I beg the reader's indulgence in an additional quotation to prove the utter falsity of Mr. Traum's claim that the Book of Mormon is "expressly set for the gathering of the Jews," and that "there is not a vestige of hope for any Gentile based upon any command or any promise in the Book of Mormon." "And as I spake concerning the convincing of the Jews, that Jesus is the very Christ, it must needs be that the Gentiles be convinced also that Jesus is the Christ, the eternal God, and that he manifesteth himself unto all those who believe in him, by the power of the Holy Ghost, yea, unto every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, working mighty miracles, signs and wonders among the children of men according to their faith."—Page 97, Lamoni edition, paragraph 12.

NOT AN UNPREJUDICED JUROR.

Mr. Traum's sanctimonious investigation of the evils (?) of the work engaged in by the Latter Day Saints, does not present unbiased work. The record of the same before us, indicates a "hop, skip, and a jump" effort to get there. Exaggeration, misrepresentation, hyperbole, omissions, disconnections, and ridicule are so disingenuously woven, that the whole gives his book the appearance of a theological "crazy quilt." The story of ancient controversialists is richly pregnant with impressive lessons, both for and against the system combatted. Jesus Christ gave the proper standard when he said: "Which of you convinceth me of sin? And if I say the truth, why do ye not believe me? He that is of God heareth God's words: ye therefore hear them not, because ye are not of God."—John 8: 46, 47.

He that is of God will judge by his word, will abide by his word, and as long as this rule is properly respected and applied to the investigation of what our critic styles "Mormonism," i. e., as propagated by the Reorganized Church, its future is secure, and its ultimate success in the struggle will be the brightest page in the annals of human destiny.

In "seeking the overthrow" of the Lord's work, Mr. Traum "doubts the ability" of the Saints to "lay aside all bias and prejudice." We can truly say: "Physician, heal thyself." His doubts are baseless, have no foundation. But his effort entire, based on the evidence collated, gives no mistakable indication that "prejudice and bias" constitute the warp and woof in his questionable fabric of many colors.

His assertions remind me of an anecdote of an Irishman, Mike McGinnis, who was summoned as a jurymen in a murder case.

"Mike," said the judge, "have you formed or expressed any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant?"

"I have not, yer honor," replied Mike.

"Mike," said the judge, "have you any conscientious scruples against the infliction of capital punishment?"

"Yer honor," replied Mike, "I hev not in this case."

ORIGIN AND GROWTH OF CHURCH.

On page 27, the author says: "We can scarcely imagine the type of mind that will not find its interest excited by a careful study of Mormonism." I suppose his imagination is bounded by what is termed "Christendom," for outside of the less than twenty per cent constituting Christendom, he would find neither study nor interest. But he continues: "Its lowly origin; its singular proselyting power; its marvelous dissemination, especially during the lifetime of its prophet; its almost unparalleled comedy and tragedy, as exhibited by the experience of the people who gave it credence; its steadfast allegiance of many, at the price of reproach and degradation, frequently at the expense of misery almost beyond human endurance," etc.

For the humble, yet meek and honorable origin, and for the progress of the latter day work, we have no apology to offer, but can speak in defense of such characteristics adorning the work of God in all ages. Mr. Traum would like God to proceed on lines appealing to the fastidious tastes of the times, and like the Pharisees of old, he would accept the truth as he prefers it, and not as it is. This brings us to the consideration that everything must be decided according to the standard of so-called "Campbellite" interpretation. In other words, we can not determine the truth or falsity of that which he terms Mormonism, by weighing it in the scales of Campbellism, for that itself is in question.

The "marvelous dissemination" of the restored gospel of Christ, the success attending its career, developing large proportions, in the face of untoward circumstances, during the fourteen years of Mr. Smith's leadership, seems to stagger our critic and "invites attention." Certainly! When the great head,—“the apostle and high priest of our profession,” was born in the “manger,” (his guardian parents having been instructed by an angel as to the methods of his preservation) he was “brought up” at Nazareth, a town of “lowly” repute, and grew to manhood and power among the “poor.” He was baptized by a man dressed in shaggy garments; chose his ministers from among fishermen; and gave us the wealth of his divine life while in poverty,—having “no place to lay his head.”

It was very “marvelous” to see maritime cities, provinces, and islands bow in allegiance to the “lowly” babe and his message of meekness. Still more “marvelous” when Cæsar’s household in imperial Rome became obedient to the faith; and wonder still increased when Paul could say, “All Asia is turned to the Lord.” On the one hand, the sceptered hand and mitred head combine; on the other, almighty truth pushes the conflict along. Had the “God of Israel” consulted the popular taste of Mr. Traum and the “Antis,” Christ would have been welcomed into life by princes, his first infant slumbers amid Tyrian plush on canopied couches, where rippling waters from royal aqueducts dripped into basins of ivory and pearl.

A TRIBUTE TO THE ELDERSHIP.

Mr. Traum has very truthfully credited the Latter Day Saint ministry with “knowing the New Testament” and “knowing it well.” “Their work,” he says, “consists in harmonizing the peculiarities of their doctrine with the tenets of the New Testament.” (Page 10.)

Ah! there is the rub. The Saints do not take a back seat when it comes to “harmonizing” with New Testament doctrine. But, Mr. Traum, what will you have to say when we turn the searchlight of truth upon your concession? Hark! “Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ [i. e., harmonizes with Christ’s doctrine], he hath both the Father and the Son.”—2 John 9.

“He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life.”—1 John 5: 12.

But in the light of the foregoing statements of our critic, why does he “seek to destroy” that which can be harmonized with New Testament doctrine?

He affirms, (page 27,) “they [the Saints] have ever delighted in getting hold of a person ill qualified to meet their attacks, and by the weakness of the defense of their opponents their own faith has been confirmed.” Just preceding this statement he says: “They have been met by opponents who, because they knew but little of the system, have made such a poor attack that it has redounded to the upholding of the system.” Again, (page 9,) “That there is an abundance of material scattered through many volumes, much of it well written and useful, we acknowledge, yet we are not aware of the existence of the single volume that contains for the polemic as much valuable matter as is here presented.”

These statements, side by side, reveal, first, a disregard for facts; second, reflections upon the ability and qualifications of all other theologians and authors who have attempted to meet the issues; and third, the characteristic boast, “We are the best, up-to-date.”

That the Saints have held themselves ready to defend the truth, under all circumstances of fairness, can not be denied, but that “they have ever delighted in getting hold of controversialists said to be unqualified, we do deny. Our opponents in oral discussion are required to secure indorsements from their respective churches, and these indorsements usually invest the disputant with authority to represent the respective church indorsing him, and read in part, that “Elder — is amply qualified,” to enter the arena and slay Mormonism. This concession of Mr. Traum is directly opposed to the verdict of his society, in almost every discussion held with the “Campbellites.” Is this “Campbellism against itself”? They have always boasted of having “come out best,” have “stood with their feet upon the prostrate form of Mormonism.” We have denied this boast in the interests of truth, and now Mr. Traum confesses to the failures, and seeks to apologize.

According to this concession, the great Clark Braden, who was recognized as their field champion, their “intellectual giant,” sworn to extirpate the system, “war to the knife, knife to the hilt,” was “ill qualified,” and failed. Alexander Campbell, also, “made such a poor attack,” was not qualified, and by the weakness of his effort, “the faith of the Saints was confirmed”; and under Mr. Campbell’s “fire,” the cause of the Saints prospered. Briney, Bays, Blalock, Neal, and the host, “rank and file,” of the Anti-Mormon League, have gone into the work of slaying the “monstrous fraud,” shorn of their power,—are not qualified. Yet have they been indorsed.

Nothing has been effective in meeting the issue in the past. "Mormonism Against Itself" is the only antidote!

THE BASIS OF OUR FAITH.

On page 34, Mr. Traum says: "Mormonism is that system of religion based upon the claim that the book of Mormon is divine and that Joseph Smith, jr., is a prophet of God." (Italics ours.) We deny this proposition, and hold him responsible for violating his statement previously made on page 26, as follows: "Our plan is to always state a proposition as its friends will defend it, and in the exact language they employ."

The superstructure defended by us, known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which he flippantly characterizes "Mormonism," is based on eternal truth, and the claim of Book of Mormon divinity, the claim of Bible divinity, and the divine mission of the prophets of God, are all witnesses confirming the truth to man.

A GRAVE CHARGE.

On page 28, an exaggerated statement is penned which forcibly impresses one that the writer proposes to prejudice his way and land his booty regardless of method. He says: "They [the Mormons] have fallen out among themselves, and so freely has the lie been passed that there is not left one prominent man among them whose word is universally received." That the Church of Jesus Christ has received, in this age, as also in the apostolic age, men of aspiring dispositions who finally "went out" from among the loyal, we will not deny; but that efforts were made, on the basis of the law of God, to reclaim those affected, we do not deny; but that "the lie" has been "so freely passed, that not one prominent man among them is left whose word is universally received," we do deny. We do not impugn Mr. Traum's motive for giving these very polite (?) statements as a part of his book, for he gradually saves us the trouble. We would remind him that the bitterest among his colleagues and fellow-opposers gives better reports of the Reorganized Church membership than does he. Mr. Traum's bold assertions, intended to impeach the veracity of honest men and women, may be clothed in deceptive words, for, in fact, he makes no distinction in the classes of Mormonism, but the charge is a grave one, and demands retraction.

In "Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism" by D. H. Bays, indorsed by the Saint Louis Christian Publishing Company as "accurate and reliable," Mr. Bays says of the Reorganized Church: "Whose membership I am glad to say are as a rule honest, and law abiding people, and the purity of whose lives no man may truthfully question. I speak of this as the merest matter of justice to the membership of that church."—Pages 73, 74.

Twenty-seven years affiliation with this "membership" should have afforded this man ample opportunity to know.

Of Pres. Joseph Smith, of the Reorganized Church, he says: "From a long personal acquaintance with Pres. Joseph Smith, I take great pleasure in saying I regard him as a most excellent, and sincere Christian gentleman, and worthy of the respect and esteem of all good people."—Page 322.

Of Elder William Marks, Mr. Bays says: "He was a man whose veracity was not to be questioned."—Page 363.

The History of Decatur County, Iowa, says of the Reorganized Church and President Smith: "As a man, his character of honor and integrity stands unquestioned. . . . He has with others labored diligently, has seen the church over which he presides grow from a handful, obscure and unpopular, into a body of persistent workers of many thousands of honest, honorable men, known and loved of their neighbors, and loyal to their country."—Pages 513, 514.

Our membership may be safely compared with the friends of Mr. Traum. We can point to the law given to govern the church on this point with humble, yet we believe, commendable gladness, and ask Mr. Traum to ponder: "Thou shalt not lie, he that lieth and will not repent, shall be cast out."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7.

But we will conclude upon this point by refreshing the memory of our accuser, that if comparison were made, he would suddenly discover that individual unholy acts do not condemn the doctrines of the transgressor, unless they are the legitimate consequences of them.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL TO THE AID OF UTAH PEOPLE.

But he continues in reckless assertion: "There is no crime in the catalogue of misdemeanors with which the 'Saints' have not been charged."—Page 27. This does not say, however, that men are guilty because charged; there is no evidence given to prove the assertion, we can therefore meet it with a simple denial.

But on page 35 he says: "From the religious standpoint we shall attempt to refute its error, and expose its wickedness, leaving to the strong arm of the state the punishment of its crimes."

Very well, the state has spoken; will Mr. Traum accept the verdict? But these unproved allegations come with very poor grace from the pen of one who in debate at Wirt, Indiana, in 1905, "freely passed" the word "lie," when his opponent was clinching an argument by reference to Acts 13: 4. Such grace seems more poverty-stricken, when we read from the Inter-Ocean, September 27, 1891, that Mr. Hull refused to meet one of the "Campbellite" brethren in debate, saying: "He is a libeler and is disreputable in his methods. I will meet any other man the Christian Church will present, for it has many able orators and debaters. No honorable man will meet Braden. I can only meet him in a court of justice with him in the dock, a prisoner, and twelve honest men to decide his case."

Still more inconsistent does Mr. Traum's allegation grow, when we read that the "founder of the sect," Mr. Campbell, was a "slaveholder," (one of the sins in the catalogue the Saints were never accused of,) and when "pressed for his views on the rightfulness of slavery, he answered in the Mil-lennial Harbinger, that inasmuch as slavery existed among the Jews and was not forbidden of God, it could not be sinful for Christians to hold slaves. Thereupon a large number of anti-slavery Disciples left the church, and were stigmatized as "come-outers."—E. V. Smalley, in the Sunday Times-Herald, February 23, 1896, quoted from "Examination of Campbellism."

Again, Mr. Campbell visited Glasgow in 1847, and "while there engaged in an anti-slavery debate. Some expressions which he then used, caused the Rev. James Robertson to prefer a charge of libel against him, and to have him arrested, and imprisoned for ten days."—Dictionary of National Biography, vol. 8, ed. 1886.

I trust Mr. Traum will not think us uncharitable in thus showing his inconsistency. We do not know these reports to be true. If they are, he would inform us that principles should be investigated apart from their advocates, and we would say, Amen!

So we turn to our critic and affirm, that the conduct of either Saints or Campbellites, will not save man, the truths enunciated by either are eternal, and should be held in admiration.

But note one thing reported of Mr. Campbell in the above defense of human bondage: "That inasmuch as slavery existed among the Jews, and was not forbidden by God, it could not be sinful for Christians to hold slaves." This is the same argument used by the Utah Mormons to bolster up the crime of polygamy. How easy Mr. Campbell's argument can help out the doctrine and practice of the Utah people!

Time and space will not permit a review of all the errors, misstatements, and sophistry in Mr. Traum's book, seriatim, but an effort will be made to expose the baseless fabrications which he deems defensible, and sufficiently potent to demolish the foundations of a divine cause and its achievements.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

AN UNGRATEFUL WORLD.

The following reminds us that when some people think they are covering themselves with glory and performing most admirably, others are just perverse enough to take a different view of it:

The women of Washington appear to have bestowed on the apostle Joseph Smith some of the feminine interest customarily exhibited for military heroes, Polar explorers, titled bridegrooms, and murderers. As head and front of the mysterious Mormon Church, Smith is the subject of a natural curiosity. But it is possibly less as "prophet, seer and revelator" than as an exponent of plural matrimony in a monogamous Republic that he attracted feminine notice.

The apostle in a recent formal statement in the columns of The World described himself as "true to five wives who are loving, loyal, contented, and happy mothers." American husbands, as the court records show, from time to time display a similar capacity for domestic affection, but not under sanction of the law or in the name of religion. What makes the Mormon apostle interesting to others besides impressionable women is that he has been the prophet of a creed of promiscuous marriage in a land of Puritan traditions where bigamy is a penitentiary offense.

Among a people that loves to be humbugged, as Barnum said, there has been no greater moral humbug than the creed of sanctimonious concubinage, with "celestial marriages" and "wives sealed to eternity" under divine revelation. What wonder that people should flock to see its apostle? The interest would no doubt have been still keener if he had brought his wives with him.—New York World.

VOCATION VERSUS AVOCATION.

A reverend in New York says he will never ask for money in his pulpit. We are constrained to think that the reverend is not always in his pulpit.

CARNEGIE VERSUS CHRIST.

Andrew Carnegie says the recent agreement between England and the United States sounds the death knell of war. "Now for Germany, France and the Netherlands, with all of whom our country now is negotiating. With these nations won our work is done." Christ said, "Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom."—Matthew 24: 7.

MANIA FOR NEWS.

Mr. J. C. Briggs, Miami, Oklahoma, and Brother Tary, Wheeling, West Virginia, have called our attention to a newspaper report of the trial of Evelyn Arthur See in Chicago. Some Associated Press writer has drawn largely on his imagination to the extent that he depicts great similarity between See's book, Book of Truth, and the Book of Mormon. We have failed to see any evidence offered at this trial which warrants any comparison between See's work and that promulgated by Joseph Smith the Seer. This report says that "at the State's attorney's office" the "statement was made,"—and so it becomes an apparent effort at sensationalism on the part of some underpaid or ambitious but unworthy reporter.

RENO OUTDONE.

The following from an eastern newspaper comes with surprise, as we have always thought Nevada was easily first in the number of divorces granted by the courts. It would be well for Montana's legislature to take up the divorce laws in that State.

Reno is outdone. The Butte Inter-Mountain publishes a table of marriages and divorces in Montana during 1910, which shows how the natives of that State are emulating the colonists of Nevada. The total number of divorces in Montana was 665, and of marriages 3,962. One Montana couple is being divorced to every four married. The divorces granted to husbands last year numbered 201, and to wives 464.

AMERICAN ZIONISTS.

According to reports issued from the fourteenth annual convention of the Federation of American Zionists, there are now one hundred thousand Hebrews in Palestine.

ANOTHER "MORMON" NOVEL.

The recent agitation in England concerning the Mormons has already begun to bring its output of literature inspired by the situation. Miss Winifred Graham has written a novel of which Mormonism is the subject. The press item we have fails to give the name of the book. "It is a biting exposure of the much-discussed methods of the Mormons of England." "Mormonism," we are further told, "is a living force in England to-day, and no better manner could be found of checkmating its disastrous schemes than by bringing this vivid indictment to public notice." This would seem to be the long-awaited novel with a purpose.

CHRISTIAN AWAKENING IN JAPAN.

The Rev. S. S. Partridge, Episcopal bishop of Kansas City, lately returned from Japan, says: "All over Japan there is a Christian awakening. The time is coming when there will be a Japanese diocese with a Japanese bishop. To win Japan for Christ you must show the Japanese that the new religion is a benefit to them individually and nationally. Then they are with you heart and soul."

"AS YE JUDGE."

A Georgia judge admits that he did not call out the militia to protect two negroes because he feared some of the soldiers might be killed in protecting them, and he preferred to sacrifice the negroes. Such exhibitions as this we suppose are reasons why certain people want a recall for judges.

JEWS IN RUSSIA.

Herman Bernstein, the author, has this to say of conditions in Russia regarding the Jews:

All the liberties extended to the Jewish race under the constitution of 1905 have been practically nullified or abridged through inaction, subterfuge, trickery, and the revival of old and forgotten laws. Russia is now building up a second generation of illiterate Jews, a dangerous proceeding. She has her parliament and her constitution, but they accomplish nothing.

"The reformers of 1905 introduced the public school system for all, but now only 5 per cent of the Jewish children are permitted to attend the public schools. Until recently Jewish young men could study outside and take the final examinations of the gymnasiums for entrance to the universities, the passing of which would also entitle them to live outside the pale. Under an old law just raked up the number is limited to 5 or 10 per cent of the Russians taking the final examinations. Thus Russia is barring her Jewish youth from a university education.

"Russia gives passports quite freely to those Jews who patronize Russian steamship lines. The trouble is to get into the interior of Russia. The Russian consulates in America do not vise the passports of Jews. Three years ago the Russian consul in New York vised my passport, because he thought I would write something to please the Russian Government. When I went back the second year he inserted in my application blank: 'What is your religion.'

"I said that, being in America, I was not obliged to answer. 'He said: 'Don't you know that Jews are not allowed to enter Russia?'

"'But you let me through last year,' I replied.

"He then told the vice-consul in Russian that he supposed they would have to vise my passport.

"I had no difficulty in visiting Kokovtsoff, minister of finance; Count Witte, member of the council of the empire, and Ambassador Rockhill. Count Witte said the Government would not be prepared to ameliorate the condition of the Jew for years. The Russian Government will do nothing for the American Jews until the Jewish question is settled in Russia. —New York World.

SPEND IT AT HOME.

Every few days some Indian magician, theosophist, scientist, or other comes into the limelight with statements regarding our American civilization. We suppose it is characteristic of our citizens who do so much, that is, follow out so many lines of human endeavor in thought and enterprise, to fail more or less in some of them. Father Bharita, Hindoo philosopher, who has been in this country for a year, was interviewed the other day and said:

"The $20,000,000 that your churches send every year to the East for missionary purposes is simply money thrown away," declared the Hindoo. "You say that the money is used to convert the heathen. There are no heathens in the East, but my stay in America convinces me that all the heathens are here. All the money you send to us would do so much more good in America.

"Christianity in your land has lost its interpreters. It is not Christianity at all; it is churchanity, and it is not based upon humanity. Your best preachers are not Christians. They are machine-made products of theological seminaries.

"Our Hindoo teachers teach the doctrines of Christ as Christ lived. Your Ten Commandments, as taught by your people, are nothing but child's prattle. You need missionary work right here."

RUSSIAN BAPTISTS.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—We have tried to watch developments as to the movement of the Baptists in Russia. We have thought the following would give HERALD readers a good idea of conditions there, the clipping reproduced being from the New York Evening Mail.

We may well rejoice that we live at the gateway of this continent of opportunity, for here in New York we may lay our hand on the heart-beat of every land in the world.

All men come to us; but Ellis Island would never have brought hither those big-souled peasants, the Russian Baptist missionaries. They are a sort of inspired accident. The Baptist World Alliance wanted them to stir up missionary zeal, and an Englishman had the idea of bringing them over. Now that they have kindled their warming fires in the souls of thousands, the peasant apostles will go home, and stand trial for troubling angel-wise the stagnant pool of Russian orthodox formalism.—Joseph Edgar Chamberlain.

And how handily they came—just at the right moment to illustrate the crass injustice of this Russian passport system! With these ex-orthodox missionaries, quite naturally, there is indeed no question of a denied admission to their mother land. The mother land is only too ready to welcome them—with iron hands to hospitable prison cells.

But the Russian Government's willingness to get these men under its wing again, in order to punish them for their Christian zeal, is the perfect corollary of its eagerness to exclude American citizens of the Jewish faith.

Why? Because orthodoxy is the keystone, the imperial policy of Russification. Weaken it, and the structure falls down. Czarism is the apex of Russian orthodoxy; the great white father is a kind of divine vicegerent; the czar is unarguable without the church, the church shorn and lost without the absolute czar.

Once safely in the Russian Greek Church, you are bound to be a loyal absolutist. The man on his knees before the holy ikon beats his forehead, as he prays, to the holy czar.

On the other hand, once out of the orthodox fold, there is no telling where you will bring up. You may be talking German next, or even English. At the next step you may be a republican.

Yet never were there men more Russian than these Baptist missionaries. Their beautiful, vast simplicity is purely Russian. Their wholeness of spirit is Russian—their indifference to money is charmingly Russian.

Here is the Baptist preacher Pavloff, with a salary as a pastor of $150 a year, paying a weekly fine of forty roubles, or $20, for the sake of preaching, until he is absolutely impoverished, and thinking himself all the while quite fortunate to pay out a good deal more for the privilege of preaching than he gets for the preaching.

Here is Kavalieff, who in 1894 was exiled to Siberia for five years for preaching, who came back free in 1900; preached the day after his arrival, and was instantly packed off to Siberia again for four years more.

The last time, when his prison term was out, Kavalieff turned his exile into a mission, and gathered a church around him in Siberia. But now he is going back to mother Russia. It is Siberia for him, and he knows it; but he will take the chance to get in one good gospel talk in holy orthodox Muscovy!

Here is Stevanoff, who, if he were a literary man, could write his personal recollections of thirty-one different prisons. He may be called a collector of prisons—and all for preaching the gospel.

Let us listen to the stories of these men. They make us, on the whole, rather glad to be alive. They incline us sympa-thetically toward even the orthodox church out of which they have come. It takes a good church to produce a first-class heretic.

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL.

Bro. W. E. LaRue writes to HERALD readers in regard to the work in New York. His letter will be found in another column and is of much interest. He has sent us a folder announcing a daily vacation Bible school to be held from July 10 to August 18.

WHAT CHRISTIANITY HAS DONE.

Some gentlemen tell us very complacently that they have no need of religion, they can get along well enough without it. Let us tell you, my friends, the worst kind of religion is no religion at all. And these men who live in ease and luxury, indulging themselves in the amusement of going without religion, may be thankful that they live in lands where the gospel they neglected has tamed the beastliness and ferocity of the men who, but for Christianity, might long ago have eaten their bodies like the South Sea Islanders, or cut off their heads like the monsters of the French Revolution.

When the microscopic search of skepticism, which has hunted the heavens and sounded the seas to disprove the existence of a Creator, has turned its attention to human society, and has found a place on this planet ten miles square where a decent man can live in decency, comfort and security, supporting and educating his children unspoiled and unpolluted; a place where age is revered, infancy respected, womanhood honored, and human life held in due regard—when the skeptic can find such a place on this globe where the gospel of Christ has not gone and cleared the way, and laid the foundations and made decency and security possible, it will then be in order for the skeptical literati to move thither, and there ventilate their views.

But so long as these men are dependent upon religion which they discard for every privilege they enjoy, they may well hesitate a little before they seek to rob the Christian of his hope and humanity of its faith in that Savior who alone has given to man that hope of eternal life which make life tolerable and society possible, and robs death of its terrors and the grave of its gloom.—James Russell Lowell.

There is no question but that hundreds of young men in the cities are wasting their energies by belonging to too many things. I know of several young men who belong to half a dozen lodges and athletic associations, who belong to whist clubs and golf clubs, and musical associations, and their time, strength, and money are spent upon these organizations so that there is not much room for anything else in their lives. There ought to be room in the young man's life for all that is necessary to keep up his physical energy and minister to his intellectual and social needs, and at the same time leave the church the largest place of all in his affection.—Sheldon.

If thou neglectest thy love to thy neighbor, in vain thou professest thy love to God; for by thy love to God the love to thy neighbor is begotten, and by thy love to thy neighbor thy love to God is nourished.—Quarles.

An Address by F. J. Ebeling.

Dear sisters and workers in this great institution, it is with the greatest of pleasure that I stand before you to-night pleading the cause of the Daughters of Zion, not because I feel able to do the subject justice, but because of the eminent importance that is attached to it.

The object of the Daughters of Zion has been ably stated by the speaker preceding me, also the importance and the advisability of such organization as you contemplate, namely, the district organization, which I believe is an important step toward the advancement of this great and noble work.

There never has been a time when there was more need for just such an organization as the Daughters of Zion, as at the present time. The world is crying out in agonizing tones for the mother's help. There never was a time when it was more needful that mothers should instill the pure influences of home into the hearts of the rising generation than at the present.

There must be organized efforts to arrest the fearful destruction of our boys and girls, and the home is the best place to begin; but a home without the intelligent influences of an educated mother along the lines laid down by the Daughters of Zion is not a home, but simply a place where too often the brute instinct holds sway.

Whatever our prejudices may be relative to hereditaments, they must be reckoned with as an important factor in the emancipation of the race. Nations may legislate upon corrective measures, but it has never reached the seat of the trouble. The cause of the blighting evils must be attacked and removed; which can only be by instilling into the heart of the youth those moral qualities which will unconsciously crop out into action. The great Example said, "It is written that man should not commit adultery, but I say unto you, Whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her committeth adultery already in his heart." The object of moral training is to do away with the necessity of applying the cold law, and to establish a principle of virtue in the heart. To this great work have the Daughters of Zion been dedicated.

There is so much in the world to-day that has a tendency to draw the minds of the young away from the true and noble paths that lead to the higher life. They need no organization to lead them on the downward course of life. They instinctively drift in that path, and with all the numerous organizations for the moral uplift, the inborn tendency downward seems to be in the ascendancy. In view of the many startling revelations of crime and corruption, the cry for such an organization becomes all the louder.

When we consider that this society has for its main object, truer parenthood, better children, happier homes, and purer society, every lover of moral principles should lend all the good there is in them to further the object.

The unyielding law of logic will admit of no other conclusion than better daughters make better wives, better wives, better mothers; better mothers, better children; better children, better sons and daughters; and round and round until a better world is secured; and to this ponderous task is this organization dedicated.

I once heard an argument by two individuals. One declared that all this sin and crime was brought about by the evil work of one woman, and the other very aptly replied, "Yes, and the redemption from all this evil was brought about by the works of one woman," and in the statement quoted: "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." To show the strength of those whom we call the weaker sex, I might add, that it took the prowess of his satanic majesty to accomplish it, but when she brought about the recovery from this fall, she had all the opposing forces to combat, even shunned at first by Joseph, her husband. Does this not beautifully exemplify the strength of the gentler sex? And with such character behind an organization destined to recover the race from Eden's tragedy, it can not fall short of its aim.

When we take into consideration the wonderful aim and opportunity of the great work called for in the Daughters of Zion, it can not but cause everyone to arise to a full realization of what good can be accomplished through this organization; therefore, we, as ministers and members of the true church, should have a common interest with them in this laudable undertaking.

I feel sure could the fair daughters fully realize the wonderful influence they have over the sons of men, they would exert it to a further advantage. The course, rough natures of men can be smoothed and sweetened by that subtle influence. Kind, lovable persuasion of a woman will do what an army will fail to do. What is it? Subdue the rebellion in man. The femininity of a woman, when properly used, is more powerful than the strength of man. Esther, with her moral suasion, in pleading for her people against the exterminating orders of King Ahasuerus was more powerful than the laws of the Medes and Persians, which were supposed to be irrevocable.

Any man with a spark of virtue in his soul will have respect for the honest pleadings from the one who gave her all for his happiness. The man who has not this respect has none for himself. Just what Queen Esther did with King Ahasuerus, every queen of a home may do in some lesser matters.

The last few moments remaining, I want to tell you that I attribute my standing in the church largely to the work of the Daughters of Zion.

In my native city there was a local to which my mother and sisters belonged; they would often meet in prayer meeting, and hold me up to the throne of grace, that I might be reclaimed. God heard the mother's prayer, and in one of the meetings the voice of prophecy came saying, "Thy son will obey the gospel and preach it to the world." This seemed almost too good to be true, which then seemed the one thing most unlikely. But to-day that prophecy has been fulfilled, and I stand before you as a witness to plead with the mothers in Israel that if they have a son or daughter in need of prayer, present them as my mother did. We, as ministers, should uphold the Daughters of Zion and look upon them as a mighty factor in the moral uplift of the brighter day.

May God's blessing attend, that you may accomplish all that you have marked out before you.

BAYARD, NEBRASKA.

Dear Saints: As your servant, I beg of you to note patiently the following: Having been appointed bishop's agent for Northwestern Nebraska and the Black Hills, it comes to me with the thought that we must all work if we expect to win in the cause of Christ. As your financial agent, I will be unable to supply those dependent upon us unless you place means in my hands to do so. Realizing the financial stress that is resting on this particular section of the country, it will be much more necessary that each one do his best to support the cause in the way of dollars and cents. If each one will make a prayerful effort, we shall surely be able to support those who are dependent upon us. Let it not matter if the tithes or offerings are small, for they will help. Remember the widow's mite.

Dear Saints, let us teach our children by "precept and example" the law of tithing and the principle of giving for the Lord's cause. "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth." Trusting I may be able to receipt everyone in the district, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

BERT E. HART.

MARLIN, TEXAS, June 26, 1911.

Editors Herald: I am still trying to keep busy, but I was compelled to let last week go by without having nightly meetings. Farmers were too busy with crops to attend. Had good attendance Saturday and Sunday, but we need a revival of interest in places. In fact, in all places there is room for improvement. We need more of the salt of the earth, and the light of the world in the lives of men in order to make our work most effectual. The minister is hampered and hindered in preaching the angel's message where and when the lives of the Saints do not reflect the light of the message we bring. Too many are letting the light shine from cigarettes or pipes, instead of spiritual light.

Hopefully,

R. M. MALONEY.

ELK MILLS, INDIANA, June 26, 1911.

Editors Herald: Having been appointed to labor in New York and Philadelphia District, I would like to ask if there are any isolated Saints who would like to have an elder visit them and tell the gospel story in their neighborhood. If they will write me, I shall be glad to do what I can. We are admonished to push out into new places and we wish to do it. We need the help and assistance of all.

I am at present holding grove meetings some six miles from this place, and the prospects are not very bright, but we are still hopeful.

Yours in hope of final success,

WM. ANDERSON.

MCARTHUR, OHIO.

Tent meetings are the order of the times at present with Bro. and Sr. N. L. Booker and myself. We are meeting with reasonable success holding forth in the edge of a grove about two miles west of the town. The settlement is pretty well preached out owing to the fact that the Holiness' and some other faction as well as ourselves are within a short distance of each other; however, we have outlasted the others, and last night we had the full of the tent though it was quite showery.

I assure you it gives a person courage when in the face of all the different kinds of opposition that arise, we have an open question box into which they are invited to drop their most difficult and perplexing scriptural brain twisters; and then whichever of us chances to be occupying the stand solves their problems; not wishing to boast of our great ability, but we have never met any of them sufficiently difficult but what we could easily untangle them, and that to the entire satisfaction of those present.

A person's heart surely goes out in sympathy for the poor souls who come from the other churches to listen to those "poor deluded Mormons," as they sometimes call us. They feel as though they can afford to pity us because they are in the majority, while we, poor creatures, are almost an unknown quantity among them; however, when the meeting has started and the preacher has warmed up to his subject and has begun to tell them a few facts about the "shelter" they call their church, and he makes a comparison of it and the kingdom of God which has been set up in this dispensation, it is then too pitiable to be amusing to watch the air of self-security which they at first had on, wear off as they listen to what the kingdom was when Christ set it up in former times, and how it has again been set up and is now in the midst of them. Then comes that look of bewilderment in which you can read the expression of their heart which says, "Can it be possible that our minister, in whom we have been trusting the care of our souls, has been himself in the dark, and as a blind guide been leading us into the ditch?"

There truly is no other part of the mission work that in my mind equals the preaching of the gospel to congregations to whom it is coming for its first time. There is accompanying the labors of the missionary a satisfaction of soul, apparently unequaled by any other phase of the work. True it is, there are hardships to meet, but with them comes the satisfaction and joy of soul that far outweighs any of those trifles that a missionary has to meet nowadays.

In my judgment where tent work is carried on there should be the wife of at least one of the missionaries (if either of them is lucky enough to have one) accompanying the tent. My reasons for so concluding are, that where men alone run it the women in the neighborhood do not as a general thing care to attend the first few nights, until their husbands have first been there and reported that it is a suitable place for the women; then, if the husband be prejudiced, he often is the means of hindering his wife by either refusing her the privilege or so denouncing the work that she does not attend at all; but should a woman attend with the tent, then the women of the vicinity will generally be the first to go to the meeting, because they see that it is a fit place for their sex, and should they be prejudiced they do not as a general thing so control their husbands, that they can hinder him finding out for himself what the newcomers are like. Then there is the visiting. A missionary accompanied by his wife will be invited out to visit among the neighbors, even when the husband of the home may be at his work, and the women when they have finished their afternoon work will find a little time to run over to the tent to call upon the gospel workers, and thus much good is done by the presence of the sister in the tent work, in a missionary sense, and besides all this she can always give to the preparation of the meals a touch of palatability that apparently no masculine cook can accomplish.

The hope and anxiety of mind that prevailed upon the part of the Saints at the late General Conference to come to a unity and be at peace one with another, seems to have been a forerunner of the conditions that would prevail throughout the current year. Prospects for a good year are apparent on every hand, and from all parts of this mission comes the encouraging news that everything is doing finely.

There is one thing very encouraging, as I travel in these northern districts, that is, that the greater part of the Saints are making an effort to comply with the whole law, and while they have as a collective body been somewhat dilatory in the past in paying their tithes and offerings unto the bishopric, I find that under the careful teachings of our hustling young bishop—J. A. Becker, the finances are rapidly looking up, and it will at the present rate of increase be but a short time until the great majority of the Saints in his jurisdiction will be enrolled as tithe payers, who have done as the law requires.

The reunion committee, having decided that Kirtland would be a suitable location for their gathering, are sparing no labor or means to accommodate all that may congregate at that most historic of all places.

For particulars relative to what it will cost you, to come at the beginning, August 17, and remain until the conclusion, August 27, you may add your other expenses to your tent or furnished room which are: For tent, $2.50, cot 50 cents, and board 55 cents per day, while the furnished room is but $3. Thus it is noticable that it costs less than 83 cents per day to enjoy that which at our reunion at New Philadelphia in 1910, the Lord, speaking to us, said was pleasing unto him, as it was a preparation for the great reunion in the millennium.

I am in correspondence with several railway and boat lines relative to reduced rates for those attending. These I will publish in both HERALD and Ensign as soon as obtained.

Many of the Saints from a distance, both in Canada and the United States, are intimating their intentions of coming, and so that there will be no disappointment in your getting a furnished room or tent with cots, you had better at your earliest convenience correspond with Bishop Becker, R. F. D. No. 2, Willoughby, Ohio, who is in charge of that department, and he will at once attend to your requirements.

For general information relative to the reunion, address your correspondence to Elder C. Ed. Miller, R. F. D. No. 2, Willoughby, Ohio; he being in charge of the hotel at Kirtland. The Temple attendant is doing all in his power to have everything in readiness to make this one of the most successful of all reunions with which he has had anything to do. Elder F. J. Ebeling, of the same address as the above, is in charge of the commissary department, and that fact is sufficient to insure entire satisfaction to all visitors.

The other members of the committee are: N. L. Booker, Creola, Ohio; James McConnoughy, R. F. D., Willoughby, Ohio; Samuel Brown, Stevenson, Ontario; R. L. Shinn, Clarksburg, Virginia, and R. C. Russell, 135 Selkirk street, Chatham, Ontario.

We expect at least two of the First Presidency, and the Presiding Bishop to be in attendance, besides several others of the leading men of the church.

Let every person who can possibly come make a special effort to be in attendance from the beginning until the close, and do all that lies in his power to make this one of the most enjoyable spiritual feasts that has been had in the church. I see no reason why this may not be the grandest reunion you ever attended.

In gospel bonds, I am,

Your brother,
R. C. RUSSELL.

SHENANDOAH, IOWA, July 2, 1911.

Editors Herald: I had the pleasure and pain of attending the last General Conference at Lamoni. I say pain, because of the following unfortunate circumstances which attended my visit there, and which robbed me of a large amount of the excellent satisfaction intended to accrue from my presence at and opportunity of the sessions.

While on the train between Van Wert and Lamoni, on the first day of April, I received an injury which was not due to any carelessness on my part. A package fell from the rack above where I was sitting, composed of literature, and estimated to weigh ten pounds or more, and landed on my head. The accident was due to the carelessness of trainmen, whose duty it is to see that passengers are secure and immune from such accidents. Lately, since I have been on trail of the company in reference to the matter, they have published an order requiring their train crews to attend to the prevention of packages dangerously weighty from being put in the rack.

I have lost both comfort and work on account of said injury and I want redress. I am on a fair way to get it with witness. However deserving, I can not get it without proper testimony. Some Saints were present I know, but I do not know their names and addresses. If this letter comes to their knowledge, will they please send me a statement with their name and address, from which duty they will not shrink if they are honorable men and women.

Editors Saints' Herald: In attending meeting at Stewartsville yesterday, my attention was called to the fact that I omitted the ordination of T. A. Ivie in the minutes of the Far West district conference. Will you kindly publish the item as follows: Thomas A. From Greater New York.

Since arriving in my field of labor I have been busy in getting located, furnishing my house, etc. On our arrival we were met at the station by Bro. B. R. McGuire, president of the branch at this place, and Bro. John Potts. Brother McGuire entertained us at his home for about a week, until we were able to secure quarters for ourselves, and we are now comfortably situated at 1831 Park Place, just across the street from the church.

The branch of the church at this place numbers one hundred and eighty members, and they worship in a new brick church which will seat about three hundred.

We have been well received here by the Saints and friends; a reception had been planned for us in the form of a surprise; we were invited to the home of Captain George Potts for dinner, and they managed to bring us back to the church about 8.30 p. m. We were surprised to see the church lighted up, as it was not a regular meeting night, and as we were bidden to enter, we found it well filled with people. We were escorted to the platform and then began a program of hymns, prayers, and speeches. Brother McGuire made a very appropriate speech of welcome, to which I responded. This was followed by a duet nicely rendered by Sr. Fannie McGuire and Sr. Mabel Harris. Elder George Baty was then introduced, and he succeeded in pleasing the people well and was applauded several times; he was very optimistic in his outlook for the future for our work in this city. Sister Whitnall was then introduced, and as it seemed enough had been said regarding the welcome which they would extend to me, Sister Whitnall said she wanted to voice the sentiment of the sisters of the branch, who desired to extend welcome to my wife. This met with a hearty applause, and after Sister Whitnall finished, Sister LaRue responded with a short but very appropriate speech. The platform was profusely decorated with flowers, and over a large flag, the stars and stripes, was a banner with the words: "Welcome, Bro. LaRue." Indeed, we hope to prove worthy of this hearty welcome, and the generous brotherly spirit which has been bestowed upon us, and we feel the best way to do this is to get busy and produce some results.

Before my coming there had been some talk of holding a summer school, and it was thought advisable that I should go to Philadelphia and get a few pointers from Bro. Walter W. Smith, who has made such a great success of that work there. Accordingly, in company with Brother McGuire, we made a trip to Philadelphia and had a very pleasing interview with Brother Smith, and as a result we now plan to open our school on July 10. The headquarters of the National Daily Bible School Association is at 21 Bible House, New York City. It has been my pleasure to meet some of the general officers, who have treated me with due consideration and otherwise encouraged me in this line of work; it remains to be seen what results will follow. It was a pleasure indeed to meet some of the Saints and friends in Philadelphia, with whom I labored as their pastor for three years. Bro. Edwin Lewis and Sr. Jennie Angus had just been united in marriage, and the crowd was just leaving the church as we arrived, but we got to see several familiar faces.

As a member of the Social Purity Committee, of the General Religio Society, I have been looking up other people who are interested in this line of work, and by request of the officers of our committee, I have become acquainted with some of the officers of the American Society of Sanitary and Moral Prophylaxis, Room 303, 33 West Forty-second street, New York City. It certainly does good for us to mingle with this class of the world's people, as they are pleased to know that we are interested in such work, and in nearly every case the question as to our church, its belief and work, comes up for friendly inquiry. The literature published by this society should be read by every boy in the land, and it is the business of this committee to see that our boys receive it.

Children's day was celebrated here on June 19, one pleasing feature being the baptism of three by Bro. Ephraim Squire. Bro. F. M. Sheehy was passing through the city just as I arrived here, and our church secretary, Bro. R. S. Salyards, made a flying trip through the city, stopping over one night.

The quarterly business meeting of the branch was held recently, and it took three hours to transact the large volume of business which had accumulated, and it was done in a very businesslike and proper form. Brother McGuire is a lawyer by profession, and naturally puts some of his legal knowledge into branch business methods, and it works well. The branch seemed to think that it was best that I should act as the presiding officer, and consequently I was duly elected. I was loath to see Brother McGuire relieved of this work, but as he is so unselfish and so willing and untiring in his efforts, the result will be just the same, regardless of whether he or I should preside. His work has been very highly appreciated here, and as a man he is highly respected. My associate officers are Bro. Earl F. Audet presiding priest, residing at 550 West Forty-second street, New York City; Bro. Frank N. Lester, presiding teacher, 1268 Prospect Place; George Potts, sr., presiding deacon, 888 New York avenue.

This is truly a wonderful city, no city in the world is more talked about, and I would not attempt its description. The tunnels and subways have well solved the problem of fast transportation. For instance: you may be at Park Row in New York City, and suddenly take a notion that you would like to be at Borough Hall, Brooklyn; you take the subway and dart with the swiftness of an express train under the East River and behold! you are there in less than ten minutes. It has been most impossible to realize you have passed under the great and towering buildings on Nassau and Wall streets, and the great East River, full of ocean crafts of all description. A few evenings ago I had occasion to go to the upper regions of the city, to visit the sick, and taking the subway express, we rode under ground for more than three quarters of an hour, and at the station where we left the train we came by elevator 184 feet to the surface of the earth. In this great city of nearly five millions of people, we can but long for the permanent establishment of our work. Men such as Elder George Potts, and Elder Joseph Squire, have labored long and well, together with others, and we hope the future will bring continued fruitage for our labors.

Since my notice appeared in the HERALD, requesting those who may have relatives or friends in this city to inform me of their addresses, so I can call upon them if agreeable, I have had several such addresses furnished me. Our summer school will demand my close attention for the next eight weeks, but after that we will be pleased to give our best attention to any, where my influence and assistance would be of benefit, and if I can not go myself, we have several brethren here who will willingly help.

In gospel work,

WILLIAM E. LARUE.

News From Missions

Northwestern Iowa.

As one of God's servants, I am trying to advance his work in this city of about sixty thousand inhabitants. I have lived in this city for the past seven years, laboring as a local official. This spring I felt impressed to attend General Conference, where I renewed old acquaintances of college days. I enjoyed myself and was the recipient of much good, and at the close of conference was appointed as one of the missionaries to the Little Sioux District. A few weeks later I was instructed to make Sioux City objective point, where we are at present and have plenty to do.

The branch here numbers about 156. They have a nice commodious church building, 44 by 48 feet, with upper and lower auditoriums to worship in. Elder J. M. Baker, of Omaha, and Elder Paul M. Hanson, now of Southern California, did a noble work in helping the Saints to secure and pay for the nice building that they now have.

I suppose the work in this city is about like the work in any other large city. We have lots to contend with. Wickedness upon every hand, a great feeling of indifference. The people as a rule are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God.

The Utah elders are here and have been for some time past, trying by their cunningness to plant their work here, even going so far as to visit some of our members, but so far as I have been able to learn have only strengthened the faith of our people. Two of them called on the writer the other day and we talked for some time in a friendly way. They wanted to come back and discuss some of the vital questions between us. I told them I was ready to discuss questions with them, but it would do no good to discuss them in a private way. I suggested to them that we advertise the meetings and go before the public, where our discussion would do some good. Of course they were too busy to do that, and so it is. I am glad I can represent a work that will bear investigation from beginning to end. I am young in the work and have much to learn, but I am willing to defend this work and take my chances on coming off victorious in the end.

The work all through this district is making rapid strides, due, I believe, to the efforts of a noble and energetic band of local workers. We had a fine district conference at this place June 3 and 4. Elder Sidney Pitt, sr., of Persia, Iowa, who has served this district so long and faithfully was sustained as president for another year. Sioux City is in the extreme northwestern part of the district, and the nearest branch is about sixty miles away, but we had a well attended conference and all enjoyed the peaceful and quiet influence of the Holy Spirit.

There are isolated Saints scattered all through this part of the State that live too far away to attend regular services. They are still in the faith, but are hungering for some one to come and break the bread of life to them. The truthfulness of the statement, "The harvest is ready, but the laborers are few," comes to our mind. We are hoping and praying that the Lord will raise up more to carry on his work faster and faster, as the end approaches. I gave up a fine position at a time when I did not have a dollar to call my own, and nothing but a rented home for my family, to devote my entire time, life, and talent, (however little that may be) to this glorious work; and why not? I am young and have the best part of my life before me. Why not spend it in the service of the Lord? I am not sorry for the step I have taken, and if the Lord can use me I am glad of it. In the language of our good brother, R. M. Maloney, of Texas, I want to make good as a servant of Christ and minister of the gospel restored, in every way I can.

J. L. PARKER.

SIoux CITY, IOWA, 721 Otoe street.

Kentucky and Tennessee.

The work in this district is progressing very well considering the small force of active workers. Since November last, with the exception of one week in March, when Brother Slover was with us, the writer was the only missionary in the district. Brother Dubose arrived the first of May. We are better supplied now, as we have three men assigned to this district. Two of them, however, Brethren Dubose and Moser are inexperienced missionaries. Brother Dubose preached his first sermon after arriving in this field. Bro. Fred Moser is a young man, and this is his first experience. They both manifest a disposition of willingness and earnestness, so we are hopeful of good results.

Brother Moler, sub-minister in charge of this and Southern Indiana districts, arrived in time to attend our district conference which convened June 3 at Oakland Branch. This was one of the best conferences we have ever had in this district. A spirit of unity seemed to exist among the Saints, and also a feeling of brotherly love. There was not a discordant note or a jar during the sessions. Another noticeable feature was the increase in attendance and interest on the part of the Saints, which is encouraging.

For the last two weeks the missionary force have been laboring in and around Paris, Tennessee, with good interest in most places. Three were baptized by the writer near Whitlock,—father, mother, and son. Brethren Moler and Dubose are engaged in a meeting three miles east of Paris this week. Large crowds are reported and good interest. Brother Moser and I came to this place Thursday and began meetings near Wildersville the same night. The interest seems to be increasing, so we will probably continue over Sunday. From here we expect to visit the Liberty Hill Branch, seven miles south of Lexington, Tennessee. We expect to labor in these parts till time to go to the reunion, which begins the 15th near Lynnville, Kentucky. After the reunion we will start the district tent. We expect to reach some new places with the tent this year. Bro. W. S. Shupe's family will travel with the tent and furnish music. They will have a folding organ and violin, two cornets and a trombone. We expect to visit Lynnville, Mayfield, and Johnsons Wells in Kentucky, and possibly Fulton, Kentucky, and Union City, Tennessee. There are a number of other places wanting the tent, but we shall be able to reach them all before cold weather overtakes us. We shall try to make this the banner year with tent work, for it seems that we can get the gospel before the people better in this way than any other.

I wish to say to the Saints of the Kentucky and Tennessee District that you should remember that at our last conference a motion to sustain the bishop's agent prevailed. So don't forget the importance of sending in your tithes and offerings. The Saints did well last year. Our district was self-sustaining for the first time; so we are not complaining, but this is a reminder. We have more demands on us this time, so let us each one do his part. Those who have not been in the habit of paying should begin at once. Don't wait till the agent comes to you, but send it to the undersigned at Fulton, Kentucky, and we will receipt you for the same.

We have been blessed with good rains all over the district, and so far as I can observe, prospects are flattering for a good crop, especially corn. May God's blessings attend his covenant people is the prayer of

Your brother and co-laborer,

J. R. McLAIN.

News From Branches.

Fall River, Massachusetts.

Just an echo from the "Looms Up" city. We have returned to our church building, which was recently damaged by fire. On Sunday, June 11, the dedicatory services were held. The following is a composite letter taken from the several newspapers:

"The dedicatory services were opened in the morning by an organ voluntary, played by Mrs. A. H. Fielding. This was followed by the hymn, 'How firm a foundation,' rendered by the choir and congregation. After the scripture reading by the pastor, invocation was given by Bishop M. C. Fisher. The choir then sang the anthem, 'All hail the power of Jesus' name.'

"The pastor then told the history of the branch. It was organized December 3, 1865. Elder James W. Gillen was selected to preside, with Elder Thomas Gilbert as secretary. The original membership was eight, which in eleven years swelled to one hundred and eleven. In that year, 1876, a chapel was built and dedicated, Elder John Smith, now of Lamoni, Iowa, preaching the dedicatory sermon. The pastor then gave the names of the elders and priests who had presided over the branch since its organization, and the names of its present officers. Following an anthem, the dedicatory sermon was delivered by Apostle U. W. Greene. He spoke of the good that the church can do and the principle for which it stands.

"Thomas Fielding rendered a vocal solo, 'Redemption.' Charles Cockroft, deacon, presented the keys and deeds of the edifice to Bishop Fisher, who spoke briefly in reply. Elder C. H. Rich gave the dedicatory prayer, which was followed by the doxology and benediction.

"In the afternoon, Bishop M. C. Fisher addressed the Saints. He took his text from Paul's letter to the Romans. He hoped that all the members would strive to help in every way and lead a life that would be one of righteousness.

"The evening sermon was preached by Elder Calvin H. Rich. 'Seek ye the old path, wherein lies the way to righteousness,' was his text. He traced the history of religion and the primitive beliefs up to the present day. He showed whereby the church could be made more effective and exhorted all to be more studious along religious lines. The service was largely attended, an invitation having been extended the parishioners of the Bogle street Christian Church, a large number of whom were present.

"The church is now completely repaired and is in better condition than ever. A handsome and powerful toned organ has been placed in the edifice. The structure is free from debt."

On Sunday, the twenty-fifth, the Sunday school observed children's day. Special services were held and the attendance was large. Brother Pilling delivered a sermon in the morning that pleased the children. He illustrated his remarks by means of children's toys and flowers. In the evening, the children entertained their fathers and mothers with their recitations and songs. The superintendent, George Baldwin, delivered a short address. He was ably assisted in his duties by the assistant superintendent, George Millivard.

Our city has just celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of its cotton industry. Among the notables who visited us, were President Taft and Governor Foss. Glen Curtiss also entertained us with his aeroplane.

We have lost the companionship of one of our most popular young men, John F. Sheehy, who was recently appointed by the General Conference to labor for the Master in the wilds of Nova Scotia. The parting filled us with sorrow, but our hearts rejoice in the thought that another life is consecrated to the service of the Lord.

When another month has rolled along, the majority of the Saints will be enjoying camp life at their new reunion grounds. Oh, the glorious days of reunion; how refreshing they are after a year's association with the world. They furnish wholesome amusement for our young people, give rest and strength to our parents, and keep all more closely united and instructed in the church and gospel of our Lord Jesus.

May the day hasten when the Lord shall return in glory to meet the pure in heart, to rescue the seed of Judah from its enemies, and begin his reign of a thousand years. In the meantime, let us do what little we can toward the consummation of God's will.

With malice toward none, but with love for all, I remain,

Your brother,

ALMA M. COOMBS.

Sunday, July 2. Weather intensely hot. Although we were favored with drenching rains the last Saturday and Sunday in June, we would welcome another shower. Our sympathy is surely with those who have been without rain for weeks, and where the crops are perishing due to the dry, hot weather.

Sacrament service in charge of Elder E. J. Lang and Elder P. Pement. Not as large attendance as the membership should warrant, and shorter service than usual.

Sermon in evening by Brother Sherman, giving instruction in obeying the commands of the Lord, and not trying to follow out some ideas of our own or other people. How often is our conduct quite different than the Master would act under the same conditions and circumstances, judging from the counsel given.

Our Sunday school picnic quite a success, about one hundred in attendance, a number from the West Side school, and some visitors. We are always glad to attend the picnics, as we see so many of our members there who are not frequently seen at the church services.

Prayer meeting Wednesday evening in charge of Brn. J. J. Oliver and C. E. Cotton. Smaller attendance than usual, possibly due to the picnic and the hot weather. We often wish our older people would become as enthused over attending the prayer meeting as a picnic, as there is usually quite a difference in the number present.

We wish to mention a word regarding the church papers, and wonder how some of the Saints can exist without reading them, as they all contain such good food, and so many events of the times are mentioned. How much better instruction our boys and girls could receive if they spent more time reading the Autumn Leaves, than so many works of fiction.

"No one finds more pleasure for himself than he who knows how, without ostentation, to give himself that he may procure for those around him a moment of forgetfulness and happiness."

"The art of being happy is the art of discovering the happiness that life lies in the daily common things."

Pastoral.

To the Saints and Friends of the Great Latter Day Work; Greeting: Having been appointed assistant minister in charge of the southern portion of the Southeastern Mission, which includes a large territory in the Southeastern States, in behalf of the missionaries, I take this means of asking all who love the great work of God and desire to see it spread in every locality, to render unto them all the assistance they can in their efforts to reach as many people as possible with the great gospel of peace which has been sent to earth in this latter day to prepare a people to meet the Lord when he comes in glory. Surely there is nothing upon this earth that is so grand and so wonderfully great, as to be worthy to be workers and laborers together with God for the last time in preparing ourselves and helping to prepare others to abide in that glorious day when he shall be like refiner's fire and will purify his people and purge them as gold and silver. Oh, how happy we will be in that glorious day if we have on the fine linen, clean and white, which is the righteousness of Saints.

Dear Saints, I hope and pray there will not be one of you that will refuse to be a coworker with us in such a noble work that has for its object your eternal salvation, as well as the salvation of your fellow-men. I feel constrained by the Spirit to urge you to be faithful, humble, and diligent, and to do your part well, and remember that the eye of God is upon us and to him we must answer.

During the three years of my ministry in the sunny South, I have been made to feel that a more kind-hearted people does not live upon the earth. You have made me feel happy and contented while in your midst, and I trust that the good Spirit which has been with us will continue to bless and cheer us on in the path of duty.

Any of the Saints and friends who desire, can write me at McKenzie, Alabama, which will be my mission address during the year. I will be pleased to hear from any who live in new places who can secure a place to preach, as we want to open up as many new places as we can. I have great confidence in the final triumph of this great work.

My home address is 908 South Chrysler street, Independence, Missouri.

I remain, your kind brother and coworker in Christ,
F. M. SLOVER.

To the Saints and Friends of the Western Nebraska and Black Hills District: Having been appointed Bishop's agent for this district, I take up work with cheerful confidence in the brethren, that they will all work for the cause. It will take means to supply the families of those who are laboring here in the mission under appointment. Dear Saints, let us prayerfully study the law of God in regard to tithes and offerings. Let us teach our children to honor the Lord's cause by giving for its support. If all will put their shoulders to the wheel, the burden will not be heavy and our missionary force could at least be doubled another year. Shall we sleep while others work, or will we step out, each one taking it on him or herself to see that the cause does not suffer from lack?

It is hoped that we may labor together for the Master. Realizing the financial stress that is resting on this section of the country at this time, it will be much more necessary for each one to do his or her part. Let it matter not if the tithes and offerings are small, they will help. Let us lay up treasures in heaven.

Your brother,
BAYARD, NEBRASKA. BERT E. HART.

Died.

ALTMAN.—Sister Catherine Altman was born August 28, 1843, and was married to Samuel Altman May 23, 1860. To this union were born nine children, six boys and three girls, all of whom are living, except one girl. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church October 5, 1907, by L. R. Devore, and died June 24, 1911, at 4.30 a. m. She was a faithful member until death. She leaves a host of relatives and friends, besides husband and eight children to mourn their loss. Interment in Rockwell Cemetery. Preaching by J. W. Metcalf, in charge of Samuel Henry.

MCQUEARY.—Esca Earl, only son of Sr. Nellie McQueary, and grandson of Elder James and Sr. Frances M. Kemp, at the Saint Joseph Hospital, Denver, Colorado, of mastoid abscess, June 8, 1911. After an illness of a little over a week. Never complaining, we did not realize that he was so near the end. He was born May 25, 1898, being 13 years and 2 weeks old. He was a manly little fellow, a great help to his widowed mother, whose earthly hope and future help was centered in him. While lying in the hospital, his mamma told him he must trust in God, for he could help him. "I do trust him, mamma; God is a good man; I wish he would come down here so that I could see him," he answered. He was baptized by his grandfather, Elder James Kemp, June 13, 1907. He leaves mother, one sister, grandparents, and many aunts and uncles, besides a host of friends. He was interred in the home cemetery, June 11, 1911. Sermon by Bishop Charles E. Everett, Conifer, Colorado.

"Everything we endure patiently is a key to something beautiful we could never enter otherwise. By the toilsome road of study a scholar learns to get joy out of books and stones and trees. By the hard road of discipline a man learns to get joy out of everyday living."

A little thought will show you how vastly your own happiness depends on the way other people bear themselves toward you. Turn the idea around, and remember that just so much are you adding to the pleasure or the misery of other people's days.—George S. Merriam.

STARVATION

In a land of plenty is the actual condition of things at the present time and why? The trusts? High prices? Oh, no. It is your own fault. If I can live on five cents per day and work 14 to 16 hours, why can't you live on ten cents and work 7 and 8 hours. You will say at once this can not be. Well, just stop a moment and consider the following: One pound

Editorial

AN ATTEMPTED REVIVAL OF AN OLD LIGHT.

HOW LONG WILL IT BURN?

In The Evening and Morning Star for June, 1911, we are favored with the information that the publishers of that journal are purposing to publish a reprint of The Evening and the Morning Star, published at Independence, beginning in 1832 and continuing for fourteen numbers, at which time, in 1833, the mob destroyed the press, tarred and feathered Bishop Partridge and Elder Allen, and drove the Saints from Jackson County. We would like to treat this movement on the part of The Evening and Morning Star, now being published at Independence, seriously and in good faith. Perhaps we could do this if it were not for what we present below, taken from this issue.

Under the guise of furnishing very important literary and historical matter they are approaching those who may have any curiosity about that early periodical, The Evening and the Morning Star of 1832; but it would appear that this is but the sweetness spread to attract the attention of the people, and will really be followed by placing into the hands of the subscribers for the reprint the continued philosophies of the publishing committee of this so-called Church of Christ.

The heading of this June number for 1911 states that The Evening and Morning Star is published in the interests of the Church of Christ, at Independence, Missouri, (organized A. D. 1830, by Joseph Smith). This is followed by the names of the Board of Publication, John R. Haldeman, George P. Frisbey, and James A. Hedrick. It is pertinent to inquire: when, where, and by what body of believers originally constituting the membership of the church organized in 1830, these men were chosen or appointed to publish any document or journal in the interests of that church. It is simply an attempted cunning sophistry used for a specific purpose and intended to cover certain specific aims, not germane to the issue among the believers in the original faith.

It seems good to these publishers, at the setting out of this reprinting of The Evening and the Morning Star, to tell the possible new subscribers who they are; and they do this in a very deft and cunning manner, apparently frank, and yet largely in manner lacking in frankness and ingenuousness that should characterize men who have undertaken so serious a task as they seem to think the one they are engaging in is to be to themselves and others.

For instance: "We are believers in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the mission of Joseph Smith, jr." This statement is followed by a restrictive statement respecting their faith being based upon these books and "the early commandments given to the Church of Christ through Joseph Smith, the Prophet," thus veiling or attempting to veil the real position occupied by these men, and leaving it in a loose and unfinished manner, evidently in an endeavor to cover and reserve the right unto themselves to determine which and what early revelations they may choose to accept or disregard.

This will easily be discovered when it is noticed that these same men state, "Doctrines introduced and taught after the name of the church was changed, we do not consider binding upon those who cling to the faith as first announced and taught in the Church of Christ, by Joseph Smith and his co-laborers." Quoting from this statement in The Evening and Morning Star, concerning the occupation of the temple lot, at Independence, Missouri, they have presented what they evidently considered to be a strong argument in favor of their organization. They state: "On account of our possessing the ground upon which the great temple will stand, we occupy a strategic position among Latter Day Saints, perhaps vastly out of proportion to our numbers." How valuable this strategic position may prove to be in the eyes of Him who is supposed to have authorized the building of the temple remains yet to be seen.

When it is taken into consideration that the court before which the temple lot suit was tried distinctly affirmed that the church representing in faith and organization the church organized by Joseph Smith, A. D. 1830, was and is The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and that this was the second time that a similar affirmation had been made by the United States courts, is there any other estimate to be put upon this strategic position, than that supposed to be occupied by the dog lying in the manger who neither ate the hay nor permitted the cattle to eat who were desirous of doing so. In other words, that this particular body, professing to represent the Church of Christ organized A. D. 1830, having become possessors of a portion of the ground originally dedicated to that temple service, are neither building themselves nor suffering others to build, but are simply occupying the land to the exclusion of all others, they themselves having neither members nor organization, as they state they have neither apostles nor seventy, but these are to be left to the ultimate coming of the One Mighty and Strong; and here these men diverge from the even tenor of their ways and introduce a supposed prophetic declaration made in a letter, written by Joseph Smith to a private individual, probably made for no other purpose than to give color to the pretext that there is value in waiting until that party, whoever it may be, shall come.

The apparent logical conclusion urged in the minds of proper thinkers in reference to this possible ground being strategical, is that by tenaciously holding to it, these men may force others who may anticipate the glory to follow the building of the temple, to subscribe to their position, in order that they may not lose any benefit that may accrue to them from the building of such a temple. If we understand the situation fairly, these men professedly publishing The Evening and Morning Star in the interest of the church organized A. D. 1830, have a piece of land in their possession, which by the testimony of their own membership they are holding in trust for the use and benefit of that said church, thus organized by Joseph Smith, A. D. 1830. They can make no title to it to other parties, holding possession only. In fact it would seem they can neither hang on nor let go, hang on to build nor let go to let others build.

The statement as to their having striven against taking arrogant grounds or holding in haughtiness or repulsion those who may be interested in the temple is covered under their reservation to determine for themselves what revelations they may choose to include in the early revelations given through Joseph Smith, the Prophet. The time when, the place where, and the events by which the right of Joseph Smith and his associates to hold and exercise the rights of membership and authority that the church organized A. D. 1830 ceased, have not been defined by these men, nor have they now by their apparently frank statement of who they are. We are thankful, however, for so much information as we have gathered from this statement.

The trend of argument of these men may be gathered from an article in the same number, entitled "Was it ever fulfilled?" purporting to be the prophetic statements of Malachi, chapter 3, with reference to one who was to come, as a messenger of the covenant, suddenly to his temple. We advise those who are trying to secure this reprint by subscribing to the paper now bearing the name of The Evening and the Morning Star, and published by these men, to read carefully the statement as to who these men are, and the apparent shadowing forth of what their trend of argument will be.

One other thing we notice, and that is this: that in their prospectus in which they state their intention of republishing the original Evening and Morning Star, they attempt to destroy the work of those men who formerly sought to effect a patient republication, beginning in 1836. The question rises necessarily, How are these men better prepared to determine what was the real intended contents of The Evening and The Morning Star, and those revelations the publication of which is found fault with in the reprint, and especially the revelations the mistakes of which are objected to, than were the men originally composing the committee of publication to whom the revelations were intrusted to be published, when it is confessed that none of these men, at least very few, can date their membership as far back as 1832?

We are a little fearful that this promised effort to republish The Evening and the Morning Star is but a very clever and blinding device to secure subscribers among the Latter Day Saints, especially of the Reorganization, for the running numbers of The Evening and Morning Star, as now published under these men whose names are given, and among whom, we believe, there is not one who was a member of the church in the days of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. We are inclined to think this from the further consideration of the fact that never at any time has the Reorganization hesitated to publish the facts that came into the possession of its editors, respecting things of the past.

Soon after the transfer of the Herald Publishing House from Plano, Illinois, to Lamoni, Iowa, Pres. W. W. Blair and the then editor-in-chief of the HERALD published in juxtaposition the supposed discredited passages of the revelations complained of, side by side, that those who desired might read and make their own conclusions. All that these subscribers to the present effort to be made by The Evening and Morning Star would get that would be of any value would be the supposed changes in the revelations. As these are already in print and have been taken notice of by the Reorganized Church, there is no ground for the claim that they are trying to cover up or withhold. It goes without saying, that this effort of Messrs. Haldeman, Frisbey, and Hedrick will be suspiciously and jealously watched, as it has been the office work of the Reorganized Church to try everything that came into light for consideration in the presentation of the angelic message of Joseph Smith.

GEORGE FITCH ON NAUVOO.

The Peoria Transcript-Herald contains an article by George Fitch regarding a visit to the old city of Nauvoo that has been reprinted in the Carthage (Illinois) papers and may be of sufficient interest to justify reproduction in the SAINTS' HERALD. The article contains some interesting features, and some absurdities, such as the old rumor that a tunnel ran from the Mansion House to the Temple, and that Saints wanted for stealing chickens or horses took refuge in this tunnel. This is about as absurd as the charge made some time ago in Eastern Iowa by a certain individual who said that the Saints of Lamoni would "steal chickens on the way home from prayer meeting," to which, not thinking the story worthy of serious rejoinder, we replied that we had never seen Lamoni chickens returning home from prayer meeting, so took it that they did not attend. However, Mr. Fitch merely says there are those who make such charges, which is true; but he clears the situation up when he adds that the neighborhood around Nauvoo "reeks with Mormon tales, many wild and improbable." The article follows:

KEOKUK, June 10.—The cheapest transportation in the world can be found on the "K" Line trains north of Keokuk. To be sure the tariffs which are published don't show anything less than two cents a mile, but by paying a quarter or thereabouts for a ticket to Montrose and another dime for a ride on the ferry boat you can travel upwards of four thousand miles towards Germany and half a century back into history. At the end of this tremendous journey, which takes an hour, you land in Nauvoo, Hancock County, Illinois.

Nobody knows what "Nauvoo" means but Joseph Smith, and he is dead. Smith, the founder of the Mormon church, had an odd genius for inventing names. "Lamoni," "Nauvoo" and many others, taken from no language, form part of the mysticism of the Mormon religion, which was also manifested in an original conception of heaven, history, architecture, and in fact of almost everything touched or discussed by the prophet. And this accounts for the fact that of the score or more of Mormon houses still remaining in Nauvoo, no two are of the same type of architecture and many are of types to be found nowhere else. Smith made his own religion, invented his own communistic idea, and in general struck out boldly for himself in all lines of endeavor. No doubt the sheer strangeness of his message brought many of the twenty-five thousand people who lived in Nauvoo in the early forties.

This is the smallest population given the city at that time by its historians. It was the largest place north of Saint Louis on the Mississippi River. It occupied the flat ground within a huge crescent of the river, and the farms and vineyards stretched out over the bluffs into the country behind for miles. Street after street, broad and well shaded, was built up solidly with substantial brick dwellings original in design.

The street which led upward from the river to the temple on the brow of the bluff was a splendid one, and its glories are narrated with sorrow by aged pilgrims who return now and then to the site of the temple. This latter building was of white sandstone and marble, so large that the glint of its white sides was visible up and down the river for many miles. There is no more startling example of Mormon originality than its design. It was unlike any building on earth. Every rule of architecture was violated—ignored. Yet there was a weird, barbaric splendor in the great stone faces which formed the capitals of its pilasters and in the odd shaped ritualistic carvings with which it was adorned, which must have made it awe-inspiring to the worshipers. It was the greatest building in Illinois in those days—and Nauvoo was the greatest city.

To-day the visitor lands from the ferry boat—no railroad approaches Nauvoo—and picks his way over the sandy, weeded road to the plain, just above the flood line. There he finds the old Mormon streets—straight as arrows, broad as avenues, shaded, graded, curbed, paved with excellent gravel roads. Up and down the river for miles they run—the ground plan of a city that has vanished. Here and there stands an old brick house. So stoutly were they built that the later homes of later colonies look decrepit beside them. They are not large—even the homes of the apostles, of which half a dozen still stand, are modest in size. The mansion house where Joseph Smith lived is a wooden building, with a doorway original, but artistic. It stands near the river, on the street which led to the temple, and in it is a secret closet connecting evidently with a tunnel.

There are those who claim that this tunnel had its other terminus in the temple, with many connections between, and that this accounts for the vexatious frequency with which Mormon residents wanted by indignant neighbors for chicken and horse stealing walked placidly into their homes and disappeared from the face of the earth until the hue and cry was over. But this is a vexed and unsettled question.

Close to the old mansion house is the white stone foundation of a new and splendid mansion house which was to have been built. But Nauvoo vanished before it was completed. In all the several square miles of old Nauvoo not fifty houses remain. They are occupied, many of them, by descendants of the original inhabitants who talk readily and with a most wonderful variation of statements.

For that matter, the whole surrounding country reeks with Mormon tales, many wild and improbable, many undoubtedly true and none the less weird. Of the temple no vestige remains save the stones which were torn from the site by later settlers and built into other buildings. Pictures of it are crude and unsatisfactory, save those of the Mormon artist whom I mentioned in another letter. These show vividly its strange design and also the process of its decay. Burned in the fifties, the huge facade remained for years, crumbling gradually, and often attacked by builders who wanted stone. On the site of the temple, the Reibold family for many years conducted a large store and kept a register of visitors. This register contained many great names and many names of old Mormon citizens, who, returning to their desecrated city, made the site their waiting place and cried out against the Gentile in this old book. This was the first Nauvoo. The ones which followed are hardly less interesting. To the site after the Mormons had fled, came Pere Cabot in the late forties from France with a plan to found a city containing 200,000 of the artists, poets, artisans and thinkers of France. The Icarian colony which he founded, flourished for many years, and built its great dining hall out of stones from the Mormon temple. The lonely hills were covered with vineyards and Nauvoo rose to new glory. But the colony suffered the fate of most communistic towns. There was schism and desertion, and in the next generation the Icarian colony disappeared. But many of the known Saint Louis French and many a fine old family in the valley around are of Icarian descent.

When the Icarians vanished, the Germans came—Germans from the Rhine Valley. They too knew how to grow grapes on the steep hillsides, and their vineyards and orchards became famous. Many of them are left, and Nauvoo is now the center of the greatest grape growing portion of the State.

There is many a wine cellar in the hills, and the spraying wagons, dripping green with poison, are common vehicles on Nauvoo streets.

Still another colony has taken root in Nauvoo and is now flourishing. On the hill near where the old temple stood are two great Catholic schools, one for girls and one for boys. The latter is new, and its red walls and green roof rising from among the vineyards can be seen for miles. The new Nauvoo, high on the hills, is a shady, quaint little town, but full of business and endowed with cement walks, newspapers and hustle. The visitor eats his dinner in a quaint, old hotel, rests in the shady yard surrounded by grotesque Mormon carvings, and when it is steamer time an automobile carries him down to the landing. And if he is like me he registers a vow to come again to this foreign land whose ocean separating it from the New World is merely the rolling Mississippi.

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL.

We have just received the following from Brother LaRue in regard to the Bible school in his charge:

"You may be interested to know that as a result of our first week of the daily vacation Bible school, we have an average attendance of 120 and a total enrollment of 221. It is a great sight to see the entire church full of little children, and they are of many races and many creeds—more Catholics than any other, and very few of our own church children. We enjoy the work, but it means real earnest work. I have some very loyal helpers, among them Bro. William Anderson and wife, of the missionary force. Our success thus far has exceeded our anticipations."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

We invite attention to a communication from Bro. R. C. Russell concerning the Kirtland reunion, as also a notice in regard to the work of the Daughters of Zion at the same reunion, which will be found in the back part of this issue, somewhat out of usual position on account of our having received them too late for insertion in regular department.

On July 8, Bro. and Sr. J. B. Barrett sailed from Vancouver for the Sandwich Islands, and on July 12 Brn. G. T. Griffiths, Richard Baldwin, T. U. Thomas, and Bishop and Mrs. R. May sailed from New York for England on steamship Carmania.

"He who, believing, strongly lays his hand
Unto the work that waits for him to do—
Though men should cavil, measures prove untrue,
Friends write their trusted promises on sand,
And failure mock him with its threatening brand,
Still, in the end, he, fearless, shall pursue
Till crack of doom, will find a power which few
Or none with cause less righteous may command.
For conquest is not built on the defeat
Of any man whose aim is human good;
Who fights for justice hath already won,
Before no show of loss shall he retreat;
However, crossed, malign'd, misunderstood,
He knows but triumph in the work well done."

New Hymn of Peace.

A new hymn of international peace was sung yesterday in many of the Protestant Episcopal churches in this city. It goes to the tune of "America," and reads:

Two empires by the sea,
Two nations great and free,
One anthem raise.
One race of ancient fame,
One tongue, one faith, we claim,
One God, whose glorious name,
We love and praise.

What deeds our fathers wrought,
What battles we have fought,
Let fame record.
Now, vengeful passion, cease,
Come victories of peace;
Nor hate, nor pride's caprice,
Unsheath the sword.

Though deep the sea and wide
'Twixt realm and realm, its tide
Binds strand to strand.
So be the gulf between
Gray coasts and islands green,
With bonds of peace serene
And friendship spanned.

Now, may the God above
Guard the dear lands we love,
Both east and west.
Let love more fervent glow,
As peaceful ages go,
And strength yet stronger go,
Blessing and blest.

The words were written by George Huntington.

Conflict.

Onward, Christian, though the region
Where thou art be drear and lone;
God hath set a guardian legion
Very near thee—press thou on!

By the thorn road, and none other,
Is the mount of vision won;
Tread it without shrinking, brother!
Jesus trod it—press thou on!

By thy trustful, calm endeavor,
Guiding, cheering, like the sun,
Earth bound hearts thou shalt deliver;
O, for their sake, press thou on!

Be this world the wiser, stronger,
For thy life of pain and peace;
While it needs thee. O, no longer
Pray thou for thy quick release.

Pray thou, Christian, daily, rather,
That thou be a faithful son
By the prayer of Jesus—"Father,
Not my will, but thine, be done!"

SAINTS' HERALD DOCTRINAL SERIES.

X. THE HOLY GHOST AND ITS GIFTS.

BY ELDER W. M. AYLOR.

For hundreds of years the professed followers of Jesus Christ, the great majority of them at least, have believed the traditional idea that the gifts spoken of in the New Testament ceased with the apostles, nineteen hundred years ago, or when the Bible was completed. And now the Bible takes the place of the gifts, or continued revelation, hence no more gifts; and the day of miracles has past. Some of these same people claim to believe in the Holy Ghost, but it almost insults them for us to insist that the Holy Ghost should do for the people what it did in Bible times. They will say this is not a day of miracles, yet they are compelled to believe in one miracle that has not ceased: namely, that God through the belief in Jesus Christ, remits our sins. And if he does so by obedience, it is just as much of a miracle as the healing of the sick. And it seems to me that if we believe in the power of God to remit our sins, we ought to be consistent and believe in all the gifts.

Let us go to the Bible, and let it settle the matter as to whether the gifts are for us or not. Paul says, "For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance."—1 Thessalonians 1: 5. Again, "But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal."—1 Corinthians 12: 17. Also, "Follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy."—1 Corinthians 14: 1.

A gospel without the gifts of the Holy Ghost, like a well without water, an engine without steam, or a human body without life, is dead. I am glad to offer to you the gospel, as Paul called it, "our gospel," not in word only, but in power, and with all the gifts. And where we have the live body (the church, Ephesians 1: 22, 23,) there will be the manifestations of life; the gifts are the manifestation of life.

The object of the gospel is to save the people, and to encourage them in this life to do God's will; and God promised them in this life certain favors and blessings on condition that they do his will, and keep his commandments. He will help them over the dark chasms of life, and when sore trials come he will manifest himself to them. And what a great favor that is! When we are in need of help that is beyond the reach of the skill of man, God comes to our rescue and helps us out, confirming what he said, "And, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."—Matthew 28: 20.

What are the gifts? and in what way did Jesus promise to manifest himself to his people? A gift is any favor or communication from God to man.

Jesus promised these gifts through the operation of the Holy Ghost. So to deny the gifts is to deny any communication from God. If this be true, there is no use of praying, as God could not answer without manifesting himself to the person, and that would be revelation, or a gift to him. Well, that is just what we want and are contending for, for the word of God gives us this privilege. Jesus said, "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him."—John 14: 21. That ought to be sufficient to settle the question for all time to come, that the Lord intended to communicate his will to man to the end. Notice the conditions, he that hath my commandments, and keepeth them. So it is to the obedient that God reveals himself. And notice, Jesus does not limit this promise to his immediate followers of that age, but it is sufficiently broad to extend to the end of the world, only on condition that we do his will. That makes the Lord no respecter of persons, and he is willing to bestow his gifts now to his obedient children.

"Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come."—John 16: 13. "He shall show you things to come." That is revealing something by his Spirit before it transpires. Why not? God always did do that way to his people. "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets."—Amos 3: 7.

Jesus said to his disciples, "And behold I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." The disciples gathered in Jerusalem as they had been commanded, and it is said they continued with one accord in prayer. And while they were in this prayer meeting, this endowment of the Holy Ghost came upon them. "And they were filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance."—Acts 2: 4. Here is one gift mentioned, that of speaking in other tongues. Peter proceeded to explain to them about this Spirit, and quoted from the Prophet Joel, "And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams: and on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy."—Acts 2: 17, 18.

Here are some other gifts, such as prophecy, visions, and dreams. When God wants to reveal something to his children, sometimes it is by prophecy, or an open vision; at other times by a night dream, and very often by an angel bringing the message direct to the person. The Bible is full of instances where God has directed in those ways. Why not expect them now, as the promise is to us until the end of the world?

Solomon said, "Where there is no vision, the people perish: but he that keepeth the law, happy is he."—Proverbs 29: 18. Where there is no vision it is likely there are no other gifts, and that would mean no communication from God to man. And where there is no communication, man will soon drift into darkness. I am satisfied that with all of our boasted learning, and the millions of Bibles there are, saying nothing about the other books of the world, if God should withdraw his Spirit from the world, we would in a few generations drift into heathenism. Jesus said, "I am the light of the world." He also said: "Without me ye can do nothing." These sayings of our Master are just as true now concerning our work as they were to those disciples to whom he was speaking. We can not preach a sermon that will advance the cause of God, unless we have the Spirit. We can not convert a person to the gospel, unless the Lord works through us to the person. We can not heal the sick of ourselves, the sick are healed only as the Spirit through us heals, and the Lord raises them up. So the saying is still applicable to us now, "Without me ye can do nothing." The secret of our success in building up the church of Christ on earth is in living so that the Lord can work through us. "Behold, I speak unto you, and also to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish this work; and no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care."—Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4. We can see by this that no man can assist in building up the church unless he is in a proper condition, for otherwise the Lord will not work through him. Then we can magnify our calling, and the Lord will bestow these gifts on us.

On the day of Pentecost, when the multitude cried out and wanted to know what to do, Peter told them on what conditions they could receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. "Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."—Acts 2: 38, 39. Then to receive the Gift of the Holy Ghost a person will have to believe, repent (that is, cease to do evil), and learn to do well. "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." Then he must be baptized for the remission of his sins. How is this to be done? "And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water."—Matthew 3: 16. "And they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water."—Acts 8: 38. These examples teach us plainly how it was done. By immersion in water. Then how did they receive the Holy Ghost? "Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost."—Acts 8: 17. "And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied."—Acts 19: 6. This shows us plainly that the laying on of hands is the ordinance for the giving of the Holy Ghost. But some will say that they did not confirm those on Pentecost by the laying on of hands. Who said they did not? No doubt they did, only it is not recorded on that occasion. We can not suppose Peter and John would practice the laying on of hands at Samaria and not at Jerusalem. Of course they did not. It does say, "And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers." The laying on of hands is a part of the apostles' doctrine, as we see by their teaching and practice all along.

In the twelfth chapter of 1 Corinthians Paul gives us a grand explanation of the gifts. "Now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant." I will only quote a part of the chapter, but it will be well for the reader to read the entire chapter, and in connection the thirteenth and fourteenth chapters. In the third verse, Paul tells them "that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost." In the fourth verse: "Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit." In the seventh verse: "But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal." Then he proceeds to enumerate nine spiritual gifts, such as wisdom, knowledge, faith, healing, miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, divers kinds of tongues, interpretation of tongues. He says: "But all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will."

Paul did not want the Saints to be ignorant concerning these gifts. He wanted them to know that they were for all, only the Lord will give them or divide them as he sees fit, or when they are needed. As for instance, when we have sick folks, we need the gift of faith or gift of healing. James has it, "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him."—James 5: 14, 15. Remember, it is the Lord that does the healing, gives the gift.

We need the gift of discernment, when some false spirit tries to impose upon us. The evil one will try to imitate these gifts, and God has promised us his protection, by giving his Saints the Spirit of discernment. "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the world."—1 John 4:1. "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils."—1 Timothy 4:1. We don't want to believe a spirit just because there is power there, but should try them, to see what source they are from.

There are other gifts besides these. Turn to Ephesians 4:8, where Paul is speaking of Christ, and says: "Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men." And in the eleventh verse, "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers." No man has a right to any office in the church of Jesus Christ, unless he is called of God. If so, it is a gift to that person. "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron."—Hebrews 5:4. So a man must be called of God, and be set apart by the laying on of hands by those already in authority; that is the way the Lord builds up his church, by bestowing these gifts on men.

The church is the body of Christ, and Paul compares it to a human body. If we have a perfect body we must have all of the members. If the human body is deprived of an eye, or a foot, or hand, it is not a perfect body. So with the church; it is made up of members. These members hold different offices, and have different gifts, but all from the same Spirit. If the church is deprived of any of these gifts, it is a crippled body. If it has none of the gifts, it is a dead body, or not the church of Christ at all, but of some human origin. Now the foot could not say to the head, "We have no need of thee, or the eye could not say unto the ear, We have no need of you." In other words, a deacon could not say to an apostle, "We have no need of you." Nor could the gift of faith say to the gift of healing, "You are not needed." All are needed to make up the whole body.

"And now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular. And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." Then Paul asks the question, by the way of an explanation: "Are all apostles? Are all prophets? Are all teachers? Are all workers of miracles? Have all the gifts of healing? Do all speak with tongues? Do all interpret?" No; he has just been telling them that the body is of many members, not one having all the gifts. Then, in 1 Corinthians 12:31, we have this:

"But covet earnestly the best gifts: and yet show I unto you a more excellent way." A more excellent way than to have these gifts that he has been speaking about? Oh, no, he did not mean to convey any such an idea. But the more excellent way is to have the gifts with charity. Then he says in the thirteenth chapter: "Though I speak with tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal." See, the reasoning is plain; though we have the gifts, which are necessary, and then do not go on to perfection, they will not profit us anything. The gifts are very necessary along the way to help us on to perfection. But it is possible for us to have these gifts bestowed upon us, then not develop that Christ-like life which is charity.

Begin now at the fourth verse and we can see what charity is: "Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things."

No wonder Jesus said: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven." Though we belong to the body (the church), and some of these gifts are bestowed upon us, and we do not have this love, it will profit us nothing. But for us to enter into the kingdom of heaven, we must have the gifts with charity. 1 Corinthians 14:1, "Follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy." Thirty-ninth verse: "Wherefore, brethren, covet to prophesy, and forbid not to speak with tongues." That does not sound like he intended that the gifts were not for us. "What God hath joined together let no man put asunder."

But let us go back to the thirteenth chapter and the eighth verse: "Charity never faileth: but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away." Those who do not believe in the gifts, and hold that they are not for us to-day, always use this verse to try to support their claim that Paul meant that the gifts should be done away. That is just what Paul meant, that they should cease. But when? When that which is perfect is come. I saw a man hold the Bible up before a people, slap it with his hand, and say, "This is that which is perfect, and after the Bible was given the gifts were no longer needed." The Bible does not take the place of the gifts, it only tells us how to obtain them, and what they are for. Let Paul tell us about it. Twelfth verse: "For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known."

With all the gifts, with the church in its complete organization, in this life we can only see through a glass darkly.

When will that time be, when that which is perfect is come? When God, and his Son Jesus Christ, and all the Saints will dwell together, and that prayer be fulfilled which Jesus taught his disciples to pray, and which we are still praying: "Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." Also Revelation 21: 3, 4: "And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away." These scriptures, with many others that we might use, teach us plainly when that which is perfect will come. And no doubt this is the time to which Paul had reference. We will not need the gift of prophecy then, God and Christ and the Saints will all dwell together. We will not know in part then, but will have that perfect knowledge, and know as we are known. We will not need the different tongues then, for we will all call upon the Lord with one consent. (Zephaniah 3: 9.)

For an illustration, let us refer to our electric lights, as we have them in our houses, and on the streets. They are to light our way on dark nights because darkness is around us, but they are only in part, at the best. They help us on our way, it is true, and without them we would be in a bad shape. But let them continue to burn till the sun rises in the morning,—how about those lights "in part" then? We don't need them any longer. Why? All can see why. The perfect light has come, and those in part are no longer needed. So it is with the gifts of the gospel. We are in a world of darkness, and while we are in this condition, God has promised us these gifts as our partial lights, until that which is perfect is come.

Let us see to it that we hold on to these partial lights, the gifts, and put on charity with them. This is the most excellent way. We are glad to inform our readers, that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints represents that kind of a gospel. And we can say as did Paul, "Our gospel comes not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance."

THE WOMAN OF REVELATION 12.—IN FOUR PARTS.

BY H. J. DAVISON.

III. TO WHAT PLACE DID THE WOMAN FLEE?

Since it has been shown that according to the record the "woman" did actually flee away to some place for 1260 years, retaining her individual entity all the while, being nourished and fed, and at the expiration of the term mentioned came out, "clear as the moon and fair as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners," (Doctrine and Covenants 5: 3,) the next thought is—where did she go? The record says "to her place"—"a place prepared of God"—"the wilderness."

These are all indefinite terms, so in making a statement as to the real place one should be careful not to conflict with the thought conveyed by each term, nor with actual history.

First, it was the woman's own place. She could not then be said to be "out of place" when there. Next, it was prepared of God. Webster: "Prepare—to make fit or ready." In Bible usage we find this in Jonah 1: 17: "Now the Lord had prepared a great fish to swallow up Jonah." Query: Did God create that big fish or only stretch him out for the occasion? But how about the gourd, the worm, and the east wind of the same narrative?

Again, in John 14: 2 Jesus says, "I go to prepare a place for you." Was he not talking to the "woman" then? Paul says: "Now I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and be with Christ; which is far better; nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you."—Philippians 1: 23, 24.

By these and other scriptures we learn that God has an intermediate state and place for his church, between death and resurrection. In Ephesians 3: 15 we learn that a part of the family were there then.

In Book of Mormon, Moroni, last chapter and last verse, we have the situation before us so far as this continent was concerned. He was the last man of the church upon the land (will speak of the three Nephites later). Where were the rest of the church? Always bear in mind that the dragon prevailed not against the church.

Well, while Moroni remained on the earth holding the authority, the church had not all taken her flight. But he says, "Farewell. I soon go to rest in the paradise of God." Then where was the church? In the paradise of God? Yes; so far as this continent was concerned.

And was there not a last man on the Eastern Continent who held the priesthood who passed also to the paradise of God? I think there was, otherwise John the Baptist could not have said with propriety when he ordained Joseph and Oliver: "And this (Aaronic priesthood) shall never be taken again from the earth," etc. (Italics mine.) Church History, page 35. Why say never again if it never had been?

The objector says: "Why call such a beautiful, happy place as paradise, wilderness." I might ask, Why call some of the most beautiful, restful, free-from-sin spots on earth, wilderness? The reason is, that the word wilderness has a variety of shades of meaning, some almost opposite to others—like a great many words in our language.

Wilderness is chosen in this instance and used in a figurative sense. Perhaps exactly in the same sense that Christ used in it Doctrine and Covenants 85: 17, speaking of where he was while talking to Latter Day disciples: "In the wilderness because ye can not see him."

This may seem to conflict with Revelation 17: 3, but not necessarily. We must remember that in John's day that woman of chapter 17 was not yet in existence. So he could not be taken into any place and actually see her. But the record says, "So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness."

Now this reminds one of 2 Corinthians 12: 3, 4: "And I knew such a man, . . . how that he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter."

If one man can be caught up or carried away into paradise and get revelation, by hearing words there, why can not another be caught up or carried by the Spirit and get revelations from that standpoint by seeing things that should transpire in the future—as Moses did? See revelation in front part of the Inspired Translation of the Bible, 19th verse.

"And Enoch was high and lifted up, even in the bosom of the Father."—Genesis 7: 31. And he saw from that place the flood, the crucifixion, the church, the wickedness (no doubt the very woman that John saw, at any rate the same wickedness), the return of Zion, and many other things, yet they were not existing in that place, but from that place he saw them. Just so might John; and be in perfect harmony with Christ's definition of wilderness, "wilderness because ye can not see him;" or, in other words, paradise, or at least where Christ was when he spoke. Doctrine and Covenants 85: 17. As he went to paradise, and Moroni expected to go to paradise, and Paul's saying to depart and be with Christ, etc., all indicate that the woman fled to paradise.

The next article will deal with the question, "Did the authority continue upon the earth?" and "The return of the woman."

"One half of a successful life is action, the getting of things done in the right way at the right time. But the other half is no less useful—endurance, patience, the bearing of things that are hard, the steadfast holding to a difficult position. In other words, half of success is getting it out of seeming failure."

Why Does White Slavery Exist?

To many of my readers this will seem a simple question. You will say, "Why, it is because of strong passions and low desires that girls want to go wrong."

I am sorry to admit that in a few cases you are right; but only in a few is this true. We are told somewhere in Holy Writ that God will not allow his children to be tempted beyond that which they are able to bear, and we know that in the soul of each girl is placed a maidenly modesty that should come to her in times of need. But her lack of control may not be all her own fault. Control may have been weakened by the intemperance of some ancestor.

We can not say much of these poor, misguided ones. We pray God to keep them from temptation, and we draw the veil of charity over them and leave them to him who understands them better.

In many, if not in most cases, girls go wrong from want of the necessaries of life. In our large cities there are thousands of girls working for a weekly pittance that is inadequate to their barest needs. To come down to figures they are getting in this city four or five and six dollars a week in offices or factories or shops. They can get a cheap room at from a dollar and a half to two and a half a week. Car fare is sixty cents a week, and meals are twenty-five cents each in a common restaurant. Private families will not board you at that except in very rare cases, so taking only two meals on Sunday she can board on five dollars a week. She will not take up the subject of dress just now. She will have all she can do to cut and trim and starve to bring expenses down to her income, and anyhow her employer has promised her a raise as soon as she can earn it. So, as her dress gets shabbier she works the harder for that raise, and at last the employer stops on his rounds on a Saturday afternoon and tells her to come to his office after work. Now she is sure of the raise. She forgets all the hard extra work she has done, and thinks only of the new skirt and waist, and she goes to the office walking on air to be greeted in some such way as this:

"Annie, you must dress better while at your work. We can't have our girls looking so shabby."

"Well," says Annie, "I intend to get some new things as soon as I get my raise. I can hardly pay for room and board now."

"The firm is not in a position at present to raise its employees' wages, but you must manage about the clothes or else lose your job. Call at the office next Saturday afternoon and I'll introduce you to a nice man who may help out with your expenses. You may go now."

Annie goes, not realizing what he meant. The only thing that is perfectly clear to her is that she must now buy the skirt and waist or lose her job, so she spends a part of her wages for clothes and tells her landlady she will have to wait another week for the rent. Annie is soundly lectured for this and told she must remember that rents are always in advance, but the money is already spent, so she must let it go this time, but never again.

Annie goes to her room to think over her employer's words, and as their meaning slowly makes its way through her mind she becomes white with rage and righteous indignation. She is quite sure she will never submit to any such introduction.

Her dinner consists of just buns to-night, and she decides to walk to and from her work and have one square meal a day this coming week, but she finds herself losing strength as the week progresses, her landlady has only sour looks for her, and her employer has increased her duties. He has been offered a good price for a slave. The other girls of the establishment have an easier time, nice things to wear, plenty to eat, jewelry to flash in each other's faces and with little secrets and much laughter, and some one to wait for them on the corner. There is not much hope ahead for Annie. The coming Saturday she must pay two weeks' rent.

What would you do in Annie's place, dear sister?

I have labored among the oppressed in this big city for years, and these conditions are not overdrawn, but this is the true state of things to-day.

Poor Annie falls. She grudgingly gives up her prized virtue and becomes the slave of one man. Whether she goes deeper depends on the man and his object in buying her. He may want her for himself, and she will go on with her daily work, but he may be an agent sent out to gather recruits for some crib or dive. In that case the days of her life are numbered, for after women enter such a life their average life is four years, which means that one fourth of their number must be supplied from among our daughters every year. We can not estimate their numbers. Men have tried to count them but they will slip from one hall to another, using the 'phone for an alarm, and when he is through the house he knows no more than when he entered. Some men place their number here as being sixteen hundred, while others think it over two thousand. I would not even give a guess.

Recruits are gathered in from many places, some from the public dance, where they have strayed for the mere joy of motion, and are lured by the promise of jewelry and fine clothes, by the help of soft lights and seductive music mingled with the low voice of their tempter. Many are taken from the manicule parlors where they are constantly under the power of suggestion, or from the typewriter, or public dining room where they have served as waiters.

WHAT WILL REMEDY WHITE SLAVERY?

After carefully considering the question from all points with due deliberation, I came to the conclusion long ago that the best we can do under the present political conditions is to persuade girls to take positions at housework. There she is safe and usually under the care of a pure woman. She has no worry about room and board, and her wage is amply sufficient to furnish her with good clothes and she will have some left over.

There is a demand for house girls that is being filled by Chinese and Japs, and there is also a demand that is not being filled at all. If girls would accept these positions it would help out the tired mother, help the girl morally and financially, and help to settle the perplexing question concerning these sons of the Orient.

The reason most frequently given by girls when asked why they do not like to do housework is that there is so much to do in the evening when others are having their times of amusement. In this city we have our dinner at six or seven, and it is hard to clean up and get dressed by eight. Most men here take their lunch at the restaurant, which gives the home worker ample time in the middle of the day for rest and recreation. Perhaps some sister can think of a remedy for these conditions. I can not.

Some girls will give as a reason for not doing housework, that a girl is always snubbed by the woman of the house in that she is not allowed to sit at the table with the family. I try to convince them that this is unreasonable since wherever else they work they are not invited to sit at table with their employer's family, and their associates need not be the people they work for or with. However, the best remedy I can give for white slavery is to Raise the age of consent to twenty-one, and abolish the cribs and dives. A girl is not allowed to sell her real estate until she is twenty-one because we say she does not fully understand what is for her best good, but she may barter away her immortal soul at sixteen and eighteen, although it is a certainty, in this case, that she is not acting for her best good. Is this fair to the girl?

LEGISLATE FOR OUR GIRLS.

One has asked, "Is not the dive a protection for our daughters?" I would say, no, since they ruin our daughters and demoralize our sons. If they were not in existence our sons and daughters would marry and establish happy homes. There would be more faith and confidence between husband and wife, and there would be fewer divorces.

But existing conditions seem to satisfy the majority of the fathers and brothers, although it seems a crying shame in the eyes of mothers and sisters. This shows that men are no more capable of representing women at the polls any more than in the home or in the church. It takes both elements to bring about the best results in the home, the church, or the state. So in order that we should legislate for our girls we should have suffrage, and I hope that every mother and sister who reads this will make a plea for the ballot from any male relative or friend that she may have, and that the men who read it will try to influence other men to untie our hands that we may try to save that which is lost.

MARY BEEBE HAWLEY.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

Note.

In presenting the above letter to our readers we believe that we are presenting facts as they actually exist in many places, and as they are practiced by many fiends in human form. Notice what the writer says: "I have labored among the oppressed in this big city for years, and these conditions are not overdrawn, but this is the true state of things to-day." How long is such wickedness to flourish? How long will God suffer it? are questions which may well demand the earnest attention of every being, but especially of every Christian, and how the latter can look with indifference upon such a state of things or seek to persuade himself or herself that they are free from responsibility in the matter, is beyond our power to comprehend.

Surely there must be some way of both reaching and remedying such a state of things, and saving many, if not all of the girls subject to such temptations. How many of our sisters living in large cities are in touch with or members of the "Consumers' League," of which mention has been made in previous articles? If such things were made known to this league, we are confident that action would be taken towards remedying such conditions to the limit of its power. Would it not be well for the committees, having in charge the social purity work in our various organizations, to seek out such workers as these (and from the writer of the above letter) in order to obtain all the information possible, that they may be fully equipped to work intelligently and successfully?

We would be glad to see this matter fully discussed in this column. We are satisfied that while the sister has assigned one cause (and a very fruitful one) for the existence of white slavery, that there are other causes lying deeper and coming from higher sources which must share the responsibility, and we would be glad to have them brought to the attention of our readers.

We have never felt the need of woman suffrage or been in favor of it, but then if women, having the right to vote, will indeed help to remedy this great evil, then the sooner woman has the ballot the better.

Letter Department

UNIOPOLIS, OHIO, June 26, 1911.

Editor Herald: I came here June 10, and found a few Saints here alive to the work and ready to do all in their power to assist the elder in his work. I have been expecting to hold tent meetings but the tent has not yet arrived, so hope it will be here soon. The Saints have been permitted to hold meetings in the schoolhouse on Sundays during the day but not at night. Prejudice is very high here. Satan is doing all he can to close them out of the schoolhouse entirely.

We have been preaching on Sunday at 10 a. m. and 3 p. m. This is all we have been able to do so far, so we are anxiously waiting for the tent. Some are much interested and numbers say they will attend our tent services and are also anxious for the tent to come. The sad part concerning the persecution here is that it is led by one who used to be a strong defender of the work, but who is now a bitter enemy and is circulating evil and false reports about the church. And he has also caused his father to become an enemy,—his father who was once a great friend and defender, allowing the elders to preach in his home and visit him any time, but who now forbids them to come to his house. How true the words of the Master: When the evil spirit returns and finds the house garnished and swept, he brings seven other devils, worse than himself, and the man is worse than before. How necessary, then, that we be very faithful, humble, and diligent in our service to the Master, that the enemy may not have power over us.

I will remain here as long as I can accomplish anything for the Master, or deem it wise. Believing that when and where Satan rages, that is the place to be hard at work, for he knows that he is about to lose a servant and he is going to join the army of the Lord. When I leave here, I expect to go to Bryan, Ohio, and remain there until time to go home and prepare for the reunion that is to be held at Kirtland, beginning August 17 and holding to the 27th. I have moved my family to Kirtland and anyone wishing to address me will address Willoughby, Ohio, R. F. D. 2.

Last Sunday, a young man who lives thirteen miles from this place attended my afternoon meeting and I preached on the resurrection and read the statements of Alma in the Book of Mormon, and at the close this young man came up and wanted to know something about this book, and where he could get it. I explained and he left an order and money for one. So the good work goes on, sowing the seed here and there.

May the good Lord bless the reading of the book, that it may bring forth fruit for the Master. We ask an interest in your prayers, that we may continue faithful to the end. We remain,

Your co-laborer in Christ,

Editors Herald: We get a great deal of comfort and instruction from the pages of the HERALD. It is all the preaching we have had since Bro. John Harp was here last September. On the 18th of this month we were made sad by the death of our dear old uncle, Bro. Thomas Chappelow. He was seventy-six years old, was sick only a short time with heart trouble. He died at the old homestead and will be remembered by many of the traveling elders, as his house was always a welcome home for them. We miss him, but hope he has gone to a reward for all his kind deeds here.

We want to move to Lamoni as soon as we can sell our property here. We want to come up higher and live more pleasing in the sight of the Lord. We ask the prayers of the Saints that we may be faithful and have strength for our many duties here.

I wish more of the brothers and sisters would send their autobiographies to be published in the HERALD. It does me good to read the experience of others. I have the autobiographies of Elders R. C. Evans and Joseph Luff. I do wish that Sr. Emma Burton would write hers, if she is able to do so; the story of her youth that used to be in the Autumn Leaves would make a good book continued through her experiences in the islands.

Your sister in one faith,

EMMA CARMICHAEL.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI, June 26, 1911.

Dear Herald: As I have only been here since last October, I can't say much of the branch work. We have fine sermons, good Sunday school, and often good Saints meetings; good attendance upon the sick and afflicted. Since I haven't been among the Saints for so many years, I can truly say I have enjoyed meeting with them, and the sisters of the aid society are a faithful band. They do a great work for the church here and are considered the best quilters here, so have all the work they can do. They help in many ways and the needy are made to rejoice through the faithfulness of the sisters. The true Saints are the best people in the world. Let us strive for this.

I must relate an unusual dream of one of the Saint's little boys. He waked up in the night saying, "Mamma, I dreamed I saw the door opened in heaven, and the angels came down, and one asked me to come and go with him. I asked him if they had church up there, and he said, 'Yes, Moses is going to preach next Sunday.' Then I said I would go hiking." This is his own version, so the minds of little ones are led in wondrous ways.

LETTIA DUNN.

HOT SPRINGS, SOUTH DAKOTA, June 19, 1911.

Dear Saints: I read in the HERALD to-day so many letters that were written on May 24. That day our home was made to rejoice by the advent of a fine baby boy, but on June 9, a shadow was cast over our home for ever, for his dear little soul was called home to him who gave it. How sad and lonely I am and how I wish some of the elders would come out our way! Since our lot has been cast among the poor homesteaders, it seems as though we are forgotten and we have never gained enough as yet, to go to the Saints' meetings.

How sad it is for me to think that I am the mother of eleven children and have never had a chance to have any of them blessed, except my oldest one. We can read of the elders all around us, but none of them ever come here.

Just to think, my mother has now joined the Salt Lake church. There were six of their elders here this spring and the people got quite interested in them, so I think this would be a grand field for a good preacher. I have two boys that are twenty-three and twenty-one years old who have never heard a Saint preach. We have asked so many times for them to come our way. Although mother will not say our church is wrong, she says that we do not teach all that Joseph the Seer taught, and one thing is baptism for the dead, and she has many friends for whom she wants to be baptized. Now, how is that? Does our church believe in that ordinance? and if not, why not, if the prophet, seer, and revelator taught it? I should like to hear some of the elders talk on that subject. Those Salt Lake elders made it appear very plain, and I should like to have my children see and hear one of our own elders preach the true gospel. Those elders are coming back here this summer again, and we have good people out here, people who want to hear the true gospel, and the other day I heard a young man remark that he would just like to hear a real good preacher once. I asked him, "Didn't those Salt Lake elders preach?" and he said, "No, they just merely testify." Now I think we could find places for them to preach all right and our doors are open to welcome any who will come.

Asking you all to pray for me and mine, and ever wishing for the spread of the true gospel, I am, Your sister in Christ,
MRS. AMANDA JEPPESON.

CASTLEBERRY, ALABAMA, June 26, 1911.

Editor Herald: Long, long ago, Bro. T. W. Smith baptized me and I set out to live as nearly right as I knew how. Bro. T. W. Smith's wife was in the North and he wanted to know whether it was the will of the good Lord for her to come or not, so he said to Bro. W. J. Booker and me, "Let us go out and have a word of prayer and inquire of the Lord if it is his will for my wife to come to me." We three went out after supper one night and knelt down and prayed. Bro. W. J. Booker and I knelt close together and when we rose to our feet I said, "I will have a vision to-night," not knowing what I was talking about. Well, I was badly bothered over the matter and if I slept a wink that night I did not know it. Just before day, I saw the southbound train coming, and the smoke had the train covered up. I saw Sr. Helen Smith about midway of the train, and right in front of the engineer, there were two long, bright poles which were just as full of small bright stars as one could stick on the poles, and afterwards I thought one of the poles represented Bro. T. W. Smith and the members that he would convert and the other for Sister Smith; and I can see their work to-day living on and I believe that their works for good will last till the good Lord comes.

They did a wonderful amount of good. The good counsel they gave me is fresh with me to-day, and when Bro. T. W. Smith went to Texas from Alabama, I went with him. He was looking after the scattered Saints, and we found some oldtime Saints who were well acquainted with Joseph the Seer. Bro. T. W. organized the branch and set it to work again with an elder and a teacher. The man who was called to the elder's office and Bro. T. W. had many sharp arguments, and Brother Smith told me he never would come into the church, and I told him he would have to baptize him before he left there. But he did not think so. Many of the Saints have read Bro. W. J. Bryan's letters from Texas. He is the elder that Brother T. W. called, and Bro. Alex. Hays was the teacher. He was a noble young man. This branch was at Bandera, Texas.

I will never forget those loving, kind Saints. Brother T. W. and I walked into a wood and blacksmith shop and as we left there, Brother Smith said to me, "That workman was very bitter against us." I said, "Yes, but you will have to baptize him before you leave here." And sure enough he did so, and this same man's wife was sick and he told me he would give anything if his wife would come into the church. I told him if he would live faithful, she would get well, and also would come in the church; and when I came back home he wrote me that his wife got well and was baptized with him. So you see right living filled his joy, not only here, but over on the other shore.

Well, the time came for Brother Smith and the writer to leave there and go to Rockwall, Texas. Some said it was four hundred miles. When we gave the dear Saints the parting hand, it was a sad affair to the writer. I have often thought that the Saints are the truest friends on earth, and while T. W. and I were on our way with two noble brothers to meet the stage at San Antonio, Texas, we had to camp at night. We did not know what time the stage left San Antonio, so Brother Smith said, "Brethren, let us have a word of prayer," and we all left the camp fire and went our way, and when we came back to the fire Brother Smith asked all of us if we had seen anything. The others said they had not, and I said that we would just get to the post-office in time to tell the brethren good-bye. Next morning when we drove up to the post-office, the stage was loading on the mail bags, and we told the good brethren good-bye and stepped on the stage and were off. We went eighty miles on the stage to the capital of Texas and there we boarded the train and were soon on our way to Rockwall, Texas. Brother T. W. and I were sitting together, and he said, "Brother G. H., let us ask the good Lord how we are going to get out from Dallas, Texas, to Rockwall. It is twenty-five miles from Dallas and we will have to have some conveyance to carry our trunks." I said, "Brother, we will meet a man on the streets of Dallas and he will convey us to Rockwall." When we got to Dallas it was night and the next morning we went out on the streets and walked up and down inquiring of many if anybody was going to Rockwall with a wagon, and everything looked dark for us. But about one hour by sun in the evening, we met a man on the street and asked him if he knew of anybody who was going to Rockwall with a team, and he said, "I am going within five miles of Rockwall now, in about ten minutes, with a two horse wagon; no doubt you can go along and stay all night with me, and to-morrow morning I can carry you to Rockwall."

So pretty soon we were off, and on the morrow we landed in Rockwall and met some dear oldtime Saints who were acquainted with Joseph the Seer; they got a church house for Brother T. W. to preach in, and that was the best sermon I ever heard. The next night he preached again to a full house, and as he closed and stepped down off the stand he said to the writer, "How is it that I had no more liberty to-night than I have had?" I said, "Your work is over now in Texas," and he had the same impression, and we soon parted, no more to meet on this earth. That was the saddest day of my life, for he went north and I went east, wondering if I should ever meet him again.

Your true brother in Christ,

G. H. SHELL.

JONESBORO, ARKANSAS, June 29, 1911.

Editors Herald: In looking over the HERALD, especially to those who are appointed to different parts, we (I think I can speak the sentiments of the scattered Saints, in the north-eastern part of Arkansas) are proud to see the names of Elders J. T. Davis, T. J. Riley, B. F. Renfroe, and Jesse M. Simmons, and will be made more proud to see their faces again,—those we have seen, and also those we have not met.

We are located four and one half miles southwest of Jonesboro, and so far as I know expect to be here until the hand of our Ruler doth see fit to remove us. One half mile from us is "Keller's Chapel," a union church where four denominations worship. Every fourth Sunday I preach at 11 a. m. We have a fine Sunday school and everyone is alive in it. I had the honor to be chosen teacher of the Bible class. I have thrust in my sickle to reap, and by the help of our Savior may his will be done. I do not know as I have the faith Joshua had when he commanded the sun to stand still, but may the sunlight that is in these people stand still until I can tell them the course Christ left here for us to follow. I am not fighting a fight like Joshua fought, but am fighting for souls and, Lord, may my faith ever abound and increase. My father, D. R. Baldwin, preached here eight or nine years ago. He was the only one here then, and I am alone here now.

May God's Spirit of love continue to burn in my heart; so much so that I shall not always be alone here in the work.

Jonesboro is a division for the Cotton Belt and the Frisco railroads. Those coming this way address me R. F. D. 3, box 18 a, and I will meet them.

In hopes,
D. M. BALDWIN.

EUGENE, OREGON, June 22, 1911.

Dear Herald: Of late the thought has come to me so many times to write to the HERALD. I have always cast that thought aside, but to-day as I was reading the HERALD and was so wonderfully blessed, the thought came again, "You must write; though it may be little, yet some dear reader may be benefited."

Many times I feel discouraged on account of the many mistakes I make from time to time. I have been greatly cheered by reading our church papers, so I trust and pray that this may at least help some one who may be struggling as I am to gain eternal rest. We Saints here have great reason to rejoice, for we truly are greatly favored of the dear Lord. We had a great time of rejoicing last Sunday during our prayer meeting. I am sorry that so many of the Saints are not as active along gospel lines as we would like to see them, but thankful that it is no worse. I hope that we may all arise to a higher sense of our duties and not be slothful or shrink from any duty.

I am thankful for the gospel and the many blessings we have received all along life's journey. I have had some trials, as all Saints do, for we are not to travel on flowery beds of ease in this world; I hope to live humbly, and faithfully discharge every human duty, so I may enjoy more of God's Holy Spirit, and, when my life work is ended, I may dwell with Christ and the pure in heart. I am longing to meet with the Saints in my old home branch again, at Joplin, Missouri. There is no branch close to Eugene. Just a few families of Saints here, but they are all longing for Zion to be redeemed.

Dear Saints, remember me in your prayers, for I feel my weakness much, and I desire to be humble and faithful as one of God's children.

Yours in gospel bonds,
MRS. H. J. THURMAN.

MOORHEAD, IOWA, June 3, 1911.

Dear Saints: George and I are holding up the banner of truth at the Star Sunday Schoolhouse just across the road from us, where they have a union Sunday school but no preacher. Some are Campbellites, some Wesleyans, and some are simply nothing. But praise God, we are Josephites. It gives a great deal of pleasure to give a reason for the hope within us. George has talked four times now, and he has presented the truth each time in a very forceful manner. He illustrates his talks with colored chalk on the blackboard.

He also plays a violin, a feature which pleases many, both young and old.

Next Sunday morning, the good Lord willing, I will try to expound the principle of faith. We are not authorized ministers and we feel our meekness and inability, but since there is no one else here to put the banner afloat, we are trying our best to get the angel's message before the people and we hope to be able to call in an elder to water when we are striving to sow on what we believe to be fertile soil.

Please pray for me that we may be ever faithful, with every fold of the gospel banner afloat; also that we may not get over zealous and go ahead of God and spoil the work.

Your sister in the true faith,

SADIE BURCH.

JOPLIN, MISSOURI.

Editors Herald: Merely to say that the drought is broken by copious rains and cooling breezes have returned to the Spring River District. The reunion in the beautiful Lincoln Park at Pittsburg, Kansas, August 11 to 21, is assured. Everyone, far and near, is hereby cordially invited. Plenty of room and ample accommodations. The committee will care for you.

Yours,
T. W. CHATBURN.

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO, June 26, 1911.

Dear Herald: I am still in the faith and striving to live as becometh a child of the King. While I meet trials and discouragements, I have ever found a friend in Jesus.

Dear Saints, I have only been in the church a little over two years, and I know it to be true. Let our motto be, We will stand to conquer the enemy of our souls. Let us conduct ourselves honestly before the world, so that they can not say we are hypocrites.

Dear brother Editor, bear with me while I make a few remarks on the Sabbath school lesson of June 25, Galatians 6: 1-18, "Bear ye one another's burdens." Fulfill the law of Christ, love one another, restore the erring, help the burdened, provide for Christ's ministry, do good to all men.

Oh, how large, how beautiful, how grand! The Saints are taught to love one another. Can we apply this to ourselves? Can we honestly say, "We follow our Master's command—Love one another?" I shall apply a few remarks, as I think, from the fifth chapter of Galatians. By recommending a humble and spiritual walk and conversation, it admits that it is possible for the most careful believer to be overtaken in a fault either from the depravity of human nature or the sudden temptation of the enemy, even, dear brother, as you or I might in fair weather be overtaken by a thunderstorm. In this case, however, he should by no means be abandoned to his fate, but the most spiritual of his brethren should endeavor to restore him to the church, even with the same care and tenderness that they would restore a dislocated limb, considering at the same time that we are all exposed to the same danger and might some day stand in need of the same attention.

We should be candid with each other's failings and kind to each other in affliction according to the Savior's great command of love, unity, and humility. If I understand, the apostle cautions us as Saints against self-deception and feeling ourselves above our brothers and sisters in the church. All that is vain must be exposed. It therefore becomes us to be particularly watchful over our tempers and conduct.

This lesson encourages us to liberality, especially towards our faithful, and never be weary in well-doing under the idea that we have done enough already. Mr. Editor, I think none are more worthy of reward than the faithful minister of the gospel. Nothing would conform better to the dictates of reason and of justice than that those who receive regular public instruction on the most important of all topics, should, according to their ability, compensate their instructor.

Mr. Editor, it is with deep regret that I have to mention that eight of our members here are leaving our local branch. Four have gone and four will leave next month. We feel the loss to our local branch very keenly, yet we pray God will bless them abundantly in their new homes. Elder Belrose's sermon last evening, "The saints shall inherit the earth," was no doubt a masterpiece, which should cause each one who heard it to examine himself and see if he be fulfilling the law and commandments of Christ, and not looking at the other person.

My prayer is, May God help us to do our best, and so live that we may inherit the earth.

Your brother,

ALEX. S. A. WHITE.

GLADSTONE, ILLINOIS, June 24, 1911.

Dear Herald: I have received the Journal of History and like it so far as I have read it. It is a good thing to be posted in the historical events of the church. I have been reading a book on the Faith of the Fathers, and I am glad to see that it acknowledges that our mode of baptism was practiced until the twelfth century, when for convenience' sake it was changed. It seems to me that the great things of God's law written to Ephraim would enlighten mankind if they would only read it and obey it. It seems to me that one who is a believer in the great things of God's law written to Ephraim as well as that written to Judah has no need of the name Mormon. Mormon was a true prophet and abridged the Book of Mormon. The book is great because of its divinity, and because it is witnessed by the prophets in the Jewish Scriptures and by ancient American archæology, and also by the great change in this land at the time of the death of Christ, as the Book of Mormon relates.

Brethren, pray for me that my faith may not fail in the great promises of God, for the Lord has said that when he comes, with all his holy angels with him, he shall sit on the throne of his glory, and before him shall all the nations of the earth be gathered; and he shall separate them, one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats.

J. L. RUST.

CASTLEBERRY, NEW MEXICO, July 1, 1911.

Dear Herald: Bro. J. E. Vanderwood and the writer are together on the plains of New Mexico. We are finding plenty to do, having good hearings and fine treatment from the people. We find scarcely any Saints in this part, but noble when we do find them. We have held two ten-day meetings the past month, with many kind invitations to come again. We will begin another ten-day meeting at Tolar, Roosevelt County, on the fifth Sunday of this month. We would be glad to hear from any scattered Saints in these parts, so we may visit them and open up the work in their vicinity.

T. J. SHEPPARD.

COMSTOCK, NEBRASKA, July 1, 1911.

Editors Herald: As I have been a missionary for years in this State, I thought I would write a line in regard to the work. The work of the Lord is moving forward here; not so fast as it might, but gradually our numbers increase. Opportunities for preaching the gospel are much better and we have many more friends. We built a church near Tryon two years ago, and we have one completed at Comstock, and there is one being built at Bayard.

During the past few months I have baptized a few into the church, among them two fine old people, husband and wife, by the name of Travis, at Endor, Nebraska. Here I had the fortune to meet an old man by the name of A. M. Hallett. Mr. Hallett said he lived twelve miles west of Carthage, in Hancock County, Illinois, when Joseph and Hyrum Smith were killed there. He says he was ten years old at the time and said he had seen Joseph Smith at different times. He called him a fine looking man, very sociable, and was well liked by those who knew him. Mr. Hallett said after the mob had murdered the Smiths, they commenced to burn the houses south of Nauvoo and came within three miles of where he lived and were stopped by a rainstorm. He says a man by the name of Hunt and others were stripped and whipped. Robbers and thieves stole cows and horses, tied them at the homes of the Saints and accused the Saints of stealing, and then had them arrested. One Hibbert hid his hogs in his cellar and then got a search warrant and went around searching the homes of the Saints for his hogs. They finally found them in his own cellar. The boys made up a song about Hibbert and his hogs:-

"The old state marshal came to town
And searched the temple up and down,
He searched the town from post to pillar,
And found the hogs in Hibbert's cellar."

The Saints being compelled to leave were robbed of much of their property. A miller by the name of Highbly offered Mr. Ferguson, a Latter Day Saint, one hundred pounds of flour for his one hundred and sixty acre farm. Mr. Hallett told me much more about the injustice to which the Saints were subjected, that I didn't write down. He is a bright old man, a member of the Methodist Church, and well respected.

During the winter I labored with Bro. J. R. Sutton, missionary in charge. He is a pleasant man to labor with, very able in presenting the gospel, keeping things warm along his line of work, but he got cooled off a little last January when baptizing in the Loop River. But that evening he was on hand with usual warmth, declaring the gospel message in much power, being so full of holy fire that he couldn't stand still. Go it, Bro. J. R., and may God bless you.

Bro. W. E. Peak, will you please visit Oketo,—go north three or four miles or better, to George Bell's. Write him at Oketo, Kansas, and he will meet you on arrival. There is a good interest along the state line with a few, and they would be glad to have you help them.

We have a conference and reunion to commence here August 5, and run ten days. All are invited. Come, let us have a time of rejoicing and praising God. May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with his people.

In gospel bonds,

C. W. PRETTYMAN.

MOUNT AYR, IOWA, June 27, 1911.

Editors Herald: The Lord is pouring out blessings upon me. I have many dreams; some I can only partly interpret myself, but here is one which I should like to have interpreted.

Upon arriving at a church and seeing many people outside, I thought there was no use for me to go in, for there was no room inside; but I did go in and people were standing up, although many seats were vacant. I wondered why these seats were vacant; but I stood up, too, until some one near the pulpit called me by name and asked me to take a seat and sing, which I did. It seemed that in the pulpit and choir were people of many different nationalities, and they were all singing.

Your sister,

CLARA MCNEIL.

SAINT JACOBS, ONTARIO, July 8, 1911.

Editor Saints' Herald: I am born and raised a Jew, in Russia-Poland, and educated in the Hebrew tongue and Scriptures. I came to Canada nine years ago. The last four or five years I studied the New Testament. I could not get along with the Christian people. Every time I went to church I always thought the teaching and preaching was contrary to the Bible.

One day I heard a funeral sermon and the coffin with the dead body was in front of the altar. I inquired what the coffin was worth and found it to be nearly two hundred and fifty dollars. The body was dressed in white silk. The reverend brother got up to preach with his text, saying, Lay not up treasures where moth and rust doth corrupt, but lay up treasures in heaven. I thought to myself if this text would be practiced by Christians, this two hundred and fifty dollars would be invested in the Lord's treasury instead of burying it in the ground. When I came home from the funeral I told my ideas to a friend of mine and I told him I could not make out how Christians live up to the New Testament. He took a little book from his pocket. I have read that book through. I would not give that book out of my house for one thousand dollars. After having read books written by all kinds of Hebrew rabbis and Christian professors, this little book beats them all to pieces. It is the Voice of Warning.

Your Jewish friend,

N. MORRIS.

P. S. The Voice of Warning is the truest book I ever came across.

WESTON, IOWA, July 7, 1911.

Editor Herald: I leave to-morrow for New York on my way to Scandinavia, my mission field, expecting to sail from New York July 12 on the steamship Carmania, of the Cunard Line, Sister Hansen accompanying me. Yours truly,

H. N. HANSEN.

Latter Day Witchcraft.

So I would designate that which appears in an excerpt from the New York World in the HERALD for June 21. My protest is this, (made with all due credit to the legitimate offices of the medical profession), that there exists a line somewhere where we forget God and pay homage to the presumptuous skill of man, such as invites us in the article referred to.

Does it occur to you, Saints, that there is a "knowledge divine" and a "knowledge diabolical"? That this latter knowledge is oft obtained by very questionable methods; the results seem plausible, but are seldom substantiated when weighed in the balance! Note in the article mentioned, the cornea of a girl's eye being grafted onto the eyeball of a Chinaman. In our wonder at the achievement we do not stop to question the girl's loss for the celestial's gain, but read on with rapt attention of unsuspecting cats trading kidneys for the benefit of science.

In like manner a famous Cleveland surgeon last year demonstrated his ability to transfer a dog's kidneys to the back of his neck. Now this may be very encouraging to those who anticipate wearing the organs there, but it seems a little unjust to the creatures who pull the chestnuts out of the fire for us! Does the knowledge serve any real good? Does it not obscure our vision of that great Healer who said, "I would have mercy and not sacrifice," and set up in his place my respected neighbor, Mr. John D. Rockefeller, and his millions for "scientific research" at his "Hell Farm" experiment station, and his theological factory in Chicago where they turn out so many sprouting ministers per year, fresh from the wails, bleats, and moans of the vivisection "research" department next door? So these savants, nurtured by Rockeseller dollars, are to be nursing mothers to the new race? We are gratefully to submit to numerous inoculations of serums of diseased animals, trade off various organs for the best in the market our purses will allow, and rise up in all the glory of "new" youth and "new" brains (according to the article in review) and give these latter day "wizards that peep and mutter" the honor and praise! Truly the Lord God said, "Behold the man has become as one of us, to know good and evil"; but lest he should partake of the tree of life and live for ever, there is a barrier stretched across his path which all the millions of money and ages of research can not surmount, but which the humblest Saint may safely pass and no other living creature suffer one pang of pain thereby: "And all saints who remember to keep and do these sayings [of section 86, Doctrine and Covenants], walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel, and marrow to their bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint; and I, the Lord, give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them. Amen."

This promise is more to me than the promises of "science falsely so called," that put the wise Creator of all the universe in a minor position to man's wonderful brain. Therefore, I lodge this humble protest against glorifying these dabblers in filth and connoisseurs of torture, whose gory hands pry into and profane the sacred temple of life and pollute its cardinal stream with concoctions from their charnel houses of misery for the dumb and defenseless! Let us recognize God in his infinite compassion and mercy, heed his counsels, obey instruction, and be free from the destroying elements that beset the careless and indulgent, for the wages of sin is death, and presumptuous "research" will never be able to sidestep the fact. It holds out but a false hope and the end is but too often written, "The operation was eminently successful, but the patient succumbed!"

News From Missions

Saskatchewan.

We arrived at the home of Bro. T. J. Jordan, at Sedley; came by way of Saint Joseph, Missouri, Saint Paul, Minnesota, and Weyburn, Saskatchewan. After forty-eight hours' continual riding we reached Weyburn one hour late and missed connections. Stopped with Bro. J. R. Dickson over night, who was keeping bachelor's hall, as Sister Dickson and the two children were on a visit to her home in Ontario. Brother Dickson made us welcome. We left next morning for Sedley, seventy-five miles northwest of Weyburn. We stopped a few days with Brother and Sister Jordan, the only family of Saints in Sedley. He is president of the Saskatchewan District. He is also in charge of a general department store that would be a credit even to Saint Joseph, as they have a large stock. There we met Brn. J. W. Peterson and Joehnk. The former was holding meetings fifteen miles south, and the latter in a German settlement ten miles north.

On Sunday morning, June 11, Brother Jordan with a two-horse rig took us to LuVann, a new town site on the Grand Trunk Railroad. There we met Brother and Sister McIntosh, from Ontario, who are in charge of the department store in which Brother Jordan has half interest. At 2 p. m. we started for the schoolhouse about four miles distant, where Brother Peterson had an appointment. By request, I spoke at 2.30 p. m. to about twenty persons, and at 8 p. m. Brother Peterson preached to quite an interested audience,

At close of the service we returned to the home of Brother Jordan, arriving there at midnight, somewhat tired and weary after riding forty miles in the warm sun during the day and fighting the mosquitos from the time we started until we returned home. They are certainly a pest. Not only is it necessary to have the windows and the doors screened, but to also have your person protected from them.

June 12 we left for Disley, a distance of some sixty miles northwest, by way of Regina, the capital of Saskatchewan and a city of twenty-two thousand. Here we had to stop in the depot from 11 p. m. to 8.20 a. m. Brother Jordan had tried to get us rooms for the night by phone, but all the hotels were full, I presume owing to the circus that was in town during the day. So we spent the night in the depot. Bro. T. Scott met us at Disley and took us to his pleasant home, five miles in the country. There I preached twice on Sunday in a schoolhouse, and four times during the week, and gave several blessings. The branch is presided over by Elder J. Dobson. Here we met Brother William Tomlinson and some of his family, and also the three Bates brothers and sister, Charlie, Tom, Joe, and Nellie, of near Birmingham, England. We spent nine days with the Disley Branch, and it seems that we have known them all our lives. They are a good lot of Saints, a credit to the church and country.

As we had to come back by the way of Regina to Weyburn, not wishing to spend another night in the depot, we arranged to meet with the Saints at Lumsden, a station fifteen miles from Brother Scott; here I preached to a few at the home of Mr. Morris, a son-in-law of Brother Dyche. After meeting we were entertained by Brother Dyche, his son James, and his two daughters, Sarah and Lena, with vocal and instrumental music. They are a musical family. Sister Dyche was also present; she is in poor health and has been for some years. She was administered to and I hope benefited. Brother Dyche sings with a good, clear voice notwithstanding he has passed his sixtieth year. They came from Stafford, England, about four years ago. The branch there must have missed them very much. The two daughters have married since arriving in this country. They have good husbands, but not as yet members of the church. The son James has taken a homestead about seventy-five miles from the parents' home. His wife and child were present. As our train did not leave until 2.26 a. m. they insisted upon us stopping with them, rather than waiting at the depot, so, after spending several hours in song, they prepared a lunch, and, by the way, it was Brother and Sister Dyche's thirty-eighth wedding anniversary, and June 22, the coronation of King George of England, and the 23d was Ruth's birthday. So we celebrated the three events. Brother Dyche accompanied us to the depot. The train was on time, and we sped on our way to Regina. Here we spent five hours more in the depot. We learned that we would have to wait until the 3.30 p. m. train; so rather than do that we left on the morning train and stopped off at Sedley and spent the time with Brother and Sister Jordan. There we met Brother Peterson again, who was all smiles, but had a coming sad appearance. His wife and daughter had arrived the evening before and he was to leave on the 4.40 train with us. He was to go to Forward, where Brother Walstrom was to meet him and they would drive about twenty-five miles. There was no way to postpone the appointment. So off we started. I thought that Brother John kept the statement of the fifteenth Psalm, where the question was asked, "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill?" One of the qualifications is. "He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not." This Brother John had done, having promised to meet Brother Walstrom, not knowing his wife and daughter would come on so soon.

We arrived at Weyburn at 10.15 p. m., too late to see Brother Dickson at his place of business, and rather than disturb him at his home, knowing that he had several young men rooming with him, we stopped at the Waverly hotel. Brother Peterson left for Forward the next morning.

Bro. W. C. Toovey came in for us at 3 p. m., thinking that we would not come until 10.30 that night. As our baggage did not arrive, we thought it best to wait, rather than come back, as it is fifteen miles to his home. Our baggage finally arrived, after which we started for Brother Toovey's home; arrived there about 4.20 the next morning.

That branch is called the Weyburn Branch, with Bro. John Neill, priest, in charge. Brother Neill was presented a handsome baby girl by his wife, Myrtle, June 30, 1911. Both well. I preached at the schoolhouse four times and at Brother Neill's once. While there we stopped with Brother and Sister Toovey and were quite at home.

We find the Saints in this field in the faith. There is a large immigration to this country from all parts. Those who came here from five to eight years ago and took homesteads can now get from twenty to forty dollars per acre for the same. After living on the homestead six months each year for three years, and breaking ten acres each year, you are entitled to your deed. The principal crops are spring wheat, oats, and flax. Average yield and price for the last three years: wheat, eighteen bushels per acre, price eighty cents; oats, forty bushels per acre, price thirty-five cents; flax, twelve bushels per acre, price $1.50. The season is too short for corn; vegetables do well, such as potatoes, onions, peas, and cabbage. On June 26 there was a frost; did little damage.

The soil around Regina is heavy, black dirt. Does not plow as well as our Iowa and Missouri soil; it is more gummy; it produces great crops, with favorable seasons. The land around Disley is of a light soil, but has considerable stone; produces well, and is not as hard to cultivate, once the stones are removed. The Weyburn plains, as they are called, is also a light soil, and has not so much stone as Disley, and in my judgment is equal to any farming land in the Saskatchewan District. To get a homestead now you would have to go from twenty-five to fifty miles and more from railroad. There is no timber to be seen. Some few trees set out, but they seem to grow very slowly. There is some coal in the southwestern part; quality not so good as our Iowa and Missouri coal. The price of the ordinary coal is $7.50 to $9 per ton; hard coal (anthracite) is $14 to $15 per ton.

There are good openings for men with capital to invest in land and town property. Prospects for crop this year is good, having had plenty of rain. I believe that the advice of the late Horace Greeley, given in the seventies, after he had made a tour of Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, and Colorado, would be timely now. He said, "Young man, go west; grow up with the country." This is not as good a country as the States named, nor is the climate so favorable. I believe that it would be wise and profitable for young and middle-aged people not having good homes or good positions, who can raise from five hundred to a thousand dollars, to come and take up homesteads. But all that have homes, if only twenty acres of good land in Missouri and Iowa, near good markets, I would advise to stay unless they want to get land for their children. One serious drawback of this country is the scarcity of water, and that is inferior in quality, having considerable alkali; also their long, hard winters, with blinding snow-blizzards. No fruit here.

Uncle John is not as good to the young ladies as Uncle Sam. A man having three sons that are of age can each get one hundred and sixty acres for a homestead here. The man with daughters can not. There is an effort on foot to bring into the territory of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta, five thousand young ladies from England. They are needed here, but should have equal rights. Uncle Sam makes no distinction. There the young lady can take up a homestead as well as her brother.

Farm hands here get from thirty-five to forty dollars per month for seven months. Girls from fifteen to twenty-five dollars per month.

From the following it will be seen that the Methodist Church in this district is prosperous and alive to its cause. From the morning Leader of Regina, June 10: "Methodism in Saskatchewan. Present membership, 16,697; number of ministers, 104; number of probationers, 160; paid to ministers, $93,364; paid to probationers and supplies, $43,583; raised for circuit purposes, $210,038; raised for all purposes, $396,843; churches built last year, 22; parsonages built last year, 21; number of preaching places in conference, 630; Sabbath schools, 258; young people's societies, 103."

The above speaks well for a new country, and is evidence that prosperity is here. I believe that while we have but a small membership, less than five hundred, the church will receive good financial support from this district if the next five years will be as prosperous as the last. We shall leave for Zion's Hill Branch. Will write more later on.

News From Branches.

Stonington, Maine.

I think it my privilege, if not my duty, to write to you by way of information to isolated members belonging to the Stonington Branch, also to many of the traveling ministry who have visited this place in the years that linger in our memory, by the work which is a living monument to the power of God which attended the preaching of the word. Previous to the year 1909, this branch was not so strong as the Saints desired, but the prayers of the righteous avail with God, so the word says, and the faithful and humble ones continued their prayers, without ceasing, for a visitation of God's Holy Spirit to strike hard at the hearts and minds of the people of this part of God's moral vineyard, that there might be an ingathering of souls. This was granted, and Elder and Sister Macgregor were sent to this town,—shall we say by the higher power?—yes, we all say that. When they arrived, they thought Stonington anything but a delightful place, but before they left, I was assured by them that they were happy. Well, there was an ingathering and, like the parable of Jesus, of the gospel net, it gathers all kinds, but will say that most of the flock are holding on to the rod of iron.

This branch has been shot at by the darts of Satan, but by a careful watch and an unceasing effort, we are able to keep him in the rear and the old ship sails gracefully on toward the final port where all will be at ease, and those that have labored hardest will be most at ease. Well, to come to some sort of a report, will say that at our May conference the writer was reelected district president, and since that time has labored in that capacity through the district, trying to perfect the vineyard and give what spiritual strength he can.

On the 17th instant, we held our annual branch business meeting, and I was again chosen to be their president; F. C.

Haskill, priest, with Ed Eaton and William H. Clark, assistants; Daniel Haskell, teacher, with A. O. Candage, Alonzo Hutchinson, M. J. Grindle, assistants; Irvin Carter deacon, with Jasper Carter assistant; Samuel Carter clerk. All went well and in peace. The branch is enjoying good spiritual meetings, for which I thank God.

The district Sunday school convention was in session June 24 and 25, and was a surprise to all, as some feared for the success of the same. It was splendid, and it was a very spiritual affair from start to finish.

Let us all pray that the good work may increase and spread to all places where there are any true-hearted people to receive the same. The business that went down two years ago, still remains down, causing many of the Saints to go away or, as Paul said, they went everywhere preaching the word, and I hope all may remember the words of that same apostle that ye are the temple of God and the Spirit of God dwelleth in you. God's Spirit can't dwell in unholy temples, so if we want to be guided by the right Spirit it is a certain fact we must be holy and unspotted from the world, until the day star arises and we see the Son of God coming in majesty and power. Oh, I pray for the spirit of wisdom and truth which leadeth unto all truth, that I may rightly divide the word of God. The first Lord's day of each month is still observed by the branch. Some do and all should seal their prayer by fasting on that day, that it may be a day of fasting and prayer, or a day of rejoicing and prayer (Doctrine and Covenants 59: 3).

Yours in gospel bonds,

GEO. H. KNOWLTON.

Independence, Missouri.

July is but just ushered in, but the Saints here have passed through many and varied experiences, even at this early date. They have known what it is to endure, in common with others, the exceptional summer heat, and to enjoy "the blessing of refreshing rain."

Precept upon precept and words of comfort and instruction have been given by the elders, in general, and Brethren May, Sheldon, Hilliard, and Newton, in particular,—not as purely literary efforts, but as well-selected, carefully prepared food for hungering and thirsting seekers after truth. In a sermon last night, Brother Newton's text was, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." He gave a kindly exhortation to the Saints for a life of purity and steadfastness in the gospel.

They have received into the family here, three by baptism and three by letter, and are prepared to place the name of a little newcomer, Isabel Esther Garrett, upon the cradle roll. She was blessed by her grandfather on the 2d.

The auxiliaries have attended well to matters in hand, the Sunday school picnickers furnishing for the Fourth, music, speaking, athletic games, and lastly, a basket dinner and cool refreshments, also automobiles. After diligent search, they found a fine spot of ground, a block northwest of the Sanitarium,—romantic and sunny, with a good spring thereon.

On the 7th the Religians met for business, read reports and elected officers for the ensuing term. Their enrollment is over five hundred, and the average attendance is 203, and their newly elected officers are Brethren Barto, Davis, Sister Brocaw, and Brethren Craig and Green. Besides these are two vice-presidents. The evening was quite sultry, but there were about one hundred and fifty present, and good interest and excellent order prevailed among the members of the society.

The meetings of the 2d were quite interesting, partly from the fact that we had the pleasure of hearing some of the farewell sentiments crowding in upon the minds of our beloved Brother and Sister May, who were preparing for a missionary tour to England. At the 8 o'clock prayer meeting, Sister May gave good counsel to the young Saints in regard to the work they were called to do. "It is the hastening time," said our sister with emotion, "and I entreat you young people to let your light shine, and through prayer and faith to do active service for the Master, consecrating all you have and are to this glorious work."

The morning service was conducted by Bishop May, who chose for his text Matthew 5: 18, "Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." The message to the angel, the sacrifices made by the first elders of the church, the great work they were enlisted in, the sure promises of the Lord made concerning its consummation, and the responsibility resting upon the Saints were subjects dwelt upon by our brother with his wonted earnestness and by the aid of the Spirit. He also gave an account of the work of thirty-two years in this branch and expressed solicitude for the welfare of the church and the Order of Enoch.

In the evening, Bro. T. J. Sheldon held forth, and only seventy-five were present and heard an excellent discourse from an optimistic viewpoint on the subject of gospel work and its progress. The atmosphere was oppressive. "The time will come," said the speaker, "when the church will have a clear coast, and it will be greatly endowed with power and great authority."

Yesterday morning's discourse by Brother Hilliard was listened to by the usual large number which congregates in the early hours of Sunday. Brother Joseph and wife were also present. His text was, "Then opened he their understanding that they might understand the scriptures." Said the speaker, "We are entitled to light from God that our understandings may be opened; and we should seek diligently with all our souls, and he will give light for every necessity." He urged the Saints to live a life of virtue, faith, industry, and economy. At the afternoon meeting the Spirit flowed from heart to heart, the gentle showers began to come down a little past noon, and it rained while the Saints were again assembling. Many were fasting. Praise and thanksgiving and prayers for the sick, for Brother Joseph and the afflicted ones, together with many testimonies, prophetic and inspiring, filled the appointed time of the meeting. Brother and Sister May were present, and amid tearful yet joyful good-byes at the close of the meeting the Saints gathered around them, and even many, imbued with feelings of sympathy, went at 6.30 to the Alton station (where they took the train for their long journey) in order to give them the parting handshake, and the trustful and loving godspeed. They have the love and confidence of all the Saints here, and we feel to utter, though in faltering tones:

"God be with you till we meet again,
Keep love's banner floating o'er you,
Smite death's threat'ning wave before you,
God be with you till we meet again."

ABBIE A. HORTON.

A poor shoemaker in his dreary little shop in a great city one day found by accident that there was one little place in his dark room from which he could get a view, through a window, of green fields, blue skies, and faraway hills. He wisely set his bench at that point, so that at any moment he could lift his eyes from his dull work and have a glimpse of the great, beautiful world outside. From the darkest sick room and from the midst of the keenest sufferings there is always a point from which we can see the face of Christ and have a glimpse of the glory of heaven, if only we will find this place and get this vision.—Selected.

Died.

ATKINSON.—Elder Levi Atkinson was born November 1, 1835, at Worsley, Lancashire, England. Formerly a member of the old church, he was baptized into the Reorganization January 2, 1870, at Franktown, Nevada, by George Smith, ordained an elder March 12, 1870, and became a member of the Fifth Quorum of Elders April, 1891. He was married to Susanna Eno in 1858. To them were born twelve children, five sons and seven daughters. Of these but five daughters are living: Mrs. G. R. Grenawalt, of Chicago; Mrs. G. R. Dillon, of Portland, Oregon; Mrs. Caroline Toward, of Seattle, Washington; and Nellie and Ruth the two younger. There are also his sister, Mrs. James Martin, of Lamoni; and his brother, John B. Atkinson, of Kewanee, Illinois. He has also a brother, James Atkinson, of England; and a sister, Mrs. Catherine Crothers, in Nevada. He died June 29, 1911. He was conscious to the last, and his end was peaceful. He was a devoted husband, a loving father, a faithful member of the church, a good and upright citizen, loved and respected by all who knew him because of his sterling worth. He died firm in the faith. He was a true lover of righteousness and we believe he rests in the paradise of God. Services were held at the Saints' church, Sunday afternoon, July 2, Elder John F. Garver in charge, Elder John Smith being the speaker. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

Doctor Hillis has a frank word for those who under guise of frankness ride roughshod over their fellows and companions, saying: "Oh, you mustn't mind me; it is a way I have." "Suppose," says Doctor Hillis, "a porcupine were to say, 'Don't mind my quills; it's a way I have.' A hedgehog has its way, but the way is very bad." Just so. Frankness apart from kindness is so little of a virtue that it just escapes being a vice.—Selected.

Kirtland Reunion Visitors Notice.

I have previously stated in HERALD and Ensign that I would obtain from the transportation companies on Lake Erie their excursion rates from their various ports to Cleveland and return. They are as follows:

DETROIT AND CLEVELAND STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY, RUNNING BETWEEN DETROIT AND CLEVELAND:

Regular fare one way $2, round trip $3.50. Party of 10 to 50 going together, returning in party or separate, good for 15 days, $3. Steamers leave Detroit for Cleveland daily at 10.45 p. m., arriving at Cleveland at 6 a. m.; returning leave Cleveland daily at 10.45 p. m., arriving at Detroit at 6 a. m. There is also a day steamer during July and August, leaving Detroit for Cleveland Wednesdays and Saturdays at 9.30 a. m., arriving at 4.30 p. m.; returning leave Cleveland Thursdays and Saturdays at 9.30 a. m., arriving at Detroit at 4.30 p. m. The fare on the day steamer is $1.25 each way, no special fare being authorized on the day trips.

CLEVELAND AND BUFFALO TRANSPORTATION COMPANY.

Regular fare one way $2.50, round trip $4.50. Party fares: 10 to 24 traveling together, one way $2, round trip $4; 25 to 49 traveling together, one way $1.75, round trip $3.50; 50 to 99 traveling together one way $1.75, round trip $3; 100 or more traveling together, one way $1.50, round trip $2.50.

THE ONTARIO AND OHIO NAVIGATION COMPANY.

This company runs but one boat, and its chief traffic is between Port Stanley and Cleveland, and also Kingsville and Cleveland, but she calls at The Rondeau on her way from Cleveland to Port Stanley every Saturday, and I have made a special agreement with them as follows: The regular week end trip from London, Saint Thomas, and Port Stanley to Cleveland and return, which was good for two days, has been extended so that those going to the Kirtland reunion may have their return ticket extended to return any time during or immediately at close of reunion. Return ticket

$1.85. Regular fare from Kingsville to Cleveland one way $1, return $2. A special rate has been granted to reunion visitors of $1.50 for the return trip, good returning any time within fifteen days. Those desiring to leave from the Rondeau to Cleveland will be required to notify me not later than July 26, and if there are fifty or more who do so I will publish in the church papers immediately upon receiving the required number, the fact that I have so received them, and the excursion from that port will take effect; otherwise there will be no excursion from the Rondeau.

The agreement relative to the Rondeau with the company is as follows: If fifty or more will take passage from the Rondeau to Cleveland the boat will call at that port on the morning of Saturday, August either the 19th or 26th, at two o'clock, arriving at Cleveland Saturday morning at seven o'clock; then two hours' ride will take the party to Kirtland, where they may remain until 9 o'clock Sunday night, and returning to Cleveland will take the boat at 11 o'clock and arrive at Rondeau at 4 a. m., then on to Port Stanley, from whence she came on her way to Cleveland, Saturday morning.

As this call at the Rondeau is a special trip we would advise all parties who desire to take it to please be prompt to act as herein required or there will be no such excursion. All parties traveling by the Ontario and Ohio Navigation Company must at time of purchasing tickets state to the agent that you are going to the Kirtland reunion or you will not obtain the privileges of the excursion.

Owing to the Chatham reunion closing August 14, and the one at Kirtland opening on the 17th, we would advise that the excursion parties from the Rondeau choose Saturday, August 26, as the day for their excursion, and unless fifty request it to be on the 19th we will consider it to be on the 26th, if it runs at all.

The Canadian Saints would certainly appreciate a trip to the historic temple of Kirtland, and as a committee of that reunion we are individually and collectively doing everything possible to make it a success, and we will accord you all a hearty welcome and try to make it as pleasant and profitable for you as possible.

This kingship is not easily won; no more is it speedily won. It is the reward of patience and well-doing, of brave endeavor endlessly renewed. Many failures mark the road to such a throne as this. We shall test the compassion of God again and again long before we have won our crowns. Indeed, if it were not for the cross we should have neither power nor heart to go on.

Notice to Daughters of Zion.

The Kirtland district organization of "Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service," better known as Daughters of Zion, do hereby ask the cooperation of all sisters who expect to attend the Kirtland reunion, to be held August 17 to 27. There will be four church districts represented: Kirtland, Ohio, West Virginia, and Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. The reunion committee have kindly given us one evening for a program for the interest of our work. Also some afternoon meetings in which we want to have some heart to heart talks, that we may better understand this part of the Lord's work. We would like to have one or two papers written from each of the above church districts. Any who are willing to write a paper please write to Sr. F. J. Ebeling, Willoughby, Ohio, route 2. State the subject of your paper. The family and home circle may be the topic in different forms. It is a broad subject. Inform Sister Ebeling by August 10 what you can do. Sisters, please do not pass this by unnoticed; give us a helping hand. You may think that your effort is weak, but with the Lord's help good can be accomplished.

When a person undertakes to conform his life to all the judgments of the world, he is accepting a large task. Trim your sails to the breeze of all men's opinions and you will make no harbor. "They say," no end of foolish and contradictory things. The self-reliant soul heeds none of them. He chooses his own way, under divine guidance, and walks in it unmoved by the chattering comment of the multitude. And he it is that reaches life's highest goal.—Selected.

We wish to make some mark in life. We turn to the distant and far away, we believe in the things that lie like mountain peaks under the horizon, when, indeed, the things for us, the things to make our marks upon, the things to do with, grow by, to let us into heaven, are the little ones lying just here about our daily path, the overlooked things next to us.—J. FACTS

Is it not a fact that way back in ancient times Bread was always considered the main diet? In history and in the sacred Scriptures God did create wheat for the human race just as much or more so as he created grass for the ox or horse. You who love to read the Bible read the 11th chapter and the 3d verse or St. Luke. See if you are following the teaching the lord taught to the disciples as they requested it of him.

It seems so sad to think that God created us the proper diet and millions upon millions are dying for the proper diet—ever since the Roller process came into use, and all the muscle, nerve, bone and tooth elements have been removed and fed to the cattle to make money and the poor undermined human race do not live half the allotted time. Will you please test Good Health Flour at my expense? You will not only save money but rebuild your body and happiness will be with you. When there is sickness in your home you send for help. What is the first question as a rule "Stick out your tongue." "How is your bowels?" And why should the professional man ask this? Let me tell you about 95 per cent of the diseases come from improper diet that produces constipation. Constipation is something unknown if you eat Good Health Flour. It was through this disease that is so prevalent that urged me to build a flour that would remove the terrible disease that leads thousands to their grave long before their time.

NATURAL LAW AND SPIRITUAL LAW.

There are two laws that control men. In the Bible one is referred to as the natural law and the other as the spiritual law. John the Beloved was subject to the one; Judas, at his side, and taught by the same Master, was under the other.

Paul, James, and other writers speak of the "natural man" and the "spiritual man." We are told that the natural man can not receive of the things of the Spirit of God; and that the natural man is carnal, sensual, and devilish, while the spiritual man is the reverse of all this.

THE TERM "NATURAL MAN" NOT STRICTLY CORRECT.

In reality it seems to us that the term natural man as here used is not correct. The carnal, sensual, and devilish man is unnatural. At least his nature is perverted. He is not as God intended him to be. But the apostles probably used the term because men had been depraved for so long that it had come to be considered natural for them to be depraved. Indeed the world accepts it as natural to-day. We see young men who are "sowing their wild oats," doing that which is carnal, sensual, and devilish. The suffering and remorse that they bring upon themselves and others proves that their course is contrary to nature; but the world excuses them on the ground that it is natural for young men thus to sow their wild oats. So we may accept the terms as they occur, and refer to the natural man and the spiritual man, understanding that the former term refers to those who are of a perverted nature, as the result of disobedience to law.

THOSE WHO CLAIM THAT NATURE IS THEIR GOD.

In fact there are evidences of perversion in nature in animals as well as in man. At times we meet those who claim that Nature is their god. Such was the claim of the poet Shelley, who sang:

"Spirit of Nature! all sufficing power! . . .
Unlike the God of human error, thou Requirest no prayers or praises."—From Queen Mab.

But if Nature is a god she is a god that knows neither mercy, honesty, nor virtue, as we will show by illustration.

THE SKYLARK AND THE "BLOODY BUTCHER."

Shelley sang of the sweet-voiced skylark, but ignored the abhorrent things in nature. We have another bird called the shrike, commonly known as the "bloody butcher," whose pleasure it is to catch little song birds and impale them on thorn in hedgerows, leaving them to suffer and die.

Is Nature a god or a devil? If the skylark sings of God, the "bloody butcher" represents the Devil. The same nature that taught the skylark her song taught the shrike to crucify little song birds on hedgerow thorns.

THE WASP AND THE CUCKOO.

There is a species of wasp that stings its prey (other insects), injecting a poison that paralyzes the nerves of motion but does not affect the nerves of sensation. The wasp then lays her eggs in the body of her victim and stores this naturally preserved provender away for her young to feed upon. The motory nerves being paralyzed, the insect can not move; the sensory nerves remaining unimpaired, it suffers all that an insect can suffer from being eaten alive bit by bit.

Certain species of the cuckoo never go to the trouble of building a nest and hatching eggs. The mother bird looks about and finds the nest of some song bird in which she slyly deposits her egg among those already there. She puts only one egg in each nest, so as to insure abundant care for her offspring. The young cuckoo when hatched is very strong, and at about the third or fourth day ousts his foster brothers and sisters over the edge of the nest and onto the ground, where they perish. The young cuckoo then claims all the care of the deceived foster parents. A more dishonest and despicable affair could hardly be imagined. Yet nature taught the cuckoo all this.

THE ANT AND THE SLUGGARD.

The ant is held up as a model of industry, a very desirable citizen; and the sluggard is advised to go to her and learn of her ways. Yet there are various species of ants (so we are told by Darwin and many other naturalists) that make slaves of other species of ants that are weaker or less courageous than themselves.

These warrior ants raid the colonies of their victims, carry away their stores, also ant eggs to be hatched later, and individual ants. The captured ants are enslaved, and are trained to do all the work, such as digging, caring for the young, etc. Their captors are warriors, and do no work. Their time is taken up with war and affairs of state. They "take up the white man's burden." They beneficently govern those who are not yet capable of self-government. Thus nature in the ant-hill teaches slavery.

THE BUSY LITTLE BEE AS A TEACHER.

Frequently those who believe in cooperation and the entire elimination of competition point to the busy little bee as a creature from whom man might learn much. The choice of the illustration is unfortunate. The bee is a highly socialized and very industrious creature—also a brigand and murderer. There is cooperation among individual bees in a group; there is the fiercest competition among groups of bees. When one colony becomes weakened in numbers, the other swarms rush into the hive, kill the rightful owners, and carry their stores away.

If there is any lesson in the beehive for us, it is that Saints in Lamoni should cooperate, but if they discover a weakened branch, say at Independence or Saint Louis, they may go down there, kill all the people, and appropriate their goods. Thus Nature in the beehive teaches murder and robbery.

RED IN TOOTH AND CLAW.

We forbear other illustrations. No need to mention the many carnivorous birds, beasts, reptiles, and insects that live by bloodshed, giving rise to the saying that "Nature is red in tooth and claw." We repeat, that if Nature is our god, and we have no other interpreter than the beasts and birds, she is a god that knows not mercy, nor honesty, nor virtue. But fortunately there are also many good and beautiful things in Nature that speak of higher principles; and in the revelations coming from God himself we learn that all evil conditions are destined to cease. They are not pleasing to him, for he is a God of love, mercy, and justice.

NATURE IN THE REDEEMED EARTH.

So we are assured in the prophetic word that the time will come when this earth will be in a redeemed condition. We are assured that in that day nothing shall hurt or destroy in all God's holy mountain, for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord. (See Isaiah 11: 9.)

"The rain had fallen, the poet arose,
He pass'd by the town and out of the street,
A light wind blew from the gates of the sun,
And waves of shadow went over the wheat,

And he sat him down in a lonely place,
And chanted a melody loud and sweet,
That made the wild-swan pause in her cloud,
And the lark drop down at his feet.

"The swallow stopped as he hunted the fly,
The snake slipped under a spray,
The wild hawk stood with the down on his beak,
And stared, with his foot on the prey,
And the nightingale thought, 'I have sung many songs,
But never a one so gay,
For he sings of what the world will be
When the years have died away.'"

In that day Nature will correctly represent God in the lives of her creatures. The spiritual law, which is indeed the natural law, will supplant the old law of carnality that has played havoc in the world. Man himself, first to disobey God, should be the first to come back to the law of love and justice.

SAINTS TO OBEY THE SPIRITUAL LAW.

Consequently the Saints are required to be obedient to the spiritual law, which enjoins faith in God and obedience to him, and love of man with service of him. We are commanded to live at peace with all men and to refrain from inflicting willful injury upon any of our neighbors. Let us examine ourselves and discover which law reigns in our hearts.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

REPLY TO "THE PHILOSOPHER."

In the Peoria Star, (Illinois) Sunday, July 2, 1911, there appeared an article on the history of Nauvoo and the work of Joseph Smith, written by one who styled himself "the Philosopher." This article contained many errors, and in response to a request from Sr. Mary E. Gillin, of Peoria, Bro. Heman C. Smith prepared a reply which appeared in the Star, July 14, 1911, from which we quote the following:

"Permit me first to invite your attention to a few points that show the writer to be ignorant, not only of so-called Mormon history, but also to be ignorant of contemporaneous history. You will note that his theory of Mormonism is basically wrong. He assumes, first, that the predictions of the Millerites brought converts to Joseph Smith before the organization of the church in 1830. Later he says: 'Joe Smith founded his original work on the faith of the Millerites.' The humor of this consists in the fact that Joseph Smith commenced his work in 1820, and the church was organized ten years later, while William Miller did not announce his faith till 1833. If Joseph Smith founded his original work on the faith of the Millerites from three to thirteen years before Millerism existed, who dare deny his prophetic powers?"

"This blunder is only equaled by another in the same article wherein he represents that Joseph

Smith had a 'revelation directing the Saints to consecrate all their property to God and to start a bank. This being done, Smith was made its president and he soon flooded the country with worthless notes which he was unable to redeem. This enraged the country people and a number of the settlers in 1832 dragged Smith and Rigdon from their beds and tarred and feathered them.'

"Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon were never tarred and feathered at Kirtland, though such an event did occur at Hiram, Ohio, March 25, 1832. So the date given by our author is about right. The comical feature of this account, however, is that the failure of Kirtland bank is represented as being the cause of this mobbing.

"Preparatory steps looking towards the organization of Kirtland bank were taken November 2, 1836, but this did not culminate in its organization until January 2, 1837. There must have been many prophets in those days. They founded a faith upon a theory, at least three years before that theory had birth and then a number of 'settlers' execute vengeance upon men for acts committed over five years after the sentence is executed.

"Mrs. Gillin, were you speaking ironically when you said this gentleman 'is considered one of the best historians in this part of the State?'"

BOOK REVIEWS.

THE SOCIAL ENGINEER.—This is the title of a book written by Edwin L. Earp, professor of Christian Sociology, Drew Theological Seminary, published by Eaton and Mains, New York, cloth $1.50. The work of the social engineer is to define class divisions in society, and determine the forces that are at work. The object of the book in question is to bring social workers, especially religious social workers, into contact with actual conditions in society, so that from knowledge they may proceed to intelligent action for the betterment of society. Two interesting chapters are, "The church's peril," and "The church and the workingman." The writer concludes that the peril of the church is inability to attract: "Not the peril of some Etruscan maiden in the raid of the Sabine warriors, but, rather, that of some modern maiden who ceases to receive the attention of her suitors."

UNITARIAN THOUGHT.—Those who wish to obtain the Unitarian viewpoint at first hand may do so by reading Unitarian Thought, a three hundred page volume from the pen of Ephraim Emerton, professor of Church History in Harvard University. Of especial interest to our people is the chapter on "Miracle," which opens with this poetic selection:

"And so no more our hearts should plead
For miracle and sign."

In this chapter attention is given to the resurrection of Jesus. This great event is denied, and the argument is made that even if it were true it would not concern us, as "theology in its wildest moments" has never affirmed that we would be literally resurrected. (Macmillan Company, 66 Fifth avenue, New York. Cloth $1.50.)

THE OLD TESTAMENT NARRATIVE.—Houghton Mifflin Company have recently gotten out a book edited by Alfred Dwight Sheffield, which is an attempt to rearrange the Old Testament so as to present it in narrative form in the order of events as they occurred. This volume is especially intended for children and for school use. A perusal of it will give a clearer idea of Old Testament History as it actually transpired. The book contains numerous illustrations, many of them being reproductions of relics brought to light by recent archaeological investigation. (Houghton Mifflin Company, 4 Park Street, Boston. Cloth 75 cents.)

CORRUPTION IN AMERICAN LIFE AND POLITICS.—Those making a study of social conditions may with profit read Robert C. Brook's new book, Corruption in American Life and Politics. Mr. Brooks is professor of Political Science in the University of Cincinnati, and has given many years of study to his subject. He treats of the nature of political corruption, its extent, and the apologies usually made in its behalf. Interesting side lines are devoted to corruption in journalism, business, and the professions. His conclusion is that corruption is decreasing in the more progressive communities and countries. (Dodd, Mead and Company, New York.)

THE FUNCTION OF THE CHURCH IN MODERN SOCIETY.—This is the title of a little volume by William Jewett Tucker, ex-president of Dartmouth College. It opens with a study of Protestantism and Catholicism in contrast. Part two is devoted to a discussion of the attitude of the church toward economic questions in general and Socialism in particular. The author declares: "The church can not be satisfied with the gross statistics of national prosperity. Its concern is as much with the distribution of wealth as with the making of it . . . I doubt if the church can hope to make much headway in its practical interpretation of Christianity among those with whom Socialism has become a new form of enthusiasm for humanity, except through a more sane but equally sincere concern for human interests." (Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston. Cloth 50 cents.)

THE STRENGTH AND WEAKNESS OF SOCIALISM.—In this book Prof. Richard T. Ely, professor of economics in the University of Wisconsin, and a recognized authority on social and economic subjects, makes a candid and impartial attempt to set forth both the strength and the weakness of Socialism. He also removes some very popular errors concerning the teachings of Socialists, and sets forth as well some of the plans of social reformers as opposed to Socialists. (The Chautauqua Press, Chautauqua, New York.)

JOSEPH SMITH THE PROPHET-TEACHER.—This splendidly gotten up little book of some eighty pages is the report of a discourse by Elder B. H. Roberts, of the Utah church. It is devoted to a study of the teachings of the Prophet regarding revelation, the nature of God, etc. A very interesting chapter is devoted to ideas set forth in the Book of Covenants concerning the inspiration of the Constitution of the United States, the statement that the "glory of God is intelligence," and kindred themes. When perusing this book one can but wish that Mr. Roberts and his associates had also given attention to the principle set forth by the Prophet of whom he writes, to the effect that those who keep the laws of God have no need to break the laws of the land. An interesting chapter on that subject could be added to Mr. Roberts' book. (Published by the Deseret News, Salt Lake City, Utah.)

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

HEART AND BRAIN RELIGION.—Intellectual conviction is not enough. The heart must be enlisted as well as the mind. In any controversy between heart and brain the heart is quite likely to carry the day. Men have followed heart-impulses contrary to every dictate of common sense. Any religion that is merely intellectual will soon become cold, formal, and dead. That is the fault that God finds with certain religionists. They draw near to him with their lips, but their heart is far from him. We must appeal to both heart and brain. So-called Christian evangelists have carried their sensational appeals to emotion so far that they have sickened thinking men; especially as their appeal was devoid of logic. Let us not go to another extreme and in our fear of sensationalism avoid all expression of feeling. We must not make our message a faultless but cold and formal system of unanswerable arguments. Let the fire and fervor of conviction enliven and vivify our presentation of truth.

WOUNDED IN THE HOUSE OF HIS FRIENDS.—Our Church of Christ (Hedrickite) brethren claim to believe in the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith. But every word presented by them in defense of his prophetic calling is followed by ten in an attempt to prove him a false prophet. They assure us that after a certain date, early in his ministry, he became an impostor and his revelations frauds. That he willfully changed the revelations. That he became licentious, corrupt, and immoral. That he gave the revelation on polygamy. Well may it be said of him, that if these are his friends, he has good cause to pray that he may be delivered from his friends. These are the wounds that he has received in their house. His enemies murdered his body; they attempt to murder his character.

TEA, COFFEE, TOBACCO, AND STRONG DRINK TABOO.—At a general assembly of the church, held at Far West, Missouri, November 7, 1837, the following occurred: "The congregation, after a few remarks from Sidney Rigdon, unanimously voted not to support stores and shops selling spirituous liquors, tea, coffee, or tobacco." (See Church History, volume 2, page 120). This was certainly pioneer ground to occupy on the liquor question at that early date. The action also included tea and coffee, which supports the argument that these furnished the basis of the beverages referred to in the Word of Wisdom as "hot drinks," at least as understood by the church in those days. This also harmonizes with a statement made by Hyrum Smith in a sermon in Nauvoo, in which he plainly stated that the term hot drinks had reference to tea and coffee.

AUTHORITY AND SYMPATHY.—On two counts the church appeals to the average man for reverence and support,—these are, authority and human sympathy. Authority defines the attitude of the church toward God; human sympathy determines the attitude of the church toward man. William Jewett Tucker, ex-president of Dartmouth College, says: "The history of the church proves by too frequent illustration how empty a thing is authority without sympathy, and how weak a thing is sympathy without authority." So far as we are concerned, we trace authority to the restoration of the priesthood in these last days, nevermore to be taken from the earth until Christ comes. God has done his part in equipping us for the ministry of authority, never more needed than in this age of question and confusion. Are we ready to do our part in the ministry of human sympathy, never more needed than in this age of commercialism and human wreckage?

We are pleased to announce that the Herald Office has a number of copies of Bro. W. J. Smith's song entitled, "The sweet gospel story." The Saints will appreciate this song. Copies are 25 cents. Address the Herald Publishing House.

Be content to lead a simple life where God has placed you. Be obedient; bear your little daily crosses—you need them, and God gives them to you only out of pure mercy.—Fenelon.

BY H. J. DAVISON.

All the elders who teach concerning the latter day work, teach that it was restored by the angel. The fact that we as a body repudiate apostolic succession from the early church, and furthermore that the church is willingly committed to the teaching of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, (see 26: 2, 3) that John the Baptist was sent from the Lord to ordain Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery to the Aaronic priesthood, and that they were afterward ordained to a higher ministry by Peter, James, and John, and that John said in ordaining those men that this priesthood should "never again be taken from the earth" (according to Church History, volume 1), all indicate very strongly that the authority did not continue upon the earth. And it certainly did not if the church did not.

But what will we do with section 84: 3? says Mr. Objector. Well, I would leave it just where it is. It harmonizes all right. "Lawful heirs according to the flesh" is a long way sometimes from holding the priesthood. Some bad men are lawful heirs according to the flesh, but never attain to that honor. Even our beloved Martyr did not attain to it until he was ordained.

That phrase, "for ye are lawful heirs according to the flesh," is really parenthetical, and when so read, the section will teach that the priesthood hath continued through the lineage of your fathers—not on earth—but where? Hid from the world with Christ. In God, I understand, as in Adam all die so in Christ shall be made alive—through or by virtue of. Now if the objector will tell us where Christ has been hid from the world, he will tell us where the priesthood has continued with the lineage of the fathers; for it seems that they have both been hid from the world together. There is where it hath remained. And now talking to those of the same lineage who have received it by ordination, it must remain and must also descend to their seed—but by ordination, even though they be lawful heirs.—Nothing conflicting or confusing about that.

Perhaps some are thinking about John and the three Nephites,—did not they hold the priesthood and even the first presidency? They certainly did, but I have no evidence that they have remained on the earth, since 570, in fact since 420—and Moroni was doubtful concerning the three disciples then. (See Book of Mormon 4: 12.)

True, John assisted in ordaining Joseph and Oliver, but our esteemed historian indicates that it was done from a distance—whether true or not, the reading of Doctrine and Covenants, 26: 3, would convey the idea that Peter, James, and John were together, wherever they were.

It would seem strange if they, the three Nephites and John, were upon the earth with power to preach, baptize, ordain, etc., and that the Lord should not have used them instead of sending Moroni, John the Baptist, and others from paradise.

'Tis true they asked to remain, and their request was granted. But why could they not have asked God at a later date to revoke that decision? It seems that he does so sometimes. (See 53: 2.) God can even command and then revoke and be consistent.

In this instance he did revoke a commandment, because of the stiff-neckedness of other people. Moroni tells us that because of the wickedness of the people God would not suffer those disciples to remain with the people in this land. (Book of Mormon 4: 12.) Perhaps for the same cause he could be justified in not suffering them to remain with any people on any land.

With regard to the woman coming out, we might ask: Did the woman of Revelation 17 come out of Babylon about 1830, and become the true church of Christ? No, for she is still in Babylon, and is not to come out at all.

That ought to be pretty good evidence that the woman of Revelation 12 never became the woman of Revelation 17, for that woman was to remain in her place 1260 years, which would imply that at the expiration of that term she would come out; and Doctrine and Covenants 5: 3 says she did come out of the wilderness, not out of Babylon. And let me here note that I can not find a place where the term Babylon is used as referring to where the church might be until after it is organized, and after it has been organized on the earth since 1830 the term wilderness is never used, but vice versa.

This might answer as a mild protest against using the terms Babylon and wilderness interchangeably.

If when Moroni went to paradise it could be said that the church or woman was not all there (speaking of this continent), what could be said of it when Moroni came back with John the Baptist, Peter, James, and John and others? Did not they actually compose the church? taking the part for the whole, as we almost always do, in referring to the church. And it came "fair as the sun, clear as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners."

When men were ordained to the priesthood and those heavenly personages retired, then the woman was again upon the earth, as she was before; of course the more complete the organization the nearer to the perfect model.

Yet being in an obscure spot and composed of obscure people, to a large degree traditioned in human creedology, the terms of Doctrine and Covenants 1: 5 would be applicable, "and to bring it forth out of obscurity and out of darkness."

That is the great work being prosecuted even now. The church came out of the wilderness in 1830, and since that time has been in a sense in Babylon, though not of her, but 108: 4 warns the church to be ready to "go out from the nations, even from Babylon." Notice, that it never says wilderness when referring to the wicked and sinful environments of the church.

Much more might be added, but it seems as though sufficient has been said to establish the position aimed at, and I cheerfully leave the matter to the kindly consideration of my brethren.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

OPPONENTS CHANGE THEIR BASE.

The plain statement of the case is this: The latter day work is here, under circumstances divinely pointed out; at the time divinely indicated, and by methods divinely suggested. Let those who oppose it and urge an adverse opinion, tell us how it happened. Many solutions have been offered, aside from the legitimate one, but one by one in the progress and history of the work these solutions have been changed or abandoned.

A few years ago the "Campbellite" brotherhood stood quite unanimously on the "Spalding Story" solution of the problem. Mr. D. H. Bays knocked out the bottom of this theory, so far as the "Campbellite" Church is concerned, and sent their hope of victory where the "woodbine twineth," creating confusion in their ranks, and compelling them to invent something more defensible. "The Spalding Story is a failure," says Bays. "Do not attempt to rely upon it—it will let you down." Sidney Rigdon is not in it—Oliver Cowdery is the man with Smith—"all Mormon history and biography agree in connecting Oliver Cowdery with Smith." This was Bays' substitute for Rigdon and the Spalding theory in 1897, and the whole of his book, with the abandonment of the Rigdon-Spalding theory, and the adoption of the substitute (Cowdery and Smith) was indorsed by the Saint Louis Christian Publishing Company as "accurate and reliable."

And now comes one Samuel W. Traum, of Richmond, Indiana, and affirms that "the whole story is a fabrication of a mind so perversely fertile, and teemingly prolific in deception," and then launches out to prove that the "mind" was that of Joseph Smith, jr. What next?

Elder Traum's book is advertised in the Christian Standard to do the work (to the rabble's taste) of "completely demolishing the Book of Mormon as inspired of God. He flays the hide off of Joe Smith, jr., and tears every bone out of his body, and lays his heart on the operating table, as a true prophet of God."

Driven from hitherto accepted panaceas one after another, they still prescribe. Another prescription must be forthcoming. They must "sit up with it nights," preserve it by "saving committees" constantly on the ground with glue-kettles to stick the "Anti" association together.

But is the Book-of Mormon and the "marvelous work" following it the fabrication of a mind perversely fertile and teemingly prolific in deception? What! A system of ethics diametrically opposed to "fabrications," "perversity," and "deception," the product of a mind perverse!

Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter? Can the fig tree, my brethren, bear olive berries? either a vine, figs? so can no fountain both yield salt water and fresh.—James 3: 11, 12.

Although the success of our position does not depend upon it, we may be permitted to premise here, by the way, that before Mr. Traum can "destroy" the facts and claims of the latter day work, he must invalidate the truth and authenticity of the Bible, which narrates and vindicates this momentous verity.

We will not mock his impotency, his hopeless inability, by asking him to attempt what his superior colleagues have failed to do and, failing, were glad to retire. It may not be generous in his estimation, but we must remind him that the adversary, with all his intellectual preeminence, has exhausted his skill and forbearance, and the most illustrious have grown gray in rage from period to period, without effecting anything worthy of name or notice.

FOUR QUESTIONS.

The four questions under which Mr. Traum considers the destruction of "Mormonism" are thus stated:

1. Is the Book of Mormon of divine inspiration?
2. Is the doctrine of continuous revelation true?
3. Is the Mormon priesthood established by divine authority?
4. Is Joseph, jr., a prophet of God?—Page 29.

With all due deference to Mr. Traum's alma mater, at Hiram, the logical position of these questions is at fault. The second should precede the first; and the fourth, the third. The second should precede the first for the reason that if "the doctrine of continuous revelation" is untrue, condemned by the Bible as false, then the inspiration of the Book of Mormon goes down; while the Book of Mormon may be false and the doctrine of continuous revelation be true.

For similar reasons, if Joseph Smith, jr., was a prophet of God and proved to have been a true prophet, then the priesthood authority established by him is divine. And if he was a false prophet, then his priesthood claims to divine authority fall to the ground. The same is true of Alexander Campbell: if he was "called" of God, a properly authorized minister of Jesus Christ, commanded of God to "restore the ancient order of things," as he claimed to do, his authority would be divinely established, and his ministerial work, in harmony with the divine law, would bear witness to the claim. If, on the other hand, he was not a properly authorized minister of Jesus Christ, having received no command from God, his claim to authority is but sheer assumption and he is proved to be an impostor!

JOSEPH SMITH'S FIRST VISION.

As is usual, Mr. Traum, in attempting to give the words of the heavenly messenger to the boy, Joseph Smith, misrepresents, misfits, and misappropriates. He puts some few words together, from different parts of the narrative, leaving out the connections; he forms a sentence or two which he thinks will enlist popular prejudice against the boy, and orthodox sentiment in favor of the "Campbellites."

For the purpose of the argument, and to show the reader how true this critic would be to his words, i. e., to "state a proposition as its friends will defend it and in the exact language they employ," we place in parallel columns a part of Joseph Smith's vision as narrated by him, and Mr. Traum's attempted quotation:

pp. 37-44.

I was at this time in my fifteenth year. My father's family was proselyted to the Presbyterian faith, and four of them joined that church, namely, my mother Lucy, my brothers Hyrum, Samuel Harrison, and my sister Sophronia.

During this time of great excitement, my mind was called up to serious reflection and great uneasiness; but though my feelings were deep and often pungent, still I kept myself aloof from all those parties, though I attended their several meetings as often as occasion would permit; but in process of time my mind became somewhat partial to the Methodist sect, and I felt some desire to be united with them, but so great was the confusion and strife among the different denominations, that it was impossible for a person, young as I was, and so unacquainted with men and

"Mormonism Against Itself."

Quite early in the religious experience of Joseph Smith, jr., so he tells us in his history, he went into the woods to pray. This prayer, he claims, was incited by a desire to know just what course to take to become a Christian. The numerous forms of religious belief in his own community had tended to the confusion of his mind. Unsophisticated as he was, he could not tell which of all these sects to join. Accordingly he inquired of the Lord, things, to come to any certain conclusion who was right and who was wrong. My mind at different times was greatly excited, the cry and tumult was so great and incessant. The Presbyterians were most decided against the Baptists and Methodists, and used all their powers of reason or sophistry to prove their errors, or, at least, to make the people think they were in error. On the other hand the Baptists and Methodists, in their turn, were equally zealous to establish their own tenets, and disprove all others.

In the midst of this war of words and tumult of opinions, I often said to myself, what is to be done? Who of all these parties, are right? or, are they all wrong together? If any one of them be right, which is it, and how shall I know it?

While I was laboring under the extreme difficulties, caused by the contest of these parties of religionists, I was one day reading the Epistle of James, first chapter and fifth verse, which reads, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth unto all men liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him." Never did any passage of scripture come with more power to the heart of mine than this did at this time to mine. It seemed to enter with great force into every feeling of my heart. I reflected on it again and again, knowing that if any person needed wisdom from God, I did; for how to act I did not know, and unless I could get more wisdom than I then had, would never know; for the teachers of religion of the different sects understood the same passage so differently as to destroy all confidence in settling the question by an appeal to the Bible. At length I came to the conclusion that I must either remain in darkness and confusion, or else I must do as James directs, that is, ask of God. I at length came to the determination to "ask of God," concluding that if he gave wisdom to them that lacked wisdom, and would give liberally and not upbraid, I might venture. So, in accordance with this my determination to ask of God, I retired to the woods to make the attempt. It was on the morning of a beautiful clear day, early in the spring of eighteen hundred and twenty. It was the first time in my life that I had made such an attempt, for amidst all of my anxieties I had never as yet made the attempt to pray vocally.

After I had retired into the place where I had previously designed to go, having looked around me and finding myself alone, I kneeled down and began to offer up the desires of my heart to God. I had scarcely done so, when immediately I was seized upon by some power which entirely overcame me, and had such astonishing influence over me as to bind my tongue so that I could not speak. Thick darkness gathered around me, and it seemed to me for a time as if I were doomed to sudden destruction. But exerting all my powers to call upon God to deliver me out of the power of this enemy which had seized upon me, and at the very moment when I was ready to sink into despair and abandon myself to destruction, not to an imaginary ruin, but to the power of some actual being from the unseen world, who had such a marvelous power as I had never before felt in any being. Just at this moment of great alarm, I saw a pillar of light exactly over my head, above the brightness of the sun, which descended gradually until it fell upon me. It no sooner appeared than I found myself delivered from the enemy which held me bound. When the light rested upon me, I saw two personages, whose brightness and glory defy all description, standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name, and said (pointing to the other) "This is my beloved Son, hear him."

My object in going to inquire of the Lord was to know which of all the sects was right, that I might know which to join. No sooner therefore did I get possession of myself, so as to be able to speak, than I asked the personages who stood above me in the light, which of all the sects was right (for at this time it had never entered into my heart that all were wrong), and which I should join. I was answered that I must join none of them, for they were all wrong, and the personage who addressed me said, "That all their creeds were an abomination in his sight; that those professors were all corrupt, they draw near to me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me; they teach for doctrine the commandments of men, having a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof."

He again forbade me to join with any of them; and many other things did he say unto me which I can not write at this time. When I came to myself again, I found myself lying on my back, looking up into heaven.

Some few days after I had this vision, I happened to be in company with one of the Methodist preachers, who was very active in the before mentioned religious excitement, and conversing with him on the subject of religion, I took occasion to give him an account of the vision which I had had. I was greatly surprised at his behavior, he treated my communication not only lightly, but with great contempt, saying it was all of the devil, that there were no such things as visions or revelations in these days; that all such things had ceased with the apostles, and that there never would be any more of them.

I soon found, however, that my telling the story had excited a great deal of prejudice against me among professors of religion, and was the cause of great persecution which continued to increase; and though I was an obscure boy, only between fourteen and fifteen years of age and my circumstances in life such as to make a boy of no consequence in the world, and was told to join none of them, as they were all wrong, "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof."

In an age when everybody else had concluded that revelations had ceased, this obscure boy, still in his teens, when circumstances in life would only tend to his obscurity and to make him of no consequence in the world, began to have visions. This was as early as in the spring of 1820. It was in that first vision that he saw "two personages, whose brightness and glory defied all description," standing above him in the air, and one angel spoke to him, calling him by name, and, pointing to the other, said: "This is my beloved Son: Hear him." This description would answer to God and Christ. A part of their message to him was that all "sects were wrong," and that he should hold aloof from them.—Pp. 200, 201.

yet men of high standing would take notice sufficient to excite the public mind against me, and create a hot persecution, and this was common among all the sects, all united to persecute me.

It has often caused me serious reflection, both then and since, how very strange it was that an obscure boy, of a little over fourteen years of age, and one, too, who was doomed to the necessity of obtaining a scanty maintenance by his daily labor, should be thought a character of sufficient importance to attract the attention of the great ones of the most popular sects of the day, so as to create in them a spirit of the hottest persecution and reviling. But strange or not, so it was, and was often cause of great sorrow to myself. However it was, nevertheless, a fact, that I had had a vision. I have thought since, that I felt much like Paul when he made his defense before king Agrippa, and related the account of the vision he had when he "saw a light and heard a voice," still there were but few who believed him; some said he was dishonest, others said he was mad, and he was ridiculed and reviled; but all this did not destroy the reality of his vision. He had seen a vision; he knew he had, and all the persecution under heaven could not make it otherwise; and though they should persecute him unto death, yet he knew and would know unto his latest breath, that he had both seen a light, and heard a voice speaking to him, and all the world could not make him think or believe otherwise.

So it was with me, I had actually seen a light, and in the midst of that light I saw two personages, and they did in reality speak unto me, or one of them did; and though I was hated and persecuted for saying that I had seen a vision, yet it was true; and while they were persecuting me, reviling me, and speaking all manner of evil against me, falsely, for so saying, I was led to say in my heart, why persecute for telling the truth? I have actually seen a vision, and "who am I that I can withstand God?" or why does the world think to make me deny what I have actually seen? for I had seen a vision; I knew it, and I knew that God knew it, and I could not deny it, neither dare I do it; at least I knew that by so doing I would offend God and come under condemnation.

It will be observed that Mr. Traum makes use of but a very brief excerpt of Joseph's first vision,—just enough to serve his purpose, and just that portion, calculated by him, to incite feeling in the bosom of the "sects"; besides misrepresenting the language of Mr. Smith as to the object of his going into the woods to inquire of the Lord. Mr. Smith did not say he retired to the woods to ask the Lord "what course" he was "to take to become a Christian"; but to learn which one of the churches was right. "Who of all these parties are right? Or, are they all wrong together? If any one of them be right, which is it, and how shall I know it?"

As to the answer, in part, that "they were all wrong," of which the opposition always makes a great ado, it is no more an indication of "false prophet," imposture, and fanaticism in Joseph Smith, than it was in the Apostle John when he affirms:

"And we know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness."—1 John 5: 19. "We are of God; he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us."—1 John 4: 6.

Nor was it any more the evidence of "fraud" in these men, than in Alexander Campbell when he declared:

It behooves all men, then, who wish to be approved by the Lord at his coming, to be up and doing to purge and cleanse the Christian profession from every root and branch of sectarianism, and to endeavor to destroy those destructive sects that have been a sort of Pandora's box to the human race, that have filled the profession with hypocrites, the world with infidels, and retarded for so many centuries the conversion of both Jews and Gentiles to the Christian faith.—Christian System p. 103, edition 1840.

Again:

Every party in Christendom without respect to any of its tenets, opinions, or practices, is a heresy, a schism—unless there be such a party as stands exactly upon the apostles' ground. Then, in that case, it is a sect just in the sense of the Nazarenes, afterward called Christians,—and all others are guilty before the Lord, and must be condemned for their opposition to Christ's own party whose party we are, provided we hold fast all, and only all the apostolic traditions, and build upon the Bible.—Ibid., 104.

Once more:

The worshipping establishments now in operation throughout Christendom, increased and cemented by their respective voluminous confessions of faith, and their ecclesiastical constitutions, are not churches of Jesus Christ, but the legitimate daughters of that mother of harlots, the church of Rome.—Millennial Harbinger, vol. 3, p. 362.

The detailed account of the facts and circumstances of the "vision" is so unlike the many manufactured stories, that we wish them placed side by side to show the character, habits, integrity, and candor of the boy. It is also strange that Mr. Traum, who pretends to inform us how it all happened, should later deny that anything remarkable occurred to agitate the religious mind. He says:

The excitement (which, by the way, appears to exist alone in the mind of Smith) incident to it [the possession of the plates] caused all manner of tales to become current concerning the Smith family.—P. 40.

This statement carries with it its own refutation. If the excitement incident to securing the plates caused all manner of tales to become current concerning the Smith family, then this excitement did not exist in the mind of Smith alone. When a statement is made of great importance, should we not go directly to the one making it, instead of to one who is an enemy? Query, How can Mr. Traum "state a proposition as its friends will defend it, and in the exact language they employ," when he flings to the winds the testimony of these "friends," discredits their statements, and believes their enemies? "All manner of tales concerning the Smith family," Mr. Traum prefers to believe, rather than the straightforward narrative told by Mr. Smith; and in the acceptance of these contradictory and unreliable "tales," he constructs his "man of straw."

CONFUSION WORSE CONFOUNDED.

Chapter II of "Mormonism Against Itself" opens with a meager, misfit, and misappropriated write up under the title, "The Book of Mormon: What it is." The chapter presents the appearance of an incoherent mass of heterogeneous sentences, paragraphs, and quotations, so detached and foreign to the question that one must conclude that he ignores the law of contiguity of thought. His criticisms stand as disconnected as "The curfew tolls, my country 'tis of thee, once upon a midnight dreary, strike till the last armed foe, all blessings flow."

He presents his readers with a purported photographic cut of the title-page of the first or Palmyra edition of the Book of Mormon, 1830, and within the title-page, at the bottom, is the line: "Facsimile of title-page of first edition of Mormon Bible." Here is a gross misrepresentation. No such words occur on the title-page of any edition of the Book of Mormon.

UNJUST INSINUATIONS.

After Joseph Smith had received the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated, the most strenuous exertions were made to get them from him. Persecution became more bitter than before. Of this condition he says, page 40:

Slander gave way to "persecution," and this ultimately became so intolerable as to create the necessity for Smith to move from New York to Pennsylvania. The timely assistance of one Martin Harris, who made him a loan (?) of fifty dollars, enabled the coming "prophet" to make his removal to the home of Mrs. Smith's father.

In contrast with the above, we copy Joseph Smith's statement as follows:

The excitement, however, still continued, and rumor with her thousand tongues was all the time employed in circulating tales about my father's family, and about myself. If I were to relate a thousandth part of them it would fill up volumes. The persecution, however, became so intolerable that I was under the necessity of leaving Manchester, and going with my wife to Susquehanna County in the State of Pennsylvania. While preparing to start, (being very poor, and the persecutions so heavy upon us that there was no probability that we would ever be otherwise,) in the midst of our afflictions we found a friend in a gentleman by the name of Martin Harris, who came to us and GAVE me fifty dollars to assist us in our afflictions.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 18.

I have called attention to the thought by underscoring some words in both Elder Traum's and Mr. Smith's statements. Elder Traum calls it "a loan" with an interrogation point following. Mr. Smith says Harris "gave me fifty dollars." Mr. Smith's statement, so plain, and straightforward, relieves the situation of any insinuations that he was trying to borrow money, and shows, that in the face of adverse circumstances, he was "preparing to start" to Pennsylvania before Harris gave him fifty dollars. The fact that Mr. Harris "came to us" and "gave me" the fifty dollars, as stated by Mr. Smith, does not look as if he were trying to secure "a loan." But Mr. Traum's generosity in offering to state propositions "in the exact language" we employ, should not be overlooked.

It is astonishing, the pertinacity exercised by the opposers of "Mormonism" in "hashing" and "rehashing" the old stories set afloat in the vain effort to make points against the work of Joseph Smith. To slander or perpetrate slander, and misrepresent men and events, is a tacit concession that nothing scriptural can be urged as standing objections against the real status of the case.

THE PEEP STONE STORY.

And on page 42, he deftly applies the anti-Christian standard by accepting a mess of silly yarns spun on the spindle of gossip and falsehood, with reference to Joseph Smith digging for money, and divining through a peep stone for treasures. This stone, according to Traum, was dug from a well and loaned (?) to Joseph by Willard Chase.

But the Campbellite retail of this peep stone business is not uniform—members of Mr. Traum's religious household do not agree in peddling this stock in trade. Braden (see Braden-Kelley Debate) says,

"Joseph was loafing around." Traum says, Joseph, jr., . . . was engaged to 'assist' in the digging." Braden says, "Joseph Smith, sen., Joseph jr.'s father, was digging the well." Traum says, "Joseph Smith, jr., and his brother" were the ones "engaged." Braden says, "Joseph Smith, jr., stole the pebble from Chase's children." Traum, through his witness says, Chase "loaned" it to Joseph.

How is this, Samuel? Doesn't it look suspicious for our prospects? Better call the committee together again, and try to agree, before coming into court. Once more: After Chase loaned him the stone, Joseph "made so much disturbance" "looking into it," "among the credulous part of the community," that Chase "ordered the stone returned." Poor stone! Nice thing, that Mr. Traum can so easily reflect upon the hardy, stalwart, intelligent sons of the Empire State, and throw around them the air of superstition,—being duped, and "disturbed," because of credulity, by the play toy of a seventeen-year-old boy.

But upon this senseless stuff our critic builds. On page 43, he cites our attention to an article in the Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge. On page 1576, under the caption Mormon, is an account of a trial held before a justice of the peace in Chenango County, New York, involving the old story that Joseph Smith used a peep stone and was a money digger. We call attention to this to expose the unfair methods and morbid appetite of the opposition. Elder Traum quotes only the purported statement of Joseph Smith in this trial, and garbles it in a suspicious manner, from the way it is given in Herzog. The trial is said to have occurred before the Book of Mormon was translated, or eighteen months before the plates were secured.

Mr. Traum says that

Tullidge, in his "Life of Joseph the Prophet," incidentally confirms the record of such trial having been held, and devotes about eight pages of his volume to Joseph's account of the trial.—p. 43.

This is untrue. Neither Tullidge nor Joseph "incidentally" or regularly confirms the record of "such trial having been held." No such evidence, no such charges, no such witnesses, no such date has been confirmed by either Tullidge or Smith. The trial described by Tullidge, taken from the account given by Mr. Smith, was in June, 1830, four years after the date Mr. Traum uses. The Book of Mormon had been translated, put into the hands of the printer, and printed, before the date of the trial narrated by Tullidge. "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints" had been organized, the restored gospel promulgated, a number of people had accepted it, and "signs" were following "the believer" at the time, and the work of primitive Christianity, as it had been restored by angel ministration, was the real ground upon which the trial, as narrated by Joseph and Tullidge, poised.

I have written to various parties in New York requesting answers to the following questions: 1. "What date is given for the trial of Joseph Smith, according to the records, held in Bainbridge, Chenango County, New York?" 2. "What charges were brought against him?" 3. "Was the verdict 'guilty' or 'not guilty'?"

In answer I was invariably referred to some one else farther away. The clerk of Chenango County, residing at Norwich, wrote me under date of November 28, 1910, that "there is nothing on record, or file here, that would throw any light on the matter." He says, "As I understand the matter, the trial took place before a justice of the peace in the town of Bainbridge, New York, this county, and his docket would contain all the record there was of the trial."

He further states: "In conversation with Julien Scott of Bainbridge, who is the present incumbent of that office, I learn that the old records were destroyed by fire many years ago."

The clerk referred me to Mr. E. S. Moore of the Chenango Union, at Norwich. He had published an article on the matter. Writing to Mr. Moore I repeated my questions, and asked him to furnish answers. He wrote, under date of December 3, 1910, saying: "Mr. Ames [county clerk] is correct in saying that the Union published an account of the trial, but I am unable to find it, after a hasty examination, on any of the files. The publication was not made at the time of the trial, but years later, on some occasion when the press dispatches were dealing with Smith on some other affairs."

He referred me to Doctor Cake, of Afton, New York, whereupon I immediately wrote to that gentleman, repeating my questions, but eight weeks have elapsed, and I have heard nothing. This latter gentleman has written a brochure on Joseph Smith, and surely we thought he would be in possession of facts, but if he is, he seems to be holding a patent right on them.

The status of the case is, the authors have been confused in regard to both facts and dates, and in a spirit of prejudice, have slipped the noose around their own neck; efforts to disengage it binds it tauter, they feel the life gradually departing from their stories, and they feel perfectly willing to epitaph the yarn, requiescat in pace.

We prefer to accept the straightforward, uniform testimony of the one concerned in the trial, both as to the date, charges, arrest, and verdict, borne out by the counsel who defended him.

That Joseph Smith was "employed" to work by Josiah Staal, and as an "employee," did his employer's bidding, is reasonable, and that his employer set him to digging in what he supposed was a "silver mine" opened by the Spaniards in Pennsylvania, is the other side of this question.

In the History of Utah, by Bancroft, 1890, pages 44 and 45, is the following:

The elder Smith was poor, and the boys were sometimes obliged to hire themselves out as laborers. . . . Joseph went to work for Josiah Staal, in Chenango County [New York]. This man had what he supposed to be a silver mine at Harmony, Pennsylvania, said to have been worked by the Spaniards. Whither Joseph went with the other men to dig for silver. . . . After a month's fruitless effort Staal was induced by Joseph to abandon the undertaking.

This is substantially the same as related by Joseph:

In the month of October, eighteen hundred and twenty-five, I hired with an old gentleman, by the name of Josiah Staal, who lived in Chenango County, State of New York. He had heard something of a silver mine having been opened by the Spaniards in Harmony, Susquehanna County, State of Pennsylvania, and had previous to my hiring with him been digging in order if possible to discover the mine. After I went to live with him he took me amongst the rest of his hands to dig for the silver mine, at which I continued to work for nearly a month without success in our undertaking, and finally I prevailed with the old gentleman to cease digging after it. Hence arose the very prevalent story of my having been a money digger.—Church History vol. 1, p. 17.

Elder Traum says, "Joseph's description does not tally with the record of the court." Quite likely it does not [with Traum's revised record], but it tallies with the statement of his counsel in the trials. Mr. Reed, one of his counselors, was never a member of the church, but was ever a friend of Joseph Smith. At a state convention held in Nauvoo, Illinois, in 1844, he said:

"Those bigots soon made up a false accusation against him and had him arraigned before Joseph Chamberlain, a justice of the peace, a man that was always ready to deal out justice to all, and a man of great discernment of mind. The case came on about ten o'clock a. m. I was called upon to defend the prisoner. The prosecutors employed the best counsel they could get, and ransacked the town of Bainbridge and county of Chenango for witnesses that would swear hard enough to convict the prisoner; but they entirely failed. Yes, sir, let me say to you that not one blemish nor spot was found against his character. He came from that trial, notwithstanding the mighty efforts that were made to convict him of crime by his vigilant persecutors, with his character unstained by even the appearance of guilt. The trial closed about twelve o'clock at night. After a few moments' deliberation, the court pronounced the words "not guilty," and the prisoner was discharged.—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 101, 102.

In the same speech, Mr. Reed brought up the second effort to convict Mr. Smith, immediately following his acquittal, when he was taken to Broome County for a hearing. Of this second attempt Mr. Reed said:

"But alas! the Devil not satisfied with his defeat, stirred up a man not unlike himself, who was more fit to dwell among the fiends of hell than to belong to the human family, to go to Colesville and get another writ, and take him to Broome County for another trial. They were sure they could send that boy to hell, or to Texas, they did not care which; and in half an hour after he was discharged by the court he was arrested again and on the way to Colesville. I was again called on by his friends to defend him against his malignant persecutors, and clear him from the false charges they had preferred against him."—Ibid., p. 102.

The court was organized.

"The next morning about ten o'clock the court was organized. The prisoner was to be tried by three justices of the peace, that his departure out of the county might be made sure. . . . They employed the ablest lawyer in that county, and introduced twenty or thirty witnesses before dark, but proved nothing. They then sent out runners and ransacked the hills and vales, grog shops and ditches, and gathered together a company that looked as if they had come from hell and had been whipped by the soot boy thereof, which they brought forward to testify one after another, but with no better success than before, although they wrung and twisted into every shape, in trying to tell something that would criminate the prisoner. Nothing was proven against him, whatever. Having got through with the examination of their witnesses about two o'clock, in the morning, the case was argued about two hours. There was not one particle of testimony against the prisoner. No, sir, he came out like the three children from the fiery furnace, without the smell of fire upon his garments. The court deliberated upon the case for half an hour with closed doors, and then we were called in. The court arraigned the prisoner and said: 'Mr. Smith, we have had your case under consideration, examined the testimony and find nothing to condemn you, and therefore you are discharged.'"—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, pp. 550, 551; Church History, vol. 1, p. 103.

The basis of the onslaught against the Smith family was the claim that "God had spoken from on high," and the clergy were the ringleaders in the affair. But on the pretended basis of the "peep stone" theory, Mr. Traum charges that Joseph Smith was a "sorcerer," a "Simon Magus of the nineteenth century" (page 46). We would advise Mr. Traum to try his hand on an exegesis of the "silver cup" which Joseph, the viceregent of Egypt, possessed, into which he doubtless looked. The Bible states: "Is not this it in which my Lord drinketh, and whereby indeed he divineth?"—Genesis 44: 5. This "silver cup" method of revelating which Joseph of Egypt used, was made fun of, and characterized as an "Egyptian superstition." See Historical Illustrations, p. 48, by Prof. George Rawlinson, M. A.

JOSEPH'S SECOND VISION.

Just what Joseph Smith used in the translation of the Book of Mormon, is plainly pointed out in his second vision, which is here subjoined, as narrated by himself in the Pearl of Great Price, pp. 40-43. Also, History of the Church, vol. 1, pp. 12, 13, 14:

During the space of time which intervened between the time I had the vision, and the year eighteen hundred and twenty-three, (having been forbidden to join any of the religious sects of the day, and being of very tender years, and persecuted by those who ought to have been my friends, and to have treated me kindly, and if they supposed me to be deluded to have endeavored, in a proper and affectionate manner, to have reclaimed me,) I was left to all kinds of temptations, and mingling with all kinds of society, I frequently fell into many foolish errors, and displayed the weakness of youth, and the corruption of human nature, which I am sorry to say led me into divers temptations, to the gratification of many appetites offensive in the sight of God. In consequence of these things I often felt condemned for my weakness and imperfections; when on the evening of the above mentioned twenty-first of September, after I had retired to my bed for the night, I betook myself to prayer and supplication to Almighty God, for forgiveness of all my sins and follies, and also for a manifestation to me, that I might know of my state and standing before him; for I had full confidence in obtaining a divine manifestation, as I had previously had one.

While I was thus in the act of calling upon God, I discovered a light appearing in the room, which continued to increase until the room was lighter than at noonday, when immediately a personage appeared at my bedside, standing in the air, for his feet did not touch the floor. He had on a loose robe of most exquisite whiteness. It was a whiteness beyond anything earthly I had ever seen; nor do I believe that any earthly thing could be made to appear so exceedingly white and brilliant. His hands were naked, and his arms also, a little above the wrist; so, also, were his feet naked, as were his legs, a little above the ankles. His head and neck were also bare. I could discover that he had no other clothing on but this robe, as it was open, so that I could see into his bosom.

Not only was his robe exceedingly white, but his whole person was glorious beyond description, and his countenance truly like lightning. The room was exceedingly light, but not so very bright as immediately round his person. When I first looked upon him I was afraid, but the fear soon left me. He called me by name and said unto me, that he was a messenger sent from the presence of God to me, and that his name was Nephi. That God had a work for me to do, and that my name should be had for good and evil among all nations, kindreds, and tongues; or that it should be both good and evil spoken of among all people. He said there was a book deposited, written upon gold plates, giving an account of the former inhabitants of this continent, and the source from whence they sprang. He also said that, the fullness of the everlasting gospel was contained in it, as delivered by the Savior to the ancient inhabitants. Also, that there were two stones in silver bows (and these stones, fastened to a breastplate, constituted what is called the Urim and Thummim) deposited with the plates, and the possession and use of these stones was what constituted Seers in ancient or former times, and that God had prepared them for the purpose of translating the book.

After telling me these things, he commenced quoting the prophecies of the old Testament. He first quoted part of the third chapter of Malachi, and he quoted also the fourth or last chapter of the same prophecy, though with a little variation from the way it reads in our Bibles. Instead of quoting the first verse as it reads in our books, he quoted it thus: "For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly shall burn as stubble, for they that come shall burn them, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch;" and again, he quoted the fifth verse thus: "Behold, I will reveal unto you the Priesthood by the hand of Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." He also quoted the next verse differently: "And he shall plant in the hearts of the children, the promises made to the fathers, and the hearts of the children shall turn to their fathers; if it were not so, the whole earth would be utterly wasted at His coming."

In addition to these, he quoted the eleventh chapter of Isaiah, saying that it was about to be fulfilled. He quoted, also, the third chapter of Acts, twenty-second and twenty-third verses, precisely as they stand in our New Testament. He said that that prophet was Christ, but the day had not yet come when "they who would not hear his voice should be cut off from among the people," but soon would come.

He also quoted the second chapter of Joel, from the twenty-eighth to the last verse. He also said that this was not yet fulfilled, but was soon to be. And he further stated, the fullness of the Gentiles was soon to come in. He quoted many other passages of scripture, and offered many explanations which can not be mentioned here. Again, he told me that when I got those plates of which he had spoken (for the time that they should be obtained was not yet fulfilled) I should not show them to any person, neither the breastplate with the Urim and Thummim, only to those to whom I should be commanded to show them; if I did, I should be destroyed. While he was conversing with me about the plates, the vision was open to my mind that I could see the place where the plates were deposited, and that so clearly and distinctly, that I knew the place again when I visited it.

After this communication, I saw the light in the room begin to gather immediately around the person of him who had been speaking to me, and it continued to do so, until the room was again left dark, except just around him, when instantly I saw, as it were, a conduit open right up into heaven, and he ascended up until he entirely disappeared, and the room was left as it had been before this heavenly light had made its appearance.

I lay musing on the singularity of the scene, and marveling greatly at what had been told me by this extraordinary messenger, when, in the midst of my meditation, I suddenly discovered that my room was again beginning to get lighted, and in an instant, as it were, the same heavenly messenger was again by my bedside. He commenced, and again related the very same things which he had done at his first visit, without the least variation, which having done, he informed me of great judgments that were coming upon the earth, with great desolations by famine, sword, and pestilence, and that these grievous judgments would come on the earth in this generation. Having related these things, he again ascended as he had done before.

By this time, so deep was the impression made on my mind, that sleep had fled from my eyes, and I lay overwhelmed with astonishment at what I had both seen and heard; but what was my surprise when again I beheld the same messenger at my bedside, and heard him rehearse or repeat over again to me the same things as before, and added a caution to me, telling me that Satan would try to tempt me (in consequence of the indigent circumstances of my father's family) to get the plates for the purpose of getting rich. This he forbid me, saying, that I must have no other object in view in getting the plates but to glorify God, and must not be influenced by any other motive but that of building his kingdom, otherwise I could not get them. . . .

Convenient to the village of Manchester, Ontario County, New York, stands a hill of considerable size, and the most elevated of any in the neighborhood. On the west side of this hill, not far from the top, under a stone of considerable size, lay the plates deposited in a stone box; this stone was thick and rounding in the middle on the upper side, and thinner towards the edges, so that the middle part of it was visible above the ground, but the edge all round was covered with earth. Having removed the earth and obtained a lever which I got fixed under the edge of the stone, and with a little exertion raised it up; I looked in, and there indeed did I behold the plates, the Urim and Thummim, and the breastplate as stated by the messenger. The box in which they lay was formed by lying stones together in some kind of cement. In the bottom of the box were laid two stones crossways of the box, and on these stones lay the plates and the other things with them.

URIM AND THUMMIM.

We present this quite lengthy extract, that the true situation may appear. It is sublime in conception and grand in description. He quotes the angel as saying:

Also, that there were two stones in silver bows, and these stones fastened to a breastplate constituted what is called the Urim and Thummim, deposited with the plates, and the possession and use of these stones was what constituted seers in ancient or former times."

It is not material as to the word which common parlance places upon these things, whether "stones," "Urim," "Thummim," or "three-cornered diamonds," for the angel is reported as declaring that, "these two stones,"—the stones "deposited with the plates"—"fastened to a breastplate, constituted what is called "Urim and Thummim," and, further, "God had prepared them for the purpose of translating the book." "Urim and Thummim" appears to be a compound word, and is sometimes separated and used singly in the Bible, as for instance:

And he shall stand before Eleazar the priest, who shall ask counsel for him after the judgment of Urim before the Lord.—Numbers 27: 21.

And again:

And when Saul inquired of the Lord, the Lord answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets.—1 Samuel 28: 6.

Young's Analytical Concordance says:

"Urim, mentioned along with Thummim as something in the high priest's breastplate that gave an oracular response."

With these examples before us, in Bible times, it is not strange that Josephus would, in the common parlance of his day, call the Urim and Thummim the "breastplate and sardonyx."

The quotations also show that it was a means, in Bible times, of obtaining revelation from God, enabling those gifted with the power to use it, to reveal what was hitherto hidden or secret. A description of the breastplate is given in Exodus, chapter twenty-eight; and in verse 30 we have the following:

And thou shalt put in the breastplate of judgment the Urim and the Thummim; and they shall be upon Aaron's heart when he goeth in before the Lord: and Aaron shall bear the judgment of the children of Israel upon his heart before the Lord continually.

Doctor Robinson's Encyclopedia of the Bible says:

Urim and Thummim } light and perfection, or,
 } doctrine and judgment.

Herzog's Encyclopedia says:

Urim and Thummim } Greek, command and truth,
 } Vulgate, doctrina et veritas, are mentioned in connection with the breastplate of the high priest in a manner to imply that they were sensible objects, at least two in number, which were put into the breastplate, which indeed was a sort of bag. They were used as a sort of divine oracle.

Smith's Dictionary of the Bible gives the following:

Josephus and the rabbins supposed that the stones gave out the oracular answer, by preternatural illumination. But it seems to be far simplest and most in agreement with the different accounts of inquiries made by Urim and Thummim (1 Samuel 14: 3, 18, 19; 23: 2, 4, 9, 11, 12; 28: 6; Judges 20: 28; 2 Samuel 5: 23, &c.) to suppose that the answer was given simply by the Word of the Lord to the high priest (compare John 11: 51), when he had inquired of the Lord clothed with the ephod and breastplate.

Prof. Edward Hays Plumtree, M. A., says, in "Testimony of the Ages to the Divinity of the Bible," page 175:

"Urim and Thummim"—of these words, "Light and Truth" is the translation given in the Vulgate; but "Light and Perfection" would probably be the best English equivalent. . . . Seeing the Urim and Thummim are mentioned with no description or explanation, we must infer that they and their meaning were already known, if not to the other Israelites, at least to Moses. The high priest, in the use of the Urim and Thummim, fixing his gaze on "the gems oracular" that lay "on his heart," fixed his thoughts on the light and perfection which they symbolized, on the holy name inscribed on them. The act was itself a prayer, and, like other prayers, it might be answered. . . . All disturbing elements—selfishness, prejudice, and the fear of man—were eliminated. He received the insight which he craved.—Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, p. 3357, etc.

Elder Traum can see by the foregoing that the "Urim and Thummim" was "constituted" for a highly important purpose in the wisdom of God. Nothing is said, in the statements of those who were in a position to know, about the Book of Mormon being translated by or through any other visible means than the one set forth by the angel. Oliver Cowdery and Joseph Smith should know, as they were active factors in the work—Joseph as translator, and Oliver as the scribe.

Mr. Cowdery sets forth testimony of unimpeachable character, as to seeing the "Urim and Thummim." To W. W. Phelps, September 7, 1834, he writes:

Near the time of the setting of the sun, Sabbath evening, April 5, 1829, my natural eyes, for the first time beheld this brother [Joseph Smith]. He then resided in Harmony, Susquehanna County, Pennsylvania. On Monday, the 6th, I assisted him in arranging some business of a temporal nature, and on Tuesday, the 7th, commenced to write the Book of Mormon.

These were days never to be forgotten—to sit under the sound of a voice dictated by the inspiration of Heaven, awakened the utmost gratitude of this bosom! Day after day I continued, uninterrupted, to write from his mouth, as he translated with the Urim and Thummim, or, as the Nephites would have said, "Interpreters," the history, or record, called "the Book of Mormon."—Messenger and Advocate, vol. 1, no. 1: also Latter Day Saints' Herald, vol. 2, no. 3.

David Whitmer is represented as giving a Chicago Times reporter a version of how Joseph translated. Of the "stone," or "interpreters," Mr. Whitmer is reported as saying:

But a stone had been found with the plates, shaped like a pair of ordinary spectacles, though much larger, and at least half an inch in thickness, and perfectly opaque, save to the prophetic vision of Joseph Smith. On the tablets or plates were engraven the records of the tribe of Nephites, and the stone was the Urim and Thummim, by which the seers of old had deciphered the mysteries of the universe.—Chicago Times, August 7, 1875.

Joseph Smith, in a letter to Mr. John Wentworth, editor of the Chicago Democrat in 1842, published in the Times and Seasons, volume 3, page 707, says:

With the records [plates of the Book of Mormon] was found a curious instrument which the ancients called "Urim and Thummim," which consisted of two transparent stones set in the rim of a bow fastened to a breastplate. Through the medium of the Urim and Thummim I translated the record by the gift and power of God.

THE SAINTS' HERALD DOCTRINAL SERIES.

XI.—LAYING ON OF HANDS, FOR THE BESTOWAL OF THE HOLY GHOST.

BY ELDER J. F. CURTIS.

Wherever we have gone as ministers for Christ, we have insisted that the laying on of hands should be recognized as one of the principles of the doctrine of Christ; that it should be practiced now by the people of God; that the Holy Ghost was and is given as an abiding Comforter. We have met with opposition from those who claimed to believe the Bible, for they have been taught that this principle is not necessary now in receiving the Holy Spirit.

If we ask the question, Is it necessary to have faith in God to-day? we are answered by all who profess to believe in God that, Faith is just as necessary now as when Jesus and his disciples taught and practiced it. When we ask why they believe in the principle of faith, all are ready to cite us to the Bible and to point out the several places where the principle of faith is mentioned. Let us try the same rule in regard to the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Spirit.

In mentioning the principles of the doctrine of Christ, in Hebrews, sixth chapter, Paul speaks of "laying on of hands." He must have had some teaching or experience or both along this line or he would not have mentioned this principle as a doctrine of Christ. In Acts 9:17, we read:

And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him, said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost.

The Lord selected Ananias, who was a minister, and sent him to Paul. Two reasons are mentioned: First, that he might receive his sight; second, that he might be "filled with the Holy Ghost." It would be folly to argue that the Lord made a mistake in selecting a man that believed in the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Spirit. "For the Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart."—1 Samuel 16: 7. So the Lord knows who to select, and he did select just that kind of a minister to visit Paul.

Paul, in a vision, had seen "a man named Ananias coming in, and putting his hand on him." (Acts 9: 12.) In the tenth verse of this chapter, Ananias has a vision from the Lord directing him to go unto Saul of Tarsus. Notice the high spiritual standing of Ananias before God. He is blessed with a vision; he is sent of God. All this is done that Paul might know of God's work. Under the hands of Ananias, Paul not only received his sight, but was "filled with the Holy Ghost." No wonder then, that he speaks of it as a principle of the doctrine of Christ. "For I am the Lord, I change not," is still recorded in Malachi 3: 6.

There are those to-day who claim to be ministers for Christ that the Lord could not use on such a mission as Ananias took, because they are non-believers in both visions and the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost. Ananias was sent by the Lord. He taught and practiced the laying on of hands. Who sends men out to-day to teach against this principle? Surely not God, for he is unchangeable. Paul is now converted to the gospel of Christ, also chosen as a minister. Listen to the words of the Master:

I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee; delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee.

What for?

To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me.—Acts 26: 18.

Who could ask for more to-day? Dear reader, do you want your spiritual eyes opened? Do you want to turn from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God? Do you want your sins forgiven and an inheritance among them that are sanctified? If so, go with me to Acts, chapter 19, and learn how Paul accomplished this for others. Here, some had been baptized by some one whose work God did not approve of by sending the Holy Spirit. This man did not possess the knowledge to turn them from "darkness to light." Notice Paul's question to them, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" How dark their answer, "We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost." Again Paul asks, "Unto what then were ye baptized?" And they said, unto John's baptism. How dark the answer; how much in need of some one to teach them the light of Christ. They were misinformed as to John's baptism, for John said:

I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear, he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire.—Matthew 3: 11.

These persons had never heard John preach or they would have known about the Holy Ghost. How eagerly they must have listened to the teaching of Christ by Paul and his rehearsal of the teaching of John. Light was coming, darkness must vanish from those honest hearts. God's servant was reflecting the gospel light. After baptizing them in the name of the Lord, Paul followed the example of Ananias and placed his hands upon them. "The Holy Ghost came on them, and they spake with tongues and prophesied." Surely their spiritual eyes were opened. Now they could testify of God's power. They had received it. What a wonderful change. No wonder Paul says:

I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek.—Romans 1: 16.

Suppose some one asked them the question, now, "Have you received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" How differently they would answer and testify of the gift of tongues and prophecy, and the power of the Holy Spirit that they had received through the laying on of Paul's hands. Was Paul a deceiver? No. Was he teaching and practicing a false doctrine? No. If so, God would never have approved of it by giving his Holy Spirit.

Reader, this is a plain case. Paul represented Christ and his doctrine correctly. Those that received his teaching were turned from "darkness to light." Just the thing we need to-day. Again, Paul says:

But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed.—Galatians 1: 8, 9.

In the gospel that they had received, they received the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Spirit. He who leaves this out will rest under this curse. In the eighth chapter of Acts, Philip went down to the city of Samaria and preached Christ unto them. They received his message and were baptized, but this was not all, he prepared them for something else, in addition to baptism. We read:

Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John: who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost: (For as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.) Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost. And when Simon saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money, saying, Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost.—Acts 8: 14-19.

Nothing could be plainer than the fact that these people in accepting Christ, accepted the laying on of hands as one of his doctrines.

Reader, have you had Christ preached unto you? Did he who preached Christ unto you tell you of this doctrinal principle of laying on of hands? If not, why not? How strict the command to the apostles:

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.—Matthew 28: 19, 20.

In teaching "all things" they taught and practiced the laying on of hands, and God approved of it and gave his Holy Spirit to those on whom hands were laid. It won't do to say that only apostles had this power, because we have already seen that Ananias laid hands on Paul, and Ananias was not an apostle. Neither will it do to say that it was for the first twelve apostles only, because Paul afterward became an apostle and practiced this principle, as we have shown, and God approved of it by giving his Spirit to those on whom hands were laid. Others may have received a portion of the Spirit, as there are degrees of the Spirit, as well as degrees of light and heat; but as the Spirit guides into all truth (John 16: 18), this principle being a part of all truth, the Spirit will lead us to accept the laying on of hands. The first time I administered this ordinance, I felt the power of God attending it, and this has been repeated to me many times during my labors as a minister for Christ.

"And Joshua the son of Nun was full of the spirit of wisdom; for Moses had laid his hands upon him." —Deuteronomy 34: 9. These servants of God all agree on this point and we are glad to know that the true church of Christ to-day still is contending for the faith and doctrine once delivered to the Saints.

Challenge.

This little child, so white, so calm,
Decked for her grave,
Encountered death without a qualm.
Are you as brave?

So small, and armed with naught beside
Her mother's kiss,
Alone she slept, unterrified,
Into the abyss.

"Ah," you explain, "she did not know—
This babe of four—
Just what it signifies to go."
Do you know more?

Reply to Sister Mercer's Letter.

As the Editor hoped Clara Sheffer's letter would call forth replies from mothers who might be able to offer helpful suggestions, I am a mother who has passed through various hard phases of life both before and after coming into the church. I can only advise a mother to put her whole trust in God, first, last, and all the time, in any condition, under all circumstances, everywhere, and in all places. Your only strength is in the Lord. Secret prayer is the key. Patience, firmness, and divine guidance is what you most need. "Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him; and he shall bring it to pass."

Sr. Clara M. Mercer's case appeals to me in particular, and if I can help by giving some of my own experiences and a few suggestions, I shall thank God for the privilege. Dear sister, go straight to the Savior for help and comfort. Consider his words. He said, "My words that I speak, they are spirit and they are life." "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

You know he is able to restore your hearing, even in both your ears. Then you express a fear or doubt as to his willingness to heal you. Do not fear or doubt his love. His is the only perfect love that casteth out fear. He said, "Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." That kingdom is a condition of the spiritual mind. The conditions of joy, peace, and righteousness in the Holy Ghost. I can not believe that it is God's will that anyone should suffer or be afflicted with deafness, blindness, tumor or cancer. I really believe it is a hindrance to receiving healing while entertaining such thoughts. We can not get in touch with the divine love that heals by keeping such thoughts. We should go to the Father with confidence, as a child goes to his loving parent, and when we ask for bread we should not expect a stone. We should not think of our heavenly Father as afar off. Think of him as ever near, a present help in every time of need. God is the healer, prayer and faith the avenue through which you are brought in touch with the divine love that casts out fear and heals the sick. Trust in the Lord, is the only thing to do. The trouble in your head is catarrh. Taking medicine can not help your head and may ruin your stomach. Don't put confidence in medicine just because a Latter Day Saint doctor prescribes it. They do not know more than other doctors about physical man, and sometimes not as much. Why not use the God given remedies as directed by the word of wisdom. Anyway we ought to have enough common sense with our faith to do all we can for ourselves. God will give approval in the blessing of a cure.

Use the consecrated oil for catarrh in your head, use it persistently in your ears; put a little up the nostrils when it is difficult to breathe through the nose, as is often the case, and the membranes are painful and sore, and keep using the oil.

When I was a child I had earache a great deal. When I came to womanhood my head was so sensitive to cold that I dared not expose my ears to the least draft of cold air. Later my hearing became so confused that I could not understand common conversation. How annoying it is to have to be told over again, then have to pay strict attention to understand what is said! I never was altogether deaf unless I took cold; then sometimes I was deaf for weeks. Several years ago I began to have neuralgia and lost the sight of my left eye. The prayers of the Saints saved my right eye. Then catarrh developed. I began to use the oil as I have advised you to do. There was no church ordinance about it, for I was isolated, but the results were beyond my expectations. It cured the catarrh and my confused hearing. My daughter, who does not belong to the church, used it twenty years ago in a bad case of bloody flux, and was cured instantly. She now uses it for piles with the best of results.

I have just gone back to the 22d of March to read Bro. D. S. Seavey's letter. The very first few lines show the scientific difference in your case. It is not a physical difference, for they are similar. The difference is in the mental condition of the spiritual mind and environment. Brother Seavey is isolated and surrounded by the hardest kind of modern Christianity. (I suppose that means rigid orthodoxy.) None to stand by him but the great Creator of the universe. He was alone with the Father and appreciated that standing by him. He had trusted God with all his strength, and enjoyed the fruition of his trust. You have always been environed by church privileges and ordinances, have had the advantages of administration, and depended on its benefits as a matter of course. Having had all these ordinances to depend on and easy at hand, you remained passive, was not thrown on your own spiritual resources as was Brother Seavey.

I am not finding fault or blaming you. I am trying to show you the scientific side. Jesus never healed anyone without their hearty consent and their will. The right kind of will is what brings them in condition to be healed. In your request for prayers, you twice specified the want of the sisters of the Prayer Union. Now I may not belong to the Prayer Union, for I do not belong to any clique or club. I only know I am in my Father's household and am satisfied. I always pray silently for everyone who sends in requests as soon as I read them in the HERALD lest I forget. I have always been isolated, and when I did live near was not able to attend church. The community in which I am surrounded is far worse than rigid orthodoxy. I am not going to complain, the Lord is good to me, has stood by me the last four years, as I was promised in my patriarchal blessing, the realization of which fills my heart with thankfulness. Whenever we become exclusive we get out of the sphere of the Savior's love.

A SISTER.

"Go bury thy sorrow" may be good advice, but do not form the habit of inviting all your friends to the obsequies every time such an interment takes place. There is danger in the habit—danger that you may be tempted to dig up the cadaverous thing, nurse it back to the semblance of life, just in order that you may shine as the chief mourner at another well-attended funeral.—Selected.

SAPULPA, OKLAHOMA, July 6, 1911.

Editors Herald: Three years or more ago, by order of the court (and for reasons) my name was changed from Sherwin to that of Logan, my former name. There seems to be some confusion over the matter, and I can't very well be two persons at the same time, so I take this means of letting the Saints who knew me by the name of Sherwin know that it is Logan now.

MRS. HELEN LOGAN.

MAPLETON, KANSAS, July 17, 1911.

Dear Herald: It is the Mapleton Branch now. We were organized into a branch July 16, Apostle I. N. White in charge. Our organization is undoubtedly the outcome of the faithful lives and neighborly kindness of Bro. Lee Quick and family, who for years were the only Saints in this community.

Tiring of the lonesomeness and isolation Brother Quick decided two years ago to make one more and a final effort to convert some of his neighbors, among whom he had been told were some faithful ones. Accordingly, calling a fellow missionary to his aid, they commenced the effort, Brother Quick declaring that, were they as unsuccessful as former efforts had been, he would sell his home and move his family to a more congenial community. The meeting commenced and was almost concluded without, seemingly, any result, when, just as they were about to give up in despair several gave their names for baptism. Little by little their light began to shine; they organized a Sunday school, and held meetings as often as possible. It finally came to the knowledge of Saints in other places, of the excellent opportunities to secure homes in the rich valley of the Osage at very reasonable prices and at the same time secure that communion of Saints that seems so necessary to our spiritual welfare.

So here have gathered Saints from all directions, some even coming from Independence, until, yesterday we organized with thirty-four charter members and seventeen more who were entitled to have become charter members but for the fact that the branches holding their membership were slow in granting their letters.

The day was ideal, a cool northerly breeze bringing comfort to the Saints who gathered at the hall in Mapleton for the organization, which took place at two o'clock Sunday afternoon. H. C. Hughes was elected as presiding elder, W. W. Budworth was designated by the Spirit as the one called to the office of priest, as was Bert Weeks to the office of teacher, also Roy Hughes to the office of deacon. The three were chosen to fill the respective places and were ordained under the hands of Apostle I. N. White and Elders Anderson and Hughes. Sr. Ella Brown was chosen chorister, Sr. Athalia Hughes as organist, while the writer was elected scribe; so if any of the Saints desire to know anything concerning this part of the "regions round about" write to the undersigned, who will gladly answer all letters and furnish any information desired.

There is little or no prejudice among the people of this community; in fact, they treat us with the utmost kindness. The best people of the town telling us that if the Saints now here are a fair sample of Latter Day Saints that they hope more will come.

We have no church building, however the hall in which we meet belongs to Brother Hughes, thus insuring us a meeting place without danger of its being taken from us.

Although we have thought it very dry here this summer, Brother White tells us that it is not so dry here as at Independence; and now as I write a fine rain is falling with good prospects of continuing all day.

Dear Saints, remember in your prayers the little branch of the vine that God has planted here in Mapleton, that we may ever avoid that internal discord that is so fatal to the spiritual welfare of the members, and that we may always enjoy the peace and brotherly love that exists among us at this time.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

R. E. STONE.

STOKES BAY, ONTARIO, April 18, 1911.

Dear Editor: We request prayers for our son and brother, who has got something wrong with his mind, for he thinks he sees things, something singing, and sometimes using a knife. He is of the faith and tried to live it. We send this in great faith.

HARRIET AND CHESTHAY WYOUCH.

GLOUCESTER, 85 ROSEBERY AVENUE, July 3, 1911.

Editors Herald: I must again say that the various letters, editorials, and articles by the different ones are altogether of the right kind, and are a source from which encouragement is gathered as well as education.

We have had a good time in our district conference held at Gloucester some little time past; the good Spirit was felt by outsiders to a very marked degree. This is to us a good sign. The city of Gloucester has a nice branch and is active for the advancement of the truth in a practical way and I trust they will not grow weary in well doing.

Bro. E. B. Morgan, E. J. Trapp, Leonard Allen, Alf. Jones, T. Trapp, George MacKay, and the writer have been sounding the message in the streets of this historic city of Gloucester, the brethren and sisters of the branch standing by to assist us by their presence and prayers. For myself I wish to say that I feel well in the work and want to tell your readers that in preaching on the street Sunday evening of July 2 that I felt the Spirit come upon me in such measure as I never have before in the street work. Who shall say that with that power with us we shall not accomplish much, even in street preaching? I realize that we stand in great need of the power of God. Eloquence and grammatical precision are of great value, but let me have the Spirit first, and all we can of the latter afterwards.

The Utah Church have two elders in this city. In the matter of "two by two" they are correct.

We conducted several outdoor services on the same street in which the above elders are staying, making known the difference; threats and challenges were made by some of their converts and friends; predictions were made that I would be seen running away like a licked dog. Your readers can guess how that might be. However, Elder E. B. Morgan and myself called on the elders and they meekly denied that anyone had authority to issue a challenge for them to us. There the matter ended. At the time their friends boasted of their willingness I said, If they will meet me, they will have the credit of being the bravest of over thirty of their clan. I have sometimes thought we were too hard upon them, and that probably the things we accused them of were only barbarous relics of the past, but a recent visit to one of their three months old converts convinced me that polygamy, plurality, and exaltation of gods, celestial marriage, with other differences are indeed very lively issues.

So the war must go on with these slanderers and vilifiers of the character of Joseph Smith. We are pleased with the increase in the missionary staff for this mission, and the fact of Bishop May coming over, but I trust that our financial embarrassments will not increase with the increase; if it does, some of us will be obliged to retire from the field. I believe that there are some in my field that could do more than they are doing, and trust they will, so that success will be certain.

THOS. JONES.

AMHERST, NOVA SCOTIA, July 17, 1911.

Dear Saints: I have had the misfortune of losing my little brother a few months ago. My mother, who has been more or less afflicted with rheumatism for the last twenty years, is now almost without the use of her limbs, and the doctors have given up hope. My sister is also afflicted with a germ eating her tonsils. I therefore request and humbly beg that you will remember them in your next prayer meetings, that they may again enjoy the happiness of health.

RALPH W. JOHNSON.

ONAWA, IOWA, July 15, 1911.

Editors Herald: On the second Wednesday in August, the Saints everywhere are requested to ask Almighty God to strengthen the mind of Violet M. Foye, now an inmate of the feeble-minded asylum at Glenwood, Iowa, so that she may be able to take care of herself when she grows up to be a woman. Surely the God of Israel will hear his people and restore little Violet's mind to a self-supporting condition.

N. LINDSEY.

OELRICHS, SOUTH DAKOTA, July 7, 1911.

Dear Herald: A short time ago, I sent a request for tracts and sermons to be sent to Mr. Henry Fisher, of Oelrich. On the afternoon of July 5, he committed suicide by shooting himself through the head. He hadn't been in his right mind for three or four days. He left a note saying he would have to go to the insane asylum and he couldn't do it, or words to that effect. I suppose there have been a number who have sent him papers. With love to the readers of the HERALD.

EFFIE J. DENTON.

Jots By the Wayside.

Copious rains and cooling breezes have come cheering the heart and gladdening the spirit of the husbandman. The drought, however, has ruined much of the corn in this southern country. Gardens are non est; potatoes almost a total failure, so dear on the market at the present time that they are almost sold by the slice and "Old Sol" smiles in all his blistering glory at the havoc done. We acknowledge him king and he rules with a hot iron, yet the eternal burnings can scarcely subdue the indomitable will of man. Replanting is on and in all probabilities there will yet be plenty and to spare. Wheat is good and the average yield will be realized, and with new gardens coming on, no distress is in sight, but every prospect pleases.

A grand reunion at the beautiful Lincoln Park, Pittsburg, Kansas, August 11 to 21, good speakers, plenty of room and ample accommodations are assured. We have been visiting the branches, looking after their necessities and wants. Some are in very good condition, others not so good, yet as a whole we are encouraged. There are multitudes of noble, self-sacrificing Saints in the Spring River District, doing nobly and well, and it speaks well of the noble efforts of our predecessors and the untiring efforts of officers and members. We try to be absolutely impartial, but there are streaks in human nature that would baffle the winged angels in their lovable attitudes. The freak man will stand back for the want of something good to do, objecting to all progress, and just "knock."

The good work of T. W. Williams and H. W. Smith at Webb City is still in evidence, and we here venture a suggestion. Such brethren as Williams, Rushton, Evans, and a few others, should not be tied down to any one branch or district, but be made free lances to occupy at will and in harmony with Saints everywhere. It is a very popular movement of our times, and those who are able and successful on those lines would keep us in the foreground. Do I hear a knock?

T. W. CHATBURN.

A Year in the Ozarks.

I have thought perhaps our experience might be of benefit to some others, seeking cheap homes. A year ago in March, they loaded our loose property in a car and we started on our journey to make our home in the South. When we arrived at Thayer, Missouri, the weather was delightful, but the leaves did not seem to be as far advanced as in Iowa, and the rocks greeted our gaze in every direction. Some places, full grown trees would seem to have grown out of the solid rock, and as the vines hung from one tree to another over the streams, it looked very artistic and beautiful, and we felt quite delighted with our new home. The streams start from springs that are found here and there over the country and branch out into large streams, or in many places small rivers. They are pleasing to the eye of the stranger, but they are not so attractive when the hard rains come (it doesn't stop to rain, it just pours), and they flood the country, and the farmer can get to town only on horseback for several days or a week; for in that country they don't believe in bridges. Everybody must wade the streams, high or low.

We purchased a farm two and one half miles from town, one hundred and twenty-six acres of land, with forty acres in peaches, and we were sadly disappointed to find that our peach crop was a failure. We found it to be the same old story repeated every year, with few exceptions. The country is full of peach farms, but peaches are scarce because the first two weeks in February the weather was like June and then it froze for a week, spoiling the fruit as the buds were ready to burst forth into bloom. This is repeatedly the case, so they told us. Some who had peach trees seven years old had never had a peach from them. The low land is very good, but the price ranges from sixty to seventy dollars an acre. The rolling land is covered with rock. You would be surprised to see the corn growing amongst the rocks, with scarcely any soil, but the average amount of corn to the acre is fifteen to twenty-five bushels. My companion said on the ground he had planted, he should have had about five hundred bushels where he only had about two hundred.

Another drawback to the country is the heavy dew that falls from April to November. In the morning it is impossible to get about without getting soaked and it does not dry up till about nine o'clock, making it hard to raise chickens. Then there are the pests that infest the country. First in the spring comes the ticks that are not very pleasant to deal with; then the fleas come, those spry little hoppers; and the chiggers with their millions made it very interesting for me, though some do not mind them. Then there are the snakes and hawks, that make it very trying to raise chickens, and many other such things which infest the country.

Taking it all together, with the extreme heat, I felt that if people understood the country better, and knew its drawbacks, there would not be so many disappointed people go there, for we did not know a neighbor for miles but what wanted to sell. But for the kindness of the Lord, in answer to prayer and fasting, we might have been there yet. I do not wish to injure any, or to run down the country, but the half has not been told. I will close, hoping these few lines may be of benefit to some.

In bonds of love,

MARY HARTSHORN.

LAMONI, IOWA, July 10, 1911.

Full many a gem of purest ray serene,
The dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear;
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

News From Missions

From the "Intermountain Region."

To the readers of our excellent papers we wish to say that the past month or six weeks has been a very busy time with us in this field. Our diary shows a total of eighty services attended since June 1, and three baptisms performed. Individually we have preached thirty-five times since that date, and enjoyed a goodly degree of the Spirit in our ministrations.

These baptisms are the outcome, not of special individual work, but of the leadings of that Spirit that guides into all truth. Bro. and Sr. William E. Winkworth and son William E. jr., have long been members of the Mormon Church, he holding and exercising the office of high priest, but for many years they have been trying to live the gospel according to the written word, remembering "the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon, not only to say but to do according to that that is written." When they commenced this independent course of conduct, which was taken up as the result of the conviction that the books condemned polygamy, they were promptly and repeatedly warned by the priesthood of the Mormon body that they were on the way to apostasy, but they were of the number who "know my voice, and a stranger they will not follow," and have been led by the Spirit of truth in a remarkable way, and to-day are rejoicing in the truth. In accordance with the instruction of our mission president, Bro. J. W. Rushton, we ordained Brother Winkworth, sr., to the office of elder. This occurred, as also his baptism, the 9th inst. That day was a busy day here, as Sundays usually are, but we had Bro. G. J. S. Abels with us, and he proved an able helper indeed, speaking twice in the hall and twice in the open air to good crowds and with good liberty. Come again, Brother Abels!

During the past month we have enjoyed a visit from two of our general missionaries and their wives, as they passed through en route for their respective fields. They were Bro. and Sr. Paul Hanson, en route for Los Angeles, and Bro. and Sr. J. B. Barrett, on their way to Honolulu, Hawaii. We need not say that both events were enjoyed by us. If we remember aright, Brother Hanson made his maiden effort at street work while with us, giving us, and the audience at Draper, an excellent sermon the night of June 12. He also spoke for us in the hall the night of the 11th, and we enjoyed his lecture on the "Holy Land" very much. Brother and Sister Barrett were with us the 9th inst., and we were glad to hear him talk to the Saints of their duties in this work. We could but reflect that this was one of our Sunday school pupils of other days, when Sister Walker insisted that we should try our hand at teaching the class of boys in the Lamoni school. That class' energies would find some way of expression, and the result was that they were known as "the bad boys' class," but we are glad to say that they lost this namer after we became acquainted with them.

Well, we have had a series of branch and Sunday school picnics here of late, the result of an effort to utilize our public holidays to get better acquainted. Our branch being made up mainly of the working class, have not many opportunities to get together for pleasant social intercourse, outside of the regular services, and as "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," we are trying this plan. It seems to work nicely so far, Decoration and Fourth of July days having been so spent by us in Liberty Park. We are to observe State Day here also. That comes on the 24th inst. We have not decided upon the location of this event, but will choose some place easily accessible to the city. Besides these picnics, our junior Bible class gave an evening lawn party in the park lately, having the twofold object of passing a pleasant evening and raising a little money with which to purchase books for the Sunday school library. Both objects were attained. Then our Ladies' Aid occupied last Friday night at the hall in giving a "bazaar." The result of this, besides in pleasure enjoyed by all, was about $26 to go into our building fund here. We think our branch is waking up.

One of our workers, Charles S. Chase, is working in Ogden at present, and we miss him in our work here, but trust that our loss may be Ogden's gain.

Our reunion in Provo canyon is set for August 5 to 15. Come and enjoy this event with us. At present we are still campaigning the surrounding towns during the week nights with excellent liberty. We have struck, so far, Sandy, Draper, Riverton, Harriman Fort, and Lark. With the exception of Riverton our reception in these places has been very satisfactory. We think to strike East Bountiful to-morrow night. We did some preaching here about seven years since. Bro. William H. Kelley will remember it as the place where we listened for three hours and fifteen minutes to an elder of the Mormon Church, preaching a sermon trying to prove the rightfulness of the doctrine polygamy. He may remember, further, how he was inflicted with a reply by the writer of this, and that that reply was of equal length. Whew! Well; this comes of being on the "firing line."

Now just a word in relation to our street campaign in these small towns. Nothing contributes more to our success in securing an audience than the fact that we have our trained singers with us, and since our son Charles is not with us, we are obliged to depend upon others to take his place. Bro. Hiram Swenson is standing nobly by us in this branch of the work, and when possible is with us as our tenor singer. We go into a new place, put a tract with a verbal invitation to our open air concert and street lecture, in each house, and the result is, usually, that we have nearly the whole town represented at our service. This is our advertisement and it draws them back again, some saying of the preaching, "It was grand," and some saying frankly to us, "We enjoy your singing if we don't like your preaching." But like Paul of old, we rejoice that Christ is preached, even though it may, sometimes, make some contention.

And, say, you should see them come up to the auto and reach out and ask for tracts, even though some do say of certain of our publications in this line, "It just made me boil when I read that tract." Well, boiling is a fairly good way of clarifying some substances, and it may help them in their doctrines. It seems to have done so to a great degree since we first were sent to this field. Many things that the elders stood boldly for then, are scarcely ever referred to by them now. May the heaven continue to work is our prayer.

Friday evening, July 14, Religio officers elected as follows: President, H. P. W. Keir; vice-president and member library board, your correspondent; secretary and organist, C. E. Cotton; treasurer and chorister, Anna Kier. We hope and pray that the society will prosper now that the new officers take their places, and that everyone will consider it their duty to lend what assistance they can.

Sunday, July 16, Bro. E. D. Rogers, of Manteno, Illinois, occupied in the morning, taking for his text, "The second coming of Christ." We may not know the day nor the hour, but we can be prepared for the change, which is our full duty.

Elder Lester Wildermuth, of Plano, Illinois, spoke on "The signs of the times" in the evening. How terrifying the thought that so many of those who claim to be following the Lord, will be numbered with the "foolish virgins."

We are pleased to note among our worshipers Sunday, Sr. Maggie Kelso and her daughter, Sr. Addison Frantz, also little Margaret and Vivian, daughters of Sister Frantz, all of South Haven, Michigan. How much those deprived of services appreciate the opportunity, and how much loss will those suffer who are neglecting their privileges?

"Look high, O soul! For what is earth but dust,
The fleeting shadow of the better things?
The heavens are thine, if thou wilt use thy wings,
And sighs are songs, if thou wilt only trust.

"Aim high, O soul! For on the higher forms
Is always room, while lower ranks are filled;
Who climbs the heights finds all earth's noises stilled,
And a sweet calm and light above the storms.

Be high, O soul! Scorn what is low and base;
'Child of a king' they call thee; be a king,
And troops of vassals will their tribute bring,
To crown thee heir of glory, child of grace."

Independence, Missouri.

Although the thermometer has for several days been registering from 98 to 103 degrees, we have not, in this section, failed to continue in the line of duty.

An admiral's salute of seventeen guns, the playing of the band, the waving of flags, and the sailing flotilla of small craft were a part of the welcome for the steamer Chester and its crew and cargo. This was on the 22d of June, and meant the beginning of Missouri River traffic, a lower freight rate, and many factories for Port Kansas City. In spite of the shallow water or sandbars, and driftwood of telephone poles and huge trees which at times crowd the channel, our steamer glides over the eddying currents of the Big Muddy, making six or seven miles an hour without effort.

On the 24th there was held at the home of Bishop May a reception at which there were over fifty present. A very pleasant evening was spent by all, while singing, social chat, etc., were merrily engaged in. They also presented Brother and Sister May with a slight token of kindly esteem. Brother and Sister May have since departed on a missionary trip to the British Isles.

Sunday, the 25th, was replete with interesting features. The Saints listened with interest to an instructive testimony by Brother May at the eight o'clock prayer meeting, while he spoke of the great work that was to be done, and counseled them to be faithful and put their implicit trust in God. Brethren Luff and Guinand held forth morning and evening. At 1.30 p. m. five were baptized and were confirmed at the afternoon meeting, the attendance being unusually small. It was a highly spiritual occasion, however, and through Brother Kemp several received much cheer and comfort. At the close of the singing of "Lead, kindly light," Brother Luff (after requesting prayers in his behalf) broke forth in song, beginning with the words, "Sweet unto me the voice of supplication," and this song appears in the columns of the Ensign of June 29, 1911. The sentiment is uplifting and the Saints might do well to substitute it for "Lead, kindly light."

On the afternoon of the 27th, the Ladies' Aid met at Sister May's home for a little farewell social, presented her with tokens of their love and sympathy, and after refreshment was served, they separated, having spent a delightful afternoon together.

The mid-week prayer meetings have been well attended of late, and many prayers been offered for the sick and afflicted. Let us pray in faith and pray unceasingly.

Although the Saints had had great reason to be glad because of the reviving showers of Sunday, the 9th, the temperature on Monday returned to its wonted degree of 89 to 102.

On Tuesday, the 11th, the funeral service of the little infant child of Sr. Ruth T. Snyder took place at Brother Carson's rooms, and on the following afternoon occurred the obsequies, at the church, of our beloved Sr. Grace Shutte, Brother Garrett preaching the sermon. He pointed out many excellent traits in her character, and spoke of her as having been "steadfast and full of integrity" before the Lord." The preacher's eulogy was very impressive, being full of instruction to the Saints present, and of comfort and consolation to her immediate friends and relatives. The text was taken from 2 Timothy 4:7, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith."

Brother Bond presided at the Wednesday evening meeting, at which there were 140 present. His thoughts on "the necessity of cultivating sympathy for the unfortunate" presented a stimulus for the testimony bearers who took up and followed the theme, and the meeting was a lively one.

On the 13th, the remains of a little two-year-old daughter of Brother Creviston, from Rosedale, were brought here for interment in Mound Grove. Brother Garrett was again called on for the funeral sermon, and Bro. C. D. Carson attended to his duties with the usual painstaking care in every particular. Four young girls in white were the pall-bearers, and the Saints viewed with sympathy the little form, which looked sweet and peaceful, after listening to a comforting discourse on the subject of the resurrection, and the purity and innocence of a blameless life.

We have been called to hear, lately, of many serious occurrences ending in death, both at home and abroad. We refer to the sad ending of a young man by suicide, on the 12th, in this city, and also to the terrible disaster on the 13th, by fire, in the mining districts of Canada.

Sunday, the 16th, was a delightful day, full of the usual happy incidents accompanying faithful service in the Lord's house. At the meetings there was a good attendance, and the usually excellent interest was taken by young and old. Bro. A. V. Closson gave an instructive review of the Sunday school lesson, The Church of Christ, and there were recorded 750 present. Bro. W. H. Garrett in the morning sermon took for his text Luke 7:18, and with mind and heart stored with the precious gems, gathered from the word of God, dispensed, to edification, lessons full of instruction and kindly reproof. Said he, "We are exhorted to cultivate singleness of heart and concentration of purpose, seeking always the welfare of Zion. Our first duty is to be Saints indeed, being right and honest in all our acts toward our fellow-men, and we should work together with God in the establishment of his work." "This is the time for heart-searching. Let us examine our hearts, and seek to have faith in God; the answer is with him." Brother Joseph was present and pronounced the benediction.

In the afternoon the Woman's Auxiliary met and rendered an excellent program, profitable and pleasing to all present. Bro. A. V. Closson gave an instructive discourse at the evening hour on the fulfillment of prophecy.

On Monday, the 17th, the temperature dropped, so that the vegetation revived somewhat under the genial influence of showers which fell from time to time. The nights became cool, and a heavy mist enveloped the thirsty fields and gardens, making the atmosphere favorably conditioned for the growth of all things necessary for our comfort and welfare.

ALMA M. FYRANDO, Secretary.

MAGNOLIA, IOWA.

The Saints of the Utah District are making elaborate preparations for a reunion to be held in the Provo Canyon from August 5 to August 14, the precise camping ground having been designated by the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad Company for the ten days meet at Winslow Station, and a special rate of one fare and one fifth granted to our people from any point in Utah. This is our first attempt to hold a reunion in the midst of the mountains, away from the cities, with splendid chance for boating, bathing, fishing, and hunting, and it is fondly hoped that the attendance will justify the effort. If a goodly portion of the three hundred families who received personal invitations by letter, would arrange to respond favorably, success is assured. Good meals will be furnished at twenty cents. Tents will be as follows: 8 by 10, $3.00; 10 by 12, $3.50; 12 by 14, $4.00; these tents have a floor and boarded sides with cot, table and bench included; also 8 by 10, $2.00; and 14 by 24, family compartment tent, $5.00, without any additions. Prices quoted are for the entire time. Cots, fifty cents extra. Girls and boys will be housed at one dollar the entire time. Saints and their friends who expect to come should advise Bro. Gerard J. S. Abels, 420 Twenty-Fourth street, Ogden, Utah, as to how many will come and the size and number of tents and cots you require.

G. J. S. ABELS, for Committee.

The annual reunion of the Southwestern Oregon District will be held at Myrtle Point, Oregon, August 18 to 27 inclusive. Able speakers will be in attendance. Let all come who can and help to make the reunion a success, that we may all have a season of rejoicing together. There is a nice grove to camp in, but those who wish to camp will please bring tents, for it is almost impossible to rent them here. For further information, write to Frank W. Dygert, secretary of committee, at Myrtle Point, Oregon.

The committee appointed to arrange the reunion this year have decided that owing to present conditions it is better not to have the reunion. The district conference of the Eastern Colorado District will therefore convene in the Saints' church in Denver, September 2 and 3, 1911. The Sunday school and Religio officers can arrange their conventions accordingly.

J. D. CURTIS, District President.

Northwestern Kansas district conference and reunion will convene August 26 to September 3, at Osborne, Kansas. Conference will be held Saturday, August 26. First session will be prayer meeting at 9 a. m. All branches should send statistical reports. Let all of the ministry report to J. B. Ausley, Osborne; mark it conference matter. We are expecting I. N. White or J. P. Curtis, of the apostles, and W. E. Peak. We are in need of singers, must have them. Let those of the district who are just ordinary singers (and the better ones of course) come and assist us in this part of the Lord's work. We must have you Saints come with a desire to learn what you can of the ways of the Lord, and also to impart your share to the work. Visiting Saints for the most part should come prepared to care for themselves, as there is but one family where both husband and wife are Saints. Cost of tents will be: 12 by 14 wall tent, $1.85 per week; 12 by 14 compartment, $3.50 per week; 12 by 16 1/2 compartment, $3.50 per week; 10 by 19, $4.00; 12 by 19, $5.00. If you want a tent we must know it not later than August 10. By order of committee,

JOHN A. TEEFERS.

The Bishopric.

Health and Wealth

Analysis

2 1/2 lbs. Good Health amount of life over four lbs. 2000 lbs. Best White amount of life less than 2 lbs. Are you sufficiently supplied with surplus energy to digest 2000 lbs. of White Flour to obtain 2 lbs. of life? Is your surplus bank account large enough that you can spend $50.00 for what I can deliver to you for 50 cents.

Not only this, but you can not make White Flour the staff of life unless you suffer with Auto-Intoxication of the bowels. Constipation is the first stage of practically all the diseases.

As parents can you afford to endanger your lives, the lives of your children, and not help to educate others that are a victim of this so-called food that only produces Heat or Fat? If I can live and have lived for weeks on 5 cents per day, why will you not test my proposition? I am thankful to state that in the last 15 days over 100 new families have been added to the ranks of the Good Health Army.

A GOOD MAN.

"The steps of a good man are ordered of the Lord."

The practical meaning of this saying of scripture is that the thoughts of a good man take into consideration the ways of human life, and he is led by the conscious and unconscious monitions of the Spirit which controls the things which he sees and does toward his fellow-men. A good man is careful and considerate in his dealings with those of his fellows who are weaker than himself. He also takes cognizance of those who are supposed to be higher and better than himself in life, and profits by the things which he hears and sees them do.

Perhaps the chief characteristic of a good man is that he does not stop merely at the thought of what he may do for his fellow-men that is good, but he does that which is good, as he thinks of it, and as opportunity offers. His thoughts being set to do right, through the monition of the Spirit which is given him and by which he is directed, makes him easily recognize the opportunities which are presented to him for doing good. It is only a word here or there, a small act of help for one here and one there, and the exercise of grave and steady precaution not to interfere with the rights of others, especially those whom he knows to be weaker than himself.

It is the mark of a mean and despicable spirit, for a man to take advantage of others whom he knows to be incapable of self-defense against his strength. It is a mark of a noble spirit for a man thus to be careful in his dealings with his fellow-men, that he does not only refrain from trespass upon others, but that he does so from the consideration that he could in his strength accomplish his end against them, but does not do it because of his understanding and regard for their weakness. It is not out of harmony with the understanding of the sentence placed at the head of this article, to believe that the life of such a man of whom the words may be said is taken cognizance of by the good influences before God as intended to surround those who come within the influence of his love.

A good mother once said to her children, in cautioning them to be brave in the nighttime and not to be moved by foolish fears, that if her children were good, striving to do good, they need have no fear, for the good spirits would never do them harm, and if they were good, as they should be and should strive to be, the good spirits would not permit evil spirits or evil things to come near them, to hurt them. Thus it was on either hand to the advantage of the children to strive earnestly to be good. This teaching of this good mother had its effect upon her children, and they were in instances prepared to do as did Samuel of old, when advised by Eli, that if he heard himself called in the nighttime, not to be fearful, but to answer, "Speak Lord, for thy servant heareth," and it might be thus that her children, or one of them might be called, and be made a messenger of God to those living in the world, as was Samuel.

When one reflects upon the influences for good which must necessarily surround a good man, he need not to wonder if such a man is, to use an expression, a favorite of Heaven, for though his lot may be humble, though his day may be days of struggle, possibly of poverty, yet his hands are full of charitable labor, and he is always busily engaged in those things that lie nearest to him to be done, without taking thought as to the place or the censure of those around him. He continues the even tenor of his way, content to do and serve as the monitions of the Spirit may lead him.

If a good man is called to positions of honor among his fellows, he takes his characteristics for good with him, and by the influences thereof he sanctifies the calling and makes it honorable to him. There is little in human preferment that is of sufficient value for a man to sacrifice his honor or his goodness to secure it. Far better for him to remain unchosen and maintain his honor and his goodness and continue in lines directed of the Spirit of God, than it is for him to reap empty titles and honors of preferment among men, and lose his characteristics for good. It is quite possible, under the ministration of the providences of God which govern the children of men to a greater or lesser extent, for a good man to be rich and high in honor among his fellows. Such a man shows to his fellow-men his characteristics for goodness in a more shining way than the man who walks in the humbler life. But the same qualities of goodness that mark the humble man must continue with his richer and nobler brother. It is not true that riches entirely spoil every man. It is not true that a rich man must necessarily have a hard heart toward his fellow-men. It is not true that because a man is rich in this world's goods that he necessarily oppresses his neighbor, or is seeking continually to take advantage of those that are in humbler walks of life, to use the expression in that way.

We have in the past examples of rich men, and without seeking to multiply them, we call to mind Abraham, the father of the faithful. He was a good man. Witness the consideration of his treatment of Lot when standing looking to the east and west, he said to this humbler man, "Choose ye which way ye will go, and I will go to the other; let there be peace between us." This shows that this man took into consideration the peace that should be between himself and his kinsman. And when circumstances required his interference to keep him from injury and wrong, he entered into the defense of his kinsman, and successfully defended him and saved him from the injuries that others sought to do him. Yet he remembered that which he should do, and paid his tithing unto the Lord, remembering what the Lord had done for him, and what he had promised to accomplish.

Let us not forget that while it may be true that riches have a tendency to corrupt the human heart, the influence which seems in this world to follow the possession of wealth may be held in abeyance and its corruption prevented and overcome by paying heed unto the monitions of the Spirit which is given, as understood in the statement that the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord.

Lydia of Tyre, who sold purple and fine linen, as stated in the New Testament Scriptures, was evidently a type of good woman, who took the ways of her household into consideration and dealt fairly and honorably with those with whom her business associations brought her into contact. She ranks among them to whom the saying must apply, for if the steps of a good man are ordered of the Lord, it must be no less true, that the steps of a good woman are ordered by the Lord.

Joseph of Arimathea was sufficiently rich to have had carved in the rock at Jerusalem a tomb. While it is possible that under the direction of the Good Spirit which must be sent to take cognizance of men's thoughts and ways in order to establish the care and protection of the Lord, it was predestined at this particular time that the prophecies which had been made concerning the man Christ Jesus could be and would be sufficiently fulfilled, and that is, that he "made his grave with the rich," the body of the Master was laid in this tomb.

It is not wise for us who are striving earnestly to preach the gospel of the Son of God, for the redemption of men, to overlook the common affairs of human life and fancy that those who are making an effort for the accomplishment of something in this world are necessarily led by an evil influence. It is far better for us to take into wise consideration the meaning of such a sentence as that with which this article is begun.

A LETTER FROM THE EDITOR OF "THE APPEAL TO REASON."

We are in receipt of the following letter from the associate editor of the Appeal to Reason, written in reference to an article on Socialism that appeared in the HERALD some weeks ago:

Editor Saints' Herald, Lamoni, Iowa: A recent copy of your paper, containing an article on "The Weakness of the Socialist Movement from a Latter Day Saint Standpoint," was sent me, as Associate Editor of the Appeal to Reason, with request that I reply to it in brief.

I can not understand why you, of all people should oppose the cooperation of men and women for the purpose of advancing their material interest, seeing that you have employed the principle to advantage. And, granting all you say about something beyond Socialism being necessary, it seems to me that experience shows people will be in better shape to seek the spiritual when their material needs are supplied. If this is not true, then all human effort is at fault, seeing that it all looks to material improvement. Though people might not all want to do right under Socialism, they do not all want to do right now; and if a larger proportion would do evil under pleasant conditions than do so under suffering and trial, then the logical conclusion is that the message of your denomination will find readier hearing in hell itself than it can possibly do here.

As for your argument concerning service, the service of Jesus consisted in offering himself as a ransom for all men. It seems to me the greatest possible service one can do for the world, or for him, is to free it from exploitation in order that all may have a chance. They who refuse to do this service, condone war and the greatest system of robbery earth has known, and I would think, place themselves in the category of those who, while claiming to have done many wonderful works in the name of the Master, are really unknown of him.

Why should you, why should any good man, object to having justice done? If poverty exists merely because the people have been robbed of what they produce, the shame is on you, if, after having had it pointed out to you, you refuse to work to end the robbery. If you apologize for it and argue for its perpetuation, it becomes more than shame, it is criminal.

I am not out of sympathy with you or your work; only, your article shows that you are more concerned about splitting hairs over whether a thing is "orthodox" than to find whether it is just and right. I, too, look for the kingdom of heaven on earth. I have a book of 300 pages entitled, "The Coming Kingdom," which shows the far-reaching nature of the Christ plan, involving the socialization of all things, in with its other work. When the mind of man is working to bring about the very things which Jesus planned, then it is doing his will more certainly than it could do in merely haggling over doctrines and preconceived notions. When Jesus takes unto himself his great power to reign, these will be in a mental attitude to accept that which they have long sought. The question is, Have the people been robbed? If so, are we willing to do our best to end the robbery, or must we hesitate to put out a fire until directly commissioned by the Lord from heaven to do so?

C. L. PHIFER, Associate Editor Appeal to Reason.

Addressing the HERALD editors, Mr. Pifer says: "Your article shows that you are more concerned about splitting hairs over whether a thing is 'orthodox' than to find whether it is just and true." To this we do not reply, leaving the HERALD readers to judge as to our integrity, further than to say that this language shows that Mr. Pifer entertains the error of supposing that the HERALD editors are responsible for and in accord with the sentiments of every writer appearing in the SAINTS' HERALD.

A moment's thought will show the error of such an idea. If the publication of the article in question showing the weakness of Socialism committed the HERALD to the position of antagonism to Socialism, the two or more articles previously published setting forth the strength of Socialism committed us to the position of supporting Socialism, and, we suppose, showed us to be more concerned with finding justice and right than splitting hairs over orthodoxy.

The fact is that neither the church nor the HERALD has taken any position either for or against Socialism. As editors we have not taken sides in the discussion, because to do so would embarrass us in any attempt to control the discussion so that absolute fairness and good feeling might obtain.

Articles were solicited and were published in the HERALD from able students of the question, supporting Socialism. It does not become the editor of the Appeal to Reason to object when the other side is presented. There can be no proper appeal to reason unless both sides are permitted to be heard. Why resent a fair discussion, such as we have had, in which the ablest writers were heard on both sides of the question? Is such a discussion an evidence that we are hair-splitters and do not care for the truth?

Mr. Phifer says that he can not imagine why we oppose cooperation. We do not oppose cooperation. Some of our writers, however, claim that Socialism does not present a true and practical system of cooperation. Others claim that it does. That is one of the points at issue. None of them, so far as we know, opposes the principle of cooperation.

Mr. Phifer avers that people will be in better shape to seek the spiritual when their material needs are properly supplied. This we grant. But would people be better off materially under a Socialist regime? The question is at issue. Some of our writers affirm that they would be; why object when others, equally honest and intelligent, ask the privilege of denial?

Mr. Phifer says that the people have been robbed, and desires to know if we sanction the robbery. No, we do not. But is Socialism the remedy for exploitation? There are those who think that it is. Others charge that the strong man in power under a Socialist regime would not be much different from the strong man in power under the present system. So it does not follow that our contributors who oppose Socialism are at heart robbers. We protest against the holier-than-thou spirit that brands all men as thieves and robbers who do not accede to our particular views. It does not follow that a man is a Socialist simply because he believes in economic justice, equality, and cooperation; nor does it follow that because a man rejects Socialism he is in sympathy with the abuses and excesses of the present system.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

MORE LIBERAL THAN GOD.—The old-time preacher declared the terror of hell. He delineated the horrors of eternal damnation; and as the saying went, held men "hair-hung and breeze-shaken" over the infernal pit. To-day we affirm the joys of salvation and the love and mercy of God. Ours is the better policy. But we must not go to an extreme ourselves. It is cheap and easy to appear ultra-liberal and extremely advanced by inveighing against the existence of hell, and holding forth the idea that future punishment should have no place in our message. It is our duty to warn sinners of the consequences of sin. If we neglect to tell men of the punishment that awaits the willfully wicked we become more "liberal" than the ancient prophets and apostles dared to be. Indeed, we become more advanced than God himself. He preached eternal damnation, and did it for the "express purpose" of "working upon the hearts of the children of men." Let us read paragraph two, section eighteen, of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, "lest we forget." Our message is dual—promise and warning.

WHY CALL HIM "OLD JOE SMITH."—An old proverb says, "A nickname is the heaviest stone the Devil can throw at a man." The Devil, by way of the clergy, has been throwing the nickname "Old Joe Smith" at Joseph Smith for many years. The name is still used by those who lack argument, and must use ridicule, in the absence of better weapons of offense or defense. These clergymen could instantly see that it would not in any way invalidate the claims of the apostles Peter, James, and John, to refer to them as old Pete, Jim, and Jack. But somehow they imagine that a sneer counts for more when used against a Latter Day Saint.

THE IDEAL.—It is perfectly natural for men to cast about in search of some one who correctly interprets their higher ideals. They wish to find in concrete human form that "which seems most true, most necessary, most to be believed in, or to be hoped for, most to be longed after and striven for by man." This is the foundation of all hero worship. Christ satisfies that demand. In him we have a living example of all that man should be and can be. His life furnishes incentive to every aspiring heart. His character is the standard by which we may judge ourselves and toward which we must grow.

IS THE TESTIMONY OF THE FIVE SENSES ADEQUATE?—Those who will accept only that which is attested by the five senses should consider the simile used by Sir Oliver Lodge when he compared the materialistic man, in his attitude toward the universe, to a dog in a picture gallery. The dog had all five senses, yet lacked the power to see and understand the more important truths represented in the gallery. His senses limited him as much as they enlightened him. Thus men look at the universe, but can not understand it without revelation from a higher intelligence. We must not suppose that we see all that is to be seen, or in the only way in which the universe may be seen.

MARVELOUS WORK AND A WONDER.—We wish again to call the attention of the Saints to this excellent work by Brother Daniel Macgregor and to the special prices made thereon. The Herald Office will furnish the book at the following rates: One for 20 cents, two for 35 cents, three for 50 cents, eight for $1, fifty for $3, f. o. b. Lamoni.

We have only to be patient, to pray, and to do His will, according to our present light and strength, and the growth of the soul will go on. The plant grows in the mist and under clouds as truly as under sunshine. So does the heavenly principle within.—W. E. Channing.

DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL AT PHILADELPHIA.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—Aided by very capable associate officers, Bro. Walter W. Smith, pastor of the church in Philadelphia, has been carrying on a very successful, and, so far as the Reorganization is concerned, unique work in that city. This is the third season for their annual vacation Bible school. There are fifty such schools conducted in Philadelphia by various denominations, and ours is by far the largest yet reported. Admission to the school is entirely free. Expenses are met by contributions from those interested in the work. The object is to do good among the children of the city, following the example of the Master, who went about doing good. Incidentally the church wins the respect of the community and prepares the way for the preaching of the gospel. The following report from Brother Smith gives an interesting account of the work undertaken:

The first week of the third annual daily vacation Bible school conducted at the Saints' church in Philadelphia is past, and the Saints are congratulating the staff of teachers upon the very successful start they have made. The church was not completed in time to begin as early as heretofore, but after a delay of one week the school was opened on Monday, July 17, with four hundred and twelve children in attendance, about evenly divided between boys and girls. One hundred and eleven of these were assigned to the kindergarten department. Those above the age of six years were divided, the girls and the boys by themselves, and were taught various handicrafts, such as weaving baskets, mats, hammocks, making baseballs, horselines, and wrapping coat hooks with raffia, etc. The girls were taught sewing, embroidery, basket weaving, knitting, mat weaving, etc.

9 a. m. Two minute devotional service for the teachers.

9.2. Doors open and school is called to order, with singing of a hymn; followed by the reading in concert of some scripture; and prayer by one of the teachers, followed by singing the Lord's prayer; then another hymn and two-minute talk on some subject of good behavior, thankfulness, patience, courage, cleanliness, etc., flag drill, including the salute to the American flag, with singing of America. Then the kindergarten separates from the main school and begins its regular work in kindergarten. The boys and girls continue singing hymns and songs for ten minutes, then a Bible story is told by one of the teachers. These stories are arranged in sequence, beginning with Adam and Eve, and ending with the ascension of the Master. Breathing exercises are taken and singing is done, and then all classes retire to a public school yard across the street for fifteen minutes' play. Returning we begin at 10.30 the industrial period, which lasts till near twelve, when we dismiss the school till 9 a. m. the following day.

This is our third attempt at this place to do something for the children of the neighborhood, and the response is very enthusiastic. The average daily attendance for the first week was four hundred and forty-one. These are cared for by a corps of teachers numbering sixteen. The work will continue for five weeks. We usually run the school six weeks, but we lost one week at the start, as noted above. Several hundred articles will be made by the children; these will be given them when the school is over.

Lasting friendships will be made between the children and the teachers. A large number will be added to the Sunday school. Many children who would have spent the entire vacation on the street will have been cared for at least a part of the time. Much wholesome instruction will have been imparted, and many boys and girls will have learned some useful art. And many parents of the children will have changed their minds about the church and its work among men. We were visited last year at the close of the school by eight hundred people who viewed the work of the children and thanked us for the work we had done for them. It will be greater this year than ever.

In addition to this, Bro. E. B. Hull is conducting a very successful school at the Beacon Light Mission, some fourteen blocks from the church, where he has had for two weeks an average attendance of eighty-five each day, where with the help of some four teachers they are doing the same work for the children of that neighborhood.

Brooklyn has inaugurated the work under the direction of Elder William E. LaRue; reports from there show good interest, and we may look for the spread of the work to all our large cities.

SAINTS' HERALD DOCTRINAL SERIES.

XII.—LAYING ON OF HANDS FOR THE HEALING OF THE SICK.

BY R. M. MALONEY.

In the 16th chapter of Mark and 18th verse Jesus says: "They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." Again in James 5: 14, 15, we find these words:

"Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him."

The above language, both of James and Jesus, contains a well-defined promise, and not only a promise, but council, advice, and doctrinal teaching. To be in harmony with the Master, to conform to his teachings, abide in his law, and obey the precepts of his gospel is a happy privilege that we all enjoy.

The gospel of Jesus Christ is a saving power—not only saving us in eternity, by granting us a "home in heaven," but saving us from sin sickness and its effects in a spiritual sense, and also from physical sickness in all its forms.

It is a fact well understood by all classes in Christendom that when Jesus Christ was on earth in the flesh, he did "heal all manner of diseases." We take this as an object lesson—that is—the object of his coming to this world and the blessings he brought to humanity were not confined to the mental, spiritual, or soul of man, but that he also had a remedy for the bodily ills of humanity. The very fact that he left on earth the remedy for our spiritual being is also evidence that he left on earth the remedy for physical ailments.

The same Christ who said: "He that believeth in me though he were dead, yet shall he live," and "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," also said, "They [referring to his ministers, or representatives whom he would leave on earth,] shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

We can not always force the conclusion that whatever belongs to God belongs to man; but for what object or reason would God reveal to humanity that he has power unless it be to induce us to believe that that power will be given for our good.

Just like an earthly doctor who would anoint and dress a wound, he would make the plaster as large as the sore. Man needs spiritual blessings and temporal or physical blessing, hence God, through his son Jesus Christ, has provided in the gospel blessings to supply every demand.

"They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." This is a promise—a privilege extended—it must be understood however that this promise is in a sense the same as all others: The fulfillment and enjoyment of the blessings promised is predicated upon our compliance with the conditions involved or the stipulations of the promise. Every promise God has made to humanity is conditional. Hence the benefits of God's healing power are also received when we meet the conditions of the promise.

Faith is the basic principle, the underlying power, the mental or spiritual force that moves us forward and lifts us up in the scale of God's favor. "Without faith it is impossible to please him." It would be a strange freak of reasoning for one to suppose that he could lay hold or manipulate the power of God to his advantage when God didn't want him to. That, indeed, would be more strange than either truth or fiction.

In the question we are considering we find the thought: Has God promised to heal the sick by the prayer of faith and the laying on of hands? If he has thus promised, then that healing power comes from Him. He grants it to us according to his will and our faith. And fortunately for us needy mortals, we find that his will responds to our faith with much more readiness than does our faith to his will.

Humanity is at fault, is the reason why we do not receive more blessings from God. "Without faith it is impossible to please him." The laying on of hands to confer blessings, both spiritual and temporal, is a practice as old as God's family on earth. The hand is that member of the human body most useful in performing work. "We do labor with our hands." So also does God. And the laying on of hands as one of the principles of the doctrine of Christ (Hebrews 6:1,) is rather significant, and a beautiful symbol of God himself.

In Habakkuk 3:4 the prophet refers to God in these words: "And his brightness was as the light; he had horns coming out of his hand: and there was the hiding of his power." When God puts forth his hand to perform his work and purposes there is power in the effort. So also when he directs his servants to do things for him, and they do it in the manner he has directed, good will surely follow. Saint John records these words:

Then said Jesus unto them again, Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you. And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost; whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained.—John 20: 21-23.

This scripture is good evidence that man (called, chosen and appointed of God) is acknowledged as the administrator of God's business. And as God had sent Christ his Son, so also in like manner Christ sent his servants. He gave them power over diseases. In proof of this we read Matthew 10: 5-8:

These twelve Jesus sent forth, and commanded them, saying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give.

We find similar language in Luke 9: 1, 2.

Then he called his twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases. And he sent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick.

Healing the sick and curing diseases was one part of Christ's mission and work. Hence he says: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go to my father." Again in Luke 10 we read where Christ sent another set of ministers who are called seventy. These are not the same individuals as those referred to in Matthew 10. The first were called "the twelve," the latter "seventy." In verse 9 we read: "And heal the sick that are therein; and say unto them, The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you."

As a matter of course, every time reference is made to the sick being healed, "laying on of hands" is not mentioned. It does not need to be. If I should tell my boy to bring in some water, he would know at once he must have something to carry the water in. He would know he could not carry the water in in his arms. Likewise the servants of Christ, who spent their time with him in his earthly ministry, received instruction from him in person, and that we might understand the nature and character of that instruction, as Paul says: "These things are written." Hence it is written: "They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." James in his general epistle gives encouragement to those who will believe.

Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? let him sing psalms. Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him. Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.—James 5: 13-16.

It does not expressly say in this reading to "lay on hands," but it does say to "anoint with oil" and to "pray over them." In other texts we are told how Jesus did. In Mark 8: 23-25 we find a sample of his manner of healing.

And he took the blind man by the hand, and led him out of the town; and when he had spit on his eyes, and put his hands upon him, he asked if he saw ought, and he looked up, and said, I see men as trees walking. After that he put his hands again upon his eyes, and made him look up: and he was restored, and saw every man clearly.

Again in Luke's record we find where the leprosy was cleansed by his divine power and the touch of his hand:

And he put forth his hand and touched him, saying, I will:

be thou clean. And immediately the leprosy departed from him.—Luke 5: 13.

Now when the sun was setting, all they that had any sick with divers diseases brought them unto him; and he laid hands on every one of them, and healed them.—Luke 4: 40.

Let us not forget that Jesus said: "The works that I do ye shall do also." And it should be reasonable and easy to believe that our works should be performed in the same manner that his were. He healed the sick by the laying on of hands. We should not conclude however that healing will be done simply by the touch of the hand. Neither is it the water that washes away sins, notwithstanding God's messenger said: "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins." If it were simply the touch of the water, then thousands and millions could and would have remission of sins by just falling in the water.

So the laying on of hands for the healing of the sick must be done in God's own way, with true devotion, with faith and trust that God will answer our prayers. But let us continue with divine testimony, not forgetting that the word of God is our guide.

And he laid his hands on her: and immediately she was made straight, and glorified God.—Luke 13: 13.

And he could there do no mighty work, save that he laid his hands upon a few sick folk, and healed them.—Mark 6: 5.

Let us remember that Jesus Christ is "God manifest in the flesh," and therefore God's willingness to bless humanity was exemplified in the work, life, and labors of his son.

There is no possible escape from this conclusion. Therefore God is willing to heal the sick, and will do so—providing you want him to. He says "ask and ye shall receive;" "seek, and ye shall find;" "whatsoever ye ask the Father in my name, that will I do." "Without faith it is impossible to please him."

When the Son of God brought the message of life and peace to the world it was for every nation, kindred, tongue, and people. "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." There was no limit as to territory, nor time, age, or generations to come when each one would not have equal privilege and access to the storehouse of God's grace and be entitled to his healing power.

The thing required of man was: "Have faith in God" and the cheering promise of a loving Savior is: "These signs shall follow them that believe."

Confidence in God is the energy of body and mind that carries us up to the door of God's storehouse; faith is that with which we touch the door; and like the member of a lodge when he seeks entrance, if he does not give the right rap at the door, the keeper within will not open, he will conclude it is a stranger; but if he gives the right rap the wicket is opened, the pass word is given, and he enters in.

So when we would enjoy the blessings of God we must have faith. Like the woman with an issue of blood who pressed her way through the multitude where Jesus was, believing in her soul if she could but reach his side she would be healed. She gave the right rap. Jesus blessed her and said, "Daughter, be of good comfort, Thy faith hath made thee whole, go in peace."

In the days of Christ, and during the early experience of the Apostles, these same inspired messengers even, were ignorant, and foolishly supposed that the gospel of Jesus Christ was only for the Jews, that the Gentiles as a people had no right or privilege through the gospel. And it was about eight years after Christ arose from the dead before we have any record that these men of God learned any different.

And then it required the visitation of an angel to convince them. But, as recorded in Acts 10, when Peter had the vision on the housetop, he was made to know that the gospel of Christ was for both Jew and Gentile.

We may also make the same reference to professed Israel or Christians of to-day. A large majority foolishly suppose that the day of divine healing is passed. If that day is passed, it is passed for the same reason that Paul in his day said: "If our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost." Paul's gospel was not hid to those who would accept of it. Neither is divine healing beyond the reach of those who have faith to-day. God's promises are sure. He does not change, his love and mercy endureth for ever. Humanity is at fault is the reason why God's power is not manifested more among his people.

We have in this world a medium of exchange called money. It is very attractive and very necessary in this world. We would be in a pitiful condition without it. People hazard their lives to obtain it. They resort to ways and means too numerous and too tedious to mention here. But we desire to impress you with the keen anxiety with which people strive to obtain money. With it we have the purchasing power of the world. With sufficient in hand I could purchase any store, building, or railroad system in the land.

With money you can purchase or secure the things of this world. In the realm of God's dominion there is also a purchasing power, and that is simple, trusting faith; not simple to God, but simple in the eyes of the world. With faith we can enter the storehouse of God, and when that living, divine coin jingles on the counter Jesus says: "Ask what ye will and it shall be given you." It is not our purpose to give a treatise on faith. But I confess I would not know how to refer to any one principle contained in the gospel of Christ without blending faith with it.

The laying on of hands for the healing of the sick would be an empty form or a religious farce, unless it was combined with faith in God. Without faith it would not have the weight of a feather; but with faith it has weight and power. It would weigh as gold and sparkle with a lustre brighter than a diamond.

What is there in this world that brings to us more fear, keener anxiety, or graver apprehension than to have our loved ones afflicted and linger in danger with disease?

Christ gave his ministry power over diseases; that power, however, was only and can only be utilized in response to faith and in harmony with the will of God.

Will Carleton, the poet, says:

It makes a sinner wondrous blue,
To see so many other sinners, too.

So it is with the people of all shades. They are influenced by the minds of others. The happy influence of trusting, believing Christians is a strength and support to all of us. We desire to encourage others to "have faith in God," and trustingly rely upon his promises.

The sick room is a distressing scene in life's experience. God has provided a remedy. "The prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up." What joy and comfort would often come to those who are bowed in sorrow and grief, with the thought of loved ones being taken by death, if they could only have that priceless jewel of faith to call upon the Great Physician who is always able to heal and restore to health.

When Paul was before Agrippa, he touched the spark of living truth when he asked: "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?"

Even so to-day—why should it be thought a thing incredible that God should heal the sick? He said that he would. It is so recorded in his word. His servants did heal the sick by prayer and the laying on of hands. These signs shall follow them that believe. "They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." These blessings God has promised to his faithful, believing children. God has not changed, his love is the same and "his mercy endureth for ever." By having the purchasing power, faith, the right kind and plenty of it, God will bless us to-day as he did his children in Bible times. If we do not receive these blessings then we shall blame faulty, wayward humanity. God will respond to us and bless us according to our faith. "Lord, increase our faith."

Is the task small? Is it difficult? Am I insignificant—even unfit? Nevertheless it is in relation to God's work. It is assigned to me by him. It is in accord with his plan. I must hear in it his call to press forward, to use the powers I have.—Henry A. Stimson.

A REVIEW OF "MORMONISM AGAINST ITSELF."—PART 3.

TRAUM ON WHITMER'S ADDRESS.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

The strained effort of Elder Traum is clearly manifested in his extract from Whitmer's address, as he gives it on page 44. As there put together, it is a cloudy mosaic, sufficient to impeach his pretended desire to deal justly.

By reference to Whitmer's "Address," it will be seen that he takes one paragraph on page twelve, adds nineteen words to it, and changes others, then skips eighteen pages and joins two and one half lines of a paragraph on page thirty to that of page twelve, skips to the next paragraph below, drops out five words of that which he pretends to quote, then jumps to page thirty-one, thus destroying the connections, modifications, etc., besides putting nineteen words in Whitmer's mouth which he did not say. Mr. Traum does not mark a single parenthesis, to indicate that he himself inserted these words, but moves boldly on, and makes Whitmer the author of his (Traum's) interpolations.

David Whitmer would resent such an outrage on his language. It makes Whitmer indorse Willard Chase's trumped up "peep stone" yarn,—something he would scorn to do; and also makes Whitmer indorse Traum's imaginary nightmare, that Joseph practiced "sorcery." No human being who reads this purported quotation from the writings of Whitmer could by any possibility know that he had not written the words, parenthetically inclosed, and indorsed their meaning. Instead of this looking "suspicious for the prophet," as our would-be critic states, it looks seriously "suspicious" for Elder Traum.

Mr. Traum says of Whitmer, that he was "one of the eyewitnesses to the proceedings," that is, of all the "proceedings" of translation. To this we reply that the evidence adduced from the authentic records seem to indicate that he had nothing to do directly with the work of translating the Book of Mormon, being neither translator nor scribe, but was an occasional observer. He was a witness to the divinity of the Book of Mormon, and faltered not in his testimony that the voice of God declared unto him that the translation was accomplished by God's "gift" and "power."

Elder Whitmer withdrew from active fellowship in the church in June, 1838, on account of personal grievances, growing out of disagreement with others on the question of church policy, and this only shows personal independence, and the absence of passiveness to the dictation of others. But during these years of minor difference of opinion, he affirmed and reaffirmed, until death set frozen seal upon his pallid lips, that his testimony in connection with the Book of Mormon was true.

OTHER WITNESSES.

On page 46, Mr. Traum concludes the chapter with characterizing Joseph Smith as the "Simon Magus of the nineteenth century."

And the only testimony that the world has as to the truthfulness of these angelic visits is the unsupported testimony of a man who was convicted of being an impostor, and who, when ostensibly engaged in making known the will of Heaven, treats with contempt the chosen instruments of God supplanting his "three-cornered diamond Urim and thummim" with a common "darnick."

This statement is false in part and in whole. The three witnesses in their testimony affirm that the plates, with the engravings thereon, were shown unto them "by an angel of God," and that God's voice declared unto them that the plates had been "translated by the gift and power of God," and they knew "of a surety" that the work was true.

This testimony makes them confirmative witnesses to Joseph Smith's previous testimony. Thousands of witnesses have testified to the truthfulness of the work, and the divinity of the Book of Mormon. "The dispensation of the fullness of times" was being introduced; the restitution, "restoration," and introduction of the original, primitive gospel marks the beginning of that period prophesied of by "the holy prophets since the world began" (Acts 3: 20, 21), and the honest in heart among the nations found that the work inaugurated through the instrumentality of Mr. Smith appealed to them on the original basis. It came to them, claiming to be the gospel of Christ, and if so, it contained within it the element of its own demonstration: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine."—John 7: 17.

Beside, the Book of Mormon presents itself on this same basis. On page 586, Palmyra edition, it says:

And when ye shall receive these things [the writings of the Book of Mormon] I would exhort you that ye would ask God the eternal in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, and he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost; and by the power of the Holy Ghost, you may know the truth of all things.

GARBLED TESTIMONY.

Chapter three, page 47, is captioned "The Book of Mormon and its witnesses." One of the opening statements is a complaint that the plates of the Book of Mormon were never placed on "public exhibition."

For very good reasons, Mr. Traum, "The plates had never been placed on exhibition," chief of which was that Joseph had been commanded by the angel that he "should not show them to any person." See his vision as previously given. Another reason was that the possibility of being "tempted" to make money of them would have been much greater while exhibiting the ancient gold plates filled with fine engravings to a curious world; whereas he had been informed that he was "responsible for them"; that if he should let them go carelessly or through neglect he should be cut off; that he should use all his endeavors to preserve them until the messenger should call for them. The object was to glorify God."

He says:

I soon found out the reason why I had received such strict charges to keep them safe, and why it was that the messenger had said that when I had done what was required at my hand, he would call for them; for no sooner was it known that I had them than the most strenuous exertions were used to get them from me. Every stratagem that could be invented was resorted to for that purpose.—Church History vol. 1, p. 18.

We read of Moses having the ark of the covenant, and in it were "two tables of stone," a "pot of manna," and "Aaron's rod that budded." Who among all the generations of Israel, after the days of Moses, saw the "tables of stone" on which the law was engraved? No one. They were kept in the ark, in the "holy of holies," and none but the high priest had the privilege of going in there, and he only once each year. The high priest's "secretiveness" kept these things "from the gaze of the vulgar throng," and had Mr. Traum lived in those days of ancient story, his morbid curiosity would have remained ungratified.

Those high priests could testify to the existence of these things, and Israel could believe the testimony or not.

Mr. Traum can not even bring one living witness that has ever seen even one of the original manuscripts of the Bible. There are nothing but copies in existence.

Mr. Traum next introduces the testimony of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, and as is "his usual course," he adds to, and takes from. That a true comparison may be made, we reproduce the true version and his version:

The Testimony of Three Witnesses.

Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, unto whom this work shall come, that we, through the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, have seen the plates which contain this record, which is a record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites, their brethren, and also of the people of Jared, who came from the tower of which hath been spoken; and we also know that they have been translated by the gift and power of God, for his

TRAUM'S WORK.

Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tribes, tongues and people unto whom this work shall come, that we, through the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, have seen the plates which contain this record, which is the record of the people of Nephi, and also the Lamanites, their brethren, and also the people of Jared, who came from the tower of which hath been spoken; and we also know that they have been translated by the gift and power of God, for his voice hath declared it unto us; wherefore voice hath declared it unto us; wherefore we know of a surety, that the work is true. And we also testify that we have seen the engravings which are upon the plates; and they have been shown unto us by the power of God, and not of man. And we declare with words of soberness, that an angel of God came down from heaven, and he brought and laid before our eyes, that we beheld and saw the plates, and the engravings thereon; and we know that it is by the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, that we beheld and bear record that these things are true; and it is marvelous in our eyes, nevertheless, the voice of the Lord commanded us that we should bear record of it; wherefore, to be obedient unto the commandments of God, we bear testimony of these things. And we know that if we are faithful in Christ, we shall rid our garments of the blood of all men, and be found spotless before the judgment seat of Christ, and shall dwell with him eternally in the heavens. And the honor be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost, which is one God. Amen.

Anyone comparing the above documents will find that Elder Traum has not been literally exact in his copying, especially the closing part of the testimony of the three witnesses. We dislike to charge him with intentional carelessness, but it is of such frequent occurrence, that it is difficult to give him the benefit of the doubt. And further, he has nothing up-to-date, that we have seen, to indicate a disposition to correct this error.

THE WITNESSES.

It is related of an infidel that he wrote over his bed, "God is nowhere," which was read by his little boy, "God is now here," but we could hardly make as good sense of the version that Mr. Traum gives us of the foregoing testimony. The witnesses to the genuineness of the Book of Mormon have been pelted with unsavory epithets, their characters defamed; scandal, vituperation, and abuse have filled the cup from which they drank. The dragon has belched out a flood of persecution and wrath, but their testimony yet stands unimpeached.

we know of a surety that the work is true. And we also testify that we have seen the engravings which are upon the plates; and they have been shown us by the power of God and not of man. And we declare with soberness, that an angel of God came down from heaven and he brought and laid (them) before our eyes, that we beheld and saw the plates, and the engravings thereon; and we know that it is by the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, that we beheld and bear record that these things are true; and it is marvelous in our eyes; nevertheless the voice of the Lord commanded us that we should bear record of it; wherefore, to be obedient to the commandments of God, we bear testimony of these things. And we know that if we are faithful in Christ, we shall rid our generations; but this generation shall have my word through the judgment-seat of Christ, and shall dwell with him eternally in the Heavens. And the honor be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the holy Ghost. Amen.

OLIVER COWDERY,
DAVID WHITMER,
MARTIN HARRIS.

We call attention to the fact that it is an underlying principle in both the Mosaic and Christian economies, "that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established." Matthew 18:17; John 8:17. Permit me to ask our opponents, Has God ever committed a work to the children of men which was not established by witnesses? The most superficial Bible reader knows that he has never done so.

WITNESSES TESTED.

There are certain strictures employed to test witnesses which we can apply to the witnesses of the Book of Mormon. They are given by "Whitby in Loco," and recorded in the "Testimony of the Ages," page 774. Of matters of fact, and witnesses thereto, he says:

Matters of fact must be proved by the testimony of eye-witnesses; and if they be honest men, and such as suffer the greatest prejudices in fortune, reputation, and life, for this testimony we have the greater reason to believe it: for their honesty must render them unwilling to testify a falsehood; their interest and prudence would not suffer them, without any necessity laid upon them to testify a lie; much more to testify the grossest falsehood, to their utmost damage, and without any prospect of advantage."

Passing by the little attack Mr. Traum has made on Elder Blair's argument, we will apply the foregoing strictures to the Book of Mormon Witnesses:

First, they testified to facts outside, and above the traditions and education of the times in which they lived, yet within the limits of the work of the Almighty in past ages, and in harmony with the accepted standard laid down for the ethical government of men—the Bible.

Second, by the undeviating testimony they have ever sustained, they have incurred the indignation, censure, and popular "prejudice" of the world.

Third, they suffered the "loss" of prospective fortune, and the loss of reputation, and hazarded their "lives" in maintaining the truthfulness of their words.

Fourth, they possessed "honor" strong enough to render them willing to abide by the truthfulness of their testimony in the face of dire necessity and adversity.

Fifth, they reaffirmed their "solemn declaration" during their lives to their utmost damage in this world, in the face of disadvantage, and with no prospect of worldly advantage.

Sixth, they at last sank into the slumbers of death, with their original testimony upon their lips.

The Apostle John, in the work of testifying nineteen hundred years ago, solemnly wrote concerning,

That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of life; (for the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and show unto you that eternal life which was with the Father, and manifested unto us).—1 John 1:1, 2.

We would ask Mr. Traum on what grounds he receives this one testimony of the apostle John, who had "seen and handled" the word, and rejects the testimony of eleven witnesses who have "seen and handled" the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated about three quarters of a century ago? Mr. Traum knows that if he were to set aside the "strictures" employed to test witnesses, in an examination of the positive institutes revealed in the Bible, if he engaged in a muster with the infidel, his opponent would sweep him from the rostrum. He knows that the Bible and secular history both "reveal" the opposition of those times to be the same in method with his, and it will be well for him to reflect that the Revelator John saw those who had been "martyred for the witness of Jesus, and the word of God" reigning "with Christ a thousand years" (Revelation 20:4).

If Mr. Traum has been a student of history he knows that Trypho, and his four companions, in the second century, or A. D. 140, were violent opposers of the testimony of the apostles, and sought by means of contradiction in their testimony to invalidate the facts of the Christian religion. And if the manuscripts they used have come down without change, they could show discrepancies; yet Mr. Traum will defend them. Celsus, Porphyry, Hierocles, Julian and others, of the second, third and fourth centuries were all engaged in virulent efforts to overthrow the "testimonies," and the mighty (?) fulcrum used by them to destroy the work of God, is now found in the hands of Mr. Traum and his fellows.

On page 50, our critic thus expiates:

In seeking such an array of witnesses' names on the fly-leaf of a book that purports to come from God, minds of a certain type may be deeply impressed with the alleged genuineness of the book, while it only creates in our minds a suspicion of its genuineness. So far as we know, there is no other "sacred" book or books that have elicited from God the same overweening carefulness that his work should not be questioned. Hitherto he has spoken, and has required none to vouch for the genuineness of his messages, in any such puerile fashion.

Well, at the risk of being considered the "fool of the family," a book translated from a "sealed" language elaborately engraved on "gold plates," containing the purposes of God, being given to the world by an "unlearned" man, at a time when the doctrine of immediate and direct revelation from God was universally denied, when the "canon was closed since John was on Patmos," I say a book of this character, coming to me with solemn testimony that the divine indorsement had been committed to those bearing such testimony, and that such book was introduced in accordance with original claim, and that the "voice of God," and the "power of God" were its divine accompaniments, would be considered by me so far in line with the established principles of the divine "plan," that "suspicion" would weaken.

The apostle, in Acts 14:7, expresses the principle that God "left himself not without witness"; and in all past ages he has so confirmed his work by them that heard him (Hebrews 2:3, 4) that we refuse to make it a part of our faith, that God has departed from his purposes when committing to earth the latter day work.

In Isaiah we read:

Let all the nations be gathered together, and let the people be assembled: who among them can declare this, and show us former things? let them bring forth their witnesses, that they may be justified: or let them hear, and say, It is truth. Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, and my servant whom I have chosen; that ye may know and believe me, and understand that I am he: before me there was no God formed, neither shall there be after me.—Isaiah 43:9, 10.

In the foregoing quotation, the Lord says, "Ye are my witnesses," and he challenges the "nations" to "bring forth" theirs. He also conveys the idea that he "chooses" them that the "people" may know and believe him. It now remains for Mr. Traum to demonstrate that God has receded from his original position.

We are not sure that Mr. Traum is correct, when he infers that no other sacred book has elicited the same care on the part of God, for in Isaiah 8:1, 2, it is recorded:

Moreover the Lord said unto me, Take thee a great roll, and write in it with a man's pen concerning Maher-shalal-hash-baz. And I took unto me faithful witnesses to record, Uriah the priest, and Zechariah the son of Jeberechiah.

THE SCHOOLBOY AND THE CIGARETTE.

Every mother—at least every normal mother—as she stands in the door and watches her boy away on his first morning to school, has a vision of what she would like him to be, and makes a prayer in her heart that in the coming years he may have health and character and success.

And the teacher—if she be an earnest teacher—as she looks that first morning into the searching, wondering eyes of that boy, must utter a prayer in her heart that he may grow up wise and good and useful.

And the lawmaker in the legislative chamber as he votes half the entire revenue of his state for the free education of the youths, or champions some law to guard and protect them from evil, must have a profound desire in his heart that that boy grow into a self-supporting, law-abiding, patriotic citizen.

All these wishes are one. The business man, the lawmaker, the doctor, the teacher, the preacher, the father—above all the mother—are wishing for the boy the selfsame thing—that he be strong and clean and successful.

It is this wish in the hearts of all the world who care for the boyhood of to-day and the manhood of to-morrow, that is making them bitter enemies of the cigarette.

The war on the cigarette habit is not the mere clamor of professional agitators—a sentimental outbreak of reform impulse; but a cool, dispassionate, vital struggle for the very body and brain and soul of the boy.

In 1903 the State of Missouri enacted a law making it a hundred dollar fine to sell or give cigarettes or cigarette material to any boy under eighteen. In 1909 that law was strengthened by another making it a ten dollar fine for any boy to smoke cigarettes in any public place, on any road or street, in any business house or place of amusement. And Missouri legislatures are not given to reform legislation. In fact an evil must be very apparent and the sentiment against it very strong and permanent before the Missouri Assembly will undertake to curtail the citizens' "hereditary" right to be as cussed as he wants to be.

Kansas has a law prohibiting the sale of cigarettes in any form to anybody. Almost every state in the Union has some form of anti-cigarette law designed to protect the boy from evil.

What means all this legislation? Merely that cigarette smoking is an expensive and offensive habit? Eating candy costs money; carrying fishworms in the pocket is a disagreeable habit, but there are no laws prohibiting the boy from these.

No, it is not a matter of taste. We can pass over a dozen unpleasant traits and disagreeable habits in the boy—we have to—if only they do not seriously injure him. But the fight is on against the cigarette because it is a deadly enemy to that supreme wish for the boy—that he be strong and clean and successful.

He can not be strong and use it. No habitual cigarette smoker ever won any athletic contest.

It is absolutely impossible for a cigarette smoking schoolboy to grow into healthy manhood.

Dr. Morgan Clint, in discussing the physiological effects of tobacco in general, says: "In the anæmic, pasty complexioned, undersized weakling called a 'cigarette fiend' we see the effect of tobacco at its worst. Here is a youth who should be just growing into manhood, the possessor of vigorous health and strength. Instead we have an old man in his teens, prematurely aged and decrepit, who is injured both physically and mentally beyond all hope of repair. In school he is a dullard, incapable of concentration. Socially he can make no progress, for his person is offensive. In athletics he is a nonentity—he hasn't lungs enough to make even a good rooter.

A fever that kills ten per cent of its victims is a dreaded disease; one that kills twenty is a scourge; and a disease that kills half of those it attacks is a terrible plague.

But cigarette smoking begun early in boyhood and continued, wrecks the health of every one of its victims. I do not know of a single exception. I have never known a boy who began to smoke cigarettes under the age of fourteen and continued the habit who was not a physical wreck before twenty-seven.

And physical strength is not all that is sacrificed. No boy can be strong mentally and smoke.

Teachers everywhere confess that it is practically impossible to educate a boy who uses tobacco—especially cigarettes. It so diseases the brain and nervous system that clearness and buoyancy of mind, application and concentration, are impossible.

With scarcely a single exception, from the commissioner of education down, all superintendents, school boards, and teachers who have to do with the education of boys, are implacable foes to the cigarette habit. President David Starr Jordan of Leland Stanford University, even forbids college men from using cigarettes anywhere on the university grounds.

H. H. Scerley, Principal of Iowa State Normal, says: "After making a study of several hundred boys running through a period of ten years, I have not met a pupil that is addicted to the habit that will go through a single day's work and have good lessons.

"So far as my observations have extended, not a single boy has passed the examination required for admission to the high school after he has acquired the habit; and not one has graduated from the high school who began the habit after beginning his course in the high school.

"Pupils under the influence of the weed are constant subjects of discipline, are not truthful, practice deception, and can not be depended upon."

Even more appalling, if possible, than the wreck of health and mind, is the effect of the cigarette habit on a boy's morals.

Judge Lindsey of Denver—and the boy never had a better friend than Ben B. Lindsey—speaks emphatically: "I have been in the juvenile court nearly ten years, and in that time I have had to deal with thousands and thousands of boys who have disgraced themselves and their parents, and who have brought sorrow and misery into their lives; and I do not know of any one habit that is more responsible for the trouble of these boys than the vile cigarette habit."

With a pretty wide experience as a student of boys, a worker among them and for them, the writer is convinced that a clean moral life and the cigarette habit are practically impossible in the same boy.

I have never seen or heard of a single boy who began the use of cigarettes under fifteen and continued the habit, who had not before the age of twenty-five become either immoral, a drunkard, a gambler, or a drug fiend; and most of them become the victims of two, three, or all of these deadly sins.

And of course success is impossible. Neither wealth, fame, nor usefulness is in store for the cigarette smoking schoolboy. Cigarettes have been well named "coffin nails." They are more; before the coffin is reached they nail up every door to success. Across every call for help is branded, "No cigarette smokers wanted."

I have never seen a single boy who began the cigarette habit in his teens and continued it, secure and hold by his own worth and ability at any time in after life a position that paid as much as a hundred dollars a month.

The ease and frequency and apparent cheapness by which this habit may be practiced doubles its evils. And how to keep the boy from the cigarette and the cigarette from the boy has become a vital question to every lover of the human race.

The motive that prompts the formation of this habit—and many another bad one—is the boy's desire to be a man just as quickly as possible. Were it merely a matter of choice nine boys out of ten would wake up in the morning with beards. They imitate men; and naturally words, acts, and habits that are emphatic, unusual, or swaggerish make a strong impression on the youthful observer. Oaths (because usually spoken with emphasis), reckless driving, a peculiar gait, a hat tipped back; the rolling of a cigarette, puffing the smoke, the off-hand way of asking each other for the "makin's," all appeal to the boy as something interesting. And as he does not discriminate in pickin' habits of men for imitation, he quite naturally chooses the ones that have impressed him most.

To counteract this the mother should begin early and make every possible effort to enlist the assistance of the men of the family and the friends, in emphasizing before the boy worthy traits and habits. Nothing is better for this purpose than clean athletics. Give the boy something he can excel in, give him a chance to attract attention in a commendable way. Also by story and example and straight teaching impress on him that the smoker is the weakling, the dullard, the one left behind in every contest both in manly sports and the work of life. And of course teach him the evil of it—that it is wrong; that while successful men sometimes smoke cigarettes, it may ruin even them; and they would not have succeeded had they begun the habit in boyhood.

Much, too, can be done by mothers individually and in clubs to save the neighbor's boy as well as their own. They can arouse public sentiment in the community against the evil—make it unpopular for the men to set the example and the boys who follow.

In a Missouri town of ten thousand, every business house displays the sign, "No Cigarette Smoking Allowed in Here"—put there and enforced by public sentiment.

A good plan for a woman's club is to invite the husbands and men friends some evening—on the lure of refreshments, and get them to do the talking. Have a doctor discuss "The boy and the cigarette" from the standpoint of health; a business man from that of success; a professor from the point of education; and a Sunday school superintendent or minister, the moral effect. Then all discuss together "What can be done to save the boys of our town."

I believe if ten successful men of any community should invite in ten cigarette smoking boys and have an hour's heart to heart talk with them on the habit, seven out of the ten would quit in a month.

But the work should not stop there. We are growing these days. Our hearts are broadenin' as well as our knowledge. To-day it is not enough for the mother to know her own blood is tucked in safely. Her sympathy and active interest goes out to mothers she has never seen—to the mother anywhere whose prayer that her boy may be strong and clean and successful is being answered in disease and sin and failure.

Her hate joins all hate for the enemy that steals the boy's hope and strength and leaves him a suffering derelict at the port of manhood. Her hand, her voice, her influence is quick to join all the friends of humanity in an effort to spread knowledge and to create a sentiment that will make and enforce laws, and awaken a feeling of self-manliness among the boys which will give them an open chance to be strong and clean and successful.—William H. Hamby in American Motherhood.

Letter Department

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA, July 8, 1911.

Editors Herald: I notice in the HERALD and other church papers and in the last Sunday school Quarterly that the terms laity and lay members occur, and from my observation I believe the terms have been used more frequently in the last two years than in the previous thirty years. It might be well to call the attention of your many readers to the fact that the General Conference many years ago passed a resolution that the terms should not be used. It can be found in the forepart of the book entitled General Conference Resolutions. As I have not one with me I can not give the number. It is very evident that it was the intention of the church to discourage those names because they would have the appearance of making a distinction between those holding office and those not. It is a term that is not found in the Bible, Book of Mormon, or Doctrine and Covenants. It is one that comes from the Catholic and Protestant churches. It is one of the terms that came in with the apostasy, and while we are preaching to the world and teaching in our Sunday schools about that great event, let us not use those expressions that will indicate that we are partaking of the same spirit. Anything that has the appearance of making a difference between the membership is bound to work injury to the body.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
EDWARD RANNIE.

PIPE CREEK, TEXAS, July 11, 1911.

Dear Herald: I live out here in the Southwestern District. We have a small bunch of Saints here. We have Sunday school here every Sunday. I want all the Saints to pray for our Sunday school, that it may be a success and bring souls to the knowledge of the truth.

Brn. John Harp and D. S. Palmer are preaching here now. They have preached some interesting sermons. I know this latter day work is true and I want the prayers of all the Saints that I may become stronger in the faith and understand the gospel in its fullness. Dear Saints, we know the time is nigh at hand, even at the door, so let us all watch and pray for that great day when we shall be gathered home to Zion.

Your brother in the one faith,
GENTRY HODGES.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, July 16, 1911.

Editors Herald: I wish to notify all Saints and friends, that we expect to occupy our new church building, for the first time, on August 20. The church is located at Twenty-fourth and Ohio streets. We expect on this date to start a series of meetings, to continue each evening, except Saturday, of the week following, and over Sunday. Our regular services are as follows: Sunday school at 9.45 a. m.; preaching service at 11 a. m.; Religio at 6.30 p. m.; and preaching service at 8 p. m.; prayer meeting on Wednesday 8 p. m.; sacramental service the first Sunday of each month at 11 a. m.

We have for city missionary, Elder J. M. Baker. We extend a cordial invitation to elders who may be passing through the city to meet with us.

Yours for the work,
M. A. PETERSON.

1817 NORTH TWENTIETH STREET.

Editors Herald: I wish to say to the Saints in the State of Oregon, that I am anxious to visit every place that it is possible for me to, where there is a chance to get the gospel before the people. This is my first year to labor in this State, therefore I am unacquainted with this field and its needs. Saints who may know of places where a missionary could do missionary work, preaching, etc., and will write to the undersigned at Myrtle Point, Oregon, will confer a favor upon one of your missionaries and will be appreciated by him. Let us labor together with God to convert your neighbors. Let us make an effort, with this end in view, some time this year. Because you are not a preacher, don't think you are not required to assist in warning your neighbors. There is something that we can do; let us all do that which it is possible for us to do.

I trust that none of us are so poor we could not feed and lodge a missionary, which we have voted to sustain at General Conference, while he makes an effort to discharge the duties which he owes to his Master, the church, and the people of the world. Write and tell me what the prospects are in or near the place where you reside, and state the time that you think would be most opportune for holding services in your locality. I will be glad to take up the matter, by correspondence with you, and when it is most convenient for all concerned endeavor to arrange for holding meetings in such places as it will be practical for me to.

I left Lamoni May 1, made a short stop in Salt Lake City and Ogden, Utah, reaching Hood River, Oregon, May 9. I have tried to keep busy since coming here, have succeeded in finding something to do most of the time; was willing to do and could have done more if all the Saints were fully alive to the needs of the work, watching for opportunities and willing to assist in opening up the work in new places, making it possible for the missionary to do a work he could not otherwise do.

My association with the Saints in this field thus far has been most congenial. I trust my teaching and department shall be such as will commend me to their respect and confidence as a true servant of the Lord. I hope that I may never do that which will betray their confidence, when I have once gained it.

I shall never attempt to erase from memory the friends made while laboring in other fields, though distant they may be; glad will I be to know that I am remembered by them.

Fraternally yours,
J. D. STEAD.

BUFFALO, NEW YORK, July 15, 1911.

Editors Herald: Just a word to Saints and friends in the New York District. At our district conference held in Buffalo, New York, June 3 and 4, 1911, I was elected president of the district, and it is my intention to make a complete canvass of the same. I solicit the hearty cooperation of all, and if Saints will kindly notify me of friends they would like to have visited, or places where they would desire preaching, they can do so by addressing me at 36 Fremont avenue, Buffalo, New York, and I shall be pleased to do all that lies within my power to assist them. Let us get the missionary spirit, inasmuch as we have been warned, and make an effort to warn others by opening our own homes for the preaching of God's word by his servants and by a strict adherence to God's law. Let us live so that our lives will reflect to those around us the divine light which has come into our lives, trusting that good may result from past efforts and those that shall be made in the future for the furthering of God's great cause on earth, the converting of men and women, and the unifying of the Saints.

Tent work is being pushed in this city by Brn. Davison and Booker, but what results will be time alone will reveal. It seems a hard place to get the gospel before the people. It is not likely the brethren will remain here much longer, for they will undoubtedly seek more favorable fields of operation. Apparent results are not flattering, but we are still hopeful.

A. E. STONE.

SAULT STE. MARIE, ONTARIO, July 17, 1911.

Dear Herald: As our three-day meeting, commencing August 11, is near at hand, and looking over the last two copies of the HERALD I find no mention of the same, I send this notice inviting the readers of the HERALD—all who find it possible to come. The object of this meeting is to dedicate the church, and we expect to have a good time. Speakers: John Shields, J. J. Cornish, D. D. Smith, Elder Ellis, and other local brethren. The work is progressing favorably here under the labors of D. D. Smith and Elder Ellis; ten baptized, and the end not yet. Come with us to the three-day meeting and we will do thee good. Your brother in the gospel,
STEELETON, ONTARIO. JOHN R. TOMLINSON.

HURON, SOUTH DAKOTA, July 15, 1911.

Dear Herald: I came here last Monday and finding Chautauqua in full blast, have not tried to hold meetings. Have been interested in the lectures of Rev. Glen Frank. He is a promising young man and I could but think what a power for good it is possible for him to become if he would only receive the whole truth.

I will hold services to-morrow in the home of Bro. E. E. Willard, and as Chautauqua closes to-morrow, will set up tent Monday and try to get a hearing. Hopefully,
LEVI GAMET.

SAMPSEL, MISSOURI, July 17, 1911.

To the Sister who wrote to Mrs. Charles Holmes: Will you kindly write again, as my husband lost the letter while working before I received it.

Route 2. MRS. CHAS. HOLMES.

UNIOPOLIS, OHIO, July 18, 1911.

Editor Herald: We are still holding forth at this place, in the tent on Beaver avenue, with fair interest and a good crowd for this place. Preaching each evening except Saturday, and three times on Sunday. Baptized a fine young man here by the name of Richie, who, if faithful, will be a help to the work here. Also one of the most prominent citizens of this community and his wife have given their names for baptism, which we expect to attend to to-morrow, the 19th, and we feel that it will be a great help, both temporally and spiritually.

There seems to be much prejudice here against the work. We will close our tent services here next Thursday evening and go to Bryan, Ohio, where we expect to remain until time to attend the reunion which convenes at Kirtland, Ohio, August 17 to 27.

At the close of our meeting last evening, on the subject of the Book of Mormon, a gentleman in the audience asked what book I was reading. It was the G. T. Griffiths' Instructor, and he said some one in the audience wanted to know how I could read so much scripture from different parts of the Bible on that one page. I explained that it was a compilation of scripture upon different subjects, with history associated with the explanation. Then four people stepped up and gave me orders for the book. So the good work goes on.

Hopefully engaged in the Master's cause, I remain,
J. C. MCCONNAUGHY.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. Rose Ann Adams: "July 4. I believe in a pure heart and clean hands and I do love the gospel of the Latter Day Saints, for I know it is true. I am all alone and the HERALD has been a great comfort to me. I am getting old, seventy-three,—my time is getting short."

Bro. Walter W. Smith, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, July 23: "Last Sunday I baptized five people, and on last Thursday troubled the water again, burying in Christ another fine woman. If I have the count right, this makes forty-six for the year, twenty-five since General Conference, and we have more near the kingdom. We are not counting them, still we know they are near because of the interest manifest."

Sr. E. Campbell, Wallaceburg, Ontario: "I indeed feel thankful for this glorious gospel and its many blessings. Last spring I had a very severe attack of asthma, the first I ever experienced. I longed to be administered to, yet knowing there were no elders in our branch, the thought came to me how in the past I had read of others praying for an elder to come and how their prayers were answered; so I bowed in prayer and told the kind Father all about it. Then for some time it left my mind, until one day Elder James Davis, of South Boardman, Michigan, came to our place. We had never met him before and as I looked at him I thought what a plain, neat, humble looking man you are! I wonder what you are here for? and the words flashed through my mind, "Did you not pray for an elder to be sent?" Dear Saints, the goodness and mercy of God can never half be told. My prayer was answered, I was administered to, and have never suffered so much since, and such a humble, faithful man of God I have never met."

Sr. A. McKenzie, Saint Clair, Michigan: "Our profession is 'sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal,' if our fellow-men with whom we associate see no fruits in us, no words of sympathy and kindness, only a harsh, overbearing manner. Are we bringing light to them? If not, to tell them of the gospel is pure hypocrisy. If we have all the gifts spoken of by Paul and given in the revelations and prophecies and yet have not true kindness and love in our lives, we are hypocrites. It would be better to have millstones around our necks and be cast into the sea, than to be a stumbling-block to the honest in heart."

Chrestensen in the chair. Statistical reports were read from the branches: Springfield 185, gain 5; Beaver 88, loss 1; Thayer 33, no change. Ministerial reports from J. C. Chrestensen, A. M. The courtesy of the floor was extended to visiting Saints. A motion prevailed that hereafter we will not accept statistical reports unless the proper blanks are used. At this juncture J. F. Curtis arrived, and on motion was chosen to preside over the conference. The matter of branches not reporting was taken up and discussed. Brother Curtis made it very plain that they should send reports to every conference, even if no change had taken place in the membership. Business referred from last conference was taken up, and the question of the ordination of J. L. Creviston as an elder was referred to a committee of three, J. F. Curtis, J. C. Chrestensen, and W. R. Smith. That regarding the organization of a branch at Macomb was left with the missionary in charge and district president. LITTLE SIOUX.—The business session of the Little Sioux District conference opened at 10.30 a. m., June 2, at Sioux City, with district presidents Sidney Pitt and Joseph Lane in charge, S. B. Kibler chorister, and district clerk chosen clerk of conference. The presidency reported the spiritual condition of the district onward and upward; he said they had visited all branches in the district excepting Moorhead and found no troubles requiring their services. Reminded the priesthood that holding an office was not for name only, but that it meant a consecration to duty and labor. The statistical reports from all twelve branches in the district show a membership of 1,920. Gained by baptism 3, and by letter 5. Lost by letter 9, and by death 7. Nine marriages and one ordination. The bishop's agent had received from February 1 to June 1 inclusive, $864.61; on hand February 1 from previous report $110.43; total cash $975.04; remitted to Bishop Kelley $350; paid to elders' families and for aid $428; balance on hand $197.04; received for Order of Enoch $7; for Jerusalem mission $5. The spiritual condition of the various branches was reported to be better than at last reporting. The Missouri Valley church building fund had been increased $74, with $35 in the hands of collectors in addition, and more subscribed—enough to pay for the $800 lot purchased. The present officers of the district were, by unanimous vote, sustained for the coming year. J. A. Donaldson was, on his request, released as assistant district president, and S. B. Kibler was chosen in his stead and the choice ratified by the conference. On motion the resolution presented last conference looking toward consolidation with neighboring district for reunion purposes was indefinitely postponed, and carried without a dissenting vote. Richard O. Mann was recommended by the Logan Branch for ordination to office of elder; William Reilly by the Pisgah Branch to the same office, and John P. Jones of the Sioux City Branch to the office of deacon. Strong testimonies to the calls being from the Lord were given. The brethren were ordained according to the request at prayer service Sunday morning, June 3. Logan and Woodbine branches each invited the next conference. Logan received 17 votes and Woodbine 44. The choice of Woodbine by consent was made unanimous, and time set for October 7 and 8. The preaching at this conference was by Fred A. Fry, J. C. Crabb, J. F. McDowell, and Joseph Seddon. Prayer service in charge of Brn. S. B. Kibler and Asa Hight. The district tents were left in hands of district presidency to be used after consultation with minister in charge. Reunion Minutes.

SOUTHERN INDIANA.—The first reunion of the Southern Indiana District convened with the Hope Branch, near Derby, Indiana, on July 1, 1911, at 9.30 a. m. The Saints met in prayer meeting with Elder Moler in charge. At 2 o'clock the meeting was called to order by John Zahnd, and O. E. Byrn was chosen as secretary to effect an organization. A committee of five was chosen to arrange and provide for future reunions in the district: Jacob Halb, D. H. Baggerley, O. E. Byrn, John Zahnd and E. A. Jaegers. Upon motion the committee was authorized to set the time and place for the next reunion, said time and place to be published at least three months before the reunion. The committee was also instructed to consult the missionary in charge before so arranging. Motion prevailed instructing the committee to organize by choosing a secretary and treasurer, the district president being chairman of the committee. Motion prevailed authorizing said committee to call upon the several branches of the district to obtain funds to carry on the work. The reunion proceeded to organize, choosing H. E. Moler to preside, Jacob Halb assistant, E. O. Byrn secretary, D. H. Baggerly charter, Robert Miller organist, James A. Allen and D. H. Baggerly ushers. The chair was authorized to fill vacancies that might occur and to arrange the order of meetings and appoint the speakers. At 3.30 p. m. the Sunday school work was taken up in charge of John Zahnd, who spoke at length concerning the Sunday school work of the district, after which the privilege of asking questions regarding the work in hand was granted and brief talks were made by the several workers of the district. At 8 p. m., preaching by John Zahnd, assisted by Jacob Halb. Sunday, July 2, 8 a. m. prayer meeting with Jacob Halb in charge, and at 9.30 a. m. the hour was occupied by the local Sunday school, D. H. Baggerly in charge. At 11 a. m., preaching by E. O. Byrn, with D. H. Baggerly in charge. At 2 o'clock sacrament service, with H. E. Moler and Jacob Halb in charge. The services throughout the reunion were prayer meeting at 9 a. m., preaching at 10.30 a. m., 2 p. m., and 8.30 p. m. The speakers for the reunion were H. E. Moler, Jacob Halb, E. O. Byrn; John Zahnd being present until July 5, conducting the Sunday school work, also presenting the financial side of the work. On Saturday, July 8, at 10.30 a. m., Prof. R. V. Hopkins, who is in the field at present in the interest of Graceland College, spoke in behalf of that institution. Also Sunday a. m. at 10.30, the brother spoke again pertaining to the work of Graceland, stirring the interest of the Saints regarding the work of Graceland, and succeeded in obtaining the sympathy and degree of cooperation of the Saints in its behalf. Sunday at 8.30 our worthy assistant missionary in charge was the speaker, giving us words of encouragement and exhorting the Saints to greater diligence in the great work before us. Brother Hopkins was in charge. Four sisters were baptized during the reunion, two being baptized Saturday, July 8, at 3 p. m., by Jacob Halb, and two more being baptized Sunday, at 7 a. m., by H. E. Moler. Three were confirmed at the morning service by Elders Moler and Halb, the other, a little girl, having been confirmed the evening previous. Throughout the reunion the services were strengthening and inspirational, the Lord blessing the humble efforts put forth especially in the prayer meetings, where the favor of the Lord came to his children giving them strength and comfort and causing them to rejoice in the truth. Thus the first reunion of the Southern Indiana District becomes a matter of history. The Saints rejoice in the degree of success that attended our first effort in this phase of the work, measures being on foot as above mentioned to make this a permanent feature of the work in this field. It is to be hoped and sought for by all the workers that great and lasting good may result from our labors put forth in the name of the Master. O. E. Byrn, secretary of reunion.

NORTH DAKOTA.—Our reunion held at Milroy, North Dakota, July 8 to 16, just closed. The attendance of the Saints of the district was up to the average and of outsiders far exceeding any other ever held in the State. Eight were baptized at the close. All seemed to agree that it was the best ever held in the district. With the exception of Monday, July 9, when the wind blew very hard, the weather was ideal in every respect. Pres. F. M. Smith and Elder James S. Wagoner presided over the reunion, as also the conference which convened Tuesday, the 10th.

Besides these two brethren who were present and ministered the word, were Apostle W. H. Kelley, Elders J. E. Wildermuth, William Sparling, Alonzo Whiting, James C. Page, and Patriarch C. E. Butterworth, who gave good words of instruction and was kept very busy giving blessings. The order of meetings was prayer meeting at 9 a. m.; preaching services at 10.45 a. m., 2.30 and 8.30 p. m., with Sunday school, Religio, and one or two business sessions coming in at 4 p. m. Besides those baptized, there were at least a score who were fully persuaded that what we teach is true, but, like many others we have met, are slow to accept the message of life. We voted to hold a reunion next year at Logan, North Dakota. Saints of the State, especially the isolated ones, should arrange to attend. Break away from the monotony of toil and spend a week's vacation at these gatherings and have your spiritual strength renewed. The expense of the reunion was met by merely making statement and requests. James C. Page, secretary.

Two-Day Meeting.

The Saints of the Edgerton, Alberta, Branch have arranged for a two-day meeting on August 5 and 6, 1911. Speakers: F. M. Smith, of Independence, Missouri; William Lewis, and other prominent speakers. Eight piece orchestra in attendance, free meals and lodging to all. Entertainment Saturday evening. Special request to all Saints in the Northwest to attend. All trains met by committee. Place of meeting within one half mile of depot. Our anticipation is that this effort shall do good. A debate arranged for some time ago failed to mature and caused quite a widespread interest, and an extraordinary meeting will probably be well attended. Fred A. Rowe, president.

MAULE.—Mary F. Maule was born March 21, 1847, in Kentucky. Died July 10, after an illness of only a few hours. She united with the church February, 1876, baptized by Henry Holliday. Her aged husband, Donald Maule, four daughters, Mrs. Harriet Hight, Mrs. H. L. Fry, Mrs. Nellie Cassiday, Mrs. Elizabeth Smith; two sons, Edward LeMay, of Boston, Massachusetts, and William A. LeMay, with other relatives remain to mourn. A noble Saint, wife, and mother. The funeral sermon by Alma M. Fyrando, Wednesday, July 12, at the church in Magnolia, Iowa, assisted by Sidney Pitt, sr., to a congregation of several hundred friends. The memories of her good deeds are as the sweet perfume of a beautiful flower.

ANDERSON.—At Saskatoon Hospital, July 1, 1911, of acute appendicitis, inflammation and blood poison setting in, Maurice M. Anderson, oldest son of Bro. Myron and Sr. Olive Anderson. He was born March 23, 1890, at Lebeck, Cedar County, Missouri, baptized November 1, 1903 at Bemidji, Belltrami County, Minnesota, by E. A. Stedman, aged 21 years, 3 months, and 8 days. He leaves a wife and infant daughter, father, mother, three sisters, two brothers, many friends and relatives to mourn their sad loss, to join loved ones who have gone before to await the resurrection of the just. Funeral in charge of A. E. Nunn, sermon by Bro. John Beckman. In loving remembrance of Maurice:

We miss thee from our home, dear,
We miss thee from thy place;
A shadow o'er our life is cast,
We miss the sunshine of thy face.

We miss thy kind and willing hand,
Thy fond and earnest care,
Our home is dark without thee,
We miss thee everywhere.

God's Immutable and Unchangeable Laws.

In this article I propose to deal mostly with the fleshly tabernacle we live in, and the laws that control it. If the reader will carefully follow the thought and make it a part of him or herself, he can depend upon receiving some benefit. Health is an asset that most of us can possess, and there is no commodity can be compared to it. It is the healthy people that live, the sick merely exist. Of what benefit is an invalid to a community in a temporal way? Is it not the duty of every living person (especially the Saints) to make every possible effort to be healthy, and thus be productive of good results? Our beloved apostolic writer Paul makes the inspired statement in his epistle, "The wages of sin is death," and another statement, "He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption." What is sin? My definition is, any act contrary to God's laws. Let it be mental, physical, or spiritual. God's laws are as unchangeable as himself. The laws of gravitation are just the same to-day as they were at the time of creation. If I drink a quantity of carbonic acid, the result is death. So to-day—was so and will continue to be so. That which God considered the most essential, he made the most of. See how good this holds in the four great basic laws of health building.

Law 1: Sunlight. Without it death would be instantaneous. The amount is incomprehensible, eye can not see, the mind can not imagine the area the sun reaches.

Law 2: Air. Without air life is extinct in three minutes. As to the amount—we are living in a sea of air over ten miles deep, and covers the entire earth. God made it abundantly. It is the same everywhere, in the valley, on the mountain top, the only difference being the atmosphere pressure which is less when we ascend.

Law 3: Water. Without this liquid life is extinct in less than ten days. As to the amount—three fourths of the earth is water, oceans, seas, lakes and springs; yes, God in his infinite goodness brings it to us in the clouds. It is to be had almost everywhere. Our body is three fourths water. Think how infinitely wise God was in creating these three great law elements so plentifully. It is all free to saint and sinner. Think of God's wonderful goodness.

Law 4: Food. We can live for sixty days without food. James A. Garfield lived 86 days, 4 hours without food, and was just as intelligent before death as when the fatal bullet pierced his noble body. The great weakness of the human family is over-taxation by food. The universal cry is, Eat, eat. Why have the cart before the horse? That which is most essential: first, sunlight, then air, then water. Are you aware of the fact that 95 per cent of the human race dig their grave with their teeth? Remember it is not how much you eat, it is what you eat, and how you eat. Think of the millions upon millions of tons of food that is eaten, and all unnecessary; scientists claim 90 per cent of the food is wasted. Any foolish man can produce a $1,000.00 stomach, but it takes a smart man to produce a 30 cent pair of brains. Get in the sunlight as much as possible and breathe deep, full inhalations. Drink 2 to 4 quarts of water between meals. It is all free. What in the world would the bishops do with all the money that could be accumulated, if all understood what, when, and how to eat. I claim all you spend over 10 cents per day for eating is wasted. I have and can live on 5 cents contentedly. We have two minor laws, exercise and cleanliness. See that every muscle is used in your body at least several times per day, and especially the abdominal muscles. Treat the body with the same care as you do your face, wash it often and keep out of the bathtub.

ELEMENTS.

The earth has fourteen elements. The vegetable kingdom has fourteen elements, the human body has fourteen elements. God, in creating the vegetable kingdom, acts as the great drug store to draw the fourteen elements from the earth in a condition that man can assimilate and make a part of his body to replace the waste tissue. Why feed the vegetable to the ox and let him absorb seventy per cent for his energy? Twenty per cent is placed in bundles of fibrine called muscle, full of uric acid, trachina, tuberculosis, and many other diseases. Why can you not have it before the ox; pure, and with a saving of at least fifty per cent? Why not live according to the laws of nature. Be healthy, be blessed, and assist the church with money to spread the restored gospel in these last days.

COMPOSITION OF MAN.

A man of average weight of 154 pounds is divided up as follows: Muscles, 68 pounds; fat, 28 pounds; blood, 7 pounds; brain, 3 pounds; skin, 10 pounds; viscera, 14 pounds.

All must be renewed from the food ingested; and from the food force is also derived: force to think, force to labor, and force to generate heat. 'Tis said the body of man contains:

- Enough salt to provide a dinner party.
 - A bowl full of sugar.
 - Enough iron to make five carpet tacks.
 - Enough gas to fill a gasometer of 3,949 feet.
 - Enough carbon to make 9,360 lead pencils.
 - Enough phosphorous to make 8,064 boxes of matches.
 - There is fat sufficient to make 48 pounds of candles, enough hydrogen to fill a balloon that would lift the man to the clouds.
- I am truly grateful for the blessings God has bestowed upon me, and it is one of the foremost ideas of my life to help mankind so that we can be healthy; and surely the inner man will smile when living in a clean, healthy, and sanitary house. The Lord commands us to be clean. Can we say we are clean if we use tobacco, liquor, drugs, and decomposed and embalmed meats, etc? Let us strive to come higher; not only spiritually, but physically as well, as it is harmony that eventually enables us to live the celestial law. A servant of the poor and needy as well as the sick and afflicted.

In gospel bonds, Truthfully,
A. B. KLAR.

We are not to forget upon his part, how marvelously God respects our freedom, and how, though he is Lord of all, he stands only without the door of our hearts to knock for admittance. God does not arbitrarily obtrude or interfere. So truly does he respect our personality that he does not step in, even occasionally, to "set things right." He has put us in no play world, but in a world in which our choice and our personality are fully respected.—Henry Churchill King.

All our afflictions are Christ's refinings, and the purer the gold, the hotter will be the fire; the whiter the garment, the harder the cleansing.—A. Thompson.

Nine aviators crossed the English Channel in one day last week, flying from Dover to Calais. And they complained because a beggarly handful of people were on hand at Dover to see them start! So common has the channel passage by air become since that historic day when Blieriot alarmed half of England and astonished all of it by landing on the chalk cliffs that front the straits of Dover.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

The longer I live, the more I am certain that the great difference between men, between the feeble and the powerful, the great and the insignificant, is energy, invincible determination—a purpose once fixed, and then death or victory! —Fowell Buxton.

We shall begin presently to discern that we are living it out, and that our movement toward moral supremacy is just the whole deepening, disciplined movement of our lives.—Gaius Glenn Atkins.

If thou faint in the day of adversity, thy strength is small —too small to be worth talking about, for the day of adversity is its first real opportunity.—Babcock.

Excess of Fat

So many men and women say if I could only reduce my fat. Well, that is a very simple problem, if you have as much will power as a chicken. It takes fat to produce fat. Well some say—"How is it, Klar, that some get fat just on water?" I remark, that would be a very good system for the farmer to use with his swine. Do not be so foolish as to believe this "tommy rot." It is carbonaceous foods such as white bread, corn, butter, lard, potatoes, etc. that produces fat or heat.

KLAR'S GOOD HEALTH FLOUR

with vegetables of the proper kind is just what you want in hot weather. Keeps the bowels in a perfect condition, regulates the blood, strengthens the muscles, brain, nerve and bones, enables you to sleep well at night, and will reduce the cost of living more than one half. What it has done for hundreds and thousands of other people throughout the U. S. A. it can do for you. If not more than pleased it costs you nothing. Will you test it? Be wise, listen and act to-day.

THE COMMON PEOPLE.

In the twelfth chapter of Mark there appears this significant statement regarding Christ: "The common people heard him gladly."

Thus we have scriptural recognition of a line, hard to define yet very real, dividing the "common people" from the "aristocracy." The aristocracy in the days of Jesus included the proud Roman officials who ruled Jerusalem and neither knew Jesus nor cared to know him, and the Jewish scribes and Pharisees who devoured widows' houses and the earnings of the poor, loved salutations in the market places, chief seats in the synagogues, and upper rooms at the feasts, who feared and hated Jesus, when they did not ignore him.

Then there was the great mass of the common people, made up of men and women of various vocations and professions, with their common ambitions, desires, sorrows, and joys, the men and women who did the world's work and bore the world's burdens. These "heard him gladly."

This condition persisted, for later we find Paul saying, "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called."—1 Corinthians 1: 26.

The rich and the proud need the gospel message—but they do not heed it. The message is to all classes, but those who accept it are almost exclusively of the common people.

We could truthfully repeat the words of Paul today in describing the experiences of the church in these last days. Not many wise or mighty or noble ones (using the words, as Paul did, in a worldly sense) have ever accepted our message. Have we ever converted even one millionaire? or one senator? or one noted scientist? or one world celebrated literary writer? or one noted leader of fashionable society?

Our message has appealed to, and our church is composed of more common people. But this need not cause us to despair, for two reasons that we shall present. In the first place Jesus, speaking to these common people who heard him and obeyed him, said, "Ye are the salt of the earth."

In the second place, our audience, though composed of the common people, is quite large enough to keep us busy for some time to come. Lincoln, in his characteristically homely way, said that God must have loved the common people, because he made so many of them.

Chancellor Buchtel, of the Denver University, while speaking in Lamoni some time ago said, "Most of us are common people; of the others there is only a little omnibus load, and they do not count." This statement should be accepted with certain modifications, because we do not wish to ignore the great debt that society owes to the extraordinary man. But it should be remembered that very frequently the extraordinary man springs from the common people. From them come all the inspired prophets. Again, these people in the omnibus count in another way, because the omnibus hire is paid by the common people who walk, and in some cases the rate is extremely high, though in others a fair equivalent may be given for the privilege of riding. It is time that those who ride were compelled to give a certificate of character and service.

When we speak of the common people we do not have in mind a dead level of ungifted ignorance. Every man differs from all other men in some ways. There are great varieties of ability among the common people. The common people are the great reservoir of racial vitality, ambition, mentality, and native ability. Royal families do not produce great men. The reverse is true. Great men, sprung from the common people, found royal families.

One of the arguments made in the defense of the present unequal distribution of wealth is that the concentration of wealth in the hands of a few families creates a leisure class that has time to devote to culture, art, and statesmanship. But alas, the same special privilege that elevates these men and women above their fellows too often leaves them egotistical, selfish, cold, and narrow, incapable of appreciating or solving the problems of humanity; if, indeed, it does not blight and destroy them physically and morally.

Shortly before his death, Gladstone said: "I painfully reflect that in almost every great political controversy of the last fifty years, the leisured classes, the educated classes, the titled classes, have been in the wrong."

In Great Britain to-day the House of Lords is said to be falling into desuetude. It is the House of Commons that is meeting the modern problems of the nation with anything like an aggressive, affirmative policy. The "House of Lords" in all nations is burdened by traditions, privileges, and vast estates that must be preserved at any cost to humanity. It is ever so with aristocracy.

Human progress requires service and sacrifice. Our "lords" in every land are unaccustomed to sacrifice. They do not pay tribute, they demand it. The gospel requires service. The aristocracy is not accustomed to serve, they prefer to be served.

One reason why Gladstone was forced to make the statement to which we have referred, is that the common people get close to the heart of things. They sit every day at their tasks face to face with the stern problems of life. They are educated in the academy of hard knocks. Their education, though limited, is practical. The education of the aristocracy is academic. If then, as Gladstone said, the common people are most often on the side of right in human progress, we need not be ashamed to be found numbered with them and laboring for them in gospel work.

But how about the character of the common people? In many ways they may be unlovely, and not attractive to the æsthetic. They have their vices and their evil habits of thought, speech, and deed. These, however, can not be said to exceed in turpitude the crimes of the favorites of wealth, blood, or social position, and they do have those virtues of hospitality, human sympathy, and industry that seem to become atrophied in the more refined air breathed by the aristocracy.

On this point Frank Hatch Streightoff, who has made a study of the question, says:

"In his intellectual and moral life the workman is by no means all that could be desired. He thinks and talks impurely, his home life is largely a matter of convenience, there is often little or no spiritual comradeship between husband and wife. The saloon exacts a terrible tribute, both directly in money, and indirectly in physical and mental suffering. Amusement tends strongly to the sensual, dancing leads frequently to gross immorality—yet, though alienated from the church, the poor are good at heart and have profound respect for things religious. The church and the workingman are beginning to feel the need of cooperation."—The Standard of Living among the Industrial People of America, p. 164.

These are the people who heard Jesus—the same in character. They are worth saving Jesus was willing to die for them. They are alienated from the churches to-day simply because they believe that Jesus is not to be found in the churches. As one of them said, "Jesus we honor, but for the churches that call themselves by his name, we have very little respect." Here is our congregation. We must take to them the pure gospel of Jesus, and if we wish to hold them we must not omit that part which enjoins equality and justice in this world.

BOOK REVIEWS.

THE TRUE ORIGIN OF MORMON POLYGAMY.—This is a paper bound volume badly written by Charles A. Shook and published by the W. A. C. P. Association, price fifty cents. It is indorsed by R. B. Neal, who says that it will "shake" the Reorganized Church to the "toppling of the whole superstructure." Those who have noticed tremors in the superstructure will now know what the trouble is—Shook has shaken. The origin of polygamy is ascribed to Joseph Smith the Martyr. The "evidences" produced are those usually brought forth in works of this kind—though oft refuted, they are eagerly taken up by each new Shook who proposes to shake, and incidentally realize a little pecuniary profit from the sale of a very inferior book. In his preface, the author says that he claims no originality, and to date no one has claimed it for him.

THE SOCIALIST MOVEMENT.—This is the title of a book by J. Ramsey Macdonald, M. P. Mr. Macdonald is a Socialist, and writes from an affirmative standpoint. He endeavors to set forth the teachings of Socialism, also devotes considerable space to a statement of what "Socialism is not," a task made necessary by much misunderstanding. This book is one of a series issued by Henry Holt & Company, called the Home University Library. The library is intended to cover topics of contemporary thought treated by able writers; the finished books to be put out at popular prices, within the reach of all. The proposition is worth considering. Ten volumes on various subjects are now ready and others will be issued at once. (Henry Holt & Company, 34 West Thirty-Third street, New York. Cloth, 75 cents.)

HOW TO DEVELOP SELF-CONFIDENCE.—Many excellent ideas, calculated to stiffen the individual backbone, are contained in this volume by Grenville Kleiser. Chapters are devoted to self-consciousness, concentration, the discouraged man, confidence in business, and confidence in society. One chapter is devoted to public speaking. The author is an authority on the last named subject, having formerly occupied as instructor in public speaking at Yale Divinity School, Yale University. On the whole a reading of the book is calculated to inspire fresh hope and an accession of will power. (Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York City; $1.35.)

of a book by Charles E. Jefferson, pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York City. It contains a series of lectures delivered before the Divinity School of Yale University, on the Lyman Beecher Foundation. Its pages teem with bright sayings that will be fruitful of thought. Here are a few: "The church has to many Christians become an object to be apologized for, and has ceased to be an institution to be sacrificed for and loved." "Men make contributions for carrying the gospel into foreign lands who act like heathen in their home church." "The church is rich in money, ideas, apparatus, numbers, but poor in love." (The Macmillan Company, 66 Fifth avenue, New York; $1.25.)

SIDELIGHTS ON CONTEMPORARY SOCIALISM.—This is the title of a volume by John Spargo, an interesting writer and an authority on Socialism. The volume, unlike most of his books, is not addressed to non-Socialists with a view to making converts. It is addressed to Socialists on questions that have arisen within their own ranks. He writes of Marxian Socialism, and says that there is no other Socialism worth considering, as no one is seriously concerned about any other "so-called socialistic movement," a thrust, no doubt, at Christian socialism. This work will be of interest chiefly to those students of Socialism who have done considerable preparatory reading, or to Socialists who are reading up on debatable questions of party interest. (B. W. Huerbsch, 225 Fifth Avenue, New York. Cloth, $1.00.)

THE CHURCH AND LABOR.—A very interesting problem is treated upon by Charles Stelzle, superintendent of the Presbyterian Department of Church and Labor, in his recently published book, The Church and Labor. The first chapter is devoted to the attitude of the laborer toward the church, while in the second chapter the proposition is reversed. The author reports a conversation with a laboring man, who declared, "Jesus we honor, but for the churches who call themselves by his name, we have very little respect." Again he says: "The workingman tells us that the church, because of its extreme conservatism, has always been the last institution to accept any reform measure which may have been introduced." And again, "The church criticises the workingman because of the methods which he adopts . . . forgetting that one need not go very far back in its own history to find duplicated nearly everything that we deplore in organized labor to-day, even down to boycotting and slugging." This is one of a series of books on Modern Religious Problems. (Houghton Mifflin Company, 4 Park street, Boston. Cloth, 50 cents.)

The word temperance in the New Testament signifies self-possession; it is a disposition suitable to one who has a race to run and therefore will not load his pockets with lead.—John Newton.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

MODERN GADIANTON ROBBERS.—The trial of Camorrist leaders now in progress at Vitebro, near Rome, brings to light many features of the Camorra that remind one of the "secret band of Gadianton" spoken of in the Book of Mormon. Like the Gadianton band, the Camorra is a secret organization of desperate criminals organized to "get gain," to commit murders and other awful crimes, and to protect its members in adultery. Like the Gadiantons, the members of the Camorra have their secret oaths and covenants, and their secret signs and tokens by which they communicate with each other even in the prisons under the eyes of the civil authorities. The historian in writing of the Gadiantons says that their members were never tried by the laws of the land but by their own laws. The Camorra has a complete judiciary system before which members are tried and condemned or acquitted. The murder of two of the members thus sentenced led to the present exposure of the society. According to Ernesto Serao, who writes in the Outlook regarding the Camorra, it had its origin in the Spanish Sierras, where they "had their nests with the falcons of those savage mountains," and in this particular they were for a time situated like the Gadiantons, who at one time inhabited the inaccessible mountain fastnesses. Later the Camorra was transplanted to Italy. The Camorra is in a way a religious society. One of the first taxes levied upon all members is for money with which to keep lamps burning day and night before pictures of the Blessed Virgin. But according to the Book of Mormon the Devil was back of the Gadianton robbers, and we are told that he reveals these secret combinations with their oaths and signs and criminal purposes to every generation. We need not be surprised to witness his evil work in similar ways in our own times.

THE INCENTIVE TO CHRISTIAN EFFORT.—One writer criticised certain churches that have undertaken charitable, social, and institutional work, on the ground that such work is undertaken entirely as a means to an end;—"which end, by the way, is merely the enlargement of the church roll." If the charge is true, the criticism is well placed. Jesus healed the sick and cared for the suffering, not that he might make converts, but because he had sympathy for them. That converts may be made by deeds of human kindness is an incidental consideration of great importance, but it should not be the leading incentive to effort. It is the duty of the church and church members to engage in such work, even though it does not result in the addition of a single name to the church records. The Spirit of Jesus prompts to free and unreserved service wherever help is needed.

CATHOLIC CLAIMS OF PAPAL AUTHORITY.—Here is a very clear and concise statement of the authority claimed for the pope in matters of spiritual authority and interpretation: "When Peter speaks ex-cathedra he speaks with the infallible authority conferred on him by God. And Peter still lives and speaks in the person of his successor. What he binds on earth is bound in heaven. If he defines a doctrine—let us say the immaculate conception of the Blessed Virgin—what happens? So soon as he defines it, he binds it upon the consciences of all Catholics. They are obliged to accept it."—From "The Catholic Church: what is it?" by the Right Reverend Monsignor Vaughan, Rome, in Hibbert Journal, April, 1908. We too believe in spiritual authority, given of God; but we hold that God has diffused authority among the priesthood, and he has also divided it among leading quorums of the priesthood so as to safeguard the rights of the people against the domination of one man. God himself recognizes the principle of "common consent" among his people, and the right of private judgment.

My Refuge.

My God, thou art my hiding place,
A refuge sure and sweet;
When faith takes hold of thy rich grace
It finds a safe retreat.

Though storms may rage and billows roll
And sin's dark passions swell,
On thee I'll rest my trusting soul
And in thy peace I'll dwell.

I'm safe with thee, no power can harm
Who put their trust in thee;
Protected by thy mighty arm
All sin and danger flee.

Whisperings of the Spirit.

Ye Saints of God, a word I give,
That strength you might obtain;
I unto you my Spirit give
That faithful you remain.

Shall Satan now my church destroy?
In these the latter days?
Ah, no, my promise I will keep
Though he his power arrays.

Continue on, oh, little band,
In prayer and fasting found,
Draw near to me and never fail
In meeting to be found.

And if you come in humbleness,
And meekness rules your heart,
My Spirit there will surely be.
And strength to you impart.

For Israel is my chosen one,
His seed shall ever be,
Resplendent in my glory crowned
In all eternity.

Keep Hoeing and Praying.

"Faith without works is dead."

Said Farmer Jones in a whining tone,
To his good old neighbor Gray;
"I've worn my knees through to the bone,
But it ain't no use to pray."

"I've prayed to the Lord a thousand times,
For him to make this 'ere corn grow,
And why your'n beats it so and climbs,
I'd give a deal to know."

Said Farmer Gray to his neighbor Jones
In his easy, quiet way:
"When prayers get mixed with lazy bones
They don't make farming pay.

"Your weeds, I note, are good an' tall
In spite of all your prayers.
You may pray for corn till the heavens fall
If you don't dig up the tares.

"I mix my prayers with a little toil,
Along in every row:
An' I work this mixture into the soil
Quite vig'rous with a hoe.

"So while I'm praying I use my hoe,
An' do my level best
To keep down the weeds along each row
An' the Lord he does the rest.

"It's well for to pray both night and morn,
As every farmer knows;
But the place to pray for thrifty corn,
Is right between the rows.

"You must use your hands while praying, though,
If an answer you would get,
For prayer worn knees an' a rusty hoe
Never raised a big crop yet.

"An' so I believe, my good old friend,
If you mean to win the day,
From plowing clean to the harvest end
You must hoe as well as pray."

—The Lutheran World.

So when my Savior calls, I rise
And calmly do my best,
Leaving to him with silent eyes
Of hope and fear, the rest.

I step, I mount where he has led,
Men count my haltings o'er.
I know them; yet tho' self I dread,
I love his precept more.

"THE SIN AGAINST THE HOLY GHOST."

BETRAYING "THE REVELATIONS OF GOD."

O ye Twelve! and all Saints! profit by this important KEY—that in all your trials, troubles, temptations, afflictions, bonds, imprisonments and death, see to it, that you do not betray heaven; that you do not betray Jesus Christ; that you do not betray the Brethren; that you do not betray the Revelations of God, whether in the Bible, Book of Mormon, or Doctrine and Covenants, or any other that ever has or ever will be given and revealed unto man in this world or that which is to come. Yea, in all your kickings and floundering, see to it that you do not this thing, lest innocent blood be found in your skirts, and you go down to hell. All other sins are not to be compared to sinning against the Holy Ghost, and proving a traitor to thy brethren.—Purported language of Joseph Smith, as given in the Millennial Star, vol. 17, p. 295.

I Jesus have sent my angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. . . . If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book.—Revelation 22: 16, 18, 19.

Wherefore I say unto you, All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men who receive me and repent; but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven unto men. . . . When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest and finding none; but when the man speaketh against the Holy Ghost, then he saith, I will return into my house from whence I came out; and when he is come, he findeth him empty, swept and garnished; for the good spirit leaveth him unto himself. Then goeth the evil spirit, and taketh with him seven other spirits more wicked than himself; and they enter in and dwell there; and the last end of that man is worse than the first.—Matthew 12: 26, 28, 29, 1. T.

The message of the angel of Revelation 14: 6, 7, was a restoration of the gospel of Christ with its power for present revelation; and as holy men of old have spoken by the Holy Ghost, so now may holy men still speak, "neither adding to, nor diminishing from the prophecy of his [John's] book, the Holy Scriptures, or the revelations of God which shall come hereafter by the gift and power of the Holy Ghost, the voice of God, or the ministering of angels."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 6, Lamoni edition; 20: 35, Utah edition.

If there is any one thing that the Mormons of Utah claim to do more than another, it is to follow Joseph Smith and receive his words as if from the mouth of God; and whatever vagary of doctrine their leaders wish to foist upon them needs only his name attached thereto, and it is accepted as divine truth. This has been fully understood by each of their leaders, but by none more than Brigham Young. It was his ambition to become the leader that blinded him to such an extent that "the light that was in him became darkness," and his last state was worse than his first. This is fully shown in the shameless way in which he has, or those under him, have perverted the word of the Lord as it was given to the church by the Seer.

One of the plainest cases of this perversion is found in their Doctrine and Covenants, section 121. This purports to be "A prayer and prophecies, written by Joseph, the Seer, while in Liberty Jail, Clay County, Missouri, March 20, 1839," and is really an extract from two epistles written from there and signed by Joseph Smith and others. These letters are to be found as first published, in the Times and Seasons, vol. 1, pp. 99-101, and 131, 132. The document as it appears in the Doctrine and Covenants is taken from the body of the two epistles with nothing to show omissions (of which there are many, not only of portions of the letters not bearing on the subjects, but of qualifying clauses, under which promises were made to the Saints,) nor additions; of which additions some have the effect to harshen the message, while others are not only additions, but are alterations, so much so, that the doctrine of the godhead is changed and either left ambiguous, or is made to indicate a "plurality of Gods," instead of teaching the "only living and true God," the only one whom men should worship, because "Before me there was no God formed, neither shall there be after me."

We will not produce the whole document as it appears in the two publications, nor as it is in the Times and Seasons and the Millennial Star, for this has been done in a former number of the SAINTS' HERALD. (See number for June 3, 1896.) We will, however, produce the clauses where the change in doctrine has been introduced, that the reader may judge for himself as to who is responsible for this "sin against the Holy Ghost."

Commencing with the 27th paragraph of the section, we will place the subject-matter as it appears in the documents in question in parallel columns, until we reach the 34th paragraph. They read as follows:

Times and Seasons.

Yea, the fullness of that promise which our Fathers have waited for with such anxious expectation, which was to be revealed in the last days, and held in reserve until a time when nothing shall be withheld, when all the glories of earth and heaven, time and eternity shall be manifest to all those, who have endured valiantly for the gospel of Jesus Christ. If there be bounds set to the heavens, the seas, the dry land, they shall be manifest, as well as the various revolutions of the sun, moon, and planets; and a full development of all glorious laws by which they council of heaven in the presence of the eternal God, before the world was. . . . What power can stay the heavens, as well might man stretch forth his puny arm to stop the mighty Missouri river in its course, as to hinder the Almighty from pouring down knowledge from heaven upon the hearts of the Latter day saints.—Times and Seasons, vol. 1, p. 103. (Italics mine.)

In this excerpt from the Times and Seasons the ellipsis indicates where there is an omission of considerable matter not relevant to the subject, and not indicated in the Doctrine and Covenants.

If John's anathema against the man who would alter his prophetic message was, or is effective, why not the same anathema against those who have so plainly perverted the teaching of latter day revelation? "But," says the Mormon editor who undertook to answer the charge made against them of changing this important document, (see Deseret News for Saturday, July 4, 1896), "it does not follow that anybody has been guilty of 'corrupting the words of Joseph Smith since his death.' . . . Is it not quite as reasonable to suppose that the letter as it appeared in the Times and Seasons was abbreviated to suit the limited size of that periodical and also to suit those times and seasons when many things for prudence' sake were not fully made public? Did not the Lord command in some other cases that his servants should 'Hold their peace' concerning certain revelations until it became wise to declare them?"

It does not seem so to us. If this perversion was done in the prophet's time and with his sanction, then he must have been guilty of adding to, or else taking from, (or, manifestly both,) the word that the Holy Ghost had given through him for the edification of the church. If he did this, none could be more guilty. As to the command to "hold their peace concerning certain revelations," we do find that the church was to hold their peace concerning the Inspired Translation of the Bible until they "had received them in full," and then they were to teach them to all-nations. In this case in point it was not a matter of holding their peace but of perverting the teachings of the Prophet. This has been done; who is the guilty party?

"But," says one, "did not the prophet teach the plurality of gods in some of his sermons?" Not that the church had any knowledge of during his lifetime, and the documents quoted as those sermons were not even made from reports of those sermons, but are what some one has written as their memory of those discourses. When you take their references, given from these sources, you find that they make the Prophet find fault with the Bible as he himself gave it to the church, claiming it to be the Scriptures "As they are in mine own bosom, to the salvation of mine own elect." (Doctrine and Covenants 35: 20, Utah edition; 34: 5, Lamoni edition.) In this he is made to declare that the very first Hebrew word in the Bible should have been translated to read "The head one of the gods brought forth the gods." And another discourse credited to him as delivered June 16, 1844, declares that Revelation 1: 6 as it appears in the King James Translation of the Bible is altogether correct, and hence a plurality of gods.

Unfortunately for such contentions, but fortunately for those who may be interested in tracing these teachings to their source, the Seer had already done his work of translating and correcting the Holy Scriptures, and this by the spirit of revelation. This work was completed July 2, 1833, (see Jensen's Church Chronology, 1890 edition, page 6.) In this translation of the Scriptures is found no such a correction as is imputed to the prophet in his discourse, but instead it reads, "I am the beginning and the end; the Almighty God. By mine Only Begotten I created these things." And in the revelation given to Joseph the Seer, June, 1830, with which he prefaces this translation, this declaration is made, "I am the Lord God Almighty, and endless is my name, for I am without beginning of days or end of years; . . . and mine Only Begotten is and shall be the Savior, for he is full of grace and truth; but there is no God beside me; and all things are present with me, for I know them all."

Are these declarations some of the "revelations of God"? Surely our Mormon friends can not deny these, for they are found, also, in their Pearl of Great Price. Then when we turn to the passage put in the mouth of the Seer as his text in the discourse of June 16, 1844, we find that it had already been corrected by him to read, "And unto him who loved us, be glory; who washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God, his Father. To him be glory and dominion, for ever and ever. Amen."—Revelation 1: 6, Inspired Translation of the Bible.

It is, perhaps, unfortunate for our friends of the Mormon church that these things were "preserved in safety," (Doctrine and Covenants 42,) but it is fortunate for the fair name of the Seer, and also for those who revere him as a prophet of the unchangeable God, that these things are accessible, that all may examine them.

We are fully persuaded that it is time that these cease to "pervert the right ways of the Lord," and stop "betraying the revelations of God," lest "innocent blood be found in your (their) skirts, and they (you) go down to hell," for "All other sins are not to be compared to sinning against the Holy Ghost, and proving a traitor to thy brethren." Who, then, has been traitor to the brethren, even so far as to change the doctrine of the Godhead? Was it Joseph Smith, or Brigham Young; or was it those who have come after these men? How shall we determine? Is it not fair to take the words of Brigham Young himself? He declared, September 11, 1853, "If I have any knowledge touching the condition of this people at the present time, and the way they are taught, led, counseled, and dictated by those who go before them to open up the way, it is directly opposite of that we saw in the days of Joseph the Prophet."—Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, p. 78. And April 9, 1852, as reported in the same volume, pages 50, 51, he makes the first declaration of the doctrine of "Adam God"—or the first authentic declaration is there found on that subject, with the consequent doctrine of the "plurality of gods" hinging upon it. In this he also denies the statement of both the Bible and Book of Mormon that Jesus Christ was begotten by the Holy Ghost. Surely it was not strange that the "Good Spirit should leave him to himself, and the last state of that man (was) is worse than the first."

With the prayer that these people may see where they stand, and "In returning and rest shall ye be saved," I am,

Ever in the conflict for truth.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

TRAUM STRIKES A SNAG.

Page 51, in expressing his doubt of God's hand being connected with the introduction of the Book of Mormon into the world, he states:

Allowing that he had anything to do with its introduction into the world, it would seem that he early expected that it would strike a "snag" somewhere, and sought by the aid of eleven men to tide it over these danger-points. As we shall see before we have completed our investigation, that if God lent a hand in this enterprise, and at any place put on it the stamp of his approval, he should be everlastingly ashamed of his job.

If this mode of reasoning is legitimate, it will apply with equal force to the establishment of the New Testament work nineteen hundred years ago. He can thus reason: Allowing that God had anything to do with the introduction of the Christian system through Jesus Christ, it would seem that he early expected that his divine mission would strike a snag somewhere, and sought by the aid of "twelve" men to tide it over these danger-points. It is peculiar; that God should so provide, for it is declared by the Apostle Peter, "Him God raised up the third day, and showed him openly; not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead." Peter continues, "and he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God, to be the judge of quick and dead."

The twelve apostles were "commanded" of God "to testify." Suppose this testimony were on the "fly leaf" of the New Testament, instead of within the body of that book, drawn up and "subscribed" to by the twelve apostles, would not our critic's "suspicions" assume gigantic proportions?

But again, "To him gave all the prophets witness." Then with the New Testament displaying the testimony of "all the prophets," drawn up and "subscribed," in addition to the testimony of the twelve apostles, what an "array of names" would attest the fact (?) that God early expected the divine mission of Jesus to "strike a snag"! I wonder if God was "everlastingly ashamed of his job."

Continuing on page 51, Mr. Traum says that he will attempt the impeachment of the witnesses with their own words and books. His first effort at impeachment is made by reference to Doctrine and Covenants 4: 3 (an error of his in citation, however, as he quotes 5: 3). He quotes just that portion or those portions that he thinks will suit his purpose in creating a supposed objection, and adds parentheses without explanation, as if the words he supplies were in the original document, and as usual, takes from the paragraph certain words, and closes the quotation at a comma. This class of reasoners are supposed to have impeached somebody's testimony!

His effort to quote section 5, paragraph 3, is as follows:

I have reserved those things (the plates?) which I have intrusted unto you my servant Joseph for a wise purpose in me, and it (the purpose?) shall be made known unto future generations; but this generation shall have my word through you; and in addition to your testimony, the testimony of three of my servants (Oliver, Martin and David), and they shall go forth with my words, that are given through you; yea, they shall know of a surety that these things are true, for from the heaven will I declare it unto them; I will give them power to behold and view these things as they are, and to none else will I grant this power to receive this same testimony among this generation.

The paragraph is correctly quoted thus, words omitted by Traum appearing in italics:

Behold, verily, I say unto you, I have reserved those things which I have intrusted unto you, my servant Joseph, for a wise purpose in me, and it shall be made known unto future generations; but this generation shall have my word through you; and in addition to your testimony, the testimony of three of my servants, whom I shall call and ordain, unto whom I will show these things; and they shall go forth with my words that are given through you; yea, they shall know of a surety that these things are true; for from heaven will I declare it unto them; I will give them power that they may behold and view these things as they are; and to none else will I grant this power, to receive this same testimony, among this generation.

Upon this statement he makes a wild deduction. He construes it in a careless manner, as we shall see.

Let us now quote from the narrative given by Mr. Smith:

In the course of the work of translation we ascertained that three special witnesses were to be provided by the Lord, to whom he would grant that they should see the plates from which this work (the Book of Mormon) should be translated, and that these witnesses should bear record of the same; as will be found recorded.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 45.

Now see Book of Mormon, Palmyra edition, p. 110:

Wherefore, at that day when the book shall be delivered unto the man of whom I have spoken, the book shall be hid from the eyes of the world, that the eyes of none shall behold it, save it be that three witnesses shall behold it, by the power of God, besides him to whom the book shall be delivered; and they shall testify to the truth of the book, and the things therein. And there is none other which shall view it, save it be a few, according to the will of God, to bear testimony of his word unto the children of men: for the Lord God hath said, that the words of the faithful should speak as if it were from the dead. Wherefore, the Lord God will proceed to bring forth the words of the book; and in the mouth of as many witnesses as seemeth him good, will he establish his word: and woe be unto him that rejecteth the word of God.

Now please read paragraph 3 of section 4, Doctrine and Covenants, once more, then compare with the following, relative to the manifestation received by the three special witnesses, which the "few" others did not participate in. After a commandment was given in which they were promised they should see the plates "by the power of God," and commanded to testify of it, the narrative says:

Not many days after the above commandment was given, we four; viz: Martin, Harris, David Whitmer, Oliver Cowdery, and myself, agreed to retire into the woods, and try to obtain, by fervent and humble prayer, the fulfillment of the promises given in the revelation, that we should have a view of the plates, etc. We accordingly made choice of a piece of woods convenient to Mr. Whitmer's house, to which we retired, and having knelt down we began to pray in much faith, to Almighty God, to bestow upon us a realization of these promises. According to previous arrangements I commenced, by vocal prayer to our heavenly Father, and was followed by each of the rest in succession. We did not yet, however, obtain any answer, or manifestation of the divine favor in our behalf. We again observed the same order of prayer, each calling on and praying fervently to God in rotation; but with the same result as before. Upon this our second failure, Martin Harris proposed that he would withdraw himself from us, believing as he expressed himself that his presence was the cause of our not obtaining what we wished for. He accordingly withdrew from us, and we knelt down again, and had not been many minutes engaged in prayer, when presently we beheld a light above us in the air of exceeding brightness, and, behold, an angel stood before us. In his hands he held the plates which we had been praying for these to have a view of. He turned over the leaves one by one, so that we could see them, and discover the engravings thereon distinctly. He addressed himself to David Whitmer, and said: "David, blessed is the Lord, and he that keeps his commandments." When immediately afterwards, we heard a voice from out of the bright light above us, saying, "These plates have been revealed by the power of God, and they have been translated by the power of God; the translation of them which you have seen is correct, and I command you to bear record of what you now see and hear."

I now left David and Oliver, and went in pursuit of Martin Harris, whom I found at a considerable distance, fervently engaged in prayer. He soon told me, however, that he had not yet prevailed with the Lord, and earnestly requested me to join him in prayer, that he also might realize the same blessings which we had just received. We accordingly joined in prayer, and ultimately obtained our desires, for before we had yet finished, the same vision was opened to our view; at least it was again to me, and I once more beheld, and heard the same things; whilst at the same moment Martin Harris cried out, apparently in ecstasy of joy, "'Tis enough; mine eyes have beheld," and jumping up he shouted, Hosanna, blessing God, and otherwise rejoiced exceedingly.—History of the Church, vol. 1, pages 45, 46, 47.

In making a summary of the foregoing, we find: Three of the witnesses to the Book of Mormon saw the plates in the hands of the angel of God, the three were shown the engravings thereon, by the angel, the angel turned the leaves over one by one, a voice from heaven declared to the "three witnesses" that the plates had been translated correctly "by the power of God." "A few" others, the "eight," saw the plates, handled them, examined the engravings thereon, but were not attended by angelic ministration, or the voice from heaven, as were the three special witnesses. But they doubtless received the evidence of the truthfulness of the work afterward. (Ephesians 1: 13, 18.) Elder Traum should remember that men can be witnesses in a sense, as the apostles were before the great endowment on Pentecost, but not in the divine and higher sense until, as was said of old, they "shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me."—Acts 1: 8. Will Elder Traum reject all Bible principle and yet pose as a defender of Bible unity?

WHERE TRAUM'S LOGIC LEADS.

"Assuming for the sake of the argument," says Traum, "that God actually gave this 'revelation,' and this the 'Saints' do assume, what must have been his surprise and chagrin upon the completion of the Book of Mormon when he saw that these 'servants' of his had been brazen enough to give the testimony of eleven men, when by express statement he had informed them that he had limited it to three!" —Page 52.

In reply, Mr. Traum, we would say: "Assuming for the sake of argument that God actually gave the 'revelations' in the Bible, and this, Mr. Traum and his fellows do assume, and that God's established rule in both the 'reign of law' and the 'reign of grace,' was that 'by the mouth of two or three witnesses, shall every word be established,' what must have been his surprise and chagrin upon the completion of the work of redemption, when he saw that these servants of his had been brazen enough to give the testimony of twelve men, when by express statement he had informed them that he had limited it to three!"

Mr. Traum continues:

He had said that he would give this power "to behold these things" (the plates) "as they are," and to "none else" would he grant "this power to receive this same testimony." We are well aware of the usual wriggle that the "Saints" make to invalidate the charge that is here preferred. They assert that God denied "this same power," as if by this he meant he would not go to the same trouble to show these plates from heaven to the "eight" as he had for the "three." But "the same testimony" in this instance is construed in the light of its explanatory clause, to "view these things as they are." So, if the testimony of the "eight" does not mean that they are affirming a knowledge of "these things as they are," will some one be good enough to say just what it does mean? —Page 52.

"Now," as the parson says, "to apply": In Matthew, chapter 17, we are told that Jesus went up into an high mountain. He took with him three men —Peter, James, and John. Whilst the four were in this beautiful mountain top, Jesus was transfigured before the three. His face shone as the sun and his raiment was white as the light. Moses and Elias appeared in glory, talking with him. Peter was enraptured and wanted to make an abiding place there. A bright cloud overshadowed them. A voice out of the cloud said, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him."

Notice, nine of the witnesses, named apostles, were absent when this glorious manifestation of "power" was given. It was the obliteration of present time and conditions; and the actual scene presented was the future kingdom and coming of Jesus Christ —as Jesus will be. The beloved John was a witness to this. Now in his epistle, 1 John 3:2, he says:

Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.

Now shall we take advantage of the phrase, "see him as he is," and argue that the nine apostolic witnesses did not see Jesus Christ at all? We are well aware of the "usual wriggling" that the New Testament saints make to invalidate the charge that is here preferred. It is known that God denied this same manifestation of glory in the mount, as if by this, he meant that he would not go to the same trouble to show this transfiguration power from heaven to the nine as he had for the three. But the same testimony in this instance is to be construed in the light of its explanatory clause: "We shall see him as he is." So if the testimony of the "nine" does not mean that they are affirming a knowledge of Jesus Christ "as he is," will some one be good enough to say just what it does mean?

If to "handle" and "see" him is not convincing, then there is no sense in the testimony of the "nine," and less of sense in the Greek and Hebrew languages! Thus it is manifest, that if the "revelation" made previously that "there be some standing here which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom," (Matthew 16:28,) is true, the testimony of the "nine" is false. Thus we reduce this strong (?) argument to a reductio ad absurdum.

THREE WITNESSES AGAIN.

On page 55, he states, "the three witnesses did not withdraw from active fellowship in the church," they were "fixed." Strange, that Elder Traum should pen this statement with the "address" of one of the three witnesses before him. On page 27 of said "address," Mr. Whitmer says that in June, 1838, "God told me to separate myself from the Latter Day Saints"; and page 28 he says: "In June, 1838, . . . I was called out to hold the authority which God gave to me." But in the statement made by Mr. Traum, he flatly contradicts one of his brethren, viz; D. H. Bays, who affirms they did "withdraw from the church" (see Bays' work page 249).

Let it be understood that the differences between them and the church, during the troublesome times in Missouri, did not arise on account of the Book of Mormon, or the testimonies they gave of it, but from other causes, and whether either real, or imaginary, they in no wise affected their testimony. And whatever the differences, there was no turning State's evidence,—no confessions or exposures, they all stood on the "great divide," facing the realities of eternity, and finally entered the portals opening into the "fair fields of immortality" with the reaffirmation on their lips! In 1881, David Whitmer resented the charge, made against him of denying his testimony of the Book of Mormon as follows:

Unto all Nations, Kindred, Tongues, and People, unto whom these presents shall come:

It having been represented by one John Murphy, of Polo, Caldwell county, Missouri, that I, in a conversation with him last summer, denied my testimony as one of the three witnesses to the "Book of Mormon."

To the end, therefore, that he may understand me now, if he did not then, and that the world may know the truth, I wish now, standing as it were, in the very sunset of life, and in the fear of God, once for all to make this public statement:

That I have never at any time denied that testimony or any part thereof, which has so long since been published with that book, as one of the three witnesses. Those who know me best, well know that I have always adhered to that testimony. And that no man may be misled or doubt my present views in regard to the same, I do again affirm the truth of all my statements, as then made and published.

He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear; it was no delusion! What is written is written, and he that readeth let him understand.

And that no one may be deceived or misled by this statement, I wish here to state: that I do not endorse polygamy or spiritual wifeism. It is a great evil, shocking to the moral sense, and the more so, because practiced in the name of religion. It is of man and not of God, and is especially forbidden in the Book of Mormon itself. . . .

And if any man doubt should he not carefully and honestly read and understand the same, before presuming to sit in judgment and condemning the light which shineth in darkness, and showeth the way of eternal life as pointed out by the unerring hand of God.

In the spirit of Christ who hath said: "Follow thou me, for I am the life, the light and the way," I submit this statement to the world. God in whom I trust being my judge as to the sincerity of my motives and the faith and hope that is in me of eternal life.

My sincere desire is that the world may be benefited by this plain and simple statement of the truth.

And all the honor be to the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, which is one God. Amen.

DAVID WHITMER.

RICHMOND, MISSOURI, March 19, 1881.

Also in Whitmer's "Address," page 8, as late as 1886, he says:

It is recorded in the American Cyclopaedia and the Encyclopaedia Britannica, that I, David Whitmer, have denied my testimony as one of the three witnesses to the divinity of the Book of Mormon; and that the other two witnesses, Oliver Cowdery, and Martin Harris, denied their testimony to that book. I will say once more to all mankind, that I have never at any time denied that testimony or any part thereof. I also testify to the world, that neither Oliver Cowdery nor Martin Harris ever at any time denied their testimony. They both died reaffirming the truth of the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon. I was present at the deathbed of Oliver Cowdery, and his last words were, "Brother David, be true to your testimony to the Book of Mormon." He died here in Richmond, Missouri, March 3, 1850. Many witnesses yet live in Richmond, who will testify to the truth of these facts, as well as to the good character of Oliver Cowdery.

David Whitmer did not falter in this testimony, even when the mists of death were gathering on his brow, as the following will show:

January 25 Elder David Whitmer, one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, died at Richmond, Missouri. It is related by those who were with him in his last moments, that three days before his death Mr. Whitmer called his family and some friends to his bedside, and addressing himself to the attending physician, he said: "Doctor Buchanan, I want you to say whether or not I am in my right mind, before I give my dying testimony." The doctor answered: "Yes, you are in your right mind, for I have just had a conversation with you." He then addressed himself to all around his bedside in these words:

"Now you must all be faithful in Christ. I want to say to you all, the Bible and the record of the Nephites (Book of Mormon), is true, so you can say that you have heard me bear my testimony on my deathbed. All be faithful in Christ and your reward will be according to your works. God bless you all. My trust is in Christ for ever, world without end. Amen."—Church History, vol. 4, p. 587.

Of Oliver Cowdery's fidelity to his first testimony, we have the following statement from his lips, at a gathering near Council Bluffs, Iowa, October 21, 1848:

Friends and brethren, my name is Cowdery—Oliver Cowdery. In the early history of this church I stood identified with her, and one in her councils. True it is that the gifts and callings of God are without repentance. Not because I was better than the rest of mankind was I called; but, to fulfill the purposes of God, he called me to a high and holy calling. I wrote, with my own pen, the entire Book of Mormon (save a few pages), as it fell from the lips of the Prophet Joseph Smith, as he translated it by the gift and power of God by the means of the Urin and Thummin, or, as it is called by that book, "holy interpreters." I beheld with my eyes and handled with my hands the gold plates from which it was translated. I also saw with my eyes and handled with my hands the "holy interpreters." That book is true. Sidney Rigdon did not write it. Mr. Spalding did not write it. I wrote it myself as it fell from the lips of the Prophet.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 50.

From Martin Harris, we have the following, as late as January, 1871, to Mrs. H. B. Emerson, of New Richmond, Ohio, in answer to the question "Did you go to England to lecture against Mormonism?"

Answer:

I answer emphatically, No, I did not;—no man ever heard me in any way deny the truth of the Book of Mormon, the administration of the angel that showed me the plates; nor the organization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, under the administration of Joseph Smith, jr., the prophet whom the Lord raised up for that purpose, in these the latter days, that he may show forth his power and glory. . . .—Saints' Herald, vol. 22, p. 630.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 51.

By the foregoing testimonies, it will be noted that the three special witnesses, although separated from the fellowship of the main body of the church, were not in doubt as to the truth of the document to which they subscribed, containing their affirmation of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon.

After John the Baptist had borne testimony to the "Lamb of God" in the wilderness of Judea, his subsequent trials and imprisonment threw around him the misty air of doubt, as we learn from Matthew the 11th chapter. Sending messengers to Christ, he asked, "Art thou he of whom it is written in the prophets?" etc. Hitherto he had affirmed this question with all the assurance of divine revelation without hesitancy. But here doubts arose, yet reassurance came. In the case of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, the trials incident to the Baptist's life are not counted in. The testimony with them seems to abide unclouded.

We will close the evidence on this point by giving an editorial from the Chicago Times of 1876. Upon the death of Sidney Rigdon, and the "cloud of witnesses" to the work introduced by Joseph Smith, the editorial thus comments:

Mr. Rigdon was not the only person of good repute who gave testimony in favor of Joseph Smith till the end came. The original testifiers of his having the Golden Plates, whereon was inscribed the Book of Mormonism, never indulged in crooked talk in relation to the affair. As recently as last year, two of them were living—venerable men, whose word no person was likely to question in other matters. The widow of Joseph Smith still lives at Nauvoo, respected in the community as a woman of more than ordinary mind, culture and character. Two of his sons are citizens of this State, esteemed by all who know them as gentlemen of the highest integrity.

No one who knows them will deny that the antipolygamy Mormons, or Josephites who are scattered throughout the West, are the peers of other people in honesty, integrity, and truthfulness. It is all very well to sneer at Mormonism, to say that the father of Joseph Smith was an idle vagabond, who stole sheep, and that he himself was a knave or a fool, or both combined, but the question naturally arises, What is to be done with the testimony of this cloud of witnesses, the word of whom in all ordinary matters is taken as readily as the word of any man, and whose oath would send any man to the prison or gallows? Another age will probably ask, Why was not this testimony refuted when those who gave it were living? The truth is, the testimony of these persons must be shown to be false within the next twenty years, or the fact that it was not disproved or even shaken will be a powerful argument in favor of its truthfulness in all coming ages. If there is good and sufficient evidence to substantiate any phenomena ordinarily classed as supernatural, it exists in relation to acts performed by Joseph Smith. Not one of the miracles imputed to the author of the Christian or Mohammedan religions was vouched for by so many witnesses.

DID THE ANGEL FOOL MARTIN HARRIS?

Of the vision, those witnesses were shown, after giving an extract from Tullidge in which Mr. Traum again puts words into the historian's mouth (to the number of thirteen), he adds: "Joseph then adds: 'Martin Harris cried out, apparently in ecstasy of joy, "'Tis enough! mine eyes have beheld!' and jumping up, he shouted 'Hosanna!' blessing God, and otherwise rejoiced exceedingly.'"

Our critic's "moral deduction" from this is thus stated on page 58: "According to this story, there is not a man on earth who can swear that all four saw the same things. The angel might have switched plates on them," etc.

Applying such reasoning to a case recorded in the New Testament, we have the absurdity exposed, and Mr. Traum's supposed "moral deduction" is pinned:

And after eight days, again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them. Then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you. Then saith he to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side: and be not faithless, but believing. And Thomas answered and said unto him, My Lord and my God.

Applying then, we will note, that according to this story, there is not a man on earth who can swear that all eleven men saw the same thing. God might have "switched" "personages" on them, and even the ten could not have told the difference, for without immediate revelation, they could no more distinguish one man from another, than could Thomas, the "Jonah to the Crowd."

Isn't it time some of these noted theologians, of the Disciple school, were studying the Bible a little instead of attempting to destroy its principles?

HARLAN BRANCH.

THE LATTER DAY SAINTS.

Sketch of the organization and growth of the Harlan Branch.

It was about forty years ago that the families of Elder Jonas W. Chatburn, Nathan Booth, John B. Swain, Frank Reynolds and others were organized into what is known as the Harlan Branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. In the early eighties these Christian workers built a chapel on the corner of Willow and Eighth streets which is still used for church purposes. After the death of Judge Chatburn, Elder David Brewster had local charge of this organization until he moved to Kidder, Missouri, last autumn. Mr. George Hoisington has charge now, and he and the congregation expect to have a general conference missionary locate here who will hold revival meetings, increase the membership, and add interest to the work in general.

The Sunday school work is in charge of T. N. Franklin and Earl Hoisington; the hour of meeting, 10 a. m.; preaching service at 11 a. m.

A Zion's Religio-Literary Society, an organization for the youth of the church for the study of the Book of Mormon, American archæology, and church history, ancient and modern, is presided over by Leonard Hoisington and Bradley McCord, jr. This society holds weekly meetings at the church and is growing in interest and membership.

Elder W. A. Smith, Independence, Missouri, has been conducting a series of meetings in their chapel which will be continued every evening this week. Six united with the church by baptism and confirmation last Sunday. Elder C. J. Hunt, Deloit, Iowa, will assist Evangelist Smith over Sunday.

The public are cordially invited to attend these meetings. Written questions on Bible doctrine and church history will be answered from the pulpit.—Harlan Tribune, July 12, 1911.

WHY UTAH CHOSE HIM.

Most of us will agree that it would be something of a shock to see a picture of Brigham Young on the silverware of a United States warship, but the naval authorities should have thought of that before beginning the system of accepting silver sets from the various States for the use of the battleships named after those States. That Utah would select Brigham Young might have been a foregone conclusion, and perhaps the good people—who, being good, are therefore in a very small minority—who feel that their sensibilities are outraged are a little too quick in assuming the identity of Brigham Young with polygamy. After all, three different United States presidents appointed Young as governor of Utah, and there are very few men of whom that can be said. Polygamy was never a tenet of the Mormon Church, in fact its introduction was considered as a dangerous heresy. Young himself was certainly one of the greatest civilizing agents that the West has ever known. We owe irrigation to him and the first great victory over the desert. It was these material achievements rather than his religious monstrosities that led to the choice of his presentment for the Utah's silverware. At least we may infer so from the fact that the chairman of the local committee has no sympathy whatever with Mormonism and yet says that the Utah will accept the silver set as prepared for its use or get none at all. We may remember also that the monument to Brigham Young, which also appears on the offending silver, was paid for by people of all denominations, who gave not a thought to his religion but only to his services as a pioneer.—San Francisco Argonaut.

The Golden Wedding Day.

This is the Golden Wedding Day,
Oh, happy hearts, keep still.
She walks the garden path alone,
He sleeps in green Rose Hill.

In the old home shade, that sweet June Time,
Just fifty years to-day,
Hand touching hand, the pledge was made,
Each youthful, happy, gay.

And there one sunny day they met,
But one lay cold and still;
She walks the old paths now alone,
He sleeps in sweet Rose Hill.

The Golden Wedding Day they planned
Has come—oh, voice of joy be still;
She walks with dreams of other days,
He sleeps in dear Rose Hill.

VIDA E. SMITH.

LAMONI, IOWA, June 23, 1911.

Dear Home Column: In a recent HERALD a sister asked for some one to write about the rearing of a large family. I don't pretend to know very much about it as I have but four children, but I was the fourth child in a family consisting of nine children, and have a vivid recollection of my childhood. As we all of us grew up industrious, peaceable, economical, able and willing to wait on ourselves and others; honest, moral, cheerful, and with fair educations, I judge my parents were fairly successful in raising their children, even though we were poor renters and had to skimp to make "ends meet," and part of the time were crowded in two rooms, and have lived in one. Four rooms was a "big" house for us.

On the recollection of the past I'll just pass on to the sister a few observations. The first, and what I consider very important, was mother's constant charge, "You should keep nothing from mother." So she enjoyed our fullest confidence. We were never rebuked for "tattling" on one another, for no matter how trivial the tale we told it was listened to. I don't know how the plan would work with all children, but there were no bad results with us, and mother knew when anything was done or said that should not have been, either by us or our companions, for some one was sure to tell. I believe it acted as a restraint on us when we were tempted to do wrong. And she was very strict about not carrying tales outside the family, so none grew up with that tendency.

We were never allowed to punish or strike each other. Mother said she could do that herself. I have seen mothers let older children correct or punish younger ones, but I think it is not wise, for they lack judgment, anyway, punishment administered by a brother or sister is usually resented and results in hard feelings. Of course if the mother is an invalid or dead, then it would be different. When we did wrong we were told in a few words the evil and consequence, or punished as she thought best, and that was the last of it. She did not wear us out talking and lecturing. She taught us to do right because it was right, not for what others might say or think.

We were not allowed to quarrel, and as soon as we were old enough we had to help with the work, and early had to learn to wait on ourselves and be ashamed to have to be waited on when we were able to wait on ourselves. As a result, any of the boys (the youngest is now twenty-five years old) now never asks for clean clothes or anything else that they need, but get it themselves, also put things away. I imagine that every wife, who has to all but dress her husband when they go anywhere, wishes every mother would train her boys to wait on themselves.

We were early taught to economize, taught that wastefulness was sin, and to live within our means, that debt was a bad thing, and to be thankful for what we had, be it little or much.

Of course mother worked hard. There was always lots to do, but she was cheerful, and talked to us a great deal, and was always interested in us. Father worked hard, too, and between them they managed to send us all to school as soon as we were old enough. Mother kept us clean and neat in school by having us change our clothes just before and just after school. She dressed us plainly and sensibly in serviceable clothes.

I hardly know how she got all her work done when we were small, for the first seven were born within ten years, and she always raised chickens and a pretty good garden. It must have been that we all tried to wait on ourselves and help with the little ones as soon as we were old enough. Our house was sometimes so small that we had to have a trundle-bed to make room in the daytime, and our table had to have one or two standing at the corners while mother held one child in her lap, for all to get around at once.

Yes, we lived and thrived a happy family. We never went hungry nor half clad. We are just an ordinary family, living ordinary lives, all but one trying to serve the Lord in our way.

A SISTER.

Request for Prayer.

Sr. Blanch A. Crandall, Langley, Washington: "I am writing to let the Saints know that my little sister is very sick with the dropsy. We have had Bro. William Johnson, of Seattle, twice, and Bro. G. W. Thorburn, of Renton, once, to administer to her, but our heavenly Father hasn't given us any assurance of her ever getting better. So I am going to ask the Saints to pray for her, that she may get well, if it be our Father's will to spare her, but let it be 'God's will be done, not ours.' She has been sick now ever since the first of June. Pray for her, dear Saints, if you will, please, and may God bless all his Saints, is my prayer."

Letter Department

ANDOVER, MISSOURI, July 24, 1911.

Editor Herald: We as a branch are prospering. Our branch was organized by Bro. R. S. Salyards and Bro. J. W. Wight on April 2. Bro. D. C. White, of Lamoni, was chosen branch president, Ed. Harp presiding priest, Frank Kaestner presiding teacher, Gus Bergman, sr., presiding deacon, Arthur Heide secretary. The deacon, teacher, and priest were ordained the day of the organization. We feel to rejoice as a united body, as the work seemed very discouraging a few years ago.

Andover was considered a rough, wild place, no church or Sabbath school of any kind. Our worthy brother, Moroni Traxler, was sent to open up the work. I think there was one Saint here then. Finally one or two families of Saints moved in. Brother Traxler was faithful to his mission, came Sunday after Sunday or sent some good speaker to break the bread of life, and only these few Saints came out to hear, and there was no sign of any more being added. Brother Traxler became discouraged and thought he was only idling away his time to continue his mission here any longer, when the Lord showed him in open vision that His desire was for him to continue, his work must be firmly established in this place, that there would be a large branch, a church built, and he would raise up honorable men to carry on his work. He showed him every member that would join, some forty in number, and as Brother Traxler stated, every word of that vision was fulfilled. The last member was baptized the day before the organization of the branch, when Brother Traxler was released.

There have been ten baptized since, and more are very near the kingdom. We have good attendance by Saints and outsiders. Our church was built last summer and is nearly out of debt.

Asking the prayers of the Saints in behalf of our branch, I remain

Your sister,

MRS. FRANK KAESTNER.

WILLIAMSDALE, NOVA SCOTIA, July 18, 1911.

Editors Herald: I have just opened my HERALD, and on page 668, this caught my eye, "John F. Sheehy was recently appointed to labor in the wilds of Nova Scotia."

In the first place J. F. Sheehy was appointed to labor in "the Maritime Provinces." That is his appointment as announced in HERALD and Ensign. That territory comprises 51,186 square miles. More than Maine, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut combined. Indeed, all the New England States combined, I am informed, only cover 56,000 square miles.

I think some of the Massachusetts Saints think you can drive over Nova Scotia in a day. No. I will not enter into a discussion of the merits or demerits of Nova Scotia, but I do resent that statement, "wilds of Nova Scotia," and I will simply state a few facts and then ask Brother Coombs to heed the advice of the Great Teacher, "Seek knowledge of countries." J. F. Sheehy has been at our home for the past two weeks. We live in a thickly settled farming community, with the daily mail, telephone in nearly every home, nine miles from the railway station, splendid public school, an academy within sight of our house, and with as pretty a little Latter Day Saint church as anyone ever saw. Does Brother Coombs think we are ignorant savages, such as live in the "wilderlands" of Africa? So far Elder Sheehy has been in two towns. One, Amherst, which has a population of over 11,000. This town has the unique distinction of being the first on the continent of North America. It obtains its power from the mouth of the mine instead of using the coal itself. The power that keeps the wheels of Amherst's industries moving is transmitted eight miles. In Amherst are manufactured the noted Hewson tweeds; also there are car works, foundries, etc.

At present Brother Sheehy is preaching in a nice tent, well-seated, lighted by gasoline lamp, boarding at a nice house, enjoying cool breezes and health giving dips. The tent is erected in the mining town of Springhill—about nine thousand inhabitants—with a pay roll of sixty thousand dollars fortnightly. Brother Coombs, come to Nova Scotia and visit the seventy towns and villages scattered through our peninsula alone. Visit our noted "Land of Evangeline," see our wonderful Annapolis Valley orchards, come right within a few hours, drive of our home and see the large steamers loaded with lumber for England, Germany, France, Norway, etc. Visit our mines of coal, iron, gold, copper, magnesia lime, gypsum, salt, granite, slate, marble, etc.

We have ten railways covering over eight hundred miles. In one year our fish export alone was about five million dollars. Come to Halifax, whose harbor is the wonder of the nations, with its glorious natural scenic beauty, with our public gardens, that all writers say are away beyond the Boston gardens. Visit our schools, study our free school system, of which a great educator wrote. Few countries in the world can boast of such a perfect educational system as that of Nova Scotia. See happiness, comfort, prosperity on every hand. Why we even have automobiles and, wonderful to tell, "a flying machine" passed over even Williamsdale.

Until any elder, brother, or sister comes to Nova Scotia, visits every country, studies the authentic histories, geographies, they are not competent to pass judgment on our Province, any more than I am on Fall River because I visited Cape Cod, Massachusetts.

The injunction, "Judge not a matter before you hear it," is a favorite with us. Let me say, "Judge not a place before you see it," might be applicable sometimes.

As yet our genial Brother Sheehy has not been in any wilds or caught by any Niles.

MRS. LEANDER JOHNSON.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, July 9, 1911.

Dear Herald: God is always good to his children when they love him and try to do his will. He has blessed me many times. His Holy Spirit fills my soul so I can not help but pour it out upon my family. I must tell them how I enjoy his divine influence and how I love him.

Dear Saints, it makes me sad to hear and see all the wicked things people do here, of all the crimes and wrongs they commit, surely they consider a life not much; surely they do not see their condition. How little they respect their God, who gave his only child, and such a dear child, to shed his blood that man might have everlasting life!

I often think, how can the dear Lord be so merciful as to keep sending blessings upon his people. It seems to me that the world is so prosperous at present that self-authority, vanity, and pride are causing people to be more and more worldly. They care not for God, they feel safe without him. Everything looks promising to them. Let us pray for better conditions, that the eyes of the people may be opened to the true light.

Allow me to relate a dream I had some time ago.

Standing at the north end of a field facing south, I saw two fields, one to my right and one to my left. The one on the right was a field of the prettiest, most golden wheat I ever saw. It had an indescribable beauty of golden yellow. Every stalk heavily loaded with fat, creamy, wheat-ears, ready to pop open at a touch. I also noticed the clean and healthy soil, such as I had never seen. To my left was just the contrary. I saw a field of grain in a pitiful condition. All moldy, shrunken, and dirty. Here and there a black grain, here and there a vacant space and a lonely straw, and such poor, unclean soil, which resembled very much the field one sees where the lazy man toils.

As I stood gazing over the distant scenery, the end of which I could not see because of the wheat and sloping hill, I beheld a real old-fashioned building loom up with smoke. I then beheld before me between the two fields a path; also a path back of me, going east and west. I now noticed the great difference in the two fields. Now it seemed the golden field was partly harvested on the northeastern corner, for there were three sheaves there. Another half sheaf stood a little more westward. Then came the word pestilence. Suddenly I beheld a horrid sight,—nasty, hungry, creepy-looking insects of all sorts. Oh! what a sight, and what a track behind them on the broken straw! Yet a little from me they seemed to spread into the poorly field, and soon I saw a field of drunken dying bugs in a much gnawed field. The golden field stood as a stone wall, never wavering at all. Seemingly I started away, but really did not leave the good field.

If anyone can interpret this, I will be thankful, for this dream is as a picture before my open eyes.

I ask prayers of all the Saints, that I may be given health and strength to do my duty as a mother, and member of this beloved church. My health is not very good at present.

Hoping that we may all prove faithful to the cause of Christ,

MRS. ROSA M. HEUERMANN.

Editors Herald: Will say that we haven't yet attained to that degree of spirituality that we desire, but a few of the faithful ones are trying to keep the little spark burning, by trying to keep up our Sunday school and prayer service. We have had to fast a good deal in the past on account of having no cook, but we have enjoyed a few good meals during the last few days through the able efforts of Hale W. Smith and James Kelley. We are also strengthened at times by the visits of Levi Gamet, as this is his home. We have enjoyed a few good handouts by our worthy district president and his assistant. Our meetings are not very well attended by the outside world; however, there are some who are favorable to us in religion as well as being good neighbors.

I was just looking out through the window at the 10 o'clock passenger train, which has just arrived, and it looked to me that there was hardly standing room. Besides a great flock of people to get on from this place, both old and young, were going to a Fourth of July celebration. Surely we are living in a day and age of the world when prophecy is being fulfilled, when the people will love pleasure more than God. The time has come when the people of God should wake up and be able to answer the question spoken by the prophet in Isaiah 55:2. There seems to be a craving in the minds of men that they don't know just what. We find that the mind of man has been just about the same in all ages of the world. This thought is expressed by the wise man, Solomon, (Proverbs 27: 20,) where he says that the eyes of man are never satisfied. You take the ox and give him all he can eat and drink and he will lie down perfectly contented and satisfied, but take a man and give him all the money that he could spend in two lifetimes, and place him in the most beautiful place the world contains, and he is yet unsatisfied. We find by taking the Bible as our guide, there is a way we may become satisfied.

It is my desire to press on in the work, feeling thankful that I have been made to see the light and to accept Christ and the restored gospel. I was baptized August 2, 1906, by J. W. Jackson, and it gives me pleasure to remember him as one that has been a blessing to me in the hands of the Lord. I am indebted to many more for like blessings. The Bald Knob Saints are not yet forgotten.

Editors Herald: Exploration interests have gone well since my return. On June 9, Doctor Orr, curator of the Provincial Museum, of Toronto, Ontario, with Secretary C. M. James and several more of us, took out four specimens. Photographs were taken on the ground and affidavit made before a notary with us. These gentlemen were so well satisfied that a second day's effort was not indulged in. This one day of experience, the viewing of other sites of our work, and the collections of colleagues Savage and Soper, with some previous experiences on former visits made by them, set the matter of genuineness with them at rest. Their report will appear in the September Provincial Museum report. On June 13 a similar party, with Editor J. O. Kinnaman, of the American Antiquarian and Oriental Journal, as specialist, took out a tablet under most favorable conditions. Again an affidavit was taken on the ground. Besides these specialists, about May 1 Mr. George A. Smith, a contractor and builder of Detroit, who knew nothing whatever of Soper, Scottford, or the rest of us or the relics, found in digging a cellar, a relic bearing the characteristic marks, and later a painter picked up another which Mr. Smith had evidently thrown out. We have the statement of Mr. Smith properly certified. Still others have found them elsewhere. All of this will appear in due time in proper form. Exploration interests are satisfactory up to date and the horizon of the future is bright.

The new lecture comparison of Indian, cliff dweller, Aztec, Maya and Inca peoples, by modes of life and ruins left, has taken well wherever delivered, reunion included. Somebody is found, even among us, to oppose good things. Many are old enough to remember the Saints' Home was opposed,—like-wise the College, Sanitarium, and even the Order of Enoch is not hailed with full delight by all. I have been made to wonder if the Children's Home shall also be treated likewise. If so, perhaps another institution would be well. Guess its name. That the right is destined by divine and eternal decree to prevail, is a consolation. To seek the right in all things and wage, if need be, with "eternal vigilance," the "price of liberty," to the consummation of it, is our common heritage. The more severe the conflict, the more cheering the victory achieved. Why despair? In the conflict for right,

Editors Herald: Bro. F. J. Ebeling, my wife, and I are busily engaged in tent work here, with as good interest manifested as I ever saw anywhere. Some have given their names for baptism and we expect others. This is a new opening, and much prejudice exists, but we have succeeded in removing some. I have been working in new places all summer, and have never felt better in my life. The Lord has blessed me in presenting the word.

Since Graceland College closed my wife has been with me in tent work, rendering excellent service at the little "Bilhorn," singing, and in many other ways.

We have made many friends to the work since coming here, though they were quite shy at first. There is a good class of people living here, and our regular attendants are among the best. The Saints at Wellston, Creola, and near here, with our friends here are very good to look after our needs.

We expect to stay here until time to go to the Kirtland reunion, which convenes August 17. We hope to make this the grandest success of the season. I have never heard one occasion talked of as much as this reunion. The committee is in perfect harmony in every respect, and will spare no work or means to make every person in attendance enjoy themselves to the greatest extent. Our first object is and shall be, the spirituality of the Saints; so we hope all who attend will have this uppermost in their minds. Let us meet in and around the grand old temple and enjoy the same Spirit that was so wonderfully poured out on the people of God during its construction and at its dedication. This will be the best opportunity ever offered to the Saints to meet in the Temple and camp on its sacred ground, and at the same time see and hear some of the leading men of the church, and thus enjoy the second object of the reunion—sociability of the Saints.

The writer is placed in charge of the athletics, and any assistance or suggestions from anyone will be appreciated. The main features of this department will be bathing in the Chagrin River and Lake Erie, baseball, croquet, tennis, basket ball, and other innocent games. Those having accessories for the above games will please bring them along. Will also say that strict rules of propriety will be carried out on the athletic grounds as we want to make this part of the reunion educational as well as recreative.

Yours in gospel bonds,

TULSA, OKLAHOMA, July 5, 1911.

Editor Herald: This has been the hottest and driest May and June that I have ever seen, and no relief in sight. Corn all gone; most of it dried up before it tasseled. Farmers still have some hope of the cotton, but it has begun to wilt. People are feeling blue, water very scarce, some towns have their water shipped in. There is lots of sickness, some typhoid fever.

June 29 I was called to Yale, Oklahoma, to preach the funeral of Ina Lavaun Bly, thirteen years old, daughter of Bro. and Sr. A. J. Bly. She had typhoid fever, and also two of her sisters have it, one older and one younger. The neighbors were very good to them, cultivated Brother Bly's crop and helped in many other ways. I preached the funeral to a large crowd. I felt the Spirit in power when I told them God would reward them for what they had done. I am glad we have that kind of a religion that gives every person a reward for the good they do.

Sorry we had to postpone our reunion this year, but on account of failure in crops and water being so scarce, I think it was the best.

I am to meet T. J. Head, of the Christian Church, in debate July 13 at Ripley, Oklahoma, the debate to last twelve nights. They are arranging to have it in open air. I was acquainted with this man before we heard the restored gospel. Heard him preach then. He was among the first to make an attack on us after we were baptized. Bro. J. R. Lambert will remember him. This was near Matthewson, Oklahoma. If the Lord will bless me as he has in times past in such conflicts, I have no fear. I have to meet him on unfair propositions.

I am holding meetings in Bro. Peter Adamson's front yard and will continue here over next Sunday. During the day the thermometer runs about 107 and doesn't cool off much at night. The people say, "If it would only rain!" I heard of one man who was cursing God because it didn't rain.

W. M. AYLOR.

LAMONI, IOWA, July 10, 1911.

Dear Readers of the Herald: I will endeavor to write some to your valuable columns, as it is a pleasure to read the letters of different ones. It may be that this will find its way to the wastebasket, but if so, all right, I will not complain. I feel grateful to my Creator for every blessing and for the hope I have received.

I have my share of trials to pass through, and I feel thankful to God, who has been so kind to me. I never could have accomplished what I have done if he had not given me strength and faith. I feel to rejoice in this blessed gospel. Surely it is a blessing to all who love to obey it and keep its commandments.

Mothers, how can we help each other better than by writing our experience in raising our families. Mine has been a trial but not a burden. God has given me strength to bear it with patience. I appreciate all good advice, but the best help to me was in Jesus. I will mention one especially. My little girl, not two years old, got so cross and cried and fretted until we could not do anything with her. We tried to comfort her in every way we could, but she would get mad and pout and cry herself to sleep. When she waked up she was all right until something crossed her path and then another spell. We all got so disgusted and tired we didn't know what to do. She would not kneel at prayer. I felt so badly about it I could not enjoy myself. I did all I could in my own strength and then went to God in prayer. I asked him what I could do to redeem my precious child. The Spirit said, You will have to redeem her with love. I thought I had done all I could in that line, but God knew best, and when ready for prayer I said to her, "Now, dear, if you will kneel down while Pa prays, I will give you a lump of sugar," and sure she did; and, I thank the good Lord, we never had one bit of trouble with her after that. She was a sweet child and everyone who knew her loved her. She was always good to mind, and now a more noble mother is hard to find. Kind to all, but firm and full of patience and love. So, dear sisters, when in trouble, go to your Father in heaven. He can give you the needed help that is sure to prove a blessing. May our blessed Lord give strength to all his children, is my prayer.

SAINT JACOBS, ONTARIO, July 27, 1911.

Editor Herald: A letter dated June 27, 1911, written by Clara McNeil to the HERALD reads as follows: "The Lord is pouring out his blessing upon me." Dear friend Clara, listen to a Jew which the world looks upon with condemnation and hatred. My text to your dream spoken by the New Testament is, "Not everyone who will say, Lord, Lord, will enter the kingdom of heaven."

The Lord is showing you how he is going to act in the last day. Many people were standing outside. They came before you, but the action with them was only with their lips. They could not get in. They had no work to show. When you came, you were afraid to go in. Good for you; you went in. The people were standing up to be picked one from another. Many seats were vacant. I wonder why this was? When a person joins the church a seat in the kingdom is prepared for him.

If he fails, he gets to stay outside and the seat is vacant for somebody else. "Take a seat and sing." The pulpit and choir were people and they were all singing. That is King David and the Levites singing psalms to praise God.

Your Jewish friend,

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, July 6, 1911.

Dear Herald: Again the unalterable appointment of God has been executed and one from our ranks has been wafted through the inevitable gateway into the realm of immortal bliss. And again it occurs to us that though death is but the grace of divine appointment to God's children, there follow in its wake the pangs of sorrow, and we feel as the poet says: "With all the joy and gladness we have known, there comes a tinge of sudden sadness that on parting must be shown." So it was when on the 28th day of June, Elder Ed N. McRae passed away at the age of forty-four years, ten months, and seventeen days, after a lingering sickness of about two years. He was baptized August 18, 1899, by Elder William Bryant, and ordained an elder November 15, 1907, by Elders I. N. White and S. S. Smith; was also chosen at time of ordination to be president of Second San Antonio Branch. He leaves a devoted wife and six children, two boys and four girls, a mother, five brothers, and five sisters to mourn his absence, together with a host of sympathizing friends. The funeral was in charge of Elder W. C. Carl, sermon by the writer. Funeral was held at residence of deceased, a large crowd being present. At the cemetery the Odd Fellows, of which he was a member observed their burial ceremony.

Brother McRae was firm in the faith of the angel's message to the end, and passed peacefully into his rest, as indicated in the statement, "Precious unto the Lord is the death of his Saints." As ever striving for the victory to myself and the people of God, I am in bonds,

Your brother,
J. W. MORGAN.

WEIR, KANSAS, July 23, 1911.

Dear Herald: My dream comes to me often, which I had when I was going to school. I had taken down with the fever and couldn't walk or even sit up, and the doctor was starving me to death. I never had been taught to pray. I only heard them pray in other churches, and they prayed so loud that they were afraid God would not hear their prayers. A thought came to me while I was lying on the bed that God would hear my secret prayer, so I prayed in secret till I fell asleep.

Then I dreamed I was traveling in some far country; I dreamed I came to a white church house. It wasn't ceiled and they had chairs for seats and I saw the little children sitting with their Gospel Quarterlies in their hands, and I saw their teachers with them.

At that time I was fourteen years old and lived in Charleston, West Virginia. I found this church in the State of Kansas at Weir City, when I was twenty-five years old. When I was baptized into this church at this time I knew that this was the church I dreamed about. I am in the church, and also four of my children, two girls and two boys.

Your sister in the faith,
ELIZABETH DANIELS.

VERNON, TEXAS, July 13, 1911.

Editors Herald: I am alone here and the HERALD and Ensign are a great help. I feel that I could not do without them.

It has been very dry here this summer until a week ago, but now cotton is looking fine; the corn is burned up. I am thankful that it is not any worse and the Lord knows what we need best.

I am still striving to be a Saint and my faith in this work grows stronger. While I am not in a position to do very much here, I am living in hopes of better opportunities, and specially a place where I can be with the Saints in some-good branch. Knowing that we are here for a short while, in order to prepare ourselves for the other world, we have to live humbly and do as the Lord has commanded.

I should be very glad if we could get a place to preach here, but the Christians and Baptists control and we were denied the use of the two churches and the school building when Bro. W. M. Aylor was here last winter. I was hopeful of having a good meeting, but was very much disappointed. I may pick up courage to see those Christians again, but at present they are busy, and if the Advent preacher comes, whom they are expecting, he will be there until cold weather. Whenever he comes the Christians are going to challenge him for debate, but I would like to secure the house before he comes, if he is going to preach two months. Bro. C. Scott met J. W. Chism, of the nonprogressive wing of the Christian Church in debate there some twelve years ago, and if I stay here it may be to repeat. They are very abusive, but we must use wisdom and try to have an answer for them in those things. I am thankful we don't have to use slang and abuse to meet them.

So let us all work together and live prayerfully and pay our tithing inasmuch as the dear Lord sees fit to bless us, and we will be blessed in the doing. Then we can keep more missionaries in the field, and I am sure we can't get too many out, for the field is large and the laborers few, and the time is short. Asking an interest in your prayers that I may be counted worthy to be a true Saint,

IRA SKINNER.

ROCK ISLAND, ILLINOIS, July 21, 1911.

Dear Herald: We want you to know what good times we have been having in this part of the Lord's vineyard. Brother Arber has been with us one month. He held meetings at a small town called Carbon Cliff, but on account of long distance and scattered condition of the Saints some were deprived of attending those meetings, but think some good was accomplished. Also, open air meetings were held in Moline at twenty-ninth street, on the lawn of Brother and Sister Willman, with a pretty good attendance, considering the hot weather and excessive heat, and we think some good was done there.

On Sunday, the 16th, those of the Saints who live at a distance took their lunches to the little art gallery on sixteenth street in Moline, where the services are held on Sundays, and from there we took the car for Carbon Cliff and were met at the end of the car line by Brother Wellis with his hay rack, on which the thirty of us made our way to Rock River, where seven were baptized by Brother Arber, five children and two adults. It was a beautiful sight. All made their way to the home of Brother and Sister Gainey, where all were made welcome. By request of Grandma Peterfer, Brother Gainey's mother, who has been an invalid for a long time, we sang some of the beautiful songs of Zion, after which the confirmation took place, in charge of Brother Arber and Alfred Needham. It will be a time long to be remembered. The Spirit of God was there, speaking peace to our souls, and words of comfort were given to those who had just taken upon themselves the name of Christ. Even the angels of heaven were there rejoicing with us. It surely was a feast to our souls, and we were made to rejoice under the peaceful influence of the Master. Oh, that we could at all times put ourselves in a proper attitude to receive those blessings.

One sister who was baptized was a member of the Utah Mormon Church, and after being baptized into that church, she found out that she had been badly deceived, and she worried so that she took a long sick spell, but the Lord will take care of his own, and he led her at last to partake of the true gospel. Also two of her children were baptized and think her companion will follow. It has been given to the Saints here several times that if faithful many will be brought into the fold and family of God. Our desires are to be cast among the faithful ones. The Saints here are contemplating building a new church soon at East Moline. We ask the prayers of the faithful in our behalf.

Your sister and brother in Christ,

HATTIE AND IRVIN BARNES.

HUDSON, SOUTH DAKOTA, July 21, 1911.

Dear Saints: My wife and I look forward each week for the HERALD. It is the only preaching of the one faith that we ever hear. The letters from the brethren and sisters do us much good, and we have often thought we would write a line or two. It brings us closer together.

Hudson is fifty-five miles north of Sioux City, Iowa. I do not know what district we live in. Is it the Little Sioux?

My parents live here and are interested. We could start a Religio if some one were here to organize it. We belong to the home class of the Mountain View Sunday school in Colorado. My sister has heard preaching by Brother Bullard and Brother Scott. She says she is going where there are church privileges so she can join. I have written to Bro. Levi Gamet at Elk Point, but have not heard from him yet. If anyone can write us as to who we can get to come and preach, we would be very much pleased. Any elder or Saint, whoever they are, will be made welcome at our home at any time.

I joined the church a year ago and am trying to live closer to my Master than ever before. Pray for us that we may ever prove faithful.

Your sincere brother in Christ,

CLIFFORD C. CABLE.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, July 10, 1911.

On Saturday, June 24, Bishop J. A. Becker and myself were invited to attend a two-day meeting at New Hamburg. The principal ceremony was to be the dedicating of the little church at that place. From the time we entered the place until we left all we did was fraught with the Spirit of God. So much so that when the time came to go we were loath to leave that little band of faithful Saints and go out again into the world to our respective duties.

On Saturday morning your writer was called upon to be the speaker of the hour, and while Brother Headley was making the opening prayer he suggested to the speaker what subject to speak upon. That subject was "love," and in the afternoon and also the evening the same subject was the theme of both speakers' discourses, Brother Becker being the afternoon speaker and Brother Richard Baldwin in the evening.

Sunday morning started out to be very unpromising, as it was raining and had rained most of the night, but at 11.10 a. m. the services were held. Elder Richard Baldwin preached the dedicatory sermon and was assisted by Bro. M. Headley, Bro. Lamont MacDowell offering the dedicatory prayer. Brother Baldwin read for a scripture lesson Genesis 28: 10-17. As Brother Baldwin was instrumental in beginning the work in this part of God's vineyard, his heart was moved by the result of the work begun by his efforts. The same Spirit that had been at our meetings of yesterday was also manifest, and the entire congregation was moved to tears during the most of the meeting.

After a few remarks by Bro. M. Headley relative to the progress of the branch, he presented the keys to Bishop J. A. Becker, and he in turn turned them over to the deacon, Brother Hallibaugh.

Bishop Becker, in accepting the keys stated that it afforded him pleasure to hear that the church had been paid for by sacrifice.

A short account of the work here will, I believe, not be amiss at this time.

Elder R. Baldwin, together with Brother Hallibaugh, came to Transfer in 1904 and preached in the old town hall, which Brother Polley (deceased) secured for him. His text at that time was, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." On January 29, 1908, a motion was made to secure means to erect a building for worship, which motion was accompanied by prayer.

When the committee that had been appointed went to secure promises of finances they secured names for double the amount they expected, and even those outside of the church gave in their names.

May 29, 1908, a unanimous vote was sustained to begin to build the church, and the hand of God was manifest to all those who labored in this cause. April 9, 1908, ground was broken for building. Membership at this time was twenty-eight. Six of the brethren at this time performed this labor. April 25, 1908, the corner stone was laid, and the Spirit of God was manifest, that he approved this work. After building was completed there was a small debt remaining upon same, and the Saints prayed that God would raise up some one to pay the debt. This prayer was not answered, and the Saints paid the debt by sacrifice.

God has certainly blessed the Saints here in many ways, and I do not know of any better way that they can repay God for his goodness than by doing as the bishop said, in accepting the keys: "To see that they look to God for all and place their trust in him for their all. Also see that the best testimony they offer the work is the peace and holiness manifest in their homes and actions."

Yours respectfully,
JOHN W. TOPPING.

957 WALDO ROAD.

WINFIELD, IOWA, July 13, 1911.

Editors Herald: I am here in old Iowa again at my Father's business. I stopped with the Trenton, Missouri, Branch and received a warm reception from the Saints and weatherman. Preached for them over two Sundays. They all seemed to enjoy the meetings. Bro. and Sr. I. M. Lane live here. They are always willing, yea anxious, to have the gospel preached to their neighbors, and by their saintly living they stand high in society, as was proven on Tuesday when he went to the mayor of the city and procured the use of the city park, band stand, and all the seats, just as long as I wanted to use them, all free of charge. I began the siege at once with about sixty in the congregation, including one preacher and two editors. Had splendid order and attention, and after I made the announcement for Wednesday night some told me that I would have a very small congregation, for every church had prayer meeting on that night. I told them that I would preach to those who came, and by the time I got started there were over a hundred there, including the marshal and wife, the two editors, and a number of the most influential class in town. The Lord blessed me wonderfully both evenings while breaking the bread of life. There were four of the Brighamite deceivers here some time ago, but Bro. Lane exposed their false doctrine so clearly that they soon left, and all know that we do not affiliate with them. I hope God will bless the gospel seed at this place, for Brother and Sister Lane have worked nobly to have an opening made here.

I do not know how long I will stay here. When I close here, I am invited to go to the Montrose reunion. Then from there, I am wanted to assist at the Moline, Illinois, reunion. Then from there I am requested to be at the Eldorado, Iowa, reunion; so I will be kept quite busy till fall. I want to go to to Fulton and to Arlington before I leave Iowa.

In gospel bonds,
J. S. ROTH.

Two-Day Meeting.

The Saints of the adjoining branches met with Warton, Ontario, Saints in a two-day meeting on July 8 and 9. At 11 a. m., Saturday, organization was effected, at which the necessary committees were appointed and the balance of the hour spent in prayer service. Notwithstanding the extreme heat and dust, each branch was well represented by honest, humble faces who had left the cares of this life behind, and come together to have a short season of worship and praise to God, as Israel of old, and I hope none went away disappointed. There were present of the missionary staff: Apostle F. A. Smith, Patriarch Leverton, John Shields, J. Y. Thompson, and S. G. St. John. The preaching was done by Brethren Smith, Leverton, and Thompson. The rousing sermons delivered by these able men were inspiring and elevating, and should serve to cause us to set higher standards and walk up to them. Sunday morning prayer service was well attended and the time profitably spent in short testimonies and prayers. The place of the next meeting was not decided upon, but left in the hands of the presidency and will be announced later.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. Wallace A. Small, Mountainville, Maine: "The work in this part is still alive, although there is great need of earnest work and earnest workers. Those calling themselves the children of God are too much taken up with the things of this world to the neglect of God's work and the progress of the church to come to the condition where the Lord can own and bless them according to his will. When will the Saints awake to a full realization of their condition and their privileges? Personally, I am still trying to live a life that will bring no reproach upon the work which I love."

Bro. Frank Atwood, Albion, Nebraska: "If any of the brethren are coming through this part of the country, we will gladly meet them and try and get a place for them to preach. Will you please send us the name and address of the district president of this part of the State?"

Sr. M. A. Isaacs, Independence, Missouri: "I am still in the land of Zion striving to live as becometh a child of the King. When I think of my being here I can say, 'Wonderful are thy ways, O Lord.' We Saints here have great reason to rejoice, for we truly have been favored of the dear Lord by having to live in this pleasant place, for I haven't been among the Saints for so many years I can truly say I have enjoyed meeting with them. The sisters of the Aid Society are a faithful band and they are never so happy as when they are quilting,—all happy trying to do something to further the Master's work. I will be here three years next month. I had a sad experience, as all Saints do, but my Father in heaven led me all the way. I wish to tell the dear Scranton Saints be faithful to your trust. Dare to be a Daniel; dare to stand alone. If I can only be as faithful a one as my dear father was, I shall be satisfied."

Sr. L. V. Wahlstrom, Sunnysvale, Saskatchewan: "Brn. F. A. Emith, E. E. Williams, and H. J. Davison came and organized a branch here and we have a post-office and store close, so it doesn't seem so much like we are clear out of the world as it did. The railroad is within twenty-five miles of us and they are still grading. This part of the country is what they call the dry belt, but for the last week we have had plenty of rain to make the crops grow fine, and thank the Lord for it. I feel thankful to the Lord that I was ever permitted to hear of the true gospel of Christ. While I feel it my duty to testify to the goodness of God, I shrink from it when an opportunity is at hand. The Lord has seen fit to bless me many times, although I am unworthy. I am striving day by day, with God's help to live more worthy of his blessings. I am satisfied that the true gospel is as taught by the latter day prophet. My desires are to so live that what light I have may reflect for good on others. Pray for me and my children."

News From Missions

California.

It may be of interest to your readers to hear of what we are doing here in California to build up the Redeemer's cause. We have a church at San Francisco, built at a cost of twenty-eight hundred dollars, furnishings three hundred and seventy dollars. Bro. George S. Lincoln is our present pastor. I think it due to Bro. John Lawn to say that he did excellent pastoral work from 1907 to 1910 inclusive. We have a church at Sixteenth and Magnolia streets, Oakland, where Bro. J. M. Terry is also district president, and acts as bishop's solicitor.

I just made a trip to Chico, where we have another church and a band of faithful Saints. Bro. John Hommis is the pastor. Brother Hommis has been very ill, but by the blessing of God is still in the conflict and making a good fight. I preached for them twelve times, three efforts on that part of the law that relates to temporalities. Don't you know, Mr. Editor, that in my estimation, our men would make a more successful presentation if they would just preach the gospel in all its details affirmatively, and let other people's beliefs alone? I may be wrong, but I have had to recede from positions I had taken when I learned by experience that I was wrong. This is just an incidental thought.

Bro. H. A. Hintz, a lively grocer and an able thinker, is bishop's solicitor at Chico. I went out to see Bro. Hiram Holt and his wife, about four miles out, where they are trying to make a living by hard work, and it is hard for him, being blind. I was very much surprised to see the work done by him in finishing his house. How a blind man could do it is more than I know. On my return, I stopped at Sacramento long enough to attend prayer meeting, and receive tithes from some who were prepared to respond. Sacramento has a nice church at Twenty-fourth and Kay streets, where Bro. George Daley is pastor, Jones Lawn, bishop's agent.

I then went to Stockton, where they have a nice church, rebuilt last year. Bro. F. B. Farr and his excellent wife did a good work last year here. Bro. A. Kern is pastor. He is a young man in the work, but has the "nerve" to stand for what he thinks is right. Bro. L. M. Darrow, a carpenter, did the rebuilding, assisted by other willing workers. The work was done much cheaper than it had been given to contractors, as personal investigation proved.

Our district is in good condition. The Saints generally do their part to build up the kingdom of God. We have a little band of Saints at Monterey, where they have Sunday school and prayer meetings Wednesday nights, presided over by our very worthy Bro. Martin M. Trotter. The missionaries are always welcome. I spent a very pleasant ten days there recently, and expect to go back soon. At Tulare the Saints have a nice meeting place, formerly a primary schoolhouse. Our able Brother Ingham is pastor.

We also have a branch of twenty-three at Ukiah. Bro. Henry York is pastor. He is young in pastoral work but anxious and willing to learn and do what he can. At San Jose the Saints meet in a hired hall at present, but contemplate building in the near future. Bro. Charles W. Hawkins is pastor, and is very much liked by the members. He is also bishop's agent.

At Santa Rosa the meetings are held in a hired hall, Bro. B. N. Fisher is pastor; Bro. William Case, recently ordained priest, is his assistant, also Bro. Arthur Landis, who is a teacher. This is where I did some of my first missionary work—appointed to do so by Bro. Heman C. Smith. My first missionary effort was at Irvington in 1888. I well remember my first subject, "Knowledge; what kind will benefit us most?" Up to this time, Bro. George S. Lincoln and I were the chief ministry of the San Francisco Branch, with the able assistance of Elder T. J. Andrews, of blessed memory.

Now, Mr. Editor, if you think the wastebasket the place for this why just put in there and I will be content, submitting to your better judgment.

News From Branches.

Haileyville, Oklahoma.

The work in this part of the field has been at a standstill for some time till Bro. J. W. A. Bailey, a few weeks ago came to our branch to hold a few meetings, and on his arrival he was impressed that Haileyville was a good place to hold a few meetings. So we started to have meetings on the street and in the church, which lasted till he had to go to district conference, but closed with fine interest. After conference Brother Bailey returned and continued, with preaching services on the street, with large crowds and good interest, from twenty-five to one hundred people being present each night.

On Sunday, June 11, seven asked for baptism, and we still kept up the appointment on the street for another week, with good crowds and interest. On Thursday, June 15, Brother Curtis and Brother Quick came in from Wilburton and preached for us that night. Brother Curtis was the speaker and he gave us a fine sermon on the duty of Saints, which was appreciated by all. Come again, Brother Curtis. Bro. J. M. Simmons and Brother Bailey continued the meeting over Sunday on the streets, and in the church on Sunday. June 18 three more were baptized, making ten in all.

The meeting on the street was continued until Sunday, June 25, with a result of three more baptisms. We then commenced a week's meeting at the church with large, interested crowds, but at the close of this week's meeting the Missionary Baptist preacher got mad because we got three of their members, and advertised in the town paper that he would lecture on Mormonism and Latter Day Saints. We as Saints went out to hear his talk, which was a struggle on his part, for we took notes. He told the tale of the Spalding Romance and Book of Mormon, and also that we Saints here at Haileyville believed and practiced polygamy and taught our children to lie, steal, and murder, and that all Mormons were the same. He said we were the Mountain Meadow set. At this point Brother Bailey asked to speak, but he was refused by saying that this is a Baptist church and you are disturbing public worship. The preacher then told of a Mormon's going to Arkansas and stealing a man's wife and getting killed. At this point Brother Bailey said, "Date, please." Then the preacher flew mad and said in a harsh tone, "You can not speak in here; get out," and another Baptist came running back and commanded Brother Bailey to keep still. Brother Bailey had many friends, not members, present, who would have protected him if necessary.

After we went out on the street Brother Bailey announced a reply on the streets for the next night and this was well attended, two hundred to two hundred and fifty being present. Brother Bailey handled the subject to the satisfaction of all present, setting aside all the effort of M. Kailor, showing up the Baptist history against them, and making lots of friends to the cause. Some five or six are near the door of the kingdom, soon to be gathered in, perhaps on the return of Brother Bailey from home. We need more faithful men in the field who will work. I hear that the Baptists are going to get a man to meet our people, but haven't as yet.

JOHN S. WHITE.

Independence, Missouri.

There has been a special effort put forth of late by the brethren and sisters in the line of creating an increased interest in gospel work.

Bro. M. H. Siegfried introduced his sermon of Sunday morning with a reading from Alma, third chapter. He stated that there is nothing outside of the gospel that can take selfishness out of the hearts of men, and made a vigorous attack against existing evils, such as going into debt, and, instead of looking each day for an opportunity to sacrifice for the world's sake, seeking like Felix for a more convenient season. "There should be," the speaker said, "a banding together, not for getting gain, but for the saving of our own souls and the souls of our brethren in the church. This is the day of wickedness and vengeance; and the faith of the Saints should be written upon their countenances, in their characters, and daily lives."

In the evening Bro. W. H. Murphy held forth to a fair sized audience. On Thursday, the 27th, by special appointment, a class of young ladies, also the mothers, met in the hall for instruction in needlework, etc., from Sr. Bertha Donaldson, a teacher in the domestic science department of Kansas Agricultural College at Manhattan.

We mention also the effort put forth by a self-sacrificing sister in Kansas whose excellent work in behalf of the Children's Home is known and appreciated by many of the sisters here and elsewhere, no doubt, who are interested in the Woman's Auxiliary. Through the courtesy of the general treasurer of this society, a great many have been privileged to see the beautiful needlework, garments, etc., which the sister spoken of has prepared in behalf of the needy children who may sometime be safeguarded by the church.

Several interesting testimonies were borne at the 8 o'clock meeting of Sunday morning, the 30th, and there is certainly in many of the young people's meetings a progressive and intellectual spirit that can not but uplift us and increase our joy in the work. As was said by Bro. A. V. Closson and others present, "The Lord is working with his people."

The attendance at Sunday school was 758, teachers 86, and visitors 95. An interesting feature of the lesson review was an accompanying sketch on the blackboard, produced in colored crayons by a young sister of fourteen years,—a scene of a baptism, with the candidate and elder as the central figures, with the rippling azure of the water and a few standing by, and the misty hilltops in the distance for a background. This surely is another example, for emulation, of interest in gospel work.

Two excellent sermons of the morning and evening by Elders A. H. Parsons and B. J. Scott were delivered with reference to the accomplishment of the designs of God in the redemption of Zion. This was the day set apart for the bishopric, and many quotations were taken from the Doctrine and Covenants. Brother Scott, in closing the evening's discourse, stated: "There is no power in heaven or on earth that can prevent the salvation of the Saints, when they shall keep the commandments, as laid down in the scriptures of divine truth."

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Central Chicago, Illinois.

Sunday, July 30. Apostle F. A. Smith preached an excellent sermon in the morning, stating among many other good things, "that we present our bodies a living sacrifice, wholly acceptable unto the Lord" by living carefully day by day, keeping back the angry and unkind words, treating our brothers and sisters with kindness, and conducting ourselves in a Christlike manner under all circumstances; also as we look into the perfect law of liberty, we should endeavor to correct the errors in our lives and not continue doing those things that we know are displeasing unto the Lord.

"Teach me to live and find my life in thee,
Looking from earth and earthly things away;
Let me not falter, but untiringly
Press on, and gain new strength and power each day."

Our aged and ever faithful brother, William Strange, occupied the pulpit Sunday evening. (As we sometimes remain at home Sunday evening with our mother and the little folks of the family, we did not learn the particulars of the sermon, so trust none will think we are partial.)

We desire to enlist the faith and prayers of the Saints in behalf of my dear old mother, who is very strong physically, but weak in mind, has scarcely any memory at all, and in the simplest things, that a child learns when three and four years of age, in regard to dressing, etc., her mind is a blank. She is not a member of the church, but has been administered to, and the Chicago Saints have been requested to fast and pray for her.

Wednesday evening prayer meeting, August 2, Elder McGahan in charge. All were glad to see him, as he has been absent some time in the West, visiting relatives and friends.

"Lord, visit thou our souls,
And teach us by thy grace,
Each dim revealing of thyself
With loving awe to trace;

Till from our darkened sight
The cloud shall pass away,
And on the cleansed soul shall burst,
The everlasting day."

Reynolds was read, and with an amendment was adopted, and the brother was received into fellowship with the Saints. Elder U. W. Greene presented the name of Bro. J. A. Koehler for ordination to the office of elder, as he was directed so to do, and the Second Independence Branch, to which Brother Koehler belonged, had approved of such ordination. On motion his ordination was approved by the conference and ordered provided for. Elder S. F. Cushman, bishop's agent, reported: Received from October 1, 1910, to June 17, 1911, $359.22; paid out, $281; due agent from last quarter, $42.60; due church, $36.62. Report referred to auditing committee and found correct and report adopted. The recommendation of Kennebec Branch that Thomas W. Foss and G. C. Manchester be ordained priests was approved, and such ordinations provided for. U. M. Kelley resigned the office of president, believing that a younger man should be appointed. J. A. Koehler was selected president. By advice of the missionary in charge, Brother Koehler nominated two counselors, U. M. Kelley and W. E. Rogers. The choice was ratified. Sr. E. M. Walker was sustained as secretary, also the present board of auditors. A vote of thanks was extended to U. M. Kelley for his long and faithful service as president. It was moved and carried that a district treasurer be appointed and Bro. Joel D. Wilson was so elected. Elder S. F. Cushman being appointed to another field, a recommendation to the bishop of one to succeed him was suggested by Brother Greene, who stated that Bro. J. A. Koehler would be acceptable to the presiding bishop as such. On motion, Bro. J. A. Koehler was so recommended to the bishop. On motion, Bro. and Sr. D. W. Lakeman, of Grand Menan Branch (disorganized), were granted letters of removal to Olive Branch, Jonesport. The following was adopted, That we extend to Elder S. F. Cushman our heartfelt thanks for his loving and faithful service during his three years and nine months of experience among us. J. A. Koehler was ordained to office of elder by U. W. Greene and R. S. Salyards, and Bro. G. C. Manchester to the office of priest by the same ones. One was baptized during conference by Elder S. F. Cushman. Elder R. S. Salyards was the principal speaker during the conference. A vote of thanks was extended to the Kennebec people for their hospitality, also to the Jonesport Saints for their instrumental and vocal music. Adjourned to meet with the Jonesport Saints, time to be designated by the district officers and missionary in charge. E. M. Walker, secretary.

EASTERN WALES.—The conference of Eastern Wales District was held at Gloucester, June 3 and 4, presided over by Elder E. J. Trapp, district president, who had the association of Elder E. B. Morgan. Statistical report from the following branches were presented: Cardiff 26, loss 1; Gloucester 19; Nantyglo 20, gain 1. Reports from district president, vice-president, and secretary were heard. Treasurer reported total receipts, £4, 3s, 11 1-3d; expenditure £3, 6s, 5d. Thomas Gould, bishop's agent's statement showed receipts £15, 1s, 7d; disbursements £15, 1s, 4d. Elders reporting: B. Green, Thomas Gould, Cardiff; E. J. Trapp, Gloucester; J. Evans, Bargoed; G. Cope, Caerphilly; A. Jones, Nantyglo. Resolutions passed that the rule providing for delegate system in our district conference be rescinded, all members in good standing being entitled to voice and vote. The Lydney Branch was declared disorganized and a court was appointed to deal with matters appertaining to said branch. The annual election of officers resulted in Elder E. J. Trapp's being sustained as president, A. Jones elected vice-president, A. T. Trapp sustained as secretary, P. Miles elected treasurer, Thomas Gould sustained as bishop's agent. The afternoon fellowship meeting was presided over by Thomas Gould, assisted by T. Jones and A. Jones, the Good Spirit being present to a marked degree, and by it we received words of comfort and encouragement. This is the first time a conference of our church has been held here, and the local Saints are pleased with the success with which it met. A good number of visitors were present. Next conference will be held at Cardiff, at the call of the president. A. T. Trapp, Secretary.

Convention Minutes.

FIRST SAINT JOSEPH BRANCH.—The Sunday school convention met with the First Saint Joseph Branch, Saturday and Sunday, July 8 and 9. July 8 at 8.45 a. m. prayer meeting was in charge of Brethren Henson and Roberts. At 10 o'clock, the Sunday school business meeting was held, with district superintendent, Sr. Hugh Cochran, presiding. At 2 o'clock the Religio held their business meeting, after which a short program was rendered. Sr. Mary Hinderks read a paper, which was very interesting; Sr. Violet Wilke rendered an instrumental solo; another paper was read, but I did not learn the name of the lady who read it. The Sunday school business not having been completed in the forenoon, went into joint session with the Religio to designate the time and place where the next convention would be held. Sr. McNichols gave us a talk on normal work Saturday afternoon, also gave us a short talk Sunday morning. I think we all appreciated the sister's presence with us, and we hope she will meet with us again sometime in the near future. A splendid program was rendered Saturday evening, July 8, planned by Sr. Ethel Kinnaman, local chorister. At 11 o'clock Brethren Goodrich and Henson gave short talks on Sunday school work. At 7.30 Brother Roberts gave us a talk. There were a goodly number present during the convention and I think all enjoyed themselves immensely. The next convention will be held the third Saturday and Sunday in January at Cameron, Missouri. Miss Violet Wilke, secretary, 420 North Seventeenth street, Saint Joseph, Missouri.

Reunion Minutes.

WESTERN IOWA AND EASTERN NEBRASKA.—Reunion association met at the Saints' church in Council Bluffs, Iowa, July 27, 1911. The Gallands Grove, Iowa, District was represented by C. J. Hunt, A. H. Rudd, and C. W. Winey; Pottawattamie, Iowa, District, by S. Harding, D. Parrish, and Joshua Carlile; Northern Nebraska District, by J. M. Baker, M. A. Peterson, and Anna Hicks. All present except Sister Hicks, who was prevented on account of sickness. Elder J. M. Baker was selected to preside, C. J. Hunt elected secretary. President Baker requested Patriarch Joshua Carlile to open the meeting by prayer, after which a motion prevailed that the name of this reunion association be, The Western Iowa and Eastern Nebraska Reunion Association. A motion then carried, That the Association hold a reunion the latter part of August, 1912, and a committee on location be appointed. Four were selected: J. M. Baker, S. Harding, A. H. Rudd, Joshua Carlile, with power to appoint the fifth. Said committee to report to the district committees at a meeting to be held at the Saints' church in Omaha, Monday, October 2, 1911, at 1 p. m. Elder Samuel Harding was appointed to represent the reunion association at the Thurman reunion, requesting it, to join with us; and Elder C. J. Hunt was appointed to the same work at the Magnolia reunion. The association elected the following officers: Elder J. M. Baker, president; Miss Anna Hicks, secretary; Elder Samuel Harding, treasurer. The spirit of peace prevailed in all the deliberations of the meeting. C. J. Hunt, secretary.

EASTERN MICHIGAN.—The reunion was held at Port Huron, June 23 to July 5. It was a success and yet it lacked full success. Elder Allen and fellow-committeemen did well their part as to grounds, equipment, etc. The grounds were selected in the quiet location, save for a few passing trains. A grassy carpet prevented dust that two slight showers would scarce have laid. The weather was mostly intensely warm, though all seemed to enjoy it. The thirty-five tents with large assembly, dining and refreshment tents made quite a little cotton city of pleasant appearance. Attendance on the part of the Saints was quite good. The lake was but a short car ride distant, affording excellent bathing. Bro. F. A. Smith, aided by others, presided, and his presence, his unassuming manner and efficient service were appreciated by all. Music under the direction of H. A. Doty helped greatly. The Independence visitors, Bishop Kelley, daughter Jeannette and son Emlin, with Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser and Blanche Allen, were appreciated, and their influence was very helpful. Sisters Jeannette and Blanche were among the soloists. The bishop, true to his manner, helped many to a clearer insight of the temporalities of the work. On the fourth he was the principal speaker. Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser read the Declaration of Independence. During the first part of the reunion, Patriarch Arthur Leverton was with us; the latter part, J. J. Bailey was there. Bro. J. J. Cornish, whose work has been read and known of all these many years, was there. F. A. Smith, E. L. Kelley, and J. J. Cornish were the principal speakers, with others aiding. Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser directed the work of the auxiliaries, calling to her aid such as were available. These sessions were especially interesting and educational. The services as a whole, preaching, devotional and all, were good. The first half of the reunion was the best. The reunion held for a week and a half. Do the longer sessions deplete spirituality instead of increasing it? Was it an admonition that to reach the fuller spiritual heights, a still extended effort is needed? Another reunion was voted for heartily; it was seen by many that the advantages afforded by it are many above other gatherings. The reunion of 1911 was better than that of 1910. May that of 1912 exceed both. Work for it. Rudolph Etzenhouser.

KENTUCKY AND TENNESSEE DISTRICT.—The reunion convened with the High Hill Branch, near Lynnville, Kentucky, July 15 to 24; R. N. Warren, of the reunion committee, called the assembly to order, and H. E. Moler was chosen to preside, with J. R. McClain and R. V. Hopkins to assist him: Fred Moser, jr., secretary; Ed Lamb, chorister; and Ida Shupe, organist. The preaching was by H. E. Moler. R. V. Hopkins, J. R. McClain, I. W. Dubose, and Fred Moser, jr. The local priesthood also assisted in the meetings. Bro. W. S. Shupe and family furnished music. Wednesday afternoon Prof. R. V. Hopkins spoke about the work at Graceland College, etc. Thursday was children's day. The recitations, dialogues, and songs were largely of Latter Day Saint composition. The attendance all through the reunion was very good, though some of the Saints could not attend until near the close. Quite a number of nonmembers attended the meetings every day; the tent was too small to accommodate all; at several meetings there were more outside than could be seated in the tent. The interest was good and some heard the gospel that never had heard of it before. The preaching and prayer meetings were good and we all learned a few things and saw that there is much we need to learn yet. At the business meeting Saturday, it was unanimously decided to have another reunion next year. The question of establishing a permanent place for our reunions was considered, but the Saints of Bethel, Tennessee, prevailed and got the reunion for 1912. A committee of five was appointed to prepare for the 1912 reunion. This year's reunion committee provided for and ran a stand from which $15.50 profit was realized and given to the missionaries, a collection of $9 was taken up and also given for the missionaries' expenses. Another collection of $2.71 was taken for tent repairs. Eight children were blessed during the reunion and one young man was baptized. The Saints and friends of High Hill Branch deserve credit for their kindness in doing all they could to make the reunion a success. Bro. Cook Harris especially deserves credit for his work in running the stand. Fred Moser, jr., secretary.

BRAINY DIET

NOTICE

At a meeting of the Directors of the Jackson County Bank of Independence, Missouri, held on the 23d day of May, 1911, and there being a majority of the stock represented, it was voted that the capital stock of said bank be increased from $25,000.00 to $50,000.00, as it is apparent that the growing business of the bank demands this increase.

Ellis Short, James M. Kelley, and George H. Hilliard were appointed to solicit subscriptions for said increase.

Parties desiring stock, address Jackson County Bank, Independence, Missouri. Shares $100 each, to be paid for on or before September 15, or as nearly that date as possible.
Ellis Short, for Committee.

Mr. Farmer:

Has it occurred to you that while the drought has materially affected your crops and income this year, that the crops and income of the farmers of irrigated land in the Big Horn Basin of Wyoming and Yellowstone Valley of Montana are not so affected?

In view of this, don't you owe it to yourself and those dependent upon you to at least look into and read up on this matter? Or, better still, go out and see the advantages this country offers you?

The center of the Basin is less than forty hours from Omaha, and homeseekers' excursions leave Omaha every first and third Tuesdays. Why not go out with me on the next excursion? I will introduce you to the farmers and you can hear what they have to say about conditions there. I am employed by the railroad and my services cost you nothing whether you buy or not.

COURTESY.

What is courtesy? For the purpose of this article we state that courtesy is that friendliness of spirit in approaching others, and kindness of conduct toward those by whom we are surrounded and with whom our everyday life lies, as cheers and comforts and strengthens the ties that bind men of like association together. It is more than that in this regard; it commends him who is exercised by it to strangers, and makes his intercourse with them easy and pleasant.

Courtesy comes easiest to him who is, by art, naturally polite and desirous of pleasing, but it may be acquired by everyone, especially if one is disposed to observe the apostolic injunction, "Whatever is lovely and of good report, think on these things."

We do not refer to that higher quality of courtesy, that should and largely does exist in men in the intercourse with womankind—that instinctive deference to that which is deemed higher, nobler, and better, that one must pay to the fairest and best gift of God to man. Our thought is to present a few items touching the intercourse of the elders with the world and with each other. Our thoughts are led to the consideration of this subject by the recollection of the conduct of an elder of one of the combating sects of religionists toward one of the elders of the Reorganized Church. In watching this man's conduct and observing his method of argumentation, we thought we discovered an entire absence of the spirit of courtesy and kindness which should characterize professed Christians, especially those professing to be teachers authorized of the Master. The contrast between the speech and conduct of these disputants, this so-called Christian and the elder of the Reorganized Church, was so striking that it induced then, as it does now, a contemplation of what should be the characteristic attitude of one chosen and sent out to preach the gospel of salvation for the redemption of man. The conclusion that we reached and that we now present is that, of all classes of men existing upon the plane of human action, there is not one class in whose conduct towards his fellow-man there should be exhibited more kindness of disposition and courtliness of manner than that class called of God and conscientiously preaching the word. In other words, to make the point, if possible, plainer, the elders of the church, laying claim to represent Christ, the Redeemer of men, can not afford, under any circumstances, to be other than kind and courteous gentlemen, using these terms in their softest and most attractive character. The manner of such men should partake largely of that spirit of deference to that which is true and noble in sentiment, as well as in the character of individuals with whom men meet, that points to the higher and nobler attributes of humanity. While we may withhold reverence to man as man, while we may in a sense reserve our utmost reverence of department for things sacred and divine, there is still room in our intercourse with others to pay due deference to the gospel of goodness, with which we should instinctively endow those with whom we are dealing, when striving to help them in their struggle for that which is good.

In looking back along the history of our intercourse with men we now remember but two or three individuals differing from us in religious belief of whom we were compelled to think that they either did not know the commonest rules of courtesy of demeanor and manner towards others, or they were so overcome by their own supposed self-importance that they were entirely blind to what they were really doing, and in this we are quite charitable towards these two or three men. They were, or had been, individuals holding connection with the latter day work in some form.

We do not refer to the kind of superciliousness, that kind of "Stand aside, I am holier than thou art" spirit, which has characterized the treatment of the so-called Christian ministry towards the eldership from its earliest institution in the church in these last days. We can liken this last feeling to nothing more surely placing it properly in the mind, than by referring to what used to be said in regard to the treatment of the negro by the white man. That statement was this: That the white man treated the negro as if he had no rights which the white man was bound to respect. So these reverend gentlemen in their zeal to keep their garments unstained from the errors of the angelic message, seemed to justify themselves in treating the elders of the church in a similar way; as if, "You gentlemen have nothing in common with us, no religious standing in the world which we are under any obligation to respect."

It may have been that it was this feeling that characterized the Christian minister whom we listened to, in discussion with one of our brethren. His speech and his conduct toward his fellow-disputant seemed to indicate that this was his sentiment. It was an unfortunate mistake. It may be thought by some that condescension to those who have been weaker in their profession of faith than is our own is a fearfulness of the ground we occupy, but we should be assured that the strength of our cause does not lie in what men may think we are entitled to, but must be in what the Master thinks and knows we are virtually and by observation of his commandments entitled to.

Let us then be careful in our intercourse with our fellows, both written and oral, in the public forum, in our business relations, with men of the world and with each other; and at home and abroad, let us observe the principles of courtesy and kindness toward our fellow-men, under any and all circumstances. Let it be the mark characterizing us as associates together under the banner of King Immanuel.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

STRONG DRINK EXCLUDED FROM THE NAUVOO HOUSE.—During the busy and prosperous days of the upbuilding of Nauvoo hundreds of visitors "did" the city annually. It was of the utmost importance that they should be properly entertained where they could obtain a correct understanding of the unique movement represented by the Saints of Nauvoo. To meet the situation the Saints were instructed in 1841 to build the Nauvoo House. Accordingly a company of stockholders was formed. It is a matter of congratulation that one of the rules of the corporation was that no strong drinks should ever be sold or used in the proposed public building. The Nauvoo Rustler, July 18, 1911, has this to say on that subject:

"Illinois by the act of its legislature of February 23, 1841, granted a charter or franchise to George Miller, Lyman Wight, John Snyder and Peter Haws, and their associates by the name of the 'Nauvoo House Association,' for twenty years, who were thereby authorized to erect and furnish a public house of entertainment to be called the Nauvoo House, to be 'kept for the accommodation of strangers, travelers, and all other persons who may resort thereto for rest and refreshment.'

"It is declared as a perpetual rule of said house,

'to be observed by all persons who may keep or occupy the same that spirituous liquors of every description are prohibited, and that such liquors shall never be vended as a beverage or introduced into common use in said house.'"

KNOWLEDGE OF NATIONS.—Very early in the history of this church God commanded the elders to seek to obtain an understanding of "doctrine and principle," also a knowledge of "things abroad and at home," of "countries and kingdoms," "that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again." The wisdom of such advice is apparent when we consider the terrible waste of money and men in foreign missions due to the ignorance of Protestant churches. On this point, in his book, The Function of the Church in Modern Society, William Jewett Tucker, ex-president of Dartmouth College, says: "The impulse to foreign missions, in this country, did not spring out of the knowledge of the world. The early missionaries did not know the world of their time, neither did the church which sent them forth."

A NEW CHRISTIANITY IMPOSSIBLE.—We hear from time to time of the "new Christianity," or the "religion of the future." At most this can mean but a new conception of some particular phase of Christianity, for a time forgotten, now happily remembered. There can be no new Christianity. Christianity was established once for all. It will meet the needs of every age. Christ is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. What man needs is to seek the old paths, and receive again the old Christianity. That is the meaning of the Restoration—back to Jesus and his doctrines, methods, and promises.

THE PREACHER AND HIS MESSAGE.—The preacher can not divest himself of his personality when he enters the pulpit. Both his character and his reputation will influence his message, and both will be factors in determining its reception by his hearers. If it is known or even suspected that the preacher is not sincere and honest, or not morally clean and upright, his influence will not count for much. His message will not go far. The foundation for the sermon should be laid in the private life of the preacher. There is some truth in the statement made by Aristotle: "Your influence over your hearers will depend upon what your hearers think of you."

AUTHORITY FROM GOD.—Current writers on the present condition of Protestant churches speak of their "loss of spiritual authority," and the prospects of such authority being regained. Such language indicates a misconception of authority. They perhaps mean that fewer people concede the existence of an authority that may or may not have existed in the past. God gives authority in spiritual matters in conjunction with the church. He can take it away. But no human challenge can take from a body of religious believers an authority which God has bestowed; no human acquiescence can bestow upon church or clergy authority to act in the name of God when he chooses to withhold such right. Authority once lost can not be regained merely by an act of will. God himself moves in the matter of restoring authority, in his own way and in his own time.

MAKING ONE ERROR TO CORRECT ANOTHER.—A brother writes us regarding what he terms certain "ridiculous articles" prepared by another brother and published in the HERALD. He says that he has never read anything on the subject so far removed from the truth. He thinks that many of the writers in the HERALD write simply to show that they can write a longer article than some else can write, etc. Granting that the brother criticised erred in theology in his article, the one criticising can not set him right by a public breach of courtesy. To such harsh and drastic critics we suggest a reading of the editorial on courtesy, appearing in this issue.

THE LAST TESTIMONY OF DANIEL WEBSTER.—The great American statesman, Daniel Webster, was a man of very unusual ability and commanding presence. His career was marked by the intemperate habits so common in his day. Yet he seems to have thought deeply and to some point regarding things of eternal import. On the monument at Marshfield, Massachusetts, marking his last resting place, these words are inscribed:

"Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief."

"Philosophical argument, especially that drawn from the virtues of the universe, in comparison with the apparent insignificance of this globe, has sometimes shaken my reason for the faith which is in me; but my heart has always assured and reassured me that the gospel of Jesus Christ must be a divine reality. The sermon on the mount can not be a merely human production. This belief enters into the very depth of my conscience. The whole history of man proves it.—Daniel Webster."

A MAGAZINE NUMBER OF THE HERALD.—The HERALD editors are arranging to publish another magazine number, to be known as the "Bishops' Number." This number will include articles by the Presiding Bishopric and by others of the bishops on questions pertaining to their particular line of work; also portraits of various bishops, and a history of the Presiding Bishopric of the church, prepared by Heman C. Smith, Church Historian, and illustrated with pictures of Bishops Partridge, Rogers, Blakeslee, and Kelley. A table of contents will appear later, and the number will be gotten out as soon as the matter can be properly arranged.

BOOK REVIEWS.

CUMORAH REVISITED.—A recently issued book written by Charles A. Shook and published by the Standard Publishing Company, Cincinnati, bears the title of Cumorah Revisited. This book is better written and better printed than the one by the same author on the origin of polygamy, recently reviewed. Chapters are devoted to the rise of "Mormonism," the origin of man in America, Civilization of ancient Americans, and kindred topics. We note that the author resorts to the old Spalding romance story in accounting for the Book of Mormon. At the close an "appendix" of ten pages is devoted to what the author terms "bogus relics from Michigan," and the connection of Elder Rudolph Etzenhouser therewith. Though in one place the author avers that the Reorganization has not indorsed these finds, his effort apparently is to make us responsible for them, and he says: "I recommend that every anti-Mormon polemic obtain the booklet put out by Mr. Etzenhouser, Engraving of Prehistoric Specimens from Michigan, U. S. A." We have not heard from Neal, so do not know if this book by Mr. Shook is intended to destroy the remaining ruins of the church, not thrown down when Shook formerly shook through his Origin of Polygamy in America. (Standard Publishing Company, Cincinnati. $1.50.)

THE FOUNDING OF THE CHURCH.—This is the title of a work by Benjamin Wisner Bacon, D. D., LL. D., of Yale University, one of the series Modern Religious Problems. The book is devoted particularly to four topics: "When was the church founded?" "Peter as the Rock," "The confession of Jesus as Lord," and "Baptism and the breaking of bread." The author takes the position that the church was not established until after the death of Jesus. He also presents Peter as the rock on which the church was established. (Houghton Mifflin Company, 4 Park Street, Boston. 50 cents.)

The bowling alley, the billiard table, the cigar stand, the theater, the opera, the entertainment bureau all make large demands upon the young man. Certainly they have no first right to the money which has come into the young man's hand, which belongs first of all, to God. The largest expense account of a young man ought to be to the church or his home. There are hundreds of young men who spend every year enough in cigars to maintain a mission in the city, or equip a Sunday school.—Sheldon.

Elders' Note-Book

WHAT KIND OF AN EDUCATION SHOULD OUR MINISTRY RECEIVE?

In speaking of education, we shall refer to it in a concrete sense, as training, teaching, and instruction imparted for a special purpose.

The ministry of our church is a class of men peculiarly different, both individually and collectively, from the clergy of any other denomination, for the reasons that they have not attended any theological school or college to specially prepare themselves for the ministry; that they are men who are drawn from all conditions and environments of life; and again they are men who are in the ministry because of a direct, personal manifestation of the will of God concerning them.

A person may be the victim of a false or a true education, and an analysis of a man's principles under the direction of the infallible guide will reveal his true position. The ethics of the question can not be eliminated, because the philosophy of human character and conduct are intimately associated with and are the outcome of his conception of the fundamental facts of his life as he has been educated to believe them.

The question of the education of the ministry in the church is an important one, and the religious bodies of the world are debating the question whether the ministry should be educated to teach the fixed tenets of denominational beliefs, or educated to teach the truth, wherever found. The former, if followed, will produce a class of men who teach only and just exactly as they have been trained, while the latter will produce a ministry keen to observe, anxious to investigate, and willing to be convinced that truth exists for us in but comparative form, and that as yet we have received light but partially. Experience is a good educator, but not all sufficient, for the reason that it only makes paramount the results, but it takes the analytical mind, so educated, to get the good out of experience, and to answer the ever present question, Why?

Many a life's experience has been of less effect, and unintelligible, because the individual in the passing through, or later by retrospection, can not interpret the good there is in it for him, but thinks only of the heavy burden, the bitterness of the experience, and the inconvenience of it all, while hidden underneath lies the kernel of good which can best be discovered and appreciated by either inspiration or a trained mind.

The evasion of this question leads to priestcraft and superstition, which in a large measure has been the religion of the past. It is absolutely a false education which teaches us never to question our leaders, and to accept their word as the rule and guide of our faith and practice. If it were divine economy that any leader should be absolutely the law to any people, or any code of doctrine conceived by the human mind should be regarded as infallible, why the scripture commanding us to "prove all things, and hold fast to that which is good"? thereby giving us the right to test, to prove, to question, to, investigate; and whatever remains after being tested by the standard, and all the impossibilities and suppositions eliminated, that which remains, however improbable it may seem, is truth, and is for us.

In directing this proposition at the ministry of our church, we develop one important fact, from which two others are deduced. During the eighty-one years of the life of our church the world has made tremendous progress. The bringing out and launching of the latter day work called for men especially fitted for this kind of work, either by natural endowment or by education, and history tells us that the early demands of this work were met. We have with us to-day a pioneer of those days, and one among all his fellows who has, more than any one of them, kept pace with the world, and the fact of his survival is essentially based on his fitness. But, in the course of events, a change must come, and then the church will feel the strong grasp of a man educated and prepared for this important position at a later period in the march of progress. And whereas, years ago, among other things, the apostasy was eagerly studied, now in addition, social economy and the question of equality demand our study and solution.

We are so engrossed in our work that we do not stop to look around us and observe outside surroundings. Persecution has in the past forced us to stand together, and with this has grown clannishness, from which more than one misfortune has developed. We are firm in the belief that our gospel is true, and we spend our time in proving it so. While all this we ought to do, yet there is an underlying principle we have to a large extent overlooked, and that is the ways and means of presenting this truth. The world and its people are changing, and we must meet the demands of the twentieth century with a twentieth century supply. There was a period when preachers could preach hell and damnation, if the people would not believe and be baptized, and would be able to bring many into the church. The truth of this principle of the doctrine is not depreciated, but we question the advisability of presenting our gospel in this manner to-day. The smell of the brimstone will not attract people to the gospel of Jesus Christ in 1911.

Many of the churches of the world have far outstripped us in adopting efficient ways of doing gospel work. The basic principle of strength and the vital life of the Catholic Church lies in the training of its people, and the educating them in the tenets of the mother church. It was only a few years ago that the Sunday school idea among Latter Day Saints met with disregard, indifference, and in some cases, opposition. We are only just now waking up to the educational opportunities afforded in this auxiliary, and its importance as a contributing factor to the church. Other churches found this out long ago. Now, the elderly men and women in the church, the ministry, and even those whom we have very kindly consented to call the men of the church, not only recognize the good in the Sunday school and preach it to others, but go themselves. This is an item of progress, but it has taken a long, strenuous education for us to come to our own.

Another point in question is the advent of the paper called "The Tidings" among us. In our opinion this is one of the most efficient ways of handling the announcement feature of the local work we have ever used; yet for years other churches have been doing this.

The different ways of presenting the gospel employed by Jesus and the use made of the parables, should be studied with regard to time, place, occasion and environment, and will prove a lesson on ways and means.

The introduction of the normal department into the auxiliary work met with opposition and criticism from many, but those who came to scoff remain to pray. They are now graduates of the normal course.

The best ways of doing gospel work should be sought after, and if it so be that it is found in other churches or institutions, we should welcome it just as gladly as if it originated with Latter Day Saints. Can truth be tainted because it is found outside the pale of our own church? While we believe that our interpretation of the gospel of Jesus Christ is a correct one, yet we can not remain in ignorance of the fact that others may have a part of the light.

The Lord has promised to bring to our remembrance all things. If we have studied and stored our minds with useful knowledge, the Lord can fulfill this promise, but if not, God can't use what is not there. Some may think that if we but open our mouths the Lord will fill them. True, in an emergency, when his work is at stake, it may be necessary to qualify the only available instrument for the occasion, and the occasion may be a success, but continued inertia on the part of the individual, and a succession of these opportunities, and it may be a question what influences may fill the individual's mouth.

The conclusion of the whole matter, based on James' definition of the science of pure and undefiled religion is Paul's admonition where he says: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman who needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." In my opinion, the most important subdivision in this great field of study or education which is just now of paramount importance to our ministry, is a preparation along the line of ways and means to best present the latter day work. We have the gospel to present. How can we best do it?

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

WAS GOD DISTRUSTFUL OF OLIVER COWDERY?

A vast deal of Mormonism Against Itself consists of unsupported statements exaggerated. We will notice but one or two other "moral" deductions in this chapter and pass on.

On page 59 he puts forth the following concerning Oliver Cowdery, based on the statement of section 69, paragraph 1, Doctrine and Covenants. He does not cite the particular statement, but refers to it thus: "In November in 1831 the Lord (?) had Cowdery under suspicion, deeming it unwise to send money by him to the Saints in the West." Now this leads Mr. Traum to question the honesty, faithfulness, and sincerity of Oliver Cowdery. We can not see that it holds Mr. Cowdery in "suspicion," any more than it indicates that the Lord held his ancient apostles in suspicion because he sent them out to minister "two by two"; the revelation on this point reads as follows:

Hearken unto me, saith the Lord your God, for my servant Oliver Cowdery's sake: it is not wisdom in me that he should be intrusted with the commandments and the moneys which he shall carry unto the land of Zion, except one go with him who will be true and faithful; wherefore I, the Lord, willeth that my servant John Whitmer should go with my servant Oliver Cowdery; and also that he shall continue in writing and making a history of all the important things which he shall observe and know concerning my church; and also that he receive counsel and assistance from my servant Oliver Cowdery, and others.—Doctrine and Covenants 69: 1.

The following from Church History will be sufficient comment on this:

There has been some comment on this revelation by those who claim that it reflects on the honesty and trustworthiness of Oliver Cowdery; but when we reflect that his way lay hundreds of miles through wild, half-civilized country, often beset with rogues and outlaws, we can see the wisdom of his having a trusted and true friend with him. Besides, there is no intimation in the revelation that the church was in danger of suffering loss because of Cowdery's unfaithfulness; but this precaution was for "Oliver Cowdery's sake"—for his protection and help.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 229.

A disposition to destroy at all hazards is manifested throughout Elder Traum's effort. Instead of Mr. Cowdery being "suspicioned," he carried those things with which he had been intrusted to the land of Zion; and at a meeting of the high council at Independence, Missouri, was appointed as one of a committee to "review and prepare" revelations for the press; he was sent to Kirtland to conduct the Evening and Morning Star; he edited the Messenger and Advocate; delivered a charge to the Twelve, and was appointed church recorder. These facts of history Mr. Traum has not put himself in possession of.

On page 61 we note this moral deduction:

And any well-instructed Saint will tell you in almost the exact words of Cowdery that the Book of Mormon is true. God has shown many of them that it is true, hence the task of selecting the witnesses was for him a work of supererogation. And, of course, if they know that it is true, it is true.

To this we pause briefly to retort that if because our heavenly Father, in verifying his promise, has shown the faithful Saints that the great work of the latter day dispensation is true, therefore "his task of selecting the witnesses was for him a work of supererogation," then, when God revealed the divinity of his work by the Holy Spirit to the children of the kingdom nineteen hundred years ago, so that the church was "compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses" (Hebrews 2:4; 12:2), the task of selecting the "twelve" apostolic witnesses was for him a work of supererogation! What wonderful presumption, that our critic will endeavor to teach God! The testimony of the witnesses to the divinity of the "sealed book" is confirmed by the Spirit, in the hearts of God's obedient children, even "as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in" the hearts of the Corinthian saints (1 Corinthians 1:6, 7).

So long, then, as it shall be true that no man willingly propagates a falsehood to his own detriment and to no purpose, so long it will be certain that the witnesses were serious and sincere in attesting the facts. So long as it shall be absurd to suppose that "eleven" men could be deceived in relation to things which they had "seen" and "hefted," attended by the divine indorsement of an angel clad in shining apparel, coupled with the "power of God," doubly quickening their senses to the actual reality of the things "seen," "hefted," "heard," and "felt," so long it will be certain that the witnesses were competent to judge of the truth and reality of the facts which they solemnly declared.

THE QUESTION OF ILLITERACY.

Chapter 4 of Mormonism Against Itself opens under the title, "The Book of Mormon; its translation."

The principal objection urged may be summed up in the statement that those who "handled" it, were "illiterate," and that the book bears evidence of it, in the fact that it "has improved constantly with the literary attainments of its revisers."

That the translator of the Book of Mormon, as also the witnesses to its divine authenticity, were not learned or skilled in the scholastic attainments of a popular age, we will not deny; and if this fact stands as an objection to the work he was instrumental in performing, then down goes the Christian institution. Jesus was "brought up" among the "lowly," served an apprenticeship with his father as a woodworker, and when in his ministerial profession the learned Jews attending the feast, where Jesus took occasion to teach, egotistically exclaimed: "How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?"—John 7:15, Jesus gave them to understand that God was the author of the work he was engaged in, and had sent him to do that work. Then when he chose the humble fishermen to be his servants and sent them out under the teaching of the Holy Spirit, the blase and cynical intellects of the wrong religion "perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men." But "they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus" (Acts 4:13). And Paul, that Christian philosopher, sums up the situation thus: "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called: but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen." (1 Corinthians 1:26-28.) What for? "That no flesh should glory in his presence." (Ibid., verse 29.)

Mr. Traum's standard, adopted at Hiram, Ohio, differs a little from the one just mentioned in the Bible; but why has God made use of such choice? In the language of our martyred president, when facing the infinite calm beyond the twilight's purple hills, "It's God's way. His will be done." Our critic will not be so unpatriotic as to take an adverse position.

In order to determine what force is borne in the objection, we will copy the definition of the word translate from three authorities:

First, Webster: "Translate, to interpret; to render into another language; to express the sense of one language in the words of another. The Old Testament was translated into the Greek language more than two hundred years B. C. The Scriptures are now translated into most of the languages of Europe and Asia." The above is Webster's sixth definition.

Second, Chandler's Encyclopedia, vol. 3, p. 1545; date 1898:

"Translation, rendering into one language the words of another, or the ideas conveyed thereby; important as bringing within reach of all readers, whatever is of value in ancient, or foreign literatures."

Third, Doctor Young, Analytical Concordance, p. 998: "Translate, translation, from the Hebrew abar, to cause to pass over."

In this definition (for all are substantially the same) we can see the true idea of literal translation,—"rendering into one language the words of another,"—and can affirm the position at which Mr. Traum spars, that a translator is not responsible for errors found in the language from which he translates. If he undertakes to correct the errors that may occur in the language from which he translates, his claims to a literal translation are impaired. But our critic thinks, that in the translation of the Book of Mormon, which was translated by Joseph Smith through the medium of "Urim and Thummim," all the errors of the ancient reformed Egyptian should have been corrected in the English according to popular standards of the day. But such would not have been a true and literal translation.

Let us illustrate: Suppose our opponent were to go into the studio and pose for an exact photograph of himself. The camera is adjusted and the work is done. Our opponent gazes upon the finished product with horror: "Why," says he to the photographer, "this is not an exact reproduction. The wrinkles, the moles, the scars, are here."

"What did you expect me to do," says the photographer, "take the wrinkles, the moles, the scars, all out?"

"Why, yes."

"Then it would not be an exact photograph, You want me and my 'obscura' to trim you of defects, give you the appearance of a modern dude, which would make me particeps criminis with your deception."

It is erroneous to suppose that inspiration must necessarily be in the classics of the times, or in the best language. The early Christians did not so speak. Joseph Smith was not a learned man. He was inspired to translate, and the Urim and Thummim was the power or means which gave the word or idea. His mind was illuminated, and the Urim and Thummim was to him a lexicon, and he put the translation into the words of or the vocabulary of Joseph Smith.

In volume 1, page 90, of Bishop Horne's "Introduction," you will find this principle laid down. He explicitly declares that when the Holy Spirit spoke through Paul, Jesus, Peter, and others, it came not in classic Greek, but in the vernacular of the times.

Mr. Horne, on page 515, says, "When it is said, that scripture is divinely inspired, we are not to understand that God suggested every word, or dictated every expression. From the different styles in which the books are written, and from the different manner in which the same events are predicted by different authors, it appears that the sacred penmen were permitted to write as their several tempers, understandings, and habits of life directed; and that the knowledge communicated to them by inspiration on the subject of their writings, was applied in the same manner as any knowledge acquired by ordinary means.

Doctor Briggs, in North American Review, July, 1898, says: "The most distinguished scholars of ancient times compare the words of scripture to vessels, symbols, shells, wineglass, lanterns. The divine word in the contents, the rule itself, the kernel, the wine, the light. Textual criticism finds no difficulty with these ancient divines in their doctrine of inspiration, but it casts off the modern dogma of verbal inspiration, as the shroud of divine truth, the grave clothes of the word of God."

Thus, Mr. Traum's idea of verbal inspiration is set aside by these "scholars" and "divines." Language is the vehicle—the dress—of thought. Thought is the truth, and it may find expression in any of a thousand languages; it may be dressed in a great variety of synonyms, phrases, and literary forms in any highly developed language. These forms may vary indefinitely, and yet the meaning be essentially the same. Doctor Briggs says, "The divine communication to the prophet's mind, and the inspiration to give it utterance by pen, or tongue, does not necessarily carry with it the inspiration of the tongue in its utterances or the pen in its constructions." Doctor Briggs is in accord with Horne, Hitchcock, Stowe, Lyford, and others, also sustained by the words of the Lord in Doctrine and Covenants 1: 5, thus: "Behold, I am God, and have spoken it: these commandments are of me, and were given unto my servants in their weakness, after the manner of their language, that they might come to understanding."

Therefore, while the sentiments, facts, and truths contained in holy writ are divinely inspired, the "vehicle," the "dress," the "phrases," and "literary forms" of speech may be such as are peculiar to those to whom and through whom it comes. Lest we should be told these cases are not parallel, that the Bible was translated by human wisdom, while the book we attack was translated by inspiration, we simply say; your argument is that the book is not what it claims to be, because there are imperfections in it. If so, the Bible is not what it claims to be, because there are imperfections in it, and some serious ones.

But before Mr. Traum blows his bugle of victory, he must prove that the imperfections in the Book of Mormon were not in the record as it left the archives of the Nephites, and that the book as we have it now, with its imperfections, is not a correct translation of the things engraved on the plates. He must also prove that the errors found in the Bible are not due, to any extent, to the original writers. Will he try this? If he thinks that inspiration even guarantees the truth of the thing translated, he can try his hand on the third verse of the fifty-eighth Psalm: "The wicked are estranged from the womb; they go astray as soon as they be born, speaking lies."

In narrating the Savior's words, which were probably spoken in Hebrew, the translators, in rendering them into the Greek, sometimes used different words to express their meaning. Matthew says, in reporting one of Christ's sayings: "Wisdom is justified by her works." But Luke, in reporting the same speech, says: "Wisdom is justified of all her children." Inspiration did not supply the words to be used in translation.

Then, however "faulty" the language, composition, and style of the Book of Mormon, these do not prove it to be of human origin. We are making no attack on the Bible. We are just making a comparison of arguments and objections. If the objections urged stand against the Book of Mormon, the same objections militate against the Bible.

Elder Traum devotes considerable space to record the statements of B. H. Roberts, George H. Reynolds, and others, who never even looked into the Urim and Thummim, as to how the translation of the Book of Mormon was done. We pass on, leaving him to ascertain, and when he has secured the valuable information to "call up" the children of Israel, and impart to them the choice news how Aaron was enabled to give judgment, or decide their particular cases in the itinerary through the wilderness. And after he has done so, he will perhaps receive a vote of thanks extending from Richmond, Indiana, to the cooling palms of Elim, in the "wilderness of wanderings."

ALLEGED CHANGES IN BOOK OF MORMON.

On page 68, Mr. Traum calls attention to "a little volume" entitled, Two Thousand Changes in the Book of Mormon, by Lamoni Call, of Bountiful, Utah. He says that the author claims to have made note of that many changes that were made between the first edition of the book, and 1898. Then says Mr. Traum:

To be exact, he vouches for having noted 2,038 changes; 698 of these changes were from "which" to "who." Not only are the changes of a grammatical character, but words and phrases are added or eliminated subject to the will of the "translator." "It came to pass" is a phrase that appears with less frequency in the later editions. Those parts of the Book of Mormon that are in the phraseology of the King James Version of the Bible were modified with the least frequency. Linn, in his "Story of the Mormons," calls attention to not less than twenty-five whole chapters that were bodily appropriated from the Scriptures.

That imperfections of orthographical and typographical character are liable to creep into any publication no one will dispute, and when our critic argues that because God had a hand in bringing the Book of Mormon forth, therefore all human elements must be eliminated, and only absolute perfection remain, he makes "confusion worse confounded" for the "antis."

Here literary errors should be distinguished from the principle of truth in which dull frame it is set. While some critics have discovered changes in the Book of Mormon, the last century has been pronounced in the discovery of 150,000 various readings in the New Testament alone. This statement is alarming to those who do not understand biblical criticism, and yet these errors are of the same class and kind as are in the Book of Mormon.

Mr. Roberts, D. D., a member of the English revision committee, and who is the author of the statement that the New Testament contains 150,000 "changes" or various readings, says, in the "Companion to the revision," 1881, "As universal experience has proved, nothing is more difficult than to get any large amount of mere copying done with absolute correctness. The transcriber may be incompetent or careless, and then, of course his work is badly done."

In Bigelow's Handbook of Punctuation we get the following: "It has become a recognized principle, that punctuation is as much a matter of taste, and judgment, as of rigid rule."

Bagster says: "Of the four generally used points, only the period (.) dates earlier than the fifteenth century. The colon (:) is said to have been first introduced about 1485; the comma (,) some thirty-five years later, and the semicolon (;) about 1570. Not until the tenth century was the uncial character abandoned, and the cursive, or running hand generally adopted; but it was felt necessary long before this time to have recourse to something like punctuation. This is indicated in some manuscripts by a point, or space, and in others by writing the text in short line according to the sense. The latter system, known as 'stichometry,' was introduced in the second half of the fifth century, while punctuation proper dates no farther back than the invention of printing (1438)."

Doctor Hitchcock, in his Analysis of the Bible, page 1130, says that long before the time of Christ, and long after, "The text was written in narrow columns from top to bottom without any break between word, sentence, chapter, or verse; and the direction of its writing and reading was exactly the reverse of ours. This order from right to left is still used in the Hebrew language."

Mr. Traum claims, in substance, that the Book of Mormon, if an inspired record, should have been written so as to have been free from error and imperfections in its grammar, including its punctuation, spelling, capitalizing, and style of composition, as measured and determined by modern standards; and because it is not so written, it is a fraud!

But if he could translate the ancient Hebrew manuscript described above, do it literally and boldly, he would have to bring it over into the English tongue as it is. He could not insert a word the equivalent of which was not in the original. He could not translate a semicolon, when the character that represented it was not there.

From Bagster, Horne, Hitchcock, and others, we learn that all ancient writings were without punctuation, and we conclude that the plates had no punctuation points on them. The manuscript committee in their report say: "The punctuation is deficient in a large part of the manuscript, yet there are pages where the punctuation is found and made at the time of writing, no doubt. In other parts, whole pages are punctuated with a pencil; and as the punctuation agrees with the Palmyra edition, it was evidently made before the publication of that edition."

As Mr. Roberts tells us, the great changes, 150,000, in the New Testament, "are of no practical importance," "multitudes of them being errors in spelling" and consisting of the "substitution of one synonymous word for another"; the "great changes" said to be in the Book of Mormon are of the same class, and "are of no practical importance."

The committee appointed by General Conference to compare the Palmyra, or the first edition of the Book of Mormon, and current editions with the manuscript in the hands of David Whitmer, sr., of Richmond, Ray County, Missouri, reported as follows: "In regard to the manuscript itself, we have to say, that it is beyond doubt the 'original,' or the one written by Oliver Cowdery, Martin Harris, Christian Whitmer, and Emma Smith, and probably Alva Hale. The handwriting of Oliver Cowdery, and Christian Whitmer, being identified by the Whitmer family; Emma Smith's writing being recognized by Brother Joseph and Brother Alexander, her sons. Known specimen's of Cowdery's writing were shown to the committee, and the sameness noted. It appears that they relieved each other, as the handwriting frequently changes. The manuscript shows different writers also in the spelling, as some, particularly Oliver Cowdery, spell more correctly. The writers evidently spelled as Joseph pronounced the words. There is no evidence that we could gather that the words were kept before the vision of Joseph till correctly spelled, as some imagine, but they were written as pronounced, and when read to Joseph, would of course sound as he had pronounced them.

Proper names which Joseph could not always pronounce, and which the amanuensis did not know how to spell, were spelled out by Joseph; also any word that he could not pronounce. These are clearly properly spelled."

The committee gives samples of the incorrect spelling, such as, "accuseing," for "accusing"; "destruid," for "destroyed"; "debths," for "depths"; "haveing," for "having"; "persued," for "pursued"; "vally," for "valley," etc. Other characters are: "Which are," "which had," "which was," and "they which," in the manuscript, are changed to "who are," "who had," and "who was," and "those who." "Saith," is changed to "said," or "say." "Hath," is changed to "has," or "had."

The above fairly represents the character of those changes that are said to stamp the impress of "fraud" on the Book of Mormon. The committee says: "The changes are such as do not affect the doctrine taught, or destroy the sense in any respect."

What does Roberts say of the changes in the New Testament? "They are of no practical importance."

In English the meaning is the same whether we say, "He went forth" or "He went out"; "Let us go on," or "Let us proceed"; "the enemy escaped," or "the enemy made their escape"; and just as it makes no difference in our language, whether we say, "Paul, the Apostle," or "the Apostle Paul"; "the poet Milton," or "Milton, the poet," so it is with those variations in both the Bible and Book of Mormon.

It is the matter of both books that is professedly inspired. Errors and imperfections in the language of either book does not alter or change the inspiration of the matter. The argument of the opposition is very shallow, in that it substantially embodies the fallacy that the scribe, typo, printer, and press, were inspired!

Hedge's Rules of Logic, page 166, says: "Violations of the rules of grammar do not vitiate a writing, in which the sense is distinctly expressed. When a passage is imperfect, or unintelligible, the interpreter is at liberty to supply such words as are manifestly necessary to render its sense complete."

In Evidences of Christianity, by Paley, page 364, he states: "I know not a more rash, or unphilosophical conduct of the understanding than to reject the substance of a story, by reason of some diversity in the circumstances with which it is related."

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL TO OUR AID.

Alexander Campbell, in debate on the evidences of Christianity with Robert Owen, at Cincinnati, Ohio, defended the Bible against the harm supposedly directed at the authenticity of the revelation with the following statement:

"For I will venture to affirm, that if anyone could prove, what is impossible to be proved, because it is not true, that there are errors in geography, chronology, and philosophy, in every page of the Bible; that the prophecies therein delivered, are all but fortunate guesses, or artful applications, and the miracles there recorded, no better than legendary tales; if anyone could show that these books were never written by their pretended authors, but were posterior impositions on illiterate and credulous ages, all these wonderful discoveries would prove no more than this, that God, for reasons to us unknown, had thought proper to permit a revelation by him communicated to mankind, to be mixed with their ignorance, and corrupted by their frauds from its earliest infancy, in the same manner in which he has visibly permitted it to be mixed, and corrupted from that period to the present hour. If, in these books, a religion, superior to all human imagination, actually exists, it is of no consequence to the proof of its divine origin, by what means it was there introduced, or with what human errors and imperfections it is blended. A diamond, though found in a bed of mud, is still a diamond, nor can the dirt, which surrounds it, depreciate its value, or destroy its luster."

All the interpolations, and different readings, though numerous as Michaelis, a very learned German professor, makes them, counting all the minutiae of letters and points, do not affect the character of a single fact recorded in the whole New Testament. Indeed, men have been so much more concerned about the doctrines than the facts of scripture, that they are much more alarmed about the omission, or change of a term, affecting some favorite conclusion to which they have come, than about the evidence on which the great salutary facts are established. Hence has arisen the great ado about interpolations. And if there were ever any interpolations designedly introduced, it was for carrying some doctrine or theorem, and not for proving a fact. Hence skeptics have nothing to fear from interpolations. But a notice of the Dark Ages here may not be out of place, especially as most of these different readings and interpolations occurred during this dreary period.—Debate, p. 356.

In the foregoing, Mr. Campbell uses the words of the Hon. Soame Jenyns, once a skeptic, who had concluded to publish a work against the divinity of the Bible. But after becoming acquainted with it, he changed his plan, with good reason, and gave the world a treatise upon the truthfulness and authenticity of the same, by reference to its internal evidences. Mr. Campbell then offers his comment in acceptance of Jenyns' conclusion.

Elder Traum, doubtless, considers the fact that Bible scholars divide the sacred narrative into "historical," "prophetical," "doctrinal," and "anecdotal," divisions, and recognizes that the historical portion has not that degree of inspiration protecting it from error.

Campbell says: "There are a thousand historic facts narrated in the Bible, which it would be absurd to regard as immediate and direct revelation from the Almighty." (Debate, p. 146.)

Campbell, in his debate with Mr. McCalla, uses this argument, and quotes Blackstone as follows: "That the words of a law are generally to be understood in their usual or most known signification, not so much regarding the propriety of grammar, as their general and popular use." ("Commentary, volume 1, section 2," page 394.)

This then, is the concurrent declaration of all critics of eminence, and if Mr. Traum would sustain the divinity of the Bible, he must abandon the method by which he would seek to overthrow the claims of the Book of Mormon.

GRACELAND'S INDUSTRIAL SHOP.

A folder has recently been issued from the Herald Office, in a small way setting forth the merits of the products of industrial students at Graceland College.

For a number of years a few students each year have found limited employment in out-of-class hours in constructive work in the manual training shop. So practicable has this work been found to be that it has steadily enlarged as its products become known. The addition recently of power woodworking machinery and the coming to Graceland last year of Bro. Amos Berve, who aside from his duties as Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds, has general charge of the shop, has placed the shop in a position to bid for the patronage of all who may need our product. They manufacture to order anything in the mission furniture line, and many articles of household and office use. Whatever your need, just write of it, giving brief specifications, and we will send you a sketch or photo and quote you our price. We invite you to compare our offer with what you can do in your home town, consider the advantage of patronizing our own industry, and if the balance is in our favor, send us your order. We supply your needs in a satisfactory manner, at a price that pleases you, and your order helps a young man to prepare for a life of usefulness.

We finish all articles in an oil mission stain, which will take a good polish, any color ordered. Articles are usually shipped in "knocked down" style, to secure freight rates. Special attention is called to the gospel literature racks designed for the display and distribution of literature in public places. They are simple in construction, neat in design, and are furnished at prices that should be within the reach of local committees. If you are interested, write the undersigned, and we will gladly send our folder and other information concerning the work.

The Prayer of Life.

Lead me, O God, in life's brave early day,
While skies are clear and all the world is gay;
So many hurtful blooms my vision greet!
So many paths diverge to lure my feet
Far from the peaceful, sinless road astray!

And when the morning can no longer stay
And songs are mute, and noontide's fervent ray
Upon the weary track must fiercely beat,
Lead me, O God!

Nor leave me when the eventide shall lay
Upon life's happy field its vapor gray;
Clasp my hand in thine more close and sweet
Than thou hast ever held it; and, while fleet
The night is falling, down the unknown ways,
Lead me, O God!

—Henry Jerome Stockard, in News and Observer.

To the Sisters Throughout the Church.

Because of the importance of woman's work in the church, and of the mighty power of united effort, we make this appeal to you.

We have before us a vision of a sisterhood united in the effort to prepare themselves not only to efficiently labor to combat the evils and overcome the difficulties they meet in their line of work, but for the most successful development of the home and social life of the church.

To accomplish this we need to unite under one general head; so at the general meeting of the Daughters of Zion this spring, the name of this society was changed to that of The Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service, which it was thought would more fully indicate the scope of our work; but the aim and purpose of the society remains unchanged. Indeed we could have no higher aim than the one stated in our constitution, which is, "Mankind to bless." In that lies the fulfillment of the gospel requirements. And the objects for which we labor, as contained in Article 2 of our constitution, cover a field of work in which all may find something to do suited to their several abilities, in the effort to bless mankind. Notice, first, "To unite for mutual benefit and to increase love for the sanctuary of home: to study to educate our children in the principles of the gospel: to prepare them to resist the evils of the world, and to become active agents for good." Should not all mothers in the church be united in such a sacred purpose, when it is so manifestly in line with their highest duty?

Second, "To promote social purity and to lead the sisters to realize the great responsibility of motherhood, that they may be mothers indeed, guarding not only the interests of their own children, but of the children of others." In this we see reaching out to others effort to make conditions safe and uplifting, not only for our own, but for all we can reach.

Third, "To extend a helping hand to the erring ones, and to do all in our power to win them to paths of righteousness." In this is manifest the spirit of the Master, who came to save that which was lost, and in this age of pitfalls and snares there is great need of rescuers.

Fourth, "To be ready to sustain every good work, that our influence may assist in the establishment of Zion, the pure in heart." Surely those who framed the statement of these objects were inspired of God to cover the range of woman's work in these purposes.

Will you not unite with us on a platform so broad, that we may together wage a warfare against sin and ignorance? Not a warfare with weapons of steel; but with weapons of love, that not only conquer but heal.

This society is a general organization in the church, and is approved and sustained by the General Conference, and reports to it annually as do the Sunday school and Religio. Since this is the only woman's organization sustained by and reporting to the church, it seems fitting that we should change our name so that all other woman's organizations, organized for the purpose of serving or fitting themselves to serve the body, may join with us and all work together under different departments, and the work of the whole be reported to and passed upon by the General Conference.

There are numbers of societies of the sisters working year after year, and no account is ever taken of their work. Now if these various societies, such as mothers' meetings, aid societies, social purity work, domestic science circles, and others, were all united under this general head, and reporting their work each year; what an influence it would have in drawing all the sisters together in an effort to help roll on this great work! There would be work for all sisters of all ages and tastes and abilities in these various departments. Some working for the Children's Home; some for the moral, some for the physical, and some for the intellectual uplift of the body under the divine spirit of love for God and humanity. Advisory Board of the Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service.

Letter Department

MOSCOW MILLS, MISSOURI, July 20, 1911.

Dear Herald: I thought I would write a few lines for publication, as I have lost a letter that I received from two poor girls who said for me to answer it so they would know if I got the papers they sent me. I receive them and was glad the dear sisters remembered me, and I ask an interest in your prayers that our Father may repay them for all their kindness to me. I am still trying in my weak way to live near to God in my everyday walk. I never hear a sermon except through the papers. I am very nervous. Pray for me, dear sisters, one and all, everywhere.

Your sister in the true faith,

MRS. MARY I. WELCH.

Editors Herald: Before leaving my field for General Conference, I opened the work on Ashmun street, Saulte Sainte Marie, Michigan, some few becoming interested. The editor of the Soo Times took advantage of us, after he learned I had left the city, by writing a long article on Mormonism, telling the abominations of both the Brigham Young and Strangite Mormons and saying, "It may not be generally known that meetings have been held under cover on Ashmun street, and some of the Scoites have been converted to this Mormon belief," and left the impression that we were of that people. Then he warned the people against us, calling us hypocrites and saying that "their teaching will not bear the light of investigation, and something must be done."

Well, on my return to the Soo, I set about to correct, if possible, the misrepresentation by caling on the editor and telling him I did not wish to accuse him of willfully misrepresenting us, but we had been misrepresented, and I had written an article in reply which I would like to go before the public so they might know that the court records and also the leading men of our Government have said we are a continuation of the church organized in 1830 and that Brigham Young and James J. Strang apostatized from the original church. His answer was, "If those men left the church and taught polygamy, why do you still go by the name of Latter Day Saints? Why do you not change the name?" I asked him, Why do you not change your name and deny the name of Christian since Nicolas, a proselyte of Antioch, one of the seven deacons of Acts 6:5, went off into polygamy?" but I could not persuade him to let the other side of the question be told. He would fight everything that bore the name of Latter Day Saint. I told him I would not object, providing he would fight fair, but he should not ask to tie our hands and give us no way of defense. And now, Mr. Editor, if it is fight you are after, we will give you a chance, and if you will refuse me a reply in your paper, I will expose your unmanly act, if I have to stand on the street corner to do it. He said, "Go ahead."

I then got a blackboard and wrote on it, "A reward of fifty dollars will be given to the editor of the Soo Times if he will meet me in public discussion and prove to the public that we are in any wise associated with J. J. Strang or Brigham Young, polygamists. Elder David Smith." I placed it in the window of our hall on Front street, where it was read by scores of people. I then went to the mayor and got permission to preach on the street, where I preached to hundreds of listeners. I drew the line between our church and those who went away from us, reading from the court records and other historical matter, referring to Bible prophecies and at the same time exposing the unmanly effort of the editor, and letting him understand that what we had to offer would stand the light of investigation.

Well, it soon became the general talk around the city that "the editor will likely learn a lesson,—he should either meet the issue or be quiet." Well, since that time he has been quiet. The blackboard was left in the window for two weeks, where he could read it both going and coming to his meals, but if he is still fighting us, it is only in his mind.

As a result seven have been baptized, five are adults, and we believe they are good material. Others are interested. I am now at Cockburn Island, Ontario. Elder Alvin Ellis is at the Soo and will look after the work there during my absence. He is a promising young elder, and we hope to do much good in bringing in the honest ones to know we are servants for Christ and telling the truth.

D. D. SMITH.

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON, July 28, 1911.

Editor Herald: We have been receiving the HERALD weekly, and it has been with pleasure we have read the many good things it contained relative to the kingdom of God.

Since coming to my mission field, (Seattle and British Columbia District) I have not been able to do very much, on account of my mother's sickness. I started a series of meetings at Bremerton, held ten services, and then was called home and have been here ever since. I want to say to those who have been looking for me to bring the tent to their place this summer, that sickness is the reason of delay. My meetings at Bremerton were held in Brother Daulberg's home. While not very many came, the few that came were very much interested. I believe with a two-or three-week effort there, a branch could be raised up. Five Saints there now, and Brother Daulberg is a priest, a good man, well posted, and has had quite a bit of experience in presiding.

We have Brother Plumb in our district this year, but with my not being able to go with him and the district being new to him, he has been handicapped to a great extent. His labors have been confined mostly to Toledo, Meskill, and Centralia. This is my fifth year in this district and I can truthfully say that there are greater opportunities for preaching this year than any previous one, especially for tent work. With two of us this year, I fully intended to have the tent going all summer, but as previously stated, sickness upset my plans. The statement of Robert Burns is true that "The best laid schemes o' mice and men, Gang aft a-gley."

The district as a whole I think is in good shape. The Centralia Branch, which was organized last February, is doing fine under the presidency of Ern. S. P. Cox and L. Rhodes. Brother Rhodes is young in the work, ordained a priest last February, and chosen priest of the branch. Since then he has done quite a bit of preaching and has baptized several. The Chehalis Saints have organized a Sunday school and it is doing nicely under the leadership of the Ward girls. The Seattle Branch while not so many attend as in the past on account of some moving away, they are having good spiritual meetings. The pastor, with some help from the brethren, painted the church and improved its appearance very much. The Saints at Vancouver and New Westminster, B. C., are moving along nicely with such men as leaders as Brethren McMullin and Pope. The flock at Chilliwack is fed and nourished by the wise counsel of Elder Stadir.

I want to relate a promise that was given me in 1894. I lived in Higbee, Missouri. That same year I took a trip to Cumberland, British Columbia, to visit my father and mother whom I had not seen for about thirteen years. After remaining with them about three months I concluded to go back to my family. The time came for me to bid my parents goodbye. With their being well up in years and my going over two thousand miles away, the natural thought was that we would never meet again in this life and they so expressed themselves. With this feeling in their souls and mine, and tears running down their cheeks when they bade me good-bye, it made me think, and while in that reflective mood this great latter day work came vividly before my mental vision and the Spirit said thus to me, "Go back and join the church, and if faithful you will be called to authoritatively represent God in the world; time will come when you will preach the gospel to your people and they will accept it, and in the other world you will be one unbroken family in his glorified kingdom." I came home; in course of time I was baptized and called to the ministry. In 1900 I received appointment from General Conference to labor in the Dakotas, and the next year re-appointed to the same place. The next year I was sent to Scotland for two years. After returning from my foreign mission I labored in Michigan, Indiana, and Illinois, and all this time I was anxious to preach to my people and they were anxious for me to come.

Finally, in 1906, my appointment read Seattle and British Columbia District. My first year here, of my people I baptized my mother, sister, brother-in-law, and sister-in-law, and the 26th of this month I led my aged father through the waters of regeneration into the living kingdom of God. I have a brother yet outside of the kingdom, but I am sure if I am faithful God will make his promise come to pass. My brother is quite favorable to the work.

So, dear Saints, I am glad to be engaged in a work that God is interested in, it gives it a reality. The only thing is, Will we live and do what he requires of us, that we may have his approbation? May we do so.

Your brother in Christ,

FAIRFIELD, NEBRASKA, July 31, 1911.

Dear Herald Readers: We have a small branch here struggling to keep the gospel banner afloat. July 21 the Southern Nebraska district Sunday school convention convened in the Lone Tree schoolhouse. Our new district president, Sr. Orr, in charge. We had the best convention it has ever been my lot to attend. Every minute of the time was utilized, either with business, interesting talks, discussions, or papers on different subjects pertaining to Sunday school work. Everyone seemed to feel they were benefited by being present.

July 23 our district conference convened. A feeling of sadness was felt by all on account of receiving word to the effect that submission in charge, J. R. Sutton, was too ill to meet with us. We have learned later that he started July 25 for the Sanitarium at Independence. He is such a faithful worker and able representative of this latter day work. We had with us Brn. W. M. Self, R. O. Self, and Edward Rannie of the missionary force, besides quite a number of delegates from the different branches. Our conference is one we will be glad to recall for years as a pleasant memory. The spirit of unity and good will prevailed.

Our district president, Paul M. Hanson, being appointed to a different field this year, it devolved upon this conference to elect another to fill his place. W. M. Self was unanimously chosen to that office. It seems from all indications that the district, generally speaking, is waking up to a realization of their condition and the prevailing desire is to come up higher. Our meeting place being a country schoolhouse, it was too far for some of the Saints to drive home for their meals, and attend all the sessions. We all agreed to take our dinners and suppers to the schoolhouse and put them together. It proved to be a grand success, as we all enjoyed the time between meals and services by singing and visiting. We were all sorry when the time came to say good-bye, but each felt stronger and better equipped for the trials and duties that await us. The weather was ideal, except one night, when those of us who lived the farthest away got a moderate sprinkling as we went home from the evening services.

Since conference, Brethren Rannie and R. O. Self have been holding forth in the city park at Fairfield every night, with fairly good crowds and splendid attention. Fairfield has been a hard place to get a hearing. What the result will be God only knows.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

MRS. DELLA SPEAR.

WAMSLEY, OHIO, July 24, 1911.

Editors Herald: I am still trying to do all I can for the cause of Christ and the upbuilding of his kingdom in the world.

We have a branch known as the Pleasant Valley Branch. It is in good condition,—members being added by baptism. Bro. J. W. Metcalf came to Henley on the 3d of this month and preached a little over a week. He baptized three precious souls into the kingdom of God. Two of them were the heads of a family. The man was a Methodist and his wife was a member of the Christian Church, but they were good, honest, old people. Bro. S. W. Henry and the writer were at their house last spring and held meetings there from Saturday until Monday, and they said that when they could see the light they would obey the gospel.

There are more at that place who are near the kingdom. There are so many that are fulfilling the scripture where Paul said they would turn their ears away from the truth and be turned unto fables and would not endure sound doctrine. In this country there are so many who are teaching for doctrine the commandments of men and are transgressing the law of God by saying, Lord, Lord, when their hearts are far from him. The writer went to Pleasant Hill last Saturday, where Brother Metcalf and Bro. S. W. Henry began services on Thursday the 20th of this month. Brother Metcalf did some very able preaching, and though not to large crowds there was good attention and good interest, and that is what it takes to make it a good meeting.

We had a basket dinner on Sunday, the 23d, and an enjoyable time was had. There was plenty to eat and to spare. The meeting was hindered Sunday night on account of rain. The meetings closed with good attendance. They were held in a grove in sight of a Baptist church. Brother Metcalf started to Ironton, Ohio, this morning, and from there to Kentucky. There are not many Saints where he is going. May the Lord be with him, to protect and keep him from harm. May the Spirit of the Lord be with the traveling elders everywhere. May the Lord bless the editors and help them in their labor.

I desire to see this work prosper and grow until it fills the whole earth. Dear Saints all over the land, be faithful a few more days. It will not be long until the Lord will come in power and claim his Saints. Let us not be as the foolish virgins, but let us be ready when the cry is made, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh." Let us be ready to meet him with joy and have part in the first resurrection. May the Lord save one and all is the prayer of the writer.

Yours in Christ,

J. T. MITCHELL.

COOKES POINT, TEXAS, July 25, 1911.

Editors Herald: I am not in very good humor to write; have delayed writing to tell you about our good conference and reunion near New Baden, hoping at the same time to tell "you all" of the good fortune of Texas in voting prohibition,—but, oh, the plans of "mice and men" often end without the "glee." We have "hung our harps on the willows" and like those of old, weeping for their children, we refuse to be comforted.

With a voting population of 500,000, the people of Texas have returned a possible majority of one to two thousand votes in favor of the open saloon. I may not be able to preach any for a week. I am crammed full of disgust at such high handed corruption with money and politics in defeating a question that so keenly involves the morals of the country, that I want to leave the State and go home. I must not attempt to use language to express my feelings—I'd run out of words,—words suitable to a preacher at least. But I hope to maintain my dignity and standing before the Lord if the devil and hisimps take the whole country (except five souls) down to the hot place. I know there are a few faithful, worthy ones here, and for their sake we shall labor on.

The conference and reunion near New Baden is considered the best one in years in that district. Seven were baptized. Many others almost ready. The outside attendance was good. But we were disappointed that no more Saints came, only two families camping on the ground. The Saints here don't seem to realize or appreciate the value of such meetings. Those who attended this one were benefited and rejoiced in the restored gospel. I hope the Saints will get the idea of coming and camping on the ground; come at the opening and remain till the close. It was decided to hold another reunion next year, the time and place being left with minister in charge.

I close here to-night, thence to Hearne over Sunday, then next week I visit new territory and attend conference and reunion near San Antonio. I hope to survive the trip and do good all along the line.

I have been kindly cared for by all the Saints where I have labored. They have been thoughtful of my financial needs and I am grateful for their kindness. Tithing and free-will offerings are as much a part of the gospel plan as baptism and the laying on of hands. It is a joyous experience to find a welcome among Saints and friends. It makes us happy,—we must have something to counteract our feelings because of this seeming defeat of prohibition in Texas. Brother Hubert Case has helped me out some,—said I could attend the reunion in western Oklahoma, at Seling, August 25 to September 3. Sure, I will be there if all is well.

I greatly enjoyed the closing sermon at the last General Conference by Joseph Luff. Surely we must admit that trials and defeats often result in victories for those who continue faithful and valiant in the conflict. Our cause is true, our object is to redeem humanity from evil, our means is the divine power of God "unto salvation." There can be no defeat when we labor in harmony with God and truth. That is victory. Notwithstanding the "antis" may have a majority of two thousand in Texas on the prohibition question, the matter is not settled, for

"Nothing is ever settled Until it is settled right."

"We shall never cease the conflict
Till the summons home be heard,
We have all for life enlisted
In the army of the Lord."

R. M. MALONEY.

CRESCENT, IOWA, July 27, 1911.

Editor Herald: As I am sending our subscription for the HERALD, I will write a few lines and tell you of the grand meetings we are having here. Bro. J. R. Lentell has been holding meetings for two weeks with grand success. Large crowds and fine interest. The Saints have been built up and encouraged and many outsiders are deeply interested and speak in highest terms of our brother. We pray that his preaching may water the seed he has sown and that some may have courage to come forth and obey. We feel they are left without excuse, for the gospel has been presented to them so plainly and powerfully that they can not help understanding it, for we have listened to our brother night after night, and our souls have burned within us, and we have felt to praise God from whom all blessings flow. The meetings will continue this evening and he will preach on the difference between our church and the church out west. This is an important subject to get before the people, because we are so often mistaken for the same church. I often think if it were not for the evils of Brighamism, our elders could go out and convert the world, but they have that to contend with wherever they go.

We have had but very little rain here all spring and summer and crops are greatly damaged, but God has said that in the latter days there will be perilous times,—men shall be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, and do we not see it all around us? And many of the Saints seem to be slumbering in the work, but perhaps the slumbering time has come. Let us awake and have our lamps trimmed and burning when the cry is made, Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye forth to meet him, we may be ready. We have been shown that his coming was near at hand. We know there are many things to be fulfilled first, but God has said that he will cut his work short in righteousness.

A dream was given me some time ago which I have never fully understood. If anyone can give the interpretation, it will be gladly received. I saw myself in the church here and many coming in to the meeting, and on the stand several of the ministry had comfortable seats. Bro. William Self stepped out of the side door and was gone a few minutes, then came back to the door and called all the ministry and myself to come outside where he was, and we stepped out in the darkness, for it was evening. He pointed towards heaven and told us to look, which we did, and the heavens were illuminated with a bright light and in the light we saw an angel flying from the southeast to the northwest. The sight was beautiful indeed. I raised both hands and closed them together and shouted, "Glory to God in the highest," and then we all entered the church again, and by this time it was just packed full of people, and I had some difficulty finding a seat, but finally found one and the meeting was opened as usual, and Brother Self preached under the influence of the Spirit, and it was a powerful sermon in which all seemed interested deeply.

Dear Saints, I rejoice with you in the many testimonies that have been given me by the Spirit, and I know God is the author of this latter day work, and it is the desire of my heart to live faithfully, and worthy of the great blessings God has for his people. I ask an interest in your faith and prayers, and may the blessings of God rest upon his people.

CHRISTINA RASMUSSEN.

TORREON, MEXICO, July 28, 1911.

Herald Editors: I spoke last night to a small audience in a private house. We now have two sermons each week in private houses, besides the services in the hall, two sermons, Sabbath school, and a prayer meeting Wednesday nights.

Sister Christy came up from Durango with her brother, Brother Anthony, a week ago. She improved so rapidly in health, she decided to remain with us another week. She seems to improve faster here than in Durango.

We had fine weather here in June and the most of July, but last few days have been pretty hot, but nights are always pleasant.

222 SUR CALLE JIMENEZ.

Your brother,
WILL S. PENDER.

"Down East."

A change of scene is beneficial, and at times necessary; too close attention to office duties with little variation is wearing. I accepted an invitation of Bro. U. W. Greene to visit his field, and by the courtesy of the Presidency and others in charge, was granted leave of absence. The weather had been very hot and I was glad to get to the seashore again, after twenty-three years' residence on the prairies of Iowa. I believed it would help me in my work and enable me to accomplish greater good to become better acquainted with our people whose delegates and representatives I meet at the General Conferences.

The hot June weather made the trip somewhat trying. Hurrying through Chicago, my first stop was at Buffalo. I found Bro. H. J. Davison and S. J. Stone there, busy in mission work. Met with the Saints at Niagara Falls, New York, addressing them once. Sunday afternoon was devoted to the Falls. I will not attempt a description of that sublime spectacle of power and grandeur. The roar of Niagara must be heard, the falls be seen, to be appreciated. The dash and swirl of the lower rapids are also awe-inspiring. Looking forty miles northward from General Brock's monument, one sees the Niagara River wind and merge into Lake Ontario.

The third night of the hot journey, without sleep, brought me to Albany, where I left the train for the daylight trip by boat "down the Hudson." The trip was very interesting. International tourists "make" this route; our boat was crowded with interesting people. The rugged shore, including the Catskill Mountains, the palisades, and historic points—Newburg, West Point, etc., presents a changing panorama of absorbing interest. "Gould Castle," the Vanderbilt home, and other palatial residences of the "Four Hundred," represented a collection of wealth, elegance, and magnificence assembled nowhere else in such magnitude. It is a marvel to behold it, even at a distance. Private yachts, special cars, etc., were also in evidence. Old World castles and their luxuries are exceeded in number and surpassed here.

I did not stop to call on any of those people. I could not spare time for all and did not wish to slight any; therefore can not furnish the HERALD readers any description of interior furnishings, art work, etc. Mr. Martyn, of the Four Hundred, may continue in Everybody's Magazine, his description of "The Idle Rich" without competition.

Missing the Boston boat at New York, Captain Jack Potts, Brooklyn, entertained me during a brief stay. Here I met Bro. W. E. LaRue and family, just arrived, preparing for their work. The new chapel is a credit to the membership, modern and attractive.

Arrived Boston, at Bro. U. W. Greene's home. Met Brethren Fisher, Rich, and others. Made a hurried visit to the Massachusetts statehouse, a shrine sacred to every patriotic citizen of the United States. In addition to its artistic wonders, this building contains historic paintings, tablets, and relics of colonial times, including drums and guns used at Lexington and Bunker Hill. The log of the Mayflower is not the least among them. One is brought face to face with the early scenes of the Pilgrim and Colonial Fathers. The "sacred codfish," a bronze emblem of the codfish industry, 1747, hangs in the house of representatives, opposite the speaker's chair.

On June 16, Bro. Greene and I celebrated our birthday by sailing from Boston for Bangor, Maine, thence going by rail to Machias, near the eastern end of the United States. The scenery along the coast of Maine is magnificent, the finest I ever looked upon, in ruggedness and grandeur. The coast line is much indented with islands, headlands, bold promontories, etc., with bays, tidewater rivers, etc. Great masses of granite rise out of the sea, all surmounted by the everlasting pine and birch. Eastern Maine is composed mostly of masses of granite, rock, and sand, with spots called "farms," which to a western man look bare and barren. Rising out of the sea and pine covered, the hills and mountains are wonderfully beautiful. Old ocean is as attractive as changeable; magnificent and beautiful in the clear weather, but lonely, forbidding, and desolate when it is "thick-of-fog," which often obscures everything for days. Dangerous ledges thread this coast; thousands of lives have been lost along its outline. Its rocks and reefs mark the watery graves of many vessels. In stormy weather the sea breaks fiercely against its rocky barrier. The sailors and fishermen are a hardy race who, especially in winter, take their lives in their hands, in their employment. They sail and fish in thick fog and storm along the rugged coast, within sound of the angry breakers, guided only by the varying sounds of the angry seas as they break on the masses of rock which dispute further encroachment upon the land. Their instincts and powers of observation are wonderfully acute. Lumbering and fishing are the leading industries; both on the decline. Moose and deer abound in the lonely pine forests. Many of the islands are owned by wealthy people who spend the summers there.

Met with the Saints in Eastern Maine district conference at West Kennebec. The attendance was large, the spirit of the gathering excellent; fine session throughout. Here I met Bro. S. F. Cushman, and J. A. and H. A. Koehler. Bro. J. A. Koehler has done excellent work here, Sister Koehler being a valuable helper. He built almost unaided, as to labor, a chapel thirty by forty-six feet, in utility and appearance a credit to the church. A good work may be continued. Brother Greene and I preached and labored here until June 26; a number were baptized. The Saints came by boat and team from the various parts of the district.

We came, on the 26th, to Jonesport. This is a city located on the main shore, but includes a number of islands lying between the shore and the open ocean; population about five thousand, mostly seafaring people—fishermen and sailors; codfishing, lobstering, and sardine factories being the principal industries. This is an old and important seaport; a number of retired sea captains reside here. Vessels of many kinds lie at anchor in the "reach" or harbor. One can stand on the main shore and look beyond into the open ocean. The island of Grand Manan, New Brunswick, in the Bay of Fundy, and Mount Desert (where is Bar Harbor), each about forty miles distant, can be seen on clear days. The fishermen travel through the dense fog as we tread our familiar streets. The movement of the water and wind, distance traveled, the dash of the breakers on different reefs, are all indications to them of their courses. They thread the channels and avoid the dangerous ledges with ease.

This is the center of the district. A branch of two hundred is here. Many others believe our work; in fact, it largely is in the lead among the great majority of the best people of the city. It has gathered out some of the very cream of the population. A few sisters were the mainstay here for some years. They held special prayer service for the conversion of their husbands and others, and the Lord answered in a remarkable manner, and now many excellent brethren and sisters have been added. Brethren Greene, Cushman, and others have done an excellent work. Brother Cushman, transferred to Cape Cod, is succeeded by Bro. J. A. Koehler, Sister Koehler and family residing at Jonesport. Appointments are kept up on Beall's and Head Harbor Islands by Brother Koehler and others. Brother Koehler is district president, Brother Rogers, president of the branch, assisted by earnest local officers.

Fifteen were baptized during our meetings here, others are to be baptized. We have reached hundreds in grove, chapel, and street meetings, and the interest is undiminished. Have remained here several weeks, but must move westward to the New England reunion and home. Brother Greene has preceded me to Corea, Bar Harbor, Stonington, etc. He is well known all along this coast. He has his work well in hand and is having good success; has a wide acquaintance among all the people and cultivates their friendship, and thus reaches many. My work has been varied by some marked experiences. "This, at last, is the sea," "deeply, darkly; beautifully blue," to me a scene of many wonders. It has afforded great relief from the heat wave.

One day a brother took me out on his lobstering trip, and to our surprise we soon were among a school of whales—seven of them. They plunged and came up and "blowed" all around us, some coming very near to our thirty-foot boat. One came at us head on, a huge fellow, but we felt no fear. We altered our course slightly, lest he hit us accidentally. They plunged and blowed for over an hour, then started out to sea. It was a wonderful sight, rarely witnessed even here as we saw it. Maine is a prohibition State; I saw the seven whales! Brother Greene didn't happen to go along and thought I counted too many—but, people have been known to turn green with envy! And, I was not a Jonah; the whales manifested no disposition to harm us, and more lobsters and fish than usual were caught on the trip. I am a student of Bible history, but did not have time to investigate as to the size of a whale's mouth and throat, to learn if one could have swallowed a man. I had no special curiosity in the matter. It would not have been good form to manifest inquisitiveness while those whales were considerate enough to furnish a stranger such interesting entertainment. It is the business of the skeptic to make such examination if not satisfied with the Bible account. The whales went their way and I was satisfied to go mine; besides, "I have a family." We already are accused of duplicating too many features of Old and New Testaments. We must "draw the line somewhere."

Have been kept busy, preaching, visiting, administering here and at Head Harbor, Indian River, West Jonesport, etc. A picnic at Soon Point, one at Shorey's Island, a sail to the life-saving station, with sea bathing and a good time on these trips, have been very enjoyable. Lobsters, fish, clam chowders, have been the main diet.

Jonesport is the port from which Elder George J. Adams sailed, in 1867, with his expedition to Palestine, landing and settling at Joppa. Survivors of that colony still reside here.

I close labor here next Sunday, and will sail by small naphtha boat for Bar Harbor and Stonington, thence for Boston. A great work has been done in Jonesport; and no doubt a greater ingathering will follow. The work is firmly established.

JUNE 22, 1911.

I continued preaching at Jonesport and West Jonesport in grove, hall, church, and on the streets, until Sunday, the 23d, when I baptized three in the ocean. Closed my labors Sunday night with a fine interest and a comforting experience in preaching the word. Had fine liberty throughout.

Left Jonesport at 3 a. m. in Captain Lewis Hinkley's twenty-five foot naphtha boat, for Bar Harbor, via Nash's Island, Petit Manan, across Frenchman's Bay via "Schoodic"—an ocean trip with as fine a crew as ever got together, brethren and friends. We arrived about 9.50 a. m. and spent about five hours at this famous resort of wealth and magnificent homes. Leading names in the financial and business world are represented here—money kings of international fame; among them J. P. Morgan, who has several lodges; Mrs. Mark Hanna; McCormick, of the harvester company, and others too numerous to mention. Saw the home of "the richest baby in the world." Must have been the baby himself, for one was seen near his residence attended by a woman nurse, man at the head of the pony cart, and a private detective or guard and two Great Dane dogs. It reminded one of the child of Louis XIV, with its eighty-five attendants! The lavish display of wealth, luxury, and magnificent arrangement of homes and grounds is wonderful. The moneyed people know where to find climate, scenery, and pleasant surroundings. Pleasure yachts costing $100,000 or more each, were in evidence. Such extravagant luxuriousness in a world where so much of suffering and misery are extant, but serves to emphasize the need of equality as revealed to us. "We have not followed cunningly devised fables" or doctrines in our work. It is ours to give to the world an embodiment of the truth in "all things that pertain to life and godliness" here and hereafter. "Zion must arise and shine" and "put on her beautiful garments" by compliance with the divine law pertaining to social, economic, and spiritual life.

Very stormy weather developed; the brethren ventured to return, but soon came back to port. I left for Stonington at 2.30 in the steamer Morse. The storm increased in fury—a tempest of wind and rain. Off "Schonner Head," in the open ocean, we got the full benefit of it, and I enjoyed the great waves and the heaving ship to the full. I got on the stern deck to get the full benefit of the rise and the fall of the boat. She would rise to the crest of the sea, then drop like a shot and hit the water hard, being a summer boat. I enjoyed it all and sighed for more. I did not pay tribute to Neptune and am classed as a good sailor. Arrived Stonington at 5.30 Monday.

I shall never forget this trip. Have kept busy preaching, talking, laboring, and enjoying the Maine views. The rugged beauty of mountains, islands, shore and sea combined, is beyond my power of description. I doubt if the scenery from Bar Harbor to Stonington and Rockland can be surpassed.

I began preaching on the street here last night. Got out notices and went to work. Have met Elders George Knowlton and Henry Eaton, president and bishop's agent of this Western Maine District. Good crowd out and good liberty. The boys of the street yelled, "Maegregor has come back!" Expect to leave Saturday or Monday for Onset, New England reunion.

Plenty of good Saints, kind- and true-hearted, throughout this mission. Their hope and their all are in God and his work.

Yours fraternally,

JULY 26, 1911.

RICHARD S. SALYARDS.

Aylor-Head Debate.

Once upon a time, not many years ago, near Mathewson, Oklahoma, there lived a certain Christian preacher by the name of T. J. Head. In the same vicinity a grain buyer by the name of W. M. Aylor dwelt. Mr. Aylor had made no profession of religion, but upon hearing Reverend Head preach was thinking some of uniting with his church until a divinely authorized minister, Elder Joseph R. Lambert, came preaching the fullness of the gospel.

"My sheep hear my voice," and the grain buyer with his wife, together with several of Reverend Head's converts, united with the Church of Jesus Christ. It was a great and important ingathering to the church. Brother True and wife—still true and now living at Edmund, Oklahoma, H. K. Rowland and wife, who are no less true, and Brother Rowland is now presiding elder of the Piedmont Branch, and Elder W. M. Aylor, now in the front ranks of the missionary force, and his good wife now a happy homekeeper in Independence, Missouri.

To see the so-called "Mormons" gathering in of the very best people of the community raised the ire of Reverend Head, and he proceeded to nag and taunt the new converts, who were not yet able to defend themselves, and publicly he boasted of "spanking them."

The mills of the gods are said to grind slowly but exceedingly fine. Aylor has now returned the spanking compliment in his debate just closed at Ripley, Oklahoma, with this same Rev. T. J. Head, and the job was neatly and thoroughly done. It came about upon this wise: Our gospel planting in the village of Ripley ran counter to the strongest religious body of the town—ecclesiastical descendants of Alexander Campbell. They tried for three years to ignore our very presence in the town; but this did not work, and our numbers and prestige increased. Their local minister delivered himself of certain intermittent explosions against "Mormonism." Aylor and Head chanced to meet; Head refused to sign the usual church propositions, submitted a set in lieu thereof which also were not accepted. Following this Brother Aylor was accused of running away, boastful articles appeared in the local paper, containing mean flings about "Joe Smith," "Mormon apostles," and a mess of such contemptible and low grade of opposition. Replies to these in the same paper worked the people up to an intense desire to hear the differences debated. Their local minister refused to exchange pulpits in a friendly preaching investigation—in private letters referred to some of the Saints as "liars like so many of the brand"—boasted that if Aylor would sign the T. J. Head propositions "the Mormon oak in Ripley would fall to the dust from whence it came." Aylor signed.

Before an audience of several hundred people Mr. Head takes the floor in reply to the first affirmative: "Gentlemen moderators, ladies and gentlemen, we are here to learn more about the dear Son of God. I hope that every word I say may be prompted by the Holy Spirit. I am glad to meet my friend Aylor here, fresh from the school of the prophets. But he will have something to do here, for I am after him and Joe Smith and expect to make it hot for them," etc. "Wonder if he can give us chapter and verse for the name Joe Smith." He said Christ had only twelve apostles, but that we had hundreds, all told. Demanded a sign to demonstrate miraculous power and said if a blind man would come in he would have Aylor to heal him.

Upon the wall he had a great display of charts, apparently representing nearly a month's work in the preparation of them. Upon them were catch questions, running from number one up to one hundred and nine. Such as: "Where are the gold plates now?" "Was Jesus born at Jerusalem? Book of Mormon says that he was." "Have you as much faith in the Book of Mormon as you have in the Bible?" "Have you as much faith in Joe Smith as you have in Jesus Christ?" "Why did Joe select such a man as Brigham Young?" "Do the prophecies of your people always come true?" "Will Christ establish his kingdom at Independence, Missouri?" "Did Jesus give the keys of the kingdom to Joe Smith?" "Is the new gospel Joe Smith gave to the world essential to salvation?"

Mr. Head declared that when Aylor answered those questions each answer would promptly be placed upon the chart. The questions were answered by number in their order on the second night, but never an answer did Head put on the chart, though urgently reminded of his promise. Night after night his charts went down, also his argument, and his people's confidence. When in reply to the question about Brigham Young being called to the apostleship prior to his transgression, Brother Aylor urged the call of Judas as a parallel case, Head claimed that Christ had nothing to do with calling him, and that he was not set in the church because there was no church till Pentecost.

"Do you suppose Christ would call a devil?" he exclaimed. "Why, the church never had any such characters in it nor never will!" "What kind of a church would that be?"

He seems to have forgotten that the kingdom is like a net cast into the sea, gathering of every kind. It is needless to say how Aylor spoiled that little argument.

Thus through six nights of our affirmative the opposing arguments were spoiled and the affirmative was substantiated. The attendance was estimated at from three to seven and eight hundred people, a liberal majority of whom continually gave evidence nightly by applause and daily by expressions that Aylor was most successfully maintaining his position.

Some thought the tide would turn when the Christian Church went into the affirmative, but for them it soon proved to be a lost cause, and the completeness of their defeat became more and more apparent.

In their first affirmative speech Mr. Head set up his church at Jerusalem on May the 29th, A. D. 33, at 9 o'clock in the morning, with the eleven apostles of Matthew 10 as charter members. Said you could tell a Campbellite Bible by the finger marks in Acts second chapter. Argued that as a bride should be named after the bridegroom, therefore the new name of Isaiah 62, taking the name of Christ, should be the church of Christians. The reply was that the bride of Jesus Christ would take the name of her husband and would be the church of Jesus Christ and not Christian; and that Hepzibah was the new name of Isaiah 62.

After this first affirmative speech, in which our opponent tried to set up his church on Pentecost, etc., Aylor took the floor before that large and intensely interested congregation and said: "I have only one little objection to urge against the position of my opponent—in all that nice little speech he has made"—at this the people caught the idea that Aylor was not going to attempt to refute the argument, until he finished his sentence as follows: "The only little objection I have to my opponent's position is, that it is not true." This was greeted by a burst of applause which was at intervals renewed as Aylor proceeded to prove his assertion. He pointed out that in the second chapter of Acts there was no hint of a church having been organized on that day, and that the only mention of 9 o'clock in the morning was "that it was too early to get drunk."

The next night Head said: "I am surprised to hear a man repudiate the name of Christian, it is the same as repudiating Christ. It makes my poor heart ache. I would not say what this man has said for all the world."

The reply was: "I would not teach what this man is teaching for $5,000."

Head: "Heaven is at stake."

Aylor: "No, sir; in this proposition it is your church which is at stake."

Head: "How can he escape the damnation of hell? Hell is waiting for such teachers and some people will go to hell in spite of hell, and I thank God that the way is open."

Bible translations came up. Hebrews 6 of the Inspired Translation was paraded where King James' says leaving and the other says not leaving. Aylor pointed out the superiority of the latter rendering, and then introduced Alexander Campbell's translation on the "masculine son" of Revelation 12. Head endorsed the translation of Campbell and said it was the best in the English language, and challenged us to find any "nots" in it. But when in the reading, it was pointed out that Campbell had left out whole sentences of the sayings of Christ; claiming that Christ did not say them, Mr. Head dropped the translation question like a hot potato.

From Isaiah 11, Aylor proved that the Spirit of the Lord will finally so completely cover the earth as even to take possession of the animal kingdom, and as the scriptures prove, even subdue the wild beasts.

To this scripture Mr. Head's reply was in ridicule as follows: "It is news to me that hogs will receive the Holy Ghost. Who ever heard of a hog, a snake, and a lizard receiving the Holy Ghost? A hog baptized with the Holy Ghost! Why, Aylor, a jackass has the same kind of religion you have." (Applause by Head's people.)

Head: "When Aylor dies he wants to go to Joe Smith; when I die I want to go to Jesus Christ." A sickly applause followed that strong (?) logic and we felt that those who would applaud such were welcome to all the glory. Toward the last of the twelve nights the discussion centered upon the final abode of the righteous, the resurrection of the dead, etc., including Christ's mission to hell in preaching to the spirits in prison (1 Peter 3). Mr. Head affirmed that the resurrection of both the just and the unjust (John 5) would take place on the same day. That the Saints shall never inherit the earth, that the wicked do not go to hell until after they are resurrected, then they go to stay. Said we are now in the period mentioned as the thousand years' reign—that Satan is bound now is the inevitable conclusion. That Christ is never coming back to this world, only to gather his people (Christians, of course) and take them to heaven with him.

The forceful manner in which Brother Aylor brought out the plain teachings of the Bible on these points was so apparent to the people that it became really painful to note the abject severity and wretched completeness of our opponent's defeat. Our sympathy for them, in their dismal hour of darkness (spiritual and mundane, for the torches on their side, as an ill omen, also died out), our sympathy for them, I say, in this dismal plight, was somewhat mollified by the remembrance of their haughty boasts.

Near the close, Brother Aylor read a few snapshot notes, a part of which is as follows:

"His church in a Pennsylvania town, had its start you see, And he thinks it's Pentecost because it starts with P. His origin at Pentecost is just as clear as mud, But lets him down in Campbelltown with a sickly thud. They are as like the church of old as a raft is like a boat, As like the pattern there as a sheep is like a goat. They may have faith, we can not say, but it seems to grate and grind

To have us show the Bible faith, a very different kind. His doctrine and practice, too, is of a special kind, And not much like the pattern here they've left so far behind.

They practiced laying on of hands in the good old Bible day,

But Professor Head had surely said he'll do some other way. When Mr. Head was married, his bride stood by him ready To take the name of Head and not the name of Heady.

When Mr. Brown is married his bride's new name is Brown, But when the church is wedded Head swallows Christian down.

Jesus Christ is the bridegroom, then in celestial life The CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST will be his lawful wife. To-night we finish this debate, which now is nearly done, And here is the man of the boasting van who said he never run.

Mr. Head, we've had a lively bout, for the exercise we thank you,

And you'll behave when this is out or we'll again proceed to spank you."

That last session of the twelve nights' discussion was unquestionably a marvelous example of mastery over powers of darkness by the Spirit of the Lord. The spirit that had in a few former sessions associated with our opponent, failed to get to him in this effort, although he sought it desperately. Those who understand something of the spiritual forces will know full well unto whom all honor is due. Wisdom, glory, honor, and power are his, and we, each and all, may be his agents, his servants; and no man ever achieves a spiritual success without first recognizing these facts and applying to the fountain head in the Lord's own way for a personal supply of wisdom, knowledge, and spiritual excellence. This has been the secret (hidden from the world) of Brother Aylor's success, and is the secret to every worthy achievement.

Ohio.

While the clouds are gently distilling their gentle showers upon my canvas roof and refreshing the parched earth, enlivening the green foliage and making the sons of the soil glad, I will send you a few lines.

Bro. and Sr. N. L. Booker and myself are here holding tent meetings with marked success. The best people in the town are among our constant attendants. They are looking well to our physical needs, keeping our commissary filled with all the abundances of nature. To further show their appreciation on last Sunday they made a collection of $10.70.

Baptized three last Sunday and expect some others next Sunday. Many are deeply interested, some coming for fifteen miles. Last Sunday we had a good day of it, the Creola and Wellston Saints rendering some good assistance with the music, such as Saints can do when in possession of the soul inspiring Spirit. The feature of the day was the two intellectually and spiritually arousing sermons of Bro. A. B. Kirkendall, probate judge of this county. It made us feel justly proud to see him standing before such a large crowd of his constituency and so fearlessly and boldly defending the unpopular features of our mission, such as the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon. His election to the highest office in the county made him no less a Latter Day Saint. On the stand with the judge were five young high school graduates, all Saints, and the proficiency with which Sr. Edna Kriebel performed at the organ made the people sit up and admire that which they once thought was not worthy of consideration.

The brethren under my charge are quite active in their respective fields. Brethren Tucker, Burdick, Metcalf, Booker, and McConaughy have reported baptisms since last report already.

Calls are coming from all around for preaching, and it makes our hearts sad that they can not be filled. To my mind this is the most emphatic call for the Saints to be more diligent in paying their tithes and offerings.

I have propositions signed to meet the Utah Mormons in public debate at Wheeling, West Virginia, in the latter part of September. I was surprised when they signed the propositions. Are they not disobeying counsel in this, and liable to be brought under the lash for it? I also have propositions signed with a Campbellite, W. B. McVey, to come off as soon as we can decide upon the time and place. A letter from the Saints in Meigs County tells of a proposed debate with a Methodist there. So the fight is on and I am feeling happy in the midst of it.

Great preparations are being made for the reunion at Kirtland. We expect to make this an epoch in the gathering of the Saints at this historic place. Let all come who possibly can and bring the Good Spirit with them.

The National Convention for Social Purity is to meet in Columbus, Ohio, the last week in October. I expect to attend. If any of our social purity workers have any suggestions to offer I shall gladly receive them. There is a growing need for such an organization. Hope our church will take a forward step along these lines.

We are certainly enjoying ourselves in the camp, preaching the gospel to honest and eager listeners. I know of no better and more effectual way for the missionary's wife to make herself useful than in tent work with her companion. We have evidenced this fact the last two summers by having Sister Booker with us. We are expecting our minister in charge, Brother Russell, to join us any day, on his way from Kentucky to the reunion. We welcome him any time. His good-natured disposition makes it pleasant to associate with him.

The all absorbing theme in the Buckeye State at the present time is the making of a new constitution. We are especially interested in the two proposed measures, viz, prohibition and referendum. In the former lies the safety of our morals and in the latter the safety of the people's rights. We are glad to see the principle of socialism taking root in a great commonwealth like Ohio. Yet to be in the gospel of Jesus Christ is and should ever be the all absorbing theme.

You may register my vote, Mr. Editor, for sending out such men as Brethren Rushton, Evans, and Williams as special revivalists. Everyone in the church is a specialist in some line of work. Why not each one learn where he is best fitted and humbly work therein to the glory of God.

WILLOUGHBY, OHIO.

F. J. EBELING.

Denmark.

Wife and I left home and loved ones July 8 and arrived in this city on the morning of the 23d, after a very pleasant passage both across the Atlantic and the North Sea. As we went on board the Carmania, of the Cunard Line, at New York, we were happy to find Brother and Sister May, also Brn. G. T. Griffiths, R. Baldwin, and Brother Thomas, whose company was much appreciated during the eight days that we were gliding over the mighty deep. They all left us at Fishguard, a port on the coast of Wales, to enter upon their work in Great Britain.

From there on to Liverpool, and by rail across England and by steamer from that port to Esbjerg, Denmark, and then by rail to this city, none but strange faces were seen. It may well be perceived that we were pleased to meet Brn. P. Muceus and C. Lindbaum at the railway station here, they having come expecting our arrival, after having looked for us in vain the previous day. We went to the home of the latter for a little cleaning up, and partook of refreshments. It being Sunday, we spent the rest of the day resting, and visited Bro. A. Rasmussen and his good lady in the afternoon, and attended service in the evening.

As to the outlook for the work, I will not say much at this time, as I have not as yet had time to fully take in the situation. One thing, however, is certain, we can not accomplish much here without means. We need a suitable hall for our services and we need tracts, all of which take money. Even notices of our meetings in the newspapers must be paid for.

Sister Hansen seems to like this, to her, new country and city quite well, and we hope to be remembered by the Saints in the homeland, trusting that we may hear from our friends now and then.

Our address is Ravnsborgade 5. IS., Copenhagen, Denmark. Brother Muceus expects to leave in a few days for Sweden and Norway.

In gospel bonds,

H. N. HANSEN.

COPENHAGEN, DENMARK, July 26, 1911.

Kansas.

From my viewpoint things are on the upward tendency. The Saints, as a rule, are all willing to do what they can to forward the work. Our greatest difficulty is, so much to be done and so few to do the work. Surely the saying is true in our district, "The harvest is great and the laborers few," "and we pray the Lord of the vineyard to send more laborers into the field."

In May, I made an effort in Arcadia, Kansas. Brn. Ephraim Ross and John Jenkins rented the opera house. The preacher had splendid liberty in presenting the word of truth. Good was done. Some are near the kingdom.

In the first part of June I attended a conference at Fairland, Oklahoma, and it was a splendid conference. Business meetings, social meetings, and preaching services were of a very high order. All attending pronounced it one among the best held in the district. Apostle J. F. Curtis presided, gave good counsel, and preach to the upbuilding of the Saints. Also Brn. T. W. Chatburn and Henry Sparling did splendidly.

From this conference the writer and Brother Sparling went to Scammon, Kansas, in order to pitch the district tent, to commence our summer campaign. Through the kindness of Brother McCall, the tent was brought from Columbus, Kansas, and it was erected ready for meetings. The brothers and sisters of Scammon Branch did all in their power to make the meeting a success. We had a good hearing in the main, and during the meeting we baptized Sister Pender, the mother of our well known Bro. W. S. Pender.

One sad accident occurred while our meeting was in progress. Brother Sparling became very sick, so seriously that he had to go home, and this left the writer to do all the preaching. The hot and dry weather made it very hard on one man.

The tent will not be used till after our reunion in Pittsburg, which is from August 11 to 20. After this date there are several places the tent will go, and I would like to ask all the Saints in the district if you see where good can be done by having some preaching.

Please drop me a line to my home address, 103 East Adams avenue, Pittsburg, Kansas. I will attend to it as soon as I can.

For the truth,

J. ARTHUR DAVIS.

News From Branches.

Providence, Rhode Island.

Fear thrusts the pen in my hand lest I be called a slothful correspondent, so I send you a few items of interest from Little Rhody, to tell its many friends of things past and present, also little glimpses of the future which are casting shadows before, and optimistically I see clouds roll away.

We miss our dear Brother and Sister Spinnett and Brother and Sister Joy, who found pleasure working for the Master. "Memorials earth can not decay." Buffalo will be enriched with such material. We wish them godspeed. The spirit of unrest is beckoning our young to the beach, the mountains, a few to the home of Evangeline, perhaps to meet their Gabriel? Old Sol is triumphing in all his glory, and we would like to ask him to be more gentle in displaying such power, but he is deaf to our cries and shines (burns) on.

Perhaps the reunion at Onset, Massachusetts, will have more guests this year, owing to unfavorable conditions in heated cities. If so be, we can say, "All things work together for good to those that love the Lord." July 6 we held our branch business meeting, which resulted in the continued pastorate of our esteemed brother, J. D. Suttill; first priest, Edmund Brown; first teacher, Herman Ghellin; deacons, Adolph Leckney, George Robley, jr., and our venerable Brother Gondolf, who has served faithfully these many years. If honor is given to him who serveth, bring forth your laurel and lay it at their feet, for there are many.

The Saints' Aid presented to the branch five new chairs which were greatly appreciated, as they were both artistic in design, which is always pleasing, and needful. Three are for the rostrum and two for the communion table. This was the result of concentrated effort of the few. Last week we had the pleasure of meeting Sr. Louise Geisch, of Independence. We feel quite safe in assuring their home friends they will have a pleasant visit under the chaperonage of Bro. E. Fox, who gives a welcome hand of hospitality to the tourist. We are now looking for Brother and Sister Bond of Independence. Come quick. Warm hearts are waiting to greet you. Hark, methinks I hear wedding bells, somewhere on the Hudson (street) and the music has a contagious symphony.

We have some vacant seats that have not been mentioned, but if the occupants only knew how we miss them, knew of the hungry feeling we have to see them again heart to heart, soul to soul, want them to surely, they would come back. Ties of past years, in association through varied conditions, can not be broken, and the straining leaves aches that only the balm of reconciliation can heal. "Why should the spirit of mortal be proud?" We are human and very earthly is the why. But a time is coming when we shall see eye to eye. Oh! welcome time. Lonely hearts beat loudly, and God hears the music. As we look back over the past year, we see that not only elements have their seasons, but our lives have also. The springtime of hopes and aspirations, which is well. Then a dearth, from varied seasons. The heat of trial, which causes lassitude, drooping, sometimes from lack of sympathy. Then close on is the chilling frost, which robs us of the spiritual life. "Unkind criticism," and not having sufficient faith, the winter (world) takes them in its cold embrace and the pitiful result is death (spiritual). But we will not forget that sometime there is going to be a glorious resurrection, and then no more chill of being misunderstood, no blasted hopes, no neglect, but life in Him abundantly.

151 CASS STREET.

Des Moines Items.

That which has caused as much general rejoicing among Saints and sinners in this vicinity as anything else could, is the generous rainfall of last Sunday evening.

The strike of the street car men developed some very peculiar representations of human nature in its distorted condition: While the strikers kept themselves under excellent control, and made a consistent effort to settle the difficulties, the manager of the street car company refused every effort made toward settlement. It is now assumed that there was something behind and beyond the slight difficulty that seemed to be the bone of contention, and it was the something not seen that caused the real difficulty. The company did not show confidence in their fellow-men, or they would have been glad to arbitrate rather than to incur such an expense as they have done. The city, in behalf of the people, filed an injunction against both the company and the strikers, and that injunction was sustained by the judge, and both parties submitted, so that street cars are again running. The strike affected the attendance at the services Sunday.

A two-week series of tent meetings closed last Sunday night week. The next day Bro. E. A. Davis, who had assisted, was called home on account of his wife's death. While there was some good done, yet had there been the united support given the missionaries that could and should have been given, it is sure that much more of good would have been done. Evil surmising, and lack of the spirit of peace had its discouraging effects, and repulsed the people rather than led them to God. Preceding the tent meetings, Brother Davis held a week of cottage or lawn meetings, and this week an effort is being made to reach the people in a similar way.

Bro. S. M. Reiste passed through the city last Friday from his home to labor near Garwin, where he is engaged in an interesting series of services.

The peculiar and continued illness of the writer's wife has prevented him doing the active labor desired, and for the present the prospect for a speedy relief is not bright.

Business meeting last Monday night was quite well attended, some present who never attend night services at the church. It was very apparent that some special influences had been at work, but we can not say that these influences were manifest as a result of "prayer and much faith," on the part of those who exercised it,— that is to be known at a later time. We hope, however, that some good will follow the work done. The election of branch officials resulted in the selection of Elder O. Salisbury, president; C. F. Merrill, priest; George E. Davis, teacher; and Fred Chandler, deacon; with Sr. Orpha Emslie, clerk.

A late letter from Sr. Lenore Christy informs us that she had been at Torreon, Mexico, visiting with the missionaries there, and while there had been very sick. She found Brother Pender and Sister Mannering sadly afflicted, which had been a great hindrance to the work there for the present.

The lecture of Ex-Senator Frank J. Cannon at the commencement exercises of Highland Park College last Thursday night, on the Modern Mormon Kingdom, was a severe arraignment of present conditions in the Mormon church, and of Joseph P. Smith, its president, in particular. His words were tinged with considerable bitterness of feeling and sarcasm. He suggested that the prosecution of polygamists should be put under the Federal Government, and that anyone who was a traitor to the laws of the country should not be permitted to make laws for a free people.

No good can come to that people by an expression of bitterness, or in the spirit of hatred, neither can any good come to this church, for the Lord has said most emphatically that "no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care." Following forgiveness is a kindly spirit to the one whom we consider is out of the way. We must forgive the member of the church who shall rob, steal, lie, or commit any offense against the law of the land, but even should we forgive we are required by the law of God to deliver them up to the law of the land, as proven by section 42 of Doctrine and Covenants. Or, as the instruction is found in section 64, we must "forgive all men," yet if we forgive our brethren, we are required to deliver them up to the church, or "bring him before the church and do with him as the Scriptures saith unto you." We are to do this "not because we forgive not, having not compassion, but that ye may be justified in the eyes of the law, that ye may not offend him who is your lawgiver." It should not be construed that because one is not permitted to be exempt from the just penalty of the law, that they have not forgiven them, neither should it be construed that a person is not forgiven because they are not permitted to occupy as high positions in the church as they did before the sin was committed, because the "bird with a broken pinion will never rise as high again." There may be some honorable exceptions to this rule, but this is the rule, as can be proven by the revelations of God in the instances of some of those whom he has forgiven, but never permitted them to occupy the same position they once did.

Charles Derry and C. E. Butterworth, patriarchs; Bishop C. J. Hunt; A. Carmichael or P. B. Blair for church publications, with local field workers are expected. Magnolia, though a small town, will do her very best to make it pleasant, on high, historic ground. May the reunion prove very enjoyable. Advise us far in advance, if you will, of your coming and your needs. Alma M. Fyrando, Secretary, Magnolia, Iowa.

The Western Nebraska and Black Hills reunion will be held at Bayard, Nebraska, from September 15 to September 25 inclusive. Those wishing tents should notify the chairman of committee not later than August 20. Meals will be served on the grounds, also a rest room will be fitted up with a store for the benefit of those having children, or any others who may feel the need of it.

The number of bedsteads and cots will perhaps be limited, but hay will be furnished both for bedding and horses. Those expecting to camp should bring bedding with them. Meals, hay and tents will be furnished free, and the committee will meet the expenses from contributions, which should be sent to Bert E. Hart, Bayard, Nebraska. Any provisions for the kitchen which you can conveniently bring will help to lessen the expenses. The camp grounds will be about one fourth mile north of depot, right up the main street. Anyone desiring should write chairman when you will come and some one will meet you at depot. Apostle J. W. Wight has promised to be with us, also those of the appointed missionary force who can will be in attendance; so we feel safe in assuring good speakers. The Saints in this mission but seldom have the chance of meeting with each other, so let us take this occasion to meet together for ten days of recreation, social enjoyment, and spiritual improvement. Bert E. Hart, Bayard, Nebraska, Chairman.

Two-Day Meeting.

A two-day meeting will be held by the Hillman Branch September 2 and 3. All those desiring to attend, notify Mel Starks, Hillman, Michigan, R. F. D. 1, Box 38. Those who do not have time to notify him will be met at Lewiston on Friday, September 1, at noon. No other train will be met at that place. Others will be met at Hillman.

Very sincerely yours,
J. C. GOODMAN.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

By Frederick M. Smith, Secretary.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, August 7, 1911.

Translation Fund.

By the action of the last General Convention of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society, the general society pledged the sum of $500 to assist in the work of translating the Book of Mormon into one foreign language other than the German.

It has now been two years since the translation fund movement has been agitated, but upon the completion of the German edition, and we may here state that the German translation is now in circulation, the General Convention expressed itself in favor of continuing along this line of work, and as before stated, pledged its support financially to the extent of $500.

This gives the Religians one more opportunity in a line of work in which we have been interested in the past.

Since the church was first organized there has been no such systematic study of this book as there has in the last ten years under the direction of the Religio. The society has done much in the past, and using the success of the past as a basis to work upon, we predict a sure success. The Religio has always made good heretofore in what they have undertaken, and this is another chance they have now given them, and we fully expect Religians the world over to make good the pledge of the General Convention.

It is the idea of the executive committee to use the Arena department in the Autumn Leaves as the medium through which this appeal shall be made to all Religians, as this is their official organ of publication.

At the close of the year's work in raising this amount of money, the names of those that have contributed either individually or as local organizations, will be published in Autumn Leaves.

We expect to enlist the aid of presidents and secretaries of districts and stake organizations, field workers and ministers in general charge in accomplishing our work, and anyone who asks them as to the action of the General Convention in this matter, will be furnished with the details of the matters transacted there.

The special date set for the raising of this pledge is November 25, 1911, and we earnestly hope that on or before this time we shall hear from you favorably as to the progress you are making in raising money toward this fund.

Faithfully yours,
 J. A. GUNSOLLEY, President.
 J. A. GARDNER, Treasurer.

BRAINY DIET

It is astonishing to see the great army of nervous people at the present day—and why? It requires Phosphate, Air, and Water to replace nerve energy that is used daily. If I should ask you, What do you eat that contains Phosphate, perhaps it would puzzle you for a moment.

Ellis Short, James M. Kelley, and George H. Hilliard were appointed to solicit subscriptions for said increase.

Parties desiring stock, address Jackson County Bank, Independence, Missouri. Shares $100 each, to be paid for on or before September 15, or as nearly that date as possible. Ellis Short, for Committee.

Mr. Farmer:

Has it occurred to you that while the drought has materially affected your crops and income this year, that the crops and income of the farmers of irrigated land in the Big Horn Basin of Wyoming and Yellowstone Valley of Montana are not so affected?

In view of this, don't you owe it to yourself and those dependent upon you to at least look into and read up on this matter? Or, better still, go out and see the advantages this country offers you?

The center of the Basin is less than forty hours from Omaha, and homeseekers' excursions leave Omaha every first and third Tuesdays. Why not go out with me on the next excursion? I will introduce you to the farmers and you can hear what they have to say about conditions there. I am employed by the railroad and my services cost you nothing whether you buy or not.

OPENING OF THE CHILDREN'S HOME.

The formal opening of the Children's Home at Lamoni, Iowa, occurred Tuesday, August 15. The home is now ready to receive the children. The rooms as present arranged can accommodate about thirty-five. Everything is neat and up-to-date. Bro. and Sr. W. P. Robinson are installed in charge as superintendent and matron. Sr. B. C. Smith, of Independence was in charge of the opening services, which were attended by a very large crowd of people. The following program was rendered: Opening song by the junior choir of Lamoni; prayer by Elder H. A. Stebbins; opening address by Sr. B. C. Smith; address by Sister Walker; quartet; address by Bishop E. L. Kelley; song by the congregation; benediction by Elder J. R. Lambert.

SAINTS FOUND A CITY.

The Los Angeles Daily Times for August 7 contains an interesting write up of the camp meeting in session at Manhattan, California. Five hundred members were in the colony. We make the following extract from this article:

A tract of land of fifteen acres was purchased by the Latter Day Saints of the Southern California District a year ago and plans were at once commenced, part of which have been perfected for making a permanent model camp meeting grounds and a summer resort where people of the organization might form a summer colony.

With this idea five acres were reserved for the cafeteria, auditorium, and other buildings for general purposes and the remainder of the acreage sold off for summer homes. A company known as the Southern California District Land and Improvement Company was incorporated at $10,000, and extensive improvements made in the way of streets, the piping of water, planting of trees and so forth. The land has been graded, streets laid out and oiled and cement sidewalks built.

At present there is a gospel tent, forty by eighty feet for the meetings and a smaller tent for other meetings, thirty by fifty feet. In a large building, thirty by sixty feet, seating 150 persons, an up-to-date cafeteria is conducted. . . .

Ranged along the streets of the camp grounds are about fifty tents occupied by those attending the reunion, which is the nineteenth annual meeting of the Southern California district of the church, the correct name of which is Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Although Latter Day Saints, the church officials emphatically deny any affiliation with Utah Mormonism and are aggressive in their attacks upon this branch established by Brigham Young with which polygamy started.

The improvements planned for the camp grounds for next summer are elaborate. A large pavilion with a seating capacity of 750 will be erected on a natural amphitheater which overlooks the ocean. The grading for this building has been done and the pavilion will be completed next summer at a cost of $5,000. The improvement of the grounds, including the grading, installation of water system, planting of trees and laying out of streets, which are curbed and have cement sidewalks, has been done at a cost of $10,000. These improvements have been made by the land company which is composed of men of the church. The money was secured from the sale of the lots. . . .

In addition to the camp site, the organization has secured thirty feet of ocean frontage and here plan to build a bath house for the use of the colony. Tennis courts and similar amusements will be arranged for by next summer for the use of the young people of the church. . . .

A number of pretty cottages have been built by members of the church and many more are planned to go up within the next year.

A TIMELY AND PLEASANT VISIT.

By information of the Cameron, Missouri, Chautauqua officers, Bishop R. C. Evans, on the 5th of August, delivered his justly celebrated lecture sermon, "From the Cradle to the Grave." We are told that the weather was fine, the audience was large, and the bishop's lecture was well received, attentively listened to, and commented on favorably. At the close of the sermon he was given a reception lasting something like an hour, in which he was introduced to many of the celebrities attending the Chautauqua, including Governor Hanley of Indiana.

This lecture was delivered on Saturday, and on Sunday Bishop Evans preached twice at the Saints' chapel at Cameron, and by invitation went to Saint Joseph on Sunday afternoon. He spent an evening and a night with the Saints there, and on Monday, the 6th, came to us at our home at Independence, reaching us about noon. He spent the rest of the day with us, and on Tuesday visited a number of the Saints at Independence, taking lunch with the family of Pres. F. M. Smith, and dinner with Sunday school superintendent, D. J. Krahl, and family. He left us on Wednesday morning, about noon, feeling well, was to visit two or three parties in Kansas City, to be present at their prayer service, and thence on to the reunion at Chatham, then on to Toronto.

The editor-in-chief feels much pleased that he was granted the opportunity of greeting this indefatigable servant of the Master, and spending a few hours with him. He presented to us the same sunny temperament and loving interest in the work and his brethren, that has been so long an attractive feature of his intercourse with the Saints. We notice that he has been taking on flesh, and we can not now greet him with the eastern salutation, "May your shadow never be less," without remembering that he is a Welshman, and is likely as age creeps on to become corpulent. He has the same sunny smile and pleasant laugh as of old. We believe his visit to Missouri has done good.

Bro. F. M. Smith is to be present at the Maysville Chautauqua on the 19th. We hope he will receive a characteristic welcome, though we remember having spent two rather uncomfortable days at this same Maysville Chautauqua, booked to deliver a temperance lecture, and then by either careless or mistaken management on the part of those having charge of that part of the program, we were restricted to less than twenty minutes of time. This, however, we improved to the best of our judgment, taking things good naturedly, of course.

It was at this Chautauqua that we had the pleasure—or misfortune—to hear the Rev. Sam Jones greatly to our disappointment. The secretary of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, under the auspices of whose invitation we were present at that Chautauqua, apologized quite pleasantly about the shortness of time allotted to us, her apology being based upon the thought, as expressed by her, practically, that they did not know what the lecturer would say, but being pleased with what he did say, they were sorry that they had not given him more time. We accepted the apology, and the matter passed into an episode.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

PROPOSED DEBATE IN LONDON.—Brn. Fligg and Henley have been having an interesting time in their street services on Market Square, London, Canada. One W. Madison Hicks, Baptist, hailing from Australia, who has also been doing street preaching there, has challenged our brethren to debate with him, this through the Free Press. Brother Fligg, through the same medium, at once accepted the challenge, but we have not been informed as to the result. Brother Fligg wrote that they had aroused a good interest by their street work.

REORGANIZED CHURCH VERSUS SALOONS.—Not long ago there was up for consideration before the city council of Independence, Missouri, a number of proposed licenses for saloons. The applications had been referred to a committee of three, Bro. B. J. Scott being one of them. Brother Scott brought in a minority report that the applicants had failed to get the required number of signers, the other two claiming otherwise. After a sharp discussion the report of the majority was adopted, Brother Scott giving notice that he would carry the matter into the circuit court. We have noticed nothing further in regard to this matter, but wish to commend Brother Scott for his fight to have the law lived up to. Latter Day Saints have a reputation for standing always for anything which will tend to curb the saloon interests.

We are in receipt of a copy of the Caldwell (Idaho) Tribune for August 11, in which appears a communication from Bro. S. D. Condit, setting out the differences between our church and the Utah church, with a brief history of the church. Brethren Condit and Madden are preaching on the streets of Caldwell.

AN INTERESTING DISCUSSION.—What was on the first tables of stone given to Moses on Sinai—what was on the second? Does the term law refer only to the ten commandments; and does the phrase carnal commandments refer only to the decalogue? Is the term ceremonial law justifiable? Are the ten commandments a part of the gospel? All these questions have been canvassed in the official organ of the General Sunday School Association during the last six months, in a discussion between Elder F. B. Farr, of the missionaries, and Mrs. Anna Salyards, editor of the Gospel Quarterly, and of the Lessons Department of the Sunday School Exponent. There may be some who have not followed this interesting series, who would enjoy reading the closing articles. The Exponent for September contains the finals of the writers with their summaries, from which the reader may gather a very good general idea of what the writers have been discussing, also some of the merits of the same. Of this issue there are a limited number of extra copies for sale which may be had at five cents each from the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. The price of the Exponent is fifty cents per year, in advance, for single copies; four to six copies under one wrapper to the same post-office, 40 cents each; seven or more under one wrapper to same office, 35 cents each. The Exponent is thus available to individuals, or to Sunday schools that wish to supply their teachers and officers with their official paper, similarly and for the same price they pay for the Hope for the children.

No life is so strong and complete, but it yearns for the smile of a friend.—Wallace Bruce.

XIII.—THE RESURRECTION.

GOMER R. WELLS.

Assuming for the moment that the theory of evolution is correct, we wish to ask, Does man now represent the highest development? Has evolution done all it can do for him? Is there no higher phase to be evolved?

In answer to this, the most enthusiastic evolutionist would neither say that mortal man represents the highest development nor that evolution has exhausted its powers. Such a thought is a stranger to that wonderful scientific theory.

The operation of blind law in the development of species by natural selection and survival of the fittest knew nothing of intellectual aspirations, in the lower forms of life. The lower animals knew no such thing as hope or spiritual anticipation; had no capacity for spiritual food; and therefore knew no demand for immortality.

But in the genus homo, the highest and latest specimen, evolution claims to have produced a creature that can originate thoughts and act beyond that taught it by a trainer or instructor—something a mere animal can not do. There are spiritual aspirations and appetites, for which food must be provided. Yes, "man is a religious animal and the greatest thing he is thinking about is religion." Here is an animal that projects its thought into the great future and seeks for an answer to the question, Does death end all?

Having brought him so far along the path of eternal development, can evolution provide the food demanded? All physical appetites and needs have been provided for—why not the intellectual and spiritual?

If it can not furnish this latest demand, then it fails lamentably. Can evolution take us no farther than the grave? Oh, why did it make us mortal, plant within us the desire for immortality, and then leave that demand unsupplied? Echo answers while the materialist stands dumb, probably trying in vain to evolve an answer.

But soon we hear a new voice. It comes from among that class of weak-kneed theologians who have evolved into "Christian evolutionists"; that class of Christian scholars who accept the theory of evolution but have the God of the Bible directing all the processes and supplying all the missing links.

Those professors have an idea that civilized man represents the highest type in the material line of development. But, as progression knows no limit, evolution's next step in advancement will be to spiritualize this man; to evolve an immortal being. You see, bodily development is regarded as complete.

The physical form will remain unchanged. Man will now develop in spirit, in mind. That evolution is now going on within him.

They lean heavily on the psychical teaching that mind is master; that it can reach out and conquer the material universe. It takes hold of electricity and performs marvels; and it will as easily take hold of the occult forces and discover new relations and correspondencies and environments. Can not the Hindu adept concentrate his mental powers on a wire nail until the vibrations of his thought force disintegrates its form? Or can not he change the vibratory conditions in a pair of linked straps so that they actually pass through each other?

What is it, they argue, that mind can not do? Does it not by concentrating its thought force alleviate pain or disease? Surely, it will be able to evolve for itself an immortal body.

We are asked to believe that the spiritual man is now in the making; and that thought force will be the main factor in the evolution of mortal flesh cells into spiritual matter, with immortal life cells. A new type will in time be evolved and that will be the immortal species.

Just here a great controversy arises. Many assert that this new type already exists. Some claim to have seen them. Bible testimony shows that this "species" was actually produced some two thousand years ago, when many bodies of the saints which slept, arose and went into the city of Jerusalem and appeared unto many after the resurrection of Jesus the Christ who was the first of this new type of man. (See Matthew 27: 52, 53.) This was not done by the gradual processes of evolution, but by the direct act of creative power.

Hence, we see that in reference to immortality by evolution's processes, we are again back on the old ground of controversy: That not by evolution but by direct creative acts Jehovah made the various species (leaving room for selection to produce variations in classes and families); and that after the first voluntary creative acts, he placed them all under the unchangeable law, kind producing its kind, to which law no evolutionist has ever known an exception.

Similarly, the resurrection will be a second grand demonstration of divine power; a direct creative act as far as the body is concerned. Each new immortal body is to be fitted for the powers or spiritual capacity previously developed by the intelligent, conscious spirit that awaits its bodily counterpart. This immortal being is to be placed in an environment suited to it, viz: in celestial, terrestrial, or telestial glory, as previous development of character may call for.

We believe that the most practical kind of evolution is the development of character—fit for a purer, higher organization of body, — man's privilege through the new birth of spiritual life offered by the Christ (John 3: 3-5). The preparing of the body immortal can be done only by the same power that first made it. And He has the right to lay down the laws governing preparation. The interesting question is, Are those processes or laws discovered by evolutionists or revealed in the religion of Jesus Christ?

Even if evolution could produce a new immortal species upon this earth, that new product would be out of harmony with its environment. There must be correspondence with environment. A new earth would have to be evolved, or the new man must seek other spheres in which to dwell and there illustrate the still higher wonders of evolutionary process; thus abandoning his mother earth to a worn out existence and leaving his less fortunate brothers to grovel in mortality, hoping, yearning, praying for deliverance, but doomed to despair.

That is exactly what evolution's God has done for the lower animals that man has left behind. Dare we hope that the cold, selfish, Napoleonic principle of "survival of the fittest" would act any different could it select a few of the fittest to form the new spiritual species? Such brotherhood; such a fatherhood!

Can evolution give us the new environment? The earth is growing older all the time. Its powers to support mortal life are not everlasting. The Bible declares the earth will "wax old as a garment." It is only a question of time when all the coal and oil and plant food from which we derive our bodily support will be exhausted. This is surely self-evident. With all life extinct, what could evolution do with inert matter? Evolve a new earth? What can it do with a dead planet? Probably as much as with a dead human body.

Alas! the theory requires an a priori before it sets to work. It never could begin to do anything for humanity until the Creator made cells endowed with life. Evolution can not go back of life. Where there is no antecedent life, its occupation is gone.

The Author of life endowed nature with organized forms, furnished the material, the motive power, and the intelligence. The fertile brain of one of his creatures, man, furnishes theories of life and development—evolution among the rest.

We risk too much; we lend our minds to blind credulity indeed when looking to evolution for light and comfort and hope concerning the new creation; concerning the redemption of our bodies from mortality and corruption and disease to immortal life on a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.

The Creator of life has produced us; that is self-evident. Why is it not reasonable to believe that only that same power can remodel and cleanse the earth and revive man to live upon it for ever?

Those who prefer the one miracle in creation to the many miracles of evolution, will also prefer the one miracle of the resurrection to the theory of immortality by evolution, with a heartless leaving behind in mortal flesh of the vast majority of mankind.

And not only that, but in the resurrection promised by the Author of revealed religion, there is more beauty in the simple fact of the development of character as a condition to the highest glory than in the theory of the evolution of highest species through supposed psychic powers, merely passing from one state of matter to another without moral purpose or character development.

Under the gospel law, not only will the fittest survive, but in the exercise of marvelous love, wisdom and justice, Jesus Christ "by the grace of God" tasted death for every man. As long as the grave holds one of earth's mortal children, the work of redemption is not complete—not one is left behind.

"As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive,"—but "every man in his own order;" according to character fitness. We prefer this to the theory that leaves behind the unfortunate weak, abandoned to everlasting corruption and despair in a worn out planet, black and dead as night.

In rejecting evolution, we are not committed to the thought that the resurrection is opposed to any natural law, or unscientific in its operation. It is too early yet to discuss the modus operandi of that which will be plain enough when it is accomplished. But it is not presumptuous to assert that though death is temporary, the association of matter and spirit, as the combination exists in the body of man, was not intended to be a temporary partnership. As naturally as other elements were combined, such as air, water, etc., and just as naturally as they reunite when separated, even so is it as natural, and in that sense scientific, for spirit matter to reunite with earth matter in the resurrection,—with this difference: that, by keeping out the disintegrating germs that produce death, the new association will be everlasting. It was so intended by original design in creation. All the forces of hell can not prevent kindred elements reuniting.

David understood it when he said, "I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness."—Psalm 17: 15. Not when he leaves his body for ever and goes up to glory.

Job declared: "All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come."—14: 14. The term wait implies consciousness, which could not be said of inert matter such as a rock or a post. This waiting does not necessarily mean misery or unhappiness; neither does it commit us to the idea that a spirit is complete without its body.

Jude refers to certain angels who "kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation." Whether this refers to spirits who could have inhabited earth bodies according to the plan of creation, and who by their own volition took a course by which they were debarred from doing so, we will not say. However, the language of Jesus regarding the desire of evil spirits for expression per medium of living flesh is quite plain:

If I with the finger of God cast out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come unto you. . . . When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest; and finding none, he saith, I will return unto my house whence I came out. And when he cometh, he findeth it swept and garnished. Then goeth he, and taketh to him seven other spirits more wicked than himself; and they enter in, and dwell there: and the last state of that man is worse than the first.—Luke 11: 20-26.

The disembodied spirits seek bodies not so much because they are wicked, but because they were made for to tabernacle in a body of flesh; they are not complete without an organ through which they can express themselves and come into closer touch with this material world. By previous acts of rebellion they perhaps forfeited the privilege of having bodies of their own, but they seek it nevertheless. They can not enter a human body unless the person, the ego who is there by prior right, gives up his agency to such intruder; or unless he acts in such a way towards his Maker that he has no protection and becomes a prey to evil influences.

Agency is free to act in its own sphere; God does not interfere with it. "To whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are."—Romans 6: 16. If evil spirits could not get human bodies they would accept that of pigs, if allowed to occupy, so great is their desire for association and expression through living flesh. In Mark 5: 1-17 we read of the destruction of swine from this very cause. Their bodies not being of a high enough order to make expression possible, disaster resulted to those dumb brutes, which under the law was forbidden to the Jews.

Paul recognized (2 Corinthians 5: 1-4) that his spirit without its body would be "unclothed"; but with its house from heaven it would be clothed with immortal flesh. He said we are "waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our bodies."—Romans 8: 23. Of the reality of this great redemption, he said God had given "the earnest of the Spirit." (Ephesians 1: 13, 14; 2 Corinthians 1: 21, 22.) In what way? What is an "earnest"?

To illustrate: A man bargains for a piece of land and pays a hundred dollars down as a deposit. That is an earnest, to show that he intends to complete the purchase. Similarly, the Creator has promised to save us from disaster into which the misuse of man's agency has plunged him; he is going to redeem our bodies from destruction and bring us up alive in the resurrection, to inherit a redeemed earth, which is "the redemption of the purchased possession."

One of the objects of giving the Spirit to his children is to assure them of the reality of that promise. As it were, he gives a hundred dollars down, as a first installment, as an earnest to show us that he means business and will complete the contract. In other words, he gives us a foretaste of the resurrection by allowing us to experience its power in our own bodies, and in our hearts; or witness it in the bodies and the lives of others, who have made covenant with him.

This is realized partially in one of the "signs" which Jesus said were to follow the believer of the gospel message in all the world (Mark 16: 16-18). "They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." The prime object was not, as some would infer, to establish a divine healing hospital to dispense physical benefits to mankind or satisfy morbid curiosity to "see signs." It is a demonstration of the resurrection power, to confirm the words of promise, and establish the believer upon a rock against which the gates of hell can not prevail.

And there is another feature: By the gift of the Spirit, in obedience to the terms of the gospel of life, comes an assurance planted in the soul of the believer which enables him to accept the doctrine of the resurrection intelligently. He comprehends it as a reasonable and necessary condition.

Job had this assurance when he declared: "I know that my Redeemer liveth," though He had not yet been born in the flesh. John the Revelator had it and all the power of fiendish persecution could not make him deny it. He was banished to the lonely Isle of Patmos, where the testimony was further strengthened when he was "in the Spirit on the Lord's day." Thousands of the early Saints went to the stake or suffered horrible deaths, rejoicing in or singing about the same testimony.

This was kept up until a mere remnant was left and the church was driven into the wilderness for twelve hundred and sixty prophetic days, and an usurper set up in her place devoid of the Spirit. In the restoration of the gospel in these days, there came again the ancient gifts and blessings, among which was this same earnest, and many Saints of latter days have suffered persecution, been forced from their homes and some have died for the sake of such a testimony.

To teach, as some do, that the spirit of man will be supremely happy and in its eternal inheritance as soon as death releases it, is opposed to scripture and experience. To escape from a decrepit or pain racked mortal body is not to be altogether satisfied. It has been quite fashionable to engrave on the tombstones of such: "Oh death, where is thy sting? oh grave, where is thy victory?" As long as the grave holds prisoner the decayed bodies of the Saints, it certainly has the victory, and every cemetery bears mute testimony to the location of that victory.

A fuller reading gives this light:

So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. Oh death, where is thy sting? Oh grave, where is thy victory?—1 Corinthians 15: 54, 55.

David's testimony shows that he could not have been satisfied with the modern teaching on this point, as already quoted. Though the time of waiting for the redemption of the body be a peaceful waiting for those who died in Christ, yet it is not full enjoyment. The fullness of glory comes only through the resurrection. Does not the spirit cling tenaciously to life with the body and shrink from death (separation) from it? It prefers life to death, except when dementia renders it incapable.

The promise of life from the grave has been welcomed by all right thinking men in all ages. Death is unnatural; it is an intruder. Man has become inured to many things in the course of time; but some six thousands of years have not been sufficient to inure him to this universal reaper, death. Its reign is temporary. It is to be "abolished." As far as demonstrating the possibility and the practicability of its removal, it has already been abolished (2 Timothy 1: 10).

Take this promise of immortality out of the gospel of Christ, and the best part is gone. What would religion be without it?

Paul's hope was that there would be a resurrection of all men; of the unjust as well as the just (Acts 24: 13-15). Yet he recognized that there would be individuality and diversity of character in the resurrected state. He comprehended by spiritual insight or revelation that there will be consistency and harmony with environment, according to the character of the individual. Just as there is diversity of flesh whether of fish, fowl, beast or man, so in the resurrection.

There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial; but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another. There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead. . . . It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body—but, as he says in the twenty-third verse, "every man in his own order."

Dear reader, what will be your order in the resurrection? Will you be among those who will hear those words, Depart from me (the second death)? Or will you have part in the first resurrection?

On such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.—Revelation 20: 4-6.

In this chapter the second death is compared to a lake of fire. Just as we would shrink from a lake of fire, so we will shrink from the condition of the second death. We know what the first death brought to us. We are not encouraged to believe that the second one will be any less desirable.

Life, eternal life, not only physically but spiritually, in the presence of God and Christ and all the noble and true of all ages, is what every right thinking man and woman should desire and work for. You have your agency. No one will coerce you. You must decide for yourself, after earnest consideration.

Let us then abide the celestial law which the Christ laid down his life to give to us. If we abide a celestial law unto the end of life, we are promised a celestial quickening. The body and spirit will then be inseparably connected, and in that eternal condition we will have a fullness of joy.

Does anyone think he might be satisfied with the glory which Paul compares to the glory or brightness of the moon, or of the stars? Would you now be satisfied with the light of the moon? There would soon be none of the higher forms of life on this planet if reflected sunlight, coming from our satellite, were all we had. Do you know that the light of the moon at its brightest is six thousand times less powerful than the sun, even on a dull winter day? Think, think, before you accept such a conclusion. It is superficial and deceptive.

According to Matthew 24 and Luke 22, the signs of Christ's second coming are wars; rumors of wars; famines; pestilences; earthquakes in divers places; iniquity shall abound; the love of many shall wax cold; signs in the heavens, and in the sun and in the moon; distress of nations; the sea and waves roaring (tidal waves); and last but not least, the same gospel then being preached by Jesus and his ministers shall again be preached in all the world, among all nations, and "then shall the end come."

The object of our propaganda is to prepare a people for that great event, when the kingdoms of this world will be superceded by the kingdom of our Lord. It is near, for those very signs are in evidence now.

Daniel says (chapter 12) that in "the time of the end," "the wise shall understand." Will you not be among that number? He also says that they "shall shine as the brightness of the firmament" (celestial glory). Compare also Matthew 13: 24-43.

Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt.—Daniel 12: 2.

Paul says (Romans 8: 11-17),

If, the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you. . . . For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God.

They receive "the Spirit of adoption." This comes through obedience to the law of adoption of which we have read in the articles preceding this. It is the application of that law to our own individual case; as to how it will affect our place in the resurrection, that we must consider, each one for himself. It is worth our best time and thought.

Again says Paul (Romans 6: 8; the emphasis is ours):

We are buried with him [Christ] by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection.

On which side of that conditional "if" are you standing?

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

DOES THE BOOK OF MORMON APPROPRIATE SCRIPTURE?

If Mr. Linn in his "Story of the Mormons" has called attention to not less than twenty-five whole chapters that were bodily appropriated from the Scriptures in the Book of Mormon, he has called attention to a fabrication of his own. Strange, that men are compelled to lie about the book in order to make a case against it.

The colony under Nephi, that was headed out of Jerusalem by Lehi, had the record of the Scriptures with them, as far as those records were given.

Having these scriptures with them, they taught them to their descendants. They read those scriptures, and quoted them, and the ministry of these Book of Mormon teachers was written in and became a part of their reengraved record. They possessed different originals than the ones from which our record comes. When they read, or when they quote, they invariably give the author's name, or attribute their quotation to the scriptures which they had, as for instance, on page 74, Palmyra edition: "And now, behold, I speak unto you concerning things which are, and which are to come, wherefore, I will read you the words of Isaiah."

Is this appropriating from the "Scriptures"? The Scriptures were not in existence as we now have them. But we will arrange a few texts in parallel columns from the book of Isaiah, as the Nephites had that record, and from the book as we now have it in Authorized Version:

AUTHORIZED VERSION, ISAIAH
7: 18.

And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall hiss for the fly that is in the uttermost part of the rivers of Egypt, and for the bee that is in the land of Assyria.

ISAIAH, 2: 5, 6-17, AS THE
NEPHITES HAD IT.

(Palmyra edition.)

And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall hiss for the fly that is in the uttermost part of Egypt, and for the bee that is in the land of Assyria.

It will be noted readily that flies do not live in rivers, and that there is only one river in Egypt—the Nile.

AUTHORIZED VERSION OF
ISAIAH 2.

O house of Jacob, come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord. Therefore thou hast forsaken thy people the house of Jacob, because they be replenished from the east, and are soothsayers like the Philistines, and they please themselves in the children of strangers. Their land is full of silver and gold, neither is there any end of their treasures; their land is also full of horses, neither is there any end of their chariots: Their land also is full of idols; they worship the work of their own hands, that which their own fingers have made: and the mean man boweth down, and the great man humbleth himself: therefore forgive them not. Enter into the rock, and hide thee in the dust, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majesty. The lofty looks of man shall be humbled and the haughtiness of men shall be bowed down, and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day. For the day of the Lord of hosts shall be upon every one that is proud and lofty, and upon every one that is lifted up; and he shall be brought low: and upon all the cedars of Lebanon, that are high and lifted up, and upon all the oaks of Bashan, and upon all the high mountains and upon all the hills that are lifted up, and upon every high tower, and upon every fenced wall, and upon all the ships of Tarshish, and upon all pleasant pictures. And the loftiness of man shall be bowed down, and the haughtiness of men shall be made low: and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day.

ISAIAH 2: 5, 6-17, AS THE

Palmyra edition.

O house of Jacob, come ye and let us walk in the light of the Lord; yea, come, for ye have all gone astray, every one to his wicked ways. Therefore, O Lord, thou hast forsaken thy people, the house of Jacob, because they be replenished from the east, and hearken unto soothsayers like the Philistines, and they please themselves in the children of strangers. Their land also is full of silver and gold, neither is there any end of their treasures; their land also is full of horses, neither is there any end of their chariots: their land also is full of idols; they worship the work of their own hands,—that which their own fingers have made: and the mean man boweth down, and the great man humbleth himself not: therefore forgive him not. O ye wicked ones, enter into the rock, and hide thee in the dust, for the fear of the Lord, and the glory of his majesty shall smite thee. And it shall come to pass that the lofty looks of man shall be humbled, and the haughtiness of men shall be bowed down, and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day.—Page 87.

The Authorized Version represents God as having forsaken his people, the house of Jacob, because they were commanded to "walk in the light of the Lord," and because they were a nation of "soothsayers," whereas the Prophet Isaiah, as the Nephites possessed his record, says "ye have all gone astray everyone to his wicked ways, and hearken unto soothsayers," which was the cause of the Lord forsaking them. Again, "the mean man boweth down, and the great man humbleth himself, therefore, forgive them not" says the Authorized Version; but Isaiah, in the record which the Nephites had, says, "the mean man boweth down, and the great man humbleth himself not: therefore forgive him not." Again, they be replenished from the east, and are "soothsayers." Who ever heard of a nation of soothsayers? The record as the Nephites had it, says, "Because they be replenished from the east, and hearken unto soothsayers." But one more parallel, and we conclude on this point.

AUTHORIZED VERSION
ISAIAH 8.

And when they shall say unto you, Seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep, and that mutter: should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead? To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.

The Book of Mormon records Isaiah as teaching the doctrine, to seek "for the living to hear from the dead," instead of teaching to seek "for the living to the dead," as held out in the Authorized Version. Those who seek unto God, may hear from the dead, for dead prophets and saints are angels (Revelation 22: 9), and "angels are ministering spirits, sent to minister for those who shall be heirs of salvation" (Hebrews 1: 14).

As before stated, the Nephites brought the "Scriptures" with them, engraved on the brass plates, "down to the commencement of the reign of Zedekiah," including the book of Isaiah's prophecy, and if Mr. Traum will diligently compare the words of Isaiah, as translated in the Book of Mormon, with those in the Bible, he must conclude that there was no copying, unless done by one versed in both languages. In the Bible, the translators had to supply some words because omitted in the copy, or obscured. These supplied words are italicised. Now it is a noted fact that in the translation of Isaiah, and the words of Jesus on this continent, these words supplied by the translators of the Bible are not used in such a manner as to indicate "whole chapters bodily appropriated from the Scriptures." Such words are very seldom the same in both. In the comparison which has been made the proportion of use of such supplied words is forty-eight dissimilar to eleven similar, and nearly everyone of the eleven were the pronouns in the first person, or the present tense of the verb to be, words which would have been selected by independent translators separated by oceans or continents. The "revisions" may be just as frequent, in Isaiah's record, translated from the Nephite plates, or in the report of Christ's words on this continent, as other portions, but those changes being not important, as we have shown, did not affect the sense thereby, but sought, like Alexander Campbell in "Living Oracles," to modernize the form of speech.

BOOK OF MORMON IN PROPHECY.

Chapter five is captioned, "The Book of Mormon and Hebrew prophecy."

In this field of prophetic literature our opponent has stated positions of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon from the pens of those who bore its truths to the world in an early day. We do not care to pause and brush away every cobweb he has spun across his way, out of his own imaginary brain, for man's life here below has some limitations. But we can not resist the impulse to adopt a procedure which we believe will be subversive of his entire range of criticism.

This theme for investigation is one of no ordinary moment; but is of thrilling, startling, overwhelming, and eternal interest. The work which we now defend is one of marvelous import, and its design, as stated by the Great Artificer of our being, is to bless the world. The record of Joseph, "in the hand of Ephraim," is viewed by the scholastic as an innovation upon religious establishments, usages, and antiquated systems of speculative theology sanctified by the veneration of ages. But to us, it is a bursting fount of light, which in the directing hand of God breaks the silence and slumber of the darkness; which like a dreamy veil has shrouded the spiritual horizon. Yes, the Hebrew prophets have been "moved by the Holy Ghost" to speak, and in their utterances we see strong testimony to the witness who should testify "out of the ground."

We will append a few prophetic statements for a basis. Our opponent can not avoid the force of the interpretation placed upon the prophecies. He can not evade the charge of "fearing the overthrow" of his own attempt to overthrow the Book of Mormon, for his partial reference to Bible evidences,—his deft touch of those he presents,—will witness against him.

GOD APPOINTS THE NATIONS THEIR INHERITANCE.

The first testimony we will cite Elder Traum's attention to is that of Moses:

Remember the days of old, consider the years of many generations: ask thy father, and he will show thee; thy elders, and they will tell thee. When the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when he separated the sons of Adam, he set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel. For the Lord's portion is his people; Jacob is the lot of his inheritance. He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness; he led him about, he instructed him, he kept him as the apple of his eye. As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings; so the Lord alone did lead him, and there was no strange god with him.—Deuteronomy 32: 7-12, A. V.

God, in the execution of his eternal program, made a "division" of "inheritance" to the nations; and he did this work when he separated the sons of Adam. He then "set the bounds of the people," according to "the number of the children of Israel." He had a purpose in "dividing to the nations their inheritance," and the Apostle Paul sets forth that purpose in the following language:

God that made the world, and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands; neither is worshiped with men's hands, as though he needed anything, seeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things; and hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; That they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us.—Acts 17: 24-27, A. V.

Their "habitation" has "bounds," and the "bounds" were "determined" when he "divided to the nations their inheritance." Moses affirms that he "set the bounds," "when he separated the sons of Adam."

Now we can interpret the prophetic blessings of Joseph's descendants, in the light of the purpose of God, as expressed by Moses and Paul.

We can now examine some of the prophecies to which our opponent lightly refers, supplementing them with a firm statement of God, that I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure.—Isaiah 46: 9, 10.

This is a strong declaration to begin with, and applying it to a leading idea in this examination,—a proposition we wish kept in view—man can have increased confidence in the divine purposes, when he reflects that it was predicted centuries ago, that a chosen man called out of Ur of the Chaldees should become a chosen family, developing chosen sons, who should be "heads" of chosen tribes growing into a chosen nation, which should, at some future period, occupy a position from whence blessings should radiate to the utmost bounds of the globe. In this order, world history has unrolled, is unrolling. Beginning with the fountain heads,—Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob,—the ripples, so to speak, have become the gulf current, mingling with the waters of the world, yet flowing on in a distinct channel; branching out into estuaries, clearing stagnant pools, yet returning in the grand ultimate to the reunion of parent streams.

EPHRAIM.

Of the enlargement of one of the originals, the patriarch thus, by the spirit of prophecy, discloses:

And Joseph took them both, Ephraim in his right hand toward Israel's left hand, and Manasseh in his left hand toward Israel's right hand, and brought them near unto him. And Israel stretched out his right hand, and laid it upon Ephraim's head, who was the younger, and his left hand upon Masasseh's head, guiding his hands wittingly; for Manasseh was the firstborn. And he blessed Joseph, and said, God, before whom my fathers Abraham and Isaac did walk, the God which fed me all my life long unto this day, the angel which redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads; and let my name be named on them, and the name of my fathers Abraham and Isaac: and let them grow into a multitude in the midst of the earth. And when Joseph saw that his father laid his right hand upon the head of Ephraim, it displeased him: and he held up his father's hand, to remove it from Ephraim's head unto Manasseh's head. And Joseph said unto his father, Not so, my father: for this is the firstborn; put thy right hand upon his head. And his father refused, and said, I know it, my son, I know it: he also shall become a people, and he also shall be great: but truly his younger brother shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a multitude of nations. And he blessed them that day, saying, In thee shall Israel bless, saying, God make thee as Ephraim and as Manasseh: and he set Ephraim before Manasseh.—Genesis 48: 13-20, A. V.

As the descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, "Israel," was the name placed upon them; they were to become a multitude of nations; Ephraim, alone, was to grow into a multitude of nations; their locality, "in the midst of the earth."

If Mr. Traum would locate himself in "Goshen," in Egypt, where Jacob pronounced this patriarchal blessing on the heads of these two grandsons, and then follow that meridian down between Alexandria and Grand Cairo to the equator, that line three hundred and sixty degrees in length, dividing the "earth" into "two equal parts," and then travel one hundred and eighty degrees east, or one hundred and eighty degrees west, he would reach the "midst of the earth," in the southern part of the United States and northern part of South America, approximately. He would pause long enough to see the landed estate, promised, at "the utmost bound of the everlasting hills." There he could reflect on the purpose of God in "setting the bound," determining the same "before," as affirmed by Moses and Paul.

A multitude of nations springing from either Ephraim or Manasseh, or both, was never known in Canaan or the Eastern Hemisphere. So far as the Bible and history reveal, the entire twelve tribes, while there, grew into but two nations. (See 2 Kings, 17: 16, 20, and Ezekiel 37: 21, 22. Also Worcester's History, p. 342. Smith's Bible Dictionary, vol. 1, page 899.) The landed estate given Ephraim alone "in the midst of the earth," was to far exceed the land given to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Proof:

And Jacob called unto his sons, and said, Gather yourselves together, that I may tell you that which shall befall you in the last days.—Genesis 49: 1.

Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well, whose branches run over the wall: The archers have sorely grieved him, and shot at him, and hated him: But his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob: (from thence is the shepherd, the stone of Israel:.) Even by the God of thy father, who shall help thee, and by the Almighty, who shall bless thee with blessings of heaven above, blessings of the deep that lieth under, blessings of the breasts and of the womb: the blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors, unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills; they shall be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren.—Genesis 49: 22-26, A. V.

"This is a last days"—blessing; Joseph had but two "branches"—Ephraim and Manasseh; they "run over the wall,"—outside the inclosure set off to the other tribes; "over the wall," would be "the midst of the earth," the utmost,—farthest away, "bounds," of the everlasting hills. This "blessing," so much greater than that conferred upon Jacob's progenitors, Abraham and Isaac, was by divine authority placed on the "head" of Joseph. Now, the covenant by which Abraham and Isaac secured their "blessings," provided that "Canaan," "the land whereon thou liest," or "standest," should come to them; but Joseph's should be "above" greater—than the strip of territory "two hundred miles long, and ninety broad," and which was divided by "lot" under Joshua—distinguished since as "the promised land." Its "boundaries" were "set" from "the Red Sea, unto the sea of the Philistines, and from the desert unto the river."—Exodus 23: 31. This land, of Canaan, God gave to Jacob's "progenitors," as the following will show:

And I will establish my covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee, in their generations, for an everlasting covenant; to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee. And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God.—Genesis 17: 7, 8, A. V.

ON EQUALITY.

An article in Pearson's Magazine for April on the land question and land values has prompted me to write a few lines to your paper on some of the land questions that are before us as a church. Mr. Joseph Fels, the writer of the article mentioned, does not appear to be a socialist and does not advocate any socialistic ideas, and judging from some of his remarks, he is worth upwards of a million dollars, all made from the increase in the value of land. This man claims that our whole system of land dealings is wrong, that the land belongs to all the people, and should be held by the people, or in other words should be held by the State or Government. The idea is that the people who move into a country, city, or State and help develop it should share in whatever profit may accrue from its advancement.

Our ever increasing population, and especially our city population, creates a demand for more shops, more stores, more houses, more lots, more land, more room in all directions.

A man of foresight having observed these conditions in older districts, buys a tract of land within a few miles of a thriving city; he does not need to work, he simply sits down and waits for a season. A new railroad will soon want an entrance to the city, perhaps will build a roundhouse and shops. Some land is required by the company for the buildings, laborers come in to prepare the ground for the foundations, masons, carpenters, plumbers, machinists and trainmen come in turn; they all have to be housed and fed. New lodging houses, new stores and new dwellings are in demand to supply these needs. A new manufacturing plant comes to town and practically the same story is repeated. The city continues to grow.

In a few years the man with the tract of land is called on by a few well-to-do city men who want suburban homes. Land that cost one hundred dollars an acre a short time ago is now worth eight hundred dollars or one thousand dollars an acre. What has this man done to produce this increase in his wealth? Not this man, but the laborers, the contractors, the machinists, the railroad men, and others who have come to the city and necessarily demanded houses and tracts of land of various sizes,—the demand of this army of men for homes has made the one man wealthy. One man has received, without working, the great majority have worked without receiving. Where is the justice in this arrangement? Now I am not prepared to solve this great problem. Some claim that they have a solution for it, but I have never seen one outside of the Doctrine and Covenants that even appears to be satisfactory.

Now the question is, Have we as a church a solution for this great problem? In Doctrine and Covenants, section 70, paragraph 3, we are taught equality. Under the present system of land titles we are working away from equality instead of toward it. People with land are growing richer, and people without land, as a rule, are going the other way.

Up to about a year ago the church was handicapped in regard to holding land, but since the Order of Enoch has been organized there is no limit to the amount of land or property that the order may hold, so that the Order of Enoch in connection with the church is in a position to carry out the instructions given in the Doctrine and Covenants in regard to inheritances and stewardships as soon as we as a people are ready to do our part. In Doctrine and Covenants 72: 3 we are instructed to lay all things before the Bishop. Up to the present time this has been construed to include the filing of inventories. Many have done this, a few have done more.

Great wisdom has been shown on the part of the bishopric in starting this educational campaign to bring us into line in regard to financial matters. But what about the next step? Are we ready to go forward?

In Doctrine and Covenants 106 we are instructed to turn all our surplus property into the hands of the bishop; not simply lay it before him, but turn it over to him. Now the bishop can not receive this to himself, but he is simply the agency by which this property is transferred from us to the church or Order of Enoch, as the case may be.

A man with ten thousand dollars desires to follow out the instructions of the law. He pays one thousand dollars as tithing for the general expenses of the church. Two thousand five hundred dollars is required for a home, which is his inheritance. Three thousand five hundred dollars is required to carry on whatever business he may be engaged in, which is his stewardship. Three thousand dollars remains as a surplus. This is not apt to be in cash, but will likely be in securities or land. If it is land he will deed it to the Order of Enoch, and as soon as this is done it will be the common property of the Order, and every member in good standing will have an equal interest in this property, which is another step toward equality. The same is true of all church property, and every member in good standing has an equal interest in all church property, and I am inclined to think that we are further advanced along lines of equality than many would have us believe.

As soon as we can carry out the instructions of the law so that no man is occupying more land than he actually requires for his own use, and turns over his surplus to the church, the problem of equality will be solved and we will be reaching well up toward the ideal condition.

A large number of statesmen, reformers, and philosophers are working on the problem of equal distribution of wealth.

For the past thirty years or more the churches have been adopting ideas that we have been preaching for twice that length of time. Now we have men of the world working on problems that the Lord solved for us over seventy years ago. Are we going to sit idly by and allow outsiders to carry out reforms that were given to us to work out?

Are we going to follow out the plain instructions of the law? or will we step aside and require the Lord to raise up another people to carry out his plan of redemption? Time will tell.

WANTED---MEN AND WOMEN.

In the gathering and building up of Zion God has a specific purpose in view; namely, to establish a community where righteousness shall be the law to govern and control the actions of men. As a plant can only grow in a proper environment, earth, moisture, and warmth, so with man; for his development it is necessary that surrounding conditions be favorable to his physical, intellectual, and spiritual needs. The great task before us is to create that environment, which is not the end sought, but the means to an end, which end will be perfect manhood and womanhood, a character that will make us worthy to be called the sons and daughters of God. That ideal community will need good, sanitary homes, good schools, industrial and other opportunities for labor under conditions that will not be destructive of health and morals; a spiritual atmosphere filled with the fragrance of heaven, and social relations based on character and individual needs and not on wealth and social position.

To bring about these conditions men and women will sometimes cooperate in their labor and at other times work on separate lines. In the development of industrial enterprises and of agriculture the greatest need at present is men,—men of good, practical, business ability, who are able to bring order and system out of confusion, whenever such exists. Money is a needful factor, but confidence in a person's integrity and business ability is a greater asset; with these, money is not so hard to obtain.

A person with business ability can grasp the practical side of a proposition. He knows that to make a business profitable the sales can not be below a minimum amount. From the nature of the business, and from public needs, and the changing notions of the people, he can almost form a correct conclusion of the chances of success. To make what the public will not buy he knows foreshadows failure, and he leaves it alone. He will not trust to luck or believe that because he is honest that providence will reverse the natural laws of commerce in his behalf.

In addition to men of practical business ability, integrity and honest trading can not be overlooked, because among many in the world the standards of commercial honesty are very low, and crooked ways of business are so common that it is necessary to establish new standards, based on the law of right and justice, that will distinguish our people from all those who do not come up to the standard of honest and fair dealing. It is not the intention of the writer to insinuate that we have no such men, but great as the number may be, we need more.

To make plain what I mean by practical business men, I will give a few examples of many that have come under my observation. An honest and industrious mechanic living in one of the States of the Central West invented an incubator. It may not have been any better than many others on the market, but he found ready sale for it, and the sales increased so that it became necessary to build a factory. The citizens of the town saw that he was a practical and honest man, and they came forward with the needed money, and at present the factory gives employment to several hundred men.

A young brother in another State, with his set of carpenter tools, a determined will, and a good name, set out to win in the competitive race, and only a few years passed by until he was the owner of a planing mill and employing nearly a score of men. We see around us on every side large enterprises that had small beginnings, with a very small amount of capital, or none at all, to commence with.

An example of the opposite results may be worthy of note. In the suburbs of a large city which needed millions of brick in its building trade, was located a clay bank large enough to last for several years. Men and capital came forth, but it failed. Why? The best answer is from one of its officers; it cost eight thousand dollars to make four thousand dollars worth of brick. What was lacking? A practical man that could make it profitable. A general that leads his soldiers to defeat will not inspire confidence in his generalship. A would-be business man that has day dreams of success while his pathway is strewn with the wreckage of other men's hopes and money, will not be able to induce careful and conservative men to open their pocketbooks to supply the needed capital.

In the development of our industrial institutions, if the hours of labor are not reasonable and based on the laborer's productive capacity, the sanitary conditions of the very best, and an income to the common laborer or skilled mechanic sufficient for the proper maintenance of their families, then we would be no better cared for than in the world, and will fail to reach the standard of excellence pointed out by our heavenly Father, and there would be as many poorly fed and clothed children as under the present conditions, of which the bare thought is shocking to the man who loves his fellows. The men and women who have always set at a table loaded with earth's bounties have no realization of the sufferings of the poor. God has always looked on the poor in tender compassion, and the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants contain ample provision for their relief from such unfortunate conditions. It must be done in God's way. An opportunity to labor and a just recompense for service rendered is the only true way to permanent success.

Women in all ages have occupied an important position in the social and economic problems of the period in which they have lived, and the present era gives ours an opportunity that has never been equaled. It is the "dispensation of the fullness of times," the generation in which the Savior shall come in power and glory, and a people must be prepared to meet him. The proverb, "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world," is just as true of the church; the greatest power is in the hands of the mothers to have a pure people, and to help solve the great problems that confront us in establishing Zion. Many of our women in the prime of life, and many just entering young womanhood, have not had the advantages of education that can be had in our common schools, the cares of home and the need of earning a living, and other causes have prevented them, so while they may be giants in morals they are pygmies intellectually. They have not had time or opportunity to read good books or come in contact with those refining agencies of association with the people of culture that have so much to do with molding our habits of life.

It matters not how much we may abhor it, because of those antecedent conditions two classes exist, both in large and small branches. The lines may not be as closely drawn as by those outside of the church, but they are there, and seen by the close observer. Those who have been thus unfortunate can not be reached by isolation, it must be by contact with those whose superior advantages give them power to lift people upon the high plane on which they stand intellectually and socially. All can not attain to the same altitude of intellectuality, but all can be in homes where cleanliness, order, neatness, and the best sanitary conditions prevail.

Women, sisters, will you, can you attune your mental condition one octave above your sister that needs your help, and keep your soul in touch with the Nazarene long enough for him to see that divine image is stamped on both; one raised from crudeness and the other brought down from the hill of vanity so that they are one in Christ Jesus the Lord.

Zion will finally consist of the pure in heart, and to bring about that condition the greatest amount of labor must be done for those who need it the most, otherwise the entire body will suffer loss. From the time our young women leave school until they are married, if such they do, it is necessary for most of them to engage in some kind of labor to maintain themselves. Not all have the ability, some lacked the opportunity to prepare themselves for that class of labor which is the most remunerative and looked upon as of a higher grade, and because of this they feel that in a social way they are discriminated against. This is especially true of those engaged in domestic service. Such conditions should not exist; they can not without injury to the individuals and in the end to the entire church.

The wives of our missionaries and their children do not need sympathy so much as they do simple justice from the membership of the church. Their lives are a continual sacrifice. No other class are bearing the burden they bear. It is a double one. They must struggle on without the help of their companions and be deprived of what is needful to properly clothe, feed, and educate themselves and their children. It is made more bitter because they realize it is needless; the waste and extravagance of others would amply provide what they lack. It takes heroism of the highest type to continue the struggle against such hard and unnatural conditions.

To bring about dress reform the key to the situation is in the hands of our women. The needless waste of money, the injury to God's work, the polluting of the souls of our young with vanity and pride is appalling; it is shocking to the heart that yearns to see our people be as Christ would have us be, the light of the world, the pure in heart. The happy medium between oddity and extravagance is what is needed to bring about good results and the unifying of our people.

The world must yet come to Zion for light to solve the great social and economic problems before us. Will we be in a condition to give it? If not, the Lord will have to push us aside and fill our places with some one he can use.

I have great confidence in the triumph of our cause, and believe our women will do their part nobly, but we must not look at those below us and by contrast conclude that we are doing well. We must look up into the clear sunlight of heaven, and then we will realize how insignificant we are and the magnitude of the task before us that we must accomplish or confess failure.

WONDERS OF THE SUN TOLD IN FIGURES.

When bees swarm they are led by a queen. So the sun midheavens journeys through space followed by a family of worlds, but he is many times larger than all of them put together. His heat is so great as to be oppressive at a distance of 93,000,000 miles. What must it be close up? The temperature of his surface is 18,000 degrees Fahrenheit, while 100 degrees is almost unbearable to us.

The burning at once of 11 quadrillions 600,000 millions of tons of coal would not produce the sun's heat given off every second, says the Louisville Courier Journal. The light afforded by him every second is equal to 1,575,000,000,000,000,000 millions of wax candles. From him this inconceivable mass of heat and light has been streaming every second without any perceptible change for thousands and thousands of years. The noise and roar in the sun caused by oceans of flame rushing up to the surface and plunging down to the center would kill a man at a distance of 10,000 miles.

In 1892 a hole opened on its surface 92,000 miles long and 62,000 miles wide. It remained open for months. Seventy worlds as big as the earth would not have plugged up its mouth. The sun does not rotate as a whole. Different parts have different periods. At the equator he turns over in twenty-five days. Halfway thence to his pole he turns over in twenty-seven and one half days, producing the wildest confusion and uproar amid the limitless oceans of fire on his surface.

A clock ticks 86,400 times a day. To tick as many times as the miles the sun is distant from us a clock would require to run three years. You can travel around the world in sixty days. At this rate on a journey to the sun you would be 600 years old on your arrival, if you started as an infant.—Selected.

WHEN SHALL WE GO TO THE MOON?

The reader will either smile at this or turn away from it with an "Oh, pshaw!"

Nevertheless it is a forecast of what will come about in the future, although how far off that future may be can only be a subject for guessing. It may be so close that its proximity would startle us if we could discern it clearly.

Men will go to the moon, and farther than the moon, as surely as they will, before long, make regular flights over the Rocky Mountains and across the Pacific and the Atlantic. Flight is the order of the day; it has got into the blood and the brain of mankind. The atmosphere has been conquered—all in a moment, after thousands of years of vain longing and dreaming. The possibility of aerial flight for man always existed; we see that now. But the method and the means had to be found, and we have found them. Laughing them down did not keep them down. They could not be demonstrated out of existence. It was the faith that moves the mountains which finally, and suddenly, placed them at our disposal.

Well, then, as to the moon. The moon is no figment of the imagination; it is a material world up there in the sky. We know its distance, which is not very considerable. Many a busy drummer who has overrun the continent for years has traveled farther than from the earth to the moon. The distance, then, is no insuperable obstacle.

But the void of airless space—how overcome that? Take air, or the means of making air, along. Chemistry ought to be capable of that achievement.

But the gravitation of the earth forbids! Ah, but so, too, it forbade aerial flight, yet aerial flight is an accomplished fact, in spite of gravitation. Still, the problem of getting away from the earth is a serious one. Jules Verne's imagination solved it by a projectile from a giant columbiad. But even his skill of narration could not make that method acceptable to the reason. Another must be found, and another is probably offered by electric forces. A charged pith ball flies away from the knob of an electric machine. Take the hint of the pith ball, and get away from the earth by means of electric repulsion. But how concentrate and control the energies concerned? If I knew that, I should already have made the invention, and would now be enjoying its fruits instead of writing a prophecy.

The great public has little regard for the dreamers, because they deal in foreseen possibilities, and it demands results, and wants the results right away. Nevertheless the dreamers always lead the way. Day dawns where they point, though they may be in their graves long before the sunrise.

It is a bad omen for the wise skeptics who will call all this "nonsense," that almost with his last breath Lord Kelvin, the doyen of nineteenth century science, ridiculed aerial navigation as a vain dream. Even while he spoke the problem had already been solved, out on a Western prairie, behind high fences.

Still, it is a long stride from airships to the lunar express—but it will be taken when the time comes. And going to the moon will be but the first step, an experimental flight, like Bleriot's across the Channel, to show the way to more distant worlds.—By Garrett P. Serviss.

Ecclesiastical Corruption in Jerusalem.

"It were better to be of no church than to be bitter for any," is a saying of William Penn, quoted in The Hibbert Journal (London) by "a resident in Jerusalem." He describes the condition of Greek Church life in the Holy City as dark and corrupt. The spirit of the Pharisees, as denounced by the Founder of Christianity, seems, he thinks, to have revived in the city where he taught and died. In what he styles "the capital of Christianity" he describes Christianity as practically dead. He adds:

"The Greek Church is the church of the country, but centuries of war and change have reduced it to a state of absolute indifference—a church in name only."

The Greek clergy and the monks of Jerusalem are mercenary and indifferent to their vocation, he declares. To quote his words:

"In that place, whose bewildering complexity of life and manifold charm and variety make it indeed the center of the world, are seen at once, and in vivid contrast, the strength, the vitality, and the unloveliness of Christianity—the Christianity, that is, of Christians; for we are gradually beginning to realize that the Christianity that Christ taught and lived, and the Christianity that men teach and live, are as diverse as heaven and earth."

He charges the monasteries with receiving money for masses which are never offered in the names of those whose friends pay for them. He thus depicts "a scene as described by an eye-witness":

"The monasteries have gradually absorbed the wealth of the Church, and, as their rules allow the monks the personal use for life of monastic funds without account, they have been able to live smoothly and to benefit their relatives. Much of this wealth comes through the Pilgrims, who pay whatever they can afford to the guardian monks of the holy places, in exchange for masses. The Church of the Holy Sepulcher gets the main share. The pilgrims bring their doles to the office of the chancellery of the Holy Sepulcher, with scraps of paper bearing the names to be mentioned at mass. The money is laid on the table; a monk in charge takes the papers. This goes on for hours, a goodly pile of money raises by degrees. Finally, the money is swept into a drawer, and the papers torn up and thrown away. The scene is described by an eye-witness."

The monks of the Greek Church turn a penny by many devices, and bishops are not backward in taking their share, if we may believe the following paragraphs:

"A monastery on a holy site owns a large olive-grove surrounding it. Single trees are sold to the pilgrims so that the oil may feed a lamp to burn for ever in their name before the altar. Perhaps a number of pilgrims or a village, will grove has been sold times over for the same purpose; and join to purchase so rare a privilege. Every tree in that the monks probably eat the olives into the bargain.

"The bishop of — lives in a large house within twelve hours of his diocese, life in Jerusalem being more comfortable and convenient than anywhere in his see. He has an ingenious way of augmenting the episcopal income. He fills hundreds of large envelopes with tiny olive-sprigs, or with stones marked as from this or that holy place, or with his photograph, printed cheaply in large quantities. These envelopes are inscribed 'From the Bishop of —.' They are sold in hundreds, the pilgrims taking away with them the treasured contents and leaving in the envelope whatever they can afford."

The self-respecting Christian Arabs, "devoted to their church," rarely for some time "received a monk into their houses." They "refused to confess to men," "notorious evil-livers." The so-called "religious houses" are comfortable homes for idle men, we are told, who live on the superstition of the ignorant. On this point we read:

The proportion of these religious houses to the population of Jerusalem, about 75,000, is overwhelming. There can not be work for all, and there is not; and it is cruelly unfair to the pilgrims to live upon their devout credulity. If there were work, or if the work professed were done, we should possibly hear less of the luxury of certain houses, whose 'cells' are comfortable separate rooms, and whose table on gala nights shines with plate presented by rich or princely pilgrims. Nor should we blush as Christians over those scenes of strife and bloodshed wherein Christians display the nakedness of their religion to the biting scorn of the Moslem and the Jew.—Literary Digest, August 5, 1911.

What am I? Human beings say that I am a man, but one of a vast multitude, and just as insignificant as a daisy in a field of daisies. But a voice within speaks: "Thou art God's child, whom he loves with a Father's love, and has bought with the price of his own Son." Then my heart melts within me at the magnitude of his love, though man has counted me as nothing. God has deemed me worthy to become even his child; therefore I am determined to follow him all the days of my life.—Rev. Francis Stewart Ankrom.

A good man is happy within himself, and independent upon fortune; kind to his friend, temperate to his enemy, religiously just, indefatigably laborious, and he discharges all duties with a constancy and congruity of actions.—Seneca.

A NEGLECTED DUTY.

Some mothers think that if they pay strict attention to the physical needs of their own children they are absolved from all duty toward their neighbor's child. To such mothers "Am I my brother's keeper?" is so common a form of selfishness that they think their obligations to their family have all been fulfilled when they send their own children off to school "with shining morning faces," clean hands, and fresh clothing. But this selfishness proves only the old psychological law, that which we give to others, be it good or evil, returns to us tenfold.

No greater mistake was ever made than to imagine that we can protect our own and forget the less fortunate,—the money wrung from the tenement house consumptive contaminates the rich woman's pocketbook, and the garment wrought in the sweatshop poisons the rich man's child.

The mother who has the interest of her own children at heart can not afford to withhold the best she can give to all children, and the best way to exercise her influence is in the matter of cleanliness, and the first place to begin is in the school room,—of course, after she has looked well to the ways of her own household.

The uncleanliness of the schoolroom is hardly to be believed, save only by those who come into actual contact with it. Do not be so sure the schoolhouse in your own district is all that you imagine in the way of cleanliness, just because "some one has told you so," but go and find out for yourself.

A tenement house child, who is strong and well, and who exists as the survival of the strongest, may carry in his clothing germs which, when transmitted at school, may cause the illness and death of children who have been bathed and clothed with clocklike regularity.

Unclean and diseased hands will leave invisible traces upon door knobs, books, pencils, and erasers, which may do lasting harm to one who next handles them. Coughing and expectorating in dusty and unventilated rooms may spread the white plague in the homes of most careful people. An immaculate child may sit this year in the seat where last year a child afflicted with erysipelas or any one of the many skin diseases so well known to the public school teacher;—and yet the mother of the present occupant, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, will not have informed herself as whether the desk was scrubbed or the room fumigated during the intervening vacation.

Your child is not protected until all children are protected, and it is the duty of all parents to know for themselves in just what condition of cleanliness their schoolhouse is kept,—whether the directors are insisting upon thorough and systematic work from the janitor, and whether they are paying a salary sufficient to procure the best help obtainable. We have autocrats in all walks of life, but the most autocratic of them all is the school janitor who has been long in the service, and he is a shade more pathetic than the worn out school-teacher.

In a district, (of quite civilized people), the schoolhouse was in use fourteen years before a regular house cleaning was deemed necessary. The only windows that had ever been washed were those in immediate use. Not one of the floors and none of the woodwork had ever been scrubbed, not even the banisters to which so many little hands had clung for support.

The floors, from time to time, had been soaked with a thick, vile smelling oil that stained everything which came near it,—when the fragrant cedar preparations, which gather up all dust and leave the floor spotless, cost just half the price of the oil. The desks in this building, after fourteen years of use, were beyond description. Piles of discarded books, papers, and broken furniture filled the unused rooms, and no broom had ever disturbed the dust and dirt which coated them.

Among the children of this school there had been much illness; constant epidemics were breaking out, which in the case of mumps and measles proved so serious to adults that many working men lost weeks of labor, and their savings were diminished by doctor's bills.

There were few homes in this district that had not been subjected to spring and fall house cleaning, and yet the mothers had given the schoolhouse, in which their children spent so many hours, never a thought as to its cleanliness! The schoolhouse, of all houses, needs constant and thorough "going over."

The law in most States, requires that the doors and windows be thrown open during all intermissions. This, a careless teacher, especially if she has a cold and feels chilly, is apt to neglect; or the janitor, as is often the case, is apt to object to so much fresh air on the grounds of cooling off the building and wasting fuel, (and incidentally making more labor for himself).

Imagine, if you can, air breathed over and over again by some thirty or forty children, in all conditions of health. Even a narrow strip of ventilation at the windows is not enough. The air is not only foul from over use, but it is filled with the odor of many unclean, unbathed bodies, and clothing in the worst possible condition. The air in many schoolrooms is so bad that it is a crime against children who are forced to attend. This is so, especially in the town schools where there is no city supervision other than the principal, who having to attend to the needs of his own room finds little time to supervise his assistants. One of the most crying needs of our schools is better ventilation, and if the matter, as stated, seems exaggerated, a visit or two at an unexpected time, will convince one to the contrary. Often on making a visit, one is almost overcome with the thick, foul air that rushes out when the door opens. And yet we are spending millions a year to abolish the "white plague!"

You are saying to yourself, "Oh, but in our town we have an ordinance which prevents such carelessness. No such condition exists here, for I have visited the school often and the air is never very bad. Our system of cold air registers prevents foul air." You may have the best kind of an ordinance, but do you know for a certainty that it is always enforced? Have your visits been at a time when visitors were expected, or were they unexpected? Such conditions can be created in a day or even an hour, and a slight bit of carelessness can put the best system of ventilation out of commission. It takes eternal vigilance on the part of the parents to enforce the law.

The swirling clouds of dust from cheap chalk cover desk and clothing with powder, and breathing becomes a misery instead of a life-giving pleasure,—and yet we allow the board to purchase cheap materials and at the same time wonder why our children fall into the habit of quick, short breathing with their mouths wide open.

One of the growing diseases of children is adenoids, and specialists are more and more consulted in regard to it, yet we do not enforce the state law of ventilation, and we never question the divine authority of the school janitor.

Have you ever been in a schoolroom and watched a child who is suffering from a cold and in desperate need of a handkerchief? It may not be edifying but it is certainly educating to the onlooker. See the condition of his hands, his clothing, the desk, his books, pens, pencils, and handkerchief! The suffering of children for this one necessary article is all that imagination can picture, but add to this the filth and contamination to which the other children around him are subjected. A mothers' club did a fine thing when it presented the teacher of the primary grades, in their town school, with a quantity of clean, soft rags cut handkerchief size. These cloths are gathered up and burned, and there was always a fresh supply awaiting the demand.

Some teachers, to keep the ranks straight, have the children hold one another's hands while marching. In a schoolhouse, last winter, where this was the practice, fifty per cent of the pupils were afflicted with scabies (itch) before the authorities were aware of it, or took measures to prevent its spread. The filthy disease started from but one family of neglected children, but it spread to the many. Often, with the teacher's permission, two heads are bent so closely over the same book that one can see the exchange of more material things than ideas,—this brings us to the problem of individual ownership.

In some schools the hooks in the cloak room are not numbered and they belong to no one in particular. Sometimes there are not hooks enough, and wraps are piled, one on top of the other with little regard to cleanliness or order. A few more hooks, and numbers cut from a calendar will remedy the worst of this trouble. Pens and pencils are often gathered together in one box, and distributed at writing time, regardless of whose pen or pencil it happens to be. This can so easily be remedied by numbering the pens and putting them in holes that have been punched in the bottom of a paste-board box. There are, even in this enlightened age, schools that actually tolerate, and even furnish to the pupils a "common drinking cup." No other excuse, save ignorance, can be offered for this, as tin cups are to be had for a cent apiece, folding pocket cups for five cents and paper cups cheap as the water itself.

The question of filthy clothing, especially underwear, is too big to discuss with other matters, or try to settle even by itself. Some children go from week to week, and from month to month without a change. Not only that, but they sleep in these same clothes. Nothing short of a school uniform and public baths seem to cover all the corners of the proposition, but this is so sweeping a reform that we can only consider it, as yet, from a distance. Go to the school, notice the skin eruptions, the odor, the listlessness which is a direct result of uncleanness, and you will agree that the question of proper school clothing is one which will have to be settled in the near future.

While we may find this subject of clothing too deep for us at the present time, still the more glaring features of uncleanness in the schools can be eliminated if the parents of the district will but give a little of their time and attention in a personal way. It is within their power to insist upon the enforcing of the laws and ordinances of their own town and State. They may appeal to the teachers first, then if conditions are not improved they still have the school board, the county superintendent, and the state superintendent; but it is the experience of many people to have found the school board only to glad of a little outside suggestion, (when it is not interference), and quite willing to enforce the laws, when their attention is called to an infringement.

But first, parents must realize their duty toward their neighbor's child as well as toward their own, and the rest will follow.—Elizabeth Evans Pettinger, in American Motherhood.

A Request for Prayers.

Sister Sadie Burch, Moorhead, Iowa: "My husband, Bro. George Burch contracted the tobacco habit when a boy and has used it all his life. About a year ago I wrote to Bro. L. G. Holloway and asked his prayers, and George was completely cured of smoking, we believe, in answer to prayer. But the taste and craving for chewing stayed with him, which he regrets. In his own strength he can not overcome this habit, so I ask you each that you pray for him that he be entirely cured from the habit and its effects."

Editor Herald: Bro. J. F. Garver and the writer have been conducting a special series of meetings here with much light and power attending the preached word. Nine have been baptized, careless members revived, and others are near the kingdom. Some of the new members will make good workers in Sunday school, Religio, and church work.

GOMER R. WELLS.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, August 5, 1911.

Editor Herald: Will you suffer a request to appear in your paper? I wish to know the address of a man named Burton George, living in Saskatchewan, one of our people. I knew a man by that name in Glasgow, Scotland, and if anyone could inform me about his address, I shall be thankful. My name is Philip Salonimer, a Jewish boy.

With appreciation,

THAYER, MISSOURI, August 5, 1911.

Editor Herald: We are but a small band of Saints here, but we are trying to hold up the truth of the gospel as it is in Christ. We pray daily that the labors here may not be in vain and the Lord is yet mindful of us. On last Sunday a little band of us gathered and Elder G. A. Davis gave an interesting sermon on the principles of the gospel. After which we spread the dinner on the ground, and afterward we marched to the water where the writer baptized Bro. Charles Chang and wife.

Hoping that your prayer may be in behalf of the work, I remain

SKIATOOK, OKLAHOMA, August 4, 1911.

Editor Herald: Here we are again, with good news from the good State of Oklahoma. Bro. Lee Quick has just closed a nine-day meeting here. He had to preach out in the open air because they would not let us Mormons, as they called us, have their church. But they can't stop the Lord's work. Brother Quick is an able speaker and can hold a crowd. We had a large attendance and wonderful interest. The people are stirred up and many are investigating this work. Last Sunday evening they did not have church in any of the churches, because they had none but empty seats to talk to. When Brother Quick closed the meeting everybody wanted to know when he was coming back. They helped him with money and several bought a copy of the Book of Mormon and signed for the Ensign. Yours for the truth,

FRANK NORTH.

LUTHER, MONTANA, August 10, 1911.

Dear Herald Readers: We are still trying to do what we can for the good cause, but it is hard to do much here. Just a few days ago we had a chance to explain the difference between the leaders of the true church and the Utah faction, after being called a polygamist. And we have one girl anyway who is interested in the Sunday school lessons.

We feel that the Lord has been with us this year, for the prospect for a good crop is fine. There was lots of rain in the spring and then it began raining about the middle of July and has soaked everything in good shape, so we feel thankful.

People around here are trying to raise money to build a union church, and we are going to help a little. We want to do it so our elders will have a place to preach.

May the good work go on. Should Elder Edgar H. Smith see this, we will be glad to get a letter from him. Ever praying for Zion's welfare, we are

ARTHUR AND GRACE FULLERTON.

OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA, July 30, 1911.

Dear Herald: Just a few words regarding the Northern California and Nevada Reunion appointed for September 1 to 10, 1911, at Irvington, which is twenty-six miles southeast of Oakland on the Southern Pacific Railroad. Arrangements have been made with the Southern Pacific, Sante Fe, and Northwestern Pacific, for one and one third fare, on certificate plan. Get certificate with each ticket purchased, if you can not get through on one ticket. Tents will rent as follows: 8 by 10, $2.15; 10 by 12, $2.65; 12 by 14, $3.15. Box mattresses and springs, 75 cents for the time, a few settees at 25 cents each. Bring bedding and empty straw ticks; bring some extra, if you can, for the less fortunate. Meals will be served in our eating house as usual, under the management of a practical restaurant man, the cooking being done by experienced caterers,—white,—and the price will be as low as practicable.

A number of the poorer ones are hesitating whether to come or not, on account of expenses. We make this appeal in behalf of such, if any of the more able ones wish to donate for the special purpose of helping to lessen the expense of the poorer brother or sister, if they will place it in my hands I will use it faithfully to this end, in a confidential way, to avoid embarrassment for anyone. This to me seems in harmony with this blessed latter day evangel. Let us sacrifice for the joy of others and we ourselves will wear the smile of satisfaction.

Nearly all the afternoons will be occupied by other than regular reunion services. Monday at 2 p. m., Religio convention; Wednesday afternoon, Sunday school convention; Thursday afternoon, Woman's Auxilliary; Saturday afternoon, business meeting. The reunion will be organized Friday, September 1 at 11 a. m. A representative of the Herald Office will be present with a stock of books, and also to represent the interests of Graceland College. We welcome such. A variety of elders (all good of course) will be in attendance, among whom is expected our minister in charge, Bro. F. M.

Sheehy. Some extra Sunday school work is being arranged by Sr. M. A. Saxe, our worthy district superintendent; also the Religio work will be thoroughly advertised by our wide-awake district president, Bro. W. H. Dawson. Bring your Quarterlies. The usual entertainment for Friday night is under preparation. All who can furnish a good number report to Sr. M. A. Saxe, 222 Danvers street, San Francisco, who with Bro. W. H. Dawson, Sacramento, have it in charge. Kindly send orders for tents as soon as possible, also mattresses or springs. Those wishing rooms write Bro. J. H. Driver, Irvington, California, who will look after the same,—price as agreed between parties. Straw and hay on grounds at reasonable prices.

You can help us have all things in readiness by concluding what you want and ordering early. We don't expect to have any regular tables for rent, but hope to have boxes from which they can be improvised. We hope all may come with a desire to make others happy and the reunion better for their having been there. In other words, those of Ella Wheeler Wilcox, we would say:

"Talk happiness;

The world is sad enough without your woe;

No path is wholly rough,

Look for the places that are smooth and clear,

And speak of them, to rest the weary ear

Of earth: So hurt by one continuous strain

Of mortal discontent, and grief and pain."

1230 MAGNOLIA STREET.

August 9, 1911.

Editor Saints' Herald: I was in the city of Toronto Sunday, August 7, and I was visiting the Saints' church. In coming into the church, I noticed a rack with papers on the wall, so I pulled one out, a sermon written by R. C. Evans. His text was taken from the Book of Job, "If a man dies will he live again?" A little farther on he mentioned a man born of woman is full of trouble. He cometh forth like a flower and is cut down. I was quite surprised that there are Christian people who believe in the first resurrection. Because these verses and the verse where Christ speaks of the lily in the field, to my knowledge, so far as I can see, is pointing out the first resurrection. I have many times spoken to Christian people about these things and they laughed to my face about it. Now I thank God that I have met people under the sun who do believe like myself. Your Jewish friend,

N. MORRIS.

MOORHEAD, IOWA, August 8, 1911.

Dear Herald: After reading The Marvelous Work and a Wonder by Bro. Daniel Macgregor, we are so pleased with it that we feel that each Saint should own a copy for himself, and at least eight copies more, which can be had for the small sum of one dollar, to loan to your neighbors and friends. This is a most valuable article, covering all the principles of the gospel, the church, the apostasy, and the final restoration. A careful reading of this little book will leave readers in a condition to become members of God's kingdom, or without an excuse when they stand before the judgment bar of God. I hope, dear brothers, that you will send in your orders so fast that our brethren will be compelled to print another and larger edition of this valuable book.

The Voice of Warning is another book which should be in the hands of every Saint, as well as everyone who inquires after truth. Our elders and missionaries everywhere are doing a wonderful lot of work according to the reports, and more souls have been born into the kingdom this year than in the same length of time since the restoration of all things. Praise God for this. But, my dear brothers and sisters, each of us can be a missionary, and if we do our part faithfully, God will bless our efforts. There is more for us to do than attend meetings and living pure lives. We have each a work to do, and God requires us to do all that is in our power. Even if we are poor we can if we will spare a little money for the spread of the gospel. If we can not preach, we can at least buy tracts and books and loan them to our neighbors, and by doing so pave the way for the elders when they come our way. Many a soul has been converted just through the reading of the church literature. George and I were convinced four years before we ever had a chance to obey the gospel, just through reading books and tracts. The Holy Spirit leads.

Yours in the faith,

SADIE BURCH.

TOLAR, NEW MEXICO, August 8, 1911.

Editors Herald: Since arriving in this field the first part of June, I have labored with Bro. T. J. Sheppard, and find him a very congenial helper. In the latter part of June we held a series of ten meetings at this place and left an appointment for another series of meetings to begin July 30. Accordingly, we returned here the 29th and began our meetings as per announcement. Had a good hearing to begin with, and as the time passed the attendance increased and the interest became more intense, and the people here began to invite us to their homes. By this means we were able to become better acquainted with them, and more readily get before them the beauties of the restored gospel, which of course augmented this interest.

On Sunday, the sixth instant, we had a very busy, yet pleasant and profitable day. At 10 a. m. attended the Baptist Sunday school and at 11 the writer spoke to a crowded house on the angel's message and the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. At 3 p. m. we attended the union Sunday school and the writer was asked to teach a class, which of course he did, and at 4 p. m. we repaired to the water, where a large crowd was congregated, and the writer had the pleasure of there burying a precious soul beneath the liquid wave to come forth a new creature, raised to walk in newness of life. The sister was confirmed at the opening of the evening service, and the writer again addressed a crowded house, continuing the subject of the morning. At the close, while we gave privilege for questions, a gentleman, the superintendent of the union Sunday school, arose and said, "I would like to speak a word." Permission was granted, and he said, "These men have been here with us a couple of weeks altogether, and have worked hard, and while I can't indorse everything they have said, I know they have done good here, and we don't want them to have to walk out of town, so I suggest that we take up a collection for them. I therefore will ask Brother Scroggs to pass the hat, and let each give as they feel able." The hat was thus passed and a silver collection taken and turned over to us, and we thanked them for their consideration.

The interest justified the writer in staying and continuing the meetings an evening or two longer, while Brother Shepard returned to Jordan, where we have a good interest manifested. The writer will leave for Tularosa about the tenth, where we have a week's meetings announced, Sisters Marie and Hannah Richter making the arrangements for us there.

We are hopeful in the conflict and hope to be able to bless our fellow-men with the blessings of the gospel. We have fond memories of those we have met and associated with in other fields and hope they will not fail to uphold us by their prayers. From Tularosa the writer intends to go on his way to Arizona, while Brother Sheppard will remain in this part of the field and look after the work here. There are some here who are not far from the kingdom.

May the time be hastened when the gospel of peace will have greater sway, is the prayer of your humble servant.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

COOTER, MISSOURI, August 2, 1911.

Editor Herald: I am in extreme southeastern Missouri, in what is generally called the swamps, where the gospel horn was never heard until I came here. I landed here the 14th of December and I got an opening to preach the next Sunday night and gladly accepted the chance. After I found there were some good hearted people here, I wrote for Bro. C. L. Snow, and he responded to the call and held a week's meeting and made friends of all that heard him, but one or two who could not endure sound doctrine. So the people want Snow, as they call him, to come back, and I have got him to promise to come, and we expect to begin a meeting here on what is known as the Frankling Lake Farm, the fourth Saturday in August. This was a lake of water ten years ago, and Mr. J. E. Frankling ditched it out, and now it is one of the best farms in southeastern Missouri. Mr. Frankling is a millionaire and lives at Saint Louis, so the preacher that he has employed to preach here tells me. He said some were trying to get him to stop me from preaching here, and he told Mr. Frankling about it and he simply said we were a mighty good people.

A few weeks ago I went over to Hollen, about eight miles from here, and preached twice in the Christian church to a good crowd, at least two hundred people, but the truth was so strong that they could not endure it, or at least some could not, and they got up and replied to some things I said. He said the church was where two or three had met together in the Lord's name, and said it was not Joe Smith's church nor a Mormon church. He said the gift of healing was that they would heal the sin sick soul. When he got through he called for a song. I asked for time to say a few more words, but he said no, nothing else for this time, so I left another appointment for that neighborhood. They would not let me use the church any more unless I would preach what they called the gospel. I told them I would preach the word, and of course that is what hurts. So may the Lord's work prosper.

Yours in the one faith,

U. S. GOWER.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, August 7, 1911.

Editors Herald: The good news brought to us each week in the HERALD is read with pleasure. Glad that some are making progress.

In my crippled condition I have done the best I could for the onward progress of the Master's cause. Since last April I have preached in ten different places. I was at Courtney yesterday. Last night I spoke to a very good congregation with splendid liberty. We are going to build a church at that place. Anyone having a dollar to help in the building please forward it to George O. Adkins, Courtney, Missouri.

I am yours truly,

J. C. FOSS.

If one is going to do anything of much use in the world he must trust something to the common sense of others; he can not spend half his time in explaining to their supposed ignorance or in apologizing to their possible misunderstandings. The fact is that other people are too busy with their own planning and doing to bestow much attention upon ours, and the explaining and apologizing habit is rather the outgrowth of egotism than of necessity or good sense.—Great Thoughts.

News From Missions

Wisconsin.

We will pen a few lines now to your readers. The experiences of the past few weeks have been filled with a degree of sadness, mainly caused by the death of Sr. B. C. Flint, of Evansville. Brother Flint entered the missionary field this conference year. He and the writer have traveled together most of the time, and felt truly blessed in our work. July 1 a baby was born to them, which only lived about six hours. The mother died July 5. It has been a hard blow to Brother Flint, but we can see that he is gaining, never having been very strong in body.

We had the pleasure of attending the Chetek reunion (Northern Wisconsin) and although the attendance was light the services were good and those who made the sacrifice to attend were blessed. Apostle F. A. Smith was present, and the missionaries of the State, also C. H. Burr, of Plano. So there was no lack of speakers. I must not forget to say that Chetek Lake is full of fine fish. I need not tell the rest. We wish now in behalf of the reunion committee of the Southern Wisconsin District to say a few words to the Saints of our district. Notices of time, etc., have been published in HERALD of July 12 and Ensign of July 13. It is a ten-day reunion, and we hope that all who can will come at the beginning. Speakers will be there and all preparations made. All we need is a good lot of earnest, prayerful Saints, and success is certain. However, if any can not come for the full time, remember the gathering in prayer. Also it will be well for those who can not attend to remember that the reunion expense to a large extent must be done away, and the committee will gladly receipt you for any offering you may send, and thus all become laborers together. And while you may be deprived of the reunion this year, you may be there next year and some one else be absent. But we hope all will come, remembering the instruction of the past year, that it is pleasing to God that his Saints meet together from year to year. Brother Flint is with me here in Beloit this week. Two were baptized to-day. Others are interested. We hope that all orders for tents will come in by August 20. Address August Gratz or J. O. Dutton, 2005 Elmside boulevard, Madison, Wisconsin.

Hopefully trusting,

JASPER O. DUTTON.

BELOIT, WISCONSIN, 816 Kenwood Avenue.

Denmark.

My chief labor has been at this place little more than a year, and have done the best I could under existing conditions in this country. We have many things to meet and overcome, yet I have been able to make some friends to the cause since I came here, and was truly glad when, a few days ago, I had the pleasure of baptizing two more worthy people, a man and his wife, and there are others who are very near the door, so I am continually laboring in hopes.

Most of the time in this country, we have to take the gospel home to the people in their houses, which makes it slow work; but we have to interest the people in their homes before it is possible to get them to come out to our meetings.

I am preaching Sundays and other times when I am able to get a few persons together, and the Lord is blessing me in presenting the message of truth, and my desire is that many honest souls may be gathered into his kingdom, at this and other places.

I hope the time will soon come when the Lord will open

HELSINGBORG, FURNTORFSGATAN 7, July 25, 1911.

News From Branches.

Independence, Missouri.

On the 28th of July there was a copious downpour of rain; but we are again in the throes of a torrid atmosphere, —yesterday the register being around 100 degrees.

We have been gratified by the few little summer showers visiting us of late, humbly noted by the poet as "A drop fell on the apple tree, another on the roof; a half dozen kissed the eaves, and made the gables laugh."

The busy Religians met on August 4 and gave a good program, consisting of three papers in line with the work of the good literature committee, also a vocal solo, "Cast thy bread upon the waters," by Sr. Corinne Haines. The first hour is always taken up with devotional exercises, including songs from Zion's Praises, and the study of the Book of Mormon. They have an earnest, faithful corps of teachers and officers, with Bro. Mark H. Seigfried, in lieu of Bro. Herbert Barto, now of Lamoni, as president.

A few of the Saints who have been away on a pleasant vacation have, we are glad to mention, returned, and some who have been sick and afflicted are convalescent. Our beloved Brother Joseph, whom we have seen at the meetings quite seldom the past week or two, has suffered much at times with little surcease from pain and distress, and all this, although the Saints are striving to bear him up before our heavenly Father continually. Though his stay with us be long or short, as was indicated in words of prophecy last Sunday afternoon through Patriarch Kemp, may his true and unwearying devotion to a life in Christ, being full of patience and love and implicit trust in Him who long years ago called him to his high and holy work, be an incentive and inspiration to all his beloved ones, the brethren, who shall be spared a little longer to emulate so noble an example.

In Brother Garrett's sermon of the morning, the thoughts expressed in Matthew 6: 12-15, he told his hearers that "the whole scheme of salvation is based on love." "Truth and righteousness must ever be the standard by which we shall be judged, and love must dominate our lives in all our intercourse with one another." Bro. Joseph Arber, who discoursed in the evening on the different dispensations, made the statement that "there is only one thing that can correct the great mistake made at the beginning, and that is the plan of the gospel." He thought it indeed strange that with all the preaching that has been done, so few have been obedient to its teachings and have planted their faith upon the Rock of Revelation.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Comins, Michigan.

We are glad to note that the Saints are striving to keep in unity of spirit, and feel the great necessity of doing so. The gifts of the gospel, manifested from time to time, give us great courage.

July 2 Bro. and Sr. Noel Stark's baby was blessed by Elders Ernest N. Burt and Emory D. Fultz; also July 29 the baby of Bro. and Sr. Elmer Dimick was blessed by the same elders.

The preaching here of late has certainly been very instructive, and under the power of the Spirit of the Master. It makes us feel glad that God is guiding his servants and we know that it is for our good.

We are looking forward to a good time at our two-day meeting, which will be held at Riverdale September 2 and 3. A hearty welcome is extended to all.

Conference Minutes.

MINNESOTA.—Conference of the Minnesota District was held during the reunion at Frazee, Minnesota, meeting in several sessions from June 24, to June 30, 1911. F. M. Smith and L. A. Gould were in charge. All branches reported: Audubon 85, Oak Lake 72, Minneapolis 90, Union 170, Bemidji 54. Bishop's agent's report and district treasurer's report read, audited and found correct. Bishop's agent reported balance due church of $142.60; District president's report was read, suggesting that funds were needed to enable local ministers to get out into available places to hold services, and asking whether such funds might be supplied by the bishop's agent, or if the district should create a fund especially for that purpose. A motion prevailed to refer the matter to the district presidency, they to secure the necessary information and decide. Ministers reporting: L. Houghton, J. W. Smith, T. J. Martin, P. W. Martin, Alonzo Whiting, L. Whiting, W. C. Griffin, W. E. Shakespeare, G. G. Buell, Delbert Whiting. Moved and carried that the district presidency be authorized to appoint an auditing committee previous to the convening of the conference to audit the bishop's agent's report, so as to have their report prepared in time for conference. The library commission was requested to report formally to succeeding conferences. Officers elected: Leon A. Gould, president; L. Whiting, vice-president; Hallie M. Gould, secretary-treasurer; Eleanor Whiting, member of the library board. Leon A. Gould was recommended to the bishop for appointment as bishop's agent. A resolution from the Bemidji Branch, asking that the conference approve the organization of an Order of Enoch in Northern Minnesota was decided negatively. A reunion in 1912 was provided for to be held at Clitherall. Adjourned to meet at Bemidji at call of presidency. Hallie M. Gould, secretary.

SASKATCHEWAN.—Conference of the Saskatchewan District convened at Sedley, July 29 and 30, the meetings being held in the new town hall. The basement was used for serving meals, which proved very satisfactory. Saturday, July 29, prayer meeting 8 to 9.30 o'clock. Elder T. J. Jordan in charge of business meeting, with Sr. Grace Beckman acting as secretary. It was resolved that Pres. Fred M. Smith, Apostle William H. Kelley, Elders T. J. Jordan and E. E. Long preside over the conference. The minor officers and committees were appointed by the presidency. Reports of delegates T. J. Jordan and H. J. Davison from General Conference were read. This was appreciated by all who had the privilege of hearing. Reports from the various branches and officers were read. Meeting at 2 p. m. opened with E. E. Long in the chair. Auditors' report was read, Brn. C. V. Smith, J. L. Mortimore, and Nelson were appointed a committee to take up a subscription to defray the expenses of the conference, so that the whole burden would not fall on Elder Jordan. The place and date of the next conference was left in the hands of President Jordan. Report of the district president was read by the secretary. The following officers were reelected: Elder T. J. Jordan, Sedley, president; Elder J. Dobson, vice-president; Elder J. A. Beckman, second vice-president; Sr. Grace Beckman, secretary; Elder J. A. Beckman, treasurer. The old tent was ordered to be set aside, owing to its being so badly torn, and those in charge were given power to purchase a new one if necessity demands. Quorums of priests were organized and presented to the body by Pres. F. M. Smith. The appointments were indorsed by the conference and their ordination provided for. The district voted one hundred dollars toward the Graceland College fund. At 8 p. m. Patriarch Lewis preached, assisted by Elder J. L. Mortimore. Brother Moorman gave a cornet solo, which was very much appreciated. Sunday, July 30, prayer meeting at 8 o'clock, 85 being present, 35 testimonies borne, and a number of prayers offered. At 11 Elder J. A. Beckman, bishop's agent, was the speaker. At 2.30 p. m. Apostle William H. Kelley occupied, assisted by Elder Anderson. At 7 those who were baptized in the afternoon were confirmed members of the church, and officers of the quorum of priests were ordained.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of South Dakota, Greeting; It is that time of the year when we are all realizing the fruits of our labors, whether it be in the harvest field, in the mercantile business, or in the mechanical world. We have all labored in hope; we had the faith to plant, to buy, to build, and there are very few of us but have realized in a greater or less degree a measure of success; of increase. We are all endowed with a certain amount of wisdom, and there is placed in our reach various means of finding out the secrets of success in our different callings. It is the duty of the farmer to study the nature of the soil, its needs and adaptability; the business man can so arrange his wares as to attract the attention of the passerby; the mechanic can experiment, study and plan, and we are all bettered to the extent we put effort into it. And with all our studying and efforts we are not left alone, but we are told to pray for our temporal needs, for our flocks and fields; and in our studies we are offered help from the great source of knowledge if we ask in faith.

It has been said, and we believe truly, that "Without me ye can do nothing." This being true we must be indebted to the source of help. In other words, we are simply instruments used for the purpose of production, and did you ever stop to think that we are not used against our will or as slaves and servants only? Do we realize that in this production we are allowed all we need to care for ourselves, and that after that need is met, we are only asked to give a tenth of what is left? We as Saints have entered into partnership with the only one that can give life, health, and increase. He furnishes the capital in the sun and rain, and in the knowledge we have of our business. We are simply acting as his stewards while he is away. Can a man rob God? We all know we can, by keeping back a part of his share of the profits. While we can rob him, we can not fool him, and the measure we meet to him now will be measured to us in that day when the books will be balanced. Let us be honest.

There are those who are giving all their time to the spread of the gospel and are not to have the strength to labor in the affairs of men. We are to support and sustain them in the work that God has seen fit to call them into. We can do this by our prayers and money. They have left their loved ones at home and they must be fed and clothed; we must do that for them, or they will not be able to advance the work that has been entrusted to all.

Yours for the advancement of the cause,
E. E. WILLARD, Bishop's Agent.

SMITH.—Mrs. Kezziah Dobson Smith was born in Pottawattamie County, Iowa, November 7, 1848, and died at her home in Clearwater, Nebraska, August 1, 1911, after an illness of several months, at the age of 62 years, 8 months, and 24 days. She was married to James H. Smith on March 24, 1866, at Deloit, Iowa. To this union were born ten children, nine of whom, with her husband, survive her,— five girls and four boys, six of whom were at the bedside to minister to her wants to the last. Sister Smith obeyed the gospel in November, 1863, and remained a true and faithful member to the time of her demise by example and precept and instruction to those around her, and was always of an inspiring character. She was the daughter of Uncle Tommy Dobson, of Deloit, Iowa. Services in the hall at Clearwater, Bro. F. S. Gatenby in charge, sermon by Elder J. C. Crabb. Between five and six hundred people attended the services, showing the respect in which Sister Smith was held by all who knew her.

Softly wave the silver hair
About that aged brow,
That crown of glory worn so long,
A fitting crown is now;
Fold reverently the weary hands
That toiled so long and well,
And while your tears of sorrow fall;
Let sweet thanksgiving swell;
She's safe within her Father's home,
Where many manisons be,
Oh, pray that such a rest may come,
Dear hearts, to you and me.

She was born at Dubuque, Iowa, in 1846; married Edward Brantwait in 1864; baptized at Mound Valley, Kansas, in 1873; resided in Lamoni since 1881. Of thirteen children born, eight survive her, as also does her husband. Five daughters live in or near Lamoni, two elsewhere in Iowa, and the only son in Montana. She always testified to the gospel. Funeral service was in charge of Bro. John Smith; prayer by Bro. J. R. Lambert; sermon by Bro. H. A. Stebbins.

ASHLEY.—Sister Catherine E. Ashley passed peacefully from earth life on Aug. 9, 1911, at the home of her son William in Napa, California, where she had gone for a change only the Sunday before. She was 68 years of age, having lived most of this time in Lake County, near Middletown, California. She leaves two sons and two daughters and many close friends to mourn the separation. Some thirty years ago she was baptized into the church which she loved dearly during her life. The remains were taken to Middletown for burial, the services being held at the M. E. church, the choir rendering the music; Sermon by Elder J. M. Terry from Job 5:26; Malachi 3:17; John 12:24. The service was solemn and comforting.

BARR.—Charles Hart Barr was born May 14, 1833, at Amherst, Ohio. He was united in marriage with Miss Elzina Hendry, April 13, 1856, and was baptized by Elder E. C. Briggs, March 30, 1874. He died at Lamoni, Iowa, August 14, 1911. The services were at the home, August 16, Elder

John F. Garver in charge, sermon by Elbert A. Smith. He is survived by his aged wife, five children, fourteen grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren. His grandfather fought in the Revolution, his father in the War of 1812, and he in civil war. He was also enlisted in a greater conflict, in the army of the Lord. His last words were, "Let me die like Simeon of old."

VANDEL.—Near Lamoni, Iowa, July 28, 1911, Gilbert D., infant son of Mr. and Mrs. John S. Vandel and grandson of Bro. and Sr. Joseph Bogue, aged 2 months and 4 days. The disease was of the spine. WRIGHT.—Opal Louisa, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Matthew Wright, was born December 21, 1909; died August 9, 1911, age 1 year, 7 months, 19 days. The circumstances surrounding the death of this sweet child were very sad, accidental poisoning being the cause of her death. While her pure spirit is resting in the paradise of God, he alone can give lasting consolation to the loved ones who so deeply feel here the loss of little Louisa. Funeral at Greenridge, Iowa, August 11, in charge of and preaching by C. B. Brown. Interment in Eddyville cemetery.

Editorial

LEGAL MARRIAGE CEREMONIES.

Some time ago we received the following letter from a sister in the church:

Editors Herald: I desire to ask a question which I wish you would answer through the columns of the HERALD. According to the laws of my State, a marriage ceremony performed by one who is not a citizen of the United States is not legal. The law reads thus: "A marriage ceremony may be performed by any judge, justice of the peace, or any regularly ordained minister who is a citizen of the United States."

As a church we claim to be law-abiding citizens, and when one who holds the priesthood in this church who is not a citizen of the United States performs a marriage ceremony when he knows he has no authority to do so in this State, is that elder or priest in good standing, and does the church as a church sanction a marriage ceremony and consider it binding on the parties, when the law of the State says it is not legal and will not stand in the courts? In this State a man and a woman can agree between themselves to live together as man and wife and after they have so lived for two years they are considered legally married, without any ceremony; but should members of the church live in adultery for two years and render little children illegitimate because the one who performed the ceremony has no right to do so?

If there is a law in the church in regard to this important question I would like to know it, as I was married by an elder who was born and raised in another country. He is not a citizen of the United States. Until a year ago he was ignorant of the law of this State, but last week he performed a marriage ceremony. Where does he stand as one of the priesthood, and in what condition are the parties whom he marries? If I am legally married I want to know it.

We have accordingly given this subject considerable thought and study. It is, of course, largely a question of law, but there enter into it some features to be considered from the viewpoint of a member of the church.

The principal questions involved are in effect as follows: From the standpoint of the law of the land, does the noncompliance or the failure to comply with all the formalities prescribed by statute of a State invalidate a marriage? And the second follows the first and is dependent upon its answer: From the viewpoint of a member of the church, what is the status of one married by formalities not prescribed by law or in violation thereof, if the courts should declare or hold such marriage ceremony illegal?

It is our conclusion after much research that the laws of the various States in regard to marriage ceremonies are but directory, the purpose of legislation on the subject being largely the desirability of regularity and of record.

Tiffany, in his work on Personal Relations, under the heading, "Formalities in celebration," says:

In most, if not all the States, statutes have been enacted prescribing formalities to be observed in the celebration of marriages,—as, for instance, statutes prescribing the persons who shall be competent to perform the marriage ceremony, or requiring a license, publication of banns, consent of parents, registration, etc. By the great weight of opinion in this country, however, these statutes should be construed as directory merely, and not mandatory, unless they are expressly made mandatory, by their terms; and marriages which are in other respects valid at common law are held to be valid in spite of any informality in their celebration, unless the statute expressly declares that failure to observe the prescribed formality shall render the marriage void.

In Iowa, for instance, certain formalities are prescribed and a penalty is provided for a violation of some of them, and yet a common law marriage in Iowa is perfectly valid.

We do not presume that many of the States go further than to prescribe the formalities of the celebration of marriage, and unless they specifically state that they are mandatory they would be construed by any court to be merely directory.

We quote the following from the court's decision in the case of Meister against Moore, 96 United States 76,—1877:

A statute may declare that no marriages shall be valid unless they are solemnized in a prescribed manner; but such an enactment is a very different thing from a law requiring all marriages to be entered into in the presence of a magistrate or a clergyman, or that it be preceded by a license, or publication of banns, or be attested by witnesses. Such formal provisions may be construed as merely directory, instead of being treated as destructive of a common law right to form the marriage relation by words of present assent. And such, we think, has been the rule generally adopted in construing statutes regulating marriage.

From the same:

As before remarked, the statutes are held merely directory; because marriage is a thing of common right, because it is the policy of the State to encourage it, and because, as has sometimes been said, any other construction would compel holding illegitimate the offspring of many parents conscious of no violation of law.

Again:

This has become the settled doctrine of the American courts.

Greenleaf, in his book on evidence, says:

It is generally considered, that, in the absence of any positive statute declaring that all marriages not celebrated in the prescribed manner shall be void, or that none but certain ministers or magistrates shall solemnize a marriage, any marriage, regularly made according to the common law, without observing the statute regulations would still be a valid marriage.

So we can say to this sister, in view of the foregoing, unless her State has statutes declaring marriages not according to prescribed formalities to be void, we can not see but what her marriage was perfectly valid under the law.

Thus far we have dealt with the legal question; that is, as to what view the courts take or would be likely to take of ceremonies not strictly regular or conforming in all details to prescribed formalities. The common law, of course, would give legality to marriages and would therefore legitimize the children of unions even where there is no formality or ceremony other than an agreement, "words of present intention," to live together as man and wife, followed by cohabitation.

Supposing, then, for the sake of argument, that where statutory formalities are ignored or violated, the parties must look to the common law for the validity of their marriage, in what position would one find himself who is a member of the church and desires to live up to the laws of God and the laws of the land? Most certainly, as a bald proposition, does God's law frown on a common law marriage, the solemnization as prescribed in section 111 of the Doctrine and Covenants being clearly within the requirements of the laws of all the States, so far as the writer is informed; but in the case of the sister who makes the inquiry, we can in no way question the sanctity of her marriage, because it was performed or solemnized by one of the Lord's chosen servants. So taking it all together, we can but arrive at the following conclusions: The marriage of the sister would doubtless be held legal, if the question would come before the courts (and without doubt this question has been settled in most of the States); or, if because of irregularity the ceremony would be held not legal, yet the marriage, the living together as man and wife, would get its validity through the common law, and a minister of the church having participated in such a service or ceremony, we do not question but that the Lord would sanction it.

The sister's reference to the rule of the common law, as she put it, appears to us to be nothing more than a rule of evidence. As we understand it, should any question come up in regard to the marriage of parties who have lived together for more than two years, it would not be necessary for the litigant alleging marriage to prove anything more than that the parties had lived together for that period. The marriage, though a common law marriage, would be legal, and the children would be legitimate, just the same as if regularly married by proper and prescribed ceremony.

The other questions growing out of the sister's inquiry we will treat rather briefly. What of the elder who performs a service of this kind who is a foreigner, or a citizen of another State, when the law requires a citizen of the United States or of the State? A number of the States provide a penalty in such cases. In Iowa any minister is qualified if he is "ordained and licensed according to the usages of his denomination." He could be a foreigner. However, the code of this State provides a penalty as follows:

Marriages solemnized, with the consent of the parties, in any other manner than as herein prescribed, are valid; but the parties thereto, and all persons aiding or abetting them, shall forfeit to the school fund the sum of fifty dollars; but this shall not apply to the person conducting the marriage ceremony, if within ninety days thereafter he makes the required return to the clerk of the district court.

And it goes still farther:

The provisions of this chapter, so far as they relate to procuring licenses and to the solemnizing of marriages, are not applicable to members of any particular denomination having, as such, any peculiar mode of entering the marriage relation.

It will be seen therefore that the Iowa laws are quite flexible, but we know that the laws of other States are different. We suggest that our elders inform themselves as to the laws where they labor, that they may know their rights and also keep within the law.

Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land.— Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5.

There is the further question as to the church standing of a minister who in violation of statute conducts such a marriage ceremony, as where a foreigner participates when the statute says the minister must be a citizen of the United States. We do not know of any action having been taken by the church in regard to anything of this kind. We do not know that it would affect his status in any way as a minister. If he should be called upon to pay a penalty for the violation of law he would be considered a lawbreaker to that extent, which would be unpleasant to say the least. We do not know that he would be breaking any law of God other than the injunction to observe the laws of the land, as referred to in the foregoing, nor do we know of any General Conference resolution touching this question.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

We commend the following extract from The Evening Mail (New York) to the attention and thought of our readers:

"Great Russia, our salutations; that is, if the utterances of your leading newspapers, that you give us attention, and are disposed to stand by your treaty, are true. American citizens, even if Jews, are to be respected in their rights. Is that really it? As a nation you favor this, apparently, whatever your officials may say or do, and will force your Government into the enlightened policy.

"Let us be the best of friends. Pardon us, but take a leaf out of our book. Learn of us, and learn fast, for events move fast now. Know no Jew, nor Gentile, nor Baptist, in the citizen. Government hands off the conscience. And may the best survive. Plant the public free school all along your Pacific railroad. Grant local self-government, and make a hundred little states out of all your vast domain, all the way to the Ural Mountains. Your destiny staggers the thought. A score of Chicagos, of Denvers and Omahas, dotting those measureless spaces. It is certain the migrant race is to cross the Pacific. America is getting full. But nothing less than equal rights and liberty of conscience could make such a state cohere. Again, let us hope that these reports are true, and that the introduction of a wider and more fraternal governmental action is at hand."

Ten ministers of New York City draw a salary of one hundred and twenty-three thousand dollars. One of these came from England and one was born in that city; the rest were called from other American cities. The Baltimore Southern Methodist gives quite a list of preachers there who receive upward of seven thousand five hundred dollars, and comments as follows:

"And these salaries, or any others of the ten recently called, are not over liberal, for expenses are enormous. Were the salaries not at these high figures only wealthy men could afford to accept the positions. It is not that great men demand big pay. The salaries are made what they are simply to meet conditions."

Dr. C. A. Eastman, an American Indian, author of the book called The Soul of the Indian, has recently returned from Europe, where he was the sole representative of the three hundred thousand Indians of this country at a conference of races. To a reporter Doctor Eastman spoke as follows:

"I am opposed to the sending of missionaries among the Indians. It is useless for you Americans to try to force your religion on us until you have perfected you own race. You do not practice what you preach.

"As a nation you are rotten. You have ruined the red man by your materialism. Time was when my race was alone with nature. Then the Puritans came, then you came, and next the missionaries.

"You have made the Indians as bad as yourselves. Until you came they did not know the meaning of war. You taught them war, taught them to be thieves and to be drunkards. They have nothing to thank you for."

The world lost a wonderful man when James A. O'Conner died the other day in New York City. He was a converted priest who has for many years conducted a refuge home for Catholic priests, and was editor of a paper called The Converted Catholic. He has been instrumental in enlightening many of the Catholic clergy and made it easier for them to leave Rome without fear of persecution.

From the present outlook Russia will amend its policy in regard to American passports and will recognize and honor those issued to Jews. It seems that President Taft has done more to break Russia's rule as to American Jews than his predecessors. It seems that the sentiment among the leading men of Russia is to get away from some of their ancient and narrow policies.

Pope Pius X who has been seriously ill for some time has had a change for the better, though there is fear that the pontiff may not long survive.

The University of Nanking has been chartered in New York and has already an enrollment of over four hundred students. This is an extension of the New York University and is being fostered by a union of the Presbyterian, Methodist, and Disciples of Christ missions in the city of Nanking, China. Dr. A. Woodruff Halsey, of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign missions, is quoted as follows in regard to the work of this school:

"The union has resulted in much good. Formerly the educators of the three missions were in competition. Now their efforts are merged, and naturally the results are much more satisfactory. The enterprise illustrates the importance of Christian bodies in China working in unison as far as possible. It has given additional courage to the Christian educators, and the Chinese are impressed all the more."

The editor of a Japan leading paper pays this glowing tribute to Christianity: "Look all over Japan. More than forty millions of people have a higher standard of morality than they have ever known. Our ideas of loyalty and obedience are higher than ever, and we inquire the cause of this great moral advance. We can find it in nothing else than the religion of Jesus Christ."

Justice Gerard, of the New York Supreme Court, says that the churches must go into politics. He says that there should be an eleventh rule that everyone to be a church member must vote at the primaries: "The people get as good as they deserve, but if the churches would expel any man not at the primary they could start a public sentiment which would put the control of nominations in the hands of the people at large instead of the professionals."

A recent investigation reveals that there have been one thousand two hundred child suicides in Germany since 1890. Professor Guritt finds but a small percentage of these resulted from weak-mindedness, and he complains of the treatment of children in Germany. He says: "No child would put an end to its life if it found some one to whom it could explain its puzzles, its difficulties, and its troubles. In no country in the world are children so brutally treated as in Germany. We do much more to protect animals than to protect children. In the schools our children lack air, light, freedom, and the possibility of development. Our school system suffers from arterio-sclerosis; it is out of date and deficient in elasticity. But our churches, too, must bear a share of the blame. They inculcate a purely external religion and have no hold whatever on the child heart. Our children should be brought up to find vigorous life a delight instead of a curse, to find their young existence a happiness instead of a treadmill."

The city council of Kansas City, Missouri, has considered passing an ordinance forbidding the use of common communion cups. This would not affect all of the churches there, because individual cups have been used by many of them for some time. The ordinance failed to pass. Saint Louis has passed during communion. The churches of most denominations in that city have complied, but the Episcopal and Lutheran churches are still using a common goblet at the altar rail, according to newspaper reports.

The Federation of American Zionists at its recent annual meeting decided to buy one hundred thousand acres of land every year in Palestine and establish colonies of American Jews. Dr. M. Bodenheimer, of Cologne, Germany, reported that the National Fund Commission had established thirty-eight agricultural colonies in Palestine and also a residential suburb for artisans close to the port of Jaffa.

Correspondence schools for the study of various crafts and professions is the order of the day, and now comes a correspondence school for preachers, the Drew Theological Seminary, Madison, New Jersey, having established a special department for that purpose. It is not properly a part of the seminary, because it is to be nonsectarian. There will be given by this method a seminary course for those who have not had college training, a preparatory course for those who have missed high school, as also a postgraduate course. Mr. E. B. Ferris, a director of the new school says: "All the courses are prepared by experts. We shall add to our faculty as time goes on, and new courses will be offered and the work enlarged. Already, while the movement is still in its infancy, there is a tremendous amount of interest, and we have received letters asking about it and commending it from towns all over the country. It is destined to be the biggest thing of its kind for the help of the ministerial profession that has ever happened."

Because of the great publicity given the proposed Astor-Force wedding we do not think any notice of it is necessary; but an interesting phase has grown out of the attack made upon the marriage by the Rev. Dr. G. C. Richmond, of Philadelphia. It seems that his bishop, the Rev. Dr. A. Mackey-Smith, has considered it his duty to give Reverend Richmond a lecture on his inordinate desire to get into "spotlight" of public attention. This has called out certain charges against the bishop, and they are acting like a couple of boys who want to fight but can't on account of the company. The bishop says in his letter to Reverend Richmond: "I make allowance for you in this matter because I remember that you are the nephew of the person who when I was a boy was known as 'Crazy Richmond' because he made himself a scandal in every community he ever entered.

"This feeling that you are not quite right in the upper story is now generally believed by the clergy of Philadelphia. . . .

"The only reason I let you off now is to avoid the horrible scandal which would issue as soon as the church learned your career. . . .

"Because of your horrible vanity as well as your rage for self-advertising and the fact that you seem to hate everyone and are utterly insubordinate on general principles, you have flung your whole life away and are condemned to third-rate uselessness. . . .

"Believe me, you might become a decent, respectable, useful fellow."

And the reverend replies as follows, in the columns of the press: He says "the bishop himself is a member of the smart set, luxuriates in a large income, has some of his closest friendships among the idle rich, maintains palatial residences in town and country, and is or has been pronouncedly fond of the material pleasures of life.

"It is only to have been expected, then, that he would be aghast when I turned the light on the aristocracy, when I let out straight from the shoulder and roughly jostled the banquet board.

"Moreover, from the minute I showed mental independence and progressiveness in the conduct of my parish my name has been written down largest in Bishop Mackey-Smith's black book."

And of which, to say the least, is a most unchristainlike way for a "right reverend doctor" and a "reverend doctor" to treat each other.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WHITMER MONUMENT.—We have received a copy of the Kansas City Star which says that a shaft is to be erected in David Whitmer's memory at Richmond. Then follows a story of Whitmer's connection with the church, with the testimony of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon. Mr. Whitmer's grandson, Mr. George W. Schweich, is quoted in this article. But we have received word from Brother Siegfried, editor of Zion's Ensign, that he is in receipt of a letter from Mr. Schweich stating that the part relating to the proposed monument is a mistake, that the rumor is that it is to be erected in memory of Oliver Cowdery.

SAMPLE OF ACCURACY.—The Globe and Commercial Advertiser, New York, says: "Kirtland will be revisited this week by the hosts of the Latter Day Saints, descendants of the Mormons who settled the Ohio town, and built the stone Mormon temple there in the thirties.

"The reunion will start Wednesday. Joseph Smith, 70 years old, son of the prophet Joseph Smith, who founded the Mormon faith, will revisit Kirtland, the scene of his birth and will head the Saints in their pilgrimage.

"The Latter Day Saints who are coming back to Kirtland are separate from the Mormon Church of Utah. Once more the Kirtland temple will resound to the mystic rites as it did before Kirtland was abandoned in 1837. The Latter Day Saints will camp around the temple as their ancestors did when they came to Kirtland with a wagon train 2,000 strong in 1832."

SECRET RITES.—A press clipping sent us deals briefly with the Kirtland reunion, and says that great "secrecy" will be maintained during the reunion, for, says this paper, "there is much concerning the services in the old temple that the leaders are disinclined to reveal." It is not to be wondered at that the average person has long ago put newspapers and their writers down as those who, as the old darky expressed it, prefer to sell a lie on time than the truth for cash.

SERVICES AT INDEPENDENCE.—Brother Siegfried sends us neat folder programs for the Independence Branch, Sunday school, and Religio, etc. These folders are gotten out for each Sunday, giving in outline the coming week's program, hymns, solos, organ voluntaries, choristers, preachers, in fact complete information. This is a suggestion for all city branches.

Associate Editor E. A. Smith is attending the Kirtland Reunion. From there he goes to various eastern points.

THE CHILDREN'S HOME.

On August 15, in the afternoon, were held the opening services at the Children's Home. They commenced at 4 o'clock, the home and grounds being open to visitors from 2 to 9 o'clock. Many called and were entertained. The home is pleasant and seems to be in good hands, under the management of Brother and Sister Robinson.

The addresses follow in the order given, as reported by Sr. Estella Wight:

ADDRESS OF SR. B. C. SMITH.

My Friends: Admiral Togo says that happiness is the realization of our anticipations, our hopes, and our desires. He made this statement when he answered the welcome that he received on his arrival in this country; saying, "I am in America; I am happy."

We, the members of this society, who have been working so long for this Children's Home, see the realization of our hopes and our anticipations in this building where we are now gathered together, and we are happy. We are happy to see it completed, and yet while we are happy in this, we realize that there is still a greater work before us.

We have worked now for seven years in anticipation of rearing this home: but indeed we had an anticipation of it even before that time. The first conception of the Children's Home, was had by Sister Hulmes, in Independence, in 1902, when a mother deserted her four little children, and there was difficulty in placing them in suitable homes, and during that effort to find homes for them Sister Hulmes said, "Oh, we must have a children's home." We are not working up to our ideals unless we are doing something that will help the helpless and make homes for the homeless, and we considered the matter in the next Advisory Board meeting at Independence, nearly all of the board being located there at that time. We passed a resolution to the effect that we would consult with the Bishopric and stake officers of Independence Stake with regard to the work before taking any steps towards it. In consultation with them, they advised us to defer the matter for a season, saying that the stake had recently been organized and there had been a call for consecrations, and they were afraid that if we undertook it at that time it would detract from the interests of the consecrations and the stake.

So we deferred the matter—left it for another time, and it was not brought up again in Independence, but it was brought up here in Lamoni by Sister Walker, our beloved Sister Walker, who has labored so untiringly in the interests of the church, especially in the interests of the young, and who has done so much towards developing the energies of the women of the church and helping them to feel that they can be a power for good in the church. She presented the matter to the Advisory Board, and after this other experience we were ready at once to take it up. But the board did not think it held the right to assume such a responsibility without the indorsement of the body in a general meeting. However, we went to work, and said that we would raise a fund, just as much as we could, with the intention of appropriating it for some benevolent purpose. We raised about six hundred dollars the first year. Then in our general meeting in the spring of 1905 we passed a resolution to use this fund for the establishment of a children's home, having consulted with the Bishopric concerning it and securing his approval of our plan. After that, our efforts were approved and it was advised that they be encouraged, by the Lord, through our prophet, and you may be sure that gave us an impetus for our work. We felt that if the Lord recognized our work we wanted to work in harmony with his will, and we have continued to labor with this home in view ever since. As you know, we have been, from time to time, anticipating that our home would be built long before this time; but there have been other duties for the energies and attention of the Bishopric, to them of greater import, and this work has been deferred until this time.

Now we want to assure you that while we have undertaken this work, and it has been thus far accomplished, we are not going to give up the work, nor do we intend to throw the whole financial burden on the Bishop; but we want every sister in this church to feel that she has a part in it. We can gather up money in small collections that would never find its way into the Bishop's fund and secure them for the support of this home.

We have already started a fund in Independence, in our local there, and we are securing subscriptions for five cents a month among the members of the church. We have, I think, one thousand subscriptions. That is a thousand five cent pieces coming into our society each month. That seems a very small amount each month. We can easily deny ourselves some little indulgence and appropriate the price for this purpose. If such a method should be followed, around in the different branches of the church, we would not have to burden the Bishopric with this home. We could support it without laying it on their shoulders. I believe that every sister will feel a desire to help in this work.

Now that we have a building, there are a great many considerations to be carefully weighed before we can decide exactly the course we are going to pursue; but we are beginning to feel our way and are getting things pretty well planned, and we are happy in the fact that we have been able to secure the services of Brother and Sister Robinson to help us in this work, and while we can not introduce you to our superintendent and matron, each, individually, we would like them to rise and we will present them to you. (Brother and Sister Robinson arose and were presented to the audience.) While we are glad to present them to you, we want also to tell you an incident. We were given a letter to read from one of our missionaries whose wife had recently died, and he wished to place his children in the home. He said in the letter that he knew no woman in the church with whom he would rather place his children than with Sister Robinson. And you may be sure that made us feel good.

There have been a good many sisters working in the interests of this home, making bedding and clothing, and if there are any present who have not visited this little room (pointing to the nursery) and noted the work of one sister, I would like to call your attention to it and ask you to do so. She is a poor woman, and an afflicted one, having lived on a milk diet for nearly two years. Nearly every article in that room is the work of her own hands. She made the bodies of the dolls as well as the clothing. She had the rheumatism so bad in her arms and shoulders that she could not use crutches, so she was confined to the house. And yet, under these disadvantages, she has made this great amount of garments and things to amuse the children. You will be astonished at her ingenuity and her patience in making these little garments, and they are nearly all made from scraps, such as a good many of us would think were of no use. She made the remark in one of her letters that she would like to get into some of our scrap baskets.

One other sister I would like to mention who labored diligently, making sixteen quilts, all her own work, thus showing her great love for and interest in the unfortunate little ones.

Now, brothers and sisters, you are to hear an address from Sister Walker, which I think will be more interesting than what I can say, so I will close.

ADDRESS OF SR. M. WALKER.

The remark was made to me recently by Mr. Lee Francis Lybarger (one of our late Chautauqua lecturers) that he was glad to have come to Lamoni—glad to have met our people, and he added, "It is an inspiration to me and strengthens me in my work to meet with people who have convictions and who are willing to labor, and if need be to sacrifice for those convictions."

I was glad indeed to hear this. Glad to know that our people simply by the untraceable influence of personal contact, could make upon an entire stranger such a favorable impression. The more especially so as this man was a cultured man of the world and one whose convictions were of the highest type.

Convictions (if they are sufficiently strong) lead to the formation of purposes, and the event we have met to celebrate is the result of such convictions joined with the purpose to act upon them.

There are some of you who are pleased to regard me as being among the first to dream of this enterprise. It may be true, for I can not deny that I have often been compelled to recognize myself as a dreamer of dreams, and if the happy event which calls us together did indeed have its conception in one of these dreams, then I can only say, thank God for that dream; and thank him too that we are now where we can see the beginning of its realization.

But, my friends, let me ask you just here, what, in comparison with works, are dreams, and the dreamer with the worker? and then answer in candor, and if you answer as you must see it, your answer will be—nothing.

It is this thought, viz: that by appearing before you to-day the opportunity is given me to remind you of the debt of gratitude we owe to those others who for long weary years have labored, bearing the heat and burden of the entire work, and by whose labors results so encouraging have been wrought, which is at once my justification and my reward. In the midst of many discouragements and much opposition they have labored faithfully and persistently because they had convictions strong and sincere that the church, the world, and the Lord demanded this labor at their hands, and to-day we, with you, are here to felicitate both them and ourselves upon the completion and opening of this home for homeless children. It is indeed a matter worthy of the exchange of our best and tenderest sympathies, our deepest gratitude, thus to see the dreams and aspirations of our souls embodied in this substantial building, with its plain but suitable furnishings, its modern conveniences, and its magnificent surroundings of grand old forest trees and acres of fruitful land.

Much has already been done, but in comparison with that which remains to be done, all this is so infinitely small as almost to be lost in the foreshadowing of that which yet remains to be accomplished: namely, the training and sending forth from this home an army of those who shall carry with them deep and abiding convictions that they are called to be defenders of truth. That God requires and the world demands of them that they shall impart as freely as they have received. Do we realize then, (in order that this work be accomplished)—the responsibility which rests upon those who have the immediate charge of the children who shall come here? And yet even more important, if that may be: Do we realize the duty the entire church owes them? These children are not their own, but they must be parents to them, else the home will prove a failure; will fall short of that which its projectors have intended and prayed that it might accomplish.

This one thought opens up a field so vast, presents the contemplation of a subject so weighty in cares, labors, sacrifices and responsibilities, that I dare do no more than simply refer to it, and in view of the purity, wisdom, self-control, and above all the love which must dominate the lives of those who have this trying position to fill, ask the question, Can the church do less than to uphold by their faith and prayers not only these, but everyone in any way connected with the management of this home? Let us remember that these are God's children, and because they have no father, or it may be no mother to cherish them, to bear with and overlook their faults, they have a double claim upon us who are stretching forth our hands and gathering them here that they may have the blessing of an earthly home and in it be fitted to go forth into the world as champions of truth and righteousness.

ADDRESS BY BISHOP E. L. KELLEY.

No special address has been prepared by me for this occasion, nor did I think that anything special would be demanded. The very fact that the people, all of these, gathered upon this occasion to celebrate in a way the finishing up or preparation of the Children's Home, find the work so complete and well-arranged, is sufficient for them to be satisfied with coming and seeing. Certainly the church in the past few years has been trying to carry out the work of bringing due opportunity to everyone of its children. The first step taken directly in this was to obtain a place for the old people who could not make homes for themselves; and you will remember the readiness with which the Saints entered into that work.

Subsequently the idea was approached that we did not only need help for these old people, but we needed some place where we could educate in a proper sense the younger people of the church, and those outside, too, who wished to profit by the opportunity offered. It was entered into and a great work done towards the accomplishment of it. All of you are acquainted with the efforts in that connection; that of the church, not the efforts of individuals. It is not too much to claim that our heavenly Father was directing all in the work. Now we have reached the position when we can see the duties we owe to each other far more clearly than it was possible for us to see before entering upon this general work for good.

After the educational work had been to an extent accomplished, then we had to prepare for the care of the sick and afflicted ones. Our heavenly Father spoke directly with reference to this; and he directed also in the other work, but not particularly instructing the body therein as in the work of the building of the Sanitarium. All of you know how this was done, and the work, how readily it was accomplished.

While these important works were going on, however, as has been already stated to you by the president of the meeting, some of the sisters in the church were very active in urging the work of preparation for the Children's Home, and there were not only the sisters at Independence who wished to move out and accomplish something in a material way, but I had a delegation from the sisters of Lamoni upon the same errand, as sisters here will remember, and it was after considerable discussion of the matter that they concluded to wait until some of the other work that we had on hand was finished.

Now we can look upon all this work as that which is for the present and eternal good of the work of our Master and his children in this world. When Jesus was here he told one of the chief men to whom he had intrusted his work, "Feed my sheep"; but he did not only do that, but he instructed him again, "Feed my lambs."

It is just as necessary in our work that we look after and prepare for the younger ones as the older ones, but it is right and proper to look after the older ones first; if we had not done this there would have been so much criticism, especially if we had placed the younger ones ahead while the older ones were needing help; that would have been disastrous, but it is right and proper now that the lambs receive attention. And this is what our heavenly Father called attention to in the revelation directing the building of the Sanitarium, as follows:

There should also be a home for children established, and the effort of the Daughters of Zion should be approved and carried into completion as soon as is consistent with the necessary demands of the work of the church in other directions.

Now I am glad this afternoon that the time has come when the work or preparation of the Children's Home has been finished to a great extent, and that you are here to see what has been done, and what the sisters have accomplished by their energies and perseverance in the matter. I congratulate everyone of them upon their work, and everyone of you who have helped; and should not everyone be congratulated because all have been ready to put forth a helping hand whenever and wherever you could.

But there's more to this than you see just here. What is the object of all this? Sometimes they come to me and say, "Brother Kelley, what are you going to do with all these children? Will you be handing them out here and there to others to bring up pretty soon?" Not unless we have places where they will be treated as well as those of their own family, or where a man would raise them as his own children. And the children who come here must have the advantages that are in the world to-day. The opportunity that we are to give to these children, will make them equal, if they profit by it, to any other children, and having given them such opportunity and training when they go into different neighborhoods, near or far, instead of going there in order for somebody to take them in and provide for them in a way and use them as servants, they will go there to help the neighborhood. They will be helpers in the world, and not simply hindrances or paupers in the world. They will be fitted to do any work that anybody can do along their respective lines. That's the object. Fitting these children so that they will have the opportunities in life that your children and mine have had, and then you do not need ask what are we going to do with them by and by. Why, they will be asked for all through the country everywhere! It seems to me that the demand for such children as that will ever be far greater than the supply. Why not make these children able to go out and supply the demands as the children that are raised in their own homes? So I say that the purpose is to give them such an opportunity here that they may be equal to children raised in their own homes, and thus bring about such an equality in the families of the church as will hasten the day when God's people may be one people; and when selfishness and covetousness, and all the evils that come by our misdirected natures, and that are found in the world may be obliterated, and a true reform effected.

Now we find many erroneous things in traveling in this world that we should not find in the church nor in the world; one is that sentiment that has been accepted in the world to an extent that we are not God's children after all by creation; but that we are simply developed creatures in this life. There is nothing more terrible, nor more absurd when you present it along with the facts. Jesus did not come into the world in order to develop a race and save it; but "to seek and to save the race that was lost." We belong to that race; and in our efforts to bring up these children so that they may take their places, and perform their work by and by, we are filling the type that was had among the children of Israel in the wilderness. You remember that the old people could not be educated and developed sufficiently so that they could pass over and enter into Canaan, because they would not learn. They thought that the way that they had been raised and taught was the only way there was, and they rebelled. They did not even sustain Moses after God had shown them so many miraculous things through him, but they turned against him. Finally the Lord says: I will show you what I have told you all the time, that you can not travel over to the other side of Jordan and go in your way. I will prove to you that I can do it, place you in Canaan. I will let all the older ones die in the wilderness that rebel against me, and will take their children over and they may dwell in it.

Now let us not be that way; but let these older ones among us stand up and say, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord," as Joshua did who finally led the children over across the Jordan. There is a possibility of our work succeeding, but we must be willing to work as our heavenly Father wants us to work, and be willing to help along and give all an opportunity in accordance with their day and generation; and we have to help the sick and afflicted ones; we have to see that our boys and our girls are properly educated.

Boys and girls are too often miseducated in our larger schools. Instead of being educated in the better lines of life they are turned from Christ. Many are taught not to believe that he is the Son of God any more. Great numbers that pass through these larger institutions are turned from the right way, through vain philosophy, false assumption in so-called scientific theories, and lack of personal attention by the better informed and capable instructors. I would rather not have my children educated at all than to have them misinstructed in any such lines. I stand that way to-day firmly, and have stood that way for twenty-five years. But to have them properly educated and informed, to be prepared for their work in life is a different thing. That's what we are trying to do in our work as a body for the young people generally, and for those who are less fortunate. Already our young men and women are scattered almost over the entire globe, and they are working, and striving for the advancement of this work, and some of them do not know the advantages or why they are thus distributed, but it is possible that there is a purpose known to our heavenly Father that will shine out to us in time, and that we shall see accomplished that diffusion of true knowledge that will convince the nations of the certainty of the brotherhood of the race, and the fatherhood of our heavenly and eternal Director.

All of this being evident and true, we must not fail to put forth our hands to help along in every good work. That's one of the finest exhortations that the apostle gave in his time: "Let us be ready in every good work." I know sometimes the people have said, "Do you suppose the Bishop will ever get tired of calling upon the Saints for help? Tithes and offerings for missionary work; consecrations for redeeming the land, offerings for the old people's home; the college; the Sanitarium; and the Children's Home!" But ought not every Latter Day Saint feel glad in his heart that such opportunity has come to him? Are there any who would feel glad if they were excused as helpers in such good works? We should indeed be sorry if we did not have the opportunity to share in the burdens of these good works. And every department and individual has been invited, "Come let us labor together." That is one of the finest things that ever came to the Saints, and if it had not come we would not have been as far in advance as we are to-day.

At the Thurman reunion, held in the western border of the State a few days ago, I called attention to the fact that it had been a blessing to them that they had been able to help in some of these good works, and thus render their accounts to God as they went along in this world. No one is poorer by reason of having performed his duty to God as he moved along in this world. That is what builds and strengthens men and women. It is those who do not improve the time and help, who are the unfortunate, the unwise and weak.

You doubtless remember the history contained in the 29th chapter of 1 Chronicles, where David recounts the efforts of gathering all that he could to provide for the building of the temple that the Lord had commanded to be built. Then he says, "Solomon my son, whom alone God hath chosen, is yet young and tender, and the work is great; for the palace is not for man, but for the Lord God." He was afraid that he had not gathered sufficient for the great undertaking, and he calls the people together, and invites their attention to it. "Now," he says, "I have prepared with all my might for the house of my God the gold for things to be made of gold, and the silver for things of silver." "Moreover," he says, "because I have set my affection to the house of the gold of Ophir, and seven thousand talents and silver, which I have given to the house of my God, over and above all that I have prepared for the holy house, even three thousand talents of gold, of the gold of Ophir, and seven thousand talents of refined silver;" and many other gifts, (enumerating them,) in order to establish this. He then instructs them that lest there be not enough yet, he will give other further opportunity, and asks how many of Israel will bring a gift and bring it willingly and place it in the proper place for the building of the temple and preparing the surrounding conditions. And the record states that all the people of Israel came and brought their offerings and laid them down until they had gathered thousands, and they brought and gave them to the treasurer of the house of the Lord. "Then the people rejoiced for that every man who gave his gift offered it willingly to the Lord." David, after he saw that the gifts were willingly brought, thanked God and blessed his name and Israel. It is a beautiful picture. I wish you would turn back and read it; it will not be a great while before we will be called upon to move willingly in another great work and fulfill another command of our heavenly Father. But when it comes let us do it cheerfully; from the heart "willingly," and it will be to our own good, and to the glory of God, who is ever interested in his children doing right. When the time shall come, are there any who will not be anxious to help?

Who do you think should have credit for all these good works that have been enumerated before you to-day—the old people's homes; the place of education and instruction; the house for the care of the sick and afflicted; and the Children's Home? Who should have the credit? Should it not be our heavenly Father who has done so much for us? He has wrought with our help. No individual in this world should claim the credit. The Lord has been directing and his children are the helpers. Credit to him to whom credit is due.

Within the past three months an urgent appeal has been made that we place an old lady in one of our homes who has formed certain habits in life, and she wants to know in the first place if she will be permitted to do as she pleases if she comes. In the second place she says: "I am not going to give up my tobacco for Brother Kelley or anybody else." She lays down the rules to govern in the home, and doesn't propose to occupy unless she can enter with her faults. Another doesn't ask for tobacco but does ask for opium. Others wish other things which neither the Lord nor the church approves. The agents in looking after the last case found it was so far outside of the spiritual life that we were compelled to rule that where persons can not conform to the rules governing in the homes for the Saints that they must accept the places prepared by the counties for the poor and for which purpose we also pay our taxes. How will it be by and by when we go to the home prepared of the Lord? Must we not prepare according to His rules?

And it must be the same with the Children's Home. The Children's Home will be placed upon as high a plane as any of the homes that you have in the town. There will be order; the proper instruction; there will be plenty of work for the children, and children are not brought up rightly in this world when they are not brought up to work. They must be developed in the highest and best way, and when so brought up and trained all will feel an interest and pride in them, and they will be a pleasure not only to the community here, but to the communities wherever they may go hereafter.

Now in our work and ways let us keep in mind that all of these homes are fashioned and prepared to an extent by the church, as it is being fashioned and prepared under the guidance of its great head, the Christ, the Just One, who is willing to work and labor with us so long as we will work as he directs. But he can not work as we direct. Our ways must conform to his directions and ways, then we shall not labor in vain.

Then let us move along and help along the work in his way, devoting our energies thereto, and if we do and accomplish his will, we will not arrive at the place where we have nothing to do; that would be a sad situation; but to the place which is far better, gether with God," and then we may be used for that it may truly be said, that we are laborers to further good and greater works.

Now I thank you for the time of this short talk, and because so many of you are here. I had no idea of there being one half the number that are here in these rooms when the announcement of the opening was made, and am certainly pleased with the efforts of the Saints for this institution, and pleased with the completeness of the institution. And may the Lord bless the workers altogether, and the home and its work with the children!

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

JOSEPH'S LAND.

Since God, by "covenant," which "no man can disannul or add to," made Abraham the owner of "Canaan" and "confirmed" the same to Isaac with an oath saying, "Unto thee will I give all these countries" (Genesis 26:3), and gave the same inheritance to Jacob, and established the covenant conveying it to him "for a law," and to Israel "for an everlasting covenant," we ask Mr. Traum, where is Joseph's landed estate?

As giving a prophetic description of Joseph's greater blessing, we cite his attention to Moses' inspired photograph of it, when he blessed the tribes:

And of Joseph he said, Blessed of the Lord be his land, for the precious things of heaven, for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath, and for the precious fruits brought forth by the sun, and for the precious things put forth by the moon, and for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills, and for the precious things of the earth and fullness thereof, and for the good will of him that dwelt in the bush: let the blessing come upon the head of Joseph, and upon the top of the head of him that was separated from his brethren. His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns: with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth: and they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh.—Deuteronomy 33: 13-17, A. V.

Here is "Joseph's land"—broad fields, and extended territory, with diversities of soil, climate, and temperature; occupying in the different zones, with the fullness of the precious things of earth; a land of inexhaustible resources,—self-supporting; with the chief minerals, wealth of the "everlasting hills," products of its lakes and rivers, the great "deeps" that "lieth beneath"; a land celebrated for its fruits, and luxurious vegetation.

We invite his consideration to a comparison of the products of the two inheritances, and present a description of the "Canaanitish" estate and products:

For the Lord thy God bringeth thee into a good land, a land of brooks of water, of fountains, and depths that spring out of valleys and hills; a land of wheat, and barley, and vines, and fig trees, and pomegranates, a land of oil-olive, and honey; a land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness, thou shalt not lack anything in it; a land whose stones are iron, and out of whose hills thou mayest dig brass.—Deuteronomy 8: 7-9, A. V.

While this is a rich blessing, beautifully portrayed, it does not "measure up" with the blessing pronounced upon Joseph's head. It isn't comprehensive enough.

We now ask our critic another question or two: How can Joseph's blessing be greater than that of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in a physical inheritance,—a landed estate,—and that blessing of a landed estate be contained within the lesser?

How can the "utmost bound of the everlasting hills,"—the "farthest away bounds," from Goshen, Egypt,—be the hills of Canaan two hundred and fifty miles distant?

How can the hills of Judea, in Canaan, be greater than all Canaan?

Both Jacob and Moses confer this wonderful, this "crowning" patrimony, upon the "head," "crown" of him who was separated from his brethren, "crown" prophetically means not immediate posterity, but "children's children are the crown of old men." (Proverbs 17: 6.)

The status of the immediate descendants in the wilderness will not fulfill the terms of these inspired documents. Mr. Traum will find a herculean task to evolve "a multitude of nations" from the two boys during the wanderings. We have the history of Ephraim from his day down to the captivity of the ten tribes, seven hundred and twenty B. C. During this time he never became one separate and distinct nation. He was in the Egyptian bondage until the redemption under Moses, at which time his seed constituted about one twelfth part of the Israelitish nation, until the revolt of the ten tribes under Jeroboam from which time, until their captivity by the king of Assyria, his seed constituted about one tenth part of the nation.

Forty years after the census was taken, on the eve of the conquest, Ephraim was decreasing. (See Numbers 1: 32; 2: 19; Numbers 26: 37.)

But their development must take place, and "in" the locality called "the midst of the earth" Moses affirms that Joseph's horns (power, protectors, defenders) are like the horns of the unicorns; with them (his horns) he shall push (gather) the people together to the ends of the earth. The two horns are Ephraim and Manasseh, for he continues, "they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh." Ephraim is the leader in this movement ten to one.

We ask Mr. Traum, When was this work accomplished? If he says it was done in the past, and during their stay in Palestine, the facts of the Bible are squarely against him, and according to his deft interpretation, the prophecy of Moses and Jacob goes down in the wastebasket of rejected matter. His own quotation from Psalm 78: 67, recorded on page 77 of his book, we turn against him. It is a biblical fact that the work outlined for them to perform was not inaugurated through them, carried on by them, or completed by them, in the past, or during their sojourn in the Orient. The blessing was to be on the "top of the head" of Joseph.

It is a biblical fact that Ephraim and Manasseh, when in Palestine, were never made the instruments in the hands of God in carrying forward this work, but of Ephraim, it is affirmed:

Ephraim is joined to idols: let him alone. Their drink is sour: they have committed whoredom continually: her rulers with shame do love, Give ye.—Hosea 4: 17, 18, A. V.

God would not "choose" them to do prophetic work outlined by Moses, and other inspired writers, while in a condition of idolatry, and their attitude while on the Eastern Continent is further set out as follows:

When Ephraim spake trembling, he exalted himself in Israel; but when he offended in Baal, he died. And now they sin more and more, and have made them molten images of their silver, and idols according to their own understanding, all of it the work of the craftsmen: they say of them, Let the men that sacrifice kiss the calves. Therefore they shall be as the morning cloud, and as the early dew that passeth away, as the chaff that is driven with the whirlwind out of the floor, and as the smoke out of the chimney.—Hosea 13: 1-3, A. V.

Ephraim sinned "more and more" while in Palestine. They manufactured idols. As a nation, a people, they were broken up. This occurred long before the birth of Christ. Elder Traum says, page 77, "How effectually either Ephraim or Manasseh ever wrought out the program of the patriarch we do not know; but we do know this, that whatever was the glory that accrued to either was later changed to Judah."

In this, the gentlemen betrays his ignorance of the Bible, or else he just carelessly writes, presuming upon the ignorance of the reader. There is no proposition more firmly established by the Bible than that Ephraim was "broken" as a nation, rejected and "cast off," to wander among the nations; and that they never "became a multitude of nations," nor carried out the program of the patriarch in any sense in past history in Palestine.

From Isaiah, chapter 7, we present the following additional proof:

Because Syria, Ephraim, and the son of Remaliah, have taken evil counsel against thee, saying, Let us go up against Judah, and vex it, and let us make a breach therein for us, and set a king in the midst of it, even the son of Tabeal: thus saith the Lord God, It shall not stand, neither shall it come to pass. For the head of Syria is Damascus, and the head of Damascus is Rezin; and within three score and five years shall Ephraim be broken, that it be not a people.—Isaiah 7: 5-8, A. V.

Ephraim had so ingrown with sin, and at this time confederated with Syria and the son of Remaliah, to go against Judah, to destroy the kingdom by setting a king of their own in their midst, to take Judah's "glory" away from her, that God threatened to break Ephraim up as a people, within sixty five years. God "carried out" his program here mentioned, and tells Jeremiah that if the house of Judah repented not, he would visit it with a similar judgment. He then refers to Ephraim as having suffered the penalty in the following language:

And now, because ye have done all these works, saith the Lord, and I spake unto you, rising up early and speaking, but ye heard not; and I called you, but ye answered not; therefore will I do unto this house, which is called by my name, wherein ye trust, and unto the place which I gave to you and to your fathers, as I have done to Shiloh. And I will cast you out of my sight, as I have cast out all your brethren, even the whole seed of Ephraim.—Jeremiah 7: 13-15, A. V.

The "glory" Judah possessed was placed upon him at the same time Joseph received his, both prophetically, and by the same servants of God. Moses pronounced the following on Judah:

And this is the blessing of Judah: and he said, Hear, Lord, the voice of Judah, and bring him unto his people: let his hands be sufficient for him, and be thou an help to him from his enemies.—Deuteronomy 33: 7, A. V.

And Jacob administered thus:

° Judah, thou art he whom thy brethren shall praise; thy hand shall be in the neck of thine enemies; thy father's children shall bow down before thee. Judah is a lion's whelp; from the prey, my son, thou art gone up: he stooped down, he couched as a lion, and as an old lion: who shall rouse him up? The scepter shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come: and unto him shall the gathering of the people be.—Genesis 49: 8-10, A. V.

Elder Traum is doubtless aware that the "scepter" remained in the hands of Judah, until the "lawgiver" or custodian of the law of Moses, and its enactments, developed the "Shiloh," or Christ, and then because of their "blindness" and rejection of the "Shiloh," Judah's scepter fell to the ground, and as a nation they are led away in Gentile bondage among all nations; their "house left desolate" and the city trodden under foot until the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled. There is no such thing taught in the Bible as Ephraim's glory being transferred to Judah. Because God "refused the tabernacle of Joseph" in ancient days, Mr. Traum will conclude that the prophecies of Jacob, Moses, Jeremiah, Hosea, and others will never be fulfilled. Although the Prophet Hosea says in the 9th chapter, verses 11 to 17, that Ephraim's "glory shall fly away," like a bird, that Ephraim is smitten, their root is dried up," i. e., their lineage is lost,—and God "casts them away," and "they shall be wanderers among the nations," having "mixed himself among the people," yet in the great restoration of the latter days, when he gathers the house of Israel there shall be among them "governors," "rulers," and "teachers" "of themselves," and the Lord says:

For I the Lord love judgment, I hate robbery for burnt offering; and I will direct their work in truth, and I will make an everlasting covenant with them. And their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the people: all that see them shall acknowledge them, that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed.—Isaiah 61: 8, 9, A. V.

God will minister to them by divine revelation, for "I will direct their work in truth." Here is where the "horns" of Joseph figure in the fulfillment of Moses' prophecy. Their seed shall be known among the Gentiles "and their offspring among the people." Joseph's "glory is like the firstlings of his flock"—can not be transferred. He has the "birthright" promised to him, and in the realization of the same comes to him the patrimony of the priesthood to "push the people together"; hence Isaiah's prophecy with Jeremiah:

Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth, and with them the blind and the lame, the woman with child and her that travaileth with child together: a great company shall return thither. They shall come with weeping, and with supplications will I lead them; I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble: for I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my firstborn.—Jeremiah 31: 8, 9, A. V.

When the Lord "prepares the way, wherein they shall not stumble," "a straight"—gospel "way," then, after their "broken" and "scattered" condition, Ephraim is the Lord's "firstborn," "of water and the Spirit." We read:

Now the sons of Reuben, the firstborn of Israel, (for he was the firstborn; but, forasmuch as he defiled his father's bed, his birthright was given unto the sons of Joseph the son of Israel: and the genealogy is not to be reckoned after the birthright. For Judah prevailed above his brethren, and of him came the chief ruler; but the birthright was Joseph's:—1 Corinthians 5: 1, 2, A. V.

Joseph has the birthright, and his sons,—“branches” that “run over the wall”—the sea, or ocean, which was the supposed limit,—are to do their part as “pioneers,”—as the horns, in pushing the people together. In this work, “Ephraim is the Lord's firstborn.” Hosea, chapter 11, speaks of Ephraim thus:

They shall walk after the Lord: he shall roar like a lion: when he shall roar, then the children shall tremble from the west. They shall tremble as a bird out of Egypt, and as a dove out of the land of Assyria: and I will place them in their houses, saith the Lord.—Hosea 11: 10, 11, A. V.

Joel 3: 15, 16, informs us that when the Lord shall “roar,” “the sun, and the moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining. The Lord also shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake.” Then in the “end of the world”—the period of “restitution,” “the children (of Ephraim) shall tremble from the west.”

If Elder Traum will travel west from Jerusalem, he will pass through Tunis, Algiers, Barbary States, Morocco, etc.; but here we reach the “wall”—the ocean. We must, in this connection, adduce one more evidence from the prophecy of Zephaniah and one from Jeremiah. Zephaniah, chapter 3, verses 9, 10, A. V., says:

For then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent. From beyond the rivers of Ethiopia my suppliants, even the daughter of my dispersed, shall bring mine offering.

The daughters, “branches” of Israel, are “west” from Jerusalem, beyond the rivers of Ethiopia. The rivers of Ethiopia are four in number, the Senegal, Grande, Niger, and Mesurado. They all flow in a southwesterly direction into the Atlantic Ocean and Gulf of Guinea. If God's “suppliants,” the daughters,—“branches” of his dispersed,—scattered, were “beyond the rivers of Ethiopia,” there is no other land for them, but North and South America. So we see no other conclusion, unless Elder Traum crowds those “suppliants” that are “west” from Jerusalem, “beyond the Ethiopian rivers,” between the two continents, and in that case, “ichthyology” would undergo a revolution, and the Lord's “suppliants” would be “mermaids,” sharks, sturgeons, and whales.

But we hold up to his gaze the statement of Jeremiah in this connection and ask him to consider the deduction therefrom:

Flee, get you far off, dwell deep, O ye inhabitants of Hazer, saith the Lord; for Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon hath taken counsel against you, and hath conceived a purpose against you. Arise, get you up unto the wealthy nation, that dwelleth without care, saith the Lord, which have neither gates nor bars; which dwell alone. And their camels shall be a booty, and the multitude of their cattle a spoil: and I will scatter into all winds them that are in the utmost corners; and I will bring their calamity from all sides thereof, saith the Lord.—Jeremiah 49: 30-32, A. V.

“Hazor” means “head,” and from Joshua 11: 10, we learn that it was one of the ancient capitals of ancient Canaan, the “chief city of the whole of northern Palestine, and in the general invasion was destroyed by Nebuchadrezzar,” 600 years B. C., as recorded in the Bible in 2 Kings 15: 29; Jeremiah 49: 30.

We also transcribe the text from the German, by Philip Schaff, D. D., assisted by various American authors:

Flee, run apace, stoop, ye inhabitants of Hazer saith Jehovah. For Nebuchadrezzar hath planned a plan against you. Up! move against a nation at ease, that dwelleth securely, saith Jehovah. They have neither doors, nor bolts. They dwell apart by themselves.—Homiletical Commentary.

The above is a hurried warning to these Israelitish inhabitants of Hazer, to get out of the reach of the king of Babylon. Where would that be? If the Bible, and ancient history represent the king of Babylon and his dominion properly, they would be compelled to “move off” of the Eastern Continent, in order to pass out of his reach and authority.

Of the extent of Nebuchadrezzar's dominion, Daniel informs us:

Thou, O king, art a king of kings: for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory. And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven hath he given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all. Thou art this head of gold.—Daniel 2: 37, 38, A. V.

And Jeremiah says of the extensiveness of Babylon, or Chaldean monarchy:

Behold, I am against thee, O destroying mountain, saith the Lord, which destroyest all the earth: and I will stretch out my hand upon thee, and roll thee down from the rocks, and will make thee a burnt mountain.—Jeremiah 51: 25, A. V.

Hence the monarchy was an universal one, and Nebuchadrezzar swayed a universal scepter over all the kingdoms of the then known world, for forty-three years, with undisputed right (except at brief intervals) in which he was conqueror. All the habitable eastern world of any national influence or power was embraced within dominions. No “nation” on the Eastern Continent “dwelt alone, without bars,” or without “gates”; no nation dwelt “securely.”

The facts that the king of Babylon had pushed his conquests to the remotest bounds of the Eastern World—the known “earth,”—had plundered the nations of their “wealth,” and stored it at Babylon, the capital of his realm; the further fact that all cities of any importance were strongly barricaded with “double,” and sometimes “triple” “walls,”

"bars," and "gates"; and the additional fact that no nation on the Eastern Continent dwelt "safely," and without "care," and "alone," is evidence that Jeremiah's warning, to "get you FAR OFF," and "go secretly," — "dwell deep," — go unobserved, — was more comprehensive in its import than the interpretation placed upon it by the opposition will admit.

THE JAREDITE NATION.

We are not driven to the position that Ephraim must come to the American continent 600 years B. C. The "descendants of Joseph," who did come at that date, kept a record, and the scriptural view of it is that prophets of God saw it [the record] come forth to the world, and when it did come forth, it was the "stick of Joseph" in "Ephraim's hand." But the record called the Book of Mormon affirms that when Lehi and family came to America, they soon found evidence of "the wealthy nation" to which Jeremiah directed their attention, and which had been powerful in civilization and its concomitants, since being led here by the hand of God, from the time of the destruction of the Tower of Babel and the confusion of tongues. This wealthy "Jaredite" nation dwelt "alone." Dwelt without "bars or gates," and having been destroyed, their wealth, "the multitude of cattle," fell a "booty" to the Nephites, just as Jeremiah had, by the Spirit of God, informed them would occur. (See Book of Mormon, page 158. Also page 43, Lamoni edition.)

Elder Traum's suspected "problem" in regard to Hosea's prophecy, page 78, is very poorly presented. No one has ever taken the position that the prophecy or book of Hosea is the "stick of Ephraim." We have seen in Hosea's prophecy: "I have written to him [Ephraim] the great things of my law, but they were counted as a strange thing" (Hosea 8: 12), a writing separate from the "stick of Judah," a prophecy of the "great things of my law," written to Ephraim. Elder Traum here bases his conclusion on an erroneous premise. It is that the language referring to the writing is used in the past tense, "I have written," etc. We will permit Paul to set him right, as to the tense in prophecy:

(As it is written, I have made thee a father of many nations) before him whom he believed, even God, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not, as though they were.—Romans 4: 17, A. V.

God "calleth those things which be not, as though they were." In accord with Paul's interpretation, we understand Isaiah's prophecy of Christ, delivered 712 years before the birth of that illustrious character. Isaiah 53: 7-12 says:

He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth: he is [present tense, 712 years B. C.] brought as a lamb to the slaughter. . . . He was taken from prison . . . he was cut off out of the land of the living: for the transgression of my people was he stricken. . . . He made his grave with the . . . rich. He was numbered with the transgressors. . . . And he made intercession for the transgressors.

These, and numerous other prophecies spoken in the past tense, would greatly perplex our critic, according to his interpretation. Again, referring to the future dispersion of Israel among the Gentiles, and his purpose respecting their salvation, the Lord says, Ezekiel 37: 21:

I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land: and I will make them one nation.

Now taking Mr. Traum's applied logic, we can say of Isaiah's prophecies, If this was the Christ, it becomes exceedingly difficult for the "Campbellite" to find any part of God's word applying to the Christ of Nazareth, for these words expressing past tense were uttered, according to Usher's chronology, seven hundred and twelve years before the Christ of Nazareth was born.

What Does it Mean?

It does not matter what it means, poor heart;
The dear Lord knows; to bear it is your part,
Nor think some strange thing happens unto you
Which he would not allow so if he knew.
He does know; in his all-wise love, he knows it;
And allows it for your good.
He is not hard; you do not think he is,
When in the dark you find your hand in his;
When it was lighter, you tried to walk alone;
And thought the strength he gave you, all your own.
You did not ask what that last blessing meant
Just smiled and took it, satisfied, content.
You did not think it strange, you thought he knew,
And planned the sweet surprise that came to you,
Tried one, do you, then, take the sweet and good
Yet can not trust the tender Fatherhood?
But think he makes mistakes, when he sends
Some hindrance which your eager haste offends,
Or when he lets the wicked plot you harm,
And stirs a whirlwind, when you seek a calm.
You think it strange, this trial, swift and keen,
And in your weakness ask what does it mean?

I think the language of God's heart would read,
 I love my child, I note his slightest need.
 I long to prosper him in all his ways,
 To give him quiet nights and peaceful days;
 But if I do, he'll lose himself from me.
 My outstretched hand he will not wait to see.
 I'll place a hindering wall before his feet.
 There he will wait, and there we two shall meet.
 I do it not in wrath, for broken laws,
 As willful disobedience, but because I want him nearer, and can not wait
 For him to come, he might wander late.
 My child will wonder, will not understand.
 Still, half in doubt, he'll clasp my outstretched hand.
 But when at last, upon my breast he leans,
 He will have ceased to wonder what it means.

Responsibility of Mothers.

Not so much upon teachers, ministers, humanitarians, and others closely connected with the world's progress does the humane sentiment of coming years depend. Not so much upon these, though mighty and measureless is their power, but upon you, oh mothers, queens of the home—upon you rests the greatest weight of this mighty responsibility.

And as accountability is measured by opportunity, of you therefore will be required the strictest account! There is nothing in all the world more wonderful than the receptive soul of a little child!

Take heed, therefore, lest you be not fully awake to the realization of your powerful influence over your children; and lest in your eagerness that they prepare to shine in mental attainments you neglect the education of the heart.

Much is said about Esperanto—the language that is expected to become a race tie. But a day is coming when another language—the language of kindness, the need of which is incomparably greater—shall have spread over every land. By it shall man and beast and bird and all living things be blessed!

What part, oh mother, will you take for the hastening of this glad day, "when cruelty shall be an unknown word?"

POWER OF A MOTHER'S INFLUENCE.

I asked of a writer whose wonderful words in behalf of animals have stirred the heart of the world, "What influence led you to become a friend and champion of the dumb?"

"More than all else was the influence of my mother," was the reply. "She laid more stress upon educating the morals of her children than upon the cultivation of the intellect. Her name stood for kindness to all who knew her!"

A successful primary teacher said to me recently: "There is no question as to the great need of humane education in the schools; and the need has been created largely by the lack of such education in the home."

I heard a little girl reproving a boy playmate for having wounded a robin and then beating it to death against a tree.

"What would your mother say?" she cried, seeming to think this the most crushing reproof imaginable.

"My mother!" laughed the boy—a laugh not pleasant to hear from a boy's lips—"What does she care? She wears dead birds in her Sunday-go-to-meeting hats and dead animal furs around her neck!"

LOVE OF BEAUTY DISPELS CRUELTY.

A love of the beautiful, which is natural in every child, should be cultivated. Teach them to observe the bright ribbons of the rainbow, the glory of the sunset's open gates, and "the frail wonder of the flower."

"To see beauty and to love it is to possess one of the chief requisites of a happy and contented mind." Cruelty can have no place in mind and heart that have learned to take note of Beauty, which is the twin sister of Joy!

Mothers, you who are the central figure in the home, you, toward whom the trusting eyes of little children are turned, a matchless opportunity is yours to be a force in shaping the humane sentiment of coming years! Esteem not this opportunity lightly. If your children grow up with eyes to see, ears to hear, and hearts to feel for fellow-men and all living things, waves of humane influence will reach far out from their lives. You will have helped to bring the day of mercy and peace of which wrote the great prophet of old: "The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fating together, and a little child shall lead them."—Alice Jean Cleator, in Our Dumb Animals.

CALUMET, OKLAHOMA, August 23, 1911.

Editors Herald: I wish to say to the readers of the HERALD, that we are very busy in Oklahoma; I have an excellent interest here, baptized six last Sunday, and have three more names for next Sunday, all of them so far are grown people, except one; that was my baby girl, Ardis. I have put in four weeks here with telling effect, as the whole country around is aroused over this meeting. I expect to have several more names by Sunday, as many are talking of coming into the church. I wish to visit the Indian camp Saturday, as there are seven hundred of them in a big meeting near here. I regret having to call the Seiling reunion off. We need more men in the field so badly, but the financial question is a serious one in this mission this year. May the Lord's work prosper everywhere.

HUBERT CASE.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, May 29, 1911.

Editor Herald: It is now a long time since I wrote a letter for the HERALD, and having an experience of late in attending some of the Oliver Tabernacle services, I had occasion to write with reference to a man well known here in the Y. M. C. A. work whom I find to be quite an able student and teacher among them. This communication relates to an experience which I had among them, and also to a testimony of what I have found among Latter Day Saints. If you deem it worthy of publication, please find a place for it when you can. I believe this experience has strengthened me in our work, as you will notice in expression at what I here found.

In gospel bonds,

F. T. HAYNES.

The letter referred to is as follows:

CLEVELAND, OHIO, May 23, 1911.

MR. AUGUSTUS NASH, Y. M. C. A., City.

Dear Mr. Nash: I received your kind invitation to attend the special meeting on Monday evening, but owing to my time being taken up on that evening, I could not be with you. It is now some time since I saw you last, and not seeing you at the tabernacle services towards the close, I made inquiry if you had dropped out of them, or was it that you were out of the city?

Well, Mr. Nash, I want to tell you that I met with another experience while attending the tabernacle services, such as

I have met with before in other cities, when attending similar meetings; that is, when it became known in these meetings, what church I was connected with, I could notice a change on the part of some I had met and conversed with; they manifested a different disposition towards me, and did not want to recognize me, but simply avoided me. I began to sit up and take notice, and think their action is too small to be called Christian, for if these same people belonging to the several denominations have light and knowledge greater than that which the Latter Day Saints have, they should be all the more interested in them, and be willing to impart unto them and share with them their superior light. This disposition would more nearly manifest the Christ or Christian spirit, if I know anything about either. But I can readily understand how persons can become prejudiced by hearing or reading but one side of the story which is usually told with reference to the Latter Day Saints. It is not Christian to draw conclusions and judge from that standpoint, and I find many bearing the name Christian doing this very thing. And this reminds me of how the Pilgrim Fathers desired and secured religious liberty by coming to America to free themselves from conditions of persecution, but soon after gaining this liberty and freedom for themselves they persecuted those that differed from them. History so often repeats itself. In the beginning of the mission of our Savior the religious world was against John the Baptist, who was a man sent from God to prepare the way for a greater light, which Jesus Christ came to bring. And no sooner had he started his work than it was quite in evidence that the leading religious leaders were against him and this greater light. This work of the opposition was carried on by those that read the Scriptures, and expected a Messiah, but when he came unto his own people they received him not, and Jesus reminded them that the Scriptures they were searching testified of him; but how few did he find that understood the Scriptures! Just a few could say, We have found him of whom Moses and the prophets did write, and these few are the ones that Jesus used with which to carry on his work. Of the other class, Jesus said, Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life, and before Jesus ended his work among them he had occasion to say a great many things against them, because they would not enter in themselves, and those disposed to enter were hindered, and we find that many were out of harmony in a great degree with the Spirit and work of God. Jesus began to build his church as he said he would, and it was quite well along when Paul wrote as he did in 1 Corinthians, twelfth and fourteenth chapters, referring to God placing in the church such officers, and bestowing such gifts as it pleased him (1 Corinthians 12: 18-28; Ephesians 4: 3-16; 11: 13; 1 Corinthians 12: 7-13; 2 Peter 3: 5). The Apostle Paul met with conditions so early in the history of the church that he pointed out to those within the fold that there were men among them that would teach perverse things to draw away disciples after them (Acts 20: 28), and the time would come when God would be left out of the calling and choosing the ministry, so soon, and they heap to themselves teachers (2 Timothy 3: 4). This condition had the effect of driving the church into the wilderness for over one thousand years (Revelation 12: 6). The Dark Ages furnish the history of that period. The Romanish apostate church is the only church that can be traced during this time in the history of the past. She was forced to improve somewhat by the work of the reformers and their light, but the reformers did not restore the pure gospel, and bring the church out of the wilderness. Each in his turn, not being able to agree among themselves, formulated a creed, and established the several churches which we have around us at the present. A man could no more bring back or rebuild the church of Jesus Christ without a commission and authority from headquarters, with instructions as how to go about it, than Moses could build a tabernacle, or a Solomon a temple. A man could not act in the past in the Aaronic priesthood without being called to do so, as was Aaron (Hebrews 5: 4). And even Christ did not call himself to the Melchisedec priesthood. We find a new Testament account of how they called and ordained men in the early church; anything short of this will not fill the requirements to-day, unless God and Christ have changed (Malachi 3: 6; Hebrews 13: 6). And I can see no more in restoring primitive Christianity to its proper place through the reformation than to cut a few slices off the old, apostate church, which the Protestant world says is corrupt; so I reason that if it took divine revelation and commission in the ages of the past in order to do the work of God aright, how can we expect that such could be the exception in the present age?

Jesus said the kingdom of heaven is like a householder who went out at different dispensations to hire laborers in his vineyard (Matthey 20: 6, 7). Mark 12: 1-6 locates the ninth hour dispensation. Matthew 20: 6, 7 locates our present age. Daniel 11: 44 also adds light. I have been comparing notes and investigating, looking for the pure gospel and the true church of Jesus Christ; and up to the present time I have not found a gospel or a church so in harmony with the record of the New Testament Scriptures as I have found with the Latter Day Saints. So, until such time as I shall find that I have made a mistake in casting in my lot with this people, to be consistent with myself and faithful to God, I must remain with those who have the greater light, though it bring upon me the persecution that our Savior said it brought upon others (Matthew 5: 10-12).

I should like very much to have a little talk with you some time on this subject, but owing to your being so very busy, most always, I do not know if I shall have this desire gratified. However, I shall at this time close, with kind regards to you, and trust I shall always desire and be found seeking and living in harmony with the truth brought to this world in the life and teachings of Jesus Christ.

Yours very truly,

F. T. HAYNES.

LANGLEY, WISCONSIN, August 15, 1911.

Editors Herald: I wish to thank you very much for your kindness in printing that request for prayers in behalf of my baby sister. Bro. William Johnson, of Seattle, called a special prayer meeting for her one Wednesday evening in July, I believe. Now she has been sick for ten weeks yesterday, and she is very weak and low, but God is keeping her from suffering pain and that is a great blessing, I think.

I still ask you to pray for little Sister Bertha that she may get well if it be God's will. But let his will, not ours, be done. May God bless all his Saints.

Your sister in Christ,

BLANCH A. CRANDALL.

SMEED TERRACE, BAYSWATER, WESTERN AUSTRALIA.

Editors Herald: I thought perhaps some would like to hear how the work has been maintained here. We organized about four and a half years ago with Brother Butterworth, our Australian missionary, in charge, and have ever since been left in an isolated condition as far as receiving any outside help from any missionary is concerned, for which the work here has suffered untold loss. We have sailed through stormy seas with none but a priest to preside over us during almost the whole of the time, but we are thankful that the tide has begun to turn, and things look like taking on better shape. At this writing we have Brother and Sister Pitt, whom the Lord hath chosen. May they long be spared to minister among God's people, as they with their wise counsel, kind and loving dispositions, and their deep interest in all the Saints of God (without respect of persons), inspire us to put forth greater efforts to do the Master's will and rise to a higher plane of life.

May God bless them in their mission of love and good will, and finally receive them unto himself, is the prayer of

Your brother in Christ,

A. B. ROBINSON.

CASTLEBERRY, NEW MEXICO, August 15, 1911.

Editors' Herald: Notwithstanding the dry weather, we are meeting with encouragement in gospel work in this field. Brother Vanderwood and I held a ten-day meeting at Polar the last of July and first of August and a splendid hearing was given us, with good treatment. I left Brother Vanderwood at Tolar on the 7th and came on to Jordan, Brother Vanderwood expecting to soon make his way on south to Tularosa. I held forth at Jordan from Tuesday till Monday. I had the pleasure of baptizing four of our best friends, Mr. and Mrs. Jordan and their son James and wife. These four are the first fruits of our labor at Jordan, with a number of others to follow soon.

Yours for truth,

T. J. SHEPPARD.

ELKHART, INDIANA, August 8, 1911.

Editors Herald: For just one week now, beginning Sunday, July 13, we have been having tent meetings with increased interest, Elder S. W. L. Scott doing the preaching, and he has caused no little stir in reference to this great latter day work. Some say one thing, some another, and to use the expression of the rest, they are "on the fence." For, behold he bringeth forth certain strange things to our ears. Well, I would say that right in the midst of this that old red dragon called the Devil got in his lick. Brother Scott's mother took a severe cold and is confined to her bed. Being eighty years old, Brother Scott felt it his duty to be at her side. Hence he had to bring those meetings to a close Sunday, July 20, and left for home Monday, not knowing just when he will return. But we hope soon.

Yours for the accomplishment of the truth,

ASA A. WARD.

'Neath the Southern Cross.

At last writing I was at Colton, California. After ten days spent in that vicinity, visiting the Saints, and attending the meetings of the San Bernardino Branch, preaching for them and in Sister Burton's home, etc., I left with Brother Crumley for Santa Ana and Garden Grove, where a few days were pleasantly spent. From there, we went to Los Angeles, where I was cared for by Bro. and Sr. William Schade, our worthy brother showing me many of the sights of the city and its surrounding points of interest.

I was favorably impressed with southern California. It is a miracle of ingenious irrigation. The desert has been made to blossom as the rose. We in Australia have had it dinned into our ears that the pioneers of Utah worked a mighty miracle in the transformation of the salt land into a smiling garden, but the Utah miracle is a pigmy when compared with that wrought in southern California. It is far from the beautiful, naturally fertile spot selected by the Lord for the center of Zion, but it is a part of Joseph's land, the land blessed above all other lands. I found some people who seem to think that this sunny southern piece of the inheritance of Joseph is blessed with greater beauty and fertility than the center place. I did not argue with them. Both places seem beautiful to me, but I bow to the wisdom of the Lord in selecting Jackson County as the center place. The reason for his selection may not be superior fertility or beauty, nor nicer climatic conditions, but whatever they are, I am content.

From Los Angeles I went to San Francisco, where another week was spent. Here, besides attending several of the branch meetings and preaching on both sides of the bay, I was privileged to attend several sessions of the International Sunday School Convention, where much useful information was obtained. I was well cared for at the home of Bro. and Sr. J. A. Anthony, and among those who kept my wandering feet from straying in wrong directions in the big city were Brethren Anthony, Sheehy, Terry, and Crumley. San Francisco is making a wonderful recovery from the quake of 1906.

June 28 I sailed for Tahiti on the ship Aorangi, quite a little party of the San Francisco Saints, with the addition of Brother Crumley, assembling on the wharf to bid me bon voyage. It was thoughtful of them, and helped to make me feel that it was worth while waving farewell to the crowd on the wharf after the steamer was out in the stream. After twelve days of pleasant traveling we arrived here, where I was heartily welcomed by Brother and Sister May, and Brother and Sister Savage, and the native Saints.

It has been a pleasure to participate with the brethren here in the good work they are doing. I have not been able to do much, it is true, on account of my ignorance of the language, but such as I have had to give has been freely given, and I trust that some good has been done. Besides visiting and preaching in both branches on this island, I have accompanied Brother Savage to the island of Makatea, some one hundred and twenty miles northeast of this point. There ten days were profitably spent, building up the native Saints by preaching every night, laboring with erring ones, administering to sick, and performing other duties.

I pray that God's blessing may rest upon our island missionaries and the Saints among whom they labor. Many difficulties, altogether peculiar to this mission, present themselves for solution; much patience, devotion, and prayerful solicitude is required, and consequently a plentiful supply of the directing energy of the Holy Spirit is essential. That it may be forthcoming is my earnest wish for God's servants here.

I leave here August 8, and expect to arrive in Dunedin, New Zealand, on the nineteenth. For the following three months I shall, with the blessing of God, labor in that city. Then it is my intention to return to my home in Australia. My address while in Dunedin will be: Care A. Leberz, 13 Maitland street, Dunedin, New Zealand.

With best wishes, I remain,

WALTER J. HAWORTH.

News From Missions

Pottawattamie District.

It may be that a word from one of the oldest districts of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, — the Pottawattamie, would not be devoid of interest. I reached this mission May 25, attended the conference held at the Hazel Dell church, some twelve miles northeast of the city of Council Bluffs, May 27 and 28, which was quite well attended considering the time of the year, and the fact that a splendid rain came to cheer all, May 28. Saints attending seemed alive to the cause. Quite a number of the young Saints were present to look after the interests of the auxiliaries. Dinner on Sunday was served at the church, reminding one of good old times gone by.

Bro. J. R. Lentell, our boy missionary from Independence,

Missouri, to this district, was present and preached to the satisfaction of all; he is doing a good work. He is a rustler. Bro. John A. Hansen, our young district president, is energetic and always ready to look after and move in the interests of the work. The Brethren Carlile, J. P. and Joshua, and the Petersons, H. and N. P., L. Anderson and others maintaining the work live at Hazel Dell and vicinity, also Bro. C. Larson, and they always make the missionaries "feel at home," and this is no small item, the missionaries can assure you. But all Saints try to do this, and ye laborers should appreciate it. But why be personal on this point? we have the good Saints all along the line who do so. The indifference of the people here over our message, the gospel, strikes us pretty hard, but perseverance removes mountains.

We miss Brn. C. A. Beebe, Andrew Hall, James Caffall, Brother and Sister Harding, of Crescent village, and others who stood by the cause formerly, but who have gone up along the shining way.

Bro. J. Charles Jensen still sustains the relation of "scribe" to the district, and who, by the way, is a cyclopædia, historical, of western Iowa events related to the work. Brn. Robert McKenzie and James P. Christensen, with helpers, are holding the fort at Council Bluffs, while the Brethren Harding and others help to supply the signs of our war of "Peace on earth, good will to men." Sunday school and Religio work are alive there, and the workers therein manifest energy in their labors.

A Sunday school and Religio institute was held at Council Bluffs June 23 and 24 by an aggregation of workers from Pottawattamie, Northern Nebraska and Fremont districts, with a cooperatively arranged program, Sr. Estella Harding taking the initiative in its arrangement. A goodly gathering assembled, and although the weather was excessively warm, all hung on to the work well for young people, being generated in their labors by T. A. Hougas and wife, and Sister Deam, of Independence, Missouri, who had special charge of Zion's Religio-Literary Society's work. Brother Campbell and others, and Bro. J. M. Baker of Omaha, who preached on Sunday, the 25th, Sisters Harding, M. Pace, and L. Leeka, all taking part, did their duty and a good institute was the result.

The few Saints left at Carson are doing nobly. Great peace and unity are noted among the Saints there. Bro. M. F. Elswick presides, being assisted by Priest Whitehead. They have a neat little church building, well taken care of. Some Saints there are indifferent, but the branch, Sunday school, and Religio are alive. Bro. Theodore Schenk, who was baptized just last year, 1910, is doing well, having charge of the Sunday school, all growing in the knowledge of the truth. Sr. Vena Graybill superintends the Religio there. She is in her sixteenth year, but the work of the society moves right along. They are working, and if my readers could see the children sing in the church services and the societies, they could appreciate better how.

We shall leave Brother Lentell to tell of his experiences in the district so far, or farther, as he chooses. We do not think he has reason to be discouraged. We hope him every success he may desire of the Lord in his work.

Have just returned from the Southeastern Iowa Reunion, held at Thurman, August 4 to 13. It was a pleasant time to us. True, the temperature was high sometimes, but the reunion was good, as we see it. Nothing that we could learn of happened to mar the spirit and good feeling of any. During some of the sessions, Apostle J. W. Wight, Bishop E. L. Kelley, and Church Historian Herman C. Smith were present and did faithful labor. Bro. Charles E. Butterworth, evangelist, of Dow City, was present at about all the sessions, as also were Brn. W. E. Haden, Alvin Knisley, and your correspondent of the Seventies. Bro. John A. Hansen, president of the Pottawattamie District, and High Priest T. A. Hougas, president of the Fremont District, were in attendance most of the time, and assisted in the order of the work. Those appointed to serve in any capacity were faithful to duty. Every provision of a temporal nature necessary was supplied. The auxiliary organizations were ably represented and gave the younger membership of the church and some friends opportunity to participate and aid in the gospel work. Bro. A. Knisley was our merchant and sold books, and we believe did well. Elder N. L. Mortimore was a faithful deacon and chief of police, but the attendants at the reunion were so kind to him that if he thought to arrest anybody, his heart failed him, and so everybody went "Scot free." So no one was arrested but the preachers and their assistants and the choir, and they all went right on to the gospel "Rock" pile and worked, whether the weather was hot or comfortable, and not an objection or an apology did we note. Many of the visiting Saints, from distances, were conveyed to and from the reunion grounds from the depot in automobiles, as arranged by the committee, Brn. Leeka, C. W. Forney, and Charles Green handling those vehicles. Conveniences were attended to, to our full wishes. While there, meeting with the descendants of Bishop Leeka, Father Green, and other old time Latter Day Saints of Fremont County (yes, and the Becksteads and Wilcoxes, and Gaylords), we went about cogitating things and events we read about in good old days before my hair was gray, when "Pleasant Chat," written by Elder David H. Smith was published in THE TRUE LATTER DAY SAINTS' HERALD. It was away back in the "sixties," and it did one good to meet and converse with some remaining from those days and their descendants, who are contending and laboring for the faith once delivered to the Saints.

Attendance was good throughout the reunion. I would judge there were altogether twelve to fourteen hundred at the services of the closing day, and the previous evening at the rendering of the literary program. Two persons were baptized by Elder W. E. Haden, on Saturday, August 12. Saints generally seem to be watchful, and we trust moving upward in the Lord's great work.

Hopefully,
C. SCOTT.

Northeastern Kansas.

The Sunday school and Religio conventions convened at Scranton, Kansas, June 9, followed by the district conference. There was not a large representation of the district, but those present entered into the work with a zeal that was commendable. The auxiliary work was ably supervised by Srs. Flo McNichols and Lillian Curtis. Bro. S. Twombly, our congenial and very worthy coworker, who had been district president for a number of years, resigned his position, as he had been appointed to labor as a missionary in Colorado. Bro. Frank G. Hedrick was chosen to occupy in his place and we recognize in him a coming man. Our young Brother Coal, of Atchison, was chosen assistant president. Brother Coal is also president of the Atchison Branch and is doing a splendid work, ably assisted by his worthy companion.

From there, I went to Topeka and remained till July 3. While there I held some good meetings and enjoyed the association of the Saints, as many of them were old acquaintances. I have traveled so much that the greater part of my life has been spent with strangers. While I have enjoyed my associations with the Saints everywhere I have been, there is a special pleasure in meeting old friends. While there we had some of the hottest weather that has been experienced in Kansas for years, and it made me think of McKenzie, Alabama. I do not want the Saints in the South to think that I only remember the hot weather, for I found many splendid people there, and I shall remember them for the Christ-like character that they manifested.

There were several street preachers in Topeka, and after listening to them I was forced to conclude that they were preaching simply for the money they could collect from the people. It seems a shame to see men so degrade the teachings of Christ, and as I looked at them I thought it was useless for me to try to preach the gospel under such conditions. But the next night we were on the streets; I forced myself against my better judgment to make an effort, but it may have been because I had no faith, yet the results were just as I expected. I tried it twice, but each time it was a complete failure.

From there I went to Independence, Missouri, and stayed till July 12. While there I preached three times in the tent and twice in Kansas City. Sister Peak joined me here and we went to Leavenworth, Kansas, July 12, and stopped with Bro. James Buckley. We held five meetings in Richardson, a new place. The audiences were small, yet very attentive, and we felt unusually well in explaining the fundamental principles of the gospel to them. We visited the Soldiers' Home and had a very pleasant visit with Bro. Carter Smith, of Oklahoma, who has been in the home for some two years. He lives his religion and is letting his light shine.

We went to Atchison July 22 and held a week's meetings. Found many old acquaintances and were glad to see them still holding the banner of King Immanuel aloft. Atchison is on the improve. They have a fine Sunday school and Religio under the supervision of Sr. Flo McNichols. We reached Fanning July 31, and held forth each evening till August 6. The Saints at Fanning are doing nicely. Bro. F. G. Hedrick is the president of the branch and is doing his work well and is greatly helped by his wife. Sister Peak says, "You could not expect her to do otherwise, for she is Welsh." We made such arrangements for the success of the conference and reunion, which will convene there September 9 to 20, as we were able and hope to see as many of the Saints present as possible. We expect a splendid time.

From there we went to Netawaka, where we lived from 1892 till 1900. We lived longer in Netawaka than any one place since we have been married. Here is where Sister Peak's father and mother, Elder John T. Davis and wife are buried. We visited their graves and thought of the years of faithful labor they spent in the service of Christ. They rejoiced in their work while on earth and have now gone to their reward. There are but few of the Saints' left here. The church is locked up and conditions are about as the Lord showed to me that they would be while I lived here. When will Saints learn wisdom? Bro. and Sr. William Hopkins are spending their last days quietly and in peace. They have made a good record in life and both have passed the fourscore mark. Sr. Henry Green also lives here. We met many old friends who are out of the church, and they earnestly requested us to return and hold meetings.

We reached Centralia August 10, were taken out to Bro. John McDougall's home, six miles, and preached in their schoolhouse twice. Here we had the largest congregations of nonmembers of our trip. Some interest was manifested. The few Saints here have made a good record.

We came on to Blue Rapids August 12 and began meetings here and have continued to date. The Saints here are doing real well under the watchcare of Elder Mahlon Smith and his assistant officers. We baptized five here. Bro. and Sr. J. D. Shower, our young missionary and wife, joined us here last week. Brother Shower is doing a good work and we expect to see him become a successful and useful man in the church.

We expect to leave August 24 for Osborne, to attend the Northwestern Kansas reunion which will convene August 26. Our daughter, Maude will join us at Linn and go on to Osborne with us to take charge of the music, Sunday school, and Religio work of the reunion.

We have had a very pleasant summer's work and find the district improving.

News From Branches.

Saint Louis, Missouri.

Our pastor, Bro. T. J. Elliot, presided over the last two sacrament services, which were spiritual and active. Brn. Elliot, Masten, S. A. Burgess, George Reeves, J. A. Tanner, of Chicago, R. V. Hopkins, of Graceland College, and Jennings and Dowker of the missionary force were the speakers during the past two months, and from the subjects, humility, faith, only a little while, abide with me, future conditions, the hereafter, and the second coming of Christ, we received strength and edification.

We regret to report the death of one of our sweet Sunday school flowers, Bessie Lillian Fath, the little daughter of Sr. Edna (Peat) Fath and husband. Brother Archibald conducted the funeral services. The bereaved ones have our sincere sympathy.

Brethren Paxton and Jenkins have been having good interest and attendance in the district with tent services this summer, and Brother Dowker is reported as also having good attendance with nightly services in the district, and the last five weeks he has been holding tent services in Belleville, with the result of seven baptisms and others near the door. This tent belongs to the Belleville Saints we understand, and the coming week it will be removed to Signal Hill, near Belleville. We trust these brethren will be blessed in their efforts.

The Religio and Sabbath school, under charge of their newly elected officers, are doing nicely. Several outings have been very much enjoyed during the summer and, considering the extreme heat, we have had good interest and attendance.

Your sister in Christ,

ELIZABETH PATTERSON.

Central Chicago, Illinois.

Sunday, August 13. Such a rainstorm just before noon, and the smallest attendance at services for many months. Elder James Keir preached an excellent sermon in the morning, commenting on the theme that we should worship God intelligently, as the "glory of God is intelligence." When we consider those who apparently worship so blindly, do we appreciate the glories of this wonderful gospel as we should?

Bro. Arthur Sherman occupied in the evening, also giving good instruction regarding the reasonableness of the God we worship. When we hear so many light and flippant remarks in reference to prayer and our Creator, we can only feel sorry that people are so ignorant in regard to the gospel, as if they only understood to a very slight degree the magnificence of the plan God has designed his people to follow, how different would be their comments. May we each endeavor day by day to so let our "light shine before the world, that others seeing our good works may glorify our Father in heaven."

Prayer meeting Wednesday evening in charge of Bro. J. J. Oliver. Some of our little people are suffering with the whooping cough and scarlet fever, and trust the "prayers of the righteous will avail much" in their behalf.

"Workmen of God, oh, lose not heart,
But learn what God is like!
And in the darkest battle field,
Thou shalt know where to strike.

Oh, blest is he to whom is given,
The instinct that can tell,
That God is on the field, when he Is most invisible."

Reunion Minutes.

TORONTO.—Toronto, Ontario, district reunion, time, June 24 to July 4, 1911; place, Lowbanks, in a beautiful grove on the shore of Lake Erie, noted through the poet as "Erie's waters blue"; reunion committee, Bishop R. C. Evans and his two counselors, Elders Fligg and Thompson. Bishop Evans was the only member of the committee who could attend the reunion. Before the arrival of the Saints on Saturday, the bishop and able assistants got the tents and everything in readiness. The grove looked like a little village of white canvas under the beautiful evergreen trees; some were in the valleys, and others were "set upon a hill"; all were numbered. The big meeting tent was erected in a natural amphitheater and the dining tent caught the lake breezes. There was also a well equipped kitchen and nicely stocked store. Bishop Evans was chosen to preside over the reunion and chose as his assistants Elders Gregory, Shields, and Pycock. Sr. Lizzie Evans was in charge of the store, Sr. Ada Hamilton in charge of the kitchen and Sister Faulds in charge of the dining tent, and all three won the praise of Saints and outsiders for their excellent management and attention to all. They were assisted by willing helpers. A first-class cook, Mrs. Hughes, of Lowbanks, was employed and first-class meals were nicely served for 15 cents each. The reunion had been well advertised by large posters all over the country and by complimentary notices and write ups for weeks previously in the Dunnville Chronicle, which has large circulation. One issue had Bishop Evans' picture and account of the Toronto campaign; so the services were well attended by outsiders from the first; a great crowd gathered on Sunday. About one hundred Saints were in camp, some had rooms at farm houses near by, but very few from other districts attended. Through the week the services were: Prayer meeting at 9 a. m.; preaching or auxiliary work at 10.45 a. m.; and preaching at 3 p. m. The afternoons were left free for recreation, rest, visiting, etc. The bathing, launch trips, hay rack rides and swinging were fully enjoyed. On Sundays there were three preaching services, and the prayer meetings one hour earlier than on week days. The speakers were Bishop Evans, Apostle F. A. Smith, Elders F. Gregory, J. Shields, J. Pycock, H. Dickhout, J. A. Wilson, and E. K. Evans. Other elders assisting at the services were F. Mesle, J. McKenzie, and L. Pew. One popular and busy man on the grounds was the postmaster, J. Shields. Another man's most important duty began when all the others went "off duty"—none other than Policeman Caskie, who saw that "all was well" while the camp went to rest. Bro. Tommy Dodds' duties began before the rest of the camp went "on duty"—that was to ring the old, old bell (R. C. said its material was thousands of years old) at 6 a. m. Deacon George Dodds was chief usher; Sister Faulds, chorister; and Elsie Hill, organist. Everyone was good, everyone kept well and out of danger, even the weather behaved beautifully, giving a little variety, and all helped to make the first Toronto district reunion a great big success, and succeeded in their efforts. The press reporting and secretary work were done by Floralice Miller and Samuel Clark.

ALABAMA.—The Alabama district reunion was held at the Pleasant Hill church, near McKenzie, Alabama, August 4 to 13, 1911. Elders F. M. Slover and S. S. Smith, of the missionary force, were chosen to preside, and empowered to arrange time and character of meetings, which were as follows: Prayer meeting at 9 a. m., preaching at 10.45 a. m. and 7.45 p. m. each day. Extra sessions were held on Sundays. The reunion proved a grand success, both in a temporal and a spiritual way. The attendance was larger than ever before, many visitors being present from the Mobile and Florida districts, which tended to increase the spirituality of the occasion, while the local Saints were not slow to provide all temporal necessities. The meetings were spiritual from the beginning, the good Spirit prevailing on every occasion, and especially in the prayer services we were made to rejoice by the "blessed assurance" of the presence of the Holy Spirit. All were encouraged and built up in the faith, and gave vent to their feelings in many fervent prayers and earnest testimonies, expressing themselves as having a great desire to press onward in the work, feeling sure of its final triumph. The speakers of the reunion were F. M. Slover, S. S. Smith, A. E. Vanleave, W. J. Booker, F. P. Scarcliff, W. A. West, A. G. Miller, and A. E. Warr. They were blessed in presenting the word and much advice and encouragement was given to the Saints and points of doctrine made clear to outsiders. As a result seven gave their names for baptism and many others no doubt have arrived at a better understanding of our position. We are indebted to the able chorister and organist and their assistants who were selected, for the excellent music which contributed so much to the success of the meetings. All visitors were well entertained by the McKenzie Saints, and upon our hearts and minds is left an indelible impression of their goodness, and we feel to say again, "The Saints are the best people on earth." Oh, that all were "Saints" indeed. The weather was perfect, for the most part, and even the rain of the two days did not prevent the Saints from assembling to hear the "word," and our meetings continued uninterrupted. It made us rejoice to see those faithful Saints attending services while the rain was so disagreeable. May we always be willing to make a sacrifice for the Lord's work, and surely we shall be rewarded for all our sacrifices. Now that the reunion is over, let us profit by it, and follow closely the instruction and admonition that was given, thereby preparing ourselves for that grand and glorious reunion, of which this one is a foretaste, and while a few days ago we looked forward to reunion time with joyous expectation, now we look back to it as a fond and lasting memory of the past, and a bright spot in our spiritual career, which shall continue to inspire us onward in our efforts to do good in the future. Thus the grand reunion of 1911 has passed into history. Now for 1912! Albert E. Warr, secretary of reunion.

CENTRAL NEBRASKA.—The reunion of the Central Nebraska District met at 10 a. m., Monday, August 7, 1911, in the Saints' new church at Comstock, Nebraska. Organized as follows: Presidents, Elders W. E. Kester, James C. Crabb, and C. W. Prettyman; secretary, Elder James E. Kelley; chorister, Elder Levi Gamet, who selected Sr. Erma Naab as organist; ushers, Brn. J. R. Bills and E. S. Pretz. Twenty-nine meetings were held. Nineteen sermons were preached. Two adult persons were baptized, one driving thirty, the other sixty-five miles to attend. The preachers were Elders Joshua Carlile, C. W. Prettyman, James C. Crabb, W. E. Kester, Levi Gamet, R. O. Self, and James E. Kelley. A number received their patriarchal blessing through Brother Carlile. The visiting members were few, but the attendance of local Saints and the public was excellent. The matter of another reunion was left to the district authorities and the missionary in charge of Nebraska. James Edmund Kelley, secretary.

EASTERN OKLAHOMA.—The second reunion of the Eastern Oklahoma District convened at Degnan Park, Wilburton, Oklahoma, August 4 to 13, 1911. Elder H. R. Harder, president of the district and chairman of the reunion committee, Apostle J. F. Curtis, minister in charge, and Lee Quick, assistant, were by vote made the presidency of the reunion. A. Z. Rudd was chosen secretary; L. S. Moore in charge of the deacon's work; J. F. Curtis, chorister; Sr. Effie Wallace, organist; Lee Quick and A. Z. Rudd, press committee. A. L. Wooten was recommended and received a commission from the sheriff as special deputy to keep order around the camp. The time and nature of the meetings were left with the presidency. Of the ministry present were J. F. Curtis, Lee Quick, W. A. Bailey, J. M. Smith, J. T. Riley, and Jesse M. Simmons. Bro. Hale W. Smith was present representing the publishing department, and also assisted in the preaching, as did Bro. R. V. Hopkins, who was here in the interest of Graceland College, and Earl D. Bailey, who taught the temporal law. Each day at 6 p. m. there was preaching on the street; at 11 a. m., 2.30 and 8 p. m., preaching at the park. One priesthood meeting was held. Prayer and testimony meetings were held each day at 9.30 a. m. except Sunday, when it was held at 2.30, and Sunday school was held at 9.30 a. m. Four were baptized during the reunion. Quite a number of Saints were present from different parts of Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Texas. The pavilion where the services were held was well lighted with electricity. A very spiritual time was had and we look forward to another reunion next year. A. Z. Rudd, secretary, Wilburton, Oklahoma.

No human being ever "found" happiness. Happiness just "happens," of course. It is a gift from nature. You can not make it, dig it up, pump it up, buy it, or cause it to appear by sleight of hand. The harder you run after it the faster it flees before you—like the end of the rainbow. Happiness always comes to you over your shoulder. And it comes most permanently and regularly to those who are trying to make others happy.—Frank Crane.

SAVE THE KIDNEY

Statisticians tell us that every twelfth adult dies of Bright's Disease of the kidney. This organ becomes inflamed and inactive from overwork in removing meat poisons from the blood stream overcharged with uric acid. The use of tobacco and alcohol is equally an irritant to the kidneys. Kidneys are constructed to do a normal amount of work. Why not eat the food that was created for man? Wheat is the food for man, the main portion of your diet should be made of the wheat. To this add the vegetables in their season. It is entirely unnecessary to eat meat but if you do eat it, partake of it sparingly. It is impossible to contract consumption or appendicitis unless you eat meat; and as about 10 per cent of the cases of Bright's Disease comes from meat, it is certainly time that you give food attention. Eat Klar's Good Health Flour "The Perfect Food." At the low cost of $1 per sack. Five cents worth of this food has more perfect nourishment than 50 cents worth of meat and saves the work of the kidneys 75 per cent.

Conference Notices.

The annual conference of the London District is appointed to be held in the city of Saint Thomas on the 7th and 8th of October next; or ten days earlier than that of last year. Will the presidents and the secretaries of branches please take particular notice, and get after those statistical reports in order that I may have them by the last of September, and be able to present a complete report of the present status of the district at the conference and also at headquarters? Please take notice: the district secretary can not do his part of this work until you have done yours. The responsibility then rests upon us who neglect to do our part. The delegates to the conference at Stratford last year so thoroughly enjoyed the event that we hope the coming conference at Saint Thomas October 7 and 8 will be remembered by everybody who can possibly see his way clear to get there, and that they will get there in anticipation of a good spiritual uplifting, encouraging, enjoyable conference! Some of us are so hungry for another taste of that "great feast" which is the peculiar inheritance of the Saints of God during earth life that we are looking forward to the coming conference as to the set time for a banquet; and we suggest that special prayers be offered up to God throughout the district that the Saint Thomas conference will be the best conference known to the church up-to-date. P. H. Philippin, secretary.

Florida district conference will convene at Santa Rosa church, near Berrydale, Florida, Saturday and Sunday, September 2 and 3. The officers of the several branches will please see that their branches have reports at the conference. This is important. We can not keep records correctly without the reports, so please don't neglect. Let us all make the necessary effort to attend this conference. E. N. McCall, secretary, Dixonville, Alabama.

The Toronto, Ontario, district conference will be held at Garafraxa, September 30 and October 1, 1911. Arrangements have been made with the railways for convention rates. Buy single tickets to Grand Valley, the nearest station, on the C. P. R. and get a delegate's certificate. If fifty certificates are handed in at the conference, delegates will get return tickets for one third of single fare. If there are not fifty certificates, return fare for those holding certificates will be two thirds of single fare. Send credentials to Mrs. Floralice Miller, Dunnville, Ontario, Box 340, before September 25. Floralice Miller, secretary.

Notice is hereby given that the next conference of the Southern Missouri District will convene with the Thayer Branch, in the Cane Hill Schoolhouse, four miles east of Thayer, Oregon County, Missouri, on November 4 and 5. J. C. Chrestensen, district president, 2225 Empire street, Joplin, Missouri.

Convention Notices.

The nineteenth semiannual convention of the Independence Stake Sunday school association will convene Friday morning, September 8, at the South Side Church, Independence, Missouri. An interesting and pleasant convention is anticipated. Flo Sterrett, stake secretary.

What Thirty-five Years Have Done in Japan.

Thirty-five years ago there were eleven baptized Protestant Christians. To-day there are 70,000 of them in Japan; they own 600 churches; in their Sunday schools they teach 100,000 children. Is this the fruit of the Christian missions in Japan? Certainly. But not the only result, and not the most important.—From Adachi Kinnosuke's "Christian Missions in Japan" in the September Century.

"Dry" Victories in Utah.

Local option elections were held in 110 cities and towns in Utah on June 27. As was expected, Salt Lake City and Ogden voted "wet," but of the 110 cities and towns of the State to vote, 87 voted "dry" and only 23 voted "wet." In Salt Lake City the vote stood "wet" 14,008, "dry" 9,328. Ogden, the second city in the State, gave the "wets" a majority of 1,652. Many of the cities and towns throughout Utah which have been "wet" for years voted "dry."—American Issue.

The church owns its own printing plant in Australia, but has to pay a heavy rent for the business premises it occupies. The Australian Saints are trying to raise a TWO THOUSAND DOLLAR FUND to build an office of our own. Already a considerable sum has been donated.

To help this fund, an American edition of a four-hundred page book, entitled

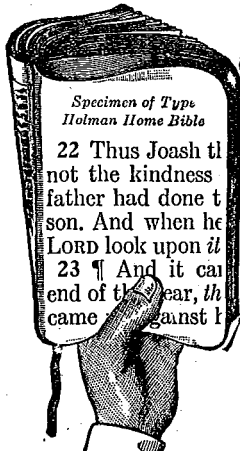

THE FALL OF BABYLON

NUMBER 36

Editorial

DESPERATION OF THE "DESERET NEWS."

The leaders of the Reorganized Church are to be congratulated because they are not called upon continually to take part in such a disheartening fight as are the leading men in Utah. Of course it is true that we as a church are the victims of much prejudice, and it is also true that almost all of it has been caused by the Utah apostasy; but we are not called upon as a people to be for ever trying to explain things that can not be explained. It really excites one's sympathy to witness the constant worry of the Utah leaders. One can easily fight off a few naughty hornets flying about one's pathway, but it surely is annoying suddenly to find a busy yellow jacket up under one's waistcoat. That is about the situation of the Utah Church since Senator Frank Cannon has taken to the lecture platform.

They first sat up and took notice when it was announced that the senator had been secured by the International Council of Women for Christian and Patriotic Service to make addresses for them. The leading editorial in the Deseret News on August 9 was entitled, "A very foolish move." From this we quote:

The members of the church can afford to look with perfect equanimity, and we may say indifference, upon anything that Mr. Cannon and his associates, male and female, may plan against their religious organization. . . .

It is strange that the reform women of this country who seem to divide their antipathy between polygamy and woman suffrage should take so kindly to ex-senator Frank J. Cannon, as to make him their champion and spokesman. To one who knows the gentleman the fact is so strange as to suggest the query whether they are sincere in their denunciation of plural marriage. Here it has been rumored for years that Mr. Cannon, after the Manifesto, implored the church authorities in vain for permission to marry a wife, plurally, urging that that would be his salvation, or words to that effect.

Quite obviously from this, Cannon could not harm them, but further along they attack Cannon as follows:

Frank Cannon is not sincere, and the women who employ him are simply being fooled. He is not truthful, and those who pay for his lectures get base metal instead of gold. When the present head of the church entered upon his office Cannon, in a letter to the Millennial Star, eulogized him. Nothing has happened since then to justify the present attitude of the ex-senator. We have reason to believe that if Mr. Cannon felt sure that he could obtain church funds, for personal financial speculation, or church support for his political ambition, he would ask for reinstatement in the church and express deep regret at his present wayward course. But nobody in Utah takes Mr. Cannon seriously. Here he is known. Even the Tribune would not keep him on the editorial staff. Nothing more need be said.

But two days later the News evidently had discovered a warm place under their vest, for they then got real busy and paid their respects to Cannon. This time they painted the senator in a gory red suit of shameful living, a Benedict Arnold who is trying to discredit the State of Utah and her people, and they close the effort by warning the Council of Women that Cannon will finally deceive them as he has others.

A week later the News takes notice of Cannon again under the caption, "Sin and apostasy." Evidently the yellow jacket is still there. This time they open up all the vials of wrath. He is an apostate, ungrateful, dishonest, immoral, having caused the death of his wife and the ruin of a young girl, etc.

Now, we would like to ask why, instead of a personal attack, they do not attempt to answer Cannon's lectures? They are trying to pollute the source in such a way that none will believe what comes from it.

The Tribune seems to enjoy the spectacle, for under the heading, "In terror of Cannon," they flay the News and the church with Cannon, and keep it up day after day. With the Tribune always knocking at their crumbling walls, and Cannon thundering away backed by a nation wide league of women, treason and rottenness within and a righteous nation without, we can see no cessation of the fight on polygamous Utah until it is leveled and its hierarchical power reduced below the danger point.

SOUND HEAVED BY CAPTAIN COOK FOUND.

The deep sea sound used by Captain Cook, the explorer of more than a century ago, is the prized possession to-day of Mrs. Joseph Burton, of Colton, California, who is now visiting her daughter, Mrs. J. G. Howland, at Ninety-sixth and Hoover streets. It is only a small stone weighing eleven pounds, but it has a remarkable history, for it was used by this earliest of South Sea navigators to take soundings in the unknown waters he sailed.

Mrs. Burton, and her husband who died last October at the age of 71, were missionaries in the South Sea Islands for nine years, and upon their departure four years ago this valuable and historic relic was presented by the natives of Tahiti, who held them in high regard.

The sound was lost by Captain Cook in a coral reef at the entrance of Papeete harbor during one of his visits, and afterward brought up by native divers. For more than a hundred years it was treasured by the natives, because of its association with the explorer for whom they had the greatest respect and affection.

In her home at Colton, Mrs. Burton has many beautiful relics of her twenty years' sojourn in foreign lands, but she prizes none more highly than the deep sea sound once used by Captain Cook. Its value as a relic has been estimated at one thousand dollars.—The Tribune, Los Angeles, California, August 21, 1911.

OLDEST NAUVOO WOMAN DIES.

Mrs. Elizabeth Howard, the oldest woman in Nauvoo, and perhaps the oldest woman in Hancock County, died last Sunday night at 10 o'clock at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Jane Marshall of this city, aged 99 years, 1 week, and 1 day. Mrs. Howard was ill only one week, taking sick the day after her birthday, which was on the 19th inst.

Mrs. Howard had enjoyed good health up to her last illness. Up to a year ago she could read and sew without glasses, and her memory was fairly good to the end. She was a remarkable woman in many respects. She was a Latter Day Saint, very pious, and an omniverous reader of the Bible. She delighted in relating reminiscences of the days so far back that few have the privilege to remember, and she was interesting to say the least. She was a good woman. She leaves over one hundred descendants.

"Her journey, though long, is now o'er,
Her bountiful harvests are now gathered
On Eternity's mystical shore."

Mrs. Howard has been a resident of Nauvoo for about eighteen years, coming here from Farmington, Iowa.

The funeral took place yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the home of Mrs. Marshall. Elder George P. Lambert of Adrian officiated.—Nauvoo Independent.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WORLD'S PEACE.—In another column will be found a reprint from the Christian Herald concerning the recent pact between the United States, England, and France. It is a resume of the history of the treaty and a digest of its terms.

DEATH OF BRADFORD CORLESS.—In the regular department of our paper will be found the obituary of Bro. Bradford Corless, at Coldwater, Michigan. He had been a resident of that vicinity for seventy-five years, and is the father of a large family of children, grandchildren, and had one great-grandchild. He had been a member of the ministry for forty-one years. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. . . . Their works shall follow them."

CHRIST IN PARIS.—A Frenchman has written a sacrilegious book or story of the Redeemer's reception upon his return to earth. The New York Times has this to say of the book:

"Charles Morice's new book, The Reappearing, is justly deserving of condemnation. Disregarding its monumental sacrilege, one can not but feel, be he Christian or non-Christian, believer or infidel, that its presentation of subject matter is unfair, that many of the incidents it recites are absurdly untrue to human nature, and that its conclusion is unjustifiably false. . . .

"Christ has returned to earth. He has chosen Paris, for that is the center of modern civilization. The result of his advent is a corrosive morality, business comes to a standstill, anarchy threatens, misery is widespread. . . . Jesus leads the people to Montmartre, where he delivers what the author intends to be a scathing denunciation of modernity. . . .

"The president of France and the prefect of police confer, and on Christmas Day Jesus is requested to leave the country. To his answer the prefect rejoins, 'May I feel assured of your respect for our laws?'

"So ends the book, and we are left to believe that Jesus departed from Paris. . . .

"The result of the advent of the Savior is morality, but the result of morality is poverty. The law courts and the stock exchange go out of business, firms fail because they can not collect their debts. . . .

"Morice does not fight fairly. His Savior is but the creation of a deranged malignance. Nor are the incidents of which we have cited only a few, one whit more reasonable. Mr. Dawson, who writes the introduction, says: 'We are compelled, perhaps against our wills, to recognize that did Christ appear in Paris to-day, the attitudes of commerce and culture toward him would be very much as Monsieur Morice states.' It is to be hoped that few will agree with him. One last word. Who is Charles Morice? He is no stranger to us. The writer of La Littérature de tout-à-l'heure has already been catalogued by Doctor Nordau, the brilliant author of Degeneration. He speaks of 'the graphomaniac Morice,' and in discussing his earlier book, calls attention to 'the utter senselessness of its concatenations of words. It is a monument of pure literary insanity. . . . Never have ideas danced a crazier fool's quadrille in a disordered brain."

UNIFORM DIVORCE LAWS.—This subject seems to be demanding considerable attention at the present. There is a movement on foot to secure uniform laws throughout the States, and Congressman Norris, of Nebraska, has introduced into Congress a bill to authorize the governors of all States to appoint two representatives from their respective States to a national convention for the above purpose, all expenses to be paid by the national Government. Judge Norris should be supported in this movement.

AT CALDWELL, IDAHO.—Bro. S. D. Condit has brought the work before the public there by getting statements published in the Caldwell Tribune and the Caldwell Blab. Tent meetings were being conducted by Brother Condit and Brother Madden and wife. A letter from Brother Condit appears elsewhere, somewhat delayed, but still timely.

EVERYBODY'S.—Everybody's Magazine for September has a page and a half letter from Pres. Joseph Smith, in which he calls attention to the claims of the Reorganized Church as being the legal successor to the original church, and to the apostasy of Brigham Young and associates. We will reproduce the letter in an early issue.

HEAD-AYLOR DEBATE.—The Head-Aylor debate receives attention in the Christian Standard for August 19, in a communication from one James Cage, Davenport, Oklahoma, who was moderator for Mr. Head. A "hands down" victory for Mr. Head is all that Mr. Cage could see in the debate, and while giving Brother Aylor credit for being cool and calm, he said the brother's only "strong point" was misrepresentations and "twisting" the word of God; and he accuses him of getting ideas from Russell in regard to endless torment.

WAIL FROM V. S. PEET.—That champion of Utah Mormonism, V. S. Peet, publisher of the Utah Independent, it seems has been sent on a mission to England. The Independent for August 17 has a front page letter from the gentleman in which he takes the Commercial Club of Salt Lake City to task for their support of the Salt Lake Tribune, attributing to the latter all the misfortunes and troubles in which the Utah Mormons find themselves in England to-day. He calls on them to officially deny the Tribune tracts which are being distributed in England, and continues as follows:

"Gentlemen, do not make yourselves the laughing stock of all God's creation by pretending to boost Utah while at the same time you are, by your patronage, supporting the Tribune in its defamation and slander. . . . I will write to you again next week. I will tell of the apparent agreement between Thomas Kearns and Cardinal Gibbons to injure Utah, and the 'trick' they turned in getting you in a surreptitious way to boost the Catholics by making you believe you were fighting the Mormons."

Mr. Peet seems to be somewhat of a fighter. We suggest that the Utah Church make a high priest or an apostle of him and put him in charge of their foreign missions.

DISSATISFIED INDIANS.—Eighty-five Nez Perce Indians have recently withdrawn from the Presbyterian Church and affiliated with the Methodists. Stephen Reuben, one of the dissenters, has made the following statement:

"We protested to the presbytery a number of times concerning our pastor. We were not satisfied with him and wanted another, but they would not do as we wished, so we all left the church and joined the Methodists.

"On the reservation there are six Presbyterian churches, with a membership of more than five hundred. Of the one thousand four hundred Nez Perce Indians, only a few are Catholics. The Indians were converted to the Presbyterian Church by the Rev. Mr. Spaulding in 1836, and since that time that church has always been the strongest with the tribe.

"When we withdrew we took our pastor and two of the elders into the Methodist Church with us."

FROM NEW MEXICO.—The Tularosa Valley Tribune (New Mexico), reaches us with a three-column communication therein from Bro. J. E. Vanderwood, setting forth the belief of the Reorganized Church and calling attention to the differences between us and the Utah Church. The brother is to be commended for his enterprise and the paper for its fairness in publishing the statement.

ANTI-JEWISH RIOTS.—There has been a riot among workmen at Monmouthshire, England, during which several attacks have been made upon Jewish dealers at Ebbw Vale, Tredegar, Rhymney, and Brynmawr. The Jewish inhabitants have called on the Government for protection and have fled the country in large numbers. A dispatch to the New York World says:

"Jews are leaving Tredegar and Ebbw Vale in hundreds. Threats have been heard for a long time against the Jews in Northumberland, the complaint being that they have a monopoly in certain businesses, such as house furnishings, clothing and jewelry, and charge exorbitant prices. It is alleged that they possess a large amount of inferior house property and compel their tenants to purchase furniture from them on the installment system. They also are accused of harshly evicting tenants who are unable to pay rents."

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

At this juncture of the world there are many "lo here's" and "lo there's," and Jesus advised us to "dig deep" as for a "hidden treasure." God and Christ are the authors of a perfect law (Psalm 19: 7; James 1: 25; Acts 4: 12; Romans 1: 16; 8: 1, 2, 3; Galatians 1: 8; 5: 1, 3), hence there can be but one way to be saved, for, sayeth the Master, he that "climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber." (John 10: 1-4.) "There is a way which seemeth right unto man; but the end thereof are the ways of death" (Proverbs 14: 12).

As a starting point, we quote the language of the Savior: "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you." As to the nature of this kingdom, we are not left to the formulated opinions of men, for the Master in unmistakable language portrays the kingdom of God in Matthew 16 where he says, "upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." It is a fact, well known to Bible readers, that the words church and kingdom are used interchangeably, hence mean the same thing. The commandment, "Seek first the kingdom of God," shows beyond a doubt that the kingdom of God was in existence. "The law and the prophets were until John; since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man who seeketh truth presseth into it." (Luke 16: 16, Inspired Translation.)

Again we are told that we can not understand the kingdom of God because of its spiritual signification (the kingdom of God is both literal and spiritual). Those who make this claim usually quote this scripture, "The kingdom of God is within you." Now we wish to ask, Is the kingdom of God in the heart of one person or a plurality of persons? If in the former, where are you going to be? Jesus said, "seek first the kingdom of God," "press into the kingdom," "wherefore we receiving a kingdom which can not be moved" (Hebrews 12: 28), "who hath delivered us from the power of darkness and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son" (Colossians 1: 13). To me at least, it is a mystery how we can "press into" or be "translated" into the kingdom of God and the kingdom in us. This erroneous and unwarranted conclusion is drawn by those who have not "rightly divided the word of truth," (2 Timothy 2: 15). Let us consider, then, who Jesus was talking to: "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in . . . for ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretense make long prayer: therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation." (Matthew 23: 13, 14). Do you tell me the kingdom of God is in the heart of such a class of people? Listen, "And when he was demanded of the Pharisees (note, this is the same class of people to whom he has been talking in Matthew 23: 13, 14) when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said, "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation (or with outward show), neither shall they say, Lo here, or Lo there; for the kingdom of God is within you," (or, among you, see margin,—Luke 17: 20, 21.)

Dear reader, can't you see how plain this is? Jesus came to establish the kingdom of God for the salvation of lost humanity. But did he establish the kingdom in the heart of any individual or individuals who were denounced as "hypocrites, who for a pretense make long prayers," "devour widows' houses," etc? That would make Christ a party to that which is wrong, and contradict his teaching throughout the entirety of the New Testament; he has warned us to "beware of the leaven of the Pharisees."

The kingdom of God was established in the days of Christ (see Luke 11: 20; Matthew 6: 23; 16: 18, 19) and by the same divine authority in which the laws of that kingdom were executed in the days of Christ will be in operation when the Son of God returns from heaven. To for ever settle the question that the kingdom of God was established in the days of the Messiah, and is not an event to take place at the second coming of the Lord, as an organization, we have only to quote the language of Christ, "But if I cast out devils by the spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you." (Matthew 12: 28). We are told by some that there is no kingdom till the Lord descends from heaven and then the kingdom is "set up." Oh, charge not the Son of God in "casting out devils" by the power of Beelzebub. Is it a fact that he raised the dead, healed the blind, cleansed the lepers, turned the water into wine, stilled the turbulent waters of old Galilee, made his triumphal entry into Jerusalem, restored the eyesight of blind Bartimæus? Oh, yes; we all answer in the affirmative. Then it is an undeniable fact that he established the kingdom of God. There is nothing said from Genesis to Revelation that it is a "kingdom of grace," but it is the "kingdom of God" (Matthew 12: 28). The kingdom of God mentioned by Daniel the prophet (see Daniel 2: 44): "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom." Was to be "set up," "never to be destroyed" nor "thrown down" in the last days, as symbolized by "the little stone" "cut out of the mountain without hands." But the kingdom of God portrayed in Matthew 12: 28, by our Lord (see Luke 11: 20, "But if I with the finger of God cast out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you,") was "taken by violence" and thrown down. Matthew 11: 12.

WHAT IS THE KINGDOM OF GOD?

"For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost" (Romans 14:17), a condition that actually exists among the Saints of God. Modern theologians have tried to spiritualize the kingdom of God as a "sky kingdom," placing it "beyond the bounds of time and space." True, the Master says, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven" (Matthew 6); but we must remember also that we become citizens of the kingdom of God in its finite state, (not in the kingdom of God in its infinite state) for the will of God is not done on earth now as it is done in heaven; and as already noted, the apostles "received a kingdom which can not be moved." (Hebrews 12:28.) If God has no kingdom, church, or ecclesiastical form of government on the earth, then we have a system of confusion, dissolution, and anarchy. "Seek first the kingdom of God." We must know what to seek for. What is the kingdom of God? how can I find it? are questions of more than momentary consideration. We find the description of that kingdom portrayed in the sacred writings of the holy apostles who received the gospel by plenary revelation. How infinitely important to start right! Ah, dear reader, when you find this kingdom, will you "knock" that you may "receive," or will you stay out on account of prejudice? Daniel says that this kingdom shall be given to the saints, (not Christians nor Adventists, but to the saints, "for God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the saints") of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom. In the first part of the verse (Daniel 7:27) we learn that this kingdom is "under the whole heaven." Having found its location, we want to find it as an organization. Daniel says, "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed," (Daniel 2:44), symbolized by the little stone that was cut out of the mountain without hands that was to break in pieces the iron, brass, clay, silver and gold, which evidently symbolized other kingdoms, as shown to the Prophet Daniel in vision. But "the little stone cut out of the mountain without hands," which smote "the image upon his feet" was to grow until it "fills the whole earth." This we understand to be the kingdom of God set up in the last days as it was to stand "for ever" and never be "destroyed."

In lesson 12 of the senior grade of the Gospel Quarterly for the first quarter, 1910, the editor, in a well written lesson on the kingdom of God, writes as follows:

Nebuchadnezzar saw in a dream a great image representing the various kingdoms of the world that should successively rise and rule, and he saw a stone cut out of the mountain without hands which smote the image and destroyed it. And the stone grew and became a great mountain and filled the whole earth.

In interpreting the dream, Daniel said the stone represented a kingdom which God would set up in the last days that would consume all other kingdoms and stand for ever. Referring to this, Doctrine and Covenants 65 says, "The keys of the kingdom of God are committed unto man on earth, and from thence shall the gospel roll forth unto the ends of the earth, as the stone which is cut out of the mountain without hands shall roll forth, until it has filled the whole earth."

The same truth was made known to John the Revelator in the wonderful revelation received by him on the Isle of Patmos. He tells us in Revelation 11:15 that he heard a great voice out of heaven saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever."

In the parable of the mustard seed, it is stated that the fowls of the air might lodge in the branches of the tree. This was a familiar Old Testament figure of a mighty kingdom that gave shelter to the nations. (Daniel 4:20-22.)

In Daniel 7:13, 14, we read of an everlasting kingdom which is to be set up, that is to be composed of all people, nations, and languages. From passages we have considered, we may expect the kingdom of God to be set up in a simple and unostentatious manner; and we may expect it to grow until "the Lord shall be king over the earth" (Zechariah 14:9), until the righteous men of every nation find peace and protection under the just reign of Christ.

The kingdom of God in its formative period had its commencement with John the Baptist. But in Matthew 11:12 we read: "And from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." (Matthew 21:43.) And Paul says, "For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." (Acts 20:29, 30.) We all know that this "drawing away" finally resulted in the development of the Roman Catholic Church, who replenished her treasuries from the sale of indulgences, that were peddled out like government bonds by Tetzel, Samson, et al the most notorious indulgence sellers in the history of the Roman Catholic Church. Our Baptist friends try to prove succession from John the Baptist. John organized no church, and we can trace the Baptist Church no farther back than the year 1521 in Germany, with Nicholas Stork as its founder. (See Vincent L. Miller in "Religious Denominations.") Our Campbellite friends tell us the church was built on the day of Pentecost, and ignore Alexander Campbell as the founder of their sect that never saw daylight until about the year 1832, when it started out on the doubtful foundation, "if we have authority to preach, we have authority to baptize." So it is hard to prove succession, or get back to Pentecost without going through that dark cave (Catholicism).

Luther revolted against Catholicism and later founded the Lutheran Church. Because the pope would not grant a divorce to King Henry VIII, so that he could put away his wife (Catherine) and marry Anne Boleyn, he (Henry VIII) became highly incensed and finally put away his wife and actually married Anne, and declared himself the supreme head of the church on earth; and then followed the Church of England, known in this country as the Episcopalian Church, and so on. We can name the founder of every church which became dissatisfied with the Roman Church and commenced to "reform" the Catholic Church without authority from God. These men received no divine call to commence the reformation. You can not reform the work of God; men can reform and change, but the work of God,—never. We give the reformers credit for the good they did, believing they paved the way for the latter day work to be brought forth, but so far as restoring primitive Christianity, their efforts were futile. The Catholic Church teaches the real body of Christ in the Holy Eucharist; that is, the bread becomes the real body of Christ after the priest consecrates it,—transubstantiation. The following is the Catholic doctrine: Paul said, "For as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come." (1 Corinthians 11:26.) The Catholic laity do not drink the wine; the priests drink it. "Is the cup given in the church of Rome? No; the church of Rome conceded it, for eleven centuries, to the people, but it became expedient to withdraw it, because, according to Delahogue, some communicants 'spilled the wine' which is believed to be the blood of Christ, and because it became expedient also to exalt the priesthood in the eyes of the laity, by peculiar distinctions." (See Hamersmith Discussion, p. 122.) The eating of bread can not include both the eating of the bread and drinking of the wine on the part of the laity, if the priests drink the wine. Paul speaks to the church and says, "as often as ye," which signifies the entire church. See the point? But how much better is the Lutheran doctrine of consubstantiation, and their doctrine of sprinkling for baptism? The Catholics used to baptize by immersion, but now they baptize by infusion or sprinkling; Methodists, Congregationalists, Presbyterians, and all do the same who came out of the Catholic Church.

Now we shall take a look for the kingdom of God; we contend for restoration by angelic ministration (not a reformation) in the latter days. It took men called by revelation in the days of Christ to administer the laws of the kingdom of God. It takes the same now, for God is unchangeable. (Malachi 3:6.) We turn to Ephesians, the fourth chapter, and we read, "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints; for the work of the ministry (is there any need for the work of the ministry now?); for the edifying of the body (church) of Christ." How long, Paul, was this to continue? "Till we all come in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." What for, Paul? "That we henceforth (from this time onward) be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive." (Ephesians 4:11-15.) These officers were placed in the church by the Son of God. Why shouldn't they remain there? It is useless to say they were placed in the church for only a temporary purpose. God does not work by experimenting; apostles were not temporary scaffolding for the church. The Apostle James says of him: "In whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." In Ephesians 4:4, 5, Paul says, "There is one body (church), and one Spirit, one Lord, one faith, one baptism." Dear reader, the Lord established only one church, and denominated it as "my church."

Every church in Christendom claims to be the true church, and that it is right. But Jesus has only one church—all others are products of human leaders who revolted against Catholicism. Let us reason a little by analogy, though the illustration may seem crude: William and Mary are to be married, but it is necessary for him to go on a long journey before they are wedded. He writes to Mary when he is coming back to take her as his bride. She understands and knows that he is coming and makes the necessary preparation for their marriage. They understand each other because they have had communication. But when William returns, suppose a hundred or more young ladies present themselves for acceptance? Will any one do? or will he take all of them and be a polygamist? No; he would be true to his bride. He can not go back on the messages sent to her. So we read in Revelation: "And the bride (church) hath made herself ready." How does the bridegroom know when the bride "hath made herself ready"? By revelation, by revealing himself to the church.

Now, we turn to 1 Corinthians 12:13-15, and read: "For by one spirit are we all baptized into one body (church—see?), whether we be Jews or Gentiles, . . . for the body is not one member, but many. If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body?" Read the whole chapter. Here the apostle compares the church to a man. This building (church) fitly framed together consisted of many members. When you remove apostles from the church it ceases to be the church organically, so with bishops, elders, pastors, teachers, etc.. "Now ye are the body of Christ and members in particular. And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversity of tongues. Are all apostles, are all prophets; are all teachers, are all workers of miracles, have all the gifts of healing, do all speak with tongues, do all interpret? But covet earnestly the best gifts; and yet show I unto you a more excellent way." The more excellent way is just what he had been showing them, for it was God's way. "Yet is from the Greek word eti, which means still, hitherto, "I point out" to you a "more excellent way" (see Braden-Kelley Debate on 1 Corinthians 12: 12-31). The same God that "set" the sun in the heavens to give light by day (so full of comfort and benefit to man) also "set" apostles in the church. Weak, puny man can not change God's plans concerning his church.

Where do we find an organization of this kind, dear reader? It is the Latter Day Saints Church, with apostles and prophets, sevens, elders, bishops, high priests or pastors, teachers, and deacons, and all the attendant blessings of the gospel. Jesus says, "Seek first the kingdom of God." Will you do it? To-day is the day of salvation; to-morrow may be too late.

HOW CAN WE ENTER THE KINGDOM OF GOD?

Surely no one can find fault with the Bible way of entering the church. Jesus says, "I am the way, the truth, and the life." (John 14: 6). It's "the way" that is "cast up by the Lord" that we want to follow,—to "inquire for the old paths" (Jeremiah 6: 16) "and walk therein," for "there is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death," (Proverbs 14: 12; 16: 25). "He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber. . . . I am the door of the sheep."—John 10: 1, 7. Here we learn that Jesus is the door into the sheepfold. How are we to get into the fold? How are we to get into Christ? How can I claim to be a child of God when I have never put him on? Listen to the words of inspiration, "For as many as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ."—Galatians 3: 27. Again, we read in Peter's memorable sermon on the day of Pentecost, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins."—Acts 2: 38. Baptism is then for the "remission of sins." Why? Because the Bible says so. Baptism "washes away sins" (Acts 22: 16); for "remission of sins" (Mark 1: 4; Luke 1: 77; see also Luke 3: 3); "preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." We learn, then, that we put on Christ by being baptized; also that baptism is "for the remission of sins."

Now we come to the 6th chapter of Romans. Baptism is here called a burial—"buried with Christ in baptism." How anyone can be "buried with Christ in baptism" by having a little water poured on the head or sprinkled on the candidate as he may choose, I can not conceive. Dear reader, you never read of anyone believing into Christ, or repenting into Christ, but we do read, "As many as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." What presumptuous folly and temerity for man to teach that baptism is "an outward sign of an inward grace"! "Consider what I say and the Lord give thee understanding." Sprinkling is a method unknown to the inspired apostles, and was adopted by the Catholics because of its convenience. Hear what the eminent Cardinal Gibbons says. I quote from a Catholic work entitled, The Faith of Our Fathers, page 317: "For several centuries after the establishment of Christianity, baptism was usually conferred by immersion, but since the twelfth century, the practice of baptism by infusion has prevailed in the Catholic Church, as this manner is attended with less inconvenience than baptism by immersion."

Here you have the authority for sprinkling, "attended with less inconvenience." This same writer places the pope above all human laws. As God's vicegerent, he has the right to say what sacred ordinances shall be changed. Sprinkling was practiced in the catacombs because of its convenience. Are you, my Presbyterian, Methodist, and Congregational brethren, going to follow in the footsteps of the Catholic Church? They regard you as heretics, and you regard the Catholics as apostates, so that you are about even. Now we give the history of the first case where sprinkling was adopted as a counterfeit of that sacred ordinance that God placed in the church, baptism by immersion.

"The first instance of pouring on record is that of Novatian, which took place about the year 251. I will read the account of Eusebius, the father of ecclesiastical historians, who says, with regard to this case, that 'Novatian fell into a grievous distemper, and it being supposed that he would die immediately, he received baptism, being besprinkled with water on the bed whereon he lay, (if that can be termed baptism).' And here is a quotation from the Edinburgh Encyclopedia, which says, 'The first law for sprinkling' (mark it, the first law) was in the following manner: Pope Stephen II, being driven from Rome by Adolphus, king of the Lombards, in 753, fled to Pepin, who, a short time before, had usurped the crown of France. While he remained there, Monks of Cressy, in Brittany, consulted him whether, in cases of necessity, baptism poured on the head of the infant would be lawful. Stephen replied that it would; but though the truth of this fact be allowed, which, however some Catholics deny, yet pouring or sprinkling was admitted only in cases of necessity. It was not until the year 1311 that the legislature, in a council held at Ravenna, declared immersion or sprinkling to be indifferent. In Scotland, however, sprinkling was never practiced in ordinary cases till after the reformation (about the middle of the sixteenth century). From Scotland it made its way into England in the reign of Elizabeth, but was not authorized in the Established Church." (See Grace Truman, pages 296, 297).

And here is a short extract from the Manuel ad Usum Savum, printed in 1530, which orders that "the priest baptize him (the candidate) by dipping him in the water thrice." The Common Prayer Book of Edward VI, 1549, decrees that the priest shall "dip it in the water thrice." Ibid., p. 297.

Here we have the history of sprinkling. Paul says that "to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey." (Romans 6: 16.) Will you obey God or the Catholic Church? But how much better is Presbyterianism and Methodism? I quote from the Probationer's Handbook, page 84, "Then shall the minister ask the name of each person to be baptized, and shall sprinkle or pour water upon them (or if he shall desire it), shall immerse him in water." Here is the doctrine of baptism set forth by one of the daughters of Babylon. The whim or caprice of the individual will be all right (?) with God, as the individual is to be baptized the way he "desires it." Presbyterianism: "Dipping of the person into water is not necessary; but baptism is rightly administered by pouring or sprinkling water upon the person."—Confession of Faith, chapter 28. This is a kind of an on-the-fence statement or go-it-as-you-please. In Ephesians 4 we are told that there is "one faith, one Lord, one baptism." "One law shall be to him that is home-born and unto the stranger that sojourneth among you." (Exodus 12: 49.) "By their fruits ye shall know them." We judge the tottering system of Calvinism by their teaching.

Now, dear reader, let us be fair and compare the doctrine of the Latter Day Saints with the doctrine the apostles taught. (See Hebrews 6: 1-8; Romans 1: 16, 17; 8: 1-5; Galatians 1: 8; 5: 1, 2; Acts 4: 12; James 1: 25; Psalm 19: 17.) Read these texts and you will form an idea of what the despised Latter Day Saints are teaching. We deplore the doctrine of total depravity and deny baby damnation and baptism, over which Calvin smacked his lips. Here is what he says, "Reprobate infants are vipers of vengeance, which God holds over the flames of hell until they turn and spit venom in God's face."—Calvin's Institutes, volume 1. How unlike God this is, when we compare it with the Bible: "Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God."—Jesus. Which will you believe, reader, Calvin or Jesus?

They have dug up all the falsehoods possible against Joseph Smith, the Martyr, to prove that he was a bad man, from such secondhanded stuff as Beadle, Crow, Bays, et al, that would be ruled out of any court because of their unreliability, for they contradict history, court decisions, and themselves as well. But tell me not that such men as Calvin and King Henry VIII were men sent of God. Calvin had Bolsac, the physician; Amurer, the senator, and several others thrown into prison or exiled. James Gruett was several times put to the torture and finally beheaded, and Doctor Servetus burned at the stake. What for? For differing with him in his religious views. And King Henry VIII had Doctor Barnes, John Lambert, and a number of others, burned publicly at Smithfield for heresy, because they disagreed with him on the Eucharist. Oh, tell me not that such men were sent of God, not because of their wicked doings only, but because of the doctrine they teach, so with the Catholics and others. "If they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isaiah 8: 20. "Though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you than that we have preached, let him be accursed."—Galatians 1: 8. The gospel is older than the decrees of the pope, and such blasphemous titles, Holy Father, Christ's Vicar, God's Vicegerent, have no weight with us, therefore are received with derision.

Dear reader, are you going to follow in the footsteps of the church that has made all nations drunk on the wine of her fornication, or be numbered with those who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, who have united with the church restored to the earth by angelic ministrations through God's humble servant, Joseph Smith, the Martyr? "Ask and ye shall receive, knock and it shall be opened unto you."

Yours in one blessed gospel,
JAMES D. SCHOFIELD.

SAINTS' HERALD DOCTRINAL SERIES.

XIV.—THE ETERNAL JUDGMENT.

BY ELDER A. B. PHILLIPS.

There is probably no principle of scriptural teaching that has been more woefully misrepresented than that relating to this subject. Volumes have been compiled in unauthorized attempts to distort the teachings of scripture out of all semblance to their natural equity; and the Deity has been represented as possessing qualities of judgment that do violence to every principle of justice, and shock the sensibilities of every right thinking person. These horrible paragraphs are scattered profusely in the religious effusions of many writers, from previous centuries down to the present day. Many have blindly followed their lead, while others have been driven to infidelity or skepticism, supposing that such teaching represents scriptural justice. Many are yet familiar with Watts' notorious hymn:

"There is a never ending hell, and never dying pains,
Where sinners must with demons dwell, in darkness, fire and chains.

Have faith the same, with endless shame for all the human race;

For hell is crammed with infants damned without a day of grace."

Other later attempts to depict the torments of the damned in the all-but-universal doom, have so far eclipsed the famous Dante that the latter is worthy of mention only because his portrayals were far too sane to successfully compete with them. Such writers have made the awful mistake of describing the Devil's character,—ascribing it to God.

The Scriptures do not represent the Creator as a monster of cruelty who delights in the torment of little infants and children, who have done no wrong; on the contrary, Jesus said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." The great Judge is essentially a being of justice. He always does that which is fair and impartial because he is perfect in principle, in attributes, and in knowledge; therefore he always does that which is good and commendable.

Paul tells us that eternal judgment is a principle of the doctrine (teaching) of Christ. (Hebrews 6: 2.) It provides that all accountable beings shall answer to God for their acts in life, and shall receive reward or punishment in the future life, according to the degree of good or evil they have done here.

ARE WE JUDGED NOW?

It is claimed by many that there is no judgment except what is meted out to us in this life. This "is both unscriptural and unreasonable in the extreme, as will be shown. Everyone faces the fact that in this life the wicked often prosper, and revel in all manner of luxury, while the righteous are starving for bare necessities. Examples of injustice that are never righted in this life, may be seen on every hand. But the ultimate of God's purposes is not reached in this life, for they relate to eternal conditions.

This temporary life is connected with the life beyond; hence, while justice demands an adjustment of life for all, that adjustment must be dependent upon the life of the individual here in order to be just.

The Bible is explicit on this point: "It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment."—Hebrews 9: 27. Jesus taught that the judgment is not now: "If any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him not; for I came not to judge the world."—John 12: 47. The reason Jesus did not judge at that time was that the day ordained for the judgment had not yet come: "Because he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained."—Acts 17: 31. Of that judgment, the Lord has said, "The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day."

WHO ARE TO BE JUDGED?

It is claimed by some that those who accept Christ will not be judged; that through the merits of Christ they shall escape the judgment; that although he will judge the world, that judgment does not refer to them, because they are not of the world. In reply to this we present the statement of Paul: "But why dost thou judge thy brother? . . . for we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ." The apostle includes himself as among those who shall be thus judged, as well as the saints, the followers of Christ. That they are not to be there simply as witnesses against the world is proven by his further statement in 2 Corinthians 5: 10: "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that everyone may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done; whether it be good or bad."

Not only will this judgment be passed upon those who have heard the gospel in this life, but in order that all might be judged equally, the Savior, after his crucifixion, carried the gospel to the dead, the spirits in prison. Peter says of this, "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God; being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit, by which he went and preached unto the spirits in prison, which sometime were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing."

Peter then proceeds to tell us why the gospel was thus preached to them: "For, for this cause, was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit."—4: 6. Thus, in that marvelous vision of John, the Christ informed him that he has the "keys of hell and of death"; and Peter says, "And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead."—Acts 10: 42.

This judgment not only extends to the living and the dead of this world, but even angels which "kept not their first estate" are reserved "unto the judgment of the great day."—Jude 6.

THE NATURE OF THE JUDGMENT.

And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works.—Revelation 20: 2, 13.

The judgment is based upon the divine principle of eternal justice. That justice is executed by means of rewards to the obedient, and punishments to the disobedient. Many religious teachers have claimed that each particular act will not be considered, in the judgment, but that all who shall be saved, will be assigned indiscriminately to the same place or condition; while those who are not saved, will, in like manner, be consigned to a perdition, where the blackest hearted and most villainous murderer receives no severer punishment than is inflicted on the one who has lived a life of good morals, and has been true and kind to his fellow-man; but has failed to become interested in religion. This idea is disproved by both the Old and New Testaments. We read in the former that, "God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil."—Ecclesiastes 12: 14. In the latter we read: "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Galatians 6: 7. In harmony with these, Jesus says, "Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."—Matthew 12: 36. This proves that each act of every person will be considered, or, as stated in Hebrews 2: 2: "Every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward." This perfectly accords with Paul's declaration that everyone shall receive "the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." This is so plain that it seems unnecessary to quote other scripture on this point. They clearly teach, in no ambiguous terms, that both the good and bad deeds of everyone will be judged, and recompensed to him as his portion in the next life.

OBJECT OF THE JUDGMENT.

The finite mind may not fully comprehend the purposes of the Creator, but we know that they are always wise, just, beneficent, and good. We are told that he sees the end from the beginning, and although our knowledge is limited, even in the affairs of this life, he knows the final effect that every experience we have in this life will have upon our future state; hence, his purposes must ever be for the good of those whom he has created. We therefore shall find that the judgment is as much for the good of man as is every other act of the all wise Being, when rightly understood; for he always acts for the best, under the circumstances that exist.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE UNCONVERTED.

We have seen that the scripture teaches that there is a graded system of rewards and punishments. If all were equally intelligent, and their opportunities exactly the same, then all would be equally punished for disobedience; but as this is not the case, opportunity and desire for the right, as far as it is comprehended, form a consideration in the judgment of the individual. The proper use of each opportunity is commendable; it follows, therefore, that a failure to use one's opportunities will bring condemnation in proportion to the enormity of the offense; but Jesus says, "That servant which knew his lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes; but he that knew not, and did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes."—Luke 12: 47, 48.

The question has been asked, "Why should one be beaten with even a few stripes, who does not know his Master's will?" The reason for this is, probably, that many are slothful, and indifferent of the Master's will. For this they will be held accountable, for all are commanded to learn his will. But those things we desire most are the things we bend our energies to obtain; therefore, if our greatest efforts are not for heavenly things, it is because our greatest desires are elsewhere. We can not reap where we have not sowed.

The argument is often made, that many millions of people have died who never heard the gospel in this life; that God would not condemn them for something they did not know; and that if the heathen can be saved without obeying the gospel, so can they be saved without obeying it, if God is impartial. This reasoning is faulty in two weighty particulars: First; because one who had never heard the gospel, should be accepted of God, would be no reason for accepting one who had heard it and not obeyed it. Second; the scripture previously quoted shows that the spirits of those who were disobedient went to the prison, and that the gospel was preached to the dead in order that they might be judged according to men in the flesh. In other words, the Bible teaches us that all who do not hear the gospel in this life, must hear it in the next one, and either accept it or reject it; for Jesus is the only one by whom salvation comes to man. To reject it in this life is, as stated by Paul, to "judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life"; and bring that penalty which disobedience to God merits. He has revealed to us the better way, and promised eternal joys to those who choose it; but warns us that the darksome path leads to the misery of hell, the prison of which he says, "Verily I say unto thee, thou shalt by no means come out thence, till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing."

Those who reject the gospel by which their past sins may be forgiven, must pay the price of their own choice. Those to whom the greater light has come, must pay a greater penalty for rejecting it.

The following words of Jesus illustrate this: "And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell: for if the mighty works, which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day. But I say unto you, that it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment, than for thee."—Matthew 11: 23, 24. It could not possibly be "more tolerable" for Sodom, in the day of judgment, if there were no different degrees of punishment to be inflicted.

But whatever the punishment be, it is, says Paul, "a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God," and receive condemnation. Of all the portentous events of earth, none can compare with the awful solemnity of that day when its billions of inhabitants, past and present, shall stand in suspense before the great white throne, where sits the omnific Ruler; before whose presence the very heavens are dissolved. Who, in his consciousness of guilt, shall be able to endure that all searching presence? Regret, with its flood of memories, may overwhelm the soul; when, with inexpressible vividness, is exposed to view the naked past; but that regret which is actuated by fear of punishment, disappears when the fear is removed. All must learn that permanent happiness comes only to those who love the right. That is life's lesson to all. Soon or late, every soul must learn it. If learned in this life, it will fit us for the transcendent glory of the celestial place; otherwise we must pay the penalty of our failure, folly, willfulness, or disobedience. The thing of tremendous import is, that our harvest will be the results of what we are now doing. The judgment day will be our time of reaping. We can not sow then; it will be too late. We are sowing now.

WILL DEEDS BE JUDGED, IF ATONED FOR?

A portion of the religious world profess to believe that their wickedness in the past will not lessen their reward in heaven, in the least degree, if they only accept Christ before death for ever closes their earthly career. Some who believe this, have concluded to wait until old age draws their bowed frames and wasted powers to the very edge of eternity,—in order that all their sins may be atoned for after they have reveled in its seductive ways until their shriveled brains refuse to respond to its allurements. Others and even religious enthusiasts of "the cloth," have claimed that God will love them more for the wrong they do, because he will view them in the person of Christ. These opinions, human or devilish, are often received by those who are ignorant of Bible teaching; and many are the sins that may be traced to such sources. Others turn away in disgust from that which shocks the moral sense, and deranges the throne of reason and justice in man.

The gospel promises remission of sins to the repentant sinner who obeys it, but it does not promise that the wicked past shall be accounted as righteousness. God loves the sinner, not because he is a sinner, but because he sees the good qualities that may be developed in him. God has said that he hates sin, but loves righteousness. The fact that sins are forgiven, does not entitle anyone to a reward for righteousness who has never done any righteousness. Paul says, "Some men's sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment; and some men they follow after."—1 Timothy 5: 24. Through the atonement of Christ, the sins of those who obey the gospel are forgiven. This means that the penalty or punishment will not be inflicted; through their remission they go before to judgment. But it does not mean that all record of the past is to be obliterated so that it will not appear at the judgment day. The deeds performed, before one obeys the gospel, form a part of his life's record, as well as those performed afterward. They indicate, not what the degree of his punishment shall be, if the punishment has been remitted; but the value to be placed upon his character, which determines his future estate and sphere of action. Concerning this principle, Paul says, "The fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire."—1 Corinthians 3: 13-15. Jesus says, "For there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be known. Therefore whatsoever ye have spoken in darkness shall be heard in the light."—Luke 12: 2, 3.

That forgiveness of sins does not efface the record of our deeds, is further shown from the fact that forgiveness is not confined to pre-Christian experience. Jesus promised it to his disciples, upon condition that they forgive others. John shows that Jesus is the advocate for the Christian who sins and repents, and that he is faithful to forgive all such; but, as we have already shown from scripture, every man's work must "be tried by fire," and every idle word and deed recorded for the judgment. This could not be true of either saint or sinner, if forgiveness of a wrong deed blots out the record of that deed.

There may be things in an individual's life that will lessen his reward in the next life, but will not consign him to perdition. Jesus says, "Whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment: . . . but whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire."—Matthew 5: 22. Thus we learn that even the things many suppose to be of trifling importance will meet them in the judgment and be weighed in the balance; while the other offenses of more serious character will condemn them to punishment in the great prison until the penalty is paid.

NO PARTIALITY IN THE JUDGMENT.

Many have taught that in the judgment good deeds will not be considered; that nothing will be of the slightest consequence to the great Judge, except the fact that they are believers in Christ. How strangely this contrasts with the good book, is easily seen; the following scripture being very definite and plain. Paul writes of it as follows: "Every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor; for we are laborers together with God."—1 Corinthians 3: 8, 9. Again he says to the Ephesian saints: "Knowing that whatsoever good thing any man doeth, the same shall he receive of the Lord, whether he be bond or free."—Ephesians 6: 8. Peter tells us that this judgment shall be "without respect of persons"; and Jesus himself says of that day, "Then he shall reward every man according to his works."—Matthew 16: 27. Peter had found it difficult to believe that God is no respecter of persons, until it was proven to him so unmistakably that he could not doubt. Many Christians to-day also doubt it, but in a different manner. May the truth dawn upon such as clearly as it did upon Peter of old, that God is impartial to all his creatures.

The above serves to show that the judgment will determine how much reward each person shall receive, as well as show whether or not he shall receive any reward. This is clearly taught in the following parable of the Savior: "Then came the first, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained ten pounds. And he said unto him, Well, thou good servant: because thou hast been faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities. And the second came, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained five pounds. And he said likewise to him, Be thou also over five cities."—Luke 19: 16-19. This proves that each one's reward will be in accordance with the degree of his faithfulness. So perfect shall be this judgment, that Jesus says the giving of a cup of cold water in the name of a disciple, shall be rewarded. While those who are persecuted and slandered are told to rejoice, "for great is your reward in heaven."

THE GLORIES OF THE JUDGMENT REWARDS.

A few moments' reflection will suggest to us that there will be a vast difference between one who has endured the persecutions and trials of life, and remained faithful in the highest degree; and the one who has done nothing more important than to give a cup of cold water. One would be fitted for a far more glorious realm than would the other. Their activities would be different; their desires would be on a different plane, demanding a different environment. The omniscient Father has wonderfully provided for these differences by preparing different heavenly glories, suitable to the needs of the various classes and conditions of persons who shall occupy them. Paul referred to these when writing for the instruction of the ancient saints, as recorded in 1 Corinthians 15: 41, 42: "There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead." It seems to have been understood in the apostle's day, that there are different heavens, that correspond with these three glories above referred to. Of this he says, "I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago, (whether in the body, I can not tell; or whether out of the body, I can not tell: God knoweth;) such an one caught up to the third heaven."—2 Corinthians 12: 2.

All of the marvelous purposes of God, we are told, "have not entered into the heart of man"; but if you would in a small degree realize the difference between the least and the greatest glory that may be awarded to man, go forth and, standing beneath the azure vast, try to gaze upon the sun at the zenith of his glory; blinded by the dazzling splendor, turn your bewildered eyes toward the horizon and behold themoon so faint as to be almost indiscernible: then remember that even this humble outline is but the reflection of yonder majestic luminary, at a distance of nearly a hundred million of miles; while the moon is almost four hundred times nearer you. What a vast difference between these two glories! Scarcely can it be estimated. Yet they faintly represent different glories of the life beyond. Gaze again into the blue vault above: not a star is to be seen; for they have hidden their faces in abasement, before the wonderful radiance of the king of day. Yet those stars represent the lesser glory that many shall receive in the life to come. With the shroud of night around you, go forth again and behold how the bright evening star shines forth in contrast with those around it; then gaze steadily into the starry expanse until a star, that at first had been invisible, appears with a faint twinkle and then is gone. Perhaps you will see it no more, it is so distant and faint.

As the fading twinkle of that star differs from the grandeur of the sun, so shall differ the glories of those who pass beyond the portals of this life and are found worthy of reward at the eternal judgment bar the Most High.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

THE STICK OF JUDAH.

But he supposes that because the book is termed "stick of Ephraim" by the prophets, we should prove that Ephraim came over with the colony composing the personnel of the "stick," or at least, the original colony from Jerusalem, B. C. 600. Now this is a begging of the entire question. It virtually concedes our claims. It admits that Joseph's "branches"—Ephraim and Manasseh—outstripped the parent stem and ran "over the wall," to "the midst of the earth,"—to the "most distant bounds of the everlasting hills," to a landed estate, "greater" than Canaan, out of the jurisdiction of the "king of Babylon," "afar off," but failing to establish the date of this change of locality, "the Book of Mormon is a fraud," the prophecies fall to the ground.

If it is conceded that our claims in the application of these inspired Bible statements are correct, then God addressed a letter to Ephraim—"I have written to Ephraim the great things of my law," and when this letter,—"writing," should come forth, it would be in the hand of Ephraim. Hence Ezekiel says:

Moreover, thou son of man, take thee one stick, and write upon it, For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions: then take another stick, and write upon it, For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions: and join them one to another into one stick; and they shall become one in thine hand.—Ezekiel 37: 16; 17, A. V.

And when the children of the people of Israel shall ask what the sticks of Joseph and Judah may mean the answer shall be:

Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand.—Ezekiel 37: 19, A. V.

As we have demonstrated, Ephraim, for reasons best known to their God, became scattered among the nations, and so far as direct descendants are concerned, and their identity as a nation in lineal descent and succession, became mingled with the Gentiles; but their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the people, and in the "setting of the Lord's hand" in the latter days, when Joseph's record should be revealed, one of the evidences by which they were to be known, is that "the stick of Joseph" shall be "in their hand," for "Ephraim is my firstborn" (Jeremiah 31: 9).

David, the tuneful bard of Israel, recognized that the work of salvation that was to be done in its time was to come to Israel in the latter days through the channels chosen of God, and foretold by prophets:

Give ear, O Shepherd of Israel, thou that ledest Joseph like a flock; thou that dwellest between the cherubims, shine forth.

Before Ephraim and Benjamin and Manasseh stir up thy strength, and come and save us.—Psalm 80: 1, 2, A. V.

Ephraim also is the strength of mine head.—Psalm 108: 8, A. V.

The Lord, remembering the covenant made unto Israel, moves upon the "weeping prophet" to remember the Lord's former care and promise, and he exclaims: "The Lord hath appeared of old unto me, saying, Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love."—Jeremiah 31: 3.

An "everlasting love" would require an everlasting covenant, an everlasting gospel that would bring about an everlasting salvation, reaching to the "utmost bound of the everlasting hills," where God, as David affirms, "led Joseph, as a flock."

In further elucidation of these "writings" to Ephraim, we appeal to Isaiah, the 28th chapter. In speaking of the sad fortune of Ephraim, in being "broken" up as a nation, their mixture among the Gentiles, and then the final work with and by them, Isaiah queries, and answers:

Whom shall he teach knowledge? and whom shall he make to understand doctrine? them that are weaned from the milk, and drawn from the breasts.—Isaiah 28: 9, A. V.

He then affirms of the revelations to be given them:

For precept must be upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little.—Isaiah 28: 10, A. V.

The "precept upon precept" and "line upon line," were to be given not only "here a little," in Palestine, but "there a little," in America, "the utmost bound of the everlasting hills," as well. And remember these writings,—"words of the Lord," to them, were to be "preserved," for David says:

The words of the Lord are pure words; as silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times. Thou shalt keep them, O Lord, thou shalt preserve them . . . for ever.—Psalm 12: 6, 7.

In harmony with this work of Ephraim in the latter days, after his "chastisement," Hosea exclaims:

I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely: for mine anger is turned away from him. I will be as the dew unto Israel: he shall grow as the lily, and cast forth his roots as Lebanon. His branches shall spread, and his beauty shall be as the olive tree, and his smell as Lebanon. They that dwell under his shadow shall return; they shall revive as the corn, and grow as the vine: the scent thereof shall be as the wine of Lebanon. Ephraim shall say, What have I to do any more with idols? I have heard him, and observed him: I am like a green fir tree. From me is thy fruit found. Who is wise, and he shall understand these things? prudent, and he shall know them? for the ways of the Lord are right, and the just shall walk in them: but the transgressors shall fall therein.—Hosea 14: 4-9, A. V.

In the "beauty of an olive tree" and growth of a lily, Ephraim "casts forth his roots"—extends, and executes the original prophetic program formulated for him by the inspiration of God,—“spreads his branches,”—they are ten to one of Manasseh, and becomes the towering and overshadowing vine in the vineyard of the earth. Ephraim takes precedence in the gathering of the people into the fold of Christ, in the latter days, not Judah. Ephraim is the vine above Judah in this work, and “they that dwell under his (Ephraim’s) shade, shall return and revive as the corn.” He leads, he pioneers, as the “horns” of Joseph, hence the Prophet Hosea affirms:

I will make Ephraim to ride; Judah shall plow, and Jacob shall break his clods.—Hosea 10: 11.

This work relates to gospel “sowing,” and gospel “plowing.” He continues:

Sow to yourselves in righteousness, reap in mercy; break up your fallow ground: for it is time to seek the Lord, till he come and rain righteousness upon you.—Hosea 10: 12, A. V.

The Book of Mormon, then, is the “stick of Joseph,” found in Joseph’s land, and is in the “hand of Ephraim,”—the Lord’s “firstborn,” to accomplish the work compassed by the design of God. And this is the purpose as stated: “To the convincing of Jew and Gentile, that Jesus is the Christ.”

The posterity of Joseph was in the colony which came out of Jerusalem, B. C., 600, and we read, Book of Mormon, page 11, paragraph 47:

And it came to pass that my father Lehi also found upon the plates of brass a genealogy of his father; wherefore he knew that he was a descendant of Joseph who was the son of Jacob, who was sold into Egypt.

See also page 116, paragraph 6; page 451, paragraph 2.

As for Ephraim, who was “mingled among the people”—scattered, broken,—he has plenty of time since the opening of the Columbian epoch, to emigrate to Joseph’s land, and fulfill the prophecy.

Talk about connecting the Ephraimites with this Western Continent in the face of the Bible prophecy which has been marshaled, as if it were a proposition that could not be proved, is like the boy “whistling in the cemetery to keep up his courage.”

ISAIAH 29.

The next prophecy taken up by Mr. Traum is Isaiah 29. He says, “It is not incumbent on us to give an exegesis of these scriptures, nor to have a war of words with the Mormons that what they claim is what God intended should be; we are concerned in showing that if these were God’s plans, they have miscarried; he took hold of the wrong ‘stick’!”

Indeed? The meaning of the word exegesis is given by lexicographers as “exposition, explanation, interpretation of the Holy Scriptures,” and how can he show that our claims of God’s plans have “miscarried,” without an “explanation” or “interpretation” of those texts of Holy Scripture on which our claim is based? Why does he not confess without ambiguity, that his method of showing these claims to be wrong is not legitimate? It is too solemnly true, that these texts of the Bible lie entombed, as far as the interpretation and use of them concern our critic and his fellows.

We can “knock” at the portals of their “reformation,” only to be turned away with a stone, with the promise of “bread.” The greater portion of the mass of promise and fulfillment receive the usual Campbellite opiate, and remain unresurrected in the dark chamber of their apostasy; and while they boast of the golden stream of spiritual wealth, they seek to turn its currents out of the reach of the people.

We will resolve the 29th chapter of Isaiah’s prophecy into simple propositions, and thus obviate an extended “exegesis.” The chapter reads:

Woe to Ariel, to Ariel, the city where David dwelt! add ye year to year; let them kill sacrifices. Yet I will distress Ariel, and there shall be heaviness and sorrow: and it shall be unto me as Ariel. And I will camp against thee round about, and will lay siege against thee with a mount, and I will raise forts against thee. And thou shalt be brought down, and shalt speak out of the ground, and thy speech shall be low out of the dust, and thy voice shall be as of one that hath a familiar spirit, out of the ground, and thy speech shall whisper out of the dust. Moreover, the multitude of thy strangers shall be like small dust, and the multitude of the terrible ones shall be as chaff that passeth away: yea, it shall be at an instant suddenly. Thou shalt be visited of the Lord of hosts with thunder, and with earthquake, and great noise, with storm and tempest, and the flame of devouring fire. And the multitude of all the nations that fight against Ariel, even all that fight against her and her munition, and that distress her, shall be as a dream of a night-vision. It shall even be as when a hungry man dreameth, and behold, he eateth; but he awaketh, and his soul is empty: or as when a thirsty man dreameth, and behold, he drinketh; but he awaketh, and behold, he is faint, and his soul hath appetite: so shall the multitude of all the nations be, that fight against mount Zion. Stay yourselves, and wonder; cry ye out, and cry: they are drunken, but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink. For the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes: the prophets and your rulers, the seers hath he covered. And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I can not; for it is sealed: And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I am not learned. Wherefore the Lord said, Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men: therefore behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid. Woe unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, and their works are in the dark, and they say, Who seeth us? and who knoweth us? Surely your turning of things upside down shall be esteemed as the potter’s clay: for shall the work say of him that made it, He made me not? or shall the thing framed say of him that framed it, He had no understanding? Is it not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest? And in that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book, and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity, and out of darkness. The meek also shall increase their joy in the Lord, and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel. For the terrible one is brought to naught, and the scorner is consumed, and all that watch for iniquity are cut off: That make a man an offender for a word, and lay a snare for him that reproveth in the gate, and turn aside the just for a thing of naught. Therefore thus saith the Lord, who redeemed Abraham, concerning the house of Jacob, Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face now wax pale. But when he seeth his children, the work of mine hands, in the midst of him, they shall sanctify my name, and sanctify the Holy One of Jacob, and shall fear the God of Israel. They also that have erred in spirit shall come to understanding, and they that murmured shall learn doctrine.

—A. V.

A PROPHECY, NOT A RHAPSODY.

According to the Chronology of Usher, supported by Hengstenberg, the foregoing prophecy was delivered 712 years B. C. This is a prophecy, not a rhapsody, not conjecture. It is a statement full of minute, clear, unequivocal points, relating to the purposes of God in the establishment of his plans on the earth, to bring about the end to be achieved, in the eternal age, when those designs through Jesus Christ shall have attained their finality.

We shall endeavor to so state the terms of this prophecy, that it shall measure the claim within it, and answer Mr. Traum's criticism. That the time of verifying some of these terms is fixed, and the circumstances thrown around, and prevalent, will be seen as we proceed.

Proposition 1; verses 1-4.

The people of Ariel (Lion of God) shall speak out of the ground. Their voice shall whisper out of the dust. The second verse, closing sentence, is rendered in the Revised Version thus: "And she shall be unto me as Ariel." The "SHE," was to be brought down, and "speak out of the ground"—"whisper out of the dust." "Ariel" is Jerusalem where "David dwelt," or its people. "SHE shall be unto me as Ariel."

Proposition 2; verses 4-7.

The multitude of her (thy) strangers,—people who are of the nation,—should be like small dust. The multitude of her (thy) "terrible ones,"—warriors,—should pass away suddenly—at an instant.

Proposition 3; verse 6.

They were to be visited with, "thunder, earthquake, and a great noise; with storm, tempest, and flame."

Proposition 4; verse 7.

And as Sodom, Gomorrah, and the antediluvians are held forth as "examples" of the temporal doom of wicked people, so should these,—the people related to those who dwell at "Ariel," the "She," of the Revised Version, be held forth with them as examples to "all nations who fight against his work, performed through Israel."

Proposition 5; verses 8, 9, 10.

Religious error, and spiritual darkness were to be prevalent, nations reeling and staggering in doubt and uncertainty; drunken, not with wine; staggering, but not with strong drink.

Proposition 6; verses 11-13.

That a "sealed book" was to make its appearance;—"sealed," its language lost from a knowledge of the nations, and per consequence its meaning not revealed by human learning—"wisdom."

Proposition 7; verses 13, 14.

God was to perform a work—"a marvelous work and a wonder" among the people, and his "procedure" would be to inspire an unlearned man to translate the sealed book, thereby nullifying the wisdom of the would be wise.

Proposition 8; verses 15, 16.

The doctrine, or theory of evolution would be extensively taught, in connection with the "higher criticism," and should produce spiritual darkness and unbelief, to the extent that men would deny the Bible account, of Genesis, chapters one and two, and affirm that God did not "frame the earth" as there declared, and that he did not "make the things that are made," thereby overthrowing the divinity, and authority of the Bible.

Proposition 9; verse 14.

The work is to progress by inspiration through an unlettered ministry, that "the understanding of the prudent should be hid." The work would therefore register itself above the commandments of men.

Proposition 10; verse 17.

The gathering to Palestine of its exiled children, and the clouds distilling their genial showers, would "turn" it into a "fruitful field," and thus answer all objections, in Hebrew.

Proposition 11; verses 18, 19.

There shall be great miraculous power displayed on earth, and spiritual gifts given unto men, inasmuch that the "deaf will hear the words of the book," and "the eyes of the blind will see out of obscurity and out of darkness," while the meek will increase their joy in the Lord, and the "poor rejoice in the Holy One of Israel."

Proposition 12.

There are those who "oppress the poor" and persecute the meek, despise, "scoff," and watch for iniquity, and make a man an offender for a word,—lay snares for the Lord's ministry, "turn aside the just, the right thing for that which is nothing," and they are to be "consumed."

Proposition 13; verses 22, 23.

The family of Israel,—Jacob's children,—are to be gathered, and the old patriarch himself in their midst shall see his children, and know that the "shame"—sin, transgression,—of his posterity has been canceled by the "covenant" going out of Zion to turn away their ungodliness, and shall sanctify;—set apart,—and fear,—reverence, the God of his fathers.

Proposition 14.

At this time, those who erred in spirit should understand God's work and throw aside the "creeds," and those who murmur shall learn the doctrine of Christ.

"LOW OUT OF THE DUST."

We will not offer the evidence supportive of these fourteen propositions in this review, but will connect the leading idea circulating the objection of our opponent, and thus pass to definite conclusions. During the year 65 to 70 A. D., the conquering Roman army desolated Palestine, besieging the city of Jerusalem,—"Ariel"—"where David dwelt," and brought upon its inhabitants great "distress," and sorrow, with death, and leveled the glory and power of Judah to the ground; and the first proposition, based on the 29th chapter of Isaiah, brings out the fact that a people related to Judah, "of Ariel,"—should "be unto God, as Ariel." Their destruction should come "suddenly," with "distress," "sorrow," and "heaviness."

It is almost certain that this latter people, of Israel, would meet this "sudden" fall to the ground just where their "speech" was to "whisper out of the dust"; in the locality where they were made "low." They could not be "brought down to the ground" where they were not. And where they fell, speech was to be made manifest, in some sense, "from the ground."

The only nation that we have any knowledge of, related to Judah, the people of "Ariel," their "brethren," whose "speech,"—record,—has ever been taken "from the ground," is the Nephite nation, the descendants of Joseph on the Western Continent. The Jaredites, a "wealthy" nation, preceded them, and their records conjointly came from the ground, but the Jaredite nation was not composed of "Israel."

The Nephite record informs us that the contending nations of ancient America brought upon each other the most direful scenes of blood and carnage, passing away "suddenly." "She shall be unto me as Ariel," says the Revised Version. They fell into great wickedness, in the third and fourth centuries of the Christian era, after they had great blessings and privileges conferred upon them, and this great destruction occurred about 420 A. D.

Here then, on this land, they were swept away, and on this land they buried their records, and in this western domain their record has been found.

A "sealed book" was to come forth, and as it stands directly related, in Isaiah's prophecy, to the nation speaking from the ground, we conclude that such a book would contain the record of the nation whose voice should be "low out of the dust." And inasmuch as their record states: "And now behold, we have written this record according to our knowledge in the characters which are called among us the reformed Egyptian, being handed down and altered by us, according to our manner of speech," (Book of Mormon, page 500,) truly it would be a "sealed" book, challenging the erudite of the scholastic age in which it makes its appearance. As the "learned" could not bring it to the knowledge of the people, and God was to do it in a "marvelous" manner, we conclude it was not to be done in the ordinary way of man's wisdom. And inasmuch as the "marvelous work and a wonder" was to be inaugurated just a "little while" before Lebanon became "a fruitful field," and this transformation began by the restoration of the "showers" so long withheld from its thirsty soil, in 1853, we conclude this "sealed book" made its appearance, as per the claims, in 1827, or something like twenty-six years before the censer of rehabilitation began swinging in the land of Judah, from the hand of God.

David prophesied in tuneful harmony with Isaiah's hallowed vision, both as to event, and following circumstances:

I will hear what God the Lord will speak: for he will speak peace unto his people, and to his saints: but let them not turn again to folly. Surely his salvation is nigh them that fear him; that glory may dwell in our land. Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other. Truth shall spring out of the earth; and righteousness shall look down from heaven. Yea, the Lord shall give that which is good; and our land shall yield her increase. Righteousness shall go before him; and shall set us in the way of his steps.—Psalm 85: 8-13, A. V.

"Truth shall spring out of the earth" at the time "righteousness looks down from heaven." We will permit the Psalmist to define what he means by the term truth:

Thy righteousness is an everlasting righteousness, and thy law is the truth.—Psalm 119: 142, A. V.

Here the law of God is truth, and verse 151 affirms:

Thou art near, O Lord; and all thy commandments are truth.—A. V.

Jesus the Christ uses the word expressive of both "law" and "commandments," when in prayer to his Father, thus:

Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth.—John 17: 17, A. V.

The evident interpretation of David's prophecy is that at some future time indicated the "word of God" containing "law" and "commands," would be taken "from the earth," (the "ground,") and at that time heaven would be opened and the "householder go out of his house." Just at the time heaven opens and "righteousness looks down," "truth comes from the earth." We will permit that great apostle and Christian philosopher to inform us as to the channel through which righteousness can look down or come down from heaven:

For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written. The just shall live by faith.—Romans 1: 16: 17, A. V.

"The righteousness of God revealed in the gospel." "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach . . . to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people." The two events stand connected, the revelation of the truth from the earth—the truth as God gave it, to Joseph's posterity on the Western Continent,—and the revelation of the administrative authority,—restoration of the gospel—from heaven.

The same physical witness follows both Isaiah's and David's prophecies, and informs us when the events will take place. Oh, no, Elder Traum, these prophetic statements are not fulfilled at the resurrection of Christ, as you and the Anti's interpret. In so doing, you yield the divine authority of the sacred Scriptures into the hands of infidelity. The modifying and explanatory facts are against you. The attendant conditions have no place in the chronological date. Jesus Christ arose from the dead, and he is the embodiment of "truth," "the way" and the life, but both David and Isaiah affirm physical and forceful conditions, as attaching to both Israel and the land of Palestine, which the facts of the Bible and history will not warrant as following the event of Christ's resurrection. Isaiah prophesies that "Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field," and the sons of Israel begin to assemble to the fatherland just "a little while" after the "sealed book" and the marvelous work are ushered in. The direct opposite of these events occurred after Jesus triumphed over death. Their scattering and bondage followed, the dissolution of their commonwealth was completed, and their slavery to Gentile powers assured.

David exclaims, "the Lord shall give that which is good, and our land shall yield their increase," "the Lord shall set us (Israel) in the way of his steps," and by prophetic foresight assigns these wondrous events as following in succession the revelation of "truth from the earth." David was pointing the index finger to the period when "glory" would "dwell in our (David's) land," and "salvation" would be "set for" walls, and "bulwarks,"—(see the 9th verse.)

Was all this work accomplished after Jesus came back from the dead, nineteen hundred years ago? Did the Lord give "that which is good" to Judah at that time? Was the "curse" removed from the land? Verily, I say unto thee, Nay. Let us note: Woe unto scribes, Pharisees, and hypocrites, ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men. Ye will not enter yourselves, and those would ye hinder. Was that "good"?

Again, Woe unto you scribes, Pharisees, and hypocrites, for ye devour widows' houses and for a pretence make long prayer; ye shall receive the greater damnation. Was that "good"?

"O Jerusalem, . . . how often would I have gathered thy children together . . . and ye would not." "Your house is left unto you desolate." "There shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people,"—the Jews,—and they,"—the Jews,—shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Was that "good"? See Matthew 23 and Luke 21.

If Mr. Traum can see comfort and "good," in these sweeping denunciations against the covenant people, fulfilled, carried out, immediately following the resurrection of Christ, his idea of comfort and good would not be realized unless, in the company of Pharaoh, he might greet the multitude of the wicked, in "the nether parts of the earth."

Of General Interest

A Great Day for World Peace!

Among the famous days in our nation's history, Thursday, August 3, 1911, must hereafter be ranked as one of the greatest of them all. On that day, we took as a nation the most important step that has ever been taken in the direction of world peace since time began.

On that day, a trinity of great nations—France, Great Britain, and the United States—signed through their representatives in the President's study in the White House, Washington, arbitration treaties providing for the peaceful settlement of all disputes that may hereafter arise among the three signatory powers. Our Secretary of State, Hon. Philander C. Knox, signed the treaty with Great Britain in the afternoon and the Hon. James Bryce, the British Ambassador, signed in behalf of his government. As the two signers rose and before even laying down their pens, each grasped the other's right hand and exchanged congratulations. President Taft shared in the felicitations of the moment. Back of the President, on the study wall, hung a painting of the signing of the protocol of peace between Spain and the United States.

Secretary Knox next signed the arbitration treaty with France and Viscount Saint Phalle, of the French embassy, witnessed the signature for his government. President Taft and several members of his cabinet witnessed these ceremonies, which were marked by a dignified simplicity. Everyone present realized the tremendous import of the act that was taking place, which marked the first great forward step looking toward universal peace. At two o'clock in Paris on the afternoon of the same historic day, M. Jean Jules Jusserand, ambassador of France to this country, signed the convention between France and ourselves. Allowing for the difference in time, M. Jusserand's signature was affixed at 9 a. m., Washington time.

It is only a little over two months since negotiations were opened by our State Department looking to these arbitration treaties. President Taft first put forth the suggestions in his public speeches, and, England and France being both favorably disposed, the seed sown quickly bore fruit. Three other nations (Germany, Italy, and Holland) are now considering similar treaties with the United States. Should they come into the Arbitration Circle, Russia, Austria, and the Scandinavian countries may reasonably be expected to follow soon.

All Europe is a-thrill with the news of the completion of this great arbitration compact by the three powers who have taken the lead in the epochal movement for world peace—a movement which in a single day has advanced the human race more than a full century nearer to universal peace. The arbitration treaties just completed do not abolish war, nor do they create any "entangling alliances." They do, however, make war an improbability by opening the way for its avoidance through the submission of all questions to a judicial tribunal or to arbitration. All disputes, even though they concern the most vital interests of the signatory powers—not excepting "national honor"—may be peacefully adjusted under the provisions of the treaties. Their general features may be thus summarized:

All differences internationally justiciable shall be submitted to The Hague, unless by special agreement some other tribunal is created or selected.

Differences that either country thinks are not justiciable shall be referred to a Commission of Inquiry, composed of nationals of the two governments, empowered to make recommendations for their settlement. Should the commission decide that the dispute should be arbitrated, such decision will be binding.

Before arbitration is resorted to, even in cases where both countries agree that the difference is susceptible of arbitration, the Commission of Inquiry shall investigate the dispute with a view of recommending a settlement without arbitration.

The commission, at the request of either government, will delay the findings one year to give an opportunity for diplomatic settlement.

The Senate will ratify the terms of submission of each dispute to arbitration.

No great reform is ever realized except through long, arduous struggle. Moving at first slowly, at the last it progresses by leaps and bounds. It has always been so. Looking backward over the progress of the peace movement, we can now clearly see the divine guiding Hand in the long work of preparation which the last few years have brought to such marvelous development. It is beyond all doubt that the nations are moving toward world peace. To-day it is the overshadowing theme among statesmen and thinkers. The conviction has taken deep root that war is an evil in any form and that to provoke war is a crime; that to resort to physical violence settles no principle but leaves untouched the great questions at stake; that religion, civilization, and common sense demand the adjustment of international quarrels by the same judicial methods that apply to States and communities.

No achievement of American statesmanship has reached higher than this which, through our Government's wise and courageous initiative, has given to the peace movement a vitality and substance it never yet possessed. It is no longer a dream; the "desire of the nations" is transformed into reality. By these new treaties of Washington, the whole movement is taken out of the realm of distant and intangible things. It is stepping across the border line that divides the methods of barbarism from those of calm, judicial reason. We have established a precedent for the whole civilized world to follow, and under divine guidance, we believe it will be followed.

God's people everywhere will rejoice in this great triumph of arbitration. The Christian Herald and its readers—peace-lovers, all of them—have especial cause for gratitude. Let us lift up our hearts and voices in praise and "thank God and take courage," looking forward confidently to that day when all nations will be as brothers and when war shall be for ever a thing of the past.—Christian Herald, August 16, 1911.

Let Your Light Shine.

Dear Sisters: I have thought of Sister Hawley's letter about "white slavery" a good deal, and in viewing the subject from the point she sees it, I wonder why all Saints can not see how they can help girls from giving away to the temptations of a life of sin and shame. Let your light shine, that others may see your good works and be strengthened thereby. "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death."

Let me tell you a dream I had when I had only been in the church a short time. I had been sick a long time and was away from the church, could not go to meeting, so I got discouraged. I had not learned then that adversity strengthened character; so I felt sad to think that I was denied so many things I wanted. One thing I longed for was to study art, and there I lay, day after day, sick, till I began to doubt, and I wondered if after all I had been led into the wrong church. Such feelings made me very miserable, then I fell asleep and dreamed.

I saw a high mountain. On top of it was an old building, so old that the roof was nearly all gone. The windows were all gone and it was filled with people of the different sectarian churches all dressed in style. They were shouting very loudly and waving their handkerchiefs to attract attention and saying, "We are the people of the Lord." Then down below in the green valley were a small company of Saints, kneeling on the grass with their faces toward the east, but heads bowed. They wore plain calico dresses and sunbonnets. Then I looked at the sky; it was very dark, but in the east there was a light spot in the cloud which began to grow brighter and brighter till an angel came out, and as he floated past the people in the building, he turned his face from them and floated on till he came to the little company of Saints. Then he stretched his hands out over them and said, "This is my people in whom I am well pleased."

I awoke and had no more reason to doubt, as to who were the Lord's people, and also that his people must be very humble and plain. Obey the command: "Let all your garments be plain." Our dear Lord knew what was to come when he gave such instructions. Does not Sister Hawley's testimony bear witness of the terrible consequence of the commands being broken? "Wherefore, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith, who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross."—Hebrews 12: 1, 2.

If it is a cross to lay aside these unnecessary garments, can we not endure as he did? for joy is promised us also, if we endure even to help poor, weak girls from losing their precious souls by becoming "slaves to keep in the race for costly apparel." In the race for costly apparel! Has it come to that? Yes, according to Sister Hawley's testimony, and we all know it is only too true. But does the scripture say the race shall be for such unworthy things? No, but for a prize that fades not. "So great a cloud of witnesses," must we stand before the judgment bar with all these to witness against us in place of for us? And this just because we laid not aside "every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us." Where is there a sin that doth more easily beset us than this following after the world's fashions? If we realized the terrible weight that they become the minute we allowed the desire to have them overcome us, we would be slow to become entangled. Could not these weak girls be strengthened to stem the powerful tide, if they had some one beside them who stood on solid ground and held out a helping hand?

Do not put all the blame on the grasping, cruel employer. While they are guilty and their doom sure, there are other guilty ones. "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure," is an old and true saying. If these girls did not desire these foolish garments, they would not fall to get them. There is many a girl looking for a way of escape; not many give up willingly to such a life. If only they saw the plainly dressed sister standing beside them who held out a loving hand and said, "Come this way and walk in plain, simple clothes and be happy," some of them would take courage and come. Remember they have been in a world of folly and sin, and they have not had the strength of the Holy Spirit to hold them. They know nothing of the blessed commands given in these last trying days. Oh, dear sister, don't let the dear Savior who died that all might be saved, plead in vain. Arise and "lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us." Just to the degree that we partake of the sins of the world, to that degree we must suffer with the world, and the more we sacrifice here, the more beautiful will be our garments there. Not only there, but here will the blessings be given. God is waiting for his people to come to his standard, so he can bless them, heal their sick, make the lame walk, the blind see, and the deaf to hear, but they are so slow to obey, yet ask for blessings every day.

Once when the angels were showing me grandeurs in heaven for the faithful, I asked them to come down to earth, though they were already near it, and tell my folks and other Saints of these beauties; but they said, no, they could not; but that the Saints must come up to them to be told. So we must arise above earthly desires to greater degree, to receive many of the blessings we ask for. Angels inhabit holy places, and they are the messengers that bring the blessings, so why not make our homes fit habitations for them. Keep our hearts pure from unlawful desires, so we will be strong to help the weak so they will not sell their bodies to slavery. Poor girls, some mother's darlings and precious in God's sight! Forget not "ye are the salt of the earth." No wonder God has said, "Zion might already have been redeemed" only for the slowness of his people to hear and obey.

Blessed is he that considereth the poor, the Lord will deliver him in the time of trouble.

SISTER ADDIE DAVID,

THREE OAKS, MICHIGAN.

In the above letter the careful reader can not help finding much food for thought, much which must appeal to the inward consciousness of every individual who is honestly and sincerely striving to make the race for eternal life.

In conversation not long since with a very earnest, conscientious sister, she was relating some of her own experiences, and among others, spoke of a certain occasion when in a testimony meeting she had felt constrained by the Spirit to arise and bear hers, and the burden of her testimony was: God can use us only as we fit ourselves for his service. Do you believe this? The writer believes it most firmly, and if any doubt it, we feel sure that a close examination of his or her own personal experience will convince them of its truth. Truth is eternal and God is just. How then could he render to one of his children a service which he could not render to all? He has said to his people, "Come up higher." The blessings God intends to bestow upon his Saints are upon a plane much higher than the one upon which many of us are living. And think of it as we will, it is our daily life, the manner in which it is ordered before our heavenly Father and in the sight of all men, which the Master has intended should be a testimony outweighing all others which we may bear. Indeed so true is this that all of us ought to realize how completely this testimony can and will destroy every testimony our lips may utter.

Notice that the angel said to Sister David when she wanted them to come down to the earth to impart knowledge to her own people and to others of the Saints, though they were even then very near to the earth they answered, no, they could not; but the Saints must come up to them to be told.

We not only believe this, we know it is true. Faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, etc., are but the first steps upon the straight and narrow way leading to life everlasting. Paul had long since obeyed all these requirements of the gospel law, and had also added to his obedience works innumerable tended to establish the kingdom of God, not to mention the sufferings and persecutions through which he had passed when he wrote to the Saints at Corinth:

"Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing."—1 Corinthians 13: 1-3.

Dear Saints, we pray you let us not pass these declarations of this apostle lightly by. We have heard them quoted often, have read them many times, but for this very reason we are in the more danger of passing them by without giving to them such serious consideration as will bring the solemn truth home to each heart, namely, that they are among the eternal verities and more, if that were possible, a part of the gospel law—the law of everlasting life, than are faith, repentance, and baptism themselves.

And now the question, What will this charity, this love of God shed abroad in the heart, constrain that one, in whose heart it dwells, to do? Will it not teach us to do those things which are pleasing in the sight of the Lord, and to honor by obeying them, the commands he has given us? Will not this apply with equal if not special force to those which have been given us in this last dispensation because of evils which are peculiar to it, and which these commands, if obeyed, would strengthen us to avoid?

Request for Prayer.

Bro. A. C. Stone, Cameron, Missouri: "My daughter, Sr. Vera Stone, at Sanitarium, Independence, is suffering in body and mind. I ask the prayers of all the Saints in her behalf."

LANGLEY, WISCONSIN, August 15, 1911.

Dear Herald: God has been good to me and mine. I often sit and wonder how great God's love is to his children, and how little we do for him. I am sorry, but I do try in my weak way to do something for him every day, and I need his loving guidance all the time. He never leaves me nor forsakes me in all of my trials. He is ever by my side, guiding me in all I do. I have five children and they all have obeyed the gospel and are trying to please God in all things. My youngest girl has been very sick for ten weeks, but God in his goodness does not let her suffer pain. She is very weak and low, but she often says, Trust God and I will get well. I ask an interest in your prayers, that if it be God's will she may get well, and that I may ever prove faithful.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

ANNIS I. CRANDALL.

IRONTON, MISSOURI, August 13, 1911.

Editors Herald: I thought I would write a few words in regard to the meetings held by the Methodists and Baptists in this place. The Methodists purchased a tract of land near Arcadia and erected a nice tabernacle for the purpose of holding an annual encampment there, this being their second year. There was a large crowd in attendance. It is a beautiful location and they came from far and near, but their preaching is as thin as ever. On Sunday, July 30, the bishop dedicated the tabernacle. In his sermon he said he believed in a God who could talk and speak to him, which does not agree with their general belief. They sang, "Tis the old-time religion, and it's good enough for me," but their reformer, John Wesley, did not say it was, through history. Doctor Wainright said in a sermon that he had seen Jesus Christ since coming there, but when explained, it was his works in creating the hills, woods, and rocks. There is a difference, in seeing Jesus and seeing his works. Their encampment lasted from July 23 to August 2.

The Baptists hold their annual encampment from August 2 to 13, upon a mountain called Arcadia Heights, about two miles from Ironton. This is their third year and there were over one hundred tents on the grounds and over three hundred campers, besides visitors coming and going. Their improvements amounted to something like two thousand dollars. They have a swimming pool costing $1,150, and they also have a large tabernacle. The preaching seemed to be more in harmony with the gospel, but when we consider that neither is the church of Christ, one seems to be as far away as the other. If one did not know of the angel's message, he would, no doubt, be in the same condition as Joseph Smith was,—not knowing which to join.

Oh, how thankful I am to the Lord that I know his will in the matter, that I know his message. I hope the time will soon come when the gospel can be preached here; and gather out the honest souls that may be longing for truth.

Ironton is in the eastern part of the Ozark country, and is picturesque for outings, vacations, etc., many coming from the cities every summer to spend their vacation. A large lake, about two and one half miles in length, ranging from one to forty-eight feet deep, is being built by a big club organization, also a club-house and park for wild game to be built and established.

May the truth roll forth until it reaches every part of the globe.

A. C. RICHARDSON.

DOLLARVILLE, MICHIGAN, AUGUST 15, 1911.

Dear Herald: We are among the isolated ones, with very few church privileges, yet we always feel it our duty to hold up the gospel banner at all times. Our worthy brother, B. S. Lambkin, did some preaching out in the country here some three years ago and baptized four, and this summer Brn. J. C. Goodman and J. J. Cornish came along and did some preaching, baptized three more and left a good interest. Brother Cornish did some preaching here in Dollarville, but there is not much interest manifested, although those who came out gave good attention. What the harvest will be remains unseen, and any elders coming this way will find a welcome hand at our house at any time. Well, I will close for this time by bidding you godspeed.

D. W. NELSON.

COLO, IOWA, August 28, 1911.

Editors Herald: Please state through the columns of the HERALD that I have just received the blessings given at the Moline, Illinois, reunion during August, 1910, and as soon as I can get time to look them over I will forward the papers to the proper persons. If any of the Saints have changed their place of residence since that time and they will send to me at Dow City, Iowa, their present address, they will confer a favor on the writer in so doing, and they may hasten the time of receiving their papers.

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

News From Missions

England.

On July 12, Brn. R. Baldwin, T. U. Thomas, Bishop May and wife, and H. N. Hansen and the writer sailed on the magnificent steamer Carmania from New York City at 5 p. m. The voyage was a pleasant one, for the sea was calm and peaceful all the way; but few of the passengers experienced the dreaded affliction, seasickness, and we were surprised that anyone succumbed, in view of the fair weather and smooth sea. There was one death of a lady who was buried at sea, and two or three births among the steerage passengers. It is a sad trial for the relatives of those who die away from home on the mighty deep, especially when the body has to be buried in the sea. The officials of the ship buried the lady whilst the majority of the passengers were asleep, to avoid excitement.

Our little band of Saints arrived at our destination well and hearty, landing at Fishguard, South Wales, with the exception of Brother Hansen and wife, who proceeded to Denmark via Liverpool. Brethren Baldwin and Thomas remained in Wales for a short time. Brother May, his wife and I, wended our way to the great metropolis, London, where we spent two weeks. London is truly a great city, with its population of seven millions, among which may be found representatives of almost every nation in the world. Americans are in evidence upon the principal streets at this time of the year, spending their money lavishly and taking in the wonderful sights which are found upon every hand. Judging from their appearance, one would think they owned the earth. It is a sickening sight to see some of our wealthy countrymen hobnobbing with the nobility in this place and our ladies trying to outdo their aristocratic sisters in dress. This class of people is a disgrace to our country and brings ridicule upon themselves and their fellow-citizens.

Brother May and I have been very fortunate in procuring a suitable missionary house, which is to serve as headquarters for the president of the mission, bishop, and missionaries who are assigned to London. We have a nice, convenient hall on the ground floor, in which to hold our meetings and services. We also have space in it where we can establish a book depot provided the HERALD and Ensign publishing houses furnish us with the necessary stock. This would be a great convenience to the Saints of this land, and a great saving to the church financially. It could be placed in the hands of Bishop May, who would have care of it. There is a demand from many parts of the kingdom for literature from outsiders, especially since the Mormon agitation has arisen. Had we the necessary literature on hand we could supply the orders within the course of a few hours. Under the present regime it is sometimes weeks before we can fill our orders; sometimes indeed, they are lost altogether, for the people have become impatient, in some cases even canceling their orders. The Utah people have had their headquarters and book depot in this country for over a half century, hence it is that inquirers into the faith can get books and other literature at a very short notice. Query: Why should the Reorganized Church, the Lord's own body, be behind other churches in this respect? It isn't because we haven't got the ability to cope with these people. The agitation and hue and cry that was started against the Mormons here by the bishop of Liverpool and the clergy of the Established Church, together with the Roman Catholics, whose mouthpiece was the Jesuit priest, Fr. Bernard Vaughan, who said they ought to be taken by the scruff of the neck, run across the island and cast into the sea, is over. It has all proved to be a storm in a teapot. These people learned to their sad disappointment that the British Government would not stoop to such low down methods of treatment. When the Home Secretary, Hon. Winston Churchill, was applied to by these people with a view to oust the Mormons from the British Isles, he absolutely refused to interfere with them, inasmuch as they had not infringed any law of the country. His firm attitude to act justly to these Mormons silenced their enemies. Now all is quiet.

At our conference from 350 to 400 persons were present. Bro. John Foden, the chorister, with his choir furnished the music which was grand and inspiring. His choir was composed of all ages and sizes, which was as it ought to be everywhere, and thereby avoiding jealousy and strife over the singing. Brother John is an expert leader; he had the confidence of all his choir. Brother Mather officiated at the organ.

Our worthy patriarch, James Baty, delivered a prophecy to the Saints which was very edifying and comforting to those who heard it. Brother Leggett also spoke in prophecy and related a vision he had had during the service. Elder John Jenkins and Alfred Jones spoke in tongues and the latter brother gave the interpretation. It was an experience that we will not soon forget. The people both old and young were visibly affected, tears of joy streaming down their faces, whilst these gifts were being manifested, God himself testifying to their divinity by the rich outpouring of his Spirit. In the midst of this outburst, the people were constrained to sing, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." What a joyful experience!

The following ministry were in attendance during conference which shows that we have a goodly number of officers and local missionaries under the president of the mission's appointment: W. R. Armstrong, J. W. Taylor, S. F. Mather, Thomas Brien, N. J. Weate, John Schofield, Henry Greenwood, William Eccleston, E. I. Trapp, Charles Cousins, J. A. Judd, I. G. Jenkins, J. E. Meredith, A. Hall, and many other elders and priests too numerous to mention in this connection.

We were greatly encouraged as to the future work in these Isles and sincerely believe that in due time there will be a marked change in the condition of things spiritually. Bishop May will be a force for good here, Brethren Baldwin and Thomas have made a good impression on the people already. However, there is much to be done in the near future.

My permanent mission address, after October 1, will be No. 2, Coborn Road, Bôw, London, England.

With best wishes for all of the Lord's people, I am

Your brother in gospel bonds,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

Kentucky.

The present year finds the undersigned still in the missionary work. This is our twenty-first year under General Conference appointment. We did not report for appointment for this conference year, and hoped that we might be left off the list this time, as it seemed that there was a duty to the family, and our children especially, that would justify staying at home. However, when the appointments were read our name appeared, and not having the heart to say no, we obediently took our departure for the field assigned, leaving home May 18 and land at Wirt, Indiana, where we attended a district conference.

After the close of the conference we went to Louisville and New Albany, where we sojourned for over one week. Here we met some of our former acquaintances of six years ago, when we labored in northern Kentucky. Others had passed away, some by death, some have moved to other parts, and others were cold and in different to the work. Bro. J. W. Metcalf and family were much missed. Bro. John Zahnd presides over both the New Albany and Louisville branches. He was ordained an elder by the direction of the district conference, which will be a help and blessing to the Saints in those cities. This brother is busy, and always finds plenty to do in the interest of the gospel. If all our local ministry had the zeal and activity of Brother Zahnd, the work would be built up much more rapidly than it is.

Taking our leave from Louisville, we came to Mayfield, Kentucky, where we were met by Bro. Albert Snow, and conveyed to the Oakland Branch, where the conference of the Kentucky and Tennessee District was held. Here we met many acquaintances formed seven years ago, and made many new acquaintances. Here also, faces were missing—those who administered to our comforts years ago—reminding us again of the change awaiting us all.

After this conference, we labored at High Hill, Kentucky, and Crossland, Foundry Hill, and Paris and vicinity, in Tennessee. I was associated at different times with Bro. J. R. McClain, J. W. Dubose, and Fred Moser. July 1 found us at Derby, Indiana, where we assisted in holding the first annual reunion of the Southern Indiana District. It was pronounced a success. Those who did not attend were losers.

Our two missionaries to that district were present, and did their part of the work. These were Elders Jacob Halb and E. O. Byrn. We are proud of these young men and glad to see them so earnestly engaged in the work. Wish we had many more like them in the field.

Here we were surprised by Prof. R. V. Hopkins' "dropping" in on us near the close of the reunion. We were glad to see him and get better acquainted with him. He was a help to the reunion. Of course he was there in the interest of the college, but did not hesitate to help by preaching the word in any way called upon. This brother, by his humility and kindly, upright, earnest demeanor, will not only make friends for the college, but for the gospel wherever he goes.

After the close of the Derby reunion, Brother Hopkins and I met again at Millstone, where Brother Byrn and the writer were conducting a few meetings, and then traveled together to High Hill, Kentucky, where we entered into the work of the Kentucky and Tennessee District. These reunions have both been reported, so we will not burden the HERALD with much in addition. Suffice it to say this last one was well attended, and a good feeling prevailed nearly all the way through.

Next we assisted in tent meetings at Lynnville, for about one week. Then leaving Brn. J. R. McClain and J. W. Dubose with the tent, Bro. Fred Moser and the writer took our journey eastward, stopping with the Oakland Saints about one week and having good interest in the meetings. Brother Shupe's folks, who are going with the tent, came up with their instruments and helped us out at two of our meetings.

From Oakland, Bro. A. B. Williams conveyed us to Bro. Henry Andrews', near Brandon, with whom we stopped for five days and held meetings. From thence we were brought to the Tennessee River by Brother Andrews; crossing over, we walked ten miles to the Cumberland River, and crossing over to Linton, we were met with conveyance and taken to the home of Bro. J. M. Skaggs, M. D. We are now holding meeting in his front yard and on his veranda and having some interest. This is unorganized territory. We have a debate pending at Indianapolis, but have not been able to set the time as yet.

News From Branches.

Independence Branch News.

There has been much activity in church circles during the past two or three weeks. The business meetings have been quite lively, the auxiliaries have kept busy, and the social events have been delightful, consisting of an old ladies' afternoon entertainment on the 8th with Sr. R. J. Parker as hostess; and Mrs. Doctor Mather the hostess of a very pleasant gathering at her home-sanitarium the other day in honor of our genial sister and her daughter, Mrs. Garner and Miss Callie, of Lamoni. The old ladies' ages numbered 842 years, being an average of 70. The Laural Club's lawn socials are always pleasant occasions.

The weather during the latter part of the month has been delightful. The 8 o'clock meetings, the Sunday school sessions and preaching meetings, have all kept a good record as to attendance and interest, and the Saints have been instructed from the pulpit by Elders H. H. Robinson, W. H. Garrett, and John Kaler.

On last Sunday morning Brother Kaler was in charge of the services, and read as a lesson, Acts 2, and proved from many scriptural quotations that among the Saints of olden times there were many imperfections, even as there are at the present time. His subject was, "Why do we call ourselves Latter Day Saints?" and our brother spoke of the establishment of the church, the apostasy and the restoration. The "signs of the times" also occupied the speaker's thought, and after telling about the cyclones, earthquakes, and destruction of cities in our own land, as well as in distant countries in fulfillment of prophecy, he exhorted his hearers with earnestness to heed well the lessons given in these momentous times, and to be faithful in the keeping of the commandments of God.

Brother Garrett is giving a series of meetings on Sunday evenings, consisting of sermons (on the gospel principles) which so far are highly appreciated.

Brother Robinson, after a long absence from home, lately returned invigorated and apparently well fortified and strengthened spiritually for renewed labors here. His sermon on the morning of the 13th was excellent; it was a profitable and forceful lesson to the Saints on the gospel work.

We regret to record the passing away of a few from our midst recently. Our beloved Sister Bird, who died on the 15th, also Bro. Milton Leaton on the day following, and a few days ago little Dora Griffin,—funeral occurred at the home of Bro. J. G. Murdock.

But the Saints were glad on last Sunday to hear of the happy event of Sister Halstead's baptism, and also another occasion of great joy to two mothers were the baptisms, last Sunday, of the young girls named Iona and Charlotte. Bro. Patterson was quite lately led into the font by Elder L. E. Hills, which we trust has proved a happy step forward for him also.

We may mention among the other kinds of joyful occasions generally, the public reception given by the post-office officials at the opening of the new government building here, on the 15th, and the ninetieth anniversary of the State of Missouri. On August 10, 1821, this State was admitted to the Union by President Monroe. It was the twenty-fourth State under Old Glory.

Reunion Minutes.

SEATTLE AND BRITISH COLUMBIA.—Held at Centralia, Washington, August 5 to 13, 1911. Sessions of the semiannual conference were held on the opening day, convening at 10 a. m., with district president William Johnson in the chair. Missionary in charge, Bro. F. M. Sheehy, being present, was chosen with district president to preside jointly over conference and reunion. Bro. F. W. Holman was elected secretary; Sr. Hattie Ward, chorister; and Sr. Lula Fisher, organist. Ministers reporting: Elders William Johnson, P. W. Premo, P. T. Plumb, and S. P. Cox. Also Priests Leonard S. Rhodes and Josiah E. Rhoades. Branch statistical report as follows: Seattle with a present membership of 213, a net loss of 19, New Westminster 26, loss 2; Chilliwack 36, loss 3; Centralia, organized February 5, 1911, with 42 members, showing a present number of 53, gained 11, making a total of 328 as reported. This total, added to the enrollment of Castle Rock, Tacoma, and Nanaimo branches, disorganized, having a membership of 31, 25, and 7 respectively, makes a grand total of 391 members in the district, and a net gain of 24 during the past six months. Bishop's agent reported for six months: On hand February 9, 1911, $259.89; subsequent receipts, $343.72. After deducting an expenditure of $406.40, left a balance on hand August 1, 1911, $197.21. Under new business the appointment of a bishop's agent residing within the district was discussed somewhat at length, same being highly favored by the missionary in charge, resulted in conferring authority upon the district president to select two associates, and they together to decide upon, and present a name to the presiding bishop, with recommendations for said incumbency. In compliance with a request from the Seattle Branch, Seattle was decided upon as the place for holding next conference, time for convening left in the hands of the district president. A large proportion of the afternoon session was devoted to the advocacy of Graceland College by Brother Sheehy, highly recommending financial support from the church membership in general, and defining the necessity of such an institution as an auxiliary to the church, continuing with instruction and information pertaining to recognition gained by the church, especially throughout the United States and Canada. Sunday's exercises placed the reunion under full headway. Prayer meetings were held at 9.30 each morning in charge separately of Brethren Premo, Holman, Johnson, Cox and F. T. Coats; and preaching services were conducted at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. alternately, by Brn. Sheehy, Keeler, Thorburn, Johnson, and Plumb. Fourteen patriarchal blessings were given by Brother Keeler and four persons were baptized by Bro. George Thorburn. Basket dinners and lunches were indulged in by most all under cover of the large district tent, set up for the purpose; and upon the whole, and throughout, all enjoyed a sumptuous feast, especially that of a spiritual nature. Many, not of the fold, were in attendance at the preaching services, and listened attentively, much good seed being sown, which ultimately, we feel, will bring forth good fruit. Frederick W. Holman, secretary, 4233 Bagley Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

Fairbanks; Good Housekeeping Magazine, 381 Fourth Avenue, New York City.—36-2t.

The grandest way of praising God is not by singing psalms and hymns; that is a very sweet way of praising him, but a grander way is by being quite calm in time of trouble, quite happy in the hour of distress, just dwelling with God, and finding all your grief assuaged in his blessed presence. How really and truly a child praises his father when he just bears anything from him: "It must be right for my father does it." And I believe that when a child of God says, "It is the Lord; let him do what seemeth him good"; he is praising God more than he could with the cornet or high sounding cymbal.—Newness of Life.

Nothing happens to anybody which he is not fitted by nature to bear.—Marcus Aurelius.

Mr. Farmer:

Did the recent long, dry spell hit you pretty hard—cut down the yield of your crops and consequently your income for the year?

Will you be satisfied to continue taking chances on a good rain happening along just about the time it is badly needed?

Out in the Big Horn Basin of Wyoming, the farmer of irrigated lands raised the usual "bumper" crop. His income was not reduced, and he knew no worries, because "he controlled the rain" and applied water to his crops as needed.

Don't you see the advantage he had over you? Wouldn't it pay you to go out there with me on one of those Homeseekers' Excursions, see the country; talk to some of the farmers and find out what they think about it?

This country is filling up rapidly and it will soon be too late to get-in-on-the-ground-floor.

Why not make an appointment to go out with me real soon? When writing, remind me to send you a copy of our new folder containing full particulars.

Why the Public is in Darkness About Diet Matters.

It is said that "The Masses are Asses." I do not think so. Let anyone visit races or sports, and he will soon see that the public follows intelligently the proceedings of the races or game. If on any subject the masses appear stupid, it is only through the lack of education. How can we expect knowledge on a subject on which absolute ignorance exists amongst the majority of the educated and wealthy classes, and even amongst many medical men? The doctor knows that he will not be wanted as soon as people learn which foods will keep them in health. Most of the osteopaths, chiropractors, naturopaths, hydropaths, etc., all keep up the fatal doctrine that any wholesome food may be eaten, providing moderation is practiced. Such advice covers their own ignorance, and is at the same time popular, because the majority of the people dislike restrictions in diet matter. At this very writing we have a subject that is restricted with his food and is improving wonderfully under the doctor's care. It is positively sunlight, air, water and proper food that increases life, and they are the basic laws of life.

Editorial

A VISIT TO KIRTLAND AND CLEVELAND, OHIO, AND LONDON, CANADA.

The associate editor was privileged to attend the reunion in the old historic town of Kirtland, August 17-27. This reunion represents four districts: Kirtland, Pittsburg, West Virginia, and Ohio. Two members from each district form a reunion committee to manage affairs, select time and place of meeting, etc.

A very excellent spirit prevailed during the entire reunion. The solemn and sacred atmosphere of the temple in which the meetings were held was felt by those in attendance, and a good spiritual time was enjoyed. The prayer service of the last Sunday was quite remarkable. It lasted for very nearly three hours, and the time was almost entirely taken up by short and fervent testimonies, the longest not to exceed five minutes, the average being about two minutes. The young people held a separate prayer service each morning during the week, uniting with the older people on Sunday. In these meetings they took a deep and active interest and were much benefited.

There were ten baptisms during the reunion, all being performed in the Chagrin River, in which the Saints used to baptize so many years ago. It was indeed a delightful experience to meet in the old historic temple, in which such wonderful events have transpired in days gone by, and in which Jesus himself appeared to his faithful followers.

The writer was associated with Elders R. C. Russell and F. J. Ebeling in the presidency of the reunion,—two congenial brethren—with whom we worked without a trace of friction. These brethren, together with Elders C. Ed. Miller, A. J. Becker, Charles Fry, R. Etzenhouser, N. L. Booker, J. W. Metcalf, O. R. Miller, D. E. Tucker, A. E. Stone, A. B. Kirkendall, John H. Lake, and others whose names do not at once come to mind, worked, each in his place and way, for the success of the reunion, and some of those named deserve especial credit for long hours and days of service at various tasks, some of which might be deemed irksome and thankless, but which are really true Christian services when performed in the right spirit.

Representatives to the extent of about forty loyal soldiers of the cross from London and other points in Canada were present, under the leadership of Elders William Fligg and Frank Gray, and helped to make the meetings a success. They were heartily welcomed, and the hope was expressed that many more of the Canadian Saints might attend next year.

No doubt the services will be fully reported by the clerk. Bro. John Curry was chosen "poet laureate" of the reunion, and the following verses of his composition, entitled, Kirtland Temple, were read at the closing service:

Oh sacred edifice! built by the Lord's command!
Witness the House of God, a crown upon this land;
Throughout the entire earth this temple stands alone
As one required of God, an edifice his own.

By sacrifice 'twas reared, its walls oft felt the tears
Of noble hearted men, pilots in early years;
When darkness thick o'erlaid this village like a pall,
Their prayers here arose to him who pilots all.

With kindred love to-day, a reunited band,
As Saints of Jesus Christ, inside these walls we stand;
Our purpose, God to serve, his glory our delight,
We'll now enlist anew to battle for the right.

With charity for all, our brethren we'll forgive,
That God may own us, both we'll look on him and live.
Inside these walls or out, we'll serve the Lord with zeal,
We pray for light and strength; may we his presence feel.

After the close of the Kirtland reunion we spent several pleasant days in Cleveland at the hospitable home of Elder Eben Miller. Among other points of interest visited during our stay in Cleveland we mention the library and museum of the Western Reserve Historical Society, which we visited on the invitation of Mr. Cathcart, who is president of the society. Here we saw the old iron safe used in the Kirtland Bank, a series of the bank notes, and numerous old periodicals published in Kirtland in the early days.

We occupied in the church Wednesday evening, August 30. The Saints of Cleveland have a very neat and pleasant chapel, and are still more fortunate in having an undivided branch, in which harmony and good will prevail. Brethren Topping, Keck, Miller, Webbe, and others of the local ministry are hard workers, and keep things moving. They hold services regularly in Wade Park during the summer months.

From Cleveland, on invitation of the London Branch, we crossed Lake Erie, to London, Canada, reaching there Friday, September 1. We were domiciled at the home of Mr. Thomas Maker and his good wife, Sister Maker. Mr. Maker, as will be seen, is a "brother-in-law" in the church. He unsuccessfully attempts to hide a very hospitable and kind heart under a lot of banter and jocularity. The elders have long been given a Latter Day Saint welcome at his home.

Under the guidance of Brethren Fligg and Gray we spent Friday and Saturday sight-seeing in the beautiful and homelike city of London. Friday evening we addressed the Religio Society, Sunday afternoon we spoke briefly to the Sunday school, and preached at eleven o'clock in the forenoon and again at seven in the evening. While here, besides the local ministry, Brethren Fligg, Gray, Henley, Hardey, Winegarden, Richardson, Martin, and others, we were privileged to meet Elders John Shields and Frederick Gregory of the missionary force.

Both the morning and evening services were well attended. As the evening service convened at seven o'clock and our train was due to leave at twenty minutes past eight, the brethren thoughtfully arranged to have an automobile at the church door to whisk us away to the train. But it was learned that the train was an hour late, so ample time was given to shake hands and say good-bye all around. Never shall we forget the sincere welcome accorded us by the Canadian Saints, and the warm handclaps and hearty good wishes extended at parting. Our only regret in visiting London was that time did not permit a visit to other points in Canada, and we were obliged to decline invitations from Chatham and other points because of work awaiting us, and other engagements. However, we promised ourselves that we would return at some future time, when a more extended visit could be made.

THE NEW "CANADIAN MIRROR" DEPARTMENT.

Next week the SAINTS' HERALD will begin the publication of a new department, to be known as the Canadian Mirror Department. It is in fact a transfer of the Canadian Mirror to the columns of the HERALD.

Some two years ago Brn. Frank Gray, Robert J. Farthing, and John Judkins, all of London, Canada, began the publication of the Canadian Mirror, an eight page paper published monthly. Brn. Gray and Judkins continued to edit this paper after the departure of Brother Farthing to attend Graceland College. It grew into a bright and newsy sheet, and we trust will not deteriorate when transferred to the HERALD.

The new department will appear semimonthly. The Canadian Saints are invited to cooperate with us in making it successful. In the past the Saints of Canada have felt that they were not properly represented in the church paper; while the HERALD editors have been willing and anxious to publish news from Canada, but could not get it to publish. Items of interest should be reported at once, either to the HERALD Editors, or to Bro. Robert J. Farthing, Lamoni, Iowa.

In the closing number of the Canadian Mirror, Bro. Frank Gray thus explains the object of the change:

This will no doubt be a great surprise to our many readers who have so loyally supported our popular mission paper, and have shown both by subscription and the newsy articles for publication that they have indorsed it, and we trust that the change which is taking place will in no wise dampen their zeal and interest in the effort to place before the eyes of the Canadian Saints news from far and near; especially of the progress of the work made throughout the entire Dominion.

While we are discontinuing the Canadian Mirror as a mission paper, we will continue to publish semimonthly, from two to two and one half pages of Canadian news in the SAINTS' HERALD, which will be the equivalent to the present monthly edition of Canadian Mirror, and thus fulfilling our contract with the subscribers, as per first issue.

The object of the transfer of the Canadian Mirror to the HERALD columns is to bring our official organ more prominently in the homes of the Canadian Saints. With the addition of the Canadian Mirror list, a great number of Canadian Saints will have a chance to see the value of our SAINTS' HERALD, which contains such inspiring sermons and articles from the prominent ministry of the church. The main object of the change is to boost the HERALD in Canada.

Our subscribers will receive the SAINTS' HERALD twice a month until their subscription expires. Those subscribers who already take the HERALD, the money due them will be allowed on their HERALD subscription. We think that is satisfactory, and will be equal to our agreement, as this is a transfer and not a failure of our paper.

The reasons we are transferring our paper to the HERALD's columns are as follows: We were approached by the management of the HERALD Office to make the transfer, and after careful consideration, we felt that perhaps under the present conditions of our late Canada Mission, that it would be in the best interest of the work. For we are all workers together, no matter what part of the world we live in. We should always consider the circumstances of the case, and then work to do the most good to the greatest number.

Canada no longer exists as a separate mission, and we can not tell what the change will bring or how difficult it will be to run a mission paper under the present conditions.

I have personally conducted the Canadian Mirror for the last twelve months, and during that time I have been called to the eldership, and at the present time am priest of the London Branch, as well as holding office in the London District Sunday School Association as district superintendent. With all the burden of this work resting upon me, I feel that the time has come when it would be wise to relieve myself of the great task of running our mission paper, as it takes a great deal of time and work to secure the necessary material to make it anyway interesting.

The church has a large and growing membership in Canada, including many active and faithful workers. The field is one of great importance, and should be properly represented in the official organ of the church. To the end that it may be so represented, and a closer unity be established throughout the entire church, we solicit the help and support of all Canadian Saints.

MORMONS WHO ARE NOT POLYGAMISTS.

I have no intention of antagonizing Ex-Senator Cannon, or attempting any sort of answer or review of his article. I know him and think I understand him. But the present agitation against Utah Mormonism has no just reason for reflex action against us who have not been polygamists nor recreant citizens of the state. Hence my anxiety for a right to describe our organization—The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints—and to make certain in the minds of your readers its differentiation from the Utah body.

The common idea is that "Mormonism" is polygamy. Polygamists may be Mormons, but all believers in "Mormonism" are not polygamists. The term "Mormonism" had no such meaning during the lifetime of the Prophet Joseph Smith. At his death, in 1844, which caused serious division and scattering of the believers, the church organized by him in 1830 had increased in membership to over one hundred thousand.

Upon the accession of Brigham Young, a large number of the scattered members throughout the world refused to accept the leadership of President Young, and awaited the developments of time. Nearly all the congregational branches became broken in their organization upon the exodus of President Young and his followers to the mountains. There remained intact, as they were left at the death of the Prophet Joseph Smith, only three: two of these were in northern Illinois and southern Wisconsin, and one in central Illinois. By ecclesiastical law, as old as the Mosaic code, these had the right of church extension. Exercising this right, the members of the first two branches, in 1851, instituted a movement to gather together the scattered believers. This movement was successful, and on June 12, 1852, a conference was held at Zarahemla, Wisconsin, at which resolutions renouncing allegiance to various claimants to leadership who had risen subsequent to the death of the prophet were passed, as well as others reaffirming faith and adherence to the principles taught by the original church as left upon record at the prophet's death.

These men were zealous and began an earnest propaganda throughout the United States, rousing the latent faith of the scattered believers, until, at a conference held at Amboy, Illinois, April 6, 1860, a band of some three hundred delegates met with the wife and eldest son of the prophet, who united with the movement upon their original baptisms. This band of believers cleaved to the administration of the church as it had existed from 1830 to 1844, under the leadership of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. Joseph Smith the son of the prophet, who had been baptized by his father, was chosen presiding officer of the movement which became known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints—in contradistinction to the body in Utah under President Young.

Not one of the immediate family of the Prophet Joseph

Smith accepted the administration of Brigham Young or the dogma of plural marriage. The members of his family, including his mother, his brother, William B., and his sisters, Sophronia McClary, Catherine Salisbury, and Lucy Millikin, refused to migrate to Utah.

THE FIGHT AGAINST POLYGAMY.

The activity of the propaganda immediately increased, and a more perfect church organization was effected. Since then, ever-wider throughout the United States, England, Wales, Scotland, Australia, and the South Sea Islands, wherever the eldership of the original church had gone, these believers in the primitive faith have gone, spreading the news of the Reorganization, and opposing the dogma and practice of polygamy everywhere. The declaration of this body of believers in primitive "Mormonism" against polygamy was made June 12, 1852, two and one half months before the promulgation of the dogma in Salt Lake City, Utah, August 29 of the same year. It had become known to them that polygamy was practiced in secret among those who went west under Brigham Young. At the same conference they reaffirmed their belief in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in the revelations given to the church, as the same were left on record by the prophet at his death. This was the faith into which they had been baptized, and this was the faith unto which they would adhere.

Among the provisions of the law to govern the church contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, acknowledged by the church as revelations given of God, occur the following commandments, establishing monogamy as the rule of domestic relation: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shalt cleave unto her and none else." "Whosoever forbiddeth to marry is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh." "Thou shalt take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee in my scriptures, for my law, to be my law, to govern my church." This permitted the introduction from the Bible and the Book of Mormon of the following commandment, in substance: "For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother and cleave unto his wife, and they twain shall be one flesh." (Matthew 19: 5; Mark 10: 5-9; Genesis 2: 24.)

WHEN POLYGAMY STARTED.

Not until August 29, 1852, over eight years after the death of Joseph Smith, under the régime of Brigham Young, the first president of a polygamist church, was the doctrine of plural marriage introduced into the Utah Church. The force of this statement is seen when it is known that, upon the arrival of a pioneer company under Brigham Young, in Salt Lake Valley, in 1847, he baptized the members of the Twelve who were with him, and was himself baptized by Heber C. Kimball, after which all who entered the valley were required to be rebaptized, thus baptizing them into the polygamic faith.

Twice in the United States district courts has the Reorganized Church been declared the legal successor of the church organized by Joseph Smith, April 6, 1830; once in Ohio, under Judge Burrows, and once in Missouri, under Judge John F. Philips.

It is because of these things that the Reorganized Church, over which Joseph Smith the son of the prophet, has presided for fifty one years,—that this body, now some sixty-five thousand, strong, protests against being classified as "Mormons," or being confounded in any way with the supporters of polygamy. The Reorganized Church is monogamous in its belief and practice, under the laws and institutions of the United States of America, and its members, as citizens, ask proper recognition at the hand of their fellow-men.

President of Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

INDIAN TRIBES INCREASING.—From the New York American we cull the following answer to an inquiry concerning the number of Indians:

"There are at present in the United States somewhere about three hundred and fifty thousand Indians. It is possible that there are many more, say three hundred and seventy thousand. Most of these Indians are maintained by the Government on reservations. The generally accepted theory of the "disappearance of the Red Men" is losing ground, as it is being shown that civilization is not necessarily fatal to the Indian. The Red Man seems to thrive very well under civilization, and there is no good reason why he should not continue among us for a very long period of time. There are some very respectable authorities who go so far as to tell us that the Indians are as numerous to-day as they were when Columbus discovered the country.

THE DANGER OF COMPLACENCY.—We felicitate ourselves on the fact that we have a perfect church organization, patterned after the primitive church, a scriptural system of doctrine, and believe in the ancient gifts and blessings. On these points we are invulnerable in argument. Does this blind us to the fact that the church may be all right but that we may be all wrong? What about our own personal character and religious experiences? Has our religion laid hold upon our most profound emotions? It is of little value to be theologically correct if the streams of righteousness within us are dried up.

CHRISTIANITY BETWEEN EMPLOYEE AND EMPLOYER.—More and more are thoughtful people beginning to see that the industrial world can not be properly readjusted with Christ left out. The closing words of Frank Hatch Straightoff, in his book, The Standard of Living among the People of America, are very striking: "Without Christianity, greater physical comfort may be attained by the laboring man, [greater than at present] but there will be between employer and employee an ever keener struggle for supremacy, fiercer for each advance that is achieved by the laborer, unless both parties recognize the divine authority of the man who said 'Love one another as I have loved you.'"

MIRACLES NOT IN VIOLATION OF THE NATURAL LAW.—Miracles do not come in defiance of natural laws. They come in accordance with natural laws that we do not understand. God understands. When he shall choose to explain, they will no longer seem miraculous. They are as simple and natural as the falling of the dew. On this point, theologians are becoming more rational. William Jewett Tucker, formerly professor in Andover Theological Seminary, says: "Who can measure the elasticity of nature? Who will deny room for the natural operation of forces which elude the ordinary watch of the senses? Who will dare deny the natural operation of hidden forces which may at any time come out into the open and declare themselves to the senses?" (See The Function of the Church in Modern Society, p. 46.)

THE INDIVIDUAL APPEAL.—This is an age of organization, of mass work. Yet, after all, nothing can take the place of the appeal of the church to the individual. Individual repentance is needed. The doctrine still needs to be forced home to individuals, "You must be born again." This should be at the base of organized effort. Mass work is only effective when the mass is composed of regenerated individuals. The world ignores that fact. Consequently social reforms are not successful, corruption suppressed in one quarter appears in another. We have gone about as far as we can go on a purely ethical basis. Until the gospel has its effect on individuals society can not be regenerated.

The church is in the community, not to make money, or to attract people, or provide amusements or entertainments for people, but it is in the world to bear witness to the divine among men. A church has no right to exist, unless it stands as an inspirational force in the community. It may have a splendid ritual; it may have the finest music; it may contain men and women of brains and culture; it may boast of its architecture; it may be proud of its kitchen; but if it does not have at the real heart of it a deep spiritual life, which comes from communion with God, it has no right to call itself a church.—Sheldon.

To rise in the morning with a rested soul; to burn the day's first incense at the altar of one's highest ideals; to begin each day's work with a song whose courage sets other hearts singing; to dignify the prosiest toil by an honest investment of self; to be spendthrift of kindness, frugal of the minutes, and niggardly of criticism; to come down to the evening hour with the peace of having blessed the world in spite of failure—this is to be a "workman that needeth not to be ashamed."—George C. Peck.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

MARTIN HARRIS VISITS PROFESSOR ANTHON.

On pages 81, 82, of Mormonism Against itself, the visit of Martin Harris to Professor Anthon is described. In Isaiah 29: 11, 12, it is indicated that the "words" of a sealed book should be delivered by men "to one that is learned," saying, "read this I pray thee; and he saith, I can not; for it is sealed."

Soon after Mr. Smith commenced translating the record through the instrumentality of the Urim and Thummim, "a considerable number" of the original characters were transcribed and translated by Mr. Smith, and both the specimen characters and their translation were taken by Martin Harris to the City of New York, where they were presented to a "learned" gentleman who professed to be extensively that an angel of God had revealed it unto him. He then said to me, Let me see that certificate, I accordingly took it out of my pocket and gave it to him, when he took it and tore it to pieces, saying that there was no such thing now as ministering of angels, and that if I would bring the plates to him he would translate them. I informed him that part of the plates were sealed, and that I was forbidden to bring them, he replied, 'I can not read a sealed book.' I left him and went to Doctor Mitchil, who sanctioned what Professor Anthon had said respecting both the characters and the translation.

Note in the above that Martin Harris took with him some of the translated characters and presented them first to the professor, who declared them to be Egyptian, and the translation more correct than any he had seen, and on presenting those not translated, the professor pronounced them to be Egyptian, Chaldaic, Assyriac, and Arabic, and said they "were true characters." Mr. Traum believes, per force of evidence, that such a visit was made, "as shown by the claims of the Mormons, and the letter which Professor Anthon wrote to E. D. Howe in 1834." But Mr. Traum sees a difference in the account, in the letter written by Anthon, from the claim put forth by the Saints. That there is a difference in the accounts of the incident, none will deny; but we present an extract of Anthon's letter to Howe, and also the photographic cut of the original paper which Mr. Harris presented to the professor.

Mr. Anthon writes as follows February 17, 1834, to E. D. Howe:

This paper was in fact a singular scrawl. It consisted of all kinds of crooked characters disposed in columns, and had evidently been prepared by some person who had before him at the time a book containing various alphabets. Greek and Hebrew letters, crosses and flourishes, Roman letters inverted or placed sideways, were arranged in perpendicular columns, and the whole ended in a rude delineation of a circle divided into various compartments, decked with various strange marks, and evidently copied after the Mexican Calendar given by Humboldt.—History of Mormonism, E. D. Howe, pp. 171, 272.

We happen to see two purposes in placing these cuts before our readers: First, that we may ask Mr. Traum to show the "perpendicular columns," and at the end, "a rude delineation of a circle divided into various compartments, decked with various strange marks," and "copied after the Mexican Calendar given by Humboldt." If he can not do it, he must confess that Professor Anthon is wrong.

Second, that the photographic cut of the original paper containing the "Caractors" may be compared with the one in Elder Traum's book. The one he presents is a three-line cut, while the original is a seven-line cut. The one he presents is as bungling a transcription as a careless transcriber could make and palm it off as a genuine copy. We would invite a careful comparison. No matter where Elder Traum secured it, the marks of carelessness and the counterfeiter are upon it. Ostensibly it is taken acquainted with many languages, both ancient and modern. But as Elder Traum has attempted to quote Mr. Pratt on this point, I will allow Mr. Pratt to quote the words, as reported from Times and Seasons, volume 3, page 773. Mr. Pratt quoting Martin Harris, says:

Professor Anthon stated that the translation was correct, more so than any he had before seen translated from the Egyptian. I then showed him those which were not yet translated, and he said that they were Egyptian, Chaldaic, Assyriac, and Arabic, and he said that they were true characters. He gave me a certificate certifying to the people of Palmyra that they were true characters, and that the translation of such of them as had been translated was also correct. I took the certificate and put it into my pocket, and was just leaving the house when Mr. Anthon called me back and asked me how the young man found out that there were gold plates in the place where he found them. I answered from The Prophet. The blunder occurring above the characters, in explanation, shows a reckless attempt. It states that they are the same that were taken to Professor Mitchil, and afterward to Professor Anthon, when the history of the incident states they were presented to Anthon first, and then taken to Doctor Mitchil, who sanctioned what Professor Anthon had said. At the left of the cut, is the line, "Characters from the Book of Mormon," and at the right, "Smith's Characters from the 'Reform Egyptian' Verbatim."

Now taking the testimony of our opponents, and Elder Traum is one of them, and he accepts the statements of his witnesses, then we have a clear and unequivocal admission of the fact in chief, namely, that the words of the book were delivered to the learned. Professor Anthon confesses that direct testimony which the world has of the event," it is earlier than 1842. Mr. Howe, himself, publishes the professor's letter in 1834. We will show Elder Traum's thorough investigation to be very partial. He is wrong in this statement that "the only direct testimony the world has" is that given by Anthon, as the following will show:

When the plates were said to have been found, a copy of one or two lines of the characters, were taken by Mr. Harris to Utica, Albany, and New York; at New York they were shown to Doctor Mitchil, and he referred to Professor Anthon who translated and declared them to be the ancient shorthand Egyptian. So much is true. The family of Smith is poor, and generally ignorant in common learning.

The above is copied from a letter written by W. W. Phelps, (before he was a member of the church) to E. D. Howe, of Painesville, Ohio, from

BOOK OF MORMON CHARACTERS SUBMITTED TO PROFESSOR ANTHON

This cut is from a photograph taken directly from the original paper prepared by Joseph Smith and conveyed by the hand of Martin Harris to Anthon. The paper was preserved by David Whitmer, and is now in the possession of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

the characters, "the words," were presented to him, that he could not and did not read them.

OTHER WITNESSES.

On page 83, Elder Traum gets off the following:

Further, the only direct testimony which the world has of the event is that which was given by Professor Anthon. The Saints' version of the affair did not appear until May 2, 1842, and was made then, not by Martin Harris, but by Joseph Smith. The motive for giving it currency at even that late date was to give credence to the claim that was being made that the Book of Mormon was a child of Hebrew prophecy, but Harris remained as silent as the grave, not alone on this question, but on the "reaffirmation" as well.—Mormonism Against Itself, page 83.

If Professor Anthon's statement were "the only

Canandaigua, New York, January 15, 1831. It was published in 1840, in History of Mormonism, by E. D. Howe, page 273. Also see The Truth Defended, page 120. Professor Anthon's letter as published by Howe, is dated February 17, 1834, and W. W. Phelps' letter, published 1840, is dated January 15, 1831. These statements show that the incident of Martin Harris taking "the words of the book" to the "learned" was common talk, publicly discussed as a matter of popular import, as early as the occurrence, and on up to 1840. And the fact that E. D. Howe had in his possession W. W. Phelps' statement, as early as January 15, 1831, shows that Elder Traum's prejudice blinds him to the facts, and actuates him to pen and italicize falsehood.

Neither is it true that Martin Harris remained silent as the grave on the reaffirmation of the question: This is another italicized falsehood. Martin Harris, in reply to a letter written to H. B. Emerson, bearing the date of November 23, 1870, written from Smithfield, Utah, says:

In reply, I will say concerning the plates: I do say that the angel did show to me the plates containing the Book of Mormon. Further, the translation that I carried to Professor Anthon was copied from these same plates; also, that the professor did testify to it being a correct translation.—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 50, 51.

Also, the following, copied from the Millennial Star, September 15, 1853:

Be it known to all whom this may concern that I, David B. Dille, of Ogden City, Weber County, Utah, en route to Great Britain, having business with one Martin Harris, formerly of the Church of Latter Day Saints, and residing at Kirtland, Lake County, Ohio, did personally wait upon him at his residence, and found him sick in bed; and was informed by the said Martin Harris that he had not been able to take any nourishment for the space of three days. This together with his advanced age, had completely prostrated him. After making my business known to Mr. Harris, and some little conversation with him, the said Martin Harris started up in bed, and after particularly inquiring concerning the prosperity of the church, made the following declaration: [Omitted for want of space.—Scott.] I afterwards put the following questions to Mr. Harris, to which he severally replied with the greatest cheerfulness: "What do you think of the Book of Mormon? Is it a divine record?" Mr. Harris replied: . . . "I know the Book of Mormon is true, and you know that I know that it is true. I know that the plates have been translated by the gift, and power of God, for his voice declared it unto us; therefore, I know of a surety that the work is true: . . . And as many of the plates as Joseph Smith translated, I handled with my hands, plate after plate." . . . Mr. Harris further said: "I took a transcript of the characters of the plates to Doctor Anthon of New York. When I arrived at the house of Professor Anthon I found him in his office, and alone, and presented the transcript to him and asked him to read it. He said if I would bring the plates, he would assist in the translation. I told him I could not for they were sealed. Professor Anthon gave me a certificate certifying that the characters were Arabic, Chaldaic, and Egyptian. I then left Doctor Anthon, and was near the door when he said, 'How did the young man know the plates were there?' I said an angel had shown them to him. Professor Anthon then said: 'Let me see the certificate.' Upon which I took it from my waistcoat pocket, and unsuspectingly gave it to him. He then tore it up in anger, saying, there was no such things as angels now. It was all a hoax. I then went to Doctor Mitchil with the transcript, and he confirmed what Professor Anthon had said." Mr. Harris is about fifty-eight years old, and is on a valuable farm of ninety acres, beautifully situated at Kirtland, Lake County, Ohio.

The foregoing, with other evidence we could adduce, is conclusive that Elder Traum is pulling these misrepresentations out of cold storage, in order to entertain consolation parties, whistling all kinds of tunes to keep up the courage of the Anti-Mormon League as it goes marching through exaggerations, innuendo, and falsehood to an open defeat.

THE WORK BY E. D. HOWE.

Oh, no; the "Mormons" do not seek to discredit the testimony of Anthon because it comes by the way of E. D. Howe, as Traum charges, although we grant the idea, that anything coming by way of questionable hands, should be submitted to close examination. We can discredit a part of the said testimony "on the ground" that it is faulty.

If Mr. E. D. Howe had been eager to give the proper information to the world, he would not have withheld W. W. Phelps' letter nine years in "pigeon hole." That letter is dated January 15, 1831, and Howe does not "give the information" until 1840.

No necessity existed for the Saints to interview Professor Anthon, when he was occasionally answering inquiries as to "the words of a book" being presented to him by "a plain-looking countryman." He kept admitting the fact, as per Howe, 1834; and as late as November 22, 1841, he reaffirmed the truth of the "incident" in the Episcopal Church Record, New York, volume 1, in answer to Rev. T. W. Coit, who addressed a note of inquiry to him; and men who are interested in that phase of the question assert that "inquiries" were many and urgent.

As to Howe's History of Mormonism, the compilation was the work of D. P. Hurlbut, a man of no principles, who was the tool of an Anti-Mormon combination composed of Campbellite preachers and deacons, who were engaged in the laudable work of hunting up "lies," and Hurlbut "catered" them for the company.

Elder Sidney Rigdon wrote a letter to Gentlemen Bartlett and Sullivan, editors, under date of May 27, 1839, from Commerce, answering some of the lies peddled by the within mentioned parties, and gives the following history of Dr. (?) P. Hurlbut:

Let me here, gentlemen, give a history of this Dr. P. Hulbert and his associates who aided him in getting up and propagating this batch of lies.

I have seen and heard, at one time and another, by the persecutors and haters of the truth, a great deal about the eminent physician, Doctor Hulbert. I never thought the matter worthy of notice, nor probably ever should, had it not made its appearance in your paper, or some one of equal respectability. And I believe, gentlemen, had you have known the whole history of this budget of lies, it would never have found a place in your paper. But to my history.

This said doctor was never a physician at any time, nor anything else, but a base ruffian. He was the seventh son, and his parents called him Doctor; it was his name, and not the title of his profession.

He once belonged to the Methodist Church, and was excluded for immoralities. He afterwards imposed himself on the Church of Latter Day Saints, and was excluded for using obscene language to a young lady, a member of the said church, who resented his insult with indignation, which became both her character and profession.

After his exclusion he swore—for he was vilely profane—that he would have revenge, and commenced his work. He soon found assistance; a pious old deacon of the Campbellite

Church, by the name of Onis Clapp, and his two sons, Thomas J. Clapp and Matthew S. Clapp, both Campbellite preachers, abetted and assisted by another Campbellite preacher, by the name of Adamson Bently. Hulbert went to work catering lies for the company. Before Hulbert got through, his conduct became so scandalous that the company utterly refused to let his name go out with the lies he had collected, and he and his associates had made, and they substituted the name of E. D. Howe. The change, however, was not much better. There were scandalous immoralities about the Howe family of so black a character that they had nothing to lose, and became good tools for this holy company to work with. A man of character would never have put his name to a work which Hulbert was concerned in. . . . The tale in your paper is one hatched up by this gang before the time of their explosion.—From The Spalding Story Refuted, John E. Page.

The above history of Hurlbut is confirmed by church and civil court records, and we now present them for two purposes: first, to show Elder Traum the character of those whom he embraces as witnesses, in the work of staining the fair name of the church and its early ministers; and second, to forever nail the falsehood uttered and aggravated wherein Traum charges the church with sending out as missionaries those guilty of crimes, and says their conference minutes show it. The church record shows the following:

A conference of high priests convened in the translating room in Kirtland on the third of June, and the first case presented was that of Dr. P. Hurlbut, who was accused of unchristian conduct with the women, while on a mission to the East. On investigation it was decided that his commission be taken from him, and that he be no longer a member of the Church of Christ.

This was done June 3, 1833. Later he appealed from this decision, and eighteen days after, the following document was presented to the Presidency and High Council:

I, Dr. P. Hurlbut, having been tried before the bishop's council of high priests on a charge of unchristianlike conduct with the female sex, and myself being absent at the time, and considering that strict justice was not done me, I do, by these presents, most solemnly enter my appeal unto the President's council of high priests, for a rehearing, according to the privilege guaranteed to me in the laws of the church, which council is now assembled in the schoolroom, in Kirtland, this twenty-first day of June, 1833. . . .

Brother Hurlbut's case was then laid before the court, and, the testimony against him given in by Orson Hyde and Hyrum Smith, and duly investigated. The decision of the court was that Brother Hurlbut should be forgiven because of the liberal confession which he made. The court also decided that the bishop's council decided correctly on the case, and that Brother Hurlbut's crime was sufficient to cut him off from the church; but on his confession he was restored. . . .

Mark you, he was restored because of his confession. But the appellate court indorsed the findings that he was guilty of some kind of unchristian conduct, while he was an elder of the church. But he was arraigned again June 23, 1833, and the following minute disposes of him so far as the church is concerned:

Brother Doctor P. Hurlbut was called in question, by a general council; and Brother Gee, of Thompson, testified that Brother Hurlbut said that he had deceived Joseph Smith's God, or the spirit by which he was actuated, etc. There was also corroborating testimony brought against him, by Brother Hodges, and the council cut him off from the church.

After his expulsion he threatened the peace of the community and the life of Joseph Smith, and was arraigned before the civil law. Joseph Smith gives an account of the trial of Doctor Hurlbut as follows:

Monday, March 31, 1834, I went to Chardon to attend the court, in the case of Doctor P. Hurlbut. . . . Wednesday the 2d, and Thursday the 3d, attended the court. Hurlbut was on trial for threatening my life.

Again on the 7th:

Bishop Whitney, Elders Frederick G. Williams, Oliver Cowdery, Heber C. Kimball, and myself met in the council room, and bowed down before the Lord, and prayed that he would furnish the means to deliver the firm from debt, that they might be set at liberty; also that I might prevail against the wicked man, Hurlbut, and that he might be put to shame.

April 9. After an impartial trial the court decided that Doctor P. Hurlbut be bound over under two hundred dollar bonds, to keep the peace for six months, and pay the cost, which amounted to near three hundred dollars, all of which was in answer to our prayers, for which I thank my heavenly Father.

In 1896, the foregoing statement was verified by certified copies of court records as follows:

William Holbrook, Justice of the Peace.

And thereupon came the prosecuting attorney for the county and also the said defendant, and the Court having heard the said complaint and also the testimony adduced by the said complainant, and also by the said defendant and having duly considered the same are of opinion that the said complainant had ground to fear that the said Doctor P. Hurlbut would wound, beat or kill him or destroy his property as set forth in said complaint. Wherefore it is ordered and adjudged by the Court that the said Doctor P. Hurlbut enter into a new recognizance with good and sufficient security in the sum of two hundred dollars hereafter to keep the peace and be of good behavior to the citizens of the State of Ohio generally and to the said Joseph Smith, junior, in particular for the period of six months, and it is further ordered that the said Doctor P. Hurlbut pay the costs of this prosecution taxed at the sum of one hundred and twelve dollars and fifty-nine cents. And thereupon came the said Doctor P. Hurlbut with Charles A. Holmes and Elijah Smith as his sureties in open court, entered into a recognizance in the penal sum of two hundred dollars each, conditioned that the said Doctor P. Hurlbut shall for the period of six months from and after this day keep the peace and be of good behavior to all the citizens of the State of Ohio generally and to the said Joseph Smith, junior, in particular.

I, B. D. Ames, Clerk of the Court of Common Pleas, within and for said county,

And in whose custody the files, pleadings, journals, records, execution dockets, and seal of said court, are required by the laws of the State of Ohio to be kept, hereby certify that the foregoing copy of record is taken and copied from the records of the proceedings of the Court of Common Pleas within and for said Geauga County, and that said foregoing copy has been compared by me with the original record and that the same is a correct transcript therefrom.

In testimony whereof, I do hereunto subscribe my name officially, and affix the seal of said court, at the courthouse in Chardon, in said county, this 16th day of July, A. D. 1896. (Seal)

B. D. AMES, Clerk.

This is the man who assisted E. D. Howe in the work of slandering the Saints, this "dangerous" character, who after being expelled from the church swore that he "would have revenge" and commenced his work by permitting himself to be captured by a few "Campbellite" preachers, and taking off both his hat and head, he bows the submission due them, and treks off to manufacture affidavits against the Saints for Howe to publish. How do you like your stock in trade, Elder Traum?

Just how dead your principal weapon has killed the Book of Mormon we will permit its success since the weapon was first forged to answer. That you may get the answer in a summary way, and in compact form, we will append the words of Elder Heman C. Smith, church historian, expressed in a lecture in 1901:

It was thought that when this book that Doctor Hurlbut and E. D. Howe were instruments in getting up was published, that it was a deathblow to Mormonism and the Book of Mormon; and to show you just which one died I want to relate a little experience I had personally. I was in a second-hand book store down here in Kansas City, and looking over the books I saw one entitled, History of Mormonism, by E. D. Howe. I asked the proprietor, "How much for this book?" and he said one dollar and twenty-five cents. I then found an original copy of the Book of Mormon. I asked, "How much is this book worth?" and he said, one hundred and twenty-five dollars. That is the way it killed it. The original copy of the Book of Mormon, one hundred and twenty-five dollars; the other one hundred and twenty-five cents. I asked him why he asked so much, and he answered, that it is one of the original ones,—one that does not teach polygamy.

I trust Mr. Traum will find in the foregoing sufficient grounds upon which to base "repentance from dead works," though he may, with tears, seek long and earnestly. If he can not see that in carrying out the policy of his illustrious predecessors, it were vain to attempt battling them down the decrees of God with puff balls, and that the intelligent among men will raise the standard of revolt against such weapons as Howe, Hurlbut, and others of like caliber, forged in the workshop of Crime, tempered with the venom of Hate, and edged by the splenetic demon of Lies, we say if Elder Traum can not see that a warfare is vain when waged by such tactics, and with the use of such missiles, his picture, in future time, will be turned to the wall, and his deranged vision is only equaled by the blindness of the silly Thracian who hurls his lance at the echo of a thunderbolt.

THE MAN OF SIN.

BY DANIEL MACGREGOR.

IS IT, OR IS IT NOT THE PAPACY?

Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him; that ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letters as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand. Let no man deceive you by any means; for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God. Remember ye not, that, when I was yet with you, I told you these things? And now ye know what withholdeth that he might be revealed in his time. For the mystery of iniquity doth already work; only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way, and then shall that wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming: Even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness.—2 Thessalonians 2: 1-12.

It is generally conceded and urged by the elder-ship of the church, that the prophecy before us pertains to the primitive apostasy, that great "falling away" that resulted in the complete overthrow of the church. It is indeed one of their favorite texts, and we have never heard it questioned, in so far as it is applied to the apostasy.

Indeed, this view of the text is not new; it generally obtains among Protestant commentators.

That day shall not come, unless a falling away, the apostasy, come first. The article here is emphatical, denoting both that this was to be a great apostasy, the apostasy, by way of eminence, the general, grand departure of the whole visible church into idolatrous worship.—Rev. Joseph Benson's Commentary, vol. 2, p. 409, published for the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1839.

It is said first there shall come a falling away, or an apostasy, i. e., a total, universal, horrid defection of the visible church; which can not be meant of any particular heretics or heresy in those times; because he speaks of it prophetically as a thing to come, not then existent. He here speaks of an universal and total apostasy of the visible church.—Theophilus Gale, in Court of the Gentiles, vol. 2, part 3, p. 226, A. D. 1677.

In the Weeks', Noyes', and Alexander Campbell translations of the New Testament, "a falling away" is rendered "the apostasy."

As to whom, or what it is that constitutes the "man of sin," we are not advised by Paul, at least not to the extent of giving us his particular name. That could hardly be expected, any more than we may look for a mention of the name of Judas in the prophecies announcing his coming. It is thus with the man of sin, we can only hope to note the earmarks that were to attend his ministration and with these clues shall hope to be successful in locating him who was to figure so conspicuously in the great "falling away."

We believe that we shall be successful, for it is unreasonable to think that the apostle would give so much space to forewarning the approach of such an individual, if, when he came, it would be impossible to identify him. If not, then to what purpose was the word given? Why did Paul spend so much time and attention delineating and detailing this important character, if, after all he could say, it was, and is, impossible to place the application? Why perplex the human mind and burden the word of God with something that would never occur, or could never be identified?

But we believe better things of Paul. He uttered no idle word. He gave no uncertain sound, and, as the ablest apostle of them all, we believe that he sufficiently advised the church whereby they might, if they would, take intelligent warning, and so save themselves from the approaching disaster, when the seas of apostasy would roll in upon them.

It is apparent that whoever the man of sin may signify, it must be some monstrous person or persons, one who in all probability represented an organization of some character, for we are told that upon beginning his operations with the "falling away," when he was to be "revealed," he would continue until the coming of Christ,—“whom the Lord shall consume with the Spirit of his mouth and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming.” (Verse 8.) Therefore, whatever ideas may have been held that he represented but a single individual, will have to be relinquished, for no one man has as yet ever existed the length of time allotted for the man of sin. Undoubtedly, then, the man of sin must represent a succession of individuals occupying the same position and carrying on the same work. This succession of individuals implies the existence of a supporting, organized establishment whereby the office is perpetuated and the officers are supplied. It would be a thing absurd to think that a work of such an age could be carried on single-handed and alone, outside the pale of some organized institution. The fact that he will be tolerated in the temple of God to the extent of "showing himself that he is God," and the further fact that such extraordinary assumptions will prove "a strong delusion that they should believe a lie that they all might be damned" clearly indicates his commanding prestige, and wielded, too, right among the people of God. Undoubtedly it is they of the "falling away" that yield to his assumed godship.

In our efforts, therefore, to locate the man of sin, we are obliged at the very outset to locate an institution, which, beginning its existence away back in the times of the "falling away," the apostasy has continued to exist triumphantly until the present day, and which bids fair to continue that existence until the coming of Christ.

Just what institution has thus existed, filling the bill of this prophetic demand, it may be premature to here state. We shall note first, certain other features of the man of sin.

He will be a personage, a representative one, of course, one who formerly had connection with the true church. Note that he is called a "son of perdition," which can only apply to an apostate; as witness the only other instance in which this term is used, our Lord applying it to Judas, the betrayer, as recorded in John 17: 12.

The man of sin represents a religious imposition, one that assumes the place of the truth,—“a lie.”

Because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion that they should believe a lie: that they all might be damned who believed not the truth.

The "truth" here spoken of is the saving truth of the gospel by which we are redeemed, and of which Jesus spoke; "Sanctify them by thy truth, thy word is truth." And since the "lie" is to take its place in the hearts and adoration of the people, producing for them awful and eternal results "that they all might be damned," it is only reasonable for us to infer that this "lie" is some religious imposture setting aside the gospel truth and palming off upon the people "with all deceivableness" that which captivates their worship and enslaves their service to a system other than the church of Christ, the truth of God.

It is discoverable then, that whoever the man of sin may signify he is:

1. One who commenced his existence away back in the times of the apostasy.
2. One that would continue his existence until the coming of Christ.
3. He is a representative personage, representing a succession of individuals occupying the same office and carrying on the same work.
4. That he represents an organization by whom he is sustained and the office perpetuated.
5. That it is an apostate organization, one that originally held fellowship in the faith, but which begun by a "falling away."
6. That it is an organization of extensive influence, "a strong delusion."
7. That it is a religious imposture, one that assumes the place of "the truth," the gospel of salvation. It is "a lie."

Who or what is it, then, that stands thus identified as the man of sin? Reader, it is Rome! That imperial papal power, which, beginning its existence back at the times of the apostasy, has continued to the present day in uninterrupted triumph, and bids fair to thrive until the advent of our Lord.

The earlier bishops of Rome, as the man of sin, have been ably succeeded by willing successors, carrying on the same work with increased zeal and persistency.

The bishops of Rome have ever been representative individuals, standing for and backed up by an organization of prodigious strength, the Roman Catholic Church.

That this organization is an apostate one scarcely needs argument to prove. They have scarcely a teaching but what has been woefully corrupted, and as for their church government, there is not a single feature of it meeting the approval of the word of God. "They have transgressed the laws and changed the ordinance" whenever and wherever it suited their pernicious purposes. Originally, in the days preceding the sixth century, they, by their fathers, were in the faith, but forsaking the simplicity of the old paths, and corrupting the church by every evil imaginable, gathered from heathenish rites and customs, they soon forfeited every right to be called the church of Christ, and so, becoming apostates, they became the Church of Rome.

We grant that these are plain statements, but they are statements of facts, and facts never unnecessarily hurt, at least those who are looking for facts. As for the others—well, we sympathize with them, and extend them all the legitimate consolation possible, obtainable from an explanation of the word of God. If there is none, then the word, and none else is to blame.

As an influential organization who can doubt it? For long centuries it held the civilized world in its grasp, compelling kings to bow at its beck, and although perceptibly weakened by the innovations of the Reformation, yet it still holds commanding control in many of the nations, and immeasurable influence in others, our own nation not escaping. Verily it is "a strong delusion."

One remaining feature needs to be noted—the man of sin represents a religious institution. The papacy was ever thus. None has excelled him in religious sacrifice and service. It assumes to be the one and only accepted church, yet never was there a greater imposture foisted upon humanity.

The rule of the man of sin is to be associated with "the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness, etc. The history of the papacy bears out this resemblance to a detail. Its power is most extensive, commanding the services and implicit obedience of the nations and their kings, even inciting them to destructive wars when it suited their pleasure. The historians will recollect the wars of the Crusades, in which millions perished, and all was incited by the popes, wherein, in a small sense, he displayed some of his "all power." In matters of "signs and lying wonders" the papacy has ever been proficient, working upon the credulous of her congregations. For centuries it has claimed to work signs and wonders. Romanism affirms that they possess pieces of the actual cross of Christ, and of the nails that pierced his hands and feet, and also a kerchief upon which he wiped his brow, all of which work wonders to the paying suppliant. They claim undisputed title in fee simple to a finger of the Holy Ghost, and as for the miracle working bones of antiquated saints they have enough to start a fertilizer factory. No marvel, then, that it is called "Mystery of Iniquity," and Romanism is a system of senseless mystery from beginning to end. It is a combination of gowned attendants, mitred priests, crosiered bishops, unedifying ceremonies, and uninterpreted Latin service.

Thus in every well-defined prophetic feature, the papacy is identified with the man of sin. It is without a rival. We know of no other personage or organization that even approaches an identification. Surely then, in the light of unerring and fulfilled prophecy, we do not over-homage the Roman papacy when we lay at his feet the diadem of the man of sin.

But another, and as yet unconsidered characteristic attending the imposition of the man of sin, is his proud and presumptuous spirit: "Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God or that is worshiped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God showing himself that he is God." (Verse 4.)

The following laudatory titles and exalted functions expressed to, and accepted by, the papacy, will perhaps aid the reader in determining whether said papacy has fulfilled the foregoing prophecy or not.

Our Lord God the Pope. . . . Another God upon earth. . . . King of kings and Lord of lords. . . . The victorious God and Man in his See of Rome. . . . The Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. . . . The Holy and good God of the Christians. . . . The power of the Pope is greater than all created power extending itself to things celestial, terrestrial, and infernal, and that the Pope doeth whatsoever he listeth, even things unlawful, and is more than God. . . . All the kings of the earth shall worship him (the Pope) and all nations shall serve him.—G. S. Faber, B. D., Dissertation on the Prophecies, vol. 1, pp. 203, 204; A. D. 1811.

If the pope should send many thousands of men into hell no man can say unto him, what doest thou? . . . He imposeth laws on the consciences, makes new articles of faith, canonizeth books, saints and images . . . sends forth innumerable indulgences or pardons for sin, emptieth purgatory. . . . Thou (pope) art all things and above all things. To thee is given all power in heaven and in earth. . . . By thy unerring word thou rulest over all. And fit it is, a God on earth, men should thee call.—Paræus' Commentary on Revelation, pp. 171-174, A. D. 1644.

Our Most Holy Lord, the victorious God and man in his See of Rome. . . . God, the best and greatest. . . . In one of the papal decrees we read, I do make holy and unholy: I do justify the wicked; I do forgive sins; I open and no man shutteth. I am in all and above all; I being above all prelates, seem by this reason to be above all Gods, whereupon no marvel if it be in my power to change times and abrogate laws, to dispense with all things, yea the precepts of Christ. . . . The Pope is above God.—The Great Anti-Christ, pp. 47, 48. Rev. W. J. Bolton, M. A.

Infallible Teacher of faith and morals.—Guinness, End of the Age, p. 338.

In these presumptuous titles the papacy has surely gone "above all that is called God or that is worshiped." No heathen idolater ever lavished such extravagant blasphemy on the idol of his making. Indeed, in certain of these bloodcurdling claims, the papacy has exceeded the prerogatives of the Almighty himself, and thus in a second sense it is "above all that is called God."

TRANSLATION FUND.

By the action of the last General Convention of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society, the general society pledged the sum of five hundred dollars to assist in the work of translating the Book of Mormon into one foreign language other than German.

It has been two years since the translation fund movement has been agitated, but upon the completion of the German edition, and we may here state that the German translation is now in circulation, the General Convention expressed itself in favor of continuing along this line of work, and, as before stated, pledged its support financially to the extent of five hundred dollars.

This gives the Religians one more opportunity in a line of work in which we have been interested in the past.

Since the church was first organized there has been no such systematic study of this one book as there has been in the last ten years under the direction of the Religio. The society has done much in the past, and using the success of the past as a basis to work upon, we predict a sure success. The Religio has always made good heretofore in what they have undertaken, and this is another chance they have now given them, and we fully expect Religians the world over to make good the pledge of the General Convention.

It is the idea of the executive committee to use the Arena department in the Autumn Leaves as the medium through which this appeal shall be made to all Religians, as this is their official organ of publication.

At the close of the year's work in raising this amount of money, the names of those that have contributed either individually or as local organizations, will be published in the Autumn Leaves.

We expect to enlist the aid of presidents and secretaries of districts and stake organizations, field workers and ministers in general charge in accomplishing our work, and anyone who asks them as to the action of the General Convention in this matter, will be furnished with the details of the matters transacted there.

The special date set for the raising of this pledge is November 25, 1911, and we earnestly hope that on or before this time we shall hear from you favorably as to the progress you are making in raising money toward this fund.

Faithfully yours,
J. A. GUNSOLLEY, President.
J. A. GARDNER, Treasurer.

Nathan Straus, Philanthropist.

Nathan Straus, to whose singlehanded philanthropy is directly due the saving of the lives of thousands of New York's babies every summer, sailed to-day with Mrs. Straus on the North German Lloyd liner George Washington as the representative of the United States Government to the International Congress for the Protection of Infants, to be held shortly in Berlin.

Mr. Straus was selected for this signal honor of being the sole delegate from this Government by President Taft. The appointment of the philanthropist was suggested by his prominence in the work of saving the lives of children through his establishment of laboratories for the perfect preparation of pasteurized milk, the milk depots for its distribution and for the instruction of the mothers among the poorer quarters in the care of their babies.

FIVE THOUSAND LIVES SAVED IN YEAR.

The vital statistics of the Board of Health in New York will show at the end of the current summer that something in the neighborhood of 7,000 babies under five years of age will have had their lives saved as a direct result of the Straus philanthropy. The number of lives saved has increased from year to year since the organization by Mr. Straus of his pasteurized milk system. Before the beginning of the Straus philanthropy, the records show that the deaths of babies under five years of age was more than twice what it is now.

But Mr. Straus's efforts have not been restricted to New York. He has instituted his system of providing pasteurized milk for the babies in Philadelphia, Chicago, Saint Louis, and a score of smaller cities throughout the country, and in a number of cities in Europe as well. His efforts have been unceasing in converting the authorities of cities all over the United States and throughout Europe to the efficacy of his method of saving the lives of the babies.

Mr. Straus has been preparing, and expects to have ready in a few weeks, a complete milk pasteurizing plant, which he has presented to the Health Department of the Philippine Islands. It has been accepted by the United States Government Health Service and will be shipped to Manila under the auspices of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, Washington. The details have been arranged by Dr. Victor G. Heiser, of the United States Public Health and Marine Hospital Service, who is at present in this country.

MOTHERS TAUGHT.

The most careful comparison of the figures of the Bureau of Vital Statistics of the Board of Health in New York for the year 1891, with the completed figures for 1909, or the not fully tabulated figures of last summer, make it plain in a moment what really stupendous results have been achieved.

Besides supplying absolutely pure milk, modified to suit the needs of babies of different ages, and robbed of all possible infective power by pasteurization—chiefly the infective power of tubercular germs, originating in diseased cows—Mr. Straus has had the mothers systematically taught and provided with free medical treatment for sick babies by a corps of expert physicians. Moreover, all the work of the summer conference for the care of babies, instituted in New York in 1907, has been the outcome of his example and his success in reducing the infantile death rate in the city.

Thus, in twenty years, more than 50,000 babies have come under the care of the Nathan Straus staff of trained workers and two thirds of these have had the benefit of the advice of Dr. Arthur Randolph Green, the medical director of the Straus work.

It has been this vast work, together with the distribution of nearly 27,000,000 bottles and 14,000,000 glasses of pasteurized milk supplemented by the fifty other smaller agencies that have cooperated in baby saving that has given the city the record of the great reduction in the deaths of babies that it has now achieved.

What has been accomplished in the boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx has been duplicated in Brooklyn, where the Children's Aid Society carries on similar work instituted by Mr. Straus. The operation of the Straus philanthropy in Brooklyn has cut the death rate among infants under five years of age by one half, and this same result has occurred in Philadelphia, Saint Louis, Chicago, and the other smaller American cities where the Straus system has been put into effect.—Selected.

If I take care of my character, my reputation will take care of itself.—D. L. Long.

Suggestions Concerning the "Children's Home."

The Executive Committee for the Children's Home desires to call attention to some matters connected with the home.

In some instances children have been sent to the home without a proper understanding in regard to their admission. When a child is entitled to enter the home a certificate of admission will be sent to parent or guardian to be presented upon arrival at the home. Do not send your child until complete arrangements have been made.

You have probably read in the report of the opening of the home, the suggestion that it might be better for those who desired to help the home, to send money. This is not intended to prohibit those who have already prepared articles, from sending them; but rather to urge sending direct the money which otherwise might be expended for materials.

Outgrown clothing can be made use of for the children, and also any good material that can be made over. Could not several in one neighborhood make up a box or barrel of such articles as they can spare and divide between them the expense of sending by freight. Do not send by express. Please see that clothing to be sent is clean, and that it has not been exposed to disease.

Personal letters of thanks have hitherto been sent to all who have made donations to the home. Hereafter acknowledgment will be made through the Mother's Home Column.

Address all communications to Mrs. Lucy L. Resseguie, secretary of Executive Committee for the Children's Home.

October Readings.

NOTES THAT WERE NEVER WRITTEN.

There has been so many of them during my ten years' experience in teaching! Notes to mothers containing a suggestion or two which if acted upon would have made the child's school work so much more profitable or would have added so materially to his development. Why were they not written? Because the true mothers—those who were conscientiously and joyously giving their best effort to the wise training of their children so seldom needed any word that I could say: many times, instead, they gave me inspiration and a saner viewpoint. Whenever any question arose wherein my professional training had given me knowledge which they lacked, I always found them eager for advice. Invariably they were willing and anxious to cooperate with the school in every possible way.

There were others—the conceited, the ignorant, the indifferent, the careless. Early in my career I learned the futility of offering suggestions to these. Each one of them down to the youngest butterfly of all to whom motherhood had come as a regrettable accident, and who was shirking responsibility wherever possible, would have stared at the note with wide, open eyes, and said:

"Now what does she know about children? She has none of her own. To be sure they say she gets along all right at school, but if she had them at home she would find it a very different matter."

I have taught, trained, understood five hundred children. I gave years to the study of the accumulated wisdom of the master psychologists and educators. I have known what it is to lie awake for hours planning, not only how to make my bad boy behave—anyone with brute strength can do that—but how to make him want to be good so that he would continue to do right after he had gone beyond the reach of my personal magnetism and authority. I have taken wayward children whom mothers frankly admitted they could not manage and trained them into law-abiding little citizens. I have discovered physical defects and sent the child to the physician who transformed him from the dullard into a happy, normal child. I have bound cut fingers, soothed pain, and kissed away the tears. I have been a member of homes where there were many children; I have fed them, cared for them all day and many days. But of the physical pain of bearing a child; of the joy of sitting before the firelight and crooning lullabies to my own babe, of the fierce maternal instinct to protect her young which the human mother shares in common with the lion in the jungle, the eagle in the blue, and the clucking hen, I know nothing. So I could not send those notes to those mothers. Had I written them I should have brought to the task all of my knowledge of human nature and my best tact. The bare, ugly facts should have been clothed in the softest robes of words that I could have woven. But now, since I am sure that any mother sufficiently interested in her child's welfare to read this at all is broadminded enough to appreciate truth, I shall indite merely the unadorned statements.

Here are some of the notes that were written:

"I called at your home last night, Mrs. B. Your little daughter was in the limelight every minute. She played the piano and you remarked that it was wonderful that so young a child could memorize so difficult a selection. You asked me if I had noted her rose-leaf complexion, the thickness of her hair and her sylph-like figure. You showed me her new wardrobe and remarked at length upon the way in which each article became her. You had her read and recite for my edification. You exhibited her fancy work. You recited all of the compliments that had ever been paid her. You discussed her points of superiority over all of her playmates. All this with Alice listening, you understand. Naturally she would be a sweet, winsome child, but now she is vain and conceited. The other children dislike her. Mothers do not care to have her in their homes. At the school exercises the other children sang with the sweet unconsciousness of birds. Alice blushed, smirked, fussed with her gown and was painfully self-conscious. Please, if you care for the child's future refrain from discussing her personalities in her presence."

"This, Mrs. C., is the third excuse I have had for Harold's absence during the last month. Each says: 'Ill with a cold.' He reappears with thin stockings covered with snow. He can not make his grade with irregular attendance. Won't you get him some heavy leggings? His clothes are so costly that I know it is not a question of expense. It is one of thoughtlessness—or of vanity."

"Mrs. M., Kenneth is as winsome a little chap as I have had in my grade in many moons. But there were some painful scenes during the first week until he had learned obedience. Yesterday he came to my desk with this gleeful statement. 'I runned away last night and it took mamma an hour to find me. It's fun. I'm doin' again.'

"But what did mamma do?"

"'Nuffin. She said she'd whip me next time but she won't, 'cause she never means it. Next time I fink I'll go down by the mill. She said I might get drowned there but 'course she didn't mean that either.'

"The neighbors say you can't manage Kenneth and that he is a perfect little imp. I saw you both at the parade. You told him to stand in a certain corner but he didn't. He left and came nearly being crushed under the horses' hoofs. You looked so thin and pale and worried that I wanted to take both your hands and say: 'Never make Kenneth a promise nor place a restriction until you have fully considered the wisdom of your words. Then—stick to it at any cost. He is not bad. All that he needs is firmness.'"

"When you visited my school, Mrs. W., you said that you could not understand why Helen did not have as good marks as the Thompson twins. You were sure she was quite as bright. She is. Possibly her intellectual endowments are even higher. But the Thompson twins are in bed at half past seven. Helen's bedtime is fixed by the dictates of her own whims and is anywhere from seven until eleven. She comes to school tired, sleepy, and listless, while they are bright and alert."

"Mary came to see me with tears in her eyes, Mrs. N. You were so busy embroidering that you had no time to look at the booklet which she had prepared with such loving care. Now she takes no interest in her work. Was that centerpiece of more consequence than your child's confidence?"

"You told me that Jean inherits a weak constitution, Mrs. S. You regretted that she was subject to headache and stomach trouble. Then you sighed and said that the ways of Providence were inscrutable and that her little sister was afflicted in the same way. You permit her to eat rich foods, meats, heavy pastries, and to drink strong tea and coffee. Get a reliable diet list and follow it and don't blame Providence."

"I never have had the pleasure of meeting you, Mrs. X. You never come to school or go out of an evening. I have heard that you keep your house in immaculate order. Once when I passed your place, I heard your shrill voice giving irritable commands. Little Grace reflects your mannerisms. She is nervous, high-strung, and disagreeable to the other children. She told me this morning that the baby kept you awake all night. Also that there were two little graves out in God's acre. Won't you take a nap each day and spend some time in the open air even if the sheets do go unironed?"

"You are trying to help Albert at home, Mrs. F., and you worry and blame me because your teaching does not fit in with our system. Would you make up a new gown after the pattern of your mother's wedding dress? Come to me for an hour and let me show you wherein times have changed—educationally. Then your assistance will be of real value."

"You thought I was unjust to May to-day, Mrs. G.; perhaps I was. Teachers are human and liable to err. Some unknown factor may have entered into the case. Instead of criticising the act before the child, won't you come to me frankly and in private and state your case? Would you care to have May's father criticise you in her presence?"

There are many, many such "unwritten notes" in every teacher's mental desk. Often she dare not put them in cold black and white for fear of alienating the already apathetic parent. But, oh, if parents would only realize the need the teacher has of their help and cooperation and friendly sympathy!—Mitta Elliot, in American Motherhood.

Questions for October Reading.

How may an interchange of information aid both mother and teacher? Do you want to be the unwise mother who can not be helped? Does the fact that a woman has never borne children necessarily deter her from understanding them? What is to be desired for the bad boy in addition to making him behave? When a parent admits that he can not manage his own child, what is the effect upon the child? What may be said of the weakness of the parent? With the broadminded, what would experience such as this teacher's count for in solving the problems of child training? What is the effect of adulation of the child in his presence? Is the note on this topic plain enough to help us to recognize any of our own shortcomings? Should either the good points or the defects of the child be discussed in his presence? How should the child's health be protected in dressing him for school? What is the cost to the child when he concludes that his mother does not mean what she says? What is to be said about early bedtime for children? Have you ever seen fancywork take first place and children second? What control should be exercised concerning the diet of a child? What self-control should he be taught concerning it? Is the use of tea and coffee ever permissible in childhood? What should be the mother's ideal? to be a housekeeper or a home-keeper? How can you make your assistance to both child and teacher of most value? What is the effect of criticising a teacher in the presence of the child? What is a better way? Do you appreciate the friendly sympathy that might exist between parents and teachers?

Letter Department

WAYNE, NEBRASKA, August 27, 1911.

Dear Herald: May I confess through your paper a grievous wrong for which I ask forgiveness? I have received much help in the church in making my health better, but I still need help in mind and body, though I am gaining slowly. I am anxious to recover, especially from the injuries which affect the mind.

Your brother,
GEORGE ELSON.

CHETEK, WISCONSIN, August 23, 1911.

Dear Herald: We are not all dead, if we have been asleep. We had a fine time at the Chetek reunion. Since that time Bro. R. D. Davis and I have been preaching in the surrounding county, with good effect. He left me about a week ago, to attend the Madison reunion. He baptized two precious souls into the kingdom before he left, and the writer baptized two more, and again to-day Brother Richardson baptized three. Others are near the kingdom. We are now at Twin Lakes. I am well and happy.

May the Lord bless the efforts made everywhere.

In bonds,
A. L. WHITEAKER.

ELSIE, NEBRASKA, August 22, 1911.

Dear Herald: We have taken the HERALD for several years and could not get along without it. I was baptized March 7, 1909, by Bro. C. W. Prettyman, and have never regretted the step.

This part of the State is not visited very often by missionaries. Bro. C. W. Prettyman and Brother Grimes are the only elders who have been here during two years, Brother Grimes being here only once. Bro. J. E. Kelley was here two years ago. He preached one of the grandest sermons I ever heard. How I would like to hear him preach again.

There seems to be a religious wave passing over the country, and two churches have taken in several members, the Church of Christ (so-called) and the Methodist. I would like to see a debate between one of our elders and the minister of the Church of Christ. Mr. Terry has greatly misrepresented our church, and has stirred up a great deal of prejudice, so I fear our elders will not get a very good hearing. One girl, a member of the Church of Christ, who owns a Book of Mormon, said she had started to read it, but did not finish it for fear she would get to believing it. I told her that was the way with a great many people.

I am expecting to go to Kearney in a week, and to any of the Saints there, if there are any, will say I would be glad to have them call on me. I would like to hear from any of the girls near my own age, which is eighteen.

In gospel bonds,

VANCOUVER, B. C., August 21, 1911.

Dear Herald: I must say we were very lonely at leaving our many friends in that place. It was there my wife and I were baptized years ago, and it has been the best step of my life. I am trying to be a Saint, with all that it means, and it means quite a lot to me. I did think how nice it would be to tell all my friends and relatives, but to my greatest surprise my thoughts were soon put to the winds and they are still where they were.

Well, we left many warm friends in Owen Sound, but we found some of the same kind of friends here and I will never forget the first night we went to meeting. The Saints here had been looking for us for two months, which seemed like two years to us, so when we walked in Brother and Sister McMullen said to us, "And are you Brother and Sister Reed?" We said we were, we had our children of six and seven with us, and we four were made so welcome that there seemed to be as much rejoicing over us as the angels make over one sinner who repents. Let me say right here that that love and same spirit that met us is still with us. There are also Bro. and Sr. George McMullen there, and I can say the same about them, but the rest of the Saints I can't remember, but we did have a good time. We can all get into a small room and have comfort and spiritual blessings also. Don't think because our number is small that the officers and branch are dead to the work. On the contrary, Brother Insley, from London, Ontario, was with us for a while and he with the rest tried to spread the work. We thought it would be well if we had a large hall right in the city; so he said if we got the hall and furnished the speakers, he would pay the rent. God bless him for his help. We got the hall, put out posters, told our neighbors, and sent to Seattle for Brother Johnson, who rendered us a grand sermon on the gospel of Jesus Christ and its principles. We had New Westminster Saints over and had selected many nice pieces of music, and altogether we seemed to do our part. I was usher and tried hard to get people in. Went outside many times, and once got four outsiders to come in, but three of them went away after ten minutes. We enjoyed it very much, but we were a little disappointed. Now we have rented a large hall on the corner of Eighth avenue west and Main.

We have with us Brother White, from Independence. He is a patriarch and he is a brother indeed. He is loved by all, and well he may be, for he is a powerful speaker and a good counselor. He expects to be with us two months yet, and how we will all miss him. God bless him.

We have good times among ourselves. We go over to Westminster and help them and try to make a happy Sunday and they in return come over to Vancouver. Sr. Lillian Pope comes over every Sunday from Westminster and plays for Sunday school and meetings, as we have no one who plays. Our Sunday school pays her fare, and it is well worth it, for it is a big help to us. Brother White goes over with Brother McMullen nearly every Sunday evening, and anyone else who can go from here. Bro. Isaac McMullen is our elder here, and tries hard to keep us together. I hope we will be able to keep on trying and the time come when our number will increase.

I have been trying to get white people to come to hear the story, but no, they don't want it. Now I am trying Hindoos and two fine, noble looking men with fine black whiskers who work with me came and asked me if I was a church man and said to me, "You no tell lie, you no swear, you no get mad, and you no boss us," and they told me this morning when I was leaving the shop, "Billy, we come to-morrow and see you at 3 o'clock sure." My, I hope they get what they come for. May God bless their noble efforts, for I am beginning to think a lot of them, as they are so kind and good-hearted. They carry my boy around and have big times with him.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
W. REED.

SANTA ANA, CALIFORNIA, August 29, 1911.

Dear Brethren: I am here assisting Bro. P. M. Hanson in a debate with a man by the name of Earnest C. Love, a representative of the non-progressive Church of Christ. Brother Hanson affirms for our church and the man Love affirms for his church. Six nights on each proposition. Brother Hanson opened the discussion last night, affirming our claims, and did real well. I feel that good will be accomplished. The truth always shines out. My prayer is that God will bless us in our efforts to defend his truth.

Your brother in Christ,
N. V. SHELDON.

CALDWELL, IDAHO, AUGUST 19, 1911.

Editor Herald: We inclose clippings from Caldwell Tribune, and Blab of August 13 and 14, the former correcting the heading of an article in last week's issue which was forwarded to you. You will notice that we are occupying on the fated (?) Three Banks Corner as well, and with varying interest. A Free Methodist camp meeting on one side and big Methodist Episcopal conference on the other, with the influence of their sixty or more additional preachers, does not increase our hearing in the tent.

I think it should be noted that our seventeen nights debate at Weiser was not as disastrous to our work as the Rev. Dix, our opponent, tried to persuade us his debate at Hood River some years ago had been to our work there. At least it did not result in annihilation in this case, but organization followed. Three were baptized during the debate. A Religio organized July 2 and a branch July 11, Brother Rushton officiating in organizing the latter. Bro. Charles Gentry was called to preside as a priest, and Brn. John Ross and Corliss McConnell ordained to act as teacher and deacon.

Brother Rushton also made friends for our work in two nights' effort on the streets of Weiser, as he did on the streets of Boise during the reunion there. Bro. John Davis had charge of the street work in the latter place and clearly set forth the differences between Josephites and Brighamites.

Idaho's first reunion was not a failure, nor a great success as to attendance, although six missionaries were in attendance, Elder T. C. Kelley among the number. Brother Madden and Brother Layland continued in tent and street work after the reunion, removing from there to Meridian, where the writer succeeded Brother Layland July 28.

August 4 found us at this point, but sickness and other hindrances have prevented the few Saints from attendance, hence our success has been small, though encouraging. We will likely go to Vale soon. And the Weiser Saints are desirous of another effort there before the tent is folded. Other points we desire to reach may have to be left out again as the season is drawing to a close.

Still in the conflict,

S. D. CONDIT.

CANTON, CARDIFF, WALES, August 16, 1911

Editors Herald: The British Isles conference of the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant, has become a matter of history. The attendance was fairly good. Our staff of American missionaries added much to the strength of the conference. Brother Griffiths was faithful to his post as president, and amid the enthusiasm and little excitement that naturally prevailed from time to time in our business sessions, Brother Gomer kept cool. Bishop R. May and wife, of Independence, Missouri, helped to give a familiar appearance to the assembly. Brother May preached Sunday at 11 o'clock a. m., and Brother R. Baldwin, our American missionary, at 6.30 p. m.

Both sermons were well received. The attendance was good. That was once that the bishop didn't talk money, yet he couldn't let the conference pass without telling us his mission to this country; and in good shape, too. Brother Foden trained the Saints' choir and furnished good singing, which helped to give effect to our preaching services. The patriarch, Beatty, was seemingly as lively as ever, and quite hopeful of the ultimate triumph of the work in these islands. Bro. H. Greenwood still lives, as another of the old stock of faithful men who endured the heat and burden of the day. The ranks are thin. Bishop Thomas Taylor, Brethren Caton and Dewsnup, and other noble men have gone to their reward. And the work is committed to the young and middle-aged.

We have quite a number of fine young men and young women of promise. They are welcomed and appreciated. Brethren Leggott and Taylor were ordained high priests, as ordered by our last General Conference in America. Brother Weate and other volunteer helpers showed beyond question that they are scientific caterers. The faithfulness of Brn. Joseph Dewsnup and E. Melony should not pass unnoticed.

There seemed to be hope of greater progress to the work in this country in the near future than has been manifest for years. The spiritual gifts were enjoyed in tongues and interpretation, and the voice of the Spirit was to the effect that if the ministry would work unitedly; or, I should say, it indicated local as well as traveling, for it was to all, that the Lord would bless his people and crown their labors with success in bringing many into the church.

Brother Armstrong, the ever faithful secretary of the mission, was alert to duty, ably assisted by Bro. J. W. Taylor. I think it safe to say that many of those who attended the conference were blessed and went forth with renewed strength for the work.

The financial question is a serious one to some of the missionary force, on account of being months back on family allowance. There need be no exposure or itemizing of conditions, but I will say this, that I think those on foreign missions should stand first in being supplied with their allowances and expenses, and not subjected to the severe hardships that some of our missionaries have been. I mean this more especially to missionaries sent from home to strange countries.

There is great excitement in the industrial and political eras of this country. Strikes are numerous. When the sailors inaugurated their strike the newspapers and companies almost universally spoke of it as a tame affair, and that it would be only a matter of a few days until it would all be over. But about the time that the sailors seemed to be getting weak, a sympathetic strike was declared by the dockers, trimmers, timber carriers, and others, and the ship owners were glad to do what they had persistently refused to do for twenty years; that is, acknowledge the union and be willing to have a board of arbitration. At this writing a national strike of railroad men seems imminent, because the railroad companies have broken their promise that they would negotiate and arbitrate their troubles with the men, made in 1907, when there was going to be a national strike before. So say the men, the great Cambrian strike of 12,000 coal miners for nearly twelve months past, is about to be settled. The coal miners' union contributed $15,000 a week toward their support. The coal operators, on the other hand, contributed $810,000 a month to the coal company to bear their loss. So contention and strife continues, and the end is not yet. I have repeatedly thought of the statement made in the revelation by the latter day prophet, that the time will come when he that would not raise his sword against his neighbor would need to flee to Zion, for in Zion and Jerusalem will be the only places of peace, etc., etc.

The Parliament bill, curtailing the power of the House of Lords to veto the financial bills passed by the lower house, or House of Commons, is the source of much contention and feeling in political circles. Then, too, the home rule for Ireland's people is a living issue, and home rule seems to be almost in sight.

I must close this letter ere it reaches the wastebasket. In conclusion, I would say that prominent Americans are being very courteously treated by the government and civic authorities, and all societies for social and moral improvement in this country. Last year in Scotland, William Jennings Bryan spoke at the great gathering for religious union. He said that when he was a young man he was inclined to infidelity, but he read that in the beginning God created the heavens and the earth, and that he believed it, and continues to do so. Booker T. Washington came over here to investigate conditions among the poor of London and other great cities, and how they were fed. He was treated with a great amount of consideration. Among other things he said the bath and toothbrush were adjuncts of civilization.

More anon,
E. B. MORGAN.

ODELL, TEXAS, August 22, 1911.

The Simmons-Benson debate closed on the night of the 15th instant, after twelve sessions. The writer came to this place from Rock Creek Branch, near Tulsa, Oklahoma, three years ago, and has preached once a month most of the time. I have tried to live my religion both by precept and example; have won the respect of my neighbors and friends.

Bro. B. F. Renfroe came in March, 1909, and preached to an attentive few and created more interest. Bro. W. M. Aylor came the first days of this year and delivered some fine sermons, but the weather was so bad that only a few attended, yet it served to create a larger interest. Brother Renfroe came back and Bro. S. W. Simmons with him. They preached at the Plain View Schoolhouse a week, when Brother Renfroe had to return home, owing to the illness of his wife.

We went to Odell, asked for the Baptist church to preach in, but were refused. Our interest was becoming so great that they became alarmed and began an effort to check it by refusing us the building. We just stepped over into the schoolhouse, which was just as good, only it did not have any organ. We removed the top of ours and took it, and we had singing and preached eight nights, with Brother Simmons as the speaker.

The Baptists, not satisfied, had one W. C. Benson to challenge us for a debate. We declined, saying we could not see the need of one. Brother Simmons went home, and in about a week Benson had dozens of dodgers printed and circulated that he would begin an exposure of the Latter Day Saint doctrine August 5. There was no time to lose. I boarded the train and went for Brother Simmons.

He landed in Odell on the 4.30 train, Brother Renfroe accompanying him. We went out to hear his lectures, reaching the place first. Brother Simmons was seated on the rostrum and by and by came the lecturer. I introduced him to Brother Simmons. He exclaimed, "I am very glad to see you, Brother Simmons; I am not glad to see you." (Laughter.)

"Are you ready to sign up propositions?"

"What propositions," questioned Simmons.

"For the debate," explained Benson.

"I did not come to debate, but to hear your exposure."

"You are a coward; I dare you to debate."

"I have seen Baptist preachers before; go on with your lectures."

"All right, all right, sir; I will fix you."

"And I will be at the fixing," replied Simmons.

Benson began. He talked about thirty minutes, occasionally pointing down towards Brother Simmons, saying "He is a coward"; "You are afraid to meet the issue," etc.

Brother Simmons could not sit still longer. He jumped up and exclaimed, "Where are those propositions? We will have a debate if bacon and beans hold out." (Applause.)

Benson claimed a continuation from John the Baptist. Brother Simmons read from Doctor Benedict that its origin began in March, 1639, and from Hayens, that Roger Williams was honored as the Baptist apostle in America. Thus his church began by one Roger Williams, over in Providence, Rhode Island, instead of in Palestine by John the Baptist. Benson claimed that Baptists were better than angels; Brother Simmons read from the Bible that man was created a little lower than angels. Benson also claimed that he was sure for heaven; Brother Simmons showed from the Bible that he that thinks he stand should take heed lest he fall; and that Solomon fell, for his wives turned his heart from the Lord.

Benson ran over to Brother Simmons and, shaking his fist at him said, "I defy you to show from the Bible that Solomon went to hell. Give us the chapter and verse." Brother Simmons showed that, according to Benson, if Solomon did not stand condemned for his polygamous life, then he went to heaven, and polygamy was sanctioned by the Lord, and Brigham Young and his harem is justifiable.

Brother Simmons sure rubbed him hard, and the people could see he made his point. Brother Simmons claimed the gospel and all its gifts and blessings are for us now, on conditions of obedience. Benson said that gifts did not exist this side of the apostolic order, and read Isaiah 8:16 which reads, "Bind up the testimony, seal the law among my disciples." Brother Simmons asked him if the law and testimony were to stop with the apostles. Why were the Baptists preaching repentance and faith down here in the nineteenth century? So his text proved too much for him, hence not anything.

Brother Simmons, in making an illustration, said Benson reminded him of the old coon dogs in Arkansas; after they had run the track until they became tired, then they would take back track. (Applause.)

Benson said, "Yes, I am the long-eared hound, and I have treed the coon up a persimmon tree." (Applause.)

To this Brother Simmons answered, "Yes, for argument's sake, the coon is in safety in the tree. The ordinary dog runs around the tree barking and wagging his tail, but" [pointing to Benson] "this dog has no tail to wag." (Applause.)

We began the debate with friends and closed with many more. As result of the debate, Brother Simmons baptized nine the next day, and confirmed them at 8.30 p. m., and the writer preached. After service, two more asked for baptism. Brother Simmons baptized them next day, and left at 4.30 p. m. for home, rejoicing.

I announced that I would preach in Odell every fourth Sunday. This will make two Sundays for me now in each month. Pray for me that I may fill them in honor to our country and the God we love and serve.

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON.

Dear Herald Readers: The reunion of the Seattle and British Columbia District was small in point of numbers, but not in point of interest. There were only three tents occupied on the grounds, but a number of the Saints found lodging with parties living adjacent to the grounds. This is not commendable in every instance where the Saints meet for social and spiritual results.

The writer perhaps was in a measure to blame for this. It was necessary to economize in the expenditures, and in making arrangements for the tents we ordered them too small, 8 by 10. But when we stop to think that there was only thirty-five cents in the treasury a short time before the meetings started, you see we had to go slow, but we must say that the Saints responded well to the call for help.

Four baptisms were witnessed; while not altogether the fruit of the meetings, the Spirit in the various meetings, preaching and prayer, augmented the desire to live in harmony with God. Sr. Bogue, of Little Falls, Washington, Sr. Agnes Fisher, Myra Kerstetter, and Bro. James Howard, of Centralia, Washington, were the ones baptized.

There was present of the ministry, Brethren Sheehy, Thorburn, Keeler, Plum, Chapman, Cox, Premo, and the writer.

I want to say to those that were not there, make arrangements to be at the reunion next year. Oh, if you could sit in that tent and listen to some of those soul-stirring testimonies, and praise to God that they were able to say that they knew that this was the work of God! The great feature of this work is that it brings out the personality of a person as nothing else can.

The preaching was done principally by Brethren Sheehy, Thorburn, Keeler, and Plum. And to say the least, there was food for thought, and this was especially true of the veterans. Brother Sheehy's efforts were replete with comprehension of God, speaking from a finite point of view. At the parting hour came the expression, I am sorry it is over; would to God that we could always feel that bond of kindred ties.

We want to say in behalf of the Centralia Saints, and the Chehalis Saints, that they demonstrated that they were of the brethren; that spirit of hospitality and kindness has to be partaken of to be appreciated. We can not single out any;

they were of that oneness that is characteristic of the people of God. The reunion did not end the social feature.

We were permitted to visit with the Saints in their homes, and chaperoned by Brother Cox, a party went on a day's pleasure and business combined. Following this, Ringling Brother's show came to Centralia, and the young people of the church made ready a lunch and invited the Brethren Turnour and Clark, who are touring with the show. They surely enjoyed the break in their monotonous life, and we will say here that the expression from the Saints was, they are Saints. Again let me urge the getting ready for 1912.

WM. JOHNSON.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

Editors Herald: Brother Johnson, whose obituary I sent to you, was in the employ of a dairy during vacation, distributing milk, and an electric wire had broken and was hanging down so that, coming from a house where he had delivered some milk, he came in contact with this wire; he pushed it with his foot, and for some reason took hold of it with his left hand. It appeared that he was instantly killed. It was a very sad experience to us all, but more especially to the family and relatives.

The reunion at Colo is in progress. While there is not a large attendance, yet excellent meetings are being enjoyed. The ministry present have all been greatly blessed in presenting the word. The weather has been ideal, and the conveniences of the camp are excellent.

Your brother,
J. F. MINTUN.

News From Branches.

Independence Branch News.

At the August meeting of the Womans' Auxiliary, over one hundred were present. The leaflet, "The schoolboy and the cigarette," was read. Bro. W. O. Hands gave a talk on the effects of cigarette smoking on the boy, stating that it seriously affects the heart and lungs, and also creates nervousness, by which many a boy loses his position in a business capacity. Bro. James L. Gray discussed the subject from the viewpoint of the baneful effects of the habit spoken of, in the loss of respect and confidence of employers of those addicted to it. The last of the speakers, kindly responding to the call of the auxiliary, was Bro. J. A. Gardner, who, besides speaking of its evil effects on the mentality, also gave a clear idea of the strictness of discipline in regard to the use of narcotics in the military academies, West Point, Annapolis, and others. He cited many instances of the small percentage of these users who graduate at the head of their classes, being unfitted for study because their mental and moral perceptions were dulled and frequently obliterated. These efforts of the brethren were much appreciated and were followed by other interesting numbers of the program, among them a fine vocal solo by Sr. Corinna Haines. The sisters at our meeting, on September 17 will be glad to hear about the Children's Home, which was opened at Lamoni, Iowa, August 15.

The Sunday school, Religio, and the departments connected with each, also the Ladies' Aid, Laurel Club, and minor auxiliaries have all been constant and faithful in their several functions during the late heated term, and their standard of attendance and interest has been fairly well kept up. Efforts for a more perfect attendance are being put forth on every hand.

The Sunday school orchestral music is being made particularly interesting. The Religians are forging ahead, in securing for their weekly programs excellent papers by workers, on subjects timely and practical, and the home departments and the little "bands" have spared no pains in keeping up an excellent interest in their particular kinds of service for the Master, by meeting together oft in their pleasant social functions and hours of study.

The comers and goers, too, are an interesting class among us here, and we note among the former, the welcome home folks, Brn. G. H. Hilliard, T. W. Chatburn, William Aylor, J. Page, J. W. Dubois, Pres. F. M. Smith, and Sisters J. A. Robinson, Belle James, F. Hilliard, J. Luff, M. Harrington, et al. Among the visitors, Bro. J. J. Davidson, nephew of Bro. George Horton, came here the 25th from Long Pine, Nebraska, where a home is always open to the elders who may pass that way. Bro. Levi Gamet held forth in his house last May, and there are several Saints in and near that locality.

The preaching, prayer, and business meetings of late have been well attended, there being apparent an increased spiritual interest, especially at the mid-week services. Bro. R. Bullard has given the Saints two excellent discourses, also Bro. W. H. Garrett has occupied every Sunday evening recently. And on the morning of the 27th, Bro. John Kaler, taking for the basis of his remarks, "Why do we call ourselves Latter Day Saints?" and reading from Acts 2, preached an earnest, forceful sermon. He exhorted his hearers to heed well the lessons presented in these momentous times, when desolation and destruction are rife, and while the prophecies of all times past, both ancient and modern, are being fulfilled, and to listen to and keep faithfully the commandments of God.

News From Missions

Alabama.

Had an excellent reunion at McKenzie, Alabama, from August 4 to 13. Saints were blessed, strengthened, and encouraged to press on in the good work, and make an effort to win the prize at the end of the race. Thirteen were baptized at the close. McKenzie has been a battleground where we have held four debates with the Baptists and nonprogressive Campbellites,—two with the latter and two with the former. While far from home and loved ones, with late news that a dear sister in the flesh has just passed over the river of death, I do not slacken in diligence or courage, but as loved ones who we feel are prepared here to enter into the place of rest pass over to the other side, it only makes us more anxious to do our full duty in all things. We care less to remain here, while our desire to depart and be with Christ and the angels grows stronger. But, to abide here in the flesh and labor with the many kind friends in the interest of this glorious work is a grand and happy privilege indeed, and it fills the heart with a genuine joy and pleasure.

Dear Saints, in this mission, with such a bright and abiding assurance that we can prepare ourselves to enter into the home of the Saints, I do not see how any can sit down with folded hands and do nothing in this great work, for it is the grandest work that ever reached the heart of man. Do not let anything separate you from the love of God, but seek with all your heart, and with all your soul and with all your mind to be perfectly pure and holy, honest, truthful, clean, virtuous, industrious, and upright in all things, and seek the Lord continually in humble prayer, that you may have his Spirit to give you power to overcome the flesh and the Devil, with all their wicked and seductive allurements.

All pay your tithing just as soon as you can, whether you be rich or poor in the things of this world. Be not harsh or severe in criticism, and do all in your power to encourage the local ministry, as well as the traveling ministry and each other, and always remember that a kind and encouraging word spoken to a weak brother or sister will be appreciated, and will be a great help in giving strength to pass through the trials of life.

Remember the oft repeated injunction that, "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them," and all are to assist or labor together for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all. This work is entrusted to the lay member as well as to the ministry and we should further remember to let the following instruction always be our motto, "And no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care" (Doctrine and Covenants 11:4). As long as the above graces are shining out in our lives, we can not fail, because God will not let his humble, faithful children go down in defeat.

Let us, then, as Saints of God, arise in the strength of the Lord, and be faithful and diligent in every good word and work, that we may prepare ourselves by pure and holy living, to enjoy greater blessings than we have ever received before.

I pray God to bless his Saints and to continue to inspire, bless and encourage the ministry everywhere.

Conference Minutes.

SOUTHWESTERN TEXAS.—The conference and reunion of the Southwestern Texas District, held at the Jett Crossing on the Medina from the 4th to the 14th of this month, has been added to that aggregate which constitutes our history. The only business other than routine work was the ordination of Bro. G. R. Kuykendall to the office of elder. The reports read before the conference consisted of reports from two branches, viz, the First and Second San Antonio branches; five elders, viz, W. C. Carl, district president; D. S. Palmer, district vice-president; J. Harp, T. J. Jett, and J. W. Morgan; five priests, viz, Walter Buck, J. R. Wheeler, A. R. Wheeler, Glauk Kuykendall and C. F. Wheeler. The First San Antonio Branch was chosen as the place for holding the next conference, the time being left to the choice of those in authority. The conference cast a unanimous vote in favor of holding another reunion next summer, and chose a committee to recommend suitable places to the next district conference. The reunion was blessed by many bright testimonies and soul inspiring sermons which can but result in a great spiritual uplift. Among the many valuable contributions to the success of the reunion was a sermon by Bro. R. M. Maloney on the great world parable of Matthew 20; a sermon by Bro. W. C. Carl on the church of Christ; a sermon by Bro. D. S. Palmer on the final destiny of man; a sermon by Bro. T. J. Jett on the unchangeability of the gospel; a sermon by Brother Morgan on the "way that seemeth right unto a man"; a sermon by Brother Addison, culminating in Christ the Schoolmaster; a short talk by A. R. Wheeler on why I became a Latter Day Saint, and a sermon by Bro. Glauk Kuykendall on baptism essential to salvation. At the close of the reunion the following resolution was adopted without a dissenting vote: Resolved, that the weather having been beautiful during the conference and reunion, the community having given us a reasonably good hearing and perfect respect and attention, and the Lord having recognized our efforts by an outpouring of his Spirit—and even the spirit of prophecy; therefore we, the members of the Southwestern Texas District of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with hearts full of thankfulness to him who doeth all things well, do hereby declare this conference and reunion a glorious success. Carl Wheeler, district secretary.

SHEFFIELD.—The nineteenth semiannual conference of the Sheffield District was held at Clay Cross, July 8 and 9, 1911. Business meeting commenced on the 8th at 8 p. m., Elder C. Cousins in the chair. Bro. W. S. Holmes was appointed deacon and Bro. S. Holmes chorister. Reports of the district officers were read and it was moved and seconded to defer the report of the president of the district until he was present; all the other reports were approved. Those reporting were: Elders J. Naylor, C. Cousins, J. Austin, E. Wragg, R. Railings, J. Holmes, S. Holmes, and T. Taylor; missionary priests reporting were G. H. Holmes and S. Holmes, jr. Secretary's report was read and approved. Notice of a rule which had been given at the previous conference was then taken up; but as it affected rule 4, and as rule 4 was not referred to in the notice, it was deferred till January conference, 1912. Notice of motion to add rule 12 was given. It is as follows: That rule 12 be amended to read, "That no brother addicted to the use of strong drink or tobacco be ordained or sustained in any office of the priesthood in the district." It was moved and seconded that the action regarding the Rev. Harold Gibson, by the district president, be approved. It was also moved and seconded that the campaign against Harold Gibson be continued. Moved and seconded that the holding of next conference be left in the hands of the presidency. Moved and seconded that all the general and local authorities of the church be sustained. Moved and seconded that when this conference adjourn, it do so to meet January, 1912. Closed with prayer by Elder Thomas Taylor. Five minute speeches were then in order, and all the ministry present took part, making thirteen preachers for the morning session. Fellowship meeting at 3 p. m. was in charge of S. Holmes, sr., and J. Naylor. At 6 p. m. preaching service in charge of Elder John Holmes. Elder Thomas Taylor was the speaker. J. Holmes, secretary, Slater street, Clay Cross, Derbyshire.

Reunion Minutes.

The Spring River district reunion met at the beautiful Lincoln Park, at Pittsburg, Kansas, August 11, 1911, with Charles Kyser, president of Pittsburg Branch, in the chair. A motion prevailed that J. F. Curtis, J. Arthur Davis, and T. W. Chatburn be the presidency of the reunion, with George Edwards secretary, M. F. Coopman chief usher and deacon, J. A. Gunsolley chorister, Sr. Ray Goff organist, and Brethren Hemplec, T. W. Chatburn, George Edwards, and J. Arthur Davis as press committee. Motion prevailed that Bro. James Cochran act as police, with permission to choose his assistant. Finance committee was chosen as follows: M. F. Coopman, T. W. Chatburn, George Edwards, and Ellis Short. Moved that all speakers, time and place, be arranged by the presidency of the reunion. The order of meetings for each day was as follows: prayer service, 9 a. m.; preaching, 11 a. m.; auxiliary work, 2.30 p. m.; preaching at 7.30 p. m. on the street, at Fourth and Broadway; and at 8 p. m. in the electric lighted auditorium in Lincoln Park, all decorated with flag banners, the American eagle in bronze, and Old Glory in all her splendor. Our meetings were of the very best. The Spirit of God was present in the preaching of the word, in songs, prayers, and testimonies. Prayers 124, testimonies 188, songs 135, were the sum total of our deliberations on the camp grounds. The Spirit of our heavenly Father was present in the following gifts: tongues, interpretation of tongues, prophecies, the singing in English by the Spirit. There was not a dry eye to be found, both in members and nonmembers. The following members were mouthpieces for the Spirit of God: T. W. Chatburn, George Edwards, Sister Depue, Hazel Sheets, J. M. Robinson. On Friday and Saturday, at 2.30 p. m., a debate was held between Reverend Tredway, of Alabama, and J. F. Curtis, on the subject, "Resolved, That water baptism is not essential to salvation." Tredway affirmed and Curtis denied. Also they debated, "Resolved, That by grace are you saved through faith." The debates resulted in a sweeping victory for the Stone Kingdom, which is to roll until it fills all the earth. Nine precious souls were added to the church. The Spirit of God was present at these services. Seven children were blessed, and our colored brother, John R. Carson, was ordained to the office of priest by J. F. Curtis and T. W. Chatburn. The following brethren were the speakers in the large auditorium and on the street: J. F. Curtis, J. Arthur Davis, T. W. Chatburn, Evan Davis, Henry Sparling, George Edwards, J. M. Robinson, J. A. Gunsolley, Hale W. Smith, Ellis Short, J. T. Riley, James M. Smith, Sidney Gray, F. M. Conner. The grounds, buildings for preaching and other services, electric lights, city water, and the pool of the Y. M. C. A. building, were all donated for our use. Automobiles were also furnished to take the speakers and singers to Fourth and Broadway, and back to the grounds. We want to say a word or two about the food kitchen and dining room, where excellent service was rendered by the good sisters of the Pittsburg Branch. Others assisted when called upon. We adjourned to meet again subject to the district conference to be held at Joplin some time in October, 1911. The gospel tent was shipped to Albia, Missouri, in charge of Henry Sparling and George Edwards. All of the Saints left the reunion grounds with the grand thought in view of coming up higher, where they could call down the blessings of our heavenly Father. George Edwards, secretary.

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—The reunion was organized at the camp ground east of the historic town of Plano, August 19, 1911, at 10 a. m. Brn. Charles Burr and L. O. Wildermuth, presidency of the district, were selected to preside over the reunion, and Bro. J. A. Tanner was associated with them, having full power to select speakers and arrange the time for and character of services. Bro. Marion Wright was selected organist, and Br. J. A. Tanner chorister, with Brn. J. A. Dare and Fred Bone policemen. The best of order prevailed. The preaching was done by Elders J. A. Tanner, Charles Burr, W. A. McDowell, Chris Hartshorn, James Keir, J. J. Bailey, Jott Bronson, J. B. Wildermuth, and A. H. Parsons, assisted by Brn. E. M. Wildermuth, L. O. Wildermuth, Joseph Blakeslee, and W. H. Pomeroy. Thirteen sermons and seven prayer services obtained. The good Spirit prevailed from start to concluding of these services. Eight institutes were held with increasing interest. Thirteen were baptized and confirmed during the series. The finance committee made an excellent report, and good meals were served at the dining tent on the ground, for the small consideration of fifteen cents a meal. Brn. E. M. Wildermuth and A. H. Parsons were press committee, and the Plano newspaper gave the reunion quite a nice write up. The same committee was selected for next year, with power to select time and place, with the consideration that if agreeable to Southeastern Michigan District, the reunion should be a joint one for 1912. Bro. J. J. Bailey gave some fifty blessings, which kept himself and Sister Green busy. A. H. Parsons was in charge of the institute work, assisted by J. A. Tanner. This was said to be the best reunion ever held in the district; it was excellent in every respect, we witness. A. H. Parsons, secretary.

Died.

JOHNSON.—Ralph M. Johnson, oldest son of Charles R. and Emma Johnson, was accidentally killed in Des Moines, Iowa, August 22, 1911, at the age of 17 years, 7 months, and 16 days. Besides the father and mother, a brother and sister remain of the immediate family. He was baptized when a child and was faithful to his covenant with God. He was a devoted son, of genial disposition, and will be greatly missed in the home, in the neighborhood, and in the church. Funeral service at the home of his parents August 24, 1911, the sermon being listened to by a very large assembly, as delivered by his Sunday school teacher, J. F. Mintun. Remains laid to rest in Laurel Hill cemetery.

Those who are constantly lamenting their ill luck are often, in some way or other, reaping the consequences of their own neglect, mismanagement, improvidence, or want of application.—Marshall Field.

The full fledged "knocker" is not half so hated as the perpetual "grouch." The "knocker" is a misfortune. The "grouch" is a pest.

Man and woman, good and bad—such are the four prime elements of all tragedy, and they are capable of almost infinite adjustment. The good man under the influence of the bad woman—and there is the strife of the flesh and the soul. The bad man swayed by the bad woman—that's the depth of degradation. The good man attracted and subjected by the good woman—here is all chivalry and romance. But of all combinations, that of the bad man and good woman is the least capable of analysis with certainty. She appeals to both sides of his nature, the angelic and the diabolic; and the result in each case depends upon the proportions of these.—Anthony Tudor, in The Case of Paul Breen.

Everyone has a history, a past. He has a series of connected experiences, all belonging to, or making up, the self. It is from wisdom gained by remembering and interpreting the past that one guides his future. But directing the future by the past varies vastly among human beings, not only in the intelligence, but in regard to the sincerity with which the experiences are dealt with. So complex and full of possibilities is the study of one's past that it can safely be said that no one has ever succeeded in completely understanding his own experiences, or in profiting by them as he might.—G. E. Partridge, in The Nervous Life.

If it were—if it might be—if it had been. One portion of mankind goes through life always regretting, always whining, always imagining. As it is—this is the way in which the other class of people look at the conditions in which they find themselves. I venture to say that if one should count the ifs and the ases in the conversation of his acquaintances, he would find the more able and important persons among them—statesmen, generals, men of business—among the ases, and the majority of conspicuous failures among the ifs.—O. W. Holmes.

One is not missed in a big town. His going and his coming are not watched. There is no time to bother with another's affairs. Everyone has enough to do to look after his own. The curiosity about one's neighbors—what he wears, what he eats, what he does, every item in his daily life—that is developed by idleness, thrives in littleness, and grows to perfection in scandle and innuendo—belongs solely to the small town.—John Reed Scott, in In His Own Right.

"I know I'm wrong. That's why I need you. When we're right, we don't need to ask for friends. Friendship means to be loyal, right or wrong, but particularly when you're wrong."—Mrs. Freemont Older, in Esther Damon.

PURPOSE AND PREPARATION.

(An address delivered by I. A. Smith at Graceland College, September 11, 1911, at the opening of the fall term.)

I have read of the courage of one man that has caused me to be envious. It was portrayed in the history in poem of a lawyer who on account of certain irregularities in his code of morals in his earth life found himself within the confines of that—

"place Eternal justice has prepared for those rebellious,"—

and in trouble to his ears and in brimstone to his knees this poor pettifogger warmed to the task of showing cause why he should not be burned—and he did so. He actually talked the Devil out of burning him.

Of course the situation in which I find myself is not parallel. On the contrary it is a contrast pleasing to contemplate. But I have no doubt that such superb courage, though born of desperation in addressing "that infernal court," would steady one's knees and calm one's voice equally well when facing angelic college girls and gentle college boys in this familiar chapel.

I take my text this morning from Isaiah: "Set thine house in order"; and then I would add these two words: "and work."

Just as a mechanic can not do good work with poor tools; so can a person not do good work if he is not a good machine or has a mind not tempered to the task before him. It has been said that "a spur in the head is worth two in the heel," and one never realizes this more than when he meets the many hard headed business men who are making their way in the world.

"Set thine house in order." I know of no better way to get one's house in order for the daytime and evening of life than to get the very best possible mental equipment, and it is in this sense that I use the text.

I would say that first and foremost it is essential that the boy or the girl reach some kind of a definite working basis; that is, that he have an ambition to do something, to reach a certain height, to follow a special profession or vocation. It seems to me that boys of our towns and country do not fall into a burning desire to be a doctor or a lawyer or a preacher or machinist as early in life and with as little effort as do the boys in the city, and I have thought it was due to the fact that they do not have before them and do not come in contact with as many professional men and men of various occupations as the city boys do.

Judging from my observation the average boy is slow in developing a plan of action for himself, and it seems that the boyish boys are the slower. We graduate or have been graduating our boys from the high school at early ages. The tendency has been to turn them over to the college or the world at an almost tender age, and many used to finish their college work when hardly out of their teens, but the pendulum has been swinging back, our high school work has increased, and more students are taking general work before taking their professional courses; in my estimation a commendable movement.

Therefore I believe that one of the best things that can happen to any boy is to fall in love with a certain calling and be true to that love. Already in my short experience I have known of considerable vacillation among our boys. They do not know what to take in college—have no special leaning, and are "up in the air," so to speak, which may be profitable for birdmen but certainly not for students. And my advice to every boy is that if they have not a purpose, to get one. If they can not get one at first hand, get one at second hand. There are millions of them in the pawn shops of the world where they have been pawned for pleasure by the millions of failures.

One can not leave so important a matter as choosing his life work to the accident of chance. The flotsam of life reveal the awful fact that untold thousands of untrained men have tried that experiment. I do not believe that a man with a purpose goes astray. Of course if he loses direction his purpose is gone. He is a man without a purpose.

Students from Lamoni have changed their courses in college when half way through—all due to a lack of ambition definite and steady on the start. However, I was pleased to have one of our boys tell me he was going to change, though strongly urged otherwise by others, for the reason, as he said, he knew he would not like the work he had in mind and he would just love the other. I thought he was right and I told him so, for it is fundamental that one should love his work, and it is likewise fundamental that one should always pursue happiness if the proposition is otherwise balanced.

But I discovered that it is difficult to advise in these matters. He is a rare friend indeed who knows how to direct one who is seeking a purpose.

There are, of course, those who seem to be born into a purpose; that is, who know just what they want to do in college; and it is easy to be seen that such a person will likely come nearer doing something because he is aiming at it.

It is possible also that one may fall—may fail in his purpose, and still find greater reward and success. I am reminded of one of Mark Twain's famous after dinner speeches in which he dealt with boyhood dreams, and he started with the proposition that the measure of the magnitude of a dream failure is the measure of the disappointment the failure cost the dreamer, or in other words, the thing lost has nothing to do with the matter. Working from this basis he recalled a meeting many, many years before when a number of the leading men of letters and affairs were together and they had told each other their early ambitions, their boyhood dreams. There were William Dean Howells, John Hay, Frank Stockton, and others. One after another Twain took them up and told of each one's early desire—one wanted to be a cowboy, another a horse doctor, etc.

Now, of course the humor lay in the treatment which these day dreams received. For instance Twain took up the boyhood idea of John Hay to be a steamboat mate. He said:

In the pride of his young ambition he had aspired to be a steamboat mate; and in fancy saw himself dominating a fore-castle some day on the Mississippi and dictating terms to roustabouts in high and wounding tones. I note with sorrow the stages of that dreamer's destruction. He climbed high toward his ideal; when success seemed almost sure, his foot upon the gangplank, his eye upon the captain, misfortune came and his fall began.

Down—down—and ever down: Private secretary to President Lincoln, colonel in the field, charge of affairs in Paris, charge of affairs in Vienna, poet, editor of the New York Tribune, biographer of Lincoln, ambassador to England, and now at last there he lies—nothing but the Secretary of State, head of foreign affairs. And he has fallen like Lucifer, never to rise again. And his dream—where now is his dream? Gone down in the blood and tears of the dreams of the others.

Now I trust this peculiar humorous concept of Mark Twain's has not been altogether lost upon us. It was produced of course to make a laugh, but there is a golden thread of truth in it after all, and that is that while we may not have in mind just the place where we will find ourselves finally, let us make it something better than it seems likely to be. I have heard that some of our presidents started^d out with the intention of becoming chief magistrate, but I want to say that I believe the idea with them was a sort of afterthought, but at any rate they were prepared for the opportunity when it came to them and that brings us back to the subject of preparation.

Oh, I wish I were an exhorter—a regular, good, old camp meeting exhorter, and he locked in a room with every boy who is just crazy to get away from school and into the world. I would preach to him the gospel of mental and moral equipment. Now, I suppose it is but the outcropping of human nature—this burning desire of boys to get away—to get a start in life, as they view it. After generations of individualists and pioneers among their ancestors I can see where it is more natural for our boys here in America to be more restless than those in some of the older countries where boys are born in houses where their great-great-grandfathers died. I concede that it is difficult for some of them at a certain age to exhibit symptoms of good sense, because they have none, and I say this fearlessly, because as I think now, I was pretty much of a chump myself. That opinion perhaps has enjoyed continuous existence in the minds of my friends.

Yes, some years ago I was a student at Graceland. I am sorry to say I did not remain such long enough to complete my course. I wish I could impress it upon the minds of any who may be wavering that your golden opportunity for preparation is now, while you are young. You know the Bible saying that the "night cometh when no man can work," and there is likely to be a day coming when you will have to work for others. And what I or another may have acquired of value in the affairs of men is within easy reach of all, and will be more easily gotten when you have given yourself a more complete education—simply from the fact that your view will be broader.

Spencer begins his work on Education by devoting a chapter to the question, What is of most worth? And he answers this by saying:

How to live?—that is the essential question for us. Not how to live in the mere material sense only, but in the widest sense. . . . To prepare us for complete living is the function which education has to discharge; and the only rational mode of judging an educational course is, to judge in what degree it discharges such function.

I believe that you will agree with me that to seek after pure culture to the exclusion of the useful or vocational would make one what is commonly termed an educated fool, unable correctly to construe life or cope with the ordinary affairs of the world. We have seen such persons. And on the other hand, the life of one lacking culture is wanting in color. It is apt to be sordid. Too many bolt both their pie and their poetry and appreciate neither.

And the best purpose, as I view it, of a college training is to get culture while fitting oneself for a vocation. Too many of our boys and girls seem to think it is to be a vacation.

It is easy for the practical person to persevere in any study which he can apply to the affairs of life, and because of this engineering students are said to be better scholars than students of literature. As an illustration of this, I recently talked with a university student about one of his courses in higher mathematics. I discovered that he had maintained a deep interest in that study, difficult as it was, because it had to do with things which will qualify him for a certain work at a good salary. One would hardly have equal inducement in translating Horace.

Thirty years ago Spencer deplored the fact that the ornamental was overriding the useful in our schools, but to-day David Starr Jordan deplores the present tendency of some universities away from vocational studies in the interest of pure culture. And in this connection I wish to quote a statement from Mr. Bryce, England's ambassador to the United States. He recently said:

Notwithstanding all that has been said against the American universities, there is to my mind, no institution in the world to-day which is so nearly fulfilling its full object as the university in America.

And while it has always been true that large numbers of American students have attended foreign universities, at present the number of foreign students in American institutions of learning is steadily increasing, because of the popular trend toward practical utility.

Our American colleges and universities are not so largely filled with those from the leisure classes as the European schools. Therefore the national tendency toward the vocational in this country is a natural one, and so we have such eminent authority (as I have quoted) for believing that American universities are fulfilling their mission.

Now, the sole aim toward culture on the one hand and the desire for the purely practical on the other are of course extremes. They are, perhaps, best represented by Amherst College, which just now is concentrating her attention on what they call "the Greek minded man," and Case School at Cleveland, where the work is confined to engineering, or the Boston School of Technology. The Amherst plan finds favor with some, and is roundly condemned by others. One Latin professor hails it with delight as a means of restoring, as he says, the "backbone and frame to the jelly of our collegiate education." But neither extreme is represented by the western college president who said all he wanted was fine buildings and a good football team.

It may be presumptuous on my part to attempt to deal with a question which demands so much attention from college presidents, but this may be my only chance, for I do not expect to be president—that is, a college president. But the president of Stanford University says the mere choosing of one's work is in itself an education, and it takes years for some to do it. A boy told me the other day that he had spent one evening in picking out his work in college, and I think he did pretty well, to say the least. He evidently didn't stop to celebrate any birthdays.

But at least, as I view it, one may feel relieved when he has arrived at some conclusion as to his future work. He has reached a vantage ground. By going straight forward he can but reach the desired result. He has his plans and can work from them.

I recently saw a short poem about a father's advice to his son in regard to picking huckleberries. He said, Stick to your bush until it is finished, and Johnny followed that advice, and the poem ends this way:

And Johnny recollected this when he became a man,
And first of all he laid him out a well-directed plan;
So, while the brilliant triflers failed with all their brains and push,
Wise, steady-going Johnny won by sticking to his bush.

A "well-directed plan"—that is it. It is the best thing I know. It is half the battle.

This work of preparation in college only builds up when it is prompted by a purpose, but the purpose must come from the student himself. If one thought his work could not be turned to advantage he would likely lose interest in it. We Americans are materialists, and as already stated, we are always interested in a study when we can apply it to actual life. The study of law, for instance, is interesting for the reason that it deals with people of all kinds in all sorts of circumstances.

And it is evident also that the best students are those who work for the love of it. Likewise the best men are those who love their work.

However, I will not dwell longer on the subject of a curriculum, because a course of study does not furnish the purpose—it is a result of the purpose. The purpose must assist in determining the curriculum.

But now that we have the boy at the point where he knows what career he wants to follow, and consequently he knows just what he wants to take in his college work, after going thus far, we come to another problem, and that is the choice of schools. Here is a question of many sides. Too many think something like this: Now a B. A. from Iowa would look pretty good, but Iowa is not in the same class with Chicago or Michigan in athletics; or that Graceland is all right, but Lamoni is a dreadfully small town. But of course a boy with a purpose will not let such ideas run away with him.

Naturally we Americans are partial to big things. We get used to thinking in large figures. We know our multiplication tables better than the others. And thus it is that we look longingly toward the universities, the larger institutions. And while we concede certain advantages in the larger schools the smaller college is not without its advantages. It seems to be a much discussed question as to what is the most serious drawback to our universities. And it is answered by the university men themselves that in their constant effort at extension and the crush of large numbers, they have lost hold of the individual student. The professors of a university are men who have made their own way. They have valuable experiences to draw upon in their work, but because of the number alone it is apparent that they can not give the individual student the personal oversight and advice he needs,—and is that not a serious drawback? And herein lies perhaps the principal advantage a smaller institution has over the university.

I am of the opinion that the great mass of students in the so-called higher schools of education are doing their best work in the small and medium sized colleges. At least I believe the great common people are getting their college training at these smaller schools, and I have found some of the most inspiring examples of enthusiasm and spirit for work for work's sake right here in Graceland College. Here the environment is good, there is a splendid feeling running through your work here, and I am satisfied, taking numbers into consideration, Graceland is turning out her quota of worthy men and women. You are specially privileged in being free from those brainless rah rah boys and idlers, and have no room here for the drunken collegian. I can not conceive of one being here for athletics only. Real work is not subordinated to athletics by any.

And it has been my observation also that when boys and girls have gone out from these walls they have shown greater determination, have been better students where they have gone than those who have gone directly from high school to larger institutions.

The idea of study and reflection to me does not include high buildings close to busy streets. On the contrary it takes me closer to nature, quiet fields, shady spots, where one can have the pure air and the sunshine. And in these who is more blessed than you? Who could be closer to nature when as I observe you are almost if not entirely surrounded by waving fields of royal, college bred corn—King of Iowa and America?

And now that I have the student grounded as to purpose and consequently has found his work in school, and satisfied, in fact pleased to work in a small college such as Graceland, I say after all this, I have but to devote a minute to the latter part of my text which relates to work.

Now, work is a short word, but it is mighty, and your instructors here will doubtless make you acquainted with it—thoroughly acquainted with it before many days. There is one quotation from the Bible I wish to give you, and that is found in Paul's letter to the Philippians, where he said: "This one thing I do."

This above everything else preaches the doctrine of concentration. Make that doctrine a part of your creed.

I would hardly have you adopt the idea contained in the couplet from Shakespeare which says:

Why, then the world's mine oyster
Which I with my sword will open,— unless you use the sword of truth and honest endeavor. Too many think the world is their oyster by birthright. It is needless to say, perhaps, that such persons, to use a common and somewhat undignified expression, in the end generally find themselves in the soup. I would not have you think of the world as some do who say, "The world owes me a living," and fail to make it for yourselves.

But I do like the optimism and self-confidence in another quotation from the same great writer, and I commend it to all: It is:

Methinks it were an easy leap
To pluck bright honor from the pale faced moon,
Or dive into the bottom of the deep
Where fathom line could never touch the ground
And pluck up drowned honor by the locks.

I thank you for your kind attention:

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

DEATH OF ELDER JOHN KALER.—With regret we learn of the death of Elder John Kaler, of Independence, Missouri, formerly of the Australian mission. He died at the Independence Sanitarium, September 12, 1911, as the result of overheating while at work, coupled with typhoid fever; funeral took place Thursday afternoon, September 14, sermon by Elder Joseph Luff.

Interesting experiments are being made at Washington with a view to securing practical use of the 5,000 volume Chinese encyclopedia presented to the United States by the Chinese government in December, 1908. The encyclopedia has been consulted by nearly a score of Chinese students, resident Chinese and American students of Oriental languages, but the 200-year-old characters in which it is written have made adequate translation impossible in this country.

THE MAN OF SIN.—PART II.

BY DANIEL MACGREGOR.

IS IT, OR IS IT NOT THE PAPACY?

Another matter pertaining to the unfettering of the man of sin when he was "revealed in his time" must not be overlooked. The apostle said, "And now ye know what withholdeth that he might be revealed in his time. For the mystery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth will let until he be taken out of the way. And then shall that Wicked be revealed. . . ."—2 Thessalonians 2: 6-8.

In this we shall learn the time when the man of sin was to be revealed, and it will be later discovered that the revelation of the papacy occurred at the very same time. They were brought into independent prominence at one and the same time, an important clew enabling us to identify the man of sin. It seems that a withholding power existed in the apostle's day which prevented, (letteth) the open manifestation and rule of the man of sin. The foregoing use of the word letteth and let may to some be a little confusing. It means to hinder. This was its meaning at the time of the translation of the Scriptures. Webster says, it means "to retard, to hinder, to impede, to interpose obstructions, 2 Thessalonians 2; this sense is now obsolete or nearly so." A clearer reading is found in the Noyes'; Rotherham's; Weeks'; Campbell-McKnight-Doddridge versions of the Bible in that "letteth" is rendered "restraineth."

Now what this restraining or withholding power was, that hindered the exercise of authority on the part of the man of sin, we are not here informed. The Thessalonian saints, however, fully understood "what withholdeth." Indeed, they were so well acquainted with it, that the apostle does not deem it necessary to further explain. Information of this nature so thoroughly understood would not be confined to the church at Thessalonica, it would pass from one to another until the whole church would learn of it; and as the information would increase in importance as they approached the inevitable apostasy it would most naturally be preserved and handed down from generation to generation.

Yes; it was handed down, and the early fathers, writing in those times, freely mention it, indeed "we find an almost unanimous persuasion among the fathers that the impediment thus darkly alluded to in the written prophecy was the Roman empire: and the reason which they give why the apostle did not venture to commit to paper is, lest any such open declaration that the Eternal Empire was destined to fall and by its overthrow to make room for the man of sin, should by a jealous government be construed into an act of treasonable disaffection."—G. S. Faber's Sacred Calendar of Prophecy, vol. 1, pp. 86, 87. Tertullian, Chrysostom, and Jerome particularly confirm the foregoing.

Rev. G. R. Hioan says, "The tradition that generally prevailed was, that which 'hindered' was the Roman Empire; and therefore the primitive Christians in the public offices of the church prayed for its peace and welfare, as knowing that when the Roman empire should be dissolved and broken into pieces the empire of the man of sin would be raised in its ruins."—Thoughts on Prophecy, p. 103. A. D. 1808.

The withholding power, therefore, was the Roman empire, and it was doomed to fall. It was to be "taken out of the way."—Verse 7.

The event immediately following this was the setting up or revelation of the man of sin, that wicked one. "And then shall that Wicked be revealed."—Verse 8.

Now if we can ascertain the time when the Roman empire was "taken out of the way," then may we learn the time of the commencement of the unhindered rule of the man of sin.

This removal of the Roman empire is predicted by Daniel. In the seventh chapter, portraying the history of the world-empires, commencing with his own times, he reveals to us in signs and symbols the successive rise and downfall of the four great monarchies, Babylon, Media Persia, Grecia, and Rome. The last is presented under the symbol of "a great beast and terrible" having "seven heads and ten horns." This was the Roman empire having in the days of its duration seven different forms of government, and the seventh passing away, the nation was divided into ten separate kingdoms. This interpretation is so generally received and so unquestionably supported by the historic facts that it will scarcely be necessary to present further proof, other than that which the chapter itself presents: "Thus he said the fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon the earth . . . and the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise."—Verses 23, 24.

Whenever, therefore, the fourth or Roman kingdom, or "he that letteth" was taken out of the way by being overthrown and divided up by the succeeding kingdoms which were just ten in number, "then shall that Wicked be revealed," the man of sin, in other words, the independent rule of the apostate power shall commence.

This is as the early fathers understood the matter.

Saint Cyril, of Jerusalem, who flourished in the fourth century, says that "this predicted anti-Christ will come when the times of the Roman empire shall be fulfilled, and the consummation of the world shall approach. Ten kings of the Romans shall arise together, in different places indeed, but they shall reign at the same time. Among these, the eleventh is anti-Christ, who, by magical and wicked artifice, shall sieze the Roman power."—Hioan's Thoughts on Prophecy, pp. 61, 62.

"Thus Tertullian, asking this question, Who is it that 'letteth' answers, Who but the Roman state, the division of which, when it is scattered among ten kings shall bring in anti-Christ, and then shall that wicked one be revealed."—Literalist, vol. 2, p. 303.

"Next turn we to Tertullian. And the subject of anti-Christ, while agreeing with Irenæus in expecting his development chronologically after the breaking up the Roman state into ten kings or kingdoms, all in strict accordance with the Apocalypse."—Elliot's Horæ Apocalypticæ, vol. 4, p. 280.

The question now for us to decide, is, when was Rome thus overthrown by the conquering powers, ten in number? To abbreviate matters we may say that it will not be necessary to submit the data when each and every kingdom was established; we are interested rather in finding out just when the complete prophetic division was completed; in other words, when the tenth and last kingdom was set up.

The tenth and last kingdom was that of Lombardy. Historians are generally agreed on this matter. See Allwood's Key to the Revelation, volume 1, page 294; Jones' Lectures on the Apocalypse, page 396; Machiavelli's History of Florence as quoted and supported by Scott's Commentary, volume 2, page 817; Barnes' Notes on Daniel, page 322; Keith's Signs of the Times, volume 1, page 20; Campbell's Illustrations of Prophecy, page 57; Fenton and Hutchinson's Second Advent, page 292; Junkin's Lectures on the Prophecies, page 69; Blackburn's History of the Christian Church, page 151; Faber's Sacred Calendar of Prophecy, volume 2, page 71; and Rivington's Questions on the English Church History, page 10.

Thus it appears that the prophetic overthrow and division of him "that letteth" was accomplished at the setting up of the Lombardic kingdom and this kingdom was set up A. D. 570 according to Reverend Ashe's Book of Revelation, p. 131; Rev. E. B. Elliot's Horæ Apocalypticæ, vol. 1, p. 398, 5th edition; President Junkin's Lectures on the Prophecies, p. 87; Harcourt Bland's Apocalyptical History, pp. 310, 328; Bower's History of the Popes, vol. 2, p. 444; and Gibbon's Decline and Fall, etc., chapter 45.

Now for the setting up of papal independency. Did it commence with the establishment of the Lombardic kingdom? If so, its identity with the man of sin is complete. To this we shall let the Catholic historians themselves make answer.

In like manner the successive invasions of barbaric hordes, and above all the invasion of the Lombards, extinguished utterly and destroyed the last vestige of the Roman empire in Italy: it was utterly swept away, it existed no longer. Where thenceforward was the subjection of the Roman pontiff to an emperor whose empire had ceased to be? . . . The Roman empire in Italy was extinguished by the judgment of God, and the throne of Rome was vacant by the visitation of God. And when the last vestige of civil authority has perished there remained in Rome one sole person who had been the Father, the Pastor, Lawgiver, Protector, the Head of the People, to whom they turned as their supreme spiritual authority, around whom they gathered in all their perils. The line of the Roman pontiffs alone was left. The providence of God thus liberated the head of the church completely and altogether from any civil authority whatsoever.—The Independence of the Holy See; Cardinal Manning, pp. 13, 14, London, 1877.

Nevertheless until the coming in of the Lombards all Italy being under the dominion, either of emperors or kings, the bishops assumed no more power than what was due to their doctrine and manners; in civil affairs they were subject to the civil power. But the Lombards having invaded and reduced Italy into several cantons, the pope took the opportunity and began to hold up his head. For being as it were governor and principal at Rome, the emperor of Constantinople and the Lombards bore him a respect, so that the Romans by mediation of their pope began to treat and confederate with Longinus, the emperor's lieutenant, and the Lombards, not as subjects, but as equals and companions.—History of Florence, book 1, p. 6. Machiavelli.

The following also on the same event from Reverend Ward, a Protestant minister, is quite confirmatory.

In 568 the Lombard invasion began and in three years intercepted all connection between Rome and the Exarchate by which the popes became sole masters of Rome and acquired all the civil and military power as well as spiritual authority in the city, A. D. 570. . . . Thus the invasion of the Lombards was a sea of troubles from the midst of which the government of the Exarchate was dissolved in Italy and the Italian republics of Venice, Genoa, and Rome had opportunity to arise. Rome, however, had only the shadow of a republic and displayed the absolute sovereignty of the pope. . . . Having traced the first exercise of independent temporal sovereignty by the pope from A. D. 570, I propose the following test of my opinion.—Prophetic History, vol. 5, pp. 31, 34, 68. A. D. 1818.

It is enough! What further evidence is required to show that the papacy is the man of sin? He attained his majority at the very time scheduled, and from the very cause specified, for the liberation of that apostate personage.

It had no opposition at the polls of prophetic election. It was the only nominee for such unholy honors. What other power received its legacy of unrestrained unrighteous rule at the decrease of the Roman empire? There was none. Without question therefore the Roman papacy is the man of sin. It was elected by acclamation. Even the most moderate of commentaries share this view.

In short the meaning of the verse (2 Thessalonians 2:3) is that the wicked teachers of whom the apostle speaks would first oppose Christ by corrupting the doctrine of the gospel concerning him, and after that they would make void the government of God and of Christ in the Christian church, and the government of the civil magistrate in the state, by arrogating to themselves the sole spiritual authority which belongs to Christ and all the temporal authority belonging to princes and magistrates; showing himself that he is God—exercising all the prerogatives of God, accepting such titles, and doing such things, as, if they indeed belonged to him, would show him to be God: an exact description certainly of the papal power.—Benson's Commentary, vol. 2, p. 410, published for the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1839.

But, it may be asked, how could the papacy be understood as sitting in the temple of God, seeing that since it apostatized it was no longer a part of the church, consequently could not sit in it? To this we may reply, How could the man of sin, opposing and exalting himself above all that is called God, showing himself that he is God, an actual son of perdition, as stated in scripture, be understood as sitting in the temple of God, seeing that as a son of perdition he must be a castaway, an excommunicant? The only solution of the language is that it refers to his early connection with, and position in the church, where he began his presumptuous and self-exalting sins.

This is eminently true of the papacy. Long years before the fatal 570 when, as every Latter Day Saint must admit, the visible church entered an era of obscurity, the bishop of Rome had usurped undue authority, lording it over his confederate bishops in the church, particularly over the church in the West. At the Council of Chalcedon, A. D. 451, Paschasinus, legate of Leo I, presented himself, saying, "We have here an order from the most blessed and apostolic pope of the Church of Rome, which is the head of all churches, by which his Apostleship has thought fit to command that Dioscorus, bishop of Alexandria, shall not be allowed to sit in the council, etc."—Allwood's Key to the Revelation, vol. 1, p. 305, A. D. 1829.

In this the bishop of Rome presumed to decide as to who of his associate bishops should not sit in council. What is this but assuming the prerogatives of the Highest Power?—"showing himself that he is God."

The truth of the matter is that the mystery of iniquity, the apostasy, began its work in the apostles' day, and every year increased the enormity of its offenses. Every shade of false doctrine and unscriptural ceremony, gathered from paganish practices, was introduced into the Christian Church; the mystery of iniquity was set up in the temple of God. Church historians, chiefly Mosheim, mention the following as finding their origin in the early centuries of the church.

Century II.—God-fathers, monks, purgatory, robes for priests, penance, mysteries.

Century III.—Feast days, holy days, adoration of the cross, exorcism before baptism, incense, alibacy, liturgies, and sprinkling.

Century IV.—Image worship, Mary worshiped, masses for the dead, pilgrimages, relics venerated, mitres, tiaras, wax tapers, crociera, processions, lustrations, fast days enforced, nunneries.

Century V.—Confessions private, saints worshiped.

But chief amongst the evils introduced was that chain of usurped authority fast forging at Rome. It was a centralization of power, ever widening in the scope of its compelling influence. Gradually the ministry began to look to him who assumed to sit in "Peter's place" for favors and emolument. History is replete with incidents revealing the accelerating influences at work building up a colossal monument of universal rule at Rome.

There was one circumstance, however, that hampered the papacy, and that was his inability to enforce his decrees other than by what power he could exercise over the consciences of men. He needed the power of statecraft whereby he might force, at the peril of a penalty, his sacerdotal demands. This, however, was soon forthcoming. The Roman empire was waning, and with its overthrow the papacy, seeing its chance in the general melee that ensued, seized upon the sword of state. This latter event, as has been noted, commenced A. D. 570.

Thus did the man of sin, commencing his evil work within the church, as one that "sitteth in the temple of God," continue until the "falling away" had overrun the entire church, "and power was given unto him over all kindreds and tongues and nations."

True, the records of the church do not chronicle his excommunication. It could not. The dead never write their epitaphs. And so it was with the bishop of Rome; he was never conventionally cut off. But as one of the entire church, he lapsed unconsciously into that state of spiritual lethargy while "darkness covered the earth and gross darkness the people."

What other power, then, than that of the papacy constituted the man of sin? Who will undertake to point it out? Until a more consistent application is presented we shall feel constrained, in the preaching of "the word," as is our duty under the law, to preach it as we can only understand it.

In this we do not wish to be understood as forcing our own opinions, nor yet as compromising the church. Indeed, we are not aware that the church has ever taken a position on the man of sin contrary to the views herein expressed. But, it may be urged, that since the church has never taken any position, therefore the elders ought not to preach the man of sin as the papacy, till the church so pronounces. That being true, then I apprehend the elders ought not to preach upon any text until the church by quorum and council decrees the application thereof.

What an endless age of work and worry, then, presents itself in the preparation of a theological commentary, correct or otherwise.

"Oh, yes," says one, "preach it in your own name, but leave out the name of the church." Our reply is, that we know of no authority to exercise the sacred functions of preaching, only as we do so in "that name which is above every name." We can not conceive how any man, in going forth to preach the word of God, is commissioned to carry two theological packs, the one filled with the church's opinions, and the other his personal opinions. Personally we prefer to carry but one, and to the utmost of our ability, to fill it with the opinions of Christ. Whatsoever we preach, therefore, we should preach it in the name of the Lord. We know of no occasion permitting us to split up by saying, "I preach this as the opinion of our church, and that as the opinion of myself." To a minister for Christ it is legitimate only to say, "I preach the opinion of Christ."

True, as the servants of Christ, for his church, we ought not to preach contrary to the received doctrines of Christ as entertained by said church, but we know of no doctrine held by the church disapproving an explanation of the man of sin, nor of anything vetoing the application herein made.

If the church in sending forth her eldership had pledged herself to a fixed interpretation of the scripture under consideration, and had placed such pledge into the hands of said eldership, then we presume that the sacred honor of office would obligate the eldership to confine itself to that interpretation and no other.

But the church for obvious reasons, has not done this. Possibly because she saw that if obligated to decree an ex cathedra interpretation for this passage, she would commit herself to the interminable toil of fixing up an interpretation for every other text also.

The church has taken a larger view. Consenting to the call and ordination of a ministry whom Christ has called, she has placed in the hands of that ministry a copy of the Holy Scriptures, the word of the Lord, to which only she is pledged, and that word exacts of those ministers, "preach the word," or as elsewhere stated by this same Paul, "saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come."

We open and read, therefore, and one of the most prominent scriptures that comes to light is this same apostle's instruction concerning a great and terrible apostasy as revealed in the present text. It was a thing to come.

What are we to do with it, then? Seal it up or "preach the word"? And if we preach it, shall we be doing so under the anathema of preaching our own opinions?

As I understand the matter, the church, built upon the doctrine of a restoration, is pledged to the doctrine of the apostasy, "a falling away." That being true, the church is further pledged to those prophecies predicting that apostasy. Does, or does not, then, 2 Thessalonians bespeak an apostasy? and does, or does not, the man of sin, the power that grew out of that apostasy, refer to the papacy, which, as every unbiased student knows, grew out of the "falling away"?

Personally we believe it does, and until another and more appropriate application is presented, we shall feel obligated in the discharge of the sacred duties involving a preaching of the word, to present the papacy as the man of sin.

WHY JESUS WAS BAPTIZED.

In a SAINTS' HERALD of recent date the question is asked: "Since Jesus was sinless and baptism is for the remission of sins (Mark 1:3; Acts 2:38; Acts 22:16, why was Jesus baptized?"

The writer gave many scripture references, all bearing upon the subject, but to the writer's mind, he did not make the subject as clear as it might be stated.

Our Lord and Master himself gave the reason when he went to John to receive baptism. He said: "Suffer it to be so now: for thus is cometh us to fulfill all righteousness." This is the answer Jesus gave to John the Baptist when he applied for baptism, and John demurred, thinking himself unworthy, and saying that he had need to be baptized of Jesus. The answer was to the point, but to the inquiring mind this question arises for solution: Why was it necessary for Jesus to be baptized, being sinless, in order to fulfill all righteousness?

In order to answer this query, we must inquire into the relationship of the Christ to God, and also his relationship to man, and in doing this, we may understand how he took upon him the sins of the world, and as baptism is the door to the kingdom of heaven, perhaps we may find that Jesus in taking man's nature upon himself, was, because of that nature, himself outside the kingdom, and baptism was necessary in order that Jesus get into the kingdom of God.

Jesus the Christ, being the only begotten of the Father, became heir to his father's throne because of his birthright, and not having committed sin had a right to his father's presence, so that he was always in touch with God until he came to the Garden of Gethsemane. But, on the other hand, Jesus was also the Son of man, and in taking upon himself our flesh, he also inherited, according to the flesh, death,—and it was by taking our nature that he took the sins of the world upon him, and bearing our nature, it being carnal and foreign to the kingdom of God, it was necessary that he be baptized in order that he might enter into the kingdom by the door. (John 10: 2.)

Christ, by taking the nature of man, took our sins upon him, and by living without sinning condemned sin in the flesh. He was baptized because of the sins of the world to which he fell heir, because of having taken man's nature upon himself.

This understanding of the subject has satisfied the writer as to the reason why Jesus was baptized.

WHERE PATRIOTISM LEADS.

What is there that thrills the heart of a loyal Canadian as that inspiring song,

The maple leaf, our emblem dear,
The maple leaf for ever:
God save our king and heaven bless
The maple leaf for ever.

It arouses the fervent patriotism of every inhabitant of the "land where the sugar maple grows." That patriotic pride dwells upon the widespread expanses and magnificent distances of the greatest land area upon the face of mother earth whose people enjoy a representative and free government subject to the will of a free people.

But God forbid that that patriotism should be in even the least degree antagonistic to that of other peoples and nations, whose hearts may glow with equal fervency at the mention of their home and country—the German loves "the Rhine, the Rhine, the German Rhine," and Canada's nearest neighbors with similar feelings sing:

My country, 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty,
Of thee I sing;
Land where my fathers died,
Land of the Pilgrims' pride;
Let every mountain side
With freedom ring

Will indeed "the sounding aisles of the dim woods ring with the anthem of the free."

Love of country springs from a fountain placed deep in men's souls by the great Creator, and is one phase of expression of the soul's life and activity; a principle recognized in the lines of a great English poet:

Breathes there the man with soul so dead
Who never to himself hath said,
This is my own, my native land.

As the love a true man bears his wife causes no bitterness in his heart against other men who love their wives, and as a mother's pure love for her child makes her feel more tenderly for the children of others, so should great and free peoples cherish no antagonistic feelings towards other peoples, but let such rejoice that others reap the same blessings from similar rights and privileges—and all together see beauty in the thought that true love of country will make that country better and more capable of blessing its surrounding countries.

Is it a true philosophic principle that all things were made for all other things? If so, all nations are intended for the benefit of all other nations. And is it not true that there is no nation, kindred, tongue, people, or country that may not be a blessing and help to the world at large—in religion, in commerce, in literature, in invention, in everything? As examples of gifts that nations may confer upon the world, we have: in religion, the Scriptures and the religion therein taught, from the Hebrews; in commerce, British ships sailing upon every sea; in literature and science, the writings of Homer and Plutarch, Cicero and Pliny, from the Greeks and Romans; in invention, what nation has not benefited by the work of Thomas A. Edison and other American inventors?

But national achievements of this nature can not be accomplished while the country thus able in some way to contribute to the welfare of the world remains unknown, and the greater the publicity given to that country's conditions, events, and progress, the greater are its opportunities for fulfilling its mission as a nation among the nations of the world.

This is the reason for the appearance of this department in the HERALD—to further enable Canadian Saints to perform their duty as an important part of the membership of the church.

JANADA NOT FENCED OFF.

It is not the intention in conducting this Canadian Department to fence off Canada in a corner by itself—as either too good or too bad to associate with the multitude—but to pay special attention to a field that for various reasons has been neglected; and also to bring the church in Canada more conspicuously to the attention of all concerned, increasing the knowledge of Canadian conditions for the benefit of all. We do not believe that the old adage, "Familiarity breeds contempt," will apply here, but that familiarity will result in greater respect and consideration.

SCOPE OF THE DEPARTMENT'S WORK.

There are in Canada the nine provinces of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia, and a number of territories in the more northerly parts. The church has effected organizations in six of these provinces: five districts, and a number of isolated branches; the districts are Chatham, London, and Toronto, in Ontario; and Winnipeg and Saskatchewan in the three western provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta. There are branches in British Columbia and Nova Scotia. The membership of the church in Canada at last report was placed at 5,134, being the greatest number in any country outside the United States.

With this comparatively short introduction we are ready to commence our work of building up this department.

CANADIAN STUDENTS AT GRACELAND.

At the opening exercises, September 11, there were present seven Canadian students, as follows: Misses Mary and Ella McDonald, of Kimball, Ontario; Miss May Campbell, of Chatham, Ontario; Mr. Hewitt, of Blenheim, Ontario; Ray Coats, of Millet, Alberta; G. Alma Jordan, of Sunnyvale, Saskatchewan. Others are expected.

ELBERT A. SMITH'S VISIT TO LONDON.

This visit was mentioned editorially last week; but from information received we believe that much good was accomplished by his visit. Many branches regret that he could not spend some time with them. Canadians have desired for a long time to get in closer touch with the leading men of the church; and we believe that if the higher officers of the church could devote a little more time to becoming acquainted with the church and its needs in Canada, it would not only be better for Canada, but also assist them in their work.

LATEST FROM LONDON, ONTARIO.

A big, healthy, eight and one half pound baby boy has arrived in the home of Bro. and Sr. Lorne Swain; and Brother Lorne is one of the happiest men out of London.

Bro. Charles Mottashed, of Kirtland, Ohio, a young elder, and grandson of Elder George Mottashed, formerly of the London Branch in now seeking to build up his fortune in this city. His intention is to move here with his family should he succeed in obtaining permanent, congenial employment.

Bro. John H. Lake, the aged patriarch of Kirtland, Ohio, sent a very kind and encouraging message by his brother to the Canadian Saints. Therein he testified his love for the Saints of Canada, and said nothing would please him better if he were once more a young man going into the missionary field, than to come over to labor in Canada.

Quite a large delegation of the London Saints attended the Kirtland reunion, and everyone on returning testified their sensible appreciation of the power of God attending the devotions of God's people throughout; and all received benefit and are imparting in their turn, goodly benefits upon those who were unable to participate in that happy event.

ANNOUNCEMENT LONDON DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The annual conference of the London District will convene in the city of Saint Thomas, Ontario, at 10 a. m., Saturday, October 7. Arrangements have been made with the Eastern Canadian Passenger Association for reduced rates for all delegates to the conference, on the certificate plan; but the careful attention of the delegates is directed to the change from former years in the number of days tickets in connection with certificates may be sold on the going trip. The certificates will not be honored by the companies unless the tickets for the going trip are purchased within three days before the opening of the conference. The tickets for the return journey are also to be purchased within three days after the adjournment of the conference—Sunday not being counted as a day in either case.

A cordial invitation is hereby extended to all who can possibly come, to attend this session of the London district conference. It is rumored that Bishop E. L. Kelley will be in attendance. We are informed that this rumor is founded upon a statement made by the Bishop himself, that he would be present if possible. To hear Bishop Kelley's personal interpretation of his particular branch, or department, of this great latter day work, is a privilege that only a few of the Saints, comparatively speaking, can expect to enjoy. It is a rare opportunity, and we hope that there will be such a goodly representation of the London District Saints at Saint Thomas on October 7 and 8, that the city's largest hall will have to be rented in order that all may have the privilege of listening to the instructions he, and the other speakers may have to give.—P. H. Philippin, Secretary.

KILLED BY FAST TRAIN.

Another who has played an important part in the history of the church in Canada has been suddenly called away. Elder Nathan Overholt, formerly of Selkirk, later of Waterford, Ontario, in the days before the old London District was divided, served some time as vice-president of the district, also as district Sunday school superintendent, besides in various other positions. The funeral was held at his home on Sunday, August 27, at 2.30 p. m. Elder Alex. McMullen, of Hamilton, Ontario, preached the sermon. Brethren of the branch acted as pallbearers. The funeral was a very large one. The following clipping from the local paper gives an account of the accident:

"Mr. Nathan Overholt, a respected citizen of Waterford, lost his life by being struck by a westbound express at the G. T. R. crossing at Grimsby Beach at 10.45 Friday morning, August 25. As he reached the tracks a freight train going east on the right-hand track was passing and he stood on the westbound track watching it pass. Number 9, one of the Grand Trunk's fastest trains, was running twenty minutes late and reached the crossing as the freight train was going east. Before the engineer could stop it Mr. Overholt was struck and thrown about one hundred feet upon the station platform. His head and left side were crushed in; his left arm was broken and his leg broken in two places. Dr. Alexander, coroner, was called, and he ordered an inquest. Constable Powslaugh immediately impaneled a jury and they viewed the remains and the spot where the accident occurred. Mr. Overholt moved to Waterford from Selkirk four years ago and was a highly esteemed and respected resident. He was a member of the Village council in 1909. Interment took place in Greenwood cemetery."

CANADIANS TO BLAME.

If news of the doings of the church in Canada to fill this department twice per month is not supplied, Canadians will be to blame, for the opportunity is now theirs to send in the news that they wish to see appear in the HERALD. The greater the amount of news supplied the better will the department be, for the editor will thus have the more material to select from to fill the two and a half pages that are to be devoted to Canada.

Trusting that the future shall justify divine acceptance of the work now entered upon, I subscribe myself,

Of General Interest

Jules Verne Revised and Modernized.

"Around the world in forty-two days (marked down from eighty)," is the unofficial title of a journey which will end in Paris four or five days hence. Andre Jagerschmidt, a French journalist (where did a Frenchman get that surname?), left Paris on July 17, traveling eastward. When he landed at Vancouver last week he was fifteen hours ahead of his schedule, and every indication points to the conclusion of the journey in forty-two days or less. That was once the regular time required for an ox team trip between Omaha and Denver, and for the journey by steamboat from New Orleans to Louisville. The first post rider between New York and Boston took half as much time for the distance as Mr. Jagerschmidt is taking to put a girdle around the earth. No wonder that one of the most conservative of the aviators at the Chicago meet can talk about regular aeroplane routes across the Atlantic, with a schedule of eighteen hours from land to land. That is not half as wonderful in the light of to-day's abilities as our commonplace eighteen hour schedule between New York and Chicago would have been to Benjamin Franklin.—Selected.

Lynching.

A BLOT ON CIVILIZATION.

In a thriving industrial town not forty miles from Philadelphia a man was burned at the stake on Sunday of last week. The horror of this act was increased by the deliberateness of its execution. The victim lay in a hospital, wounded and strapped to a bed. He was dragged by masked men from the hospital on his cot, carried shrieking, half a mile, and placed on a fire of fence rails; thrice he was thrust back when he tried to escape. A crowd of perhaps two thousand people watched his death agonies. The police made no adequate attempt to rescue the victim. Indeed, it is charged that one policeman aided the mob of lynchers, although it is fair to add that the officer denies this, while admitting his presence at the scene. District attorney, sheriff, and governor have denounced the crime, arrests have been made, and it is promised that searching investigation and punishment will follow. Let us hope so; otherwise Coatesville and Pennsylvania will for ever stand disgraced before the world. A community guilty of such a sickening piece of barbarous cruelty is inferior in civilization to a tribe of cannibals.

But, it will be asked, what caused this unspeakable atrocity in a peaceful, supposedly law-abiding northern town? There is only one answer—the lust for blood that lies dormant behind race hatred. The man tortured and killed was a negro. He had not committed "the usual crime"—that euphemism for an outrage against a white woman by a colored man—and, as a matter of plain fact, not half the lynchings of negroes are for that offense. It is true that Walker was a criminal and deserved punishment; he had shot and killed a policeman who tried to arrest him when drunk. But, bad as was this offense, it neither excuses, nor even explains, the lynching. He was in custody; he would surely be tried; almost as surely he would be punished under the law. The fact may as well be faced that Walker would not have been lynched, much less tortured at the stake, if he had been white. Among the fiercest, subtlest, most untamable of human passions, race hatred stands out, frightful in its persistence, amazing in its relapse into brutish barbarity. No man can tell when or how it shall become a tradition of the past. If the lynching were a solitary instance, we might be merely shocked, not discouraged. Unhappily, it is not. A few weeks ago a southern correspondent of The Outlook, describing the lynching of six negroes (five probably innocent, and the charge, again, not "the usual crime"), declared, in effect, that the press associations nowadays did not often "carry" lynching reports because they were too common to have news value! The whole country must accept a share in the shame of such deeds as that at Coatesville. Universal denunciation, inexorable punishment, a resolve to uphold justice for black and white alike—these are the only remedies.—Outlook, August 26.

UNITED STATES VS. RUSSIA.

When a lynching occurs somewhere in the vast territory of the United States a few people rise up to ask what is the difference between this country and Russia. The differences are so great that there is not much resemblance. In Russia the great mass of the people, ninety per cent, live under constant injustice and oppression. In many provinces the governors and officials are continually encouraging outrages on Jews and others. Cossacks in the Government service drive the people with whips. Thousands of intelligent persons are sent to Siberia to live a life of torture. The prisons are filled with political prisoners. There is little real liberty. Men are imprisoned for preaching the gospel. The Czar himself is not only an incompetent ruler, but a man who violates the most solemn pledges, and is personally responsible for many of the outrages. Local government is denied. The old Russian tyranny has recently been extended over Finland. No person in Russia is safe. In the United States there is perhaps more crime committed by private persons than in Russia, because of our loose criminal laws, and because the methods of our courts favor criminals and encourage crime. But for one lynching in the United States there are a thousand greater outrages in Russia. There are, indeed, so many that the act of a mob which will fill the papers in the United States would scarcely be noted in Russia. In the United States the Government is on the side of justice. It does not oppress the people. The great noise is made by criminals themselves when prosecuted, and by syndicates, companies, and corporations which are violating laws for their financial profit. It is easier to find differences than resemblances between this country and Russia. They have very little in common. Russia needs most reform in the laws themselves, and in the character of the officials, from the Czar down. The United States needs better enforcement of the laws it has, and more swift and certain punishment of criminals. Its criminal law and court procedure need reform.

mation, not for the protection of honest people, as in Russia, but for the catching and punishment of the criminal and the stamping out of crime.—Selected.

Finds New Race Like White Men in Arctic America.

That there is a race of men resembling Scandinavians living in Victoria Land, in Arctic America, who have never seen other white men, and took the white man who discovered them for an Eskimo, is the remarkable statement contained in a letter received in Brooklyn yesterday by Herbert L. Bridgman from the explorer and anthropologist Vilhjar Stefansson, who has been in the Arctic region for the last three years or more on an expedition sent out by the American Museum of Natural History. The explorer states that these far northern Americans have the speech and habits of Eskimos, but are European in features.

In the finding of the new community Mr. Stefansson believes he has introduced among ethnologists a new problem of great scientific interest. He suggests three possibilities. One is that he has found a new branch of the human family. Another is that these beings may be the descendants of the three thousand Scandinavians who suddenly and mysteriously disappeared from Greenland in the fifteenth century and of whom no trace has ever been found.

He also suggests that they may be descendants of a large party of Sir John Franklin's men who also mysteriously disappeared.

Mr. Stefansson left New York City in April, 1908. Until the receipt of his letters, yesterday he had not been heard of for the last year. With him when he left this city was Dr. R. M. Anderson, of Iowa, who was the naturalist of the expedition, which left here with the intention of learning something definite in relation to the ethnological puzzles of the land north of Hudson Bay.

The expedition has done what it set out to do, Mr. Stefansson writes, and has also found there is no large river in the region, although one is designated on maps as the River la Ronciere. He has learned that a certain cape is an island and that a certain island on the present map is a cape.

The explorer's letters—there are two of them—were written at the mouth of the Dease River, on the ground covered by Messrs. Richardson and Roe in the Franklin search expedition. The letters, dated October 12, 1910, and November 4, 1910, did not reach a post office, as shown by the cancellation marks on the envelope, until July 26, 1911.

In his first letter Mr. Stefansson says, in part: "We left Langton Bay; one sled, six dogs, three Eskimos and myself, on April 22, 1910, and headed east along the coast. The stretch to the east of Cape Lyon is a neutral area, which the western Eskimos have never crossed, nor any Eskimo so far as anyone living knows. It was believed to be a starvation country, and it was very difficult to get any Eskimo to go with me, but we found plenty of game; and, although we took along only two weeks' supplies, we never went a day without food till near the end of July—caribou, Barren Ground grizzlies, polar bears, and seals.

"Twenty days out, or May 31, we found people at Cape Bexley, and a few days later, on the south coast of Victoria Land, we visited the European-like people of whom we had heard at Cape Bexley. Two of the men there had beards much like mine, and mine might be impolitely referred to as red. My Eskimo companions said: 'These are not Eskimo; they are fo'cse men.' There are about forty individuals in the group, and there are said to be others like them further north. I wanted to go further north, but I had said I was going to the Coppermine, so I went on eastward up the Coppermine. There were people and traces of them here and there.

"The summer and fall we have spent near the northeast corner of Bear Lake with a large party of Eskimos. I was surprised to find they hunt so far inland, and I think geographers will be equally surprised to learn it. They say their ancestors always hunted down to the lake shore on the northeast corner of Bear Lake, but always ran away if they saw signs of people, a fact which explains their not having been discovered by any of the numerous parties that have been on the lake."

In his first letter the explorer states that Doctor Anderson became ill with pneumonia and after an illness of months went back to Herschel Land. In his second letter Mr. Stefansson states that he was about to start back for Doctor Anderson, and concludes with a statement that he expects to be back in this city in September, 1911.

Mr. Bridgman said yesterday that he would not be surprised to see the explorer walk in to see him any day now. When he arrives it is the opinion of Mr. Bridgman that Mr. Stefansson will have with him plenty of data and good photographs of the men, who may possibly be a new race. Such data and pictures as he may have, Mr. Bridgman says, Mr. Stefansson will turn over at once to the Museum of Natural History for further study by scientists.—New York Herald.

Wages in the United States.

Some time ago, after thorough investigation, it was estimated that a New York family consisting of a man, wife, and three children under fourteen, could maintain "a normal standard of living" on an annual income of $900. Speculation at once rose as to the number of families whose income equaled that sum. Scott Nearing, the economic writer of the University of Pennsylvania, determined to settle the question once for all, and after many months of labor he has incorporated the results of his studies in a book entitled Wages in the United States (Macmillan Company, New York, $1.50 net), which was published this week. The evidence which he obtains warrants the conclusion that a large portion of American workmen are unable to maintain an efficiency standard of living. Three fourths of the adult males and nineteen twentieths of the adult females actually earn less than $600 a year; or, more in detail, one half of the men are earning less than $500 a year, three fourths less than $600, nine tenths less than $800, while less than ten per cent receive more than that figure. Of the women, one fifth earn less than $200 annually, and three fifths less than $325, while only one twentieth more than $600.

To arrive at these figures Doctor Nearing takes up various state wage statistics. Massachusetts, New Jersey, Kansas, Michigan, New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Pennsylvania are considered, while special wage reports from Wisconsin and Illinois are included, as well as chapters on the wages of specific industries. Altogether it is a work which will do much to clear up the discussion as to what a living wage is, and what per cent of the men and women of this country are receiving it.

A Supreme Court for Methodism.

This is by way of explanation rather than argument.

The question is being raised whether our church does not need some court of appeal to which may be referred acts of the General Conference which are of doubtful constitutionality. At present the General Conference exercises both legislative and judicial functions.

The kind of court needed is thus described by Dr. Richard

J. Cooke in a cogent presentation of the whole issue in the May-June issue of the Methodist Reviews: "Such a court should be constitutionally established, to give it that authority without which it would be shorn of its power and made practically useless. It should have definite duties assigned to it, and be governed by definite rules of procedure. Its members should be composed of bishops, ministers, and laymen. They should be elected by the General Conference, on nomination by a nominating committee, for a term of years. They should not be eligible to membership in the General Conference during their terms of office. The court should meet at same time and place as the General Conference and remain in session till the conference finally adjourns, and should thereafter meet as the court itself may determine for the transaction of business. It should report its decisions promptly to the General Conference. Its decisions should be final. Should the General Conference dissent from a decision on a constitutional question by a two thirds majority, the question in dispute would naturally be submitted to the annual and lay electoral conferences, and if they, by a two thirds majority of each order, should concur with the General Conference, that opinion should be the law of the church; otherwise the decision of the court should stand."

Doctor Cooke cites five instances where such a court might have saved the church from serious blundering and from even more serious injustice to individual members of its own household. Two instances will be readily recalled: (1) the legislation by which "if an inefficient minister refused to locate the annual conference might without formal trial locate him without his consent by a two thirds vote;" and (2) the enactments by which, not once or twice but again and again, "the General Conference has violated the sixth restrictive rule by appropriating the proceeds of the Book Concern under various happy phrasings to the payment of General Conference expenses."

On the face of it there is an incongruity in a body, working under a constitution, having the right to pass upon the constitutionality of its own proceedings. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, finds relief in vesting the power of veto in the board of bishops, whose objection, if overruled by the General Conference, is then passed upon by the annual conferences for approval or disapproval. The method is a bit cumbersome and might lend itself to abuse on the part of a willful episcopal board. Another method suggested is that of having in the General Conference a double chamber as in Congress, but such an arrangement, favorable as it might be to debate, would scarcely be judicial enough to be satisfactory.

The subject is really one for experts to deal with. The Northwestern hesitates about multiplying machinery in the church; but in favor of a court of appeal may be quoted some of the wisest and most conservative leaders of the church.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

CAN THE CHURCH MAKE GOOD?

The Rev. Charles Stelze in dealing with this question on the Chautauqua platform said among other things:

The church must be the living and concrete expositor of Christianity, and the doctrines of Christianity are the same as they ever were, though a difference has come in; for now Christianity has to do not with doctrines and theories alone, but with men. . . .

Men say that Christianity has lost its hold; it is rather the church that has lost hold. Christianity is vastly different from religion, and the church to-day seems to have more religion than Christianity. Christianity is a character, it is life; not the church, not religion, but life. . . .

Man is always and undeniably religious. Even the savage in the darkest part of Africa is born with a religious instinct within him. . . . True religion is a social force. One man alone has a religious instinct, but to have an active religion it takes not only one man, but God and another man. The church is man's expression of the religious social instinct. Man's greatest need is the spiritual need, and the church is the organization that has been created to supply this want. . . . The chief function of the church is service, and it must make life of a social value. . . .

It is not the business of the church to advocate systems of reform, nor to take sides in discussions between various systems, but if any system, labor union, Socialism, or whatever it may be, is doing active work to better the conditions, it is the duty of the church to stand by and aid in every way possible.

There is certainly danger that the church to-day may not always be in touch with the conditions and with the great problems of the time. The church is not doing its best with these problems, for it is not putting the most possible power behind the movements that need it. The church is not working to the highest of its efficiency, for it is attempting to deal with symptoms without getting back to the real causes of the disease.

Yet with all its shortcomings, the church is doing more than any other society. It must be judged, not by its shortcomings, but by the best of its achievements.—The Chautauquan.

HYPERCRITICAL.

We commend the following to our readers to show the popular trend toward the artificial and immaterial with some of the leading churches:

At the State Convention of the Congregational Churches, New York, the subject of pastoral supply was discussed, and some of the reasons for rejecting or not receiving candidates were reported.

One candidate was objected to by a congregation because he "crossed his legs in the pulpit." This is not agreeable to refined persons, but if it be enough to turn the scale, we testify that at a certain funeral we saw five Methodist ministers sitting in the pulpit who would all come under this condemnation!

Another congregation objected "to the style in which a minister combed his hair." Hair can be combed so as to attract attention and cause levity, which the rest of the minister's personality can not counteract. Should his hair be not combed at all a similar result may follow.

Another was rejected as a candidate "because he walked up the center aisle as though he were self-satisfied."

We republish these objections to bring them to the attention of ministers.

The committee said that it is owing to the inadequacy of salaries that it has been impossible to provide pastors for more than one hundred churches in various parts of the State. The average salary in the vacant pastorates is five hundred dollars a year, and, according to the committee, "the high cost of living makes it impossible even for a bachelor preacher to live within that income."—New York Christian Advocate.

EVANGELISM PROFITABLE?

That evangelism is profitable to some preachers is well proven in the work of Rev. "Billy" Sunday during his last season work of ten month's duration. Here are his "earnings":

Towns.	Converts.	Pay.
Newcastle	6,683	$13,200.00
Waterloo, Iowa	4,000	8,000.00
Portsmouth, Ohio	5,100	10,100.00
Lima, Ohio	5,569	11,313.00
Toledo	7,685	15,539.10
Erie	5,312	11,555.67
Totals	34,439	$70,507.77

ARCHBISHOP IRELAND.

That it is also profitable for some to be archbishops was shown recently when some two hundred and sixty Catholic priests presented Archbishop Ireland with $100,000 as a token of their "esteem, love and reverence."

VESTED CHOIRS.

Many peculiar ideas are expressed in wills, and it is not always easy to guess the motive of the deceased. As an example we quote the following press item:

When the will of the late John D. Bryant, a Boston lawyer, was filed recently, a strange bequest was made public. This bequest was a trust fund of $10,000 for the benefit of Christ Church, in that city, provided the church had no vested choir.

COINER OF TAINTED MONEY.

Dr. Washington Gladden has lately resigned the pastorate of the First Congregational Church at Columbus, Ohio, because members of the congregation will not attend his services. Doctor Gladden issues a statement in which he attacks modern Sunday recreation.

I do not attribute the absence of church members in many cases to disaffection; for some reason they have formed the habit of neglect, he says. All this means that the interests of recreation have taken precedence in the minds of many to the interests of the higher life. The fact that this is taking place everywhere alarms me.

Gladstone's rule, even in his older years, was that of a "twicer," as he termed it, at public worship. Church-going, he said, was not a matter of fancy for a Christian; it is his duty for the work's sake. No public-spirited disciple had a moral right to be absent except for a good cause, he often asserted, from public worship. I am a regular churchgoer. I should go for various reasons if I did not love it, but I am fortunate enough to find great pleasure in the midst of devout multitudes, whether I can accept all their creeds or not. For I find that there is in the corner of my heart a little plant called Reverence, which wants to be watered about once a week.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

The End of the Way.

The sands have washed o'er the footprints
Of the Stranger on Galilee's shore,
And the voice that subdued the rough billows
Is heard in Judea no more:
But the path of that lone Galilean
With joy I will follow to-day,
And the toils of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way.

There are so many hills to climb upward
I often am longing for rest,
But He who appoints me my pathway
Knows just what is needful and best.
I know in His Word He has promised
My strength it shall be as my day,
And the toils of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way.

He loves me too well to forsake me
Or give me one trial too much;
All His people have been dearly purchased
And Satan can never claim such.
Bye-and-bye I shall see Him and know Him
In the city of unending day,
And the toils of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way.

When the last feeble step has been taken
And the gates of the city appear,
And the beautiful song of the ransomed
Floats out on my listening ear,
When all that now seems so mysterious
Will be bright and as clear as the day,
All the toils of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way.

Though often I'm footsore and weary,
I'll rest when I'm safely at home;
I know I'll receive a glad welcome,
For the Savior Himself has said come,
So I'll sing when I'm weary in body,
And sinking in spirit will say,
"The toils of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way."

Cooling fountains are there for the thirsty,
 There are cordials for those who are faint;
 There are robes that are purer and whiter
 Than any that fancy could paint,
 So I'll try to pass hopefully onward,
 Thinking often through each weary day,
 All the toils of the road will seem nothing
 When I get to the end of the way.

The Power That Survives.

The series of world's fairs, which, since that at Philadelphia in 1876, has erected one "white city" after another, has not caused the middle-aged people of the middle West to forget the great exhibitions which annually for a series of years took place in Chicago, Cincinnati, and other cities.

From a near-by town came a village pastor to see the great annual exhibition in Chicago in its building, then new, on the lake front; and having a bent for mechanics, and some experience and skill, he soon sought the machinery; and wondering that machines so many and varied should be running with power from a single source, he found his way to the engine room.

There, to his amazement, he found the engine was one he had built himself.

He rubbed his eyes and looked again; he examined the giant from end to end; there was no doubt about it; it was his very own. He had crept through its great boilers before they had a single flue; he had crawled beneath them when they were first set up; he had witnessed and superintended the forging of every part; he had overseen the adjustment of every bolt and valve and rod; it was his own.

As a boy he had been bred a mechanic, and had become a skilled machinist in a Connecticut machine shop. His firm established a branch house at Buffalo, and put him in charge of it. The greatest single work of the branch under his administration was the building of a powerful engine for a mill in Chicago. Trusted with the responsibility for so great a work, he spared no effort to do it superbly well; and when the work was ready to be set up, he went to Chicago and built the engine into its place.

That first journey to the Middle West broadened his vision of life. He gave himself the more diligently to his work, and to reading, and in time took a course in theology, and entered the ministry. Returning, for his pastoral work, to the region which he had seen on the occasion of his one visit, he thought now and then of the errand which had brought him West before; but the Chicago fire had laid the city low, and the large mill was destroyed, and that chapter of his experience seemed to have left no memorial. It was, excepting to himself, as if it had not been. But when the debris of the fire was cleared away, the fine engine had been found but little injured; and in the great fair the builder, after he thought it to have perished, found it strong and steady, and doing work far beyond the dreams of the man who made it.

A few weeks ago this same minister, now and for many years a college professor and a writer of books, retired upon a Carnegie pension. In the quiet of a ripe and sweet old age, he waits for another transformation. And some of his friends have thought of his earlier experience as a parable.

When what we call life is ended, and the great change and seeming ruin of what we call death has come and gone, shall not he who is faithful stand at last beside every well-wrought piece of mechanism which he wrought in life, and find it not lost or hopelessly broken, but with marvelous and diversified uses for which it is adapted?

Our visions of the other life are dim. "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man" the reality of its glorious activities. But now and then this life affords some faint analogy which helps us to conjecture some of its blessed and beautiful occupations. And this we know: that every well-wrought purpose, every work of virtue and fidelity, every effort for the uplifting of the human race, every good deed done, even to one of the least of these, every life that builds faithfully and well has its imperishable heritage in the purpose of the Almighty. It is well for us to cherish all lessons that make real this truth, and assure us that our "labor is not in vain in the Lord."—Selected.

Request for Prayer.

Sr. Clara McNeil, Mount Ayr, Iowa: "I write again to ask the earnest prayers of the Saints in behalf of our family. We are greatly tried through sickness. I also need your prayers that I may be given greater wisdom in all things, especially along gospel lines."

Sr. Minnie Martin, Byrneville, Indiana: "As a humble sister, I ask the Saints everywhere to pray in behalf of my husband, Enoch Martin, that he no longer have a desire to practice the habits which are not pleasing to God. It seems when dark clouds surround him, as they do all of us, he has not power within himself to say, 'Get thee behind me Satan.' Pray that he will soon be found doing as God would have him."

The New Issue.

The time was when the Latter Day Saint ministry were facing the issue all the time and everywhere of proving the superiority of their doctrine and theological philosophy by the Scriptures. That time is passing. Those who because of their own diminutive theological stature fear us will practically abandon the clash.

Those having real confidence in their own lame philosophy meet us and soon retire to think it over, and either go with us or join the band of let alones who hold the Latter Day Saint marvel in respectful awe at arms' length, or at the point end of a popular pole.

But there is an issue upon which we will either make good shortly and at a more rapid pace than hitherto, or do a little retreating ourselves. That issue is couched in the brief statement quoted here from the lips of a resident schoolmaster of no mean ability. The occasion is this: The whole community at this place is aroused in the interest of the latter day message to such a point of thorough sifting and investigation of the work as is seldom seen. Bro. Hubert Case with yesterday's work has baptized eighteen souls here, nearly all of whom are socialists, which political philosophy, in this instance has proved a stepping-stone up to the entrance of the church.

There is also marked sign in confirmation of the work by open vision to the converts and such pronounced spiritual power that strong men break down and weep like children under the searching light.

The quotation which follows voices the sentiment which, because of its present hold upon the people, is to prove either a floodgate to progress or a dam of stagnation, the triumph of victory, or a dirge of Waterloo.

It is the one forelock handhold by which Mr. Opportunity may be grabbed, for the hurrying gentleman is bald behind.

"Any church, however perfect its precepts, which fails in this dire time to champion in a practical way the cause of the oppressed against the oppressor, is too short to be an attraction to the people." If we meet that issue successfully, it will be by doing great things as well as pronouncing grand and perfect philosophies.

If such sentiment as quoted above from the lips of a man who is earnestly seeking the light, were confined to some local corner, we might not be justified in naming it as a church issue, but the matter of correct adjustment of wealth, and of rightly championing the cause of the down-trodden and the oppressed is this very moment of such magnitude in the uppermost consideration of men everywhere that it constitutes an open door for such victories as this church has never yet seen, or a blockade for our undoing.

We must soon prove to be a city set on a hill that can not be hid, or a mere fuming wick, located in the dark only by a lightning-bug flicker, or by the stench of a pitiful curl of light colored smoke. Which shall it be?

With much faith for the former, and a fight for the latter, CALUMET, OKLAHOMA. JAMES E. YATES.

News From Missions

Nova Scotia.

Well, here is Nova Scotia with a word to say about this great latter day work.

Brothers MacGregor and Sheehy have left us, but the little spark they were blowing while here has actually begun to burn, and is now quite a flame.

Just think, Nova Scotia has two Sunday schools, a home department with over twenty members, and to put a climax on the whole thing we have started a series of prayer meetings, under the supervision of our priest, Leander Johnson, the first one being on September 3, which proved a decided success and was enjoyed by all present.

Our Sunday school at Glenville is certainly one that is hard to beat. How could it be otherwise when we have such an energetic worker as Bro. Kenneth Hyatt as superintendent? who is pushing it with his whole might; Bro. George McDonald, our Bible teacher, although new in this work, is hard to beat in leading a class; and we are proud to mention our organist, Sr. Cala Fillmore, who came into this church this summer and is taking a keen interest in Sunday school work. Every student, in fact, is putting forth his best efforts to help it along by carefully preparing every lesson and always being punctual. There are only two Saints in Glenville who have not been attending our Sunday school regularly, and we presume they have good excuse for staying away.

South Rawdon Saints are certainly taking a keen interest in the Sunday school lessons through the home department, and we have no doubt but that a Sunday school will be organized in that community early next spring. Anyone who is not enrolled in the home department and has not the privilege of attending our Sunday school is meeting with a great loss spiritually, and should at once write to the home department, box 23, Amherst, Nova Scotia, from which they will receive ready response giving full particulars. It has been said that "Man can not live by bread alone," which is just as applicable in Nova Scotia as any place, and we believe every Latter Day Saint should endeavor to live on that bread "that proceedeth out of the mouth of God," which is being fed through the home department.

Now we would appeal to every Saint who may read this, that they remember us in their prayers, that we may grow and become a fruitful field unto the Lord. Our desire is to ever press onward, leaning on that everlasting arm.

Yours in gospel bonds,

RALPH W. JOHNSON.

News From Branches

Independence Branch News.

It is near the middle of September, there is an abundance of verdure and even the fields and gardens yield a promise once more as in early spring, of a comparatively rich harvest.

The drought is over; but interspersed with copious showers are the burning sun rays. The days are sultry, and the heat oppressive. Taking a look backward for a short time we have witnessed many things to rejoice over and a few to regret.

Of the former is a midweek prayer meeting where nearly two hundred were present, and such a one as this was on Wednesday evening, August 30. Elders Lewis, Garrett, and Closson presided, and among those of the missionaries there, were Brn. William Aylor, Hale Smith, J. F. Curtis, and others, all of whom bore testimony to the manifestation of the power of God in vindication of the gospel work. Prejudices had been removed, the ingathering of the honest in heart was continuing, good liberty had been enjoyed, debates here and there had been conducted successfully, and a very commendable zeal, by the young, had been shown in many localities.

Speaking of the young we will make mention of the Religio meeting of September 1. The president, Bro. Mark H. Siegfried, opened the session with prayer, and after a song or two from Zion's Praises and the study hour was closed, a fine program was rendered, consisting of the reading of papers on social purity by Srs. J. A. Gardner and F. M. Smith; the former treating on the sin of ignorance, effect of the food we eat, the clothes we wear, and the pleasures we participate in. Sister Smith spoke particularly to the girls present, and remarked that much depends upon their ideals in life, and their duty is to shape their lives so as to reach their ideals. Home should be attractive and made beautiful by a really home atmosphere, made so by the efforts and lives of those who occupy them. Our sister had words of praise and encouragement for the girl who avoids bad habits, and is bright, intelligent, and optimistic.

The department was of course good, the president being a genial though strict disciplinarian. The attendance was not exactly what was desired by those interested, there having been only 215 present; the collection, $3.10.

To further dilate upon the work of the young of the branch we wish to inform our readers that some of our young people, (some of whom were recently students at Graceland) being intent upon further broadening out in the line of a higher education, have departed, or are about to take leave of home and its pleasant associations for distant localities; and among them, we hear of Sr. Mabel Mills, who is going to the University at Columbia, Missouri; Sr. Ruby Short to the New York School of Art; Bro. Harry Smith to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Boston; Bro. Alfred Hulmes will attend the University of Colorado; and Sr. Bertha Anderson, grand-daughter of Pres. Joseph Smith, the Kansas University at Lawrence.

These are sons and daughters of brethren who have for many years been active as ministers, and whose parents are toiling pioneers of the latter day work here, though a few have peacefully gone to rest. And for these young workers there is a sure promise and many a kind admonition set forth, in the words of our beloved prophet, as found in his late address at a church opening last July, published in the Ensign of September 7. Then too, for all the young and worthy aspirants to a life of higher usefulness, in all the church abroad, is a glorious hope extended, as in the wonderful vision, presented to one of God's noble servants, of which we read on page 13 of that precious little book, Memoirs of W. W. Blair.

Lack of space in these valuable columns will permit us to only mention the good instruction given the Saints from the pulpit lately while occupied by Brn. R. Bullard, B. J. Scott, and Edgar H. Smith.

We feel we have a sad duty to perform in noting the demise of our beloved brother, John Kaler, which occurred on Tuesday, the 12th inst.

"Let winds that blow from heaven
Refresh, dear Lord, the languid air;
And let the weakness of the flesh
Thy strength of Spirit share."

Sunday, September 10. How pleasant to return, after an absence of three Sundays, to teach the little tots in the Sunday school, although some dear faces are missed on account of whooping cough and scarlet fever; we hope and pray to see them soon. No greater enjoyment in my Christian life than to mingle with the little folks in songs of praise and adoration of our blessed Redeemer.

Morning sermon by Elder James Keir, from the West Side, making some excellent remarks as to placing more confidence in the Great Physician when we are ill, instead of so much in the substitute, and allowing the doctor to call day after day, and after one or two administrations growing weak in the faith, but trusting the earthly aids indefinitely. Evening discourse by Bro. H. P. W. Keir, taking for his text, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." If only we would be willing and strong enough to follow the good instruction received Sunday after Sunday, what a different influence many of us might exert on those with whom we come in contact.

Bro. J. A. Jaques, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, worshiped with us Sunday morning; also Bro. Daniel Jones and daughters, who are now located at 6418 Drexel Boulevard.

Monday evening business meeting in charge of Pres. E. J. Lang, and Clerk H. P. W. Keir.

Wednesday evening prayer meeting conducted by Elder McGahan and Bro. C. E. Cotton. What a glorious thing is life, but do we appreciate the life immortal as much as we should? Is it not worth all the suffering and sacrificing that are required here below?

Life is real, life is earnest,
And the grave is not its goal,
Dust thou art, to dust returnest,
Was not spoken of the soul.

New Albany, Indiana, and Louisville, Kentucky, Branches.

The work here is still progressive; at the New Albany side the faithful ones are striving on, and while our members are increasing but slowly, yet the spiritual growth is advancing, which is worthy of note.

E. A. Jeagers occupied the morning last Sunday and G. B. Miller the evening. The writer occupied to-night, while we had our regular sacrament services this morning.

The Religio and Sunday school work is on the mend. Our prayer services Wednesdays are strengthening to all that attend. We started a social service lately, and meet each Sunday just before preaching services, and any branch not having these meetings is missing a great opportunity.

At Louisville Branch, the writer and Bro. Henry Oliver presided at the monthly sacrament services last Sunday morning, the 3d. The influences of the Spirit were present in power, great consolation was given to four of the young men there, and the promise was that if faithful they would be a power for good in presenting the gospel story.

In the afternoon the writer led five precious Saints into the water, and confirmed them later in the evening, one young lady of about eighteen, one married lady, and three young men, aged from twenty to twenty-five years. It certainly is a noble experience for one to lead such young men and women into the Christ life. The promises were present to one young man in power at the confirmation. The writer occupied at night to a crowded house.

To-day, the 10th, Robert Willis occupied the morning hour, and E. A. Jeagers the evening hour. Brother Jeagers is taking advantage of telling the gospel story now, as he says he was for forty years in Catholicism and darkness and now wishes to pay for lost time.

Reunion Minutes.

DES MOINES.—Reunion of the Des Moines District met according to the decision of the previous reunion, Friday, August 25, 1911, at Colo, Iowa. At the business session, J. F. Mintun was chosen to preside, with Brn. O. Salisbury and J. W. Wight, associates; Ruth I. Mintun was chosen secretary, and W. Christy in charge of the music. Twelve tents besides the two large tents composed the camp. Brn. J. W. Wight, C. E. Butterworth, J. F. Mintun, E. A. Davis, S. M. Reiste, W. Christy, and O. Salisbury ministered the word. Twenty-nine sermons, two business sessions, ten prayer meetings, five institute sessions, and two regular Sunday school sessions were held. The gifts of the gospel were very markedly enjoyed. Six were baptized. The pleasure of the camp was increased by the healthy conditions that continued from first to last. It was decided to hold another reunion in 1912, at the same place, the time to be set by the committee; the same committee being continued. This was considered by all to be the best reunion in a spiritual way ever enjoyed in the district. Saints are already planning to attend the reunion of 1912. Ruth I. Mintun, secretary.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.—The annual reunion of the Southern California District convened on August 4, on the new grounds in Hermosa Beach. Conference was held with four sessions on three different days, in which all the regular business was transacted, and, owing to the resignation of T. W. Williams, in order to go to Kansas City, Nathaniel Carmichael was elected district president to succeed him. Bro. A. E. Jones, of San Bernardino, was elected associate president. R. T. Cooper reelected secretary. Sr. Annie Reynolds was elected on the library commission. A general good time was had by all present, with good harmony and fellowship, and, altogether, a good spirit prevailed. Preaching was done by T. W. Williams, Albert Carmichael, N. V. Sheldon, Paul M. Hanson, Fred Adam, and George Wixom, and some very stirring and energetic discourses were delivered, urging the Saints to more fully appreciate their opportunities and live up to their privileges and duties. Bro. Albert Carmichael, on behalf of the college and the Herald Office, did valuable field work and secured some results. We hope he may come again next year. Our new brethren, Sheldon and Hansen, are acquitting themselves well, and are certainly a valuable addition to the district. A great deal of extraordinary work was necessary in getting the new grounds in shape for occupancy, but all difficulties were surmounted, reduced rates were obtained from the railroads, and arrangements made by which the passenger trains were stopped at our grounds for passengers and baggage. The new cafeteria was in full operation. The building is thirty by sixty feet, equipped with an up-to-date range, and all of the dishes and kitchen furniture which we have acquired in former years, with the addition of some new material furnished the building very well. An experienced set of professional cooks were employed, with excellent results. Meals ready on time, and our own people relieved of the arduous work, so that everybody could attend services and enjoy the vacation. The entire body took action on all the improvements on the tract, stating their approval of the trees, sidewalks, streets, etc., all of which has been accomplished during the past year. It is hoped during the coming twelve months to sell enough more lots to build the auditorium and bath house. The meetings were held in the mornings and evenings, leaving most of the afternoons open for social intercourse and recreation on the beach, with the result that practically everyone attended all of the services and were rested and gave good attention to all that transpired. The beach proved to be all that its fondest supporters had claimed for it. Smooth, clean and even bottom, with no undertow, and safe for all parties. It was decided for next year to hold reunion for fifteen days instead of ten days, letting it last over three Sundays, allowing two morning sessions and two evening sessions for the Sunday school and Religio. The Sunday school and Religio each held two sessions this summer, all of which were well attended and successfully carried out. By action of the conference, it was decided to offer a prize of the three standard books of the church, Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, all in morocco binding, to the person who suggests the most suitable name for the new grounds, all names to be submitted to the secretary and passed upon by the reunion committee. This offer is to be held open until December 1, and in case the same name is submitted by two parties, the person from which the name is first received shall be awarded the prize. For the benefit of contestants, will say the grounds are on the slope of a hill, overlooking the ocean and surrounding country. They are situated inside the city limits of Hermosa Beach City, adjoining Shakespeare Beach, and it is the intention to have the grounds when fully equipped, not only for our own use, but available to any denomination or organization that may wish to rent them for convention purposes, such as the G. A. R., N. E. A., Sunday school conventions, or like institutions. The grounds are only three blocks, about 1,800 feet, from the ocean, reached by the electric line at a distance of about 1,600 feet, and the Santa Fe railroad passes directly along one end of the property, where passengers can be discharged or taken on, and baggage handled without inconvenience. Brother Williams expects to start for Kansas City the first of next week. Bro. Paul M. Hanson is now holding a discussion in Santa Ana with the Christian minister. We regretted the absence of Brother Sheehy and hope to have him with us soon. R. T. Cooper, secretary, Los Angeles, California, September 2, 1911.

NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA.—Second annual reunion of the New York and Philadelphia District met at Osborn's Point, near Manasquan, New Jersey, August 26, to September 4, 1911. Apostle U. W. Greene, of Boston, was chosen to preside, assisted by High Priest W. W. Smith, of Philadelphia, and High Priest W. E. LaRue, of New York. Bro. B. R. McGuire, secretary; Bro. Ephraim Squire, postmaster; Bro. Henry Carr, policeman; Bro. A. C. Potts, census taker. Aside from those mentioned there were present of the general church officers, Presiding Bishop E. L. Kelley, of Independence, Missouri, and General Church Secretary, R. S. Salyards, of Lamon, Iowa. Brn. William Anderson and E. B. Hull, of the missionary force. The music was in charge of Bro. Albert Hoxie as chorister, and Sr. Ella Squire as organist, and it was well rendered. The preaching during the reunion was by Brn. R. S. Salyards, W. W. Smith, W. E. LaRue, U. W. Greene, George W. Robley, E. B. Hull, William Anderson, and Bishop E. L. Kelley. The daily program was as follows: 9:30 a. m., prayer meeting; 10:45, a lecture on some educational topic, followed by an open conference. The subjects used were, "The field of Sunday school work," "Daily vacation Bible school work," "The priesthood; deportment and conduct." These meetings proved to be very interesting. The reunion grounds are situated on the Manasquan River, an inlet that runs out to sea about four miles distant. The water is about half salt and half fresh, and shallow—very little affected by the tides. The grounds are covered with a beautiful grove of pine trees and far removed from the noise of the city, they afford a quiet, restful place. While in camp, it is said that the heaviest rain in fifty years fell; day after day it poured down, and it was wonderful how cheerfully everyone seemed to take to their undesirable surroundings. While in prayer meeting on the first Sunday morning the water was falling in torrents; water was running through under the tent, so that several ditches had to be made, but notwithstanding this the people were undisturbed in their devotions and the presence of the Holy Spirit was visibly manifest. Owing to the inclemency of the weather and the place being some distance from the thickly populated districts, very few of those outside the church were present at the preaching services. There is a disposition on the part of many to have the reunion at an earlier date during the season, and also to have it on the ocean front, where we may enjoy the delights of real sea bathing and where we may draw more to our meetings from the outside world. The matter of time and place of the reunion next year has been referred to a competent committee, who no doubt will do the best that can be done under the circumstances. After the strenuous work of the vacation school workers and the daily toilers along other lines, it has been most beneficial to have an outing, a season of rest, of social and spiritual enjoyment such as we had at this reunion. A motto graced the pulpit during the reunion: "We are here to work," and on the last day this was changed thus: "We go home to work." Press Committee, September 7, 1911.

NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA.—The reunion at Manasquan, New Jersey, is over, and no longer will the bell call us from slumber or tell us when to go to bed. The situation of the camp ground was excellent, and the committee deserve much credit for their commendable work. For several days we had rain, downpours, showers, and sheets of rain, but we were happy notwithstanding these discomforts. The services were well attended, and the war of the elements did not prevent the Holy Spirit from coming to us in sweet assurance of our acceptance with God. The last few days of the reunion were delightful, and in the joy of the sunshine we forgot the chill of the storm. Apostle U. W. Greene and his associates made the preaching services of a high order, while the prayer services were spiritual and helpful. The young Saints of the district took an active part in the services and made them bright and cheerful. Bishop E. L. Kelley came to camp on Wednesday and the weather cleared up at once. Brother "Absolutely" (Richard) Salyards was a prominent figure of the reunion, and the longer he was with the people in this eastern country, the harder it was to part with him, for he endeared himself to us all. Bro. Albert Hoxie was with us, and as usual was the life of the camp. When you combine violinist, chorister, captain of a beautiful sailing craft (?) and last but not least, "Big Indian Chief" in one man, it is likely to keep one quite busy. Between services we had boat rides, bathing, etc. We seemed to be a little unfortunate in not being able to discover the "Jonah" of the camp, until five or six persons went out in the boat while it was raining for a sail; a good breeze was blowing; the sail filled; the boat moved majestically from the shore; "hard a lee" shouted Captain Hoxie; the good boat tried as best it could to obey the order, but fate was against it. As the crew sank suddenly from sight, one of them was heard to say, "Oh, for a prairie schooner." Needless to say, they were all "absolutely" wet; one among them was declared to be the "Jonah." Long live Manasquan. George W. Robley.

Conference of the Western Michigan District will be held in Cadillac on October 21 and 22. This date has been determined upon for the reason that we can have the minister in general charge, F. A. Smith, with us, and we believe all will appreciate the effort of Brother Smith to be present. One year ago a resolution prevailed, as follows: "Resolved, That hereafter the conference charge fifteen cents a meal, and if any come who are not able to pay, that they be entertained free." All who intend coming bear this fact in mind. The Cadillac Branch will give due notice as to manner and place of serving meals. No charge for sleeping accommodations. The matter of charging for meals at a western Michigan conference is a new thing, and we trust that everyone that possibly can will attend, as considerable business of importance is to come before the body. Our annual election also occurs at this conference. On Friday preceding the conference the conventions will be held, the Religio convention occupying the morning and the Sunday school the afternoon. Report blanks and credentials will soon be sent to all schools and we call attention to the fact that the last convention ordered the schools to get the credentials to the secretary at least two weeks before the convention, so that a committee may be appointed early and have the report prepared before the convention, and in this way save considerable time. Please act in harmony with the above. H. A. Doty, secretary.

The General Reader's Ideal Scientific Book.

W. E. Castle, of Harvard University, in his three page review in Science of R. C. Punnett's Mendelism which was published a few weeks ago, states that Doctor Punnett has shown "that a scientific book need not be dull," adding that "Mendelism is as entertaining as a novel."

That the volume does not sacrifice scholarship to easy reading is in Professor Castle's opinion, a notable achievement. Of the accuracy of the work the reviewer says: "It contains the clearest and best account of the rise and present condition of the science of genetics that has yet been published in any language. . . . For the beginner or the general reader who wants within moderate compass a sane and well balanced account of what has been accomplished in this field the book is almost ideal."

"Des Moines Capital."

The Des Moines Capital can be secured daily from the present date until January 1, 1912, for 50 cents. This is an exceptionally good offer, and should be taken advantage of at once in order to secure full benefits. Send in your subscription to the Des Moines Capital, Des Moines, Iowa.

Was it long ago, or was it but yesterday, that we prayed for strength to perform a certain duty, to bear a certain burden, to overcome a certain temptation, and received it? Do we dream that the divine force was exhausted in answering that one prayer? No more than the great river is exhausted by turning the wheels of one mill. Put it to the proof again with to-day's burden, to-day's temptation. Thrust yourself further and deeper into the stream of God's power, and feel it again as you have felt it before, able to do exceedingly abundantly. Remember and trust.—Henry Van Dyke.

Not enough, either, is the sentiment in that touching word of Jean Paul Richter, "How much ought I not to forgive, for we shall remain so short a time together?" There is something so much better. It is to look deep enough into him, to the possibilities that lie there. It is that my brother, with his evil, is in the way to being good, and that my forgiveness and love will help him thitherward.—J. Brierly.

I should have no objection to a repetition of life from the beginning, only asking the advantages authors have in a revised edition to correct some faults in the first.—Franklin.

The spacious firmament on high,
With all the blue ethereal sky,
And spangled heavens, a shining frame,
Their great Original proclaim.

—Joseph Addison (1672-1719).

Cheerfulness is like money well expended in charity; the more we dispense of it, the greater our possession.—Victor Hugo.

Let us continue, in spite of all, to act, to love, and to hope as though we had to do with an ideal of humanity. This ideal is only a vaster reality than that which we behold. The failings of individuals no more impair the general purity and innocence than the waves on the surface, according to the aeronauts, when seen from a certain height, trouble the profound limpidity of the sea.—Maeterlinck.

There is no communion possible among men who believe only in hearsay. Only in a world of sincere men is unity possible, and there, in the long run, it is as good as certain.—Carlyle.

God has made you after his own plan, and he places you just where he wishes you to work with him, to bring about the higher results for yourself. He has given you every opportunity. Make yourself what you will—remember, it lies with you. God can make no mistake.—A. F. Palmer.

To-night I look on life a finished thing,
Complete, made on a pattern of His own,
For every gift that He denied my prayers
A better thing was given. I should have known
He would not let me stray. Compelled by His Stern chastisements, I sought the better part.
Because He had His way I have a richer
Grace, a stronger faith, a purer heart.
His love has fitted me to feel at home
With Him and His. I see, with clearing sight,
The infinite wisdom of His ways; for now
To me, at eventime, has come the light.

—Stella McNall.

I want a warm and faithful friend
To cheer the adverse hour;
Who ne'er to flatter will descend,
Nor bend the knee to power.
A friend to chide me when I'm wrong,
My inmost soul to see;
And that my friendship prove as strong
To him as his to me.

—John Quincy Adams.

It is aspiration that counts, not realization; pursuit not achievement; quest, not conquest.—Beatrice Harraden.

The lover never sees personal resemblances in his mistress to her kindred or to others. His friends find in her a likeness to her mother, or her sisters, or to persons not of her blood. The lover sees no resemblance except to summer evenings, and diamond mornings, to rainbows and the songs of birds.—Emerson.

Do you fear the force of the wind,
The slash of the rain?
Go face them and fight them,
Be savage again.

Go hungry and cold like the wolf,
Go wade like the crane:
The palms of your hands will thicken.

The skin of your cheek will tan,
You'll grow ragged and weary and swarthy,
But you'll walk like a man!
—Hamlin Garland.

These are thy glorious works, parent of good—
Almighty, thine this universal frame,
Thus wondrous fair; thyself how wondrous then!
Unspeakable, who sit'st above these heavens,
To us invisible or dimly seen.
In these thy lowest works; yet these declare
Thy goodness beyond thought and pow'r divine.
—Milton.

He that hath wife and children hath given hostages to fortune; for they are impediments to great enterprises, either of virtue or mischief.—Francis Bacon.

Is this, then, life? 'Tis glorious, so fair!
The sweet, soft breezes playing round our rest,
The summer fragrance growing everywhere,
The happy birds low cooing in the nest.
What meant the fear with which we put on life?
It is all good, and hope comes after joy
Come anything in this delightful strife,
Storms can not daunt us, sunshine can not cloy.
—Sarah Williams.

Time brings only one regret—that he had not more joy in the things that were, more belief, more patience, more love, more knowledge of the way things work out, more willingness to help toward the final result.—Jennie June.

There is no happiness in the world into which love does not enter; but love is the discovery of ourselves in others, and the delight in the recognition.—Alexander Smith.

Who keeps one end in view makes all things sure.—Brown- ing.

Purge from our hearts the stains so deep and foul.
Of wrath and pride and care;
Send Thine own holy calm upon the soul,
And bid it settle there!—Anon.

Many the joys I have welcomed, many the joys that have passed,
 But this is the good unfeeling, and this is the peace that shall last:
 From love that dies and love that lies and love that must cling and sting,
 Back to the arms of our sisters we turn for our comforting.
 —Theodosia Garrison.

You may do much harm by indiscreet praise and by indiscreet blame; but remember, the chief harm is always done by blame.—John Ruskin.

Manners are an art. Some are perfect, some commendable, some faulty; but there are none that are of no moment. How comes it that we have no precepts by which to teach them, or, at least, no rule whereby to judge them, as we judge sculpture and music?—Joubert.

Help a Foreign Mission

The church owns its own printing plant in Australia, but has to pay a heavy rent for the business premises it occupies. The Australian Saints are trying to raise a TWO THOUSAND DOLLAR FUND, to build an office of our own. Already a considerable sum has been donated.

To help this fund, an American edition of a four-hundred page book, entitled

THE FALL OF BABYLON

BY ELDER W. J. HAWORTH

is being printed at this office. It treats upon the Apostasy and Restoration, and incidentally upon every gospel subject. The very book to hand round among the friends to whom you wish to teach the Restored Gospel. It contains, also, a large number of illustrations.

POSSIBILITY

There is no argument but what a diseased horse can be turned into grass and in 90 days will be almost a new horse. You say, "How is this?" Grass is the food created and designated for the horse. The natural food. If the horse is worked hard, to grass or hay we add oats, corn, bran and mill feed. Why don't you feed the horse 100 other foolish things? You say it is not necessary. Now, stop, listen, think, and reason. Man is classed in the animal kingdom of the herbivorous kind, not carnivorous. The one particular food created and designated for man is wheat. The only food that has all the elements to rebuild the body and maintain perfect health in the natural condition. Will you test the Good Health Flour made from the largest select grains, the outer hull removed, the muscle, brain, nerve, bone and tooth elements perfectly arranged? It will make you feel like a new man. If not more than pleased, it will not cost you a penny. Private information given free

THE SIN OF JEALOUSY.

Whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men?—1 Corinthians 3: 3.

"The jealous man poisons his own banquet,—and then eats it."

Some men are so unfortunately constituted that every success of another seems to them to detract from their own success. They fear every man who shows some talent, lest he take their place. If in power, they are disposed to beat down every head that shows itself above the multitude, lest it be the head of a successor.

Such an attitude of mind is to be deplored. It works injury to the cause of God wherever it is manifested by one of his servants. It indicates that the gospel has not been permitted to do its full work with the individual. Away down in the human heart there burns a little mean fire of envy and hatred toward the successful brother. It is the work of the Devil to fan this fire; it is the work of the gospel to extinguish it. The gospel will do this work if we permit it to, but not if we guard and cherish the smoldering embers.

That branch, district, stake, Sunday school, or Religio is unfortunate that has in it a man or woman who is afraid to assist others, or to give them a chance to work and develop, lest they outstrip him or her. The true policy was expressed by the aged elder who during a certain district reunion some years ago was admonished thus: "You will have to look out or some of these young preachers will cast you older ones in the shade." He replied, "I do not care how many of them get ahead of me, so long as I am doing the best I can. I will get behind them and help push them along, and thank God that the church has such able men to defend her cause."

This aged man will live and die unvexed in spirit if he continues to maintain that attitude. But the man who is jealous of his brethren can never be happy. He can not enjoy his own blessings and opportunities and successes because he is bitterly watching another. He can not rejoice in the success of others because his soul has not yet climbed to that pure height of unselfishness. As the proverb says: "He poisons his own banquet,—and then eats it."

To be able to rejoice fully and without reservation in the success of others is a happy achievement, within the reach of all. To envy the ability or success of another is a very stupid and serious blunder. Are we not all in this church work together? When one is honored all are honored. When one succeeds all succeed. Every strong and true man or woman that the church develops is so much gain to us all. Instead of envying such a man his prowess we should hail him as a fighting comrade. He will help us to solve the problems that confront us. He helps us to hold our own defense against a hostile world. By him we are all made secure. His strength adds so much to the sum total of the strength of the church. We all fight forward a little to the spot where he has planted the colors. We gain a little ground. Thank God. Send us more such men. Cursed be the hand that would pull the colors down because the color bearer is disliked.

In every branch, district, stake, Sunday school, Religio, or any department of church work whatsoever, the effort should be made unreservedly to help one another, to develop and foster talent, and to give to each the best possible opportunity to work. The field is broad and there is room for all.

COLLEGE DAY.

Graceland College opens for the fall term under very favorable auspices. The enrollment is double that of last year.

During a recent visit to the college we were very favorably impressed with the general tone of the institution. It was after class hours, and the students who occupy the dormitories were all busy and apparently happy.

Those who fear that college life will make our boys idle or effeminate should have seen the college boys digging in the trench and performing other hard muscular labor in connection with erecting the new heating plant, a separate building put up entirely by student labor, and to be equipped to heat the college building and both dormitories.

The girls were busy in the kitchen, at quilt making, and other work, securing a practical course in domestic science and at the same time paying their way.

The whole animated scene was very pleasing, and the spiritual and moral tone of the place quite in contrast with that of some other similar institutions.

Under the supervision of Brother Berve many things have been done to make the students more comfortable. Both dormitories have been equipped with bath rooms, with hot and cold water, and complete system of sewerage. The dining room has been papered and decorated so that it presents an extremely neat and homelike appearance. These are a few of the many improvements that have been made, and others are under way.

In this connection we are pleased to publish the following letter from the trustees, calling your attention to "College Day":

LAMONI, IOWA, September 15, 1911.

To the Branch Presidents of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints; Dear Brother: Sunday, October 1, is College Day—the one day in the year when all have the privilege to help in its work. (Conference Resolutions 563, 573.)

Graceland College starts the new year in better shape than ever before. The enrollment is the largest we have ever had; it is double that at the opening of any recent years. Financially also, it is in better condition, and a most earnest effort is being made for economy in every department, and to put as many departments as possible on a paying basis. Our plans for improvement this past summer have been not what would be helpful or beneficial alone, but what is necessary for preservation of the present buildings and efficient work. This work has been done almost wholly by students, and their wages apply on board and tuition this school year.

The church in 1830 to 1844 was a pioneer in education, both in Missouri and at Nauvoo. Many of the revelations favored education on the broadest possible plan. (See Doctrine and Covenants 43: 3; 55: 2; 57: 5; 85: 21, 36; 87: 5; 90: 4, 5, 12; 94: 2.) Not all of these refer to the education of young people. In fact, several refer to the School of the Prophets and other parts of the church work. But the principle of the broadest possible education and knowledge for the people and ministry of the church of God is repeatedly urged.

At the General Conference of 1869, the position of the church was so clearly elucidated, and the plan now in force at Graceland College so clearly set forth, that we would urge you to read it carefully. (See Church History, vol. 3, p. 520.)

It is unfortunate that colleges are not self-sustaining. All institutions of liberal education are largely endowed. The amount that Graceland requires is surprisingly small. But we need means, not only for the coming year, but also to reduce the debt handed down from previous years, and so we urge a liberal donation. The Temporary Endowments have been well subscribed, but for some reason the July, 1911, payments have not been good. The College Day collection offers an opportunity for all, whether subscribers to the endowment fund or not, to help according to their several abilities.

We would respectfully suggest and request, that instead of reading this letter to the branch, you present the matter to the Saints in person, in your own words at one of your services. Then as soon as those who desire to contribute have done so, kindly forward the amount to J. A. Gunsolley, Treasurer of Graceland College, Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa.

Thanking you for your kind assistance,

Your brethren in the gospel,

A. CARMICHAEL,
F. B. BLAIR,
C. F. SMITH,
S. A. BURGESS,

FRED M. SMITH,
DANIEL ANDERSON,
R. J. LAMBERT,

Board of Trustees, Graceland College.

Graceland College is doing a noble work for the young people of the church—those who are able to take advantage of her opportunities—and means should be placed at her disposal so that it could be put within the reach of many others to attend. Remember Graceland College on College Day.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

INTERIOR OF MORMON TEMPLE PHOTOGRAPHED.—It appears from reports published in the Salt Lake Tribune that a disaffected member of the Mormon Church has succeeded in surreptitiously taking a series of photographs of the interior of the Mormon Temple at Salt Lake City. These photographs, sixty-eight in number, show almost every nook and corner of the interior, and what is more interesting, are alleged to show entries in important temple records, including records of plural marriages. These negatives were sold to an eastern man, a motion picture man, who wrote to Joseph F. Smith offering the negatives for sale, and saying that if the church did not purchase them he would sell them to post card manufacturers, lecture bureaus, magazines, and others who would give them wide publicity. Joseph F. Smith very properly replied that he would not deal with receivers of stolen property. While not holding any very profound personal respect for the sanctity of the Salt Lake Temple, it is the property of the Utah Church and by them is regarded as sacred, and we can but deprecate the dishonest and underhanded methods of obtaining these views and the veiled threat used in an effort to extort money from the leaders of that denomination.

THE UPPER ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY.—Press reports are to the effect that Mrs. Ogden Mills, of Newport, is endeavoring to draw social lines more closely and reduce the original upper four hundred of polite society to the more select sum of one hundred and fifty,—with herself as the first unit. She is opposed by Mrs. Drexel, who aspires to be the society leader, and a battle of rival receptions, balls, and foolish functions is in progress. It is said that Mr. Drexel has given his wife the sum of two hundred thousand dollars as an entertainment fund for the season,—and she is spending it. The busy world goes on, paying little attention to the antics of these society leaders; but as a whole their influence is bad. Some day society as a whole will challenge the right of any woman to spend two hundred thousand dollars which she never earned, in riotous living, when there are so many legitimate demands for money to be used in improving the conditions of those who are really doing the world's work and creating the wealth of the world. The old excuse that such people make work for others while they are wasting their substance is no longer accepted. They only take men and women from legitimate employment and make of them footmen, lady's maids, and flunkies.

PHILOSOPHY OF THE "CLOSED SHOP."—We are most intolerant of the things which we least understand. Investigation sometimes softens our censure of others, because we discover that they are in the grip of circumstances, and choose one of two courses, neither of which they think perfect, but one of which promises more good and less evil than the other. In the American Magazine for September, Clarence Darrow, the noted attorney who defended Moyer and Haywood, gives labor's defense of the "closed shop." Briefly and inadequately to review: His justification of the trade union is that put forward by John Mitchell and his associates years ago; namely, that the individual laborer stands no show when bargaining with organized capital. If one man who works for a factory, mine, or railroad protests on the ground that his wage is inadequate, his hours too long, or his working quarters not sanitary, he is told that if he does not like the job he can quit, hundreds are waiting for it. But if several thousand laborers by concerted action present such a plea they command respect. By organized protest the unions have helped to emancipate women and children from unnatural toil and to reduce the hours of toil and raise the standard of living among laborers. So union men have come to regard the union as the salvation of the laboring man, and his only defense in the hard struggle for existence in modern industry. The nonunion man he regards as his greatest obstacle; opposing the union at every turn and helping to defeat it in times of stress, yet profiting by every gain in wages, shortening of hours, or bettering of conditions so hardly won by the union man. The open shop is supposed to put union and nonunion men on an equality, but is in fact a weapon to break the union, because the employer naturally favors the nonunion man because he is most yielding, and the open shop becomes "the open door through which the union man goes out and the nonunion man comes in to take his place." Thus it will be seen that the union man regards the union as the only hope of the laboring man, and believing that the open shop is fatal to unionism, he decides for the closed shop, conscious, if he is intelligent, that his course seems unfair to nonunion men, and in fact does result in evil in some cases, but believing it to be the best course open to him under existing conditions and in a world that is largely ruled by selfishness. These are the main points in an article that may well be read by those who like to "hear the other side," even though they may not agree with it.

TO THE LAW AND TO THE TESTIMONY.—Religious teachers have drifted a long way from the old ideal which recognized the word of God as the final standard by which all doctrinal teaching must be tested. As an example of this we refer to a statement made before a great assembly of leading ministers, representing most of the leading denominations, held in New York City on the first day of last December, to consider the needs of the country church. The question of doctrinal teaching was up for consideration. Dr. Warren H. Wilson was the speaker. He referred to the "seed train" specials now being sent out to teach the farmers to test seed corn, and said that we need some such way of testing doctrine. He said: "We would have abroad our 'seed train,' which shall test the doctrine in the country churches, a professor of sociology and a professor of economics; a representative of scientific agriculture, a country doctor, and a well-to-do farmer." (Rural Church and Community Betterment, page 23.) According to this idea, doctrinal teaching to be sound must please the sociologist, the economist, the scientific agriculturist, the doctor, and the well-to-do farmer,—no one of whom may know or care anything about God's views in the matter. We need to get back to the old standard: "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

INTEMPERANCE AMONG COLLEGE STUDENTS.—Emperor William, of Germany, has taken occasion several times during recent years to warn German students to moderate their drinking habits. Beer drinking bouts are and always have been features of German university life. But now the kaiser declares that times have changed and students must give more attention to athletics and less attention to the flowing bowl. He presents the American universities as models in this regard. But close on the heels of a speech of this kind, delivered at Cassel, where he himself was prepared for the university, comes a statement from R. T. Crane, of Chicago, a multi-millionaire who has investigated the larger American universities, and declares that they tolerate drunkenness, gambling, brawling, and other immoralities. Few American institutions of learning of the more prominent type are exempt from this sweeping condemnation. Take Harvard, for example. According to Crane's statistics, 90 per cent of the students drink in their freshman year, 95 per cent in their senior year, and 15 per cent of them go irretrievably to the bad. But bad as Harvard is, Yale is worse, and Princeton and Cornell are nearly as culpable. If the above charges made by Mr. Crane are true, conditions in our larger universities and colleges are deplorable. No doubt the best moral tone is to be found in the smaller western colleges. Many of the students at Yale and Harvard are the sons of rich men, and their influence on the other young men of moderate means is entirely bad. The smaller colleges are filled with young men who have not the time, money, or inclination to dissipate. Preeminent among them all for moral standing we place Graceland College. There is a reason for Graceland, as those will discover who investigate modern college life.

Sister Herrick, Quincy, Illinois, desires some of the elders to come and labor there. She may be addressed in care of Miss Lizzie Morgan, 1023 Maine street, Quincy, Illinois.

HESPERIS.—The Herald Office is getting out an edition de luxe of Hesperis, or Poems by Father and Son, a selection of poems by Elder E. A. Smith from the poems of his father, and from his own productions. This edition will be illustrated, and there will be but two hundred printed. Plates have not been made, the linotype slugs have been destroyed, and hence those desiring copies must get their orders in early. A splendid Christmas present in binding de luxe at $2.50 per copy. Address orders to Herald Publishing House, Lamon, Iowa.

BOOKS REVIEWED.

ABSOLUTE LIFE ON TRIAL.—Our readers will remember the recent sensational trial in Chicago of Evelyn Arthur See on the charge of maintaining improper relations with Mona Rees and Mildred Bridges. See was founder of the "Junior Commonwealth," "prophet of a new revelation," and founder of "Absolute Life," which was to lead to the propagation of a "new race." Evidently the trial did not kill the movement; in fact it seems to have received new impetus, and prominent in its propagation is Mona Rees, who figured in the trial. From her hand we have received a book of over three hundred pages, called Absolute Life on Trial, setting forth the nature of the recent trial at law and outlining the teachings of the Absolute Life movement. The new movement seems to have in it considerable of Hindoo mysticism, or perhaps the vagaries of a diseased mind; but this will not prevent its ready acceptance by those who love the mysterious. The following is a sample paragraph: "The arrival of absolute life is the awakening of man to a new consciousness, is the ascension of the race to a higher order of humanity. Man passes out of his thought into the inner realities of life where instead of his thought being a speculation about his truth it becomes an interpretation of that truth. In absolute life man rises above his own will. He lives in that which is prior to the will, in that of which the will is organ. The power is not in the man to will to do anything different from what is in his spirit, from what is the true order of the new life to which he has come." (Absolute Life Press, 2608 Racine avenue, Chicago, Illinois. $1.50.)

LETTERS TO A MINISTERIAL SON.—This book claims to consist of the letters of a hard-headed business man to his son who has entered the ministry. The title-page says, "By a man of the world." But the criticism has been made that the book has the appearance of having been written by a minister, so it may not be so disingenuous as we might suppose. (The Pilgrim Press, Boston, Massachusetts.)

JUNGLE TRAILS AND JUNGLE PEOPLE.—Caspar Whitney has written an interesting story of travel in the Far East—India, Sumatra, Malay, and Siam—under the title given above. It is a three hundred page book, illustrated, and will be interesting to those who delight to read of travels, and adventures in strange lands. (Harper Brothers, Franklin Square, Boston, Massachusetts. Cloth $3.00.)

HALF A MAN.—Under the auspices of the Greenwich House Committee on Social Investigations, Miss Mary White Ovington has made a thorough study of the status and development of the negro, particularly in New York City, since the days of the pioneer colony of New Amsterdam. The results of her investigations are compiled in a volume under the striking title, Half a Man. As the title indicates, she holds that the negro in the North has reached a stage where he is granted half the privileges of a man. This, according to the preface, is not because the negro is inferior to other races, but because his race and color are a burden such as the white man does not have to bear. The sentiment is expressed: "The negro of our times carries even more heavily the burden of racial descent than did the Jew of an earlier period." (Longmans, Green, and Company, Fourth avenue and Thirtieth street, New York City.)

We may leave retribution for sin out of our scheme of things as they should be for others. Each sin takes care of itself, and burns and blisters as it strikes in. Men may suffer without giving outward sign. Justice is never cheated and we may trust her workings alone.—Harriett Comstock in Joyce of the North Woods.

ANOTHER ERROR.

Chapter six of Mormonism Against Itself opens with the caption, "The Book of Mormon: A Modern Production."

Is it a fact that Elder Traum has "returned from an investigation," as he states in the first part of chapter 1, without discovering a reason for the migration of Joseph's descendants to America? Well, we must enlighten his mind along this line. Had he read without blinding prejudice, from the Book of Jacob, page 127, Palmyra edition, he would have been wary of the statement revealing the partial investigation he has made. The purpose of God therein expressed reads thus:

Wherefore, thus saith the Lord, I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem, by the power of mine arm, that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph. Wherefore, I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: for there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none: for I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women. And whoredoms are an abomination before me: thus saith the Lord of hosts.

In a previous chapter we have stated the general idea in the purpose of God "determining the bounds of man's habitation," i. e., "that they might feel after him (God) and find him," Acts 17. We can well conclude the point with the language of Jesus: "That it might be fulfilled, which was spoken by the prophets," Joseph's descendants were led to the landed estate promised them.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL'S MISTAKE.

On pages 88 and 89, Mr. Traum brings Alexander Campbell to his rescue. The statement of Mr. Campbell is here presented:

First, Smith, its real author, as ignorant and impudent a knave as ever wrote a book, betrays the cloven foot upon a false fact, or pretended fact, which makes God a liar. It is this: With the Jews, God made a covenant at Mount Sinai, and instituted a priesthood and an high priesthood. The priesthood he gave to the tribe of Levi, and the high priesthood to Aaron and his sons, for an everlasting priesthood. He separated Levi, and covenanted to give him this office irrevocably, while ever the temple stood, or till Messiah came. "Then," says God, "Moses shall appoint Aaron and his sons, and they shall wait on their priest's office, and the stranger [the person of another family] who cometh nigh shall be put to death" (Numbers 3: 10). "And the priests, and the sons of Levi, shall come near; for them the Lord thy God hath chosen to minister unto him, and to bless in the name of the Lord; and by their word shall every controversy and every stroke be tried" (Deuteronomy 21: 5). Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, with two hundred and fifty men of renown, rebelled against a part of the institution of the priesthood, and the Lord destroyed them in the presence of the congregation. This was ever a memorial that no stranger invade any part of the office of the priesthood. Fourteen thousand and seven hundred people were destroyed for murmuring against this memorial.

In the eighteenth chapter of Numbers, the Levites are again given to Aaron, and the priesthood confirmed with this threat: "The stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death," "Even Jesus," said Paul, "were he on earth, could not be a priest; for he was of a tribe concerning which Moses spake nothing concerning the priesthood" (Hebrews 7: 13). So irrevocable was the grant of the priesthood to Levi, and the high priesthood to Aaron, that no stranger dare approach the altar of God which Moses established. Hence, Jesus himself was excluded from officiating as a priest on earth according to law.

This Joseph Smith overlooked in his impious fraud, and makes his hero spring from Joseph. And just as soon as his sons return with the roll of his lineage ascertaining that he was of the tribe of Joseph, he and his sons acceptably "offer sacrifices and burnt offerings to the Lord." Nephi becomes chief artificer, shipbuilder and mariner; was scribe, prophet, priest and king to his own people, and consecrated Jacob and Joseph, the sons of his father, priests of God and teachers, almost six hundred years before the fullness of times of the Jewish economy was completed. Nephi represents himself withal as "under the law of Moses." They built a new temple in the New World, and in fifty-five years after they leave Jerusalem make a new priesthood which God approbates. A high priest is also consecrated, and yet they are all the while teaching the law of Moses, and exhorting the people to keep it.—Mormonism Against Itself, pp. 88, 89.

The opening words by Mr. Campbell are characteristic of a bigot, and stating the "false fact"—shades of murry!—or "pretended fact" in which he accuses Joseph Smith of betraying "the cloven foot," he immediately falsifies the Bible, and himself makes God a liar. He says that God made a covenant at Mount Sinai and instituted a priesthood and an high priesthood, whereas the Bible teaches that God instituted the priesthood and priests long before he made the covenant at Sinai. Priests were among the Israelites before the covenant was written or agreed upon by Israel; proof is found in Exodus 19: 20-24, A. V.:

And the Lord came down upon mount Sinai, on the top of the mount: and the Lord called Moses up to the top of the mount; and Moses went up. And the Lord said unto Moses, Go down, charge the people, lest they break through unto the Lord to gaze, and many of them perish. And let the priests also, which come near to the Lord, sanctify themselves, lest the Lord break forth upon them. And Moses said unto the Lord, The people can not come up to mount Sinai: for thou chargedst us, saying, Set bounds about the mount, and sanctify it. And the Lord said unto him, Away, get thee down, and thou shalt come up, thou and Aaron with thee: but let not the priests and the people break through, to come up unto the Lord, lest he break forth upon them.

These priests were officiating in office long before the tables of the law were given as is evidenced by the words, "And let the priests also which come near the Lord, sanctify themselves. Again:

And take thou unto thee Aaron thy brother, and his sons with him, from among the children of Israel, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office, even Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar, Aaron's sons. And thou shalt make holy garments for Aaron thy brother, for glory and for beauty. And thou shalt speak unto all that are wisehearted, whom I have filled with the spirit of wisdom, that they may make Aaron's garments to consecrate him, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office.—Exodus 28: 1-3. A. V.

According to this text, Aaron and his sons were inducted into an office previously existing, and well understood in Israel. The priesthood was instituted before, or Moses was not a priest, whereas the Bible affirms:

Exalt ye the Lord our God, and worship at his footstool; for he is holy. Moses and Aaron among his priests, and Samuel among them that call upon his name; they called upon the Lord and he answered them. He spake unto them in the cloudy pillar: they kept his testimonies, and the ordinance that he gave them.—Psalm 99: 5-7, A. V.

After the sons of Levi were set apart to administer, it was called Levitical priesthood. This was done when Israel had journeyed from "Gudgodah to Jotbath, a land of rivers of waters," as we learn in Deuteronomy 10: 8. Paul affirms that "under the Levitical priesthood the people received the law," i. e., the ceremonial law of carnal commandments, as he calls it, given by Moses. If they received the law under that priesthood, the priesthood existed before the law, and was not instituted, as Campbell and Traum suppose, for the express purpose of executing those rights and ceremonies, nor at Sinai.

Melchisedec, King of Salem, was a priest, and occupying an office in the priesthood. He "blessed Abraham, and brought forth bread and wine, and he was the priest of the Most High God." (Genesis 14: 18, 19.) This was more than four hundred years before the covenant at Sinai.

PRIESTS, NOT OF LEVI.

Now, why didn't Mr. Campbell, theologian that he professed to be, or Mr. Traum, give us the proof that none outside of the tribe of Levi, under any circumstances whatever, can officiate in the priest's office. If they have assumed this position to be true, why do they not marshal the texts supportive of their contention, and submit them to examination? Are they fearful that the Bible is against them, and their baseless assumptions will stand exposed? That is just what will be shown, and the foundation of this narrow structure removed, the structure falls.

Samuel, of the tribe of Ephraim, offered a sucking lamb to the Lord as a "burnt offering":

And the children of Israel said to Samuel, Cease not to cry unto the Lord our God for us, that he will save us out of the hand of the Philistines. And Samuel took a sucking lamb, and offered it for a burnt offering wholly unto the Lord: and Samuel cried unto the Lord for Israel; and the Lord heard of him.—Samuel 7: 8, 9, A. V.

Also David, of the tribe of Judah, of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning the priesthood

(Hebrews 7: 13,) offered "burnt offerings" and "peace offerings":

And they brought in the ark of the Lord, and set it in his place, in the midst of the tabernacle that David had pitched for it: and David offered burnt offerings and peace offerings before the Lord. And as soon as David had made an end of offering burnt offerings and peace offerings, he blessed the people in the name of the Lord of hosts.—2 Samuel 6: 17, 18. A. V.

Manoah, of the tribe of Dan, officiated in this work before an angel of God:

So Manoah took a kid, with a meat offering, and offered it upon a rock unto the Lord; and the angel did wondrously, and Manoah and his wife looked on. For it came to pass, when the flame went up toward heaven from off the altar, that the angel of the Lord ascended in the flame of the altar, and Manoah and his wife looked on it, and fell on their faces to the ground.—Judges 13: 19, 20, A. V.

Notwithstanding the "rights" of the priesthood bestowed on the sons of Levi, men of other tribes could and did officiate in the priests' office, when called of God to do that work. I wonder if the "cloven foot" is exposed in the Bible! Will Campbell and Traum affirm that the author or writer of the books of Judges and Samuel, "make God a liar?"

TRAUM'S JUMBLE.

Pages 90 to 98 Traum devotes to the itinerary of the colony which came out of Jerusalem B. C. 600. And his detached, "staccato" style of lumping the account together reminds one of the "darkey's" text: "Dis ebening, breddern, if de Laud willin, I shell take my tex in dat portion of de scripiter, where de 'postle Paul prints his pissel to de Fenians. De tex reads: And Paul preached so hard and so long up in de double tenement of de builden, dat one of de good ole color'd sisters got asleep, and fell ober de ban-nisters down, onto de pavemant, and busted into a thousand pieces. And dey went down dere, and picked up twelve basketfuls of de fragments, and verily whose wife shall she be in de resurrection?"

BOOK OF MORMON AND GEOGRAPHY.

We will pause long enough to pulverize two principal objections,—the only two, he has introduced, to test the Book of Mormon on the ground of geography and topography. The journey and camping of the colony covered a period of eight years. The book says they remained close to the borders of the Red Sea, and were directed of God. "And they pitched their tent in a valley, beside a river of water." And it came to pass that he (Lehi) called the name of the river Laman, and it emptied into the Red Sea."

Mr. Traum strains to prove that from the Arabian side there is no river flowing into the Red Sea. This is his first real objection.

Of course, Mr. Traum is using his tests upon the geography and topography of the Holy Land, and its contiguous points, about 1,800 years subsequent to the "curse" which fell thereon, after the terrible judgment of God had evicted the Jews, and some 2,400 years after the itinerary of Lehi's family in the wilderness, while Arabia is largely a barren desert, and has a large number of dried up water courses. Instead of a river system there is a system of wadys—great receptacles for the water brought down from the mountains. But our critic is so dogmatic that he refuses to admit even the possibility of geologic change in twenty four hundred years,—the heavy march of ages which crumbles the monuments and produces mighty upheavals, by which other rivers have sunken and disappeared. The Red Sea has two large arms, which are indicated on the map as the Gulf of Suez, and the Gulf of Akabah. This latter gulf is about one hundred miles in length. It is not to exceed one hundred and sixty miles from Jerusalem to this gulf, and not much more to the Gulf of Suez. Mr. Traum seems to be ignorant of the fact that any large body of water was referred to as a sea, river, lake, or pool. But as to the geological change, Smith's Bible Dictionary says: "The land at the head of the gulf has risen. The sea has retired gradually since. The sea has receded many miles."

Yet for all this, there is a river, (or rivers), on the Arabian side, which flows into the Red Sea, as the following will show: "Of the rivers of Arabia none are navigable; few are perennial, or reach the sea. Some such, however, have been marked by the travelers, Wellsted and W. B. Harris, Glaser would identify the Wady Hund, first traced by Doughty, which traverses the Hijaz and flows into the Red Sea."—Dictionary of the Bible, vol. 1, p. 132.

Further, "The Wady Rumen is the longest river, traversing under different names, the entire country from east to west."—The New International Encyclopedia, vol. 1, p. 691.

Arabia consists of three main divisions, including the Sinaitic peninsula. The fertile belt is on the shore of the Red Sea, and the colony kept within this belt. The river alluded to is in the northern part of Arabia. While there may be "no considerable rivers or streams" finding their way "from the mountains to the Red Sea," as quoted by Traum, from his not very recent authority, yet there are "some such rivers," say the recent "travelers", and one in particular flowing "into the Red Sea." Mr. Traum "returned from his investigations" too early.

We now come to the question of mountains along the journey of Lehi's family, the belt of country skirting the Red Sea on the Arabian side is divided under two names: Hejaz, the northern, and Yemen, or Tehama, the southern. Numerous mountains are named and represented on the map, in both these narrow divisions, but the southern portion is full of mountains, extending in some instances, right to, and in one instance, furnishing the bank of the Red Sea; while the extreme southern part, skirting the Gulf of Aden, Indian Ocean, and Arabian Sea, is a continuous chain of mountains. See The Unrivalled Atlas of the World, p. 132, published 1904.

One point in the chain, Mount Dahura, is registered on the map before me, at 8,000 feet. Then there looms up Mount Shamah. This chain is along the inland shore of both Hejah and Yemen, also Hadramanta.

The Book of Mormon, page 36, paragraphs 17, 18, says the family "came to a place which we called Bountiful because of its much fruit." Now let us see if Traum does not fall down on his test here, and the Book of Mormon account stand. First we introduce Encyclopedia of Biblical Literature, vol. 1, p. 180. As follows: "Arabia Felix"—the southern coast, Hadramanta,—"*here are found all the fruits of temperate and warm climates, among which the date, the fruit of the palm tree, is the most common, and is along with species of grain called dhourra, the staple article of food.*"

Again, Imperial Bible Dictionary, vol. 1, p. 112, says: "Arabia Felix, the most southern district of Arabia,"—"was rich in gems, and gold" (1 Kings 10: 10; Ezekiel 27: 22), "in spices and odoriferous shrubs, and fragrant gums. Among the vegetable products are the maña of commerce, nutmegs, dates, cocoa, bananas, sugar-cane, tamarind, coffee, melons, pumpkins, all of which are indigenous, or have grown in the valleys from the earliest ages. With these grow lavender, wormwood, jasmine, and other scented plants, likewise the fig, vine, pomegranate, orange, lemon, quince, plantain, almond, apricot, acacia, castor oil plant, senna, white lily, aloe, sessamum, all kinds of grain, tobacco, indigo, and different dye herbs, with numerous sorts of fruit and vegetables. To these may be added spicery, balm, myrrh, beside frankincense and many other aromatic gums."

Is it any wonder the little colony "called it bountiful"? How different is the description of the interior, as described by Traum, and the description of the Red Sea belt, along which, the book says, the colony journeyed! How did that "illiterate knave," Joseph Smith, get the statements of the Book of Mormon to agree so minutely with the geography and topography? Mr. Traum has not access to recent data, or if he has, he is fighting against that which he knows to be fact.

We will now go with Nephi up into the mountain, where "oft" he has gone before, and see if he exhausted the "ore" in making "the first vessel ever built in the yards." Mr. Traum says, "in mineral products of a valuable description, the Arabia of our day is singularly poor." "A little iron excepted, not a vestige of metals appear." He makes this statement first of all Arabia, then the latter statement of the Sinaitic peninsula. The New International Encyclopedia, vol. 1, page 691, says: "The elevation of the mountains in the extreme south of the peninsula is estimated at thirteen thousand feet." Traum's authority says, "not exceeding three thousand feet." The "Britannica" says, page 237: "Some have been calculated to be five thousand feet," and as we previously stated, Mount Dahura, of the Shamah peaks, is registered at "8,000 feet" on Rand and McNalley's map.

Now for the "ore": New American Encyclopedia, volume 1, page 738, says: "The mountains consist of porphyry, jasper, quartz, sand-stone, alabaster, basalt, marble, limestone. The minerals are blue alabaster, agates, tourmalins, the emerald, the onyx, gypsum, saltpeter, sulphur, naphtha, asphaltum, iron, lead, and copper. Mines of iron, lead and copper are still wrought."

Ho, ho! Nephi did not exhaust the supply, these "mines of iron, lead and copper are still wrought." Traum just didn't want the claim to harmonize with his "test," that is all.

Again the New International says: "Among the minerals of Arabia may be mentioned iron, copper, lead, coal, basalt, and asphaltum."—Vol. 1, art. "Arabia."

Does Traum think he can overthrow the above standard authority? We can introduce "plenty more" of the same kind, but this will be concluded with the following: Elder Traum's Arabian topography, if admitted, will strike a blow that condemns the Bible account of the itinerary of Israel through the wilderness after their deliverance from Egyptian slavery. The desolation pictured for Lehi and family, will react, and the topography that will consign one itinerary to the region of fiction, will also consign the other. The question is, How can the sandy, arid desert where Moses had to smite the rock, and by special miracle water all Israel, support the testimony of the Bible, as to their domestic and theocratic existence? Six hundred thousand males of the warlike age, with families, aggregating between two millions and three millions of people, swarmed through this desert. To what extent was it capable of maintaining animal and human life, especially when taxed by the consumption of such flocks and herds as the Israelites took with them out of Egypt, and the demand made on its resources by the vast population mentioned above? When they constructed the tabernacles the materials were, to say the least, a metropolitan product. Curtains of fine twined linen, blue, purple, and scarlet, cherubims of cunning work, fifty loops to the curtains, and fifty taches of gold; fifty more loops, and as many taches of brass, forty sockets of silver, multiply by two, plus sixteen, and under every board such were placed for tenons. They had "bars of gold," rings of gold, and the boards were overlaid with gold, chapiters and fillets overlaid with gold. Where did they get it? According to Traum, that part of Arabia will not support the teachings of the Bible. "The jurassic formation of the mountains shows that there has been no recent geologic change in that territory," says he, "and we are warranted in the conclusion that geologically this country is the same as it was," when the Israelites were camping there. And he continues the description saying: "In mineral products of a valuable description, the Arabia of our days is singularly poor." Further he says: "Of gold mines and precious ores, not a trace;" nothing "but cinnabar and iron in the Sinaitic peninsula;" "rock salt is in the central district where of metals a little iron excepted, not a vestige appears."

Again, we ask, where did Moses get his gold, silver, and brass? This test of topography undermines the Bible, and if it is a necessity that history, to be authentic must bear the test, so-called, of topography, the Bible falls to the ground.

In Exodus, chapter 35, verse 25, we are told: "And all the women that were wise hearted, did spin with their hands, and brought that which they had spun, both purple, and scarlet, and fine linen." Where did they get the raw material for linen? Did that sterile, barren, sandy desert produce it? Then they had onyx, stone, and engravers, and weavers, and their increasing flocks, and herds for forty years support, in this desolate, barren region Traum has so desolately described. Such reasoning could be prolonged indefinitely, but we think this sufficient to refute his position on the question of geography and topography, which, by the way are not the divine tests.

Islam is a religion which has no new message of life; has taught no single new doctrine of hope or life to the human family; has given no new conception of God, except what is dishonoring; has given no inspiration to a new service to mankind; has preached no great new truth; has contributed no quota to the sum total of that truth; has added no philosophy, good or bad; is as sterile as its god; has always tended to decline; has retarded, polluted, destroyed the manhood and corrupted the purer instincts of every nation it has touched; has blasted womanhood and destroyed the innocence of childhood.—From an address by Dr. W. The Bright Spot.

Make a bright spot every day
For some heart along the way;
Make a place to rest and lean
With the blue sky in between;
That the weary passing there
May be glad of sun and air,
And beyond their lanes of gloom
Hear the birds and see the bloom.

Make a bright spot as you go
Where the cheerful heart may grow;
With a word or with a deed
Plant the kindly spirit's seed,
That some far on day of need
Some one weary with his load,
Passing by the golden road,
May beneath its foliage find
Joy and rest and peace of mind.

Blessed By Comparison.

No one who had the slightest knowledge of the facts could imagine that Sallie Royce had an easy time of it. The eldest of three sisters left alone in the world, she had problems of moment to solve. She made not infrequent visits to the parsonage, and told her perplexities out of a full and sometimes a sorrowful heart. One day, when extra burdens weighed upon her, she came with a tale of woe.

"Trust God and don't worry," was all the minister could say. "You are doing your best. Have faith and be patient."

The advice seemed trite, and easier to give than to take.

But while she was there Miss Poxon entered. Now, those who did not know Miss Poxon ought to know what manner of woman she is. She scrubs floors, and teaches Sunday school classes, scolds, recreant husbands, and performs other useful services in connection with a settlement of the Young Women's Christian Association. She is a character the like of which one might go far to meet. "What is it to-day?" asked the minister.

"I want you to buy four tickets to the concert, and let me give them to the Mavowskis; poor things, they want to go and can't, and the profits are for the playground; and I'm going to ask Mrs. Packard to buy four more for another family; and I need some malted milk for Mrs. Petruski; they've just got their twelfth baby, and the last one not fourteen months old, and her husband sitting around the house and doing nothing.

"I should like to see a whipping post established; I should faint if I had to do the whipping, but I believe I could salt them a little; and old Mrs. Wiggin—you remember old Mrs. Wiggin that you sent the cloak to? Well, she's little Mary's mother, you know, that sings; and she's down with something the matter with her thigh; it was a muscle gave way, but I guess it's some cancerous trouble.

"She sews the collars on vests, and gets three cents apiece, and when she got hurt that she got around on a cane as long as she could, and now her wrist's given out the same way; and when you come Sunday afternoon to preach at the mission, do you suppose you can come over and pray for her?"

"And there's the Hofers, you know. There's a man that's good for something, but he got hurt, and now Jimmie's had to stop school and go to work, and—"

There were no periods in Miss Poxon's conversations; she goes on until something happens. But Sallie could hear no more.

"I'm ashamed of myself!" she cried. "I'm just ashamed of myself! And to think I came here to tell you of my troubles!"

"Is your rent paid?" asked Miss Poxon, and without waiting for an answer, followed the question by a string of others. "Do all your folks keep sober? Have you got good shoes? Well, then, my dear, you don't know what trouble is! And sometimes I get so tired; I had to scrub a floor this morning, and take three children to the Home for the Friendless, and a man scowled when the baby cried, and I just told him they were not my children, and where I was taking them, and I'd paid my fare and those children were going to ride, and if he didn't like it he could take another car; and I do get pretty tired, but it's lots of fun to be helping somebody, and, dear, if you've got good shoes, and the rent is paid, and your folks are kind, and you can say your prayers at night and go to sleep, don't ever think you have any trouble for you haven't."—Selected.

Editor Herald: I write to let the many scattered Saints know that we are isolated from all church privileges. There are no Saints here but myself and wife, and if any of our elders will come here and hold a meeting, I will get a place to preach and will help in any other way I can. I am as strong in the faith as ever, but have many things to bear. I know this work is of the Lord. My daily prayer is for the advancement of the great work.

I have a large family, none belonging to the church. Oh, if my children could have the chance to hear the gospel in fullness and would unite with the church, how much happiness it would give me.

With this you will find inclosed a check for $1.50 for renewal of HERALD, our only preacher. I could not get on without it. I ask the prayers of the Saints everywhere.

Editors Herald: My soul is made to rejoice in seeing the progress that has been made of late years in the church of God's elect. Because it is known in the courts of glory as the church of the Firstborn, and to all the faithful that endure all things is promised a crown of life in celestial glory, to be with God our Father, Christ our brother, and the holy angels.

We are living in very perilous times, indeed, with many new doctrines presented to the children of men, but we must have a rule to govern; to the law and to the testimony is one of the fundamental principles of demarcation. This should not only be found in the Scriptures of truth, but should also be found and made manifest in our everyday life; and if we are living in righteousness, our character will show to the children of men that we are the light of the world; that is, if we are walking in the light. Our success depends upon our unity of purpose. We should have unbroken confidence in God and in his church, and in all his institutions, and in his loyal representatives, especially those that hold the holy priesthood. But we may have those that don't believe in the resurrection of this body from the grave; well, well, they have not learned or understood the promise that God has made to those that keep the celestial law. To me this is the greatest promise in all God's words that we shall know each other there, and this knowledge is promised to us now, with the promise that we shall all be taught of things eternal. To destroy this principle of confidence in God's words is to commit spiritual homicide, as well as spiritual suicide, and progress will stop. The Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants are blended with those truths revealed from heaven that are sublime in their character that will, if we comply, make our characters sublime in the sight of God, and we will become holy men and holy women; then we shall speak as the living oracles of God and be moved by God's Holy Spirit, walking in the light as he himself is in the light. If ye, then, be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, if ye be not moved away from the hope of the gospel.

There are many promises, but all is on condition. Jesus said, "If ye would enter into life, keep my commandments"; and so we are willing to do all we can to establish righteousness among our fellow-men.

I was visiting a daughter in Oklahoma this summer, and received the consent of Elder I. N. White to preach while there if opportunity was given, and surely we praised our God for opportunity given, and also for the Spirit and power that was made manifest. The people came for miles to hear the gospel, and many said to me that was the first time they ever heard the gospel, and asked me to be sure to come back and stay longer, and when we read of all the ministers in that State kept busy, and more calls than they can fill, we feel like asking God to send more ministers to preach in Oklahoma to those who are hungering and thirsting after righteousness.

Surely the Lord's Spirit is moving among the honest hearts of men, and may it continue to spread all over the earth and the ministers of the gospel be filled with the power from on high until the power of darkness may shake and vanish away, that all God's children may do their duty and get the promised crown of life.

EUFAULA, OKLAHOMA, September 9, 1911.

Saints' Herald: This is my busy day, yet I have taken the time to glance through the HERALD, and have given some thought to an article on the judgment, by Elder Phillips. Well, it looks about right to me, but what am I to do? Am I to miss the first resurrection, regardless of how hard I may try for same; on account of things I have done long before I united with the church? Surely this article has put me to thinking. According to Brother Phillips, it surely would be useless for me to try for the greater reward. I suppose the glory of the evening stars would suffice for me. I had thought, though, that it were possible to gain the greater; but when I come to think about it, there are those who have committed no sins worth speaking about before they make this effort for the highest a man can attain. In fact I read where the Saints will judge the world.

Brother Phillips, do I understand you aright? A letter from you personally will do.

GLADSTONE, ILLINOIS, September 5, 1911.

Dear Herald: I thought a few lines might be of interest from this place. We have Bro. O. E. Sade with us, holding meetings on the street corner for the last week or ten days. Brother Goodenough was to be with him, but he was taken down with hay fever at Ottawa, Illinois, so Brother Sade has been doing all the preaching. We have the Woodmen's Hall rented, but have used it only once or twice, for the reason that more people get to hear on the streets. The people seem to want to learn. Some come in from the country and sit in their buggies and vehicles and listen to his preaching. We have had very good order so far, except one night the boys threw some little missiles, but when Brother Sade gave them to understand the law of the State would protect him on the street corner as well as in a building, they seemed to be considering the matter.

I hope Gladstone may turn out to be Gladstone not only in name but in truth. There are only four of us here, Bro. Ralph Stanley, Bro. Gus Peterson, and myself and wife. We hope Brother Sade's preaching may prove educational to all that hear him.

Remember us in your prayers.

ALEXANDER, KANSAS, September 6, 1911.

Editors Herald: I love to read the HERALD. It gives me strength and courage to read of the progress others are making in this great work.

Bro. S. J. Madden has been in our midst for nearly two weeks, having preached several times. He left a good impression in the minds of some, and there are others in our midst, it seems, would not believe, even though an angel from heaven would appear testifying of the truthfulness of this latter day work. Popularity is not manifested strong enough for them. But when we think of the words of our Savior, that there would be but few that would find the narrow way, we rejoice that we are numbered among them, and trust we may always live a true and acceptable life in the sight of our Lord. It seems some are easily satisfied to accept so thin a religion as they do when the truth is so plain that a fool need not error therein.

Trusting the time will come when they will see the folly of their ways, ever praying for the welfare of the children of God, I remain

Your brother in the faith,

O. E. THOMPSON.

MOORHEAD, IOWA.

Dear Herald: I have lately, in company of Elder J. H. Lane, one of my associates in district work, held a series of meetings in this place, and we are now holding meetings at the Mann Schoolhouse, about seven miles from Moorhead. We find the interest and attendance good, the Saints seem encouraged, and prejudice which was engendered by the clownish, not to say cruel and unwise lectures of one Clark Braden some years ago, greatly allayed, and a much better understanding arrived at between the Saints and the society of Christians whose fine church and parsonage are just across the street from the neat but unpretentious chapel of our people.

I called upon the minister of the Christian Church, Elder Nickerson, you know I can't say reverend, out of regard for the divinity to which this title belongs, and I am pleased to say that he treated us with marked courtesy. Both he and a number of his members attended our meetings, taking part in the song service, even abandoning one of their services to attend ours. I trust our people here will bear in mind and return the compliment.

The Saints in Moorhead are in good condition in a spiritual sense. Of course the expression of the Master, "Ye are clean but not all," will apply here as elsewhere, as there are some in perhaps every branch in the district who cause sorrow to the hearts of those who are working with all their might to build up the kingdom of God; either by lack of interest or by a worldliness of manner which we can not account for. The crying need of the times is for visiting officers in the branch, fearless men of God who will carry out the law as given, and entering the homes of the Saints will encourage the wavering, strengthen the weak, and reclaim the backsliding, gather in the struggling, dress up the lines, and get all in line with eyes to the front, facing the forces of evil; reprove, rebuke, exhort, and entreat, not with harshness but with gentleness and patience, remembering that an elder's court is the last resort, to be called into requisition when we have performed our whole duty and every other remedy proves unavailing.

The condition of the work at Moorhead is fairly indicated by the Sunday school and the interest taken in this department of the work. It did my soul good to watch the school, both scholars and officers, during the hour, as their faces were aglow with interest in the work. Following is a sketch of the work:

Enrollment, 132; average attendance last quarter, 83 4-13; number of classes, 10. Officers: Charles Ballantyne, superintendent; Earl Lewis, first assistant; Mrs. Lou Mann, second assistant; Altai Mann, secretary. Teachers:

F. E. Cohrt, Mrs. Perry Mann, T. O. Strand, Mrs. F. A. Pellisier, Mrs. T. O. Strand, Mrs. William Wilson, Mrs. A. E. Hoffman, Joseph Hoffman, Mrs. Earl Galland, Mrs. E. R. Outhouse. What a positive force for good in the redemption of mankind. May God ever bless them all.

SIDNEY PITT, SR.

EXLINE, IOWA, September 10, 1911.

Dear Saints' Herald: I thought I would write a few lines to-day. I have thought of writing for a long time but have not taken time. As I was reading my church paper this morning I looked out of the window and a nicely dressed man came up towards the house. I got up and opened the door, he spoke, and said he wanted a watermelon. I told him I would not sell him one, but I would give him one. So he introduced himself and said he was a missionary. I asked, "Of what church?" and he said, "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." I said I belonged to the church. He said, "What faction?" I told him the true church. He said he belonged to the Utah Church, so he was the first I ever met. His name was Lyman. He said that we people were great mud slingers, and that he had argued with Brother Mintun of Des Moines, Iowa. He would keep saying, "Mr., you have only got one side of the question." I told him I felt sorry for them, that they were in such great darkness and were trying to lead others in darkness. He said that Joseph Smith was a polygamist, and I asked him how many wives he had. He did not know, but his great-grandmother was his wife, Eliza Partridge, I believe he said. I said, "Where are his children from any but Emma, his wife?" He said, "That is one thing that is against us in argument," but, said he, "he, Joseph, had one child, and it was crazy and died." Oh, what a lie they will tell to try to make out their church is from God! But I told them there was nothing that would change me from the truth.

I told them to get on their knees and ask God to give them light, as did Joseph when he wanted to know which of the four churches was right, and the good Lord would reveal it to them if they were earnest and sincere in the asking; but they are determined to stay in the way that seemeth good to them. May our heavenly Father bring them out of darkness is my prayer.

Brothers and sisters, pray for me and my family, that we will always live godly lives, and I would love to get a preacher to come and hold meetings in the schoolhouse. There have been several told me they would come out to preach. Can't Brother Hayer, or Bro. John Smith, or some of the elders come? I will give them a home and something to eat and will do all I can for the uplift of humanity. Let me know and I will meet anyone in Centerville.

May God in his infinite mercy bless all the elders and his chosen people, is my prayer.

Your brother in Christ,

IRA MULLIN.

LANGLEY, WASHINGTON, September 8, 1911.

Dear Brothers: My little sister is not as well as she was; she grows weaker. Bro. Parley T. Plumb was here and preached three sermons and administered to little sister three times. He is certainly a good, true Saint, and a fine speaker. So I am going to ask once more to please remember her in your prayers, and may God's blessing rest upon all his children is my prayer.

MISS BLANCH A. CRANDALL.

TIGRIS, MISSOURI, September 18, 1911.

Dear Herald: It is two months and a half since my appointment, but during that time I have been sick with typhoid and unable to attend to it, but I thank the Lord for his mercy unto me, in sparing my life, so that I am able to be up again, although very weak yet. We have three children sick with it now, and although improving are far from being out of danger, and require constant care and watching; but our faith is strong in the promises of God, and we know whatever he doeth, it is well.

Your brother in Christ,

BENJ. PEARSON.

CRESTON, B. C., CANADA, August 27, 1911.

Editors Herald: If any of the officers of the Latter Day Saints are passing through Creston, British Columbia, Canada, we as members of said church would be very glad if they would stay with us a few days on their way through; or any members at any time.

You will kindly fit this in to please yourself. There don't seem to be any members here. If you see or know of any members whom you are sending papers to at Creston, British Columbia, please let me know, so I can get in communication with them.

Trusting this will not put you to too much trouble,

Yours in the faith,

ROBERT BROADWAY.

PAONIA, COLORADO.

Dear Herald: Brother Peters and Brother Twombly closed meetings two weeks ago, here. Five precious souls were brought into the kingdom of God's dear Son. Others were brought in closer touch with the work. Some believe the work to be true but are not ready to accept it yet. Brother Peters and Brother Twombly truly are sent of God. The Spirit bears witness they are able men to defend the work. May God bless them in their labors is my prayer.

We have a Sunday school started. We expect to hold services every Sunday and keep the fire burning.

I had the pleasure to visit Salt Lake City, and while there heard two more men sent of God, Brother Chase and Brother Bullard, preaching to the people on the streets. After preaching they gave opportunity for questions. They were answered, and they were not asked a second time. Surely the Lord's word is good. No weapon formed against the work shall prosper. May God bless his servants, and may he bless the people in Salt Lake City that they may have eyes to see and ears to hear when God sends his servants there.

I rejoice in this great latter day work, and I know that it is God's own planting, and it will stand when all else will fail.

With love to all the Saints of God, I remain,

Your brother,

G. F. WALLING.

SEDLEY, SASKATCHEWAN, September 15, 1911.

Editors Herald: I write to request the prayers of the Saints on behalf of Mr. P. Wallace, of this town, who has been sorely afflicted for over two years with rheumatism. He is interested in our work and asked me to write the above.

Very sincerely,

T. J. JORDAN.

TURON, KANSAS, September 5, 1911.

Editors Herald: I have read the HERALD for many years and enjoyed them more than I can say. We have been among strangers very long. I have not heard a Latter Day Saint sermon for more than six years, but the HERALD keeps us posted. When I see a letter from Little Sioux I feel as though it was just for me, as my childhood was passed there. I was then Zealie Davison. I look back and see, in my mind's eye, the little church among the trees, and there I have listened to Brn. J. F. Mintun, J. C. Crabb, C. Derry, and many others, and I go over the times I have been with the Saints in prayer meetings. How I long to be with them again.

I have five children. I am trying to bring them up as God would have them. If any of the elders are near here, I would be glad to have them stop with us.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. C. D. COOK.

OWENSVILLE, INDIANA, August 31, 1911.

Dear Saints: In the past two weeks I can say that we have enjoyed ourselves very much; we have had two of the elders with us again. On August 15, Elder Jacob Halb came to our place, and on the 17th day Elder E. O. Byrn came. We had a very fine time while the two elders were with us. They preached to the people at this place thirteen interesting sermons, at which we had large crowds and also fine interest. The brothers said this was a fine, interesting place here, and I hope soon the work may be built up.

I am trying to do all I can for the good Master and the upbuilding of his church and kingdom of this old clay world. Saints, we must strive to do our parts, and if any of us lack wisdom, let us ask of God in the right way, and it shall be given unto us, and I think there are many of us who lack wisdom and knowledge, for, dear Saints, I can speak for myself, as I feel my weakness very much, and pray for the good Master to strengthen me in truth and knowledge. It is my desire to do whatsoever the Master has called for me to do. Any elder or Saint passing near here is welcome to make this his stopping place, as whatever I have is welcome to any of God's people. My home is made ready to provide for any of the dear children of God, and I want you all to know that I am trying to make myself ready to meet the dear Savior when he comes in the clouds of glory, with ten thousand of his Saints, to execute judgment.

The truth has been preached here and explained very plainly. I hope now soon it will be preached again. May the Lord be with all of his dear children, is my prayer.

MARY J. THOMPSON.

WICHITA, KANSAS, September 17, 1911.

Editors Herald: Since writing you last I had missionary R. F. Slye call, and together we journeyed to Conway Springs, Kansas, to try to open a series of meetings.

After visiting the honorable mayor of said city we were granted privilege to preach on the street, and also the use of the city park to have public meeting. This was August 3. In the afternoon we went upon the street and took turns in talking. Surely the good Spirit was present in power, for many listened, and with the best of order and interest.

We then announced meetings at the park to commence Monday night, the 7th, to continue for ten nights.

While at Conway Springs we stayed with Sr. Bertha Kanady and her good husband, where we were treated with kindness.

While there in the morning we had quite a fireside talk with Mrs. Kanady, her mother, Mrs. McClaren, and a half sister, where also the Spirit was present.

Brother Slye returned to Conway on the 7th and opened his meetings; then the Devil began to rage.

Petitions were circulated to have us run out of town, and we were promised to be egged, even the postmaster told the justice of the peace to have us run out of town, whereupon the justice asked on what grounds. The answer was, that we were from Salt Lake Valley, Utah, preaching polygamy, and so forth.

The justice had been to hear Brother Slye and he told him to go down and hear him and see if it was true; also informed him he was wrong, and if he, the postmaster, would go and listen, he might learn something.

Nevertheless we gained quite a few friends for the cause, broke down the prejudice, and have made an opening for the work. For Sunday, September 3, Brother Slye baptized Sr. Bertha Kanady and her mother, Sr. Margaret McClaren, the former being a member of the Christian Church seventeen years, and an excellent Bible scholar; the latter a member of the same church for forty years. Both were confirmed by the writer, with quite a degree of the good Spirit present during confirmation.

I am surely looking for some good results from the daughter especially, as she is a worker and is blessed with the Spirit in her arguments for the cause of truth. On the same date we also had the pleasure of blessing the baby boy of Paul T. and Ella Stewart, giving him the name of Clarence Paul. Mrs. Stewart is not a member of the church, but we hope some day to see her take the step. As for our little flock here, while there is room for improvement, yet we can not complain. But with the help of God we hope to raise to the high standard that the Savior has called his children.

We have Sister Donaldson, of Independence, with us. She promises to be a worker. Sister Donaldson is teaching in high school here.

May the Lord help, bless, and keep his people is the prayer of your brother in Christ.

SAN BERNARDINO, CALIFORNIA, September 14, 1911.

Herald Editors: We had a fine reunion this year and we all enjoyed the presence and wise counsel of our noble and worthy brother, Albert Carmichael. We want him to come again; he is always welcome. At the close of the reunion arrangements were made and propositions signed for twelve nights of debate to be held at Santa Ana, between E. C. Love, of the Church of Christ, or Campbellite Nonprogressives, and Elder Paul M. Hanson for our side. This debate began August 28, and I got to attend four nights, and from what I could see and hear, and from the favorable impression that was made on people who did not belong to either church, it was a decided victory for Brother Hanson and the cause he represented, and the Saints there are rejoicing as a result. Mr. Love was so unfair that he lost his prestige with all fair-minded people; and because of the manly and Christlike deportment of Brother Hanson he won the love and respect of all the fair and unprejudiced minds present. One prominent citizen, Mr. Bennet, of Santa Ana, who is not a member of any church that I know of, told a crowd of the members of Love's church that their man was beat and they knew it. Mr. Love was well loaded with a rehash of the slander and false statements which was issued by R. B. Neal & Co., and he had on hand a large number of these lying tracts, which were distributed at the close of each meeting. I will inclose you a few samples. This is our busy season in the tax collector's office, and I am being worked to the limit, besides I preached September 3 at Garden Grove, attended four nights of the debate, and preached at this place both morning and evening, and once in the afternoon at Redlands last Sunday. So you see that I am kept on the move, and the harder I work the happier I am, and I am encouraged to go on and do my best because of the sweet influence that has been with me while standing to defend this wonderful work.

Your brother in Christ,
G. H. WIXOM.

LANSING, MICHIGAN, September 10, 1911.

Dear Saints: I have been receiving a good many inquiries about how the work is getting along relative to the trouble we had this summer over the church building that our enemies tried to tear down; and if you will give us a little space in your valuable columns, I will briefly explain how it came about and what led up to it. We had thought some more skillful writer would undertake the task. This is how it happened.

About one year ago, one of the Congregational Church Committeemen came in our neighborhood soliciting for a new church they were planning to build, and my wife told them we were bending all our energies in that direction ourselves. He said, "Can't we sell you our old building?" She asked how much they wanted for it, and he told her $1,650. She said she would bring the matter up to us and we could call and see him. Accordingly she called my attention to it and I called the attention of the Saints. So we appointed a committee to see them, and Bro. S. A. Barss and I called and had a talk with him. After some talk back and forth, they said they would sell us the building and reserve the lot, for in selling the building and lot they could not realize any ready money, but they could sell the lot for cash. Accordingly a contract was given for the building and we were to remove the building by June 15. During the winter, we had some contractors who move buildings look at it, and we found it was going to cost much more than we had supposed, so I went to their pastor, Rev. C. C. Lowther, and asked him if we could not arrange some way and let the building stand where it was. They had already sold the lot to another party and he said he would go to them and see if something could be done, and says he, "You come back in three or four weeks and I will let you know."

Accordingly, I called on him in about that time and he said, "I have seen the main church men and the consensus of opinion is they don't care whether you move the church or not; so my advice is, if you want to let the church stand where it is you had better buy the lot and you will not need to move the building."

It happened Bro. Alex Tresscutt, of Harbor Beach, came down, and he bought the church lot for us, so we owned both building and lot and their committee was very anxious and instrumental in selling the lot to us. Everything ran along very smoothly until about May 15, when we got notice to see that the building was moved according to the contract. We tried to reason with them, but they said they had told their pastor nothing of the kind; but when we saw they would not reason on the matter, we told them we owned the lot and we proposed to leave the church where it was so long as they had encouraged our buying it.

In the 26th of June they came, and we had a lady, Sister Miller, living in the rear, and her son, who tried to prevent them coming in. But she was overpowered, and they began to tear the building down, until we got the assistant prosecuting attorney to come and stop it. They had in the meantime taken the seats, bell, doors, windows, etc., and such a mob you never saw since the days of the Saints' persecution in the 30's and 40's. Bro. S. W. L. Scott and I remarked together that it reminded us of the old raids they made on the church in Missouri. Even after they had done their mob work, we sent word to them to come and settle it out of court. This they refused to do, and accordingly we employed a lawyer and are taking them for a case of trover, which means to recover the value of articles they destroyed and took away. It had been a hard blow on the work here in some ways, but still public sentiment is in our favor, and it has nearly ruined their church. Half of their own people have left them. We are still holding meetings in the church, pending the result of the action of the court. I supposed we were dealing with people whose word, whether written or verbal, would be lived up to. Trust this will briefly explain what there is about this truth.

Bishop E. L. Kelley was here and gave us some timely advice. Bro. Ellis Short was here, and he said from what he could learn the case was a clear one for us. We are holding our own. The Saints, the most of them, are feeling good.

We had a good meeting Sunday, September 3, some of the Saints from Jackson, Brethren Buckley, Grose, and their wives were out. Brother Roark, of Williamston, and Brother Buckers, of Howell, were also attendants at our sacrament service. Bro. G. A. Smith, of Clear Lake, was also a distinguished visitor and assisted in the ordination of Bro. Ray Marrow to the office of priest.

Yes, the work is moving along in spite of the world to oppose.

I suppose my letter is altogether too long, so I will say we need the cooperation of all that the work may flourish. We are doing what we can in trying to keep the banner unfurled. We are ably assisted by Bro. S. A. Barss, our presiding priest, and Brother Roark, who sometimes gives us good assistance, and Bro. R. E. Smith, who is our faithful deacon, all of which are trying to magnify their calling.

Your brother in the latter day work,

JOSEPH DEXTER.

NEW YORK, September 20, 1911.

Saints Herald: There is a sensation here about the Utah Mormon Temple. When I learned that Max Florence was at the Hotel Imperial, I called on him and told him that I was very much interested in the claim he made of obtaining the films of the temple, and made known to him that I was an elder in the Reorganization. He spoke very highly of one of our brethren out in Ogden, Utah. He is a full blooded Jew and was highly elated over his bold feat, and he told me that over the seat that Pres. Joseph F. Smith sat in was a magnificent drawing of a gorgeous temple, a facsimile of the one to be built in Jackson County, Missouri, where they had purchased the land to erect it on, and that he had a snapshot at it and has a film. He also said that in a separate room in the temple the most skilled workmen had been working for more than two years on a statue of Christ, and many others representing Christ's coming to their temple. He says nothing can compare with the most wonderful sight, and that the temple was not in any sense of the word a religious place for worship and never would be, for it is for secret covering up of just what it was designed for, and nothing was any more dazzling, not even Solomon's temple, and he would exhibit his pictures in the Brooklyn Church first, if our people would desire it. [We trust our brethren will make no deal or alliance with Mr. Florence, who appears to have used dishonorable methods in securing these pictures.—EDITORS.]

He says he can turn this whole matter into moving pictures, and it looks as though he was bent on doing it. He introduced me to Hans P. Freece, who was highly elated over Max Florence securing the pictures, and these two men have got together to make this their business for the coming show. Mr. Freece stated that he lectured in the church [Mr. Freece lectured on Chautauqua platform in a tent—not in the church.—EDITORS.] at Lamoni, an exposure of Utah Mormonism. He spoke very highly of our brethren and the church in general. He has settled down here in New York for a while, as you will see by the address top of the circular. He said that he had been reading the monthly magazines against the Utah church, and there was much that we could connect in these writings. Nothing can drive these men into bending to any threats from the Utah head, who is neither prophet, seer, nor revelator.

Truly the day has come and now is, that everything that can be shaken will be shaken. Priestcraft and creeds are tottering. The great financiers, from J. P. Morgan down through every man of financial standing over our entire nation, irrespective of creed or dogma, have financed the greatest religious movement ever known on earth to compass both land and sea, to show the strength of their churches combined and make proselytes, a money power that can not accomplish what they are setting out to do contrary to the plan of salvation through Jesus Christ, our Lord, that has been restored by an angel from his presence, to be preached in all the world as a witness before the end shall come, rejected and trampled under foot by this same class, that is as counterfeit as any counterfeiters that have been caught with the goods on them. They are broken systems that won't hold water, clouds without rain, and trees without fruit. It is their last great effort to smelt the country. May the God of the latter day Israel bless all men in this great movement, that are honorable and honest, for a terrestrial glory, and hypocrites be sifted out. Perchance a Cornelius here and there may have opened-up to their vision the restored gospel.

In gospel bonds,

"Jots by the Wayside."

The sweating process is o'er, "Old Sol" is retreating. The cooler breezes have come. Jack Frost, scepter in hand, will soon reign triumphant—and in the meantime we are ready to "fess up"—that Spring River District is still on the map. The spiritual condition of branches is encouraging, noticeably so of Webb City, Joplin, Purcell, and Scammon branches. Others fairly good, yet struggling against adverse conditions.

Our tent meetings under the management of the missionaries have been a success, numerous baptisms and the building up of Saints, renewed diligence, and stronger determinations are in evidence.

The reunion held at Pittsburg, Kansas, was all we anticipated. The preaching and singing was of a high order. Saints and sinners were well satisfied and willingly expressed their hearty approval. The gifts of the gospel were manifested to the cheer and comfort of Saints, who with hearts throbbing with love, not ungratefully rendered their peons of praise. The cook house management also emerged from the fray crowned with laurels of success, and thus the 1912 reunion is well planted in the soil of victory.

Man's First Appearance in America.

H. S. Fuller, one of the editors of School, a weekly journal devoted to the public schools and educational interests (Fifth avenue, New York,) writes in issue of September 14, 1911, about "Glacial Man; his several epochs; life conditions, the implements by which he was traced; his presence in Europe confirmed; but all present proof of his existence in America yet unsatisfactory to science."

He says: "The time of man's first appearance on the North American Continent is yet to be determined. It covers a geologic period estimated at not less than half a million to a million years, and is hence no small problem." . . . The discovery of skeletal remains of Palæolithic or even Neolithic man in America is still questioned. H. C. Mercer (1897), in a study on early glacial man in the Delaware Valley, including Doctor Abbotts' 'Trenton Gravels', gave a negative report. Doctor Osborn, who was at first convinced of the antiquity of a Nebraska (Loess) skeleton, has withdrawn his conclusions, finding that its indications point to the cranial type of the Indian Mound Builder. Hedeleika (Smithsonian Institute, 1907) made a comparative study of the fourteen American skeletal remains, including the Calaveras, California, skull, and he concludes that no North American human bones yet known are of 'undisputed geologic antiquity,' but all indicate an affinity to the early type of the modern Indian. He defines as a rule to be followed that a recognition of such antiquity 'demands undisputed stratigraphic evidence, some degree of fossilization and marked anatomic distinctions in important parts of the skeleton.' Later, in 1898, W. J. Sinclair, California University, investigating the auriferous gravels of Sierra Nevada for traces of Niocene (Neolithic) man, reached the same conclusion, which is the present scientific opinion. . . .

"Early implements have been found with mastodon bones, and one arrowhead at Lansing, Kansas, imbedded in the bones of a now extinct bison, but it is not satisfactorily agreed that the mastodon became extinct before the early Indian Mound Builder. . . .

"The growing interest and more accurate methods may in coming decades secure proofs of glacial man in America, and even, perhaps, skeletal fragments of him."

The above may be of interest to students of Book of Mormon and archæology. The emphasis is ours.

GOMER R. WELLS.

A Week in Western Iowa.

The second of September found a number of Saints from Lamoni speeding along on the train over Iowa's pleasant hills to the little town of Magnolia, to attend the reunion which began there the last day of August and broke camp the 11th, of September. The triple crested little city is to the hearts of many a dream city.

When we reached the grounds, late in the evening, we were met with that cordial welcome which Magnolia Saints and friends know so well how to give. A large number of tents were already pitched in the pretty little park, proud with the surname of George Washington. They were arranged in orderly avenues, with the name of each occupant over the tent door. This woven city was lighted by electricity, and peopled by earnest hearted, worshipful Saints, and in the wide space stood the big tabernacle tent that has sheltered the Gallands Grove and Little Sioux reunions for so many years. It seems almost sacred to this blessed and happy combination of two districts, and would hardly seem true to its position if sheltering either one without the other.

Six services were held the first Sunday. Prayer service, the Sunday school, and one preaching service taking up the morning hours, and preaching services in the afternoon and evening with Religio session at six o'clock filling the remainder of the day.

Magnolia is indeed beautifully situated. The location is one of the highest points in Harrison County, and the view of the surrounding hills and the long, deep valleys, is one never to be forgotten. The quiet is that of a village, for no screaming, roaring fire horse wakes echo in its lovely valleys, although many soft-tired autos throw dust on the grassy lawns. We call it a city, for the twinkling electric lights that light its streets and the springing steps of its busy inhabitants belie the paveless streets and grassy ways. Out from its beautiful, restful homes have journeyed many, who in after years of greatness came back to touch the old hearthstone, or sleep in the beautiful cemetery which rests high on the hill but a short distance from the town. And here, at this beautiful spot, where the eye can look over the wonderful hills and valleys to the far-away hills lost in the misty, purple haze, was held one afternoon a solemn and sacred service by the grave of one of the "faithful ones." Small flags marked the graves of those who had been veterans in the great cause for which they gave lives of sacrifice and service during the most trying scenes of its promulgation. At this grave, the grave of Elder James Caffall, the hearts of the many assembled there were stirred by the touching prayer of our venerable patriarch, Charles Derry, as he stood on the wide, white gate stone of the Caffall lot, and by the feeling address of Bro. A. M. Fyrando as he told of some of the struggles and triumphs of those now quiet sleepers as none other could have told it. Elder Heman C. Smith followed with a short tribute to the eternal beauties of friendship of men of integrity. By special request Sr. Vida E. Smith read "Thanatopsis," which never seemed more fitting than in that quiet hour and place. A benediction full of feeling was pronounced by Patriarch Charles Butterworth.

The singing at this service was beautiful, as was, in fact, the song service throughout the reunion, many of the best soloists of the church rendering willing aid.

The sewing bee, held at four o'clock on Wednesday, was a very interesting session and a profitable one for the Children's Home. Children as well as grown people, men as well as women contributing their share towards making it a success. And it was a success. Everyone had been told to bring a towel and hem it, or some other article that would be useful for the home, but many contributed more, and the astonishing result of less than two hours' work showed something like 168 towels, 74 table napkins, 24 pillow slips, 26 tea towels, a number of wash cloths, besides the contribution of a sheet, one quilt, and a tablecloth, altogether of an approximate value of forty-five dollars.

No collection was taken for reunion expenses except a small one for the purchase of Hymnals and record book, the city meeting all cost. Over one hundred dollars was collected for the support of the Danish paper, Sandhedens Banner, (The Banner of Truth) and $42.48 for the Children's Home. This latter sum was obtained through the efforts of the meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The Sunday school and Religio sessions under the excellent supervision of Sr. Ida Ethenhouser, were well attended and thoroughly enjoyed, nor was College Day forgotten.

One of the most delightful elements of this reunion was the social feature. The meeting of those who knew and loved those of a former generation, who always attended the "world reunion" or "fall conference" in this western Iowa.

It is gratifying and encouraging to realize that we, as a church, are counting by generations the seasons of our joyful communion.

By the latter part of the week some one hundred and twenty-one tents were located on the grounds, sheltering about five hundred people. Besides, nearly every home in the town was open to the visitors. It was estimated that five thousand people were on the grounds the closing Sunday, and in the afternoon an overflow meeting was provided for in the band stand, while at the same time a confirmation meeting was being held in the rest tent. During the week twenty-one were baptized, and the many who attended the various sessions felt spiritually blessed.

The large tent was well filled each morning at the eight o'clock prayer meetings, and an exceptionally spiritual time was enjoyed by those present. Many strong and heartfelt testimonies were given and earnest prayers offered. At the prayer meeting held on September 4, Bro. C. M. Wilder spoke to the Saints in tongues, and the following interpretation was given by Bro. W. W. Baker:

"Verily, thus saith the Lord unto ye, Oh, my people, I am with thee to bless, and thou art my children. I have acknowledged my pleasure unto thee this morning. And forget not that where thou mayest be, I the Lord God am willing to pour out upon you my blessings. Fear not, for the power of the adversary can not overcome thee, if thou livest humble and faithful before me. And I say, as thou hast gathered together in faith, now lay aside the cares of this world, lay aside all follies, all pride, and all that is unseemly in the sight of your God, and thou shalt have a time of rejoicing as thou hast never had before, because thou wilt see the power and influence of my Spirit among thee. Yea, therefore, lift up your heads, as I have said unto thee before, and I the Lord God will hear thy prayers, and if thou wilt be humble and faithful before me, they shall be granted unto thee; but oh, I say, Forget them not. Yea, when thou goest out amongst thy associates and amongst thy friends, yea, when thou goest away forget not the Lord your God. Let not the influences of this world draw thee away from me, and I will ever remain close to thee.

"Therefore, I say, lift up your heads and rejoice, be humble and faithful, fast and pray, and the Lord God will not turn thee empty away, for I have spoken it unto thee. Even so. Amen."

On September 7 was given the following by the same individuals:

"Oh, ye my people, that heareth my voice, for I speak unto thee as thou art collected together this morning. Yea, I am pleased with thee, and the angels of heaven record thy presence in the Lamb's Book of Life, as I promised for thy faithfulness to me and my work. Yea, thy testimonies are recorded and thy prayers. Yea, and I say unto thee, that inasmuch as thou art humble and faithful before me, I the Lord God will not leave thee alone. Though thou mayest depart from these grounds, though thou mayest go among those of the world, yea, though thou mayest be isolated from my people, yet I, the Lord God, will watch over thee, my hand will bear thee up and my Spirit will strengthen thee, if thou forget not the lessons that I have taught thee.

"Therefore, be faithful, be cheerful, be patient, cease to complain, and I the Lord will always remember thee, and I will grant thy prayers, inasmuch as they are consistent with my divine will, for I the Lord God knoweth that which will be for your good. Therefore, in faith believing, remember me, and I the Lord God will remember thee with all I have spoken. Even so. Amen."

Another morning to one was shown in vision two angels in the midst of a cloud within the tent, and truly were felt the words of inspiration as given by another that very hour:

"I am in your midst, as thou hast borne witness. Yea, I have encamped round about thee this morning, and mine angels have been here."

Tent meeting still continues with large crowds. Seven baptized Sunday. Other fine names, some of the very best people in this little city of Alba. It's the talk of the town and country. The gospel of conversion is preached. We are drawing the line. The people know who we are and who we want them to be. We are letting them understand we are not a church, but the church. Not a gospel, but this gospel, restored to the earth by the hands of an angel to a young man in the latter days. We are the men with a message, and we do not forget to deliver that message. No sidestepping to gain favor in the eyes of the people, but the straight gospel to gain the favor of God, and we will gain the favor with honest people and lead them into the fold.

Anyone having a good place in view in Spring River District where the tent can be used and you are able to meet the expense and help the missionaries, car fare, etc., write me to Purcell, Missouri.

I am associated with Bro. F. L. Sawley in tent work, having charge of the district tent. We are having excellent interest here, the tent being full every service. The prospect is certainly flattering. The Saints at Troy and also East Saint Louis have been yielding great assistance in song service and by their presence occasionally. What the outcome will be, of course, time only will tell.

We don't want to neglect mentioning the fact that Sr. Alice Mantle, of Troy, is greatly assisting our meeting in presiding at the organ. She certainly is talented in music.

We are enjoying the hospitality of Bro. and Sr. J. E. Smith, formerly of Argentine Branch, and I assure you they certainly are alive in the work, and know how to make the missionary feel that his presence is not a burden to them. We surely know how to appreciate that kind of treatment, don't we, Brother Jenkins? Brother Jenkins and I held an excellent meeting at Oak Hill Branch; the Saints seemed to greatly enjoy the meeting there. The tent was moved from there to Troy, where an excellent meeting was held. Brethren Jenkins, Sawley, and Ivan Davies, of Oak Hill, were the speakers. Two were baptized and others very near the kingdom. I arrived at Troy in time to become useful in assisting moving the tent from Troy to this point.

Not wishing to become burdensome, we will close for the present.

COLLINSVILLE, ILLINOIS, August 31, 1911.

Indiana.

As noted in your issue of 30th ult., we began the gospel work in this city July 13, continuing until the 20th, when a cessation was caused by sickness. We returned and occupied on Sunday before a large audience, and resumed the work for an extended effort on the 26th, and have been battling away nightly to varied audiences. We know not the results, but can afford to await the issue in the hand of the Lord while we "patiently sow the seed" on the immortal soil. Jesus beholds it fall; he will the work record. Interest is manifested and as one gentleman remarked: "I can see you only get thinkers into your church." That is the proposition, when men begin to think, slavery fades away, and throned opinions, arising from religious error, fall. When men begin to think, a fire begins to burn which reduces to ashes the traditions and superstitions of ages which have crisped and blistered the souls of men. "Come let us reason together," says the Lord. "I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich" (Revelation 3: 18). God is willing to reason with men; he is willing to "counsel" man, but alas! the great world knows too much (of a kind) for God to teach the peaceable things of the kingdom.

We have so few of the ministry in this district that the work moves slowly, but it moves nevertheless, as we receive word from local points throughout. Some opportunities seem to have narrowed down, especially at the village of Blissfield, where we thought a nucleus was gathered out, around which a grand work would rally. A great number moved away—one family to Alvorton, Ohio, two families to Mecosta County, Michigan, and one family here to Elkhart, leaving six in the village and four in adjacent points. Hope they will prove to be "scattered seed" to bring forth more fruit.

Some of the faithful old veterans of the cross have finished their work, and moved on up to the higher ranks. The world is better for their having lived for right. Good old Brother Corless, whose prayers moved the heavens and placed inspiration and liberty on the preacher, continued to bear faithful testimony to the work until called to the heavenly home on August 6. His presence at the service, and the familiar "click" of the staff that assisted him to get there, together with his confirming talks, will be missed. His faithfulness will be rewarded. The younger element is coming to the front and donning the armor, as the aged lay it down in this world.

I am stopping with our worthy Brother and Sister A. A. Ward, who manage the Riverside Bakery at this place. If all possessed the spirit of sacrifice, as manifested in this dear brother and sister, something would move. We had the privilege of baptizing their oldest son, Clarence, since opening up here. There are eight Saints here, and they conduct organized Sunday school and Religio. All seem interested in the prosperity of Zion's cause. We believe a good work will be done in Elkhart, although its development may not be immediate.

How beautiful to read the "Opening of the Children's Home." We could scarcely refrain the silent tear as we perused and reflected that the people of God has prepared such environments and care for the little ones who emblemize the citizens of the Kingdom, and to think, they will be trained in the right way.

May our heavenly Father's work move on and up to grander planes until the kingdom of God on earth blends with the family above.

ELKHART, INDIANA, September 13, 1911.

Salt Lake City.

It has been a long time since I have written for your columns. I know lots of my friends desire to hear from me occasionally, but I am apt to neglect my duty in this line.

As I was appointed this year to the Mountain Mission, I got into my field as soon as practicable and have been as busy as circumstances have permitted ever since.

I have preached at Deseret, Filmore, Salt Lake, and Ogden in Utah, and Hagerman and Malad in Idaho. I baptized two at Hagerman and five at Malad.

I find that at Salt Lake City and Ogden very few come out to our places of meetings except the Saints, and they are not very prompt in attendance. The preaching on the streets attracts the attention of a good many men who seem more interested in a forensic combat between us and the Utah people than in the principles of the gospel. When the gospel is being presented, they will usually stop but a few minutes and move on; but if a controversy arises they will flock around as they would to a dog fight.

But a very few women stop any length of time. They complain of it being too hard for them to stand so long. Yesterday in our street meeting we had the pleasure of seeing a number of women stand patiently all through the service, and a splendid interest was manifest, and a good spirit seemed to predominate. None seemed anxious to contend, as is usually the case. Only one question was asked, and the answer seemed satisfactory to all. The question asked was, "Where did you get your authority?" I answered that heaven is the source of authority; and when God calls a man by direct revelation and gives direction for his ordination as he did in the case of Joseph Smith, when he was ordained, that is authority; and that no man in our church, from the highest to the lowest, has any right to act in any office unless he is called of God.

It has been very hot and dry here this summer. A good many complain of the shortage of water. The cities are having trouble to get sufficient water.

J. M. STUBBART.

England.

Perhaps some of the readers may be interested to read about the British Isles Mission conference, held August 5, 6, and 7.

To my mind it was the most remarkable conference held in this country. There were present of the missionary force: Apostle G. T. Griffiths, Bishop May and his wife, Brethren Baldwin, Morgan, and Thomas, besides the local brethren. The conference had been looked forward to in expectation of a good time, and the Lord heard the prayers of his servants, and poured out his Spirit in a remarkable way. The choir, under the able direction of Elder John Foden, rendered excellent anthems at morning and evening service. Brother Thomas (of America) offered prayer at morning service. This prayer was remarked by many as laying the foundation of a good day, its earnest, inspirational force being felt by all. Bishop May preached a splendid sermon, exhorting the Saints to the performance of duty.

Arrangements had been made to hold a procession of Sunday school scholars, and this was the only disappointing feature of the conference. The rain came down in such force that it absolutely prevented any attempt to carry it out. The brass band engaged for the occasion was dismissed, and each had to hurry to the hall as best they could. It was indeed a sorry sight to see the little ones dressed in white, laden with flowers, struggling under umbrellas, while dozens were prevented from leaving their homes, thereby missing a spiritual feast. Some splendid spiritual testimonies were borne, when Brother Morgan, who was assisting Brother Griffiths to preside over the meeting, arose and said that the gifts were present. He had no sooner sat down, than Bro. Alf Jones of Nantyglo, spoke in tongues. Prayer was made by Brother Dewsnup for interpretation; while this was in progress, the power of God was made manifest, in a remarkable manner, several brethren being visibly affected. Brother Jones then gave the interpretation; it was to the effect that the work in this part had been languishing, and it had been hindered by reason of jealousies. "My servants have quarreled over trifles, but if they will put away these things, and hearken to the counsel of those whom I have sent amongst you, the work in the land shall revive, and the hills and valleys resound with the sound of the gospel, and many shall rejoice."

In the evening Brother Baldwin gave an eloquent and stirring discourse upon the parable of the sower.

Monday afternoon Bishop May explained the financial law and the necessity of Saints making out their inventories.

Monday night, business being over, a fellowship meeting was held, Brother Griffiths in charge. Brother Jones again exercised the gift of tongues. He also gave the interpretation, that the Lord was well pleased with his servant, G. T. Griffiths, and he would bless the efforts that he was making to more thoroughly organize the work in this land, and that he should return home laden with sheaves. Some have closed their doors against the servants; such should suffer loss and become poor, and suffer sickness, while those who continued rebellious should be cut off by the hand of death. Brother Jenkins also spoke in tongues, Brother Jones giving the interpretation. This was to the effect that the Lord could not pour out the fullness of his blessings because the Saints had neglected to obey the financial law. If the Saints would honor this law, God would indeed open the windows of heaven and shower blessings upon their heads. Much more instruction and exhortation was given. Patriarch James Baty confirmed the interpretation. He said that the Lord had made the same things known unto him, and he asked, "How can I give the blessing of God unless we have obeyed his law. Sister May, in a soul-stirring testimony, said that the same things had been shown unto them before leaving home. She was glad to be at this conference and partake of the same Spirit as at Independence. She felt just as much at home here as she ever did in her life. Brother Griffiths said that the same things had been told them in Ohio. Thus we see that the Lord revealed these things in Independence, Ohio, England, and confirmed them by the gift of tongues through a brother from Wales.

Brother Leggott also spoke by the Spirit to Brother Baldwin, saying that the Lord was well pleased with him, and would make him a blessing to many souls. Many more inspiring testimonies were borne, bringing to a close this memorable conference, which has confirmed the Saints, strengthened the servants, and stimulated their desires to be actually engaged in promulgating his cause. All praise and glory to God.

Praying for the prosperity of the work, I remain,

JOHN BAILEY.

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, 45 Rochdale, Harpurley.

Northwestern Kansas.

Since last writing, we held a very profitable series of meetings in Blue Rapids, Kansas. We were assisted by Bro. J. D. Shower, who is an earnest worker. Bro. Mahlon Smith is branch president and has faithfully watched over the Saints for a number of years.

Sister Peak and I left there August 24 for the Northwestern Kansas district conference and reunion, which were to convene at Osborne, August 26. We stopped at Linn and stayed all night with Bro. Henry Hoerman and family. They were old acquaintances and we had a very pleasant visit.

The next day we were at the depot in time to take the westbound train, and as it pulled in, Maud, my oldest daughter, appeared in the doorway with an anxious expression on her face, which changed to a broad smile as soon as she saw us. She had been invited by the committee on arrangements to attend the reunion and take charge of the music. When Bro. J. A. Gunsolley was informed of her intentions of attending the reunion, he authorized her to represent the Sunday school and Religio departments while there. We were soon comfortably located and the train was speeding through a beautiful country, that showed the effects of too much dry weather. Yet the crops were better than we had expected to see.

As the hours passed we grew tired of looking at the fields of corn, that were showing the effects of the drought more and more as we went west. About sundown I noticed that Maud's hat was about to fall out of the rack. I stood on the seat and pushed it back, and in doing so I knocked my hat down and it went out of the window. This seemed to amuse Sister Peak and Maud, for they looked at me for an instant with a surprised expression, then both broke out in a merry laugh. This continued from time to time till we arrived at Downs, at 9 p. m. The evening was cool and it was necessary for me to protect that bald spot, so Maud tied my handkerchief around my head, something like the sisters do when they clean house. I took my valises and walked out of the car and down the street to the hotel, attracting considerably more attention than I was accustomed to. While I saw no pleasure in it, Sister Peak and Maud enjoyed it immensely. When we reached our room, Sister Peak said, "We have a better joke on you than Brother Pitt got on Rose, that is related in the last Autumn Leaves." But I almost got even with Maud when a brother said during the reunion, "Maud is a better singer than her mother, but she is not so good looking."

The loss of the hat caused me to think of Bro. Dan Sherman, who bought it for me in Scranton, Mississippi, about a year ago. He is one of our splendid young men of the South. The evening before he purchased the hat, he took some eighteen Saints in his gasoline boat and treated us to a ride on the Gulf of Mexico, from Escatawpa to Horno Island, a distance of about twenty miles. We enjoyed it. The island was low and sandy. The party were all young men and women, except Elder Freeman Sherman and myself. While on the island the young men engaged in wrestling. This caused the sporting blood of my youth to tingle. One strong young fellow who succeeded in throwing all who engaged with him, said, after putting his last antagonist down, "Come on, Brother Peak. I want to roll you in the sand." I arose, slipped off my coat, and to his great surprise took side holds with him. Well, it was necessary for me to throw him four straight falls before he could realize what he had hold of. I did the same with all that felt like trying it. Then I turned a few somersaults, gave a few other acrobatic stunts, then sat down and tried to assume the dignity that belongs to one of my age. I relate this to demonstrate to the young the advantages of keeping the Word of Wisdom. I believed it when I accepted the gospel and have come as near keeping it from my youth up as any instructions the Lord has given. I do not claim perfection in anything, but I know something of the benefits of living according to the principles in the Word of Wisdom.

By the way, I passed through Kansas City yesterday and invested a penny to test the force of a blow I could strike. The machine registered six hundred pounds, which according to this machine is the average blow for a man weighing two hundred pounds. We can not help from feeling a little suspicious when we see a bald-headed barber trying to sell a hair restorer, nor from thinking that there is something wrong when we hear a weakly elder explaining the Word of Wisdom and telling us how strictly he has observed it for to these many years. There can be no doubt about the truthfulness of the Word of Wisdom, but we seriously doubt the interpretations we sometimes hear. I have been preaching for a long time, but have never preached but one sermon on the Word of Wisdom, and have only referred to it a few times publicly. There is a great difference between a word of wisdom and a commandment, but I will close on this subject for fear I will be greatly misunderstood as the revelation is itself.

The next morning we took the 7.35 a. m. train for Osborne, arriving in time for the opening prayer meeting at 9.30 a. m.

A few of the Saints had assembled and the Lord recognized our efforts. During the meeting the following vision was shown me: I saw Bro. John A. Teeters standing erect, with his hat off, with a very pleasant, happy expression on his face, accompanied by a number of Saints. He was looking in a northwesterly direction, while he and the whole company of Saints were surrounded by a very brilliant light. The expression on his face was that of complete satisfaction and confidence. I did not recognize any of the rest, but understood that it represented the condition of the faithful Saints in the district, that God indeed accepted them, that they were in the light of the gospel, and that Bro. John A. Teeters was accepted by the Lord as their leader. I also saw another brother whom I knew, who was some distance away from the Saints in a northwesterly direction. He had some light, but not so much as surrounded the Saints. This brother was going to the Saints as fast as he could go. He was making great exertion to reach them. May the Lord enable us to remain in the light.

The conference was a success, and the reunion was the most spiritual, and in some ways the most profitable of any I ever attended in this district.

Maud made a fine success in her work. Far better than I expected. One sister said to me, "We have often wondered what Maud's work would be since we heard you prophesy to her three years ago at the reunion in Alexander; but we see now." It was revealed to me then that if Maud was faithful, she would have the same gifts of the gospel that I have.

The prayer meetings were very spiritual, the preaching a higher order than usual. The singing would have done credit to some of our leading choirs. We held street services every day at 4 p. m., excepting Sundays. The singing attracted the attention of the people and the quality of it created a fine impression, so our street meetings did more to spread our work among the people than those held in the church. Our street meetings were decidedly a success. Bro. Jay Hoffman and the writer both preached each day on the street, and our audiences increased till on Saturday we had a fine crowd that paid splendid attention.

We left Sunday night. Maud went directly home to begin her school in Franklin, Tuesday, September 5. She is the principal there this year. Sister Peak and I stopped in Independence, Missouri. She went on home September 6 and I came to Fanning to attend the conference and reunion.

News From Branches

Providence, Rhode Island.

Our late reunion at Onset, Massachusetts, was one of the best ever enjoyed by the Massachusetts District.

The weather was fine the whole two weeks; quantities of rain having fallen two days before the reunion convened, so the dust was well laid.

The site purchased by our reunion committee is a beautiful place—an island surrounded by the waters from Buzzard Bay, and the beautiful views one can see, as they sit in the meetings, of waters and trees—are inspirational to the worship of the God who created such beauty.

A continuation of said gratitude was felt as the "Glory of God" (intelligence) was manifested in the "institute work" of the first sessions of worship of the day and were a great source of comfort, edification, instruction and pleasure to all who attended, as was evidenced by the large attendance each morning at 8.30, and we trust that each succeeding year said services shall be even more largely appreciated.

Our district primary workers conceived a plan to instruct ively entertain babies from two to five years of age so the mothers could attend the prayer meetings, and hereafter they are to be furnished a separate tent for their worthy work, which is much appreciated by all who received this assistance. So mothers may now be encouraged to attend reunions with their babies, knowing they will be able to attend prayer meetings and their babies be well cared for.

Sunday school workers were very much encouraged to learn that graded Sunday school quarterly lessons are expected to be had in the near future, and we feel this is a move in the right direction, and your correspondent feels there should also be a graded set of lessons on all three books, also the Church History, that the student may receive a thorough instruction therefrom on the doctrine of Christ, which shall enable him to "walk uprightly before the Lord" and the world, and to know his duty, and to be educated to defend the work with scientific knowledge, and to progress on spiritual lines—as the student does at the day school on the lines of study they have. We feel to rejoice that the day of ignorance will thus be dispersed, and all shall be able to attend the Sunday school with prepared lessons on all three books, that the progress of the recitation hour may not be hindered; and thus will the student be made to see the harmony of instruction of the above books, and knowledge, appreciation, and satisfaction of soul will be increased, and more will be willing to leave all to follow Christ.

There were twenty-four baptisms at this reunion, one of whom was an infidel, and another a Spiritualist, who are now rejoicing in the greater light of truth and divinity. May the Lord bless all such is my prayer.

On our return home to Providence we found our local priesthood's efforts at outdoor preaching had been very well attended, interesting a number, two of whom are now regular attendants at the branch services.

We are now expecting the addition of a new organ to increase the efficiency of the chapel services, and are to have German services on Sunday afternoons at the chapel as well as outdoor services on the "Training Grounds."

Wishing to take this opportunity and voicing the sentiments of many, I should like to commend and thank our Quarterly editor, Sister Salyards, and coworkers, for the excellent Quarterly of this quarter, and trust more such is to follow, as it is proving a source of deep comfort to the isolated home department scholars, as well as those in the "fold."

Faithfully,
SISTER LOTTIE.

Independence, Missouri.

On Thursday, September 13, at 3 p. m. occurred the funeral obsequies of Elder John Kaler, in charge of Bro. W. H. Garrett, assisted by Brn. J. C. Foss, I. N. White, and Joseph Luff.

After the reading of several scriptural passages from the three books by Elder Garrett, Brother Foss gave much consolation in a touching eulogy on the life and services of our brother as a minister, and told of his parting from his family and of the tender care he had received at the Sanitarium.

Brother White also spoke of his closing hours, receiving while talking over the phone an evidence of our brother's near approach to the end. He also heard a voice, and the Spirit said God was about to take Brother Kaler to himself, that he might do a greater work on the other side. His kindness and prayerfulness, his reliance upon God, his strong testimony to the divinity of the work, and his zeal in vindication of the truth were remarkable.

Doctor Luff, in a pathetic manner spoke of his last sickness. He loved him because of his integrity and love of the gospel work. He was always to be depended on. God had found a man in whom he could trust with safety. He developed through persecution, trial, and deprivation, and he remained firm and immovable in the faith, to the end.

The church was full of friends who had gathered to pay a willing and acceptable tribute to a humble, faithful brother, and an honest Latter Day Saint.

On Sunday, the 17th, at the early prayer meeting many excellent testimonies brought encouragement to the seventy-five Saints present. Among those who spoke were Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser, Bishop Bullard, M. H. Siegfried, A. V. Closson, and several of the young who, in the Spirit of love and humility, bore witness to the truth.

The Sunday school attendance was 752, Elder William Newton offered the opening prayer, and the superintendent talked to us about rally day, and furnished each member with a Sunday school button. Prefaced by a fervent prayer and a very impressive vocal solo, in the morning, Bro. M. H. Bond greeted the Saints, after a long absence from home, with a discourse on the ever welcome and oft heard of topic, The kingdom of God. Patriarchs and prophets and the inspired psalmist of old,—all preached and sang about the kingdom and the gospel of Christ and, though some did not in these days comprehend the great scheme of the atonement. The speaker was glad that many have a sure testimony concerning its divinity and power.

Brother Joseph pronounced the benediction, and left with the people his good word and wishes for peace in a bright eternity.

"Oh, city where the shining gates

Shut out all grief and sin,

Well may we yearn amid earth's strife,

Thy holy peace to win."

The afternoon hours were filled with "good things" for the Saints: One blessing and four baptismal ceremonies, spiritual gifts, prophecies full of cheer, instructive testimonies from Elders E. Short, H. Kemp, and Bishop Bullard, who closed his cheering advice with these words: "Let us be wise children of the light, for it is keeping the commandments that will bring the blessing: our blind shall then receive their sight and the lame be made to walk."

Reunion Minutes.

SOUTHERN NEBRASKA.—At Eustis, Nebraska, August 25, to September 3, 1911. Elders W. M. Self and James E. Kelley were chosen as the presidency, and Edward Rannie as secretary. The following is a synopsis of what was done: Sermons preached, 29; patriarchal blessings, 27; prayer meetings, 10; baptisms, 5. Of the missionary force present there was as follows: W. M. Self, James E. Kelley, R. O. Self, Joshua Carlile, and Edward Rannie. It was decided to have another reunion in 1912, the time and place to be selected by the committee and the missionary in charge of Nebraska. It was recommended by vote that the committee, if it was found expedient and practicable, have the reunion of 1912 at the same time and place as the district conference. The prevailing opinion by those present was that the reunion was a success. The Saints were greatly strengthened, and they realized that their faith was built on a rock that could withstand the storms of opposition. The public has a better knowledge, also a better opinion of our faith than they had before. The committee and the Saints did their work well, and all the expense was met without any hardship on them. The good Spirit was present throughout the entire time, blessing the ministry in their work, and cheering the Saints in their fellowship one with another. The committee for 1912 is as follows: H. A. Higgins, W. M. Self, Samuel Broliar, G. W. Johnson, William Grubb.

On Wednesday at 4 p. m. a sewing bee was held in which men and women furnished material and sewed for the Children's Home, which resulted in 167 towels, 24 pillow slips, 26 tea towels, 73 napkins, 1 quilt, 1 sheet, 1 tablecloth, 8 wash cloths. A collection was also taken up for the Children's Home amounting to over $40. On Thursday afternoon at 4 o'clock some six hundred or more went out to Magnolia's beautiful cemetery, where a memorial service was held in honor of more than a score of pioneer Latter Day Saints buried there. After singing, Patriarch Charles Derry offered prayer, Alma M. Fyrando then recited events of interest relative to the pioneer dead, and gave a touching tribute of respect to the lives they lived. Heman C. Smith then gave a short address. Sr. Vida E. Smith read Thanatopsis. Benediction by Patriarch C. E. Butterworth. The service was held at the grave of Bro. James Caffall, and the aged and infirm were conveyed in automobiles and carriages. Twenty-one were baptized. Preaching was by Brn. Heman C. Smith, J. W. Wight, Columbus Scott, Charles Derry, C. E. Butterworth, W. A. Smith, C. J. Hunt, Alma M. Fyrando, Joseph Lane, J. C. Crabb, Sidney Pitt, sr., W. W. Baker, J. M. Baker, and Joseph Seddon. Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser had charge of Sunday school and Religio work, and was ably assisted by Mrs. Vida E. Smith, Estella Wight, Lizzie Wight, and Blanche Andrews. An appeal was made for the support of Sandhedens Banner and the Scandinavian Mission by Bro. P. I. Anderson, returned missionary, and $106.30 was collected. The song services were excellent; the prayer services were very spiritual; the preaching in power. One hundred and twenty-three tents in Magnolia's beautiful park, 560 camped on grounds, and 169 visitors lodged in private homes.

It was the largest and best reunion of the past twelve or more years. Magnolia Saints and citizens bore all the expenses of the reunion. At the business session held Friday, September 8, at 2.30 p. m., the action had one year ago relative to a locating committee of five, was rescinded. By unanimous vote Magnolia was chosen as the place for holding the reunion of 1912. No accidents, little sickness, and ample accommodations combined to make this reunion one long to be remembered. A. M. Fyrando, secretary.

The Bishopric.

To the Members of the Independence Stake; Greeting: As per notice in Ensign, September 14, 1911, I have been placed in charge of the stake finances and to act as stake bishop, in place of Bishop R. May, resigned. A hearty cooperation from every Saint in the stake is earnestly solicited, so that the financial arm of the Lord's work may be strengthened, and we may be able to meet our financial obligations. The very best we can do is what is required of us all, anything short of this, is lowering our standard as the Zion of latter days, and falling short of what the Master requires at our hand. The times are pregnant with golden opportunities to further the cause of Christ, as well as of peril and danger. Let us then, as the children of light, meet our obligations with honest endeavor, strength of mind and purpose, and we need have no fear of the results. The "all pull together" effort is what will count in the main, and the only way to bring about permanent success. Let our aim be to get near the Master in life and character, so that we may be in full enjoyment of the Holy Spirit, and under its influence we will be anxious to meet every requirement of the law of God, as now in demand; we will then have enough and to spare to place our work on a firm and lasting basis, and the abundance of the Father's favor will be enjoyed by us as a cherishing fountain; to this end may we labor and gain the victory.

"Bring in all your tithes and offerings" is as applicable to us to-day, and the needs just as urgent as when Malachi, the Lord's prophet, gave this command to ancient Israel; and the blessings and recognition of God (who changes not) is for the obedient as then. May we all be assisted to do our duty, and the results will be grand.

Address all matter pertaining to stake finances to the Stake Bishop, Lock Box 115, Independence, Missouri. The books have been audited up-to-date, so we start on a new page, and feel sure we will have the hearty cooperation of all who love the Lord.

RICHARD BULLARD,
B. J. SCOTT,
For Independence Stake Bishopric.

AGENTS' NOTICE.

To the Saints of the Southern Missouri District; Greeting: Having been appointed bishop's agent for this district, I take this method of notifying the Saints that I have received the necessary books, and I am now prepared to receive tithes and offerings and give receipts for same. Money orders should be made payable at Ava, Missouri. Elder J. C. Christensen will give receipts for any money that may be handed to him as tithing, during his visits among the Saints, as district president, but all money should be sent direct to the undersigned at Tigris, Missouri, so as to save the additional expense of forwarding. The Lord has commanded us to pay our tithes and make our sacrifices and offerings willingly, so let every Saint live in obedience to the divine law. "None are exempt," no matter how poor they are, or how small the amount, and have their names enrolled on the bishop's book.
BENJAMIN PEARSON, Bishop's Agent.

An Explanation.

In the article in the HERALD of September 6, 1911, page 844, under the caption, "The Kingdom of God," we used the following personalities without giving the initials: "From such secondhanded stuff as Beadle, Crow, Bays, et al."

Mr. Charles L. Crow, of Logan, Iowa, we are informed, thinks that some of the HERALD readers might get a misunderstanding as to which Crow we referred to. The one to whom we refer is the itinerant preacher, editor, etc., W. L. Crow, a bitter enemy of the Reorganized Church, and who is the author of the work, entitled, The Mormon Waterloo. Mr. Charles L. Crow, of Logan, Iowa, is unknown to the writer, and is not the gentleman to whom we referred in the article. We ask pardon of Mr. Charles L. Crow for any seeming reflection.

INDIRECTLY

Improper Food and Improper Drink produce 95 deaths out of a hundred. Feed the animal properly and give it plenty of good water and you have a healthy animal. Perhaps two to three kinds of food is all that is necessary. In the natural condition it is only one. Why all this confusion of over 500 different kinds of supposed to be food products for mankind. Let me give you the basic foods for health:

Good Health Flour abundantly, the vegetables in season and meat sparingly in the winter only. Only one drink created, and that is PURE WATER. If you could but see and understand the vast army of people dying indirectly from fermented liquors. Liquor when taken into the system stimulates, and the poor, innocent liver and kidneys must do the extra unnatural labor to purify the system. The result is plainly seen daily on the person that is only drinking a little. At the age of 35 to 50 he becomes old and inactive, his liver and kidneys in a worse worn out condition than a man of 80 who has lived a clean life. Drink water abundantly, eat plenty of Klar's Good Health Flour made into bread, breakfast food, etc., and see how quickly good old nature rebuilds the system. Remember, it is your own business what you do, but also remember it is your own hide you take to the tannery. "Jones pays the freight"; are you Mr. Jones?

THE "CHRISTIAN STANDARD" ON MARK 16.

"I wish to thank you for upholding the undoubted authenticity of Mark 16: 9-20, in your reply to O. G. Maltzberger in the Standard of April 22. One thing, however, I am unable to understand. Why does the Christian Church accept unhesitatingly the sixteenth verse of the chapter referred to, and yet in effect reject the seventeenth and eighteenth verses? In reply to this inquiry, please do not overlook the positive promise given in the seventeenth verse: 'And these signs shall follow them that believe.' E. S. Smasbey."

The Christian Church does not in any sense reject the verses referred to. A question of interpretation is involved in these verses, and we reject the interpretation which makes the promise of miraculous endowment apply to believers in general. If our friend will study the whole paragraph with his grammar open before him, he will see that there is no such promise. In the expression, "these signs shall follow them that believe," the pronoun "them" is plural, and it finds no antecedent till you get back to the fourteenth verse, which furnishes the plural antecedent in the word eleven. The pronouns they and them occur not less than thirteen times in the paragraph, and in all of them the reference is undoubtedly to the eleven. In the sixteenth verse the pronoun is singular, showing conclusively that the reference is different. "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved," refers to the general believer. But immediately following the commission the plural form of the pronoun is resumed, referring to the eleven, and not the general believer. The Savior had just rebuked them for their "unbelief and hardness of heart," and now, having commissioned them, he assures them that such of them as believed would be able to do the miracles mentioned. And this is followed by the historical statement that they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and "confirming the word with the signs that followed." Thus we have both the promise and the fulfillment recorded in the same paragraph. This seems to be the natural, easy and plain interpretation of the paragraph. If, however, some one who claims that the promise is to the general believer, will perform a few miracles, we may change our opinion.

A correspondent sends us a copy of the Christian Standard, dated July 8, 1911, containing the above quoted question and answer, evidently desiring us to comment on them. As our readers well know, verse sixteen of the chapter under consideration contains the injunction to go into all the world and preach the gospel. It is accepted by the Christian Standard and the Christian people (Disciples) as well as by practically all other denominations. Verses seventeen and eighteen contain the promise that certain signs shall follow them that believe, such as casting out devils, healing the sick, and speaking with new tongues. These verses are not accepted at their face value by Christians or Disciples and many other denominations, and in the editorial answer given above the Christian Standard adopts the old plan of explaining their meaning away by attempting to limit the promise to the eleven disciples.

We do not believe that any expert grammarian (not theologically interested in destroying the force of the verses) will indorse the construction which the Standard puts upon them. But one need not be an expert grammarian to discover the fallacy of attempting to make the pronoun they in the seventeenth and eighteenth verses refer back exclusively to the eleven. Jesus was addressing the eleven, and would not have used the pronoun in the third person in speaking to them if others were not included in the promise. He would have said: "You shall cast out devils; you shall speak with new tongues, etc."

But passing all that by, the ordinary man can put the interpretation of the Standard to the test and discover that the pronoun they as used in these two verses has a general sense and can not be limited to the eleven. Read the verses as the Standard would have them read: "And these signs shall follow them that believe (the eleven); In my name shall they (the eleven) cast out devils; they (the eleven) shall speak with new tongues; they (the eleven) shall take up serpents; and if they (the eleven) drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them (the eleven); they (the eleven) shall lay hands on the sick, and they (the eleven) shall recover."

It will be clearly seen that the gifts and blessings here promised were not limited to the eleven; but extended to all them that believed,—the word they had a general application to the entire body of believers. History bears us out in this statement, because it is a well-known fact that the signs here enumerated followed those who were not of the eleven, and that not once but many times. Ananias, not one of the eleven, laid his hands on Saul, according to the promise, and Saul was healed of blindness and received the Holy Ghost (Acts 9: 17, 18).

Paul, not one of the eleven, healed the sick and cast out devils (Acts 19: 28; 8: 11, 12). He took up a serpent (accidentally, of course,) yet received no permanent hurt (Acts 28: 3-5). The Saints at Ephesus, not of the eleven, spoke in tongues (Acts 19: 6). At least the Bible says: "And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied." Possibly, however, the Standard will argue that the pronoun they here used in Acts, applies to the eleven and refers clear back to the fourteenth verse of the last chapter of Mark, a contention only slightly more absurd than the one which they have already made.

At the close of the editorial in question the Standard says that if those who accept the promise will perform a few miracles they may change their attitude. Many miracles have been performed and are attested by reputable witnesses, yet the Standard has not changed its attitude. But this statement of theirs is strikingly like that made by the Devil, who told Jesus that if he would perform a few miracles he would change his attitude and worship. (See Matthew 4: 1-9.)

The Devil and the Christian Standard are both wrong in promising to believe on condition that miracles are performed. Believers are made by the preaching of the word, by logic, scriptural evidences, and the testimony of the Holy Spirit. The signs then follow the believer. Miracles when not associated with the gospel and with obedience, are of no value. It is a wicked generation (according to Christ himself) that passes by the preached word, logic, scripture, and the testimony of the Spirit, ignoring all, and demanding a sign ere it will believe (see Matthew 16: 1-4).

Why is the Christian Standard obliged to resort to such a strained interpretation of this scripture? The answer is not hard to find. Peter said that no prophecy of scripture was of any private interpretation. Peter did not change scripture to fit his belief. He changed his belief to fit scripture. He preached the word of God as he found it.

The old colored preacher in defining the word phenomenon, said: "If you see a cow, that ain't a phenomenon. If you see a thistle, that ain't one. And if you see a bird, that ain't one, neither. But if you see a cow sittin' on a thistle and a-singin' like a bird, why then, that's a phenomenon."

The Christian Standard is not a phenomenon. The Bible is not a phenomenon; neither was Peter. But if we ever see the Christian Standard taking a stand squarely on the Bible and teaching it as Peter did we shall see a phenomenon.

THE ILLINOIS LAW RELATING TO POLYGAMY DURING THE SOJOURN OF THE SAINTS IN NAUVOO.

We have been asked regarding the exact reading of the law of the State of Illinois regarding bigamy or polygamy as said law was in force during the sojourn of the Saints in the city of Nauvoo. For the benefit of those who may be interested we reproduce section 121 of the law in question. We have carefully verified our copy and know it to be correct. The statute book from which we quote may be found in the state law library, at Des Moines, Iowa. The section is as follows:

SECTION 121.—Bigamy consists in the having of two wives or two husbands at one and the same time, knowing that the former husband or wife is still alive. If any person or persons within this State, being married, or who shall hereafter marry, do at any time marry any person or persons, the former husband or wife being alive; the person so offending shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, and imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding two years. It shall not be necessary to prove either of the said marriages by the register or certificate thereof, or other record evidence; but the same may be proved by such evidence as is admissible to prove a marriage in other cases, and when such second marriage shall have taken place without this State, cohabitation in this State after such second marriage shall be deemed the commission of the crime of bigamy, and the trial in such case may take place in the county where such cohabitation shall have occurred. Nothing herein contained shall extend to any person or persons whose husband or wife shall have been continually absent from such person or persons for the space of five years together, prior to the said second marriage, and he or she not knowing such husband or wife to be living within that time. Also nothing herein contained shall extend to any person that is or shall be at any time of such second marriage divorced by lawful authority from the bands of such former marriage, or to any person where the former marriage hath been by lawful authority declared void.—Criminal Code, an act relative to Jurisprudence, 11th Division, entitled, "Offences against the Public Morality, Health, and the Police," Statute Laws of Illinois, 1839.

This statute went into force July 1, 1833. At a later date the state statutes were revised, and the revised version went into effect September 10, 1845; but section 121 was incorporated in the revised code without change, so was in force during the entire time of the residence of the Saints in Nauvoo, from the date of its founding in 1839 until their expulsion.

It will be seen by this that if Joseph Smith, Brigham Young, Lorenzo Snow, or any other man, having one wife, married another woman or cohabited with her, under the guise of "celestial marriage," or any other pretense, he was a criminal under the state law and liable to fine and imprisonment in the penitentiary.

It is claimed that the celebrated, so-called revelation instituting polygamy was given through Joseph Smith, in Nauvoo, Hancock County, Illinois, July 12, 1843. At that time this state law had been in force ten years, and was still in force. It is not conceivable that God, who had previously said, "Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land" (Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5; Utah Edition 58: 21), would in 1843 give a revelation commanding his prophet and his people to break the law of the State in which they lived. God does not aid or abet crime.

We are forced to the conclusion that the so-called revelation was of human origin. The position of the Reorganized Church as to the true nature of that origin is so well known that we will not enter into that subject at this time, nor weary our readers with its discussion. We have simply reproduced the wording of the law for the benefit of those interested and making inquiry.

RURAL CHURCH, AND COMMUNITY BETTERMENT.—During December, 1910, there met in New York City a great conference to discuss the fortunes of the country church and to devise methods of bettering the conditions of country life. At this conference there were delegates present from most of the leading denominations, the various theological schools, the United States Department of Agriculture, the Bureau of Education, the Federal Council of Churches, and the State Agricultural Schools. Various topics under the general head of "The rural church and community betterment," were taken up and discussed in five-minute speeches. These speeches are now assembled and published under the title given above. A book is thus formed that is interesting and profitable to those who are interested in country life; it also affords a glimpse at the attitude of the "sectarian churches" on various subjects. We note that the modern professors of sociology and economics gave the theological schools with their old-time methods and course of study some pretty hard raps, while at times the professors of theology came back in good style at their critics. (Association Press, 124 East 28th street, New York City. Cloth $1.00.)

INGERSOLL; A BIOGRAPHICAL APPRECIATION.—The Dresden Publishing Company of London has published a new five hundred page biography of the noted atheist, Robert G. Ingersoll, who is heralded in the opening chapter as the "greatest and noblest of the Western World." The biography is written by Herman E. Kittredge, revised by the widow of Colonel Ingersoll, and splendidly printed and bound. Of it one critic writes:

"It is the first important and authoritative account of the life work of Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll. It presents, in chronological order, through the media of authentic incidents, letters, interviews, extracts, anecdotes, reminiscences, and so forth, the life story of a man who, whatever may be the ultimate verdict as to his antitheological views, was one of the most remarkable and interesting individuals of his century—orator par excellence, patriot, soldier, lawyer, philanthropist, wit and humorist, prose poet, thinker, iconoclast, reformer, and champion of intellectual liberty." (J. F. Taylor and Company, 18 East Seventeenth street, New York City. Cloth, postpaid, $2.70.)

WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON.—This is a newly issued biography of the great abolitionist, written by Lindsay Swift and published by George W. Jacobs and Company. It is one of a series known as the American Crisis Biographies, devoted to the lives of such men as Abraham Lincoln, Robert E. Lee, U. S. Grant, and Stephen A. Douglas. Garrison was born the same year and the same month with Joseph Smith, and made it his life work to carry out the sentiment expressed by the latter, "It is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another." He edited the Liberator and was a prominent and powerful actor in the great drama just preceding and during the Civil War. He faced death and became familiar with mobs and prisons in his crusade for the freedom of the negro slaves. Naturally an extremist, he justified his radical utterances in this classical denunciation of moderation:

"I am aware that many object to the severity of my language, but is there not cause for severity? I will be as harsh as truth and as uncompromising as justice. On this subject I do not wish to think, to speak or to write with moderation. No! No! Tell a man whose house is on fire to give a moderate alarm; tell him to moderately rescue his wife from the hands of the ravisher; tell the mother to gradually extricate her babe from the fire into which it has fallen—but urge me not to use moderation in a cause like the present. I am in earnest—I will not equivocate. I will not retreat a single inch—and I will be heard." (George W. Jacobs and Company, 208 W. Washington square, Philadelphia. $1.37 by mail.)

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

IMPORTANT MEETINGS HERE AND THERE.—Elder W. E. LaRue, pastor of the church in Brooklyn, sends us cards announcing a "rally day" which marks the opening of regular services in Genealogical Hall, New York City, and writes: "The first missionary effort for the Reorganized Church in the great city of New York." This service, now past, was announced for October 1. On the same day the Saints of Philadelphia held their seventy-second anniversary celebration. The pastor, Bro. Walter W. Smith reports fifty-three baptisms since the first of the year. The Des Moines (Iowa) Saints are to observe their second annual "home coming day" October 8. A varied program is announced. The speaker for morning and evening is Elder Elbert A. Smith. The Sharon Telegraph, Sharon, Pennsylvania, September 26 chronicles the beginning of the debate between Elder A. M. McVey of the Church of Christ and Elder F. J. Ebeling of the Latter Day Saints. A very fair statement of our position is given.

YOUTH.

(Synopsis of sermon delivered by Elder A. B. Kirkendall, at Kirtland, Ohio, August 20, 1911. Reported by Frances C. Booker.)

Saints and friends, it makes me rejoice to be permitted to speak to you in this house of God, that has been sanctified by the presence of the Master himself, and where angelic voices joined in the choir; where from the mouths of babes and sucklings issued songs of "Hosanna to God in the highest."

I am doubly proud as this is the headquarters of the National Anti-Mormon Missionary Association, where that insignificant thing was born which was originated by J. T. Bridwell, R. B. Neal, D. H. Bays, Clark Braden, G. F. Ghormley, and others.

The brother in his introduction used a political term, "Judge," having been given me by the people in the county where I reside. While I am proud of this term given me by men, I am still more proud that God has chosen me as an elder to represent him.

I have not chosen a text this morning, as I didn't know until a short time ago that I was the chosen speaker of the hour. So as I have no special text I will address myself to the young people congregated here this morning.

My mind goes back to the statement in sacred writ, "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not." Also to the statement of the Apostle Paul to Timothy, his son in the gospel, "Let no man despise thy youth." My mind goes back to the young Samuel, who while yet a child ministered in the temple, and so readily responded "Here am I" to the Lord's call. The Lord in days past has recognized the youth.

Last week I attended the teachers' institute in our county, and one of the instructors related a mythological tradition illustrative of the responsibilities of youth. When man was created he was created in the prime of life and existed upon the earth for a time; but the gods held a grand council in which the question as to whether it would be wisdom to give man the pleasures of youth was discussed. It was finally decided that a new creation was to be made. A concourse of angels escorted them to earth, singing a beautiful song, the chorus of which was, "Now you have youth; now you have youth. What will you do with it?" While this is pure mythology, this question has come down the ages to every parent whom God has blessed with children.

Youth is the formative period of life, when we are most susceptible to impressions. Character is formed and habits fixed. Thoughts are crystalized into action before reaching middle life. While environments may have their influence upon us through life, yet the impressions made in childhood remain with us throughout our lives.

I will relate an incident bearing upon the subject of starting right in life. It is associated with my first visit to this historic place. Twenty-four years ago last April I made my first visit to Kirtland. As we were coming over the Big Four Railroad the brakeman called out the name of the town of Crestline. A gentleman across the aisle remarked to another, "What gave this town the name of Crestline?" He replied that it was the watershed between the Ohio River and the Great Lakes, and that where the town now stood there formerly stood a barn, and that when it rained the water on the north side of the barn went into Lake Erie and on the south side into the Gulf of Mexico. I thought no more of this incident until last fall, when I made another trip to Kirtland. When we passed the town of Crestline the wheels of memory turned and I thought of the incident of nearly a quarter of a century before. There was no one on the train that I knew, and unfortunately I had no book, so that I was compelled to draw myself within myself and in retrospection think of the past and by introspection of the present and apperception of the future, in my mind's eye I traced two raindrops, born from the womb of the same cloud, one of which fell on the north side, and the other on the south side of the coping of the old barn. The one that fell on the north dropped from the eaves of the building and in company with its fellows formed a little rivulet and flowed into the stream and eventually found its way into Lake Erie. It was forced eastward by gravity, was dashed over the mighty cataract of Niagara, on through Lake Ontario, out into the Saint Lawrence, and was taken up in mist in the fog banks of Newfoundland, and the cold winds carried it to the north and it was deposited on "Greenland's icy mountain," where for ages it has lain or will lay useless and inert, and is of no profit to humanity, so far as science knows. The other drop falling on the south side of the old barn, like its sister drop in company with its fellows formed a little rivulet but flowed down through our beautiful State, "An empire within an empire," into the Ohio River, thence to the Mississippi, and picking up its grain of sand it helped to build up the delta of the Mississippi, contributing its part to the formation of a small continent extending from the mouth of the Mississippi two hundred miles north, being one of the most fertile spots in our great country. After reaching the gulf it was taken by the gulf stream and carried through the Atlantic and helped to make the climate of "Merry England" as congenial and pleasant as Ohio, although as far north as Labrador. (Scientific men are now disputing this theory, yet it does not destroy the poetry of my imaginary soliloquy.)

It too was taken up in mist and was deposited upon the land, and taken up in chemical solution, which in turn by capillary attraction was transformed into fruit or golden grain. A child ate this fruit or grain, and the bright luster of the eye, the rose color of the cheek were but contributions of the drop of water. This child became a Kepler, capable of measuring and weighing the heavenly bodies, or a Newton, who discovered the great principle of gravity, or a Marconi, that gave us wireless telegraphy, an incalculable benefit to the race, or a Watts or Fulton or Edison to show us the possibility of steam and electricity, or the Wright brothers to teach us to navigate the air.

This may be fanciful, but it is illustrative that our starting point has materially to do with our destination.

Have you ever noticed what the hours of quietude have done for the race? The injunction of the Apostle Paul "to study to be quiet" is especially applicable in this day of rush and bustle. We do not have to study to find something to do. On Monday we plan for the week, we will do this to-day, that on Tuesday, thus on Wednesday, and so on for the week, but when Monday night comes we find that there is excess of work that we haven't performed. The same on Tuesday, and when Saturday night comes there is an accumulation of unfinished work. There is so much to attract our attention that we can not readily reach the quiet hours for meditation, retrospection and introspection that are so necessary to our perfect intellectual and spiritual development.

But for Bedford Jail we would not have had Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, that masterpiece of allegorical literature. Had not God dropped the curtain of blindness over Milton's eyes we would not have had Paradise Lost, that masterpiece of mythological literature blended with a deeper insight into the theology of Latter Day Saintism, setting forth the doctrine of the fall of angels, the loss of paradise and its regaining, than any other writer before or since its time. It was in the still quiet voice and not in the fire or cyclone that the exiled Elijah received his message from God. Was it not the quiet of the forty years' training as a shepherd in the land of Midian with its days and years of preparation that equipped Moses and made him the greatest prophet, leader, and lawgiver of the ages? Was it not the wilderness life that fitted John the Baptist to become the forerunner and precursor of the Master? Was it not the three years missionary work of Paul in the Arabian desert where he received the evidence of the gospel "not of man nor of men but by the revelation of Jesus Christ," and fitted him to be the greatest missionary the world has ever known? It is not in the hurly-burly of busy life that man receives inspiration from God, but when he places himself in a receptive condition by prayer and meditation in the quiet hours. It was in the forests of western New York, on the banks of the flowing Susquehanna, in the privacy of his room, that the angel message was delivered to the Prophet Joseph Smith.

So the burden rests upon the parents to see that their children are given opportunity for the study of all good books, healthful literature, poetry, history, and all reading matter that has a moral uplift, that will draw their minds away from the sordid things of this world. This can only be done by the parents and the teachers in the Sunday school, and instructors along educational lines.

There are many influences in this world that are downward in their tendency, and from these our children should be protected. Indeed, the dividing line is as our brother spoke in testimony meeting this morning. "All that relates or leads to evil is of Satan, while all that relates or leads to good is of God," and it is the duty of parents to see that the line of demarcation is plainly drawn.

Our mantle will fall upon some one, and we desire that they can take it up at the point where we lay it down and prosecute the work without having to learn by the experiences through which we have passed.

Shall I tell you a little story illustrative of the care of our children? A gentleman acquaintance of mine visited a man whose business was the raising of fine horses. He took him through his stables, which were fitted up with all modern conveniences, being more sanitary than many of the modern homes. Pure water flowed through the troughs. The floors were flushed each day. They had clean, fresh bedding, and the stables were not only clean, but were antiseptically clean. No accumulation of filth, where flies could gather disease germs and microbes on their feet and bring them to our homes. "This horse," said he, "is worth so many hundred dollars, and this one so much. They are fed just so many pounds of hay, chops, corn and oats each day. It is weighed almost as carefully as a druggist weighs his prescriptions, and with the greatest regularity."

While he was talking a little boy came up and said, "Papa, give me thirty-five cents to buy a book." The money was handed over.

"That is a fine looking boy," said my friend, "is he your son?"

"Yes," replied the gentleman, "we think he is all right."

"What grade is he in in school?" my friend asked.

"Why, I don't know; I leave that to his teacher.

I think he is in the seventh or eighth grade," replied the man.

Do you catch the point? The care, training, and education of an immortal being, whose destiny only ends when eternity ends, is left to the care of another, but a horse, whose value is measured in dollars and cents, has his undivided oversight. Is that true of you?

It causes me to rejoice to see Latter Day Saint parents fortifying their children for future life by teaching them to observe the revelation given to read all good books, to study the history, languages, and customs of other nations. When I teach my child to read Shakespeare, Bryant the poet of nature, Longfellow with his faith in God, Whittier with the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, Emerson with his firmness in right, Holmes with his humor, I think I am giving my child something that will lift him up and make him think higher things.

Let me tell you the story of the mythological Pygmalion. Pygmalion was the king of Cyprus. His heart ached because there was not a virtuous woman in all his domain, and the men of his kingdom were as corrupt as some of the last legislature of Ohio. He secured a large piece of ivory, and from it he chiseled a perfect female human form, and entranced with the beauty and purity of his work he prayed his God to endow it with life. Permission was granted him. He smote the sculpture upon the head and intelligence entered therein. Again he smote her upon the eyes and sight was given them. He smote her upon the lips and they turned ruby with life, blood, and articulate sounds issued therefrom. He smote her upon the breast and the heaving bosom and throbbing heart showed the pulsating life within. He smote her upon the limbs and Galatea, for thus had he named her, stepped down from the pedestal a living, conscious, intelligent, pure being.

Mythology again! Even so, but that parent, that teacher that can not touch the intelligence of heart and move to action that child in its plastic, formative period, is a failure and is not glorifying the responsibility as parent or teacher.

So in the organization of this great latter day work, that young child who by solitude and prayer of faith had placed himself in a receptive condition and was touched by the glory of God which is intelligence, and was started right, and was kept right by the Almighty.

In these days of conservation, when we are continually talking of the conservation of our forests and our mineral resources, we are neglecting to conserve our greatest resources, the energy of our youth.

The duty that will devolve upon the church of the future, the problems that we will be compelled to meet, the conditions that we will have to face will be greater than has been in the past.

Suppose you had an investment of one thousand dollars and one hundred dollars of that money paid you ninety per cent of your entire profits, and ninety per cent of your investment paid only ten per cent of your profit, which part of your investment would you neglect and which part would you devote most attention to? Your business sense will teach you to look after the ten per cent investment and ninety per cent profit. I have it on no less authority than Rev. Joseph Clark, secretary of the Ohio Sunday School Association, that ninety per cent of the increase of our churches comes from the ten per cent of our investment in the Sunday school and young people's societies of our State.

Let us as Latter Day Saint ministers, while not neglecting the preaching of the gospel to the middle-aged and old, not forget in our preaching to address our sermons more directly to the youth. This can only be done by associating with children, living the simple child life, thinking child thoughts and thus place ourselves in closer touch with them. I know the influence of environment and surroundings. In my own experience as a child I was brought up on a farm where from Monday morning to Saturday night I had only the association of my parents and brother. No vulgar or profane language was used in my presence. On Sunday, when out with other boys, for boys must have associates, when an oath was sworn it was horrifying to me, and I would shudder when a profane oath was spoken; but when moving to where I now reside, it being a place of public works, profanity was common, and by constant association, while I never learned to swear, yet volley after volley of oaths could be sworn in my presence, and I became so accustomed to them that they made no impression on me, whatever. So that we absorb unconsciously the influences that surround us.

Had I the choosing of my own life I would choose to associate with young people. I would live longer, think purer thoughts, which would crystallize into purer actions. There has been no happier moment of my life than when I led five little girls, robed in white, down into the waters of baptism, and realized that it was the result of instruction that had been received by them from me in my Sunday school class, and when they arose to walk in newness of life it gave me much joy to realize that I had contributed by my teaching and example towards this proper start in religious life.

In the great day of accounts, when my life's record is made, as I look down upon the debit side of the page and see the weaknesses, follies, and frivolities of life charged against me, I feel that this can only be offset by this event and others of a similar nature being credited to me. This is beautifully illustrated in the beautiful poem of David H. Smith, "A vision of judgment," found in Hesperis. This poem describes an elder who was brought to judgment. All his thoughts and deeds were spread out before him. He saw his many failures and weaknesses pass before him. A frown was upon the face of the Majesty, and when his heart was most despairing and he felt that his doom was sealed, a door opened and in came those to whom he had presented the gospel message. The frown disappeared from the face of the Father, his face was a benediction, and the welcome plaudit of "Well done" was given.

So it is with our lives, the fruitage of instruction given to the youth increasing in geometric progression will cover our weaknesses and failures as with a mantle, and that we as parents and instructors of the young may impart such instructions to our young as will enable them to start right in life, and live right during life, thus fitting them for the future life, I shall ever pray.

SOCIAL PURITY.

The great problem of educating his Saints so that they may be in condition to be "gathered," "the pure in heart," and Zion established, seems to have been in the mind of the Master from the earliest record we have of his teaching to mankind, and especially do we find this true in his words of instruction in the latter days.

With the transgression of our first parents, sin entered into the world, and man's nature has since been susceptible to evil influences. Though he would do good, evil seems always with him. From the first God has denounced impurity, enjoined chastity, and commanded self-denial. As a result of the hereditary propensities of human nature parent has transmitted to child much of the good or ill that has made up his own character. Soon man's nature lost the sweet purity and innocence it knew at the morn of creation, and became more or less carnal. From a condition of close companionship with divine beings man drifted away from God and his course to the present time has been a devious one. Adversity, distress, disappointment, and grief have often brought him back near to the Master, from whom alone help could come. In times of prosperity, health, and happiness, man easily drifts away and becomes self-sufficient.

The carnal contends against the spiritual and would seek to rule our lives, would offer a free rein to passion and appetite, while the spiritual prompts one to restrain the physical, to deny self for the good of others, to exercise patience, love, gentleness, in a word to exercise self-control, that the righteous will of God may be wrought out in our lives.

That man might learn to "crucify the flesh," to

"bury the old man of sin," to "walk in newness of life" and be "freed from sin and death," the great Teacher came to earth on his divine mission, the final consummation of which comprehends the preparation in the last days of a "peculiar people," zealous of good works, and the establishing of Zion, "the pure in heart," a people who shall be ready to go out to meet the Bridegroom when he shall come.

The children of the kingdom, though heirs to most glorious blessings which the Father has prepared, have come from out the world and unanimously testify that they must keep ever on their guard that evil of some sort does not overtake them. The promised crown is to "him that overcometh."

The people of the world can see the evil wrought by sin, and of late years have made strenuous efforts to stem the tide which stealthily creeps in upon the nations of the earth.

In a subtle way the great social evils, among them intemperance, immorality, prostitution, and the ravages of venereal disease undermine the strength and nobility of the Nation's manhood, violate the sacredness of the marriage covenant, entail endless suffering, especially upon womanhood, and bring ruin and death where should be the sweet fruits of parenthood.

There is satisfaction in the high ideal held out in the gospel, in the moral tone it engenders in its consistent followers. But though obedient to gospel truths, like Paul, we still have to contend with some forces which war against our better natures. But, like Paul, also, we have a source of strength, a fountain of revelation, and the guidance of the Holy Spirit in a broader, deeper, truer sense than it is possible for man to have outside the gospel covenant. We shall overcome and be free from sin just to the extent that we diligently consider our weakness and heed the instruction to come up higher, leaving the lower levels where appetite and passion so frequently hold sway, and avoiding the paths that lead still lower to lust, intemperance, degradation, disease, and death. It is the privilege of God's children to ascend, if they will, to heights of human attainment where the atmosphere is pure and invigorating, the vision is clear and penetrating, where thought shall be heaven inspired because the whole life and being is in harmonious accord with the divine mind, where the body shall be freed from much that distresses and causes decay, because nature's laws are learned and kept, and our physical powers are reserved for the holy purposes for which they were intended.

When we shall have climbed the rugged steep that lead to those sublime heights, we shall have regained much that was lost when transgression made it necessary for mankind to leave the Edenic garden, we shall have overcome much that transgression has entailed, we shall have purified these human temples for the fullest reception of the Holy Spirit and for the exercise of divine power. Then, as in Enoch's day, a people will be prepared to meet their God, only instead of being translated we have the promise that the Master shall return and enter in upon a happy reign, further instructing and leading his people until they shall be pure indeed, and the ultimate purpose of the gospel and man's creation attained.

No amount of admiration of the beauties of the mountain peak, and enraptured contemplation of the grand view to be obtained from such a vantage point will avail the adventurer who may turn aside from the steep upward path to lounge upon the inviting green and cooling shade of the mountain ledge. The call is still, "Come up higher."

In the economy of the gospel the author has made provision for the instruction of the human family in those things which pertain to life, both the spiritual and the physical. We can not conceive of spiritual perfection in an impaired physical people. Without question the Spirit operates upon the mind of man, and it is conceded among educators that the mind is also subject to general bodily conditions. How necessary, then, that we should seek the physical as well as the spiritual salvation of our race!

The gospel has come to earth freighted with all its blessings and privileges, conditioned only upon man's willing obedience and faithful continuance in the line of duty, the Holy Spirit being promised as a comforter, a companion, a guide, so long as we live in a companionable way.

Among the great labors of to-day in the preparation of the Lord's people a humble service is to be found for "whomsoever" will seek to become informed concerning the laws of our physical beings, and the bearing that our physical life has upon our spiritual life.

This is not an exclusive work among Latter Day Saints, nor is it a new field with us. From the incipency of the latter day work our ministry have contended for purity of life as a prerequisite for the full enjoyment of the Holy Spirit, and mothers in Israel under the influence of the gospel teaching have sought to rear their families to be God-fearing men and women, often giving diligent study and careful instruction to the young, that they might be saved from the snares and pitfalls so cunningly laid in the world.

Especial reference should be made to those faithful sisters who, through the work of the Daughters of Zion, have sought to instruct fathers and mothers in the sacred duties of parenthood, and concerning the prenatal conditions which wield so powerful an influence in the formation of individual character.

The social purity problems, especially concerning the women and girls of the church, have recently been rightly referred to the Woman's Auxiliary for Social service, where they are being looked after by a special committee. May the Lord qualify our mothers and sisters for the responsibilities they carry!

The activity of various purity organizations in the world, together with an acknowledged need for more instruction for the men and boys, that they may successfully live the life to which they are called and be prepared for its responsibilities, avoiding that which is wrong and harmful, has resulted in the selection of a special committee of men from the general Religio Society to devote a portion of their labor in this field. These men are located in various parts of the country and are seeking in every consistent way to serve the purity interest of their section. A large number of local workers are being appointed in districts and States, and furnished with literature dealing with the many phases of social purity problems. It is a field in which we all must learn. The committeemen will welcome information from all good sources. They are in touch with the leading purity organizations of the country and the literature published by them. Much of this is authoritative and excellent in its way, and may be had for the asking, or at a nominal cost.

It is hoped that under the incentive of preparing the Saints to inhabit Zion, the pure in heart, with the revealed instruction to latter day Israel and the promptings of the Holy Spirit, even more appropriate and, hence, better literature produced from our own ranks will soon be available. Every member of the committee has a fund of purity literature and will gladly supply the needs of individuals upon request.

We trust that sermons by our ministry urging the necessity of purity of life,—mind, body, and soul—as taught in the Scriptures, special talks to the men and boys by those who are qualified, and the distribution of suitable literature may help to bring the Saints up to higher ground, and then by continued effort we may expect to approach the heights of perfection to which God calls his people.

The personnel of the committee follows: W. E. LaRue, 1312 Park Place, Brooklyn, New York; U. W. Greene, 29 A Walter street, Winter Hill Massachusetts; Charles Crumley, Box 442, San Bernardino, California; T. W. Williams, 811 Lydia avenue, Kansas City, Missouri; R. V. Hopkins, Lamoni, Iowa; R. W. Farrell, secretary, 8 Bartlett street, Winter Hill, Massachusetts; C. B. Woodstock, chairman, Lamoni, Iowa.

May the Master qualify us to serve him successfully in whatever humble sphere we may be called to occupy. We invite the cooperation of the ministry and the Saints everywhere, in this educational movement.

WHY RECIPROCITY WAS KILLED.

Probably the heaviest political campaign in the history of Canada is that just closed. The foes of the reciprocity bill are returned to Parliament with a majority that is a surprise even to themselves,—one of the greatest majorities that any Canadian Government has ever had.

We look for the causes of this surprising change. It was not so much that the Canadian electors had little faith in the beneficence of reciprocal trade relations; but rather fear of sequent conditions. Chief among the causes of the heavy antireciprocity vote were fear of annexation, disagreement with the Government's naval and transportation policies, and anxiety lest the principle of independent national development be abandoned.

The results in both countries are far-reaching. The more immediate results in the United States are, the elimination of reciprocity as an issue in party politics and consequent strengthening of President Taft's position, and increase in the prices of grains and other articles affected by the increased price of grain.

The day following the rejection of reciprocity there were great advances made in the prices of grains in all American markets. The greatest advance was in Duluth, where 8 $\frac{5}{8}$ cents more per bushel was paid for wheat than the day previous. Barley advanced 8 cents.

George E. Marcy, president of the Armour Grain Company, said:

"The fact of the reciprocity agreement not becoming effective is a serious loss. This year the United States has lost a large proportion of corn, oats, hay, wheat, rye and barley crops. The loss is so great that it will cause extremely high prices. This will affect the provision markets and the cost of living generally will have a boost."

THE MASTER'S WORK IN TORONTO.

Under the exuberant influence of a cloudless day and an unsullied sky, the crowds thronging Toronto's streets on that beautiful Sabbath morning of the third of September witnessed the most striking evidences of growth, energy, and expansion upon every hand. Street cars and trains were crowded with eager passengers from the various towns and provinces of eastern Canada, and from far distant Alberta; while many thousands of our American cousins made it evident by their tones and animation how sincerely they were enjoying their trip to the great Canadian exhibition and how thoroughly they appreciated the varied pleasing sights and sounds of the "Queen City of Canada."

But our own personal interest was concentrated upon that portion of the enthusiastic and well-dressed throng that turned north on reaching Soho street, and were evidently bent upon finding the pretty and commodious edifice known as the Latter Day Saints' church. To the strains of a striking and attractive organ voluntary by Miss Elsie Hill, the audience rapidly filled the sacred edifice, while the respected bishop welcomed in kindly and cordial tones our American friends and visitors, a welcome which was ably seconded by Elder A. F. McLean, the esteemed branch president.

But just here a surprise—though certainly a most agreeable one—awaited the large and increasing congregation, in the shape of an announcement that instead of the well-known and appreciated bishop, Elder Myron H. Bond, of Independence, Missouri, would be our speaker. All eyes, ears, and attention were fastened upon the speaker, who, of course, was utterly unknown, by sight at least, to the entire congregation save Bishop R. C. Evans and High Priest A. F. McLean.

Soon, however, all else was forgotten in the transcendently absorbing nature of the speaker's subject, and in the serious and earnest tones in which he portrayed before all present the vivid and vital truths so trenchantly enunciated by the Master in Saint Matthew's gospel, fifth chapter. The entire sermon, the entire scene, the entire service, was one never to be forgotten! Bishop R. C. Evans, though suffering with severe hoarseness of throat, gave one of his usually able presentations on the Sabbath evening.

The young people, in their characteristically cheerful manner, are still maintaining their part, and by their singing and other talents, are continuing to render the services bright, beautiful, and attractive to all.

I am happy to hear that our respected bishop is projecting a special effort this season to reach the Lord's ancient people of the Jews, of whom there are thousands residing in this city, one having already been baptized lately.

But, as the Rev. John Wesley once exclaimed in a burst of hope, and joy, and enthusiasm, "Best of all, God is with us!!!"

May he ever continue to bless his people both here and hereafter; so that the feeling and effectual, fervent prayer of his Son may be abundantly realized, wherein he said: "Holy Father keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, . . . that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee; that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."—John 17:11, 21. Nothing here is more entrancing or more divinely fair than the mere anticipation of this "blessed hope."

While on the one hand, we Canadians of the "Queen City" miss our bright, breezy, and hustling little Mirror, with its pithy and pertinent paragraphs from all parts of the Canadian mission field, yet we are reconciled, and more than reconciled, with this new and beneficent "reciprocity" by which the Canadian news comes embodied in our respected church organ, and the said church organ finds its way into a correspondingly larger circle of Canadian hearts and Canadian homes.

May it please the Chief Astronomer to smile upon this new and happily conceived arrangement, is the earnest aspiration of your brother,
F. R. TUBB.

NOT A MORMON, WILL SUE.

LABOR CANDIDATE IN WEST HAMILTON CLAIMS DAMAGES FROM THE HERALD.

HAMILTON, September 18.—Hiram Dickhout, the labor candidate in West Hamilton, has instructed the Masten legal firm, of Toronto, to issue a writ for damages against The Herald. He complains that it described him as a Mormon. He is a member of the church of Latter Day Saints.—London Free Press.

Elder Hiram Dickhout, mentioned in the clipping above is a prominent figure among the Canadian eldership, well known and thoroughly respected in the city of Hamilton, where he was nominated as the labor candidate in the recent general elections. He figured in the celebrated "marriage suit" of about twenty years ago, when his right as a priest in the Latter Day Saint Church to officiate in the marriage ceremony was brought in question in the courts and he was fined; but upon appeal to the Supreme Court of Ontario, the judgment was reversed and the right of Latter Day Saint ministers to conduct marriage ceremonies in Ontario was sustained. We shall look with interest for further developments in the present case.

PARAGRAPHS. HERE AND THERE.

London district conference will be held at Saint Thomas, Ontario, October 7 and 8. Chatham District will meet in conference at Chatham, Ontario, on October 14 and 15. Toronto District held conference at Garafraxa, Ontario, on September 30 and October 1, but we have not received the particulars at this writing.

The incongruity of a man in the bejeweled robes of a high priest smoking a pipe so appealed to the convention of the Sovereign Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows recently held in Indianapolis that it adopted a rule that in no lodge room of the order should smoking thereafter be permitted during degree work. It may be superfluous for us to remark that it would be equally incongruous for a member of the priesthood of the church of God to indulge in the habit while holding the right to officiate in such a holy office. The next year's Odd Fellows convention meets in Winnipeg, Manitoba.

P. H. Philippin, secretary of London District, would like branch secretaries in his district to note that his address is 92 Chesley avenue, London Ontario. Branch reports are coming in altogether too slowly.

How that undefined feeling comes to us at times!—when the dull flatness of our surroundings seems so evident and when the dead level of our existence forces itself upon our mind. The "something better" is generally impossible for us, but for the moment we are lifted out of our narrow groove by the wish.

It is an inspiration to attain that invisible "something better," and our courage is strengthened. After all, the darker side may be brightened, the dreary waste made beautiful; and so we bravely "take up the burden of life again" with the thought that perhaps in the future the "something better" will really come to us.—Renice Radcliffe.

Of General Interest

"Mob-murders will not be ended by platitudes," says the Continent (Presbyterian) of Chicago; "they will not be thwarted by appealing to a community not to disgrace itself, nor by declaiming on the lapse from civilization which they signify. The only efficient 'riot act' which can be read to the lynching spirit, either in the hearts of the men who join the mob or of the men who sit at home and approve the deed, is the grim, prophetic proclamation that it outrages God—the same ancient denunciation of sin to whose resounding tones of judgment the conscience in every man is inevitably attuned to tremble. This is what Americans must come to before the atrocities of lynch law are stamped out from American communities—the conviction not merely that it is a 'blot on civilization,' but that, infinitely more momentous, it is a sin against God. That realized, 'extenuating circumstances, disappear. The brutality of the criminal, the devilishness of his offense, the helplessness of his victim, averting peril of future crime—none of these then are excuses. The lynch act is a sin; nothing can make it right. On the very surface of the universally recognized teaching of Jesus Christ—the brotherhood of man—lies an unmistakable demonstration of the utter wickedness of every violent act done in hatred toward any human being whomsoever, even though the basest. Not only is the violence wicked, but the hate itself is a sin. No other teaching of the Master is plainer than that. No other utterance in his name should be more clarion-clear than that."

Overeating.

Half the people I know have violent attacks of indigestion, because they will persist in eating hearty meals when in an exhausted condition. They seem never able or willing to realize that there are times when the system is in no fit state to grapple with a full meal. Coming in tired and hungry, almost ravenous, not thinking that maybe a great deal of what they consider hunger is gastric irritation, they sit down to a table covered with the substantial of life, and deliberately go to work to overtax the already strained vital powers. No person should eat heartily when very tired. The wisest thing to do is to drink a cup of hot water with three tablespoonfuls of milk in it, sit down for five minutes, and then begin slowly to eat, masticating thoroughly. In a little while the vigor of the stomach will come back, and all will be well. If this course were followed, there would not be one case of dyspepsia where now there are a dozen. It seems to be the most difficult of all things properly to control the appetite. It seems to be master. It requires will power to get it under control. When once mastered, something important in self-discipline has been accomplished.—Journal of Hygiene.

"There is one important difference between fishery for literal fishes and fishing for men," says the New York Observer (Presbyterian) "The character of the fisherman in the first case counts for nothing, and in the latter counts for everything. A sinner as well as a saint may catch a pickerel, a bass, or a bluefish. The fishes in the sea know nothing of moral distinctions—they barely know the danger of hooks and scoop-nets and seines. But when men are to be caught they will not be attracted by unworthy fishers—by hypocritical church members, superficial persons, semi-worldlings temporarily galvanized, as by the shouting of an evangelist, into a semblance of spirituality, where perhaps there is more of perspiration than inspiration. The unction is needed, it is true, for cold character which is not breathed upon by divine grace is of little avail, but best of all is the living of the truth which verifies and validates the preaching of the doctrines, and that holy example which converts as many people as are reached by eloquent sermons or labored apologetical lectures. A man always admires a good man—that is, one who is not only good, but also good for something. The world never discounts character."

"Recently a distinguished Chinaman, a close observer, when he had returned home from a visit to Germany, Great Britain, France, Austria, and Italy, was asked by a missionary friend, 'What was the most evident and most prominent fruit of Christian civilization that you observed in Europe?' 'Guns,' was his quick reply. Yes, he was right," says the New York Evangelist (Presbyterian). "Guns, soldiers, sabers, great shipyards for building dreadnoughts, huge battleships filled with death dealing guns are by far the most conspicuous things in Christian Europe after two thousand years of Christianity. Along the borders of any two Christian nations the most conspicuous things are not parks, where the Germans and French or Austrians and Italians can meet and talk over the things that concern all Christians anywhere; not groves where the children of the two nations can play together. These are the things you would expect after two thousand years of the teachings of the Master. But no, the things everywhere in evidence are great fortresses, the very mountains pierced with cannon holes, cannons mounted everywhere, military roads, mines of powder, huge piles of cannon balls, long lines of barracks. These are the things in which Christian peoples are putting their greatest energy. Just think of it! The one thing this Chinese gentleman found who came to study our Christian institutions, the one thing that impressed him most, was 'guns.'"

[Truer words than the following in regard to the "joy of giving" were never penned or uttered, and while all may not give of their abundance as this man has done, let us remember that even "the cup of cold water" shall not fail of its reward. And ah, there are so many thirsty lips, so many aching hearts longing for the cooling cup, the cheering, strengthening word!—EDITOR.]

The Joy of Giving.

"The joy of giving? There is no joy in the world like it. I am now nearly ninety years of age, and I can tell you out of the wealth of experience that those years have given me that there is no earthly pleasure like that which comes from giving to others and seeing your gifts make them happy."

Dr. D. K. Pearsons, the Hinsdale millionaire, whose benefactions to struggling American colleges has made his name known among the religious educators of the country, made this assertion with an air of conviction that showed he meant every word of it.

"I ought to know what I am talking about," he continued, "because I have been doing nothing else but give during the last twenty-one years. In all that time I have had no other business. I haven't stopped in my favorite diversion even to swap jack-knives. When you consider that during the thirty years that had preceded that I had worked like a slave at the task of accumulating my fortune, you can imagine what a hold the joys of philanthropy have obtained on me.

"In those twenty-one years I have endowed forty-seven colleges in twenty-four states. I am not saying this in a spirit of boastfulness. I merely cite the fact to show how firmly I have laid the foundations of my favorite pleasure. Let other rich men go in for automobiles and steam yachts, I'll stick to my favorite fun. I intend to stick to it as long as the money lasts, and when I die I don't expect to have a single penny left. I don't intend to die for ten years yet, however. The joys of watching my money do good make life to me well worth living.

MOST EXQUISITE DELIGHT.

"Have you ever stopped a ragged little boy on the street around Christmas time and slipped a quarter or a half-dollar into his hand? Have you ever watched the look of surprised delight sweep over his face? Have you ever felt the cockles of your heart warm after a deed like this? Well, that is the initial joy of giving. It is the most delicious sensation that the human soul is capable of feeling. I pronounce it without hesitation the most exquisite of mundane delights. It is a physical as well as a spiritual joy. It makes you feel good 'all over.' And its pleasure never wanes. Look back at that act twenty years later and you still feel the delightful flush of self-approbation sweeping over you.

"Now I found that out long, long ago. I made up my mind then that the best way in the world to be happy yourself was to make other folks happy. And then I proceeded to systematize my discovery. I took up giving as a steady occupation, and I arranged my giving so as to get all the pleasure possible out of it. I became an epicure in the art of giving. I learned to ring the changes on all its joys so that each one recurring always seemed fresh.

"A good many have wondered why it was that I have always insisted that my gifts to colleges should remain as an endowment. Well, the chief reason is that I want to see my money continuing to do good. When I give money to an institution of any sort I give it always under certain conditions and then I sit back and see that those conditions are lived up to the letter. In that way I have laid the financial foundation of a great many schools. That foundation will last until the end of time. It will always be a fine thing for the school. But at the same time it affords to me the pleasure of watching my money 'work' long after the gift has been made.

"I can see that school grow and become prosperous, and I enjoy the happiness of knowing that it is my money that is helping to bring all that prosperity about. And there is more to it even than that. As I sit here to-day I know that after I am gone my gifts will still be at work bringing happiness to and brightening the lives of thousands who will live after me. Perhaps there is something selfish in this. Perhaps—I don't pose as a saint—but it seems to me it's not a very discreditable kind of selfishness.

COLLEGES HIS CHILDREN.

"I have told you that my gifts have gone to forty-seven colleges. Well, those colleges are my children. My wife is gone. I have no boys and girls of my own. And so the affection that I might have lavished on my own flesh and blood is turned to these institutions. I sit here in Hinsdale and watch them grow. I hear of their struggles, their conquests, their defeats. I take a deep, a profound interest in them. They are mine. I helped to make them. The good that they may do in the world is to some extent creditable to me.

"And as these schools expand and grow and send their influence out through the communities that surround them I know that people are being made happier, that they are being made better, that the nation is growing stronger through something that I have done. That is the joy of my giving. It is a satisfying joy. It is a thing that makes my life worth holding on to.

"Thirty years ago I made one of my best gifts. I built four houses for Northwestern University at Evanston. The gift was so predicated that the rent of those houses should be used in the education of poor girls for ever and ever. That is an endowment. I like that kind of a gift. It is something that can not take wings and fly away. And always I shall know that the proceeds of that endowment are being used to brighten the lives of poor girls and to make them better wives and mothers for our country.

AIDS SOUTHERN COLLEGES.

"I have given money to twelve colleges in the South. I don't think any of my other gifts have given me quite the same satisfaction that these have. It's fine to sit here and feel that the South knows that it is being made a better South by a blamed old abolitionist like me. It sweetens 'em, I tell you. They feel better. It perfectly melts them down.

"And there's another case of the same kind—Guilford College in North Carolina. That's the school that Joe Cannon and Doctor Nixon, as well as a number of Chicago men, were educated in. It is a Quaker institution. In the early days these Quakers were driven from the good lands of the coast to the highlands where the school is. They were against slavery, and the slaveholders hated them. Now that school has just put up a fine dormitory where one hundred mountain girls are living and getting their education. It is fine to think that the institution these Quakers founded is now spreading its good influence among the descendants of the very people who persecuted them, and it is fine to have been able to play a part in bringing that sort of a thing about.

"Then there is Montpelier Seminary. I was born in Vermont and I went to that school seventy-four years ago. It was a struggling institution then. A while ago it was close to bankruptcy. Its principal came to me and said that it must have money. Well, I gave him $50,000 on condition that he raise $100,000 more. People all over the State told him that he could never raise the money. But he did. He was here to-day and told me that the last cent had been subscribed. Now that school is set on a firm foundation again. It's a very satisfying thing to me to know that I have been able to help do so much for the school in which I got my first educational training.

HELPS MOUNTAIN BOYS.

"I think that of all the schools that I have ever given to, the Berea College in Kentucky is my pet. I have watched it grow and flourish with the utmost interest. It is doing great good among those Kentucky mountain boys. And this nation owes those Kentucky mountaineers a great deal. They fought for the Union in the civil war. They had the freeman's inherent contempt for the slaveholder. It was they who fought the battle of King's Mountain and who helped Jackson whip the British at New Orleans. They have sent great men to our national legislature. It is a source of tremendous satisfaction to me to think that I have been able to do something to repay the debt that this country owes those Kentuckians.

"Here's another one I'm fond of—Whitman College in Washington. This school was named after Marcus Whitman, the old pioneer. A few years ago it was $12,500 in debt and its supporters thought it was going under. Its president, a young man, came to me as a last resort and explained the situation. After he had finished I sat down and wrote him a check for $12,500. I don't know that I ever felt better in my life than when I was writing that check. It was putting the money where it was needed. Well, that $12,500 set Whitman College on its feet again. To-day it is prospering wonderfully. The States of Washington, Oregon and Idaho have rallied around it and they intend to give it an endowment of $1,500,000. It is to be the Harvard of the Pacific coast.

WILL CALL FOR ACCOUNTING.

"On April 14 next I will have concluded my first twenty-one years of giving. On that date—it is my ninetieth birthday—I have arranged for a general accounting with all my schools. They have got to come in and show what they have done with their talents. I want to get my accounts squared away. I want to begin my ninety-first year knowing that I don't owe anybody anything. The schools all understand this and are straining every nerve to meet the contingencies under which my gifts were made. I think that everything will be arranged satisfactorily.

"After that, I start off on a new career of giving. I serve notice now that I intend to last ten years longer. I shall arrange my affairs so that when the end finally comes there will not be a cent left of my fortune. And in the meantime I shall be having the finest time in the world."—Chicago Record-Herald, January 25, 1911.

GOREVILLE, ILLINOIS, September 3, 1911.

Dear Saints: I wish to call your attention to section 57, Doctrine and Covenants, and especially to a portion of it where the Lord calls special attention to the location of Zion. Bro. James T. Davis, of Rome, Missouri, has been trying to call the attention of the Saints to a portion of this land. I journeyed to Rome the earlier part of August. Rome is a village on the south bank of Big Beaver Creek in the southwestern part of Douglas County. Here I was met and entertained by Brethren Mackey, Davis, and Mendel. I enjoyed their brotherly hospitality.

The soil is excellent here, though in the mountains. Corn makes thirty-five to one hundred bushels per acre, and alfalfa five crops a year, and all sorts of vegetables grow in abundance, and with minimum cultivation. This is truly the land of the "big red apple," and the big rosy cheeked peach. No San Jose scale here. You can raise cattle, hogs, sheep, goats, and poultry at very small expense. Horses and mules can also be grown at a small expense, because of the fine pasture and cheap hay. This is also a natural honey growing country. Bees do splendidly, and the honey is of fine quality. You can also grow ginseng profitably. Health is good in Douglas County. The fine sparkling streams of cool water and ozone laden air lends health and vigor to all who live temperate and upright lives. The Gentiles, or those of the world, are rapidly settling the land which is "appointed and consecrated for the gathering of the Saints,"—while we hesitate. It seems that it was time that we were waking up to realize more fully the vital meaning of what our heavenly Father has spoken.

With love for the work and hope in this beautiful gospel,
JOHN F. REED.

DAVIDSON, OKLAHOMA, September 18, 1911.

Editors Herald: I have been in this work for over four years, and often when reading the dear letters from the Saints I have a desire to bear a word of testimony as to this noble work. I feel that while I am waiting others wait for me. I am truly glad I have the privilege of hearing the true gospel, and I feel more than glad to try and obey it. I often feel that I can not do as much as others, but nevertheless I do not hesitate in trying. I live in Davidson District, but do not have the privilege of going to church very much, but when I do I gladly accept the honor of being with the Saints. We have Sunday school every Sunday at 10 o'clock, and preaching services from 11 until 12 and at 4.30 we engage ourselves in prayer meeting.

All the Saints seem to take part in the meetings but me, and it does seem that I can not muster up courage enough to even testify, yet words of prophecy have been uttered that I should take part in the ministry field. I ask an interest in the Saints' prayers that I might be able to speak the word of which the people are in so much need, and be lifted higher in the one true faith.

W. TAYLOR STAHER.

FERRIS, ILLINOIS, September 23, 1911.

Editors Herald: Thinking that a few lines from our pen may be of interest to your readers as we are on historic grounds of the Saints. Last Monday, September 18, in company with George P. Lambert we drove over to Nauvoo to attend a part of the Mormon conference that was then in session, and it was only a part we did attend, as you will see by this writing.

We arrived at Nauvoo a little too late to be in attendance at the opening session. Their conference was held in Nauvoo, in the city hall. The conference was presided over by Mr. Ellsworth, president of the Northern States Mission. We met Mr. Ellsworth after the closing of the forenoon session. He shook hands and asked our names and where we lived. I told him Lamoni, Iowa, and this brought a different look upon his face. He soon left us.

Their meeting was announced publicly from the stand to begin at 2 p. m. Brother Lambert and I stayed to be in attendance. We got to the door about ten minutes before time to open. Here we met one of their elders, which we discovered afterwards had been placed to guard the doors. We went up to enter in. This guard stepped forward and inquired if we were missionaries. We said, "Yes."

He said, "Are you Latter Day Saint missionaries?"

We said, "Yes."

He said, "Utah Latter Day Saints?"

We said, "No, Reorganized."

He said, "Well you can not go in."

I was made to think the wires between some of the presiding officers had been to work while we were here.

I said, "I am going to see if you discriminate between the members of the Reorganized Church and their representatives. Sr. W. E. Herrick is here attending, and if you allow her to go in we will too."

He said, "She is a prospective member."

In a moment or so, Sister Herrick appeared on the scene, in company with her daughter, who is a member of the Mormon Church, and Elder Ramfee who was with them. I met this elder with three others at Quincy, Illinois, the week before, and they attended our meetings. He said, "I do not understand this." He expressed himself as being sorry; of course his sympathy would not adjust the difficulty. Another one of their men appeared upon the scene and made this statement, "You men have your secret meetings."

I said, "We have priesthood meetings."

He said, "This is a missionary meeting."

I said, "I know you have some here that are women and they are not missionaries, and if they go in why can we not go in?"

"Oh," said he, "of course there are members."

I invited them to attend our conference, assuring them they would not be barred from a public meeting. We were told to come that night and hear an apostle preach. I informed him we had live apostles in our church. We bade them good-bye and started away.

Going only a little distance from the hall I met some more of their crowd and they said, "Why don't you stay?"

We replied, "We are barred." He thought we were only joking, but we said, "No," emphatically. Here came Apostle Penrose, that is, would be apostle, rushing down the street. We called, tried to stop him, but he bawled out, "I haven't time to stop." A little different from Him of old who said, "Come, let us reason together."

And now, Mr. Editor, I do not wonder when Brigham holds out what he did about obeying council. They had their orders and they obeyed them. Sister Herrick was here with her daughter attending their conference. This is how she came to be in attendance. She gave them to understand plainly they need not count her a prospective member. So much for those who claim they are living in the light of the Lord. May the dear Lord bless them by his Holy Spirit until they are able to see wherein they stand. How long it will be the Lord only knows. I believe some of the younger element they send out are honest in their opinions, but we can not say this much of all of them, especially among those who are in advance of their business so far as authority is concerned.

POMONA, CALIFORNIA, September 17, 1911.

Dear Herald: God has been good to me and mine, and I often wonder how great is his goodness to his children.

I know that this church is the only church recognized of God on earth, and I feel so much better since I left off the use of tea, coffee, meat, and tobacco, and would advise all to do likewise if they would enjoy perfect health; for I know God is true to his promise, if we do our part.

There are no Saints here except myself and my family. Any elder passing through who would stop here would be welcome. I think there could be a good work done here, and I am here to help.

Yours truly,

FRANK LACEY.

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA, September 8, 1911.

Editors Herald: Mr. Carnegie says that the peace or arbitration agreement between the United States, England, and France "is the death knell of war." It seems to me that it is like covering up an old sore, that when they think it is well (no more war), it will break out worse than ever. They were to say, "Peace, peace, when there is no peace."—Jeremiah 8: 11. Jesus said there would be "wars and rumors of wars," in the last days. (Mark 13: 7.) As I view it, the world is making progress in wickedness much faster than the church is in righteousness. There seems to be almost a mad rush for pleasure and wealth. This reminds me of what I heard Bro. D. S. Mills relate once, many years ago.

I don't remember whether it was a dream or a vision, but as near as I can remember, this is what he said, "I and Brother Prothero were standing on about the center of the deck of a large ship. There were many people on board, all were Saints, the water was calm and smooth as could be, no land in sight, the ship was standing still. I noticed some of the Saints were going over to the side of the ship. I wondered what they were doing, I said, 'Let us go and see.' We went to the rail and they had made great rafts out on the water, and were playing all kinds of games of amusement, like the worldly people do. Suddenly the ship gave a great lurch ahead, and moved off at full speed, nearly throwing us down, breaking loose the raft, and not one from the raft regaining the ship's deck."

Is not this a warning to us? Does not this agree with what the Master said? "Five were wise and five were foolish."—Matthew 25: 2. Some of the Saints will be caught in this rush for pleasure, I fear, for how about theaters; the ball games, and many like amusements? "Come out of her, my people."—Revelation 18: 4. To hear of the many crimes that are taking place every day makes my soul cry out, "How long, O Lord, must this sin continue? how long till thy Son cometh?" Oh, that the day would soon come, when there shall not be a "Canaanite" in the land. (Zechariah 14: 21.) Then no one need say, "Do you know the Lord?" for all would know him. (Hebrews 8: 11.) We are told to "come up higher." How can we do this? The only way I can see is in personal purity or righteousness, "stand in holy places," keep ourselves "unspotted from the world," "in the world but not of the world," "pray without ceasing," "in all things give thanks," if we will do this, then the next move will be the Lord's. He will then endow his ministry with power to "heal the sick, cast out devils, cleanse the lepers, restore sight to the blind, and raise the dead, gather in the honest in heart, bind up the law and seal up the testimony." For he said "greater works" than he did should they do. This being the gathering dispensation, must necessarily be one of power, for many miracles will be done in the wonderful name of Jesus; then we may look for the fulfillment of Acts 1: 9-11. "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing into heaven. This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come, in like manner." Oh, glorious day, may it soon come, when our sorrow shall be over.

My testimony is, after having made a critical and prayerful examination of all the denominations that I could, that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was the only one that stood the test, that measured up to the original in every respect. Then I put the finishing test, as given in John 7: 17, and I was shown that this was his church, by unmistakable evidences; and now, after thirty-six years of experience in this work which was restored by angels (Revelation 14: 6, 7), I wish to say that whosoever will apply the test faithfully and truly, with a full purpose of heart to do what the Lord requires of them, the Lord will give them evidence that they, as well as I, can say with Job, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that in the latter days he shall stand upon the earth," and "in my flesh shall I see God" (Job 19: 25, 26).

There is at least one great war yet to take place, for the Lord says through his prophets Zechariah and Ezekiel, "For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle."—Zechariah 14. And as to how this battle shall end see Ezekiel 39.

May the Lord bless his people, and may Messiah soon come is my prayer.

News From Missions

California.

We are glad to be able to say that the work in the Northern California District is moving along nicely, although there is plenty of room for improvement. The missionaries are all busy trying to spread blessed news and advance the cause of the restored gospel. Bro. C. W. Deuel has labored in Medera and Stanislaus counties with good results, making some new openings and baptizing eleven. He also took a trip to Nevada in July, preaching in Carson City and visiting isolated members.

Brother Cannon has been in the Modoc country all summer and reports some interest there. Brother Terry is looking after the interest of the work in Oakland. Brother Parkin, our bishop, is here and there in the interest of the financial work of the district, and Bro. Charles Crumley, whose objective point is Chico, is for a time laboring and assisting in reunion in Oregon. Bro. Ben. Bean and the writer are busily engaged in a series of meetings in the hall at Guernsey, and with the assistance of Sister Farr at the piano, are arousing a fine interest.

This is the place where the writer was shut out of a union church last winter by the Methodists, who, following their usual procedure in such cases, had taken position, and now, calling it a Methodist church, excludes all others, especially Latter Day Saints. But getting the use of the hall we had fine crowds, and are having them again. The Methodists have hurt their own cause by their action, creating a sentiment in our favor, and four of their members have left the church in disgust. Their minister, Reverend Kaler, told the writer that the main reason they would not allow us in their churches was because we claim the churches have all apostatized and lost the truth. Replying, we said we had good company, for John Wesley said the whole Christian world had turned heathen again; however, we had not yet called all others heathen. We also learned that the Methodist Episcopal conference had decided us to be unorthodox. Now isn't that just too bad! But then we understand that not only the Roman Catholic, but the Campbellite, Holiness, and several other churches have decided the Methodists are unorthodox; so we do not feel so bad about it after all.

Our reunion at Irvington this fall is said to have been the largest and best yet held. A resolution was passed empowering the reunion committee to purchase and improve permanent reunion grounds, the general sentiment being in favor of a seaside location, where bathing facilities may be had. Considering so large a reunion in so small a space, the inconveniences and discomforts were few. Our energetic and kindly Brother and Sister Terry seemed to be everywhere looking after the comfort of the Saints, they almost seemed like a father and mother to the camp of Israel. Brother and Sister Kaler were with us, and many of the Saints received their blessings at his hands. Brother Clapp was also with us, but left for the home at Independence before the close of the reunion, and the big chair by the HERALD tent looked empty. He has the love and respect of all the Saints. Minister in charge Brother Sheehy, and Brother Carmichael of the Herald Office were with us, materially assisting in making the reunion a success.

The Sunday school convention presided over by Sister Sade, and the Religio convention under Bro. W. H. Dawson, were both interesting and instructive.

The Woman's Auxiliary, nee Daughters of Zion, was organized into a district association, with Sr. John Lawn, of San Francisco, as president.

In bonds,

FRED B. FARR.

From the Northwest.

Having on hands a sufficient material for a volume and quite aware that the average person abhors a long article or a long sermon as it is said "Nature abhors a vacuum," I have concluded to write, thinking that by trimming, condensing, and leaving out, I can keep within reasonable space, and at least interest some readers. It seems that people like to know where others are and what they are doing.

Having consented to attend some meetings in the Northwest, arranged for in the mission field assigned to Bro. J. W. Wight, on the morning of June 23 I arrived at Frazee, Minnesota, to attend the conference and reunion to be held there. I soon found the home of Bro. Penn W. Martin, to receive a welcome and good care from him and his very pleasant household. Brother Martin's house proved to be the storm center for the reunion attendants, as meals were served at his house, where ample provisions were made for all.

The large tent for meetings was pitched but a short distance away.

The following day the conference was arranged by selecting Bro. F. M. Smith and the president of the district to preside, Brother Smith having arrived just at the time of the organization. There was a good representation present, with some from outside districts. Officials present: T. J. Martin, J. W. Smith, L. Houghton, W. C. Griffin, L. Whiting, P. W. Martin, Delbert Whiting, G. G. Buell, W. E. Shakespeare, and Leon Gould.

Unity prevailed in the meeting. The Sunday school and Religio received consideration in their place by competent leaders, the organizations being sustained and encouraged.

A program was rendered, which was enjoyed by a large audience. A commendable spirit of devotion and earnestness was manifested in the prayer service, and some excellent testimonies were borne. The preaching was good also, and was well attended by outsiders.

The tent blew down once in a gust of wind and rain, but no one was injured.

A reunion was provided for 1912. Five were baptized in the lake near by; so the cause seems to be gathering force and influence in northern Minnesota.

A good deal of praise could be spoken of the workers present at these meetings, but there is not space. So we leave Frazee with pleasant remembrances.

Bro. Thomas Jefferson Martin was present, and in evidence with his old-time energy, from start to finish.

July 3, in company with Sisters Fry and McLeod, I went to Fargo, North Dakota, Brother Smith remaining at Frazee, having caught the fishing fever and desiring to land a few beauties from the clear waters of the lake before leaving.

At Fargo said sisters went on train to their homes and I received a welcome at the home of Bro. and Sr. J. E. Wildermuth. In the afternoon I called at the home of Sister Schoolcraft. She and her husband being absent, her sister Marie was in charge. While we were talking, a Mrs. Johnson came in and proposed to pay expenses to the show, Barnum and Bailey, just arrived. Well, we saw the street parade and show, and a good one it was.

The next day was the glorious Fourth of July, when every true American stands erect and reverently reflects upon the history of his country, and, if religiously inclined, breathes a prayer of thankfulness to the Great Ruler of nations for a land of liberty and freedom in which to live and work out his destiny.

I was pleasantly entertained at Brother and Sister Wildermuth's, but was alone much of the days. In the afternoon the Saints, with some outsiders, met in the park where we visited, sung hymns, and after luncheon Brother Wildermuth led in prayer, and I mixed gospel, constitution, liberty, and the rights of men in a short speech. So we celebrated. Hurrah for the Fourth, always full of meaning.

On the fifth, I went to LaMore and Berlin and met the folks of Sisters McLeod and Fry. Held meeting in the evening in the home of Brother and Sister Remmick. Was cared for at Brother and Sister Fry's and by Brother and Sister Hieszler. Remained here over Sunday and held five or six meetings and made the acquaintance of the Saints and friends. A Sunday school is kept up here, Sisters Fry and Young having chief responsibilities.

An automobile ride over to Grand Rapids gave us a view of a nice country with growing crops. Some nice folks about Berlin and LaMore. The Saints need more help there in the gospel message.

In the afternoon of July 11 I arrived at Milroy, North Dakota, to find a number of Saints present attending the conference and reunion. Brother Smith and Brother and Sister Wildermuth had preceded me here from Fargo. A session of conference had been held and the business done, so it was reunion.

Milroy is a small railroad town, located in a vast, level prairie. The first thought was, where are the people coming from to make a successful meeting at such a skinny, out of the way place as this? But it is not always safe to judge by appearances. At evening the people began to come in in wagons, buggies, automobiles, etc., and the big tent was filled with interested listeners. Bro. William Sparling preached an excellent discourse, with good effect.

Fortunate again, I was assigned to Brother Yager's, where I received good care, and this proved to be a center of interest all through the meetings, as it was where most of the meals were served.

Brn. Alonzo Whiting, James Page, J. E. Wildermuth, Charles Butterworth, patriarch from Iowa, Brother Wagoner, and William Sparling were present as helpers in making the meetings a success, and a success they were. Some of the sermons were away up and telling. The Sunday school and Religio received attention, and much interest was manifested in them. A reunion was provided for 1912.

The prayer meetings were engaged in with earnestness and zeal, and showed that the Saints are accustomed to these meetings and know their value. So there are zealous and enterprising Saints working for the cause in North Dakota, and going ahead. No failures here. Kind remembrances. We like to think of thee.

Monday, July 12, meetings having closed at Milroy, a number of Saints boarded the train for Towner, where they dispersed to their several homes. Brother Smith and I went on to Minot, in company with Brother and Sister Spaulding and Sister Sparling. Brethren Sparling and Whiting remaining at Milroy to do some baptizing. They came on the evening train to Minot. Brethren Wildermuth and Page engaged in tent work. At Minot we met Brother Graham and sister. They were from Lamoni. While here we had a pleasant stay at the home of Brother and Sister Sparling and Brother and Sister Coey, all of whom are remembered with pleasure.

July 20 Brother Smith and I left Minot on the 2.30 o'clock morning train for Saskatchewan, Canada, crossing the dead line without any tariff exaction. We arrived at Sedley in the afternoon and were met at the station by Brn. T. J. Jordan and J. W. Peterson, and were conducted to Brother Jordan's, where we met the amiable Sister Jordan, not well, and Sister Peterson, well known, who was busy in aiding Sister Jordan in work of the home, and preparations incident to caring for the crowds coming to a reunion.

Met Bro. C. C. Joehnk here also. Sedley is a railroad town located on a broad prairie, with farms dotting all around. A good many settlers having come in from the States, in the parlance here, from America.

The elder Jordan arrived on Saturday; also Brother Nelson, from Francis. We had arrived here a week in advance, so had some time for recreation. The following Sunday, the 23d, the services were in charge of Brethren Jordan and Peterson. Brother Smith and I did the preaching. The meetings were held in the large and convenient town hall, which had been secured for conference and reunion services. Brn. E. E. Long and Moorman arrived on Wednesday, also Bro. William Lewis and his daughter Ruth.

Brother and Sister Jordan and Brother and Sister Peterson were the active workers in arranging for the reunion visitors and making it a success, Brother Jordan behind the whole thing. Ample provisions were made in the basement of the town hall to meet the wants of the natural man, Bro. J. L. Mortimer in charge, with Sisters Peterson and others looking after the culinary department. There was plenty and to spare.

Here, as at other places, a surprising number of Saints and friends came in to attend the meetings, and all manifest an interest in making it a success.

The 27th the Sunday school and Religio work began, and continued on the 28th. On Friday evening a program was rendered, a large audience being present. When it comes to programs the Canadians are on hand and surprisingly equipped. Everything went well.

Officials E. E. Long, T. J. Jordan, J. W. Peterson, J. L. Mortimer, E. E. Williams, Moorman, Nelson, Dobson, L. E. Buckman, Williams, Anderson, Sprague, and C. V. Smith were noted as helpers and defenders in the cause. Some of the most efficient and best workers in the auxiliaries that I have met were present and industriously engaged. Their names and that of others slipped through our fingers. Sorry.

The meetings were well attended by the Saints and outsiders and the town's people manifested a friendly feeling. The prayer services were enjoyed and shown to be the life of the Saints in Canada, as elsewhere. Several were baptized and some work of organizing quorums accomplished. A fine feeling of social intercourse and saintly confidence and good feeling was manifest all through the meetings. We were nicely cared for at the home of Brother Jordan.

The conference and reunion was a great success, and it was a pleasure to meet with the Saints. Saskatchewan is going on and gathering force. We smile when we think of Sedley.

Afternoon August 1, in company with Bro. J. L. Mortimer, Brother and Sister Peterson and Sister Van Eaton, I came to Regina, the capital of the province. A large, flourishing town, and good country surrounding it. We received good care at the home of Brother and Sister Woods, formerly of Wheelers Grove, Iowa. Brother Smith came up late in the evening. The following day we attended the State Fair. Fine exhibit, and a great many attending. A wonderful mingling of races up in this great big country, from seemingly every State in the American Union, the Provinces of Eastern Canada, and Europe and Asia, and room for all;—contented and thriving. Brother Woods keeps an open house and forty-one slept there the last night that I stayed with them, and they were pleased to have them. I am glad they are Iowans.

On the 3d, Brn. F. M. Smith, William Lewis, Ruth, Fred Woods, and I took the train for Saskatoon, where we arrived about four o'clock p. m. We stopped over night with Brother and Sister Dorr.

Saskatoon is finely located, high and dry, on the banks of the large, fast flowing Saskatchewan River. Has a population of 17,000, and a fine country surrounding it. Brother and Sister Dorr were very kind to us.

Friday morning, the 4th, we were on the way early to Edgerton, Alberta. Passed over a fine looking country, dotted with farms and promising crops. Arrived at destination about 4 p. m. Were met by brethren at the depot and went to the home of Brother and Sister Rowe, to receive a welcome. This proved to be the central place for the gathering of Saints for two or three days' meeting.

A Sunday school and Religio program was arranged for the evening at the schoolhouse. A good audience was present and the pieces were rendered, instrumental and vocal music. A little surprising to find things of this kind so successfully presented and so far out on the border lands, but the folks just had the vim and culture to do it. No use to try, you can't head off Canadians.

Meetings began next morning, Brother Lewis preaching a fine discourse at 11 o'clock. Brother Smith followed in the afternoon and the writer at night.

Sunday, the 6th, the trustees closed the house against us, seemingly out of pure —. Some smart alecks in Canada as well as in America. We went to the grove, where a better place was provided, and the day was spent in a very profitable way, with a large audience present. Meals were served out-of-doors on long tables, and an abundance provided. Saints had come in for miles around to attend these meetings; out here taking homesteads in one of the most attractive countries we have seen.

There is a fine class of Saints locating in these parts, and they are letting their light shine, and building up the cause while they build homes. An excellent social feeling prevailed, and an interest was taken both in the prayer and preaching services. May the smiles of Providence be upon these workers in both spiritual and temporal things.

On the 7th, Brother Smith and I went on to Edmonton, the capital of Alberta, arriving there about 4 o'clock next morning, the train six hours behind. We had but a short time to remain here to see the city and breakfast. It is rather an ideal location, on a large, swift running river, and upon elevated ground.

We were soon on the train and going through a nice country, with fine, growing crops, and late in the afternoon we arrived at Calgary. We were met at the depot by Brn. George T. McLeod and J. L. Mortimer. Brother McLeod gave us an auto ride about the city, and we partook of a meal provided by the deft hands of Sister McLeod, after which Brother Smith went on his way home, flying towards Independence, Missouri, and I remained over a day at Calgary with the Saints. The Saints at every point were pleased that Brother Smith visited them, and took much interest in hearing him, and Brother Smith was not disappointing when on the rostrum, but proved to be a skillful workman. His discourses were admirable and telling, proving that he is not only the son of a promising family, but possesses talent and merit within himself that will commend him anywhere. He was listened to with both interest and pride. In the language of a leader among the Salvation Army people, "There are no flies" on our Fred.

Bro. William Lewis proves to be an able defender, besides being busy with his patriarchal work, being well received. This is true also of Bro. Charles Butterworth, who attended the Milroy, North Dakota, meeting.

It is said, "The sun is shining somewhere"; well, when things appear cloudy around, just think of Ruth. There will be sunshine about Ruth.

On Thursday evening, the 10th, at 9 o'clock I arrived in Spokane, Washington, at the home of Sister Duncan, just in time to join the young folks' evening social in honor of Stella's birthday. She is just—mustn't tell—years old.

I domiciled with Bro. and Sr. Carl Potter, address 419 South Fisk street, and on Sunday met with a nice body of Saints at the church and preached for them morning and evening, Brethren Smith, Willey, and Fordham in charge. Brother Willey had been laboring here during the summer and was getting ready to return home at Lamoni, Iowa. Brother Willey is well spoken of by the Saints here, but he does not take kindly to the city work.

Since I was here some seven years ago, the city has grown amazingly, a better church has been built by the Saints, and the congregation increased numerically. So there is a nice body of Saints supporting the cause in Spokane. They are putting up with my talks Sundays just now and we get along nicely. Strange to say, most of them are there nearly every meeting. So, "What's the matter with Kelley?" "He's all right."

WM. H. KELLEY.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, September 9, 1911.

From the Northwest.

After spending ten days with the Saints at Weyburn Plains, Saskatchewan, Sr. William Toovey and son Evert conveyed us by team to the Zion's Hill Branch, twenty-five miles west; notwithstanding it was the 4th of July, overcoats and wraps were in demand. Our minds went back to the land of the Stars and Stripes; we celebrated the day as the faithful team took us over the prairies, by singing, "Our country, 'tis of Thee," "Star spangled banner," and other national airs, and the sweet songs of Zion. There are a large number of people from the States up here, and in some parts celebrate this great national day, some of our Canadian neighbors joining with them.

We passed through what is known as the burnt-out district, the soil and roots of grass burnt in patches; I judge that fully one half of the surface burnt to a depth of three to six inches. There is about ten by fifty miles of this land; the ground is level, just a little rolling. Water is very scarce, and very poor quality; alkali in it; no timber; it will take some years to get this land to produce a fair crop, and never will be as productive as parts that have not had the life burnt out of it, unless it is built up by manuring. Very little of that is done; most of the farmers burn all of the manure, which is a serious mistake, and not many years hence they will regret it and follow in the footsteps of all up-to-date farmers. It is riding a free horse to death to get all they can out of the soil and give nothing in return. I am pleased to say that very few of our people have gotten into that unwise, dishonest, extravagant way of robbing Mother Earth.

We arrived at the home of Bro. E. E. Williams in the afternoon; he is president of the Zion's Hill Branch; he home-stayed five years ago; has a family of four sons and two daughters; they have 1,280 acres of good land, nearly all in a body, with good water. When they came here their nearest town was Weyburn, thirty-six miles away; now they are between two railroad towns, Brooking and Radville, two and six miles respectively. Brother Williams and I met in Scranton, Pennsylvania, first in 1856; later on in Brookfield, Ohio, 1865, when he and I formed the acquaintance of the two Marys, first cousins, who became our faithful companions in life and are still spared to make life happy; both have seven children, each living; four sons and three daughters, all in the church but one son, including seven daughters-in-law, two sons-in-law, several grandchildren.

It was good to get around the table and talk of our boyhood days, when we worked, played, and worshiped together, and how we had been delivered from accidents seen and unseen; one incident I will mention. We were working in the Welsh Company Coal Mines, Hyde Park, Pennsylvania, now called Scranton, in April, 1862. My folks moved to Youngstown, Ohio. The following 5th of July there was a gas explosion and nine of the drivers were killed, two crippled for life; the eleven head of horses and mules were killed. Had we not moved away, myself and my brother Joseph, now in Kansas City, would have been in the number. Brother Williams was still working there, but the morning of that fatal accident, when his father called him to go to work, he was very sick; "Why," says the father, "you were all right when you retired." However, he was too sick to go. In less than one hour and a half, the report of the explosion was heard for miles, and the sad news came of the fatal accident. Brother Williams arose from the bed completely well.

On our way from Weyburn to Brooking we saw a steam engine with six 14-inch breaking plows, at work turning over the sod; the breaking was well done, an average day's work of twelve hours being about fifteen acres. Four dollars per acre is the usual price; it takes three men, engineer, fireman, and plowman, man and team to bring fuel and water; the gasoline engines have the preference.

There are several families of Saints within five miles of Brother Williams; all have good farms, three hundred and twenty acres and more; none less than one hundred and sixty. I preached eight times in that vicinity, Bro. J. W. Peterson preached twice in Brooking schoolhouse. Bro. C. B. Bergersen's family, of Lamoni, have a choice three hundred and twenty acres one half mile from Radville. Brother Bergersen got the hall for four nights, advertised the meetings well, and Sister Bergersen was chorister and organist. Saints attended well; several came six and eight miles; we felt at home with Brother and Sister Bergersen during our stay of four days.

Zion's Hill Branch has a faithful band of Saints. Bro. Roy Toovey is in charge of the Sunday school, a coming young man. Some were interested in Radville; several blessings were given, which were encouraging, and I was strongly impressed that as the anointing of oil and the laying on of hands with the prayer of faith brought a blessing to the sick physically, so does humility and the prayer of faith bring a blessing spiritually to those that seek honestly and earnestly through the patriarchal channel. Both ordinances are of divine origin and have their mission for the benefit of the needy and believing children of God, for which I am truly grateful; that in this day when unbelief, like a wave is sweeping the earth, that there are a few that honor and respect the ordinances of God and have faith in Divinity, and that the Good Master is confirming beyond the shadow of a doubt, to the joy and satisfaction of those that seek and trust him, that he does recognize and approve the same.

July 20, at 6 a. m., Bro. Roy Toovey and Sr. Estella Toovey took us to the Sunnydale Branch, fifty miles due west, near the Willow Bunch country. The country between, as a whole was quite rolling, considerable stone on the surface, and when removed the soil is productive; we found water scarce; several small lakes or sloughs, but no fish; plenty of ducks. The country is thinly settled; we arrived at the home of Brother and Sister Wahlstrom, from Lamoni, at about 6 p. m. It was a good, long ride; we passed through the Gap, which is about ten miles wide, a very rich soil and good water; the Willow Bunch country is good farming land, little rolling, light colored soil, good water, and in some parts it is plentiful. Several families of Saints are in that part. We held five meetings, gave several blessings, and were treated very kindly by the Saints. I stopped with Bro. and Sr. Wahlstrom; Ruth made her home with Bro. and Sr. E. R. Davis.

The parents and brothers and sisters of our esteemed Bro. T. J. Jordan, of Sedley, live in this place. Their nearest town when they homesteaded, six years ago, was Weyburn, eighty-six miles east. It was a long way to go for even a box of matches, a spool of thread, and to haul lumber to build. To-day a railroad is surveyed through that country, and they are busy grading within two miles of Brethren Davis and Wahlstrom. The road is to go through the corner of Brother Wahlstrom's farm. I asked if he was willing for the road to pass through his land. "Yes, and welcome." No need to go eighty-six miles to market and spend, in winter, sometimes six to ten days at one time, owing to the snowstorms. One time he was gone two weeks and Sr. Wahlstrom was alone; had to feed ten head of stock; could not get word from one another; no telephone nor wireless telegraph. It is no pleasant thing to homestead about one hundred miles from a railroad; still, it has paid in the end, and one way of getting a home; many that have come here five years ago, with less than one thousand dollars, could sell out and leave with six to ten thousand, and judging the coming five years by the past, land will advance from fifty to one hundred per cent.

July 25, at 5 a. m., in company with Brother and Sister Wahlstrom and Bro. E. R. Davis, we started for Sedley, Saskatchewan, to attend conference, one hundred and eleven miles. We arrived at Brother Williams' at 8 p. m.; came over the same ground that we went on before. Found Bro. Tom Williams keeping batch; the folks had left for conference at noon, father, mother, and daughter Mae. We found a note on the table, "Welcome; make yourselves at home, and come on to conference." We were not backward in accepting the invitation. Next morning we left at 5 o'clock, with a sixty-one mile drive ahead of us. The country was very good, rich farming land; soil black; six good horses to a gang plowing with two fourteen-inch shears. We saw many men plowing. Will I call it rooting? for the plows did not scour. The plowman carried a large paddle to clean the dirt off. The disk plows gave the best satisfaction; still no plow cleans itself; it is hard on man and horse.

The land is very productive, notwithstanding it is of such gummy nature, specially with a favorable season, like this has been, with plenty of rain. In dry seasons it does not do so well. This rich, black soil is not as early as the light, sandy soil, and sometimes the grain does not fully mature before frost comes. The crops are extra good this year, but harvest is late; there is much anxiety for fear of frost. For forty miles it was one continual stretch of wheat, oats, and flax. At this writing, July 26, the fields are very green, and if the weather will be as wet the coming few weeks as it has been during July, the crops will mature before frost shall come. Every farmhouse we passed between Yellow Grass and Sedley, a distance of thirty miles, water tanks were used in hauling water from sloughs and small streams, which are far apart.

The selling price of improved farms is about forty to fifty dollars per acre in this section.

We arrived at Sedley, 8 p. m. of the 26th. Quite a number of the missionary force on the ground, Pres. F. M. Smith, W. H. Kelley, J. W. Peterson, E. E. Long, J. L. Mortimer, S. W. Tomlinson, and E. Moorman. Sedley is a small town on the Canadian Pacific Railroad, only one family of Saints living there, Brother and Sister Jordan. Religio, Sunday school, and conference sessions were held in the new town hall, that would be a credit to a city of ten thousand; meals were furnished free, also hay for teams; Sr. J. W. Peterson had charge of the kitchen, and volunteers were plenty and willing to do their part in assisting her to care for the one hundred and twenty-five guests that were fed for four days, July 27 to 30. Bro. and Sr. T. J. Jordan assumed the responsibility of caring for the conference. They were ably assisted by Brn. J. W. Peterson, J. L. Mortimer, and Brother Sprague and others. A committee of three were chosen to solicit subscriptions to help to defray the expenses, and collections were taken at the close of the preaching service, about three hundred and fifty dollars in all were collected. The missionaries' expenses to their various fields were provided for.

Preaching was by Pres. F. M. Smith, W. H. Kelley, E. E. Long, J. A. Beckman, bishop's agent, and the writer. A profitable time was enjoyed. Bro. F. M. Smith's efforts Sunday evening was highly complimented, and several of the citizens of Sedley expressed an anxiety to have the privilege to hear him again in the near future. His subject was, "All truth." Bro. W. H. Kelley's visit to the Northwest has been very beneficial to him, for he is gaining in health, and he has been made welcome by the Saints.

There were several at conference who had come by team from seventy-five to one hundred and twenty miles, and returned home well repaid for the effort made.

On the way to conference our daughter Ruth got a sliver in her left hand, and having no needle to pick it out, she used a pin, and from its effects and the mosquitoes that were so numerous, and who so unmercifully attacked her, the hand and arm became very painful and swollen, so that the next morning, after we arrived in Sedley, she was suffering and sick. Sr. J. W. Peterson advised her to go to the druggist, who is considerable of a doctor, and see if he could give her something, for she thought blood poison had set it. The druggist examined it and refused to give her anything, but advised her to have it opened at once, that it was blood poison, and before morning it would be up in her shoulder, and probably the next lockjaw would set in. She refused to have it opened, but came to me and told me what the druggist had said. This was nearly 2 p. m., nearly time for the Sunday school session; so I suggested that after the service I would have two of the elders administer; she replied, "Can it not be attended to now?" "Yes," and I was pleased to see her so anxious. So I got Bro. Joshua Dobson, and we anointed the hand and arm with oil quite freely, and in less than one hour the swelling was gone, the pain stopped at once, and she was well. It was truly a remarkable blessing, and we tried to appreciate it, under the circumstances, having so much to do and away from home. It was a blessing in the hour of need, and many of the Saints present rejoiced and praised the Lord for the same.

I regret very much that we can not be present at the Stewartsville reunion. Brn. Fred M. Smith and J. R. Lambert thought it best for me to try and reach other branches in this field, from which you shall hear later.

Respectfully, your brother,

WM. LEWIS.

SEDLEY, SASKATCHEWAN, August 1, 1911.

Sweden.

By heading my last letter with "Denmark," you represented me as laboring in town Helsingborg, Denmark, instead of Helsingborg, Sweden.

It has again been my privilege to administer in that sacred ordinance of baptism, September 11, two young married people decided to follow their Master's footsteps, and were accordingly buried beneath the liquid wave, and confirmed that same evening.

This couple had been searching for the truth a whole year, and the woman by mistake came to my meeting one Sunday evening, and got at once interested. After that they heard me preach twice and I was invited to their home a couple of times, where I explained the gospel to them, and the result was as stated above.

They are now very happy and contented, rejoicing in this everlasting gospel, which is so precious and soul cheering.

Bro. H. N. Hansen and wife from Copenhagen made us a short visit; sixteen people listened attentively to his sermon last night. They left for Copenhagen to-day.

So the good work moves slowly forward in this country, for which we are thankful to the Lord of all.

With love for righteousness and truth, I remain your brother,

C. A. SWENSON.

News From Branches

Saint Louis, Missouri.

The blessed influence of the Spirit was present at our monthly sacrament services which lent cheer and comfort to those in attendance. Bro. T. J. Elliott was in charge, and Bro. G. Reeves gave the opening remarks. An admonition was given to the young to be more diligent in prayer.

District conference convened in Belleville, Illinois, September 17, 18. A spiritual time was enjoyed. A prophecy was given enjoining more attention and diligence on the part of parents toward the guidance and training of the children in the ways of the Lord. The hospitality and kindly attention given by the Belleville Saints was enjoyed and appreciated.

The discourses during the past month were delivered by Brn. Elliot, Reeves, and Archibald, and good food for thought and growth was given.

If more effort were put forth to heed the instruction delivered by those in authority to teach God's law, how much faster would God's work advance and how much nearer the Master would we be.

A very pleasing program was rendered by the Sunday school the morning of September 24. It was our cradle roll and parents' day. One little babe, the son of Sister Podkin and husband, was added to the cradle roll. A feature worthy of note was a short talk by our superintendent about the disadvantage of the children of Greenland, Japan, and China in receiving and learning of the true gospel, after which three of our little folks, dressed in costumes representing these countries, came to the stand and while each in turn walked back and forth imitating the manner of walking especially adapted to the country they represented, songs pertaining to those peculiar people were sung. Our cradle roll superintendent, Sister Swift, has been very ill but we were pleased to see her in attendance at the service. The committee who had the program in charge, Srs. Adel Peters, Anna DeJong, and Mary Trowbridge, are to be commended for the success of their efforts.

Sunday, September 24, Bro. A. F. Sherman occupied in the morning and gave good instruction in regard to brotherly love and Christ-like conduct. Do we fully realize that our brothers and sisters are struggling along under heavy burdens and sore trials, and need all the words of cheer and comfort that we can offer them? We surely need help from them, if not so much now, our time is coming. "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." How many might have had strength to go on and live honorably, if they had received words of love and sympathy, instead of criticism and sarcasm. "What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with thy God?"

Sr. Edna Fike has returned to the city, and renders good service as organist in the Sunday school and church services. May the Lord's richest blessings rest upon those who are specially talented, and have superior advantages, and are willing to work in the Lord's vineyard.

September 27, Wednesday evening prayer-meeting was in charge of Bro. H. P. W. Keir. A good spirit and no lagging, yet we feel that many are not taking advantage of all the good.

"Strange we never prize the music
Till the sweet-voiced bird has flown,
Strange that we should slight the violets
Till the lovely flowers are gone.

Strange that summer skies and sunshine never seem one half so fair,
Until winter snowy pinions shake the white down in the air.
Then scatter seeds of kindness for our reaping by and by."

I ride on the hills, I forgive, I forget
Life's hoard of regret—
All the terror and pain
Of the chafing chain.
Grind on, oh cities, grind;
I leave you a blur behind,
I am lifted elate, the skies expand;
Here, the world's heaped gold is a pile of sand;
Let them weary and work in their narrow walls—
I ride with the voices of waterfalls.

Next conference will be held March 9, 10, 1912, at Central Church, Kansas City, Missouri. A request from auditing committee asking the conference to define their duties was answered by appointing a committee of three, who reported as follows: "All books, papers, accounts and records are subject to examination. The counting of cash and verifying of balanced bank account as evidenced by the pass-book on the evening of the last day of the semiannual accounting is the first act of the audit. Any seeming irregularity, whether in expenditure or diversion, or apportionment of funds should be at once reported to the general Bishop for information and advice, as it may find its adjustment then and there prior to making out reports to conference. If no satisfactory adjustment be made and it seems both bishoprics are at fault, a report of the same should be filed with the stake conference for their information, advice, and action." A recommendation from the president that the Pleasant View Branch should be disorganized was concurred in. By recommendation of the president that a branch be organized in Lexington, Missouri, was left in the hands of the missionary in charge, and stake presidency, with power to act. The resignation of stake bishop, Roderick May, was accepted. The First Presidency recommended the name of Richard Bullard to succeed R. May, resigned, which was indorsed. The Building Resolution, passed September 12, 1903, was rescinded. A petition by First Quorum of Elders, asking that its members report direct to its quorum instead of to stake conference, was granted, and a summary will be furnished from the quorum to each semiannual conference. A motion prevailed allowing all of the Aaronic priesthood to report in same manner as First Quorum of Elders. Fifteen dollars was appropriated for furtherance of library work. The ordination of Brother Dexter to President of Fourth Quorum of Priests was referred to missionary in charge. W. H. Garrett, R. Bullard, and H. W. Reunion Minutes.

NORTHEASTERN KANSAS.—The reunion of the Northeastern Kansas District convened at the church in Fanning, Kansas, September 11, 1911, at 9.30 a. m. After a short prayer service the following organization was effected: Bro. F. G. Hedrick, president, with Brn. W. E. Peak and J. F. Curtis as associates in presiding over the reunion; Sr. H. C. Pitsenberger, secretary; Sr. Florence McNichols, chorister, with privilege of choosing assistants; F. G. Hedrick and Will Gurwell, financial committee; Bro. Gilbert Hedrick, janitor, with privilege of choosing ushers. Services each day as follows: Prayer meeting at 9.30 a. m.; preaching at 11 a. m.; auxiliary work at 2.30 p. m.; song service at 7.45 p. m.; preaching at 8 p. m. All the services were of a very spiritual character, though we were few in number, and the opposing element was arrayed on every side against the success of the reunion. The prayer meetings were very strengthening and spiritual. The afternoon services were devoted to the various phases of auxiliary work, such as methods of normal study, church organization, Graceland College and home department work. The discussion that followed the illustration of the methods of normal study by Sr. McNichols brought to light many new and interesting points. The two afternoons devoted to drill on church organization was profitable and commendable. Bro. Hale W. Smith in the interest of Graceland, discussed the subject of "Environment," showing the necessity of combating the theories of men if we would not have the youth in our church steeped in infidelity and immorality at these higher institutions of learning. Place your children where they will be less liable to fall. May the time come when Graceland will be a household word dear to the heart of every Latter Day Saint because of the influence that will go out from it as an auxiliary of the church in building up the kingdom of God. Does it need our support? After a thorough discussion of the home department work, two papers were read, "Excuses and reasons" by Sister Pitsenberger, and "The work of the home department," by Sister Twombly. Thursday afternoon was devoted to the conventions of the Religio and Sunday school. One thought that was very forcibly presented was that our consent to anything being all right does not amount to anything, but that it is service that brings results. Anything that is worth the while of a true Latter Day Saint, is in direct point of contact with the gospel. Sister McNichols tried to make us all feel at home in the management of the auxiliary work, and she was very ably assisted in the singing by Brn. Hale Smith and F. A. Cool. The brethren occupying during the preaching services were W. E. Peak, J. F. Curtis, G. H. Hilliard, Hale W. Smith, J. D. Shower, and O. W. Okerlind. The local ministry showed their faith and zeal in the efforts put forth in the interest of the work. The charts used by Brethren Curtis and Smith added much to the interest of the subjects presented. Saturday morning the reunion services were dispensed with and the last loving tribute of respect was paid to the mother of Bro. F. G. Hedrick by a large concourse of friends. May the comforting influence of the Holy Spirit cheer him and his worthy wife in this bereavement. Three children were blessed at the close of the services Sunday afternoon by Brn. J. F. Curtis and Hale W. Smith. The reunion service closed Sunday evening and the preaching service continued another week. Mrs. H. C. Pitsenberger, secretary, Council Grove, Kansas.

MASSACHUSETTS.—The reunion of the Massachusetts District convened at Onset, Massachusetts, July 29 to August 14. Presided over by president of mission, U. W. Greene, district president, C. H. Rich, and missionaries Daniel Macgregor, H. O. Smith, A. B. Phillips. The other officers appointed were: Secretary, W. A. Sinclair; choristers, Elenora Whiting, H. O. Smith; organist, L. S. Ashton; chief of police, William Bradbury; care of tabernacle tent, James V. Clark; care of lights throughout the grove, John F. Sheehy; press committee, U. W. Greene, Daniel Macgregor; postmaster, W. A. Sinclair; census taker, Verna Thayer; auditors, A. N. Baker, S. W. Ashton. The rules governing the camp were announced by the presidency as follows: Retire at 10.30; arise at 6 a. m.; breakfast at 7 a. m.; Sunday school and Religio work at 8.30; prayer service at 9.30; preaching at 11; dinner at 12 m.; baptisms at 1.30 p. m.; swimming, baseball, and recreation until 5.30; supper at 5.30; song service 7 p. m.; preaching at 7.30, followed by an open air entertainment each evening. Summary of events: There were held 3 sessions of Sunday school, 11 sessions of Sunday school and Religio institute work, 3 debates, papers and talks, and demonstrations of different departments of this work were numerous. There were 16 prayer sessions, with a summary of songs 79, prayers 70, testimonies 256, tongues 3, interpretations 2, prophecies 6, preaching services 31, baptisms 25, confirmations 25, babies blessed 2, administrations quite numerous, business sessions 5. Speakers at the reunion were: U. W. Greene, R. S. Salyards, C. H. Rich, H. O. Smith, M. H. Bond, A. B. Phillips, R. W. Farrell, S. F. Cushman, J. F. Sheehy, M. C. Fisher, G. W. Robley, H. W. Howlett, Daniel Macgregor, William Bradbury. There were 95 tents, 350 campers; and 2,682 pieces of mail passed through the hands of the postmaster during the reunion. The reunion grounds are situated on an elevation of land on an arm of Onset Bay, just far enough removed from the town to preserve the quietness desirable for religious services, and yet of easy access for those who desire to come among the Saints and become acquainted with our work. The grounds were purchased this year and partially cleared for the camp meeting. A motion prevailed that the bishop have a plan of the ground at the October conference at Fall River, that the Saints may rent or lease portions according to their choice and erect cottages for their occupancy. The higher portion of the grove bordering on the water front has been reserved for camping and will be known as the camp grounds proper. The purchase, clearing, and incidental expenses necessitated a large outlay of money, consequently there is a deficit of over $200; an effort is to be made to raise this indebtedness among the different branches of the district. The reunion was a success and highly enjoyed by all. The primary workers did good work among the children, holding sessions each morning at some chosen point in the grove. Their work met with the approval of the authorities to the extent that they have made provision for a tent 12 by 15 for their work during the reunion of 1912, which is to convene July 27. The mosquitoes were very much in evidence, and to a certain extent interfered with the comfort of all; otherwise than this, everything was ideal; or at least as much so as a new camping ground could be expected for the first year. W. A. Sinclair, M. D., secretary.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.—The reunion of the Northern California District has passed into history. The attendance was large, about 350, although all were not present at one time. About sixty tents were pitched to accommodate the campers, besides many others found rooms with private families, lodging houses, and hotels. J. M. Terry was assisted by F. M. Sheehy; F. B. Farr was chorister; Sister Farr organist. Eighteen of the ministry were present, besides the abovementioned. Elders Keeler, Ingham, Saxe, Carmichael, Parkin, Anthony, Clapp, White, York, Bean, Hawkins, Lawn, Jones, Holt. All did not dispense the word. The sermons were all of a high order,—logical, comforting, and instructive. Bro. A. Carmichael's talk made the object of the "Order of Enoch" very clear to the Saints, deserves special mention, as it was not generally understood. Another feature of the reunion merits more than passing notice; namely: The charts and lecture of Sister Deuel of Stockton. The charts were very large, showing plainly the broad and the narrow ways—the different glories, paradise, the judgment seat, perdition, etc. We were all more than pleased to see Brother Keeler present, for many of us were desirous to obtain our patriarchal blessings. Brother Carmichael's tent was well stocked with the publications of the Herald Office and was well patronized. About twenty sermons were delivered, besides many interesting and instructive lectures and talks. Four unknown tongues and interpretations three prophecies, and about 175 testimonies, several of which were grand and wonderful, as well as instructive. The Sunday school, under the efficient superintendence of Sr. M. A. Saxe, was very delightful. Bro. W. H. Dawson, of Sacramento, made the Religio very interesting as well as instructive. The happiness of all was marred by the shade of sadness that was caused by the departure of our beloved brother, J. C. Clapp, for his home in Independence where he is expected to pass his remaining days. Many followed him to the railroad station, where the last good-byes were spoken, and many were the warm handshakes of farewell. We will never forget dear old Brother Clapp! On the last Friday evening an entertainment was given, under the auspices of the Sunday school. The large tent was thronged, and all pronounced it a grand success. Edward F. Adamson, secretary of reunion.

Mr. Farmer:

Did the recent long, dry spell hit you pretty hard—cut down your crop yield and consequently your income for the year? Will you be satisfied to continue taking chances on a good rain happening along—just about the time it is badly needed?

Out in the Big Horn Basin of Wyoming the farmer of irrigated lands raised the usual "bumper" crop. His income was not reduced and he knew no worries, because "he controlled the rain" and applied the water as his crops needed it.

Don't you see the tremendous advantage he had? Wouldn't it pay you to go out with me on one of those Homeseekers' Excursions, see the country; talk to some of the farmers and get their views?

Because of my inability to persuade you to do this, it may be my fault if you don't go, but it will be your loss.

Truthful Faces

The face is the first indicator of nervous exhaustion. Although the individual may not feel the slightest sense of physical or mental impairment, he may be living on his reserve nerve power just like the spendthrift who, while spending his capital, does, as yet, not suffer for money. The face is the best tell-tale as to whether you are really sick or well, and those who are uncertain regarding their health should have themselves diagnosed by a food specialist, because often I have informed individuals of a terrible ailment approaching, and by heeding my advice have saved themselves great suffering and even death. Your time mapped out to live is 70 years or more. Now, to live this time, you can rest assured you must eat the proper food—food that was created for man. I am pleased to state I have every element in Good Health Flour necessary to rebuild your body. Do not be deceived with an article that is "just as good." THE MISSIONARY SPIRIT.

(A sermon delivered by Elbert A. Smith at Lamoni, Iowa, during the General Conference, April, 1911. Reported by Estella Wight.)

Text: Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!

SCRIPTURE LESSON.

For though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of: for necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel! For if I do this thing willingly, I have a reward: but if against my will, a dispensation of the gospel is committed unto me. What is my reward then? Verily that, when I preach the gospel, I may make the gospel of Christ without charge, that I abuse not my power in the gospel. For though I be free from all men, yet have I made myself servant unto all, that I might gain the more. And unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law; to them that are without law, as without law, (being not without law to God, but under the law to Christ,) that I might gain them that are without law. To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak: I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some, and this I do for the gospel's sake, that I might be partaker thereof with you. Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain. And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown, but we an incorruptible. I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air: but I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection: lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway.—1 Corinthians 9: 16-27.

I presume that to-day most of us, or at least many of us, are weary and perhaps nervous as a result of the strain of General Conference. I know it is so with me. I scarcely lie down at night and close my eyes in sleep before some one jumps up and says, "Mr. Chairman," and when I have recognized him, he proceeds to make a speech, and some one raises a "point of order," and some one else moves the "previous question," and we pass legislation that is even more marvelous and wonderful than anything that has been attempted on this conference floor, though some things in that line are ascribed to us that we are not guilty of. I remember how about ten years ago, after we had held General Conference, I was traveling on a train from here to Chicago, and there were two gentlemen in front of me who were talking about the Latter Day Saints. One of them said we had just received a revelation that the ten lost tribes were up somewhere around the North Pole, and that we had appropriated means and appointed a committee to go and find them. But that is one thing at least*that we never did appoint a committee to undertake.

Very soon this conference will be over and our men will scatter to their fields and undertake another line of work, that of carrying the gospel wherever they go to those who are perishing. As I have looked over the congregations during this conference, and last conference also, and noticed the quorums of our missionaries, and looked into their faces and studied their bearing and their spirit, and it has made my heart warm to think that I am thus united with them: one of them, and that they can call me brother, the highest title that can be bestowed upon anyone.

POOR RICH CHURCHES AND RICH POOR CHURCHES.

So to-day I want to talk to you a little while on the subject of the missionary spirit and kindred topics connected with it, and my text is that one that I have read you already: "Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel."

As our men go out in this work they go out with confidence, because they believe that they are recognized as ambassadors from God. During the conference one of our brethren stated that he found a certain tract one day having the title, The Reorganized Mormon Church, and he objects to the title. A few days ago there came a card to the Herald Office from a commercial firm that bore a title more appropriate. They had it directed to the "Recognized Church of Latter Day Saints." With that title we can find no fault, because we believe that this church is indeed recognized of Christ as his church. This church from the beginning, has been poor in money, but we believe it has been rich in the missionary spirit, and that is far better than to be rich in dollars and be poor in the spirit.

I have before me a clipping taken from the Detroit Journal some weeks ago, in which is made this comment:

"A Presbyterian church about to disband in New York has a membership worth $750,000,000—on earth."

M

Nothing in heaven! $750,000,000 on earth; but bankrupt in heaven, and going out of the business of saving human souls, if they were ever in that business. And if the missionary spirit, which is the longing and intense desire to save souls, ever goes out of this church, no matter how many dollars we have, it will become disorganized and cease to be owned of God.

PREPARATION FOR SERVICE.

The apostle Paul, in the chapter that I have just read to you, intimates that there is a certain process of preparation that we must all go through to make this missionary spirit serviceable, and to make us valuable in the hands of God in carrying the gospel into all the world; and strange though it might seem to some, one of the means that he used was to discipline his own body. He says that even the athletes are temperate in all things that they may win a corruptible crown. How much more should we be temperate in all things in striving for an incorruptible crown? So he tells us, "I keep my body in subjection."

Now I suggest a few thoughts to those who are here as members of the missionary force. By nature some are stronger in body than others. All things being equal such can accomplish more in gospel work; but whether strong or weak, the individual who is temperate and careful will accomplish more than he could otherwise. And the frail man who is temperate may live longer and accomplish more than the strong man who is intemperate.

PRAYER.

So the apostle recognizes this as one of the means of preparation for gospel work; but that is not all. There is a process of preparation that involves both spirit and mind, and one of the real means in this process of mental and spiritual discipline, as pointed out by Christ himself, is prayer. He laid much stress upon it. He said that we should pray always. Not that we are to be all the time engaged in vocal prayer, or like those priests in Asia, who write their prayers on little wheels and make the wheels go round constantly, and think they are praying continually. But we should keep ourselves in the attitude of prayer, and also frequently approach our heavenly Father in vocal prayer both in secret and in public as circumstances require.

But this is only one means, and when separated from other means that are naturally associated with it, it becomes of no value. Prayer is not a magic pass word that without any exertion upon our part opens to us the storehouse of divine blessing. In this connection I wish to read a poem on prayer, though it may seem to be irreverent on the surface, yet it has a deep lesson:

Some people think prayer is a telephone,
A patent transmitter to hire or own,
And at every hint of a small desire,
They call up the busy Central Wire
To plug into the Great White Throne.

Some people think prayer is an elevator,
A sort of an automatic waiter,
Eternally ready, supernally swift,
To pick them up and give them a lift,
Whenever they signal the Operator.

Some people think prayer is a kind of a kite,
A little erratic as yet in flight,
And consequently it isn't claimed
That it always reaches the spot where aimed,
But it carries the message up all right.

Some people think prayer is a flying machine,
Impressive in power but inclined to careen,
And if any part of the motor snaps
The whole thing falls in a huge collapse,
With your wrecked hopes somewhere in between.

But maybe prayer is a road to rise,
A mountain path leading toward the skies
To assist the spirit who truly tries.
But it isn't a shibboleth, creed, nor code;
It isn't a pack horse to carry your load;
It isn't a method; it's only a road.
And perhaps the reward of the spirit who tries
Is not the goal, but the exercise.

—Edmund Vance Cooke.

FAITH AND WORK ASSOCIATED.

Now if any of you have ever climbed a road, a mountain road leading toward the skies, you know that it requires effort to climb that road; but when you reach the summit, the view is worthy of the effort; and this poem suggests the thought that prayer when disassociated from effort is of no value. And the same thought is presented in the scriptures where we are told that faith without works is dead. Then if we are to prepare ourselves that we may be acceptable in the sight of God in missionary work, we must not only pray, but we must exercise ourselves in body and mind, that we may fit ourselves to fulfill the mission placed in our hands, and receive the blessings that we pray for; for we might pray until doomsday and never come into the possession of those scriptural truths that are our defense, unless we open the scriptures and seek for them. Consequently in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants we have faith and study and knowledge associated, and we are told that we should seek learning by faith and also by study.

WHO CAN ASSIST?

There are also the characteristics of a spiritual nature that we must have to assist in this work, that may come to us partly as a result of divine blessing, partly as a result of our own effort to obtain them. For instance in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, section 11, paragraph 4, I find a statement that was given to this church as long ago as May, 1829; that is, it was given to the people who were afterwards to form the church:

Behold, I speak unto you, and also to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish this work; and no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care.

Are there those trying to build up this work who are proud? If so, they are inevitably doomed to fail, because we are told that no one can assist in this work excepting those who are humble. What have we to be proud of? Are we proud of our physical perfection or our mental development, or of the talents God has given us? Why, if we are, how transient these things are! Any day the germs of typhoid or tuberculosis may enter our system and lay us wasted and prostrate and broken upon a bed of sickness. All the strength that we have, either in body or mind, all the accumulation of this world's goods come to us as a result of the life and power that God gives us, and can be taken away from us at any moment, whether we will or not.

Are we full of love, having faith and hope and charity? These are the things that will set us on fire with missionary zeal; and without these things we will soon quit the field, or if not in the field we will soon withdraw the financial and moral support that we have been giving to those in the field. If we do not have the charity and love; if we do not have faith and hope, love for our fellow-men and confidence in God, without these things, we are told, we can not even assist in building up and establishing his work. These then are divine characteristics and qualifications and exercises that will fit us, that when God fills us with the Holy Spirit, we can make ourselves effectual in this missionary work of which we speak.

WHAT SHALL WE PREACH?

Now what is it that concerns us if we really have this missionary zeal? Why is it that we want men to be saved. How shall men be saved? We are told that it has pleased God to save man by the foolishness of preaching, and so the Apostle Paul tells us, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth."

Ah, then it is the gospel that we are to preach, for it is the power of God unto salvation. That is why Paul says, "Woe unto me if I preach not the gospel."

Now, my friends and brothers, we are not sent into the world to preach any visionary dreams and speculations, or theories of our own that never can be demonstrated this side of eternity. We are sent into the world to preach the plain, easily understood and easily to be comprehended gospel of Jesus Christ. On these things we should dwell, and they should be the main theme of our conversation and of our preaching.

AND YET WE ARE FREE.

Now do not misunderstand me and think that I want to circumscribe the liberty of the elders and say that they must not study this or that, because this church has not taken such a position and never has sought to curtail the liberty of the ministry.

The Apostle Paul in the first part of this very chapter says, "Am I not an apostle? am I not free?"

Christ said, "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." And our men are free to study science or history or literature or art or politics, anything that may arrest their attention and commend itself to their judgment as being worth their time. And wherever they find a divine truth it is theirs and they can have it. I believe that was the policy of the old prophets and of the primitive Christian apostles. The Psalmist looked into the heavens and drew his illustrations from the stars and the planets, and Christ himself took the lily of the valley as an illustration, making his sermon fragrant with its perfume. The Apostle Paul when he appeared among the cultured people at Athens, among the philosophers of the Stoics and Epicureans, and was taken up before their highest and most venerable court on Mars' Hill, in preaching to them quoted from their own poets. Those philosophers and poets were the advance thinkers and modern writers of his day, and he had read and studied their writings, and used them when the occasion required.

But this does not mean that from these outside classes we are to take some hobby and make it the burden of our preaching. The Apostle Paul made these things subservient to the preaching of the gospel. Wherever he found a truth it was tributary to the gospel, subsidiary; he used it to help build up and establish the message that he had, and that is the policy that we should pursue. The gospel is the message that we have to preach to the world, and any truths that we get anywhere else must be made subsidiary to that message.

Now this is not in harmony, I know, with the interpretation that some men have placed on the statement of the Apostle Paul, "I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." Now I do not believe for a moment that Paul meant that to be exclusive. I fully believe that he meant it to be inclusive. Yet some people have said so much about the cross and the blood of Christ, that really one would almost think that for twenty centuries Christ had done nothing but hang on the cross and shed rivers of blood for the salvation of man. Paul went beyond this and pointed to the resurrection of Christ, and said, "But if he be not raised, then is your faith vain." So if I would read this text in such a way to give the meaning that Paul intended, I would read it, "I am determined henceforth that I will know all about Christ, including the great fact that he died for you and me."

That leaves us free to gather truth wherever we find it, and wherever we find truth we find that it touches the mission of Christ at some particular point.

WE ARE SENT OUT TO TEACH, NOT TO BE TAUGHT.

But we must bear this in mind, that so far as the gospel is concerned we are sent out into the world to teach and not to be taught; and so far as the fundamental principles of the gospel are concerned, there is yet to arise the man, or the church, or the political party, or the association that can teach this church anything about those fundamental principles. They may teach us other truths; they may even teach us methods, and we are free to obtain these, but when it comes to the fundamental principles of the gospel of Christ, the ministry of Christ are, ever have been, and always will be sent out to teach and not be taught.

Now let us particularize a little bit. What is it that the ministry of Christ have been teaching the world since the organization of the church in 1830? We have but to run over the list of those truths that we have advocated and many more will occur to you. We have been teaching men concerning faith in an unchangeable God, concerning the true character of repentance, the divine nature of the ordinance of laying on of hands, the real mode and true import of baptism, the nature of the resurrection of the just, and the unjust, the character of the eternal judgment, and that all men will be rewarded according to their works, the second personal coming of Jesus Christ, divine healing, and the manifestation of prophecy and the gift of tongues. Many other such I might mention that the world was absolutely ignorant concerning, and we have been teaching them upon these points. And I believe it is a fact that the constant preaching of the elders of this church in all parts of the world, on many of these points, has been instrumental to a marked degree in changing the attitude of the religious world.

Take the question of divine healing. Everyone scouted it when first taught by us, but now it is believed in by thousands and thousands of Christian Scientists, and is adopted under the guise of the Emmanuel Movement by some of the leading churches in the world. I think we can hardly call it divine healing as practiced by them, but at least

Where the Angels Encamped.

(Written in memory of the reunion at Magnolia, Iowa.)

When I read that his angels encamped round about,
I shall think little city, of you;
With your glad hills encircled and far overhead
A heaven wide-bending and blue.
I shall smell the sweet incense that fell on the dusk
As we drove through the herbs on our way,
Sweet clover and others, a dew-distilled musk
O'er the road that stretched shadowed and gray.

For miles, till the flashing of lights led the mind
Away from the comrades so near,
To anticipation of whom we should find
Awaiting us, faithful and dear.
Then out of the night by the city of tents
I shall hear, ne'er was gift quite so blest,
The voices of friends, love cadenced, God-sent,
In guidance to places of rest.

Then at evening and morning and noontime was heard
In the temple, whose soft woven wall
Fell 'round His glad people, the sound of his word,
And His praise and the Spirit's still call.
For angels of light, in a cloud came one day
And stood in the temple so near,
That for ever the vision will linger and bless
And the place of that meeting so dear.

There none were forgotten, the afflicted and sad,
The tempted and aged and heart sore;
The sick, the sweet children, the weary, the glad,
Found comfort and mercy and more.
Our fathers have worshiped on your beauteous hills,
And mothers made sacrifice here,
And through our generation the same gospel thrills
That to them was so precious, so dear.

The door of your households stood open to guests
Who ate of your loaf and your meat;
And hand clasping hand in welcoming clasp
Was warmed by a loving heart's beat.
They tell me your woven-walled courts are no more,
Wrapped and bound like a magician's pack,
They wait the strong hands that have raised them before,
Who will bring the dear white city back.

Oh, eyes that were dim with the mist of farewell,
Oh, voices that broke in good-bye,
We meet here for ever in mem'ry to tell,
(Neath the wonderous September sky,
Of the songs that we sang and the Word in its power,
And the message that came as from heaven,
Of the days that were short as a sweet summer hour,
In Magnolia in 1911.

There are innumerable methods of teaching; but it all depends in the end upon the teacher, and the man who depends upon his methods will never become a teacher.—Duncan Black MacDonald, in Aspects of Islam.

SUMMER SCHOOL WORK.

NEW YORK CITY.

Immediately at the close of our Daily Vacation Bible School, nearly all the workers, teachers, and members of the church, went to attend the reunion at Manasquan, New Jersey. As there has been some inquiry regarding this summer school work we will take this opportunity to tell something of the way it worked here. Bro. W. W. Smith of Philadelphia, has given a brief description of the work that he has been doing in that city, and he was the first of our ministry to experiment with this, which one of our representative men called "A new departure."

When I came to New York last June, I knew little or nothing regarding this work, but being urged to undertake it, and being anxious to do something to interest the people in our work, we launched forth, and the success that has resulted has been encouraging.

The first thing I did was to become acquainted with the national officers of the National Daily Bible School Association, 21 Bible House, New York City. There I met Dr. Robert G. Boville, National Director, and Mr. W. F. L. Edwards, City Superintendent of Schools. Each of these gentlemen extended me every courtesy and told me that if I would undertake to run a school, while they could not pledge financial support, they would render every other assistance possible. They gave me some literature explaining the work and told me to be present with my staff of teachers, at the Training Conference, at the Church of Incarnation, between 2d and 3d avenues, on East Thirty-first street, on July 5, 6, and 7.

Then we took the matter up with the branch here and obtained consent to use the church, and enlisted the teachers. For a while I wondered who I could get to act as teachers, but in looking about I found several who were not only willing but anxious to help in this good work.

The following composed the official staff of the school: William E. LaRue, principal; Mrs. W. E. Nichols, registrar and industrial teacher; Mrs. Ephraim Squire, pianist, music instructor, and industrial teacher; Mrs. George Potts, instructor in calisthenics and industrial work; Elder William Anderson, Mrs. B. R. McGuire, Bessie Guilfooy, Mrs. Lucy Mullen, Mrs. William Anderson and Mrs. Katherine Moriarty, were teachers of industrial work. Miss Mabel Harris, had charge of the kindergarten, assisted by Mrs. W. E. LaRue, and Miss Sadie Potts.

From my observations I would not hesitate to say that I believe my staff was equally as competent as that of any of the twenty-seven schools of the kind in the city.

In addition to the above-mentioned staff, we had a school committee, whose duty it was to pass upon matters of importance, and counsel and advise with regard to all matters affecting the welfare of the school. This committee consisted of the following: W. E. LaRue, chairman; Sr. W. E. Nichols, secretary; Bro. B. R. McGuire, treasurer; Bro. George Potts, and Sr. George Potts, Bro. Ephraim Squire, and Bro. Charles Harris. The reader who may be acquainted with those mentioned will see that we were backed by real earnest men and women who were eager and willing to do their best and each and all acquitted themselves well.

We were all present at the opening of the training conference, which was celebrated by an appropriate service of a devotional character, by ministers of the Church of England. This was followed by addresses, and lectures, and instructions regarding the conducting of the school. We were shown how to make hammocks, baskets, to do articles in raffia work, taught the songs we were to sing, and a great many things in detail about the daily workings of the school.

On one of the days of our training conference we were invited to a twenty-minute service in Old Trinity Church at noon. This church is one of the oldest in the country and of well-known historic interest, and situated in the financial district of the city. After the service we assembled in the graveyard adjoining the church, where each principal of the school was presented with an American Flag by the Daughters of the American Revolution. This was followed by a luncheon in Trinity Hall.

We had five thousand neat folders printed and scattered through the neighborhood of our church, and a sign on the church announcing the opening of the school. Saturday afternoon was set as registration day, and the first one to come was a Catholic lady, bringing two little girls. Altogether we enrolled 312 children.

Religiously, our pupils were divided as follows: 156 Catholics, 114 Protestants, 17 Jewish, 25 independent of the Latter Day Saints. We do not count our people with the Protestants, as they are not protesting against one more than the other.

We were given registration cards by the association; these provided space for the name, address, race, age, and creed, of the child; there were blank spaces around the edges to be punched, showing the attendance. We found that this method would consume so much time, the entire attention of our registrar. Instead of this, we took a book with numbered pages and at the top of each page we recorded the name, address, age, race, and creed, of the child, and then we gave them the number that was on the page and they kept that number through the school. All the work which they completed was tagged by that number, and when it was distributed we called the number and the one who made it responded. Every morning as the children came to school, they would come in to register, and would call their number, and the registrar, would give the boys a little white ticket and the girls a little yellow ticket. A large sheet of any kind of paper was used with numbers placed thereon for one week, and as each child would register, a marking would be made opposite their number; if a girl, it would be marked G; if a boy, it would be marked B; and at the end of the week the attendance was posted in the record book and now we have this record showing the attendance of each child at a glance. I showed this system to the city superintendent and he commended it very highly, and said he thought it a great improvement over the one commonly used.

The teachers and entire staff are supposed to be present at the school at 8.30 a. m., to see that the place is in readiness; and they are also expected to spend some time on the street visiting, trying to persuade other children to unite with the school.

I found a very effectual way to do this was to take a hammock, or a basket along, and when you came to a crowd of boys or girls begin talking about the article you have in hand and they will soon manifest interest, and then invite them to come to the school and they will likely be there as a result.

Promptly at 9.30 a. m. all form in line on the outside and march in, to the music, and the following official program is carried out:

First hour.—9.30-9.40. Opening exercises, all present; hymn; psalm or other portion, repeated in concert; Lord's prayer—said or sung; hymn; kindergarten goes out; two-minute talk on habits.

9.40-10.05: Musical period; vocal and breathing exercises; singing lesson; calisthenics with music.

10.05-10.30: Bible lesson in three sections; represented by children; or taught with sand table; or given by stereoscopic or other pictures; or told as story by the teacher.

Second hour.—10.30-11.25: Manual and play hour in sections; hammock making, older boys; basketry and raffia work, girls and smaller boys; sewing, girls; work for Children's Hospital, all; Bible blank books and sand table work; first aid, older boys and girls; play, all.

11.25-11.30: Closing exercises—school reassembles; daily salute to flag; "America" or hymn; children's benediction; march out to music.

Afternoon—two hours. Open air games organized and directed; excursions; visitation of homes; student conferences, Monday.

The hymns used are such as are adaptable to children, such as, "I think when I read that sweet story of old," "Father hear thy little children," "Savior like a shepherd lead us," "Onward Christian soldiers," and others. The children are taught many songs on a great variety of subjects—about birds, flowers, and other things all calculated to bring out the best in the mind of the child and teach him to have love for the beautiful and the good things in the world. The list of songs are selected very carefully and those who have done this work deserve great credit for their painstaking efforts.

The kindergarten march out to music into a separate room—we were fortunate in being able to give up the whole basement of the church for this department. We had between forty and fifty in this department every day and their work and exercises were most interesting.

The salute to the flag is as follows: A boy or girl is chosen to bear the flag, and he takes the same and marches to the rear of the room, when, at the striking of two chords on the piano, the school rises and the bearer walks to music, to the front of the room, and at the striking of one chord, he sets the flag upon the floor; then, at the striking of the next chord, he raises the flag, and instantly all hands are put in position for salute; then, with hands extending toward the flag, all say, "I pledge allegiance to the flag and to the republic for which it stands: one nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." This is followed by the singing of "America" and then all bow heads and repeat the children's benediction: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God." After this all march out to music, led by the flag.

It might be well here to supply a list of the subjects suggested for the two-minute habit talks each morning. One need not follow this list precisely if they have something better in their own mind, but the parents will be grateful when the children go home and tell them that they were taught such things as are suggested here.

Personal habits: Clean hands; clean faces; clean mouths (good language); clean hearts (good thoughts).

Table habits: Thank God before eating—suggest a short form for "Grace"; say "please" and "thank you"; serve others before yourself; eat slowly and quietly.

In the street: Avoid bad companions and gangs; do not injure property of others; filching fruit from a stand is evil; be kind to dumb animals; never laugh at deformed people; never enter a saloon; never gamble, or use dice; be a peacemaker; avoid five cent shows; dime novels a waste of time and money; the nearest public library—name a few good books for the young; when mother calls do not tarry.

In games: Cheating is contemptible; quarreling is childish; swearing is weak-minded and wicked; when you win, praise your opponents; betting, even a cent, spoils the game.

In general: Lying is cowardly; foul language is degrading; gossiping is hurtful; envy is like poison; commencement—"A merry heart doeth good like a medicine."

We also herewith give a list of the subjects of the Bible stories which were used this season. Some of them, such as the Good Samaritan, and the Ten Virgins, we dramatized by having children act out the characters; this proved to be very interesting.

We also used a sand table which we improvised by putting down three pieces of two by four's, and nailing them together; we put the sand in the inclosure. We could draw rude sketches on the sand and thus convey the idea in mind, to the children and rivet their attention.

Story of the creation, Genesis 1; of Eden, Genesis 3; of Cain and Abel, Genesis 4; of the flood, Genesis 6, 7; of Abram's migration, Genesis 12; of Abram and Lot, Genesis 13; of Lot's rescue, Genesis 14; of Rebekah at the well, Genesis 24; of Jacob's deception, Genesis 27; of Jacob's flight and dream, Genesis 28; of Joseph's boyhood dreams, Genesis 37; of Joseph's betrayal, Genesis 37; of Joseph's good service, Genesis 39, 1-6; of Joseph in prison, Genesis 40; of Joseph's rise to power, Genesis 41; of Joseph and his brothers, Genesis 42-45.

Peace day and review, Matthew 5: 1-9; story of Moses' choice, Exodus 2, Hebrews 11; of a desert caravan, Exodus 15-20; of David and Goliath, 1 Samuel 16-17; of David and Jonathan, 1 Samuel 20; of Jesus in the temple, Luke 2; of Jesus' temptation, Matthew 4; of the disciples' call, Mark 1, John 1; of the sower, Matthew 13; of the ten virgins, Matthew 25; of the lost sheep and lost coin, Luke 15; of the lost son, Luke 15; of the good Samaritan, Luke 10. Commencement day—review story.

From the above it will be seen that in thus arranging this list of subjects, an effort has been made to cover in a brief manner the scope of the best thought contained in the Bible. From five to ten minutes is occupied in telling the story and it is beneficial to those who tell as well as to those who hear it. In fact it is wonderful what a good feeling develops between the teachers and the children. Here is clearly proven the statement of Paul, as revised, "Love never faileth." Love bestowed upon little children can not be in vain. As a result of our school we are greeted pleasantly everywhere, we go by happy little faces in the vicinity of the church. Many of the parents of the children came to us personally, and warmly thanked us for what we had done for their children, and in this way friendships have been established, which may ripen into gospel fruitage in time, and which we doubt could have been made otherwise.

One lady who had a son and daughter in the school came to visit us and said that she had done some work of this kind, and offered to teach for us next year should we desire her services. Our school was conducted strictly on the plan of voluntary contributions and voluntary service; no one was paid for their work. In this respect our school was unique, as all the other schools had to pay their teachers six dollars a week, or more, and the principals one hundred dollars for the term. When I told the association officers about this, they exclaimed, "How do you do it?" I think of all professed Christian people in the world, our people manifest as great or greater desire to render service and do something for their fellow-men than any others. Instead of charging the children a definite sum for the material used in the articles which they made, we told them to bring an offering and we would put it all together, and when it was counted we were surprised to find that it exceeded what we had expected to receive. As we tried to be liberal with the children we found it had the effect of making them be liberal with us.

Captain George Potts collected more than fifty dollars from his friends, for this work, and Bro. Charles Harris collected sufficient to hire transportation to the beach, for the school, where we treated them to ice cream and cake. We treated the children at other times with ice cream, and very frequently the kindergarten was served with crackers and cold milk. We know that this was appreciated by the children and also by the parents.
