FRANK J. CANNON ON THE WOODRUFF MANIFESTO.

At a meeting of the true Saints held on the evening of January 9, 1853, the following declaration was made:

Polygamy is an abomination in the sight of the Lord God; it is not of me; I abhor it. . . . Be ye strong; ye shall contend against this doctrine.

This purported to be the utterance of the Spirit.

A little less than six months before that date; to be exact, August 29, 1852, a large, sensual-faced embodiment of ability and ruthless brute force, in publicly announcing this doctrine for the first time, said:

I tell you—for I know it—it will sail over and ride triumphantly above all the prejudice and priestcraft of the day; it will be fostered and believed in by the more intelligent portions of the world, as one of the best doctrines ever proclaimed to any people.

He is also reported to have said that he would "crum" polygamy down the throats of the people.

Yet despite this confident boast, the followers of Brigham Young in less than forty years found themselves welcoming a Manifesto which declared that polygamy should cease. This change of front came as the result of severe measures adopted by Congress, and after considerable of their church property had been confiscated, and many hundreds of their ministers sentenced to the penitentiary for unlawful cohabitation. It came, too, as the price of statehood. The people were determined that Utah should never be admitted as a State until the dominant ecclesiastical organization had abandoned polygamy.

The Manifesto came as a revelation, but not, apparently, until leading church authorities had made it quite unmistakably clear to President Woodruff that such a step must be taken in order to avoid pending disenfranchisement of all Mormons, and to pave the way for statehood.

After statehood had been granted, people suddenly awakened to the fact that there was a life-sized Ethiopian in the wood pile somewhere. Mormon leaders calmly proceeded on the assumption that the Manifesto of 1900 merely prohibited new plural alliances, and in no way interfered with polygamous marriages contracted prior to the Manifesto; and to-day there are a great many Mormon polygamous children not yet twenty years of age, who have come onto the stage of action, as they sometimes sing out there, "In spite of the Manifesto."

In view of that fact it is interesting to learn just how these men interpreted the Manifesto when it was given, and just how they expected others to interpret it. Frank J. Cannon, writing in Everybody's Magazine for January, 1911, throws some light on that subject. It will be remembered that Frank J. Cannon is a son of George Q. Cannon, who at that time was First Counselor, and that as representative of the Mormon people in Washington in an effort to divert Federal prosecution, he is able to speak from personal knowledge. Of a meeting with President Woodruff Mr. Cannon writes:

I told him, in detail, of the events in Washington, and of the men who had helped us in them. I warned him that the passage of the measure of disfranchisement had been no more than retarded. I pointed out the fatal consequences for the community if the bill should ever become law—the fatal consequences for the leaders of the church if the non-polygamous Mormons, deprived of their votes, were ever left unable to control the administration of local government. I repeated the promise that my father had authorized me to carry to the senators and congressmen who still had the Cullom-Struble bill in hand; and I emphasized the fact that because of this promise the bill had been held back—with the certainty that it would never become law if we met the Nation half way.

I was watching him to see if he sensed the point I wished him to get. When I touched the matter of my father's promise, his face became softly reverent; and when I had done—looking at me without a trace of cunning in his benignity, with an expression, rather, of exalted innocence and faith—he said: "Brother Frank, I have been making it a matter of prayer. I have wrestled mightily with the Lord. And I think I see some light."

In order that there might be no misunderstanding, I put into plainer words what I meant and what the prominent men in Washington had been led to look for: since, by a "revelation" of the church, we were ordered to give obedience to the government of the Nation, and since we had exhausted all our legal defenses, it was hoped that the prophet, seer, and revelator of the church would find a way, under the guidance of God, to bring our people into conformity with the law.

As he accepted this calmly, I added: "To be very plain with you, President Woodruff, our friends expect, and the country will insist, that the church shall yield the practice of plural marriage."

His eyelids quivered a little, but he showed no other sign of flinching. I saw that the counsels of his advisers and the comfort that he had derived from his prayers had prepared him for an immolation that was more serious to him than any personal sacrifice that he could make. He said sadly: "I had hoped we wouldn't have to meet this trouble this way. You know what it means to our people. I had hoped that the Lord might open the minds of the people of this Nation to the truth, so that they might be converted to the everlasting covenant. Our prophets have suffered like those of old, and I thought that the persecutions of Zion were enough—that they would bring some other reward than this." If I had been the bearer of a new edict of proscription, I think he could not have been more profoundly oppressed by the sense of his responsibility. "Did your father tell you," he asked, "that I had been seeking the mind of the Lord?"

I replied that he had.

He reflected silently. "I shall talk with you again about it," he said, at last. "I hope the Lord will make the way plain." . . .

At a later date Mr. Cannon, at the request of his father, again called upon Mr. Woodruff, heard the Manifesto read, and was present when it was presented to the authorities of the church. Of that he writes:

At length he sent me word, in Ogden, that President Woodruff wished to confer with me, and he suggested that it would be permissible for me to speak my opinions freely. I hastened to Salt Lake City, to the offices of the presidency. President Woodruff took me into a private room and read me his "Manifesto."

It was the same that was issued on September 24, 1890, and ratified by a general conference of the Mormon church on October 6, following. It was the proclamation that freed the oppressed of Utah; for, by the subsequent "covenant"—and its acceptance by the Federal Government—the Nation did but confirm their freedom and accord them their constitutional rights. Here, shaking in the hand of age, was a sheet of paper by which the future of a half million people was to be directed; and that simple old man was to speak through it, to them, with the awful authority of the voice of God.

He told me he had written it himself, and it certainly appeared to me to be in his handwriting. Its authorship has since been variously attributed. Some of the present day polygamists say that it was I who wrote it. Charles W. Penrose and George Reynolds have claimed that they edited it. I presume that as Mormons, "in good standing," believing in the inspiration of the prophet, they appreciate the blasphemy of their claim!

I found it disappointingly mild. It denied that the church had been solemnizing any plural marriages of late, and advised the faithful "to refrain from contracting any marriages forbidden by the law of the land." In spite of this mildness, President Woodruff asked me whether I thought the Mormons would accept the revelation.

I replied that there could be no proper anxiety on that point. The majority of the Mormon people were ready for such a message. It might be very much stronger without arousing resistance. With the exception of the comparatively few men and women who were living in polygamy, the community would accept it gratefully. Rather, I made bold to say, my anxiety was as to whether the nation would believe that such an equivocally worded document meant an absolute recession from the practice of plural marriage.

It was plain that his advisers had not pointed out this danger to him. He asked me how I thought the Nation would take it. I asked him point-blank, whether it meant an absolute recession from polygamy.

He answered that it did.

Then, I said, with such an interpretation of it, and a formal and public acceptance of it by the church authorities, I did not doubt that we could convince the Nation of its sufficiency. I reminded him—as I am now glad to remember—that the word of the Mormon people had passed current in the political and commercial circles of the country; that I had several times been the bearer of messages from them to prominent men; that we had been taken on faith and the faith had been always vindicated. Finally, in order that I might carry away no misapprehension, nor convey any, I asked him if it was the intention of the Manifesto to inhibit any further plural marriage living.

He answered, quaintly: "Why, of course, Frank—because that's what they've been persecuting us for." There was not even a shrewdness in his voice, when he added: "You know they didn't get our brethren in prison for polygamy, but for living with their plural wives."

Perhaps no other man in Utah could have said such a thing without sarcasm. The fact was that the United States authorities had been practically unable to prove a case of polygamy (which was a felony) because the marriage records were concealed by the church; but they could prove plural marriage living (a mere misdemeanor by repute and circumstance.) It was part of President Woodruff's unworldliness that he did not see the satire of his words; and I was the more convinced of his good faith.

I was convinced also, by several of his remarks, that he had consulted with the church's attorney, Mr. Franklin S. Richards; and while I trusted the president's unworldly faith, I trusted more the sagacity of his more worldly advisers. I began to see, with a sure hope, the beginning of the end of all our miseries.

Some days later I was summoned to attend a meeting of the church authorities in the president's offices; and I knew that the test had come. The church was governed by the presidency, composed of President Woodruff and his two councilors, with the quorum of the twelve apostles, the presidents of the seventies, and the presiding bishopric, composed of three members. These quorums aggregate twenty-five men; and to their number may be added the chief patriarch of the church, making a body of twenty-six general authorities—the hierarchy. It was from these latter men, polygamists and (I feared) parochial in their ignorance of the Nation and their trust in the protection of their followers—it was from them (and the other practitioners of polygamy) that any opposition would come to the acceptance and publication of the Manifesto.

They met—something less than a score of them, with two or three of their most trusted advisers—in one of the general offices of the presidency, sitting in leather chairs along its walls, with a sort of central skylight illuminating subduedly the anxiety of their silent faces. President Woodruff and his two councilors entered to them; and this insignificant-looking apartment—of such tremendous community significance, because of the memories of its past—seemed to take on the gravity of another momentous crisis in the destiny of its people. The portraits in oil of the dead presidents, martyrs, and prophets of the church looked down on us from the facade of a little gallery, and caught my eyes almost hypnotically with the imperturbability of their gaze. No word from them! In the midst of the broken utterance of emotion—when the tears were wet on faces to whose manliness tears were the very sweat of martyrdom—I saw those immovable countenances as placid as the features of the dead.

President Woodruff stood under them, so old and other-worldly that he seemed already of their circle rather than ours; and he spoke in a voice of feeling for us, but with a simple and courageous finality that sounded the very note of fate. He had called the brethren together, he said, to submit a decision to their consideration, and he desired from them an expression of their willingness to accept and abide by it. He knew what a trial it would be to the "whole household of Israel." "We have sought," he said, "to live our religion—to harm no one—to perform our mission in this world for the salvation of the living and the dead. We have obeyed the principle of celestial marriage because it came to us from God. We have suffered under the rage of the wicked; we were driven from our homes into the desert; our prophets have been slain, our holy ones persecuted—and it did seem to me that we were entitled to the constitutional protection of the courts in the practice of our religion."

But the courts had decided "against us." The great men of the Nation were determined to show us no mercy. Legislation was impending that would put us "in the power of the wicked." Bro. George Q. Cannon, Bro. John T. Caine, and the other brethren who had been in Washington had found that the situation of the church was critical. Bro. Franklin S. Richards had advised him that our last legal defense had fallen. "In broken and contrite spirit" he had sought the will of the Lord, and the Holy Spirit had revealed to him that it was necessary for the church to relinquish the practice of that principle for which the brethren had been willing to lay down their lives.

A sort of ghastly stillness accepted what he said as a confirmation of the worst fears of the men who had evidently come there with some knowledge of what they were to hear. I glanced at the faces of those opposite me. A set and staring pallor held them motionless. I was conscious of a chill of heart that seemed communicated to me from them. My brother Abraham was sitting beside me; I knew his deep affection for his family; I knew with what a clutch of misery this edict of separation was crushing his hope; I felt myself growing as pale and tense as he.

The silence was broken by President Woodruff asking one of the brethren to read the Manifesto. When it was concluded, he said: "The matter is now before you. I want you to speak as the Spirit moves you."

There was no reply, except a sort of general gasp of low-voiced interjections and a little buzz of whisperings that sounded like emotion taking its breath. He called on my father to speak. The first councilor rose to make a statesmanlike review of the crisis; and I understood that with his usual diplomacy he was putting aside from him the authority of leadership until he could see whether an opposition was to develop that should make it necessary for him to front it.

That opposition made a rustle of stirring in the pause that followed. I saw it in the changed expressions of some of the faces. Several of the men—including my brother Abraham and Joseph F. Smith—asked whether the Manifesto meant a cessation of plural marriages: whether no more such marriages were to be allowed.

President Woodruff answered that it did; that the Lord had taken back the principle from the children of men and that we would have no power to restore it.

Then they asked whether it meant a cessation of plural marriage living—whether they would be required to separate from the wives whom they had taken in the holy covenant.

He answered, firmly, that it did; that the brethren in Washington found it imperative; that it was the will of the Lord.

If the statements above quoted are true, and we know of no reason to doubt them, they show the strict interpretation placed upon the Manifesto at the time of its adoption. The subsequent deviation from that position could not have been made in good faith.

IRA C. MOORE ON SPIRIT TESTIMONY.

"The president of the Reorganized Mormon church finds himself and his church in trouble as a consequence of their position concerning the operation and testimony of the Holy Spirit. He relates in a late issue of the SAINTS' HERALD, of which he is editor that 'not long ago an elder of the Utah Mormon church stood before us in private conversation and bore testimony "that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God; and that Brigham Young was his legal successor." ' When we consider their teaching concerning how the Spirit bears witness with their spirits, we wonder how the poor soul is going to repudiate such testimony and yet substantiate his own claim that the Holy Spirit bears witness through him. Their theory of this is that the Spirit comes to them, and, in some special way, bears witness to their spirits that they are the right church and are the children of God, and that the Spirit in doing this creates certain kinds of peculiar feelings in their breast in the region of the physical heart.

"I can and do believe the Utah Mormon just as honest in his pretensions to have the Holy Spirit as the Reorganized Mormon is. If I accept the claims of one to have the Holy Spirit as a witness, I can believe the other; if I reject the one I must reject the other, for both stand upon the same footing or fall by the same stroke. Since he rejects the testimony of this young elder of the Utah church, how is he going to establish his own claim by the same kind of evidence in his breast that the Holy Spirit spake through him? He does not do it in his defense against the young elder. And if he will not accept that kind of evidence from the Utah Mormons, how can he expect his opposers to accept the testimony of his feelings on that or any other proposition? The Utahs believe the Spirit testifies through them that the Reorganized Mormons are an apostate church, and the Reorganized believe the Spirit bears testimony to and through them that the Utah Mormons are an apostate church—a people "having eyes full of adultery"—and each believes the other to be on the road to hell.

"As to whether the Spirit does thus bear testimony through them to such things is a proposition susceptible of being determined by the sacred Scriptures; but so far as the testimony of each against the other is concerned, I have no reason to doubt the word of either. I believe they both tell the truth on that! I am even willing to affirm that the Holy Spirit not only does not testify through their physical frame of any other way that either of them is the church of Christ, but that he testifies to the contrary in what he said when on the witness stand. The question of the influence of the Holy Spirit can be simplified in this way: Read the New Testament—the gospel, and whatever you find required of you by that, rest assured that that is just what the Holy Spirit wants you to do. If you find the gospel demands of you that you believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, that is just what the Holy Spirit wants you to believe. If you find the gospel requires you to repent of your sins, that is just what the Holy Spirit wants and insists that you do. If the gospel requires you to confess your faith in Jesus as the Son of God, and to be baptized for the remission of your sins, you can rest assured that that is just what the Holy Spirit wants you to do to be saved. The Holy Spirit and Jesus are not rivals in the work of saving sinners, but they are partners in that great work. The Spirit is not going to come around and try to make you believe you do not need to obey the commands found in the gospel. A spirit that does so is not the Spirit of Christ, is not the Holy Spirit. The Spirit sets forth one church in the New Testament or gospel, and the terms of admission into it, and that is neither the 'Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints,' nor 'The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints,' nor is it any other one known by or recognizing a name not known or given in the Scriptures. 'Beloved, believe not every spirit, but prove the spirits, whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the world.' 'We are of God,' says the Apostle John, 'he that knoweth God heareth us; he who is not of God heareth us (the apostles) not. By this we know the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error' (1 John 4: 1, 6)."

The foregoing from the Christian Leader and the Way, December 6, 1910, written by one of the editors, Ira C. Moore, contains some very fallacious reasoning. The fact that the Utah elders claim to receive a testimony that conflicts with the testimony that we receive involves us in no dilemma. The fact that many different people claim to receive the Holy Spirit and that their testimonies conflict is no proof that no one can receive the Holy Spirit to-day.

Elder Moore may argue that the Holy Spirit is not given to-day as a guide in all important matters, if he so desires, but his argument will have little force, because it will be in conflict with the written word to which he swears allegiance. It is written: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine."—John 17: 17.

How shall he know? Here is one way: "Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth."—John 16: 13.

Is that promise still in force? "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord your God shall call."—Acts 3: 38, 39.

Then the Spirit does actually guide into all truth and testify to the hearts of men concerning doctrine. Thus far we are safe.

But suppose two individuals claim to have the Holy Spirit and their testimony is in conflict, is there a dilemma? Not at all. Mr. Moore has kindly suggested the way out, though it has long been known to us, wherein he cites us to the scriptural injunction, "Believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God."

How shall we try the Spirits? By the old time rule: "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isaiah 8: 20.

To apply the test in the present case. When the Utah elders testify that Brigham Young was a prophet of God we know that they did not get that testimony from the Holy Spirit because Brigham Young did not speak according to the law and the testimony, and those who now bear such testimony do not teach in harmony with the law. On similar grounds we would reject Mr. Moore himself. On the other hand, so far as we have been able to discover, the elders of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints (a scriptural name, see 1 Corinthians 1: 2; Psalm 30: 4; Deuteronomy 33: 3; Acts 9: 13; Romans 8: 27; Ephesians 1: 1), including Pres. Joseph Smith himself, do teach in harmony with the law and the testimony; they have the doctrine; they are in possession of truth; and we believe that they have the associate of the testimony and the doctrine and the law; namely, the Holy Spirit.

It is Mr. Moore who is in a dilemma. He does not have the Spirit and is not in harmony with the written word. He simply has a "form of godliness," the power of which he is industriously denying.

THE SAINTS' HERALD DOCTRINAL SERIES.

I. THE CHARACTER OF GOD: HIS FORM AND ATTRIBUTES.

BY JOSEPH R. LAMBERT.

A correct conception of the character of God is the basis of all correct theology and all true religion. Latter Day Saints believe in an unchangeable God, who has power to execute immutable plans. Consequently they look for the full fruition in latter days of all the works of God set in motion in former days; and they endeavor to square their religious beliefs by the divine laws enunciated in the olden times. Closely allied with the subject treated in this paper is that of the character and sonship of Christ, which subject will be taken up by Elder J. C. Crabb in the next number of the Doctrinal Series.—ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

The importance of this subject can hardly be overestimated. An intelligent belief in the living and true God—the God of the Bible—lies at the very foundation of all true religion. He is our highest ideal of belief, and practice; hence our faith in him determines the character of the doctrine we choose to accept and teach, as well as the deeds of our lives. If it does less than this, it is because of the weakness and incompleteness of our faith, or the lack of sincerity. It is well for us to remember that while the gospel is God's plan, it is only "the power of God unto salvation to every man that believeth." (Romans 1: 16.)

Two things, at least, are important: First, that we believe in the true God, for he is the only one who has a true and perfect character. Second, that our faith in him be sincere and the result of an intelligent and true conception of his character.

If sincere and intelligent, we may rise or sink to the level of our highest ideal; but, in the very nature of the case, we can never rise above or pass beyond it. Therefore the importance of having correct ideals; or to put it in another form, the importance of a true and intelligent belief in the living and true God.

But without faith it is impossible to please him [God]; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.—Hebrews 11: 6.

We can not believe that God is, without some adequate conception of his true character; nor can we believe that "he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him," without some understanding of his love and power; that is, his willingness and ability to perform.

But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in Spirit and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship him.—John 4: 23.

We can not serve God acceptably, unless we love him with the whole heart and soul; and we can not so love him, unless we see in him, as God, that which is lovable. Notice: we are required to worship God "in truth," as well as "in spirit."

DEFINITION.

By the term God, we mean the living, personal Being of intelligence and power, presented to us in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants. We mean the Creator of all things in the heavens above and the earth beneath.

According to Young, in his Analytical Concordance, one of the Hebrew and one of the Greek words from which we get the word God, literally mean "an object of worship." This suggests that God stands at the head, and that in his character is to be found that which properly demands the exercise of that worshipful nature which seems to have been implanted in man by the Creator.

The readers of the HERALD ought to be prepared to accept any authoritative definition found in any one or more of the three standard books of the church. When Jesus addressed the Nephites on this continent (America), he said: "For the Father, and I, and the Holy Ghost, are one." (Book of Mormon, Nephi 5: 38. Authorized edition.)

In Doctrine and Covenants 17: 5, we find these words: "which Father, Son and Holy Ghost are one God, infinite and eternal, without end."

In view of these texts, and the general teaching of the three books on the Godhead, we shall feel at perfect liberty to apply our subject to Jesus Christ as well as the Father, for he is divine, the second person in the Godhead, and he and the Father are one in character, purpose, etc. The Holy Ghost is a mysterious agent sent forth by God and Christ to testify of them, which, like electricity, is "known only by its effects." It may be a person, as many claim it to be, but the writer has never yet seen the proof to convince him of the correctness of this claim. It is called the "Holy Ghost," the "Holy Spirit," the "Spirit of Christ," the "Spirit of truth," the "Comforter," "the gift of the Holy Ghost," and "the promise of the Father"; but never, by itself, so far as we know, is it called God, in any of the sacred books of the church, as is the case both with the Father and the Son. But as we do not wish to occupy the ground which has been assigned to others, more than is necessary, because of the intimate and almost inseparable connection, it is perhaps enough to say that Christ, because of his creative and redemptive work, under the Father, is called God in all the sacred books of the church. He is also called "The everlasting Father" (Isaiah 9: 6), and "The Eternal God" (Book of Mormon).

Jesus said:

He that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, Show us the Father? Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me?—John 14: 9, 10.

From the foregoing we rightly conclude that whatever the character of the Christ was, and is, that is the true character of the Father. This position, which is evidently correct, gives us the advantage of not only an unequaled and inimitable description of God's character by the Christ himself, but a wonderful object lesson in the character of his work while dwelling in mortality. Truly, as the apostle says when speaking of Christ, "God was manifest in the flesh." (1 Timothy 3:16.)

STANDARDS AND REPRESENTATIVES.

These articles are published in the SAINTS' HERALD for the benefit of the church it represents, and for all others who are willing, and wise enough to investigate the character of our work. Therefore, the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants constitute the authoritative text-books and final standards of appeal.

"But when we consider the claims of the agnostic and skeptic, are we safe in permitting these books to settle the great and important question of the character of God?"

Yes, we think so, but we must be prepared to understand what they say, as books, that we may know just how far we are bound by the statements made and how far we are not. Permit us to illustrate.

The Bible and Book of Mormon are sacred volumes, because they deal with and teach sacred things. They are books of history, prophecy, and doctrine. As histories, they reveal or record the evil as well as the righteous, the bad as well as the good, the imperfect as well as the perfect. They tell of peoples who were inspired of God in exact proportion to the character of the work they were called to do, their faith in him, and their diligence in keeping his commandments. There are, therefore, degrees of inspiration.

Let us briefly glance at the personnel of these wonderful records. We have God; his Son, Jesus Christ; the angels of God; the authorized ministers and servants of God and Christ, speaking to us. In addition to these, unauthorized, and perhaps uninspired men speak freely to us of the things of God. On the other hand, we have the Devil, his angels, or demons, and wicked men, who talk to us on the great questions of God's character, our duty to God and each other, the future life, etc. Thus we see that not all that is written in these sacred books is the word of God. We must learn to discriminate.

Our position, therefore, is this: God is the only one who has been or ever will be (this side of the day of perfection) able to properly and completely represent himself. Therefore, we accept Jesus Christ as the only infallible teacher and representative of God. That is, should any conflict arise between the teachings of God's authorized ministers and the teachings of Christ, "the messenger of the covenant," we are bound, always and everywhere to decide in favor of Christ. Why? Because all men, including kings and queens, apostles and prophets, and even the pope of Rome, are fallible.

As to wicked men and devils, and those who have never been properly authorized to act as God's ministers, when they tell the truth we should believe it because it is the truth, but we are in no sense required to receive them as representatives of God. Much more might be said on this point, but it will occur to the thoughtful, that in the way we have briefly indicated, we may properly dispose of, or apply, as the case may be, everything that is said in these books, historically or doctrinally, concerning the character of God, and every seeming or real reflection on his character.

HAS GOD FORM?

He surely has a body of his own, which is immortal and glorious (1 Timothy 6:15, 16, I. T.; Philippians 3:20, 21; Isaiah 6:1-3).

In two of these texts, it is the risen, immortal body of Jesus Christ that is referred to, and we claim that the Father is possessed of the same kind of a body. Jesus said, in answer to the request of Philip, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, Show us the Father?" (John 14:9).

We are told that when we make this apply to physical form, we thereby degrade the text. We neither degrade nor limit the text from its obvious meaning; but we extend the scope of its meaning beyond what is usually ascribed to it, by making it include the physical body as well as the moral and spiritual character of the Lord Jesus. That we are right in this is evident, we think, from the general tenor of scripture on this point.

And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness. . . . God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him.—Genesis 1:26, 27.

Notice the pronouns us and our. To whom do they apply besides God, the Father? The Inspired Translation reads thus in verse 27:

And I, God, said unto mine only Begotten, which was with me from the beginning, Let us make man in our own image, after our likeness, and it was so.

This agrees with the statement of John where he speaks of Christ under the title of the "Word."

In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him, and without him was not any thing made that was made.—John 1:1-3.

Doctrine and Covenants, section 90, is in harmony with this verse, and throws a flood of light upon it. Let us notice some additional statements concerning the image and form of God. "Who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature."—Colossians 1: 15.

This image has form, which is the form of the Son and the Father. "Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God."—Philippians 2: 6.

The material point is that the image and form of Christ is the image and form of the Father. Christ came into this world with a body and "was made in the likeness of men." God thought enough of this body to raise it from the dead, immortalize and glorify it. This body ascended up into heaven, to sit on the right hand of God; and when Jesus comes again at the end of the world, in glory and power, he will bring this body with him. Therefore God has a material body, in the form of man. (Acts 1: 9-11; Zechariah 13: 6.)

Then shall the Jews look upon me and say, What are these wounds in thy hands, and in thy feet? Then shall they know that I am the Lord; for I will say unto them, These wounds are the wounds with which I was wounded in the house of my friends. I am he who was lifted up. I am Jesus that was crucified. I am the Son of God. And then shall they weep because of their iniquities; then shall they lament because they persecuted their King.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 9.

Only one objection to our position on this point needs to be noticed. It is this: "Inasmuch as God is declared to be 'invisible,' the words image, form, and likeness can not apply to a material body."

This objection is based on the supposition that God is absolutely invisible. That is, that he never has been and never can be seen! If we take this position, we get into serious trouble at once, for the legitimate deduction is that God never has been and never will be seen; yet, according to Bible history, he has been seen, and according to Bible promise he will be seen.

And the Lord spoke unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend.—Exodus 33: 11.

With him will I speak mouth to mouth, even apparently, and not in dark speeches, and the similitude of the Lord shall he behold.—Numbers 12: 8.

"Similitude," means resemblance, likeness, etc. See Deuteronomy 4: 12.

The promises of Christ, that "the pure in heart" "shall see God" (Matthew 5: 8), and of the Apostle John, that "we shall be like him for we shall see him as he is," evidently mean much more than simply viewing the physical body with physical eyes, but they necessarily include this.

Christ is "the express image" of his Father (Hebrews 1: 3), and he was made in the "form" and "likeness" of man. God and Christ made man in their own image. What is the conclusion?

God was not degraded in any wise by giving to man his own image, but man was highly exalted. Even the very attributes which enter into the character of God were given to man, with their limitations, and notwithstanding the loss incurred through transgression, provision is made in the gospel plan for the unlimited development of these attributes, till we shall be able to see clearly, "face to face," "for we shall see him as he is," and know as we are known by the infinite One. (1 Corinthians 13: 9-13; 1 John 3: 2.)

ATTRIBUTES CONSIDERED.

We are now prepared to introduce and briefly consider some of the leading attributes which enter into the matchless character of God. As we approach this part of our subject, we are deeply impressed with its significance and importance. For even from an imperfect and brief sketch of the attributes which unmistakably reveal the true character of the living and true God, we are led to marvel "with great admiration." In fact, a careful study of God's character, and his dealings with his people, in ancient and modern times, as given in the Bible and Book of Mormon, and the revelations and history of the latter day work, clearly reveal to us the grand facts, that right is the greatest might, and love is the greatest power. We also learn that he who would endure and enjoy the bliss of heaven, and do a work for God that will stand

"When the moon is old,
And the stars are cold,
And the books of the judgment day unfold," must be pure, or in other words, in harmony with God.

The highest standard of appeal for all Bible believers; the surest safeguard against error, in every form; the strongest incentive to an intelligent belief in and acceptance of the truth, as it stands revealed to us in the Book of books, is the character of God, as that character has been revealed to us in the Scriptures. That which is in harmony with God is true; that which is in conflict with him is false. When we properly accept that which is of God, it leads us nearer to him; when we accept for truth that which is not of God, it leads us farther away from his divine presence.

The leading attributes of God's character are love, power, knowledge, mercy, justice, truth, impartiality, and unchangeableness. As God possesses all these attributes in perfection, both as to quality and completeness, he is, therefore, infinite, omnipotent (having all power) and omniscient (having all knowledge) in character. That which is of God will be found to be in harmony with the attributes named; that which is not of him, and therefore untrue, will be found to be in conflict with one or more of them.

Let us notice these attributes separately, though briefly.

LOVE.—We may safely say that this is the grandest and most potent principle known to man, and it is our opinion that none greater is known to God. Well might the able and inspired apostle say: "And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity."—1 Corinthians 13: 13.

What is here and elsewhere translated charity is, in many other places, translated love, coming from the same Greek word. A better translation than love can not be found.

What single principle has performed so important a part in improving moral and spiritual conditions in the world as love? What principle has done or can do as much in changing the carnal, molding and developing true character, which alone can qualify us to dwell with God, as love? Whenever a dispensation of the gospel has been given to man, in former or latter days, love has been emphasized and given the most prominent place in the divine plan.

"Love is of God," says the Apostle John, thus locating its origin. He also says, "God is love," thus setting forth the true character of God in a sentence of three words. (1 John 4: 7, 8). "And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him." (Verse 16.)

"God is love." That is, love permeates his whole being. All his acts of justice and power and wisdom, as well as mercy, are simply expressions of love. The granting of rewards and the administration of punishment are nothing less than the expressions of love by the divine Being. It can not be otherwise, for "God is love."

The gospel plan is the best exhibition of God's love, wisdom, and power, known to us; and we may easily learn, if we will, that love, true love, is not infatuation nor favoritism.

For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved.—John 3: 16, 17.

In this wondrous plan of love and power, provision is made for all the sons and daughters of men; but, reasonably and necessarily, their cooperation with God is required. "The gospel of Christ," said Paul, "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

We are sometimes told that God does not possess infinite love and power; for if he does, he will save the vilest sinners as well as the righteous. Not so; that is, not necessarily and unconditionally. God is infinite in wisdom, as well as in love and power; and it is according to his infinite wisdom that man's cooperation is required. He must believe, repent, and obey the truth. There must not, there can not be any conflict between any of the attributes of God's character, else he would cease to be God.

This is not because God is finite and imperfect, but because the law of absolute necessities (which law is divine) requires it. Man can not be saved without his faith and obedience, and this position is as reasonable as it is scriptural. God displays his infiniteness and omnipotence along the lines of truth, always, for he is the God of truth and always acts in harmony with himself.

For further evidence on the character and extent of God's love and goodness, the reader is referred to the parable of the prodigal son (Luke 15: 11-32); and the teachings of Christ elsewhere recorded (Matthew 7: 7-11), all of which show how willing and able God is to give good things to all who place themselves in a position to receive them. He is more willing than is the good earthly father to give bread and meat to his hungry son who asks for them. How encouraging to all who desire to come to God, to know that he loves them with a perfect and undying love.

POWER.—It is not enough that God should possess the desire or disposition to bless and save to the uttermost. We need to believe and know that he has the ability to perform, according to the provisions and promises of his word. Hence God's power must be associated with his love. "With God," said the great Teacher, "all things are possible." (Matthew 19: 26.)

All that God has undertaken to do, all that he has provided and promised in his word, as revealed to man, he is abundantly able to perform. Therefore we can come to him without doubt or fear.

"How firm a foundation ye Saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in his excellent word;
What more can he say than to you he hath said,
You, who unto Jesus for refuge have fled!"

God's majesty and power may be discerned largely from his works.

The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handy work. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge.—Psalm 19: 1, 2.

For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead, so that they are without excuse.—Romans 1: 19, 20.

These scriptures speak for themselves, and they speak plainly and grandly. And do you know, dear reader, that he who turns away from the Bible account of the creation, turns his back on the light? If you don't believe it, account for this material world in which we live, and other worlds, the best way you can; then, from a scientific view point, compare your theory with the account given in the first chapters of the book of Genesis, and note the result.

The earth rolls upon her wings; and the sun giveth his light by day, and the moon giveth her light by night; and they roll upon their wings, in their glory, in the midst of the power of God. Unto what shall I liken these kingdoms, that ye may understand? Behold, all these are kingdoms, and any man who hath seen any or the least of these, hath seen God moving in his majesty and power. I say unto you, he hath seen him: nevertheless, he who came unto his own was not comprehended. The light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not; nevertheless, the day shall come when you shall comprehend even God; being quickened in him, and by him.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 12.

King David "blessed the Lord" in earnest prayer, "before all the congregation" of Israel, and these are some of the words he spoke:

Thine, O Lord, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty; for all that is in the heaven and the earth is thine; thine is the kingdom, O Lord, and thou art exalted as head over all.—1 Chronicles 29: 11.

For the want of space, we must close on the attribute of power, with the words of "the four and twenty elders," after they had fallen down before the throne of God.

Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honor and power, for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created.—Revelation 4: 11.

KNOWLEDGE.—Love and power are such comprehensive attributes that we need not use so much space in dealing with those which follow. Love necessarily carries with it and necessitates the use of mercy, justice, truth, and impartiality. It is the desire and determination to save and bless, with all that these terms imply, while power denotes the ability to perform, or carry into effect.

Knowledge, therefore, is the means which enables God to exercise his divine power in the accomplishment of results. "Knowledge is power," it is said, and it is power for good always when rightly applied. (We use this term in its comprehensive sense; that is, to include wisdom, which is the right use of knowledge.)

The man who can invent and make a watch, understands its purpose and use. The same is true of the man who is, or was, able to invent and make a phonograph. God made the worlds and all things that in them are. It is too much to believe that he knows how to manage all the workmanship of his own hands, so as to produce, in the end, the greatest and best results that can possibly be secured in harmony with the absolute necessities hereinbefore referred to? We think not. He understands his own work completely. James was right: "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world."—Acts 15: 18.

Others may try to account for some peculiar, and it may be puzzling, conditions, which sometimes obtain, by presuming that there are certain things which God does not know; but you will please excuse us from any effort to get out on this road. "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world." It is necessary that he should know them, and it is necessary that we should believe and know that he knows them. It is an essential in the great foundation of all foundations upon which we are to build our faith. "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?"—Psalm 11: 3.

What did Jesus teach his disciples when he first sent them to preach the gospel to a cold, wicked, persecuting world? He told them not to be "afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do." He told them to fear God who had power beyond the grave.

Are not five sparrows sold for two farthings, and not one of them is forgotten before God? But even the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear not therefore: ye are of more value than many sparrows.—Luke 12: 6, 7.

When teaching his disciples to avoid the use of vain repetitions in prayer, Jesus said: "For your father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask him."—Matthew 6: 8.

The true purpose of prayer is not to give information to the infinite God, but, rather, to bring ourselves into a proper condition to receive.

We notice that from God, through the gospel, knowledge is to be dispensed to the children of the covenant. This knowledge is emphasized and enjoined in every dispensation of the gospel to man.

Talk no more so exceeding proudly; let not arrogancy come out of thy mouth; for the Lord is a God of knowledge, and by him actions are weighed.—1 Samuel 2: 3.

Knowledge is of God; or as stated in a latter day revelation, "The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth; light and truth forsaketh that evil one." (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6.)

MERCY AND JUSTICE.—God's mercy and justice cover the same ground. Exalted justice, which is God's justice, is full of mercy; and true mercy, which is God's mercy, is full of justice. God does not give, because of his mercy, that which justice denies, for if he does, then there is a conflict between the two attributes, and God is against himself. Neither can he deny to anyone, because of his justice, that which mercy would freely give; for God is not in conflict with himself. God does not require us to suspend the law of justice in order to keep the law of mercy; nor does he require us to suspend the law of mercy in order to keep the law of justice.

God can not be against himself, else he would cease to be God; but if any one of his attributes claims that which another denies, there is a conflict. Alma, of Book of Mormon fame, in writing to his son, sets this matter before us in its true light:

Therefore, according to justice, the plan of redemption could not be brought about, only on conditions of repentance in this probationary state; yea, this preparatory state; for except it were for these conditions, mercy could not take effect except it should destroy the work of justice. Now the work of justice could not be destroyed, if so God would cease to be God. What, do you suppose that mercy can rob justice? I say unto you, Nay; not one whit. If so, God would cease to be God.—Alma 19: 94, 95, 107, Book of Mormon.

As God is, so we must learn to be; that is, we must be merciful and just at the same time, and in the same way. The idea of trying to honor and magnify any one of God's attributes by opposing another, is absurd. It can not be done.

However, justice and mercy are both ascribed to God, and either one of them represents that which is indispensable in a true and perfect character!

But the mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness to children's children to such as keep his covenant, and to those who remember his commandments to do them.—Psalm 103: 17, 18.

Praise ye the Lord. O give thanks unto the Lord; for he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever.—Psalm 106: 1.

Justice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne; mercy and truth shall go before thy face.—Psalm 89: 14.

And of Christ, who shall finally be crowned as "King of kings and Lord of lords," we have the following in the prophetic word:

Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever.—Isaiah 9: 7.

TRUTH.—This grand and important attribute constitutes an indispensable part of the character of God. How could we exercise saving faith in him if it were not so. Jesus, when addressing the Father in prayer for his disciples and for all who should believe on his name through their words, said:

Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth.—John 17: 17.

He is the rock, his work is perfect: for all his ways are judgment: a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he.—Deuteronomy 32: 4.

We can depend upon what God says, for he does not speak to deceive. In the Bible we have a record of history, doctrine, and prophecy, covering a space of over four thousand years. From this record, in connection with outside proof, telling us what has happened to the house of Israel, to the nations of the earth, and to the church and people of God, individually as well as collectively, we may learn that God's word is truth, in every sense. It has been proven to be true, historically, doctrinally, and prophetically, so far as time has permitted.

The beauty of it all is, that every disciple of Christ may have God's word and plan of salvation verified unto him:

If any man will do his [the Father's] will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself.—John 7: 17.

Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, if ye continue in my word then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.—John 8: 31, 32.

IMPARTIALITY.—Does God have his favorites, irrespective of character and gospel conditions? How can we have perfect confidence in him if he does? But the truth is, the whole gospel plan reveals in a striking manner, the love, wisdom, and impartiality of God. It is also declared in direct statements of the word:

For there is no respect of persons with God.—Romans 2: 11.

Then Peter opened his mouth and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him.—Acts 10: 34, 35.

In Doctrine and Covenants 38: 4, 5, 6, we find the following statements:

And for your salvation I give unto you a commandment, for I have heard your prayers, and the poor have complained before me, and the rich have I made, and all flesh is mine, and I am no respecter of persons. But verily I say unto you, Teach one another according to the office wherewith I have appointed you, and let every man esteem his brother as himself, and practice virtue and holiness before me. And again I say unto you, Let every man esteem his brother as himself; for what man among you having twelve sons, and is no respecter to them, and they serve him obediently, and he saith unto the one, Be thou clothed in robes and sit thou here; and to the other, Be thou clothed in rags and sit thou there, and looketh upon his sons, and saith I am just. Behold, this I have given you as a parable, and it is even as I am; I say unto you, Be one; and if ye are not one ye are not mine.

Gratitude wells up in the heart with the knowledge that, with God, there is neither the danger of infatuation, nor the injustice of favoritism.

UNCHANGABLENESS.—The fact that God possesses the attributes which we have presented in perfection and completeness, is of itself a complete guarantee of stability; but in addition to this, he has furnished us poor, weak mortals with some very valuable and direct statements of his word:

For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways and my thoughts than your thoughts. For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it to bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater, so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth; it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it.—Isaiah 55: 8-11.

If we can at any time find out just where God is concerning any doctrine or practice, we will have found just where we may always find him. To affirm that what God once condemned as one of the leading sins in the catalogue, has since been introduced as an important part of the celestial law, is to contradict the testimony of the three sacred books of the church, and destroy the character of the true

God! Truly, "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?"

For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.—Malachi 3: 6.

Every good gift and every perfect gift, is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.—James 1: 17.

We would like to say much more right here, but lack of space forbids. Almost in the beginning of the great work of restoration, God said to the young Seer, among other things, the following:

The works, and the designs, and the purposes of God, can not be frustrated, neither can they come to naught, for God doth not walk in crooked paths; neither doth he turn to the right nor to the left; neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; therefore his paths are straight and his course is one eternal round.—Doctrine and Covenants 2: 1.

Behold the Infinite One, as he stands erect in his perfection and grandeur! Why can we not trust him?

HAVE FAITH IN GOD."—Jesus.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE; EDITORIAL EXPRESSIONS ON THE DEATH OF MARY BAKER EDDY.

VAGUE TRUTH SYSTEMATIZED.

So far as it is possible to describe Mrs. Eddy's work at this time, it may be said that she has succeeded in systematizing a vague truth which the world has always recognized—the power of mind over matter. The ancients recognized this law, and in every age discerning men have felt its power. Yet it remained for a little New England woman to attempt to found a system upon this truth, which had never been elaborated or finally defined.—Saint Louis Times.

CAUSE AND EFFECT.

The emphasis that Mrs. Eddy put upon the material aspects of God originally startled most Americans. But it was only recalling them to points of view conspicuously in oriental faiths from the beginning of time. Her system of "healing" and her union of religion with mental therapeutics made a strong appeal to persons whose earthly sorrows were due chiefly to disease. Consequently, when cures were wrought there followed among her adherents a sort of passionate loyalty, not always discernable in the older religious bodies to-day, and the movement has gone on steadily against covert and open attack on both its founder and its principles.—Boston Herald.

A WONDERFUL IMPRESSION.

There is no use in blinking the fact that Christian Science has made a wonderful impression upon many persons. Meditative, introspective men and women have been strongly drawn by it, and those of deep and strong emotions have felt its sway to such an extent that families have been divided, friends estranged and the laws disregarded when the devotees of that faith have felt that they have had to choose between their "religion" and the mere authority of man. Christian Science churches are to be found in every part of the United States; their "readers" are numbered by thousands, and the hierarchy of which Mrs. Eddy was the head has been maintained and extended with an ability and skill that have certainly furnished evidence of a wonderful achievement in administration, management and leadership.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

WHAT OF THE FUTURE?

What will be Christian Science's future? Will it die with its founder? Was the belief in her own personal immortality the rock upon which the church was built? Probably not. A religion that was projected by ideas and grew strong by them will continue through them. Whether it will not have a temporary check is another matter. In this church the world outside has a considerable interest. The old resentment has largely passed away. Whatever defeat and decay that church experiences will come from within rather than without. That danger is certainly present. The world outside has rather a feeling of sympathy so long as this church benefits anyone in health and does not bring misery upon others.—Boston Transcript.

IDEAS TRANSMUTED INTO CHURCHES.

It may be said of Mrs. Eddy's work that what is true in it is not original and what is original is not true. Such elementary ideas as these are in "Science and Health" have been floating around in the world in one form or another since the dawn of time. Mrs. Eddy herself had only a vague and indefinite comprehension of them; but nevertheless she built a new church out of them, drew into it persons of culture, education and property, and framed the structure of a religion that is one of the unmistakable influences of the century. Regardless of the merits or demerits of Christian Science, it is a social and psychological fact that long ago compelled general recognition.—New York World.

SHE WAS A GENIUS.

Mrs. Eddy has been called "clever" in her methods of propaganda and organization. She was far more than clever; she was a genius. Her debt to Quinby was much greater than she in later years would acknowledge; but conceding, as we do, that she gained the germinal idea of mental suggestion as a therapeutic agent from him, it was still Mrs. Eddy who had the force, the tenacity, the faith even of a prophet to organize the movement and to crown it with that consummate stroke of genius, the presentation of it to the world as a religion.

She was fortunate in that the times favored her in introducing the religious and ecclesiastical elements. She could not have accomplished what she did half a century earlier, because the assault of modern science upon the churches had not yet devitalized the old theology, and by its attack upon revealed religion had unsettled many minds concerning the older form of faith. It was this vast unsettling of the masses, particularly in the Protestant world, that made it comparatively easy to attract suffering souls to a new form of faith that offered a refuge from pain and disease, which emphasized the joyous aspects of life and which seemed almost to cast out sin and death itself.—Springfield (Massachusetts) Republican.

WILL THE CHURCH SURVIVE.

We are aware that large numbers of well-meaning, reasonably well-educated, and generally law-abiding persons are members of the cult of Christian Science, and we have no desire to do injury to their susceptibilities when we declare, with the knowledge that the majority of their fellow-citizens will heartily agree with us, that the triumph of this woman and the cult she founded in defiance of common sense, not to speak of practical science, was an anachronism in an age of enlightenment. Yet, because of that prodigious success, and the great following she had secured, and the honor of recognition she had received from at least one government (that of France), everybody must be aware of a certain feeling akin to awe at the announcement of her death in her ninetieth year. For forty-four years she had exerted her influence far and wide, for thirty-four years she had been a power to be reckoned with. Another Mahomet has been translated to the state of sainthood.

Christian Science will survive Mrs. Eddy's death. There is more in it than ignorance and self-delusion, though it must be admitted that they seem to the outside world its preponderating elements. These are failings we can not deny to our fellow-men, and they carry their own punishment. But they must not be permitted to endanger the common welfare of society. The law of the land must be upheld.—New York Times.

PREDICTS DOWNFALL OF UNITED STATES IF CHRISTIANITY IS NOT RETURNED TO.

A warning that the downfall of the United States, following a period of great prosperity, could be prevented only by a return to Christianity and an appeal for the Congregationalists to found a United Protestant Church to this end, was made by Evangelist Fred B. Smith, of New York, general secretary of the International Young Men's Christian Association, in an address before the National Council at Symphony Hall last night, and in an evangelistic mass meeting in Tremont Temple in the afternoon.

The Rev. Dr. Frank G. Smith, of Chicago, was the other speaker at Symphony Hall. Moderator Boynton presided. Two thousand people were in attendance.

Under the title, "Men and the church," Secretary Smith said: "There is a fearful crisis on in the Christian church in its relation to men. In the last national census there were 13,000,000 men who declared that they had no church relations. This is greater by 3,000,000 now.

"There is a solemn fact recorded in the figures of membership of the fourteen greatest churches during the last ten years. One of the causes for this crisis is that nearly every forward movement for that larger evangelism has some religious freak for its exponent.

"I would make the ministers talk in the same tone of voice as is used in conversation on the football field or in the stock exchange. A fine compliment was paid Doctor Boynton when a man said, 'Why, he can't be a minister. He talks like a banker.' The freak, and I mean most men who appear on the platform at conventions are freaks, is too frequent.

"Let the religious movements be dominated by the average man who lives his life in a community in a Christianlike manner. The discussions of the Bible editions have been very confusing to the young man on the street. If the Bible has to stand on the arguments of these exponents, street men say, it must be a weak book.

"Ninety per cent of the 13,000,000 men who are absenting themselves from church, do so because they believe authority has gone from the Bible. We are not going to win the masses with a question mark behind the Bible.

"If the church came out flatfooted and said that it would fight all evil and hide none, a million men would come forward to back it up. When the church throws the cloak over these men in their evil, don't blame the hissing by-word heard on the street condemning the church.

"This going to church to be good and go to heaven when you die is a humdrum proposition. Make church life more worth while than walking up the aisles taking up a collection. Oh, for the church with so much to do that every man is tired at the end of the week.

"Some future historians will chronicle this: The fires of industrial activity burned so high at the close of the nineteenth and the beginning of the twentieth centuries that the religious fires in young men burned so low that they went out. Liberality of conduct and standards will empty any church. A demand of mighty sacrifices for the church is the watchword. The appeal of the American Board for young college graduates to go out in foreign lands in danger for small pay and little glory could not be resisted by the best young people in the college, the demand was so sacrificial."

The Rev. Dr. F. G. Smith, of Chicago, said: "I believe that we are at this hour in the midst of the greatest worldwide revival of religion that the world has ever seen, and all signs indicate that the revival of to-morrow will be so much greater than that of to-day that the glow of its allurements blinds us to the realities of the present.

"The revival of to-morrow must be clear and simple enough to be readily comprehended by even the child. It must be broad enough for all Christian believers and deep, strong, and rockribbed enough to stand all storms.

"The revival of to-morrow must be so intense in its desire to win the world, and so warm in its fellowship that it will absolutely unite at least Protestant Christianity. America is now no longer large enough for more than two Christian churches—the Roman Catholic and a united Protestant.—Boston Journal.

The Heights Beyond.

Let the strong soul aspire, and boldly climb
The hills that seem to bound the world at even,
Lo, there are hills beyond, that, like the clouds
Quiver in violet mists and melt in heaven.
Still let him follow, follow, where sublime
Crag after crag among their icy crowds
Point into space, still over them will shine
The separating azure that shall be Beyond his utmost, and the paths divine
Beyond the treading of his feet; and he Shall find the heavens higher than their gleams, Higher the thoughts of God than any dreams.

JERUSALEM, PALESTINE, December 7, 1910.

Dear Sister Walker: I am inclosing a few pictures which I trust will prove of interest. Some are good and some are not as good as I could wish. The Mount of Olives I think is very good, and would be worth enlarging. Abraham's Tomb is good, and different from any I have seen. I do not think there are any cards to be bought like it. There is little doubt of these tombs, the pictures of which I am sending, being what they are represented. Abraham's Tomb is guarded with jealous care. No one is permitted to enter it, and no Christian is even permitted to enter the building in which it is inclosed. It is different with the tree called Abraham's Oak. It is a very old tree, but I seriously doubt its being the tree under which Abraham met the angels.

Much of the old city of Jerusalem is buried from twenty to forty feet under the present city. The temple grounds, however, being located on the top of Mount Moriah, remain uncovered. It is the low part of the city that is buried the most. The rock upon which Abraham offered his son Isaac remains in sight, and is inclosed within the Mosque of Omar. Strangers are permitted to see it by obtaining a permit. We have put in most of our spare time sight-seeing, but we have not seen half there is to be seen in this city yet. It is certainly a wonderful place, and the most interesting spot I ever visited.

I am glad to say we are meeting with fair success, better than either of us expected. We have baptized four, and the indications are now that there will be several more before long. We had about twenty out to hear us last Sunday. I had splendid liberty in preaching, and all seemed deeply interested. One young man, a very bright young fellow, who can speak and write thirteen languages, says he is convinced, and is talking of being baptized. Another young Arab, who heard for the first time last Sunday, says he wants to be baptized. His father and sister were out to hear us, and seemed very much interested. The old gentleman, whose picture is in the lunch scene, is doing all in his power to get the people out to hear us, and I think will come in. We are only able to hold meetings in private houses as yet. It needs money to push the work in these foreign lands. The other sects have plenty sent to them from other parts of the world. I think it would be well if we had a foreign missionary society. It is very discouraging to open up new fields, and then leave them to die for the want of means. But we hope for better times ahead. But we have been fortunate in finding friends here, and it seems as though the Lord directed our coming to this land; if so there must be a purpose in it. I trust we shall be able to do our part. It is likely we, Rose and I, shall remain here till after the General Conference. Brother Griffiths wants us to remain. I would prefer to proceed on my field in Australia, but willing to work wherever it is thought we can do the most good. Rose is heart and soul with me in the work, and is proving a great help. We were fortunate in renting a good piano for only two dollars a month, so now we are able to furnish some good music which is proving an attraction.

The weather is delightful, no frost and but little rain, but beautiful sunshine most of the time reminds one very much of southern California. The nights are a little cool, but we secured a secondhand oil heater, and we are as cozy as one could wish. We have a large correspondence and are kept pretty busy writing, so can not write very long letters to each. We are trying to keep all posted as to our work through the church papers. Kindly let me know if there is anything here that you would like to know about, and we shall be pleased to furnish any information within our power. Kindly remember us to friends. May the Lord bless and prosper you in your work.

In gospel bonds,

F. G. PITT.

News From Missions

JERUSALEM, PALESTINE.

Jerusalem is known throughout all the world as the Holy City and the city of the great King. It is said that its origin is hidden away in the mists of ages, yet some historians trace it back to the days of Melchisedec, at which time it was known as Salem; it is true, as one writer has said, that its glories have been dimmed by the tide of time, and it now lies humbled in the dust. Although it has passed through twenty-eight sieges, it still survives the rack of time.

It is beautifully situated on the top of the mountains of Judea, surrounded by the everlasting hills, and towers above the Mediterranean Sea 2,670 feet. It is governed by a pasha and garrisoned by the soldiers of the Sultan. It continues to be the mecca of the Jew, and the goal of both Christian and Moslem pilgrims, and thus remains a sacred spot. I do not think that I exaggerate when I say that there are more religious cranks or fanatics to be found here than in any other part of the world.

Here are to be found in great numbers those who seem to be in the lead and control of things religiously. The Greek, orthodox and Catholic, Latin Catholic, Armenians, Coptic, Abyssinian, Syriac, Moslem, and Protestant. Jews are more numerous than all the rest, numbering about fifty thousand, but as yet we have not discovered any Utah Mormons. However, they have made an effort at proselyting, but their labor seemed fruitless. Jerusalem enjoys the distinction of having three Sabbaths; Friday for Moslems, Saturday for Jews, and Sunday Christians. Hence it is that the most devoted close their shops on these respected days, but the careless ones have their shops open on all three days.

The different religious sects have established schools for learning with a view of educating the natives. Some have workshops in which they are taught various crafts or trades, and doubtless much good is accomplished through these institutions. It also serves as a bait to entrap and make Christians of Jews and Moslems; but through conversations that I have had with some of these so-called Christians, I gleaned that many of them are like the class of people that followed Christ on one occasion, who were more concerned in the loaves and fishes than in his religion. Truly there is a strange intermixture of races and creeds to be found in this Holy City.

I have found the city holy, but not a holy people; if flowing robes and garbs of various colors with which the patriarchs, bishops, and priests are adorned are an indication of holiness, then they have it, as hundreds of these so-called teachers can be seen on the streets daily. Another peculiar sight, which attracts the visitor, is the Moslem women parading the streets with faces covered with thin veils, and figures adorned in white and black sheets; no shape or style to them. Had I met such a creature when I was a boy, there would have been some fast running until home was reached, as they remind you of spooks or ghosts that children are taught to believe in by unwise parents.

The natives are attired in a great variety of costumes. Some wear a long robe of different colors, made of costly material, with a red cap on their heads; others, with a towel round their head, and a long garment which has the appearance of a nightgown, with jacket or coat over. After dark it is difficult to distinguish the men from the women, and most of the ordinary people go barefooted in all kinds of weather. Nevertheless, a great number of the younger generation are copying the European in dress and manners, and it is surprising what a wonderful change it makes in their appearance. Really, some of these young people are handsome.

The teeth of the natives are perfect, and as white as pearls. The languages spoken daily on the streets, are French, German, Italian, Greek, Hebrew, Armenian, Arabic, and English; the latter by only a few. The cruelty indulged in by the people towards the poor animals, especially the camel and donkey, is beyond description. The boy or man that drives the camel or donkey carries a heavy stick with a knob at the end, and hammers him, on the head mostly, and that continually. I am told that they have a law for the prevention of cruelty to animals, but it is not properly enforced. It will be a blessing to the poor creatures when some power will enforce the law.

The wall now surrounding old Jerusalem is about two and one half miles in circumference, is thirty-five to forty feet high, and has thirty-four towers. Its eight gates are named as follows: Jaffa Gate, Zion Gate, Dung Gate, Golden Gate, Saint Stephens Gate, Herod's Gate, Damascus and New Gates. The Jaffa Gate is the main entrance into the city proper. At this point Hebron, Bethlehem, and Jaffa roads meet. Considerable traffic in front and inside this gate is carried on. Large crowds of people gather there during the day to buy home supplies from the peasants and shopkeepers. A tax collector sits in a little shed near by at the receipt of customs, like Matthew of old. A short distance to the right of the entrance can be seen the tower of David, one of the most conspicuous of its kind in the city; therefore an object of special attraction, strong and massive in its appearance, and now forms part of the citadel of El Kelah, and barracks, which extend for some distance down the Bethlehem road on the southwest, and as far as the Armenian Gardens on the northeast, and built by Herod the Great. Zion Gate is principally used for those on foot in and out of Mount Zion. The next gate of importance and in use is Saint Stephens Gate on the eastern side of the wall of the city, called by the Crusaders the Gate of Jehoshaphat because it led into the valley of that name. It is also called the Gate of Lady Mary because it leads to the tomb of the mother of Christ in the Kedron Valley. Not far from here is the Tower of Antonia; it is also claimed that near here Stephen was stoned to death. It has for centuries been the great pilgrim gate for the city. It is through this entrance that you pass into Garden Gethsemane and Mount Olives, and the Brook Kedron. The Mohammedans use it for their annual procession to the tomb of Moses.

Damascus Gate until recently was the only open gate in the northern wall, but there are two more now in use, the New Gate, constructed a few years since, and Herod's Gate, near the northeast corner of the wall. Damascus Gate is supposed to stand on the site of an old gate of the second wall and the guard houses near by are referred to in proof thereof. Through this entrance you reach Jeremiah's Grotto, also Gordon's supposed Calvary. Outside the gate is used as a sheep, goat, or cattle market.

The Golden Gate on the eastern wall, which is well known in history, had two small gates or openings; many events of great importance have been associated with it. Here it is claimed that Peter healed the lame man who begged alms from them as on their way to the temple. It was through this gate that our Savior rode on the first Palm Sunday, in a triumphal entry into the city. It is contended that it was built in the reign of Justinian, and closed by order of Omer, who had it walled up, and it will remain closed until the judgment day, at which time the faithful Moslems will be permitted to pass through it to Paradise.

The streets within the walls of old Jerusalem are very narrow and dirty. The houses are built closely together, the walls of which are very thick, which serve to keep out the heat in summer and the cold in winter, and the walks are very slippery, without shape or form, and the most awkward that I have ever seen, and in whatever direction you go, ever going up and down hill.

David street is the most important street in the city. Commencing at Jaffa Gate it runs in a northeasterly direction, going down steps until it is lost in the dark vaulted bazars that intersect each other in all directions. The average width of the business streets is from eight to twelve feet, containing native shops on both sides, which look like little holes in a wall. Each hole is full of wares, exposed for sale. In a good many places there is light burning all day because of the darkness. The odor which rises from the filth of the streets is unbearable at times. I do not wonder that there are so many cases of consumption, leprosy, and other diseases in evidence. It appears to me that if cholera should break out, none would be left to tell the tale.

Some of the sights that the visitor has to gaze upon are very pitiful, and heartrending indeed. Hundreds upon hundreds of the poor people lie down in the streets, in holes or wherever they can find a place to sleep. Only the other day I looked into a hole in the wall which was supposed to be a poor family's home. Never can I forget the sight that I beheld. A blind man's wife and two or three children were within with not sufficient clothing to cover their bodies. No furniture or bedding, all sitting on the bare rock floor, and not a sign of anything to eat. No sunlight could penetrate into this place, and it was cold and damp; no fire. This is the life that hundreds upon hundreds have to live year in and year out, and within what is called universally the Holy City. The Lord Jesus can not come too quickly and relieve such unfortunate, distressed human beings. If there is a worse condition awaiting them beyond this world, the eternal Lord of all have mercy on them.

One of the places that is an attraction to all visitors is the Jews' Wailing Place. Here are to be seen courses of stones sixty feet high, some of which are of immense size. The lower stones are supposed to date back to the time of Solomon. Here for generations the Jews have congregated, the principal day being Friday. It is a pitiful sight to see the aged, the middle aged, and the young kiss the venerable relics of their long lost glory; and listen to their chanting of wailing songs, in doleful monotone, with their heads bent low, faces against the stones, pleading to the Father above to remove the curse of ages from them and redeem and restore the land and loved Jerusalem back to them. Following is one of the prayers they offer to the Lord: "Be not wroth very sore, O Lord, neither remember iniquity for ever; behold, see we beseech thee; we are all thy people. Thy Holy City is a wilderness; Zion is a wilderness; Jerusalem a desolation. Our holy and beautiful home where our Fathers praised thee is burnt up with fire, and all our pleasant things are laid waste."

They chant the following litany:

Leader. For the palace that lies desolate
Response. —we sit in solitude.

Leader. For the walls that are overthrown
Response. —we sit in solitude.

Leader. For our majesty that is departed
Response. —we sit in solitude.

Leader. For our great men that lie dead
Response. —we sit in solitude.

Leader. For the precious stones that are buried
Response. —we sit in solitude.

Leader. For the priests that have stumbled
Response. —we sit in solitude.

Leader. For our kings who have despised
Response. —we sit in solitude.

And thus they continue chanting, one after another smiting their breasts, weeping and wailing as though their poor hearts would break. Pilgrims come here from many lands and shed scalding tears upon these memorial stones.

There are many beautiful structures to be found within the walls; that is, churches, convents, and schools owned and controlled by the various religious denominations. One of the most conspicuous and interesting is the church of the Holy Sepulcher which dates back many centuries. There they claim to have the Stone of Unction, Mount Calvary, the tomb where Christ's body laid; and he rose from the dead and ascended into heaven. Various Catholics have their respective altars in this place, and it is amazing to see intelligent people bow down, kiss the Stone of Unction, Tomb of Christ, and stone on top of Calvary, continually crossing themselves and working their beads. At all these places are monks standing with holy water to sprinkle the people as they come and go. It is astonishing how easy it is to delude some people. The Calvary and tomb are within a few yards of each other.

Personally, I do not believe or accept their statement that Jesus was laid in this tomb, or that his crucifixion took place on their Calvary, as the location does not agree with the location as given in the Scriptures. I am inclined to believe, after a careful study of the matter, that the Calvary and the tomb discovered by General Gordon near Jeremiah's Grotto, a short distance north of Solomon's Quarries, are more likely to be the places, for various reasons. Mr. Lee, who wrote a book of Jerusalem says: "The position in the center of the city of Jerusalem of the traditional site of Calvary and the sepulcher of our Savior, has appeared to many intelligent observers to require more substantial confirmation than mere ecclesiastical tradition. It is a source of wonderment to all how the present church can possibly stand on the hill upon which Christ was crucified and which according to Holy Scripture must have been outside the walls of the city at the time of his death." It is evident to those who are familiar with the past history of the city that the streets up and down which the Savior and his apostles walked and the sacred spots associated with their life, are from forty to seventy feet buried beneath the present city. Hence we must conclude that the guides that point out the places with the statement: "This is the sacred spot where such and such took place," etc., are truly a misrepresentation of the real facts, caused through religious bigotry and superstition. It should not be forgotten that Jerusalem suffered through two earthquakes and was destroyed by several wars.

The temple area is in the most beautiful part of the city, surrounded by a wall 1,601 feet long on the west, 1,630 feet on the east, 1,024 feet on the north, and 922 feet on the south, with entrances only on the two sides towards the city. It is the only section of the city where the visitor can not enter, only by a permit signed by the pasha or governor of the city. The entire inclosure is considered holy ground by the Moslems. Near the center of this area is a magnificent building, one of the grandest of its kind in the world, called the Mosque of Omar, and was built by a man of that name. The dome is erected over the sacred spot or rock of sacrifice. It was on this rock that Abraham was commanded of God to offer up Isaac, and according to their traditions Noah's ark rested here, and the dove brought the olive leaf from the Mount of Olives near by. Here also they say is the place where Jacob laid his head. The whole area of the temple is on Mount Moriah. Here is where Solomon erected a temple which surpassed in grandeur and beauty all the structures of his contemporaries. In my opinion the rock and temple area are nearly as they were in the days of Abraham, Solomon, and our Savior.

In the same area stands back of Omar the Mosque El Aska, a very fine, substantial building. All these wonderful buildings and sights have to be seen to be appreciated. As we stand upon this temple area we have a glorious view of the Mount of Offence, where Solomon built houses and erected altars for the worship of idols for some of his wives. Immediately below is the Pool of Siloam; east of here is the Garden of Gethsemane, at the base of Mount Olives. All that can be said is that Christ and three of his apostles retired here to pray a short time previous to his betrayal by Judas. The present garden is under the care of Franciscan monks. It is well known that the original garden comprised more territory than the present one. The monks point out a cave in which they claim the disciples slept and Judas gave the kiss of betrayal; however, this is another tradition, as no one is able to point out the very spot where the above events took place. To the left of the garden, near the Brook Kedron, is the tomb of the Virgin Mary, her husband, father, and mother. The tomb looks to be very ancient, and it is possible that the statement is true. Mount Olives itself is one of the most beautiful sights to be seen in or around Jerusalem, and when I gaze upon it I am vividly reminded of my Savior and the apostles, for we are informed in the Scriptures that they visited this mount very often, and from the top of it our Lord ascended to his Father in heaven, and when he returns he will stand again on the same Mount of Olives. It was from here also that he, gazing on Jerusalem, predicted the destruction of the temple and city. In recent years many buildings have been erected on its sides and summit, the Armenians, Latins, Greeks, and Lutherans have builded churches sacred to the memory of the Lord's life, all claiming that they have the true sites.

The Russians have built a high tower on their church, on top of which can be had a good view of the Dead Sea, the Plains of Jordan that were given to Lot as an inheritance, also the mountains of Moab and Gilead, and Judea. The country all around looks barren and mountainous, with no visible life beyond a few sheep and goats here and there. Rocks, rocks, confront your view on every side. All around the city there are tombs and sepulchers, in many instances hewn out of the solid rock. The tombs of the prophets are adjoining the Garden of Gethsemane to the south. On Mount Zion close to the New German church, is the tomb of King David. Close to the Pool of Siloam are the tombs of the apostles James and Zechariah, and a half mile to the north of Damascus Gate are the tombs of the kings. These to my mind are the most curious and interesting of all the tombs I have seen. Their main entrance is very small, but the internal arrangements of the tombs are a marvel. Going from tomb to tomb and court to court there seemed to be no end to them and the astonishing fact that they were all hewn out of the solid rock, and it surely required great skill and workmanship to accomplish such a feat. Jerusalem, outside the walls, is spreading itself over considerable territory, and some very grand and massive stone buildings have been erected in every direction, the walls of which will average over three feet in thickness, and are fireproof. The workmanship will compare with any country. They surely build to last throughout eternity, but I regret to say they do not seem to have any idea of laying out streets, as they are very narrow and crooked, and are horrible, being laid with rough cobblestones standing a few inches one above another, etc., which makes it very tiresome and very hard on the feet. They will appreciate the streets of the New Jerusalem which are to be paved with gold if they feel as I do about it.

The streets are poorly lighted, with the occasional glimmer of a lamp. Very few people traverse the streets after dark, as it is considered dangerous to do so; therefore perfect peace and safety is not to be found there as yet, notwithstanding it is called the Holy City. The climate is now about the same as in Bible times. They have the early and latter rains mentioned in James 5:7. Have snow during winter season, but soon melts away, and on the whole the weather reminds you of central and southern California. So far we have had lovely sunny days, with occasional showers. The water supply is collected in wells and large cisterns, hence they depend entirely upon the rains for their water. A large book can be written about Jerusalem and its inhabitants, but this will have to suffice, as no doubt your readers will get tired of this lengthy article.

Yours in the one faith,
GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

WINNIPEG.

I once again trouble you with a few lines from this part of the battlefield, thinking perhaps it may be of some interest. We are still trying to keep the flag afloat, occasionally finding an honest soul to accept the message. We are now trying to build a church, in which we can invite the people to come and hear the angel's message, but we need a good man here continually; that is, one who can devote his whole time to the work, and we have him in Bro. E. E. Long if we can only keep him. We have a building under construction, thirty by forty-two feet, ready for plaster, but funds are low and Saints are not wealthy. But this is God's work, and he has a people here, and will open up a way if we are faithful.

Wedding bells have again rung in our midst, when Bro. Herbert Pugh and Miss Gertrude Roberts were united in marriage on the 7th inst. May peace and prosperity attend them.

I hope every Saint and all making like pretensions will carefully read Brother Kelley's articles running in the HERALD, on "duties," tithes and consecrations; also Brother Rannie's article on "Loyalty," and waken up to the duties and responsibilities and privileges that confront them, especially in this district, and get busy and, as Bishop's agent in this district, just keep me busy writing out receipts for tithes and offerings. Now, Saints of the Most High, ask yourselves the question, am I keeping the whole law? Am I manifesting my love to God by paying my tithing, or am I withholding that which belongs to God and thus hindering his work? Zion can not be redeemed but by the principles of the celestial law, and this is one of them and an important one. The treasury is nearly empty and soon nothing will be there except the remembrance of what once was. Wake up, Saints, and sleep nights. Work while it is called to-day, for the night cometh when no man can work.

Your brother,
W. I. ARNOLD.

ALABAMA AND HOME

Church work in Alabama is on the increase numerically and spiritually. A very spiritual time was enjoyed at the McKenzie reunion, mention of which has been made before, but it is worthy of more than mention. The writer does not remember a better one during his twenty years of work in the ministry, and never did I enjoy better liberty. Often the entire hour of prayer would be earnestly employed by ten or twelve before arising to sing. Old and young were present at the morning prayer service as fully as the preaching services. On two or three occasions the outward gifts were manifest in warning and instruction. The Saints were strengthened and the discouraged ones revived. There are a number of earnest young men in that section that help to make a lively, progressive Sunday school. They have an (ab)normal class there too. I say abnormal because I find ninety-six mistakes on the first thirty-one pages of Hurlbut's Normal Lessons. In my judgment some things are being impressed on the minds of the young they will have to unlearn some day. Oh, that some one would write normal lessons of our own! I feel moved to attempt it myself sometimes.

Seven were baptized during the reunion. Two debates have been held in that vicinity in the last year or a little more. First, W. G. Roberts killed "Mormonism" there, and later Coyse, editor of one of the leading Baptist papers, killed them a second time and the Sword of Laban says "they will not be troubled with Mormons much more at McKenzie."

The work is in a better condition in places where we have held discussions than anywhere else. We would be pleased if debates could be held in some of our decaying branches. With all the boast of killing "Mormonism," they could not be drawn into debate in their chief centers and college towns, as the old saying goes, with a "forty ox team." That we are not afraid of bad results is evidenced by our opening our finest churches and centers of membership for our worst opponents to do their worst. How many sound Latter Day Saints have they converted? Dare they ask us that question? A son of the very man where Roberts made his headquarters during the debate at McKenzie is now a member of our church, and enthusiastic in the work. We have a membership there of two hundred and thirty-four.

At Berrydale, Florida, two of their best members, acknowledged so by themselves, were baptized after the debate there. I baptized fourteen in that vicinity since and know of several others. At Lizzard Lope, Alabama, Brother VanCleave has baptized five since the debate in September between Doctor Love and Brother Slover, and others are waiting the return of one of the missionaries. At Bay Minnette, Alabama, I baptized five since the debate between Doctor Love and Bro. T. C. Kelley, and know of several others. Can the Campbellites point to a single baptism in any of these places, of persons who heard the debates? Six miles west of Pensacola a running debate has been going on all summer between a Campbellite preacher and Bro. Joseph Cooper, a local teacher. The Saints revived there and are building a new church. I baptized two there in September and others are near. From these facts one can see about how much dependence to put in the Campbellite boast, as reechoed in the Sword of Laban. If some one of their leaders would tell the truth about them, as Brigham told about his people, we would be able to put them in the same catalogue. One can not help but be amused when looking over the names on the editorial staff of the Sword of Laban. Men who are bitter enemies theologically, but in fighting the Mormons, loving and embracing brothers. Truly "Misery likes company."

I opened a new place in Southeastern Alabama, at Opp. The postmaster there, a Campbellite, informed one of our members they had a man named Haines whom the leaders of the Latter Day Saints had tabooed, and forbade their elders meeting him in debate. How about that, Mr. President? Guess I must have missed your orders! The honorable also informed Brother Huggins that Elder Haines had certain Mormon books that the Mormon church were offering hundreds of dollars for, as they wanted to destroy them. I sent word to his reverence that I would sell him a duplicate of any Latter Day Saint book Mr. Haines had and that it would not cost him hundreds of dollars either.

Brother Slover was preaching at Garland, near the Georgia line, where Bro. D. E. Tucker was shot some years ago. From there we may be able to get into Georgia some time. Brother Slover may be able to stop at Opp on his way back and extend the work to some places open for us in the country. One amusing sign we saw in Opp was the Opp Pressing Club.

Returning from Opp I performed the ceremony that made Elder Albert VanCleave and Sr. Bertha A. Harper man and wife. Many in Lamoni will remember Miss Harper as a college girl. Bro. VanCleave is one of our growing missionaries.

Following that event I went to Bay Minnette, Alabama, and held a week's meeting with the result before mentioned. Meeting a man from nine miles north, near a union church, I proceeded there in a few days and obtained the use of the church with pleasure and was greeted with a fair audience, but came near having to remain in the church all night the first night, and nearer it the second. Rather than risk it the third I came to town, expecting to collect a load of singers and in case I received no invitation to lodge at any house in the neighborhood, I could return with the Saints; but it rained that evening and we did not go. The next day on the way to church I found a telegram in the post-office, having been received the morning before about the time I arrived in town, informing me that my daughter was seriously ill with pneumonia, with temperature 106½. My feelings can better be imagined than described. Nearly every experience I have had with telegrams is similar. One time I answered back and arrived at home before the telegram, and was eating breakfast when a boy delivered the message and wanted to collect for it. It is still unpaid.

I hastened home, over a thousand miles, and found my daughter just alive, but at present writing she is convalescing. My thoughts on the fifty hour trip home were to the effect that I scarcely knew my own family on account of being away so much in mission work, and it would be unjust to take my girl away and her father only a stranger.

Since arriving home another missionary's little girl whose papa was also called home to see a sick child, said: "I am not afraid to talk to my papa, are you?" The missionaries are mere strangers to their families, so that their children do not know whether to talk to them or not.

I will doubtless be needed at home till the holidays, and after that it might not be wise to spend the money to return south before conference. J. W. PETERSON.

LAMONI, IOWA, December 7, 1910.

JOTS BY THE WAYSIDE.

The long silence indulged is not from choice or liking. Men get cranky as they grow older, and Ye Jots Man thought he was not used just right and we "cranked." This will suffice to answer all inquiries on that line.

Your smiling face greets us here on the Pacific shores and your pages are freighted with soul stirring thought from the pithy, terse editorials. The Bishop's triumphal march upon Enoch's shores, the dawning of the "red man" glory, the onward march of the Zionie car, and the spiritual letters of the determined hosts all give encouragement, zest, and hope to the struggling ones so far away.

The gospel work in this district is not what it should be, the forward movement we hoped to engender has not materialized, and but little has been done or can be because of clogs in the wheel which only time can move. However, in the gloaming we can see the dawning of a brighter day—eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. Here as elsewhere Saints are restless and their eyes are Zionward. A few noble souls, induced by schemers, have lost a life's accumulations by reckless investments. How much better to invest in the "regions round about," or cast their gains with Enoch's band. The Bishop's receipt is safer here and in the hereafter.

This is a warm, mild climate, with but little if any frost during the winter months. It rains all the time and some between times. We hope to honorably retire before we become duckfooted; however, our last shoes are no larger. This county has 786,495 acres of land, less than 16,000 acres of cultivable lands, not nearly one township. All other lands are mountainous, covered with timber. It is a life job to clear a farm in such eternal woods, something over 9,000 acres only under the plow. Cleared land is worth from one to four hundred dollars per acre, which is because of the scarcity. A splendid fruit country, but no market; in fact no market for anything but butter, which is shipped by boat to Portland and San Francisco.

The only attraction in Myrtle Point is the going out and coming in of the overland stage coach, the rattle of which can be heard all over the town, and a stampede of old and young for the post-office is the order. We would rather live in old Missouri where there is a season of little, cold, crispy weather which puts snap in a person's heel, and is a sure cure for enervating monotony. There are two seaport towns in this country, Marshfield and Bandon. The mighty Pacific washes the entire west line of the county. The lumber interests are the virtues of this part of the country. There are immense mills and thousands of woodsmen felling and floating monster logs to the various mills. Thousands of acres of the mighty giants of the forest can not be reached until the railroad engines shall scream through these wooded hills. Sixty-five miles from railroad, every mile a mighty forest, seems to be "a way back" to ye JOTS MAN.

OREGON.

I thought that to-day I would write a short letter for the HERALD, something I have not done for years, but I am sure there are those who in times past have labored in the valleys of the great Pacific who would read with interest a word from scenes of past labors, and while I read newspaper accounts of ice, snow, and severe storms in other parts of the world, I see the sun shining brightly over the thrifty homes in the vicinity of Sherwood, a small town about twenty miles from Portland, on a branch of the Southern Pacific Railroad, where your writer was called about the 9th of last September to preach the funeral sermon of a Sister Calkins, the notice of which appears in the HERALD for December 7. The services were held in the open air, in the cemetery. Fully two hundred people stood during the service, and at the close many came and shook hands, being, as they said, pleased with what they had heard and desiring to hear more of the strange doctrine.

Several invitations were given to return at some future time and hold a series of meetings. The citizens in the community had clubbed together and had started to build a hall in one corner of the country for preaching purposes. A gentleman took my address and said when the hall was completed he would like to have me come back and preach. About the first of December I received a letter from him stating we could not get the hall, but the cry of "Mormon," "Mob," "Drive him out of town," etc., could be heard from professed followers of Christ on every hand. But the gentleman referred to, and another, secured the use of a small hall in Sherwood, where a moving picture show was holding forth, we to have it Sunday, Tuesday, and Thursday and Friday nights.

We opened fire on Sunday night against the desire of the owner of the hall, who, when the time came was afraid it might hurt his business if he let us use it. But after the first night his fears were allayed, we expressly showing we had not relationship with the Utah church. Monday night we were invited to preach in a farmhouse, which we did.

Tuesday night, upon opening the hall two young men stepped in and volunteered the information that they were "soul sleepers" and asked if I believed that doctrine. I replied in the negative. They said (both talking): "We have over four hundred and ninety Bible quotations to prove the doctrine true, and perhaps you would like to discuss the matter. After considerable cross firing while I built a fire and arranged the seats, and after many had come in, I told them if they really meant business and wanted a debate we would accommodate them, provided they would affirm their church (the Church of God) to be what we were willing to affirm for our church; then they might affirm that "man was wholly unconscious between death and the resurrection," and we would deny. They then asked me to affirm the Book of Mormon as a counter proposition, which we were willing to do. They gave me the name of their hero and agreed to tell me of a date when he and our district president might meet for final agreement.

So, with the present outlook, if too much time and red tape is not resorted to to find who can represent our side of the question, a great opportunity is before us to get our doctrine before a great number of people, for at this time of the year people in this country will go miles to attend such a gathering, and the honest in heart will obey.

To-night we hold at another farmhouse. Ever praying for the advancement of truth and the overthrow of error, I am,
W. A. GOODWIN.

SHERWOOD, OREGON, December 14, 1910.

JERUSALEM, PALESTINE.

We held preaching service at the home of Brother Carr Saturday afternoon, and at Sister Floyd's Sunday. We had a few strangers present, some of whom are becoming interested. This encourages us. Brother Griffiths has requested me to remain here till after conference. I have consented to do so, provided it meets the approval of the Presidency; otherwise I hesitate to remain away so long from my field in Australia. There are some favorable indications that the work could be permanently established here. While the prospects are not as bright as I could wish, they are really better than I expected.

The weather is beautiful; much like southern California. We could hold preaching outdoors if the people could understand our language. We are getting acquainted with the English speaking people and have no cause to find fault with the treatment we have received thus far. Those who come out to hear appear to be favorably impressed.

Kindly publish our address, and remind our friends that postage to Jerusalem is five cents. Some letters received have been very expensive for us. Will send you some photos later.

Yours,
F. G. PITT.

SPRING RIVER DISTRICT.

I am very much interested in reading in the HERALD the "Mission News," and to understand how the church is marching on; and in response to your kind invitation will state that this field, the Spring River District is on and onward continually. I often think of the vast difference here to-day from what it was about forty years ago, when the writer with others arrived here from Utah with their families—namely, R. H. Davis and John A. Davis. Then the Spring River District could be easily counted, for each one in the district knew every other one, but to-day they can not be.

The district now, through the efforts of the elders and others combined, has reached up to many hundreds, the "few" has become a great host; and in contemplating those things, many of the old pioneers are presented before my mind, and my heart is filled with sadness, and also with gladness, and my eyes with tears. Yes, even now, when penning these lines, and in examining the record of those days, we often meet with the names of S. Maloney, W. S. Taylor, John T. Davis, John A. Davies, I. R. Ross, J. H. Thomas, James Dutton, R. H. Davies, Benjamin Davies, D. S. Crawley, and others,—they were stanch men, noble characters, and willing to sacrifice for the church.

The district is a large field of itself, and we find among its early converts the names of such noble men as Father Short, M. T. and Ellis Short, J. M. Richards, E. Keeler, W. E. Peak, W. S. Pender, E. E. Wheeler, W. H. Smart, and others. Despite removals, deaths, etc., this field has been one of continual growth, and is still onward. During the last few years several branches have been organized, also Sunday schools and Religios, and we are not through, for about four months ago a branch was organized here by Brn. I. N. White, George Jenkins, and E. A. Davis, at Purcell, Missouri, this mission. And the demand and call for preaching is ever on the increase. We hope to see other branches being organized in the near future, and we believe our hopes are not groundless, because we see the young are coming to the front, and many of them have the talent.

There are school districts in this mission that were years ago very hard to obtain permission to preach in, owing to the prejudice that was then existing, but to-day it has all vanished and schoolhouses are now open in every direction; therefore, ye young men of the church, take courage, you will not have to combat and battle against the prejudice that the old have; and it seems that the time set to favor Zion has arrived.

I understand that there was quite an interest created at the recent discussion held at Miami, Oklahoma. One reason for it was because it was in "two against one." Bro. J. Arthur Davis was engaged for ten evenings in debate with two Holiness divines. Good congregations all throughout, and a very favorable impression made and the interest ran high.

In gospel bonds,
J. ALFRED DAVIS.

MISSOURI.

I wish to relate what a true, honest, but poor Latter Day Saint can accomplish when he has the desire. Bro. and Sr. William Whitesides were the only Saints here, living on a poor, rocky piece of land, dependent largely upon tie making for a living, yet they were interested in the welfare of their neighbors to that degree that they wished them to hear the gospel preached, even if it cost them a few days of hard work at making ties in order to buy tracts and pay an elder's fare.

So three years ago I wrote them I would come down. Interest was fine from the start. I baptized a few. Later Brother Paxton went down and I told him he ought to baptize twenty. A letter from him stated, "I try to only do what I am told, but this time I must confess and ask your forgiveness, for I baptized one more than you told me." Later he and I visited them again and added a few more and ordained one young man, Gus Richards, to the office of priest, in order to care for the work.

This summer Brethren Paxton and Dowker brought the tent and succeeded in baptizing ten. At each of those visits those poor Saints always had a few dollars to help the missionaries, and see what it has done. It was the means of the gospel reaching quite a number of good, honest-hearted people. How different it is in some of our largest branches. It seems to be a hard task for some to even give you a pleasant look.

We completed the organization with the following officers: Gus Richards, elder; Rob Wright, priest; Christ Pennock, teacher; Alice Wright, clerk. The Saints are all alive and united, and have a move on foot to build a church.

Brother Paxton and the writer held a very enjoyable and profitable meeting at Cheltenham Branch. Seven souls were led into the waters of baptism as a result. The ladies' aid society and branch help us missionaries in a respectable way to visit our homes and loved ones. God bless them for their kindness. "By this ye shall know who are my disciples."

Thank the Lord we can find many such, both in Saint Louis and Southern Illinois districts. I had the privilege of hearing and answering the great Rev. D. B. Turney, of anti-Mormon fame. He got off some new ones. "Joe" hypnotized these Mormons in Iowa, and they also swore they saw the angel and plates. "Pool Joe" prophesied to Abe Lincoln in Washington at the time Lincoln was elected president, that he, Lincoln, would fail in all his undertakings. Turney said he heard Lincoln tell it at their home at Fairfield, Illinois. I thought some one was a fool, and it was not Joseph this time, but the other fellow. Abe Lincoln was elevated to President in 1860. Sixteen years after Joseph Smith's death, everybody saw he had stretched the blanket too far that time. It is a true saying, "Give the calf rope enough and he will hang himself."

We had a splendid conference at Saint Louis; glad to note the improvement; think it could yet be improved.

A splendid work has been done in both districts this year. One of our young missionaries took unto himself a wife. We have no objections to marrying, but don't like to lose their service in the field.

With best wishes and Merry Christmas,

HENRY SPARLING.

BOURBON, MISSOURI, December 12, 1910.

ILLINOIS.

Since last writing we have been to Buffalo Prairie, and we thought a line with reference to our visit there would be acceptable. We left this city on December 8, calling at Galva, where we visited Sister Johnson, also our aged brother, James Lord, and his daughter and family, Brother and Sister Bridgman, where we are always made welcome. As our train left there at 5.15 p. m., our stay was all too short.

By a little after 7 o'clock in the evening we arrived at the small but busy town of Joy. We were met at the depot by Brethren Willets and Bean, the latter taking us to his hospitable home, next door to our church. Welcome barely does justice to the meaning of being made to feel at home. We tarried here nearly two days, when on Saturday afternoon Bro. C. L. Holmes came to town to get us. After our ten-mile ride to his beautiful farm home, we again received much kind consideration. He not only does well as a farmer, but he does remarkably well as Bishop's agent, having recently been appointed. Sunday, December 11, had been announced as the opening of our series of meetings to be held in the church. At 10 a. m., Sunday school held its session, presided over ably by Sr. Florence Holmes as superintendent and Bro. Dale Holmes as assistant; at 11 a. m., preaching by the writer, and the work began to take shape from that on till the close, which came the following Sunday evening, holding service each evening and twice on Sundays. A good, grand time was had from beginning to finish, resulting in seven baptisms, which is only the beginning of what I believe to be a new era for the work in that place.

We visited a number, both inside and out of the church during our stay, including our invalid brother, James Epperly, whom we administered to. We trust the Lord will bless him, for he is a good, clean man. We also blessed two children. Those baptized were all heads of families except two; they are two promising young men, named Zergenhorn. More especially are we looking for good results from this Zergenhorn family, as they were formerly associated with the Apostolic Church. In all our work we were ably assisted by Bro. D. S. Holmes, who still presides over the Buffalo Prairie Branch; also by Brn. C. L. and Dale Holmes, and once by Uncle Malvin Holmes, of Joy, who could not be persuaded to stay at home.

After enjoying the kindness of all the Saints and friends there, especially Charles and Florence Holmes, we returned to Kewanee December 20, and have taken up the routine of work. I would be happy to tell of much progress in our branch, but I can not honestly do it. However, the young ladies of the branch held their bazaar on December 6, which was a success, considering the work was done, as is nearly always the case, by a few. One sad event was the accident and death of Bro. Charles Holt, who was hurt in the mine. The air is almost and altogether filled with Yuletide, leaving some glad and others sad. Withal allow us to wish "ye editors," and all the HERALD readers, a happy Christmas and a prosperous New Year.

Your brother and coworker,

JOSEPH ARBER.

KEWANEE, 902 NORTH MAIN STREET.

UTAH MISSION.

The work in this field goes on as usual. The missionary force is disposed about as follows: Elders H. N. Hansen and G. J. S. Abels are in the south, in Milford, I believe, Bro. Hansen as district president and Brother Abels in the interests of the finances of the mission. Brother Gowell was in Provo the last we heard from him, and Brother Stead in Ogden, while Charles S. and A. M. Chase are busy with the city work here. Oh, yes! and Elder J. Davis is in Malad, Idaho. We almost forgot that this field included a portion of Idaho.

The Saints of this city have decided to move from their present quarters (Labor Hall, Fourth S and State streets) to a hall on the corner of Ninth E and Fourth S. In their present quarters they can only have the hall Sundays, but where they are moving they will have the entire control of the premises, so come on, ye missionaries, and we can give you a chance to preach as long as you stay with us.

We are under the necessity of seating this place, as well as to supply such other furniture as is needed, but the Saints have pledged the amount needed, so we are busy now with the work of collecting and spending this fund. That is, a committee of three of us, consisting of Sister Dykes, Bro. John Hall, and the writer are so engaged.

We are intending to observe January 1 as rally day and follow up with a week's effort in our new quarters. How much success we may have we know not, but we will make an honest try.

Our last sacrament day here was a very pleasant and profitable one. Brn. H. N. Hansen and G. J. S. Abels were with us and had charge of the meeting. We commenced the day with a baptism at 9 o'clock and followed with Sunday school at 10, sacrament at eleven, business meeting at noon; then we spent the afternoon carrying the emblems to the "shut-ins," and in the evening Brother Abels gave us a talk on the financial law and our duty in connection therewith. Brn. Hansen and Abels, with Charles and Alice Chase, were with the Saints at Midvale in their communion service in the afternoon of that day, going out in the "Missionary Chariot."

We have baptized three here in the last month, all former members of the dominant church here, an entire family of son and his wife and aged father, and blessed the three children. This all came about from the son attending and becoming interested in our street meetings here; next he called for and read the Church History, and talked the work to the rest of the family, (they are German, and only the son reads English,) then followed the "turning of the family to the Lord." This brother is still busy among his neighbors and will hold a "home class" at his place each Wednesday night for his German friends and neighbors. This is Bro. Henry Newman, and if he continues his interest and faithful efforts in the cause will, some time, be an instrument for good in the cause.

Our normal class, in charge of Alice Chase, is progressing nicely, while the Zion's Religio-Literary Society is moving along in the usual lines. The audiences at the hall are growing steadily, reaching as high as sixty or more, and while last Sunday was very rainy and damp the attendance was about thirty. The mid week cottage meetings are growing in interest, and a good spirit is with us here.

Ever laboring and praying for the advancement of the cause,
A. M. CHASE.

Conference Minutes.

BRITISH ISLES MISSION.—Annual conference met in the Priestley Road meeting house at 6.40 p. m. on July 30, 1910. Apostles G. T. Griffiths and J. W. Rushton were in charge. Remarks were made by Brother Rushton, who then introduced Brother Griffiths to the assembly as his successor in charge of the mission, who then said that he hoped he would have our support. We are all brethren in Christ, not English, Irish, Dutch, or American. Brother Rushton was chosen to assist in conducting the business of the conference. Brother Griffiths mentioned that this was a priesthood conference and therefore he arranged the ministry present according to their several offices. The minutes of 1909 were now read when an item of nine pounds in the balance of the financial secretary was altered to nineteen pounds. Bro. F. Smith was appointed deacon, with power to call to his assistance, also Bro. Thomas Jones as chorister and organist, with similar power. Bro. Joseph Dewsnup, financial secretary, asked the conference to certify his cash balance. This was done by resolution. The report of the late mission president was read and the hymn, "Nearer my God to thee," was sung. Missionary reports were read from William H. Greenwood, for Leeds; William Newton for Southwestern England and London; Rees Jenkins (Seventy) for Western Wales; G. W. Leggott, Manchester District; Thomas Jones, Wales; Districts: H. Greenwood, Manchester District; Elder E. J. Trapp, Eastern Wales; Elder J. G. Jenkins, Western Wales; Elder John Austin, Sheffield; Elder William Ecclestone, Birmingham. Evangelical ministers: Joseph R. Greenwood (Stafford). The report of the financial secretary showed that he had received during the year from all sources £19, 19s, 11d, and expended £12, 19s, 11d. Tracts, etc. (sales account) receipts, £1, 1s, 3½d; Expenditures, 3s, 9d. Conference account (Manchester) 1909, receipts £6, 7s, 10½d; expenditures, £11, 3s, 7½d. One thousand shillings fund receipt: £12, 5s, 10d; expenditure, £1, 12s, 6½d. Cash balances account shows cash £31, 3s, 8½d; contra £4, 15s, 9d; leaving a net balance from all accounts of £26, 7s, 11½d. A verbal report was presented by Bro. J. W. Rushton as book agent to the mission during the year. The secretary then read the report of the committee on mission rules. Here followed the proposed rules which were considered seriatim on Monday, the 1st. Announcements were made by Brother Griffiths for the Sabbath. On Sunday, July 31, the Saints met in prayer at 9 a. m., under the presidency of High Priests William Newton, Henry Greenwood, and Thomas Taylor. At 10.45 a. m. a preaching service in charge of Elders E. B. Morgan and Thomas Jones. Apostle G. T. Griffiths discoursed from Hebrews 6: 12. It was a most encouraging and timely address. At 2.30 p. m. a fellowship meeting in charge of G. T. Griffiths was held. He was assisted by James Baty and J. R. Greenwood, and G. S. Greenwood of Stafford. These brethren are all veterans of the mission, and were evidently imbued with the old fire. Many stirring testimonies were borne, and the gifts of tongues and interpretation were present. During the meeting Patriarch James Baty related how on July 10, it was shown to him that the work in this land would in the near future be widely spread, and one of the main factors used in this forward movement would be the Doctrine and Covenants. During the interval between afternoon and evening meetings patriarchal blessings were conferred on George Gaydon, (Bulwell,) Alfred Jones, (Nantyglo,) Sister B. Gill, (Gloucester,) and Sister A. Harris, (Gloucester,) by James Baty; and on Sister Jones, (Lydney,) Bro. P. Miles, (Gloucester,) David Edwards, (Trewlaw,) and B. A. Kendrick, (Handsworth,) by Bro. Joseph R. Greenwood. At 6 p. m. the chair was occupied by Rees Jenkins, assisted by Elder G. W. Leggott. Hymns were sung and 1 Corinthians 3: 9 read. A solo entitled, "Do something for Jesus to-day," was sung by Sister Green, of Manchester. The speaker was Brother Rushton. His text was 1 Corinthians 3: 9. His theme, Cooperation—workers together with God. "Nearer my God to thee," was sung by Sister Edwards, of Birmingham. On Monday, August 1, conference resumed its sittings at 10 a. m. Brother Griffiths occupied the chair, assisted by Bro. J. W. Rushton. Brother Griffiths exhorted the ministry to unity, brotherly love, and cooperation. The minutes of Saturday were read, after which Bro. G. W. Leggott wished to have the words "Elder George W. Leggott reports verbally" inserted in the conference minutes of August 6, 1909. This request was acceded to. The report of the priests' quorum was presented by its secretary, Bro. Edward Maloney. The conference decided to receive the report of the committee on rules and proceed to the consideration of the same. After considerable discussion the rules and by-laws governing mission conferences were adopted. It was now resolved that we sustain the appointment of General Conference, after which the assembly arose for tea. On reassembling Elder W. R. Armstrong was sustained as mission secretary, and Elder J. W. Taylor as assistant secretary, Brother Armstrong as local historian, and Elder Joseph Dewsnup as financial secretary and treasurer of the mission. Votes of thanks were now awarded the catering and locating committee, the musicians, deacons, secretaries, and stenographers. Bro. J. W. Rushton here pointed out that the mission book agent was Bro. J. W. Armstrong of 6 January street, C upon M, Manchester. This was approved of by vote of the assembly. The secretary of the Sixth Quorum of Priests, Bro. Edward Maloney, verbally reported that Bro. A. Hall, of Manchester, had been chosen president of the priests' quorum, with counselors R. W. Smith and A. T. Trapp. Conference next reelected its retiring auditor for three years. All the leading quorums of the church were sustained by a standing vote, which was unanimous. By resolution it was decided that the place to hold the next conference be left to the mission president and officers. By resolution it was ordered to be placed on the minutes that we had received an article entitled "The prophetic mission of the 'Choice See'" confirmed by astronomical science," from Elder William Tubb, of Toronto. The meeting now adjourned to meet at 6.45. The conference met later and the following statement by Apostle G. T. Griffiths was presented to the meeting. In answer to a query respecting the prerogatives and recognition of the British Isles Mission conference said: "I called the attention of this assembly to resolution 352 of Book of Resolutions, 'Resolved that this committee recommends that mission and district conferences may be composed of both the ministry and members residing within the limits of said conferences and that such shall be entitled to voice and vote; or they may, if such bodies shall deem it best for their interest, adopt the rules governing the composition and organization of General Conference as set forth in the Rules of Order and Rules of Representation.'" Firstly, We learn from this resolution that the General Conference recognizes mission conferences, Secondly, that the priesthood and the membership can have voice and vote, this matter to be decided by the conferences themselves. Thirdly, that they have a right to adopt rules to govern themselves providing, of course, that said rules are not in conflict with the rules governing the general church. Therefore, every member composing such conferences shall be submissive to the rules or by-laws adopted for the government of the said body, as it would be bad policy and detrimental to our position if the minority would not subject itself to the rules adopted by the majority. All Latter Day Saints are supposed to be governed by the laws of common consent. In case any member of the body should be of the opinion that any rule adopted by the majority is in conflict with the general laws of the church, he should make his grievance known to the president of the mission, who by virtue of his appointment is president of the mission conference, and ask for his decision thereon, and should the decision of the president be unsatisfactory to the party appealing, he should then appeal from the decision to the quorum of the twelve at its next sitting, which will take up the matter and pass upon it in due course. In the meantime all parties concerned should be patient and be willing to abide by the decision, whether it be favorable or unfavorable, and thereby avoid unnecessary controversy and contention in the mission. As minister in charge I shall expect all the traveling ministry to respect the rules adopted by the mission conference, and in case they are not in harmony with any of the said rules that they will proceed according to the course that I have herein outlined. What applies to the traveling ministry also applies to others that are members of the said mission conferences. If any person or persons persist in opposing any of the said rules and fail to labor in harmony with the instructions herein given, thereby causing dissension and contention in the mission, I shall feel it to be my duty to place such under silence till the matter has been adjusted by the higher authorities of the church. In conclusion I may say that I do not anticipate that I shall ever have occasion to resort to such a course. Brother Griffiths, in speaking to the traveling ministry, said that he would lean heavily upon them. He said that he would visit the branches and would seek to be in union with the Saints. Bro. William Newton, and Thomas Taylor next administered the ordinance for the sick to Brother Armstrong and then Bro. T. J. Trapp was ordained second counselor to the president of the Sixth Quorum of priests by Apostles J. W. Rush-ton and G. T. Griffiths. Adjourned. Elder W. R. Armstrong, mission secretary, 6 January street, C upon M, Manchester, England.

MOBILE.—District met in conference with the Bay Minnette Branch, December 10, 1910, at 10 a. m.; district president W. L. Booker in the chair. In the absence of the district secretary, Bro. Albert Warr was chosen clerk pro tem, with the right to choose his assistant. Bro. A. G. Miller was chosen assistant. Motion prevailed to grant all visiting members the right of deliberation in the meetings. Reports from the different branches were heard: Three Rivers 132, Bay Minnette 120, Theodore 96, Horse Shoe 11. Elders reporting: A. E. Vanleave baptized 7, G. W. Sherman, O. O. Tillman, W. L. Booker, F. P. Scarelliff, W. J. Booker baptized 2, G. T. Chute, F. M. Slover. Priests reporting: A. G. Miller, Lester Miller, Teacher D. W. Sherman. Bishop's agent report. Collected for tithing and free will offerings since last report, $52.85; on hand last report, $54.75. Paid out to Sr. N. L. Booker $54. Money orders, 36 cents; to W. T. Pounds $10. Due church, $42.24. Motion prevailed to elect three as a committee, consisting of G. T. Chute, W. J. Booker, and E. A. Bankester, to audit the Bishop's agent's books. Committee reported as finding the report correct. Report of the tent committee was heard, collected, $12.50. Motion prevailed to elect Bro. and Sr. A. E. Vanleave on the tent committee. Motion prevailed to declare the Perseverance Branch disorganized, and the members become the members of the Bay Minnette Branch; all the members to be given letter of removal from the Bay Minnette Branch, if requested. Motion prevailed that the secretary of the district be requested to call upon the clerk of the Perseverance Branch to send all records and documents to the clerk of the Bay Minnette Branch. Motion prevailed that the ordination of Bro. Martin King to the office of elder be left in the hands of the district president. Motion prevailed that the district president make provisions for the ordination of Bro. James Cooper to the office of priest, and Bro. James Chestnut to the office of teacher. Meeting adjourned until 3.30 p. m., after which it was called to order by W. L. Booker. Song number 34 in Zion's Praises was sung. Minutes of the morning's session were read and accepted. Theodore Branch and Bay Minnette Branch were nominated for the next conference. Theodore was decided upon. Motion prevailed to leave the time of the next conference in the hands of the district president. Preaching at 7 by A. G. Miller and F. M. Slover. Prayer meeting at 4 p. m., W. L. Booker in charge. Meeting adjourned to meet with the Theodore Branch at the call of the district president.

Notice to Stake and District Secretaries.

ZION'S RELIGIO-LITERARY SOCIETY.

Please remember that the first of the year is the time for your annual report to the General Secretary. These reports should be prompt, as a delay by you in reporting to the secretary may cause her delay in getting her report ready for the General Convention. There is nothing better than being on time in these matters. Be sure to give names of stake, district, or local if not in an organized district; enrollment, average attendance, home class members, and list of officers with their addresses.

MRS. M. A. ETZENHOUSER, General Secretary.
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Important Notice.

Saints of Southern Indiana District will please take notice that I am moving back to New Albany. Please send all mail and tithing to my new address. Please destroy all old addresses, as this notice will also be for all others interested.

Died.

HOLT.—Charles Holt was born February 3, 1869, at Selford, Lincolnshire, England, and died November 27, in the Saint Francis Hospital, Kewanee, as the result of a sad accident in the Kewanee coal mine. He was married to Sarah Ellen Davis in 1892, and united with the Reorganized Church September 3, 1893, being baptized by his brother-in-law Elder William Willets. He had lived in Kewanee the last twelve years. He leaves to mourn a wife, two daughters, two sons, also his mother in California, besides a host of relatives and friends, as was in evidence at the funeral when the church was filled in the auditorium and basement, besides a number who could not get admittance. The funeral was one of the largest held in this city. The service was in charge of Brethren Arber and John Chisnall. The sermon was preached by Bro. Joseph Arber. Our brother was highly esteemed by all. He was an affectionate husband and father. In the funeral procession were members of the Miners' Union, the Boilermakers' Union, and the Odd Fellows, who had charge at the grave. Burial was at the Pleasant View Cemetery.

FRY.—Henry Fry was born in Clay County, Indiana, May 28, 1833, and died November 23, 1910, at his home in Missouri Valley, after an illness of five weeks, aged 77 years, 7 months, 26 days. Came to Harrison County, Iowa, in 1854, married Lucinda Coon November 4, 1858. To this union seven children came, of whom four sons, Henry L., George E., James R. and Lorenzo, with his wife remain. He united with the church October 5, 1890. Funeral services from the home, November 25. Sermon by D. R. Chambers, assisted by J. S. McDonald.

CHIMNEY.—Byron Chimney was born in Marion County, Iowa, and died December 22, 1910. Was married to Miss Elizabeth Donaldson by Henry Kemp in 1887; to this union were born 3 sons and 1 daughter. One son preceded the father to the better land. He was baptized in 1891, by Henry Kemp, at Thurman, Iowa. Funeral services were held at Mount Zion Church, by N. J. Mortimore.

BATEMAN.—Fray Arnold Bateman, son of Mr. Andrew J. and Sr. Ida Bell Bateman, was born May 1, 1907, died December 16, 1910, of membranous croup, near Depew, Douglas County, Missouri. Funeral service at the home of Bro. and Sr. C. C. Walker, by Elder J. C. Chrestensen. The remains were laid to rest in the chapel cemetery.

An Amazing Success.

There never was a time in the history of the world when good stories and articles could command such prices as they do to-day. It is an extremely expensive thing to publish a high-class magazine nowadays, filled with the best work of the most famous authors and artists. Yet it is exactly such a magazine that The Chicago Record-Herald furnishes as an integral part of its Sunday issue.

The Sunday Magazine of The Record-Herald compares favorably with the best weeklies and monthlies, and has some merits peculiar to itself. Its outward form and its cover pictures in colors are beautiful. The most famous writers and illustrators contribute to it. Some of the choicest novels of the year are published serially in its columns before they see the light in book form. Its editor has secured exclusive control of the writings of the best new humorist who has risen to fame in the last decade. To furnish such a magazine with every copy of a big Sunday newspaper is an amazing venture, yet several years of complete success have proved the wisdom of the idea. Nothing else of the kind can touch the Sunday Magazine of The Record-Herald in popular interest and literary excellence.

Breeding New Plants.

New purposes are constantly entering into the breeding of plants. We are producing maize with extra high content of starch, and other forms with high content of oil. The Germans breed potatoes for alcohol production and other special uses. We need peaches and other fruits for extra long shipment. We have peas and sweet corn specially adapted to canning. We are beginning to breed for disease-resisting qualities. The United States Department of Agriculture is working on a wilt-resisting cotton and watermelon, a rust resisting oat, and similar things. The North Dakota experiment station is producing a disease-resisting flax. The Maine and Vermont experiment stations are investigating the subject of blight-proof potatoes. We shall probably breed blight-resisting pears, disease-free ginseng, and blight-proof tomatoes. We already have a wilt-resisting and nematoid-resisting cowpea, although not the result of direct breeding. We are constantly giving more attention to securing plants that have the desired qualities inherent in themselves rather than in obtaining these qualities by means outside the plants.—From L. H. Bailey's "An Iowa Plant Breeder" in the January Century.

The Greater "Youth's Companion."

Since its enlargement by the addition of an amount of reading in the year equal to four hundred ordinary magazine pages, The Youth's Companion can offer even a wider range of wholesome entertainment than ever before; but the character of the paper's contents remains the same, and the subscription price, $1.75, is unchanged.

Every boy will eagerly look for the articles on skill in sports and pastimes and how to develop it.

The girls will find many novel and practical suggestions which will be helpful in their daily life.

For the family in general, hints for the profitable occupation of winter evenings, for increasing the happiness and comfort of the household.

This reading is all in addition to the ordinary treasury of stories, articles by celebrated men and women, the unequalled miscellany, the invaluable doctor's article, the terse notes on what is going on in all fields of human activity.

It will cost you nothing to send for the beautiful Announcement of The Companion for 1911, and we will send with it sample copies of the paper.

Do not forget that the new subscriber for 1911 receives free The Companion's Art Calendar for 1911, lithographed in twelve colors and gold.

HERESY.

SERMON BY ELDER ELBERT A. SMITH, DELIVERED
NOVEMBER 20, 1910, AT LAMONI, IOWA.

REPORTED BY ESTELLA WIGHT.

Then Paul, after that the governor had beckoned unto him to speak, answered, Forasmuch as I know that thou hast been of many years a judge unto this nation, I do the more cheerfully answer for myself: because that thou mayest understand, that there are yet but twelve days since I went up to Jerusalem for worship. And they neither found me in the temple disputing with any man, neither raising up the people, neither in the synagogues, nor in the city: neither can they prove the things whereof they now accuse me. But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets: and have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust.

I have read a part of the twenty-fourth chapter of Acts. Please notice especially these words:

But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets.

HERESY DEFINED.

The subject that I have selected for our consideration this morning is heresy. In the past I have met people, some of them members of our own church, men of an independent turn of mind, who have taken pleasure in announcing, or at least intimating, that they were heretics. Now I presume these men did not mean just what they said. I take it that they were simply playing at heresy, because heresy is a grave and serious error. Heresy is thus defined: "Rejection of or erroneous belief in regard to some fundamental belief or doctrine."

Heresy in the Christian church, then, would be rejection of or erroneous belief regarding some fundamental doctrine of Christ's religion. And it is further defined in the Scriptures, in Galatians, the fifth chapter, beginning with the 19th verse:

Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, sedition, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like.

We find heresy there classed with such sins as idolatry, adultery, and murder; and in the third chapter of Titus we read this:

A man that is an heretic after the first and second admonition reject; knowing that he that is such is subverted, and sinneth, being condemned of himself.

We learn, then, that the heretic has no fellowship in the church of God by right, and I believe that when we turn back the pages of history we will find more to sustain us in the idea that heresy is a great crime and sin. You remember what Paul said concerning the church in his day; that he knew that after his departure grievous wolves should enter in, not sparing the flock, and even among themselves men should arise teaching perverse things to draw away disciples. When we read profane history of the church, we find that there arose within the church among other heretics those known as the Nicolaitans, whose doctrine the Bible tells us God hated. Cruden and other authorities tell us that their heresy was a community of wives; and we need but to turn back the pages of our own history, less than seventy years, and we will discover that certain heresies of a similar nature were introduced into the church, bringing great disaster, so much so that the period of time from 1844 until 1852 was known as the dark and cloudy day, and the very life of the church seemed to be threatened.

THE STRAIGHT AND NARROW PATH.

How can heresy be anything else than dangerous when it is a departure from the doctrine of Christ—a rejection of fundamental principles? We speak about the plan of salvation as the "straight and narrow path." We get that idea from the statement that Christ made: "Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

Now there is one thought in connection with that statement of a straight and narrow path that I have never heard expressed by anyone, and that is: that when you find a straight path it is one that has been laid out with care and thought. You never saw a path across the plains made by the cowboys, or a trail made by the stage, or a road through the forest, that was straight. When men proceed without care and others follow them, they follow the line of least resistance, going here and there around obstacles. You notice the path running diagonally across the church park out here and you will find that it is quite straight; but some one set the trees out in straight rows and this formed a guide for the feet of those who made the path across the lot. But where men have not had a guide, they have not made a straight path. If you find a roadway anywhere that is absolutely straight, you can realize that it has been laid down by survey, or in some other way with care and forethought.

And so, when we speak of the plan of salvation, of the straight and narrow way, we realize that Christ himself laid it down with precision in the approved manner, and that he laid it down with care and forethought, in harmony with everlasting and divine truth, and the very least departure from that straight and narrow way will produce a crooked path, and will be correspondingly dangerous. And that is what heresy is, a departure from the straight and narrow path, either individually or collectively.

But I call your attention to the fact that while there is heresy that is heresy, there is also that which is only called heresy of men; and that is the confession of Paul, "after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers." This is his justification, "believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets."

OUR EXPERIENCE.

I believe that our experience and the experience of the church, and especially the early leaders in the church, has in many things paralleled the experience of Paul. Let us recount the events that led up to this declaration of his, and observe the parallel.

The events that led up to this declaration of his are recorded in some two or three chapters of the book of Acts. We find that in the first place Paul went up to the temple to purify himself and worship God as was his right. But when the Jews heard that he was in the temple they rushed together with one accord, and under the excuse that he was polluting the temple, they dragged him out into the street and began beating him to death. Now will you not think of that for a moment? These men were those of whom Christ said that they were hypocrites; that they were whited sepulchers; pleasing externally, but inwardly filled with dead men's bones and all manner of corruption. They were afraid that Paul would pollute their temple. Paul—perhaps the only chosen and authorized representative of God that went into the temple that day, unless we include those men who went with him as his comrades.

But we fully believe that we have had a similar experience in this day, when our representative went to the federation of churches that met in Philadelphia, representing many different religious denominations, and the people representing those churches were afraid to let us in. And when we have been rejected by ministerial alliances in various places. We will not dwell on the situation. I believe that you can see the parallel.

Those men dragged Paul out and began beating him to death, but the chief captain of the Roman soldiers, hearing the commotion, came rushing down with his soldiers and rescued him from their hands, and took him up the steps into the castle. But Paul, although this mob was following after him so that the soldiers were obliged to carry him, could not be silent. He was a man that was irrepressible. They never could silence Paul. He wanted one more word, and they granted him the word, so he came out and stood on the stairs and beckoned the people, and when he got silence he addressed them, and related to them his religious experience; told them how Christ had appeared to him and commissioned him to preach his gospel. And when they had heard him until they could endure it no longer they tore off their clothes, and cried out, and cast dust into the air. Was not that a bright and reasonable thing to do? When they could not meet him in debate or argument they threw dust in the air. Yet I believe we have seen that to-day. We have seen the dust thrown in the air when men could not meet our argument.

The captain took Paul away, and on the next day he was presented before a council of the Jews, both Pharisees and Sadducees, who were to judge his acts. They listened to the charge that was made against him, and unto the plea that he made. But Paul was a shrewd man and did not hesitate to take advantage of circumstances when he could do so justly, and he saw that the council was divided against itself. There were some Pharisees and some Sadducees, and while the Pharisees believed in the resurrection, the Sadducees did not believe in the resurrection, and yet both called Paul a heretic. They were divided among themselves on fundamental principles, and so it is absolutely certain that some of them themselves were heretics; one or the other had departed from the fundamental principles of the doctrine of God.

And so I believe it is with us to-day and has been for many years past. Many religious denominations brand us as heretics, but they are divided among themselves upon the fundamental principles, and it is absolutely certain that some of them are heretics, and we say to them, Before you call us heretics you must come to a unity yourselves, because some one is wrong.

And so this council broke up in a quarrel among themselves, and the chief captain took Paul away and put him in a safe place. Then these Jews, being unable to reach Paul by law, at least forty of them, took a pledge that they would kill him. They said, "We will neither eat nor drink until we have killed Paul." They must have gone hungry and thirsty for a long time, for the chief captain took Paul away and conveyed him to the governor, so that they could not keep their vow to kill him.

You remember how it was with Joseph Smith when he was brought before the civil authorities. He was charged with sedition, just as Paul was, and sedition is defined as "conduct tending to treason; excitement of discontent toward the government." When Joseph Smith could not be reached in any other way, the people took advantage of the civil courts, and when he could not be reached by the law they took the same ground that these Jews did, and said, "If the law will not reach him, powder and bullets will," and they were more successful than the Jews were in carrying out their threat.

But we believe that our people not only have not been heretical, but they have not been guilty of sedition or treason toward civil governments. They have been loyal to their country, and they have honored the rulers of their country. When we come to questions of morals and ethics, we believe that our people have taken the lead.

For instance, you take the question of temperance, and you note that at the last election in the State of Missouri the people were called upon to vote on the question as to whether they should have a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the State of Missouri. They had a very warm campaign, and I want to read you an extract from a personal letter—received from President Smith just two or three days ago. He said:

I had the pleasure of voting last Tuesday on the question of prohibition in Missouri. Independence has the distinction of being the only large city in the State that went dry. It went dry by almost two hundred majority, and it was the vote in our two wards, one and four. The majority in these two wards was sufficiently large to overcome the majority for the wet in the second and third wards of one hundred and twenty-three, and give something like two hundred majority for the city.

Almost all of the residents in the two wards named are Latter Day Saints, and the vote was "dry" by a majority sufficiently large to overcome the large majority that the liquor men had in the other two wards. I understand the Saint Louis papers have made comment on that fact, and here is a quotation from the Kansas City Times, of November 15, just after the election:

Independence went dry by a majority of two hundred and seven. That vote is explained by the stand taken by the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, whose members, including five hundred voters, declared for the abolition of saloons.

This is but one of the many questions on which I believe we have taken a correct stand in the eyes of the world. I remember some years ago the Kansas City Star had an article in it which declared that the Saints were returning to Independence, and it called their return a "Mormon menace." Some one replied that the Mormons were chiefly a menace to saloons, because the saloon keepers would starve to death if they had to depend on Latter Day Saints for their patronage. I believe we have justified that vindication. The Latter Day Saints' Church is a menace. It is a menace to the saloon and the red-light district and the brewery, and all manner of vice and crime, and I say, God speed the day when we can have more power, that we can put these things down.

TWO MISTAKES.

But I return more directly to our subject, and say that in the past men were right when they abhorred heresy. These Jews were right when they abhorred heresy, because heresy is a sin. But these men and men of later years were guilty of two mistakes. The first mistake was in their method of judging heresy. They had been taught to think that the man who departed from the creeds was a heretic, whereas, he may or may not have been a heretic. That depends on whether or not the creeds were right, and the chances are that the creeds were wrong, because as a rule man-made creeds have been wrong. If they had judged men on the charge of heresy, and had taken the statements of Paul, and had determined whether or not they were in harmony with the things written in the law and the prophets, they would have taken a correct stand; but they made a mistake when they made the creeds the basis of their judgment. Men who differed from the creeds when the creeds were wrong were not heretics; they were justified in the law. But the tendency was to condemn the man who dared to differ from the creeds.

I will read an extract from the Compendium of the Laws of the Church of Scotland, published in Edinburgh in 1840, at a period when our people were being persecuted, which indicates the sentiment of the people in that day:

It is ordained, That no sort of persons, of whatever quality or degree, be permitted to speak or write against the Confession of Faith, concluded on by this Kirk, both concerning doctrine and discipline; or against that Assembly, or any act thereof, upon the pain of censure.

There was a disposition with men to prevent individuals from examining the creeds to see whether they were right or wrong, and if they did examine them and discover errors to prevent them from making it known to the people. Heresy in the popular mind represented a departure from the things in the creeds and not from the things taught in the law and in the prophets. That was simply so-called heresy.

Judged by these standards many men like Luther and Wesley and Calvin and Huss, John the Baptist, Jeremiah, and even Christ himself were condemned as heretics, and some of them were put to death.

That brings us to the next mistake that was made, and that was the method of treating the heretic; and you know what that method was. You know what they did to John Huss under the rule of the Catholic Church. They took him out, tied him to a stake, heaped fagots about him and set fire to them and burned him to death, then gathered up his ashes and scattered them over the river. You remember what the Protestants did to Servetus. They did very much the same thing with him in Geneva in 1553. Seven years ago they built a monument to him in Geneva commemorating his life; but in that age he was condemned as a heretic and put to death.

Now when I was a boy and went to school they divided humanity into five classes: savage, barbarian, semicivilized, civilized, and enlightened; and we proudly pat ourselves on the back and class ourselves as being enlightened. But there are men living to-day, and present this morning, who remember when Joseph Smith was put to death, not exactly as Huss was, but he was put to death; and it was because of his religious convictions. Brother Briggs is old enough to remember when that occurred. It was not because of his private life; it was because of the religious teachings to which he held. The trouble began at the very beginning, when he came back from his prayers and said that the angel told him that the creeds were all wrong. And I want to tell you that that statement and the fact that they held to it was the beginning and the root of all their persecution. There may have been other things that entered in, such as their opposition to slavery, and some unwise acts, but that was the root of all their trouble—the religious stand they took in opposition to accepted creeds and tenets.

These people, then, made a mistake in the past, first in their methods of judging heresy, and second in their method of treating it. We have told us in the chapter of Titus that I have quoted that the only penalty that the church could affix or bring upon a heretic was to disfellowship him, after the first and second admonition, if his crime was of sufficient importance to justify that treatment.

THE HERETIC.

The church that we represent, and I believe it is the church of God, has in the past been very liberal in its views. We trust that it always will be so. We have granted our members great latitude in their belief, and we have given them great liberty in the expression of that belief; and while there is considerable division among us on certain points we have tried no one for heresy, because the differences have mostly been those that have not involved fundamental principles, and we should be very careful how we condemn our people who do not see as we do concerning certain things that are not fundamental in their character. We always want to be liberal in our attitude and our treatment of others, but I do hold that if there shall arise men teaching heresy of a nature that shall threaten the unity and the life of the church, or that shall destroy or injure those that shall accept it, that it is our right and privilege to deal with those individuals. I find foundation for that belief in the scripture that I have already read, and in the precedent set by the church in 1844. In the Times and Seasons, the official organ of the church, February 1, 1844, I find a notice signed by the First Presidency, Joseph and Hyrum Smith. It says:

As we have lately been credibly informed that an elder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, by the name of Hiram Brown, has been preaching polygamy, and other false and corrupt doctrines, in the County of Lapeer, State of Michigan:

This is to notify him and the church in general, that he has been cut off from the church for his iniquity.

A little bit later, March 15 of the same year, the Times and Seasons had this notice, signed by Hyrum Smith, concerning the same doctrine:

Any man that is found teaching privately or publicly any such doctrine, is culpable, and will stand a chance to be brought before the High Council, and lose his license and membership also.

Joseph F. Smith, president of the church in Utah, tells us that his father, Hyrum Smith, at that very time, was teaching and practicing this heresy of polygamy. I say that if that is true, then the father of Joseph F. Smith should have had a dose of his own medicine. He should have been brought before the high council, should have been tried, and his membership should have been taken from him.

I am told that Joseph Smith was teaching the same heresy at that time. I say, if that was the case, he should have been tried, and if he would not repent he should have been rejected.

However, I do not believe these charges. I will say concerning Brigham Young and others who later brought in the same heresy, answering the description given in the second chapter of Second Peter, where it is said:

There were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction, (and this was taught privately and practiced privately) that when they were brought before the quorums of the church they should have been tried and rejected as heretics. Instead of that the people accepted them as leaders and tolerated their doctrines.

But there were men who took their stand in opposition to such doctrines. They were prepared to accept all fundamental doctrines taught in the standard books, the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, and to reject all doctrines condemned by those books. That stand has been maintained by the Reorganization. It has placed us in a peculiar position. While we have opposed false doctrines and have clung to original standards, all the time the world, misunderstanding us, has classed us with the heretics, even as Paul was classed in his day.

So to-day, with Paul, we make our confession that after the way that men call heresy worship we the God of our fathers. With him we must find our justification in the fact that we believe all things written in the law and the prophets. We are not heretics, we are merely called heretics. We are the true enemies of heresy; the real defenders of the faith.

May God bless us and help us to follow the straight and narrow path.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Central Church people, of Kansas City, are arranging for their annual missionary meetings, to be held from March 12 to 26. An effort will be made to secure Elder T. W. Williams for these services. The Kansas City Saints have made a good choice of speakers, and we trust that the meetings will be successful.

The smallest state in all Europe has been having a revolution, bloodless, political. The principality of Monaco is about eight miles square with a native resident population of only fifteen hundred souls, the voting roll to contain six hundred and fifty. But the average number of foreigners who frequent the place is fifteen thousand! and therein lies the secret of the revolution. This is a noted gambling resort which brings in a princely sum in the shape of revenue. Heretofore, Prince Albert was the ruler of the people and the most absolute monarch in the list of crowned heads. The people have the "constitution fever" and propose to overturn the regime and handle the revenue of this "gambling hell" according to their own will. The first parliament will number eighteen representatives, and it will be interesting to note whether the tone of the place will improve under democracy. They had no taxes before and Monaco has been noted as the cheapest place to live in Europe. The soil is rich and the fisheries are fine; but there have been more suicides there than in any place on earth.

On New Year's Day President Taft shook hands with 5,625 people. This was hard on the right hand and yet we can't say this was a "one-sided affair."

TITHING AND CONSECRATION, AS WE VIEW IT.

BY COUNSELOR GEORGE H. HILLIARD, OF THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC.

CHAPTER 6.

As far back as in the days of Abraham tithing was observed among the people of God. The word, in its primary meaning, signifies tenth, a tenth of anything; especially in the Lord's work, a tenth was required. This seemed to be observed to raise means to carry on the gospel work in the days of Melchisedec and Abraham. We find this in Genesis 14: 20, and Paul in Hebrews 7, referring to it, says that he gave a tenth part of all to Melchisedec. This may refer only to the spoils Abraham had taken in his war with the kings in this case; but that being a gospel dispensation it must have been a principle of the gospel as taught by the high priest, Melchisedec, or he would not have so practiced.

We are not left in doubt, however, on this point. Alma 10: 8, Book of Mormon, says: "And it was this same Melchisedec to whom Abraham paid tithes; yea, even our father Abraham paid tithes of one tenth part of all that he possessed."

This makes it plain that Abraham fully complied with this law as taught by Melchisedec. This was more than four hundred years before the law of Moses was given; hence part of the gospel. The Book of Mormon in this same connection, makes it a part of the means by which they entered into the rest of the Lord:

Now these ordinances were given after this manner, that thereby the people might look forward on the Son of God, it being a type of his order, or it being his order; and this, that they might look forward to him for a remission of their sins, that they might enter into the rest of the Lord.—Alma 10: 9, 10.

By this means, and complying with the other principles of the gospel, they retained a remission of their sins, as clearly indicated in the Book of Mormon, Mosiah 2: 42-45:

And now, for the sake of these things which I have spoken unto you; that is, for the sake of retaining a remission of your sins from day to day, that ye may walk guiltless before God, I would that ye should impart of your substance to the poor, every man according to that which he hath. . . . and see that all these things are done in wisdom and order; for it is not requisite that a man should run faster than he has strength. And again: it is expedient that he should be diligent, that thereby he might win the prize; therefore, all things must be done in order.

All things could not be done in wisdom and in order, each giving according to what he had, unless they had system, a rule, or law governing in their work. It seems this law of tithing obtained everywhere the gospel was had. Jacob understood this to be the Lord's plan when he said: "And of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee." This part of the gospel economy was continued under the administration of the law of Moses, for the support of the ministry. Hence they were to give one tenth.

And all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's: it is holy unto the Lord. . . . And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the flock, even of whatsoever passeth under the rod, the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord.—Leviticus 27: 30, 32.

If this was the Lord's, and holy unto him, then when renewed to Moses for the support of the ministry, and then the ministry required to tithe the tenth they received (Nehemiah 10: 38), it must have been necessary for all to observe it. Tithing, then, in its primary sense, to supply the needy, being part of God's great plan in the days of Melchisedec and Abraham and retained in Israel under Moses, it being one of the gospel principles, must of necessity continue after the law of Moses was fulfilled in Christ. Jesus included tithing in his teaching. (See Matthew 23: 20; Luke 11: 43.) Paul also in 2 Corinthians, 8th and 9th chapters, taught giving systematically: "Every one according to that which he hath." So we read in Proverbs 3: 9: "Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thine increase." If this was a gospel principle, it would necessarily be restored when the gospel was restored again in this dispensation.

When the Lord gave the law to the church in section 42: 5, he said:

And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach.

Now if giving one tenth was taught and practiced as a part of the gospel by Melchisedec and Abraham, as recorded in the Bible and Book of Mormon, and as we are told in the Doctrine and Covenants, as above cited, that we shall teach the principles of the gospel as contained in those books, can we omit tithing and yet be obedient to God's command?

But, say some, It does not say in section 42, "You shall pay one tenth," but says, "You shall consecrate." Yes, but it does say, before it names consecration, You shall teach what the other books contain, and both of the other books show one tenth was first taught and practiced as the law to begin with, in the gospel dispensation of Melchisedec. Then consecration came in afterwards.

First we read, Abraham paid one tenth, then afterwards, "tithes of all that he had, of all the riches which he possessed, which God had given him more than that which he had need." Now because Abraham may have tithed himself of all his surplus property or consecrated all above what he had need, it did not nullify the giving of one tenth, as exemplified in the case of Jacob, the grandson of Abraham, and his posterity after him. And because they were told on this continent that Abraham paid one tenth of all that he possessed, without making that part of the law void, they could do like Abraham, turn over all above what they had need, and thus go on to perfection.

The people never can comprehend all at once, hence we advance step by step. When the Lord gave the law in section 42, we already had the law of tithing in the other books which he cited and commanded us to teach. Joseph had men with various opinions to deal with then, as we have now, and those different opinions were no doubt the cause of the question being asked in 1838, when they were gathering at Far West, contemplating the building of a house and a city to the Lord. It was not unreasonable, in my judgment, for them to ask, "O Lord, show unto thy servants how much thou requirest of the properties of thy people for a tithing?" They already understood the law of tithing.

Now he requires all their surplus property, and tells what it is for. The conditions and the work now required it. All they could do was demanded; and after they should turn over as a tithe all their surplus property, or consecrate all above what they had need as stated in section 42: 10, which is the same thing in effect and for the same purpose; then the primary law of tithing for the priesthood would still be in force, as it was before the special work of building a house unto the Lord or laying the foundation of Zion had begun. While we build the house and city the priesthood who give all their time must live, and there is no special amount or allowance provided for in the law for them,—only their just wants and needs. And they are to receive the tithes of the people, pay their tithing out of that (Nehemiah 10), and then consecrate the balance above their needs when the law is fully kept. Or as in section 70, they may live from the proceeds of their work in the literary department, and then if there be more than they need, it shall be consecrated, as all others should do, for the poor and needy. And, "None are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God."

Sections 106 and 42 are in perfect harmony, as we view it. Section 42 says we shall teach the principles of the gospel as contained in the Bible and Book of Mormon. They both teach tithing and consecration to be carried out, as we reach the conditions requiring it. Section 106 teaches both tithing and consecration in itself, and the fact that it is more full in its statements does not make it contradict the other revelations. The Lord says:

The Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church (and it was accepted by resolution in 1878) was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto; and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to. In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, the quorums of the church in joint council should be appealed to, and their action and determination should govern. I inquired what quorums of the church were meant, and I was answered, the three quorums the decisions of which are provided for in the law—the presidency, the twelve, and the seventy.”

There was a controversy about section 106 at the time the above revelation was given. Some thought it was not in harmony with other revelations; but it, with all the other revelations in the book, also the Bible and Book of Mormon, had been accepted by the church, and the bishopric were willing to be governed by the books, believing then, as we do now, that they were in perfect harmony.

This was the Lord's opportunity to speak and settle this controversy. He did speak, and he said the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and counsel of the bishopric, taken as a whole. This should be sufficient for every man that is in the faith, when this section 106 was the one questioned at the time, and the Lord said to take all of them as accepted by the church. Let us stand by what the Lord has said, pay our tithing, one tenth of our increase, or what we have when we come into the church, file our inventory with the bishop, turn over our surplus property, as the time has come to do that, then go on making what we can in righteousness, and pay our tithing as required.

When we have thus rendered an account of our stewardship in time, as provided for in section 72: 1, and it has been decided by those appointed by the Lord in council with ourselves, what our just needs are, we can then move forward in our stewardship, with a realization that what we keep is consecrated to the Lord as fully as the surplus we turn over for the benefit of some one else; so we are accountable to God as stewards over our own property as agreed upon, or what we may receive from the bishop, if we had not enough for our just needs and wants.

Thus our individual responsibility continues, and all work together with God with the one object in view, that is, the building up of Zion and establishing God's kingdom on earth. Then every man will labor for Zion that labors in Zion, and he will consecrate all he can spare, as well as pay his tithing at the beginning, and cheerfully keep his tithing paid on his increase, and just as cheerfully consecrate and turn over into the Lord's common treasury all he can spare from time to time, so that the poor may be provided for, and equality be brought in and preserved, and the law of God be honored.

Those needing much in their stewardship should not waste any means or lavish it on themselves for their own aggrandizement, no more than those who need but little. Neither one should waste anything, but their ambitions should be to see how much they can put into the Lord's treasury, reserving for themselves only enough to make them comfortable and carry on their work successfully. Then no man would exhibit a desire for personal gain, but all be one in desire and object, seeking to build up Zion, and make everyone comfortable and happy; thus exemplifying our love for God and each other by what we do.

The Lord made Martin Harris an example unto the church, as stated in section 58: 7. It reads: "It is wisdom in me that my servant Martin Harris should be an example unto the church, in laying his moneys before the bishop of the church." Also in section 18: 5 we find he "was required to turn over part of his land" and tells how much. "Impart a portion of thy property; yea, even part of thy lands, and all save the support of thy family." This clearly defines the amount the Lord requires him to impart and the amount he shall retain. This is in perfect harmony with the law as given in section 42: 8, 9, 10.

And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, . . . and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me, . . . every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration, inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family. And again, if there shall be properties in the hands of the church, or any individuals of it, more than is necessary for their support, after this first consecration, which is a residue to be consecrated unto the bishop, it shall be kept to administer unto those who have not, from time to time, that every man who has need may be amply supplied, and receive according to his wants.

Again, paragraph 14:

And if thou obtainest more than that which would be for thy support, thou shalt give it unto my storehouse, that all things may be done according to that which I have said.

This would bring equality, and make us one in Christ.

"By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."

So let it be. To this end let us work and pray.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October, 1908.

We note that man is now paying his tribute to the air. He competes with the birds at his peril. Twenty-nine aviators were killed during 1910. Many of these deaths came as the result of indulging in the spiral glide and other extrahazardous maneuvers practiced merely to excite and please the spectators. The spectators got the thrills for which they paid, but at a terrible price.

Questionable Jokes Work Havoc in Homes.

When a war vessel blows up in a harbor, especially in the vicinity of Port Arthur, it is safe to believe that a torpedo has done the mischief. But when a home breaks up in a community the neighbors are left to guess which one of a hundred secret vices was to blame.

There is one such vice that seldom comes to light even in the most public trials for divorce. I fact, the principals in the tragedy may not themselves be able to trace the final disaster to its true root. But a very close student of human life has, over and over again, seen the most sacred ties broken by the curse of the "impure story."

One of the first misdemeanors committed by the average man in his married life is that of telling his young bride some unseemly joke that he has heard from the companions of his bachelor days. There may be women who are used to this disagreeable form of wit and have a natural relish for it, but they are few and far between, and it is only her timidity and the natural fear of offending her husband that prevent the average American girl from showing the disgust she feels at hearing this first exhibition of coarseness from the man she has just promised to "love, cherish, and obey."

It would be a heroic and worthy act on the part of every young bride to nip that habit in the bud with a fine flash of anger, and to forbid her husband telling her any story after her marriage that he would not tell her before. For if she listens once she is lost. Nothing is more natural and inevitable than for a man to judge a woman by himself. If his own heart is impure he believes the same elements are only dormant, if not really active, in his wife's. If, therefore, she laughs "out of consideration," he thinks she does it out of approbation, and tells her another and another until she has lost the right to protest.

Has anyone ever measured the corrupting power of impure stories? They spoil the banquets where they are told. They pollute the very atmosphere of student's rooms and business men's offices. No man who actually rolls a filthy joke like a sweet morsel under his tongue can be a Christian gentleman. This hideous vice is nothing better than the turkey buzzard's love for carrion.

But if the influence of this accursed style of wit is so destructive of genuine manhood, what must be its influence upon womanhood and homes? For at last women become infected with the virus! No one is absolutely immune. The constant hearing of these stories at first blunts sensibilities and afterwards creates a relish, for women can be taught to love the morbid and the horrible in spite of their sex. Gradually the finer fibers of their moral natures are broken down, and they begin to tell the stories to which they formerly only listened.

The curse of the impure story lies in the holding up of sacred things to ridicule, for ridicule is the deadliest foe of holiness. When the Romans began to laugh at their sacred chickens the imperial city fell. When the children are permitted to make fun of the church and the Bible, religion is doomed. When the sexes begin to jest about the holy mysteries of manhood and womanhood, the days of virtue are numbered. The home is built upon the corner stone of virtue! And can you wonder that loose ideas about the latter destroy the former?

I firmly believe that every wife ought to take a strong stand about this matter. She ought to refuse to laugh. She ought to refuse to smile. Let her even refuse to listen, for nothing was ever gained by telling such a story under any circumstances. Decent people are always shocked. The person who tells it experiences regret. The effect of it is always degrading. Are there not enough pure things to laugh at? Every phase of our life has its comic aspect, and we ought to train ourselves to perceive humor and hail it with laughter, but only when it is pure. There is almost as much of heaven in a hearty laugh as in an earnest prayer. "Morally considered, laughter is next to the ten commandments." We can laugh too much, although the most of us do not laugh enough. But we can no more jest at God and death and the sexual mysteries without being corrupted than we can eat henbane or nux vomica without being poisoned.—Charles Frederic Goss, D. D.

PAPEETE, TAHITI, November 18, 1910.

The tract put out by the Northern States Mission of the Utah church has reached us here. It is called, "The corner stones of the Reorganization." We have a copy of Bro. H. C. Smith's Succession which is all in pieces from long, hard usage in this mission, and minus many leaves, but it serves pretty well. But we would love to have a copy of each of the late tracts advertised, "The corner stones of the Utah church," "All Brighamite roads lead to polygamy," and "Duplicity exposed," to answer the many clamorings of the natives who have been skillfully misled or deliberately lied to. For example: We have a letter in Tahiti signed by three native elders which states that they were told by a certain Utah Mormon missionary, through Mr. Frank Cutler, another Mormon elder who spoke the native tongue fluently, that Joseph Smith the Martyr helped to lay the corner stone of the Mormon temple in Salt Lake City, Utah. That is only a sample of the many things we have to meet here.

My address is Papeete, Tahiti, via San Francisco, California. Yours for the truth, of which no man should be ashamed.

Editors Herald: Pardon a stranger for breaking in on your valuable time. You people are doing a grand, good work—restoring the gospel of Jesus Christ, and I wish you to know what effect was left from the meetings held by J. J. Cornish here the past week. I write what I have heard others say; from substantial citizens who are tied to no church; in fact from a few who are termed unbelievers by man's gospel or church denominations:

"There would not be enough present at the other meetings to build a fire, if the Latter Day Saints would continue their meetings a month."

"I have never believed in any church, yet for true religion they come the nearest."

"I could sit here and listen all night to such spiritual food."

"That is Christ's teachings, not man's."

It must be remembered that your people are not allowed the use of the church, and that this locality is thickly settled with a class of people who say, "You and the Utah faction are the same." One minister said, "They have only changed their name to smooth things over, and afterwards break out worse than ever on 'plurality of wives.'" And this minister is an United Brethren, I believe.

Wishing all the Saints a merry Christmas, and a happy New Year, I am,

E. L. BUNTING.

ZEALANDIA, SASKATCHEWAN.

Saints' Herald: I have been a member of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints since I was a little girl. I was taught all, I believe, that was necessary to my child heart from infancy up to the age of baptism (eight years), when I, believing I was doing right, went with the other little children in our Sunday school class into the pure waters of baptism. Although I was but a little child, how well do I remember that Sabbath. 'Twas a beautiful summer day, and the sun shone brightly upon the gently moving waters, when I, robed in white garments took that most sacred step. It is a pleasant memory, to think how pure and innocent I was as I stood upon that bank. Was I not in condition to be looked upon with deep love and tenderness by the Father in heaven, who was surely pleased to see me obeying his teachings? Was I not pure enough to receive the blessings during confirmation? for he loves and blesses all little children.

Now I think back to that time and say within myself, "Why haven't I lived all of my life as pure as I did those first eight years, why have I been so careless and unconcerned to my mother's teachings of right and wrong?" 'Tis too late now; what has been done can not be undone. Carelessness closes the eye to all of this and Little Miss Evil softly presses herself nearer, closer, and leads us on, whispering her desires. Yet her arm is not very firm. Her caresses are not lasting. Do we derive more benefit from her love or from the firm, trusty arm and tender love of the all wise Father above? He knows our hearts and I ask him to be merciful to me, for I yet love him, am truly sorry for my sinful ways in the past and am trying to serve him, to show my love is to live worthy to receive his blessings to me.

Through all my life I never have felt so much of his Holy Spirit rest upon me as I have during the past few weeks, which gave me a desire to write. I was sitting in my room one evening writing about my gentle sister who was taken from our home not long ago; who, we believe, is now among the just. I was thinking of her purity and cleanliness and how I longed to visit with her, to talk and tell her about my different affairs, as she was my only sister who grew up with me.

Suddenly a feeling came over me which seemed to whisper to me and make me realize that I should put away my weak habit, which keeps me from enjoying good health. Yes, put it away and seek to purify my body in readiness to receive each and every blessing that our loving Master may see fit to place upon me.

Since then I have tried to do and live better, and He has blessed me in health and in strength. That same evening a song seemed to sound in my ears, "Oh, God, give strength to all thy Saints, and courage give them too."

He will bless us if we trust and serve him. He will bless us with understanding of his word, in the singing of his praise, and in many other ways, if we are faithful, true, and obedient. He will help us through times of trouble and sorrow, for not a sigh can rise unheeded.

Every tear will be a treasure,
Shed in sorrow or in pain;
Future skies will be the brighter
For these blinding drops of rain.

It is my prayer that I may live as he would have me to live, that when my life is ended I may be permitted to dwell among the just, where nothing is known but peace and happiness.

Yours in bonds of the gospel,

Dear Herald: As you are ever new to all who read your pages I come once more to say I am still in the faith and am trying to defend the angel's message all alone.

I wish I had tracts to distribute here as I have done in other places.

I was requested by my friend, a lady who was healed under the hand of Elder Thomas Goheen years ago, to say to the young people of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ that she had a daughter who is an invalid and very lonely. They live in the wood on a homestead and she is alone much of the time and has nothing to read that will rest the mind and lead to a knowledge of the law of the gospel. She will not be able to answer your letters but if you will tell her something of the gospel and of your home and the light you have, you may be able to show her the way into the kingdom. She wishes for Sunday school papers. She is fifteen years old, or will be in January, 1911. Send your reading and letters for her to Miss Florence M. Liby, Houghton Lake, Michigan.

Dear Saints, one and all, I wish you to remember me in your prayers as I am going blind fast, and have not the privilege of calling on the elders that I may be healed as I have been before, but I believe that as I wish to obey, that through the prayers of the Saints I may be kept from total blindness. I will close now hoping that this place may soon have the gospel and many may obey.

MRS. A. B. HAWLEY.

Editors Herald: Why do we sin when the wages of sin is death? Christ told us this, and we have seen and proved it to be true. Why not travel the pathway of life, and life eternal? The sight of death makes us shrink and shudder, no matter where or in what form we find it. Look in the cities; in the dens of vice and crime; and oh, how short the lives of those that visit there! Look at those that visit the saloon. See the faces of the ones that enter, and look again after having spent a few hours there. You can fairly see sickness and death. Look at the cigarette smoker. The first one makes him sick, and sickness means death. Look at the youth that uses them. Many are stunned from the effects; that also is the mark of death. Why begin to die before they are grown? They are not sinning and dying alone; they also help others to die. See the mother, the wife, the child of the man that drinks. Mother who loved him best, whose hairs are gray, are made whiter from sorrow and mourning, and her days are shortened. Wife, who worries and works without proper food and clothing, whether sick or well. Who shall say death does not visit her sooner and maybe a welcome visitor, too? Children are born with the desire to sin; and so sin and death are multiplied.

No wonder that to-day, after the world has stood two thousand years, we find it filled with sin, and death claims more people at fifty than over. This is not always caused by the greater sins, but by the smaller ones also. One does not jump from a stage of purity into the blackest of sin, but little by little we sin until we are surprised at how far we have gone. So let us be thoughtful and earnest, be careful of what we do and what we cause others to do.

I once knew a young couple living near us who tried sin. God had been kind to them. She had a beautiful face and form. She had a talent to appear well. She could have lived a life of usefulness, but she chose the darker way. She and her young husband started a saloon, and she in her youth and beauty tended bar. Her life was short, only a couple of years. She died, and soon he followed. The building stands empty, and has for years, and is a monument of them and their works; and it is decaying, and as I pass it, I find myself saying, "The wages of sin is death"; not only carnally, but spiritually. What a contrast between that life and one lighted by the Spirit of God!

A young man lately passing away said to his mother, who was a member of the church: "I am sorry I did not do different, but it is too late." About the same time I read in the HERALD of a sister who, passing into the valley of the shadow of death said, "Tell all my friends good-bye; also tell them not to mourn for me." Her last words being those of her favorite song, "Abide with me." I closed my eyes and thought I had not lived as well as I might that day, and I asked myself why? Why do I sin? Why do we sin, and when we see and know the wages of sin is death? And when we live faithfully we enjoy the sweet influence of the divine Spirit, even in the darkest times of trial and death. And we can say, "Oh death, where is thy sting; oh grave, where is thy victory!"

Christ came to give life and give it more abundantly. Let us help him in his mission, and some day it will be said of us as it is of him, "He is not dead, but risen." As I write I feel the divine influence penetrating my very soul, springing up within me as a well of living water, giving me the assurance of the truthfulness of this work. Oh, that I may live faithfully, together with you! Let us put down sin. Let us not wait until it is too late. Let us do it now, in my prayer in Jesus' name.

SISTER B.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, December, 1910.

Dear Herald: Since coming into the church of Christ many questions confronted me as to how I could live such a life as a true Saint should live, all of which the Holy Spirit answered with a passage of Scripture. While meditating on the passage which speaks of bringing every thought in captivity with Christ, (2 Corinthians 10: 5) I asked myself how I could perform other duties, and keep all my thoughts on Christ; for if they were not all in Christ, how could my thoughts be in captivity to him; and that being the case, how could I distinguish the difference between the thought that was sin, and the thought that was not sin. And the Holy Spirit answered, "He will reveal even this unto you."

Sometime afterwards the dear Lord very graciously filled me with the Holy Spirit and oh! I can not express the rapture of joy that filled my soul, and, in this exceeding great joy it was easy to keep my thoughts occupied with Jesus. But had that joy not diminished (as it did) I should be living on feeling and not on faith, and I would never be anything but a babe in Christ. Like the flowers, I would droop and die with too much sunshine and no rain. The storm and cloud only make me more strong in the faith of Christ Jesus.

I am now standing on the words of the Lord and not on feeling only and it is not so easy to keep my thoughts all on Jesus. Sometimes I awaken and find that every thought is not in captivity with Christ. Then came the Holy Spirit and revealed to me that every legitimate or necessary thought for the performance of any duty, was as much in captivity with Christ as the thought given to Christ himself. We must feed on meat and not always on milk (1 Corinthians 3: 2) if we would grow into a full manhood or womanhood in Christ Jesus. It is the storms that beat against the oak that makes it the giant that it is. So the Lord teaches us by diminishing the joy, to stand on his word and not on feeling.

We must make it a daily duty to refer everything to him, and watch for his answer. If we do this he will never fail to let us know what his will is for us. Perhaps some one may ask how thoughts spent on duty became sin. First, because every thought given to duty (or any other object) not needed for the accomplishment of the same, becomes at once unnecessary, therefore unprofitable, and there is nothing unprofitable in God's order of things. Second. They are robbers, they rob the soul of the sweet companionship with the Father and his Son, our precious Lord Jesus Christ. They rob God of the glory in our lives, that rightly belong to him. Third. The Holy Spirit can not get a hearing and is grieved.

In my case I am pleading with God for complete victory. When the Lord granted me deliverance I was drawn very close to him, and he revealed to me myriads of evil spirits, which were so crowded together that it did not seem possible for another to find standing room. Many of them were very busy. I had no feeling of fear, but perfect quietness, so that I was enabled to watch them, and as I did so I saw they were tracking the footsteps of the Saints. My first thoughts were if only God's people knew what was back of them how much more alert they would be. They would not be so frivolous as many of them are. Thus the Holy Spirit showed me that one of these evil spirits was interested in every unprofitable thought. I saw the thought personified and not as an idea, and that the larger part of them were enemies to our cause. Thus the Holy Spirit revealed a great battle to be waged in each Saints' heart and mind. It made me tremble as I realized the magnitude of it. I felt like crying out, "Who is sufficient for these things?"

Dear readers, do you realize what this means? Shall we not press on toward the mark of that Holy One. Paul says, Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh, and spirit. We can only do this as we yield our minds as well as hearts up to the working of the Holy Ghost. Can any of us look into the face of our blessed Redeemer and say, "Every thought is under thy control?" Will you not help me by your prayers and be yourself one who will through the power of the Holy Spirit press on to the point where God can look upon us and say, "In thee I am well pleased."

Do you say I can not reach that high altitude of grace? Is he not able to do exceedingly, abundantly above all that we can ask or think? Does not the word assure us that greater is he that is in us, than he that is in the world? Shall he command and it not be done? He commanded and it stood fast. He never gives a command, but he will give the power if it is sought for. So let us come boldly to the "throne of grace." Oh, for such a baptism of the Holy Spirit that will sweep away the consciousness of the sense life! The writer longs for that purity of spirit that is transparency itself. Shall we all strive for it? Dear Saints, pray for me.

Editors Herald: As this is my first attempt to write to the paper, I thought I would tell you how the work is going on. There are only a few here, but we meet and have our prayer meetings, and the little flock have not been scattered abroad as yet. When I hear another gospel, which is not another, but some in trying to trouble us pervert it; but God has not left us as yet, and he will not leave anyone else if they seek and ask for the old paths wherein is the right way. How much you hear people say, Something new; something new; but the old mouthpiece of God says, Seek and ask for the old paths; and I am glad that God has kept that saying, for our little flock have found rest to their souls. As I read different letters in the HERALD they too have asked for the old paths. I often hear people say, How can those Latter Day Saints enjoy themselves so well when so much mud is thrown at them? My reply is this, Did Joseph the son of Jacob not suffer the heaviest of punishment when his brothers sold him and then lied to his father? Did not that woman in the hands of the Devil cause him to be cast into prison through a lie, the same sin that caused his father grief? But what say the Scriptures about him? But God was with him; all because he sought and asked for the old paths and walked in them.

Yes, we will take the Savior's day, and what did he do? Why, he established the old paths; and, thank God, there were souls made to rejoice in them. But it was not very long till they forgot the old paths. Take our day, since Elias has restored all things, and what did he restore? Thank God, it was the old paths; but, sorry to say, some have forgotten the old paths and have taken up filthy practices. But some still are made to rejoice in the old paths.

I have a clipping from my county paper that is good proof for the Book of Mormon; yes, "he hath not left himself without witnesses." A farmer near my home found two skeletons which were eight feet long, and a piece of money minted eight hundred years before Christ. I will try to get a post-card of it, if I can, and a written testimony from the party. I wish all the Saints godspeed. Yours truly in the one faith, Editors Herald: I have been impressed very much of late to write pertaining to a dream I had about two years ago, it not being a personal one, but one which to my mind has something to do with the things happening in the world at the present time. Towards the latter part of the year 1908, I thought I was standing in my yard one night, looking towards the western sky, when suddenly my attention was drawn to the eastern sky, and there I saw a very large, black object. I said to myself, That is a bird; it is an eagle, the land of America. Then there came small stars and stripes on the black wings, like lights, forming a flag. I said, This is the flag of America. Then there appeared an admiral's hat, pointed at each end, with plumes in it, and a sword was hanging at the right end of it. This hat was all light, and was transparent, so that I could see the blackness through it as it passed up and down from one end to the other, and I again spoke saying, This is our king's hat; he will either die, or else lose his position; all these things gradually passed away, as the black object was passing I turned to walk inside our house, saying to myself, Signs of the times. Since then the king of England has passed away, and only recently another king has lost his position. While I have my own ideas concerning this dream, I would thank any Saint if they could give the interpretation of it.

Editors Herald: I feel impressed to write you a few lines of encouragement in regard to the latter day work. It pays us to live a saintly life, and keep all his commandments. About three weeks ago I had so many trials and was so troubled with pains in my face and lungs I could hardly stand it. I had been praying all the time for relief, and in the morning I bade my crippled boy good-bye when he started to school, a mile and a half away, and he said: "Good-bye, I have to go all my life on crutches, but maybe God will help me," and then he ran off to school. The boy seemed happy, but I don't see why his feet had to be frozen, or why they could not be healed like people were in Christ's time. Then doubtings came into my mind. Is this church the true one, or are others as good? I finally went to God and asked him to comfort me and to bless my boy, and he did. I soon felt like singing, and I felt that God had a purpose in permitting my boy to be crippled, so that he might make him useful, although he was a cripple.

Later on in the day I took very sick and I could only say, "Lord, have mercy on a weak worm of the dust," and then a warm sensation came over me and I began to exhort my relatives to live better. I was shown Moses when he went through the Red Sea. It was an open vision, true as life, and the words came to me in an unknown tongue, and I said many things I am not able to write at present, I was healed of my sickness and have been well ever since.

Will some one send some church publications to me to give to my neighbors to read. This is quite a town, and the people all seem common and friendly. Maybe I can prepare a way for a Latter Day Saint minister.

Saints' Herald: We are isolated from any branch or preaching. There are just two of us, my wife and myself, but we are trying to live as near as we can to the teaching of the Bible. I give out the church papers to people who will accept them, for them to read, and by that means hope to be the means of doing some good. We desire the prayers of the Saints, that we may be faithful to the end of the Christian journey.

Editor Saints' Herald: When I was a boy my brother and I were playing in a hollow log near Montrose. We found a snake about two feet long. I put a forked stick astride of its neck. The snake would open its mouth, and I spit tobacco juice in its mouth. The tobacco juice killed the snake.

Twenty-six years ago I joined the church; then I went to the Soldiers Home at Marshalltown. I began to study over my boyhood days, and I thought about the snake. The Book of Doctrine and Covenants says that tobacco is not made for man, so I made up my mind that I would quit using it. I quit the first day of June, 1891. I got so sick they had to take me to the hospital. For four or five days I was so sick I could not tell whether I would recover or pass away. I made up my mind I would quit if I died. The Good Book says the good Spirit can not dwell in unholy temples. My heavenly Father gave me the victory, and I have no appetite for tobacco at all.

My Savior sacrificed for me, and I will sacrifice for him. I ask the prayers of all the Saints that I may hold out faithful and endure to the end and be saved.

Editors Herald: I am thankful to God, who has in his love and mercy brought me in contact with the angel's message, or restored gospel, and I have no use now for any of the compound mixtures of Paganism, Christianity, and priestcraft, whether it comes from Rome or any of her offspring. Yet I don't feel embittered or hold hard feelings against any others differing from me in religious matters; if so, the Spirit of God would not dwell within me, for the Holy Spirit is love, it can not be anything else, for it comes from God, who is love. And this Spirit is given to us through Jesus the Christ, for our faith, obedience, and humility in everyday life to the will of our heavenly father.

Editors Herald: Since embracing this glorious and grand work, the gospel in these last days, I am determined to press on in the good work. Those who are laboring for this have no need to concern themselves in regard to results. It is God's part of the work to give the increase; and no matter how gloomy, lowering, or forbidding the prospects, let none be discouraged.

I have felt edified in reading the church papers. Those who have endeavored to entertain HERALD readers have not written in vain; it has had its weight.

Let us be as children in his service; and in regard to our mother, your mother, bear patiently with all her peculiarities, infirmities of temper or disposition which may be the result of a life of care and toil.

I have a large number of HERALDS which I will send to anyone wanting them to read. May our heavenly Father aid our young people to be mindful and carefully heed this important command he has designed.

Bro. P. T. Plumb and Lloyd C. Moore, of the Southeastern Illinois District, came here November 26, and are preaching in the hall. Confidence, peace, and good will come to the church if we will be faithful to Him.

The good Spirit of God is moving out on the people here.

News From Missions

KANSAS.

During the latter half of November we were in Topeka, occupying most of the time on the streets. But it became so cold we had to give up that kind of work. Then we joined Bro. Oscar Okerlind in the vicinity of Scranton. We occupied about ten days at the Rubow Schoolhouse, with moderate attendance. At this time we are carrying on two meetings; one at the church in Scranton and the other at Fostoria, five miles southwest. There is apparently good interest at Fostoria.

Bro. Swen Swenson came down from Topeka, and now we have three preachers for the two places; so we change back and forth. We are desirous of reviving the work in Scranton, and for that reason we are glad that Brother Swenson has come to our assistance. We are receiving absolutely no calls for preaching. All we get to do is what we missionaries get out and hunt up. Brother Okerlind is a good hand at hunting up new openings. There are a great many scattered Saints throughout northern Kansas, to whom we have appealed, through the church periodicals, from time to time to assist us by getting places for preaching in their vicinities; but there is no response. To some we have written personal letters, and from the majority there is no reply. The others say, "Wait a while," or, "Later on will be better." But the "later on" never seems to come.

Now that the busy season is over, we appeal to all the Saints of this field to do all they can during the winter season to extend the preaching of the word. Secure some place where you can hold meetings and then call for help.

Saints, let us all awake and be doing all we can for this work. There are forces all around us laboring for the opposition of the truth. Shall we remain inactive and indifferent while all this subtle work against God's work is going on? God forbid. The few missionaries in northern Kansas are men that are willing to work whenever there is work to do, and they are willing to put up with inconveniences and deny themselves of comforts in order to preach the gospel to the people. Will you not help and do what you can? When there are none of the missionaries near you, address all calls for preaching to the undersigned at Holden, Missouri. The ministry in this end of the field are expecting to spend Christmas at their homes.

Yours in the gospel,

H. E. MOLER.

SCRANTON, KANSAS, December 16, 1910.

MISSOURI.

With your permission I again appear in your valuable columns. By invitation of Bro. F. T. Mussell, president of the Northeastern Missouri District, and the Bevier Branch, and by permission of Bro. I. N. White, missionary in charge, I met with the Saints at Bevier, Sunday, October 30. It was their rally day, which was a success, judging by the number present, and the interest manifested.

The study of the Sunday school lesson was taken up at 9.45 a. m., and at 10.45 the superintendent, Bro. Fred DeLong, had charge of the blackboard exercise, which was very instructive. Brother Lofty, of Moberly, gave a short and interesting talk. At 2 p. m. prayer and testimony meeting. A large attendance and a profitable time was had. At 7 p. m. the writer was the speaker; subject, "Angelic visitation." Preaching services were continued all week, over the following Sunday, with the exception of Saturday. The attendance was fair, and the interest good.

Notwithstanding there had been five months' strike, the mines having been closed, which was a hardship to business and to the families of the miners, the Saints did not forget to pay the expenses of the writer, to and from home, and those that received their patriarchal blessings paid the expenses of the stenographer. I did not like, under the circumstances, to receive the donation tendered by Brother Mussell in behalf of the branch, but I could not very well do otherwise. I pray that the offering tendered, under such conditions, will be seed sown in good ground, that will bring to the sower one hundred fold.

Bevier is one of the oldest coal mining towns on the Burlington road, between Quincy and Kansas City. If I mistake not, a half a century has passed since the hard-working, honest miner, with his life in his hand, went down into the bowels of the earth, where the rays of sunshine are never seen, and sent forth the black diamonds, that are of such great benefit to northwestern Missouri.

A large number of Saints have come and gone from Bevier. Some who hold prominent positions in the church to-day are among those that have had experience in the humble walks of life around the coal mines. Pages could be written of the marvelous love and power of God among the Saints of Bevier. The branch has nearly reached its fiftieth milestone, and to-day the name Saint has been made honorable and respected in the business circles, by the honest conduct of the members of the Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints at Bevier.

In the city of the dead, at Bevier, the remains of a large number of the faithful sons and daughters of God are waiting the resurrection morn; welcome day, and blessed hope. Among the number are the parents of our esteemed brother, G. T. Griffiths, member of the Quorum of the Twelve. Also the mother of Bro. Joseph A. Tanner, president of the High Priests' Quorum. Here also lies all that is mortal of that gifted man in music, Bro. J. T. Williams, with his faithful companion, the wife of his youth. He is the author of that soul-inspiring music, found in Saints' Hymnal, 188, to the words composed by that faithful Apostle T. W. Smith, "Oh how sweet is the soul-cheering thought." There are many in the city of the dead at Bevier that I would like to mention. It is here that our talented brother in music, John L. Morgan, now in Hiteman, Iowa, spent his boyhood days, as did also his highly respected brother, David L., who breathed his last in Lamoni, Iowa.

Some of the leading men of all ages have come from such surroundings, and from parents who were not known outside of their immediate circle. Two of the leading presidents of the United States, Lincoln and Garfield, were born in humble homes, in days of poverty. The former was a tiller of the soil, and a wood chopper; spent the evenings, in his younger days, reading borrowed books by the light of tallow candles, and often by the light of the fireplace. The latter was a barefooted newsboy; drove a horse on the canal. Our Savior, no exception, was born in a manger, and some of his apostles were from among the poor fishermen of Galilee. Joseph Smith, the Seer, was of humble birth, and limited in education. All of the above accomplished much in life; came into the world under adverse circumstances, and in the early part of their lives labored under great obstacles, but they became men of great knowledge and understanding in their respective fields, and they were truly a blessing to mankind.

The following incident happened at Lucas, Iowa, a few years back, and contains food for thought. A Professor Thompson and wife, called at the home of Bro. J. L. Morgan, and inquired if the professor was at home. The good wife, Mrs. Morgan, answered that that was the home of John L. Morgan, and did not know the whereabouts of the professor. They were informed, however, that John L. was working at the mines. The professor and wife went to the mines; Brother Morgan was sent for; he came in his working clothes, hands and face black with honest coal dust.

"Is this Prof. J. L. Morgan?"

"No, sir. My name is John L. Morgan."

"Are you the author of the quartet to the words, 'Abide with me'?"

"I composed a quartet to the words."

This is considered by competent judges a masterpiece.

Mrs. Thompson looked upon the composer of this beautiful quartet with amazement and said, "We can not judge a man by the clothes he wears."

In a poem written in Welsh, by Bro. Dewey Lewis, of Llansamlet, Wales, entitled, "The man and not the clothes," the thought is beautifully presented, that it is the man, and not the clothes we should respect, and that we should not pass judgment upon the man because of the clothes he wears, nor be partial to the person in fine clothes. In James 2:1-4, the apostle says, "My brethren, ye can not have the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, and yet have respect to persons. Now if there come unto your assembly a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in also a poor man in vile [worthless] raiment; and ye have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and say unto him, Sit thou here in a good place; and say to the poor, Stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool; are ye not then in yourselves partial judges, and become evil in your thoughts?" The honest, hard toiler, with his suit of ducking or overalls, and his hands and face stained with the dust of the factory, mill, shop, railroad, farm, and coal mine, should be respected as much as the professor, teacher or minister. All are needed and should be equally honored and respected.

The local ministry at Bevier are alive in the work. There are five elders, if I mistake not. The last Sunday I was there, three of the five were away from home, fifteen to twenty-five miles, holding meetings and visiting the sick. They have several good openings, and the missionary force in that district, Brother Hansen and Brother Kelley, are in new fields and are highly spoken of. This is as it should be. The Lord said for the missionary to leave the branches and go unto new fields. If the local ministry, elders and priests in the various branches, will spend more of their time in getting new openings and invite the missionary to occupy and assist them in keeping the interest up, in place of staying at home and urging the missionary to come to the branch, much more good would be accomplished. Leave the branches to the care of the branch and district officers, and let those who are not in charge of branches move out into new fields.

The Bevier Branch has a model deacon, Brother Hicklin, son of Bro. George Hicklin. He is usher and janitor, as well as the deacon, and his services are truly commendable. The Saints have a church building, built of cement blocks, in a good location, cost about seven thousand dollars. They have a corner lot, with dwelling houses on part of it, which bring in a monthly revenue. There is still a debt of fourteen hundred dollars on the property, but no interest. If the mines will continue to work, it will be but a short time until the debt is paid off.

The branch and district are fortunate in having with them Bro. P. T. Mussell. He is a wise and humble shepherd; stands high in the estimation of the community; is a natural leader, not only in church work, but among his fellow-workmen. He is talked of as the favorite candidate for one of the high and honorable positions in the Miners' Federation. May he not be overtaxed with responsibility, so as to hinder him from continuing as faithfully in church work in the future as he has in the past. The church has need of his services, and I believe that ere long he will be called upon to occupy with those who have presiding responsibility, because of the gifts and callings in him.

I came to Saint Joseph November 18. There are three branches and one mission in the city, with about eight hundred members enrolled. I held eight meetings in the brick church, known as the First Branch. Bro. V. M. Goodrich is pastor. He has the good will and support of the members. The Ladies' Aid Society, of whom Sr. E. E. McCormick is president (and her work is highly commendable) gave a bazaar the 6th of December. They cleared two hundred and twenty-five dollars, and still have about thirty-five dollars' worth left, which they expect to sell in a very short time.

The mission was established in Wyatt Park. Have built a small, cosy room, fourteen by twenty-six feet, on Bro. Charlie Morton's lot, Twenty-ninth and Patee, about twenty-two blocks from the brick church, Bro. C. Archibald in charge. There are several families of Saints in the neighborhood of the mission, and will appreciate the privilege to have Sunday school and services so close. In bad weather, twenty-two blocks is a long walk for the mothers and little folks, and it is expensive to take street cars. The First Branch loses quite a number of faithful members and Sunday school scholars by this. Some question the wisdom at this time, of forming the mission, and holding as many services there as at the home church. They are in favor of having the Sunday school, but think it should be held in the afternoon, so as not to weaken the school at the brick church. They also favor preaching and mid-week prayer meeting.

It is only about eight months since the Third Branch was organized, with fifty-seven charter members, and the establishing of this mission weakens the First Branch. The expense of the First Branch is forty dollars per month, besides lights, water and fuel. It is feared that the expense will become a burden. Possibly in matters of this kind, where all do not see alike, that the district authorities and missionary in charge should be consulted, for in multitude of counsel there is safety. I preached twice at the mission.

I held four meetings in the Second Branch, with fair interest. Our zealous, energetic Bro. J. L. Bear is in charge, and all seems to move along smoothly.

The Third Branch has made some remarkable progress; not yet a year old, and not many rich with this world's goods, but they have bought a corner lot, on Third and Hickory, with two small, two-room cottages. These they rent for four dollars per month each. They built a neat, frame building, twenty-eight feet by thirty-two, and furnished it with electric light. They have ten dollars per month to pay on the property, eight of which they receive, so they have only two dollars to raise. For years prior to the organization of the branch, as a mission the rent was $7.50 per month, and the room was much inferior to their new home. The Sisters' Aid Society are the foundation to this present property. They are still working faithfully, and with the present unity and zeal the debt will soon be cleared up. Bro. W. P. Pickering is still president, and he is a wise and faithful pastor. Bro. William Clay, with his financial ability, has made it possible for the Third Branch to be in their own house. He is a man of good, sound judgment, and is acting as deacon and treasurer.

Your brother,

WILLIAM LEWIS.

SEVENTH AND HARRIS STREETS, CAMERON, MO., Dec. 19, 1910.

JERUSALEM, PALESTINE.

We have been holding three preaching services per week since our arrival and have a fair attendance and there are a few who seem to be interested in the doctrine, but whether they will obey is another question. There is considerable prejudice being manifested on the part of the English speaking religionists. Some of them have made it their business to go among the people advising them to keep away from us and our meetings. The prospects for a branch organization here do not seem very bright at present, however it is hard to predict at this juncture what the next two or three weeks may develop.

Jerusalem has more religious fanatics within its boundary than any other city in the world, and the few people who are interested in our faith are very poor in this world's goods. Had we the means to start a hospital, or money to give away, we would have plenty of followers, as the majority are more concerned in the loaves and fishes than in true religion. Therefore you readily see with what we have to contend, nevertheless I am strongly of the opinion that the church should keep two able ministers in Palestine,—Jerusalem the objective point, one of these should have his family with him so that they could establish a home at the same time, and it will serve as a place to hold meetings until the church will be in a position to supply a more suitable place, but it would be unwise to start a work or a mission here, unless the church would heartily support it with ample means afterwards.

It is a fact that every religious body is represented in this country, and why not the true church of Jesus Christ? The Lord commanded the leading authorities of the church in a late revelation (Doctrine and Covenants 125: 12) to prosecute the missions that were opened officially during the lifetime of the Martyrs, and it is a well known fact in church history, that this mission was opened in their time, hence it is that it is the will of the Lord that this mission is to be considered by the church as now opened to us. Then why not carry out the will of the Lord, prosecute this mission? We have ministers who are willing and able to labor here. I wish to state in this connection that I am confident that the Lord directed my coming here and also Brother Pitt and especially since landing here, we have both been singularly blessed of the Lord. The Spirit of God has been with us in a marked degree, blessing our administrations. We have experienced great liberty in the preaching of the word and much peace in prayer which evidences to us that surely the Lord is much concerned with the work here, and that there is to be an ingathering in the future. Whoever is sent to labor in this land will have to exercise great patience and faith before the Lord, as they will have to encounter many obstacles and meet much opposition in their ministry.

I have advised that Brother Pitt should continue the work begun here until the church send others to take up and continue the work at the coming April General Conference. There has been considerable excitement during the past two weeks between the Turkish government and the Bedouins, the latter have been on the war path on the other side of Jordan in the regions of the Dead Sea. They slaughtered a few hundred people; tore up railroad tracks and cut telegraph wires, so it is reported. The people of this city have been feeling uneasy and restless, but everything has calmed down now. We are all well. Sister Floyd with whom we are making our home has treated us with great kindness. A true sister indeed.

Yours in the conflict,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

OHIO.

We are still interested in the angel's message as restored to earth in these latter days. Truly this is a "marvelous work and a wonder," and is causing many to say, as prophesied by the Prophet Jeremiah, 16: 19, that the Gentiles shall come from the ends of the earth, and shall say, Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein is no profit. This statement was made to me by a lady that did not know this statement was in the Bible. After listening to me preach several evenings she invited me to come and take dinner with her, and while talking she said, If what you teach is true, then we have been taught lies all our lives by men who claim to be called of God to teach the people. Also stated she believed we were teaching the truth if the Bible contained the word of God, which she believed it did.

I have tried to labor to the best interests of the Master's cause this conference year, according to circumstances. I have labored some in my home branch (Akron), feeling the Master had a work for me to perform here, and also feel that we were hindered some, not receiving the assistance we should have had. Some are not willing to work unless they have their favorite minister.

I have only made two new openings so far this year, and have tried to revive or reopen the work at Byesville. We had a very nice little branch there some years ago, but most all the Saints moved away, and the branch was disorganized. This is where our esteemed brother, Bishop Becker, was born into the kingdom, and was made president of the branch. His name, along with his companion's, is held in high esteem by a number I talked with, not of the faith.

Brother and Sister Gordon and daughter now live there, with whom I was domiciled, and I want to tell you they know how to make the elder feel at home. Truly the Spirit of the Lord was in that home, and they were highly spoken of by their neighbors, and all who spoke to us of them.

They got the old United Brethren church for us to hold meetings in. As soon as we got there we got out bills and billed the town, announcing our meetings. But few came; the first night about nine, if I remember aright. Tried it in the church three nights, still only the few, then concluded to try the street preaching. The next evening we occupied one hour on the street, with a good crowd and good interest. At the close of this service we invited the people to come to the church; there we occupied one hour with good liberty, still only a few came. I continued to occupy first on the street and then at the church, until we preached twenty-three sermons. The last evening, on the street, I presented to them the personality of God and where he came from, and how the Devil came into existence, and many other thoughts that were new to them. This night we had a very large crowd. At the close of our service several came to me, handed me money, said they believed I had been telling them the truth, believed I had done much in coming to their little town, and hoped I would return.

I was told by prophecy in the Saints' meeting the Sunday before leaving for this place, that I should be blessed with great liberty in preaching in this place, inasmuch that I would be astonished at myself. This was true. I never enjoyed such liberty in my experience before. The reason assigned by the Lord himself for this was that much rubbish would have to be removed in this place before good could be done. This, as presented to me, was the traditions of men. What a blessed privilege, to labor for him who knows the hearts of all men and the needs of all places, and is willing to direct in the same.

The first part of November we left for Port Washington, about twenty-five miles south of New Philadelphia. Here we find Brother and Sister Ellwood living on what they call the Brandywine farm. Here we made two new openings, near the little town of Port Washington, the first one about three miles south of town, in a schoolhouse. Held forth here for fifteen nights, with good crowds and some interest. On Sunday nights the house was crowded, hardly standing room, the majority young people. Closed with large crowd. This night some damage was done to the seats by some of the boys, the first time this has occurred since I have been in the field. I have always had the best of order.

Then we began meetings at a schoolhouse about two miles north of this town, a German settlement, holding forth eight nights with good liberty and good interest, using my chart illustrating the two ways. This is the chart gotten up by Brother Curtis; used this also at the other schoolhouse. I find this a good help in getting the attention of the people, and impressing the thoughts upon their minds. Closed with strong invitation to return, two different parties inviting me, when I returned, to make my home with them. Here I left a good interest, among some of the best people in the community. Some may say, Why did you not stay while there? I will tell you I have been trying to learn the leadings of the Spirit. For nearly a week I felt impressed to go home. I did not know why I should feel so. I was not homesick or lonesome. Indeed, was enjoying the liberty of the Spirit in preaching to this people. When Friday came the Spirit seemed to say to me, Go home and be in the Saints' meeting Sunday morning. I left Saturday morning for New Philadelphia. The Saints wanted me to stay with them for Sunday. Still, the Spirit said, Go home to be in the Saints' meeting. I came home, not having any idea why I should come. I met with the Saints in their meeting. We read in the Good Book of when the sons of God came together, Satan came also; and truly he came into our midst this morning in great power, and determination to rule our meeting. Sister Carillon, who has spoken to us here a number of times in prophecy and in tongues, arose to testify. His satanic Majesty tried to take possession of her; but she discerned the spirit and asked the interest of the Saints' prayers, and sat down. Immediately another sister arose to testify, and the same spirit took entire possession of her body and ruled until he was rebuked and his power broken.

Soon after this Sister Carillon arose again and delivered a fine prophecy to the Saints, admonishing them to faithfulness and diligence, also giving special instructions to different ones concerning their temporal affairs. The president of the branch was told to sell the home he now lives in. The writer was instructed to remain around home until after the first of the new year; that the Lord had a work for him to do here. The meeting was dismissed, and all repaired to their homes, but the evil spirit was not satisfied with what he had done, but followed this sister to her home and continued to trouble her.

Bro. Manchester J. McCoy and the writer fasted all day, and went to her home and administered to her and rebuked the spirit from the house. The next day she saw the spirit crouched in the corner of the room in the form of an animal, looking at her sideways, looking cowed and much displeased because he had to leave the place, and she has not been troubled since. And this is one of the best living sisters in the branch. I feel this is only the beginning of new trouble for the Saints in this place. I have been impressed that unless the Saints are very careful and prayerful that Satan will tear this branch asunder in the near future, as he has done heretofore.

Pray for us in this place that we may have grace and strength sufficient to overcome, that Satan may not be able to enter in and break us asunder, as I feel he will unless we are more united in the bonds of love.

The Saints have purchased a lot to build a house of worship on, and expect to build in the spring. Satan is aware of this, and will hinder if he can.

JAMES MCCONNAUGHY.

AKRON, December 27, 1910.

WASHINGTON.

As the year of 1910 is fast drawing to a close, and will soon be numbered with the dead years of the past, I want to inform your many readers what we have been doing in this part of God's vineyard.

Our conference convened in Seattle September 17 and 18, and we had a very good one. Bro. E. L. Kelley was with us, and gave us very good instructions along the financial line.

My first meetings were held at Willapa, where Brother and Sister Waldon and Brother Elsworth live. The Methodist church is the only one in town. They had no pastor; had one appointed, but he had not arrived. So I got the church, preached six nights, and got a little interest worked up when the pastor came. He came straight from the train to the church. I happened to be there when he came. He introduced himself as Pastor Simmons; then I told him who I was and what I was doing. Well, I am not going to attempt to describe the expression that came over the old man's face. I will leave your readers to guess that. He asked me where the parsonage was. I told him, and I also informed him that I had the key. Well, that was another one for him to solve. He came out that night to my meetings and I got him to offer prayer, and I preached him a good gospel sermon and thus turned the church over to him.

I then came to Meskill and took up my abode with Bro. George Steel, started meetings in the schoolhouse, continuing for twenty-six services, resulting in the baptizing of seven. The first Sunday afternoon, after meeting, a little girl about fourteen invited me to go home with her. I asked her if her papa or mamma knew anything about the church. She said, "Yes, this is the church my mamma likes." I asked where they heard it. She said, "They heard Brethren Cornish and Goodman in Michigan." So I visited them; they attended my meetings, and I baptized four of them. Paul's statement to the Corinthian brethren is true: One plants, another waters, but God gives the increase.

I assisted the district superintendent (Sr. Hattie Ward) to organize a Sunday school at Meskill also. From Meskill I went back to Chehalis, where I met Bro. B. L. McKim, whom the missionary in charge had sent to labor in this district the remainder of the year. We made a new opening at Toledo. Bro. Albert Premo opened his home for us, also got us the Presbyterian church. We held forth for two weeks with a poor hearing at times. The editor of the local paper at Toledo was from Holden, Missouri, well acquainted with our people in that place. He speaks very highly of them. His name is Dev.

The 12th and 13th of December we held a two-day meeting at Centralia, which was enjoyed by all. This is the first held in the district, but I am sure it will not be the last. The Saints in Centralia and Chehalis (they are only four miles apart, and a street car running between the towns) have purchased two lots and are talking of building a church this winter. In both towns we have about fifty members and no organization, but I hope to see them organized soon. It is one of the best points for labor in the district.

At present writing I am at home, spending my holidays with father and mother. They are both getting old and they like to have me with them. I have my little organ with me, so we pass the time singing the sweet songs of Zion and telling them some of the beauties of this latter day work. Your brother in the one faith.

GEORGE THORBURN.

SEATTLE, WASH., 2031 Ingersoll Place, Dec. 29, 1910.

ONTARIO.

Leaving my home on May 23 I went to Chatham, Ontario, where I did some preaching, and attended district conference, becoming acquainted with a number of very fine people, and must say I enjoyed myself while among them.

I felt a little disappointed when I learned I was needed in Northwest Canada, and as both my wife and father were very sick at home, I realized this work means a sacrifice. I resolved to go, and in a few days I was on my way. My first stop was Treherne, Manitoba, where I met Elder E. E. Long, who was to be my associate. The Saints were holding their district conference near by, in the Saints' church. We there met several of the ministry and a number of kind-hearted Saints.

We remained at this place a few days after conference was over, only to learn that the world loves the world, and but a few were interested in the good news we had to tell, then going on still farther, to Cypress River. There I had a new experience. Brother Long said, after failing to get a building to preach in, "If we can't do any better we will preach on the street," which we did. We were listened to by a large crowd, and a Presbyterian minister standing in their midst, who acted very ungentlemanly indeed. He called us wolves in sheep's clothing, Mormons, and other hard names. He was given to understand we were not of the Brighamite stamp, neither did we believe in polygamy and other kindred evils taught by Brigham Young, that he was an apostate from the original faith, and they were not the true Latter Day Saints; that the courts have repeatedly declared that the Brigham Young kind had departed from the doctrine, laws, and usages of the original church organized in 1830, and have incorporated in their system of worship the doctrine of celestial marriage and a plurality of wives, and the doctrine of Adam God worship, contrary to the laws and constitution of the original church.

He said, "Why don't you change your name and go by some other name than Latter Day Saints?" But he was told by Elder Long we had no right to change the name of Christ's church, but should we change it to the name Presbyterians it would not make any improvement, as they were guilty of upholding polygamy according to the last day's session of the Presbyterian General Assembly held in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where the subject of baptizing polygamous converts was considered and it was there agreed among them that polygamous marriage by the church in India was an absolute necessity. Any other rule, they agreed, would rule David out of the church. It is not necessary to say that he soon showed the white feather, and away he went down the street.

We soon gave the people to understand that he could call us wolves if he chose, but Jesus tells us that the hireling fleeth because he careth not for the sheep, and this man has filled the prophecy. He hires out to you for a salary and now, when we come with the truth, he calls us false names; he tells you you must have your little babies baptized, and that they are born in sin. He teaches that if you are not Christians you will go to a never ending literal lake of fire and brimstone, and remain with the Devil throughout countless ages.

Well, not to be too lengthy, all our preaching there was a failure. They seem to love a lie better than the truth, and we were glad to be in the great city of Winnipeg in a few days after, where we found a band of good brethren and sisters who did their best to assist in advancing the cause, paying as high as six dollars a night for the use of a hall. We also did street preaching there with good results, as four noble people came in, and now a move is being made there to build a church of their own.

Bidding farewell to Winnipeg Saints, I moved to the east, down at Emo, Ontario, October 10, where I met only three Saints, Bro. Magnus Leisk and wife, and Chris McBride; all glad to see a missionary. They did all in their power to make it pleasant for me, and a hall was rented in the town three miles away, where we preached each night for eight or ten nights, baptizing one precious soul, and leaving two so-called infidels apparently interested. Each gave me an order for a Book of Mormon, and some money for myself, declaring the Book of Mormon to be superior to the Bible. I told them they were both the word of God, the stick of Judah and the stick of Ephraim. (Ezekiel 37: 16.)

Stopped off at Knife River, Minnesota, and at Two-Harbors. There I met Bro. Joseph Hastings and family, also Bro. Samuel Sloan and Susan, his wife, whom I have known for years. Through my preaching I baptized them in Michigan years ago. Yes, we were glad to meet them, and of course they are still in the faith, and have not forgotten to give the elder some money as he passes along.

Going home I met wife and children and father, who all waited patiently for my return. "When pa comes home he will get us some wood for winter." Well, it seemed only a short stay at home.

Leaving home, I am now in Sault Ste Marie, Ontario, where I have met a band of Saints in a nice little church, preached three times but only Saints came until last Sunday night, when six or seven outsiders came, who expressed themselves as being pleased; and we believe they were, as they came back last night with others. So we are hopeful of doing good here.

Missionaries are all at work doing their best, together with the help of our president, Frederick A. Smith, who has made many friends to himself and the cause.

May God speed the work, is my prayer.

DAVID SMITH.

JOTS BY THE WAYSIDE.

The weather we have "with us always." With the average Oregonian it is a large factor in life; it is the first thing he thinks of in the morning; he hears it pattering on the roof. It forms the topic of his greetings, the theme of his conversation all the day long, and at night it bids him a tearful good-night—in fact, the rainfall is entirely adequate to the production of all kinds of crops, "ducks" not excepted. The rain comes just when it is needed; that is, all the time, in winter, and is as infallible as the succession of coming years.

However, this country has its virtues. There are no destructive downpours, but a gentle drizzle, or the famous "Oregon mist." Very little thunder or lightning, snow or frosts. The roses and lilies are still blooming, the meadows and mountain sides are smiling with verdure.

The "Yuletide" is over. Myrtle Point Sunday school, under the guiding hand of Sr. Daisy Short, is sufficient to insure success. Christmas offerings to secure representation in the Blue Hope, also college contributions, have been sent in.

The branch, under the pastorate of F. J. Chatburn, is holding its own fairly well, with an addition occasionally. The Religio, under the tutelage of Bro. Frank Daggert, is in fairly good condition.

The Bandon Branch is not dead; it was merely hibernating for a time; we have hopes of its entire recovery. The Sunday school, under the wise supervision of Sister Boyd, is fairly good; also Religio under Bro. D. W. Carpenter.

The Gravel Ford Branch has crossed the ford and about gone glimmering, but the Sunday school is intact under the strong hands of Brother and Sister Smith and Brother and Sister Mayse. There are a few very faithful Saints in this district who are worthy, indeed, of better things.

The district is languishing for want of proper work. Many places are asking for preaching but no preachers to supply the calls. There are only two missionaries in this very large territory; one of them tied up as president of Myrtle Point Branch. The district president, the only local man available, is also branch president at Bandon. Only one man for such a large field, is entirely inadequate. The district needs reformation badly; a new system should be inaugurated to give impetus to the work.

Circumstances over which we have no control rendered our work almost a failure this year; it has been anything but satisfactory to ourselves—and but very little to others. Modes of travel are to walk, ride horseback, or stage it through almost impenetrable forests.

News From Branches.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Cleveland Branch is arranging to have its place of meeting dedicated to the Lord next February, at which time the Kirtland district conference will be held here. We are looking forward to a good spiritual time. Our officers in charge are desirous of moving forward. We have had some good meetings here lately. Elders O. R. Miller and J. C. Farnfield have been visiting home, but have gone out in the field again. Elder John W. Topping is now branch president, and our place of meeting is on Wade Park avenue and Seventy-first street.

If you live in Cleveland and can not get to meeting, let me know at once, because we want you on our home departments.

F. C. WEBBE.

CENTRAL CHICAGO.

Friday evening, December 9, at Religio the following question was very ably discussed: "Are we the architects of our own fortunes?" H. P. W. Kier affirming and Elder Tanner denying.

Our Sunday school teachers and pupils are very busy practicing for the Christmas entertainment, which will be held the Thursday evening before Christmas.

Elder Tanner occupied the morning on Sunday, December 11, taking for his subject, "Church etiquette," and many interesting and valuable thoughts were presented. H. P. W. Kier discoursed in the evening on taking Christ as our example and making advancement as the time passes by.

Wednesday at the prayer service the following brethren were ordained by Elders J. A. Tanner and William Strange: H. P. W. Kier to the office of priest, J. J. Oliver teacher, and C. E. Cotton deacon.

Sr. William Tripp, of Roseland, is now at the hospital, having undergone a very serious operation. She is improving nicely and hopes to leave the hospital next week.

As the season, "Peace on earth, good will to men," is here, we wonder how many are really Christlike. Are we making expensive presents to our loved ones and friends when God's children are starving and freezing so near us, and probably some of our own missionaries' families lack the necessities of life?

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."

A "Merry Christmas" to all.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

The work on the fine government building is progressing; five big four-ton stone caps of the front columns were lately hitched about by steel hooks, and two men on each handle of the windlass put them in place.

The Bell Telephone Company also has an elegant structure in process of erection on Maple avenue.

Bro. James Highman met with an accident at the nut and bolt works in Sheffield lately, but the hand which was injured is improving under the treatment of the company's physician.

Bro. C. J. Spurlock, whose life was nearly despaired of a few months ago, now, by the efficient and tender care given him at the Sanitarium, is in a fair condition of health and is enjoying the meetings.

The special gospel meetings, afternoon and evening, announced to be held from December 4 to December 18, questions and answers following each service, have been an educational and spiritual aid to all who have had the privilege to attend them.

The efforts of Brn. J. Luff, A. White, J. W. Rushton, W. H. Garrett, M. H. Bond, G. H. Hilliard, R. May, A. H. Parsons, B. J. Scott, W. E. LaRue, and E. L. Kelley, together with the brothers and sisters representing the auxiliaries, with their treatises and discourses, were all put forth with zeal and perspicuity.

In Sunday school and Religio work we listened to the papers and informal talks of Sisters Short, Tessie Smith, R. E. Etzenhouser, V. Blair, and Della Braidwood, and of Brethren Etzenhouser and Barts, also Sisters Goodwin, Poynter, Gerber, Bartholomew, F. C. Smith, E. Whitehead, and Sr. W. H. Deam, an efficient leader of the normal and home class department.

The literary numbers of the program of the Religio, of which Bro. W. A. Bushnell is superintendent, were amply filled out by Sr. Sadie Bailey, a gifted reader from the South Side, and the seven little maidens who illustrated by graceful motion her beautiful poem.

We note also the humorous recitation of Master Etzenhouser, and an excellent map talk by our young brother, Harry, the grandson of Bro. J. A. Robinson, of blessed memory.

The following topics have been discussed, namely; the platform of our hope; the foundation of religious education; the causes of spiritual confusion in the world; the need of spiritual power for soul culture; the kingdom of God—its purpose; the attitude of the church toward medicine; ecclesiastical authority; temporal law; cooperation; the religious aspect of the social problem; the value of a soul; relation of church to the state; the here and hereafter; the divine authenticity of the Bible; duties of members and citizens, and the message of the Book of Mormon.

During these highly instructive meetings, the brethren and sisters have proved to all how precious are our natural gifts when quickened by the Holy Spirit, and more blessed also are they when consecrated to gospel work; and we note with a glowing sense of gratitude the mental and spiritual progress of the many young brethren, who have been reared among us, and are now toiling in the fields of science, art, and the gospel ministry.

Among these we make mention of Dr. G. L. Harrington, who gave a treatise on "The value of a good physique," and of Patriarch A. White, who at the opening of the series discoursed on "The relation of officers and members."

On Sunday, the 18th, Elder Samuel A. Burgess, of Saint Louis, preached two excellent sermons in lieu of Elder Rush-ton who, we regret to say, was ill; and in the afternoon, at the testimony meeting presided over by Elders I. N. White, Bronson and Bond, many prayers were offered for the sick and afflicted; many having fasted for the noon meal, especially mentioning our dear Sister Rogers, who is at the Home.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

SAINT JOSEPH, MISSOURI.

As the year 1910 is passing into history and I look over the year's work, and the condition of the work in the city, I wonder what could have been done that has not been done. It is true that we always feel that we might have done more, and that our efforts avail but little; and, too, the Master has said that "without me ye can do nothing." I can truly say that I have felt greatly blessed of the Master when presenting the word from the pulpit, and I have been visited of the Lord in dream, and by the blessed Holy Spirit by day. General Conference will soon be upon us, and this will mark the fourth year of my labor in the city; what the profit to the Master, and the good accomplished, eternity alone will tell. I have done the best that I knew, and I leave it in the hands of Him who knows the thoughts and the intents of the heart.

The Saints of Saint Joseph have doubly endeared themselves to me, proving themselves loyal to the church, manifesting a readiness to respect, honor, and have confidence in them that God set over them; ever seeking counsel and advice, and with meekness trying to profit by it. What I have said of the membership in general, I can truthfully say of the priesthood. Truly we have sat together in heavenly places, and sweet counsel and unity of purpose; all have been willing to do what they could, always willing to assist me in my duties, and doing whatever was assigned them, many times making sacrifices, almost too much to ask. I can say this for my brethren of the priesthood: Noble souls, you have done well, and surely the good Master has taken cognizance of your labors of unselfish love, and loves and will reward you.

At the last regular meeting of the priesthood I was not present, but a resolution prevailed calling a special meeting for the priesthood. A resolution obtained born solely in the hearts of the brethren, placing the responsibility for their entire movements and labor in the ministry upon the pastor, pledging support with prayers, and expressing full confidence. While I rejoice to know that I have merited this confidence of my brethren, I feel keenly the new responsibility which they have voluntarily placed upon me. May I not fall of their expectation and good desires, is my prayer.

Since coming to the city I have baptized over fifty souls into the kingdom of our dear Lord, several of whom have passed on to immortality, there to begin work anew for the Master's glory and their eternal joy. Among them I might mention Bro. George Ashmore, Bro. Henry Snider, Sister Longfellow and Sister Cox, the funeral sermon of the latter I preached on the 21st instant. Some of these have moved away, and several are with us. Of the membership previous to my coming, there have been changes almost astonishing. Several have died, many moved away and taken letters, and the third branch organized. Notwithstanding all this, less than a year ago there came an urgent request from the Sunday school, asking for an addition to our church building, to make room for our overcrowded school.

At last a request came from the members living in Wyatt Park, for a mission and Sunday school. This request was referred to the branch officers and priesthood in council meeting, who granted the request, not a voice dissenting. The vacancy caused by the organization of the mission can now scarcely be noticed in our Sunday school, and both are doing well. The mission is in charge of Bro. C. Archibald. They have preaching twice on Sundays, and prayer meeting on Thursday evenings, thus giving all a chance to attend both mid-week prayer services if they wish. A request was made by some of the mission to have a Sunday evening prayer service at the same time of the service at the church, but the branch officers thought this not wisdom.

There have been, in the last year, expensive repairs made on the church, for which we are indebted to the Ladies' Aid Society and the young people of the Religio, both of which are to be commended; the Ladies' Aid for wiring the house and the Religians for painting the basement, all of which has been paid for, or funds are on hand to do so. Besides this extra expense, and the decimating of our membership as above referred to, in the now closing year, under the good management and presiding ability of our worthy deacon, Brother McCormick, there is now and has been all year a little surplus cash on hand, while in at least some of the former years we were behind on the coal bill for several months. How true the saying of the Master, "Every tree that bringeth forth fruit, my heavenly Father will purge it that it may bring forth more fruit."

I almost forgot to make mention of the good work that the Sunday school is doing, under the superintendency of worthy Bro. H. D. Ennis. Several classes are organized, and have raised money for the benefit of the worthy poor among us, and we hear announced from the pulpit, "Are there any among us in need? If so, report to the pastor or deacon. Class No. — has means on hand for this purpose." Besides these classes furnish cut flowers for the pulpit each Sabbath. After services are over the flowers are sent to the sick, if there are any. All this, I think, speaks well and is commendable; denoting life, energy, and love.

I have tendered my services to the second and third branches to hold a series of meetings beginning with the New Year, each in turn, whether they avail themselves of this offer is not my privilege to say; but I have done my part so far.

Hoping and praying for the ultimate triumph of Zion, I am your brother,

V. M. GOODRICH.

DECEMBER 30, 1910.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI.

Our district conference convened here December 10 and 11, a good spirit prevailing throughout, and a good attendance on hand. Seven precious souls were added to the kingdom as the result of a week's meetings held in Cheltenham by Brethren Paxton and Sparling, who with Brethren Dowker and Sawley were in attendance at the conference, Brother Dowker leaving after the morning service, however, to attend services he was conducting in Old Monroe, Missouri, where splendid interest and opportunity seemed manifested. Conference adjourned to meet in Saint Louis, March 18 and 19, 1911.

During the past month good was received through Brn. T. J. Elliott, S. A. Burgess, C. J. Peat, Apostle J. F. Curtis, and J. A. Tanner.

We were made to feel the great love of God in the gift of our blessed Savior in two excellent sermons on Christmas Day by Brethren Tanner and Curtis; also a fine Christmas musical program by the choir.

A very pleasing cantata entitled, Santa and Uncle Sam, was rendered Christmas Eve by the Sunday school, which was a credit to the participants.

Two little buds of promise were blessed this month, Bro. and Sr. Charles Peat's little girl, by Brn. Peat, of Lamoni, and S. A. Burgess; and the little babe of Bro. and Sr. Rob Lloyd, by Brn. Tanner and S. A. Burgess.

We extend to all sincere wishes for a happy and prosperous New Year. Your sister in Christ,

E. M. PATTERSON.

BUFFALO PRAIRIE.

As we at Buffalo Prairie have been enjoying a refreshing shower, we thought it would be of interest to others, especially missionaries who have labored in this vicinity, to hear of some of the results accomplished.

Last September Bro. Joseph Arber, of Kewanee, was with us during our Sunday school rally day, and while ministering to us in that capacity felt deeply impressed that it was a time of harvest for Buffalo Prairie, and that a series of meetings would be in order. We were loathe to have him leave without preaching a few times for us, as we felt good would be done. However, his previous engagements would not permit him a longer stay at that time, so a series of meetings was afterwards arranged to begin December 11, preaching at 11 a. m. and 7.30 p. m., and continuing through the week with the exception of Saturday evening, closing Sunday evening, December 18. In all nine sermons were delivered, in which our speaker plainly portrayed the necessity of faith and a close walk with God requisite to clear understanding of his will.

Three evenings were occupied in presenting the "antiquity of the gospel," and how the same gospel was preached in the different dispensations. The apostasy and restoration. One night on authority, showing that representatives of Christ must be "sent of God." On Thursday evening we listened to an excellent sermon depicting the Christ and the Christ life, ending with the question propounded by Pilate so long ago, "What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ?" This sermon was very impressive. In fact all were a portion of meat in due season, and had their weight on those who were seeking the truth. The meetings were well attended, not by the largest, but fair crowds of those who were attentive listeners. The first candidate for baptism was on Wednesday evening, the next on Friday, and continuing until on Sabbath morning. In all seven names were presented.

After the dinner hour, Saints and friends repaired to the home of Charles L. Holmes, where a tank had been made in readiness, and where the ordinance of baptism was performed. It was indeed a joyful time when we witnessed seven souls come forth from the water to walk in newness of life. Confirmation service immediately followed the baptism. A feeling of rejoicing and brotherly love prevailed, many expressing that it was blessed to sacrifice for the Lord's service, because of the peace that passeth understanding, and the knowledge that our combined weak efforts have been material in leading souls to Christ.

We feel that December 18, 1910, will be long remembered in Buffalo Prairie. Among our new members, we have the father and mother of two homes, a wife in another whose husband rejoices in a home made more perfect, and two of her brothers, all these the children of parents that were baptized. The young men are men of ability and promise.

Elders O. H. Bailey, J. T. Hackett, C. E. Willey, and O. E. Sade have in the past sown the gospel seed in one family, and that they may know that their sowing was not in vain, and that it has been watered and nourished, we mention the names of the candidates. We hope it will encourage them, as well as others, who sometimes think that their earnest efforts do not bear the fruit they would like.

Their names are: Henry Ziegenhorn and wife; their daughter, Mrs. J. C. Constance; two sons, Alvin and Truman, with Mr. and Mrs. Leon L. Allen.

Brother and Sister Allen will soon move to other parts, but we are glad they were obedient to the gospel message before leaving us, and pray that they may put their trust always in "Him who doeth all things well." The Ziegenhorns are located here, which will be material help to both branch and Sabbath school. The life of all branches, and especially country branches, depends on located members. Transients help, but do not continue. Therefore we rejoice the more in the new life that is among us. Ever praying that success may crown the humble efforts of God's servants I am,

In gospel bonds,

FLORENCE HOLMES.

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

Our regular correspondent has furnished you with items of interest from the Central Church in this city from time to time, and for three reasons I believe refrained from communicating through your pages, almost entirely, the past year. The purchase of Central Church property by the general church authorities, and the work now carried on being largely under their direction, makes this place a point of interest to the church at large.

The past year has brought to us a large measure of success along all lines of church work. While we have not had any unusual attendance of non-members we have been gratified to note that we rarely hold a service without having a number of strangers present. While we are anxious to see the stranger, we are more anxious to see the regular members of the church present, and if they come and do their duty the strangers will be there and receive favorable impressions.

We still continue our local paper, The Central Church Bulletin, published monthly. The people of this church now look for it regularly, and we find that it is serving us in a practical way. It usually contains some notes of the sermon as delivered by the pastor, for the people to read and ponder after the sermon is preached. It is supported entirely by advertising and printed by the Ensign Publishing House. A number of Saints and friends have written to me, informing me of relatives and friends living in this city whom they would like to see interested in the church. I have taken special pleasure in looking after such persons, and any who may read these lines are requested to write the undersigned, if you have relatives or friends in this vicinity, and I will give them personal attention. The Bulletin for the present month states of the Sunday school: "Our average attendance has increased seventy per cent over last year." New officers have recently been elected, two hundred dollars have been raised for the Christmas offering, and hopes and prospects for the coming year are bright. If every Sunday school in the church could show reports whereby the next convention could report a gain of seventy per cent, would it not be good news indeed? The officers recently elected are Bro. David H. Blair, superintendent; Bro. S. C. Diggle, first assistant superintendent; Bro. Harvey Sandy, second assistant superintendent; Bro. Reginald Loosemore, secretary; Bro. L. H. McDonald, treasurer. These brethren are all capable and efficient Sunday school workers. Our past success in adding new members to the school has been largely due to the untiring efforts of Bro. D. H. Blair, (chairman of attendance committee,) and others who have assisted him. The present year will no doubt witness greater efforts, more activity, more aggressiveness than ever.

Our local Religio president says: "The most successful year for our local has just closed. Taking the entire year together, the average attendance has nearly doubled over that of the previous year."

Our branch now numbers about 370, and we have good prospects of further additions. Notwithstanding we have lost several members by removal and one branch having been organized principally out of our membership, we have almost doubled our numbers in the past two years. The greater part of those received have been by letter of removal, but in that time, there have been also a goodly number received by baptism.

Some one has said that the success of a local church is determined by the regular attendance at regular services; by an increasing amount of finances raised over that of previous years; by the degree of peaceful and harmonious conditions existing between members of the church.

Judged by such standards we can truly report an advancement and progress, which, if continued, will bring great results in time.

Our Christmas morning service was specially enjoyable. Apostle John W. Rushton gave us one of his best sermons, and the music furnished by the choir was excellent. The solo by Sr. W. N. Robinson was thought by several of us to be the best we ever heard from her. The words were so appropriate, and her voice so sweet that one could almost feel that it was an echo of the chorus of angels that awakened the lowly shepherds on Judea's plain on that eventful night when our Lord was born. Sister Robinson has been giving her attention to the training of our choir, with the result that they have attained a degree of proficiency never before realized.

The success of a local church is largely dependent upon the business success of its membership, and now we are sad to say, that Bro. and Sr. W. N. Robinson have been called by their business to return to Tulsa, Oklahoma. We shall truly miss them and the valuable service they so willingly render us. Sister Robinson expects to return to assist in the musical part of our special mission services, which are to be held March 12 to 26, inclusive.

Agreeably to the council of the local priesthood of this branch and the First Presidency and Presiding Bishop, Bro. T. W. Williams, of Los Angeles, California, has been invited to conduct these meetings this year. We hope he will be in a position to accept the invitation. The people are becoming accustomed to looking forward to these meetings and we follow up any interest we may discover in any, by sending them invitations and otherwise keeping in touch with them. We are expecting a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

With the passing of the years, my thoughts often dwell upon some of my early experiences in the ministry, and the faces and memory of those with whom I labored comes pleasantly before me, and I long to meet them again. To preach the restored gospel is my only profession, and to witness the progress and development of the church work in all its departments, is that which gives me the greatest happiness. My faith in God grows stronger and my estimation and appreciation of Jesus Christ as the Redeemer and Savior of men becomes more firmly fixed as I learn more and more about him.

My hope in the gospel, with all its precious promises, to be realized in this life and in the life to come, is confirmed to me by the testimony of the Spirit, and by my experience, and by its transforming power which I witness working mightily in the lives of those who accept it and adhere to its glorious precepts.

W. E. LARUE.

CENTRAL CHICAGO.

Sunday, December 25, Christmas morn, Elder James Kier took for his subject, "What shall we do with this man Jesus who is Christ the Lord?" As the year is closing, we should make an examination of our lives and see wherein we are not following the Master, and endeavor to correct our errors. We should arise by putting them under our feet, and "be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might."

Bro. Joseph Camp occupied in the evening, commenting on Christ's triumphal entry into Jerusalem, showing the humble attitude of our Savior in not desiring to be heralded with the pomp and splendor of earthly kings. What a wonderful example of humility and love, and are we nearer to-day than a year ago?

Wednesday evening prayer meeting in charge of Brn. Henry Kier and E. C. Cotton. Delegates were elected to the district conference to be held on the west side, convening the latter part of January.

The dear sick ones are gradually recovering, so far as we can learn. Little Alexander Kier was at the hospital this week, where an operation was performed on the glands in his neck. He is doing nicely.

Sr. Bessie Clark, formerly a member of this branch and a sister of Mrs. Alma Pitt, worshiped with the Saints a few times about Christmas and was very warmly welcomed; the good work performed by this sister and her husband being fresh in memory.

"The proof that we are disciples of Christ is in the manifestation of love towards others."

Order of Evangelists.

Dear Brethren: Your special attention is called to a communication addressed to you, and published in the SAINTS' HERALD for May 11, 1910, pages 482 and 483. I fear that this article has been overlooked by some, though to what extent I am not yet able to say. Procure this number of the HERALD and carry it with you.

Some of our brethren have failed to furnish us with duplicate copies of blessings given, hence when the original has been lost, we are unable to furnish another copy.

When sending duplicate copies do not fold them as you would a letter, but send in a roll when sent by mail, or place carefully in a suitable box, when sent by express. It will be better to send annually, on or about December 31; but if more convenient to send oftener, we will take care of them.

Those who desire to adopt the loose leaf system, can do so. Be sure to place them in their proper order, and we will index each book after receiving them. I keep all my copies in this way. In case you do this, the size of your paper must, of course, be gauged by the system you adopt. I suppose, however, that the paper is usually, if not always, furnished with the covers. All copies sent loose should be of uniform size, as indicated in the published article referred to above, that is, 8½ by 14 inches. Leave a margin of 1½ inches at the top of each page. This is important.

In the report blanks which were sent you, there occurred an omission which has been supplied since its discovery, and in a month or six weeks we will send new blanks, which will tell you how and when to report. Please be prompt.

I am glad to commend the effort of Bro. William Lewis, of Cameron, Missouri, to hold revival services in the different branches in his field. No doubt others are entitled to equal credit, and are doing the same kind of work, so far as existing conditions will permit. I regret that I haven't been able to do this, for it is, in my judgment, the leading and most important work belonging to our office and calling. One thing, however, should be carefully considered, namely, that we are not evangelists, nor revivalists in the popular sense. We are, or should be, revivalists to the church, because we are special gospel ministers, that is, evangelists, to the church.

"Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence," (Doctrine and Covenants 104:44) applies to us as it does to all other ministers in the church.

Our work specially demands carefulness, diligence, faith, with a wise and godly example.

LAMONI, IOWA, December 31, 1910.

Notice.

To Whom it May Concern: At the 1909 fall conference of the Western Michigan District the Reed City and McBain branches were disorganized. The records of those branches show the following persons belonging to each:

REED CITY.

Israel A. Smith, Jennie Gross, Sarah A. Lawrence, V. Izra Drake, Dora Mary Miller, Anna Reader, Sarah Rock-fellow, Amy Chrysler, James Chrysler, Ethel Chrysler, Edna Groger, Albert B. Lawrence, Elva Longfield, Jacob W. Broyles, Nancy J. Broyles, William Brillinger, Carrie L. Miller (Roth).

M'BAIN.

Frederick A. Rowe, Amanda Rowe, Mary A. Rowe, Benjamin Rowe, Jemima Rowe, Lovina S. Welton, Harriet Rounds, Ambrose Rounds, Ethel I. Hicks, Myrtle Wheeler, Malinda A. Rowe, Susanah J. Anders, Jennie Berry, Alpheus M. Boomer.

We desire to grant letters to all those who still remain members of those branches. Please write the undersigned at once, giving names of branch most convenient to you, also give name of branch clerk. If you will comply with this request it will relieve our records of unnecessary names, and place members where they properly belong. Hoping for a prompt response.

H. A. DORY, District Secretary.

Where Is the William Warwood Family?

In the early '80's the family of William Warwood resided, with a few more "Josephites," at Nephi (Salt Creek P. O.), Utah. They removed from Utah to one of the Northwestern States sometime before 1885.

When Elder E. C. Brand was living his daring life, and risking it daily among the Brighamites this family gave him a home and protection, and were ever ready to serve our work in that locality.

The writer is very desirous of learning the address of this family or any of the surviving members.

GOOD HEALTH FLOUR

has all the elements necessary to rebuild the body, Nitrate or muscle element; Phosphate or brain, nerve, bone, and tooth elements. While flour is only a carbonate, heat or fat. Many brands of the white flour on the market are adulterated with clay, gypsum, cockel, cotton seed, etc. Besides the bleaching process, with sulphur and acids, and to complete the white process they electrocute the flour, so it has not even a shadow of Life elements. The purpose and proper use of white flour is paste purposes, such as paper hanging, bill posters, shirt bosoms, book bindery, etc. It retards digestion and a sure diet to produce sickness and a premature death.

Good Health Flour is only $1 per sack of 24½ pounds. Bread, breakfast food, pan-cakes, muffins, biscuits, etc., can only be fully appreciated by those that partake of it. Rebuild health and live on less than ten cents per day. 2tf

Who Was There That You Knew?

In the shadowy ranks of those who marched to defeat or death or victory fifty years ago in the mighty conflict that convulsed this great nation, is there father or grandfather or uncle of yours? Would you like to see a photograph of him in that long ago day of his youth—a photograph that he never knew was taken? Perhaps we can show you one; and in any case, we can tell you a story, stranger than any detective fiction, of 3,500 priceless photographs that were lost and are found again.

3,500 Long Buried Photographs of the Civil War

THEY were taken by the greatest photographer in the United States of that day; they were bought by the United States Government for $30,000; they were buried in the War Department for 50 years—they are buried there still. But a duplicate set was kept by the photographer—who died poor and broken down; that duplicate set was knocked from pillar to post for nearly 50 years, until it was discovered by a New England collector. J. Pierpont Morgan tried to secure the collection—Ex-President Garfield and General Benjamin F. Butler said it was worth $150,000—yet with the help of the Review of Reviews, the entire collection has been gathered into 10 great volumes and is placed within your reach at less than the value of one of the photographs. It is the one accurate, impartial history of the Civil War—the camera cannot lie. It tells the story of the War you never heard before. Taken under protection of the Secret Service, these photographs bring to light thousands of little-known phases of the war; they penetrate to strange places and record strange things.

Webster's NEW INTERNATIONAL Dictionary, (G. & C. Merriam Co., Springfield, Mass.) surpasses the old International as much as that book exceeded its predecessor. On the old foundation a new superstructure has been built. The reconstruction has been carried on through many years by a large force of trained workers, under the supervision of Dr. W. T. Harris, former United States, Commissioner of Education, and reinforced by many eminent specialists. The definitions have been rearranged and amplified. The number of terms defined has been more than doubled. The etymology, synonyms, pronunciation, have received un-sparing scholarly labor. The language of English literature for over seven centuries, the terminology of the arts and sciences, and the every-day speech of street, shop, and household, are presented with fullness and clearness. In size of vocabulary, in richness of general information, and in convenience of consultation, the book sets a new mark in lexicography.

Big Horn Basin, Wyoming

The census figures tell the story. Population now more than 15,000 people as against 4,000 population last census—and this practically all in the last five years.

Make Money on Land

Five years ago these lands were selling at from $15 to $20 per acre. The same lands with improvements are now selling as high as $60 to $80. You can homestead just as good lands to-day, just as close to the railroad, or buy just as good raw lands at from $45 to $50 and make as much money as those who invested then.

GET IN ON THE GROUND FLOOR before the completion of the new line to the Northwest, where you can locate close to new growing towns that will help to make your land valuable. Write me and let me tell you all about this rich, new irrigated territory.

MOB VIOLENCE; A WARNING.

There is a tendency in America, at times apparently on the increase, to resort to mob violence on occasion. This is particularly the case when negro citizens are accused of offenses toward white women. In such cases white men, even aided by white women, carried away by a strange frenzy, have taken a terrible revenge. Negroes have been burned at the stake with slow fire, tortured in diverse ways, and horribly mutilated after death.

Formerly when the habitat of the negro was confined to the southern states it was supposed that these terrible affairs were typically southern, due to the southern temperament. But of late years the negro population has shifted northward and negro crimes against white women in northern states have been followed by much the same scenes that formerly occurred in southern states. In fact some of the most revolting outbreaks of mob violence of late years have taken place in northern states. Nor have the crimes that we have indicated been the only ones to stir up the passions of the populace. Negroes have been lynched for trivial offenses, and many white men have been lynched for murder or other crimes.

Now for the warning: It has been rumored that in one or two instances members of the church have formed parts of such mobs. The rumor is not confirmed as yet, but it calls for serious thought. Surely Saints should be the last persons to participate in such acts, or sanction them, or even silently approve of them. Whenever it becomes the custom to thus visit public disapproval on criminals, the bars of individual safety are thrown down, and a mistaken public opinion may at any time cause disaster to come upon innocent persons.

We should remember our own past history; the bloody massacre of innocent men, women, and children at Haun's Mill; the mobbing of Bishop Partridge; the destruction of the Evening and Morning Star; the tragedy at Carthage.

While some mobs may be composed of individuals who in their normal condition and possessed of legal authority, might have sufficient intelligence to sit upon a jury and determine the guilt of an accused person, to act as judge and determine a proper sentence, to act as executioners and inflict punishment, all in accordance with law, these same individuals when formed into an inflamed mob have neither legal standing nor cool judgment sufficient to determine the guilt or innocence of the accused, or to fix upon a proper punishment.

The object of the law is to secure justice. The object of the mob is to secure vengeance. The mob is a reversion to anarchy and chaos. By slow processes we have climbed up to a position where in theory we accord the humblest man the right of jury trial, and hold that society should protect him in his right to cherish the divine spark of life within him, until society by lawful methods declares that it shall be taken away for cause. Any recession from such a position is very dangerous. If I, to-day, in company with certain of my neighbors, take the law into my hands and hang another of my neighbors, I must not protest if to-morrow certain of my neighbors take the law into their hands and hang me if I am accused; and they may do it, too, even though I may be innocent, providing a certain conspiracy of circumstances shall indicate to their excited minds that I am guilty.

Such a proceeding should be absolutely foreign to the policy of a Latter Day Saint, and still more foreign to his temperament. It must be a terrible spectacle to behold a delicately nurtured white girl who has been murdered and maltreated by a black man. But the greater the provocation the greater the restraint of passion upon which we must now determine and ever maintain. The law must be honored. If there is sufficient public sentiment to cause lynchings in communities and afterward to protect the ringleaders, there is sufficient public sentiment to demand and finally secure more speedy and sure methods of criminal procedure in the courts.

One who takes the law into his own hands and assists a mob or cooperates with a mob in the taking of human life is in grave danger of being adjudged a murderer at the last day, even though he may escape in this life. For their own sakes and for the sake of the good name of the church, Saints should ever honor and uphold the law; living above its condemnation themselves but according its full measure of protection to those upon whom penalty must be inflicted.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

We are in receipt of The Truth, edited by Solomon Feingold, Jerusalem, containing announcement of free lectures in the Jerusalem Conference Hall, by Elders Griffiths and Pitt, also a half column explaining our position.

As will be discovered by reading the notice of release from missionary appointment appearing elsewhere, Elder Gomer R. Wells will assist on the editorial staff during the absence of I. A. Smith in Des Moines, attending the meeting of the state legislature. Brother Gomer has had experience in editorial work in Australia on the Gospel Standard.

The Sunday World Herald (Omaha), December 25, 1910, contained a column account of the recent annual meeting of the family of Joseph Smith the Martyr, from which we quote in part:

Special Dispatch to the World-Herald.

LAMONI, IOWA, December 24.—The Smith Family Association, known properly as the family of Joseph Smith the Martyr, held its annual meeting at this place to-day. This unique association is composed of direct descendants of Joseph Smith, the man who gave the world the Book of Mormon and founded the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, together with husbands and wives of direct descendants.

The association was regularly organized four years ago with regularly elected officers and a constitution and by-laws. It now has on its roll one hundred and one members, resident in the United States and Australia.

The president of the association is Joseph Smith, son of Joseph Smith the prophet. The associate president is Frederick A. Smith, who is a member of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and at present minister in charge of Canada. The secretary is Elbert A. Smith, editor of the SAINTS' HERALD.

No dream of any novelist was ever half so strange as the history of this family. It first sprang into prominence in the spring of 1820, when Joseph Smith declared that in answer to earnest prayer in the woods alone a heavenly personage had appeared to him with certain commandments, messages and promises. He was then only fifteen years old.

Seven years later he came into possession of the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated and published. The Book of Mormon professed to be a history of people who had lived on the American continent prior to our present civilization,—a people whose ruined cities are now found in Mexico and South America.

The family as it now is, with its one hundred and one members, sprang from this man and his wife Emma Hale Smith, through three sons, Joseph, Alexander and David. Of these men, David was an editor and at one time published a book of poems that possessed considerable merit. Alexander was a traveling missionary, and in his time visited Canada, Australia, the Society Islands, and nearly every part of the United States. Joseph, still living, resides in Independence, and has for fifty-one years been president of the church founded by his father.

The present meeting of the family was on the one hundred and fifth anniversary of the birth of Joseph Smith, founder of the family. A program of speeches and music was rendered. The former officers were reelected.

An error occurs in the editorial appearing in the HERALD of January 4. In one paragraph the date of the Woodruff Manifesto is given as 1900. The correct date is 1890, as might be learned from another paragraph of the same editorial.

Heads of the Shaker colony at Union village [Ohio] are considering offering farm property valued at $1,000,000 to the State for an agricultural experiment station. Judge J. A. Runyan, trustee of the Shaker estate, says the gift will be made on the stipulation that the 24 survivors of the Shaker colony, nearly all more than seventy, become wards of the State the remainder of their lives, and that the State appropriate money to assure that the agricultural experiment work will be carried on even if the station is not self-supporting.

The Shakers recently refused $500,000 for the property.—Cleveland Press.

The editor of the Gospel Standard, Australia, at last advice was preparing to attend the coming General Conference. He would be the first Australian to meet in conference as a delegate, and it is to be hoped his plans will not miscarry. He expects to bring lantern slides for lectures on the people and the land of his birth, including a set on our church work in that land showing the leading workers and officers, past and present, church buildings, etc. He also contemplates getting out an American edition of his book, The Fall of Babylon, which has had a larger sale in Australia than any other church book. If satisfactory arrangements can be made with the Board of Publication, the profits from sale of the book would go toward purchasing an office for the publishing interests in that far-away land, where under Elder Haworth's management, there has been built up for the church a plant worth several thousands of dollars, the nucleus of which was started by Elder John Kaler, while in that mission.

The machinery of the Standard's office is now propelled by electric power.

The World remarks that at the same time that Carnegie gives millions to bring about peace, Secretary of War Dickinson demands hundreds of millions for war—notwithstanding the Government has spent $1,000,000,000 upon the navy in the last ten years, and they are building two Dreadnoughts every year.

Out of every $100 available for national expenses, $72 are devoted to military ends.

The Nauvoo Independent asks if it would not be surprising—say in about five years to awake some fine morning and find Nauvoo a city of 10,000, with a trunk line crossing the river, an interurban line into the city, a street car system, sewerage, factories and “the Mormon Temple rebuilt.”

We learn with regret of the death of one of our Canadian missionaries, Elder Richard B. Howlett, at London, Canada, December 31, 1910. He has been in the field eleven years. The church loses a good worker.

We are requested to publish the following notice: To the Lamoni Stake Quorum of Priests, Known as the Second Quorum; Greeting: Remember our convention and conference February 9 to 12. Trust you will be present so we can hold a session or two of priesthood meeting, time and place to be made known during convention. Make an effort to be present and transact such business as properly comes before the quorum. Trust you will also send in your reports of the year's labor by February 1, with ten cents due from the quorum. James Johnson, secretary of the quorum.

A copy of The Truth, published at Jerusalem, December 21, 1910, later than the one mentioned elsewhere, contains a half column mention of the work of Brethren Pitt and Griffiths, which begins thus: “Last Sunday afternoon, two American Gentlemen, Messrs Griffiths and Pitt, who are obviously endowed with intellectual gifts of a high order, delivered in the Jerusalem Conference Hall, two truly stirring addresses.”

Under date of December 27, 1910, Bro. F. G. Pitt writes from Jerusalem stating two more persons had applied for baptism, making it necessary for them to make another trip to the Jordan. This they did, going via the Good Samaritan Inn, in all a trip of twenty miles and return. Finding a suitable place, they sang, “On Jordan's stormy banks I stand,” and then proceeded to baptize after the mode honored by Christ so long ago in the same historic stream. This trip included lunch on the river bank and a boat ride on the Jordan. Brother Pitt sends in excellent pictures of these scenes, taken by Sister Pitt. A full account will appear in Autumn Leaves for February, at which time it will be possible to reproduce the pictures.

No one could complain at the inculcation of loyalty as given to the children of the dominant church in

Utah, as published in the Juvenile Instructor, the organ of the Deseret Sunday School Union, for January, 1911, page 20, in a “concert recitation” for schools for January, February and March, which comprises the entire Articles of Faith, article twelve reading:

“We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers and magistrates, in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.”

We are requested to state that club rate subscribers to The Sunday School Exponent can not be accepted when ordered to different post-offices. When sent under one wrapper to the same post-office, different city addresses will be accepted, no additional postage being entailed. Single subscriptions are fifty cents; four to six to same office, forty cents; seven or more to same office, thirty-five cents. Sunday school workers can not afford to be without this valuable magazine.

“Unless a Christian's walk corresponds with his talk, the less he has to say the better,” says The Gospel Standard, Australia.

Elder George Lewis, bishop of Australasia, has given up his business and gone into the field. His labors are much needed over there.

“Leslie Carlson, twelve years old, after defying Inspector of Police, P. D. O'Brien, Capt. John Sweeney, and Lieut. Patrick McCauley for two days, confessed last night. It was not till near midnight that he finally broke down.”

Regarding this “The Public” asks: “Where did those policemen get their authority in the law for ‘bully-ragging’ a twelve-year-old boy, a prisoner in their custody, for two days and far into the night, with no protection for the prisoner through judicial supervision? When a Congressional committee was appointed to investigate, it was blandly assured by the police authorities that there is no such thing as a police ‘sweat box.’”

Let's see: Do not the Chinese police also torture prisoners to extort confessions? There are some bright exceptions to this sort of thing. In Australia, and some other countries, the rights of a prisoner are sacredly guarded. Upon arrest, he is warned by the officer that whatever he may voluntarily say might be used against him at his trial. Examinations are permitted only in court, where the prisoner is allowed some one to defend him, no matter how poor. In matters judicial, even the daily papers are not allowed to prejudice the public mind upon matters that are subjudice.

THE CAMPBELLITE GIBRALTAR.

BY J. W. PETERSON.

Chapter 1.

So far as known to the writer, all passengers on the theological ship launched by Alexander Campbell, believe:

The primitive church of Jesus Christ, was first set in operation at Jerusalem on the Day of Pentecost, and that repentance and remission of sins began to be preached in the name of Christ at the same time and place.

It is of course necessary to have some common rule or standard by which to try any question. We propose to try this question by the rule of the three "R's." Reason, research, and revelation.

Blackstone has said: (I quote from memory)

Any document not plain in one part may be understood by carefully considering what may be said about the same matter elsewhere in the same document.

We think the followers of Mr. Campbell dare not reject this rule, and yet their theories stated above are arrived at after a complete disregard of it; for the church is referred to in both the Old and the New Testament before Pentecost. To get at the real facts one must give full consideration to all Bible texts on this subject. Where one fails to fully explain a point, the other may supply the deficiency.

It is folly to take one passage of scripture and magnify it beyond the normal size and reverse the telescope of our intelligence and diminish other texts on the same subject so that their influence on the mind is scarcely perceptible. We propose to show that this is the course that must be pursued in order to sustain such a theory as mentioned above. Jesus withstood the tempter with these words:

Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.—Matthew 4: 4.

He was also careful to instruct the apostles in their last commission to teach all things whatsoever he had commanded. (Matthew 28: 20.)

Paul was careful to instruct Timothy as follows:

I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels, that thou observe these things without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality.—1 Timothy 5: 21.

We purpose to put all texts on a level with their Gibraltar, not preferring one text before the other, but treating them impartially, and see if we do not arrive at a more safe and sound conclusion than they have from one or two inflated texts.

A wise Bible student has said:

Bring all scripture, touching any given point, together, and then if you form no contradiction you are right.

We shall show that the Campbellite position contradicts many passages of scripture. One of the rules given by revelation we find recorded in Malachi 3: 6 and attested by all nature, as follows:

For I am the Lord, I change not.

A very similar text is in James:

The Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.—James 1: 17.

With these rules always in mind, let us see whether the church existed or not in every dispensation, and later we will discover that the same doctrine was taught wherever and whenever the church existed. Let us not forget that God does not change or vary. Every one of our five senses teaches us that the God of nature has never changed a single law of nature from the beginning. The God of nature is the God and author of the church and its doctrine.

That the church existed in the world before Pentecost, is a fact known to even casual readers of the Bible.

When Moses and Aaron were called to deliver the children of Israel from Egyptian bondage they were required to make known their calling to the elders of Israel. (Exodus 4: 16, 18, 29, 30; Exodus 12: 21.)

Who were those elders? Were they officers or were they grandfathers? Evidently not the latter for they must have been men of authority. If elder in the above texts means an old person, then the older the more authority. Why should Moses and Aaron report to men in their dotage? Unless we stifle our reason we must conclude that those elders were officers. Officers in what? In no organization whatever? What reasonable person could accept such conclusion? The term officer, suggests organization at once, and elder is an officer in the church. The children of Israel were the children of God, and the elders were God's officers among his people. There must at that time have been an organization with officers in it. But how came they with such organization? Had it not come down to them from Abraham, and even before? Indications of that fact exist long years before.

Abraham met Melchisedec, one of an "order" of priests called after his name, Hebrews 7: 11, and paid tithes to him. Why should Abraham pay him a tenth of all he possessed? (Genesis 14: 20.) Did he not recognize it as a command of God, and Melchisedec as his officer? Surely Abraham did not pay him that amount for his personal use, but as an officer in the church whose duty it was to expend that money or goods, in the church according to the law of God. How did Abraham know how much to pay, and to whom to remit? All of this indicates that the church of God existed at that time. Did it begin in the days of Melchisedec, or was it in existence in all previous dispensations? Surely it must have had a beginning some time. Shall we forsake our reason at this point and say it had no beginning. Shall we not rather apply one of our texts here and assert that the "Lord changes not"? If, then, he does not change, we must conclude that when men first began to call upon God they must have done so in order, and God's order is the gospel of his church. "Preachers" suggest a church, and there have been preachers from the beginning. The thought is not conclusive but indicative. It requires more faith to believe there was no church than to believe there was, even if there were none of the above indications of that fact.

As we look at God's work in nature we see he is a God of organization. Why should he reverse his nature when dealing with the law of worship? "Order is heaven's first law." God has the most complete order of any, either in heaven or on earth.

Coming back to Moses' time, we find positive proof that there was a church in the wilderness, and it was the church of Christ, too.

This is he that was in the church in the wilderness with the Angel which spoke to him in the mount Sina, and with our fathers: who received the lively oracles to give unto us.—Acts 7: 38.

How now about the statement that the church was first set in operation on Pentecost? Some say it was only a church in promise before that. Pshaw! There could be no such thing as a church in promise. They could have had the promise of a church, but if they had a church at all it was an existing fact and not a promise, and Stephen said it was a fact, as we have seen.

The church in the wilderness was very similar to, if not exactly like, the church of the New Testament, or any other time, God being unchangeable and no respecter of persons. Moses, Aaron and Hur, (Exodus 17: 12; 24: 14,) answer to James, Cephas, and John, pillars of the New Testament church (Galatians 2: 9). The twelve princes [margin: chiefs] of Israel. (Numbers 1: 44 agree with the twelve apostles of Luke 6: 13.) The seventy elders of numbers 11: 16 were officers in the church in the wilderness, the same as the seventy of Luke 10: 1, 17. Other officers, of which there is more or less mention in both the Old and New Testaments, were doubtless alike, for God is unchangeable. All the above texts show no contradictions in God's work, and no experiments with him.

Coming down to the New Testament time we discover that one object, and perhaps the chief one, of Christ's mission, was to establish a church as "the pillar and ground of the truth" he taught. (1 Timothy 3: 15.) And he "set in the church first apostles." (1 Corinthians 12: 28.) There was therefore a church at the time he ordained the twelve apostles. That church was sometimes called the kingdom of God, or the kingdom of heaven. The church is what Jesus referred to when he said to the scribes and Pharisees:

Ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in.—Matthew 23: 13.

This fact of the kingdom of heaven or kingdom of God being the church, is further proven by the following statements of Jesus:

The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it.—Luke 16: 16.

Therefore I say unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.—Matthew 21: 43.

But if I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you.—Matthew 12: 28.

Again the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind: which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away.—Matthew 13: 47, 48.

And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out: it is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye, than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire.—Mark 9: 47.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, which went out early in the morning to hire laborers into his vineyard. And when he had agreed with the laborers for a penny a day, he sent them into his vineyard. And he went out about the third hour, and saw others standing idle in the market place and said unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard, and whatsoever is right I will give you. And they went their way. Again he went out about the sixth and ninth hour, and did likewise. And about the eleventh hour he went out, and found others standing idle, and saith unto them, Why stand ye here all the day idle? They say unto him, Because no man hath hired us. He saith unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard; and whatsoever is right, that shall ye receive.—Matthew 20: 1-7.

The entering into the kingdom was already an accomplished fact with Paul while yet living:

Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son.—Colossians 1: 13.

From the above texts we discover, among others, the following points: 1. The kingdom was then on earth because the scribes and Pharisees could not effect it in heaven. 2. People were entering into it then, and therefore it did not enter their hearts. 3. Men were entering into it from the days of John the Baptist. 4. The kingdom could not be taken from them and given to another people unless it was then on earth. The church was taken from the Jews and given to the Gentiles. 5. The kingdom had already come unto them. 6. The kingdom, like a net, gathers good and bad. There is no bad in heaven. They were in the church or kingdom before death. It could not be in the heart for it brings no bad thing to us. 7. There will be no one eyed people in heaven, hence the kingdom was here on earth. 8. In Adam's time, the first hour; in Noah's time, the third hour; in Moses' time, the sixth hour; in Jesus' time, the ninth hour; and in our time, the eleventh hour, the church was to be established. These were all different dispensations, the last one being also called "the dispensation of the fullness of times." (Ephesians 1: 10.)

We can now understand better what Jesus said to Nicodemus about baptism:

Except a man be born of water (baptized by immersion) and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom (church) of God.—John 3: 5.

This harmonizes with Paul's statement:

For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ.—Galatians 3: 27.

For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body.—1 Corinthians 12: 13.

That body is the church:

Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular.—1 Corinthians 12: 27.

Query? Were Peter, James, and John, and others of John's disciples baptized into one body,—the body or church of Christ? Were all the twelve, and all the two quorums of seventy, and all the members who were either present or absent on Pentecost, baptized into that one body before it was in existence?

If all who were baptized were baptized into Christ, then, the body of Christ existed as soon as baptism commenced. This was also true of those baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea (of the Spirit and the water). (1 Corinthians 10: 1.)

If it be argued that those in the New Testament times were not baptized by the Spirit till Pentecost, our answer is: The Spirit was enjoyed in every dispensation alike, and by the disciples before Pentecost, but not so fully as on that day. The Campbellites certainly do not now receive more or even so much of it as Jesus' disciples before Pentecost. Such complaint from them would come with exceeding poor grace.

All the prophets spoke by the Holy Ghost. (2 Peter 1: 21.) It was sufficient to change King Saul into another man. (1 Samuel 10: 6.) Joshua, like Saint Paul, received it by the laying on of hands and neither of them by the hands of an apostle. Deuteronomy 34: 9; Acts 9: 17. No one can know that Jesus is the Lord but by revelation. (1 Corinthians 12: 3.) Peter knew that fact, and that, too, by revelation before Pentecost. (Matthew 16: 17.) The power by which the disciples healed the sick and cast out devils was the Spirit of God by which they had been baptized into one body—the church, and all before Pentecost.

To clinch the matter Jesus said:

And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church; but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican.—Matthew 18: 17.

What better evidence could one ask to prove that the church existed at the time Jesus was giving this instruction? This could not have had reference to the Jewish church, as some think, for the rule here given was not the doctrine of that church, nor would Jesus have bidden his disciples obey their doctrine, for he had warned them against "the leaven of the Pharisees." (Matthew 16: 6.) This instruction was the doctrine of the church of Jesus Christ before Pentecost, and is accepted even by Campbellites today as a rule in the church.

When Jesus told Peter that he would build his church on revelation, (Matthew 16: 18,) it does not suggest that the church was not already being built by the personal direction of the Savior. He simply refers to how it would be built in the future.

If anyone should say: Jesus had not yet built his church; then we discover contradiction after contradiction, that even Campbellites can not harmonize. Our rule of research says, "There must be no contradiction." The position I have proven by the foregoing texts and conclusions, i. e., that God has had a church in every dispensation and organized after the same pattern, harmonizes every text on the subject, and agrees with the unchangeable God of nature. The Campbellite position is therefore only an air bubble and is punctured every time it rises.

"He whom God has sent speaketh the words of God," (John 3: 34,) but these men are not speaking the words of God and therefore they are not sent of God. Their institution is only an effort of men, void of divine authority. Their theory reflects very seriously on the wisdom of God. It makes him give inferior rule after inferior rule till finally he happens onto the best one on Pentecost, and that only to be in force for a short time.

DIVORCE HERE AND IN CANADA.

A Toronto writer, Mr. F. P. Walton, points out the difference between Canada and the United States with regard to divorce. He quotes from statistics of the United States, showing that between 1867 and 1906 there were 1,274,341 divorces granted in the United States, and alleges that the number of divorces is increasing about three times as fast as the population. During 1906 there were 72,062 divorces out of a population of 83,941,510, with the rate varying greatly in different parts of the United States. For example, in the State of New York it was only twenty-three per 100,000 population, whereas in Washington it was 184. It was also shown by the statistics that divorces, proportionately, were about four times as common in the West as in the East, but with the rate of increase in the East somewhat quicker. A conservative estimate, it is further asserted, shows that one marriage out of sixteen ends in divorce, but calculations for five years, of which 1905 was the median year, gives 11.9 marriages to one divorce. With the exception of Japan, no other civilized country can show anything like this frequency of divorce, for during the five-year period of which 1900 is the median year, there were, proportionately, about twelve times as many divorces in the United States as in the United Kingdom, three times as many as in France, and five times as many as in Germany.

The population of Canada stood to the United States about as one to twelve in 1867, and that ratio has not varied greatly to the present time. During the forty years (1867 to 1906) the beggarly total of 431 divorces were granted in Canada, divorce in the United States, proportionately, being 320 times more common than in Canada, with the contrast likely to become still greater in the future, as the rate of divorce is increasing much faster in the United States than in Canada. This fact is noted in connection with the Canadian record: Divorce is much more common in the provinces—Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia—which have divorce courts, than in those where divorce can only be obtained by act of the parliament of Canada. However, everything points to this fact, that divorce in the United States is immensely more popular than in Canada, and that the great mass of Canadians still cling to the ancient view of marriage as a permanent and indissoluble union. Divorce is looked upon as an almost exceptional remedy, only to be resorted to in the most extreme cases.

Mr. Walton says there is no doubt but that the doctrine of marriage as a sacrament, as taught by the Roman Catholic and the Episcopal churches, must impress the principals in marriage with the solemnity of their undertaking, and faithful adherents of these churches believe that they commit a grievous sin if they seek to dissolve the marriage tie. Mr. Walton is glad that Canada is still clinging to the conservative idea, and he has good cause to rejoice.—Saint Joseph News-Press, December 19, 1910.

PERSONAL LIBERTY.

It is rather difficult to give a definition of personal liberty, without developing that shade of reflection, which is always in evidence, when we talk of our individual rights, without considering the rights of others.

Personal liberty is an inherent, God-given right. But who can think of a right to do, or not to do, in all the economy of redemption, and grace, and human affairs, that God has given, that can possibly be separated, in thought or act, from a man's relations to others?

If it be true,—and it is,—“that no man liveth unto himself,” how can a man escape the claims of his fellow-man upon him? The entire arrangement of human relationship is that each man is to be helpful and not hurtful to others. There is an interdependence among mankind that can not be ignored.

Some persons regard it not only as impertinence, but a downright crime, to interfere with the rights of personal liberty.

But when a community discovers a leper in its midst, or a victim of smallpox, or an immoral theatrical play, or a dishonest business project, no one would question the right of that community to free itself from the presence and curse of that evil.

There is, therefore, a limitation to the exercise of personal liberty.

Personal liberty gives no man the privilege to injure himself in his body or his estate; how, then, can anyone claim the right to do that which would be an injury to the general public?

Nothing else, in the exercise of human freedom, is so closely hedged by divine and human authority and restriction as personal liberty.

The public has a higher right, in the exercise of its governing and controlling power, over man and his acts than the individual has, because the Government exercises the authority given it by God and delegated to it by man.

No one presumes to enter the private sphere of the individual and dictate to him there as long as he acts within the limitations of his own being.

But the moment he trespasses upon the rights of the public he makes himself amenable to public restraint.

Therefore, when we advocate the destruction of the liquor traffic, we have no conflict with the individual drinker, but only with the traffic, and only this because of its widespread and disastrous effects upon domestic, social, and commercial interests.

The German maxim, “Freiheit ist von Gott, Freiheiten von Teufel,” (Liberty is from God; liberties, or licenses, are from the Devil,) is suggestive, forceful and true.

Personal liberty is sacred. It is a birthright, to be used and not abused. Personal liberty is a stewardship and not an ownership, and, because it is a stewardship, an account must be given of its use.

Sometime ago, this inquiry was addressed to me: “Do you believe in personal liberty?” My answer was, that as far as I am concerned, I am not willing to restrict personal liberty, where it is exercised within the divine limitations surrounding it, except where a community of interests is best conserved by surrendering my individual interests for the general good and for the betterment of a town, or city, or county, or State.

To make individual concessions for the benefit and help of others is not only American in principle, but it is a Christian duty, a duty that is rich in practical benedictions to our fellow-men, and to ourselves, and pleasing to God.

Rev. Dr. J. R. Miller, in his comments, on a recent Sunday school lesson, says: "Anything of the nature of mere indulgence, which would harm another, or endanger him, should surely be given up.

"Sometime since, there was a terrific explosion in a colliery, by which four hundred miners were suddenly hurled, amid shattered ruins, into a horrible death. It was ascertained that the explosion was caused by a miner, who had opened his safety lamp, to light his pipe. For the poor gratification of his taste, for smoke, this wretched man sent four hundred of his fellow-miners into eternity.

"There are men, who, for the privilege of sipping their wine, are making ruin in their homes, and sending other souls to degradation and death."

Liberty—"Freiheit"—is what we want, because it is divine in its nature and possible and practical in its application.

But "Freiheiten"—licenses—liberties—we should shun, because of the character of their author, and because of their baneful effects and results.

Personal liberty gives no man the right to tell "white lies" or to practice double dealing. It gives no man the right to boast that once he was a drunkard and libertine. That man is not safe who recites, with a seeming justification, that he has sowed a lot of "wild oats" in years gone by.

No man's personal liberty gives him the right to do as Romans do, when he is in Rome. But it demands of him the practice and speech of integrity and truth, no matter where he is, or what his surroundings are.

Many men shield themselves behind their personal liberty rights, in their public relations and public conduct, and, by this very course of life, confirm the fact, as observed by those around them, that, whilst they may be religious, they are far from being pious.

The true exercise of personal liberty makes a man honest, high-minded, and decent. It makes him a better week-day Christian, and a Sunday Christian. It makes him a manly man, who would rather suffer defeat than to gain a victory by deceit. It makes him a constructive citizen, instead of a destructive one. It leads him to walk in the footsteps of Christ, and not in the footsteps of men. Personal liberty is both an incentive and a restraint. It goes and it checks. It makes and unmakes men. It is a blessing and a curse, and each individual decides for himself which it shall be.

"License they mean when they cry liberty."—Reverend Gotwald, D. D., in American Issue.

THE FIRST MEN.

PROFESSOR DAWKINS ON THEIR BIRTH IN THE ICE AGE.

Prof. Boyd Dawkins, one of the great authorities on the mammals of the Pleistocene or Ice Age, in his Huxley memorial lecture at the theater of the Civil Service Commission, Burlington Gardens, last evening, marshaled the evidence which points to the fact that man first appeared in that epoch.

The view of the higher antiquity of man based on the discovery of chipped flints in earlier ages has been rendered untenable, as it can be proved that these forms can be, and indeed have been, produced by natural agencies. The skull and thighbone found by M. Dubois in a Pleistocene river deposit at Trinil, in Java, in 1894, Professor Dawkins regarded as belonging to a real precursor of man, not only appearing at a point in the geological history where it was to be expected, but in a tropical region taken by Lord Avebury and others to have been the birthplace of the human race.

In Europe, continued the professor, there is ample evidence of the existence of the river-drift man and of the cave dweller in the caverns and in the river valleys of the Glacial Age over the whole region between the Mediterranean and the Baltic. Europe in the Ice Age was invaded dryshod by the earliest men from the south by way of Gibraltar and Sicily. The climate then was continental in character, with cold winters and hot summers.

The river-drift man's implements mark his existence in North Africa, Palestine, Arabia, and India, and over the south and middle zones of Europe as far north as Yorkshire, crossing on foot from Germany and France.

The cave man, marking an advance in culture, lived almost wholly in the regions north of the Alps and Pyrenees, and his weapons are found north of Yorkshire. The cave man probably came into Europe from and retreated into Northern Asia at the close of the Ice Age.

The Ice Age was undoubtedly of vast duration and the antiquity of man is correspondingly great, but, concluded the professor, "the more minutely I examine the events that have taken place since man appeared in Europe the more profoundly am I impressed with the vastness of his antiquity and with the futility of any attempt to compute it in terms of years."—London Mail.

It is estimated that millions of money heretofore hid in coffeepots, stockings, holes in the wall and in the cellar, as well as in the big family Bible, by people who were afraid or unwilling to loan their saved earnings to the banks without security, will now come out of hiding and get into circulation. Uncle Sam has become a banker. This ought to encourage thrift among the working classes.

A FATHER'S RIGHTS.

I sometimes can but wonder what a father's rights are in regard to his children. In some homes it certainly seems to be the right to provide for them the necessities of life and nothing more. Only the other day I heard a woman remark that she never allowed her husband to correct her children; she said men did not have reason enough to correct a child, and I suppose I shocked her greatly when I said I should not think of giving my children a father that I could not trust to correct them.

To me nothing is sweeter than the love and confidence of children for a father, no, not even the love for their mother. Why should a father not enjoy this since surely it is a God-given right, and if he does not receive it there is something wrong. Many times, and it is sad that this should be so, the fault lies with the mother. Sometimes it seems that she wishes the whole love of the child herself, and it is these same mothers that often make bitter trouble for themselves and their children when a fuller love comes into the lives of the latter. We have all seen it. I remember one mother who acted more like a maniac than a rational being when her son married, because, as she insisted, she must now take a second place in his heart, and the son and his wife were often made unhappy in consequence.

When our daughter was small my health was not very good and my husband took much care of her, and she would go to him with her tiny troubles as soon as she would come to me, but do you think she loved me the less? No.

There are so many snares and pitfalls that a father can save his children, some of which the mother in her sheltered home knows nothing, if he only has their full confidence.

Surely a father has a right to the love of his children, a right to share the responsibility of their bringing up, a right to correct them when correction is needed, a right to counsel them, in fact a right to be their best friend, and the mother who does her duty will so instruct her children.—Irma B. Matthews in American Motherhood.

THE FATHER AND THE CHILDREN.

It is passing strange, if the matter of training children be important, how meager is the advice given to the father. The mother is lauded in sermon, story, and song; her name is associated with power, sympathy, love, honor, and even blame; papers and books are crowded with her responsibilities and influence; but the aspiring father must remain in comparative ignorance of privileges, responsibilities, and methods, unless he enter the field of personal discovery.

Possibly the reason for no more ideal fathers is the absence of direct appeal; the man permitting the woman to assume the burdens because the world has placed them upon her. Though the wisdom of the world gathers dross in its gold, he argues that many heads, as opposed to one, must be right.

Human nature accomplishes just about what is expected of it, and the father is scarcely free from a touch of human nature. His reputed lack of interest in his children may frequently be traced to his own soliloquy, "I am not expected to do this."

It is not just to constantly condemn for the thing which is the training of society; either the father is doing his duty when he refuses to interfere, or the attitude toward him should be changed.

In truth, the latter is the only logical and human outcome; his strength and manhood are needed to produce the proper equilibrium with the more mild discipline of the mother. He has no more right than the mother to remain silent behind his paper during the process of training, and await the appeal to his final decision as a court of last resort.

The father and mother become the legislators, judges, and agents of execution with equal powers and responsibilities and the man, when he realizes the requirements of his office, will equip himself to meet them.

While the mother may occupy a unique position in the home, the advantages of the father are not less. Because constantly and closely associated with the children she may give the impress of her character, but the constant presence loses some effectiveness by the very continuity which may be supplied by the periodical presence and activity of the father.

A voice, fresh with the charm of making the world move, is as the speedy tributary to the sluggish waters of the primal stream. The children listen, are impressed, and accomplish tasks because the father added the necessary word.

The mother's pure character and beautiful ideals may lead to the morals and habits requisite to the cultured, but the father's steady ambition, restless energy, and grand assurance must round out the children to reach the highest goal of success. They need her delicate sympathy with his iron determination; her steady courage in pain with his indifferent fearlessness in battle; her thoughtfulness in the minutiae with his attention to the main idea; her persuasiveness with his more stern masterfulness. The man and the woman are constituted as complements, and the father dare not signally fail in attention to his portion in training the children.

Since new to the business, he is wise to confess his ignorance in the beginning.

As one confessing and at a venture, here are a few ideas of a father, who has failed, to fathers who, though more successful, must make the same confession.

First.—Think about the children. A few minutes each day of serious thought of their interests, aims, failures, and successes will produce in the flight of years some well defined principles for a better home government.

It is as necessary to make a success of a child as of a business, but business frequently monopolizes the hours of day and night and the welfare of the child goes begging. . . .

Second.—Put yourself in the children's places and try to look through their eyes. When your boy comes to you with his boyish and mischievous situations, do not set yourself up as a monument of perfection. . . . Once in his place you are enabled to make a study of his motives and discover that two thirds of the the offenses go up in innocence and laughter.

Third.—Be companionable with the children. A stilted seriousness may gain a respect which will intimidate into obedience, but can scarcely create love; and love will mix with respect in order to attain results. A romp now and then will not teach the boy to designate you as the "gov'nor," if your human nature is of the right caliber. If an intimate acquaintance breeds obnoxious familiarity, it is with the fathers whose absence is better than their presence.

The character which will not shine the brighter by being rubbed, had better go out of the business. Let the children behold the secret pictures of your mind, feel the purest beatings of your heart of hearts, listen to the stories of your deepest nature, and, if they are not the kind to elevate, change them, but be companionable.

Fourth.—Expect great things of the children. Children learn to speak correctly and properly; find the morals which become them as a matter of course while they are yet children; but the principle of aspiration, as such, is frequently neglected. A child ought to begin to go to college as soon as it can talk; it ought to have visions of a brilliant future as soon as it can dream; along with its daily food should be the food for a mounting mind.

There are many principles which the aspiring father will evolve; these are but the beginning of the study of the higher ideal in the better training of children. The desire to be a better father, the purpose to find the means to properly fill the office, will produce a greater measure of the coveted result.—Elmer Allen Bess in American Motherhood.

Questions on February Reading.

To whom do the children of a home belong? Whose right is it to correct them? Are all fathers fitted to exercise this right? What is the best time to consider this matter? What distinction should there be between the love of children for father and for mother? How is the mother sometimes at fault in the matter? The result of this course holds father and children apart. What will be its effect upon the relation of the father and mother? When the children marry, what further unhappy effects may follow? How should the matter of correction be considered between the parents? How should the children's respect for the father's position be sustained by the mother? How has the world neglected the fathers? How may we account for the fact that there are so few ideal fathers? Have we expected enough of the fathers? When the young father says to the mother, "Now, I'll leave the training of the children to you," what should be the mother's attitude in the matter? Is it sometimes best for one parent to remain silent while the other administers correction? Should this ever be the silence of indifference? What will the father do who realizes the requirements of his position? What should the father supply which may be lost in some degree by the mother's continuous presence with her children? How should the father's influence be the complement of the mother's? If heretofore he has not paid serious attention to those responsibilities, what would he do well to acknowledge? What will result from systematic consideration of the children and their interests? What benefits follow from the parent putting himself in the child's place? With what sort of fathers does familiarity breed contempt? What changes might be needed to make the father's companionship desirable for his children? Why should we expect great things of children? The Lord expects great things of the fathers. "That great things may be required at the hands of the fathers."—Doctrine and Covenants.

"Religion a Science Now."

NEW YORK, November 28.—The new buildings of the Union Theological Seminary in this city were dedicated to-night by Jacob G. Schurman, president of Cornell University. He spoke at the dedicatory exercises now in progress.

"Whether we like it or not," he said, "a change is taking place in the attitude of religious men. The theological student who wants to improve the condition of society must master the social sciences.

"Scientific workers have made it impossible for the men of this generation to regard dogmas as their fathers regarded them. To make belief, for example in the history of the Jews a condition of the salvation of a human soul is in this scientific age of the world not only a physical impossibility but an intellectual absurdity and an outrage on free moral personality."—Kansas City Times-Star.

SOUTH BOARDMAN, MICHIGAN, November, 1910.

Dear Herald: When I look around me and see so many snares and traps laid to hinder the work and draw the minds of God's people from the ways they should go, and evil men who are trying to ruin the lives of our boys and girls, it makes me feel sad, and I feel to say to the young and old, Keep yourselves unspotted from the world, and pray always lest you enter into temptation.

We have a fine lot of young people here in this place. Some have been called and sent forth to preach the gospel to the dying world, and there will be more called and sent from us to do their duty in the gospel work. We trust that your prayers may with ours reach the throne of God in behalf of left Missouri.

I ask the prayers of the Saints to help me resist the evil influences of the world, which are very hard to overcome at times, and which I regret to say I do not always overcome. My prayers are ever with the Saints, and my faith is constant that the faithful Saints will soon receive a bountiful inheritance in Zion.

Your brother and believer in the great and grand angel's message to man,

O. D. SHIRK.

CALABASAS, CALIFORNIA, November 14, 1910.

A relic of antiquity has come into my hands that I think would be of importance to some of our archaeologists or antiquarians. It consists of four rolls of parchment sewed up in a leather cube about one inch square and made watertight. The work is done with much skill and neatness. The parchment is closely written or printed in Hebrew, which I believe to be the kind of Hebrew that was in use in the days of Ezra. I have two of them, one was broken open and one of the rolls lost out, another has the parchment still, but it can easily be taken out and examined, and there is one of the cubes containing the four rolls in a perfect state. I think they are just what is described in Parley P. Pratt's Voice of Warning, that were found by a Mr. Merick. There is one thing sure, they have been used, and that by the Jewish priests, as I verily believe.

They were found five feet beneath the surface, while digging a vault. One of them was broken open out of curiosity and the two were kicked about as things of no consequence, till I got hold of them. The relics were found at Tustin, Orange County, California, by Mr. Brooks, brother-in-law of my brother William. I will submit them to scholars for examination. I believe they are of considerable importance.

J. C. CLAPP.

SANTA ANA, CALIFORNIA, 1415 West Third Street.

MOBILE, ALABAMA, January 7, 1911.

Dear Herald: I would like all the dear Saints in Mississippi, Alabama, and Florida to remember that we want to get the gospel before the people in whatever way we can, and the quickest way possible. I find it impossible to get some people out to our meeting, or get to preach it to them; so the only way to reach them is to carry them literature to read.

Now in a city like Mobile I find myself under the present conditions unable to do much. No building in which to hold services, no tent, no literature to hand out to the people, and no money to buy it.

What is to be done? I believe I can suggest a remedy. Now, all you Saints that have old HERALDS, Ensigns, Autumn Leaves, and Journals of History, just bundle them up, or a part of them, and send them to the above address.

Now, I will make an appeal to the Mobile District. The committee must not lose sight of their duty towards collecting means to purchase tracts to give to the people. I could give out hundreds and thousands if I had them, and will assure you all tracts and papers sent me will reach the doors and hands of the people.

In regard to the tent movement, all are aware of the fact that I am one of the committee. I am trying to collect means enough by the first of March to purchase the tent. I am collecting, taking whatever people will give. I am cutting the boys' hair from place to place for ten cents each, for the tent fund, which encourages them to make a small donation.

Dear Saints, we want the tent as soon as possible, to get in the field to work. There is great need of it. Will you do your part? I find that if each member in the district would pay twenty-five cents, there would be plenty to buy the tent. That would start the work moving nicely in the district. You can give twenty-five cents and not miss it; will you do it? I believe you will. Hence I will expect in a few days to see the letters containing money orders from twenty-five cents to $2.50, to help pay for the tent, tracts, and papers of different kinds to hand to the people, pouring in at our door, 400 Charles street, Mobile, Alabama.

I feel well in the work and enjoy a goodly degree of the Holy Spirit preaching the pure gospel. I am thankful to all the Saints for their hospitality to me and feel the Lord will bless them. I baptized six last Sunday, making thirty-five this conference year. I pray for the spread of the work that I love so much. I only wish that its sound could go to the ears of all people.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, and asking an interest in all your prayers, I am,

Your brother,

ALBERT VANCELEAVE.

JANUARY 6, 1911.

Dear Herald: My soul has been renewed with inward and spiritual rejoicing at the spread and rapid diffusion of the work in this city of Toronto, as well as in all the world. Eternity alone can reveal the enormous power of the press in general and our beloved HERALD in particular, and the potent propagation of the eternal verities of which our church organ has been both agent and principal. It has been well said that "Human imagination utterly fails to grasp the immense calamity that would fall upon the entire race were the printing press to be annihilated. The civilization and erudition of five centuries would vanish as in the twinkling of an eye were the printed works of the world destroyed."

The Christmas Magazine Number of the HERALD ought, by reason of its intrinsic superiority, to find a resting place on the drawing-room table of every home and the shelves of every library of the land. I was deeply impressed with the cogent and convincing sentences of Elder H. O. Smith's truly able presentation in that issue. I trust the Master's blessing will fall in increasing fullness upon our brother's labors, both in pulpit and press.

The Canon of Oswestry, in England, used to say that "Character is the compound result of innumerable causes; the product of influences and the manner of dealing with them." God's aristocracy is not one of mere wealth, pomp, or social position, or even learning. It is the aristocracy of righteousness, goodness, and purity, and one from which no man or woman is excluded by want of wealth, fame, or position.

It is greatly to be hoped that Bishop Evans' splendid idea of inserting his sermons in the World will bring the everlasting gospel to myriads of human hearts which have not hitherto felt its refining influences.

Very welcome and truly gratifying news is at hand from almost all departments of God's moral vineyard; that concerning which the Lord himself has said: "Whereas thou hast been forsaken and hated, so that no man went through thee, I will make thee an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations."—Isaiah 60: 15.

May our respected church organ, its editors and entire staff continue both to flourish and prosper is the earnest prayer of

F. R. TUBB.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, January 10, 1911.

Editors Saints' Herald: My attention has been directed to a paragraph in a recent issue, copied by you from a Kansas City paper.

Permit me to repudiate the claims made for me in that paragraph. The reporter must be laboring under an enlarged protuberance of ideality, and in the excursions of his flowing imagination has precipitated your unfortunate correspondent into an olympiad of fame and distinguished aristocrats.

In imagination I can feel the awful sense of loneliness and contempt, as through monocle and lorgnette I am superciliously reminded, that by some strange and fortuitous occurrence such a plebeian has strayed into the regal presence and by a powdered lackey I am ignominiously thrust out through the "servants' door"; and there let me stay, please.

Your brother,

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

WOODBINE, IOWA, January 1, 1911.

Editors Herald: I wish you a good and prosperous New Year. In the last number of last year's HERALD I noticed under the heading "Obituary" an account of the death of Sr. Jane Berry, of Atchison, Kansas. If permitted a space in your columns I would like to say a few words of her, as I knew her. In my early membership and ministry, I knew her as Sr. Jane Fox, a faithful Saint, unwavering in her devotion to the cause of truth. And soon after I landed in England on my mission, in 1863, I found myself in the vicinity where I was baptized into the Church of Christ; viz, Westbromwich. She heard of my being there, and was one of the first to receive the message I was authorized to deliver. When Elders Jason W. Briggs and Jeremiah Jeremiah came there the first branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ was organized at Westbromwich, and she was received on her original baptism, and proved herself a worthy member. Her house was open to the ministry and to all Saints.

Her unselfish kindness I can never forget. Elder Briggs was taken down with a very painful disease. There was no place to which I could take him, that he could be comfortable, except hers, and that she generously offered. For about three weeks he suffered the most excruciating pain, and I watched and cared for him during the time to the best of my ability. Sister Fox (Berry) rendered every comfort within her power, and bore the burden of caring for me also, for I could not leave him in his great affliction, and Brother Jeremiah was gone to Wales. I can say truly, that she was worthy to be "well reported of, having brought up her children in the way of the Lord, lodged strangers, washed the Saints' feet, (and clothes, too,) relieved the afflicted, diligently followed every good work." (1 Timothy 5: 10.) And her name will be had in everlasting remembrance by all who know her. And it is inscribed in letters of light in the Lamb's book of life. She aided in every way she could the feeble efforts of the missionary to reestablish the truth in her native land. May God comfort those she has left to mourn her loss, and help them to emulate her blessed example is my earnest prayer.

CHARLES DERRY.

OELWEIN, IOWA.

Editors Saints' Herald: I have seen no letters from our vicinity for some time. Bro. J. B. Wildermuth, district president, has been here on business for several days. He preached a sermon a week ago last Sunday. We all feel extremely grateful for the work done by himself and wife during tent meetings here two years ago. Bro. J. B. preached some powerful sermons then and was warmly praised by the papers.

Bro. L. E. Hills, of Marion, Iowa, who was with us four years ago and preached three or four sermons in Redler's Opera House, aroused quite an interest. The Spirit seemed to be with us in power. We have quite a number of children in the branch and nearly all the older ones seemed very much interested in his Bible charts and in the explanations given. Brother Hills baptized four last Saturday. The people outside are hard to reach. They treat the preaching with an icy indifference. The editor of our daily paper is very friendly to Brother Hills and wrote some very nice pieces about him; said he considered him a very eloquent speaker and that his knowledge of the Bible was phenomenal.

We have quite a nice little Sunday school here; also a Religio. Bro. Robert Smith, branch president, is a faithful and untiring worker in every place he is put. Brother Ed Speer, our chorister, is doing excellent work in training the young people.

Bro. John McQueen and Lubin Loveland, as secretary and treasurer of the Sunday school, are doing good work and are very promising young men. We are all striving to uphold the Master's cause in our city, and ask an interest in your prayers. Your sister in gospel bonds,

KATHARINE B. SHIPPY.

LAMONI, IOWA.

Editors Herald: Oh, if I could only collect my thoughts and place each word aright to express gratitude to Him who rules my destiny, and who has permitted me to live in this the eleventh hour, at the dawning of the Lord's commencement among all nations; when flashes of gospel light are reaching every land; when the Jews are receiving national favor, and the Lamanites are receiving their restored record. I can not by word make vivid, or measure the least little ray of our heavenly Father's love and long suffering manifested towards poor, faltering me, and I do hunger and thirst for righteousness within self, and ask myself, What is it that I am required to sacrifice? The answer comes in the one little word—self. And when that is attained, all other consecrations would be accomplished through that perfect love which casts out all fear.

Could we, when called upon to pay a just debt, call it a sacrifice? It would be a pleasure to return what did not belong to us; so likewise in paying our surplus, and tithing. It should be the greatest theme of our life, to make the Lord's will our will, and walk with him daily. Oh, how can we willfully be disobedient to such a loving Father, who so tenderly cares for us every moment, and not a hair of our head falls to the ground unnoticed by him?

One half of God's people seem like spoiled children, who have indulged in their every wish—become ungrateful, and gone off to play in "the broad way"; where they dress in fine, costly apparel; where there are upper and lower tens; where the needy are uncared for; where they take advantage of each other in their dealings, and make fair promises, but never fulfill them. Suspicions, jealousies, talebearing, backbiting, are very prominent. Finally, they get into such a strife that Satan comes marching in all dressed up in the latest style of his own inventing, and they all flock around him in great admiration of his outward adornments. And then, with an approving smile, he takes them all "under his wing."

Now, if the angels in heaven rejoice over one sinner that repents, how must they grieve over the transgressor? Yet our loving Creator still continues to kindly provide for them, sending the gentle rain, and the sunshine. O, my Father in heaven, please give me of that same love and forbearance? Increase my hatred of the evil propensities of self, and my love for thee, even if it be by thy chastening hand, which I love. I do not care to sail on flowery beds of ease; but rather to suffer with Christ. I fear not to trust thee. My life is in thy hands. Oh, keep thy people safe from the evil which they are able to overcome, I ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

This beautiful world is now losing its charms to me as age advances. That which was once attractive has no incentive now. But a hand seems beckoning us on to another sphere.

Oh, you heaven-born writers! who also can express your ideas orally, seemingly without an effort: I believe you little realize the great good you are doing for others. In fact, how could we live without you? To me, it seems such a wonderful talent, as I am a complete blank in that line. May the Lord continue to inspire your minds.

JENNETTE STRAUSS.

ABERDARE, SOUTH WALES.

Dear Herald: Not having written for some time I would like to let you know something about the work in Wales at present. I am thankful to God for all his love and mercy towards his children, as I can say if it were not so I would not be standing in my place as a deacon in this church at present. I have never had cause to doubt this grand and marvelous work. It is quite true, "Eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, neither has it entered into the heart of man those good things which the Lord hath prepared for those that love him."

I used to idolize the Episcopal Church and I was grieved in my heart to think that this was all vanity and the workmanship of man's hands. I have been to Saint Paul's Cathedral in London and have marveled at its magnificence, and I can well say, Great is the Goddess Diana, of the English.

The work in Wales seems to make very poor progress at times, owing to the fact that Wales has been one of the strongholds of Brighamism. We have about a dozen in membership, so far as true membership is concerned, for there are not many who can stand in this church without a good testimony of the word. I am very sorry to say that the times are very black at present, owing to great strikes in this country which are impoverishing many of us.

We opened a little church a few weeks ago and we are going to do our uttermost to get this work before the people. I am very sorry to say we have not been able to do more than we have, owing to circumstances, and we have been unable to support the church missionaries as we should like.

We ask for the prayers of all Saints for our success in presenting the rock of truth to the people. We would also like for some little help in making our little chapel a success as our financial support is poor at present. Ever hoping and praying for success to our cause,

H. SNOOK.

Editors Herald: I have been holding meetings at this place nearly five weeks. There is a demand in this and the Little Sioux District for laborers. More calls than we can fill, and our laborers are few. I closed our meetings here last night, and have baptized four precious souls, and Brother Crippen one, into the church and kingdom of God; others are interested. We have a noble little band of Saints, with Bro. A. R. Crippen as president; a gentle spirited brother, loved by all; and they all look upon him as a father. The past seventy days I have preached eighty-four sermons, and baptized eleven; that makes thirty in all since March.

W. A. SMITH.

WEIR, KANSAS, December 20, 1910.

Dear Herald: I am seventy-two years old to-day. Have been in the church about fifty years. I have never had cause to regret the step taken, and can say I know of a surety this gospel work is true. I had a dream last night that I wish to relate; also the interpretation as given me:

I thought I was in a small field picking up and arranging little vines and things and looking for flowers. I saw big, solid stumps where trees had been sawed down, not cut down, and they looked like they had been freshly sawed, but I knew it had been done a long time. I also saw trees standing nice and natural. The small field I was in ran east and west, and I saw a large field north of this small field, and it looked dense. But I had a desire to go over into it, and see if I could find flowers or little vines over there, and if there were any blooming; and while I was standing, thinking of going over, a woman came to me and said, "Don't go; there is no end to that field. You might get lost and never get back. Don't go; there is no end to it." I never went.

The interpretation is this: The small field I was in is the church; the small vines and things I was working with among the large trees and stumps was the lesser work of the church, and was my work; nothing high or famous. The work was small, but could become beautiful if done well; just as small vines and flowers in bloom are beautiful. The large field was the world, and it is dense and dark, and its ways are not beautiful, large or small, and its wickedness is without end, and to keep separate from her in all our ways and that the church in general is pleasing in the Lord's sight.

There have been remarks like this among the Saints, about the use of tobacco, tea, and coffee, "That the Saints in the early days used them and they enjoyed the Spirit to a marked degree." True, but we have to be brought up higher step by step. When God brought the children of Israel out of Egypt he had to give them carnal laws to bring them step by step to Christ. What he "winked at" then, he did not permit after Christ came. It is very clearly to be seen that what he permitted in the early rise of the church, he would not permit now; that is, if we grow and progress. There is no standing still in this work. We must either go forward or backward. I would advise all young Saints not to begin any habit that would hinder from holding any office in the church; for what will bring the officers up higher will bring the members higher. We are commanded to "Come out of her, O ye my people; and be ye separate."

Your sister in the one faith,

SARAH A. FRANCIS.

BRIDGEPORT, CONNECTICUT.

Editors Herald: As an isolated Saint, not having opportunity to bear my testimony in meeting, I am acting on the suggestion of a sister similarly situated, and am doing so through the columns of the HERALD. I think this a good idea, as it would help keep the isolated ones in touch with the church and keep them from drifting away, as they are otherwise liable to do.

A week ago to-day I had the pleasure of meeting with a small number of Saints down in Maine. In Winterport there are nine who formerly were members of the Stonington Branch, but who were obliged to leave on account of business depression. Although separated from their branch they have not forgotten their duties. They have prayer meeting twice a week, also Sunday school and Religio. The priesthood is represented in the form of a teacher who is just starting to preach. The town has been covered with tracts and the Saints are confident that a branch will eventually be formed there. They have spiritual dreams and visions and a strong assurance of the Spirit is present at their prayer meetings.

It might appear strange to some, but it is nevertheless a fact, that the Spirit, which is so conspicuously absent in the magnificent churches here in the city, is abundantly present at the meetings of these humble minded Saints at Winterport. Our Catholic friends might not agree with that statement, as they believe that Christ is actually present with them in their eucharist. They have him compressed in the form of wafers, which they keep in a gold chalice under lock and key, on their altars. Perhaps that is why his presence is not noticed in the church proper. I have heard the Saints called gullible and credulous, but I haven't yet met with anything that required quite as much gullibility as does the doctrine of transubstantiation.

Speaking of doctrines difficult to believe, I think that Christian Science is second to none. Much space has been given them in the newspapers since the death of their founder, and their predicament is rather amusing. Believing that there is no such thing as death, they are face to face with the fact that the lips that first uttered that fallacy are now turning to dust. Some of Mrs. Eddy's followers look for her to rise from the dead, even as Christ did, and prove the truth of the doctrine.

For my part I prefer a faith that is warranted by scripture rather than by papal tradition or so-called science. In closing I desire the prayers of the Saints that I may continue faithful, and develop into a useful and efficient worker in the cause.

Your brother,

WILLARD NEWMAN.

Another Tithe-paying Girl.

I was pleased with the letter from Sr. Vivia Davis in HERALD of December 14, headed "A tithe-paying working girl."

My experience, likewise, in paying tithing has convinced me that it is right and pleasing to the Lord, however small the amount we may have to tithe. The Lord has greatly blessed my humble efforts, and many times it has veritably seemed like the windows of heaven were opened so that I could not retain all the blessings. Not only blessings of a temporal nature, but a spiritual uplift of mind and heart, that can not be obtained any other way. The feeling that we have done something for our Master brings to us that peace of mind that partakes of the divine, —which the world can neither give nor take away.

However, all do not see alike, because of different environments and training, so we should be charitable and patient toward those who may not see as we do. They perhaps have not been schooled in the gospel as we have. Many of us can not remember a time when we did not pay our tithing, and that duty has grown to be a part of our lives, though we still deem it a pleasure and a blessed privilege. I feel if I might help some other to do his duty and thus find the peace and satisfaction I have found, I shall be glad.

It must make our Savior sad when he sees some of his people dwarfing their souls by withholding their means from his church, thinking it is not their duty to give when they are so poor in this world's goods. They will say, "The Lord doesn't expect that kind of a sacrifice, while I am in such poverty. Why, I am as needy as anyone in the church." And they often blame the Lord for their poverty. The law says there is not one exempt from this law who belongs to the church of the living God, so let us not be among those who shall come under the decree wherein the Lord says: "Ye are cursed with a curse; for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation." Let us not be among that number, but as Saints, be the few who are different, —the salt of the earth. But if we have lost our hold on spiritual light and strength, then how can we be the savor wherewith to salt the earth?

What a grand and sacred thought is suggested by the fact that we are Christ's disciples, and he expects our loyal support. He said: "Henceforth I call you no longer servants, but friends." Then let us indeed be true friends unto the Lord, and be true to ourselves and neighbors, by doing everything required in the law. Thus will our souls expand and our characters develop and become more like our great Pattern.

The idea, to my mind, is that it is not the amount Saints give, so much as the willingness of heart. The closer one's circumstances, the greater will be the sacrifice. Like the widow's mite, it will seem more than that of those more able to give, and we may be sure the Lord will accept of the sacrifice, and bless accordingly.

In this way we store up faith, the only kind of faith that will stand in the testing time. When the children of God do what they can, even if all can not see alike,—if our hearts are right before him, free from selfishness and stubbornness,—I believe then will the Lord come to set the church altogether in order, beauty and harmony, for he has said he "will cut short his work in righteousness." Also in Doctrine and Covenants 77:1 he says: "For if you will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world, you must prepare yourselves by doing the things I have commanded you and required of you."

My prayer is that each of us may wisely occupy the time allotted to us.

The Manchester Debate.

My debate with J. W. Chism at the above named place is over, and passed into history. I am not able to tell the exact results. Church propositions were discussed, each claiming his church to be in harmony with the New Testament church in origin, organization, doctrine, faith and practice. The following rules were signed and agreed upon to govern in the debate: "Hedge's Rules of Logic; the King James translation of the Bible shall be the standard of evidence; all other testimony shall be received upon its merits." Mr. Chism has but little regard for rules of honorable controversy. In fact, I would have no hope of him complying strictly to them. But signing the agreement had a tendency to hold him in check, that is all.

This Campbellite champion has a happy faculty of shouting "amen," or speaking out, rising to a point of order (?) when a good clear argument is being made against him. He admitted "there was tactics in debate," and anyone who hears Chism in debate will observe that this is one of his.

On the first proposition he devoted at least two thirds of his time trying to prove Joseph the Prophet a polygamist. His witnesses were those whom the court had impeached or decided against. But court decisions and so forth are same as nothing to this champion wise man when a debate is on. For the thoughts of his reward will spur him to thicket of the fray—yea, he will boast of over an hundred debates; of his learning in Greek and Hebrew. He will call his opponent a liar with as good a conscience as he would say his prayers. He earnestly insists on two sessions the day, for it doth not matter to him whether the big crowds come or not, just so those come who are to dig up his fifty or sixty dollars for doing the job.

At Manchester it was reported by those who were supposed to know, that his reward was about sixty dollars. I hope that is true; in fact, I would desire that his brethren would give him a round hundred dollars each time he meets any of our brethren in debate. Jesus says: "Verily they have their reward." So it is: He should have his reward in this world —the reward he labors for.

On Mr. Chism's proposition, the main issue or contention was over the language in Matthew 28:19 and Acts 2:38, as to whether a man is baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, or baptized into the name of Jesus Christ. Of course we had signed the agreement that King James' Translation shall be the standard, but the standard was against his books and doctrinal teachings. At this juncture he raised his little form to hoist his banner of Greek—but the standard was already up. He also spent much time in remodeling the New Testament church so that his restored (?) church by Walter Scott would have some resemblance.

The notoriety of this champion had preceded him, but we heard several remarks which expressed disappointment in Mr. Chism as a debater and true, Christian gentleman. After his boisterous conduct and interrupting me so much—shouting while I was talking, "You are a liar"—several quit attending the debate, saying they would not spend their time listening to such a man. However, in the interest of humanity and the gospel restored by the angel, I am willing to meet him once a month if necessary in public debate, and let the people judge how long he remains a champion.

We have propositions signed to meet again near New Baden, January 24, for twelve sessions.

A Prophecy.

Verily, thus saith the Spirit to my Saints, Surely they are had in remembrance by the Great I Am, and inasmuch as they will walk humbly and faithfully before me they shall be blessed of the Lord in basket and store, and enjoy a greater degree of my Spirit than they have hitherto been able to receive.

There have been contentions and envyings and many evils entered into by those professing my name that are not pleasing to me, and except my people put away those evils and cease their contentions, they must needs suffer at my hand, saith their God.

Now, therefore, lay aside all evil surmisings and learn to be kind-hearted towards the wayward, and pray for each other, and my people shall have great joy in seeing their sick ones healed, and their lame ones restored, the blind see, the deaf hear, for I am God and can not countenance evil in any form. Therefore be ye clean and pure in heart that ye may behold my face ere long, and have exceeding great joy at that day; for surely the time is very near when I shall visit my Bride; and blessed are the wise virgins at that day, for they shall behold me, and know that I am he who was slain for the whole world.

Now, verily, let all my Saints know of a surety that my purposes must be carried out in mine own way. According as my word has gone forth so shall it stand.

Though the heavens and earth shall pass away my word shall not, but must be fulfilled; and blessed are those who give a listening ear to my counsel, and who obey my word.

Given this Sunday morning, the 30th day of October, 1910.

Grandfield Discussion.

I just closed another debate with the Campbellites. It was held at Grandfield, Oklahoma. A. W. Young, president of Thorp Spring, Texas, Christian College was my opponent. I met him three years ago here at Davidson, Oklahoma.

The church propositions were discussed at Grandfield, the Bible the only book to be used. Young would only stay three days. We had two sessions a day. I had nothing to do with arranging the propositions or time, but will say we want twelve sessions when debating these fellows, and open the gate, let all books in on their merits; the Bible the standard. They have learned the sooner they get shut of us in a debate the better off they are, and they get their pay just the same for a short job. In the three days the people just began to wake up and get interested when it closed. Our work wears and theirs does not. I was gaining all the time with the people and good was done for us.

Mr. Young's moderator said to me just as the debate closed: "Mr. Aylor, I want to say for you that you are the most honorable man I ever heard in a debate," meaning by that that I was honest and my opponent was not, which is true. I don't expect to meet an honest man when I meet one of them in debate. And if they are dishonest in debate they will not do to trust with the true riches.

I am glad we have a religion we do not have to resort to dishonest methods to defend. Our creed is all truth, and, of course, all it takes is all truth to sustain it, and the people soon see it.

Elders W. R. Smith and T. L. McGeorge were with me and held up my hands. We made our home with Bro. and Sr. A. M. Boyd, formerly from Kentucky. Doctor Boyd enjoys a good practice and the esteem of the people.

I go from here in a few days to Vernon, Texas, then Fort Worth and Dallas.

Your brother in the conflict,

DAVIDSON, OKLAHOMA, December 20, 1910.

Dedication at Wilburton.

Sunday, December 4, 1910, was the day set apart by the Wilburton Branch as dedication day. A church building was erected by Bro. Ellis Short at Cove, Arkansas, and in 1901 was purchased by the Wilburton Branch, together with sufficient timber to make the building twenty-four by fifty-two feet, with twelve feet arch ceiling. It is standing on a corner lot, Avenue B, and College street, one of the best locations in the city, one block north of the Missouri Kansas and Texas city depot, and two blocks north of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific depot, and one block south of the new forty-five thousand dollar central school building. For some cause the house had not been formally dedicated. Promptly at 10 a. m. Bro. Wiley Wooten, assistant superintendent of the Sunday school, called the assembly to order. After the usual song service and prayer Bro. Ross Moore led in the reading; the response was led by A. Z. Rudd, the district superintendent. The lesson was very good. Promptly at 11 a. m. presiding Elder H. R. Harder announced hymn number 92, "All hail the power of Jesus' name." After singing, the president read the ninety-second Psalm and offered prayer. Number 200 was sung when Elder Lee Quick, of Mapleton, Kansas, was announced as the speaker, and we certainly think he did justice to the occasion. Bishop Short offered the dedicatory prayer. Closing song was number 190 in Hymnal. Benediction by Elder Harder.

At 2.30 p. m., sacrament service in charge of presiding priest, D. O. Harder, assisted by Elder Quick. The emblems were passed by Priests S. M. Plumb and C. C. Chrisman. After the sacrament was administered thirty minutes were spent in testimonies. This was a very spiritual meeting and enjoyed by all present. Joseph Alma, son of Bro. John A. and Sr. Effie Robinson, was blessed by Brn. Ellis Short and H. R. Harder. Six were added to the branch by vote, and letters of removal from Manchester, Texas. After the close of this service, five minutes intervened, when Brother Harder started, "Now let us rejoice in the day of salvation." It was sung with the Spirit, after which Brother Quick offered prayer. Brother Short spoke for over one hour on the Order of Enoch. Closing song. Benediction by Elder A. Z. Rudd.

At 7.30 p. m. number 210 in Praises was sung; prayer by Dr. Elder H. L. Dalby. Elder Lee Quick was the speaker. Sr. Effie Wallace presided at the organ. Among the visitors present we note Bro. and Sr. C. C. Chrisman and family of Panda. Bro. Sam Skinner, wife and child, also Sr. Bertha Snow and son, of Adamson. Bro. and Sr. Henry Davidson, of Manning. Brother Hackman, of Hartshorne. This was a very profitable day for all who were present.

Your brother in bonds,

A. Z. RUDD.

In the Shadow of a Cloud.

The experiences of life are not all alike—they differ widely in their character. Shadows and sunshine are woven and interwoven into life's pictures so as to please the eye, give a happy blending, and bless humanity. There can be no question as to the blessing. Joys would cease to be joys if we had nothing opposite from joy.

But as the product of creation rolled from the hand of the Creator it was so wisely tempered and so divinely constructed as to be the very best for the real needs and demands of humanity. It was not intended that we should live continually in the sunlight. Night and darkness add their quota to the necessities of man. Blessings may come in disguise—they may appear in the most dreadful mien possible. It simply rests with us whether we are capable of reading correctly the picture portrayed in the Shadow of the Cloud.

So far I do not claim to be able to know why a loving Father should permit so dark a shadow to fall upon my home and take from us our little boy, Basil Elmer. He was a goodly child, full of life, mirth, and cheerful obedience, gentle and kind with the other children,—and we loved him. My three boys and three girls were the hope and joy of my life.

It has been a trial and sacrifice to be absent from home, notwithstanding we love the church, the gospel, the angel's message, and cheerfully labor in hope of blessing others with the message of the risen Christ. My constant prayer has been for God to bless and protect loved ones at home.

While engaged in a meeting seven miles east of Cleburne, Texas, at the pleasant home of Bro. C. W. Spence, a message came from home saying: "Basil is dead." Like the letter from Antonio, they were a "few of the unpleasantest words that ever blotted paper." This message reached me about 3 p. m., Tuesday, January 3.

Kind, loving friends hastened to my necessities. I left Cleburne at 7.10 p. m. and by 6.30 next evening arrived home. Our boy had died Saturday evening at 6.30 o'clock, December 31. The old adage: "'Tis an ill wind that blows nobody good" seemed to be true at this time. The cold wind and weather made it possible for the thoughtful, loving wife to keep the little body till I arrived. I arrived home Wednesday evening.

I am very conscious of the truthfulness of the words of Ella Wheeler Wilcox:

"Laugh, and the world laughs with you;
Weep, and you weep alone;
For the sad old earth must borrow its mirth,
It has trouble enough of its own.
Feast, and your halls are crowded;
Fast, and the world goes by."

Fortunately, I do not write these lines directly to the "world." In the sacred history of ages gone I read of a people who were "not of the world," but had been "chosen out of the world." I know of such a people to-day to whom the words of the quotation above do not apply.

Basil died of membranous croup. He was sick only three days. Bro. R. B. Brown spoke very comforting words at the funeral, before leaving the house. The singing was also comforting and full of thoughtful reflection. While sympathizing friends were singing: "There is rest for the weary," especially the fifth stanza and chorus, I could not refrain from sobbing aloud, "Oh, but that does not bring back my boy!" We can only trust in a loving heavenly Father for our comfort, reconciliation, and hope.

When the message reached me and while journeying homeward I was laden with resentment. I could see no reason why God should take my boy. I could shed no tears till I reached home, and beheld his little form in the clasp of death. I came home as one going to war—to fight and subdue an intruding enemy; with hope, as it were, of being able to dispatch him and restore peace to the inmates. I had been so fond of my boys that I could not think it possible that God would permit one to be taken.

I shall try to continue in the service of God and labor for the angel's message. My faith is still in the Lord and in his divine power to heal, bless, and save. I shall try to get nearer to him, though I be now walking in the shadow, not in the shadow of doubting God or his goodness or his gospel, but in the shadow of life's darkest experience.

"We shall meet, but we shall miss him;
There will be one vacant chair;
We will linger to caress him
When we breathe our evening prayer."

Still trusting in God, I am yours,

R. M. MALONEY.

Can You Help?

The writer is especially interested in the solution of the following problems, and hereby solicits aid from any and especially from the ministry of the church. Anyone having anything bearing on this matter is hereby solicited to send same direct to the Church Historian, who has consented to prepare same for publication if at all possible for him to do so.

If you have matter bearing upon these questions and do not care to let it get out of your hands, please send a copy of it. It is very important that positive evidence should be had and placed in print for the use of all.

1. Did the prehistoric horse and elephant exist on the American continent contemporaneously with man?

2. Did the prehistoric Americans know of and use building cement?

The solution affirmatively is important to us as a people, hence in making excerpts from encyclopedias or other works great care should be had in proofing such excerpts. Give name and volume of work quoted from, as well as date of publication.

An energetic response to this appeal will be greatly appreciated. The Historian's address is, Heman C. Smith, Lamoni, Iowa.

Anxiously yours,

J. W. WIGHT.

Among the Lamanites.

I was approached yesterday on the street of Pawnee while distributing HERALDS and Ensigns, by a young Pawnee Lamanite, Kit Carron, a blind boy of twenty years, who is a wonder to all of Pawnee people who know him. He goes anywhere, very nearly as good as if he could see. His aunt, Mrs. Albert Long, was reading to him the account of Brother Fowler in Philadelphia; how good the Lord was to place a new set of eyes in his head, etc. It seemed to affect him insomuch that he desires our church to pray for him, that he may know what to do to receive his sight. I explained to him that signs were not for them, that did not believe. I told him to fast and pray and I would present his name through the church papers. His church membership is with the Baptists, whose pastor is instructing his Lamanite congregation to believe only in the one book. Mr. and Mrs. Long are also Baptists. He is a director in the church. He and Mrs. Long and Mrs. Bennie Burns listened to me two hours and a half on the street yesterday, after which they clapped their hands, after I had buried the sectarian God with his heathen love. This Mr. Long is one of the leading chiefs of the Pawnee tribe. He delivered a book of Mormon from his carriage to another Lamanite in the presence of his pastor, and is helping me to get the book before all those he knows will read. To those who are sending papers to me. Please desist for a while, as I may have to come home on the account of sickness of family.

Good Meetings at Nebo, Illinois.

A successful series of meetings held by Elders J. F. Curtis and R. T. Walters closed here January 4, with seventeen baptisms, among them, five heads of families and their companions. There is much rejoicing among us because the Lord has remembered us once more.

Some of these new Saints are showing a disposition to get hold of the work properly. One of them expected some persecution from his relatives but was surprised upon hearing them rejoice over his repentance and wish him abundant success. The new converts are very happy—"Old things have passed away; all things are become new."

Last Saturday I preached the funeral of Bro. Marion Johnson's mother-in-law. She was a Baptist but had expressed a desire to unite with our church. The services were held in the Disciples' church. Some who came had never heard our people and they said they would not have come had they known who was going to preach. After hearing the sermon, they went away speaking favorably.

Eight or ten more at this place are saying that they believe and intend to be baptized. Praying for the success of truth everywhere,

W. A. GUTHRIE.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. J. Charles May, Papeete, Tahiti, October 31, 1910: "May the Lord bless the efforts of the HERALD in the advancing of the truth and in the exposing of error is the prayer of your brother."

Sr. Emma Gibson, Windsor, Ontario, Canada, writing for the first time, says: "Yesterday, our home class was organized into a school, and we shall hold preaching services as well. We hope some day to have a branch organization, and we are thinking of buying a lot on which we expect to build a church in the near future. I have seen the sick healed many times and my own boy, aged eight, was healed of a very serious sickness under the hands of Elders Howlett and Levi Annett. My husband does not belong, but I read the church papers to him. Traveling elders are welcome."

Sr. Clara McNeil, Mount Ayr, Iowa, orders the HERALD and says: "I am among the isolated ones, but I know I am not without God. Am so thankful I am a member of the church, for I know it is of God. That has been proven to me in more than one way. So many of us in the church do not set the example we should to those who are without. Let us pray for one another that we may do so."

Bro. Samuel Hughes, Fanshaw, Oklahoma, writes: "I ask the prayers of all the Saints who read this that I may become strong in faith and in the work, which I have been in for six years. I am young in years, but the Lord has blessed me, and I want to be faithful to the end."

Sr. Clara Johnson, Far West, Missouri: "As the Christmas time draws near it seems to fill my heart with a desire to work more faithfully for my heavenly Father, and the Christ who came to bring peace on earth, good will to men. October 15 and 16 the Far West District held their conference here. Some spoke of the time the Saints were driven from this place and what sufferings they endured. They spoke of how thankful they were to be permitted to be with the Saints at Far West and stand on the sacred spot where once our fathers stood. We have a band of faithful Saints, who are striving to help build up one of "the waste places of Zion." We have a nice Sunday school but our Religion light is a little dim. We listened this morning to a good sermon by Brother Brewster, who has moved here from Iowa."

Delmont C. Torey, of the schooner L. T. Whitmore, writing from North Deer Isle, Maine, thinks we should all do what we can to spread the good news of a restored gospel to those who know it not. "If every member were a preacher, there would be none too many. That which we learn from a prayerful perusal of the Old Testament should bring us with reverence to the New Testament, at the feet of Him of whom the prophets wrote. The deeper we search into his character the more we are impressed that not to live according to his counsel would be the greatest injury we could do to ourselves. If he desires to use us as instruments to build up his work, we should say, Here am I, send me; but if it is enough that we should simply obey his commands in a quiet way and let our light shine, we should be just as ready."

Jacob Zimmerman, Berlin, North Dakota: "I have been blessed of the Lord in many ways. If we take Christ for an example we will surely be following in the right path. It is stated in the Scriptures, Nahum 1: 7: 'The Lord is good, a stronghold in the day of trouble; and he knoweth them that trust in him,' which is certainly true by my own experience. When we hold ourselves selfishly apart from the poor and suffering ones, we hold ourselves also apart from Christ, and it is from love of humanity that we are required, as followers of Christ, to give ourselves to the service of our fellow-men, rather than to the accumulation of wealth for selfish purposes. 'And above all these things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness.'—Colossians 3: 14. Let us try and follow these principles, that we may receive many blessings from our Lord."

N. L. Douglas, Ukiah, California: "Bro. F. A. Smith organized a branch here over a year ago. We all did the best we could. Bro. Henry York as preacher, Bro. J. Heger our priest. They have done well. I have heard many good, grand sermons, yet I have never heard better than those of Brother York, young in the gospel, yet powerful in his faith. He is gentle and kind to all, full of love and charity, but the people of this part just will not come out to hear. People tell me here they want their own way; we want God's way."

W. Strange, Chicago, Illinois: "I desire to express my gratification at the prospectus contained in the late HERALD, November 23, promising a series of doctrinal subjects treated for the perusal of the membership in general. I have often wondered why we have not had this, with such a host of brilliant minds as we have in the church. Many very fine people are sadly deficient in the way of comprehending the different functions and operations of each of the Trinity in the Godhead. God the Father, and his Son Jesus Christ, and the Holy Ghost are all in perfect harmony with each other. This reminds me that fifteen years ago a revelation came to me while I was walking the streets of Chicago in the discharge of my duties, explaining the difference between the natural and spiritual birth. The letters forming the statement appeared to be cut from wood about twelve inches deep, and stood about twenty-five or thirty feet higher than the sidewalk, suspended in the air, which in part stated that the natural birth was but a type of the spiritual. Although I have used the illustration several times since, I have yet to find the man or set of men that can successfully overthrow the argument; Elder Tanner, last Sabbath evening, to my surprise, spoke upon that subject. His discourse covered the seven verses referred to in a very masterly manner, and was practically the same, only clothed with superior language and delivered with the vim, energy, and soul that should characterize the gospel message."

Frank R. Tackley, Bullards Bar, California: "I can say this great latter day work is of God. I do not regret the day when I joined the true church of Jesus Christ. I like to read the good letters from my brothers and sisters. They are spiritual. It is all that I have to read and I would not be without them. I take the Ensign and SAINTS' HERALD. I am very sorry that I can not have the privilege to be with the dear Saints."

Sr. C. E. Williams, Springfield, Oregon: "I have been corresponding with an elderly aunt, living in Illinois, who has belonged to the Christian Church for years, and at first her letters were very bitter; but I explained to her our position, the difference between us and the Utah church, and at her request sent her my Book of Mormon. Now she writes me she believes the book is true and reads and rereads the papers I send her. If an elder will call on her, she will be glad to talk with him. She is poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith, and earnestly seeking for more light. Her name is Mrs. Oliver Mann, Morrison, Whiteside County, Illinois. She lives one and one half miles out of town, on a rural route. If an elder can stop and see her I believe good can be done, and she assures me they will be taken care of." [Elder F. M. Cooper, of Plano, please take notice.—EDITORS.]

Jacob L. Rust, Gladstone, Illinois: "We had Bro. C. E. Willey with us two weeks and he preached twelve sermons that were very instructive to the people. They turned out well for Gladstone, and seemed to be interested. A good many are inquiring and want to know when he is coming back. Brother Willey is very companionable, instructive, and a gentleman. He is welcome, and I think I express the opinions of the major part of the people who heard him."

Isaac Bath, Canton, Illinois: "We are here in Canton without any branch privileges, and are isolated, without a place to hold the fort. Canton is growing to be one of the largest plow and implement factory towns in the United States, and is still growing in population. There are a great many different nationalities come here for employment. I have not been so lucky financially as some in old age, so I am left to depend on my children for a living, and I have to do something for God's work in distributing literature."

E. W. Nunley, Cookes Point, Texas: "We have had a good time all the way through Christmas. At the instigation of our deacon, Dr. C. A. Sherrill, the branch organized into a surprise party. On Christmas morning, after the exercises of the school were over, I asked them whether they desired a sermon or not. A brother arose and made a motion that they adjourn and meet for dinner at Brother Nunley's at 1 o'clock p. m., and to have preaching at night; the motion carried and to the pastor's house they drove in wagons and buggies, with lots of boxes filled with good things to eat. They soon sat a long table, and piled upon it the contents of the boxes. Everybody ate and rejoiced. Last, but not least, they presented their pastor and his good wife with a nice sum of cash, and other temporalities. We failed, in language, to express appreciation and gratitude to God and the people for their kindness."

Christina Rasmussen, Crescent, Iowa: "We enjoy reading your pages each week, and learn how the gospel is winning its way, and the dealings of God with his people. This is one of the ancient landmarks, where the work of the Reorganization was planted in an early day by some of its first missionaries, Brn. W. W. Blair, E. C. Briggs, David H. Smith, and others. I well remember these brethren, when they came to preach, though I was only a child. We have a nice little church building here now, but most of the older members that were here then have passed on to their reward. Our branch is not making the progress it should, but we have a good Sunday school that is doing much to bring the young into the church. Several young people have been baptized here the past summer."

Sr. A. Oakman, Middlesex, England: "I read the letters and feel that I should like to add my testimony. Why am I a Latter Day Saint? Because I have been convinced of sin, and only by obeying the gospel of Jesus Christ can I gain forgiveness. The benefit derived from worship of God more than makes up for what we may be called to sacrifice. Have been a member of the church ten years, and can testify that the service of our heavenly Father makes life brighter, happier; it is all there is to live for. I thank God that he opened my eyes and lifted me out of darkness and placed my feet upon the rock. I know that God does help his children if they walk humbly. Christ said that those who do his will 'shall know of the doctrine,' and I can testify that the doctrine is of God. I hope to stand at last with the redeemed."

E. C. Woodward, Jonesport, Maine: "I am interested in seeing how our heavenly Father's work is prospering. Have been in the work only a short time. Was baptized last July by Bro. U. W. Greene. I used to attend the Congregational Church, and being brought up in that belief, I could not understand those Latter Day Saints. I used to slur them and run them down in every way that I could; but I began to see how I was being overpowered by Satan, and knowing if I continued that way I never would prosper, I began to pray to my Father in heaven to show me the way more plainly. Then I began to study the books of the Latter Day Saints' Church, to see what they believed. The way appeared so plain to me that I couldn't get around it, and I thank God that he has brought me out of darkness into the beautiful light. I can truthfully say he is helping me to overcome all evils which lay in my pathway. We have very interesting services conducted by Elder S. F. Cushman; also Religio and history classes. He has been faithful to his calling and has done a good work in this place."

Emma Hale Whitford, Port Huron, Michigan: "I love to read the letters in the HERALD, also other articles written which are instructive and encouraging. We do not know the weight of our own words or what hearts may be encouraged by our weak effort. All around is sickness and distress and confusion, and through it all shines the light of the truth. Our hearts go out in sympathy to those who are in darkness, and how much we desire to have our lives reflect the love which should characterize the children of God. We have been greatly encouraged recently by a number of sermons delivered by Elder St. John, and Elder J. Grant. For one I can say, I was thankful to hear the beautiful words of instruction. Our district Religio president, Bro. William Sage, of Detroit, spent last Sunday here. A special Religio meeting was arranged for. We believe him to be the one for the place. He is truly an example for one so young in the Master's work. After conducting services here a number of Saints accompanied him to Saint Clair in the evening, where he again gave a talk on the importance of Religio work and succeeded in reviving the Saint Clair local to activity. While it is not our privilege to correspond personally, I consider it a great pleasure to hear from the Saints through the columns of the church papers."

Stephen H. Drazey, Beloit, Kansas: "Should any of the missionaries in this mission be going through, they are invited to stop. We five members are rather quiet, kindly waiting for the Spirit to move, but all are united, and are anxious to start to work when the Lord calls."

John H. Shimmel, Mansfield, Missouri: "I have lately attached myself to the Latter Day Saints and am glad to know that it is the true church of Christ. I feel thankful that I embraced the truth. Am not sorry that I left the Baptists. The first sermon I heard was at Richland, Oklahoma. It seemed to draw me to that place, and I would have joined then but my wife was opposed. I made investigations to see if they were right; and said if I found they were I would join. I went to examining the Scriptures and Book of Mormon, and prayed the Lord for light and received it, and can now praise the Lord for his blessing."

News From Missions

KENTUCKY.

A brief statement of the conditions of this part of the Kentucky Mission. The work here in the city is in better condition spiritually than it has been for six or seven years. We have meetings every Sunday at our church; a Sunday school at 9.30 a. m.; preaching at 10.45 a. m.; preaching at some of the Saints' homes at night; and prayer meeting every Wednesday evening.

Almost every night we hold cottage meetings. A promising young man was baptized on New Year's Day, and others are investigating the work. Some are interested at Belmont, just twenty-five miles from the city, where I baptized two in October. The work at Brodhead is about done. I made an effort up there during the fall, without interest, but the Saints residing there were everyone standing firm in the faith. They are very poor in this world's goods; their crops had failed them, and it seemed like starvation was staring them in the face. I advised them to come to the city where they could get work and have a little money to help carry on this great work. Some of them really sold what they had to get money to pay their way to the city, and we assisted as we were able to get them fixed up for keeping house.

Five of the brethren from Ottawa came; three are men of families. They all got work and are doing well, and they will help to boom the branch here at Louisville; one being a priest, one a teacher, and one a deacon. The elder went to Pennsylvania to work. This will completely disorganize the Olive Branch, at Ottawa, Kentucky. Nearly all of the members will come into the branch here.

At present there is peace and harmony among the members, so I trust that the work will prosper as it was spoken by the mouth of one of the elders, eight or nine years ago. It was to become a strong branch, but it would first almost go to pieces. Well, it did nearly go to pieces, but it is building up again.

I have sold my home and I am thinking of locating at Independence, Missouri, if it is thought advisable. I was sick during the summer for about six weeks, and could not do much, but I am feeling well now, and I want to do more for the work than I have ever done in the past. May God prosper his work is our prayer.

J. W. METCALF.

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, 1381 Seventh street, January 4, 1911.

TORREON, MEXICO.

We still live, although our friends may think we do not, as we have not taken time to write any except to home folks since coming here; so we use this means of letting you hear from us.

Torreón, on the Nasas River, is an up-to-date town for Mexico, with electric lights, street cars, several factories and foundries, and is surrounded with beautiful mountain scenery.

We enjoy reading the church papers, more than usual since not having the association of Saints. We also enjoy the Spirit of the Master in our prayer meetings. (A congregation of four.)

We like this country and love the people; in fact, we feel like we are among home folks; they are so kind-hearted and take so much interest in us.

The leader of the church in which the elders preach always comments after each sermon saying, "These men are sent of God to preach to us and they preach the words of God. We should be thankful to have them with us and pray for them that they may learn the language better so they can preach more gospel for us." One Sunday, in announcing special themes for prayer, one mentioned was that Brother Pender may be healed so he would not be hindered in his labor here.

We study in the day, and make calls of evenings as often as we can. Our calls are always interesting and seem to be appreciated. As home-going time arrives we are usually presented with a bouquet, or some fruit, and sometimes car fare. One man, the church leader, said, "When you write to your church tell them not to think you are here without friends, but tell them that you have many good friends here."

But since, only last week, some one gave him a Brighamite pamphlet and told him to beware of us, as we were the same. He read it, then came to us and inquired to his satisfaction, saying, "I will be a valiant soldier for you, for I know you are misunderstood."

The elders preached yesterday on the name of the church and authority. They thought the latter was fine, but hardly knew how to take the name "Saints," deciding that to search the Bible and pray over it would be the best plan. One said, "The brother may be right; I had not thought about it, but I know the names Methodist, Baptist, and Presbyterian are not found in the Bible. That is the reason we are Independents."

Brother Anthony has made two trips to Torreón and given us several very pleasant but short visits. His pleasant countenance and interesting conversation makes one feel he has always known him. Brother Pender's health is improving rapidly, and we are all rejoicing in the Master's cause.

News From Branches.

MINNEAPOLIS.

We enjoy to the fullest extent the reading of your columns, and pray for God's blessings to rest upon them who have had such an interest in writing. As a branch we have been greatly blessed, and have had great encouragement as far as numbers are concerned. We have also felt the power of the adversary keenly at times, but rejoice because of the peace and unity that exists. Where there is unity there is strength. Through supplication and prayer, and love for humanity, Minneapolis can now boast of her first church. We have been looking forward for many years to this joyful time, when we could worship in a church of our own. There are those who with patient endurance have worked hard in this branch in years gone by; we know that this news will gladden their hearts, and give them encouragement in casting their bread upon the waters.

We have also faith and hope that this will not be the only church in Minneapolis, as in Minneapolis and Saint Paul there are 500,000 population. This seems to us a great multitude of people for three or four local officers to preach repentance to, besides looking after the scattered branch. We pray the Lord will send more laborers.

Minneapolis Branch wishes to give their heartfelt thanks to all those who have so generously donated. The location of our new church is Fifth avenue north and Queen avenue north. Members or ministry will always receive a hearty welcome in Minneapolis.

FREDERICK GREEN.

FIRST KANSAS CITY.

We are pleased to announce that definite arrangements are being made for our regular annual series of special meetings. If nothing prevents, they will commence March 12 and continue for two weeks. Elder Thomas W. Williams, of Los Angeles, California, is to be the speaker. The following extracts are taken from his letter of acceptance to the pastor: "In your advertisement of the meetings, you will have to make some personal references to the speaker, I suppose; it seems a necessary evil. However, let me especially urge that I am only incidental; my message is the all-important feature. A man without a message has no place as a teacher among people who think. I feel that I have one. I hope to present it in such clear and comprehensive terms that the people will forget the man in their contemplation of the message which he bears." With a message like that contemplated above, and the unwavering support of the members of the branch, success would seem already assured. The time is but two months away; let us get ourselves ready.

Those on the sick list are better. Quite an influx of Saints have moved in recently. There is a place and a work for all of these brethren and sisters. Sr. W. N. Robinson, of Oklahoma, has promised to return in time to take charge of the music during the special meetings.

At a special business meeting recently the following were received on letters of removal: Sr. Martha Jolley and daughter Pearl, John T. Barbee, from Independence, and Sr. Daisy Munn. Bro. Ray Winn was given a letter of removal to Centropolis.

The following were elected as officers of the Sunday school at the regular semiannual business meeting, December 20: David H. Blair, superintendent; Samuel C. Diggle, assistant superintendent; Harvey Sandy, second assistant; Reginald Loösemore, secretary, and Lloyd H. McDonald, treasurer.

Sunday evening, December 25, the Sunday school entertainment was given. It was the largest, and we believe the best ever given at Central Church.

At the regular semiannual election of officers last Friday evening, the Religio elected the following: Seth S. Sandy, president; George H. Hidy, vice-president; Dora Lowe, secretary; Mrs. G. W. Salander, treasurer. Both the Sunday school and Religio look forward with the brightest prospects of the best work yet accomplished.

Our hearts were made glad recently because of the interest manifested in the prayer and sacrament meetings by some of our active workers along other lines. In the opinion of the writer, it is impossible for the Lord's servants to do the most successful labor, and neglect these duties.

CHICO, CALIFORNIA.

Just a few lines through the HERALD to tell the Saints what the branch at Chico is doing. Elder Fred B. Farr, of Cameron, Missouri, has for the past four weeks been preaching to large congregations. As a result five have been baptized, two children and three grown people. Many more are investigating, and when Brother Fred returns, near the first of the New Year, we predict an ingathering such as has seldom been witnessed in this part of the vineyard.

Brother Farr knows how to get the truth before the people, and is willing to work to that end. Chico has a wide-awake branch, a fine church, and many noble Saints who always stand ready to help the work along. Northern California is waking up, and Chico, with a population of twelve thousand, is well situated as a central point to build up our work.

H. A. HINTZ.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Cleveland Branch started the new year with four new members added by baptism on New Year's morning, three of whom were children of Elder Eben Miller, and one sister, Lizzie Brooks DeLorne, who just came from England with her daughter Alice, on the same boat and under the care of Elder Rushton, and who was baptized by Elder J. C. Farnfield.

At our business meeting just held all officers were sustained: Elder John W. Topping president, and Alma Thomas clerk. Arrangements were made to hold the next Kirtland district convention with the Cleveland Branch on February 25 and 26. We offer a hearty welcome to all who can attend. Our place of meeting is on Wade Park avenue, at Seventy-first street. Take a Wade Park avenue car and get off at Seventy-first street. Write for information.

F. C. WEBBE.

LANSING, MICHIGAN.

We of the Lansing Branch are doing the best we can under the circumstances. There has been little preaching done here for some time, but the teacher of the branch (the only officer) has been trying to keep our work before the people, assisted at times by Bro. Erwin Herriman of Snover, and B. F. Phetteplace, of Shabbona.

Dear Saints, remember those brethren who are placed as overseers to the flock in the different branches. Their work is very trying at times, and they who prove faithful to their trust are worthy of your support. My mind goes out to many different places where I have met with the Saints, and as I beheld their countenances lit up with the Spirit of inspiration I would be led to pray that they might carry the same look and the same desire and zeal into their everyday life. It would relieve the branch officers of much labor, and they would be a blessing to their neighbors and an honor to the church.

The HERALD is being eagerly read by many, and no small wonder, for God is truly inspiring the minds of men and women in his church to do a great work, as is evidenced by the articles and letters that appear from week to week. May the day hasten when those that are able may see fit to place the church publications in the homes of all worthy poor Saints, for many of the Saints are making as great sacrifices as ever were known of any people. Press on, dear Saints, for your reward is sure.

If there are any Saints living in North Lansing, Michigan, I would like for them to inquire for Fred Maynard, 1142 Farrand street. He is a bright, intelligent boy of thirteen, and favorably impressed with the gospel. Tell him Bro. W. H. Sheffer of Argyle sent you, and he will understand.

W. H. SHEFFER.

Miss Zora Lowe, secretary, Eldorado Springs, Missouri, R. F. D. 1.

Notice.

To Whom it May Concern: By action of the First Presidency, in agreement with the two ministers in charge concerned, Elders R. C. Russell and J. W. Wight, and Elder J. W. Peterson himself, Elder J. W. Peterson has been transferred to the Des Moines District, Iowa, where he will labor during the balance of the conference year. Brother Peterson was called home from his work in Alabama by severe illness in his family, and it was not deemed wise to return him to such a distant field.

ELBERT A. SMITH, for First Presidency.

Notice.

To Whom it May Concern: A temporary vacancy having occurred in the editorial staff, owing to the election of I. A. Smith to the Iowa Legislature, Elder Gomer R. Wells has been selected to assist in editorial work during the winter months. The First Presidency and the minister in charge, Elder J. W. Wight, concur in his temporary release from missionary appointment.

ELBERT A. SMITH, for First Presidency.

Correction.

In HERALD of January 4, 1911, page 21, conference notice of Northern Wisconsin District, the name appearing as O. D. Sanoe should be O. D. Ganoe.

Died.

LILLY.—Ellen Margaret Lilly was born July 14, 1885, at Bingham, ——. Was baptized July 6, 1902, by S. D. Condit, at Malad, Idaho. Departed this life December 24, 1910. Funeral in charge of Elias E. Richards; sermon by Elder John Davis. She departed this life where womanhood's morning was fast approaching noon. She was loved by all, and if each kind act and every kind word said by her could bring a flower to her grave, she would now be sleeping beneath a wilderness of flowers. She leaves a husband, two sons, and one daughter. The Saints all feel the blow keenly, but in our souls we say, "Peace."

HOWLETT.—Elder Richard B. Howlett, at his home in London, Canada, December 31, 1910. He was born in London, England, June 2, 1852. Came to London, Canada, in July, 1870. Married Emma Hocking, December 24, 1872. United with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ June 5, 1882, in England, under the ministrations of William Waterman. He has held the office of teacher, priest, elder and seventy, holding the latter at time of his death. Was in the mission field eleven years, reaching his home only three days before he died. He leaves wife and seven children, three sons and four daughters, besides many friends to mourn his loss. Funeral was from the Latter Day Saints' church in London, Canada, in charge of Elder F. A. Smith who preached the sermon.

HIGGINS.—Bro. Samuel E. Higgins, son of Bro. William and Rosa Higgins, of Chanute, Kansas, died December 18, 1910, at Dacona, Colorado. He was crushed between two timbers in the mines. He was born in Vernon County, Missouri, March 24, 1880. He leaves a wife and two children, father, five brothers, and one sister. The funeral service was held at Odessa chapel, in charge of Elder J. Cochran; the sermon by F. C. Keck.

The man who forgets to be thankful on Thanksgiving Day may be the very man who has been getting more than his share out of all the other days.—W. J. B., in the Christian Herald.

DEFOREST.—Sarah Emily DeForest was born in Warrick County, Indiana, February 10, 1822; died December 9, 1910, aged 89 years, 9 months, and 29 days. Married to Samuel S. Wilcox November 12, 1840, who preceded her in death, October 20, 1882. To them six children were born, two dying in infancy; four remaining, two sons and two daughters. Six grandchildren and thirteen great-grandchildren survive. She also leaves one sister and one brother. Joined the Latter Day Saints in Nauvoo in 1844; remained faithful ever since. Funeral December 11, by Elder J. M. Baker, at the home of Colonel Pace, a son-in-law, at Shenandoah, Iowa, to a large number of relatives and friends.

STARKEY.—Sr. Ann Starkey died at her son's home at Omaha, Nebraska, November 28, 1910. Born March 6, 1828, at Kilcogy, Cavan County, Ireland; baptized June 1, 1884, at Omaha, Nebraska, by B. H. Brown. Funeral by J. M. Baker, November 11, and laid to rest in Prospect Hill Cemetery, Omaha.

BIRCH.—At the Saints' Home, Lamoni, Iowa, January 3, 1911, Sr. Hannah Birch, aged 64 years, 7 months, and 5 days. Born in Wales in 1846; came to America in 1862; married William Birch in 1868; he died in 1885. Of nine children three daughters survive her, one at Hiteman, Iowa, one at Albia, one at Kewanee, Illinois; also four brothers at Ottumwa and Hiteman. She was baptized at Kewanee in 1868, by Bro. J. D. Jones. For last eight years she was almost helpless with shaking palsy. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins; assisted by R. M. Elvin and F. M. Weld.

ARRASMITH.—Susan J. Arrasmith was born in Kentucky December 27, 1842. Married to Thomas H. Gunn at Nauvoo, Illinois, on December 27, 1862. Died at Odrian, Illinois, at her daughter's, Mrs. Lottie Stevenson, December 14, 1910. She leaves two daughters, Charlotte of Adrian, and Mrs. Mary Whorton, of Mount Pleasant, Iowa; nine grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren. She was loved by her family, neighbors, and friends, for her lovely and unselfish disposition. Was always willing to do unto others as she would like to be done by. She joined the Latter Day Saints' Church while residing in Montrose, Iowa, and died firm in the faith. The funeral was held from the Rock Creek Church, Elder William Lambert officiating. Interment in the city graveyard at Nauvoo.

MCLEOD.—W. W. McLeod was born January 10, 1833, at Blenheim, Ontario, died December 25, 1910, at Cormorant, Minnesota. Married Mary Burns in 1855. She died in 1895, leaving nine children. In 1896 he married Annie C. Nunn. Settled in Minnesota, 1855. During the Indian scare, 1862, served in Company I, Seventh Minnesota Infantry. Came to Cormorant in 1877. Engaged in business. Was baptized November 19, 1884, by Elder Thomas Nutt; ordained priest and served as Bishop's agent for several years. Lived faithful and died in a glorious hope. Funeral conducted by Elder T. J. Martin, by request. Prayer by Elder Marcus Erickson. Large congregation present.

LEWIS.—Mary Lewis was born December 19, 1856, at Llanelly, Breconshire, Wales. Married to Evan Lewis, August, 1879. Baptized into the Reorganized Church December 30, 1886, at Aberaman, Wales, by Elder Daniel Davis. Died at her home in Scranton, Pennsylvania, January 7, 1911, of cancer. Being of a very-spiritual turn of mind, she suffered with patience and great fortitude with a living hope of the life beyond. She leaves a husband, three sons and two daughters to mourn her departure. Funeral in charge of George Morris; sermon by Elder E. A. Stone; and interment in Washburn cemetery.

The entirely new feature of the February St. Nicholas is the first of a series of letters to the "very little folk" among St. Nicholas readers by John Martin. They are to be "all-the-year letters," and tell of the wonderful things happening every month; and they are to have John Martin's own inimitable drawings. It is safe to say, judging from the first letter, that they will be read by the fathers and mothers, and the grown-up brothers and sisters as well, of the very little folk.

Boys and girls who want a real story of adventure, and grown-ups who rejoice in life in the open and the training it brings will alike find pleasure in Frederick Orin Bartlett's stirring serial of The Forest Castaways—the tale of two boys lost in the Maine woods.

Have you any idea what fun young and old can have just with figures of people and animals torn out of paper? Well, if you haven't, just read Edward Westcott Peckham's The Hills of Counterpane in the February St. Nicholas, and laugh over its quaint pictures.

Weather and Human Health.

In the current issue of Harper's Weekly appears an ingenious article by A. Magelssen under the above title, in which he seeks to demonstrate that disease of an epidemic character fluctuates in accordance with the changes of weather extending over long periods. The article is illustrated with diagrams showing these coincidences, from which the author points his conclusions.

It is one thing to be against wrong; it is quite another to fight wrong. One is a noncombatant that never won a cause; the other a soldier in the fight. Good citizens need to become more aggressive. The man that is afraid to show his colors and stand in the open against evils is of little benefit to good government. The country needs soldiers of peace as well as soldiers of war.—Governor Folk.

GOOD HEALTH FLOUR

has all the elements necessary to rebuild the body, Nitrate or muscle element; Phosphate or brain, nerve, bone, and tooth elements. While flour is only a carbonate, heat or fat. Many brands of the white flour on the market are adulterated with clay, gypsum, cockel, cotton seed, etc. Besides the bleaching process, with sulphur and acids, and to complete the white process they electrocute the flour, so it has not even a shadow of Life elements. The purpose and proper use of white flour is paste purposes, such as paper hanging, bill posters, shirt bosoms, book bindery, etc. It retards digestion and a sure diet to produce sickness and a premature death.

Who Was There That You Knew?

IN the shadowy ranks of those who marched to defeat or death or victory fifty years ago in the mighty conflict that convulsed this great nation, is there father or grandfather or uncle of yours? Would you like to see a photograph of him in that long ago day of his youth—a photograph that he never knew was taken? Perhaps we can show you one; and in any case, we can tell you a story, stranger than any detective fiction, of 3,500 priceless photographs that were lost and are found again.

3,500 Long Buried Photographs of the Civil War

THEY were taken by the greatest photographer in the United States of that day; they were bought by the United States Government for $30,000; they were buried in the War Department for 50 years—they are buried there still. But a duplicate set was kept by the photographer—who died poor and broken down; that duplicate set was knocked from pillar to post for nearly 50 years, until it was discovered by a New England collector. J. Pierpont Morgan tried to secure the collection—Ex-President Garfield and General Benjamin F. Butler said it was worth $150,000—yet with the help of the Review of Reviews, the entire collection has been gathered into 10 great volumes and is placed within your reach at less than the value of one of the photographs. It is the one accurate, impartial history of the Civil War—for the camera cannot lie. It tells the story of the War you never heard before. Taken under protection of the Secret Service, these photographs bring to light thousands of little-known phases of the war; they penetrate to strange places and record strange things.

DID CHRIST ESTABLISH A CHURCH?

Did Christ establish a church?

That question may sound strange to those who have never challenged the thought that he did establish a church. Yet there are those who profess considerable interest in the life and teachings of Christ who appear quite indifferent to his church, and even deny that he ever sought to work through organized means. Others who hold to church organization seem to have a hazy conception of a nebulous body embracing within its uncertain boundaries all professed believers in diverse and conflicting doctrines claiming Christian origin.

Of late we have been interested in a book called, The Building of the Church, by Charles E. Jefferson, Pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York City. (The Macmillan Company, Sixty-sixth avenue, New York City. Cloth $1.25.) This book consists of lectures delivered before the Divinity School of Yale University, during April and May, 1910. In the opening chapter, "The church building idea in the New Testament," the author takes a very clear-cut position in regard to the work of Christ in establishing his church. We quote:

Arguments are sometimes urged to prove that the church was a matter of indifference to Jesus. He cared only for ideas—men say—and the Christian church was an afterthought of his ambitious followers. As evidence for the soundness of this contention, it is said in triumph that Jesus never so much as mentioned the church but twice, consequently he cared nothing for it. It is indeed a wooden principle of interpretation, just now in vogue, which measures the importance of a fact by the number of times it is mentioned in the Scriptures. This is surrendering the use of intellect and settling difficult and spiritual questions by rule of thumb. It would seem then that he knows best the meaning of the New Testament who is quickest in the art of counting. But a thing may exist without the name, and a mere mathematician will never understand the gospels. Many things of moment Jesus never dealt with at all, because those lessons had been already learned. There are wide gaps in his recorded sayings because much was taken for granted by the men who wrote the gospels. That a religion could live and conquer without organization and without officials was an idea unthinkable to every first century Jew. Moreover there were subjects about which Jesus could not speak in public without hastening a crisis. One of such subjects was his Messiahship. He announced it so guardedly and so incidentally that certain New Testament scholars have declared that he never taught it at all. It was a fact to be spiritually apprehended and left to make its way in the world by the power of its own spirit. To have shouted it from the housetop would have forced forward the last act of the drama. What is true of his Messiahship is true also of his church. How could he have spoken of his church before the bigoted devotees of the Jewish church without precipitating the tragedy which it was necessary for a season to postpone? Things held in reserve are not therefore unimportant. It may be their tremendous importance which makes necessary the reticence concerning them. Jesus did not speak of the church in public for reasons perfectly clear, preferring to use terms which would excite least suspicion and create least irritation in the hearts he was to reach. But while he made no public announcement, he cherished the church in his heart and gave himself unreservedly from the day at Caesarea Philippi onward, to the knitting the souls of twelve men into a brotherhood, which should go on enlarging until it had embraced the world. To a man whose eyes are not holden, the church is a towering and ubiquitous fact of the gospels. In the upper chamber, on the last night, it is to his church that Jesus speaks. To it and it only he gives the promise of the Holy Spirit; for it and it only he offers his high-priestly prayer; to it and it only he presents himself after his resurrection, and to it and only to it he gives the great commission. "Go, disciple the nations." Not to any individual believer, but to the society of believers, is the assurance granted of ultimate and unimaginable victory.

When it is said that Jesus did not found the church, language is used which needs explanation. If by founding the church is meant giving to a set of men a definite constitution and by-laws, with minute regulations as to polity and officials, then one may correctly say that Jesus did not found the church. But when one considers his work upon the twelve, and what the one hundred and twenty did immediately after the Spirit—his Spirit—had come upon them, which Spirit he had expressly declared would lead them into truth, one is driven to the conclusion that it was Jesus who organized the Christian Church, and that he and he alone can rightfully be called its Founder. If we are to accept the book of the Acts as authentic history, and are to believe in the guidance of the Holy Spirit, then we can not escape the conclusion that the organization of the church was the act of Jesus, because the men who were the nearest to him in life and in death, and who were flooded with his Spirit after a cloud had received him from their sight, threw themselves at once into the work of organizing believers into churches baptized into his name. The promise had been: "The Holy Spirit shall take the things of mine and show them unto you," and the first thing shown to them was the Christian Church.

Christ said, "Upon this rock I will build my church." Of course he worked with his Father in that undertaking, and we are told, "God hath set some in the church, first apostles," so it must follow that the work of building the church was in progress, to say the least, at the time when Christ made his declaration, for he had already set the apostles in their place. Immediately after the day of Pentecost, it was said that "the Lord added daily to the church such as should be saved." This shows that the Lord's church actually existed in such tangible form that those who were to be saved might be added to it daily.

Whatever part of the work Christ failed to do before his death was carried on by his servants, under his direct supervision, for he had promised to be with them until the end of the world (on condition of obedience) and to guide them into all truth; whatever was done by his agents was done by him.

In view of these plain biblical facts we must hold that Christ was fully responsible for the organization of the early Christian church. We find ample proof that he was deeply concerned in perfecting an organization of believers divinely adapted to carry on gospel work, both in proselyting and in perfecting the membership. He was also interested in sound doctrines. Those who believe in him at all as a Savior should be earnestly seeking to discover his church to-day. They may identify it by a careful study of the work, organization, teachings, and blessings characteristic of the New Testament church.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

"JOURNAL OF HISTORY."

Especial attention is called to interesting features in the Journal of History. The Saints and students of the latter day work should not fail to avail themselves of the privilege of reading the historical productions to be found in the Journal columns, many of which have never before been published, and quite likely never will be again. In a few years, copies of the Journal will be in great demand, but impossible to obtain.

A few of the leading features now appearing are the biographies of men who have served the cause of truth well and have now gone to their reward, among whom are Sidney Rigdon, one of the most able early defenders of the faith; Alexander H. Smith, late presiding patriarch, beloved for his gentle tenderness, ability and faithfulness, whose biography is written by his daughter, Vida E. Smith; Joseph F. Burton, one of the most devoted and reliable missionaries the church has ever had, whose biography is prepared by his widow, Emma B. Burton; James Caffall, than whom the church has had no more faithful or noble man. Attention is also called to the autobiographies of such veteran soldiers of the cross as Charles Derry and John L. Bear, who have sacrificed all but life and been faithful, and now are patiently awaiting the summons to home and rest.

Many other features not mentioned here, indispensable to the well informed, are found in the Journal, and many others will be added from time to time. Procure the Journal and be wise.

"SCIENCE FALSELY SO CALLED."

We take the following news item from the Iowa Register and Leader:

NEW YORK, December 29.—In the first interview Mrs. Augusta E. Stetson, formerly first reader of the First Church, Christian Science, in this city, since the death of Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, she made the positive statement to-night that she expects Mrs. Eddy will yet "demonstrate" over death.

"I believe," she said, "that Mrs. Eddy will make a manifestation, that she will reveal herself to me and others to the outside world. The same situation exists to-day as when Jesus of Nazareth was buried.

"After three days he manifested himself to prove that there is life after death. Mrs. Eddy will do the same, for she occupies in the world of to-day precisely the same position that Jesus occupied in his day.

"It may take longer for Mrs. Eddy to pass through the experience of material death to a demonstration of everlasting life; it may not occur for years, or it may occur to-morrow, but she will manifest herself and all men shall know of it."

This is a shrewd and safe venture, in the light of the scriptural declarations that all mankind will eventually be restored to physical life in the resurrection, "but every man in his own order." See John 5:28, 29; 1 Corinthians 15:12-27; Revelation 20:11-15. And upon that same authority, we are safe in saying that Mrs. Eddy has no more prominent position nor has she any more power as to the demonstration and the time of it than has the humblest laboring man.

The supreme demonstration has already been made by the One who placed the matter on test by previously stating the time when the "manifestation" would take place and then literally living up to it. He did not leave it to his disciples as a matter of speculation. Therein lies the proof that Mrs. Eddy does not occupy "precisely the same position in the world of to-day that Jesus occupied in his day." This implies that he was a Redeemer for his own time only, which blunder the true disciples of Jesus never make.

Those who have been taught (from Science and Health, volume II,) that "All is life; there is no death," have no place in their vocabulary for the word resurrection, one of the principles of revealed religion (Hebrews 6:1, 2).

It is now too late for the author of Christian Science to demonstrate. The only acceptable demonstration from one who taught that there is no death would have been to perpetuate her life. Now that she has failed, it is idle to talk of a manifestation which can take place only according to the permission of Him who holds "the keys of death and of hell" (Revelation 1: 18).

It is recorded that he did give certain keys to certain chosen men to preach his doctrines and thereby build up his kingdom among men (Matthew 16: 19; 28: 18-20). And when it is lost, he can in his own due time restore such authority to whom he may call; but nowhere do we find that he decided to give to any man or woman the keys over death, either upon the supposition that he was limited in the use of them to his own time on earth, or that he needs a human partner in the work of redemption, or for any other reason.

This kind of talk is the exaggerated outgrowth of the modern catch phrase, "We may all be saviors of men." This is true in a certain well defined and limited sense; but it is necessary to beware of this and other exaggerations of "science falsely so called" (1 Timothy 6: 20).

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Bro. F. G. Pitt, writing from Palestine, wishes his friends and any others who care to procure views of that historic land taken by him to know that he can now supply them, as follows:

"No. 1. Jerusalem from Mount of Olives; 2. Mount of Olives; 3. Mount Zion; 4. Walls of Jerusalem, and city outside; 5. Street in Jerusalem; 6. Well on Mount Moriah—water carriers; 7. In the Garden of Gethsemane; 8. Wailing place; 9. Baptizing in Jordan, Elder Griffiths; 10. Baptizing in Jordan, Elder Pitt; 11. On the banks of the Jordan; 12. Jordan River; 13. The Dead Sea; 14. Good Samaritan Inn, Nos. 1, 2, 3; 15. Apostle's Fountain; 16. Old ruins of Jericho; 17. Elisha's Fountain; 18. Mount of Temptation; 19. Stairs mentioned in Acts 21: 35, 40; 20. Abraham's Tomb; 21. Abraham's Oak, 1, 2, 3; 22. Rachel's Tomb; 23. On the road to Hebron; 24. Road to Bethlehem; 25. Church of Nativity; 26. Market place in Bethlehem; 27. Shepherds' field where angels appeared; 28. City of Bethlehem 1, 2; 29. Altar in Church of Nativity; 30. Joseph's and Mary's tomb; 31. At the Pool of Bethesda. These are postal card size, prices one dollar a dozen, or ten cents each. Address, F. G. Pitt, Jerusalem, Palestine. American paper money is good here."

Cold usually contracts and heat expands; but when water freezes it expands about one eighth of its bulk. It becomes just porous enough to take in a little air, which causes it to float. This is why ice floats and why an iceberg shows one eighth of its bulk above water line. But suppose that water upon freezing contracted and became heavier or even retained the same specific gravity, it would fall to the bottom.

Our great lakes and rivers would freeze solid from the bottom up, and most of them would not thaw out from one winter to another. There would be no navigation, no swimming delights, no fishing, no great power plants. Now really, was this provision brought about by mere chance or by design?

We are in receipt of The Deaf Hawkeye, published twice a month during the school year, by the superintendent of the Iowa State School for the Deaf, at Council Bluffs. Among the teaching staff we notice the name of one of our Council Bluffs sisters, Miss Viva Wind, primary department. Her task must be a great one when we consider the report on a beginner: "The latest arrival is Gertrude Gill, a deaf girl twelve years old, from Grinnell, Iowa. She can neither read, write nor speak. Her teacher has been laboring over her faithfully to get her to make the first principle in writing, a slant line, and so far has not succeeded, but thinks she will."

In sending in the obituary of Elder Henry Green, which will be found under miscellaneous, Bro. William Lewis says: "He was appointed to Wales on a mission in the sixties but circumstances hindered his going. We hope to see his autobiography published, which he was in hopes to have forwarded to the HERALD. It is of much value and very interesting. He united with the church in his native land before the wickedness of Brighamism was known."

Representative I. A. Smith is surely getting his share of appointments at the present session of the Iowa legislature. He has been appointed on the following committees: Ways and Means, Judiciary, Municipal Corporations, Roads and Highways, Railroads and Transportation, Military, Printing, Private Corporations, Claims. He is also chairman of the committee on Constitutional Amendments.—Lamoni Chronicle.

A Word for the Master.

How sweet is the season when Saints meet for prayer,
In pure testimony their faith they declare,
The Spirit's blest presence fills our hearts with love,
And angels rejoicing look down from above.

Help us to remember, though many or few,
Each Saint who is present has something to do,
A word for the Master, a prayer, or a song,
May cheer the discouraged, a weak one make strong.

Let no man-fearing spirit a blessing prevent,
But coals from the altar, dear Father, be sent,
And touch the mute lips till our voices we'll raise
To witness for Jesus, and sing to his praise.

SAINTS' HERALD DOCTRINAL SERIES.

II. JESUS CHRIST AS THE SON OF GOD.

BY ELDER J. C. CRABB.

The Latter Day Saints are accused of not preaching Jesus. The facts are that we preach him as a Savior whose work was not compassed in his death upon the cross. We see him taking an intimate part in creation, as a present individual and community Savior, and as a future king and Lord of all, upon a redeemed earth. The next number of our doctrinal series, by Elder Charles Derry, will take up the mission of Jesus Christ.—E. A. S.

In order to understand the above, from a Latter Day Saint standpoint, we will need to examine the question in the light of that which God has seen fit to reveal in what we call the "standard books" of the church, namely, The Bible (King James' Translation), The Holy Scriptures (translated and corrected by the spirit of revelation, by Joseph Smith, jr.), The Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. The last three named being published by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, at Lamoni, Iowa. When referring to the first, we will say Bible; when to the second, we will say Inspired Translation. When quoting from the Book of Mormon I quote from the "Authorized edition."

I am the beginning and the end; the Almighty God. By mine Only Begotten I created these things.—Genesis 1: 2, Inspired Translation.

And Adam was obedient unto the commandments of the Lord. And after many days, an angel of the Lord appeared unto Adam, saying, Why dost thou offer sacrifices unto the Lord? And Adam said unto him, I know not, save the Lord commanded me. And then the angel spake, saying, This thing is a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father, which is full of grace and truth; wherefore, thou shalt do all that thou doest, in the name of the Son. And thou shalt repent, and call upon God, in the name of the Son for evermore. And in that day, the Holy Ghost fell upon Adam, which beareth record of the Father and the Son.—Genesis 4: 6-9, Inspired Translation.

The above quotation is made for the purpose of showing that the terms, "The Only Begotten," and the "Son" have reference to the one person; that is, Jesus Christ.

And he shall be called Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Father of heaven and earth, the creator of all things, from the beginning; and his mother shall be called Mary.—Book of Mormon, p. 216, v. 102.

The above was spoken by King Benjamin, about 124 years before the coming of Christ to this land, which coming took place after his ascension to the Father from the Mount of Olivet. The expressions Jesus Christ, or Son of God, having direct reference to Christ the Savior, are not found in the Old Testament of the Bible. But we do find, "let us make man," (Genesis 1. 26,) which taken in connection with the reference to the same thing, as found in the Inspired Translation, (Genesis 1: 27,) shows that Jesus Christ is the one, in addition to God; referred to by the expression "us." The quotation is as follows:

And I, God, said unto mine Only Begotten, which was with me from the beginning, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and it was so.

The above brings out the idea of the preexistence of Christ. But the same is brought out in the Bible, John 1: 1-3.

In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made.

In agreement with the above see Colossians 1: 12-17.

Giving thanks unto the Father. . . . Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son; in whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins: who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature: for by him were all things created that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, . . . And he is before all things, and by him all things consist.—Bible.

And it came to pass that Moses called upon God, saying, Tell me, I pray thee, why these things are so, and by what thou madest them? And, behold, the glory of God was upon Moses, so that Moses stood in the presence of God, and he talked with Moses, face to face: and the Lord God said unto Moses, For mine own purpose have I made these things. Here is wisdom, and it remaineth in me. And by the word of my power have I created them, which is mine Only Begotten Son, who is full of grace and truth. And worlds without number have I created; and I also created them for mine own purpose; and by the Son I created them, which is mine Only Begotten.—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 7.

As to God creating "worlds" and by whom, we have this in addition:

God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds.—Hebrews 1: 1, 2.—Bible.

Then the Lord answered Job. . . . Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? . . . When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy? —Job 38: 1-7, Bible.

While there may be other "stars," and other "sons of God," yet Jesus Christ is to be looked upon as the "bright and morning star," and the "Son of God" in an especial sense. (See Bible, Revelation 22: 16.)

I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am the root and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning star.

God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second psalm, thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. —Acts 13: 33.

Inasmuch as God is able to "declare the end from the beginning" (Isaiah 46: 10), it sometimes occurs that he speaks of things as they will be, as though they had already taken place.

For instance:

Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready.

In a similar way, God speaks of Jesus Christ, especially in connection with his human origin, as the "Only Begotten of the Father, which is full of grace and truth"; being the only one, born of woman, who was begotten of the Holy Ghost.

Now the birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise: When as his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost.—Matthew 1: 18. Bible.

And the virgin's name was Mary. . . . And the angel said unto her, Fear not, Mary; for thou hast found favor with God. And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus. . . . Then said Mary unto the angel, How shall this be, seeing I know not a man? And the angel answered and said unto her, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God.—Luke 1: 27-35. Bible.

For behold, the kingdom of heaven is at hand, and the Son of God cometh upon the face of the earth. And behold, he shall be born of Mary at Jerusalem, which is the land of our forefathers, she being a virgin, a precious and chosen vessel, who shall be overshadowed, and conceive by the power of the Holy Ghost, and bring forth a son, yea, even the Son of God.—Book of Mormon, Alma 5: 18, 19, p. 323.

It is only by the acceptance of these latter texts, that the writer is able to see that Christ is the "Only Begotten of the Father." For Paul says in Acts 17: 29, "Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God," which by creation makes God to be the Father of us all (Genesis 1: 27, Bible,) and therefore we are sons of God. In the text last quoted, it is evident that the inner man is referred to, and that the inner man had an existence before the outer man came to view.

And thus having an existence, or existing in an intelligent form, all the sons of God could shout for joy (Job 38: 7). And Paul could consistently say,

In hope of eternal life, which God, that can not lie, promised before the world began.—Titus 1: 2. Bible.

And Malachi could say:

Yet ye say, Wherefore? Because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously; yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant. And did not he make one? Yet had he the residue of the Spirit.—Malachi 2: 14, 15.

This latter text shows, not only that God made man, "male and female, created he them," but likewise shows the element composing the spirit of which they were made. And while in such state, he was shown that when he came to the earth, and took upon him flesh and blood, he would fall, and in this fallen condition would need a Savior; and thus it could be said of Christ, "who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world," (1 Peter 1: 20). And thus having the plan of salvation laid before us, before coming to this earth, Paul could consistently say, "hope of eternal life . . . promised before the world began," and also:

For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them.—Ephesians 2: 10.

Jesus Christ is not only the Son of God, because of having been begotten of the Holy Ghost, but likewise because of obedience to the Father. For after having been baptized by John, he went straightway out of the water, and a voice from heaven was heard to say:

This is my beloved Son, in whom I as well pleased.—Matthew 3: 17, Bible.

And in Matthew 17: 5 the same voice was heard to say:

This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him.

Not only is Jesus Christ the Son of God, made so by creation as well as obedience; but so may we become the sons of God, by obedience.

He came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God.—John 1: 11, 12, Bible.

And to Hyrum Smith the Lord said:

Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I am the life and the light of the world. I am the same who came unto my own, and my own received me not; but verily, verily I say unto you, that as many as receiveth me, them will I give power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on my name.—Doctrine and Covenants 10: 12.

And thus you see, that Latter Day Saints are well fortified, by additional evidence to that of the Bible, touching the facts before us.

And we would to God, that all might be enabled to see.

THE CAMPBELLITE GIBRALTAR.

BY J. W. PETERSON.

Chapter 2.

The second fort in the Campbellite Gibraltar is this:

Repentance and remission of sins was first preached in the name of Christ at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost. (Luke 24: 47.)

Replying, we shall show, that there is no other name except that of Christ whereby man could be saved in any age of the world. That he is "the same yesterday, to-day and for ever." (Hebrews 13: 8.) He was "with the church in the wilderness." It was he that "made the worlds," (Hebrews 1: 2); and he that spake to Moses from the burning bush and directed the affairs of the church at that time. (Acts 7: 38.) We may readily conclude: the church was at that time the church of Jesus Christ the same as in any other age of the world, and his teachings harmonious in each dispensation.

Repentance is a part of the plan of salvation, and precedes baptism the same in one dispensation as in every other. It did not begin at Jerusalem, but the disciples were to begin to bear witness of that fact at Jerusalem, after they were more fully endowed with the power of their ministry on Pentecost.

The text upon which the Campbellites base their theory is a doubtful translation. It is never safe to base one's faith on one text, for that reason.

The Variorum Edition of the Oxford Bible quotes several critical editions of this text, from the very Rev. Dr. Alford, Dr. Count von Tichendorf, who found the Codex Sinaiticus in a convent on Mount Sinai, in 1844, Rev. Dr. B. F. Westcott, Rev. Dr. F. J. A. Hort and the revised margin, who translate this text:

And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, and ye, beginning at Jerusalem, are witnesses of these things.—Footnote on Luke 24: 47.

This confirms my explanation that the disciples were to begin their work at Jerusalem, and not that repentance and remission of sins were first to be preached there. That was the fact of history. Any explanation that contradicts this fact of history is erroneous.

Peter says in that dispensation that it began at the baptism of John. His statement is as follows:

Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ: (he is Lord of all). That word, I say, ye know, which was published throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached.—Acts 10: 34-37.

The baptism which John preached was the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. Repentance and the remission of sins therefore was preached by John long before Pentecost.

The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God; . . . John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.—Mark 1: 1, 4.

Repentance and remission of sins by baptism, is the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ whenever or wherever the gospel is or was preached.

Jesus continued to announce that fact after John's death, as stated in Mark 1: 14, 15.

Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel.

Jesus taught repentance long before Pentecost and, as baptism was a part of the gospel and for the remission of sins, he also taught remission of sins. Will the Campbellites say baptism was not for the remission of sins when performed before Pentecost?

John's baptism was Christian baptism, for it was the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ and he and many of his disciples did nothing unchristian when they yielded to it.

Baptism was always for the remission of sins if it was ever for that purpose at any time. Our third rule tells us God is unchangeable.

Turning to 1 Corinthians 10:1 we learn by the second rule, that of research, that the children of Israel were baptized by Moses in the sea. It is proper to conclude that they were baptized for the remission of sins:

But the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it.—Hebrews 4: 2.

Baptism being a part of the gospel, (see Mark 16: 15, 16,) and the gospel being preached to Abraham, baptism for the remission of sins, which always followed repentance, was therefore preached at that time:

And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, (faith of the gospel) preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed.—Galatians 3: 8.

The righteousness of God is revealed in the gospel, therefore men can only become righteous through that code of laws:

For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. For therein is the righteousness of God revealed.—Romans' 1: 16, 17.

Paul calls the gospel "the word of righteousness." (Hebrews 5: 13.) Noah was a preacher of righteousness, (2 Peter 2: 5,) which indicates that he preached the gospel. The gospel included baptism for the remission of sins.

Peter says Christ "went and preached to the spirits in prison which sometime were disobedient . . . in the days of Noah." (1 Peter 3: 18, 19.) Our Campbellite friends claim Christ did the preaching through Noah. What did he preach? Peter tells us in the next chapter: "For this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead."—1 Peter 4: 6.

Our friends can take whichever horn of this they wish, either that Christ preached the gospel to spirits not in the flesh, or that the gospel with baptism for the remission of sins was preached in Noah's day.

Having traced the gospel back as far as Noah it is not unreasonable to suppose that it was preached in the very beginning of Adam. Paul informs us "the gospel was the power of God unto salvation," therefore it required this power to save Adam and Abel as well as Peter and Paul. Surely God did not misinform us when he said he "changed not." He is not a God of experiment; trying one thing in one age and another thing later, but wise enough to find a code of laws and an organization that would do for any and all time. As unchangeable as his laws of gravitation, heat, cold, electricity, good and evil, or any law we may discover by any or all of our five senses.

God being the same before Christ, must of necessity be the same since. Hence we read of the everlasting gospel in Revelation 14: 6. The everlasting covenant, Isaiah 24: 6. Not sacrifices, circumcision, or the law of Moses, which were only aids, but the gospel of Christ.

What confidence can one have in a system so out of harmony and contradictory? Surely none whatever. It is only a system of man.

A system that does not take into consideration the unchangeability of God, can never receive his indorsement. "Every plant that my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up." (Matthew 15: 13.)

One of the early Christian bishops who perhaps understood better than any modern writer the scope of the truth that Jesus taught, as it existed previous to the physical appearance of Christ in the world, wrote as follows:

Should anyone, beginning from Abraham, and going back to the first man pronounce those who have had the testimony of righteousness, Christians in fact, though not in name, he would not be far from the truth. For as the name Christian is intended to indicate this very idea that a man by the knowledge and doctrine of Christ is distinguished by modesty and justice, by patience and virtuous fortitude, and by profession of piety toward the one and only true and supreme God; and all this was no less studiously cultivated by them than by us. . . . But they obviously knew the Christ of God, as he appeared to Abraham, communed with Isaac, spoke to Jacob; and that he communed with Moses and the prophets after him, has already been shown.

Hence you will find, also, these pious persons honored with the name of Christ, as in the following expressions: "Touch not my Christ and do my prophets no harm." Whence we should suppose that the first and most ancient religion known, that of those pious men that were connected with Abraham is the very religion lately announced to all in the doctrine of Christ. Abraham is said to have received the command of circumcision, and yet long before this, was proved to have received the testimony of righteousness through faith. "Abraham," the Scriptures say, "believed and it was imputed unto him for righteousness," and indeed, the divine communication was given to him of God, who appeared to him when he bore this character before circumcision. And this was Christ himself, the word of God, announcing that all who should come in future times should be justified in a similar way; saying "and in thee shall be blessed all the nations of the earth." And again, "when he shall become a great and mighty nation, in him all the nations of the earth shall be blessed." We may obviously understand this by its fulfillment in us; for he was indeed fortified by his faith in Christ, the word of God that appeared unto him; and having renounced the superstition of his father and the former errors of his life, confessed the one supreme God, and served him by deeds of virtue, and not by the service subsequently enjoined in the law of Moses.

To him, then, being such, it was declared that all the tribes and all the nations of the earth should be blessed in him. But the course of piety which was pursued by Abraham, has appeared thus far cultivated only by Christians, and that, too, by works more efficacious than words. What, then, shall prevent us henceforth from acknowledging that there is one and the same principle of life and conduct, the same course of piety common to us who have come after Christ, with those pious men who lived in times long before? Whence it is evident that the religion delivered to us in the doctrine of Christ is not a new or strange doctrine, but if the truth must be spoken it is the first and only true religion.—Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History, chap. 4, pars. 2, 3, 4, pp. 14, 15.

Not a man who knows what he is doing will discredit the genuineness of Eusebius' history. It is one of the most authentic books extant concerning the three centuries immediately succeeding the New Testament history. Eusebius himself being a Christian and a bishop was doubtless well acquainted with the teaching of Christ and the apostles by both history and tradition. Instead then, of repentance and remission of sins being first taught at Jerusalem, the doctrine of Christ was the only true religion of the men who lived in ages before Christ. Paul was exact, therefore, when he wrote: "For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them."—Hebrews 4: 2. This he wrote of the children of Israel before the law of Moses was given them as a schoolmaster. (Galatians 3: 24.) Paul says: "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever."—Hebrews 13: 8. Moses was reproached for believing in Christ. (Hebrews 11: 26.) Solomon evidently referred to baptism when he said: "There is a generation that are pure in their own eyes, and yet is not washed from their filthiness."—Proverbs 30: 12.

We think it reasonable and sane to conclude, that God has but one plan of salvation for all the tribes of men in every age and clime. This idea can not be justly termed nonprogressive, until it be shown that God's way is not in advance of all human progression. The gospel of Jesus Christ was elevating to the ancients, and the primitive Christians as well, and is still most elevating of anything in this age of boasted learning and intelligence. It is calculated to relieve man of selfishness and evil, and make him godlike. To teach the brotherhood of man through complying with the same law, and the fatherhood of God, by teaching all brothers of the human family to worship the one God alike. It is far better than any human plan, ancient, medieval, or modern.

We praise God for his wonderful wisdom in giving such a powerful, yet simple plan; so unchangeable that all men could trust in it and recognize each other as brothers, though living thousands of years or thousands of miles apart. It was good enough for the past. It is good enough for the present, and good enough for all time to come. It is indeed and of a truth "the everlasting gospel."—Revelation 14: 6.

THE END.

Of General Interest

BRIGHAM YOUNG ON NAVAL SILVER.

Some good women of Kentucky have started a movement to prevent the Government from accepting the silver service which Utah is preparing to present to the battleship bearing the name of that State, on the ground that it is to contain the effigy of Brigham Young.

Objection is made not because Young was once a rebel against the Federal Government and is held responsible for the Mountain Meadows massacre and others. So long as Robert E. Lee's statue stands in the Capitol there need be no objection on that score. It is complained, and justly, that Young was solely responsible for the pretended revelation in favor of polygamy and that he thereby debauched the womanhood in a way that brought many evil consequences which are to a large extent still existent. This is true. He lowered, or, rather his teachings aimed to lower, the status of the American wife to that of the inmate of an oriental harem. The Mormons themselves have pretended to give up polygamy, but it is well known that the practice continues to some extent among the older members of the church.

This country owes nothing to Brigham Young for which he should be honored. In fact, it was a humiliation that after the compromises of 1850, the Government was obliged to appoint this rebel as governor of Utah in order to maintain peace. Mormonism is said to have some practical virtues, but polygamy has none and it is a stench in our history that it was permitted so long.

It may be true that there are "Gentiles" no better in their moral lives than Mormons, but two wrongs do not make a right and this Government, which is suppressing polygamy as best it can, ought not in any way to countenance its founder. If Utah persists in sending a silver service with Brigham Young's effigy thereon, it should be cast into the sea. That is the only way to answer a proposal which is an affront to decency, to law, and to American womanhood.—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, December 23, 1910.

WHERE IS THE SPIRITUAL LIFE?

The spiritual life of the city is to be found wherever strength is offering itself in the service of weakness. Wherever the trained nurse steals with noiseless footsteps through the sickroom, the spirit, the divine spirit of pity, is never absent. Where strong men protect women and little children from exhausting hours of labor and wasting disease, the spiritual life is there. Wherever men at the joyous Christmas season make gifts, not to their friends, trading gift for gift, but to those from whom they can receive nothing again, the spirit of the Christ-child is not wanting.

Where men lay out a wooded park which they can never live to enjoy, or plant trees in parts of the city where they can not dwell themselves, or open a library that the mighty spirits of the past may speak to the youth of to-day, where the Christian prophet speaks the Christian message under groined arches or under the open sky—there is the spiritual life. He can not shut it into sacred buildings or sacred days. It is not in the walls that surround us, but in the motive and purpose within us—"Behold, the kingdom of God is within you."

The bearers of the spiritual life are those who make central in their living what was central to Jesus of Nazareth. His great gift is to tell us what is worth while. America's crying evil is lack of perspective. The death of a racing horse often calls out more comment than the death of the hero or the sage. We take the little for the everlasting.

Our life is so new and swift that we have not found our standards—or have lost them in the rush. What was worth while to Jesus? Surely not questions of form and ceremony—in them he had clearly little interest. Not matters of definition and shibboleth, useful as those may be at times. His supreme interest was in making real and credible the fatherhood of God and the infinite moral possibility in man. In the bruised and shattered life, in the tax-gatherer and the courtesan he discerned the image and superscription of God. When that victorious faith enters our homes and schools and offices, every meal shall be a sacrament and the place of merchandise become the Father's house.—From an address by President Faunce of Brown University, Providence.

NOTED STUDENT SEES GILDER COLLECTION.

James Mooney, probably the best known of the corps of ethnologists connected with the American bureau of ethnology, stopped off in Omaha Thursday afternoon en route from Lincoln to his home in Washington, D. C., for a brief inspection of the Gilder anthropological collection in the city museum of the public library, and a talk with Mr. Gilder regarding certain little known phases of his explorations. Mr. Mooney is not an archæologist. He has given more than half his life to a study of the living Indians, especially the Kiowas, Cherokees and Cheyennes and partially to the builders of America's first sky-scraper dwellings in New Mexico and Arizona.

Mr. Mooney questioned Mr. Gilder at considerable length concerning his explorations and repeated an original idea he had advanced during an informal ethnological discussion between several investigators in similar fields at Lincoln Wednesday. This idea may be thus summed up: That he regards the people who made the dwellings and used the objects found in the Gilder exploration an extinct race and that any attempt to connect them with living or recent Indian tribes would be futile; that there are several strong reasons to believe they are of the tribes which have long been extinct, like those which built the celebrated cliff dwellings in the southwestern part of the United States. Mr. Mooney repeated some of the strongest reasons for his belief, among which is the fact that among the objects in the Gilder collection are many fine bone fishhooks and pendants in the form of fish, the latter carved from "mother-of-pearl" shells.

According to Mr. Mooney, the Indians of the present day in the Pueblo and plains country are not fish-eating and will seldom eat fish even when on the verge of starvation.

Mr. Mooney was particularly struck with the beautifully carved soapstone head in the Gilder collection which he regarded as a most fortunate and remarkable find. He examined it carefully and said it had a close affinity with some of the pre-Columbian stone and terra cotta reliefs made by the Mayas of Southern Mexico and Gautemala. Before leaving for his home he publicly emphasized the fact that the Gilder collection was one of the most remarkable and scientifically valuable he had ever seen.

Among the Omaha Indians there is a tradition which has been handed down for hundreds of years that this part of their domain was peopled before their coming by a race totally differing from them in habits, buildings, mode of life, costume and color. These people they describe as being very large of stature and of cannibalistic tendencies. They had no horses, but used dogs as beasts of burden—statements which have been very strongly supported by the results of the Gilder exploration.—From Omaha World-Herald, January 15, 1911.

THE VALUE OF BIRDS.

William L. Finley of the National Association of Audubon Societies stated recently at Spokane, Washington, that the real wealth of the country is based upon agriculture and horticulture. Without the help of our wild birds, farming would be impossible. The practical farmer can not afford to ignore the relations which wild birds bear to his crops. They are a part of the natural resources of any farm. The farmer will prosper in proportion to the aid he renders to these extra hands that nature has given him.

THEY SAVE THE FORESTS.

While the value of the birds to the farmer, orchardist and planter has for years been recognized, it is believed by the authorities that their importance in preserving the forests is not generally known. According to a recent report of the Government, insects alone cause an annual loss to the trees of the country estimated at more than $100,000,000. On the oak alone 400 species of insects, which are sought and consumed by the birds of the forest, prey constantly. On the willow 186 such species constantly attempt its destruction; on the pine, 165; on the hickory, 170; on the birch, 105; and on the elm, 80. Careful analysis of the stomachs of thousands of woodpeckers, titmice, creepers, kinglets, wood warblers, wrens, flycatchers, nuthatches and other birds of the woods, show that their constant labor is to consume just these devastating insects.

THE INSECT EATERS.

Birds police the earth and air; without their services the farmer would be helpless. Larks, wrens and thrushes search the ground for grubs and insects. The food of the meadow-lark consists of seventy-five per cent of injurious insects and twelve per cent of weed seed, showing that it is a bird of great economic value. Sparrows, finches and quail eat a large amount of weed seed.

In a day's time a chickadee has been known to eat hundreds of insect eggs and worms that are very harmful to our trees and vegetables. Warblers and vireos hunt the leaves and buds for moths and millers.

Flycatchers, swallows and night-hawks are busy day and night catching flies that bother man and beast. Hawks and owls are working silently in daylight and darkness to catch moles, mice, gophers and squirrels.

SPARE THE BLACKBIRDS!

A number of years ago blackbirds were exceedingly abundant through eastern Nebraska. They were so plentiful that the farmers believed they were damaging crops. They began poisoning the birds. A single grain of corn soaked in strychnine was enough to kill a blackbird. In the years that followed, great numbers of these and other birds were destroyed during the spring and fall. At the same time thousands of quail, prairie-chickens and other game birds were killed in every county to supply the market. As the birds began to disappear, swarms of locusts took their place. These insects hatched out in countless numbers and began devastating crops. Few fields of grain escaped damage. Many were entirely destroyed. Where blackbirds were numerous, the fields escaped with little damage. —Dr. J. H. Paul in Utah Independent.

THE DRUNKEN BRAIN.

President Taft has recently commuted the sentence of a murderer, to life imprisonment, and in so doing has passed an opinion on a "drunken brain" that is of more than passing significance.

The President's opinion includes the following extracts:

"It is sufficient in my judgment to raise a reasonable doubt whether his mind was in a condition capable of that premeditation necessary to constitute murder in the first degree. Drunkenness is no excuse for crime, but it may be inconsistent with a state of mind necessary to constitute a certain degree of crime. Of course, if after determining to commit murder one gets drunk in order to nerve himself to the deed, the drunkenness only points to and confirms the premeditation; but where the purpose to kill is formed in a drunken brain, the intoxicated condition rebuts the inference of premeditation necessary in murder of the first degree."

Aside from any point of law, the opinion is supported by common sense. No judge or jury would hold a baby, an idiot or an insane person guilty of a crime. From these the State protects itself another way.

And yet the courts of America are glutted with crime (so called) acts arising in and committed under the direction of "a drunken brain."

If the cause of idiocy or insanity were known and could be remedied, would Mr. Taft as the President of a Christian Republic and an American lawyer remain silent on the subject in his messages, and mutely acquiesce in the crime of letting it be made legal for a consideration?

Since the cause of a drunken brain is known and can be remedied, how can Mr. Taft as the President of a Christian Republic and an American lawyer, remain silent on the subject in his messages and mutely acquiesce in the crime of letting it be made legal for a consideration?—Clean Politics.

THE REAL ISSUE.

"In our eagerness out here in the Middle West to herald to the world the magnitude of our corn and wheat crops, the superiority of our beef cattle and thoroughbred swine, and the tremendous productiveness of our domestic hen, we are prone to lose sight of the real issue, namely, the splendid crop of strong sons and fair daughters that the country is producing. In their joyous natures we behold at once the bright sunlight of hope and the beautiful bow of promise of our future greatness and glory. Droughts and deluges may destroy our growing crops, disease and degeneration may play havoc among our cattle on a thousand hills and our treasured porkers in the alfalfa fields; yea, our boasted domestic hen may even occasionally cease her productive labors—all these calamities might conceivably come upon us each in its turn, and yet our glory not be dimmed; provided only; that our growing boys and girls be so trained and safeguarded in the home, so educated and disciplined in the school, the church and other institutions of the country, that they will develop into well-rounded, magnificent specimens of manhood and womanhood.”—William A. McKeever, professor of philosophy Kansas State Agricultural College.

The above is the foreword of a series of home training bulletins on boys and girls which have gone into the hands of more than 1,500,000 readers. You can have them free for the mere asking, if you will send the postage, which is two cents each pamphlet, or one cent each in quantities for free distribution. The first six are: 1. The Cigarette Smoking Boy. 2. Teaching the Boy to Save. 3. Training the Girl to Help in the Home. 4. Assisting the Boy in the Choice of a Vocation. 5. A Better Crop of Boys and Girls. 6. Training the Boy to Work. Many have placed the cigarette bulletin in practically every home in their community. Parents, send for the series. Address, William A. McKeever, Manhattan, Kansas.

ANTI-MORMON PROGRESS.

The American Party in Utah, which is the anti-Mormon faction, has something to show in the census figures for its ascendancy in Salt Lake City for the last ten years, or most of that time. Since 1900 the population of the metropolis has increased 40,000, or 73 per cent, and during the period the American Party was organized and gained and held control of affairs in Salt Lake City. From 1890 to 1900 the city's population increased only 9,000, not quite 20 per cent, and the Mormons were in absolute control of things for those ten years.

The American Party embraces Democrats and Republicans and people of other political faith and looks beyond the bounds of any political organization and even further than mere opposition to the religion of Mormonism, except as such opposition will advance the real interests of city and State. Its declared mission is, not the destruction of the Mormon faith, but the obstruction to its domination in political and business affairs. And this is a thoroughly American and legitimate mission. It rests so firmly upon the basis of common sense and common justice as to commend itself to serious minded men, without regard to their political or religious proclivities.

Mormonism nor any other sect that seeks to perpetuate itself by playing politics as a means of easy control of public affairs is not to be justified or tolerated in such endeavor. This propaganda has defeated itself by its own blindness, and to this extent has done well for its State and metropolis, for both are now on the high road to that larger development made possible by wonderful natural resources and sturdy thrift and industry of a strong, fearless citizenship.—Omaha Bee.

In 1906, Congress passed an act designed to protect our American antiquities. In order to prevent private exploitation or destruction by vandalism, the President was authorized to name at his discretion all historic and prehistoric structures, landmarks, or other objects of historic and scientific import over which the Government has control and proclaim the same to be “national monuments.” This has been done to the following extent:

The Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture now care for “national monuments” known as Devil’s Tower, Shoshone Cavern, in Wyoming; Montezuma Castle, Petrified Forest, Tumacacori, Navajo, Tonto, Grand Canyon, in Arizona; El Morro, Chaco Canyon, Gran Quibira, Gila Cliff Dwellings, in New Mexico; Muir Woods, Cinder Cone, Lassen Peak, Pinnacles, in California; Lewis and Clark Cavern, Montana; Mukunterweap, Natural Bridges, Rainbow Bridge, in Utah; Sitka, Alaska; Jewel Cave, South Dakota; Wheeler, Colorado; Mount Olympus, Washington; and the Oregon Caves, which do not include all that will be brought under official notice. Then there are all national park areas, aggregating in area some four and a half million acres, which belong to the same category, including Yellowstone Park, Casa Grande Ruin, Arizona, and Mesa Verde in Colorado. Some of them may yet be placed under state protection. This is a worthy start, but it will not reach the aim contemplated in the act unless the Government will spend the necessary funds to police and maintain in good preservation all these valuable historic and prehistoric remains.

It would be well if all legislators would bear in mind that mankind is reconstructed not by proclamations, or legislation, or military occupation but by time, growth, education, religion and thought. EDITED BY FRANCES.

Krahl, secretary, 724 South Crysler street, Independence, Missouri; Mrs. F. M. Smith, 630 South Crysler street, Independence, Missouri; Mrs. L. L. Resseguie, Lamoni, Iowa; Mrs. M. E. A Warning.

Dear Sisters: I have just been reading in the last Ensign the notice by Arthur Burrage Farwell, President Chicago Law and Order League, and of the Illinois Vigilance Association, and feel that a recent experience of mine will add some force to the truth of his statements, as well as to put mothers and daughters, and even young men on their guard against one of the greatest evils in the world. Surely the Devil himself has perfect control of such heartless men and women as the man with whom I was unavoidably forced to hold the conversation I am going to narrate.

I was on my way to Independence, Missouri, for the first time, and the three hundred miles were about half traveled when a party of six men came on board the train just before noon. They all seemed of the same crowd, were talking together, and the last one I noticed looking the car over. By some strange apprehension I knew he would occupy part of my seat. I could discern it by his settled look at me. I decided to guard against it if possible.

I am a young woman and married, and although I knew that I was able to take care of myself, yet I experienced a feeling of repulsion and dread of the man.

He had 'spied my seat when he first came in, and he walked right to me. The unoccupied half I had purposely filled with my suit cases, jacket, hat, etc., to prevent a seatmate of an undesirable kind. I made no effort to move them, for I was sure there were other seats vacant at the head of the car.

And now—the first thing I knew a voice sounded in my ear: "Is this seat occupied?"

As I turned, there he was—that very man, my hat in his hand, deliberately unloading my seat! He put my jacket and hat above in the rack and then said: "Shall I put this suit case up for you?" (Remember he did not even ask if he might occupy my seat.) I was taken aback and merely said, "If you think it will stay."

He shook it a little and said, "I guess it will." Then shook it again. I was piqued at the easy-going, ironical "guess it will," and added that I didn't care to have it fall down on my head, to which he added, "Oh, I guess it won't," and such a mean, scornful smile as settled on his face!

He was a business—professional man of some sort I judged. His hair was iron gray, he was of portly build and heavy neck (like the other five men he was with). He sat silent for a long time, and I postponed my lunch an hour in the hope that he would go somewhere for his. But no, so at 12.30 I had to eat my lunch under guard, so to say. While I never looked directly at him during the journey, I could occasionally see his head turned in my direction, his eyes roving me over from head to foot. I just hated him. I felt justified.

There were some foreigners, very peculiarly dressed people, ahead on the left of the aisle. The old lady finally came past to get the old gentleman a drink. My seatmate remarked, "I guess they must have just come over!"

"They look so," I replied.

He quickly added, "They seem to have lots to talk about."

Seeing his aim was for a conversation I said nothing. He made several remarks, I said as little as possible, ignoring him most of the time. I felt it best not to completely ignore him.

He said nothing more for quite a little bit and then asked, "Have you traveled far?"

"Oh, quite a little way," said I indifferently. Then followed his usual wait, as though planning his questions it just seemed to me. Then he said, "Well, the Santa Fé has a mighty fine system, hasn't it?"

Questioned so directly I again answered, "Well, this is but the second time I have ridden on it." The usual silence.

"Well," said he, "I have ridden on it a great deal. In fact, my business takes me over all the roads."

He had given me a chance to ask for information concerning his travels, but I said nothing.

The next question was, "Are you going far?"

"Oh, not so very," I remarked.

"Well, where did you come from?" he glibly questioned.

I merely replied, "Illinois."

He thought a moment. "Then you are going to Kansas City?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, you know the trains always stop at Sheffield, but you don't want to get off there."

"Uh-huh," said I. Another pause.

"They always have business there,—sometimes they stop, but not long."

"Uh-huh."

"Ever been to Kansas City?"

"I was through there once."

"Well, it's a busy place, isn't it?" I made no reply. I did not care to talk.

"Have you friends in Kansas City?"

"Yes, sir."

"Are you going to remain long in Kansas City?"

"No."

Silence; food for thought.

"Then you are going farther?"

I was angry and spoke very positively, and I must have fairly glared.

"I am going to Independence," I replied in my firmest tones. I was afraid to openly squelch him too much, from first to last, he was such a big, mean looking mah, and then I feared a sensation.

After a short silence he coolly asked, "Have you friends in Independence?"

"I have both friends and relatives."

"Well, are you going to be met at this train?"

Oh, that was when I began to be frightened. "Oh," thought I, "if Sr. — is not there to meet me I know he will follow me." Then plans for policemen and their protection filled my head. But I was glad to be able to firmly say, "Yes, sir, I am."

Then followed more silence. He continued: "Well, now in case you are not met, would you know how to get to Independence?"

Such impudence! But I replied, "Yes, sir, I think I would."

Well, he just went to work and—"in case you are not met, I'll give you directions"—! And he explicitly detailed my route, even as to how to get out of the Kansas City depot. I was too frightened and worried to pay attention. I don't honestly believe I heard (to gather any meaning from it) what he said. My head was full of plans. I remained silent and faintly said, "All right," when he had finished.

While I knew I should never allow him to assist me, yet I feared him in case I should not be met. To increase my alarm his next remark was an offer to help me to my destination. With my heart in my mouth I simply repeated, "I am going to be met!"

And so I made up my mind that I would be all ready before we reached Kansas City, and give him no chance to offer his services in any way further. So I got ready in good time, put my hat on, hung my bag on my arm, and when I put on my jacket I stood and turned toward him as much as possible to avoid his assistance, which I saw by his very look and way he was about to proffer. By so openly snubbing him he was silenced in that regard.

A man and woman sat in the seat across the aisle who I am sure pitied me. They watched us and seemed to realize that I was being worried, even insulted. Two men of the other five of his company (I felt sure they were all together with my seatmate, although they held no conversation with him that I saw or heard) kept looking around and watching us from their seats ahead, as if to mark his progress. They sat but two seats from us. It seems very reasonable to think that these five men were on hand to act as witnesses and swear to anything to clear the one who might get into trouble or be arrested.

Well, when we pulled into the Union Station he picked up his case and asked if he should hand mine down. I said, "If you please." I took it and let him go on a ways before I joined the line of passengers leaving the car. Just as I expected, that man was the first one I saw as I stepped off the car, standing a short distance away deliberately watching for me. I shall never forget the quick glances of his old red eyes, as he rolled them up and down and up and down at me, to keep from a stare I suppose. I went on and as I entered one gateway at the station, he entered another, and as I stepped inside there he was standing watching me again. But oh, joyous relief, the third face in front of me was the familiar one of Sister _____.

Our greeting, I guess, dispersed all doubts of my seatmate as to my "being met," for he disappeared completely.

I was safe at last! I am safe now! I never want another such experience. But oh, the distress of the thought even (let alone the reality) of the many young girls who are taken in by such criminals, because they can not discern the insincerity of those seeking the ruin of the purest and best. And so consequently they are for ever lost from home and loved ones.

For the benefit of those who may read this and not understand my last paragraph, or realize that I was in any great danger, I simply state that had I let that man do for me all that he planned and suggested he would have led me to a house of ill fame. I know this was the evil purpose of that man toward me; my impressions were too strong to be disregarded and the lesson left untaught and unlearned. He would have led me there and with lock and key there would have been my home for the rest of my days. This is the fate of many innocent young girls—ruination physically and morally.

I hope my experience will cause some one to be more careful under such circumstances—some one who needs to be. Of course this is only one of many ways such evils are accomplished. One is hardly safe anywhere alone in this world, it seems.

FROM A SISTER IN THE GOSPEL.

Requests for Prayer.

Sister Randall, of Fort Dodge, Iowa, asks the prayers of the Saints and of the Prayer Union in behalf of Lena Randall and Lillie Swanes, that God may heal them.

Mr. and Mrs. D. B. Elledge, of Colesburg, Iowa, request the prayers of the Prayer Union and of the Saints, that their six-year-old boy may be healed. He is suffering with a running ear; it is very painful at times.

JANUARY 2, 1911.

Dear Herald: Since we last wrote to your precious pages, we have been called upon to pass through a sad and unexpected experience, that of the death of our only daughter, Martha, whose love, devotion, and traits of character will ever be held in fond remembrance. She has left behind a good husband, a healthy newborn babe, father, mother and four brothers, all members of the church, to mourn their loss together with a host of friends.

I take this means of thanking the friends and Saints of Manchester and other parts, who share with us our great loss, the reason for which is best known to our Father in heaven.

BRO. AND SR. JOHN SCHOFIELD, SEN.

MONTROSE, IOWA, January 19, 1911.

Editors Herald: I have been in the church a long time, and I doubt not the Lord and his goodness for I've proved him in days that are past; yet there is much in this life to try us. But when I read the good letters in the HERALD, from my brothers and sisters, I am encouraged and rejoice that I am a partaker of the latter day work, and can see the prophecies of the Scriptures fulfilled. The Good Book says that not all who say, Lord, Lord, can enter into rest, but those who do the will of God. I want to remain faithful to his will.

Oh, let thy Spirit with us dwell,
That we in future life may tell
How we came, Lord, to the end.
Be thou our God, our lasting Friend.

Your sister,
MRS. ELLEN ROSS.

STAMFORD, TEXAS, January 16, 1911.

Editors Saints' Herald: I am at Stamford, the first one as a missionary for our church to visit this locality. Have not had the opportunity to preach many times, though have made many efforts. Have had many fireside talks and distributed many tracts. I have baptized one and have had wars without and within, yet have been helped of the Lord.

I went down in central Texas. Found stormy opposition. Visited the branches. They do not seem to be keeping the commandments regarding sacramental and prayer meetings. I learn that Sunday schools are kept up by the most of them. According to James: "Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed." This applies to the whole church, to branches and individual members, as well as preachers local and general. I pray that I may be found in the line of my duty and faithful to the end.

E. BATES.

A Conference in the Frozen North.

Our Saskatchewan district conference closed last night, and the visiting Saints to the number of nearly forty are on their way to their homes, or mission fields. So now I am reminded to begin what I have been so long intending to do; that is, to write to our beloved church papers, and let you know that we are not all spiritually dead nor frozen to death.

We have been enjoying a very pleasant and profitable gathering of Saints and friends, in this, at present, cold, north-west province. And though the thermometer has registered thirty-five or forty degrees below zero, our interest in the Sunday school, Religio, and church work has overbalanced our dread of getting out in the cold to ride all the way from two to four miles to and from the schoolhouse, to meet with those of like precious faith. Many of us have not missed a meeting for the last four days, though there were at least four services of some kind every day. In order to get there by nine or half past nine in the morning we had to go against our natural desires to lie abed a little longer on these severe cold mornings. But 5 o'clock was the rule, and then we had to hustle to do the necessary work, pack dinner and supper lunches, and get ready.

But we feel amply repaid, for all our efforts in the cheerful associations with the Saints and the presence of the Holy Spirit in our midst. It certainly does Latter Day Saints good to meet occasionally with those from other branches, or isolated localities, each bringing their individual experiences and testimonies of helpfulness. Thus our love towards and confidence in each other and God is increased. Though our own failings may be more clear to us, the desire is increased to overcome all evil and have charity for one another.

You may wonder how we could very well hold a winter conference in a country neighborhood and in a schoolhouse about four miles from the railroad station, and so near the north pole. The school board kindly gave us the use of the house, for church services, as they have done for over two years. Through the efforts of Saints and friends a barn was built on the school grounds. This fall the Sunday school, Religio and branch combined raised about one hundred dollars to repair and make the barn more comfortable for ten or twelve teams, provide fuel, etc. Then a committee were chosen and means subscribed to get lumber for a platform, seats and two tables in the schoolroom.

Desks were taken out and long seats with backs reaching from the side walls to the center aisle were put in. Three long tables were formed by placing planks across the backs of the seats. We shoved them all back against the wall, one on top of the other, when not in use, thus forming a long shelf to place dinner boxes, pans and pails on or under. Two large, high shelves, about three feet by eight, and eight feet high, were fixed up each side of door to put our winter wraps on, which were very handy, as the wraps for a hundred or more people in this climate are no small item. When our tables were in place, the tablecloth spread, and the dishes, stuffed chickens, salads, bread, butter, fruit, meat, pies, and cakes were placed upon them, it was not a difficult matter to feed over one hundred people. It might not have suited fastidious people, to be given cold food for dinner, the fragments gathered up for supper, and then, maybe, the left-overs, hurriedly warmed over for breakfast; yet we all lived through it, and parted friends.

Our resolutions were renewed, to try to live nearer to God and to be more willing to sacrifice for his work, and the salvation of souls. We of this branch, however, regretted that we were not able to provide better accommodations for the visiting brethren and sisters; also, that there was not time for more sermons and prayer meetings. I think we shall have to petition the district to hold a reunion in our Minnesota Branch of Canada, lasting over two Sundays, some time in warm weather.

I am glad that I believe in a God whose work for the redemption of souls goes on even after this life is ended, so that all Israel shall be saved. Oh, may we all be worthy to enjoy that glorious reunion, is the prayer of your sister in the one fold and family of Christ.

EMMA L. ANDERSON.

VANSOY, SASKATCHEWAN, January 2, 1911.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. G. M. Steele, Moffat, Colorado, writes: "Wife and I left Oklahoma last fall and came here to this fine valley where the sun shines every day. If there are any Saints living near Moffat who see this, please call at the Moffat Store, and ask for me. I would be pleased to meet them."

Sr. Laura E. Hicks, Grant, Michigan: "Brother Ellis and son came here about the latter part of July and baptized the writer and five others. Just before Christmas, Brother Ellis came back and organized the Bridgeton Latter Day Saint Sunday school, and preached my brother's funeral sermon. It is a comfort to read the HERALD letters from all the great brotherhood. We are looking forward to another visit from the brethren, for everybody liked them."

Bro. J. W. Bean, Route 1, Owanka, South Dakota, writes: "I write to let our friends know where we are. Very dry here this last season; crops very short. We like to read the HERALD and Leaves. Last year I cut stovewood to get the money to pay for them. When I saw Brother Evans' appeal in the HERALD, I wanted to help him, but having no money, I went and borrowed it from a neighbor until I can earn it or break prairie to pay it back. As we do not get any sermons, it might do us good. But hope some of the elders will come this way. The angel's message has not yet been given to this people, but there are some honest ones here. If Bro. J. W. Morgan sees this, I wish he would write to me."

Sr. Ethel Beebe, writing from Lexington, Missouri, January 11, says: "We moved here in March last and by inquiry had in a few months found some members. We decided to have preaching, and Brother Thomas sent to the president of the Independence Stake for help, and he sent Elder Edgar Smith. He preached in the court-house for four or five nights to small audiences, then began in a mining camp three miles from town at Brother Talley's house, where he had large crowds and excellent liberty for ten days; baptized eight and left many interested. Elder Ammon White came later on and is still with us, preaching to large crowds. He has baptized five more, all married and under the age of forty. Altogether, we number twenty-seven, and still we think there are more to unite with us. The peace of the good Spirit and the gift of healing have been with us, and we are rejoicing in the work of God."

Bro. Alexander S. A. White, Owen Sound, Ontario, Canada, writes: "As a local branch, we are having a good time. Quite a number are seriously thinking about the message. The Lord is with Brother Bellrose, presiding elder, in his preaching. He and I decided to experiment in circulating handbills with announcement of subject. Here is the result: Average attendance, when bills were circulated, fifty; when we did not circulate bills, average attendance was thirty-two. From October 9 to January 8, thirteen services were held with an average attendance of 39, including an average of six strangers. December 4, Elder Bellrose spoke on the Sabbath question, and an Adventist present was given permission to say a few words."

Sr. Laura Plumb, Wilburton, Oklahoma, writes: "I am glad my life was spared to hear the grand message of latter days. It is the greatest thing in the world if we will only live it. I have never regretted the step, and want to so live that I can be known as a Saint indeed."

Mulhall, the world famed Dublin statistician, is authority for the fact that among the independent nations of the world Denmark is, per capita, next after England, the richest country, while France comes third and the United States fourth in line. This is probably news to most people.

News from Missons

Good Conference at Saskatchewan.

Some of the good people of Missouri and Iowa would be awfully surprised were they called upon to attend a General Conference up here in western Canada, some of these days. Well, perhaps we would be a little surprised, too, but not any more so than the coyotes and gophers were surprised to see their once undisputed rights assailed by the hurrying feet of Saints of many countries, gathering to such fine semiannual district conferences as were enjoyed last week with the Minnesota Branch at Vanscoy. The majority come from regions south of the forty-ninth parallel. But that is all right; we find them just as good as genuine freeborn Canadians and it's hard to pay a much bigger compliment than that. A large heart, a clear conscience, and a fur coat, and you have the human ingredients for a good time and there seemed to be lots of it. Best of all, the divine essential was not absent.

Western Canada, from an organization standpoint, is passing through its constructive period, and it is most encouraging to note the material that is being utilized and the progress made along all the lines, except building of churches.

We can not know the future, but the present outlook bids fair for a grand and noble culmination. The Bishop's agent's report shows a splendid work being done along financial lines. The Saints are as spiritual as we find them anywhere, and there is hardly a thing suggested by those who are older and have the general oversight that does not touch a responsive chord, and they just get right up and do it.

A good big crowd on hand waiting for the opening hymn; the sun just arisen and a number having come several miles in a temperature about thirty below zero, with little children, and provisions for two meals, is a good indication of something; and it is the readers' pleasure and privilege to guess what it is.

True, we had not prophets, patriarchs, or apostles with us, or indeed any of what are termed "the great guns of the church," yet we had quite a lot of the stuff of which those things are made, and a lot of the ammunition they use. Also, we had the impress of such as has been in those parts, and we are still courageous under the magnetic smell of their powder.

The preaching force present was T. J. Jordan, J. R. Beckman, J. R. Beckley, S. W. Tomlinson, E. E. Williams, Josh Dobson, F. A. Rowe, J. L. Mortimer, and others. The preaching was good, and the business was transacted as the darky says, "in peas and hominy."

The tobacco resolution upon the books was declared null and void, and a less stringent one took its place.

The members of Minnesota Branch deserve honorable mention for generous provision made for the entertainment of the visiting delegates, both at their homes and at the building in which the conference was held; including transportation from and to the railroad station. They all seemed to feel blessed in their effort to build up the work in this extensive territory.

Elder T. J. Jordan, district president, was chosen as delegate to General Conference, with expenses paid. Next district conference is to be held at Sedley, a thriving little town about thirty miles southeast of Regina, on the Arcola line. A fine new town hall with modern equipments, piano, kitchen and dining room free of charge, which with the expectation of minister in charge, one of the presidency and a patriarch to be present, ought to be an inducement.

Officers and the priesthood generally: We must not fail to report next time, according to resolution. "Seeing we also are compassed about by so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight" and every wait and make this next one still the best conference in the history of the Canadian west.

H. J. DAVISON, press committee.

From Utah.

My experiences the past year have not been such as to encourage the missionary very much if he is to judge the results of his labor by the size of his audiences and the number of times he preached. I am aware there are some who would think the above was not a proper criterion to judge another's labor by; neither am I intending this to be an apology for not having done more preaching to more people.

I arrived in Ogden, Utah, about July 10. Since that date I have labored in Utah with one exception. I was in Hagerman, Idaho, for one week. This is explanation enough to every missionary who ever tried to labor in Utah, why I have not been preaching to large numbers of people the past six months. To some of our readers who know not the conditions that exist here we will explain by relating the following:

Elder A. M. Chase, our brother who has charge of the work in Salt Lake City, lately secured a new place for meetings, one that was more centrally located to a greater number of the Saints than the one they had been meeting in. Brother Chase advertised in all the papers of the city that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints had secured a new hall for their meetings and they had set January the first apart as "Rally Day"; a typewritten card was sent to all the members who were in easy reach; some to members 50 and 60 miles away from the city. Something like 2,000 tracts were distributed, by Elder Chase and family along with the writer, in and around that part of the city where the Saints meet, and at the same time we gave the people who received these tracts a special invitation to our services dating from January 1 to 8, one week. With all this effort made to revive the work in Great Salt Lake City, where our church has a membership of over two hundred, Elder Chase and myself preached during that week to audiences numbering nine, ten, and thirteen, other times more; but not one of our meetings numbered more than fifty. There were only two strangers in attendance at these meetings, and we are not sure that all the advertising that was done had anything to do with bringing them out. How would you like to be encouraged, my brother missionary, in the work you are trying to do in your field of labor in the same way? However, I think it only fair to say, after having related the above, that preaching by the missionary to large or small audiences, is only a small part of the work he does in Utah, which work is seldom ever reported to his superiors, or to the church.

The preaching on the streets of Ogden and Salt Lake City this year, as well as the past, in the opinion of the writer has not been in vain. I seldom go away from the city into other places but I hear from our street preaching. Not long since I was in a place, northeastern Utah, where four fifths of the people residing there, had never heard a sermon preached by a minister who was not of the Mormon church. In this place I was informed by some that they had heard me preach on the street in both Ogden and Salt Lake City. Since it is true that God's word will not "return unto him void" it is equally true that if our preaching on the street has been the gospel, God's word accompanied with the Holy Ghost, it will be a savor of life unto life or of death unto death to many thousands who have listened on the street and in all probability would never have heard it elsewhere.

Elders Chase and Hansen, of the missionary force in Utah, have written to the HERALD and Ensign during the past year, giving the readers such news from Utah as they thought would be interesting to them, and we can think of little more; therefore, we are not going to risk writing unimportant matter for fear such would be criticised, and we should not find fault if it were.

The first six months of 1910 were spent by the writer in western Washington, in Centralia most of the time. While I was there, I did a piece of work which I hope to see in print, after it is properly edited by one who is fully competent to get it in shape for the printer. You will know then that I have not been playing all of my time. J. D. STEAD.

1509 WASHINGTON AVENUE, OGDEN, UTAH.

Eastern Maine District.

My knowledge of the Eastern Mission dates back nearly five years. The intention in coming East was threefold, viz: to visit relatives, see places where my earlier years were spent, and last but not least, do the work of a missionary for a season or a year and then return. But since providence and the "powers that be" have indicated a longer stay, there has been so far no reluctance on my part. Former experience has taught me that we are happiest when we run in providential currents. But I am "not to be too personal," very true. So on the other hand we should not swing our pendulum to an opposite extreme and deal in glittering generalities too much. I agree in cutting out a world of small stuff from correspondence, but we need to remember that gospel meat needs to be chopped fine for average stomachs. My observation is that too many have been served with great chunks of gospel meat which stuck in the gullet and never came in contact with the digestive fluids, and hence produced disgust rather than conviction, nutrition, and strength.

This field geographically speaking is somewhat isolated. It is an outpost of our work. Such terms as "distance," "expense," "deprivation" and the like are frequently heard. "How I would like to go to the General Conference," is a frequent remark. However, the gospel is just as precious here, and God is just as near, and the products of the press nearly as cheap as at the centers. The district has a water front or back, which means fish, fog, sea breezes; and with many, debilities; while on the other hand it means delightful scenery to all, and to many, invigoration of mind and body. The varieties of fish and water transportation furnish a livelihood for the people, most of whom are natives of good stock. Most of the older men have been seamen at times. Their consensus of opinion is that a seafaring life is far more dangerous than formerly. (See Doctrine and Covenants 61: 1, 3.)

As a missionary field this is one of the has-beens and, we hope, one of the yet-to-bes. Formerly there were nine branches in the district, but one by one they became disorganized until only two were left. One of them has been waiting for the dictum of authority to pass its death sentence. Had not our district president, Uriah Kelley, been a man of hope and faith and some long dimensions it would be extinct. Within the past three years God and men have been giving more attention to this region of country; so a Greene, a Bullard, a Foss, a Cushman, and a Koehler have come to sow and reap. They have reaped from others' sowing; they are sowing for others' reaping.

The Lord has granted a goodly harvest, especially at Jonesport, where in three years there have been seventy-five additions by baptism. The branch is well officered and exhibits the missionary spirit by personal effort in defending the work, in sustaining the laborers, in circulating literature, and by catching opportunity by the forelock. While recording these recent results I am impressed with the thought that years before this man came into the church other men wrestled with God in prayer, and had the promise and provision of things that are now and of greater yet to be. Jehovah stands for covenant keeping. So the "decrees sent forth" and the covenants made to others gave them hope and rest, the rest of faith. (See Genesis 6: 31; 7: 58, and Enos 1: 4.) How much of present results are from past effort we know not.

The writer believes that in our work central points should be established and kept up by special effort; then from them branch out in widening circles of local effort. To make a strong center, education is one thing not to be neglected. The people, our people, need to know our history and doctrine, and catch the "esprit de corps" of the restoration. The Religio, Sabbath school, history class, and priesthood class are exceedingly valuable auxiliaries to our work. Knowledge is the foundation of and must precede faith and spirituality. Shame on well-to-do Saints who do not take our church papers! Tell them so for me.

Bro. J. A. Koehler has been engineering a new "church house" on the old fashioned plan of "roll up your sleeves and come on, boys." Kennebec needed it. Hope they appreciate the hustler and his wife, too. The Kennebec Branch was reorganized two years ago by Bro. J. C. Foss and some new blood infused into it. The new structure is more conveniently located and will be better filled.

We have been disappointed in not having the help and inspiration of Brother Greene's ministrations this winter, but afflicting providences have hindered. No man has a stronger hold here than he. S. F. CUSHMAN.

Scranton, Pennsylvania.

After an absence of considerable length, owing to severe throat trouble, I am again able through the mercies of God to be at my post in the Master's work. On returning to my field, I found the marks of the cloven hoof. Some of whom we had entertained a hope of much improvement for good had allowed the powers of darkness to overcome them and had drifted far from the light of God's countenance.

One sad accident that occurred shortly after my return was that which befell the youngest son of Sr. Lot Bishop, while coasting on a very steep hill which terminated with a car track. The boy, anxious to have a coast before going to school, took his sled out and almost went down to his death. The result of that slide was a terrible scalp wound and the loss of his right arm. Aside from the shock and loss of blood, he stood it well and is now restored to a healthful condition, though keenly sensing the loss of one of his useful members.

Another touching case was that of Sr. Mary Lewis, who had suffered untold agony from cancer. It had so wasted her form that she succumbed to the disease, January 7, 1911, after many months of affliction and passing through seven operations, losing one of the members of her body by the surgeon's knife. With the fortitude of a true Saint she suffered it all without complaint. She was truly an angel to her home, where her very strong character was in evidence. Often by her superior foresight she was able to give timely advice to those of her own household. She was a true mother to her own children; and to those who had no parents she delighted in the thought that she could be to them "a mother in Israel." With the desire that their children might be brought up under church influences, she and husband left Wales and came to this country in 1903, finally making their home in Scranton in 1906. She leaves a husband, Elder Evan Lewis, three sons, one of whom is a teacher, another a deacon, and two daughters.

The prospects for future work in and around this locality are quite bright, especially in the surrounding country. When the extreme weather has gone and spring opens, many honest hearts hungry for truth will undoubtedly obey. My earnest prayer is that the Saints in the branches of the church will so comport themselves that when others enter the ranks there will be a warm and hearty welcome into an atmosphere of love and peace. That God may hasten the redemption of Zion is my prayer.

If our work here was to be judged by the number of baptisms performed, we might conclude our labors in this part were almost a failure, since we have done but little in that direction this year, but like the apostle of old, I can say that I am not sent to baptize but preach the gospel; and in that line of work we have been busy and am glad to say we have been able to get the gospel before some who have never before heard it.

The prospects are brighter for this field than ever before, although we have a great many things to contend with that are not at all flattering, and being obliged to labor alone adds somewhat to the difficulty. But I have no reason to complain since the Lord has been my stay and the Spirit has been my constant companion. Indifference on the part of the people towards religion of any kind is one of the greatest barriers to overcome, and then the distance between settlements and the expense of getting about also militates against the spread of the work here, but we look for better things in the future.

Our work at Phoenix during the month of October was quite successful, but our season for street work there was too short to accomplish what we wished. The summer is too hot for effectual work there; and in the fore part of November we had a slight rain, after which it was too cold to do much in the open air, and that was about the only means we had of reaching the people. However, we were able to get the gospel before a great many people, as Phoenix is a center to which people gravitate from all parts of the country, and we not only preached the word but distributed tracts, HERALDS and Ensigns by the hundreds, also a number of Autumn Leaves. I feel assured that the work there will not be altogether fruitless.

In my judgment a tent would be the proper thing for Phoenix and vicinity during the winter months, as it could be placed in a favorable locality and a small stove would be sufficient to make it comfortable. Then if two men would work the town by a systematic canvas from house to house it would, I think, bring results. Tempe and Mesa could be worked in the same manner as they are contiguous thereto.

Sometimes things look discouraging when one fails to do what he has aspired to; but when I stop to think that every victory for the right is fraught with much difficulty, I am assured that whatever my immediate success may be matters little, for the right will triumph in the end and He who is a discerner of the thoughts of the heart will take due cognizance of the labors performed.

I am kept busy at this place (Bisbee), assisting in the general work and visiting about among those that show an interest in the gospel. A cottage meeting sandwiched in occasionally helps to roll the work on. I organized a Religio here last month which bids fair to be a factor for good not only among the young of the church but the outside also.

The long absence from home and loved ones is the most unpleasant thing about the gospel work. It seems necessary for one to have a cross to bear that he might better appreciate the atonement of Christ and the beauty of the gospel. And the gospel teaches me that I should be willing to sacrifice my own comforts, pleasures, friends, and in fact all that is dear for the blessing of those who are less fortunate than we are. And when I think of Moses, the meekest man, laboring forty years for the deliverance of a rebellious people and then dying before he had the privilege of planting them in the promised land, we ought to be willing to make sacrifice for a few years if need be that the erring may be brought to light, and the meek be instructed in the gospel of peace. Trusting the year before us will bring greater results for good than the one just closed, I subscribe myself your servant for Jesus' sake.

Central Chicago.

Sunday, January 8. Elder P. Pement occupied in the morning, showing what great possibilities are in store for us as to improvement, if we will only be obedient children and trust the Lord in time of need. "Man's extremity is God's opportunity." Bro. H. P. W. Keir was the speaker in the evening, taking for his theme, "The reality of God and his unchangeableness." Brethren Cochran and James Lang were in charge of the prayer meeting Wednesday evening.

The Gleaners met at the home of Sister Keir Thursday, the first meeting for some weeks on account of the holiday season, and trust that more may become interested, as this society has been of great assistance to the church. "Where there is unity there is strength"; "United we stand, divided we fall."

"Work may be drudgery; it is so only
When we leave God out of the task he gives.
Or choose our own apart from him,—a lonely
Treadmill of selfishness, where no joy lives."

"Work is the holiest thing in earth and heaven;
To lift from souls the sorrow and the curse,—
This dear employment must to us be given,
While there is want in God's great universe."

San Antonio, Texas.

A few lines from this part of the Lord's vineyard. The weather is nice and warm at present. Would say that though the work is not being pushed as it should be, we have many good workers with us and the good work is going on.

Our services here at the First San Antonio Branch are: Sunday school at 10 a. m.; preaching at 11 a. m. and 7.30 p. m.; prayer service at 3 p. m.; Wednesday prayer service at 7.30 p. m.; Friday, Religio at 7.30 p. m.

The Sisters' Aid also is doing a good work. Bro. J. W. Morgan of Colorado is in our midst. We appreciate his labor and presence very much. Our missionary and Bishop's agent, Brother Palmer, reports greater success financially in the district this year than ever before, which we think denotes spiritual progress.

The calls for preaching here are greater than our missionary can fill, as the field is large and the laborers so few. It fills my heart with rapture to note the progress that is being made throughout the world with our gospel, as we notice by the letters in the HERALD. Glad to know that God is again favoring Palestine and the outlook so bright there, as reported by Brethren Pitt and Griffiths. May God bless his servants in promulgating his cause. I read with much appreciation the article by Bro. J. R. Lambert on "The character of God, his form and attributes," and look forward with anticipation to the articles that are to follow.

May God hasten the day when the gospel will be carried to every land and clime and the Savior will come to redeem his own, yet I realize that we as Saints must improve before he comes. We are trying to open up some new places in the city for planting the gospel seed.

GLAUD R. KUYKENDALL.

At our recent annual business meeting we made some few changes in the official administration. Eli M. Wildermuth was chosen president, and sustained as branch correspondent and book agent for church publications; also janitor for the church. Bro. John Harris, late of Chicago, was elected presiding priest; Bro. Milo Ewing, teacher; Bro. Joe Blakely, deacon; Bro. C. A. Blakely, secretary and chorister; and Sr. Nellie Blakely was chosen as organist.

Our branch is in a fairly prosperous spiritual condition, gradually growing in numbers and working harmoniously and in brotherly love for the progress of the kingdom of God. The auxiliaries, the Sunday school and Religio are progressing finely.

E. M. WILDERMUTH.

San Francisco.

All is going nicely in this part of the world. We are still engaged in keeping our cause before the public. In this city, we hold Sunday school and Religio services every Sunday; preaching Sunday morning and evening; prayer meeting every Wednesday evening; ladies' prayer union Thursday afternoon. We also advertise our meetings; if the public do not know of us, it is not entirely our fault.

We are making a little headway. Three were baptized last month by Elder J. A. Lawn and two by Elder J. M. Terry. The attendance at our services is good; the preaching interesting and instructive. Some strangers are most always present. We have a good attendance of young people who are active and energetic, many of whom will make a name in church work.

At our last business meeting, I had the honor of being elected president of the branch. I am surrounded by a fine set of officers in all departments and we hope to make a good showing this year. We have a number of elders to help in the preaching and the street services are kept up by Elder J. A. Anthony. We have good musical talent both instrumental and vocal to assist in all services.

Apostle F. M. Sheehy has preached for us several times of late and we are anxiously looking for his return. Elder J. M. Terry speaks for us quite often and we send a preacher to Oakland at such times. These two sister branches are among the best in the district and their condition is about the same: both prosperous and growing. There is very little sickness among us. Most all are strong in the faith and happy in church work. May God bless the cause everywhere.

Conference Notices.

Spring River district conference will be held February 17 and 18, at Webb City, Missouri. Mollie Davis, secretary, 115 West Jefferson avenue, Pittsburg, Kansas.

Conference of the Nodaway District, will meet at the Union church, Bedison Branch, Missouri, at 10 a. m., Saturday, February 11, and continue over Sunday, the 12th. There will be the regular election of officers and delegates to General Conference. Please send reports on time. Let all who can do so come and bring the spirit of love and harmony. W. B. Torrance, district secretary, Route 3, Bolekow, Missouri.

The conference of the Fremont, Iowa, District will convene with the Shenandoah Branch, Iowa, Saturday, February 11, 1911, at 10 a. m. The joint convention of the Sunday school and Religio will precede the conference, as is usual in this district. Parties attending the conventions or conference should go direct to the church, where a reception committee will assign them to their host. There are so many trains that it would be quite impossible for a committee to meet them all, hence you will be met at the church. We hope to see a full delegation from each branch, as this is the important conference of the year. Delegates to the coming General Conference and conventions will be elected, and other business of importance transacted. All reports, both of the eldership and the branches, should be mailed to the secretary, C. W. Forney, Thurman, Iowa, at an early date, or to him in care of E. S. Wilcox, Shenandoah, Iowa. With best wishes for the success of the work, T. A. Hougas, district president.

Western Oklahoma district conference will meet at Seiling, February 11 and 12, 1911. All are cordially invited to attend; come a day earlier and take in the work of the convention on the 10th. Hubert Case, missionary in charge. T. L. McGeorge, district president.

The semiannual conference of the Southern California District will meet at San Bernardino, Saturday, February 25, at 10 a. m. Branches will appoint delegates. Special business. Election of delegates. Report of reunion committee. T. W. Williams, district president.

The conference of the Portland District will meet at the church on East Seventy-sixth street, Montavilla, Portland, Oregon, at 10 a. m., Saturday, February 25. We would like to receive a full report of all the priesthood and have the district well represented as we will elect our delegates to General Conference. Marcus H. Cook, district president.

The Idaho district conference will meet at Boise, Idaho, February 11 and 12, at 10.30 a. m. William Glauner, president, and J. E. Condit, secretary.

Pottawattamie district conference will meet at Underwood, Iowa, at 10 a. m., Saturday, February 11, 1911. As this is the most important conference of the year, a full attendance is requested for election of officers and delegates to General Conference. Please see that all reports and other papers to come before the conference are in the hands of the secretary by Sunday, February 5. J. Charles Jensen, secretary.

The Gallands Grove district conference will meet at Deloit, Iowa, February 11, at 10 a. m. Elder J. W. Wight is expected to be with us. Send all branch reports to Miss Edith Dobson, Deloit, Iowa. C. J. Hunt, district president.

The Winnipeg district conference will meet at Winnipeg, Manitoba, January 8-11, 1911. All who intend coming should address the undersigned for further information. E. E. Long, president, 736 Simcoe street, Winnipeg.

The district conference of the Central Nebraska District will meet with the Bonesteel Branch, February 11 and 12, 1911, at 10 a. m. Send all reports to William McKee, Bonesteel, South Dakota. All are invited; bring with you the Spirit of the Lord. J. H. Jackson, district president.

The Texas Central District will meet with the Philadelphia Branch, in Falls County, on the 11th of February, at 10 a. m. Let all come and meet with us who can; and all of the priesthood and branches will please send in their reports beforehand to the secretary, C. M. Mitchell, Cookes Point. We desire to have a good conference, therefore let all come well prepared for it.

Convention Notices.

The Pittsburg district Sunday school convention will be held at the church, on Edgar avenue, Steubenville, Ohio, Friday evening, at 7.30, February 17. The conference will follow on Saturday and Sunday, the 18th and 19th. Conference will commence at 10 a. m., Saturday. Please notify the president of your branch or the undersigned if you intend going. C. Edward Miller, president of district.

The third annual convention of the Sunday schools of the Winnipeg District will be held on Friday, February 11, 1911, at 2 p. m., in Saints' church, Parish of Saint James, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada. Secretaries of schools in the district will please forward all reports to the district secretary, Estela Haywood.

The Zion's Religio-Literary Society of the Des Moines District, Iowa, will meet in convention at Runnells, Iowa, Friday, February 3, 1911. Sarah M. Rodgers, district secretary.

The Seattle and British Columbia district Religio convention will meet at 10 a. m., February 10, 1911, at the Seattle church. All who possibly can should be present to boost the convention and elect new officers. Leonard S. Rhodes, district secretary.

The Sunday school convention of the Nauvoo District will meet at Burlington, Iowa, February 3, 1911, at 10 a. m. Send all reports to Clara Ortleb, 1315 North Eighth street, Burlington, Iowa.

The Seattle and British Columbia district Sunday school association will convene with the Seattle Branch at their church, corner First avenue, N. W. and Kilbourne street, Seattle, Washington, Friday, February 10, 1911, at 2 p. m. Freemont-Ballard car passes the door. It is hoped that all will attend who possibly can. Mrs. H. A. Briggs, district secretary.

The Lamoni Stake Sunday school and Religio associations will hold their convention at Lamoni, Iowa, February 9 and 10, 1911. At this convention will be held the election of stake officers for the year, also the selection of delegates to the General Convention, so let us have a good representation from the different schools and locals. Mary Banta, secretary for Sunday school; Martha Martin, secretary for Religio.

The convention of the Northeastern Missouri District will meet at Bevier, Friday, February 10, 1911. Let all attend who possibly can as the election of officers will take place. Send all reports to Christina Edmunds, secretary.

Portland, Oregon, district Sunday school association will convene February 24, 10.30 a. m., at Saints' church, Portland. Delegates to General Convention and district officers will be elected. All schools will please be properly represented by delegates having signed credentials. A joint district Sunday school and Religio program will be given in the evening. Mary Harvey Shippy, district secretary.

The Pottawattamie district Sunday school association will meet at Underwood, Iowa, Friday, February 10, 1911, at 10.30 a. m. We hope all will make an effort to attend and thereby show an interest in the work. Ploy M. Wind, secretary, 738 Washington avenue, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

The Sunday school convention of the Northern Wisconsin District will be held at Porcupine, Pepin County, Wisconsin, Monday, February 6, 1911. Archie Hook, district secretary, Nekeosa, Wisconsin.

Church Secretary.

DELEGATE CREDENTIALS TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Delegate credential blanks, provided for by action of General Conference, will be sent to presidents or secretaries of the various districts, also to officers of branches not in districts. Such officers are requested to forward credentials of delegates appointed to represent their districts or branches at the General Conference of 1911, to the Church Secretary, as soon as possible, that a complete roll of delegates may be prepared, as provided for by resolution of General Conference, to facilitate prompt organization and work of that body. Credentials of delegates appointed at fall or winter conferences should be forwarded without delay, and those yet to be appointed, immediately after appointment. It is desired that all credentials be in hand as early in the month of March as possible.

One certificate for each delegation, with number of members in district or branch, and names of its delegates, signed by the president and secretary of district or branch appointing, with name of district or branch and place and date of conference or business meeting, is sufficient. Separate, individual credentials to delegates are not necessary. Please insert "total membership" in all cases; also report if delegates are authorized to cast majority and minority vote.

Any failing to receive blanks will be supplied on application to the undersigned.

The rules governing "representation" and the "restrictions of delegate voting" provide as follows:

"Each district shall be entitled to one delegate for every twenty-five members of said district, and one vote in conference for each delegate to which they may be entitled. Scattered members in districts, including those enrolled on records of disorganized branches, who are not recorded as members of other districts, may be included in the enumeration of membership.

"The delegates present at conference from any one district shall be entitled to cast the full vote of the district of which they are delegates, unless otherwise instructed by their district conference:

"Provided, that in case of a disagreement of views among the members of said delegation (the full delegation not being present), they shall be entitled to cast only their individual votes as said delegates.

"No one delegate shall be entitled to cast, as representative in the same conference, more than twenty votes.

"Each regularly organized branch of the church not included in an organized district, shall be entitled to one delegate, who shall have the same privilege as delegates of districts. But when the membership of such branch exceeds twenty-five it shall be entitled to one delegate for each twenty-five members."

For further information concerning representation, choice, and instruction of delegates, etc., see Rules of Order, chapter 17.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, January 21, 1911.

Died.

SMITH.—Mahala M. Smith at the age of 52 years, 11 months, and 13 days, at residence of her daughter, Sr. Alma Anderson, Perry, Iowa, after a brief but severe attack of pneumonia, on January 5, 1911. Beloved wife of Bro. Albert Smith, of Des Moines, who with eight children mourn her sudden departure. Baptized by C. F. Merrill, in 1884; endured in faith to the end. Funeral at residence of eldest daughter, Clara, in Des Moines, Sunday, January 8, in charge of Elder J. F. Mintun. Sermon from Ecclesiastes 12: 7 and Revelation 14: 13. Interment in Glendale Cemetery, Des Moines, awaiting a glorious resurrection, of which she was worthy.

GREEN.—Henry Green, was born in Llanelly, South Wales, England, August 28, 1829. Died January 3, 1911, at Neta-waka, Kansas. Was baptized into the Reorganized Church by Isaac Sheen, in 1860; was ordained an elder same year.

He leaves a wife, four sons, three daughters, and twenty-eight grandchildren; five great-grandchildren. He is widely known and respected in Kansas, having made Netawaka his home for forty-one years. Was laid to rest in the Natawaka Cemetery. Services in charge of William Lewis. A quarter of the home town rendered valuable service in singing.

ELDRIDGE.—Susan Phillip Eldredge was born July 9, 1830, at Higham, Massachusetts, and died at the Saints' Home, December 1, 1910. She was married to Solomon Hindley in 1860, who died some years later. She moved to Saint Joseph, Missouri, in 1891, where for eleven years she made her home with her sister, Sr. John C. Gardner. She was a graduate of Derby Academy, and in her young days an artist of some note. She was firm in the faith and died, as she had lived, a true believer. Funeral sermon at Saints' Home, Lamoni, Iowa, December 4, 1910, was preached by Heman C. Smith.

HOLMES.—Melvin B. Holmes passed peacefully away to the paradise of God on Friday, January 6, 1911, at his home, Joy, Illinois. Born June 8, 1853, at Norridgewock, Somerset County, Maine. Baptized January 16, 1878, at Duncan, Illinois, by Elder T. W. Smith. Was ordained a teacher April 28, 1901, which position he held in the Joy Branch until his death. Married to Carrie May Epperly, May 7, 1877. To this union there were born five children. He is survived by his wife, two sons, Laurence and Glen, two daughters, Fern and Laura; also four brothers and one sister, besides a number of other relatives and friends. He held many positions both in town and county with credit to himself. He was an honorable man, a loving father, an affectionate husband, and well respected by all who knew him. There was a short service at the home, Tuesday morning, January 10. Afterwards, the remains were taken to the Buffalo Prairie church where the funeral services took place, in charge of Elder O. E. Sade. Elder C. E. Willey offered the prayer and Elder Joseph Arber preached the sermon to the large and attentive audience that had gathered to pay their last respects. Interment took place in the churchyard cemetery.

MESLE.—Catherine B., born June 16, 1850; baptized June 14, 1896; died December 26, 1910. Sister Mesle lost her husband before she became acquainted with the angel's message. She was the mother of five children, two girls and three boys, one of the boys preceding her in death. The other children survive to mourn. She was a faithful mother, and when that is said a greater eulogy could not be pronounced. She died in Niagara Falls, New York, and was buried from the church there. The sermon was preached by Elder H. O. Smith, December 29, 1910.

SCHOFF.—Frederick Schoff died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. John Loding, December 14, 1910, at Peck, Michigan. Born in Germany, March 28, 1846. Baptized June 5, 1892, at Cash, Michigan, by J. L. Bear. Married to Wilhelmina Stolp, March 28, 1865, who preceded him in death in 1909. He leaves two sons and one daughter; George and Richard Schoff, in Missouri, and Mrs. John Loding, in Michigan. Funeral was preached by Elder Frederick Gregory. Interment took place in Peck Cemetery.

The general excellence of The American Magazine is what appeals to the reader. Experts in the business say that no periodical now published is attracting more attention, or winning more enthusiastic approval, than The American Magazine. It is a publication which exhibits unusual energy, liveliness, candor, courage, and humor. No one who reads it can ever forget its distinctive qualities. It is as much of a "character" as exists anywhere—and a most intelligent and delightful "character," too.

One of the great achievements of The American Magazine is its contribution to national journalism through its important and authoritative fact-articles, now running, by Ida M. Tarbell, Ray Stannard Baker, A. J. Nock and other writers, all of whom are the ablest experts in the country in their special fields.

Another remarkable characteristic of The American Magazine is the quality of its fiction, plus the story quality that is to be found in many of its articles. By this is meant the fact that this particular periodical requires that many of its most important articles be told in story form. In this manner the pages of the whole magazine fairly teem with downright human interest. The facts are gathered and presented with the most scrupulous attention to truth, but in the presentation the art of story-telling is summoned, and the result is the finest quality of journalism that exists—that which both informs exactly and entertains wonderfully. Not many journalists of this rare double ability are strolling up and down the world, yet several of them are in the exclusive employ of The American Magazine.

Three great original departments have been created by The American Magazine—"Interesting People," "The Interpreter's House" and "The Pilgrim's Scrip." Any particular number of the magazine may contain a wonderful fiction story, or a beautiful picture, or a great article that will interest you more than these departments. And yet those famous departments form a great attraction in the periodical. They are always there—filled to the brim with ideas, emotions, and aspirations. There is a curious flavor in them—singularly new, pleasing and genuine.

On the whole The American Magazine is winning great favor because of its sound tone of real optimism—not silly, flat and fake optimism; but that optimism which is founded on the solid truth that you ought to do your job well wherever you are, and that if you do your job well you will get some sort of a reward for it here on earth—not necessarily money (which most of us foolishly use as the only yardstick of success), but perhaps an inner feeling of satisfaction which, if your skin is not too tough, may be transferred and exhibited in a gentle face—something decent to look at, and not calculated to scare all the affection out of those who come into daily contact with you.

This is a poor and inadequate statement which only partially covers the ground. It is only meant to be a sort of reflection on what seems to be the moving spirit back of The American Magazine. It is nothing but an impression which the writer feels after reading and enjoying The American Magazine for a year or more.

Justice.

In this world with its wild-whirling eddies and mad foam-oceans where men and nations perish as if without law, and judgment for an unjust thing is sternly delayed, dost thou think that there is, therefore, no justice? It is what the fool hath said in his heart. It is what the wise, in all times, were wise because they denied, and knew for ever not to be. I tell thee again there is nothing else but justice. One strong thing I find here below: the just thing, the true thing.

My friend, if thou hadst all the artillery of Woolwich trundling at thy back in support of an unjust thing, and infinite bonfires visibly waiting ahead of thee, to blaze centuries long for thy victory on behalf of it, I would advise thee to call halt, to fling down thy baton, and say, "In God's name, no!"

Thy "success"! What will thy success amount to? If the thing is unjust, thou hast not succeeded; no, not though bonfires blazed from North to South, and bells rang, and editors wrote leading articles, and the just thing lay trampled out of sight, to all mortal eyes an abolished and annihilated thing. Success? In a few years thou wilt be dead and dark; all cold, eyeless, deaf; no blaze of bonfires, ding-dong of bells or leading articles, visible or audible to thee again at all for ever. What kind of success is that?

—Thomas Carlyle.

The third installment of Dr. Arthur C. McGiffert's Martin Luther and his work, in the February Century, deals with Luther and "The awakening reformer" in the days following his Italian journey, his growing success as a preacher and teacher, the beginning of his attacks upon many abuses and excesses, and the widening of his horizon in his young manhood.

Professor Sheldon quotes some of the best known commentators of our times in refutation or extenuation of his arguments, and has arranged his material in so compact and logical a manner that it will serve admirably as a text-book.

"St. Nicholas" in 1911.

St. Nicholas will follow its recent articles on the making and flying of aeroplane models, with articles during 1911 on the development and progress of flying machines and with a stirring story of air adventure, "Andrew Hastings, Aviator."

Would Destroy Colleges.

SPRINGFIELD, Illinois, May 22.—R. T. Crane of the Crane Company, Chicago, has written a letter to the members of the Legislature regarding the University of Illinois. In it he admits that he has made "strong statements." The university authorities probably will agree with him. He gives it as an expression of his candid opinion that the State would be better off if it applied the torch to the university and to all institutions in the "higher institution business," which are being aided or supported by State funds.

President James of the university, when he was endeavoring to obtain increased appropriations from the Legislature for university purposes, wrote to a number of prominent and influential men asking them to write to the legislators, urging liberal treatment of the State institution.

A letter was sent to Mr. Crane, who has replied by advising legislators that, in his judgment, the university is useless. The letter which Mr. James drew from Mr. Crane by requesting him to help out in the campaign for increased funds in part follows:

EDUCATION IS PERNICIOUS.

"Instead of teaching young men to seek labor, they cause them to despise it, and the students leave the schools with the feeling that they are too good to work and are smart enough to make their living by their wits.

"Instead of appropriating funds for such institutions it would be a good deal better for the State to put a torch to them and burn them down, to go out of the "higher education" business and permit the boys to go back to their homes and assist in supporting their families instead of causing them a heavy expense.

"I am prepared even to go much farther than this, for I maintain that instead of being a benefit, such institutions as this are a positive curse, and are doing a vast amount of harm by demoralizing the youth of this country."—Special Dispatch to the Globe-Democrat.

Readers and students will alike welcome the robust discussion of modern social problems, together with the constructive social philosophy which it proclaims, which is to be found in Social Adjustment by Scott Nearing, to be published January 18. The past two decades have given birth to numerous social questions. Each one presents some peculiar phase; yet all are susceptible of classification. The value of the present book lies in the success with which the author has analyzed and coordinated these various aspects of present social phenomena.

Constructively the author shows that, (1) the vast majority of children are born normal, and are made abnormal, degenerate and diseased by their defective environment; (2) progress is impossible so long as society maintains the fatalistic view point which condemns men because of the sins of the fathers and is blind to the transgressions of the brothers and (3) that the new view of universal capacity, with the advantages of universal opportunity, will eventually secure social adjustment.

The concluding chapters on "Educational Remedies," "Legislative Remedies" and "The Methods of Adjustment" are strong and inspiring. They point to the necessity for the view of education, an education that will prepare for complete living.

Your Eyes.

The comparative value of eyesight and reading is set forth in a note, to which the Harpers have devoted a page in the new book Class Teaching and Management, by William Estabrook Chancellor. "Your eyes are worth more to you than any book. Your safety and your success in life depend on your eyes; therefore take care of them. Always hold your head up when you read. Hold your book fourteen inches from your face. Be sure that the light is clear and good. Never read in a bad light. Never read with the sun shining directly on the book. Never face the light in reading. Let the light come from behind or over your left shoulder. Avoid books or paper printed indistinctly or in small type. Rest your eyes by looking away from the book every few minutes. Cleanse your eyes night and morning with pure water." This advice is included in "Class Teaching and Management" as the recommendation of the committee of the Children's Welfare Association of Women Principals, New York, and the Advisory Board of Oculists.

"Terrific wind and electrical storms take place in the ocean of atmosphere of which the inhabitants of earth never have the slightest knowledge." So say English scientists who have sent weather balloons as high as ten miles. Since our weather bureau can not forecast those aerial storms, the bird-men who mount up must take great risks.

How to Use the Bible.

1. Study to know what for and to whom each book of the Bible was written.
2. Set apart at least fifteen minutes each day for studying it. Even this little will be grand in result.
3. Commit at least one verse to memory each day. In this way you will soon have your mind well stored with the precious truth.
4. Believe every word of the Bible, and not merely that which may seem reasonable, and which you can fully understand.
5. Do not be satisfied with a mere reading of the Sacred Word; but endeavor to fathom its deeper meaning.
6. Study how to use the Bible for the conversion and strengthening of others, and how to teach the great truths, especially if you occupy the responsible position of a teacher.
7. Learn to look on the Bible as a precious treasure, and to regard it in the light in which the palmist did, who considered it a "lamp to his feet and a light to his path;" "as sweeter than honey and the honeycomb," and whose earnest purpose was to "hide it in his heart" that he might not sin.

GOOD HEALTH FLOUR

has all the elements necessary to rebuild the body, Nitrate or muscle element; Phosphate or brain, nerve, bone, and tooth elements. While flour is only a carbonate, heat or fat. Many brands of the white flour on the market are adulterated with clay, gypsum, cockle, cotton seed, etc. Besides the bleaching process, with sulphur and acids, and to complete the white process they electrocute the flour, so it has not even a shadow of Life elements. The purpose and proper use of white flour is paste purposes, such as paper hanging, bill posters, shirt bosoms, book binding, etc. It retards digestion and a sure diet to produce sickness and a premature death.

Good Health Flour is only $1 per sack of 24½ pounds. Bread, breakfast food, pan-cakes, muffins, biscuits, etc., can only be fully appreciated by those that partake of it. Rebuild health and live on less than ten cents per day. 2tf

Who Was There That You Knew?

IN the shadowy ranks of those who marched to defeat or death or victory fifty years ago in the mighty conflict that convulsed this great nation, is there father or grandfather or uncle of yours? Would you like to see a photograph of him in that long ago day of his youth—a photograph that he never knew was taken? Perhaps we can show you one; and in any case, we can tell you a story, stranger than any detective fiction, of 3,500 priceless photographs that were lost and are found again.

3,500 Long Buried Photographs of the Civil War

THEY were taken by the greatest photographer in the United States of that day; they were bought by the United States Government for $30,000; they were buried in the War Department for 50 years—they are buried there still. But a duplicate set was kept by the photographer—who died poor and broken down; that duplicate set was knocked from a pillar to post for nearly 50 years, until it was discovered by a New England collector. J. Pierpont Morgan tried to secure the collection—Ex-President Garfield and General Benjamin F. Butler said it was worth $150,000—yet with the help of the Review or Reviews, the entire collection has been gathered into 10 great volumes and is placed within your reach at less than the value of one of the photographs. It is the one accurate, impartial history of the Civil War—for the camera cannot lie. It tells the story of the War you never heard before. Taken under protection of the Secret Service, these photographs bring to light thousands of little-known phases of the war; they penetrate to strange places and record strange things.

Webster's NEW INTERNATIONAL Dictionary, (G. & C. Merriam Co., Springfield, Mass.) surpasses the old International as much as that book exceeded its predecessor. On the old foundation a new superstructure has been built. The reconstruction has been carried on through many years by a large force of trained workers, under the supervision of Dr. W. T. Harris, former United States Commissioner of Education, and reinforced by many eminent specialists. The definitions have been rearranged and amplified. The number of terms defined has been more than doubled. The etymology, synonyms, pronunciation, have received unsparing scholarly labor. The language of English literature for over seven centuries, the terminology of the arts and sciences, and the every-day speech of street, shop, and household, are presented with fullness and clearness. In size of vocabulary, in richness of general information, and in convenience of consultation, the book sets a new mark in lexicography.

CHURCH BUILDING.

Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness.—Matthew 6: 38.

The instruction of the Master, quoted above, as it appears in the Inspired Version contains a fine thought not found in the King James Translation.

The King James Version conveys the idea of seeking only, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God"; the Inspired Version presents the idea of building, "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God."

Christ was essentially a builder, and not an iconoclast. True, a part of his mission, according to John, was to destroy the works of the Devil; but his great work primarily was to build the kingdom. His attack upon other institutions was secondary and subsidiary, and was made that he might clear the ground for nobler structures.

The message of Christ was affirmative in nature. He spoke in negative terms on occasion, as when he warned his disciples to beware of the leaven of the Pharisees. But this also was subsidiary. His message was affirmative. The strong note of affirmation runs through all his preaching: "Upon this rock I will build my church"; "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved"; "These signs shall follow."

His commission to his followers partakes of the nature of his own work: "Seek ye first to build up"; "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations." Our work is to teach the people and to build up the church. Under certain conditions we may find it necessary to attack institutions of men or to defend against their attack, and we are always required to oppose evil and corruption, but if we habitually occupy the most of our time and dissipate our force in attacks upon others we are acting outside of our commission and not in harmony with the work and nature of our Lord and Master. We must affirm. We must build.

There are those who have rejected the truth and make it their business to oppose us, men who are dishonest in character and whose methods correctly represent their character, and it may be necessary at times to expose and denounce these men in no uncertain terms, just as Christ did in his day. This should be done without passion and in words sufficiently moderate to be well within the realm of truth.

There are multitudes of others whose opposition springs from a misunderstanding, and when it becomes necessary to negate and if possible uproot errors existing in the minds of such hearers, we should go about the work with care and consideration. Undue harshness and lack of courtesy, not to mention Christian charity, may enrage those whom we would teach, and cause them, together with interested spectators, to turn permanently against our message. On this subject a modern writer makes a statement which is at least partly true:

It is not courage, but lack of sense, which usually gets preachers into trouble. Laymen are as a rule not unwilling to listen to new conceptions which have a show of reasonableness; but the man who tears to pieces their old truth with a chuckle and stamps upon it with a whoop is sure to be resisted. It is not in human nature to relish reiterated and gloating declarations that nearly all one's old beliefs are both false and silly.

The work of preaching the gospel to nonmembers and converting them to the church is only a part of the work of building the church. Incoming members represent new material at hand to be worked over, shaped, polished, and fitted into the structure as divinity shall direct. Though much of this work may fall to the hand of the pastor, and others of the ministry whose particular calling is to the church, yet it is true here, as it is also of the missionary work, that all are laborers together with God.

Personal vanities, preferences, policies, and whims should be held secondary to the welfare of the church, and subject to the overruling of the assembly of the Saints, as all shall be led by the Spirit of God. Each must live, labor, and stand where he can accomplish the most good in the work of building the church in his particular locality or in the world at large, whether it be in obscurity or in the lime light. Of the work of the ministry in this particular Charles E. Jefferson says:

The most pious of ministers may become one of the most dangerous and wicked of men if he writes himself large and the church small. Men who tear churches to pieces deserve to be cast out with the publicans and heathen.

These are strong words, yet we do not consider them too strong. That which is said of the minister will apply to a member under similar conditions. The Saint who persists in a course of conduct, or clings to a transgression, or rides a hobby, or fights for a fancied right, to the damage and disruption of his church, is not heeding the injunction to first build up, and he is dangerous in proportion to his ability and influence.

The character qualities needed by one who would assist in building are thus set forth in latter day revelation:

Behold, I speak unto you, and also to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish this work; and no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care.—Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4.

Love, faith, hope, charity, humility, and temperance qualify one to build. They affirm; they urge to action; they attract others; they cement the brotherhood. The opposite qualities, pride, dislike, skepticism, pessimism, intemperance, and the acid temperament disqualify men and women as builders. Skepticism denies; pessimism stifles energy ere it springs to action; pride, arrogance, ambition, unkindness, estrange and disrupt the brotherhood. There is no pleasure in such work. God is against it. But the man who makes it his first care to build up the kingdom of God will be happy even under adverse conditions. He is a collaborator with God. Things are bound to come out right in the end. All the forces of good in the broad universe work with him. God is for him and who can be against him.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

AN INDIAN POET.

We are in receipt of a book of poems written by Alexander Lawrence Posey. This work has a peculiar interest, as the author was a Creek Indian. The book is published by Crane and Company, Topeka, Kansas, cloth binding $1.00. No one of the poems is inferior; some of them are of considerable merit. Those of racial interest are strongest. We here reproduce his "Ode to Sequoyah," the famous Cherokee who invented the Cherokee alphabet.

The names of Waitie and Boudinot—
The valiant warrior and gifted sage—
And other Cherokees, may be forgot,
But thy name shall descend to every age;
The mysteries enshrouding Cadmus' name
Can not obscure thy claim to fame.

The people's language can not perish—nay,
When from the face of this great continent
Inevitable doom hath swept away
The last memorial—the last fragment
Of tribes,—some scholar learned shall pore
Upon thy letters, seeking ancient lore.

Some bard shall lift a voice in praise of thee,
In moving numbers tell the world how men

Scoffed thee, hissed thee, charged with lunacy!
And who could not give 'nough honor when
At length, in spite of jeers, of want and need,
Thy genius shaped a dream into a deed.

By cloud-capped summits in the boundless west,
Or mighty river rolling to the sea,
Where'er thy footsteps led thee on that quest,
Unknown, rest thee, illustrious Cherokee!

Perhaps the most striking and forceful poem is the one entitled, "Capture and imprisonment of Crazy Snake." Crazy Snake (Chitto Harjo) was the leader of a band of Creeks who fought for the preservation of ancient tribal rights.

Down with him! chain him! bind him fast!
Slam to the iron door and turn the key!
The one true Creek, perhaps the last
To dare declare, "You have wronged me!"
Defiant, stoical, silent,
Suffers imprisonment!

Such coarse black hair! such eagle eye!
Such stately mien!—how arrow-straight!
Such will! such courage to defy
The powerful makers of his fate!
A traitor, outlaw,—what you will,
He is the noble red man still.

Condemn him and his kind to shame!
I bow to him, exalt his name!

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The HERALD Editors desire to secure a copy of Autumn Leaves for July, 1899. Anyone having this number to spare will confer a great favor upon the editors if they will forward it at once.

It will be remembered that following the publication of an article in defense of Socialism, the HERALD Editors stated that they would publish the best article on the weakness of Socialism from a Latter Day Saint standpoint to be received prior to January 1. The article written by Sr. Harriet M. Smith, of Santa Ana, California, is considered the best of those received and will be published in the near future.

Elder George Derry, member of the Quorum of High Priests, passed away at his home in Lamoni, Iowa, January 26. He was one of a group of old-time Saints, composed of Brn. George Derry, Samuel Ackerly, Stephen Woods, John Traxler, and Louis Gaulter, and one or two others, who were quite intimate friends and formed a well known part of the community at Lamoni. They were all men of good character. Of those named Brother Gaulter, now ninety-three years of age, is the sole survivor.

Elder Gomer T. Griffiths writes from Cairo under date of January 5. He says: "Well, here I am in Egypt again. I came with Sister Floyd per her request to administer to her son, who is sick. I return to Syria, and Palestine to-morrow. I am of the opinion that the prospects are much brighter for the work of the Lord in Jerusalem than when I wrote you last. The editor (a Mr. Feingold) of the Truth is a friend indeed. I will write you full details in my next letter. I left Jerusalem ten days ago. I am enjoying the best of health. I was greatly pleased to learn that the Presidency consented to leave Brother Pitt in Jerusalem. He will do a good work there and his wife will be a good help to him.

Lost in the fog and foundering at sea under a heavy cargo of bilge water, R. B. Neal sends the following C. Q. D. wireless to the Christian Standard:

"Mormonism has torn our Sunday school all to pieces, also the church, taking about twelve of our members.—W. M. Westcott, Lagonda, Missouri.

"This is a state of things that could hardly have come about had there been shepherds of the flock competent to instruct the people and contend for the faith. Lacking this, a Bible school or church is at the mercy of false teachers. The next best thing is suggested by the following letter:

"A POSTAGE STAMP SHOWER.

"Frank E. Ferris, Baldwin, Georgia, writes: 'You are certainly giving Mormonism some hard knocks. Keep up the fight. I wish I had a thousand dollars to give you to help along the good work.'

"I certainly echo heartily that wish. I trust that, by giving it expression through the Standard, it may kindle a like desire on the part of some one who can send in the thousand, or in the many who can send in from a dime to ten dollars.

"I have on my shelves tens of thousands of tracts and leaflets and papers ready to scatter. They ought to be out at work now in hotly contested fields. Let my readers send in a shower of postage stamps—one-cent stamps—and I'll swell the mail sacks of Uncle Sam with anti-Mormon ammunition for the next month or six weeks that will turn the tide of battle on many a hard fought field.—R. B. Neal, Pikeville, Kentucky."

This is refreshing. The next best thing to a

"Christian" shepherd of the flock is a postage stamp shower. How about these appeals for finances? Who knows how much is collected? Who knows how much is expended for purposes for which it was solicited? The church renders an account of all money collected and expended. Do her opponents do as well? Those who start out to fight "Mormonism" should be sure that they are not feeding private bank accounts.

The Advertiser, London, Ontario, January 23, contains a synopsis of an excellent sermon by Elder F. A. Smith on the subject of practical religion. The speaker took the position that the best way to discourage men from giving their time and substance to lodges, orders, and societies, is for the church to do the work that Christ gave it to do. He argued for constructive work in the church as of more value than destructive work outside the church. We will reprint the synopsis next week.

The Nawoo Rustler, January 24, contains a very complimentary review of the recent magazine number of the HERALD, especially commending the reminiscences of Pres. Joseph Smith.

What is called "our newest peace advocate," the battle ship Arkansas, launched on January 14, is the largest and most heavily armed war ship Uncle Sam has ever ordered.

The London Daily Telegraph, commenting on the lamentable "battle of Stepney," declares that England has become "the happy hunting ground of the criminal classes of the Continent" because of "the ridiculous laxity with which the Aliens Act has been administered"; thus making of England "a manufactory of criminal weapons and an arsenal for storing them." Other papers think this statement is too sweeping for the reason that many of the so-called banished criminals of the Continent are simply political refugees, and men of republican tendencies. The London Daily News best characterizes this view when it says: "This country has little enough to regret, and very much to be proud of and thankful for, in its history as a shelter for political refugees."

There are one hundred thousand Mohammedans in Brousa, the ancient Moslem capital, and 95 per cent of them go regularly to the mosque for prayer. One eminent traveler, Cornelius H. Patton, who has been around the world observing, writing to The Congregationalist and Christian World, of Boston, says: "Converting the world does not look so easy over here (Brousa) as it does in a layman's convention." While he is sure that the Mohammedan creed is so false and degrading that "it must crumble into extinction under the rays of modern enlightenment," yet the magic hold which the external notions of that creed has upon its devotees will not be so easily broken. He remarks, "Think of the faithfulness of the faithful, when they can not attend public worship, of their plumping down anywhere—on the decks of ships, in railroad cars, in market places, and going through their 'holy gymnastics.' There is a strange power in this religion."

In the Iowa Register and Leader for January 27, 1911, there appears a two-column interview with Elder J. W. Peterson, lately appointed to the Des Moines District. The caption, "Not all romance in the South Seas," was amply justified by the very entertaining and instructive manner in which the "returned missionary" tells the reporter of the experiences of himself and wife in the South Sea Islands Mission, for "three long, long years," which he declares, "averaged about fifteen ordinary years apiece."

The Rev. Edward Eells, Presbyterian minister of Worcester, Massachusetts, wrote a book entitled, A Mission to Hell, because he was interested in some of the people who seemed to be going there, and he couldn't get it out of his head that he ought to be as deeply concerned to save people from erroneous ways in eternity as he had been to save them in time. He could not see why God would not also be interested. The book presents a story of a Presbyterian minister who died and went to heaven; but not finding his brother there, he went to the lower regions in search, and then discovered there was hope of salvation from hell. Returning to heaven, he gathered a company of angels who returned to hell with him and conducted a religious revival. The more he reads the Bible, the more, he says, he finds a basis for his story.

Just after last Christmas, the Boston Presbytery met with closed doors and tried Reverend Eells for heresy. The Boston Globe, from which we take our account, says: "Nothing is known of what happened except what little that certain members were willing to divulge afterward. It is certain, however, that not a single harsh word was spoken at that secret meeting against either Mr. Eells or his book, and he came forth from the trial a member of the Presbytery in as good standing as when he entered. This action was to many very surprising, as the very keynote to Presbyterian orthodox doctrine is eternal punishment for those that are not saved before death."

Press dispatches tell the story of two Indian mothers, who having been caught in a blizzard while away from the South Dakota reservation which was their home, and unable to find their way, prepared for the tragic end whose coming their instinct could read in the fury of the storm. Each one had a babe. Taking the blankets from about their bodies they wrapped them tenderly about their offspring and then with that stoic resignation so characteristic of their race, lay down to await the end. The next day the two Indian mothers were found—one dead and the other so nearly frozen that death shortly afterward relieved her suffering. The two Indian babes were warm and unharmed.—Des Moines Capital.

A little booklet has been issued recently by the United Presbyterians of the State in which the subject of family worship and its decline is canvassed in a way to interest the layman.

At the meeting of the annual synod a year ago it was thought that something ought to be done and a committee was appointed, consisting of Henry Wallace, W. C. Williamson, and H. T. Jackson, all men of standing in the church. It is the report of this committee that has been published for widespread distribution.

"It is a matter of common knowledge that the mode of family worship practiced by our forefathers is no longer in general use," says this committee; "that when family worship is observed it is less frequent and in a form greatly abbreviated. This is true not only in the United Presbyterian churches, but in other Presbyterian churches as well, not only in the United States, but in other Christian lands also. In fact, we have reason to believe that it is much more commonly observed among converts from heathendom than among those who, as well as their fathers before them, were rocked and cradled to the songs of Zion."—Exchange.

As one church after another publishes the statistics of its growth for 1910, food for very serious thought is heaped up before American churchmen.

Recently the year book of the Methodist Episcopal Church disclosed that, though in 1910 it had maintained more than 21,000 congregations and an army of 19,420 ministers, and had raised the enormous sum of nearly $50,000,000 for its work, it had increased its membership in the year only 63,000—three for every congregation.

Now comes the Presbyterian disclosing a similar situation. In 1910 there were 10,011 churches and 9,073 ministers and $22,936,000 was expended for church purposes, yet the membership of the Presbyterian Church was increased only 17,614 over 1909, a gain of less than 1.4 per cent. In 1910 this church found itself with a smaller aggregate membership than it had in 1907.

In Iowa the Congregational Church in 1910 had only about 1,100 more members than it did in 1900, and in some of the years of the decade just past there were net losses instead of even slight gains.

The Straight Road

THE WAY OF HOLINESS.

He who undertakes to explore God's law (the way of righteousness, the religion of Jesus Christ,) without roads or guides, will find himself bewildered by contradictions, perplexed with a multiplicity of squirrel tracks and a scarcity of main roads.

THE GREAT CONTRADICTIONS.

These are the squirrel tracks, and of them there is no end. Of main roads there is but one; branches there are none. Its beginning was and its ending will be with God the Eternal Father, Jesus Christ his Son, the "First and the last," the "Author and Finisher of our faith." It is called by the Prophet Isaiah, "The way of holiness"; by the Master, "The narrow way."

The honest explorer soon discovers that all men are finite, and infallible, hence imperfect; that the teachings of man are not always trustworthy; but that God is infinite, infallible, perfect; his promises as sure as the course of nature; and that he can only accept work and methods of work which harmonize with him. He finds that very much has been invented, believed, and taught by man that is contradictory to God's way, hence can not be acceptable to him and should be rejected by all honest men.

CONSCIENTIOUSNESS NOT SUFFICIENT.

Some say that it makes no difference what one believes if one is only honest and sincere. That would imply that God has given no definite rule of faith, no definite system of truth; or if he has given positive commands, it matters not to him whether we obey them or not.

"It seems to me that it is worth while to stop here for a moment incidentally to note how easy a thing it is for a man to be guilty of conscientious error and crime. It is no defense of a man's conduct to say that he is conscientiously satisfied with what he did. I suppose that most bad things have been done in all good conscience, and that most of the sins that we commit to-day we commit with a perfectly clean conscience. There is such a thing as a moral color-blindness. I was visiting a little while ago one of our well known girls' schools, and had a discussion with one of the teachers, who said that she thought it did not make so much difference what a pupil believed or did, provided only she was conscientious in her belief and conduct. I told her that it must be quite easy to go to school to her if it did not matter whether you answered right or not, if only you were conscientiously honest in what you said. She might get two absolutely contrary answers to a question and mark each one of them perfect. The whole foundations of the moral universe fall out from beneath the man or woman who will take that view of it; that there is not really any objective standard of right or wrong at all; that everything hinges on just how a person feels about it, and if they only feel comfortable over the thing it is all right.—ROBERT E. SPEER."

The statement made by Mr. Speer illustrates the point so fully, and meets with my approval so well, I was tempted to use so much of his ideas as are contained in the quotation. Evidently, he is of the same opinion as the writer, that the greatest of all teachers, he before whom we will have to stand in the great day of examination and judgment, will expect us to answer his questions correctly, and that it will make a difference with him whether we answer right or wrong, whether we have done good or whether we did that that was evil. We should not deceive ourselves in imagining that we will hear the words: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," "and do not the things which I say."—Luke 6: 46.

God, who is perfect and a friend to creation, must give them laws which, like himself, must be perfect and unchangeable; such as not only can be heard and obeyed by all, but administered according to system or order. Otherwise, confusion must result, which is contrary to the works of the wise being.

TESTIMONY OF CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

The only true Christian method throughout is the practical method of answering the question, What must I do to be saved? Its answer is in Christian experience. It says to every man, You can test the reality and power of Christ practically. Christian experience transfers the whole problem of Christian evidence to the sphere of practical life. But Christ's place in Christian experience is the supreme matter. The spiritually regenerated and morally transformed man proves the divinity of Christ, proves his power in religious experience for the following reasons:

First of all, because no man has moral resources to transform himself. The morally transformed life proves the divinity of Christ, also because when the sinner turns to the Christ, he gets the response. A sense of moral power comes with Christian experience. The moral heights lift themselves up to the very heavens. The spiritual horizon rises to the view point from which God and Christ see things. It is true that in the Christian experience, they at first "see through a glass darkly"; but as they come out into the full blaze of spiritual day the promise is that they shall see face to face and know even as they are known. There is not a grace or virtue that Christ can not produce in human character.

Thus, the Christ way becomes final for the man: final for his reason, for his conscience, for his will, for his intellect; and most of all, final for his faith, his hope, his love, and his aspiration. Nothing higher can be conceived. "But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." He becomes the judge and critic of other religious systems than the Christian, discerning that their unworkableness is due to their lack of Christ.

"Whensoever men have attempted to construct schemes of salvation, they have not sought the origin of these schemes in God but in themselves. Human schemes have always been plans by which men might be able to save themselves, with such salvation as they have supposed themselves to need—not always a salvation from sin and death; more frequently a salvation from material poverty, bodily discomfort, mental ignorance and generally temporal needs. . . .

"If there is one thing more characteristic of man's works than another, it is imperfection. Magnificent as some of men's inventions have been, few of them are absolutely free from defects, and those that are freest have been brought to their present state of excellence only by slow and short stages and after repeated modifications and improvements—witness the printing press, the steam engine, telegraphy, electrical power and lighting, musical instruments, aeroplanes, etc. And what is more, however perfect any human invention may appear to be at the present moment, there is no guarantee that it will not be in time superseded by something more adapted to the end it has in view.

"The case, however, is different with God's works which, like himself, are all perfect; and if it shall turn out on examination that the Christian system is perfectly adapted to the end it has in view, viz, salvation, and has never needed to be changed, modified or improved, then the inference will be unavoidable that it is God's work and not man's, and as a consequence not a fiction but a fact, not a fable but truth."—Rev. Thomas Whitlaw, M. A., D. D.

We have used the above remarks of Mr. Whitlaw, believing them to be a fitting close for this article.

A FEW THOUGHTS ON THE ORDER OF ENOCH.

BY RODERICK MAY, BISHOP OF INDEPENDENCE STAKE.

God being the Creator of all things, he owns all things. He has also created all the children of men. Being infinite in wisdom he has the right to dictate to and to advise his children for their good and his glory. All things on earth were created for the use of man. We are told in Genesis 1:18 that he pronounced it all very good, and gave man dominion over it all; and in Psalm 115:16 it is said that God gave the earth to the children of men. He knew then the demands that would be made upon this earth for the maintenance of his children; he foreknew the vast multitude of people who would live upon the earth, for he saw the end from the beginning. At the present time it is estimated that we have about one and one fourth billions people upon the earth. Notwithstanding this vast multitude to maintain he said to the church in 1831, Doctrine and Covenants 101:2, "The earth is full, and there is enough and to spare."

It is said that the earth lieth in sin; and this, we believe, is because men have taken advantage of the abundance which God created, and hoarded up to themselves more than they needed. The Lord called this church out of darkness and out of obscurity, that his people might be the light of the world, a city set upon a hill, that all people upon the earth might know the justice of him who created man and all things that are upon the earth and that it was his will and is now his will, that all men should be equal before him. He has decreed to use his people as an example to the world, that the world may in time be governed according to the gospel law; that the world may know of a truth that the gospel is again restored; that the justice of God may be known among all men; and that men on this earth may glorify God and respect him as their Creator, the owner of the earth, the loving Father of all the race, without respect of persons.

In Doctrine and Covenants 101:2 we are told that though God created all things and made enough for all, he gave unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves; that if man took to himself of the abundance which God made for the use of all, by reason of which he brought distress and want and hardship to any, even one, or many, and would not impart his portion according to the law of the gospel, he should, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.

It would seem, according to the revelations given to us in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, that the Lord demands that the condition which now exists in the world shall not obtain among his people, for it is not of God; and the instructions read: "Behold, this is the way, that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my saints: that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:2; for, as already stated, the earth is full, and "there is enough and to spare."

When a man presents himself to the Presiding Bishop or any bishop of the church, makes an inventory, a full consecration according to section 42, paragraph 9, and has more property than he needs; has a part reserved or allotted to him by the Bishop for his business wants and needs, and the maintenance of himself and family, I believe he should be made a steward over that part as his own property. But in placing a man a steward over "his own property," he must recognize that it is all God's property, and that he is a steward under God, as found in Doctrine and Covenants 101:10, where the Lord says, "All these properties are mine, or else your faith is vain, and ye are found hypocrites, and the covenants which ye have made unto me are broken." According to this statement, every man who enters into the Order of Enoch and makes a covenant with God, all that he has as his stewardship belongs to God, whether he had the full amount of his stewardship before he presented himself to the Bishop, or "that which he has received by consecration." (Doctrine and Covenants 42:9, or storehouse.)

Every man will have his individuality, and have a free will right to his own property. All men have a God-given privilege to do as they please with the means that honestly come into their hands; but it is pleasing to God that men should comply with his laws in temporal things as well as in spiritual things, for their own good. It is a matter of spiritually educated conscience according to the principles of the gospel, and is left to the free agency of man as to whether he will comply with this or any other law of God or not. Without this agency he could not be accountable when he stands before God in the day of judgment.

However, I believe that when a stewardship or inheritance is given from the storehouse by the bishop or the order, it should not be given in fee simple until the party receiving has proved himself sufficiently worthy, or until he has made sufficient gain to purchase the amount of his stewardship, thus giving him an opportunity to become equal with his brother. But whether a man is made a steward over his own property, or the property given him from the storehouse, each one is required to cast his gain, over his just wants and needs, into the storehouse, and no one is to call that his own. It is the common property of the order or the church, as the case may be. Doctrine and Covenants 101:12; also 42:14.

WHAT IS STEWARDSHIP?

Stewardship, as I understand it, means that of which a man has been placed in charge, or of which he has been made superintendent, or management of the affairs of another in state or household; whether of temporal or spiritual position in the church of God.

In Scotland, an officer appointed by the king over special land belonging to the crown.

In England, lord high steward, one of the ancient great officers of state, the greatest under the crown.—Universal Dictionary, vol. 4, p. 4456.

And Abram said, Lord God, what wilt thou give me, seeing I go childless, and the steward of my house is this Eliezer of Damascus?—Genesis 15:2.

For a bishop must be blameless, as the steward of God.—Titus 1:7.

Let a man so account of us as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God. Moreover it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful.—1 Corinthians 4:1, 2.

As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God.—1 Peter 4:10.

WHO MAY APPOINT STEWARDSHIPS?

The statement made in Doctrine and Covenants section 101, paragraph 2, "I give unto you that you shall organize yourselves and appoint every man his stewardship." If this was the only statement made in the whole law with reference to the appointment of stewardships, it might be construed to mean that the Order of Enoch should appoint the stewardships; but it is like many other statements and directions given in the scriptures and revelations. In Doctrine and Covenants 35:1, 2, Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon were commanded to ordain as many as would come before them and to send them forth into all nations to preach the gospel. And again in paragraph 3 it says that "Every man which will embrace it [this gospel] with singleness of heart, may be ordained and sent forth, even as I have spoken." If we took this passage alone, it might mean a wholesale ordination of all men who would obey the gospel, and that by those two men. But this would be out of harmony with Doctrine and Covenants 104:30, where it says: "It is the duty of the twelve, also, to ordain and set in order all the other officers of the church." But there is harmony in the instructions when we understand that both are linked consistently with each other. Again in Doctrine and Covenants 104:8 it says that a bishop is to be set apart and ordained under the hands of the Presidency. Can the Twelve ordain a bishop? The Lord says that the Twelve are to ordain and set in order all the officers of the church. The proper conclusion is that in the ordaining of all the officers in the church, the Presidency and Twelve have that duty to perform according to the necessity of each case.

And so it is with the appointing of stewardships as found in Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8, 9.

The bishop seems to be the chief figure in the appointment of stewardships, and I believe he should be. The individual comes to the bishop and his counselors, laying his all before them. An agreement is entered into between the bishop and the individual, and the bishop is the proper one to know and to understand how much are the wants and needs of that individual. If they can not agree, they can refer it to the high council.

When his stewardship is allotted to him, he should get a certificate referring him to the order. The order would act upon each individual case as it came before them, and in many cases it might be necessary to refer it to the Presidency, as the chief authorities of the church, for their counsel and approval, which would make the appointment of stewardships in harmony with every point in the law. It is proper also that the Presidency be the chief counselors in all church official acts. It is my opinion that there will be many difficult cases come up in the appointment of stewardships; that it will be necessary to counsel with the Presidency and probably the high council and other officers of the church, in giving and settling stewardships. It may be the same in appointing inheritances.

STEWARDSHIPS.

Thus we see when a man presents himself to the bishop in order to comply with the temporal law in its fullness, it means a complete consecration of all that he has, little or much. The bishop looks over his inventory; and if the man has more than he needs for himself and his family, he consecrates this surplus to the Lord's storehouse, according to the law as found in Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8, and 106. His necessities are reserved to him, his home or inheritance, and also he is made a steward over his allotted portion of his own property. It is his. In my opinion this is right. If he left the church or if he were expelled, he would take his own allotted property (stewardship) with him, which is also right; that neither he nor his family might suffer. Any other rule is not legal according to the law of the church or the laws of the land. In support of this I quote:

We do not believe that any religious society has authority to try men on the right of property or life, to take from them this world's goods, or put them in jeopardy either life or limb.—Doctrine and Covenants 112: 10; and also 98: 10, the latter part.

But when a man consecrates property or money to the church of his own free will, it can not be taken from the church (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9); for the Lord directs that it should be given "with a covenant and a deed which can not be broken"

(Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8). All things shall be made sure according to the laws of the land. All this appropriation of money and property is for the benefit of the church and the poor, and the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth. No man could be engaged in a greater or nobler cause in this world.

There is scarcely a paper we pick up nowadays, but we read that worthy and benevolent institutions are being established for the benefit of the poor and the uplifting of humanity. The spirit of the cause of Zion is permeating the minds of the best people of the world, making it easier for us to do our work as a church. Our work is more perfect than theirs; it is a part of the perfect law of the gospel; and if we have received the Spirit of the gospel it should be much easier for us to perform our work than it is for the people of the world.

When a man is given his stewardship and inheritance, he is to receive according to his wants and needs, equal with his fellow-brother, if the conditions are the same. If one man has more business ability than another, it should be recognized, and encouraged to its fullest capacity. He should be furnished means to the extent of his business wants, but the means which he receives over his own allotted stewardship belong to the order. He has them intrusted to his care only for the benefit of the order. It is not his own property, nor is any part of it, nor is the gain from it, more than he needs. The man who has less ability and may need more than his allotted stewardship, should be accorded the same privilege, according to his ability. In this way equality is maintained in giving stewardships, and will remove some objections in the minds of many.

The indolent and the idler shall have neither part nor lot in the matter. If any man is assisted he must prove himself "for he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garment of the laborer."—Doctrine and Covenants, 42: 12. "And the idler shall not have place in the church, except he repents and mends his ways."—Doctrine and Covenants 75: 5. If he makes more in his stewardship than he needs, he should pay the tenth to the church, and the balance into the storehouse. (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 10, 14.) This law is also found in Doctrine and Covenants 70: 2, and none are exempt. "And behold none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God."—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 1, 2, 3.

It does appear to me, from the reading of the revelations given to the church in this connection, that the man who violates this law does it at the risk of his eternal inheritance in the kingdom of God.

For it is expedient that I, the Lord, should make every man accountable as stewards over earthly blessings, which I have made and prepared for my creatures.—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

And whether he receives his stewardship from a portion of his own property, or from the storehouse, it is all the Lord's; every man must acknowledge it as belonging to God.

And again, a commandment I give unto you concerning your stewardship which I have appointed unto you; behold, all these properties are mine, or else your faith is vain, and ye are found hypocrites, and the covenants which ye have made unto me are broken.—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 10.

However, he is to act for himself and by himself and do business as for himself; not for self over his needs, but to the glory of God and for the benefit and uplifting of the poor to an equal opportunity like unto himself. Every man is a steward over whatever department of the church he may be called to. He must improve upon his talent in whatever stewardship or position he may fill, and must account to God for such position.

EQUALITY.

Stewardship also means equality. What is equality? It means that golden rule, the rule set down by the divine Master; a rule of righteousness and justice to be observed between man and man under gospel law. "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets." This is the order of God. This is the Order of Enoch.

Equality must be observed or our work will be a failure. All men must be on the same terms, enjoying equal rights and benefits. To love our neighbor as we love self is perhaps the hardest lesson that Christ taught us; but if we refuse this lesson it shows that our fidelity to Christ is not perfect. The letter killeth, but the Spirit maketh alive; and if we are willing to do as our Master has directed, the Holy Spirit will melt away all our earthly objections to his laws and blend our very soul and being into his, and make us live members in Christ to his glory.

God never intended to establish an aristocracy in his church. One of the favored promises of God to the people of the world in the bringing forth of the Book of Mormon is found in Isaiah 29: 19: "The meek also shall increase their joy in the Lord, and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel." When this message came to the world, and the church was established, the Lord said, Doctrine and Covenants 51: 2, "And let every man deal honestly, and be alike among this people, and receive alike that ye may be one, even as I have commanded you." And to Edward Partridge, the bishop of the church, God commanded, "Appoint unto this people their portion, every man equal according to their families, according to their circumstances, and their wants and needs."—Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1. Every time the Lord has spoken to his church on the Order of Enoch, he has not failed to remember the promise made to the Prophet Isaiah, "The poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel." We should not forget the statement made by the mother of the Prophet Samuel, 2 Samuel 2: 7, 8:

The Lord maketh poor, and maketh rich; he bringeth low, and lifteth up. He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory.

When the Lord doeth this, the man of worth will be the one who serves God according to the gospel law, "for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth."—Luke 12: 15. Often we find the statement of the Scripture fulfilled in our time where it says, "The rich man is wise in his own conceit."—Proverbs 28: 11. Some of them think they do not need God's counsel in directing them in temporal affairs, and want to be a law unto themselves. They oppress the poor. (James 2: 6.) The Lord said he would punish all that would oppress the poor (Jeremiah 30: 20), and would consume them out of the land (Isaiah 16: 4). The oppression is so great even now that the Lord said in Doctrine and Covenants 38: 4,

For I have heard your prayers, and the poor have complained before me, and the rich have I made, and all flesh is mine, and I am no respecter of persons. And I have made the earth rich, and behold, it is my footstool.

The people of the old church forgot the equality or union required by the laws of the gospel, the celestial kingdom, and were driven out of the land of Zion. They did not learn obedience in the things that God required of their hands, and finally the church was rejected as a church.—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 1. Now we have asked the Lord for revelations to direct us in temporal matters, and he has directed us to organize ourselves as he did the church in 1831. We are required to be united and equal according to the laws of the celestial kingdom; otherwise we will be cut off. No, God does not propose to establish an aristocratic church until he comes whose right it is to reign, nor an aristocracy among his people, and he has said, "If ye are not one ye are not mine."

This church will never make any headway in the world until we have demonstrated to the world that we are indeed the children of God, fulfilling the royal law; that we are willing to follow our divine Master; that our mission in the world is to do good to all mankind and lift them up to that equality required by the gospel law as given to us in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the revelations to the church, governing our responsibility as members of the church and the order; that our chief object ever will be the establishment of the Zion of God in the way he intended. He will not permit us to build it up by the rules and selfish business principles of the world, by which the rich are made richer and the poor are held in servitude, but by establishing this people on a cooperative plan, everyone loving his neighbor as himself, and working with an eye single to the glory of God.

It is necessary to organize in accordance with state laws, as a business corporation; otherwise, we could not do business. But the spirit and intent must be cooperation, where the business man of ability will use his talents for the benefit of the whole. If he is a true servant of God his heart will be made glad, and the poor will rejoice, each one receiving according to his several wants and needs, and no more. He does not need any more. Thus shall the elder in the missionary field, the business man and the manual laborer all work together to accomplish the designs and purposes of God in the establishment of the Order of Enoch, which means equality.

UNITY, COOPERATION, AND EQUALITY.

BY ELDER COLUMBUS SCOTT.

UNITY.

Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.—John 17: 20, 21.

Father, I pray not for the world, but for those whom thou hast given me out of the world, because of their faith, that they may be purified in me, that I may be in them as thou, Father, art in me, that we may be one, that I may be glorified in them.—3 Nephi 9: 30.

And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them; and Enoch continued his preaching in righteousness unto the people of God.—Doctrine and Covenants 36: 2.

I say unto you, Be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine.—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 6.

If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord.—1 Corinthians 14: 37.

No great enterprise, or institution can be inaugurated, developed, and carried to a successful culmination, in any world without unity on the part of all engaged; and that enterprise, or institution be right. These two principles must exist in order to succeed. The salvation of man is no exception to this premise. Illustrations of this mighty truth may be found at the tower of Babel, the kingdom of Israel, and the church of nineteen hundred years ago. In the accomplishment of God's purpose in building up the kingdom, and the redemption and building up of Zion in "the last days" (see Isaiah 2: 1-5; Psalm 102: 16; Isaiah 52: 7-10; Romans 11: 25-27; Zechariah 2: 1-5, Matthew 24: 3-14; Revelation 14: 6, 7;

Acts 3: 21), unity of purpose, and an eye single to the glory of God must characterize all who engage in that work, with determination to be governed by the gospel of Christ, else failure is inevitable. "Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom."

How can unity be brought about unless all connected with the work be educated to understand that celestial law,—the gospel? A failure to understand will bring confusion as sure as it did at Babel. Has the kind Father supplied the means for the education of his children in his purpose? Has he not restored the divine "authority" of his kingdom, that the law may be executed thereby? (Acts 3: 21; Isaiah 29: 14; 15: 17, 18; Ephesians 1: 8, 9; Revelation 14: 6, 7.) I believe we are safe in concluding that he has. Our Savior indicated that his word would produce unity in all who believe on him through the testimony of this word and its witnesses. (See John 17.) Further, God ordained that through the instrumentality of officers whom he set in his church, he would instruct and perfect his people for their part of the great work. The word of the gospel, God's power unto salvation, provides that the officers of the church are apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, high priests, elders, bishops, priests, teachers, and deacons, named, ordained, and authorized of God, "for the perfecting of the Saints; for the work of the ministry, and the edifying of the body of Christ." And these must be set in the church or "body of Christ" by the Head of the church,—God and Christ. (Mark 3: 13, 14; Jeremiah 1: 4-9; Acts 20: 28, 29; 1 Corinthians 12: 27, 28; Ephesians 4: 8-13; Philippians 1: 1; Galatians 1: 1; 1 Timothy 1: 13; Hebrews 5: 1-6.)

The officers named officially by the great Ordainer of the church were intended to be there as much as he intends the church to exist, and for the purposes specified by him,

Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ; that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive.—Ephesians 4: 13, 14.

In the passages cited is found the expression of God's will in relation to his church, considered organically. And the contents of the gospel covenant are declared by the great so-called Christian world to be his last will and testament, so that he having never changed his will, (see Malachi 3: 6; Hebrews 13: 8; James 1: 17,) we are safe in concluding this is his will now in relation to the church. Nor from this will can we deviate without being at variance with him, and hence not in the unity of the faith,—gospel faith.

On this subject of organization of the church, Latter Day Saints are at unity. Likewise, on the principles of the doctrine of Christ. God works on principle. His gospel embodies principles; is based on the eternal foundation of principles. All principles are necessary truths; eternal, positive, absolutely essential, and unchangeable. And all sciences based on or embodying them are eternal, can not be changed. Men only depart from them. The great foundation principles of God's church or kingdom are:

FAITH.

(Hebrews 11:3-6; Mark 11:22; Ephesians 4:3-6; John 14:1, 2). "Without faith it is impossible to please him." "Ask and ye shall receive." "But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind and tossed, for let not that man think he shall receive anything of the Lord. A double-minded man (a man divided in mind) is unstable in all his ways," (James 1:6-8,) a man with no settled purpose. The gospel law is perfect, Psalm 19:7:

But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed.—James 1:25.

Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead being alone. . . . Show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works.

For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also.

So James teaches. A genuine faith in God, then, moves men to do the works God requires.

REPENTANCE.

This as a principle carried out in men's lives, transforms the heart, soul, and character of men; changes the course of life and conduct.

Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the Devil, and he will flee from you. Draw nigh unto God, and he will draw nigh unto you. Cleanse your hands ye sinners; and purify your hearts ye double minded.—James 4:7, 8.

Kings and potentates are commanded to repent of sin, and turn to righteousness.

Wherefore, O king, said Daniel, the prophet, to Nebuchadnezzar, let my counsel be acceptable unto thee, and break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by showing mercy to the poor, if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquility.—Daniel 4:27.

A genuine repentance toward God includes not only a ceasing to do evil, but also learning to do well. (See Isaiah 55:6, 7.) "All men everywhere" are commanded to repent. The Holy Ghost, the vital element of the gospel, (1 Thessalonians 1:5,) "reproves the world of sin, and of righteousness,"—doing right—"and of judgment." (John 16:7-9.)

For godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of: but the sorrow of the world worketh death. For behold this selfsame thing, that ye sorrowed after a godly sort, what carefulness it wrought in you, yea, what clearing of yourselves, yea, what indignation, yea, what fear, yea, what vehement desire, yea, what zeal, yea, what revenge! In all things ye have approved yourselves to be clear in this matter.—2 Corinthians 7:10, 11.

The Holy Ghost, on the memorable day of Pentecost, when he attested to the waiting church of God the resurrection and glorification of our Lord, his exaltation at the Father's right hand as King of glory—the Holy Ghost, using Peter's tongue, said to three thousand convinced believers in God and Christ:

Repent, and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.—Acts 2:38, 39.

This language of Peter the apostle, indicted by the Holy Ghost, introduces us in proper order, in the steps to forgiveness of past sins, to the third principle of the gospel,

BAPTISM.

The gospel faith and repentance and baptism brings us into a forgiven, justified relationship to God. Baptism preceded by these brings the forgiveness of all our sins to that date. It cuts us off from the world, in kinship spiritually, and joins us to God as his children. We are thus "delivered" "from the power of darkness" and "translated into the kingdom of" "God's dear Son." (Colossians 1:13.) We are by these three steps adopted into Jesus Christ. (Galatians 3:27, 28.)

But when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law (given at Sinai) that we might receive the adoption of sons.—Galatians 4:4, 5.

Our past sins are remitted by our obedience to the gospel of Christ. (See Mark 1:1-6.) In the regenerative process, we are begotten by the word of God that lives and abides for ever. Words that are spirit and life. (James 1:18; John 6:63.) We are first begotten by the word of God, then developed and born according to that word, first of "the washing of regeneration," or "the washing of water according to the word by the will of God." (Titus 3:5-7; Ephesians 5:25-27.)

"That he might sanctify and cleanse it (the church,) with the washing of water by the word. That he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish." "Born again not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God that lives and abides for ever." Surely by laudable efforts on our part we may—we can—abide his word. It may try us, but trials faithfully borne sanctify and purify us. Baptism in water saves us, says Peter. Nor without it can we have "the answer of a good conscience toward God, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ." (1 Peter 3: 21, 22.)

According to the word of God we enter his kingdom by being "born of water and of the Spirit," (John 3: 3-5,) with double assurance of the Christ, that unless we are thus born again we "can not enter the kingdom of God." Jesus used the words "born of water," and the divinely inspired Apostle Paul uses the words, "Buried with him by baptism: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life"; also, "Planted together in the likeness of his death" (Romans 6: 5, 6.) "Buried" is to be hid away under earth. "Planted" in "likeness" "like as"—is its equivalent. To be buried in, or "born of water," can not be done without going into the water. This is certain, but to "be born of" is to come out of. We can not be "born of" that into which we never entered.

Paul and Peter agree that a consciousness of pardon of past sins comes in answer to the command, "Arise and be baptized, and wash away your sins." Peter declares baptism saves us, as before cited, and Paul says: "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus," "By a new and living way, which he hath consecrated [by his precious blood, see the pretext,] for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh; . . . Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water."—Hebrews 10: 19-22. Baptism is, by the blood of Christ consecrated, one step in the regenerative process. Nor can regeneration be accomplished without it, except we count the blood of Jesus of no effect. For, as every precept of the law given at Sinai was consecrated by the blood of animals (the lamb—Hebrews 9: 18-21; Exodus 19: 7, 8 and 24: 5-8, a type of Christ) so every command, ordinance, or principle of the new covenant is "dedicated," "consecrated" by the blood of the Lamb of God. Who, then, can declare any one or all of the ordinances and commandments of the gospel null without counting the blood of God's Son "an unholy thing"? (Hebrews 10: 29)? Is it not one of the strangest things that men will hold with all their power to human commands and requirements formed from human opinion and formulated into "articles of religion," "confessions of religious faith," and "creeds," and let these stand between them and Christ's gospel, and his commandments, as the Jews do their "traditions" and "commandments of men," and thus nullify God's commandments? (Matthew 15: 6; 2 Corinthians 3: 14).

As long as these human articles of religion are allowed to stand as rules to govern men in their religious faith, the unity Jesus prays for never can be attained. A unity of the religious on these or any one of them as a basis, would not be the unity Christ prayed for and taught by the Holy Ghost. It must have for its basis God's perfect law: Jesus' commands and precepts, the gospel consecrated by his blood, God's eternal law based on eternal principles. Whosoever comes to Christ, and hears his commandments and doeth them, not some learned man's interpretation of them, he is wise and builds on the rock that the storms and waves of the eternal ages can not dislodge.

Christ prayed for unity based on the word he brought from God, and which he commits to his servants to give to sinful, unsaved man to redeem him. (See John 17: 11, 14, 20, 21; Luke 6: 46-49). Further, Jesus prayed for the unity of his Saints on the basis of the word of God; that the world may have this unity as an evidence that he was the Messiah—the sent of God to redeem mankind. "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God," said the Master. (Matthew 4: 4.) God has not limited himself in the past or the present as to when and what and to whom he will speak, except to qualify:

If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you. Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples. As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you; continue ye in my love. If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love.—John 15: 7-10.

Here is the eternal law of unity that springs from lovingly keeping God's commandments, they abiding in us, and we abiding in him. His love is shed abroad in our hearts "by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us."

CONFIRMATION.

In order that we may be in union with God and Christ, he has ordained the ordinance of "laying on of hands," of his authorized ministry attended with prayer, for the gift of the Holy Spirit, that his light and love may abide in us, if we live pure, humble, prayerful lives, obeying always his holy commandments; to guide us into truth; show us things to come; testify to us that Jesus is the Christ; take of the things of God as we may have need and show (reveal) them unto us. (See John 14: 15-26; 15: 26, 27; 16: 7-16; Matthew 28: 20; Acts 8: 14-21; 19: 1-6; 1 Timothy 4: 13-16; Hebrews 5: 12-14; 6: 1, 2).

THE RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD.

(See Isaiah 26: 19-21; Daniel 12: 1-3; St. John 5: 25-29; Revelation 20: 4-6 and verses 11-15; 1 Corinthians 15: 12-22.) A reunion of body and spirit of the righteous at the second and glorious coming of our Lord Jesus, crowned King of kings and Lord of lords, to raise the dead, cleanse the earth of sin, organize his kingdom of glory, reward his Saints, and reign with them during the thousand years; then bring to life again the wicked dead, and judge and reward "every man according to his work," and determine and execute in judgment, as everyone, small and great, has wrought out while on probation. (See Luke 12: 47, 48; Matthew 11: 20-24; 23: 13, 14; Mark 12: 38-40; 1 Corinthians 6: 2, 3.) In the glorious reign and judgment the redeemed are to participate:

Do ye not know that the Saints shall judge the world? And if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters?—1 Corinthians 6: 2.

And when he (Christ) had taken the book, the four beasts and four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps, and golden vials full of odors, which are the prayers of saints. And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; (the elders and the four beasts redeemed from nations,) and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth.—Revelation 5: 8-10.

What a glorious consummation we are hastening to, are now so closely approaching! Saints, are you up and actively preparing yourselves for this grand era? Are you laboring in faith and the works required to qualify you as participants, sharers in this reign of the redeemed with Christ? Are you, brother, sister, enrobing yourself in "fine linen, clean and white," which is declared to be "the righteousness of saints"? (Revelation 19: 8.) Is your lamp burning low? Is it almost gone out? Remember, oh, remember, now is the time the church, the Bride, is making herself ready. "Be ye also ready" warns our Savior. Awake, and trim your lamp, lest the words, "And the door was shut," "Verily, I say unto you, I know ye not" (Matthew 25: 10-12), ring in your ears louder and more terrific than mighty thunderings, when too late!

It is not enough that God's children be united on the doctrinal basis summed up by Paul in the six eternal principles enumerated in the sixth chapter of Hebrews, verses 1 and 2. It is not enough that they be united as "thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee." But they must grow into unity—union—with the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. We must grow into him. (John 15: 7.) We must be branches of him, the heavenly vine. "Can two walk together, except they be agreed?" said God to Israel. God was one of the two, Israel the other. (Amos 3: 3.) "He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?" (Micah 6: 8.) Have we gone on to that degree of perfection that we, like Enoch, "walk with God"? Do we deal "justly" in all things? and do we place ourselves on the side of mercy, in love for mercy? Are we so united that we are seeking with all our souls, might, mind, and strength, to be "perfect even as our Father is perfect"? See Matthew 5: 38-48,—study those ten verses, and then ask yourself the question, Do I love God and man as Jesus here requires, and my brother as myself? Do you? If not, what has Christ and his work done for you? What has the Holy Ghost done, what is it doing for you? Are you willing to do to your brother as you would that he should do to you? Are you living in the letter and spirit of this, God's law? Enough of the Spirit of God, and you can do as the lesson last cited requires. Christ did it. He prayed for his enemies. He died for us when we were enemies to him. (Luke 23: 34; Romans 5: 6, 7, 8.) Until we reach the high calling in Christ Jesus portrayed by Jesus' teaching and example, can we cooperate with our brother in Zion's redemption?

Of General Interest

HERESY IN CANADA.

The Baptist denomination in Canada has just passed through a crisis. A pamphlet campaign has been carried on for over a year against the teachings of Professor Matthews in McMaster's University. The report of a committee of investigation, which was prematurely criticised, started another pamphlet campaign. The matter came to a climax in the recent convention in Toronto to which the committee report, together with that of the university board was submitted. Chancellor McKay of the university presented its report and strongly defended its professor. Professor Matthews then presented his own defense, specifically answering the complaints against him, declaring also that none of those who had been publicly criticising his teaching had ever sought to learn from him what his views really were. Then a prominent lawyer and another professor spoke for the defense. The complainants then endeavored to amend the university report adversely and refer the whole matter to a committee of fifteen. It seemed at this time that the convention was about equally divided. At midnight the peacemaker arose, Dr. McNeill of Toronto, to whose church both Professor Matthews and his initial accuser belong. With an eloquence described as unsurpassed, he swung the convention in favor of the university report so that out of nearly nine hundred delegates less than a dozen voted against it.—Northwestern Christian Advocate for December 7, 1910.

Labor While Waiting.

We have had the pleasure of reading several letters from Sr. Eunice Winn Smith, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, (than whom if the church has a more faithful worker we confess our ignorance of the fact). From these letters we are permitted to make some extracts. We are truly glad of this privilege, and the more so just at this time, because for the Daughters of Zion it is a time of waiting. Such times come into the lives of individuals as well as those of organizations, and to some they seem unprofitable, to all very trying. "Learn to labor and to wait," is for many the hardest task which could well be assigned. But while we realize how much better it is to wait than like the king of Israel "to force one's self and offer sacrifice," Sister Eunice is teaching us that we may be very busy while we wait.

We can not refrain from quoting the first paragraph of one of her letters in order that no one need suppose that the work she is doing for the Daughters of Zion is done out of abundant leisure. September 8, 1910, she writes:

"Your letters of recent date received, and I am ashamed for not writing sooner, and yet I need not be, for every minute has been filled to the limit. In the first place I was having trouble over my printing, then over my diplomas, then the Vacation School began, and we had over three hundred children every day, more than we had help. It was no use saying I wouldn't help or couldn't help. The school opens into my yard, and at eight o'clock teachers began to congregate in the house, and there was no one to register them, so that part fell to me; then the school board gave us the use of the school yard for gymnastic games, the other teachers felt the necessity of getting rid of the children for half an hour during the morning, and it seemed no one had time to take them, so it fell to my lot, and every morning I had four classes half an hour at a time playing games in the school yard. In the afternoon the house was full, the yard was full of teachers and pupils, and I finally gave up in despair and went into the whirlpool of vacation school work."

Continuing, she adds:

"We had a good Daughters of Zion program at reunion. Brother Greene gave a short address, several sisters gave musical numbers, we had one paper, and I told the mothers a story. Our subject was "Confidence," and our program was rather high class. Our Daughters of Zion here had taken a new lease of life. We are holding it in the evening, and we have been getting an educator, a doctor, or some one that can help us to come and make the principal talk of the evening. This, supplemented by the lesson reading, by discussion and by readings and music, and it makes a pleasant evening and profitable for the women of the neighborhood. Last week we had twenty-six present, fifteen of whom were outsiders. We are thinking of starting a dressmaking class for the young mothers under the auspices of the Daughters of Zion for this winter.

"A well-known woman gave the young men and women, (mostly college students, who have been teaching in the vacation schools here this summer, at the joint commencement of all schools,) this motto, 'Get thy spindle and thy distaff ready, and the Lord will send thee flax.' It surely applies to the Saints of this branch. There is so much to do, and our neighbors are flocking to the church."

Again on December 10 she writes:

"Our local work here is getting so heavy, and I almost feel like a machine at times. I worked once in the primary department of the Sunday school and felt that it was the important branch of Sunday school work. This year I have worked in the intermediate department with little girls of ten and eleven years, and I have met much hearty cooperation. I have such an enthusiastic class, grown by their own efforts from five to fourteen, practically all outsiders, one Saint home represented; but the president of our Daughters of Zion society moved away in September, and the work of carrying the society forward has fallen to my lot. I have tried in vain to shift the burden, but the sisters are willing to help but will not lead out. I believe we have found our mission. We have a class of working girls, over fourteen years of age, coming one night a week for devotional exercises, hand work, song practice, physical culture, and games. The girls are nearly all outside of the church, they are enthusiastic as they can be, and already some have started to Sunday school and church. You can hardly realize the demand for something of this kind in Lamoni where boys and girls go to high school and college; but here where parents are waiting until their children are fourteen so they can take them out of school and send them to work, a gathering place for these girls is a boon to them. The sisters, six or eight of them, come every night and help, some of our church girls come too, that is, girls of eighteen and twenty, and we meet from 7.30 to 9.40. Many of the girls have no place to go except the street; many of them are bright girls who would like to go to school longer. We are trying to know them intimately, to find out what they need, what they are willing to do, and to show them the way to better things. Our hand work is very simple, just at present we are doing this pierced brass work. We have had six meetings now, and the attendance and interest grows. I thought you might like to hear of it.

"Next Sunday we are opening reading rooms and game tables for the boys of the neighborhood, under a committee consisting of three from the branch, one from Religio, and one from Sunday school. These things take time and energy, but if we touch the lives of these young people and bring them to the truth, great is our reward."

And now mark the results following such faithful labors. On January 3, 1911, she writes:

"We had the pleasure of seeing four more baptized on Sunday, all coming from outside families, being the first of their family; three more for next Sunday, and more near the kingdom. It looks as if we were beginning to reap the fruit of our labors, and we are very glad. Our work is at high water mark just now. Brother Zimmermann, who has stood back of Walter with his means, says he is seeing what he has longed for and looked forward to for twenty years, that is, our church leading the neighborhood in good works that allay prejudice and arouse interest. Surely our harvest field here is white."

Again on January 23, 1911, she writes:

"Our work along the Daughters of Zion line is still growing. We did not have our monthly meeting during December, as we were all so busy and had so many evenings out, but we kept our girls' class going. They are doing pierced brass work now. Between the first of November and January first, six girls joined the Sunday school from this class, girls whom we had no hope of getting before. These girls are mostly above fourteen years of age and generally stay to the preaching services, and most of them come back again at night. We have a short song service at the beginning, a prayer, and the Lord's prayer. Then we work for an hour, after that have a story, a brief song practice, a little calisthenics and some games. Four of our young girls have been going down to Temple University with me this year, taking the kindergarten work, and we generally play the kindergarten games, many of which are activity games, and all of which have music and songs to accompany. The girls enjoy them very much. We send them home before ten o'clock. One of the young girls and one of my neighbors, (whose little girl I brought to Sunday school the first year I came,) both outsiders, who came regularly to help us in this work, have been baptized since the first of the year. (I am sure one can't work for this church and stay out of it long.) My neighbor came last night. She is a woman who has raised a family. Last summer her little girl was baptized, and last night she announced her decision and came. She has helped me with the girls ever since we started and I have appreciated her help a great deal. I do not know that any other branch would find it practicable to work as our Daughters of Zion is doing. Local circumstances would need to receive careful consideration in local organizations. Here, girls leave school young. Our aim in working with them is not so much to teach them as to get near them and be able to persuade them to go to night school, to cultivate their minds, and to become good home makers, which to our mind is foundation work of the highest type."

And in conclusion, let us say to you, that as sure as the promises of God are true, as surely as they are "yea and amen in Christ Jesus," just so surely will a like harvest follow a like work. The fruits of it may not appear so soon, the ground may not be so good nor yield so plentifully to the sower, but the reward to the honest, faithful, unselfish laborer can not fail so long "as God and truth are one."

Let us then, while as Daughters of Zion we are waiting for the establishment of the children's home, the home which the Lord has instructed his church to help us in establishing, learn to labor while we wait.

Please notice what Sister Eunice says in regard to the sisters being willing to help, but refusing to move out as leaders. All can help to a greater or less extent, but all can not lead. Indeed it is the world's experience that the fewest number only are capable of doing this. Does it not then become the imperative duty of all who love the Lord's work and desire to advance the same, when such a one is found, to hold up her hands, and by faith and prayer, as well as by works, strengthen her for the battle, ever bearing in mind the criticism and dangers to which the exposed position renders her doubly liable?

Jealousy can not find a place in the heart of a true disciple of the meek and lowly Jesus, and that one, be it man or woman, be it layman or one in authority, who feels the movings of such a spirit, may well seek to God in earnest prayer for help and strength to banish it. It is from beneath, and leads to darkness and ruin. Let us strive earnestly to "prefer one another in love," each according to the talent God has given, to labor faithfully, that to God, and to him only, may be the honor and glory for ever.

Good News.

Since the above article was handed in for publication this good news has come to us that Bishop E. L. Kelley has purchased one of the most beautiful residence properties in Lamoni for the children's home. This property consists of a large, well-built house of ten large, airy, well-ventilated and well lighted rooms, besides two other rooms which need finishing up before being used. A large barn, poultry house, and other outbuildings, and twenty acres of land, upon all sides of which the city is being built up. It fronts upon the most beautiful avenue of the city, and the lawn is shaded by magnificent forest trees more than a quarter of a century old.

"An ideal place for a children's home," has long been the consensus of opinion of many. This property was originally owned by Elijah Banta, who was counselor to Bishop Blakeslee at the time Bishop E. L. Kelley occupied the same position, and was a part of the estate left to his heirs. The business of his only son took him away from Lamoni, and as his daughters were not willing to keep up so large a place it was offered for sale, and the writer feels glad that the church has been wise enough not to allow such a bargain to pass unimproved. And if those who have entered the veil before us take any note of earthly things, we are certain that they, too, will be glad that the home from which, when the final summons came, they passed away, is now in possession of the people with whose lot in early youth they cast in their own, and with whom they labored, lived, and died.

And now will the Daughters of Zion prove equal to entering in and occupying, that generations yet unborn may rise and call them blessed? God grant it.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, January 20, 1911.

Beloved Saints: If what I may write will be the means of helping to prepare some one's mind to receive the gospel in its fullness as Jesus taught it, and to keep all of his commandments, then I will have accomplished my purpose in writing.

I opened the HERALD to-night and read, "Another tithe-paying girl." I feel like saying, May God bless the honest, tithe-paying, working girls. I am a hard working girl, always have been since I was able, and it is a grand comfort to me to know that even my hands have assisted in the work of our dear Lord and Master. In the year 1907 I paid about one third of my tithing; in 1908 I paid the other two thirds, and I try to pay one tenth of the increase ever since.

I would rather pay five dollars more than five dollars less, and I can truly say that God, who is my heavenly Father, has blessed me physically, temporally, and spiritually. Don't just pay a little and try to keep the rest; you don't know what rich blessings from God are in store for you, hanging upon the remainder that you did not pay him but still owe him. If I do all that is possible for me to do, I will then have only accomplished my reasonable service.

I was born and reared on my father's farm, about six miles west of Exeter, Huron County, Ontario. I was baptized and confirmed on the same farm by Elder Samuel Tomlinson, whom I heard preach one sermon in Sharon schoolhouse, while he was representing the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. That night it was made clear to my mind, without a doubt, that he was representing the true church of the living God, and that the other churches were tarnished, more or less, with the teachings and man made creeds who have no authority to change God's plans. He sang that hymn, "Home, home, shineth before us." I felt somewhat burdened with sorrow and care at that time, over which I had no control, and the singing of that hymn proved a blessing to me. I was the only one who obeyed.

How can a person read the HERALD every week and then not pay their due to our loving heavenly Father, on whom all our hopes and joys depend. Many times I feel filled with thankfulness and gratitude to God for the understanding I have of him, and for his mercy and love to me. I hope to guard well my words and make fewer mistakes.

A sermon that did me good was preached by Elder Davis at the opening of our new basement of church one Sunday morning in December, mentioning the fact that we would have to give an account for every idle word. We are glad to get into our new church, thanks to our president, Elder Allen.

We have enjoyed splendid sermons from Elder J. Grant, which were needed. I hope to profit by the good teaching I have received from God's people since I came to Detroit over five years ago, and I felt that he opened the way for me to come.

Ever praying for the advancement of God's work, I am your sister and believer of the gospel taught in its fullness and purity.

IDA M. BROWN.

CLINTON, IOWA, January 7, 1911.

Dear Herald: It did me good to read of the tithe-paying girl. I hope that many more letters of the same nature will appear in the church papers, that a struggling church may the more readily see what great things might be accomplished by the many instead of the very few who seem now to be making the sacrifice. Jacob asked God to greatly favor him in this life. Jesus said we lack because we ask not. He would have us ask largely. "Trust in the Lord and do, and verily thou shalt be fed," was David's advice. It does not infer a boasting spirit to speak of being blessed in this matter, as I see it. To do something exemplary, men and women must stand out boldly, showing and defending the needs of the day for the family and for the church. It is up to all of the members to do what they can and do it now.

Most all of the Saints consent to the law of tithing, but many seem to avoid the keeping of it and manage to keep all their money. Well, I could easily contrive to use all of my money and have nothing left at the end of the month or year; but as I understand it, the Lord and his church would be defrauded; "robbed," as the Spirit terms it, in Malachi's prophecy. If we only had a mind to do as bidden; "prove" the Lord, the church would not struggle from year to year, begging for help. Let us pray for converting grace and sanctifying power, so that we can sing from the heart,

"I'll live for thee! I'll live for thee!!

And oh, thou Lamb of Calvary,

I consecrate my life to thee,

My Savior and my God."

DAVID L. PALSGROVE.

ESTACADA, OREGON, January 16, 1911.

Dear Editors: When I wrote to the church papers a long time ago, I was only one of my family that belonged to the Saints. I have lived away from all church privileges until the last year. Last fall Elders Cook and Sheldon came down here from Portland, Oregon, with the tent. They preached and held lectures for over three weeks, and baptized eleven, among them four of our family; my husband, one son, and two daughters. I wish Brn. T. W. Chatburn, Layland, S. S. Smith, and H. A. Stebbins, who knew of my lonely struggle, to know this, that they may rejoice with me.

To the dear sisters who have not your companions in the church with you: Keep on praying, sisters. I prayed for twenty years. There are about twenty-five Saints living here now. We have Sunday school and testimony meetings Sundays, in the afternoon at the Saints' houses; all take part at testimony, both young and old. I for one enjoy myself and feel like singing all the rest of the day.

LUETTA MCWILLIS.

LONDON, CANADA, January 20, 1911.

Dear Herald: Week after week I have been reading and enjoying the good things in the church papers. To-night, after nearly reading the HERALD through, I feel condemned to think I have been in the church twenty-eight years and have never written a line for one of our church papers.

God has been good to me. Three years ago this winter I took cold in my head and nearly lost my sight. I could not see to thread a needle or read a line clearly; could not look in a glass, could not see the children clearly. Often, when getting them ready for school I had to ask each of them if the other was clean, and we all had a good laugh; but when they were gone I had a good cry, and I prayed, Oh God, give me strength to do my duty, and he did. I never thought to pray for my sight, for I was thankful that it was so good as it was. But one day in June, 1909, the heat and light, with the cooking, almost made me think I would go insane, but I said nothing to the family. I went to God in prayer and told him just how I felt. He gave me much comfort and answered me later, but not in the way I asked for it. My eyes began to get better and I was thankful. Then I wanted to read and sew, but could not. I finally got discontented. My husband being president of the branch had enough with his daily work to keep him busy almost night and day. When sitting down to read when he came in, he often said, Now Tillie, you would better go to bed; your eyes look so tired. I went, but oh, the longing to read the church papers. I envied people who could see. No one knew my heart but God, and he came to my rescue. I prayed to be forgiven my discontent.

Early one morning while praying I felt led to ask him if I was forgiven and accepted of him, that he would in some material way make known to me that I was. On September 20, 1910, I left off my glasses by mistake, for I had never gone without them, but when I thought of them I turned to do something else and forgot all about them. This I did for two and one half days. At last when standing in the kitchen thinking what next to do, I decided to get my glasses. I picked them up, but something said, No; why do you put them on when you do not need them? I then realized I was healed. When my husband came in for dinner I said, My eyes are healed. He could hardly believe me; but they were. We were married twelve years that day, and I said, Is not this the grandest wedding present anyone ever got? My eyes are healed; my sight is as good as it ever was, and God has blessed me.

Hoping my experience will help some afflicted one to put their trust in God.

TILLIE FLIGG.

BILOXI, MISSISSIPPI, January 22, 1911.

Dear Herald: We have had a good time of late attending meetings, and it seemed the good Spirit was with us as never before. Brother Slover arrived here on the last day of the old year, and commenced meetings the same night, staying in and around these parts two weeks, preaching all the time,

News From Missions

Ohio.

The work in the Ohio District is progressing nicely. We have a great many more calls for preaching than we are able to fill with the force we have.

giving us his able sermons, which we enjoyed very much. He left here the 13th for Gulf Port, where he preached that night. In company with Brother King he went on the 14th to Sacia where Brother King had baptized one sister who had never been confirmed. Brother King baptized another on the 15th. Preached Sunday morning and got back to Gulf Port where Brother Slover had baptized two more, a young man and wife whom we believe will be a great help to the cause. They are new settlers there.

Elder Slover left here the 16th, and we learned he had been called to Vancleave, Mississippi, to administer to Brother Cochran's son, who is very sick. We learned yesterday that Elder A. Vancleave, one of our missionaries, has smallpox and is in the pesthouse at Mobile.

We ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints for the work in these parts, as there are some good people interested who we believe will obey in the future if they can hear.

Your brother in hope,
GEORGE W. ENTREKIN.

PARTRIDGE, KANSAS, January 22, 1911.

Editors Herald: I enjoy the many helpful letters, and the articles written by our gifted elders are indeed food for the soul. I was converted almost wholly through reading the church papers. I have much faith in this way of getting the work before the people, and so I always loan our HERALD to the neighbors.

We have no church privileges here, and any of the ministry will be made welcome. If they will notify me in advance I will try to get a place to preach. We know this latter day work is true, and that God is evidencing by the Spirit in these days as he was in ye olden time.

The writer of this letter is deaf, having lost hearing three years ago. Will the Saints please pray for me, that if it is God's will I may receive my hearing again? But if it is not, I know that God will give me strength to endure. Let us hope that people will more gladly receive the angel's message this new year than they have in the past. May God prosper the right is my prayer.

SAMUEL D. TURPEN.

Hill Cumorah as a Battlefield.

Not long ago I read from the pen of a Latter Day Saint writer concerning the Hill Cumorah, New York, being the great battlefield of Book of Mormon history.

I had my doubts concerning the matter before reading that article. The writer dealt with the subject without a shadow of an "if" or anything indicating a possibility of being mistaken regarding the Hill Cumorah, of New York, being the scene of those great battles recorded by Moroni, so that I was led to study the record again several times. I must say that in the Book of Mormon I can not find a line of history or a statement of any kind that would indicate that those battles were fought outside of the Land Desolation. However, I do not profess to be a thorough Book of Mormon student, and might be altogether mistaken, and if so would like to be set right.

I therefore would ask that some one who is quite positive that these battles were fought in New York would kindly write up the matter from his point of view, giving Book of Mormon arguments and other deductions. I have had in my mind to write an article for the HERALD upon it myself; but perhaps a well written article from the opposite position might change my mind and save the columns of the official organ from being burdened with "straw" that has possibly been "wrestled over" years ago.

SEDLLEY, SASKATCHEWAN.

H. J. DAVISON.

Brn. R. C. Russell, N. L. Booker and myself held four weeks' tent meetings at the Plaines in July and August. We had splendid interest, and baptized eight as a result. The good Saints almost outdone themselves in making it pleasant for the elders. We ate, slept, and kept house on the grounds, which is the only way to make tent meetings a success. Sister Booker, with her musical talent, was no less important factor in contributing to the success of the meetings, and we are looking forward for further development along this line after she finishes her course in Graceland College. This is one of the best "boosters" for Graceland; when talents developed there are used for the Lord's work. Had more of it been used this way in past years, Graceland might have been more deeply ingratiated into the hearts of the humble. While we have our ideas, and so expressed them, as to the financing of the institution, yet we say, All hail to Graceland.

Prospects for preaching are propitious in the Hocking Valley. There is a nice Sunday school under the care of Bro. Earl Wolf, whose whole soul is in the work. Recently his brother, an excellent young man, has been baptized. Had the pleasure of baptizing Bro. George Wallace, residing at Jobs, once a persecutor of the work, but, Paul-like, is doing all he can to redeem the past. He is an excellent young man of ability, and with his good wife will have the work planted at Jobs. Bro. Sam Hannah and family reside there also, and all are working for and expect to have a place to hold meetings soon.

The Saints at Crabtree are building a new church. Great many are interested in those parts and doubtless will take hold. Bro. O. B. Thomas is now holding meetings and, in his usual way, busy going among the Saints from house to house, encouraging them and making friends. He is a remarkable old man; an excellent example of zeal, energy, and faithfulness, of which we younger men should take notice.

Crabtree is the place where Bro. T. J. Beaty, of blessed memory, and the writer faced a mob, having the honor of preaching the gospel while being protected by armed pickets. Nearly a hundred have been baptized in that vicinity since. It was in the adjoining county (Adams) that Bro. E. E. Long was held up by a mob. Perhaps they are among the fifteen hundred recently sentenced by Judge Blair for vote selling; at least, they belonged to "the baser sort."

For several months I have been laboring in the Pittsburg and Kirtland District, by special direction from the minister in charge. I would much rather be in some little town or country schoolhouse, preaching the principles of the gospel to people who have never heard; but some one has to do the "other," let it be ever so unpleasant. I long for the time when differences between brothers and sisters will be adjusted by the Spirit of the Master, and not have, so often, to resort to the cold letter of the law. I feel sure the ones who have to administer the law in such manner are more deeply hurt than the one to whom it is applied. The saddest of all our experiences is to see a member go out of the church, and perhaps one who has labored long and faithfully to build it up. But the law must be carried out, and the sooner we all learn this the better it will be for us. It seems unfortunate so many esteem their opinions more important than the law, the courts, or councils. At such a fearful cost are we inclined to have our way. How much sweeter life would be if we would but let the admonition of Paul have its effect in our life, viz: "It is better to suffer wrong than to do wrong." And again, "All things work together for good to them that love the Lord." How can we love the Lord? Only by loving one another. It is simply bearing false testimony to say we love God and at the same time have hatred in our hearts toward another.

I am to act as moderator for Bro. R. C. Russell in a twelve nights' debate with Elder McVey, of Campbellite fame. We will begin January 26, at Fayette City, Pennsylvania. I met this gentleman five years ago in a twenty session tilt. At the close of the discussion the young people brought a piece of crepe, with a notice on it reading, "Campbellites dead; funeral sermon here next Sunday." But we are of the opinion that after R. C. gets through with him there will not be enough left for a funeral.

I wish to say to all the Saints who have been expecting the debate between Elder Haskins and myself, the propositions for which have been signed for a year, that after several unsuccessful attempts to consummate the agreement, I received word from my opponent recently that his people where we were to hold it have refused to have it there. I am not surprised at this; as it is so close to where we had the other one, and I presume they do not care to lose the little influence they have remaining. We are ready for Elder Haskins; or any of his kind when they get ready to attack the faith. Campbellism in southern Ohio is thick and daring, and must be met. At our last discussion a fine lady came over a hundred miles on purpose to attend the debate, and at the close I baptized her. This alone paid well for the effort.

Southern Ohio District will hold their conference the second Saturday and Sunday in March, at Columbus, Ohio. First session at 10 a. m., Saturday, will be held in G. A. R. Hall, north Columbus. We earnestly hope for a goodly attendance. As there was no fall conference we should have a large attendance at this one. The Saints have not been taking the interest in those gatherings that they should, and for this reason we thought best not to have the fall conference. We want to see each branch represented. The Columbus Saints are preparing, and are willing to take care of all who come. There will likely be a Sunday school session on Friday. This in charge of Bro. D. R. Winn, and you will likely hear from him. For further information you can write him, Box 504, Columbus, Ohio.

I wish to remind all the priesthood of the resolution passed at the conference last spring, relative to your reports. We expect to enforce it; hence if you should be called upon, after due labor, to send in your license for not reporting, don't blame those whom you placed in position to carry out your legislation.

Bro. G. H. Hilliard made Kirtland a visit and in his own peculiar and forceful way gave much good instruction, and with other adjustments along his line of work made his visit a very important one. He is of the strenuous type, and the way he does things compels the progressive kind to admire him. Brave as a lion, yet meek as a lamb. To be associated with a man of such unbounded faith in God, such unfeigned love for the cause of humanity, makes one feel better and stronger for the struggles of life, and as I take a survey of my brethren in general I am made to admire them for their soul's yearnings for righteousness, as seen by the piercing eye of charity. Oh, sweet charity; how it would soften the cruel austerities of life and relieve the throbbings of the aching heart, and secure rest in the bosom of the Prince of Peace, if thou would only dominate the human soul!

At present I am in the city of smoke, mills, commerce, and confusion, doing what I can to bring about peace and unity. How far we will succeed time alone must reveal. A noble band of Saints are here, trying to maintain the work begun so many years ago, and which has contributed so much to both church and Sunday school. They have sold their old church and will break ground for a new one as soon as weather permits. This time it will be in a beautiful suburb, from which they expect to draw numerically. While here I am being well cared for at the pleasant home of Brother and Sister Lockard, whose home is always ready for the elder, as many who have been here can attest.

Have had some pleasant associations with our minister in charge, and as such have been able to see the true worth of the brother. I have long been of the opinion that if association does not beget increased brotherly love something is wrong with one or the other, because association is the very law of life, naturally or otherwise.

Our joint reunion was a success; some special blessings were enjoyed. One was, to see our aged and beloved patriarch standing amid the congregation with uplifted hands, and by the command of the Spirit blessing the Saints. Brother Lake is still hearty, for one of his age, and happy in the Lord. He is always to be seen at the meetings, regardless of who preaches, or the character of meetings. A glowing example for younger Saints.

Twelve were baptized at the reunion. We voted to hold another reunion next year. Ye scribe has been selected to feed the multitudes. Let everybody come prepared for the ordeal. Kirtland is bidding for the next reunion; and I am not averse to it. It does not look as though we will have a General Conference there any more. Then why not give the Saints an opportunity to see the only house God has on earth at a time when smiling nature vies with the Divine to make it the most attractive place to dwell. I am of the opinion many of the Saints in the East, Middle West, and Canada, would avail themselves of this rare opportunity. Would be pleased to hear from any of you on this point. Address me at Willoughby, Ohio.

Ever striving to live that I may enjoy the rest with the pure and the good, I am hopefully in the conflict.

F. J. EBELING.

PITTSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, January 19, 1911.

Massachusetts.

The Massachusetts District comprises about a thousand members of the church, scattered over this State, Rhode Island, and Eastern Connecticut, principally in the cities and suburbs of Boston, Providence, and Fall River.

Missionary work here has not been extensive, principally owing to difficulty in obtaining new openings among a conservative and formal people; more occupied with worldly matters than with religion. Amusement places are crowded; not so the houses of worship. If Paul were living in our time he could not more accurately and tersely represent the situation than when he said men shall be, "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God."

After obtaining a place for conducting religious services, the next and by no means the least problem is to induce the people to attend. Strange ministers are very liable to be looked upon with suspicion, which becomes accentuated when it is learned that the denomination represented is of unrecognized standing. However, there is satisfaction in the fact that those converted to the faith are usually steadfast, and are willing to actively assist in forwarding its interests.

During the past few years efforts to interest those not of the faith have been chiefly made by conducting short series of meetings in the chapels of the principal branches during cold weather, and by tent and street services in the warmer seasons of the year.

To open the work in new places of this field appears to be more expensive than in most of the other missions. A strange minister is not likely to obtain free board and lodging, even when the people become somewhat acquainted with him; it being customary for everyone to pay his own expenses while conducting "revival meetings" among the churches. This state of affairs is not easily overcome, but if it is known that the minister is living on the free bounty of others he will, very likely, be considered as a genteel tramp by those of the neighborhood.

There has been a somewhat systematic effort made to prejudice the people against ministers who go from house to house distributing tracts. This has been largely caused by the methods of the dominant Utah church, which has been active along this line for a number of years. By evasively worded statements they have in many instances succeeded in keeping people in ignorance of their more objectionable practices, while they interested them in the "first principles" of their religion. As these specious methods become more or less known among the people, an unknown minister will find it difficult to induce belief or even the reading of his literature in such localities; the attitude of the local denominational minister greatly prejudicing the situation in most cases.

Most of the opposition experienced here is not of the open variety, and is therefore more difficult to overcome; but considering that very few missionaries have been appointed to this field in any one year, the results attained are encouraging, the work being firmly established and becoming more generally understood each year, and respected accordingly where it is well known. The press is also more cordially disposed, generally, and represents the church more fairly than in past years; usually being willing to correct erroneous statements that have been published.

The interests of the work here are being ably assisted by the Sunday school and Religio departments which have been active to a commendable degree.

During the present year an unusual amount of sickness among the missionaries and their families has greatly prevented the execution of work that had been contemplated, but the New Year, with smiling face, gives brighter hope of its accomplishment.

Arrangements for the purchase of a permanent reunion camp at Onset, Massachusetts, are being made, in order that the Eastern Saints and all who desire may have a suitable location for the annual reunions that have for many years been held somewhere in the district, oftentimes with great difficulty in securing a place at all convenient.

The grounds selected consist of about eighteen acres of excellent grove and open land bordering the ocean, with a beautiful sandy shore on one side, and on the line of passenger and express electric cars. It is situated between the two villages of Wareham and Onset, having a population of several thousand, which is greatly increased at the latter place in summer, being a noted seaside resort, where many hundreds congregate, including some of the wealthiest people of the East. Years ago it was the chief mecca of the Spiritualists, but in recent years comparatively few of them congregate there, although one may still attend their regular seances if so inclined.

This camp site was found only after much difficulty on the part of the committee appointed to secure a desirable location, and practically all seem to be satisfied with the result of their efforts.

It is hoped that we may have a number of visitors from the western fields this summer to enjoy this delightful spot with us.

News From Branches.

Norwalk, Connecticut.

In looking over the Letter Department of the HERALD, I came across one from Willard Newman, of Bridgeport, Connecticut, speaking of being an isolated one from a branch. I beg to inform him, through the columns of the HERALD, of the close proximity of the Broad River Branch of the town of Norwalk, fifteen miles west of Bridgeport. It may be reached either by rail or trolley; the fare is thirty cents. We would be pleased to see Brother Newman at any time, and we extend him a cordial invitation to visit our branch. If he makes up his mind to accept, take the Bridgeport and Norwalk car at Fairfield avenue to Norwalk; change at Main and Wale streets; take an east avenue and Broad River car and go to the end of line. Anyone in Broad River will direct you to my residence.

It is now about fifteen years since the branch was organized, and during that time there have been some marked changes. We have enjoyed spiritual feasts and sunshine; we have seen dark and cloudy days, and we have felt the storms of persecution without, and the jarrings within, but through all of this the silver lining has appeared and we are drawn together and made stronger by these experiences. God has taught us how to stand firm for that which is right and true.

At the present time the outlook for the branch is brighter than it has been for a long time. There seems to be a greater activity manifested since the beginning of the New Year. Let the good work continue and the new resolutions be carried through to the end of the year, and the Broad River Branch at the beginning of 1912 shall have made some advancement and become progressive.

It may be of some interest to those who have labored for and in this branch to know that we are still holding the fort, although we are silent and scarcely ever heard from through the HERALD, but when we have a brother living so close by and not aware that there are Saints living in Norwalk, Connecticut, I consider it is time not to remain silent; hence this letter.

HOMER BUTTERY, President.

JANUARY, 24, 1911.

Independence, Missouri.

The Daughters of Zion met on the 18th of last month, Mrs. B. C. Smith, the local's faithful president for nearly a score of years, occupying the chair, with the writer as secretary. Thirty-five were present. After the opening devotional exercises, the subject of the leaflet, "The boy in his teens," was discussed, which brought forth many excellent points, among them these: 1. He should be allowed to take part in conversation at home, and not feel he has no say in the matter. 2. It is a good habit and fine example to tell where you are going when you leave home. In certain cases, the young man should be put upon his honor, and be left to his own desires.

Miss Sadie Bailey gave two fine readings from J. Whitcomb Riley. Sister Smith spoke favorably of the assistance given at the Daughters of Zion meeting during the special lecture series, and gave suggestions, concerning kindergarten work, including instruction to the mothers by Sr. Tessie Smith, which were highly appreciated.

Elder S. A. Burgess, of Saint Louis, occupied at morning and evening services for the 15th, and on the 20th the Sunday school elected its officers for the ensuing year, namely: D. J. Krahl, Srs. M. A. Etzenhouser and Zaide Rodger, Bro. J. A. Gardner, Sr. M. T. Short, C. F. Roell, Sr. Tessie Smith, J. H. Logman, Bro. W. G. Bronson, Sr. D. Braidwood, Bro. E. Etzenhouser, and Margie Closson.

During Christmastide there were three marriages, namely, Sr. Ethel Barto and Bro. James Blake; Bro. David G. Lundquist and Sr. Geneva Sterrett, and Bro. Harry D. Snyder and Miss Mary E. Hensley. Bro. Ralph Y. Hammer was baptized by Elder W. H. Garrett, and was confirmed by Elders Elvin and Bullard.

On Christmas, the morning prayer meeting was well attended and the Sunday school met as follows: the primary department in the basement, intermediates in the hall, and these had their special Christmas programs during the regular hour of Sunday school. At 11 o'clock Elder Joseph Luff preached from 2 Corinthians 9: 8, and during an excellent sermon gave an account of his experiences in Salt Lake City, also delivering a beautiful poem at the close. In the evening the seniors and juniors gave a lovely cantata entitled, "Bethlehem," the chorus parts being in charge of Sr. A. Anderson. Miss Dru Messenger displayed in her reading much historic talent, and the solos were all excellent, including also the instrumental numbers.

The Saints had been called to attend two funerals before the close of the year, one being that of our beloved, aged brother, Josiah Curtis, who at the close of a calm yet useful life fell asleep in Jesus on the 28th of December, and also some of the elders and several of the laity met at the residence of our dear Brother Joseph on the 27th to pay a loving tribute at the obsequies of a kindly neighbor and esteemed citizen, Mr. James B. Forbis, who passed away in his ninety-third year, leaving an estate of $125,000. A few days before his death he told Sr. P. Peterson that he had found the Saints honorable in their dealings.

Many of the brethren, also, are not without honor otherwise, walking side by side with the city fathers and prominent business men of this growing city. Among them we note our beloved Pres. F. M. Smith, who by invitation attended the Commercial Club annual dinner on the 29th, at which he gave a well appreciated talk on Civic Improvement, accompanied with stereopticon views.

"The year that lies ahead may bring Successes that you long have sought,
Or leave you sadly wondering
Why all your efforts come to naught.

To fail, will be your own affair
The world will gain, if you succeed."

Conference Minutes.

SOUTHERN NEBRASKA.—District convened with the Eustis Branch, at Eustis, Nebraska, January 15 and 16, 1911. At 10 a. m. the conference assembled and spent the time in prayer and testimony, Brn. G. W. Johnson and C. E. Blodgett in charge. At 11 a. m., after the usual form of opening the service, Elder Paul M. Hanson, district president, was chosen to preside over the conference; Sr. Edith Trask, secretary; Sr. Emma Croft chorister, empowered to choose the organist. The preaching of the conference was by W. M. Self, Paul M. Hanson, and C. E. Blodgett. At 10 a. m. January 16, assembled for business, Paul M. Hanson in the chair. Elder Walter M. Self was chosen to assist in presiding over the conference. The committee on credentials, consisting of M. E. Johnson and W. M. Self, was appointed. Ministerial reports were read as follows: Seventy, W. M. Self, Paul M. Hanson, C. H. Porter. Elders, James Huff, Samuel Broliar, G. W. Johnson, W. E. Grubb, II, A. Higgins, and C. E. Blodgett. Priest Gottlieb Keller. Deacon Charles Nichols. Statistical reports from the following branches read: Blue River, Nebraska City, Fairfield, Eustis and Franklin. The Bishop's agent's report was read and on motion was received, and a committee on auditing was appointed, consisting of W. J. Johnson and C. E. Blodgett. The following officers were elected for the district: President, Paul M. Hanson; secretary, H. A. Higgins. Elder C. H. Porter was sustained as Bishop's agent. A statement of expense was read by the secretary and on motion was allowed. Delegates to General Conference were chosen as follows: Paul M. Hanson, W. M. Self, C. H. Porter, J. R. Sutton, A. D. Collins, G. W. Johnson, C. E. Blodgett, Sr. Hallie Nichols, Della Spear, Amy Parr, Ruby Faunce, M. Dunlavy, Margaret Orr, Bro. G. Keller, H. A. Higgins, Charles Nichols, Samuel Broliar, Wilber Savage, Sr. G. Keller, G. W. Johnson, Henrietta Keller, Bro. Earl Robertson, Sr. Alma Anderson, and James Croft. The delegates present at the General Conference were empowered to cast full delegate vote and, in case of a division, a majority and minority vote. The committee on auditing reported that they had examined the Bishop's agent's accounts, which included a period from January 1, 1910, to December 31, 1910, and found the records to be correct. The report was adopted. The place of the next conference: Fairfield, Nebraska. A notice of motion was ordered to the effect that the branches be advised that the question of holding our business session of the conferences on Saturday rather than the present system, which is Monday, would be moved and that the branches instruct their delegates relative to the question and instruct as to their wishes in the matter. The time of the next conference was left to the call of the president. After the reading of the minutes and their approval the conference adjourned as per previous resolution. H. A. Higgins, secretary.

SASKATCHEWAN.—District conference met with the Minnesota Branch, Vanscoy, Saskatchewan, December 31, 1910, and January 1, 1911. First session was opened by district president, T. J. Jordan. Organization of conference proceeded as follows: Elder T. J. Jordan, president; Elder Josh Dobson, vice-president; Elder J. R. Beckley, second vice-president; Mrs. Alvin Beckman, secretary; Elder H. J. Davison, assistant secretary; Miss Etta Beckman, organist; Mrs. S. Van Eaton, chorister; Brn. F. Rowe, Alvin Beckman, and Sr. Ed. Nun, auditing committee; Brn. Lewis Anderson and Roy Bowerman, janitors and ushers; Elders S. W. Tomlinson, J. L. Mortimer, and E. E. Williams, administering committee; Elder H. J. Davison, press committee; Srs. Ed. Nun, S. Van Eaton, and Brn. Ed. Anderson, Thomas Smith, and Fred Rowe a committee to choose speakers and set hours for preaching. Ministry reports: District presidency, Josh Dobson, J. R. Beckley, and T. J. Jordan; Branch presidents, J. A. Beckman, E. E. Williams, and Ed. Anderson; branch priests, Lewis Anderson; deacons, Brethren Scott and Thomas Smith. Motion prevailed that we request all district officers to make written reports to district conferences. Seating of tent committee gave verbal report through H. J. Davison, but nothing had been done. Committee on preaching services reported and was referred back for possible alterations. Branch reports adopted as follows: Ribstone, last report 43, present number 47; Minnesota, last report 48, present 51; Zion's Hill, last 15, present number 22; Disley, last 31, present 55; Betland, last 21, present 22; Bon Accord, last 22, present 22; Iowa, last 37, present 41; Weyburn, last 67, present 66; Edgerton, 19; Sunnyvale, 19. Some of the brethren had been ordained, but had not received license through failure to report. Motion prevailed that district president investigate the matter and if necessary grant to Bro. J. R. Neill his license. District treasurer's report was read, referred to auditors, and found correct. By motion, the treasurer was requested to hereafter report in writing and if unable to attend, it be sent to district secretary. Bishop's agent's report was read, referred to auditing committee and found correct. District secretary's bill of expenses was read, referred to auditors, found correct and ordered paid. "Resolved, That inasmuch as the order passed at the Ribstone conference of 1909, on the matter of tobacco using, has not been acted upon; this conference declare it null and void and in place of it adopts the following: That the district regrets the use of tobacco by any of its members, and we look with disfavor upon any of the priesthood being appointed to office who are so addicted." Motion prevailed that the presidency of the district and the secretary examine the books in the matter of the division line between Manitoba and Saskatchewan districts, and they be authorized to correct the same if there is any mistake. Motion prevailed that the Saskatoon Branch be disorganized and that the district president and secretary be authorized to grant letters of removal to all members of said branch. In the matter of the division of the Saskatchewan District, motion prevailed that we still consider the question, but that the time for division is not quite ripe and that the matter be left in the hands of the minister in charge and district president. Invitations were extended from Ribstone and Sedley as the place for holding the next district semiannual conference. Voting resulted in Sedley being chosen. Auditors' report was read, and approved. Motion prevailed that this district send Elder T. J. Jordan to the next General Conference as a delegate, with expenses paid. The following motions prevailed: That the presidency of the district with the delegate appointed to General Conference be appointed to draft a petition to the Twelve requesting them to send at least ten missionaries to the Saskatchewan District next year. That the executive of the district take such steps as they deem advisable to raise funds for delegate's expenses. That all delegates appointed by this body be expected to give a written report to be read at the two following district conferences. That the delegates sent by the Religio and Sunday school also be put on our list of delegates. That a vote of thanks be given to the Minnesota Branch for all they have done to make this conference a success. (Carried by hearty hand clapping.) That Elder J. A. Beckman be appointed to solicit subscriptions to the Sunday World, subscriptions to be forwarded to Bishop R. C. Evans. That the time for next district conference be left in the hands of the presidency. That Brethren Mortimer, Davison, and Rowe be put on the committee relative to the tent to investigate the condition of tent and report to presidency of the district. That the matter of ordaining Brother Rowe be referred to the branch of which he is a member, they to report to the presidency of the district. That we accept the covers and all loose leaves of the district record books that have not been used and reject whatever is useless, instructing the secretary to order new leaves and fill out the records. That the expenses of the missionaries attending this conference be paid to their respective fields of labor out of district funds. At 3.30 Saturday, there was preaching by Elder E. E. Williams, assisted by Bro. Lewis Anderson. At 6.30, Elder S. W. Tomlinson preached, assisted by Elder Josh Dobson. At 7.30 there was an hour given to the Religio and Sunday school for an interesting and profitable program. Sunday services: Prayer meeting at 9.15 a. m., in charge of Elders H. J. Davison, S. W. Tomlinson, and William McIntosh. Preaching at 11 a. m., by Elder J. A. Beckman, assisted by Bro. Fred A. Rowe. Preaching at 2.30 p. m., by Elder J. R. Beckley, assisted by Elder Ed. Anderson. Preaching at 6.30 p. m., by T. J. Jordan and J. L. Mortimer, assisted by H. J. Davison. Total collections taken up at this conference amounted to $27.20. Mrs. Alvin Beckman, district secretary.

Convention Minutes.

FAR WEST.—District convention met at Stewartville, Missouri, January 14, 1911, at 10.30 a. m. There being no officers present, Bro. J. S. Andes, of Cameron, Missouri, acted as superintendent, and Sr. Violet Wilke was appointed to act as secretary pro tem. All reports were read and acted upon. District officers were elected as follows: Superintendent, Sr. Hugh Cochran; assistant superintendent, Bro. J. S. Andes; secretary, Sr. Violet Wilke; superintendent of home department, Sr. Emma Lewis; treasurer, Bro. G. W. Mauzey; member of library board, Sr. Carrie Lewis. Delegates to General Convention were appointed. Bro. Jesse Roberts and Charles Harpe gave us a talk on Sunday school work. Interesting programs were rendered, and all seemed to enjoy themselves. A short time was given to normal work on Sunday afternoon, conducted by Sr. Carrie Lewis. Adjourned to meet at Saint Joseph, Missouri, First Branch, July, 1911. Miss Violet Wilke, secretary, 420 North Seventeenth street, Saint Joseph, Missouri.

NORTHWESTERN ILLINOIS.—District Sunday school association convened at Chicago, Illinois, January 20, 1911, at 2.30 p. m. The general routine of business was transacted. Fifty delegates to General Conference were chosen. (Send your list to general secretary, D. J. Krahl, 724 South Chrysler street, Independence, Missouri.) The delegates were empowered to cast full vote of the district, and in case of division a majority and minority vote. Officers for the district were elected as follows: Sr. F. M. Cooper, superintendent; Lester Wildermuth, assistant superintendent; LaJune Howard, secretary; Glenn Fairbanks, home department superintendent; LaJune Howard, treasurer; Blanche Fairbanks, member of library board. Delegates were instructed to petition General Convention to have first primary lessons conform with the other grades of the Quarterly. Adjourned, leaving time and place of next meeting with the superintendent, and to be published. LaJune Howard, secretary.

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—Religio convention met January 20, 1911, at Chicago, Illinois. Reports of the officers, also local reports, were read and accepted. Several interesting talks and suggestions on how to encourage the Religian and especially the young in attending and taking part in the Religio were given. The following were elected as delegates to the General Convention: Bro. and Sr. Fred Bone, Sr. Blanche Fairbanks, Bro. Glenn Fairbanks, Bro. Vernon Reese, Bro. William Reese, Bro. J. A. Tanner, Bro. Joseph Blakely, Sr. Alice C. Schwartz, Sr. Grace Johnson, Bro. Chris Hartshorn, Sr. Helen Robinson, Sr. Pearl Hartshorn, and Bro. John Harris. Adjourned to meet Friday, at 10 a. m., preceding next conference. Blanche Fairbanks, district secretary.

Conference Notices.

This is a request, with the hope that every local man will heed it so that we may have a complete record of what has been done in the mission to report to General Conference. J. W. WIGHT.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, January 23, 1911.

Died.

SHEPARDSON.—Amanda J. Shepardson died at Tabor, Iowa, December 26, 1910, aged 71 years and 3 months. She was born in Virginia; came to Iowa with her husband, Isaac A. Hardy, during the civil war. Brother and Sister Hardy united with the church many years ago, and continued in the faith. The year after the death of her husband, in 1896, she was united in marriage to Bro. Joseph Shepardson, who also passed on several years ago. Services conducted at the Tabor Baptist church by Charles Fry. Six children, 28 grandchildren, and 12 great-grandchildren hold her in precious remembrance.

CHUTE.—Flora J. Chute was born at Leister, New York, March 4, 1843. Died at San Francisco, California, January 2, 1911. Baptized October 5, 1838, at Saint Louis, Missouri, by Elder R. Etzenhouser. Was a member of the San Francisco Branch and died with the hope of a glorious resurrection. She leaves one son and two grandsons. Funeral sermon by Elder Charles A. Parkin. Her remains were cremated at Piedmont, January 4, 1911.

SLOAN.—Mrs. Jane Sloan. Born November 10, 1828, in Wayne County, Kentucky. Died near Cameron, Missouri, January 17, 1911. She united with the Baptist Church when in girlhood days. Married to Mr. Matthew Sloan in 1848. He died in 1893. Three children, nineteen grandchildren, twenty-three great-grandchildren, and one great-great-grandchild are left to mourn. She heard the latter day message in her old age and was favorably impressed. By her request she was laid to rest in the Saints' Cemetery, Delano Branch, near Cameron, Missouri. Services in charge of Bro. Ben Constance, sermon by William Lewis. Grandma is gone, but there is much to her credit, for she was one of the honorable daughters of earth.

China's famine is spreading. The latest cable advices from Peking state that a thousand people are dying daily of starvation and famine fever in the three afflicted provinces. There is every likelihood that conditions will become worse during the next three months. The imperial government, although doing its best to help the sufferers, finds itself, as in the last famine, unable to halt the migrating multitudes in the flooded sections from which they are flocking to the cities, leaving lines of dead strewn along the highways. Relief committees at Shanghai and Chinkiang are doing good work, but with very limited means.—The Christian Herald.

has all the elements necessary to rebuild the body, Nitrate or muscle element; Phosphate or brain, nerve, bone, and tooth elements. While flour is only a carbonate, heat or fat. Many brands of the white flour on the market are adulterated with clay, gypsum, cockle, cotton seed, etc. Besides the bleaching process, with sulphur and acids, and to complete the white process they electrocute the flour, so it has not even a shadow of Life elements. The purpose and proper use of white flour is paste purposes, such as paper hanging, bill posters, shirt bosoms, book bindery, etc. It retards digestion and a sure diet to produce sickness and a premature death.

Good Health Flour is only $1 per sack of 24½ pounds. Bread, breakfast food, pan-cakes, muffins, biscuits, etc., can only be fully appreciated by those that partake of it. Rebuild health and live on less than ten cents per day. 2¢

Who Was There That You Knew?

IN the shadowy ranks of those who marched to defeat or death or victory fifty years ago in the mighty conflict that convulsed this great nation, is there father or grandfather or uncle of yours? Would you like to see a photograph of him in that long ago day of his youth—a photograph that he never knew was taken? Perhaps we can show you one; and in any case, we can tell you a story, stranger than any detective fiction, of 3,500 priceless photographs that were lost and are found again.

3,500 Long Buried Photographs of the Civil War

THEY were taken by the greatest photographer in the United States of that day; they were bought by the United States Government for $30,000; they were buried in the War Department for 50 years—they are buried there still. But a duplicate set was kept by the photographer—who died poor and broken down; that duplicate set was knocked from pillar to post for nearly 50 years, until it was discovered by a New England collector. J. Pierpont Morgan tried to secure the collection—Ex-President Garfield and General Benjamin F. Butler said it was worth $150,000—yet with the help of the Review or Reviews, the entire collection has been gathered into 10 great volumes and is placed within your reach at less than the value of one of the photographs. It is the one accurate, impartial history of the Civil War—the camera cannot lie. It tells the story of the War you never heard before. Taken under protection of the Secret Service, these photographs bring to light thousands of little-known phases of the war; they penetrate to strange places and record strange things.

can do well on one of the Government irrigated homesteads in the Big Horn Basin of Wyoming. These lands are wonderfully rich for growing all kinds of small grain crops, alfalfa; potatoes, sugar beets, vegetables and fruits.

TERMS OF PAYMENT—The water right for these irrigated homesteads that can be had adjoining new towns along the Burlington Lines, can be paid for in ten yearly payments without interest. As a matter of fact, after the first payment is made at the time of filing, two crops can be raised before the next annual payment must be paid. If during the two years allowed the land is seeded down to alfalfa the returns from alfalfa will more than meet the payments to the government, and the usual running expenses of an 80-acre farm.

THE VALUE OF CHRISTIAN LOVE.

Many city churches are made up of people who do not even know one another, and who do not want to know one another. Too many village churches are composed of people who know one another, and are sorry that they do.—Charles E. Russell, Pastor Broadway Tabernacle, New York City, before Divinity School, Yale University.

All churches to which the above statements apply will find in them one answer to the question, so oft repeated, "Why don't men come to church?"

Men can find indifference, animosity, war, in almost any construction gang, department store, counting room, or factory. When they enter the quiet sanctity of the church and mingle with men and women who profess to be followers of Christ they expect to find these men and women on a higher plane, where Christian affection is vital, spontaneous, lasting.

Christ said, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." Men feel instinctively that the converse is true, and they conclude that men and women who do not love one another are not disciples. The fact that they have built a church building and have a pastor can not make them disciples. Pipe organs, paid choirs, stained glass windows, postludes, preludes, solos, anthems, oratorios, offerings, prayers, rituals, readings, sermons, professions can not make them disciples.

We hold that the man who feels this way is right, because in modern revelation the Lord has said, "Be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine."—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 6.

The great importance of love justifies its prominent place in Christian theology. There can be no regeneration of the individual without Christian love; and without regenerated individuals there can be no regenerated community. Repentance, baptism, the reception of the Holy Ghost may bring to one a remission of sins and win for him membership in the church. This is only the beginning. If he continues faithful the Holy Spirit will educate him in the way of love, for one of the fruits of the Spirit is love. But if he harks back to the things of the world and permits selfishness to rule his heart, the Spirit departs and his membership will soon become merely nominal. Such a man Christ rejects and declares that he is none of his. He becomes in fact a dead branch that in the event of a failure of all effort to incite to revival, waits but the sharp knife of formal excommunication.

At present the church courts can take cognizance of unchristianlike conduct only; but Christ recognizes unchristianlike mental and spiritual habits and withdraws his Spirit, which is often the initial process in the work of rejection and excommunication; and unchristianlike attitude of mind and condition of heart soon manifest themselves in conduct so that church officials are in due time enabled to sense the situation and administer such remedy as justice tempered with mercy shall direct.

No man who has not Christian love can permanently cooperate with the brotherhood. The reason is obvious: He does not work for others; he works for himself alone. Christian cooperation means that all shall work together for the good of all; that every man shall seek to conserve the interests of his brethren, thus securing the surest conservation of his own interests, in a strong brotherhood wherein all are for him and no man's hand against him. A man who can not cooperate with the brotherhood will sooner or later revert to the world, where there is opportunity for the employment of his natural propensities in the strife and brutal competition that prevail in the world, and so far as we know will continue until Christ himself shall come to reign over the peaceably inclined who cherish good will toward men, and in his own due time restrain by methods of his own selection those who are turbulent and hateful.

Realizing these facts full well, the ancient apostles, Peter, Paul, and John, constantly urged the saints to cherish, feed, and enlarge the divine flame of love. John made it the test of life, and declared, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren."

There is an old tradition, having the merit of probability, that when John was very old and unable to walk, the young men would carry him in and place him in a chair before the congregation, and he would repeat his one injunction, "Little children, love one another."

There is work to-day for preachers of the type of John. His injunction might be made the basis of many sermons and the mainspring of many kind deeds. We honor and admire powerful preachers, logical preachers, sound doctrinal preachers; but we must also have our preachers of love, those who can stir the heart and rouse dormant affections. Such men do the work of Christ. The man who sets himself the task to knit the hearts of men together is doing God's will. He may find it slow and arduous work, for one has written: "Not until a minister tries to build a brotherhood does he realize how unsocial human nature is, how narrow and how cold."

Men are naturally gregarious. Some force draws them together. The recluse is the rare exception. What force impels them to congregate we can dimly divine; perhaps it is the unguessed inner premonition of the coming brotherhood. But when they come together, in answer to that drawing, friction develops at many points of contact and it is discovered how narrow and how petty human nature can be.

The inception of Christian love may be among two or more individuals; but its dominion need not be limited. It may include a community, or even a nation, if ever a nation shall be established that is indeed a brotherhood.

In a speech before the House of Representatives, Washington, District of Columbia, on the occasion of the Lincoln Centennial, February 12, 1909, Representative Nye said:

Love as a basis of state has never yet been tried. Statesmen have not advocated it; no one has dared to trust it; but the time will come when we will see, or our children or children's children will see that this is the one potent and omnipotent force of all the universe.

Such is the dream that may some day become real; a nation founded on love great enough to dispense with force. But at present we must deal with individuals. Let no man dream of evangelizing a nation or a state until he has evangelized his own heart, and can love his brother, and live at peace with his neighbor, and work in harmony with the man at his side.

If we are disciples, we must show that fact by our mutual love. A congregation composed of men and women who do not know each other and prefer to remain strangers, or of those who know each other and are sorry that they do, is no part of the body of Christ. Its every profession of faith is a libel on his name and memory.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

NOTICE OF AMENDMENT.

Notice is hereby given that at the General Conference convening at Lamoni, Iowa, April 6, 1911, there will be introduced a resolution to amend chapter 15, paragraph 170, page 105, of Rules of Order and Debate, as follows:

Resolved, That chapter 15, paragraph 170, page 105, of Rules of Order and Debate be, and is hereby amended by striking out the words "preside over the branch in 'the city of the Stake' or seat of organization"; so that said paragraph hereafter shall read: "The duties of the stake presidency are to have immediate charge and oversight of the general spiritual work in the stake, subject to the advice and direction of the general church officers, who have general control of the work everywhere by virtue of their office, or special appointment; and look after the welfare and discipline of the members within the confines of the Stake."

ROBERT WINNING.

613 BROOKLYN AVENUE, KANSAS, CITY, MISSOURI.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Iowa Methodists are making a strong effort to bring the Methodist General Conference to Des Moines, for 1912.

According to a late census in China, the population is very close to 439,214,000. This is considered more reliable than any former count.

In reference to Independence branch news in last issue, we are informed that the Forbis obsequies were held at the Forbis residence, and not at Brother Joseph's as stated. The copy was not clear on this point, hence the mistake. Through a typographical error, Sr. Dru Messenger is said to have displayed "historic" talent; it should have read "histrionic." The name of J. H. Logman, should have read, Logeman.

J. F. Mintun, of Des Moines, Iowa, has been quite successful in reaching the public through the press. We notice that he has an article in the Register and Leader for January 30, and one in the Daily News for January 27, both in defense of the character of Joseph Smith, and the work that he founded, and in reply to misstatements contained in recent magazine articles. The Arapaho Bee, of Arapaho, Oklahoma, for January 27, contains a column article by Elder W. R. Smith in defense of the idea of continued revelation.

Along with the gaunt specter of famine in China, comes the terrible plague. It promises to be the "most virulent epidemic in the world's history." It has gripped the northern provinces of Chihli and Shantung, which have a population of over fifty millions. The missionary hospitals and dispensaries are said to be the only hope of combating the scourge, as they far outnumber the doctors employed by the Chinese Government.

Ray Stannard Baker has remarked that physicians are beginning to find out that man has a soul, while ministers of religion are finding out that man has a body. This is especially so in the work of those foreign missionaries who take up work in Asia, Africa, India, and the Islands. Nowhere is the knowledge of medicine and surgery so necessary to the missionary as in those benighted countries having a congested population.

Speaking of the appointment and departure of Miss Edith Davis as a missionary to northern China, under the American Board of Missions, the Des Moines Capital, Iowa, says: "The world has too little appreciation of the sublime heroism involved in the life which is dedicated to foreign missionary service. And one of the most beautiful phases of it all is that the missionary takes up the work with the utmost naturalness, asking or expecting no credit whatever, content with an approving conscience and the assurance of heaven's benediction. . . .

"The man or woman who sneers at the cause of foreign missions has a singularly narrow view of life. It is not of record that a missionary ever gave up the work because of becoming tired of it. To be an instrumentality in the hands of divinity in leading mortals out of darkness into light seems to bring a joy beyond anything which this world could possibly give."

W. G. Roberts, of Anti-Mormon fame, appears in the Octographic Review published at Indianapolis, Indiana, for January 10, in an article entitled "Mormonism exploded." He professes to refute the claim that Robert Fowler, of Philadelphia, was healed, as testified to by his father in SAINTS' HERALD for July 6, 1910.

Roberts wrote to the Director of Public Safety of Philadelphia, and that individual said he knew nothing about the case excepting that Robert Fowler was treated at the Episcopal Hospital. He also wrote Dr. W. R. Brown, one of the physicians of the hospital, asking certain questions of the case, and Dr. Brown replied that the questions were ridiculous, and that he would not answer them, so that Roberts' much wanted evidence consists of two letters, one from an individual who did not know anything about the case, and another from an individual who will not say anything about it. Now, on this evidence he proceeds to build an article quite in harmony with the evidence he has produced.

One of our exchanges remarks that there are some selfish and slothful people in the world who get it into their heads that the world owes them something because in pity it has helped them in times of dire distress and hard luck. "The world owes no man a living, but every man owes the world an honest effort to get one," if he is able, of course. The wisest and most lasting benevolence is that which not only gives emergency aid, but works also on the policy of helping others to help themselves. Such is one of the main ideas of the Order of Enoch, if we mistake not. The churches of men have been treating social and economic symptoms long enough, making of the poor mere "hangers on" who finally lose independence of character. The community also loses useful citizens. Let the church of God arise to the occasion and advance beyond the treatment of symptoms to causes. Had the churches in the world been occupying as they should, there would have been no need for so many fraternity and other orders and lodges which have been forced to band themselves together to secure the practical temporal brotherhood features so woefully lacking in modern religion.

The American Issue says: "Reading rooms, libraries, and homes are all interested in clean literature. It is dangerous to boys and young men to place in their hands newspapers and magazines in which are displayed whisky and beer advertisements. Many such periodicals are little more than barkers for certain brands of intoxicants. The number of papers and magazines which have cut out liquor advertisements is growing fast and it is possible to secure the best publications, especially magazines, without being insulted by having such advertisements confront you. The following well known magazines do not advertise liquors. If we have missed any we will be glad to give them honorable mention:

All Story, American Boy, American Magazine, American Review of Reviews, Arena, Argosy, Century, Circle, Collier's, Country Life in America, Current Literature, Delineator, Designer, Everybody's Magazine, Garden Magazine, Good House Keeping, Housekeeper, Housewife, Ladies' Home Journal, Ladies' World, Literary Digest, Living Age, McClure's Magazine, Modern Priscilla, Munsey's Magazine, New Idea Woman's Magazine, New England Magazine, Ocean, Outlook, Railroad Men's Magazine, Saturday Evening Post, Scrap Book, St. Nicholas, Suburban Life, Success Magazine, Uncle Remus' Magazine, Woman's Home Companion, Woman's Magazine, World To-day, and Youth's Companion."

We take pleasure in adding to the above list, THE SAINTS' HERALD, Autumn Leaves, Zion's Ensign, and others of our publications that have always been on the list of "clean literature."

Where do you stand on this live question? Here are some pertinent questions from The American Issue:

Would you want to die in the saloon?

Would you want to see your mother in the saloon?

Would you want to meet your wife in the saloon?

Would you want your daughter to frequent the saloon?

Would you admit the saloon keeper into your home as your social equal?

Would you advise your son to spend his leisure time in the saloon?

Would you want a saloon operated next door to your home?

Would you point to the saloon as one of the good institutions of your town?

Would you be shocked to see your minister enter the saloon?

Would you make companions of those who hang out at the saloon?

Would you place the saloon on the same equality with the grocery, the dry goods store, and the meat market?

Would you consider it an honor to be known as a saloon patron?

Would it add to your standing in your town to be known as a saloon sympathizer?

If you answer these questions in the affirmative there is no reason why you do not oppose the saloon.

If you answer them in the negative, then as a good citizen you should join the forces moving forward to the abolition of the saloon.

A Mother's Prayer.

Holy Bible, book divine,
Priceless treasure given thee;
Let its words thy heart enshrine,
Guiding star through life to be,
Give thy heart to God alone,
Still he claims thee for his own.

Holy Bible, gift from mother,
Read its pages o'er and o'er;
Word of God there is no other,
That can guide thee to that shore
Where bright angels waiting stand
To lead thee to that heavenly land.

Holy Bible, may its teachings,
Stay thy hand from every ill,
May its guiding counsels ever
Help thee do thy Master's will,
Help all evil deeds to shun
Till thy work on earth is done.

When at last thy brow is moistened,
With the touch of death's cold dew,
Let this thought that dark hour brighten,
Mother's Bible led me through.
Led me through to heaven, my home,
Robbing death of all its gloom.

SR. OLIVE L. CHRISSINGER.

A Blessing.

God has a blessing for each one,
A blessing thus in store,
If we his blessed law would keep
And learn to love him more.

The prophets and apostles
And the patriarchs of old,
Have thus in their writings
Of these blessings thus foretold.

Oh, may we learn his word each day,
With more earnestness of heart,
To guide us to that happy home,
That place called Paradise.

Oh, may our prayers be not in vain,
Oh, may we that perfect love obtain
That leads us to that peaceful rest
Which Christ alone can give.

Oh, may we speak some gentle words
To cheer some poor, aching heart,
Those words of love that you express
May lead them to eternal rest.

WM. W. ARMSTRONG.

A Successful Year.

Hail the bright and happy new year,
Hopes of joys to come.
Singing praise to Christ our Savior
Will our work be done.

Praying that his love may enter
Each and every heart;
On his words our minds we'll center
Wisdom to impart.

Let us by the strength he gives us
Better try to be;
Keeping all of his commandments,
Peace and love we'll see.

May we seek to spread the gospel
Wherever we may be;
Some poor, honest hearted pilgrim
Perhaps its truth may see.

Then if we try our best to follow
In the steps Christ trod,
Praying ever for his Spirit,
Give our hearts to God;

Doing well each task before us,
Though hard it is and drear;
Not complaining of the burden,
Success will crown the year.

II. COOPERATION.

What is cooperation? "The act of operating together to one end; joint operation; concurrent effort or labor; as, the cooperation of the combined powers, the cooperation of the understanding and the will."—Webster. Cooperative, "operating jointly to the same end." All the members of our human body cooperate to the well-being of our body and spirit, when the will and the understanding cooperate. Sometimes the will is good enough, but the understanding is unfruitful, with result the body is not benefited. Cooperation and competition can not work at the one time in the body, system, or institution without disorder, and final destruction. One is the exact opposite of the other. "God is not the author of confusion." Sun, moon, planets, earth and stars cooperate in nature to the same end. When the unity ordained in nature is in the least disturbed in any of its parts, the purpose or end is detrimentally disturbed, and to just that extent fails. The different planets or bodies in nature do not all perform the same ordinances or offices; but that done by each, though differing in function, works for the subsistence of the whole unless it be hindered from harmonious operation with the whole, by an opposing object or influence.

The Father is not engaged in sending ministers to teach a contrariety of doctrines, to divide and distract men religiously while his son prays that "all who believe on" him, "through" the words taught by him through the testimony of his witnesses "may be one,"—one in belief, faith, and per consequence one in him, and in Spirit.

For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office: So we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another. Having then gifts (talents and their endowments,) differing according to the grace given us, whether prophecy . . . or ministry . . . teaching . . . exhortation.

He that hath talents to accumulate and give, or the ability to rule or govern, let all work, cooperate for the good of all the body, to the great end, the well being of the whole. Competition is war, cooperation is peace and development and growth in any one given body. Health and disease sometimes compete for the mastery in the same body or system. What is the result if competition continues? But that physical, mental, or spiritual diversity ordained of God to be carried out by the members of the one body never disturb the growth of the body or create schism.

Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same spirit. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal.—1 Corinthians 12: 4-7.

To profit withal. Stop and study these words of Paul a while. Diversities of operations by the one Holy Spirit. Diversities of gifts,—endowments—by the one Holy Spirit. "Differences of administration, but the same Lord." But in all these diversified gifts, operations, and administrations there is complete, harmonious "cooperation" of spiritual and intellectual power to the development, prosperity of the one body of Christ. That body thus equipped, and fitly framed together, groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord. (Ephesians 2: 21, 22.) A competitive element or elements in this one body or temple thus "fitly framed together" would unavoidably produce "schism," inharmony, division.

The endowments of the members of the one body of Christ are designed to cooperate for the well being of the whole. Yet the body is not one member, but many, but "being many are one body: so also is Christ." "Is Christ divided?" Can anyone endowed with these gifts use them to get personal renown? Use them to build up self? To attain human greatness? Can anyone use a divine gift or office to operate against any other person? Should they be used to compete with others? (See Acts 8: 18-24.) Six verses,—but read and study them. Do not neglect it. You may not have thought how much there is in them. An endowment one would wish to buy one would be willing to sell. God must be glorified by these talents. His kingdom must be advanced. The salvation of souls in eternal glory is God's purpose in the existence of the church, and it includes priesthood offices and all spiritual gifts and endowments.

Note what disgrace, contempt, and folly has followed men in the history of the past, who have prostituted office and gift to selfish ends. (See Jude 11, also verse 14; 2 Kings 16; Acts 5: 1-10.) That consecrated with the blood of Christ can not be trifled with. (Ephesians 5: 25-27; Acts 2: 47.)

Does the church, the body of Christ, fitly framed together embrace the law relating to temporal things? Is the law of tithing, freewill offering, and consecration, with the purposes thereof as described in revelation, a plant of the gospel of Jesus Christ?

The use of means in order to accomplish the divine purpose in man's salvation is adapted to conditions existing on earth among men. This proposition no one will deny. Can the differing talents of men in calling and pursuit of means to finance church work be so adjusted as to cooperate in accomplishing the end sought,—the promulgation of the gospel, the care of the needy, and the building up of Zion? Cooperation is the mode of creating, organizing worlds, and in all engaged in by the Godhead, and with them the angels of heaven cooperate. The laws of nature, so-called, ordained to sustain the worlds, in their relation and purposes all cooperate. The Holy Spirit in the salvation of man with diversities of gifts and office work cooperate. The quorums and councils of the church cooperate, although differing in administrations. Surely from all these facts, cooperation is right, is of heaven, surely all the members of the church ought to labor cooperatively, though they differ in calling, pursuit, and diversity in method and administration. The inspirational motive prompting all being the salvation of their fellow-man, and the building of Zion, the kingdom of God. A divergence of energy in this, as other great purposes, would result in competition and division. Division and rebellion are closely allied, and when allowed to operate bring disaster, anywhere and everywhere. All success in all varieties of effort is the result of cooperation. Competition always results in failure, somewhere to somebody. Competition in heaven was the result of covetousness, and brought disaster to some of the angels never yet retrieved. Satan coveted the glory rightly belonging to the Son for saving mankind, (Genesis 3:1-4.) and this covetousness of that glory, caused Satan to rebel and he was hurled out of heaven and into the regions of darkness.

Cooperation of God's people in righteousness in things temporal and spiritual is the only success of God's people in the last days. The ministry and the men of business of the church are to labor together in bringing about the great purposes of God now. Organization is found necessary by the Lord in the accomplishment of his work, (see Doctrine and Covenants 51) according to his law, (also 77:1). Can competition in business relations be a success in any organization, and not produce disorder and division? Answer who may. Diversity in unity can; competition never. But some one will say, is not competition a healthy stimulus to trade and prosperity in the United States Government? Is the Government in competition with itself? Where? How? What is the result when one business man or organization goes into competition with another man or organization? Does not one or the other go down and out of business if competition continues between them? How do you account for so many business wrecks in our country? Mismanagement, you say? But does individual mismanagement affect illy? Yes, if the mismanager be a leading officer. In that case the mismanagement may be the result of an effort to compete with some one in some given case. What are the results of the array of the Honorable Messrs. Ballinger, and Pinchot to the two men, for instance? But take a case in the divine government, where the competitors are supposed to be directed by the perfect law and the Holy Spirit. Then take the case of any one organization of business competing within itself, among its own members, and have union prevail within itself.

Concurrent action, in any great enterprise, purpose, or end, is our only hope as the church of the living God. Each member must desire and labor for the good and well being of each and all the other members. Is not this true? Can this be done, and competition prevail?

But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness? No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye can not serve God and mammon.—Matthew 6: 23, 24.

Can you cooperate with your brother in spiritual, religious matters, and compete with him in temporal things? How would that be and appear?

"Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." (Matthew 7:12.) Shall I say: I am right in my enterprises and labor, it is therefore right if I enter into competition with my brother in business relation. My brother must suffer it; but if my brother goes in opposition to me, seeking to curtail the extent of my operations and limit my sales and market it is all wrong, can't you see? It is my right to devour him, but all wrong for him to do so to me! Oh, my little self! I am building up the kingdom. He is opposing me. I am loving my brother as myself; notwithstanding I am praying for him, I'll rout him out of business if I can. Thou hypocrite! Get that beam out of thine eye, then love thy brother, "nor do him any harm." "Love thy brother as thyself," is like, equal to, the first.

SURPLUS PROPERTY AND STEWARDSHIPS.

BY E. L. KELLEY, PRESIDING BISHOP.

CHAPTER 7.

The principles which govern in determining surplus properties and stewardships are in such strict harmony in application that a clearer idea may be had of each by considering the two subjects in close comparison.

Of the questions under full canvass by the Saints to-day along financial lines, those seemingly foremost in interest and importance deal with surplus properties and stewardships.

1. What is surplus and how is it ascertained?

2. What is a stewardship and how is it determined?

The first considers our circumstances and deals with properties which we have, more than we have need. The second considers the circumstances of the Saints and determines what is lacking and what shall be done so that any who may lack shall be supplied with what they need. Surplus properties and consecrations are by this divine order of adjustment made to meet the proper and necessary demands of the worthy and upright, bringing about the conditions of the true order of equality, wherein all are supplied, "Every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just."

In considering the questions the basis of settlement of any matter has always been the law of Christ. Many of the Saints, and many of the world, have their ideas and plans as to how the work of surplus and equality should be arranged. But our special views in the matter are often a hindrance rather than a help unless they strictly accord with the divine plan. The statement is quite clearly made in the law:

It is my purpose to provide for my Saints, for all things are mine; but it must needs be done in mine own way.—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

Why should we specially interest ourselves with the theories and plans of the world, then?

Whatever criticisms may be offered showing that the steps proposed fall short of, that they are not in harmony with the revealed law, would be pertinent and must be welcomed; but wisdom demands, that objections, or views claiming that some other way would be better, should find their basis in the divine order, not simply in the imagination of would-be-wise individuals.

A simple but pointed article under the caption, "What can we spare of the holding?" published January, 1902, treats of surplus properties and there are so many things set out in it that all should consider, we have thought best to reproduce it here.

Following is the article:

WHAT CAN WE SPARE OF THE HOLDING?

Questions upon the term, "Surplus property," as used in the law, are presented by a number of the Saints who, properly enough, desire to study more fully the financial system of the church, revealed and known as tithes and offerings.

Various opinions also seem to be entertained relative to the effect and results of the administration of that part of the law referring to surplus properties, and naturally enough some of these seem to be quite fanciful and little in keeping with what the actual results are likely to be, as well as those that wisely conclude that whatever the step, if it be in keeping with the divine law, the results will be found blending in harmony and order with all that God ever has directed or ever will direct his people to perform.

The object of the administration of the law of Zion is not to limit or circumscribe men and women in their efforts and abilities for good, but rather to fortify and enlarge their powers; and any interpretation of the law which tends to supersede or set aside the individual responsibility and duty of the membership to God, the family, the church, and the state must be contrary to the revealed word.

In a proper and orderly arrangement of the kingdom of God men and women are charged with duty and made responsible in their lives according to their several abilities, and it ought not to be conjectured that this divine order will not prevail wherever and under whatever conditions this kingdom is found.

In Zion and her stakes a proper stewardship and individual responsibility attaches to each member, as fully as in any other place, and the demand upon each equally pressing, to industriously improve every opportunity and devote the full powers of mind and body to the general good, answering for what he has and is, and not for what he has not.

The statement is hardly deniable in any sense, that in the building up of Zion and conserving her interests everyone who stands approved by the Master must devote thereto his greatest energies and abilities, all laboring according to their several abilities.

Proper individual enterprise, then, in business, education, invention, and art will not be interfered with by the church in its work, but rather stimulated and fostered, so that no person need hesitate to move out and do the best he can for fear the church, at some period, may step in and assume to do all the business itself, checking all enterprise and development, and essaying to answer to God for him for what he himself should render an account in his stewardship. Then as now there will exist the eternal decree, that God "will render to every man according as his works shall be," "for there is no respect of persons with God."

The nearer men and women get to God the more lively becomes their responsibility and duty to him, and in the full light of Zion there can certainly be no lessening of the divine claim upon each citizen for the free and full exercise of his faith and powers.

The administration of the law relating to surplus properties then will neither destroy the business of the people nor supersede the necessity of each one to do the best he can in his place and station; but it will place in the hands of the church sufficient means to enable it to perform its special work as the membership perform theirs; hence the purposes being set forth in the law, "for the building of mine house, and for the laying the foundation of Zion," etc.

The adjustment of the social order of Zion is outlined to be in giving to persons who do not have a stewardship such as is proper, rather than in taking away that which a man already has, and each when properly adjusted will be in proportion as he is willing and capable of successfully filling. Surplus property which is called for preparatory to such advanced conditions is that which can be spared by any person, and yet he be able to carry on his business or stewardship.

Men and women may readily determine what this is, and all that is demanded, if they will devotedly and prayerfully undertake it, and each is charged with this duty under the law and no one is so well qualified to pass upon the matter as the party himself and the bishop to whom he makes known all the conditions. The rule gives no place for the backbiter and mischievous whisperer, under a proper enforcement, to breed discord and division instead of oneness and harmony, for the inhabitants of Zion can not do these things and stand approved in their stewardships of whatever nature.

The duty of the Bishop comes in in making up the account when he is asked to give a certificate to the party showing that the surplus has been handed in; at that time he will have properly a full statement of the assets and liabilities of the member; for the provision is, that this shall be handed to the Bishop, and after he is properly informed, he will be able to pass upon the question of whether the offering is truly the surplus or not; and should he decide that it is not, this would end the matter until a decision is had after the matters have been properly presented to a high council of the stake, or the church. It is unfair and unbrotherly to presume that any brother or sister will try to evade the law and keep back a part of that which they should render an account of to the Lord. The very highest inducement is held out, that could be thought of, to cause them to do right in giving, for it is to Christ and his work for which they are to bring a present, and in such cause none but the most covetous will ever hesitate to do all that he can to aid.

It has been asked that after the surplus has once been given and the party giving it goes on and accumulates more property will he have to stop and give the surplus again. The law plainly answers this. It reads: "Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to be put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion, for the building of mine house, and for the laying the foundation of Zion, and for the priesthood, and for the debts of the presidency of my church; and this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them for ever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord."—Doctrine and Covenants 106: 1.

The law is plain as to what shall follow; viz: the tithe order, which has been the rule the past twenty years in the church and which has ever, so far as history reveals, been the order when the gospel of the kingdom of God has been preached and administered;—the decrees of Jehovah are perpetuated, being eternal and true.

In order to ascertain what the surplus is it will only be necessary for each one to make an inventory of what he has and then see what he can do without and yet get along and perform his work.

It would not be a true rule to ask whether the difference could be used in the business. The extending of the business can be taken up later; but now the question is, What can be spared to aid a work in which each one is as much interested, or should be, as he is in making a success of the business or work in which he is personally engaged? What can we spare of that which we have? How much of the savings in the bank; of the investment in business; of the land owned; of the amount allotted for family uses; of our live stock and implements; of grain and labor; of any unnecessary expenditures so often made? And when we begin to enter the same up, whether it be much or little, remember that the Lord's rule is that, "To whom much is given much will be required, and to whom little is given little is required." Whatever can be spared without permanent injury to the business or livelihood of the individual consecrating and setting the same apart, is surplus. What can we spare of the holding?
E. L. KELLEY.

LAMONI, IOWA, January 18, 1902.

Passing now from considering the divine order of determining "surplus," or "What can be spared from the holding," we take up the question of adjustment in meeting the "just wants and needs" of those who lack. In the gospel provisions, it is presented under the illustrative terms of

STEWARD AND STEWARDSHIP.

a. A STEWARD.

1. A steward is one who is in immediate charge over, having control and oversight and consequently held to full responsibility. (Genesis 43: 16-19, and 44: 4.) Also a caretaker. (Matthew 20: 9; Luke 8: 3.)

2. One having care and oversight of a large property, as an overseer. This may be an overseer over special work or of goods. (Luke 16: 1, 8.)

3. Also one who has special oversight and responsibility in administering and directing in the work and ordinances of the gospel, or of some department of gospel work.

Let a man so account of us, as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God. Moreover it is required of stewards, that a man be found faithful.—1 Corinthians 4: 1, 2.

As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God.—1 Peter 4: 10.

In modern times example is given by the appointment of Joseph Simth, jr., Martin Harris, Oliver Cowdery, John Whitmer, Sidney Rigdon, and William W. Phelps stewards over the revelations and commandments given to the church, and these parties were required or held to render an account of their stewardship, not only here but in the day of judgment.

Here the steward again is held responsible and it is to the work of those placed in special charge that we look for accuracy and may place confidence. This appointment was made in November, 1831.

These stewards were to be assisted from the revenue which came into their hands through this work, so far as required, but they were not limited to this assistance as a means of living, and if more came into their hands than was required, this had to be accounted for to the keeper of the storehouse. (Doctrine and Covenants 70: 1, 2, 3.)

The bishop was also instructed to furnish these same stewards, who had charge of the literary concerns of the church, assistance, and to aid them in their work and in their stewardships. (Doctrine and Covenants 72: 4.)

One placed in charge of special work in the church in financial matters is also a steward, a bishop.

For a bishop must be blameless, as the steward of God; not self-willed, not soon angry, not given to wine, no striker, not given to filthy lucre; but a lover of hospitality, a lover of good men, sober, just, holy, temperate; holding fast the faithful word as he hath been taught, that he may be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers.—Titus 1: 7-9.

b. A STEWARDSHIP.

The stewardship is the charge itself and should be sufficient to meet the ability and furnish occupation and fair income to the steward, that which will amply furnish him and also his family, or those under his charge. The income also to at least equal what would be a fair compensation for the work to be performed. "And the bishop also, shall receive his support, or a just remuneration for all his services, in the church."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 19. By examining the paragraph it will be noticed that this equally applies to all other officers who have been given a stewardship. "They are to receive a just remuneration for all their services; either a stewardship, or otherwise, as may be thought best, or decided by the counselors and bishop."—Ibid.

Again it is stated: "Every man should be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration, inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9. The statement in the paragraph in the language, "or that which he has received by consecration," refers to the giving of a stewardship to those who have not sufficient from the properties "consecrated," put into the hands of the bishop, for this purpose as set forth in paragraph 8 of the section.

The statement in paragraph 9, referring to the taking of testimonies concerning the consecration of properties, that they can not be taken from the church, refers to the properties turned over to the church for the poor and the needy; and not to the properties which some individual may have received by consecration, for a stewardship, or that which may have been set apart to him for this purpose.

The steward is to use the stewardship as his business and means of livelihood, and must deal honestly with others, and also render an account of his stewardship both in time and eternity.

Thou shalt stand in the place of thy stewardship; thou shalt not take thy brother's garment; thou shalt pay for that which thou shalt receive of thy brother; and if thou obtainest more than that which would be for thy support, thou shalt give it unto my storehouse, that all things may be done according to that which I have said.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 14.

See also Doctrine and Covenants 51: 2:

And let that which belongs to this people be appointed unto this people; and the money which is left unto this people, let there be an agent appointed unto this people to take the money, to provide food and raiment, according to the wants of this people. And let every man deal honestly, and be alike among this people, and receive alike, that ye may be one, even as I have commanded you.

This charge of honest and fair dealing in the stewardship with others is in strict harmony with the record in the Book of Mormon which states: "And they had all things common among them, every man dealing justly one with another."—Page 672, paragraph 1. There would indeed be commendation of a people who handled and dealt in the things which they possessed and were the stewards of, having full control and direction, and then under this free condition, "every man dealing justly, one with another"; but not much commendation for handling and dealing honestly in things which they could not use differently, if they wanted to do so. So the steward is to a degree necessarily a free man in his work.

As previously suggested, the stewardship referred to, so far as its benefits to the steward are concerned, should at least equal what would be "a just remuneration for the services rendered under it." The statement reads:

The priests and teachers shall have their stewardships, even as the members, and the elders, or high priests who are appointed to assist the bishop as counselors; in all things are to have their families supported out of the property which is consecrated to the bishop, for the good of the poor, and for other purposes, as before mentioned, or they are to receive a just remuneration for all their services; either a stewardship, or otherwise, as may be thought best, or decided by the counselors and bishop. And the bishop also, shall receive his support, or a just remuneration for all his services, in the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 19.

It is not intended that the income from the stewardship should be so skimpy that the steward could just barely live; but a good, reasonable sum, fairly at least, in proportion to the work to be performed, or if in wages, "a just remuneration for all the services" rendered. In either case, the rule holds good that he may gain other talents according to the instruction of Jesus. (Matthew 25: 14-28.) Here the giving of stewardships is well represented by the illustration of the distribution of goods, by Jesus as follows:

"And to one he gave five talents; to another two, and to another one; to every one according to his several ability." This is true equality, to give to everyone according to his ability. To give to every man just alike, whether they are able to handle the work or discharge the duty or not is to dispense inequality, not equality; to hand out hardships and distress, instead of stewardships or help that will give relief, comfort, consolation and peace. The instruction to Bishop Partridge touching organization and the giving of stewardships is in perfect harmony with this. The language is,

Hearken unto me, saith the Lord your God, and I will speak unto my servant Edward Partridge, and give unto him directions; for it must needs be that he receive directions how to organize this people, for it must needs be that they are organized according to my laws, if otherwise, they will be cut off; wherefore let my servant Edward Partridge, and those whom he has chosen, in whom I am well pleased, appoint unto this people their portion, every man equal according to their families, according to their circumstances, and their wants and needs; and let my servant Edward Partridge, when he shall appoint a man his portion, give unto him a writing that shall secure unto him his portion, that he shall hold it, even this right and this inheritance in the church, until he transgresses and is not accounted worthy by the voice of the church, according to the laws and covenants of the church, to belong to the church; and if he shall transgress, and is not accounted worthy to belong to the church, he shall not have power to claim that portion which he has consecrated unto the bishop for the poor and the needy of my church; therefore he shall not retain the gift, but shall only have claim on that portion that is deeded unto him. And thus all things shall be made sure according to the laws of the land.—Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1.

Notice again that in case of transgression and expulsion a party has no claim on "that portion which he has consecrated unto the bishop for the poor and the needy of the church"; but remember this is what the person has consecrated for the poor and needy, according to section 42: 8, where it defines the consecration to the church to be: "that which thou hast to impart unto them." The object of the law is the supplying of proper stewardships to those who lack, and extending to them opportunities to work, labor, and gain a livelihood.

The criticism that has been made then, that if all shall conform to the law and consecrate first as the law specifies, and as the Articles of the United Order of Enoch also state, to the church through the bishops before they unite with the Order of Enoch, that they will not have anything to help the Order of Enoch with, is not well taken.

The tendency and results of the administration of the law of Christ when done in the spirit and manner outlined in that law will always prove beneficial to those who are fulfilling the law, and bring reward and further ability to do, rather than to take away proper opportunities or lessen true ability to use one's talents. It is like the promise recorded in the fifteenth chapter of John, Every branch in me that beareth fruit he purgeth it that it may bring forth more fruit; and this giving of additional strength extends through all the work of the Master. The church will be in far better condition to carry on its work, and the Order of Enoch will be better equipped to perform its undertakings when the Saints fulfill the law of Christ as it is laid down in the books, than either can possibly be if we shall through little preferences try to help the one but disregard duty to the other. We have friends who follow the practice of sprinkling, just because it is their preference; but we tell them our preferences have nothing to do with the matter, it is Christ's law that must be honored. Why not be consistent, and practice what we preach?

In the organization of the church for its work and to meet these various conditions, in 1831, the statement was made, "For it must needs be that they are organized according to my law, if otherwise, they will be cut off; wherefore let my servant, Edward Partridge, and those whom he has chosen in whom I am well pleased, appoint unto this people their portion, every man according to his family, according to his circumstances and his wants and needs." This shows fully that if in our work we go according to the law there will be no trouble, but it is absolutely necessary that the law be fulfilled in our work, whether we can just see the immediate practical purpose in it or not. We have no promise at all unless we do the things that are stated in the law. In the past great injury has been done to the Lord's work because men claimed they were "living oracles" and did not have to go by the books; but time has proven that when we are away from the books we are away from Christ. The call is, "To the law and to the testimony, if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

The stewards, whether over temporal things or over what are termed spiritual things, are in fact identical in the results of their working. The object of the stewardship is that an individual shall have an opportunity to labor and have sufficient to live upon and to work with in pursuing that labor. It is right for the apostle to say, "those who preach the gospel shall live of the gospel," as a minister is a steward in gospel work. It is right for those who labor in temporal matters that they shall have their stewardships in full proportion to their ability to labor, for the record permits each one to use the talents that God has given him; and not only this, but to improve upon these, as stated: "That every man may improve upon his talents, that every man may gain other talents, even an hundred fold"; thus showing that our heavenly Father desires men to occupy to the highest extent of their ability; but the new gains are to be turned into the Lord's storehouse, where it will help the Lord's work, instead of being selfishly held and used by the steward. This is clearly shown in the language of Jesus, where the party who had been given five talents came to reckon with his Lord; he renders the account and says, in effect, in doing so, "Here are other five talents that I have gained," which is in harmony with the thought contained in the later revelations, that the gained talents shall be turned over for the benefit of the work of the Lord, and for this he is commended.

The revelation, section 70, paragraph 3, reads as follows:

Behold, this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, even as I, the Lord, have appointed, or shall hereafter appoint unto any man. And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God; yea, neither the bishop, neither the agent, who keepeth the Lord's storehouse; neither he who is appointed in a stewardship over temporal things; he who is appointed to administer spiritual things, the same is worthy of his hire, even as those who are appointed to a stewardship, to administer in temporal things; yea, even more abundantly, which abundance is multiplied unto them through the manifestations of the Spirit; nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld.

The stewardship is distinguished from the Common Property, the Storehouse, or the Common Treasury, in this: First, the Common Property or Treasury is supplied by the consecrations and offerings of the people.

The stewardships are supplied out of a person's own property, or where a party has nothing, by taking from this common property contained in the storehouse, or treasury, and supplying a stewardship from the consecrations. (Doctrine and Covenants 42:9.) Second, the Common Property or Treasury may be drawn upon to aid or help maintain the stewardship, but the individuals having stewardships, render an account of the gains or net proceeds after honoring the law of tithes as set forth in the books, and this goes into the storehouse. One is property held for the common good, for which the church, or order, if it is in the benevolent association, is responsible and accountable for its proper use and application.

The other is an individual charge; and this individual owner or steward, is personally responsible and to be held accountable, both here and hereafter, for properly carrying it out and rendering a true account of the same. Luke 16:2; Matthew 25:19; Doctrine and Covenants 42:10-19; 70:2; 72:3; 82:2.

The stewardships are supplied, maintained, or aided by the consecrations of the Saints, and these are made under the provisions for tithes and offerings, surplus properties and special consecrations.

All consecrations to the church are properly made either directly or indirectly to the Bishop and his counselors, and responsibility is upon these to see that there is a proper rendering of stewardships.

And they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors, two of the elders, or high priests, such as he shall or has appointed and set apart for that purpose.—Doctrine and Covenants 42:8.

Again it is stated:

Let my servant Edward Partridge, and those whom he has chosen, in whom I am well pleased, appoint unto this people their portion, every man equal according to their families, according to their circumstances, and their wants and needs."—Doctrine and Covenants 51:1.

In harmony with this, in making the appointment of Bishop Miller it is stated:

I, therefore, say unto you, I seal upon his head the office of a bishopric, like unto my servant Edward Partridge, that he may receive the consecrations of mine house, that he may administer blessings upon the heads of the poor of my people, saith the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 107:8.

It is likely all are a unit upon this proposition, so it is not necessary to multiply proofs, but attention is called to the fact that the organizations that are to be made in the church, must in all cases be in accordance with the laws of the land.

Section 17:1, referring to the church, reads:

It being regularly organized and established agreeably to the laws of our country, by the will and commandments of God, etc.

Section 44:2:

And many shall be converted, insomuch that ye shall obtain power to organize yourselves according to the laws of man, that your enemies may not have power over you, that you may be preserved in all things, that you may be enabled to keep my laws, that every band may be broken wherewith the enemy seeketh to destroy my people.

Also section 51:1:

And thus all things shall be made sure according to the laws of the land.

In the supplying of stewardships, then, recognition must always be given to the rights and privileges guaranteed to each person, under the laws of the land, it being the privilege of the children of the kingdom to perform this work if they move in harmony with the laws of our country, but not otherwise.

But the questions are urged, Just how much is a man required to give as his surplus? and on the other hand, How much shall be given to a person who needs, for a stewardship?

The law leaves these answers to be given by the persons who are placed as judges in the matter, and no proper decision can be had until each case and all the circumstances connected with it are brought before the judges. A bishop or counselor who would undertake to pass upon the questions, so far as applying the findings to individual cases, would disqualify himself as a judge. No one should judge a matter until it has been fairly and fully heard.

But is it further urged, Suppose a man is worth fifty thousand dollars; what amount of surplus must he give? The proper answer is, Bring the man who is worth the fifty thousand dollars, and who wishes to comply with the law, before the proper officers, and they will confer with him upon the matter, and after gathering all the facts, pass upon the matter according to the law and circumstances of the case. Is not this right?

It is also asked, Suppose a man is poor and has a large family, how much will he receive, and how will it be given to him? The reply is, The poor man and the large family must be presented in the same way, every condition and need canvassed and the abilities of the parties to labor and what they can do inquired into, and after the facts are all before the bishopric, it may properly decide what is best to be done. Is not this also right?

It ought not to be a stumbling-block with any, that they are afraid the church will demand more than what is right, or more than they are able to do. Such a thought only shows lack of faith in the parties in the church of God. Christ's church will always do right, or right the wrong if it shall ever do wrong. Organizations that are not his church may move in various directions and do many things that are unjust or improper, but not the church of Christ. If we have no more faith than that in the church of Christ, by and through which we expect to be saved, where does our final hope rest? It is no wonder that lack of faith in God and in his work is plainly set down in his word as being displeasing to him. If we are satisfied that this is Christ's work and he is directing, why not stand together in faith, shoulder to shoulder, as one individual, and labor and build with all our energies and might for the success of his cause?

It is written, "The laborer is worthy of his hire." But suppose the person who is hired does not labor; fails to perform the part he should do; his work is always left undone; he is always found lacking in the performance of duty to the Master's work: Where is the promise of his reward? If we truly wish to make life a success, let us not forget the instruction of the wise man, "Fear God, and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man."

THAT CANADA REVELATION.

This revelation is denied bitterly by Mormon polemics. And "there's a reason for it."

I have private information that some Mormons have said: "If Neal can prove 'the Canada revelation' to be a fact, we are ready to renounce Mormonism."

That is an easy task, and all who assent to that proposition might as well begin "to pack up their traps" for a final move. My first witness is

DAVID WHITMER.

He was one of the three witnesses to the divine claims of the Book of Mormon, also the third person baptized into the Mormon church, according to his claims, and was without doubt the best man morally of the whole Mormon outfit. He says in his "Address to All Believers":

"When the Book of Mormon was in the hands of the printer, more money was needed to finish the printing of it. We were waiting on Martin Harris, who was doing his best to sell a part of his farm, in order to raise the necessary funds. After a time Hyrum Smith and others began to get impatient, thinking that Martin Harris was too slow and under transgression for not selling his land at once, even if at a great sacrifice. Brother Hyrum thought they should not wait any longer on Martin Harris, and that the money should be raised in some other way. Brother Hyrum was vexed with Brother Martin and thought they should get the money by some means outside of him, and not let him have anything to do with the publication of the book, or receive any of the profits thereof if any profits should accrue. He was wrong in thus judging Brother Martin, because he was doing all he could toward selling his land. Brother Hyrum said it had been suggested to him that some of the brethren might go to Toronto, Canada, and sell the copyright of the Book of Mormon for considerable money; and he persuaded Joseph to inquire of the Lord about it. Joseph concluded to do so. He had not yet given up the stone. Joseph looked into the hat in which he placed the stone, and received a revelation that some of the brethren should go to Toronto, Canada, and that they would sell the copyright of the Book of Mormon. Hiram Page and Oliver Cowdery went to Toronto on this mission, but they failed entirely to sell the copyright, returning without any money. Joseph was at my father's house when they returned. I was there also, and am an eye witness to the facts. Jacob Whitmer and John Whitmer were also present when Hiram Page and Oliver Cowdery returned from Canada. Well, we were all in great trouble; we asked Joseph how it was that he had received a revelation from the Lord for some brethren to go to Toronto and sell the copyright, and the brethren had utterly failed in their undertaking. Joseph did not know how it was, so he inquired of the Lord about it, and behold the following revelation came through the stone: 'Some revelations are of God: some revelations are of man: and some revelations are of the Devil.'"

Whitmer's solemn statement of his knowledge of the fact has to be received by Mormons, or his testimony to the "gold plates" must also be repudiated by them.

My second witness is

OLIVER COWDERY.

He was another one of the "three witnesses" to the divinity of the Book of Mormon. He was the man who baptized Joseph Smith, and was the "Second Elder"—Smith being the "First Elder." In his "Defense" he says:

"When the church of Christ was set up by revelation, he was called to be the 'First Elder' and I was called to be the 'Second Elder,' and whatever he had of priesthood (about which I am beginning to doubt), also had I. But I certainly followed him too far when accepting and reiterating that none had authority from God to administer the ordinance of the gospel, as I then had forgotten that John, the beloved disciple, was tarrying on the earth and exempt from death.

"I am well aware that a rehearsal of these things, at this day, will be unpleasant reading to the 'First Elder.' Yet so it is, and it is wisdom that it should be so.

"Without rehearsing too many things that have caused me to lose my faith in Brother Joseph's Seership, I regard his frequent prediction that he himself shall tarry on the earth till Christ shall come in glory, and that neither the rage of devils nor the malice of men shall ever cause him to fall by the hand of his enemies until he has seen Christ, in the flesh, at his final coming, as little short of a piece of blasphemy; and it may be classed with that revelation, that some among you will remember, which sent Brother Page and me so unwisely to Toronto with a prediction from the Lord, by 'Urim and Thummim,' that we would there find a man anxious to buy the First Elder's copyright. I well remember we did not find him, and had to return surprised and disappointed. But so great was my faith that, in going to Toronto, nothing but calmness pervaded my soul. Every doubt was banished, and it was as much expected that Brother Page and I would fulfill the revelation as that we should live. And now you may believe, without asking me to relate the particulars, that it would be no easy task to describe our desolation and grief.

"Brother Page and I did not think that God would have deceived us through 'Urim and Thummim,' exactly as came the Book of Mormon; and I well remember how hard I strove to drive away the foreboding which seized me, that the 'First Elder' had made tools of us, where we thought, in the simplicity of our hearts, that we were divinely commanded. And what served to render the reflection past expression in its bitterness to me, was, that from his hand I received baptism, by the direction of the angel of God, whose voice, as it has since struck me, did most mysteriously resemble the voice of Elder Sidney Rigdon, who I am sure, had no part in the transactions of that day."

The unequivocal testimony of these two leaders of Mormonism, both eye and ear witnesses of the facts to which they testify, establishes "the Canada revelation" as true.

I have copies of both "Whitmer's Address" and "Cowdery's Defense" to send to those who may need them to "stop the mouths of the gainsayer."

PIKEVILLE, KENUCKY.

The above article, by R. B. Neal, appeared in the Christian Standard for January 14, 1911.

Though Mr. Neal has proven himself an unreliable and untrustworthy opponent, who is worthy only to be ignored, we present this upon request of a brother who wishes to know the truth regarding this so-called "Canadian Revelation."

We know nothing of such revelation more than Mr. Neal has produced above. The publication referred to as "Cowdery's Defense," is of doubtful authenticity, as we have shown upon a former occasion, and hence we will not defend against its assertions further than to say that both Cowdery and Whitmer continued with Joseph Smith and the church for about nine years after the alleged Canada revelation failure, manifesting unabated zeal and devotion. When they finally severed their connection this formed no part of their expressed reasons.

There could not, therefore, have been anything connected with the event that had a tendency to shake their faith. We might add that each of these men maintained his testimony to the Book of Mormon as long as he lived, and this testimony was upon the lips of each when he closed his eyes in death.

There are several inconsistent things connected with this story.

1st. It is not reasonable to suppose that they wanted to dispose of the copyright.

2d. The history shows that Martin Harris, who was abundantly responsible, had guaranteed the cost of the printing of the first edition, hence it is not true that "more money was needed to finish the printing."

3d. Hiram Page, who was said to have accompanied Oliver Cowdery to Toronto, was not a member of the church when the Book of Mormon was in print. He had no interest in it except that Joseph Smith had shown him the plates as one of the eight witnesses. He did not unite with the church until April 11, 1830.

If notwithstanding all this we suppose that the revelation was given, it does not follow that it was false because they did not have a buyer, unless it be shown that they made all possible effort. It is possible that Cowdery and Page did not use due diligence and the responsibility of failure is upon them.

It occurs to us that a man may be mistaken in one thing and yet be entirely correct in another, hence to admit that Mr. Whitmer had misunderstood the case of the "Canadian Revelation" does not weaken his position and life-long testimony regarding the Book of Mormon. Mr. Neal, however, does not seem to be able to grasp that thought. His logic is really amusing. He says: "Whitmer's solemn statement of his knowledge of the fact has to be received by Mormons, or his testimony of the 'gold plates' must also be repudiated by them." By a parity of reasoning we may say, Whitmer's solemn statement of his knowledge of the "gold plates" has to be received by Mr. Neal, or his testimony to the "Canadian Revelation" must be repudiated by him. One is inclined at first thought to congratulate Mr. Neal upon his conversion, but when we consider that his conversion is the result of false reasoning and faulty logic, we can not rejoice for we are led to exclaim with the Prophet Jeremiah: "Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots? Then may ye also do good, that are accustomed to do evil."

HEMAN C. SMITH.

Of General Interest

CHASING SECRECY OUT OF POLITICS.

We are always pleased to note indications of reform that make for purer government. Watch this movement toward an open policy in political affairs. We hope it will bear good fruit.

Speaking before the City Club, Kansas City, Missouri, recently, Judge Harry Olson, chief justice of the Chicago municipal court, said, as reported by the Star: "I am a great believer in publicity. It is the only remedy for evil practices. It is impossible to get honest men into every public office; and even if it could be done, you would have a hard time keeping them honest."

Governor Woodrow Wilson, of New Jersey, speaking before the National Press Club celebration, Washington, District of Columbia, January 31, ("Hobby Night") said that publicity in all public affairs was his hobby.

"The root of all evils in politics," said Governor Wilson, "is private concealment. This is the complaint of the people of the country, who do not know the processes of their welfare. The common interest can only be established through the instrumentality of the facts. Really, what we are after in the field of politics is to drive everything into the field of facts.

"Politics has in recent years been tied to the private arrangement of the board of directors, sitting behind closed doors and administering everybody's business as if it were their business.

"There has been a very close relation between politics and business that it has been impossible to separate without vivisection. Now I admit that business and politics are very closely related because politics is not something separated from our life. It has to handle the vital matter of our business and because our business is public, our politics must be public.

"There is a very clear reason, in my mind, why so few newspaper men have universally influential views. It is because few newspaper men are connected with newspapers that are known to be disengaged from private interests.

"I can not imagine anything legitimate that a man is doing that he need be afraid to talk about. I can not imagine any legitimate part of the management of a party or of the organization of a political movement that can not be talked about to anybody at any time.

"That is the whole present purpose of what we call the popular movement. The popular movement in our country is to change the machinery of our Government from privacy to publicity; it is to chase it out of committee rooms; it is to get at the nominating process by a widespread method, which is called the primary. You can not conduct a statewide primary privately."

Always Patient.

"Let patience have her perfect work."—James 1: 4.

Patient, patient, I will try to be;
On my face no frown may others see;
Help me, Lord, thy gentle child to be,
Always patient, ever trusting thee.

Patient, patient,—I will try to say
Not one fretful, hasty word to-day:
Help me, Lord, thy thoughtful child to be,
Always patient, ever trusting thee.

Patient, patient,—working with a will
When I've any duty to fulfill:
Help me, Lord, thy willing child to be,
Always patient, ever trusting thee.

Patient, patient,—waiting when I ought,
In my heart no willful, selfish thought:
Help me, Lord, thy loving child to be,
Always patient, ever trusting thee

Patient, patient when another's wrong;
In forbearance may I then be strong,— Moved by charity divine to be
Always patient, ever trusting thee.

Patient, when my own mistakes I see,
Knowing I can overcome through thee:
Help me, Lord, thy humble child to be,
Always patient, ever trusting thee.

Patient, patient when things go awry,
Smiling still though clouds overspread the sky:
Help me, Lord, thy cheerful child to be,
Always patient, ever trusting thee.

Patient, patient when so full the time,
Not one leisure hour I claim for mine:
Still content, for I would helpful be,
Always patient, ever trusting thee.

Patient, patient with thy children dear,
Teaching truth with wisdom's peaceful cheer:
Help me, Lord, thy pleasant child to be,
Always patient, ever trusting thee.

Patient, patient though my work seem small,
Giving unto thee my best in all:
Earnest in life's service I would be,
Always patient, ever trusting thee.

Patient, patient with my brother's need,
Giving of myself in kindly deed:
Help me, Lord, thy gracious child to be,
Always patient, ever trusting thee.

Patient, patient as through life I go,
Seeking light, that I thy way may know:
Help me, Lord, thy prayerful child to be,
Always patient, ever trusting thee.

Patient, patient though the way seem long,
In my heart and on my lips a song:
Help me, Lord, thy happy child to be,
Always patient, ever trusting thee.

Patient, patient though the days be drear,
Knowing well my Comforter is near:
Help me, Lord, thy grateful child to be,
Always patient, ever trusting thee.

Patient, patient when afflictions come,
Looking forward to the heav'nly home:
Help me, Lord, thy hopeful child to be,
Always patient, ever trusting thee.

Patient, too, in disappointment sore,
Only turning unto thee the more;
Growing still in grace that will keep me
Always patient, ever trusting thee.

Patient, patient,—pressing toward the goal,
While in patience I possess my soul:
Help me, Lord, thy faithful child to be,
Always patient, ever trusting thee.

Letter Department

MOBILE, ALABAMA, January 24, 1911.

Editors Herald: To-night while thinking of the condition of the work in this southland, where already violets, johnquils, daffodils, narcissus, etc., are filling the air with sweet perfume, I felt I must not delay longer writing a few words to let our many friends know that we are still in this work, heart and soul.

Brother Vancleave came home January 9, with a very high fever which continued for three days, when he began breaking out with smallpox. The health authorities had him conveyed to the pest house, Saturday, the 14th, where he is at present. He suffered a great deal, having the worst case of anyone out there. Quite a number came to visit him while still at home, but fortunately, as yet not a single case has developed among those so exposed. Brethren Chute and Scarcliff administered to him several times and each time he was benefited. Brother Vancleave writes that he can now laugh, and that he will in all probability be home by January 28.

We hope at least to be permitted to worship with the Saints at Theodore, Alabama, the first Sunday in February. There is quite a lively branch there, some of the younger ones coming forward in the line of duty. Still greater joy would fill the hearts of each one if all would "shake off the coals from their garments and arise in the strength of the Lord."

Brother Vanclave and I are very desirous of attending General Conference. But as yet, we are undecided just what arrangements to make for the coming year. I am especially anxious that he shall go, as he has never had that privilege. I attended once, about ten years ago, while I was a student at our beloved Graceland.

There are about thirty members in Mobile and suburbs. Some are lively members, while others are indifferent. We hope to "liven them up a bit" when we get the tent and our Sunday school started.

Brother Vanclave's letter was published in the HERALD of 18th inst., and already we have received one bundle of tracts from Mrs. H. C. Pitsenberger, of Kansas, and one dollar from Mrs. M. E. Dungan, of Sanford, Mississippi. We are very grateful to these sisters for this help. We are wondering who will surprise us next, and when we will have our tent. Saints must not forget that while the work suffers for lack of workers, it suffers, also, because many neglect to pay their tithes and offerings. Surely now is the time when every shoulder should be at the wheel, helping to move this work.

A fitting question for each of us: Why is my name on the records of the church? Is it because I have been in the thickest of the fight, standing for right and right doing; or is it because I am very quiet in all services and never do anything very bad nor anything very good, for fear folks would think me peculiar, and the church has been lenient, waiting to see me do better? We are exhorted to examine ourselves. Let us do this, heeding the warning given to the Saints by the Spirit at the Alabama reunion when the Lord said, if they would cast out envy, strife, jealousy, and hatred, he would abundantly bless them. If all will do this, I am of the opinion that our next Alabama reunion will surpass in spirituality any meeting that has ever been held in Alabama.

Let us consider well the cost of delaying to do our whole duty. There are many things happening in this fast age that indicate to us the hour of God's judgment is near. We must not sit idly by, waiting for his coming, then expect to enter into the city and enjoy all its rich blessings.

Ever praying for the building up of God's work everywhere, and earnestly striving to keep all God's law, that when he comes I can meet him without fear, I am

Yours in the faith,

SAINT CLAIR, MICHIGAN, January 29, 1911.

Dear Herald: As we are passing the milestones of the years, will our conduct bear the searchlight, or the keen scrutiny of the world? We can not get rid of this responsibility by simply saying, "I do not care what the world thinks." If our conduct out in the world does not square with our testimony, we are only "as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal," in other words, we are hypocrites.

We are set to be lights to the world, and they have a right to expect better things. If we are not courteous and gentlemanly in our conduct, we had better look into our little, narrow souls and find the cause. The narrow limits of time are passing swiftly and there is no time to lose in grouches, which are only one way Satan has to keep us in bondage and hinder us where we might be useful. If we would keep our record free from stain we must guard it carefully and prayerfully, and God himself, who is watching our struggles, will enable us to overcome.

The struggle is getting fiercer and the foe becomes more daring. "Stand together" should be our watchword or we will be overcome. The enemy has one object always in view, to overthrow the Saints of God. To conquer him we must stand united and watch and pray.

Mrs. A. MCKENZIE.

SOUTH DAKOTA, January 31, 1911.

Editors Herald: A sad accident occurred to Sr. Hilda Crosley, daughter of Bro. and Sr. R.W. Crosley, of Springfield, South Dakota. She called at a neighbor's house, where there were three of her schoolmates. The oldest one (thirteen years) took a can of oil and was pouring the oil on the fire in the stove. An explosion followed, in which all the girls were badly burned and three of them died before the morning of the 22nd inst. Hilda's life was despaired of, and I was sent for. She is now on a fair way to recovery. In order to have better care and medical attention she was taken to Saint Joseph's Hospital, Sioux City, Iowa.

Kind friends have sought diligently to render them assistance. The quick and practical response showed that the altruistic spirit is easily aroused when misfortune overtakes our fellows. I accompanied the physician and Sister Crosley to the hospital. When I left yesterday, marked improvement was visible, and mother and daughter were very cheerful. The attending physician thought that she would need to be there three months. Let us hope and pray that a loving Father will shorten the time. They are worthy of the good will and sympathy of the Saints; loved and respected by all who know them.

EDWARD RANNIE.

CASTANA, IOWA, January 31, 1911.

Editors Herald: I have before me a pamphlet, "Open letter No. 3, to Joseph Lambert and the Reorganized Church," written by Robert E. Grant, 848 Home avenue, Grand Rapids, Michigan, January 1, 1911. I found them at the homes of three of our new converts, all of whom had read it and pronounced it false from start to finish. I wish to inform Mr. Grant that I, and I believe the majority of Latter Day Saints, would have more faith in his brand of religion if he were less given to the habit of mud slinging. Furthermore, I do not believe there is a Saint worthy of the name who has not too much of the Holy Spirit's guiding power to be deceived by his efforts to down the church.

It is very plain to be seen that Mr. Grant is nursing a very bad sore head, and the most of us are aware of what caused the soreness. I believe the Saints are all sorry because of Mr. Grant's mishap, and deeply regret losing him from our circle, for I have been informed that he was very much blessed with the Holy Spirit until, in unguarded times, Satan caused him to fall; and oh, the pity of it, when God needed men to carry the angel's message. But Saints, let us profit by our fallen brother's experience. While we pray for his return to the fold, let us keep a very close watch on our lives, and pray always lest we fall. For I know Satan strikes the hardest at the most faithful Saints when they least expect it. When he caused Elder Grant to fall, he won a victory by taking away one who might have won hundreds of precious souls. He is now making a tool of the poor fellow to strike down other Saints, and he even strikes at our babes. But I praise God for the promised Comforter, and the gifts which follow the honest believers. Beloved, if we keep faithful and watch and pray the Devil can not deceive God's elect.

A lady who has been investigating the truth, has had a dream of which she requested me to try and get her the interpretation. She says: "I dreamed some one laid the Book of Mormon in my lap. I opened it at about the middle of the book. A lot of pictures came to view, of sad faces set in the book like pictures in an album. I turned over another leaf and saw a bunch of dried leaves, and dried, pressed flowers. I took them up in my hand and smelled them. They had a sweet scent, and the one that gave me the book said, 'They came from Palestine.' I turned over another leaf of the book, and a large leaf fell out loose into my hand. It was black as the carbon paper they use to duplicate store bills. On this black sheet a dim face came to view. I gazed and gazed to make out this awful black picture until my eyesight gave way and I awoke." If anyone can interpret it I would be glad to have them send it to me, as I do not wish to give her name at this writing.

Your sister in the one faith,
SADIE BURCH.

ESCATAWPA, MISSISSIPPI, January 23, 1911.

Editors Herald: I baptized three to-day, which makes six in all here since I have been in this mission, and there have been quite a number of others baptized since the gospel tent was cut down here several years ago. This is the place where Bro. T. C. Kelley was whipped by a wicked mob, but the great work of God here is moving on to victory.

Bro. J. D. Erwin held a debate here while he was in this mission. This is where the little girl was instantly healed through administration by Brother Hilliard. The child had been bitten by a rattlesnake.

The Saints have a church building and they are putting forth an effort to build a better one, all of which goes to show that the great work of God is moving on, notwithstanding the severe opposition in the past. God's work will move on in spite of the Devil and his angels, if the Saints live right.

At Gordon, Alabama, near the State line of Georgia, where Bro. D. E. Tucker was shot after night, but not seriously hurt, is a new opening. I held a long series of meetings and occupied at four different schoolhouses and one church house. Was greeted with many interested hearers who treated me very kindly in every respect.

On January 15, in the beautiful water of the great Gulf of Mexico, I baptized Bro. John Lovett and wife, at Gulfport, Mississippi. The latter is a native of the State of Illinois. The same day I confirmed two who were baptized by Bro. R. M. King, who holds the office of priest. Brother King's great-grandfather was a full blooded Choctaw Indian. He is expecting quite an estate in Oklahoma.

Baptisms have been quite frequent in this mission this year. On account of sickness some of the missionaries have been absent from the field. Some new men have been ordained to the work of the ministry, and no doubt others will be ordained before a great while. As we look over the situation from every point of view I believe we can truthfully say that we are gradually gaining ground.

There are many places open for preaching the word. It is not a question with the missionary as to where he can get a place to preach, but where can he spend his time to the most profit to the work. The Southeastern Mission is gradually growing to be one of the most important mission fields of the church.

In different localities where debates have been held, we have gained in membership right along, but to read reports from the other side one might think who did not know the facts that we were almost wiped off the face of the earth. In one little item in the Sword of Laban, containing about six lines in regard to a certain debate in Alabama, there were four absolute falsehoods. In reading reports of debates from the opposition, we are very forcibly reminded of the statement of the prophet: "For we have made lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid ourselves."—Isaiah 28: 15. Truly the great work of God will prosper, and we have nothing to fear from that source.

God is the only one we should fear. Fear that we might displease him and thus bring upon us his wrath. His eye is upon us. To the meek of the earth he has intrusted the means of salvation, whereby the world is to be saved. Let us pray that we may be able to act wisely in all things.

F. M. SLOVER.

Ladies' Protection on Railroad Trains.

Your issue of January 25, in the Mothers' Home Column, contains the account of a very unhappy experience of a sister while traveling on a railroad, and as perhaps a similar thing might happen to almost anyone of our sisters, I should like to offer a word of advice to those who may find themselves in a position such as was the sister referred to.

In all cases where persons intrude themselves upon you or annoy you in any way, by act or word, you should tell the train conductor or brakemen, requesting that the party be required to leave your seat or else that you be furnished with another. You should have no fear of making a scene; no one has the right to take advantage of another, on a train or anywhere else, merely because they seize the opportunity to share the same seat. The train conductor has absolute authority, and if necessary could have the train stopped to put off an offender, or could arrange for an officer to take him in charge at the next station.

Do not permit anyone to annoy you while traveling. When there are plenty of vacant seats, refuse to allow a man to share yours, but the most important thing is to report annoying addresses to the first train man you see. He will protect you, it is one of his duties to see that women traveling alone are not annoyed, and he will be glad to perform it.

A RAILROAD BROTHER.

EASTON, MASSACHUSETTS, February 1, 1911.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. Blanch A. Crandall, Route 1, Langley, Washington, writes: "I am yet young in this faith, but I am trying to forward it, in my weakness. I hope and pray I may always be worthy of God's precious calling. My prayers are for his people and their welfare. Brethren Thorburn and McKim have just closed an eleven nights' series of meetings here this week. It was certainly strengthening to both old and young Saints. Brother McKim is our new missionary from Honolulu, Hawaii. He is a pleasing young speaker. Brother Thorburn is also a good preacher. We hope they will come back soon, as we enjoy hearing them so much. I ask an interest in the Saints' prayers, that I may be faithful to my God. I would enjoy a letter from any of the Saints."

Lloyd C. Moore, Bellair, Illinois, writes: "We are trying to keep the old gospel banner waving high. The weather seems to be somewhat against us. Last night we did not expect many out. To our surprise, a large audience came, although the roads were very muddy. Many of the people seem to manifest a desire to learn more of God's word. This life is made up with trials, difficulties, sorrows, sickness, and death; but let us carry out the sentiment of that beautiful song, 'Look for the beautiful, live for the true.'"

Bro. Peter Simpson, Mound Valley, Kansas, writes: "I came from Sweden with my wife in 1872 and could not talk any English whatever. There was a Latter Day Saint lady living in the neighborhood who invited me to come to their meetings. When told I could not talk or understand, she said she would be the interpreter, which she was. We went, and after some time concluded to join the church. A while after joining, there was a Methodist who told me I had gone from the right church to the wrong one. I had belonged to the Baptist Church. So I commenced doubting. Finally, I went to a secret place in the woods where I knew no one but God could hear me; and there, on bended knees, I asked the Lord to show me if I had done wrong. The following Sunday, in a testimony meeting, a sister in the church came over to me and spoke by the Spirit, telling me that God had answered my prayer; that I was in the right way; to never doubt, but go on and live faithfully. I am glad and thankful that I have been permitted to listen to the gospel of God's dear Son. I have seen my children healed by his power and have also been healed many times myself."

News From Missions

Maine.

My experience in the Pine Tree State has not been void of interest. In the majority of cases the Saints of Western Maine have made the missionary life worth living. Although having to combat obstacles of a serious character, and having our designs thwarted again and again, the expressions of confidence and good will manifested by the Saints more than compensate for those unpleasant experiences.

Before going to Maine last spring I labored some near home, where I experienced some opposition.

Since residing in Shawmut I found that the past labors of R. W. Farrell, I. M. Smith, and R. Bullard proved quite successful in that some were baptized. Last fall A. B. Phillips and the late R. B. Howlett labored diligently with the tent. Although there were no baptisms, they made friends for the cause.

Bro. I. M. Smith gained the distinction of being the only Latter Day Saint minister who has occupied the village church. Being jealous of this record, I put forth an effort to obtain this building for a few nights. A strenuous effort it was, too, for although there were apparently no outward signs of objections, I could feel the force of a great undertow. One Sunday evening I attended their meeting to obtain a definite answer, and like a good Latter Day Saint, bore my testimony. The minister's wife, a woman of Holiness type, said that they did not want ministers with high, stand up collars, good clothes, and elongated words. All they wanted was the "word of God." The others shared this opinion, judging from what followed: "Bless the Lord," and a few "hallelujahs." One can imagine how it struck me. At the close of the meeting I approached one of the trustees, who told me that they did not deem it practical to let me have the church. In reply, I informed them that it was a matter of business on my part, and in some way I would see it through.

Securing a lawn on the four corners, a meeting was advertised to be held there. At the time appointed one hundred and fifty people headed the preacher. Later, we heard that only twelve persons were at the chapel, a half block away. After this experience I felt ready for anything that might come along in that line.

It was at this time that I went to Maine, where I labored in Stonington a few weeks alone, and then with Brother Greene. At the close of the Massachusetts reunion Brother Macgregor came to Stonington. We labored together for a while. I soon found out that the experience in Shawmut only proved to be a preparatory course for that in Stonington, for we struck a veritable hotbed among the townspeople. Even the select men were urging the boys to disturb our meetings. A few missiles were thrown, and there were rumors to the effect that a mob had been formed. In the early hours of the morning the Congregationalist church was struck by lightning, and damaged almost beyond repair. On another evening a former Congregationalist minister in Stonington accosted Brother Macgregor, and attacked the church by slanderous remarks, and also urged the people to hoot us down. Before the service was over the minister shamefully and madly dived beneath the arms of the people and made his escape, amid the hoots and jeers of the crowd.

Leaving Brother Macgregor at Stonington, I went to North Deer Isle, where some good meetings were held. From there I went to Bar Harbor, where a woman by the name of Mrs. Robinson lectured in the Methodist church on Mormonism, saying that the Latter Day Saints were cutthroats, clothes-line robbers, and murderers. A reply to the lecture was advertised, and about two hundred and fifty people met us in the Star Theater the following night, including the select men, the chief of police, and three fourths of the Methodist congregation. We heard not a single word against our people after the reply. We have a band of noble Saints there, and this seemed to encourage them. Before the writer left the place a suit case full of nice Christmas presents was sent home to his better half, not forgetting the one who was to convey the goods.

Some are near the kingdom at Birch Harbor, and while there I was called to preach the funeral sermon of the father of Elder Ralph Farrell. At other places the interest was good and should be followed up by more meetings at a future date, which will probably be soon. I will soon journey farther east to labor with my brother who is now at Machias. Trusting for the ultimate success of the work, I am,

Your brother in the faith,
H. ARTHUR KOEHLER.

"The Princess," Toronto.

No doubt many readers of the HERALD are anxious to hear what is being done in Toronto. This is our seventh season. We find ourselves in the midst of wonderful opportunities; and we are losing no time in taking advantage of everything offered.

We commenced our theater services in November and have had a very successful season thus far, notwithstanding the many attractions elsewhere. Probably the greatest revival organization known to Toronto has been in full swing in Massey Hall during the month of January. One hundred churches have united, and have engaged thirty special revivalists and trained singers at a cost of thirty-five thousand dollars for four weeks; and to this they have added the massed bands of the Salvation Army. This looked like a formidable opposition, but we have God's own promise to us: "Fear not; I will never forsake you."

During this revival, the Princess has been filled at every service, and we have not lost any of our numbers. The interest continues, and this is probably our best season. Everything seems to open before us, and our work is being advertised on every hand.

Only this week, a wealthy Jew, running a moving picture show, had on as one of his attractions, a life size picture of Bishop Evans, with the following advertisement: "Don't fail to hear Bishop R. C. Evans at the Princess Theater every Sunday night." The bishop was surprised when one of our members phoned him to inquire if he knew that a life size picture of himself was one of the attractions at the "Idle Hour" Theater. It was a splendid advertisement, put on entirely without our knowledge. Thus the advertising of our work is commencing to roll on of its own weight.

Our experience during the seven seasons has been success upon success, until, as a people, we do not fear to undertake anything which has been made clear to us is a move for the good of the great latter day work. Never yet have we failed. God has always met us, as he has repeatedly promised he would; and the results have always been beyond our expectations.

Probably no greater opportunity ever opened before a people, than the opening of the heavily barred doors of the Toronto press. We have tried to beg and buy our way into the press, but everything was closed up tight. On the opening of our new Soho Street Church we were told in prophecy, through Bishop Evans, that the Lord was about to open up a great work here; and gave us the same promise regarding our new church as he had given us in our old one: "These walls shall not contain you." We could not imagine what that work would be, for we could scarcely see what new avenues could open. However, in December of last year, without warning, the Toronto Sunday World swung open its doors to us; and we now have a hard and fast agreement with that paper to publish Bishop R. C. Evans' Sunday night sermon during the entire year of 1911. They send a reporter each night and in the following issue you may read the sermon as delivered to the vast audience in the Princess Theater. All who wish can now be a part of the Princess audience; if not as a hearer, as a reader. (Out of town subscriptions $2 per annum.)

You can not see the immense crowd, the big choir on the brilliantly lighted stage, or hear the rattle of the coin as the army of ushers takes up the collection; but you can see the bishop. His photo is in the World with each sermon unless the reporter thinks he has been "lengthy in his discourse." What an abundant fulfillment of promise! The great work is on. How happy we are if one of our elders get a favorable notice in a paper, if only an inch in length; and now thousands await the arrival of the Sunday World to read the sermon as preached to the Latter Day Saint audience in Toronto.

"These walls shall not contain you." Already we have made about two thousand dollars worth of alterations and additions so as to increase the seating capacity of our new church. No longer can we hope to church our audience. We can house our hearers but our readers are not confined even within the boundaries of our great Dominion.

The sermons in the World are having great effect. Strangers are dropping into our church Sunday morning with this expression, "I read Bishop Evans' sermon in the World; I want to hear him." Many long, loving letters are reaching Brother Evans from our young brothers who have gone to various parts of Canada to work. They read the World. The sermon is like a letter from home, and immediately they write the bishop. The old love is revived. What a great privilege it is to isolated Saints. No Saint need be isolated. None need say, "I haven't heard a Latter Day Saint sermon for so long." At a cost of about four cents each you may be one of the Toronto audience. It costs us citizens more. Our car fare to the theater is ten cents. Should you care to read the bishop at the Princess, send two dollars, your name and address to R. C. Evans, 35 Huron street. Some hesitated to subscribe at first, as they thought we could not fulfill our part of the contract (furnish five hundred paid subscriptions for one year), but we are pleased to say we already have over five hundred and seventy subscriptions, and have our agreement in black and white to publish the sermons during 1911.

Not satisfied with our big crowds at the Princess, and our thousands of readers, we have raised over one hundred and fifty dollars for literature; and our good literature committee of the Religio is undertaking to organize our young people and place a sermon in every home in Toronto. This is no small job. It will furnish work for the winter. This gospel must be preached in all the world for a witness. We have a fixed determination to bear that witness, and since Brother Evans has come to Toronto he has kept everything on the move. It is one continuous hustle. I don't know what we will do next, but there sure will be something doing. Your brother,

A. F. McLEAN.

P. S.—When subscribing for The World please write name and address plainly. Should you not receive your paper, or desire to change address, write direct to The Toronto World. Don't write the bishop about this. But when subscribing, write the bishop and not The World. Please don't send a bank check in payment of two dollars. It costs fifteen cents to cash it. Send cash, postal note, or money order. A. F. McL.

Honolulu, Hawaii.

Thinking that some news from the "Paradise of the Pacific" would be of general interest, I will write briefly of the work here.

The record of the Honolulu Branch now contains about two hundred and twenty names, but like some branches in the States, the actual live membership is far less. It includes various nationalities, the majority Hawaiians with a few Chinese, Japanese, Portuguese and English. We have four Sunday schools and two Religios in which the young people of the above nationalities are being prepared for service in the great latter day work.

One of the Sunday schools is devoted exclusively to the Chinese and we hope that it may be the means of preparing some to take the gospel to their own people. And I would not be surprised if some from the Japanese were chosen for a like purpose. You see, the Chinese and Japanese children are American born and will have the advantage over the average oriental, of being entitled to the protection of the flag.

Although there have been but ten baptized, there has been a great deal of preaching done in the gospel tent in various parts of this city during the past year. Many tracts have been distributed, a number of Books of Mormon sold, both English and Hawaiian, and much prejudice overcome.

The Utah people have been here for sixty years and claim a membership of over eight thousand, practically all Hawaiians. So the Hawaiian who is not a Brighamite has friends or acquaintances that are, and when we preach that Joseph Smith was not a polygamist, they are slow to believe. Some, however, have had their eyes opened and are now among our best friends,—Brighamites in name only. We hope to erase this mark of identification also in the near future.

The branch held its first bazaar on December 15, and cleared about $135, the ladies being in charge. Our Christmas entertainment was a great success, the attendance the largest we have ever had. From the Chinese Sunday school we had a special car, bringing about one hundred Chinese, scholars and their friends, the women and girls in oriental dress. Our crowd was an interesting sight to a "haole," as they call the white people.

You Saints, if you have never realized the truthfulness of that hymn,

"Each breeze that sweeps the ocean,
Brings tidings from afar
Of nations in commotion, Prepared for Zion's war," you should be here a few days and see what preparation is being made by "Uncle Sam," and hear the rumors of war that are afloat here almost constantly. Less than half a mile from the mission house owned by the church, lies Fort De-Russ, where fourteen inch coast defense guns are being mounted. On our east, probably three miles away, is Fort Ruger with its twelve inch mortars, and across the harbor on the west is another fort where fourteen inch rifles are being mounted. At the water front all day long the steam shovel is unloading coal, which is piled in a heap on vacant land near by until block after block is covered with coal from ten to fifteen feet deep for the use of our navy.

Were we on pleasure bent, as are the majority of mortals, here as well as elsewhere, we would not notice this perhaps, and would become accustomed to seeing the soldier's uniform wherever we went. But it is apparent, to us at least, that some time these islands may not be the pleasure retreat they are now. And when a gun is fired in defense here, the mainland will take up the echo.

The Secretary of War was here not long since, and from here visited the Philippines, inspecting the fortifications, etc. He has refused to make his report public. I wonder why.

When I read of the preparation for war being made by other nations as well, and notice the spirit of unrest that seems to be stalking abroad, I realize the necessity for Zion and a gathering place. I see the work to which the Order of Enoch is a stepping stone, and how God in his mercy and love is giving his people an opportunity to make preparation to escape the perilous conditions so fast approaching.

May all the Saints awake and see the signs of the times. Have you readers all responded to the call in behalf of the Order of Enoch? If not, do not neglect it longer.

Hoping all the Saints will work as well as pray for the accomplishment of the Lord's work. Sincerely,

M. A. MCCONLEY.

HONOLULU, HAWAIIAN TERRITORY, January 9, 1911.

Montana.

A brief statement of the work in this mission. As far as we are able to understand it is progressing nicely, yet there is a vast territory to labor in where the word has not been presented. And this winter has been a very poor time to present the work in new places, the weather being so cold. Our winter began in the latter part of November, so we have been able to do but little in making new openings. Have given our time to visiting scattered Saints and preaching some in the branches. And in assisting the Bishop's agent in instructing the Saints along the financial lines.

Have been over but a small portion of the district and not being acquainted with the field and laboring alone I was some time in getting my bearings. However, there is plenty to do here. We have made some new openings with good interest and if weather permits we will make some more.

It is rather difficult to work in the cities here, except to go upon the street, and then there should be two together. We believe that in Helena, Great Falls, Missoula, and Hamilton, all nice little cities with from five to fifteen thousand population, good work could be done, in street preaching. And in the northwestern part of the State in what is known as the Kalispell country is another good field for labor.

The work is onward in this mission. Some time ago we heard of Elder I. M. Smith going fishing down on Reese Creek and gathering ten more fish into the Master's net. He is a good fisherman. I think about thirty-five have been baptized thus far this year. The Saints have responded nobly to the call of the Bishop's agent and something over eleven thousand dollars in cash and security has been received by the agent, if my memory serves me right. Most of the Saints are coming up to a higher standard of living. Some few are lovers of pleasure and their lights burn very dimly.

The local brethren are taking on new life, most of them, and manifesting greater zeal and the Lord is blessing them. There is plenty for all to do. There are but three branches in the district, namely: Bozeman, Deer Lodge, and Reese Creek. Bozeman Branch is presided over by Elder I. M. Smith; Reese Creek by Elder A. J. Moore, who is also district president; Deer Lodge by Elder Frank Christofferson. We are looking for a new organization of a branch at our next conference, to be held at Deer Lodge, Montana, March 11, 12, 1911.

About the 21st of December at Coyote, Montana, we were challenged by Reverend Mr. Johns, of the Campbellite persuasion, to discuss church propositions. They are selecting a Mr. C. R. Nichols, of Clifton, Texas, to champion their cause. After communicating with Mr. Nichols I submitted the affair to our missionary in charge, J. W. Rushton, who authorized me to go ahead and defend our cause. Discussion is to be held at Hobson, Montana, in February, Mr. Nichols to set the time.

We have also been challenged by a Mormon elder to a discussion. We have submitted propositions to him, but do not look for his appearance; for, in some of his statements he has already fulfilled the statement of Brigham Young as recorded in Deseret News, volume 6, page 291. There are quite a number of Mormon elders in this country, but they are making very few converts.

We see no reason why next year should not be a prosperous one for work in this mission, if the laborers thrust in their sickles and reap. (Doctrine and Covenants 116:2.) I expect to remain in the field until April 1, then start for General Conference if nothing hinders. I hope to do more for the cause than I have ever done in the past.

Ever praying for the final triumph of Zion's cause, I am in gospel bonds,

W. P. BOOTMAN.

News From Branches.

Central Chicago.

The Religio and Sunday school conventions of the North-eastern Illinois District, held on Friday the 20th inst., were interesting and instructive, and the entertainment Friday evening at the West Side Church, Fifteenth and Homan avenue, was exceedingly enjoyable. Conference convened Saturday morning, with delegates and visitors from West Pullman, South Central Chicago, Mission, Piper City, Belvidere, Champlain, Aurora, DeKalb, Joliet, Wilmington, Ritchie, Plano, and Sandwich.

The question was again discussed as to the advisability of holding the next reunion in Chicago, but after lively speeches on each side the vote to rescind the former action that the reunion go to Chicago was lost. A cordial welcome is extended to all to come to Chicago next fall and endeavor to make the first reunion in this great city a success. The next conference will meet at Mission, Illinois, in June.

Very inspiring and instructive sermons were delivered by Elders J. A. Tanner, F. M. Cooper, Lester Wildermuth, and C. H. Burr.

On account of the large attendance the Sunday services were held in Lawndale Hall on Ogden avenue. The social services held in the morning and after the sermon in the afternoon were very uplifting; a spiritual feast,

The noon and evening meals were served in the hall, which were also much appreciated, and think the West Side brothers and sisters deserve great credit for the systematic manner in which the good things were placed before the people and the dishes and tables disposed of afterwards.

We feel that all received great benefit from attending these meetings, and pray that everyone may feel some progress has been made by the next district gathering.

Saint Louis, Missouri.

At the first sacrament service of the new year there was a pleasing portion of the Spirit present. As a fitting time to start in gospel work, a sister from Saint Charles, Missouri, was baptized by Brother Tanner, of Chicago, who was with us for the holidays.

A good interest was aroused during the tent services in Saint Charles. Twenty-two precious souls were added to the fold and an active branch was organized. Brother Dowker, ably assisted by Brother DeCoster, a zealous and active member, both deserve credit for their untiring effort.

Many good thoughts were gathered from the preaching of the word by God's servants during the past month. We felt highly favored in being privileged to have Brother Tanner speak for us again.

The Sunday school and Religio have each selected new officers, who we trust will have a successful term.

While we are sure that some conditions are not pleasing to the Master, the faithful ones are striving for the promise of the righteous. May God help us all to be charitable, pure, and kind, ever laboring to assist in building up this great and wonderful work.

E. M. PATTERSON.

2739 DEJONG STREET, January 26, 1911.

Des Moines, Iowa.

Much sickness exists here. While typhoid is to some extent abating, yet la grippe and pneumonia are holding sway and several of the Saints' families have been made to suffer. Only one of our number has been called from us, Sr. Mahala M. Smith. The rest of the sick are at the present time on the way to recovery. Little baby Ruth, the daughter of Sr. Emma Sockrider, was severely scalded several days ago and her sufferings have been intense, but through the blessings of God she is improving rapidly.

Highland Park College has become the property of the Presbyterians, but it will continue to occupy about the same place in the educational world as hitherto. Several of our young people have in the years past received much of their higher education there.

A man, who from all evidences that can be secured, is going under an assumed name, has through misrepresentations secured money from some of the members of the church of late. He assumed the name of Redfield, and claimed an acquaintance with Elber S. Wilcox, of Shenandoah, J. F. Mintun and others, and by this means secured the confidence of some, and made a graft on them. He is a low, heavy set man, about forty years of age, with dark hair, streaked with gray, claiming to be on his way from South Dakota to Shenandoah. He claimed to have two children and had lately lost his wife. When there is an opportunity Saints should with care investigate the worthiness of a stranger in the cities before giving to them, so that the worthy might not be neglected and the unworthy supplied.

The missionary services which began last Tuesday week still continue and will continue over Sunday. Considering the sickness among the Saints and neighbors of the Saints, and the other protracted services now being held not far away in the city, there has been good interest. One has already given his name for baptism, and others are near the kingdom. The assistance of Bro. J. W. Peterson has been very acceptable to all, and with local help the work has been much advanced. In connection with the preparation for these services one brother objected to circulating the literature specially prepared to advertise them because the union label did not appear on them. It would appear with some that if the union label does not appear on the job work or that which is printed by the HERALD or Ensign to invite the people to come and hear the gospel, that it should not be used. This goes even farther than the Scriptures say will be the influence of certain conditions portrayed by Revelation 13:17, wherein it is claimed that the time would come, unless subject to a certain power, "no man might buy or sell." This extreme position taken by this brother would indicate that you should not invite anyone to religious services or to consider the way of salvation unless one has a certain mark. Brethren should be careful not to go to extremes in their zeal for union labor, or it will be thought necessary to put our publishing houses under the control of the unions, then put our preachers under such control. There is the necessity to use wisdom in everything. It may be that we will overlook the authority from God to do certain things as supreme, and put some other power between us and that power, the same as the human religious organizations have.

We have been credibly informed that a few days ago, at a place not a hundred miles from here, a minister, who in faith claims to be a Methodist, but is at present preaching for a Congregational Church, did, by request of a member of the church,—Latter Day Saints' Church,—and after she had read and explained the scriptures relating to it, bless some olive oil, anoint her head, and pray for her. Two strange things in connection with this: one is that a Latter Day Saint would request such an act, and the other is that a minister of another persuasion would comply with the request. This may be progress on the one hand, while I hardly think it could be so considered on the other.

The editor of the Des Moines Daily News has shown an unprejudiced and consistent interest in the Saints. He had read the articles now appearing in the magazines, and saw that we were not correctly represented, and that the statements about the introduction of polygamy were false, as he had understood from conversation with the writer, and from literature that I had put into his hands. In his anxiety to see these corrections made he requested me to write an article, and he would give space for it in his paper. Gladly did I comply with this request, and the article is inclosed. Other articles are requested and may, if space will permit, soon appear to set the facts of history right before the people. God will reward all such acts, and not only will the work be beneficial in this city, but wherever this paper has a place it will be of help to the church. God seems to be raising up honorable men to positions, who are willing to see justice done, and the cause of truth freed from unjust discrimination. Inquiry is made by this same class of men why we do not secure access to these same magazines and represent the facts as they are. It would be well if we could, upon the same conditions that these other men have access to them. Trust such opportunities may be sought and obtained in the near future.

We have been credibly informed that Bro. Emslie Curtis is contemplating disposing of his city property, to become a citizen of another State.

It is just possible that the city missionary and wife will be left alone, without the association of children. Their daughters both absent, trying to repay that which their education has cost them. The son expects soon to take up work for the church in a line that he has been trying to prepare himself to do that he might be useful in the world and in the church, and to repay, in part at least, the church for the help rendered the family that he might be favored with the opportunity that he has so faithfully occupied, and secure that which is necessary for his support and to provide for the future. May God put it into the minds of the children of all the missionaries to choose to first meet their indebtedness and while doing so render the church their first thought and service.

At the present time the branch officials are making progress towards the elimination of evils in the branch and to bring about the reconciliations necessary that each may find favor with God.

The temperance fight in the city is now centered in the courts. It is thought that the courts will decide that the capital city of Iowa shall be clean of saloons. A general movement to secure an amendment to the constitution of the State of Iowa as speedily as possible, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, is made, and is receiving much encouragement.

We are pleased to have with us Bro. Israel Smith and wife, and to enjoy the assistance they may render by their presence and talents. The special position that he holds as chairman of the Constitutional Amendment Committee assures the temperance workers that this committee will do the fair thing in considering that which will advance the interests of true temperance.

Bro. C. E. Butterworth is near Colo preaching the word.

Bro. W. Christy has entered into a contract to labor for a firm dealing in fire apparatus and other supplies, and will locate in the city.

The Bishopric.

NOTICE OF APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT.

To the Saints and Friends of the Northeastern Illinois District: Please take notice, that upon the resignation of Bro. John Midgorden, who has so long and faithfully served the interests of the Master's work and the Saints in the Northeastern Illinois District, but on account of the fact that he is changing his residence has resigned as Bishop's agent in and for said district, and upon the recommendation of the district conference of said Reorganized Church in and for the Northeastern District of Illinois, Bro. James F. Keir, address 1608 South Sawyer avenue, Chicago, Illinois, has been duly appointed and authorized to act as Bishop's agent in and for said district.

We especially commend Bro. James F. Keir in his work to the attention of the Saints and friends of the Northeastern Illinois District. Hope that each will make it a special thought of their work during the year to give him assistance and help, that the work of the Master may be performed and that the Lord may be glorified in this part of the vineyard.

The Bishopric regret the loss of the services of Brother Midgorden in this particular field and work, but feel assured that wherever he is he will be doing good in the Master's cause. He has been faithful and earnest in the work of the Bishopric for a number of years, and we take pleasure in extending special thanks, and compliments upon his labor.

Trusting that the Lord, who is watchful over all and knows all of our works, may be mindful of each of these officers and each member and worker in the district, and that all eventually may overcome, I am, in behalf of the Bishopric.

Very Respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, February 1, 1911.

Notice to Winnipeg District.

Owing to a delay in the Bonspeil excursions, it has been considered wise to change the date of the Winnipeg district conference. It will convene with the Winnipeg Branch, in their new church, Winnipeg, Manitoba, on February 17, 18, 19, 1911. Those coming are invited to 736 Simcoe street, and they will be assigned to places, etc., or write to Elder E. E. Long, 736 Simcoe street, giving time of arrival and line of railway, and arrangements will be made to meet them at station. It is hoped that all will attend who can. W. S. Carter, secretary.

Notice to Fremont District.

It has been thought wise to change the date of our district conference from February 11, to February 18, 1911, 10 a. m., to meet at same place, Shenandoah, Iowa. T. A. Hougas, district president.

Died.

WALLIN.—Clara Albertina Wallin was born in Sweden, at Sodermanland, May 19, 1843. In Eskilstuna, about forty years ago, she heard the story of a restoration of the gospel, and with her husband accepted the message. In 1899 they left their native land and came to Utah, "for the truth's sake." About 1903, they heard and accepted the message of the Reorganization. For many years past she has suffered from the disease which terminated January 19, 1911, in her death. She lived true to her convictions of truth and died in hope of a glorious resurrection.

NELSON.—Robert Nelson was born May 30, 1846, died January 23, 1911, at his home near Bedison, Missouri. He was baptized when about twenty-five years of age; married to Miss Mariah Nelson February 6, 1872. To this union were born four children, Mrs. Lettie Ivie, John R., Jacob B., and Albert W., all of whom, with their mother, remain to mourn the loss of a loving husband and father. Funeral sermon by Elder A. C. Silvers, January 25, 1911.

NELSON.—Chester A. Nelson was born in Guilford, Missouri, Jan. 2, 1891. Died in Okmulgee, Oklahoma, Jan. 13, 1911, of typhoid. Was interred in Okmulgee by the Modern Woodmen of America, of which he was a member. He leaves a brother, Alvin; a sister, Mrs. Mary Schmidt, of Nodaway County, Missouri, and a mother; also Myrtle, Jessie, Helen, Willard and Evelyn Baldwin, of Okmulgee, half brothers and sisters. His father, P. C. Nelson, died in California fifteen years ago. He is a grandson of our aged brother and sister, A. Jacobson and wife, of Guilford, Missouri.

KIRKWOOD.—Douglas Kirkwood was born March 28, 1831, at Glasgow, Lanark, Scotland. He became a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in 1843, and united with the Reorganization October 14, 1867. He leaves a wife and seven children to mourn his loss, three having preceded him to the golden shore. Service at the home by Elders Noah N. Cooke and Samuel A. Burgess. He was one of the old and faithful members of the Saint Louis Branch.

COCHRAN.—Lyman C. Cochran was born at Vanceleave, Mississippi, November 2, 1893. He was the youngest child of Elder S. and Sister Cochran. Died January 20, 1911, aged 17 years, 2 months, and 18 days; cause of death, pneumonia. Baptized October 7, 1906, by Elder Alma Booker. Funeral sermon by F. M. Slover in Saints' church, January 21, 1911, in the presence of a large number of friends. He leaves to mourn, father, mother, one brother, and four sisters. He was just entering into the bloom of youth when cut down by the sickle of death.

COOK.—Rebecca Cook, at her home, Plano, Illinois, November 25, 1910, aged 72 years, 8 months, and 17 days. Mr. Brown, her first husband, died a year after marriage, leaving a son who died recently. She married Nathan Cook, of Plainfield, Illinois, October 24, 1860. Two daughters are dead and two sons survive: L. H. Cook, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Miss Ella F. Cook, of Plano, Illinois, who faithfully cared for her mother during her long illness. Deceased was baptized May 21, 1905, by Elder J. E. Wildermuth. She died a typical Saint. Funeral addresses by Elder F. M. Cooper, and Rev. Claude Boyer, (Baptist) at Plano, Illinois, November 28, in Saints' chapel.

ROGERS.—Silas M. Rogers died at his home, Piper City, Illinois, December 5, 1910, aged 81 years, 4 months, and 8 days. Born July 26, 1829, at Preston, Chenango County, New York; married to Hannah Elvira Noyes, December 22, 1853, at Newark Valley, Tioga County, New York. One son died, five children survive: Charles L., Iantha, Missouri; Joseph M., Kankakee, Illinois; Owen D., Watseka, Illinois, and Mrs. Ada A. Quick, Piper City, Illinois; also five grandchildren, a faithful wife, and several brothers and sisters. Baptized at Fox River, Illinois, 1861; ordained to the office of elder by Elder T. W. Smith, May 30, 1878. He lived a very exemplary life, which was a most potent argument for the religion of his choice. His friends and neighbors bear witness to his upright, Christian life. His home life was ideal, and the blow fell heavily upon the one who had so long shared his joys and sorrows. They will meet ere long in the Zion of God. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder F. M. Cooper, in the Presbyterian church, December 1. The Reverends Hanna, of the U. P. Church, and Lackland, of the M. E. Church, assisted in the service.

DERRY.—At Lamoni, Iowa, January 26, 1911, Elder George Derry, aged 86 years, 6 months, and 8 days. He was born in England, July 18, 1824; accepted the gospel in 1846; came to America in 1856; joined Reorganized Church in 1862; came to Lamoni in 1879; was faithful in every duty to God and man. He made an honorable record before all. His wife died in 1888. Of seven children four sons survive: Charles, Moroni, Arthur, and George Herbert. Funeral services in charge of John Smith; sermon by H. A. Stebbins; text, "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life."

ZIMMERMAN.—Mrs. Elsbeth Zimmerman, of Berlin, North

Dakota, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. John Young, on January 24, 1911. She departed this life to enter the paradise of God and await the resurrection of the just. She gladly received the restored gospel when she first heard it, though that was the latter years of her life. She was born at Schwanda, Switzerland, November 14, 1840, and came to America in 1861. Funeral services were held at the Methodist Episcopal church of Berlin, North Dakota. Sermon by Elder J. E. Wildermuth, of Fargo, North Dakota.

LANGDON.—Bulah Langdon, infant daughter of Bro. and Sr. Albert P. Langdon, of Dickinson, North Dakota. She was born September 26, 1910, and after two months of life on this earth the little spirit departed on December 2, 1910. Funeral sermon by Elder J. E. Wildermuth.

On the occasion of his youngest son leaving home for Australia, Charles Dickens wrote a letter of advice for his perusal. Among other things, he said: "Never take a mean advantage of anyone in any transaction, and never be hard upon people who are in your power. Try to do to others as you would have them do to you, and do not be discouraged if they fail sometimes. It is much better for you if they should fail in obeying the greatest rule laid down by our Savior than that you should. I put a New Testament among your books . . . because it teaches you the best lessons by which any human creature who tries to be truthful and faithful to duty can possibly be guided. As your brothers have gone away, one by one, I have written to each such words as I am now writing to you, and have entreated them all to guide themselves by this Book, putting aside the interpretations and inventions of man."

The astonishing battle in the streets of London recently, when two armed aliens held off a force of 1,000 police with reinforcements of soldiery, and finally perished in the flames of their burning stronghold rather than surrender, is discussed in the current issue of Harper's Weekly by Sydney Brooks, who states that England will thereby be compelled to reconsider her attitude of hospitality toward aliens. There exists to-day an Aliens Act, but it is enforced with such lenity, and is so imperfect, that the undesirable immigrant can always effect an entry. "We may expect," says this writer, "to see the power of deportation resorted to more freely. It is extremely probable that the laws in regard to pistols, daggers, and explosives will be made more effective, and it is not impossible that before long the Continental plan of registering aliens and of keeping them under official surveillance may be partially adopted."

The treatment given to Mrs. Eddy in her last illness, by the "students" in her own household, the same that she had prescribed for all her followers, is authoritatively described as "An effort to possess a clear consciousness of divine power and presence, with the understanding that when the consciousness of the individual is illumined by a realization of what God is, that realization overcomes the disease, as the light dispels darkness."

Who Was There That You Knew?

IN the shadowy ranks of those who marched to defeat or death or victory fifty years ago in the mighty conflict that convulsed this great nation, is there father or grandfather or uncle of yours? Would you like to see a photograph of him in that long ago day of his youth—a photograph that he never knew was taken? Perhaps we can show you one; and in any case, we can tell you a story, stranger than any detective fiction, of 3,500 priceless photographs that were lost and are found again.

3,500 Long Buried Photographs of the Civil War

THEY were taken by the greatest photographer in the United States of that day; they were bought by the United States Government for $30,000; they were buried in the War Department for 50 years—they are buried there still. But a duplicate set was kept by the photographer—who died poor and broken down; that duplicate set was knocked from pillar to post for nearly 50 years, until it was discovered by a New England collector. J. Pierpont Morgan (tried to secure the collection—Ex-President Garfield and General Benjamin F. Butler said it was worth $150,000—yet with the help of the REVIEW or REVIEWS, the entire collection has been gathered into 10 great volumes and is placed within your reach at less than the value of one of the photographs. It is the one accurate, impartial history of the Civil War—for the camera cannot lie. It tells the story of the War you never heard before. Taken under protection of the Secret Service, these photographs bring to light thousands of little-known phases of the war; they penetrate to strange places and record strange things.

TWO REMARKABLE WISHES GRANTED.

CONCERNING THINGS THAT ENDURE.

At one time Job expressed a remarkable wish: "Oh that my words were now written! oh that they were printed in a book! that they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock for ever!"

In the natural course of events, as things move in this age, that which is written to-day is forgotten to-morrow. The world is flooded with books, magazines, newspapers, and periodicals of every imaginable description. One entering a modern library with the purpose to improve his mind, and get in touch with modern ideas, is confronted by a mass of literature of such formidable bulk as to weary and almost discourage a busy man, at the very beginning of his research. However, he is consoled by the thought that much of it is ephemeral in nature, and even if he can never read it he will not miss much. The word ephemeral comes from ephemera, meaning "lasting but a day," and as a medical term meaning, "a fever of one day's duration." Not a bad term to apply to the furore attending many much heralded but short-lived "best sellers." There is danger that among this mass of literature, the unsophisticated student will miss the particular good things that he should read. We need literary pilots to-day.

The ideas of fifty years ago are discarded. Books that were considered revolutionary ten years ago are forgotten. Who can speak loud enough to be heard above the babel, or write fast enough to keep ahead of oblivion?

Yet there was Job, over three thousand years ago, aspiring to perpetual audience. He wished that his words might be printed in a book for all generations to read; he longed to seize the mallet and chisel and engrave them upon the solid rock, and fill the chiseled letters with lead, so that they might become a perpetual memorial.

There must have seemed little prospect that Job's ardent desire for publicity would ever be gratified. Yet strange as it may seem his wish was granted beyond his most extravagant dream. Through many perils and strange vicissitudes his words were preserved, and have come down to us, as one says, "Borne on the wings of a hundred translations." They are indeed printed in a book, and have place in every library, and in multitudes of homes of high and low degree the world over.

Here is the burden of the message that he wished to publish to all ages:

I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me.

You see, unlike most literature, Job's message dealt with things eternal. That was the reason he was consumed with such an ardent desire to have it preserved and given the greatest publicity. Theories, philosophies, speculations, gossip may be published and forgotten; but here is a statement of an eternal and important truth that has never been forgotten and never will be forgotten.

In his second epistle the Apostle Peter expressed a wish similar to the one expressed by Job. Being a positive man, Peter declared a determination to take steps calculated to accomplish his desire. He said: "Moreover I will endeavor that ye may be able after my decease to have these things always in remembrance."

These are the things that he desired that the people should always have in remembrance:

And besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and can not see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall: For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth.

Very learned epistles, written by very able and distinguished men, and published twelve months ago, are forgotten; but the wish expressed by Peter was granted, and the epistle of the humble fisherman is still preserved and given the widest publicity that the printed page ever gave to any message.

He, too, propounded things permanent and above valuation. Job wrote of the immortality of the soul, and of the great work of the Redeemer, who has made it possible for us to meet him in the flesh on this earth, even after death and decay have had their brief reign of terror. Peter wrote of virtue, knowledge, temperance, brotherly kindness, charity, and godliness; those wonderful virtues that will transform human nature and make one worthy of the resurrection of which Job so confidently wrote. The messages are correlated and the one completes the other. We can afford to forget a whole library of worldly knowledge, if we can but remember these things of heavenly and eternal worth.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

MOTH HOLES IN MARKHAM.

The "Book of Mormon" was a successful literary steal and hoax. In 1812 Solomon Spalding, of New York (a would be Jules Verne), anticipating some of our own sensational romancing, made up his mind to create an atmosphere of mystery by naming one of his stories "Manuscript Found," and by claiming that the pages had been discovered in a cave in Ohio. This romance was based on the notion, then prevalent, that ancient America with its Aztecs and Indians was peopled by the descendants of "the lost tribes of Israel."

A manuscript copy of this story is known to have fallen into the hands of Joseph Smith, the founder of Mormonism. This historical romance (with the addition of a few pious phrases and a few texts of scripture) was soon printed and distributed as the new Koran of a new Mohammed.

Spalding's widow and friends at once recognized and denounced this crude and huge imposture. But the snowball had commenced rolling; and its momentum still carried it on, enlarging it at every revolution. From only six followers in the beginning, the resultant sect of Mormonism has grown to an immense hierarchy and a swarming people—all of whom have the enormous egotism to call themselves "latter day saints."

The foregoing is from the pen of Edwin Markham, and appears in the Cosmopolitan Magazine for March, under the caption, "Moth holes in Mormonism." Edwin Markham is the man who some years ago attained sudden fame by reason of the vogue given to his poem, "The man with the hoe," since which time he has been endeavoring to live up to his reputation as a writer. While reading this effusion on Mormonism, for some reason one line of his own poem kept running through our mind, "Who loosened and let down his jaw?"

It seems that all celebrated writers are fated sooner or later to stumble upon the theme of "Mormonism." The gentle and pious Quaker poet, Whittier, had a sneer for the "Mormon goggles"; and the profane Kipling attempted to dissect the Book of Mormon after giving it a half hour's perusal. Now comes this venerable man with a hoe and digs up the ancient, the justly discredited and decently buried apocryphal Solomon Spalding Romance Story. Probably Markham chose the title, "Moth Holes in Mormonism," because of its fine alliterative sound, suggesting poetry. But after reading his criticism we are reminded that "Moth holes in Markham" is just as alliterative, and much more literal.

There is not one up-to-date student of "Mormonism" in the field as an opponent to-day who will undertake to defend the Solomon Spalding Romance theory of the origin of the Book of Mormon. It has been completely abandoned by intelligent critics. It is put forward only by those who depend upon encyclopedias edited thirty years ago. Why will a supposedly great man, an apostle of liberty and justice, a would be remaker of the entire social system in the interest of the "brotherhood of humanity," so carelessly write upon a subject concerning which he is so ignorant, thus helping to perpetuate a gross libel that at the start was nothing but a falsehood foisted upon the public with the aid of an excommunicated adulterer.

D. H. Bays could not have written, "The man with the hoe," but he was a student of this question, and a prominent opponent of "Mormonism." In his book, Doctrine and Dogmas of Mormonism, he said:

The usual debater undertakes to trace the Book of Mormon to the Spalding Romance through Sidney Rigdon.

Nothing can be more erroneous, and it will lead to almost certain defeat. The well-informed advocate of Mormonism wants no better amusement than to vanquish an opponent in discussion who takes this ground. The facts are all opposed to this view, and the defenders of the Mormon dogma have the facts well in hand. I speak from experience.—Page 22.

There are two reasons why our opponents have abandoned the Spalding Romance Story. First, it never was true (but that alone would not be sufficient to cause it to be discarded). The second reason is more potent: It is generally known now that it never was true. The original manuscript of Solomon Spalding's "Manuscript Found" has come to light and neither Mr. Markham nor any other person need depend upon traditional testimony of Spalding's "widow and friends" as to its character. The facts were briefly set forth in our columns some time ago in answer to an article in the Boston Traveler.

In 1839, L. L. Rice purchased from E. D. Howe, a former exposé of Mormonism and one of the fathers of the Spalding Romance theory, the Painesville Telegraph, of Painesville, Ohio, with all the type, presses, books, and manuscripts belonging to the office. Years later, in connection with his friend, President Fairchild, of Oberlin College, while going through these old manuscripts, he found the original manuscript of the Spalding Romance, bearing the signature and verification of E. D. Howe and others who had been interested in exposing "Mormonism." The manuscript was placed in the hands of President Fairchild, and is now in the library of Oberlin College, Ohio, where it may be viewed by anyone who chooses to take the trouble. It has been published verbatim in book form and the HERALD Editors will take pleasure in securing a copy of it for The Boston Traveler, if it is desired. It is about as much like the Book of Mormon as a mud turtle is like an eagle, and that is why Bays said that the facts were all opposed to the Solomon Spalding Romance theory.

Edwin Markham can verify these statements by a visit to Oberlin College, or by correspondence with the college authorities, or by the purchase of a copy of the book. He should make this matter right or cease to pose as a man of honor and an apostle of light.

THE WORK AMONG THE INDIANS.

The following statement is from the pen of a man who has labored as a missionary; and from his experience, one who is probably qualified to give advice concerning what is necessary in doing missionary labor among the Indian tribes. Some effort has been made in this direction during the two or three years past, and the results, though somewhat encouraging, have not been flattering. Has the time come for the church to make an effort in this direction; that is, a special effort?

"You spoke of the work among the Lamanites. I have not been among them for two years or nearly so, but I am acquainted with them and their ways. . . . There is only one successful way to labor with the Lamanites, and that is to associate or become one of them, not necessarily to sacrifice any principle of truth, but make yourself at home, and fish and hunt. Preach all the time you are with them. They like anyone that is of that nature. That is the way I got in with Brother Karaho. I was fishing and hunting and preaching, and so he got so he would rather hear preaching than anything else. Then I got him to call two or three families [of Indians] together, and I preached to them. A man has to get acquainted with them. They are like myself, peculiar. It takes a great deal longer to convert an Indian than it does a white man.

"I have opened over two hundred places among the Indians, and have preached among fourteen different tribes, and then didn't do much good. They are clannish, and if you get one that has an influence it is a good start. It is like a bell sheep; the rest will come, sooner or later. It does seem like they come very slow. Now I labored mostly among the Cherokees, and when I commenced there, there were but two members of the church, and they were whites. When I quit we had five branches, but not many Indians.

"I labored among the following tribes: Cherokee, Wyandotte, Quapaw, Peoria, Creek, Osage, Choctaw, Chicasaw, Cheyennes, Comanche, Cadoc, Ponie, Arapho, and Seneca; at Big Cabin, Wyandotte Mission, Quapaw Town, Peoria Town with the Justice, Wetumka, Osage Agency, Tomahau, Minco, Elk City, and Dead Indian, Fort Sill, Anna Darco, Ponie Agency, Private Ranch, Kingia. I preached at those points in passing back and forth.

"In order to have success among the Indians a man must become a 'mixer,' and when they learn that you are their friend then you can work successfully with them. Now I remember once I had a fine lot of them in an arbor, and I asked for a vote of who blamed me for reading the Bible. So they all, everyone of them, voted it was all right for me to read it; and then I thanked them and told them I could see they were my friends. Then I called for another vote to see who blamed me for believing what I had read in the Bible; and they all but one voted it was right. The rest of them pointed their fingers at that one for not voting. They rather liked the trap I had caught them in and they had a good laugh over it, and said, to be honest is to believe it all."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The editor of an Iowa newspaper sends us a letter which he has received from Pikeville, which shows some of the inner workings of R. B. Neal's scheme for making money out of "Mormonism." We reproduce the letter as it came to us:

PIKEVILLE, KENTUCKY, August 8, 1910.

Dear Brother Editor: Mormonism is a menace to both church and state. It seemingly can command both men and money without limit to push its claims.

The issues presented are of the greatest interest to the public. We realize that the county paper must be enlisted to battle the "elders" of the Mormon prophet.

We will furnish you one page of a six column folio, single column matter for $1.25 per page. If it has any two column cuts, cost will be $1.75 per page.

To be able to make this offer we must hear favorably from at least fifty editors.

Will you be one of the fifty? An early answer will oblige,
Yours,

R. B. NEAL.

Per M.

From the beginning, the Anti-Mormon League and men of the type of those who promoted it, have cared more for the money to be made than for the principle involved. At the very first meeting of the League it was announced that anyone could join who would contribute to the finances of the undertaking. These gentlemen do not actually wish to destroy "Mormonism," because if they did their income would be cut off and they would be obliged to go to work. The men who have denounced Joseph Smith as a "money digger" have ever been the ones who have sought to make money without digging,—candor suggests that they are indolent, charity suggests the "hook worm" theory.

A member of the municipal council of the city of Paris is urging the authorities to increase the police force of that city. He declares that purse snatchers and brigands are masters of the streets. Respectable people, citizens, shut themselves up in their homes after dark. Crime of all kinds is said to be on the increase.

Six Episcopal clergymen, with fifty members of that church in England and one minister in Ireland, have lately joined the Roman Catholic Church. Among them was the Rev. David Rhys-Morgan, a prominent Welsh parson. The seven ministers are now in Rome studying for the priesthood.

According to a telegram in the Kansas City Journal, the Rev. Dr. J. Jowett, pastor of Carr's Lane Church, Birmingham, England, in accepting a call to the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City, stipulates that he desires to receive less than half of the $12,000 salary offered him.

Elder A. M. Chase, missionary in Salt Lake City, wishes his friends and all interested in that mission to note that he has moved nearer to the meeting place. His personal address now is, 898 East Fourth South street, Salt Lake City, Utah. The hall where services are held is 403 South East Ninth street.

What ceased when Christ died? An interesting discussion of this old mooted question is now running in the Sunday School Exponent. In the March issue, one of the missionaries, writing under the heading, "Undermining the missionary," seeks to show that the editor of the Gospel Quarterly has taught error on this subject. This came up in the natural order in the Lessons Department of the Exponent and was treated casually by the editor. Now her critic claims that her position is identical with that of the Seven Day Adventists on the subject named. The missionaries are all interested and will want to read the article and the reply that will follow. We are requested to say that if you are under conference appointment and will send in your name and address, mentioning appointment, you will receive the Exponent free of charge. Address the Sunday School Exponent, Lamoni, Iowa.

The library department of church work is important. We are glad to make note of the following: "Never, since the organization of the Library Commission has there been such a widespread interest in that work as now. As I am sending this copy to the press for the March Exponent we have already more reports in our possession, or calls for blank reports, than we have had altogether in the last four years, and in every mail they are steadily coming."—E. H. Fisher, Secretary of Library Commission, in Exponent. In the February Exponent he said: "If you haven't any report worth while making out (according to your own ideas) make it out anyhow; we want to hear from each and every district and must hear from you before the end of February. If you haven't done anything simply say so,—but the principal thing we want to know is: how many branches in your district are organized and how many branches are unorganized." Let every district library board that has not yet reported get busy and help swell this report. Address E. H. Fisher, 100 Sycamore street, Winter Hill, Massachusetts. To the same address the traveling ministry throughout the country are invited to write the Secretary for complete printed information relative to the work of the commission, which will be sent free.

Just before going to press, we received a telegram from the district secretary, asking us to announce in this issue that the time for the meeting of the Utah district conference has been changed from March 4 and 5, to February 25 and 26, 1911, to enable Apostle J. W. Rushton to be present. All concerned please take notice.

Elder Richard Hill, a leading man among the Church of Christ, or "Hedrickite" people, at Independence, Missouri, passed away February 9, at the age of eighty-five.

The Bishop reports that the Christmas Offering for the past year is in excess of the amount contributed during any other year. We have not learned the exact amount, but it is in the neighborhood of six thousand six hundred dollars.

Independence Branch news arrived too late for insertion in this issue.

Genuine criticism has its uses, but sometimes ill-will is found masquerading ill-concealed in the garb of honest criticism. When "criticised" under such circumstances calmness is essential. Do not allow annoyance to get the better of your good judgment. Measure your opponent, the strength or weakness of his statements and the likelihood of his hearers indorsing them. If a reply is absolutely necessary let it be dignified and as brief as possible. Don't get the idea that every foolish "criticism" calls for a reply. Actions are more eloquent than words. Sometimes the best reply is silence. A few pinpricks will not hurt. The intellectual and moral force behind the pin is never strong enough to drive it in very deep. It displays weakness, not strength, to exhibit restiveness under such conditions. The still, strong, silent man, secure in the right, is the man who, where reason and fairness reign, commands the greatest respect.—The Gospel Standard, Australia.

GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF THE CHURCH FINANCIAL SYSTEM AS SET FORTH IN THE LAW OF CHRIST

BY THE JOINT COUNCIL OF THE REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS,
MAY 2, A. D. 1903.

BY E. L. KELLEY, PRESIDING BISHOP.

CHAPTER 8.

The article contained in chapter eight of the series is inserted as embodying generally in terse terms many special and prominent principles of the financial law of the church as that law is found in the three standard books of the church.

It would not be proper to say that it reflects the views of the Presidency, or the views of the Quorum of Twelve, or that of the Bishopric of the church; it was not sent out for this purpose, nor is it so held out here. It was from the beginning claimed to reflect the divine truths contained in the law of Christ and thereby the divine will upon these lines as interpreted by his authorized ministers, and we present as evidence fitting its claim that it is in harmony with and truly reflects the law.

During the General Conference at Lamoni, Iowa, April, 1905, the matter was formally taken up by the First Quorum of Seventy and considered, indorsed, and presented, and later by others of the church quorums, and on the 15th day of April the following action had by the entire body:

"Whereas, it is a part of the work and duty of the Saints to do all in their power to redeem the waste places and establish Zion, in keeping with the commandments as revealed in the law of Christ, and

"Whereas, it is only by the fulfillment and administration of the 'celestial law' that the land of Zion can be sanctified and her children stand justified and made fully acceptable to God, therefore be it

"Resolved, That we commend the efforts of the Bishopric to administer the law touching all of the interests and work of the church in the stakes, and so far as the same is applicable in all the branches of the church in every land and in every department of work, and believe it proper that a full compliance with the same be urged upon every member, so far as the same may be had in equality and justice.

"Resolved, That we recognize in the work and findings of the joint council, of the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric contained in the report of said council entitled 'An Address to the Saints,' a proper presentation of this law, and outlines upon which to carry forward such work."

The address referred to is as follows:

"An Address to the Saints.

"The quorums of the First Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishopric met in joint council at Lamoni,

Iowa, May 1, 1903, and after careful consideration adopted the following address and provided for its publication in HERALD, Ensign, and in tract form. There were present, Joseph Smith, F. M. Smith, and R. C. Evans of the First Presidency; W. H. Kelley, Heman C. Smith, Joseph Luff, G. T. Griffiths, I. N. White, F. A. Smith, F. M. Sheehy, and U. W. Greene of the Twelve; and E. L. Kelley and G. H. Hilliard of the Bishopric.

"FRED M. SMITH,

"HEMAN C. SMITH, } Secretaries.

"The Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric in joint council send greeting to the Saints of the progress and conditions of church work, and particularly that part relating to temporalities, trusting to encourage the faithful helpers everywhere and to stimulate all to efforts of diligence in fulfilling the law of Christ.

"I. NECESSITY OF FULFILLING THE LAW.

"As a people we expect to find acceptance with God only so far as we are willing to do his will and keep his commandments.

"Jesus taught: 'If ye love me, keep my commandments.'—John 14: 15.

"The inspired psalmist sung of the mercies and blessings of the Lord that followed those and their families who failed not to obey him:

"The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness unto children's children; to such as keep his covenant, and to those that remember his commandments to do them.—Psalm 103: 17, 18.

"These promised favors and benefits, as a people, we desire and seek; but it must not be forgotten that their realization depends upon our readiness to do. It is by faithful performance of duty that we are made heirs of promise and entitled to a place among those who love God.

"And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments.—1 John 2: 3.

"For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments: and his commandments are not grievous.—1 John 5: 3.

"We are not only promised acceptance with God by these citations through obedience to all of his laws, but are assured to begin with, that he does not demand more than we shall be able to perform.

"His commandments are not grievous.' But God requires an effort on our part to fulfill his law. This should be made in meekness, but with courage; everyone moving to his or her task with cheerfulness, and a fervent desire to accomplish through the love of God, all that he has asked.

"Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord, that delighteth greatly in his commandments.—Psalm 112: 1.

"Forty-two years ago the Reorganized Church was instructed to comply with the laws relating to tem-poralities, and potent reasons mentioned for so doing.

"In order to place the church in a position to carry on the promulgation of the gospel, and as a means of fulfilling the law, the twelve will take measures in connection with the bishop, to execute the law of tithing.—Doctrine and Covenants 114: 1.

"The law then is binding upon the church and should be administered; put in force, fulfilled, as any and all others relating to the body—the church. The officers mentioned are required to perform this work as a duty. And the fact must not be overlooked in this connection, that if these officers are charged with the administration of the law and are to be held responsible for making a proper effort to carry out their part of the work, that each and every member is under equal obligation to obey, or comply with the same, and that responsibility for a disregard or disobedience, can not be escaped. Entire, full, and complete obedience is demanded for this law as any other; and a failure to keep, must now as in the past bring the church under condemnation.

"Behold, I say unto you, Were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer.—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2.

"II. MANNER OF ADMINISTRATION.

"To obtain the benefit for which any gospel law or usage has been instituted, the administration must be by a voluntary acceptance, or willingness, on the part of the one complying. People can not be assessed, or deprived of their properties by the church against their will. Christ promised an eternal reward to those who fulfilled his law here. Then the act of the observer must be a voluntary one. To lay up 'treasures in heaven' requires that the act be with a free heart, willingly. There is no chance for compulsion in carrying out the law relating to temporalities any more than that touching spiritual things. To baptize a person who does not understand the object and benefits of baptism and against his will, would be an act in violation of the law of Christ. To force a person to give of his means, or deceive him as to the object and purpose, would be a violation of the law on the part of the administrator. The gospel rule is stated by the apostle:

"Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for the Lord loveth a cheerful giver.—2 Corinthians 9: 7.

"Behold the Lord requireth the heart, and a willing mind.—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 7.

"On the other hand, a person who accepts the law, and desires to obey the commandments of God must not fail to perform because it will inconvenience him, or be a sacrifice for him to do so. No great reward can be expected by an individual who defers doing anything for the cause of Christ until he gets something that he can do without, just as well as not, and then turn that over to the Lord. Christ gave all for us, why should we hesitate to sacrifice for him or his work? Many in accepting the gospel are called upon to part with friends, relatives, and loved ones; indeed all must deny themselves of many things for Christ's sake; but do we waver because of this? Neither should we hesitate to sacrifice of our substance to promote the welfare of his work.

"Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming).—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5. (See Malachi 4: 1.)

"In keeping this, as well as other commandments, we prove our worthiness before the Lord. Jesus referring to this law of duty in temporal matters, says:

"He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much; and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much. If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches?—Luke 16: 10, 11.

"Can anything be plainer upon the question of rendering a faithful and true account than the foregoing? And stop and consider that it is the Son of God talking; a fact in itself sufficient to disclose the great importance of each and everyone setting him or herself right, in complying with the law.

"III. WHAT IS REQUIRED BY IT?

"1. A recognition on our part of the beneficence and supremacy of God over every good thing in this world. As he declares:

"The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein.—Psalm 24: 1.

"For every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills.—Psalm 50: 10.

"2. The stewardship, rather than the ownership, of man, and that it is his duty and reasonable service to render an account of this stewardship to God in time, as well as eternity.

"It is expedient in me for a bishop to be appointed unto you, or of you unto the church, in this part of the Lord's vineyard; and verily in this thing ye have done wisely, for it is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship, both in time and in eternity. For he who is faithful and wise in time is accounted worthy to inherit the mansions prepared for them of my Father.—Doctrine and Covenants 72: 1.

"The principle of rendering tithes to the Lord has been recognized and followed in every age wherein we have an account of a people who were accepted of him.

"Abraham, the father of all the faithful in Christ, kept the law. To the high priest, Melchisedec, 'Abraham gave a tenth part of all.'—Hebrews 7:2.

"Jacob promised: 'And of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee.'—Genesis 28:22.

"The Lord charged Malachi to say to the people:

"'Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house.'—Malachi 3:10. This injunction is made applicable in the gospel economy by the instruction of Christ to the Nephites after his resurrection. (Nephi 11:1-3.) He also said to the Jews:

"But woe unto you, Pharisees! for ye tithe mint and rue and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.—Luke 11:42.

"The word tithe, means tenth; and the rendition of a tithe referred to in the Bible, is the turning into the hands of the bishop appointed to receive the same, the tenth part of what a man has, over and above his indebtedness; or 'a tenth of the increase.' Everyone should render an account in this, for whatever we are blessed with we are indebted to God for, and it is but reasonable and just that we honor him in the tithe. The principle is: 'Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thine increase.'—Proverbs 3:9.

"It must not be forgotten that the tithe is a part of what a person has been blessed with; God first bestows upon us, and then asks a return according to our several abilities. The widow with her mite may do this and receive reward therefor. The rich can not be rewarded if they withhold. 'For there is no respect of persons with God.'—Romans 2:11.

"Under special conditions of the church, other portions of giving, than the tenth, are also referred to as tithes, but the word occurs as an adjective, or verb, and not as a noun, and denotes the act of giving or taking, rather than the specific amount required under the law.

"Verily I say unto you, It shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you. . . . And this shall be an ensample unto all the stakes of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 106:2.

The surplus may be a hundredth part, or a half; no definite sum is indicated here by the word, but the idea of paying or giving is expressed.

"Direction is also given to the Saints to consecrate of their properties for the use and benefit of the church in providing for the poor, and carrying out the work of promulgating the gospel. To consecrate is to set apart for these special church, or sacred uses. The amount of the consecration is to be determined by the person giving in agreement with the Bishop and is referred to as 'that which thou hast to impart,' there being provision also for a first, and subsequent consecrations.

"If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which can not be broken. . . . And again, if there shall be properties in the hands of the church, or any individuals of it, more than is necessary for their support, after this first consecration, which is a residue, to be consecrated unto the bishop, it shall be kept to administer unto those who have not, from time to time, that every man who has need may be amply supplied, and receive according to his wants. Therefore, the residue shall be kept in my storehouse, to administer to the poor and the needy, as shall be appointed by the high council of the church, and the bishop and his council, and for the purpose of purchasing lands for the public benefit of the church, and building houses of worship, and building up of the New Jerusalem which is hereafter to be revealed, that my covenant people may be gathered in one, in that day when I shall come to my temple. And this I do for the salvation of my people.—Doctrine and Covenants 42:8, 10.

"To consecrate is to set apart for a special purpose, or use, and in the consecration referred to here, a portion is set aside for the purposes mentioned in the law to be put into the hands of the Bishop of the church. The remainder is designated or set apart to the one making the consecration as his own; for it appears that the 'testimonies concerning the consecration' are taken at the time. Herein a complete consecration may be had and persons entering therein receive their certificates from the Bishop.

"The consecration of the 'remainder' or 'residue' herein referred to, is more particularly set out under the term of surplus property, and may be better comprehended under this head.

"IV. SURPLUS PROPERTY.

"Whatever amount or kind of property can be spared by any person without injury to his business, or impairing his stewardship, is under the law properly termed surplus. In other words, it is that part of a man's properties which he has more than he has need. Individual efforts and interests are not jeopardized in the administration of this part of the law, but respected and conserved. For while a person carries on his work and properly answers to the Lord in his stewardship, he aids the church to perform its work by setting aside for its use that which he can do without, that it may perform its work, and he in turn is blessed and benefited in developing and establishing of the church work. The plan is cooperative, aiding the needy and leveling distinctions, and largely enters into the solution of the question of bringing about harmony in the social life of the people. The direct application of the order of surplus is in Zion and her stakes, (see Doctrine and Covenants 106,) but the privileged administration is coextensive with the residences of the Saints and proper officers to administer, thus making the children of Zion one in their works.

"He that sendeth up treasures unto the land of Zion, shall receive an inheritance in this world, and his works shall follow him.—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 13.

"A few words in addition to the laws of the kingdom, respecting the members of the church; they that are appointed by the Holy Spirit to go up unto Zion, and they who are privileged to go up unto Zion. Let them carry up unto the bishop a certificate from three elders of the church, or a certificate from the bishop, otherwise he who shall go up unto the land of Zion shall not be accounted as a wise steward. This is also an ensample. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 72: 5.

"V. TESTIMONIES TO BE TAKEN.

"To insure justice and equity in the administration of this principle of surplus, the Bishop must be made acquainted with the holdings of each one. He can neither confirm, as just and equitable, the amounts set aside by the rich to fill the measure of the law, nor know the needs and wants of the poor who must be aided, without this. It is right and proper then, that all should file their inventories, with the Bishop; make a full and complete showing without reservation, as a solemn and sacred act in their stewardship before the Lord, so that the law may be administered in equity and righteousness. This act is referred to in the law as laying 'all things before the bishop in Zion,' a term fairly disclosing the object, extent, and manner of execution of the law.

"For according to the law every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before the bishop in Zion. . . . A certificate from the judge or bishop in this part of the vineyard, unto the bishop in Zion, rendereth every man acceptable, and answereth all things, for an inheritance, and to be received as a wise steward and as a faithful laborer; otherwise he shall not be accepted of the bishop in Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 72: 3, 4.

"The Bishop in Zion referred to herein is the general Bishop, or Presiding Bishop in contradistinction to local bishops. Zion is particularly defined in the law as, 'The pure in heart.' (Doctrine and Covenants 94: 5.) But there are references made in terms of 'the place for the city of Zion'; 'the land of Zion'; 'the waste places of Zion'; and Zion, the 'ensign of the people.'

"Offerings for the purpose of helping along worthy undertakings, benevolent enterprises, special educational efforts, incidental expenses to a traveling elder, and church buildings, should be made by all who can do so. In this way we may do much to build up and establish the kingdom of God. Men can do much of their own selves; as they voluntarily do this, they are made stronger instead of weaker, the Lord giving them ability to bring forth more fruit, proving the fact held out in the law that giving does not impoverish a person.

"Verily I say, Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves. And inasmuch as men do good, they shall in no wise lose their reward. But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 6.

"VI. CONCLUDING STATEMENT.

"It is the duty, and should be regarded as the privilege, of every person to consecrate everything he has and is to the service of God, to be used for the advancement of his work as he may direct. The church being an organization ordained of God for the developing and promulgating of his purposes it follows that through its authorized representatives we can more effectually accomplish these purposes than in any other way. The Bishop being under the law the authorized custodian of church funds, he should be recognized, and his cooperation secured in the consecration of money or property to the uses provided for in the law.

The church has no right to take of any man's property without his consent being first obtained; nor in making the consecration referred to, has the person the exclusive right to determine how means shall be used which is thus set apart for church purposes. We therefore believe that each person should make a faithful inventory of all he possesses, and lay it before the Bishop; and by mutual agreement between himself and the Bishop determine what portion he shall retain for his own needs and what portion shall be placed in the treasury for other purposes. That portion set apart for his own needs and that for other purposes to be regarded as alike consecrated to the service of God, thus making a complete consecration. When such agreement and adjustment are made, the party consecrating receives an inheritance, or a certificate entitling him to an inheritance at such time as he may need, and the church be in condition to comply.

"This consecration when complied with does not release the party complying, from the obligation of paying tithes on increase accumulated after consecration; nor from making a second consecration according to the first, should the individual find himself in a position to do so.

"LAMONI IOWA, May 2, 1903."

UNITY, COOPERATION, AND EQUALITY.

BY COLUMBUS SCOTT.

III. EQUALITY.

The foregoing considerations ought to help educate us up the shining way to that exalted station where we can observe the celestial requirement, 'Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy soul, might, mind and strength, and thy brother as thyself." Jesus says these two commandments are equal, the one to the other. Do you practice the first in your daily worship? Do you practice the latter in your daily dealing with your brother? Can Saints enter celestial glory and leave either of these two commandments out of our daily practice, life and heart?

Does, to love my brother as myself, imply that he is my equal? Being a child of the same heavenly Father, is he equally entitled to the Father's attention and blessings with yourself, spiritually and temporarily?

Of a truth, I perceive God is no respecter of persons.—Acts 10: 34.

But verily I say unto you, Teach one another according to the office wherewith I have appointed you, and let every man esteem his brother as himself, and practice virtue and holiness before me. And again I say unto you, Let every man esteem his brother as himself: for what man among you having twelve sons, and is no respecter to them, and they serve him obediently, and he saith unto the one, Be thou clothed in robes and sit thou here; and to the other, Be thou clothed in rags and sit thou there, and looketh upon his sons and saith, I am just. Behold, this I have given unto you a parable, and it is even as I am: I say unto you be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine.—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 5, 6.

Should we "treat lightly the things," the revelations, the commandments we "have received"? (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 8.)

"Let every man esteem his brother as himself," is being like God. Add to our "godliness brotherly kindness," Peter enjoins when teaching us to grow in the divine graces.

Equality. What is it, religiously considered? Considered in spiritual and temporal relations? Both relations or conditions exist. A penalty is attached to our not being equal, and so being and practicing. That penalty is: "Ye are not mine." What else can be gleaned from the foregoing statement and parable, or illustration?

But when the first came, they supposed that they should have received more; and they likewise received every man a penny. And when they had received it, they murmured against the good man of the house, saying, These last have wrought but one hour, and thou hast made them equal unto us, which have borne the burden and heat of the day. But he answered one of them, and said, Friend, I do thee no wrong: didst not thou agree with me for a penny? Take that thine is, and go thy way; I will give unto this last even as unto thee. Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? Is thine eye evil, because I am good?—Matthew 20: 10-15.

Jesus uses this language in illustration of the operation of the kingdom of heaven in relation to its financial features. An agreement had been entered into by the laborers and the vineyard owner. Some of the laborers forgot their agreement when pay day came, and concluded they should have received more than the agreement called for. They murmured because of the justness of equality practiced by the Lord of the vineyard. The Lord's ways are equal.

The language here used by our Savior refers to the work to be accomplished under the eleventh hour call. The closing dispensation of God's work in the end of this world. The Master has ever sought to have equality among his people in all dispensations from the early morning hour of the world's day. Some in each dispensation have "murmured," at the equality God has sought to establish among his people. But to such he has said:

"Your ways are not equal." (Ezekiel 18: 25 and 33: 12.) "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" (Genesis 18: 25.) "Yet the children of thy people say, The way of the Lord is not equal: but, as for them, their way is not equal." (Ezekiel 33: 17.)

"Even from the days of your fathers ye are gone away from mine ordinances and have not kept them," (Malachi 3: 7,) is enough to show that men have sought to avoid equality in former ages, dispensations, as well as in the closing one of our day. Who are "the laborers"? Let the word answer. "Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may. All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all." (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.) Ministers and the men of business are all called to "labor together for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all." Who of all these laborers of the eleventh hour dispensation, "for the last days and for the last time," (Doctrine and Covenants 105: 12,) are going to murmur over the Lord's equality among his people?

"All are called," all are offered equal opportunity to labor. All may enter into the agreement, covenant, to labor for the payment offered. He offers to each, not enemies, not all we might want, but what each needs, just wants. God offers this to all. If any faithful laborer fails to receive the offer, that which he agreed to labor for, who is to account for this? Is it right to look at this matter from both sides? God makes the offer, then supplies the sufficient substance to comply with the agreed covenant. "And whatsoever is right, that ye shall receive," is his statement. (Matthew 20: 7.) "There is even now (A. D. 1834,) already in store a sufficient." (Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10.) Saints, is this true? Does the Lord know?

The issue is now placed before us. Upon the church is placed the responsibility of sending the gospel to the nations, building up the church, caring for the needy, and redeeming Zion. Does our Father require all to labor in this great work of the last days according to their several talents or abilities?

Does he require the church to work unitedly, cooperatively in this great work? Will he open the way that all may have equal opportunity to labor? Is there equality while some roll in or covet luxuries and others are deprived of even necessities? Can there be a righteous adjustment of the conditions tending toward equality? Will God do all this, independently of an effort on our part, or of our agency?

One of my texts quoted says the work, work, work; it is work that "is entrusted to all" the Saints. Not to the ministry alone, not to the bishop alone, not to the "men of business" of the church alone, but "to all"! All ye Saints, to you is the word of this salvation sent.

Are there any in the church up to this date that have been sufficiently instructed in the requirements, to begin the work of adjustment of conditions necessary to produce practical equality? If not, from A. D. 1834 till 1910, what progress are we making toward Zion's conditions? Where is the remedy for present unequal conditions? What steps are necessary to begin with? (Doctrine and Covenants 102:3.) How much longer are we to wait for the beginning of Zion's redemption under the law? The law of consecration?

Have the elders received the necessary endowment that the work may begin? Have the churches abroad been "taught," and had "experience" necessary, and do they "know more perfectly," what is required at their hands, so that selfishness is so far removed that they will not say, as in 1834, "Behold, he will deliver in time of trouble; otherwise we will not go up unto Zion, and will keep our moneys" (see above citation). Is this condition now changed? Let us all ponder and have an answer to these interrogations. Unless we do, can we judge all things pertaining to Zion? If we fail to have the necessary information to enable us to do this, who is responsible?

An equality among the Saints of Zion, such as is necessary, such as is contemplated in the law given to the church, is right and required. "Every man equal," according to their families . . . circumstances . . . wants . . . needs," spiritual and temporal. (Doctrine and Covenants 51:1.) It is essential to the salvation of the Saints, (78:1; 70:3). It must be in things temporal and spiritual, and this implies progress on the part of all Saints, advancement in an understanding of the laws governing the conditions of equality. Each person and family must learn to adapt themselves to require only "needs" or just "wants." Of course, what can I do with more than what I need? So far as personal requirements are concerned. I am sure that as a minister all Saints would be interested in my demanding four suits of clothing per year, when two would serve every practical purpose so far as propriety and economy and righteousness demand. My vanity and pride might prompt me to desire more. I use this parable to be understood at this point, for I have my mind on that word according in the text. "Equal according" to needs. A proportional equality. "Needs" involve the number of the family; needs according to talents used in business relations. (See Doctrine and Covenants 81:4.) According to the law, each individual and family and organized company or industrial organization is to become responsible to God and the church as to what their respective "needs" are. That all may improve on their stewardships. The Lord makes every man accountable unto him in temporal matters as well as in spiritual matters. (Doctrine and Covenants 101:2.)

THE CONCLUSIONS.

Independently of unity of God's people, the prayer of Christ will not be answered. Without it the world will not have that one crowning evidence upon which to base the faith, the belief that Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ. (John 17:20, 21.)

The absence of unity of faith on the part of God's people shows the testimony of Christ's witnesses to be inadequate to bring about his purpose. It reflects upon the wisdom of God, and the measures he has ordained to bring us to that grand, divine condition—that unity of faith and works is a failure.

The means used by him are the gospel, divine glory, his word, and divinely inspired and commissioned officers or teachers. (See John 17:14, 22; Acts 1:8; 1 Corinthians 12:4-20; Ephesians 4:1-13.)

Division among God's people, in faith and practice, is opposition to God's will as expressed in his word, and is an incontrovertible evidence that whatever the profession, such are not born again, are not yet in Christ. (See Galatians 3:26-28; Doctrine and Covenants 38:6.) And further, without that unity prayed for by our Savior, a unity of faith (and faith is always, invariably the product of testimony), neither purification from sin, nor glorification unto eternal life can be realized. It is realized only by those who are united according to God's law. The Apostle Paul, that prince of logicians among men of the ages, says:

Now, I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you, but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment.

Is this impossible? If so, let us hear you tell why. Tell us, do. (3 Nephi 9:30; 1 Corinthians 1:8.)

Look abroad on the religious world of the past four hundred years, distracted, divided, and contentious, as it has been and is, and tell us in the light of the word of the Lord, where they are. What is their relation to Him, and what the results are with them. How can they point us to the certain way of eternal life. Is not one of the divisions just as authoritative as the other? Which of all the four hundred divisions of Protestantism is the straight and narrow way that leads to life? Any, or just all of them? But you ask, Is not the Holy Spirit with and among them all? I, in reply ask, Is the Holy Ghost cooperating with those who are divided in doctrine, faith, teaching, and church organization; and in opposition to the Savior's prayer, herein referred to? Since, as we have seen, division in religion is contrary to God's will, can we assume that the Holy Ghost aids such divisions contrary to God's expressed will?

May it not be that there are invisible spirit agencies, who would adapt themselves to the fostering of divisions, knowing that division in religion is wrong? Is it not the purpose of such agencies to oppose God's will in the salvation of man? Unity on principles is strength; its opposite, division and weakness. Who can assure us that these spiritual powers or agencies that seek to confirm the divided in their divisions are not evil agencies? Or that they are the Holy Ghost? Is the Godhead divided in the interests of differing human dogmas and persuasions? Think, all ye to whom this may come! Test your own position by the inherent word.

Take one principle at a time, as given in the gospel. (Hebrews 5: 12-14; Hebrews 6: 1, 2; 1 Corinthians 1: 8; 12: 4-14, 17, 18; 13; and Ephesians 4: 1-14.) And then tell us whether you believe the Holy Ghost will teach us the seven unities of gospel faith and duty,—viz: There is "one body" or church, one Spirit, with its nine united gifts. (See 1 Corinthians 12: 4-12.) "One hope," "one Lord," "one faith," "one baptism" for man to perform, the other baptism Christ performs. (See Matthew 3: 11, 12; John 3: 3-5; Hebrews 6: 1, 2; 1 Corinthians 12: 13.) One God and Father of all. Would it not be strange, indeed, for the one Father to encourage his children to be divided in faith, hope, doctrine and aim and purpose against that which he declares to be their best interests?

He never gave that which divides men into differing faiths religiously. Did he? Where? When? What is it? Where is it? Had your early religious education, schooled differently as you were, nothing to do with the divisions resulting from such varied education? Do not men aside from God, give to their followers that which, or, the doctrines which divide them? We think they do. We feel certain they do.

For instance, where did the idea of a church organized without apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, elders, bishops and deacons, all arranged in harmonious order by the direction of God originate? Not from or in God's word. (See 1 Corinthians 12: 13-28; Ephesians 4: 2-13.) Whence, then, did it originate? Are you willing to risk an answer?

Not many to-day believe the scriptures cited on this point govern in church building. Why do they not believe it? Have we wisdom exceeding that of God, to aid us in building churches? Where did this superior wisdom originate? Who gave it? God changes not; is no respecter of persons. With whom was this superior wisdom hid from the world in all past ages till the days of the Reformation, four hundred years ago? Surely these modern ideas and human wisdom were unknown to prophets and apostles of the days of inspiration—Adam to John the Revelator. They did not reveal it to the peoples living during this four thousand and one hundred years! We do not find the wisdom that builds churches differing from the church described in the New Testament given in the writings of those prophets and apostles. Where? When? By which ones? So we hereby see that from the modern popular standpoint, we are of necessity thrown on to what was revealed pertaining to church organization, doctrine, practice and faith in Bible times.

But we are told that nowadays we have no authority to organize the church with those New Testament officers, as apostles, prophets, evangelists, and inspired elders, bishops and priests, teachers and deacons. If that be true, have we "nowadays" any divine authority whatever, to organize any kind of church at all? Yes, we believe we ought to do the best we can. Yes, but has God agreed to abide by the agreement you have entered into to organize? When? Where is his consent to us to build out of harmony with his formerly expressed will? Has this modern wisdom to organize churches been consecrated by Christ's blood? New Testament doctrine and revelation were (see Hebrews 9: 18-23). How about the latter day developments, differing from the original?

If we to-day have not authority to declare what the ancient prophets and apostles declared by divine authority, if we are not authorized to declare what they declared as essential to salvation, and if we have no authority to build the church according to the New Testament pattern, have we authority acknowledged of God to do anything for the salvation of the world? Answer who will. Let the great Christian world, so called, unitedly answer the question, What must I do to be saved? No answer not backed up by divine authority need be offered. God is governed by eternal principles, principles that can be understood by men, and not by mere policy. God gives men "understanding." (See Isaiah 40: 21, 22; Job 32: 8-13; Proverbs 1: 7; 28: 5; Daniel 12: 10.)

For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance; but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath.—Matthew 13: 12.

Because the divine authority to build up the mountain or government of the Lord's house, (church,) in these, "the last days" (Isaiah 2: 1-5; Micah 4: 1-4,) by means of the gospel through the instrumentality of a young man, Mr. Joseph Smith (see Zechariah 2: 1-5; and Revelation 14: 6, 7,) in order to the fulfillment of the great prophecy of our Saviour (Matthew 24: 3-14,) and the church restored, rebuilt, re-established, by servants called and sent of God, in this the evening time of the world (Matthew 20: 5-12; 24: 45-51; Luke 14: 17; Matthew 13: 30-41) the "supper time," and in this "the time of harvest," God's children, as one family, are called on to cooperate "in the work intrusted to all." Thus, "this gospel of the kingdom" not many differing ones, may be proclaimed to "all nations as a witness," to "every nation, kindred, tribe, and people," in preparing the world for the coming of Christ in glory, in building up Zion ere he comes in glory,—that he through his children may "bring again Zion," as said by the Prophet Isaiah (52: 7-12,) and that "the deliverer may come out of Zion and turn away ungodliness from Jacob" (the Jews or Israel,) "when the fullness of the Gentiles be come in" (Romans 11: 25-31). And as the times of the Gentiles are now closing up or ending, or being fulfilled, (Luke 21: 20-24,) we see the Jews being restored to their fatherland, Palestine.

Who of all the Saints of God do not desire with all their soul, might, and strength to have equal opportunity to aid in this great and grand work in this the crowning age and dispensation of the world?

"Arise, shine for thy light is come, for the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee," sang Isaiah when viewing the latter day glory. Let all arise without excuse, and according to calling, or pursuit, elder, and officer, and the "men of business," and diligently cooperate, to the accomplishment of the work. All have not the same office, but all can labor cooperatively; for "God hath set the members in the body as it hath pleased him" and if they were all one member, where were the body? "But now are they many members, yet but one body."

And the eye can not say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Nay, much more those members of the body, which seem to be more feeble are necessary; . . . But God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honor to that part that lacked; that there should be no schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care, one for another, and whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it, or one member be honored all the members rejoice with it.—1 Corinthians 12: 18-26.

Saints, have we climbed to heights of spiritual experience and knowledge and practice, that we can really enter into harmony with God and his work, to the conditions here portrayed by the Apostle Paul? Let us study this language in the verses cited, and then answer. Or, are we yet carnal and walk as unregenerate men? Are we ready to demonstrate in any way that we always honor whom God honors? Do all Saints have the same care one for another? Are all equal to us? Are we all equal to our Father? Are we ready now for: "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that a Saint would do to you, do you even so to them"? Or, are we content to be a pretense? A sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal? Are we anxiously engaged—engaged now, in the good cause? If so, there is a reward for it.

Behold, this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, even as I, the Lord, have appointed or shall hereafter appoint unto any man. And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God; yea, neither the bishop, neither the agent, who keepeth the Lord's storehouse; neither he who is appointed in a stewardship over temporal things; he who is appointed to administer spiritual things, the same is worthy of his hire, even as those who are appointed to a stewardship, to administer in temporal things; yea, even more abundantly, which abundance is multiplied unto them through the manifestations of the Spirit; nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld.—Doctrine and Covenants 70:3.

Does "the Lord require" the equality here taught of every man? Is there anyone in the church exempt? Who? Can we fail to observe a just law and not suffer the penalty? Do we treat lightly the things the Lord hath given us? We say the gospel law, all of it is binding on mankind when we preach. Let us be consistent, or try manfully to be. May God speed the day when Christ shall be found in us the hope of glory, and his life shine through us to the world.

Equality as contemplated in the law of the Lord is essential to man's salvation, as an "everlasting establishment and order unto my church," says the revelation, "to advance the cause which ye have espoused, to the salvation of man and to the glory of your Father who is in heaven." Shall we come short of the glory of God, and fail to do that which he says is "essential" to man's salvation?

Here are three essential reasons assigned by our Father in heaven why the membership of the church should move upward and onward toward the conditions that must (I say must, in its most peremptory sense, for God always means what he says) prevail in things spiritual and "temporal." For if not equal in temporal things, we can not be in spiritual things, he says. The salvation of the Saints depends on their attaining to unity, cooperation and equality.

And we know that all things work together (cooperate,) for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.—Romans 8: 28. (Striving together for the hope of the gospel.)

For if you will that I give you a place in the celestial world, you must prepare yourselves by doing the things which I have commanded you and required of you.—Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1.

Shall we all move together to prepare ourselves for a place in the celestial world? Have not all the ancient and modern worthies done so?

He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth he require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God.—Micah 6: 8.

Will we "do justly"? Do we love mercy? Is it just and merciful that he forgive our sins if we repent of them with all the heart, and not that we suffer the penalty of them? And if we do not works meet for repentance, does not the fact that Christ took them on himself, aggravate our case? (Doctrine and Covenants 18: 2.) Will we "walk humbly with our God"?

PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY.

SYNOPSIS OF A SERMON BY ELDER F. A. SMITH, AS REPORTED IN THE "LONDON ADVERTISER," LONDON, ONTARIO, JANUARY 23, 1911.

Apostle F. A. Smith, of Lamoni, Iowa, has been holding a series of meetings in the Latter Day Saints' Church on Maitland street for the last two weeks, with excellent success. His theme Sunday morning was "Practical Christianity," using as a basis the saying of Christ, "Therefore, whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets." And the other saying: "Love thy neighbor as thyself."

The apostle said he considered this one of the strong evidences of the knowledge of the Christ as to the needs of the human family, and the tendency that would exist on the part of man to be selfish, and forget his obligations to his brothers. His study of the gospel compelled him to believe that it was the intention of the Christ that the gospel should be of an intensely practical character, not only feeling after the needs of the spiritual man, and seeking to lift his morals, but it meant to build up a brotherhood that would savor of the Christ in its disposition to help those in need. His whole life was one of service to his fellow-beings, comforting them, healing them, and strengthening them, until one is compelled to stand in amazement and wonder, for it seemed there were no bounds to his love toward suffering humanity.

The tendency of the churches has been to put all the benefits too far in the future, and make the church and its gospel too much like an insurance company—one has to die to get the benefits. The hungry souls of men hunger for sympathy, kindness, association, and they crave help. In the hour of sickness, prayers are necessary, but there is still a need that we give them more than a few prayers, some one to come in and lend a helping hand in ministering to the suffering ones, who does not have to be sent for, and who does not expect one or two dollars for the little services rendered. When the visit of old Father Time with his scythe takes one of the loved ones from our midst, the ministration of some of those of like faith with ourselves, and the sympathy extended is very much needed and appreciated. Nor, should the church stop with the cold, formal visit, but it should be the time when the church should make its power for the good of its members felt in the more substantial way, if needed by those under the cloud of affliction, in plain words, help them financially.

This would be doing to your neighbor as you would like to be done by, and in such a manner as to make one feel that there was something in what we are pleased to term Christianity. In the effort of the church to feed and care for the spiritual they have forgotten the physical and have only felt after the higher, intellectual, and the moral sides, while the Christ has taught that as a brotherhood under the direction of the fatherhood of God, there must be a close bond that will make us brothers in deed as well as in name.

There was a time when man would take time to help his neighbor, in sickness, but now, well, they will say, "I suppose that I should go and see Neighbor Jones, but I don't see how I can spare the time to-day." But the same man can take the time to spend two hours to see a baseball match. Again, we will hear some good sister say: "Oh, dear! I suppose I should go and see Neighbor Brown. She has been sick for several days, but I just can't go to-day—I am so busy." But in comes an acquaintance, and says: "Come with me to see the opening of the new millinery store down on J street; we can't afford to miss that." And away goes the good sister that could not take time to visit her sick neighbor, to spend two or three hours looking at the creations of vanity. "Botheration to the sick; let them take them to the hospital, or hire a trained nurse. We have not got time to care for them," say others; so it goes. The Master taught by precept and example that we should care for the sick, help the poor, succor the distressed, bind up the broken-hearted, and manifest the bond of love in something besides the mere lip service we rendered to the Lord in the church.

Too often has it been that the visit of the church officer has been to get you to agree to pay so much for the support of the preacher, or to see why you have not kept your payments up, or to solicit you to give some more money to build a better church, or something like that, instead of to succor the needy or to inquire if you need any help in the hour of your sickness or sorrow. The church has not risen to its great privilege, and hundreds have drifted to the lodges because they found in them some of the helps that they needed, and that appealed to the necessities. Yet we hear the cry coming from the churches against the lodges, and they ask, What shall we do? The answer is plain as day: Do what the Lord taught and "love thy neighbor as thyself." Why not? When will Christianity wake up to the fact that there is something for them to do besides making the church a social function of some sort?

We have been pained to discover that the poor of the world are not counted in the church as they should be. The laboring man can't afford to attend the church, as it has become so fashionable that his family can't dress well enough to appear there, and he can't keep up the dues as he should, to make him a desirable member; so he is shunted off to some little shack of a church in the suburbs of the city somewhere. The whole scheme becomes cold to him, and he drops out. Some friend invites him to become a member of the lodge, and he soon finds there the sociability and friendship that he craves, the help he needs, and the church has lost him. But when I have been asked why I have not joined any of these orders I have answered that I had no need to, for they have no good thing that is not comprehended in the gospel of the Christ. The text comprehends all that we could ask, but it has not been taught, nor heeded. When we get to the point where we can live what we preach, then we can point to the working of the gospel, and ask men to accept it, and it will have some attraction for them, as it should.

The Black Traffic in White Girls.

Rev. Ernest A. Bell, of Chicago, Superintendent of The Midnight Mission, vice-president of The Illinois Vigilance Association, for the suppression of traffic in women and girls, editor and joint author of the book, War on the White Slave Trade, said:

It seems unthinkable that in the twentieth century there can possibly exist a traffic in girls and women for wicked purposes. Surely those who speak of such a white slave trade are well meaning people, who have become excited in a good cause or are suffering from some dreadful nightmare. We would to heaven it were a nightmare, and that we might soon awaken from a dream so terrible. But so real and so manifold are these crimes against the girlhood and womanhood of Christendom that all the nations of Christendom have entered into treaty obligations for the repression of what the treaty calls the trade in white women. This is the first international treaty ever written relating to social morality, and as such, marks a forward step in the history of civilization. With the single exception of Turkey, all the nations of Europe have entered into this treaty, which was signed at Paris on May 18, 1904. The adherence of the United States was proclaimed by President Roosevelt on the advice of the Senate, June 15, 1908. The most important provisions of this international Magna Charta of girlhood are the first three articles:

Article 1. Each of the contracting governments agrees to establish or designate an authority who will be directed to centralize information concerning the procurement of women and girls, for the purpose of their debauchery in a foreign country. That authority shall be empowered to correspond directly with the similar service established in each of the other contracting states.

Article 2. Each of the governments agree to exercise supervision of railway stations, ports of embarkation, and of women and girls in transit, in order to procure all possible information leading to the discovery of a criminal traffic. The arrival of persons involved in such traffic, as procurers or victims, shall be communicated to diplomatic or consular agents.

Article 3. The governments agree to inform the authorities of the country of origin of the discovery of such unfortunates and to retain, pending advices, such victims in institutions of public or private charity. Such parties will be returned after proper identification, to the country of origin.

The provisions of this monumental covenant of righteousness between all the civilized governments should be known to all the people of the nations, which have thus bound themselves to protect their own and one another's daughters.

For the protection of American, as well as alien women and girls, the Congress of the United States has this year enacted the White Slave Traffic Act which was passed by the Senate and signed by President Taft on June 25, 1910. This law makes the transportation across State or National Lines of any woman or girl for wicked purposes a felony, punishable by imprisonment not exceeding five (5) years or by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars ($5,000), or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. In case the girl so transported for any immoral purpose is under eighteen (18) years of age the imprisonment may extend to ten (10) years and the fine to ten thousand dollars ($10,000).

The International Treaty and the Federal Law should be thoroughly known among all our people, and appeal should be made frequently to federal officials everywhere to see that the treaty is faithfully observed and the White Slave Traffic Act rigorously enforced. No punishment is too severe for the degraded beings who make merchandise of the honor of girls and women.

It is highly important also that the public be informed at once of the full malignity of the assassin diseases which are inseparable from the traffic in women and the odious vice to which the hideous trade panders. So conservative and refined an educator as Charles W. Eliot, until recently president of Harvard University, has written within a few weeks that the policy of silence with reference to these matters has failed disastrously. The Bishop of London pronounces the neglect of English parents to instruct their children in the vital facts of their own being, "a reproach to our national morality"—a reproach which he says he is determined to remove from England.

Young men would not sow their wild oats so rashly if they were thoroughly taught that they must reap them and that they can not reap them alone, but must take their wives and children to the harvest. One fourth of blindness, especially of infants, is due to the sins of the fathers. One fourth of surgical operations for diseases of women is due to the transgressions of their husbands, before or after marriage. One fourth of insanity is due to unchastity. Any well informed physician will attest these statements without dispute, except to say that the proportions are much greater in fact than they are here affirmed to be.

Surely the black traffic in white girls must end, and with it, the murderous vice which in the wisdom of God, in the Ten Commandments is forbidden alongside of the prohibition against murder itself—the seventh commandment following immediately upon the sixth. The call for the extirpation of vice, of the vice traffic and the vice diseases stands in the forefront of all demands of civilization.—The Light.

There are 300,000 "fallen" girls and women in houses of shame in our country. They have been got there through the trickery and wiles of those engaged in the traffic in girls, and the environments resulting from the immoral condition of society. Their average life is but five years; thus 60,000 girls are dragged down to this life every year; 5,000 every month; 170 every day; or, a young life blasted in our blessed land every eight minutes.

There are over two million "fallen" boys and men in our country; or, a boy ruined every two minutes. Is it not appalling? What shall we do about it? Help us scatter the light.—The Light.

Letter Department

WATERLOO, NEVADA, January 28, 1911.

Editors Herald: We greatly enjoy the contents of the HERALD, which give us strength and comfort in our old age, some three score years and nineteen, yet strength is labor and we shall soon be called hence.

We call to mind the year 1867, when Bro. Alexander H. Smith stopped on his first mission to the Pacific coast. He baptized many here in Nevada, but I did not see or hear him at that time. I was much prejudiced against the Latter Day Saints, but a friend gave me a pamphlet and I compared it with the teachings of Jesus Christ in the New Testament, and then and there I was converted and began to investigate.

Last September we went to a reunion in California and enjoyed communion with the Saints that will never be forgotten. While here we visited our son at Petaluma. Elders Farr and Wilds were here the last July and preached for about one month in different localities, but a very few came out to hear. The people in Nevada are in a strange condition. Of the many members of all the churches not one tenth ever go to church. It is pleasure going; Sunday is their regular business day.

Strange as it seems, in this valley many things have been foretold by members of the Latter Day Saints. And the people ask, How do we know? We say by a higher power than the wisdom of man; by the gifts of the same gospel as Saint Paul taught in the New Testament.

We are a few here and some of us are walking in the valley of the shadow of death. There are some good, true Saints here, and they have stood to the gospel through all the powers of the adversary. We have a bright future.

"In the garments once so strong,
Now are rents distressing,
And the sandals worn so long
Heavily are pressing.

Looking, home, looking home,
Towards that heavenly mansion."

Our prayer is for all the Saints.

BAYARD, NEBRASKA, February 2, 1911.

Editors Herald: The work is onward here in the North Platte Valley. Elder Kelley has been here, in the upper end of the valley. Since about the first of the year a successful series of meetings was held at Gering, ending January 22; on the 28th meetings were started here in Bayard. Crowds of fully seventy-five attending each night since the 28th, Elder J. E. Kelley being the speaker, assisted by Elder Detrick. The Lord blessed us, that we were able to obtain the use of the United Brethren church building. Much is before us here as Saints, and may the Lord help us that we may so live that those around us may know of the gospel we have embraced.

Our next reunion will be held here in Bayard from September 15 to 25, 1911. We hope for a large attendance. Much lies before the committee in way of preparations. For the benefit of those who have labored here in the past, will say the Saints at Bayard are awakening to their duty, and are lending a helping hand to the Lord's cause. We look forward to an increase in the near future.

BERT E. HART.

KNOX, INDIANA, January 29, 1911.

Dear Herald: January 10 Elders R. V. Hopkins, J. W. McKnight, and C. F. Ellis came here, and the same evening Brother Hopkins addressed a few Saints and friends in the interest of Graceland College, which was very interesting. After services subscriptions were taken for the college. Then for two weeks Brethren McKnight and Ellis held preaching services alternately.

The Saints are very much pleased over the services held. Almost from the first the attendance was good for this place, averaging fifty at every service, and over seventy one Sunday evening. Almost the same parties were present each evening, a greater number being young people, who seemed very much interested and who took part in the singing with a will. Not one of them is a member of the church, but we are living in hope that they will be some day; also some older ones who seem very much in earnest.

We can truly testify to all that there is no better enjoyment or pleasure found anywhere than in trying to live a truly Christian life. There is a peace and contentment connected with such a life that nothing else can give, if one lives humbly and prayerfully.

Every Sunday forenoon while the elders were here there were social services held. The second Sunday a lady, not a member of the church, gave a testimony that did all the Saints good. A part of it was that at one time she had persecuted the Saints; but she had found since that she was wrong and wished to acknowledge it. A few years ago she was visiting in a town where there were quite a number of Utah Mormon people, and she took the trouble to find out for herself whether our church and the Utah church were one and the same. She found to her satisfaction that there are two distinct organizations and that the Reorganized Church is not connected with the Utah church in any way whatever. She has promised to write to the HERALD, so we will let her tell the rest.

The last evening, after preaching services, Brother McKnight requested all to remain who were interested in a Sunday school. About twenty-five stayed and a school was organized. To-day we held our first session with thirty-two present, which were divided into four classes.

The elders preached some good sermons and we heard remarks from some not of the church that they never heard better. However, we have our enemies as well as our friends. One lady would not allow her daughter to attend our Sunday school because, she said, we did not preach any hell.

That subject was preached on one evening by one of the elders and we think there was more of it than that lady or any of us will care to experience hereafter. It is our desire to so live and to help teach the Sunday school pupils to so live that we all will escape going to that place.

I don't see why people should have such a misunderstanding of the gospel when it is preached to them or in their midst year in and year out. After a while, when the revivals at the other churches are over, the Saints here expect to have Elder S. W. L. Scott come and deliver some lectures on archaeology and the Book of Mormon, which he promised he would do when we are ready for them.

In the faith,

MISS B. E. LOHSE.

COOKES POINT, TEXAS, February 2, 1911.

Editors Saints' Herald: I have just arrived home from Robertson County, where I have been attending a debate between Bro. R. M. Maloney and J. W. Chism, a noted Campbellite debater. The usual church propositions were debated; they held twelve sessions, six on each proposition. It commenced on January 24, and was held at a Baptist church. Elder J. M. Nunley was moderator for Brother Maloney. Though I took a great many notes, will give but a very brief report to save space and prevent repetition, for the same matter has been published many times in our papers.

Debate was governed by Hedge's Rules of Logic, and the King James Version of the Bible was to be the standard of evidence, allowing all other evidence to be used on its merits. Our claims were put on trial first. As soon as Brother Maloney had finished his first speech, Chism turned himself loose. As long as he stayed he had no regard for the rules he had agreed to be governed by. His reason for it was that Brother Maloney had not observed the first rule, which, he claimed, required Brother Maloney to define the terms of his proposition clearly. Right away, "Old Joe Smith," as Chism called him, was put on trial, and he was kept on trial most all the time of the first proposition, and referred to by Chism occasionally on the second proposition. He used the same old stories against Joseph Smith that are commonly used, which he palmed off on the people as reliable testimony.

He read some from a book, called Metropolitan Life, the most obscene language I ever heard read before a mixed congregation of ladies and men. He told the people that what he had read was what the Mormons used to practice. The author of said book is unknown, as I understand. Brother Maloney told him in reply, that he was hard pressed to read such stuff to a congregation.

Chism measures everything by Chism, even the Bible. When he had an occasion to use any passage that did not read to suit his purpose in the King James Version, he would retranslate it, just to suit his purpose and then challenge the scholars of the entire world to disprove his translation. For he knows that he knows.

I will give the readers of the HERALD the benefit of the translation of one passage of scripture, Acts 2:38, which reads: "Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins." Here is Chism's translation: "Repent, and be baptized, or get baptized, or baptize yourselves." He says that is the correct translation of said verse, and of course he challenges the scholarship of the world, to prove that he is not right. This I call Campbellism gone to seed. It is now plain from his viewpoint, how all the three thousand were baptized on Pentecost day; they all ran into the water, and baptized themselves. Chism contended that a man could read, and understand the gospel, repent, and baptize himself. And when he did it, he belonged to the same church that he did, which was the church of Jesus Christ. According to Chism's translation, any person who is a proper subject for baptism has the authority to baptize himself, ladies as well as men; for he says all members of the church are priests. Chism seems to be the very seed stem, as I have not read nor heard of one of his brethren teaching such high doctrine as he does.

Another doctrine he opposed very strenuously was, that there never had been any direct operation of the Holy Spirit upon the spirits of men since the days of the immediate apostles of Christ. If that be true, or if he and his brethren believe that, why do they pray at all? For if there be no angel visits, nor the direct operation of the Holy Spirit upon the hearts of the people, how could God answer anyone's prayers? To me it is impossible.

In this connection, I will say that if there are any that believe the doctrine of the Sadducees, it is the Campbellites. They did not believe that God's angels nor his Spirit visited the people of earth; neither do the Campbellites, not even Chism, who has gone to seed.

Chism puts darkness for light, and light for darkness; bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter. He challenges the whole church to strike. It seems strange that a blind man, would make such a challenge. He sometimes called Brother Maloney an ignoramus, and said he would not believe him on oath, about anything. Brother Maloney told him that he did not care whether he believed anything he said or not. I am satisfied that it does not pay to hold debates with a man who will not comply with rules agreed upon.

I am satisfied that the truth, the cause of Christ, did not suffer on this occasion. I don't believe that Chism's own people indorsed all that he said or did; for he went beyond and taught things that they as a church have not hitherto believed or taught.

In concluding this brief report of the debate, will say that Brother Maloney did quite well, and I have no fears as to the consequences that may follow. I have not heard of a single member of the church being disaffected, or discouraged in the least. I will stop at this point; as I did not attend all the debate; and Brother Maloney may have something to say about the matter. I am yours in the one faith and conflict until it is over.

E. W. NUNLEY.

CHEROKEE, IOWA, February 3, 1911.

Dear Herald: When I wrote my last letter we lived in Akron, Iowa, isolated from the church. At Cherokee we have a nice branch of fifty members, and we certainly enjoy church privileges. We have some good lively members here. Elder W. A. Smith was here last fall and preached six weeks. Five were added to our number and others are interested. Bro. A. H. Crippen is our preacher, and he is always at his post. His whole soul is in the work, and he is ever ready to lend a helping hand.

We take the HERALD and Autumn Leaves. There is such good reading in them. With the aid of our loving Master I hope I will ever be found doing my duty. I want to bring my little ones up to know of this glorious work. I love the work and want to do all I can for it. Ever praying for its advancement, I am your sister and a believer of the gospel taught in its fullness and purity.

PEARL MANN.

WINTHROP, ARKANSAS, February 4, 1911.

Editors Herald: I have been laboring in Arkansas and Louisiana for the last three years and have met with some hard trials; yet I have many encouraging experiences in my efforts to build up the kingdom of God in this part of the world. There are some fine Saints in his field. I have many good friends both in and out of the church. I have learned to love them because of their kindness to me.

I was glad when Christmas time came, so I could go home to spend holidays with wife and loved ones, which I did. But I hope I never will have another such a time at home; for while I commenced to enjoy myself with home folks and friends, one of the dearest old sisters of our branch was stricken down with fever. In about three weeks, after all had been done both by medical aid and prayer, the death angel came and took her from us. This brought grief and sadness to many a heart, because she was known by such a large number of people, both in and out of the church, and all who knew her loved her. This sister's name was Mary C. Stringer, better known as Aunt Katy. To preach her funeral sermon was one of the hardest trials of my life. I had known her for about thirty years. I would almost as soon be asked to preach the funeral of my own mother; for she seemed almost as a mother to me. She was a mother in Israel to everybody who knew her. I wish I knew that I would be as worthy of a funeral sermon as was Aunt Katy. She is gone from us, but is not forgotten.

I am feeling fine in the work of the Master. I am near the place where Brother Curtis met Ben M. Bogard in debate. I opened the work here about a year ago, and have baptized forty. Brother Curtis baptized five at the close of the debate, making forty-five in all, and the end is not yet, for I expect to baptize more before I leave here this time. I am having a good meeting and interest.

Well, it will soon be time for the missionary to go home and prepare for another year's labor, not knowing where he will be sent. So, dear Saints, and friends in Arkansas and Louisiana, if I am not permitted to meet you again I want you to know I have learned to love you, and while among you I have tried to live right, so that whoever may follow will not be ashamed of J. T. Riley's record. May we all be able to so live as to be worthy of the blessings of the Master. Remember me when you pray.

J. T. RILEY.

CLARKSDALE, MISSOURI, February 2, 1911.

Editors Herald: I came to Clarksdale, Missouri, on January 29, and began preaching in the Christian church. Held forth one week with fairly good crowds every night until the last night, which was a freeze out, and of course we had to quit; but I believe some good was done. We are not discouraged. We go to-night to Boxford, Missouri, to see what good we can do there, as we want to keep busy in the Master's work.

Yours in bonds,

J. A. ROBERTS.

MAPLETON, KANSAS, February 9, 1911.

Editors Herald: I just closed a fine meeting at Cody's Bluff, Oklahoma. Preached twenty sermons, baptized five, and twelve or fifteen more are converted, and I believe will soon come in. Fine crowds from start to finish. Never met a finer lot of people, and I believe they will make good members. The night I closed, I received an invitation to come to two other schoolhouses. I never saw the demand for preaching greater; we have so many calls for preachers and so few to fill them. Saints, don't forget to honor the Lord with your substance.

I am to go to Wilburton to-morrow to attend conference. This conference year will soon be closed; but as I look back I can see the hand of the Lord in the work. I have been blessed in my labors, and hope and pray the dear Lord will bless all his people and help us to obtain the crown.

Your brother in the faith,

LEE QUICK.

Ladies' Protection on Railroad Trains.

In a recent issue of the HERALD, in the Mothers' Home Column appeared a letter under the headline, "A Warning," and it has suggested what follows:

I have run up against the world in a mild form and know something of its ways, and I have had considerable experience among the traveling public and have seen how some of the heedless and thoughtless throw themselves in the way of the Wicked One.

I will suggest what the sister might have done that would have rebuked the intruder and protected her from his attentions. If she wanted to rebuke him mildly and handle him with sterilized gloves, an offer to vacate the seat for him would likely have put him to shame and he would have left, or she could have gone to the conductor and told him she did not want to sit with a strange man and request him to get her another seat. He knows the ways of the world too well to want to inquire into the whys and wherefores, and would have readily complied with her request. Another method would have been to tell him in language a little peppery that she did not want his attentions. Any one of the above methods would soon have rid herself of him.

Ignorance of the world and its ways is a cause of many being led astray. Keeping people in ignorance does not protect them; it only gives a better opportunity for the evil disposed one to do his work. Evil exists everywhere. There is more in the city because there are more people there. A maudlin sentiment in regard to it and a political harangue against the authorities will not change it. If the public and parents did one tenth as much to protect themselves and their children as the city governments and railroad companies do, they would have little to complain of.

In traveling I very seldom talk to passengers, except it be to personal friends whom I may meet, and this is an especially good rule for ladies. Persons who know the ways of the world would say within themselves, He is a masher, or something worse. Some passengers want to talk with all their neighbors; they call that being sociable. A better name would be familiarity.

Sometimes some of our elders want to let everyone in the car know who they are, and are sure to talk loud enough to be heard. Some call that preaching the gospel. It would be better to give it some other name. The gospel is too precious to be proclaimed as a "speller" does the merits of a nickel show.

If persons going to the city, and especially ladies, observed the following rules, they would escape the troubles they so often complain of. When you start, be sure that you have the street name and number of the place to which you are going. Avoid strangers, especially if they make the first advances. If you want information, ask the conductor or brakeman. When you get to the station and no one is there to meet you and you need information, ask an officer in the station. They are always there in uniform, and most places a lady is in attendance; when special assistance is needed, call on her.

If you are on the street tell your troubles to a policeman; it is a part of his work to assist you. When you are on the street car the conductor will render you all needful assistance. There is a great deal done in the cities to protect young boys and girls from the evils that are found there. The Young Men's Christian Association and the Young Women's Christian Association do a great deal of such work.

The oft told story of the young man or woman having to live in dingy rooms in a back alley sounds like fiction to the man or woman who knows conditions in a city. A great deal of the trouble that comes to young people going to the city, and especially girls, had its origin at home.

They may belong to the gang that goes every evening to the station to meet the incoming train. They have developed the habit of being familiar with strangers. That habit becomes fixed, and they soon break the ice among strangers, making it easy for the libertine to accomplish his work. All girls will not go astray because they commence this familiar way of living, but if one in a thousand is led into evil, it is one too many; and worst of all, it may be your girl.

At one time I knew a young lady who had spent her time in the way stated above, and she went away to teach school. Her ability was not called in question, but by and by the board said she was too familiar with young men, and they dispensed with her services. Her sociability would have commended her; her familiarity condemned her.

When young men and young ladies want a pleasant and social time it should be had among friends, not the stranger, of whom you know nothing. Many young people would escape the pitfalls of sin if they were taught to avoid familiarity with strangers.

This letter is not intended in any way reflect on the sister, or minimize the danger that she was exposed to, or of others under like circumstances. Her experience suggested that I write as above. PAUL PARKER.

Pioneer Workers Among the Mexicans.

I came to San Antonio the latter part of March, 1909, and found the Saints very much as I expected, hospitable and ready to make a stranger feel welcome, as is characteristic of the southern people. I also found a great demand for gospel work. Notwithstanding the missionaries were working in the interest of the cause, and some of the local workers were doing valiantly, yet the field is large and the laborers are few.

Some of my first impressions were the historical events connected with the work in the southwest. Notwithstanding the fact that some of the earlier pioneers of the work have fallen by the wayside, the good they have done will bear its fruits, and the result will only be fully understood by him who knoweth all things.

I wish to especially note some of the work done by those who remain with us unto this day; as a word of appreciation and encouragement will certainly be appreciated and will perhaps spur them on to do more for the great cause in which we are mutually engaged. They deserve special credit when we take into consideration past environments, which are anything but favorable to those who have done some of the best work since the Reorganization of the Church of Jesus Christ. It is my desire to take up some of the threads that have been dropped, so to speak, which of necessity forms part of the history of the work in the Lord's vineyard in this district.

That part which impresses me most is the work among the Mexican people, which has passed with little notice, and which, in a special way, seemingly is just begun. From the best information I have been able to obtain the work was introduced in the year 1897, near the Medina River, at what is known as the Jett Crossing, in a large arbor erected for the purpose of holding religious services. This place is about twelve and one half miles southwest of the city of San Antonio.

At a district conference and reunion held at the above mentioned place in the year 1897, Bro. William Davenport preached the first sermon to the Mexican people, after which Bro. H. P. Curtis preached to them in the English language and Bro. T. J. Jett interpreted, and it was decided to have Brother Jett preach to them in their own language, which he did for a period of about one year. A Sunday school was also conducted at that time, Sr. T. J. Jett teaching the Mexican people from the little Gospel Primary Book, which delighted the Mexican people, as in the past there has been very little attention paid to their spiritual welfare; in fact, none so far as the true gospel is concerned.

It may not be amiss to mention here that the Mexican people have been grossly misrepresented; only the dark side of their nature has been painted, failing to recognize the redeeming qualities which they as a people possess. The facts are, they are humble, childlike, and submissive, and though in some respects they are cruel, yet where are the people who are not inconsistent in some ways? Whether they have been forced through a combination of circumstances to be what they are, our object is to portray them as they are. We as a people should be better prepared than others to understand them, knowing their history, both ancient and present.

Their disposition and characteristics are a standing evidence to the truthfulness of the Book of Mormon, to those who have studied and believe the book. In fact, their condition is a fulfillment of the prophecies of that book.

After a period of about one year from the introduction of the work above mentioned, the work was abandoned at that place; for the reason that it was necessary for Brother Jett to move to the city for the purpose of giving his children the advantage of an education, which could not be obtained in the community in which they lived. Up to this time there were none of them baptized. After moving to San Antonio, new acquaintances were formed and the local work among our own people required more or less attention, so there were no results, so far as can be observed, until later on.

In the year 1901 Brother Jett received a missionary appointment and labored in that capacity with his fellow-workers for one year, being released in the year 1902, after which he again assumed the responsibility of providing for his family, which consisted of his wife and eight children. Notwithstanding the fact that it required a great deal of mental and physical effort on his part, in view of the fact that his advantages in a business way were very limited, he found time to devote to the preaching to the Mexican people.

The same year he rented a small house and provided it with seats, practically at his own expense, in order to have a meeting place for them; and he was constantly assisted in the good work by his companion, who speaks the language fluently.

Others of the Saints who speak the language and who have assisted in the work are Bro. and Sr. J. P. Neal, Sr. Ruth Gifford, and Bro. and Sr. E. N. McRae, all of whom I consider among the pioneers in the work among the Mexican people.

As the results of the meetings above mentioned, in January, 1903, Brother Jett baptized eight Mexican people in the San Antonio River.

It may not be amiss to deviate here a little and mention an incident that occurred about that time. An old Mexican man had fallen on the street and broken his hip. He had medical attention but was not able to get any relief, and Brother Jett was sent for and administered to him and he received relief from each administration, which was repeated from time to time, until it was decided by some of the members of his family to send for a Catholic priest who was opposed to allowing our minister to administer. But the old man pleaded to have them send for "Jetty," as he called Brother Jett, which was denied him. The result was the man died, and his dying testimony was that we are the true church of God, and the church he was brought up in was not.

On account of the great demand for the local work, and the fact that a second branch was organized in San Antonio, the work was not prosecuted as vigorously as it might have been otherwise among the Mexican people in San Antonio.

Yet there was a missionary work quietly going on all the time. In the year 1907 Brother Jett met a Mexican preacher who was a Missionary Baptist who, after getting acquainted with the fact that Brother Jett was a preacher and could speak their language, invited Brother Jett to attend their meetings, which, which Brother Jett did the following Sunday, the meeting place being in the east end of the city. After the Baptist got through preaching to his people he introduced Brother Jett, telling them that the gospel was the same, whether preached to them by one of their people or by an American. Brother Jett then gave them a short sermon, and they all rejoiced at the words he spoke for his words were from one having authority.

Yet their preacher had not observed that there was any difference in the doctrine, which he had to learn later, and it was agreed by all parties that he and the Baptist were to divide time in the future. This lasted only a few Sundays. One of the members of the congregation and his wife had been studying the Bible very devoutly and had been making it a subject of special prayer that God would send to them a man with the authority, as was one John the Baptist. They had discovered the Baptist preacher was not preaching the doctrine taught in the Bible, and the Spirit bore them witness that Brother Jett was the man in answer to prayer. It also developed that this man and his wife were the ones who had rented the place of meeting at their own expense, and they turned the place over to Brother Jett. This made the Baptist preacher feel indignant and not willing to humble himself and join the true church, he ceased coming and told others that Brother Jett had stolen his congregation. The devout persons mentioned were Bro. and Sr. Menchaca, who were baptized that year, with five others of their people.

And here I want to mention that this same Brother Menchaca was working for the sum of one dollar per day, and supporting a wife and three children, and yet he made the sacrifice to rent the place to worship God in. I never saw a more devout woman than his companion. To appreciate this couple we have to be acquainted with them. Brother Menchaca was ordained to the office of priest some time after his baptism, and I am glad to say I believe he works and lives in a way to be worthy of the high calling. Thus we see God hears and answers the prayers of those who seek diligently to worship him, as in the case of Cornelius and others. Another one of the faithful among the Mexican people who was part of that congregation at the time mentioned and was baptized into the church, is Brother Jacinto Castillo. He is a very diligent local worker and manifests a great deal of intelligence in setting forth the difference between the true doctrine of the church and the other doctrines.

No doubt some are aware of the fact that Brother and Sister Mannering were in our midst part of the year 1909 and 1910 and made very rapid progress in learning the Mexican language, and we may say it was marvelous the way they were able to work among them. It was very interesting to attend the meetings and hear Brother Mannering preaching in their language, and hear his companion help sing the hymns and carry on conversation with them. Although I am not a competent judge, we had those with us who were, and who pronounced it wonderful; and there is no question but God is assisting them in their work. We also appreciated a short visit from Brother Pender and his wife and their devotion to the work. In addition to those above mentioned who have and are advancing the cause among the Mexican people, we now have some who are younger that are also assisting, especially in the music; namely: Sisters Flossie Lillie, and Nellie Jett.

And now for a brief review of the work among our own people. The regular services are being conducted at both branches, principally by the local priesthood, except when we have Brother Palmer or some other missionary with us. The last year we have added five to the priesthood, namely: Bro. A. R. Wheeler, receiving his license from the district conference in August, 1910; Bro. Glauk Kuykendall being ordained to the office of priest at that time; Bro. Walter Buck, C. R. Wheeler and J. R. Wheeler were ordained to the office of priest shortly after the conference. We are glad to note they are always ready to respond to duty preaching where duty permits, and we can report progress for them. Their work shows they are studious and zealous, and we feel they will be able to do much good in this latter day work.

The Sunday school work is in a fair condition, and the Religio at the First San Antonio Branch is increasing both in number and interest, some time being devoted to the program outlined in the Quarterly, and other features of entertainments. We are glad to note that Bro. J. W. Morgan, of Colorado Springs, now in our midst, has been of value to us in many ways, as his superior experience in the work makes him one whose counsel is to be appreciated. Hoping this will find space in your paper, I am,

Yours in the one faith,

W. C. CARL.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, January 7, 1911.

Extracts from Letters.

Sister Esta Wesner, of Iuka, Illinois, writes: "We have preaching every two weeks, by the branch president, Bro. J. F. Henson. Last Sunday we had a baptism. Weather was bad and there was a great deal of sleeting, but the weather did not affect the applicant's faith. He was a teacher of a music class last autumn at the church. We have a small Sunday school, which work for the Master is important, and I think all should strive to help it along. I am trying to improve in that respect every day."

News From Missions

Nebraska.

The work in this part of the Lord's great vineyard is moving along fairly well. Elder Gamet, of the Central District, has been busy. At one or two places the Seventh Day Adventists have shown some disposition to have a theological combat, but up to the present nothing has materialized in the way of a debate. The work seems onward at Clearwater, and the conference of the Central District will meet at Bone-steel, South Dakota, on February 11 and 12.

By late word from the western part of the State, we learn that Bro. James E. Kelley has been holding a very successful series of meetings at Gering, in the Baptist church. This is especially good news to us, because we learn in the same letter that Brother Kelley's health is much improved. He will go to Bayard, right after his meetings at Gering, and will hold a series there in the United Brethren church. If our brethren are successful in procuring the United Brethren church at Bayard for any length of time, it reveals the fact that the United Brethren people of Bayard have changed much in feeling toward our church within the last year. There has until recently been much prejudice against our people in that locality.

Elder Prettyman also has done much good in many localities in the western field. The Church of God people have been talking of debate, and that they will put up their old champion debater, Almus Adams, who, they claim, won the laurels in the last conflict he had with our people, in debate with Elder C. J. Hunt at Blair, Nebraska. But up to the present time their man Adams has not submitted any proposition. And we are inclined to believe they are not very willing to meet Brother Prettyman. One thing we demand of that people, and have demanded of them when considering the question of debate, is that they shall furnish us with an authentic account of the organization of their church; by whom, and when; doctrine, etc. This matter they have not been willing to furnish us. Until they do meet this demand we can not afford to spend time to meet the mere private faith or opinion of their debaters.

Elder Prettyman and the writer held some good meetings at Comstock, Nebraska, in December. We occupied the Methodist church there. Taking the meetings as a whole, we had quite a good audience of interested listeners. While there two noble men were baptized, both heads of families.

Some time before we arrived at Comstock, the Congregationalist minister undertook to enlighten the people of that place concerning Mormonism. After we appeared there we gave them an opportunity to hear our side of the story. Everything moved along nicely, without one spark from the forge of sectarianism. And so we concluded that the Reverend D. D. did not feel half so anxious as he would have people think to meet and quell this "monster of deception," as he was pleased to term it. Our people at Comstock have under advisement the erection of a very neat, good sized church.

The Utah elders do not seem to be doing much in this State this year, so far as we can learn. In one locality, in the southwestern part of the State, they called upon one of our Saints' families. Before they left that home, they told our people there that our Joseph wrote to their Joseph and asked upon what terms their church would admit our people into communion with them; and that their Joseph wrote our Joseph and said that they would admit our people upon the same ground they would any worldly sinner.

The name of one of the elders that made the above statement, was Russell. I have forgotten the name of the other one.

Our elders in the southern district of the State are doing what they can to spread the gospel. From a letter written me by one of our brethren there, I learn that there has been a good deal of sickness among our people in that section.

One Reverend Terry, of the non-progressive wing of the Christian Church, made an attack on our work at Selden, Kansas. Brother Teeters, who resides there, requested that I come and reply to him. Accordingly I went, but found that he had left for other parts of the country. However, the Baptist church in that place was procured and I gave them nine sermons.

After I had finished one of my subjects, the divine calling and mission of Joseph Smith, a certain old gentleman, a Baptist in good standing, made the statement that he was acquainted with the man Joseph Smith. Said he lived only forty miles from Nauvoo, and he had no good thing to say of Joseph Smith. I inquired as to the man's age, and discovered that he was only two years old when Joseph and Hyrum Smith were killed. This man is teacher of the Bible class in the Baptist Sunday school at Selden. No doubt the Reverend Terry got some valuable information from him. Our efforts at that place I think accomplished good.

News From Branches.

Central Chicago, Illinois.

Sunday, February 5. At Sunday school there were thirty-eight names on the blackboard of persons who were on time, the best record since we started this plan. We are hoping and praying that some time there will be about sixty names, when no one will be tardy.

Sacrament service was quite well attended and in charge of Brethren McGahan and Burwell. Sr. George Warlick was remembered and I understand there is some improvement in her condition. May we have more faith in the Great Physician.

Elder Pement occupied in the evening, discoursing on "Prayer," and mentioning that many Saints repeat the Father's name too often in their prayers. We have often wondered whether the long prayers were as much approved by the Father as short ones, especially in the Sunday school. It seems the opening prayer should be offered in behalf of the children and not so long as to make them weary, as when in social service after two or three long prayers have ascended, we wonder what else there is to petition the Father.

There have been some scarlet fever cases in West Pullman, which have decreased the attendance at the services, although we understand none of the Saints have been stricken.

"Who is the happiest of men? He who values the merits of others, and in their pleasure takes joy, even as though 'twere his own."

"There is no such thing as finding true happiness by searching for it directly. It must come by the service, the love, and the happiness we give to others."

Johnson, W. M. Self, Paul M. Hanson, Sr. Jessie Wyckoff, and sixteen others were elected as delegates to General Convention. [Send credentials to D. J. Krahl, General Secretary, 724 South Crystals street, Independence, Missouri.] The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Margaret Orr, superintendent; Jessie Wyckoff, assistant superintendent; Edith Trask, treasurer; Blanche I. Andrews, secretary. Adjourned to meet according to previous arrangements. Blanche I. Andrews, secretary.

FAR WEST.—The Religio convention of the Far West District met at Stewartville, Missouri, January 14, 1911, at 2.30 p. m., Pres. B. R. Constance presiding. The district secretary not being present, E. J. Armstrong was elected secretary pro tem. The reports of the local societies were read; also the verbal reports of the president and vice-president were received. The election of officers resulted as follows: President, J. S. Andes; vice-president, E. J. Armstrong; secretary, Ruth Lewis; treasurer, R. L. Henry; member of library board, Zilla Moore; home class superintendent, Cora Hovenga. Saturday evening a very good program was rendered. The convention adjourned to meet with the First Saint Joseph Branch, on the second Saturday and Sunday in July, 1911. Ruth Lewis, district secretary.

Notice to Fourth Quorum of Elders.

Blanks have been sent to every member of the quorum. Should you fail to receive one by the 15th of February, on which to report, let me know and I will send you one.

WM. C. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

HIGBEE, MISSOURI.

Notice to the Twelve.

The Quorum of Twelve is hereby reminded that the time arranged for their next meeting is March 15, 1911, at 2 p. m., Lamoni, Iowa, in the Historian's room at the Herald Office. There is no assurance that Peter Anderson, Gomer T. Griffiths, or C. A. Butterworth can attend, as they are laboring in foreign fields. Those who are laboring in the United States will be expected to attend. All communications intended for the quorum may be sent to either the president or the secretary, both of whom reside in Lamoni.

Meeting thus early, any further arrangements if desired may be made after meeting, as may be agreed upon.

WILLIAM H. KELLEY, President.
FREDERICK A. SMITH, Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, February 9, 1911.

Conference Notices.

North Dakota district conference will meet with the Fargo, North Dakota, Branch, March 5 and 6. Business session 10 a. m., on Monday, the 6th. The Adventist church will be used, Fourth avenue south, near Eleventh street. Come Saturday so as to attend the Sunday services.

Conference of the Kentucky and Tennessee District will meet at Bethel, near Cottage Grove, Tennessee, March 11, at 10.30 a. m. We hope to have a good representation from all the branches, and especially do we urge a report from all the local priesthood. Let all come who can, bring the good Spirit with you, and let us have a spiritual feast. J. R. McClain, district president; B. F. Webb, secretary.

Twentieth semiannual conference of the Independence Stake will be held at the First church, Independence, Missouri, March 11 and 12, 1910, convening at 10 a. m., the 11th. Delegates to General Conference will be elected. W. S. Brown, secretary, 3005 Baltimore avenue, Kansas City, Missouri.

Convention Notices.

The Fremont district convention has been postponed one week to give Elder J. W. Wight an opportunity to be present. The convention will be held February 17, 18, 1911, at Shenandoah. C. W. Forney.

The annual conventions of the Religio and Sunday school associations of the Kirtland District will be held in the Latter Day Saint church, corner Wade Park avenue and Seventy-first street, Cleveland, Ohio, on Friday, February 24, 1911. We extend a cordial invitation to all who are interested to attend. Write C. B. Keck, Wade Park avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, for any information desired. C. B. Keck.

New York and Philadelphia district association of Zion's Religio-Literary Society will convene in regular business session on Saturday, February 25, 1911, at 4 p. m., at Saints' church, corner Park Place and Schenectady avenue, Brooklyn, New York. Election of officers and delegates to General Convention. Credentials and reports of officers and locals to be sent to Orrin K. Fry, secretary.

Zion's Religio-Literary Society of the Northern California District will convene at Sacramento, February 24, 1911, at 10 a. m., at Saints' chapel, corner Twenty-fourth and K street. It is hoped a good attendance will be present. Delegates will be appointed to General Convention. A joint entertainment of Sunday school and Religio will be held on Friday evening. Pauline O. Napier, secretary, 2130 Jay street, Sacramento, California.

The North Dakota district conference will meet with the Fargo Branch March 5 and 6, 1911. Branch clerks will please send in their reports one week before conference. J. S. Wagner, district president, Bantry, North Dakota.

The Kentucky and Tennessee district Sunday school convention will be held March 11, 1911, at Bethel, in connection with the conference. A program will be rendered by the children at 7 p. m. Let all the schools send reports. Delegates to the General Convention to be chosen. O. S. Caldwell, district superintendent; Alma Harrison, secretary.

Reunion Notice.

The Southwestern Iowa Reunion Association of the Latter Day Saints' Church will hold their annual reunion August 4 to 13, 1911, on last year's camp ground, in J. E. Claiborn's grove east of Thurman. C. W. Forney, secretary committee.

Notice to the Northern California District.

To the Saints Expecting to Attend the Northern California District Conference: As it will be impossible for the branch committee to meet all trains of steam and electric power, also river steamers, we volunteer the information that there will be a committee at the church, corner of Twenty-fourth and K streets, to look after the comforts of visitors. Take J street car to Twenty-fourth street and walk one block south to the church. Committee at the trains will wear blue ribbon as a designating mark.

GEORGE DALEY, for the branch.

Special Notice to Mission No. 2.

To all the ministry laboring under appointment in Mission No. 2, either from us as ministers in charge, or by General Conference appointment, are requested to report promptly to I. N. White, not later than the first day of March. Report only for months of January and February, as we have on record all former reports of first, second, and third quarters—unless you have failed to report during the year—then your report should reach back to your last report. Don't wait for blanks to report on. All we want is the number of sermons preached; times assisted and in charge; baptisms; confirmations; ordinations; patriarchal blessings; debates; new openings; actual time in the field; districts, branches, Sunday schools and Religios organized. All of these items we must have. Those wishing to apply for missionary work must have their application in by March 10. This is important. We will send blanks on application.

Your brethren in Christ,
I. N. WHITE.
J. F. CURTIS.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, February 9, 1911.

Thanks.

To the many friends in Independence and elsewhere who wish to extend our thanks and appreciation for many kind deeds and sympathy during the sickness and after the death of our beloved companion and father. We sincerely wish each and every one peace and comfort in this life, and great joy in the life to come.

Deaths.

CARPENTER.—Maria Fields Carpenter was born December 9, 1836, in Indiana, moved with her parents to Wisconsin, and from there to Nebraska. She was married to Alan Carpenter, March 22, 1865. To this union two children were born, both of whom survive her. She also leaves nine grandchildren, and nine great-grandchildren. She united with the church more than thirty years ago, and died at Bennet, Nebraska, January 20, aged 74 years, 1 month, and 11 days. Funeral services at the Presbyterian church, Sunday, January 22, conducted by Elder C. H. Porter.

SHANKS.—William H. Shanks departed this life January 31, 1911. Started to his work January 30. As he attempted to board the car, was thrown under the trailer car and his right leg was crushed off. He died from the loss of blood. He was born April 4, 1891, at Jeffersontown, Kentucky. Baptized October 3, 1909. Married to Nannie Bishop October 23, 1909. He was strong in the faith and awaits a glorious resurrection. Funeral preached by J. W. Metcalf, interment in Eastern Cemetery.

HALEY.—William H. Haley was born March 15, 1835, in Rock Castle County, Kentucky. Departed this life January 21, 1911, at Norwood, Lucas County, Iowa, at the age of 75 years, 10 months, and 6 days, after an illness of only a few days' duration, of la grippe, and other complications. He was married December 24, 1863, to Miss Malinda Cleveland. They were the parents of two children, Hamilton O. and Cleveland H., both of whom were at the bedside to the last. Besides his two sons, two brothers and sister, a host of relatives and friends mourn their loss. Funeral services conducted by J. C. Cackler.

BUCHANAN.—At Muscatine, Iowa, January 30, 1911, George W. Buchanan at his home, 996 Fullam avenue, after five weeks' illness, the result of a broken hip sustained from a fall on the 23d of December. He was born near Terre Haute, Indiana, April 2, 1837, and has lived in Muscatine for the past fourteen years. Baptized September 2, 1906, into Muscatine Branch, and died in the hope of a glorious resurrection. His wife, four sons, two daughters, and two sisters survive him. Funeral sermon by Elder Warren Turner, assisted by Elder C. G. Dykes; service at grave by the Grand Army.

JOHNSON.—Elder John C. Johnson was born July 12, 1824, Chautauqua, New York; died September 22, 1910, at Lincoln, Nebraska, aged 86 years, 2 months, and 10 days. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church October 11, 1874. Was ordained a priest June 25, 1876, an elder in 1886, giving to the Master's cause over thirty years of faithful and efficient service.

JOHNSON.—Mary A. Robinson was born February 7, 1823, at Belfast, Ireland; died December 25, 1910, at Lincoln, Nebraska, aged 87 years, 10 months, 18 days. Deceased came to America at the age of 18 years, and was married to John C. Johnson May 19, 1854, who died three months before. Sister Johnson was baptized into the Reorganized Church on October 11, 1874, in which faith she remained a firm and constant member until death.

KINGSBERRY.—Alma Roy Kingsberry passed away at his home in Yolo County, California, on January 16, 1911, at the early age of 19 years, 9 months, and 20 days. He was brought to Oakland and laid beside his younger brother, who preceded him about ten months. The funeral was from the undertaking chapel. Doctor Bush rendered a beautiful and consoling solo. The sermon was by J. M. Terry, along comforting lines. The cup was a bitter one to the bereaved parents and only remaining sister.

STRINGER.—Mary C. Stringer was born at Springfield, Ohio, November 10, 1837. Came to Fairland, Oklahoma, in 1881, where she has lived since. Was baptized March 20, 1896, and lived a Saint indeed, until she laid down her armor January 24, 1911. Funeral sermon at the Saints' church, Fairland, January 25, 1911, by Elder J. T. Riley, assisted by Brother W. B. Hillen. She was loved by all.

Parcels Post Versus Express.

It certainly begins to look as if the express companies were coming in for their share of the attention which the public has been bestowing on the trusts and the railroads and the insurance companies and the rest of the big combinations. It was quite outside the possibilities that the magazines in their search for more and more readable copy about "big business," would much longer neglect such a whopping big business as that which the express companies control. The attack has begun, and already the companies have been found guilty of making an awful lot of money. A writer in the current American Magazine gives some figures that would have looked impressive even in Brother Thomas W. Lawson's articles on "Frenzied finance" and "The system."

It seems to be pretty clear, in point of fact, that the express business in this country has been extraordinarily profitable; that it has also been extraordinarily free from governmental regulation and supervision; and that it has likewise been extraordinarily free from governmental competition. In this last feature of the situation is probably to be found the main significance of the present increasing interest in the express companies' affairs. Be that as it may, the demand for the parcels post is certainly getting audible. Shippers generally are in favor of it. So are the department stores in the big cities, particularly the correspondence stores. So are a great many consumers, particularly those who live in small places or in the country. The retailers in the small places are opposed to it—naturally; and doubtless there are some other interests against it—including the express companies themselves. Evidently there is here enough material for another big politico economic controversy. But the country can stand it. Democracy thrives on such divisions.—Harper's Weekly.

Jane Addams.

The impression which a noble character makes upon all types of persons was well illustrated by the remark of an Irish cook, who, oddly enough, received among her Christmas presents a copy of Jane Addams's Twenty Years at Hull House. A few days later she was asked whether she had read the book. She promptly replied that she had, and then added, "Shure and she was a foine lady; she ought to have been a White Sister."

In this connection it is interesting to note that though Twenty Years at Hull House has been published nearly three months, it is still reported by the New York Public Library as being one of the books most in demand in the city.

A New Christian Scripture.

A document has recently been discovered which, if the theory of Doctor Margoliouth, of the British Museum, is correct, is a record of the activities of a Christian sect which antedates the gospels, says a writer in the issue of Harper's Weekly for January 21. The text contains a reference to two great leaders, who had been sent to strengthen and enlighten the Hebrew nation, one the "Messiah" and the other known as the "Teacher of Righteousness." According to Doctor Margoliouth these are, respectively, Jesus and John the Baptist. "A third personage, called in one place a 'man of scoffing' and in another 'Belial' is put forward as a special mark for denunciation. It is clear that if the two preceding identifications are correct this third personage must be none other than Paul the Apostle." The alternate view of this document, that it represents a Jewish sect who existed previously to the birth of Christ, is, however, the one put forward by Doctor Schechter, the discoverer of this manuscript.

If Jesus the Carpenter could take a piece of rough olive wood and make of it a door frame for a rude stone dwelling in Nazareth, I know that as the divine Carpenter he can take the poor material of my life and make it to serve some useful purpose in his kingdom, if I will let him.—The Christian Herald.

WHEN JESUS COMES AGAIN.

A REMARKABLE SERMON BY THE LATE DWIGHT

L. MOODY.

The Christian Herald, New York, is publishing a series of twenty sermons by Dwight L. Moody, never before published. The authenticity of these sermons is vouched for by the evangelist's son, William R. Moody. The series is the exclusive property of the Christian Herald, being copyrighted, with a view to immediate reproduction in book form. By special arrangement with the Christian Herald we are permitted to reproduce a part of one of these sermons, appearing in that periodical December 21, 1910. The subject is, "When Jesus Comes Again." It is so in harmony with the belief of Latter Day Saints that we are sure our readers will enjoy it very much. We quote:

I want to show what scripture says about the state of things that Christ is going to find when he comes back. We celebrate Christmas in honor of the first advent; how will things be on this old earth when he comes again?

In the third chapter of the last letter Paul ever wrote, which was written to Timothy, we find what he says will happen in the last days: "But know this, that in the last days grievous times shall come; for men shall be lovers of self, lovers of money, boasters, heady, railers, disobedient to parents, unfaithful, unholy, without natural affection, rebellious, slanderers, without self-control, fierce, no lovers of good, traitors, headstrong, puffed up, lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God." Mark these words: "Holding the form of godliness, but having denied the power thereof. From such also turn away. For of these are they that creep into houses and take captive silly women, laden with sins, with divers lusts, ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth."

UNFILIAL CHILDREN.

Study this, and after looking around, compare such a situation with what we see every day. We see disobedience, we see lack of natural affection. . . .

If a young man in China should treat his father as some young men do in this country, they would kill him. They would say that such a monster wasn't fit to be permitted to live. Easy enough to talk about the "heathen Chinese," but we can learn something from them. A man may come into my house and steal my money, but the boy that comes home any night drunk, and who when the parents remonstrate, gives curses—great horrors! If my boy wants to murder me, I want him to do so at once. How many men to-day are killing their parents by inches! "Void of natural affection"! Am I not talking facts?

"Lovers of money"! Why, less than a hundred years ago, I suppose we had scarcely half a dozen millionaires; now a hundred millions don't satisfy some of them. If they get a hundred millions, they want two hundred, and if they get two hundred millions, they want four. And so they go on multiplying. "Lovers of money"! And that isn't the worst of it. They have a "form" of religion, a "form" of godliness, but deny the power.

THE WORLD'S CONDITION.

"Selfish"! Why does a man get drunk?—to please his wife? No! To please his own self. Why does a man gamble every cent he has? To please his family? No! He does it for his own gratification. Why, my dear friends, there's little self-denial, and the fires of martyrdom have gone out, I'll admit; but I will tell you what—there are other things that have come in, and men to-day are professing to serve God when they are gratifying themselves, and care very little for God or his cause. They have the "form." Every nation a "form." Go into France, and they have a "form" of religion. Go into Germany or England; they have a "form" of religion. And I will tell you that they've got a good deal of "form" in this country—dead, cold, lifeless formalism. "Having a form of godliness, but denying the power." That's where we are.

But men say to-day, "Where is the sign of his coming? Where is the sign? We don't believe that promise of his coming back." What's the trouble? The church has got in with the world, eating and drinking and carousing, instead of testifying against the wickedness of the world. If I go into the world, then I must take the judgment that it gets. When judgment fell upon Sodom, Lot had to take his share. He lost everything. If a man becomes a worldly Christian, and makes his boast that he is a paying church member and not a praying one, and seems to laugh at the idea, the time is coming when God will deal with him. Now see what Peter has to say in 2 Peter 3: 3: "There shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." That's the language to-day. "There's no danger of his coming." I'll tell you, hosts of people will call me a crank, even crazy, in talking about the Lord's coming back. Of course that's nothing to me. It is to teach what he taught. When the servant knows above his Master, he had better get out of the business. It is what God says, and not my theory or your theory; and if Paul says it is going to be dark when the Lord is to return, and if Peter teaches it, I will stand in their company—pretty good company! I'd rather be with them than with the modern teachers who are teaching against the Book.

First, the Son of God has come. You'll all admit that. Second, the Son of God has gone back. Third, the Holy Ghost has come. He promised he would send him. And, now, fourth, I think we have reason to believe that he himself will come back. Now there are four facts. Let us hold on to them. I can not understand all the program that's going to take place when he comes. Many things took place at his birth. Some one has said that a wife may not understand about the husband's ledger and his business, but she does desire to hear his footfall when he comes home at night. And I can keep watching and waiting and desiring the coming of my Lord, doing what he tells me to do.

AS TO THE MILLENNIUM.

We can't fool God! You can't deceive him. What God wants is truth in the heart. He wants a real man, not a sham. And when he comes, he will gather his own to himself. You take some pieces of steel and throw them into some sawdust, and take a great strong magnet and throw it over the sawdust, and every particle of steel will flow to the magnet. There wouldn't any sawdust flow. And when the great Magnet comes to this world every particle will fly up to be with the Lord. When he teaches this, let you and I teach it. I don't believe there is to be a millennium until he comes. Some think there's a millennium now. It is a queer kind of millennium. If this is the millennium, I pity the wife that has got a drunken husband who comes home and kicks her, bites her, rocks the children around so that some of them will go down to their graves crippled. Look at the drunkenness in these cities; look at the licentiousness; look at the accursed sin of adultery in these cities. And people tell us that Christ is reigning now!

Now, I'll tell you, man is going to have his day and then the Lord will have his. I tell you that the Lord is going to set up his kingdom and reign in his glory. The time is coming when the thoughts of men will only be the echo of God's voice on this earth. He will have a thousand years of his own and teach us then what the reign will be. Talk about my being a pessimist! I am far from that. I believe error is to be put down and unrighteousness is to prevail, and I expect to be back here. The nation is going to be born in a day. I have the idea that the Jews will come in in a day. . . . But what a day will burst upon the earth! The time of our redemption draweth near. He may be coming in his chariot to earth, but we wait for our inheritance until he comes. We are going to have an inheritance worth something. What is your inheritance down here? A man only gets his house up and finishes it, and when it is "finished" he is gone. But by and by we shall have an inheritance and come into possession of it when he comes. We wait for the reunion with loved ones until he comes. He says that when Christ comes he is going to bring our loved ones with him. That sainted mother we lost years ago is coming back. She is coming with him. The children are coming back. Isn't there comfort in this doctrine? The Devil has tried to make us believe this is not real. He will bring all the saints gathered for six thousand years. Paul is coming back; Moses, the great lawgiver, Elijah, Enoch, will be back. I see some of you wiping your eyes. Well you might. Thank God for the promise of seeing our loved ones again. They are going to come, sure. He has promised it, to bring them with him. We, with our bodies, shall be caught up in the air, to be for ever with him, never to be separated, "to go no more out for ever." Then we are to wait for Satan to be bound until he comes. Get the Devil bound! You laugh. I am stating facts. Put it down. He has promised to bind him. Put it down! . . .

Christ is coming, and going to establish his throne on the earth. Three times in the closing up of this Book he says, "I come quickly." It will seem but a little while in eternity; it will seem like a second.

A BRANCH AT JERUSALEM.

The following letter from Elder F. G. Pitt, suggests the thought that, with the present equipment, the Jerusalem mission will reach only those who speak English. This matter will, no doubt, receive attention at the coming General Conference.

JERUSALEM, PALESTINE, January 25, 1911.

Editors Herald: I am pleased to inform you that our work is still onward, in this land. Every day it becomes more firmly planted, and I trust is here to remain till Christ comes to earth again. We had to go to the Jordan again last week to baptize three more; a father and his grown son and daughter. Pure Arabs, and good, refined people. The mother and two other daughters have expressed a desire to be baptized and will doubtless unite with us soon, with one or two others who are much interested in our work. Last Friday Brother Griffiths organized a branch of eleven members, to be known as the Jerusalem Branch. Brother Whelan, who became interested in our work from the first, and was baptized last December, was ordained a deacon. Sister Pitt is secretary and treasurer. An humble beginning, it is true, but it is a beginning, and one that I trust will prove the nucleus of a great work in this land.

The Lord has certainly been with us in our mission here. We often remark how wonderfully the way has opened before us. We have met with very little opposition, but have been favored with friends on every hand. I can not tell you how our hearts rejoice at the success that has attended our efforts. To God be all the praise.

But there is one thing that is somewhat distressing, and that is our poverty. We are all so poor here, and the poor in this land are desperately poor. It seems to us that it would have been such an advantage if the Lord had called in some people with means. But it was much the same when Jesus himself was here. The poor had the gospel preached to them. "The common people heard him gladly," but others rejected him. His ministry were very poor, so that Jesus had to perform a miracle at one time to raise the money to pay taxes. So we should not complain, and we will try not to, but we feel sure that there are men and women of means in our own land, who, if they could only realize the poverty in this land and the needs of the work, would come to our assistance. Other churches are sending money here by the thousands, and I am told the missionaries think they do well if they make one convert a year. To accomplish their work they build fine churches, beautiful schoolhouses and hospitals, furnish work for the poor, and even pay money to people to unite with them.

Our needs are not very great at the present time, but there are some few things that we are very much in need of. First we need one dozen Hymnals, the same number of Praises, the standard books of the church, and then we stand in great need of tracts in foreign, as well as in the English language. We are in great need of tracts in German, French, and Hebrew. I believe that many of the Jews in this land would accept the light, if a proper work was done among them. With the kind of Christianity set before them here, I do not wonder that they reject it, for it is simply disgusting to intelligent people. Let me give you a sample.

Lest Wednesday, the day we went to the Jordan, is celebrated by the Greeks as the anniversary of Christ's baptism. Large numbers of pilgrims, mostly from Russia, were assembled at the river, and when we arrived, were being addressed by the priests. In a short time the priests went down to the river and out in small boats and dipped the crucifix in the river and blessed the water. Then at the signal, given by firing off a lot of rifles, the people rushed forward, robed in a single thin white garment and plunged into the water, where they dipped themselves three times; also dipped up the water in their hands, which they drank.

Seeing the crowd and not knowing its full import, I ran forward with my camera to take a few snap shots. You can judge of my astonishment when I saw women disrobing completely, in the presence of the entire crowd, donning their thin white robes, too thin to hide their forms, and plunging into the water without manifesting the least shame. After they returned to the shore they took off their wet garment and put on their dry clothing; then they crossed themselves several times and kissed the portrait of Christ and his mother, Mary. I am told that these poor people are taught that after they have performed all this, their salvation is assured, and these white garments are carried home and laid away to be their burial shrouds.

How different all this from the simple religion of Jesus Christ. About all these people know of religion is made up in forms and ceremonies. They know little of the Christian graces and the development of character, so essential to a true follower of Christ. I am told, as a result of what is witnessed here in the form of religion, many who come here believers in Christ, go away skeptics.

What wonder then that the poor Jew, looking on at what he is told is Christianity and seeing so little of the true Christian spirit, turns away in disgust—he who has been made to feel the spirit of hatred and persecution, administered to him and his forefathers for generations, by these very people who now try to convert him to their religion. There are many very devout Jews in this land, who, if they could but hear the gospel in its purity, I believe would accept it.

I believe that the Book of Mormon could be used to good advantage among them. For that reason, it should be translated into Hebrew and placed within their reach as soon as possible.

What we really need, if the work is to be prosecuted in this land (and we trust it will not be neglected, now that it has been opened up) is a building of our own, in which we could hold services nights and on Sundays. During the week it would serve as a reading room, where a good supply of our books and papers could be kept on sale. It perhaps could be used as a school room, where the young could be taken off the street and be taught. There is a big work to be done here if proper methods and means are employed.

It is most distressing to witness the poverty in this land. It is difficult to find work, and the wages are very small. The young man whom we baptized is a carpenter, and his wages are about twenty-five cents a day. His sister is really a beautiful girl, both in form and character. She has been educated at the American colony and is a good dressmaker, up-to-date, but is unable to make a living here. If some of our people in America, who are in need of such a girl, would advance the money for this poor girl to come to America, they would benefit themselves and at the same time greatly aid one of God's children. She would be only too glad to have the chance to work out the money expended. She is a strong, healthy girl of eighteen, and would be willing to do any kind of work for a time, but would make an excellent lady's maid.

We are alone now; Brother Griffiths left for England last Monday. We enjoyed his association, and only wish he could have remained. The last ten days have been unusually cold and stormy. Rain, wind, snow, and ice. But we have managed to keep comfortable, but regret having left all our winter clothing at home. We are still located at Sister Floyd's and doing light housekeeping. Our friends in California will know what that is. The cost of living here we find to be about the same as in England. We found trading a little difficult at first, on account of not understanding the language.

But now we are able to make ourselves understood pretty well. The money is the most difficult to understand, as there are so many kinds in use here. We like the French money best, and I think there is more French money in use here now than any other. We do not see much American money, but I am told that United States paper money is in good demand. The money changers are glad to get it.

We are receiving letters from strangers asking us to send them the price of beads and souvenirs, etc. This is a waste of time and postage. If you want us to send you anything of the kind, just inclose a dollar bill and state what is desired, and we will try to accommodate you. But kindly remember that we have a large correspondence, and every letter costs five cents. United States stamps are no good here. We shall take pleasure in accommodating all in our power who write to us.

As soon as the cold and rainy season is over we hope to go up north and visit the Galilee country, as it is likely that we will not resume our journey to Australia before April or May. In writing us, it is not necessary to address us in care of Cook's, as this sometimes delays our letters one day. Jerusalem, Palestine, is all the address required.

In gospel bonds,
F. G. PITT.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

"Liberty means responsibility. That is why most men dread it."—George Bernard Shaw.

A "mixup" occurs on page 66 of Autumn Leaves for February, in the article by Paul Hanson, A Trip to Australia. The cut of Apostle T. W. Smith selected by the editor and marked in on that page was omitted, and by mistake a cut of another individual was substituted.

It is estimated that in the United States Navy at the present time there are vessels costing at least $140,000,000 that are obsolete. Washington's motto, that the best way to insure peace is to prepare for war, may be necessary for governments in the present state of civilization, but it is costly. In ten years a war vessel is generally out of date. In less than twenty years, it is sold as junk.

The initiative and referendum in choosing sermon subjects have been adopted by Unity Church, Montclair, New Jersey. The minister announces in the printed calendar a large list of subjects and asks the people to choose among them. He also invites them to criticise and offer suggestions freely or express their needs and difficulties, by which he gets to know what kind of sermons are needed. Some sermons are a symposium of opinions and ideas from the members, with comments and advice from the preacher.

"If we can only grow to sympathize with one another, we will quickly see that the things that divide us are superficial and the things that unite us are fundamental."

"When I was Police Commissioner, I wanted the right kind of men on the force, but I never asked their religious faith. An English clergyman came over here to start an anti-Semitic crusade. Some worthy Jews asked me to stop his meetings. I refused because I am against stopping anyone from pitching into anyone else. Soon after, the clergyman himself came to me and asked me to protect his anti-Semitic meetings from interruption by Jews. I sent thirty Jew policemen to protect him."—Theodore Roosevelt before the Hebrew Council, New York City.

Mrs. Bertha A. Greer, M. D., Lamoni, Iowa, inclosing a check in the interest of the Sanitarium at Independence, Missouri, in a letter to Bishop Kelley, shows the interest of a true physician in the work of helping along in caring for the sick and afflicted. What a fine thing it would be if all of us could appreciate the good these helping institutions are doing as does Sister Greer. She says: "Find inclosed check for $50 in the interest of the Sanitarium at Independence, Missouri. I hope the amount will be enough to furnish a room with the comforts needed for a patient. My wish and prayers will ever be that all who enter that room for treatment may be blessed with renewed health and vigor. Ever wishing you success in your work of love for the gospel of Christ."

In this number appears an article on Socialism. Perhaps those not well acquainted with the HERALD should be told that though the article is entitled "The weakness of Socialism from a Latter Day Saint standpoint," it represents the individual standpoint. The church has never expressed itself on the subject. As there seems to be a desire to discuss the subject of Socialism we have given space to several articles on that subject; however, the number of those writing on either side when free opportunity was given did not indicate that the desire for discussion was so extensive as some have thought.

Some time ago we published an article by one who had made a study of the subject; in the article he attempted to set forth, impartially, arguments that might be presented on both sides of the question. Still later we arranged to publish the best article to be submitted in support of Socialism; and did so publish an excellent defensive article as selected by disinterested judges. Now we have to present to our readers an article on the other side of the question, the best to be submitted in answer to our call.

The subject is one that will challenge our attention some time, if it does not now. We have sought to secure a fair and dispassionate discussion of the question, each writer to set forth his own views independently, so as to avoid reply and cross fire.

This policy will be continued if the subject is again taken up.

A Christian Scientist in New York has been convicted of violating article 3 of the constitution of that State, by treating sick people after the manner of his church and charging fees for it. In his finding and summing up, the magistrate said: "Religious belief is no excuse for an unlawful act. No person under the guise of the practice of the principle and tenets of any church, may violate the laws of the land. The Christian Scientist has the right to believe that he can heal by prayer, but I am of the opinion that if he puts that belief into practice for hire, he exceeds his rights as an individual under the law. I must rule that religion is beyond official interference, so long as one keeps it to himself and does not jeopardize others; but the moment there is an invasion of the rights of the State by some other act or conduct that tends to affect the safety and future welfare of the people, the civil government may interfere for its own protection and preservation."

In the above mentioned case, it was found that the accused charged two dollars for the first and one dollar for each subsequent treatment, which consisted in sitting opposite to the patient for ten or fifteen minutes in silent prayer. The accused was asked, "Is there anything in the Bible authorizing you to charge a fee?" "The laborer is worthy of his hire," said his council, before accused had time to answer. The words of Jesus are, "Go your ways: . . . carry neither purse, nor scrip, nor shoes: . . . and into whatsoever house ye enter, first say, Peace be to this house. And if the Son of peace be there, your peace shall rest upon it: if not it shall turn to you again. And in the same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give: for the laborer is worthy of his hire."—Luke 10: 3-7. From this it is plain that the "hire" which Jesus had in his mind was the necessities of life, which might be ministered to his servants when laboring among the people.

Salt does its work, not by exhibiting itself, but by losing itself. Its service lies in its solubility. It is lost, but it lives in flavor. If it remains distinguishable, it remains harsh, saline, unwelcome. The place of the salt is found, not in self-assertion, but in self-surrender. Light, also, does its work by dispersion. The candle burns, but it burns itself up. It illuminates by self-surrender. You do not look at the sun, you look at the things which the sun illuminates, and walk in the reflected light. A man goes swinging a lantern down a dark road, and you see the light, but not the man; he is in the shadow, but you follow the light. That is precisely what Jesus desired for the Christian character—not self-display, but self-effacement; not the doing of great things, but the doing of small things; the permeation of the mass of life as with the taste of salt, the penetration of a dark world as by a generous flame.—Dr. F. G. Peabody.

III. THE MISSION OF JESUS CHRIST.

BY ELDER CHARLES DERRY.

[Latter Day Saints accept Jesus Christ as the Son of God and the Savior of all those who will accept him and obey his gospel. The scope of his work is set forth in the following article. The next number in our doctrinal series will be by Elder J. W. Wight, on the subject of Faith.—EDITORS.]

All Bible believers acknowledge the fact that man is a fallen being, in consequence of disobedience to the law of God in the Garden of Eden. We learn from the Scriptures that God made man in his own image, and after his own likeness, and crowned him with glory and honor, and set him over the works of God on earth. (See Genesis 1: 26-28; Hebrews 2: 7.) This shows that man was an intelligent being. Dominion could not be given to a thing that had no intelligence to receive it. That which possesses no intelligence would not be on a level with the meanest animal or insect; it would be simply a thing.

We are told that "intelligence is the glory of God." It is the glory of man also. It implies the power to think, reason, investigate, and act independently, to receive or reject. Any being with less power than this would not be man. It is written, God made man in his own image, and after his own likeness. To this intelligent being, God gave a command (Genesis 2: 16, 17). But Satan, a fallen angel, who was once an angel of light, but through an unholy ambition rebelled against God and was cast down, made use of the serpent, the most subtle of all the beasts of the field, to seduce our first parents from the right way, (Luke 10: 18; Revelation 12: 8; Genesis 3, I. T.) He tempted Eve; she yielded, and persuaded Adam to partake of the forbidden fruit. And thus they became subject to the Devil, having fallen from their original purity, and became the subjects of death, as it is written, "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned."—Romans 5: 12. For it is an eternal law, that, "Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin."—John 8: 34. Again, "Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?"—Romans 6: 16. Hence, our first parents, having disobeyed their Creator, became the servants of sin; and as a clean thing can not come from an unclean one. (Job 14: 4) so their posterity could not of themselves come forth to a higher condition than that of their parents.

The infinitely wise and loving Creator had foreseen the purpose of Satan, and, without destroying the free agency of man, had made provisions for man's redemption, and for the restoration of all things to their first estate, and the exaltation to eternal glory of all mankind who would forsake the service of Satan and accept the terms of salvation as found in the plan of salvation—the gospel of Christ.

For this purpose, no less a personage than the Son of God offered himself as a ransom for all, to redeem the race from the guilt of original sin, the sin of our first parents, and to place them in a condition wherein they would be free to choose and act for themselves, as to whom they would serve, and to hold them responsible for their own acts. (See Ezekiel 18.) Thus Christ in his infinite love for man offered to come in the Father's due time and bear our sins, that we might be redeemed from the power of Satan. Hence he is spoken of as "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." (Revelation 13: 8.) Again, "who verily was foreordained from the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you."—1 Peter 1: 20.

"When the fullness of time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons."—Galatians 4: 4, 5. "Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God; but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, . . . and being found in fashion as a man; he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross."—Philippians 2: 6, 7, 8.

Again we read, "But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor; that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man. . . . Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the Devil; and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham. Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. For in that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted."—Hebrews 2: 9-18.

Reader, for a broader comprehension of the love and condescension of Christ and the greatness of his sacrifice see John 1; Romans 1: 3, 4; Ephesians 1; Colossians 1: 12-22; 1 Timothy 1: 14, 15. These scriptures are sustained by the Book of Mormon throughout its pages; and with equal plainness it sets forth the fall of man and his redemption through Christ, "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." The Prophet Nephi says, "For it behooveth the great Creator that he suffereth himself to become subject to man in the flesh, and die for all men, that all men might become subject unto him. For as death hath passed upon all men, to fulfill the merciful plan of the great Creator, there must needs be a power of resurrection."—2 Nephi 6: 10, 11. He also shows that it "must needs be an infinite atonement," hence no sacrifice save that made by the Son of God could atone for the sins of the world and secure unto men an eternal redemption.

When Christ began his public ministry he declared his mission in these words: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord."—Luke 4: 18, 19. Thus we see the great condescension of the Son of God. Paul says, "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich."—2 Corinthians 8: 9. Well may we exclaim with the apostle, "Great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory."—1 Timothy 3: 16. Where he is now pleading our cause, as it is written, "If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous; and he is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world."—1 John 2: 1, 2. Again, "For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us."—Hebrews 9: 24. "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, [in the flesh] that he might destroy the works of the Devil."—1 John 3: 8.

The purpose of the Devil is to destroy the works of God, and drag the human family down to hell. His weapons are envy, hatred, malice, lust, lies, treachery, and deceit. He was a liar and "a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it."—John 8: 44. He lied to our first parents, and thus brought death to the human family. The scripture says: "Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light."—2 Corinthians 11: 14. In his cunning he appeals to the flesh and these are the works: "Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, sedition, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like."—Galatians 5: 19-21. By these he sets the human family against God, and against each other, and thus he has been the cause of all the evils that have cursed the earth; but glory be to God and his Christ, for his loving-kindness and tender mercies in providing a means of deliverance from the curse, through Jesus Christ, "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God; to declare, I say, at this time his righteousness: that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus."—Romans 3: 25, 26.

By the atonement of Christ, all mankind are redeemed from the guilt of original sin, and placed upon an equal standing of innocence before God, as was Adam before he sinned, and each is responsible for his own deeds only (Ezekiel 18), else what mean the gracious words of the Savior, when he took little children in his arms, put his hands upon them and blessed them, saying, "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 19: 14. Is the kingdom of heaven composed of sinful beings? Listen, "Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 18: 3.

From the foundation of the world, the offer of Christ, to come in the Father's due time, to redeem mankind, was accepted, and went into effect from the beginning, hence he was considered as "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." (Revelation 13: 8.) Thus the redemption of all men from the taint of original sin was brought about, hence the doctrine of "total depravity of man from his birth" is not the doctrine of Christ. Thus the work and purpose of Satan, to destroy man by rendering him a "totally depraved being," was eternally frustrated by the infinite wisdom and love, justice and mercy of the great Creator and Redeemer, who gave himself a ransom for man, both from original sin, and also from our individual sins, inasmuch as we truly believe in him and forsake our sins, and are baptized for the remission of them.

But reader, he gives no license for the commission of sin; he holds every man responsible for his deeds. "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad."—2 Corinthians 5: 10. The redemption secured by Christ for man does not destroy the agency of man. He is still free to choose whom he will serve. If he chooses the service of God and endures unto the end, eternal life is his reward. (John 3: 36). "As I live, saith the Lord, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live."—Ezekiel 33: 11 (Luke 15: 7). Thus we see the love of God for man.

Reader, the work of redemption through Christ was not confined to the age in which he lived on earth, nor yet to those who should live after him. It reached back to the beginning of time, even including the rebellious antediluvians, who had become so utterly corrupt that it was necessary to cleanse the earth of their corruptions by a flood, sweeping them from the earth, driving their spirits into the prison house, there to be subject to the Devil until the great sacrifice had been made; therefore we read, "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit; by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which sometime were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water."—1 Peter 3: 18-20. Then we are plainly told by Peter, "For, for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit."—1 Peter 4: 6. Thus we find the mercy of God extended even to the disobedient, to those who had been led captive by the wiles of the Devil and had rejected the mercy of God while in the flesh; thus he is faithful to his mission as declared in Luke 4: 18, 19; Isaiah 61; 42: 7.

It is not taught in God's word that these prisoners are compelled to be obedient unto God. If compulsion were the order there would be no necessity of Christ preaching to them. The fact of his preaching to them is evidence that they may accept or reject his offers of love and mercy. They will be "judged according to men in the flesh," and if they choose to accept the offered mercy and "live according to God in the spirit," they may, and at the final judgment it will be said of them, according to the choice made, "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still."—Revelation 22: 11. God has made ample provision for rewarding all mankind according to their works. But to those who have embraced the gospel here and complied with the provisions thereof, and remained true to their covenant with him, to them he has promised a glorious resurrection when he shall come in his glory. (Matthew 16: 27.) "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."—Romans 8: 11.

"For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself."—Philippians 3: 20, 21. "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."—Colossians 3: 4 (1 Thessalonians 4: 13, 17). "When he shall appear, we shall be like him."—1 John 3: 3.

But this resurrection of the just will take place a thousand years before the resurrection of those who do not obey the gospel. John the Beloved, who was banished to the Isle of Patmos, was shown in vision, among many other events that were to transpire, how that Satan was bound and cast into the bottomless pit. He saw the resurrection of the just and that they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years on the earth (Revelation 20, also Revelation 5). "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished."—Revelation 20: 5.

This glorious resurrection is secured unto the believer by Christ's death and resurrection, "who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel" (2 Timothy 1: 10). "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you."—1 Peter 1: 3, 4. It is ordained of God that all shall rise from the dead, but not all at the same time, nor yet to the same conditions. Jesus says, "The hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."—John 5: 28, 29. It is written, "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming."—1 Corinthians 15: 22, 23. The Apostle Paul in describing the different conditions to which the dead arise, says, "There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead."—1 Corinthians 15: 41, 42.

John was permitted to see in vision what shall be after the thousand years are ended. Then comes the resurrection of those who "lived not again until the thousand years were finished. . . . The Devil, that deceived them, was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, . . . and I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, . . . and I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God: the books were opened, and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works."—Revelation 20: 5-12. Then comes the final sentence, "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still."—Revelation 22:11. Then comes the fulfillment of the saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ."—Revelation 11: 15. After this comes the new heaven and the new earth (Revelation 21). Then has come the final triumph of Christ. The last enemy is destroyed, even death, for "he hath put all things under his feet," and God is all in all. As it is written, "Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father: when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power. For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."—1 Corinthians 15: 24-26.

Reader, the mission of Jesus Christ was undertaken for you. Shall his sacrifice, his sufferings, even to the death of the cross, be in vain? "Though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich."—2 Corinthians 8: 9. Spurn not the offer of eternal life, but accept the free gift, and be saved in the kingdom of God.

THE WEAKNESS OF SOCIALISM FROM A LATTER DAY SAINT STANDPOINT.

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. This is the first commandment. And the second is like, namely this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Mark 12: 30, 31.

First and foremost: first, last, and all the time, Socialism inverts God's plan, and then leaves God out of the plan altogether. Hence it is temporary, transitory; of the world, by the world, for the world.

"Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," but Socialism says: "With the first commandment we have nothing to do." The leaders and promoters of Socialism say, it is impossible for us to love God under present conditions. Can you agree with that? The leaders of any movement, reform, or party represent the general tendency of the whole.

And in nothing doth man offend God, or against none is his wrath kindled, save those who confess not his hand in all things, and obey not his commandments."—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 5.

"But," says Socialism, "the second commandment we will make a grand reality." By establishing certain economic opportunities, an industrial democracy; by creating beautiful surroundings, leisure, and personal opportunities, men will be induced to be good, "to love God if they want to."

Socialists act on the theory that evil is the result of environment; and that they can produce an environment that will remove incentive to evil; that they can do away with temptation. Saint James says: "Every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed."—James 1: 14. But it would appear that there is temptation in heaven. What could have been the environment that moved Lucifer, son of the morning, to rebel?

"Let favor be showed to the wicked, yet will he not learn righteousness: in the land of uprightness will he deal unjustly."—Isaiah 26: 10.

"By the fear of the Lord men depart from evil."—Proverbs 16: 6.

The Bible declares that the source of selfishness, pride, and all evil lies in the human heart. "And God saw . . . that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually."—Genesis 6: 5.

"Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life."—Proverbs 4: 23 (Luke 6: 45).

And directly to Latter Day Saints this is given: "Heed should be paid to the admonitions of those who from time to time preach and write upon the gathering to remove the principle of selfishness from the hearts of the Saints."—Doctrine and Covenants 127: 7. Are not the rich who need, apparently, have no thought for the economic question, just as much given to selfishness and pride, as any other class of people?

Not even the church law of equality can abolish selfishness and pride, but it must be done by the putting on of the mind of Christ, who receives glory yet without robbing God, with an eye single to the glory of God.

Lucifer would have had glory without acknowledging God. So Socialism, though pretending to make man free, will take him straight away from acknowledging God; for their authors say, "This is the highest type of republic yet conceived by the mind of man."

Law may control his actions, but it purifies no man, neither the deeds of the law, neither Socialism, nor brotherly love, but faith in God's all wise charity and just government, by the leavening, quickening power of which we receive a new life, that the issues of the heart may no more be unto death but unto life. Are there not two freedoms? The false, where one is free to do what he likes; and the true, where he is free to do God's will, wherein our wants are brought under obedience, and we grow up into the fullness of the gospel principles, until our wants come into harmony with the divine order; then are we free indeed.

In a community having the gospel principles written in the heart, there could not possibly be a saloon-keeper, nor a brothel, nor a child-devouring mill or factory; because of every man's charity for every other creature; because the pure in heart carry with them the golden rule and measure up their every day life (from washing dishes and feeding pigs, to entertaining a caller, or administering a judgeship). This they do to-day; money or no money, they will not be bought. The chances are that a man with no more moral responsibility (and no fear of God) than to run a saloon or brothel, if his revenue were taken away would still be ready and willing to carry on pernicious moral influence. Listen to Isaiah once more: "Let favor be showed to the wicked yet will he not learn righteousness; in the land of uprightness will he deal unjustly." In Daniel 11: 17 you will find in the margin "much uprightness, or, equal conditions."

Zion's foundation was not laid by irreligious men in order to become good, or to bring to pass goodness, but by men in the Lord bringing to pass from the abundance of their hearts economic equality and suitable surroundings.

Socialism is in the hands of professedly irreligious, non-Christian, and priest-hating persons. No one can have read Socialist literature without having read denunciations of the priesthood; "priestcraft" they call it, without distinction, and know no difference, because they do not seek to know God. Think not they will treat us any better than they are now serving and always have served the Catholic priesthood (Portugal being a very present example). But let us remember the Lord has said that he has a people serving him in temporal things, and that they shall come to a spiritual understanding, and we shall inherit their treasure. For the nations that fear God shall bring their treasure into Zion.

Quotation from editorial in Appeal to Reason: "Socialism is merely industrial democracy, with an extension of democracy to cover politics as well. That is all it is. Being democracy, it is merely the giving of power into the hands of the people. We couldn't tell the people what they must do. They will do what they may wish, and because they will; Socialism can not be oppressive; it can not force the people into any position they do not wish to take. It could not make them, for instance give up religion, or do away with marriage, or any of those things with which it is charged."

Very true, Socialism is only too anxious to let people do "just what they want to do." Now, consider, with the world in the condition it is, what the result would be. Who complains of not being able to do "what they want to do" except the people who want to do things they have no lawful right to do, socially, morally, or religiously. Socialism desires to be rid of all law and laughs at respect for authority. They certainly so declare when they say, "Each man shall be a master; no employer, no government, no state."

Yet I read that Socialists are determined that if there is any surplus value, there is one thing it shall not do; it "shall not be used in exploiting those who have not a surplus."

Who will administer this law? A "shall not" frames a law.

Moreover, they continually affirm that economic conditions are the cause of the present day instability of home life. But all the history of the world, our own present experience, proves the falsity of such an argument, and our own personal judgment knows better; but by the sophistry of their words they attract attention and belief. That there is the most beautiful home life among the most poverty stricken, the poorest of peasants and laborers the world over can not be gainsaid; and the source resides in the people themselves.

Zion's foundation and her ability to continue rests in her respect for God's laws, for the authority of Jesus Christ the Son, as represented by the priesthood, and respect for each other, acted upon in the above order.

The government we now have should be maintained according to just and holy principles, being very similar to the church government, if you will notice, except in regard to the courts or administration of law, a thing that must pass out from among us in time. For when God's laws are written in our hearts and we obey them, there will be no administration of law, and the provisions made in Doctrine and Covenants for the settlement of disputes and misunderstandings will be sufficient. "Harmony of aim, not identity of conclusion" is the basis of our philosophy, but at times our conclusions need to be adjusted, and we have recourse to those who are especially set apart by the Lord—not by ourselves.

"The philosophy of Socialism is, in brief an assumption, based on example, that people are robbed by profit, interest and rent; that material interest has swayed human conduct; and that, therefore ultimately, the material interest of people will prompt them to put an end to profit, interest and rent. This is not materialism in the sense that it would do away with spiritual development. Rather, it is the laying of a material foundation on which to predicate a future structure of spiritual culture."—Editorial from Appeal to Reason.

This assumption appears true, but is only true because unjust men and oppressors have abused the system. Just so, Socialism, or brotherly love, or church laws, will become oppressive whenever unjust men take advantage of their positions. "When the wicked rule the people mourn." We have been told what will become of material things built on the rock foundation, (1 Corinthians 3: 11-15,) but what will become of a spiritual structure built on a material foundation? And a future structure? What of the present? "To-day is the day of salvation." Gospel principle, God's own charity, as it was, as it is, as it ever shall be; administered through our Lord Jesus Christ and the operations of the Holy Spirit; of the Saints, by the Saints, for the Saints, and those who desire to dwell among the Saints and be subject to their regulations: "Every man seeking the interest of his neighbor, . . . with an eye single to the glory of God."—Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4. Does this not appear to be very different from an economic or material basis?

In my reading I have not yet found any suggestions that we should attempt to place the gospel rule over any but the church, "whosoever repenteth and cometh unto me," "for the Lord requires the heart and a willing mind." Nevertheless, if any will live among us let them remain; there will be numbers who will flee to Zion, although not Saints. We are to forsake the world, to flee from Babylon (spiritual wickedness); to be in the world but not of the world; for "I give not unto you that ye shall live after the manner of the world." The world can not keep gospel laws because it does not understand them, but finds a way to evade and break them continually; considers them only attempts to limit its liberty.

Under Socialism, we are often told, each will be a partner in one vast industrial concern, (the negro and the Indian, too?) no man working for another. Here is a quotation from an editorial in the Appeal to Reason: "Under democratic control of industry, the people would not be employed by the state, as enemies of Socialism assert, and as they would be under public ownership under capitalism, but rather, as part owner of industry, each man would employ himself, just as a partner in any business employs himself." Nevertheless A. M. Dewey writes thus, "The proper care of every citizen by the State."

Under Zionie conditions, each is servant to the other. The rich is servant to the poor; the educated to the ignorant; the spiritual to the less illuminated; the day laborers to those who have other duties, each seeking to be of some service, be it ever so small, yet all equal in worth of position.

But how is it with the world? The poor, the unlearned, the darkened refuse to be servants, refuse to be served. "No," they say, "we will set ourselves up and pull down the rich;" drawing class lines in regard to earthly possessions. The rich in their highmindedness imagine they are masters, not only of others but of themselves, when God put them here and gave them many talents that they also might serve, that all should be equal in service. The servant is not greater than he whom he serves. But who will hear this (John 13: 16; 15: 20).

Who among so-called educated or even enlightened men realize that there is not one human being, drawing breath (barring insane and imbecile, and they sometimes teach us lessons) from whom he can not learn something. For there can not be two existences exactly alike, though equal—the angle of their vision is necessarily a trifle different, and one may see plainly what the other sees but partially.

Socialism's motto: "Everyone according to his deeds." Then there will be just as much difference between the circumstances of the poor, incompetent, and the well equipped men, as now.

Gospel commandment: "Every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just."—Section 81: 4. (Italics mine.) The Lord has appointed a stewardship for the poor, and he says he has never given a temporal law or plan. (Doctrine and Covenants 28: 9.) It is a principle that extends throughout the kingdoms of light, that the higher orders are always in service to the lower, yet both are equal in worth of position; even as we read of salvation through the ministration of the various orders, in section 76: 7, and angelic ministrations in Hebrews 1: 13, 14.

Socialism appears to me as nothing more than a gigantic trust, attempting to pacify the people with sophistry, and is putting them to sleep under the hypnotism of words. Because men have seen that a number of their fellows banded together have been able to control more money and live better in this world's goods, they assume that the majority of men by being of one mind will be able to divide the world's goods. Public ownership of public utilities, machinery, etc., honestly administered, would undoubtedly be of advantage to us all, otherwise it becomes simply the strongest of all powerful, centralized governments, passing soon from paternalism to tyranny and becoming an oppression such as the world has never seen.

Note, that always the Socialist objects to the word government, yet there is not a railroad, a factory, a department store, or a shop, without a set of persons who form a government, and whose word must be authority in order that harmony may obtain. Decry the word as they will, the fact and the necessity remains. But that is the inner motive, the active principle behind Socialism, to do away with government, that each man may be a master. No employer, no state, each man for himself, as has already been quoted from their own literature.

They will elect their own foreman they say, but if he has any authority then he becomes (but whisper the word) an officer, and without authority he would be a useless figurehead. Changing names does not change facts.

The Socialist is laboring to establish what he is pleased to call political and industrial democracy. What is the moving power in politics? What or where is the mainspring of the continual change in official and industrial life? Politics simplified is nothing more nor less than an everlasting scramble for "place." Otherwise why do candidates get out and hustle? Think you that under Socialism no one will be dissatisfied, no one be jealous simply because he has a measure of this world's goods? Can we for a moment assume that there will be no heads of departments, no managers, no superintendents whose clerical and overseeing duties will appear to be a "soft snap" to some other worker? Human nature will be just the same as it has always been, and therein lies the difficulty to-day. Now that is a principle we are particularly warned against. See Doctrine and Covenants 122: 16: "Ye are equal in worth of position and place in the work of the church; and if in honor ye shall prefer one another, ye will not strive for precedence or place in duty or privilege." And section 125: 14: "If my people will respect the officers whom I have called and set in the church, I will respect these officers; and if they do not, they can not expect the riches of gifts and the blessings of direction." Now if we as a people (which means each individual, for there is no people without individual units) sustain and uphold with our prayers and our sacrifices, our officers and the officers of the Order of Enoch, with all our heart, mind, and strength, forsaking all evil and cleaving unto all good, then shall come to pass the Lord's desire: "That the church may stand independent above all other creatures beneath the celestial world."—Doctrine and Covenants 77: 3.

Now if we do this, and preach repentance, where is our time to assist that creature of man's brain, Socialism, which seeks to make itself universal, upon principles which they themselves are admitting can not include the lower orders of mankind and the incompetent. The Federation of Labor, which is largely Socialist, (wholly so in some localities) has excluded the negro on the ground that "they are incapable of understanding our philosophy."

Why have we been given so many specific and detailed instructions toward the relief of the poor, the giving of inheritances, the gathering, and the Lord's storehouse, except that we have the incompetent and persons with limitations, both mentally and physically, always with us? They may be faithful and true of heart, the Lord's own children; you and I know some of them. Remember, "I, the Lord, have never given a temporal law." And again why, but that those intrusted with this world's goods and talents may put into practice that eternal principle of the higher, the well favored serving the lower. "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God."—Mark 10: 23.

Are you ready, am I ready, to put in our little all ("whether it be little or much, I care not," is the Lord's word) and receive back on an equality basis?

Are some of us not seeking some other way, desiring more of this world's goods? "But this I do for the salvation of my people." Let us embrace poverty and seek to make sacrifice; for, the love or desire of this world's goods is death to the soul.

Here is an oft-quoted definition of Socialism: "The abolition of that individual action on which modern societies depend, and the substitution of a regulated system of a cooperative action."

Here is the Zionite principle: Individual action so purified that the result is harmony and cooperation. Which of these appears to be the most solid and lasting basis for any society? Is the first really possible without the second? Who will be the head of the regulated system? Can there be a "system" without a head or a center?

We often read the statement that the ethics of Socialism and Christianity are identical, and various dictionaries and encyclopedias so define it. But who makes such a statement? The makers of books and those who sit aside and look on at the poor world's struggles. Not anyone who has entered into the sympathetic knowledge of Jesus Christ and experience with the human heart.

In the Socialistic mind the Church and Capitalism are practically one and the same. All preachers, and priests especially, are merely "grafters." Christian cooperation is, and must be based upon principles—neither on laws nor systems. Principles that shall have a living, everyday application. Consider the law systems of the present; a confused, complicated jumble. The trial and judgment of every incident should not be taken as precedent. In reality, each case or accusation should be judged and determined independently, considering the then present circumstances, according to the only gospel law given—love to God and love to our neighbor, trusting our Lord for light, for in him are "hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge."—Colossians 2: 3. For he takes note of the falling sparrow and of the hairs of our heads. There should be no precedent or looking backward to some other person's decision or opinions, but an active hold on the present. [This does not mean that there should be no study or learning of lessons from the past.]

At every new epoch the gospel or spiritual principles have been announced (and in the meridian of time Jesus came, and exemplified them, magnified them) but shortly man begins to hark back to precedent and ceases to have initiative, or to live by principle, then the law is added because of transgression. Just so much as laws and rules pile up on our records, just so much have we departed from the living way. Let us live to-day as perfectly as we are able, praying always with grace in our hearts for light and understanding for to-day's duties, humble though they may be. Yesterday is gone; the future is not ours, —to-day is the day of salvation. Do we not pray, "Give us this day our daily bread"? Take care of to-day and to-morrow and truth is established. For he will give unto the faithful line upon line, precept upon precept, to-day.

Let us acknowledge and learn quickly that individual righteousness is what the Lord requires, and without it, all the laws or systems of God or man will not, can not maintain cooperation or communism in peace. Here is a quotation from an eminent Socialist author, James MacKaye: "As many unsuccessful experiments have proven, the theory of communism will not work except among a selected community of marked unselfishness and exceptional habits of mutual toleration and concession."

Truly we are told that unless we are equal in temporal things we can not be equal in celestial things. Why? Because equality in temporal things is the expression of the purity and righteousness of our hearts, and unless we "bring forth fruit and works we can not inherit Zion." This agrees with Saint James, 2: 18-20, that faith without works is dead, being alone; faith of the spirit and works of the body combined, assist to bring about the union necessary to the celestial redemption of a soul.

"Seek to bring forth and establish Zion [spiritual purity], seek not riches but wisdom." What does Socialism seek? "They also seek not earnestly the riches of eternity, but their eyes are full of greediness." Of course, we look on greediness as being a desire for an enormous surplus. But is it? Our needs are very simple. Our wants are enormous. And we have only been promised our "just wants." "Unless there is actual want of food and raiment, poverty is more imaginary than real." This I have proven in my own life, and so have many others, and so ought many more of us to realize.

It is not, as some would argue, that man must become pure in heart before he is entitled to temporal blessings; but that he must desire to be pure in heart, with a measure of brotherly love, before he can bring forth and maintain even a semblance of cooperation, to say nothing of equality. As long as jealousy, desire for office or authority has place in men's hearts they can not maintain equal conditions. "Put your trust in that spirit which leadeth to do good; yea, to do justly."—Doctrine and Covenants 10: 6. "Sustain and uphold each other in peace." Any other principle is a pride of life, destructive of equality or Zionite conditions. "For if ye will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world, you must prepare yourselves by doing the things which I have commanded you and required of you."—Ibid. 77: 1.

Now what is the order of our preparation, but that we first put on Christ, purify our hearts and bring forth fruit and work meet for the kingdom. This we can do to-day in our own homes. "To-day, if you will hear, harden not your hearts." Let us be careful lest in the day of our peace we esteem lightly the Lord's counsel, (Ibid. 98: 3,) and wander away from the light. Let us beware of those who promise liberty, but are themselves "the servants of corruption" (2 Peter 2: 18-20), lest they spoil us with their philosophy and vain deceits.

Are we not a people who acknowledge Jesus Christ as absolute King? If so, we can not at any time or place accept the divorcement of church and state as regards our own personal understanding. We submit only under commandment of Him who says, "Suffer it to be so now. Be subject unto the powers until he comes whose right it is to reign." There shall be no state; it is temporal, transitory.

We are admonished to befriend and support the law of the land which is constitutional, and to seek out and uphold good men in office. Is Socialism seeking to put good men in office? Who are good men? It is said, "there is none good save God"; therefore no man who does not profess God and obey God has even the beginnings of goodness. And such most assuredly lacks wisdom, for the "fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom," and lacks judgment, for we are warned not to go to law before ungodly men; rather to suffer loss and even to be defrauded. (1 Corinthians 6: 1-8.) Some one may recall section 42, Doctrine and Covenants, but notice this difference: we are not to go to law, we are to deliver to the law those who disobey the civil law under which we may be living.

Now we know that none of the leaders of Socialism acknowledge God at all, and that the majority of them, especially in the foreign societies, are Freemasons. That the inner workings of Socialism are known only to those who hold a red card of good standing and paid up dues. No one else can vote in their "political" meetings. No one else is eligible to nomination for office. We may vote for Socialism, but of the inner workings of Socialism we are no more aware than they are of the operations of the Holy Spirit. Socialism sprang from anarchy, from the robber and brigand bands of the eastern countries, is allied with the secret combinations of the East; unfurls the same red flag, and would proclaim every man (who belongs to Socialism) his own master under the guise of "brotherhood." There are to be no employees, and no employers, and no state employment. Where would the negro, the Indian, and the incompetent come in? That there is a great army of incompetents (in business and laboring sense) in this world, can not be gainsaid.

"It is my will that my people should claim, and hold claim, upon that which I have appointed unto them."—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 13. Is this not plain teaching that Zion shall purchase, own, hold, and control her own land? Is not the Order of Enoch to buy lands? Shall we buy them and then vote for a power that seeks to take all title from land; turn our lands into the hands of the government, of the world, by the world, for the world?

I am well aware that at this point Socialists will disclaim the word "government." But it is idle talk, for even a well appointed family must have a manager, a leader, a director; how much more a heterogeneous nation of ninety million souls. If title to the land should rest wholly in possession and use, you have still human nature with its craftiness, Satan himself, and secret combinations to deal with; and when the leaders take counsel together your ground might be very desirable, say for "public improvements."

Moreover, is church property private property? If we are permitted to build up our church, and gather property in the name of the church, so can any other church organization, or trust, and soon there will be wealthy combinations just as there are now, and human nature still with its heart full of evil imaginations. The weapons of our warfare cast down evil imaginations, and bring every thought to the obedience of Christ (2 Corinthians 10:4, 5).

At one time, secret societies were safely entrenched within the church, and to them should be credited the inquisitions, tortures, and wholesale persecutions. But the church bears the blame, "by reason of which the way of truth is evil spoken of." But when the times and seasons were fulfilled and the time of the restitution of all things at hand, the church pronounced anathema on secret organizations and all their ramifications. Now they turn their attention to false education and politics to obtain power, with the ulterior motive and inner view (continually cropping out) of wiping out Christianity. Some of them profess a belief in a God but not in Jesus Christ. The Jews and all secret societies readily affiliate with them. Shall we vote for such a power as that? Better not vote? "Let the dead bury the dead. Follow thou me." In other words, leave the world to work out its own problems, for the mystery of iniquity doth now work and must work until it proves its own futility.

What part hath righteousness with mammon, or Christ with Belial. Have we forgotten that Satan is the Prince of this world, politically, socially, religiously, in all those organizations or societies, whether secret or public, that deny our Lord Jesus Christ? Do they not, Socialism especially, say to him in effect: What have we to do with Thee? Two thousand years have passed and the world is as it was in the days of our fathers. Where is the promise? Behold the mind of man has conceived the highest type of government: Now we will bring to pass what Christianity has failed to do.

Doctrine and Covenants, section 95, paragraph 2, says, speaking in regard to befriending the "laws of the land," and "as pertaining to the law of man, whatsoever is more or less than these, cometh of evil." If the principles of Socialism are not "more or less than these" why are Socialists not searching out good men to administer this government? If they are "more or less than these" what have we to do with Socialism?

Now, shall we look to the world for the future of our ideals? May we not well say, in paraphrase of Joseph Smith, the Prophet: "Shall we who have had visions of God's eternal principles applied to a community founded on the Rock, return now (even to assist) a worldly system founded on the shifting sands of economics."

Had we not better remember that the object of this world's prince, even Satan, is to develop a kingdom so closely imitating the millennium that if it were possible it might deceive the very elect? Socialism is a very attractive imitation, but is building on the false foundation of human equality in the things of time, instead of on the Rock, Christ Jesus, spiritual equality, or the equality of service, with an eye single to the glory of God.

Socialism claims to seek (by bringing about human or worldly equality, under the sophistry of words containing the theory of brotherhood of man) to bring forth brotherly love with its fruits, instead of seeking first God and his righteousness, whose fruit is brotherly love, which, united with man's good will, put into action, brings about equality. Hence the saying, "Unless ye are equal in temporal things, ye can not be equal in obtaining spiritual things," that man may be moved to put his good will into action and bring to pass much righteousness, or justice, or, "Peace on earth, to men of good will."—Douay Translation.

All such movements, isms, and philosophies, as Socialism, Christian Science, and practical Theosophy, are but the attempts of the powers of darkness to bring forth an imitation of the kingdom of heaven. Not one of them acknowledges Jesus Christ as King or Lord, in even a spiritual sense, much less in his threefold power and authority, of forgiveness of sins, resurrection of the body, and the rewards of life eternal.

One of the marks of the evil powers coming forth in the last days is that women and children shall rule over "my people" and oppress them. Isaiah 3:5, 12 and 4:1, 2. Under Socialism women are eligible to any office, and does not youth have preference over age? We are instructed to submit, but warned not to be partakers.

Section 102, Doctrine and Covenants, paragraphs 9 and 10, also 7, make it quite plain that we are to remain an unknown people, among aliens, purchasing the lands of Zion, until "my army become very great, and let it be sanctified before me, . . . and let those commandments which I have given concerning Zion and her law, be executed and fulfilled after her redemption."

We are to bring forth fruit in humility, in quietness and confidence, that the places you and I occupy shall shine as Zion (in the Lord's sight) which begins with washing the dishes or chopping the wood, speaking to the dog or milking the cow, for he that is faithful in little shall acquire the ability to be ruler over much. How often are we warned to uphold our officers by our prayers, to respect their authority, and to assist them in redeeming the land of Zion!

I can not close more fittingly than to repeat my first proposition; that first, last, and all the time, Socialism inverts God's plan and then leaves God out of the plan altogether. And "against none is his wrath kindled except those who will not acknowledge his hand in all things." Shall we vote for such a power as that? Would that not be returning to the beggarly elements of the world? The Lord has not asked us to seek riches for him or his church, "whether it be much or little, I care not," but, "seek ye earnestly the riches of eternity"; and beware of those who seek not earnestly the riches of eternity.

Has the mission of Jesus Christ been sleeping all these centuries? No, verily, "To-day" has always been, is now, and ever shall be "the day of salvation." But we, as laborers, called forth in this last hour, have a special work, to redeem the land of Zion, not to assist worldly governments or systems.

Shall Zion be redeemed? Our time, our hearts, our thoughts, our talents, our moneys belong to Zion. Shall we observe this day of sacrifice, and be of one heart and soul in our Lord Jesus Christ?

HARRIET M. SMITH.

"Peace is the dream of the race; dispeace is the experience of the race. For a few years men long for happiness, and perhaps achieve it; for ever they are longing for rest. The world can not give it with all its good gifts; for it belongs to a region which the world can not reach. The world can give you pleasure; it can not give you joy. The world can give you distractions; it can not give you peace. These better things are states of the heart, inward gifts, the water of a fountain that springs up from within, conditions of the soul. To win true peace a man needs to have his soul satisfied; and no earthly gift can bring that."

Sir Oliver Lodge, one of the foremost living scientists, declared in a recent address that physical death does not mean annihilation and it does not necessarily include the soul.

Daughters of Zion Reading for March.

A STORY FOR IMPETUOUS FATHERS.

As a young man I was often reminded of the commandment to obey my parents, both at home and at Sunday school, as well as from the church pulpit, and boy like I frequently resented what the commandment called for in my case; for although my father,—who held the reins of domestic government—was entirely devoted to the welfare of his family, he was impetuous, headstrong, and sometimes a little domineering. There were dreadful moments when my fierce resentment of his despotic authority leaned dangerously near to hatred.

One unforgettable morning, when my father relentlessly overthrew my reckless but long cherished plans in a fit of what seemed to me sheer personal rage, I was driven to the wall, so to speak, for I was completely at his mercy. His displeasure took the form of stern ridicule as he stood before me with heated face and angry eyes commanding me to do an utterly humiliating thing. Again I heard that oft repeated command, "Children, obey your parents." I was hurt to the quick, angry, defiant, and as bitter as a boy of twelve could possibly be. At the very highest tension of the scene, our good, gray, hired man passed on some industrious errand and paused for one solemn moment to quote gravely, "Parents, provoke not your children to anger, lest they be discouraged."

The light in my father's eyes leaped into brighter flame, it seemed to me, as if he resented the servant's interference, then the flame went out and the angry redness faded from his face as he removed his hat and said in tones that I shall never forget, "My son, I beg your forgiveness."

All the pent-up rage and injustice went from my hot heart in an instant. I wondered breathlessly how I could ever have cherished a moment's irritation against my good, lovable father. I was ashamed, sorry, speechless as I laid my trembling hand in the one that guided me so faithfully and tenderly to the borderland of manhood.

A great many crowded years have gone by since that hour, and my father and the good gray monitor of peace have long slept in their quiet graves, but that moment still lives in my heart. I knew then that there would never again be a shadow between my father and me, and there never was; for although our wills clashed many times, the friction was always on the outside; within, there was an unshakable confidence that all was well between us.

I have heard a great deal about "breaking a child's will and forcing obedience," but very little about the parental command, "Provoke not your children to anger." Men that I have known intimately—good men, as the phrase goes—have hopelessly estranged their children—especially their sons—by a reckless abuse of their authority. Hot tempered, undisciplined in spirit, they have abused their positions by giving way to the moment's irritability, by flinging a rough taunt at the boy whose misguided but painstaking effort needed pa-mental attention and patience. Crude as the childish judgment seems to the adult mind, it is infallible in one instance—in the discernment of injustice and deceit. The bitter sense of personal injury resulting from unjustly enforced authority slowly turns to poison which permeates and blights the finest traits of childhood unless some marvelous grace of sweetness intervenes to check the deadly process.

Parents who complain of filial ingratitude, indifference, or neglect should examine all that went before the bitter change from early affection to adult coldness. What if they have lavished money and time and glitter on the child who turned from them in his final choice between home and the world's bright lure? All those things are as tinkling cymbals without the grace of sacrifice. Self-effacement, restraint, patience and the love that suffers annoyance and worry and endless trivial demands of childhood without complaint—these are the imperishable riches that parents lay up for themselves. Although maturity and outside influence may cause the indifferent child to honor his parents outwardly, the poison of his defrauded youth will never be quite obliterated. The children of unfaithful parents will not rise up and call them blessed—not though the world's benefits were showered upon them.

As we grow older and look deeply into the things of the soul, we realize more and more the unwavering justice of God's laws. How equally has been put within the reach of everyone, lowly and great, the power to attain true happiness by perfect obedience to the spiritual laws that have been revealed to us. Though I am poor and obscure, it is given me to bestow upon my children a kingly heritage which time and change and the world's dark blight can not mar. This treasure, which kings can not buy, must be paid for in the coin of sincerity, kindness, patience, and, above all, sacrifice—the sacrifice of my love of authority, indolent moods, sharp words, and selfish instincts. As we sow in love, so shall we reap even in the hearts of our children, and example is more potent than precept. "Fathers, provoke not your children to anger lest they be discouraged."—The Circle.

Questions on March Reading.

What care should parents use in giving commands to their children? Where was the need of training most plainly manifest in the two dispositions portrayed? How should the parent regard the plans of his child? What is your opinion of ridicule as employed by this father? While some things might appear to the child to be humiliating that were really best for him, should a parent ever seek to humiliate his child? Should scripture teaching ever be flung at a child in anger? How do you regard the reproof of the gardener? What do you see that is commendable in the action of the father? What was the effect upon the boy? How may a frank admission of a fault on the part of a parent affect the life of a child? Of what is a clash of wills between parent and child an indication? How should the will of the parent be exercised for the good of the child? Is "breaking a child's will" a thing to be desired? Why not? Why is "Provoke not your children to anger" a wise command? What is a great cause of estrangement between fathers and sons? How should authority be regarded? What may be said of a child's discernment of injustice? How should parents avoid giving to their children a sense of personal injury? How should parents examine themselves? Can temporal benefits bestowed on the child make up for the lack of sympathy and confidence? How may parents lay up for themselves imperishable riches in the training of their children? In this respect how do rich and poor share alike? To attain this what must be sacrificed? What will be the reaping to those who heed the command "Fathers, provoke not your children to anger?"

Special Request for Prayer.

Bro. J. R. Allen, of Roslyn, Washington, requests the prayers of the Prayer Union that his eyes may be healed and and his sight be preserved. Brother Allen also says that he will be glad to distribute any of our church papers or literature any of the Saints may be willing to send him.

Letter Department

FREMONT, NEBRASKA, February, 1911.

Dear Saints: I have been a Saint only a little more than a year. During the latter part of December, 1910, I visited relatives at London, Lancaster, and South Perry, Ohio, the latter place being my boyhood home. They had just closed a revival meeting at South Perry, held by the Methodist Church, of which one of my brothers and an uncle are leading members. There were eighty-five conversions. Their method was altar services where they kneel from night to night and call on the Lord to forgive their sins.

When I was about twenty years of age, after attending the altar at one of these meetings, I received what to me was an answer to prayer while plowing in the field. I had been praying for some time and one afternoon while at work I prayed earnestly for the Lord to forgive my sins, and asked that I might receive an evidence that they were forgiven before sunset. When the sun was yet about one half hour high, I felt an unnatural coolness come over my breast and felt something hit me in the breast. On looking to see what struck me, I was unable to see anything. I thought it was in answer to my prayer and immediately it was repeated twice, which I accepted beyond doubt as an answer to my prayer. But I soon turned again to the service of Satan and the pleasures of this world, and lived therein until it pleased the Lord to again call me from my sins, but in a very different manner, and to direct me by his Holy Spirit into the true church of Christ, where I can receive the spiritual blessings that it pleases the Lord to give those who comply with his law, and live in truth and righteousness before him.

My reason for writing at this time, is to get this matter before you, and to ask all who read this letter to pray earnestly that all who are living in the best light they have may be brought into the light that we are permitted to walk in. They are just as sincere in their service to God as we, and might be classed as Apollos, before Aquila and Priscilla expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly.

I left some tracts and two copies of the Book of Mormon Vindicated with my people. They promised to investigate the work and had commenced to read before I left them. When I first introduced it, some of them were very much amused, and some thought I had gone wrong entirely; but I had talked only a little while when they felt altogether different about it. I would be glad to have the missionary in charge of that district to visit them at South Perry, and enlighten them in the work.

Will be glad to have any of the missionaries or Saints that pass through Fremont, call on us, as we are alone here, there being no other Saints located at this place.

Yours in bonds,
OTIS GARDNER.

CLARKSON, ONTARIO, February 12, 1911.

Dear Editors: I feel, after perusing the good reading in HERALD and other church papers, that I am very unworthy of the name that I have taken upon me. I love the work of this church and realize it is the work of the Lord. I am young in faith. I was baptized in Hamilton Branch along with my father and mother. I am the only member of the Saints' Church here; none nearer than Toronto. I feel lost with no church or meetings to go to, but have my Bible and church books to study. Pray for us all. My husband is not in the work as yet. Would be pleased to receive letters from any of the Saints. Ever praying for this good and beautiful gospel of Jesus Christ, I am,

Yours in the true gospel,
MRS. H. NORGROVE.

ADAMSON, OKLAHOMA, February 12, 1911.

Dear Herald: This is a place where there was once a branch of Saints. Elder Peter Adamson was founder of the town, by developing the coal mining industry here. Only a few faithful Saints remain now, and they have united with the Wilburton Branch. Elder Hull did some good work while he was here as foreman of one of the mines.

The work is pretty well understood here, but persecution has never ceased. Elder J. M. Simmons held a discussion here with the Baptist pastor last summer. The truth was well defended. The only way that some now fight the truth is to stay away from the services. Elder W. T. Peacock, of Wilburton, and the writer have been trying to hold the fort for the past two months, with the assistance of Elders Harder, Rudd, and Simmons. On last Sunday night the writer gave a lecture on the latter day apostasy to a crowded house; good interest was manifested.

The Baptists here are beginning to preach that there was an apostasy of the church, also the apostasy of individuals of the church. The writer heard the Reverend Hale of that church say recently that the church (Baptist) was suffering the greatest apostasy since the days of Christ, except the apostasy of Roman Catholicism, and that the members that were the children of God were apostatizing by going to other churches, or falling back into the world. According to this, they are laying aside the doctrine of "once in grace always in grace." He also made a statement corroborating the principle of present revelation. Thus we see our religious friends coming to a knowledge of the truth.

I see a complimentary notice in recent HERALD of the poems of Alexander Lawrence Posey. I have never seen his poems, but am personally acquainted with his mother, brothers, and sisters, and his wife and family. Have lived neighbor to them all, but only knew him through them. He was editor of a paper in Oklahoma, till his death, which occurred by drowning in the Canadian River in June, 1908. He was esteemed as a leader among the Indians and Gentiles. I was also acquainted with Crazy Snake, the subject of one of his poems. The band was not broken until the year 1909, and Crazy Snake was never captured, and is still at large, his whereabouts not known.

The writer introduced the gospel story to Posey's brothers and sisters. It was from his old home that I last wrote to the HERALD. Would be glad if some of the elders would make that point while going up and down the Katy railroad. There are many friends to the cause there.

As to temporal things, Oklahoma is having a famine for water. It has not rained since last June. Everything looks gloomy at present. Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, I ask your prayers that my efforts may not be in vain.

If any person of my name happens to read this, please write me, as I wish to correspond.

C. C. CHRISMAN.

AYLBURTON, LYDNEY, ENGLAND, February 1, 1911.

Editors Herald: I have recently been doing a little labor at Exeter and Plymouth, in the Master's cause. The Exeter Branch is in good condition and has the foundation for a larger branch, if they use a little push now and then. This branch is officered by Elders H. Wilson, S. Ireland, and Priest Y. Nicholls, and all are men of integrity. Would that we had more like them. The brethren and sisters there know how to make the missionary feel at home.

At Plymouth we have a faithful few, out of about two dozen on record. I visited all of the members except two. We are hopeful of reestablishing the work there in the near future. Bro. Arthur Riddolls, now in Independence, is missed much by all. Your writer felt sort of lost without him on this occasion. Brn. William Newton and F. J. Pierce are still well spoken of in these regions.

The Saints at Plymouth did their best to make my sojourn pleasant. They, with myself, feel to deplore conditions that obtain there. Sisters Riddolls and Mitchell are our oldest Saints in that place. Sister Mitchell, I am sorry to say, is nearing the end—has suffered much in body, together with the fact that their daughter and only child has been at the mental hospital for over twelve years.

Brother Mitchell, the veteran marine, in imagination is still scaling the walls of the city of Canton and making any amount of bull's eyes. His sight is weak, although otherwise he is as nimble as a boy. Brn. J. W. Rushton, F. G. Pierce and others must smile when I say that the old brother told me, "If I had my sight I would run any man my age ten miles."

The Saints at Gloucester are opening a meeting place at Westgate street on February 5. Whilst at Lydney for some months we have had an empty church, conditions the details of which are unwise to state here have made it so. Unfaithfulness on the part of our men folks at Lydney is the underlying cause, but we are struggling to exist.

Yours in Christ,
THOMAS JONES.

BOURBON, MISSOURI, February 10, 1911.

Dear Saints and Friends: As I read the many letters and testimonies in the dear old HERALD and Ensign I have a longing to also give mine. I know this is the true work of God. I was isolated from church privileges and for eighteen years I did not hear a gospel sermon. I grew careless and indifferent and did many things I ought not to have done, but I now know God was watching over me. There came a time when I realized my carelessness and became uneasy, for I felt as if I were lost. God had withdrawn his Spirit, and if I had known how in olden times they used sackcloth and ashes, I surely would have used it then. I returned to God fasting and praying, and I wrestled in prayer until it was revealed to me that God had a work for me to do, and that he had a people in our neighborhood. How I did wonder who they were!

Three years ago Elder Henry Sparling wrote us he would come and hold meeting. We got the schoolhouse for him. He had good crowds and they all seemed interested. He baptized two of my family. In a short time Elder Jesse Paxton wrote to us, stating he would be here at a certain time. At that very date I had engaged to stay with one of our neighbors, a Mr. Barton, who needed help and a nurse. I did not know what to do. I wanted to do my duty to the church and I wanted to make my word good. I was almost bewildered, but finally, thinking it was God's work, the thought came forcibly to me to ask him about the matter. I did so, pleading with the One who knew my heart. On the following day, I was told three times, Go to Barton's. At last I started to go, and just before I reached their house these words crowded themselves in my mouth until I spoke them aloud, "Well, have you come; just at the very time you were needed and was not sent for!" To my surprise Mrs. Barton repeated every word that had thus been forced into my mind before I came. I nursed my patient and returned home with money that I prayed for to help along God's work; for we are poor.

Later, when I had saved a little money for tithing, there came a call for money in the church papers, and I thought I would just send that, as it was such a small amount. Again I asked God what I should do; and again I heard that same voice saying that I had no right to give a freewill offering to him to whom I owed a debt.

I would like to say to my dear, isolated brothers and sisters, Do not idle your time away. There is a grand work for us all to do. If you are indifferent, wake up. "Call on the Lord in mighty prayer, that he will Zion's bondage break, and bring to naught the fowler's snare."

Brother Paxton came and preached two weeks and baptized twenty-one. He came later and baptized one, and Brother Sparling baptized two. Last fall Elders Paxton and Dowker came and preached about a week and baptized ten. So, dear Saints, you see I begin to see who the Lord's people are by this time. We have one elder, one priest, and one teacher, and there are young men in our branch who have been told if they live faithfully they will be called to the ministry. Once I was isolated; now I have church privileges, for which I humbly thank God. To him to whom it belongs we give all the glory and honor.

Your sister in the one grand cause,
C. T. WHITESIDE.

PLYMOUTH, MASSACHUSETTS, February 9, 1911.

Editors Herald: I firmly believe the work is divine. That knowledge came to me through the operation of the Holy Spirit, and I can truly say that I am ready to defend it, and do not intend that the truth shall lose anything through my carelessness. I believe that we ought to study to show ourselves approved of God, and I believe if we come to our divine Teacher and partake of the same Spirit that actuated him, we would become acquainted with his work, for his Spirit will disclose to our understanding the truth that the Master taught.

I have preached a few times to a people that believed that it is possible to know the day that Jesus will make his appearance. I had a great desire to rectify that mistake and came so much against their preconceived ideas that all the argument that they could make was: "We do not want any of Joseph Smith's doctrine or the Book of Mormon." The pastor wrote me a letter that he had consulted his congregation and this was their decision. In reply, I told him that he was not fighting Joseph Smith or the Book of Mormon, but he was fighting Jesus Christ and the Bible. I told him he was like the other in Bible times who could not find any fault in the message of John the Baptist but they must have an excuse: "He hath a devil." And when Jesus came they must have an excuse: "Behold a gluttonous man and a wine-bibber." I asked them, if I say the truth why will you not believe me? I told this minister that I wanted him to read the letter before his congregation. I was in hopes to hear from him soon, but have not heard anything yet.

I have no intention to boast, but I am in the aggressive spirit and can not help it. I have no desire to be harsh or vehement, but I am anxious to tell people that this work is of God. I enjoy the reading of the HERALD and the Ensign, and all of the church papers, and am in hopes to have my work so well done that I can feel the whispering of the Spirit, Well done. May our dear President be with us for many years if it can be so in harmony with the will of God. May the Lord direct the work through him, is my prayer.

Your brother in the one faith,
N. R. NICKERSON.

The Cosmopolitan, Anti-Mormon.

In the March number of the Cosmopolitan, under the caption of "Mormonism the viper on the hearth," by Alfred Henry Lewis, there begins a serial containing a bitter and indiscriminate attack on Mormonism. The effort is especially directed against the Utah or Brighamite Mormons and polygamy, but the name of Joseph Smith is freely associated with that of Brigham Young and polygamy. All illustrations are adorned with the likeness of huge serpents. Pictures of Joseph Smith, his mother Lucy Smith, the house in which the Book of Mormon was translated, and a page of the Book of Mormon manuscript are given, all embellished with the serpent settings.

Mr. Lewis in starting out manifests such a reckless disregard for facts that have been, and are still being prominently set forth in vindication of the name and honor of Joseph Smith that we can readily discern that there is still a determined effort being made to have the public believe that the status of Utah Mormonism is the status of Mormonism in its entirety.

In the Magazine Shop Talk department, Mr. Edwin Markham says: "The Book of Mormon was a successful literary steal and hoax," and then, of course, proceeds to revive the old Spalding Manuscript story. Why is it, we wonder, that men professing literary attainments, and who assume to enlighten the public on any question, will ignore facts, and accept fabrication instead?

If we are not heard in defense of the true side of Mormonism through the Cosmopolitan, it will be because we are denied. In the meantime we shall see how Mr. Lewis proceeds.

News From Missions

Southern Missouri.

Editors Herald: A few lines from the land of the big red apple. I have just come home from Brandsville, Missouri, where I acted as moderator for Bro. A. M. Baker in a twelve session debate with Elder Joe Blue, of Campbellite fame. Brother Baker won friends for the latter day work from the first, and did nicely in showing the harmony between the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and the church of the New Testament.

Campbellism went down with a crash when the disputants reached Blue's proposition. Blue never came this side of Pentecost for anything. The people waited in vain for him to set up his church as "The Church of Christ of which I, Joe H. Blue, am a member." However, Brother Baker gave them a treat at last, showing them the Campbellite Church from a chart.

Brandsville is the place where a few years ago a Campbellite preacher got mad at the writer, and cursed him outright, threatened his life, and tried to get a gun to kill him. But this debate has killed Campbellism there, with that faithful gun of the true gospel preacher. There are many calls now to come there, and preach. So may the good work go on.

There are lots of nice homes in southern Missouri for those who have a little money to buy them. We are "in the regions round about," and would like to welcome any and all who are looking Zionward. I have been doing missionary work in these parts for ten years, and I think that I can safely say, there are fine chances for "homeseekers" in this country.

The gospel is onward in southern Missouri and honest souls are obeying the voice of the Good Shepherd. May the Lord hasten the time when from every hilltop and valley there may come the sound of the songster of Zion, until the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdoms of our God and his Christ.

In gospel bonds,
J. T. DAVIS.

THAYER, MISSOURI, February 6, 1911.

Texas.

I have just returned home from the southwestern part of this State; visited Orelia and preached ten days. We have only three Saints there; one of them was baptized at this visit. Their godly lives have made the name of a Latter Day Saint honorable in their neighborhood. It is pleasant indeed to present the angel message where our people have held the high standard of morals to which all Latter Day Saints should subscribe.

I also visited Pearsall, where I sounded the angel message four years ago, for the first time it was ever heard in that neighborhood. My preaching did not sound just right to some, and a debate was soon called for, which was held by Elder S. S. Smith and a Mr. Simmons of the Christian Church. Our work was well cared for and ably defended and friends made for the cause. Since that time Elders John Harp and W. M. Aylor have assisted in those parts, and we have baptized to the present, twenty-one; many others are near the kingdom. On the first Sunday in October we organized a Sunday school at the above place, with Mr. Walter Wolf acting as superintendent. We are glad to say we find the school doing nicely.

Our district conference will convene to-night with the Second San Antonio Branch. Texas is a ripe field, and the laborers are few. Let us pray, Saints, that the Lord will send more reapers; but let us remember that he will not send more than we are willing to sustain. Let us pay our tithes and offerings, so that the gospel may reach the homes of others and bring the peace and consolation to them that it has brought to us. Do not forget that some one made a sacrifice that the gospel might reach you. I am glad, however, that the Texas District made a better showing this year than ever before in the history of the district. Ever praying for the redemption of Zion and the gathering of his people, I am,

Your brother,
D. S. PALMER.

News From Branches.

Centropolis, Missouri.

For the last six years we have had at different times preaching here in the eastern part of Kansas City, at and near Centropolis and Sheffield, in the Blue Valley. About nine months ago the Saints living in this vicinity decided to petition the proper authorities that we might be organized into a branch. Our request was complied with, and on the 29th day of May we were thus organized with forty members, of whom three were elders, one priest, one teacher, and one deacon.

We held our meetings in private houses for a while, but it did not work well. With the good wishes of the general bishopric and the stake bishopric for our welfare, they gave us permission to move the little church from the northeast bottom, which was unoccupied, up here. We bought three lots on the corner of Thirteenth street and Bennington avenue, one of the best sites in all this neighborhood. We now have the building moved on our lot and have remodeled and finished it, so that it is inviting to all of us and our friends.

Our meetings have been fair to good. On the first Sunday in this year our prayer meeting was more than good. God indeed was with us to bless, comfort, and encourage. The preaching has been by Elders E. L. Kelley, R. May, Arthur Gillen, B. J. Scott, H. L. Ashbaugh, M. Leeton, C. A. Selbe, W. S. Brown, F. C. Warnky, and our presiding elder, D. F. Winn.

I must not forget to mention that nearly all the labor was donated in repairing the building, also some material and fixtures in the house. The Cady-Olmstead Jewelry Company donated us a good clock, which is very much appreciated. Bro. and Sr. H. L. Ashbaugh volunteered to bring their piano in the church, to remain indefinitely. It seemed that everything needful was supplied, including the money to pay all the bills.

Now we are moving along all right with a flourishing Sunday school, with Sr. C. A. Selbe as superintendent, also a prosperous Religio with Bro. J. Cleveland in charge. The general condition of the branch is good and our future outlook is fine. We have arranged for a week's meetings beginning next Sunday, with Elder A. H. Parsons as speaker, to continue over two Sundays and longer if the interest demands.

When we organized, we called it the Centropolis Branch, but at our next business meeting we intend to ask our stake conference to change the name to Bennington Avenue Branch, because the present name is misleading. We are located nearly one mile west and two blocks north from Centropolis, on Bennington Heights. During the last month or more there has been a good deal of sickness with la grippe and bad colds.

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, 6223 East Fifteenth street.

London, Canada.

Sunday, February 5, was a day long to be remembered by the Saints here. The first Sunday of each month, sacrament Sunday, we look forward to with a good deal of pleasure. The day was a beautiful one, and the Saints assembled quite early. By 9.30 the church was well filled. Meeting opened on time with Apostle F. A. Smith, Elder Fligg, Elder Burger, and Elder Henley on the stand. Elders Smith and Burger came over from Saint Thomas the night before to be on time for the morning meeting. Brother Smith had charge. The Saints took right hold; no time was lost. Nearly all present availed themselves of the privilege of renewing their covenant with the Master, and they rejoiced in the association of God's people.

Many testimonies were given and prayers offered, during which three stood up and asked for baptism. The week previous, four of our prominent young men were called to the ministry, and Elder Smith called them forward for ordination. Frank Gray, superintendent of Sunday school, and one who has been very active and energetic in church work, was ordained an elder; James Winegarden, a very active worker in Religio, was ordained a priest; T. B. Richardson, who has been an ardent worker in the Sunday school, was ordained a priest; and Ace! Bagnel, who has been actively engaged in church work for years, was ordained a deacon. Elders Smith, Fligg, Burger, and Henley officiated in the ordinations. It was indeed a scene not to be forgotten, to witness these promising young men who had been associated with us in church work for years now moving forward to the call of the Master to greater possibilities than ever before, thus demonstrating the thought, often expressed, that our branch is a schoolhouse. Many men of the church have gone from our branch to fill some of the highest positions in the church, and the end is not yet.

The infant children of Brn. George and Hervert Talbot were blessed. At the close of the Sunday school in the afternoon the three who asked for baptism in the morning were baptized by Elder Smith. Before the evening service another who had been associated with the Saints for some time, was baptized by Priest Philippin. Thus ended a day that will long be cherished by the Saints. Wednesday, the 8th, Mrs. Blanchard and youngest son asked for baptism, making nine since Brother Smith started his work.

Elder F. A. Smith, who conducted special service here the past few weeks, has left for Saint Thomas. He won the hearts of the Saints, and his admonitions will be long remembered. We pray for his return to this mission again by General Conference.

The little son of Bro. and Sr. Harry Lott had a narrow escape from choking to death the other day. His father had to force his finger down the lad's throat to dislodge a piece of meat which had caught in his windpipe. Another moment and he would have been beyond all human aid. An epidemic of la grippe has been prevalent in the city the past month, and several of the Saints have fallen victims. Nothing serious, however.

Elder Arthur Allen, missionary from Michigan, one of the old-time members of our branch, occupied the stand yesterday morning and evening. He is making his way to Detroit.
W. A. HARDY.

Independence, Missouri.

On Sunday morning, January 1, about sixty were present at the early prayer meeting.

On the 15th, and for several days the streets and sidewalks were in such a condition that the general comment was that "the weather bureau must be given credit for smearing the cities over with a coating of the slipperiest ice seen in several years." But the Saints turned out when duty called, and a bump or two, to those who could skate, mattered not; but it was rather embarrassing to Brother DuBois, who fell with a baby in his arms, and to a few of the aged ones, like Brethren Foss and Reyner, who, we regret to say, were considerably injured.

The year's church services were begun by a stirring appeal, based on texts taken from Bible and the Doctrine and Covenants, by Bishop Richard Bullard, and the Saints here were, without fear or favor, admonished and exhorted in reference to their whole duty, spiritually and financially. His quotations were from Doctrine and Covenants 106 and 83, Joshua 13 and 14, Isaiah 58.

This effort of instruction to the Saints was followed by others, among them Mr. J. B. Ballman, of the Society for the Friendless who, in an interesting lecture, stated that during the last year five hundred ex-convicts had been helped and the general society had expended $12,742.14 for the benefit of prisoners who had been pardoned, paroled, or discharged. The Saints did their part in the way of a donation. On the 9th, at a priesthood meeting open to all, Bishop E. L. Kelley lectured on the subject of "The appellate court," and on the 17th Prof. H. S. Jones gave an illustrated lecture on "Yellowstone Park." Both lectures were highly beneficial to the Saints.

The usual services of morning and evening, conducted by Brethren Harrington, J. P. Curtis, Luff, Hilliard, E. L. Kelley, Parsons, Dowker, John Kaler, and W. H. Garrett have all been well attended and full of encouragement.

The Sunday school also, with its zealous workers, has been prolific of great good and spiritual enjoyment to both old and young. On the 8th its annual report was read, showing an average attendance of 814, with a total offering of $882.71; Christmas Offering was $398.56. The year 1911 is ushered in, by the Sunday school work here, with renewed interest on the part of both officers and teachers, the greater part of whom have succeeded themselves in their important calling as promoters of great and lasting good, among the young especially, and all newly elected ones have proved themselves efficient workers. Our beloved sister, Mrs. Tessie Smith, has been elected as superintendent of the first primary, a position to which she is signally fitted, and our faithful secretary, Sr. Zaide Rodger, has given up her arduous position, to be filled by Sr. Blanche Allen.

The annual meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society occurred on the 5th of January, at which after entertaining thirty-eight of its members with a sumptuous dinner, they elected their officers for the ensuing year. They are Mrs. H. O. Smith, Miss C. E. Briggs, Mrs. C. E. Guinand, and Mrs. Ella Whitehead.

The Daughters of Zion held their regular monthly meeting on that cold and unpropitious day, the 15th, and presented a most important feature of the latter day work—the social and domestic life. The subject discussed was "The fatherhood of to-day and the manhood of to-morrow," and it was a profitable hour, spent with Sr. B. C. Smith in the chair and Sr. Grace Krahl as secretary pro tem.

Beloved Saints, let us not forget the bereaved, the sick and afflicted ones, some of whom are at the Home and Sanitarium, and others in different places who have sent in requests for prayers.

"Let us clasp hands as we walk together,
And let us speak softly in low, sweet tones,
For no one knows on the morrow whether
We two pass on—or but one alone."

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 13.

The afternoon meeting yesterday at the Stone Church was somewhat depleted in attendance; many of the Saints having gathered at the Church of Christ on the Temple Lot on the occasion of the funeral obsequies of Pres. Richard Hill, who had peacefully passed away, having been actively engaged in his home church for forty years.

He lived to a ripe old age, being past his seventy-fourth year, and few men in Independence were better known or more loved and respected than "Uncle Hill." He was faithful and constant in his religious life, and though he did not live to see his fondest hopes realized, he has, like other aged pioneer men and women of this historic place, left behind the fragrant memory of praiseworthy deeds, and a virtuous and honorable life.

On Sunday, the 29th of January last, Mrs. George Frisby also was taken to her last resting place by a large number of her relatives and friends, having reached the seventy-second year of her age. She was the mother of twelve children and, like Richard Hill, a brother in her faith, she, at her obsequies received from their presiding elder, John R. Haldeman, the loving tribute due her life of devotion and faithfulness.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Atchison, Kansas.

Items from various parts of the vineyard are interesting. Here the gospel banner has been afloat for many years. The writer has been acquainted with this branch since early in the nineties, and there are a number yet here who are stayers from way back of the nineties. We might mention the Burnses, Bostons, Sister Chue, Sr. Elmira Miller, Sister Robertson, and last, but not least, the Spragues. Sister Sprague has been quite sick the greater part of the winter, and is now but slowly recovering.

Two new families were added by letter recently; namely, Fred Cool from Nevada, Missouri, and Archie Armstrong from Columbus, Kansas. Since locating here the former was called, ordained, and chosen presiding elder; the latter to the office of presiding priest. These brethren will prove to be valuable adjuncts to the branch, we believe, because they are pushers in all the departments.

Brother Armstrong had a narrow escape in an explosion that occurred a month ago in the building where he worked, but through administration he was immediately restored, for which we all rejoice in the loving-kindness of our Father.

We need hardly mention the name of our field worker, Sr. Flo McNichols. Her untiring efforts are certainly appreciated all over the State, and glorious will be her reward in the end, if faithful. The Saints feel that a new era has dawned for the work here, and it is contemplated ere long to purchase the Christian Science building, down town, for a more attractive and useful place to worship in. This will mean a big outlay, of course, but as the old saying goes, "Nothing venture, nothing have." So with a steady pull a wonderful work may yet be accomplished at Atchison. With the aid of kind friends here and elsewhere a glad surprise may be in store for the whole State of Kansas.

Bro. and Sr. Hiram Parker, from Netawaka, Kansas, are now welcome residents here. Also Sister Lentz and daughter Florence are enrolled from Des Moines, Iowa. Srs. Elmira Miller and Ethel Bays, after several months' absence, are back again like doves to the home nest. They will be given plenty to do, so that it can not be said of them:

"Oh, reapers of life's harvest,
Why stand with rusted blade
Until the night draws round you,
And day begins to fade?"

Why stand ye idle, waiting
For reapers more to come,
The golden morn is coming,
Why sit ye idle, dumb?"

Bay Minette, Alabama.

A few lines from here might be acceptable and strengthening to some of the Saints who were formerly members of this branch. We regret to say that on account of the Saints not doing their duty, this branch was for some time very nearly dead. But for the last year we are pleased to note a decided improvement, largely due to the labors of the worthy missionaries, J. W. Peterson and F. M. Slover.

Brother Peterson was with us for a while in November, baptizing five, among them the writer. Shortly after he was called home on account of the serious illness of his little girl, whom we recently learned is improving. We are hoping Brother Peterson will be sent here for another year.

We have been strengthened of late by some very able sermons by Bro. F. M. Slover. His efforts to advance the work seem untiring. Without detracting anything from the labors of the others, we feel safe in saying that he has accomplished more, and especially in this branch, than any who have been here heretofore. The Saints are trusting that when the missionaries' appointments are read, that Bro. F. M. Slover will be again assigned to the Southwestern Mission.

Bro. Jason Booker has lately been ordained to the office of teacher, and the writer to the office of priest. As there is much to do, we are working together, and trying to get the gospel before the people as much as possible. The Spirit is with us in our labors, and already we are glad to note some improvement. We now have regular prayer and testimony meetings, and the Spirit is with us on every occasion.

Last night the writer occupied, for the first time, before a small assembly of Saints and friends. Some are convinced and will no doubt accept ere long. We read with pleasure the success of Brethren Pitt and Griffiths in Palestine. For fear

Brother Kelley will call our letter the "dross" we close. Ever praying for the advancement of the angel's message and the welfare of Zion,
Your brother in the one faith,
FEBRUARY 11, 1911. ALBERT E. WARR.

Theodore, Alabama.

Your pages are precious because they bring us good spiritual food. When we scan them over we have to stop and ask ourselves the question, Why don't we see more from those who have labored in this part of the land. I guess they have too much to do. We often think of them, anyway, and remember the good counsel and advice they have given us.

The Theodore Branch was organized September 11, 1894, by Bro. M. M. Turpen, with about twenty members, and it has gradually grown until now we have a membership of nearly one hundred, with some still coming in. Our president, Bro. W. L. Booker, has been a faithful shepherd. He has always been at the post of duty doing everything he could for the betterment of those under his care. We feel sad when we think he is about to leave us for the State of Missouri. We will miss the good counsel and encouragement that he has always tried to give us. The thought comes to us that we can not be together always in this life, but if we are true and faithful the time will come that we will meet to part no more.

We feel encouraged in this great latter day work, because it has been a source of strength to us. Though I am the only one in my father's family that has accepted the gospel, I hope and trust the time will come that they will see their way clear to obey the truth.

We have had Brother Slover with us of late, and we certainly did enjoy the sermons he preached. We were sorry he could not stay longer. One was baptized on the 5th and there will be six or seven more next Sunday. That the gospel may spread and the honest ones be gathered into the church is my prayer.

FRANK STINER.

Johnson, L. B. Moore, G. M. Jamison, W. E. Shakespeare, Jacob Waltenbaugh, H. N. Snively, W. T. Shakespeare, A. L. Keen, Nephi Lovell, R. M. Elvin. Bro. E. D. Moore was ordained to the office of elder and Brn. Cyril E. Wight and Ernest Haskins were ordained to the office of priest. By motion and vote the Ellston Branch was disorganized and the organization of two new branches was provided for, one at Andover, Missouri, the other at Ward, Iowa. Bro. R. V. Hopkins (absent) was recommended for ordination to the office of elder. Bro. L. A. Gould was released as secretary and member of the stake high council. Sr. Lucy L. Resseguie was elected to succeed herself as member of the library board. It was voted to hold the next conference at Hiteman, Iowa, at the call of the presidency. Elder R. M. Elvin was elected as member of the auditing committee. Preaching services were held as follows: February 11, 7.30 p. m., preaching by Elder Amos Berve. February 12, preaching by Bishop E. L. Kelley, and by E. A. Smith. One hundred and twelve members were selected as delegates to General Conference, the total membership in the stake being 2,819. Moved that in case of division those present be authorized and instructed to cast the majority and minority vote. Carried. H. H. Gold, secretary of Lamoni Stake.

Will the following named brethren please forward their addresses as soon as possible: O. R. Miller, J. A. Davis, J. T. Davis, J. W. Davis, E. F. Robertson, James E. Kelley, G. J. Brookover, Jasper O. Dutton, Joseph W. Smith, Rees Jenkins, and W. E. Haden. R. W. FARRELL.

8 BARTLETT STREET, SOMERVILLE, MASSACHUSETTS.

Look Out for Them.

Two young men, claiming to be converts of Bro. C. C. Joehnk in Switzerland, applied to me for help. I gave them some, and referred them to Bro. F. W. Wilde, a good, generous-hearted German brother from whom they borrowed money, promising to pay, but failed to meet their promise. They otherwise misrepresented as to their rooming place. We can not find them. One gave his name as Edgar Waldon. They are cousins. One can not talk English. Don't let them starve, but be careful how you trust them.

Deaths.

FIGUEREDO.—Manuel Figueredo was born November 2, 1843, at San Miguel, Portugal. Died January 26, 1911, at Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, after a lingering illness. Bro. Figueredo was originally a Catholic but accepted the restored gospel July 31, 1910. He leaves a wife, three sons and a daughter, together with many friends, to mourn their loss. Services in charge of Elder M. A. McConley. Interment at Pearl City Cemetery.

SCHOFIELD.—Mary Catherine McLennan Schofield was born October 16, 1856, at Cape Britton, Nova Scotia; died February 6, 1911. Was married to James S. Schofield, May 10, 1879, Ripley, Ontario. Four daughters, with their father, remain to mourn. Was baptized January 10, 1899, in Buffalo, New York, and lived a constant Christian life. The funeral took place from the family residence in Buffalo, New York, February 9, under the conduct of Elder H. O. Smith, who also preached the sermon. The traveling ministry will remember Sister Schofield. The man who came with the message of peace was very welcome. She suffered for years, and especially the last year of her life.

REDFIELD.—Hendrick O. Redfield was born at Kelinworth, Connecticut, August 3, 1857. Died near Knobnoster, Missouri, January 31, 1911. Was married to Harriet L. Lambert, February 3, 1882. The family were all present at death. Baptized July 13, 1881. Leaves wife, nine children, one grandchild, two brothers and two sisters to mourn. Was a devoted Saint and kind husband and father. Funeral February 2, 1911, at Saints' church, Knobnoster, Elder J. E. Bozarth in charge. Sermon by Eli Hayer, of Lamoni, Iowa; text, 1 Corinthians 15: 21.

WASSON.—Virginia G. Wasson died at Burlington, Iowa, February 5, 1911, in her forty-seventh year. She was born in VanBuren County, Iowa, April 12, 1864, and at the age of eighteen was married to Mr. Frank Wasson. In 1906 she became a member of the Reorganized Church, being baptized by Bro. S. M. Reiste, and continued in the faith against opposition until the end. She left a husband, one son, and one daughter. Services were held at the home by Elder Charles Fry.

BERTRAND.—At Albion, Mendocino County, California, December 1, 1910, Lottie Belle Green Bertrand. Baptized at the age of 15 years by Thomas Daley, at Santa Rosa, California. She leaves husband, two children aged eight and four years respectively, and a loving mother. She was a lovable character, and a true Saint, who did her best as opportunity permitted.

Inventions and War.

It has been said that there is no invention which has ever been made, and none which could be made, which would not have some bearing on the art of war. A few recent examples are balloons, airships, aeroplanes, automobiles, motor bicycles, condensed foods, and wireless telegraphy. And the wireless telegraphy and telephony bids fair to be the most important modification of the nerves of the fighting brain ever made.—St. Nicholas, "The nerves of an army."

"Sarah Bernhardt, within her natural field, is a wonderful performer, even a genius. But that natural field, unhappily, is one of morbid eccentricity, and the better its most typical images are presented the less desirable they show themselves of being presented at all."

SUMMIT ADDITION

CITY OF INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

The Order of Enoch is placing this beautiful addition on sale, not as a speculation, and whatever is made over the cost price of this land belongs to the Order for the benefit of the poor, and the carrying on the business of the Order. Persons at a distance wishing to purchase property in this addition, if dissatisfied with the purchase after seeing it, will have their money refunded.

Terms of Sale

We would prefer cash, but this does not hinder those of limited means. The Order will make it possible to assist any poor Saint to acquire a home on more reasonable and better terms than could be done in any other way. Elder B. J. Scott of the Independence Stake Bishopric has been placed in charge of the sales of this property, and will assist anyone wishing to see the property.

The Order has also provided a head quarters at 103 South River boulevard, one block from the church, where Saints visiting or contemplating moving to Independence will be made welcome, and will be made comfortably at home. Saints contemplating moving to Independence Stake should confer with the local or general bishopric, which will always be to their best advantage.

A STUDY OF THE MOSAIC LAW.

Some time ago the Honorable Henry Lewis delivered an address to the members of the Iowa legislature. He devoted himself to a study of the economic and social features of the Mosaic law. Believing that such a study would be of interest to our readers we produce a part of the address, as it was reported in the Register and Leader, January 23, 1911.

I shall discuss to-day but a small part of the Bible, the oldest part, the Pentateuch of the Five Books of Moses, and of them only the small part that deals with legislation. In this body of laws we have first, the moral code now universally accepted, and the proper application of which to existing conditions is the professed aim of all current legislation in every civilized country. It is a moral code which no one attempts to amend or interpret.

The first four commandments define our duty to God, the Supreme; the fifth, our duty to government as represented by parents, and properly too, in a patriarchal age; the last five, our duty to our fellow-men; the first three of which refer to acts, the fourth to words, and the last to thoughts. The first of the second table, or the sixth commandment, protects life, the second purity, the third property, the fourth reputation. The last forbids the desire that comes from without and the greed that comes from within to violate any of these commandments.

Next we have the application of the above fundamental principles to a nation of ex-slaves, newly emancipated freedmen, for the most part ignorant and illiterate, with deeply rooted evil habits and age long evil customs, where the object was to secure not the best system of government, but the best for them, as Moses distinctly announced in the book of Deuteronomy.

THE SQUARE DEAL.

The first thing that strikes us in this remarkable abridgment of civil law is the assumption of equal rights, and the constant effort to maintain equitable conditions between all citizens of the Jewish commonwealth. Roosevelt may have been the first to use the card table phrase, "a square deal," in a political sense, but the idea came in the first place from Moses. He regarded all men as created free and equal 3,000 years before the Declaration of Independence. (Read Exodus 21: 1; 23: 12.)

The second striking thing about this legislation is that Moses first protects the people who most need protection: the slaves and the poor. (Exodus 21: 1-11.) We seem rather to aim to protect the rich, trusting them to give a proper share to the poor, to the laboring man. Moses safeguarded the poor, the many. (Exodus 21: 14-16.)

From the protection of life he proceeds to the protection of the body from injury by man or beast, and provides for compensation in all cases and punishment for the gravest offenses. (Exodus 21: 18, 20, 28, 32.) He required the man who was guilty of assault and battery to pay the man he injured for the loss of time and his doctor's bills until he was completely recovered. We pay a policeman to arrest him, a judge and a jury to try him; we fine him, and put him in jail to work out his fine at $3 a day (more than he could probably ever earn), feed him and presumably take care of his wife and family who are deprived of his wages. We saddle all the expense of this on the dear people, among them the injured man!

In chapter 22 he takes up damages to property, especially providing against cattle stealing, for the protection of life; from breachy stock, and provides punishment for being careless in putting out fires, for the misuse of trust funds, provides for payment for things borrowed and then damaged. Some of the enactments, such as "an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth" seem rough; but he had to deal with a rough people, and this was the best way to educate them in a legal way to respect their neighbor's rights and property.

THE REFERENDUM.

These are but samples of the ancient method of securing justice. Note, however, that this preliminary code of laws, afterward modified and perfected, was not binding until a referendum was held and the code accepted by popular vote (Exodus 24: 3), and this transaction sealed by sacrifice and the covenant sprinkled with blood. Don't imagine for a moment that the idea and practice of the referendum is a thing of the twentieth century. It is as old as Moses.

Before this time the foundation of a representative government had been laid (Exodus 18: 21), by the choice of local judges or magistrates. From Deuteronomy 1: 13, we learn that these magistrates were chosen by the local community, or as we would say, town meeting, and sworn in by Moses. The qualifications of these magistrates are laid down: "Take your wise men (men of understanding), known among your tribes (men of reputation), and I will make them rulers over you." Appeal was made—for these officials exercised no legislative but only executive and judicial powers—at first to Moses (Exodus 18: 26). Afterwards it was made to the priests at the holy place, and from their decision there was no appeal (Deuteronomy 17: 8-13). In Deuteronomy 16: 18, we have the law laid down as to these local judges: "Thou shalt not wrest justice; thou shalt not respect persons; neither shalt thou take a bribe; for a bribe doth blind the eyes of the wise, and pervert the words of the righteous. That which is altogether just shalt thou follow."

All this was afterwards supplemented by the election of supreme judges or senators, seventy in number, who were at the first to be special assistants to Moses. The qualifications were that they were to be known to the elders, and that they had before that been selected for some public trust. (Numbers 11: 16.) There was also what corresponds to our circuit court established in the larger cities. This body was twenty-three in number. This court and perhaps this system of courts seems to have gone out under the monarchy, but was reorganized under Jehoshaphat with the chief priest as supreme judge in religious matters and the ruler of the tribe of Judah supreme judge in civil matters. (2 Chronicles 19: 8-16.)

The health of the people of any nation depends mainly on two things—sound, healthy food and good sanitation. Moses led a multitude of nearly two million people through a desert country and, notwithstanding all the losses in battle and the greater losses in suppressing the various rebellions against his authority, without regard to the loss of life entailed, he brought to the banks of the Arnon, where he turned over the command to Joshua, practically the same number, and that after a period of forty years. The man who could do this should be worth hearing on questions of food and sanitation. Need we wonder that the Jew even of to-day is a healthier race than any other and best endures hardships? The sanitary regulations of Moses are simply marvelous.

THE INCOME TAX.

The people of Iowa are now deeply interested in the subject of taxation. Some of them are groaning over what they regard as an unjust system. It is claimed by some that the inequalities of taxation are a potent cause of lack of growth in rural population, and by others that it prevents wage earners from accumulating sufficient provision for sickness and old age. It may be interesting to note how Moses handled this decidedly difficult problem, which is taxing to its utmost the ability of legislators in all civilized countries.

Bearing in mind that in the Jewish commonwealth there was no distinction between church and state, it is interesting to note that Moses levied but two direct taxes, a poll tax and an income tax. A poll tax of half a shekel was collected from males twenty years old and over. The rich were forbidden to pay more and the poor less. This was for the support of the sanctuary when it should be established. (Exodus 30: 12-16.) The income tax was a tax on the increase for the year, to be paid in kind when convenient, and converted into cash when not. (Numbers 18: 21.) This was for the support of the priestly tribe of Levi, who had no share in the allotment of the land. (Numbers 18: 24.) One tenth of the tithe was for the support of the priests. Then there was a second tenth (a tithe of the remaining nine tenths) to be spent in religious festivals or for charitable purposes, two years at the sanctuary and every third year at home. (Deuteronomy 14: 22-29.)

These were the only direct taxes. From one point of view there was but one tax, the poll tax. Inasmuch as the land was regarded as Jehovah's and the first settlers had no investment to make, these two tithes were simply a ground rent of about one fifth of the produce either in kind or in cash, a rather cheap rent, we should say, including all taxes. We have adopted the poll tax, for which we are indebted to Moses. What is the matter with adopting the income tax, not in the Mosaic form, but the principle of it? Can there be a more just system devised? Where did Moses get all this?

In addition to these direct taxes there were indirect taxes, mainly for the benefit of the poor. For example, the farmer was not allowed to glean his fields or his vineyard, nor to go back for a sheaf if he forgot it. These were specifically dedicated to the poor. You could not convict a poor man for trespass, if he went into a neighbor's orchard or vineyard or wheat field and satisfied his hunger. Even the Pharisees in the time of Christ did not attempt to charge Jesus and his disciples with trespass, but had to content themselves with charging them with threshing and grinding on the Sabbath day. Again, the land must enjoy a Sabbath every seventh year, and the volunteer crops whether of fruit or grain were the portion of the poor. In fact, the Mosaic law stands out alone in its measures for the relief of the poor, and is still more peculiar in its provisions for the avoidance of poverty. Moses plainly told them that if when they reached the Promised Land, his regulations were strictly carried out, there would be no poor in the land.

THE LAND LAWS OF MOSES.

The fundamental principle of these land laws is that the land is Jehovah's and they are tenants, the rent being paid in tithes, as above described. The division among the original settlers was made by lot, the allotments being according to the numbers of the various tribes, which differed very greatly, and the different portions of the territory being divided according to the tastes and occupations of the different tribes. The pasture land east of the Jordan was given largely to the tribe of Reuben, because they had the most cattle and could therefore make the best use of it.

The aim of the Mosaic legislation was not to build up great cities, but to develop agriculture. Inasmuch as some men were naturally better farmers and more thrifty than others (and therefore some would become rich and others poor), there was a wiping out of all debts the sabbatical or seventh year. The land could be sold, but only for the unexpired period up to the fiftieth year. If a man waxed poor and was obliged to sell his land, he could sell it for the number of years that remained up to the jubilee or fiftieth year, subject, of course, to the rent or tithes. If he was able to redeem it he could do so, or his near kinsfolks could redeem it; but the equitable provision was made that he should pay back the price for the unexpired years. If say in the tenth year he sold it for the forty remaining years and in the fiftieth [fifteenth] year redeemed it, he must compensate his purchaser for the remaining thirty-five years. The creation of great estates in the times of David and Solomon would seem to indicate that as wealth increased and power was more and more centered in the king, these laws were broken down.

PREVENT SWOLLEN FORTUNES.

It will thus be seen that the main object of this agrarian legislation was evidently to prevent the accumulation of great wealth in the form of landed estates in the hands of the few, with the necessarily corresponding poverty of the many. It was intended as a death blow to landlordism. It naturally put a quietus on land speculation. It wiped out the unearned increment. It made a nation of small farmers, an ideal condition when you want to grow men and women. Large farms make more money, because they can within certain limits be farmed more economically; but large farms mean a small population, and the greater wealth which results does not always mean the development of the noblest character. Great luxury usually accompanies great wealth, and noble character is usually in inverse proportion to the luxury in which the young grow to manhood and womanhood.

Where did Moses get all this? Certainly not from Egypt. Since the time of Joseph the lands of Egypt had belonged to the king and the priests. The only change that seems to have been made down to the times of the earliest Egyptian and Grecian history was that the use of part of the king's lands had been given to the military as a compensation for military services. The Egyptian farmer was therefore at the mercy of the landlords; hence practically peonage or slavery, of which the Israelites had a long and bitter experience. Did Moses by these land laws undertake to insure civil liberty to the common people by vesting the title in Jehovah, the king of all the earth, and making the tenure of the actual farmer absolutely secure to all generations by a provision that no sale or lease could run beyond the year of jubilee?

AN IFIST.

MORE FALLACIOUS REASONING FROM MOORE.

It will be remembered that in the Christian Leader and the Way, December 6, 1910, one of the editors of that periodical, Mr. Ira C. Moore, made an entirely unprovoked attack upon the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. We gave a brief notice to his attack in the HERALD, January 4, 1911. He now comes back with a reply too voluminous to reproduce in full.

He feels aggrieved because we called the reasoning in his first article fallacious, yet proceeds to furnish much more of the same kind. The difference between his two articles is in quantity and not in kind. Like many of his associates in the "Disciple," "Christian," or "Campbellite" Church, he is an "ifist."

Grover Cleveland used to say that there were three kinds of people, optimists, pessimists, and ifists. To illustrate his meaning he told about going on a hunting trip with a companion who was an ifist. They became lost one night after a hard day's tramp and made camp without food or fire. Said the "ifist," "If we had some ham, and if we had a fire, we would have some ham and eggs,— if we had the eggs."

After the distinguished founders of the "Christian" Church had been preaching some time they came face to face with the problem of baptizing, and they very justly doubted their own authority to baptize. However, they tell us that they concluded, "If we had authority to preach we had authority to baptize."

Like Cleveland's friend, they were lost in the woods without ham or eggs or fire. They had neither authority to preach nor to baptize; but they bridged the gap with an "if," and gave "Disciple" logic a twist from which it has never recovered.

A CHANGE OF NAME.

In his reply Mr. Moore has considerable fun at the expense of the SAINTS' HERALD, because of the fact that it is edited by Smiths. He says it should be called the Smiths' Herald. But giving advice is a game at which two can play.

Joseph E. Cain is editor in chief of the Christian Leader and the Way, at least he is first named on the editorial page. Because of that appropriate coincidence, and in view of the evident spirit of that publication in its frequent attacks upon Latter Day Saints, Methodists, Presbyterians, and all differing denominations, we suggest that the Christian Leader and the Way hereafter and for ever be known as, "The Brand of Cain."

Appropriately, the publisher's name is Rowe; and the four editors are Caine, Harding, Moore, and Sewell,—how Cain got to the top of the list we do not know, unless it is because his associates have been so assiduously raising him.

Mr. Moore professed to reproduce our article in full, but an omission is made from the closing paragraphs, completely destroying the sense and largely obscuring the argument. This probably was not intentional; it may have occurred in the mechanical department, or Cain may have murdered it.

THAT DILEMMA.

In his first article Mr. Moore stated that members of the Reorganized Church claim to have the Spirit and testify that they are right and that the Utah people are wrong; while conversely the Utah people claim to have the Spirit, and testify that they are right and the Reorganized Church wrong. So he concluded that the Reorganization was in a quandary, and called his article, which really was muddled, "The Mormon muddle."

Such an article could have been written by no one but an ifist. The entire force of his argument, if it had any force, was to this effect: "You people both claim to have the Holy Spirit, yet your testimony is squarely in conflict, therefore if the Utah people are wrong, as you say, you are wrong too, if you are wrong." It is a new idea in logic that where two people differ both must be wrong. If that was not Mr. Moore's position he had none.

WAS JOHN IN A QUANDARY.

But Mr. Moore makes it perfectly clear by saying: "My conclusion was not that 'no one receives the Holy Spirit to-day', but that those whose testimony is of the same kind and is against each other do not have the Holy Spirit. Now do you see?"

John said, "We know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness."—1 John 5: 19.

At the same time others were saying, "These former day saints are wrong; we know that we have the light and that John and his followers are in the darkness."

Had Mr. Moore lived then he would have concluded that because John's opponents were wrong John was wrong, and of course could not have the Spirit, because their testimony was of the same kind. And he would have written an editorial on John's muddle."

THE SPIRIT AND THE HEART.

Elder Moore ridicules the idea that people may receive the Spirit and that it will create "certain kinds of peculiar feelings in their breast in the region of the physical heart." This seems to him absurd.

Paul said, "Who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts.—2 Corinthians 1: 22.

He expressed the same thought differently, elsewhere: "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. . . . The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God."—Romans 8: 14-16.

Why should not those who to-day do God's will, as Paul did it, receive the same assurance of the Holy Spirit in their hearts, or to their spirits, as you may choose to put it? In fact, in view of Paul's statement, those who do not receive such witness are not children of God at all. They may be very ingenious at inventing excuses and explanations, and in arguing that they have the same thing, only different.

Jesus told his disciples that the Holy Spirit would testify to them of him. After his resurrection he appeared to two of them, and at first they did not know him, but all the time the testimony was within them, and afterward they said, "Did not our heart burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the scriptures?"—Luke 24: 32.

How absurd that they should have "certain kinds of peculiar feelings in their breast in the region of the physical heart." Elder Moore never has such feelings. He can not sympathize with the former day saints whose "hearts burned within them," nor with Latter Day Saints who sing:

"A calm and gentle quiet reigns to-night,
There's not a cloud upon a single brow,
And every heart is swelling with delight,
And peace is brooding sweetly o'er us now.
And every bosom feels the thrilling touch
Of the Spirit, filling them with holy fire,
The precious boon for which we pray so much
In answer to that earnest heart's desire."

IF ANY MAN DO HIS WILL.

Jesus said, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine."—John 7: 17.

Mr. Moore tries to evade the force of this by saying that the New Testament was not then written and the will referred to was the old law. This is pure assumption, unsupported by proof. Jesus had already quite fully explained the Father's will as it was afterward set forth in the New Testament. He had already preached faith and repentance and baptism, and had explained to Nicodemus the new birth of the water and the Spirit.

He did not say, "If a few men will obey the obsolete Mosaic law they shall know of the doctrine, and afterward everybody else must depend upon their testimony." He referred to the will that he was then and there preaching, the gospel, which was the power of God unto salvation; and he said, "If any man will do his [God's] will, he shall know of the doctrine."

That promise is still in force and can not be destroyed by those who profess to restore "primitive Christianity," but in fact have not the primitive Christian church organization nor the primitive Christian doctrine nor the primitive Christian blessings,—those who "speak when the Bible is silent, and are silent when the Bible speaks."

OUR POSITION UNTOUCHED.

The promise of Jesus is that those who do the Father's will shall know of the doctrine. They may know it by the actual changes that it makes in their lives, and by the Holy Spirit that is promised to guide them into all truth. On the Day of Pentecost the gift of that Spirit was promised to all whom the Lord should call, on condition of repentance and baptism.

It is perfectly scriptural for those who have obeyed such call to claim that they have the testimony of the Holy Spirit. If they are contradicted by others who claim to have the same Spirit, there is no dilemma, nor is Spirit testimony discredited. It simply follows that recourse should be had to the standards of evidence; "to the law and to the testimony." The Holy Spirit never contradicts its past utterances as we have them recorded in the Scriptures.

Members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ testify to having received the Holy Spirit. When an appeal is made to the law and the testimony, no one can find that there is one leading doctrine taught by that church as a principle of the gospel of Christ that is in conflict with the written word. Consequently, their claims should be accepted in preference to the claims of others who profess to have the Spirit but are teaching as fundamental principles of the gospel of Christ those things that are condemned by the law; and in preference to the testimony of others who fail to teach important principles that are contained in the law:

"For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God: for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him."—John 3: 34.

SPRING TERM AT GRACELAND.

March 7, Tuesday, will be the opening of the Spring Term, which will continue twelve weeks, closing May 31. The excellent review for teachers and prospective teachers of the public schools will continue. Some new classes will be organized as there may be demand for them. Some of the work in the regular courses could be taken up by those entering at this time. A class in manual training will be started for the ladies. Those intending to enter for this term should arrange to register at the college office, Monday, March 6. Tuition for the spring term, eleven dollars, and one dollar for registration; for the commercial courses fourteen dollars; music and oratory, seven dollars and twenty cents for one lesson a week, and twelve dollars for two lessons a week. Phone 71.

J. A. GUNSOLLEY, Acting President.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The March number of the Cosmopolitan contains an article on "Mormonism" which comes as an anticlimax to the many articles on that subject appearing of late. It is called "The viper on the hearth." Each page is festooned with repulsive, wriggling serpents, the whole effect being so offensive as to sicken the reader. No distinction is made between good and bad features that might be suggested by the term "Mormon." The Salt Lake Tribune has an editorial comment that is significant, coming as it does from the leading "Anti-Mormon" daily. We quote in part:

"It was perhaps inevitable that the grave and important discussions of the present situation in Utah and of the record in history of affairs here, as given by Mr. Burton J. Hendrick, in McClure's Magazine, and by ex-Senator Frank J. Cannon in Everybody's, should be followed by would-be sensational and striking matter, showing less knowledge but striving for more glittering effects. Accordingly, we find in the March Cosmopolitan an article by Alfred Henry Lewis, which it is announced will be followed by another in the succeeding number of that publication. Mr. Lewis entitles his article 'The viper on the hearth.' And this first article has for its specific caption, 'Mormonism: its plots, plans, and intrigues against American homes.' Mr. Lewis was one of the correspondents who accompanied President Taft in his tour through the West, and in his visit to this city. Mr. Lewis explains that he got his impression and data from which he expressed this article by a few days stay in this city, heading direct for Salt Lake and being here a day before the President's arrival. His article is written in his usual intensive style, and is a curious jumble of part truth, part wrong impression, and part fallacy, with uncertain deductions. The general effect of it, with its snaky illustrations, is repulsive, and one can hardly comprehend why a person with so little accurate knowledge of the situation should write so intensely about it, and with such a reckless contempt for the seriousness of the subject. Mr. Lewis strains for effect all through, instead of being careful of his facts, and allows his mind the wildest flights in place of exercising sober judgment on the facts as they exist."

The latest improvement in the typewriter by an English inventor, is a machine that prints syllables of two and three letters most commonly in use. When the syllable key is depressed, the carriage jumps a space equal to the length of the syllable.

The most fatal heresy here and hereafter is an unloving heart, and an unserving life."

LAMONI STAKE AS A GATHERING PLACE.

"My people are directed to establish two stakes; one at Independence, one at Lamoni, Iowa, organizing them after the pattern which is found in the law; a presiding high priest with counselors, a high council, and a bishop and his councilors."—Doctrine and Covenants 125: 10.

The Lamoni Stake, when completely officered, consists of a presidency composed of three members, a high council composed of twelve members, and a bishopric composed of three members. It has a total of eighteen officers, with a present membership within the stake of 2,819. Territorially it consists of eleven counties, eight in the State of Iowa and three in the State of Missouri.

Lamoni Stake, divinely appointed, organized according to instructions, with a corps of officers authoritatively called and set apart to build up and establish (in connection with the leading authorities of the church) the Lord's work within its borders, can be no less than one of the places which some of God's people are beholding when turning their faces Zionward. To you who have partaken of the spirit of the latter days—the spirit of gathering, and there has come to you that desire to change your present home and abide within this stake,—it is to you we address these lines in particular.

There are two ways of making this move; namely, move as the Lord moves, or move as the world moves. The choice is offered you.

Some have already come this way, others have sent ahead their savings and made purchase of properties, expecting some time to follow and be one of our number. Some of these Saints have awakened to the situation and feel that they have made a mistake. As the result discouragement has been felt, financial loss to themselves and the church sustained, faith shaken in the church work, and a loss of confidence in the brethren experienced. After the blunder has been made, appeal is frequently made to the stake authorities for relief from the situation. This, the authorities have no right nor disposition to turn down, but as true servants make the best out of conditions as they are, and furnish all possible assistance, though they may not have had one word with the Saint prior to this time.

It is to your interest to know, as well as to the best interest of the work that you do know, having your eyes wide open to conditions which should obtain in one of the stakes of Zion before a final decision is made on your part. Here are some things to be considered:

1. All Saints who are mentally or physically able should be producers. There is no room within our borders for the idler. The Lord says he is to be cast out. Our children should be trained to habits of industry, honesty, and purity. We want no retired Saints, the true Saint does not become retired, he continues faithful to the end, and the promise is "The same shall be saved."

2. In all our labors we must needs be unselfish. We can not be laborers together with God for the work intrusted to us and at the same time be not concerned with the well-being of our brother.

3. As producers we have commercial relations with the world's people as well as with the Saints. In these dealings honesty is the true principle involved and will be a power for good in building up the Lord's work among our neighbors and friends.

4. Speculation, or the game of trying to get something for nothing, should be discountenanced and have no place among the Lord's people.

5. The helpless poor are among us. To them must be supplied the comforts of life, expecting returns in hearts thankful to our heavenly Father for provisions made through the gospel of his Son for the poor of his people.

6. The helpful poor are among us. They desire only that opportunity be placed within their reach whereby they may of themselves supply the necessities of life and not become a burden to others. It is the true spirit of the gospel to help others to help themselves.

7. The leading industries of the stake are agricultural, consisting of farming, stock raising, dairying, gardening, and fruit growing. Coal mining is being carried on quite extensively in some parts. Also manufacturing to a limited extent.

8. Among our membership are farmers, coal miners, store keepers, home keepers, laundrymen, teachers, students, ministers, carpenters, blacksmiths, masons, clerks, agents, lumbermen, bankers, plumbers, printers, jewelers, teamsters, gardeners, day laborers, etc. This is a partial list only, each one is listed in a complete list, all are expected to become one of the number.

With these facts before us, are you ready to come Zionward? If so, move as the Lord moves, not as the world moves, and in so doing the blessing is yours according to promise. "As I the Lord in the beginning cursed the land, even so in the last days have I blessed it, in its time, for the use of my saints, that they may partake the fatness thereof." The land of Zion (and this applies to all the stakes) is to become sanctified through the Saints keeping the law, and failure on the part of the Saints so to do results in the land not being a land of Zion unto them, neither shall they be found worthy to abide. See Doctrine and Covenants 106: 2.

The Lord reiterates his counsel and tells the Saint how to proceed: "Counsel has already been given to those gathering into the regions round about to consult with the elders and bishops before removing into those regions, that such removal may be accomplished through the having of all things prepared before them who seek to remove and become resident in the regions round about."—Doctrine and Covenants 128: 4.

Again is explained, "Verily I say unto you, It shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of all their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you . . . and this shall be an ensample unto all the stakes of Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 106: 2. The tithing of surplus properties is a principle that makes the gathering of Saints possible. The poor could never be gathered without this provision of the law. "That my covenant people may be gathered in one, in that day when I shall come to my temple," is the triumph of the Saints as stated in the law. (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8, 9, 10.) This gives meaning to us in that portion of section 72: 3 and elsewhere, where is stated, "For according to the law every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before the bishop in Zion."

Inquiries come to the stake authorities from time to time signed by parties of whom we have no personal knowledge concerning their standing, financially or otherwise, desiring information concerning matters of locating, entering into some business, etc. It becomes necessary to communicate with these parties to ascertain, if possible, their standing and circumstances connected with their business affairs before intelligent advice may be given. Those whose duty it becomes under the law to direct the gathering into the stakes desire that all things be laid before the proper authorities, thereby enabling all to move along to the best good of all concerned. With a proper understanding of the needs of the Saints all may be aided to act with a better degree of wisdom, and avoid mistakes.

Now, dear Saint, you who are looking Zionward, what does this presentation mean to you? Does it leave you feeling contented and satisfied, or would you desire to ask if others who have gone on before you into the regions round about have done so as the Lord directs? Perhaps you may wish to make inquiry as to whether all the Saints living within the stake have fully complied with the requirements of the law. Failure on the part of others does not excuse us from living up to all the light that comes to us, neither can failure on the part of others hinder us from enjoying the blessings that are bound to follow the obedient.

Compulsory? No. Neither is baptism. All service should be performed willingly and intelligently. But one thing is quite certain, namely, this can not be a land of Zion unto the Saint who acts not as the Lord counsels and directs. "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise." The Saint is not molested who desires to move as the world moves; he has that choice, but such a course will never build up Zion. "Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself."

JOSEPH ROBERTS,
Of Lamoni Stake Bishopric.

THE SAINTS' HERALD DOCTRINAL SERIES.

IV. FAITH.

BY ELDER J. W. WIGHT.

[Latter Day Saints hold that faith is one of the active principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ (see Hebrews 6:1). This includes faith in God and in his Son Jesus Christ and in the message of salvation. The character of faith needed, its increase and retention, manner of inception, etc., are set forth in this article. The moment one begins to believe in God he begins to sense his own unworthiness, and his past errors rise up as a barrier before him. He is prepared for the next step in the gospel plan. The next subject to be taken up in this series is that of repentance, to be treated upon in an article written by Elder R. C. Russell.—EDITOR.]

POINTS FOR STUDY.

1. Faith in God. What and who is God the Creator of all?
2. That He, God, has a personality. (a) "Let us make man in our image."—Genesis 1:26. (b) Christ in image and form of God. (Hebrews 1:3; Philippians 2:5, 6.) (c) Has face, eyes, hands, fingers, and feet. (Exodus 33:11; 31:18; 24:9, 10; Proverbs 22:12; Isaiah 6:8.)
3. That he will reveal himself. (Daniel 2:22, 28; Amos 3:7; Matthew 16:17; Luke 17:30; 1 Peter 1:5; 2 Thessalonians 1:7.)
4. That it is rational to believe in God. (a) Created existence proclaims a Creator. (b) Law and its execution proclaim a Maker and an Executor. (c) Design manifests a Designer. (d) It has been clearly demonstrated that life is but the result of antecedent or preëxistent life.
5. That it is necessary to believe in God. One is certain to tend toward an ideal or standard. A perfect standard established and as we tend toward it so are we made better and better, unto a final accomplishment equal to the standard of conception in its establishment. From a lack of such standard, we are likely to wander aimlessly, with the possibility of finally becoming destroyed.

BASIS OF FAITH.

It is perhaps a waste of time to tell what faith is, as there is more of a demand to know as to its necessity. However, it may well be said that faith is as realistic to what may be termed the faculty of the mind as anything can possibly be. That faith has its basis—confidence—none can deny. From the fact of actual contact with it, in the sense of having placed my feet upon its soil, I do not know that there is such a place as England, but from the fact of the confidence I have in those who claim to have had such contact as well as to have seen, I believe or have faith there is such a country.

NECESSITY.

The necessity for existence of faith is to be seen in the opportunity one is thus afforded to satisfy the mind in its reaching out into a realm that would otherwise be as limitless as space. By the exercise of what may be properly called a divine right one is permitted to cross illimitable space and have the peep of satisfaction at the shores of future climes and picture the glories attainable by obedience or the trials and tribulations resulting because of disobedience. It stands then as a lighthouse to point out the dangers of the evil way, an insurance against danger; or as the beacon of hope pointing to the way of peace and the opportunities of the highest possible attainment. At first glance one can but see the necessity, if one value the peace of mind that is thus to be obtained in the midst of earth's vicissitudes.

However, the writer is not of that class that makes a distinction between faith and belief. All that one needs to do is to read the following, as well as other passages that might be produced, to discover that these terms are used interchangeably: Matthew 9:27-30; 17:14-21; Luke 8:48-50; Romans 4:20-22, and Hebrews 11:6. The latter is especially one of the strong passages against the theory. From a scriptural viewpoint one must feel the necessity of faith when reading the injunction, "Have faith in God," or the statement, "Without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."

KIND OF FAITH.

To the writer, this is one of the most important points of all. There are so many in the world who appear to accept as faith what may be called a blind credulity. One can have true faith or extreme credulity as he may list. True should be the watchword in all things; hence the necessity of trying to find the true faith as contrasted with the false. True faith should be such as has with it works: "Show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works."—James 2:18. Or one may go to the 26th verse, "For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also." Or the twenty-second verse tells us that "By works was faith made perfect." These are certainly strong and unanswerable statements in favor of faith being shown by works. Why add more?

True faith carries with it a belief in church organization, for Christ said, "I will build my church."—Matthew 16: 18. The building of that church resulted in an organized structure containing apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, priests, teachers, bishops, elders, deacons, with men called seventies. (See 1 Corinthians 12: 27, 28; Ephesians 4: 11-13; Luke 10: 1, 2; Acts 14: 23; Titus 1: 5; Acts 13: 1; Philippians 1: 1; 1 Timothy 3: 8-10, 13; 3: 1-4.)

One must also believe in present revelation, (Hebrews 11: 6; 5: 4). In fact, must not only believe that God is just as ready to reveal to the honest seeker now as at any period of the world's history, but with a faith that when such a revelation does come it will show an exact likeness, so far as a church organization is concerned, to the church established in Christ's time—not one iota of a change.

While on the mountain side in the vicinity of Capernaum the Christ said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God." This was no idle statement to be accepted or rejected at the whim or fancy of the hearer, but one of those direct commandments that carried with it all the force of a world's Savior, one who came to teach God's law. A faith that does not give to that commandment at least par value is not and can not be accounted as a true faith. The faith that seeks for that kingdom and stops not short of the finding is a true faith; for it will manifest true belief in Christ's commandments. And when it has found such a kingdom it will not be satisfied to stand without; hence it will be an OBEDIENT FAITH.

To have or to exercise an obedient faith there must be something to obey. Faith that may be called true will seek for that which is to be obeyed. It is a well known fact that a kingdom can not exist without a king, and all will accept Christ as that king; this he can not be without subjects over whom he can rule. These latter will need a law to govern them, for where there is no law, chaos reigns. Faith will accept as the law that which was laid down by Christ and his apostles: faith, repentance, baptisms, laying on of hands, a belief in the resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust, as well as a belief in eternal judgment.

The Master said, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" "Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

These statements are so positive as to the necessity of obedience that we feel that a faith that does not provoke an obedience is not the faith of the gospel of the Son of God.

HOW OBTAINED.

Reverting to Paul's statement, one must conclude that faith comes by hearing. As noted in the out-start, however, there must be the basis of confidence, for where this does not exist the matter heard is not likely to have much effect. Confidence as the basis, "Then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. But I say, Have they not heard?"—Romans 10: 17, 18. The fourteenth verse says: "How shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?" But even then it must be the hearing that is based upon confidence, for in the tenth and eleventh verses of this same chapter the apostle says, "For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. For the scripture saith, Who-soever believeth on him shall not be ashamed."

One has it in his own power to determine as to whether he has true or false faith. If he in any way shall be "ashamed" there is something lacking. Of course one might have a sort of brazen effrontery that would cover up every opportunity for the exercise of shame, and under such conditions might "not be ashamed," and yet not be in the exercise of true faith.

HOW RETAINED.

Genuine faith would be retained by implicit confidence and obedience to that which is good. That is to say, that as long as one shall maintain true integrity and observe the rules that belong thereto he will most assuredly retain faith. One might have faith in the law that governs right, but failing to observe it would assuredly go wrong and be found doing that which is bad. But it would not be a true faith, else he would exercise it in harmony with right. One might have faith in the law of health and yet not pay any attention to its observance, hence could not be said to have true faith, neither a faith likely to be retained. Active, operative faith is the kind that is likely to be retained, for it really bears the kind of fruit that stimulates its retention.

A faith that believes not unto practice is not so likely to be retained but is manifested more in the saying than in the doing. A statement fully exemplifying this thought is to be found in Galatians 5: 1, "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage." By so doing one will retain faith, and to such an extent the faith thus exercised will grow. In fact, this is one of the ways to retain—to have in one's possession a growing faith. Faith is also retained by doing the will of the Father, for thereby such an one is made to "know of the doctrine," and knowledge helps to stimulate unto a retention that acts as an anchor to the soul in its upward and onward course. And this brings us to the thought of

INCREASE.

This can be done by taking hold of the promises in a way that will be productive of their fulfillment. One fulfillment after another of these promises but serves to increase one's faith in the fulfillment of all; hence, true increase will place one alongside of Abraham, of whom it is said: "He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God; and being fully persuaded that, what he had promised, he was able also to perform. And therefore it was imputed to him for righteousness."—Romans 4: 20-22. Or, "That ye be not slothful, but followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises. For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he swore by himself."—Hebrews 6: 12, 13.

Let one turn to Mark 16: 16-18; 6: 13, and James 5: 14, 15, and have faith in these promises unto their observance, and his obedience will bring such results that there will come to him an increase of faith as he realizes the fulfillment of the promises. One fulfillment after another will serve to increase his faith. But let the teacher come who instills into him the thought that these promises are not for us now, there could be no increase of faith in the mind of such an one.

Let one accept a belief in the Holy Spirit and all that is promised concerning it and there will come a desire to receive of Spirit baptism. This obtained and his faith is still the more increased unto a belief that the gifts of the Spirit are to be enjoyed. Seeing the manifestation of all the "gifts" in the church, such as knowledge, wisdom, faith, miracles, healings, prophecy, discernment, tongues and the interpretation of tongues, such an one will enter the realm of those who have "hope, when your faith is increased, that we shall be enlarged."—2 Corinthians 10: 15.

The apostles seemed to comprehend the necessity for increase when they said unto the Lord, "Increase our faith." His answer was typical of his teachings and will be profitable to all who peruse.

FORENSIC.

Turning from the realm of scriptural lore into the domain of the purely forensic, one is permitted to here pick up the threads of proof as to "necessity," as well as in the already partially explored realm. Labor is a necessity unto development, and toil a requirement as well as pleasurable. And in neither can one have true success where faith is lacking.

I have heard it asserted that faith is the mainspring of action in all intelligent beings. In fact, rather than to believe as some have sought to teach, that it is but the manifestation of blind groveling, I am of the opinion that without the exercise of faith, in that we are anxious to perform, failure would be ever written across the effort not stimulated by faith.

The one who has the blues, who is eternally grumbling about existing conditions, who becomes a carpenter fault-finder, who has no faith in any beside himself—such an one is at least partially if not wholly lacking when it comes to the principle of faith. In fact, though he may feel he still has faith in himself, yet he becomes a miserable failure in this, that he does not enter into the exercise of even the faith that he has in himself but occupies the stool or perhaps goods box of "do-nothing," manifesting no faith in the development of muscular exercise outside of what muscle may be found to attach to his jaw bones. It is not faith but a lack of it that brings him to the position of a human parasite.

The farmer sows his seed, cultivates the soil, and finally garners his crop when the time of harvest arrives, as a result of faith. Show me a successful farmer and you will show me one who has faith—true, obedient faith. Show me the unsuccessful farmer and you show me one who is not endowed with an active, stimulating faith, if he has any at all. Blues produce melancholy, and both are active agents in opposition to faith. The woodman that spares not the tree, the mariner that sails the briny deep in both storm and calm; the soldier inured to blood, carnage and rapine; the merchant behind his desk or the bookkeeper busy at his accounts; the president in his chair; the king on his throne—all, all are stimulated by the principle of faith if they become successful in their various callings.

In fact, in the entire realm of labor, where the broad field of activity is stimulated into a successful accomplishment, there is found faith. Whether the participant occupies in the mental, the physical, or the spiritual field, that ever active principle, faith, is to be found urging him on to a more successful accomplishment.

The astronomer unveils the starry space and reveals to us Orion with his peculiar nebulae and double stars, the Pleiades, a great family of planets and satellites, as well as other solar systems besides our own. With the ease of one accomplished in all its intricacies, the mathematician revels in abstruse problems and in solutions from an array of figures which produce results that fairly appall the untrained mind. The archæologist delves into the earth and produces therefrom the evidence of prehistoric existence, reading the fossils as readily as the ordinary mortal peruses the daily papers. The geologist delves into the bowels of earth and brings therefrom the evidence from which he calculates the age of our globe. And it matters not whether there is a unity of agreement or not, all the above mentioned and many others not named are dependent as to the success of their efforts upon faith.

But why amplify upon a subject so apparent to all who think? One needs but look upon created existence all around him to believe—have faith—that such handiwork manifests a Creator. And then as faith begins the operation of its potency, he can but declare with the Psalmist, "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handy work." So may it be!

Desiring to know true faith,

THE WHIMS OF FASHION.

Mrs. John A. Logan recently dealt a sledge hammer blow—if such a performance may be properly accredited to one of the gentler sex—to the whims of fashion. At any rate, Mrs. Logan made a forceful arraignment of the prevailing craze for dress. She catalogues the various fads as the "bunco games" of manufacturers and modists; she says that the fashionable woman meekly dresses herself like a "maniac or an idiot" at the orders of her commercial exploiters; that current modish dresses are an "outrage on decency," and so on.

Replying, a New York apologist for the dress insanity contends that the freakish dressing tendencies of the current woman are merely indications of the rapid evolution which the sex is just now undergoing. "Progress," he (or she) says, "goes by throbs and pulses. For long periods little gain will be apparent; then a sudden advance begins, and a great forward step is made within a few years. It is during these epochs of rapid advance that all sorts of oddities appear, to be tried and promptly thrown aside. The process occurs over and over again until the right thing or combination of things is finally attained and a new period of quiescence sets in."

At the risk of being ungallant, we say "Rats" to the New York apologist. And we report with pleasure that some English women—God bless them—have started a movement for the formation of a society to combat the increasing vanity of clothing. Among the propositions which the society is expected to support are the following: That the cost of clothes should be limited to a definite percentage of income; that a good and beautiful fashion be retained as long as possible; that all innovations that distort the figure be tabooed; that every costume should have a pocket; that gowns should be made so women can button them themselves; that women shall take pride in being seen often in the same costume as distinct from the vulgarity that seeks frequent change; that costumes should be judged not by cost but by beauty of form, coloring, and general appropriateness; that simplicity should be the highest merit, and that it be deemed an offense to look like a fashion plate.

The English women have undertaken a big job, but they may succeed. Anything may happen, you know. They wouldn't have much difficulty if those who are abundantly able to dress expensively and indulge in all sorts of whims would make a fad of simplicity and hold to the same style for a year or so at a time instead of changing with each phase of the moon, as they do now. But perhaps this is too much to hope for.—Saint Joseph News.

We commend the above to a careful reading and conscientious consideration of the Saints. The wild craze to appear in something new and different as often as possible, needs to be checked in the church, as well as in the world. It is not only foolish, but sinful, for us to try to follow the world in its follies and wrongs. Jesus prayed for his disciples who were about him and "for them also which shall believe in me through their word," saying among other things: "I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil."—John 17: 15.

And the same apostle who recorded these important words, is the author of the following significant and instructive message: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever."—1 John 2: 15-17.

Dear Saints: Think of the many evils which result from an attempt to practice the follies indicated in the quoted article.

Your brother and friend,

ADVANCED LEGISLATION IN AUSTRALIA.

The eyes of the world have been more or less directed to Australia and New Zealand, watching the progress of advanced ideas of government on social and economic questions. This observation has been all the more interesting because socialism is well represented among the voters, and that, too, in one of the most democratic countries on the globe. Socialism is on the ascendancy in Germany, and in others of the older countries; but makes headway slower than in Australia, because of conservatism, vested interests, and other features of the old-time regime that resist the new propaganda.

The Australia colonies started out with government ownership of railways, telegraph and telephone lines, parcels post, and savings bank. They regarded the land as an asset of the government which easily stood to the London financiers as security for loans floated for all public works mentioned above, which when finished enhanced the security.

When the colonies federated in 1900, there was a strong labor vote, and that means moderate socialism over there. They have the radicals, but they do not dominate legislation. The labor element has believed in the potency of the ballot, and has been content to gradually educate the voters. They have quietly exercised their growing majorities in parliament to secure their measures, sometimes in modified form, one by one, until they have secured arbitration courts for capital and labor litigants, old age pensions, and other progressive features of enlightened government.

Labor is now in control in several parliaments of that country, including the Federal Parliament, as can be seen by the report of Mr. Ernest Bray, an Australian correspondent to The Public, written from Corowa, New South Wales, December 17, 1910: "The first session of the Federal Parliament ended late last month. The most important measures passed were:

"1. An act to substitute Commonwealth bank notes for the notes issued by private banks.

"2. An act imposing a tax of ten per cent on notes issued by private banks after December 1.

"3. A graduated tax on land values; maximum, sixpence in the pound, with an exemption of £5,000, and an extra tax of one penny, with no exemption, on land held by absentees.

"4. An act to establish, next year, penny postage throughout the Commonwealth.

"5. An act to give effect to part of the Kitchener recommendations for the military forces.

"6. An act intended to allow the constitutionality of federal acts to be tested by the High Court at once, without waiting until a case arises."

Among the rest are two bills for amending the constitution, to widen the legislative powers of the Federal Parliament and giving it authority to legislate for taking over industries declared by Parliament to be monopolies. These will be submitted to the people probably in April, 1911, to decide by referendum whether they shall be accepted.

THE REAL NORTH POLE.

The popular idea of the compass is that it is an instrument having a freely moving needle which points to the north pole. But the needle points to the north pole when the compass is situated on the meridian of longitude that runs through the north magnetic pole. The real (or geographic) north pole and the magnetic north pole are not in the same place.

The magnetic north pole, toward which the compass needle really points, is situated in the northern part of Canada, in northern latitude 70 degrees 5 minutes, and longitude 96 degrees 43 minutes west from Greenwich. It was first visited in 1831 by Sir James Ross. The southern magnetic pole is in a corresponding position in the Antarctic region. It was discovered by Sir Ernest Shackle-ton's expedition to be latitude 72 degrees 25 minutes south and longitude 154 degrees east.

The magnetic poles are not stationary. The northern one is slowly moving westward along the seventieth parallel, and in the course of three or four hundred years will probably have encircled the geographic north pole and returned to about its present location. Of course the southern magnetic pole follows a corresponding course about the geographic south pole.

In such cities in the United States as Omaha, Sioux City, Topeka, Galveston, etc., the compass needle would point about in the direction of the North Star and the north pole that Commander Peary reached. This geographic pole is about 1500 miles north of the magnetic pole, toward which the needles of all compasses point.—From "Nature and Science" in February St. Nicholas.

The story of a "taxless town" is told by the Omaha Daily News in this way: "There is a little town in Sweden by the name of Orson. Orson. Remember that name. For Orson is one of the greatest towns in the world. Of course, Orson isn't as big as London, or New York, or Bagdad, or perhaps Oshkosh. But Orson has done something that none of the so-called 'great' cities of the world has ever done. Orson has dodged all local taxes—successfully and honestly. The Orson railway is free to every citizen of the town. The telephone service is free. Schools and libraries cost the citizens absolutely nothing. All because, a generation or two ago, the patriotic people of Orson planted trees. Orson has a municipal forest that has yielded the town $5,000,000 in the past thirty years. And the $5,000,000 has paid the running expenses of the town. Of course, there isn't anything to hinder any American town from doing the same thing. But we don't notice any American town doing it. To date Milwaukee seems to be the only American town that has even thought about it. But it's worth thinking about, isn't it? Also it might be worth while to consider at the same time the fact that while Orson was paying her municipal expenses for the past year from the proceeds of her well-kept forest the American nation, through neglect of her forests, was suffering a loss of $200,000,000 and more than 100 lives."—The Commoner.

Briefly stated, in the March Century, the new science of management is "the application of that scientific method which Darwin brought into the world, first, to the individual operations of men in industry, and, second, to their collective operations."

The Children's Home.

"BATTLE LAKE, MINNESOTA, August 8.

"Dear Sister Frances: I pray for the Home Column, and I think it is doing a good work, and I would advise all young mothers to study the letters and profit by them. I have lived to raise a family and to see them all grown, and now while looking back over my past life I can see many times where such advice as we find in the Home Column would have been of much worth to me. I also bear my testimony to the truth of the latter day work. I have not received such bright testimonies as some, yet I have received enough to satisfy me, and have oftentimes been greatly blessed of the Lord, and have seen many blessings granted to the Saints, and also in my own family, for which I do thank my heavenly Father.

"And now I say to you, dear sisters, strive to aid the good work, and, above all, try to bring up your little ones in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Oftentimes when my children were small did I plead with the Lord to spare me to raise them up, and ask him to help me to lead them to him, and although I feel that my prayers were feeble, yet when I see my children arise and speak of the goodness of God I feel that they have been answered and that I am more than repaid for the trials I have passed through. So I would say to you, careworn and discouraged mothers, cheer up and be determined to bring up your children right, and ask for help to do so, and in time you will feel amply repaid.

"I remain your sister in love,

"ELEANOR GOULD."

Mothers' Home Column: I am sending you the above letter, written by my mother in SAINTS' HERALD of September 17, 1887. At the time this was written all of my mother's family were in the church except myself. About two years after I had united with the church and my mother was laid away to rest, this HERALD was handed me by a sister. It seemed to me it was the voice of the dead appealing to my heart. It gave me a desire to study this column and learn what you were doing.

In December, 1904, I received a letter from the Advisory Board of the Daughters of Zion. The letter is before me as I write, and I will copy a part of it:

"We address this letter to you with a prayer in our hearts that it will find in your own a response to the appeal which it contains. . . . We need your help. . . . It is not the big things we are asking for, not the whole loaves, but simply the opportunity to gather up the fragments. . . . What can you do for us? . . . It is the homeless little ones who are holding out their hands to us asking for food and loving care. Christ has said feed them, and don't you believe he will help us if we earnestly try to do his bidding? When they are homeless and scattered it is hard to feed them the bread of life. Will not God be pleased to gather them in and while we feed and clothe them teach the gospel of Christ? We have no moneyed endowment, nor much of this world's goods, but our trust is in God, and our faith is, if we go to work with our might, that he will bless our efforts, and if we do all we can he will go before us and prepare the way. We hope, by making a special effort in your own locality, either by giving a concert, a festival, an entertainment, or in any other way your judgment approves, that you will be able to send in a contribution to the general fund. . . . If our hearts are right, and our motives are pure, he will bless the little we have even as he blessed the loaves and fishes."

On April 14, 1906, when the word of the Lord came through our brother, the aged prophet, that there should be a home for children established, and the appeal of the Daughters of Zion should be approved and carried into completion as soon as is consistent with the necessary demands of the work of the church in other directions, I felt surely God had watched over them and approved of their efforts, and when I read in SAINTS' HERALD, February 1, 1911, the good news that a home and ground had been purchased, how my heart was made to rejoice. I felt like singing praises to a kind and heavenly Father, and more of a desire came to me to assist in that part of God's work.

Our little society, known here as the Willing Workers, have ready twelve quilts that were made for the home, sizes fifty-six inches wide by two and one half yards long, also a little money in the treasury, and shall watch the church papers to know who to send the quilts to at Lamoni. It is not much, but I am contented to help in the little things for this reason: when the truth of this work was made known to me my greatest desire was to go and tell the gospel story the world over; but when my life work was shown me I was shown that my work was in my own home and in the community where I lived; that it was the little things in life that God required at my hands, and if I did them with a willing heart and willing hands, I should gain the same reward as though I preached the gospel.

I have been blessed in this work at times with a portion of that sweet Spirit that has spoken peace to my soul, and I am made to feel to say to the Daughters of Zion, go on in your good work, and ages unborn will arise and call you blessed.

BERLIN, NORTH DAKOTA.

Editors Herald: I have been reading in the HERALD, of Bishop R. C. Evans' great work in Toronto. Oh! how I thank my God that he has honored me sufficiently to make me a child of his, a member of the one true and living church! Sweet indeed is the thought that while my weary feet were wandering in darkness the dear Lord was sweetly and gently calling, calling his wanderer home. Every day when I find myself alone I go to my room and have a long talk with him, and what comfort, what strength is received! I remember one evening not long since when alone I felt drawn to prayer. I shall never forget it. It seemed I almost talked face to face with God. My body seemed to be in the air and my hands and feet were touching nothing. I felt the presence of angels supporting me.

Dear Saints, I would like to write about the Lord's work here in Berlin, but fear I have already taken up too much space. I may write about that some other time. If Elder Wagner reads this, please take notice, the Saints here would like to have him come here before North Dakota conference, and right away if possible.

Editors Herald: Our district conference closed here last night. A good feeling was present all the way through. The conference was a success. Everybody seems encouraged. Brother Swensen and I remain here a few days. I am waiting to get word from other points.

H. E. MOLER.

HAMBURG, IOWA, February 11, 1911.

Dear Herald: I was at Adel, Dallas County, Iowa, and at DeSoto. Had some private talks, sold one Book of Mormon, and distributed some epitome cards. I think if Elder J. F. Mintun, of Des Moines, could spare time to go up there he could do some good, as the people are anxious to hear. They ask, Is this a new doctrine? I will go there again in the spring if all is well. I hope a branch will be organized in Dallas County.

Yours in gospel bonds,

L. C. DONALDSON.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, February 16, 1911.

Editors Herald: When last I wrote I was well over my stammering, having just left the Bassett school for stammerers at Provo, Utah. But, sorry to say, my former difficulty soon returned, which grieved me very much, even to the extent that I spent many restless days and nights in prayer to God that he would lessen my burden. I have had great sorrow and trials because of this thing. But I also realize that I have not been as diligent and steadfast in the things which God has commanded his Saints as I ought to have been. But continually asking God for forgiveness and mercy, I will try earnestly to do better in the future. I have a great love for the gospel of Christ. But knowing that God chastises everyone he loves, I will not complain to him, as I do not feel that I am worthy of all the goodness he has shown me from day to day.

I hope now that I will succeed in my speech, as I am at the Lewis school for stammerers here in Detroit; and I ask the prayers of all the Saints of God, far and near. I am able to speak quite well, having been here at the school for some time. If there are any Saints living in this neighborhood I wish they would kindly let me know where our church is in Detroit. I would greatly appreciate hearing from any of them.

Your brother in Christ,

35 ADELAIDE STREET.

OSCAR PETERSON.

BILOXI, MISSISSIPPI.

Dear Herald: After reading your dear pages there came to mind the question: How can I live such a life as a true Saint should live? which the Holy Spirit answered with a passage of scripture (2 Corinthians 10: 5). While meditating on the words, "bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ," I asked myself how I could perform other duties and keep all my thoughts on Christ; for, if they were not all in Christ how could my thoughts be in captivity to him, and that being the case, how could I distinguish the difference between the thoughts that are sin and the thoughts that are not sin, and the Holy Spirit answered, "He will reveal even this unto you."

I have been a Latter Day Saint for thirty-three years, but I sometimes shed tears over the time wasted that I could have spent in the work. I have been chastised into duty by many times suffering in body and spirit. I am feeling good in the work now. I preached fifty-three times last year, and did other work as my calling demands. I have been recommended to be ordained an elder. All I have got to say is: I will do what you want me to do, dear Lord. I am now standing on the words of the Lord and not on feelings only. It is not always easy to keep my thoughts all on Christ. Sometimes I awake and find that every thought is not in captivity with Christ. Then comes the Holy Spirit and reveals to me that every legitimate or necessary thought for the performance of my duty is as much in captivity with Christ as the thought given to Christ himself.

We must feed on meat and not always on milk (1 Corinthians 3: 2) if we would grow into full manhood and womanhood in Christ. It is the storms that beat against the oak that makes it the giant that it is, so the Lord teaches us, by diminishing the joy, to stand on his word and not on feelings. We must make it a duty to refer everything to him and watch for his answer. If we do this, he will never fail to let us know what his will is for us.

I have missed but very few Sabbaths' preaching; some Sundays three times. I work hard all the week. I am not able to walk, but I have the advantage of the railroad and trolley cars to all the places I go. I go alone most of the time. Brother Entekin assists me in some of my meetings. Bro. F. M. Slover spent two weeks with us. His noble sermons strengthened us and gave new courage to the writer. We are striving to keep the work moving.

Let us come boldly to the throne of grace. Oh! for such a baptism of the Holy Spirit as will drive away all fear of the Evil One. The writer longs for that purity of spirit that is transparency itself. Pray that I may be healed of my afflictions and do more this year for the Master, and I ever pray for the grand angel's message to reach the hearts of all people.

Your brother in the one faith,

R. M. KING.

FRASER, IOWA, February 15, 1911.

Editors Herald: There are some pleasant remembrances in a minister's experience that cheer along the way, and gladden the hearts of those who are able to appreciate the kindness of others. Kind words and Christian actions are long remembered by those who are thus favored, even though little or nothing is said about them. And what is best of all, they are ever remembered by the Judge of all, who has promised to reward and bless those who have given a cup of cold water to one of his disciples, because he is a representative of the "Lord's Christ." Those who do all they can for the comfort and the assistance of the servant of Christ and those dependent upon him will evidently reap a rich reward. There are many of these worthy souls in the Des Moines District, as well as in other fields of labor. I remember the kindness of Bro. and Sr. W. C. Nirk, of Rhodes, Iowa, and other Saints of that town. At Clear Creek the kindness of Bro. and Sr. James Veach and family was enjoyed. Even "Old Dan" came in for his share. The kindness of Bro. Charles Nirk and family, and Bro. and Sr. Hampton was enjoyed and is appreciated, as well as the kindness of others in that vicinity. May their usefulness increase.

A fine Thanksgiving dinner was furnished the writer at the home of Bro. and Sr. Orman Salisbury, where I was furnished a fine resting place and the kindness of others in the city of Des Moines is remembered with gratitude, even though their names are not mentioned. I was called upon to preach in the city Thanksgiving evening and the evening following, and enjoyed the privilege very much.

Later I was royally entertained by Bro. Henry Casting and wife, Bro. John Park and family, Bro. James E. Laughlin and family, at Runnells, Iowa, where I labored in the town for two weeks, and enjoyed my work there, even if I did not succeed in "turning the world upside down."

At Perry I found a pleasant home with Bro. William Doss and family, and enjoyed the hospitality of Bro. and Sr.

Charles Martin and others. The zeal of Sister Martin is indeed commendable; and there are a number of other good workers in the same town, but they stand much in need of a good church building in this town.

At Colo, Iowa, I found a little band of noble, self-sacrificing Saints who are much interested in the good work of the church, and did what they could to make the meetings a success. When Bro. J. W. Peterson and the writer were holding meetings in the Center Schoolhouse, of Sherman Township, Story County, Iowa, four miles north and one mile east of Colo, a carriage load of these good Saints came out nearly every night to help us in our work, and their presence did us much good, and helped the good work along. This is a new opening, and the attendance of nonmembers was excellent. Brother Peterson remained with me at this place for about six days, and then returned to Des Moines to assist in meetings there, and I continued the meetings there and at Colo some fifteen days longer.

I next took up work at Boone in connection with Bro. Clement Malcor, who seems to be in charge of the work there. For a while I made my stopping place with this brother and family, and could but admire the kindness of his excellent wife to her aged invalid parents, Bro. and Sr. Evans. Surely she is laying up treasures in heaven for herself, by her loyalty and goodness to her parents. May the Lord remember, reward, and bless.

The last few days of my stay at Boone were at the home of Bro. and Sr. William McBirnie, who made my stay with them very pleasant indeed; and I enjoyed the hospitality of Bro. Henry Pratt and family, and Bro. Charles Bacus and family, where I had the pleasure of uniting in marriage Mr. A. A. Miller and Sr. Maybel Bacus.

I am now laboring at Fraser, Iowa, and making my home with Bro. and Sr. James Wallace Deal, who are now members in the church, having been baptized into Christ since the reunion that was held here last August.

Perhaps I should have stated in the proper place, that while laboring north of Colo, Bro. J. W. Peterson and the writer made our home with Bro. and Sr. H. H. Matingly, who made our stay with them pleasant, and did what they could to assist in the work.

It is pleasant indeed when the children of God are agreed, and can labor together unitedly for their own development, the salvation of souls, for the spread of the truth, and to the honor and glory of God. Why should little matters interfere with that true fellowship that should characterize the children of the covenant, when the Lord has spoken so encouragingly to his people about such matters, as follows: "And now I say unto mine elders, apostles and high priests of my church, continue ye in the ministry unto which you have been called; and if ye can not fully agree on all the points of my law, be patient and not contentious; so far as you can agree work together without heat, confusion, or malice. Ye are equal in worth of position and place in the work of the church; and if in honor ye shall prefer one another, ye will not strive for precedence or place in duty or privilege, and shall be blessed of me. Yea, verily, thus saith the Lord, unto the elders of the church; continue in steadfastness and faith. Let nothing separate you from each other and the work whereunto you have been called; and I will be with you by my Spirit and presence of power unto the end."—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 16, 17.

The letters of Brn. Gomer T. Griffiths and F. G. Pitt have been very interesting, so far as I have been permitted to read them. Sometimes I am where they do not take the church papers. While those elders are at Jerusalem, it might be interesting to many to have a writeup about the various pools that we read about in the Bible, that are located in Jerusalem and vicinity, if they have not done so already. Ever since I have been doing ministerial work I have met with an objection against the three thousand who were added on the Day of Pentecost having been immersed, because, as it is stated, there was no place suitable for such purpose. The fact that our missionaries in the Holy Land spend two days in order to go to the River Jordan to baptize a few who desire to unite with our church, seems to give strength to the objection. If they have already written on this point, and that fact has escaped my notice, they will please excuse the writer for thus referring to this subject.

I am interested in the Lord's work, feeling sure that it brings light and hope, peace and joy, and much good to those who believe and obey the gospel, both in this life, and in that higher and grander condition of life that is promised to every true disciple of Christ when his work in this sphere is finished. But love is unselfish, and inspires those who have been warned to warn their neighbors. Those who have been rescued can not be at ease unless they are making a reasonable effort to save others, according to the provisions of the law of Christ. Obedience and faith, humility and goodness, brings to those who thus do the will of God his Holy Spirit. The Spirit is the greatest educator in the world, and should be earnestly sought by every child of God.

"Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure."—1 John 3: 2, 3.

Yours in gospel bonds,

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

Jots by the Wayside.

Through mud and rain, over wooded hills and marshy vales, transported on mountain stage, on horseback and rail, we have just returned from a five-week trip and a partial circle around the Southwestern Oregon District. We have not yet ascertained where the boundary lines are, or how many counties comprise the district, nor do we know whether or not it is ascertainable. We are sure, however, that a large portion of the district has been sadly neglected by our elders, who have followed only a few cowpaths between the old branches near the coast.

In our travels, seeking the "lost sheep," we have journeyed in Coos, Curry, Josephine, Douglass, and Jackson counties, preaching in new places and encouraging the scattered ones. Two old-time Saints are worthy of mention, T. T. Allen formerly of western Iowa, located now at Bandon, who with his amiable wife are spending their declining years on the ocean's shore, within hearing of the mystic music of the mighty waves. Brother Allen was a schoolboy with ye "Jots Man," our first school near "Hilly Garners." Many of your western Iowa readers will remember Brother Allen and doubtless will be glad to know he is sound in the faith of the Reorganized Church. The other is Sr. Mary Griffiths, of Gold Hill, Jackson County, Oregon, who in the early fifties followed the enticing, illusive rainbow hues of the Brighamite fraud, tramping nearly all the way from the Missouri River to Salt Lake City, only to be sorely disappointed and nearly heart-broken, from which her husband never fully recovered, dying many years ago, poisoned and embittered against all religions, bringing more or less a withering blight upon his numerous family. If there is no hell, there should be a good sized one made for those who knowingly, wittingly, and willfully lead innocent souls into such delusive oblivion. Yet with faltering steps and tear-dimmed eyes they were still more blinded by the poetic musings of Clayton, Phelps, and Eliza R. in such as "Redeemer of Israel," "Come, come, ye Saints," and "I have a mother in heaven." All such revamped Brighamized hymns should be stricken from our books. [The last named is not in our collection.—EDITORS.]

Our aged Sister Griffiths is strong in the faith of the Reorganization, and pays her tithes every year, to the last penny. May the Lord bless her for the integrity of her soul, and bring some of her lovable children into the fold ere she passes. There are many other old-time Saints in the district, the products of the labors of Elders J. C. Clapp, Chase, Holt, Griffiths, Harris, Luff, Condit, Crumley, and others. The Brethren Giles, Kinnecut, Daggert, and Conover, of Myrtle Point; Culver, of Camas Valley; Boyd, Corson, Hunt, and Tucker of Bandon; Buell, of Roseburg; Smith, Mast, Minard, May of Gravelford, are among the pioneer Saints of the district.

At Ashland, in the Rogue River Valley, we find Sister Shaver, formerly of Wisconsin, mother-in-law to Peter Muceus, missionary to far off Norway, and Ben Longsdorff, of Cameron, Missouri. Her husband is an old-time enemy to the church, yet he received us gladly and kindly and seemed to be "tickled" to see anything that had been in Wisconsin. Sister Shaver is the only Saint in Ashland. Many of those isolated ones are almost overjoyed to see an elder. It is the oasis in the desert to them. At Phoenix we find Bro. C. A. Walruff, who is manfully battling against odds and adversity, yet firm in the faith and willing to assist. We baptized his two oldest sons. We left others interested. Our Brother Walruff will continue the lessons and will look after their baptism in due time.

From here we drop down to Medford, the queen city of the valley, and much the best part of Oregon that we have seen. Jackson County lies largely in this valley, which has an area of three thousand square miles, as large as the States of Delaware and Rhode Island combined. The average altitude is fifteen hundred feet. The south boundary is the California line, bordered on the east and south by the Siskiyou Mountains, on the west and north by the Cascade range. The snow-capped sentinels that overlook the sun-kissed valley, the beautiful range with its multi-colored, forest clad hills are in striking contrast indeed. Through a notch in the mountain range, apparently sawed by a Master hand, the wild, turbulent, foaming waters go plunging through to the sea.

Medford is the metropolis of the valley, a new, bustling, thriving city of nearly ten thousand souls. Here we met Bro. E. C. Aylor, brother in the flesh to our irrepressible William M. Aylor, the Texas missionary. We baptized Sister Aylor and ordained E. C., by direction of the Spirit to the office of priest, and feel assured that if faithful he will be favorably heard from in years to come.

In Camas Valley we preached the funeral of Peter Martindale, a relative of our Brother Culver. A large concourse of people gathered to pay due respect to their departed neighbor. We had fine liberty in presenting the hopes of the resurrection to Saint and sinner. Aunt Nancy Martindale, the mother of the deceased, was a Fitzhugh, and her mother was the first white child born in Independence, Missouri, and was a grandchild to the Dickeys. The Fitzhughs figured largely in the Mormon war of 1833 to 1838. And so it is the children are saying, "Surely our fathers inherited lies."

And now after a trip of over five hundred miles, we are back to Myrtle Point awaiting the meeting of our conference, which will be on the 11th of February. Our year's work has not been satisfactory to us, and may not have been to any others. We have baptized only nine during the year, opened up several new places, and otherwise assisted as best we could under the circumstances. Doubtless others who may follow will profit from our labors. It is said, "Grief can take care of itself, but to get full value of a joy, one must divide it with others." We are willing to divide. If water hath any virtue in the gospel economy we feel assured we are fully absolved, and we wish some others we know of to take the field. Would be happy if I could select.

However, as a whole we like this mission. Many warm-hearted Saints and a few who are not so warm. But we shall not lay a straw in their way to get warmer. The one all important subject in this western world is money getting. It is the theme of every crowd where the bridle is off, the biggest thing in the country, and the man that does not enter in is in a hopeless minority. The moneyed tenderfoot is watched with the tenderest care. We should be grateful for fools; without them many could not exist.

We shall soon turn our steps toward the Zion land, the home of the blessed and good. We hope to live right, and be so good that even our undertaker will feel sorry when we die.

Jots.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. Fannie M. Hendrickson, of Badger, Idaho, writes: "I live in the Teton Branch, near the great Teton peaks, surrounded by Brighamites. Bro. A. J. Layland, during the month of January, held some very good meetings. Sorry they don't come oftener. I ask the Prayer Union and Saints to pray for my dear daughter, who has been sick for seven years and has not been able to do any work. I had asthma for sixteen years, but through the blessings of our Father and his Son Jesus Christ I am now well, and I am thankful."

Bro. Andre M. Fisher, of Loyd, Wisconsin, writes: "I am getting lonesome. When I lived in a branch I thought it would not be hard to live a Christian life out in the world, but I found out differently when I got out in it. We moved here over a year ago, and I have not been to our church in all the time. Brothers and sisters, I miss you! I am only a young man, but I need your prayers. The Devil is trying hard to lead me astray, but I hope that in the near future I can get away from here and back to some branch. Back through the fiery trial to the true and living gospel; so that when the end comes our Master will say, Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter into the joys of my kingdom, is my prayer."

News From Missions

Clinton, Missouri.

This is a large district and the laborers are few. While we have not turned the world upside down, we are making some progress.

On the 11th and 12th, at Eldorado Springs, we held another one of our peaceful, spiritual conferences. Brn. Hale W. Smith and R. O. Self did the preaching. Sunday afternoon in testimony meeting we had the gift of tongues and interpretation, in which were words of warning and encouragement, with the declaration that God's wrath would soon be visited upon the nations of the earth, and that the times of the Gentiles were about full.

I have labored mostly among the branches, trying to urge the Saints to a pure, consecrated life to the service of the Master, and I believe that a goodly number are moving up higher. Some others are indifferent, and others need correction.

Elder W. S. Macrae, in the early part of the fall held a successful meeting at Lewis, a new opening. Two were baptized. Recently he held a series of meetings near Butler. A number of years ago there was a branch in that locality, but it was disorganized before I came to this field, ten years ago. Five were baptized there, and others are believing. Brother Macrae is now engaged in an effort at Rich Hill, and I hear he is having quite an interesting meeting.

I recently visited Fort Scott and Mapleton, Kansas, where Bro. Lee Quick and family reside. The lives of this family in that locality have favorably impressed their neighbors with the angel's message. Nine or ten have been baptized in the past year; others will obey ere long; and the prospect is favorable for the organization of a branch in the near future.

While I was at Mapleton three or four elders of the Brighamite church put in an appearance at Fort Scott. They came to the Saints' hall two or three times. They had some talk with our elders and they were told when Brother Moler would be there and were kindly invited to attend our meeting. Said they would do so if they could. When I came our people waited on the elders and informed them that I was there, but they did not come. I sent them a special invitation to come, and that they were welcome to the use of our hall, and that we were anxious to have them come and tell the people what they believe and why they believe it, then we would set forth our claims. They replied, "We don't want to debate." We told them that we were not asking them to debate, nor challenging them; but, as many of the people of Fort Scott claimed that we were the same, we desired them to set forth their claims. They did not come. I suppose, Ephraim-like, they are "joined to their idols."

We wish we could have more laborers in this field who would push out into new fields. There are some counties in this district which have never had the gospel preached at all, or at most but a very few times. There might be some sheep there.

May the good old HERALD speed on with the message of life and peace. My hope and my all is in this the gathering dispensation. The Lord has been good to me and the gospel has made me all that I am. The angel's message came to me twenty-nine years ago, and it filled my soul with gladness. Ever hoping and working for the triumph of the gospel, I think I am safe in saying that I am in the faith, trusting and waiting.

I left home June 6 for my field and arrived at Spokane in time for district conference, at which time the church at that place was dedicated by T. W. Chatburn. The good Spirit was enjoyed by all.

After conference, the writer, in company with Patriarch E. Keeler, left for Hood River, Oregon. On our way we stopped at Frecwater, Oregon, and baptized a brother. Arrived at Hood River in time for conference, and I must say this was one of the best I ever attended.

After conference was over, Bro. M. H. Cook and the writer remained and conducted tent meetings for two or three weeks. The results were, ten were baptized. From there we moved the tent to Vancouver, Washington, and labored for about three weeks. One young man was baptized by Brother Cook. We moved the tent from there to Lebanon, Oregon, but we were handicapped there by a union meeting of the popular churches. However, one was baptized at that point, and I believe good can be accomplished there yet. Our worthy Bro. M. H. Cook's home is there.

From there we moved the tent to Estacada, Oregon, where eleven honest souls came into the kingdom. Twenty-four in all came into the church during tent season, which closed at Estacada. We felt we had done some good.

After that, the writer held a week's meetings in Portland, and baptized three young people. Since leaving home, June 6, he has led fifteen into the water. Left Portland some time in November for Centralia, Washington, and held a week's meetings. I found some lively Saints there, and I must say I enjoyed myself, the good Spirit being present throughout our services. Brethren Johnson, Thorburn, and others have done some excellent work there, and I believe there is a fine prospect.

After leaving Centralia I labored in and near Ellensburg, Washington, in what is known as the Kittitas Valley. Had a hard time to get a hearing in these parts on account of prejudice. But there is a good, faithful little branch of the church in Ellensburg. With the help of the brethren I am confident we have done lots of good. One of the best openings we ever made was in a little town by the name of Kittitas, three years old.

A Baptist minister made a big fight against us, to get the people to stay away. We had secured the use of the church and had spoken a few nights to a good audience, but one day in Ellensburg the preacher beckoned me to come over where he and one of his good sisters were in conversation about my meetings. He asked me if I preached that baptism was a saving ordinance and I told him I did. "Well," said he, "I don't believe that." I told him Jesus Christ taught it. "Well, I don't believe it," said he. I told him I was not preaching Baptist doctrine but the doctrine of Christ. He told me if I was, he would run me out. I left his church and went to the schoolhouse because he refused to preach there any longer if they let me continue. We removed much prejudice and made many friends to the cause. I believe baptisms would result if the work were followed up. I hope the brethren who are sent to this field will not forget this opening. It is a good place for a gospel tent next summer, the early part of the season, say about June.

I expect to return home soon. I have been wonderfully blessed in my efforts this conference year.

Your brother in Christ,

We closed a very profitable conference here February 12, one of the edifying kind. Bro. J. F. Curtis, of the Twelve, was present; also Bro. E. L. Henson, our minister in charge. After conference Brethren Curtis, Henson, and Richards went to Lagonda to organize a branch with twenty-six members. I am to remain at Bevier and conduct a series of meetings, and am having a large attendance.

Lagonda is the place the writer, in company with Bro. E. L. Henson, visited last December and held a three weeks' meeting. We had a large attendance in the new Menifee Schoolhouse. Some had recently been baptized by Brethren Henson and Richards, causing quite a stir among our Campbellite friends. When a lady asked us for baptism, and it was announced for the next Sunday, the phones got busy from New Cambria all over the country. What a dilemma they were in; not a man among them was thought able to meet the emergency, so they sent and bought a lot of books, the product of a certain Rev. Samuel W. Traum, of Richmond, Indiana. Its title was, Mormonism Against Itself. These were circulated in the neighborhood, causing some comment. A copy came into our hands, so we gave it a look over, and placed a notice on the blackboard that we would give a review of Mr. Traum's book on the following Thursday evening. Our attendance increased nightly. Brother Henson and myself enjoyed good liberty telling the gospel of the angel's message. When Thursday came the house was crowded. Extra seats were provided, a large crowd standing. Bro. E. L. Henson had charge of the services and the writer made the review. Two Campbellite preachers came into the stand, Reverends Ramsey and Yocum; another, Reverend Shoemaker, sitting in front seat; also a Reverend Green being present. Under these auspices the review began.

This book, in my opinion, is the silliest production I ever saw. He quotes the testimony of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, and leaves out eleven words, adds eight, changes others, and then calls them hypocrites and deceivers. In the testimony of the eight witnesses he loses six words and then gets very merry at the man of straw he erects. In his mad zeal to cast a reflection on the Book of Mormon, he proves to his satisfaction that there was a nation of people here on the American continent, over four thousand years before Christ. We remarked that this places them here before Adam was created. Also he quotes from Doctrine and Covenants 9: 3, leaves out six words and then tries to be sarcastic. He simply mutilates Tullidge's book in quoting from it.

At the close of the review, we stated that Joseph Smith in 1830 announced to the world that Jesus Christ would come again to the earth in person just as he went away. All the leading churches at that time cried out unitedly that this was a heresy. Also, he announced to the world that hell was a pit or prison; or, if you please, a condition. Then all the leading churches cried out, That is a damnable heresy. We asked, Was it not passing strange that all those churches are now teaching as true doctrine what they then branded as damnable heresies. At that Brother Green arose and asked if he would be disturbing religious services by making a statement. He was told to proceed. He then demanded an apology of me from the fact that the church he represented did not now nor at any other time ever teach that old doctrine that hell was a literal fire, and requested me to retract my statements about all the churches so teaching. I told him I had no reference whatever to the church he was representing, for I had said "all the leading churches," and I had no reference to that to which he belonged; that was liable to teach anything, so he need not get worried. He became embarrassed, but his wife could not persuade him to sit down. Then he said, "Will you explain to this people the forty-sixth verse of the eighteenth chapter of Matthew, in harmony with Joe Smith and his doctrine." I told him I would gladly do so, but that there was only thirty-five verses in that chapter. The audience applauded. After we had called them to order an old gentleman arose and said, "Brother Green, you may preach all right over in your neck of the woods, but you had better let that feller alone."

He was not satisfied, so he asked me if I would explain the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, about the sheep and goats. I told him I would. I quoted the statement and set up a book to represent the "sheep," another book to represent the "goats," and another to represent the "brethren." Called the attention of all to the fact that Jesus does not commend the sheep because they believed in God or had faith in Christ, or had obeyed the gospel, but rather because they had done good works. They had fed the hungry, clothed the naked, visited the sick, etc. These same things the goats had failed to do, and were punished. There were at least three classes in this judgment scene. This seemed to satisfy the people.

In a moment the Reverend Ramsey asked the privilege of a question. It was granted. He asked: "Do you believe, sir, that Peter laid hands on the household of Cornelius?"

I answered, "Yes, sir; I presume he did."

"You presume so?"

"Yes, sir; don't you think so?"

"No, sir; I don't."

"Very well, then, I will explain why I presume so. From the fact that when Peter went to Samaria (Acts 8) he laid his hands on the people there and they received the Holy Spirit. He came over to the house of Cornelius and they received the Holy Ghost just like the people of Samaria, and I presume he taught and practiced the same in both places. Now, sir; will you please arise and tell the people why you don't presume that Peter laid his hands on the household of Cornelius?"

"No, sir; I don't want to discuss any question."

Then Reverend Yocum said he would like to ask a question: "Do you believe Joseph Smith to be a prophet of God, sir?" We answered that we did.

He then asked, "Will you defend him as such?"

"Yes, sir; providing you will deny."

"No, sir; but I will get a man to do so."

We advised him to wait until the other man came. He might not like the question or the answer. It was not a good idea for one man to take in theological washing for others. Thus we closed the evening effort.

After a short while, I received a letter written by Mr. S. W. Traum, the author of the book, asking for the facts in the matter of the review. So I sent him a short sketch of the line followed by me. He wrote me again and admitted that most of my criticisms were just and asked me to take the book, chapter by chapter, and review it for him, hinting at a prospective debate some time in the future. I replied that I was not interested enough neither had I the time and disposition to provide him with a cheap review from my standpoint, and that I was reminded of one of old who said, "Oh, that mine enemy had written a book."

There is and has been considerable sickness in this field during the fall and winter, and the writer has not escaped. Now that the rains have begun to fall and refresh everything we hope it will all pass by. We trust that the coming conference year will be a successful one. We feel like doing all we can for this work, which we all love so much.

W. H. KELLEY, of Independence.

BEVIER, MISSOURI, February 16, 1911.

[We have in hand an exhaustive review of Mr. Traum's book, Mormonism Against Itself, by Elder S. W. L. Scott, which we will present our readers at an early date.—EDITORS.]

Ohio.

Having been appointed to the Ohio District I began my labors in Middletown in May. Continued my services there until the reunion at New Philadelphia in August. No doubt you have already learned through the papers what a grand time was had. Many spiritual manifestations. A time of education to all.

I was transferred from the Ohio District to the Kirtland District for a while, laboring in the city of Cleveland, speaking in park, in cottage, on street, and in the church. Was handicapped a part of the time; for city work is very difficult, at times. I did some tract distributing and house to house visiting during the year, which of course is very necessary. I found Saints in both Middletown and Cleveland who were proficient and willing workers. I also found some sound asleep, or dead; difficult to discern which. Would that some Saints could be more united, knowing what we have to meet from without.

I was transferred back to the Ohio District and the first of the year I began some meetings at Wellston. I spoke a number of evenings in a cottage; some interest shown there. While in Wellston I attended a Sunday morning preaching service at the United Brethren church. The pastor treated me royally. He invited me upon the platform with him, and by his request I offered the opening prayer. Well, I believe a few people here and there by close inspection are learning that we are not armed with horns.

I soon heard of some few Saints residing at Glenroy, so I went over for a call. They informed me that there was a Baptist church building there, they would try to procure. They succeeded in doing so, although our people had always failed before. The Methodists were holding forth in the same town, but we gained a full house in a few evenings. Prejudice removed, interest gained. The pastor's appointment was sandwiched in our meetings. He was loyal, on the spot. I was not recognized by him till he took his text. It was not a new one, however. It read as follows: "When the sons of God came together Satan came also." Here is one of his comments: "I'll tell you, brethren, Satan sometimes appears behind the pulpit. He is at your threshold now. He is bold and hard to get rid of. You can only do it by falling upon your knees in humble prayer," etc. One of his prominent members told me she was satisfied he was mad when he preached that sermon. Of course I was accused of being a stirrer up of strife by setting forth a new doctrine.

From Glenroy I went to Davisville and occupied a church of our own. I spoke one evening but had contracted a cold which settled on my lungs and I saw unless God came to my rescue in some way I should not be able to continue. Bro. O. B. Thomas, who was on his way to an appointment, stopped off the same day. I was glad to see him, as I had never met him, and because I desired to be administered to and wanted him to fill my appointment a few evenings. He remained and spoke three evenings, after which he went on to his appointment and I continued the meetings.

As soon as our meetings were well advertised, the house did not hold the people. 6.30 p. m. would find the seats filled and the last few evenings the aisle was crowded till I had to push my way through to the pulpit; many were turned away, I learned.

Never in my life was I blessed as well in delivering the angel's message as I was at this place. One evening I spoke one hour and forty-five minutes with the best of order and attention I ever had. Only one left the house and he was a preacher. When I began to speak he began to nod assent; but soon he reversed the lever and his head took a different movement, from a nod to a shake. My usual time is about fifty minutes, but this was a special subject, and I had a special blessing in delivering it. I think any speaker with one eye can surely see when his auditors are becoming restless and wearied, and ought to know enough to quit before he wearies them out completely.

I baptized seven, all adults, and five of them were heads of families. Many more seemed deeply interested. The people seem to be starving for the gospel. Oh, that some Saints would arise from lethargy and comply with the financial law, so that many more laborers might be sent out, for the fields are surely white, ready to harvest.

Hopefully,

O. R. MILLER.

KNOBNOSTER, MISSOURI, after March 1.

From Cuba has come the suggestion that a translation of Edison: His Life and Inventions would reach in a beneficial way the Spanish-reading youth. The suggestion was made to the Harpers by a citizen of Havana who says that already American educational and scientific books are becoming known, through translations, to the present school-going generation. He adds that these books are eagerly read and suggests that the wonderful rise and achievements of Edison would fire the young Cuban mind with ambition.

News From Branches.

Coalville, Iowa.

It is with pleasure I once more inform you of our procedure in central Iowa. I feel with many others to rejoice in this glorious gospel, for it is certainly a grand work to be in. We are trying to hold up the cause of Christ in this part as best we can; and, I presume, like all other branches, we find opposition in and out of the church. We are not discouraged, but hope to continue to the end.

We have a fine Sunday school. Bro. Samuel Dixon is president and is the right man for the place. He is alive in the work. Without life in Sunday school, branch, or any kind of work, little good is done. A good many outside people attend our school and manifest more interest than some of our members; in fact, they know more about the church and can make a better defense against opposition to the truth. We hope the time is not far away when they will be one with us. I believe they will be good Saints. We have the Religio here, but not as much interest as we would like to see, but in the future we hope to see attention given to this great auxiliary. It is a fine place to build up the local talent and to prepare them for great usefulness in the church. We are glad to note that the local preachers are developing and responding to the wants of the people and helping to educate them to the gospel. May the Lord bless us all and help us to see eye to eye.

JOHN JORDISON.

Independence, Missouri.

The preachers who have occupied the stand since January 1, are Bishop R. Bullard, J. A. Dowker, W. H. Garrett, M. H. Bond, E. L. Kelley, A. H. Parsons, R. May, John Kaler, G. E. Harrington, and J. F. Curtis. Six little darlings have been blessed, and three adults baptized.

Several of the brethren and sisters have lately been called away by the oft-welcomed reaper,—Ella E. Smith and Elbert E. Willis, who were well along in years; Eldon G. Moore, a promising youth of sixteen; Joseph L. Esslin, a member of Mount Zion Sunday school; and Georgia A. Post,—all in the faith of the restored gospel. There have been two ordinations: Bro. Lester Brackenbury, teacher, was ordained a priest, and G. C. Connelly an elder.

The prayer and preaching meetings, also those of the Sunday school and Religio, not excepting those of the helpful societies and clubs have been well attended, until quite recently. First a rainy, and then a very cold, snowy season set in, keeping at home many of the children and aged ones.

February 1 was a beautiful day, and our beloved Brother Joseph, accompanied by Brother Dexter, made a call or two on Saints and friends at the west end of town, making the very best of a short interim of comparative freedom from pain and intense suffering.

On the first Sunday morning of February, after the usual organ offertory and opening hymn and prayer by Brother Bond, Elder Joseph Luff began the preaching service by stating the exact time of day, 11.26. Then the doctor read his favorite text, Ecclesiastes 10:1 (the one in reference to the "apothecary's ointment"), and, of course, filled a good long hour, discoursing on the necessity of leading a pure life, shunning all its follies, and putting the whole soul's affections on an untiring career in the service of God, consecrated life.

On February 12, a large congregation, including Brother Joseph, enjoyed a grand organ offertory by our gifted brother, R. G. Smith, accompanied by Brother Hoxie, jr., of Boston, on the violin, and also an excellent discourse delivered by Elder L. E. Hills on the subject of the "two priesthoods." The sermon showed deep research, and at the close the speaker's testimony concerning the divinity of the work was grand and inspiring.

At the evening service Bro. M. H. Bond introduced Bro. Clarence G. Clark very cordially, as one with whom he had labored in Chicago. This young preacher, modest, unassuming, with speech unemphasized by needless gestures, and with subdued voice, pursued his theme, "The Savior's conversation with Nicodemus," as recorded in John, third chapter. As we listened, we could but think how widely different was the Savior's mild instruction, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born again he can not see the kingdom of God," from the dramatic pleadings and the noisy scene we had witnessed lately at a revival where "two hundred and seventy-five had been converted." As the poet pertinently inquires, so we say:

"Have you ever thought, my friend,
As daily you toil and plod
In the noisy paths of man,
How still are the ways of God."

Conference Minutes.

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—District conference met at First Chicago Branch, January 21, 1911. Elders F. M. Cooper and J. A. Tanner were chosen to preside over conference. Statistical reports were read from the following branches: West Pullman, last report 30, present number 27; First Chicago, last report 164, present number 163; Dekalb, last report 56, present number 54; Mission, last report 121, present number 119; Sandwich, last report 81, present number 83; Wilmington, last report 66, present number 70; Central Chicago, last report 138, present number 139; Unity, last report 29, present 28; Plano, last 162, present 167. Bishop's agent reported: Balance and receipts $1,629.10; expenses $879.95; balance due church $749.15. Auditing committee reported account correct. District treasurer reported: Balance on hand last report $2.66; paid for postage, 38 cents; balance on hand $2.28. Bro. J. Midgorden tendered his resignation as assistant district president and Bishop's agent. By motion they were accepted. A vote of thanks was given Brother Midgorden for the efficient manner in which he has performed his work, both as assistant district president and Bishop's agent. Bro. James F. Kier was recommended to Bishop Kelley as his agent for this district. Brother Cooper made a plea for a better system for branch officials to report. Elders J. A. Tanner, L. O. Wildermuth, and C. H. Burr were appointed to investigate this matter, with a view to the preparation of such blanks as may meet the demands of the work. Elder L. O. Wildermuth was elected vice-president of the district. Bro. J. A. Tanner, Bro. and Sr. F. M. Cooper, and thirty-five others were appointed delegates to General Conference. Adjourned to meet with the Mission Branch, June 10 and 11, 1911. W. E. Williamson, secretary.

DES MOINES.—District conference met at Runnells, Iowa, February 4 and 5, 1911. Bro. O. Salisbury, district president, presiding. Branch statistical reports were read as follows: Des Moines 371, gain 25; Des Moines Valley 119, no change; Fraser 31, gain 3; Rhodes 65, gain 2. Ministerial reports were read from the following: Elders Joseph Knox, O. Salisbury, C. B. Brown, Fred Wells, J. F. Laughlin, E. O. Clark, Henry Pratt; Patriarch C. E. Butterworth; High Priest W. C. Nirk; Seventy: J. F. Mintun, W. Christy, J. W. Peterson; Priests Henry Castings, W. T. Maitland, Frank Walters, F. D. Robertson; Teacher J. Daugherty. Bishop's agent reported the following for the year 1910: On hand last report, $66.08; receipts, $1,312.76; total, $1,378.84. Disbursements, $1,068.27; balance on hand, $310.57. The following resolution was passed: "Whereas, the Lord has given a command to the 'men of God who bear the vessels of the Lord' to 'avoid the use of tobacco, and be not addicted to strong drink in any form, that your counsel to be temperate may be made effectual by your example,' and in agreement with that required by this command, be it hereby Resolved, That we, as a district, will not consent to the ordination of any man to any office in the church who is addicted to the use of tobacco, or strong drink in any form; and, be it further Resolved, That the attention of those who have been ordained and continue the use of tobacco or strong drink in any form be called to the command above referred to (see Doctrine and Covenants 119: 3,) and to General Conference resolution No. 217, which reads: 'that this body declare that the use of tobacco is expensive, injurious and filthy, and that it should be discouraged by the ministry.'" E. O. Clark, district secretary, 2500 Logan avenue, Des Moines, Iowa.

LITTLE SIOUX.—District conference met at Moorhead, Iowa, February 4 and 5. Sessions in charge of district president, Sidney Pitt, sr., and his assistant, Joseph W. Lane. They were assisted by missionaries J. W. Wight and W. A. Smith. President Pitt reported an upward trend all over the district. The majority of the branches were not only able to help themselves, but able and willing to supply ministers to occupy in the surrounding places. Found local labor by branch officers insufficient in all the branches, and urged compliance with the law in this respect. Reports of the spiritual conditions in all the branches corroborated the statements of the district president. Statistical reports from the twelve branches of the district gave the following summary: Number belonging at last report 1,917; present number 1,940, a gain of 19 by baptism, and 11 by letter, and a loss of 1 by letter and 6 by death; a net gain of 23. Membership included 1 patriarch, 1 high counselor, 4 high priests, 3 seventy, 41 elders, 33 priests, 32 teachers, and 20 deacons. Ministerial reports were received from 33 of the local priesthood, showing much labor in a general way, not specifically mentioned, as well as 433 sermons preached, 436 times presided, 10 priesthood meetings attended, 48 official visits made, 1,103 other services attended, 22 baptisms, 12 confirmations, 16 children blessed, 2 marriages solemnized, and 245 sick administered to. A. M. Fyrando, Bishop's agent, reported: On hand October 1, 1910, $110.43. Received from tithes and offerings from Oct. 1 to Feb. 1, $1,492.82. Total cash $1,603.25. Paid elders' families and aid to poor, $478.30; remitted to Bishop Kelley, $1,000; total $1,478.30; balance on hand, $124.95. He also made annual report showing: Amount due church December 31, 1909, $103.01; received from tithes and offerings to December 31, 1910, $3,581.55; total cash, $3,684.56; paid to elders' families and the poor, $1,269.50; remitted to Bishop Kelley, $2,375; total $3,644.50; leaving a balance due church December 31, 1910, $40.06. This report and the books of the Bishop's agent were examined and found in harmony. J. R. Fry reported a lot in Missouri Valley had been purchased on which to build a church building. The lot cost $850. Of this amount $109 remained to be paid, for which a six month's note had been given. Outside aid had been received to amount of $69 since last conference. Moorhead had contributed $21, Mondamin $8, Little Sioux $5, and the balance collected in various other branches by the committee at large. The district clerk had furnished a list of the priesthood membership of the church to the general church authorities, as ordered by the conference, with a view to having them organized into quorums. Woodbine invited the next conference to meet there, and Sioux City also asked for it. The vote resulted: Sioux City 47 votes, Woodbine 19 votes. The date was fixed for June 3 and 4. Delegates to number of 77 were elected to represent the district at the General Conference. Instructed in case of division to cast majority and minority vote. The local ministry were instructed to make their reports to the president of their respective branches, who in turn would report to the district president, instead of reporting direct to the district conference as heretofore. It was moved by J. W. Wight, and seconded by W. W. Baker: "Resolved, That as a district we look with favor upon the project of uniting western Iowa and eastern Nebraska in holding an annual reunion, centrally located in the above described territory." On motion of J. C. Crabb, seconded by R. O. Mann, action on this resolution was deferred until next district conference by a vote of 64 in favor to 5 against. The speakers of the conference were J. C. Crabb, J. W. Wight, and W. A. Smith. James D. Stuart, clerk.

MASSACHUSETTS.—District conference met with the Boston Branch at Somerville, Massachusetts, February 4 and 5, 1911, under the guiding hand of missionary in charge, U. W. Greene, and district president, M. C. Fisher. The credential committee reported certificates in from eight branches, entitled to delegates, 143; number appointed, 123. Ministerial reports were read from C. H. Coombs, C. H. Rich, G. H. A. Gates, J. E. Rogerson, J. C. Hoxie, I. B. Ames, John Gilbert, A. N. Hoxie, sr., N. R. Nickerson, W. A. Sinclair, William Bradbury, F. W. Roberts, G. W. Robley. Summary of labors performed by the ministry as reported: Sermons 119; number services attended 435; meetings presided over 102; baptisms 6; confirmations 6; ordinations 3; children blessed 4; administrations 148; families visited 14; courts attended 1; five serve as presidents of branches; one, superintendent of Sunday school; one, Religio president. Statistical reports: Attleboro 57, loss 1; Brockton 34, gain 2; Boston 200, loss 1; Dennisport 65; Fall River 153; Haverhill 31; New Bedford 38; Plymouth 40; Providence 260; no report from Cranston 33; Little Compton 19; disorganized branches: Douglas 13; Pawtucket 6; Plainville 58; scattered 1; total membership for district 1,008. Nineteenth Quorum of Teachers report: Meetings attended 830, meetings presided over 28, assisted 24, sermons 11, official visits 82, literature distributed, 162 pieces, number of teachers in quorum 16; number reporting 18. Recommendations received: Brockton Branch, John C. Hoxie for ordination to office of elder; Boston Branch, Cecil Knowlton teacher; Herbert Eaton, deacon. These were referred to a committee of all the elders of conference. John C. Hoxie's ordination was referred to the mission and district presidency. Cecil Knowlton was ordained a teacher under the hands of C. H. Rich and M. C. Fisher. Herbert Eaton was ordained a deacon by M. C. Fisher and C. H. Rich. Herbert Ingersoll was ordained a priest by U. W. Greene and M. C. Fisher. Treasurer reported: Balance on hand last report, $65.77; income with balance, $90.67; expenditures, $28.85; balance on hand, $61.82. A committee of three, G. H. A. Gates, R. W. Farrell, and A. B. Phillips, were appointed by the chair to draft suitable resolutions on the death of Elder R. B. Howlett, a copy to be sent to the church papers and the family of deceased brother: "Whereas death has again entered the ranks of the priesthood and taken from our midst a beloved brother and faithful servant, Elder Richard B. Howlett, who departed this life December 31, 1910, we desire to pay some fitting tribute to his memory. Be it therefore Resolved, We recognize that by his unselfish devotion to the work of the church, and by his cheerful and obliging manner he endeared himself to the Saints of the district among whom he labored faithfully previous to his decease. We extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved members of his family; but with our sense of loss comes the assurance of his eternal gain in that bright world where the loving Father rewards his own. The motion prevailed that all holding priesthood in the district be ex officio members of our district conferences. Delegates to General Conference: U. W. Greene, M. C. Fisher, Daniel Macgregor, Maggie Macgregor, A. B. Phillips, R. W. Farrell, H. A. Koehler, E. H. Fisher, Sarah M. Fisher, Lucie Sears, S. F. Cushman, Mary O. Lewis, Florence E. Fisher, H. J. Davison, Ora V. Holmes, Albert N. Hoxie, jr., Edward Fox, Eva Glover, Laura Fraser. Motion prevailed that the delegates present cast the full vote of the district, and in case of division that they cast their proportionate part. Bishop's report: On hand last report, $1,962.51; income with balance, $5,777.97; expenditures, $4,670.91; balance on hand, $1,107.06. The auditors reported: "We have audited the bishop's books and report as follows: Mary R. Chase should be credited with $10 which did not appear on her account; Mary A. Flagg should be credited with $3 instead of $5; N. R. Nickerson was credited with $5, which should read $4; Arthur Nickerson was credited with $14, which should read $15; and cash that we could not account for $40.78; A. L. Sanford; Mary O. Lewis." The bishop stated that if any person had paid money whose name had not been called, and they could produce their receipt, he would be pleased to credit them with the amount on his book, that the $40.78 was for some one to claim. Election of officers resulted as follows: District president, Calvin H. Rich; counselors, Horatio W. Howlett, George H. A. Gates; secretaries W. A. Sinclair, S. E. Sinclair; auditing committee, Harry Kozman, Clara Johnson; treasurer, Fred W. Roberts; historian, W. A. Sinclair; member of library board, H. W. Howlett. Law regarding reporting: Resolved, That it be made obligatory that all officers reporting to the district conference do so on blanks provided by the district, and that the report be itemized, and any report being sent not in accordance with these instructions be not read, though they may be accepted by the conference. There were two baptized and confirmed and one baby blessed. The speakers were U. W. Greene and A. B. Phillips. The conference adjourned to meet at Fall River, October 7 and 8, 1911. W. A. Sinclair, M. D., clerk.

NORTHERN WISCONSIN.—Conference of Northern Wisconsin District met February 4 and 5 with the Frankfort Branch. President W. A. McDowell in chair, Leroy Colbert secretary pro tem. W. A. McDowell gave a synopsis of work accomplished in the past seven months, which was quite encouraging. Reports of secretary, treasurer, and Bishop's agent read and disposed of in usual way. Branch reports as follows: Reed, last report 83, present 89; Frankfort, last report 111, present 111; Fox River, last report 38, present 39; Evergreen, last report 95, present 103. All visiting members were given the right to vote on all questions. Election of officers was as follows: Leroy Colbert, district secretary; O. D. Gano, district treasurer. James Mair and Mrs. Isabelle Richardson were appointed a standing committee to audit the Bishop's agent's books at Chetek, and forward reports to conferences at the proper time. J. O. Dutton, W. P. Robinson, W. A. McDowell, and six others were appointed delegates to General Conference, the number present to cast the full vote and in case of a division, a majority and minority vote. Adjourned to meet at Chetek the last Saturday and Sunday of the reunion of 1911. All meetings were very well attended and J. O. Dutton and W. A. McDowell were the preachers of the angel's message, which was heard by some who never heard the truth in its fullness before. Leroy Colbert, district secretary.

EASTERN OKLAHOMA.—Conference was opened by district president H. R. Harder, February 11, 1911, at 10 a. m. By motion H. R. Harder and Lee Quick were chosen to preside. NORTHERN NEBRASKA.—Conference of the Northern Nebraska District met at Omaha, January 21, 1911, at 9 a. m., for prayer meeting, with H. L. Kinningag and J. N. Mann in charge. At 10 a. m. for business; the president of the district was chosen to preside, and he associated J. W. Wight in presiding. The secretary of the district was chosen as secretary of the conference. The Bishop's agent, H. S. Lytle, reported for the year: On hand $117.95; received $1,451.87; total $1,569.82; balance on hand $188.90. J. W. Wight called attention of the conference to the necessity of organizing territory for the purpose of organizing quorums of the priesthood, and the uniting of reunions, and suggested as such territory the Gallands Grove, Little Sioux, Pottawattamie, and Fremont districts in Iowa, and the Northern and Central districts in Nebraska. The conference passed a resolution looking with favor upon such a move, and a committee was appointed to work with other committees if such should be appointed by other districts, to effect such organization. The presidency and secretary of the district compose the committee. The following were elected as the officers for the coming year: J. M. Baker, president; M. A. Wetterson, associate president; Anna Hicks, secretary, who was also elected treasurer for the district. Her address is 3019 Pinkney street, Omaha. Walter T. Lowe, J. M. Baker, and nineteen others were elected delegates to General Conference. Place for holding the next conference, Blair, Nebraska. The time was left to the presidency, who selected June 10 and 11, 1911, with prayer meeting at 9 a. m., business at 10 a. m. Conference passed off pleasantly and with good feeling. The preaching was done by J. W. Smith and J. W. Wight. Brother Wight continued meetings with good interest the following week. J. M. Baker, per request of the secretary.

CLINTON.—District conference met with the Eldorado Springs Branch, February 11 and 12, 1911. Notice to Third Quorum of Elders.

We would like to see as many as can attend General Conference at Lamoni, Iowa, April 6, 1911. If you can not attend, be sure and send in your report of all labor done during the year to the secretary, Charles P. Faul, Stewartsville, Missouri.

H. J. THURMAN, President.

Notice to General Conference Visitors.

The undersigned have been appointed to act as a reception committee to assist in locating visitors at the coming General Conference. The Saints of the Lamoni Branch will entertain all visitors in their homes as best they can, and by vote have fixed the price of board and lodging at $4 per week.

In making applications for accommodations address all communications to the secretary of the committee. Let us know,

1. When do you expect to arrive?
2. How long do you expect to remain?
3. Do not ask for place for "myself and friend," but say who the friend is and save possible disappointment.
4. If husband and wife, and you expect to stay together, say so, or we may have to separate you if we do not know until you arrive.

Not many special accommodations are to be had, and we can not promise anything in this line, but if it is necessary that you have anything out of the ordinary, state your needs plainly and we will do the best we can for you.

It would be unwise for you to come if you are sick or feeble, or to bring children unless you have relatives or friends where you know you will be cared for.

You will be notified of your assignment as soon as possible after your application is received; so don't put it off, but write at once if you are coming and need the assistance of the committee.

We will meet all trains and show you to your places if you are not acquainted.

A Remarkable Vegetable Poison.

Under this head, the Scientific American of February 18, 1911, prints an instructive article showing that the seeds of the well known castor oil plant (ricinus) contains a poison that surpasses all other plants in its death-dealing power. It has long been known that these seeds proved fatal to animals that feed upon them or to children who swallowed them by accident, but until lately it was not known that ricinus contains a poison more active than strychnine or cyanine of potassium. One gramme of it is sufficient to kill one and one half million guinea pigs. As to its "poison stability" qualities, and its similarity to bacteria in its action upon the blood as a serum under certain conditions that are valuable to know, we must refer our readers to the Scientific American.

The castor oil plant is being used by many around their gardens, as a guard against moles, which are said to avoid the ground in which this plant grows. It might be safer to pluck the seeds as soon as they begin development, so that children or animals might not get hold of them.

Address Wanted.

I. THE TROUBLED MIND.

Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid.—John 14:27.

Jesus spoke dogmatically, but not presumptuously so. His declarations were positive, affirmative. He did not need to reason, or point to precedent, or submit evidence unless he chose to do so. He was God manifest in the flesh and spoke the words of God. He stated facts, declared principles. His words came with conviction and power. The people noticed this characteristic and it is said:

And they were astonished at his doctrine; for he taught them as one that had authority, and not as the scribes.—Mark 1:22.

It is this very quality of dogmatic, unhesitating declaration, backed by power and truth, that makes the words of Jesus a godsend to the troubled and distracted heart. He promises peace and he is able to give peace.

Jesus came as the Great Physician, to heal the afflictions of his people. His words and teaching contain the very comfort that is needed by the troubled mind to-day, in the twentieth century. His mission is still as it was when he taught in the synagogue on that Sabbath day and declared:

The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised.—Luke 4:18.

The twentieth century, like its immediate predecessor, puts a tremendous strain upon humanity. Business competition in the commercial world sets a pace that wrecks and kills. In the factories, men and women and children are a part of the raw material that is ground up and worked into the finished product. A man can stand in front of a modern furnace only a certain limited number of years and then he is thrown aside and a new man takes his place. The bones and muscles of a man are fused into a steel rail; a yard of calico is richly tinted with the blood of children who stood at the looms; sales girls wrap living nerves around the bundles that they hand over the counter; and a great business is built up and goes on full of the vitality that it has sapped from a wrecked, prematurely old, poor rich man.

Added to this is the fact that this is an age of "spiritual unrest," as it has been termed. Old beliefs are abandoned. Old institutions are challenged. Many are crying, Lo here, or Lo there.

Nor is there any abating of the ancient troubles that have vexed man since the beginning. Death and sorrow still invade the home. Friends and companions prove untrue. Family circles are broken up by misfortune, accident, or sin. Age cripples and appalls.

As a result of all this, nervous prostration, insanity, and suicide are increasing. There are many troubled hearts; many who know not where to turn; many who are too unhappy to live and yet afraid to die, or too honorable to die while human obligations still rest upon them. Where shall they turn for relief?

There is only one adequate source of strength and comfort. Let them turn to the one who says, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you . . . let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."

There is healing and comfort in those words. Let the exhausted and troubled man who lies down at night perplexed and torn in mind and heart repeat those words over and over again. Let him relax the tired muscles and strained nerves and sense the fact that Jesus says those words to him: "Peace I give unto you." If he is trying to live his life right he will surely get peace. For the man who is not living right there is no peace.

All around us are great reservoirs of peace and power. Just over the turbulent city bends the great calm dome of heaven. The planets and stars shine on untroubled, moving unhurried in their appointed courses. Friction, confusion, cataclasm, are unusual; most of the normal processes of nature proceed quietly and in order. The God of such a universe can quiet the abnormal throbbings of one anguished human heart.

Men can not entirely escape from the strife and unjust competition of the world until a redeemed people learn the processes of cooperation. But the tumult and strife should be external and not internal. The fiercer the battle the more calm and self-possessed the soldier should be. Men and women must reserve times and places for withdrawal to commune with the One who promised that though his followers should have trouble in the world they might find peace in him. He still urges those who sorrow and mourn, those who labor and are heavy laden to come to him and find rest to their souls.

The whole great gospel is one of peace. The angels sang of peace on earth when Christ was born. This peace may come to those who are in the world but not of the world. Of such Isaiah said, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee; because he trusteth in thee."—Isaiah 26: 3.

Let the troubled heart ponder this fact as stated by Paul: "For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind."—2 Timothy 1: 7.

It is possible to make practical use of the words of Jesus and secure immediate benefit from them today. The troubled and distressed will find this to be a fact if they will but permit the promise to sink deep into their souls:

Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH PRESIDENT SMITH.

Herewith we reproduce a letter received by President Smith, and his reply thereto. The statement circulated by certain individuals, casually mentioned in the second letter, to the effect that President Smith was dead, was accompanied by the solemn declaration that on his deathbed he confessed that he was not his father's successor, and that the confession had been published in the Deseret News:

WICHITA, KANSAS, February 21, 1911.

PRES. JOSEPH SMITH,
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Dear Brother: I am a grandson of John E. Page, an elder laboring in southern Kansas. Some Utah elders are laboring in this town and have attended our services. They have told me some stories that have come to them from their men at Independence, and also Salt Lake City. I am writing this so I can convince them they have heard falsehoods.

They say that they were told that last August you received a revelation that the time had arrived to build the temple; that you called a conference, and it was voted down. The other was that you had applied to Joseph F. Smith and asked him upon what grounds could the two churches compromise and that Joseph F. told you, upon the grounds that we repent and be baptized.

I see by the HERALD that this same story has been told somewhere in Nebraska. Would you kindly answer these stories either by personal letter or through the HERALD.

We expect to organize a branch here at Wichita soon.

Your brother in Christ,

JAS. C. PAGE.

514 SOUTH MAIN STREET.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, February 23, 1911.

ELDER JAMES C. PAGE, Wichita, Kansas.

Dear Brother: Replying to your letter of the 21st inst., brand those stories as lies, unqualifiedly so. I received no revelation last August stating that the time had come to build the temple, I did not call any conference at all since last General Conference, and furthermore I have not written Joseph F. Smith for the last year, to say nothing of writing compromisingly to him. I never at any time asked him on what terms he would receive us in. I have not seen him to speak to him since 1876. Do not be discouraged, Brother Page, one of those fellows from Utah had me dead the other day, and one of their members wrote down to me to see if it was so, stating that he did not believe it; hence he wrote to find out.

Trusting that this will answer your questions, I am,

Your brother in bonds,

JOSEPH SMITH.

A CORRECTION DESIRED.

Under the above caption, in the Evening and Morning Star for February, 1911, appears an article, the contents of which calls for a correction on the part of the editor of the Evening and Morning Star. Like the editor of the Star, "We are quite willing to believe that he would not knowingly consent to be a party to an untrue statement," but nevertheless it is difficult for us to see how he overlooked the facts and made an untrue statement the basis of his argument, in asking that President Joseph Smith make a correction of a statement, for the veracity of which he was in no way responsible.

The Evening and Morning Star states: "We are quite ready to believe that he would not knowingly consent to be a party to an untrue statement, and yet President Joseph Smith, of the Reorganized Church, permitted the printing of a statement, while editor of the SAINTS' HERALD, which is at variance with the truth." In another place the statement is made: "President Smith makes another mistake in the fourth paragraph of his article where he said," which carries the idea that President Smith was the author of the article.

Nothing could be farther from the truth than the statements of the Star relative to the editorship of the HERALD at the time to which the editor refers, and the authorship of the article, entitled, "Mistakes in the Book of Commandments," which appeared in the SAINTS' HERALD for August, 1864.

The facts are these. Isaac Sheen was editor of the HERALD at the time, and the article appeared as an editorial. Pres. Joseph Smith was not editor of the HERALD, and all the connection he had with it was; that doctrinal communications were, by order of conference, referred to him before publication. President Joseph Smith was then residing at Nauvoo and the HERALD was published at Plano. As the article was not doctrinal, but simply purported to be a statement of facts, President Smith did not have anything to do with the article whatever.

"HE THAT BELIEVETH NOT SHALL BE DAMNED."

Every man believes something. That is his creed. The mere having of a creed is not objectionable; it is what the creed contains, and what it incites a man to do.

We notice in the Des Moines, Iowa, Register and Leader the following "Unitarian Welcome":

The Unitarian Church welcomes to its fellowship all who sincerely desire to know the true and to do the good. It has no test of creed or compulsion of belief. It gives and guarantees everyone within its circle the full privilege of making and expressing his own opinion in religion. It accepts him for what he is, or for what he wants to be, and not for what he believes. It insists upon the right of every man to think his own thought, to make his own choice, and to follow the guidance of his own reason and conscience. There is no suggestion of conformity or restraint in the Unitarian Church.

While we agree there should be no "compulsion of belief" in religion, we certainly think there can be no question that a man's belief affects his life. The good Book says, "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he." If men could be induced to believe by some kind of argument that the moon is made of India rubber, they would soon be thinking of some way to get a slice of it. Men's activities are always in harmony with their belief, religiously, or otherwise.

We grant that there is much in religious creeds that is barren of action, producing dead churches. But that shows either that their faith is not in vital truth, or that they really do not believe it in the heart.

We would have no live wires in any department of human activity, if they did not believe in live issues, in principles, in truth.

To call together a circle, give each one his own right to say what true religion is, means a circle without a standard. It would naturally divide into groups representing some shade of belief.

The word religion includes God, if it means anything, and we know of none of his works existing without organization and law to preserve them. If men choose to teach it some other way, then let them not call it religion.

The laws of nature are arbitrary; they are not dependent on what man thinks. Gravitation facts are independent of man's belief. He is not forced to obey them, but if he fails, he suffers. Can man have any opinion about the axiom: "Things equal to the same thing are equal to each other"? Two plus two equals four; can a man say he will not believe that, without insulting the intelligence that God gave him? These and others of God's facts are for man's good, if he will work in harmony with them. If he refuses, no one will exercise "restraint," but the penalty that follows will teach him what is safe conduct. It is the same with the truths of heaven. There is no restraint, but they are so plain, so necessary that "he that believeth not shall be damned" (condemned).

For similar reasons, "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God." Is it difficult to say what his character will be as a result of ignoring God's facts?

It has been said that man is a religious animal, and the greatest thing that this animal is thinking about is religion. "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he." The more perfect, the more consistent, the more enlightened—in a word, the more divine is the system that he holds as religion, the better he is; the whiter will be his skin; the larger will be his brain pan; the higher in the scale of civilization will he be.

We are not ready to affirm that man is able to chalk out his own course in life. Individuals and nations that have tried it have failed.

Character is the best product that religion can give. The best character results only from the best religious system. The best religion is that which recognizes system, order, organization, principle, and reveres a divine standard for human life and conduct. It is free; there is no coercion. "Let him that is athirst come; and whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."

The true worship of the one true God knows no haphazard work; its congregation will not be a mere social crowd holding to a mass of heterogeneous opinions. Jesus in teaching the woman at the well, names the true worshippers:

The hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth; for the Father seeketh such to worship him. For unto such God hath promised his Spirit. And they who worship him, must worship in spirit and in truth.—John 4: 25, 26, Inspired Translation.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

CORRECTION.—In Elder Columbus Scott's article, "Unity, Cooperation, Equality," there appears an error in HERALD of February 15, page 153, second column, lower half: "He offers to each, not enemies," should read, "He offers to each, not luxuries, not all we might want, but what each needs." Please note this on the margin.

On Sunday morning, March 5, there passed from the Lamoni ranks of prominent church workers and citizens one who has been connected with the church from early childhood, Bro. William Anderson, bishop of the Lamoni Stake. Paralysis was the cause of death. His long service is marked by integrity and devotion to the truth as he understood it. Particulars will appear later.

The HERALD goes to press on Monday of each week. All correspondence, notices, etc., must be on the editor's desk not later than the Friday before.

We have received a neat card announcement of the Mission services to be conducted at the Central Latter Day Saints' church, Ninth street and Lydia avenue, Kansas City, Missouri, by Elder Thomas W. Williams, of Los Angeles, California. The following is the list of subjects.

- March 12. "Tyranny of the dead." (Morning.)
- March 12. "Evolution of religion." (Evening.)
- March 13. "Eternal verities."
- March 14. "The deterrent philosophy."
- March 15. "Obedience better than sacrifice."
- March 16. "Environment."
- March 17. "Christ and economics."
- March 19. "I see through a glass darkly." (Morning.)
- March 19. "Incentive." (Evening.)
- March 20. "The volition of faith."
- March 21. "Prayer: Its function and limitations."
- March 22. "Divine healing."
- March 23. "What must I do to be saved?"
- March 24. "I will build my church."
- March 26. "Regeneration." (Morning.)
- March 26. "Life: Its purpose and possibilities." (Evening.)

These sermons will be in the form of a continued story.

Brother Williams is advertised as "the man with a message." Everyone of our missionaries ought to feel that he is that sort of a man.

Our thanks are due to some one for sending us the Toronto Sunday World, containing the sermons of Bishop Evans. In the issue for February 26, we notice in the illustrated section a large, clear reproduction of a baptismal scene with this explanation: "BAPTIZING IN THE JORDAN.—One of the arguments of the anti-immersionists is that the River Jordan has not sufficient water and that the banks are too steep for immersion. Bishop Evans furnished the Sunday World with this picture of a baptism in the Jordan. The younger man being an elder of the Bishop's church." The administrator is Elder F. G. Pitt.

in the Canadian Mirror, with an interesting letter from Elder Pitt, who remarks: "One great trouble is, so few can understand our language. If we could only speak German we would have many more out to hear us. One needs to be able to speak several languages to accomplish much in this land. . . . There are many very devout Jews in this country, and I believe if we could reach them with the gospel, many of them would accept it. But very few can understand the English language."

For many years, Lamoni has realized the need for a commodious town hall, the only building available by the public for large gatherings being the Saints' church. Many have felt that this was not the place to hold the various secular meetings, concerts, etc., and have allowed them in the church only through kindly consideration of the fact just mentioned. A mass meeting was held recently in the church and a fund started to build either a coliseum or auditorium for the town. It is hoped that this will be successful so that the house of God may be used only for the purpose for which it was dedicated.

In response to a pressing need for a medium by which information concerning the church in Independence, Missouri, might be given to its members, the officers of the several departments of church work met recently and decided to start a small four page weekly paper, the first issue of which, The Tidings, has just reached our desk. It is to be the means of making all necessary announcements, thus saving the time heretofore taken up at the Sunday preaching services. Nearly all large congregations find some such bulletin a necessity in their work, and it is not expensive if properly managed.

Bro. C. F. Baker of West Virginia, sends us the following under the caption, "Ptolemy coin found in Kentucky," taken from the Danville, Kentucky, Advocate. The emphasis is ours:

"Col. George F. Anderson on Saturday received from the National Museum of Washington City, the old coin that was found on his farm some months ago, twenty feet under the earth.

"Some workmen were excavating a well, and at a depth of twenty feet the coin was struck. The experts in charge of the National Museum state that the coin was made two hundred years before Christ, during the reign of King Ptolemy. The coin is over twenty-one hundred years old, and the mystery is how it reached a point twenty feet beneath the earth. The indications are that this country was visited by people from the old country long before the days of Christopher Columbus. Mr. Anderson was told that the coin is worth $1,000."

WITHOUT LOVE OUR WORK IS A FAILURE.

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.—John 15: 13.

Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren.—1 John 3: 16.

What is love might be asked, and we will therefore consult Webster and try to find a definition of the word. In part it is defined as follows:

Affection of the heart excited by that which delights or commands admiration; preeminent kindness or devotion to another; affection, as a mother's love. Moral good-will; benevolence; kindness; charity.

In the mind of the writer there is nothing short of divine love that will ever save mankind from the thralldom of sin and fit him for an abode in the kingdom of God, and therefore it suggests the care with which we should labor in presenting the truth to mankind. The apostle has said "by love serve one another." (Galatians 5: 13.) And since we become the servants of the people in becoming servants of Christ we should use every precaution in our dealing with the erring lest by any means we offend them and turn them out of the way. If we have learned of Christ, we will be like him in disposition, and therefore will employ the means that he employed, viz, love. It has been wisely said that "love worketh no ill to his neighbor," therefore, if we are possessed of that love which emanates from God, we will have no other motive in view than the good of our fellow-men, and will employ such means as shall tend to draw them to Christ. And it has been said that love will melt the heart of stone, and it will win those who are out of the way. Hear what the Lord saith:

I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee.—Jeremiah 31: 3.

He came to destroy evil with good, to overcome sin with righteousness, and to save man by kindness and love. He did not hesitate to give his life that we might be benefited thereby. He had no fear of what might befall him; he did not shrink from duty because the world despised his humility. He declared, "My Father gave me a commandment what I should say and what I should speak." With the love that is due a loving father from a loving son, he moved forward in discharge of the duty imposed upon him. With assurance of a final triumph, he faced the foe manfully and with perfect love sought to liberate the captives, and set their feet in the way of peace.

Now the question that confronts us is this, Can I truly say that I love God, if I fail to exhibit that love in behalf of my fellow-men? John says,

If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also.—1 John 4: 20, 21.

Unless we can make the teaching of Christ effectual by living the Christ life, I fear we will come quite short of the mark. The best way I know of reflecting his light is to let his love abound in our lives, for we read:

Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another. . . . If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us. Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit. . . . And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him. Herein is our love made perfect . . . because as he is, so are we in this world.—1 John 4: 11-17.

It is certain, therefore, that our life must partake of the divine if we expect to be factors for good in the world. We must learn that we can not do good to anyone and think ill of him at the same time. We can not labor for the uplifting of our brother unless we have love for him, and it is absolutely impossible for us to love our brother and either think or speak ill of him. We can not consistently give our time, talent, and means for a cause for which we have no love. Without love our work would be a complete failure. In the rise of this latter day work it was declared that: "Faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work."

DANCING.

A few days ago I saw the following paragraph in a local newspaper:

There is nothing more disgusting than to see drunken hoodlums participating in a mask ball—dancing among young ladies and girls—as was noticed at last Friday night's ball. Not only this, but some of the fellows under the influence of liquor acted in a manner very insulting to ladies who were masked. The ball committee should not allow such things to occur and no man under the influence of liquor should be permitted on the dance floor, no matter who he is. Last Friday night's doings should not be permitted to occur again.

This article emphasizes one evil of dancing:—at a public dance one can not always choose his associates. All are practically, if not truly, on an equality. Also that drinking is almost invariably associated with the public dance.

Thankful indeed am I when considering how near the whirlpool of this deeply fascinating indulgence my young life was thrown, and that too, at the period of adolescence, when least likely to resist its influence; thankful for the guardianship of God and the prayers of a devoted mother, who knew from before I was a year old, through prophecy given by an elder who administered to me when at the point of death, that sometime she should hear me preach the gospel,—a fact not known to me until after I was ordained.

It is indeed disgusting, doubly so, for a man to go to a ball room drunk! But what is drunk? Just where shall we draw the line between a man who can walk straight on his feet but whose breath smells like a beer barrel, though he is not so "far gone" as to insult ladies by indecent language, and a drunken man? And how much alcohol must a man have in his blood before the ladies are repulsed? Really, should not any lady refuse, absolutely refuse, the company of any man who is in the least intoxicated? Now, if this were done, I dare say, in the little city to which this has reference, there would be no public dances. For how many single, as well as married men, after drinking all they think they can stand and not be insulting to the ladies, smoke and then use breath perfumes to hide the lurking demon lying beneath to fire the passions. See the danger to which any lady subjects herself when she allows a man thus fired and thus disguised to take her into his arms and whirl her over the ballroom floor, masked, further disguising his identity.

I have heard from the lips of those most popular at a certain village dance hall of the indelicacies of the ballroom,—those not usually told, and such as should not be written—the actions of men toward women and vice versa. Can a young lady safely trust herself to be escorted anywhere by a man thus disguised and fired? Verily no.

Some years ago I had a conversation with a cousin, neither of us married and neither belonging to the church, about dancing and the inability of those who respect themselves to keep absolutely from the company and intimate association of those they did not care to mingle with, at the public dance. She said she had seen so many young men come there and behave unbecomingly that she had decided never to go again. So far as I know, she kept her resolve the few years she lived. I said to her, "M——, does not the power to reform those young men, or to destroy the dance and with it the evil of which you complain, lie within the power of the young ladies of the community?" She thought perhaps it did, but that the only way, under existing circumstances, was to stop the dance. We agreed, for I had thought I saw the danger and never began. I never attended a public dance, though I danced two or three times at private dances. I know it is fascinating and feel sure that it would have kept me from the church; and if it would keep me from the church, surely, had I been a member and indulged in it, it would have retarded my progress.

Perhaps the men on the ball committee referred to in the article quoted, though not drunk in the sense referred to in the article, had used the demon only a few hours before, likely in their homes and perhaps wife or mother indulging with them. Were not they, to a degree, under the influence of liquor, even if it did not predominate?

Now what of the dance? "Can music and motion make that thing right which is otherwise wrong?" In other words, has a man the moral right to take another man's wife or a young girl into his arms and in a manner that would at any other time or place be scandal to both, whirl her over the dance hall, simply because there is music? Fathers and mothers, carry it into your own parlors! Would you be willing to have your daughter sit or stand in the same position while listening to the music of your household piano? Would you like to risk your boy in such a position in the parlor of his fiancée?

I believe that drink, lust, and the dance are associates. That conclusion is reached because I have never seen them separated. Please do not interpret that to mean that lust is in the hearts of all who attend dances. Not so. But it is in the hearts of some. And all, more or less, are subjected to the influence of those individuals. "The company a man keeps is the visible index of his soul." In the hour of temptation the weak one falls! Take the safe side—let it alone.

A delegate to a dancing convention is quoted as saying: "Dancing to-day is the most degraded thing on earth! It is demoralizing our young people. If it is allowed to go on, it will bring the country to ruin. To-day the man who conducts the dance hall is no better than a saloon keeper."

Statisticians tell us that a great deal of the immorality (some go so far as to say sixty to seventy-five per cent) is traceable to the dance hall. Be that exaggerated or true, the sad story comes to us by the events around us that many innocent persons, led on in their efforts to find pleasure, suddenly strike upon the rock and sink disgraced beneath the Herculean wave.

STEWARDSHIP; ITS RESPONSIBILITY.

It is wisdom in me; therefore, a commandment I give unto you, that ye shall organize yourselves, and appoint every man his stewardship, that every man may give an account unto me of the stewardship which is appointed unto him; for it is expedient that I, the Lord, should make every man accountable, as stewards over earthly blessings, which I have made and prepared for my creatures. I, the Lord, stretched out the heavens, and builded the earth as a very handy work; and all things therein are mine, and it is my purpose to provide for my Saints, for all things are mine; but it must needs be done in mine own way; and, behold, this is the way, that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my Saints; that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low; for the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare; yea, I prepared all things, and have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves. Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.—Doctrine and Covenants, 101:2.

It seems to me, that it is needful that we understand our duty and privilege as members in the kingdom of God as it was for us to see and understand the necessity of becoming members. "Now, ye are the body of Christ and members in particular." We become members by the strict observance of law; therefore, the necessity of the observance of the law of the kingdom to reach the end designed.

We are plainly told in the foregoing that we should "be stewards over earthly blessings." A steward acts for another. It is God's plan to have us so act, placing the responsibility on us as his agents. "This is my law, now, act it out, if you consider what shall accrue to you worth while." This is what God wants; and remember, "it must be done in mine own way." Why? Because he knows how it ought to be done. I do not see how anything can be plainer.

If you want the blessing there is no other way. Ye are no longer strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the Saints, therefore you must be governed by the law that governs Saints, not the world; "And there is no respect of persons with God."—Romans 2: 11.

All have the privilege of coming out of the world; all have the privilege of being Saints perfected. The point is, there is only one way, the way the Lord has provided. Paul in speaking to the Saints said: "Let us go on to perfection." We must remember that the statement "Straight is the gate and narrow is the way," does not apply to the world, only. The way is straight to get in and straight to continue. We are to act out our stewardship and give an account of it in time as well as in eternity.

But what is stewardship? Why, to be agents over earthly blessings. What are earthly blessings? Ask yourself. To me, they are all the blessings the Lord has bestowed, temporal as well as spiritual. I must be guided wisely in all of them, not waste them. I am to love my brother as myself. But I am to be governed by law. "And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 5.

Now acting as an agent for yourself, do you want to remain in the kingdom of Christ, or go somewhere else? If you remain, there is only one way. Do you want to escape the burning? Why? Because, "behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man) and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; [are you one of them?] for he that is tithed shall not be burned." What about those who are indifferent? Think of it.

"Oh, well," a man said to me, "I'll not be here then."

"How do you know?" I said. "Do you think you can get where God can not reach you?"

Are those the sentiments of obedience? And will you not lose the blessings designed in obedience?

This is not written to frighten anyone into paying his tithing, but to call attention to what the Lord has revealed. Read Doctrine and Covenants 51: 2; and 56: 4, 5, 6. Whatever of obedience the Lord has ever required of any, applies to us. There is no respect of persons with him; don't forget that. It applies both ways, in receiving for well-doing and in condemnation for not doing. He also says, "If ye believe me ye will do what I say." Is there anything plainer than that.

God told the Israelites: "Ye have robbed me, even this whole nation." "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith."

"Oh, but," said one, "it says, 'now,' that was then, for them."

Is it not true that he is no respecter of persons? Well, let us look a little farther down the stream of time to one who came from God (indeed he was God manifest in the flesh) to be a witness to the people. (Isaiah 55: 4; also John 8: 29.) "I do always those things that please him." And "blessed are they that hear the word of God and keep it."—Luke 11: 28. And verse 42, "But woe unto you, Pharisees, for ye tithe mint and rue and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God: these ought ye to have done, and not leave the other undone." Just think who said this.

The Master realized the necessity of complying with the divine plan and in every way enforcing his teaching in plainness so there could be no mistake as to the need of obedience thereto, and to simplify so as to give it all possible plainness and weight.

He gives us an illustration in Luke 16. He said there was a certain rich man who had a steward. This rich man represented God. Now the steward was unfaithful, so he was to be deposed from his stewardship. The steward realized that he would be in a "bad fix" when he was thrown out, so he devised a plan to make friends of his Lord's creditors so they would receive him into their houses. He said: "I can not dig; to beg I am ashamed," but he was not ashamed to misuse his Master's goods over which he was a steward. You find some who are just like that now. The Lord commended him for being wise, [shrewd] not for doing wrong in wasting his Lord's goods.

Now the lesson is: for us to so use the "temporal blessings" that when we fail (die) God and Christ will receive us into everlasting habitations. Who but God and Christ can receive us into everlasting habitations? They will not say that we have done well when we have not. Christ says: "This is the way," as revealed in the law. Some other way will not do any more than some other way will do in baptism.

Again the Lord says: "When ye do what I say, then am I bound, otherwise [when you do not what he says] ye have no promise." Let us be wise stewards. Do not let us say, when we get over on the other side, "I wish that I had," let it be, "I am glad that I did."

We are not in the dark. We are in the light, and let us walk in the light, then "the blood of Jesus Christ will cleanse us from all sin." I hope I will not be deemed presumptive in this, for I can assure you it is no mythical dream, but to me the words of inspiration, and I wish to do a part in honoring the calling placed in my hands as a steward for God to use my agency in the way directed in the law.

Bishop Northern California.

Of General Interest

THE CHAUTAUQUA SALUTE DANGEROUS.

Last November every seat in Tremont Temple was filled with men attending a rally. Ex-Governor Bates, of Massachusetts, one of the most popular men of the State, was introduced. As he came forward to speak, an enthusiastic man on the platform pulled his handkerchief from his pocket and waved it in the air, motioning the crowd to do the same.

In an instant two thousand handkerchiefs were waving in the air, scattering germs from two thousand different noses through the already heated and impure atmosphere of the hall.

In May, President Taft accepted an invitation to speak before the World's Sunday School Convention at Washington. The great hall was packed with more than six thousand people. He also was given the same salute—not by any means so dangerous in a hot southern city as in Boston in November, but very unhygienic, nevertheless.

If good sense did not prevent the recurrence of this form of salute it ought to be prohibited by law. The Women's Christian Temperance Union has set its influence against the Chautauqua salute.

Editor Merriam, of the Watchman, says that he never sees an audience starting to shake its handkerchiefs with their millions of dry microbes in the air without a wild desire to run and shout to all who value life and health to run, and escape with their lives.—Iowa Health Bulletin.

FAILURE OF "LIBERAL" THEOLOGY.

That "liberal" theology has made an almost utter failure in Germany, is asserted by one of its leading spokesmen in a liberal religious organ. It consists too much of mere negation, he thinks, and has no strong faith in anything. The masses have rejected it, and the educated have accepted it only in small numbers. Practically it is a failure, and he demands a reconstruction along new lines, with new ideals and new methods. This courageous liberal is Rev. Dr. Rittlemeyer, of Nuremberg, and he writes in the Christliche Welt (Tubingen). Here are the main points of his argument:

Let us ask honestly what practical results modern theology has attained. As far as the great masses of workingmen are concerned, practically nothing has been gained. They either do not understand it or they distrust it. All the public discussions and popularization of modern critical views have not found any echo or sympathy among the ranks of the laboring people.

And how about the educated classes? It has long since been the boast and hobby of advanced theology that it and it alone will satisfy the religious longings of the educated man who has broken with the traditional dogma and doctrines of orthodox Christianity. But what are the actual facts in the case? It is a fact that there are a considerable number among the educated who thankfully confess that they can accept Christianity only in the form in which it is taught by the advanced theologian. But how exceedingly small this number is? A periodical like the Christliche Welt, the only paper of its kind, has not been able to secure more than five thousand subscribers, although its contributors are the most brilliant in the land of scholars and thinkers; while periodicals that are exponents of the older views are read by tens and even hundreds of thousands. There are whole classes of society among the educated who are antagonistic to liberal tendencies in religion. Among these are the officers in the army and the navy, practitioners of the technical arts and of engineering, and almost to a man the whole world of business. It is foolish to close our eyes to these facts.

What is the matter? asks this writer. What is the weakness of liberal and advanced theological thought? These are some of the answers:

"One trouble is that modern theology has entirely grown out of criticism. Its weakness is intellectualism; it is a negative movement. We can understand the cry of the orthodox, that advanced theology is eliminating one thing after the other from our religious thought, and then asks, What is left? True, we answer, God is left. But is it not the case that the modern God-Father faith is generally a very weak and attenuated faith in a Providence and nothing more? And on this subject too we quarrel among ourselves, whether a God-Father troubles himself about little things only or about great things too, such as the forgiveness of sins. We do the same thing with Jesus. We speak of him as of a unique personality, as the highest revelation of the Father, and the like, but always connected with a certain skeptical undercurrent of thought; but we do not appreciate him in his deepest soul and in the great motives of his life. He is not for modern theology what he is for orthodoxy, the Savior of the world and the Redeemer of mankind."—Literary Digest, February 25, 1911.

GOLD FOUND IN INCA TOMBS.

NEW YORK, January 26.—Dr. Marshall H. Saville, professor of archaeology at Columbia University, has just returned from the wild regions of Ecuador, after many exciting experiences while heading an expedition to collect relics of Ecuador's lost tribes. Two of the party were arrested as spies and detained until Professor Saville appealed personally to the president of Ecuador.

A gold rush in the heart of Ecuador enabled Professor Saville to obtain his antiques without even the trouble of excavating for them in century-old tombs.

The gold rush took place in the neighborhood of Angel, in the province of Carchi, many miles inland. In digging an irrigation trench laborers hit upon an ancient tomb containing many gold and silver ornaments.

The discoverers figured that the gold and silver made into ornaments were extracted from ore bodies thereabouts and the hillsides near Angel were soon lined with excavators. Before the excitement subsided at least three thousand tombs had been opened and several hundred thousand dollars in gold, silver and precious stones had been marketed. Other relics found in the tombs were not of a marketable value and thousands of them were gathered up by the Saville party.

The collections probably will go to the American Museum of Natural History. The district explored by the party evidently was densely populated by highly civilized people before 1400 A. D. The natives showed great skill in plating copper with silver and gold. The explorers came across the remains of stone forts commanding the summits of some of the passes probably erected by the Incas to resist the Spanish invasion five hundred years ago.—Kansas City Star for January 26, 1911.

REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT.

It is interesting to note the agility with which plutocrats and their parasites try to make it appear that the initiative, referendum and recall are hostile to representative government and would abolish it. Not only would this reform not abolish representative government, but it could not. You can no more abolish representatives in government than in business. A self-governing people have to have agents. The most that would be abolished by the initiative, referendum and recall would be delegated government. They would not even do that; for so long as the people's delegates did what the majority of the people wanted there would be no interference through the initiative, referendum and recall. This reform is in aid of representative government; it makes it representative instead of misrepresentative, by treating the delegates as representatives instead of bosses. The difference between representative government with and without the initiative, referendum and recall is analogous to the difference between transactions by power of attorney and those by power of attorney irrevocable. The former belong in the category of agency, the latter in that of ownership.—The Public.

A NATION WITHOUT A COUNTRY.

There are in the United States at present a little more than two million Jews, more than half of which reside in New York City, the largest Jewish center in the world.

There is a large section of Hebrews who are opposed to the hopes and aspirations of the Zionists, who take as one premise, that the Jews, having preserved their nationality in spite of centuries of persecution, are entitled to a land of their own, with a distinctive government and flag.

The Council of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, which recently held its annual meeting in New York City, has for one of its objects, the settlement of their downtrodden brethren of foreign countries in America, preventing them from huddling together in the great cities—which seems a difficult task. The Jew seems not to take to the land in this country, where he emphasizes the ghetto trait mostly.

It seems a hard task to interest him in the Zionist idea—Palestine for the Jews. America, his adopted country, is so much better than the oppressive land from which he has fled, that it is good enough for him. He falls in readily with the motto of the American Hebrew Council: "America is our Zion."

The Zionist cause does not go forward because the people who ought to be interested are divided, very similarly as is Christendom; and also because the very ones who could render financial help in this country are apathetic.

It was stated at the recent meeting of the council that over a million Jews in the United States have drifted away from their religion. Jewish missionaries are being sent among them to arouse and reclaim them by the American council, which represents a kind of reformation in Jewish ranks, a sort of Protestant element. They affirm that Judaism is not a ritual or a distinctive doctrine, but a life, voiced in what they call a "Messianic mission to bring mankind to a knowledge of the one true God" as held so many centuries by orthodox Jewry.

Those who imagine that the Jews are one and the divided in their religious hopes and plans, are mistaken. Divisions have been the one bar to their rehabilitation in Palestine.

The following from the Des Moines, Iowa, Register and Leader regarding Zionism as preached in the United States, will be interesting:

"The Jew is without a country, without a flag, and without a united nation."

It was with no feeling of racial prejudice for past wrongs to her people that Miss Mary Kamp, of Los Angeles, California, made this statement last evening at the home of Mrs. M. C. Cohen, 1351 Eighth street.

To provide a country, a nation's flag and an organized government for the Hebrew people of the world has been the purpose of this young girl who has been at the forefront of the Zion movement for the past eight years. Although young in years, quiet of manner, Miss Kamp has a prophetic vision for her people—she would lead them out of the land of persecution into peace and plenty in a land of true heritage. She would have Palestine rehabilitated by the Hebrew people, governed by the Hebrew people and for the Hebrew people.

NOT SENTIMENTAL MOVE.

"The Zion movement is not a religious sentimental movement," continued Miss Kamp, whose dark eyes glowed with the fervor of the cause as the conversation progressed. "It is distinctly a patriotic movement.

"Just stop to think about it. The Hebrew people are a scattered people. The Hebrew is instinctively patriotic although he has no country which he may call his own. We people talk about our own peculiarities and customs and poke fun at some of them among ourselves, but let an outsider make fun of them and the Jew is ready to fight. That is his patriotism. It is not always evident, but it is a hopeful sign. The Irish people have Ireland and other people have their countries, why should not the Hebrew people have their Palestine? It makes no difference about the religion of the people inhabiting the country. For patriotic reasons alone the Hebrew should have his own country. There is no religious sentiment back of it."

"What is the Zion movement?" Miss Kamp was asked.

"In short," she hastened to explain, "it is a movement which now has seven million dollars back of it to purchase Jerusalem for the Hebrew people and allow all those who wish to do so to inhabit the place and organize a government. Of course that is a dream to the outsider. We do not just know how this all can be brought about but I believe the day will come when it will be.

CATHOLICS OBSTRUCT WAY.

"The one difficulty and the greatest we have to meet to secure Palestine for the Hebrew people is the Catholic Church. The sultan of Turkey offered to give the Zion people a part of the land but this offer was refused. The people who are behind the movement will not stop until they secure all of it. I do not believe the Christian or Protestant people will so seriously object.

"The movement does not mean that all of the Hebrew people are to return to Jerusalem and make that place their home. I would not do it. I think the United States is the finest country on the globe and would never leave it. There are hundreds who would be glad to go.

"People of other lands live in America, but they have their own nation. The Hebrew people would have a place in the world as a nation. There are hundreds of Hebrew people who would be better off in Jerusalem than in America and far happier. The land is fertile and uncultivated. Just imagine what could be done with it by cultivation. Instead of having the immigrant Jews from Russia and other countries where they are persecuted come to America, I would urge that they be sent to Palestine, where they would be among their own people and in a land of their own and governed by laws best adapted to the Hebrew people. The Hebrew is different from men of other nationalities. His religion makes him care for his body. When there are scourges of disease he alone is free, for he keeps his blood pure by eating only certain prescribed foods."—G. R. W.

A Voice from Jerusalem.

Spring is on her way. As we write we are reminded that it is the second day of March. March the second, and on April the sixth, no Providence preventing, the annual conference of our church will open here in Lamoni.

To every Latter Day Saint the convening of this body means much, so much, in fact, that few, if any of us, can think of it without the unspoken longing entering the soul to be there—to be one among those who shall mingle with their fellow-workers, join in the songs of Zion, and let their voices be raised in prayers and testimonies of thankfulness to the "God we love and serve."

But, dear sisters, with this thought there comes to us another, and we pass it on to you for your careful consideration, hoping and praying that it may meet with your approval, and springing up in your hearts may bear much fruit. It is for those of us who remain at home as well as those who will attend the conference, but as such attendance usually calls for some extra consideration of our wardrobes, we mention those attending in particular.

Is there one of us whose heart has not been stirred by the recent news from Palestine? One who has not read the letter of Bro. F. G. Pitt in the HERALD of February 22, and having read it has not longed to help in sustaining this mission in Jerusalem? Did you notice this?

"But there is one thing that is somewhat distressing, and that is our poverty. We are all so poor here, and the poor in this land are desperately poor. It seems to us that it would have been such an advantage if the Lord had called in some people with means. But it was much the same when Jesus himself was here. The poor had the gospel preached to them. 'The common people heard him gladly,' but others rejected him. His ministry were very poor, so that Jesus had to perform a miracle at one time to raise the money to pay taxes. So we should not complain, and we will try not to, but we feel sure that there are men and women of means in our own land, who, if they could only realize the poverty in this land and the needs of the work, would come to our assistance."

Now why should not all of us have a share in the privilege of helping? Jesus did not condemn the poor widow who cast in her entire living, but his words instead were words of commendation. To-day he has again opened the door of opportunity, not alone to those who have abundant means, but to you and I who have so little of this world's goods. And to-day the voice which comes across the mighty ocean from the far land in which Jesus labored, from the city over which he wept, is saying to you and to me: "My daughter, stop and think! You have heard the call. Have you no desire to answer?" Surely we must have, and even if it be at the sacrifice of some long cherished desire, you and I will listen and obey.

Let us consider what can be done without in any way demanding a sacrifice of that which is really needful, and if it should demand a sacrifice of pride upon our part, will it not be far better for us spiritually that the sacrifice be made?

We thought we must have a new suit this spring, especially if we went to conference. But must we really have it? And the new hat upon which our heart was set? Is it absolutely necessary that we have either? Is it not possible that by a little remodeling, or by just a careful cleaning and pressing the old suit would answer every purpose and have us more than one dollar to send in support of the mission at Jerusalem? And why must we have the new hat when the old is really more becoming and altogether prettier in size and shape? Then there are gloves. We thought surely it was not possible to get along with out at least one new pair! But let us try it and see if it is not possible by cleaning to make our old pair answer.

Is it possible that this mission at Jerusalem must fail through lack of means to support it, while we who claim to be followers of him who had not where to lay his head, him who gave his life to purchase salvation for us, still robe these perishing bodies in costly array and spread our tables with costly luxuries? God forbid. Let us rather pray that he help us to remember these words of the poet:

"Unworthy thy life of many wants and fine,
He who with Christ would dine
Shall find no table sumptuously spread,
But fish and barley bread."

And disregard it as we may, he has said: "Let all your garments be plain." Let us not think it is enough if we pay tithing and even have obeyed the law of consecration, but let us rather gladly respond, just as far and as cordially as we possibly can, to every opportunity offered us to become laborers together with him in the redeeming of the world.

Request for Prayer.

Sr. Nelson Rushton, of Springhill, ———, asks the prayers of the Saints that she might have health to rear her five small children, and whose life has not had much sunshine. She is isolated, the nearest Saints being at Williamsdale, fifteen miles distant.

Last year's death roll from aerial shipwrecks includes many of the most skillful among the air men. The Scientific American remarks that this fact seems to suggest "that we have not advanced so far as was supposed in our understanding of the conditions that govern the flight of heavier-than-air-machines."

Letter Department

TROCHEE VALLEY, ALBERTA, February 17, 1911.

Dear Herald: We are isolated from church privileges, papa, mamma, and myself being the only Saints around here. My brother does not belong, but we have been teaching him the Bible and its principles, and he is ready to be baptized as soon as an elder comes our way.

I would like to hear from some of the Saints in Edmonton or British Columbia, as I intend going to Edmonton, and I would like to stop with the Saints.

Alberta is still as cold as ever, sometimes sixty-four below zero. I would like to hear from some of the dear Saints in the Wilson Branch, Michigan, as I belong there.

Would some of the elders call and see us as they are traveling through? There is a good work to be done here, as several are investigating and we are sending tracts and church papers around to the people. Any elders coming here take train for Calgary, then on to Olds. Inquire at Olds for us at Moore's drug store and they will tell you where we live. We live five miles southwest of Trochee, so I think you will find us without any trouble and we will take care of you while you are here. We will be looking for an elder to come soon. If there are any Saints in Calgary please write to me. Give your address and I will call and see you while in Calgary. Your sister in the one faith,

VIOLET THORPE.

JOHNNIE, NEVADA, February 23, 1911.

Dear Herald: I am still endeavoring to keep God's law as revealed in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. Myself and family, brother Walter and his family, are the only Saints in this part of the State. We have been here about three years, and have not had the privilege to hear a sermon of any kind, only what we read in the church papers, and the soul inspiring sermons of Bishop Evans in the Sunday World.

We are on the desert of Nevada, but hope in time to be where we can enjoy the association of God's children. Wife and I were baptized by Elder William Davis at Five Lakes, Michigan, nearly seven years ago; and can say we have never regretted the step, but instead have rejoiced in the angel's message.

I would like to say to the Saints of eastern Michigan with whom we have been associated, that we shall never forget our meeting with you. We need your faith and prayers in our isolated condition. Yours in the one faith,

A. J. JONES.

FULTON, IOWA, February 14, 1911.

Editors Herald: The story in Autumn Leaves for February of "An old desk" at housecleaning time, brought to mind a letter written by Elder J. S. Roth when he was missionary to the Eastern Iowa District, which is as follows:

"MONDAMIN, IOWA, October 18, 1888.

"Beloved Saints of the Fulton Branch: No doubt some of you want to know something about the reunion. In the first place, will say it is a grand success, for up to this time fifty have been baptized and many more are almost ready. There are about two hundred and twenty tents on the ground, containing about one thousand and six or eight hundred people. Just think of it: fifteen to eighteen hundred people at every meeting. The tents cover about ten acres, and the teams and wagons about eight acres more; so you can see what an aspect this cotton city is. The Saints are here from Michigan, Minnesota, Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, and Illinois.

"I would that all you, my dear brothers and sisters, could be here and partake of the heavenly feast. Not less than two or three tongues every day, and prophecies, and revelations. God is truly with us to comfort us with his Holy Spirit, for he truly gives us the same kind of feast as they had on the day of Pentecost.

"How thankful we ought to be to our heavenly Father that we are privileged to live in the day and age when we can have the blessings which Peter and all the holy worthies of old had.

"The Spirit of God stood by us in preaching his word. I have been one of the committee to administer to the sick, and thank God, he was with us. Some miraculous healing was done through us by him. One sister was healed of asthma, and others of other diseases. One sister was burning with fever and in thirty minutes went to the meeting. Many outsiders confessed that God was with us.

"And now, dear Saints, I admonish you in the name of Christ, by the Spirit which constrains me to write, to be faithful. Don't, oh, don't neglect any of your duties. Pray often, pray much, pray fervently, and God will bless you.

"Yea, thus saith your God, oh, my Saints of the Fulton Branch: I have watched over you. I have preserved you. I have suffered the adversary of souls to persecute you, so as to bring you closer to me. Inasmuch as you will draw close to me I will draw close to you. Yea, I will lead you; as a Father leadeth his child so will I lead you if you will keep my commandments. Yea, cleanse yourselves from all uncleanness. Yea, my children, some of you have grieved me in times past, for some of you have made promises which you have not kept. Yea, my children it is my desire that you meet together to worship me, for thereby you will gain strength in me, for by so doing I will bless you. But even in this some of you have grieved the Spirit so that I did not bless you as I would have done, had you done otherwise. For it is not pleasing to me when you come together to worship me to have so much lightness of speech, and unnecessary levity before and after your meeting. For thereby you grieve my Spirit. I desire my people to be cheerful with each other with pleasant countenance and a light heart, but unnecessary lightness of words is unseemly for my Saints. For thereby you hurt my cause, when those of the world meet with you. Yea, some of my children have felt by my Spirit that it was not right. Therefore, my children lift up your heads and rejoice with a holy joy in your God; that he hath redeemed you, and will save you if you are faithful and keep my commandments, even thus saith the Spirit. Amen."

About twenty-two years have gone since then. Many of those exhorted have passed away. Others that were then young have grown old, but the same president still presides over the branch. From those who were then young have risen stanch defenders of the gospel: one high priest, one seventy, and elders. The membership has increased to about seventy-six. Only three in all that time have been expelled. Now we are on the verge and others will take hold of the work.

Last October, when preaching the dedicatory sermon here, Elder James McKierman also exhorted the ministers, when in church, not to have too much laughter. And the Saints were urged to deport themselves as becometh Saints in the house of God.

You may rest assured that this branch has had its trials, both within and without: many heartaches, hours of anxiety, pain, and sorrow. But by the help of God we mean to stand until the end. I believe I am safe in saying that each of us desires to come up higher; to put on Christ and learn of him; be partakers of the divine nature, so that when he comes we may enter into the haven of rest.

I wish to say that many of the Saints do not appreciate the noble literature that is published for the young and old by the church.

JOHN HEIDE.

WINFIELD, IOWA, February, 1911.

Dear Herald: We feel indebted to you for the many encouraging thoughts we receive through your pages.

On December 9, our daughter Gladys was taken suddenly ill with typhoid pneumonia. Two doctors said it was a very critical case. Her fever was 105½ and her pulse was 140. She was delirious most of the time. I was impressed that unless we had an elder that she could not last much longer. We telephoned Elder Charles Fry at Burlington. He administered to her that evening, and the next morning. She rested better that night than any time since she was taken sick, and continued to improve, and has been going to school for several weeks. When the doctors came on Thursday morning they were greatly surprised at her improvement, and said from appearances it was going to be a mild case. Quite different from their statement of the day before.

We have built a brick photograph gallery on Main street and if any of the elders come this way we can fit it up for meetings. We built it with that intention, if we can't get any other place.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, we remain,

MR. AND MRS. I. M. LANE.

COLDWATER, MICHIGAN, February 4, 1911.

Dear Herald: We are cheered by your weekly visits, bringing good news from our Father's family. As some of the children, we contribute our mite.

It seems a long time since we first heard of this great latter day work. Looking back, it seems more like a dream; for I was only a young woman, twenty-eight years old, and now I have passed my seventy-fifth birthday. But the same kind Father that cared for us then is still watching over us. Oh, how he has remembered us this winter; for my husband has been sick since last October, and at times it seemed he would die; but he is better and walks around the house, but not outside. The dear Lord has given me strength to take care of him. While we feel many times that our journey is nearly ended, we want to be sure that we have "kept the faith."

On our birthday we were reminded that we were not forgotten. For when the postman brought so many of those beautiful little tokens (173 cards and some letters) from relatives, friends, and Saints that we have been associated with so many years, we could not keep the tears back. We felt they were our people indeed and their "God is our God." May the rich blessing of heaven rest upon all as profusely as were the cards showered upon us. Love to all the Saints,

MRS. BRADFORD CORLESS.

ASHTON UNDER LYNE, ENGLAND.

Editors Herald: We have moved from Bulwell to the above address with a view to be able to send my six youngest children to Sunday school, where they may be taught in the principles of our Lord.

It is getting quite common to hear men of the world entertaining ideas almost identical with Christ's teaching, and upon further expounding to them this teaching they admit it to be a grand object to aim at; but say it is one which will never exist. Now, dear editors, truly do we realize that the world is waiting for the demonstration of Christ's principles by the sons and daughters of God, which can only be demonstrated by living it. The Saints ought to realize that to live is to progress to perfection; or, as Paul put it

(Weymouth Translation) in his epistle, Hebrews 6:1-3 inclusive:

"Therefore leaving elementary instructions about the Christ, let us advance to mature manhood and not be continually relaying a foundation of repentance from lifeless works and of faith in God, or of teaching about ceremonial washings, the laying on of hands, the resurrection of the dead, and the last judgment: And advance we will, if God permit us to." And as also in Doctrine and Covenants 129:8 the message of restoration. Under it the church has sought the Lord and received from time to time that which was deemed sufficient for the time to govern the church and its ministers, both of the spiritual and the temporal divisions of the work.

Although not in Missouri, yet we can live the gospel law better than ever we have done before. There are many ways we could become like unto one family; live better, yet more economically than under present conditions, and our lives spiritually and temporally cause the world to say, "Surely the Latter Day Saints are living better lives than we. Let us repent and believe the gospel." The world says it can not be brought about. I tell them that like every other society, it must have its small beginnings. Nature shows us that from small seeds spring up small plants, and under proper conditions they grow into great trees.

Hoping all Saints will realize the necessity of beginning with small things, love and duty, and ever striving to be faithful in the restored gospel.

Your brother,
GEORGE GAYDON.

SADIE BURCH.

"MERRILL, MICHIGAN, February 10, 1911.

"Dear Sister: Having read your letter in the SAINTS' HERALD of February 8, 1911, I take particular notice of a dream and request for an interpretation. I hasten to respond.

"This lady is of high culture and popular standing and has many relatives and friends of popular circles and walks in life, who are opposed to the Latter Day Saints and Book of Mormon. Those pictures of sad faces set in the book like pictures in an album, represent her friends and relatives who are opposed to her reading the Book of Mormon or investigating the true doctrine of Jesus Christ. Thereby their faces are made to appear sad. The turning over of a leaf represents a farther investigation of the Book of Mormon. The dry leaves represent the brass plates brought from Palestine by Nephi, and the plates from Hill Cumorah from which the Book of Mormon was translated. The dryness of the leaves represents the saving power of God in preserving the plates. When leaves are dry they will last many ages. So with the plates. They were under the saving power of God while they were lying in the earth, to come forth in God's own appointed time, containing the beautiful gospel of Jesus Christ in its ancient purity, as restored in these latter days. The pressed flowers represent Jesus coming from Palestine to the land of America, preaching this beautiful gospel to the Nephites on this land of America. The sweet smell of the leaves and flowers represents the lives of all true Latter Day Saints after they become citizens of the kingdom of God, by obedience to the law and ordinances of the gospel of God's dear Son. The turning over of another leaf represents a still further investigation. The dropping out of the black leaf into her hand, on which a dim face came to view, represents the dark trials that all the people of God, after obeying the gospel, have to pass through. The dim face that appeared on the black leaf is the face of the Devil, who will appear to us in times of our dark trials, causing the strain or trying of our faith, represented by the straining of the eyes in the dream.

"The sudden awakening represents the dawning of the light of God on our minds, bringing us to a full and complete knowledge of God and the gospel of Jesus Christ and its saving power, aiding to secure a full and complete victory over Satan, and making our lives sweet in Jesus as represented by the sweet smell of the leaves and flowers.

LOWER LAKE, CALIFORNIA, February 12, 1911.

Editors Herald: During these rainy days, and long winter evenings we have been rereading the old HERALDS and Autumn Leaves. We have just finished reading the autobiography of Elder J. C. Clapp, and we were more interested than we were at the first reading, because we did not have to wait for each monthly installment.

The object which prompts this letter is to offer a suggestion (which I believe will meet with the approval of all the Saints, without exception), that Brother Clapp's autobiography should be gotten out in book form. Should it be regarded unfavorably, owing to its brevity, Brother Clapp might add much of interest that would really be worth while, for I know of many little incidents that he made no mention of. Since he is no longer bound by ministerial labors he could profitably inform us of many things that he has withheld. And since he is so well and favorably known by all of the Saints I feel sure everyone would like to be the possessor of a copy of his life work for the cause of the Master. All those who will "second my motion" might drop a card to the good elder in Santa Ana, California, 1415 Third street.

Your brother in the one faith,
EDWARD F. ADAMSON.

SAULT STE. MARIE, February 19, 1911.

Dear Herald: I am pleased to say that the Saints here are taking more interest in the church publications, which will be of great spiritual help to them. I would that our people spend more time in studying the grand principles and thoughts which have been presented by the different writers in the HERALD of late. The work is moving slowly here, but we can see light ahead and hope to reap ere long. Some have given their names for baptism, but on account of us not having a font in our church and the very cold weather in this part of the country, they are waiting till spring. Bro. D. D. Smith, of Whitmore, Michigan, has been with us this winter. We find him a very pleasant and energetic laborer in the vineyard of the Master and hope he will be returned to us again for the coming summer. We are going to hold a reunion here in June. Not decided on the exact date; will notify through HERALD.

Your brother in Christ,
JOHN R. TOMLINSON.

SPRINGFIELD, SOUTH DAKOTA, February 20, 1911.

Editors Herald: The burning of Sr. Hilda Crosley on January 21, 1911, of which I wrote you, finally resulted in her death on the 16th inst. The burns were too deep in her limbs for nature to restore new flesh. She bore her suffering patiently. One of the nurses expressed it that she was the most patient patient that she ever had under her care.

The Saints of Sioux City, Iowa, while she was in the hospital there, did all that could be done for the comfort of mother and child. Being numbered among the isolated ones, this was their first opportunity to be among the Saints, and their kindness was greatly appreciated. The flowers that the young people took her were a source of great pleasure. Many kind messages were received on postals and in letters, all of which were duly appreciated.

The service was conducted in the Congregationist church, Springfield, and the pastor and a choir of young girls rendered agreeable and cheerful service. The writer spoke words of hope and tried to point out the wise and loving provisions that our heavenly Father has made for his children in the resurrection of the dead.

An old adage that "troubles never come singly" seemed to be verified in this instance. Brother Crosley and his daughter Florence went to the hospital to see Hilda and the latter was taken sick and could not return to attend the funeral of her sister. Happily it was not of a serious nature and she can return in a few days.

Your brother in Christ,

EDWARD RANNIE.

Little Flock Debate.

Little Flock is the name of a schoolhouse, eight or ten miles off the railroad from New Baden. This debate came about by us receiving a written challenge from "members of the Church of Christ at Little Flock." I was advised by minister in charge Elder W. M. Aylor to accept the challenge, arrange for the discussion, and do the debating. This I did as well as I could and the result is with God and the people. However, I can now see where improvement could have been made.

Church propositions were discussed, six sessions for each church. During the first proposition the contention centered on Joseph Smith being or not being a polygamist. Our opponent labored hard not only to prove the Prophet Joseph a polygamist, but to belittle and darken the character of the early Saints. He read from that notorious book called "Metropolitan Life," the author not having sufficient respect for it to sign his name. But the reading did not benefit Mr. Chism, nor harm the cause I represented. The people were not only disgusted but angry that a man calling himself a Christian would read such language before an audience.

If Joseph Smith did teach and practice polygamy it is strange they can not find some direct testimony or evidence to that effect. If he taught it by word of mouth, it is strange indeed that he did not write just one little line to support it, for he wrote much. Every other doctrine actually believed by him is mentioned repeatedly in his authentic writings. If he did teach it, it would require no more courage to write about it to some of his trusted friends than to teach it by word of mouth. If he practiced it he would have had the courage to advocate it in his writings. There is not the scratch of a pen from him in support of that doctrine.

The only thing accredited to him by anyone is the so-called revelation on polygamy, and when that document came to light it was in the handwriting of Brigham Young. Testimony is very conflicting concerning that document. There is no law to compel anyone to accept one line of testimony and reject another. Everyone is permitted to accept the testimony which seems most reasonable and true. It is easily understood, no doubt by all, why the Utah Brighamites prefer to accept the specious argument and so-called testimony which says Joseph the Prophet taught polygamy. It is natural that anyone condemned or in jeopardy will welcome testimony in their favor and shrink from that which tends to condemn.

If Joseph Smith was guilty of teaching or practicing that doctrine, we should have testimony coming from others than those who afterwards engaged in its practice to justify themselves. The very fact that our opponents are wholly dependent upon those who after the death of their leader did practice it, for testimony that Joseph Smith taught it, is good reason for all candid thinking people to question the validity of that testimony.

The opinion expressed by Isaac Sheen, William Marks, David Whitmer and others, is based wholly upon testimony furnished by Brigham Young and his compeers. The truth of this or any other matter can not be determined by one-sided testimony. The fact still remains that no document over the signature of Joseph Smith, nor any of his writings to friends, brethren, or church publications, contain one sentence in favor of it. Fortunately, he did have much to say against it; and all that testimony has been before the court and critically and judicially examined. The court decided that the preponderance of evidence proved that Joseph Smith did not teach it. Unless one be interested in the practice of that doctrine, it would be more natural and reasonable to respect the findings of the court. Yet in the fields of religious controversy men resort to some most unnatural and unreasonable methods to overcome the claims of an opponent. By force of circumstances and to follow in the path to capture his ground, we are compelled at times to wade through brush, briars and slush.

Hence we are compelled to suggest; that Mr. Chism could not resort to straight Bible doctrine or argument to disprove our claims, so he sought refuge in slander and abuse, supposing the people would readily accept that against "Old Joe Smith." But fortunately, since the birth of liberty in this age, the infusion of the "American spirit" into the sons and daughters of the Republic; and since the dark shades of superstition, ignorance, and priesthood have been driven back by the beacon light of truth, men and women everywhere are appreciating more the words of the Master when he said: "Let the dead bury their dead; come thou and follow me."

We have not forgotten our purpose, to tell about the debate. I desired to give my view of the validity of testimony, and Mr. Chism's manner of attack. Much could be written in reference to this Texas debater of Campbellite fame. We did not have the contention over the question of being baptized "in the name" or "into the name" as we did at Manchester. He passed it by with brief reference and he permitted me to have my way about it.

In the very beginning, he began trimming or remodeling the New Testament church doctrine and organization so that when he was ready to introduce his church by Scott and Campbell he could show some resemblance.

Some of the prominent points he introduced were: Anyone has the right to baptize himself. No need of a divinely appointed administrator. Jesus was not made Lord and Christ until after the resurrection. No church before Pentecost. The "more excellent way" was when all direct operation of the Holy Spirit ceased; therefore, no more spiritual gifts, as referred to in chapters 12, 13, and 14 of 1 Corinthians. No divine healing as promised by James 5: 14, 15. No more apostles in the church; they were only a constitutional committee, and as such they have no successors. The "perfect" way arrived when the apostles were all killed. Holy Spirit and angel's gone, spiritual gifts ceased, and when each congregation or church had received an epistle from Paul or other ministers then the time had come, referred to by Paul: "When that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away." The above is Chismism, nothing else. It bears no more resemblance to the true teachings of the New Testament than a wheelbarrow does to a passenger train.

I have been permitted to read a book written by this famous Texas debater, the title of which is: Campbellism—What Is It? by J. W. Chism. That question is not so hard to answer.

But when you transfer the words and make it read as follows, I doubt if anyone would be able to define it: "Chiasmism—what is it? according to Campbellism?"

Paul's reference to the last days is applicable to this cult called Campbellism or Chiasmism: a form of godliness but denying the power thereof." It is cunningly devised, and contains much of the art of sophistry. Mr. Chism is well up in his work, he is a scholarly artist in dodging, very handy at ridicule, and a master in trying to browbeat, belittle, and abuse his opponent. This is really his fort. Were he compelled to observe strictly the rules of honorable controversy, as provided in Hedge's Rules of Logic, he would either explode or quit the debate. There is but one consideration that induces me to meet such a stamp of humanity in a public debate, and that is my interest in the salvation of the people, the vindication of the truth, and the love I have for the angel's message.

During this debate, at no time were my feelings ruffled. I was happy in the conflict, because I was conscious that God was with me. The Saints all freely expressed their joy and satisfaction at the results. We made friends for ourselves and for the work.

Whether referring to the Little Flock debate or any other, I wish to say that I am firm in the faith and the gospel as restored by the angel. It all harmonizes with the word of God. Direct revelation from God to man is just as much a reality to-day as it ever was in the past. Simply because the great race of humanity wandered from God into sin, wickedness, and crime, forfeited the light of God's Holy Spirit, and from generation to generation foolishly concluded that the day of revelation had passed,—that is no reason why I should not believe that God is true and will bless his children to-day as in times past, if we are only as worthy as they. The fault is with humanity and not with the Lord.

From my own experience I have positive evidence that God does bless his children to-day by the influence of his Spirit. God's method of revealing himself to man is not affected, changed, obliterated by what man may think about it. In the sacred record we find the number seven made use of in so many ways that we are inclined to surmise that there must be some wonderful significance in it. If anyone can improve the following arrangement, I shall be glad to hear from him.

GOD'S METHOD OF REVEALING HIMSELF TO MAN.

1. By his own voice (Genesis 3: 8-10; 5: 22, 24). Surely while he "walked with God," Enoch would hear his voice. (Genesis 17: 1-3; Exodus 19: 3-5; Exodus 20: 18-22; Matthew 3: 17; Matthew 17: 5.)

2. By his Son, Jesus Christ.

3. By the Holy Spirit.

4. By visitation of angels.

5. By his prophets and apostles—his servants all along the line.

6. By his written word, the Scriptures.

7. By his "handiwork," the work of nature. (Psalm 19.)

Here are seven means that God has employed to make himself known to man. Thomas Payne in his Age of Reason refers to the nineteenth Psalm as the most beautiful reading in the Bible. In commenting upon this method of "language" or means of communication, he gives it as his opinion that we know God only through nature.

Upon the hypothesis that the Godhead is constituted by three persons combined in one: God the Father, his Son, and the Holy Spirit (I would not contend that the Holy Spirit is a person), it follows that the Holy Ghost being a part of that Godhead and the most prominent means employed of God to reveal himself to man in the past, it is safe to conclude that the same method will continue. But this famous debater, Mr. J. W. Chism, says that God will not give the Holy Spirit now—not since the New Testament was written. That the New Testament takes the place of the Holy Spirit as a guide to us. If that be true, I feel forced to the conclusion that the Bible becomes a member of the Godhead instead of the Holy Spirit.

The idea of direct communication from God is that which has staggered the world's people in all ages when they have refused to believe it. Thomas Payne says God speaks only through the works of nature. Mr. Chism says God speaks only through the Bible.

As a matter of fact, it requires faith on our part to please God; the same kind exemplified in the lives of God's servants in former days. To argue a different faith is dangerous. We need the help of God to-day. That help comes through the direct operation of his Spirit, providing we want it, ask for it, live for it, and make our tabernacles fit temples for its indwelling. May God help us to be more worthy.

HEARNE, TEXAS, February 9, 1911. R. M. MALONEY.

Extracts from Letters.

O. E. Thompson, writing from Alexander, Kansas, says: "I was young when I took upon myself the name of my Savior and did not realize the responsibility resting upon me. Many times I found myself walking in by and forbidden paths. But I thank my heavenly Father for making space in my heart for the indwelling of his Holy Spirit. And I now want to so conduct my life before my associates that they can see I am not ashamed of my Savior's words."

Bro. and Sr. Amos Guy, of Shabbona, Michigan, write: "Our branch is in a good spiritual condition under the leadership of our presiding priest, and assistant, the teacher, who has recently put his shoulder to the wheel with fresh courage. He will be a helpmate to our president, who has stood long and faithfully to his post. Let us prove true to the covenant that we made at the water's edge. We do want to be faithful to enjoy that thousand years with all the noble Saints who have gone to their reward. We feel like saying, We have been in the army so long and have not got weary yet. We would not think of bringing disgrace upon the cause that took the best blood of the eighteenth century to build. Elder Gregory, from Canada, has given us meat in due season; we also had a sermon from Brother Sheffer, of Lang, Michigan. Any elders passing through Nebraska, Sheridan County, would find a hearty welcome at the home of Bro. W. R. Winters, who has taken a homestead."

News From Missions

Idaho.

I came to Lookout, Idaho, about the first of last November to visit relatives, and preach the gospel if opportunity presented itself. Through correspondence with my relatives, M. S. Kelley, and his sister, Mrs. Mary L. Skeleton, some of the people had been apprised of my intended visit, and a few of them, including the postmaster, who is a liberal and fair minded man, were curious to hear me preach. They had never heard a Mormon.

Without difficulty I secured the Baptist church (the only one in town), and spoke three evenings to fair sized audiences, some of whom appreciated the gospel story. About a fortnight later I returned, and Mr. T. G. Nelson, the postmaster and merchant of the town, again procured the church. I spoke eight times, with an increasing number of friends to the work as a result. This series of meetings closed on Friday evening, November 18, I think. In the afternoon of the same day the Rev. M. Bramblet, of the Baptist Church, who had formerly resided here, but had been trying new pastures for some months, arrived and resumed his residence in Lookout, and "thereby hangs a tale." He thought a wrong had been done in letting me use the house; howbeit, it was built by all classes with the understanding that all parties should use it when not in use by the Baptists.

The next morning he told the postmaster he would like to debate with me and show the people the weakness of the Mormon faith, if I would meet him. I sent him word by the same party that I was not out hunting debates, but if he wanted to debate to write out the propositions he wished to discuss, and if he was fair, we would have the debate.

The next news I had from him, he was to deliver a lecture against us on December 4. He promised the people he would, in forty-minutes' time, down the Book of Mormon and show that Joseph Smith was a fraud, etc.

His lecture lasted about forty-five minutes, and at the close I asked permission to reply. It was refused on the grounds that he had "promised not to keep the people long." I then asked, "If the people will remain may I have the house?" This was reluctantly granted.

I replied in thirty-five minutes, and as he said nothing further about debate, I supposed the fight was over, and left the next day. In a few days I received a challenge to discuss the following propositions:

1. The New Testament completes the written revelations of God to man.
2. The revelations of Joseph Smith, including the Book of Mormon, are revelations from God to man.

I could not get him to discuss church propositions, nor would he affirm "Baptist succession" or consent to any change of wording. After telling him that his refusal to affirm his church is in harmony with the Bible, was a virtual confession that harmony was lacking, and that it would be so used in the debate, I signed up his propositions, and asked him to set the day.

He then refused to open the church for the debate. The schoolhouse was offered. He refused that, but went to Gifford, three miles to the north, and secured the Christian Church there, setting the time of commencement as February 8, but Mr. Lome and Bro. W. W. Fordham acted as timekeepers.

The time arrived, and the fight was on. Mr. Bramblet seemed very confident of success but was counting on the weakness of his opponent's position rather than the strength of his own. He expected me to reject the Bible and put the Book of Mormon in its stead. His argument was prepared to offset that idea. When he found I accepted more of the Bible than he did, of course he could not use his "ready mixed" arguments very well.

Practically all the people acknowledged his defeat on his own proposition. I was reliably informed that the Christian minister in Gifford was waited upon by a delegation, and urged to take Mr. Bramblet's place and defend our Bible. He declined, saying he could not see that I was attacking the Bible.

Most of his arguments against the Book of Mormon were read from Bays. He made two, however, that were brand new to me. He read from the tenth chapter of Alma that Melchisedec "reigned under his father." This was a positive contradiction of the Bible, for that book expressly says, (Hebrews 7: 3) that Melchisedec was "without father or mother," etc. This objection was easily explained, and he referred to it no more.

Isaiah eleventh chapter was fulfilled when the Jews returned from Babylon, 536 B. C. Judah and Israel are not now gathering, and never will gather, for the Lord gathered them the "second time" when they returned from Babylon, and he had never promised to gather them the "third" time, hence there would never be any more gathering of the Jews, or Israelites. Such was Mr. Bramblet's argument on this chapter. He further said they were to be gathered from "Cush," that there is now no such country as Cush; "it has been blotted out." They can not therefore be gathered from Cush now but must have been while there was a Cush in existence.

It was easy to show that Cush was not "blotted out," but now goes under another name, and further that the history in Ezra, chapter 2, shows that those who came back in 536 B. C. from Babylon, were of the house of Judah, and they came from Babylon only, whereas the prophecy shows they were to come from "Assyria," Egypt, Pathros, Cush, Elam, Shinar, Hamoth, and the islands of the sea. The only place from which they came, as mentioned by Ezra, was Babylon, and this place is not mentioned in Isaiah 11: 11 unless Shinar may be included, it being a contiguous point. Hence they were gathered from one place not mentioned, but were not gathered from the several places that are mentioned, according to Mr. Bramblet's position; therefore, Isaiah was a false prophet.

The debate closed on Saturday, the 11th, and on the next afternoon I baptized four persons in Cottonwood Creek. Two of them are of middle age, men of families, the other two young men. All have prospects of accomplishing a good work if faithful. May God help them so to do in my prayer.

Brother Fordham is doing a good work in his special line, (Bishop's agent), having good understanding of his work, and the confidence of the people. He is a genial companion in mission work, and the future holds bright prospects of usefulness for him. Ever desiring the prosperity of Zion, and her people.

In gospel bonds,

T. C. KELLEY.

FEBRUARY 13, 1911.

Texas.

Another conference year has about gone. As we view our year's work, we rejoice over the victories that have been won for the cause; but feel sad over the mistakes we may have made, and where we have come short in not doing more. The good reports in HERALD from different parts of the world inspire us to try in the future to render better service.

When we read the variety of experiences our brethren have in different parts of the world, we often contrast them with our own, and wonder who has the best field for work, and we have concluded there is no place but what they have their trials and difficulties to overcome. There are no "soft snaps" in preaching this gospel to the world in its present condition. We will have tribulations and persecutions to follow us wherever we go with this message, until the end. "He that endureth to the end the same shall be saved," shows that we have something to endure all along. News comes from the north, south, east, west, foreign countries, and islands of the sea. All show interest, but with difficulties, and persecutions to overcome. The man that is looking for a soft snap, and can not endure hardships, will not last long as a missionary in this work.

My field has been Texas for the last three years. Have acted as missionary in charge. There has been a good growth in numbers, and in right living this year. Although we have been short of help, the most of them have done well. Some of the local brethren have done extra well, keeping up regular appointments in their locality. This is as they should do. When they do this they are doing a good work.

The use of tobacco is the worst thing we have to contend against in the South, as I view it; especially the cigarette, and snuff dipping. The most of the Saints have quit it, but there are some who still hold on to it, which keeps them from being useful. It injures them physically, spiritually, and affects the unborn generation. Most of the preachers of other denominations use tobacco in the South, setting a bad example before the people. I have debated with some of them, while the tobacco filth would be so thick around the table of our opponent that a person felt like rolling up his pants and walking on his heels to go near them. I am glad to say people never saw that kind of a spectacle around the table of one of our ministers; glad we have a church that would not send out that kind of a man to represent it.

Texas is infested with a good supply of the Nonprogressive Campbellites who draw their inspiration principle from R. B. Neal of Kentucky, their chief editor. We have had four debates with them this year. Could have had more, but we accept only those where we think it is necessary, for the good of the work. They do not believe in direct communication from God by angels, or by the Holy Spirit. I have often thought they are of the lineage of the Sadducees come to life again. See Acts 23: 8. Also read verses 12 and 13, where you will read of similar work done by them against Paul and the gospel, as they are doing under the title of Anti-Mormon League against the church to-day.

Our work has not suffered any on account of conflicts with them. But it is no pleasant job, for the reason they have no regard for rules, no respect for people. But they generally overdo it and disgust the people, by which they suffer loss, and we make gain. The one that can abuse the most is the big man among them. R. B. Neal's stuff has not hurt our cause anywhere I have been. The person that relishes such literature as he gives out is not worthy of the gospel; he is too low grade for this work. He might make good material for the modern Sadducees.

We as the ministry and the members have worked together very satisfactorily. Very little trouble among us. This is the way all the Saints should live: all try to keep down trouble, and encourage each other on in the struggle for the great prize at the end of the race.

We have ordained several young men this year, and we expect good returns for them in the future.

Those to be appointed to this field next year will find plenty to do in missionary work as well as among the Saints. I think they will not find any bad records made by any of the ministry either missionary or local. As far as I know all are free from any immoral conduct, and you need not be afraid to follow them.

W. M. AYLER.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, February 24, 1911.

News From Branches.

Saint Louis, Missouri.

During the past month we are pleased to report we have had eight precious souls added to the kingdom. Four were baptized by Brother Sawley, from Troy, Illinois, one from the mission in which Brethren Beaird and Davis have been laboring, and three from the Saint Louis Branch. A promising young man of another faith is very much interested and intends giving the work a thorough investigation. We trust the truth will sink so deeply into his heart that he will accept the fullness of the gospel.

We were privileged to listen to two good sermons from Bishop Hilliard this month; also Brethren T. J. Elliott, George Reeves, S. A. Burgess, and R. Archibald gave some instructive discourses.

Elder Paxton has been diligently attending to the Master's cause. During the time the tent was out in the district, Brother Paxton had charge, being assisted by Brother Dowker. He has been the means of bringing quite a number into the fold the past year; and many have heard the gospel through him.

The district Sunday school and Religio had a rally day February 19. Although a very heavy snowstorm raged all day a fair attendance was on hand and all services were instructive as well as entertaining. On the evening of the 18th, the district officers were elected for the ensuing term.

Our aged Sr. Emma Roberts passed from this earth life on the afternoon of the 19th at the age of ninety years and five months. She leaves two sons and two daughters. Sr. Roberts was a faithful and sincere Latter Day Saint all of the many years she has been connected with the work.

E. M. PATTERSON.

2739 DEJONG STREET.

Independence, Missouri.

On Sunday, February 19, there was a heavy blanket of snow covering streets and sidewalks, and still more coming: however, 446 of both old and young attended Sunday school, and preaching services were well attended and there was a fair representation at all the meetings.

Brother Hilliard discoursed on the temporal law in the morning, and Brother Aylor on the restored gospel in the evening. At the close of the afternoon prayer meeting the Daughters of Zion with an excellent attendance, evinced the usual keen interest in their work by the rendering of a good program; and the discussion, subject, "A father's rights," was a very interesting one.

On Monday evening, the 20th, the Ladies' Aid gave a delectable supper, the menu consisting of oyster stew, tomato soup, etc., with ice cream and cake, the proceeds amounting to over thirty dollars, a goodly sum considering the unfavorable state of the weather and limited number out. On the following night the L. A. C. was to hold its weekly physical culture class, and on Thursday evening a "bout" was advertised to come off between the Independence Athletic Club and Battery B. Teams, in the hall.

They teach us nowadays that the bookworm is not the ideal academic student, and that the ideal student is one who keeps one eye on athletic and social activities; and so, with the savants on their side, the L. A. C. and the I. A. C. are "all right."

By reference to The Tidings, a little Independence Branch weekly newspaper, the first issue of which was on circulation last Sunday, one may read that on next Friday evening there will be given at the Religio, beside the usual lesson, a program of vocal and instrumental music, also readings and a class chorus. The Tidings is a complete, comprehensive, useful little periodical: and not only Independence, but also every other branch will hail it with delight when it shall come to hand.

Last Sunday, the 26th, was a pleasant day, although the walks continued snowy and very slushy; but at the sunrise meeting there were about sixty present, and at Sunday school 679. Bro. E. L. Kelley preached in the morning and Bro. John Kaler in the evening.

At 1.30 p. m. three Sunday school lads were baptized, and in the afternoon Elders F. M. Smith and I. N. White confirmed them. The meeting was fully occupied in the service of praise, prayer, and testimony. Five names were mentioned for prayer and there were given twelve testimonies, including a very interesting account of the work begun at Sugar Creek given by Sr. Carrie Ballenger. Her husband, our Brother Wesley, is postmaster there.

All the sermons preached from week to week fall on appreciative ears, and the Saints are being instructed and built up in the work. Bishop Kelley stated many things with plainness; he referred to the kind of work the Saints should be engaged in; they ought not, he said, to "come here in order to enjoy a peaceable time, but to build up Zion, and to redeem the land."

Conference Minutes.

SOUTHWESTERN TEXAS.—Pursuant to appointment, the conference met with the Second San Antonio Branch at Saints' chapel, February 10, 1911, W. C. Carl in charge. D. S. Palmer preached. Business began at 2.30 p. m. Saturday, February 11, 1911, with the district presidency in the chair. Branch reports: First and Second San Antonio and Bandera referred back for correction. Report of Bishop's agent was approved. Ministry reports: Elders W. C. Carl, D. S. Palmer, Morgan, Wight, Johnson, Jett, W. H. Davenport. Priests: Glaude Kuykendall, Walter Buck, A. R. Wheeler, J. R. Wheeler, and C. F. Wheeler. District officers elected: W. C. Carl, district president; D. S. Palmer, district vice-president; Glaude Kuykendall, treasurer; O. L. Adams, assistant secretary, and C. F. Wheeler, secretary. As a means of raising a district fund for prosecuting missionary work it was decided that the presidents of branches should once a month take up a collection, and that the district presidency should communicate with members not in branches. It was decided that next conference be held with the reunion next summer, that the Jett Crossing on the Medina River be recommended to the missionary in charge and district presidency as the most suitable place for holding reunion, and that a committee of five to include the district presidency, together with J. P. Neal, T. J. Jett, and J. R. Wheeler look after the grounds and make necessary preparations. Under the instructions of the conference, the district presidency drafted a petition to the Twelve and Bishop requesting that T. J. Jett be given a mission to the Mexicans in the district. This was unanimously ratified. A district Sunday school association was organized with C. F. Wheeler superintendent, Glaude Kuykendall as assistant superintendent and treasurer, and Sr. Hulda Hant secretary. D. S. Palmer, J. P. Neal, W. M. Aylor, John Harp, H. O. Smith, W. S. McRay, S. S. Smith, and others were chosen delegates to General Conference. In our report of the last conference and reunion we stated that we believed that to be the awakening of the Saints to a realization of their duties and responsibilities, and now we are glad to say we believe such is really true. The district has received the compliments of the Bishop on having done far better in that line than ever before. There seems to be that feeling of unity among all the members which is so essential to success. The Sunday afternoon prayer and sacrament meeting continued three hours and fifteen minutes, and was a spiritual refreshing. The sermon by Brother Morgan at the closing service Sunday night on the gathering, was a great inspiration. Carl F. Wheeler, secretary, Sayers, Texas.

NORTHEASTERN KANSAS.—District met 10.30 a. m., February 11, 1911, at Topeka, Kansas. Samuel Twombly and H. E. Moler presiding. Delegates were appointed to represent the district at General Convention, with authority to cast the full vote, and in case of division, a majority and minority vote. All schools in the district reported. Home department superintendent reported sixty-five home class members on record.

On same date, at 2:30, Religio association met and installed as its officers: President, A. H. Rudd; vice-president, Etta Hunt; secretary, Floy Holcomb; treasurer, Fred F. Jackson; member of library board, Floy Holcomb; superintendent home department, Grace Baughman; good literature superintendent, Vinnie Rudd. Delegates were appointed to General Convention. All locals reported. At 7:30 interesting and instructive papers and talks were given; also a solo was beautifully rendered by Master Clifford Brown, of the Deloit local. Adjourned to meet at the call of executive committee. Secretary.

LAMONI.—Stake Sunday school and Religio associations met at Lamoni, Iowa, February 9 and 10, 1911. Two evening sessions were held, which consisted of programs along different lines of work. Reports of the work being done were read from the various officers, and at the forenoon session of Friday, the 10th, the following officers were elected for the next year. For the Sunday school: Superintendent, A. L. Keen; assistant superintendent, W. E. Shakespeare; secretary, C. B. Woodstock; treasurer, Joseph Roberts; member of library board, John Garver; superintendent of home department, Vina McHarness. For the Religio: President, C. I.

Carpenter; vice-president, Hessel Vanderflute; secretary, Martha Martin; treasurer, John Amos; member of library board, Sarah Bass; superintendent of home department work, Vina McHarness; and the executive committee chose A. L. Keen for superintendent of gospel literature department. One hundred and thirty-one delegates were chosen from the Sunday school association to represent them at the General Convention, and seventy-eight were chosen from the Religio association. Mary Banta, secretary for the Sunday school; Martha Martin, for the Religio.

CHATHAM DISTRICT.—The Sunday school association and Zion's Religio-Literary Society of Chatham District, Ontario, held their convention at Wabash, in the Saints' church, on Saturday and Sunday, February 11 and 12, according to previous notice. Meeting called to order at 1:30 p. m. Saturday afternoon was spent principally in receiving reports and the election of officers. According to reports most all Sunday schools and Religio locals of the district were in a healthy condition. The home class department of the Sunday school reports excellent progress. The various officers were reelected for another year. Saturday evening a splendid entertainment was given and listened to by a full house. Elder D. Snobelen, district president of the church, was chairman. He ably handled the program, consisting of speeches, solos, duets, instrumental, recitations, readings, etc. Sunday morning a large crowd gathered to prayer, testimony, and sacrament meeting. The good Spirit of the Master was present to cheer and comfort. The Lord, through Elder Davis, spoke in tongues and gave the interpretation: said he was pleased with the sacrifice his people made in assembling, and warned them to be faithful, that they might be protected in the hours of trials which would be more pronounced in the near future; said he was pleased with Elder John Badder, district superintendent of the Sunday school association, for his wise counsel, etc., and also spoke to Sr. Nellie Taylor, district home class superintendent, encouraging her in her labors; pleased with the work she was accomplishing, and the sacrifices she made in her labors. Elder Joseph Blackmore was also spoken to, saying, it was the will of the Lord that he should again raise his voice in proclaiming the gospel to the world. Sr. Nellie Taylor requested that the time from 1 to 2 o'clock p. m. be given to her and Sr. Annie Bacon, home class superintendent of the Religio society, that they might meet with all local home class superintendents and all others who wished to be present. Request granted. From 2:15 to 3:15 was set apart for Sunday school and Religio talks, time being well occupied. From 3:30 till nearly 5 o'clock a round table was conducted, in charge of Bro. A. Hewitt, field worker for the district. There was no dearth of questions pertaining to Sunday school, Religio and literary work. Answers were intelligently given by field workers, assisted by Bro. W. Ross, district president of the Religio association, and Bro. J. Badder, superintendent of Sunday school association. Sunday evening Elder Davis, missionary for this district, preached, assisted by Elder Snobelen. The sermon was listened to attentively by a packed house. A vote of thanks was tendered the Wabash Saints for their generous treatment. Thus was brought to a close a very successful convention. Sessions throughout were attended by a calm, peaceful, and harmonious influence. Attendance was large and we believe all the Saints were encouraged. Many of those not of the faith were impressed for good with what they saw and heard. We hope and pray the seed thus sown will bear fruit to the honor and glory of our heavenly Father. John C. Dent, John H. Munroe, press committee.

NORTHEASTERN MISSOURI.—District Sunday school convention met at Bevier, Missouri, February 10, 1911. Superintendent W. B. Richards in charge, Sr. Christina Edmunds secretary. Richards, superintendent; D. W. Tryon, assistant superintendent; Willie May Chapman, secretary; Ethel Harris, treasurer; B. S. Tanner, librarian; C. W. Miller, superintendent home department. Delegates to General Convention: W. B. Richards, F. T. Mussell, Ellen Davis, Bertha Rogers, and Lizzie W. Morgan. The holding of next convention was left in the hands of district officers.

SEATTLE AND BRITISH COLUMBIA.—District Religio convention met at 10 a. m. February 10, 1911, in Seattle, with president Holman in chair. Convention advertised for September 16, 1910, was not held. Reports showed a gain of one member for the year ending December 31, 1910, with a total enrollment of 105. Seattle local lost 3, Central local gained 4. Total Religio sessions held in 1910 are 104. Books of Mormon in libraries, 14. Treasurer's report: Balance last report $2.73; collection $1.67; expense 36 cents; on hand $4.04. Officers elected: F. W. Holman, president, 4106 Sixth ave. N. W., Seattle, Washington; Hattie Ward, vice-president, 1280 Lewis street, Chehalis, Washington; Leonard S. Rhodes, secretary, box 871, Centralia, Washington; Hattie Ward, member of library board; Mrs. H. A. Briggs, home department superintendent; George Thorburn, Bert McKim, and William Johnson were chosen delegates to the General Convention, with authority to cast majority and minority vote in case of division; delegates present are to cast full delegate vote. Adjourned to meet at the same place and day prior to next conference. Sunday evening, the 12th, a profitable and entertaining Religio session was held, at which a resolution was passed, authorizing the president to select a committee from the district Sunday school association to prepare entertainment for the convention. Leonard S. Rhodes, secretary.

POTTAWATTAMIE.—The district Sunday school association convened at Underwood, Iowa, February 24, 1911. District officers elected: Stella Harding, superintendent; Edna M. Elswick, assistant superintendent; Floy M. Wind, secretary; J. A. Lapworth, treasurer; J. N. Campbell, home class superintendent; and Mrs. J. O. Christensen, member of library board. Eighteen delegates were elected to General Convention, with instructions to cast minority and majority vote in case of division. Convention adjourned to meet at the call of superintendent. The time of next convention is to be devoted mostly to institute work. Floy M. Wind, secretary.

The Bishopric.

NOTICE OF APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT.

To the Saints and Friends of the Nodaway District: Please take notice that at the February conference of said district, Bro. J. T. Ford, address R. F. D. 1, Box 20, Ravenwood, Missouri, was duly recommended for appointment as bishop's agent in and for said territory, and after communication with former agent, Bro. R. K. Ross, of Mound City, Missouri, and also with said Bro. J. T. Ford, the latter has been duly appointed bishop's agent for the Nodaway, Missouri, District of the Reorganized Church, in place of Bro. R. K. Ross, resigned.

Bro. R. K. Ross for the past number of years has faithfully and earnestly filled the office of agent of said district, for which the Bishopric take pleasure at this time in extending him special thanks, and trust that he may be blessed and prospered in the Master's work in whatever line he may engage in.

The Bishopric also take pleasure in recommending Bro. J. T. Ford to the Saints and friends of the Nodaway District as agent and ask that each one may feel interested in helping along the work and assisting the agent in his duties.

It is also hoped that the Saints will not fail to appreciate the difficulty of carrying on the work of an agent, so many things to look after and oftentimes of a perplexing nature that it is very good place to "show forth the faith and patience of the Saints," as referred to in the Lord's instructions.

The Bishop's books at the close of the year should contain the name of each member in the district as having shown a disposition to fulfill the law of Christ in financial matters. Can we not have a report from the agent of this commendable attitude on the part of all Saints by close of present year, so that special blessings, not only of a temporal, but spiritual nature may come to all the household of faith within the said lines. Trust that the Lord may remember and bless each one and that there may be unity and peace and harmony on the part of each, to move forward the Master's work in and for said territory. I am, in behalf of the Bishopric,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, February 23, 1911.

Church Secretary.

BOUNDARY LINES OF DISTRICTS.

The following named districts are requested to forward to the undersigned a report of their present district boundary lines, that the same may be checked up with the records in this department. Early action is urged, that the record may be compared and inaccuracies corrected, should any be found. District presidents and secretaries are requested to give the matter referred to their immediate attention: New South Wales, Victoria, Australia; Birmingham, London, Manchester, Sheffield, England; Eastern, Western, Wales; Chatham, Nova Scotia, Canada; Alabama, Mobile, Alabama; Eastern, Colorado; Kewanee, Illinois; Kentucky and Tennessee; Massachusetts; Eastern, Michigan; Montana; Ohio District, Ohio; Central, Northeastern and Choctaw, Southwestern, Texas; Utah; West Virginia.

Would be pleased to have reports from all of said districts before the convening of General Conference, if practicable,

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, March 1, 1911.

ENROLLMENT IN AND REORGANIZATION OF QUORUMS.

By action of General Conference the work of reorganizing the quorums of elders, priests, teachers, and deacons was assigned to a committee of which Pres. F. M. Smith is chairman. The reorganization of said quorums contemplates the grouping of such officers in branches, districts, stakes, or missions, according to territorial location. The work has been delayed because of lack of sufficient clerical help in the office of the chairman, but will now be provided for and completed as soon as practicable. All desiring enrollment should address Pres. F. M. Smith, 630 South Chrysler street, Independence, Missouri.

RAILROAD RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Railroad rates to General Conference and Conventions, Lamoni, Iowa, April 2-21, or thereabouts, are expected to include the state of Missouri. Announcement of particulars will be given as soon as lines interested are ready to report action of their February meeting.

Something may also be reported from the Trans-Continental lines—operating territory from Eastern Colorado state line to the coast.

Because of prevailing two-cent per mile rate in Western, Central, and other territory it is not possible to secure any reduction therein until we can guarantee an attendance of one thousand or more.

CREDENTIALS OF DELEGATES.

But few districts have forwarded their delegate credentials to the undersigned, as required to make up report of delegates for early organization of conference. Presidents and secretaries are requested to forward same without delay, by mail. Credentials should not be held to send by delegates.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, February 28, 1911.

The Order of Enoch.

All correspondence intended for the United Order of Enoch should not be addressed to any individual but to "The United Order of Enoch, Lock Box 52, Independence, Missouri."

F. M. SMITH, Secretary.

Eighth Quorum of Elders.

EIGHTH QUORUM OF ELDERS.

Report blanks and circular letter were mailed on date set below to each member of the Eighth Quorum of Elders. If you have not received your letter, when you read this, please send the undersigned a card. Also if you know any change in address of any member for the past year. Report should be sent in as soon as possible after March 1.

S. A. BURGESS.

LAMONI, IOWA, February 21, 1911.

HAMILTON, MISSOURI.

Kirtland Joint Reunion.

The Kirtland, Pittsburg, Ohio and West Virginia districts will hold a reunion at Kirtland August 17 to 27, 1911. We believe this gathering will be of interest to the Saints in general. The services will be held in the Temple. Accommodations can be secured for either rooms or tents, and we shall be prepared to take care of as many as may desire to go. The rooms may be limited. Announcements will appear later on regarding accommodations, rates, etc. To those who desire to have an estimate as to probable cost of attending, think the rates may be similar to those of former reunions, namely: Tent and one cot, $3.50 for the eleven days; meals 55 cents per day. Will announce full details after General Conference. The committee expect to make this reunion a memorable one.

Deaths.

DOTSON.—W. B. Dotson was born August 17, 1835; died December 15, 1910. Was married to Sallie Wall, February, 1879; to them were born six girls and one boy, who with their mother are left to mourn. He was baptized by Elder W. T. Bozarth, July 8, 1884, near Hearne, Texas, and was a faithful member of the church until death. Bro. S. R. Hay conducted the funeral service, which was attended by a large concourse of sorrowing friends. He was a kind husband and a loving father; an honest, upright man, loved by all who knew him.

CROSLY.—Hilda Crosley, died February 16, 1911, at Saint Joseph's Hospital, Sioux City, Iowa, the result of being burned at Springfield, South Dakota, January 21, 1911, aged 12 years, 5 months, and 3 days. Was baptized in her tenth year. She is a daughter of Bro. and Sr. Ross W. and Anna Crosley. Funeral service in the Congregational church, at Springfield, South Dakota, in charge of Elder Edward Rannie, assisted by the pastor, Reverend Warren, music by a choir of girls of about her own age.

SUMMIT ADDITION

CITY OF INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

The Order of Enoch is placing this beautiful addition on sale, not as a speculation, and whatever is made over the cost price of this land belongs to the Order for the benefit of the poor, and the carrying on the business of the Order. Persons at a distance wishing to purchase property in this addition, if dissatisfied with the purchase after seeing it, will have their money refunded.

Terms of Sale

We would prefer cash, but this does not hinder those of limited means. The Order will make it possible to assist any poor Saint to acquire a home on more reasonable and better terms than could be done in any other way. Elder B. J. Scott of the Independence Stake Bishopric has been placed in charge of the sales of this property, and will assist anyone wishing to see the property.

The Order has also provided a head quarters at 103 South River boulevard, one block from the church, where Saints visiting or contemplating moving to Independence will be made welcome, and will be made comfortably at home. Saints contemplating moving to Independence Stake should confer with the local or general bishopric, which will always be to their best advantage.

PRACTICAL APPLICATION OF THE WORDS OF JESUS TO PRESENT HUMAN NEEDS.

II.—THE MAN WHO IS TEMPTED.

Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God.—Matthew 5:8.

Jesus does not come to the tempted man with condemnation, abuse, or ridicule. He comes affirming the blessedness of purity. He would have men and women understand the value of integrity and virtue.

Jesus knew the force of temptation. He met the Devil face to face, at the beginning of his ministry. We are told that in all things he was tempted like as we are. He knew by observation as well as by intuition and divine knowledge the evil of sin. He knew by experience as well as by divine knowledge and intuition the blessedness of purity. He "loved righteousness and hated iniquity," therefore God "anointed him with the oil of gladness above his fellows." He became the exponent of the way of purity and obedience, which is the way of life, also the way of peace and happiness.

Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God. The wicked can not see God or come into his presence to dwell because he can not tolerate sin. But more than that, they could not look at him or be at ease in his presence, even if they were permitted to approach him.

We may carry this a little further, and say that only the pure in heart shall see man. The vile man dare not look his neighbor in the eye, much less his God. The man who is conscious of guilt can not look his fellow-man in the face, unless it be by an act of will, at which his appearance becomes brazen rather than fearless.

The consciousness of inner purity that enables a man to meet men as a man is beyond price. It is second only to the ability to meet God. Blessed are the pure in heart.

Many are the corrupting influences in the world to-day. The number of people crowding into cities is out of proportion to the total population. And the cities pander to all the vices, passions, and evil appetites of human nature. Lust, greed, and appetite are unchecked, and bear their fruits of prostitution, dishonesty, murder, drunkenness, and debauchery. Billy Sunday has truly said that midnight in Chicago or London or Paris or Cairo is "midday in hell." The great white way is running full blast; wide open to man, woman, or child who has a dollar or a million dollars to fling away and a soul to mortgage to the Devil.

A man must fortify himself against temptation in this age. There is the greatest need to repeat the prayer that the Lord taught his disciples, "Suffer us not to be led into temptation." The best protection against temptation is a pure and disciplined heart; not a purity that is the result of ignorance, but that which is the result of intelligent choice.

The wise man said, "Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life." Temptation can not appeal to a man who has his heart fortified. With God's help such a man can pass the open saloon door and feel no desire to enter; he can tread the streets of the red light district at night, if duty calls him there, and feel nothing but pity for the wretched denizens, and disgust for the sordid appeal made to low, brute passions; he can handle trust funds with no desire to misappropriate them to his own enrichment. He is fortified. He is safe. He is saved now. Blessed are the pure in heart.

There is no place to-day where a man can hide himself and escape temptation if he is not right himself. He can not escape from himself. There is no place where one can go to educate his children where they can entirely avoid temptation. Individual preparation is the only safe defense. Jesus is the savior of the individual. He can save men from themselves and from the snares and pitfalls of the Devil. The pure heart is his ally in that fight. Blessed are the pure in heart.

If men would stop to think, these words must appeal to all that is best in them. His appeal can not fail to arouse them to self-preservation. It is folly to suppose that Christ does not understand modern life, or that his words do not apply now. He understood the primal passions of man. He knew the good in man that rallies to an appeal to manhood or womanhood. His words are of practical worth now. He is the only individual who can promise help and keep his promise under all circumstances.

FLORA SCOTT

Let the tempted man make Jesus the man of his counsel. Let him repeat the thought, "Blessed are the pure in heart. I will preserve my integrity at all cost. I will be a man among men. I will keep myself clean. I will so live that I can walk upright in the daylight. I will continue able to look every man in the face and fear not to meet my God in the day of judgment."

Such a man will be able to see God, not alone in the great hereafter; but he will discern God now, and see his hand moving in all things for the accomplishment of his immutable purposes.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

(To be concluded.)

BISHOP WILLIAM ANDERSON.

Last week the SAINTS' HERALD contained an announcement of the death of Bishop William Anderson, Presiding Bishop of the Lamoni Stake. His death occurred March 5, 1911, as the result of paralysis.

BISHOP WILLIAM ANDERSON.

Brother Anderson was born in Glasgow, Scotland, February 1, 1840. His parents were members of the Latter Day Saints' Church, and in 1855 emigrated to Utah. Becoming dissatisfied with conditions in Utah they moved to Saint Louis, Missouri, in 1856. Here September 11, 1864, William was baptized into the Reorganized Church by Elder Charles Derry. One month later he was ordained a teacher and his active work in the church began. He faithfully occupied in many positions of trust and responsibility; being in turn ordained teacher, priest, elder, high priest, and bishop. He also became a member of the High Council at its organization, which place he held at death. He has acted as Presiding Bishop of the Lamoni Stake ever since its organization.

The funeral services were from his home, Tuesday afternoon, March 7, Elder John Smith in charge, at which time Elder Heman C. Smith delivered a short address. A memorial sermon was delivered at the church Sunday forenoon, March 12, by Elder Elbert A. Smith. We give below a synopsis of the address by Elder Heman C. Smith, as reported by Estella Wight, omitting the historical items:

"I WILL COME AND HEAL HIM."

There may be different ideas in regard to faith and doctrine, but all Christians instinctively turn in time of sorrow and bereavement to the one source—to the Man of Galilee; and I presume that there is not one here to-day but what has thought of him in their assembling upon this solemn occasion, and probably many of his words have been presented to the minds of those who are present.

That which seems to impress itself upon my mind more than anything else is a statement he made in time of trouble. When some came to him and told him of their trouble and that one whom they loved was sick, he answered, "I will go and heal him." If they believed that statement it must have been fraught with a great deal of comfort, and I have been thinking to-day that though the person referred to still lived in this mortal life, and the work that he did for him was simply to prolong that life, the language is just as applicable to those in whom life has become extinct. Sicknes is but an incident in the mortal life of man, and when we look at life in its broadest sense, death is but an incident. In the mind of the Master it is no more than the other, and doubtless these words would apply when we speak of one who has gone as much as to one who is sick,—"I will come and heal him."

And the promise is just as true in the one case as in the other. The sadness of one excels the sadness of the other with us, because of the bereavement, because of the loss of society, because we henceforth walk without those whom we love till we come down into the shadows of death. But with the Master, it occurs to me, that is just as easy, his power will extend just as readily if we were to apply these words to those who are departed, and say in the language of the Master, "I will go and heal him." Whatever is wrong, whatever is out of the normal condition of living will be removed, whether that thing has destroyed life, or whether he arrests it before life has become extinct; it is just as true that he will come and heal him in one condition as in the other. I think we all believe that to-day, and it is comforting to us, no doubt, when we think that we are in his hands while living, and that there is no sorrow so great that he is not both willing and ready to assuage. That nothing can come to us, whether it be life or death, in which we have not succor and support in him; whether it is those who have departed, or those who remain, whether on this side of the veil or upon the other side, we are in his hands, and that he doeth all things well; that in the end, whatever may be the sorrow that lieth between the here and there, all will be well. And methinks we will all rejoice in the final culmination that things have been just as they have. We will know then, realize then what we can not know or realize now; things that brought us the most sorrow, the most distress, the most trouble, were ordained for the best, all things considered.

We are here to-day for the purpose of paying this tribute of respect to one who believed while living that in the activities of life only can be found success. That no man can succeed in any undertaking without he is actively engaged in the accomplishment of his purpose. He applied this principle to all things in which he was interested, whether it pertained to the things of this life or to the things of the future life; whether it concerned his business affairs or whether it concerned his religion and his preparation for the after life. Nor was he interested alone in himself and in making the activities of life contribute to his own good; but many were the activities he engaged in, especially in a religious sense in which he had the good will or the good desire to accomplish something for somebody else. And in all that he undertook to do, especially in his religious service, he did it in an unselfish manner in the sense that he asked no remuneration, expected no remuneration, so far as the riches of this world are concerned. And oftentimes he sacrificed what might have been gain to him, not solely for the purpose of enhancing his own interests, either here or hereafter, but partially, at least, for enhancing the interests of his fellowmen, and to make their condition better and their prospect brighter, to establish in the minds of the people the truth that he embraced in his early years. But in speaking of him as a public man we can not express the all nor the half of what he was.

I do not know whether all of you have observed it or not, but one of the chief characteristics of the life of William Anderson, that I have noticed, was his tenderness, his love, and his consideration in the home circle; to make it a place of peace, of happiness, of comfort, of joy. So far as I knew him he did not carry into his home the vexations and troubles of his business life, whatever they may have been, any further than it was necessary for him to do so; but laying these aside as he crossed the threshold of his home, he sought to make life pleasant there. To me this is one of the chief characteristics of his life, one of the most praiseworthy things that the mind can dwell upon in connection with him and his memory. . . . I feel to say to-day in the language of the Master which we have quoted at the beginning of our remarks, that as we stand around this bier to-day and lay away this silent form that has been so active in life, we can hear the echo of these words just as literally, just as truly as did the friends of the afflicted one in the years that are past, "I will come and heal him."

That is our faith, that is our confidence, that he will come and heal those who have met the afflictions and trials and pains and sorrows of life, and who have gone down, as it seems to us, in the conflict. "I will come and heal him." And sometime, we feel assured, that the same voice that spoke to the silent dead, as the Master looked down into the open tomb at Bethany, and said, "Lazarus, come forth," will be heard again at the tomb of those we love, and when the tomb of William Anderson shall be opened, that voice will be heard to speak again and say, "Come forth," and the dead will hear that voice. Their ears can not be penetrated by our words, they can not feel in this mortal body the sympathy for those who mourn that they once felt; but those ears that have been dead to every sound will hear that voice, and the body that shall rise from that tomb will rise no more to be tormented, no more to be afflicted, no more to feel the pangs of pain, no more to be wasted away by the power of disease; it will rise to immortality and life.

I do not know what I can say to these sorrowing ones more than to point to the Lamb of God. Their faith is already, I believe all or most of them, centered in Jesus Christ, the anointed one. In this sad hour of trouble, in this hour of affliction, it may be that a temporary cloud will pass over your mind. There may be shadows of doubt come to you. Maybe there will be moments when you will feel that God has not heard you, that the heavens are black over your heads, but it is not true. There is, as you will find in this sad hour of distress and darkness, in the gospel of Jesus Christ, a balm for every wound, a solace for every sorrow, and in that name in which you have put your trust, you will find sweet relief. In that name you will find a compensation for all your grief, and life will be made pleasant, though a little sadder, perhaps, because of this hour of darkness that has come; but this life will be made glad in the supreme confidence that will be born in your souls that God lives, and in the sweet words uttered so long ago, "I will come and heal him."

May the benediction of God's peace rest upon all, and especially upon these mourning ones, and may they walk the remainder of their life in confidence. Oh, how sweet is that confidence! How dark this world would be without it! But in it you will find all that will make this life peaceful, and in the final hour when he comes again, to heal the broken-hearted, to take away disease and pain, you too will hear that voice, whether you live, or die before that time, whether in the flesh or in the spirit, you too will hear the blessed accents of that voice that broke the stillness of the air so long ago, and Jesus Christ will speak and you and your loved one will live.

May God, in his infinite love, move upon you by his Spirit, and comfort you in your distress and sorrow, and may all find that comfort in the hope of the gospel that was intended when the Son of the great God came into this world to bind up the broken-hearted and give liberty to the captive, is my prayer.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Rev. Dr. C. F. Aked has left Fifth Avenue Church, New York City, (the John D. Rockefeller church,) and accepted a call to California because he was disappointed at the failure of his congregation to take hold of some of the great reforms, and advanced schemes of church work that he had hoped to be given the opportunity of carrying through for them. To their admonitions that he should have patience for the execution of the great things, Doctor Aked replied that such an attitude calls for the "highest type of enthusiasm, the enthusiasm which illumines detail and makes drudgery divine. Does such a spirit exist in our church?" he asked. "It is for you to say, not me."

This reminds us of a query quoted in the Gospel Standard, "What kind of a church would our church be, if every member were just like me?"

"What are you going to do, my brother-men, for this higher side of human life? What contribution are you going to make of your strength, your influence, your money, your self, to make a cleaner, fuller, happier, larger, nobler life possible for some of your fellow-men?"—Henry Van Dyke.

"Time does not preserve that which it takes no time to create."

Our "News From Branches" department is not intended for weekly reports only. In fact, it is better to ignore the week limit and write only when you have something of general interest. The editors prefer it that way. Some write monthly or as often as they have something worth while. One of our best contributors for branches writes: "We meet with many criticisms that those not connected with this line of work are not aware of. For instance, some do not want mention made of their work, others are slighted if mention does not appear. Still others think our items should contain accounts of social events, saying 'They are too dry with only church news.' Friends away from home anxiously scan the branch items to see what we are doing, so you see, we have to work carefully to satisfy both the branch and the requirements of the HERALD."

It would take a larger paper than the HERALD to print the social news and personal mention connected with the daily life of a membership of over 62,000. The church organ can not afford to give space to such news only as it might apply to a worker well known to the church and the world and even then it has its limits. Time and space are too valuable to give to personalities and social chat. Our gospel message to the world, its progress, the nature of the opposition to it, must have first place, and we feel sure our correspondents will consider this. The HERALD goes to all parts of the earth. It ought there to be a reflector of the great latter day message of a restored gospel. That would appeal to the hungry soul; while social news and personalities would be more "dry" to the thousands of readers in foreign lands than does purely church news to a certain few in the home land. The HERALD belongs to the church, and the church is a world wide institution. We must consider the needs of the whole, and we ask our correspondents of all departments to keep this thought ever before them when writing. If in doubt, pass the matter on and we will try to exercise our best judgment.

District secretaries are requested to get their credentials of delegates into the hands of the Church Secretary as soon as possible. The credentials report must be made up promptly to facilitate the work of the General Conference.

We insert below excerpt from letter received by Bishop E. L. Kelley, which indicates that some of the Saints are alive to the advanced step taken by the church in the establishment of the Order of Enoch and desire to do their part in the work of the Lord:

Dear Brother Kelley: About Christmas time you issued a call for help on the newly established work of the Order of Enoch. We have had a poor year, no rain here since last spring, which has cut our trade down half, and consequently are behind in a way—but we love the work of the Lord—we love to be helpers, and while the amount we are able to send is not as much as we would like, we want to help some. It takes just a little sacrifice to send this now, but we are glad to do it and when we can do more, we will not hesitate. Inclosed find two checks for twenty-five dollars each."

If you were me and I were you,
What wonder working things we'd do—
We'd see the good in everyone,
We'd do our work like it were fun—
We'd gossip never, nor be blue,
If you were me and I were you.

If you were me and I were you,
We'd both be better through and through—
I'd see your virtues, you'd see mine,
The effect would be like some old wine—
No word of censure e'er would brew,
If you were me and I were you.

So let's change places and just do
As you'd have me and I'd have you—
You work and laugh and love and sing,
And I will do the self-same thing—
We'll paint this world a "rosy" hue,
When you are me and I am you.

—W. E. Fitch.

We might add that if you were me and I were you, and we both had the law of truth written in our hearts, neither of us would, through mere sympathy, encourage in the other an error or an unsafe course in life. We would be candid each with the other, never thinking that "feelings" would be hurt by meekly pointing out our brother's mistake. Criticism would mean commendation of good points as well as discovery of weak ones. It would be constructive; and destructive of nothing but the Devil and his works.

Elder W. J. Haworth delegate from Australia, is en route to General Conference. He left New Zealand on the 11th instant, and will be at Papeete, Tahiti, on the 18th, where he hopes to have a day's visit with Brn. May and Savage. His boat will land him in San Francisco on the 31st, when he will lose no time getting to Lamoni for the Conventions.

Original Articles

CUMORAH HILL.

Because there now seems to be quite an inquiry as to the original hill Cumorah and its location, and more and more the students of the Book of Mormon are coming up to the idea that the original hill could not have been in New York State, but must have been in Central America, I write of the understanding that I have had during the past eleven years.

Up to December, 1899, I took it for granted, as did everyone else, that the hill where Moroni hid the "abridgment" made by his father, Mormon, (which is known in our time as the Book of Mormon) was the same hill where the Prophet Mormon hid the original records, the mass of plates from which the Book of Mormon was compiled, as related on page 492 of the old small edition, or in verse two, chapter two of that portion of the book called the "Book of Mormon."

For many years I did not realize that the "abridgment" spoken of in "Words of Mormon" 1:2 and "Book of Mormon" 2:5, was such a small thing when compared with the bulk of the plates that existed before it, though it alone must have weighed seventy-five to one hundred pounds, according to the weight of sheets of metal of their size and thickness. Nor did I comprehend that there is no statement anywhere that the mass of plates was ever committed into the keeping of Moroni.

Probably many students and ministers have not realized the greatness of the original records, as to the number, or size, or weight. Therefore we here give a list of them.

1. The two sets made by Nephi, one of which must have been of great thickness and weight. In making his "few plates" from the "plates of Nephi" Mormon said (page 139) that he could not write "the hundredth part." For idea of the size of Nephi's two histories see First Book of Nephi 2:28 and 5:46, 47; also 2 Nephi 4:6; Jacob 1:1; Jarom 1:6, and Words of Mormon 1:1, 2. These are the most important references. Those plates must have been of great bulk and weight.

2. The brass plates taken from Laban. Nephi said that this record contained not only "the five books of Moses" but also a history of the creation of the world, (probably not a mere fragment as in the King James translation,) and a record of the Hebrews and also the prophets from the beginning. And those plates contained a genealogical account of Lehi's ancestors too.

3. The gold plates of Ether, of which Moroni in the Book of Ether only made a brief synopsis. He said, "And the hundredth part I have not written." See chapter six, last verses.

4. By command of God, the brother of Jared wrote of great things that were shown to him and which he was to seal up "that no one can interpret them," until such time as the Lord shall decide for them to come forth. These writings of the brother of Jared should not be supposed as contained in what Ether was commanded to write sixteen hundred years later, and from which we have the synopsis called the Book of Ether. It is evident that Ether could not have read those writings six hundred years before Christ, for Moroni said (Ether 1:11) that "they were forbidden to come unto the children of men" until after Christ's crucifixion. Therefore we have no reason to suppose that the marvelous things revealed to the brother of Jared can be found upon the gold plates of the Jaredites. Moroni says that Benjamin (should be Mosiah) "kept them that they should not come unto the world."

5. Lehi also wrote a history upon metal plates, as stated in 1 Nephi 1:3; 2:1.

6. Mosiah the First had a record made of the Zarahemlaite history, as related in Omni 1:8.

7. Mosiah 5:9 shows that a record was kept by the colony of Zeniff during the period they were absent from Zarahemla. Mormon simply gives a sketch, which he calls "an account" of their experiences, which we have in Mosiah, chapters six to eleven, verse eight, when they arrived again in Zarahemla.

8. The record made by Mormon and finished by Moroni, which we call the "Book of Mormon." In Words of Mormon 1:2 it is called "an abridgment," in Book of Nephi 2:11 Mormon calls it "a small record," and in Book of Mormon 2:5 he speaks of it as "a small abridgment" to be hid up to come forth in God's due time to "the remnant of the house of Jacob." Compared with the other records it was indeed small.

One of the early writers has said that the size of the plates was about seven by eight inches and their thickness six inches. That would be three hundred and thirty-six cubic inches, and that much of solid gold would weigh over two hundred pounds. As leaves of gold this weight would depend upon how compact they were.

As to the size of the stone box found in the hill near Manchester, New York, and the contents of the box, we find a description in the "Letters of Oliver Cowdery," letter 8, page 32. He gives an idea of the size, and he says also that on the three pillars rested "the record of the children of Joseph, and of a people who left the tower, or a sketch of each." Therefore there is no ground to claim that the great bulk of the plates, probably five to eight hundred pounds in weight, were secreted in that place. Brother Cowdery speaks of the "the abridgment" as being "a sketch" of the histories of the two peoples, such as Mormon and Moroni had compiled.

Now we go to Words of Mormon 1: 1 and we read, "I, Mormon, being about to deliver up the record which I have been making into the hands of my son Moroni." He did not say that he would give him any other records. And to make it still more plain that he did not do so we find his more definite words in Book of Mormon 3: 2 (page 492), where he states (in the year 384 after Christ) that he "hid up in the hill Cumorah all the records which had been intrusted to me by the hand of the Lord, save it were these few plates which I gave unto my son Moroni."

Then Moroni took this "small abridgment" that was made by his father, and in the year 400 A. D. he stated that his people were destroyed and he was going away. He said, "Whither I go it mattereth not," but that he would write more and would "hide up the records in the earth." He did not say that he would put them in hill Cumorah, nor in the land where hill Cumorah was situated.

In Moroni 10: 1 he wrote that "more than four hundred and twenty years" had passed and that he would add something and then "seal up these records"; that is, the ones he had. By that time he had wandered thirty-six years and was in the region where the Lord designed them to be buried preparatory to their being revealed to Joseph Smith fourteen hundred years later. Of this there can be no doubt in the mind of any believer in the Book of Mormon as a sacred record. The name Cumorah was given to this hill, or it was spoken of as "hill Cumorah," because the abridged record said that some records were hidden in a hill known to the ancients as Cumorah, and it was taken for granted that this was the hill.

We go now to Moroni's statement on page 531 (Ether 6: 5), that the "hill Ramah" of the Jaredites "was the same hill where my father Mormon did hide up the records unto the Lord," that is, "hill Cumorah." Nowhere does Moroni claim that those other records were given into his charge or that he at any time hid anything in Cumorah, or was commanded to do so, or intended to do so.

The book very plainly shows that the last great and destructive battles of the Jaredites were fought in the region of the hill Ramah, also Moroni wrote that the Nephites and Lamanites fought their final battles in the region of Cumorah. As the history shows that the Jaredite armies were contending for the throne and the seat of their empire there can be no doubt in the mind of the careful reader that all this was done in Central America, where the center of their kingdom was situated, no matter how much certain colonies may have settled in what is now the United States, where they built mounds, worked the mines, and cleared the forests, at least during the last half of the Jaredite dwelling in America.

In Ether 4: 1 Moroni states that in the war between King Omer and the forces of Akish, the latter "did overthrow the kingdom." Then "The Lord warned Omer" and he took his family "and traveled many days and came over and passed by the hill of Shim and by the place where the Nephites were destroyed," and thence to "Ablom by the seashore." But this language does not convey the idea that they traveled over four thousand miles from "hill Shim" to reach the seashore, as they must have done if they went from the seat of war and from the hill Shim in Central America (as given on the published map) into far New York and then on to the Massachusetts coast, to Boston where the map has Ablom located.

Now it is six hundred miles from the gulf point of Yucatan across to the Pacific coast, and Omer and family could have traveled hard for "many days" and made only a few hundred or, at most, a thousand miles, right in Central America or Mexico. It is plain that Omer was not far from the capital, for the history relates that when Nimrah left king Akish "he came over and dwelt with Omer." Also soon after that Akish and his sons warred about the throne with the result that "Omer was restored to the land of his inheritance," evidently meaning to the inheritance from aforetime, to the seat and authority of the kingdom of the Jaredites.

But, in order to make out that Cumorah and the place of final battles by the Nephites was in New York, there is created an impossibility in the matter of Omer and family, the map showing Shim in Chiapas, Mexico, and Ablom where Boston now is. If we could possibly allow such a long journey by this family in going to Boston, Omer's friends in Yucatan would have needed to send a telegram for him to return home and occupy the throne once more. The map will have to be revised, as also our students will need to correct their ideas about the hills, and lands, and waters, as many of them are already doing, according to recent advices.

All Book of Mormon students understand that the colony led by Melek, the youngest son of King Zedekiah, (whose migration was prophesied of in Ezekiel 17: 22, 23,) that his colony landed in Central America, and then, as stated in Omer 1: 1 they found the surviving Jaredite warrior, Coriantumr. But he was so nearly dead that even with their tender care he only lived nine months. Now, as he and Shiz fought their duel unto death in the region of Ramah-Cumorah until Shiz died and Coriantumr fainted from the loss of blood and "became as if he had no life" (page 532), therefore it was clearly impossible for him to have traveled alone over four thousand miles from the latter day Cumorah, across wide rivers, through deep forests, and over plains and mountains to Central America, where he was immediately discovered by the Zarahemlites, who saved him from death for a few months.

Evidently he was found close to where he fell as one dead after the battle between those revengeful and ambitious leaders who had fought so persistently for possession of the kingdom and the throne of empire. Hence I am compelled, by what seems to me to be overwhelming evidence, to believe that the original hill Ramah-Cumorah, where Mormon hid the great majority of the records, the mass of valuable history and prophecy is somewhere in that southland; also that, in God's own due time and by whom he will, those things will be brought to light and be read by the people who shall then be prepared and worthy to receive and be profited by them. Those records will disclose great things of the past from the creation of the world to the times when they closed their history.

Another proof for the Central America location is that when Limhi's forty-three men (Mosiah 5:9) went from Lehi-Nephi land to seek for Zarahemla and finally found the Jaredite record in a land that had been inhabited by "a people who were as numerous as the hosts of Israel," it is plain that in seeking for Zarahemla they could not have gone so far as the State of New York. It is about fifteen hundred miles from the border of South America up through Panama and Central America to the Yucatan line. For wandering explorers hunting their way it would be more than that, therefore the absurdity of the idea that they traveled four thousand miles farther and back again, about eight thousand miles, or altogether eleven or twelve thousand miles on foot through unknown forests, over broad rivers, and across plains and desert wastes.

No, they did not go there. They found the plates, and the ruined cities and "the land among many waters," all right in Central America. There, after the final contest in which Shiz was killed and Coriantumr fainted from the loss of blood and "became as if he had no life,"—right there Ether came from hiding, viewed the desolation and hid the records as the book says, "in a manner that the people of Limhi did find them," in Central America, not in a hill thousands of miles distant, near lakes Ontario and Erie, mapped as being the land of "many waters."

That Central America is "a land among many waters" is easily proven. One meaning of the word among is between, and the World Atlas shows Central America as situated between mighty waters, even the Pacific Ocean, the Caribbean Sea, and the Gulf of Mexico.

Also encyclopedias and maps clearly show that Central America has many lakes, rivers, and fountains besides the ocean, the sea, the gulf, and the bays. Authorities give the names of one hundred and seventy rivers and over thirty lakes situated in the five republics and in British Honduras. In southern Mexico are forty other rivers, and at least that portion of Mexico was in the Jaredite kingdom. For modern discovery gives evidence that in Yucatan was the seat of power, both of the Jaredites and the Nephites. It contains the most and the greatest of the ruined cities of all that region. Very likely the capital was what explorers call the city of Palenque, although Charnay holds that Palenque was only the religious center, a city of shrines and temples. Calderon counted eighteen of what he called palaces and twenty other large buildings.

Yes, that whole country can be aptly designated as "a land among many waters." When the Nephites fled before the Lamanites sixty-seven years B. C. (Alma 22:4, 5), they went up through "the narrow pass into the land northward" and the record says that they found it "covered with large bodies of water." No doubt surrounded by is the meaning. And such description would agree with "a land among [between] many waters." In eight instances the Bible word many means not numerous, but great in volume, or powerful. And thus should we take the meaning here in the Book of Mormon, among, between, great or abundant waters.

In Helaman 2:1 it is better expressed by the words, "They came to large bodies of water and many rivers." These three statements about large waters and numerous streams all refer to the same country, and I have already shown that they all fit in correctly about Central America, Yucatan, and southern Mexico. There the Nephites went and lived, also built upon the ruins of the Jaredites cities. See Alma 22:5; Helaman 2:1-3; Nephi 3:2; pages 158, 340, and 384, old small edition.

About the declaration in Helaman 2:2 (page 384), that the Nephites covered the land "from the sea south to the sea north, and from the sea west to the sea east" we can all see that this is the only proper description one can give of Central America. For the general direction of that land is from southeast to northwest and the Pacific is both west and south and the waters on the other side are both east and north. The history can not mean that they filled the land from the Gulf to the Arctic Ocean and from the Pacific to the Atlantic. This is another strong point in the claim that the land described was not away north but was the ancient possession itself. M. Charnay, the French explorer, claims that "the population was so dense as to cause the soil to be cultivated to the highest mountains" from ocean to ocean.—Ancient Cities of the New World, p. 98.

To return especially to the location of the original hill Cumorah: We find no word by angels or by the voice of the Lord that the hill where Joseph found the plates was the historic hill. No revelation in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants so designates it, and nowhere in his history did Joseph Smith write of it as Cumorah. In Times and Seasons, volume 3, page

771, he says "stands a hill," and "this hill," and the angel told him to come to "that place" each year. At the final time he says that he went to "the place where the plates were deposited."

I know that in Doctrine and Covenants 10:20 it reads, "glad tidings of Cumorah," but it is in a letter from Joseph Smith, evidently after the idea had become fixed that because records were hidden in Cumorah therefore the one in New York must have been the same hill.

In his "Letters," pages 29, 33, Oliver Cowdery calls it Cumorah, evidently from the same idea, not from any divine or angelic statement that it was Cumorah. Certainly the idea did not originate with any careful student of the Book of Mormon. There may not have been any real study of the book at that time. The book appears to have been largely taken on trust by the old Saints, without great examination or study.

I am aware that Moroni wrote that he made his synopsis of the Jaredite history "from the twenty and four plates," but at what time he did this I do not know. It may have been done before his father's death, to be in preparation for the Lord's purpose that such "account" of the Jaredites should be known in our time. At least Oliver Cowdery's statement of the contents of the box, namely, that it contained "a sketch" of the two peoples seems to make it plain that Moroni did not place the original Jaredite record in the New York hill. I have no objection to that hill being also called Cumorah, with the understanding that the ancient hill Cumorah is still undiscovered, and that sometime its secrets will be revealed and come to the knowledge of God's people.

The church used to have a little song, "O stop and tell me, red man," and in it the Indian was made to say, "I once was pleasant Ephraim." But long ago that idea was given up, and it is now held that those who accept the book, those into whose hands it has come, that they are Ephraim. Thus errors are imbibed and liable to be, but when realized they need be held no longer. For thirty-five years I held the error about Cumorah, until Bro. Earle Corthell, of Independence, took the blinds off, and then study made all plain to me. But there have been so many controversies that I have hesitated for years about writing on this matter for publication, although urged to do so. But now, because many are dissatisfied with the old theory, I present this article in the interest of truth, that error be removed and the truth be made plain.

That I believe fully that both Jaredites and Nephites colonized in North America and worked the copper mines and cut the forests, etc., all know who have read my "Book of Mormon Lectures" and other writings, therefore I need say no more on that point.

But that the main bodies of both nations remained south until their destruction came is evident from the book itself.

A CONVERSATION REGARDING THE OFFICE OF PATRIARCH.

Elder: Pardon me for the expression, but really, I am at sea.

Patriarch: Why, what is the trouble?

E: I had a private conversation with Mr. Smith (minister) on church organization. I reminded him that in the church that Jesus organized there were apostles, seventies, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, elders, bishops, and deacons, and wherever he found that church (organization), he would find the various officers named. I suggested that he compare his church with it. He answered that though they did not have living apostles and prophets in their church, they were believers in the teachings of the apostles, and asked me by what authority we called and ordained patriarchs. I said that the Lord had authorized their ordination. He asked for chapter and verse that provided for such office, but I could not give it. He also reminded me that in a public discussion one of our leading representatives stated that there was no conflict between our church and that of the New Testament. That has always been my understanding, but I can not maintain that now; hence, I am at sea.

P: You could with consistency have asked Mr. Smith to name any part of the Scriptures with which the patriarch and his line of work are in conflict.

E: I could not give him any Bible reference in support of that office.

P: There are such references, however. But admitting that the Scriptures were silent, you would not be justified in rejecting that officer.

E: I beg to differ with you, for we read, " whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it."—Ecclesiastes 3:14. As I understand it, we can not take from the church organization nor add to it. We censure Christendom because their church organizations are not in accord with the church of the New Testament, and justify ourselves while adding that which the Bible does not authorize. I believe in the idea of speaking when the Bible speaks, and remaining silent when it is silent.

P. Again I say that there are scriptural quotations in support of the office of patriarch, and shall give the reference later. But I maintain if there were none, we are not justified in rejecting that office. I do not understand that we have authority to ordain men to certain positions or offices simply because we find such mentioned in the Scriptures, unless the Lord directs the ordination. Jesus said, "I will build my church," and in the building of that church he did not call and ordain all of the officers the same day, month, or year. He first chose and ordained the twelve apostles; later the quorum of seventy. (Mark 3:14; Luke 10:1.) He called into the vineyard as the needs would demand.

E: Yes, that is as I understand it. But Jesus completed the building (church) before his ascension. The pattern is in the New Testament and the church of to-day should be in accord with it.

P: Yes, the church organization and doctrine should harmonize with the apostolic church. We would not have the authority to take from that any part. All the material (officers) placed in the building by Christ or those whom he authorized to do so, are to remain until the work he intended for them to do has been finished. I do not agree with you that Jesus completed the building before his ascension; for we read of seven men chosen and ordained in the year 33 A. D. by the apostles, to care for temporalities. Some called them deacons, others bishops. Whatever office they occupied, it is quite evident that prior to their ordination the apostles attended to that line of work. We read in Acts 6:2-5, "It is not reason that we [apostles] should leave the word of God, and serve tables, wherefore, brethren, look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business. But we will give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the word. And the saying pleased the whole multitude." The seven men were chosen and ordained, and we learn that elders were ordained in the year 45 A. D. (Acts 14:23.) Had you or Mr. Smith been present when the seven men and elders were chosen, it would have been just as consistent for you to object to those officers then, as you do to the patriarch now. You could have objected upon the ground that when Jesus was upon earth he did not ordain other than apostles and seventies, that we have any record of.

E: Do you not believe that the Savior had informed the apostles when with them that the time would come when elders, bishops, and deacons would be necessary to care for the work, and that the ordination of these was done on the strength of the instructions of the Master?

P: Yes, the Savior may have given them to understand that in the future other officers would be needed. But, if he did not, he had promised to be with them by the Holy Spirit, directing in the affairs of the church. We learn in Acts 1:12 after he was taken up to heaven, that through the Holy Spirit he had given commandments unto the apostles, whom he had chosen. We also read in Acts 13:1, 3 that in the church at Antioch the Holy Spirit called men to the ministry through the prophets. To be consistent, you and Mr. Smith should be willing for the Lord to direct in the affairs of his church in this age by his Holy Spirit, as in the days of his apostles. If he called men to occupy in certain offices, or, in other words, created the office, and by his Holy Spirit called men to occupy positions that were not mentioned in former revelations or scripture, then why not believe that he can do so to-day?

E: I understand that he can. But there should be no conflict.

P: True. No conflict in the sense that the revelations of this age should undo that which was authorized in a former age. In other words, if God called apostles, seventies, and prophets for the work of the ministry, the revelations of this age should not do away with them. Still, if the Lord wished to call elders, bishops, evangelists, (patriarchs) in one age, and did not in a former, we would not be justified in rejecting them simply because they did not exist or appear in former ages, any more than we would those called in the life of the apostles, of which no mention is made prior to their day. The Lord has a right to add to his building such material as he deems advisable; but, it is not godlike to take from his building any material until the object designed has been accomplished. I would not say that the Lord could not add to his church material to help carry on his work in one age, that did not exist in a former age. The sabbatical law was not given to Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. At least we have no account of it being taught by them. It was given to the children of Israel in Moses' day. Two thousand five hundred years had come and gone before it was taught (Deuteronomy 5:1-3; Nehemiah 9:13, 14; Ezekiel 20:10-12.) I shall now give you scriptural references in support of the office of patriarch. We have but little light on the duties of the various officers mentioned in the Scriptures outside of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants; but, before introducing it, we shall first present what we find in the Bible: God gave apostles, prophets, and evangelists (Ephesians 4:11). I understand that a patriarch is an evangelist. Philip was an evangelist. (Acts 21:8.)

E: Was he not one of the seven referred to in Acts 6:6, and also the one that went to Samaria, Acts 8:5?

P: Yes. In verse 8 of the twenty-first chapter we are informed that he was one of the seven, which was in the year 33 A. D., and in 34 or 35 A. D. he went to Samaria. But when Paul's company met Philip the evangelist it was twenty-seven years later; 60 A. D. Timothy was an evangelist. Paul told him to do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of his ministry (2 Timothy 4:5). Again in 2 Timothy 1:6, "Wherefore I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands." In 1 Timothy

4: 14, "Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the Presbytery." In verse 12, "Let no man despise thy youth." In 1 Timothy 5: 21, 22, "I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels, that thou observe these things without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality. Lay hands suddenly on no man."

E: I see nothing in those references that supports the idea that Timothy was a patriarch. Your statement that a patriarch is an evangelist does not make it so. My understanding of an evangelist is a traveling minister, preacher of the gospel of Christ, and a publisher of glad tidings.

P: All that you have said relative to the duties of an evangelist is true of the patriarch. Webster says that an evangelist is a minister of Christ; one not in charge of a congregation. The language found in section 125 Book of Doctrine and Covenants is in accord with Webster, for it says: "He is not to be put in charge of either branch or district." "He is not to meddle with branch affairs." He is to be free to wait upon his line of work; is to confer blessings by the laying on of hands, and if so led, is to point out their lineage." The admonition of Paul to Timothy: "Lay hands suddenly on no man," applies in my judgment to the patriarch, more than to any other officer.

E: I can not agree with your last statement. I believe that the admonition applies to all the ministers of Christ, for great care should be exercised in ordaining men. With propriety we can say to all, "Lay hands suddenly on no man."

P: Yes, I can agree that all the ministers could profit by the admonition. But I repeat that it applies more particularly to the patriarch than to others; for why should others hesitate to lay on hands, when called upon. When the Lord calls men to the ministry and the church accepts and indorses the same, and the authorities call upon the elders to ordain them, there is no necessity for delay; or if called upon to confirm those who have been baptized, who have been properly instructed, we should not hesitate; or when called to officiate in the blessing of children or administration to the sick. Some of the reasons why the admonition, "Lay hands suddenly on no man" applies to the patriarch more than to other ministers, are: First, he is called to officiate in the ordinance of laying on of hands more than the elders. Second, it is very essential that those requesting their patriarchal blessing have proper faith in its divinity and understand its object. Upon several occasions prior to giving the blessings, I have explained the object of and motive that should attach to the sacred ordinance, and have been blessed in so doing. Under such conditions, I see the wisdom of the admonition to "Lay hands suddenly on no man." Third, it is possible that when application is made for conferring of blessing, the patriarch is not in proper frame of mind to officiate. He may have indulged in unprofitable conversation, or taken part in a heated discussion. I remember taking part in a business session when strong positions were taken, and some harsh words spoken on both sides. While I do not plead guilty to the charge of using cutting words, I confess that to a certain degree I partook of the spirit of the meeting, which was not, to say the least, calculated to assist me to officiate in my line of work. So I postponed one of the appointments until I could get in proper frame of mind. And what is true of the patriarch is true of the individual seeking for the blessing. Both should be in the spirit of the gospel, then good will be sure to follow. Fourth, Paul was talking to Timothy, telling him to do the work of an evangelist (patriarch). "A patriarch is an evangelical minister," (Doctrine and Covenants 125,) and an evangelical minister is an "evangelist." I do not understand that all evangelists are patriarchs, any more than all elders are apostles, still an apostle is an elder (1 Peter 5: 1).

E: I do not understand what benefit there is in that part of the work of the patriarch in the conferring of blessings. Is not a member in good standing entitled to all church privileges and to the visitation of the Holy Spirit. If so, what more can he receive through the patriarchal channel?

P: In Doctrine and Covenants 107: 29 we are informed of the authority the patriarch has, and in paragraph 38, same section, we have the following: "First, I give unto you Hyrum Smith to be a patriarch unto you, to hold the sealing blessings of my church, even the Holy Spirit of promise, whereby ye are sealed up unto the day of redemption, that ye may not fall, notwithstanding the hour of temptation that may come upon you." From this I learn that it is a sealing ordinance.

E: I can not see why I should receive greater light and strength after I have had the patriarchal blessing than before. Again I maintain that if I continue faithfully, I shall receive all I am worthy of. I do not believe that because the patriarch has laid his hands on my head and prayed over me, I shall be blessed any more than if he had not done so.

P: No, I do not believe that if a dozen patriarchs would place their hands on your head that you would be benefited in your present frame of mind any more than the unbeliever who was sick and failed to receive a blessing. Before man can receive benefit through any of the ordinances of God's house, he must have faith in God and his ordinances. We say to the world that if they believe and comply with the gospel ordinances, their sins shall be remitted and they shall receive the Holy Spirit. I never have seen it fail when the person comes in the proper attitude to God. There is no virtue in the water or the imposition of hands alone, but it is faith in God and obedience to his holy ordinances, and love for his truth, that bring the blessings.

E: I agree with your statement relative to the gospel promise, to all outside of Christ; for I am a witness of the truthfulness of that promise; but after one becomes a member of the church and receives the Holy Spirit, I do not see that there is a necessity for the patriarchal work, so far as the conferring of blessings is concerned.

P: Little children are subjects of the kingdom of heaven, and the Lord has commanded that the parents take them unto the elders before the church, who are to lay their hands upon them in the name of Jesus Christ, and bless them in his name (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 19). According to your idea there is no necessity to have them blessed, for they are subjects of the kingdom. They are no more so after being blessed. I learn from good authority that a greater percentage of children blessed come into the church than those that have not been blessed. What is true of the children that are blessed, is true in similar ways of those that have faith in the patriarchal work and have sought God for additional strength through that channel.

E: Then you believe that all who receive the blessings will not fall in the hour of temptation?

P: Yes; and no. The person that is anxious to overcome his besetting sins and continue faithful and seek for light and strength through this sacred ordinance, surely he shall receive; for that is the promise, that in the hour of temptation they may not fall. It requires faith and works. If you are worldly-minded, faithless, or indifferent, and fail to watch and pray, a blessing would not keep you from falling.

E: If I have a desire to overcome my weakness and continue faithful in the service of God, will I not be successful in my Christian warfare without receiving patriarchal blessings?

P: James 5: 14, 15 says, "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord, and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; [if not appointed unto death,] and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him." Would the sick get well without the administration?

E: If the sickness was not unto death they would.

P: But if it was unto death, then what?

E: Why, they would die.

P: Then of what benefit is it to call the elders? Is it not a fact that some have been restored to health speedily who were near death's door, through the administration; and others that had no faith in the ordinance, but trusted to medical aid, were in time fully restored to health? The difference in the two cases is that the one who had faith and sought for divine help, was not only blessed physically and restored speedily to health, but was blessed spiritually and enjoyed peace of mind and was comforted because he felt the presence of the Holy Spirit in his healing virtue. The Lord through this ordinance helped nature, and rebuked the disease, and shortly the one that was so seriously afflicted was able to attend to necessary duties; while the other one, that had no faith in the divine ordinance, made very slow progress; it was weeks and months before he could be at his post of duty, and did not enjoy the peace of mind that the one of faith did. Faith in the ordinances of God and obedience to the same has brought to the faithful in all ages valuable blessings and marvelous manifestations. It is just as consistent to maintain that a man could enter into the kingdom of God without baptism as it would be to expect spiritual blessings and ignore the ordinance of the laying on of hands. Both are of divine origin. The latter is presented under four heads. First, blessings of children (Mark 10: 16) and adults (Genesis 47: 8-25). Second, confirmation: bestowal of the Holy Spirit (Acts 8: 17; 19: 6). Third, healing the sick (Mark 16: 18; James 5: 14). Fourth, for ordination (Acts 6: 6; 13: 3). In Genesis 48, notice the respect, and faith of the aged patriarch Jacob and his son Joseph. Not only did they believe that a blessing was conferred by the laying on of hands, but that the one upon whom the right hand should be placed would receive the greater blessing. Joseph takes his sons, Manasseh and Ephraim (one twenty-two and the other twenty years of age), and places them before his father: Manasseh towards Jacob's right hand, and Ephraim towards his left. In the blessing Jacob crosses his arms; places his right hand upon Ephraim, the younger, and the left upon Manasseh. Then Joseph said, "Not so, my father; for this is the firstborn; put thy right hand upon his head," but his father refused, and said, "I know it my son; I know it." How did father Jacob know which was the firstborn? for we read that his eyes were dim for age, so that he could not see (Genesis 48: 10). He knew by the spirit of revelation; for in giving the patriarchal blessing the Spirit of the Lord indicted the words. History demonstrates the truthfulness of that which was spoken. Notice the language, "He [Manasseh] also shall become a people, and he also shall be great; but truly his younger brother shall be greater than he, and his seed [Ephraim's] shall become a multitude of nations." Moses' statement is in harmony with this, "They are the tens of thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh." (Deuteronomy 33: 17.)

In Smith's Bible Dictionary, Ephraim is called the great tribe.

E: I have received light and shall try to profit by it. I would like to have you relate some of your experiences in patriarchal work.

P: I shall with pleasure give you some of my experience at some future time. I hope I have impressed upon your mind the necessity of having implicit faith in all of the Lord's appointments, and honor and respect for his ordinances. Then it will be well with you. It is displeasing to God when man questions the wisdom and necessity of his ordinances. The sad condition of the religious world to-day, with its hundreds of conflicting creeds, is the result of unbelief and disobedience, and if we were to fall into the same error, we would be barren and unfruitful, spiritually. Jesus said, "To him that believeth, all things are possible."

THE PATRIARCHATE.

DOCTRINAL PROOF; PROVIDED FOR IN CHURCH ORGANIZATION.

BY JOSEPH R. LAMBERT.

[The following article forms a part of the little pamphlet gotten out by the Order of Evangelists, and entitled, "The Patriarchate." It may be read with profit in connection with the article by Elder William Lewis, in this issue. The pamphlet may be obtained from the Herald Publishing House for ten cents.—EDITORS.]

Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular. And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues. —1 Corinthians 12: 27, 28.

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers: for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.—Ephesians 4: 11-16.

In the above scripture, the apostle sets forth the order of God, in the organization of the church of Christ, in a clear and forcible manner. The language shows the necessity for, and the beauty, importance, and immutability of the divine plan.

God has placed in his church the offices and gifts referred to, that men might occupy in the offices, and men and women exercise the gifts—all to be done according to his will—"till" (an adverb of time) we become full grown and perfect men and women in Christ Jesus our Lord. All this was, and is, for the harmonious development of all the members of the church of God, that the true Christ character might be the result of their obedience to the truth. Without this character, there is no such thing as salvation.

It is claimed by a large class, without, and a small class, within, that no such office as that of patriarch is mentioned in the New Testament, and, therefore, that the introduction of such a class of ministers, under this title, is an innovation.

The conclusion is hasty and not well founded. In the above scriptures, we evidently have specific and general titles, used to denote the different offices provided for in the organization of the church. That general as well as specific titles are used, is evident from the fact that seventies, bishops, deacons, etc., are not named, while every New Testament believer must admit that God placed these in the church.

Before our objectors prove that there is no place for patriarchs, in harmony with New Testament teaching, let them prove just what officers are referred to under the titles of "teachers," "helps and governments," "evangelists," "pastors." We refer, of course, to those who believe that there can be no revelation to us, from God, outside of the Bible.

The plain truth is, however, that the New Testament, as well as the Old, teaches the doctrine of present or continuous revelation. That is, the channel of communication between God and man is always open, in every age and every clime, unless closed by transgression or unbelief upon the part of those who should be the people of God. New, or additional, revelation is not necessarily false. It is plain that if God's people had always believed that additional revelation is false, we would now have but a very small portion of what is contained in the Bible. All that is not found in the first revelation of God to man, as recorded in the book of Genesis, is additional; and while man is strictly forbidden to add to God's word, (see Deuteronomy 4: 2; Proverbs 30: 5, 6; Revelation 22: 18,) yet he has the right, and it has been his practice, to add to his own word, whenever and wherever he pleased. According to Bible history, this was God's practice for more than four thousand years; and the good book does not contain even an intimation that God would ever change his policy.

It is a very foolish thing, and in no sense our privilege, to attempt to limit God. It is not for us to say when God shall speak, nor when he shall keep silent; nor is it our privilege to dictate to him what he shall say when he does speak. Finite man is not permitted to dictate to the infinite God! Where God has placed limitations on his own acts, or informed us what he will not and can not do, we should accept it in good faith; but for puny, weak, finite man, to say to the Infinite One, "Thus far shalt thou come, and no farther," is altogether a different thing.

The truth is, we are not only asked to limit God, where he has not limited himself, but we are asked to believe, and make it an important part of our faith (?), that he will not do the very thing which he says he will do. (See Matthew 11: 27; 7: 7-11; James 1: 5; John 14: 21-24, 26; 15: 26; 16: 13-15; 1 Corinthians 12: 3; Acts 17: 26, 27.)

It is proper to say in this connection, that while the Bible is of great importance as a guide to truth and an expositor of error; and while it contains a record of the truth which makes us free (that is, saves us), yet it must be admitted that the record, both in history and doctrine, is brief and incomplete. Some fifteen or twenty books, which were written, have been lost. Speaking of the biography of Christ, John says:

And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written.—John 21: 25.

Now, the pertinent question is not whether the specific name, patriarch, is known to the New Testament, but, rather, are the office, calling, and work of the patriarch in harmony with God's character, ways, and word, as revealed in the Bible? We claim that they are; and if these claims are correct, then it is both safe and profitable to receive them.

In New Testament times, the same office was sometimes known by different titles. John was one of the twelve apostles, but he always called himself "the elder." (2 John 1: 1; 3 John 1: 1.) Peter was an apostle, but he sometimes called himself an "elder." (1 Peter 5: 1.) It is not strange, therefore, that we should read in Doctrine and Covenants 17: 8, "An apostle is an elder," etc.

A number of the titles mentioned in 1 Corinthians 12: 28, and Ephesians 4: 11, may have also been known by other titles. If the same office was known by different titles, in the same age, then to the same extent, at least, and probably to a greater extent, would the same office be designated by different titles in different ages of the world. This would not impair the authority of a minister of Jesus Christ, or vitiate his work in the least. The authority of the minister, and the character of the work he is called to do, are what we need to look after more than the mere name by which he is called.

At this juncture, and in order to throw light on the use of different titles as applied to ministers in the Christian church, we call attention to the titles of deacon and bishop. The Greek word from which we get deacon is diakonos, and literally means "ministerant," or a "runner," i. e., "servant." From the use that is made of this title in primitive church history, there are good grounds for the belief, we think, that the title of deacon was applied to several of the lower officers in the church, perhaps to what are now known by us as priests, teachers, and deacons.

The same is doubtless true of the word bishop, except that it applies to higher officers of the church. Bishop comes from the Greek episkopos, which literally means "overseer, superintendent." The title was doubtless applied to men who held different offices in the Christian church, but who were all invested with the right to preside. This will account for many things said of deacons and bishops, in primitive church history, which otherwise conflict, to some extent, with the duties of these ministers as defined under the restored gospel.

But we are told by the small class who reject the work of patriarchs, and yet claim to be believers in the latter day work, that they are justified in rejecting them because they are not even mentioned in the Book of Mormon, which is said to contain "the fullness of the gospel."

If on this ground we may properly reject the calling and work of patriarchs, why not, on the same ground, reject the calling and work of bishops, seventies, and deacons, as set forth in the Bible and Book of Doctrine and Covenants? The Book of Mormon fails to specifically state that any such office as that of bishop, seventy, or deacon, was established in the primitive Christian church on this continent.

It must be admitted, that while the Book of Mormon is plainer and much more complete, on some important matters of history and doctrine, than the Bible, on other matters, including church organization, it is very incomplete. Mormon, who abridged the record, so far as it was abridged, says: "And now there can not be written in this book, even a hundredth part of the things which Jesus did truly teach unto the people."—3 Nephi 12: 1.

Is it wise and safe to reject the provision made in later revelations for the office and work of patriarchs, because they are not mentioned in the record which does not contain a hundredth part of what Jesus taught the people? We think not, provided this provision is in harmony with the word of God.

That phrase, "fullness of the gospel," has been almost as badly used, or abused, by some Latter Day Saints, as Revelation 22: 18 has been by those who reject all present revelation. The Doctrine and Covenants teaches that "the fullness of the gospel" is contained in the Bible and Book of Mormon. (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5.) It also states that the Book of Mormon, by itself, contains "the fullness of the gospel," (17: 2; 26: 2.) It must be admitted then that the Bible, when properly translated, contains the "fullness of the gospel," as well as the Book of Mormon; and inasmuch as each book contains important matter which the other does not, and the usual interpretation is that the phrase denotes that the Book of Mormon contains all gospel truth, then, upon this ground, are we not driven to the conclusion that each book contains more than "the fullness of the gospel," or each one contains less than the "fullness"?

What, then, are we to understand by the much abused phrase, "fullness of the gospel"? We are to understand this, and this only: In the Book of Mormon, also the Inspired Version of the Bible, is contained the gospel as it was given of God to those ancient worthies, who wrote and spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, without garbling or loss of "plain and precious parts."

The statement of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants is, "The Book of Mormon, containing the fullness of my everlasting gospel."—Doctrine and Covenants 26: 2.

There is a difference between "the fullness," and all "the fullness." Let the Doctrine and Covenants explain itself on the use and meaning of this phrase. In the vision seen by Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon (see section 76: 3), speaking of Christ, we read: "Of whom we bear record, and the record which we bear is the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, who is the Son, whom we saw and with whom we conversed in the heavenly vision."

Their testimony is a presentation of the truth, as it is with God, concerning Jesus Christ and his gospel; nevertheless, there is much valuable information concerning Christ, the ordinances of the gospel, and the work of the ministry, which is not found in the vision.

A witness, when in court, is sworn to tell "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth"; that is, he is to tell the truth in its fullness; and yet, all the truth he knows, at the most, is a very small fragment of what exists in the universe of God.

Recently there died in Edinburgh a man who had long been in the iron business, and for some time had been collecting horseshoes from all countries and all ages. He had a complete series of horseshoes of the various types from Roman times to the present—the work of smiths for seventeen centuries. The Christian Herald remarks that if good fortune goes with the horseshoe, Mr. Edward Young must have been a very fortunate man, at least in finding horseshoes.

Children's Home Purchased.

It will doubtless be pleasing to the Saints to know, after several years of waiting, that a purchase has now been made of what is known as the Banta place in Lamoni for the children's home.

About seven years ago it was conceived in the minds of a few of the sisters that it would be in line with the work of the Daughters of Zion to gather funds for a children's home. Accordingly consultation was had with Bishop E. L. Kelley as to whether he would indorse such a movement. He having given his unqualified indorsement, efforts were made to raise means to this end, and when the results of the first year's work formed a nucleus for this fund the matter was formally presented to the General Convention of the Daughters of Zion in 1905, whereupon it became the legalized action of that body.

The movement received further indorsement in the revelation to the church through President Joseph Smith in General Conference, 1906. From this date contributions came in freely from all parts of the country until it was thought we had sufficient for starting the home, and on the advice of Bishop Kelley we relaxed our efforts in order that the funds might more readily obtain for the Sanitarium which was then in process of erection.

The Banta property is situated in the southwestern part of Lamoni, on one of the most beautiful sites of the town. It consists of a residence and twenty acres of ground with good outbuildings, beautiful shade and lawn and plenty of fruit. Good walks to church and school. Possession of the building will be given March 1, and work upon the needed improvements will begin soon after.

It is contemplated to erect in the future a modern building on this site when actual experience shall have demonstrated what will best meet the requirements of such a home.

Since the home is about to be opened and it has been understood that the Daughters of Zion will work for its support, we now request all locals and interested persons to send in such moneys as they can for this purpose.

We trust we shall receive a hearty response to this call, such as is worthy the purpose for which these funds are to be used.

Moneys should be sent to Mrs. M. E. Hulmes, treasurer, No. 909, West Maple Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

SAINT JOSEPH, MISSOURI, March 3, 1911.

Editors Herald: I was driven home a few weeks ago from my field of labor by the terrible ice storm. It was impossible for either man or beast to move around outdoors without great danger of falling and breaking bones. Our dear old Bro. J. C. Elvert, of Cameron, was called to minister to a sick one, and as he was leaving the place to go home again, he slipped and fell so hard on the back of his head that he could not be taken home for several days, though he was only a few blocks away. It was the worst time for accidents of that kind I ever saw, and it lasted about a week, but now it is fine and warm. We can have the doors open during a good part of the day.

I have been blessed during the last year in my ministerial work. I have baptized twenty-two and preached one hundred and fifty sermons. How is that for an old, superannuated, childish missionary, almost sixty-nine years old?

I went to Lamoni on business with the Herald Office last fall. About five miles southeast of Lamoni there is a mission church built by the Saints and friends, and there I found some of my dear old friends from eastern Iowa and the Des Moines District, who wanted me to preach a few sermons, at least, in the Andover church. I was glad to have the opportunity to preach to them again. I began with thirty-five Saints and outsiders, but when I was there three or four nights their fine, large, new church was well filled, and at the end of the week the seats were all full and about ten or fifteen had to be seated on the pulpit around my feet. Then they voted that I should continue another week, and at the end of that week they had to procure more chairs, and still there was not room enough, and the pulpit had to accommodate about ten or fifteen. There is a fine class of Saints there, and many warm friends to the work who helped liberally to build the church, and they all used me royally. I dare not begin to give names or I shall have to give them all, and that would take too much space in your valuable paper. God bless them all for their kindness and liberality to me and others.

I see by the papers that Professor Hopkins has been in the East in the interest of Graceland College. Well, I hope he has had a generous response from all the Saints and friends, for Graceland is a grand institution. I was in Lamoni at the opening of the fall term and by invitation of the worthy president, J. A. Gunsolley, I attended the reception of the new scholars, and I must say that a pleasanter and more sociable time could hardly have been planned by Brother Gunsolley and his good helpers. I could not help but think of the contrast of the heathenish—no, it is not heathenish, but brutish—practice of hazing; and the nice reception given by the faculty and students to the newcomers; instead of almost killing some, as I have seen it done, tying some to trees, ducking others into cold water, or cutting with knives; I say, instead of all that brutal practice, the faculty and old and new students met in the college chapel with each other to get acquainted, and to welcome the newcomers, and make them feel that they are ALL one now for the good of each other. I do hope that those in charge of Graceland, whosoever they may be, will never allow hazing to take place in our college. It is an honor to Graceland that they can open a term without trying to kill some one of their number. I could cite instances where the new students were so used up, by hazing, that they had to return home till they got over their abuse. We have as fine a staff of teachers at Graceland as I ever met. I had the honor of baptizing our congenial, good natured president, J. A. Gunsolley. Without an exception all the teachers, both ladies and gentlemen, are an excellent class, an honor to the institution and to the church. I can say to all the Saints everywhere, you do not need to be afraid to send your sons and fair daughters to Graceland. Morally, spiritually, and intellectually they will be under the best of influences. Some have raised false reports about Graceland. I know two boys who went there, and because they could not do as they wanted to, and bring reproach upon the institution, they left and tried their best, by lying, to bring reproach on the school, but they miserably failed, and their own shame rests on their heads. Of course, if a boy or a girl is inclined to be untruthful, immoral, and would rather associate with characters like themselves, our college would not be a very congenial place for them, for that kind of work would not be tolerated for a moment, which was proven in the two boys mentioned. My advice to all such would be, Reform before you go there; or, Stay away. If any go there with intention of bringing the school down to their level, they will miss their mark. I have a grandson going there now, and I am proud of the progress he is making. There are a number of my acquaintances here who all speak in the highest terms of praise of Graceland. Everyone who wants to do what is right will do well there. Send your children and give them a chance of getting an education in one of the best colleges on the Continent. If you have no children to send, then help Graceland some other way. If you hear anyone trying to injure the reputation of Graceland by false reports, be on your guard.

I expect to begin a series of meetings here next Sunday night, and continue over a week. Then I go to Marshalltown, Iowa, where I will marry Sister Lois McCoy, a good Latter Day Saint, an accomplished musician, and a graduate of Marshalltown high school and business college, to the very best young man in town. You know that each one gets the best one every time, but the trouble is, so many do not stay the best.

From Marshalltown I go to Colo, where I expect to baptize one, then to Nevada and Boone, then to Perry, where I hope to baptize some more noble folks, then to Lamoni to conference, then to Montgomery County, Missouri, where some old Iowa friends now live. They want me to come down there and help them warn their neighbors, as the gospel has never been preached in their part of the country.

Home Address, Weatherby, Missouri.

In bonds,

J. S. ROTH.

RIDSTONE, ALBERTA, March 1, 1911.

Dear Herald: I have a desire to write unto thee, thou bringer of "Glad tidings of good things." I thank the editors for the grand educative information they furnish the readers. It is now three years since I was baptized into the church at Toronto. Life since then has been full of the joy of living. Before, I was filled with the "wanderlust" and led a wild life in many lands. I never belonged to any church. Christianity, as I saw it, was a mockery of what Christ gave his life for. Socialism was to my understanding the nearest approach to practical Christianity. I read one of Leo Tolstoy's works. It brought home to me, as no other book did, the conviction that to be a Christian, to help my struggling fellow-men, I must needs start with myself and purge out that which was wrong within me, and seek to come up higher day by day until my eyes would close in death.

While pondering over these matters, I was informed that one R. C. Evans lectured every Sunday evening in the Majestic Theater. The person who informed me did not know what he lectured about, and I was equally ignorant. I went to hear him out of curiosity, and lo! it was Christianity that was being preached with the genuine hall mark. It was what my hungry soul had been yearning for—the true doctrine of Christ, true brotherhood, something that would cause my heart and mind to sing in unison, "God is love." I attended every available meeting in church and theater and after about three months I was baptized, with six others.

Shortly after I came west and eventually by God's guidance, came here and homesteaded a quarter section. Knowing very little about farming I am handicapped but I am happy as I never was before. Inasmuch as I am striving to obey God's commands he is blessing me spiritually and temporally. We have a nice branch of close on fifty members and all seem desirous to live worthy of the name they bear. We are blessed with an able president, Elder J. R. Beckley, who week after week never fails to speak stirring sermons about the old Jerusalem gospel.

Scientists may theorize, learned divines may dogmatize, and socialists may particularize, but I am persuaded that only by full obedience to that gospel can pure brotherly love prevail on this earth. May God bless all the noble hearted men and women, whether in this church or not, who are seeking to better the condition of their fellow-men and women. May we as Saints be liberal with our means and obey God's financial law, so that God's authorized ministers may be enabled to preach to every nation, kindred, tongue and people the glorious news of the restored gospel. Let us, the children of the everlasting covenant, keep the ensign flying and serve our Master with the talents which he has so kindly given us.

Your brother in Christ,

WM. OSLER.

BAKERSFIELD, CALIFORNIA, February 28, 1911.

Dear Saints: As I have no other way expressing my thoughts for this great latter day work, I will write a few lines to the Saints through the HERALD. I love this work. I never have regretted the step I have taken. I pray and trust God will help me to live a godly life and raise my children right. The Evil One has many snares and traps set to catch God's children, but we may all live to overcome them. I love to read the church papers, and that is the only way I hear of God's sayings and doings to his people in these last days. There has been no preaching done here by the Latter Day Saints. Dear Saints, pray for my husband, that he may embrace this gospel.

Your sister in Christ,

Mrs. D. E. ROBINSON.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, March 1, 1911.

Dear Herald: In reading the HERALD and other books and papers of the faith of the restored gospel, I can not help but discern what a glorious work this is, and how thankful we should be for it, and how much it takes to prepare us for the coming of our Savior.

In reading of the riches of the gospel, the Bible tells us, if ye would be rich, be holy; and this little passage should teach us that riches do not consist in what we possess, but what we do with that which we possess. The mere possession of money is no evidence that a man is a success, or that he is holy. If he is low, greedy, grasping, robs others of opportunity (it matters not in what way he does it) he is a failure and unholy. Therefore he loses his riches as far as God is concerned. As far as the world goes he is rich, but it does not bring him that peace and happiness that comes to the one who has the true riches of the soul's communion with the Father. Those who read this may answer for themselves.

I am young in the faith and have much to learn, but I want to learn well although it may be slow. I desire to be a true follower of the lowly Nazarene. It may take years, I can not say, but God grant it may not be after it is too late. My heart is touched by all that is pure, but I realize I am but a weak worm of the dust. I want to reach that blessed Zion, but not until I am fully prepared to enter, for I do not want to have it said to me, "You are not ready," and be sent away. I would rather not see that celestial city until I can go to stay there with my Savior. I feel the presence of the Holy Spirit as I write and it brings peace to my soul.

DENNISPORT, MASSACHUSETTS, March 2, 1911.

Editors Herald: I am down by the sounding sea, taking a vacation in the wilds of Rhode Island for a week or more. The district conference at Boston, held February 5, 6, was a splendid conference and very spiritual. By consent of the missionary in charge I went to Warehary where I was kindly entertained by Mrs. Nettie and Bessie Sears. Two services were held there in Sr. Bessie's home. An invitation from a gentleman was tendered to hold services some three miles distant, which I hope will result in good when we can attend to it.

I have been preaching in Dennisport for nearly three weeks. The weather has been bad until within a few days. I am to remain here over Sunday and then expect to go to Warehary for a few days and from there home to work for the bread that we have to eat to live. The calls for preaching are many. There are openings on every hand and laborers enough, but no money to send them. Last Sunday I led one into the water and hope others will follow soon. I am entertained here by Mr. Edgar Wixon, not a member of the church at this writing, but a fine fellow, with a good wife who is a member of the church to help him. Sr. Wixon is an energetic member of the Sunday school, and superintendent of the home department. She does not confine her work to members of the church only, but has out of an enrollment of thirty students, nineteen who do not belong to the church. I wish that there were more like her.

Well, the old story is as bright and cheering and helpful as ever. Bro. I. B. Ames, who is the presiding officer here, has been faithful in helping in every way he could. Much sickness keeps the elders busy administering, and as it was anciently, some are healed and some are not. The prayer of faith saves the sick now as then.

Yours as ever,

GEORGE W. ROBLEY.

TRINIDAD, COLORADO, February 27, 1911.

We had a visit recently from Elders Bullard and Rushton, which was very cheering: as we have been here alone for near five months, it is a relief to hear some one else beside oneself. We are still in the fight, and while there is much to discourage, there is also much to encourage.

We have quite a number of interested listeners at our meetings, and have sold one Presidency and Priesthood, one Book of Mormon, and two Holy Scriptures, all to nonmembers.

We feel if the effort that has been begun can be continued there will be an ingathering soon. We visited Segundo, a short time ago, and took one subscription for Ensign of a nonmember. What the harvest will be we are not able to foretell, but trust that God will work his own will for the good of mankind, and his own glory.

We may have to return home for a season, but trust arrangements can be made to continue the services here as it would be a loss to allow them to cease now.

Elder John W. Kent, who has been connected with the work in these parts for a number of years, has passed on to his reward. He was sick for over six months, and while he suffered little, yet there seemed no hope for him from the first. He was administered to while Brethren Bullard and Rushton were here, and it seemed to prepare him for the end, and we feel he was resigned to God's will.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. E. J. Hyatt, New Harmony, Indiana, writes: "On February 23, Brn. John Harp and Halb rapped at my door, and in answer to my call, Who's there? inquired if I had any ripe watermelons. I was glad to see them, even if I was disturbed in my sleep. We are always glad to open the door to those who can tell the glad story of the angel's message. They did justice to the Master's cause while here and removed prejudice. Some of the hardest fighters against the work are now convinced of the truth of the latter day gospel. I believe the Lord is going to do a work here. We want the brethren sent back to this part of Indiana. We have some noble Saints at Griffin and New Harmony. We are comforted and built up through the visit of the night visitors. Come again, brethren. May God bless the dear HERALD and all his Saints."

News From Branches.

Chicago, Illinois.

Friday evening, March 3, no Religio on account of the decorators working in the church. We are all delighted with the beautiful appearance of the interior, and many thanks are due Brn. W. I. Cochran, J. J. Oliver, and Herbert Strange for their labor of love during the past week.

Sunday, March 5. Forty names on the blackboard of those who were on time at Sunday school; the largest number of any, and we think our scheme is working quite well. We are glad to note that the interest of the Sunday school seems to be on the increase. A fair attendance at sacrament service and a good, spiritual meeting. Elder Pement occupied in the evening, discoursing on true honesty and uprightness in all our dealings, whether we are losers financially or not.

Quarterly business meeting of the branch Monday evening, a small attendance but an interesting session.

We are pleased to note that Sr. Fred Johnson (known as "Dick Johnson") is slowly recovering from a serious illness.

At Wednesday evening prayer meeting a number of the West Side Saints were present. After the service Miss Isabelle McMasters was baptized by Elder J. A. Tanner. This lady was a member of the Dowie faith, but after thoroughly investigating our work became convinced of the truthfulness of the gospel.

"Create in me a clean heart, oh God, and renew a right spirit within me."

With hearts throbbing with grief on account of having just recently been called to part with so many of our loved ones, and with many a tear welling up because of our sympathy for the bereaved friends and relatives in our midst, we are now called to bear to our readers the sad record of these events.

The choir singers have brought to these obsequies their sweet offerings of tenderest farewells to the departed loved ones. The choice and fragrant flowers of beauty and perfection have contributed their charming, heavenly influence in the lonely hours of these trying ordeals: Following is our record:

Sr. Catharine Hobart was born December 15, 1857, and she died February 22, 1911, being in her fifty-fourth year. The funeral sermon was by Elder J. F. Curtis from the words, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." Three sons and three daughters survive. Our sister's new home was just completed at the time of her death.

Bro. William H. Bradford died in the seventy-fourth year of his age at his home four miles southwest of Blue Springs. And this reminds us of the item given in regard to Pres. Richard Hill's age, lately deceased: He was in his eighty-fourth year. Brother Bradford's funeral services were at the Stone Church on the morning of March 3, and were in charge of Elder G. E. Harrington, who discoursed from 2 Corinthians 5: "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." A wife and children survive.

Stricken with appendicitis as he sang in the choir Sunday morning, February 26, Bro. Charles Craig died twenty-four hours later at the Sanitarium, having undergone an operation, between 12 and 1 a. m.; our brother being in his fifty-third year. The funeral sermon was preached by Pres. E. A. Smith from text in Job 14: "If a man die, shall he live again?" Also Job 19: "I know that my redeemer liveth." He left a wife, two sons and a daughter.

On Sunday, March 5, was held the funeral obsequies of Sr. W. T. Sterrett who, after a year's illness, died at the age of fifty-two years on the 28th of February, and leaves her companion and six children. The sermon was preached by Elder W. H. Garrett from the text in Romans 14: 8: "For whether we live, we live unto the Lord, and whether we die, we die unto the Lord."

Sr. Sarah L. McVey, the oldest sister of Apostle I. N. White, being seventy-five years old, died on the night of March 2. She had been nearly forty years in the church and was the mother of several children. The obsequies were held at the church Saturday, March 4, Elder W. H. Garrett preaching an impressive sermon from the text in Numbers 23:10: "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." There were forty at least, of the relatives present.

Sr. Mary Thatcher Limb, mother of Bro. Albert Thatcher, our former janitor, died at her son's home, March 5, aged seventy-nine years. The funeral service took place at C. D. Carson's rooms on Tuesday, March 9. The sermon was by Elder M. H. Bond, based on selections from Paul's writings, also from Revelation. She had been a member of the church forty-two years.

How great would be our joy could we rehearse all the comforting words of hope and cheer that have been spoken to the Saints and bereaved ones, and of the promises like those written in the sacred word, that "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away."

Your columns are made more and more precious to the hungering soul, both far and near, conveying as they do the spiritual food that strengthens the intellectual parts of the child of God. Also giving life, force, and energy to struggle on with the perplexing problems of the ever changing present life. In these parts of the Lord's vineyard there has been much sickness this winter amongst the Saints, but by the intervention of God's power to make whole and save to the uttermost nearly all are recovered.

On January 9 we were called to Joy to preach the funeral of Bro. Melvin B. Holmes, a man of sterling qualities who will be greatly missed in that section of country. Bro. Wesley W. Richards, one of our promising young men, was called to the office of priest; he was duly ordained on the 18th of January, and is now showing evidences of his calling by his efforts to magnify his office. His first sermon was preached two weeks ago Sunday morning, which, while short, was edifying to all. The Lord for many years now has been inviting the young men of this place as well as others to enter into his service, and it makes us rejoice to see a few take hold of the work. We hope others will enlist their energies in the direction that will be the means of blessing the human race, and the household of faith. Four more precious souls have been added to the kingdom, making in all, this conference year, twenty baptisms in this and other places.

At the request of the minister in charge and the Saints of Davenport, Iowa, I held a profitable series of meetings at that place, with good crowds and interest. The Saints there, as in so many places, are struggling to build for themselves a church, eliminating that unpleasant feature of meeting in halls, which sometimes are not a clean place to invite strangers into, to say nothing of the blessed Spirit of the Master. By faithful efforts on the part of a few, they have completed the basement sufficiently to hold meetings in for the present. Much credit is due Bro. Amos Berve for the assistance he rendered while in that city. I am called back to Davenport to officiate in the ceremony that makes "two, one," about the middle of March.

Washington's birthday was celebrated in our church by an entertainment and supper on Tuesday, February 21, given by the young ladies' fancy work club, which was much appreciated and enjoyed by all.

As the conference year closes we are wondering, like so many of the ministry do about this time of the year, as to where we shall go next. We are pleased to report that we have been blessed in our weak efforts to do good, and while all has not been accomplished that might have been, we are willing to leave the results with Him who doeth all things right.

May the Lord hasten the time when the knowledge of God shall cover the earth as the waters do the mighty deep. Ever praying for the redemption of Zion and the gathering of all his people,
Your colaborer,

JOSEPH ARBER.

802 NORTH MAIN STREET, March 1, 1911.

San Jose, California.

We have just returned from the conference of the Northern California District, held at Sacramento. The conference passed off peacefully, and brotherly love and unity prevailed. The delegates were royally entertained by the local Saints, and their friends. This is as it should be; it shows that the love that Jesus spoke of is actuating the Saints of God.

We are doing all we can to feed the flock in San Jose, as pastor. We are hampered to a considerable degree, as we have to labor for the bread that perisheth. As San Jose is a city of near fifty thousand, including its suburbs, we could find ample opportunities to occupy all of our time, working for the Master, if circumstances would permit. We are trying to shape things to that end.

Our branch here is in very fair condition. Unity and peace prevail in our midst: and although the adversary has tried hard to disturb our unity and peace, yet by the aid of the Spirit we have been able to meet him at every turn, and his purposes have been thwarted. We have learned by experience that what the church needs now, as much as anything else, is good pastors, those that have had experience, that have passed through the trials, sufferings, and disappointments in life, and have profited by the things which they have suffered, have gained wisdom, and like the Master, are able to sympathize with, and succor those who are tempted, tried, and afflicted. He must be able to get close to his flock, and win their love and respect: and so live that they can discern that he has the Spirit of God.

The auxiliaries of the branch, both Sunday school and Religio, are doing well. They are certainly a great help to the young in preparing them for the duties of life that lie before them.

We are much pleased to learn that the work is being opened up in Jerusalem; and earnestly pray that the Lord will prosper it. Apostle F. M. Sheehy has been with us of late, encouraging us, and we have profited by his visits. Yours in the conflict.

Conference Minutes.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.—District conference met at San Bernardino February 18, 19, and 20, transacting all regular business and approving all the developments to date in the new, permanent reunion grounds; also unanimously passed a resolution enthusiastically inviting the General Conference to meet here in 1915, the year of the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco. F. M. Sheehy, T. W. Williams, Charles Crumley, A. E. Jones, Daniel and Sister Hougas were elected delegates to the General Conference. Harmony and good will prevailed throughout. The Sunday school and Religio convention also passed off pleasantly to the good of the society. R. T. Cooper, secretary.

UTAH.—District conference convened at Salt Lake City, February 25, 1911, at 10.30 a. m., district president H. N. Hansen in the chair. By motion Elders J. W. Rushton and H. N. Hansen were chosen to preside. District treasurer's report showed balance on hand $11.10. Building fund committee on hand $59.82. Bishop's agent's report: on hand at last report $28.19. Receipts since September 1, 1910, $173.35. Disbursements $260.83. Balance due agent $59.29. Found correct by auditing committee. Branches reporting four. Ministerial reports received from J. W. Rushton, A. M. Chase, J. D. Stead, Charles S. Chase, H. N. Hansen, John Davis, and F. M. Gowell. By motion the Elkhorn and Pleasant Grove branches were declared disorganized and authority given the district president and district secretary to grant letters of removal. The following officers were elected for the coming year: H. N. Hansen, president; F. M. Gowell and John Hall, associate presidents; G. J. S. Abels, district secretary, who was also sustained as district treasurer and bishop's agent. Delegates were elected to General Conference and empowered to cast the entire vote of the delegation and in case of division a majority and minority vote. District secretary reported his inability to obtain the branch records of the Beaver branch from a Mr. Hutchins of Beaver, Utah, and by motion the chair appointed Hugh J. Barton and F. M. Gowell, a committee to wait upon Mr. Hutchins and request of him the surrender of the Beaver branch records. By motion it was provided that all branches should take up a collection for use of the district every three months. The reunion committee was given power to arrange for a reunion preferably in the Provo Canyon to meet in mid-summer.

Salt Lake City was selected as place for holding the next conference, on October 7, 1911. The preaching was by J. W. Rushton and T. W. Chatburn. During the week previous to conference a series of interesting meetings were held by J. W. Rushton assisted by A. M. Chase and family. The attendance at conference was very encouraging, there being a good representation present from the southern part of the State. All meetings were very spiritual, especially the Sunday afternoon sacrament service. Good singing and music prepared by A. M. Chase and family and Allan and Pearl Wardle did much toward the success of the conference. On the Wednesday following a Salt Lake contingent went to Ogden and conducted a largely attended meeting at which Elder J. W. Rushton was the speaker. Gerard J. S. Abels, secretary.

NODAWAY.—Conference met with the Bedison Branch February 11, 1911. E. S. Fannon and Elder A. C. Silvers were made presidents of conference; W. B. Torrance, secretary; Sr. Tena Ivie, organist; Sr. May Jensen, chorister; Inez Anderson and Albert Nelson ushers. Ministry reporting; A. C. Silvers of the Seventy. Elders: R. Lorensen, E. S. Fannon, C. C. Nelson, Joseph W. Powell, John T. Ford. Priests: J. D. Showers, Alec Jensen, W. B. Torrance. Statistical reports of branches: Bedison, 73; Sweet Home, 54; Guilford 89, gain 6 by letter; a letter of "Remarks, communications and suggestions" from Elder E. S. Fannon, president of district for a continuous term of thirteen years (except two years) was read, thanking the Saints for kindly support and confidence. Could not serve as president longer for reasons best known to himself alone. Suggested the holding of a reunion in the district each year. Bro. J. D. Showers reported on tent work for summer of 1910. Received $3.50; expenses $7.40; balance due Brother Showers $3.90. District treasurer, W. B. Torrance, reported a balance of $1.42 on hand. The treasurer was ordered to draw from the old reunion fund in the hands of Bishop's agent the following: $3.90 to pay Bro. J. D. Showers, balance due; six dollars due Bro. E. S. Fannon for tent expenses; for a new suit of clothes for Bro. A. C. Silvers, and such other clothes as our missionaries may need from time to time, until the account is exhausted. Next conference to be held with Sweet Home Branch, September 2, 3, 1911. T. A. Ivie elected district president for the ensuing year; W. B. Torrance secretary and treasurer, and member of the district library board. Report from auditing committee: "We your committee are here to audit the Bishop's agent's books. The books are not here, neither has the agent given any reason why they are not forthcoming. We your committee recommend that this conference, if it deem it wise, recommend some one to the presiding Bishop to be approved by him to fill the office of Bishop's agent. J. T. Ford, A. Jensen, C. C. Nelson. Committee." Adopted. Bro. J. T. Ford was recommended to the presiding Bishop for his approval as Bishop's agent of Nodaway District. District historian E. S. Fannon was sustained. Resolved, That we place ourselves in harmony with General Conference resolution regarding a district treasurer, and that when he has disbursed the money now on hand as ordered by the conference, his office expire. Carried. The president of the district was ordered to appoint some one in each to provide for tent fund to defray tent expenses next summer. Delegates to General Conference were elected. Those present are instructed to cast majority and minority vote. Preaching by Elders A. C. Silvers, J. D. Showers, and T. A. Ivie. W. B. Torrance, district secretary.

FREMONT DISTRICT.—Conference assembled at Shenandoah, Iowa, on Saturday, February 18, 1911, at 10.30 a. m., with Pres. T. A. Hougas in chair. The secretary being absent, Lorena Leeka was elected secretary pro tem. T. A. Hougas and J. W. Wight were elected to preside. J. W. Wight made a short address. Branches reporting were: Henderson 88; Bartlett 40; Shenandoah 127; Riverton 52; Hamburg 66; Thurman 207; Tabor 58. Ministerial reports from Elders: Edward Rammie, Frank Becksted, J. C. Moore, E. S. Wilcox, James Comstock, N. L. Mortimore, C. M. Roberts. Priests: F. B. Knight, L. C. Donaldson, J. R. Wight, C. W. Forney. Teacher: R. E. Pratt. Deacon: S. S. Clark. Bishop's agent's report read. Moved to refer report to auditing committee; carried. J. F. Redfield, James Comstock, and Roy Dunsdon appointed. Report of auditing committee read: "We as a committee appointed to audit Bishop's agent's books have looked them over and found them correct." Financial report of secretary read. District tent fund, on hands $18.08. Motion that bill be allowed and order drawn on treasury carried. Motion that a collection be taken to cover the amount due secretary, carried. Collection taken amounted to

$2.40. Motion to continue the district tent fund carried. Twenty-seven delegates to General Conference were appointed with power to cast a majority and a minority vote. Petition from Henderson Branch for next conference was read. Motion to accept petition of Henderson Branch and meet with that branch for next conference carried. Motion that the time for district conference be left with the district presidency, and that they give notice in both HERALD and Ensign at least two weeks before time. Carried. J. W. Wight moved the following resolution: "Resolved, That as a district we look with favor upon the project of uniting western Iowa and eastern Nebraska, in holding an annual reunion, centrally located in the above described territory. Motion to defer action until next district conference, prevailed. At 8 p. m. J. W. Wight was speaker, assisted by N. L. Mortimore. At 9.45 Sunday school in charge of local superintendent, Mary E. Pace; preaching at 11 by T. A. Hougas, with M. W. Gaylord assisting; social service at 2.30 in charge of T. A. Hougas and R. E. Pratt; preaching at 8 o'clock by J. W. Wight, assisted by E. S. Wilcox. Adjourned to meet at Henderson. Lorena Leeka, secretary pro tem.

Convention Minutes.

KIRTLAND.—District association of Zion's Religio-Literary Society held their fifth meeting on Friday, February 24, 1911, at Cleveland, Ohio. After listening to some very interesting reports of the work of the past year, officers for the ensuing year were elected. Bro. John W. Topping was re-elected president; Sr. Melzine Russell was elected vice-president and re-elected home department superintendent; C. B. Keck was re-elected secretary-treasurer. One interesting feature was the written reports of our delegates to the 1910 General Convention; and those which were appointed at this meeting have been instructed to report in writing at our next meeting. The delegates have been instructed to support whatever is done at the General Convention toward providing for the systematic study of archæology. All district officers filed written reports of work done, which is an improvement over former years, and should be encouraged by all live districts. C. B. Keck, secretary.

NODAWAY.—The Nodaway district Sunday school association met in convention with the Bedison school on Saturday, December 17, 1910. District superintendent W. B. Torrance presided; Alma Nelson, secretary; W. T. Ross, chorister; Sr. May Jensen, organist. The following officers reported: W. B. Torrance, superintendent; Alex Jensen, assistant superintendent; T. A. Ivie, member of library board; A. C. Silvers, field worker; J. T. Ford, superintendent of Sweet Home school; T. A. Ivie, superintendent of Guilford school; W. T. Ross, superintendent of Ross Grove school; Harry Jensen, superintendent of Bedison school. Officers elected for the ensuing year: Alec Jensen, superintendent; W. B. Torrance, assistant superintendent; Alma Nelson, secretary; Harry Jensen, treasurer; T. A. Ivie, member of library board. Delegates to General Convention were elected. Next convention to meet at Guilford, May 13, 14. By motion the executive committee was made program committee for next convention. Entertainment at 7.30 consisting of songs, recitation, solos, dialogues, papers, etc. Sunday, December 18, at 10 a. m. Sunday school in charge of local officers; 11 a. m., normal work in charge of Elder A. C. Silvers, field worker; 2 p. m., literary and institute work. During the convention the following papers were read with interest: "Music in our Sunday school," by Sr. Verna Ross; "Primary work in Sunday school," by Sr. Tena Ivie; "The benefit of organization," by W. B. Torrance; "The relation between pupil and teacher," by E. S. Fannon. Address: "The Library work," by T. A. Ivie. Alma Nelson, district secretary.

Conference Notices.

Southern Missouri district conference will meet with the Springfield Branch, Saturday, March 25, 1911, at 10 a. m. All branches should endeavor to be represented, as election of officers and delegates to General Conference will take place. Ministry and branch reports should be sent to Benjamin Pearson, district secretary, Tigris, Missouri.

The Bishopric.

To the Saints, and particularly of the Lamoni Stake: It is with regret and sorrow that we are called upon to chronicle the decease of Bishop William Anderson, of the Lamoni Stake, who finished his labors in this present warfare and was called to the other side on Sunday morning, March 5, 1911. The death of Bishop Anderson leaves vacant the office of bishop of the Lamoni Stake of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; but his counselors, Brn. Richard J. Lambert and Joseph Roberts, both of whom have been active and faithful in their duties in this office, have the financial work of the stake well in hand, and will give particular attention to the business and perform the work of the office in place of Bishop Anderson until the session of the General Conference in April, when the vacancy will be fully placed at the disposition of the body.

We bespeak for these brethren the help, confidence, and trust of the Saints. All funds of the stake may be safely entrusted to them and they are authorized to administer the law of Christ in their special work. Let every member of the stake feel that he may help the cause of Christ by sending his tithes and offerings to these brethren, or either of them, or simply address the Stake Bishop, Lamoni, Iowa, and at the earliest possible time. May the Lord specially bless the workmen.

In behalf of the Bishopric,
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

LAMONI, IOWA, March 9, 1911.

Church Secretary.

RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Under date of March 7 the Burlington Route advises as follows:

"For the General Conference and Conventions of the Reorganized Church . . . at Lamoni, Iowa, April, 1911, we will make a round trip rate from points in Missouri to Lamoni and return of two cents per mile in each direction, tickets to be sold April 2 to 6 inclusive, with final return limit April 21.

"Our regular one-way rates in Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas are now two cents per mile, so that with this reduced rate in Missouri it will be possible for delegates to purchase tickets for this meeting on the two cent basis from the territory described.

"A passenger passing through Kansas City from a point in the west where the through rate is on a higher basis than two and one half cents, could purchase a one-way local ticket to Kansas City and there repurchase an excursion ticket. Or if coming from the east through St. Louis, he could follow a similar plan, rebuying at that gateway."

The suggestion concerning repurchase of tickets probably would apply to other gateways. Passengers should make full inquiries of local agents that they may avail themselves of the reduction.

An effort is being made to secure same reduction from other lines in the State of Missouri. Due notice will be given as early as possible.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, March 9, 1911.

Notices.

To the Presidents of Seventies: Your action at the last meeting of 1910 was, that we adjourn to meet at Lamoni, Iowa, March 29, 1911, at 10 a. m., for entering upon our labors of conference.

COLUMBUS SCOTT, President.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of Pottawattamie District: Having been appointed to preside over the district for the coming year I desire the cooperation of all that we may by a united effort attain unto a higher condition. The work is dependent upon all. The labors of one are as necessary as those of another. In unity there is strength. The one without the other can not bring about the desired condition but by pulling together our work will become effectual.

Brethren of the priesthood: Bear in mind the sacredness of your calling. Office has been conferred upon us for the sake of rendering service unto the Lord, therefore let us be active in that service. Those who are not engaged on Sundays with branch work, please try to do something for the Master by finding a place where you can tell the gospel story. That message which has gladdened our hearts, let us try to take unto others.

The presidency of the district intend to visit among the branches and help to build up the work wherever possible.

Trusting we shall all be diligent and thus be permitted to enjoy the approval of God, I am,

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. A. HANSEN.

Married.

HOOK—HAWKINS.—At the Saints' church in Sacramento, California, at twelve o'clock noon, February 26, 1911, Bro. Henry George Hook, of Roseville, California, to Sr. Grace Corinda Hawkins, of San Jose, California. The groom is a great-grandson of elder Hervey Green, one of California's early missionaries, and the bride is a niece of Elder J. C. Clapp. May they live in harmony with the covenant they have made, that they may have the blessings of the Master with them, through a long and happy journey of a wedded life. Ceremony by Elder C. W. Hawkins, father of the bride.

Deaths.

CRABB.—At Little Sioux, Iowa, February 17, 1911, of heart failure, Ella R., wife of Bro. Charles Crabb, aged 42 years, 1 month and 16 days. She was born in Fremont, Nebraska, December 31, 1868. Married to Brother Crabb, March 2, 1888. Her aged parents, husband, five children, besides a host of friends and other relatives mourn her loss. Funeral sermon by Elder Sidney Pitt, Elder Joseph Lane in charge. She was loved by all who knew her, and a large congregation attended her funeral. May the loving Savior comfort the sorrowing ones, and may they find peace in his gospel.

DODSON.—Rebecca Jane Dodson was born May 11, 1846, in Hancock County, Illinois. Was married to William Dodson September 16, 1860, at Beaver City, Utah. Died January 4, 1911, aged 65 years, 7 months, 23 days, at Leroy, Logan county, Colorado. She leaves husband, three sons, and one daughter. She was baptized October 7, 1865, Council Bluffs, Iowa. Sermon by Elder G. W. Johnson of Eustis, Nebraska. She was a Saint indeed. All who knew her spoke in the highest terms of her, both members and nonmembers.

DOZE.—Peter Doze was born June 10, 1824, at Lutzohn, France. Came to America when about two years old. Was married to Elizabeth Mott, April 16, 1842. To this union were born thirteen children, nine of whom survive him. His wife died in 1893. He was a member of the Christian Church. During his last years he made his home with his daughter, Sr. J. W. Mather, of Lamoni, Iowa, at whose home he died January 14, 1911. The sermon was preached at the home of his daughter, January 16, 1911, by Elder Heman C. Smith.

SCOTT.—Bro. James Scott died at the home of his sister in Valley Center, Michigan, February 7, 1911. He was 67 years, 6 months and 28 days old. Was born in Osgood, Ontario, Canada, July 10, 1843. Baptized by Elder O. J. Hawn, at Valley Center, November 7, 1910. Was very firm in the gospel during the time he was permitted to enjoy it. Funeral sermon preached by Elder J. A. Grant, in Saints' church here. The dear old brother left very strong testimony to the truthfulness of the gospel while on his deathbed. Died very happy.

KELLEY.—Eunice Kelley was born February 8, 1826, baptized April 9, 1873, died December 22, 1910. She was the mother of twelve children, six of whom with her husband preceded her in death. Six are living to mourn the loss of a faithful mother. She had a variety of experiences; many times called to mourn, also many seasons of rejoicing. She met with the Saints, and a short time before her departure bore testimony of her faith in the gospel and said that it might be the last time, which proved true. Funeral sermon at her home was by S. F. Cushman.

DOYLE.—Lillian B. Doyle was born October 26, 1866, baptized May 6, 1888, died February 2, 1911. She leaves a husband, one sister, three brothers, and other relatives. For several years she was failing in health, and her last sickness was one of agony; but she tried to be patient, and received relief many times through administration, and prayers of the Saints. Her faith in the gospel was unshaken. She was a woman of talent; well informed in church doctrine; given to hospitality, and toward the needy ever reached an open hand. Funeral at her home; sermon by Elder S. F. Cushman.

LAMPHERE.—Norman Lamphere was born May 20, 1852, at Kilburn, Michigan. Was married to Elizabeth Byers September 17, 1881. To them were born eight children, five sons and three daughters. He united with the church January 5, 1908. He had suffered from a stroke of paralysis for some time; death came February 2, 1911. His faith in the work was strong to the last. Funeral sermon by Elder D. W. Davis.

GOBLE.—Sr. Lucy C. Goble, at the home of her daughter, Sr. Sarah A. Scott, of Leedey, Oklahoma, of pneumonia, January 27, 1911. Was born August 7, 1830, at Bath, New York. The mother of seven children, five survive her, also twenty-four grandchildren and twelve great-grandchildren. Came here from Washington six weeks before death. Baptized in 1870 and has since been a consistent member. Her husband preceded her in death October 7, 1909. Before the end she told the family she was ready to go and urged them to prepare themselves that they might join her in the better land.

SILSBY.—February 11, 1911, of peritonitis, Sr. Vivian Bernice, daughter of C. A. and Amy J. Slsby, of Little Sioux, Iowa, aged 15 years, 10 months, and 12 days. Funeral services at the Latter Day Saints' church at Little Sioux, in charge of Elder Joseph Lane. Sermon by Elder Sidney Pitt. Sister Vivian was a very bright girl, beloved by all who knew her. A large audience was in attendance at the funeral and many cheeks were wet with tears of sorrow at the demise of this dear young sister and friend.

DENIO.—David R., son of Sr. Eva Denio, died at Lamoni, Iowa, February 16, 1911, aged 34 years, 5 months, and 10 days. He was baptized when eleven years of age by Elder John Shippy. Services at the home of his mother, February 17, in charge of Elder John Garver; sermon by Elder John Smith. Burial at Rose Hill Cemetery.

KENT.—At Trinidad, Colorado, February 9, 1911, Elder John W. Kent, aged 68 years, 9 months, and 11 days. He was born May 28, 1842, baptized May 23, 1875, and ordained May 28, 1883. At one time he was active in the missionary work in Texas and other parts of the Southwest, and baptized a number of persons. He was a member of the Twenty-fifth Ohio Regiment, and served his country for over five years in the war of the rebellion. There was a large attendance at the funeral, which was in charge of Elder E. F. Shupe. Interment in the soldiers' plat of cemetery at Trinidad.

TANNER.—Amy A. Cochran-Tanner was born April 3, 1848, at Aurora, Portage County, Ohio. She was married to Charles W. Bullis, July 2, 1871, and to James E. Tanner, October 2, 1890. She was baptized at Lamoni, Iowa, February 18, 1883, by her brother, A. S. Cochran. She died February 23, 1911, at Wayland, Allegan County, Michigan. Funeral services were conducted at the home by Elder E. K. Evans of Grand Rapids, Michigan. She endured faithful to the end.

PEW.—At Low Banks, Ontario, Canada, February 22, 1911, Mary A. Pew, born January 15, 1836, in the township of Sherbrooke, county of Haldimand, Ontario. Baptized February 16, 1894. It truly can be said of her life as a Saint, "She hath done what she could." Hers was the first funeral sermon preached in the Saints' new church building at Low Banks. Sermon by Elder Shields to a very large gathering. Her husband preceded her in death eleven years ago. She is survived by five children.

CRAIG.—Charles N. Craig was born at Mettamorah, Woodford County, Illinois, May 18, 1858. He was baptized March 31, 1877. Married to Miss Margaret E. Johnson, November 24, 1880. He died after a sudden and short but severe illness, in Independence, Missouri, February 28, 1911. He was an honorable man and a true Latter Day Saint. His loss is deeply felt, especially by the Independence Saints. His widow and two sons, Charles and Paul, and one daughter, Sr. Madge Siegfried, are left to mourn. The funeral was held from the church March 3; the stake presidents were in charge, the sermon by Elder Elbert A. Smith.

HOFFMAN.—At his home in Lazerville, West Virginia, January 1, 1911. Born June 23, 1834, Morgantown, West Virginia. Baptized October 11, 1887, at Sennett's Mills, West Virginia. Ordained teacher September, 1891, and elder August, 1896, at Goose Creek, West Virginia. Obeded gospel amid storms of persecution and was faithful till death, being a "living epistle." His remains were taken to Ritchie County for interment. Funeral service was held at the home by the officers of Steubenville, Ohio, Branch, of which he was a member. Sermon by Elder Adolphus H. D. Edwards.

STROH.—Mary E. Stroh was born October 20, 1844, in Ashland County, Ohio. Passed away near Angola, Indiana, February 11, 1911, at the age of 66 years, past. Came to Indiana in 1864. Was married in 1870 to Charles L. Crandall. To them was born one son. She was an exceptionally kind wife and mother. She was a member of the Christian Church. She leaves the husband, one son, and an adopted daughter. She was related to Elder Samuel Stroh, of Coldwater, Michigan. Her father and many other relatives belong to the Latter Day Saints. Funeral February 13, in Methodist church, at Angola, Indiana. Elder G. A. Smith officiated assisted by the Methodist pastor.

GALLAND.—Benjamin F. Galland was born in Daniels County, Indiana, January 31, 1821. Came to Iowa with parents in 1831. Later, they settled the historic Gallands Grove, in Shelby County, which bears their family name. Married on March 18, 1850, to Maria L. Allen. Five children survive him. He was a Latter Day Saint for over a half century. On February 14, 1911, at his home in Deloit, Iowa, he passed peacefully to the other side, aged 90 years and 13 days. Funeral sermon at Saints' church, Deloit, by C. J. Hunt.

BALLANTYNE.—Robert Ballantyne was born in Roxburyshire, Scotland, October 12, 1828. Died at his home near Charter Oak, Iowa, February 19, 1911, aged 82 years past. He united with the church in Scotland, in 1840. Spent seventy years of his eventful life a faithful Saint. Emigrated to America in 1841, and was one of the witnesses to the baptism of Pres. Joseph Smith by Joseph Smith the Seer. Married Miss Marinda Minear January, 1860. Seven children were born, six survive. Funeral sermon by C. J. Hunt; burial in Willow Township cemetery.

Says the Scientific American, "We are inclined to think that the combined use of the dihedral angle in the main surface and the gyroscope will provide the aeroplane of the future with a self-righting ability similar to that shown by the birds of the air, when they are accidentally capsized."

Death Cares not for Jewels or Coin.

Outside the walls of Pompeii the other day a petrified woman was found with her hands full of jewels. She was running to escape the eruption of the volcano and was caught under the ashes and lava. In her stone fingers were bracelets, necklaces, rings, and two earrings containing each twenty-one perfect pearls, set in gold, representing a bunch of grapes. The woman was doubtless a person of intelligence, culture and wealth, but death did not care for her or her jewels, and tripped her when she tried to make her escape.

Recently a miser, John Cremett, seventy-eight years old, died while counting his money in his room. Mrs. Patrick McMahon, with whom he boarded, knocked at his door to call him to luncheon, and found him sitting in a chair, dead. Upon a table drawn up in front of the chair were $3,670 in cash and two bank books showing deposits of a considerable amount. As in the centuries past, so now, death enters the palace of wealth and culture and takes the woman away from her jewels and pleasures and confronts the rich man in his money getting and counting, leaving the coin on the table for other fingers.—The Christian Herald.

SUMMIT ADDITION CITY OF INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

The Order of Enoch is placing this beautiful addition on sale, not as a speculation, and whatever is made over the cost price of this land belongs to the Order for the benefit of the poor, and the carrying on the business of the Order. Persons at a distance wishing to purchase property in this addition, if dissatisfied with the purchase after seeing it, will have their money refunded.

Terms of Sale

We would prefer cash, but this does not hinder those of limited means. The Order will make it possible to assist any poor Saint to acquire a home on more reasonable and better terms than could be done in any other way. Elder B. J. Scott of the Independence Stake Bishopric has been placed in charge of the sales of this property, and will assist anyone wishing to see the property.

The Order has also provided a head quarters at 103 South River boulevard, one block from the church, where Saints visiting or contemplating moving to Independence will be made welcome, and will be made comfortably at home. Saints contemplating moving to Independence Stake should confer with the local or general bishopric, which will always be to their best advantage.

PRACTICAL APPLICATION OF THE WORDS OF JESUS TO PRESENT HUMAN NEEDS.

III.—THE MAN WHO IS DISCOURAGED AND BEATEN.

Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light.—Matthew 11: 28-30.

I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.—John 10: 10.

The words of Jesus come with great force to the man in need in any age of the world. His message was not adapted to one nation of men only, nor to one period of time only. He is the universal Savior who speaks to the souls of men in all lands and all times.

Excepting for the sheltered few, existence in any age is a struggle. Life is an up grade. To go up hill is to expend energy; to go down hill is to die. And it is axiomatic, though perhaps not true, that one can not stand still.

We imagine that in this age the grade is a little steeper than ever before. Some years ago a strenuous man, endowed with the faculty of making strenuous phrases, called the life that men were then living, "The strenuous life." The pace has been accelerated a little since then, notwithstanding the visit of Pastor Wagner, of France, to promulgate the doctrine of the simple life. Soon some other up-to-the-moment man must coin another phrase to fit the superstrenuous life.

The invention of machinery promised relief to human toilers. But a higher standard of living, coupled with the ambition to pile up enormous fortunes, together with other causes, has counteracted the results of swifter methods of production. In some instances the hours of labor may have been reduced; but the work is less varied, more monotonous, and the pace is faster.

Whittier's cobbler sang as he pounded leisurely away at his last.

"And there, in the golden weather,
He stitched and hammered and sung."

The grandson of Whittier's cobbler now sits at a machine all day doing over and over again one small part of the work of making a shoe. He "speeds-up" to compete with the dynamo that drives him and the machine. He does not sing and his friends do not drop in to chat with him.

The words of Jesus were addressed to toilers. True, he had also a message for those who toil not. There is a large class of nonproducers: the idle rich, and the grafters, including those who live by speculation, cruder forms of gambling, plain stealing, and vulgar beggary. Every man who thus shirks his own share of work makes it harder for those who toil to do the work of the race, and in one way or another he himself pays the penalty.

But our words are not to such at this time. We have in mind the men who, because of the reasons we have enumerated, or because of environment, or past errors of life, or inherited weakness, or misfortune, or for any other reason, find the legitimate work of life pressing heavily upon them, and so become discouraged, pessimistic, and broken in spirit.

Some may urge that Jesus gave a plan that will revolutionize conditions so that there will be no more broken workers. That is true. But the individual has not time to wait for the world to adopt that plan. He must have help now. And Jesus is a "very present help in every time of need."

The man who is despondent and discouraged is in the worst possible mood to meet the demands of life. When we are convinced that we shall fail, nothing but failure awaits us. The pessimist is foredoomed to failure. Confident that effort will be wasted, he withholds the last ounce of effort that would bring success. The world is full of discouraged men and women. Many of them seek escape by suicide. Others fight on, waging a losing battle.

A strong, vital, enthusiastic friend is a boon to any discouraged man. He infuses new hope, arouses dormant faculties, discovers unsuspected reserves of force and determination. Jesus is preeminently such a friend. He says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest"; however he does not propose a cessation of legitimate effort: "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me." The yoke is above all things typical of labor. But men are to learn of him how to labor and what to labor for. Then comes the promise, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." Jesus is capable of giving life as it is needed. He assures us that all power is his. His yoke is "easy," because it is the best that was ever designed to draw the load which all must draw, whether they accept his yoke or not.

To secure his help there must so far as possible be an adjustment of life to correspond with his standards. We must learn of him. The man who would have this more abundant life must adopt correct methods of living, so far as is consistent with his surroundings. Men are to an extent victims of circumstances. They can not at will leave an unhealthful avocation. But so far as possible they should by correct living, conserve the life that is theirs.

And the man who asks for more abundant life must not ask for it that he may squander it upon his appetites and passions, or barter it for luxuries, or fling it into the reckless whirl of frivolous society.

It is said that time is money. We may also say that in most instances money is time. That is, with most of us, a dollar stands for certain definite moments or hours that we have taken right out of our life and bartered for that dollar. Fifty such dollars spent for something that we do not need may represent twenty-five or more days of life thrown away. This is not conservation of life.

The man who has systematized his work and harmonized his life with the divine plan, may turn to the Master with great assurance and find comfort and strength in the promise that he has come to give life more abundantly; that he will make one adequate to the tasks of each day. With such thought there comes increased determination, a stiffening of purpose, buoyancy of spirit, and that hope which is one of the three graces vital to Christian life. Though such a man may not be recovered from all of his infirmities, a resolute purpose, coupled with such a faith, and a wise expenditure of power, will enable him to do a great deal of work in this world. He can go a long way on the royal road of real Christian success.

Most of the processes of nature work toward recovery and rehabilitation. Many a man, completely beaten and discouraged and on the verge of suicide in the evening, blessed with a night's refreshing sleep, awakes with new courage and a changed outlook. Every day is a new day. Christ is ready at any time to step in and help the man who wishes to recover himself. In addition to the ordinary processes of refreshment and revivification he sends spiritual life and new vigor of mind and body.

When discouraged and downhearted a man can do no better than to ponder the words of Jesus and hasten to him for help. Let him again and again repeat the thought, "I have another chance. Jesus is my friend. More abundant life is within my reach. With God's help I am equal to my task. I will amount to something. I will succeed."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

In the HERALD for last week it was stated that Bishop William Anderson was baptized by Elder Charles Derry. This was an error, it should have read Elder Charles Hall.

The March number of The Central Church Bulletin, Kansas City, Missouri, comes to us enlarged and full of photos introducing its readers to the officers, not only of church, but of auxiliaries, making of it an interesting issue.

Our Des Moines correspondent informs us that the address reproduced in editorial department March 1, was by the Honorable Henry Wallace, not Lewis. It was a typographical error in article from which we copied.

The Church Secretary smilingly informs us that he recently received a letter addressed to "The Recognized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." It is quite true that it is now being recognized in various ways in many places where formerly it was ignored.

From a conversation with the missionary in charge of mission number three, Elder U. W. Greene, we learn that the summer school at Philadelphia is producing good results, among them being accessions to the church. This is a progressive feature of church work. No doubt many would like to know more about it. The pastor at Philadelphia will be present at the coming conventions and conference, prepared to illustrate and explain their methods.

In conversation with Elder J. W. Wight, minister in charge of mission number one, we note that the missionaries in his field during last year had reported 9692 sermons preached, 8 branches organized, 537 baptisms, 90 new openings, 470 children blessed, 17 Sunday schools, 11 Religio locals and 1 church district organized.

Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, President of the Religio Association, desires us to publish the following announcement: The first meeting of the General Convention of Zion's Religio-Literary Society will be Monday, April 3, 9 o'clock a. m. Will open with prayer meeting, followed by business. Sunday School Convention will follow, opening Tuesday afternoon, the 4th.

The church library has received from the Chamberlain Medicine Company a number of interesting foreign newspapers, including those in the vernacular of India, the Philippines, Java (Dutch), Burmese, Chinese, South Africa (Boer), Panama, and Ceylon. These had been received by the company as proofs of their advertisements inserted in those papers, and they are distributing them to libraries rather than destroy them.

Alterations and renovations of the buildings of the Children's Home at Lamoni have begun. Arrangements are almost completed for a manager, a matron, and a superintendent of the farm. The institution will be opened some time in May. In the May number of the Autumn Leaves there will appear a photo of the home, and perhaps that of the matron. This and full announcement of the needs and aims of the home were too late for the April issue of the Leaves.

Some twenty years ago a man who preached on the streets in this country was regarded as a religious crank. It is different now. We learn that at the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, beginning June 4, the Rev. F. B. Meyer, of London, England, will in a week's engagement give special addresses to ministers, and a conference on open-air work for the summer months will be held. The open air campaign is a recognized feature of our own work in this and other countries.

"The Gospel Trumpet" remarks that on the face of things, the condition of China presents a sad aspect; but that it has its compensating and encouraging side. War, famine and plague bring that dark country into closer touch with the civilized world. Christian sympathies are aroused, donations are being sent. This, the Trumpet believes, will bring them into touch with Christian people and doctrines and open the door for the preaching of the gospel. It is stated upon authentic reports that it is becoming exceedingly difficult to procure the works of Confucius in the bookshops. This has long been the leading religious work of the Empire."

The desire and capacity to communicate our thoughts to others is God given. It is natural, and no one would think of doing away with it. Did you ever think of the similarity of the inherent disposition to communicate which is in the creature to that which is in his Creator? The capacity and demand for communication in the creature is not any less than that in the Creator; hence the reasonableness and the necessity for divine communication, which we call "revelation." Every good husband talks to his wife; it is just as natural for Jesus to communicate with the church, which in a figure is called his wife.

There is a Catholic Colonization Society of the United States. It was founded by the Rev. Julius E. De Vos. In our exchanges, its object is outlined as three-fold: First, to search out the most available agricultural lands now or likely to be open to settlement; and then direct Catholic immigrants to those lands, using the assistance available from big land companies. Second, to check undesirable immigration to the United States through cooperation with the local clergy in those foreign countries from which immigrants come. Third, to establish a church and a parochial school in each of the colonies formed in order to give permanence to the community. Besides the president and vice-president, the society has a secretary, treasurer, executive committee, and a board of trustees, all of which offices are held by the clergy. The headquarters at present are in Chicago.

Bro. James C. Page, writes from Wichita, Kansas, as follows: "Elder Charles Albertson died here this morning. His health has been failing him for two months. Bronchitis and catarrh were the cause of his death. He would not give up nor allow anyone to assist him till the disease had taken the last vestige of strength. He was out to church Sunday, and walked fourteen blocks to the post-office Monday, but it exhausted all his strength and he was hardly able to get home. He leaves quite a family of children, most of them in Idaho, some of whom are on their way here for him. He was a good man, loved the gospel more than all else, and used his means freely for its support. He died peacefully, and death to him was sweet. It is expected his body will be taken back to Idaho for interment."

The Evening Star, of Dunedin, New Zealand, for January 23, has this to say of Elder W. J. Haworth and one of the many sermons he preached in that city:

"The Reorganized Latter Day Saints of Dunedin held their usual service in the Oddfellows' Hall, Stuart street, last night. Elder Haworth, of Sydney, editor of their official publication in Australia, now en route to the United States to attend the General Conference of the body (who have no connection with the Mormons of Utah) in Iowa during April, was the speaker. His subject was 'The Restoration of the Gospel.' The 'Saints' believe that the gospel in its primitive purity, as taught by Christ and his apostles, ceased to be upon the earth during the 'Dark Ages.' Error became so mixed with the truth as to completely destroy its value. The Reformation brought a great improvement, but the speaker challenged proof that the Reformers' efforts gave us one church 'among the many reformed ones' in harmony with the church of the first century in organization, faith, doctrine, and practice. The message of the 'Saints' to the world was that the old-time gospel had been restored, the old-time church re-established, with all its heaven-appointed features."

A correspondent in a New York paper, commenting on the importing of the eloquent Doctor Jowett from England to Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, expressed the opinion that this man who is said to be "athirst for souls" has left behind him in England "the source of his greatness, the fount of his inspiration." There he had lived for the past sixteen years "in an atmosphere of reverential love and spiritual blessing." His church was always packed and people turned away. Professors, students, and ministers of all denominations came to his Thursday evening meetings, and wherever he went throughout the British Isles his meetings were crowded. His leisure was spent on the hills with his books. Says the writer:

"He is leaving all this to come to the Fifth Avenue Church, and what will they give him in place of it? They will set him up as a demi-god—for a time; flatter and spoil him while he is new, and when he has changed, as the atmosphere is sure to change him, he will be cast aside by the novelty seeking millionaires, broken on the wheel of what he believes to be his opportunity for saving souls. Should a better fate befall him his friends, who appreciate him for his rare gifts, will be first to feel grateful that he has been listened to, and that after all he has not made the change in vain. Doctor Jowett has that to give which Fifth Avenue needs badly, but he will learn that in leaving his country he has left most of what he is behind him. It would be wiser for Americans to encourage home talent. 'Jowetts' are needed here, but we will have to make them from our own material before we will appreciate them. We will have to get inside the religious question before we can meet it. Americans have developed the habit of looking on, but it is not to the onlooker that vision comes—it is to the digger, the seeker after truth. The importing of capable men to kill their enthusiasm is not worthy of any great nation, whatever the price they pay, but, most decidedly, they should pay well."

In an address to the colored people of Des Moines recently, Booker T. Washington gave them the following good advice:

"Don't get to a point where you feel ashamed of the good old songs of our race.

"Don't ever grow so intelligent and prosperous that you'll feel ashamed of the race to which you belong.

"I know some people of our race who would rather be third class imitation white people than first-class negroes.

"If I could go back again into the world from which I came into this, and I could choose what manner of man I should be and what sort of a skin I should wear, I'd say, 'Make me again an American black man.'

"You negroes of Des Moines have two great responsibilities resting upon you: To see to it that you save yourselves and keep saved, and to see to it that you set such an example here as will create a public opinion in favor of the negro in the South and not against him.

"If you haven't got a little piece of land that's your own, get it as soon as you can.

"Every negro should have a home so comfortable and happy that no child would think of leaving it.

"You parents haven't done your duty by your boys and girls until with an education in books you've seen to it that they have learned a useful trade for making an honest living and that they have learned the beauty and dignity of labor and the disgrace of any kind of idleness.

"Since I went to Europe and saw the people there, I've quit abusing the white man in this country; he's the best white man I know anything about.

"Learn to save something of what you get hold of.

"When you get home, take the wife of your bosom and tell her all your business: tell her what you're making; tell her how much you owe—tell her everything and let her be a real partner with you.

"Remember, the negro has a chance. Remember that what other races have done, we can do. Remember that we're living, not dying; succeeding, not failing."

THE SAINTS' HERALD DOCTRINAL SERIES.

V. REPENTANCE.

BY ELDER R. C. RUSSELL.

Herewith we present the fifth number in our doctrinal series. Practically all Christian denominations admit the necessity of repentance,—yes, urge it upon the attention of the people; so here is one point at least where we can strike hands with others, even if we do not actually agree with them as to the place of this principle in the gospel law, and its true application. To turn from evil and learn to do good, to rectify past mistakes so far as possible,—this is an important work. Our next number will be, "Baptism; the Mode," by Elder John Kaler, who some time ago delivered a series of doctrinal sermons at Independence, Missouri.—EDITOR.

To me, it appears that the word repentance really means a condition of the soul that passes from the depths of sorrow to ecstasy.

When in the Garden of Eden our first parents transgressed the law, there was no provision made for a staying of the penalty, by the mere act of repentance. The law must be enforced and mankind must pass to a lower estate before he could sense the loss to which he had subjected himself. Then when the penalty had been executed and man came to himself, he could but in part sense the enormity of his past deeds of disobedience. But there came the time for reflection and a condition of despair and agony of soul, which could not be ameliorated by any means excepting by a practical demonstration of true repentance, which was a compliance with the law whereby atonement was made by the transgressor as far as lay in his power, for the evils of his misdeeds. When he was baptized (Genesis 6: 67, Inspired Translation) in water and to him was given the Holy Spirit, he could rejoice that he had repented.

How vastly different are the causes of man's repentance (as pictured by Paul in Romans 2: 4, "The goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance") from the average evangelized converts of the common religions who, through fear of bondage and eternal condemnation, are wrought upon to declare their repentance. But how great are the differences in results of the two forms of what is termed repentance, greater even are they than that seen in the lives of some of the liberated slaves of the South, some of whom had grown to love their masters because of their goodness so that to them freedom meant slavery in its most cruel form; whereas, the other class through a spirit of intimidation and fear were always groaning under the yoke of bondage, and when emancipation was declared they rejoiced in their freedom from such tyrannical masters. So to-day how often we see in the avenues of the common religions, the abject slave through fear of God, who, when wrought upon by excitement or other cause to speak the sentiments of his throbbing heart, expresses his terror instead of love. When he comes to "himself" and the independent self-agency overpowers the emotional or fearful spirit that previously for a time controlled, we find the cowering religious slave an open and avowed enemy to God.

It is therefore quite apparent that one of the pressing needs of the religious age is a conception of the true cause of repentance—the goodness of God. This being thoroughly impressed upon the average man, he will see his condition of rebellion toward his greatest benefactor, and then rather than cause his Creator and God to longer mourn for the wayward child he will with all possible eagerness of soul begin tearing down the old barriers that so long have hidden him from his Redeemer. As a child, who from his earthly parent has for a long time been separated, he will with broken heart and contrite spirit eagerly remove all the accumulations that have estranged him from his God and embrace the gospel with such a contrition of soul that the greatest pleasure of his life will now be to get as close by the side of his Master as he possibly can. Should he at any time discover that barriers are again accumulating he would, with expressive sorrow, do all in his power to remove the last stain. It is noticeable in the lives of such that they do not anxiously enlist the assistance of others when they discover barriers rising between them and their neighbor; but single handed, and alone, as far as humanity is concerned, they work assiduously, early and late, to do it all themselves. When completed, how happy and expressive of joy is their beaming countenance, which is full and overflowing at every look with godly repentance. They ask not that others make apologies or come half way; they have no apparent thought for "What will my brother do?" The work is a pleasure to them and they are willing to do it all alone. Thus their soul enlarges day by day. From their countenance beams forth every assurance that the soul within would not harbor a thought, or say a word, much less perform a deed that would require an after act of repentance.

To those who have obeyed the gospel in maturity of life it might seem that the meditations of our foreparents, when cast out of the Garden of Eden, were those of continual sorrow, considering the magnitude of the sin committed; but that was their first and only sin, up to that time. Whereas, by retrospective view of your own life you may discover wherein you have committed many, some of which may be of such a depth that all your life spent in sackcloth and ashes of repentance could not atone for such and restore to happiness those affected. Then how watchfully, soberly, and prayerfully ought we to guard our every day's diary to the end that no unkindness may mar the peace or bring a shadow of sorrow across the life of a fellow-traveler to the eternal bar where the books shall be opened.

The great Master of men, who so thoroughly understood the principles of the gospel that he had one less to comply with than ordinary men (repentance), taught us that our conversation should be yea, yea, and nay, nay; or in other words we should not do anything that we would be required to repent of.

Many persons seem to think that a nominal belief in the gospel and a baptism in water are the chief essentials to salvation; but with such a birth into the kingdom they make an abject failure of their life as a Saint, because they apparently have not considered one of the most important factors, viz, repentance. Without it, Simon Magus was said to have "neither part nor lot in the matter."

One of the great principles or factors of John the Baptist's preaching was to turn the people from the cold, soulless formality of their religions, to the true knowledge of their God. To do this he was required to preach repentance, or a turning from the evil of their ways to a practical demonstration of the inherent principles of man, uprightness (Ecclesiastes 7:29). After Christ had demonstrated the possibility and practicability of a life that needed not to be repented of, he called about him his apostles, and with the solemnity of a last parting and final commission to those to whom he was entrusting the welfare of his work on earth, he told them to tarry until they received the true spirit of repentance. Some of them were apparently greatly in need of it. As they took a retrospect of their life, as they followed him "afar off" during his three and a half years, they recalled with sorrow the many times he had of necessity chastened them for their striving to see who would be the greatest; wanting to call down fire from heaven; sleeping in the garden when their prayers were needed; and then denying him when he was on trial; and last of all deserting the mission field while his body was in the tomb. Well did he say in his last great commission, that "repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem."—Luke 24:47.

Well did the Lord tell us in latter day revelation, "preach nothing but repentance and remission of sins to this generation." Knowing, as he did, the calloused condition of the average soul of man, he saw that one of the most important factors in reaching the benighted soul of humanity was a true education concerning the attributes of God, to lead them to repentance.

How beautiful is the thought that the Lord has given to us a law by which we are to live and educate our children as they attain to years of accountability, and by observance of which their childhood lives may be kept so pure and undefiled that when they attain to baptismal years, their soul is so untarnished that our human abilities can scarce perceive wherein is the weight of the term repentance when applied to them. Then with a continuation of proper parental training, and the guidance of the indwelling Holy Spirit, we stand in admiration, and gaze with unspeakable pride on the unfolding of that pure bud of unsullied manhood or womanhood that God has "made upright." In such lives, there is little room for the principle called repentance.

With the growing up of an army of young men and women of such characters in Zion and her stakes and outlying regions, surely the coming of the Lord will be hastened. Not only will the purity of their lives prepare a community for him to come to, but the pure of all nations, will, as magnet attracts steel, be turned toward them, while the obstinately impure will seek society more congenial.

Well may we, as latter day Israel, lift up our heads and rejoice when we contemplate the development of the pure lives of our young as well as delight in the constant, firm, unshaken structures being erected by those of riper years, who have learned to love their neighbors as themselves, and through a comprehensive understanding of the great principle of repentance, have learned to love the God of their creation, and are willing, if need be, to offer even their own lives to bring true repentance to their fellow-travelers to eternity.

May the spirit of repentance "that need not be repented of" work upon the hearts of men until all shall comprehend God, from the least to the greatest.

ARTHUR, ONTARIO.

TOBACCO WEAKENS.

An article on tobacco and its injurious effects may seem to some a trifle superfluous, since very few of the Saints are addicted to its use. But there are some who still cling to this vice, and to them this article is directed. Perhaps the best reason why we should renounce this harmful habit is found in Doctrine and Covenants 86:1, where we are "warned" and "forewarned" that "tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man, but is an herb for bruises, and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill." It is not uncommon to hear men declare that they have used tobacco all their lives and that it has never proved injurious to them. Such logic as this is very fallacious, as we all know who have once used the weed. Ask any physician if tobacco hurts its users and he will tell you that it certainly does, that it weakens the mind, dulls the intellect and senses of smell and taste, and if its use is continued will render one nervous and unfitted to withstand any serious attack of sickness or injury.

Ask the dentist what effect it has upon the teeth and he will tell you that the very hardest teeth nature can produce are not proof against it and would be ruined in time. Ask the athlete if he chews tobacco or makes his records with cigaretted lungs and his reply will be an emphatic "No," and he will further tell you that its use is not permitted in any training camp, or by any trainer of athletes who knows his business.

The writer was amused by a letter in a recent number of the SAINTS' HERALD, in which a brother stated that when a youth he had killed a snake by merely expectorating tobacco juice into its mouth. Tobacco is also used largely to exterminate insects. If, then, it is poisonous enough to kill insects and snakes, it surely can not be very beneficial to human beings.

Its most prominent characteristic is, perhaps, the strong hold which it has upon the minds of its users. Once the habit is allowed to become well formed, it sticks closer than a brother, and it requires a strong will to overcome it. It is sad to contemplate the spectacle of any sane person allowing himself to become so thoroughly mastered by the habit that it is a physical impossibility to overcome it; but such is the case with the majority of its devotees.

In reply to the query "Why don't you quit it?" one often hears such replies as this: "Oh, well, I've tried to quit two or three times, but it was such a struggle that I gave it up," indicating that their will power had become so weakened by its use that they lacked the moral courage to come out winners. The writer was in just such a condition previous to his baptism into the church. Time after time he had thrown away pipes and tobacco, and promised himself he would smoke no more, but just as often as he made this resolution, he broke it. For a few days all would be well, but soon the craving would become unendurable and all attempts ended in ignominious defeat. After baptism, he tried again and was successful, thanks to the strength received through the imposition of hands. If those of the Saints who are addicted to this habit would go to God for the strength they lack and then make a determined effort, the writer is confident that they would not fail. And the effort put forth would be well repaid in better health and a keener intellect.

Secure the help and assistance of God and success is assured; or, as Lincoln puts it, "Without it I can do nothing, with it I can not fail." What a grand thing it would be if men were as devoted to their religion as they are to their vices. Imagine if you can, what an impetus it would give to Christianity at large, were all the male members of the churches to renounce tobacco and give to the church the time, money, and devotion now spent in its consumption.

Nearly all users of tobacco claim that there is nothing of a sinful nature involved in its use. This may be true when used in moderation, but not many use it that way. When used in excess, as it usually is, it comes little short of being idolatrous. This is a strong statement, but one that is fully borne out by facts. When men have a greater attachment for their vices than they have for God, it is idolatry pure and simple. How many tobacco users think of God the first thing in the morning and the last at night, as they do of their beloved pipe or cigar? How many feel seriously inconvenienced when separated from God as they do when deprived of their tobacco? Very few.

Perhaps the most pernicious result of the general use of tobacco is the bad example it sets before the young. When a boy has been accustomed to seeing his father, brothers, and other male relatives spend their spare time in industriously polluting the atmosphere with tobacco smoke and the aroma of ill smelling pipes, it can not be expected that he will not do likewise when he is older. Those fathers should blame no one but themselves when they catch their sons smoking cigarettes. It is the ambition of many a small boy to be a man like his papa, and if it so happens that papa's main occupation about the house is the conversion of tobacco into smoke, the boy naturally receives the impression that, to be like him he must learn to smoke. This he proceeds to do, and it is then that tobacco does the deadliest work. Injurious as it is to one fully matured, it is doubly so to a youth of tender years. This is usually the first step on the downward course. It stunts his growth, weakens his mind, and ripens him for other mischief which lands him in the juvenile court or the reform school.

In this connection, a word of caution to our younger Saints might not be out of place. Should it be your desire to develop into a little, flat chested, weak-minded apology for a man, begin at once and smoke all the cigarettes you can get hold of. But if, on the other hand, you aspire to become a tall, broad shouldered, full chested man, clean minded and respected by all, avoid tobacco as you would poison.

Do not get the idea that to be manly it is necessary to smoke, for the habit is more an indication of weakness than of manliness. The writer was surprised a short time ago when on entering one of the churches in this place he was handed an invitation to attend a supper and entertainment to be held in the parish house, and also to bring your own smoking materials. What an edifying spectacle it is to see churches which call themselves Christian, endeavoring to draw men into the kingdom by pandering to their petty vices and their appetites! When one considers that smoking is prohibited in railroad stations, dance halls, opera houses, and even in jails, it is hardly to the credit of any church to be found encouraging it. Far more christianlike would it be were they to take the stand of the Latter Day Saints that tobacco "is not good for man, but is an herb for bruises, and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill."

THAT MUTILATED LAW.

Under the above caption, an editorial appeared in the Evening and Morning Star for February, 1910, as published at Independence, Missouri, by the Church of Christ, or "Hedrickites," of which J. R. Haldeman, Richard Hill, and George P. Frisbey, were at that time the Board of Publication, with Mr. J. R. Haldeman as editor. Be it remembered that those three men were members of a joint council that met in 1900, and passed two resolutions, as may be seen on page 182 of Minutes of General Conference for that year, as follows: "Resolved, That we indorse the revelations contained in the 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants"; also, "that we indorse the articles on Marriage and Of Government and Laws in General, in 1835 edition of Doctrine and Covenants."

GRANVILLE HEDRICK ON THE DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS.

Those two resolutions are in harmony with the true position of the so-called Church of Christ, or Hedrickites, and also the testimony of its founder, Mr. Granville Hedrick, as may be seen in the Truth Teller, for July, 1864, on page 9, which says:

The first edition of the Doctrine and Covenants [1835] contains the revelations and commandments to the Church of Christ, that was organized upon the foundations of both the Bible and the Book of Mormon. It contains the revelations to the church as far as has been published; also some of their proceedings during the first four years of the church. This Book of Covenants was received and acknowledged by all the leading authorities of the church, in a general assembly at Kirtland, Ohio, in the year 1835, as found on page 255 of the first edition. In this first Book of Doctrine and Covenants, section 43, paragraph 14, and the two first elders were commanded to build up the church upon the foundation of both the Bible and Book of Mormon ten months before the church was organized; also, ten months after the church was organized they were commanded in the following words: section 13, paragraph 5. "The elders, priests and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel, which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon in the which is the fullness of the gospel. And they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them." Also, in section 13, paragraph 16, which says, "Thou shalt take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee in my scriptures for a law, to be my law, to govern my church: and he that doth according to these things shall be saved: and he that doeth them not shall be damned if he continues." See section 55, paragraph 3; also section 61, paragraph 1.

From the foregoing quotations it appears that this Book of Doctrine and Covenants [1835 edition] forms one of those connecting links for both the Bible and Book of Mormon to be taken together. Here, then, is presented these three books upon which is based the great platform, of all true Mormon faith, upon which all true latter day Saints stand, and from which all who have fallen into darkness have strayed. Thus far has been presented a general statement of principles founded in facts, as contained in the standard works of mormon faith, which complete and infallible position for the faith and hope for the Latter Day Saints and true followers of Christ, according to the faith and doctrine of this new and everlasting covenant.—Truth Teller, July, 1864.

And then in the March issue of the Evening and Morning Star, in an editorial, the editor refers to the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as containing a garbled counterfeit on the revelation under consideration, the very one Mr. Hedrick quotes from and calls it an infallible position, the connecting link between the Bible and Book of Mormon, a standard work, etc. Just how the editor of the Star can be consistent or reconcile those two positions is not as yet made plain. Seemingly from the contention of the Star, the great and mooted question is based on section 42, paragraph 8, at least so far as I have noticed. So anxious are they to make a case, that they jump to conclusions by giving a grasshopper exegesis of this section 42, and presume their contention proven. - For instance, in the February issue of the Star, under the heading of "A mutilated law," the editor says, "In over sixty places, changes have been made, ranging from a single word, to sentences, and in some instances whole paragraphs added"; and on page four of that issue, he gives four paragraphs and numbers them 20, 21, 22, and 23, as not appearing in the original, (meaning Book of Commandments), and compares Book of Commandments, chapter 44, with Book of Doctrine and Covenants, section 42.

We have thought for some time that men who set themselves up as critics on revelation should be careful and not go on record upon a mere presumption; perhaps thinking that inasmuch as the Book of Commandments is a rare book there will not likely be any chance of calling their position in question. If the editor had been more careful, he would have found without much effort, if the thing desired was truth, that chapter 44, and chapter 47, in the Book of Commandments are one Section in Book of Doctrine and Covenants 42, and that all four of those paragraphs that the editor of the Star charges as having been added, are in the Book of Commandments, chapter 47, complete. It is true that the committee added some words to correct the reading of them and make them harmonize with the original manuscript; for example, in the Book of Commandments, 47: 5 says, "If any man commit adultery he shall"; while the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, 42: 22, says: "If any man or woman commit adultery, he, or she shall." Book of Commandments 47: 9: "If any man shall rob, he shall be delivered up to the law"; Book of Covenants, "If any man or woman shall rob, he or she shall be delivered up to the law of the land." Book of Commandments 47: 10, 11: "If he shall lie, he shall be delivered unto the law"; Doctrine and Covenants: "If he or she shall lie, he or she shall be delivered up unto the law of the land." Book of Commandments, "If he shall steal, he shall be delivered up to the law." Doctrine and Covenants, "If he or she shall steal, he or she shall be delivered up unto the law of the land." Book of Commandments, "If he do any manner of iniquity, he shall be delivered up unto the law, even that of God." Book of Doctrine and Covenants, "If he or she do any manner of iniquity, he or she, shall be delivered up unto the law even that of God."

"HEDRICKITES" UNDERMINE THEIR OWN STRUCTURE.

This is a sample of the added words all through this section. No wonder Mr. Hedrick never even referred to the Book of Commandments, but held to the Doctrine and Covenants, as an infallible position, as he calls it.

Chapters 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21, in the Book of Commandments are placed together in Doctrine and Covenants as one section (21) by the committee Joseph and Oliver; and because of this the Star says it is a "mutilated law," a garbled counterfeit. Another writer says it is shamefully tortured; another calls it a damnable fraud. I wish it remembered that Joseph Smith received those revelations, and that Oliver Cowdery wrote them; the first called of God, and ordained unto this power, and the second appointed by revelation to write them, (see Doctrine and Covenants 9:2); and to question the honesty of either of those two men, or their integrity, is to question the Book of Mormon. No man can be consistent in his faith in the Book of Mormon and disregard the truthfulness of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. For instance, the "Hedrickites" believe Joseph Smith was a true prophet up to February, 1834, and then they question his revelations and work as far back as 1829, charging him with receiving false revelation to go to Canada to sell the copyright of the Book of Mormon, and all this on the bare assertion of one man. Where is the consistency of their faith? Who is able to separate the divinity of the work, or the writing of Paul from himself as an apostle? Who is able to accept of the Book of Mormon, and at the same time reject the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and say that Joseph Smith was a false prophet and Oliver Cowdery a dishonest man?

Again, we say if Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were loose minded men and deceivers, false and corrupt, as charged, where is the consistency in claiming priesthood within the realm of their work?

If any man to-day has authority, it must come through them as they received it from the angel. If there is a particle of authority within the pale of "Hedrickism," then it must be traced back through Joseph and Oliver to the angel. For instance, if the contention of "Hedrickism," is true, that Joseph Smith fell as a prophet of God in February, 1834, and that as a result the church went into sin and delusion, and darkness, then eight years after this awful apostasy, in 1842, a minister of that church (sent out by a fallen prophet, representing a corrupted church), by the name of Harvey Green, baptized Mr. Granville Hedrick into that church, I ask, can it be possible that his baptism is valid and of force, providing their contention is true?

Again, if Joseph Smith fell as a prophet of God in February, 1834, and the church departed from God, at that time, then four years after that awful event, in 1838, John E. Page was ordained an apostle, remained with this fallen prophet until he was killed, then went with J. J. Strang, and served in that same capacity with him until 1856, and as I am informed entered into polygamy, and in 1863 ordained Granville Hedrick as a prophet, seer, and revelator, and also ordained David Judah, Adna Haldeman, and Jedediah Owen as apostles; then, if their contention be true, where is their authority to baptize and administer in the things of God? Can we "gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles"? Can a stream rise higher than its fountain? Can a corrupt church bring forth and establish the true church of Christ? Can that which is not the church of God, build up the true Church of Christ? Nay, nay; make the root holy, and the tree will be holy; or best of all, drop the silly contention.

HIGH PRIESTS KNOWN OF, FEBRUARY, 1831.

Again the editor of the Star becomes very acute in his criticism of a "mutilated law." In the June issue of the Star, he says on page 4, that when the revelation on consecration was given, in February, 1831, there were no high priests known of in the church, and it was not until June, 1831, that high priests made their appearance; so, he thinks, the revelation was changed to include a new class of officers, and it was brought down to date with a vengeance. Well, well, the editor had evidently forgotten, if he ever knew, that the Book of Mormon and the Bible are the very foundation of the church of the Latter Day Saints; that those two books contain divine revelations upon which this church is builded and stands to-day; and that the office of high priest is amply provided for in both the Book of Mormon and the Bible. The latter book is profuse with instruction on this point. Hebrews 5: 1, 2, 4: "For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins: who can have compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way; for that he himself also is compassed with infirmity. . . . And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron."

That the honor referred to here is the honor of a high priest's office is clear. See Hebrews 3:1: "Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the apostle and high priest of our profession, Christ Jesus." This heavenly calling of which they were made partakers, and their profession were that of a high priest's office or order. That there was an order of high priests is very clear, in Hebrews 5:6, 10: "Thou art a priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec. . . . Called of God an high priest after the order of Melchisedec." Also see Hebrews 7:11, 17; each and all certifying that there was an order of high priests in the church of Jesus Christ.

If possible, it is made more clear in the Book of Mormon, page 193, small edition: "They were brought before the priests, and delivered up unto the priests by the teachers; and the priests brought them before Alma, who was the high priest. Now king Mosiah has given Alma the authority over the church." On page 159, we learn that Mosiah was a prophet, seer, and revelator. On page 213, we read that Alma "had been consecrated the high priest over the people of the church, by the hand of his father Alma." Now see on page 204 that Alma "was appointed to be the first chief judge; he being also the high priest; his father having conferred the office upon him, and had given him the charge concerning all the affairs of the church." Then on page 215, "I, Alma, having been consecrated by my father Alma, to be a high priest over the church of God."

Here we have not only the order of high priest established, but also the genealogy and lineage fixed and clear. Now read page 225 that Alma "began to teach the people in the land of Melek, according to the holy order of God by which he had been called"; and the people said: "We know that thou art high priest over the church that thou hast established in many parts of the land." Now see page 284. And they brought Korihor before Ammon, "who was a high priest over that people," and Ammon cast him out of the land. Then he, Korihor, came to the land of Gideon, and he was brought before the high priest of that land, whose name was Gideonah, and when this high priest saw the hardness of the heart of Korihor, he sent him to the land of Zarahemla unto Alma the chief judge of all the land. Again see pages 325, 326: "Notwithstanding the preaching of Helaman and his brethren; yea, notwithstanding their exceeding great care over the church, for they were high priests over the church."

Indeed both the Bible and Book of Mormon are very clear and emphatic. But this should be sufficient, as Mr. Hedrick says those books are the sure foundation of the true church of the Saints; if so, then is not the contention of the Star an inconsistent one? We think so; for who can be consistent and believe in a high priesthood without any order of high priests.

WHAT NAME TO BE KNOWN BY.

Again our friend, The Star, and its representatives claim that Joseph and Oliver were fallen prophets when they changed the name of the church, (as they say), from that of the Church of Christ to that of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and in this charge they become very precise and with seeming confidence point to the Book of Mormon, page 471, small edition, where it says:

Lord, we will that thou wouldst tell us the name whereby we shall call this church; for there are disputations among the people concerning this matter. And the Lord said unto them, Verily, verily I say unto you, why is it that the people should murmur and dispute because of this thing? Have they not read the scriptures, which say, Ye must take upon you the name of Christ, which is my name? for by this name shall ye be called at the last day; . . . therefore ye shall call the church in my name; . . . For if a church be called in Moses' name, then it be Moses' church; or if it be called in the name of a man, then it be the church of a man; but if it be called in my name, then it is my church, if it so be that they are built upon my gospel."

We agree with the Star in those statements, but we disagree as to what is the name of Christ.

Now what is the name of Christ? In Luke 1:31 the angel directs Mary to "call his name Jesus." Philippians 2:10, 11: "That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord." Again, Acts 2:36: "That God hath made that same Jesus, . . . both Lord and Christ." 1 Corinthians 12:3: "That no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost" (or say that he knows). Thus we learn clearly that the name of the Christ is Jesus. Then the true title must be the Church of Jesus Christ, and there is no other name given under heaven or among men whereby we can be saved, but the name of Jesus Christ.

As further evidence from another of the three standard books of the church, we wish to quote the testimony of the prophets, the angel of God, and the Savior himself, as found in the Book of Mormon. "According to the words of the prophets, and also the word of the angel of God, his name shall be Jesus Christ, the Son of God."—2 Nephi 11:36, authorized edition. "And it came to pass that he [Jesus Christ] stretched forth his hand, and spake unto the people, saying, Behold I am Jesus Christ, of whom the prophets testified should come into the world."—Nephi 5: 11, authorized edition.

As corroborative of the above records, we introduce the statement of the Savior as found in the Doctrine and Covenants 16: 4 (current edition):

Take upon you the name of Christ, and speak the truth in soberness, and as many as repent, and are baptized in my name, which is Jesus Christ, and endure to the end, the same shall be saved. Behold, Jesus Christ is the name given of the Father, and there is no other name given whereby man can be saved; wherefore, all men must take upon them the name which is given of the Father, for in that name shall they be called at the last day; wherefore, if they know not the name by which they are called, they can not have place in the kingdom of my Father.

It will be noticed that this name (Jesus Christ) is "given of the Father," and is the name given "whereby man can be saved." Thus we see, the prophets, the angel, Jesus Christ, and the Father, all testify that this is "the name of Christ." This quotation is also found in the 1835 edition of the Book of Covenants, 43: 4; and is given in the same language in the Book of Commandments 15: 23-26. From the contention of our friends as voiced in The Evening and Morning Star, this last quotation ought to be sufficient to show the futility of their argument as stated in The Evening and Morning Star, which contention is tantamount to saying that neither the Father, Son, nor the prophets who prophesied of him, knew his name, and that it was left to the wisdom of these wise men to discover it.

In the name of Jesus Christ we bless the bread and wine; in that name we baptize; in that name we call this church; in that name we do all things in the house of God; in his name we preach; in his name we pray; but the Star rejects the name of Jesus as a title of the church, therefore, according to the Book of Mormon Jesus will not receive it as his church, at his coming. The Star is even out of harmony with Mr. Hedrick, the founder of the church which it professes to represent. I have before me the Truth Teller, edited by Mr. Hedrick, volume 1, and on the title page we have this, "The Truth Teller will advocate the primitive organization of the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which was organized on the 6th day of April, 1830."

Over the first revelation in 1835 edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, we have this heading, "The covenants and commandments of the Lord to his servants of the Church of Latter Day Saints," and Mr. Hedrick indorses this book as the infallible position of all true followers of Christ, and calls it the connecting link between the Bible and Book of Mormon; but the Star calls Joseph Smith a false prophet, the book a counterfeit, in harmony with E. Peterson, who calls it a damnable fraud, and Mr. R. E. Grant, who says, "A most shamefully tortured book." So we think the Star and its editor are inconsistent with their own position.

THE BOOK OF COMMANDMENTS.

Again, in this February issue of the Star, for 1910, this acute critic prints the 44th chapter of the Book of Commandments in one column, and the 42d section of Doctrine and Covenants in another, and tries to show a difference by way of contrast. If he wished to be fair, he should have printed the 47th chapter of the Book of Commandments in connection with the 44th. Well, perhaps he did not know, but likes to work at his trade.

Regarding those references he makes to Millennial Star, volume 14, pp. 113, 114, 359, 449, concerning the Book of Commandments, in the March issue of the Star, we wish to point out that each and every one refers to the Book of Commandments as it existed in manuscript form only, and not as a book, as he implies; for in this manuscript form it was dedicated by prayer. In this form the preface was received; and in this form it was attached, and that too, while it was still in Kirtland. The title of this manuscript was the Book of Commandments. In this form it was given into the hands of Oliver Cowdery and John Whitmer to bring to Independence, Missouri. This book in this form evidently contained all of the revelations to govern the church, up to and including those received at the time of their departure, about the middle of November, 1831.

Joseph arrived at Independence, April, 1832, and on the first of May, an order for three thousand copies was given. In June, the first issue of the Evening and Morning Star was printed; and on about the first of July, 1832, Joseph received the first copy, after his arrival at Kirtland, Ohio. Of this copy, the Evening and Morning Star, he says: "which was a joyous treat to the Saints. Delightful indeed was it to contemplate that the little band of brethren had become so large and grown so strong in so short a space as to be able to issue a paper of their own, which contained not only some of the revelations, but other information also."—Church History, vol. 1, p. 251.

I refer to this to show that some of the commandments were printed in the paper called the Evening and Morning Star, at Independence, Missouri, perhaps only in a fragmentary manner. Chapter 24 of the Book of Commandments began at paragraph 5, and chapter 40, as also 44 of the Book of Commandments appeared in this paper. The present Star at Independence has Joseph in Kirtland, Ohio, on June 25, 1833, correcting the Book of Commandments in only four places of just four words: "For corruptible, put corrupted, in 40th chapter, 10th verse, and in 14th verse, instead of respecter to persons, put respector of persons, and in the 21st verse instead of respector to persons, put respector of persons. In the 44th chapter and 12th verse, instead of hands put heads, just those three words in four places."

Now is it reasonable to accept the Star's position, that it was the Book of Commandments in a printed book form, which was being checked, as he calls it, when the same words applied in the same identical manner as is here referred to, occur in the preface of the Book of Commandments, 6th paragraph and 5th line, and also appear in the Star the same? Then if Joseph corrected the Book of Commandments as a printed book, as is said by the Star, why was not the preface corrected, where it says, "respector to persons." Is it not more reasonable to believe he was checking the commandments as they appeared in the paper? To make his case good, the editor of the Star puts words in Joseph's mouth and also into the historical record, when he says that "Joseph Smith, the man through whom the contents of the Book of Commandments was received, after examining the book could find but four errors in it." He then proceeds with an argument, and of course a conclusion, when the term "book" is not used by Joseph, nor does the history use it; but he must make his case good at any cost, it seems. And again, there are only three of the commandments referred to in this correction, and those three appear in the paper published by W. W. Phelps.

This acute critic, in the Star for March, 1910, has Joseph correcting the printed Book of Commandments on June 25, 1833, while at Kirtland, Ohio, and then shows that the printed Book of Commandments were ordered to be sent from Independence, Missouri, to Kirtland, Ohio, as soon after as July 2, 1833. Perhaps he can explain this enormity.

WORK ON THE BOOK COMES TO AN END.

We notice that on June 25, 1833, Joseph writes to W. W. Phelps that it is not necessary to bind the Book of Commandments, and gives three reasons; first, "it will be sold well without binding"; second, "there is no bookbinder to be had," and third, "nor are there materials to be had." Either is sufficient to show the book was not bound as a printed book. (See Millennial Star, volume 14, page 449.) So we learn that the committee, consisting of Oliver Cowdery, W. W. Phelps, and John Whitmer, began their work, as instructed, and just how far they progressed we are unable to learn, but we are informed, Church History, volume 1, page 353, that on July 20, 1833, "there lay the printing office a heap of ruins; Elder Phelps' furniture strewed over the garden as common plunder; the revelations, book work, papers, and press in the hands of the mob as the booty of highway robbers."

Thus we learn that the efforts of the committee were frustrated and their work destroyed. It is clear that some work was done on the issue, but never completed, as the press was destroyed, while the work was being done. The most of them were destroyed by the mob, yet some were preserved by individuals who picked up the scattered sheets and a few copies of the unfinished work are still in existence, as is described in the Star by a writer in the December issue for 1909, where he says, "I now have in my possession a copy of that book lying on my table before me, and as far as I can see it is full and complete of itself and contains 133 pages." Permit me to say that as I write, I have lying on my table before me a copy, that as far as I can see is full and complete of itself, and contains one hundred and sixty pages;—quite a difference, indeed, of only twenty-seven pages.

THE BOOK OF DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS.

After the destruction of the printing office at Independence, Missouri, Joseph wrote W. W. Phelps to come to Kirtland, Ohio, where he arrived on December 1, 1833. Oliver Cowdery was sent to Cincinnati, Ohio, to purchase another printing press, and during the next few months another committee was appointed, consisting of two of the first committee, and with Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, F. G. Williams added. They were instructed by the high council to arrange the items of the doctrine of Jesus Christ for the government of the church, with the provision that those items be taken from the Bible and the Book of Mormon. To this committee was entrusted the duty of arranging and publishing the Book of Covenants. They completed their work, and on the 17th of August following it was presented to the General Assembly and attested by all the leading authorities of the church, as also by the entire first committee of Oliver Cowdery, W. W. Phelps, John Whitmer, each bearing testimony that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants was true. That is, true to the original manuscript of the Book of Commandments; for this Book of Doctrine and Covenants contains all that is claimed was in the Book of Commandments, which consists of the first sixty-four sections and part of the sixty-fifth. But the Star writer says that all of those men were fallen prophets when they arranged the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. Is it not strange that the prophet and seer of the so-called Church of Christ (Hedrickites), and also the Board of Publication, and that acute critic, the editor of the Star, by two resolutions in 1900 indorse that Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and Mr. Hedrick entitles it the connecting link between the Bible and Book of Mormon and calls it an infallible position.

WHY STRAIN AT A GNAT AND SWALLOW A CAMEL?

So, we repeat, that it is our opinion that men who set themselves up as critics on divine revelation should be very careful and consistent. Just think of a critic of this kind who criticises the Book of Doctrine and Covenants; section 42, paragraph 8, on the word of, and condemns the book as a garbled counterfeit, and then indorses that revelation in the Truth Teller for July, 1864. We will only quote one paragraph, from page 4. Be it remembered, that this revelation was given April 24, 1864, and was indorsed by the four apostles of the so-called Church of Christ, as it came through Mr. Granville Hedrick, the prophet, seer, and revelator for said church, as follows:

Hear, now, O ye my people of my church—take counsel together that you may escape the awful calamity of war and famine which shall fall upon this people of the Northern States, beginning in the year 1871, at which time the sword shall fall heavily upon the people, and famine shall quickly follow, and thus the sword continue to be drawn, and by bloodshed shall this nation war and contend until they are overthrown and their liberties taken away from them, which shall terminate in the year 1878, and thus anarchy and destruction shall reign throughout the dominions of the wicked.

Anyone can see plainly that this whole paragraph falls of its own weight. Not a single statement of it is true. The whole matter referred to never occurred. Notice, it was to come upon the Northern States; the nation was to lose its liberties. "Oh," say they, "Louisiana was thrown out in the political contest between Tilden and Hayes." Yes, that is true; but Louisiana is a Southern State. Where was the war between the years of 1871 and 1878? "Oh," they say, "it was the war between General Custer and the Indians." Well, well, that occurred out in the Territories. This says it will come upon the Northern States. Where was the bloodshed and the famine that should continue and terminate in the year 1878, until this nation should be overthrown and her liberties taken away? What shall we say of a man who accepts this, and then criticises those divine revelations in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants because of a supposed change of words such as, of for to; has for hast; they for theirs, etc. Surely the legs of a cripple are not equal.

ELDER W. H. KELLEY.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

"The function of tragic art, as stated by Aristotle and confirmed by the experience of ages, is to excite pity and terror," writes William Winter in the current issue of Harpers's Weekly. "But there is a wide difference between the portrayal of tragic experience and the portrayal of morbid anatomy and physical disease. The practice of showing abhorrent types of character and depraved conditions, particularly on the stage, has been pushed to an insufferably tedious extreme. If the purpose of the arts is not to help mankind—to advance civilization, to awaken and stimulate the love of beauty, to diffuse gentleness of feeling and refinement of manners, and, while giving pleasure, to make men and women better—then they have no purpose that is worthy of being considered."

Of General Interest

A PHYSICIAN'S VIEW OF CHRIST'S MIRACLES.

[This article, accompanied by the following editorial note, appeared in the Sunday School Times of March 12, 1910: "Doctor Kelley is recognized as being, in his special branch, the foremost physician and surgeon in America. In a personal note to the editor he says: 'My whole attitude toward the Bible is that of the simple faith of my grandfathers, and any other side that is a critical means of investigation has never appealed to me in the least.' It is interesting to note, among other professional and scientific items in Doctor Kelley's life and work, that he has been honored by honorary or other membership in professional and scientific societies in America, England, Scotland, Ireland, Italy, Germany, France, and Austria."]

What a humdrum, wearisome routine our lives would become if we had no other inspiration than that which we call science! Man would then be but a sort of machine, set going within a greater machine, destined to drag his way through the dull routine of this mortal existence until the dreadful final struggle sets his tortured molecules free to rest awhile in the bosom of the earth, until they are perchance incorporated in another organism, again to begin the monotonous round of an organic life. But in the midst of this colorless, uninspired life, here are the miracles of Christ and his matchless personality, marvels such as man never dared dream of, more wonderful than all the fairy tales of childhood come true, inspiring hopes of infinite glories laid hold of here on earth, and inconceivable glories yet to be revealed.

When John the Baptist, not knowing the interval which would separate Christ's first coming in humiliation to bear our sins from his second coming in glory, was distressed and in doubt because of his imprisonment, and sent to him to ask, "Art thou he that cometh, or look we for another?" he received the one effective answer, far more convincing than a categorical "yes" or "no":

"Go and tell John the things which ye hear and see: the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, and the dead are raised up, and the poor have good tidings preached to them. And blessed is he, whosoever shall find no occasion of stumbling in me."

The miracles have ever remained the unassailable witness to the deity which he claimed for himself. For this reason it has been in the past and will continue in the future to be the effort of all who are opposed to his being accepted as the Christ, the Son of the living God, to discredit and break down the authority of the miracles.

Blot out all the miracles, and with them all the precious record of the humility and love and compassion of Christ, and the most important lessons as to faith and his power as he walked on earth would be obliterated. We should then have only his words without his works, but no revelation of the new, tender, and close relationship between God and man, as was shown by his thus bearing our infirmities and taking our sicknesses upon him.

The miracles of Christ in the Bible are called "signs" because, like finger-posts, they point to some greater fact beyond them; namely, that the Son of God is indeed come down to dwell among men (Immanuel, God with us). They are called "powers," because the power of God is manifested in saving man from bearing the consequences of sin, from demon-possession, from disease, and from death; also, because the power of the Creator was present to do with his creatures—the water made wine, the sea calmed, the walking on the sea, the fish supplying the piece of money—as he would. They are "prodigies," because all the people said, "We never saw it on this wise before." So strong in character are the miracles that they are the very bulwark of his doctrine, and so wonderful is his doctrine that then as now it upholds the miracles.

Some object to miracles as setting aside the immutable laws of nature. That is a valid objection to all man made miracles, but the objector has forgotten that here we have to do with God, who made all things, in whom "all things consist," and who upholds "all things by the word of his power." Not, I say, the anthropomorphic god imagined by the scientist, but the God of the Christian revealed in the Bible. If I am dealing with God, it is futile for me to inquire how he acts. He surely can check the sun in his course without disrupting nature, as easily as a child can stop a ball without producing a cataclysm.

So many and so wonderful were the miracles, that no enemy ever rose up in his lifetime to contradict them; driven to bay, they tried to explain them blasphemously, saying that Satan was casting out Satan. It is a greater mistake still to imagine that the miracles can be detached from their setting in the Gospels and considered apart. Do as I have done, take a fine pen and black ink and underline everything miraculous in the Gospels, and then turn the pages over rapidly and see how saturated they are with miracles. Such a little study as the one suggested also strikingly shows this fact, that, as the Gospels themselves manifestly have each a different purpose, a different aspect of Christ's life and work to set before us, so often the same miracles are differently grouped and used as they subserve this main purpose. The Christian discovers that the whole atmosphere of the Gospels is that of the miraculous.

Glance for a moment at the use of the miracles in Matthew's gospel; this, as is evidenced in the very first verse, is the gospel of God's promised King sent down to earth in due time to rule. His Magna Charta is found in chapters 5, 6, 7; such a declaration of principles as earth had never heard before, has never heard seriously proposed since, and has never attempted to follow.

In the first miracle in Matthew, Christ touched every member of the human race, as he put forth his hand and touched the leper, saying, "I will; be thou clean." Note the significance of the command, "See thou tell no man; but go thy way, show thyself to the priest, and offer the gift that Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them." What a sign! A leper cleansed! The King was surely among them, duly presenting himself first to the rulers of the people who ought to have been ready to receive him.

Look again at the book of Mark, the gospel of Christ the servant of God, as announced in chapter 1, verse 1: "The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God." Here we have not the measured service of a hired servant, but the immeasurable, loving service of a son rendered in grace. Here also we plunge in medias res; all is action. There is not a chapter from one to eleven which does not record one or more miracles.

The first miracle here is a type of the world without God, gravitating into a mire of uncleanness; even that which professes to be religion is defiled.

The miracles became touchstones whereby the godlessness of those who had before appeared most righteous is laid bare. This is evident in the healing of the man with the withered hand, in the third chapter, where the hardness of their hearts is revealed, and the religious Pharisees make common cause with the worldly Herodians, that they may compass his destruction, Unclean spirits and devils, self-righteous formalists and godless men, are the forces Jesus had to contend against. (Mark 8: 13.)

The last two miracles are strikingly typical. On his way up to Jerusalem, Jesus cures the blindness of Bartimeus, who cries after him, "Jesus, thou son of David, have mercy on me."

What a picture for the nation, all blind, and among them the Son of God whom they knew not, able and willing to cure their blindness. Then follows the miracle of the fig tree (chapter 11),—leaves, but no fruit, profession only.

Then, as the dignity of the subject demands, Jesus approaches that highest act of fidelity of a son rendering perfect service, faithfulness even unto death. A hush falls over the Gospel, and in the succeeding chapters there are no more miracles related, until the great miracle, which thus stands preeminent alone—his death and his resurrection.

In John's Gospel the word sign is used almost exclusively (seventeen times), as Trench says, as "a token and indication of the near presence and working of God. In this word the ethical end and purpose of the miracles comes out the most prominently, as in "wonder the least."

In John's Gospel Christ's deity is prominent throughout. We might perhaps deny his deity had we only the Gospel of the Kingdom (Matthew), the Gospel of Service (Mark), and the Gospel of His Humanity (Luke), but never with this Gospel in hand, and that is the reason Satan so persistently attacks the authenticity of the Fourth Gospel.

The miracle of the cure of the impotent man, thirty-eight years in his infirmity, at the Pool of Bethesda on the Sabbath day, brought out the assertion of Jesus' sonship and equality with God, and from this flows the marvelous discourse touching the witnesses to his deity, among which he cites his works.

The miracle in the sixth chapter, the feeding of the five thousand near Passover time up in the mountain, plainly told the people that a greater than Moses was among them. The miracle of the loaves and fishes has been taken by Christians as the type of Christ now in heaven, and feeding his people day by day with their supersubstantial bread.

The healing of the man born blind teaches the nation that the power of God is with them to heal, and that the humblest may come to him for blessing, for light for the body and for light of the Spirit, while the greatest among them, if they are self-sufficient, are lost.

Three times Jesus raised the dead: once the daughter of Jairus, who had just died; then the son of the widow of Nain, as he was being carried out to his burial; and lastly Lazarus, dead four days and passed into corruption. This greatest of all signs was done in his own power and name as with a mighty voice he cried, "Lazarus, come forth." It has been well said that if Jesus had not mentioned Lazarus by name, all the graves of earth would have given up their dead in response to that voice.

The climax of all miracles is Christ's descent into hell, his taking captivity captive, his bursting the chains of death, and his resurrection and ascension. These are the great events toward which all the Gospels move with majestic march; without them there can be no gospel. The thrill that is felt at the very outset as Christ emerges from the waters of baptism, anointed by the Spirit, and as he meets our great enemy as he fasts in the wilderness, and as he then moves among men doing all his countless and marvelous miracles, is due to the fact that he is going to a predetermined end to accomplish the mightiest work of time or eternity.

Why have we no miracles to-day?—I do not know. Can not even say that there are none, but I believe that if there are, they must be for the individual who turns and asks his Father for his grace, but makes no public announcement. Satan has been busy with bastard miracles throughout the centuries that have passed, but they do not appeal to the intellect and to the heart as do the real ones in the Gospels.

Many of those who believe in these modern, so-called miracles are, I find, wrapped up in their miserable bodies, and their spiritual vision often does not seem to get much above their stomachs. The true Christian, when ill, asks God to cure him, and, whether visible means have or have not been used, he thanks his Father for the result, and is equally sure that it is of his peculiar grace he is permitted to live and to continue to serve him.

I do not surely know whether demon possession is still to be found in China and India and Africa, but I am prepared to believe it. I should not be at all surprised if a wiser age would differentiate many of our cases of insanity in this way.

The greatest possible miracle to the Christian is the wonderful change effected in the conversion of a soul from the service of Satan and sin to Christ. The greatest miracle to a heathen is the manifestation of the life of Christ in that of his true follower, by which he too is led to say Abba, Father.

"He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father." Modern missions are the fulfillment of this promise.—By Howard A. Kelley, M. D., LL. D., F. R. C. S., in Protestant Magazine, Washington, D. C., for August.

INDIANS AND CIVILIZATION.

In an article in the Outlook upon "The Indian and the moral law," Dr. Charles Eastman, or Ohiyesa, a Sioux Indian, rather disparages the moral advantages of civilization to the red man, as compared with his aboriginal customs. From his presentation of the case one must incline to the belief that these simple traditions were not without their helpful influences, "teaching the rustic moralist" the lesson of right living as far as they could, instructing the feminine members in principles of chastity and virtue, and the men in rugged truth and common honesty, patience, fortitude and moderation, as the stoical character denotes.

But a social order that would answer the demands of a nomadic tribe could not be relied upon to work out its destiny into a larger sphere of moral and intellectual development, where the Indian could take his place beside other races. Doctor Eastman's theory has been at the bottom of similar contentions about man's evolution a long time. It is, moreover, easy to rhapsodize about the Indian, who is naturally an heroic person of simple mind, possessing strong attributes of character, but it is also easy to overdraw his virtues, as is done about every time we attempt to dramatize him, either in story or on the stage. Helen Hunt Jackson's Allesandro is an example in hand.

To say that the Indian should not have been subjected to the temptations accompanying civilization is to refute all argument about his natural strength of character. Or to attempt to prove that he is the victim of civilization and that the world has not been benefited by his loss would be futile. The Indian may not be as care-free in his fancies of semi-savagery, but neither is he any longer a semisavage. Lifted by the power of civilization, the survivor is taking rank with men of the European antecedents. But for the trying forces of civilization, the real worth of the Indian character would not have been known and he would continue to be a purposeless member of society instead of becoming a useful citizen, gradually rising into the full stature of citizenship.—Omaha Bee.

COLTON, CALIFORNIA, March 9, 1911.

Dear Sister Walker: Only those who live alone can know how I prize the church publications. To-day brought me the March number of Autumn Leaves. I was just in the mood for that one of our periodicals. On such a wet, gloomy day as this one feels the need of a little variety, so I hailed it with gladness. The first I settled on to read was "The Ammonite Youths." That being finished I turned back to "The Students' Society." I soon forgot that the day was gloomy. How my heart warmed as I entered into the spirit of those "golden memories." I do enjoy reading the reminiscences of those who have wrought in the light of God's Spirit, whether it is in sawing wood, washing dishes, or whatever it may be, when the doing is to render service to the Lord, as well as to lighten the burdens of the poor; and very acceptable service too, for the work is not likely to stop there. These acts are simply the proofs of the sincere desire to serve. It seems to be our Father's way, that those of his children who would be great, as Jesus counted greatness, must accept opportunities that offer at the lowest round of the ladder. At least he readily helps those who thus serve to climb to greater heights.

Yes, those reviews, the summing up of faith and work in the divine life, whether of individuals or societies, are to the reader both pleasing and profitable. He sees their grand aim, and how through their faith God has wrought with them, without beholding the many obstacles each has had to surmount, and the many trials and discouragements that have beset their path. Those things, having served their respective purposes, are lost sight of, as they should be, like chaff from the wheat and dross from the gold, leaving only the bright and the good.

So much, for the pleasing side and the profitable, is the encouragement held out for others to do likewise; to not be discouraged if the efforts of a few weeks or months do not accomplish what is sought for, especially in the effort to overcome, but trust in God, doing each day what we can, keeping in view the determination to ultimately accomplish, as is expressed by the brother in the letter Sister Resseguie included, viz, "If in the course of a lifetime I shall have overcome the weaknesses of the flesh, I shall have done well."

Yes, done well indeed, for "He that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God and he shall be my son," saith the Master. Oh, the beauty of this latter day work! The glorious experiences that have been had in it! How blessed are the people to whom God will open the windows of heaven and let his light shine down upon them in types to edify and comfort! Are we thankful as we should be for such blessings?

Requests for Prayer.

Sr. Mary R. Mefferd, of Woodbine, Iowa, desires the prayers of the sisters of the union that she may be healed of a cancer in her stomach, if it be the Lord's will.

Bro. J. C. Powell, of Riverside, California, 105 Colton avenue, writes: I will try and let the Saints know of my sad misfortune which happened to me on September 24, 1910, while working for the Riverside Portland Cement Company as powder man. I had not been at work long in the early morning when a blast went off. No one knows how or where it came from.

I was so badly hurt I was taken to the Riverside Hospital, and operated on. My family was sent for. I was unconscious and remained so for four days, when I regained consciousness. To my sorrow and that of my family, I was blind. I was hurt about eight o'clock in the morning and at nine in the evening the hospital matron sent for my family. I was then thought to be dying. But God was good and spared me for some cause, I know not what; but hope I will soon be able to see, so I can work for him in the great cause.

My left eye was entirely blown out, but the doctors have hope for the right eye. My prayer is night and day for my eye. I was administered to and since that I have never suffered at any time. The doctors and nurses could not understand what kept me from suffering, for I was said to be the worst sight ever taken to the hospital.

I have been administered to for my arm and eye by Elders C. E. Crumley and F. M. Sheehy. Bro. C. E. Crumley has been good to myself and family; he could not have done more. Our prayer is that he will always be a shining light to the world. If anyone ever was prayerful and prayed to be healed it is I. The Lord has certainly blessed me with health and strength. My earnest desire is to soon be able to take up my work again. I want to ask the Saints to pray for me and my eye, that I may soon be able to see again.

My arm is still broken. It has been operated on and wired together about nine weeks, but has not knit together yet. I would like to hear from the Saints. My only pleasure is having the HERALD read to me and going to church when I am able.

Letter Department

THE SANITARIUM, INDEPENDENCE, MO., March, 1911.

It has been a long time since I wrote a letter for publication, but my love for the work of God constrains me once more to write a few lines.

For more than twelve months I have been a patient at the Sanitarium. That is a long time, but I was, as many can testify, exceedingly weak when brought here by our good undertaker, Brother Carson. For a long time I could not walk, but praise be to God, I can not only walk now, but can help some in the work here. I am yet very weak, but am improving.

For forty years I have been afflicted, and the prospect of getting well and strong is to me a source of great pleasure. I want to get well so that I can go out with my heart filled with love to God and man and once more tell the gospel story to the world. I am trying to live humbly and to prepare myself for whatever work the Lord has for me to do, be it small or great. Be that as it may, God's will be done.

C. J. SPURLOCK.

TENANTS HARBOR, February 28, 1911.

Dear Herald: I am surrounded by the hardest kind of modern Christianity. None to stand by me but the great Creator of the universe, and he has done that well.

I will relate one circumstance. I had been thinking for some time what kind of a place God had prepared for me if I should die now. While traveling one day from the woods in my usual health I was struck down by a great power and left this world. A scene appeared, most beautiful. The light was superior to any I ever saw on earth; it was mellow and the carpet was one continuous bed of full blown flowers. This passed away and I came back to earth in nearly helpless condition. By the help of my good friends I was placed in my home.

Elder C. B. Hull, thirteen miles away, was led to come to me. I was a very sick man when he arrived. At the first administration my faith was not sufficient to remove the trouble, but the second time the disease departed. Faith is the stuff to have to get along through this world.

I had suffered nearly all my life with a disease in the side of my head caused by a fever which I had in my youth settling there. It seemed like a sledge hammer pounding; it was very annoying and caused deafness. I had tried medicines and got no relief. I stated my case to Brother Hull, and he administered to me for the disease. Before he did so I was deaf in one ear. A short time after, while sitting reading, I heard the clock ticking plainly. I was surprised and dropped the paper; the disease was gone. I feel like a new man. There is nothing like obeying the commands of God and seeking faith.

D. S. SEAVEY.

THE DALLES, OREGON, February 28, 1911.

Dear Herald: I rejoice more as the time goes by that I became a Saint when I did. I know I have been saved from many temptations by the warnings of the Spirit of God. If every person in the world old enough to understand the gospel would obey and live up to its precepts, how much more real happiness there would be. The joy of having the approval of God or the pain we suffer if we do wrong are enough in themselves to make us wish to do right and shun temptation. I have longed so much to have my children honor their Creator by serving him; by doing their duty as Saints in every way.

I think we should all do all we can to help others to know the gospel. Who can be saved by a delusion?

"Shall we, whose souls are lighted
With wisdom from on high,
Shall we, to men benighted,
The lamp of life deny?
Salvation! oh, salvation!
The joyful sound proclaim,
Till earth's remotest nation
Has learned Messiah's name."

What happiness it brings to know that even one person has been brought into the kingdom of God. How I wish that everyone might be led to believe in God and keep his commandments.

Your sister,
Mrs. M. DAWSON.

TEA GARDENS, NEW SOUTH WALES, AUSTRALIA,

February 1, 1911.

Editors Herald: Since I last wrote we have entered upon another year and we are hoping that it will be a prosperous one for the church.

Our conference met in Sydney, December 31, 1910, and continued until January 2, 1911. As we met in prayer and testimony meeting that beautiful morning of New Year's Day how our hearts swelled with gratitude when we saw so many of like faith assembled to renew their covenants, to be built up spiritually, and to try to further this work that has endeared itself to all of us. There were some splendid meetings, but this prayer meeting was one to be remembered. The Spirit was present in a very marked degree, and warned us of dangers lurking round. We were told that trials that sometimes we imagined were brought upon us by others had really grown from ourselves. It is divine advice to be told to examine ourselves and see if there is any fault in us, and try to rectify it.

That meeting was a great blessing to me although it seemed to use up every particle of my strength to reach the building. I have been a great sufferer with severe headaches for a long time, caused by a peculiar weakness of my body. I had gone to the conference praying if there was a blessing for me, it might be my headache relieved. While everyone seemed to enjoy the Sunday meetings I tried also to be bright and cheerful, but each step I took and even the singing seemed to be like a knife through me, while the noise in the street seemed unbearable. But I received a blessing while the Spirit was present on Monday morning. I felt it encircle my whole body and the pain quietly passed away from my head like a breeze on a beautiful morning, and the awful weight was gone. I am very pleased to say it has not returned since. I am sure all present felt glad they arose so early to be there.

God has been so good to me in my past life, that I want to be faithful and show my gratitude for his kindness. I had been administered to in my home for the same thing, some months ago, and was almost immediately relieved by a whole night's sleep. I can assure you, dear readers, that I was loath to leave the place where the Lord had blessed us so much. There seemed to be a desire to stay under the lovely influence of tenderness and mercy, rather than return to my work among strangers and unbelievers who know not the Spirit.

This work of the Lord is slowly gaining favor in this State. As the Saints scatter out, the good news goes with them, and thus finds new ground to prepare. I wish to be one of those faithful ones who bring many to the gospel—but the task seems heavy at times. The other day we met a gentleman who thinks very favorably of the church, and he has been led to investigate it, just through watching the lives of some who have recently been baptized. He thought there must be some good in the religion that made men and women better. Thus we are encouraged again.

In closing let me pass the thought along to others, that is passing through my own mind: "Work while it is yet day, for the night cometh when no man can work." Ever praying to be useful in his service, I am,

Your sister in bonds of love,

ANNIE J. PARKER.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. Jennie Butrick, of Fort Dodge, Iowa, sends in some tithing for the Lord's storehouse and adds: "I am so far from any branch that I don't get a chance to bear many testimonies; so will just write a few lines and say that it gives me new courage to read the letters from week to week in your columns. I am glad I had the opportunity of joining the true church. I am trying to keep all the commandments, of which I esteem tithing as one."

Sr. Bessie M. Halfaker, Bourbon, Missouri, writes: "I was baptized in September, 1910, and have never regretted the step. I am trying to serve the Lord as well as I can. We have a small branch here with one elder, one priest, and one teacher. If we live faithfully and prayerfully and ask God to increase our faith and bless us, I believe he will answer our prayers. My grandmother, Mrs. Gertrude Wright, a member of this branch, is afflicted with neuralgia, rheumatism, and nervous spells. I ask all of the brethren and sisters to kindly remember her in their prayers. Brother Paxton came the 22d of this month and held a short meeting of five days in private houses, as the schoolhouse is closed. We expect to build a new church house soon. I would like to exchange postals or letters with some of the sisters."

Sr. D. Albers, of Frederic, Iowa, writes: "I do enjoy reading the letters in the HERALD, as I am young in this gospel and have much to learn. The letters are very encouraging, as we are isolated from the Saints. My husband and I were baptized last July at Hiteman. We have received many blessings since then, and we desire the prayers of the Saints that we may be faithful until death."

News From Missions

'Neath the Southern Cross.

This letter finds me in Dunedin, New Zealand. I arrived here from Australia, January 21. I found the little band of Saints struggling hard to obtain a foothold for the work in this city. Saints are very few in New Zealand. We have one brother somewhere in the vicinity of Auckland, another at Hawkes Bay, five or six in Wellington, two or three at Kaitangata and seven in this city. Most of these have migrated from Australia. A few, however, are the fruits of Elders Hanson and Tucker's labors.

Conditions have changed somewhat since those brethren left. Then, there were no Saints in the cities. Now there is in this city, at least, respectable backing for the efforts of any elder who might come here. With three families to care for an elder's needs, there would be no occasion for him to be hampered through having to labor for temporal needs. So the time is opportune for some one or more to be sent to the Dominion of New Zealand.

The Brighamites have over fifty elders in New Zealand. They have a large following among the Maoris, mainly in North Island. They also have at Auckland, means for printing their own tracts. "Tracting" is their main work, at least in the cities.

Bro. R. W. Hall and A. L. Leberz, as well as the little band of Saints who so consistently second their efforts, deserve commendation for their brave efforts to keep the flag flying in this city. For a long time they preached on the street only, but now they have taken a hall. It means sacrifice, but they are making it nobly. Already their efforts are beginning to bear fruit. Two were baptized during the winter and there are some very interested friends to the cause at the present. May God's blessing rest upon their labors and bring them abundant fruit for their efforts. The church should send them help.

At Wellington, Bro. J. Leberz is practically alone. No other brother to render assistance. Still he has done what work he could under the circumstances. Before his son went to Dunedin they held regular meetings, but these are impossible now. He expects to return to Australia shortly.

I shall remain in South Island for the next six weeks. I sail for San Francisco, March 8, and will arrive the 31st. Expect to reach Lamoni before the opening of General Conference.

Your brother in Christ,

WALTER J. HAWORTH.

Oklahoma.

Our work for the conference year of 1910 has now closed, and we feel that Oklahoma has done well, considering the few missionaries in the field. Two of them have baptized ninety. I regret that we did not have men enough to respond to all the calls for preaching. We have been very busy, and have done the best we could. I have been in this one field eleven years and am very familiar with the work here, and can say we need more men. The field is ripe and souls perishing. The field is in much better condition than it was even two or three years ago. The branches have more spiritual life, and the scattered members show a greater desire to help in the great work of God.

Our men have been compelled to labor alone much of the year, however much we would like to travel two by two. I am glad to say, so far as I know, they have kept themselves free from wrongdoing and have done good work.

Some brother writing of the work among the Lamanites, of his experience in years past, speaks discouragingly of the progress made. But I wish to say that the outlook is very promising now. Jesus said: "Without me ye can do nothing." And all our men who have worked among the Lamanites the past two years, know that the Spirit of the Master is working with them. We now have many points where we can preach to them just like we do to the white people. Many of them are reading the Book of Mormon, also tracts and other books. The last conference in Central Oklahoma ordered the ordination of one full blood Oto Indian, to preach to his people.

My last meeting among the Cheyennes was a pleasant experience; for, in power and demonstration of the Spirit we preached to those people for one hour. We expect to visit them this week at Calumet, a new point, by request of a full blood Indian who is a Baptist preacher. He heard our last sermons to his people near Kingfisher.

I trust that whoever may be sent to Oklahoma this year, will not neglect these important people. They must help to build up Zion. Our records as men of God in his service, are such that whoever follows will have no trouble on that account.

I wish to say in this connection that we have had the hearty cooperation of the Saints in the field as well as many good people of the world. There is some very bitter prejudice in Oklahoma, but nothing like we met ten years ago. Sectarianism is weakening, and losing its grip on the people to a large extent. Now is our opportunity to reap a bountiful harvest.

There is a growing inquiry for the Book of Mormon and something definite on the true gospel, and the work of latter day prophets. I hope that we as a people are now ready to engage in the work of the Lord with more consecrated effort than ever before. May the Lord bless his people all over the world, and especially rule by his power in our coming General Conference.

Your coworker,

HUBERT CASE.

KINGFISHER, OKLAHOMA, March 13, 1911:

Northern Kansas.

The missionary force in this field is limited. Only two appointed to the northeastern district, and three to the northwestern district; while one appointed to Kansas, has put in the time in northern Kansas.

The work in the western district seems to have been neglected for some time past. Even the local ministry are inactive; or, if at work, we fail to hear of it. For some time there has been an interest at Alexander where Elder John A. Teeters, president of the district, resides. Brother Teeters and S. H. Fields have done some good work in that field. Elder S. J. Madden was appointed to the northwestern district, but has tarried a great part of the time in the northeastern district. Elder Oscar W. Okerlind, at last word, was holding forth in the vicinity of Osborne in private houses, with good interest. Brother Madden was at work near Belleville, reporting good liberty in preaching the word.

The conference of the northwestern district was held at Topeka on the 11th and 12th inst. and was pronounced a success by all who attended. Every branch in the district, save one, was represented. Some of the old time interest and zeal were manifest, that showed an awakening to a realization of the value and benefit of district conferences.

Brethren Swensen and Ethridge report good meetings at the Centralia Branch recently. The Blue Rapids Branch seems to be holding its own, and making some advancement. Some difficulties have adjusted themselves, and a better feeling obtains. Netawaka is apparently in the throes of death. The passing away of Elder Henry Green, and the moving away of others has crippled the work. No meetings, we learn, are being held at all. It is sad to see the work languish in these old landmarks, but we are subject, to a great extent, to our environments.

The Atchison Saints are happy in the additions that have come to them in the families of Brethren Cool and Armstrong, and they are really looking up again.

Grandma Berry, who recently passed away, will be missed by those who knew her, and have heard her testimonies to the work. Though old in years, she was patient, kind, and slow to speak ill of anyone. Her daughter, Sister Sprague, we learn has been very sick.

Fanning is another old landmark, where the Saints for a long time have held up the gospel banner. There are some good workers here, who make their influence felt. Here reside the district president, Samuel Twombly, and district secretary, F. G. Hedrick, who is also president of the branch.

There are scattered Saints in Leavenworth, Monrovia, Manhattan, Oketo, Washington, Effingham, Denison, Cuba, Concordia, Downs, Beloit, Harlan, Gaylord, Lebanon, Esbon, Edmond, Norton, Oberlin, Goodland, McCracken, Ness City, Council Grove, and Horace, with some points that possibly do not occur to us at present that would furnish opportunities for extending the work, if those residing in the places named could, or would secure openings, or places for preaching.

In some places the work is pretty much hedged up on account of prejudice, so that when places are secured, there is little or no hearing. Navarre and Council Grove are examples. Sr. H. C. Pitsenberger at the latter place, however, succeeded in getting a good explanation of our faith in the local newspaper. We have three members here, Brother and Sister Pitsenberger and Sr. George M. Thompson. They are doing what they can to let their light shine, and to impress their neighbors with the beauty and reality of the gospel. There is only one member at Navarre, viz, Sr. D. A. Springer, daughter of Brother and Sister Resch, of Independence. An effort was made in that vicinity in a private house, with poor results. The Dunkards predominate here.

The Saints of the northeastern district are planning to secure a large tent for missionary work and reunion service. Donations come in very slow, but we hope there will be an immediate effort made to get the means in the hands of the committee so that when the tent season arrives, whoever of the ministry are sent to this part may enter upon the work without delay. There are many cities in the district in which the gospel has never been preached. Money may be sent to Samuel Twombly, Fanning, Kansas, or to H. E. Moler, Holden, Missouri.

At Scranton the work is being upheld by a few of the Saints remaining in that part. Bro. William Menzies is now the president of the branch. Brother Hart has located in the vicinity of the branch and we hope that he and family will prove a help to the work there. The next conference of the northeastern district convenes at Scranton in June.

News From Branches.

Des Moines, Iowa.

A late letter from Bro. F. A. Settles since his return to his home in Akron, Colorado, expresses his joy in the service of God and relates instances in which the Lord has given him special help in presenting the work to those who have made inquiry. He was baptized here a few weeks ago.

Your correspondent was cheered by a short visit from Elder F. A. Smith on his way home from the Canadian mission. He expresses satisfaction with the progress of the work there.

Elder George M. Scott, of Little Sioux, Iowa, while here on a visit to his son's, called on the writer and from information gathered we learn of the progress of the work in that part, some quite encouraging and some of a very sad nature. The grim reaper has been doing his work, and making it more apparent that we should be always ready.

Elder J. W. Peterson is still at Runnells and creating some interest both by word and pen. We note by the last Runnells Telegram that W. G. Roberts has taken exception to an article, lately published, and has made one of his characteristic replies,—words to reflect, and words without meaning. This paper has been very liberal in publishing articles reflecting our faith.

The Register and Leader had another article in its issue of the 7th in which is clearly set forth the position held by Joseph Smith on the question of marriage. It presents the historical fact that Joseph Smith appealed to the Bible upon this subject only to prove that marriage was always, and always to be monogamous, and that in his teachings he made it very plain that "it is lawful that he (man) should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation."

At the last election of branch officials, the following were continued: Elder O. Salisbury, president; J. R. Epperson, presiding priest; Fred Chandler, deacon, and Bro. Clarence Skinner, teacher. The excellent work that has been done for the last several months is being continued, and it is showing the power to save contained in the law of God wisely executed. We had one of the largest gatherings at the sacrament services last Sunday that has ever been seen in the branch at their regular services, and what made this service most remarkable was the spirit of peace and unity that prevailed. The excellence of this service was remarked by many of those who have been members here for many years.

A late letter from Bro. Guy F. Mintun says that he is in the employ of the United Order of Enoch as stenographer and bookkeeper and is enjoying his work.

To-day occurred the funeral of Sr. Mary F. North, daughter of Brother Cloyd, of Missouri. Sister North died after a short illness at Peoria, Illinois, and by her request was brought here for burial. Funeral sermon at the home of her brother Joseph, by the writer.

In HERALD, issue of the 1st inst., appears as editorial an article, a part of an address by Hon. Henry Wallace, not Lewis, which shows much study of the law given through Moses. Mr. Wallace is president of the society in the United States on Conservation. J. F. MINTUN.

Independence, Missouri.

On Friday, March 10, in the morning the stake Sunday school association convened, with Superintendent A. H. Parsons in the chair and Sr. Pearl Gardner as secretary.

Organization was effected and a printed statistical report of our twenty-one schools was distributed, which expedited the business. After the routine of addresses and reports, unfinished business and a resolution or two were disposed of, the fifty or more delegates present from abroad, a little weary, retired for refreshment. At the close of the afternoon's session the big basement was again full of expectant Saints, looking for an entertainment. We had been doing things, and now we fain would rest, and let some one review our work; so we listened at night meeting to a few musical numbers and to four papers treating on "high grading"; "convention; how made profitable"; "roll of honor"; and "certificate of graduation," all being excellent.

Firstly, the improvements made through class organization; secondly, the institute work, pushed forward through the efforts of our stake superintendent, introducing it into all the schools excepting Courtney and Orchard Home; and thirdly, the increased membership in the home department, all furnished incentives for increased zeal in Sunday school work.

As to the stake conference held on Saturday, March 11, the weather was fair, and there was a goodly number of delegates in attendance. There was not a jolt or jar, but the brethren got a little excited over the stake library question in the afternoon, (for instance, how best to take care of it,) and in the forenoon session there was a slight division of opinion in regard to the reading of the itemized report of the stake bishop, seeing the time of the conference was limited.

The brethren however kept calm as a summer morning, while the stake president in his opening address expressed his "great pleasure" with regard to "the fine missionary work which had been done in the stake by some of the sisters."

One hundred and eighty-eight were elected as delegates to the General Conference, and on the whole the stake conference passed pleasantly, leaving nothing or a very little to regret.

At the sunrise meeting on Sunday, the 12th, there were about eighty in attendance, Bishop May and Elder Burton McKim presiding. The Sunday school attendance was eight hundred and thirty-one; offering $16.73, and there were eighty-six visitors.

All the meetings were highly spiritual. Elder S. S. Smith led in a fervent prayer at the morning services and our learned brother, J. W. Rushton, gave a discourse upon the subject of "oneness with Christ." The speaker said "we must have the eye upon the objective point in our religious life," one of his texts being, "I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."—Philippians 3:14.

At evening service Bro. J. W. Metcalf, assisted by Elder Vanderwood held forth, proclaiming the necessity of accepting the doctrine which Christ taught. The brother stated that he had "never heard of a momentary salvation." His sermon was graphic and enlivening. As he has taken up his abode with us he would at our next special series of revival services, be a help to the ministry in arousing interest in the gospel work here.

The Saints certainly enjoyed two excellent discourses on the 5th inst., by Elders W. H. Garrett and C. Ed Miller. The theme of the former was, "The Witness" and it was a strong, wholesome treatise on the evils of the day. Theme of latter was based on "The Lord's Preface": "A message to the whole earth," as the speaker said. Brother Miller read the "Preface" to the Saints. Concerning the everlasting gospel it treats of,

"It would seem more than the figment of a finite dream,
More than the mere result of chance,
This passion of continuance."

Committee on tents reported that no action had been taken on account of lack of funds and recommended two collections be taken on Sunday, the 12th, which was disposed of by asking the various branches to raise the fund proportionately. Secretary reported, present membership 4,695, showing a net gain of 133. Of 454 holding the priesthood, 104 reported, 93 baptisms, 981 sermons. Committee on ministry report blanks reported with diagram of a blank submitted, which provided for the work done by the various divisions of the priesthood, recommending the printing of 2,000, which was adopted. The presentation to the stake by John C. Grainger of his large reference library was by motion received and acknowledgment made and turned into the hands of the stake library commission. The action of the stake officials in securing the valuable library of Frederick J. Cleveland for the sum of $75.00, was ratified by the assembly. A resolution favoring the adoption of a decision pledge for those between the ages of eight to sixteen years and one for those older; also a committee of one from the branch, Sunday school, and Religio to work in connection with the stake temperance committee prevailed. Next conference to be at Second Independence, September 9, 10, 1911. The stake presidency and bishopric were by motion sustained. W. S. Brown elected secretary. Sr. J. G. Pointer was elected library commissioner. Reports from the First and Seventh Quorums of Priests and stake Sunday school were read. The Centropolis Branch asked the conference to ratify their action in changing the name to the "Bennington Avenue Branch," which was referred back to them for correction and report. A resolution was presented that branches nominate their pro rata of delegates to General Conference, prior to stake conference, forwarding list to secretary of stake, was laid on the table. Report of committee on stake resolutions was by motion deferred. Preaching on Sunday was by J. W. Rushton and J. W. Metcalf. At 2.30 p. m. prayer meeting. W. H. Callin ordained first counselor to president of First Quorum of Teachers; J. A. Goodrich ordained second counselor to president of First Quorum of Teachers; A. L. Lightfoot ordained first counselor to president of Seventh Quorum of Priests. 182 delegates were elected to general conference, the first three being chairmen, viz, Joseph Smith, F. M. Smith, and I. N. White. W. S. Brown, secretary, 3005 Baltimore avenue, Kansas City, Missouri.

NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA.—District conference met at Brooklyn, New York, February 25, 1911, at 7.15 p. m. Elder U. W. Greene presided, assisted by the president of the district, they to choose others to complete the presidency as needed. E. B. Hull was chosen as assistant secretary. The deacons of the branch were appointed as ushers. The branch chorister and organist had charge of the music. John Potts acted as secretary. Statistical reports: Philadelphia 229, Elk Mills 92, Brooklyn 185, Scranton 108, Broad River 51, total 665. Reports of the branch presidents were read and approved. District president's report was read, received, and spread upon the minutes. The secretary reported verbally. The treasurer's report was read and accepted. The courtesy of the floor was granted to the visiting Saints. The bishop's report was read and approved. A summarized report by the district president was read and approved. A bill of the district president for $19.84 was read, and ordered paid. Communication received from Philadelphia, asking that the district provide for election of officers annually instead of semiannually. This was adopted. Communication received from Philadelphia, recommending the name of N. Edward Milligan for the office of deacon, and that provision be made for his ordination. This was approved and the president of the conference was directed to provide for the ordination. Election of officers: A. D. Angus, president. Brother Angus chose Brn. Ephraim Squire and William Anderson as his counselors. Approved. Bro. John Potts, secretary. Moved and seconded that the term of office of the auditors be three years instead of eighteen months; that Brother Christy's office expire 1913 and Brother Milligan's 1912. Carried. O. K. Fry was elected to succeed the expired auditor, to serve for three years. Nineteen delegates to General Conference were chosen, with instructions that those present cast the full vote, and in case of division they cast a majority and minority vote. Moved and seconded that when the conference adjourns they do so to meet at reunion on the last Saturday and Sunday, and the hour to be left to the district president. Carried. Moved and seconded that the time and character of the services for Sunday, February 26, 1911, be left to the wisdom of the president of the conference. Carried. AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of the London, Ontario, District: I beg to notify the Saints of London District that my address is changed from 87 Flora street to 13 Inkerman street, Saint Thomas, Ontario. All Saints sending tithes, offerings, or other communications will please address me as above in future. JOHN L. BURGER, Bishop's Agent.

Church Secretary.

RAILROAD RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE, ETC.

In connection with notice of reduction granted by the Burlington Route, of "round-trip rate from points in Missouri to Lamoni and return, of two cents per mile in each direction, tickets to be sold April 2 to 6 inclusive, with final return limit April 21," as announced in HERALD and Ensign; the Quincy, Omaha, and Kansas City, and Wabash railroads notify that they will participate in said reduction; and the Rock Island Road may do likewise. Inquire of their agents when buying tickets, and if the reduction is not granted by them, purchase a local ticket to the point where connection is made with the Burlington; the Burlington agent will sell round trip tickets to Lamoni and return at the reduced rate. Round trip tickets must be purchased to secure reduction.

Other lines find it impracticable to join in the reduction for the reason that there will not be sufficient traffic outside of that handled by the Burlington to justify issue of special tariffs.

TRAIN SERVICE TO LAMONI, IOWA.

Two branches of the Burlington Route reach Lamoni: The line from Kansas City and Saint Joseph to Chariton, Iowa; and that from Des Moines to Lamoni.

Trains leave Kansas City at 7.35 and 11.35 a. m., Saint Joseph at 10 a. m. and 3.30 p. m., arrive Togo 1.55, at Lamoni 8.20 p. m.

From the north, leave Chariton (on main line of the Burlington from Chicago to Omaha) at 4.35 and 10.30 a. m., arrive at Lamoni 6.40 a. m., at Togo 12.34 p. m.

Trains Nos. 111 and 112, running between Kansas City, Saint Joseph, and Chariton through Togo (Togo two miles from Lamoni with hacks connecting) will run down to Lamoni April 3 to 6 inclusive, also on several days about the close of conference. Trains 111 and 112 connect with train to Lamoni every Sunday, at Togo, with extra car for conference people on Lamoni train.

Train No. 110 leaves Des Moines 12.45 p. m. daily except Sunday, connects with the main line of the Burlington at Osceola, Iowa, 3.05 p. m., arrives Lamoni 5.05 p. m.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, March 14, 1911.

Important Notice.

To the Order of Evangelists; Dear Brethren: It is important that we should know what we can of what you are doing, together with your prospects and desires. Report blanks which tell you when and how to report, have been sent to each one of you. All but four of our members have reported. They have our thanks. Do any of you know who these four are? Please report at once, that we may be able to make an aggregate report of what the Order has done during the last conference year. J. R. LAMBERT, Acting President.

LAMONI, IOWA, March 17, 1911.

General Conference Reception Committee Notice.

Are you coming to General Conference? Do you wish the reception committee to find you a place to board and lodge while here?

If so, write to-day and let us know:

1. When do you expect to arrive?
2. How long do you expect to remain?
3. If you apply for some one else, give us their names and addresses, so we can notify them and know who they are when they arrive, and thus avoid making two assignments to the same person.

Board and lodging will be $4 per week for each person.

Address all applications to Dedication at Haileyville, Oklahoma.

February 26 had been announced as the date for dedication of the church building. Several were present from Wilburton and Holdenville. By request A. Z. Rudd, assistant superintendent and secretary of the district, was in charge of the Sunday school. There was a good attendance and lesson. We were pleased to see the cradle roll in charge of Sister White. The little ones did finely.

At 11 a. m. Elder H. R. Harder, president of the district, was in charge. After opening hymns and prayer a paper was read by Jesse M. Simmons.

After the reading of a paper by Jesse M. Simmons, "Shout the tidings of salvation" was sung and Elder Lee Quick was introduced as the speaker, using Proverbs 12: 7, 8, and other texts. He referred to the fact that God directed his servants here to whom he showed this house in vision long before it was built. He spoke thirty-five minutes, after which Bro.

S. W. Simmons offered the dedicatory prayer. No. 116 was sung, benediction by H. R. Harder.

At 3 p. m. the prayer meeting was in charge of John S. White and H. R. Harder. There were five prayers, eleven hymns, twenty-one testimonies, occupying an hour and twenty minutes.

A very interesting priesthood meeting was held at 5 p. m., in charge of Lee Quick and H. R. Harder. There were present four seventy, five elders, two priests, two teachers, and one deacon. At 7.45 p. m., E. A. Erwin offered the opening prayer. S. W. Simmons was the speaker. Text, Revelation 14: 6, 7. Thus closed a very profitable day's service. A. Z. Rudd, Wilburton, Oklahoma.

"Journal of History."

The Master thought the work of Church Historian of sufficient importance to release by revelation one of the Quorum of Twelve to "more freely and efficiently pursue his duties as historian." To make more effective the work of the Historical Department the Journal of History is being published and subscribers are solicited at the nominal price of $1 per year.

The Journal does not take the place of the Church History, but occupies a field of its own, and every Saint who desires to become acquainted with the church's history and the many incidents connected with the experiences of its worthy defenders, should be a subscriber. A great many valuable documents are coming into the possession of the Historical Department and will be published only in the Journal of History.

It will not be long until some of the first numbers will not be available and will become scarce and increase in value like many others of our publications.

The Journal is read by large numbers of members of State Historical Societies in the several States and is sure to accomplish much good in this direction. Do you not want to assist in making the Journal a financial success? We extend to you the invitation. Send $1 to-day for the year 1911, to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

ANDERSON.—William Anderson was born at Glasgow, Scotland, on February 1, 1840, and resided there until April 18, 1855, when he left with his father's family for Utah. They landed at New York in May and went to Atchison, Kansas, and hence west in a train under the leadership of Milo Andrews. While in Utah he was selected to take the endowments, but his father, who had become dissatisfied forbade him, what he then considered an honor. Soon after he with the rest of his father's family left Utah, having been there about a year, arriving in Saint Louis the 9th of November, 1856. Upon the 6th day of August, 1863, he was married to Christabella Knight. Five children were born to this marriage, two sons and three daughters. James and Jessie Anderson Reese preceded him in death, three with their mother remain to mourn; Elias Knight Anderson, Lottie Anderson Derry, and Christabelle Anderson Lambert, also sixteen grandchildren. In 1864, on the 11th of September, he was baptized into the Reorganized Church by Charles Hall. A month later he was ordained a teacher, later a priest, and on the 10th day of December, 1866, he was ordained an elder by Elder Benjamin S. Jones, and soon after was chosen president of the Saint Louis Branch. In 1883 he moved to Pleasanton, Iowa, where he presided over the Pleasanton Branch until his removal to Lamoni, in 1889. April 15, 1890, he was ordained a high priest, and became a member of the High Council at the time of its organization, acting in that capacity until the time of his death. Ten years later, in April, 1900, he was ordained a bishop, and at the organization of Lamoni Stake the next year, was chosen bishop of the stake, a position which he has occupied with honor ever since. Brother Anderson was a prominent Lamoni business man, and has been honored by the franchisees of the people at several different occasions. He died March 5, 1911, after a short illness from paralysis. Funeral services were held at his home on Tuesday, March 7, Elder John Smith in charge. Sermon by Elder Heman C. Smith. A memorial service was held at the church, Lamoni, March 12. Elder Elbert A. Smith delivered the sermon, which will appear later.

SUMMIT ADDITION CITY OF INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

The Order of Enoch is placing this beautiful addition on sale, not as a speculation, and whatever is made over the cost price of this land belongs to the Order for the benefit of the poor, and the carrying on the business of the Order. Persons at a distance wishing to purchase property in this addition, if dissatisfied with the purchase after seeing it, will have their money refunded.

Terms of Sale

We would prefer cash, but this does not hinder those of limited means. The Order will make it possible to assist any poor Saint to acquire a home on more reasonable and better terms than could be done in any other way. Elder B. J. Scott of the Independence Stake Bishopric has been placed in charge of the sales of this property, and will assist anyone wishing to see the property.

The Order has also provided a head quarters at 103 South River boulevard, one block from the church, where Saints visiting or contemplating moving to Independence will be made welcome, and will be made comfortably at home. Saints contemplating moving to Independence Stake should confer with the local or general bishopric, which will always be to their best advantage.

NUMBER 13

Editorial

CHARACTER SKETCH OF JOSEPH SMITH.

By courtesy of Elder Daniel Macgregor the HERALD Editors have been permitted to review a somewhat rare number of a certain periodical, namely, the American Phrenological Journal, November, 1866. This work was published in New York by Fowler and Wells. It contains an article on "Mormon" leaders, evidently by the editor, Mr. Samuel R. Wells, in which occurs an interesting though somewhat erroneous character sketch of Joseph Smith, a part of which we reproduce:

JOSEPH SMITH.

He was one of those men who are ever and anon startling or offending society with their claims as prophets. Now, while it is too much to ask us to believe in Joseph Smith, we may be allowed to accept him as a psychological problem. We can not call every man an impostor who thinks himself a prophet. Indeed, such often give evidence of their sincerity and earnestness, not only by a life of extraordinary efforts and suffering for their cause, as but few of those who would be considered the saner and more reliable religious leaders ever show, but they have also frequently "sealed their testimony with their blood." Such was the case with Joseph Smith, whose portrait we give, with others, representative of the Mormons. Joseph Smith founded a church, and fourteen years after its organization was murdered by a mob in Carthage jail, Hancock County, Illinois, while under the protection of Governor Thomas Ford. No Christian—in fact, no man with a humane mind—will justify the murder of a religious leader by a painted, demoniac mob that breaks into a prison of the State and takes the life of men there remaining under the protection of the governor and his solemn guarantee; while the philosopher, be he Christian or not, will regret it much, knowing that in the minds of his followers such an end to his ministry elevates a religious leader to the dignity of a saint and a martyr. This dignity the majority of us think Joseph Smith unworthy of, while the Mormons think never man so much deserved the martyr's crown. Between these two views of the Mormon prophet which America has given to the world, it is not our province to decide. Science and social philosophy should merely present facts and data without a bias, and these characters and their works should be treated by us as psychological and sociological problems. That Joseph Smith was a very marked type of those whom we call "seers," there can be no question. We say this independent of his having any mission of a divine nature and authority. It is time that the world should incorporate in its philosophy intuition and the seer-gifts as natural endowments of our race, for a consistent explanation and a solution of strange psychological problems. In some individuals, both male and female, such gifts are very remarkably manifested. Among the highest of these is Emanuel Swedenborg, whom the intellectual in every nation much respect, and upon whom but few would dare to reflect, because he claimed to be a "seer." Should Joseph Smith's work, in the next hundred years, bring forth results in a multiplied ratio to compare with that of the last thirty-six years, why, we may e'en have to rank the Mormon prophet higher than we are inclined to do now. As it is, the followers of this remarkable man consider him the greatest among prophets and seers. We must let the Mormons have their own conscientious religious views, although we would beg to differ from them and anybody else when their views fit not our own judgment, which in turn we must own to be no more infallible than that of other folk. But we think it a much sounder solution to allow that Joseph Smith had one of the "seer" natures, than to maintain the superficial judgment that he was an impostor, and far more logical to believe him to have been an earnest religious leader than to have been a nonbeliever in his own mission. Men never accomplish much when they have not unbounded faith in themselves and their "call." Now the Mormon prophet was like his disciples, eminent for accomplishing a great deal, and making strong impressions upon society. The fact that the astute mind of Brigham Young, and those of many other remarkable and talented men, were fascinated with Joseph Smith is suggestive. We fear that it can not with much sound philosophy be granted that Brigham is a non-believer in the Mormon mission, or he would have never been the Brigham Young that the whole world nearly now knows him to be. In the early periods of their church, the Mormons all professed more or less to be prophets and seers, and to have the gifts of revelation, unknown tongues, and the power to cast out devils, heal the sick, etc. We can readily believe that in these matters there was some self-deception, and things which would not bear much testing, but still, withal, a vast amount of religious faith and spiritual or psychological phenomena, more easily ridiculed than explained. The metaphysical Hamlet has well said—

“There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio, Than are dreamt of in your philosophy.”

Without bringing into our calculation much of supernatural agencies, there is much of the subtle agencies and methods of man's own wonderful being that none of us can perfectly trace or comprehend. Yet we see them manifested, and they lead us into a labyrinth if we follow them. Surely man is fearfully and wonderfully made; and these men of seer natures are problems that require much examination and revision of our judgments from time to time. Oftentimes we dare neither believe in them nor pass them lightly by. They would throw our practical judgment into anarchy; and even of the Hebrew prophets and seers, Saint Paul has acknowledged for them that they saw but “through a glass darkly.” The prophet and seer are types kindred to genius, and, like genius, they are incomprehensible to themselves and others. Every manifestation with both classes is an inspiration, or an intuition, or a reflection of something, they know not what. They are by no means a perfect race, for when of Esaias it could be admitted that he was a man of like passions with ourselves, it can be readily granted how much prophets of missions and men of genius have marred their missions and work with human passions and fallibilities. The first Napoleon had in him much of the prophet—much of genius, with all its splendor and with all its faults; and it is our opinion that Joseph Smith, as Napoleon the Great, working out his mission, would have made a very striking resemblance to the man who created the empire. . . . Joseph Smith would as well fill the character of a general as that of a prophet, and he would have fought his battles like Napoleon, from intuition and inspiration, rather than according to military orthodoxy. Had he been born in the times of the American Revolution, he might have aimed to have been a Washington, for though by his enemies it is said he was a great sinner, he was certainly a man of great designs and purposes, and the dignity of the cause might have sanctified the man more to our views. Before his death he was a candidate for the Presidency of the United States. Probably he did not expect to be elected, but it was another of Joseph's assertions of his mission. We have seen the Mormon prophet during his lifetime at our office. A writer to the New York Herald thus describes him:

“Joseph Smith, the president of the church, prophet, seer, and revelator, is thirty-six years of age, six feet high in his pumps, weighing two hundred and twelve pounds. He is a man of the highest talent and great independence of character, firm in his integrity, and devoted to his religion: in one word, he is per se, as President Tyler would say. As a public speaker, he is bold, powerful, and convincing, possessing both the suaviter in modo and the fortiter in re; as a leader, wise and prudent, yet fearless; as a military commander, brave and determined; as a citizen, worthy, affable, and kind, bland in his manners and of noble bearing.”

Joseph Smith had a large brain, a powerful body, an iron frame, an expansive chest, and, therefore, a large heart, strongly marked features, a nose of much character, especially indicative of force and weight, and massive jaws. Strength was his type, rather than delicacy; yet he was a man of great sensibility and powerful feelings, and he took men to his heart somewhat unwisely. Not so Brigham Young. Probably, though he influenced others so wonderfully, he was too much influenced by others, and not improved thereby. He had also a large bony hand, which indicated that he was an image-smasher. We have nothing but a profile of him to present to our readers, but much of the man might be suggested in the full face of his mother, and that of his youngest son, David. He was murdered before he was forty years of age, and he left his work to be carried on by a man no less remarkable than himself, but of a different type. He was born December 23, 1805, at Sharon, Windsor County, Vermont, and was killed in Carthage jail, Hancock County, Illinois, June 27, 1844. Our likeness of him is youthful, perhaps not the worse for that, for he often played with the boys in their games. One day Joseph and the boys were skating pieces of slate on the water, to see who could skate slate farthest, the prophet or the boys, when brother Hyrum comes along and rebukes Joseph. “A prophet, holding the keys of a dispensation, and skating slate on the water!” “Give over, boys,” said Joseph; “we hurt brother Hyrum's feelings.” When the boys at any time saw Joseph coming, they hailed him; and he has often had to dismount from his horse to play a game with the boys. Had a knot of them met him on his way to Carthage, and asked Joseph to play a last game with them, he might have consented, and with more feeling than mirth played that last game; but the boys who loved him so much themselves felt too deeply then.

There is no longer any fear that the ringing of the chimes in the leaning tower of Pisa, Italy, would endanger the building. The prohibition order has been removed and the bells ring as of yore.

Resurrection.

There is no waste in nature, nothing lost.

The forest leaves decay, but law does not forget,—
They live again when April melts the frost,
And bloom in the wind-flower or the violet,

Or build the lordly pine, beloved of men,
Whose place upon the mountain top is merited;
Through root, and stem, and bough they mount again
And bud as leaves, their ancient right inherited;

The sun, new-risen, o'er the mountain range,
Greets them once more, they see the valley palpitate
In purple haze uncertain, and the plains
Small homes of men below, on plaques that undulate

Unto the far off sea. 'Tis nature's way,
And nature's kindly ways are God's, immutable,
Who rules that all who live, die, and decay,
Shall live again through laws unknown, inscrutable.

And thus the true philosophy shines forth,
On mountain peak serene, or on the restless ocean;
Death is abhorred, and aught of any worth
Is saved with insistent care and strict devotion.

If, then, the grosser elements of earth
Are kept so stingily, their loss a rarity,
What of the finer things of lasting worth,
The spirit qualifies, faith, hope, and charity,

And all that makes a man, when he attains,
Through study, experience, and demonstration,
Wisdom and knowledge bought with many pains,
And so becomes the Creator's revelation?

Shall all his nobleness at death be lost?
A Lincoln, an Abraham, or Christ be wasted?
And of their brethren a mighty host
Whose souls grew large through heavenly manna tasted?

Not so, for God has work for them to do,
A new realm, a wider view, a higher region,
To counsel, guide, direct, and rule anew,
With all of earth's noble ones whose name is legion.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Two years ago, in an appealed case before the High Council, a certain brother was found guilty of the crime of adultery. The Independence Branch, acting on these findings, expelled him from the church. The facts were something like this: He had been divorced from his first wife, she securing the divorce, he on his own confession being guilty of the offense that gives scriptural justification to divorce. A short time afterward he remarried, and subsequently was cited to trial, it being alleged that his relations with his second wife were adulterous because of the fact that he was not the innocent party in the first instance and hence not justified in the separation. Subsequently his second wife, feeling that her good name was injured by these findings, brought suit against four church officials, Brn. Harrington, May, Parsons, and Scott, for ten thousand dollars damage. We learn from an Independence exchange that the case has been dismissed. Thus once more the civil courts recognize the right of ecclesiastical courts to find according to the standards of morality accepted by the church body, and the right of the church to expel those who do not conform to those standards.

Lamoni people are pleased with the success of representatives of the Lamoni High School in the recent county oratorical contest, held at Garden Grove, Iowa. Joseph France won first place in oratory; his sister, Bessie France, second place in humor. These are children of Bro. and Sr. W. A. France, of Lamoni.

Lamoni is considered fortunate in securing the "Waubonsie Trail," a graded river-to-river wagon and automobile road, to cross the State from east to west. Lamoni will be the junction point for this road and the north-and-south road to run from Des Moines to Kansas City. Concerning the latter the Kansas City Journal says:

"Good road enthusiasts have formed a 'trail' organization for the purpose of promoting a road from Kansas City to Bethany, Harrison County, Missouri, where it will join a similar road running in from Saint Joseph, the main trail extending on through Southern Iowa towns to Des Moines, and ultimately ending at Saint Paul. The "Des Moines, Kansas City and Saint Joseph Inter-State Trail Association," the promoting body, has its headquarters in Lamoni, Iowa.

"The proposed road running north from Kansas City will pass through Cameron and Pattonsburg to Bethany. The road from Saint Joseph will tap King City and Albany. Running northward from Bethany, touching along the way Indianola, Osceola, Leon, Lamoni and Eagleville, the trail is expected to furnish the shortest possible thoroughfare between Kansas City and Des Moines.

"The officers of the organization are W. A. Hopkins, president; J. C. Danielson, vice-president; Daniel Anderson, secretary; and G. W. Blair, treasurer."

"The best things are nearest; breath in your nostrils, light in your eyes, flowers at your feet, duties at your hand, the path of God just before you. Then do not grasp at the stars, but do life's plain, common work as it comes, certain that daily duties and daily bread are the sweetest things of life."

At the monthly priesthood meeting held in Lamoni Saints' Church on the 26th inst., there was a very interesting and profitable discussion on the Order of Enoch, in which most of the members of the Twelve took part.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ELDER JAMES KEMP.

I was born October 1, 1834, at Steeple Ashton, Wiltshire, England. My parents were working people and members of the Episcopalian Church; so I was brought up in a religious atmosphere, and I firmly believed my parents lived up to the light they had received, a godly life. My godfather and godmother never took any interest in my welfare after the christening, although they had taken solemn vows before God to watch over me and guide my young feet to travel in that "narrow way" that leads to life everlasting.

My home in my childhood was a pleasant one; there love had an abiding place. My father was a strict temperance man, and looked with horror upon all kinds of vice. In those days in England there were no free schools, and only those of the wealthy received an education, while the laboring class was deprived of it, as they could not pay the tuition demanded. The slaves in the South of this country had a better chance in those days than the poor in England. Wages were so low that it took the united effort of all the family to keep the wolf from the door.

At the tender age of eight years I had to commence to be a bread winner. The first job was to walk around a field ringing a bell to keep the birds from eating the crops. Just imagine the lonely, solitary life of a child placed in that position, with no young companion to help pass away the lonely hours. Children in those days did not know the joys and pleasures which fill the lives of the young to-day. Many times I became so weary that I dropped off to sleep and there my kind master (Mr. Ball) would find me, take me up in his arms, give me a great big apple, and send me on my way happy and contented. As long as I live, I will remember this man's kindness.

When I attended Sunday school I learned to read a little. As I was religiously inclined, I took a deep interest in the lessons and became more proficient than some of the boys that took no interest. I also attended all the revivals and became very much interested in religion. I learned of Christ and the apostles and their work, and knew that I must do right if I was found worthy to enter into the kingdom of God. I read a great deal in the New Testament during this time, which caused me to have an intense desire to have lived in the time of Christ and his disciples, and to have been like them. As this was impossible, I then determined to be a boy that people could trust.

At the age of twelve I was put to tending sheep. I soon trained them to know my voice. They would follow me, but a stranger they knew not; reminding me of the Good Shepherd (John 10). About this time I had a great desire to be a preacher. Would call the sheep together, imagine them to be a congregation, read a chapter to them from the little testament which I always carried, then make an attempt to preach a sermon. I truly believe God's Spirit was working with me then, preparing me for future work.

About this time there was a great excitement about a man from America by the name of John Holliday, of Nauvoo, who claimed that an angel had come to a man named Joseph Smith with the restored gospel. This was a new and startling doctrine and drew large crowds. In our town he spoke in a private house where I and my brothers attended. We were captivated by his plain talk, in which he unfolded the Scriptures and brought to light the true gospel. So enraptured were we, we would stay after the meeting and sing hymns. One which struck me very forcibly was, "The Jews, they crucified him, and nailed him to a tree." After hearing him expound this beautiful gospel there was not the least doubt in my mind as to its truth; no other doctrine would satisfy me.

My two older brothers united with the church. I, being too young, they deemed it not wisdom to baptize me without my parents' consent. They were very much opposed to the church. About this time I remember disobeying my mother. An English elder was to preach four miles from our town; a man who had been deaf and dumb for years, but had been healed by the power of God. I thought I must go and hear this man, so I ran away and attended his services. To my surprise, my parents did not punish me for disobeying them. After a time, we persuaded mother to attend the meetings. She became interested and was baptized. This opened the way for me to obey, at about fifteen years of age.

A short time after this I was ordained to the Aaronic priesthood, and soon began to preach in towns, on the streets and in the parks. In those days God's Spirit was working in a wonderful manner upon the people. I had large crowds and good attention. They marveled at the wisdom of the boy preacher and said, "God must be with him or he couldn't talk in that manner." Before that cursed doctrine, polygamy, was introduced, many wonderful manifestations were given to the people of England. I have seen the power of God manifested till it almost resembled a pentecostal shower.

My brothers, Henry and George, were both ordained, Henry becoming a missionary in "the London pastorate," which comprised several counties. About this time the emigration to Zion (?) began, and Henry was called to go to America. Although

I was very young, I was ordained an elder and took his place in the London pastorate. Having great faith and believing in God's word, I went out to preach the gospel without purse or scrip. I located in the center of the district, hired a small room for sleeping and resting, and worked in all directions from that point. I never had to sleep out of doors but once, as God seemed to open the hearts of the people. As there were no schoolhouses to preach in, as in America, we had to hold our services in private houses and in the streets. After meeting, some good Samaritan would ask me home with him, and others would slip a few pennies into my hand, which paid for my lodgings.

While here I had my faith severely tried. I had a large swelling come on my face, which prevented me from preaching, but did not lessen my appetite. I had no money; a stranger among men, yet I believed God would come to my aid. All I had to live on was a two pound loaf of bread and a little sugar. On that I lived for six days, ate freely from it and was never hungry. It made me think of the widow's cruse of oil, and the loaves and fishes our Savior fed the multitude upon.

Another time while traveling, foot-sore and weary, at night fall I had no place to lay my head. I breathed a silent prayer, remembering his word, "Ask and ye shall receive." Going on I met a gentleman (?); told him I was a preacher and had the gospel message to deliver unto the children of men. I told him my circumstances, and he opened his purse and was about to give me something when he hesitated and asked me what denomination I represented. When I told him he closed his purse and went on his way; but this did not crush my faith in God. Going on a little farther I came to a small cottage and found a widow who took me in, gave me a night's lodging and food to eat, asking no questions. When I left I thought of the blessing Christ pronounced on all such: "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was athirst, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger and ye took me in. . . . Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

About this time the sectarians began to get excited over this "marvelous work and a wonder." They had lost many of their members and they began to cry delusion, false prophets, etc. Persecution began and those that were anxious to hear the glad tidings were obliged to gather at private houses, reaching them through alleys and byways; otherwise they would be seen and mobbed. While laboring at Halsted, a mob broke up our meeting and drove us out of town with stones and rocks. Although the rocks struck us, we did not receive a bruise or a scratch, for God protected us.

Most of our traveling was done on foot; we could not afford to ride. It was customary to use a walking cane. I had been stopping with a good brother by the name of Lashbrook, at Croydon, Surrey. On leaving this brother's house I forgot my cane. After I left he fell very sick and lamented that Brother Kemp wasn't there to administer to him; but spying my walking stick in a corner of the room, he recollected reading of some special blessing God had wrought by the hands of Paul the apostle, so that from his body were brought handkerchiefs, aprons, etc., to the sick and afflicted, and by their application the diseases departed and the sick were healed. He asked his wife to bring him my walking stick. He touched and caressed it, and so great was his faith that he was healed immediately.

At the seaport town Hastings, County of Sussex, I found an abiding place with a poor widow whose name was Lydia. Though not the Lydia of olden times, yet she was a servant to many, and her home was a hospitable haven of rest for the elders who came in, weary and tired from their long travel. Little did I think that here I would find my companion for life. This good sister had one daughter, named Fannie, and we became attached to each other, which terminated in our marriage. I can truly say that she has been a true and faithful companion and helpmate to me, always willing to make any sacrifice that I might do the Master's work. Many times when the way looked dark and dreary, she has stood by my side and wished me godspeed. To this union have been born fourteen children, nine sons and five daughters, all of which have obeyed the gospel.

After my marriage I continued in the work up to the spring of 1862, when President George Q. Cannon, of the English mission, thought I had faithfully performed my work and that I should now be sent "home to Zion." It thrilled my very soul to be considered worthy to live in Zion, God's promised land. I little knew the troubles and trials that awaited us, almost past endurance.

We arrived in America during the civil war. Everything was confusion. Traveling was uncertain, but we arrived safely at Florence, called Winterquarters, a camp near Omaha. We were taken to a camping ground and were there met by one Joseph Young, a cousin of Brigham Young, who had charge of the emigration from there to Salt Lake City. He made us a speech and ordered us to "turn over what money we had, as it would be needed to supply the wants of the people." We were given to understand before we left Liverpool that the ox teams and wagons would be ready and waiting for us at Florence, so that all we had to do would be to rest up a little and prepare for our journey across the plains. After waiting for four weeks we found the teams were to be loaded with freight and there would be very little room for either passengers or luggage. On July 5, eleven of us were assigned to one wagon, which was loaded with four cook stoves. My wife, who was in a delicate condition, was ordered to empty the tick of her small bed, and we all had to throw away some other things. Women and children only could ride, and they had to take it turn about, my wife among the rest. Imagine a journey over the plains in such a condition, you young Latter Day Saints, who think you have made sacrifice for the cause you love.

On this journey our faith was shaken. The men that were sent to take us "home to Zion" would curse and blaspheme. The only thing that gave me courage was the thought that they had fallen and would be dealt with when they returned to Zion. This was one of the most terrible journeys that falls to the lot of man; being on the road eight weeks, and suffering agonies that make us shudder to think of. Having to tramp the whole journey through, my feet became so sore I could scarcely walk, the bottoms of my boots turning uppermost. I have not gotten over, for even now the heels of my boots show the same tendency. Our provisions gave out and starvation stared us in the face.

When we came to the edge of the mountains, my wife gave birth to a baby boy. At four o'clock the next morning we broke camp and began our journey through the mountains. Not one hour's difference would they make, even for my wife's sake. Four o'clock every morning was starting time. She suffered agonies going through those Rocky Mountains, with only thin bedding, over those cook stoves. No one but herself will ever know what she endured. Three days after baby was born, we buried a little boy one year and eight months old, and for ten days my wife knew no more. My wife's cousin fell sick at the same time and died. While wife lay delirious, there was no one to look after her. I was not allowed to ride through the day; could only recline across the front of the wagon at night. So tired and worn was I, that I did not perceive my wife stealing softly over me at midnight and jumping out of the wagon, not knowing what she had done. On two different nights she did this; but the guards happened to be around, picked her up, and put her back on the wagon. Everyone, through the burden, the toil of travel and the way they were treated, seemed to have lost all human sympathy, and feeling for each other had taken flight. The leaders were so hardened they seemed to have no care or feeling for those in distress. My wife was shifted into five different wagons through her sickness, as one wouldn't carry her, nor another wouldn't carry her. Finally a provision wagon belonging to Joseph Young became empty and he gave me permission to move my wife into that for the rest of the journey. There was very little to encourage the poor weary travelers. The only little inspiration they received was at night when they camped, and the captain called the camp together to sing a hymn and offer prayer. The song would frequently be "Come, come, ye Saints, no toil nor labor fear, but with joy wend your way"; etc.

Upon our arrival in Utah, Bro. and Sr. Teddie Samuels, friends of ours, met us and took us to their home, where my wife had the best of care, for they were very kind. Our baby died a week after our arrival, but my wife and the other little boy, who had also been sick the most of the journey, recruited their health.

The first thing we were required to do after we got settled was to be rebaptized and reconfirmed, as members of the Utah church, and we "had probably committed sin on the way," they said, and "it was necessary to wash those sins away." This ought to have been evidence to me that it was not a continuance of the old church, but I was too blind to realize it. Shortly after our arrival the semiannual conference was held and some things were said by Heber C. Kimball that were hard for me to accept. One remark was: that Brigham Young had said he "was no prophet, neither the son of a prophet, but if he had been profitable to this people he was glad of it." This astonished me, for I read in Doctrine and Covenants that a man to lead the church must be a prophet, seer and revelator. I could not understand, if he was neither of the above mentioned, why he was the leader of the church. This was an eye opener to me, and from that day I became a doubter.

We stayed in Salt Lake City about ten weeks when my brother Henry came down from Ogden, he having heard that we had arrived. During these ten weeks I worked for Brigham Young, never receiving one cent of money for my labor, but an order on the general tithing office for the bare necessities of life. We had to watch our chance to get anything, as upon hearing that anything was brought into the tithing office, such as butter, eggs, vegetables, etc., everyone rushed to see which could be first served. We returned with my brother to Ogden and stayed with him and family during the winter.

About the year 1863 Elder E. C. Briggs, a missionary of the Reorganized Church, came to Utah, labored some in or near Ogden, showing forth the differences between the two churches and making some converts. Soon after this my brother George came, he having already united with the Reorganized Church in California. At this time I was living at Wellsville, forty miles north of Ogden. I was curious to learn something of the Josephites, also anxious to see my brother, whom I had not seen for several years. I went down to Ogden, and attended their meetings. I saw the fallacy of Brigham Young and his abominable doctrine. It was proved by the revelations that "Young Joseph" was the proper one to lead the church; the rightful heir and successor of his father. I was convinced that I had been led astray; I was ready to accept the truth, and in 1864 I united with the Reorganized Church.

My wife did not accept it as readily as I, not having the opportunity to hear as much. There was one thing that puzzled her: Since coming to Utah, the gifts of the gospel were not enjoyed by the church as they were in England. This she could not understand. She had thought that surely the gifts of the Spirit would not be denied, except through darkness and unbelief, and she knew there were a great many, especially among the heads and officers of the church, who were not living up to the light they had received. All these things she kept in her own heart, and said nothing for fear some might think she was about to apostatize.

I made another trip to my brother's, and on my return tried to convince her that she was hugging a delusion, but my efforts seemed fruitless, although I could see it greatly worried her. One time I began to read to her from the Book of Mormon, "Behold David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord," and many other things I read, taking care to turn down the leaves so that she could readily find them. Shortly after I left home again, and she grasped the opportunity of reading for herself. She puzzled her brain over the matter, so much so that she felt to call upon God in mighty prayer.

After retiring she immediately found herself alone on an almost barren desert. A feeling of sadness at her lonely condition came over her. She started to walk and immediately spied objects in the distance. After reaching the spot she saw twelve fanning machines with all the latest improvements. They were so clogged up they were not working, but she examined them and in one she found a cupboard. She opened this and on a shelf was the largest potato she ever saw in her life, nearly as large as a person's head, and she thought, What a beautiful potato! She took it in her hands; she noted how light it was for such a large potato. She tapped it with her knuckles and found it was only a shell. The Spirit said, "This represents the Utah church with twelve apostles; but it is a sham, having only the form left; they have departed from the faith." She turned from there with a heavy heart. Looking around in the direction from which she came, she saw in the distance her husband, but there was a deep gulf between us, and I was on the opposite side, fanning up big piles of wheat with an old fashioned mill. The beautiful, clean wheat was pouring out of it in a steady stream. I called to her to come over and help me. She said, "How can I, when this deep gulf separates us?" I replied, "Go down to the end of the ravine and you will find the gate that lets you in." The vision slowly faded away, but the Spirit had whispered to her, "Your husband is working to bring souls into the true church of Christ."

About this time a friend of mine, by the name of Simon Smith, who had been appointed bishop of Clarksville, Cache County, Utah, called on us. We got into a debate over polygamy. My wife listened attentively and observed quickly that I had the best of the argument. This fully convinced her of the claims of the Reorganized Church, and now she knew why the Utah church did not enjoy the gifts and blessings as the church did in England. This friend, Simon Smith, was one who heard the dying testimony of Martin Harris, to the truth of the Book of Mormon. He afterwards joined the Reorganized Church, and died in Saint Joseph, Missouri.

We stayed in Utah three years. In 1865 there was to be a train of Saints of the Reorganized Church made up to go to the States. My brothers, with some others, were going; so of course I would have to go too, for I did not like the idea of being left behind. The bishop of Wellsville sent the teachers to labor with me, having heard that I was leaning to the Josephites and talking of leaving for Missouri. My wife thought we ought not to leave just yet. The bishop heard that my wife wasn't in a hurry to leave, and sent a messenger to tell her not to go; that he would take care of her. But we disposed of what little effects we had and started with a span of horses, one not a very good puller. There had a great deal of snow fallen. When about eight miles out on the road in a canyon we encountered a very heavy snowdrift, and the horses refused to pull. It was nearly night. To camp right in the middle of the road was not safe in those times. I concluded to unhitch the horses and ride one into the next settlement ahead, about twenty-five miles, for I dared not return. There I found a brother by the name of Thomas, from whom I got a yoke of cattle and returned to my family. If the leaders of the settlement from which we came had known of our predicament and that my family was left alone in the mountain fastness, I would perhaps never have seen them again, for they were very angry with me.

We stayed in Ogden two or three weeks to equip ourselves for the journey, then went to Salt Lake City. Not daring to stay anywhere near the city, we went to Camp Douglass, where we had the protection of a troop of soldiers. When our train left for the long journey, an escort from the fort was furnished us. Notwithstanding this, we were followed by a portion of the Danite band; namely, Rockwell, Hickman, and Burton, each having their belts plentifully supplied with revolvers. When they came up to the train they demanded that I, with another brother by the name of David Putney, should be given up. They said we were leaving without paying our debts, which was false. The captain of our train said, "These people were put in my charge, and no one dare molest them, or they will have to deal with the Government of the United States." This settled the question and they departed.

When our train crossed the plains it was at a very critical time, as the Indians were on the warpath. Many emigrants had been captured, and men, women, and children killed. Before we started on our journey, some of our brethren asked counsel and advice of a certain brother as to which would be the safest route to take, and they were told, by the Spirit, not to take the stage route which lay to the right; but to take the left hand road; that if we did this God would shield and guard us to our destination. After we got well on the road and our escort had left us, some in the train became dissatisfied and wanted to go on the other route, so they left Elder Atwood's train. After traveling at some length they were attacked by the Indians, lost their horses, cattle and goods, and barely escaped with their lives. This is a lesson to all who disobey the voice of the Spirit. Those who kept on the route they were told to take came through safely; they never saw an Indian. We had a pleasant journey across the plains, so different to the experience we had on our trip out, on which all was selfishness; every man for himself. The return trip was governed by brotherly love, and everyone made his brother's interest his own. As on the former trip, my wife again fell ill. We were fortunate in reaching another soldier's camp, where the train waited three days on my wife's account, which was a great help to her. The soldiers in camp were very kind and brought venison and antelope to make broth for her.

In the latter part of the summer we arrived at Nebraska City, Nebraska. Crossing the river, we made our way to the home of Bro. Daniel Harrington, at a place called Egypt. He was a missionary to Utah and had lately returned. After several weeks, I went to Plum Hollow, the home of the renowned brethren, Father Leeka, Father Gaylord, and their families, also Elder E. C. Brand. Here I was ordained an elder of the Reorganized Church by Father Wheeler Baldwin. In these days the Gaylords were called "the sweet singers of Israel." We remained all winter, then returned to Nebraska City, built a house and located there, and were the humble instruments in the hands of God in assisting to build up the work at that place. Labored in Nebraska four years and became president of what is known as the Southern Nebraska District; then moved back to the Fremont District, and presided over that district two years.

During these few years my face was ever Zionward; so we made up our minds to again travel. This time we went to Stewartville, Missouri, remained there five years, and became president of the Northwestern Missouri District, extending from Saint Joseph to Hannibal. In those days, my readers will probably remember, the church was small and there was no allowance made to the wife of an elder or his children. We rented a small farm at two or three different times while there, but the grasshoppers and chintz bugs were pretty bad the first two or three years, and it kept us reduced in circumstances, so that we ran very short of the necessities of life. I remember on one occasion my family had to sit down to a meal of boiled turnips; this was all. About two hours after this noon hour, a good old sister came in. She had walked three miles, with her arms loaded with bread, flour, and a boiled chicken. She had received evidence that we were in need, and she hastened to relieve our wants.

Giving heed to unwise counsel in the year 1878, we made another move and found ourselves in Colorado. After staying a few months in the southern part, we moved farther north where there was a small branch of the church, comprised of three or four families. This place was formerly called Hutchinson, but is now Conifer, and we have been here ever since. The work had been opened up here in the early days by Bro. F. C. Warnky, the first missionary to Colorado. These families, anxious to have the work prosecuted, were very kind and made a generous offer to help support my family if I would devote my time to preaching. This I willingly did.

Elder James Caffall was appointed missionary in charge of the Nebraska and Colorado Mission. For years this noble man and I worked and labored together, and more than once we have walked the streets together, with no money for food and no place to rest. I always found him a man of his word, an agreeable companion, and one who was always willing to look on both sides of a question. He was greatly loved and respected by the Saints of Colorado.

The few Saints were willing to pay the expenses of opening up the work in Denver; so a hall was hired and the work began. It was very lonely, but God gave us strength to go on. Soon we found a family by the name of Galland; descendants of the owner of the famous Gallands Grove, of Iowa. In a short time Elder E. F. Shupe, of Magnolia, Iowa, moved to Denver. As a result of our labors together, a branch was formed.

Ever since then, I have labored in the State of Colorado. The work of the few families at Conifer was like the leaven in bread. It has spread until now we have eight hundred members and ten or more branches. I was thankful they thought me worthy to be put on the superannuated list, and while life lasts will work for the cause I love so well; and while I have not been as educated, nor as fluent a speaker as many others, yet I have faith in God's word. I know if God helps with his Holy Spirit it is far above the education of man unassisted. I believe God often uses instruments in his hands that the wisdom of man would cast away. My readers will see by this little history that I have labored in the interest of the Reorganized Church forty-three years. And though I am getting old I am willing to keep the harness on as long as life shall last, and God gives me strength so to do.

WHY JESUS WAS BAPTIZED.

Since Jesus was sinless and baptism is for the remission of sins (Mark 1:3; Acts 2:38; Acts 22:16), why was Jesus baptized?

First: To fulfill all righteousness,—it was all right (Matthew 3:13-15). The law enjoined circumcision, (Genesis 17:10-14,) therefore Jesus was circumcised. The gospel enjoined baptism (Hebrews 6:1, 2). Therefore Jesus was baptized. Christ came not to break the law, but to fulfill it (Matthew 5:17). He witnessed unto his father that he would be obedient unto him in keeping his commandments; wherefore Jesus received the Holy Ghost (Mark 1:10, 11).

Second: That he might confirm the baptism of John to be both reverential and profitable, lest any should hold baptism a vain or frivolous thing (Matthew 21:23-27). And that John might have an assurance that his course as the herald of Christ was now completed by his appearance (John 1:33).

Third: That he might thereby show his wonderful humility: for though he were equal with God, yet he made himself of no reputation, but came among sinners to baptism, though he knew no sin (Luke 15:1, 2; Luke 7:37, 38).

Fourth: To teach us by example that he being the head and leader, (John 5:22-27), so should we follow him (John 12:26; Matthew 3:13-17; Mark 1:9-11; Luke 3:21, 22; John 1:22, 23). And it is not to be treated lightly (Psalm 119:4) but to be respected (Psalm 119:6). It is necessary to salvation and not to be neglected (Acts 2:38; Acts 22:16). It is a straight command from God, absolutely to be observed in order to enter the kingdom of God. (Matthew 28:18-20.)

"And again: It showeth unto the children of men the straightness of the path, and the narrowness of the gate, by which they should enter, he having set the example before them. And he said unto the children of men, Follow thou me."—Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 13:2.

Fifth: To show his communion and fellowship with us his members (Matthew 12:50; 1 Corinthians 12:13; Galatians 3:27; Ephesians 4:35; Colossians 2:13).

Sixth: To signify to all the world that he came to be baptized with the baptism of death. For baptism represents death to sin, burial, and resurrection to eternal life (Romans 6:3-5; Colossians 2:12).

Seventh: In order to honor the priesthood and authority to administer, which John held by divine appointment through direct revelation from God (Exodus 40:13-15; Isaiah 40:3; Luke 1:8-17; Mark 1:1-4; Luke 7:26-28; Matthew 3:3).

Eighth: That public token might be given that he was indeed the anointed of God (Hebrews 5:5).

Ninth: "While the baptism of Jesus was not for the remission of his own sins, for he had no sins, nevertheless indirectly he was baptized for the sins of his espoused bride, the church, in that he loved the church, and by his baptism he covenanted to give his life a ransom for it; which covenant eventuated in the shedding of his blood upon that rugged cross, and his victorious resurrection from death and hell. Then, as Jesus by his baptism entered into covenant to pass through death in order to accomplish our redemption, we by our baptism enter into covenant with God to accept that sacrifice as the propitiation for our sins."—J. H. Tibbels in SAINTS' HERALD, September 16, 1903. Thus we see reasons why our Savior was baptized.

CATHOLIC STATISTICS.

The Wiltzius Directory was not published in time for us to give the returns from the Catholic enumeration in our annual article. It has since appeared and gives the total of 14,618,761 Catholics in the United States. This further summary of its statements is given by The Catholic News (New York):

"A glance through the 1911 directory shows that there are 17,084 Catholic priests in continental United States; 12,650 being secular clergy and 4,434 being members of the various religious orders. Comparing the number of clergy with last year's report it will be seen that there was a gain of 534. Among the hierarchy there have been very few deaths during the year, the number of archbishops being twelve since the death of the venerable Philadelphia prelate, and the number of bishops have increased from 88 to 97. Quite a number of vacant sees were filled during the year and several auxiliary bishops appointed.

That the Catholic hierarchy and the clergy are active year in and year out can be proven from the figures of Catholic churches. According to the Wiltzius publication there are in this country 9,017 churches with resident priests and 4,441 mission churches, that is churches which are supplied from neighboring parishes. The grand total of churches is 13,461. This shows a gain of 257 churches during the past year.

"Another interesting set of figures found in the directory shows that Catholic education is not neglected in this country. The 1911 directory gives a list of 4,972 parochial schools, with an attendance of 1,270,131. A healthy gain is shown in the number of school children, the previous year's school attendance being 1,237,251. In addition to the 4,972 parochial schools, there are 225 colleges for boys and 696 academies for girls, proving that institutions for higher learning are not wanting among Catholics of this country. There are, furthermore, 82 ecclesiastical seminaries, with 6,969 aspirants to the holy priesthood."

From the directory it is possible to see the distribution of Catholic population:

"New York ranks highest, with 2,758,171; Pennsylvania is second, having 1,527,239; Illinois follows in third place with 1,446,400; Massachusetts is fourth, with 1,380,291; Ohio stands fifth, having 694,271; Louisiana boasts of 557,431; the State of Wisconsin has 540,956; Michigan, 536,107; New Jersey, 495,000; Missouri, 452,703; Minnesota, 441,081; California, 391,500; Connecticut, 378,854; Texas, 295,917; Maryland, 260,000; Rhode Island, 251,000; Iowa, 242,109; Indiana, 223,978; Kentucky, 147,607; New Mexico, 127,000; New Hampshire, 126,034; Maine, 123,547; Nebraska, 122,510; Kansas, 110,108; Colorado, 99,485."—Literary Digest for March 11, 1911.

HOW THE POOR LIVE IN NEW YORK CITY.

The street in which we found ourselves was a squalid thoroughfare not far from the East River, overrun at all times with children chattering all the tongues of Europe—blond-haired, blue-eyed Germans, black haired Italians, and little dark and blond Jews from everywhere. A street reeking with the impetuous effluvia of decadent vegetables, lamp oil, and of fish in all of its versatile capabilities of odoriferousness.

It is only a small street, but each one of its grim, double-decked houses gives shelter to some five hundred human beings! Incredible? Yes; but perfectly true. It is only crowded with the poor of all nations, where drift the human derelicts, flotsam of failures from the strenuous world. It is the Never-Never land of New York, and its inhabitants wear cast-off clothing, read cast-off newspapers, and live cast-off lives.

Toward the end of this saddening street, whose equal we have not seen anywhere outside of the slums of London, is the famous or infamous—"Baby Block," between Lewis and Goerck streets. Two immense tenements occupy the north side of the street, each affording shelter—it would be a hideous mockery to use the blessed word "home"—to three hundred and twenty-five babies apiece. That grimy tenement on the south side one hundred and ninety babies, making eight hundred and forty babies in one block. The cold is intense, and the feeble cries of these hundreds of sickly infants are heard above the din of the modern Babylon. Occasionally a little tot—poorly nourished and scantily clad—thrusts a box of matches, chewing gum, shoe laces or newspapers under our noses as we move slowly along. For the children of the tenements must contribute to the family exchequer as soon as they are able to toddle. They may not make more than a few pennies profit a day, but then the penny is an important factor in tenement finance.

But let us have a look at the interior of one of these human hives. Ugly boxes of brick, they are, with a network of iron fire escapes in front, and countless clotheslines running from every window in the rear, with well worn stairs, and a marvelous variety of smells emanating from a dozen or so kitchens presided over by foreigners of every race and creed. All of the houses are five stories high. We enter the hall and find ourselves in almost pitchy darkness, although it is bright sunlight outside. We grope our way along, and nearly fall over a baby sleeping serenely in the passage. Recovering ourselves, we blunder up against an object which turns out to be a filthy sink at which the tenants of the floor get their water.

Four doors are on each side of the passage, representing eight families. And the burly Irish woman who acts as janitress tells us the other floors are exactly alike, so that forty families sleep under this one roof. The tenants are nearly all sweatshop workers, earning eight or nine dollars a week. And out of this miserable pittance they pay a rent of from $18 to $27 a month.

"How on earth do they do it?" we asked in amazement, and we learn that each family "accommodates" from six to eight boarders, who pay a dollar a week for the privilege of herding together in a room with half a dozen others. They also are sweatshop workers who get their food at the penny restaurants. In one block we counted sixteen of these penny restaurants, all apparently doing a thriving business, for the penny is the current coin of this strange realm.

Can you grasp the meaning of the statement that three quarters of a million human beings are herded together in one small portion of Manhattan—the district south of Fourteenth street and east of Broadway? In this patch of land is a population greater than that of either Arizona, Delaware, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, North Dakota, Oregon, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Rhode Island, Utah, Vermont or Wyoming. To say that the lower East Side is the most densely populated in the habitable globe gives no adequate idea of the real conditions.—Good Health Magazine, February, 1911.

RESPECTING MOTHER'S THINGS.

From the time my little boy could creep and climb up beside things I taught him "Hands off of mother's things." We began with a drooping potted plant. He could raise himself up and reach the tender ends. The first time his little hands reached for the fern end I raised my finger and said in a firm voice, "No."

Baby looked straight at me and reached again. I shook my head sternly. Still looking into my eyes he caught hold of the plant. I left the table where my husband and my mother and I sat, and for the first time in his life I sharply spat the palm of his hand.

My husband leaped to his feet. "Oh, mamma, you'll hurt him! You'll hurt him!"

"I mean to," I replied.

My mother said, "Oh, he's so little, I wouldn't."

Thus reinforced by the dear grandmother my husband advised, "Yes, let's wait till he's bigger."

Baby's eyes, though full of tears, never left mine. He reached again. I said, "No. That is mamma's flower—not the baby's."

Again he caught hold of the plant and again I spat the little palm sharply in spite of the murmurs of papa and grandma and even the German maid who stood in the doorway.

For several mornings after that baby pulled himself up by the plant and reached for it looking steadily at me. I had only to say very firmly, "No, that is mamma's flower—baby must not touch."

So with the books in our open bookshelves. I made room in a corner easy for him to reach and gave him his nursery books one at a time, showing him how to stand up like the others. Then I said, "These are baby's books and all those are mamma's and papa's and grandma's. Baby must not touch." We had three little encounters before he let our books alone absolutely.

So with my sewing things, my desk, pantry shelves, my dresser top and drawers. Every trespass on my belongings was met instantly with, "That belongs to mother. Baby must not touch."

He might visit in grandma's room when she was there or the maid's if she was in her room, but I followed, and in the same way taught him not to touch their belongings. A good many times, however, he came to me with articles that belonged to them, and I made him lead me back at once to the spot where he got them and put them exactly where they were. I have deemed it necessary to leave a caller to do this, for I knew how important it was not to relax the rule a single time. It almost broke grandma's heart and the maid said with tears in her eyes, "I could neffer be so cruel as you, alretty!" And his father said, "Oh, mother, you're raising him like a little soldier." I tried from the start to make him think it a matter of course not to touch the belongings of others, and not a matter of punishment.

But, though it often and often caused me delay and inconvenience, I anticipated and gratified his curiosity about the forbidden things. If I opened a drawer or a box or lifted something down from a high shelf he always said, "Wants to see! Wants to see!" and I said, "Bring your chair and mother will let the baby see." And I let him look thoroughly and told him what the things were for, but he might not touch. In a few weeks I did not need to remind him that they belonged to me.

When he could sit up in his buggy and I had him in a store, if he reached to touch anything I made the clerk wait till I had a few sober words with the baby. I did not coax or wheedle or scold, but said firmly, as I did at home, "That is not baby's. It belongs to the man. Baby must not touch." Then I was careful to hurry my shopping and get through while baby was conscious his hands were off because "it was the man's."

All during his second year in church or club, if my neighbor's pretty veil or feather tempted his fingers too close I had only to whisper, "Sh! It's not the baby's. It belongs to the lady," and he knew by that time it was a pretty serious thing to touch what "belonged to the lady." I have heard mothers reiterate that statement to their children in a voice that meant nothing whatever, that sounded as if it wasn't used to being obeyed, while my purse has been snatched from my hand and its contents scattered, and my gloves clawed from my fingers, and my rings dug at until I cut short my call and was glad to get away. I am careful to get baby's attention before I talk to him. Usually I say, "Baby, look at mother's eyes." Then, I am convinced, firmness of voice and fewness of words have more weight than senseless nagging.

He has four safety pins of his own for his doll. If he wants to borrow one of mine it is on condition he will return it without being told. The first time he failed I waited till he asked again. Then I said, "You promised mother you'd return the one you borrowed yesterday but you didn't do it. I can't let you have another till you return that one."

Now at three, before we enter a store I stoop and say, "Baby, promise mother you will not touch the man's things."

We can go into a shop with any kind of a mixture of things and while he will go straight to look at every separate article, I am certain he will not touch.

When we walk down the street if a flower overhangs a fence or peeps out from between the pickets he will stop and look at it and say, "It—b'longs to ze lady. It issent ze baby's. Baby must not touch."

I have a friend who says, "It's all very well now to teach him these things, but wait until he's older. He'll forget." I do not believe it. I taught school and boarded in other people's homes for ten years and I observed that those children who were made to respect "mother's things" respected her, were more orderly, more obedient, and kept hands off of other people's things. The child that refused to pluck a flower that happened to grow through the owner's fence never stole pencils or books in school, and made it a point of honor never to take nibbles from a grocer's open barrels. The one that returned mother's things even to the uttermost pin returned the things borrowed from others. It isn't the value of the flower or the pin or the grocer's goodies—it's the principle. Would there be vandals and thieves and negligent borrowers and trespassers of every description if each mother painstakingly began at the beginning and taught her baby the rights of ownership—her rights and his rights and the rights of everyone under her roof—but chiefly her own rights—for hers are easiest and most likely to be trodden under foot.

Another friend who came in while baby was replacing some magazines he had left on the floor said: "Oh, let him have a good time. He'll never be a baby but once." I see to it that he has a good time. That is my pleasure and a large part of my duty, but it is also a part of my duty to see to it that his good time is not at the expense of any other human being. In training him to be just and thoughtful of me, I am also preparing a just and thoughtful husband for some other woman's daughter and a man who will be on the square with the rest of the world. I am warned by the fact that he is a baby but once and that I must spare no pains to "train him up in the way he should go."—Goldie Robertson Funk in American Motherhood.

Questions on April Reading.

When and how should training in respect to the possessions of others begin? What do you think of the father's advice? Might it not answer the purpose to put the child's hand behind him or down at his side while firmly repeating the denial? Is it not better to try other methods of punishment first, before resorting to whipping in any form? Is not obedience of such importance as to be secured at the cost of the spitting of the hand even at this early age? Will any amount of spitting instill the principle of obedience unless accompanied by firmness? Is firmness necessarily harshness? When parents are not agreed as to a course of training to be pursued should it be mentioned in the presence of the child? What did it accomplish for the child to provide a place for his books similar to that for those of the other members of the family? Of what value to the child was their mother's insistence and persistence in regard to the belongings of others? Would you question this mother's method of gratifying the child's desire to see things? Might not too great indulgence in this way tend to foster a habit of idle curiosity? What may be avoided in the way of annoyance to visitors by daily expecting a child to let other people's things alone? Can a child tell by his mother's tone whether she really expects him to do what she commands? Do you approve of this mother's rule? What is the effect of nagging? How may the habit of careless borrowing be prevented? What peace of mind was secured by this mother's course? What great things in later life may result from keeping hands off the overhanging flower or the grocer's open barrel? Which will result in greater happiness, to allow the child to gratify himself in babyhood, or to be denied sufficiently to give him a strict sense of regard for the possessions of others? Is it important for the mother to see that her child has a good time? What must his good time not intrude upon? What does his mother accomplish for his future associates when she trains him to respect the rights and possessions of others?

Request for Prayers.

Sister Ross, of Montrose, Iowa, requests the prayers of the church on behalf of her afflicted eyes, that she may be blessed with sight to read the church papers, which would be a great joy to her.

Letter Department

GIFFORD, IDAHO, March, 1911.

Editors Herald: The work is on the increase here. We have prayer meetings now and are thinking of organizing a Sunday school. Elder T. C. Kelley held a series of meetings here this fall and winter which did a lot of good. He was called to time by a Baptist minister for a four-day debate, which went off nicely. Brother Kelley's opponent said he had been studying Mormonism for thirty years. I do not know how much longer he would have to study to be able to overthrow it.

Brother Kelley baptized four after the debate. He has worked up a good interest both in and out of the church. We are all hoping he will be sent here for another year. The Saints are thinking of building a church house in the near future. Ever praying for the advancement of the angel's message, and the welfare of Zion,

Your brother,

LAKE SILLIS.

COLUMBUS, KANSAS, March 17, 1911.

Editors Herald: After reading editorial in HERALD of March 8, "The troubled mind," we wish to express our sincere approval. Of the wisdom, truth, fullness, and present need of the counsel given therein, there can be no doubt to the minds of those who observe the world: the wild, worried, mad rush of humanity in search of that which they think will give rest, peace, satisfaction. They turn in all directions, except to Him who is able and willing to give them just the things that would bring happiness.

Ignorance of divine law, natural and temporal, is the greatest curse of the age. Many are ignorant because they do not wish to learn, or think they have learned it all, or know enough. Yet they are selfish, unthankful, and covetous, without love or natural affection for one another. Surely the ways of the world lead us away from God. Come out of Babylon, oh, ye my people. Turn from the ways of the world unto God and his commandments. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." If we trust entirely in our fellow-man for protection and safety, do we believe in God and his promises? What kind of example are we, to our brothers, sisters, children, and the world? Do we practice what we preach?

Come up higher, come up higher,
If you would my will obey.
Rise above the worldly mire
That's around you day by day.

Thus you may obtain my Spirit
To be with you on your way,
From this life to that eternal,
At the dawn of endless day.

Dear Saints, let us seek unto the Lord for aid and comfort, wisdom and faith. Individual righteousness is the need of the hour. Turn unto him who will give peace and rest to our souls.

Would like to correspond with some two or three Saints at Seattle, Washington, and in Wyoming. To any who will write me and give the information sought, we will be very thankful and send postage to them.

CHARLES C. RANDALL.

ESCATAWPA, MISSISSIPPI, March 18, 1911.

Editors Herald: It probably would be of some interest to some to know how our district is improving. The work has been organized here somewhere about twenty-five or thirty years, but never has it been known to prosper as it has for the past six years. Never have the people been so interested in the work as they are now. The district had been dragging about three branches along all the time for eight or ten years. Now we haven't any that are not alive. We now have five branches. The district numbers about six hundred. I am glad to say that every quarter, our reports from the branch have shown increase of from two to twelve. If every district in the world has done this well, the past year will be the banner year. We have had some good missionary workers with us the past six years. I know the good Lord had a hand in the sending of those men.

The South is white already to harvest. Who will thrust in his sickle and reap? The night is fast approaching. Can we help to reap if we are not preachers? How? By helping others to see the light, and that they need it. Do not fear to tell people who you are and to offer a paper or tract; and the greatest of all, do not fail to pay your tithes and free will offerings. Just think of how many more preachers could be sent out this year if every Saint had averaged two dollars each. Let us arouse, shake off the coals from our garments, and make this coming conference year one of the best in the history of the church. Let us see if we can not contribute enough to keep up two missionaries' families.

I wish to say in conclusion that the Sunday school work is growing. We have grown from two schools to six in the past six years, and there are good prospects for two more in the near future. May God speed the work till we all come in a unity of the faith. Our conference at Theodore, Alabama, was a success; more visitors attended than ever were known to attend before, some coming one hundred and twenty-five miles. There were three baptized and one ordained to office of elder.

I would like to tell some of our experiments, but space will not permit. I presume some of the boys have not forgotten our straw hotel. I am happy in the work, and hope to do all I can for the advancement of it. Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may have success in the work. I have many grand testimonies of the work being true.

Your brother in the faith,
A. G. MILLER.

Russell-McVey Debate.

The Russell-McVey debate was held in Fayette City, Pennsylvania, January 26, 1911, continuing twelve evenings, Elder R. C. Russell representing the Reorganized Church. The usual church propositions were discussed, also the Book of Mormon, and "Resolved, There is no redemption for man (spirit) beyond this present life."

Mr. McVey's first speech was more of a prayer meeting exhortation than an effort to prove his church in harmony with the New Testament organization. This compelled Brother Russell to force the issue, which he did so vigorously that Mr. McVey tried to ridicule Brother Russell's effort by telling a story of a man who trained an ox by getting in the yoke with it. One day the ox ran ahead and he called for some one to head off that ox. Will have to head off friend Russell; he is not in the lead. In telling the story McVey seemed to have got muddled and got it twisted, which gave Russell an opportunity to get this off with decided effect: "Ladies and gentlemen, I didn't know I came here to be yoked up with an ox!"

Mr. McVey finally tried to prove his church in harmony with New Testament by using an illustration of a black horse with three white feet and a scar on his left shoulder. "That horse became lost and a man was sent out to find him. It was easily distinguished by the marks on him, so we can easily find the church. It must have every distinguishing mark of identity." McVey saw whom he had to contend with when Russell got after that illustration. Under the skill and wit of Russell, that horse went through a marvelous process of metamorphosis, and developed into a goat; into monstrosity of a horse with seven legs; and finally became a white elephant on McVey's hands. Russell wanted to know how a black horse could have three white feet! A monstrosity; like his church. After this McVey will say "a black and white horse." McVey quickly gave up trying his wit with Russell.

The apostles were placed in the church until we all come to a unity of the faith. Are we all in the unity of the faith? No. Then the apostles are still in the church, just as Christ placed them, and we don't need to have living apostles to-day. Russell wanted to know if Judas was still in the church. He proved there were twenty-one apostles called. Are they all in the church of to-day?

McVey labored hard to prove there was not a total apostasy from primitive Christianity. Among the matter offered by Russell was Campbell's statement from Christian System, page 154: "Since the grand apostasy was completed." McVey effectively repudiated Campbell and Campbell's work by saying: "If the proposition read that I was to prove we were in harmony with Alexander Campbell, Russell might have some grounds to object on; but we are here to prove we are in harmony with the New Testament." Brother Russell then read from the Leader-Way, a Disciple organ, containing an article written by McVey on Baptism, contending against one of his brethren, and he quotes Campbell to prove his point. Russell asked if he could not quote Campbell, just as well as McVey.

In the published debate between McVey and Bro. F. J. Ebeling, a synopsis of a sermon by a Doctor Thompson was published in some of the first editions, but was omitted in the later issues. Doctor Thompson says he would not try to prove the continuation of the church before an intelligent audience; that no man living was able to do so! Russell used this against McVey with telling effect. He said that if the church did not continue to exist, then there would of necessity have to be a restoration. Campbell says the church was hid under the rubbish of ages. Luther, Knox, Wesley, Calvin, etc., went to the rubbish heap and got what they wanted and then Campbell came along and took what was left and said, "If the apostles were here they would weep at our effort." Campbell seemed to be a collector more than a restorer. What did he restore; what did he give to the world which was not in existence before he was born? McVey entirely ignored these points. Russell had a chart, showing the birth and development of the Disciple Church, which worried McVey. Also, a chart of three organizations: The Disciple Church, ours, and the New Testament church.

McVey said that dead apostles are still in authority and no necessity for living ones; and only one who witnessed the resurrection of church could be an apostle. Russell wanted to know if Judas was an apostle. Christ said he was; called him such; the record says he was; and yet he didn't witness the resurrection of Jesus Christ. If dead apostles are still in authority, why not dead deacons, or dead elders? Then we would have a dead church, like my opponent's, having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof. "If we have authority to preach we have authority to baptize," came in for an airing with, "Who in the name of common sense ever said you had authority to preach?"

Russell forced the issue of presidents in the church by demanding of McVey where the head of his church was. He showed by evidence that Alexander Campbell was head when he lived, but is now dead—"but perhaps though dead he is still in authority!" McVey claimed Christ was the head of the church. Russell wanted to know if he was directing the organization as he did when on earth. He proved by Campbell that church was organized in days of Christ after the pattern of the Sanhedrin, which had, according to Fasset's Bible Encyclopedia, pp. 96 and 140, a president and two counselors. A lot of splendid matter was presented that was evidently an eye opener to McVey on this point. Russell illustrated the position of McVey in this way. The government of the United States has a Senate, President, cabinet, judges, mayors, constables, etc. It eventually is buried in a mass of rubbish and one comes forth who claims to have restored this government and produces a lone constable as evidence!

Said McVey: "Apostles were not officers, were only placed in the church for a limited time. I defy him to show apostles were officers. They were to direct the people of God in all ages and they are doing that work by this word of God and we don't need any modern apostles and any other book. The twelve apostles are doing that work as God intended they should. It is claimed by our opponents that Judas held an office, because it is written, 'Let his bishopric another take,' and 'the office of an bishop,' etc. I will show from three Bibles that the 'work' is referred to and not the position. New Speech Testament: 'Let his work another take.' Syriac Translation, Acts 1:20: 'Let another take his service.' Rotherman: 'Let oversight another one take.'" This argument of McVey received its death blow when Russell quoted from Campbell's Living Oracles, page 206, "Let another take his office." If the twelve apostles were to direct the church for all time, then how is it we have only five out of the twelve doing that work. Were there really only five needed then? What about the twenty-one apostles who were called; were they not needed to direct the church? If these five are directing McVey's church through the word, have not the Methodists and Baptists and Presbyterians a priority claim, along this line. Have the Disciples a monopoly?

McVey made a very feeble effort at setting up his organization. He spent much of his time on points we agreed upon. What arguments he made for his organization would have applied to any other sectarian church equally as well.

Brother Russell made a splendid defense for our position. People could see the difference between the tactics of the two men. Mr. McVey never even touched his proposition in his first speech, while Brother Russell sailed right in and set up the church so solid that his opponent couldn't touch it. McVey attacked priesthood, and quoted from section 104:8, and claimed according to revelations of Joseph Smith no one had the right to hold the Aaronic priesthood except a literal descendant of Aaron, and quoted various authorities in evidence. This was one of the very few original or somewhat new points he made. Brother Russell read the whole paragraph, which explained itself.

McVey asked for a sign; asked that he be struck blind, etc. Russell called the attention of the people to the fact that he didn't ask for a blessing, but a curse! McVey claimed 1 Chronicles 4:9 was evidence that they were the last apos-ties. Russell wanted to know which of the twenty-one were last. McVey said David Whitmer apostatized, therefore the church was not the church of Christ. Said Russell: "If that was the case, because some departed from the faith in Christ's time, then it was not the church of Christ!"

McVey quoted Bible texts showing that many of the miracles of Christ and the apostles were done openly and often upon those not of the faith, but Latter Day Saints claim we should not ask for a sign, as miracles are not performed to make people believe, and read Doctrine and Covenants, section 63, that miracles or signs should be shown to the wicked, so let's have a sign. You can't perform a miracle; never have been any performed. Let's have the evidence where there was ever one performed publicly or in private? Russell answered this by reading from Hayden's History of the case of Joseph Smith and Mrs. Johnston.

Every objection McVey brought up was anticipated and the matter was on hand to meet it. As evidence of the variety of matter on hand to meet every possible objection: McVey attacked our position on baptizing children when eight years old. Claimed they could not reason and understand what they were doing, therefore they were not baptized because they had repented, and it was not for the remission of sins. Russell quoted from one of the high authorities of the country who claimed that when a child reached eight years its brain was all in and was fully matured.

The next proposition was on present revelation. McVey argued if there is present revelation, must be a necessity for it. What are the necessities? I make a plea for the Bible against modern revelation. Romans 1:16-18 says the gospel is in the Bible; what is the necessity for further revelation? Romans 3:21 shows God's righteousness has been revealed, therefore no necessity for further revelation. If the Bible contains the gospel, can you see a necessity for another gospel to be revealed? Galatians 1:8 says we must not preach any other gospel than what Paul preached, and that gospel is in this book. Point out a single spiritual want of the human family which has not been met in the Bible. 2 Peter 1:3, testifies that all things have been given which pertain unto life and godliness. This is the final verdict in the matter.

Russell answered, Romans 1:16-18 was written about 58 A. D. Mr. McVey gives a quotation written some thirty years later showing they didn't have everything necessary. Twelve hundred years before Christ the Old Testament made the statement that the law of the Lord was perfect, converting the soul. Then, the New Testament was not necessary? All revelation given was not a revelation of the gospel plan. Some revelations were for the direction of the ministry, some to the Saints, for encouragement, some in the way of prophecy, etc.

A list of questions were asked of McVey regarding manner of procedure in conducting the services of the church, and he was asked to show where the Bible directed what to do in such cases. McVey claims God has quit talking but Satan has not! Russell asked McVey repeatedly to tell the people how he was called. He referred to the call of Timothy for his authority! Russell certainly did make that look ridiculous. He read all of Paul's instructions to Timothy and then applied them to McVey and it was so effectual that he will never claim Timothy's authority again.

McVey took a peculiar position regarding the two witnesses who were to be slain and were to lie on the street of Jerusalem for three days and a half. The Old and New Testaments were the witnesses and they were dead because they were wrapped up in the dead languages! Russell closed his argument by tracing the "Antis" from the Garden of Eden down to such as McVey. Satan said, You shall not; and some of his agents have been at it ever since. They are constantly denying, just as McVey is denying and saying you shall not receive the Holy Spirit to-day; shall not receive a call from heaven; shall not receive the blessings promised in Mark 16. It is the same old not. Will you follow a "not"?

The Book of Mormon was the next proposition. With all the matter which has been published against the book by men of more or less intelligence, McVey used very poor judgment and was entirely lacking in skill in that which he presented. It was a rehash of Braden, Lamb, Bays, and Neal. He made no original arguments and made a gallery appeal all the way through. Russell showed the teaching of the book on various subjects, but McVey never attempted to answer them or show the doctrinal or ethical teachings of the book were not in harmony with the Bible or good morals. He quoted Lamb, who pays tribute to the excellent teaching of the Book of Mormon and says some of the sermons are so earnest and contain such wholesome advice that a person is almost won in spite of himself. The usual Bible arguments were skillfully marshaled, and McVey could not overthrow them. Russell presented some fine archaeological evidence. As McVey was not up on the subject, he could not answer the matter presented.

McVey claimed he dug his arguments out himself. Russell showed they were points made years ago by debaters and McVey was passing them off as his own. He turned to him and asked, "Haven't you read Braden?" "Very little." "Well, there is very little in Braden." Psalm 85 was explained by McVey to mean that God promised his people should have the riches of the earth, their food, and he told the truth; therefore truth would spring out of the earth. Russell answered, cabbage and leeks were to come out of the earth instead of truth. Other nations didn't have anything to eat because promise was not made to them! The stick of Judah and of Ephraim were two nations and not two books as Russell claimed. Russell answered: What a job that scribe did have. He had to write upon the tribe of Judah and upon the tribe of Ephraim, and after they were written upon somebody was to hold these two tribes in their hand! McVey was very weak in his attacks on the Book of Mormon, and Russell had the advantage of him.

The last proposition was, "Resolved, There is no redemption for man (spirit) beyond this present life." While his efforts all along the discussion were very weak, this was his poorest. His mind seemed to be darkened and he could scarcely read without stumbling. He tried to prove that Christ's mercy ceased when the spirit left the body of man, that there would be no thousand years' reign of Christ on the earth, but rather when he came he would usher in the great and final judgment when the righteous would be caught up to remain in the air, while the wicked (of all degrees) would be for ever lost. He dealt at some length with the words, for ever, eternal, and everlasting.

The first three speeches by Russell were spent in building up an affirmative position to show that the mission of Jesus Christ extended beyond this present life, reaching to those in the prison. About fifty passages of scripture were given, with suitable explanations. His effort in the last half hour was highly inspirational, and many eyes were filled with tears as he pictured those who were thought hopelessly lost here, receiving the gospel in the next world and coming forth in a glorious resurrection.

McVey is not a mud slinger, and held himself under fairly good control. He is not a heavy weight, and does not appeal to the better class. This was Brother Russell's first debate, and the experience, no doubt, will be of value to him in his labors.

C. EDWARD MILLER.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. Mary J. Thompson, of Owensville, Indiana, writes: "I am so glad that I have lived to hear the blessed gospel in its purity once more, as it has been almost six years since I have heard any preaching, until the past week. On March 10 Bro. Jacob Halb came to our place, preached nine interesting sermons, and on the 19th baptized one of my sisters. We had the greatest interest during the series of meetings that ever was known here. He was the first Latter Day Saint the people here have heard. The people think and speak well of him. I have never regretted the step I made when I came into the fold of God."

Bro. Grady W. Entrekin, of Biloxi, Mississippi, writes: "We are still in the faith, for which we feel thankful. Brother Slover has been with us a few weeks previous and preached some fine sermons. He is loved by all who know him. We are expecting Brother Vancleave back soon. He is doing good for the Master. He has been laboring in Mobile, and I feel sure some will obey the gospel in that city. The people there are very friendly and sociable. We are anticipating good gardens this year along the gulf coast, as we are certainly having fine weather. People are coming here by the hundreds to spend the summer and to bathe in the briny waters of the great Mexican gulf. I pray the time will soon come when the knowledge of the Lord will cover the earth as the waters cover the sea."

Bro. T. J. Booker, Bay Minette, Alabama, writes: "I have just got back from the conference at Theodore. We had a good time. Three were baptized. There are some good Saints there who are trying to keep the work moving. The work in Bay Minette is in good condition. This branch was dead for some time, but the conference sent some good men here who were able to build up the branch. There has been some good work in the South, so I hope the Lord will see fit to send them back. We have a good Sunday school, and a good prayer meeting. Having been ordained a teacher, I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may be able to do some good. Bro. Albert Warr, the priest, is a bright young man. Pray for us that we may live as officers should."

The writer is engaged in work in this locality [Persia], which contains the president of the Little Sioux District, Brother Pitt. Sitting but a few feet from my repose is the father-in-law of said brother, Father Graybill, whose testimony occurred in a late Journal of History. He is ninety-three years old, born in Ohio, baptized into the early church in 1833, the year of my father's birth. Bent with the unusual weight of years, impaired in speech, dim of sight and dull of hearing, his strong recollection still recounts the events of those eventful days. He tells of the Martyrs; of Kirtland in the thirties; of Far West and its capitulation and expulsion; of the removal to Nauvoo and the rise and fall of that ill-fated place; of hearing the Martyr designate young Joseph. In fact, he saw the stones laid that have proved to be the great landmarks of our history. And he bore his part. As an elder of Israel he said his say. From all gleaning it is evident that while secular history may neglect his name, the world is better for his having been in it. Many weary feet have found ease at his doorsill, many hungers have been satisfied, many thirsts quenched, and many have been helped on their way. Indeed, the unwritten record of charities and humane deeds would be less had not this sire been born.

A wave of scarlet fever and several quarantines is an impediment to preaching in Persia. Hence we try the country rural. And I have often found a soul satisfaction as well as physical benefit come to me in consequence of such a change, after extended city work. All ought to hear the gospel, but Paul seemed to make for central points. The cry from Jerusalem the golden, and from the isles and continents that are, imparts to missionary minds for the next few weeks this solemn apprehension: "Who will be sent?" Something must be done, some one must go to those who sit in darkness. He who says he will not go says that if anyone goes it must be some one else.

Hoping the Sun of Righteousness will beam upon the General Conference, directing its business and its appointments, I remain,

Yours for Christ and his chosen,

March 16.

ALVIN KNISLEY.

Oklahoma.

Seventeen years ago I turned from the wickedness of this world and sought the living God. I know that Job was right when he said, "Man that is born of woman is of few days and full of trouble." I had been taught that God did not reveal himself in this day and age of the world. I knew if this was true God had changed. The Bible says the Lord changes not (Malachi 3: 6). Again I learned that when God had a people on earth he always revealed himself. When Jesus Christ was on earth he said, "Seek, and ye shall find."—Matthew 7: 7. Paul said, God "hath made of one blood all nations of men, for to dwell on all the face of the earth; and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from everyone of us."—Acts 17: 26, 27.

So it was my happy lot to hear the gospel just as it was taught by Jesus Christ and his apostles, with all of its blessings and gifts and church organization as we find it recorded in the twelfth chapter of 1 Corinthians.

When I accepted the gospel, was buried with Christ in baptism and confirmed, I received a mission, not from man, but from Jesus Christ. For sixteen years I have been trying to teach all people to have faith in God, repent of their sins, be baptized, and have hands laid on them by divine authority for the reception of God's Holy Spirit (see Acts 8: 17, 18), promising that if they would live a righteous life, doing all of God's commandments he would be with them and they be prepared to meet Jesus Christ when he comes to reign a thousand years.

Because I preached this I have been persecuted. While standing in defense of the gospel I have had rocks and eggs thrown at me. They even attempted to put snakes on me while in the stand. But I rejoice to know this latter day work is true. I can say like Job of old, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," and that in the near future he will stand upon the earth, and though death may feed upon my body, yet in my flesh I shall see God, if I remain true to the end. I have had many trials since I have been preaching the gospel, but I knew the cross was before the crown. In all my trials the Lord has been with me and blessed me in my labors.

During the sixteen years I have been preaching I have baptized two hundred and twenty noble people, and many of them have been ordained to the ministry and are doing a good work. I feel like what little I have done has not been in vain.

My health has been very poor for six years, but by the help of God I am doing all I can. I have been sick two months this year, but have been able to preach one hundred and forty sermons, baptize eighteen people, and did a good deal of other church work. I am feeling well at this writing; hope to do a good year's work this year.

The work in this district is moving along. A good work has been done this last year. Bro. Lee Quick, missionary in charge, has been with us and has done a good work.

May God bless the forthcoming conference and his work everywhere. May the church soon be in a condition to carry out all the Lord requires at our hands. Asking an interest in the prayers of all.

Your brother,

WILBURTON, OKLAHOMA.

E. A. ERWIN.

Minnesota.

I have for some weeks been promising myself to write to the HERALD, to let its many readers know how the cause of Zion is moving in Minnesota.

Like many other parts of the Lord's vineyard, there are some things encouraging and some discouraging. Were the writer to dwell on either phase, it would not tell the truth as it is. So long as Satan wields his mystic power, or until his work is done, the Saints' warfare will not be without discouragement. The heat and conflict of the hour is only God's means of proving the material that in us lies. Our constancy and willingness in service proves our faith; our doubts and failures prove our weakness. The sacred history of the past repeats this story over and over.

Our branches in Minnesota are mostly small, and quite a number of our membership are scattered. And though there have been some additions from time to time, and earnest efforts made by Saints and missionaries, yet there has not been the progress made as in some other fields. There are reasons for this. It will be observed by those who look at the map of Minnesota, that it lies on the borders of the great rich prairies of the Dakotas, and Canadian northwest. Many of the Saints who have toiled long in the timber and small fields of Minnesota have been induced to move west, to broader and richer fields. Perhaps I should not neglect to say that some have become helpers and faithful workers in those new fields, but the work in Minnesota has felt the loss.

Notwithstanding the above and other hindering causes, I think some progress is being made. Last year, though the missionary help was very limited, quite a goodly number were baptized, and others are investigating, whom we hope will accept in time.

We have a few earnest Sunday school workers who are doing a good work, and we hope the time may soon come when others may realize the importance of the Sunday school work and take a more lively interest in it.

Last year there were two new church buildings built in the district: one near Bemidji, and one in Minneapolis. The Saints of the latter place are hoping to get a city missionary appointed to the Twin Cities, Minneapolis and Saint Paul. It is a good field for missionary labor.

Our ever earnest and pleasant old Bro. W. W. McLeod, of Cormorant, has passed to his rest. He was well known to many of the Saints of Minnesota. His kindly, pleasant demeanor won the friendship of all who knew him. He acted as Bishop's agent some years ago.

Quite a number of the church's faithful missionaries have labored in years past in Minnesota. Some of them have gone to their rest, but all are kindly remembered by the Saints here. Brn. T. W. Smith, Alexander H. Smith, and T. C. Kelley are among the number. The writer has been quite busy the past year and found plenty of opportunity for missionary labor most of the year, except through the severe cold weather of January. The attendance at meetings has not always been large. But a few have shown some interest in various places, and we have tried to make the best of the opportunity offered, and hope that when the final day of accounting comes, some good may be found recorded.

I am glad to note the progress being made by the church in its various fields of labor, and hope we as a church may keep in line with the movement of the times, fitting ourselves to receive additional spiritual power, from year to year, as we reach the great events to come.

In gospel bonds,

LEONARD HOUGHTON.

CLITHERALL, MINNESOTA, March 7, 1911.

Indiana.

Although we have not been baptizing any during the winter, Elder John Harp and the writer have been very busy preaching the word. Part of the time we have been separated, thinking we might catch up with the work, but it seems the longer we labor the farther behind we get. We are receiving calls from new places. It often makes us think of the admonition of the Master, "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest." My prayer is that God may send them in the coming conference year. The people always ask us to come back soon, but as we have so much to do they get to thinking sometimes we are never going to get back.

Although we can not get over the field as often as we would like to and feel we ought to, yet we can notice many improvements throughout the Southern Indiana District. The Saints are coming up higher, and many outsiders that have been careless and prejudiced are now investigating the angel's message. In some places the people tell us they have never had as large a crowd as we have been having this winter. Just closed a two-week meeting at Griffin, Indiana. Had a crowded schoolhouse every night, and there seem to be many quite interested. I think a good work can be done in that place if it is followed up.

I started meetings here night before last and had a full schoolhouse both nights. This is altogether a new opening, and there are other schoolhouses near-by that we can get, but as the time to start for conference is near, we will not open any new places until after conference.

I was not intending to go to conference, but was shown in a dream that I was to go. May God bless all who are assisting in the building up of Zion, and may they have wisdom given them to do the work aright, that Satan may have no power to overthrow them.

In gospel bonds,

JACOB HALB.

OWENSVILLE, INDIANA, March 14, 1911.

Scandinavia.

In a recent letter from Bro. Peter Muceus, our missionary to Scandinavian countries, written to Bro. H. A. Stebbins, he writes from Copenhagen, Denmark, as follows:

"I have never enjoyed my work better than I do now, nor been more blessed. There seems to rest upon me such real, true contentment. The winter has passed very pleasantly. We have had good meetings in this city. Some people have become interested and two will be baptized in a few days. They were formerly members of the Utah church. Others are investigating, and I shall try to teach all who wish to know both sides of the story. This city is a large field for patient, hard work. But I have never felt more interested than I do now, nor had more peace and joy over my efforts. I thank our heavenly Father for his goodness to me. Truly when we earnestly strive to do God's will his yoke is easy and his burden is light.

"We have had a very mild winter in this country so far; no snow, and seldom below freezing. I have bathed in the sea once or twice a week all winter. Have been away from home and family four months, but my wife and children have been well (at Porsgrund, Norway,) and she keeps busy and the time flies rapidly in our work wherever we are. I should enjoy seeing you and the many dear Saints in America, whom I learned to love. We do not have such associations in these countries, but we are engaged in a glorious cause and must be patient and wait until conditions make it possible to return to America. As our aim is to serve our fellow-men, we are happy that we can be of service in this land.

"I am very grateful, too, for your getting subscriptions for the Sandhedens Banner. Money is becoming scarce to publish it. We are in arrears to the printer. The most of the Scandinavian Saints in America seem to have forgotten our need. Some are prompt in payments, others send barely enough to pay for the paper; while some do not pay anything, though we continue to mail the paper to them regularly. I would like to travel among the Norwegians and Danes in Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Illinois, and elsewhere, to work up an interest in the gospel cause over here. I will write the brethren you name in LaSalle County, for we still send the papers to all those who started subscriptions over two years ago."

Brother Muceus has been laboring in Norway and Denmark for nearly ten years, and has been faithful and diligent in his work. Subscriptions sent to Sandhedens Banner are of great benefit to the cause. Scandinavian Saints should try to aid Brother Muceus' work.

News From Branches.

Independence, Missouri.

Twenty or more young ladies of the Ladies' Athletic Club, robed in becoming gymnasium suits, with about eighty of their friends met at the hall on the 14th inst. The members went through with their exercises in physical culture, stepping gracefully to the rhythm of piano strains. They had been well drilled for the occasion. Added to this delightful entertainment were a spirited basket ball game, a humorous reading by our gifted Sister Briggs, and serving of sweet meats.

The church meetings the past week have been very interesting, the attendance at Wednesday night prayer meeting being 150. Many of the elders preparing for General Conference were present.

At the sunrise prayer service on Sunday, the 19th, two of our young brethren, Jesse Roberts and Paul Craig presided, and although there was a small attendance, several bore testimony, and such was the import of their words, many were impressed with a desire to heed them: "We need greater power in prayer," said they. "We need to concentrate our energies; we eat too much, and we should often fast at this present crisis: we need to have more interest in self, so that we may be of more benefit to others. We have the same chance that the world has, and beside, we have the Spirit to help us."

At Sunday school there was an attendance of 834; 96 teachers and 86 visitors. At the morning service Brother Joseph was present. Romans 8:2 furnished the theme for Bro. M. H. Bond's discourse on "the philosophic basis of the atonement." "Some think," said the speaker, "that we believe the greatest thing on earth is the church; but we can say the dearest thing on earth is truth; there is nothing so true or so sound as the religion of Jesus Christ."

At the afternoon meeting there was not a seat unoccupied, and fifteen bore testimony.

The Daughters of Zion, 60 in number, met and had a profitable discussion of the topic, "A story of an impetuous father." The brethren who had been invited, with the exception of four brave ones, were not present. A beautiful musical number and an excellent paper completed the program. We must also mention the reading of the treasurer's annual report, also that of the secretary who, we are pleased to note, is about to round out a tenure of office amounting to nearly a score of years. The entire enrollment of the society is 148; average attendance 28.

Quite a number attended the special services at the Central Church, Kansas City, in the evening, which fact appeared to decimate our attendance a little. Our beloved brother and fellow townsman, Thomas W. Chatburn, who was the speaker, seemed not to have grown less resourceful in speech since we last heard him. Taking for his text the words, "As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings, so the Lord alone did lead him," the preacher waxed eloquent in his delineation of the beautiful word picture, and its lesson as applied to the people of God.

The Ladies' Aid Society served refreshments on Monday evening, donating the proceeds to the hall fund, as is usual.

We mention also the opening of the new city hall on Tuesday afternoon, it being a public reception at which the mayor, city officers, councilmen (including our brother B. J. Scott), and employers acted as a reception committee. The Independence band, also piano and orchestral music, and a lavish display of floral decorations were fine and important features of the occasion. ABBIE A. HORTON.

Flint, Michigan.

We have been having fine meetings, especially our prayer meetings. God's Spirit has been with us and we felt encouraged to press on. On February 5 the Spirit spoke through Elder D. E. Dowker, calling Bro. Fred Harder to the office of teacher and Bro. William Hutchins to the office of priest. It was a time of rejoicing. Each testimony was as an admonition. Elder J. A. Grant preached for us on February 25. The two following nights, Elder R. Etzenhouser was here with his stereopticon and showed views of the prehistoric specimens found in Michigan. It was encouraging to see how God is working out his purposes and caring for his work.

"His purposes will ripen fast,
Unfolding every hour;
The bud may have a bitter taste,
But sweet will be the flower."

What a bitter bud the Book of Mormon was! It has stood the test for many years and when these records are deciphered and the world will have to acknowledge the book as divine, then how sweet will be the flower!

At present Elder William Davis, of Ubly, Michigan, is with us, and much good is being accomplished. Many are investigating and some are nearly ready for baptism. Last evening Elder G. W. Burt, of Beaverton, Michigan, was with us, and spoke a few encouraging words.

We have occupied our new church basement since November 27, 1910, and it is very nice and comfortable. Our orchestra is improving. We have music at Sunday school and preaching services. Our Religio is progressing and we feel encouraged. MARCH 14, 1911. JENNIE BENJAMIN.

Saint Louis, Missouri.

Since last report Elder H. O. Smith, en route to General Conference, passed through the city and favored us with a good sermon. Elder J. A. Tanner has also been with us and gave some edifying instruction.

District conference met in Saint Louis, March 18 and 19, the next meeting to be in Lansdowne June 17 and 18, 1911. A good spirit prevailed and a pleasant social time was enjoyed. One was baptized, a brother converted from the mission. He expressed himself as having received greater peace than he had ever known.

Bro. G. F. Barraclough preached to the assembled conference body in the morning and Brother Tanner in the evening. The prayer service was well attended and many strong testimonies as to the blessings of the latter day work were borne. Special prayer was offered for the sick and afflicted ones. Delegates were appointed to General Conference.

Our aged Bro. John Molyneaux passed away March 5, being almost 85 years of age. His funeral service was preached by Bro. T. J. Elliott, March 7, at the church. He was baptized when eight years old in England, being a soldier of the cross for over seventy-six years. His last words are said to have been, "I have fought the fight. I am glad I have kept the faith."

We pray God's blessing on the coming General Conference, that God's Spirit will reign and his people be blessed.

The Bishopric.

NOTICE OF APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT.

The Saints and Friends of the District of Mobile, Alabama: Please take notice that upon the resignation of Bro. W. L. Booker, former Bishop's agent of the Mobile District, appointment is duly made of Bro. Frank Stiner, address Theodore, Alabama, R. F. D. 1, Box 6. Brother Stiner is duly authorized to fill the office of Bishop's agent in and for the district herein named, and to perform all duties usually devolving upon agents of districts of the Reorganized Church.

The Bishopric, in making change of agents upon the resignation and notice of Bro. W. L. Booker, also desire to extend special thanks to Brother Booker for the faithful manner in which he has performed the duties of agent in and for said district for a number of years past. We trust the Lord will specially bless and direct Brother Booker in his future labors.

We also bespeak for Brother Stiner the good will, the assistance and ever ready help of the Saints and friends of the Mobile District, and hope that not one member of the district organization shall forget, or fail to lend a helping hand to Brother Stiner in his work during the present year, that when his report is made at the conclusion of the year, there may be contained therein the names of every member in said district, with some amount as parties have been able to give, showing one's efforts in the work of the Master. Trusting the Lord may bless and prosper the helpers who thus put forth a hand, I am, in behalf of the Bishopric,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

Beware of Him.

The Saints everywhere are warned against one L. L. Gott, who was a member o the church, Brush Creek Branch, but was cut off for lying and swindling. He has been cut off twice for similar offenses. He has left his wife and family without support. He imposes upon the Saints where he is not known and secures loans which he does not repay and buys things at stores and has them charged to some one else, etc. He represents himself as an unmarried man. Came near marrying a sister over in Ohio, but through his giving as reference Bro. I. A. Morris, of the Brush Creek Branch, her mother wrote to him and found him out. He has only one eye; is forty-three years old, and is not prepossessing. When last heard from he was at Paris, Tennessee, working his old game among the Saints. A. H. BURROUGHS, Secretary of the Southeastern Illinois District.

XENIA, ILLINOIS, March 17, 1911.

Died.

TRIMBLE.—At Fulton, Iowa, Estella Loretta Trimble, whose maiden name was Larkey. She was born April 27, 1851. Baptized in 1863; married to Edward Trimble November 10, 1870. They had one daughter, Susan Estella, who died

October 1, 1893. Death came very suddenly on March 14, 1911, when she and her husband were at home alone, at 2.30 a. m. She will be greatly missed by Saints and friends. Funeral services were in charge of Elder John Heide, of Fulton, sermon by Elder James McKiernan, of Farmington, Iowa. Interment in the Sutton cemetery near the Latter Day Saints' church, March 17, 1911.

MOLYNEAUX.—John Molyneaux was born in Southport, England, September 17, 1826; baptized in 1834; crossed the ocean and plains in 1853. After two years in the West he refused to indorse evil men and pernicious doctrines, and returned to Saint Louis, Missouri, about 1856, remaining ever after a staunch adherent to the work. His was a life of struggle, but with firmness and faith he persevered to the end, which occurred March 5, 1911. The loved ones, relatives, and many friends, did all that fittingly could be done for the one who had so lived among them. Sermon by T. J. Elliott.

BEAL.—Elizabeth D. Beal was born October 15, 1832; baptized January 12, 1896; died December 28, 1910. A companion and six children mourn her loss. She was a dutiful wife and a faithful mother:

"Gone—and the world to go on before?
 Gone with a smile, from the homestead door,
 Dear, faithful heart, to come back nevermore;
 "Sleep, mother, sleep, with your hands on your breast.
 Poor, weary hands! they needed their rest;
 Well have we loved you, but God loved you best!
 'Tis thy God who giveth thee rest."

Services were at Saints' chapel, Beals; sermon by Elder S. F. Cushman.

KENT.—March 3, 1911, Martha Jane Kent, of Denver, Colorado. The sister met with a serious accident some six months ago, by falling down her cellar steps, breaking some of her ribs, and injuring her spine, from which she never recovered. She was born in Indiana, January 2, 1832. She was baptized by the late Elder W. W. Blair, had resided in Denver thirteen years, removing from her old home to be near her daughter, Sr. Theresa Read. Funeral from the daughter's house March 9, in charge of Bishop R. Bullard. Prayer by Elder C. Scott; interment in the Riverside cemetery.

HAZE.—Agnes Haze, at Fort Logan, Colorado, December 6, 1911. Born October 27, 1844, at Leicester, England. Baptized April 27, 1879. Came to Colorado about one year ago to live with her daughter, but the altitude was too much for her weak heart, and she succumbed to heart trouble. Among her papers was found her letter of removal from Vancouver to the Denver Branch, which because of her physical condition she had not presented to the branch. Many receipts from the Bishop's agent show her faithfulness to the work. Funeral at the home of her daughter; sermon by Elder R. Bullard.

PINE.—Walter Miles Pine, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Pine, was born in Viola, Illinois, August 2, 1908, and died March 8, 1911, aged two years, 7 months, and 6 days, with a complication of diseases. Funeral services were held from the residence March 10, conducted by Elder O. E. Sade, of Joy, Illinois, assisted by Elder Robert Monroe. The body was taken to Independence, Missouri, for burial.

Resolution of Condolence.

At the regular meeting of the First Quorum of Teachers, held at Independence, Missouri, March 6, 1911, a committee was appointed and presents the following resolution of condolence:

Whereas, It hath pleased our heavenly Father in his infinite wisdom to remove by death our brother and colaborer, Charles N. Craig, and

Whereas, We recognize that we have lost a faithful brother, his family a loving husband and father, and the community an upright citizen;

Therefore, Be it Resolved, That we, The First Quorum of Teachers, extend to the family of our brother this expression of our sympathy, and the deep sense of our personal loss in this bereavement.

We pray that God may sustain and keep them through the remainder of life, and that finally they, with him, may be permitted to enjoy that rest that remains for the faithful children of God.

In behalf of the quorum,

CHARLES A. GURWELL,
J. A. GOODRICH,
H. J. BADDER,
Committee.

SUMMIT ADDITION

CITY OF INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

The Order of Enoch is placing this beautiful addition on sale, not as a speculation, and whatever is made over the cost price of this land belongs to the Order for the benefit of the poor, and the carrying on the business of the Order. Persons at a distance wishing to purchase property in this addition, if dissatisfied with the purchase after seeing it, will have their money refunded.

Terms of Sale

We would prefer cash, but this does not hinder those of limited means. The Order will make it possible to assist any poor Saint to acquire a home on more reasonable and better terms than could be done in any other way. Elder B. J. Scott of the Independence Stake Bishopric has been placed in charge of the sales of this property, and will assist anyone wishing to see the property.

The Order has also provided a head quarters at 103 South River boulevard, one block from the church, where Saints visiting or contemplating moving to Independence will be made welcome, and will be made comfortably at home. Saints contemplating moving to Independence Stake should confer with the local or general bishopric, which will always be to their best advantage.

THE RELIGIOUS SITUATION IN THE HOLY LAND; CATHOLICS AND PROTESTANTS CLASH IN AMERICA.

Jerusalem, the ancient home of Christianity and of Judaism, seems to be the rallying point for many nationalities and religions. It is the battle ground of tenets; and apparently Christian virtues are little in evidence in the struggle.

The Truth, published in Jerusalem, March 1, 1911, contains an interesting study of the situation at first hand. We quote:

Jerusalem, like Noah's ark, contains within its prescribed limits a heterogeneous multitude of creatures, clean and unclean.

Every phase of thought, every idiosyncrasy, every whim of humanity, every freak of intellect has its worthy representative in this ancient city of Salem.

To our humble knowledge there are in Jerusalem no less than thirty-one classes of people, each of which is imbued with ideas and notions diametrically opposed to the remaining thirty.

Let us begin with the sectarian divisions among the Jews:

1. Extreme Orthodox.
2. Moderate Orthodox.
3. Reformed Jews.
4. Sephardim.
5. Karaites.
6. Hebrew Christians.

AMONGST THE MOHAMMEDANS.

7. Conservative Moslems.
8. Liberal Moslems.

AMONGST CHRISTIANS.

9. Greek Orthodox.
10. Greek Catholics.
11. Latins.
12. Armenians.
13. Copts.
14. Abyssinians.
15. Maronites.
16. High Churchmen.
17. American Free Churchmen.
18. Baptists.
19. Lutherans.
20. Calvinists.
21. Adventists.
22. Sabbatarians.
23. British Israelites.
24. Latter Day Saints.
25. Mormons.

26. Templars.
27. Unitarians.
28. Christian Scientists.
29. Rationalists.
30. Atheists.
31. Pantheists.

All these sectarians, with very few excellent exceptions, hold themselves aloof from each other as if they were created by different deities and fighting for different causes, in different ranks.

It may perhaps interest our readers to learn a few characteristic facts which we have noticed during our residence in Jerusalem.

The stanch orthodox Jews, in order to perpetuate their conservatism and inculcate the same upon the coming generations, strictly interdict their offspring from learning anything but the Talmud and its commentaries. All extraneous books or literature of any description whatsoever, though written in Hebrew, are carefully withheld from their children lest their tender minds be influenced against the traditional orthodoxy.

The reformed Hebrews, who are mightily subventioned and reinforced by their influential confraternity from abroad, wage war continually with their bigoted and benighted brethren. From every direction, the strongholds and citadels of orthodoxy are being vigorously bombarded. The kindergartens, the schools and gymnasiums, have shaken the very foundations of rabbinical Judaism. There the Talmud is treated as a compilation of ancient lore and oriental fables which have lost their applicability and adaptability to the present developed state of civilization.

Hence the unceasing strife and intellectual wrestling between these two great factions in this city of peace.

It has almost become universally proverbial that the numerous Christian sects in Jerusalem can never agree amongst themselves to differ, and very often military intervention is urgently required to maintain order and decency amongst them.

Who does not know that on every Christmas Eve special detachments of Mohammedan soldiers and police are dispatched to Bethlehem to prevent disturbance amongst the various sects whilst worshiping together in the Holy Church of the Nativity.

Apparently friction between Roman Catholic and Protestant clergy in America is becoming more intense. Protestants view with alarm the great increase of Catholic immigration to America. The average daily immigration during 1910 was 2,853 daily; as one writer says, "This means the addition to our population of the equivalent of a town a day, and of a large state every year."

Of this immigration, Josiah Strong, in "Studies in Social Christianity," Homiletic Review, April, 1911, says: "Our former immigration was principally from northern Europe; our present immigration is largely from southern Europe. Our former immigration was largely Protestant; our present immigration is mainly Roman Catholic or Jewish. . . . Those who come to-day are mainly of the peasant class of Roman Catholic Europe, inured by centuries to submission to landlord and to priest."

American Protestants view these increases in Catholic population and power with concern, and profess to see in Catholic criticisms of American institutions an indication of what Catholicism will do when sufficiently entrenched. A case in point is reported in the Kansas City Journal, March 28, 1911. In a speech delivered March 19, Archbishop John J. Glennon, of Saint Louis, is reported to have said:

The world to-day is practically divided into two camps. On one side is the Catholic Church, standing for the religious training of children; on the other the rest of the world, practically united in opposition to the Catholic Church and consequently in opposition to all religious instruction, and against religion itself, an array of the kingdom of Satan against the kingdom of Christ.

The Saint Louis Evangelical Alliance, composed of Protestant pastors, took the matter up very indignantly, according to the report contained in the Journal, and adopted resolutions, the tenor of which is thus set forth:

The alliance's resolutions say it becomes the pope's duty to instruct the archbishop to be more tolerant toward those bodies who have civilized this country and made it possible for Roman Catholics to enjoy privileges they no longer know in France, Portugal, Mexico and other countries, if he would have his church's representatives continue in the favor of the masses of the American people.

In offering the resolution for passage the presiding officer, Rev. Dr. W. J. McKittrick, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, said:

"All who favor this rebuke of small, shallow, contemptible, ecclesiastical narrowness and bigotry will please say 'Aye.'"

The Transient Guest.

Now to and fro
The night winds go,
And seek and are not satisfied;
They seek for him
Who on the dim,
Far eastern hill was crucified.

He held them still Beneath his will
Upon the troubled Galilee,—
They wander now
On Olive's brow,
And unrebuked they vex the sea.

The night dew weeps
Where Jordan sleeps;
And in Gethsemane again

The moonbeams seek
The lowly, meek,
Great Savior of the race of men.

They can not come
To his dark room;
But when at last the night is o'er,
The morning sun
Gives light to one
Who seeks her Master's lowly door.

'Tis open quite,
And filled with light,
For he has risen up new-born,—
A transient guest;
The first and best
To meet and greet the Eastern morn.

And now we know
The green and low,
Last inn to give poor mortals rest
Is brief, at most,
With God as host,
And every man a transient guest.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE LOT OF THE PROOF READER.

One of our elders has said, "The half of this world does not realize how hard it is upon the other half," and when proof reading "Unworthy" in the Home Column of this week, we are made to realize that this elder was wiser than he knew when he uttered the sentence above quoted.

It is not our purpose to herein air all our grief, but simply to correct a few general ideas in regard to proof reading; and we will be pardoned if we cite cases in point for the purpose of illustration.

First. If a proof reader can get his finished work to exactly correspond with the copy furnished him, his work is done thoroughly, and neither he nor the compositor should be found fault with, in order that copyist, author, or editor might go "scot free."

Second. Editors' errors are very often corrected by the proof readers, but this is simply voluntary upon the part of the readers. It is sometimes (this is the exception) thanklessly received by the editors, but more often not realized by them.

Now, as to the case in point. There is much manuscript which is not easily legible and must be copied by the typewriter. Such was the article in which the errors are pointed out. The typewritten copy reads exactly as the article complained of reads, hence the responsibility must be divided between the editor and copyist; yet, let me ask who, from the reading of "Unworthy" would imagine that anyone, except printer and proof reader, was in any way responsible for these errors?

In this same issue of the HERALD is a letter from Bro. W. H. Kelley, of Independence, Missouri, calling attention to some errors in his article, "That mutilated law." Upon examination of our copy we find that not only are the printers and proof readers free from the responsibility of these errors, but the proof reader also called attention to similar errors in this article which the editor took pains to correct after his attention was called. This copy was sent to the author and returned by him to the editors, all three errors and more being contained in the copy which he returned, without criticism.

Now, Brother Kelley does not show any disposition to lay this at anyone's door, but who would understand that the truth is as stated by us, after merely reading the correction?

This little wail does not mean that either printer or proof reader never make mistakes, but we feel that the reading public should know that these and many "corrections" of the past are not what they may seem to be, all "on the printer or proof reader." Authors are constantly being corrected by editors and proof readers; editors are constantly being corrected by readers, authors, and proof readers; it is the proof reader's duty, and the reason he exists is to correct the errors of the printer; and when the finished product is before you, the printer and proof reader get credit for the great bulk of the errors all have made.

RICHARD J. LAMBERT.

SUNDAY SERVICES AND RELIGIO CONVENTION.

So many delegates to the conventions and conference had arrived in Lamoni by Sunday, April 2, that the Sabbath services at the Brick Church had all the flavor of conference time.

The General Superintendent of Sunday schools offered the invocation at the opening of the local school at 9.30, a. m. Many visitors were seen moving from class to class, inspecting the various departments.

The morning sermon was by Elder F. M. Sheehy, of the Twelve, who spoke from the text: "The just shall live by faith." It is by faith that we get in touch with the spiritual realm and life. The Duke of Argyle was not the only one who wrote of and emphasized the reign of law. The latter day seer had also beautifully elaborated the same thing: "That which is governed by law, is also preserved by law." Said the speaker, "Law in force is simply God in action."

At the 2.30 p. m. sacrament meeting, the missionaries availed themselves of the opportunity to bear testimony, and give evidences of God's watchcare in the various fields of labor, notably in Jerusalem, Germany, northwest Canada and Mexico.

At 7.45 p. m., Elder Gomer T. Griffiths spoke on the subject of priesthood, using blackboard illustrations; and among other things, claimed that the Levitical priesthood was a real division of priesthood, having to do with the tabernacle service. The Aaronic and Levitical are now united in what we call the lesser or Aaronic priesthood. Teachers and deacons represent, under the gospel, that part that was Levitical under the Mosaic dispensation.

A special feature at this service was the rendition by the choir of an anthem entitled, "The Restoration of the Gospel," the words being by the late Elder T. W. Smith, and the music by Bro. J. T. Gresty, a professor of music who recently accepted the gospel in Sydney, Australia. In the third verse, the basses and tenors proclaim in stentorian tones:

"And the record hid for ages,
On Cumorah's lonely hill,
Is now come forth in plainness,
According to God's will."

Then follows a labyrinth of harmony, so new and strange that the singers themselves almost doubt that it was written right; for it was full of what seems to be harmonic discords, and the most unusual kind of musical portrayal, in which the singers of each part must absolutely rely on themselves. The composer delineates the elements of doubt, skepticism, mystery and marvel as he gives the following lines their musical setting:

"'Tis Mormon's sacred record,
Hid by Moroni's hand,
'Tis a record of God's people,
On Joseph's promised land."

But there could be no doubt of the future outcome of the work, as in simple, rejoicing tones, were sung,

"And the happy day is coming,
By prophets long foretold,
When Zion all her glory
And beauty will unfold."

As a fitting prelude to the Religio Convention, a delegates' prayer meeting was held in the lower auditorium at nine o'clock Monday morning, April 3, in charge of Brn. J. A. Becker, of Kirtland, Ohio, and J. A. Gardner, of Independence, Missouri.

At 10.20, Elder J. A. Gunsolley, president of the society, announced hymn 22 in the Praises, after which he offered the opening prayer. He remarked that time for business was short and exhorted the delegates to not spend it in useless argument or discussion. The credentials committee made report showing about 800 delegates appointed, with power to cast 1,098 votes. Report was approved and committee continued.

The convention then made permanent organization by electing Elder J. A. Gunsolley chairman, with power to choose an assistant. He selected Elder S. A. Burgess, formerly of Saint Louis, Missouri, now of Lamoni. Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser, of Independence, was made secretary, with power to choose assistants. Bro. J. A. Becker was appointed chorister. The courtesies of the floor to speak, but not vote, were extended to visiting Religians, who might not be delegates. Brn. H. J. Davison and J. E. Wildermuth were appointed to wait on the Twelve and Presidency and inform them the convention was in session, and that any communications, or suggestions would be acceptable.

Full reports were then given from the following general officers: The President, J. A. Gunsolley, of Lamoni, Iowa; Vice-president, R. T. Cooper, of California; General Secretary, Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser, of Independence, Missouri; Treasurer, R. B. Trowbridge, of Independence, Missouri, who reported $1,834.79 on hand, in the care of the Presiding Bishop; General Librarian, S. A. Burgess; Superintendent of home department, Sr. Altha Deam, of Independence, Missouri, who declared that her department was no longer "the sleeping giant of the church," as it was very much alive, and a valuable missionary asset; Superintendent of good literature bureau, Joseph A. Ferris, and his assistant, W. H. Callin, both of Independence. This department had handled over 20,000 pieces of literature the last year, with Australia yet to hear from. After the editor of the Arena department in Autumn Leaves, E. A. Smith, reported, the convention stood adjourned until 2 p. m.

The afternoon session opened by the singing of number 83, Zion's Praises. The Quorum of Twelve was in attendance, as well as many of the Seventies. Brn. E. A. Smith, John Garver, and T. A. Hougas were appointed a committee to draft the following resolution, which was carried unanimously, and ordered sent by wire to the representatives of Decatur County in the Iowa State Legislature:

"To the House of Representatives of the Thirty-fourth General Assembly: State of Iowa. Honorable I. A. Smith, Greeting: The Zion's Religio-Literary Society, the young people's society of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in General Convention assembled at Lamoni, Iowa, April 3, 1911, do hereby protest against the passage of Senate files 56, 57, 58, which do amend or appeal Sections 2306, 2384, 2429 of the Statutes; and do hereby petition your honorable body to not repeal as contemplated in the Sammis Bill."

Thus did the convention place itself on record as in favor of clean legislation on the temperance issue.

After additional report from credentials committee, financial reports were received from the following: The president of the society, general secretary, superintendent of home department, and superintendent of gospel literature bureau. The auditing committee reported the foregoing correct.

The report of the superintendent of the Religio-Sunday school normal department, Sr. Eunice Winn Smith, was read and spread on the minutes, as was also the report of Library Commission.

The report of the executive committee of the society, containing important recommendations, was then read and adopted by sections, and ordered transmitted to the General Conference.

A communication from the Quorum of the Twelve regarding the translation fund was read, also a report from a committee on social purity for girls, which will be printed later.

It was unanimously decided to reimburse Brother Kippe, of Germany, for his services in the translation of the Book of Mormon into German. The sum of two hundred dollars was voted.

The Gospel Literature Bureau asked for financial assistance, and twenty-five dollars was granted to prosecute next year's work.

Amendments to the constitution as proposed in the March issue of Autumn Leaves were then taken up by sections, which resulted in each section being laid on the table.

The convention then adjourned to 7.30 p. m.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Just now Lamoni enjoys an excellent train service. The two noon trains back in from the junction, making six passenger trains a day this week and also the same during the closing days of the conference. Delegates from the various States are arriving by every train, and Elder W. J. Haworth, of Australia, is expected early this week.

More sermons and lectures during the conference will be illustrated by lantern than previously. We are told that the following will be able to give illustrated lectures by the aid of a powerful arc light: Elder Gomer T. Griffiths, on his travels in the Holy Land; Elder R. Etzenhouser, on archæology; and Elder W. J. Haworth, on the Australian mission and the prophecies.

The Quorum of the Twelve has been in session daily for several weeks and we learn that they have their routine work well in hand, while the seven presidents of the Seventies have also been in session, and the First Quorum of Seventy has held one session. With the increase of the quorums, it is getting to be a difficult matter to provide meeting rooms. Some of them are wishing that the conferences could be permanently located and suitable buildings erected for these annual assemblies,—for instance, a Seventies Hall.

VI. BAPTISM; ITS OBJECT.

BY ELDER JOHN KALER.

Latter Day Saints hold that an ordinance to which Christ himself submitted, and which he himself taught, and also sent his disciples abroad in all the land to teach, in his final commission intimately associating it with salvation, can in no sense be considered a nonessential; but to the contrary, it is worthy of careful study and scrupulous observance. Our next number will deal with the scriptural mode of baptism, the writer being Elder Hale W. Smith.—EDITOR.

That water baptism is taught in the New Testament is almost universally conceded by professed Christians; however, they do not agree as to the object of baptism. Some maintain that it is a Christian ordinance, intended to admit us into the fellowship of the church on earth, but that it has nothing to do with our being saved from our sins. They believe that our past sins must be blotted out, or forgiven by reason of conversion, in order to make us worthy of admittance into Christian fellowship, or the church, by baptism.

For this reason they teach that "baptism is an outward sign of an inward grace," or the seal of the church upon the candidate that she accepts his or her statements that God for Christ's sake has forgiven all their sins.

To the writer this theory has always appeared as a beautiful one, from a human standpoint; but from a scriptural standpoint, we find that it has no foundation. Whatever object the wisdom of men may assign to the ordinance of baptism, it can not be satisfying to the honest seeker after truth, unless such object be clearly proven to be the one set forth by the word of God, he being the author of baptism.

To prove that God himself is the author of baptism we cite you to John 1:6: "There was a man sent from God, whose name was John." In verse 33 John says: "He that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost." Here we are told that John was sent to baptize with water, and that God was the one who sent him. Is it reasonable to think that the Allwise Creator would send a messenger to instruct the people to do a thing, and then leave them in the dark as to the real object of it?

God gave a certain prophet a vision and then told him to "write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it."—Habakkuk 2:2. I believe that those servants to whom God assigned the task of writing with regard to the object of baptism, have also made it so plain that he may run that reads, and yet see the object of it.

The wise men of the world differ very widely in reference to this subject, and to submit this question to them would only add confusion and doubt. It was written concerning Jesus, "He spoke as one having authority." His message was a positive one, with a clear and convincing ring to it, entirely unlike the teaching of the self-constituted leaders of the people whose doctrines were based on conjecture, and engendered strife and doubt.

In his resurrected body Jesus appeared to his disciples, and said unto them, "As my father hath sent me, even so send I you." Here we see that they were clothed with the same divine authority that Jesus had received, that they might minister among the people for him, that they might be blessed by receiving a remission of their sins, according to the divine will.

He also said: "Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained."—See John 20:21-23. How could these disciples remit the sins of the people? Another statement of our blessed Savior to his disciples will answer the question: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."—Mark 16:15, 16.

They were to preach the gospel, and all who believed the gospel were to be baptized by one of these men clothed with divine authority, for the remission of their sins. That was the only way they could remit the sins of the people, because the object of baptism was the remission of the sins of those baptized.

Jesus said: "In the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. How many God-sent witnesses can we produce who have testified that baptism is for the remission of sins?"

Concerning John the Baptist, who was sent from God to baptize in water, the Apostle Mark testifies, "John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins."—Mark 1:4. Luke testified that John came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins."—Luke 3:3. Jesus testified that he rose from the dead, "that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem."—Luke 24:47. In fulfillment of this, Peter testified on the day of Pentecost, to three thousand believers, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins."—Acts 2:38.

From these last two witnesses we learn that remission of sins was to be preached among all nations, as Peter preached it on Pentecost, where he said, "Be baptized . . . for the remission of sins."

When Saint Paul was converted to Christ, he testified that one having authority commanded him, saying, "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord."—Acts 22: 16.

Have we the lawful number of divinely appointed witnesses? Yes, more than two or three. We have the disciples Mark, Luke, and Peter; Jesus Christ also, after his resurrection, and last of all the great Apostle Paul; also the first of all, a great prophet, John the Baptist—six in all—who have testified that baptism is for the remission of sins.

Reader, carefully write down the names of those six who have testified that baptism is for the remission of sins, and then write opposite the names of six of the most eminent divines of our age who say that baptism is not for the remission of sins and that it is foolishness so to teach. Then, when you have carefully weighed the testimony of these twelve witnesses (six for and six against baptism being for the remission of sins), take your Bible and turn to 1. Corinthians 1: 21 and read: "The world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe," and verse 25, "Because the foolishness of God is wiser than men; and the weakness of God is stronger than men."

This objection has been urged: "If baptism is for the remission of sins, then why was Christ, who had no sins, baptized?" Answer: The prophet said concerning him, "The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." For our sakes he was obedient in all things. In harmony with this thought we quote from that wonderful prayer of Jesus, in behalf of his disciples: "For their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth."—John 17: 19.

THE HILL CUMORAH.

There has been considerable inquiry of late years relative to the location of the hill Cumorah.

I believe until a few years ago, it was generally accepted that the hill where Joseph Smith found the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated, was the hill Cumorah, spoken of in the Book of Mormon, where the Nephites and Jaredites fell.

Oliver Cowdery so spoke of it in his letters, and Joseph Smith wrote: "Again, what do we hear? Glad tidings of Cumorah! Moroni, an angel from heaven, declaring the fulfillment of the prophets—the book to be revealed."—Doctrine and Covenants 110: 20. The "glad tidings of Cumorah," "the book to be revealed," was the Book of Mormon.

The objector says, "That is not a revelation." Suppose it is not so claimed; who can positively say that Joseph had not received a revelation to that effect? Much was revealed to him that was not written, so he has said. The positive statement he makes of "glad tidings" of Cumorah goes to show he knew whereof he spoke.

These statements coming from Joseph, the first elder in the church, and translator of the Book of Mormon; and Oliver, the scribe and second elder in the church, with similar statements in that early day, in songs and hymns, surely should have some weight in proving that the hill in New York was correctly named.

Some seem to see mountains of difficulty in the way of accepting this as the hill Cumorah, where the decisive battles were fought in which the Jaredite and Nephite nations were exterminated.

The writer has followed closely the arguments that have been offered on both sides, even since objections were raised to this being really the hill spoken of; and has probably given the matter as close study as most anyone, and in his opinion the mountains have faded away to mole hills. To my mind, there is just as much difficulty, and I think more, in trying to locate said hill in Central America or Mexico.

I recognize the fact that, while all North America was settled, at least as far north as the great lakes, both the Jaredites and Nephites had their principal settlements in Central America and Mexico. I find also that during the exterminating wars that preceded the final battles, both Coriantumr, with his people, and the Nephites were driven for years by their enemies before the final conflict, as the following will show:

Shiz pursued after Coriantumr, and he did overthrow many cities. . . . a cry went forth throughout the land, Who can stand before the army of Shiz? Behold, he sweepeth the earth before him! And it came to pass that the people began to flock together in armies, throughout all the face of the land. . . . And Shiz did pursue Coriantumr eastward, even to the borders of the seashore. . . . And Coriantumr having lost his blood, fainted, and was carried away as though he were dead. . . . when Coriantumr had recovered of his wounds, he began to remember the words which Ether had spoken unto him; he saw that there had been slain by the sword already nearly two millions of his people.—Book of Mormon, authorized edition, Ether 6: 53-73.

Then they came to "Ripliancum, which, by interpretation, is large, or to exceed all." Here they fought another battle; then "they fled southward" and pitched their tents "by the hill Ramah," where four years later, when all had gathered, the last battle was fought.

From the above, it is evident they were driven far from the great cities that had been destroyed, and fled "eastward" to the "seashore," thence south to the hill Ramah. The seashore here mentioned could not well be, other than the shore of one of the great lakes; for they could not well go south from either ocean, but they could go south from Lake Ontario to where the plates were found, where there are "many waters, rivers, and fountains," (page 492,) as Mormon said there were in the land where the hill Cumorah was.

The flight of the Nephites was much the same. They began their flight near the isthmus in 367 A. D.

And it came to pass that the Nephites did again flee before them, taking all the inhabitants with them, both in towns and villages. And now I, Mormon, seeing that the Lamanites were about to overthrow the land, therefore I did go to the hill Shim, and did take up all the records which Ammoron had hid up unto the Lord.

Then they moved on,

But it came to pass that whatsoever lands we had passed by, and the inhabitants thereof were not gathered in, were destroyed by the Lamanites, and their towns, and villages, and cities were burned with fire.—Mormon 2: 23, 31.

Still they "marched before the Lamanites," and came to the land Cumorah, "and we did pitch our tents round about the hill Cumorah." This was in the year 384 A. D. and here the struggle was ended.

They had been seventeen years fleeing before the Lamanites, passing by villages, cities, and lands which were all left burned and desolate behind them. There was nothing to induce them to return if they could. Part of the time their flight was such that only "those whose flight was swifter than the Lamanites did escape."—Mormon 2: 33. Surely they had time to reach New York. They were not hovering around the seat of government, they were fleeing for their lives; their chief desire was to put distance between them and their pursuing enemy; but when they saw flight would do them no good they made their fatal stand on the hill Cumorah.

The hill Ramah was south of Ripliancum, a great body of water, and the hill Cumorah was "in a land of many waters, rivers and fountains." Now where was that land? Was it in Central America or Mexico? I think not, for when the people "went forth unto the land northward, to inherit the land; and they did travel to an exceeding great distance, insomuch that they came to large bodies of water, and many rivers; yea, and even they did spread forth into all parts of the land."—Helaman 2: 3, 4.

This is surely the same place, and the location in New York suits exactly. The "large bodies of water and many rivers" were at an "exceeding great distance" from Zarahemla, and so is New York. All admit that all that region was inhabited by both Jaredites and Nephites, and the final struggle may have been there as well as any other place.

I will now notice some other objections. Omer was driven from the seat of government, and in his travels he passed by the hill Shim, where Mormon took all the records from their hiding place when he started on his seventeen year flight before his enemy. From the hill Shim, he passed on beyond the hill Ramah or Cumorah "eastward" to the seashore and settled. Later Nimrah followed with a "few men." Eventually Omer's deadly enemy was killed and all his people, "save it were thirty souls." Then Omer returned to take up the reigns of government. (Pages 714, 715.)

Not a word is said about how far Omer went "eastward," nor how long it required to make the journey. It is mere assumption to say he returned "at once" to take charge of the government. I presume the "thirty souls" that were left in the land were more anxious for his return than he was, and sent messengers after him.

We are asked, How did Coriantumr, who fell in battle, wounded, "and became as if he had no life," get from New York to near the isthmus in time to be picked up and cared for a little while before his death? Who knows he did not fully recover from his wounds? What evidence have we that he was found shortly after the battle? There is nothing to show he was found near the place or shortly after he was wounded. Because he died "nine moons" after he was found, does not prove he died from his wounds, but rather to the contrary. Years before this he had been carried from the field of battle, "as though he were dead." Yet he recovered and killed his great enemy. If he had not recovered from his later wounds, he could not have lived "nine moons." He possibly died of old age.

After the battle was over, he and Ether, who wrote the account of the battle, no doubt, lived together till the latter had finished his record and departed. Then, if not before, he returned to his old home and seat of government to find all deserted and in ruins. He likely still wandered about in a vain endeavor to find companions whom he might have thought escaped destruction, till the time he was found by the people of Zarahemla.

During this time, it appears he had taken a "large stone" and engraved on it the history of himself and the "slain of his people," and of his fathers, and told where they came from;—considerable for a dying man to engrave on stone. (Omni 1.) If it is claimed that Ether engraved it, it would have required time just the same. The stone was probably found with him. Afterwards Mosiah translated it. We are told that they found the land covered with bones, they would have said bodies, if Coriantumr had been found soon after the battle, as some think.

Still we are asked, "How could he cross so many rivers?" The people in all parts of the land were destroyed, but their boats likely remained. How did Daniel Boone go all alone through a hostile Indian country from near Washington to the mouth of the Mississippi River, to carry a message? Two logs lashed together are enough for any brave man to cross a river on.

The "forty-three" men who went to search for the land of Zarahemla possibly got along in some such way. They "were lost in the wilderness for the space of many days," yet they were "diligent," and as a reward they returned with the twenty-four plates—the history of the Jaredites, "Having traveled in a land among many waters; having discovered a land which was covered with bones of men, and of beasts, etc., and was also covered with ruins of buildings of every kind."—Mosiah 5: 62. I have shown that the land of "large bodies of water and many rivers" was at an "exceeding great distance" from Zarahemla. Now, since these men had diligently traveled "many days," they likely had gone over that "exceeding great distance" and come to the same place. The "many waters" would not have hindered their travels much. Jared, with a few people, had traveled all the way from the tower of Babel, so these could surely go four or five thousand miles over a less difficult way. The chances are, that when these men found the ruins of cities, etc., with human bones scattered all over the country, they pressed on, and on, hoping that somewhere they would find a few survivors. This would naturally take them to the extremities of the country; hence likely to the place of the great battle.

The fact that Joseph Smith did not find all the plates mentioned in the Book of Mormon in the stone box, does not prove that they could not have been hidden in another place in the same hill.

I have so far found no special objection to the claim that the hill Ramah or Cumorah is in New York. One of two things is certain: either Coriantumr, empty handed, possibly accompanied by Ether, with not a soul to hinder him, traveled from New York to near the isthmus, where he was found; or Moroni traveled from Central America or Mexico to New York, through a country inhabited by his most bitter enemies, and carrying a bundle of plates, weighing from one hundred and fifty to two hundred pounds. Which is the most reasonable? I say the former.

J. M. STUBBART.

Since writing the above I found the following, which explains how Joseph Smith came to know the hill where he found the plates was the hill Cumorah.

The following is from the Biography of David Whitmer, Journal of History, volume three, number four, page 450:

Did Joseph Smith ever relate to you the circumstances of his finding the plates?

Yes, he told me that he first found the plates in the early spring of 1828; that during the fall of 1827 he had a vision, an angel appearing to him three times in one night and telling him that there was a record of an ancient people deposited in a hill near his father's house, called by the ancients, "Cumorah," situated in the township of Manchester, Ontario County, New York.

These dates are probably typographical errors, as Joseph Smith saw the plates in September, 1823." [Footnote.]

It appears from this that the angel told Joseph Smith that this particular hill where Joseph found the plates was called "by the ancients, Cumorah." Surely they knew whether it was the hill or not.

JOSEPH SMITH.

Was Joseph Smith of good, or of a bad character? This question is not of slight importance. It will no doubt involve the salvation or condemnation of more than one person.

Never mind his reputation; it is built largely on hearsay. If we hear everything in favor of one, we are apt to think well of that one; whereas, if we hear nothing but evil, we think accordingly.

No one will deny that Mr. Smith was a prophet. Some think him to have been a true one, while others think him to have been a false one. Jesus gives the rule by which the matter may be determined.

"By their fruits ye shall know them." It is claimed by the friends of Joseph Smith that he was a prophet, seer, and revelator. A prophet may foretell that which is to take place in the future, or in other words, write a forecast of the future, as it will take place. A seer may see things as they have been, as well as things as they will be, and we might add, as they are (1 Samuel 9: 9).

A revelator may bring to light things that have been, things that are, and things that will be. One holding the three gifts, may bring to light or reproduce the contents of lost manuscript or records; for instance, as did Moses, in that he tells us what God had done from the beginning down to his day.

The character of one may be judged by his teaching. But should one teach right things and do wrong things, great would be the penalty.

From June, 1830, to July 2, 1833, Joseph Smith translated and corrected the Holy Scriptures, from Genesis to Revelation. And the claim is that he did it by the spirit of revelation. We will therefore refer the reader to some of the changes made, or the differences between the King James Translation (the one then in common use) and the one produced by Joseph Smith, known as the "Holy Scriptures."

King James' Translation:

Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven.—Matthew 5: 19.

In Matthew 5: 21 of the Inspired Version we have this:

Whosoever, therefore, shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so to do, he shall in no wise be saved in the kingdom of heaven; but whosoever shall do and teach these commandments of the law until it be fulfilled, the same shall be called great, and shall be saved in the kingdom of heaven.

The one teaches that one may break the commandments, and teach others so to do, and yet be saved in the kingdom of heaven; while the other says, "he shall in no wise be saved in the kingdom of heaven."

Mr. Smith made this change, either by the "spirit of revelation" or by his own judgment. If by the latter, and if he was a bad character, it would have suited his purpose much better to have left the text unchanged. Says the King James Translation:

But if our unrighteousness commend the righteousness of God, what shall we say? Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance? (I speak as a man) God forbid: for then how shall God judge the world? For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory; why yet am I also judged as a sinner?—Romans 3: 5-7.

This makes Paul to say that his unrighteousness (and of course that of others) might commend the righteousness of God; and would have been a good text for Joseph Smith to have preached from had he wished to do the wrong thing; and that which follows makes Paul to say that the truth of God more abounded through his lie, and that too, to the glory of God.

If Mr. Smith lied about the angel's visits, about the plates from which he claims to have translated the Book of Mormon, and about everything else that he claimed that God inspired him to do, this would have been a good text to have left without change, as it would have made the grace of God to abound through his lie, according as the text reads.

If these texts misrepresent Paul, he being acknowledged by all New Testament believers as one of the brightest lights of which the New Testament treats; and seeing that a great multitude of people in the period from 1830 to 1840 held that the New Testament was God's word, we ask, in all candor, Would it not be just the thing for God to do to see that a correction be made; so that neither himself nor Paul should be misrepresented? The writer thinks so, especially in view of the fact that there is no known original manuscript in existence, by which the corrections can be made. What does the reader think? Well, God has done so, anyway; and like himself in times past, has worked through man. We give you the result:

But if we remain in our unrighteousness and commend the righteousness of God, how dare we say, God is unrighteous who taketh vengeance? (I speak as a man who fears God) God forbid; for how then shall God judge the world? For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie (as it is called of the Jews) unto his glory; why yet am I also judged as a sinner? and not received? Because we are slanderously reported.—Romans 3: 5-7, Inspired Translation.

Another example:

But to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness.—Romans 4: 5, King James.

Neither would Joseph Smith have corrected this text, had he been the man that some think him to have been. For he could have held it in reserve, until such time as he had been discovered in the practice of "ungodliness," and then brought the text forth and said, "Here, brethren, you know, according to Paul, God justifies the ungodly and you ought to do the same." But the correction stands thus:

But to him that seeketh not to be justified by the law of works, but believeth on him who justifieth not the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness.—Romans 4: 5, Inspired Translation.

King James' Translation:

Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God. And such were some of you; but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God. All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any.—1 Corinthians 6: 9-12.

It would not have taken very much twisting of this scripture for Mr. Smith to have said, Why, I hold the priesthood, as did Paul, and if it was lawful for him to do the above things, it is lawful for me. And while it may not have been expedient in Paul's day, that does not prove but what it is expedient now. And seeing that there are so many men that will not marry at all, I will just take a number of women to myself, and according to Paul, it will be lawful. But should the time ever come that the law of the land and the ones executing it should come against me, then, of course, it would not be expedient.

The writer holds that Mr. Smith did not reason after this manner, neither could he have done so; for notwithstanding his translation of the Scriptures were not published in his lifetime, yet he knew of the change, for he helped to make it. In both translations (1 Corinthians 6: 9, 10, 11,) stand the same. But in the 12th verse, the following change is made:

All these things are not lawful unto me, and all these things are not expedient. All things are not lawful for me, therefore I will not be brought under the power of any.

Let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth.—1 Corinthians 10: 24, King James' Version.

Mr. Smith's translation reads as follows:

Let no man seek therefore his own, but every man another's good.

The word wealth, as it stands in this text in the King James text is in italics, which shows that the word was supplied by the translators.

The subject under consideration by the apostle, was the offering of the sacrament, and of sacrifices, and not that of worldly goods, and thus the word good is very appropriate, while the word wealth is inappropriate.

But had Joseph Smith been the thief that some people believe that he was, he most certainly would have permitted this text to stand, and would, no doubt, have preached quite often from it, because the most of the church membership there at Nauvoo, as well as in other places, had formerly belonged to other churches, and had been taught that honesty was one of the essentials to salvation; so that Joseph Smith would have had a job on his hands, in order to convince them otherwise.

We must not get the idea because God saw fit to correct the above texts, (and others that might be referred to) in order that neither himself nor those who wrote the Scriptures should be misrepresented; that it is throwing discredit, either on the Bible or those who translated it, for none of the translators had the original manuscript, written by Bible writers, to translate from. But rather, that wherein no changes have been made, the Bible has God's sanction as being correct. The changes are few, compared to the whole book.

I advise my readers, if they have not the two translations, or if they have the King James Version and not the other, to just write to the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, for a copy of the Holy Scriptures or Inspired Version, and to use their mother wit, and all of the grace of God they can get, and compare the two and accept them both, so far as they agree, and where they differ, take your choice.

In the Book of Mormon, Book of Jacob, 2: 36, authorized edition, we find this statement:

For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women.

And in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, 42: 7, we have this:

And again, I say, Thou shalt not kill; but he that killeth shall die. Thou shalt not steal; and he that stealeth and will not repent, shall be cast out. Thou shalt not lie; he that lieth and will not repent, shall be cast out. Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the spirit; and if he repents not, he shall be cast out. Thou shalt not commit adultery; and he that committeth adultery and repenteth not, shall be cast out.

The last two books named, were likewise developed through Joseph Smith, and the quotations here given were published during his lifetime. If Joseph Smith, from start to finish, had intended to be fraudulent in his work, would he have brought forward these commandments, claiming them to be of God, and immediately break them himself? These passages are plainer, touching the matters referred to, and the penalties to be inflicted, than can be found anywhere in the Bible.

Had he wished to do the wrong thing, why not let the matter remain as it is in the Bible, and then say, that such teaching was well enough in Bible times, but we have outgrown those times now.

Can you not see, reader, that in the renewing of these commandments it makes the matter a live issue, and the more applicable in our day?

If Joseph Smith should have broken any or all of these commandments, he would have had to pay the penalty. God has given to every man his agency, so that man will be held responsible for his actions, and the better we know how to do, the more we are expected to do that which the Lord requires.

When we accuse Joseph Smith of being a false prophet, we ought to be able to show in what way he was false. When we say he was a false prophet in sheep's clothing we need to show by what means he came in possession of the sheep's clothing.

The fact is that Mr. Smith was baptized for the first time (and the only time) into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and there is where he got his "sheep's clothing." He was false to no prophet, for none preceded him in his day; neither did he pattern after any who existed this side of Bible and Book of Mormon times.

Unworthy.

From the time when type was first invented, or came into general use, typographical errors have been the despair of authors and all who write for publication. Not many who so write but can recall times when they have read some favorite passage, or some quotation introduced into an article, with bated breath, through fear of encountering a mistake caused by the mixing up of type or misplacement of perhaps a single letter.

A little experience of this kind came to the writer the other week. Taking up the HERALD for March 8, after a careful reading of first, second, and third pages, we turned to the Home Column, remembering that our brief article, "A voice from Jerusalem" should be there. Finding it we read critically on to the middle of page 227, where we encountered mistake number one in the use of the word have instead of leave, thus: "have us more than one dollar to send in support of the mission at Jerusalem," instead of "leave us more than one dollar," etc. This, however, was not so bad, for almost any careful reader would be able readily to correct it by context as well as what followed; but when we came to that beautiful stanza taken from Fredrick Lang-bridge; beginning, "Unwrap thy life of many wants and fine," and read, "Unworthy thy life of many wants and fine," unconsciously and without volition upon our part we exclaimed: "What a mistake!"

Yes, types are a hard and cold substance, and feel never a thrill of compunction because of the mutilations they make. But men and women are capable of thought, and it may be from this wreck of good poetry some gem of thought may be gathered up which will help us in the upward trend of our lives, and if so, then surely we may count that the mistake of hard, cold, unyielding type, has not been in vain.

Let us quote more fully the words of the poet and consider more carefully what it is which he asks us to unwrap or separate from our lives.

"Unwrap thy life of many wants and fine:

He who with Christ will dine
Shall see no table curiously spread,
But fish and barley bread.

Where readeest thou that Jesus bade us pray,
Give us our sumptuous fare from day to day?"

Is it not the luxuries which tax the purse and enervate and enfeeb the body? The demands made upon us by fashion and folly? And are not all these utterly unworthy the aspirations of an immortal soul, unworthy to occupy our time and thoughts to the exclusion of that which is so infinitely better?

Do we not remember, can we not recall the many, many times when care for these things—care for the apparel put on before we joined the congregation of worshippers—care for the luxuries which went upon our table it has wearied both mind and body, and, while we may not have realized it, has choked the word until it has become unfruitful?

Oh, that we might unwrap our lives of all things which are unprofitable and seek earnestly to be clothed upon with garments of righteousness! That we might seek first to help in establishing and doing the will of God upon earth. That we might listen to and obey every prompting of the Spirit, every longing desire of our own souls to come nearer to Christ, and manifest in our own lives more of the divine purity of his!

Since the above was written, two letters have reached us containing contributions for the mission at Jerusalem. The first was sent to Sister Hulmes, of Independence, Missouri, and by her forwarded to us. We do not feel at liberty to give names, as the letters were neither of them intended for publication, but we can not refrain from making a few extracts from each, as they show so plainly the power of the gospel to control the life to its highest aims and purposes. The first is written by a sister in Stewartsville, Missouri. She says:

"Please find inclosed one dollar for the mission in Jerusalem. I feel impressed that I must do a little to sustain it. I am poor in this world's goods, and have children and grandchildren who are poor also, and work day in and day out to pay for their board and clothes. But I leave them all in the hands of the Lord, and he will provide. Christ preached his gospel to the poor and they heard him gladly, but the rich and the lawyers rejected and crucified him. But, thank God, he has risen and ascended to heaven and will come again."

Yes, sister, he will surely come again, and then shall those who have loved and obeyed him rejoice and receive their reward.

The other sister writes from Kansas City, Kansas, and says:

"Please accept five dollars to help the work in Jerusalem. It seems a pity, now that we have such a good missionary there to make plain the gospel plan of salvation, for us not to try to sustain him, to do all we can, even if we must sacrifice in doing it. A penny's worth of help is worth ten pounds of pity when we are in need. I have been in the church nearly forty years, and have received many blessings, and that sure testimony sent down from above whereby I have realized many times that this is the work of God, and I feel anxious that all the honest in heart should hear and obey the truth."

Let us say that this money should have been sent direct to Bishop E. L. Kelley, and we will see that it goes to him; and in that time when even "the cup of cold water" shall be remembered, then will this, which these sisters have done, come into remembrance before the Lord. Are there not others of us who can do likewise?

Request for Prayers.

I desire the prayers of the Prayer Union and of all the Saints who may read this in behalf of my sister-in-law, Mrs. Sadie Kerney, of whom I wrote last fall. She received help, and her affliction seemed to leave her, as she has felt no more of it until the last few weeks. They are, in such circumstances that she does not feel able to go to the hospital for another operation, therefore she desires the prayers of God's children that she may be entirely healed of her afflictions, if it is according to his will.

Your sister,

MRS. ALEX. MELLON.

Editors Herald: Please make the following corrections in my article "That Mutilated Law" in HERALD for March 22, 1911:

On page 272, right hand column, thirteenth line from top, should read, "the very book" instead of "the very one." On page 275, right hand column, eighth line from bottom, should read, "Chapter 44 and paragraph 4," instead of "Chapter 24 and paragraph 5." In line seven from the bottom should read: "Chapter 24," instead of "Chapter 44 of the Book of Commandments."

Yours respectfully,

WM. H. KELLEY.

HARTSHORNE, OKLAHOMA, March 22.

Dear Saints: I know this work to be the work of God. My husband and I have been members twenty years. I have never regretted the step I took, for I can truly say the Lord directed me to take it. We have been isolated from church and church privileges, and have not lived as becomes Saints of God, but the Lord has blessed me with light and strength and enabled me to always be ready to give an answer for the hope that is within me. I know I could never have overcome the temptations and persecutions I have gone through with if it had not been for the strength and comfort the heavenly Father has given me. I have been blessed many times.

Pray for me, and my family, especially my two boys who obeyed the gospel but have become unconcerned, although they still contend for the faith.

Your sister,
SALLIE RICHARDSON.

KNOBNOSTER, MISSOURI, March 28, 1911.

Editors Herald: The conference year is near its close, and I can say the Lord has blessed me in my labors. I have made many friends to the cause. Can say I have put in good time in my field of labor, except three weeks I was in Arkansas holding two debates, and preaching one week in Kentucky in February. I can report good interest at most every place I have labored.

My faith has been tried as never before. But I am still in the faith, and can say I have been able to make some little improvement in myself. I have overcome to some extent my weakness in speaking of the faults I see in others. I have had a trial along this line. But I can now bear with the weaknesses of others better than before. I know that I have ways that don't suit everybody. But my ways are not your ways, neither are my thoughts your thoughts. I can now think twice before I speak once. I have been shown my own weakness by vision. It came very near causing me to quit trying to do anything. But I soon got to see the wisdom of God in showing me my weakness. Since then my faith has been stronger than if I had not been shown, and it has served to keep me humble.

I once heard Bro. Heman C. Smith say that our success many times was due to the weakness of our opponents. At the time I did not believe it, but since then I have been made to know it was true. Trusting the Spirit of the Lord will lead in the conference,

C. L. SNOW.

CALABASAS, CALIFORNIA, March, 1911.

Dear Herald: I do like to read the letters from the brothers and sisters and especially from those I know. I obeyed the gospel when young and I have never been sorry for it. I have not lived up to its teachings as I should. We live twenty-eight miles northwest from Los Angeles, and those who are isolated know this is a great drawback. We don't have spiritual food, only as we read the church papers, and that is not like hearing it from the mouth of some good preacher that you know is living up to the teachings of the Savior.

My dear old uncle, J. C. Clapp, was here and we enjoyed his visit. We would like to have had him preach, but he was very feeble and was not able to do so. He is getting to that point where the Lord can say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into thy rest." We feel that he is worthy of it.

I want to bear my testimony to the goodness of God. I know he has blessed me and my family and has heard my prayers. Many times when I felt that I was not worthy, he saw fit to answer. I ask you all to pray for me and mine that we may take more interest in reading the church papers, and not look at other people's faults; only see our own. Also that the gospel may be sent to us, and that the way may be opened that the honest in heart here may obey the gospel, and build up a branch. I remain your sister.

MRS. ANNIE BROOKS.

PUNXSUTAWNEY, PENNSYLVANIA, March 25, 1911.

Saints' Herald: We have been praying that the way would open that the Lord would commence a work in this place. To-day I was requested to write a letter to Elder R. Etzenhouser. I don't know where he is. I write to the HERALD hoping he will see this.

Fifteen years ago Bro. Etzenhouser administered to Miss Eva Blose, of Punxsutawney, and the Lord healed her of a bone disease which had kept her an invalid for years. She has enjoyed perfect health for fifteen years, but now she is afflicted again. She remembers how the Lord heard and answered prayer and wishes Brother Etzenhouser to remember her to the Father again. This is the city that engaged in a carpet rag social to keep him from preaching in the church. There is a work to be done here. I hope and pray that the gospel will be preached to the people soon.

I returned here in October, 1910, after living in Monongahela nine years. All my old acquaintances and friends were glad and happy to meet me again. I have a religious argument twice every week with the blind lawyer and his wife. He would like to meet R. Etzenhouser again. The people inquire about Bro. A. H. Parsons.

We have a first class rooming house and can care for anyone coming this way. It could be turned into a meeting house, for a commencement, if need be. Sr. Joanna Anthony, who was baptized at Fayette City two years ago by Bro. Davis, is a faithful worker here and a power for good among her many friends and acquaintances.

EUNICE BEAM.

SPRINGVIEW, NEBRASKA, March 20, 1911.

Saints' Herald: I felt weak and discouraged and sad this morning. I could not have felt worse if one of the family had been dead. I began to think, Am I dead and are any of the Saints dead spiritually? We ought not to put off the duties we owe to God to care for worldly pleasures, for we are God's children and he wants us to obey. If we do not forsake all and follow him, we are none of his. So, dear Saints, let us be careful for the things of God.

Just as soon as I had prayed to God to relieve me of this sad feeling and make known what I should do, a vision that I had, came to mind. It said I had a mission to fill. Then I made a vow to God that while I lived I would never cease to fulfill that mission, which is to help the Saints get nearer to God. We can help one another with kind words. And a part of my work is to bring my children up in the faith and assist all the honest in heart to come nearer to Jesus. Let us all walk in his light. Let us be Saints indeed, and love one another with brotherly love.

If I only had the money to pay some good Latter Day Saint minister's way to come and preach to this people! I pray God will send one of his servants here, one that is of high standing and a well read man, fully prepared for the calling. I believe that an effectual field is opening here. Any of the Saints are welcome in my house, free of charge. Will any of the ministers come? If so, let them please write me soon.

I want some of the Saints to send me a copy of the tract, "What is baptism?" Please send it at once, as my husband wants to give it to the Baptist minister. He believes it is not necessary to baptize in water; only with the Holy Spirit, is his theory. He preaches much like the Saints; you might think he was one till he leaves out some of the most necessary points in the Scriptures. I believe he is honest in heart, but has been taught the precepts of men. Let us pray for him.

My vision last fall said a great reformation among the Saints was to take place. Satan will rage to see whom he may overthrow. He will try us in every cunning way. Let us be on guard. There is a good time coming. Hateful rivalries of creed shall no longer make martyrs bleed; religion shall be shorn of pride and flourish all the stronger. Charity shall trim her lamp, and the people will be temperate and shall love instead of hate. They shall use and not abuse God's Lounties, and make all virtue stronger. There is a good time coming. Let us be working for the Man of Calvary.

Some of the Saints have sent me a nice lot of church publications. I want to thank them for this kindness. I will give the papers all out to people to read. I want to extend thanks to Sister Harriet Smith, of California, for her kind favors.

Your sister,
A. E. CULBERTON.

WEYBURN, SASKATCHEWAN, March 7, 1911.

Editors Herald: Six years ago, Elder Alvin Knisley came as our first missionary. He got a small hearing and ten members. We continued to gain until we numbered ninety-six. Since then three branches have been organized: Zion, Betlands, Stoney Vale, all in a prosperous condition.

Our branch numbers sixty-six. There have been six priests, two elders, one high priest, three deacons, and two teachers ordained in the last year. The members of Weyburn are much scattered, nevertheless we try to fight on. We still keep up Sunday school, Religio and sacrament services. God's Spirit at times is very perceptibly felt.
