warned, the responsibility or sin is upon our heads, but is shifted when we are faithful in warning the people. When we consider the opportunities that are within our reach, in the distribution of God's word, a good excuse can not be given by us if we shall fail to comply with this commandment of the Lord. One of our missionaries said, in his sermon, "The greatest possible blessing you can bestow upon your neighbor is to make him acquainted with this latter day work—the gospel."

Since the church was organized in 1830, there never has been a time when such a varied and excellent supply of tracts and books were at the disposal of the Saints as there is at the present time. The tract work has been deemed so important by the Lord that the First Presidency has been chosen tract committee to the church. All manuscripts intended for tracts must first be sent to them for approval. Their O. K. is upon all the latest published. Our opportunity then for spreading authoritative literature never was better than at the present time. Our publishing houses are putting out tracts and booklets which are not only meritorious for the truth they contain, but also for the manner in which they are presented, the library style. Daniel Macgregor's booklet, "A marvelous work and a wonder," is truly a masterpiece in this respect. This is a tract in booklet form and is one you may justly feel happy in presenting to your friends and neighbors, and is indispensable to the Saint who desires to distribute up-to-date and right literature. People who would not condescend to take a tract will readily accept this booklet.

We know by experience that the best general tract published is one in which much of its contents were given by inspiration. Its title is, "The church of Jesus Christ. Where is it? How shall I know it? There are many churches of men; only the one church of Christ." Its author is William Lewis, of Saint Joseph, Missouri. One brother, converted by this tract, gave five dollars at the last General Conference for the spreading of the same.

A tract inspired by the Almighty? Certainly. Why should not the work of God be in harmony with its author? Why should not the Saints, young, middle-aged, and aged, be diligent in warning their neighbors, thus in their warfare working in harmony and following the instructions of their Leader, who said, "Occupy till I come"?

Saints, to-day is the day for sowing. Never mind the reaping. God will take care of that. Our Religio good literature worker in the Independence Stake, every week, places from twenty-five to sixty Ensigns in a box at the entrance of a large manufacturing plant, and this box is usually empty at the end of each week. This brother does not care particularly to know the results of his sowing the good seed; to him it is a source of gratification to feel that he is trying to help his fellow-men. Are you a subscriber to the Ensign, most appropriately called, "The silent preacher"? If you are you partake of the missionary spirit in excess of the Saint who is not a reader of the Ensign. Many are the letters received at the Ensign Office in the past which tell of members being converted by reading this grand little missionary paper.

Paul advised the Corinthian Saints to "Abound to every good work." If you can not find anyone to accept your Ensign each week, place it in the hands of the Religio good literature committee and perhaps they may be successful. The spreading of tracts, church papers, and good literature is not a work that is very conspicuous, but the noiseless worker, conscientious, patient, and full of zeal is nevertheless an efficient workman. Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, in a letter to me, made this statement, "The work of carrying the gospel to people by means of the mails and the printed word is but second to that of carrying it to them by word of mouth."

King Benjamin, the spiritual leader in his day of the Nephites, ordered his last sermon to be printed and sent among the people. "Therefore he caused that the words which he spake, should be written and sent forth among those that were not under the sound of his voice, that they might also receive his words." Spiritually, we are stronger than our friends of other churches and those not members of any church. What can be more noble and godlike than a man who is strong to help his weak brother? The strong assisting the weak out of the mire of ignorance into the beautiful road of knowledge.

A number of years ago, a man walking along the street picked up a soiled piece of literature—one of our tracts. As a result, he is to-day, a noted missionary in the church. Forty years ago, a man was handed a tract by one of our members. For twenty years this little tract lay in the bottom of his trunk, forgotten. One day in looking over the contents of the trunk, he discovered the silent little missionary and after carefully reading the tract he was converted and to-day he is a happy worker in the Master's vineyard. "My word shall not return unto me void," saith the Lord of Hosts. "Cast thy bread upon the waters," should be the song of our hearts. Save your HERALDS, Ensigns, and Autumn Leaves for distribution. There are thousands of people who would gladly read them if they had the opportunity. What is needed then? Workers! The laborers are the ones the Master shall call around him and reward. The soldier of the cross who presses forward into the thick of the battle, fearlessly and unselfishly throwing his all into the conflict, will sometime, somewhere, hear the welcome words, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." Should any Saint desire special information or instruction, we shall serve them free for the asking.

Gospel Literature Superintendent.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

ELDER JESSE REEDER.

Jesse Reeder, ninety-seven years old, a man who, in his boyhood days, viewed with wonder the first locomotive to rumble through the pine lands of South Carolina, and a man who has seen the making of the Republic, is in Mobile, a guest of his son, Jesse H. Reeder, residing on Palmetto street.

Mr. Reeder, while ninety-seven years old in July, 1909, is still hale and hearty, in full possession of his faculties, converses freely, and gets about fairly well. The only infirmity the weight of years seems to have affected him with is a slight stiffness in his ankles. He has a splendid pair of eyes, reading ordinary print without glasses, and his skin is absolutely without a wrinkle. His hair, it is true, is white, but that is the only indication one sees that would point to old age. His voice has a ring, and his intellect is sharp. He is a minister of the denomination of the Latter Day Saints. He explains clearly the difference between the Latter Day Saints and the Mormons, whom he charges with polygamy. He says that the Latter Day Saints are the true followers of the lowly Nazarene and that the revelation made to a seventeen-year-old boy back in the thirties was the fulfillment of the prophecies.

SPEAKS OF BOYHOOD DAYS.

Speaking of his boyhood days Mr. Reeder said: "When I was but a lad I saw the first locomotive which actually ran on rails and carried passengers. It was an engine and caboose which ran from Charleston to Hamburg, South Carolina, the company being chartered in 1827. I was then fourteen years old and with my father and mother was traveling from my native state, South Carolina, to Barbour County, Alabama. We heard the new train was coming through and we got up early in the morning and sat by our wagons until daybreak to see it. It came through spitting fire from the little smokestack and rustling and jangling over the light rails of the time. It was a wonderful sight to me, then a mere lad. I did not then know the wonders I should be spared to see. I did not know then that it would be but a few years when a message might be tapped off at one station and be received in a few seconds at another miles and miles away; I did not dream of the electric telegraph, of electric lights, or the automobile, let alone the wireless system.

"I can remember many wonderful things during my boyhood days, among them the day when the stars fell from the heavens. I could not understand it, neither could those about me, and it seemed to some that the world was about to come to an end. The stars commenced to fall to the ground about nine o'clock one night and it continued a veritable shower of fire until eleven o'clock the next morning. It was a marvelous thing to me and I shall never forget it.

LIVED DURING BIG WARS.

"I lived during four big wars in which this country was engaged, the war of 1812, the Mexican war, the civil war, and the Spanish-American war. Of course I passed through several Indian wars or campaigns. The massacre of Fort Mims made a profound impression on me although I was still young. We had no telegraph then and the story of the terrible occurrences at the fort was carried from Stockton by word of mouth, and I remember how every man was ready to shoulder his musket and fight.

"I did not engage in any of the great wars this country had, neither did I ever fight a duel. The nearest I ever came to that was when I would strip off and go into a bout, fist and skull, to subdue some bully who claimed he was the worst man in the county and had to be shown that no matter how bad a man is another better man has been created.

"The trip overland from South Carolina to Alabama was a most eventful period in my life. I was but a lad and the hardships and privations of the trip are something never to be forgotten. We had to keep a close lookout to keep the blazed trail and then again we had to keep our eyes open for the Indians, who were still very troublesome in those days. I lived many years in Barbour and finally settled down in Baldwin County, near Seminole, where I now live.

RIGHT LIVING, LONG LIFE.

"During my time I have been a farmer, a timberman, and have preached the gospel. I am of the denomination of the Latter Day Saints, which must not be confused with the Mormons, for we do not believe in polygamy. The King James Version of the Bible is full of polygamy, but the belief of the Latter Day Saints as revealed to a seventeen-year-old boy many years ago smacks nothing of that custom. It is simply the following of the original teaching as laid down by Jesus Christ.

"I am a strong man yet, although I will be ninety-eight years old in July. I attribute my long life to right living and plenty of outdoor exercise. I have withstood many hardships but it has not hurt me because I have lived right."

Mr. Reeder has fifty-eight grandchildren, fifty-seven great-grandchildren, and three great-great-grandchildren to cheer him in his declining years. He seems to know them all by name and to take great pride in them. His youngest son, whom he is visiting in Mobile, is fifty-one years old.

OUR TESTIMONY.

As a church we claim that God is directing us in church building and that our work is in harmony with his will; that God directs and we obey. We thus put ourselves before the public in such a way that they have to give us some consideration as a church. Our work demands the attention of the people and we have attracted the attention of the world in every place where our voices have been heard in defense of the gospel and the church as set up as an ensign to the nations, having been fully organized April 6, 1830. Since then, her banners have been floating through the mists of darkness that have covered this earth for twelve hundred and sixty years, but God has said there would be light at evening time, and so light has come, and just as it was in former years, some love darkness rather than light, while others love the light and are walking in the light. They who love light and are walking in the light, have received the latter day message brought by the angel of God to be preached to every nation and people. They have received it with gladness. Those who love darkness have condemned this latter day work in the strongest terms. It is plain that two powers are at work, side by side, wherever this gospel is preached. Men and women are affected by one or the other of these powers. Some claim this is God's work, while others claim that it is the work of the Devil, and so we have a conflict of witnesses. In all such cases, how shall we decide as to what witness tells the truth. It is our duty to hear a witness testify before we pass our judgment on his testimony.

Greenleaf in his work on testimony says the witness having the best reason for uttering a truth, or having the least inducement for testifying falsely, shall be credited. Written testimony is better than oral, and no oral testimony shall be introduced to change or alter a written statement. Let the reader please apply this rule to the Latter Day Saints. Who has the best reason to testify as to the truth of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, the ones that have obeyed the doctrine and have tested its claims, or those who have neither accepted nor investigated its claims? It seems to me that those who have obeyed the doctrine taught by the Latter Day Saints and have tested its claims, are the proper witnesses to be credited. What think you?

The Latter Day Saint teaches faith in God and in his Son Jesus Christ and in the Holy Ghost as one of the first principles of the doctrine of Christ, and hence he testifies to that as a truth. This is his oral testimony. In the sixth chapter of Hebrews there is a written statement made by Paul to the very same thing. Shall we accredit the oral statement of the Saints when it is in harmony with Paul's written statement? We can not reject such testimony.

Next, the Saints teach repentance as the second principle of the doctrine of Christ. Their oral testimony is in harmony with a written statement made by Paul in Hebrews 6. Shall we reject the Saints' testimony when it harmonizes with the written testimony of Paul? No.

The third principle of the doctrine of Christ as taught by the Saints is baptism by water and also by the Holy Ghost. Their oral testimony is, Except a man is born of water and the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God. There is a written statement to that effect in Hebrews 6 and in John 3:5.

The fourth principle of the doctrine of Christ taught by the Saints is the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost and for blessing children and for the healing of the sick and for ordaining officers in the church. The Saints teach and practice the laying on of hands for all the above things. There is a written testimony found in Mark 16:18; 13:16; 6:5; Matthew 19:13; Luke 4:40; Acts 8:14-18; 13:1-3; 6:5, 6; Numbers 8:27; 18:20. So with all the oral testimony of the Saints, testifying as to the laying on of the hands being a principle of the doctrine of Christ, can we doubt the testimony of the Saints who have testified to the truth that the laying on of the hands is one of the true principles of the doctrine of Christ? None can deny their testimony and claim to be a righteous judge of evidence, hence the oral testimony of the Saints is just the same as is written in the Bible and the testimony of Christ and holy men that spake as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost; so we must receive their testimony as that of true witnesses and reject statements coming from men and women that testify differently.

Next, the Latter Day Saints claim that their church has a quorum of apostles in it, also prophets, evangelists, elders, bishops, teachers, and deacons as officers. This is their oral testimony. Now turn and read 1 Corinthians 12 and Ephesians 4, and you will find Paul's written testimony proves that the above officers were placed in the true church of Christ for the preaching of the gospel, the work of the ministry, and the perfecting of the saints.

Again the Saints testify by their oral testimony that they have the spiritual gifts in their church. Paul's written testimony is the same as the Saints', and is found in Corinthians 12.

The Saints testify that if the people will do the will of God they shall know the doctrine is true. Christ promised the same thing to the people, that if any man will do the will of his Father, he shall know whether the doctrine he preached be of God or of himself. The Saints testify by their oral testimony that if people will repent of their sins and be baptized in the name of Christ for the remission of their sins they shall receive the Holy Ghost. Peter's written testimony in Acts 2 is in harmony with the Saints' oral testimony. Shall we accredit such testimony? Of course we must. Again, the Saints claim that when people receive the Holy Ghost, it will guide them into all truth and show them things to come. Christ's written testimony is the same, found in John 16: 13.

The Saints testify by their oral testimony of the gathering together of the children of God, proving their faith in the gathering by coming from all parts of the world to the land of Zion beginning at the center stake, Independence, Missouri. What written testimony can be found in the Bible to corroborate the oral testimony of the Latter Day Saints on the gathering together of the children of God? Was not Abraham gathered out from his wicked kinsfolk? Lot and his family were gathered out from Sodom to the city called Zoar, where there was safety, while the wicked were destroyed in Sodom. Again, was not Israel gathered out of Egypt to the promised land? Ezra tells us the Jews were gathered from Babylon. Christ taught the gathering of his people in Luke 23: 37. Paul testifies to the gathering in Ephesians 1: 10. In Acts we are told all that believed were to gather and have all things common. This is the very thing for which the Saints are gathering together to the land of Zion, that they may establish all things common among Saints. Whose testimony shall we receive on the gathering, the oral testimony of the Saints corroborated by the written testimony of Christ and inspired men of old, or shall we take the testimony of infidels and so-called Christians that testify by their oral testimony? The gathering of God's people is going on and has been for a number of years, and God is blessing his people in their gathering together, insomuch as they live righteously before him. So we say to the world of mankind, to all nations, tongues, and people, Gather with us to Zion by making the sacrifice in obeying the gospel and preparing yourselves to reign with Christ a thousand years, while the rest that reject this gospel as taught by the Saints will be as the people were in the days of Noah. They will suffer loss. The chosen family of God entered into the ark for safety, so must the chosen people of God enter into the church of God and enter into Zion and live pure lives before God.

Zion is the pure in heart gathered to the land of Zion, the city of refuge. May the Saints so live in Zion that their light may shine till all the honest in heart can see the true light that is to lighten the world. May we as Saints have the same care one for another in order that this may be obtained among the Saints. Selfishness must be rooted out from among us and the Saints establish all things common. Can this be done? Yes! By making consecrations. Who is willing to lay all at the apostles' feet that none can say we have aught of our own? That would put a stop to all speculation. All would be equal in temporal things, then the manifestations of the Spirit of God will be enjoyed by the Saints. Then, and only then, can we fully enjoy the power of the Holy Ghost; then peace and good will will come to the people of God and the poor will rejoice in the Holy One of Israel. Can they do it now? Under the present situation of things, I answer, No; but when the law of God is fully complied with by the Saints, then all will be equal in temporal things. Then we may lift up our heads and rejoice and praise God for a perfect plan of redemption, a pure gospel that saves us all alike when we comply with its precepts. Dear Saints, let us pray and work that the will of God may be done on earth as it is done in heaven. In order to know of the doctrine of Christ in all its points, let us do the will of God here in Zion. May the Lord pardon our weaknesses and make us strong in his hand to herald forth the gospel message to the nations of the earth, saying, Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. Prepare to meet your God in peace. What I say to one I say to all, Watch and pray, for you know not the hour when the Son of Man will come. Be ye ready, is the advice of your humble servant and colaborer in Zion.

THE TIME OF DEPARTURE.

FUNERAL SERMON OF EARL V. NEWCOMB, WHO DIED IN SOMERVILLE, MASSACHUSETTS,
FEBRUARY 6, 1910.

For now I am ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.—2 Timothy 4: 6-8.

These words of Paul in this farewell message to Timothy, are the saddest and sweetest ever written. This great apostle of righteousness is to be offered from the friends who loved him—martyred by the very people he had tried to save. After all the suffering, wrecks at sea, struggles with lions, lashes and hungers, to die like this! Yet in it all he was sustained by hope—more than hope, the very hands of knowledge had been placed in blessing upon his head and he knew that his reward was sure, for through all those weary years, God had been whispering words of love in the ear of his soul. So he sends to Timothy these last sweet words, "I have kept the faith, there is laid up for me a crown of life." And not for Paul only, but for all who love His appearing. That glorious day when wrongs will be made right; when the wounds of aching hearts will be bound up, and the widening chasm between the rich and the poor, the strong and weak be closed; when no more shall be felt the sting of pride and prejudice, luxury and lust, envy and covetousness; the insolence of riches with the rancors of poverty. O! God, hasten that day!

On this solemn occasion, we have met to pay our last tribute to the dead. A young man has gone from among us. The being we call Death has opened and closed the door, leaving a vacant chair by the fireside. Of all life's scenes, none is more pathetic than the death of a little child, but more sorrowful than this is the cutting off of a man in his youth, when the sun is in midheaven and the very air is freighted with happiness and bright prospects. Yet, 'tis not for us to question the wisdom of God.

"All is of God! If he but wave his hand
The mists collect, the rain falls thick and loud,
Till, with a smile of light on sea and land,
Lo! he looks back from the departing cloud.

"Angels of life and death alike are his;
Without his leave they pass no threshold o'er;
Who, then, would wish or dare, believing this,
Against his messengers to shut the door?"

Death does not end all. To the righteous, it is but a brief cessation of perfect activity which will be renewed in all its glorious fullness when the spirit and body reunite. To that person whose eyes have never been anointed by the finger of God, life and death are two profound mysteries, deep as the ocean and fathomless as eternal space. To that man who has entertained the sacred Guest, life is a serious and solemn trust, death but the door that admits him into the presence of the redeemed.

Paul did not doubt, his faith did not tremble on the brink, Peter longed to depart and be with Christ. Ah, this hope of life everlasting! this knowledge of eternal peace! It is the thing that sustains God's people when the bitter blows of suffering are laid heavy upon the aching heart. This hand of immortality! How it presses aside the clouds of gloom and reveals the divine presence; how it plays a requiem of peace upon the chords of our life and points to the star of hope. Job, in the hour of his deepest agony, cries out, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him, for I know that my Redeemer liveth and in my flesh shall I see God." The inspiration of Amos: "O! grave, where is thy victory? O! death, where is thy sting?"

The brother whose body lies folded in the arms of sleep was my friend. It was his request that I speak the last farewell over his lifeless clay. It is with mingled sorrow and joy that I comply with his wish. Sorrow, because he has gone from us and we shall see him no more in this life; joy, because the pain and suspense are past and he has entered into rest. It is with emotion that I recall our associations, how from the first of our acquaintance there sprang into being that mysterious affinity of friendship. In this world of doubt, unkind remarks, and extensive misunderstandings, it is beautiful to possess that most priceless of all earth's gifts—a friend. Such the brother proved to be.

He told me that he was born in Delhaven, Kings County, Nova Scotia, September 7, 1885. He was baptized March, 1907, by R. W. Farrell and confirmed by M. C. Fisher. He was an honest young man, and better than this, he was a Christian. A contemplation of his future state brings nothing but consolation to our mind. We have good reasons for saying, "It is well with his soul." While he valued life, yet he was not afraid to go, and he could well have said of that great meeting with God:

"Somewhere he waits upon a sun kissed hill
And softly says: My boy is coming soon,
He'll know me from afar—I know he will!—
When world tired, I trudge home, some afternoon."

In the midst of this restless city, he is at rest. Humanity rushes on, with its thousands of throbbing hearts, aching brains, toiling hands, and weary feet. From all these God has seen fit to release him. To you who mourn the loss of Earl, I have only this to say:

"Be still, sad heart, and cease repining;
Behind the cloud the sun is still shining,
Thy fate is the common fate of all;
Into each life some rain must fall,
Some days must be dark and dreary."

Into the tender bosom of mother earth we commit his body and in the loving arms of his Father, God, we leave his spirit. Amen.

SLAUGHTER OF THE INNOCENTS.

WILL YOU HAVE THIS KIND OF A FOURTH?

avert some of the tragedies that might otherwise occur. There is too much suffering and loss connected with our present way of celebrating Independence Day in America. The cuts used are furnished by the Woman's Home Companion.

We believe in the old-fashioned Fourth. It is the one day of national joy in which Americans are participants and not spectators. It is a great day—for the boy. It is noisy, but we can not stop the noise without stopping the boy. Let the boy have his fun. But—two hundred and fifteen of them can not have their fun this Fourth because they were killed last Fourth. Five thousand more were blinded or maimed. This is not fun, nor is it patriotism—it is slaughter, the slaughter of the innocents.

YOU WERE NOT KILLED.

How does all this apply to you? You had fireworks and pistols when you were young and you are no worse for it. Why should you take them away from your children?

Would you give your child milk from a tubercular cow?

Would you send your child to an unsanitary school building?

Would you try to make him catch the measles or the mumps?

Yet all these things were done when you were a child. We know better now, and because we know better, we act in a different way. Why, then, because you were exposed to the horrors of tetanus and the lesser evil of burning alive, should you abandon your children to the same perils? If you do not know what these perils are, if you do not believe what the doctors tell you, if you do not know what tetanus is, we will tell you.

WHAT TETANUS IS.

These words are not for the squeamish, they are for the fathers and mothers who wish to do their duty by their children. Tetanus bacilli are tiny micro-organisms, so small that six could lie side by side on the edge of a razor and have space to turn over—but deadly out of all proportion to their size. They are everywhere about us, in the dust of the street, on every surface we touch. They would depopulate the earth but for one reason, they are powerless in the presence of air. But let them be inclosed in some soft, warm receptacle, given animal matter upon which to feed, and with their enemy, oxygen, shut out, they breed and multiply and spread. If this soft, warm place is a wound, and the animal matter is the body of your child, and the edges of the wound are closed and the oxygen kept out, the tetanus bacilli will secrete a poison which will travel, not in his veins and arteries, but along his nerve sheaths, slowly and surely and deadly, until muscle after muscle is affected, paralysis sets in, convulsions occur, and, after contortions so violent that the ligaments of the body are frequently torn in two, your child will die, literally tortured to death.

This is tetanus—and tetanus may be the result of any powder wound deep enough to close. The toy pistol, the firecracker, the cannon cracker, the rocket, or even the pin wheel, in the grimy hands of your little child, is charged with agony. You, in the ignorance of your day, faced these dangers and escaped. Thousands did not escape. You can not, now, place these instruments of death in the hands of your own child.

Copyright Crowell Company.

OR WILL YOU HAVE THIS KIND?

YOUR FIRST DUTY.

Two plain duties face you who read these words. The first is as easy as it is obvious: Keep your own boy or girl out of danger. By your own is meant the boy or girl nearest and dearest to you. It is inconceivable that you should read of the agony of tetanus and then expose your own child to it. No, you will resolve to abolish fireworks in your own family, but, as the ink on these pages grows cold and the child's enthusiasm grows hot, several arguments will oppose your resolve. The most insistent will be in your own generous mind. If Johnny-Across-the-Street has fireworks, your Johnny will want them and who could have the heart to refuse him? You should and will. Show this page to Mr. and Mrs. Across-the-Street, tell them of your resolve, cooperate with them in finding a substitute—just as patriotic, just as joy-giving and, if necessary, just as noisy. If Mr. and Mrs. Across-the-Street are sensible people they will bless you for the suggestion. If they are not sensible people, you can not afford to let their influence decide your conduct. After all, you are Johnny's parents, you are responsible, you will suffer if he suffers, you will miss him if through your carelessness he is killed. Your first duty is to "your own."

PUBLIC OPINION IS YOUR OPINION.

Your second duty is a public one. If tetanus is perilous to your child, it is perilous to others. If you, as a father or mother, are wisely protecting your child, you, as a citizen, should move for the protection of others. And you can do it. Public opinion, which is your opinion plus your friends' and their friends', has swept the record clean in Cleveland, Washington, Toledo and several other progressive cities. Public opinion can do the same in your community. You will not be fighting for a lost cause, but a winning one. Men like President Taft; Governor Deneen, of Illinois; and Governor Hughes, of New York, are behind the movement for a sane Fourth. You can be behind the movement in your town. You are not a politician, you may have no public influence, but you have friends. Set them the right example, talk to them, show them this page. Organize your own movement. If you do not know, write to us and we will tell you.

LET THEM HAVE THEIR FUN.

Dynamite is not essential to patriotism, but neither is total abstinence from fireworks necessary to a sane Fourth. Washington, for instance, had in 1909, a municipal fireworks display conducted by experts, lasting two hours, witnessed by forty thousand people, and will have another this year. The money was subscribed by business men, fireworks bought of a firm willing to send men to set them off and the exhibition held in an open space where no damage to life or building could, nor did result. An automatic parade with prizes, was arranged by a local newspaper, boat clubs held regattas, and a general exodus for a picnic day and a day in the country occurred. For those who had a mind for it, patriotic assemblies were held, the Declaration read, and music played its part. And Washington found it worth while, as Toledo has, and Chicago and Cleveland. New York City joins the procession this year. There will be no going back to the old days. The new way has been tried and found admirable.

YOU CAN DO IT.

What Washington has done on a large scale, you, in your family and in your neighborhood, can do with equal effect. You may not be able, this first year, to change the public sentiment in your community, but you can change it in your own circle. Look well at the pictures used in this article and choose. And if you can not persuade your friends to choose the right course with you, at least you can do this much for them: Show them this page. Make them understand the nature of the danger they face. Above all, tell them that if your words and the words of their trusted physicians have no weight on the question of denying fireworks to little, unskilled, dirty hands, at least they must not neglect the seemingly harmless powder wound. Or if, in spite of your own wisdom your child suffers through the ignorance of others and is even slightly wounded, do not try the old home remedies that close the wound and shut out the one hope, oxygen. Take him at once to your physician. Give him a fighting chance, for his life. Give yourself the chance to escape the unspeakable horror of watching him in the agony of tetanus. Do this much at least; do more if you can. And you can if you start now.—Woman's Home Companion, June, 1910.

THE WORLD'S ADVANCING CIVILIZATION.

The American republic has in the fortunes of war a destiny to perform in Asia, greater than was its mission to Japan half a century ago. Of all the nations it is the one best fitted to extend free representative institutions to the inhabitants of eastern Asia. As a world power this nation seeks no extended dominion. Its mission, its manifest destiny, is to promote the peace of the world and so far as possible, by precept, example and influence, to aid in securing civil and religious liberty for all mankind. There was a time when the world's advancing civilization gathered around the Mediterranean Sea. The world's historic events were then along the Nile, the Ægean and the Tiber. Egypt, Greece, Rome and Carthage were the great actors. At that time the English language was nowhere heard save among the few Anglo-Celts scattered over the British Isles. To-day it is spoken by one hundred and forty millions of people, more than half of whom dwell in the United States of America, representing in their birthplaces all the nationalities of the earth, and to whose children the Anglo-American language will be their mother tongue. In the long struggle between the Indo-Germanic and the Semetic races of mankind for the dominion of the world, vast armies of Asiatic hordes, at intervals long or short, invaded eastern Europe. The little republic of Greece, from its geographic position, was for a long time the vanguard of European civilization. Five hundred years before the Christian era, eleven thousand Grecian soldiers at Marathon turned back Darius' army, gathered from all parts of the great empire founded by Cyrus, and which then extended from the Ganges to the eastern shores of the Mediterranean. This victory saved Europe from Asiatic civilization and Asiatic barbarism, its enslavement of man, and cruel degradation and vassalage of woman. Had Dairus' army triumphed at Marathon, there was then no power west of Greece that could have offered any effectual opposition to its triumphant march over eastern Europe.

At a later period Attila, with his vast army of Huns invading western Europe was defeated at Chalons, in southeastern France, thus saving infant Christianity from disaster and European civilization from probable overthrow. At a still later period the Saracens, having overrun Syria, Persia, Arabia, Egypt and Spain, were in their intended conquest of Europe defeated at Tours by Charles Martel. This victory, in the language of an eminent historian "gave a decided check to the career of Arab conquest in western Europe, rescued Christendom from Islam, preserved the relics of an ancient and the germs of modern civilization, and reestablished the old supremacy of the Indo-European over the Semetic family of mankind."

Though the sermon on the mount, the beginning of Christian civilization, and the teachings of the Savior of mankind on the seashore and along the hillsides of Judea, were in the western confines of Asia, yet they had little influence upon Asiatic civilization. Though Alexander carried Grecian arms in triumph to the walls of Babylon, "the oldest seat of earthly empire," yet Grecian arts and Grecian civilization made no lasting impress upon the civilization of the Persian empire. For two thousand years civilization has been moving westward from the western confines of Asia, and to-day the American republic holds the torch of the world's advancing civilization, having carried it westward across the Pacific Ocean and planted it on the eastern confines of Asia where its illuminating rays light up with the brightness of a morning sun the Chinese sky, which canopies one third the population of the globe. In the overhanging future no prophet can now foretell what will be its noonday splendors if the American people, true to their manifest destiny marked out by the mighty events of four hundred years, shall faithfully discharge their responsibilities to liberty and the rights of a common humanity in the onward progress of the race to a higher and better civilization.—Galusha A. Grow.

THE CITIZEN AND SOCIAL REFORM.

"There can be little doubt," Professor Jenks says, in his recently published Governmental Action for Social Welfare, "that the promotion of the public welfare rests upon private citizens, almost, if not quite, as much as upon any official." In these days when it is customary to "get after" the officials, this view possesses the quality of novelty and in view of the author's succeeding remarks, it appears most sensible. He writes further: "Any intelligent man interested in social reform may think out the best way of bringing about a reform, even though it is to be by governmental act. He may then prepare an appropriate bill, have it presented to the legislature and take an active part in securing its passage. Perhaps nine tenths of the work of individuals in the direction of social reform has been done by public-spirited citizens not interested in office holding for themselves."

For successful work in social improvement, Professor Jenks emphasizes the value of personality. "No student of society and of the means of improvement can overlook the fact that back of every good work is a personality. This is a point that can not be emphasized too strongly and that particularly our younger citizens should keep in mind constantly, because perhaps the best preparation that can be made by young people to fit themselves for public work is to cultivate and develop a personality that will count with a continually stronger influence as the years go by. A man of the right character and a personality that gives him influence with others can make his work for the public welfare felt in private life practically as well as in official life. The vital element is not position but purpose and personality."

A GOOD NAME.

It is ever to be kept in mind that a good name is in all cases the fruit of personal exertion. It is not inherited from parents; it is not created by external advantages; it is no necessary appendage of birth or wealth or talents or station, but the result of one's own endeavors, the fruit and reward of good principles, manifested in a course of virtuous and honorable action. The attainment of a good name, whatever be the external circumstances, is wholly within the young man's power. However humble his birth, or obscure his condition, he has only to fix his eye on the prize and press toward it, in a course of useful and virtuous conduct, and it is his. How many of our worthiest and best citizens have risen to honor and usefulness by dint of their own persevering exertions!

In the formation of character, personal exertion is the first, the second, and third virtue. A good name will not come without its being sought. All the virtues of which it is composed are the result of untiring application and industry. Nothing can be more fatal to the acquirement of a good character than a treacherous confidence in external advantages. These, if not seconded by your own exertions, will drop you, midway; or perhaps you will not have started, while the diligent traveler will have won the race.

It is of the highest importance that you have a commanding object in view, and that your aim in life be elevated. It is an old proverb, that "he who aims at the sun, to be sure, will not reach it, but his arrow will fly higher than if he aimed at an object on the level with himself." Just so in the formation of character. Set your standard high, and you can not fail to rise higher than if you aimed at some inferior excellence. Young men are not, in general, conscious of what they are capable of doing. They do not task their faculties, nor improve their powers, nor attempt, as they ought, to rise to superior excellence. The consequence is that their efforts are few and feeble; they are not waked up to anything great or distinguished, and therefore fail to acquire a character of decided worth.

You may be whatever you resolve to be! Resolution is omnipotent! Aim at excellence, and excellence will be attained. "I can not do it" never accomplished anything; "I will try" has wrought wonders. A young man who sets out in life with a determination to excel can hardly fail of his purpose. There is, in his case, a steadiness of aim, a concentration of feeling and effort, which bear him onward to his object with irresistible energy, and render success in whatever he undertakes certain.—Joel Hawes.

Sometime.

"Be wise to-day; 'tis madness to defer."—Young.

We are going to do a kindly deed,
Sometime, perhaps, but when?
Our sympathy give in time of need,
Sometime, perhaps, but when?
We will do so much in the coming years;
We banish the heartaches and doubts and fears,
And we'll comfort the lonely and dry the tears,
Sometime, perhaps, but when?

We will give a smile to a saddened heart,
Sometime, perhaps, but when?
Of the heavy burdens we'll share a part,
Sometime, perhaps, but when?
Sometime we're going to right the wrong;
Sometime the weak we will help make strong;
Sometime we'll come with love's old, sweet song,
Sometime, perhaps, but when?

Ah, how we'll plan out the work in view!
Sometime, perhaps, but when?
Building air-castles of what we'll do,
Sometime, perhaps, but when?
Sometime, resolves that we'd pledge to make,
We with fresh courage will undertake;
Sometime to duty we will awake,
Sometime, perhaps, but when?

Sometime we'll reap of the joys to be.
 Sometime, perhaps, but when?
 Sometime from worry and care be free,
 Sometime, perhaps, but when?
 Sometime we'll taste of the glories there,
 Sometime a part of those splendors share.
 And for eternity we'll prepare,
 Sometime—perhaps—but when?

Manners in Children.

The question as to when a child shall learn manners is apparently answered by many parents in some equivalent to the words, "When they are grown." At least that is the interpretation one is forced to put upon the breeding or lack of breeding of the average child.

So unusual a thing is it to see a well-bred boy that the appearance of one is commonly greeted by a chorus of admiration from all who meet him. The mother who takes good breeding for granted is overwhelmed with compliments upon the marvelous training she has given her son, and feels a trifle dazed that what she takes as a matter of course should be regarded by others as a prodigy.

If I say boy rather than girl it is because the boy's ill manners are, as a rule, more aggressive than those of the girl. The woman child is more or less imitative and is also more subdued, owing partly to her nature and partly to her bringing up. Once in a while one meets a hoyden who disputes the palm for bad manners with the boy hoodlums of her neighborhood, but she is the exception. She may be deceitful and sly and a variety of other unpleasant things, but she is usually clever enough to assume a virtue even if she does not possess it, and behave tolerably well in the presence of outsiders. The boy, on the contrary, is generally at his worst when there is anyone at hand to be impressed by his conduct. Occasionally a lad is found with a stock of company manners which he can draw upon when occasion demands, but he is another exception.

To the boy, as to the man, is the burden of aggressiveness in act and demeanor. When they are ill bred, it is in positive fashion. They have more chance to be rude, or at least lacking in courtesy, than has the girl. The little girl, if she keeps quiet, may not be accused of bad behavior, while the very fact that the boy does not rise when an elder person enters the room, that he fails to lift his hat to an acquaintance on the street, or uncover his head when he comes into the house are counted unto him for unrighteousness. His sins of omission have the same rank as his sins of commission.

TRAIN AT EARLIEST AGE.

The only way to make it secure that a boy's breeding shall be more than skin deep—a lacquer or a veneer that will not stand friction or rough treatment—is to so drill him in it that the courteous thing shall become instinctive. It must be his natural impulse to be polite, and in order to secure this the child must be put in training at a tender age.

To some persons this sort of thing seems nothing short of absurdity. "Give the child good principles," they will say, "and let it go at that! They will learn manners when they are grown." I think I have quoted elsewhere the incident of the mother who told me that she never taught her boy to take off his hat when he came into the house or to lift it when he met a lady on the street.

"I taught him," she said, "to be kind to poor persons and to be helpful just as quickly to a beggar as he would to the richest person he knew. Then I did not give myself any more trouble about it. I knew he would learn the other things as he grew up."

When it would have been so simple a matter to have taught the "other things" at the same time, one is rather at a loss to see why they should have been omitted from the small boy's code. Courtesy is, after all, a form of consideration and its omission frequently causes as real a discomfort as a more active offense.

DECENCIES OF LIFE.

The boy who is taught, from the time he has a cap that is not tied on, to take it off when he meets a lady, is not a victim to harsh or useless discipline. Nor is he badly treated when he is obliged to remove his hat when he comes into the house. The persons that urge that such rulings are too strict might perhaps have some difficulty in telling where common sense training in manners ceases and unreason begins. It is taken for granted that a boy shall observe certain decencies of life in table manners and the like, and the other conventions to which he is requested to pay attention are no more arbitrary.

Yet perhaps I ought to modify that statement, or part of it. It is not always taken for granted that a child should observe the decencies of life. When I recall households in which I have seen children over-indulged, allowed to behave as they pleased, to eat as they chose with no regard for the stomachs of the visitor, to knead their food with grimy fists, to shout and sing into their drinking glasses, to handle the bones of poultry or chops with as absolute freedom as though they were prehistoric savages with none but the natural methods for detaching the meat, I think perhaps I have put the presumption of training too strongly.

GRACE OF COURTESY.

Still, there are homes where a certain amount of decency is required from the children and where they are yet not trained in courtesy. The lack seems to be either because of some fancied consideration due the child or else from laziness on the part of the parent. In at least half the cases I am inclined to think it is the latter explanation which applies. The mother—for it is the mother who does the training nine times out of ten—feels she has so much to teach the child that it is easier to let manners go by default. She may instruct her boy not to pass between her and the fire or to walk between her and the person to whom she is talking, but she feels it is too much trouble to teach him to rise when an older person comes into the room, to remain standing until guests are seated, to delay taking his place at the table until the older persons, or at least the women of the company, are in their chairs. If she obliges the boy to remove his hat when he comes into the house and to lift it on the streets when he meets an acquaintance she feels she has done her whole duty. When it comes to such minor refinements as requiring he shall stand aside for a lady to precede him into a room or from it, that he shall draw back the chair of his mother or any other woman at table, that he shall take off his hat before he kisses his mother—these, to her mind, are a needless heaping-up of ceremonies.

CLASS ALMOST EXTINCT.

It is true that all these small, sweet observances are less common than they ought to be among grown men. Once upon a time there was a class known as gentlemen of the old school who had a knightly, chivalric courtesy in their treatment of women—a courtesy that was admired by those who did not possess it and adored by those upon whom it was lavished. That class of man has almost died out, although here and there one finds an example of the almost extinct order.

I say "almost extinct," and yet there bids fair to be something like a revival of the old-time courtesy. For a while there was a dearth of it that was hard to bear by those who recollected what such courtesy could be in its finest flower.

Perhaps it was because men were too busy making haste to be rich to have any time to spare for the minor refinements of life. Perhaps it was because the whole constitution of American society was in a state of transition. What ever the reason, the smaller courtesies seemed to go out of fashion.

Letter Department

SWEENEY, SOUTH DAKOTA, June 15, 1910.

Dear Herald: You are a welcome visitor in our home. I thought you would like to know how we are getting along in South Dakota.

We still have our little Sunday school that Brother Rannie helped to organize last fall. There is an F. M. minister that preaches every two weeks. We are waiting patiently for our Latter day Saint elder to come. I have not been to Sunday school. I have been sick. I thought that I would not get well again, but there was an elder near us and I put my trust in God. I have a niece and nephew who are in good faith and they prayed for me to be spared a while longer in this world, as there is something for me to do. I did not forget to pray myself either.

I know what it is to be at death's door. I can thank God for his goodness and mercy he bestowed upon me when I was suffering more than death. I believe through faith and prayers of the Saints I was spared. I think when we Saints pray we should pray for all the sick and afflicted, for we are all God's children; whether we are all in the same faith or not, he loves us just the same. I am not well yet. The doctor said I would not be well for a long time yet.

I ask the prayers of all the Saints that I may get well. I never murmured once, for I thought God knew best and doeth all things well. Your sister in the same faith,

MRS. FRANK KEARNES.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, June 17, 1910.

Dear Herald: I take pleasure in writing my first letter to the HERALD. I wish to say we held our Religio and Sunday school convention of the Northern Nebraska District at Columbus, Nebraska, June 3 and 4.

Our Sunday school met Friday, the 3d, at 2.30 p. m. The meeting was called to order by Secretary M. A. Peterson, and Bro. J. M. Baker was chosen as chairman in absence of president, and later chosen as president of district to fill vacancy for the remainder of the year. Evening program: a regular session in charge of D. S. Condit, president. A half hour was spent in the study of the lesson. At the close of the lesson study a very interesting map talk by Brother Baker followed. After that we were favored with a solo by Sr. Anna Hicks, of Omaha; a reading of a fine paper, by Sr. Ira Lewis, of Decatur, Nebraska, entitled, "What can we do for the advancement of the Religio work?"

Saturday morning, June 4, at 8.30, Religio business session called to order by Pres. D. S. Condit. The session was short on account of conference convening at 10 o'clock, yet we had ample time to attend to all business and a little for a question box that had been provided for. The time was taken up in Religio work and we found that the work was very interesting, enough so that I called a special meeting Sunday evening at 7 o'clock for the purpose of organizing a Religio local, and I ask an earnest desire in your prayer in their behalf, for they are few in number; but the Lord will bless them and give them strength to make a grand success.

I do not believe I ever enjoyed myself any better at a convention than I did at Columbus. There were but a few of us, but it seemed that the Lord blessed us wonderfully and made it a meeting that will long be remembered. I want to say to the Religio workers, Do not get discouraged, but stick to the good work until the Lord will say, It is enough.

Yours in gospel bonds,

DAVID S. CONDIT.

MADISON, WISCONSIN.

Dear Herald: The stars and moon are shining and after the heat it is cool and refreshing and everything is beautiful. The surroundings are all that one could wish and I think, how is my standing with God? The day has brought forth many peculiar things, and I think and meditate upon the day's work, as I always do. How much have I failed and how much have I prospered this day? If I have failed, I have not only hurt myself but my brother and sister also. This work is of great importance, first of all to each one individually, and then to those we come in contact with. We do not, we can not, live of ourselves alone. We have an effect for good or evil every day. If I fail I have not failed alone. If I have prospered, I have not prospered alone. I have helped some one else to fail or prosper with me and so it is of great importance that I should watch my life work and see that it is good.

While at a sacrament meeting not long ago I sat deeply interested in all that was said, and almost every testimony was sad or of a hard trial some one had to bear. Some had to see loved ones pass through the dark valley of death, some were bowed down because of their trials of life, and as I thought I said, Is this hard life a Christian life? Is this what Christ meant it to be? Is there nothing else to it but this; no comfort at all, no joy, no peace, no gladness? And a favorite passage of Scripture passed through my mind: Come unto me; all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and you shall find rest unto your souls, for my yoke is easy and my burden is light. A sweet peace passed over me, a peaceful rest, and I felt joy springing up in my heart and I drank of the fountain of living waters and was filled. The sweet influence of God's Holy Spirit had come to me. I then compared it to the trials and sadnesses that were so hard and so many and I saw them get smaller and smaller till they all vanished away. 'Tis all I ask for, just a portion of God's Holy Spirit from time to time to encourage me. I am willing to labor for that, I am willing to pass through trials if need be to get nearer to God. Pray that I may be faithful. As ever your sister,

SISTER BROWN.

Editor Herald: In our conference minutes which came out in the HERALD last week, I note two mistakes, the resolution pertaining to tobacco was as follows: Resolved, That it is the sense of the body that members of the priesthood who do not discontinue the use of tobacco be not recognized in their office until they shall discontinue the use of same; further, Resolved, That as God is no respecter of persons all lay members that make no effort to discontinue the use of tobacco be considered weak in the faith of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and that we pray all to discontinue this habit. The courtesies of the floor were granted to all visiting brethren, instead of as stated. Yours for the truth,

E. O. BYRN.

THEODORE, ALABAMA, June 18, 1910.

Dear Herald: I have been thinking for some time that I would write a few lines to the Saints, telling them that I have been blessed in many ways and that my dear companion who for six years has heard the gospel preached has now obeyed it. His father was a Baptist preacher, and on that account he has had a hard time, but the first Sunday in May, 1910, he was baptized by Bro. G. T. Chute. It was a surprise to most of the people and to his father especially, for he has not spoken to him since. He has done all he can for his father and has asked the Lord in his prayers to forgive his father for what he has said against the church and him. I have been called a Mormon so many times that I have gotten almost used to it, but it does not hurt us to be called that.

We have a good Sunday school here, prayer meeting on Saturday night, preaching on Sunday night, and Religio on Wednesday night. We go to them all if we can. I praise the Lord for bringing my companion in so I can have help in bringing up my two little ones in the right way. I have one little boy five years old and a little girl two years old.

I ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints that we may hold out to the end.

Your sister in Christ,

ELDORA LOMBARD.

PLYMOUTH GROVE, MANCHESTER, June 9, 1910.

Dear Brother Joseph: We baptized three very promising girls into our East Manchester Branch last week. We had a spiritual and impressive service. Over forty persons were present. The Lord's work is growing here. We have a lively Sabbath school under Elder J. W. Green as superintendent, and a fine Religio under the presidency of Elder Weate. Both of these men have their whole soul in the work. It is reflected there.

I hope yourself and brethren of the office are well and trust the Lord will spare you to us a few more years.

With gospel love,

Your brother in Christ,

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI.

Many good thoughts were brought out in our sacramental service which was presided over by Brethren Cooke, Dowker, Reeves, and Beard. The preaching services were occupied by Brn. S. A. Burgess, Masten, Elliot, J. W. Peterson, and Dowker. Regular monthly priesthood meeting was held and subjects of interest were discussed. District conference was held at Landsdowne, June 18 and 19.

Food for the soul was delivered by Apostle Curtis, strength also being derived from the prayer service. Two promising young men were baptized and three little babes were blessed. Brother Paxton was ordained to the office of seventy.

The Christlike spirit was manifested in the generous hospitality of the Lansdowne Saints which was much appreciated.

The Sunday school will hold its annual picnic at O'Fallon Park on July 4. A good time is anticipated. Brother Dowker has been doing some preaching in Belleville, Illinois, and Brethren Paxton and Sparling at Oak Hill; Brother Sawyer, of the missionary force, was an attendant at the conference.

Your sister in Christ,

CENTRAL CHICAGO.

Sunday, June 19. The Sunday school decided to hold a picnic on the 4th of July at 82d and Stony Island, and extended invitations to the West Side and Pullman schools to unite with us. We trust the weather will not be quite so cold as last year, but if the hot weather continues we may welcome a cool breeze by that time.

Elder James Keir, from the West Side, gave us many good thoughts on the gathering to Zion in the morning, and Elder Pement favored his audience with a Jerusalem gospel sermon in the evening. Visitors were Bro. James Keir and wife from Matteson, Illinois; Brn. A. M. Dobson and D. C. Wilkie, Saint Joseph, Missouri; and Miss Bessie Peslin, sister of Bro. Fred Peslin.

Brother and Sister Ware, of Niagara Falls, visited Chicago on their bridal trip and spent a few days with their cousin, Mr. Stein. We understand they left Sunday evening for Detroit, Michigan.

Monday evening, June 20, the Searchlight Club gave a reception in honor of our missionary, Elder J. A. Tanner. A short program was rendered, which was much enjoyed, after which ice cream and cake were served. A number of the West Side members were present, and all consider that thanks are due the club for the pleasant evening spent. The club will hold their next meeting on Thursday evening at Jackson Park, taking their lunches.

Bro. and Sr. O. W. Newton, recently from Salt Lake City, are now located at 6229 Rhoades avenue.

Looking from earth and earthly things away,
Let me not falter, but untiringly press on
And gain new strength and power each day."

The Bishopric.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of the Clinton, Missouri, District: As I have been appointed Bishop's agent of this district, I ask that the Saints will remember their duties in tithes and offerings and send them by mail, as we can save expense to the district.

W. E. REYNOLDS,
ELDORADO SPRINGS, MISSOURI, R. F. D. No. 5, Box 102.

To the Saints and Friends of the Nauvoo District; Greeting: Another conference year is upon us. What shall it be? Who shall say? Shall we answer for you or you for us? No! each must answer for himself. Last year was quite successful, in many regards, though falling short of what it should have been in many ways. All in all, we think it an improvement over the year before. The present year is in our hands, and we can make it successful or we can make it a failure. Let us remember we are "laborers together with God." The success of the work does not entirely devolve upon the ministry. Each and every member can do his part. No missionary can be successful unless he is supported, financially and spiritually, by the Saints in his field of labor. One of the difficulties the ministry of our district has met in the past has been a lack of financial support, thus causing discouragement to some degree. Brethren, this ought not to be. They have a right to as many of the comforts of life as we who stay at home. Let the Saints remember that the missionary can not get along simply on his traveling expenses. When he comes into your midst to preach, see that his needs are supplied. Don't expect him to get his money from the Bishop. He is expected to get that from those among whom he labors. He is expected to call upon the Bishop only when he is not supplied by the Saints while out in the field. Remember also that if new places are opened there must be money come from the Saints to assist in doing this, in almost every instance.

Many have been faithful during the past, and a loving Father's hand has been over them for good. Those who have been thoughtless heretofore, should examine themselves and see if they are in the faith, with their might, mind, and strength.

Let us also remember that the missionaries' families are to be supplied from the Bishop's fund. Where is he to get that fund? From the Saints, in tithes and offerings.

Each being a laborer for the spread of the gospel, we hope to hear from all during the year, as often as it is practical for you to respond.

Yours for the Christ's sake,
GEORGE P. LAMBERT,
M. H. SIEGFRIED,
Of the District Bishopric.

Pastoral.

To the Saints in Southern Indiana District: Having been placed in charge of the Southern Indiana District, I take this means of informing you that I hope to be with you soon. I arrived at New Albany, May 12, stayed with the Saints over the 15th to a good conference. I went from there to the Byrnsville, where I received the sad news on the 18th of the death of my wife and daughter. Arrived home on the morning of the 20th, just in time to attend the funeral. Arrangements were made at the conference to hold two-day meetings at the following places and dates: July 2 and 3, Wirt, Indiana, Yoeman church; July 9 and 10, Byrnsville, Indiana, Saints' church; July 16 and 17, at Leavenworth, Indiana, Dry Run church; July 23 and 24 at Mill Stone, Indiana, near Connelton, Indiana; August 20 and 21 at Hyall, Indiana, near William Harbstreit's; August 27 and 28, Clay City, Indiana, near Happy Hollow; September 3 and 4, at Indianapolis, Indiana; September 10 and 11, New Trenton, Indiana; September 10 and 11, New Albany, Indiana.

As there are so many calls for preaching in that district I don't suppose Brother Halb and I can labor together all the time, as we are the only two missionaries; but we will do the best we can.

JOHN HARP.

To the Saints and Friends of the Southern Missouri Mission: Having been appointed to labor in the above field, I shall make it a point to visit all the branches and scattered members as soon as possible. If they will inform me as to their location, wants and needs along gospel lines, I shall be glad to assist as well as be assisted by the local ministry. Until further notice address me at 2225 Empire street, Joplin, Missouri.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. C. CHRESTENSEN.

SHEPPARD.—Sr. Alma Sheppard, daughter of Elder T. J. Sheppard, was born August 22, 1890, and died June 14, 1910. She was baptized when eight years old. She was sick only about two weeks and she was not thought to be dangerously sick. She attended the Baptist Church at Tucumcary, New Mexico, for two years, sang in the choir, and taught a Sunday school class, and won the respect of this little city in so much that when she died every bank and business house closed to attend the funeral, which was in charge of the Baptist minister. Sermon by S. W. Simmons.

Great News from Denver.

Have you heard the great news from Denver? The Beast has been driven from the Jungle; the citizens of that long-corrupted city have asserted their manhood and womanhood, have thrown off the yoke of the bosses, and have seized the reins and tools of government. Denver has triumphantly vindicated herself; Judge Lindsey has been justified. The causes of good government, of virtue, of civic honesty, aye, of "muckraking" have been gloriously upheld.

This victory constitutes the most encouraging, the most splendid event in the history of the great movement to restore democracy in the United States. Before the people of Denver there was a moral issue; it had been clearly defined; there was no possibility of misconception. The people decided right, as they will always decide right if only they are honestly convinced where the right lies.

What Denver has done other cities can do. Lindsey's noble work and his ultimate success must encourage other men to emulate his service. This was our belief and our hope when we agreed to publish "The beast and the jungle." We are proud to have borne a part in the awakening of Denver, proud to have published Lindsey's story, and proud to be able to congratulate him and his fellow-citizens on the ending of the Beast's reign.

The campaign to free the State has already been begun. The insurgents of both the old parties are organizing to throw off the control of the corporation machines. A special session of the Colorado legislature has been called to pass the reform election laws which Judge Lindsey's exposure was written to support. They will be passed. Constitutional amendments are being prepared giving the citizens of the State the powers of direct legislation now possessed by the citizens of Denver. The corporation control of politics in Colorado is coming to an end.

Colorado is cutting down its Jungle. Its Beast, driven from its lair in Denver, is being pursued by a determined body of citizens. Judge Lindsey's prediction made in the conclusion of his articles is already as good as fulfilled. He is no longer in danger in Denver. He is no longer "alone on the firing line." He is no longer the victim of the lies and persecutions of the allied "plunderbund." Denver has saved him and saved itself. He has won.—Everybody's Magazine for July.

The Rural Delivery Man.

"That he is a public benefactor is undoubtedly true," says Bertha Poole Weyl in Woman's Home Companion for July. "But his usefulness would be immeasurably increased if he were allowed to extend his business. People who live on the country routes would joyfully welcome a chance to send and receive packages by the rural carriers if the Post Office Department would charge only a reasonable rate for the service. Under the present postal laws it costs eighty cents to send five pounds of rice by a carrier from the village post office and general store to a customer living on a rural route, though for sixty cents the same package can be sent to England or any of twenty-nine foreign countries. Is it strange that fifteen million people carry their own parcels back and forth to town and that the rural free delivery has an annual deficit?"

"This deficit is not small. There are 38,215 routes which average annually $130 in receipts and $850 in expenses. This means a net loss of $720 per route or a total loss of $27,514,800. Quite a big price for failure to adopt ordinary business methods.

"Several plans have been suggested to obviate this annual deficit. A special rate might be made for the rural service, five cents for the first pound and two cents for each additional pound up to eleven. Provision may be made for carrying, at special rates, packages originating on the line of the special route, as on an average trip a carrier handles but twenty pounds of mail with facilities for handling five hundred pounds. All this could be done without any increase in expenditure, and it is estimated that the increased grocery trade alone would cover the dreaded $27,514,800 deficit.

"Consider what this increase in trade would mean to the country store. It would bring to its doors customers from a radius of twenty and thirty miles, it would reach the needs and purses of, on an average, four hundred and fifty people to a single delivery route, and, if you count all the routes, fifteen million men, women and children, the number that the parcels post of the rural free delivery would benefit. Does it not seem as though they should be considered?"

The Bible in the Far East.

Following his articles on "College men and the Bible" and "Bible study in India," in the May and June issues of The Century, Clayton Sedgwick Cooper contributes to the July number an account of the present active interest in Bible study in China, Korea, and Japan, based on his recent visit to those countries as one of the secretaries of the international committee that is at the head of the new Bible movement.

Insect Immigration—The Curse of American Agriculture.

A billion dollars a year is a conservative estimate of what Americans have to pay for the work of depredating insects that eat our crops and destroy our products. This is the statement of Samuel Hopkins Adams, who writes a very interesting and enlightening article on "Injurious insects" in the July American Magazine. He claims, however, that the curse of American agriculture is the importation of insect pests from foreign countries. He says:

"Of our seventy-two importantly destructive species—those whose appetites run well up into the millions of dollars annually—thirty-five have come to us from other countries. The codling moth, that winged ogre of apple and pear orchards, is of European origin, as are the Hessian fly and the 'green bug,' despoilers of wheat, and the Mediterranean flour moth, which goes to the mill for what is left after the other two are through their meal. The dreaded cotton boll-weevil hails from Mexico. The San Jose scale is a traveler from the immemorial East: The gypsy moth and the brown-tail moth, twin plagues of New England's trees were brought in, one by design, the other by accident, from the Old World. It is an axiom of science that an imported insect, if it succeed in acclimatizing itself at all, flourishes in its new home better than in its native land. This is particularly true of America, where the climate seems to favor insect life, and where farm and forest are of such extent as to be beyond the possibility of the rigid guardianship maintained over the smaller European holdings. More important still, it often happens that, while the newly arrived insect accustoms itself to conditions

Prizes Won by Bird Men.

Glenn Curtiss' aeroplane flight from Albany to New York deserves to rank as an historic achievement. Three centuries ago, in 1609, the Half Moon made the same journey in eleven days; in 1807 the Clermont made the trip in thirty-two hours; the average first-class river steamboats now make it in nine and one half hours; the Empire State Express makes its daily run in two hours and forty minutes, and Curtiss made the distance—137 miles—in 152 minutes, eight minutes faster than the express train! Deducting his short stop at Poughkeepsie, Curtiss' actual flying time was fifty-four and four fifths miles per hour. It was not the longest trip on record, the honor of which belongs to Paulhan, who covered the 136 miles from Manchester to London in a single flight; but his speed was far slower than that of Curtiss on his little biplane. Besides, the American had to contend with a rugged country, with many hills and valleys and a variety of perplexing air currents, while the English trial was over a comparatively level area. The day of the aeroplane is surely on the way. The tempting prizes now offered will induce the aviators to take unusual risks. For his great achievement, Curtiss won ten thousand dollars, but now premiums are announced aggregating $55,000 for flights from New York to Chicago and New York to Saint Louis. These will doubtless bring out all the famous aeronauts, and we may look forward to seeing Paulhan, Latham, and Bleriot the Channel flyer, as well as Rolls, the Englishman, who on June 2 crossed and recrossed the Channel without alighting. A contest between these knights of the blue will be well worth seeing.—The Christian Herald.

"The Reaction in Russia."

It is George Kennan's claim, in the second of his papers on "The reaction in Russia," which will be a notable feature of the July Century, that in the four and a half years since the Czar signed the freedom manifesto, October 30, 1905, not one of the reforms promised in that manifesto have yet been realized.

"Men are still arrested, imprisoned, and exiled," Mr. Kennan says, "without judicial process; there is no freedom of conscience, speech, assembly or association; officials of all grades still violate law under sanction of ministerial rules, circulars or declarations; and the third Duma, which the Czar promised should 'actually participate' in the government of the empire, spends most of its time on bills of no importance, or in discussing and vainly trying to improve government reform bills that do not reform and that never were intended to reform."

The American Flag.

A thoughtful mind, when it sees a nation's flag, sees not the flag only, but the nation itself; and whatever may be its symbols, its insignia, he reads chiefly in the flag the government, the principles, the truths, the history, which belongs to the nation.

When the French tricolor rolls out to the wind, we see France. When the new-found Italian flag is unfurled, we see resurrected Italy. When the united crosses of Saint Andrew and Saint George, on a fiery ground, set forth the banner of old England, we see not the cloth merely; there rises up before the mind the noble aspect of that monarchy which, more than any other on the globe, has advanced its banner for liberty, law, and national prosperity.

This nation has a banner, too; and wherever it has streamed abroad, men have seen daybreak bursting on their eyes, for the American flag has been the symbol of liberty, and men have rejoiced in it. Not another flag on the globe had such an errand, or went forth upon the sea, carrying everywhere, the world around, such hope for the captive and such glorious tidings. The stars upon it were to the pining nations like the morning stars of God; and the stripes upon it were beams of morning light.

As at early dawn the stars shine forth even while it grows light, and then, as the sun advances, that light breaks into banks and streaming lines of color, the glowing red and intense white, striving together and ribbing the horizon with bars effulgent, so, on the American flag, stars and beams of many-colored light shine out together. And wherever the flag comes, and men behold it, they see in its sacred emblazonry no rampant lion and no fierce eagle; they see the symbols of light. It is the banner of dawn; it means Liberty.

Consider the men who devised and set forth this banner; they were men who had taken their lives in their hands, and consecrated all their worldly possessions—for what? For the doctrine, and for the personal fact, of liberty—for the right of all men to liberty.

If anyone, then, asks me the meaning of our flag, I say to him—it means just what Concord and Lexington meant; what Bunker Hill meant; which was, in short, the rising up of a valiant young people against an old tyranny to establish the most momentous doctrine that the world had ever known, or has since known—the right of men to their own selves and to their liberties.

The history of this banner is all on the side of liberty. Under it, rode Washington and his armies; before it, Burgoyne laid down his arms. It waved on the highlands at West Point; it floated over old Fort Montgomery. When Arnold would have surrendered those valuable fortresses and precious legacies, his night was turned unto day, and his treachery was driven away by the beams of light from this starry banner.

It cheered our army, driven from New York and in their solitary pilgrimage through New Jersey. It streamed in light over the soldiers' heads at Valley Forge and Morristown. It crossed the waters rolling with ice at Trenton; and when its stars gleamed in the cold morning with victory, a new day of hope dawned on the despondency of this nation. And when the long years of war were drawing to a close, underneath the folds of this immortal banner sat Washington, while Yorktown surrendered its hosts, and our revolutionary struggles ended with victory.

How glorious, then, has been its origin! How glorious has been its history! How divine its meaning! In all the world is there another banner that carries such hope, such grandeur of spirit, such soul-inspiring truth, as our dear old American flag? Made by liberty, made for liberty, nourished in its spirit, carried in its service, and never, not once, in all the earth made to stoop to despotism!

Accept it, then, in its fullness of meaning. It is not a painted rag. It is a whole national history. It is the Constitution. It is the government. It is the free people that stand in the Government, on the Constitution. Forget not what it means; and, for the sake of its meaning, be true to your country's flag.

Let us, then, twine each thread of the glorious tissues of our country's flag about our heartstrings; and, looking upon our homes and catching the spirit that breathes upon us from the battlefields of our fathers, let us resolve, come weal or woe, we will, in life and in death, now and for ever, stand by the stars and the stripes. They have been unfurled from the snows of Canada to the plains of New Orleans, in the halls of the Montezumas, and amidst the solitude of every sea; and everywhere, as the luminous symbol of resistless and beneficent power, they have led the brave to victory and to glory. They have floated over our cradles; let it be our prayer and our struggle that they shall float over our graves.—Henry Ward Beecher.

Chicago's Insurgent Judge.

There are twenty-seven stand-pat judges on the municipal bench at Chicago and one insurgent. The lone insurgent is McKenzie Cleland, and his story, as told in Human Life for July, is too good a one to miss.

After his appointment to the municipal bench Judge Cleland dutifully lined the crowds of offenders up before him each morning, and sent them to jail in the good old way to be warmed and fed—big, able-bodied men—at the city's expense, while their families suffered meanwhile with cold and want.

But it wasn't a week before Judge Cleland's conscience turned insurgent. He saw that the whole process was unreasonable—wrong. So one fine morning he threw the old system overboard, and started on an entirely new tack. The method he adopted was so revolutionary that it has drawn the attention of the entire country to the man and his ideas. He has kicked over the traces of mediæval ideas in the administration of justice in a manner calculated to give the stand-paters fifty-seven different varieties of shocks,—says that judges ought to be trained for their work like any other set of specialists, not with books and Latin phrases, but by being immersed for a period in the lives of the men and women with whose fate they are to be intrusted—even advocates establishing a school for them in the Ghetto where they might come to know the problems of the people who are brought before them for sentence. For all of this thoughtful people recognize him as "the voice of one crying in the wilderness" and pointing the way to saner and humaner treatment of the helpless and hopeless derelicts on the sea of life.

We may be on good terms with God's children without being on good terms with God; but we can not feel right toward God if we do not feel right toward his children.

Your cross may be heavy, but for that very reason you ought to carry it until One comes to take it off your shoulders. There is always danger in trying to drop a very heavy burden.

A man may think he owns a whole township of land, but unless he has God his title isn't good. The land owns him.

The Modern Man's Gospel.

"Is the Gospel of the New Testament to be the power of God unto salvation for the modern man? Or must it be replaced by a philosophy of religious values that reduces the historical Jesus to a creature of the unwarranted faith of Galilean fishermen and changes the Church into a polite audience listening to discussions of social reform."

It is with the presentation and solution of this vital question that Dr. Shailer Mathews is primarily concerned in his new book The Gospel and the Modern Man, published last week (May 4). Doctor Mathews first attacks his problem by a discussion of the differences between the world in New Testament times and the world of to-day, between the man of the first century and the modern man. The characteristics of the modern are fourfold, he says: first, a high development of scientific thought; second, a conception of God as a force in the world rather than as an extra-mundane monarch; third, a great sense of social solidarity; and fourth, a refusal to accept as basis of truth, authority or metaphysical deduction.

Doctor Mathews' definition of the modern man is especially interesting. It is as follows: "The modern man of to-day is he who is controlled by those ideas which are transforming his inherited world into the newer order which his child will inherit. He is the child as well as the maker of to-morrow."

The second part of the book sets forth the reasonableness of the gospel of Christ. The author shows by numerous examples how it conforms with the facts of history; he shows as well how the principles which the Christian religion lays down are the most reasonable principles for the governing of man's life, not alone to bring about spiritual happiness but material.

There is one element that is worth its weight in gold, and that is loyalty. It will cover a multitude of weaknesses.

"Courtesy, kindness and concentration—this trinity forms the sesame that will unlock all doors."

"The boy who does his work so well that he needs no supervision has already succeeded."

"You can not go forward without leaving some things behind."

No? Then you have an ideal vacation trip in store for you—one that will mean a complete change of scene and of living conditions, as it should result most beneficially.

Don't take our word for it but go and be convinced. It costs little in time or money (I'll be glad to tell you how much) and you will be a thousand times repaid.
