Could we only all keep our first love for the blessed gospel, and thereby keep Satan outside, with his strife, envy, jealousy and pride, I am sure then our lights would shine much more, and others would see our good works and glorify God. How much good it does us to meet to study God's word! We are so thankful we are not isolated. How sad it is to be so far from Saints that we can not meet to worship God! Sometimes we wish to be in a more spiritual environment. Yet we can rejoice to know God leadeth us. I dreaded coming away from church association and bringing my family again to the world. After a certain dream, I never doubted nor feared. In it a voice said, "I have a work for you to do." So it has been. There were no Saints here when we arrived. Now, thank God, they are proclaiming the gospel all over a radius of one hundred miles or more. God has truly blessed us, both temporally and spiritually, for which we feel to praise his holy name. We live in hopes by this same evidence to soon return to Zion. May God bless his people that we may be Zion indeed; build up the waste places, and hasten the Lord's return.

Your sister in Christ,
FLORENCE TOOVEY.

GALES FERRY, CONNECTICUT, March 12, 1911.

Dear brothers and sisters: Your letters are all so interesting that I forget that some one must take interest enough to write. We are isolated and badly feel the need of church privileges for our family. The church papers are the only preachers that we have.

I love the gospel and am trying to live so as to be ready when the Master comes. I sometimes attend meetings around here. Last Sunday some of the young men asked why some of our elders didn't come around. They said they would come to hear them.

I am afraid the Saints don't realize the necessity of gathering together. Brothers and sisters, did you know that if we were living together and properly organized that we could live better than we can in our present condition. By cooperation in buying and selling we could save enough to pay all the expenses of the whole church.

When we buy at retail we pay about 25 per cent more than if we had one capable man to buy for a thousand persons. When we dispose of the labor of our hands we do so at a loss of from 5 per cent to 50 per cent of what we might receive if we had a smart business salesman to dispose of our goods. There would be a surplus sufficient to care for all the poor and properly educate all of our young people. As we are living at present, probably not more than half of our children ever attain to that ideal that they might if we were gathered into rural villages like Lamoni.

If the gathering is to be very soon, it will have to be in a locality where land is cheaper than it is near any of our large branches, as most of our members are poor in this world's goods. While willing to work, they are not situated so as to enable them to obtain homes near any large city. You will find most of our members, especially in the cities, paying rent and barely able to meet the branch expenses. A few pay tithing, and many of them do not really make the increase that they pay tithing on. Let us pray that our heavenly Father may move on our leaders, so that we may soon be gathered.

I am positive that our members are paying more into secret societies than it takes to run the church, for I see buttons and badges on lots of them at our conferences.

If we were properly organized there would be no need of secret societies. Now, when we convert a man who is an Odd Fellow, he dare not stop his payments, as the church does not have any organized way that I am aware of that would give him the payments each week when he is sick and pay a nurse to care for him. Well did Jesus say that the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light.

Brethren, there is a crying need for a change. Let us do our best, and uphold those in authority, and ask God to help them to be humble, and be enabled to guide modern Israel out into that ideal condition that Joseph the Seer tried to establish in the days when the land at Zion was cheap enough so that they could have easily redeemed it if they had been faithful. With love to all who are called to be Saints, I am,

THOMAS G. WHIPPLE.

SNOHOMISH, WASHINGTON, March 20, 1911.

Editors Herald: As I have been trying hard to prepare for an opening here in Snohomish, I thought a few lines in the HERALD would do more to draw the interest toward this place than a personal letter to anyone. About two months ago a committee of ladies canvassed the town for funds to buy books for the new Carnegie library. This seemed a good opportunity to get some of the church literature on the reading tables. When they called on me and heard what I had to offer, they accepted with thanks.

When I took the first bundle of Ensigns and Autumn Leaves to the librarian, she gave me a very pleasant surprise, by asking permission to send them along to the reformatory after they had been a week on the reading table. The children went the second week. While they were selecting a book the librarian became interested in a sermon, and was reading when they came away.

Last week the library board fitted up two rooms to be used as rest rooms for G. A. R. men and women, making two more places for the precious words of truth to be placed. I left a supply in each room last Saturday. There has been no word of complaint as yet. What the result will be is with a wiser head, and to Him alone be the glory.

We are living in hopes of having the tent here for a season, early in the next conference year.

We are learning every day of good people in Snohomish and surely there must be some of those sheep among them who will know the Master's voice when they hear it.

Nearly four years ago I began corresponding regularly with several on this most loved subject, the gospel. While I know of no conversions to the faith on account of this correspondence, the Lord has made known to me that it has not been in vain.

How much there is to do and how little we isolated ones can do, are thoughts that make me restless and long for church privileges. I read of the good going on and long to be with the Saints.

We have the HERALD, Ensign, Autumn Leaves, Exponent, Quarterly, Hope, and Journal of History. We feast on the good things contained in their pages. May rich blessings attend the writers of all those soul-cheering thoughts.

Your sister,
ADDIE I. SCOTT.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. Martha Keene, Portersville, California, writes: "Reading your precious pages, together with Paul's letters, keeps my soul alive. I thank and praise my God every day that I am a Latter Day Saint. What hurts is, I have no money to help. Hope the Lord will open the way to make up for the loss. Hope you will have a good conference, and that the Lord will be with you in power. I have just passed my ninetieth birthday."

Bro. I. M. Barnes, Rock Island, Illinois, writes: "I have been a reader of the HERALD for several years, and do not feel like I could get along without it. If it had not been for the strength I received therefrom, I would have fallen by the wayside. I neglected attending church services for about a year, but still read the HERALD, and was strengthened thereby. Since coming to this place, two years ago, I started to attend the meetings and pay my tithing. I feel like the Lord blesses me more than I am worthy of. We are very much in need of a missionary in this place. There is plenty of work for one, especially in the summer time, to meet those Utah men. We have no elder in this branch, since last fall, when our beloved brother, Elder Ball, went away."

Bro. Edward Dorsett, writing from La Pearl, Alberta, Canada, says: "Elder Beckley generally preaches at Ribstone on Sundays. He is a good preacher. The branch is in a very spiritual condition. I have not been up very much this winter, as I live ten miles from there, and the roads have been almost impassable on account of the drifts. There are a great many Michigan Saints moving in east of here, and will likely have a branch there. They are very good citizens and industrious. Most of them like the Canadian country best after they have been out here for a time."

Bro. N. J. Randall, 617 South Hall street, Webb City, Missouri, writes: "I want to get the name and address of some brother whom I can interest in some new inventions. I will give some brother a good chance to build up a fine business. I have a new square and other inventions in which some brother can secure a financial interest. Write me and find out all about it."

Bro. James Everett, Avoca, Nebraska, writes: "The work of the Lord is on the move in this State. On Sunday, the 26th, the waters were troubled. The Spirit of the Lord was present. The candidate was the wife of James Everett. The sister was raised a Catholic; so you can see the honest in heart are being gathered out from the world. We are trying to lift the banner of Christ in this town. There are but a few that are willing to listen to the glad tidings of these latter days. Brother Self was the one that officiated and he preached the precious truths of the gospel. We ask you to pray for us that we may always live so that the Spirit of the Lord will be with us."

Bro. V. L. Lum, president of the branch at Wilburton, Oklahoma, writes: "As a branch we are getting along as well as could be expected. I have been in the church two years, and have been ordained something over a year. I am glad I live in a day when the gospel is preached as it was by Christ. I find the greatest comfort in it. If the Lord wills, I will go to General Conference for the first time. I want to learn more of the Lord and his ways. I try to be ready for what my Master has for me to do. . . . We have had some fine preaching by our worthy missionaries, Elders Quick, Simmons, and Erwin; and others rendered us fine assistance. We have some active local ministers who are alive in the work."

News From Missions

Jerusalem, Palestine.

Our hearts were filled with rejoicing when this week's mail not only brought us kind letters from friends containing words of encouragement and cheer, but large bundles of HERALDS and Ensigns as well, so that we have the reading matter we have been praying for so long. We were delighted when we opened a nice letter from Bro. Charles Craig, of Independence, stating that he was sending us a dozen Hymnals. This was indeed good news, as it will enable us to teach the Saints here our hymns and also give them the privilege of joining in the singing at our services. Now if we had a few copies of Zion's Praises, and some tracts, we would almost feel rich. We have hopes that these will come before we leave, as we have called the Bishop's special attention to our needs in this regard, and we can not believe that he will let our prayer go unheeded longer.

Our time here is growing short, however, as we are arranging to leave for Australia the latter part of May. The Saints here are anxious that some one be sent to continue the work after we leave them. We would have been willing to remain with them longer, had it not been that we had our tickets for Australia, and we have to make use of them within the time limit, or they would become worthless.

We have been hindered in our meetings by the terrible storms and continued rains of the last three months. But the weather is clearing now and the indications are that the rainy season is about over, and we will do our best to spread our glorious work the short time we will be permitted to remain. We hope the church will be able to send at least one elder here who will be able to preach in the German or French language; otherwise he will be handicapped, if he can speak only English.

The Lord has certainly been good to us in raising up friends, and the English speaking people are becoming pretty well acquainted with our position, and all who have heard us speak well of what they have heard. It is quite likely that we have enemies, for Jesus said, concerning his disciples, that they would be hated. But if we have enemies, they are secret ones, for all that meet us are very friendly to our faces. But as wife is writing, I will cut my letter short, this time, to give her room. I am inclosing record of the rainfall in Jerusalem since 1861. I have sent a card to each one who has sent us papers, whose addresses I have been able to make out. We thank all for their kindness. I inclose a few pictures.

In gospel bonds,

F. G. PITT.

Winnipeg.

District conference items have so much of a sameness all over the world that it is difficult for the press committee to produce anything especially interesting. It is gratifying, however, to note the good things that tend to strengthen the body.

The Winnipeg conference and convention were far above our expectations in every point, and the 17th and 19th of February, 1911, will be associated with pleasant memories.

Winnipeg is sometimes spoken of as the coming New York of the Canadian northwest. While I fail to perceive all of that in my vision of northwestern futurity, especially if free trade across the line obtains, nevertheless it certainly is a thriving city, and destined to grow. We do hope, though, to see it become the Boston of the Canadian middle west, in all things that pertain to greatness and true nobility. Saskatchewan and Alberta both have cities growing that will contest the supremacy of farther west.

The Saints, under the energetic leadership of Elder E. E. Long, have now a commodious church near completion, sufficient for present occupancy. It is the first of its kind among the many churches of the city. If the number of church buildings is a criterion infallible, Winnipeg will obtain the crown of gold.

Beautiful, dry, clear, calm, winter weather rendered the coming and going of delegates a real pleasure. The absence of all objectionable spirits, combined with a desire for progression, did much to make the conference the kind that it should be.

Elder Nelson Wilson, of broad mind and shoulders, carries the burden of district presidency. R. S. Carter is secretary, and W. I. Arnold, Bishop's agent. Besides these are the names of Coombs, Seaton, Braden, Pugsley, Hadeth, Conlin, Wilson; and there are others whose names do not come to mind, who are taking hold; and the work is moving on.

Two were baptized during conference, others are favorable. The spirit of wisdom will work wonders if permitted to obtain.

The following are the delegates to General Conference and Convention: E. E. Long, H. J. Davison, Nelson Wilson and wife, Ethel Conlin, W. J. Pugsley and wife.

Preaching during conference was by E. E. Long, W. I. Arnold, Nelson Wilson and H. J. Davison. The time of next conference is in the hands of the executive committee.

PRESS COMMITTEE.

Alberta, Canada.

I concluded a two weeks' campaign at the coal mines near Namao, on the 14th inst., and on the 16th went to Bon Accord, a distance of twelve miles, to prepare a place to baptize, as there was no suitable place at the mines. On the 19th two sleighloads came up with the candidates, four in number. We retired to the lake, a distance of near three miles, where the baptism took place. The ice was eighteen inches thick and the water cold, but the noble soldiers were brave. From the lake we proceeded to J. H. Jenkins' home, where the candidates were confirmed and sacrament administered. We had a spiritual feast; the Saints were strengthened and promised to live nearer to God.

This branch at Bon Accord have been living beneath their privileges; however, we have succeeded in getting the elder back in his place, and he is greatly encouraged. He is a good man, but got discouraged. I assisted in getting the branch books in better shape, and look for better reports in the future.

On Monday, the 20th, I came to Edmonton, a distance of twenty-five miles. There are a few isolated Saints here, whom I am visiting and doing some fireside preaching. They are not blessed financially, and hall rent is high.

I think the summer months the proper time to labor here, when fuel and lights will not be needed. The snow is disappearing fast, and it looks as if spring is near, which we all appreciate after this very cold and severe winter.

THE LONE NEPHITE.

EDMONTON, ALBERTA, CANADA.

Among the Lamanites.

In passing through the city of Shawnee recently, a pleasant ministerial duty fell to our lot. It was the blessing of an infant grandchild of our well known brother, the Jots Man. Loyalty, as any other lines of life, will be visited upon the heads of the children, even to the third and fourth generation. As we received this fondling for a blessing in the presence of the parents, Bro. and Sr. Alma Chatburn, the mind flashed out a view of the loyalty to Israel's cause under the pressure of worldly environment, expressed in the request for a blessing upon the child. The Holy Spirit powerfully attested the Lord's acceptance of the rite.

There was quite a contrast between the presentation of this beautiful infant to the Lord, and the surroundings at the blessing of a Lamanite child a day or two later. Behold the latter scene. We are in the interior of a wigwam, large enough to seat seventy-five or eighty persons. Out from the front, which is always east, is a roundtopped, tented inclosure large enough to seat more than a hundred people, after their fashion, on mats spread upon the ground. This roundtopped tent is perhaps thirty feet in width, and is built in length sufficient to accommodate the number of people expected to attend. This apartment is usually occupied by the women and children, while the chiefs are seated according to their rank in the circle of the big wigwam.

Directly before the eastern doorway, facing all the people, sits the chief of all the Indian ceremonies, who presides over the assembly with dignity and perfect order. The white missionary is given a right hand seat of honor, crosslegged, upon a mat, where patience and cramped, uncomfortable position may play hide and seek with each other until the invitation comes to address the assembly. In our last meeting this invitation was eagerly accepted—anything for a change—at eleven o'clock p. m.

After preaching through their interpreter till midnight, wife and I singing hymns, we excused ourselves, and by permission retired, with the explanation that it was our time to sleep. But they continued. All through the night could be heard weird chants, prayers, and sometimes as emotional confessions as ever drew the tears from the eyes of Saints in our own social meetings.

One of their favorite songs uttered to the rhythm of pulsing drum is sufficiently adulterated with English for the ear to catch: "W-e k-n-o-w, W-e k-n-o-w h-i, W-e k-n-o-w J-e-s-u-s, O-n-l-y O-n-e W-a-y. J-e-s-u-s t-h-e W-a-y, O-n-l-y O-n-e-e-e W-a-y-a-a-a."

Shortly after daylight, breakfast was served to the entire assembly upon a spread without a table, and soon the call of the drum announced the opening of a service of which we were given complete control. We sang "An angel came down from the mansions of glory, and told that a record was hid in Cumorah."

Being directed by the Spirit's call and the voice of the Central Oklahoma district conference, we here ordained one of their worthy men to the Aaronic ministry.

At this place, and after the 7.30 o'clock, a. m., sermon, the above mentioned babe was presented before the Lord for a name and blessing. The little brown native of the forest was comfortably wrapped with his back to a board to start him in life with the poise of an arrow. With the ministerial authority which by the grace of God is recognized to officially bind upon earth and in heaven, it was blessed in Israel, and recorded under the name of Amos Lamoni Koshiway.

We confidently expect soon to have a sufficient membership in the Indian Otoe reservation to organize a Lamanite branch. With this encouragement before us, mixed with the usual amount of trivial discouragement, we are pressing onward.

JAMES E. YATES.

RIPLEY, OKLAHOMA, March 22, 1911.

News From Branches.

Central Church, Kansas City, Missouri.

The third annual series of special meetings at Central Church is a thing of the past, but their memory will ever remain and be pleasing, not only to us that listened, but also Brother Williams went away feeling that his message had not been delivered in vain. He leaves us having a much grander, higher, and nobler conception of the work of God. The series closed with every member feeling glad he is a Latter Day Saint, and with a greater determination to keep the covenant.

Sr. W. N. Robinson, who has had charge of the music and choir during the meetings, left for her home in Sapulpa, Oklahoma, Sunday evening. We surely appreciate the effort on her part, and can not speak too highly of the assistance rendered. We hope soon to have her with us to stay.

As a result of the two weeks' services, six persons became members of the fold by baptism. We regret to lose some of our faithful members by removal from among us.

Since our last report the Sunday school room has been rejuvenated, and presents quite a pleasant appearance in comparison with its previous dinginess.

The auxiliaries, both Sunday school and Religio, are holding their own, and gradually becoming more firmly established. We are not building up in numbers quite so fast as some would like, but the most important matter is first to look after the foundation; otherwise we are likely to get top-heavy. The average attendance at Sunday school for March was about two hundred. The Religio had to make way for the special meetings, and while their sessions were held on the Sunday following, it will be hard to tell just where it does stand for a while.

HARVEY SANDY.

MARCH 29.

Chatham, Ontario.

Being requested by the president of the Chatham Branch to write up a short account of our good fortune in having with us some of the talented brethren of the church, I will endeavor to do so.

The first to come was Elder W. A. Goodwin, from Portland, Oregon, who was here on a visit to friends. He filled the pulpit on the following Sunday very acceptably, and preached the following week, during which time he proved both interesting and instructive; having the peculiar ability to draw out the sympathies of both members and nonmembers, and some who were prejudiced to the work. He would be made welcome at any time in Chatham.

On the following Monday night, the telephones began to notify all the members who could be reached that Bro. R. C. Russell, who is a great favorite of the branch here, would speak, and at the appointed time the church was about filled with Saints and friends. Elder Russell has labored faithfully in the past and added many to the church, besides building up and strengthening those already in.

Just a day or so after, Elder David Smith, of Whittemore, Michigan, who has been laboring up about Sault Ste. Marie, dropped in and preached a few sermons for us. He was to have labored here last year but was changed to the Northwest, which was regretted by everyone. We all enjoyed his society and his practical and instructive talks and we hope he will yet be privileged to do mission work in this district.

I am glad to report the condition of the branch here as good. The interest is much better, and many are being added to the church. The preaching is good and the auxiliaries are very active. The Religio is attracting a great many within its ranks, and is steadily increasing in numbers, and progressing in every way. The Sunday school is doing a grand work among the children and the youth. The Willing Workers are also active and are working harmoniously at these meetings. Refreshments are served and a sociable time is enjoyed, along with earnest work accomplished. Feeling thankful for all these good things, and ever hopeful that we will be accepted at last,

I remain your sister,

MARCH 27, 1911.

ELSIE EDMUNDS.

Independence, Missouri.

On the 12th of March there were three ordinations, namely: W. H. Callin, J. A. Goodrich, and A. L. Lightfoot, under the hands of Elders J. F. Curtis and J. W. Rushton; and on the 16th and 18th two marriage ceremonies were performed.

On the 9th inst. there were two baptisms, and on the 19th eight baptisms, six of whom were children, Brother Krahl officiating.

On the 17th Sr. Jane S. Lippincott, being sixty years of age, peacefully passed away. Her affliction was of long duration; but she bore it patiently, and with implicit trust and confidence in God. She was loved by all who knew her. Also our beloved brother, Frank Criley, died yesterday, the 28th, at about noon, leaving many friends and relatives to mourn his departure; and the Saints will miss his kindly presence at the early morning prayer meetings, which he loved to attend.

Prayer meetings are held at the Sanitarium every Wednesday evening and Sunday afternoon, and are spiritual and instructive. Also alternate preaching and prayer meetings are held every Thursday evening at the Saints' Home; and at these two centers the Saints have many a happy gathering together in the Spirit of love and true worship. The brothers and sisters from Bonheim, also from the Sanitarium, often visit with the Saints at the church.

The house of the Order of Enoch, with its office and the apartments of the custodians, Bro. and Sr. C. A. Gurwell, is another place where there always is a restful retreat, and kindly welcome for the weary visitor who comes "that he may contemplate the glory of Zion" and "receive also the counsel from those whom I have set to be as plants of renown, and as watchmen upon her walls." Here one finds cleanliness and hearty good cheer.

On March 22, one hundred and twenty canvassers of the Ministerial Alliance started out through the city on their special mission of gaining such information as this, namely: "Name and age of every member of the household; church preference; how many go to church and how many attend Sunday school." And the Alliance wants everyone to go "sure and certain."

On Friday, the 24th, the Religians, old and young, held their weekly meeting, the program being an interesting one. And on the evening of the 28th, the Laurel Club gave a fine "Concert of ye olde time songs, music, recitations, etc."

Our branch paper, the fourth issue of "The Tidings," being distributed, and carefully perused, the Saints could learn from its pages what was the program for the day. A few, however, failed to withstand the temptation to read it, even during singing and prayertime! but the lovers of music of course were benefited by finding out the titles of the voluntary, anthem, and offertory.

The speakers at the services were Brn. T. C. Kelley and D. E. Tucker, both being fine discourses. Brother Kelley read among other texts the one found in Matthew 17: 10, "Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things." Our brother at the morning service was earnest and direct, and he said among other important things: "Preparations must be made; the work of preaching the gospel must be accomplished and be accompanied with power," and he added, "The power to raise from glory to glory is not only through baptism, confirmation, and the gifts of the Holy Spirit, but our faith is made stronger and we may be enabled to step up to higher ground, making men more like Christ day by day. Then will the Order of Enoch flourish." The most encouraging feature of the work is, to our brother's mind, the establishing in this place the Order of Enoch.

Space in our valuable columns forbids the review of all the grand and glorious sentiments expressed by the many missionaries present at the afternoon service; but both brethren and sisters, who spoke, advanced the thought that many of the young are fighting valiantly against the forces of darkness and error, and that Israel is carrying the banner of Immanuel safely onward toward victory.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Boston, Massachusetts.

We have had two or three special days in the branch when the part of the city nearest our chapel was well circularized. No great numbers have been the result, but this we did not expect. It is not the intention of the committee to give up the movement, for our city must be warned, and we believe the Saints will be built up spiritually by a determined effort to do the warning. The true missionary spirit must gain a firmer hold on God's people before they will be blessed as he wishes to bless them. At our first special day, the 27th of November, Bro. U. W. Greene spoke in the evening from one of his charts.

At Christmas time, Bro. Albert N. Hoxie, jr., was in Somerville, and sang with us in our cantata given Christmas night by the young people, under the direction of our chorister, Ada M. Lewis, the reader being Sr. Clara M. Johnson. On Tuesday night, the 27th, we were all invited to Albert's home, where we had a splendid time. On last Thursday night, 28d of March, Brother Hoxie again surprised us by appearing at our prayer meeting, and Sunday morning occupied the pulpit. In the evening of the same day, Bro. A. N. Baker spoke. It is certainly encouraging to watch the progress of our brethren who have not so very long held the priesthood.

There have been three baptisms of late in the branch; Brother Francis, of Maine, who is boarding at Brother Greene's home and attending Fisher College; Sister Hiltbolt, the widow of a Boston physician who died last fall; and Bro. Elmer B. Lewis, formerly of Cape Cod, who is on his way to attend General Conference with Bro. R. Farrell.

Our district conference, which convened in Boston the first Sunday in February, was very well attended, and apparently enjoyed by all. The morning prayer meeting was very good and so also were the preaching services. There was certainly a good spirit present throughout the conference. Meals on Sunday, dinner and supper, were served to all in the lower auditorium. Concerning quality of food, no complaint was heard, but rather commendation, which was justly due the committee of eleven, who worked harmoniously and faithfully with Sr. Mary Edwards, a sister not long in the church, as chairman.

Our Sunday school is in very good condition, superintended by Dr. W. A. Sinclair, assisted by Bro. Wallace Carter. We are planning and practising considerably for Easter exercises, when in connection with the program we expect to have tableaux. Last Sunday we had rather a novel review, consisting of a perforated map, showing Paul's journeys, traced by means of a lighted candle (from the back) through the perforations, thus helping to fix the places in our minds, and indicating the shedding of light by Paul throughout his course.

Quite recently we celebrated the eightieth birthday of our oldest member, Grandma Trask, as she is familiarly known. She has not been in the church so very long, but since she found the restored gospel and united with us, we have learned to love her.

On Sunday, March 12, Brother Hopkins, representing Graceland, was with us. He spoke both morning and evening, the morning talk being given almost entirely to the subject which he is out to explain. We were edified and strengthened by reason of his remarks, which we firmly believe were indited by the Holy Spirit. He certainly met with little or no opposition. From his own report, we have reason to believe the Somerville Saints demonstrated that they were willing to uphold Graceland, not only by word but by something that speaks louder than words when it is needed. We wish him every success in his labors, and admire his courage in going forth as he has.

Conference Minutes.

EASTERN WALES.—Conference met at Nantyglo, February 25 and 26, 1911, district president E. J. Trapp in chair, assisted by Elder E. B. Morgan, sub-missionary in charge. MCDONALD.—At her home in Wyandotte, Michigan, Sr. Sarah A. McDonald died March 19, 1911, aged 70 years, 8 months, and 14 days. She was baptized at Detroit, Michigan, on December 29, 1895, since which time the angel message has been her constant theme and comfort. She died in the hope of a glorious resurrection, and we therefore sorrow not for her as for those who die without hope. The funeral sermon was preached from Acts 24:14, 15, by Elder W. J. Smith, a large concourse of friends being in attendance.

NUMBER 15

Zion's Religio-Literary Convention

PRESIDENT'S REPORT.

INTRODUCTION.

Since last convention I have held the office with which you have honored me for the sixteenth time. I will say I have occupied but a small part of it. The duties imposed upon me, and the demands upon my time, by the position of acting president of Grace-land College, have been such as greatly to limit my opportunities to push the interest of the Religio. In fact, I am free to confess upon the outstart, that such interests have pushed me, and that only such things have been, in large part, attended to that could not be deferred or put upon some one else.

However, some things have been done, and of these this report will endeavor to speak.

FIELD WORKERS.

Agreeable to an action of the executive committees of the Religio and Sunday school, the superintendent of the Sunday school and the president of the Religio appointed a number of field workers for various districts and localities, it being thought by the executive committees that more field work would thus be accomplished, and the work be built up to a greater degree than by the method of the executives of the two organizations appointing field workers for special occasions. These district appointees were to labor in their respective districts, promoting the interests of the work at all times, encouraging institutes and conventions, always working by consent of, and in cooperation with the authorities of the district.

Some excellent reports have come from some of these field workers, and there is no doubt that the plan, if carefully followed up, will accomplish good.

Vice-president R. T. Cooper, was requested to have charge of the work in the West, and has evidently been active all the time. His report will particularize.

Brother William Aylor, field worker for Texas, reports one local for that big State, and a number of home classes. This local is in San Antonio. There is a little gain all the time. Here is a vast field scarcely entered, which should be an inspiration to our young people desiring work.

H. A. Doty, for Western Michigan District, reports having occupied as he had had opportunity. He is a busy man, and can be counted on to do what he can.

Sr. D. H. Blair, for Independence Stake, reports having occupied as invited to do so, by the officers of the stake in institute work in the various locals in the stake; also worked in their conventions. Sister Blair was also appointed for Clinton District; but acceding to desires expressed by those in charge, Sr. Flo. McNichols conducted the auxiliary work in their reunion.

Sr. Eliza Chase and daughter Alice were appointed field workers for the Rocky Mountain Mission, but report labors only for Utah. These sisters have done a good work in reviving and reorganizing the locals. Their appointments were recognized by the Clergy Bureau according them clergy privileges in traveling.

Bro. Myron A. McConley reports as field worker for Hawaii, as having accomplished quite a commendable result in introducing and establishing the normal work. He makes some pertinent suggestions that we would do well to heed. The conditions he reports confirm us in the idea that there is no limit to the extent of the field before us as an auxiliary in the proclamation of the gospel in all the world. [We are compelled to condense Brother McConley's letter.—EDITORS.]

Elder McConley suggests that the Sunday School and Religio cooperate in establishing a mission among the Chinese and Japanese in Honolulu, having a building fitted up for that purpose, with some one in charge, open as a reading room at least part of the day, and where gospel services might be held every night. As it would be, in this place, nearly all young people that would attend, it would naturally be a Sunday school and Religio work.

In Doctrine and Covenants 125: 11 the church was commanded to print tracts in Chinese and Japanese which was done. But aside from this, he thinks but little missionary effort has been directed toward these people and there is still quite a number of tracts on hand. Have had a Chinese Sunday school of thirty-five or forty for several years; but they would have no place they could call home if they were baptized, as members are mostly Hawaiians and "the two peoples do not mix well." As there are as many as four hundred and fifty millions across the water to reach, we will do well to make an effort here, where our flag is in power, and among those who are citizens of our country, but nevertheless they are genuine orientals. "In fact, the people here are the key to the orient. Shall we use the key?"

He wishes to work in accord with those in charge of mission work. "And if we wish to offset the work of other churches we can not do it by making a half-hearted effort for they are spending much time and money right in this city, and are reaching the young people."

Sr. Flo McNichols, field worker for Kansas, has been active and reports fairly good success attending her efforts. She thinks her field a hard one, needing much attention.

Bro. Anthony R. Hewitt, appointed for Chatham District, has been active. He says the people have not understood the duties of a field worker, and hence have not appreciated the efforts made. He thinks that with the experience of this year he could do much better than he has done, which suggests that the experiment of appointing field workers for missions and districts has shown sufficient reason for continuing the practice.

Elder J. B. Wildermuth, of Eastern-Iowa District, reports three organizations of locals in his field and prospects for more; two of these the result of field workers' effort. This is an excellent showing. Brother Wildermuth is in favor of normal work, and we hope soon to number him among the graduates.

Elder Holmes J. Davison makes an encouraging report, but also calls attention to the fact that Northwest Canada is a big country, and one little field worker can not do justice to so large a territory. He did some work in Saskatchewan and Alberta. Two districts in his field send petitions for field workers for their respective districts next year. This brother makes some suggestions with reference to reporting in connection with field work that might be of advantage. We are glad to note this brother's activity and to receive his suggestions, and would say in this connection that the suggestions are welcome, and it would be agreeable to the executive officers at all times, if the brethren and sisters in their various fields of activity would note conditions and make suggestions as to means of improvement. No one has learned it all yet.

These field workers report having been well received and cordially treated, by the Saints, and encouraged by the church officials. Besides these field workers there are others whose work I do not mention, not that I would slight any, but because not reported to me, or if reported have been overlooked. The general officers of both societies have done what they could. Each of these officers will report his own labors, so that I will only mention my own in detail.

PRESIDENT'S FIELD WORK.

First, I will say that while I have realized that the extent of my work decreased this year, to my regret, I have been pleased to see that the work of others has increased, notably that of our general secretary.

In June I made a trip to Saint Joseph, Stewartsville, Cameron, and Far West, Missouri, addressing the Saints in all these places, meeting each of the three branches in Saint Joseph. On this trip I combined college interests with Sunday school and Religio. In July I attended the Saints' reunion at Chetek, Wisconsin, where we had a splendid time. I conducted institute work, normal work, and assisted in all matters where I found opportunity. At the close of this reunion, I visited Porcupine Branch, Wisconsin, and spoke in interest of Religio work.

My next point was Montrose, Iowa, reunion, where I did what I could; holding special sessions of auxiliary work, and reorganizing the Montrose Sunday school.

In August, I with my family attended Lamoni stake reunion, and did what I had opportunity to do.

My duties in connection with Graceland made it necessary to cut my time in the field short, but I am glad to say that the pleasure and joy that comes to me in this kind of work was never greater, and I only regret that it has necessarily been so limited this year. The people as a rule welcome help, and show their appreciation in such a way as to encourage one in helping. One can not engage in teaching the young of the church without being impressed with the thought that there is great hope for the future of the church.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

On September 30, I went to Independence to meet with the executive committee and the lessons committee. At this meeting of the executive committee it was decided to make no effort in the line of asking for donations to the translation fund, inasmuch as there exists misunderstanding between the church and Religio touching the matter, and that we will seek to bring about an understanding at next conference. In this matter the executive committee have a recommendation to offer to the convention.

LESSONS COMMITTEE.

The lessons committee agreed upon a quarter's lesson upon the teachings of the Book of Mormon upon important topics, and after the completion of such course the committees were quite inclined to taking up the revelations of the church, and church history. The choosing of a future course was deferred and a recommendation from the committee will likely be presented to the convention.

SOCIAL PURITY COMMITTEES.

Pursuant to the action of last convention authorizing the president to appoint two committees in the interest of personal purity, after no little delay and correspondence, the following were appointed: Sr. B. C. Smith, of Independence, Missouri; Anna Reynolds, of California, and Jennie Studley, of Massachusetts, for the girls; and Brn. C. B. Woodstock, of Lamoni; C. E. Crumley, of California, and R. W. Farrell, of Massachusetts, for the boys. We expect to hear from these committees, and trust we shall be able to enter upon this important work in real earnest. One can not read the papers and magazines without being confirmed in the idea of the great necessity of attention being given to this matter.

OUR PUBLICATIONS.

Our publications have gone on practically as before, under the same editorship and being published at the same places. The Quarterly printed by the Ensign Publishing House, edited by Sr. Louise Paley Sheldon, and revised by F. M. Smith, Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, and A. H. Parsons; the Religio's Arena, a department in Autumn Leaves, edited by E. A. Smith, with Estella Wight associate; this latter being our official organ. In connection with the Arena, I have undertaken to publish questions and answers, but time, or the want of it, compelled me to give it up. The Quarterly has continued to increase in circulation until now we have indeed a respectable list of 7,200 subscribers.

JUVENILE CHURCH HISTORY.

It will be remembered that at our last convention the matter of a history for the young was agitated, and that we offered to help in its production. The matter was subsequently taken up by the General Conference, and the church through the Board of Publication has the work under way. Sr. Vida E. Smith was appointed to write the history up to 1844, and she notified me the other day by telephone that she had completed her part. We are glad to note this and trust the work may be speedily pushed to completion.

NORMAL DEPARTMENT.

The continued growth of the normal department is a source of pleasure, and of profit to those engaged therein. Many new names appear among the students of the department and the number of graduates this year is a source of congratulation to our superintendent, Sr. Eunice Winn Smith. There are about eighty graduates and thirty post-graduates.

But her successes have not been achieved without some hindrances and annoyances. The Book of Mormon Normal Book was all sold, and it was found that before a second edition could be issued, some corrections and revisions were necessary. This has delayed the reprinting of the book and hindered class work in this course in a great many instances. But we are hopeful that ere long it may be available. One of the annoyances has been the unfavorable attitude of some toward Hurlbut, one having gone so far as to assert in his protest that there are ninety-six errors on the first few pages, and urging that we should prepare and publish our own book to take the place of this book so full of errors. It has been a matter of wonderment that these errors have not been specifically pointed out and corrections indicated so that a list of errors and corrections could be published, and that such a good work of benevolence might not then be followed up by placing manuscripts for a new and correct book in the hands of the proper authorities for publication, and thus spare future students the experience of spending much valuable time in acquiring a volume of errors that must subsequently be rooted out and give place for truth. For those who are capable of finding so many errors are, doubtless, qualified to write such a book. But the facts are that no one has claimed there are no errors in Hurlbut, not even the author himself, and we have thought we have seen some errors the author has not admitted. Then, those who are making the most use of the book find the least objection. They find enough good to more than overbalance the errors, as they believe, and have concluded that until a better work is available it is desirable to use this. The executives of the two organizations appointed a committee to receive and compile a list of errors and corrections, so that they could be published and made available to the students of the normal department. This committee made its report and the matter was lodged with the tract committee of the church, as provided for in the authority to get out such a list of corrections. And there the matter lodges. Whether the tract committee thought the matter of so little importance, or whether they have not had time to give it consideration, we know not. But we may be nearer the goal of our fond ambition to possess our own book on normal study than some suppose. The work as developed in connection with putting the course in Graceland has resulted in bringing forth some valuable material, both as to subject matter and systematization, and it is not too much to say, that I believe the one who has had this course in charge could prepare a book that would, from our standpoint, far surpass Hurlbut in many respects, if her hands could be released from other matters. This is a matter worthy the attention of the convention.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

The superintendent of this department reports an excellent work done. In a recent letter she casually remarks, "The year I took charge of the work the enrollment was 459, and since then we have furnished material for 32 locals and have over 1,700 members left." She also says, "Every State in the Union has been canvassed this year." That is what I call a good showing. Such a result ought to compensate for every disappointment, every slight, every headache and heartache encountered. How many hearts have been gladdened by the cheering gospel message through this department!!

TRANSLATION.

It is a matter of keen regret that such serious misunderstandings should have developed in regard to our efforts to assist the church in getting the Book of Mormon before the peoples of the world. Only the sincere desire to help—be an auxiliary—has prompted every movement by the Religio as a body. There never has been a thought of financial gain, nor the slightest hint of an unholy ambition to rule in matters in which we are clearly subordinate; but we have been misunderstood, and the work has been hindered by the misunderstanding. We should not, however, be discouraged in trying to do our utmost to accomplish all the good we can. If this avenue of activity shall be closed to us by our own unwise actions, or by the unwise actions of others, there are many, many avenues open to us, and we should strive to be worthy to be permitted to assist. And let us not forget that the Lord said, "No one can assist in this work except he shall be humble and full of love." We hope to see a wise adjustment of the matter.

GOSPEL LITERATURE BUREAU.

I am pleased to commend the excellent work of Bro. J. A. Ferris as superintendent of the Gospel Literature Bureau. This department has grown and prospered to a surprising degree under his push and energy, with his able assistant, W. H. Callin. The personal work of these brethren in placing reading matter in the hands not only of those of the church who are in need of such, but going outside of the church, and even into the hospitals and jails to enlighten and cheer the unfortunate, is an example worthy to be emulated. They have also done much in the way of putting some of our publications on sale at news stands, thus making it available to the traveling public who are in the habit of buying their reading matter. There are great possibilities for the work of this department, and this brother seems to be the one for the work.

ATTITUDE TO GRACELAND.

My intimate relation to both the Religio and Graceland is my apology, if needed, for the following. The church believes in education in the highest and strictest sense, encouraged in this belief by the clearest and profoundest declarations of divine revelation. Acting upon this belief the church has founded an educational institution. For whom? Echo answers, For whom? Certainly not for the aged. Certainly not for a favored few of the young who chance to live in one small locality. But for the young of the church in all the world. Are we as young people alive to the interests of the church? I will not say our own interests, for we have none that are not the interests of the church. Is it not through the young that the church expects to be benefited by the educational effort being carried on? This does not admit of argument. Then what is our duty? It is plain, "as plain as the daylight is from the dark night." We should give our support, financially, morally, and in every other legitimate way. Graceland should have our preference in choosing a school in which to pursue our studies, all things taken into consideration. It should have our financial support to the extent of our reasonable ability. And what is our reasonable ability? Who knows? Does anyone believe the Religians could not, by some means raise a dollar per capita if need be to support the education of the young in all the world? I do not believe they could not. And how much would that be, do you say? The secretary's report will show about 9,628 enrolled in locals and 1,938 in home department; total, 11,566. And such a college as we could have! One second to none in all the land. Have we any duty in this direction? Get our boys and girls to working for Graceland and the question of means, equipment, and students are all solved.

IN CONCLUSION.

While in total gain in membership our showing is small, only 416 in local enrollment, and 354 in home department is shown by reports to the secretary, yet the year gives evidence of continued prosperity. This has been not so much a result of executive activity, especially so far as the office of president is concerned, but rather in spite of his inactivity. And because this prosperity has been realized without executive interference is not sufficient reason for continuing the executive inactivity, for there is need and opportunity for much being done were we able to find the person for the place who could put energy into the office. I urge, therefore, that this be seriously considered in the choice of officers for next year. In doing this I am not asking for a vote of confidence, for have I not had that vote of confidence sixteen times already, and especially in the unanimous elections for a number of years past? But as you have expressed confidence in me in those matters, I ask that you have confidence in the wisdom of my advice in this matter. Is there not some one among you who could serve you acceptably and give you much more attention to the important duties imposed by the office? My connection with Graceland is likely to continue in some capacity so far as I know now, and there is a field large enough for my small ability.

Earnestly praying and trusting for divine guidance to direct our course in so far as we are humble and worthy, I respectfully submit the foregoing.

J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

REPORT OF SOCIAL PURITY COMMITTEE FOR GIRLS.

We fear you will be disappointed at our report, but it was so late when we received our appointment that we have had but one third of the year to do our work in, and that with busy people along with other lines, leaves not much time for so important a work. However, we deem it wise to make haste slowly in this matter.

We have sought after and examined, so far as we were able, literature along these lines, and while we find abundance for the use of parents in teaching their children, we find scarcely anything for the girls themselves. We saw an announcement in American Motherhood of a leaflet for girls entitled "Light for girls," written by Mrs. Lutes, editor of the magazine, which was shortly to be published. We sent money for samples, but it is not out yet. From description given, this leaflet seems most likely of any we have learned of to be best suited to the purpose of this committee.

As to methods of presenting this instruction, it seems to be the general opinion of educators and specialists in this work, that the home is the place first of all where this instruction should be given.

But since there are so many homes where it is not given, for the public welfare it should be given in the schools and other societies, but not by teachers who themselves are but poorly informed, but by lecturers who are specialists along these lines, or by teachers who have been trained in this work.

As to the literature we have secured, much of it has no direct bearing on the subject in hand; but it serves to show how other committees and societies are seeking to forestall the onward march of social impurity by doing away with conditions favorable to its growth. One member of the committee suggests reading clubs, where credits are given, and finally diplomas, when a specified amount of reading has been accomplished. Also social purity clubs, for the distribution of suitable literature. We recommend that if this body see fit to appoint another committee on this work, that the members be so located that they may counsel together.

MRS. B. C. SMITH, Chairman of Committee.

REPORT OF GOSPEL LITERATURE BUREAU.

Tracts distributed	8,759
Ensigns distributed	4,041
HERALDS distributed	2,613
Leaves distributed	275
Marvelous Work and a Wonder distributed....	490
Books loaned	79
Tracts and booklets sold at newsstands	144
Other literature distributed	3,776
Total	20,177

All literature sold at newsstands was sold at cost price, the stand reaping the profit. Bureau has made advancement during the year. Eleven superintendents have been appointed in fields where there were no literature leaders. Hospital and jail work have received special attention. Sunday distributing in prisons should not be avoided by Latter Day Saints whose mission is to preach the gospel to every creature. Many expressions of gratitude have been made by prisoners for literature received. Pres. Joseph Smith's advice in regard to the work was: "Keep boring in; you can not do too much of it."

JOSEPH A. FERRIS, Superintendent.

The statistical report of the general secretary showed the following summary: Total enrollment, 9,628, a gain of 416; number of locals, 253, a gain of 3; home class members, 1,938, gain 354; charters issued, 27.

The secretary also made an excellent report of personal labors. We regret that time and space prevent a detailed report of the many interesting features of this convention.

MONDAY.

7.30 p. m.—A petition from the Little Sioux District, Iowa, asking for supplementary lesson leaves for Religio classes was finally referred to the lessons committee.

It was decided to hereafter publish a map of the territory canvassed in each Religio Quarterly.

In order to have recognition from the State as a college, Graceland must have at least 7,500 volumes on collegiate or allied subjects and exclusive of public documents. An effort is being made to raise $1,000 to enable Graceland to qualify on this point. A communication was read from Prof. T. J. Fitzpatrick, the librarian, in which he solicited aid from the society. It was moved to donate the sum of $100, which was carried unanimously.

The lessons committee reported lessons prepared to October, 1911. The question as to whether the course shall thereafter canvass "present day revelation and church history" was referred to the lessons committee. The present committee was reelected for another year.

TUESDAY, APRIL 4.

9 a. m.—After the usual opening exercises and the reading of the minutes, the report of the editor of Religio Quarterly was read and spread on the minutes.

A committee appointed by the president of the society to consider the question of social purity for boys, made an excellent report; but lack of time precludes the making of a copy. Later, it was moved to appoint local committees to have oversight of social purity and temperance; but as this partook of the nature of amendment to constitution and by-laws, it was deferred. The matter of social purity for girls was referred to the Daughters of Zion.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

The following were nominated for president: J. A. Gunsolley, S. A. Burgess, Walter W. Smith, J. A. Gardner, William A. Bushnell. The vote was by ballot and resulted in the election of J. A. Gunsolley, of Lamoni, Iowa.

For vice-president, J. A. Gardner, S. A. Burgess, Gomer R. Wells, Ray Lloyd were nominated. The vote resulted in the selection of S. A. Burgess.

For the general secretary, the assistant secretary was instructed to cast the entire ballot for Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser, of Independence, Missouri, the present incumbent.

J. A. Gardner and R. B. Trowbridge were nominated, and the ballot resulted in the selection of the first named.

For general librarian, S. A. Burgess and J. F. Garver were nominees and the first named was elected.

For superintendent of home department, the secretary was instructed to cast the full ballot for Sr. Altha R. Deam, of Independence, Missouri.

It was decided to have the report of credentials committee printed before conventions in the future—a standing order.

The following appropriations were made: For general expenses of society, $300; for promotion of social purity, $300; making $1500 that has been voted by the convention for various purposes.

The chairman of committee on Book of Mormon chronology made a verbal report, the gist of which was that lack of time prevented committee from going into the matter thoroughly. Brother Flanders had published a book which stands on its merits, and the committee recommended that the matter rest there. Report was adopted and committee discharged.

It was moved that a committee of three be appointed to draft a resolution on the attitude of the Religio towards athletics and physical culture, for report next year. This was referred to the executive board for such action as they deem best.

The table being cleared, the president congratulated the convention on the peaceful manner in which they had disposed of the business. The convention stood adjourned. Benediction by the vice-president.

Sunday School Convention

The twentieth annual Sunday School Convention was called to order April 4, at 2 p. m. by the superintendent, Daniel Macgregor, of Thedford, Ontario. Elder Hale W. Smith acted as chorister, while the audience sang number 99 of Zion's Praises, after which Bro. T. A. Hougas offered prayer. Number 145 was then sung.

The superintendent introduced Bro. Elbert A. Smith, who addressed the assembly for a short time. He impressed upon the audience the thought that as we sow so shall we reap; and, therefore, the necessity of a proper kind of seed. The importance of sowing the seeds of life in the lives of all humanity—especially the children, was touched.

The thought of diligence in the work we attempt was dwelt upon. The quantity and quality of the harvest depends upon the quantity and quality of seed sown and the soil we sow it upon. He expressed the idea that it was our duty during the entire year to labor for the best results along these lines; and to not grow discouraged because we thought the seed was falling upon stony ground. Though the sowing of the seed does not bring forth as abundant a harvest as we would desire, it is better to bear a partial harvest than to allow weeds and tares to grow entirely. "It is the peculiar heritage of women to instruct little children," is one quoted statement, stating in connection with it that while only men could preach from the pulpit, they (women) could exercise their inherent rights in the Sunday school.

Bro. Daniel Macgregor was elected to preside over the sessions of the association, with power to choose his associates. He chose Bro. Gomer R. Wells, Bro. D. J. Krahl was chosen secretary; and was authorized to select his assistants. He chose J. F. Mintun, Belle James, and Guy Mintun.

Bro. Hale W. Smith was chosen chorister with privilege of choosing organist or organists. The local janitor and ushers were elected to serve. The chorister announced as his choice of organists, Sr. F. B. Farr and Belle James.

The report of the superintendent was read. He reported advanced work in the cradle roll and home department work. The Christmas offering was more this year than ever before, showing a willingness upon the part of the children to respond to the financial needs of the church. The normal work has been under the supervision of Sr. Eunice W. Smith and has been making gains. He commended the work of the Quarterly editor—Sister Salyards. As one of the editors of the Exponent he had tried to make it instrumental for good and to fill the mission necessity requires that it should.

He hoped to see the circulation list increased. One suggestion to this end was that each local school subscribe for a sufficient number to supply the officers and teachers. He thought that some measure ought to be recommended to the end that the business of district conventions might be expedited. The question of grading schools was responded to by resolutions from the Independence and Lamoni Stake conventions.

The credentials' committee reported the addition and the subtraction, together with the changing of some names on the printed copy distributed. Their report was adopted and the committee continued.

The home department superintendent, Sr. Macgregor, reported the work she had accomplished, and also the needs of the work. She recommended the ordering of better records for the work, and the maintenance of a closer relationship between this department and the General Association.

The treasurer, John Smith, reported balance on hand last report, $2,239.09; total receipts, $4,203.40; grand total, $6,442.49; expenditures, $4,591.74; balance on hand March 27, 1911, $1,850.75.

The chair appointed J. B. Wildermuth and F. J. Ebeling a committee to wait upon the First Presidency and Twelve, announcing that we were in session and ready to hear from them at their pleasure. The printed report of the secretary was distributed.

Sister Salyards, editor of the Quarterly, reported that the lessons were prepared up to October, 1911. The lessons committee's report was read. They reported a unanimously unfavorable sentiment to the use of the international text. On the use of texts they reported as follows: "That the editor be instructed to continue in the Book of Acts until the book is finished, and if there is not sufficient material in Acts to finish out the year the editor take up the lessons on the Restoration."

It was the opinion of the committee that the time has come when it is to the interest of the work to depart from the present uniformity of texts. The editor asked advice concerning the matter of devising lessons on the evils of the use of strong drink and tobacco. Individually, the committee favored it.

Action on this report was deferred by motion until 9 a. m., April 5. Sr. Eunice W. Smith reported on the normal work. Petitions were read on the subjects of the "uniformity of texts," and "the earlier publication of the Blue Hope." The latter was referred to the Presiding Bishop.

The Quorum of Twelve presented a request asking the association to remunerate Brother Kippe for his labors in translating the Book of Mormon into the German language. As the Religio had taken favorable action on this matter the request was not granted.

A communication was received from members of the faculty of Graceland College, asking the association to grant two hundred dollars toward advancing the interests of the college library. This request was granted by motion. The matter of report blanks referred to by the home department superintendent was referred to the executive committee, with power to act.

The times of opening and closing the sessions was left with the presidency of the sessions. The election of officers was made the special order for to-morrow afternoon after routine work. A lengthy discussion was held on the question of who had the right to organize a Sunday school,—missionaries without the consent of district officers, or district officers only. The whole matter was tabled.

Tuesday Evening.—The graduating exercises of the normal department were held in the upper auditorium of the church on the evening of the 4th, at 7.30. Quite an interesting and profitable program was given. It consisted of addresses, papers, and solos.

The class numbered seventy-eight, but only about one third the number were present. Apostle J. W. Rushton delivered the address to the class, while S. A. Burgess presented the diplomas on behalf of Sr. Eunice W. Smith, the superintendent of the department.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 5.

Nine o'clock, a. m.—Number 18 was sung, after which Elder S. W. L. Scott offered prayer. Number 42 was sung. The courtesies of the floor were extended visiting brethren. A communication from the Quorum of Twelve, expressing their sympathy for and interest in the Sunday school work, was received.

The normal superintendent reported that for the year ending March 31, 1911, there was not so many graduates as last year. The work was in good condition and past the experimental stage. There are now 1,776 pupils, with 305 graduates.

The action of the lessons committee reported on yesterday regarding the question of international texts was indorsed unanimously. By motion the recommendation of the lessons committee on the matter of a repeal of the resolution requiring the use of uniform texts for all grades of the Quarterly, discussed at length until adjournment at 12 m.

At 2 o'clock the meeting was called to order by the superintendent. After the opening exercises an additional report was read from the credentials committee on names of delegates from Utah. Also a report from Heman C. Smith, of the library board.

The delegates to the World's Sunday School Convention, held in Washington, District of Columbia, last May, reported that they were permitted to assemble with the convention, but that no delegate vote was called. They were impressed with the dispatch with which the business was transacted, together with other features, and stated that we might copy from them along this line.

The following officers were elected for the year: Daniel Macgregor, superintendent; Gomer R. Wells, first assistant; A. H. Parsons, second assistant; D. J. Krahl, secretary; John Smith, treasurer; Flo McNichols, home department superintendent; E. H. Fisher, library commissioner. John F. Garver was elected to succeed himself as auditor. The term of Bro. Heman C. Smith expired with this session. He was elected to succeed himself. The report of the revising committee was read. The following named brethren were elected as members of the revising committee: A. Carmichael, R. S. Salyards, and John Smith.

The matter pending at adjournment was taken up and after a lengthy discussion, a delegate vote was called, with the following result: 1,459 in favor of deferring action one year and in the interim to be referred to the districts and schools, they to report to this body one year hence; and there were 855 against such deferring. After quite a little discussion as to the legality of the action taken, adjournment was had till 7.30 p. m. At this session the second assistant superintendent reported. A motion was presented by which the May number of the Exponent was made the convention number, in which the entire space, except that needed for the lessons, shall be devoted to convention minutes. This was carried unanimously.

A portion of the superintendent's report with reference to appointment of committee on resolutions, was read, after which the following resolution was passed: "Be it resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to provide for a plan to carry out the intent of said recommendation and report to the next annual convention."

A resolution asking the association to appropriate six hundred dollars for the printing of the Doctrine and Covenants in the German language, with the approval of the First Presidency and Board of Publication. This motion was discussed for a time and was then tabled.

The matter of printing the delegates' credentials was made a standing order by unanimous vote.

The balance of twenty-five dollars from the appropriation made last year to the library commission was ordered paid. Fifty dollars was donated to the commission. The matter of appointing field workers whose expenses are to be paid by the association was referred to the executive committee. It was moved that the amount of $250 be appropriated to the use of the executive committee toward this field work, provided the committee see fit to send out workers. The motion was lost by a vote of 88 against, to 50 for. $500 was appropriated for contingent expenses. The superintendency was made the committee on resolutions, previously provided for.

The convention adjourned for one year, after a profitable session.

General Conference

APRIL 6.

The annual General Conference of the church was called to order at 10 a. m., Thursday by Pres. Joseph Smith, whom the assembly was glad to see in the chair at the opening of another conference. "Lord we come before thee now," was sung, after which President Smith offered prayer. The assembly then sang, "Redeemer of Israel."

The First Presidency was chosen to preside over the conference. They were also empowered to perfect the organization. The chair then announced the following: R. S. Salyards, with Charles Fry and Joseph R. Salyards assistants, was made secretary of the conference. Official stenographers: L. A. Gould, W. R. Dexter, Belle James, and Blanche Allen. Organists: Pauline Anthony, with Srs. F. B. Farr and Belle James, assistants. Choristers: G. R. Wells, Letha Tilton, with F. A. Russell and H. W. Smith assistants.

President Smith followed these announcements with the following short address:

Brethren of the assembly, in taking charge of this session, I do so with considerable diffidence. I have never approached this task with anything but a degree of diffidence. The conditions are such that this diffidence is increased. I was always and am now much impressed with the splendid sentiment that was uttered by Abraham Davenport, of the assembly in Massachusetts years ago, when that dark day, known as the dark day of 1780, occurred, when it seemed that the end of creation had been reached, when great darkness fell upon the country, and cries and weeping were heard, when midst the wringing of hands the moan was uttered, "The judgment day of God has come." Mr. Davenport arose in his place in the assembly and said: "I know not whether this be the day of judgment or not; but this I do know, that the Master has said, 'Occupy till I come.' If it be the day of judgment and he comes, he will find us doing our duty, occupying according to his command. Let lights be brought, and the work of the assembly proceed."

It is in this spirit (which I am flattering myself has so long ruled with me) that I assume, in connection with those holding the Presidency with me, the duties of this conference. As a matter of course, I understand that the great weight and labor will fall upon my associates. And it is a source of congratulation to us all that in our recollection of the history of the past, the events that have occurred at our several assemblings, there has been a feeling of support granted to those who have been chosen to work in their allotted places, which has wrought for good; and when the end of our assembling has been reached, and we have departed hence, with but few exceptions the altar fires were aglow, our hearts alive to our hopes, and our every faculty devoted unto the accomplishment of the work and the duties assigned us. May God help us, upon this occasion, whatever may transpire, that we shall not forget that we are called to be Christian gentlemen, Saints with the hope of life, commanded to live in the world, but not to be of the world; expected to make the name honorable where we live, and to be sure that our conduct shall be such as will pass investigation of each other, and necessarily of Him who has called us.

May the peace of God be with us upon our assembling.

The Presidency was empowered to determine the character of meetings, make appointments, etc.

The report of the credentials committee was read and approved, subject to further emendations or corrections. The chair stated the order of meetings would be as usual:—prayer meeting at 9 a. m.; preaching 10.45; business session promptly at 2 o'clock p. m.; and preaching at 7.45 p. m.

A number of petitions were received and referred to the authorities to whom it was deemed most advisable by the body, depending upon the nature of the petition.

The Presidency occupied the stand; the apostles, bishops, patriarchs, and stake officers the rostrum; the Quorums of Seventy the center section of seats; the high priests the right section; delegates the left section and all remaining unoccupied seats.

The afternoon session of Thursday was called to order at 2 o'clock by Pres. Joseph Smith. After the reading of the minutes of the morning session, Pres. E. A. Smith took the chair, following which an additional report was read from the credentials committee.

Reports were read from the following: Church Secretary, Church Recorder, Historian, First Quorum of Priests, Eighth Quorum of Teachers, and First Quorum of Teachers.

Reports were read from the following apostles in charge: J. W. Wight of mission number 1; I. N. White and J. F. Curtis of mission number 2; U. W. Greene of mission number 3; F. M. Sheehy and J. W. Rushton of mission numbers 5 and 6; and G. T. Griffiths in charge of the British Isles Mission and Palestine. Brn. G. A. Smith, W. E. LaRue, H. G. Sterrett, Jesse Roberts, E. Rannie, E. B. Hull, William Johnson, and E. A. Jones were made a committee on administration.

The Recorder's report shows a total membership of 63,090, a net gain for the year of 2,290. There are 4,280 holding the various orders of the priesthood, 3,676 of whom are members in the United States.

In the evening Elder F. M. Cooper preached a very able discourse. Elder S. S. Smith was in charge.

FRIDAY, APRIL 7.

The morning prayer meeting held at 9 a. m. was in charge of J. C. Crabb and George A. Smith. At 10.45, Jasper O. Dutton delivered a very interesting and able address. J. E. Vanderwood was in charge.

At 2 o'clock p. m. Pres. Joseph Smith called the assembly to order. The minutes of yesterday's session were read. A short additional report was received from the credentials committee.

A resolution from Brooklyn asking for a city missionary was referred to the Twelve. A petition from Oakland, California, asking for the return of J. M. Terry, was referred to the Presidency and Twelve.

R. C. Russell, apostle in charge of mission number 4 reported.

A report from the First Presidency respecting the work done during the year was read. President Smith has been at home during the year, owing to condition of health, but with aid of his private secretary, Brother Dexter, has done some work on his memoirs and kept up his editorial work and correspondence. The junior members have been busy along various lines,—in connection with the HERALD editorship, visiting reunions, receiving reports, reorganization of quorums, Order of Enoch, Sanitarium, etc.

The High Priests' Quorum reported.

The report of a committee on boundary lines of Southern Missouri and Clinton districts recommended no alteration at present. This committee was appointed at yesterday's session. Their report was adopted.

A report from the joint council of the Presidency and Twelve on the persecution of the Jews in Russia was read. They recommended the adoption of a protest against such atrocities, to be sent to President Taft and the two houses of the national Congress. The report, with the recommendation, was adopted.

UNITED ORDER OF ENOCH.

Report was received from the United Order of Enoch, and owing to the interest of the general church in this movement we insert it entire.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 3, 1911.

To the President and Members of the General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; Greeting:

The officers of the United Order of Enoch respectfully report that on the 11th day of May, 1910, the Articles of Incorporation of the Society were duly entered of record and charter issued from the Secretary of State, recognizing its work as proper under the laws of the State of Missouri, as set forth in the articles.

The organization has been in condition for active work then, about eleven months, during which time it has been compelled to use much of the energies given to it by its officers in representing its work and placing it before the church membership and peoples of the world who are interested in knowing its character and undertakings.

During this time the order has undertaken to place itself in a condition to help, in its time and place, the poor and needy, and act as its purpose outlined in its articles declares, as a helping and benevolent institution to the upright, needy, and industrious who may lack.

As should have been expected by all who are acquainted with such undertakings, the work of the society has moved slowly and met with opposition, although it was founded and nurtured solely for the purpose of doing good to mankind in this world, thus helping along the worthy children of our heavenly Father who were unable, in the commercial stress of life, to help themselves as they deserved and were worthy, and were anxious also themselves to do.

The order secured lands which have been, as rapidly as the resources of the order would permit, placed in shape in lots or acreage property as a beginning of its work, helping those who were entitled to help, to privileges and homes. It was and is, however, the expectation and wish of those composing the order that not only lands should be secured for the purpose of accommodating those who desire to settle in towns and cities, but that purchases of tracts of land suitable for agriculture should be obtained so as to accommodate the worthy and deserving of all classes. Time will prove what the society is able to do in this regard.

The direct contributions for the year to the help of the society amount to $6,132.90, and during the year the greater part of this amount has been used in arranging for the land that has been necessary to carry forward the work of the society, in improving the same and in aiding at times, directly, those who were in need of assistance to save their homes.

The society has also taken up and canvassed the work of assisting in establishing factories which will give employment to those who need the same, and which will assist in helping the worthy to obtain such employment as will give them remuneration for their labor and thereby an opportunity to obtain homes for themselves and families. It will be understood that the land purchased, improvements made, and development of factories which will furnish help direct to the needy all require means and earnest labor and work that the effort prove successful. We are aware of the fact that many misunderstand the work of the order, because they do not comprehend how difficult it is to develop an institution, the object of which is benevolent and charitable, rather than commercial and enriching to those who engage in the same, and concerning this society some have even questioned the necessity of any such organization in connection with the work of the church for the benefit of the poor and the needy. It is true, that while this has been done it was by those who never saw such an institution and who were unacquainted with the laws and workings of the same, yet there is nothing clearer in the instruction of our blessed Lord to the church than the necessity of the establishment of such an organization for the benefit of the poor. We might correctly reason that if it was necessary to have had an order in the time of Enoch, as is shown in the history of the church, it would follow that such an organization would be established as a helping power for good to the church in the present age and time, but we are not left simply to reason this out. The statement is made clearly in the record, section 77, paragraph 1, setting forth the necessity of the same. We read:

"For verily, I say unto you, the time has come, and is now at hand; and behold, and lo, it must needs be that there be an organization of my people, in regulating and establishing the affairs of the storehouse for the poor of my people, both in this place and in the land of Zion, or in other words, the city of Enoch, for a permanent and everlasting establishment and order unto my church, to advance the cause which ye have espoused," etc.

The organization is an organization unto the church for the purpose of regulating and establishing the affairs of the storehouse for the poor of the Lord's people. It is strictly what it claims to be, a helping and benevolent association for the benefit of the poor and needy, dispensing its charities by furnishing equal opportunities to the needy, upright, and industrious, in a financial, educational, and social way.

The society has also of late issued small pamphlets containing articles of association and by-laws, which may be obtained by those who wish to examine, by making application for same.

It also has headquarters located at Independence, Missouri, where it has entered upon its work; has an office open with secretary and treasurer at hand to carry on its work, performing the good that is possible for it to do, and to receive and receipt for contributions and help that the people, both of the church and of the world, may see fit to freely give in the interest of its benevolent undertakings. Also a temporary home and shelter for those interested in its work, who may pass through Independence or any who wish to examine into the character of its work, and where they may feel the benign influences that are found with those who labor for the good of their neighbors instead for self and selfish interests.

The officers in reporting to the conference feel safe in expressing the assurance that the order will in due time fully carry out the purposes of the organization to the great good of the poor and needy and thus fill its proper place unto the body in charitable and beneficent works.

With such object and purpose in view we feel that it is proper and just to solicit the hearty cooperation of the members of the conference and every helper in the work, of elevating the conditions of humanity.

The annual meeting the present year of the members of the order will be Monday, May 1, 1911, at the headquarters of the order, Independence, Missouri, being the adjourned meeting of the regular annual meeting held on the first Monday of April of each year.

The annual report of the Presiding Bishop was received as reproduced in the HERALD for April 4. The present bishopric has been serving for twenty years. During this time the homes for the aged, the College, and the Sanitarium have been provided. During the last year the Bishop and his councilor, G. H. Hilliard, have given their entire time to the work; but owing to personal duties Bro. E. A. Blakeslee had not given very much time to the duties of his office as councilor.

The auditors reported the report of the Bishop, as published, correct. They stated they had made suggestions to the Bishop concerning the carrying on of the work of his office and he had agreed, in most cases, to them. These reports were approved.

An invitation from the Independence Branch, asking the 1912 conference to meet with that branch was received. The invitation was accepted by unanimous vote.

The resignation of Mr. F. W. Newcomb as a member of the Graceland College Board of Trustees was received. Action was deferred until after the financial reports of the board are received.

The program in the evening was in charge of and under the auspices of the Daughters of Zion. A very interesting and instructive program was given, touching upon subjects relative to the home and the training of the child.

An Easter Reminiscence.

To the writer it has always seemed that above all days Easter should be a day of gladness. It is a day around which the hearts of the sorrowing ones of earth center with intense longing; a day which holds for them, and for all, the one hope which makes life a triumph and death a victory; a day consecrated to the sacred memories of the cross and its trials, followed by the pæans of victory and shouts of joy. It is by the open sepulcher and near the risen Lord that thousands of weary hearts obtain strength to continue the battle of life.

It was in the early days of the Sabbath school of Lamon the incident to which we refer occurred. The superintendent was new to the place and anxious that the feelings we have expressed be the ascendant ones of the Easter. It was Saturday night before the Easter Sabbath and the light shone from the basement of the church with an inviting ray, but we were not accustomed in those days to see large crowds assemble upon any except conference occasions.

Brother Joseph was passing the church weary and sad, for let us all remember that the very best life is not always a song of triumph. He had been engaged in the ordinary duties of his calling through the day, and was then on his way home, not thinking to attend these exercises of only a few teachers and the Sabbath school children with their parents; but seeing the lights and hearing the singing, he thought he would drop in for a moment, not realizing, as perhaps his own heart did not know, that he needed just such an uplift as should come to every child of God on every Easter day.

There had been stereopticon views, those from the land of Palestine, of the shepherd, etc., but these were over and now the audience were being entertained by a short program from the children.

One of the numbers of this program had been written for the occasion. The subject was "The walk to Emmaus." Who has not felt his heart thrill when he reads this beautiful story? It was well rendered by a young girl of the school, and held the attention of the audience from the first word to the last. Let us repeat it here.

THE WALK TO EMMAUS.

(From Autumn Leaves.)

"The western glow that lights Judea's skies,
Proclaimed the close of eastern summer day;
Twain, from Jerusalem, with downcast eyes,
Pursued with weary limbs their lengthened way;
And whilst their journey on they sadly sped,
They talked of hoped for things that might not be—
The joy and light that from their hearts had fled,
The loss of all they fondly hoped to see.

"Passed there another traveler the same way,
Who questions of the things of which they talk:
'What manner of communication these,
Ye have one with another as ye walk?'
With wonder, lifting up their sorrowing eyes
One of them answering quickly says:
'Art thou a stranger in Jerusalem,
Nor know things come to pass there in these days?'

"'What things?' the welcome stranger questioneth,
While they their holden gaze full on him bent,
'Concerning Jesus, out of Nazareth,
A prophet mighty, whom our God had sent—
Mighty in deeds and merciful commands,
And all the people felt his wondrous love;
Him have they crucified with wicked hands,—
Oh, matchless guilt, all human guilt above!

"'And we had trusted that this had been he
Who should our nation and our faith restore;
And now these hills and vales of Galilee
Shall know the wonders of his power no more,
This is the third day since the sad event;
Darkness descended as a funeral pall;
The veil before the holiest was rent,—
Creation groaned, and yet this is not all.

"'For certain women whom the Master loved
(Last at the cross and earliest at the tomb)
Found not his body, but an angel spake
From out the darkness and the gloom:
'What seek ye? Do the living dwell
Among the dead? behold! He is not here;
Jesus is risen; go your way and bear
This message; let it his disciples cheer.

"'Say that before them into Galilee
The Master goeth; there shall they behold
His face, and there again the things of God Unto their sorrowing hearts will he unfold."
But him they saw not, and when certain came
They found the cloths and linen napkin laid
Besides two angels sitting in the tomb,
In shining robes of spotless white arrayed.

"'And therefore are we sad!' 'Oh, slow of heart,'
(The stranger walking with them sadly said),
'Ought not Christ to have suffered all these things—
His body to have rested with the dead;
His spirit to the depths of hell go down,
Obtain the keys and set the captives free,
And henceforth to the sons of men declare:
'Where is thy sting, oh death? Oh, grave thy victory.'"

"Is it not written, "As a lamb they led Him to the slaughter; as a sheep is dumb
Before its shearers so he opened not
His mouth?" How else should all of these things come?
Did not God say, "I will not leave thy soul
In hell, neither corruption shalt thou see,
But shall ascend to dwell for-evermore
In glory, my Beloved One, with me?"'

"But now the board is spread; they gathering,
And when the bread is passed and they partake
Their living portion from the blessing hand,
The veil before their eyes begins to break.
Oh, wondrous love! their hearts and souls expand
Almost to breaking--'Jesus, Master, King!'
But he has passed from out their midst, and now
Break forth their shouts, their glad hosannas ring.

"Is it not written, 'As a lamb they led him to the slaughter?'"

"Their journey ended and the stranger made
As though to leave them, farther on to go,
But they constrained him saying, 'Sir, abide
And tarry with us; we would have it so.'
Their hearts were burning with a wondrous love;
Hope sprang anew and swept each trembling chord;
But still their eyes were holden and they knew
Not they were talking with their risen Lord.

"Their feet are winged, what reck they of the hour?
In far Jerusalem their brethren wait,
Bowed down with sorrow, they must reach her wall
Before her watchmen close and bar the gate.
The road is passed, they know not how; they reach
The gate, pass in with eager, earnest speed;
They can not wait, but shout it forth aloud:
'Hear, men and brethren, Christ is risen indeed!'

"But lo! while yet they spake, Jesus himself
 Stands in their midst, saying: 'Peace be unto you.'
 Their souls are troubled, and with fright they cry,
 Thinking a spirit there before their view.
 'Why are you troubled, why do thoughts arise?
 Behold my hands, my feet, that it is I.
 See here, the print of cruel nails which bound
 Me to the cross when lifted up to die!"

"And while they yet believed not for great joy
 And wonder, Jesus said to them: 'Have ye
 Here any meat?' Then took he fish and ate
 Before them, honey too, that all might see;
 Then said he: 'Spake I not these words to you
 While yet I tarried, that all things must be Fulfilled which Moses in the law did write,
 In prophets and in psalms concerning me?"

"And now repentance preach ye in my name.
 All nations shall my great salvation see.
 Here tarry till the Comforter I send,
 To fit you to be witnesses of me.'
 Then led he forth that faithful little band,
 And while beholding with their wondering eyes,
 The opening heavens receive their risen Lord—
 Our great High Priest, God's Lamb of sacrifice."

"FRANCES."

At the close of these exercises Brother Joseph came to the superintendent saying: "Sister —, I want to thank you for the enjoyment of this evening. Your entertainment was away up, and my own heart has been lifted from weariness and despondency to a realizing sense of the final triumphs of this gospel work."

But there was another incident connected with this Easter entertainment. There was present the state superintendent of the Sabbath schools of Iowa, and at the close he also came to the superintendent saying: "Let me also congratulate you on these exercises. Last night I attended the Easter exercises at one of the largest churches in Chicago, and I must say truthfully that it fell far short of what I have enjoyed here this evening."

As the desire of the superintendent was only to do good, you may be sure that these expressions of appreciation were gratefully received, and she hopes that now when crowds assemble and talent is unlimited, especially among the young, that the true spirit of Easter may never be wanting in any exercise given upon that occasion.

Request for Prayers.

Sr. Mary Jones, of Halkirk, Alberta, Canada, desires the prayers of the Saints that she may be healed of a weakening bowel complaint that has been with her for nine months.

Luxury.

Edward Sandford Martin is one of those gentle essayists who are privileged to point out to us the obvious joys that we habitually neglect in the hurry of living. When this is done tactfully it ceases to be preaching and is appreciated, as the recent publication of "The Luxury of Children" in a new edition seems to show. It was Mr. Martin who said: "If we are going without children in order to acquire the necessities of life, there is much to be said for our discretion; but if it is luxuries that you are after, what luxury is comparable to the luxury of having all the children you want?" — a query that deserves to be remembered as a satire upon the notion of "race suicide."

DUNLAP, IOWA, March 22, 1911.

Saints' Herald: I am at Gallands Grove, Iowa, one of the oldest branches in the West; organized in 1859 by Bro. Edmund C. Briggs. I closed my meetings last night. We came here five weeks ago. We troubled the waters yesterday, and I led four more precious souls into the Church of Christ, making eight I have baptized at this place, and thirty-eight the past year.

I pray that God will bless us all, and that we will be faithful children, endure unto the end, and obtain the prize, the gift of eternal life. Home address, 204 South Crysler street, Independence, Missouri. W. A. SMITH.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND, March 27, 1911.

Editors Herald: Many will be glad to hear a word about the Lord's work from this part of the country. I attended a service at West Mansfield, Massachusetts, Sunday, March 26, and was so pleased with the outlook that I send this little account for your columns. There were thirty-five intelligent and interested people present. Many of them had never heard the gospel before.

This is a new opening, made by Elder Charles Coombs, of Plainville, Massachusetts. The meetings are held Sunday afternoons, in a home about a mile from the West Mansfield station. Brother Coombs' earnest, whole-souled preaching, prompted by the power of the Spirit, is touching the hearts of the people, and the prospects are, some will be baptized. One man said he had attended the village church for two years, but at these meetings he heard the gospel preached for the first time.

The Saints from Attleboro, with their pastor, Elder William Bradbury, are assisting in the services, and it seems to be an especial pleasure for the young people to help in the singing.

Our little company walking up from the station must have attracted some attention in the neighborhood where the meeting was held; and then for us to see others coming from different directions to attend the little service showed an interest that was encouraging.

All seemed pleased with the meeting and appeared anxious to come again. So the work is moving on thus far.

Sincerely,

FREDERICK W. ROBERTS.

NEBO, ILLINOIS, March 26, 1911.

Editors Saints' Herald: I believe in my last, some weeks ago, I stated that some of the Baptists were hurt because of our work here, although we hadn't molested or attacked them. One W. J. Moore was sent for, he who had recently advertised in the Illinois Baptist as ready for protracted meetings, or lectures on Mormonism. He made his appearance on February 19 at Nebo. He came at the solicitation of one member. At first the Baptists were slow to receive him, but the little few stood by him and hired the hall, where he occupied for two days beginning on February 21.

Moore is not in any way original that I could see. All his objections to the work are reshaped and have been met many times. Mudslinging, garbling, misrepresenting, and some downright lying characterized the effort. But little preaching had been done in Nebo, so of course Moore found most of them ready for whatever he wanted to say. Before his lectures were over, they were rallying round him in dead earnest.

In company with Elder R. T. Walters we attended his lectures. One feature was prominent. That was that Elder Moore was determined to pile prejudice mountain high if possible, regardless of the facts. Brother Walters and I alternated in the same number of replies. The hall was well filled, and we heard some favorable comment from some of the most prominent people of the town. Moore's position isn't hard to meet, but very truly he had prejudice on his side, and of course he made good use of it. We both had good attention and liberty. The Saints who heard are satisfied with the ways and methods of our defense.

We met his feeble efforts to explain away our scriptural proof texts; also his archæology, his objections to the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, war revelation, Kirtland bank, "born at Jerusalem," and many other texts. He accused me of using material from "the Mormon book" which he garbled.

Some people who were not Baptists were heard to remark at the close of our first session, "I guess they see now whether the Mormons can say anything or not." They had been saying we could not answer Moore's arguments. I was repeatedly asked if I thought I could answer Moore. I told them that if I didn't answer him I'd join the Baptists.

Moore at first said he would not stay. "If we could do anything with his lectures, all right." But they prevailed on him to stay, and after we were through they again procured the hall and Moore cavorted for three and a half hours. Instead of meeting our arguments his efforts were to cover up.

Moore had claimed from the first that there never was a Christian civilization on this continent. To meet this I quoted from Kingsborough's Mexican Antiquities, volume 6, page 187, from Stebbins' Book of Mormon Lectures, page 251: "An infinite variety of facts connected with the customs, religious rites and ceremonies and opinions of the Indians, are utterly inexplicable, except on the supposition that America has in early ages been colonized by Christians." This with other authority, I quoted to prove Christianity had a presentation to ancient Americans. To meet the charge of plagiarism I read quotation from Charnay's Ancient Cities of the New World, page 148, from Stebbins' Book of Mormon Lectures, page 152. A soliloquy over the dead: "Son, your earthly hardships and sufferings are over. We are but mortal, and it has pleased the Lord to call you to himself. We had the privilege of being intimately acquainted with you; but now you share the abode of the gods, but although all are bound for the gloomy bourn, none ever return." Instead of meeting these arguments (for I made a lengthy argument on each point), in pretended answers to my authority and argument on ancient American Christianity, he quoted a part of my answer to the charge of plagiarism, "You share the abode of the gods"; and then made a great ado that my authority itself was against me, in that it taught that they were idolaters. We had conceded all along that there were in existence evidences of idolatry. My quotations from Lord Kingsborough, et al, were ignored in his desperate attempt to cover up, garble, and misrepresent.

Church propositions were presented. But no! Moore had the thing good enough, and he dare not put his frail, manmade institution to the test. Our propositions weren't fair, he said, and in turn presented propositions which we were not permitted to examine unless we'd agree to sign them. According to his reading, he left doctrine out of the proposition. Moore boasted that he had met four of our leading men; had thrashed I. N. White, and spanked Emsley Curtis when he was a boy. Said that the explanatory clause before section 113 of Doctrine and Covenants was brought about by his severe criticism in his debate with I. N. White; that Brother White went from there to General Conference and made a motion to strike out the word testators (paragraph 5), because our enemies took advantage of it.

I want to be as patient as possible, but will say that the methods of most of our opposers are unscrupulous. B. M. Bogard says truly in his twelfth article on Mormonism: "Many writers think it no harm to misrepresent a Mormon."

After all this, I went away and out of the fight a stronger believer than ever before. Nothing was presented that we didn't have material with which to meet. Ever since I embraced this work, I've been careful to weigh every objection that has been presented against it. I find them to be of such a character as to justify a conspicuous place beside infidel quibbles. If they must be accepted, I'd be compelled to accept like objections to the great truths of God's word in the Bible. Some few here are bent on putting us out of business, but if the Lord wills it, we will be on the spot.

Moore offered to join the church if I would have Brother Walters administer to me and heal me of my hoarseness. I was very hoarse at the time. I told him if he'd come in that easy somebody else could work him out just as easy. And besides, the Lord didn't heal Paul or his brother that he left at Miletum sick; but if he, W. J. Moore, would humble himself, the Lord would certainly give him the witness.

I truly do believe men can become so maddened in their zeal against this work that they misrepresent unconsciously.

Hoping for them a final view of the facts and truth, I am still in the faith,

W. A. GUTHRIE.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLORADO, March 27, 1911.

Dear Herald: Although there is but a very small handful of Saints here, we are earnestly striving to keep the banner afloat. All things are not as we wish to see them, but God's children must meet trials and discouragements occasionally, for their own development.

At present our hearts rejoice because of God opening the way whereby we have seen our desires and prayers fulfilled. For years the Colorado Springs Branch has badly needed a place of worship, which would be large enough to accommodate a few friends and visiting brethren at least. Not until a short time ago were our needs realized. The Father spoke approvingly of our efforts and the house which we had erected. Though it is a plain, humble little cottage church, we can truthfully say it is second to none of its kind in the city.

We feel we owe Bro. Richard Bullard a word of commendation for the "boosting" he did for us, and the suggestions he offered, which when tried, were found excellent. One was that we take up a Sunday offering for the building fund. By this method, it seemed but a short time until a hundred dollars were raised. Perhaps others may wish to profit by our experience.

As our district conference was to be held here in the first part of March, we set our hands and minds to work and made things hustle. By the consent of those in charge, Bro. Frank Russell got a short layoff, took the responsibility of architectural work and the erection of the building, with the help of a few who came in to assist. Among these we must not forget to mention the faithful efforts of our two youthful brethren, Elbert Russell Clark and Lynn Russell, who put in a good many hours of service.

When cleaning windows, decorating, etc., was at hand, the sisters were very much appreciated. The Ladies' Aid Society worked faithfully, rendering much help financially, and we are still working.

Help received from those not of our branch was much appreciated. Although it is not quite completed, our hearts swell with gratitude when we meet for worship. May God bless the ones whose hands so willingly erected the same and who so kindly responded to our call for help.

Your sister in the faith,
MRS. S. A. RUSSELL.

MCGREGOR, MICHIGAN, March 27, 1911.

Dear Herald: You will find inclosed in my letter one dollar which I am sending for the benefit of the mission work in Jerusalem. When I read the letter, "A voice from Jerusalem," I was impressed to make a sacrifice in some way for the work there.

We have much enjoyed the letters from Palestine in the past. My desire is to do what I can for the gospel work which I am engaged in. It seems to be the greatest part of all my life to love and serve God. My heart is in the work and I have been made to realize what it means to live a Christian life, as in the past year I stood by the bedside of a dying father and saw how, through the love of God, he bore his suffering with patience, with God's name upon his lips. Never once did he murmur, but prepared himself for death.

We have some sick and afflicted in this branch at this time. Our esteemed brother, Elder O. J. Hawin, has been very ill for several weeks, and is yet in a very weak condition. We hope that God in his infinite love and mercy will see fit again to restore him to health, that he may be spared to his little family and the mission work to which God has called him.

Elder Gregory visited our branch this winter and gave us some good sermons, one expressly, on unity and faith.

Your sister in the faith,

IDA FARLEY.

Thoughts on Reunion Work.

There was a time in the history of the Reorganization when reunions were few, but now nearly every district in the United States and other countries have their yearly gatherings known to us as reunions. To me it is one of the most interesting departments of church work. I have served for several years on the committee in the Southern Wisconsin District, and I feel a growing interest in it.

Certainly the Lord has recognized the work from the very beginning. Looking backward for ten or twelve years we can see that great advancement has been made along certain lines, while on others we have not advanced so rapidly. I never remember attending a reunion of the Southern Wisconsin District when the Lord did not speak through some of his servants and say that he was well pleased with the efforts of his Saints to thus meet together. I wish to quote here a part of one revelation given through Elder J. W. Wight in 1907. "Verily, verily, thus saith the Spirit unto you my people: You must needs receive blessing and warning. I have been with you. You should have been more faithful and humble and learn to love others as yourselves. You remember that I told you a year ago that it was pleasing unto me that my people meet together from year to year; but all have not been sufficiently faithful. So remember and begin to prepare for the next reunion and I will bless you and the sacrifices required of my people to thus attend will be as nothing and greater blessings will be yours to enjoy." It will be noticed from this instruction that the Lord does not forget what he tells us from time to time.

We call especial attention to these few lines with the hope that if any have forgotten them that they may refresh their minds. As one of the reunion committee for 1911 I want, together with the other brethren, to do all we can to make the 1911 reunion a greater success than any previous one. One sort of discouraging feature must be met however, viz: The prices of all eatables are so advanced that it makes the expense of meals greater.

Now this district has been furnishing meals at fifteen cents for several years and until the last two years have come out more than even. Should this be a good year, so all sorts of garden truck be plenty and reasonable we have but little fears of 1911, with meals at fifteen cents. But I have a plan to suggest to all members of the district. Last year there were quite a few Saints who could not come to the reunion but they gathered up their offerings in that locality and sent them to the committee. Now I wish every member in the district would get that spirit of cooperation so deeply imbedded that they would thus remember the reunion even if they can not be present. Quite often there may be families who have intended to come but at the end they do not see it possible to attend. I think it would be nice if they would just send up an offering, say of one fourth of what it really would have cost them had they attended.

Some have thought it would be necessary to raise the price of meals, but this we do not favor, as there are some poor people with large families that find it all they can do to attend as it is. To those who occupy this latter condition let me say by way of encouragement: Some in years gone by have attended and got their own meals in their private tents and thus saved some and when the collection was taken for general expenses they were thus able to help out in such collection. That was good, but please get this idea of it: Everyone who pays his fifteen cents per meal not only pays for his meals, but helps with the general expenses, for the dining tent makes enough at fifteen cents to give free meals to the elders invited to attend the reunion as speakers, also pays the cooks and other sundry expense. So any that can do no more than pay for their meals are doing something for the general expense of the reunion.

We have about four hundred members. Say two hundred attend, and suppose that one hundred out of the other two hundred send up an offering of from fifty cents to one dollar each. That will so support the work that there will be no lack, and the per capita expense kept so low that the poorest in this world's goods can attend.

You will notice that in the revelation given above in 1907 that this sentence is found: "So remember and begin to prepare for the next reunion and I will bless you." I am impressed from this that the Lord wants us to sacrifice that we may attend from year to year. I believe this applies to all. There are so many worldly things that take time and means during the year that our people would do well to deny themselves of those things that really are of no use to them.

There is another line of sacrifice for all, which means the actual going without or denying ourselves of that we could perhaps justly use and still get along without. I believe with Bro. C. Scott that if a man can get along with two suits of clothes per year he does not need to have four. I see a danger, too, of some Saints getting things so nice in their homes that they can not have the Saints meet therein because of nice rugs, floors, furniture, etc. Now I wonder if Jesus would say to them as to Zaccheus, "Make haste, and come down; for to-day I must abide at thy house."—Luke 19: 5. Would they be afraid to have meetings there then? Now suppose that those whose homes are thus furnished would sacrifice, saying, My house is ever open till such time as we can have some other or public place of worship. Willing sacrifice on the part of all must be had in all departments of church work. The date of the Madison, Wisconsin, reunion is August 25, to September 3. Let all begin to lay their plans to be there if possible.

In 1908 these words were given through Bro. Wight, "Verily, many of my people have been tried with the cares of life and the afflictions thereof, but I have heard your prayers and by my Spirit have so testified unto you. I will continue to hear and answer as you continue your prayers in faith. Be admonished not to turn from me to the world and its pleasures. Be not overcharged with the burdens of life, but put your trust in me, and I will not forsake you nor leave you alone." Sometimes we find the Saints so "overcharged" in the getting of this world's goods that they can not spare time to attend reunion and sometimes weekly church services. May the Lord grant wisdom unto all.

Hopefully trusting,

JASPER O. DUTTON.

EVANSVILLE, WISCONSIN, March 2, 1911.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. Thena Wadkins, Flomaton, Alabama, writes: "I think we are all trying the best we can to live right, though it is hard at times to see the bright side of some things. It is indeed a great pleasure to me to read the encouraging letters from the dear brothers and sisters. I attended the Bay Minette conference in December, 1910—the first I ever attended—and can truthfully say that the Saints did all they could to make the strangers feel welcome."

Bro. and Sr. Lewis Thompson, writing from Owensville, Indiana, say that the man L. L. Gott, of whom the Saints were warned in HERALD of March 29, had been imposing on them, passing himself off as a minister of the church. "As Elder Jacob Halb has done so much good here, and the people are so interested, we would be glad to see him sent back here. We are always glad to get the HERALD and read the Saints' letters."

Sr. E. G. Maxwell, Marlette, Michigan, writes: "Being isolated from church privileges, I feel like asking the prayers of the Saints that I may always have strength to live as becometh one of God's children. The people here have no use for the angel's message. Their best argument is, Stay away."

News From Missions

Jerusalem, Palestine.

You have received so many letters from Palestine, that I almost hesitate to write; but as many have requested it, will tell you a few of the many pleasant and interesting experiences of our trip.

Leaving New York September 8, 1910, we had a delightful ocean voyage, both proving excellent sailors. It being my first experience on the ocean, it was enjoyed much more than I had anticipated. At Plymouth, England, we were kindly entertained by Sr. Ridolls. We spent several days there, and proceeded to London, stopping off one day at Bristol. In London we were made welcome at the home of Brother and Sister Goullee, with whom we had a pleasant visit, and were permitted to see the wonderful sights of this large city. We visited Hampton Church and the River Thames near by; Westminster Abbey; houses of Parliament; Tower of London, which was anciently a prison, and where many noted people were beheaded; Madam Tassand's wax works, where almost all the notable people of the world are to be seen in wax, so natural that one could hardly realize they are not alive. We also visited Buckingham Palace and many other places of interest. We had the pleasure of the company of Brother Newton, while sight-seeing here, one day.

We visited in Birmingham also, spending a few days at the hospitable home of Brother and Sister Swan, where we were most kindly entertained by the brother and sister and three charming daughters. Brother and Sister Taylor also made us welcome for a few days at their pleasant home, and we certainly became attached to them and their sweet children.

We attended the conference in Manchester, and were made very welcome by the Sisters Lenton, who proved themselves true Saints, and friends indeed. We received many invitations to visit other places, but limited time compelled us to deny ourselves that pleasure.

It also afforded us great pleasure to visit my parents' birthplaces, in Scotland. Was delighted with mother's old home in Ayr, not far from Burns' Cottage. As I walked along by the side of the gently flowing "Bonnie Doon," I could scarcely realize that fifty-six years ago, mother had said good-bye to her home and loved ones, and left for "America, the land of the free and the home of the brave." We stopped off in Douglas, Scotland, meeting cousins whom I had never seen. We greatly enjoyed ourselves in this odd little city; the cousins becoming much interested in our gospel talks and the singing. One cousin said the hymns were the best he had ever heard, "each one a sermon." On our way to Scotland we were pleased to see Brother and Sister Rush-ton off for America at Liverpool. We spent a day in Glasgow, then returned to London, to prepare for the long voyage to this land.

We said good-bye to Brother and Sister Goullee, and left for Paris, France. The only unpleasant part of that trip was crossing the Channel. It was very rough, and I lost my record that afternoon as a good sailor. The ride through France was delightful, the prettiest spot being seen in Villers. It was one of the most beautiful scenes of natural beauty we saw on our entire trip. The foliage tinted so beautifully, the hillsides, the sky effect, and the surroundings can not be described. In Paris we visited the most historical places. The Eiffel Tower is very interesting. After a few days here we left for Marseilles, where we awaited the day of sailing for Alexandria, Egypt.

We had a most pleasant voyage across the Mediterranean, and the weather was perfect. We met many nice people on board, and Elder Pitt was asked to preach Sunday in the dining room, of second class, and also assist in cabin of first class, I being asked to take charge of the music. We passed a very enjoyable Sabbath. One very nice young lady (an American) came, after we were out on deck, and asked me what faith we represented. I was delighted to tell her and spent the next two hours telling her the gospel story, and writing quotations for her. She was much interested and said she would investigate, as she liked it best of any preaching she had ever heard. She lives in Manchester, England, and I gave her the address of many of our people there.

We reached Alexandria at about 7 a. m., November 7, and left at once for Cairo. We visited the Pyramids, the Sphinx, and many interesting scenes in that land. After a few days here we left for Jaffa.

Just one night on the Mediterranean brought us to the shores of that ancient and historic city, Jaffa. We had to wait here a few hours for a train to Jerusalem, so visited the house of "Simon the Tanner"; it is very interesting. We left at 1 p. m. for Jerusalem. We enjoyed every minute of the ride by train, through orange groves, up winding hills and high mountains, until at last, at 5.30 p. m. we came in sight of the renowned city. We could scarcely realize it as we stepped off the train.

We were soon made welcome at Sister Floyd's, where Brother Griffiths had preceded us one week. We were pleased to meet him again, and for several weeks we have enjoyed his company. The preaching of the gospel here interested many and the results are already known to you. It is a pity we can not speak at least one of the foreign languages spoken here, as much more could be accomplished, and many excellent people would be interested. Many whom we have met have expressed themselves in that way.

We have visited Hebron; saw Abraham's tomb, and here also are buried Sarah, Isaac, Rebekah, Leah, and Jacob (Genesis 23: 25). We have been to Bethlehem four times. We walked twice and greatly enjoyed the trip. It is about six miles distant. We stopped and ate lunch at Rachel's tomb (Genesis 35: 16-20).

The native women carry the loads entirely on their heads. In balancing, they are obliged to walk very straight, which gives them a graceful and perfect carriage. I could not resist practicing the art, as we walked along the ancient roadway; so carried the lunch box very successfully, as they did, most of the way. It seemed to greatly amuse the native women. It made them stop and laugh. Mr. Sapirstein was with us. He can speak many languages, and he told them I was a farmer lady; but they would not believe him. We again visited the old inn or stable where our Savior was born. It is down in the basement, a church now being built over it.

We regret that our brothers and sisters of the church can not be with us to enjoy all that is dear to their hearts in this land. We are expecting to leave soon for the Galilee trip. It will require ten days.

We have waiting for the rainy season to come to a close. We are told it is almost over now. We have visited the Tombs of the Kings, Tombs of Judges, and many others, hewn out of solid rock, and very interesting. The Brook Kedron is not so interesting as one would imagine, as there is seldom any water in it; simply a bed of stone.

The poor class of native women who come to market with vegetables are all without shoes, or hosiery, and very scantily dressed. They did not seem to mind the snow and the cold, icy slush, but ran along with great bundles and baskets of cauliflower, cabbage, and radishes, on their heads. They look healthy, and seem to enjoy themselves very much. The vegetables are so very cheap it scarcely pays them for their work. We get four or five large radishes for one cent.

The city has been preparing for the arrival of the Clark party of tourists—six hundred. The city was all cleaned for the occasion, for which we were thankful. All seemed on best behavior. The beggars were all out in full force, and the day dawned beautiful and pleasant. We also went to the train to see if we might locate one familiar face; but did not see one. Great excitement prevailed in taking care of about two hundred in carriages, as that number came on first train; two other trains following later. The F. C. Clark, tourist agent of New York, is a brother of Sister Floyd, with whom we stay.

We are well and happy in doing what we can for the Master while here; we only regret we can not do more.

Your sister in the gospel,

ROSA PARKS PITT.

North Dakota.

I get much encouragement by reading the church periodicals. The recent contribution of Brother Rannie in Autumn Leaves was certainly similar to our experience here in the sister State. It is a faithful portrayal. I think it right to put a fair proportion of the discouragements along with the triumphs, these experiences being essential for our development. Thank God, we are not building for a day, but for eternity. Perhaps we do not at all times realize the magnitude and far-reaching effects of our work, and this also applies to our evil habits and shortcomings.

Sometimes it is necessary to take a lengthy retrospect in order to see where we have done any good at all. This brings my thoughts back to South Dakota, where in the spring of 1883 Bro. Henry Sparling and myself first essayed to talk gospel to our neighbors. For some reason, perhaps mainly our lack of understanding and experience, we made little progress; but God, who is infinite in mercy and compassion to his weak, erring children, continued to bless and favor us.

So far as the work in this State is concerned, it is a constant surprise to me. Surely the hand of God is in it. Climatic conditions and a sparse population engaged almost exclusively in agriculture would seem to mitigate against success, but converts continue to come by twos and threes.

Three months ago, by request of Brother Wildermuth I started west of the Missouri River into comparatively new territory. Railroads were blockaded by deep snows. I first stopped at the home of Brother and Sister McClellan, at Anamoose, who are true Saints, interested in the spiritual welfare of their neighbors. We look for additions to the membership there in the near future. Thirty below zero was not unusual about that time.

From there we went to Bismark, where we met Brn. J. S. Knaus and George Young, the latter attending school. He is a steady young man, and we hope at some future time he will use his ability for the furtherance of the gospel. We spent a brief time looking over the capitol grounds; a recent interesting addition being a large bronze statue of Sakakawea, the Indian maiden who piloted Lewis and Clark over the mountains in 1805.

Brother and Sister Langdon entertained us for a few days while we were storm bound, waiting for the stage from Dickinson to Melby, a distance of forty miles. It was a very cold trip and took us three days, but we forgot our troubles before a hot fire at Sister Moffet's. We held meetings for five weeks at Melby, Brook, and Halliday; a radius of about twenty miles. At the conclusion we were rewarded by seeing eight baptized, all being married people. We sincerely trust the gospel blessings may be carried to their families.

A brief stay at New Salem and two more anxious and willing ones followed the example of the Savior. Spring work among the farmers interrupts our labors for the present. We hope to resume in the near future.

WILLIAM SPARLING.

MINOT, APRIL 2, 1911.

Victoria, Australia.

I have but recently returned from a trip to New South Wales District, whither I accompanied Brother Butterworth chiefly to attend conference, which met in the Leichardt new church on New Year's Eve.

From first to last it was a delightful experience, the conference being the largest body of Latter Day Saints ever assembled in one place upon this island continent.

Every meeting was attended by about three hundred Saints, some hailing from Brisbane in the far north; some from Adelaide and Melbourne in the west and south; while all the old branches of the New South Wales District; Tuncurry, Nambucca, Wallsend, Balmain, Hamilton, and Bulahdelah, were represented officially and otherwise by strong contingents of Saints, ranging from the old veteran to the young recruit.

Though laboring in the Australian mission field for about eight years, this was the writer's first meeting with old Saints of New South Wales whose connection with the latter day work dates back to the historic period when those faithful missionaries, C. W. Wandell and Glaud Rodger, pioneered our work in this land of the southern seas. Notable among those we met at conference and elsewhere were Bro. E. J. Haworth, of Wallsend, father of Elder W. J. Haworth; Sister Wright, senior, of Tuncurry, and C. A. Davis, of Hamilton, the latter of whom I am reminded was the first Australian clerk of conference.

Of the younger generation, we found pleasure in meeting for the first time our genial Bishop, Bro. George Lewis; and also Bro. John Jones, district president, who was ordained during conference to the office of high priest by Elders Butterworth and Lewis. Many other local and other officers were present, but space forbids mention.

There were present also a fine body of young men, stalwart and strong, who in course of time will honorably occupy where the ranks are thinned by the "pale reaper." Our summary would not be complete without mention of the Parks, Cresty, and Thompson families, who so ably supply vocal and instrumental music, nobly aided by the Ferrets, Thearles, Smiths, Corbets, and others male and female, whose names are forgotten, though not their faces.

From Sydney I accompanied Brethren Butterworth, Wright, and Taylor up the north coast as far as Tuncurry, which in the days agone was called North Foster. This is the historic home of the Wrights and McLarens, saw millers, store-keepers, etc., where we found a hospitable roof, as have all other elders from Gland Rodger to the latest importation.

After visiting several places on the river and preaching at Tuncurry in the new church, which will long stand as a monument of the late John Wright's liberality, we began our return journey, which was taken part of the way in the motor boat, "Wee Mac," by the kindness of Bro. Harry Wright. I had almost forgotten to state that while in Tuncurry Bro. Ernest Wright was, in accordance with act of conference, ordained to the office of elder. May he worthily uphold the honorable record of his late father of blessed memory.

Brother Burdekin met us in sulky at Cooalonglook (native name) and drove us to Bulahdelah, where we found a fine, enthusiastic band of Saints with a neat little chapel, mainly donated and built by local brethren, without charge for labor or material. Upon such houses we may expect God's blessing because of the sacrifice endured to accomplish their erection.

From there we visited Newcastle and preached some, besides visiting; and we found earnest, warm hearted Saints all along the route, whom we hope to have the pleasure of meeting again.

All the branches have nice little wooden buildings dedicated to the worship of God, made out of native timber of durable kind and built by Saints, aided oftentimes by your mechanical missionary in charge, who is quite a genius in this line; also others of the missionaries.

While away, appeals came from Victoria to return to our field, which shortened our trip and hastened our return after six weeks' absence. The trip was profitable and encouraging in a spiritual sense and entailed no loss financially. We trust there were mutual benefits derived.

Shortly after our return the sad news of Bro. (Elder) David McIntosh's death came to hand from West Australia, whither he and family had gone from Victoria but three months earlier. He was the first man baptized in the state, then colony, of Victoria, Gland Rodger being the means of his uniting with the church. He has been a faithful and consistent advocate of the restored gospel and has passed through much tribulation for the testimony he bore.

He joined the church at forty-one years old and for thirty-three years has stood in the van of our movement here, occupying chiefly as president of Victoria District and at different times, president of Queensferry and Richmond branches. We shall all miss his familiar figure from our conference gatherings, but feel that like Paul of old he has gone to be with Christ, which is far better.

He died in the faith, declaring to the end his confidence in the final triumph of the latter day work, which he declared to be the kingdom of God restored to earth, made known unto him by personal revelation from God.

The work in Victoria does not seem very buoyant at present, but we look forward in faith believing it to be God's, who, we are assured, will move the powers in our favor if we are faithful. Hoping we have not trespassed too much on your space, and wishing your splendid paper every success, I am

Faithfully yours in gospel bonds,

News From Branches.

Brockton, Massachusetts.

Some few years have passed since our little branch has had space in the HERALD, and we hope our readers will be pleased to hear from us, and to know it is not because we are spiritually dead, as Brockton is very much alive.

I often look back and think of what true soldiers many of our people were when the gospel roads were rough, and they were scantily clothed, and left trails of their life's blood behind. I used to think of them as heroes such as would never grace our ranks again. But as I have become more intimately acquainted with God's people, I have reached the conclusion that we have as good timber to work with to-day, and should the same opportunities present themselves, the Master would still find a valiant little army.

Our membership is composed of a few young, the greater number being in middle life; and last, but far from least, some sterling old veterans whose presence and humble, yet powerful words and life are a great boon to the middle aged and youth.

We have a "Noah" in our branch whom we look upon as a fit comrade to Noah of old, Bro. Noah J. Stoddard, seventy-four years of age. He walks six miles and rides about twenty-four nearly every Sunday that it is favorable to walk. We call him our "baby," as he heard and embraced the gospel in his declining years; but, dear reader, you should see and hear this dear old soldier with silvery locks, his dear old face illumined by God's Holy Spirit, testify to the truth of this work. I think your mind might travel back to the patriarchs of old, and I feel sure you would go to your daily tasks with a greater determination to strive to emulate the Christ life.

Bro. George Ames, who fought for our country, has received promotion, and is now one of God's officers; never absent, always humble, ever ready to help us in any work for the upkeep of our local.

We have a president in Bro. John Hoxie of whom we feel proud. We who know him every day, feel the presence of one whose one ambition in this life is to roll the gospel standard onward. The Lord blesses us through him and he is personally interested in every member of this little flock. Brethren Hoxie and Ames are giving their best service.

We have had eight added to our membership since August, four being through the efforts of Bro. A. B. Phillips in street preaching. The Utah Mormons held street services last summer, and we sent for Brother Phillips to come and refute the doctrines of Utah, with the result that one of our present members was attracted from their meetings and accepted the truth at once, which verifies the Master's teaching, "My sheep hear my voice."

We feel our Father is answering our prayers, in that he would add to our members such as would stand the test. We enjoy spiritual feasts in our prayer and testimony meetings, and unity prevails.

We are living in the time of the toes of that "great image," (Daniel 2) and must soon render an account of our stewardship. Let us so live and work that we may fulfill the measure of our creation and live in Zion. That we may eventually fit ourselves to dwell in the presence of God is the prayer of the writer.

Yours in gospel bonds,

OBED.

A report was read from the tract committee,—the First Presidency. They reported a growing demand for tracts in foreign languages, that many of the manuscripts not authorized to be published in tracts were turned over to the HERALD editors to be used as desired and demand required.

The following special order deferred from April 14, 1910, was taken up promptly at 3 o'clock, together with the report of the Presidency on the matter.

To the General Conference: On April 14, 1909, a resolution with preambles presented by the Council of Presidents of Seventy was referred by the conference to this quorum "for consideration and report."

The preambles and resolution are:

"Whereas, there has been difference of opinion, and conflicting methods of administration regarding men expelled from the Seventy's Quorum for cause; and

"Whereas, the Seven Presidents of Seventy have asked this quorum to express itself upon this point;

"Resolved, That when a man is expelled from a quorum for cause he is thereby silenced from acting in any official capacity in the church; and before he can be granted a license to act in any office, or be ordained to any office, he must make reconciliation with his quorum expelling him and be relieved from disability by said quorum."

If the question of status alone is considered, on the presumption that the procedure had in expulsion is legitimate, then perhaps the resolution might be correct; but inasmuch as the question seems to have been raised over differences of opinion relative to the status of seventy "dropped" according to certain action or "expelled" according to another action, the question of jurisdiction and procedure might properly be raised, and with this goes an allied question; viz, How was determination of facts of cause had?

Since the church courts are the tribunal under the law to pass upon such matters, we are of the opinion that the quorum has no right or power to determine facts of guilt or innocence, further than investigating as to the sufficiency of evidence justifying in the opinion of the quorum trial before the proper body authorized to hear and pass upon matters of facts of guilt or innocence of members. If we hold that the quorum has power to sit in judgment upon facts and find thereon, then perforce of logic the quorum must be held to possess the functions of a court. If not, then the quorum could go no further than investigate the evidence and cite to trial before a body possessing court functions.

Again, if it is held that the quorum has power to expel it would have power to enroll. But in the case of a seventy, General Conference determines eligibility to ordination as a seventy and authorizes enrollment. Naturally we must conclude if a body does not have power to enroll it could not expel; that is to say, to the authority which determines membership, must revert the final right to deny or cancel the membership.

Membership in church, once established, is canceled only on the findings of a court. Shall not discharge for cause from membership in a quorum be determined by some body possessing the function of a court?

Hence we must conclude that before determining the question of status after "expulsion," it would be well to determine the question of procedure in expelling, and we are of the opinion that expulsion from a quorum of seventy can be had properly only by General Conference on recommendation of the quorum, such recommendation being based on the finding of a proper court, the recommendation for expulsion being accompanied by a brief statement of the findings on which it is based.

We are of the opinion that such trial can be properly had before a bishop's court, right of appeal to a High Council being had.

Respectfully submitted,

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
Secretary of the Presidency.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 15, 1910.

In connection with it the following from the Second Seventy was read: "Resolved, That it is the opinion of the quorum that the status of 'a man expelled from a quorum for cause' to come before the conference this afternoon, should be referred to a joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Seventies for consideration." The latter motion was adopted by a vote of 139 for to 109 against.

A resolution was presented by Bishop E. L. Kelley and G. H. Hilliard, the intent of which was to change the basis of representation from one delegate for every twenty-five members to one for every fifty. This can not be acted upon till 1912, owing to no previous notice having been served.

In the evening of Saturday Elder W. J. Haworth of Australia was the speaker with H. J. Davison in charge.

-Sunday: This was a busy day for Lamoni. The 8 o'clock prayer service in charge of the presidents of the stakes, G. E. Harrington of Independence, and John Smith of Lamoni, was a good, spiritual meeting.

At 11 o'clock, Pres. Joseph Smith was greeted by a

MONDAY, APRIL 10.

The morning prayer service at 9 o'clock was in charge of Elders W. A. McDowell and R. M. Elvin.

At 10.45 Elder Alvin Knisley was the speaker, with Bro. William Johnson, of Seattle, assisting.

The business session at 2 o'clock was called to order by Pres. Joseph Smith.

The minutes of the business session of Saturday and the meetings of Sunday were read. The Secretary then called the roll of ex officios.

A report was read from the secretary of the Third Quorum of Seventy, giving a summary of work done during the year.

Elder Joseph Luff, the physician to the church, reported.

The Eighth Quorum of Elders reported through the secretary, S. A. Burgess.

The First Presidency, Historian, and Board of Publication, to whom the matter of an authorized edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants was referred, have to report "that some progress is being made on this work, but it will be necessary to have more time to perfect the work of the committee, which is hereby asked for.

"FREDERICK M. SMITH, Sec. of Pres."

The report was adopted and the request granted.

The Presidency and Bishopric made a joint report on the translation of church literature into foreign languages, stating that they deemed it wise to recommend that a translation committee be appointed to act upon the matter during the present year.

The committee is to consist of the Presidency, Bishop E. L. Kelley, the manager of the Herald Publishing House, the president of the Religio Society and the superintendent of the Sunday School Association.

The Religio Association made a lengthy report as to the work done by the association during the year, and especially during the sessions which have just been held. Incorporated in this report were the following resolutions on the translation of the Book of Mormon into the German language, or other language:

Be it resolved, (1), That we accept the offer of the return of the German translation fund, and request that all the translation funds now on hand be turned over to the general treasurer of the society. (2), That all previous action taken by this society is hereby repealed.

Subject to the approval of the General Conference, be it further Resolved, (1), That the cost of translating and publishing the present edition of the Book of Mormon in German not to exceed two thousand copies and not to exceed the sum of eight hundred dollars, be forthwith donated to the general church.

(2), That this society will continue its effort to raise a translation fund, the raising of the funds to be in charge of the executive committee of this society. The selection of the language, the work of translation, and the preparation of the plates is to be in charge of such committee or committees, body or bodies, as the General Conference may designate.

(3), That we guarantee a fund of five hundred dollars to pay the necessary cost of translation, versification of translation, and preparation of plates of the Book of Mormon in one foreign language. When the work or any integral part thereof, shall be completed, the necessary amount shall be paid over promptly to such persons as the General Conference may appoint to have charge of such work. Any part of said sum not used, shall remain in the translation fund. The plates shall be at all times the property of the general church.

(4), That if the General Conference approves the plan, but finds the wording of these resolutions objectionable, the following committee is authorized to make clerical changes, to be effective till the next General Convention. The convention named the executive committee as the one provided in this section.

The entire report was adopted.

The following was moved and seconded, "That we commend the work of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society in their activity relative to the Book of Mormon translation fund, and that we recommend that the Book of Mormon be translated into the Spanish language as soon as practicable."

The matter was referred to the committee on translation.

LAMONI, IOWA, APRIL 19, 1911

NUMBER 16

General Conference

MONDAY, APRIL 10.

The Board of Trustees of Graceland College made report as to the instructors, work done, museum, etc.

They stated that the enrollment had been practically the same as a year ago, the total being one hundred and fifty-seven against one hundred and sixty for last year. The library, with Prof. T. J. Fitzpatrick as librarian, one year ago numbered 5,360 volumes, while this year there are 6,360 volumes. The donors during the year numbered 53.

The annual income from the temporary endowment fund amounts to about $7,000.

The board expressed itself as opposed to the sacrifice of the moral tone of the college in order that the school might be accredited at the State University.

The following report from the Board of Auditors was read:

To the General Conference: We have examined the books of Graceland College, have compared them with the statement of receipts and disbursements, assets and liabilities, submitted by the Board of Trustees, copy herewith, and find them to be in agreement.

We have been advised that, at the close of the college year, July 1, a full inventory of each class of college property will be made, and itemized statement of receipts and disbursements, assets and liabilities of such year be published through the columns of the HERALD.

It might be well for you to provide for further audit at that time.

Apart from this particular case yet in this general connection, we suggest that it might be well for you to authorize the First Presidency or general authorities, if they deem it wise, to appoint subject to approval of General Conference a permanent auditor—one having sufficient knowledge of practical accounting and business to insure thorough work—who will, under the immediate direction of the First Presidency, audit any department of church work, at any time that the Presidency may desire; said auditor to be chairman of the Board of Auditors.

Respectfully submitted,

ROBERT WINNING,

G. W. BLAIR,

Board of Auditors.

The report, except the recommendation or suggestion concerning the appointment of an auditor, was adopted.

The Board of Auditors was instructed to audit the college accounts, which are to be submitted July 1.

The service on Monday evening, April 10, in the upper auditorium, was in charge of Frank J. Hedrick, with Elder R. Baldwin as the speaker.

In the basement at the same hour, 7.45, Elder R. Etzenhouser gave a talk on archaeological finds in Michigan. The meeting resolved itself into an informal discussion for a time, after which a number of stereopticon views were shown.

TUESDAY, APRIL 11.

The morning prayer service of April 11 was in charge of R. May and S. J. Salisbury.

At 10.45 Elder J. Arthur Davis preached with Hyrum Dickout in charge.

The business meeting was called to order at 2 o'clock by Pres. Joseph Smith.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

A report was read from the Sanitarium Board: The first patient was admitted December 20, 1909, and a total of 107 have been admitted. Fifty-seven of these were Latter Day Saints, 16 made no profession of religion, 8 were Christians, 6 Methodists, 4 Catholics, 3 Methodist South, 2 Baptists, 2 Lutherans, 1 United Brethren, 1 Episcopal, 1 African Methodist, 1 Presbyterian.

The physician in charge draws no salary; the house physician draws one hundred dollars per month; the nurse in charge fifty dollars; the superintendent of the house and grounds sixty dollars, and the janitors each thirty-five dollars and forty dollars.

By motion the present Board of Trustees of the Sanitarium was sustained.

A report was read from the Council of Seven Presidents. They recommended the following brethren to be ordained to the office of Seventy: Jacob Halb, J. Charles May, N. L. Booker, J. A. Roberts, Lloyd C. Moore, and William Anderson.

A report was read from the First Quorum of Seventy with the following recommendations: By reason of the resignation of Bro. Romanan Wight, occasioned by his continued and serious illness, we have honorably released him from work in the quorum.

We have expelled John F. Wiles from the quorum for cause, as proven and confessed, as recommended by the Presidents of Seventy.

That there shall be such a change in the rules of representation as to make them accord in every phase with what was presented by Joseph Smith, as he "was directed," see Doctrine and Covenants 125:7, and which was adopted April 12, 1881, and numbered 234 in General Conference Resolutions.

By motion the recommendations were taken up separately and acted upon.

The first one was adopted unanimously, the second was adopted by a vote of 116 for to 97 against, while action on the third was deferred one year.

The following resolution was adopted:

That this conference hereby express its appreciation of the lengthy and faithful service of Bro. Romanan Wight, and extend our sympathy to him in his infirmity.

The following resolution on the world's peace was adopted:

Whereas, We look with favor upon the growing sentiment throughout the civilized world in favor of peace and against war, and a resort to arbitration in both international and national disputes, and

Whereas, The Lord has commanded the church to "re-nounce war and proclaim peace," also to "lift up an ensign of peace and make a proclamation of peace unto the ends of the earth," therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the ministry and delegates of the Re-organized Church of Jesus of Christ of Latter Day Saints, in conference assembled at Lamoni, Iowa, this 11th day of April, 1911, unreservedly commit ourselves to the conservation of world peace.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, also the Senate and House of Representatives.

The Presidency was empowered to appoint a delegate to the National Peace Congress, to be held in Boston in May of this year.

On Tuesday evening Bro. Gomer T. Griffiths gave an illustrated lecture on his trip through the Holy Land. There was a crowded house at an early hour and many had to be turned away. The pictures were excellent and the information good for all.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 12.

The 9 a. m. prayer meeting was in charge of Bishop C. J. Hunt and Elder W. A. McDowell. At 10.45 Elder Charles E. Crumley was the speaker, with Elder Edgar H. Smith in charge.

The business meeting was called to order promptly at 2 p. m. by Pres. Joseph Smith. The minutes were read and approved.

A petition from the Southern California District, asking the 1915 conference to meet with the Los Angeles Branch, was presented. Action on it was deferred and made the special order for the third day at 3 o'clock of the conference of 1914.

The Presidency and Historian were made a committee to draft resolutions to be reported to this body, with a view to having Everybody's Magazine correct those errors appearing in the article of Frank J. Cannon which relate to this church.

A report was read from the Daughters of Zion, after which the following motion was adopted: Moved "That it be the sense of this conference that the Advisory Board of the Daughters of Zion continue as advisory with the committee in connection with the Bishop of the church in assisting in carrying on the work of the children's home."

The following resolution was moved, and, after some discussion, was lost:

"Resolved, That it is the opinion of this conference that it is extremely unwise for an elder under General Conference appointment to engage in and to seek to promote the interests of Socialism. His first and only duty is to preach the gospel.

Furthermore, it is unbecoming of a minister to preach politics, and if persisted in, his recall from the active field should be required.

The hour of 3 p. m., April 13, was set as the time limit for new business.

A report from the Presidency and General Bishopric concerning the reporting of quorums was read. It embodied the thought that only quorums of general organization should report to the General Conference, all elders' quorums and quorums of the Aaronic priesthood to report to local conferences. The report was adopted.

At 7.45 p. m., the service was under the auspices of Graceland College. C. E. Irwin, of the student body, was in charge. The college interests were well presented by various speakers, interspersed with musical numbers.

THURSDAY, APRIL 13, 1911.

The morning prayer service was in charge of Elders C. Ed Miller and J. A. Becker. At 10.45 Elder James E. Yates, who has been laboring among the Oklahoma Indians, was the speaker, with Elder R. M. Maloney in charge.

At 2 p. m. Pres. Joseph Smith called the business session to order. In doing so he made the following remarks:

We are very fortunate, at this session of conference, to be called together by the sound of a gavel, made probably of an olive tree of the Holy Land.

I do not know, I understand it to have been some decades or years in growth; but in it, we have this manifestation: that the law, physical law, the material law, by which God has sustained life in the world continues on the hills about Jerusalem; in the trees which bore the olive, cheered the hearts of the Saints as also of their Savior, and furnished the oil which they used, still thrive under that old law.

God forgive us if we ever forget that he has made just as wise provisions in regard to spiritual lives and spiritual laws which attend the spiritual life and our spiritual welfare. He has been mindful of the spiritual life as he has been of the material, and has given us his Spirit as a signet for our spiritual well being and final success.

The minutes were read and approved.

The Library Commission reported concerning the work of the year. They asked that an appropriation of two hundred dollars be granted by the conference. The discussion was continued from yesterday's session after an amendment was made to make it read fifty dollars, instead of two hundred dollars. This was discussed for some time, when a substitute was offered, the intent of which was to merge the church library with the college library, transfer it to the college library rooms, and to appropriate fifty dollars toward its support this coming year. After some discussion the substitute was lost; the amendment was lost, and the original motion passed by a large majority.

The following recommendation was received from the Daughters of Zion:

That the conference be requested to ask the stake and district presidents to cooperate with advisory board of the Daughters of Zion in making choice of a sister in each of their respective districts to look after the work of the Daughters of Zion, where there are no district organizations.

A matter was presented concerning the writing and singing of about one hundred gospel songs in Australia, stating that they were written by members of the church, contained strictly Latter Day Saint doctrine in sentiment, and the music is by Bro. J. T. Gresty, a professor of music. There was a request to have them published in book form, the title suggested being, "The Gospel in Song." The matter was referred to the Board of Publication, with power to act.

A report was read from the Second Quorum of Seventy.

The matter of publishing the book, Joseph Smith and His Progenitors, in the Swedish language had been referred to the Board of Publication and Presiding Bishopric. They reported on the matter, stating that they thought the request of the missionaries asking that this book be published in that language should be granted and that the church appropriate two hundred dollars to aid in the carrying out of the project. The report was approved.

A report was read from the Board of Publication, which with many other such reports will appear in full in the published minutes.

The Fourth Quorum of Elders reported. A report was read from the secretary of the meeting of the bishops, bishop's counselors, and bishop's agents held the morning of April 11.

At 7.45 p. m. Elder S. W. L. Scott was the speaker in the upper auditorium, with his brother, Elder Columbus Scott, in charge. At the same hour, in the lower room, the archaeological committee occupied, with Pres. F. M. Smith in the chair. The discussions of the previous meeting drew a large audience of elders and members and intense interest was manifested. They heard a very profitable discussion by various members of the committee, which lasted for over two hours.

FRIDAY, APRIL 14.

At 9 a. m., the prayer meeting was in charge of Elders R. M. Elvin and Ellis Short.

At 10.45, Mr. John Wright, assistant superintendent of the Iowa State Anti-Saloon League addressed the audience, explaining the objects and work of the league. He was introduced by Elder J. F. Mintun, who labored last year as city missionary at the Iowa state capital. Our singers furnished special musical numbers.

Pres. Joseph Smith opened the business at 2 o'clock. After the minutes were approved he resigned the chair to Pres. E. A. Smith.

The First and Third Quorums of Seventy presented additional reports.

The Second Quorum of Elders reported; also the Order of Evangelists.

It was moved that the report of the Third Quorum of Seventy, concerning the expulsion of one of its members be indorsed. An amendment to postpone one year was denied. The motion was adopted.

Pres. E. A. Smith resigned the chair to Pres. F. M. Smith.

Bishop E. L. Kelley arose under a question of privilege to make a statement concerning methods of procedure, involving jurisdiction of a court in trial cases. It was granted by motion. After making his statement, the chair gave him special permission to answer questions.

The Daughters of Zion, now "The Women's Auxiliary for Social Service," reported.

The General Sunday School Association made its annual report. The minutes of the Association in detail will be found in the May issue of the Sunday School Exponent.

The Presidency recommended the following for ordination to the office of high priest: Gomer R. Wells, Amos Berve, F. G. Hedrick, George Barraclough, Thomas A. Ivie, and Mark Siegfried. This was adopted, and their ordinations provided for.

That part of the report of the Presidents of Seventy that had been deferred from the 11th was taken up. By separate motions, the names of Jacob Hall, N. L. Booker, and J. A. Roberts, present, and J. Charles May of Society Islands Mission, Lloyd C. Moore, and William Anderson, not present, were all approved and the ordinations provided for.

Pres. Joseph Smith presented the names of Elders V. M. Goodrich, of Saint Joseph, Missouri, and Samuel Twombly, of Fanning, Kansas, to succeed Bishop William Anderson, (deceased) and Elder F. G. Pitt (resigned) as members of the General High Council of the church. The selections were approved and the ordinations provided for.

It was moved to expunge from the minutes the resolution of the 12th, concerning ministers in socialism and politics, but this was lost, after some discussion, by a large majority.

The resignation of Mr. F. W. Newcomb as a member of the Board of Graceland College Trustees, was taken up and accepted, and a vote of thanks ordered sent to him. Mr. Clarence F. Smith, a Lamoni citizen, was elected to fill the vacancy.

Daniel Anderson was elected to succeed himself on the college board, and A. Carmichael took the place formerly held on the board by J. A. Gunsolley, whose term had expired. He received a vote of thanks. Heman C. Smith resigned as a member of the college board, which was accepted, with a vote of thanks. S. A. Burgess, of Lamoni, was selected to fill the vacancy.

Heman C. Smith was elected to represent the church on the Library Commission. It was stated by the Presidency that they preferred to have Pres. E. A. Smith act as the Presidency member of the commission, he being a resident of Lamoni. This was approved.

It was announced that an ordination meeting of those present who had been voted upon would be held under the direction of the Twelve on Sunday morning at 8 a. m.

The preaching service at 7.45 p. m. was by S. A. Burgess, with Joseph A. Tanner in charge.

SATURDAY, APRIL 15.

The prayer meeting at 9 a. m., in charge of M. C. Fisher and R. Bullard was very much enjoyed. At 10.45 T. C. Kelley was the speaker, with F. J. Ebeling in charge.

Pres. Joseph Smith sounded the gavel at 2 p. m., and announced for the hymn, "God is marshaling his army," after which W. J. Haworth, delegate from Australia, invoked the divine blessing. The minutes were read and approved, the assembly settled down to business as though it were possible to finish the most of it at this session.

The Presidency presented the following resolution, received by them from the Quorum of Twelve, and stating that they preferred the conference should act upon it:

Resolved, That we request the First Presidency to take up the matter of making proper representation to both England and Germany that will correct the false impressions which at present exist in these two countries, relative to the difference between us and the faction known as the Mormon Church of Utah—such representation to be made through such official sources as shall be most effective in accomplishing the purpose.

This was referred to the Presidency, with power to act.

The name of Elder John Shields, of Acton West, Ontario, Canada, was recommended by the Presidency and Twelve for ordination to the office of evangelical minister. This was approved by the conference and the ordination provided for.

The Presidency recommended the following elders for the office work of high priests: J. C. Elvert, of Cameron, Missouri; Benjamin J. Dice and David E. Powell, of Stewartsville, Missouri; Fred T. Mussell, of Bevier, Missouri; J. W. Taylor and George W. Leggott, of England. These were acted upon separately. All names were approved and their ordinations provided for.

The joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric presented the name of Elder Joseph Roberts, of Lamoni, Iowa, to be ordained to the office of bishop. It was stated that in the consideration of this brother, the divine sanction, through the witness of the Spirit had been received. Several delegates bore testimony in corroboration, after which the recommendation was unanimously approved.

It is also to be understood that a similar witness attaches to all other recommendations made from time to time in these conferences. Back of the mere formal action of the body in business capacity, there is always a prayerful consideration to know whether the sanction of the Master is attached to them. Without the Spirit to guide in these important appointments, the church would be no more than a worldly institution; it would be a misnomer to call it the kingdom or church of God. The following reports were received: An additional report from the Quorum of High Priests; from the Seventh Quorum of Elders in England, which has an enrollment of fifty-three; and an additional report from the Third Quorum of Seventy.

During the year, I. A. Smith, of Lamoni, resigned from the Board of Auditors. The committee whose right it is to fill vacancies, appointed George W. Blair, of Lamoni, to succeed him, and the conference ratified the appointment. G. W. Eastwood, of Kansas City, Missouri, was elected to succeed himself on the Board of Auditors.

The conference turned its attention to standing committees:

The Saints' Homes Committee, of Lamoni, was sustained, and the Bishop was authorized to add another to the committee during the year. The tract committee was sustained, as was also the committee on American Archaeology, composed of F. M. Sheehy, W. H. Kelley, R. Etzenhouser, and Louise Palfrey Sheldon.

The committee on revision of Church History was sustained. This committee is: Joseph Smith, F. M. Smith, W. H. Kelley, J. R. Lambert, and the Board of Publication.

The Church Secretary, the Bishop, and Pres. Joseph Smith were sustained as the committee on clergy credentials.

The committee to confer with the Church of Christ (Hedrickite) at Independence, Missouri, was sustained. It consists of F. M. Smith, Heman C. Smith, E. L. Kelley, F. M. Sheehy, R. May, and R. S. Salyards.

The committee on compilation of General Conference resolutions, consisting of Daniel Macgregor, R. S. Salyards, and F. B. Blair was sustained; as was also the committee on memorial to the Martyrs, the committee being Pres. Joseph Smith, F. M. Smith, E. L. Kelley, George P. Lambert, and Heman C. Smith.

The committee on incorporation of stakes was sustained.

The committee on concordance to the Book of Mormon reported progress and asked for further time to complete the work. The report was approved and the committee continued.

The following were sustained by separate motions: The College Board of Trustees, the Board of Auditors, Library Commission, the Sunday School Association, Zion's Religio-Literary Society, the Women's Auxiliary for Social Service (formerly Daughters of Zion), The United Order of Enoch, the Church Secretary, Church Recorder, the Historian, the Physician to the Church, the various quorums of the priesthood, the Aaronic priesthood, quorums of elders, High Priests' Quorum, Standing High Council, Order of Evangelists and J. R. Lambert the acting president, Order of the Bishopric, the Presiding Bishopric, First, Second and Third Quorums of Seventies, the Seven Presidents of Seventy, the Twelve, the First Presidency, the committee on revision of Doctrine and Covenants, and the writing of a juvenile history.

The Presidency and Twelve not being ready to report on missionary appointments, the conference stood adjourned for business until Monday. Tomorrow being Sunday, it was by motion suggested that the delegates and Saints present observe it with a fast until the evening meal, for the good of the conference and the church. This was carried unanimously.

Elder E. C. Briggs obtained permission to speak to a question of privilege for ten minutes.

At 7.45 p. m. there was a sermon by Elder I. M. Smith, assisted by B. J. Scott.

SUNDAY, APRIL 16.

In the upper auditorium, prayer meeting was held at 8 a. m. in charge of J. A. Tanner and W. A. McDowell. The regular local Sunday school at 9.15 was in charge of superintendent G. W. Blair.

At 11 o'clock, Pres. Joseph Smith again addressed the assembly. All were glad to know he was able to speak to them. The sermon was reported and will appear later. A. Carmichael was in charge.

At 2.30 the speaker was Heman C. Smith, assisted by H. O. Smith. At 7.45 Joseph Luff, physician to the church, was the speaker, George P. Lambert in charge.

The services in the low auditorium were as follows: Ordination meeting at 8 a. m., under the direction of the Twelve. Preaching at 11 a. m. by Bishop E. L. Kelley, assisted by C. J. Hunt. At 2.30 p. m., preaching by Elbert A. Smith, assisted by Charles Fry. At 7.45 p. m., preaching by Frederick M. Smith, assisted by F. A. Russell.

Patriarch E. Keeler, of Portland, Oregon, preached at the Saints' Home at 7 p. m., assisted by R. Bullard. At Liberty Home, William Johnson was the speaker, assisted by Charles P. Faul.

The fast was generally observed and a good spiritual influence prevailed throughout the day.

MONDAY, APRIL 17.

At 9.30, Pres. Joseph Smith called the assembly to order. After the usual opening service, and the reading of the minutes of previous session, a report was read from the council of Seven Presidents of Seventy, recommending O. E. Sade and B. S. Lambkin to be ordained to the office of Seventy. Their ordinations were approved and referred to the ministers in charge of their respective fields. FREDERICK A. SMITH,
Secretary of the Twelve.

LAMONI, IOWA, April 17, 1911.

By request, Bro. Hale W. Smith sang, "Lay not your armor down till life's work is done."

The Presiding Bishop then stated that until the Lamoni Stake shall meet, Bishop Joseph Roberts will have charge of the Stake finances.

The minutes were then read and approved, after which a formal motion was carried to adjourn as per previous resolutions.

"My times are in thy hand" was sung, and Pres. Joseph Smith pronounced the benediction.

Thus passed a peaceful conference, the detailed minutes of which will be published in due time as a supplement of the HERALD.

THE FLAG OF TRUCE.

The prophetic statement of the inspired Paul is evidently being fulfilled in our day. There is so much evil and deception in the world that we are also reminded of the words of Jesus, "Because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." Paul writes:

This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away.—2 Timothy 3:1-5.

I believe there is a disposition prevailing everywhere, even among Latter Day Saints, to shrink from the real issue that confronts us. We are invited to write encouragingly, paint the word pictures with bright, glowing colors, make it sound complimentary, pleasing to the ear, etc. No doubt the true intent of this effort is to encourage, strengthen, and build up the faith and confidence of people in the gospel message. To receive compliments on our labors is indeed joyous and sweet; but if we would labor more for complement than for compliments I believe this good gospel work would move faster and better.

Members of what we may call the "Christian world" are very firm and decided in complimenting themselves that they represent Jesus Christ and his gospel to humanity. But I most seriously doubt that their system contains the saving elements of complement. From a human standpoint I cheerfully concede they do some good. So do the Mohammedans, Buddhists; and others have their traits, and extend the hand of mercy and blessings to some.

As harbingers of truth, the oracles of the living God, we are compelled to reason from a different standpoint.

I read a sketch of Texas history which relates to the struggles of 1835 when Texas was fighting for freedom from Mexico. About four hundred Texas soldiers with limited ammunition were facing an army of Mexicans, near Goliad, two thousand strong. They fought during the close of the day. The Texans were well entrenched; yet when darkness brought relief and gave rest for the night there were found some dead and wounded among the brave four hundred. They who remained could have escaped during the night, but had no possible way of carrying with them their wounded and dying comrades. Like loving, brave soldiers they would not leave their comrades, notwithstanding they knew the formidable strength of their enemy.

When morning dawned they found themselves confronted by an increased army of Mexicans. The Texas braves well knew they could not subdue the enemy and gain a victory. So when the welcome flag of truce was unfurled to the morning breeze it brought a thrill of joy to their hearts. The Mexican general assured them that if they would surrender their arms, they would be properly cared for as prisoners of war.

They peacefully surrendered—trusting in the promise given in words, and in the white flag of truce. But what a cruel record is written of the slaughter of those brave soldiers! After a short time as prisoners they were marched out under orders in small squads, and shot down like wolves, only three men escaping alive to tell the story of the broken truce.

* One writer says that all the world is a stage and all men and women merely players. Hence we may agree and suggest that what is "acted out" on the battlefield or in the greater events of life is being daily acted out in the lives of people in many places. Not that all are guilty in the same manner. Some may be absolutely free from guilt; if so, it would be a treat to meet such persons.

How many cunning traitors are there in the social world who declare their love and true devotion in words and acts to some trusting maiden—some father's pride or mother's joy, and under the guise of true love will deceive, ruin, and desert them, leaving them wounded and dying upon the battlefield of life! Such may not be recorded in the history of a nation or state—but we do believe such will be recorded in the archives above, and in time the General of God's army on earth will find the traitor and fasten him in prisoner's chains.

No more cruel and wicked truce was ever broken than that of trustful, affectionate love. The broken truce at Goliad is revolting and dreadful to contemplate. That was a public affair—thousands of other cases are daily occurring in all parts of our Christian land.

Children are being born in Christian homes at almost every tick of the clock. These children are being reared by Christian parents (Latter Day Saints, some of them); and in too many homes the sacred voice of prayer is never heard; the glad songs of Zion are unknown. These children hear of Jesus and his love as they hear of Robinson Crusoe; or some other fanciful story of old.

We take things for granted too much. We suppose our boys and girls are always all right—all right because they are ours. But the unguarded path of youth is dangerous, and the child does not know it. There is much need of parental watchcare. Parents need the wisdom of God to guide, the love of a Savior to bless, and the devotion and zeal of angels to impress their children that there is more in life than fleeting joys or fanciful dreams. God has given us this little army that we may lead it to victory.

We meet on the broad battlefield of life: The enemy is in sight, we may fear an open encounter, but we do not hesitate to meet under the flag of truce, to hold communion or conversation. Flattering promises are made, our affable, smiling foe assures us protection, offers us viands, shelter, and rest. Like the song of the siren or the bewitching entreaties of the spider to the fly, we are soon disarmed under the flags of truce, and we find ourselves in the toils of the enemy.

One of the most joyful remembrances I have of our dear Basil whom God has taken to himself, is the remembrance of his words to me as I had just finished asking the blessing at the table. Basil, who was about five at that time, sat to my right and said: "Papa, I want to ask the blessing next time."

His request pleased me, and I promised, "All right, Basil, you may."

But how forgetful we are sometimes! Next time came, but that innocent childish request did not come to my mind until the "Amen" was said, when with voice full of feelings of neglect and broken promise came the same worded petition: "Well, papa, I want to ask the blessing next time."

Next time I did not forget, and from then on during my days at home, little Basil took his turn asking blessing at the table, also joining in prayer around the family altar.

It is very evident to me that we do not always know when we do wrong. Our conception of right and wrong is dimmed and darkened by the results of sin, evil, and vice that have burdened the human family for generations past, that it will require time and much effort, together with divine grace to restore our spiritual eyesight to normal condition.

I like the statement I heard at our General Conference about fifteen years ago by one of our young ministers, who was delivering an address for the Daughters of Zion, "The time to commence training a child is fifty years before it is born." I can not offer much compliment in referring to the observance of this manner of training, but do say there is a wealth of complement in it concerning child training. And if we can but properly and divinely train our children, we will not have lived in vain—even though we may never have raised our voices to contend for the laying on of hands or a succession of apostles in the church!

When young Hamlet was told of the visits of his father's ghost, he reflected thoughtfully and remarked: "There is something rotten in Denmark." That is not reflecting, however, on Denmark to-day, neither would we reflect unkindly on the church or its members, for in so doing, I would reflect on myself and my own labors. But we do believe there is evil, sin, vice, and wicked neglect among people called Saints; and that we could, if we would, occupy higher ground than we do. We have promised to serve God; we made that promise when we asked for admission into the church and were baptized. We promised deep down in our hearts when we stood at the marriage altar to be kind and loving to our companion—have we broken truce?

We promised when first we heard that baby voice in our home to do all in our power to guide, train, and educate in every good way the one whom God had intrusted to us. Have we broken truce?

Do you teach your children to pray?

Do you pray?

Do your children hear you pray?

Do you teach your children to avoid bad habits? Do you avoid bad habits—do you seek to teach by precept or by example? What a glaring farce for a temperance lecturer to plead the cause of temperance while the audience knows that he drinks behind the screen and staggers under the influence of strong drink. What a glaring farce for us to expect our children (or anyone else) to follow in the ways of purity, holiness, and peace, to believe our gospel, if we degrade ourselves in sin, evil, vice, or filthy habits?

Have we broken truce with God and adopted the ways of the world? What effect does it have upon us now to hear the word which has echoed and re-echoed down from the days of Christ? Do we believe it—is there any meaning in it—do we understand it?

Jesus said: "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven."

Are we lulled to sleep under the mystic influence of the siren? Are we entangled in the toils of the spider? Is our church work, in general, moving as fast as it should? Does the elder preach with power to the convincing of those who hear, as in Bible and Book of Mormon times? And do the signs follow them that believe? When you get sick or ailing, do you as a rule send for the elders or for the doctor?

Humanity is ever the same. We have often told of the apostasy from primitive Christianity, have referred to what we call the Brighamite apostasy, with all the energy and force of our nature. It has been a joy (though we have regretted the condition) to refer with reason, scripture, and evidence to the fact of an apostasy of past years—but if we see the same condition now in the lives of Latter Day Saints, as the days are going by, we can not refer to it with joy. The most formidable foe to conquer is the one close at hand.

While I am trusted as a watcher upon the walls of Zion, I hope to use my voice and pen when I think the enemy is approaching—neither will the cry of "Peace, peace" and "All is well in Zion" deter me. If I know myself, I am not in this work for present compliments, received from mortal man, but for the complement of the gospel of our salvation in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Let us beware of the flag of truce raised from the enemy's camp. "The world is still deceived with ornament." And it seems that people in general are greatly attracted by worldly ornament, rather than true worth or value. "All that glitters is not gold," is true to-day as in days of old. Latter Day Saints are no exception to the rule—they are the same in nature as all other people. And until we permit our "vile nature" or bodies to be changed and "fashioned" in the likeness of Christ the Lord, the gospel (to us) has been a failure, or we have failed to be benefited by it.

Simply to be born into this world as an infant is no guarantee or evidence of a faithful, useful, and successful life. Neither is our new birth, being "baptized into Christ" (joining the church) any guarantee or evidence, of itself, alone, that we shall be accepted when the trump of God shall sound, unless we have gone "on to perfection," to the "measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

The boys and girls who attend the graduating exercises do not receive their diplomas just because they desire them, or because they live in that district and attend that school. Diplomas are granted because they have qualified—because they have answered satisfactorily all questions, and received grades above a required average. The examining board is not permitted to grant diplomas because of good looks, or family relationship, financial standing, or because they have entered the contest. They must qualify according to the law and rules of the examination. Nothing else will do.

"How readeest thou?" That is a good question to ponder and ponder well. We suggest another: "How livest thou?" Are you in full fellowship with the army of God? in full sympathy with the Master, his manner of life? Is his pride your pride; his obedience your obedience; his ambition your ambition; his devotion your devotion; his consecration to his Father's will and word your consecration? If so, I am persuaded you will qualify, and receive your diploma.

If we have made truce with God and his army, let us not break truce with him by following the bewitching enticements of the world. The General of God's army is leading on to victory. Let us make peace with him, and follow him, and be free from the dangers of the enemy. R. M. MALONEY.

AQUEDUCTS AND IRRIGATION IN ANCIENT AMERICA.

Having recently received from Bro. E. F. Shupe a copy of a Trinidad, Colorado, paper, containing a brief mention of the ancient reservoir and irrigation ditch near Animas, New Mexico, I think it will be well to present the items, along with others collected on the subject of the old-time irrigation in New Mexico and Arizona, and combine them into an article. But on further thought I decide to first take up the testimony of learned men about the still greater remains of ancient works of that kind in other parts of America, as discovered by the Spaniards, and later by other peoples, down to our own time. It is a very interesting part of the testimony, about the intelligence and skill of the ancient inhabitants of Joseph's land, the land that God promised to the descendants of Joseph of Egypt. All believers in the Book of Mormon rejoice in the great proofs that have come to light about the civilizations formerly existing in Central and South America, and these things help to show their greatness and power.

From various travelers, explorers, and historians there have come undoubted proofs that both in North America and in South America the ancient inhabitants were remarkably proficient in the construction both of reservoirs for water and of waterways to supply cities, and for irrigating dry lands to make them productive. Evidently Central America has always been so well watered by nature, by its more than eight score rivers, that there was no need of irrigation, and thus no evidences have been found in the five republics or in southern Mexico that pipes or canals conveyed water to irrigate farms or gardens.

Yet in Yucatan the ancients had aqueducts to convey water into cities, and thus we know that they understood the advantages of water storage, natural or artificial, and probably of the benefit of running water for use in residences, palaces, and other buildings. Prof. J. D. Baldwin speaks of this fact concerning one of the great cities of ancient Yucatan. He writes as follows:

At Palenque are remains of a well built aqueduct; and near the ruins, especially in Yucatan, are frequently found the remains of many finely constructed aguadas, or artificial lakes. The bottom of these lakes were made of flat stones laid in cement, several layers deep. Traces of a very ancient paved road have been found. . . . These antiquities show that this section of the continent was anciently occupied by a people admirably skilled in the arts of masonry, building, and architectural decoration. Some of their works can not be excelled by the best of our constructors.—Ancient America, page 101.

Mr. John L. Stephens, in his Central America and Yucatan, published in 1841, page 321, speaks of a large aqueduct at Palenque. It was four feet in diameter and roofed with stones.

On page 212 of Ancient America, Professor Baldwin mentions about the city of Mexico, when it was discovered by the Spaniards in 1519, that "the great streets went over numerous canals, on well built bridges," also that "the city was supplied with water by means of an aqueduct which extended to Chapultepec."

M. Charnay speaks of the great fountain the city of Mexico and says that the fountain is the termination of the aqueduct which replaced "the ancient aqueduct of Montezuma." About this waterway he further relates as follows:

At that time it was brought through an earthen pipe to the city, along a dyke constructed for the purpose; and, that there might be no failure in so essential an article, a double course of pipes in stone and mortar was laid. In this way a column of water the size of a man's body was conducted into the heart of the capital, where it fed fountains and reservoirs of the principal mansions.—Ancient Cities of the New World, page 36.

Of the proofs that in South America the ancients used reservoirs and aqueducts the following authors are quoted. Prof. J. D. Baldwin says:

It is noticed everywhere that the ancient Peruvians made large use of aqueducts, which they built with notable skill, using hewn stones and cement and making them very substantial. Some of them are still in use. They were used to carry water to the cities and to irrigate the cultivated lands. A few of them are very long. There is mention of one which was one hundred and fifty miles long, and of another which extended four hundred and fifty miles across the sierras and over rivers from south to north.—Ancient America, page 243.

The Hon. E. G. Squier, who was United States Commissioner to Peru in 1863-65, made personal investigation of the present condition of the ruins in that country while he was there, and he published facts about the modern appearance of things which justify the claims made by the Spanish explorers of 1531. The following extracts are given from Mr. Squier's work. Of the old city Chimú he says:

Here we came upon the remains of a great aqueduct, which had tapped the Rio Moche many miles up towards its source among the mountains for the supply of the ancient city, and which was here carried across the valley on a lofty embankment. This is still more than sixty feet high, built of stones and earth, with a channel on top, originally lined with stones, and of the dimensions of our ordinary canals. We followed this to the point on the slope overlooking the old city, where the water was distributed, through minor aqueducts over the plain below.—Peru, the Land of the Incas, page 118, Alden edition.

Also on page 118 Mr. Squier mentions the walled in areas of Chimu, which he says "were evidently the gardens and pleasure grounds of the ancient induct for irrigation." In the same ruined city he mentions "a wall five feet high standing on the edge of habitants," and each of these had its own "aque—a deep excavation" which is 450 feet long by 195 broad. He says that it was "presumably a reservoir for water." Its sides and bottom are faced with stones, "carefully fitted in place."

Of the ancient city of Cuzco he gives, on page 442, detailed descriptions of the Temple of the Sun, and of the structures dedicated to the moon, the stars, the rainbow, the thunder, and the lightning, and then tells about "the stone reservoir or fountain, carved from a single block," of which the old chroniclers speak as having been "plated with gold" anciently. He stated that it still stood "in the center of the court" and was "seven feet by four" in size and "three feet deep." He spoke of the hole in the bottom "through which the pipe entered by which it was filled," but said that "the conduit which supplied the building has been destroyed." However, the present supply of water comes "through subterranean channels, the sources of which are unknown."

On pages 537 and 538 he mentions finding near La Banca, Peru, "a grand aqueduct" carried on stone arches from the foot of the snow line in the mountains to irrigate lands, whose owners had restored the aqueduct "on the line adopted by the original Inca builders."

But now we come more fully to the subject of irrigation in use by the ancient people. Mr. Squier says:

The system of irrigation of the ancient Peruvians is well worthy of attention. Even in those parts where the rain falls during six months in the year, they constructed immense irrigating canals. They not only economized every rod of ground by building their towns and habitations in places unfit for cultivation, and buried their dead where they would not encumber the arable soil, but they terraced the hillsides and mountains to heights of hundreds and thousands of feet, and led the waters of mountain springs and torrents downwards, until they were lost in the valleys below.

These aqueducts were often of considerable size and great length, extending in some instances for hundreds of miles. I have followed them for days together, and have seen them winding amidst the projections of hills, curving in and out as topography required; here sustained by high walls of masonry, there cut into the living rock, and in some cases conducted in tunnels through sharp spurs of the obstructing mountain. Occasionally they were carried over narrow valleys or depressions in the ground, on embankments fifty or sixty feet high, but generally they were deflected around opposing obstacles on an easy and uniform descending grade.

It is on the desert Pacific coast of Peru, however, where no vegetation could otherwise exist, except on the immediate banks of the streams descending from the Cordillera, that we find the most extensive irrigating works of the ancient inhabitants.

They not only constructed dams at different elevations in the stream, with side weirs to deflect the water over the higher slopes of the valleys, but built enormous reservoirs high up among the mountains, as well as down nearer the sea, to retain the surplus water of the season when the snows melted, and the rains fell in the interior. One of these reservoirs in the valley of the Nepena is three fourths of a mile long by more than half a mile broad, and consists of a massive dam of stone eighty feet thick at the base, carried across a gorge between two lofty, rocky hills. It was supplied by two canals at different elevations; one starting fourteen miles up the valley of the Nepena, and the other from living springs five miles distant.

The system was universal, for without irrigation nearly the whole country would be a desert, although not from any absolute defect of the soil; for the vast ash heap as it appears to be, has every element of fertility. Only give it water, and it will produce luxuriant crops.—Peru, the Land of the Incas, Alden's edition, pp. 218, 219.

The things set forth in the great historical work, The Conquest of Peru, written by the Hon. W. H. Prescott, were by him compiled from Spanish manuscripts to which he had access at Madrid, the capital of Spain. He never visited Peru, nevertheless the investigations by Mr. Squier and other travelers have proven the truth of what the Spanish writers sent home to Spain, and which remained unread by any Englishman or American until translated and written in English by Mr. Prescott in 1842-1846, and published in 1847. On the subject of the ancient systems of water reservoirs and irrigation works in Peru, I make quotations from Mr. Prescott as follows:

Much of the country along the seacoast suffered from want of water, as little or no rain fell there, and the few streams, in their short and hurried course from the mountains, exerted only a very limited influence on the wide extent of territory. The soil, it is true, was, for the most part, sandy and sterile; but many places were capable of being reclaimed; and, indeed, needed only to be properly irrigated to be susceptible of extraordinary production. To these spots water was conveyed by means of canals and subterranean aqueducts, executed on a noble scale. They consisted of large slabs of freestone nicely fitted together without cement, and discharged a volume of water sufficient, by means of latent ducts or sluices, to moisten the lands in the lower level, through which they passed.

Some of these aqueducts were of great length. One that traversed the district of Condesuyu measured between four and five hundred miles. They were brought from some elevated lake or natural reservoir in the heart of the mountains, and were fed at intervals by other basins which lay in their route along the slopes of the Sierra. In this descent a passage was sometimes to be opened through rocks,—and this without the aid of iron tools,—impracticable mountains were to be turned; rivers and marshes to be crossed; in short, the same obstacles were to be encountered as in the construction of their mighty roads.

But the Peruvians seemed to take pleasure in wrestling with the difficulties of nature. Near Caxamarca a tunnel is still visible which they excavated in the mountains, to give an outlet to the waters of a lake, when these rose to height in the rainy seasons that threatened the country with inundation.

Most of these beneficent works of the Incas were suffered to go to decay by their Spanish conquerors. In some spots the waters are still left to flow in their silent, subterranean channels, whose windings and whose sources have been alike unexplored. Others, though partially dilapidated and closed up with rubbish and the rank vegetation of the soil, still betray their course by occasional patches of fertility. Such are the remains in the valley of Nasca, a fruitful spot that lies between long tracts of desert, where the ancient water courses of the Incas, measuring four or five feet in depth by three in width, and formed of large blocks of uncemented masonry, are conducted from an unknown distance.

The greatest care was taken that every occupant of the land through which these streams passed should enjoy the benefit of them. The quantity of water allotted to each was prescribed by law, and royal overseers superintended the distribution, and saw that it was faithfully applied to the irrigation of the ground.—Conquest of Peru, Alden's edition, vol. 1, pp. 80, 81.

From Caxas De Soto had passed to the adjacent town of Guancabamba, much larger, more populous, and better built than the preceding. The houses, instead of being made of clay baked in the sun, were many of them constructed of solid stone, so nicely put together that it was impossible to detect the line of junction. A river, which passed through the town, was traversed by a bridge, and the high road of the Incas which crossed this district was far superior to that which the Spaniards had seen on the seaboard. It was raised in many places, like a causeway, paved with heavy stone flags, and bordered by trees that afforded a grateful shade to the passenger, while streams of water were conducted through aqueducts along the sides to slake his thirst.—Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, p. 224.

The descent of the Sierra, though the Andes are less precipitous on their eastern sides than towards the west, was attended with difficulties almost equal to those of the upward march; and the Spaniards felt no little satisfaction, when, on the seventh day, they arrived in view of the valley of Caxamalca, which, enameled with all the beauties of cultivation, lay unrolled like a rich and variegated carpet of verdure, in strong contrast with the dark forms of the Andes, that rose up everywhere round it. The valley is of an oval shape, extending about five leagues in length by three in breadth.

It was inhabited by a population of a superior character to any which the Spaniards had met on the other side of the mountains, as was argued by the superior style of their attire, and the greater cleanliness and comfort visible both in their persons and dwellings. As far as the eye could reach, the level tract exhibited the show of a diligent and thrifty husbandry. A broad river rolled through the meadows, supplying facilities for copious irrigation by means of the usual canals and subterranean aqueducts. The land, intersected by verdant hedgerows, was checkered with patches of various cultivation: for the soil was rich, and the climate, if less stimulating than that of the sultry regions of the coast, was more favorable to the hardy products of the temperate latitudes. Below the adventurers, with its white houses glittering in the sun, lay the little city of Caxamalca, like a sparkling gem on the dark skirts of the sierra.—Conquest of Peru, volume 1, page 234.

In his Conquest of Mexico Mr. Prescott also gives us added proofs from the old Spanish manuscripts about the storage of water and of canals for its distribution in Mexico City. These are descriptions of what the Spaniards saw in Mexico four hundred years ago. But their writings were entirely unknown to the English speaking world until Mr. Prescott's studies in Madrid in 1836 to 1841, and his translated work was first published in 1843 in New York.

In chapter six of volume one, Conquest of Mexico, Mr. Prescott relates of one Aztec king that he had a beautifully terraced garden, which was watered from a reservoir. This reservoir was "fed by an aqueduct that was carried over hill and valley for miles on huge buttresses of masonry." On a lower level were "three other reservoirs" from which water "was distributed in numerous channels through the gardens, or made to tumble over rocks in cascades." Also there were bathing places "excavated in the solid porphyry" there existing.

Another royal residence had gardens that were irrigated by "aqueducts and canals that were carried water into all parts of the grounds." The Spanish writers of that time stated that one Aztec palace had "more than one hundred baths" which were filled with "crystal water" from fountains that received it from the aqueduct of Chapultepec.

Besides the above facts about irrigation both in Mexico and Peru anciently, there have been many sketches in newspapers about the old-time ditches and reservoirs in New Mexico and Arizona. The item already referred to as coming from Bro. E. F. Shupe I now copy here as worthy of publication in the HERALD. It reads as follows: :

MAY REPAIR ANCIENT DAM AND IRRIGATE VAST TRACT.

ANIMAS, NEW MEXICO.—The practicability of rehabilitating the great prehistoric dam that is situated thirty miles south of Animas, and of making it again serve the purpose of forming an enormous reservoir for the storage of water for irrigation purposes is being investigated by representatives of financial interests that contemplate the gigantic project.

The ancient dam at the head of the Animas Valley is one of the most wonderful monuments in existence of the civilization that inhabited the southwest ages ago. The structure is fifteen miles long and no dam in the world begins to approach it in size. It is of semicircular shape. It is built of earth and mixed with cement. Notwithstanding the erosion of centuries the dam still has a uniform height of about forty feet. It must have been fifty to sixty feet high in the days when it was in use. By a comparatively small amount it could be made to again store a vast sea of water. It is 150 feet wide across the base and 40 feet wide across the top.

The southern end of this great reservoir is in Mexico. The artificial lake which the dam formed covered an enormous area of territory, and it is believed to have afforded a water supply for irrigating more than one million acres of land. The traces of the great irrigating canal and ditch that lead from the reservoir are still to be seen.—Trinidad Chronicle News, January 25, 1911.

I have in hand from the Saint Louis Globe-Democrat, dated November 29, 1877, a clipping about the book, "Arizona As It Is," written and published by

Mr. Hiram C. Hodge, who had recently made "an extended tour through the territory," and who thus reported his findings to the public. And his statements fully established what other explorers had written since the first white man saw them in the days of Coronado. He tells of the ruins of towns and cities and of innumerable relics in the way of pottery, stone implements, painted rocks and hieroglyphics in the valley of the Gila River, and elsewhere.

Among these evidences of an intelligent industry in past ages not the least are the accounts by many explorers of the use in former times of dams, reservoirs, and canals for watering the land. Mr. Hodge speaks of the remains of "a large irrigating canal which was from twenty-five to fifty feet wide" and it "took the water from Salt River about eight miles above" a point that he describes. He says that its course "can be easily traced for twenty miles or more." Mr. Hodge believes that "the people who made these canals must have had a knowledge of engineering, because the canals are cut on a true and perfect grade."

I quote further from Mr. Hodge:

The largest of the old irrigating canals visited and examined by the author is some twenty-five miles above Phoenix, on the south side of Salt River, near where the river emerges from the mountains. For eight miles it is fully fifty feet wide. Then it is divided into three branches, running in different directions, the three probably carrying sufficient water to irrigate the plateau of table land, before mentioned. . . . Below the great canal and the large ruins alluded to above are other canals of nearly equal size to the others, and which were taken from the river many miles below the large one; and along these are also ruins of towns.

Then Mr. Hodges states that the valley he speaks of contains about one hundred thousand acres of land "which evidently was all cultivated by the old, prehistoric races." He stated that "towards the upper end of the valley, on a piece of table land, are the ruins of a considerable town, also large reservoirs that were connected by canals." I might quote much more about the ruins of buildings, and about the roads and fortified points on high ground, and how explorers found ruins of buildings that showed the use of regular mortar and concrete, and stone work, all three as they were found to be needed by the ancient builders.

A copy which I also have of the Ogden Freeman, dated January 1, 1878, mentions the "Notes in Arizona from the pen of an able engineer and traveler which were prepared originally as a report for the Royal Geographical Society of London, England." This article in the Freeman also quotes from volume four, chapter eleven, of H. H. Baneroff's Native Races of the Pacific States, showing that both these authorities affirm the same things that Mr. Hodge claimed concerning the fact of the present outlines of "reservoirs and extensive irrigation canals constructed in ancient times by what race or people none can tell."

In modern times the importance of irrigation is being more and more understood, and indeed its actual necessity is more and more realized. This is evidenced by the great dams and reservoirs already constructed, and by others now in process. One of the greatest in value is the famous Assouan dam across the Nile in Egypt. It is a mile and a quarter long, and it conserves the floods of the rainy season each year and then the water is ready to keep moist a vast area of the remarkably fertile land of the Nile Valley, and thus avoid the shortage and occasional real famines that have been for thousands of years the curse of Egypt. Of the days of Jacob and Joseph Bible history gives us vivid pictures of the destitution in past ages. From such evils the great dam gives relief.

Then also in the United States men have gathered to the National Irrigation Congress, the first one, 1892, being attended by only eleven delegates coming from four States and Territories, but in recent years as many as fifteen hundred delegates have assembled from thirty-five States. This shows the remarkable increase in interest during eighteen years. They come to plan and execute the bringing into full use millions of acres of the arid lands, and the swamp regions of the United States. In 1907 it was accounted that at least sixty million acres of dry soil needed irrigation, also eighty million acres of swamp and boggy land needed reclamation. Therefore, in time to come one hundred and forty million acres may be added to the crop producing area of our country, for the good of our fast increasing population.

And the good work has gone forward until men in authority say that individual workers have already brought ten millions of acres into cultivation and the United States Government has supplied three million more acres with water, a total of thirteen million acres reclaimed. And in many regions ten or twenty such acres produce as much profit as fifty to one hundred of land, that, without irrigation, fluctuates between seasons of flood and drought.

One of the most noted irrigation works is the Roosevelt Dam, in Salt River Valley, Arizona. It is 240 feet from river bed to top of dam, and the reservoir of water covers twenty-five square miles. The water supply is expected to make 200,000 acres into farms and gardens.

Gunnison Tunnel in Colorado is six miles long, a bore through the mountains, and it takes the water of the Gunnison River where it will irrigate 130,000 to 150,000 acres of fertile soil. What is good for fruit raising will become worth a thousand dollars per acre. The third is the Snake River dam, Idaho, by which it is claimed that 240,000 acres has been, or will be put in cultivation, and ultimately 400,000 acres. Another is the Truckee-Carson project in Nevada. The fifth is the Engle or Elephant Butte dam in the Mesilla Valley, New Mexico. It makes a reservoir of Rio Grande water forty miles long, and 180,000 acres will be irrigated by it, 110,000 in New Mexico, 45,000 in Texas, and 25,000 on the Mexican side, as stated in World To-Day for September, 1910. Height of dam from rock to parapet, 265 feet. It is said that apples, pears, and grapes will yield from three hundred to six hundred dollars per acre, according to kind, and berries as much as eight hundred dollars per acre. Sixth is the Belle Fourche Canal and dam in South Dakota. Seventh is the Shoshone River dam in what is called the Big Horn Valley of Wyoming. This dam is taller than any other, being 328 feet high. It will bring into use at least 150,000 acres of arid lands.

These seven are among the chief irrigation projects, but there are many others in Idaho, Montana, North and South Dakota, Colorado, New Mexico, and other States. All these will aid in bringing to pass the prophecy that "the desert shall blossom as the rose." For, in this day of the Lord's power, he inspires and guides men to accomplish his purposes by means and powers that he gives them; and thus the things that in past ages would have been miracles are now known to be but the result of the processes of law. And these are more or less comprehended by men and are guided into use for the benefit and happiness of God's creation.

A CONVERSATION BETWEEN A DISCIPLE OF CHRIST AND A MINISTER OF THE WORLD.

It was during the month of August, 1910, that a certain disciple of the Master visited a little hamlet in pursuit of duty, wherein one and one only of the popular churches was situated. After taking a survey of the situation he called on the pastor of the church before mentioned, having been referred to him by a good sister who lived near the little town.

That disciple approached the parsonage, rung the doorbell, and waited a moment. A lady answered the bell. "Good morning, is the Rev. Mr. S. in?" she inquired.

"Yes, sir;" (opening the screen door) "will you come in?" and the disciple entered. "Be seated, please, and Mr. S. will be in in a moment. Excuse me, please, and I will call him," said the lady as she left the room. The disciple found himself alone in the minister's study. His eyes hastily glanced over the books on the shelves, then picked up a magazine that lay on the center table and glanced it over slightly when the minister entered. "Good morning," said the disciple, introducing himself, "is this Mr. S.?" A hearty handshake with "I'm happy to meet you," and both were seated.

A few moments were taken in a general discussion of the weather and other preliminary topics, when the disciple began by saying, "I'm doing ministerial work in this part and have been referred to you by Sr. F., and would like to know what chance there would be to get the use of your church at such times as you will not be using it yourself?" "Wel-l, ah,—you say you are stopping with Sr. F.; do you represent the church she belongs to?"

"Yes, sir," answered the disciple.

"Wel-l, I will tell you just as I did Brother Pender when he was here. I have no objections to you coming in here to preach Christ, but I couldn't give my consent for you to come in here and preach doctrine. You see, we are very careful here not to preach anything that would disturb the people or cause a division among them. I have been quite successful in getting them together. If you will not preach any doctrine, I have no objections; but if you go to preaching doctrine I would certainly have to object."

"Well, brother," responded the disciple, "it all depends on what you call doctrine. You are aware of the fact, no doubt, that one version of the Bible renders the word doctrine, teaching; and therefore I understand doctrine to imply the teaching of Christ. I confess I can not preach without presenting the teaching or doctrine of Christ. We would be glad to have you define what you mean by doctrine, and we shall better understand one another."

"I—I—m, I mean your doctrine," said the minister. "I would certainly object to you coming in here and preaching any of your doctrine."

"My doctrine is not mine, but His that sent me," responded the disciple; "for I am determined to know nothing among you save Christ and him crucified."

"Hem-ah—I have no reference to that," said the minister, "I mean the peculiar doctrines of your faith. I think the Bible is so beautiful, I should certainly object to anything being presented here that is not in keeping with it. I think the Bible is good enough."

"So do I," said the disciple, "but certainly Bro. S. you will not object to anything that would make it better, will you?"

"I guess you mean your Mormon Bible now, don't you? I should object to it very strenuously."

"Not necessarily," said the disciple. "You, I think, intended to make reference to the Book of Mormon, did you not; why not call it by its right name? But by the way, did you ever read that book; do you know anything about it? what are your objections to it? You know as well as I do what the wise man says: 'He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is a folly and a shame to him.' And if you have not read the book I would advise that you read it, at least before you undertake to condemn it. Did you ever read it?"

"Well—eh-em—no, I have never read it. I have read a good deal about it, but have never seen a copy of the book."

"Well," said the disciple, "you are not going to condemn it unheard, are you? You know what the wise man says about answering a matter unheard. I would advise you to learn something of the book before you undertake to pass judgment on it. Since you have already confessed that you know nothing of it, only what you had read against it, wouldn't you think I was a little inconsistent if I had only read infidel works and then condemned the Bible? It would be just as fair; just as reasonable."

"Well, now," said the minister, "what does the work claim to be; what do you claim for it?"

"We will be glad," said the disciple, "to answer, and we will use the doubtful term, as you would look at it. It claims to be a record of God's dealings with the aborigines of this continent, just as the Bible purports to be a record of God's dealings with the people on the eastern half of the world. It gives an account of two civilizations on this continent and the source from whence they came; the first one coming from the tower of Babel, according to the common chronology, about twenty-two hundred years before Christ (see Genesis 11: 8, 9); and the latter were descendants of Manasseh who came from Jerusalem about 600 B. C. It gives us an account of their customs, wars, religious worship, and also their destruction. And the American Indian is a degenerate remnant of the latter civilization (see Genesis 49: 22-26; Deuteronomy 33: 13-16; Isaiah 16: 8).

The Bible tells me the people were scattered upon all the face of the earth (Genesis 11: 8, 9), and the Book of Mormon tells me they came here. I turn to science and am informed that they were here. Thus I have a three-ply cord of evidence which is not easily broken.

The Book of Mormon tells me that the first civilization had its origin in Central America, and the scientific discoveries confirm the truthfulness of the account. The book again informs me that the second civilization had its beginning on the western coast of South America near the upper end of Chili, and science again comes to my rescue and bears record to the correctness of the statement."

"Well," said the minister, "that may or may not be true, but at any rate I think the Bible is good enough. I can't see where your book will help it any; and then if these things are true, why haven't the wise men of the world accepted it? Surely some of them have read it!"

"We shall answer your question," said the disciple,

"by asking you another: Aren't there just as wise men in the world, and just as honest men as there are in the church? and is it not a fact that they have also studied the Bible? Why have they not accepted the Bible? Answer me and I will answer your question. And further, in the very preface of the book I find it states it is to be a witness to Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ."

"Well," said the minister, "I think the Bible is plain enough on that, and can't see why we should need anything to prove that."

"Very well, brother," said the disciple, "why then did not such men as Col. Robert G. Ingersoll and Thomas Paine, and a host of others accept Christ? and why don't our Hebrew friends accept him? If you go to the Jew with the New Testament, that which is most dear to Christian people, he will tell you it is simply the record of the disciples of an apostate Jew, and that it is beneath the consideration of a loyal son of Abraham, and he will refuse to hear it. But if I go to him with the record of his brethren, the children of Joseph, and demonstrate to him that his brethren on this half of the world worshiped the same God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; and that through their prophets and the Scriptures they had they were taught to look for the great Messiah; that signs were given them of the time of his birth and crucifixion; that after his ascension he appeared to his people on this half of the world and exhibited to them his pierced hands and feet and side, and delivered unto them the same code of ethics that is found in the sermon on the mount; I say that this would serve as a witness to convince them that the Jesus they crucified on Calvary is in very deed the Christ, the Son of God.

The Gentiles must also be considered. The doubter says to the ordinary Christian, You are altogether too narrow minded in that you first tell us that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God and the Savior of the world, and then say that he only appeared to the people on the eastern half of the world. Science has proven beyond a doubt that America supported as high a civilization as the eastern world ever saw, and if the theory of you Christian people is correct, they knew nothing of the Christ, and Christ knew nothing of them. Therefore, he is not what you Christian people claim for him.

When a representative of the faith I hold meets that man he has a satisfactory answer for him and shows him that the record of this people teaches the same Christ and it gives this hemisphere to Christ and Christ to the world, thus proving what we claim for him: that he is the Christ and the Savior of the world."

THE LAW OF LIBERTY.

Law, when properly given and properly enforced, can readily be defined to mean, Protection to citizens who are governed by the law. The Government of this country offers us the protection due to citizens who abide by the law. Our legislators enact laws for the benefit and protection of those dependent on the law.

The question might arise, Who is dependent on the law? All law-abiding citizens. It is a promise to them of peace.

Thinking men divide law into three classes: First, carnal or man made laws; second, natural law, or law resultant of creation; third, spiritual law, or the gospel law.

Since the days of our father Adam, until to-day, man has striven to set up and maintain a system of laws or government by which he might enjoy continual peace. A glance at the history of the past will soon convince us that his efforts have lacked some essential part of what it takes to constitute perfect government. Why? Let the reader answer for himself. When our Father placed us here on earth it was for a purpose, for we know the all wise Father does nothing without a purpose. Later we have a record of the fact that he set up a form of government for man to follow. The strength, force and power of that law, or the blessings obtained from obedience to that law, no man can realize until he has obeyed at least a part of it.

Law is always given with a promise. The laws of our earthly governments promise us peace and quietude in our daily avocations of earthly life. What does the gospel law promise? Brethren, it is a question we should be striving daily to understand more fully.

When our forefathers drafted the Constitution of the United States, they sought to establish a government of liberty, which is not yet complete; for at every meeting of Congress they amend or enact additional laws. But the gospel law, the perfect law of liberty, needs no change. It is a law of liberty, because it was enacted by One who had a perfect knowledge of the law. It not only offers us the promises made us by national laws, but also abundant promise in the life to come.

Though these promises are always conditional, we have but to study the plan of salvation as it is written in the books as law, and in explanation thereof. If man fails to obey the perfect law, he will surely fail to receive promised blessings. We find in the law that we must strive, and strive earnestly to keep the commandments of the Lawgiver.

We as a people will be held more accountable to the law, for we claim to have more than one hundred and twenty-five revelations explaining the law. If we obey it we can expect the blessings promised; if we obey not, we certainly must expect his displeasure.

The Master once said, "man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." The godly man will take delight in the law. He will meditate on the things of the scripture both day and night. May the Lord help us, that by our diligence we may be worthy a better understanding of the perfect law of liberty, is the prayer of our brother,

BERT E. HART.

The Children's Hour.

Between the dark and the daylight, when the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations, that is known as the children's hour.

I hear in the chamber above me the patter of little feet,
The sound of a door that is opened, and voices soft and sweet.

From my study I see in the lamplight, descending the broad hall stair, Grave Alice, and laughing Allegra, and Edith with golden hair.

A whisper, and then a silence; yet I know by their merry eyes

They are planning and plotting together to take me by surprise.

A sudden rush from the stairway, a sudden raid from the hall!

By three doors left unguarded they enter my castle wall!
They climb up into my turret o'er the arms and back of my chair;

If I try to escape, they surround me; they seem to be everywhere.

They almost devour me with kisses, their arms about me entwine,

Till I think of the Bishop of Bingen in his Mouse Tower on the Rhine!

Do you think, oh blue-eyed banditti, because you have scaled the wall,

Such an old mustache as I am is not a match for you all?

I have you fast in my fortress, and will not let you depart,
But put you down into the dungeon in the round tower of my heart.

And there will I keep you for ever, yes, for ever and a day,
Till the walls shall crumble to ruin, and molder in dust away!

Jenkin Lloyd Jones Hits Gospel of Play.

"I submit this morning that a philosophy of play will not save the city or the nation. There is more promise for the soul and more profit to the community in the overworked than in the overplayed child. My faith in the future of this nation is strong, because I am happy in the thought that the great bulk of the citizens of the United States, the grown up men and women who are raising the future citizens of this nation, are not left with time hanging heavily on their hands—are not driven to the sad necessity of investing money and wasting soul in playground activities."

Jenkin Lloyd Jones in a sermon in All Souls' Church spoke on "The enthronement of God by the dethronement of the gods," and drew the conclusions quoted after discussing one of the "lesser gods," which he designated as the "Divinity of the Stadium."

FINDS THE GOD NAMELESS.

"I have turned the leaves of my encyclopedias and dictionaries," he said in his sermon, "in vain in search of a name for this one of the lesser gods, that is commanding the increasing devotion of certain important and extensive areas of American life to-day. I have thought of the Celtic Puck, with his mischievous pranks, beguiling and resting the careworn children of men. I sought the stately Tersipchore of the Greeks, swaying the mortals with melody and teaching them to forget their troubles in the rhythmic dance. I have thought of Milton's 'Euphrosyne,' the 'goddess fair and free,' with her 'heart easing mirth,' who with her—

"Quips and cranks and wanton wiles,
Nods and becks and wreathed smiles,
Such as hang on Hebe's cheek,
And love to live in dimple sleek;
Sport that wrinkled care derides,
And laughter holding both his sides.
Come, and trip it as ye go,
On the light fantastic toe;
And in thy right hand lead with thee
The mountain nymph, sweet Liberty."

"But none of these stand for that somber, businesslike divinity that directs, with great care, precision, scientific regulation and account book accuracy, this something that is called 'recreation'—the amusement of life.

RECREATION NOW SCIENCE.

"Those old classic and pagan divinities presided over the interests of children; they directed the exuberant life of the young. But this modern god undertakes to keep the old men young and aged ladies elastic by costly investments in the machinery of amusements; and play, which was spontaneous and inevitable under the old paganism, now is reduced to a department of pedagogy, a carefully prepared system, by which the degraded classes are to be uplifted, wayward boys are to be regenerated and wanton girls to be reformed.

"There is great truth in this, and this lesser god that presides over the amusements of a community deserves a degree of reverence, and his devotees should be encouraged. George Eliot spoke a profound sociological truth when she said, 'Important as it is to direct the industries of the world, it is not so important as to wisely direct the leisure of the world.'

"There is something exceedingly satisfying in the thought of municipal playgrounds for little children. I love to think of free concerts and public parks.

ON WEALTHY GOLFERS.

"But when I think of the millions of dollars invested in the golf-links of the United States, the contributions to which are written in three or four figures by men who begrudge the one and two figures for the sanctities of the spiritual life; when I think of gray haired men spending every afternoon of the week chasing a little ball over the field, sweating and puffing, in search of amusement, who would consider it a hardship if they had to hitch up their own horse, again I think that the half god usurps the throne upon which the pretensions would seat the Lord of Life and the Master of our spirits.

"When I think of aged men and women, the physical valves in whose bodies are already beginning to wheeze and crack from overwork, thundering through space, resisting dust and noise, playing hide-and-go seek with danger, menacing the lives of dogs, children, men and women, for amusement's sake, it seems to me the paying of too high a devotion to this god of thoughtlessness, for that is the root of significance of the word 'Amusement'—that which does not muse; does not meditate."—Selected.

Requests for Prayer.

Hannah E. Cairns, of Knobnoster, Missouri, requests the prayers of the Saints in behalf of her husband, who has been suffering for some time from an attack of the grip.

Bro. O. B. Thomas writes as follows: "A letter received on the 12th inst. from Sr. J. P. Colvin, of Otway, Missouri, brings the sad news of a serious accident to Brother Colvin, her husband, who has had one hand and a foot badly torn by the saw in a neighboring mill. She requests me to give notice in the HERALD, asking the prayers of the Saints in his behalf."

BLLENHEIM, ONTARIO, April 11, 1911.

Editors Herald: I have heard some take the position that the lost tribes of Israel were mixed among the nations and had lost their identity, hence were called "the lost tribes of Israel." I believe this is Doctor Wilds' theory. I do not think it is true, according to the revealed word of God.

We read in the Apocrypha, second book of Esdras, chapter 13, verses 40, 41, 42, concerning them that "they took counsel together, that they would leave the multitude of the heathen, and go into a further country, where never mankind dwelt, that they might keep their statutes, which they never kept in their own land." The writer tells how they journeyed for one and a half years, and how the Lord led them, and further tells what the Lord is going to do for them in the latter times when he shall bring them out.

In the Book of Mormon, page 106 small edition, Nephi says that the Lord will speak to lost tribes of Israel and they shall write it; also, "And it shall come to pass that the Jews shall have the words of the Nephites, and the Nephites shall have the words of the Jews: and the Nephites and the Jews shall have the words of the lost tribes of Israel: and the lost tribes of Israel shall have the words of the Nephites and the Jews."

From the above we learn that the whole house of Israel are going to keep a record of God's dealings with them, and in time these records will all come together.

On page 452 of the Book of Mormon, small edition, Jesus, speaking to the Nephites, says that he was commanded of the Father to go and visit the lost tribes of Israel, "which are not of this land; neither the land of Jerusalem; neither in any part of that land round about, whither I have been to minister." And he told them he was going and they should hear his voice and there should be "one fold, and one shepherd."

In the prophecies of Isaiah and Jeremiah we read that the Lord is going to bring his people from the north country and all the land whither he has driven them, and is going to show forth his mighty power in their behalf.

The Lord speaking through his servant, the prophet in the latter days, says: "And they who are in the north countries shall come in remembrance before the Lord, and their prophets shall hear his voice, and shall no longer stay themselves, and they shall smite the rocks, and the ice shall flow down at their presence. And an highway shall be cast up in the great deep. Their enemies shall become a prey unto them and in the barren deserts there shall come forth pools of living water; and the parched ground shall no longer be a thirsty land. And they shall bring forth their rich treasures unto the children of Ephraim my servants. And the boundaries of the everlasting hills shall tremble at their presence. And then shall they fall down and be crowned with glory, even in Zion, by the hands of the servants of the Lord, even the children of Ephraim; and they shall be filled with songs of everlasting joy."

I am of the opinion from the quotations cited above that the lost tribes are by themselves and not mixed among the nations and do not have any communication with them. However, I would like to hear what some one else has to say on the subject, as it is truth I am seeking.

In bonds,

RICHARD COBURN.

News From Missions

Australia.

"Time and tide wait for no man." Our lives, at most, are "like a shadow that declineth," or the flash from some distant lighthouse on a foreign shore.

It seems only like the dream of a night vision, since brethren T. W. Smith and Joseph Burton, with their inestimable companions, left this foreign shore, and yet it is almost a quarter of a century.

During their sojourn in this land, the latter day work was greatly strengthened, and the faith of the few scattered Saints was renewed by the comforting message, and the new additions to the fold. Quite a number of converts were added to the church, most of whom, that still remain in the flesh, are firm and steadfast in the faith.

The departure of these brethren left this vast field under the care and direction of two young and comparatively inexperienced missionaries, one of whom still remains here.

The request of Saints here had been that an apostle should be sent to their assistance, and no less authority would fully satisfy their longing desire, little dreaming that the raw material that had just landed was being molded for that very position, which was fully demonstrated in later years in a most marvelous manner.

"God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform," and often chooses the weak and unassuming, but humble, to actively engage in this great work of salvation, and occupy in some of the most responsible positions in his church. Not many wise men after the flesh, not many noble, not many learned, were chosen, for the Lord's excellent ministry, in former days, but the humble fishermen, and tax gatherers from the lowly walks of life were selected and commissioned to preach the everlasting gospel, and stand as living pillars in the ground work of God's spiritual government on earth.

Those young missionaries in this land toiled away against great odds for a time, often single handed and alone, until help came. The first and unceasing assistance was found in two of Australia's fair daughters, who have proven to be helpmeets in the fullest sense of the term, and whose zeal and fidelity for the uplifting of fallen humanity has never grown dim.

The work in general gradually spread into new fields, but the scattering of the Saints militated somewhat against the old established branches and some were disorganized. Brethren Kaler and Wells were dispatched to our assistance, and reached here in the time of financial depression, and for a time it was difficult to make ends meet; but the Lord cleared the way and his work suffered no special loss.

Brother Wight's departure for America left only three missionaries to prosecute the work and devise the best ways and means at our disposal to get it more firmly established where it had gained a foothold, and push out into new fields.

Our conclusions were that unless the Saints could secure meeting places of their own, and become firmly established, the work would suffer loss, and since that time we have been working together to this end with some success. We have at present twelve church buildings in different parts of the mission, and most of them are free from debt.

One of our great drawbacks has been that the city work seems to be unable to progress or even hold its own without some assistance from the missionary, which has necessitated the locating of a missionary near by to assist them, which prevents opening up new places, to an extent. This has been a bone of contention for years, as the revelation directs that the missionaries should move out into "new fields now widening before them," leaving the local work to the care and administration of the standing ministers "so far as possible." And though they are not acting as branch or district officers they have been stationed so as to labor in connection therewith, in the cities, so as to maintain our position taken up, and to broaden the field as much as possible under existing circumstances.

Had we sufficient high priests and elders who could spare more time to feed the flock, some changes could be wisely made. It seems folly to leave a few struggling Saints to fail, for want of care and assistance, to run elsewhere and repeat the same thing. Better that a child never be born, either naturally or spiritually, than to be left to perish for want of proper care.

With the hope that all obstacles might be removed in time, the brethren have toiled away, organizing branches, Sunday schools, Religios, Daughters of Zion, etc., where the way opened up, and have met with fair success.

In our great hour of need Bro. A. H. Smith was dispatched on a special mission to ordain for us a bishop, and assist those in charge to regulate and set in order the mission work in general. This was a very welcome move, and much appreciated by all; for a bishop had been sadly needed for a number of years, that a better system of providing for the needy might be had among us. His patriarchal work, in blessing a number of Saints, has proven to be a source of great comfort to those who took advantage of the privilege offered them, and his short stay will long be remembered by those whose fortune it was to meet him and his secretary, Bro. Leon Gould.

I was in charge of the mission at this time; but was lying at home seriously ill, and from a human standpoint there seemed little hope of my recovery. Brother Alexander administered to me, and also gave me his patriarchal blessing while I was in bed. He left the next day for Melbourne, en route to New South Wales and America. A cable message from America directing my ordination to the Quorum of the Twelve necessitated his return to attend to this work, which he did to his own joy and satisfaction, by the Spirit's presence.

The bishop had been selected by the spirit of wisdom and revelation and ordained; so that now things began to take on a new appearance with brighter hopes for the future.

Brethren Wight, Barmore, Tucker and Hanson were soon after sent to our assistance. The two latter stopped at New Zealand, where the work is gradually but surely taking root; and the others reached our shores. Brother Hanson was transferred to Australia later. He did a work and left a name that will not soon be forgotten.

Brother Wight had some strong battles against the opposing forces which sought to overthrow our work, and maintained our cause well; and all too soon he returned home.

Brethren Barmore and Wells showed wisdom and tact in selecting helpmeets and settling down in real earnest. They have helped the work much.

Brethren Davis and Robertson were the last, but not the least to come to our rescue, and quickly adapted themselves to the ways and customs here. They are doing a work which will surely bear good fruit in time to come.

We now have a mission headquarters where our paper, The Gospel Standard is published, and where all necessary church books and tracts may be had. The Saints are giving it considerable support. Beside the brethren mentioned, we have two of the Australian brethren holding the office of seventy, one high priest, and a bishop, with quite a number of elders who are assisting with the work and are able, worthy men.

The late New South Wales district conference was the largest attended and the most profitable gathering ever held in the mission. The bishop's books showed that the last year had yielded a bountiful harvest. May the good work go on.

Yours in hope,

C. A. BUTTERWORTH.

News From Branches.

Providence, Rhode Island.

The winter has gone so quickly, it seems that your penman hardly knew the days were passing until the crocus told her of a duty undone, and she hastens to make amends.

Some of our little flock have removed to other cities and others are going. Among those who have already gone are Brn. Daniel Joy and Frank Spinnett, who have been enticed to Buffalo, New York, by business changes.

We hardly know how we will get along without our "Good Samaritan," Sister Eva, who so often assists in cases of sickness. Her lullaby song was heard in many a household and we can recommend to California Saints an excellent nurse and good sister.

Wedding bells are beginning to chime, and the story they tell is of a little, black haired maid, Ethel, who will shortly make her home in Chicago. "Oh the changes, constant changes." The congratulations of a number of Saints were extended to our promising young priest, Edmund Brown, who graduated from evening high school and gave the valedictory of class 1911. He was introduced thus by the principal: "I now take the pleasure of introducing our best and brightest scholar, and the one who has received the highest class marks." By earnest and faithful effort, Edmund finished the four year standard course, notwithstanding he worked at his daily avocations, which often included night work, and has also been active in church work. We were glad he was a Latter Day Saint.

We notice our assistant Sunday school district superintendent, E. A. Fox, is making a canvass of schools. Boston,

New Bedford and Brockton have been visited. Haverhill is on his list.

Elder William Bradbury has been chosen pastor of Attleboro Branch. We miss him, but hear good reports of his work. He lately had the use of our baptistery to induct into the church the husband of one of our sisters, whose childhood home was here.

Elder George Robley has been laboring in the district, Haverhill and some cape towns being visited, and new places opened, with good interest manifested. He reports the baptism at Dennis Port of one who had long known the faith. We made a trip to Fall River last week. On Wednesday we started to meet with the Saints for prayer, but were surprised and saddened to find the church closed on account of a recent fire. Quite a little damage was done, we are told.

Our Sunday school, Religio, and Ladies' Aid are still helpful to the church, trying to work, "Onward and upward." We intend to continue until we bring our better up to best. May God speed the right is the earnest prayer of your sister,
GEORGIE M. SPINNETT.

THEODORE, ALABAMA, Route 1, Box 6.

Died.

MOORE.—William Shepherd Moore was born in Holmes County, Ohio, March 27, 1843, and died at Ainsworth, Nebraska, April 3, 1911, aged 68 years and 7 days. He was married in Holmes County, Ohio, to Miss Samantha E. Riggs, who, with two children, Mrs. Millie E. Bates and Muriel E. Moore, still survive him. One brother, John J. Moore, of Kearney, Nebraska, and one sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Dagon, of Holmes County, Ohio, are still living. At the age of 13, in 1861, Brother Moore enlisted in the military service and supported the Stars and Stripes until the close of the war. He was baptized into the church by Elder W. A. Smith, at Meadville, Nebraska, March 6, 1898. The gospel continued to be a source of blessing to him unto the end of life. Funeral services were held in the Congregational church at Ainsworth, Nebraska, the pastor, Reverend Von Valkenberg, offering the prayer, and Elder Levi Gamet preaching the sermon.

BUTLER.—Charles Vann, little son of Preston L. Butler, died April 6, 1911, at Kingfisher, Oklahoma. He was born March 10, 1906. His mother preceded him to the better land. Since the death of Sister Butler the little ones have been lovingly cared for by their aunt, Sr. Irene Sorden. He was an unusually bright child, although sorely afflicted from birth. His father, one brother, one sister, with grandparents and numerous other relatives, mourn his untimely demise.

JONES.—Owen W. Jones was born January 18, 1831, in Dearbonshire, North Wales. Died January 18, 1911, at his home in Crescent, Iowa, aged 80 years. His wife remains to mourn. Funeral service at the church in Crescent, Friday, January 20, 1911. Sermon by D. R. Chambers.

"The chestnut tree will soon be nothing but a tradition in America," says a writer in the issue of Harper's Weekly for February 4. "It is being destroyed by a mysterious disease which, scientists admit, can not be cured. In New York City practically every chestnut tree is already dead. Over Long Island this tree malady is traveling fast. It is present in Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and, to some extent at least, in Maryland and Massachusetts. The whole chestnut tree area in America, which reaches as far south as northern Virginia and as far west as Buffalo, is infected. Only a few scattered trees can possibly escape." This blight, which was discovered five years ago in the New York Botanical Gardens, can neither be destroyed nor guarded against. The only thing to do is to cut down affected trees for the use of the timber. The difficulty and danger are that the disease spreads in almost the same manner as does a plague among human beings or animals. It is contagious. The blight forms on the tree's bark in tiny pockets. In these there grow little spores or seeds. The wind scatters the spores everywhere, and any chestnut tree that any spore lands on is doomed. The spores carry the contagion for miles. They are also carried in the fur of squirrels and in the plumage of birds, and in the end no tree escapes unless it is completely isolated. In this way for years the blight has been creeping through the chestnut forests and has done its work. The blight does not show itself in the bark until the tree is thoroughly infected.

Substitutes for Saloons?

After the saloon has been run out of town, what then? What shall take its place? Is some substitute for the saloon needed? The Sunday School Times runs an interesting discussion of this question which is now a practical one for so many millions of American citizens. A prominent Colorado man declares that any community that has banished the saloon needs to put in vigorous substitutes for it, or the last state of that place will be worse than the first. Another writer comes back with the retort that "a city no more needs a substitute for saloon than we shall need a substitute for Satan in the millennium." The Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of America sums the question up in a virile article of unsparing convictions. He brings the reader squarely up to the unexpected conclusion that a substitute for the saloon really means a substitute for the church.

Liquor men may not appreciate the following story, with which The Sunday School Times introduces the debate:

The saloon is on the run. In those parts of the country where it has not yet struck its running gait it seems booked for an early start. The liquor men are in the position of that farmer who had driven a team of mules to town, and was persuaded to step into a penny arcade and, for the first time in his life, hear a phonograph play one of Sousa's marches. He put the hearing tubes to his ear and listened. As the first notes of the full brass band came crashing on to his ear drums he dropped the tubes and started for the door, exclaiming, "Here comes the band, and I left them mules unhitched." The band is coming, and somebody has left the saloons unhitched.

In the same issue The Sunday School Times editorially dissects some figures that the New York Evening Sun published last summer to prove that saloon-closing in Indiana had meant more strong liquor drunk. The Sun's editorial reads plausibly—until one reads the Times.

What other nations call religious toleration, we call religious rights. They are not exercised in virtue of governmental indulgence, but as rights, of which governments can not deprive any portion of its citizens, however small. Despotism now may invade those rights, but justice still confirms them.—U. S. Senate Report, 1827.

Why Flying-Machines Fly.

Ask a scientist, "What is an aeroplane?" and he will reply, "Any flat or slightly curved surface propelled horizontally through the air." That, being merely a definition of a thing, and not an explanation of flight, tells little of what is most wonderful about a flying-machine. Time and time again we have all asked ourselves: Why is it that this combination of planes, propellers, motors, and rudders does not fall? Why is it that a machine many times heavier than the air stays aloft?

It is the air pressure beneath it, and its motion, that keep up a plane. If it is to remain in the air, an aeroplane must constantly move like a skater on thin ice. The skater must move fast enough to reach a new section of ice before he falls; the aeroplane must move fast enough to reach a new section of air before it falls. Both are constantly struggling with gravitation.

The simplest and most familiar example of an aeroplane is the kite of our boyhood days. By holding it against the wind, or by running with it, if there happens to be only a gentle breeze, this oldest of flying-machines is kept aloft. Invent a substitute for the string, some device, in other words, which will enable you to hold the kite in the proper direction, and you have invented a flying-machine. The pull or the thrust of an engine-driven propeller is that substitute.—Waldemar Kaempffert, in Harper's Magazine for April.

"Happy people are those who cultivate not only their seeing faculties for bright and pleasant things, but also their faculties for not seeing what is disagreeable and vexatious. They understand the use of both eyes and lids, those that are visible and that are invisible."

In the Grip of the Tsar.

Little news has come out of Russia since the bureaucracy obtained the upper hand and crushed out the revolutionary movement a few years ago. In the issue of Harper's Weekly for April 15 Alexandra Petrovna Delano tells of some of the latest incidents in the eternal struggle for liberty. "Even university self-government is threatened," she writes. "In order to humiliate and lower the prestige of the Russian universities, so called 'flying brigades' have been organized with leave to suppress 'manifestations' of protesting comrades 'with bullets'! The 'Temples of Science,' as the Russians fondly call their universities, are de facto in a state of siege." Nothing remains of the Tsar's manifesto of 1902, promising individual rights and freedom. "The promised liberty of public meetings has been practically withdrawn by regulations which require the names of speakers to be approved by the authorities before they can address an audience. A high official is quoted as having recently said, 'I recognize freedom of speech, but within the limits indicated by me.'"

In Front Rank for Peace.

Again, while our navy is increasing, we are still in the front rank of those who are striving for universal peace, founded on equity and justice and consideration for the rights of others. And the time will yet come when the great moral forces of this nation will assert themselves still more emphatically in the great struggle for international peace and arbitration. May that day be not far off; and when it comes, may we be prepared to fulfill our destined mission. "Blessed are the peacemakers."—The Christian Herald.

THE ALL PREVAILING LOVE OF JESUS.

SCRIPTURE READING.

(Memorial address of the late Bishop William Anderson, by Elbert A. Smith, at Lamoni, Iowa, March 12, 1911. Reported by Sr. Estella Wight.)

If God be for us, who can be against us? He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things? Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth. Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? As it is written, For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter. Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

I have read a part of the eighth chapter of the Roman letter. As a subject, I desire to call your attention to the love of Jesus,—the all pervading and all prevailing love of Jesus. I especially ask you to notice the text: "For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities; nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

THE MUTABILITY OF HUMAN PLANS.

Once more we are reminded of the mutability of human plans. It was expected that Bishop William Anderson would occupy the stand at this hour; but instead, he is spending this Sabbath in another world,—in a world that we know nothing of, excepting as it is revealed to us in the revelations of God; and yet we have received such light, by reason of that revelation, that we believe him to be far happier in that world than he was here. Those who have been permitted to look into that world, even for a moment, have told us that its beauties and pleasures were such that human tongue could not describe them; that it did not enter into the heart of man, nor could the human brain conceive of the glories and blessings that God has prepared for those who love and serve him. And so we believe that Bishop William Anderson to-day is in the paradise of God, and perhaps is renewing those old friendships that were so dear to him in days gone by, that were cut short by the hand of death.

WORDS OF COMFORT.

The words that I have read this morning to my mind should bring great comfort to all those who are concerned in this memorial service. They bring comfort when we consider the one whom the world says is dead, because my text says that death can not separate him from the love of Christ. It brings comfort to his associates in the gospel work, his counselors, and others associated with him in church work, and to the man who must succeed him as bishop of this stake, take up the arduous work that belongs to that office, and confront the problems that are yet unsolved, to realize that life can not separate us from the love of God. We do not need to pass over onto the other side to come into the circle of the love and influence of Christ. Especially I believe that my text will bring a comfort to the widow and the children and the other relatives of the man who has gone on before.

His children, now grown to manhood and womanhood, remember when they were little (I presume it seems but yesterday to them); they remember how he taught them, and the sweet intimacy that existed. They remember how he corrected them at times, and the profit they derived from his fatherly admonitions. His companion, who has traveled with him along the road of life so many years, now has with her memories of the past and anticipations of the future; the present means but little to her. And everywhere she turns, I suppose, she sees some reminder of the one who has gone.

SUNSHINE AND SHADOW.

But, my friends, what a difference there is between those who mourn without hope, and those who realize that they have a hope in the gospel. This life, as we have said before, is made up of mingled sunshine and shadow. The joys and sorrows of life are mingled. They succeed each other as time goes on.

We all must have our portion of each. Pity those who without faith are to-day passing through sunshine into shadow; blessed are those who believing, pass through the shadow into the sunlight.

It must be a solace, a consolation to these relatives to realize that nothing can separate this man from the love of God, and to realize further that he has approved himself to God as worthy of that love by a long and useful life.

The historical items concerning his life were stated by Bro. Heman Smith Tuesday afternoon, and we will not go into them in detail at this time. So far as his character is concerned, it is known to you. Your presence here to-day is a testimony of the respect that you had for him as an individual. That respect in your hearts is a higher tribute than any that I might pay. I presume that Bro. William Anderson made his mistakes during life, because he was human, and all men make their mistakes, and he would be among the last to claim that he was perfect and infallible. But to-day we can afford to forget his mistakes, if we know of them, in the remembrance of the long years of usefulness and of service that he gave to this church.

In 1864 he was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Almost immediately he took up active work, being ordained a teacher, and he continued in active service until his death; forty-six years of service in various offices, as teacher, priest, elder, high priest, and bishop.

FIVE ACTUALITIES.

In the text that I have read concerning the love of Christ we have five actualities named that conspire to separate men from the love of God; but we have the assurance that these factors can separate us on only one condition, no matter whether they work singly or collectively. These factors that he names are life, the adverse conditions of life, other intelligent entities, governments and powers of earth, and finally, death itself.

We take up the first of these, and we notice that he says that life can not separate us from God. It may seem that this is a peculiar statement, the thought that life might separate one from God. Why, it is by virtue of life that we get nearer to God; and yet is it not true that sometimes a confidence in the abundance of life that we fancy we have is the very thing that separates us from God? How often have we seen individuals, who felt so secure in the life that they had, and so confident that they would continue to live for many years, that they seemed to have absolutely no thought of a hereafter, nor of making any preparation for the life beyond the grave. They were so certain of this life and that it would continue that the certainty separated them from God.

It seems to me that this is a serious mistake; because there is nothing more uncertain than human life, even when conditions and indications are the very best. Just the other day I noticed an incident of a man in Kansas City, one of the employers of men there, who had an altercation with one of his employees, and as a result of the nervous excitement, or shock, or fear occasioned by that altercation he died almost immediately. Only a few days before this he had been passed upon by the experts of one of the leading life insurance companies, and they considered him an unusually good risk, his health was good and his vital organs all seemed in sound condition, and in his person was apparent every assurance that he would live for many years.

On the other hand we have but to look around us in almost any community, and we will see those who have been for years and are still frail, yet they have lived many years and have accomplished a great deal in this life.

There is nothing more uncertain than life. We do not know when it will be cut short. We may live for years, and we may not live longer than a day, or less. We should live so that we can say in the words of the poet:

"Some day the silver cord will break,
And I no more as now shall sing,
But, oh, the joy when I awake
Within the palace of the King."

ENVIRONMENT.

The next factor that the Apostle Paul mentions is the adverse conditions of life that surround us. He tells us that tribulation, distress, persecution, famine, nakedness, peril, and the sword can not separate us from the love of God. This brings up the thought of our environment. There are people who have embraced the idea that environment shapes the character of man almost wholly; that it is the greatest factor that we have to consider. The theory is that environment determines the physical, mental, and spiritual development of man, and determines his politics, his morals, and even his religion. And this theory would indicate, if it were true, that our environment, if it be adverse, is a wall that surrounds the individual and separates him from all benign influences that Christ might desire to bestow upon him. But we think this an extreme view. Of course we realize that there is a great deal of truth in the idea that a man's environment influences him to a marked degree; if this were not true, God would not care to establish Zion and to take the people out of evil environments and put them in environments that are good. But, on the other hand, we think that these individuals have failed to reckon with one factor in the case, and that is the love of Christ, that can penetrate every barrier, and take a man out of the most adverse environment, or even reach one remaining by force of necessity in that environment, and help him to live his religion. Why, the Apostle Paul says, "If God is for us, who can be against us?" There is no limitation to that which the human will can accomplish when it is in cooperation with divine power.

I believe that it was Edgar Nye, who while lecturing from this stand some years ago, touched on this theme, and said: "Now abideth heredity, environment, and personal endeavor; but the greatest of these is personal endeavor." He believed that personal endeavor could overcome heredity and environment, and we know that it can when it is united with divine power, through the love of God, and with the aid of Christ. It may be difficult for us, of course, to live our religion under adverse conditions; but if we are to believe Paul, it can be done. Possibly Paul himself is a good illustration for that thought, because we find Paul and Silas at midnight, and in prison, with their hands and feet in the stocks, and yet singing songs and rejoicing. Paul tells us in 2 Corinthians, eleventh chapter, about some of the troubles through which he passed. He says:

In labors more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one.

The law as laid down in Deuteronomy, permitted them to give a man only forty stripes. They gave Paul thirty-nine. They stopped just one short of the maximum punishment, and five times he was afflicted in that way.

Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep; in journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness.

Now we discover that this man himself was confronting the adverse conditions of life; but possibly the greatest evidence of divine power was not in his overcoming these things, but in his overcoming his natural tendency as a result of his early education. Paul was raised among the strictest Pharisees, creed bound and intolerant, and yet God was able to take him out from such influences and make him an ambassador of the despised religion. And whereas we read in our first account of Paul that he went about breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the people of God, we find in my text what this divine love had accomplished. The man who before had been so cruel and intolerant is now writing about the all prevailing love of God, and his one burning ambition is to help those who differed from him in religious belief. "But," you say, "it took a miracle in Paul's case." My friends, God is working miracles every day, perhaps not in the same way he worked in Paul's case, but he is working miracles every day all around us in the transformation of human character, overcoming adverse environment and false education.

OTHER INTELLIGENT ENTITIES.

But we pass on in the examination of our theme, and we notice that the next thing Paul says is that neither angels nor any other person can separate us from the love of God; and we are reminded that one of the serious mistakes that people make is that they do permit other individuals to come between them and God. Certain persons do a good work as preachers or tithe payers until some one says to them: "You ought not to do so. You are making a mistake in sacrificing yourself and giving up your home or your substance in the name of religion." And they take the advice of the other man and cease their labors.

Others discover some individual who is not living right, and they say, "If that is all that this church does for its men and women, then I have no use for it." The primary question with us should never be, What is some one else doing? The first question should be, What are we doing? Is this work divine? And if it is, it is worth our greatest effort, our most supreme sacrifice. If it is not divine it is not worthy of our membership at all.

Paul says that angels can not separate us from God. I presume that the angels of light do not wish to do so, and so he must have reference to the powers of darkness. It gives us encouragement to realize that these, all of them, are subject to God, and that if we but rely upon him they can not be against us to accomplish any material damage to our cause.

GOVERNMENTS.

He tells us that neither principalities nor powers can separate us from God. That brings us to the thought that perhaps at times the governments of this earth may ally themselves with the powers of darkness against God; and it is true that only four years after this letter was written the persecution under Nero began against the Christian people, and perhaps many of those very persons to whom this letter was addressed were taken and destroyed during those persecutions while the whole government of Rome, with all the powers of state was arrayed against the people of God. They were taken and thrown into the dens of wild beasts. They were saturated with oil and burned at night to light the city of Rome. But this brief agony was soon over, and they were ushered into the eternal glory that awaited them. And John the Revelator tells us that he saw the men and women who were beheaded for the testimony of Jesus, and he says they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. Ah, what was a brief moment of sorrow and pain compared to that thousand years of pleasure and of joy?

As a church we have been very fortunate in America in that the powers of state have seldom been arrayed against us. It is true that in Missouri the governor at one time issued an "extermination order," saying that the Saints must leave the State or be exterminated, and in fact, they were driven from the State; but one might say in charity that this was a case where the reins of government fell into the hands of misguided individuals. The theory of our Government is one of religious liberty, and we have been fortunate to live in a land where all people are supposed to be religiously free. This has not always been the case. God says to us that when we keep the laws of God, we do not need to break the laws of the land; but that was not true of the saints in some ages and lands. When the king in the time of Daniel issued an edict that all men should bow down at a certain time and worship false gods Daniel had to choose, he had to decide whether he would obey the law of the land or the law of God. The test has never been required of us, because we are living in a land and an age where the constitution is based on freedom of thought and liberty of conscience.

There may come a time, possibly, when laws of a different character will be formulated, we can not say as to that; but we should ever pray that church and state may be kept separate, and religious freedom be guaranteed until Christ shall come to reign and direct.

DEATH, THE GREAT LEVELER.

Now we come to the consideration of the last thing that we have mentioned, and that is the statement that death can not separate us from the love of God. We come face to face with the great mystery of death, the thing that in the popular mind is supposed to be unsolvable. We realize that death itself is a great leveler of individuals. I have before me a clipping from an oration delivered by Senator John J. Ingalls, the gifted author of the poem, "Opportunity," and he pays this tribute to death:

In the democracy of death all men are at last equal. There is neither rank nor station nor prerogative in the republic of the grave. At this fatal threshold the philosopher ceases to be wise, and the songs of the poet are silent. Dives relinquishes his millions and Lazarus his rags. The poor man is as rich as the richest, and the rich man as poor as the pauper. The creditor loses his usury and the debtor is acquitted of his obligation. There the proud man surrenders his dignities, the politician his honors, the worldling his pleasures, the invalid needs no physician and the laborer rests from his unrequited toil. Here at last is nature's final equity. The wrongs of time are redressed, injustice is explained, the irony of fate is refuted, the unequal distribution of wealth, honor, capacity, pleasure and opportunity, which make life so cruel and inexplicable a tragedy, cease in the realms of death. The strongest has no supremacy, and the weakest needs no defense. The mighty captain succumbs to the invincible adversary, who disarms alike the victor and the vanquished.

There is a sentiment of truth in the statement that death is the great leveler. It brings all classes to a common level.

I was just reading the other day where Jacob Riis, the American philanthropist, was telling of a case where simply a black mark on a tooth was all that identified the remains of a common laborer from the remains of a king. They were searching for the remains of this king, who died many centuries ago, and they found the remains of the laborer. Death had put them side by side. It had stripped away dignity and pomp and ceremony from the king; it had taken the rags and the degradation from the poor man, and laid them side by side, and men could not tell which was which, until by a peculiar process, on account of this little mark that I have mentioned, it was determined which was the king and which the common laborer.

WHO ANSWERS?

But while death brings all to a common level, it does not bring justice, and if death ends all, then there is nothing in the law of compensation or of retribution. Why, death brings the painted harlot and the virtuous mother to a common end. But what do we know about that which is beyond the grave? We turn to the Christian religion and we find certain statements made by those who have received divine revelation, and nowhere else can we find an answer to this problem. Has infidelity anything better to offer? Here are three verses from one of the poems by Robert J. Ingersoll in which he attempts to crystallize his philosophy in this manner:

"We do not pray, or weep, or wail;
We have no dread,
No fear to pass beyond the veil—
That hides the dead.
And yet we question, dream, and guess,
But knowledge we do not possess.

"We ask, yet nothing seems to know;
We cry in vain,
There is no 'master of the show,'
Who will explain,
Or from the future tear the mask;
And yet we dream and still we ask:

"Is there beyond the silent night
An endless day?
Is death a door that leads to light?
We can not say.
The tongueless secret locked in fate
We do not know. We hope and wait."

Unlike this individual, we do not say that there is no master of the show. We know there never was a show where there was not a master who could rise and explain. We are told that the whole world is a stage, and to his advocates, or those who will serve him God has explained his purposes regarding the mundane drama. He tells us that at death the body returns to the dust from whence it came, and the spirit returns to God who gave it. Now there is an assurance in this that science can not give us, because when face to face with this problem science is powerless. Science can not tell us how life originated, can not tell us concerning the mystery that surrounds the end of physical life.

Not long ago I was reading an article by a learned physician on the subject of the miracles of Christ. He took the position that miracles were necessary in the beginning of the Christian era to establish the gospel of Christ, but that they are not necessary now, and, in fact, that it would not be right nor wise that miracles should be wrought in this age, because if a man should be raised from the dead miraculously it would for ever settle the question of life and death. Science would take recognition of it, and thereafter men would not need to walk by faith and not by sight,—they would know.

I do not agree with that thought. I do not believe that any number of miracles would materially change the public attitude in regard to this question. If Christ were to come again to-day and in the presence of any medical clinic in the land, were to raise the daughter of Jairus from the dead, it would not change the attitude of science, nor would it be generally accepted by the so-called "Christian" world. In the first place if the men and women witnessing such a miracle were willing to go on record the world would not believe them. It would assail their integrity. It would declare that they were mistaken in their conclusions, that the girl was not dead at all; that she had simply been in a trance, and at some mental suggestion that she should arise, she again awoke. I do not believe that one could get scientists to go on record in support of a miracle even if they saw it. For various reasons they would conclude that they had been mistaken, or they would hesitate to jeopardize their reputation.

Not long ago in one of our modern hospitals a blind man was healed. That is, he was healed if I am to credit the testimony of those in whom I have the greatest confidence. He was healed after the physicians had said that he was blind; but when they were asked afterwards to go on record to the effect that he had been healed, and that he had been blind, they said: "No; if we were to say now that he had been blind, how could we explain his present condition?" How could they do it? Why, of course it could be done only in one way, and that would be by confessing that true religion is right in its contention that God works miracles in the world to-day.

GOD ANSWERS.

But the word of God answers the question, and in connection with this I desire to present two passages from the word of God that come to us with comfort and power on an occasion like this. The first of these I read from John, the fifth chapter, beginning with the 24th verse:

Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life. Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live.

Remember this is the language of the Christ himself.

For as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; and hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man. Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation.

We learn, then, from this great promise, that the hour is coming when the dead shall hear the voice of God, and those who have done good shall come forth in the resurrection of the just.

Then from 1 Thessalonians, fourth chapter, beginning with the thirteenth verse, I read:

I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words.

I believe that there is comfort and consolation in that thought, and whereas Senator Ingalls extols death as the great leveler, the bringer of justice, we point beyond death to the resurrection. Paul says that every man shall be raised in his own order, and Christ tells us that every man shall receive according to his works. There will we find justice; there will we find consolation and joy. Then will we be ushered into our thousand years reign with Christ, and later we will inherit the new earth and the new heavens wherein there will be no sorrow, where all tears will be wiped away, and where there will be eternal joy and satisfaction.

ABUNDANT VICTORY.

I have said that these things that the Apostle Paul mentioned can separate us from the love of God only on one condition; that condition is that we give them our consent. In our present life, earthly powers and principalities, angels and other individuals, life and death, can separate us from God only on condition that we give our consent to such separation. The privilege remains with us. If we permit these things to come between us and God, it is our privilege; but Christ has said that all power is in his hands. There is nothing in the world, there is nothing in heaven, there is nothing in the regions of the lost that can overcome us and pluck us out of his hands so long as we want to maintain our safe abiding place there; and the Apostle Paul tells us that if we do this we will come off "more than conquerors." It will not be a doubtful victory. We will be "more than conquerors." Every enemy will be overcome, and the last enemy to be conquered is death. In that day we will be united again with the brother whom we have lost.

May God bless and comfort, direct and aid those who especially need his help and comfort at this hour, is my prayer.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Bro. A. N. Hoxie, of Somerville, Massachusetts, sends us a newspaper clipping making mention of an Indian woman who had made herself conspicuous by standing before Saint Patrick's Cathedral in New York asking people who passed out to read a wonderful vision she had written down, and carrying a little banner on which was lettered, "The Lord will save you; trust in the Lord." For this she was taken in custody and sent to Bellevue for observation three days, and then pronounced sane. She has spent eighteen of her fifty-three years in New York; is a married woman with three children, and is a Mexican Indian.

Brother Hoxie says that he has talked with her, and finds her "a woman of remarkable intelligence and native ability." According to the interview, she was tutored from early childhood in the Roman Catholic Church. She claimed that a personage appeared to her and bade her write the things he showed her. Says she was carried away to Paradise; saw God and Christ and things most wonderful. Was taken to hell, which she observed was a place of confinement; not the place pictured to her by the ministers. A personage appeared to her in darkness as "an angel of light" and told her that the Roman Catholic Church was the only true church and bade her to herald that to the world. She took this written vision to the priests of her church who very promptly condemned her belief in visions or dreams without even reading it, which proved a blow to her faith. Brother Hoxie had with him several good tracts, which she took to read; and she is now investigating our position, which seems to commend itself to her. She was inclined to think that the Book of Mormon mentioned in the tracts could be identified as the record that her Indian tribe spoke of in a tradition concerning a former nation. She wishes to read the book, and the brother has ordered a copy sent to her.

"The responsibility of the church in social and industrial questions has been receiving more and more attention at the hands of both the clergy and the laity of nearly all denominations in America in recent years. One of the earliest developments was the institutional church, then came the organization of men's clubs concerned with social and civic betterment, followed by more definite plans in many churches for constructive philanthropic work.

"One of the pioneers in the effort to bring the churches to a realization of a definite responsibility in the social and industrial life of the people was the Rev. Washington Gladden, D. D., of Columbus, Ohio. His article on 'The municipal church' in the Century Magazine of last August has been widely commented upon. Largely because of this leadership, Doctor Gladden was made chairman of a section of the National Conference of Charities and Correction on 'The church and social work.' This section will present a program at the meeting of the conference in Boston during the week of June 7 to 14, which will be the first public discussion of national scope on this important development."

The above is sent us by the press secretary of the National Conference of Charities and Correction. From him we learn that the following subjects will be canvassed at the convention: "The function of the church in social work: should it inspire, interpret, guide or administer it?" "The preparation of ministers for social work," "Special types of church social work," "What the church itself can do as an organization," "How the church can help other organizations," "The value of social work to the church," "The relation of the liquor question to the labor movement," "Scientific aspects of drunkenness," "Legal and legislative aspects of drunkenness." Other sections of the conference will deal with problems related to "Law breakers," "Children," "Housing, health and recreation," "Standards of living and labor," "Securing and training social workers," "State supervision and administration" and "Families and neighborhoods." In fact, the discussions of the conference will cover the whole range of charitable and correctional activity, and it is expected that the attendance will be the largest in its history of thirty-eight years. It is the hope of the officers that churches of all denominations throughout the country will send delegates to the conference in Boston to take part in these most important discussions."

The Texas legislature, which adjourned March 18, voted to submit to the people, at a special election to be held July 22, an amendment to the constitution, providing for state-wide prohibition. Under the local option system, which prevails in Texas, the county being the unit, 154 of the 246 counties are already "dry."

VII. PREREQUISITES OF BAPTISM.

BY ELDER L. E. HILLS.

My purpose in this effort will be to call attention, briefly, to some points of doctrine and necessary knowledge one should have in starting to work out his salvation.

The first important principle is faith. It is written, "Without faith it is impossible to please him" (God).—Hebrews 11: 6.

What is faith, and how may it be obtained? Paul said, "Faith cometh by hearing."—Romans 10: 17. This, then, can not be a blind belief; for it comes by hearing, knowing, and understanding.

Peter said to Jesus, "Thou hast the words of eternal life."—John 6: 68. We must know what these words are. Jesus said, "Yea, rather blessed are they that hear the word of God, and keep it."—Luke 11: 28. To fully comprehend the significance of this language, one must know that Jesus was sent from God as the mediator of a covenant, and thus—"became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." (Hebrews 5: 9; 8: 6.)

Knowledge of the requirements, as set forth in the covenant (the word of God that Jesus was sent to teach) is necessary to faith and obedience. Many people have been indoctrinated with the idea that "the faith of Christ" and "a faith in Christ" are one and the same thing, and that it is sufficient to just believe that Jesus is the Christ and accept him as their personal Savior. But to accept him is to accept the conditions as set forth in the covenant, "The faith of Christ," which is his doctrine, the gospel. This gives us to understand how one may be justified by the faith of Christ (Galatians 2: 16). Paul wrote the Roman saints, "We have received grace and apostleship, for obedience to the faith."—Romans 15. Also, "A great company of priests were obedient to the faith."—Acts 6: 7.

Now note, all the error concerning the idea that faith in Christ and faith alone will save, came from the epistles of Paul, and Peter says of them, "In all his epistles, . . . are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction."—2 Peter 3: 16. Is not this being done to-day?

James, while trying to overcome this misunderstanding of Paul's writings, wrote that faith alone will not save. "Ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only."—James 2: 24. But when we understand that the faith of Christ is his doctrine (the covenant), and that John wrote "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God" (2 John 1: 9, 10), we see at once one can be justified only by obedience to the faith, the doctrine of Christ.

To believe in Christ, is to believe in his mission, and what he taught. To accept him is to accept the covenant he was sent to teach; and when we understand the terms as set forth in the covenant and accept them in faith, then it is that we are in a condition to work out our salvation with fear and trembling (Philippians 2: 12). One must want salvation, know how it can be obtained, and be willing to work for it, and the first work after accepting the terms as set forth in the gospel covenant is repentance.

When certain Pharisees and Saducees came to ask for John's baptism, he said to them, "O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance."—Matthew 3: 7, 8. Thus we learn that John's baptism was for the remission of sins and that he required repentance first (Matthew 3: 5, 6; Mark 1: 4.)

To repent means more than a sorrow for sins; yes, more than the relinquishment of practices that offend God. The fruit of true repentance is to right wrongs done to others, so far as possible. If I had wronged my brother, should I go to God for pardon before I go to my brother to right the wrong and seek his pardon? No, certainly not. And if a brother should come to us for pardon, should we say, "Well, I'll forgive you, but I won't forget it?" We should forgive all who ask freely and fully and never remember it against them again. "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath."—Ephesians 4: 26.

Jesus said, "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish."—Luke 13: 3-5. Paul endeavored "to have always a conscience void of offense toward God, and toward man." (Acts 24: 16.)

When a person has repented, then he is ready to be baptized for the remission of sins. Jesus called attention to the fact that there was a baptism from heaven and another of men (Mark 11: 30). The baptism from heaven is immersion for the remission of sins, when administered in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, by a man called of God and ordained and sent as an ambassador with the right to use the name. And no man can take that honor unto himself (Hebrews 5: 4). There is a good lesson in the Old Testament (2 Kings 5: 1-16) where Naaman, the leper, a captain of the host of the king of Syria, hearing there was a man of God in Samaria who could recover him from his leprosy, took with him wealth to pay, and finally came and stood at the door of the house of the man of God. Elisha sent word to him to go and wash in Jordan seven times and his flesh would come again to him, and he should be clean. When he had dipped seven times in Jordan according to the sayings of the man of God, he was clean. And Naaman returned to pay the man of God, but Elisha said, "As the Lord liveth, before whom I stand, I will receive none," and he urged him to take it, but he refused. Now the lesson is this, you must find a man of God, (and he will not be a hireling) who can cause you to be cleansed from sins by the baptism from heaven. How may one know the baptism which is of men only? Notice the ministers referred to by Paul in 2 Timothy 4: 3, 4. They will teach that baptism is nonessential, or that the Holy Ghost is not given in these days by the laying on of hands; they will not teach truth, for they will be "turned unto fables."

And in Acts 19: 1-6 we have a sample of the baptism that was of men only, though they were baptized by immersion for the remission of sins, which was promised in John's baptism; but Paul knew there was something wrong when he discovered that they had not received nor even heard of the Holy Ghost since they believed. (Read Acts 2: 38, 39.) So, a man of God with authority to remit sins (John 20: 23), baptized them again by immersion for the remission of sins, "and when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them."

Thus we learn that a legal, binding baptism of heaven is not merely that one immersed in water for the remission of sins; it must be administered by a man of God having divinely given authority, that there may be bound in heaven what he binds upon earth. (Matthew 16: 19; 18: 18; John 20: 23.)

Never permit yourselves to be so fettered by the selfishness of sectarianism, or the bigotry of the so-called orthodoxy, or the indifference of infidelity as to blind your eyes to the truth. Learn facts, obtain accurate information, no matter from whence it comes or how many preconceived ideas it may overturn. The doctrine of Christ is for the overturning of error. And remember that a blind faith enslaves the intellect. A wise man will be governed by evidence and reason.

Some of the prerequisites of baptism, then, are a knowledge of the requirements as set forth in the doctrine of Jesus Christ; faith in him as the faithful mediator; acceptance of the terms set forth in the covenant (doctrine) that he gave to the world; and true repentance. Then, let the candidate find one of God's ambassadors, a man of God, who has the authority to baptize in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, and thus he will have found the straight gate.

May God bless all honest seekers and lead them to the light, to the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, our Lord, Amen.

REGENERATION.

SERMON OF JOHN W. RUSHTON, DELIVERED AT INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, NOVEMBER 25, 1910, AT THE SOUTH SIDE BRANCH.

(Reported by Mrs. A. Morgan.)

I will read our lesson to-night from the 8th chapter of the letter of Paul to the Romans, reading to the thirtieth verse:

There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh: That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit, the things of the Spirit. For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. Because the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. So then they that are in the flesh can not please God. But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness. But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you. Therefore brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh. For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God: and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together. For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope; because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the firstfruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body.

For we are saved by hope: but hope that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for? But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it. Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which can not be uttered. And he that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God. And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren. Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called: and whom he called, them he also justified: and whom he justified, them he also glorified.

The first three verses of the 6th chapter of the Hebrew letter read:

Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment. And this will we do, if God permit.

To-night we bring to a close the series of subjects that we have been privileged to speak to you upon, and I do not know that there is anything at once so interesting and so strikingly significant as a study of the workings of the Holy Spirit. The way in which the apostle speaks of the operation of the Spirit in this 8th chapter of the letter to the Romans conveys almost all that we can say about it, experimentally, and shows at once and in what particular way the proper connection between ourselves and the higher powers not only can be made, but in what particular way the blessing and reality of such a connection may issue and be demonstrated. There can be no denial of the fact that the experiences of all men and women who may have passed through the spiritual crisis of what is known as conversion are very similar, and that experience is summed up in the language of the Apostle Paul in the closing verse of the 7th chapter of the letter he writes to the Romans, in which he speaks almost in the language of despair and abject pessimism. May I ask you to notice it just a moment?

For we know that the law is spiritual, but I am carnal, sold under sin. For that which I do, I allow not: for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I. If then I do that which I would not, I consent unto the law that it is good. Now then it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh,) dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not. For the good that I would, I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do. . . . O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?

Now I am quite sure that is the experience of all of us who have ability enough by the process of introspection to really analyze our own feelings. We should certainly find a very reprobate kind of a character in those who will do wrong and persist in wrongdoing because they like to do wrong. I venture to say that among all the cases of drunkenness, of which unfortunately we have so many examples, there are, comparatively speaking, few if any cases where men and women will give way to the attempt to gratify their abnormal desire for drink out of the sheer pleasure that they extract from so doing, and I know that in many cases pledges have been taken and men and women made to refrain from the use of intoxicating liquor under the very best of intentions, and later, to the humiliation of the pledgetaker, the pledge has been violated and they have reverted to their old habits. Now this is one of the greatest problems that all moral reformers have confronting them, and it is precisely at this point where the matchless power of the Christian philosophy demonstrates itself.

Probably some of you may remember that in the writing of the 15th chapter of the gospel recorded by Saint Luke (though the other evening, in dealing with the question of repentance, I read but the latter portion of it) the story of the prodigal son occurs. The story of the prodigal son was the outgrowth of an experience that our Lord had with some of the scribes and Pharisees, and it may probably help us to comprehend the real meaning of the story of the prodigal son, if you will consider the little history that is attached to the origin of that particular story. On this occasion our Lord Jesus Christ had been invited to a feast with others of the better class of society, and they had felt indignant that our Lord should have shown himself so freely and become so popular with the outcast society of the city; so they refused the invitation and said that this man received sinners. No doubt they were acting upon the traditional advice of their own parents, and as we have it given in our own times, "A man is known by the kind of company he keeps, and if you will persist in associating with bad company, the chances are that sooner or later you will become affected by the bad until you will leave all good influences and give yourselves up to evil."

Unfortunately that is true, so far as human experience is concerned. We have seen it so frequently that we are quite justified in advising our children to take care in selecting their companions. Even the Apostle Paul, in speaking to the Corinthian brethren on one occasion, advises them—"evil communications corrupt good manners." And yet, here we have in Jesus Christ the deliberate seeking at all times of the very people against whom all our experience and history warn us. I say at this particular point, that this is the singular power of the Christian philosophy.

The philosophy of our human experience is not only the result of human experience, but it is also corroborated by the world, demonstrated by all our scientific investigation, and has been made the bed-rock of the Darwinian theory, the law of the survival of the fittest. Now we know that these things are taking place on all hands, and in almost every phase of our life. There is no question about it, there is a law according to which men and women are governed that insists upon the unfit being swept out of existence remorselessly, and only the fit can possibly survive in the midst of these competitive and warring influences. These things are on every hand. We see it in commerce; we see it in politics, and we see it in all our various moral environments. Only the fit can survive, and the unfit go to the wall. It is the consciousness of this grim and inflexible law of nature that has developed the necessity of all our protective and benevolent agencies, and even in the course of the enactment of this law to which I referred, these benevolent institutions themselves have succumbed to such influences and are made to do service to those whom we may classify as being dangerously rich, as against the interests of those who are dangerously poor. Now, if there is a circle or phase of society in which this law of the survival of the fittest is operating more than any other, it is in the moral phase of life. Men and women on all hands are guilty of the perpetration of evil, and it is singularly difficult for us to combat the growing influx of the tide of evil which is absorbing more and more of our attention, and claiming more and more of our money to counteract and to protect the virtues against the encroachments of those who are criminally disposed. Now these are facts, as we have to meet them and face them, and it seems to me it is no use at all to conjure up some idealistic state of society, and then expect you to be satisfied with my philosophy because I present to you but the frame work of a dream or vision.

These things which at the present constitute the source of evil are internal and not external. You have to deal with the man and not with his environment, and the whole cause of the difficulty of our various moral problems is in the very experience narrated by the Apostle Paul himself, who, when he would do good, found evil was present with him, the very thing that he would not do was the very thing that he must do.

I remember, how early in my ministerial career at home, I used to very frequently meet an old gentleman who had been born of good family, educated more than in the ordinary way, was a successful man at his business, and could talk intelligently upon almost any topic that might be suggested. In business I had much to do with him, and found pleasure and profit in conversing with him on other matters apart from business. I noticed on one occasion that there was quite a long time before he came in to see me, and when he did there was a change in the man's attitude in every way. He was different in appearance and in conversation, and it seemed to me as if he were anxious to get away. Well, I urged him to talk, and finally he told me he was utterly ashamed of himself. He said, "I signed the pledge sixteen years ago and kept it faithfully until a few weeks ago, when a temptation came in my way and I was utterly powerless to resist it. I thought I had overcome the craving for drink, but it has overcome me, and I feel absolutely powerless to combat its influence."

A very good man in Bradford, Yorkshire, who has been in the temperance movement, told me he had been dealing every hour of his life with the temperance question and listening to the experiences of these men. He had devoted sixteen years of his life absolutely to this work. He said, "I have found, as a result of my experience in this work, that the most distressing side of it is the reversion to the old temptations. And what is still more tragic, is the fact that the women are the worst of all, in regard to drink. Out of all the pledges that have been made by women in my sixteen years' experience, there's not one solitary case that I can point to where a woman has been redeemed from the influence of drink."

Now these are the facts as they confront us, and you may take the police records and you will find the same corroborated. It is not the injustice of the police; it is not the callousness of our courts that insists upon cataloguing men and women who have a criminal career. They know by the virtue of human nature, revealing itself century after century, that once the step of evil has been taken, the chances are that evil will be persisted in, and the question is, Who shall deliver us?

Now there is the point precisely. Christianity must vindicate its claim at this particular point, or must, like all our philosophies, end in failure and disappointment. The Apostle Paul presents to us for our examination and investigation the operation of the Spirit in this particular connection, and mark you, it is based upon his own experience, individually, in addition to the remarkable attitude of Jesus Christ.

It is true that in the law of the survival of the fittest these individuals are swept out of the way. Those who have gone into the statistics of the intemperance question, will tell you that men and women who abandon themselves to drink have simply signed the death warrant of their posterity, in that the posterity of a drunkard can not possibly go beyond the fourth generation. There is a statement worth considering. It is quite true that those who indulge in evil in the very nature of things are making it impossible to project their personal influence, so far as personality is concerned, into the future. The law of the survival of the fittest demands that they shall be swept out of the way, and swept out of the way they are, sooner or later.

Then what are we to do with the problem? The number of victims is rapidly multiplying with the increase of evil on all hands and in every phase. Why is it that the Christianity of Jesus holds out hope for the hopeless and strength to the weak, and will rescue despairing and battered and shattered humanity and enthuse it with a new power and influence that shall make them better and holier, If you will consider the nature of the problem seriously, then you will also consider the propositions we have tried to put before you during the past week, and will at once see that so far as we have gone we have left—hear this—we have left the fertilizing of cleansed humanity to the power of the Holy Spirit. Our first principle ends in the establishment of proper connection between the individual and the higher power. The cultivation of faith in God demanded that I should absolutely believe in all the supernal qualities of God, and if faithful to what I know is right, will issue in repentance in which there would be after-concern for my peace, and I will rearrange my future so that I shall, at least in intent, be identical with the mind and will of God.

In my baptism I am cleansed from my past, and redeemed from its consequences, but there still is the possibility of "reversion to type," to borrow the scientific language of Darwin once more. Now it is in order, therefore, that we may consider this question of fertilization, that I call your attention once more to the statement made by the Apostle Paul in the 8th chapter of his letter to the Romans. In like manner, I beg of you to read this 8th chapter carefully at home; study it prayerfully. I could dwell upon it with great pleasure to myself, and with profit, but it would consume more time than I have. I therefore come to the 26th verse: "Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for ye know not what we should pray for as we ought; but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which can not be uttered."

Now can you see the pledge and promise that is made in the gospel? No matter what may be the particular infirmity under which the individual suffers, the gift of the Holy Spirit is with that individual soul that it may become fertilized with divine power, so that in the course of events, there will be evolved those characteristics that shall fit the individual for companionship with that society of whom Jesus is called the "Firstborn among many brethren." "Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities." May I call your attention, incidentally, to the way in which the Spirit was to help their infirmities? It was to give them the moral manifestations of spiritual power, and has it not occurred to you, my friends, in reading your New Testament history, how the very people against whom the law of nature has been arrayed with such tragical forces and remorseless fatality are the very people whom Jesus Christ has always associated with? Mary Magdalene, the outcast, was the woman whom we are told traditionally was first met by our Lord as he came down from the mountain summit after he had spent a season in prayer. We are told he had gone up to the Feast of Tabernacles, a Jewish feast, full of holy symbolism, but in their besotted condition they had transformed this holy symbolism into a debauch, and Jesus Christ, embittered in his soul, left the mob and went up into the mountain, and stayed there all night in prayer. He came down from the mountain early in the morning, and the first sight that met the gaze of our Lord was this little circle of professional religionists, and in their midst was a woman who had been guilty of unnameable sin, the punishment for which was stoning to death. Consider these professional religionists encircling this spectacle of shame, in derision, in contempt and condemnation, considering the best ways and means of getting rid of her. The law of the survival of the fittest in the hands of religionists! Here comes our Lord, the unorthodox, the unconventional religious man, and they ask him, after relating to him fully all her crimes, what they should do with her. But our Lord remains silent. They insist and he says, "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her."

Well, I am glad for the old men's sake, that they started moving out first, and then they all went. Jesus was alone with the woman. Do you notice the difference? He said, Woman, where are thine accusers? Does any man condemn thee? Neither do I condemn thee. Go thy way and sin no more. It was effective. The people who were thrown out because they were unfit, he took hold of and charged with a spiritual force that helped their infirmities, and Mary Magdalene became the forerunner of the resurrected Lord. Take the case of Peter, another witness of the very thing I am trying to present to you. Peter's chief characteristic was impetuosity. He was always ready to shoulder his own and everybody else's affairs,—always to the front, impetuous,—and if you read the account of Peter's life you will see that he always "got his foot in it" because he would be the first.

Self-assertiveness should give place to self-effacement, and there is one of the greatest miracles of the Spirit, I think, that I know anything at all about, when the influence of the Holy Ghost will so operate upon the hearts and souls of men that instead of living for themselves and pushing themselves to the fore at all hazards, they will get behind and put the Lord in the front.

But there was another way in which the Spirit of the Lord cured infirmities; and in which it helped infirmities of this kind. Those who were afflicted in body, under the operation and influence of the Holy Spirit were restored to health and strength. Men and women who were blind and deaf were healed of their infirmities. Now, my friends, I want to ask you, in a general way, are not these the very afflictions under which we are suffering to-day? Have we not those men and women who display themselves, and make everyone miserable because they will assert themselves? They lack the power of self-restraint and self-control. If there ever was a time when we needed the Spirit of God to help our infirmities, the time is now; and what is more to the point, with all our advanced thought and boasted scientific research, we have never discovered any savior, any power that begins to compare with the power that Christ had at his disposal to remedy the evil. The evil has increased, and we have no power outside of this power that can help our infirmities.

Now that power was at the disposal of the church, and let me repeat it once more, it is the power of God by which the cleansed disciple must be fertilized to the point where one may expect the evolution of divine character. So it is this fertilization to which I call your attention to-night, and ask you to notice it? This brings us, therefore, to the method by and through which this fertilization was conferred or conveyed? To make my remarks as brief as possible, without doing injury to my topic, let me direct your attention to the 1st chapter of the Book of Revelation, where is recorded a singular experience. John was taken by the Spirit on the Lord's day and "heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet. . . . And I turned to see from whence the voice came that spake to me; and being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks; and in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle. His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire. . . . And he laid his right hand upon me saying unto me, Fear not!"

You read your New Testament over and find where the laying on of hands is spoken about, and in every case that is the purpose of it. Christ laid on hands for the healing of the sick. Christ laid on hands for the blessing of children. Hands were laid upon men and women for the confirmation of the gift of the Holy Spirit. Hands were laid upon men for ordination to the ministry. These are items in your New Testament history, and when the writer to the Hebrews sums up the doctrine of Jesus Christ, he includes all of these about which we have been speaking this week—repentance from dead works, faith toward God, baptism, and the laying on of hands.

Did it ever occur to you what other purpose the laying on of hands was intended to serve? What does the laying on of hands symbolize? My friends, let me ask you now to refer to your own experience. Why did father lay his hand upon us at home? Why does an old man sometimes take the privilege of his years and lay his hand upon the shoulders of the youth? Hands are laid upon us to control us. Hands are laid upon us to restrain us and to encourage us, whether it be through the gift of the Holy Spirit in confirmation of blessing, ordination, or confirmation of the Holy Spirit. You have a manifestation all through one or more or all of these moral qualities through control or restraint or encouragement, and these are the very qualities that we need to help our infirmities, therefore in the whole course of God's dealings with men, the laying on of hands has everlastingly been the symbol of the confirmation of these moral qualities.

You may take the first instance where we read of the laying on of hands; early in the Book of Genesis, and there it becomes the symbol of blessing. You may take the manifestation of the same power symbolized in the utterances of the Prophet Habakkuk. He saw a vision of God, or the vision of his hand. Out of the hand of God issues strength, inexhaustible strength,—no burden too heavy, no problem too complex, so that if we can get the laying on of hands of divine power we have the force that resists the natural law demanding the sacrifice of the victim. You have the hand stretched out to save, in which those who are the victims of environment, the down-trodden and the oppressed, are gathered up and fertilized with a new power that shall send them forth, an army of trophies of the saving grace of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

That is what we have to say of the Latter Day Saints. There is much more to be said. Abundance of scripture can be multiplied to prove that the law and ordinance are symbolical of the power and purpose of the church of Jesus Christ. But I will be satisfied if I can leave you with this thought impressed upon your minds; if, after all the processes of which we have spoken to you, you can remember that your faith, leading to repentance and abandonment of sin, shall issue in the burial of your old man of sin, and being attested by the laying on of God's right hand of power shall become fertilized with that divine unction that will make it spiritually possible for you to say, "I live, but not I, but Christ who liveth in me."

There has been started in the East a "League for the Improvement of the Children's Comic Supplement." This is badly needed, even in the West. The Outlook, after an examination of fifty comic supplements from all over the country, remarks on the extraordinary lack of invention and bad drawing, bad coloring, and demoralizing suggestion found in them. The League recognizes two kinds, the good and the bad supplement. They are trying to aid the good and discourage the bad. All our readers can do the same thing by subscribing for and encouraging only the good ones.

GENESIS AND GEOLOGY.

(Read the whole first chapter of Genesis, and the first three verses of chapter two.)

Its hoary ancientness, the sublimity and importance of its subject-matter, its remarkable condensation, its audacious and astounding forecasts of modern science, its immeasurable influence upon human thought for ages, and its startling revelation to ancient and medieval peoples of the glory of God and the dignity of man, indisputably mark the first chapter of Genesis as the most wonderful passage in all human literature. Even as fiction it would stand supreme.

Without attempting to discuss whether all the statements of the Bible are correct according to modern science, we wish to open for the first time to some of our non-professional readers the amazing geologic order of the Genesis account of the creation of the world and man, because it will help them later better to understand the relation of scientific socialism to the Bible. If Genesis, our oldest sacred book, is hopelessly silly and incorrect in its opening chapter which deals definitely and extensively with matters most interesting to scientists, there is small hope of finding correct statements of economic and social laws further on; but if the first chapter of Genesis, considering the age in which it was written, is even approximately correct concerning the evolution of the world and man, the later portions of the book will receive more serious attention from those who covet a sure foundation for their beliefs.

THE "DAYS" OF CREATION.

There has been a considerable amount of fun poked at the author of Genesis and at those who believe the book by those who have not put themselves to the trouble of thoroughly investigating the matter. The "unbelievers" are quite as apt to receive their opinions from the mere dogmatic, unsupported statements of their leaders as are the "believers." Before one grows over enthusiastic for or against a thing and too solidly fixed in his opinion, he should carefully and fairly explore the subject for himself, with all the light he can obtain from both sides.

The idea that God created the world in "six days" has been especially ridiculed—on the fixed but self-evidently false supposition that the "days" referred to were measured by a sundial or by "grandfather's clock."

Whereas the Genesis account clearly states that the sun, moon and stars were "made" to be lights of the world to govern the day, etc., during the fourth creative epoch or "day"; therefore the first, second and third "days" could not have been, and therefore the other "days" presumably were not measured by revolutions of the earth on its axis in the light of the sun. The sun was shining and the earth was revolving during the latter part of the first and throughout the second and third day, but the "days" were not measured by the earth's revolution.

How long were those days? The Bible does not say and the scientists can only guess. The first five "days" were probably many millions of years long in the aggregate.

What were those "days" and "nights"? The author distinctly says: "And God called the light day and the darkness he called night." Therefore according to the Genesis story itself, the "days" of creation could not have been mere 24-hour days, but were periods of light and darkness concerning whose actual length no hint is given. Had they been mere sundial days, the introduction of the sun could not have been delayed until the fourth "day."

THE FIRST DAY.—A UNIVERSE ABLAZE.

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth."—Genesis 1: 1.

Mark you here that our author states that both the "heaven" (including sun, moon and stars) and the earth were "created" on the first "day." Space forbids our presenting the various interesting "scientific speculations" as to the manner in which the great universe came into being, got into motion, and evolved into systems and worlds. Every student worthy of the name should carefully read several of the chief, most recent and authentic works on astronomy. It is a most fascinating, soul-stretching, mind-expanding study, without which no one can have a fair idea of the world we live in. By this means alone one may obtain a glimpse of the real greatness of God and the real splendor of his universal home.

"And God said, Let there be light: and there was light."—Genesis 1: 3.

If God did not inspire these brilliant, terse, starting, meaning-packed words, they are nevertheless worthy of being called divine.

More literally, the words are translated, "Light, exist!"—"and there was light."

The ancient peoples could not have understood the beautiful, stupendous, dramatic force of these words as we do. They anticipate the age of electricity. The ancients saw the gradual coming of the dawn or the murky light of smoking torches, whereas only he who has stood in a vast, dark room and beheld it instantly, dazzlingly illuminated by the turning of an electric button, can worthily appreciate the language of the text which suggests that out of the limitless night of a past eternity God suddenly flashed glorious light upon all worlds at once throughout the unmeasured universe. And it was "day."

The "creation" of the universe and light completed the work of the first "day," which began with the night, "evening."

The birth of any world, according to whichever nebular hypothesis one prefers, begins in darkness and tumult and ends in light and comparative rest. According to astronomy and geology the first period of our world's existence was as a ball of fiery gas, vast, hot, brilliant, beautiful.

"And the evening and the morning were the first day."—Genesis 1: 5.

THE SECOND DAY.—HOW GOD FIGHTS FIRE.

"And God said, Let there be a firmament (expansion) in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters. And God made the firmament (expansion), and divided the waters which were under the firmament (expansion) from the waters which were above the firmament (expansion): and it was so. And God called the firmament (expansion) Heaven."—Genesis 1: 6-8.

Please note that after telling of the "creation" of the universe and light, our author leaves his universal viewpoint and speaks from the viewpoint of the world, as if he had now come from a swift-winged survey of the entire cosmos to hover over our little world for the purpose of especially noting the further formation of the home preparing for man.

At the end of the first day we found a universe ablaze and our earth a ball of fire. The work of the second "day" or geologic period was to cool the world so that water might rest upon it, and later, land might be formed of now fiery, gaseous elements. The water was originally an element of the fire-mist, or of the sun ring which broke to form our world; but as the heat increased by contraction the watery elements were carried by radiation to the outer circumference of the fiery mass in the form of steam, where, condensed by the outer cold, they were precipitated in showers upon the heated gas, in which they were changed to steam and sent outward and upward again, only to be cooled and hurled back upon the fiery world. So the gigantic warfare of water against fire went on for ages, until at last the world became a mass of molten matter around which rolled a tide-wave of stormy fire extending from pole to pole; and still the water charged in steady victory until upon the fiery sea appeared floating islands of iron-like substance, which finally sunk to make the ocean bed between the fiery world beneath and the shoreless sea above.

Water having won a permanent resting place upon the earth and the clouds still pouring down their floods, at last the atmosphere was rare and dry enough to have permitted one had he been here then to see the "expansion" between the waters on the earth and the waters in the clouds.

Ingersoll loved to laugh at the author of Genesis who, he said, thought the sky was a solid vessel holding the rain whose bottom was studded with stars! But the ancient Hebrew word so foolishly translated "firmament" by the "scholars" of King James' time is known by all modern scholars to mean expansion, as the marginal reading in your Bible gives it, which Ingersoll well knew. And every geologist knows that the work of the second period of world-development was the precipitation of the moisture from the sky upon the world and the formation of an "expansion" in earth's atmosphere between the waters in the floating clouds above and the waters in the rolling waves below.

"And the evening and the morning were the second day."

THE THIRD DAY.—FARMING WITHOUT HANDS.

"And God said, Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together into one place, and let the dry land appear: and it was so. . . . And God said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit tree yielding fruit after his kind, whose seed is in itself, upon the earth; and it was so."—Genesis 1: 9-11.

Land and life! And this is the exact geologic record of the third period of world development.

First a mass of fiery gas, then a world of molten rock whose lurid seas swept unhindered over all, then a world with heart of fire and flesh of rock and skin of water as old ocean, shoreless and rampant with terrific storms, reigned supreme all over the surface. Supreme, but not undisputed; for volcanoes more awful than were ever beheld by human eye burst upward from the ocean's bosom everywhere spouting fire and water at the angry clouds and filling the sky with steam; until finally the strong laid ocean bed shuddered and crumpled beneath the weight of waters forcing by its sinking, wrinkling pressure the bottom of the sea elsewhere to mount skyward, and, like some gigantic prehistoric, mythic, monstrous beast, a continent arose, spitting fire, breathing smoke, and shaking streams of water from its trembling sides. And thus, by earthquake, volcanic action, God lifted the land from beneath the waters and rolled the seas back to their proper bounds.

And as soon as land was raised up life appeared. Land and life! What a tempting theme for the Socialist or Single Taxer!

In the soft marshes and the shallow waters near the shores of the warm paleozoic sea the first marvelous forms of life appeared millions of years ago. They spread into the deep, they crept over the land, and grew and thrived and brought forth fruit and seed, "each after its own kind."

"And the evening and the morning were the third day."

THE FOURTH DAY.—THE CURTAIN REMOVED.

"And God said, Let there be lights in the firmament (expansion) of the heaven to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and for years. . . And God made two great lights; the greater to rule the day, and the lesser to rule the night: He made the stars also."—Genesis 1: 14-16.

It is easy for an ignorant person who has not closely studied this account, or for an unscrupulous person who wishes to deceive the ignorant for his own purposes, to make sport of the above amazing verses. One can almost hear and see even yet the ruddy, jovial face of Colonel Ingersoll as, his corpulent body shaking with the appearance of suppressed merriment, he drolly repeated—"and he made the stars also!" as if the author of Genesis thought the stars were so small and insignificant that God just threw them in as a trifling afterthought when he had finished the earth, the sun and the moon!

But why not read the first verse of the chapter over again where it says distinctly that "In the beginning God 'created' the heaven and the earth." This self-evidently includes "the stars also."

The word in the first verse is the Hebrew bara—to create; while the word in the sixteenth verse is asah, to do, to make, to appoint, to command. God "created" the sun, moon and stars (as "the heaven") in the beginning when he created the world; whereas on the "fourth day" he appointed, commanded, or "made" them to be lights for our world.

Remember that we called your attention in the earlier part of this article to the fact that the author of Genesis, after having told of the creation of the heaven and earth, withdrew from the universal viewpoint and gave the remainder of the account from the viewpoint of our own world; and this change of viewpoint was natural and inevitable since our author intended thereafter to confine his account to the development of this world alone. Therefore, whereas speaking in the first verse from the universal viewpoint he said, "In the beginning God created the heaven (including sun, moon and stars) and the earth," later, speaking from the viewpoint of the earth only he said, "God made" the sun, moon and stars to be lights of the world. And, mark you, in the first verse he said "create," whereas in the sixteenth verse he said "made"; and the difference between these words is even greater than the ignorance or spleen of those who try to ridicule the passage. In the first place God "created" the heavenly bodies; in the second place he commanded or appointed or "made" them to be the lights of the world.

In the third verse we are told that he made "light"; in the sixteenth verse we are told that he made "lights," like tapers to illuminate the world-house.

The introduction of the sun, moon and stars, as lights of the world, during the fourth "day" proves two striking things: first, that by the "days" of the Genesis account of creation can not be meant brief diurnal periods, as supposed by medieval people; second, that our author knew a startling and significant fact of world history thousands of years ago which was but recently revealed to modern scholars by geology, viz, that after the fiery birth of the world it was shrouded in darkness for untold ages, shut from the direct light of the sun, moon and stars, by a mass of clouds so thick, so black, so awful, that had there been an intelligent creature on the earth he would never have known by the dim, gloomy, starless light which filtered through the heavy, unbroken clouds that there was a sun, a moon, or any stars. This "cloud blanket" as some scientists have called it, wrapped the world around for ages, keeping away the outer cold and keeping in the heat, so that the earth at that period was a veritable hot-house, within whose moist, warm shelter, stupendous forests of plants grew which fell to form the immense "coal measures" of the carboniferous age upon the continents of that period; and it was not until the water (which constitutes the larger part of our modern ocean, but which was then yet in the clouds) was precipitated upon the earth (and found a secure resting place, enlarging the ocean, thus causing the clouds to become so thin that they burst apart letting the sunlight through to cheer and dry the gloomy, sweltering earth) that the sun, moon and stars became visible to the denizens of this world. Thus God drew back the great cloud curtain and "made" the sun, moon and stars to be the "lights" of the evolving earth. This is thoroughly scientific.

Thus we see that the very "day" concerning whose amazing work the skeptics have most ridiculed the Bible teaching is the "day" that throws light upon the key which unlocks the long baffling mystery of the creative periods called "days" in Genesis and in the most startling and convincing manner demonstrates that the author of the first chapter of Genesis, by some means unknown to us, had knowledge of the general geological evolution of the world.

"And the evening and the morning were the fourth day."

THE FIFTH DAY.—LIFE FINDS WINGS.

"And God said, Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving (creeping) creature that hath life, and (marginal reading) let fowl fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven."—Genesis 1: 20.

(The fowl flying in "the open firmament of heaven" proves it to be a foul interpretation to insist that the author meant the solid bottom of a giant kettle and shows clearly that he meant "expansion.")

How did this ancient writer know that fish, reptiles and birds belong to the same geologic period? The fins of the fish are the wings by which it flies in water; the bird's wings are the fins by which it swims in air; the scales of the fish became feathers on the bird; the reptile (creeping) is the connecting family tie, and the very blood corpuscles of all three prove that they are of one family.

(The word whale in the King James Version (Genesis 1:21) is incorrect. The Hebrew is tanniyin, from tan, and means an elongated sea monster. The "whale" known to moderns is neither a fish nor a reptile, but a degenerated mammal that has deserted the land for the water.)

The age of fishes, reptiles and birds preceded the age of mammals and man, according to science, and the author of Genesis is yet safe within the authority both of modern geology and biology.

"And the evening and the morning were the fifth day."

THE SIXTH DAY.—THE HERO-PRINCE APPEARS.

"And God said, Let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind, cattle, and creeping thing, and beast of the earth after his kind: and it was so. . . . And God said, Let us make man in our own image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion."—Read Genesis 1:24-31.

Our Genesis author, to the great disappointment of his carping critics, safely passed by another fine chance to make a mistake as great as Colonel Ingersoll's mistakes about Moses. Surely, you benighted son of a vanished, ignorant age, you will not mar the dignity of your hero-prince, your offspring of God, by causing the beasts of the field and forest (mammals) to be made on the same "day" with Man! But, yes, even so; for science proves that while God was making mammals he was also making man. The "beasts" preceded him, as our author says; but man belongs to the same geologic period. The ancient rocks bear eloquent and all-sufficient witness of the fact; and the very organs of their bodies show their kinship.

And Elohim, the plural form of the ancient word God, created Man (both male and female) in his own image—to have "dominion." He first "made" man like any mammal, then he "created" man as a child of God bearing his Father's image.

The image of God consists not in shape, God has not "parts nor passions" as a man. The likeness lies in self-conscious personality—the power to know oneself, to think, to feel, to will.

Note that the scripture does not say whether God made the animals and man instantaneously or by the long process of evolution; but the general scientific order, the distinct work of the "day" periods and the correct grouping of the fish, birds and reptiles in one day and the "beasts" and man together in another, is very suggestive.

The question concerning how the author of Genesis learned the amazing facts as to the geologic order of the evolution of the world and life is very interesting. There are two theories: first, that God revealed these things to him in a series of stupendous, magnificent visions; second, that he obtained a knowledge of geology from the ancient Egyptians. It requires no telescope, microscope, or crucible to learn the main principles of geology as to world-making, for the evidence lies upon the surface of the hills among the broken rock strata over which men often walk and sometimes think. Perhaps ancient scholars had observed the main facts and thought them out.

"And the evening and the morning were the sixth day."

THE SEVENTH DAY.—THE DAY OF PROMISE.

"Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the host of them. And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it."—Genesis 2:1-3.

The first chapter of Genesis, which is an Elohist scriptural (from Elohiym, the Supreme God), properly ends with the third verse of the second chapter. The remainder of the second chapter is a Jehovistic writing (from Yehovah, the Self-Existent, or Eternal. I am.) The dear, industrious old monk who a few hundred years ago took the vast pains to divide the Bible into chapters and verses for ready reference, performed a great service to the world, though he made many mistakes by separating what should belong to the same chapters. Mistakes which can not well be corrected now, for the literature of the world is full of references based on his long and arduous labor of love.

When we start to read about the seventh "day," we are startled by a strange and significant omission, and we are prone to cry excitedly, "Watchman, what of the night?"

There is no "night" recorded after the sixth "day." All the other days begin with the "evening," they begin with darkness and end with light. "The evening and the morning were the sixth day," but where is the "night" that should fall between the sixth and seventh "days"?

The night ending the sixth day and preceding the seventh day has not yet come.

We are living in the sixth day yet.

God is not yet done making either mammals or man.

Man has not yet "subdued the earth," nor improved the animals as he must, nor himself reached the full stature of the Son of God in whose image he is being both "created" and "made."

The day of rest is not yet. "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," said Jesus. "We are laborers together with God," declared Paul. And all Socialists know that we must subdue the earth for man's own common welfare before the race can rise far above the brute and become godlike; while the Christians know that we must subdue mammon, greed, competition, and fully establish the brotherhood kingdom of God on earth before our preliminary work is fairly done or we can ever be real, royal sons of God.

The Hebrew verb is of uncertain tense. The past form is very often used for the future, as in the familiar passage, "He was bruised for our iniquities," etc., in Isaiah, 53.

This wonderful fragment of a great Elohist scripture (Genesis 1:1-31 to Genesis 2:1-3), is a sort of general introduction to and forecast of the whole cycle of the universe and man. Like a mighty rainbow it rests one side of the arch amidst the blinding splendors of creation, spans the whole history of life on earth, and plants its other side upon the dazzling, irresistible glories of a blest eternal future. When we complete the course marked out by its shining arch we shall find the Sabbath Day of endless victory and rest.

I must leave you to ponder the problem of what black, terrible "night" of social woe or world-cataclysm lies between our great "sixth" working, suffering, growing, conquering "day" and the "seventh day" of rest; for neither God nor man can rest while we live in brutal battle for the means of life.—Rev. Edward Ellis Carr, in The Christian Socialist, January 12, 1911.

FATHERS.

In all God's works none shows greater wisdom, holds greater possibilities, or has more eternal duration than man. As his noblest work he could not have created him other than in his own image. He had no higher conception for his crowning work. God was made father by his creation of man, and creating this earth was an expression of his fatherly provision for the children for whom he was responsible. God has a purpose in all his works, far-reaching and enduring. In creating man he gave of his own power, that of reproduction, and thus made it possible for man to come very near to him.

Was there not a deeper meaning than companionship when God said "It is not good for man to be alone"? Was not woman, as the complement of man, created to make it possible for him to carry out his purposes? If two, in entering the marriage relation, recognize it as an ordinance of God to secure to each the highest degree of happiness and usefulness, they will realize the importance of the work in preparing their home, and each, in a faithful discharge of duty, will make it all that it should be.

As the husband thinks of his home as a haven of rest, so his wife is waiting in anticipation of his coming, and as much of her strength is going to the development of another, she is renewed by the kind sympathy she finds in him. Did you ever feel, husband, father, that in the kind giving of your strong love you come nearer your heavenly Father; helping to bear every burden, you bring sunshine into the heart of your wife, enabling her to see beauty in that which, under other conditions, would be a trial; and that out of the pure love of pure hearts your child comes to you as a bond of your happy union?

The name "parent," now added to that of husband and wife, brings you a step higher, with a twofold need of wisdom.

The subject given us for this paper, in our mind, blends so perfectly with that of mother in the picture of home that we can only see him as the strong outlines, giving strength, reaching up and over, making him the head, the protector, the home band. The mother, though conscious of her part in shaping each one given her, acknowledges God's right to appoint to each its work, patiently, lovingly, attending to the little things that mean so much in the home, the church, and the state.

One vital thought in your work as fathers that may be lost sight of is this: It was by your agency, God's gift to you, that you have taken this name upon yourselves, and it is by the same gift you discharge the duties connected with it; the training rests with you, and you will develop instruments either for or against building up God's work. He is willing to help those who come to him, but will not by force interfere with the rights he has given. How necessary you heed the command to "study to make yourselves approved."

In the great work given you, the more clearly you comprehend God's fatherhood to man, the better you will understand your relation to your child. How better can we judge of God's divine love for us than in that which he has made it possible for us to do in his name? Consider your boy, from his earliest boyhood, as a responsible being. Let him know that within him lies the spirit of a man; and as you desire to stimulate good in him, make your instructions not an echo, but in the mission of perfect sympathy, make him feel that he holds great possibilities for good, and not weaken his spirit by an admission of inferiority. If you realize that God has a special work for each to do, you will not feel that it is left to you to make choice for your boy. In little ways there will appear that which will mark the Lord's preference, and it is only left for you, in harmony with him, to help in the development. "Though a father may only repeat an oft-repeated truth, the hearty words, the from soul to soul sympathy will carry conviction."

Be true to your boy. Give him that which you owe him. You know his needs. Your work is his. Give him a place in your heart. In kindness teach him the lessons of life. Be his good example by your daily walk; by your wise counsel protect him, keep him from the evil consequences of sin, and by the bond of true love bind him to you and home. Teach him that true, pure actions come from a true, pure heart, God's point of judgment.

With God's written word and his book of nature together, you can find profitable study with your boy. The love for man as expressed in one, God's works for the good of man as seen in the other, will open to his young mind the harmony there is in God's plans. Is this not religion?

If your earnest desire is to serve God, do not feel that because you are kept at home you can do nothing for him. There is no higher work, no better way of serving him, than making of your children instruments fit for his service, and when the time comes to call you, not to a higher work, but a broader field, if you have so filled your place that he can say, "Well done," you will not need to study a new theme. His keeping you to that one subject will mark his choice of you for the teaching in the field the lessons you have taught in your home. God is not unmindful of you. He judges from the work you do, not from your prominence before men. His eye was upon Abraham, and he made the great promises he did to him because of his work in his home.

Questions on May Reading.

What constitutes the fatherhood of God? What purpose is manifest in the creation of women as the complement of man? Can marriage be a success unless the two entering it recognize this purpose? In what relationship to God should man's fatherhood place him? In what exercise of love before the birth of his child may the husband and father become more like his heavenly Father? What of the child that comes of the pure love of pure hearts? Why does the name parent bring a twofold need of wisdom? How does the work of the mother blend with that of the father? By whose agency does a man acquire the name "father"? Taking this upon him by his own choice, who then is responsible for the training of his children? How many realize that the results of this training will be instruments either for or against the building up of God's work? What will bring you a better understanding of your relation to your child? In what sense is a boy a responsible being from earliest childhood? How should the man's spirit within him be developed? What is suggested by the expression "making your instructions an echo"? What different attitude is assumed in the mission of perfect sympathy? How may an admission of inferiority result in injury to the child? How may the father help his boy in making choice of the right? How shall the father be true to his boy? Should not the child's work be of equal interest to the father as the father's to the child? What relation with his father will be a great safeguard to the boy? How should the father teach religion to his boy? What can be said of the father's mission in his home?

An Appeal.

Dear Readers of the Home Column: Your editor has been very ill, but is improving so that she has been able to sit up a part of the day, and to see a few of the many friends in attendance at the conference who have been anxiously waiting for this opportunity.

Among those who enjoyed the privilege was the new matron of the Children's Home in company with the writer. It was a happy meeting, and as plans for the conducting of the home were discussed, Sister Frances entered into them with her usual fervor, her face, though showing traces of illness, lighting up with pleasure at the materializing of her hopes for this work.

As they talked together, the desirability of having several cows to start with was mentioned, this being considered the best means of making money off the land belonging to the home to aid in its support. Sister Frances said, "I believe if we should let it be known through the Home Column that cows were needed, we would get them. But," she said to the writer, "if we make an appeal now, you will have to write it." And one could see she looked too frail to undertake doing it herself. But she added, "I don't believe you are as good a beggar as I am"; and the answer was, "I fear not, but I'll do the best I can."

And how better can I do it than to remind you of this one who so faithfully has given of her life and strength in helping us to recognize our opportunities for service, and who has said so bravely in the past, "Yes, I can beg for the Lord's work." Far from her it has always been to ask in her own behalf.

And looking beyond the handmaid to the Master, we see him who said, "Whoso receiveth one such little child in my name receiveth me." The receiving of these homeless children will be a work requiring sacrifice on the part of some, but with the sacrifice will come proportionate blessing. Would you like to share in the sacrifice, and by helping to make it possible to care for these little ones, to share also in the assurance that as you receive them to the care of the church, you also receive Him, the Holy One?

Some, we learn, are waiting for the home to start, who intend then to contribute to its support. Are there not some who can help now to give the work an encouraging start with a sufficient number of cows to provide milk and butter for the home and to yield a profit that will be worth while?

ROME, MISSOURI, April 18, 1911.

Editors Herald: There have been many misleading reports about this part of the State of Missouri. Some have bought land, stayed a short time, got dissatisfied, sold out and gone away to give southern Missouri a hard name. Well, some have given Lamoni a hard name, and some have moved to Independence, Missouri, got dissatisfied, went away and told hard things on Zion. But we can not help that.

So, while some say one thing and some another, I want to say that there are those who are building up for themselves good comfortable homes here. We have fifteen Saints, including wife and I, living at Rome. We have a fine Latter Day Saint Sunday school—the first Sunday school of any kind organized in the neighborhood for twenty-five years. There were from seventy-five to one hundred in attendance last Sunday. We have already ordered nearly six dollars worth of supplies.

We are looking forward to a branch being organized here in the near future. We already have plans drawn for a house of worship after the crops are garnered. Many are interested in our Sunday school and some are almost ready for baptism.

Land is cheap in these parts, compared with other parts of the State. There never was nor never will be a better time to purchase homes and gather into the regions round about. Yes, we have some poor land and some rocky land, too. But you should be a judge of small matters, anyway, and buy only what you want. This year promises to give one of the greatest fruit yields we have had for years. The distance between here and Independence is a very small matter and should not be regarded with fear. May peace attend Zion,

JAMES T. DAVIS.

GLOUCESTER, ENGLAND, March 30, 1911.

Dear Saints: We are a fully organized branch. We have good sound officers who strive to do all they can for the spread of the work, as far as circumstances will permit, to keep the Saints in harmony one with another. We have good meetings, the Lord's blessing following by the comforting influence of the Holy Spirit in the outpouring of the blessings which the Lord has promised. Though we enjoy these blessings, we are not without our trials, which come to us in various ways. But we rejoice in the thought that our heavenly Father has promised to be with, and strengthen those who place their trust in him.

We are hopeful for the spread of the truth in this part and are thankful to say that the Lord has promised, if we strive to be united and stand firm in the work, that we shall have joy in seeing others gathered into the fold.

Let us, one and all, wherever we may be, strive to do our Master's bidding, whether our lot may be in paths of joy or sorrow, and remember the reward is sure.

Your sister in the faith,

BLANCHE GILL.

PERRY, IOWA, April 11, 1911.

Dear Herald: Though few in number, we are doing the best we can to help build up the work, by giving out tracts to all we can and sending them in letters to those at a distance.

We have a good little Sunday school, with Sister Doss as superintendent; a prayer union, with Sister Izenhart as president; a Religio local, with Brother Wiley as president; and a study club, with Sister Martin as president. We have preaching only once in two weeks unless some of the elders come to Perry; then we always put them to work. It is so hard to get the people out to hear. While Brethren Salisbury, Johnson and Roth held meeting here, there were a few who came out to hear them, but not until nearly the last night.

We have very interesting meetings of the study club. Sister Martin is writing up the Book of Mormon in poetry in such a way as to bring out every point in a condensed form. She is now, (with the help of some others) making charts, from Bible pictures to explain the Book of Mormon, for the Religio, which will greatly increase the interest. In this work Sister Martin's art comes in good play. With a few strokes of the brush with water color paints, she removes from the pictures the wings of angels and adds many other little touches that make them more instructive. We have four books under consideration in the study club. Sister Doss has the Voice of Warning to treat, from which she gets many good points not to be noticed by simply reading. Miss Izenhart has the subject of archæology, and I have the Bible, Inspired Version.

Our prayer union is certainly a source of much help and comfort to us all. As we will soon be through the book of the Acts, I have made a chart of the life of Paul for my intermediate class in Sunday school. It is made of Bible pictures and I believe it will make lasting impressions on their young minds.

Any of the elders passing through or near Perry would be made very welcome by the Saints; so don't forget us.

Your sister in the cause of Christ,

MRS. E. WALTERS.

BRINKMAN'S CORNERS, ONTARIO, February 28, 1911.

Editors Herald: We belong to the Stokes Bay Branch, but live about twelve miles away, and do not get to meeting or Sunday school only once in a long while. We miss them, for we have not heard a Latter Day Saint sermon since last spring, when Elder Grant St. John was here and spoke for four nights. He is well thought of. The neighborhood is sparsely settled but he had good attention.

I love this work with all my heart, though I feel my weakness. I care not what they say about me; I shall always be a Latter Day Saint. I know this gospel is the power of God unto salvation. Brother Ribbel is teaching school in this place; this is his third year of teaching. This is also his tenth year as township clerk.

I have been in this church for twelve years, and I could not live without it. I have been tried a good many ways, including much sickness, which was to try my faith. Have been at times healed instantly.

I could not do without the church papers; would rather do without my dinner and have them than to be rich and do without them. I often think if I had the money I would do so much for the church; but I haven't got it and must simply do what I can, and let my light shine, so that the world may see that we have the true gospel.

I will close wishing God's blessing on all his dear children.

Your sister in Christ,

MARGARET RIBBEL.

SOUTH PORTLAND, MAINE, April 12, 1911.

Saints' Herald: Seeing so many nice letters and sermons in your columns makes me feel that I ought to add my testimony once in a while. This is the only way I have of communing with the people of God, as we have no branch here and only one other family of Saints, as far as I know.

I am fully persuaded that I have found the church and kingdom of God, where the signs do follow the believer, and also feel sure that we can live our religion if we so desire, although we may be separated from church privileges. If we love God and keep his commandments, he will give us the Holy Spirit to comfort and guide us through all the changing scenes of life. God and his Son will be our friends—what more could we ask? I speak from experience when I say that we can overcome evil with good.

I noticed a letter from Bro. Thomas G. Whipple in the HERALD of April 5, regarding secret societies, etc. I have often thought about the same as he. A fraternity man or woman has protection so long as he or she is in good standing. What do we of the church have? We have divine protection, it is true; but why not be organized so that if one of our number met with misfortune, the rest of us could help bear the burden. If one member suffered, all the rest would suffer with it, but in such a way that none of us would feel it a burden.

I realize, however, that this is a progressive work and we have to go one step at a time. The end of the journey is not reached at a single bound. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am

News From Missions

Jerusalem, Palestine.

We are delighted with the large amount of reading matter received lately in the way of HERALDS, Ensigns, tracts and hymn books. We offer our friends our sincere thanks for their kindness in thus assisting us. We have sent souvenir cards to all whose addresses we could make out. But some had no addresses on their packages and the only way we know of thanking them is through the church papers.

We now have all the hymn books and papers we need for the present and we will try to make good use of them. Our meetings are ever so much improved since we have a hymn book for each. But the tourist season is on now and all are so busy that few have time to attend. We have preaching service Sunday, Thursday evening, and Saturday.

We have had considerable rain this season. The last week has been fine, and we thought the rainy season was over, but it is raining again to-day. Last week we took a donkey ride of about thirty miles, visiting Nob, Gibeath of Saul, Ramah, the birthplace of Samuel, Bethel and some other places of note which we will try to find time to tell your readers about later.

A brother inquires about the pools in Jerusalem. Yes, there are a number in which baptisms could take place. Among them are, the Pool of Siloam, which measures 19x52 ft.; the Fountain of the Virgin, 11½x5 ft., Mamilla pool, 97x68 yds.; Hezekiah's pool, 80x48 yds., Solomon's pools, just beyond Bethlehem, comprise three large reservoirs between two shelving hillsides, the one draining into the other. The upper pool is 380 ft. long by 233 ft. wide and 25 ft. deep. The middle one is 422 ft. long by 233 ft. wide and 39 ft. deep. Lower pool is 582 ft. long, by 175 ft. wide, and 50 ft. deep.

We are feeling well and hopeful.

In gospel bonds,
F. G. PITT.

[Elder G. T. Griffiths who just returned from Jerusalem, informs us that those pools which might be used for baptism are not very clean. The natives wash their clothes there—not in tubs but on the rocks.—EDITORS.]

Across the Pacific.

Editors Herald: My last letter was from Dunedin, New Zealand. I continued to labor there until March 3. The few weeks spent there were among the most pleasant of my ministry. Every Saint was an enthusiastic helper, anxious to do the utmost for the spread of truth. Preaching was done in a hall, on the street and in private houses. There seemed to be a keen desire to learn, both upon the part of the Saints and of many outsiders.

Some of the street meetings were exceedingly fine. Brethren Hall and Leberz spoke at each of these, as well as the writer. Many people were reached in this way, and fresh recruits gained each time for our indoor services.

A good work was in progress when I had to leave to catch the San Francisco bound boat. I felt a keen reluctance to leave under the circumstances, but my fare had been paid and my berth booked. I should have missed the conference had I not caught that boat, so I had to conquer my reluctance and say good-bye.

I am pleased to report the organization of a branch at Dunedin. With the consent of our missionary in charge, the little band of Saints met at the home of Bro. J. C. Bradley on February 26, and the Dunedin Branch was organized.

The following are the officers: Presiding elder, R. W. Hall; priest, A. Leberz; teacher, J. C. Bradley; financial and branch clerk, Sr. E. L. Venn, corner Cumberland street and David street, Dunedin, New Zealand. The total membership is but nine; but as four of these are recent additions, we are hopeful of still further increasing our numbers.

It will be somewhat disappointing to the New Zealand Saints that no one has been sent to their assistance from General Conference. In view of this fact the writer has determined to shorten his stay in America and spend two or three months there en route for Australia.

Our voyage across the Pacific was most pleasant. The monotony of sea travel was broken by short calls at different parts.

At Papeete, Tahiti, we were fortunate in finding Bro. J. Charles May and H. W. Savage with their respected matrimonial partners. We received a right royal welcome. The pleasure of meeting seemed mutual and we had a good time together during the twenty-three hours the ship remained in port.

The welcome of the native Saints was also very warm. I could not understand their strange, soft, musical language; but their beaming countenances, hearty hand shakes and cordial greetings were in some respects reminiscent of the saintly welcomes of other lands. With a meeting of welcome, two or three formal presentations of shells, etc., and a preaching service, all crowded into one day, the reader will understand that we had a busy time.

That day at Tahiti will long stand out in my memory as a pleasant experience. I was especially pleased to note the progress of the missionaries with the Tahitian language and the printing and publication of papers, tracts and Sunday school quarterlies in the native tongue.

The Lord has wonderfully blessed these two young men and made them eloquent in the native language in record time. I am pleased to say that they are worthy of the blessing. Each one is most diligent in his duties, and both take a keen pleasure in performing the most arduous labor for the cause.

These men were sent there only eighteen months ago, and after but a short while Brother Lake, the minister in charge, was forced to return to America, owing to illness. Neither of the "boys" knew anything of the printing trade, yet this had to be mastered as well as the language.

When I say that the missionaries not only speak the language fluently, but do the mission printing in a most creditable manner, the reader will begin to appreciate the degree to which they have been blessed. Without divine assistance, this would have been altogether impossible. Still it must not be forgotten that God helps those who help themselves.

Sisters May and Savage are also at work, exerting an influence for good and helping their husbands in the performance of their duties, as only wives with the true missionary spirit can. They were both well and happy and the little May boys seem to have a good capacity for taking in Tahitian fruit and sending out Tahitian language.

At San Francisco I was met by Bro. J. M. Terry and later by Bro. J. A. Anthony. These brethren were very kind and helped me in every possible manner. Brother Anthony took me to his home, where his dear wife, a true mother in Israel, welcomed and entertained me for the day. With Brother Anthony, calls were made on a number of the local Saints and a brief visit paid to Golden Gate Park.

At 9 p. m., Brother Anthony escorted me to the depot where Brother Terry was met and I was safely piloted across the bay on the ferry and aboard the train at Oakland, Brother Terry coming on the train as far as Sixteenth street.

The next day, Brother Lawn of Sacramento was met aboard the cars and the following day Sister Ross. At Kansas City and Saint Joseph, other Saints joined the company, and we arrived at Lamoni on the evening of April 4, with some fifty other delegates. Here, I am the guest of Bro. and Sr. G. R. Wells, friends of "Auld Lang Syne."

What shall I say of General Conference? It has been the experience of my life. It has brought me into contact with a fair representation of the foremost men and women of the church. It has impressed me more than ever with the fact that in simplicity, humility, and purity of life lies the secret of true spiritual power.

As a stranger and foreigner from beyond the seas, I was not a stranger among these people; but a brother in Christ, accorded all the privileges and favors of brotherhood.

There was much to learn, so I sat still and kept quiet, and therefore profited a great deal. If it is always true that "out of the fullness of the heart the mouth speaketh," it was "up to me" to say a great deal, for my heart was full all the time. I guess I'll have the opportunity of overflowing quite freely when I return to my native land. I don't always sit still and keep quiet, but under certain conditions I believe it to be a real virtue.

Fraternally,
W. J. HAWORTH.

Convention Notices.

The Zion's Religio-Literary Society of Southern Indiana District will meet in semiannual convention with the Union Branch, Wirt, Indiana, on Friday, May 19, 1911. Business session will be called to order at 7.30 p. m. We trust the locals will send complete reports and a full quota of delegates. Let all Religians who can be present do so and make this our first semiannual convention a good, lively one. The Union Branch ought to have a good live Religio, and now is our opportunity to make our presence felt in such a way that they will see the necessity of getting busy themselves. Send reports to secretary not later than May 15. Charles H. Fish, president. Edna S. Gage, secretary, 1911 Ruckle street, Indianapolis, Indiana.

Notice of Amendment.

Notice is hereby given that at the General Conference convening at Independence, Missouri, April 6, 1912, there will be introduced a resolution to amend chapter 15, paragraph 170, page 105, of Rules of Order and Debate, as follows:

Resolved, That chapter 15, paragraph 170, page 105, of Rules of Order and Debate be, and is hereby amended by striking out the words "preside over the branch in 'the city of the Stake' or seat of organization"; so that said paragraph hereafter shall read: "The duties of the stake presidency are to have immediate charge and oversight of the general spiritual work in the stake, subject to the advice and direction of the general church officers, who have general control of the work everywhere by virtue of their office, or special appointment; and look after the welfare and discipline of the members within the confines of the stake."

Notices.

To General Church officers, and ministers under General Conference appointment: We want you to read the Sunday School Exponent and Senior Quarterly. You can have them free for twelve months by sending your name and address to G. R. Wells, Lamoni, Iowa. Do this whether your name is now in the list or not, as we find it necessary to make up a new complimentary list each year. The old list will be canceled July 1, 1911. Missionaries will please give field address. The post-office does not forward periodicals without extra postage.

As the Sunday School Association is a department of church work and care, it is necessary that you keep in touch with what it is doing. You can not do this unless you read its official paper. Whenever you meet with a school, it will add to your prestige, as a minister, if you know the lesson for the day. You can best do that by having a Quarterly sent to your field address.

THE EXECUTIVE.

Religio Quarterly.

All General Church officers and all General Conference appointees are entitled to the Quarterly free. Write a card to President J. A. Gunsolley, Lamoni, Iowa, giving your name and address, stating you desire the Quarterly. It will not be continued beyond the present number unless you renew your request. J. A. GUNSOLLEY, President.

Religio-Sunday School Field Workers.

Stake and district officers and reunion committees who desire the services of a field worker for convention, institute, and reunion work should write at once stating their wants, and preferences if they have any. We will not promise to grant the preference on every occasion, but will try to arrange for all the help we can. It is important that these requests be sent early so that arrangements can be made to meet them in the most economical way. Write Daniel Macgregor, Saint Clair, Michigan, or J. A. Gunsolley, Lamoni, Iowa.

Resolutions Regarding the Reporting of the Various Members of the Priesthood to the Ohio District Conferences.

Adopted at Middleton, Ohio, February 26, 1910.

"Whereas, the minister in charge requires that all members of the priesthood in the district make a quarterly report to him; and whereas, many have failed to report when requested to do so, therefore, be it resolved, That all members of the priesthood in the Ohio District, and not under General Conference appointment, who, after six months fail to report; upon a failure to show satisfactory cause for not reporting, shall forfeit their license and be required to return them to the district authorities upon demand.

"Be it further resolved, That all those holding priesthood, and laboring in branches be required to report to their respective branch president, and all who are not laboring in branches shall report direct to the district president."

The following was adopted at Columbus, Ohio, March 11, 1911:

"We, your committee, appointed to outline the correct system for the reporting of local officers, beg leave to offer the following: We recommend:

"1.—The district secretary shall send to each branch president the printed blanks issued by the Herald Office, no later than the 10th of the last month in each quarter. The branch president shall have each officer under his jurisdiction, report all work done to him, for each quarter, who will then, on the proper blanks, report the work of the branch to the district president, through the district secretary. The district president shall then compile and file his report with the First Presidency of the Church unless otherwise instructed by the minister in charge.

"2.—All members of the priesthood, outside of branches, shall report direct to the district president, through the district secretary.

"3.—The district secretary shall, from the quarterly reports sent him, compile a summarized report of the work done in each branch, and submit it to the district conference.

"4.—The names of members of the priesthood, failing to report, shall be furnished to the district president, who shall take action in accordance with the resolution passed at the conference held February 26, 1911, at Middleton, Ohio."

"F. J. Ebeling, S. J. Jeffers, D. R. Winn, committee."

This report was adopted without any changes, by the conference, hence becomes operative at once. Send all reports to address below. D. R. Winn, district secretary, 82 East Northwood avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

ORDER OF EVANGELISTS.

Dear Brethren: The conference which has just closed was a peaceful and I believe profitable one. In the disposition and actions of the body, as a whole, and as individuals, (with but few exceptions at the most) there was to be seen much to admire and encourage. Clearly, God is doing his part, faithfully and well, as usual. He is getting all the good he possibly can out of his servants and people, consistent with their agency, but we have yet much to learn about what was meant by the apostle when he said the Saints were "workers together with God."

Only six of our number were present, two of whom are residents of Lamoni. The order held three sessions of its own, in which so far as we know, there was complete harmony with one exception on one point, and this, perhaps, was more apparent than real. Fifty blessings were given. The work being almost equally divided among five of the patriarchs.

The present officers of the order were sustained, and the acting president was also made treasurer. And in addition to this, there was placed in my hands the following communication, after two of the brethren had left the conference, making it impossible to call a sufficient number of members together to constitute a quorum. This teaches us that it is unwise for members of the conference to leave before the conference adjourns, if it can be avoided.

LAMONI, IOWA, April 15, 1911.

To the Order of Evangelists, Patriarch J. R. Lambert, presiding: I have received two communications from your presiding officer touching the order, and have also noted the reports which have been given with reference to your work. I have given this subject much study since I received Patriarch Lambert's first letter and have been frequently engaged in prayer in regard to the matter, and the voice of the Spirit to me is, in effect, this:

"The administration of my servant Joseph R. Lambert, in conducting the affairs and presiding over the Order of Evangelists, is acceptable to me. Let him continue to act in the office until such time as a successor to the presiding patriarch, Alexander H. Smith, shall be appointed, or until my servant Joseph R. Lambert, be called to rest."

This is all that has been given me. I have no intimations as to the successor of Alexander H. Smith.

Your brother in bonds,
JOSEPH SMITH, President.

My apology for presenting the above communication to the church, in this way and at this time, is the fact that a quorum of evangelists could not be convened before the sitting of another conference. But as a matter of course, the communication is not binding upon the order until they have indorsed it, should they see fit to do so.

May the Lord's wisdom and Spirit prepare us for another year's work which will give evidence (because of its improved character) of actual progress made.

Your coworker in the gospel,
J. R. LAMBERT.

LAMONI, IOWA, April 18, 1911.

Died.

CURTIS.—Frank A. Curtis was born in Williamson, Wayne County, New York, September 1, 1832. He was married to Louisa H. Hall, March 3, 1864, in Sycamore, Illinois. To this union were born three children. He was baptized by Elder George W. Shute in Clay County, Kansas, June 3, 1888, and remained a faithful and consistent member of the church until his death, April 12, 1911. Funeral sermon preached by J. W. Metcalf. Interment in Idylwild Cemetery, Kansas.

McLANE.—Died in Salt Lake City, Utah, April 11, 1911, Maria Walters McLane. Born in Wales, March 9, 1846; came to Utah in 1855. Married April 25, 1863. They united with the Reorganization in Fairfield, Utah, in an early day. Seven children remain to mourn, all members of the church. The home of Sister McLane was always a resting place for the servants of God. Brother McLane died about ten years ago, and two years later the family moved to this city, where they have made their home. The funeral was held April 14 from the home. Sermon was short and exercises simple; the deceased disliked ostentation in such things. Interment was in the Mount Olivet Cemetery. Elder A. M. Chase conducted the services.

MITCHELL.—Sr. Alice Mitchell was born March 24, 1839, at Bristol, Somerset, England. Her parents were connected with the church in early days and went to Utah, but like many others never indorsed polygamy. Our sister abhorred those evil doctrines and could tell much of the disgraceful things enacted under holy pretenses. She suffered from rheumatism for years. She had many friends. She leaves her husband and a daughter. She lived a good life and bore a strong testimony of the angel's message at all times. She died at her home in Plymouth. Funeral in charge of Elder Thomas Jones, assisted by Bro. James Bunt.

YOUNG.—On April 12, 1911, Martha May, daughter of Mr. John and Sr. Retta Young. She was born at Oskaloosa, Iowa, May 10, 1905, and was 5 years, 11 months and 2 days old at time of death. Cause of death, scarlet fever. Private services at the grave in charge of Elder C. B. Brown. Little Martha was as sweet a little bud as ever brightened and gladdened the lives of a fond father and mother. There is left a great void in the hearts and lives of the fond parents who have been called upon to resign their little darling into the hands of Him who alone can soothe the pain and heal the wounded hearts of those who have been called upon to give up little Martha, so far as this life is concerned, and who can give consolation in the knowledge that they may meet her on the morn of the first resurrection.

It is said that Kansas City, Kansas, with a population of one hundred thousand, is the largest city in the world without a liquor saloon.

Editorial

"EVERYBODY'S MAGAZINE" CORRECTS ITS ERROR.

On Saturday, March 25, Pres. Joseph Smith wrote the managers of Everybody's Magazine, calling their attention to the fact that they had published in their April number two pages of photographs, styling them, "The hierarchy of the Utah Mormon Church," in which Pres. Joseph Smith's picture appeared at the head of one of the pages of the pictures. On the 1st of April the managing editor, Mr. Hillman, wired President Smith, acknowledging receipt of the letter and promising an explanation and apology. On April 5, President Smith received a letter which confirmed their message and promised to give satisfaction in the May number of the magazine. The May number, under the department of "Straight Talk," contains the letter of President Smith and the apology. We give the letter and apology below, from the magazine.

We hope this statement will prevent any acrimonious writing and faultfinding with the magazine:

A CORRECTION.

Dear Sir: In connection with the installment of "Under the Prophet in Utah" by Frank J. Cannon, appearing in the April Everybody's, you have published a number of photographs, ostensibly representing what Mr. Cannon in his article calls "the hierarchy," under which appellation you refer to the same body of men. Among them appears a cut of myself, which by an inexcusable blunder, or a willful and malicious mistake, presents me to the public as one of that polygamous hierarchy.

My object in writing you is to request that in the next issue of your magazine you make the "amende honorable" and relieve me from the opprobrium to which such publication subjects me. If, as I presume, it is a mistake, a blunder, as honorable men you will more readily accede to my request when I inform you that I have never been a member of the polygamous Utah Church, but have for fifty-one years been associated with, and presided over, The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, known as the Josephites or anti-polygamous branch. The headquarters of our church are at Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa. I have at no time been a resident of Utah, and have had no affiliation with the dominant body there in any respect.

The president of the Utah Church, Joseph Fielding Smith, is the son of my uncle, Hyrum Smith. I am the son of Joseph Smith, the first president of the church. The church with which I am associated now numbers some sixty-five thousand people, and you will likely receive remonstrances from many of these, who are feeling outraged and indignant by your placing me pictorially among the leaders of the polygamous church, and leaving out the picture of Joseph F. Smith. I will be pleased to be assured by you, in a letter direct to me, that this blunder was unintentional, and to see in your May number such a correction as an honorable man may expect from others entitled to the same.

JOSEPH SMITH.

[We hasten to publish the above letter and our apology at this, the earliest, opportunity. Our readers need no assurance that the picture appeared by mistake—a kind of mistake that does not occur with us once in a million times. The photograph of Mr. Smith was forwarded to us by our Denver photographer, in a large collection of pictures of Utah Mormons. No explanatory description accompanied it; there was nothing to distinguish it as an exception to the rest, all of whom were Utah Mormons; and the name itself naturally misled us. Mr. Cannon is too far away to see page proofs of his article, and Mr. O'Higgins, when the pages were submitted to him, was too ill to give them careful attention. We deeply regret the mistake, and hereby offer our apologies to Mr. Smith and the members of the church over which he presides. THE EDITORS.]

"MORMON CHURCH SEEKS INQUIRY INTO CHARGES.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, April 20.—For the first time in the history of the Mormon church, a concerted movement has been started by church and state authorities to obtain an investigation of current charges made in England in connection with an anti-Mormon agitation to the effect that the church is inducing the immigration of women for immoral purposes.

Supplemental to the ecclesiastical investigation proposed by the church authorities, Governor Spry has suggested a civil investigation.

In reply to a query from a London newspaper, Joseph F. Smith, president of the Mormon church, has sent the following cablegram:

"Charges mentioned in your telegram are absolutely and totally false. Polygamy is forbidden by Mormon church as well as by the Utah laws. No women or girls are imported by the church from England or any other country for immoral or other purposes. Current stories are without foundation. Fair investigation will prove this beyond question. All immigration from England is conducted under parliamentary provisions. The White Star lines and Dominion lines have full records which correspond with those kept at Mormon headquarters at Liverpool and show every particular concerning immigrants. State officials here will inquire into any cases of the kind alleged if names are furnished. We will aid in the investigation."

A recent news dispatch from London announced that a meeting would be held in that city April 28 by representatives of different religious denominations to protest against Mormonism.

It would seem that a very grave crisis in the affairs of the Mormon Church in Utah had been reached. The strong denunciation of plural marriage, uttered by Francis M. Lyman last fall, has been more prominently made by Pres. Joseph F. Smith at the session of their late conference, held April 6, just passed, and this, together with the effort being made in some of the leading magazines of the country against "Mormonism," has aroused antagonism abroad, of which the above is indicative. How far this effort to be made by Governor Spry may be effectual in meeting the antagonism in England and the spirit of protest in America, it is hard to tell. It may be unkind in us to mention it, but the attitude assumed by Pres. Joseph F. Smith in his speech to the conference in Salt Lake City carries the impression with it, that by some means the select few had been permitted to become the Lord's beneficiaries, in securing a number of plural wives each, from which no legal enactment has been able to separate them.

The statement that no more plural marriages will be allowed or permitted to be celebrated by the church, while the leading men of the church, including its President, are allowed to live openly with their plural wives and to occasionally flaunt this condition in the faces of the public, seems to be very inconsistent and out of place to the general thinker. It raises anew the questions, "Was the so-called revelation establishing plural marriage of God, or was it of men? Was the action of Wilford Woodruff prompted by divine permission when he uttered the manifesto? Are the protestations of Joseph F. Smith and Francis M. Lyman condemning further plural marriages, and declaring that there is now no one on earth authorized to perform marriages, sincere, and in keeping with the harmony of religious devotion to the edicts of God, and the requirements of the Government, comparing such declarations with the actual example which they are setting the people in disregarding the laws of the State? Will Governor Spry be able to set before the British public the comparison between precept and example, in such way as will convince the hard-headed English citizen of the sincerity of the leaders, and offset the terrible force which the example must exercise?" We think a Herculean task has been assigned him.

Compulsory insurance for sickness and invalidity for the whole of the working population of the country whose incomes are under eight hundred dollars, is the plan outlined by British chancellor of the exchequer, who hopes to place it before Parliament this session.

THE KING JAMES VERSION OF THE BIBLE.

The three hundredth anniversary of the publication of the King James Version of the Bible was celebrated April 25. Two press comments, both from the Kansas City Journal are given below:

NEW YORK, April 25.—Letters from King George of England and President Taft were read at Carnegie Hall to-night at a gathering in celebration of the three hundredth anniversary of the publication of the King James Version of the English Bible.

The Rt. Rev. David H. Greer, bishop of the Episcopal diocese of New York, presided at the ceremony which was held under the auspices of the American Bible Society. James Bryce, the British ambassador, read the king's letter and delivered an address. President Taft's letter reads:

"I desire to express my deep interest in the recognition which is being taken in this country of so notable an event as the three hundredth anniversary of the King James Version of the English Bible.

"The publication of the version of the Holy Scriptures in the year 1611 associates it with the early colonies of the English people upon this continent. It became at once the Bible of our American forefathers. Its classic English has given shape to American literature. Its spirit has influenced American ideals in life, and laws and government.

"I trust that this celebration may continue and deepen the influence of the Bible upon the people of this republic."

King George's letter follows:

"I rejoice that America and England should join in commemorating the publication, three hundred years ago, of that version of the Holy Scriptures which has so long held its own among English speaking peoples.

"Its circulation in our homes has done more perhaps than anything else on earth to promote among old and young the moral and religious welfare on either side of the Atlantic.

"The version which bears King James' name is so clearly interwoven in the history of British and American life that it is right we should thank God for it together.

"I congratulate the president and people of the United States upon their share in this, our common heritage."

Elbert A. Brinckerhoff, vice-president of the American Bible Society, opened the meeting and introduced Bishop Greer, who said in part:

"The publication of the Bible, the three hundredth anniversary of which we are assembled here to celebrate, was not only a great literary event; it also was a great moral and religious event. It liberated the people of the Anglo-Saxon races from superstitious fears."

James Wood, of the Society of Friends, read the scripture from a first edition of the King James Version, printed in 1611, one of the treasures of the American Bible Society's library.

COLUMBIA, MISSOURI, April 25.—That revised versions of the English Bible are inferior to the King James Version, was the statement of Dr. Edward A. Allen, emeritus professor of English at the University of Missouri, who talked at University assembly to-day. "The Bible as literature," was his subject.

"The authorized version of the Bible is an English classic," said Doctor Allen, "but as much can not be said of some of the revised editions. They have been made necessary by changed meaning of words. They have a service to perform, but the authorized version comes nearest to perfection in literary value. For simplicity, dignity, power, general accuracy, happy turns of expression and music of cadence, it can not be excelled.

"One of the chief differences in the two is the use of synonyms. In the Revised Version the same word is repeated instead of a synonym, however many times it may appear. This is good from the standpoint of accuracy, but not of euphony. Take the words, kingly, royal, and regal. The Saxon, French and Latin. Each really has a specific meaning and one can not be substituted for the other without loss. The revised versions are needed for clearness of meaning, but much of the old rhythm is seriously impaired.

"Familiarity with the rhythm of the Bible has influenced writers of all times. Good prose is always rhythmical. The measures are complicated and not reducible to meter, but the musical quality must appeal to the ear. To a mind saturated with the rhythm of the Bible, what a difference there is between the 'rich he has sent empty away,' and 'He has sent the rich away empty.'"—Kansas City Journal, April 26.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Youth's Companion remarks: "The plague has been so long raging in India that its ravages attract comparatively little attention. But the frightful mortality from this cause is disclosed by the official figures for February, which show 88,498 deaths from the plague in that single month. The British India office reports that the most persistent attempts to check the epidemic have failed."

On April 24 there began in New York City a sale of the great library of Robert Hoe, the famous press maker. It is said that this sale has created greater interest than any previous sale because of the nature of some of the books to be sold. Says the New York American:

"The most important item to be disposed of to-day will be the famous Guttenburg Bible, dating back to 1450-55. It is expected that this ancient and beautiful book will bring at least $25,000.

"Printed on vellum of the first quality, it is in remarkably clean and fresh condition, and the bold gothic characters of the print stand out finely and clearly.

"This Bible is unique, even among the few copies of the work which are now in existence, for it is the only Guttenburg Bible in which the headings at the commencement of the Epistle of Saint Jerome and the first Book of Genesis are printed in red. It has been presumed that the difficulty of printing in two colors caused the abandonment of the plan with the other editions.

"The illumination of the Book is superb. The beautifully illuminated initials and decorations, taken in conjunction with the antique and massive appearance of the binding, make the work one of the most impressive relics in existence.

"One reason why book collectors are so deeply interested in the Guttenburg Bible is that it is one of a very few, if it is not the only one, that will ever be obtainable at a public auction.

"There were perhaps thirty copies of the work printed on velum. Of these fewer than a dozen are known to be in existence to-day, and some of them are in very poor condition. Most, if not all of the other known copies are the property of public libraries or museums, where they will always remain.

"It is therefore possible that to-day will see the last opportunity for private purchase of the monumental work—the first important book ever printed from movable type.

"The Hoe copy was obtained from the Perkins and Ashburnham libraries of England, and before that it was owned by Nicol, the London bookseller."

It is understood the Danish Government, in response to numerous petitions, meditates measures to prevent a Mormon propaganda in this country. This intelligence is contained in a press dispatch of April 23.

A movement to convert the Mohammedans, contrary to what might naturally be expected, meets with the disapproval on the part of some, as will be seen by the following protest taken from the New York Sun:

To the Editor of the Sun; Sir: A movement most unwise and indiscreet has been started by the supporters of Protestant Christian missions to celebrate the coronation of King George V, by raising a special fund for the conversion of Mohammedans, and especially to withstand the rapid progress of Islam in central Africa. The King, when he assumes the imperial crown and title at Delhi on January 1 next, will be proclaimed the ruler of at least 70,000,000 Moslems in India alone, and a very large number of Mohammedan rulers will declare their allegiance, including the Khedive of Egypt, the Sultan of Zanzibar, the Ameer of Afghanistan, the Nizam of Hyderabad, the Rani of Bhopal, and many others.

There are many millions of Mohammedans in central Africa who are the subjects of the King of England, also in Java, Borneo, and the Strait Settlements. In fact it would appear that the Moslem subjects of the English King actually outnumber the Protestant Christians.

So far from Islam being an unmixed evil in Africa, the late Bishop Elwyn, of Sierra Leone, shortly before his death said that it was a great aid to civilization in rescuing them from savagery. It is a notable fact that the King of England rules over a large number of Moslem subjects than any Mohammedan ruler in the past. England now calls upon the people of every creed to unite in demonstrations of loyalty to the British crown and asks for the prayers of the people of every tongue. Dr. William Quinlan, who became a Moslem twenty-five years ago and is the Persian Consul at Liverpool, has raised an earnest protest against the movement. ANGLO-INDIAN.

NEW YORK, April 20.

Prof. R. D. Aitken, astronomer of Lick Observatory, in a recent lecture, declared that there is no animal or plant life on Mars, and that the markings on the surface of this planet are earthquake fissures instead of canals, as is commonly understood. Almost at the same time comes the statement from Prof. T. J. J. See, an equally eminent authority on astronomy, who says that "life is a general phenomenon in the universe, and that living beings exist wherever a star twinkles in the depths of space."

This seems to be the day of "swat." "Swat the fly!" comes from the health crusaders, while the watchword of the magazines for the past few months has been, "Swat the Mormon!"

Elbert Hubbard says he has found the most valuable secret in the world. It is: "Let motion equal emotion." And then he proceeds to elucidate what he means. He winds up his article by saying that it is balance we need, and that if one is healthy and happy he must work with his hands as well as his head. "Sickness . . . comes from a failure to make motion balance emotion. Impress and express; inhale and exhale; work and play; study and laugh; love and labor; exercise and rest. . . . And to live long and well is to accept life in every phase—even death itself—and find it good."

The Bar Harbor, Maine, Record for April 19 reaches us with a column communication by Bro. H. A. Koehler, which seems to have been called out by a recent article in the same paper, written by a certain "reverend gentleman." While we have not seen the former article, judging from Brother Koehler's reply, the reverend gentleman evidently was sadly misinformed or seriously misrepresented matters pertaining to the Reorganization.

The following press item records one of the closing incidents of the dying Dowie movement. It seems almost incredible that it could have reached so low an ebb in so short a time:

"DOWIE'S EFFECTS AT PUBLIC VENDUE.

"MUSKEGON, MICHIGAN, April 22.—Furniture and other things collected by the late John Alexander Dowie, said to have cost in the neighborhood of $10,000, were sold recently at auction at the Dowie summer home, Ben McDhui, on White Lake, before mortgages aggregating $1,000 were satisfied. The famous Dowie bed, which is said to have cost $5,000, was bid in at $95.

"The auction attracted a large crowd, which tramped over the lawns and inspected the interior of the house which, during the occupancy of the 'prophet,' was barred from the public."

The disturbance between the Portuguese Government and the Vatican is becoming quite as complicated and sensitive as that between the Vatican and Spain. To the Portuguese Government's order canceling a Vatican decree the Vatican has replied by an agitation against the Government through clerical forces. To the Vatican's demurrer about receiving an ambassador from Portugal the Portuguese Government replies by leaving the position vacant. The Government is also promoting a measure to provide for the civil registration of births, deaths, and marriages, and as this threatens a large source of income to the clergy the fear and irritation of that body keep it in lively protest. So far the temper of Spanish and Portuguese governments is alike in protesting against Vatican interference in domestic matters.

How often has it occurred that what seemed at the time to be a flat failure or a disheartening defeat was only God's preparatory step to a glorious victory. Paul's career most forcibly illustrates that great fact. He had often longed to visit Rome that he might proclaim the gospel. But when at last he did enter that imperial city, it was as a prisoner wearing chains. Can the Christian world ever forget, however, what transpired while he was confined in the Mamertine prison? While there he was enabled to preach Christ even to those who were of Cæsar's household, and with such success that, in his letter to the Philippians, he was led to say: "But I would ye should understand, brethren, that the things which happened unto me have fallen out rather unto the furtherance (or progress) of the gospel."—Frank P. Parkin, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

"The religion of India teaches that a husband dies because his wife has displeased the gods; and the people seek the favor of the gods by punishing her. Her head is shaven, ornaments are taken off, she is clad in widow's cloth and put to work in the fields."

"When Congress is in session, every Trust has its ablest lobbyist at Washington every minute that any legislation affecting the Interests is under consideration. But there are no mechanics, no farmers, no clerks, no miners, lobbying there for their interests."

Some large plants grow from very tiny seeds, and if we follow quarrels to their beginnings we generally find that they start with things so small that we might easily make the mistake of thinking them of no account. Look out for the seeds of little misunderstandings from which great troubles so often spring.

Over one hundred American cities have adopted the commission plan of government.

Elders' Note-Book

THE RIGHTS AND PRIVILEGES OF A HIGH PRIEST.—A SYMPOSIUM.

A high priest, to acquire the right and privilege of acting as an evangelical minister, must first be called and ordained a patriarch, as designated by revelation to the authority defined in the law, and confirmed by the action of the traveling High Council, or General Conference. The patriarch is an evangelical minister.

A high priest thus ordained and acting, is free from all ministerial responsibility and care, either as a traveling minister, or local officer of branch, district or stake—in which capacity he may not act—and of control by mission authorities, “unless transcending his bounds, and teaching false doctrines or found in transgression.” He is not to meddle with branch, district, or stake affairs, nor listen to complaints of individuals, but “if such persons insist upon presenting their troubles, he is to request and require them to make them in writing, signing the name, giving the time, place, and character of the trouble, with the witnesses, which it will be his duty to present to the branch, district” or stake officers, “as the case may require.”

As the office of “patriarch and an evangelical minister,” are conjoined, he should be “as a father to the church, to give counsel or advice to individuals who may seek for such; to lay on hands for the conferment of spiritual blessing.” As evangel, his voice should be that of inspiration; his life so close unto God that he shall form an intelligent and intelligible channel of communication for the Holy Spirit, and the manifestation of the divine love, prescience, wisdom, and power.

A revivalist, he should as wisdom may direct, visit branches and districts, or stakes, within the field of his assignment, and so expound the word of God, so preach and teach, so exhort as to awaken renewed interest in the minds and hearts of the people; arousing them to a realizing sense of the importance of their active compliance with all the terms of that covenant, not only for their own present and eternal good, but for the influence which such lives shall have upon their environment now and hereafter.

To bless, where wisdom and revelation may direct, with prescient word, seal upon the head of the child of God “the Holy Spirit of promise,” “unto the day of redemption, that they may not fall, notwithstanding the hour of temptation that may come upon them.” Not only is it his right and privilege to bless and seal that blessing upon the son or daughter of God; alas, he may some time be constrained to curse instead of bless, but woe to him, should he thus curse, unless constrained to do so by the Spirit, as the manifestation of God's wisdom. Let us hope that this shall rarely be the case.

The duty and privilege of such an one demand that he shall live so near to God in thought, and word, and deed, that the divine Spirit shall always be manifest in his life and teaching, and his voice unto the Saints be as the voice of wisdom, lovingly made manifest.

To such an one, the injunction comes with double force, “If ye receive not the Spirit, ye shall not teach.”

ROBT. WINNING.

I don't know as a high priest has any rights or prerogatives when acting as a pastor that others of the priesthood have not. Primarily the functions of a president is to preside in an assembly over which he may be elected or appointed, to govern the proceedings, keep order, and to manage the concerns of the society over which he has been placed as president.

In the Book of Rules we read:

It shall be the duty of the presiding officer of the meeting to preside over the same during its sessions; to enforce the Rules of Order and an observance of the same, with decorum and propriety; to secure, so far as he is able, a due respect and regard for the laws governing the church, as contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants; and prevent these books from being treated lightly, jestingly, or disrespectfully.

So much for any presiding officer over meetings. Now as to who are the proper ones to preside:

In section 120, paragraph 2, Doctrine and Covenants, we read:

A branch may be presided over by a high priest, an elder, priest, teacher, or deacon, chosen and sustained by the vote of the branch. Districts may be presided over by a high priest, or an elder, who shall be received and sustained in his office by the vote of the district. If a branch, or district be large he who is chosen to preside should be an high priest, if there be one possessed of the spirit of wisdom to administer in the office of president; or if an elder be chosen who may by experience be found qualified to preside, as soon as practicable thereafter he should be ordained an high priest.

From the foregoing we learn that it is necessary to have a high priest for president when one can be had who is qualified, and if an elder is qualified he should be ordained a high priest. All other things equal a high priest is preferable.

Again in section 122, paragraph 7, speaking of the missionary quorums of the church, it says:

“Leaving the branches and districts where organization is effected to the care and administration of the standing ministers, high priests, elders,—

Here high priests are also mentioned first.

In resolutions of joint council of April 20, 1894, page 378:

Resolved, further, that when high priests are acting in their own standing as local presidents, they are subject to the direction and counsel of members of both the first presidency and the twelve, whose duty it is to regulate.

While this says nothing about others acting as local presidents, being under the "direction and counsel" of the Presidency and Twelve, the apparent reason is that the high priests were under consideration in regard to missions in juxtaposition to the foregoing quotation, and elders and priests, etc., were not under consideration, and consequently were not mentioned; but if it is necessary for those who are preferred as presidents to be under the direction and counsel of the quorums mentioned, it would certainly be necessary for those of a lower degree in qualification. However, I do not believe this quotation from the resolutions of the joint council gives the members of those quorums the right to interfere in the management of branches and districts except to "regulate,"—only when things are out of working order and need "regulating," and this wise provision names those competent to do it. When there are irregularities, or difficulty arises which the president is unable to cope with, it is his duty to seek the counsel of one of these brethren.

Very little if anything is revealed in the law as touching the rights or special privileges of a high priest who may be chosen to act as president of a stake. We would infer that along all general lines of operation his duties would be similar to those duties which attach to the office of district president where high priests are chosen to act in that capacity.

In our Book of Rules, chapter 15; paragraph 170, we find the following statement:

The duties of the stake presidency are to preside over the branch in the "city of the stake" or seat of organization; have immediate charge and oversight of the general spiritual work in the stake, subject to the advice and direction of the general church officers who have general control of the work everywhere by virtue of their office, or special appointment; and look after the welfare and discipline of the members within the confines of the stake.

This instruction, as will be seen, makes the stake officers as fixed in their situation, and in case of death or removal their places are filled by the "general officers of the Church." In these respects the stake officer is different from the ordinary district officer, who is chosen and elected by voice of the people at regular and stated times.

The above statement is not offered on an equality with revelations which have come to the church regulating such affairs, but is an act of the General Conference and subject to modification and repeal. Outside of the fact that the high priest chosen to act as stake president, is to have two counselors; that he is to preside over the branch in the city of the stake; and that he is appointed and ordained to his position by the general officers of the church, I see no great difference between his work and that before mentioned, the work of a district president. It is the right and privilege of the stake president to exercise lawful and proper jurisdiction over the branches within the stake. In dealing with conditions in the branches he should always work through the officers of the branch unless it appears that they are in transgression. It is not his right to appoint meetings and arrange other matters affecting the branch without the knowledge and consent of the branch, except in extreme cases where transgression and disorder exist. It is the privilege and right of the stake president to visit the several branches and keep in touch with every movement for progress and assist, advise, and help in every way possible. As it seems to me it would be better or as well for the stake authorities to visit the branches at their own discretion or upon invitation rather than upon fixed days which at times will conflict with arrangements made by the branch.

It will be understood that all the several duties pertaining to the office of high priest and all the rights and privileges that attach to that office are the same, and not detracted from one who may be chosen as an high priest to act as president of a stake.

The true leader is not the one who complains about the ingratitude of his followers, the inappreciation of the public or one who dwells upon the deficiencies of mankind. He is rather the one who treats with people as they are and endeavors to make them do what they are capable of. For others to have faith in you it is necessary to have faith in them. It is just as easy for the mass to see the unfavorable traits of a leader as it is for the leader to see its shortcomings. The leader brings out the good qualities of his followers, and inspires them with confidence in themselves. To gain their respect he must rise above his office and not cater for their favor. When the followers once believe that the purpose of the leader is to establish himself in his position, that he is afraid to express his conviction because of the opposition it may engender, that he moves with the crowd instead of guiding it, his influence is soon gone. The mass in time is able to distinguish between the sham and the real leader. The former may be popular for a while, but the time of reckoning surely comes, like the one who overdraws his bank account. The greater the expectations raised, the greater will the performance have to be.—Electrical Worker.

THE BOOK OF MORMON.

SERMON OF JOHN KALER, DELIVERED AT INDEPENDENCE,
MISSOURI, SEPTEMBER 11, 1910.

Reported by Marie Clark Morgan.

I will take a text, as a starting point, from Paul's First Epistle to the Thessalonians, 5:21: "Prove all things: and hold fast that which is good." Some people think that this expression of Paul's does not really mean what it says; that they ought only to prove a few things, and denounce all the rest without any proof. Now, I can remember when I was so prejudiced against this record, the Book of Mormon, that I would not read it. I had read what its enemies had to say about it, and I thought that was conclusive proof that it was entirely false. I read a book written by a professed minister of religion, and he made the statement that the Book of Mormon had horses and mules in ancient times among the people who dwelt upon this continent, while the facts were that the first horse was brought here by the Spaniards in modern times, and the first mule during the days of George Washington, and many things like this were presented in the book that led me to believe that the Book of Mormon was simply a novel and a poorly written novel at that, because the writer was uninformed sufficiently even to make it reasonable to the educated of the times in which it was written. So if the book at that time had been handed me, I would have desired to burn it, and never open it, but when I later had the proof presented to me that the Bible spoke of the coming forth of a book like this in latter days, and that this book answered to the description of these prophetic utterances, and also found that there was an abundant proof to refute the theory that these animals mentioned in the record were not upon this continent in ancient times, I was stirred up to make an investigation on the other side of the question. One of the Bible prophets says, "He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is a folly and a shame unto him," and so we ought to be very careful how we condemn anything before we thoroughly investigate or hear both sides of the question.

Upon last Sunday night I spoke on the subject of the church in prophecy, showing by the prophetic utterances of the apostles and prophets of the New Testament Scripture that the church would cease to exist in its organized form upon the earth, or as the Prophet John says in the twelfth chapter of Revelation, it would flee into the wilderness for one thousand two hundred and sixty prophetic days, representing, according to Ezekiel 4:6, one thousand two hundred and sixty years, and I tried to show from scripture and history that such was the case; that the church with the apostles and prophets, evangelists, teachers, pastors, deacons, as organized by Christ and his apostles, ceased to exist upon the earth, and even the doctrine was changed. Instead of teaching faith, repentance, baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit, as they did in New Testament times, there was a serious change in doctrine and finally there was a complete apostasy about the year 569 or 570 of the Christian era, as stated by historians, when the Bishop of Rome was declared the universal head of the church, and I tried to show that adding the one thousand two hundred and sixty prophetic days to the five hundred and seventy years it would bring it down to 1829 or 1830, when the church was to come out of the wilderness or reappear again upon the earth, and in this connection I used the text in Daniel that I now refer to, 12:4-9. The fourth verse reads like this:

But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end.

And at this time called the time of the end he says in the same verse "many shall run to and fro and knowledge shall be increased," and further on he says:

Then I Daniel looked, and, behold, there stood other two, the one on this side of the bank of the river, and the other on that side of the bank of the river. And one said to the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, How long shall it be to the end of these wonders? And I heard the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, when he held up his right hand and his left hand unto heaven, and sware by him that liveth for ever that it shall be for a time, times, and an half.

Here we have the one thousand two hundred and sixty prophetic days again, and he says at that time when the sealed book is to speak at the time of the end, in the ninth verse—and this angel said to Daniel, "Go thy way, Daniel: for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end." Till when? Till the time of the end. What then?

Many shall be purified, and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly; and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand.

Now you see it is repeated twice there. The angel showed him a book and said that the words of the book were to be sealed up. Not to be given to the world until a certain time called the "time of the end," and in the ninth verse again the same statement is made, and that the wise should understand these things, but the wicked should do wickedly and not understand.

Now over in the twelfth chapter of Revelation you have the key to this time that is referred to here as a time, times, and half a time. It is there given as one thousand two hundred and sixty prophetic days, meaning years, according to what the Lord told Ezekiel, and as I have shown you that time expired about 1829 or 1830. Then not only was the church to return to the earth again, but there is a landmark in prophecy that clearly points to this unmistakable fact that the sealed book or the words of the sealed book that Daniel saw in vision were to speak at that time. Not at the end of the world, but in that dispensation when the end should come.

Well, I have heard ministers of religion say, "You don't know that the end of this world will ever come." One very learned man in Australia said it was a mistake some people made, thinking we are living at the time of the end or when the end would come. "Why," he said, "that is what they have thought all along for ages, and they were mistaken, and this old world of ours will go along for the next five thousand years, and people will still make the same mistake, and think the end is going to come all the time, but it will keep on just the same as it has in the past."

Now Peter says in the Second Epistle that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of creation.—2 Peter 3: 3, 4.

But he says in the same chapter that the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, and he tells of the destruction that will be then, and that it will be like it was in the days of Noah when they said, Peace and safety, and sudden destruction came upon them, and so it shall be again. They shall not escape. "It shall come," said Jesus, "as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth."—Luke 21: 35. That shows us that people will not be found believing the doctrine of the time of the end, and of the second coming of the Lord. So they will be found unworthy and unprepared to meet him.

Now concerning this expression to Daniel, that the sealed book should come or speak at the time of the end: Go with me to the thirteenth chapter of Matthew, and there Jesus is speaking a parable of the sower of the tares that were sowed in the field where the good seed was sowed by an enemy; and afterwards the disciples came to him and said, Master, explain to us this parable. He said to them that the reaping time, the harvest time, is the end of the world; the reapers are the angels, and that when he shall come at the end of the world he will send his angels, and they will gather out of his kingdom those things that offend and do iniquity, and they shall be cast out where there is weeping, wailing and gnashing of teeth. I remember that an individual said to me, "I do not believe your doctrine, because the man who was the founder of your church, who brought forth the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith, claimed an angel appeared to him. That branded the whole thing as a book of lies, for there are no angels in this day and age of the world. The last revelation or angel that appeared was to John the Revelator when he wrote the Book of Revelation."

I asked this individual, "Do you believe the teaching of Jesus Christ?"

He said, "Yes, certainly. I am a Christian. I belong to a church."

I said, "Do you remember that Jesus said he would come again as recorded in the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew, and would send his angels to gather his elect from the four quarters of the earth, and another scripture says the Lord will come with ten thousand of his saints, that he will come to execute judgment upon the ungodly, or as Paul says, he will come in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel?" I said, "My friend, you read your Bible in a very strange light when you ignore these places where it tells you that in the end of time or in the last days there were thousands of angels to come where they only came by ones and twos in ages that are past and gone."

Now Joseph Smith claiming that an angel came to him and told him where these records of the Book of Mormon were hidden in the ground does not prove that true. Neither does it prove that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. Any man could make that claim and it be utterly false, but if the Scripture proves that there was a record like that to come forth in this age of the world, and this record answers to the prophetic utterances in the Bible, and the claims of Joseph Smith and the doctrines he taught are in harmony with the word of God,—the same doctrine that Christ and his apostles taught, it would prove that he was the individual who was to receive this latter-day dispensation or this gospel restored.

Now I desire to call your attention to another passage of Scripture. In the twenty-ninth chapter of Isaiah we read in the fourth verse:

And thou shalt be brought down, and shalt speak out of the ground, and thy speech shall be low out of the dust, and thy voice shall be, as of one that hath a familiar spirit, out of the ground, and thy speech shall whisper out of the dust.

Who is the Lord talking to? By the first verse you will see that he is speaking to the Israelites. He says there, "the city where David dwelt," which was Jerusalem. Now these people, some of them at least, were to be brought down, and then they were to speak out of the dust and out of the ground. Four times in that one verse, they were so to speak. Now I have not time to read the whole chapter. It is more or less concerned with the subject, but I will go to the eleventh verse:

And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I can not; for it is sealed: and the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I am not learned.

Wherefore the Lord said, Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men: therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder; for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid.

Now, when was this to be, that the sealed book, the record of an Israelitish people, which should speak out of the ground, was to be delivered to a young man, saying, "Read this, I pray thee"? Here in the seventeenth verse it tells us when it was to be, in what age of the world:

Is it not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest?

In Zechariah 10: 10 and Jeremiah 22: 6 it tells us that Lebanon is the land of Palestine. Christ said before his crucifixion that because they had rejected him their land should be made desolate, and it was fulfilled; but after this record, this sealed record, came out of the ground, was placed in the hands of the young man who was unlearned,—a few years after this the fertility of Palestine became an established fact. The rains increased there, and now we have the Israelites gathered back there by the tens of thousands.

Jerusalem has again become inhabited with them. It is as a fruitful field, and they are making beautiful gardens on the barren hillsides, as I learned from a gentleman recently traveling there. He says that you can look up the hillsides and see rows of walls, but when you go to the top of a hill and look down over the terraces toward the city you can see that these walls are terraces that they have built along the hillside, leveling off the dirt or soil, and there they have beautiful gardens growing, and there is an abundance of rain and vegetation, and the land is again blooming as the rose, in fulfillment of many statements in the Bible that in the last days or before the second coming of Christ that land should be restored to the great fertility it enjoyed anciently, and that some of the scattered Israelites scattered to the four corners of the earth should return and inhabit the land the Lord said to their forefather Abraham he would give them and their posterity after them for an everlasting possession.

I remember having a conversation with a person who afterwards united with our church, and I pointed to this fact, that the Book of Mormon is the only book in existence that claims to fulfill these statements in Isaiah. It gives us a history of the ancient inhabitants on the American continent who were here before our present American Indians. It says that two colonies were of Israelitish origin; that they came here anciently in at least three colonies, one from the Tower of Babel at the confusion of languages, and about 600 years B. C. a colony came and landed on the western coast of South America. Along about that time another colony came and landed on the western coast of Central America, and found the ruined cities that the people had built who emigrated here from the Tower of Babel,—found them empty. They had killed each other in war, and the land was found desolate. Now, I said, the Book of Mormon agrees with the Bible in these prophecies, for it states there in Genesis that from the confusion of languages the Lord scattered them abroad upon the face of all the earth. If that statement is true, the American continent, being a part of the earth, then some came here. The Book of Mormon says they did, and it gives you a history of those who came here (the Jaredites) to the time of their extinction by war, and as I said, if this book is not the book that fulfills this prophecy, where will you go to find the fulfillment? There is no other book that makes the claim, and if you should hereafter find another book it could not fulfill it, because the time is past. The book was to come forth before Palestine was to become a fruitful field in the last days, and that time is past, so now it is too late for their fulfillment, and when you take up the past, it is the only record that makes the claim. That person could see that it was either to accept this record or there could be no solution to this prophecy.

Now concerning the colony that came here from Jerusalem about 600 B. C. I want to show you that the Bible tells us of them. In the sixteenth chapter of Isaiah and eighth verse we read:

For the fields of Heshbon languish, and the vine of Sibmah: the lords of the heathen have broken down the principal plants thereof, they are come even unto Jazer, they wandered through the wilderness: her branches are stretched out, they are gone over the sea.

One minister in a discussion stated that that was the record of the Israelites going through the Red Sea when they came out of Egypt, but I said to him, "My friend, they came out of Egypt seven hundred years before this, and they didn't go over the sea, they went through, dry shod. Didn't go over it at all. Now," I said to this man, (the discussion was held in his own church, before his own congregation,) "if these prophecies did not mean this book, you tell this people what they did mean. If you can give a better solution of it I will accept it."

I am not teaching this coming forth of the Book of Mormon because it is popular in the world. It is far from popular, and if the theory of its coming forth is false no one in this world would be more pleased than your speaker to find it out. I will thank the man and receive him as a friend if he will show me wherein its claims are false. The Scripture says that the rebuke of a friend is better than the kiss of an enemy, but the rebuke ought to have some consistency behind it that would make it of value. Now

Israel here in this verse is spoken of as a vine. Psalms says of the Israelites, Thou art this vine: I brought you out of Egypt. I planted you here, a goodly vine, but you have become degenerate. So you can see that in prophecy Israel is called a vine.

I might produce other scriptures of this form from Jeremiah, and other places, but it is not necessary. He says here that they wander through the wilderness; their branches are stretched out. "They are gone over the sea." Now you will find that these words Heshbon and Sibmah were towns over the Jordan, east of Jerusalem, and when the Israelites came in from the wilderness from Egypt, Joshua led them through them. They conquered these tribes that lived there, and took possession of these lands east of the Jordan which were really outside of Palestine proper. They held them and there were certain ones the Israelites appointed to remain there. And the Book of Mormon tells us that these people emigrated from Palestine just before the king of Babylon came up and took Jerusalem captive, and put out the eyes of the king, and led away many of them to Babylon as captives.

But it was before this that this small colony of four brothers and several families (afterwards several families) left there, that they went east and south through the wilderness until they came to the sea. There they were instructed to build a ship and were brought to this land, and landed on the west coast of South America. The youngest of these brothers became their leader, their king, so to speak, or ruler and prophet. He was a righteous man.

They brought with them records of the Old Testament Scripture, and laws of Moses, and that is the reason antiquarians have found records, stone tablets, and other things in the mounds in this country, with the word Moses upon them, and parts of the ten commandments.

Now I wish to appeal to American archaeology. Baldwin says in his work concerning South America that down there in Peru, ancient history was supposed, according to the traditions of the natives down there, to have originated by a people led by four brothers. The youngest of these brothers was the leader, and became the first of a long line of sovereigns. You will find this on page 264 of Ancient America by Baldwin, written in 1872. Now you can see that forty-two years after the Book of Mormon gave the history of these people,—this colony that left Jerusalem 600 B. C. and came to this country, landed in South America, populated the land and drifted northward; the youngest becoming ruler and from him a long line of rulers,—forty-two years afterward Baldwin found out the same to be true in his research in American archaeology. The Book of Mormon gave it to the world many years ahead of the antiquarian. When the Book was given to the world the world rejected the idea. They said, "We know if such a people ever lived here there was no evidence of it, because the Indians had no knowledge of mining; they had no knowledge of working with steel or metal tools. The only tools they had were the crude stone tools, stone arrowheads, stone hatchets and knives, and that they had no knowledge of laying rock and of building cities and temples such as the Book of Mormon described."

But years after the coming forth of the book these scientific men who were not believers in the book searched, and they found in Central America many ruined cities, some of them larger than ancient Babylon. Great cities they found there, that would compare favorably with anything we have to-day, and the masonry was even, in some respects, greater than we have executed by the skill of the nineteenth century. Baldwin says that in South America they built a great roadway over the mountains and made bridges over chasms with masonry and built it for hundreds of miles, a roadway as long as our two Pacific railways; and makes the statement that the superior engineering skill of our day might reasonably shrink from constructing such a roadway as the ancient Peruvians built in South America, and their superior work stands to-day. And there have been discovered in the southwestern part of the United States, in Mexico or Arizona, irrigating ditches which were built in the ages of the past. The Indians knew nothing about their origin, and in many places the cement is as perfect now as when built. So you can see that cement work is not of modern origin. These people could make cement and build with it before modern civilization on this continent knew of it.

When the book came forth it was stated it was not known that such animals as the horse and the cow and the swine and other domestic animals were here anciently. As I stated in the beginning they were supposed to have been brought here in modern times, but after this book made its appearance before the world, the scientists unearthed the fossil remains of many different varieties of horses, from the size of the little Shetland pony up to the largest draft horse we have to-day, and in fact the bones of the swine have been uncovered, and scientists say it proves that these animals existed here many, many years ago in ancient times. So we can see the claims of the book are indeed being verified by scientific research.

I desire to call your attention to another passage of Scripture, one that is not commonly used upon this subject, found in the prophecy in the Old Testament Scripture in the prophetic utterance of Habakkuk, second chapter: "And the Lord answered me, and said, Write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it." You will all admit, you who have read the Book of Mormon, that it is written in very plain language. You can run and read it.

But, says one, that is simply something that the Lord showed this Prophet Habakkuk and told him to write it at that time, back there 600 years before Christ. Let us read the next verse: "For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry." You see he saw a vision, and in this vision he saw something that should be written on tables. (This Book of Mormon was written on tables or plates.) "For the vision is yet for an appointed time." What is that appointed time when it should be brought forth and speak? "But at the end it shall speak, and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry." You see it was to tarry, and not speak until an appointed time. Then it would not longer tarry, but it would speak and the time it would speak would be "at the time of the end," and it should be written on "tables." Now the word tables is only another word for plates. We say plates because it is modern, but in reality the record, this sealed book, was written upon tables, small tablets or tables that were fastened together like the leaves of a book, and thus it was deposited in the earth, and as the Psalmist David says, "Truth shall spring out of the earth, and righteousness look down from heaven." The only way that truth could spring out of the earth would be for a true record to be written and deposited in the ground, and then for it to come forth out of the earth, and to be written and given to the people.

"Now," says one, "how do you know that the vision of Habakkuk concerning these tables that were to be written in plain words is really this record?" Well, it says it was to speak at the time of the end, and if you will read a little further there is a clincher as to when this "time of the end" should be. In the fourteenth verse: "For the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." Now isn't that a clinching argument that this was to be in modern times? This is not yet come to pass, but the Scripture tells us that when Christ comes to reign as King of kings and Lord of lords it is then that those who remain will know the Lord from the least unto the greatest, and will have no need to say to each other, Do you know the Lord? for every man that remaineth in that day whose happy lot it will be to live and reign with Christ upon the earth, will know the Lord and have a knowledge of him, and at that day the knowledge and glory of God shall cover the earth as the waters cover the mighty deep.

Now, before that time comes when the knowledge of God is to be universal in the earth, this vision that Habakkuk saw will be fulfilled, where he saw tables or plates, and that there would be plain words written upon them that a man could run and read, and they were to speak at the time of the end. I have already shown you by the words of Jesus that the time of the end is that time called the harvest, which is the end of the world, as stated in the thirteenth chapter of Matthew.

John F. Short, of Chicago, wrote a book on American antiquity or archæology. This man was not a believer in the Book of Mormon, or of the Latter Day Saints' doctrine, and he says on page 425 of his book called "North Americans of Antiquity," that in Central America a Mr. Landas discovered a key to translate some of the ancient writings on the ruins down there. Many ruins were found in Central America all covered up and grown over by thick forests. These cities there were found to have been built with excellent masonry, built of stone, very large, beautiful stonework and cement, and beautiful mosaic work equal to anything found in Europe, and the writings on these ruins were some of them translated by Landas' key. A man by the name of Landas discovered a key to translate them, and a Mr. Bol-laert translated some of the hieroglyphics in Yucatan, and the word Mulek was written or was translated there, says Mr. Short, and was found to mean "to unite."

Now that is what the Book of Mormon says, that the colony that came over to Central America a few years after the colony of four brothers landed down on the coast where Chili now is; this colony in Central America was led by a man named Mulek, the son of the King Zedekiah of Judah who had his eyes put out by the King of Babylon when he took Jerusalem, and the sons that remained there then were slain, the Bible tells us. But this son Mulek led a colony away, and they landed over here, and finally the Nephites from South America drifted northward and found the Mulokites in Central America, and they rebuilt the desolate cities that the Jaredites had built that came from the Tower of Babel, and when the Nephites from the south came and found the Mulokites in Central America there was a compact formed between them. A union. They united and became a union, a federation, so to speak, and became one people. You see this word Mulek was translated there and means exactly, says Mr. Short, what the Book of Mormon says it meant: a union of two people.

Now Mr. Short's work was written in 1880, fifty years after the Book of Mormon said the same thing. In fact they didn't know, when the book was published to the world, that there were any ruins of this character in Central America; but fifty years after it comes to the world, this is published by the scientific and scholarly men of this country. Yes, we find every claim made by the book is literally verified, so that we can see that the word of the Lord in these prophetic utterances in the Bible are fulfilled in the coming forth of the sealed record, and the research of the scientific men corroborates the Bible.

One of these antiquarian writers says that in ancient times this continent had teeming millions of intelligent and enlightened people living upon it, and this man Short says that there are more than ten thousand mounds of earth thrown up by them, and in these mounds they have unearthed tablets and records, stone tablets, and copper tablets with inscriptions upon them that prove they were of Israelitish origin. They had a knowledge of Moses and the ten commandments, and everything the Book of Mormon claims.

When I had a discussion with Elder Roberts in Kansas he said to me, "What good is the Book of Mormon if it is true? What good is it? Does it add anything to our salvation? Isn't the Bible enough to save us?"

And I said, "Yes, if you will live up to the gospel as taught in the New Testament, it will save you."

"Well," he said, "that's enough now. That refutes Mr. Kaler and his church. You don't want any more than that confession."

"Why, we might say if you live up to the gospel as taught by Saint John's record, his writing in the New Testament, will that save you? Every man and woman would say, Yes. Then you might say, What need have you of Luke, Mark, Matthew, and the Acts of the Apostles? It is ridiculous to take that position. If one witness is good two witnesses are better, and if there were teeming millions on this continent anciently the Bible tells us that in every nation they that fear God and seek righteousness are accepted with him, and that he is ready to reveal himself to all people that will seek the Lord, if they should seek him they should find him.

Now if these people who lived here anciently and built these cities and mounds and did these wonderful works, that these antiquarians tell about, if they sought after God according to the Bible, God would hear their prayers and answer, and reveal his will. The traditions of the modern Indians tell us that their forefathers were a white and delightful people, and that God spoke to them anciently, and they were greatly blessed, and they had his word given unto them, but that they lost it through transgression. So we can see that some of the traditions of the Indians, scientific research, and prophecies in the Bible, all these things dovetail together in beautiful harmony, and tell us that this book is correct, and when you ask me what does it teach I will tell you this: that it teaches that you can be saved by faith in Christ, and in his name only you can find salvation; that you must repent of all your sins, and turn to God and live a righteous life; that you should be baptized for the remission of your sins, or born of the water; that you should also be born of the Holy Spirit, and follow its leadings in living a pure and holy life unto the end of your days upon the earth. Then its teaching is in exact harmony with the New Testament. We have had men say that is where the danger lies: It is so much like the Bible. It is a dangerous book, must have been copied from the Bible. It strikes me that that is a poor argument. If it was not like the Bible then they would be glad. They would say it is a dangerous book. It is not like the Bible, it contradicts the Bible, but when we say it is like the Bible they say also that it is a dangerous book,—too much like the Bible. You can see it is hard to please some individuals who have made up their minds they won't believe a certain thing.

Of General Interest

THE BOY SCOUT MOVEMENT.

What is called "The Boy Scout movement" has become a really important factor in the life and training of British youth. In this country the progress of the movement has been slower and, unfortunately, marked by some unpleasant episodes, but there is no reason to doubt its future success. The movement has been misunderstood, but the more it is studied impartially the more beneficial it appears.

The word scout carries a military meaning, but there is nothing essentially military about the boy scout organizations. The most ardent advocates of peace may, and do, give them their sympathy and support. The boys are taught obedience and "team work"—virtues that are as necessary in industry and social life as in war. They are taught to use their faculties efficiently, to study nature, to be self-reliant and alert and courageous, to find joy in construction and conservation rather than in destruction of birds and animals. They are impressed with the truth that it is manlier to be kind, truthful, and helpful, than to be tricky, "smart," and deceitful.

Practical sociologists have written much about the decline of reverence and discipline among American youth. Parental authority is almost unknown, and the school influences and surroundings hardly supply the deficiency in the home. The evil results are not always direct, but among the poorer sections of the community we have "boy gangs" and gang leaders, play bordering on delinquency, dangerous acquaintance with criminal resorts. Wholesome recreation under intelligent control has been advocated as the best substitute for the attractions of the "gang," but the recreation that can ordinarily be provided as school centers, settlements, and small parks is not sufficiently alluring to the more enterprising and adventurous boys. The scout movement takes them into field and camp, gives them outdoor life with some of its hard work and touch of danger, drills and taxes them, provides them with a form of organization that creates opportunities for leadership, promotion, and the manifestation of loyalty.

It will be remembered that the late Prof. William James proposed a "moral equivalent for war" in the form of compulsory service for a certain period in industrial and peaceful tasks, in well directed and strenuous warfare on inhospitable nature. He wanted civic armies to reclaim swamps, to fight forest fires, to clear jungles, to improve roads, to destroy pests and parasites. To some extent the boy scout movement is a moral equivalent for war—or for crime and vice, which mean war on society and civilization—designed to meet the needs and aspirations of the juvenile population. No doubt boy scouts would have their function in times of national danger, but they have even nobler functions in times of peace and settled industry. Wisdom and ability in the direction of this promising and great movement should keep pernicious influences out of it and maintain it as a force for efficiency, righteousness, and cooperation.—The Chautauquan for April.

THE CREED OF THE INDIAN.

In his little book, The Soul of the Indian, (Houghton-Mifflin Company), Charles Alexander Eastman, himself a Sioux and named Chiyesa, attempts "to paint the Religious life of the typical American Indian as it was before he knew the white man." Practically all existing studies on this subject, he finds, have been made in the transition period, when the original beliefs and philosophies of the red man were undergoing rapid disintegration.

"The great mystery," "The family altar," "Ceremonial and symbolic worship," "Barbarism and the moral code," "The unwritten scriptures," "On the borderland of spirits"—these are the chapter heads under which Doctor Eastman tells us of the simplicity and exaltation which marked the Indian's earliest attitude toward the Eternal.

The worship of the Great Mystery was silent, solitary, free from all self-seeking. It called for no temples or shrines save those of nature. Its rites were wholly symbolic "and the Indian no more worshiped the sun than the Christian adores the cross." The belief was "that the spirit pervades all creation, and that every creature possesses a soul in some degree, though not necessarily a soul conscious of itself. The tree, the waterfall, the grizzly bear—each is an embodied Force, and as such an object of reverence."

Truth, modesty, and the control of the tongue were important matters in the Indian moral code. Friendship was held to be the severest test of character. The hospitality of the wigwam was limited only by the institution of war. "The historians of the white race admit that the Indian was never the first to repudiate his oath."

Doctor Eastman says a bold thing on page 24. "It is my personal belief," he declares, "after thirty-five years' experience of it, that there is no such thing as 'Christian civilization.' I believe that Christianity and modern civilization are opposed and irreconcilable, and that the spirit of Christianity and of our ancient religion is essentially the same."—New York World.

DOCTORS WHO OPPOSE THE USE OF MEDICINE.

Others than the Christian Scientists upon whom the County Medical Society [New York] is now making war, appear to have gone on record against the use of medicine. The library at the Academy of Medicine has about as many volumes advocating the treatment of disease by food selected to fit the case as there are on therapeutics. The writers of these books are physicians, and the majority of them disbelieve in medicine. Some of them declare that it is utterly valueless.

Dr. Edward Hooker Dewey, who had been an army surgeon and had much hospital experience, says this in a book written to advocate doing without breakfast as a cure for most of the ills of life, particularly corpulency and stomach troubles:

It had not escaped my notice, even before I began the study of medicine, that whether disease were coaxed with small doses or blown up with shells, the percentage of recoveries seemed to be about the same, regardless of treatment. As my experience enlarged, so did my faith in nature, and since there was no similarity in the quality, sizes, and times of the doses for like diseases, my faith in mere remedies gradually declined.

For full ten years I visited the sick and dosed them according to the books, but with far less force of hands and faith than any of the brethren, and all were adjured to take nourishment to keep up the strength for the combat with disease.

I now see, as I did not then so clearly, that nature's victories are often won against the desperate odds of treatment that are simply barbarous.

Doctor Dewey then relates how he cured himself of indigestion that had dragged him down for years by the simple expedient of fasting from breakfast. At the same time he reduced the overabundant flesh under his waistband all that he desired, something he had never been able to do by any other known process. He gives a record of innumerable cases, which include celebrated pulpit orators and other physicians, who also were cured of their infirmities as if by magic.

He confesses that he did not himself know at first why it was so. He only knew it, but after a while he reasoned it out, and then announced he had made the discovery that food had nothing to do with strength. The whole idea of eating to get strong was upset, and with it a large number of the theories involved in the practice of medicine. As the body wastes every minute of the waking life, the only purpose of food, Doctor Dewey concluded, was to restore the waste. Strength itself came only through sleep. Food rebuilt wasting tissues and sleep restored vitality.

"From the first wink in the morning until the last at night," he writes, "strength departs, not in any way kept up by food, and from the last at night until the first in the morning strength returns. I became fully endowed to tell the sick that in the strength of the brain recharged by sleep is all the labor of the day performed."

One of Doctor Dewey's adherents, a clergyman, made this report after he had tested the no-breakfast treatment:

1. I have not had the first suggestion of a sick headache since I gave up my breakfast.
2. I gradually lost all my surplus fat.
3. I find that my skin is improving in texture, my complexion and eyes have cleared:
4. I experience no fullness and unpleasantness after eating as I often did before. I eat everything my appetite and taste call for.

The Rev. George F. Pentecost made this observation:

Desire for morning food is a matter of habit only. Morning hunger is disease under culture, and they who feel the most need have the most reason to fast into higher health.

Common ideas of what is good for the stomach are rudely shaken by medical writers, who advocate food of the medical fraternity and many of the principles for medicinal purposes. This is one jolt:

There is this to be said about fruits, that those containing acids decompose the gastric juice, as they all contain potash salts. As soon as they reach the stomach the free hydrochloric acid of the gastric juice unites with the potash, setting the first acid free to irritate the stomach. There is never any desire for acid fruits in real hunger; they are simply taken to satisfy that lower sense called relish. Because of the general impression that apples are healthful human stomachs are converted into cider mills.

"It will be found that no reason whatever can be urged why curative meals shall not always be effectively employed for treating sick persons," writes Dr. W. T. Fernie, author of the work, Meals Medicinal, "indeed why nauseous medicaments shall not be altogether supplanted by savory productions from the cook." He tells what should be eaten and what should not be eaten, according to one's physical condition. He is a little more lenient about the use of liquor than most of the other writers who prescribe foods for health, as they almost universally condemn alcohol in any form. . . .

Common white beans he regards as food for the brain because the sugar which they contain is identical with the sugar of flesh meat and in brain tissue.

Dr. Charles Reinhardt declares that the chief cause of infirmity of old age and a large proportion of the diseases of life is self-poisoning from over-eating.

"The widespread belief," he says, "that we must eat three meals a day to maintain good health is unquestionably one of the principal causes that lead to serious illness."

He advocates a substantial breakfast and just a glass of water for the midday meal, and never more than two meals for the day. It would be pleasant, he thinks, to be able to get along on vegetables and fruits, and thus avoid the necessity of taking the life of fellow-animals for food, but unfortunately, he says, it is not possible in this climate with the heredity of the mixed feeder behind to obtain health or display the highest efficiency upon an exclusively vegetarian or fruitarian diet.

An authoritative physician and writer made this flat declaration:

It should be distinctly understood that medicines never cure disease, with one or two possible exceptions—when, for instance, a poison in the blood is combated by another poison as an antidote. Four fifths of disease is the legitimate outcome of eating and drinking; the human body is a factory of poisons; excess in eating creates these poisons to fill the blood and produce disease.

There is only one cure for disease: Pure food, pure air, and pure water. These are the only agencies that make pure blood. The only agent that cures disease is pure blood. Pure blood is not made by medicines of any kind. In general, it may be said that medicines act just as so much poison when taken into the human body.

Even physicians have deluded themselves into a belief in the curative action of drugs. The superstition of medicine or the belief that medicines cure disease is a relic of what may be called the Dark Ages, extending back one thousand years B. C.—Selected.

Probably nineteen twentieths of all the happiness you will ever have you will get at home. The independence that comes to a man when his work is over, and he feels that he has run out of the storm into the quiet harbor of home, where he can rest in peace with his family, is something real. It does not make much difference whether you own your house or have one little room in that house. You can make that little room a home to you; you can people it with such moods, you can turn to it with such sweet fancies that it will be fairly luminous with their presence, and will be to you the very perfection of a home. Against this home none of you should ever transgress. You should always treat each other with courtesy. It is often not so difficult to love a person as it is to be courteous to him. Courtesy is of greater value and is a more royal grace than some people seem to think. If you will but be courteous to each other, you will soon learn to love each other more wisely, profoundly, not to say lastingly, than you ever did before.—Exchange.

[In the early days of the Home Column there was at one time much space and attention devoted to the discussion of the subject of plain dressing, and many were honestly seeking to more fully comply with the instruction the Lord had given to the church in regard to this matter, namely: "Let all your garments be plain, and their beauty the beauty of the workmanship of your own hands." At that time it was in our own mind, as well as the mind of many others, a puzzling question why we should make our own garments in preference to buying them ready-made. But this is no longer a problem to us, and we hardly think it can long remain such in the light of the cruel, grasping oppression, which the following article reveals to us is exercised by those who provide us with our ready-made garments, over the poor unfortunate girls who do this work. Please read the article carefully as we shall have more to say about it in our next.—EDITOR.]

The Factory Girl's Danger.

On Friday evening, March 24, two young sisters walked down the stairways from the ninth floor where they were employed and joined the horde of workers that nightly surges homeward into New York's East Side. Since eight o'clock they had been bending over shirt waists of silk and lace, tensely guiding the valuable fabrics through their swift machines, with hundreds of power driven machines whirling madly about them; and now the two were very weary, and were filled with that despondency which comes after a day of exhausting routine, when the next day, and the next week, and the next year, hold promise of nothing better than just the same monotonous strain.

They were moodily silent when they sat down to supper in the three-room tenement apartment where they boarded. At last their landlady (who told me of that evening's talk, indelibly stamped upon her mind,) inquired if they were feeling unwell.

"Oh, I wish we could quit the shop!" burst out Becky, the younger sister, aged eighteen. "That place is going to kill us some day."

"What's the matter?" asked the landlady.

"It's worse than it was before the strike a year ago," bitterly said Gussie, the older. "The boss squeezes us at every point, and drives us to the limit. He carries us up in elevators of mornings, so we won't lose a second in getting started; but at night, when we're tired and the boss has got all out of us he wants for that day, he makes us walk down. At eight o'clock he shuts the doors, so that if you come even a minute late you can't get in till noon, and so lose half a day; he does that to make sure that every person gets there on time or ahead of time. He fines us for every little thing; he always holds back a week's wages to be sure that he can be able to collect for damages he says we do, and to keep us from leaving; and every evening he searches our pocketbooks and bags to see that we don't carry any goods or trimmings away. Oh, you would think you are in Russia again!"

"That's all true; but what worries me most is a fire," said Becky, with a shiver.

"Since that factory fire in Newark where so many girls were burnt up there's not a day when I don't wonder what would happen if a fire started in our shop."

"But you could get out, couldn't you?" asked the landlady.

"Some of us might," grimly said Gussie, who had been through last year's strike, and still felt the bitterness of that long struggle. "What chance would we have? Between me and the doors there are solid rows on rows of machines. Think of all of us hundreds of girls trying to get across those machines to the doors. You see what chance we have!"

"Girls, you must leave that place!" cried the landlady. "You must find new jobs!"

"How am I going to find a new job?" demanded Gussie. "If I take a day off to hunt a job, the boss will fire me. I might be out of work for weeks, and I can't afford that. Besides, if I found a new job, it wouldn't be any better. All the bosses drive you the same way, and our shop is as safe as any, and safer than some. No, we've got to keep on working, no matter what the danger. It's work or starve. That's all there is to it."

The next morning the two sisters joined their six hundred fellow-workers at the close packed swift machines. All day they bent over endless shirt waists. Evening came; a few more minutes and they would have been dismissed, when there was a sudden frantic cry of "Fire!"—and what happened next all the country knows, for it was in the Triangle Shirt Waist Factory that Becky and Gussie Kappelman worked. The fire flashed through the eighth, ninth, and tenth floors of the great building like a train of powder; girls were driven to leap wildly, their clothes afire, from the lofty windows and in a few brief moments after the first cry one hundred and forty-three workers, the vast majority young girls, were charred bodies heaped up behind doors they had vainly tried to beat down, or were unrecognizable pulp on the street far below.

As for Gussie and Becky, who had gone to work that fatal day knowing their danger, as all the workers knew it, but helpless in their necessity—what of them? Gussie was one of those who met a horrible death. Becky, in some way unknown to herself, was carried down an elevator, and to-day lies in a hospital, an arm and a leg broken and her head badly bruised. Frequently the young girl calls for her older sister, but her condition is too precarious for her to stand the shock of the awful truth, and the nurses have told her that Gussie is injured in another hospital. And so Becky lies in the white cot waiting until her wounds and Gussie's shall have healed and they can again be together.

Conservatives, liberals, radicals, of all shades and intensity, are agreed in denouncing the criminal indifference that is shown to the murderous conditions in which men, women, girls, and mere children are compelled to earn their bread. The Triangle disaster has revealed an appalling state of affairs that exists throughout the factory district of New York City, and that presumably exists in varying degrees of badness in other cities. From the standpoint of the safety of the workers, everything was wrong. And yet it is hard to single out one person or institution and say that there belongs the blame. The proprietors of the Triangle Company were violating no law, and were but following the instincts and practices common among manufacturers in their trade. The inspection of the Building Department has been inadequate and loose, and ugly stories of "graft" have been set afloat. The ultimate blame must be traced back to the inadequate building laws, and thence to an indifferent or unawakened public that allowed such laws to be passed and to continue in existence. The huge modern factory buildings of New York City are what is called "fire proof"; such construction is safest to the builder and secures him a lower rate of insurance than would non-fire proof construction. The building in which the Triangle fire took place is as sound as ever; outwardly it bears few signs of fire, and doubtless the comparatively trivial property loss was covered by insurance. The great impulse that brought the present New York laws into existence was the safety of the dollar and the best profit upon it. The safety of the hundreds of thousands of workers, their possible terrible deaths, the widespread tragedies that death would bring upon the workers' families and loved ones—such things were given hardly a thought against the mightier dollar.

The tragedies that such tragedies bring upon loved ones! Two days after the fire I was in an East Side street that was a street of funerals. It was crowded with sobbing men and women; children wept with their parents; even little babies must have felt the bitter sorrow, for they clung tightly to their shawled mothers in an agony of terror. Among the poverty stricken funeral corteges was a hearse containing a rough pine box, and behind the hearse was carried a Jewish wedding canopy, all of black—and here I learned the story of another Becky and her Jacob.

Becky Kessler was out on strike for sixteen weeks last year against the Triangle Company, and was among the most valiant of those who struggled for safer and fairer conditions. She picketed about the shop morning and night, in cold and rain; she suffered outrageous treatment from the police; she was three times arrested. When the strike of the forty thousand shirt waist workers was settled, the Triangle was one of the few big shops that did not sign the union agreement, though in order to get its workers back it made a verbal promise to maintain union conditions—which promise, by the way, it very quickly forgot. Becky did not want to return, but she was penniless, she was half starved, she owed her kind landlady for four months' lodging, she had an old father in Russia dependent upon her wages; and so, after her sixteen weeks' fight, she was driven by the terrible necessity into her old position, and upon terms and conditions dictated by the company.

The Triangle firm had two systems of payment, piecework and a fixed weekly wage, and it imposed upon each employee whichever method of payment it preferred. Becky was a swift and clever worker; in the busy season, working at the piecework scale, she could make from eighteen to twenty dollars a week. The Triangle Company, seeing how quick she was, with sharp business sense, changed her from piecework to a weekly wage, and managed to get the same amount of work out of her for half the money. In the case of slow workers the reverse of this process was practiced—they were not given a regular weekly wage, but were put upon piecework. But, though working at half her real value, Becky kept on. Out of her week's earnings she kept one dollar with which to cover her car fares, breakfasts and lunches, and the rest she divided between her debts and her father.

Her great sustaining hope was that she was soon to be married. Her life with Jacob would be one of poverty, to be sure, but she would be free from the grind of the shop. Toward the end of winter Jacob begged her to give up work and take a rest before their marriage, which was drawing very near; she needed a rest, he insisted, for she was sadly worn from hunger and exposure when she had gone back to the shop, and the strain of her hard, tense work had given her no chance to recover. But she refused. She must work up to the very day of the marriage, for she must come to him with all her debts paid and with some money laid aside for her father. Besides, the marriage was now but a few weeks off. So she worked on, joyously checking off the days till the wedding day. And the end of this love's young dream was what I saw in that East Side street of funerals—an incinerated bride to be in a pine box, a black marriage canopy, and next in the procession a bowed, white faced young man with streaming eyes.

How many love dreams were blasted by that Triangle fire, God only knows. But here is a matter of cold statistics: On one floor of the Triangle shop, where they had fallen from charred fingers, were found fourteen engagement rings.

The dangers that lurk in the factory, waiting their chance, do not menace the worker alone; the strike blows, often irreparable, upon the worker's relatives. There was little Rebecca, who came from Russia two years ago at the age of sixteen. Too slight to operate a machine, she at first sewed on buttons, and later cut out the fabric underneath lace insertion, for which she was paid six dollars a week. Shortly after her arrival here her father and mother died, back in Russia, leaving a boy of eight, who was taken into a neighbor's family, and a girl of thirteen. This sister Rebecca determined to send for, and she denied herself food, denied herself clothing, held tight to every penny, till at last she had scraped together enough to make the first payment on little Minnie's steerage ticket, which she bought on the installment plan.

Three months ago Minnie arrived, her only baggage the clothing upon her back. Of course Minnie had to go to work at once, but her sister-mother, Rebecca, dared not stop work even for a day to help Minnie hunt a place. So Minnie looked for herself, and in a little shop on Grand Street she found a boss sufficiently disinterested to take on a little greenhorn like herself at nothing per week. Rebecca, with two mouths to feed on her six dollars, and with the regular installments on Minnie's ticket to pay, had even less for herself than ever. She became very thin and weak; often she wished to stay away, but she dared not do so, not only because she could not afford the loss of a day's pay, but more because she feared her absence would lose her her job. The company could not stand for having one of its machines idle for a day, and thus earning nothing for them. Once she fainted at her work. She was taken to a dressing room, was revived, and, instead of being sent home to rest, was sent directly back to her work.

She clung desperately to her strength and her job; she had to, for Minnie's sake. On Friday night before the fire she came home very ill with the grip. Her landlady urged her to stay at home for at least a day. But Rebecca would not consent to do this; she said she would lose her job if she did so. All night she tossed about in fever, but the next morning she dressed herself and went weakly back to the shop.

Well—Rebecca lost her job, anyhow. She was among those who sought safety by the great building's single fire escape that gave way, and who were found dead at its foot.

And behind there is left the little Minnie, penniless, unskilled, uneducated—the foothold Rebecca was trying to aid her to win not yet secured—no helpful relatives in Russia, not a friend or relative in America—and even the price of her ticket to this country not yet entirely paid for. "If that factory had been built safe, Rebecca would have seen that Minnie got a chance," Minnie's kind-hearted but poverty stricken landlady wailed to me. "But what is going to become of her now?"

Yes, what is going to become of her? I had to echo in dismay, knowing the dangers and temptations with which New York surrounds the ignorant, penniless, unprotected girl. What is going to become of her? Perhaps the fate that heartless factory conditions inflicted on Rebecca is, after all, a kinder fate than that which these same factory conditions are holding in reserve for little Minnie.

Yes, the danger to the worker is not limited to the worker; it reaches out and strikes down at the very ends of the world. Esther was the main support of her old parents in Rumania, though her brother Abraham, who was also in New York, contributed all he could. She was a very skillful waist trimmer, and when she went to work for the Triangle Company after the strike she received twelve dollars a week. Her excellent work was noticed, and she was soon offered a place over five newly arrived Italian girls, to supervise and instruct them. This offer was presented to her in the light of a promotion, and Esther so regarded it and gladly accepted. Under Esther's instruction, the eager Italian girls made rapid progress and soon were able to do almost as good work as Esther herself; moreover, they were willing to do it for six dollars and seven dollars a week, which to their non-Americanized standard seemed a tremendous sum. Thereupon Esther was told by the company that they could no longer pay her her old wages; she would have to accept a cut or go.

Esther already perceived that, under promise of being promoted, she had been used to train girls who would underbid her; but she was in debt after a long strike, she must send money to her parents, she dared not be out of work, so there was nothing for her to do but to accept the reduction.

She stayed on, lowering her own standard of living to the very minimum in order that her parents might suffer as little as possible from the cut in her wages.

Esther was paid every two weeks, and Saturday, March 25, her pay was due. On Friday evening she wrote a letter to her parents saying that she and her brother were together sending twenty-five dollars for the Easter holidays; Saturday evening, after she had been paid, there would be nothing to do but buy the draft, inclose it, and mail the precious letter.

Esther was paid, as was the custom, before her Saturday's work was quite done, but she never came home with her wages. She was among the scores who were trapped by insufficient exits, and who were crisped and blackened by the flames; her money was lost in the vain, wild rush for life. To pay for her funeral her brother used all his money—pawned all his belongings, including his overcoat, save the clothes in which he stood—borrowed from all sides. . . . And up in the tenement room which Esther shared with three other girls, in the top of her little trunk, was found the unsealed letter that was to carry her Easter present to her far distant parents—a present that now was never to be sent.

"Won't it ever be safe for us to earn our bread!" the agonized mother of one of the victims cried out to me. And sobbily she told me of a generation-long struggle against the dangers and oppressions of the worker. As a girl, and even after her marriage, she had been a shirt waist maker; she had seen the dangers from fire, from disease, from overwork, from underpayment, and she had joined in every effort to secure some betterment of conditions. Her husband was a cloak maker, and he, too, during all his working life had thrown himself into every struggle for improvement. They had tried to save, in order that their children might have an education and not be forced into factories; but the cost of living rose faster than wages, and they had been able to lay nothing aside. Last summer came the cloak makers' strike, and for long weeks the husband did not earn a penny. Debts piled up; their credit became exhausted; the mother would have gone back to her trade, but she was nursing a newborn baby. In this stress of circumstances they were forced to let their eldest child go to work—Rosie, then barely fourteen.

Rosie found a place in the Triangle factory. After the fire she did not come home. The parents searched distractedly among the burned and mangled bodies collected from, in, and about the building. Upon an unrecognizable heap of remains that had been gathered from the Belgian blocks that paved the street they found a tarnished locket, and in the locket were their own pictures. That was how they knew their child.

"For twenty years we have struggled for better conditions!" the mother burst out to me in her black bitterness of soul. "For twenty years! And what have we won? A death like Rosie's! They have made their shops better and safer for their machines and their goods, but for us workers—O my God! how long will we have to stand it? How long?"

And that mother who had fought the long fight, and now at the end of it all sat in her dark tenement kitchen, with a new life in her arms, mourning her mangled dead—that mother's anguished voice sounded in my ears as the outcry of the millions of workers: "How long must we stand this—how long? Will it never be safe for us to earn our bread?"—Miriam Finn Scott in The Outlook for April 15. (By kind courtesy of The Outlook publishers.)

BENTON, ILLINOIS, April 20, 1911.

Dear Herald: There are a few Saints here who are striving to keep the banner afloat. We read so many encouraging letters from the Saints, it makes us rejoice to know the Lord is blessing his children wherever they may be. We have recently had some good sermons by Bro. S. H. Fields.

Our branch (Parish) is getting along very nicely. Last meeting we elected the following officers for the year: Bro. F. M. Davis, presiding elder; Bro. Ernest Roberson, priest; Bro. Carroll Dillon, teacher; and Bro. Charlie Summers, clerk.

We are glad we live in the days the gospel is being preached as it was in former days by Christ and the apostles, and hope to live worthy of the blessings God has promised to his obedient children.

Your brother and sister in the gospel,
MR. AND MRS. MET ROBerson.

MOUNT VERNON, WASHINGTON, April 9, 1911.

Dear Herald: My faith is stronger and my desire more determined to press onward and to try to do my Master's bidding more fully. I do realize that the fulness of the perilous times are very near, even at our doors, and it behooves us as Latter Day Saints to cast away worldly pride, vanity, love of dress, and following after the fashions of the world. Remember the good book bids us to come out of the world, as we will have to suffer for disobedience, just as we would punish a disobedient child. Why should not the Saints give up all worldly things, so we can be equal in all things which will lead to a unity, and without which, the Lord says, we are not his? Zion will never be redeemed unless we throw off our worldly yoke. Think of the dimes and dollars spent in foolish coverings for the head alone. Count up costs and how many elders might be sent out to preach the gospel to this sin cursed world.

I have not seen or heard a preacher for over two years, because there are not enough missionaries to go round. I have had one or two openings where there has been a request to hear one of our elders, and been waiting, waiting; oh, the terrible waiting; too trying to one's patience. In my poor blundering way, I try to spread a small portion of the gospel truth, as I understand it.

If it were not for the church papers and my home class study of the blessed word, I would almost perish for spiritual food. Am, very thankful to my heavenly Father that I am permitted to have such spiritual feasts through our periodicals, which I enjoy very much. I can not possibly do without my blessed papers. They are such a boon and comfort to me in my isolated condition. The nearest branch is at Seattle. For the lack of the needful, we can not attend much. The article, "Why was Christ baptized," in the last week's HERALD, was good. I would like some elder to take up the subject more fully, giving references to help us out, so when we meet such questions, we would be better posted.

I will say in conclusion, that I will always remain firm in that faith once delivered to the Saints, although I make many mistakes in life. Pray for me, for I need your prayers.

Your sister in bonds,

SR. ALICE SAVAGE.

SHABBONA, MICHIGAN, April 16, 1911.

Dear Herald: I am still in the faith and striving to live as becometh a child of the King. While I meet trials and discouragements, I have ever found a friend in Jesus.

How sorry I am to read the pamphlet sent out by Robert E. Grant, of Grand Rapids, Michigan. Eighteen years ago I was very skeptical, but I have heard Mr. Grant state time and again that he knew the work was true. My house was opened for the elders, and he and many others stopped many times with me. Many were the talks I had with him, and many times he said he knew the work he was engaged in was true, and that the knowledge he had received was not from man. Then, how dare he make the statement he does in his pamphlets, and why the slinging of dirt? It does not show the Christlike spirit which every child of God should possess.

Dear Saints, let me say, Be true to your faith. We know that God hears and answers our prayers, regardless of what R. E. Grant says. We know that in unity there is strength. Let us strive to set the example before our everyday associates that they may see that we are trying to follow our great Exemplar, the Savior.

I have been in the work a little over seven years, and I know it to be true. Let our motto be, United we stand to conquer Satan. Let our conduct out in the world square up with our testimonies, so the world can not say, Hypocrites.

B. F. PHETTEPLACE.

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, April 13, 1911.

Editors Herald: As has been stated through other letters in the HERALD, we have a church building erected in this great city, and we hope ere long to have it completed, paid for and dedicated. Elder E. E. Long is branch president; who is at present attending General Conference. Since we have been able to use the church, we have better accommodations for all the services, including Sunday school and Religio. We have quite a few interested in the lessons of the local.

Sr. Ethel Conlin, who has taken great interest in all the different phases of the work here, left for Zion in time to attend General Conference. Learning that she was not intending to return, we met after prayer meeting, March 29, for a social hour, during which she was presented with an address and a few tokens of our love and esteem. Refreshments were served, after which all dispersed for home, feeling that a profitable time had been spent.

W. W. COMB.

628 BURNELL STREET.

LANCASTER, NEBRASKA, April 22, 1911.

Dear Editor: I thought I might again write of my work in the prison, that the Saints might know that I have not yet got my discharge, but still hold the fort, although a new governor has been inaugurated. He has not seen fit to relieve me of my charge as chaplain. I have taken occasion, since I thought my time was short, to give them some strong meat instead of all milk, and I have entertained them with our views on the marriage question at one time, and I made it as strong as I could with the three-books; then I gave them a sermon on the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, and while I stay now, I shall try to give my church doctrine without any excuses. In case any of the elders come this way going to their missions, I should be glad to have them stop over Sunday and give a talk to the prisoners, and we have a good congregation of visitors without prisoners and a good congregation of prisoners without any visitors, so a person doesn't have to talk to empty seats, as we seldom have less than five hundred to speak to. I am aware that the elders in their travels in missionary work seldom have that many to speak to.

I have had Elders Knisley, Porter, Hanson, Rannie, Sidney Pitt, and others here, and their sermons have been highly spoken of by the prisoners, as well as the officers of the prison. I have been very glad to know that no speakers from other churches have been more highly spoken of than those of my own faith, and it makes me feel that I am not afraid to ask others to come.

In case of my discharge from here I shall make it known through the columns of the Saints' Herald as soon as possible, that the elders may know that I can no longer give them the privilege of speaking to the prisoners.

Yours in gospel bonds,

JAMES HUFF, Chaplain Nebraska State Penitentiary.

IRONTON, MISSOURI, April 23, 1911.

Saints' Herald: As I am alone this beautiful Sabbath morning, isolated from the Saints, (except company,) I thought I would write a few lines. Ironton is located in Iron County, eighty-nine miles south of Saint Louis on the St. L. and I. M. R. R. I moved here about the first part of March, from Saint Louis. I am not sorry I left the city, as I think country life is far the happier and better life to live, though isolated from the Saints. I am trying to prepare myself for future happiness and to be able to locate among God's people. There are no Saints here except my wife and I, that I know of, and I want to have some of God's servants appointed to Southeastern Missouri District, to come and make themselves at home with us while here. I will assist them in getting a place to preach, as I believe there are quite a number that would become Saints. I wish to do what I can for the glory of God and the establishment of his kingdom.

The church is crying for financial help, but many are spending their means in other affairs of the world, seeking pleasures and gain. My desire is to become able to help, at least some, and if possible much help to the church of Christ.

The churches here are Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, Catholics, and Lutherans. This is called by some the sky garden, and Garden of Eden. It would be an ideal spot for a Saints' reunion. There is plenty of good water, fresh air, and mountain climbing.

Your brother.

ALFRED C. RICHARDSON.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. A. B. Dunham, Graneland, Texas, writes: "A few lines to let my many friends know my whereabouts. We are isolated and the HERALD is our only preacher; but it is a good one, as it comes with its inspiring and soul reviving news, a feast of spiritual food to those who are deprived of the communion of Saints. I will be glad to correspond with any that will write to me. I am not doing much for the cause, but I am striving to heed the admonition of Bro. S. S. Smith given us at Cleburne, to try to save ourselves if we could not save others."

Brother James A. Hervey, writing from Howard, Oklahoma, says: "A Lamanite came twelve miles to see me to get the Book of Mormon. He read some in it and said, 'Oh, it good, it good!' He said the Lord is just the same to-day. So he took his book and went on his way rejoicing. There are no Saints here but myself and father. I love to be with the Saints all I can. I was glad to meet with the Wilburton Saints in conference, and was greatly blessed by so doing. I hope to meet with them again in the near future."

Bro. S. M. Gideons, Robertsdale, Alabama, writes: "I have been a member of the Latter Day Saints' Church for eight years, and I feel better in the faith every day. We have a nice Sunday school organized by Bro. A. G. Miller."

News From Missions

Stockholm, Sweden.

It probably would be of some interest to the Saints in America to know how we are getting along in this far off land. Myself and wife landed in Gothenburg on the 21st of July, and after visiting some of the few Saints that are living in that city, we continued to Stockholm, where we have been since most of the time, trying to show the people the glorious gospel. We have learned that this is a very hard field. The oppositions are great. One of the hardest things is to make people believe that we have nothing to do with Brighamism, and that seems next to impossible. One difficulty is that we have not enough tracts to give a full answer to our belief. We need tracts that plainly represent the gospel, and at the same time show the difference between us and the Brighamites.

We have plenty of tracts that can be translated if we had means for printing. I have translated Brother Luff's tract, "Why I became a Latter Day Saint," and I think it will be a good one. I will kindly ask the Saints that are interested in this mission and the Lord's work in general, to remember us in this field if they have a few cents to spare for above named purposes. Printing is not so expensive in this country, and if we have only a few dollars it will give us a great help.

We have to pay hall rent every meeting, and I have done that mostly by my own means, but I don't know how long I will be able to do so. The few Saints we have in this country are poor in this world's goods, and can not give much help to the work.

I have many times felt greatly blessed by the Lord's Spirit in presenting the truth to the people, although the attendance has sometimes been small.

I believe the time will come when many in this land will accept the gospel. Some are interested and some will soon be baptized. This time seems to be for us to sow the seed, and ask our dear Lord to bless it, that the time may come when it will bear fruit.

We are anxious to know who will be sent to this country from the General Conference.

This has been my first year in the mission field and I have been compelled to labor alone all the time. I would like to hear from some Saints in America, and I ask all to be kind and remember us in your prayers.

Your brother in the faith,

OSCAR JOHNSON.

STOCKHOLM, SWEDEN, Plogga 12. III.

Cheered by the presence of God, I will do at each moment, without anxiety, according to the strength which he shall give me, the work that his providence assigns me. I will leave the rest without concern; it is not my affair. I ought to consider the duty to which I am called each day as the work that God has given me to do and to apply myself to it in a manner worthy of his glory, that is to say, with exactness and in peace. I must neglect nothing; I must be violent about nothing.—Fenelon.

News From Branches.

Fall River, Massachusetts.

It has been such a long time since Fall River has been heard from that it seems as though we are again as strangers in your columns. Although we have not been informing you concerning Fall River and the lives of the Saints who dwell here, you can rest assured that we are not becoming weary in well doing.

Fall River is a very busy town and so, also, are the Saints who live here; not only as regards physical work, but also in spiritual matters. My negligence in writing to you has been caused by lack of time, and perhaps, also, because I thought my letters might be censured by you, as you object to social information in correspondence. I have decided, though, to risk your disapproval.

The Saints here are, like their brothers and sisters in other localities, doing their best to advance the banner of Christ, and live in harmony with his precepts. You may find some who are not as good as they should be, but perhaps in every branch you will find that they are not all perfect. It is the duty of those who are spiritually strong to assist those who are weak in the faith. Our pastor is always ready with words of encouragement and advice to those who become discouraged.

A few weeks ago we had a calamity befall us that filled us with sorrow, and has caused inconvenience. A spark from a nearby fire caused the roof of our church to become ignited, and soon it was blazing all over. An alarm was sent in, but not soon enough to prevent us from losing the roof of our church and suffering a great deal of damage caused by the water. We have some good Samaritans though, in our neighborhood, and immediately we received invitations from two churches to hold services in their places of worship. One was the Church of England and the other a Methodist Episcopal Church. We accepted the invitation of the latter, and for three Sundays and during the week we have been holding services in their chapel. We have quite frequently held union services, and at each there has always been a feeling of good fellowship. The other Sunday evening both choirs sang together "The Hallelujah Chorus," and it sounded fine. We will hold our Easter service Sunday afternoon, and in the evening they will hold their Sacred Easter Concert, to which we have all been invited. These union services have been very beneficial, for they have shown to us that while our manner of worship is somewhat different from theirs, still we are serving the same God, and also, that there are honest, God-fearing men and women outside the church as well as in.

The repairing of our church is nearly completed, and we expect to hold services therein by next Sunday. It certainly will seem good to get back to our own church, even though our neighbors have been kind to us.

The young people of our branch have been quite active this year, for there have been no less than three marriages already. William Roberts and Margaret Billington in January were joined in wedlock by our pastor. A month later your correspondent went on a scouting expedition and captured the best young lady in Haverhill, Gladys Hatch, who agreed with him that married life was very desirable, and on February 20, we were married by Horatio W. Howlett, our pastor. About a month after, John Sheehy informed us that he was going to get married, which he did, on March 21, he and Elizabeth Baldwin becoming man and wife. The occasions were much enjoyed. May the life of each husband and wife be as happy as was the first day.

While reading Everybody's Magazine for this month the thought came to me that articles for publications are written to please the majority of their readers, and they are not always careful to adhere to the truth. Personally, I do not like to see people going around with a "chip on their shoulders," but I do believe in defending one's honor. I think a word of protest would be quite in order.

Soon the good summertime will be here and then we will gather once more at the reunion camp grounds, there to enjoy the best two weeks of the whole year. You can not mention reunion to anyone who has ever attended, without bringing pleasant thoughts to their remembrance. Truly, reunion is Zion in a condensed form.

In parting, permit me to extend to you the hand of comradeship and wish that happiness and prosperity may continually be yours, even as we desire it to be ours to enjoy. May the Lord bless other brethren and sisters in other localities, is the wish of the Fall River Saints.

Your brother,
ALMA M. COOMBS.

Sunday, April 23. Lovely weather, seventy-eight in attendance at Sunday school. Motions were passed to hold Children's Day exercises the second Sunday in June, and a picnic the Fourth of July. Bro. C. Hartshorn, from the West Side, occupied in the morning, expressing many good thoughts in regard to giving God the very best there is in our lives. How many of us consider the Lord's work first and uppermost in all our doings? Elder R. N. Burwell, of Hammond, Indiana, discoursed in the evening on "How the sons of God should live." How important to live each day as if it were our last on earth. Bro. James Keir and wife, of Matteson, Illinois, were in attendance at the morning service.

Wednesday evening, April 26. Prayer meeting in charge of Brn. Henry Keir and J. J. Oliver. Excellent spirit, and we wish those who were absent could appreciate the blessing they missed.

Next Sunday is to be called "Tuberculosis Sunday," as the ministers are to make an announcement in regard to fresh air, sunshine, sanitation, etc., in order to prevent the spread of this "white plague," that is causing so many deaths every year. How many of us appreciate God's sunshine, fresh air and wholesome foods as much as we should? When there is so much sickness among the Saints, we are often brought to wonder, Are we living in accordance with the admonition given of the Lord as to what we shall eat and what we shall drink, or abstaining from poisons that in time will have an effect upon our systems, both physically, mentally, and possibly spiritually? Let each one endeavor to live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God.

"Teach me to live and find my life in thee,
Looking from earth and earthly things away,
Let me not falter, but untiringly press on
And gain new strength and power each day."

"How many loaves have you?" It is the Lord's first question, and the hands of those who really want his help search their robes to see what they have hidden there. One brings his joy, another brings his pain, another brings his helpless desire, another brings his poor condition, another has nothing to bring except just his sorrow that he has nothing. It is a poor collection—only seven loaves and a few little fishes—but it is enough. His blessing falls upon them; and they come back to the souls which gave them up to him, multiplied into the means of healthy, holy, happy life.—Phillips Brooks.

Conference Notices.

The conference of the Fremont, Iowa, District will convene with the Henderson Branch, Henderson, Iowa, Saturday, June 3, 1911, at 10 o'clock a. m. Owing to the fact that this district will unite with the Pottawattamie District in a joint Sunday school and Religio institute later, there will be no convention in connection with this conference. Pastoral.

To the Saints of Southern Kansas: Having been appointed by the General Conference to labor in Southern Kansas again this year, we wish to request all the Saints, wherever they may be located in this territory, to write us if you want meetings. This is practically a new field, and there are many who have never heard the glad sound of the gospel. We want to carry it to them, if only you will give us the opportunity by your cooperation.

Remember the Lord has said, "It becometh every man who hath been warned, to warn his neighbor"; therefore let us not hesitate to comply, but "do it now," before it is too late, and we suffer the loss of the reward for helping to save some soul, beside incurring God's displeasure for not heeding his word. Do not wait for fear that we may have more calls than we can fill, but write now and we will see that your wants are supplied, and thus you may be the means of bringing some soul to the knowledge of the truth.

The Lord has said that if we save but one soul, great will be our joy in heaven with that soul.

Address me at Winfield, Kansas, R. F. D. 9, care of J. J. Boswell.

Yours in gospel bonds,
 ROY F. SLYE.

Died.

BARKS.—Carrie Barks was born at Corydon, Indiana, in 1834; died at the home of her son, J. E. Cline, near Tryon, Nebraska, March 29, 1911. Baptized in 1901 by C. H. Porter. Funeral preached by Elder C. W. Prettyman, at Tryon, Nebraska. She was the mother of three sons by her first marriage. After Mr. Cline's death she married Reason Barks, who also preceded her. She was for many years a patient sufferer. She was a faithful Saint, a devoted mother, and loving friend.

VEAL.—Bro. William Veal was born September 30, 1849. Baptized by Elder F. J. Chathurn at Spokane, Washington, September 9, 1903. Died April 2, 1911. He was stricken with apoplexy while working in his garden and expired without a moment's warning. The brother is survived by his wife. Services held at Saints' church. Interment at Greenwood Cemetery. Sermon by Elder A. J. Smith.

KELLEY.—Rosanna Kelley was born December 4, 1826, at Harwich, Massachusetts. She united with the church September 26, 1866, at Dennisport. Baptized by Thomas Gilbert. She passed peacefully away March 18, 1911, after an illness of only one week with pneumonia. She leaves three children, many grandchildren and friends to mourn. Sermon by Elder I. B. Ames, at her late home. Interment at Swan Lake Cemetery.

DIMOCK.—Mrs. Eunice Dimock, of South Rawdon, Hants County, Nova Scotia, wife of J. W. Dimock, departed this life at the home of her son-in-law, James O'Brien, South Rawdon, on March 28, 1911, at the age of sixty-nine years. Sister Dimock was an affectionate mother, a good, true wife, and a thorough Latter Day Saint. She was baptized by Joseph F. Burton, some twenty years ago. Many of the missionaries can testify of her hospitality and devotion to the latter day work. Funeral was conducted by Rev. Mr. Townsend, of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

CRANDALL.—Helen A. Holcomb was born near Montrose, in Ashtabula County, Ohio, Jan. 12, 1837, and died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Henry Bell, near Dow City, Iowa, Thursday, February 23, 1911. She was the eldest daughter of Bro. O. E. Holcomb, the sweet singer in Israel, who was so well and favorably known to the early ministers of the Reorganization. She was the second in a family of nine children, six of whom were present at the funeral: Z. B. Holcomb, of Clay Center, Nebraska; O. E. Holcomb, of Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Gideon Hawley, Woodbine, Iowa; Mr. C. S. Holcomb, Mrs. A. Jackson, and Mrs. R. Wight, of Dow City. She was united in marriage to Bro. Albert Crandall, October 10, 1855, and they became the parents of seven children, as follows: Harvey C., Ida M., Eva, who died in infancy, Ellsworth C., Albert, Nellie, and Frederick. Sister Crandall was a successful teacher in the schools of Shelby County, Iowa, for a number of years, and was loved by her pupils. She was baptized into Christ by Elder John A. McIntosh, September 8, 1861, and was ever afterward a consistent and much loved member of the Reorganized Church. Her last request was for the administration provided by Christ for the sick, and in less than five minutes after receiving the ordinance she quietly and peacefully passed to her rest. She was a loyal wife, loving mother, and a true Christian. Those who knew her best loved her most. She was an active worker in the church, and at the time of death president of the Ladies' Aid Society. The floral tribute presented was copious and beautiful. Funeral services were conducted at the Saints' church, Dow City, Iowa, February 25, 1911, by Elder Charles E. Butterworth, and the remains were laid to rest in the Dow City cemetery, to await the resurrection of the just.

TEAL.—Elizabeth Teal, wife of Joseph Minter, was born in New York, March 29, 1834, and died at her home in Duncans Township, April 17, 1911. When four years old she emigrated with her parents to Harrison County, Ohio. They afterwards came to Mercer County, Illinois, where on February 12, 1857, she was married to Joseph Minter. To them six children were born, all of whom, with her husband, survive. Sister Minter joined the Reorganized Church June 4, 1876, at Buffalo Prairie, and has been a faithful member. She has been a great sufferer, but always bore patiently her burdens. Funeral services at the home Thursday, April 20. Elder O. E. Sade officiating, assisted by Elder Joseph Arber. Interment in Duncan cemetery.

HOWER.—Bro. S. D. Hower, born October 5, 1849, at Saint Joseph, Michigan, was brought up as a Methodist, and lived as one until 1891, when he became a Latter Day Saint at Lake Ann, Benjie County, Michigan. Was ordained a priest in about 1895, and lived the life of a good father and Christian always. Came to Washington in 1904 and worked with the Milwaukee Railroad, being out of doors in all sorts of weather. He contracted tuberculosis in the spring of 1910, and suffered patiently through it all. He was ready to meet his heavenly Father when the end came, January 11, 1911, at Saint Joe, Idaho. He leaves a loving wife, two daughters, and three sons, most of whom belong to the church.

A Fifty Thousand Dollar Book.

It is fitting that the highest price ever paid for a book should be paid for a copy of the Gutenberg Bible, the first important work printed from movable types. But there are other good reasons why nothing short of a bid of $50,000 should have been sufficient to secure the two fine volumes at the Hoe sale. They make one of only seven known copies printed on vellum, nearly all of which are held by public institutions and can never come up for sale. J. P. Morgan is the owner of the only one in America.

That the Gutenberg Bible was printed at Mainz between the years 1450 and 1455 is about all that is known as to its date. That Johann Gutenberg actually printed it has been disputed but none disprove. To carry on the work of printing with movable types, Gutenberg secured several loans, principally from Johann Fust, who in the end took over Gutenberg's printing materials after legal proceedings to compel the payment of his loans. But whether or not the printing of the Gutenberg Bible was completed in Fust's house by another printer, the materials and the process by which the work was done were Gutenberg's. The honor of having devised and utilized in the middle of the fifteenth century the means of making the modern book can not be denied him.

Printed in Latin in Gothic type, the two folio volumes of the Gutenberg Bible contained 1,282 pages in two columns of forty-two lines; hence it is also called the "Latin Bible of forty-two lines." Spaces were left for illuminated initials and marginal decorations in gold and other colors, which were painted by hand, as in the case of the splendid works of earlier periods left by monks who were loving artists in the beautification of holy books. The Hoe copy is inclosed in heavy oak boards, covered with pigskin and bound with ornate metal clasps. Marking as it does the beginning of a revolution in human knowledge and progress, the Gutenberg Bible after nearly five centuries remains the finest monument to its maker.—New York World.

A man to amount to anything must be practical. He must actually do things, not talk about doing them, least of all, cavil at how they are accomplished by those who go down into the arena and actually face the dust and the sweat, until they triumph in the struggle.—Theodore Roosevelt.

An Accidental Discovery.

Blotting-paper was discovered purely by accident. Some ordinary paper was being made one day at a mill in Berkshire, England, when a careless workman forgot to put in the sizing material. The whole of the paper made was regarded as being useless. The proprietor of the mill desired to write a note shortly afterwards, and he took a piece of waste paper, thinking it was good enough for the purpose. To his intense annoyance the ink spread all over the paper. Suddenly there flashed over his mind the thought that this paper would do instead of sand for drying ink, and he at once advertised his waste paper as "blotting." There was such a big demand that the mill ceased to make ordinary paper, and was soon occupied in making blotting-paper only, the use of which soon spread to all countries.—The Christian Herald.

Doing things on a big scale by machinery may become such a passion with inventive folk that the delicate touches of hand work may be forgotten. A mowing machine cutting ruthlessly a wide swath across the field does wonders in a day. But around the flowerbeds and under the shrubbery a careful man on hands and knees with shears and sickle is none too personal. A piece of church or Sunday-school mechanism built for big work seldom does all that is needed even in its own kind of service. How much close personal, non-machine care is needed in the more delicate places! The machine does not replace the man. How easy it is for some of us to forget this!—Sundav School Times.

Pride is an abomination. There are some things the Lord hates and pride is one of them. How can we love God with all our hearts when we have pride in our hearts, something that we know he hates. Pride has its seat in the heart. It roots down to the very secret recesses of our natures. The outward manifestations are only indexes that point to the true state of the heart. Tearing the index out of a book does not destroy the contents, neither do our attempts to remove the outward manifestations of pride, free us from it; but when the Lord is allowed to purify the heart he takes away the abominable things.

Answer me! If in San Francisco after the earthquake the saloon could be closed and the people spared the curse of drunkenness in addition to all their other sufferings:

If General Wood could stop the fearful ravages of vice and whisky in Havana, why can not our authorities do as well for our home cities? And yet they say it can not be done.—Stainless Flag.

"The past is written, the future is beyond our control, but to-day is ours, and is an opportunity to bestow a gift which will be more welcome than any that money can purchase. There should be no guesswork concerning affection; 'make it plain,' 'write it large.' 'Silence is golden' when it represses bitter words or ignorant comment, but it sinks like lead into the heart which has a right to expect tender and trustful utterances."—Christian Advocate.

How often we are disturbed by the little vexations of life. It would help us to bear them with more equanimity if we would but consider how insignificant they will appear a year hence.

Road to Health

The road to health is for you to comply with the Natural laws of Nature. Let me give you two most important ones: Air and Food. Nature acts slowly. A finger nail renews itself in three months. The blood undergoes a complete change far more rapidly. If you eat sufficient of Klar's Good Health Flour and Breathe enough Oxygen, the blood is re-vitalized in a few hours. Oxygen is indeed very important. The breathing organ is the greatest scouring system of the body. I am greatly pleased with the great progress Good Health has made and how pleasing it is to hear of all the good results throughout the U. S. A. The time is at hand we all must go back to good old Mother Nature and work as she would have us, not as our minds and unnatural desires would have. Constipation, Stomach complaint, nervousness, etc., have positively been cured with this flour alone—never take a substitute, Klar's Good Health and nothing else $1.00 only—Guaranteed.

LAMONI, IOWA, MAY 10, 1911

Editorial

THE RECORDS AND THE CHURCH.

(Sermon by Pres. Joseph Smith, at Lamoni, Iowa, during the General Conference, April 9, 1911, at 11 o'clock, a. m. Reported by Sr. Belle James.)

The fact that a gavel made from material grown in the Holy Land has lain upon our desk during our business sessions suggests a topic to me, and I may have a few thoughts to present about it. These thoughts may be broken, and I may fail altogether, either to make you hear, or to interest you if you do hear.

I have not in the past been fond of endeavoring to trace the metaphors and the images of the old prophetic history, and finding their counterparts in our time, and in our world; but those of you who may have listened in the past to the presentation of that wondrous image which was spread in prophetic vision before the active mind of one of the prophets, with its head lying in the far east, and its feet in the far west, may recall to some extent the history, the mutations that have taken place in the world, through the influences of which that image, or its moral and religious effect have been continuous in the world.

The lying of this gavel upon this stand during our business sessions should remind us not only of the pit whence we were digged, the quarries whence we were hewn, but it should remind us also that our Lord again has begun to minister, so far as the last dispensation of the gospel is concerned, in that Holy Land.

I am not to-day so much impressed with the importance of any effort that we may make at Jerusalem as I might have been at the earlier stages of the church. It had been prophesied touching that land, that the wondrous city, of which we often hear sung that beautiful hymn called "The Holy City," should become the home of every foul bird; and from what we have learned from those of our brethren who have lately been there, it now presents a peculiar attitude before the world. In striking contrast between the old city and the modern city is the fact that nearly one hundred languages and dialects are now spoken in both the streets of the old and the new; and in the old still rests the squalor, the poverty, and the meagerness of human life that were manifest when the Master came in his humbleness to introduce the wondrous gospel which was to redeem the world.

Events have passed, the Lord has pushed the mutations of his providence, politically, materially, and spiritually, until now there lies across the world this image, and the feet with its peculiar construction of the toes of miry clay and of iron are noticeable; and the empire can no longer go westward, but must stop here and now, and when it makes any important move in any other direction it must turn back upon the traces that have been made in the past and go eastward until the ultimate is reached. Whatever others may believe, my faith is that when the gospel was instituted at the first it was instituted for all time, to become important in eternity, and should form the great character basis upon which humanity should be built, in order that as individuals and as communicants men might be prepared to live in the presence of God and his Christ; and that at no time in the history of the world has there been a period in which there has not been existent somewhere the seed of the people or the seed of the church. It may have been existent without the full authority to act in a priesthood capacity, or organized form, but the prophecies of God rested with the people. I know that our historians are proverbial in endeavoring to trace back to the rule of the apostolic quorum in the past, and some have claimed that they could trace the apostolic authority from there down to here; but I early became impressed with the fact that it could not be traced; that so far as the rightful authority of the ministry was concerned it had been preserved with God in Christ to be revealed in his own time, and that no effort of historians could possibly trace back their authority to act unto those apostles whom Jesus chose.

It certainly must be true that God has reserved unto himself somewhere within his divine realm a people worthy to be called his. You know that the reformers and those who have traced them since that time have been fond of pointing to the mountains in northern Italy and France, and in the valleys of the Voudois, finding the remnants of those who were left from the awful massacres perpetrated by misguided men and the bloodshed in the name of the Master. But the most striking contrast that ever presented itself to me, I find in the book called The Cross and the Crown, written by one Lieutenant Roberts, who had been sent out by the English Government to southern Europe to trace if he could the atrocities perpetrated by the Russians in the small countries around the Caspian and Mediterranean Seas.

This Lieutenant Roberts found somewhere in the valleys of these mountains a people who in their faith, a people who in their manners, a people who in their treatment of each other and their neighbors around them, conformed almost emphatically in similarity to those represented by the New Testament Scriptures. They were called "Bogamiles." And you historians, you searchers who hear me, you men of the ministry, I pray you, seek if you can, in the bookcases and in the libraries wherever you may go, and in the secondhand bookstores to find this peculiar production brought forth by Great Britain in its ministration, and you will find something that will interest you, and show you that there was a people there who might be called the people of God, and a remnant who were left of the Lord, and those that were called the people of the Lord.

My faith is that God had intended, religiously and politically, as well as materially, to find a place or make use of the place already existing, in which he could bring to pass his act, his strange act, and send out from somewhere the principle of repentance and religious and political freedom that should finally cover the entire earth with its influences. And then should come a time when the evil influences and power of material government should cease, and wickedness should be crushed out, because of the wonderful increase of good under the rule of Jesus Christ our Lord.

The influence of this thought has compelled me from the first to differ from some of the more ambitious or perhaps more optimistic of the people with whom I have been associated, and in the ranks of whom I have been found as an active worker, in holding that there should not be in this land a continuous storm of riot and bloodshed during the period in which the gospel should be steadily and steadfastly preached, to go from this land elsewhere, in the line of the accomplishment of its mission, that there could not be a peaceable prosecution of the gospel economy under anarchy and a ruinous rule of bloodshed and riot. I only give this thought for what it is worth, my brethren; think of it. You have known my life, whether it was consistent with this thought or not. I have steadily pressed forward in the pursuit of that which was presented to me. I am not now conscious of any time when I ever forfeited among my brethren that thought, to aid the ever constant, ever persistent, never resting, never failing purpose of the Almighty, to accomplish, through Jesus Christ and those whom he had called, the final spread and triumph of the gospel of truth.

What a fight we have made! Eighty-one years to-day since the church was organized! Almost eighty years since I was born into the world, and born into this work! Almost four fifths of a century have passed into history. What has been accomplished? There has been that accomplished which made the introduction of the gospel of the Son of God essential; and since its introduction there have taken place those things that have been brought to the mind of those who were at first, and have remained, steadfast in the pursuit of that mission which had been granted unto them, the never-failing thought that it was begun by Jesus Christ the Lord. It was begun because of the admonition of his Father to him; the command of his Father to him. It had remained hidden in Christ Jesus and in the authority of those who rightly held the priesthood, that when it should be restored it should be established upon that very approved rock and foundation that should never again be removed or broken to pieces.

I call attention to a purported prophecy said to have been uttered by Joseph Smith that "wherever the records are there is the church, or there will the church be found." It does not matter to me that this prophecy is quoted against us. Let me inquire what may be meant, what is the more consistent meaning of the words "the records"? Does it mean the record upon which was written the names of those who espoused the gospel economy in the angelic message stated to Joseph Smith by the angel who came to him? Does it mean the names of those who obeyed, which names were recorded by the secretaries chosen from time to time? If it does, where are those records? Have they ever been produced? A hundred thousand communicants of the church in 1844! A hundred thousand of them would have made a wonderfully large record. Where is the record of that membership? I have made efforts to trace them. I have made efforts to trace men whom I knew when I was a boy, and their children. Those names are not to be found. Whose fault is it? The records have been lost. Whose fault was that? The records of the Reorganized Church during the last fifty-one years can be traced back, and almost every member of the old church who united with us, and those who have been baptized into the church since, through the ministration of the elders called and sent out—practically everyone of these members may be found and traced, and we may know where they are, or where they have been, if they are living or dead. No, my brethren, it can not be that the spirit of the prophecy meant that we should take those words, "the records," to signify thus that record of names. Barely twenty-seven hundred of those names were reported to our historian as having been found at a certain period after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith as connected with the church. What became of the other seventy, or seventy-two, or seventy-five thousand people? What became of them?

My understanding of the more intelligent representation of this prophecy is this: that it refers to the records of what God has done in the world, of what he has said in the world, of what he has permitted to go into history, of his work, which he had attempted to accomplish in the old time by the sending of the gospel, by the incoming of the Mosaic economy, by the passing of the judges, by the establishment of all that led to the building of the temple at Jerusalem, and subsequent to it the destruction, spreading abroad from thence upon the surface of the land the men who were to people it everywhere, and finally to establish righteousness.

I have before me on the table here what we understand to be the record of the Jewish people as far as their religion is concerned, and it goes back in its history to the Garden of Eden and shows that the gospel was had all the way down until it became lost, and the evil took it by storm; but when it was restored under the ministration of Jesus Christ and his apostles it was again called by those so reinstating it under the New Testament the record of the Apostles of the Lamb of God.

When this record was brought to the attention of us who are "moderns," to use that expression, through the ministration of the angel, this New Testament gospel was restored, and you and I, my friends, to-day stand in our allegiance unto what is called the Bible, or these New Testament Scriptures especially, and our allegiance is held to it by the fact that we have committed ourselves, each of us, unto a belief in the doctrine of present revelation and have accepted its foundation with us; and its voice to us has been: "Thou shalt find my gospel written in my scriptures, and thou shalt take the things which are written in my scriptures which I have given you to be a law to my church, to be my law to govern my church." It was reiterated to us by revelation that it should be held so, and when that fragment was gathered to Kirtland, Ohio, there had been a prophecy made that the law would be given to them which would be good for them in their present condition, and in the New Jerusalem.

We have heard from the Old Jerusalem. Our hearts bleed for the condition of things over there. We would if we could lift the veil from that Holy Land, we would brush back the awful things that have transpired at that place, the sepulcher of the Master's bones—and the place of his rising; but we would not blot out a single fact of the history that has transpired from that time, and that which brings it actually before us at this time, by the visit of our brethren, in such a way as it has never been brought to us before.

I have before me—I suppose I have, it feels like it. Yes, they say seeing is believing, but feeling is the naked truth—I have before me what we have been pleased to bind together, we of the Reorganized Church, and call it the "Two Records." What are they? The record of the apostles of the Lamb at Jerusalem, and the record of God's people upon this land. They have been conjoined. The prophecy said they would be. Did anybody else ever fulfill that prophecy? Who answers that question? Have these two records every been brought together, practically, in a temporal form, containing the spiritual statements, the spiritual essence, the spiritual power, the spiritual presence of the words of the Master unto the twelve apostles of the Lamb and to those of this land to whom he came? Have these wondrous revelations ever been conjoined together except by the Reorganized Church? Who dares to answer to the contrary?

Now, brethren, I am not so egotistical as to say that I did that; but I am sufficiently conversant with the facts to say that it was done through the instrumentality of those who were chosen of God, first, as custodians of the record; secondly, as the ones through whom it should be presented to the world. I mean now the record of the people upon this land—Christ's people. And as to my associates, you have been sufficiently acquainted with the history to know that not a dollar has ever been made by speculation in the publication of the Book of Mormon, either in the translation or the publication of it. It has been with the poor people; and yet that work is doing a mission abroad, everywhere it is used under the judicious management of those who are preaching the gospel of the Son of God. And we find it conjoined with the record of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.

I take my share of the credit with those men who are thus bearing abroad these banners. I take my place in the work of spreading these two records, and say that my opinion of this prophecy of Joseph Smith is, that where these records are found in the hands of those who are faithfully standing before God and among men preaching the things contained in these two records, there is the church of Jesus Christ.

I preached here over thirty-five years ago among this people. I bore record for nearly a quarter of a century. I come back to you bearing the same message that I have always borne in your midst. I have not moved one step, either spiritually or temporally, from the stand I have taken here year after year; and I have never compromised the truth of those things which have been borne abroad by those elders. Not one of you can ever find a single instance where I have ever hindered your mission by anything I have said or done, that has thrown discredit upon the work of God. Now if you think I am not pleased by that much of my record you make a mistake. I value the integrity of manhood. I love the character of an upright man. He may not think as I do; he may not look at things as I see them; but when he stands in defense of the Master's work, and I know from acquaintance with him and from the knowledge of his work that he has been chosen of the Master, I will stand by him even if he goes down in defeat—and the Master will never suffer him to do that.

Again, I anticipate I have here the Inspired Version, a third witness in this controversy about the record. It is the Inspired Version, but where were the records of this translation or this version kept? An "elect lady" was intrusted with the custody of them. Did she faithfully perform the duties of her custodianship? Read the title-page of this book and you will discover this elect lady was chosen for this purpose. A committee was selected when the time came, and the voice of the church decided that the time for the publication of this work had come, and these records were surrendered by her, and by a committee properly chosen they were put into print, and we have the record here. O, bless the Almighty! A threefold cord can not easily be broken. And what a wonderful thing was presented here: records that have come to the world under different administrations and different periods of the world are brought in our time by men of our own age, and placed in our hand, we are given to understand the spiritual nature of them, we are given the spirit by which they were written and by which they were to be understood, and are blessing ourselves together in presenting them with the things that God has designed that men should know, and that they should reach from the rivers to the ends of the earth. A threefold cord can not easily be broken. It is true that the new translation, so far as the New Testament is concerned, is embodied in the two records, and it makes the threefold cord still stronger.

One other evidence and I am done on this point, if my time serves me. We never could have reached the height of successful aggression against the awful darkness that has come upon the world—religious blindness, which has happened in part to Isreal—we never could have stood and made headway against the errors of the past, if we had not received some direct manifestation from God, some direct manifestation to us as individuals, provided for in a general way to reach every member of the church, and more especially every member called to any responsibility in the priesthood, if there had not been provided by the Master that never-exhausted power and prescience of the Holy Spirit which was to be given to every man to profit withal, and by which the truth should be shown and known, comprehended and understood, by those who were its advocates.

I thank my God, that when in a prayer meeting in northern Illinois, there sat by me Bro. Charles Williams, one of the strongest minded men, so far as physical service is concerned, that ever was, one who possessed strength of character almost beyond my comprehension; and when I turned and saw him weeping like a child while a man was speaking in tongues down on the floor of the house, I heard a voice speaking to me, as one of you would speak to me now: "The Book of Mormon is of divine authenticity." I almost sprang to my feet. I raised my eyes and said: "What?" The voice spoke to me again. It was not Charley Williams' voice. I turned and saw him weeping like a child, and he said to me afterward: "I have often heard that expression, 'Except you become as a little child.' I have never understood it until now."

And he broke down and sobbed like a boy. And that voice reiterated the second time, "The Book of Mormon is of divine authenticity." I had preached four years without an evidence of the divinity of it, only as I believed in the Bible; but it was confirmed unto me. I have never doubted. I have never felt that the time would ever come that those iconoclasts who are searching everywhere and tearing into pieces the religions of men should dig sufficiently deep to ever disturb the evidence of the Book of Mormon, as to how it should come and what it was. And how earnestly men have striven to destroy these things; but I thank God, the Book of Mormon lives.

The record has been restored, and when there came one and put into our hands the revelations of God to the church by which year after year their value has been increased, and the testimony borne at the start has been reiterated, and reiterated again; where, brethren, where is the chance for our doubt? Suppose that I fall away, suppose that I cease, as my labors must inevitably come to a close as a result of the infirmities of age, as it must come to us all; suppose my place is taken by another, and the places of those who have stood so long by my side are taken by others; is there room for us to doubt?

And let me tell you a conclusion I came to years ago and reiterated in the little chapel at Salt Lake City in the far West. At that time a great deal of pity had been expended as to the fate of "young Joseph," the son of the Prophet. Thank God, I have quit being "young Joseph." But I built upon this statement: "I place myself squarely upon the word of God." A man by the name of Abram Hatch came to me at the close of the service and said, "You have been grievously misunderstood, and misrepresented."

"Yes, sir; I know that."

"I perceive that you plant yourself squarely upon the word of God."

"Yes, sir; that is exactly the position that we occupy."

I then put these books in this form: first, the Bible; then, the Book of Mormon; then, the Inspired Version; and then, laid upon the top of them the Doctrine and Covenants, in which the revelations have come to us as individuals and as an organization, and I said to that people:

"Now, whatever may be your opinion, I do not know. I am not worrying about that. But here are the records as they were left. And we of the Reorganized Church have placed ourselves upon these records squarely. As an individual I propose to go into the great judgment which shall be beyond, and if I am permitted to carry these records with me, I propose to say to Him, who sits upon the throne, 'I have acted upon what you sent out into the world as your word. I understood that there was to be no compromise in what you sent out. I understood that these words you had spoken were to be for all time. I have understood that these words were never to perish, and that those who obeyed them and stood by them should be saved. Now, if, with this understanding, I have done wrong in taking these records as I have found them, I must submit to the judgment which thou shalt pass upon me, for my condemnation.'" I further stated: "I propose to continue and make this plea there and say to the judge, 'Condemn me if you can, justly.'"

I know that some would say, "Brother Smith, that is almost blasphemous."

No; it is not. It is but manifesting a confidence in the integrity of God in dealing with us as men. It is in recognition of the personal integrity that should govern us as men; it is in recognition of that wondrous spirit of self-dependence that marks us as individualities endowed of God with the authority and the right to pursue that way that seems reasonable to us according to his word, and build upon what he has said, and stand by it until the crucial moment. That is what it means.

I have no fellowship with this truculent humanity that to-day may be one thing and to-morrow be something else, and I stand for the perpetual and inalienable manhood that God has intrusted us with. That is where I stand.

I did not know, nor do I now know, how long I shall stay. Thank God, I have been permitted to come back here once more—bless you, I can not say to "see you"—I wish I could. But I am not finding any fault. I know there is a mass of people before me, many whom I know and have known in the past. I thank God for this privilege. I have confidence in them; I know them as they will be hereafter. So, I am thankful to be with you here this morning and once more attempt to bear the testimony of a physically failing man to that which has been his lifelong care and study. May God help us to the end is my prayer. Amen.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

In the SAINTS' HERALD for March 29, in the department of Notes and Comments, there appears a paragraph regarding a certain member of the Independence Branch who was expelled from the church on the findings of the High Council. Subsequently his wife brought suit in the civil courts against four church officials living at Independence. The statement in the paragraph to the effect that the position of the church had been sustained by the civil court was based on statements found in an exchange to the effect that the court had dismissed the case, thus sustaining the position of the church. The members involved feel that the comment does them injustice and that it misrepresents them. They write that the case was voluntarily withdrawn, and the woman who brought the suit for damages says that she did so on account of promptings of the Spirit which led her to leave the matter in the hands of the Lord for final adjustment. She feels that this fact should be made known, and we willingly give it publicity, as it is not our desire to misrepresent or injure anyone.

The last number of Alfred Henry Lewis's article, "The viper's trail of gold," appearing in the May Cosmopolitan, contains the most brutal indorsement of mob law and murder that we have read in a long time. In his statement, found on page-824, where he says, "With that the Illinois people, as had the incensed Missourians, fell foul of the Mormons, and, among other worthy deeds, killed Joe Smith and his brother Hyrum."

In our Letter Department will be seen a letter from Bro. T. W. Williams, from Webb City, Missouri, where he is holding a two weeks' meeting. Bro. Hale W. Smith is assisting him in the services and has charge of the singing. It seems from the reports of this effort appearing in the Webb City papers, the Register and the Sentinel, that these meetings are a great success, each of the papers giving column long notices of Brother Williams' sermons.

A clipping from the Omaha Bee for April 16 is sent us by Bro. Charles Jensen, of Council Bluffs. This item is a communication from one H. H. Field, who claims to know much concerning the migrations and virtues of the Mormons. Mr. Field is eighty-seven years old. He answers some of the imaginings of Alfred Henry Lewis who recently romanced in the columns of the Cosmopolitan magazine. We may be able to use Mr. Field's article in whole or in part in our column of General Interest.

In a personal letter to the Associate Editor, Bro. Walter W. Smith, of Philadelphia, writes as follows:

"You will see by the inclosures that we have layed the corner stone to the new building we are erecting here. It is in the nature of an addition, but so large that we will have twice the seating capacity that we now have; and we are building it so that we will have a fine gymnasium and school rooms. We have been growing some of late, and now are unable to accommodate the audiences even on Sunday evenings, and for Sunday school we have to use two residence properties in the neighborhood. Three classes, one of boys or young men, and two of men, have to have their class work in these separate buildings. We expect to have the new building ready by the first of July, in time for the summer school work.

"The day was an ideal one here, and the services were all very good; yesterday, at 11 a. m., more than five hundred people witnessed the laying of the corner stone and listened attentively to the historical address. The singing was by a chorus of thirty voices; the congregational singing was inspirational, and the vast throng simply made 'Onward Christian Soldiers' ring out; as also, 'Holy, Holy, Holy.' The very best of attention was observed. At 7.45 p. m., the church was packed, while I tried to preach on the subject, 'Ask for the Old Paths.'" Seventy-one non-members were counted; possibly others were there. Three young men, just in the bloom of youth, asked for baptism last night; will administer the ordinance Thursday evening. This will be seven for the conference year of 1911-12. Four others asked for baptism, to be administered later, and so the good work moves. We have opened a very interesting mission about fourteen blocks from the church, once an independent mission, but we were asked to preach there, and after some weeks' work by Elder William Anderson and others, it is now practically Latter Day Saint. We will have full charge soon, good interest.

"The work here is prospering in many ways. I feel that I missed very much by not attending the late conference, but it was impractical for me to leave, as the builders were here at work, and other things claimed our attention. We have an unusual opportunity here, great interest in the gospel, and we hate to lose any opportunity of reaching the people. We distributed from house to house three thousand of the 'advocates' announcing the service of yesterday. We also got a favorable newspaper notice."

At the regular annual election held by the United Order of Enoch, at Independence, Missouri, the first Monday in May, the following named brethren were elected trustees: E. L. Kelley, A. H. Parsons, B. J. Scott, G. H. Hilliard, J. T. Curtis, Ellis Short, G. H. Harrington, F. M. Smith, D. J. Krahl, David Reese, W. B. Kelley, and W. R. Dexter.

HAVE FAITH IN GOD.

The Christian life is one of continual progress, both in grace and truth. Even now, the knowledge of the Lord covers the earth as the waters do the seas, and to the earnest seeker after truth, like the dove first sent out of the ark, there is nothing in the wide world to afford him rest but the consciousness of truth. His mind reaches out beyond the things visible, with the hope of more clearly comprehending the invisible. Such a hope has been divinely planted and is the one great inspiration to life.

What an intense longing exists in the soul of every true Saint to experience the results of an invincible faith in God. All seem conscious of failure in some degree, but none is willing to give up the struggle. They feel that success is certain, and their hope increases as experience enlightens and strengthens them. Faith is as difficult for the mind to conceive as it is for the lips to express a meaning. No definition of man can fully describe its workings or limit its power. We may substitute the words, trust, confidence, assurance, etc., but these do not convey to us the equivalent of faith. They reveal only the man side of the question, and that imperfectly. Words can not bound it. Eternity alone can do that. However, we are only beginners in the study of eternal things, and our comprehension of such matters can not exceed the mortal limit. God requires no more of us, and we will have done well to succeed in attaining even this limited understanding and conformation to the divine nature. May we never doubt. In our present condition, circumscribed on all sides as we are, we will find it difficult to believe all things. If it were otherwise, the curse of sin would not have reached us, and there would have been no struggle for the mastery of right over wrong. Some may be less inclined to doubt than others, but all will have their faith tested, each in his own way. The visionary man will have his troubles, so also will the hard reasoning man of fact, who knows no fancy. The former may appear to have the advantage over the latter, in that he believes with little or no demonstration, while the latter withholds his support until the truth of the matter is in some way demonstrated. But when we consider the susceptibility of the visionary man to spirit influences and human sympathies, we value the presence of the other, and feel that he is a saving factor in the body. Neither extreme is safe. To break midway is better.

But faith in God must not be construed to mean faith in man. There is a vast difference between the two, as it is written, "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man and maketh flesh his arm." We are not at liberty to substitute the arm of flesh for the arm of God. The man thus honored may feel greatly elated, but God would be insulted. However, all men must unite and work together. Confidence in each other is a necessity, as it is the only proper way to build each other up; and beside, it is the combined faith of the body that leads to perfect unity, —a oneness of heart and mind.

This allowed, my faith in another, no matter what his official standing in the church, is necessarily limited to my faith in God. I can not have greater confidence in my brother than in God, or at least such is not required of me, for the moment I do trust my brother beyond my faith in Jehovah, I place my trust in the arm of flesh. The Lord then has second place in my affections. Perhaps the brother in question may be correct in his contention, but in no case should he ask me to trust him beyond my understanding or confidence in God. If lacking in the latter quality, I need instruction in the law of God; then my faith may increase and eventually I come to harmonize with my advanced brother. To force subjection, or even persuade submission to another's conception of the divine mind is wrong. We have only to recall the past, and we have many convincing evidences along that line. The principle is wrong and disaster is sure to follow. Our interests are one, and there should be just enough faith in each other to unite the whole in the service of God, without friction or suspicion. More than this results in a curse.

Faith in God is an absolute necessity to the working of the Spirit of truth, and to keep pace with the Spirit's teaching and leading, is the one great redeeming feature of our life. Limited though we are to mortal possibilities, very few if any have ever reached the limit. We have wonderful examples of faith in the Bible and Book of Mormon, and these inspire us to greater activity and nobler deeds. We therefore hold fast to the rod of iron in full hope. In Jesus we have the most perfect example. He clearly demonstrated the principle, and so we look upon him as our example and model. But the writer has no thought of any Saint, however successful, equaling the faith or works of the Savior. Christ had a special mission into this world and was especially fitted for it. His faith and works were equal to the occasion, and inasmuch as he stands alone the Redeemer of the race, his divine prerogatives were peculiar to him only. Progress is imperative, and a certain state of perfection demanded, but the perfect bliss of the Savior's life will never be known to us on this side of the death line. He will still be our teacher and model during the reign of peace and glorified conditions. No doubt we will add much to our spiritual stature under the increased privileges of that sanctified age. The Savior's knowledge of the spirit world and its laws, and of God's holy person and power, was the basis of all the miracles wrought, and possibly the secret of his extraordinary faith. He knew what he commanded would be fulfilled, because he knew how it would be done. With us results are so uncertain that blessing appears more accidental than otherwise. This is not the fault of the law, but because of our imperfect conception of the law. What was thus clear to the mind of Christ is a mystery to us and will so continue till our knowledge equals his. Jesus certainly had in his mind a true mental picture of God's person, and also a recollection of his preexistent glory. He had also a true mental picture of Satan, and understood the working of laws superior to any known to man. Men have no such knowledge, consequently their power is less.

Faith is easy and natural in its own realm, but its realm is one of certainty, of which little is known in this world. It admits of no wavering, or forcing of the mind, for that indicates uncertainty. Peter's experience in walking upon the water serves to illustrate this point. As soon as his thought reverted to the water, the charm was broken and he began to sink. Jesus remarked, "O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?" Christ was fully conscious of being on the water and of Peter's failure, but remained undisturbed. He had a full conception of the law where Peter's knowledge was very slight. If to walk upon the water requires but "little faith," how much faith do we exercise ordinarily?

We must appear before the Lord as very weak and ignorant. Yet he shows great mercy, and opens to us daily the door of opportunity. Individually this is true, and collectively as a church it is also true. How will we improve upon present conditions? When will the time come for a decided advance in spiritual life? Who will lead the way? These are questions of moment and must be taken seriously. May we feel ourselves drawn nearer to God, as the giver of all life, and ceaselessly striving to approve ourselves unto the Lord, labor in faith till the end comes.

OBEDIENCE.

Henry Drummond says: "Obedience the organ of spiritual knowledge." This statement is very strongly affirmed by the Master in the seventh of Matthew, seventh verse: "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." We observe here three very important statements: notice, three antecedents; upon these are based three results. Can the results follow if the antecedents are not followed? Certainly not. You might as well talk about crops without planting. You sow the seed, all other things necessary being operative, such as land, rain, and sunshine, and the crop follows.

Well, then, if we want to know anything we must seek, and in a very proper way. There is a very great deal depends upon that. If a boy wants to learn a trade, or profession, he must not only apply himself, but as directed by his tutors or instructors.

Finding is the result of seeking; to have things given you is (spiritual at least, the Savior affirms) the result of asking. But if you do not ask, can you expect them to be given? There is a proper way to ask. The Apostle James throws light here in James 1: 6:

"But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed." Is not that a lucid explanation? Could anything be clearer?

So we must not ask only, but ask right, properly, correctly. This is extremely important. All this applies to: "Knock, and it shall be opened unto you." Why, we know there is a right way and a wrong way to everything in life. Ask in faith. But how can I ask in faith when I have none? True, but can it be possible the Majesty on high says we must have something we can not get? or is unobtainable? Certainly not. Saint Paul understood that, when he said: "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard?"—Romans 10: 13, 14.

True, man is an intelligent being, to reason and act for himself. He can not have faith in God, or believe in him, unless he understands a reason for it, so in the 17th verse he says: "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." Not only must he hear, but hear aright, from the true or proper source—the word of God. It tells us: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path."—Psalm 119: 105.

So, then, we see how essential it is to conform to the means provided by our Father for our guidance through this life. Obedience to his plan is the organ of spiritual knowledge. Natural things we know in a natural way. The divine teacher—rather the teacher of divine methods—tells us: "For what man knoweth the things of man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God."—1 Corinthians 2: 11.

We see, then, how very essential it is to seek to obtain the Spirit of God, and the fact confronts us that, "The world by [its] wisdom knew not God."—1 Corinthians 1: 21. "But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit."—1 Corinthians 2: 10. And again James 1: 5: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." Here is the same essential fact presented again:

you can get wisdom, but only through the means provided. The door is wide open, but you can dodge all around it and learn nothing. "Come unto me and learn of me," said the great Teacher. "Other foundation can not man lay," but the foundation of God stands sure.

Please note this: Though he were a son, yet learned he obedience. And being made perfect (by obedience) he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him. Could he have been made perfect without obedience? If he could not, can we? and note, he "became the author of eternal salvation." Is it fair to say without obedience he could have accomplished the same thing? Hardly. And he became perfect. We too are advised to "go on to perfection": also "be ye perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." These are the Master's own words.

We have very strong exemplifications of obedience in 1 Chronicles 22: 13 and Daniel 1: 3-16. These also brought physical blessings, and partook of spiritual. Again John 17: 17: "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." Obedience to the word would result in their possessing truth. James says, we are begotten with the word of truth (1: 18). The twenty-first verse says: "Receive with meekness the ingrafted word, which is able to save your souls." Does not "receive" mean obey? If not, what does it mean? "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."—John 13: 17.

It is the doing that brings results. Abraham when he was called to go out into a place which he should afterwards receive for an inheritance, obeyed, and he went out not knowing whither he went. Obedience, and trust or faith are both manifested here. So as we carefully examine and study God's word we are unmistakably informed that obedience is the means, the gateway and avenue through which spiritual knowledge, and we may say any other information, comes to us.

"Yes, trust and obey,
For there's no other way,
To be happy in Jesus,
But to trust and obey."

THE TWO COVENANTS—THE NEW AND THE OLD.

Quite recently a lengthy letter, written by a Seventh Day Adventist minister, was placed in our hands by a friend writing from Wray, Colorado. It was written by one who was quite well posted, and claims to speak for the Saints also by contrast to an extent, as well as for the faith of our friends, the Adventists.

The letter in a brief way takes in nearly all the Adventists' theory. The minister writing the letter refuses to debate, unless challenged and urged to, stating that "debating is in bad company," according to Romans 1:29, where the Apostle Paul writes of debate as carried on by "haters of God," unregenerate and wicked. This is not the class referred to by Jude (verse 3) when he says, "Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints."

Our friend, unwilling to debate, proceeds to conclude without an investigation, "The Latter Day Saints can no more maintain their doctrines from the Bible than can Spiritualists and Antinomians (no-law-people)." Isn't that a bold, broad statement?

In the first place, Latter Day Saints have, and profess no doctrines, but the doctrine (not doctrines) of Christ. Men and devils have doctrines (see Matthew 15:9; 1 Timothy 4:1). Christ has taught but one "straight and narrow way," but one system of doctrine; and that is based on eternally essential, undeviating, unchangeable, fundamental principles. It is therefore divine and infinite science. It can not be divided or prevented without rendering it void and inoperative, so far as its divine purpose is concerned. (Galatians 1:6-12).

Any other gospel than the one that Paul and all God's ministry were and are divinely commissioned to preach, are no gospels at all; and men are "cursed" for preaching any other.

Paul enumerates the basic principles of Christ's doctrine in his Hebrew letter (Hebrews 5:12; 6:1, 2). Let us read: "Faith toward God" (Hebrews 11:16), "Repentance from dead works." We conclude, inasmuch as Paul's letter to the Hebrews is designed to show the contrast between the Covenant given through Moses and the new covenant given through Christ, that the "dead works" from which the Hebrews were to repent, were the works formerly required under that old covenant, which was "written and engraven on stones." (See chapters 1 to 10 of this letter, as to what the old covenant was; also Exodus 19:7, 8; 20:1-17).

This is the oldest account we have of the terms of the old covenant, and they were consecrated to Israel, by the blood of animals (Exodus 24:1-8; Hebrews 9:18-21). Moses called the ten commandments God's covenant with his people Israel (Deuteronomy 5:2), and in the twenty-two verses following tells its specific terms, and at verse twenty-two, confines God's words to the ten commandments, and the terms of it there written.

Out of these ten commands, are given the statutes of the code. See, for instance, Moses' comment on the fifth command (Exodus 21:12-25; Leviticus 18th chapter). Moses develops the scope of the seventh commandment, calling it and its outgrowing statutes, "judgments" and "ordinances." Also, note how Moses constructs law, taking the first of the ten commandments for a text (Leviticus 20:1-8). These examples show that the ten commandments are the basis upon which the entire code of law given to Israel was founded.

The ten commandments were the constitution of the Israelitish commonwealth, were the soul of it, while the outgrowing code was the legal body. But for the ten commandments, the legal code could not have been construed or applied, any more than can we construe and apply the code of laws of the United States, as such, independently of its constitution. That covenant, the ten commandments, was the basis of a government partly civil and partly religious.

Such was the law of the ancient Jewish nation; but such is not the church of God under Jesus Christ. It stands entirely separate and distinct from all the laws of all lands, so far as its specific code is concerned. All earthly governments are distinct from it. Yet there is no collision between it and them, unless a union of church existed such as Israel's commonwealth was, and such as the church would be if that law, the ten commandments, the old covenant, were reenacted since Christ.

Returning now to Paul's statement in the sixth chapter of Hebrews. He enumerates baptism, and the laying on of hands, as principles of the doctrine of Christ. No one will ever seek unto, or worship God, unless they have faith in God, in his character as an unchangeable and impartial being, in his attributes of infinite power, knowledge, wisdom, justice, truth, mercy, and love. Because of the infinity of his attributes, he can not change in any of his eternal purposes, which must be carried to a successful issue; they can not fail. No believer in him will dispute these general propositions.

With the above named principles, Paul names the resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust; also eternal judgment,—six fundamental principles of Christ's doctrine. These constitute a perfect doctrinal foundation of God's government, the church.

Faith brings men to God (Romans 10:13, 14; Hebrews 11:1-6). Repentance transforms man's sinful character to one of righteousness and holiness. Baptism, with the prerequisites of gospel faith and genuine repentance toward God, translates us into the kingdom of God, and brings to us a remission of past sins, (Acts 2:38, 39; Mark 1:1-5; Acts 2:47; Galatians 3:26-29; Colossians 1:13, 14).

We are thus transplanted, adopted into Jesus Christ, provided the one who administers the ordinances of the gospel to us is divinely commissioned of God to administer to us. (Acts 19:1-6; Romans

10: 15; Hebrews 5: 4, 5; Mark 1: 1-3; Acts 13; 1, 2, 3.)

But our friend asserts that "Latter Day Saints teach there is no commandment to keep any day." That is, no Sabbath, and further that, "The Latter Day Saints can not reject the Old Testament Scriptures for they depend on Isaiah 29th chapter and other Old Testament scripture for many things they teach." True, Latter Day Saints believe "all things written in the law and in the prophets" (Acts 24: 14). All things found "in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the Psalms" (Luke 24: 44). But the prophets and the Psalms are not the laws given through Moses at Sinai; but were later exhortations, discourses, commentaries and prophecies, as to what is commonly called the Old Testament.

We have, and believe in "Moses and the Prophets," as Jesus designates it (Luke 16: 31; Matthew 5: 17), and we also believe that Jesus came to fulfill the law and the prophecies that related to his first coming, and are now fulfilled, while many of the prophetic statements are yet to be fulfilled.

Jesus "fulfilled the law," in precisely the same sense in which he fulfilled the prophets. The word fulfilled, as used by Christ, occurs but once in the text (Matthew 5: 17), and applied by him to both the law and the prophets. To fulfill is to complete, fill full, to perfect, to bring to an end. See Webster. "To accomplish what was intended." To this Paul agrees in Galatians 3: 19-24: "Wherefore then serveth the law?" It was added, till the seed should come. For if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law. And again Paul says: "The law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ."

"For the promise, that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith" (Romans 4: 13). Here, as in the Galatian letter, Paul argues that eternal life is not received through or by keeping the law. But, we ask, what law is Paul referring to? Let us go to Romans 2: 17-23, and we learn that he is making direct reference to the ten commandments as part of the law. He there refers to stealing, "adultery," idolatry, three of the ten commandments. He continues the argument all the way to chapter 9, and shows conclusively that no flesh is justified, or has the pardon of sin by that law. There was no forgiveness or mercy extended through the law, nor any eternal life (Romans 3: 20). It is through Christ, or by obeying the gospel alone, we can receive remission of past sins (verses 24, 25, 28). Paul concludes that man is "justified by faith" in our Savior "without the deeds of the law."

If the ten commandments were incorporated into the bosom of the gospel, it would for ever destroy the mercy of God therein, for every transgressor of it would die, or else God would have to change: "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all" (James 2: 10). He, therefore, who transgressed one or all of the ten commandments, died without mercy at the mouth of two or three witnesses. As "all have sinned," all would have to die; and die eternally under the gospel penalty (Hebrews 10: 27, 28). We will further cite the reader to John 7: 17, 18; John 7-10; Galatians 1: 9-12; 1 Timothy 6: 3-5.

The doctrine of Latter Day Saints is the law of Christ, which was no part of the law or "ministration of death, written and engraven in stones" (2 Leviticus 2: 7); it is "everlasting righteousness," brought in by Christ long after the law was given to Moses (Daniel 9: 24-26); can be sustained by the Bible, the statement of our friend to the contrary notwithstanding. Did God give Israel two codes of law, two laws?

In order to sustain this false position, Seventh Day Adventists, when shown that the law was superceded by the gospel of Christ, assert that two laws were given to Israel: one the "ceremonial," the other the "ten commandments law." They assert that the former (ceremonial) was done away by Christ, but the ten commandments are still binding; are the immutable and perfect law of God. This is the position held by all with whom we have met in debate, from June, 1878, to March, 1903. All their leading writers assume this position. See all their books and tracts on the subject.

This false idea originated somewhere, sometime after the New Testament was compiled. We are safe in this statement; for we do not find the two-law idea even remotely suggested or even implied, in the language of any inspired writer in the Bible. Not one text can be found in the Bible that so teaches. By them it is called, "the law," "all the law," "Moses," he being its writer (Luke 16: 29), and "the law of Moses" (Malachi 4: 4). That which God "commanded" in Horeb is by Malachi called "the law of Moses."

We will admit for argument's sake that all that covenant or law was abolished except the ten commandments. See what logically follows: All ceased to be binding as a religious guide but the ten commandments. To "abolish" or abrogate is to annul, make void, repeal. Now, remember the "ceremonial law," so called, was not changed or exchanged, but it ceased to exist, as law, when Christ was resurrected. All we have left of the old covenant are the ten commandments. We must save them or the fourth commandment enjoining the "seventh day sabbath" is gone.

Now let us quote: "For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law" (Hebrews 7:12). To change is not to abolish, or annul; it is not to exchange one law or thing for another. The ceremonial law being abolished, is not changed. The heaven and earth are to be changed but not abolished. What! The adventists teach that law to be God's immutable, unchangeable law. Suppose they do, the Bible does not. We would be glad to see the proof. Paul, after showing a change of the law of necessity, continues the argument, thus: "For there is verily a disannulling of the commandment going before, for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof. For the law made nothing perfect; but the bringing in of a better hope [or testament, see marginal reading] did; by the which we draw nigh unto God." (Hebrews 7:18, 19.) The heavens and earth shall be changed, or made new. (See Psalm 102:26; Isaiah 65:17-25.) "Behold, I make all things new." Not all new things. (Revelation 21:5.) The Saints of all the ages are to be changed, or will have been changed at the resurrection of the just. (1 Corinthians 15:51.) Now, while God's children are all to change, they surely will not all be abolished or cease to exist. ("No-law-people") "Antinomians, are the Latter Day Saints and Disciples." The latter, in their discussions with us, usually have taken the position that we (Saints) held to too much of the gospel as being binding on men nowadays. That one, at least, of the gospel enactments—laws—ceased to be binding at the death of the ancient apostles, i. e., the ordinance of laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. (See Acts 8:14-20, Acts 19:1-6; 1 Timothy 4:14.) And as a consequence all the blessings and gifts of the Holy Spirit ceased then also. But this negation or affirmation on their part, like that of the assumed "two-law" position, has no Bible proof of its fulfillment. But we prefer to let the Disciples speak for themselves on this question of the law. Paul says that the commandment going before the "hope" or covenant of Christ, "was disannulled because of the unprofitableness thereof." As a religious rule of life in the light of the gospel law, that is absolutely true. Jesus shows this when he began to introduce the gospel in its stead, as a religious guide or code, notice! Note his treatment of this subject in his teachings; he never once enjoined the observance of the seventh day. Neither did Paul, nor any other apostle. "Ah, but," says my friend, "Jesus went into the synagogue and taught on the Sabbath." Jesus kept and enjoined the keeping of all the law till it ended. Thus: Then spake Jesus to the multitude, and to the disciples, saying, The scribes and Pharisees sit in Moses' seat. "All [not just the ten commandments] therefore whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do; but do not ye after their works: for they say, and do not." (Matthew 23:1-3.) "All, therefore, whatsoever they bid you observe," the Jews knew no distinction existing between the injunctions of the law, so far as there being any existing between the ten commandments or any other part of the law. Jesus taught none. "The law and the prophets were until John." Since that time the kingdom of heaven is preached and all men press into it. (Luke 16:16.) As the law gradually declined from John's preaching the gospel of Christ, (Mark 1:1-5,) and the gospel as gradually was introduced, men were called on to "press into" the "kingdom of heaven." The law made nothing perfect as pertaining to the conscience, did not, could not regenerate men (see Hebrews 7:11-19; 9:4), and it was just at this point especially, and in particular, was its lack, it was found faulty. Instead of sin being taken away by the law, it memorialized sin. The gospel dedicated by Christ's blood, could alone cleanse the heart, conscience, of sin. Hence, it was a necessity that the new covenant be inaugurated, made, established, that the sins by it reached are removed by it once for all, and when man embraces it by faith, even the "new covenant," the "everlasting covenant," God's word declares: "For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more. In that he saith, A new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away." (Hebrews 8:12, 13.) It was impossible that "the comers thereunto" could by that covenant "be made perfect." (Hebrews 10:1; 8:8-10.) In the light of all these teachings, and the all sufficiency of the gospel, that "the man of God may be thoroughly furnished unto all good works," what place does the old covenant, the law given at Sinai, supply, so far as salvation in Christ is concerned? It is by "the royal law," (kingly law,) "the law of Christ" (Galatians 5:2). "The perfect law of liberty." (James 1:25; 2:8; Psalm 19:7). God converts and saves men, and liberates them from sin. Jesus, who gave that covenant or law to Israel, knew that it would save no one, the covenant given at Sinai; hence, he fulfilled it and let it decay, and vanish away so far as being a religious guide is concerned. He gave it, he had the right to annul it and did abrogate it.

JESUS ABROGATED THE LAW OR OLD COVENANT GIVEN AT SINAI.

Because the law given at Sinai was "fulfilled," had served its purpose, when the gospel was dedicated and ratified by his blood, he broke down the middle wall or partition that would have for ever separated Jews and Gentiles. "Abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man." He slew the enmity, the dividing wall, by abolishing the law that created it. He shows how he did this, Thus: "Ye have heard that it was said by them of old times, Thou shalt not commit adultery: but I say unto you, That whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart." (Matthew 5: 27, 28.)

Jesus treated all parts of the law as of equal standing. He exchanged the precepts of the gospel, for one of the ten commandments, as in the foregoing example, as in the following ordinance on divorce. "It hath been said, Whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery: and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced committeth adultery." And so Jesus kept on finding "the weakness and unprofitableness" of the law, any and all parts of the law so far as living a gospel life is concerned. Instead of making oaths as under the law and performing, Jesus taught: "But I say unto you, Swear not at all: neither by heaven; for it is God's throne; nor by the earth; . . . neither by Jerusalem; . . . neither by thy head, . . . but let your communication be, Yea, yea, Nay, nay; for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil."—Matthew 5: 31-37. But he does not stop with the foregoing examples, but continues nullifying the law, saying that we, instead of hating our enemies, as is written in the law (Leviticus 19: 18; Deuteronomy 23: 3-6), should do just the opposite, and authoritatively enjoined: "But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you; . . . that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven" (Matthew 5: 44, 45).

In Exodus 20: 7, the third commandment forbids taking "the name of the Lord in vain"; by doing this one can blaspheme (see Leviticus 24: 10-16). For blasphemy the penalty was affixed, stoning to death. But at verses 19, 20, Moses said: "and if man cause a blemish in his neighbor; as he hath done, so shall it be done to him; breach for breach, eye for eye, tooth for tooth: as he hath caused a blemish in a man, so shall it be done to him again." This is but unregenerate nature. Anyone not born again would do just as the law here says. But what does the higher law teach on this point? Jesus says: "But I say unto you, That ye resist not evil; but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also. And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain. Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away." (Matthew 5: 39-42.)

But what can we do with that law from Sinai, with its penalties gone? Gone because no place is found for them. But in the work of displacing that law, so far as being a law to the church is concerned, our Savior proceeds with the seventh commandment, as shown in John 8: 3-10. Note how the Pharisees sought to catch Jesus in his teaching. He had a test case. A woman actually guilty of a crime under the law given at Sinai, the penalty of which was death by stoning; and so far as that law was concerned, there was no appeal, the penalty must be inflicted or the officers of that law were guilty of neglect of official duty. But Jesus, with the gospel law in his hands, released her from that penalty, nor did he have the informers or officers condemned by that law.

ANTINOMIAN—NO LAW?

But our friend would be greatly excited over these considerations, for in the continual study of that law from Sinai, he is in a similar state of mind as the Jews were as found by Paul (2 Corinthians 3: 7-16). As a consequence he concludes that if these observations are correct, we are altogether left without a law, but let him not be so hasty.

"The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God, sending his Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh; that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." (Romans 8: 2-4.) The man who lives the law of the Spirit of life, keeps all the law of the land and more. Again: Paul, in correcting the ideas of some of the Saints in his day says: "But we know that the law is good, if a man use it lawfully; knowing this, that the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for the ungodly and for sinners, for unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for man slayers, for whoremongers, for them that defile themselves with mankind, for men stealers, for liars, for perjured persons, and if there be any other thing that is contrary to sound doctrine." (1 Timothy 1: 8-10.)

Surely the law of Christ does not deal out penalties to the criminals here referred to by Paul, and which the law he here names is designed to deal with, murderers, adulterers, and thieves. What law is made for these? That law "was not made for the righteous," says Paul. What law under the Israelitish government dealt the penalty to such transgressors as Paul has named? Where and when and by whom were the arrests made, and tried and executed the penalties? "Oh, the officers and judges, the courts," to be sure. But has the church such officers and courts? Does the gospel provide for such officers and courts? I say unto you, Nay. If such impose themselves on the church, it has the right to exclude them from its fellowship, and deliver them over to the "law" here referred to by the apostle, the law-now-since Christ's death, "The law of the land," where the spirit of the ten commandments were found prior to the cross, and where it is found resident to-day. The church would have to be a union of church and state, as was the Israelitish, to assume to handle that law now. No other conclusion can be arrived at from Paul's language.

But the gospel arrests the sinner before he commits the act of sin, and convicts him as such, when planning sin. It condemns as sin his plotting. "The law of Christ" (Galatians 5:2) searches out sin in the heart, and condemns it as such. Under this law the "evil thoughts" of the heart are sin and condemned. (See Matthew 5:22, 25.) Where murder is murder though not yet committed overtly. (See also 1 John 3:15.) "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer." (See also Matthew 5:28.) Mouth and lip service toward God is condemned, being hypocrisy, when the heart is not in the service. (Matthew 15:3-9.) And to the hypocrite Jesus says: "How can ye escape the damnation of hell!" Do not be troubled for fear there is not law enough without we attempt to put old cloth into the new government, or add the law, (or part of it) given through Moses into the gospel. By that law man could not be condemned for sin, till caught and proven guilty by two or three witnesses, and sentence placed. This was when the covenant from Sinai was broken, the ten commandments or any one of them. (See Deuteronomy 17: verses 2 to 6, 7; Hebrews 10:28.)

While in the church, when gospel precepts are broken, it can disfellowship them only "at the mouth of two or three witnesses." (Matthew 18:16; 1 Corinthians 5:4, 5.) God, by the law of the gospel, does not wait for either the church or men to convict the sinner, but condemns his sinful scheming, secret planning, "For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornication, thefts, false witnesses, blasphemies: these are the things which defile a man; but to eat with unwashed hands defileth not a man." (Matthew 15:19, 20.) "Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double-minded." (James.) By the gospel the hearts of sinners must be cleansed. The works of eternal salvation must begin in the heart, from gospel seed. If men fail to repent, penalty comes sooner or later, by earthly courts, or at the great court of last resort, the eternal judgment. These decisions, even the church must await. Where, then, does the law serve the church? That given through Moses at Sinai?

The ten commandments are the old covenant, and is cast out. Moses calls the ten commandments "the" and "a covenant" (Deuteronomy 5:2-22.) It was not made with Adam, Abel, or Enoch; it was not made with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. (Deuteronomy 5:3.) Regarding the fourth commandment Moses declares that God said, (verses 5 to 15,) "and remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm; therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the sabbath day." Two reasons why ancient Israel was to keep the seventh day, that do not apply to those now living. 1. We were not servants in the land of Egypt. 2. God does not bring us out thence, with a mighty hand. We will digress for a moment to observe: God did bring his Son Jesus Christ from the land that Egypt, in the typical gospel typifies, the land of the dead in sin, on the first day of the week very early in that day. A pledge of our deliverance from thence, (1 Corinthians 15:1-22.) And as the resurrection of the dead is, the hope of people of the gospel, God's power unto salvation (Acts 24:14, 15; 1 Corinthians 15:12-18). And as on this day the world's hope of the glorious life eternal, was awake and pledged of high heaven on that first day of the week, the church has the right to celebrate their hope, receive the Holy Ghost as a seal of their heirship in Christ on that day of the week, and with the approval of God, by his great acts, as did the holy apostles and saints of old (Acts second chapter). Peter's sermon on that day was the resurrection of Christ as their reason for being there that day. God's seal was on it by giving the baptism of the Holy Ghost on that day. (See also Acts 20:7-11.) On this occasion Paul waited seven days, including a Sabbath, to meet with the Saints, (upon the first day of the week, Luke says,) to worship God and celebrate the resurrection of Christ on that day. What was the day the "break" of which came after the saints met the first day of the week to break bread? They (saints at Troas) did not meet on the seventh day, commonly called "the Sabbath" from long usage.

When Paul or Christ met with the Jews on the seventh day to preach to them, Luke never calls it "the first day of the week," but "the Sabbath day." (Luke 4:16; Acts 3:42-44; 16:13.) Paul could reach the Jews on the Sabbath more readily than at other times, so preached to them on Saturday. Just as I would among Sabbatarians to-day. But Jesus met with his disciples on the evening of the day of his resurrection (John 20:19). Also the next first day of the week (verse 26).

It was the custom, it seems, for the saints at Corinth to put their aid for the poor saints into their church treasury, on the first day of the week, to have it in readiness for the one chosen by them to dispose of it as they directed. This was done, that it might be altogether, that "no gathering" be waited for when Paul, or others called for it. (See 1 Corinthians 16:1, 2.) This day, "the first day of the week," was afterwards designated "the Lord's day," day of our Lord's resurrection (Revelation 1: 10). We learn this from the early church fathers who lived from about A. D. 140 to 325.

Our Adventist friends have labored long and diligently to deaden the force of the evidence of these Antenicene Fathers, but so far have failed. Hence, went so far as to accuse the pope of changing the day, or rather of enforcing the worship on the first day of the week. Suppose they did, that would not destroy the fact that the saints observed the first day of the week hundreds of years before the Catholic Church existed. But the ten commandments were the old covenant as we have seen (Deuteronomy 5: 2-4; Deuteronomy 4: 13), here called "his [God's] covenant" (see verse 23). Moses wrote on the tables of stone, "the words of the covenant, the ten commandments" (Exodus 34: 28).

After Moses had copied the decalogue into the book he wrote with the other commandments and statutes God gave him on Mount Sinai. (Deuteronomy 4: 13, 14.) That book was called "the book of the covenant." (Exodus 24: 4-7.) See also Exodus 20th chapter for that copy. The ark into which Moses put the tables of the covenant, was called "the ark of the covenant of the Lord," "the ark of the covenant." (See Numbers 10: 33; Deuteronomy 31: 26.) Here is enough testimony cited to identify the ten commandments to be the covenant God made with Israel, at Sinai, beyond any doubt or controversy. Now notice this covenant comes to an end when God's new and everlasting covenant comes into force, even the gospel, ratified and consecrated by the blood of Christ. The law by which man will be redeemed from sin once for all here, and from death in the never ending hereafter.

The new covenant made not like the old (Jeremiah 31: 31-34)—under this new covenant the old will not be observed. "And it shall come to pass, when ye be multiplied and increased in the land, in those days, SAITH THE LORD, they shall say no more, the ark of the covenant of the Lord; neither shall it come to mind, neither shall they visit it; neither shall that be done any more." This is in the day God gives Israel "pastors after his own heart." (Jeremiah 3: 15-16). Like Paul and fellow-ministers, these pastors will not be ministers of the "ministration of death written and engraven in stones" (2 Corinthians 3: 5-7), but of the new covenant. In this connection, note Paul's commentary on the two covenants, old and new, the one from Mount Sinai, which was in bondage with its children, represented in the allegory by Hagar, "the bond woman," the latter new covenant, the gospel, by Sarah, Jerusalem which is above, who with her children are free. The mother of all saints, of the covenant from Aramid, Sinai; whose children are born after the flesh, not after the covenant of the Spirit. Paul says:

"Nevertheless what saith the scriptures? Cast out the bond woman and her son; for the son of the bond woman shall not be heir with the son of the free woman. So then, brethren, we are not children of the bond woman, but of the free" (Galatians 4: 30, 31). So that under the gospel they are neither children or ministers of the former covenant or from Sinai.

But the Adventist ministers are not the pastors Jeremiah says God will give to Israel, for they can not preach their faith without going to the old ark of the old covenant, and bringing it into "remembrance" (Jeremiah 3: 16). But again, Paul, that illustrious advocate of Christ's gospel, when showing the contrast between the two covenants, in that wonderful Hebrew letter, tells us: "In that he saith, A new covenant, he hath made the first old, now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away." (Hebrews 8: 13.) Christ is the mediator of the new covenant. But once more, "Then said he [Christ], Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second. By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all."—Hebrews 10: 9, 10.

God's will, testament, or covenant for our salvation, obedience and redemption, is found in the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Thoughts for the Thoughtful.

"And I heard another voice from heaven saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquity."—Revelation 18: 4, 5.

It seems to us that after a careful reading of the article by Miriam Finn Scott in the last issue of the Home Column, that it ought not to be a difficult matter to understand the full meaning of the declaration made by the voice from heaven, neither for Latter Day Saints to understand, as perhaps they never have before understood, the wisdom and the necessity of the gathering, and to more fully comprehend why the commandment has come to us, "Let all your garments be plain, and their beauty the beauty of the workmanship of your own hands."

When one considers the present condition of the church, our slowness to hear and to heed the warnings and commandments given unto us, and especially when by observation and examination we discover that in many ways, and those, too, directly along the line of the things in regard to which God has spoken to us, the world at large to whom no such commandments have been given, are in advance of us; it comes to the mind of the writer to inquire, Is it heresy to question in regard to the mission of the church? Are we indeed as a people to become a light to the world, or will the Lord use us as a match to start the conflagration which is to consume Babylon and then to flicker and die out?

"He came unto his own." To them he offered first the great salvation. But when his own rejected it, counted themselves unworthy of salvation, then he turned to the Gentiles. From the first dawn of creation to the present time, history has repeated itself, and who shall say that this repetition may not continue?

All men and women, too, who have studied history ought by this time to most fully understand that God is no respecter of persons, has no favorites, and that it is only through obedience that we inherit the promises.

In our present scattered condition it may be difficult if not impossible to comply fully with the requirements God makes upon us. It becomes then a question of vital importance to each individual as to who is responsible for our scattered condition. Not the individual who has paid his tithing and consecrated of his property all which the Lord requires for the establishment of Zion. Salvation is an individual matter, and though Zion be not established, the righteous man shall be saved. But responsibility rests some place, upon some one, because Zion is not established, that there is not a place to which "my people" can flee, a place where justice and humanity prevail, where the laborer may obtain employment and a just compensation for his labor, and where the people may earn an honorable living, be clothed and fed without partaking of the sins of Babylon and sharing in her plagues as we do now.

There are many things which we might cite in proof of our assertion that the world is to-day, in many respects, in advance of the people of God in regard to some of the things concerning which we have received special instruction from the Lord. But we will confine ourselves to the one subject, dress, as that is the one to which we wish most to direct your attention at this time.

How many of us when we have gone into department (or any dry goods) stores in search of dainty lingerie, a new suit for the season, or any of the many accessories of a lady's toilet, how many, we ask, have ever thought to inquire in regard to the conditions under which these garments were manufactured? Has it ever entered our minds to inquire how those who labored to produce them were treated, and whether or not they were justly compensated for their work? And yet it can not be news to any of us that in the great and wicked city of New York (and it may be in other cities also) that there has been organized what is known as "The Consumers' League." This league consists of those who have banded themselves together for the purpose of benefiting the employees connected with the stores of the city. For the accomplishment of this purpose they are pledged not to patronize those stores which do not come up to the standard of fair dealing required by the league.

In The Outlook of April 29 we find the following concerning this league:

"Most of our readers know about the systematic effort and excellent influence of the Consumers' League in procuring better conditions for the employees of stores. Before long The Outlook will print a somewhat extended and carefully prepared article by a writer who is intimately acquainted with this work. Meanwhile, we note a change of method which is of decided interest. For a score of years the association has published what has been called a White List, which gives the names of the stores which are known to treat their employees fairly and in accordance with the regulations of the Consumers' League. Now, in place of this, there will be published from time to time statements which will describe the actual conditions as they exist in individual stores—wages, vacations, hours, conformity to all physical welfare, etc. In making this change the Governing Board pointed out that it has become increasingly difficult 'to distinguish a basis for commendation between houses which, while maintaining certain very desirable conditions, nevertheless fall below our general standard in some respects, and houses which, while conforming outwardly to the requirements of our standard, still, in ways difficult of investigation and of proof, allow conditions of which the league can not approve.' It therefore seems advisable in the future to state the facts, and leave to the judgment and the conscience of the individual consumer the decision as to what houses seem worthy of patronage. The Outlook joins in the hope that this method will increase the benefits which have already been exercised by the league in bringing out proper conditions of labor for working girls. It may be noted that the league's label is now used by sixty-five manufacturers, and that leagues of the same kind have been formed in France, Germany, and Switzerland."

Now while this is not as God would have it, not as he has instructed his people it should be, we leave it to every candid mind to answer if it is not a step and a long one in advance of where we, as a people, are found to-day.

Responsibility for this failure must rest somewhere; but where? is the question.

Request for Prayer.

Sr. Sadie Burch, Moorhead, Iowa, asks the prayers of the Saints that she may be healed of a sickness of long standing, and from which she is unable to get anything more than temporary relief.

NEW BLOOMFIELD, MISSOURI, April 30, 1911.

Dear Herald: I was acquainted with this work a few years before I saw fit to join, but on August 3, 1907, under the preaching of R. O. Self and W. S. Macrae, I could resist no longer, and I have never regretted the step taken.

I have met a few and talked to them on the Bible and this work. We want to see the work open up here this summer if God will grant our request.

I think Callaway County is hard to beat. We have good farm lands here, pay good wages, and have lots of coal mines. We have a good blacksmith shop complete for sale or rent. I will act as agent for it, so any Saints looking this way, write me.

With love and true respect to all Saints, I remain
Your brother in bonds,

CLARENCE E. TREMAIN.

JOHNNIE, NEVADA, April 20, 1911.

Dear Herald: How I love to read your columns, as you are the only preacher we have in this part of the country. How you do keep us in the remembrance of the command we have made with our Father in heaven, and the responsibilities that rest upon us. May you ever be cherished dearly in our homes. We rejoice to read of how the Spirit of our God is with his people, insomuch that those that enjoy the same can see how rapidly his work upon earth is being accomplished. Yes, can see that which is in the distance.

I often wonder, though, with much meditation, can we realize the great work our Bro. R. C. Evans is doing in Toronto, and in all the world? May God be with him unto the end, that his Spirit will prepare the hearts of men to receive the glad tidings. I also rejoice to hear of the work being done in Jerusalem by our Brother Pitt and I hope that in this new field he may not be left alone, but that other missionaries be sent to take care of those who enter into the fold, and carry on the work in that land. As it takes money to carry on the work so as to get it rightly started, I feel that each one who loves to do something to help the good work along, would do well to send a little donation. I have already sent a little and intend to send more.

I love to read the opinions on different subjects of our brothers and sisters, though I do not agree with some of them. They probably express what some of the world might think, and in that way give some of our able men a chance to explain and show the right and wrong, what is possible and that which is impossible, God's way and not man's way, which if received in the papers, will be good for all in and out of the church.

We have only heard one sermon in the course of three years and that was in Los Angeles by Brother Williams. We would love very much to be among the Saints, where we could enjoy the meetings and be together as much as we used to be in old Michigan, talking of the glorious gospel and singing the songs of Zion. I would love to meet the many Saints and friends back there at their meetings. I rejoice very much to hear of those that are ready for baptism at Otter Lake, and especially so, for one among the number is my aged father whom I feel will be baptized before this is read. May his life be that which will bring many more that are near and dear to us into God's kingdom. My dear old mother still stands for the Catholic faith, and as her learning is very limited, I pray that God's Spirit will strive with her that she may see the angel's message before it is too late, that she may be born into the kingdom of our God and know him whom she has been so long trying to serve.

Ever praying for the accomplishment of God's work, and the welfare of the race, I ask all to remember me in their prayers to my heavenly Father, that I may do all that is required of me at his hand for the cause while in this life, and that I may be worthy of the promises of the riches at the end of the race.

Your brother in the one faith,

N. C. JONES.

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI, May 1, 1911.

To the Saints and Friends of Montana: Having been appointed to labor in Montana again this conference year, I would like to hear from all the scattered Saints and friends who would desire preaching. I would be glad to accommodate all. We are all laborers together with God. I would like to effect as many new openings as possible, and as the season is short, let us put our best efforts in sowing and watering the seed, and God will give the increase.

My field address for the conference year will be Deer Lodge, Montana. Let me hear from you and I will try to accommodate all that I possibly can.

I expect to arrive in my field about the 25th of May.

Ever praying for final victory, I am yours,

In gospel bonds,

W. P. BOOTMAN.

Editors Herald: As I have very poor health, and doctors' medicines do me no good at all, I wish to claim the promise for healing in answer to the prayer of faith. I have suffered since childhood, and now at times I am in such pain I can hardly breathe. I do not know the exact cause of my suffering; some say it is gallstones and weakness, but God knows all about it, and I believe he will heal me if the Saints unitedly will pray for my healing. If it be his will that I have help how thankful I shall be! Pray for me to this end. If it should not be his will, pray that I may know it and why, that I may, if possible, make myself more worthy of the great blessing I ask.

When any member of my family is sick God always hears me and answers my prayers, and they are restored to health at once. I could give you accounts of several almost miraculous healings in answer to my prayers, and I have been much benefited. For some cause unknown to myself, I do not get permanent relief. It may be lack of faith, yet I try hard to exercise faith. I have been administered to at different times, and each time I have been benefited, but not healed entirely, and the old trouble comes on again. I do not lack faith when I pray for others.

Last winter, one of the little boys threw an ear of corn and hit his father just under the ear on the jaw. It swelled terribly and was very painful. He believed his jaw was broken, it hurt him so much. After he retired he feared he would not sleep much, and he could not lie on that side at all. I told him to look to God for help and he said he would. I laid my hands on his head and revoked the pain in Jesus' name, and claimed the promise of the signs that follow the believer, and he became better at once, and was sleeping in less than ten minutes. He felt no pain or soreness after that. This is only one little incident, I could tell so many. Yet I suffer daily and get no cure. I wish you would publish a request for prayers for me in the HERALD and oblige,

Your sister in one faith,

SADIE BURCH.

DES MOINES, IOWA, April 25, 1911.

Editors Herald: I just arrived home last week from Holyoke, Colorado, where I spent six weeks laboring in the interest of the gospel. I baptized five last fall and on my last trip baptized five more, preached twenty-eight times, blessed six children. Enjoyed fine liberty in preaching and closed meeting with increased interest. Several more near the kingdom and some who said they hoped to be ready on my return for baptism.

While out there I crossed over the Colorado line and preached a week in a small town in Nebraska, Lamar, held services in a new church which was built by all donations with the understanding that when not occupied by the Christians or Campbellites, it should be free for all denominations. Certainly the church is a credit to town and country. Their regular pastor is Elder Radcliff, who treated me very courteously. I arranged with him to take charge of the singing and open with prayer, which he did good naturedly; he also fired the furnace and lighted up the house. While preaching I often thought of a remark I once made to President Joseph Smith. I said, "Bro. Joseph, when I am out in the world preaching I usually get the congregation to do the singing and I do the preaching," and he replied that "it is a hard proposition to ask a man to sing at his own funeral." This was one of the occasions where I certainly did so.

While here, when the weather was favorable, I had good turnouts and good interest. I parted with Elder Radcliff, leaving him feeling quite friendly. I was royally cared for and entertained by Mr. Ed. Travis and his family. His wife and two oldest boys belong to the church and are strong in the faith. Certainly the boys are promising young men and have just graduated from the eighth grade. They are anxious and hopeful to be able to attend Graceland College this fall. For some reason unknown to me, Mr. Ed. Travis, the father, has not as yet obeyed the command of Christ, but I hope and pray that soon he may accept the glad message, as he is well posted and says he fully believes it. I baptized two of his brothers, one of them having paid one hundred and fifty dollars as tithing before baptism, and through the efforts of Mr. Travis' sons, the old folks, father and mother, who never heard but one other sermon, have been converted to the faith. I had arranged to attend to their baptisms, they living thirty miles east of Lamar. They have been faithful members of the Dunkard Church for years. But in the midst of my preaching one night I was gladly surprised by an unexpected appearance of my old friend and once my neighbor, Elder Charles Prettyman, who not knowing of my being in that vicinity and having heard some time back that the old folks were ready for baptism, came for that purpose. Hence, I gladly arranged to have him go east and attend to their baptisms, while I returned to Holyoke and spent my last week preaching.

On Monday, after closing on Sunday night, I baptized Bro. Frank Burress and wife; also Sr. Leona Bower, who is a sister of Sister Burress. I congratulate myself, by the help of the Lord, in getting what I consider the cream and talent of the neighborhood.

On my return home, I found my son J. D., who is president of Eastern Colorado District, and by my request he left for that field on his way home, it being a ripe field, and in the near future I hope to return.

As ever in gospel bonds,

NEW YORK CITY, April 22, 1911.

Dear Herald: I have a habit that grows upon me to make known my religion to men, when the opportunity comes to enlighten them, and I trust I have made many friends, and perhaps sown seed on good ground.

I recently met Rev. Dr. Aked and found him without a particle of prejudice, and with a warm heart. He sought me out even when he left. I gave him a set of the gospel message tracts, which he readily accepted. He said that he had met and known two of our men. I will, as soon as possible, mail him church literature of the kind to enlighten him. He is a most profound scholar, a powerful speaker, but error, as usual, runs all through his efforts.

This city of New York is beyond the power of man, to prevent the hideous crimes and lawlessness, for no power can stay it, and hardly anyone believes it will ever be put down. Fear is upon the people. I find the general public in an ugly mood against the money power, who have closed in and control every avenue that prevents even legitimate enterprises to rise above it. The mark of the beast is the trade-mark of illegitimate business.

This city is given over to lawless extreme fashion. Theaters overcrowded, midnight gormandizing, rum and riot, poor, starving beggars, everywhere tramps. Criminal hordes come here because they can not be curbed or successfully handled. Never in the history of the world is there so much peace and safety hurled from pulpit and press; never has there been so much money spent, including Carnegie's ten million dollars, dedicated to peace, and the Hague tribunal to bring about national arbitration between nations. While this is a noble act of Mr. Carnegie to bring about the day when the nations shall go to war no more if it were possible, but if the Devil would sign a contract also with the nations of the earth to prevent war, then Mr. Carnegie would make a decided success of his now misspent energy.

The decree of Almighty God is "I will visit the iniquities of your fathers unto the third and fourth generation in which they live." The pulpit and press have sought in vain to prevent the kingdom of God from standing the test finally set up, in these last days. This generation is fast nearing its end, the Son of God will come before this shall pass away; it is your duty to warn your neighbor and he that will thrust in his sickle to reap is called of God. We have been called out of the world to this end to make it our duty to spread the great latter day gospel for him who gave up his life for the same testimony. We are to give to others, no matter what we are called upon to suffer. Do not let your minds be led away from the fact that your bodies and your spirits belong to God to be laid upon the altar of sacrifice, that our joy may be full when he shall come, for he is preparing to gather all things, both in heaven and earth. Do not speak evil of one another; be united, so that when any are sick among you the matchless power of God will not only heal the sick, but the spirit of peace may come and we be united in the name of Jesus Christ.

HOTEL COLLINGWOOD.

LANCASTER, NEBRASKA, April 30, 1911.

Dear Editor: Since writing my letter one week ago to you inviting the elders to come this way and preach to the spirits in prison, I have received my discharge and a Methodist minister has been installed as chaplain in my stead. I now think no Latter Day Saint need apply for a privilege to preach to those whom I have entertained for the past twenty-two months.

Yours in bonds,

JAMES HUFF.

LAMONI, IOWA, April 27, 1911.

Editor Saints' Herald: Owing to a change of field of labor, it is but just and Christian to express a few words of appreciation of Saints and friends of Colorado and the Rocky Mountain Mission. Let me say first, that my association with the missionary force, including those in charge, was of the agreeable. Whatever my weaknesses, no words but those of encouragement and good will were spoken.

The Saints received me, at first a stranger quite entirely, with cordiality and encouragement. Association with the local ministry was always pleasant and cordial. Peter's exhortation: "Be courteous," characterized all—ministry and and Saints.

I would feel ungrateful, indeed, not to remember the liberality of the Saints of the great West. May our Father abundantly repay them for all their kindness to me.

I received some signal blessings of the Holy Spirit while laboring in Colorado, that greatly strengthened me in the hour of need. However little the fruit of my labors appear, I tried to sow the seed of the kingdom, and patiently await the harvest.

The mission has its peculiarities. A new and restless population largely, seeking for better conditions temporally, and many of them battling with privations on their newly acquired homesteads, and but few churches, and in many country places schoolhouses far apart, all make it difficult to find places to preach in; but it would be unfair to omit the saying, that growth is developing in Colorado, so we may yet expect a good work to be done in the interests of the cause of Christ there.

I am glad of the experience that came to me in that mission, and shall pray for the prosperity of Zion and the divine blessings on the work in that great mission.

Truly your brother and colaborer in the great latter day work of the Lord,

C. SCOTT.

TULARE, CALIFORNIA, April 24, 1911.

Dear Herald: Will you permit me to say to my friends that I am still alive and trying to do what I can towards building up the kingdom of God? I manage to preach every Sunday, but the last three or four I have had to sit in a chair and talk; but I have enjoyed a goodly degree of freedom, and so far as I know, the Saints have been satisfied with my efforts.

This last winter I undertook to carry out my long cherished desire of writing a small book on the Sabbath question. I rented a room and fixed up quite comfortably. I got my material together and started in good earnest, but I soon found that my eyes were failing, and next my nerves gave way, and I came near having a complete break-down. Each time I undertook to renew my effort I got worse, until I had to abandon the undertaking. I am very sorry for this, for I had hoped that my many years of study might be of benefit to some of the young ministry at least.

I did not undertake the work thinking to excel those that had written on the subject, but I thought the work that the church had published did not cover all the ground upon which the controversy is had.

I have often said I did not believe that there was a paragraph in the Bible or in authentic history that justifies the observance of the seventh day, and I am still of that opinion, and am willing to try to answer any reasonable question that anyone chooses to ask on the subject.

Since I had to abandon the idea of writing on the Sabbath question, I have received many letters from different parts of the world asking me to prepare my autobiography for publication in book form, but this I am also unable to do.

I guess there is nothing left for me to do but to wait patiently for the reaper. Still I will keep trying to do what I can. My faith in the latter day work is strong—yes, stronger than death, and I shall go to rest with the consciousness of having done what I could, considering my chances for doing.

May the Lord bless his people and his work is my prayer.

J. C. CLAPP.

OSBORNE, STOCKPORT, ENGLAND, April 24, 1911.

Dear Editor: I feel I should like you to know how things are progressing in Stockport and England in general. The Mormon scare is all the rage and in several places brutal force is in evidence, from the Archbishop of Canterbury to the quiet country Methodists. All are filling the daily papers with all sorts of slanderous statements, and it is very rare we can get anyone to give us one line in defense of the Reorganized. Leading clergy from the Church of England are making such statements, viz: "All Mormons ought to be taken by the knap of the neck and dropped in the sea." Again, "Push them in a pond and duck them"; horsewhip them, etc. One town gave the Utah elders seven days in which to clear out; if not, the vicar would take the law in his own hands and be responsible for what the mob would do. I got a fairly lengthy letter in a leading paper. Now, as you will see by the papers, our Brother Maloney has a debate with one of the leading clergy of our town, Mr. Thorpe. "His church cost ninety thousand pounds—a very fine structure."

The brother and myself went to hear a sermon on the Mormon error, and the way the reverend gentleman handled the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and the life of Prophet Joseph was fearful in the extreme. I feel very glad in a sense that this commotion is going on, for I feel that God's hand is in all this and that he will not let his work go under. It is needful for us at such times to get posted and be ready to give a reason for the hope within us, and therefore we are gaining knowledge of the history of the church and the divinity of the latter day message.

Now, Mr. Editor, as you will see by Brother Maloney's letter, he is a digger in the streets, being a brick setter's laborer for the Manchester corporation, street work, man holes, etc. He is a priest in the church, Manchester District, and must needs have our prayers to God to give him words and power to defend his work.

I will send you further papers containing the debate, which I hope will be interesting to you.

Your brother for the cause of truth,

H. PRESTON.

ROSE HILL, CALIFORNIA.

Dear Herald: Will you permit me to say to my friends that I was baptized two years ago by Bro. S. W. Simmons and never have regretted the step I have taken. It was cold in February, and it was snowing and sleeting, but I knew that I must be baptized to be saved. A few days before I was baptized I dreamed I saw the Holy City, and I was told that I must be baptized to enter. I could see my father on the inside and I was baptized because I wanted to be saved with papa. I do not want to be one that has to turn back.

Mamma takes the HERALD and I like to read the letters. I asked mamma if I could write a letter, and she said yes. I wish Bro. S. W. Simmons, Bro. E. A. Erwin, and Bro. John Harp, whom I gave my best kisses the last time I saw them, would write lots in the HERALD, so I could see the good letters. I love Bro. E. A. Erwin, for he used to come to my papa's house, and he baptized papa and mamma. Mamma said if any traveling elders pass this way, they must write us a card, and we will be glad to have them stop with us.

I ask the prayers of the Saints, that I may live a life that will be pleasing to the Lord.

In the gospel bonds,

HENRY KELSEO.

The Webb City Meetings.

We are meeting with success far beyond our fondest anticipation in Webb City meetings. The committee of arrangements certainly deserve great credit for the systematic advertising and considerate preparation made. They circulated some three thousand "door knob hangers," twenty-five hundred hand cards, and one hundred large window cards, besides running several advertisements in daily papers, and large banners on the street. Everything was in readiness on our arrival.

We began our series of lectures on Sunday, April 23. On Monday, I sent a five hundred word synopsis of my Sunday evening lecture to the daily papers. They received them gingerly, one editor remarking, "It is too long." However, they printed the same, and the next day the editors of both Sentinel and Register requested that we supply them with a five hundred word synopsis of each lecture, and yesterday the Register increased the demand to nine hundred words. The Joplin News-Herald representative called on me this morning and requested a half column report each day. Four other revivals are in full blast in this neighborhood at this time, I am told, yet scarce a line appears in the papers concerning them.

As a result of this publicity, our people are getting before the public as never before. To-morrow morning, I address the high school students, upon special request of the principal, who has attended my meetings. The attendance has been all we could expect, indeed far beyond what I anticipated. Representative people of the city are coming every evening. Last night the postmaster, a prominent lawyer, druggist, jeweler, and five or six school teachers were in attendance. One nonmember has given twenty dollars towards the expense of the meeting, and so the good work goes on. Bro. Hale W.

Smith is rendering valiant service in the realm of song.

Will remain here two weeks, or longer, as the interest may determine, unless the work demands attention elsewhere. My meetings at Kansas City and Council Bluffs, where the crowds in each place have filled the buildings at times to overflowing, likewise here, evidence the wisdom of systematic and thorough advertisement. We must adopt modern methods if we would win. God is certainly very, very good. We are seeking to be as appreciative of his goodness as we can, by humbly filling our mission in this great work for human redemption.

Your brother in Christ,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

News From Branches.

Des Moines, Iowa.

Sister Moore, of Perry, who was so badly afflicted with dropsy, and away in the South, wrote a request for prayers to the branch here, and on Wednesday night at the regular prayer service special prayers were offered for her recovery. Marvelous was the result, as she relates it. She retired on Wednesday night on which prayers were requested for her, and in a very swollen condition, her life being despaired of, but the next morning the swelling was gone, and she has not had a return since. This change during the night surprised her relatives where she was staying, and when the physician came he could not understand what had occurred. Sister Moore gives God the praise, and all our hearts are filled with gratitude. Several blessings of a marvelous character have been realized from God during the last few weeks.

The elders from Utah held a conference in the city last week, and they have decided to make Iowa the center of their missionary work in the States, and it is understood that they have decided to locate four of their elders in the city of Des Moines, more than at any one point in the State, so it looks like Des Moines is the center around which they expect to revolve.

Six of their number held meetings on the streets of Perry Saturday night, and became wonderfully angered when questions were asked. They stated that they were anxious to have the Book of Mormon read, and their tracts investigated, in which it was said the people would find their views on marriage, and that they would find that they had been misrepresented on that subject. They would not answer any questions till they had dismissed. I asked them if it was misrepresenting them to state that they formerly taught and practiced polygamy, and the answer was, "You are here to bring up that which will cause contention," and I had to repeat the question the third time before they would answer it. They said they had formerly taught and practiced polygamy, but did not now, nor had not since 1890. I asked them what the president of their church was practicing by living at the present time with five women he called his wives. They said, that was a different thing. I then told them that only on the Wednesday before I was visiting with a lady in the east part of Des Moines and she told me that they had taught her polygamy, and I know that they left with her a tract that taught that God approved of two methods of marriage, monogamy and polygamy, and gave scriptural citations from the Bible that they used to sustain their contention. They denied this and became quite excited, and said that I could not prove the charge. I told them that I would bring the evidence, when they said, "You can't prove anything to us. You are a Reorganite. We held a debate with you in Des Moines, and you did nothing but throw mud."

The facts are that I never held a debate with them in Des Moines, but met one night by their appointment to hear them present their proof that Brigham Young was a prophet, and they would not present the subject, and I then presented from the books they claim to believe in, the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, Times and Seasons, and Journal of Discourses, the former teachings of the church. When I quoted and read from the Times and Seasons and Journal of Discourses statements from Brigham Young and others, they called that throwing mud. Well, I thought, if that which those men said contrary to the word of God is now condemned as mud, then there has been some change, for at the time these statements were made they were considered the mind of God to them.

Bro. O. Salisbury remained to reply to their erroneous position on Sunday. Three of the elders were present and became quite angry ere they left.

Since the conference the companion of the writer has been in such a condition physically that I have been under the necessity of being near home the most of the time.

A sociable is to be held this week in the interests of the tent fund. The district tent is in such a condition that it can not be used, and a new one is necessary.

Preparations are being made for the coming reunion to be held at Colo, beginning the last Friday in August, and continuing ten days. It is expected that Elder J. W. Wight will be in attendance to assist, with other representatives of the church. Notice will be sent later.

CORRESPONDENT.

Independence, Missouri.

During the month of April the Saints have been blessed in hearing excellent sermons from Elders W. A. Smith, Mark H. Siegfried, C. Ed. Miller, W. H. Kelley of the South Side Branch, George Jenkins, C. E. Crumley, Gomer T. Griffiths, Joseph Luff and R. Etzenhouser.

On Thursday evening, the 27th, Brother Griffiths gave a very interesting lecture, accompanied with views, on Palestine, and there as a large and appreciative audience present.

There has been a fine attendance at all the meetings, the number at the eight o'clock prayer services being about eighty, and Sunday afternoon the lower room was filled with young and old, occupying to the edification of all present.

The gifts of prophecy and of healing have been manifested, making our hearts glad in the comforting and encouraging of many of the sick and afflicted.

At the business meeting, on the 3d, nine were granted letters of removal and fifteen were received into the branch.

We mention especially the effort in arranging for a beautiful cantata, called, "Christ is risen," to cheer the Saints at the church on Easter evening, and repeated on the 23d, under the efficient directorship of our sister, Mrs. B. M. Anderson.

We also note the increased interest and attendance at the Sunday school, the number present on the 23d having been 846. In closing these notes, unattended by either those of the robin, or balmy spring air, we quote the poet who sings thus:

"Hail, gentle spring! the poets sing,
Nor do they sing in vain;
Spring hails, and snows, and rains, and blows,
With all her might and main."

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Conference Minutes.

MANCHESTER.—Annual conference of the Manchester (England) District, was held Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, April 15, 16, and 17, 1911. Griffiths for the General Conference to obtain help for the English Mission; also a reply received from Bishop E. L. Kelley; also a letter of thanks from our aged Sister Dewsnup, in answer to a letter of congratulation sent in January on the attainment of her seventy-sixth birthday. Report of committee on delegates' credentials received and votes appoitioned to delegates from various branches. Reports of elders and priests read from Elders James Schofield, George Towers, J. Harper, James Waugh, J. S. Grundy, J. Dewsnup, James R. Baty, F. Bruton, N. J. Weate, J. Foden, William Spargo, R. Murray; also W. H. Greenwood of the Seventy, and Priest Ed. Maloney. The reports of other priests were included in the branch spiritual reports. Branch presidents reports read from S. F. Mather, South Branch; J. Bailey, North Branch; G. W. Leggott, Northeast Branch; W. R. Armstrong, East Branch; J. Harper, Farnsworth Branch; James Spargo, Wigan Branch; W. H. Chandler, Warrington Branch; William Worth, Stockport Branch; H. L. Griffiths, Eccles Branch, and T. Brien of the Denton Mission. Branch spiritual reports read from the South, North, Northeast, East, Farnsworth, Wigan, Warrington, Stockport and Eccles branches. Exception was taken to items in three reports, and they were referred to a committee. N. J. Weate was given charge of the catering, with power to call to his assistance. The announcements were made of the order of Sunday services, and the conference adjourned to meet again for business at 9 a. m. Monday. The Sunday services in the Longsight public hall. Morning meeting at 10.30, with district presidency in charge; soloist, S. F. Mather; preacher, G. W. Leggott. The afternoon fellowship service in charge of James Baty, S. F. Mather, and N. J. Weate. The evening service was presided over by the district president. Sr. Evelyn Mather was the soloist and W. H. Greenwood, the speaker. Monday morning assembly called to order at 9.10 with district president, H. Greenwood in charge. The minutes of Saturday's session read, corrected, and passed. District president's report read and received, and consideration of items thereon left for a later stage of conference. A resolution was made that the consideration of ordinations now have preference. Recommendations for ordination of Brn. Nephi Dewsnup and Samuel Mather to the office of priests in South Branch. After consideration it was resolved that this conference accede to the request of South Branch and provide for the ordination of the brethren named. The recommendation of the district president, of Priest Ed. Maloney to the office of elder was next discussed, and after lengthy discussion it was resolved that the conference accede to the ordination. The vote not being unanimous, the brother refused the office and the matter was deferred till the October conference. The recommendation of East Branch of Bro. Cyril Armstrong to the office of deacon, and Brother John J. Weate to the office of Priest, also of Brother Heywood, of Eccles Branch, to the office of teacher, were considered, and ordinations favored. Report of the superintendent of Sunday schools was presented by Bro. S. F. Mather; report received and ordered spread upon the minutes. Secretary's report was presented and discussed. There had been twenty-eight baptisms during the year 1910 and eight received by letter. There have been eleven removals and six deaths; making a net gain of nineteen. There had been four ordinations and two marriages. It was also resolved to have a procession of the district Sunday schools on the occasion of the British Isles Mission conference in August. The financial secretary's report read and accepted, which showed a balance on hand of 7-6-3. A brief summary of the district Bishop's agents' accounts was read, showing receipts 197-712½; expenditures 194-4-5; on hand 3-2-9. The auditors' reports on the above account was read, stating they had been well and accurately kept. The request from the Eccles Branch for an itemized account of business to be sent to each branch one month before conference. Formation of the Rota plan of speakers for the several branches was left to the district presidency; a communication was read from the secretary of the Boys' Brigade in connection with the Northeast Branch. An effort was made to rescind a motion which was made at the January conference, which left the corresponding in the interests of the Reorganized Church in the hands of the mission presidency. The agitation against the Mormons is very acute at the present time in this land, and our brethren are anxious to vindicate the cause of the Reorganized Church, and feel keenly the restraint placed upon them by the above motion, but it was nevertheless resolved to let the rule stand, and let the wave of fury expend itself, after which we feel that the contrast in the churches will be more manifest. We delight to think the Parliament is taking the matter up and the Home Secretary has written to the chief constable of each city, for information, and in several places our representatives have been sent for and interviewed, and the distinction made. Bro: Ed. Maloney had entered into a newspaper debate with the Rev. Mr. Thorpe, rural dean of the Parish of Stockport, and it was resolved that all further communications respecting the question at issue in Stockport be referred to the secretary of the British Isles Mission. The suggestion of Brother Greenwood that a mission be opened in Bolton was deferred until October conference. Election of officers: H. Greenwood was reelected president; T. Brien and W. R. Armstrong vice-presidents; William Worth as secretary, with H. Preston assistant; N. J. Weate, financial secretary of district; J. Foden was elected auditor in place of W. R. Armstrong. Resolved, That we sustain J. D. Dewsnup as Bishop's agent. Resolved, That we sustain S. F. Mather as superintendent of Sunday schools. Resolved, That we sustain G. W. Leggott as missionary to the district. Resolved, That we sustain the general, mission, and local authorities of the church. Resolved, That the best thanks of conference be awarded to Brother Weate for the generous way he provided for the catering during conference and also to those who assisted him. Resolved, That best thanks be awarded to the East Branch for the use of meeting rooms. Conference was fairly well attended and a good feeling prevailed throughout. Henry Greenwood, president; William Worth, secretary.

Pastoral.

To the Ministry and Saints of Mission Number 1; Greeting: It was perhaps noted by all that the environments of the above mission have been changed, and that the portion presided over by the writer for seven consecutive years has been taken off and a portion of Canada added in lieu, so that the mission is now comprised of Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota, the Dakotas, Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba.

ASSISTANT MINISTERS IN CHARGE.

The following brethren will have local ministerial charge of the fields as designated; Nauvoo and Eastern Iowa districts, James McKiernan; Lamoni Stake, Eli Hayer will have charge of the missionary work while John Smith will care for the local arm; Des Moines District, J. F. Mintun; Fremont District, W. E. Haden; Pottawattamie District, C. Scott; Little Sioux and Gallands Grove districts, W. A. Smith; Nebraska, J. R. Sutton; South Dakota, Levi Gamet; Minnesota, Leonard Houghton; the three Canadian provinces, E. E. Long. These brethren will have the watchcare of the missionary arm, leaving the organization of branches and other local matters to the minister in general charge and local authorities.

"TWO BY TWO."

So far as it is possible so to do the various brethren will travel in harmony with the above designation, save in the case of the evangelists, whose especial duty it will be to travel among and revive the branches, while beside those already objectively designated, J. L. Parker will remain for the present, at least, in Sioux City, and B. S. Lambkin will care especially for the work in Minneapolis and Saint Paul.

REPORTING.

The reports as heretofore should be sent to the minister in general charge, Lamoni, Iowa, unless otherwise notified, and be mailed on the first day of July, October, January, and March. And that your names may not be published as delinquents in this matter, make a note of these dates and remember them! The quorum by resolution ordered that each minister in general charge should require a quarterly report from stake and district presidents. Let each president see to it that the proper blanks for this purpose are ordered from the Herald Office, placed in the hands of the various branch presidents, and in turn sent to me quarterly.

"A STAMP INCLOSED."

If those wishing information from the minister in general charge will kindly remember the above injunction it will help to materially equalize the "burden." While this may seem like stinginess, it is not so meant. Possibly some of you read the financial reports and wonder how it is that the preacher spends so much! Consider, one thousand letters during the year would reach a maximum alone of near thirty dollars—counting the cost of paper and envelopes in addition to the stamps.

Why not "Bear ye one another's burdens, and thus fulfill the whole law"?

REUNIONS AND CONFERENCES.

If you desire the presence of the minister in charge it will be well to notify as to time and place as soon as known, that arrangements can be made to this end. If not possible to be there in person it is possible that a substitute can be with you. In fact, if health permits, the quorum president is likely to visit North Dakota and the Canadian provinces. It is also likely that a patriarch can be with you. If, however you desire the presence of the latter, it will be well to communicate with both Bro. J. R. Lambert and me, that no confusion may result.

LAST, BUT NOT LEAST.

The "allowance" was raised two dollars a month for the wife, so that it will naturally mean that an extra effort should be made in tithes and offerings. Let us show our faith by our works; that all may duly be provided for.

May peace and blessings abide.

In bonds,
J. W. WIGHT.

LAMONI, IOWA, May 1, 1911.

AN EPISTLE.

To the British Isles and Palestine Mission; Greeting: Having been continued in charge of the work of the Lord in the above named territory, I herewith call the attention of the officers and the laity to some matters which in my opinion are of importance to all concerned. The following ministry have been appointed to labor as missionaries, namely, E. B. Morgan, R. Baldwin, T. Jones, Thomas Taylor, T. U. Thomas, Henry Greenwood, G. W. Leggett, Rees Jenkins, and William H. Greenwood. The brethren herein named will confine their labors to the following sections of the mission: Rees Jenkins to the Holy Land, Jerusalem objective point; E. B. Morgan, Eastern Wales District and eastern end of Western District; T. U. Thomas, Western Wales District, Llanelly objective point; Richard Baldwin, London District, London objective point; Thomas Jones, South of England, east end of Wales District; Thomas Taylor, Birmingham District; Henry Greenwood, Leeds and Sheffield districts, Leeds objective point; G. W. Leggett, associated with Richard Baldwin during the summer and fall months, Manchester District; William H. Greenwood, Manchester District.

The following brethren have been given local appointment, ever you desire the presence of the latter, it will be well to self-supporting, but their traveling expenses will be met while doing missionary work: William R. Armstrong, Samuel Mather, N. West, Thomas Brien. These brethren will labor two and two, under the direction of William H. Greenwood. We have been greatly favored as a mission in that the leading authorities have appointed a bishop of many years' experience to take charge and control the financial affairs of the British Isles. He will select two of the English brethren as his counselors to assist him in this work at the coming mission conference. Brethren Leggett and J. W. Taylor, whose ordinations to the office of high priest have been ordered by the General Conference, will be ordained at the mission conference, which will be held at Manchester, commencing August 5, at 10 o'clock, and continuing over Monday, the 7th. We sincerely trust the brethren will make a special effort to be present at this conference, as we anticipate a good time. Brother Armstrong, the secretary of the mission, will give due notice and particulars of the conference in the near future. We are highly pleased with the brethren who have been assigned to this mission, and we feel confident that if the ministry and laity will combine their efforts and seek to do their full duty in obedience to the spiritual and temporal law, a grand work will be accomplished the ensuing year.

The Presiding Bishop has promised to supplement our efforts to the extent of his ability, along financial lines, but it must be remembered there is a duty devolving upon every individual Saint, to do his or her part in paying tithes and free will offerings, thus helping the bishops to carry on their work. We sincerely hope the Saints in Palestine will not permit the spirit of emigration to take too strong a hold of them, as we

May 2, 1911.

To the Saints of the Central Nebraska District: Again I wish to remind you of the necessity of sending in your tithes and offerings, so that the families of missionaries depending on that source of revenue may not be left in want. Do not wait to see the bishop's agent for you may possibly have to wait a long time, as he is assigned to the State of South Dakota as part of his mission field. But send your money to him at Inman, Nebraska, and you will get your receipt after a little time. Let us all put forth a strong effort to do our whole duty in this as every other thing, and may the kind Father bless and prosper you.

LEVI GAMET.

To the Saints and the Ministry of Mission Number 2, comprising Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, Kansas, Missouri, and Central and Southern Illinois; Greeting: Invigorated as a result of the faithful labor done by the ministry and Saints in the year that has just passed we feel encouraged and inspired with a hope and zeal, that as good and probably a better record may be made during the year we are now merging into.

The field, by reason of its location, is one of the most important missions in the church. Hence, we need a thorough and careful ministry; men of God in whom we can trust its every care—not only in general, but in a local sense, too.

Therefore, to be thoroughly forearmed for every important emergency before us, we must not only have the aid of the General Conference appointees, but every local man in the mission, as well. Yes, presidents of districts and branches, with their official assistants. Sunday school and Religio workers—working with us to accomplish the great design of our heavenly Father—in a preparation to the redemption of Zion.

That we may have system in our ranks to accomplish the best results to the end named, we appoint the following brethren as our assistants in the different parts of our field: F. C. Keck in charge of southern Kansas—all that part not now in organized territory. J. T. Riley, Louisiana and Arkansas, and including all of that part of Arkansas which is in the Eastern Oklahoma and Spring River districts. R. M. Maloney, all of Texas save that part included in Central and Eastern Oklahoma districts. Lee Quick, Eastern Oklahoma District—including that part of Spring River District in Oklahoma, and that part of Texas east of the 96th meridian, and north of the Central Texas District—east to the Arkansas line. J. Arthur Davis, all that part of Spring River District in Missouri and Kansas. W. E. Peak, Eastern and Western Kansas districts. Hubert Case, Western Oklahoma District. W. M. Aylor, Central Oklahoma District—including that part of Texas north of the Central Texas District, lying between the 96th and 98th meridians.

It is our will that the three brethren, Case, Aylor, and Quick, associate their work, so as to make a vigorous campaign (as far as wisdom demands) among the Lamanites of their respective fields. Do not let the imaginary lines that divide your fields hinder you in reaching our Indian brethren. Visit each others' conferences and confer together for the betterment of the work in your charge if at all possible.

The Books of Mormon that have been donated by the Saints for the benefit of the Lamanite mission, should be ordered through us. Saints and friends that desire to make a further donation of the fifty cent edition of the Book of Mormon for the Lamanites of our field, should send their donation to us, with names and addresses of the donors, and we will see to it that the donors are protected in their "gift," and the brethren supplied with the book in its proper time and place.

George Jenkins, in charge of Southeastern and Saint Louis districts. R. T. Walters, Central Illinois District. A. C. Silvers, Nodaway District. E. L. Henson, Far West District. Swen Swenson, Northeastern Missouri District. W. S. Macrae, Clinton District. A. M. Baker, Southern Missouri District, and the unorganized territory joining on the east. The ministers in general charge will supervise the missionary work in the Independence Stake.

William Lewis, of the Order of Evangelists, is appointed to the Far West District. Ammon White, to the Independence Stake. Ammon is at present on the Pacific coast—in British Columbia—having been granted a leave of absence by the proper authorities for a few months. Evangelists are not strictly missionaries, but, in the law are denominated revivalists, and should be free to visit branches and districts as wisdom may direct, in order to comfort the Saints—acting as a father unto them. They do not want to "butt in" to find work; but should be kindly invited by the officers of branches and districts, to come! Thus this order of God's house is honored in its proper calling, to the special benefit of the church.

The superannuated ministers may feel free to labor as their circumstances will permit, in harmony with local authorities, under the direction of the ministers in charge, as per General Conference resolution, No. 660. There will be no room for unnecessary friction in any of the departments of field work, if all will honor each others' rights in his office, work, and calling. Do this, and let us have peace, though we may be ever so earnest and aggressive for good in the church work.

DEBATES.

Do not be "nagged" into debate by men that are unprincipled in their character as debaters. We advise not to arrange for, or enter into public discussions without first consulting with those in general charge, so far as can be done and protect the work.

REUNIONS AND CONFERENCES.

If officers and committees especially concerned, will advise with us as to "time and place" of holding reunions and conferences, it will enable us to be present at many of these gatherings, and assist in furnishing speakers at the reunions from the list of our General Conference appointees more readily.

REPORTS.

By special arrangements between the ministers in general charge, the ministry will please report direct to I. N. White, 1006 West Maple avenue, Independence, Missouri, on the first day of July, October, January, and March.

BLANKS.

Do not wait for the minister in charge to send you blanks; send direct to the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and get them at eight cents per dozen. If you should fail to get blanks on time, send your report promptly anyway in a letter—giving every item under the following heads: Sermons preached; assisted or in charge; baptized; confirmed; ordained; patriarchal blessings; children blessed; debates; new openings; actual time in the field; districts, branches, Sunday schools, and Religios organized.

If absent from your field for any reason, state why. What interest has been shown in your field, and where. Any other items of interest, suggestions, or remarks. If this order is strictly observed, blanks will not be absolutely necessary, as we keep a book in which a record of names of all the ministers in our field are recorded, and the "items" contained in their reports are placed opposite their names, quarter by quarter—thus enabling us to make out our annual report from our record book. Your promptness in this matter of reporting every item will place your "credit" before the First Presidency in the true light of what you really have done, or not done.

DISTRICT AND BRANCH PRESIDENTS.

Blanks for your purpose can be had at Herald Office. It is enjoined that all presidents of branches make full report to the presidents of their respective districts, on the first day of the month before named, and the presidents of districts immediately afterwards report the same to us, or the Presidency.

FINANCES.

The present financial strain on the church, demands strict economy on the part of the ministry in their expenditures—traveling only as the real needs of the work demands. It is, and has been a sorry showing at times to note the "expense list" of an elder appointed only to a single district as a "field of labor," running up an expense account equal or even far above one who is in charge of a whole State. Let the minister attempt to show some generalship in the line of economics, and thus be an example to many of the membership. Let not the Saints turn the worthy minister from their doors empty handed. He will have discouragements enough, without meeting "cold-hearted Saints."

CONCLUSION.

"Consecration," seems to be the watchword to success; not alone with the ministry, but to the membership as well. If we are wholly consecrated to God, it will take no pushing on the part of any to keep us to the front, as to duty.

Let our lives be models of purity, in our homes, in the pulpit, and in our everyday walk among the people. Such a life will crown the ministry with valuable sheaves—auxiliaries to the church that he need not to be ashamed of. Beware of hasty baptisms! Preach repentance to the people. Do not drag men and women into the church, that have not repented of their sins by a thorough turning away from them.

Having said so much, let any or all feel free to write us, of your trials, or of your triumphs, and let us be "workers together" with you, in the great conflict. May the Master's blessings be with you, is our earnest prayer. As ever, your colabourers in gospel bonds,

I. N. WHITE.
J. F. CURTIS.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 5, 1911.

To the Saints of Northwestern Kansas District: Having been again appointed to this district, I seek your cooperation for the work of the coming year. You can greatly assist by getting openings in your locality, and by letting the missionaries know where there are openings for preaching. I am willing to go anywhere in the district if I can only have or get a place in which to preach. I trust we may all operate together for the advancement of the Master's cause, and may our district receive an impetus as it has not known for years.

Also, dear Saints, let us remember the law known as the temporal law. The Lord has made known to the church that the tithes are to make it possible for the spread of the gospel. (Doctrine and Covenants 114:1.) So let us give of our substance to the Lord, at least that which we owe. The undersigned will receipt you for tithes. I ever desire the spread of God's work.

In gospel bonds,
JOHN A. TEETERS.

from nothing leaves nothing. Well, this is a fact, but I find that in some cases it is not altogether true. Suppose you had 75 per cent of the proper energy and you would eat the following foods that have no life element whatever, White Bread, Butter, Lard, Dates, etc., in this case you will take into the system. You obtain nothing but you reduce the energy (life) so rapidly that it actually will destroy your life in 30 to 60 days. Why eat White flour? It is the finest kind of material for wall paper hanging, bill board posting, starching shirts, produce constipation, nervousness, rheumatism, etc., but never eat it with the idea of obtaining life, as the government analysis shows it only a carbonate producing heat or fat.

Ever Been to Colorado?

No? Then there is an ideal vacation trip in store for you—one that will mean a complete change of scene and living conditions, as it should, to result most beneficially.

The grandeur of the majestic Rockies will inspire the mind; the picturesque beauty of forest and stream refresh the soul, while the dry, tonic mountain air will rebuild the worn and jaded body.

Don't take our word for it, but go and be convinced. It costs but little time or money. (I'll be glad to tell you how much) and you will be a thousand times repaid.

You have perhaps been planning a trip to Colorado for years. A SERIOUS MISTAKE.

CONCERNING HASTY GATHERING TO INDEPENDENCE.

Some of our overzealous Saints, some living isolated, and others in or near to branches abroad, are making a mistake in selling out their habitations and business and hurrying into Zion, without first ascertaining the conditions unto which they are proposing to move, and making all things ready as required in the revelation. The general funds of the church in the Bishop's hands are gathered from the mites, free will offerings, consecrations, and tithings of the people as a whole: a few cents here, a few dollars there,—and without the contributions of any millionaires, for there are none among us. It seems to be a too prevalent notion that the church is possessed of an inexhaustible treasury, and that whoever may by any means fall into apparent or real necessity has only to throw himself into the hands of the bishopric, and all that is desired by them will be provided at once.

A little thought before changing location and a little seeking of advice after proper statement of conditions to the Bishop or other leading officers of the church might help a good many in more ways than one. There is now no call to "come to Zion" to escape "the sword," a fleeing into a condition of safety, because one does not wish to raise his hand against his brother; (that is, his brother of the common brotherhood of man); and why Saints who are doing well in a financial or temporal way where they have a means of support for themselves and those depending upon them should disrupt conditions surrounding them, and change into new conditions, almost invariably at a loss, is a surprise to some of us, who, while we are not accounted as business men, can see and realize the loss to the church of both means and prestige of individual effort, in the accumulation together of persons who are more or less dependent upon the gatherings of others to supply their own deficiencies. This is more surprising in cases where individuals are possessed of lands in eligible location which are constantly increasing in value. For instance; along in the sixties, and soon after the civil war, land sold in Hancock County, Illinois, with fair improvements, for twenty-five dollars and thirty dollars per acre, and lands without improvement could be bought for even less. Now the same lands are valued at and will easily sell for from one hundred and fifty to two hundred dollars per acre, a valuable increase. Saints, as well as "the children of the world," should in this respect be wise unto the situation; for the reason, that if there should come a call from the Lord, officially stated, to gather to Zion to the central spot or stake, in order that a temple should be built, a people who will build such a temple must have temporal means by which they may carry on that work, in the purchase of material and the payment of skilled labor and the superintendency, which will be absolutely necessary.

Why, then, should "The children of Zion" carelessly throw away some of the means by which they could not only assist in the general gospel work as it is now being carried on, but by which when they come to Zion they might have means which they could freely give for the completion of the great object, if the building of the temple is a great object? We have tried, from time to time, to call the attention of the people to this phase of conditions, and as early as 1866, 1868, and 1870, we labored with the people in the northwest to secure vacant lands around them, in order that they might take advantage of the increase in value which we then foresaw (as we have realized since) would take place.

We personally saved to one brother who was contemplating selling out where he was, near the now flourishing city of Shenandoah, Iowa, one thousand dollars, by persuading him not to sell at the price which had been offered him for his land. He waited one year and received one thousand dollars more than he was offered at the time when we thus persuaded him to defer his sale. He left his location, moved into Nauvoo, and after some two or three years went back to Shenandoah and purchased land close by that which he sold, for which he paid considerable more than he received for that which he had sold a little while before. It was a mistake, of course, but others have been making similar mistakes, and we would really like to see a better condition of things arise.

Again, it sometimes happens that in small branches the brethren are doing well. They have good prestige among their neighbors, a good reputation, and are exemplary. They are preaching the gospel by both precept and example. It may be that they are not eloquent ministers, so far as pulpit preaching is concerned, but their consistent and steady work and upright living is an example of which their neighbors can take note. The desire comes and the elder or other officer feels that he would like to change his location and get, as the saying is, near to the church, the greater body. He has an opportunity, sells out and gets to Zion, or in the neighborhood round. He finds it more or less difficult to locate himself suitably, and sometimes weeks, sometimes months, and sometimes years elapse before he gets located permanently, until finally he is, financially, almost where he began his early married life. The church needs good men everywhere, and in perhaps no other places more than in the small branches where the work has been begun by missionary labor. Why not let the Lord have his way, and if the Saints are within a reasonable distance, to use an army expression, a "striking distance" of the great army of occupation, why not take it in hand and make the best of it, unto proper provision, so that when the time does come the move may be advantageously made, so that there will be nothing to hinder, neither moral nor material, against the change of location.

There is another phase of this matter. That is this: There are now belonging to the Independence Branch some twenty-four hundred members, as fine a body of people possibly as has ever been gathered together under the gospel dispensation since the days of Christ. These are earnestly striving with all their might, both by precept and example, to spread the gospel in the immediate location where they are. Elders and priests who were active in the branches where they have resided, on moving into the nearness of the central place, find themselves some out of the way of doing missionary work among their neighbors; and sometimes they feel hurt that they are not invited to occupy the pulpit at the central place, and feel that they are becoming restive and rusty under spiritual idleness. Effort is being made to get this increase of the army into active operation in the regions round about, that those who may come in after proper and reasonable inquiry, and with an understanding with the bishopric and the general officers of the church, may find the spiritual employment suitable to keep them up to the mark of spiritual usefulness.

So, all things considered, let us avoid making mistakes, if we can. Within the last three years a second church has been built in Independence, the seating capacity of which is now pretty fully occupied, and it will be necessary to enlarge the borders of Zion in this respect; and those who come from abroad should come ready to help in such work as this. Some seven churches are now occupied in Kansas City, and its close environments, these too need aid, because of the increased numbers of the Saints, to build church buildings; and those who come ought to come prepared to aid in this good work.

Upon the hypothesis that "Wisdom is justified of her children," let us as Saints come nearer to heeding the admonition, "Let all things be prepared before you," in order that we do not detract from the advantages of being near the great body. Spiritual righteousness is not a product of the soil, it is the product of the gospel in the hearts of those who are pure in heart; and in any locality, under any environment, where the heart is set to do righteousness, there will the peace of God be found, and his Spirit will rule and abide.

Only a day or two ago we received a letter from one who has not heard a gospel sermon for twenty years, who has been living isolated and alone, and yet the spirit of the gospel burns brightly in the heart of that Saint. There is the pure in heart. There is room in the regions round about for those who are willing to live in harmony with their neighbors, keep the law of the land by keeping the law of God, in justification of their personal conduct and enjoyment of the Spirit, being blessed by the associations of the Saints.

In gospel bonds,
JOSEPH SMITH.

TWO SUCCESSFUL CAMPAIGNS.

There is something significant in the effort being made to present the gospel by Brn. R. C. Evans and T. W. Williams; the former at Toronto during the last five months, ending with the last Sunday in April, in the Princess Theater, together with the publication of his sermons during the year in the Toronto World, which will evidently include his Sunday sermons in the Toronto Saints' church for the remaining part of the year, he having delivered some twenty-two of the series, leaving some thirty Sunday efforts still to be presented; the latter in an effort begun at Webb City, Missouri, April 23, which effort was continued until May 10. Concerning Brother Williams' effort, the Webb City Register, published by the Register Publishing Company, and edited by Arthur Rozelle, in its issue of May 9, gives the following:

The Register is a secular newspaper. In disseminating church news, it plays no favorites. From a professional standpoint, all look alike to the Register.

We have been giving a synopsis of the sermons delivered by Rev. T. W. Williams, of the Latter Day Saints' Church, in this city during the past two weeks, as a matter of news. The sermons and synopsis have aroused much interest and favorable comment among the most thoughtful people of the city, and have given them a very favorable opinion of the Latter Day Saint doctrine.

Reverend Williams is a man of exceedingly pleasant address and bearing. He is not dogmatic, but argumentative. He preaches a religion of hope, instead of despair, and on the whole, it is the most reasonable religious teaching that has ever been promulgated from a Webb City pulpit, by an evangelist.

Reverend Williams is not a ranter, not an adept in the use of slang. In that respect he is different from some of the so-called evangelists, who are out for the "stuff," but he wins respect wherever he goes among intelligent people who are not carried away by their emotions, but who believe in a practical and rational religion, as taught by the Master, Jesus.

These two efforts were running simultaneously for a time, Brother Evans having begun his in December, and Brother Williams, after filling two weeks at the Central Branch of Kansas City and a week at Council Bluffs before General Conference, after its adjournment took up the effort at Webb City by the invitation of the Webb City Branch, beginning meetings in that city on April 23 and continuing up to the time mentioned. Both of these efforts have been successful so far as attendance at the services is concerned.

We understand that the effort of Brother Evans at the Princess Theater is under the auspices of the Toronto Branch of the church, the meetings being presided over by Bro. Archie McLean, president of the branch, Brother Evans having the assistance of the branch officers and those chosen to work with them, and the branch choir. Brother Evans' efforts have been well spoken of as well as those of Brother Williams.

Brother Hale W. Smith was selected by the Webb City Saints to take charge of their singing, and it is said that the song service was quite excellent.

We are much pleased to notice the efforts made at different places for the spread of the gospel, especially through the efforts of the local organizations. It can not fail to be productive of good. It may be true that we have not many evangelists of the kind that our neighbors of different denominations have and employ in their protracted efforts, but it seems quite certain and significant that wherever we gain an opportunity the brethren are inspired to conduct the services in such a manner as to bring the gospel teaching into prominence, and favorable commendation is received from those among whom these efforts are made. All credit to those who have been thus engaged and honor and glory to the Master whose gracious Spirit gives the ability and the power.

The following clipping from the Toronto World recites the fact that the effort made by Bro. R. C. Evans at the Princess Theater closed with evidences of fine success, and a reception among the Saints at the close suggests the thoroughness of the cooperation which the Saints of the Toronto Branch and other nearby branches have given the movement made in the Princess Theater:

The Latter Day Saints gave a supper to four hundred of their workers last Tuesday night in the basement of their Soho street church. After the supper, addresses were given by members of the church and outsiders, and a very pleasant evening was spent.

The occasion was to mark the completion of Bishop R. C. Evans' series of lectures at the Princess Theater, where he has spoken to crowded houses for the last twenty-two Sunday nights; and to show some appreciation of the work done by many members during the winter months. The meetings at the theater have been very successful, in that scores of people of different denominations, including many Catholics and Protestants, have been led to think for themselves, and have become baptized members of the church.

The lectures will be continued in the Soho street church during the summer, as on account of the approach of the hot weather it was thought that it would be impossible to fill the Princess Theater, and so be able to meet the heavy expenses. It has, however, already been engaged by the bishop for next winter, where he will again speak in his usual vigorous style.

A very pleasant surprise was given Mr. Evans when he was presented with a purse of money. A vote of thanks was returned to Miss Hazel Hathaway, the young soloist who has delighted the Princess Theater audiences Sunday after Sunday, and to Mr. Boyne, the pianist, and Mrs. Faulds, leader of the choir.

A few facts regarding the progress of the Latter Day Saints' Church in Toronto should prove interesting. Bishop Evans organized the Toronto church twenty years ago, when there were but ten members, with a plank and a few chairs serving as pews in the little roughcast cottage on Manning avenue. Now there is a small church at Humber Bay, of which Elder Withrow has charge; another one at Davisville under Elder Wilson, and the Soho street one, of which Elder McLean has charge.

The bishop has supervision over all the Toronto work, and whenever he is billed to speak at Soho street, the church is packed to the doors. One reason for his popularity is that day after day when the Soho street church was being built (four years ago), he was to be seen in his overalls working with trowel and hod, sometimes for sixteen hours a day, among his fellow-members. This winter he helped put the addition on to the Soho street church, which will now comfortably seat 950 people.

In connection with the church there is a Ladies' Aid Society, presided over by Mrs. Evans; a Sunday school, of which Mr. Long is president; also the Zion's Religio-Literary Society, which is similar to the Epworth League of other churches.

In all, the members of the Latter Day Saint Church in Canada number five thousand, while in the United States there are something like sixty thousand members.

Brother Evans is to be congratulated upon the success of his earnest effort, and also upon the loyalty of those who have been his helpers. It appears that the branch has already made an effort to secure the theater for the coming year. May it be the pleasure of the Lord to keep our brother, R. C. Evans, in health and strength to fill the expectation.

JOSEPH SMITH.

BY ORDER OF THE PRESIDENCY.

Some time ago the celebrated pastor, C. F. Russell, of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, made the following statement regarding the closing verses of the sixteenth chapter of Mark:

"Not long ago I pointed out that the last twelve verses of Saint Mark's gospel in our common version are spurious—so recognized by all scholars, because these verses are not to be found in any of the oldest Greek manuscripts and were evidently added to the word of God in the seventh century or later. Moreover, we gave proofs of the untruthfulness of this addition. Is it true that whoever believes the gospel of Christ may handle serpents with impunity and may drink deadly poison without harm? Surely not. It is nothing short of a sin for those who know better to acknowledge these verses and to use them to bolster up theories of divine healing. It is as much a crime to add to the word of God as to take away from it."

In this issue you will notice a very interesting review of the above statement, written by Bro. S. A. Burgess.

We have recently received a neat folder printed by the Manchester, England, District, on linen paper, showing the entire district organization, giving names and location of branches, names of ministers who labor on the "rota" plan and those who labor as circumstances permit, with a schedule giving the exact dates when each minister on the "rota" plan will preach at each place or branch in the district. It is a very well planned folder and speaks much for the executive ability of the brethren in charge of the district.

From recent press dispatches it appears that the Moslems in Jerusalem are excited over the report or rumor that foreigners have invaded the Mosque of Omar and looted it of some of their priceless treasures, among which one report says is the "ark of the covenant" containing the tablets of the Mosaic law. Another report says that the archæologists (who are known to have been working there and to have sailed) did not find the ark of the covenant, but instead have Solomon's crown, his sword and his ring. This sacred Mosque of Omar is the place where it is said Mohammed ascended to heaven after his night ride from Mecca.

We have received a letter from Salem, Missouri, but have been unable to use it because it was not signed. The party, a member of the church, writes quite interestingly about the place as a good place for business enterprises. Still more recently we have received a letter without address, signed "A Sister," which we can not use under our rules because we do not know who the writer is. This sister is discouraged and asks the prayers of the Saints that she may have help to continue steadfast in the faith.

Andrew Carnegie complains that the life of the philanthropist is exceedingly hard. He recently plead previous engagement when a grand jury summoned him to appear before them. When he was notified that if he did not come he would be brought, the real hardness of his lot began to appear. It is indeed unfortunate that some men have to be treated as other men are.

Recently we noticed the great private book sale in the city of New York. Since then we have read a number of items in regard to some of the sales made there, among which we note that the Guttenberg Bible, which was described in the last HERALD, sold for $50,000, Henry E. Huntington, of California, being the buyer. This is a little more than twice as much as was ever paid for a single book by an American. The second highest price paid was $21,000, and was for a copy of Helya's Knight of the Swanne, the first printed English version of the legend of the Lohengrin, dated London, 1512, and published by Wynkyn and De Worde.

It is a good idea to ask yourself why father and mother object to certain associates for you, why they insist on early hours, the school attendance, and other things of the same sort. The girl who takes pains to understand the good reasons back of her father's and mother's requirements, is fitting herself to govern herself wisely after the time comes when she can no longer depend on outside authority.

THE AUTHENTICITY OF MARK 16: 9-20.

"Not long ago I pointed out that the last twelve verses of Saint Mark's gospel in our common version are spurious—so recognized by all scholars, because these verses are not to be found in any of the oldest Greek manuscripts and were evidently added to the word of God in the seventh century or later. Moreover, we gave proofs of the untruthfulness of this addition. Is it true that whoever believes the gospel of Christ may handle serpents with impunity and may drink deadly poison without harm? Surely not. It is nothing short of a sin for those who know better to acknowledge these verses and to use them to bolster up theories of divine healing. It is as much a crime to add to the word of God as to take away from it."

The above paragraph appears in the sermon of Pastor C. F. Russell, of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, in The Weekly Inter-Ocean and Farmer, March 17, 1911.

As we re-read it, the first point that occurs is, How grossly the text has been misconstrued! We agree with Pastor Russell, that it is not true that whoever believes in the gospel of Christ can with impunity handle serpents, and use them as playthings. We also agree that it is unreasonable to suppose that they may deliberately drink deadly poisons without harm. It is nothing short of a sin for those who know better to put such an unreasonable construction on the word of God. Where two or more constructions appear superficially possible, that should be preferred and accepted which is consistent with the word of God as a whole, with his divine nature, and with common sense.

In the fourth chapter of Matthew we read that the Devil came to Jesus in the Holy City, when on the pinnacle of the temple, and quoted Isaiah, "If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down: for it is written, He shall give his angels charge concerning thee: and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone." (Matthew 4: 6; Isaiah 91: 11, 12.) The answer of the Master is significant: "It is written again, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." (Matthew 4: 7; Deuteronomy 6: 16; Luke 4: 2.) There is the sufficient answer, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.

There is no integral part of these verses that can not be sustained by other passages of scripture. The command of the Savior to baptize is also given in Matthew 28: 19. Luke also gives the promise that the disciples should tread on scorpions. These verses of Mark and similar promises do not mean that the Saints are to go out as dime museum freaks. The Master said, "For, verily, I say unto you, If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove to yonder place, and it shall move; and nothing shall be impossible unto you," (Matthew 17: 20); but he did not intend that his disciples should enter the cut rate moving business. The thought is rather, divine protection in case of need; as when the viper bit Paul (Acts 28: 3-6), and a power which may be used by devoted men for the blessing of the people of God and the good of mankind in general. The Reverend Russell, when he states a different interpretation, in order to reject this verse, uses the same argument that Lucifer did to Jesus after the forty days' fast.

Now, what are the facts in regard to the ancient manuscripts? In the first place "manuscript" means a copy of the New Testament written entirely in Greek. A copy of the New Testament in any other language than Greek, no matter how ancient, is called a "version." Now there are three manuscripts which are grouped together as being the most ancient and authentic: The Vatican, Sinaitic, and the Alexandrian. Their antiquity appears now to be generally considered to be in the order set forth. Their exact age is not known, but the theologians usually place it between 300 and 450 A. D. The Vatican does not contain these verses. But there is a column and a half left blank at the end of the gospel of Saint Mark. This does not occur in any other place, nor at the end of any other book of the manuscript. When it is considered how valuable writing materials were at that time, the devices used to condense the characters and crowd as much as possible on the page, the general opinion of scholars is that the copyist knew of these verses and was doubtful whether to include them or not. The Sinaitic omits these verses entirely. But the Alexandrian contains them.

The statement that these verses are not to be found in any of the oldest Greek manuscripts is therefore unfounded, though they are not found in either of the oldest two. Yet when we open the Revised Version we find these verses. Why? Because all the evidence against the authenticity of these verses is that set forth above, and some statements of Eusebius, while the evidence in favor of the authenticity of these verses is nearly all the rest of the manuscripts, (some 1,500), and most of them versions. (In the remaining manuscripts and versions this chapter of Mark is missing altogether.) Some of these versions, especially the Syriac, were used by some men whose parents had seen the apostles and are very ancient. For textual criticism the manuscripts are the most relied upon, to secure the exact sense of the words, but the simple question here is, Should these be included at all? On this question the versions, especially the more ancient, should be permitted to speak with great authority.

Historical criticism shows that the spiritual power of the church declined after the first century. There seems to be no valid reason why these verses should be formulated and placed in the versions and nearly all of the manuscripts, unless authentic. The tendency of the church was away from spiritual things. It was away from miracles of this class, and deep faith. The tendency was toward temporal rule and power, and away from the theurgy and theophany of the Apostolic Age.

Hence there appears no reason to believe that these verses were fabricated and introduced later. Especially is this true, when we consider how widely spread is their publication and how few indeed, though venerable, are the evidences against their authenticity.

It is true that some scholars question these verses, but it is not true that all, or even most scholars, consider them as being spurious. There should be a sufficient answer in the fact that the English and American revisers, after careful and critical analysis, include these verses in the Revised version. Hence, in conclusion, we respectfully submit, first; that these verses are consistent with the remainder of the Holy Scriptures. Second; that the evidence of the manuscripts and the versions strongly favors their genuineness. Third; that historical criticism makes it improbable that these verses were interpolated at a later date, but upholds their authenticity.

EXTRACTS FROM D. R. BALDWIN'S EXEGETICS OF FAITH.

A certain bright young child, upon starting to school, was thus strictly charged by loving and prudent parents. "John, you must believe in your teacher and you will become a wise and intelligent man."

He found it very easy to believe in his teacher whom he could see and hear; so he was highly delighted. Having great confidence in his parents he repeated this charge over and over to himself until he became strangely infatuated thereby, insomuch that he could never after be made to understand that anything else was necessary. What use had he for brain racking study and tedious application, since believing in his teacher would make him wise? So it was that many who were not his peers graduated along various lines, while he made no advancement.

Can we find anything more applicable to liken the "Christian" world to than to this poor child? All their lives have they heard these words of Jesus repeated over and over again: "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Passive souls having unbounded confidence in these words, have been hypnotized and inveigled into thinking that this is all that is needed: and as Johnnie ignored all the instructions of his teacher, so do these refuse to follow the examples and precepts of the great spiritual teacher. At the altar some are persuaded to repeat: "Jesus is precious to my soul." Then they arise and sing:

"Hallelujah, 'tis done,
I believe on the Son,
I am saved by the blood
Of the crucified One."

"'Tis done" (finished, completed) without prayer, without repentance, without baptism, without a single gift of the Spirit. Some settle down in a quiet, half satisfied manner, too obstinate to listen to the pleadings of truth, while others become so hilarious and noisy that they can not hear the truth though its thunders shake the earth. And this is called faith. But, alas, where are the results? Where the advancement?

WHAT IS FAITH?

The basis or ground work of faith is an intelligent belief in the truth, in other words the beginning of faith is belief in God and in his word. Belief in error (no matter how sincere you may be) is for me no part of saving faith; but it clogs the wheels of progress along any given line. The truth but half told sometimes becomes "the worst kind of a lie." The results of a belief in a lie are always bad. If it makes no difference what one believes, or if belief in error will save us, then the mission of our Savior was a failure; and of all his efforts to establish the truth can not elevate us.

Nowhere in the sacred word are we advised to believe an error, or a lie; but always and everywhere we are commanded to believe the truth. So we learn that a belief in the truth is the foundation of faith; and it is properly called faith even though it be in its embryotic stage.

THE EVOLUTION OF FAITH.

We are commanded to add to our faith such important things as virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity. I want to suggest that whatever you add to faith becomes a part of faith. Virtue is here first mentioned; and according to Webster's prime definition, virtue includes repentance in all of its ramifications; includes all there is of repentance. So faith must become an active proposition. The next thing that we are commanded to add to our faith is knowledge. We hear talk of a time or place where faith ends and knowledge begins. This sounds rather incoherent to the writer; for while he adds these graces and virtues to his faith, making them a part of his faith he sees the evolution and not the diminution of his faith. A knowledge of God must be added to our faith before it becomes a saving virtue.

In the sacred books of the church faith is likened unto a seed: the living germ in an acorn will serve as an illustration: the kernel of this acorn is nutritious but its real value is but the small fraction of a mill. You lay it away for an ornament, or feed it to the swine, and the life of the kernel is destroyed; it can never develop into a beautiful shade tree to yield bushels of acorns annually, or from which valuable timber may be taken. So it is with the germ of faith (belief in God); if it remains inactive it will, like the acorn, soon die; and its real value is too small to reckon. The acorn bears the same relation to the future giant oak as does an inactive belief in God bear to fully developed faith. So faith must augment, unfold, develop; it must work and grow like the acorn that becomes a great tree; or like the acorn that is hid away, it will surely die.

SAVED BY FAITH.

The writer holds (with our Methodist brother) that faith will save one in celestial glory. It must be that way, for faith can never be developed without works of righteousness, works of obedience. It requires an intelligent application of all the commandments; an addition of all the graces and virtues to constitute the mustard seed brand or stage of faith.

AN ABSOLUTE POWER.

When faith is fully developed it must be absolute; that is, it must be an unlimited power (not however to be exercised by man only as he cooperates with God). There can be no doubt that the mustard seed stage of faith is an unlimited independent force; for Jesus said, "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you."—Matthew 17:20. "If ye had faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye might say unto this sycamore tree, Be thou plucked up by the root, and be thou planted in the sea; and it should obey you."—Luke 17:6. "For verily I say unto you, That whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed and be thou cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass; he shall have whatsoever he saith."—Mark 11:23.

Faith is the dynamic power of God, set in motion by the cooperation of his children, and who shall say that it does not partake of the absolute nature and character of the giver?

ITS ETERNAL OR PERPETUAL NATURE.

"Enoch saw the day of the coming of the Son of Man, even in the flesh; and his soul rejoiced, saying, The righteous is lifted up, and the Lamb is slain from the foundation of the world; and through faith, I am in the bosom of the Father; and, behold, Zion is with me."—Doctrine and Covenants 36:9.

Notice his words, "Through faith I am (present tense) in the bosom of the Father."

The gospel is the only means of salvation. And after the thousand years' reign of Christ on earth all the dead, except the sons of perdition, "shall be heirs of salvation," "shall be servants of the Most High." See the vision. Therefore faith will be a principle of the gospel in eternity as well as in time. Paul tells us that when Christ shall come, prophecy and tongues shall cease, and that partial knowledge shall be swallowed up by perfect knowledge, etc.; but speaking of the adornments that abide, he mentions faith, hope, and charity. (1 Corinthians 13:13.)

Paul defines faith as "the substance of things hoped for." I like this translation, and hold to it, because in its outstretched arms it embraces all other translations of this passage, that I have seen. (Hebrews 11:1.) Do you hope for a knowledge of God? We have seen that it must become a part of our faith. Do you hope for eternal life? "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." Do you hope for salvation? "By grace are ye saved through faith."

Do you hope for a home in the kingdom of God? Enoch said, "Through faith I am in the bosom of the Father." Can you hope for any achievement that is Christlike which is not included in "the faith once delivered to the saints"? Is the substance of our hope to be snuffed out in eternity?

We understand that the worlds and all things that are in them were created by faith by the Son of God. (Hebrews 11:1; John 1:1.) By faith he stilled the winds and the waves, gave sight to the blind, cast out devils, fed the thousands, cleansed the lepers, and raised the dead. Since he worked by faith on all of these occasions, and is "the same yesterday, today, and for ever," (past, present, and future), how shall we say that he will not continue to work by the same in eternity?

So it is that the writer suggests the following amendment to the fifth stanza of that beautiful, soul stirring hymn (number 699) in Saints' Harp:

"Love is the grace that keeps her power
In all the realms above;
There faith becomes a mighty tower,
And saints for ever love."

LOVE MAKES FAITH ACTIVE.

A mighty locomotive, throbbing and trembling under a full head of steam, stands at the station attached to a modern passenger train which is perfect in all of her appointments; it is three minutes past the time when she should pull out; the passengers grow restless; what is the matter? Why doesn't she go? Presently the throttle is pulled and steam rushes into the cylinders and the great train is gone. Steam in the cylinders, then, is the active agent that works our trains. Gas is the potency which makes our auto cars glide along the streets. The electric current is that which gives momentum to the motor cars. So it is with all organized principles that move. They are each worked by some force peculiarly adapted to their organization, and faith being an active agency, is no exception to the rule.

It is well, then, that we inquire into its vitality; because we must understand these things, ere we can make an individual application of them. All machines, and all working principles are first organized, constructed, or built, after which the working force is applied. We have seen how faith is constructed, the component parts being first belief in God, then it is brought to perfection by an individual application of all his teachings; and now we want to learn what the principle is that gives motion to this most powerful agency the world has ever seen; for we can not apply it until we know what it is. Come with me now to Galatians 5: 6 where we find a most definite answer to our inquiry: namely, "For in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth anything nor uncircumcision; but faith which worketh by love." Love, then, is the principle that makes faith operative. Peter teaches this same lesson, where he commands us to add to our faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, and brotherly kindness; and when our faith has assimilated all these, he names lastly the propelling force, charity, or love. Paul not only taught this great truth to the Galatians, but he wrote to the Corinthians, "Though (or if) I have all faith so that I could remove mountains and have not charity I am nothing."

In other words, if his faith was fully developed, it would remain inoperative without love. After naming nine of the spiritual gifts in his twelfth chapter he speaks of charity as "a more excellent way." He wrote to the Romans thus, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Love worketh no ill to his neighbor, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law"; and to the Galatians, "For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

James writes thus, "Even so faith if it hath not works (of love) is dead, being alone."

Faith without love is like a locomotive without steam; or like a motor without electricity; expensive arrangements of no value. "God is love"; he and his Son are one; we are to become like Christ. There must be a wonderful assimilation of the Christ character before we love our neighbors as ourselves. All selfishness must be worked out of us; so that we will want others to possess as much of earthly treasures as ourselves.

The old gospel train (the church) stands on the track. The bishop with sturdy hand is faithfully pulling at the throttle. It is long passed the time that she should have moved out with increased speed; passengers are getting restless and ask, "What in the world is holding her?" "Who is to be blamed for this tedious delay?" etc., etc. Listen. When the tokens of our love press as vigorously into the coffers of the church as steam does into the cylinders of the locomotive, there will be something doing. Then will our faith become an executive force. The manifestations of the Spirit will be multiplied; the gospel train will speed away; Zion will be redeemed; Christ will come; wickedness will disappear; the righteous dead be resurrected.

Oh, Lord, help us apply the dynamic power of love to our faith.

CHRIST AND ECONOMICS.

Synopsis of a sermon by Elder T. W. Williams, as reported in the Webb City Register (Missouri), May 3, 1911.

I have no desire to discuss politics to-night. Men should not bring politics into religion. They should not leave their religion behind when they enter politics. If a man's politics are so corrupt that he can not take his religion with him, it is time that he corrected his politics. Jesus was an infidel to the old order. He was the prophet of the new age. The conservators of the old regime killed him.

As with the individual, the period of incubation and birth is followed by virile growth and expansion; an era of stability and permanency, followed by the senile deterioration of age, so it is with nations as well as world-wide movements. The Mosaic institution had flourished for hundreds of years. It was dying. Its friends were impervious—blind as to its decrepitude. Jesus, the inspirational prophet of the New Evangel, bluntly told them Mosaism was dying. They would not believe him. He persisted. They killed him. This has been the fate of the advance guards of every onward step since man began. Every new order, every new evangel, has been sanctified by the blood of the martyrs. We are not out of the fog even yet.

Jesus had no reverence for tradition. He arraigned their customs and habits. He spoke flippantly of their cherished heirlooms. If they were right he ought to die. There was no affinity between Jesus and their conception of Judaism. Jesus had a mission. He desired to establish a new order. Hitherto God was a tribal divinity. Under Jesus he was the Father of the race. The objective with Jesus was a universal kingdom in which all men would be brothers. His slogan was "Fatherhood of God, brotherhood of man." He sought to abolish war; industrial, racial, national wars. The conservation of human life was the all absorbing passion of his life.

The life of a babe; the reclamation of a fallen woman, was of more concern to him than the preservation of a dynasty. He placed man above everything. He did not come to eliminate the instinct of self but to blend the individual manifestation into the larger consciousness. Selfishness is simply mis-directed energy; the perversion of an innate divine function. It is stated that "self-preservation is the first law of nature." That is false. Even the lioness will sacrifice her life for her young. Our mothers go down to death that the race might be. What man would hesitate to enter a burning building to save a helpless child? No, brother, no. Race preservation is the divine law of life. All nature teems with verification.

The religion of Jesus was twofold: individual regeneration and social reconstruction. The Christian church for ages has confined its energy to bring about the former, and with scarce an exception has neglected the latter. Jesus said: "As ye would that men should do to you do ye even so to them." It is the only safe schedule of morals. Throughout the commercial realm men find this law at variance with commercial ascendancy. We need social reconstruction. It is impossible for men in all walks of commercial life to observe the golden rule and succeed. Some believe the rule to be made of rubber and proceed to stretch it to cover defects. Moral departures will be the rule so long as men's interests clash. Christ sought to bring about an identity of interests. In the world to-day, human life is a cheap commodity. Profits take precedence over human life. Ruthlessly, brutally, we are sacrificing the life of men, women and children to the mogul of greed. In the South they feed babies, children of tender years, into the factory maw and produce therewith the cotton fabric of the world, dyed with the blood of infancy.

The sacrifice of the babes of Judea by Herod becomes insignificant compared with the wanton, ruthless sacrifice of children in mill and factory all over the world to-day, in order that capital may increase its profits. A civilization which allows girlhood, innocent, helpless girlhood, the alternative of starvation or crime is not worth the name. It is not a question whether it is your child or my child. All children look alike to the man of God. Every girl is the special ward of a civilized man. The crying need of this age is social reconstruction. Man demands it; the gospel prescribes it. Any organization, society, or movement, which leaves either God or man out of the equation must miserably fail. The church has forgotten that man had a body and has crucified it on a cross of unmitigating horrors in the elusive struggle to save his soul hereafter. How stupid. The only way to save the soul is to conserve its present abode. We must make the material interests consonant to the spiritual. The world does not need charity, mawkish charity. They demand justice. They crave love. Any act, though it bring seeming good to a few yet harms a living soul, is immoral. That act which brings good to all and injury to none, alone is right. If, in my business transactions, I receive aught from any and render not a full and complete equivalent of value, then am I dishonest. It matters not what business interests demand, nor what the laws of men indicate, this is the great law of universal comity.

Of General Interest

A LABOR SENSATION.

The country is promised a repetition of the Haywood trial and Orchard confession in the situation which has arisen by the arrest of three labor men charged with being the authors of the dynamite explosion that last fall destroyed the building of the Los Angeles Times, and of other explosions in various parts of the country which have wrecked property and destroyed many lives. One of the men arrested is secretary-treasurer of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers. He is charged with being the brains of a conspiracy of murder and destruction, and the other two men, one of them his own brother, are alleged to have been the executors of his plans. Two other men are implicated in the charges but have eluded arrest. The arrests were made by the famous detective, W. H. Burns, who has been working on the case under the stimulus of large rewards, offered by the city of Los Angeles and by the National Erectors' Association. The evidence against the men appears to be circumstantial, and includes the finding of stores of dynamite at various places. There have been various reports and denials of a long confession by one of the men. The detectives assert they have evidence enough to convict the men, while labor leaders declare that the high official involved is incapable of any such conspiracy and assert that the evidence, including the planting of dynamite, has been concocted under the spur of the offered rewards. They attack bitterly the method by which the men were arrested. Two of them were taken in Detroit, induced by false charges to waive requisition, brought to Chicago and kept in secret for a week in a private house, and are even said to have been heavily chained. The other man was taken from Indiana by requisition papers, without opportunity to consult counsel, and was taken before a justice of the peace, whereas it is contended that the Indiana law requires in such a case that a man be taken before a circuit judge and that it be established that he was in the State issuing the requisition at the time the alleged crime occurred. The question of the guilt or the innocence of these men must await the determination of a fair trial, which can not probably be had in Los Angeles owing to the extreme prejudice against organized labor which has been created in that community by the Times. The attempts on either side to try the case in advance in the newspapers will be strongly deprecated by all fair-minded men. If the facts concerning the arrest of these men and the secret captivity of two of them are as reported, they call for action by the proper authorities. Such methods belong to the Dark Ages or to Russia. The extra-legal activities and methods of the police and of private detective agencies constitute a menace to law and order.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.

"SHORTEN THE TEN COMMANDMENTS," URGES DOCTOR DOUGLAS.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—Considerable sensation was created here to-day among the clergy and delegates attending the Twenty-ninth Congress of the Protestant Episcopal Church by the advocacy by the Rev. George B. Williams Douglas, canon of the Cathedral of Saint John the Divine, New York; of the revision of the prayer book, and particularly of the ten commandments.

"Let us have the courage," urged Canon Douglas, "to restore to our prayer book that form of the ten commandments which scholars are pretty well agreed was their original form. Let us follow the example of the Roman and the Lutheran churches and drop the inflated clauses."

The form of the ten commandments which Canon Douglas advocated is as follows:

1. God spake these words and said: "I am the Lord thy God; thou shalt have none other gods but me.
2. "Thou shalt not make to thyself any graven image to worship it and serve it.
3. "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain.
4. "Remember that thou keep holy the Sabbath day. Six days shalt thou labor.
5. "Honor thy father and thy mother.
6. "Thou shalt do no murder.
7. "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor.
8. "Thou shalt not commit adultery.
9. "Thou shalt not steal.
10. "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's goods."

The principal alterations were in the Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth and Tenth. The revision would bring them down to the brief terse style of the Sixth, Seventh, Eighth and Ninth, as those Commandments have always stood.

Canon Douglas referred to the great social movement going on in America as elsewhere in the Christian world, and cited Father Dolling in England, the Rev. Percy S. Grant, of the Church of the Ascension on Fifth avenue at Tenth street, New York; the Rev. Mr. Stelzle of the Presbyterian Church near Second avenue and Fourteenth street, New York, and others in other denominations, who had shown that the working classes could still be got into the churches.—New York World.

IT SEEMS TO BE RATHER A DARING UNDERTAKING—ESPECIALLY FOR CLERGYMEN.

Some Protestant gentlemen tell us that they propose to change and improve the ten commandments. Certain things are to be left out, other things are to be smoothed down. The reverend gentlemen who propose to bring the commandments up-to-date feel that human beings have improved, and that the commandments can be considerably improved also.

The would-be improvers of the ten commandments are Protestant clergymen. Cardinal Gibbons, who stands at the head of the Catholic Church in America, says that the idea is "horrible." If it is not horrible, it is at least surprising.

The Bible states quite plainly that the ten commandments are given to us in the words of God himself.

The Bible does not say that Moses, like other old statesmen, tried to give divine authority to his personal orders in order to get a respectful hearing for them.

The reverend Protestant clergymen either do or do not believe that the ten commandments and other parts of the Bible are the exact words of God.

If these commandments are not God's words, anybody has a right to change them, and the proper thing would seem to be to bring the matter up to Congress.

If the clergymen who want to re-write the commandments do not believe that God spoke these commandments to Moses, then, of course, they do not believe that any other part of the Bible represents divine commands, and, therefore, they speak with no authority at all, except that of their own changing views and greater or less personal virtue.

A sarcastic gentleman once suggested that the commandments be revised by striking out the word "not." He went a great deal too far, but not so very much farther than the gentlemen who want to re-write the commandments.

The Bible is a most beautiful and impressive book, satisfying to millions of human beings, for many different reasons. Our advice to the reverend fixers would be to let the Bible stand as it is without patching it up—at least for a while.—The New York Evening Journal.

The Jewish Chronicle gives particulars of yet another attempt to establish a colony of Jews near the Holy Land. In 1903 the late Doctor Herzl, after having failed to obtain any satisfactory concession from the Sultan of Turkey in respect to Zionist effort in Palestine, approached the Egyptian Government with the object of securing a grant of land for Jewish settlement in El Arisch district, between Egypt and the Holy Land. The territory between these two points includes the Pelusium plain, which at one time was extremely fertile and probably the original habitant of the Hittites.

A tentative offer was made by the Egyptian Government of a tract of land situated within an isosceles triangle, one side extending from the east of the Suez Canal to Akabah, the other going from west of Gaza to Akabah, the coast forming the base. A commission visited the district and its report was to the effect that the territory was unsuitable for purposes of colonization except in small parts, so the scheme was abandoned.

Now once again Jewish eyes have been turned to this district. The plan offered by the General Jewish Colonizing Organization is far less ambitious than that which animated the Zionist leader. Instead of attempting to colonize the large territory which Herzl had in view, attention has been concentrated upon Rapha, which is situated near to Gaza, and is said to possess an excellent harbor of the sea front.

Under the auspices of the organization an examination of Rapha has taken place in the last eighteen months, and according to the report the district is "especially fitted for the production of almonds, apricots, figs, olives, mulberry trees, eucalyptus, castor and cactus of the very best quality, and it is believed that the vine grape could also be planted with great success."

The organization has secured rights of land at Rapha to the extent of some 50,000 dunums (about 10,000 acres), and has the option of a further 50,000 dunums. There is therefore sufficient land for the forming of a colony larger in extent than any of the Jewish colonies at present established in the near East.—New York Sun.

Dr. Jacob Faitlovitch Returns from Abyssinia.

What are believed to be lineal descendants of the Jews that were driven from Jerusalem two thousand five hundred years ago have been discovered in Abyssinia by Dr. Jacob Faitlovitch. The doctor arrived in America last week for the purpose of raising a fund whereby these Falashas (as they are called) can be educated and brought into modern ways of living.

Six hundred years before Christ, when the first temple in Jerusalem was destroyed and there was an exodus of Jews, one part went to Babylon and the other crossed over into Etriopia. The latter, the descendants of whom Doctor Faitlovitch believes he has found, were lost track of as the ages passed and were believed to have all died out.

In 1904 and 1905 the doctor, exploring in Abyssinia, came across these people. His investigations led him to believe he had found what he was looking for. In 1908 and 1909 he returned again, and this time was convinced he had found the remnants of the ancient tribe which crossed into Ethiopia (Abyssinia.)

The facial characteristics he found to be strongly Hebraic, and the customs unmistakable. Orthodox Jewish rites were strictly adhered to. There was no cooking on the Sabbath, no work, and no lighting of fires of any kind. In the crude temples (sometimes only thatched tents) were erected altars of the orthodox sort. Some fifty of these places of worship, a few of stone or baked clay, were found intact.

Doctor Faitlovitch learned that under the reign of Em-perors Theodore and Johannes the Falashas were badly treated, and sometimes persecuted, because of their religious beliefs. The present Emperor, Menelik, is liberal, but to offset future rulers who may be unfriendly, the doctor is now aiming.

Baron Edward Rothschild was interested in this work of restoring the race in Abyssinia, and financed Doctor Faitlovitch's first trip, according to the doctor. Other English and Italian Jews have taken interest of late, and the doctor hopes to raise at least a million-dollar fund to begin his work with.—New York American.

Mediaeval New York.

New York, more than any other city, is all things to all men. It is the most civilized, the most barbarous; the most up-to-date, most antiquated; the most liberal, most narrow; the most scientific, most superstitious city in the world. You can take part in a universal peace banquet or participate in a Wild West gun-play; take a flight in an aeroplane or ride in a horse car; live up to Mayor Gaynor's doctrine of personal liberty or become a member of innumerable societies for the regulation of the minds, morals and manners of your fellow-men. Finally, you can watch a leg taken from one dog grafted and growing on another at the Rockefeller Institute, or you can get your enemy killed by the long-distance administration of the "dead-thought."

Only a day or two ago the post-office authorities raided a large concern which was a making a comfortable fortune by selling magic love philters to a part of our community which is still living in the days of the Borgias or of the califfs of Bagdad. Never did New York appear more strikingly as the city of wonderful contrasts.—New York World.

Presbyterian Confession of Faith on Social Problems.

Increasing interest on the part of the church in the moral problems raised by our modern industrial system and social conditions is in evidence everywhere. Recently in Toronto, for example, there was prepared by the Social and Moral Reform Board of the Presbyterian Church in Canada a statement which has been called the Presbyterian Confession of Faith on Social Problems. In brief, it declares that wealth should be administered as a trust from God for the good of humanity; that Christian principles should be applied to the organization of both capital and labor; that the products of industry should be distributed in an equitable fashion that can be approved by the Christian conscience; that society is responsible for the existence of poverty that is created by preventable disease, uncompensated accidents, and other incidents to our modern social system; that women should be safeguarded in industrial occupations; that working people should be protected from dangerous machinery and objectionable conditions; that the burden of industrial accidents should not be allowed to rest upon injured persons and their families; that every worker should be released from work one day in seven; that in labor disputes methods of conciliation and arbitration should be employed; that housing conditions should be such as to provide a proper physical basis for Christian family life; that dependent and defective persons should be cared for by Christian methods; that offenders against the law should be dealt with in the Christian spirit of reformation and correction; that the causes of vice should be discovered and removed; that food and drugs should be guaranteed free from adulteration, poisons, and infection; and that recreation, both of children and adults, should be brought under social control so that it may minister to the physical and moral well-being of the people. It is interesting to note that the minister of the First Presbyterian Church of London, Ontario, the Rev. J. Gibson Inkster, used this statement in urging upon workmen the necessity of keeping in touch with the church, on the ground that the church is now fighting to make conditions of labor better and the distribution of wealth fairer. It is to be hoped that when this Confession of Faith is presented to the General Assembly in the Canadian Presbyterian Church next July, it will be accepted in substance, if not adopted in entirety. There is no duty before the church more plain than that of understanding to what degree the great industrial and social problems of to-day are moral problems.—The Outlook, May 6, 1911, pp. 8, 9.

Miracles? Why Not?

A reader of the Globe, in an anonymous letter, takes exception to the fact that in these articles I have sometimes taken advantage of an opportunity to say a word in defense of certain doctrines, or beliefs, that are not commonly supported by science. The existence of God, his beneficence, the value of prayer, and similar subjects, seem to appeal to my over-cautious correspondent as matters that intelligent men no longer care to consider, and he suggests that I might as well go the limit and defend the possibility of miracles.

Is it possible that the writer means simply that there are to-day no intelligent persons who believe that the things popularly termed miracles ever occurred! If this is the fact, he has much to learn, for he is sorely mistaken. Even the fact that a few so-called "radical" preachers in some Protestant denominations have expressed the opinion that belief in such miraculous events is unnecessary does not prove that Christianity is abandoning the ground it has so long held upon this subject. Indeed, so far from giving up their belief in miracles, there are many intelligent men who are finding, in the latest researches of science, new reasons to uphold their faith in them.

The greatest objection to miracles has been due to the fact that man has believed that, to produce such an effect, it would be necessary to destroy an existing force or abrogate one of the natural laws. If they were true, such objections, of course, might lead many to doubt the possibility of such occurrences; but, as a matter of fact, they are not reasonable objections, no such violations of natural law having to take place.

The explanation of the miracle is by no means as difficult as many seem to believe, and the mistake that scientists have made, as Doctor Kinsley suggests, is in losing sight—"of that most interesting and most important of all facts, that everywhere ample provision has been made for the efficient interference of direct will power."

There is scarcely a waking moment in the day in which we do not directly overcome some of the natural laws. We do not destroy the force, or violate the law—we simply get the better of it. To violate a law of nature spells disaster; to introduce another and stronger force merely produces a different effect.

We do not lift an arm—or can not—without first overcoming the law of gravity, and in countless other acts of volition the introduction of the human will enables us to set at naught many other forces that are commonly regarded as inviolable. Our success in transforming the crude building materials into great skyscrapers shows the wonderful power that the thought of man exerts over nature, while such experiments as those made by Luther Burbank demonstrate even more clearly how cunningly the human brain is gaining a mastery over nature's vital forces. The things that we are doing with electricity in this day would have seemed the greatest of miracles to our ancestors of a century ago, yet in attaining these results we have not violated a single law or thrown any of the forces of nature into confusion. We have simply studied the laws that operated in such cases, and, through this knowledge, have directed the forces to our own ends or have introduced other and more powerful forces to put a check upon their power. In a word, as Kinsley has said, "Our volitions are simply supernatural, not contranatural."

To show how the interposition of stronger forces might be used in the performance of miracles, we may refer to the Bible narrative which has been so strenuously assailed—more violently, perhaps, than any other—the story of the sun being stayed, at the command of Joshua. Again and again it has been stated that such an occurrence was scientifically impossible, yet the late Professor Mitchell did not hesitate to assert that, "if He had chosen, God could have lengthened the day by simply condensing the atmosphere and thus changing its power of refraction."

It is, of course, impossible to say that this was what was done, but it suggests a means by which the result might have been attained without in any way disturbing one of the vital laws upon which the scientist, in denying the possibility of such a miracle, lays so much stress. Moreover, it indicates the absurdity of our position when we—though woefully ignorant of the possibilities of existing laws—deny the Creator of them the capacity to operate them to His own ends.—Graham Hood, in The Globe, New York.

Prehistoric Relics Found.

Three pieces of wood that seem to have been left many feet under ground by some glacial movement, have been unearthed at the country home of Myron L. Learned, about a mile north of Florence. Mr. Learned had a one hundred and thirty-five foot well on his place and it went dry. He found it impossible to bore it deeper and set men to work digging. At the depth of a little more than two hundred feet, which was reached last week, the diggers brought up the three pieces of wood excellently preserved. The depth makes it certain that they must have been brought there years ago. They were just about at the level of the river and near by was found some petrified wood, which had evidently been under great pressure.

The wood was spread apart between the rings of growth, indicating that it had been swollen in water and the rings were thicker than they are in ordinary Nebraska trees. Mr. Learned was unable to determine what species the trees belong to and sent the pieces by Robert F. Gilder to Professor Bessey of the state university, who will try to identify them with some period of time, modern or ancient.

Mr. Learned's country home is an exceptionally fine field for souvenir mining. He found one of the most beautiful agate spear heads within a yard of his house, that has ever been uncovered in the State. There are Indian mounds there and small narrow heads of all shapes and kinds are numerous. Bits of pottery and other things indicating the old time residence of the mound builders have been uncovered. The pieces of wood, however, were buried too deep to be relics of any habitations and were probably from prehistoric times.—Omaha Bee.

This truth comes to us more and more the longer we live, that on what field or in what uniform or with what aims we do our duty, matters very little, or even what our duty is, great or small, splendid or obscure. Only to find our duty certain, and somewhere, somehow, to do it faithfully makes us good, strong, happy, and useful men, and tunes our lives into some feeble echo of the life of God.—Phillips Brooks.

[By kindly permission of Sister Stebbins we are permitted to use the following letter. In regard to the Sunday school work it may suggest to other small schools the great advantage to be derived from special training for the very little ones, such as the writer refers to.

But, dear mothers, we wish to call your special attention to what Sister Smith says in regard to helping the children form the habit of working for the church. If we only realized the importance of this, realized that when the child is so trained that he loves and takes a pride in working for the advancement of the cause of truth and righteousness, in nine cases out of ten, a lifelong faithful worker has been secured, would we not, as mothers, be more diligent in so training our children? Oh, that the time might soon come when the homes of our people would become one vast training school for this purpose. Then indeed would Zion arise and shine, for then the converts brought in by our faithful missionaries abroad could not compare, either in numbers or in equipment for work, with those of the home band, the children born into the kingdom.—EDITOR.]

OELWEIN, IOWA, May, 8, 1911.

Dear Sister Stebbins: I would like to know in regard to the songs and prayers for use for your little folks. There are seven little tots in our Sunday school about four or five years old. They get nothing by being in a class of older ones, and they keep the others from getting the good they could. We feel that we ought to do something for them. Have you a book with the songs in? If so, let me know where we can get it, please.

We had one meeting of our Sunshine Band and we have these little folks there too. We have them using scissors, paste, etc. The older boys last meeting learned to sew on buttons, and then they wanted to help the girls hem dish towels. At our first meeting we received about seventy cents for Christmas Offering, and some donations for the society to use in buying material. One of the members spoke and wanted to know the size of the beds for the Children's Home, as she thought we could make some sheets and pillow cases later on. So if you know the size let me know. We are planning to make different articles and have a sale some time during the summer. We want to get the children into the habit of working for the church, and train them to be earnest workers in the cause we love so well. We feel our need of God's Spirit to help, for there is much to do, and we feel that without the help of the greatest of Teachers our work will be in vain. I do not think that I have ever felt the importance of the work as much as I have of late, and can see opportunities on every hand; but the greatest of all, to my mind, at present, is that of teaching the younger ones so that they will be workers, for we know that in Zion there can be no idlers. We talk repentance, baptism, etc., to the world, and tell them they can not enter the kingdom of heaven without obedience to these. It seems to me it is just as binding upon us to teach those who are already of the fold many things, which if they do not obey and observe, will bar them from being of Zion or the pure in heart. Oh, for the power to reach the children and those who are younger in the work, those who are weak, and help them to walk in the right path. My prayer is that I may be able to help others so that they will see the need of taking up the work and moving on to greater fields of usefulness than we now are able to attain to.

May God bless you, dear sister, in your labor of love for the children, and in your home life. I am glad that I had the privilege of meeting you in both of these places of service and gaining inspiration for my work in the same spheres. If I can, from the sorrows and trials of life, come, as you have been enabled to do, cheerful and lending the inspiration you do to others, I shall be satisfied and will be able to thank God for the paths in which I have been led.

With kind regards to both you and Brother Stebbins, I am,
Yours in gospel bonds,
NETTIE I. HEAVENER-SMITH.

Give and Take.

"Greater love hath no man than this—that a man give his life for a friend."

In our younger days we associate this "greater love" with death. Life to us then is the supreme gift, the one thing lovely and desirable.

But slowly and surely the years travel past and change us. Our early ideas are disturbed and become detached from the principles we thought so deeprooted. And after a while they readjust themselves, and we find ourselves looking upon life and its standards from an entirely opposite point of view.

They who have laid their lives upon the sacrificial altar of death must have their meed of praise—their souls were great souls when the time called for great deeds.

But the souls who have laid their lives upon the altar of service are those who are tried by fire. Death is kindly—his eyes are those of a friend. His touch is a benison, and his arms are sanctuary, and his kiss is peace. Our dead smile—a smile of wonderful sweetness. Not they, but we who are left, are alien, groping through the mysteries between two eternities.

And so it is not death, but life that is the taskmaster. And it is not alone the man who gives his body to death, but the man who gives heart and soul in service for others, "unhoned and unsung," through the long years of life, that is showing "greater love!"

The world is full of heroes who so give their lives day after day.

That which tries men's souls is the lifting of each day as a burden upon shoulders bowed and weary—the facing of tasks that are irksome, of responsibilities that are a dead weight, of duties that are colorless and thankless, of service that is unvalued and unrewarded. Heroes are these—men of gray lives, treading upon the treadmill of gray days, plodding to the soul's dead march of machine rule and routine, in the salt sweat of labor.

And these are the men that are all around you—the one in the shabby coat at the next desk, or the "plodder" over there in the corner, or the stooped subordinate to whom you have just given some curt orders.

You do not know them and they do not interest you—they are only part of the machine. But it is because life has not touched you with its Ithuriel spear—the agony point that brings blood and makes the heart human. This you need to clear your vision and humble your arrogance. This you need to lower the judgment that you think superior but that is only ignorant. This you need to make you see that it is not Pilate on his throne that looms great in history because of Pilate, but that a thronged pigmy became colossal in the mightiest tragedy because of a carpenter's son, barefoot and dusty and poor upon whom he passed judgment.

We need the Ithuriel spear, for the world's standards are a sham and its judgments a parody. We need the agony and rack, because without them we were hard and cold and without pity and understanding. We need the discipline of life against which we battle—the discipline that takes us by the throat and slowly brings us to our knees.

For there, and there only, are we humble enough to look truth in the eyes and to see that the souls of the shabby are often the souls of giants—that the man we ignore and despise is perhaps the man who has "given his life for a friend"—who is giving service before which we would quail—who fasts while we feast with the mighty, but to whose life the angels themselves pay reverence.—Ethel Huston, in Des Moines Evening News.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK, May 10, 1911.

Dear Herald: On last Sunday afternoon, Mrs. Toribia Alcola, the Mexican Indian woman, came over by invitation to attend the social sacrament service, and while there she arose and bore her testimony in her way, with much interest to all present. Tears of joy streamed down her face, and while listening to the testimonies of the Saints, she wept with much gladness. After the service the sisters gathered around her and heard, in her simple way, how the Lord had so wonderfully blessed her and of the strange experience she had with an angel's visit. She made a good impression upon the minds of the Saints, and with a glad some good-bye said she had a desire to return Sunday to meet with the Saints. She claimed that the Lord directed me to bear my testimony to her.

I find by close observation of her strange story, about the angel who came in beautiful white garments with a most beautiful face that in the dark afterwards, an evil spirit came and misconstrued the many things that she had seen, to make her believe that the Roman Catholic Church was the only church, and mixing in many false statements. She went to the service of the Catholic Church and approached the priest, who wore scarlet robes, but he seized her by the arm and put her out of the church during his preaching. She had explained to him before of the angel's visit, but he abused her shamefully. She has her eyes now open to the wickedness of that institution, with what I could explain to her and of the only chance she had. She came last Sunday to tell her story without ridicule, and I looked upon her in the midst of loving hearts and a reception that was worthy of Saints, where she found sympathy that had not been accorded her before. With a beaming face, and filled with gladness, she went away. If she comes as she wants to, I believe she will obey the Gospel. May she be so directed by the Lord. She believes the Book of Mormon is a record of her forefathers.

Editors Herald: As I read your papers, it makes me rejoice to read the grand testimonies of the brothers and sisters to this latter day work and the good sermons. I do not see how a Saint can get along without the church papers—they contain so many good things. It does not seem to me like Saints are interested as they ought to be if they fail to read them, if it is in their power to get them. By reading them we learn many things we should know and would not learn otherwise.

I love this great latter day work. It will have been sixteen years the 11th of October since I was baptized by Elder E. A. Erwin, but up to that time I had never heard a sermon preached by a Latter Day Saint, and I knew very little about the Bible. I met with a Saint, a stranger to me, and rode about four or five miles with him about a month and a half before I was baptized. He explained the doctrine of the Saints, but up until then I did not know the laying on of hands was taught in the New Testament, and I asked him where I could find it. He said as he could not read he could not tell me the chapter and verse, but to read and I would find it; and, if I desired to find the truth, to ask of God and not leave it to man. He seemed to be so earnest about it I could not help but believe there was something in what he said; so I began to read the Bible to see if I could find where it taught the laying on of hands, and I found it just as he said.

I prayed for light, and after becoming satisfied over the matter, I went at once some eight or ten miles into a strange community and was baptized. I did not know until I arrived there whether there was an elder near about or not, but felt assured, as I had no doubt but what I would find one. I went to where the brother lived whom I rode with in the wagon, as mentioned before, and told him that I had come to be baptized. He took me over to Elder E. A. Erwin, who lived about a mile distant, and who baptized me the next day about two o'clock, it being Sunday. As soon as I was confirmed, I started back to the place where I was staying, but soon after I left Brother Erwin, the Spirit began to rest on me, and it rested on me in such power that I am satisfied I was made to taste of the power of the good world to come. I have ever since been true to my testimony and by the help of God, I expect to, so long as I live. Since then I have had to pass through some hard trials, but I have tried to get the gospel before my neighbors.

I have been living at this place six or seven years. We have had some good preaching here by E. A. Erwin, P. B. Bussell, J. W. Jackson, W. M. Aylor, and V. L. Lum. The first preaching done here was by Bro. P. B. Bussell and Bro. E. A. Erwin, four years ago last March. They preached about a week, and the people turned out very well and gave good attention. The last night of the meeting, Brother Erwin had been sick all day and did not feel like going out that night to where they were holding the meeting, as he had eaten but very little that day; but as it was his night to preach, said he would go. When the people gathered in, I felt like they were going to be disappointed. Knowing Brother Erwin's condition, I did not think he would be able to stand up an hour, let alone preach. We had but two or three lamps, and it seemed as though they gave no light, but after the service began, Brother Erwin got up and told the people he had been sick that day and did not feel like talking and probably would not hold them over thirty minutes. As he picked up his Bible and opened it to read his text, it seemed to me like the room was as bright as day. I looked around to see if they had lighted some more lamps, but only saw the same ones as at first. Brother Erwin spoke with such liberty for about an hour and a half, that one could have heard a pin drop on the floor.

There are some fine people here, and some I believe will obey the gospel some day, but Satan has been doing all he can to tear down the work of late. A friend told me yesterday we could have a place on his land to build a church; so if any of the elders who are sent to this part of Texas read this, I wish they would write me at once and we will try to arrange for a meeting some time in the near future. It is badly needed here, for some of the Saints who have just come into the church are worked up over a book that has been brought here by a Baptist preacher, and they need light on some things.

I ask the prayers of all the Saints.

CONIFER, COLORADO, May 4, 1911.

Editor Herald: I am making my farewell visit to the Saints of this State before taking up my duties in the Independence Stake. I left my work in an unfinished condition, as I expected to return here for another year. It is the unexpected that happens in this life, and specially in this work.

This is a beautiful spot of God's creation, way up in the mountains, and about eight thousand feet above sea level—rather too near heaven for me to enjoy living. I am afraid I need a new head before I can leave for any length of time the plains of terra firma. To those who can subsist upon this mountain air and three or four meals per day, it is a delightful place for a change, but rather lonesome for a permanent home, as I view it. This has been the home of Bro. James Kemp and family for thirty-three years the coming July. Brother and Sister Kemp are now soon to leave, as they have sold their farm, and have their faces turned Zionward, and expect to make their home in Independence in a few months. They are two faithful Latter Day Saints, who have made many sacrifices for the work they love. For more than sixty years they have been identified with the great latter day movement; loyal hearts and true have they, and now well advanced in years and weary in body, but young in spirit, they seek their well earned rest in Zion. May they find as royal welcome there as they have extended to the children of God in their hospitable home in the Colorado mountains, as well as elsewhere in former years.

I have just made out their inventory, and they have squared up their account with the Lord and his church, in tithes and consecration. With the little left, they wish to purchase a small home and spend the remaining years of their faithful lives among the people they love. May the Son of peace and light ever rest upon them while permitted to remain.

I feel somewhat sad at parting with the many friends made during my two years' labor among the Saints of this State, for I have found some true friends who have cheerfully ministered to my needs while laboring among them. I extend to all my heartfelt gratitude for their saintly kindness, and pray the kind Father to bless all with the measure of his Holy Spirit necessary to meet the demands of life.

I feel sad that the ministerial force is cut down this year, when there is so great a demand for faithful men, and so many places to occupy where much good can be done.

May the needs of the hour impress every Saint in this State with the importance and need of placing in the hands of the Bishop and his agent, what is due their Master in tithes and offerings for the spreading of his work, and the ingathering of precious souls who are waiting for the message of life.

There are many who are not loyal to their King, but are withholding their support for the extension of God's kingdom among men. If you would have the blessings promised the faithful in basket, in store, in health of body, and illumination of mind and spirit, be faithful to Him who is waiting to bless his children with the abundance of his Spirit, as well as in their temporal and physical needs. The Lord's hand is not shortened that it can not save or help his people, and it grieves him to keep the great storehouse of his spiritual and temporal riches closed against his children, because of their unfaithfulness.

Arouse, arouse then; and arise, ye slothful ones, and come to the help of the Lord, and let it no longer be said of you, Ye have robbed God.

We have the Children's Home near its completion, to receive the little ones who need the church's care and loving hands to care for and minister to them. Remember the building of this splendid institution means the beginning of our responsibility towards them. They have to be clothed and fed; they therefore become our charge and our care as part of the body of Christ. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, ye have done it unto me."

We have four homes for the aged poor; two at Lamoni, one at Independence, and one at Kirtland, as well as our Sanitarium. All these need our support; let us ease the burdens of our presiding Bishop by freely contributing to these God ordained institutions. "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord." The Lord always pays his debts.

Send all your tithes and offerings to Bro. C. E. Everett, 129 South Logan street, Denver, Colorado, and he will send receipt for same.

There are many in this State who are faithful in their obligations to God, and who have always responded to the needs of the work. To these we extend our sincere thanks, and may the Master bless them abundantly, to whose care we commend them.

Let this year be a banner year for Colorado, and thus taste and see how gracious the Lord is. Blessed is the man that trusteth in him.

RICHARD BULLARD.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 5, 1911.

Being a member of the United Order of Enoch and also interested in the welfare of those who are not members of this organization, I write a few lines regarding it. There may be some, however, that would say: Brother, if you are a member of this organization, just keep quiet about it, and say nothing about it to us, and all will be well, only you do your part. But I ask, would that be letting my light shine, or would it not be putting it under a bushel? When we united with this church, had we not told others of the glad news and invited them to Christ, we would not have amounted to much as Latter Day Saints. So as members of this recently organized and long looked for order, let us say to those who are not members, Come, my brethren and sisters, let us walk in the light step by step as the Lord shows us.

The revelation which caused this order to be established agreeably to the "laws of the land" was given in answer to prayer, and when given, the Prophet of the Lord said, "Whether that which has come to me will bring relief to the situation, I know not." (Italics mine.) "Relief to the situation"—note these words. The Saints being in a dilemma sought the Lord for help, and he, ever being good and kind to his children, responded to the call and gave the revelation April 18, 1909. It was examined by the quorums, "struck no snag," so to speak, but became a law to the church, and that by common consent of the whole body. Shall we comply with it, or shall we say we made a mistake in asking, or the Lord made a mistake in giving? We do not expect it to relieve the situation if we do not comply with the law. True, a few have complied with it, but "There is a work for you to do, no other one can do for you." Will you do it? If not, why not? One may say, I have not the money. The law does not say that you must have so much money to be a member of the order. The sick may say (if we have any in the church), I am not quite ready yet, the law is all right, but I am not quite ready. My brother, when will you be ready? Christ will be here soon. Shall we be ready? Another may say, It is not essential to my salvation, therefore I shall not comply. How do you know it is not? True, many of our brethren and sisters have died and gone home to glory who were not members of this organization, but they did not have this privilege; but what of those who have the law given and will not keep it? Oh, my brethren and sisters, let us willingly comply with the whole law and not wait until it is too late.

Respectfully,

CHARLES SPURLOCK.

WEATHERBY, MISSOURI, May 6, 1911.

Editors Herald: After our grand General Conference, I stopped at Andover, with the good Saints and preached two sermons with good liberty, and, if I am not mistaken, the attentive listeners were edified. They insisted on me staying longer; but I could not do so, on account of having other appointments ahead. I should have been pleased to do so, for we had a large, attentive congregation there. And the good Saints, and outsiders as well, make one feel at home.

From there I came to Saint Joseph Second Branch and began meetings at once, where I preached forty-five sermons in all, with splendid liberty, by the aid of the Holy Spirit.

The noble Saints did all in their power to make the meetings a success. And it would be hard to find a more generous and free-hearted people than those at that place. Not only did the Saints use me royally, but the outsiders invited me to come and stop with them also, and I assure you I enjoyed their hospitality. It is conceded that our meetings were the best attended by the outsiders of any ever held in the new church. God certainly blessed the effort of his humble servant. The result was that I had the pleasure of baptizing eight noble people into God's kingdom, and there are about six or eight more who are ready, and some of them I think will soon obey.

All baptized were married people except two or three. May God help them to prove faithful to the ends of their lives. I must rest a few days, then go to Mapleton, Kansas, in answer to an urgent call to come to preach for them. After I get through there I will go to Winfield, and other points in Iowa for the summer, as I have some urgent calls from my old stamping ground in old Iowa. And I am anxious to see the dear Saints of thirty years acquaintance again.

In bonds,

DELOIT, IOWA, May 10, 1911.

Editors Herald: It is the desire of the missionaries in Gallands Grove District to hold a series of meetings in Fort Dodge, Iowa, this summer. It is a growing little city of about fifteen thousand people. We ask the readers of the HERALD who have relatives or friends living there who might become interested in the angel's message to send their names and street numbers, or names and occupations, to John Jordison, R. F. D. 5, Fort Dodge, or to the undersigned at Deloit, Iowa. If you know of Saints living there, please favor us with their names also.

There is a branch of the church at Coalville, six miles south of Fort Dodge, where church, Sunday school, and Religio services are held. Richard Jordison, Samuel Dixon, and William C. Jordison are in charge in the order named.

DALBY SPRINGS, TEXAS, May 6, 1911.

Dear Herald: As I am alone this beautiful Saturday eve, I write to tell you I am still in the faith and doing my best to live a true Christian life. My heart is often made to ache, but the blessed Savior has promised to be our shield and protector if we will live according to his commands.

I have been a Latter Day Saint but seventeen months yesterday. I belonged to the Methodist church for thirty years and still love the Methodist people, but love still more to testify now than I ever did, for I am sure this gospel is true. If we live it, the prize is ours. Let us live every day and hour that our associates will not call us hypocrites or Mormons.

There are only a few Saints in this community, and we are trying to raise enough money to build a church house, so we can have some preaching. My husband is a Saint and I am praying that my five children may see the light as I have seen it.

As this is my first attempt to write to the HERALD, I will close, asking the prayers of the Saints that I may be healed of dropsy of the heart, and that I may so live that I may prove beneficial to the cause.

Your sister in bonds,

FANNIE DALBY COX.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 8, 1911.

Editors Herald: At the earnest request of Bro. V. S. McKinzie, of New Philadelphia, Ohio, I write to ask the Saints to remember him in their prayers. He is sorely afflicted with cancer on the lip, and unless God comes to his help, must suffer much. He has been good to all the elders, has honored the temporal law, and is entitled to the benefit of the promises. Let us all hold him up before the throne of God. If any of the Saints have anything encouraging for him, let them not withhold it.

Brother McKenzie must also be humble, prayerful, and faithful to all duties, rest entirely upon the Lord, and leave off any and all things displeasing to the Spirit of God. Heed the advice of those whom God has placed in the church for that purpose. If this is done, God will surely send the blessing.

RUSHOLME, MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, April 23, 1911.

Dear Brethren: I have this day forwarded to you sheets from the Manchester papers for the past week, which will keep you posted with the news of the campaign against "Mormonism."

Bro. W. R. Armstrong, the mission secretary, and myself are doing what we can to defend the church against the misrepresentations that are made in mixing us up with "Utah Mormonism." We have interviewed Dean Weldon and several editors of local newspapers.

A big meeting is to be held in the city on the 4th prox. to protest against the "Mormons." I received an invitation from the dean for our Brother Armstrong to represent the Reorganized Church at the meeting.

JOHN DEWSNUP, Bishop's Agent.

News from Mexico.

Brother Pender's health is much better. The greatest hindrance is that his hearing is not good yet. His face is much more clear and full than when you saw him one year ago at conference.

They have been expecting the revolutionists here, lately, so that the soldiers and a few cannon are on the mountains at the western border of town watching out. Some fencing is done in the streets to guard jail and other public buildings, allowing barely enough room for the street cars to pass. We only have about one half train service.

Our Mexican neighbors tell us that the greater part of the town people here favor the revolutionists, notwithstanding, the officers and soldiers to the contrary.

Some Mexicans appear glad over the prospects of the United States interfering. Neither Brother Pender's nor ourselves have had any uneasiness over the situation, although many American families have left for the States. I think their departure is mostly due to depression in business.

Many newspaper reports in the United States have exaggerated the facts relative to the progress of the war down here. We think that whether the town goes for federals or revolutionists it will not alter our mission work. Of course we don't know, but the prejudice is not strong against the Americans. Many respect us well. Yet, some pride in being independent of Americans in their religion.

The good man whom we baptized with his wife last Sunday, was the local preacher in the absence of the new comer, who turned us out of the hall. Very much your brother,

W. MANNERING.

Sunday, April 7, preceding Sunday school little Arthur Sherman and Harold Pement were baptized by Arthur F. Sherman, father of the former. We trust this ordinance, with the blessing that will follow in the confirmation, will be an anchor to these buds of promise in the storms of life in future years.

Sacrament service in charge of Elder Pement and Brother Cochran. Not a large attendance, but a good spirit. Bro. Harry Passman, from the West Side, occupied in the evening, commenting on seeking the good things of life, and not money or treasures of the world, as so many are using their talents in that direction, and not thinking of the future life.

Wednesday evening prayer meeting in charge of Bro. Arthur F. Sherman. Few present, but all were blessed. Some of the thoughts expressed were, how happy our lives would be if we could live at all times in harmony with the Master's will; that each evening as we kneel to thank our Father for protection and blessings during the day, that we could feel that we have exerted our utmost efforts in every way to be obedient, no unkind words have passed our lips, all good deeds have been performed, and we have not been careless or indifferent in any way. Yet, we might feel satisfied with ourselves, and not make much progress. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall."

Last Friday evening, instead of our Religio program we indulged in an old-fashioned spelling match, which appeared to be enjoyed so much that a majority of the members voted to have the same exercise next Friday evening. It is surprising many times how many there are that have never come across our pathway, or rather how few we are able to spell on short notice. May we all endeavor, day by day, to "study to show ourselves approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the words of truth."

It is character that counts in nations as in individuals. Only in loyalty to the old can we serve the new; only in understanding of the past can we interpret and use the present; for history is not made, but unfolded, and the old world entire is ever present in the new.—Benjamin Ide Wheeler.

The Bishopric.

NOTICE OF APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT IN AND FOR THE DISTRICT OF SOUTH DAKOTA.

To the Saints and Friends of South Dakota: Please take notice that upon change of the appointment of missionary labor of Bro. Edward Rannie, former bishop's agent in and for South Dakota, appointment has been made of Bro. E. E. Willard, of Huron, South Dakota, as agent in and for said territory, in behalf of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

The Bishopric extend special thanks to Brother Rannie for his earnest and efficient work as bishop's agent in and for South Dakota for the past few years, and bespeak for him the consideration and help of the Saints and friends in his new field of labor. We also commend Bro. E. E. Willard, of Huron, who is an earnest worker and helper in the cause, in South Dakota.

Trust that the Saints and friends may write to Brother Willard and help him along in the financial work, and that the Lord may bless each helper in his cause, that the gospel may be carried to those who do not have it, and the poor properly cared for.

In behalf of the Bishopric,
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 10, 1911.

Pastoral.

To the Ministers and Members of the Southeastern Illinois and Saint Louis Districts; Greeting: Having been appointed as assistant minister in charge of these districts, I thus address you. I wish to say to the ministers that a great responsibility has been placed on us as the ministers of Jesus Christ, and we are sent out to represent him and not ourselves. I feel that each one senses this fact and will do so.

We ask the cooperation of all the local ministry and members that we may do all that is possible for us to do this year to make the year a success in building up the kingdom of God, and thus be instruments in his hand of helping to save the souls of men. We have been admonished of the Lord, "He that is warned, let him warn his neighbor."

To those that are living away from the branches, that can get a place for an elder to preach, write, and as soon as we can, will respond to the call, and have some one come and do the preaching. We can all do something if we will just think so and go to work. Count the number of missionaries that are sent out this year, and begin now to send in your tithes and offerings to the Bishop and his agents, and see if we can't get enough of means into his hands that at the next General Conference the Twelve can appoint many times more ministers than was appointed this year; this can be done if we will now begin. We want to say still further, Don't forget when the missionary is with you he needs clothing, and money, as they now ride like other men; they go for full value, no longer go at a discount, but pay full fare to have their avoirdupois transported from one place to another. We do not offer this as complaint, for we are not acquainted with your past record in this line, as the field is new to us; our aim is that we will not fall behind any, but keep up with our part of the work. I wish to say to the ministers, When you have a good opening do not leave it until you are satisfied you have done all the good you can for the present.

We will get over the field as soon as possible and look after the needs. For the present the missionaries move as you think best.

My address will be Independence, Missouri, 1129 South Noland street.

Your coworker in the Master's vineyard,
GEORGE JENKINS.

To the Ministry and Saints of the Great Lakes Mission, Known as Number 11; Greeting: Once more we enter upon the duties of another conference year, with its new experiences, anxieties and cares, its joys and sorrows, looking forward through the dim light of the Star of Hope to a successful year filled with evidences of faithful and diligent service to the cause of Christ.

A change of boundaries of the missions has made part of the field new to the minister in charge this year, and I will have to acquaint myself with it as rapidly as I can. I will do the best I can to serve the interests of the work in the meantime.

We desire the cooperation of the local ministry and the Saints in getting the gospel before the people, but this must be done in a legitimate way; cooperation don't mean "independent missions," nor does it mean, "if I can work where I choose and just as I please," regardless of law, or the results that may affect other parts of the work disastrously, but operating jointly for the success of the one cause in which we are mutually interested, or should be.

Jealousy should be banished from our midst, and I hope this year may be clean and free from anything of that kind in this mission. It breeds contention and strife and destroys instead of building the church of God, and more, it ruins the usefulness of any man who will harbor it in his heart. I plead with you brethren, avoid it as you would a rattlesnake. Don't be over sensitive, but consider the feelings of your brother as you would like to have him consider yours.

The missionaries and the local ministers should work together assisting each other in every way that they can, respecting each other in their several callings.

Local ministers doing missionary work should do so in harmony with the officers of the district and branch when within the confines of district or branch, with the consent and advice of the minister in charge, and all such labor should be reported to the minister in charge at the regular time of reporting, the same as the missionaries under General Conference appointment.

All reports should be made promptly, July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1. The last one for the whole year. Some of the ministry have been very careless in the past about getting their reports in on time; I hope that this year we will have no cause to complain about this. They should all be in my hands by the 10th of the months stated above. I desire that the district presidents make report to me on the same dates as the missionaries. In the past these brethren have been very slow about reporting—I hope that they will do better the coming year; I desire to keep in touch with the development of the church in all its parts in the mission, hence the request for the reports. Get them in promptly, brethren.

I desire to hear from each missionary at least once every two weeks, if it is only a post-card, stating what they are doing and where they are, and where I can find them in case an emergency should arise that some one is needed at once.

I advise all the missionaries to avoid interference with branches, unless their appointment makes that part of their work, or by special direction of the minister in charge. Avoid mixing in any of the troubles that may arise as far as you possibly can, that you may be free to push your labors as missionaries without prejudice.

I have decided not to appoint any assistants in charge for the present. If on better acquaintance with the field I find it necessary, due notice will be given through the church papers.

The following division of fields will obtain unless otherwise directed by the minister in charge:

Bishop R. C. Evans has been appointed to Ontario and Quebec, and will have charge of the finances in that field. I bespeak for him your hearty support in his office.

Arthur Leverton will labor in London and Toronto districts as evangelical minister.

David D. Smith will labor on the North Shore, Manitoulin Island, the Sault Ste. Marie and vicinity, Bro. A. R. Ellis assisting him at the Soo's and vicinity.

Brn. John Shields until October conference, James Pycock, J. T. Thompson, S. G. St. John, J. A. Grant, after October 1, Toronto District; James Pycock and J. T. Thompson, the eastern part and Quebec. S. G. St. John, New Liskeard and vicinity; John Shields will look after his work as district president, doing such missionary work as he can; R. C. Longhurst and G. M. Shippy will labor in the London District; Fred Gregory, James Davis, and John Shields after October conference, will labor in the Chatham District; Bro. J. J. Cornish will labor in the Central and Western Michigan districts, until otherwise directed; Bro. R. Etzenhouser will labor in the Eastern and Southern Michigan districts, until otherwise directed; Bro. J. J. Bailey will labor in Michigan and Northern Indiana as evangelical minister; S. W. L. Scott, Clyde Ellis, J. W. McKnight will labor in Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District; A. E. Burr, G. W. Burt, and William Dowker, Central Michigan District; Arthur Allen, O. J. Hawm, D. E. Dowker, Eastern Michigan District; Bro. William Davis will labor in Eastern Michigan, and Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana districts; W. D. Ellis, J. H. Hansen, Fred Brackenbury, Western Michigan District; J. C. Goodman, J. H. Blackmore, J. A. Carpenter, and A. R. Ellis, Northern Michigan District; Jasper O. Dutton, B. C. Flint, and August Gratz, Southern Wisconsin District; R. D. Davis, A. L. Whiteaker, and W. A. McDowell, Northern Wisconsin District; Joseph Arber, E. J. Goodenough, and O. E. Sade, Kewancee District; Charles E. Burr, L. O. Wildermuth, and Joseph A. Tanner, Northeastern Illinois District; Brn. H. E. C. Muir and B. St. John were referred to the minister in charge, and will be arranged for later.

In the case of debates arising, where it is possible consult the minister in charge; if it is an emergency, meet it like men, in the spirit of humility and prayerfulness.

I will establish a field address as soon as I can make proper arrangements for one, and publish it in the church papers.

Push out into new fields as much as you can, make that your special effort during the summer and fall months especially. Stay in the field; don't idle your time away where there is no interest, and stay with an interest until you have raised up a branch or demonstrated that nothing more can be done at the time. As far as practical, work two and two when out in new places, agreeing among yourselves as to which two shall go together, taking into consideration all the conditions.

Now, brethren, let us be men of honor and integrity, wise and discreet, being careful to avoid the appearance of evil so far as it is possible, that no reproach may be brought against us and the work we represent. Put selfish ambition far from you; in fact selfishness of every kind. Try to emulate the Master we serve in your lives. Study the conditions where you labor, the people and their customs, and how to reach them, that your work may be effectual in turning them from their errors. Don't be too harsh, or over radical in your criticisms, lest you drive them from you. Seek to lead, not drive.

Mail addressed to me at Lamoni, Iowa, will always reach me so you can find me at any time through that address.

May the Lord bless and strengthen you all for the work that lies before us, his Spirit guide you into all truth.

Your brother and coworker for Christ,
FREDERICK A. SMITH,
Minister in charge of the Great Lakes Mission.

To the Saints of the Eastern Mission; Greeting: Having been appointed as minister in general charge of this field for the conference year, I submit the following for your consideration and instruction:

The late conference was one of the most peaceful and harmonious in the history of the church, all were strengthened and cheered by the Holy Spirit, and with increased confidence in the final triumph of the work we enter upon the labors of the conference year.

The missionaries appointed are requested to extend their labors into the new fields opening before them on every hand. This will be pleasing to the Lord.

REPORTING.

Reports are required promptly, July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1; blanks for reporting can be obtained at the Herald Office. Obtain your supply at once.

FIELDS OF LABOR.

The following assignments to the various districts have been made:

Maritime Provinces: Daniel Macgregor, in charge; John F. Sheehy.

Maine: Washington and Aroostook counties, H. A. Koehler, J. A. Koehler; Lincoln, Knox, and Hancock counties, J. C. Farnfield; those counties west of the Kennebec River, S. O. Foss.

Massachusetts District: A. B. Phillips and H. O. Smith, Cape Cod, Dennisport, objective point, S. F. Cushman; Boston and vicinity, R. W. Farrell.

Philadelphia District: William Anderson and E. B. Hull, New York City, objective point, W. E. LaRue; Philadelphia objective point, W. W. Smith.

New York District: A. E. Stone, Alma Booker, and H. J. Davison.

A WORD TO THE LOCAL MINISTRY.

Magnify your calling, seek to extend the work by opening new places adjacent to your branches. In former years much good was accomplished in this way, and you should assist the missionaries by securing openings and inviting them to preach.

SAINTS OF GOD.

The work lying before us is of such increased magnitude and importance that all should strive to do their part. If you can not preach the gospel, you can pay your tithes and offerings into the treasury of the Lord, that there may be funds in the Bishop's hands to properly care for the missionaries' families; to relieve the poor and distressed and carry forward the many undertakings made necessary if Zion is redeemed.

See that the missionaries are properly provided with means to prosecute their work. This is an important duty incumbent upon the members of the church of Christ.

Praying God may bless and prosper his people, I remain, your collaborator in the Lord, ULYSSES W. GREENE.
STONINGTON, MAINE, May 9, 1911.

Notice of Appointment.

To Whom it May Concern; Greeting: Elder M. H. Siegfried having been referred to the minister in charge of Iowa and the Bishop, and the brother not being able to take the field for at least six months, and the further fact that the Board of Publication has passed upon him for editor of the Ensign, and now through the president of the board requests us to accede to such appointment, we deem it proper so to do.

Very truly,
J. W. WIGHT, Minister in General Charge,
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

She is survived by her aged mother, two brothers, one sister, a loving

DES MOINES, IOWA, May 10, 1911.

(From Our Special Correspondent.)

Some startling figures are given out by the Secretary of State in regard to the alarming growth of the divorce evil in Iowa. Advance pages of the table of statistics on the divorce subject for the year 1910 have been given out, which show:

That one out of every seven couples that are married take their matrimonial troubles to the divorce court.

That one out of every ten couples married are divorced.

That 80 per cent of the divorce actions instituted in court are not contested by the defendant spouse.

That less than 5 per cent of the divorce actions started end with the court denying the divorce decree.

That three times as many wives bring divorce actions as do husbands.

That 9½ per cent of all divorcees are given permission to remarry within one year, the Iowa law forbidding marriage within that length of time without special permission of the judge granting the decree.

That Polk County's ratio of divorces to marriages, in relation to the population, is greater than any other county.

That Grundy and Butler counties had the smallest number of divorcees—two each.

The conclusions reached as to marriage and divorce in this State are based on the assumption that the year 1910 was an average year. No other tables are in existence, so that a comparison is impossible. The general belief is that the divorce evil is constantly on the increase.

While the general state average is one divorce for every ten couples married, Polk County has one divorce for every five couples married. A summary of the report is as follows:

Population of Iowa	2,224,771
Number of marriage licenses issued	21,538
Number of divorce petitions filed	3,228
Total number divorces granted	2,274
Divorces granted to wives	1,716
Divorces granted to husbands	558
Divorces granted by default	1,824
Divorce petitions denied	116
Number of divorcees given permission to marry within a year	213

While it is shown that a large number of divorcees are the result of drunkenness, it is also recognized that marital troubles, in many cases, are the cause of drunkenness. The truth is that the terrible increase in the number of divorcees is the result of hasty and ill-advised marriages. Young girls scarcely out of their teens are allowed to marry worthless and shiftless young men who have no training or occupation to fit them for the duties and responsibilities of married life, and the wives rush to the divorce court as soon as they discover they have made a mistake and are compelled to go out in the world and earn their own living. They do not wish to be hampered with a husband, who can watch their actions, and no sooner are they divorced than they rush again into matrimony, only to again meet with disappointment and regret, after which they again seek freedom.

The divorce evil will never be checked until laws regulating marriages are enacted and enforced. The Catholic Church has settled the divorce question. There can be no hasty marriages in that church, and as there can be no marriages of divorcees, those belonging to that church are naturally cautious about contracting marriage. Again, the bans of the contracting parties must be published at different times in the church, and the young men who seek to marry Catholic women must show to the satisfaction of the clergy that they are in earnest, and have the ability to support wives. A Catholic who basely deserts his wife is advertised in every diocese and has small chance of finding a second victim. The Protestant church has much to learn from the Catholic body as far as divorcees are concerned.—The Optimist, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Mexico's Rurales.

The writer's introductory statement, "Set a thief to catch a thief" is supposed to be the principle underlying the creation of the rural police of Mexico, will rouse immediate interest in Edwin Emerson's picturesque account of "The Rurales of Mexico" in the June Century.

"In other words," he says, "it is understood that many of the men now enrolled among the rurales, were they not employed and kept under pay as policemen, would take to the first road. Many of the best shots and hardest riders among the rurales at the present time are reputed to have been notorious bandits."

"The Soul of The Indian."

REVEALED BY A CULTIVATED SIOUX WHOSE WIFE IS A NEW ENGLAND POET.

It is seldom that a book can be characterized as disappointing because of its very excellence. This seems to be true of Dr. Charles Alexander Eastman's book, The Soul of the Indian. The work is altogether too limited in scope. It is so well written and indicates such a thorough understanding of the subject, that its brevity will probably impress the serious reader as evidence of a duty neglected. But perhaps the author has merely taken into account the quick-lunch appetite of the average book-devourer, offering a biscuit when he could well have given a banquet. Still, one should not be ungrateful for good writing; and, indeed, quality is much.

Doctor Eastman's father was a full-blooded Sioux, and his mother a half-blood; he therefore writes with authority and, what is more, with love. His little book is an attempt to present Indian character in a true light, and the result is a bit of genuine literature.

The first requisite to an understanding of a race is an inquiry into the racial attitude toward the Unknown. Doctor Eastman, accordingly, begins his study with a chapter on "The Great Mystery"; and a more truly eloquent and exquisitely simple sermon it would be hard to find, because it treats of that childlike awe which has been the vital principle in all religious aspirations since the first man felt the yearning for a god. Strip any religion of its bewildering excrescences, and you have substantially the Indian's faith as here presented. There is no hair-splitting; it can scarcely be called theology. It is simply the natural man's wonder-worship of That which is, in some mysterious way, the upward thrust of the prairie grass in April, the impetus of the flying cloud, the power of the storm wind, the urge of rivers seaward.

"There were no temples or shrines among us," says the author, "save those of nature. Being a natural man, the Indian was intensely poetical. He would deem it sacrilege to build a house for Him who may be met face to face in the mysterious, shadowy forest aisles or on the sunlit bosom of virgin prairies; upon dizzy spires and pinnacles of naked rock; and yonder in the jeweled vault of the night sky."

One wonders while reading of the Indian's conception of worship, as compared with the average white man's, whether or not the charge of barbarism has been rightly placed!

In the second chapter—"The Family Altar"—he discusses the ethics of the primitive Indian home, the status of woman in the tribe and the meaning and rites of marriage. The woman seems to have been content with motherhood as her portion. As always, she was the family pillar of moral strength. Through her the inherited conscience of the tribe was bequeathed to the child. She was, after all, very much like the old-fashioned, efficient mother, who never read a psychological treatise on child-culture, such as frequently in these days emanates from the Bostonian state of mind. Says the author:

It has been said that the position of woman is the test of civilization, and that of our women was secure. In them was vested our standard of morals and the purity of our blood. The wife did not take the name of the husband, nor enter his clan; and the children belonged to the clan of the mother. All of the family property was held by her, descent was traced in the maternal line, and the honor of the house was in her hands. Modesty was her chief adornment.

In other words, let us say, by way of anticipating the punster, she never longed for a peach-basket hat or a hobble skirt!

In discussing religious ceremonies, Doctor Eastman states that the origin of the greater part of these was in that period when the influence of the white man's religion (and his whisky) first began to be manifested among the tribes. Out of this era grew "an admixture of Christian and pagan superstitions," we are told. The old folk-love tales began to absorb something of biblical story, and even the ancient Indian songs began to show the influence of the Catholic chants intoned by the Black Robes. "The song of Greeks" gave way to "the wail of Galileans."

A chapter is given to the moral code of the primitive American. With our present-day cynicism in regard to the inflexibility of moral codes in general, the reader is apt to suspect that there is here a slight tendency toward idealization. If not, it would seem that a moral retrogression might be generally beneficial.

It is in the chapter on "The Unwritten Scriptures" of the Sioux tribe that one feels keenest disappointment. Though the Sioux story of Creation is charmingly told, together with the Indian's version of the Flood, a vast fund of latent knowledge in this direction is indicated, and one feels that these "Scriptures" should not have remained "unwritten." Perhaps Doctor Eastman will yet make his little book the basis of a more exhaustive work. Surely no one could undertake the task with a better prospect of success.

The concluding chapter has a distinctly modern flavor. It treats of the Indian's belief regarding spiritual manifestations, and reads somewhat like an excerpt from the journals of the S. P. R.

The Soul of the Indian, though disappointing in its brevity, is instructive, refreshing and quite worth while.

The Treatment of Dumb Animals in the Orient.

Traveling through the Oriental lands one is reminded frequently of the immortal line:

"It is not all of life to live, or all of death to die."

Thousands of animals die a hundred deaths daily in Japan, China, India and Ceylon through the unwillingness of Brahmims, Buddhists and Mohammedans to take life.

In Rangoon I saw about the famous old Golden Pagoda a dozen dogs in advanced stages of mange—one-half paralyzed and others blind. And yet these fanatical people will throw them food and permit them to die by inches and deceive themselves with the idea that this is kindness.

A traveler told of seeing an aged elephant at or near Madras lying on the ground, unable to stand or walk, hopelessly ill and suffering, yet kept alive by the natives. And this is called "kindness to animals."

A merciful veterinary surgeon sent through the East with crates of chloroform and authority to dispose of all the useless sick animals would be a blessing to men and beasts.

In Bombay there is the most perfectly equipped hospital for animals, however, to be found anywhere in the world, I believe.

This hospital was founded by a benevolent and wealthy Parsee gentleman, named Petit, more than twenty-five years ago. The Parsees are notable for their charities.

It is maintained by gifts and by small fees paid by those who have their horses, dogs and bullocks treated by the skilled specialists who are in attendance. It occupies many acres, and is one of the cleanest and most attractive hospitals imaginable.

While the men of the Orient are not viciously cruel to animals, they seem to have no mercy upon them when it comes to loading bullock carts or forcing horses to continual speed.

The Oriental man has little sympathy with the hardships endured by creatures lesser than himself. Animals and coolies are expected to work; it is their karma; and the coolie (so it is stated by those who live in the East) regard any sympathy shown them as evidences of weakness. They do not want to be pitied.

But in the Bombay Hospital for Animals sympathy assumed a practical form, and the overloaded bullocks and overdriven horses and sick dogs were enjoying every benefit and care which skill could give. . . .

All my life I have heard the Oriental lands lauded for kindness to animals and for protection of all life. Yet, after having seen these lands and carefully studied the matter under discussion, I am convinced that to England and America must the whole world look for sane, practical, humane and wholesome methods of educating people in ideas of proper care of animals.

Our benevolent millionaires ought to appreciate this fact and endow our humane educational organizations with a large fund.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox in New York American.

PREACH THE WORD.

The Apostle Paul is credited with the following: "For I am determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified."—1 Corinthians 2: 2.

It should not be necessary for an injunction to come from us respecting the necessity of the elders, both at home and in the field, in the carrying on of the gospel work intrusted to them, to avoid preaching upon wide issues very remotely connected with our work, or presenting personal and private opinions as the doctrine, theory, or sentiment of the church as a body. We are called to present the word, the imperishable word of God. We are not called to preach the theories of men only.

The individual elder is entitled to his personal and private views upon mooted and controverted topics and the present fellowships of their own body or of the outside world, but no one of them is authorized by the church to single out from these theories and legendary teaching that which pleases him, and teach it as the recognized consensus of opinion of the entire body of the eldership, constituting the church. Neither is he authorized to select from the things of which he takes notice among the fellowships, theories, and teaching against which he makes objections or is prejudiced, and thus singling them out denounce them as being contrary to the teaching and holding of the church. Those things are practically hobbies or speculations.

There are many theories in the world, and the eldership, gathered as they are from every class of men, are widely diversified in their several opinions; and if one man is allowed the liberty to compromise the church in any given direction as being for or against any of these varying theories in the world, the same opportunity and privilege must necessarily belong to every other member of the eldership, and as a result we could not be said to be teaching the same thing.

The Book of Mormon gives us to understand that there are churches of men, but that the church of Jesus Christ only is pleasing to the Master, and further changes or shows that there is to be a church of the Devil, and the revelation of God charges us to contend against no church except the church of the Devil. The church has not by any official action identified any organization existent among men as the church of the Devil, that we have any knowledge or record of. Possibly there are items of identification given in the Scriptures here and there, but others have to be supplied by the imagination of whoever attempts to make the identification complete. The organizations that we are acquainted with existing among men at the present time almost as a whole would come under the general appellation of the churches of men.

It follows that the church has not authorized any man to point out any body of men holding organization in society, and by specification attempt to show that it is the church of the Devil, and thus attempt to bind all his coworkers to combine against that particular body of men.

There is also in the Book of Mormon a class of men named as flourishing in the history at some period of time which may have its counterpart in the last days, known as Gadianton robbers. We know of no one who has authority to point out any classified organized body of men and state the specifications of identification, and compromise the church as having announced that particular body as the class of men referred to in that quotation. The church membership is yet too few and the theory too new, as presented in the restoration, for the church to take ground of that kind, as we understand the commandment to preach the gospel. We are definitely and distinctly opposed to the church being compromised by what we believe to be unwise attacks made upon specified bodies of men, in attempting to identify them as filling certain passages of scripture, which would make them objectionable as being of the church of the Devil.

Paul stated that he contended not against principalities and powers, but against wickedness in high places. It is our duty to preach the ways of life and the duties of life by which men may live in the gospel of hope and the final establishment of peace; but it is not our business, especially not those carrying the certificates of appointment authorizing them to represent the church, to assume the role of the novelist hero, Sancho Panza, and to create imaginary sentiments of evil against certain bodies, and level their spears of argumentative denunciation against them, as though authorized to do so by the voice of the church. It is said in the Scriptures that "every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God," and it must be granted that any man or any body of men, no matter to what specific denomination they may belong, who are arraigned under the acknowledged idea that Jesus Christ was the Savior, must be granted credit for confessing that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. It is unwise, as I see it, to go behind the profession of association and hold that because they do not agree with our understanding of the association in church relationship that they are anti-Christ. Other organizations not assembled under the appellation of churches, are societies among men, having origin among men only, and as such should be recognized and not be named churches for the purpose of attempting to overcome them by contention against them. The history of the Reorganization has demonstrated that where efforts have been made to idealize some of these obnoxious organizations, contention has arisen and grave crises have been avoided only by the strong conviction and the efforts of a majority of the eldership.

We recognize also neither of the means of identification found in the third and fourth verses of the second chapter of 2 Thessalonians: "Let no man deceive you by any means; for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God." Efforts in the past to locate this man of sin, both in the church and outside, have met with significant failure. Different individuals have been named, but time and events have disproved the correctness of the application of the title, as it could not be shown that the individuals ever sat in the temple of God and presented themselves to be "above all that is called God." It is our belief that this qualification must be sufficiently clear before it should be used as against any body of men.

It is enough for us to present the gospel of life, the gospel of salvation, and not to go outside of our known and recognized duty, so as to compromise the church as a body and make it answerable for the peculiar notions of individuals who may or may not be of erratic minds, or who may not see clearly the wide field of observation that lies before the church as a whole. The church can not be made responsible for the theory and doctrine of any one man, Christ alone being the lawgiver, the one whose right it is to state that which is the will of himself and the Father.

We hope that these suggestions will give no offense to any, but that all, especially the eldership, will take notice and give the matter earnest and prayerful consideration. If individuals conclude themselves to be called to any specific role of reformer of things which are to them apparently crooked in the world, they ought to be consistent enough when they take their role upon themselves to exonerate the church as a whole and their fellowmen especially from being compromised in their specific views.

ANTI-MORMON CRUSADE IN ENGLAND.

An energetic and persistent crusade against "Mormonism" has been carried on in England with increasing strenuousness for some months past. It is charged that Mormon missionaries induce many British maidens to accept their doctrines, emigrate to Utah, and enter into polygamous marriages. The object of the crusade is to devise methods to exclude these missionaries from the British Isles. Prominent in the agitation is Hans P. Frees, of Utah Mormon parentage, who obtained some notoriety in America two years ago on the Chautauqua platform in lectures on Mormonism.

With this crusade we have no concern, more than others who concede the right of British citizens to safeguard the morals of their nation, unless we become confused in the public mind with the Utah Mormons and are made to suffer thereby, as past experience causes us to fear may be the case. On the other hand, if the present agitation leads to a thorough investigation in Parliament or before the Home Secretary, we can but believe that the differences will be brought out so clearly that we shall gain much thereby.

The crusade is aimed primarily at the Utah Mormon Church; but as a rule the assumption is that the evils inherent in that organization date back to the days of Joseph Smith the Martyr, and that the entire system termed "Mormonism" is and always was constitutionally corrupt. That in itself creates a prejudice against all believers in the Book of Mormon and the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith, even including those who stand for the purest morals and are as radical as any bishop of the Established Church in England in opposition to polygamy.

As a rule the distinction between the Reorganized Church and the Utah Church has been indifferently made in the public prints, and in some instances both have been classed together and the plea has been made that both be excluded.

A great mass meeting was held in Holborn Hall, London, April 28, at which Bishop Weldon, Dean of Manchester, presided. The Daily Express, (London,) April 29, thus reported his opening address:

Bishop Weldon, the chairman, who was loudly cheered, read a number of letters, already published in the Express, from eminent men, which, he said, were only samples of many which had been received. These included the message from the bishop of London, in which he said: "I am heart and soul in sympathy with the object of your meeting, and I wish it every success."

"This meeting," said the chairman, "is held to make as formal and public a protest as possible against the Mormon propaganda in this country." (A voice: "They should be expelled.") "It may be well to remind you that, according to official statistics, there are at the present time eighty-two Mormon churches in England and over 8,000 members; there are over 300 Mormon missionaries going up and down the land.

"They paid visits to 63,000 homes during the last year, and they claim that 963 converts were made in the year. Of these converts more than 500 emigrated to Utah.

"What is it, then, that the Mormons teach and preach? That is the essential point. There is, I think, no question that ever since the time of Brigham Young it is polygamy which has given character to Mormonism. There is no other feature of Mormonism which would interest public notice for half an hour. Mormonism is contemptible where it is not immoral.

"Utah became a State of the United States in 1896. But, if anyone wants to know on first-hand authority what has been the relation of Mormonism to polygamy not only before, but after the incorporation of Utah in the United States, I recommend him to read a speech by Mr. Julius C. Burrows on the claim of a Mormon to take his seat as Senator representing Utah. That speech will bring out three facts:

"First: That polygamy has been a Mormon doctrine ever since, if not before, that professed revelation of Brigham Young in August, 1852.

"Second: That although the Mormons ostensibly abandoned polygamy when Utah became a State they have never abandoned polygamy as a doctrine. There is every reason to believe that they have not abandoned it as a practice.

"Third: That whether openly or secretly, the practice of polygamy remains in Utah to the present day.

"In the speech of Mr. Burrows, there is the examination of Joseph F. Smith, the present head of Mormonism in Utah, on his own plural marriages since polygamy was renounced by President Woodruff on behalf of the Mormon community.

"This man Joseph Smith admits that since 1890 he has lived in polygamy; he has in living in polygamy obeyed the law of his church and not the laws of his country, and he expresses himself as proud of the children who have been borne to him by a plurality of wives not only before, but after the public renunciation of polygamy.

"If polygamy went on before President Woodruff's Manifesto, if it is part of Mormonism on the doctrinal side, if it has been practiced by the elders of Mormonism since it was publicly repudiated, then I say that the girls who are tempted to leave the great cities in the north of England or elsewhere—and not only unmarried girls, but, according to evidence laid before me, young married women—expose themselves to all the misery and all the degradation which attaches to a polygamous society.

"It is high time that public opinion in England should speak out. It is a country of free thought and free speech; it is not, thank God, a country of free love.

"I have asked myself carefully what it is that the State can do, and I venture to suggest that it can do two things, and ought to do them:

"It ought to prevent the Mormons from holding public meetings to preach their doctrines and further their practices. (Applause and voices: "They shall, too.")

"It ought to punish any private attempt to draw away girls and women from the moral conditions of Christian life in England to live under the conditions of polygamy in Utah or elsewhere.

"That is, in my opinion, the work which the State can do. I believe in liberty as much as anybody in this room, but there is a limit to liberty.

"The Mormons have exceeded that liberty, and I hope that the effect of this great meeting will be to awaken the attention of parents of families and of the clergy and ministers of religion and of legislators to the need of guarding the purity of English homes.

At this meeting the following resolutions were adopted:

That the attention of the Home Secretary be called to the extensive proselytizing of the agents of Mormonism in the British Isles, and inasmuch as polygamy is both practiced and taught to-day by leaders of the Mormon Church, this meeting is of opinion that the Government should be asked to take such steps as, on due investigation, may appear to be necessary to safeguard English homes from the inroads of visiting Mormon elders, as has already been done in Germany and South Africa.

That this meeting calls upon all the churches of the United Kingdom to warn the members of their congregations against the perils and dangers of the activities of Mormon missionaries who visit from house to house in towns and country villages, and under the guise of religion, as "Latter Day Saints," seek to make converts of religiously-disposed young women and persuade them to emigrate to Utah, where polygamy is taught and practiced.

Mr. W. T. Stead, the noted British journalist, unexpectedly came to the defense of the Mormon elders in a letter published in the Daily Express, April 28; under the caption "Religious Liberty." He characterized as "sheer, unmitigated rot" the story that thousands of British girls are lured to Utah each year. He also entered a plea for them at the mass meeting in London, but was hooted; and in an editorial, entitled "Doubting William Thomas," the Daily Express pilloried him, closing thus: "Mr. Stead loves to be in a minority of one. One of these days he will start a germ protection society." Mormon elders present at the mass meeting in London attempted to make a defense but were not permitted to speak.

There seems to us to be a danger that the crusade may pass beyond the control of those who were its instigators and terminate in violent and perhaps bloody encounters, due to inflamed public opinion, before a satisfactory legal settlement shall be reached. The attitude of some of the clergy justifies such fear. For instance, Father Bernard Vaughn (Catholic) is reported to have said: "Mormons should be taken by the scruff of the neck, rushed across our island, and dropped into the sea." (See Manchester Evening Chronicle, April 18, 1911.)

As we have already said, if our people succeed in getting the position of the Reorganized Church before the public so that it is clearly understood that they are in no way connected with Utah Mormonism they will have nothing to fear from legal proceedings.

They will still be heirs to the opposition that has always existed toward the restored gospel; but in that regard, as Bro. Rees Jenkins writes, they are "willing to suffer for Jesus' sake, but not for the sake of Brigham Young."

In some places our men have succeeded in getting into the papers. Late in March Bro. Edward Maloney, of Stockport, challenged Rev. J. H. Thorp, B. D., Rural Dean of Stockport, to debate issues raised in an address by Reverend Thorp, on the "Mormon Error," delivered in Saint George's Church. As a result a written discussion has been in progress in the columns of the Advertiser (Stockport); the last number to reach our desk appearing in the issue for May 5, under the title, "Is the Book of Mormon Divine?" So far as we have followed this discussion Brother Maloney explains our position in a very creditable manner, and our people should feel grateful to the editor of the Advertiser for his courtesy in giving so much space for our defense.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Bro. F. G. Pitt writes from Jerusalem, Palestine, May 4, 1911, as follows: "All being well, we leave for Australia May 28. Kindly send HERALD and Autumn Leaves to us at our future address, 195 South Terrace, Fremantle, Australia."

The manager of the Herald Publishing House would like to have every district president or clerk send to him the exact dates and places of holding of reunions. Please attend to this at once, or as early as possible.

The Cradle Roll is now ready to mail. A good deal of pains have been taken to put out something which would be artistic as well as useful. We feel assured in saying the result will be pleasing to all. Price sixty cents.

In our crusade against the teachings of our friends in Utah, we should be careful that we do not use stories against them which have no foundation in fact. Observation convinces us that they, as well as we, suffer at time from such misrepresentation. A case in point is found in an editorial appearing in the Des Moines (Iowa) News, which says: "The Mormons admit it and acknowledge 1,100 plural marriages last year. This is the official confession of Pres. Joseph F. Smith at the Salt Lake conference."

We have reason to believe that the above statement is untrue. It is probably based on a misunderstanding of a statement found in the sermon by Joseph F. Smith, a report of which appears in Lia- hona, the Elders' Journal, May 9, 1911. According to that report this is what Joseph F. Smith really said: "During the last year eleven hundred marriages of our people have been contracted or solemnized in a manner not provided for in the law of the church; I refer to civil marriages."

It will be discovered by this, that his statement was to the effect that among their people there had been during the year 1,100 marriages performed by civil officers, which is not in harmony with his idea of church law. No such confession as is charged appears in his sermon, so far as we are able to discover.

The following is probably a good sample of "stock" information doled out by the editors of query columns in our leading papers:

"THE BOOK OF MORMON."

"S. H. R.—The names of the men after whom you inquire were Oliver Cowdrey, David Wilmer and Martin Harris. These men made a formal affidavit, in which they said: 'We solemnly declare that an angel of God came down from heaven, and he brought and laid before our eyes—that we beheld and saw—the plates and the engravings thereon, from which the "Book of Mormon" is printed.' These 'three witnesses,' however, in the course of time fell out with the founder of Mormonism and declared, with equal solemnity, that this testimony of theirs was altogether false. It is, of course, impossible to say what the belief of the Mormons is regarding the 'Book of Mormon,' but it is safe to infer that many of them, at least, have faith in its authenticity."—New York American.

The following note is from the Nauvoo Rustler, May 16, 1911: "A letter from Mark H. Siegfried, of Independence, Missouri, says: 'Since I left Nauvoo, in fact the very day I arrived here, I learned that the Board of Publication of the church had elected me editor of Zion's Ensign, all unknown to me. However, it is no sad appointment to me, though it may prove to be to some of the readers. That remains to be seen. Can hardly tell yet how I shall like the work.'

"Zion's Ensign is published in the interest of the Latter Day Saint Church. Mr. Siegfried is a fine young man, and a splendid writer, having had considerable experience, and he will make good in his new position. We wish him success."

It is said that India has twenty-seven millions of widows, more than half of which are under ten years of age. Sixty thousand widows commit suicide annually.

Elders' Note-Book

THE HOLY PRIESTHOOD.

AFTER THE ORDER OF THE SON OF GOD.

The priesthood that was conferred on Christ when the Father said, "Thou art a priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec" (Hebrews 5:6), was in ancient times called "the holy priesthood, after the order of the Son of God," (Doctrine and Covenants 104:1), and continued with God's people from the beginning till the days of Moses; and the writer believes this order of the priesthood "continueth in the church of God in all generations, and is without beginning of days or end of years." (Doctrine and Covenants 83:2.) Wherever the gospel ("the power of God unto salvation") is, there this priesthood is. If this latter quotation be true, the church of God has never been on the earth when this priesthood was not in it. If there was any church that God recognized as his between the days of Moses and Christ this priesthood must have been in it.

Objection is urged to this argument on the ground that this same section of the Doctrine and Covenants, verse 4, says, "He took Moses out of their midst and the holy priesthood also; and the lesser priesthood continued." If all the Melchisedec priesthood went with Moses, "the church in the wilderness" must have gone too; but the Book of Mormon claims that God had a church on earth between the time of Moses and the days of Christ.

Moses evidently, like Melchisedec and Christ, retained his priesthood after death. They were to "be priests for ever" after that order. When Moses was taken, his priesthood was taken with him, but that would not take the priesthood from others who held the Melchisedec priesthood.

The lesser priesthood continued in ascendancy, for the law of Moses was administered under it, and the gospel at times evidently was nearly lost sight of; still it was "the power of God unto salvation" to all that were saved during that period. Would anyone say that there were none of the prophets saved? Only Aaron and his sons should keep the "priest's office . . . and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death" (Numbers 18:7). Where there was none of Aaron's seed to officiate at the altar, God could call others, as with the Nephites; but where the seed of Aaron was, there was no need for others to act.

Joshua did not belong to the sons of Aaron nor to the tribe of Levi, but of "the tribe of Ephraim" (Numbers 13:8). He was an officer and received "some of thine (Moses') honor" or authority. That "honor" or authority must have been of the Melchisedec order, and it was imparted to him just before Moses was taken. Surely Moses did not take that with him.

The "seventy men of the elders of Israel, whom thou knowest to be elders of the people, and officers over them" (Numbers 11:16), were not officers of the Levitical order; elders belong to the Melchisedec order, and the elders seem always to have been distinguished from the priests. These seventy elders, with the high priest, evidently constituted the "Sanhedrin, the supreme council of the Jewish nation, consisting of seventy-two members selected from the chief priests, elders and scribes."—W. Greenfield.

They are often spoken of as the "elders of Israel," in the Bible, even down to the days of the apostles. Joshua sat in council with the "elders of Israel." (Joshua 7:6.) Jeremiah wrote to the elders, priests and prophets at Babylon. (Jeremiah 29:1.) Ezra had the "elders, priests and Levites" with him. (Ezra 6:7, 14, 16.) "Their rulers, and elders and scribes, and Annas the high priest," (Acts 4:5, 6), met in council to try Peter and John. This was the "senate of the children of Israel" (Acts 5:21) that met to try the twelve apostles, the Sanhedrin.

Another passage of scripture is used to prove that the Melchisedec priesthood did not continue after Moses, which reads as follows: "If therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood, (for under it the people received the law,) what further need was there that another priest should arise after the order of Melchisedec, and not, be called after the order of Aaron? For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law."—Hebrews 7:11, 12. The law of Moses was administered by the Levitical priesthood, and when we were "delivered from the law" (Romans 7:6), many of the duties under the law ceased, and we came "under the law of Christ" and his priesthood; still the gospel ordinances and blessings were enjoyed while they were under the law: Moses baptized in the wilderness "in the cloud and in the sea; and did all eat the same spiritual meat; and did all drink the same spiritual drink," which was Christ (1 Corinthians 10:2-4). History tells us they continued to practice baptism to some extent, and how did the prophets and others get the Holy Ghost without the laying on of hands? They "spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."—2 Peter 1:21. Joshua was "full of the spirit of wisdom; for Moses had laid his hands upon him."—Deuteronomy 34:9. Surely the others received it in the same way.

The Inspired Translation says that God told Adam, "Ye must be born again, into the kingdom of heaven, of water, and of the Spirit," and so he was baptized "into the water," and afterwards the Father said to him, "Thou art baptized with fire and with the Holy Ghost." (Genesis 6:62, 67, 69.) He was also to teach those things to his children. He also offered sacrifices as they did under the law.

In the Book of Mormon, latest edition, Nephi said that God "commandeth all men that they must repent, and be baptized in his name . . . or they can not be saved in the kingdom of God." (2 Nephi 6:48.) Nephi was under the law of Moses, still he taught that all men must be baptized or perish. The prophets then after Moses must have been baptized or they could not have been saved. Nephi also taught that after baptism, "then shall ye receive the Holy Ghost," (2 Nephi 13:16.) He must surely have had authority to administer the gospel ordinances, or his language would have been out of place.

Jacob, the brother of Nephi, was "called of God," was "ordained after the manner of his holy order." (2 Nephi 5:2.) This holy order of God was the order of Melchisedec, as we have seen. Alma was "the high priest according to the holy order of God," having been consecrated by his father Alma "to be a high priest over the church of God, he having power and authority from God to do these things." (Alma 3:1, 3.) He said, "I am called to speak after this manner, according to the holy order of God, which is in Christ Jesus." (3:73.) It was Christ's order, Helaman, Shiblon, and Corianton, and Ammon, etc. "had been ordained by the holy order of God." (Alma 21:185, 186.)

Alma had "consecrated teachers, and priests, and elders, over the church." (Alma 2:11.) "He ordained priests and elders, by laying on his hands according to the order of God, to preside and watch over the church." (Alma 4:1.) Since they had teachers and priests as well as elders, they must have had both orders of the priesthood.

The office of seer is the highest office given to man. "A seer is a revelator, and a prophet also; and a gift which is greater, can no man have." (Mosiah 5:77.) King Mosiah held this highest of all offices, and translated the twenty-four plates by the use of the "interpreters" or the "two stones" which were fastened into the "two rims of a bow." "And whosoever has these things, is called seer, after the manner of old times." (Mosiah 12:16, 18, 21.) Samuel and others were called seers after the days of Moses. (See 1 Chronicles 26, 28, 29, and 2 Kings 17:13.)

The question has been asked, "Why did Christ command all the Nephites to be rebaptized, if they held the Melchisedec priesthood before he came?" The only answer apparently is, as Christ said to them: "Old things are done away, and all things have become new." (Book of Nephi 5:92.) If they had been baptized by an Aaronic priest their baptism should stand, ordinarily; but they had more authority than any Aaronic priest, so far as we have their duties pointed out. Nephi, who ministered about the same time that Christ ministered at Jerusalem, had as much authority then as he received afterwards, for he "did minister with power and with great authority . . . and in the name of Jesus did he cast out devils and unclean spirits; and even his brother did he raise from the dead."—Nephi 3:58, 60.

A TRYING BUT PROFITABLE EXPERIENCE.

I am impressed that a brief account of the experience of the conference year, (1910-11) will be of interest to the readers of the HERALD. I believe it is wise and profitable to relate our experiences to each other. Often I have been encouraged and strengthened by learning of the goodness of God, in various ways, to his Saints. I believe that some have made serious mistakes by not relating their experiences to others; they having been blessed with some remarkable and valuable manifestations of the love and power of God. Many have gone down to the grave who had marvelous manifestations in life that were only occasionally referred to, and then to but a few. I do not believe in casting pearls before swine; going out on the street corners and boasting of what the Lord has done through me and for mine. There are two extremes.

I was present at a prayer and testimony meeting when we were admonished, as a branch, to make a record of the blessings that were received, so that in the future it would be a source of strength to those who would read and meditate with a prayerful mind. Marvelous are some of the manifestations that were seen, heard, and felt in that branch. Still, they were not known outside of the few that were there; neither was there a record kept; a sad mistake. I am aware that we are not to boast of great faith or mighty works, but to tell of the blessings of God in the spirit they were received, is not boasting.

In Doctrine and Covenants 46:4, 5, speaking of spiritual gifts, we are informed that to some it is given, by the Holy Ghost, to know that Jesus is the Son of God, and that he was crucified for the sins of the world, (wonderful and precious gift.) To others it is given to believe on their words, that they also might have eternal life, if they continue faithful. If the one receiving the knowledge of Christ did not speak of it, how could the other believe?

I was present at the opening session of the conference, April 6, 1910, the fiftieth presiding anniversary of Pres. Joseph Smith, held at Independence, Missouri. Very striking and appropriate were the words spread on the canvas and stretched overhead in the auditorium, "To our beloved President, from 1860 to 1910." Fifty years, half a century, is a long period. During all of these years he had endeared himself to the church by his unselfish life, fatherly care, and wise spiritual counsel. Nothing but a life of righteousness could win and hold the confidence and affection of an intelligent, God-loving people; and as the years come and go, the friendship grows stronger, so that with the spirit and understanding we can all unite and sing, "Blest be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love." When he is gathered home to mingle with the faithful of all ages, the words in Proverbs will truly apply to him, "Give him the fruits of his own hands, and let his works praise him in the gates."

At the last conference, I was ordained a patriarch, (under the hands of Brn. F. A. Smith and Gomer T. Griffiths, of the Twelve,) which was in fulfillment of the following dream, related by Sr. Ellen Morris, at a prayer meeting in Scranton, Pennsylvania, January 8, 1908: "I dreamed that I saw a multitude of people, and a bright star came down from heaven in the presence of all; I inquired what that meant. A voice spoke, that it was a sign of the coming of the Savior. The star had a name, but it has passed from my mind. I then saw a beautiful building, and it was up some distance in the air, clear off the ground, and there were several men in the building, and they were the servants of the Lord, doing business for him. They were giving out bills that were of much value to all who received them. I inquired who the men were, in the building. Some one answered, 'Brother Lewis is in there.' 'Well,' I said, 'If he is in there, he will give me one of those bills.' At that I saw Bro. William Lewis looking out of the window so pleasantly at me, and he said, 'I can not give you the bill, unless the Lord directs me to do so. He knows you, and will do right by you.'

I was very much impressed with the dream, but said nothing as to its meaning, (which was plain to me,) only that ere long they would see it fulfilled. Bro. F. A. Smith had said I would be set apart to that work. I had light on the matter, and concluded that it was best to keep the matter to myself. After my ordination, the same day, some applied for their blessings, but as that line of work was new to me, I suggested that they either see some of the other brethren, or wait until I could see my way clear to officiate. I consulted Bro. J. R. Lambert, who had just been ordained presiding patriarch. He advised that I move slowly and carefully, and he gave other valuable information that I appreciate.

As time moved along, and being approached with questions as to when it would be convenient to give blessings, the responsibility grew stronger, and instead of getting ready to take up that part of the work, I felt my weakness and insignificance more and more. About four months had gone when I received a letter from Bro. J. R. Lambert, asking me to attend the Stewartsville reunion, and asked if I could go to two others, if needed. Well, I said, I must do one of the two things: magnify my calling, or let some one else do it. How I wished that I could be associated with some one who had the will power and faith and experience, or that I could honorably place the responsibility on stronger shoulders. I did not doubt the call, for I had been blessed in other lines; but to move out and say, "I am at the service of the church to officiate in any department of the patriarchal work, even to the conferring of blessings," was truly more than I thought I could do. Then it dawned upon me that inasmuch as the line of work that I had been set apart to do was to bring added strength to those who sought for it, why should I longer delay? "Do your part," was the thought," and leave the result with the Lord." So I notified Brother Lambert that I would be at his service;—quite brave all at once. No one but the Lord knew of the struggle I had to say, "I am ready." It may appear childish to some of the readers, that having had evidence of the call, I should be so slow in taking up the work. But I am quite sure that it was not altogether the lack of confidence in myself, or the call to office that caused the delay, but the absence of the Spirit; and not until I resolved and set the time to officiate did I feel its presence. I had been blessed along other lines, but when I would think of the conferring of blessings, I was a blank, until, as I said, "I am going to try the Stewartsville reunion," which convened the latter part of July.

I told my daughter to get the necessary material and prepare to take down the blessings given. She answered that she did not believe she could take the blessings, as she was not experienced in that line. "Well," I said, "practice by taking sermons, prayers, and testimonies." But as time was short, we procured copies of blessings given by different patriarchs, and I would read them to her, and it was a good school. This may not be of interest; however, I mention it, for I have found some who are dissatisfied with their blessings. The stenographer may be fully competent in business affairs, but fail to get some of the important matters that are given in blessings. Upon inquiry I learned that the stenographer was inexperienced in church work, and not in the church.

We arrived on the Stewartsville camp ground and made arrangements to hold two sessions daily; at 10 a. m., and 4 p. m., and to give two blessings at each session. After retiring for the night and thinking of the duties of the morrow, when I was to give the first blessing, I felt keenly the sacredness and responsibility of the same. That night I had dreamed that I was requested to do a certain work, and I hesitated, but was urged to try. The material I was to work with was cement and stone. I examined the work from all sides. I did not want to undertake it for fear that I would not make a good, smooth job. However, I did it, and I was given to understand that it was satisfactory. I then thought I was in a foot race with several others. I was nearing the end, and was in sight of the prize. Up to this time I had come over some very rough, steep roads, and some very narrow, that I could scarcely get through, and as I had come so far, I did not want to give up the race. I became more anxious and determined to do all that I could to win the prize, and in order that I might make a success, I began to examine myself, taking off my shoes and unnecessary clothing, and I said, "Well I believe I can make it now." I never felt better prepared than at that time. The dream was timely and plain. I was given to understand that I should cast off all unnecessary weights, and be free to move out and do that which was my duty. The dream is in line with the sister's dream, to occupy the house in mid-air; to be free from all unnecessary cares; also in harmony with section 125, wherein we learn that he, (the patriarch) is not to meddle with branch or district affairs; not to listen to complaints made by individuals (his is to refer this to proper authority); is not to be placed in charge of branch or district; is to preach, teach, expound, exhort, to be a revivalist, visit branches, districts; to comfort the saints; to be a father to the flock; to give counsel and advice to them who may seek for such; to lay on hands for the conferring of blessings, and if so led, to point out the lineage of the one blessed. These are some of the things he should and should not do. A very important statement in the sister's dream was, "If Brother Lewis is in there, he will give me one of those papers" (blessings); and the answer was, "I can not unless the Lord directs me; He knows you and will do what is right by you." How true; the Lord must direct or there will be no life in that which is given. Again; "He knows you and will do right by you." If the individual is earnestly and honestly serving God, and is anxious to overcome his besetting sins, and live the true life of a Saint; is seeking strength through this channel, with unshaken faith in God and the divinity of the ordinance, truly he will do what is right for him; but if he is worldly-minded, careless, and indifferent, asks for his blessing because some others have had theirs, or because he thinks it is his privilege, the Lord will do what is right by him, for he knows him; though the patriarch may not know much about him.

From the above I see that there is a great need for the Order of Evangelists to be spiritually minded, and in order that they may be, the Lord has very wisely made provision that they be not burdened with unnecessary responsibility and care. The reader will again bear with me if I refer to a dream. When I arrived on the camp ground, Bro. T. T. Hinderks said, "I am glad to see you, I saw you in a dream last night." He referred to a conversation he had some three months before I was ordained a patriarch. At that time his mind was not clear relative to the patriarch from a Bible standpoint. Since our conversation he had made it a subject of prayer, and to him the dream was satisfactory, being as follows: "I saw a large gathering of the Saints, and you (Brother Lewis) were there, when a person spoke and said that the Lord had given for the benefit of his Saints, through his servant, Joseph Smith the Seer, the evangelical order, of the patriarchs. There accompanied each word the positive assurance that the ordinance was divine, and I said, 'Brother Lewis, I want my patriarchal blessing.' I thought that when the hands were placed upon my head, the Holy Spirit was present, and I remember part of what was said."

When Brother Hinderks came, as previously arranged, I felt like John. When Jesus came to him to be baptized, John said, "I have need to be baptized of thee, and why comest thou me?" I said, "Brother Temme, I prefer to take the chair, and you officiate." He replied, "It is all right as it is." As foreseen in the dream, the Holy Spirit was present. One statement made was that his life had been spared and his days lengthened for the good of the Lord's work. When asked if he had any knowledge of his days having been prolonged, he said that at the age of nine years, in Germany, he was seriously ill; his parents watched at his bedside, expecting that he would pass away; but one night he saw in a dream several little boys and girls of his age, that had died, standing around his bed, looking so pleasant and dressed in white. They beckoned to him to go with them. He answered, "Not at this time." They departed. He related it to his mother, who was one of God's noble women, although at that time she had not heard the angel's message. She said, "Thank God, you are not going to die at this time." Later on the family came to America. Brother Temme, the youngest, was the first to come into the church, and later his parents, brothers and sisters joined. He has had charge of the German Branch at Stewartsville for twenty-five years. He has presided off and on, over the Far West District; is a member of the standing High Council of the church. We see the wisdom exercised in sparing his life. Some have found fault with him for not devoting his entire life to the active ministry, having suggested that he go to his native land on a mission. He has been accused of thinking too much of the things of this world and the German Branch. The writer pleads guilty to some of the above, and in opposition to my views Brother Hinderks was commended in the blessing for the wise course he had pursued; that it was pleasing with the Lord, for by so doing he had kept the flock together, and some of them will be men of power and great faith in the church; that had he gone out into the world, some would have been lost; that now there was an open door, and for him to move out among the branches and feed the flock.

In the above we now see the wisdom, which at one time we did not, and we are reminded of the statement in Isaiah 55: 8: "For my thoughts are not your thoughts; neither are my ways your ways, saith the Lord."

In another incident is shown the weakness of man and the wisdom and mercy of God. Shortly after arriving in Saint Joseph, to begin a series of meetings in the three branches, and to attend to other duties in my line of work, a call came for me to come to the home of Sister Longfellow. She was seriously ill. Monday morning, November 20, I called. She said that she was quite anxious for her patriarchal blessing. I promised that during the week I would bring Ruth out with me and attend to it. I then, by her request, administered to her.

Wednesday morning, Bro. V. M. Goodrich telephoned that I should come and assist him to administer to Sister Longfellow, and stated that she was very anxious for her patriarchal blessing. I replied that so far as her blessing was concerned, I felt very peculiar and strange; for if she were to pass away I could not see what benefit it would be to her, overlooking the fact that even in death it would be a source of strength and comfort to her. Brother Goodrich replied that it might be of benefit to her children and relatives. In due time I arrived and assisted Brother Goodrich in the administration, without any apparent change. I then informed her that I would call Ruth by telephone and would attend to the blessing, which seemed to please her very much. It was quite evident that she had hopes that in her blessing she would be promised restoration of health, for it was her daily prayer that she be spared to raise her four fatherless children; three girls and one boy, ages nine to fourteen years. She was left a widow about eighteen months previous, her husband having met with a fatal accident.

While waiting for Ruth, I wondered what would be the nature of the blessing. Surely there were good reasons to ask the Lord to bless her with health that she might have the privilege to care for her dear ones, for they needed a mother's love and care and counsel. I tried to receive light as to what was in store for her; but my mind was a blank; none but those placed in similar conditions can truly sense the anxiety I was in. I can not call to mind having experienced just such a trial in my forty-five years' experience in the church. Gladly I would have placed the responsibility on stronger shoulders, and the question with me was, "Why withhold from me the needed light, as to what the change would be?" Having failed, after earnest, secret prayer, to obtain the mind and will of Him that even then I believed would do that which was for the best, I inquired of her if she had any light as to the future.

She said, "I would like to live for my dear children's sake."

"Yes," I replied, "That is natural, and you may. I confess I do not know; and it is possible that you may not. In case that your time has come to go, how do you feel?"

"Oh, I fear death."

"Why should you fear death? A person with as good a record as you have should not fear death. The conditions on the other side are much better than here, and as death is the door through which we must enter, we should welcome the change, rather than dread or fear it."

She answered, "I fear the change from life to death! (I fear not what I shall meet in the beyond.) It must be terrible. Poor Dick (her husband) suffered so much. He was dying for days."

"My dear sister, do not worry. I can explain why his death was hard; first, he fought death; that is, he did not want to die. He was not prepared. He had heard the gospel and believed it, but like many others, he put it off. Take comfort; he was a good, moral man, and he is in the hands of a just God, who will reward him according to his works. Let me advise you; Say, 'Not my will, but thine, O Lord, be done.' If you live, live unto the Lord; and if you die, die in him; whether we want to die or not, death will conquer. Say, like the good man, when asked if he thought himself dying, 'Really, friend, I care not whether I am or not, for if I die I shall be with God, and if I live he shall be with me.'"

I did what I could to console and cheer her, and to be reconciled to the will of God whatever that would be. I again sought earnestly for knowledge of what there was in store for her, but for some reason, not clear to me then, I received no light. Brother Goodrich had said that she would not recover; that he had had light to that effect. While I had no good reasons to doubt his testimony, I had no evidence that it was true. I had seen some restored to health who were weaker and I thought nearer death's door. To officiate in the sacred ordinance acceptably, I must not be governed by the testimonies or opinions of others, nor my own human opinion. This to me was a trying moment; to move looked like a leap in the dark. Others had received light, and why should I be left barren. With the poet I could ask for, "a faith that shines more bright and clear, when tempests wage without; that when in danger knows no fear, in darkness feels no doubt." That is what I needed. Question, Shall I proceed? If so, what shall I say? It is a sealing ordinance, but nothing should be sealed or promised unless I be directed to do so. Should I be governed by my sympathy, as I saw the faithful mother, with the four dear children standing by, I would confer upon her the desires of her heart, the blessing of health. But to promise it, when if He, who is all wise and does that which is for the best, has determined to withhold and not recognize that which was done would be a serious mistake, and would have brought to me untold misery, and to others grievous disappointment. To make matters worse (as I thought) there were present two nonmembers of the church. I did not have the courage to ask them to withdraw, so I explained the wish of the sister, and the object of the ordinance. In doing so, I felt that we had their good will, which was encouraging in that trying moment. After a word of prayer, I placed my feeble hands upon the head of that dear one, that I had reason to believe was in hopes she would be blessed with health. My weakness was so great that I was grieved in spirit, and from the very depths of my soul, and with all the faith I had, I placed myself in the hands of the Lord, and said, "Lord, not my will, but thine; be thou mouth and matter." He was true to his promise; when we do our part, he is never lacking. The trouble with us is, we want him to do his part before we do ours. He leads and invites, and we are slow to give heed. The following is the blessing:

"Dear Sister Ida: Agreeable to thy desires and request, I place my hands upon thy head in the blessed name of Jesus Christ, who holds all power in heaven and on earth, to petition the Father in His name to give thee such a blessing as will be wise in his sight, and of comfort and cheer to thee and to those who are near to thee by the ties of nature.

"Dear sister, thy life is known to God. From thy early childhood it was thy desire to serve him, and to do that which was pleasing and commendable in his sight; and while thou hast been called upon to pass through this affliction, take comfort and cheer that there is laid up for thee a treasure of more value than silver or gold, the pearl of great price in the kingdom of God, of which thou art truly a child and a citizen of that heavenly kingdom. Thy name, dear sister, is written upon the sacred pages of the Lamb's Book of Life, and thou shalt receive eternal life in the celestial kingdom of God.

"This world, with all its sceneries, and its pleasure and follies is that of the past to thee, and let thy hope, thy faith reach beyond this vale of tears; look up to God; he has been with thee in the hour of trial, when thou partook of that bitter, bitter cup, when the arm of flesh was too short to console and to cheer thee; God did bless thee and give thee strength ac-ording to thy day. We ask thee to place thyself at the foot of the cross; place thyself in the hands of God, and say, 'Not my will, but thine be done.' Take courage and comfort, even those who are near and dear to thee, those of thy own flesh are in the hands of kind friends, and God will be to them a father, and will bless them according to their needs; and when thou shalt pass to the brighter shore, thou shalt receive the pearl of great price, life eternal in the celestial kingdom of God.

"Now, dear sister, in the blessed name of Jesus, we seal upon thee additional strength; power of mind to become reconciled to the mind and will of God, and to bless thee with that peace of mind that all dread and fear shall be banished from thee and thy very being shall be filled with love and gratitude and praise and thanksgiving to God that it is as well with thee, even as it is. We commit thee and commend thee to the care and keeping of Israel's God. He will be very near to thee, and when the end shall come, and thou shalt return to God, who gave thee habitation here, be of good cheer, thou shalt rest and dwell where pain and wickedness, oppression, sorrow and trouble are not known. Thou art highly respected, and it will be said of thee, 'This is one who has come up through much tribulation,' and thou shalt be blessed as it is wisdom in God to give unto thee.

"We commit thee now to his care, and seal God's blessings upon thee. May his blessed Spirit come to cheer and to strengthen thee, for the hours that thou shalt still tarry, and in the end may He receive thee unto himself; and may that peace that God alone can give be thine to enjoy. We ask and seal it upon thy head, in Jesus' blessed name. Amen."

At 12.30, (afternoon) the above was given; by request it was read to several at the home of Bro. D. C. Kinnaman, Saint Joseph, Missouri, that same evening. The next morning we were informed that at midnight she breathed her last. One of her brothers, Mr. Fred Whiteley, stated that for some time before she died she had the most peaceful countenance he had seen, and she was conscious to the last. Truly was the fear of death taken from her, as promised, and she only tarried twelve hours. While her friends had given up hopes of her recovery unless the Lord would raise her up, they did not believe that her end was so near. "And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."—Revelation 14: 13.

Your brother,

CAMERON, MISSOURI.

OBEDIENCE.

"In Mrs. Florence Maybrick's lecture before the Lamoni Chautauqua Assembly, in the summing up of her experience as a worker for prison reforms, after telling many touching incidents showing conditions among prisoners, she said: 'THE MAJORITY OF THEM ARE CRIMINALS BECAUSE THEY WERE NOT MADE TO MIND THEIR PARENTS WHEN THEY WERE CHILDREN. IF OBEDIENCE HAD BEEN REQUIRED OF THEM IN CHILDHOOD, THEY WOULD NOT BE PRISONERS TO-DAY.'"

Autumn Leaves for October, 1910, is now before me, and from page 467 I copy the above; and I do so fully and firmly believing that the statement of Mrs. Maybrick is no exaggeration: simply the plain, unvarnished truth. Disobedience to parents is one of the conditions which Paul says is to exist "in the last days," and it certainly does exist to an alarming extent. If that condition existed in the world only, I should not be writing this paper; but when I see the same condition existing in the church, I feel that everyone who has been properly instructed should raise a warning voice and point out the evils and dangers of parental negligence along this line. And believing with the apostles, Peter and Paul, that "the elders" should be "ensamples to the flock" (1 Peter 5: 3), "an example of the believers" (1 Timothy 4: 12), and "a pattern of good works" (Titus 2: 7), I shall notice first the responsibility laid upon them in regard to having their children respect their authority.

Paul says of "elders" that they should have "faithful children not accused of riot or unruly."—Titus 1: 6. Of "deacons," he says one necessary qualification is, "ruling their children and their own houses well."—1 Timothy 3: 12. And that "a bishop" should be "one that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity."—1 Timothy 3: 4. Yet I have seen elders take their children into the house of God, a place dedicated and set apart unto the Lord as a sacred and holy place in which to worship him: I have seen elders take their little children into the Lord's house, and leave them to run anywhere they pleased until church time. When they would undertake to stop their racket, it would be a scream during the song service and the prayer. And I have wondered how that man expects his child to have respect for the Lord's house when he does not make a decent effort to teach it.

I have also seen elders, presidents of branches, too, allow their children to run over the house and talk in time of service, both preaching and prayer service—yes, even in the sacrament meetings. What kind of an example is that for the flock? I hear those parents say: "I just can't keep my child from doing so and so; he is too little to make him mind now; when he gets older we will teach him to mind."

My dear brother, don't you know the Apostle Paul says: "For if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?"—1 Timothy 3: 5. How can a man "take care of the church of God" when he can't govern a child who is only two or three years old? And, as to waiting until they get to be older, a bigger piece of folly was never indulged in by parents. If you can't teach a child obedience when he is one year old, you can't teach it at five: the longer you put it off, the harder it is. No one has a right to permit his child to disturb others in the house of worship; and I know that children running over the floor disturb people and prevent their getting from the service what they otherwise might get. And it disturbs the speaker, too, because he can't hold the attention of his audience so well.

Paul says that "God is not the author of confusion, [tumult or unquietness,] but of peace, as in all churches of the Saints."—1 Corinthians 14: 33. "In all churches of the Saints," then, peace and quiet should reign; and if children are properly taught at home, they will not be hard to control at church: they will grow up with the understanding that the church is not a playhouse, and they will act accordingly. But if the elders don't take the lead in this, there is sure to be confusion in the house of worship; and people who have a proper respect for the house of the Lord, will be shocked and hurt.

The Lord said to Eli, the priest of the Lord, thou "honorest thy sons above me," (1 Samuel 2: 29,) and I often think that many parents are making the same fatal mistake, now, by allowing their children to use the house of the Lord as a playhouse; and results have proven almost, if not altogether as disastrous, in many cases under my own observation. And when one who has spent many years working among criminals, as Mrs. Maybrick has, tells us that "The majority of them are criminals because they were not made to mind their parents when they were children," it seems to me that parents who say they can't control their children should turn over a new leaf and say, "I will control my children, especially while they are small."

Just think of the majority of our criminals being made so by the overindulgence of their parents, and then you can realize the awful sin parents are committing against their own children by failing to make them respect parental authority. It stands to reason that a child who is not brought up to obey parental authority will neither respect nor obey the laws of the land; hence so many of them become criminals. The foundation of this disregard for parental authority is laid when the child is "too small to make him mind." Any child, of even ordinary intelligence, can be taught to mind before he can walk. If a child is idiotic it is different; but I notice that most people who permit their children to run them, think their children are wonderfully bright; and sometimes they are, too. The child is brighter than the parent, because he knows how to manage the parent, while the parent does not know how to manage the child.

Parents who neglect to make their children mind are committing a great sin against the child, against the state, against the church, and against everyone with whom the child comes in contact; and it is foolish to think you can teach him obedience easier after the principle of disobedience has been developed within him than before he has learned to disregard what you tell him. And, above all things, see that your children are not permitted to disturb other people in the house of God.

AMERICA IN PROPHECY.

Synopsis of a sermon by Elder T. W. Williams, as recorded in the Webb City Register, (Missouri,) May 9, 1911.

Should it be thought a thing incredible that the Infinite has something to do with the rise and fall of nations? Bible students are familiar with profane and sacred history as it relates to Old World powers and the numerous instances on record where God has intervened for the well-being of the race.

It is apparent that God never left a stone unturned to convey to nations, as well as individuals, the great laws of life. It was through his marvelous supervision that the seed of Abraham were sojourners in the land of Egypt in order that the Egyptians might have a greater grasp on God. It was in accord with his provision that Israel were carried captives into Babylon, there to disclose to that idolatrous people the wonderful character of the God of heaven. Paul comprehending this, stated that God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from any of us." This passage clearly evidences that the place, limitations, and time of nation's occupancy on earth are determined by God.

What then of America? What of her ancient history; her origin and final destiny? Is it a thing credible of belief that God would exhaust every legitimate effort in conveying to the peoples of the Old World repeated manifestations of his will and loving kindness, and yet leave one half of the world, viz, this western hemisphere, enveloped in perpetual darkness? It is scarcely believable.

As a church we affirm that America has possessed a history equal to that of the Old World; that God has had a people here and manifested himself to them. It is not remarkable that these people should, as the people of the Old World, record their history and preserve for future generations those things which were sacred to them. In the eleventh chapter of Genesis we note that, at the time of the building of the Tower of Babel, the language of men was confounded and, "So the Lord scattered them abroad from thence upon the face of all the earth." America was part of the earth. To fulfill this statement, some of them must have come here.

What are the facts? Archaeology abounds with indisputable proof. The traditional history of the flood is as marked and definite in this continent as in the old. Bancroft, Josiah Priest, Ignatious Donnelly, Desire Charney, Baldwin, Short, and most of American historians and theological and archaeological authorities, corroborate this fact.

Our theory is that there were two civilizations in America in remote times. The first people were those coming out from the Tower of Babel. This people remained in a flourishing and highly civilized condition, until some 700 years B. C. when as the result of internal troubles, they became practically extinct. About 600 B. C. a colony of people came to this country from Jerusalem, led by divine direction, and colonized this country; subsequently dividing it into two nations; one following the lines of peace, was civilized; the other a warlike and barbarous people, followed by the ascendancy of the warlike people and the overthrow of the other; the American Indian being the descendants of the former.

In support of this position we have the universal testimony of the archaeological researches of a hundred years. The Bible predicts this; archaeology confirms it. In the prophecy of Jacob to Joseph his descendants were to be given a land which would eclipse that of his father's inheritance in Canaan; a "multitude of nations" were to spring from Joseph in "the midst of the earth," (See Genesis 48 and 49; also Deuteronomy 33;) Joseph in the Bible was always spoken of as a chosen vine. When Israel went to Canaan the half tribe of Manasseh remained on the opposite side of the river. Isaiah in Isaiah 16: 8 refers to this people, saying they would "go over the sea," and Jeremiah speaks of this "vine" going "over the sea" and in the forty-eighth chapter and thirty-second verse. In the forty-ninth chapter and thirtieth verse the inhabitants of Hazor (land of Manasseh) were specifically warned to remove beyond the jurisdiction of Nebuchadnezzar, which would convey them beyond the boundary of the then known world. They were to go over the sea; where did they go?

They came to America. Such men as Stephens, Catherwood, Donnelly, Baldwin, Le Plongeon, Bancroft, and a host of others attest that one of the civilizations of America must have been associated with the Jews because of the coincidence in their re-religious observance; the entire Mosaic ritualism and ceremonial worship being found here. The aboriginals of America were white people. They were conversant with the arts and sciences, and adepts in agriculture and manufacture. The buildings in South and Central America are monuments of their culture and prowess, and their traditional history abounds with unmistakable proof that at some time in the remote past one of the greatest and most powerful nations abounded here.

Of General Interest

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

[EDITORIAL NOTE.—We give below a somewhat lengthy review of Molly Elliot Seawell's book called The Ladies' Battle, for a number of reasons, among them being, first, that the question is one of great importance and is not entering the realm of party politics, which we have always sought to avoid, and second, because the author makes a number of references to the Mormons, which will be of interest. We follow the review taken from the Times with a few excerpts from the book itself, published by the Macmillan Company, 66 Fifth Avenue, New York; cloth $1.]

THE LADIES' BATTLE.

"Apparently, in the title of The Ladies' Battle (Macmillan), which Miss Molly Elliot Seawell gives to her vigorous attack on woman suffragists, there is a hint that 'ladies' born and bred, are apt to be opposed to the revolution contemplated. She treats the question itself, and those she is combating, with the fine scorn due to a sense of undefined but indisputable superiority. She does not indulge in epithets, for epithets are unladylike; but she does not conceal her opinion of the mental equipment or the taste of the women who are seeking to turn everything upside down in a social and political order that recognizes and protects all the essential rights of their sex, and confers upon them many valuable privileges.

"Miss Seawell makes much of the ignorance of suffragists as to political questions—the separate functions of the Senate and House of Representatives, the currency, corporations, national defense and the like. Her opponents may well reply that if they are ignorant of these, the great body of male voters know little about them, and often go very wrong regarding them, and that they get solved, so far as solution is attainable, by the labor and thought of exceptional men, who study them largely because they are responsible for action upon them. Incidentally, it might be suggested that Miss Seawell herself is an impressive proof that exceptional women also can show unusual intelligence and capability in such directions; the skill, the vigor, the scope and pungency of her discussion of the suffrage would unquestionably win distinction for her, despite her sex, in any legislative body. It is true that, under the influence of her Virginian associations, she has a contempt for the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and dismisses them with much the air that she would dismiss impertinent callers; but grave men have indulged in such peculiarities, if not in quite the same spirit.

"The author lays most stress on two points: 'First, no electorate has ever existed, or ever can exist, which can not execute its own laws. Second, no voter has ever claimed, or ever can claim, maintenance from another voter.' These are not novel contentions. The first has been urged at great length, and with characteristic solemnity, and a touch of smugness, by that most curious of conservative-radicals, The Spectator of London. And the second received a good deal of attention in the debates in the House of Commons. Neither one, nor both, proved potent enough to deter the House from twice approving the principle of suffrage for women. They must be regarded, therefore, rather as reasons why women should not have the suffrage, than a reason why they will never get it.

"Miss Seawell insists a little too strenuously on the latter. She may say, indeed, that she refers to an electorate wholly unable to execute its laws—but that means an electorate of women only, which is not involved in the present agitation. Moreover, if men finally yield the suffrage to women, they will still be on hand to do the fighting and the police work. It may be a harder job, and it may make a lot of confusion, some friction and a loss of efficiency. We think, on the whole, it would; but it is not safe to predict that it will 'never' come.

"It is open to the anti-suffragists to suggest that Miss Seawell's occasional extravagance and lack of perspective form an argument against putting political power in the hands of her sex; as we have already intimated that some of her qualities confirm the inference that women would use such power quite well. The subject, at best, is a knobby one, and is exposed to all sorts of a priori reasoning. But, while anyone can pick flaws in Miss Seawell's argumentation—an amusement not unknown among men—her little book is one which the advocates of suffrage for women will do well to study respectfully. When they get their votes, it is precisely this sort of attack they will have to meet as to every measure they undertake—spirited, sincere, determined and ingenious. At the present stage of their agitation they will—not unnaturally—resent it, for it is marked by an earnestness that verges on fierceness, and by a note of scorn, as we have already remarked. But it appeals to two classes, those who are deeply prejudiced against suffrage and those who are honestly afraid of it."—New York Times.

"The suffragists have assumed that the revolution would be over when a woman can walk up to the polling booth and deposit a ballot in the box. It is at this point, however, that the revolution would begin. It is true that limited suffrage prevails in twenty-two States, and full suffrage in five—Colorado, Idaho, Wyoming, Utah and Washington, and still there is no general revolution. But it must be remembered that in the States where there is limited suffrage, women have shown a general indifference to exercising suffrage, while the experiment in the five newer and sparsely settled States in which there is full suffrage affords no adequate test for full suffrage in great centers of civilization, and in vast and crowded communities, with immense and diversified interests.

"Wyoming is a State of cowboys and cattle ranges. Idaho is dominated to a great degree by the Mormon Church, which has ever been the good friend of woman suffrage, and the most powerful advocate it has yet had. In Utah, the woman voters, under the lead of Mormonism, have voted steadily in favor of polygamists and lawbreakers, who have been sent to Congress, in defiance of the law, by the votes of women."—Pages 11 and 12.

"During the last fourteen years, California, South Dakota and Oregon have all defeated suffrage amendments to their constitutions. It may be, that the company kept by woman suffrage is not pleasing to legislators. While happily, all suffragists are not Mormons, all Mormons are suffragists. Neither are all suffragists socialists, but with a few exceptions, all socialists are suffragists."—Page 14.

"How has this simple business worked, of a woman depositing a piece of paper in a ballot box? Utah and Idaho have failed to put a stop to polygamy; on the contrary, the polygamists are the chief supporters of woman suffrage."—Page 87.

"From Utah, the stronghold of woman suffrage, came on the 10th of June, 1910, the following Associated Press Dispatch from one of the principals in a proposed prize fight which had been prohibited in California by Governor Gillett:

"Salt Lake City can handle the fight, and it can be put on July 4th—prize fighting not being illegal in Utah as in California."—Page 101.

"Divorce statistics are very complicated, owing chiefly to three things—the number of Catholics in a State, the number of negroes, and the number of Mormons. In Texas, for instance, the divorce rate is enormous, but the Census Bureau estimates that seventy-five per cent of the divorces are granted to negroes. In Colorado, at the time of its admission to the Union, the divorce rate was the highest in the United States. The divorce rate showed a slight falling off from 1890 to 1900, the Catholic population having increased largely in that decade. In the Census of 1910, although the Catholic population of Colorado had increased to twenty-eight per cent of the whole, the State was third in point of divorce and that, with few negroes or Mormons, and many Catholics. Wyoming, a suffrage State, with few negroes or Mormons, is seventh in the order of divorce. Owing to the dominance of the Mormon Church in Idaho, that State is ninth, and Utah is nineteenth in the ratio of divorce, Mormonism decreasing divorce."—Pages 111, 112.

THE GROWTH PROCESS OF HUMAN LIFE.

Viewed in a large way, childhood and maturity represent the two types; the one the age of rapid growth, the other the period of the quiet, establishing of the forces of life with ordered expression.

We are yet far from understanding even the typical periods that appear formally in personal development; but we have learned to see how important it is to strive to understand them. Any one which we can clearly recognize will serve to illustrate how completely the educational problem centers in understanding the particular phase of development the individual has reached.

For instance, there seems to be in many children a definite period of subsidence in mental growth about the eighth year. This by no means appears clearly in the lives of all children, but so frequently as to be more than an individual variation. The child who has been growing forward rapidly, suddenly becomes stupid, careless of study, and irresponsive to stimulus. And what is the result? The fond parent who is vain of the child's ability, and the teacher who is ambitious for results unite to crowd the child on. Stimulus is multiplied at home and at school. The parent tells the teacher the child has done well in preceding rooms, and there is no reason why he can not do well now. The teacher's pride is hurt and energies are redoubled to push the child forward. In other words, everything possible is done to force the child across the period of retarded growth at the same speed shown in the time of most rapid and expansive forward movement.

But now suppose that this period of quiet incubation is Nature's provision for gathering slowly together the energies of life for the great forward leap in the period of transition from childhood to youth: what have we done? Crowded sail, only to crack the main mast and strain the ship; forced the steam until the engine of life is perhaps permanently disabled. How many over nervous and morbid children, drifting in a sickly way through the period of transition, unable to respond to the appeal of that epoch of life and come forth into bounding manhood and womanhood, are sad memorials to the successful gratification of the vanity of the parent and teacher. Suppose the child should even drop out of school for a time and revert to mud pies and sand houses, forgetting his arithmetic and letters, and letting his soul sleep in a calm, physical life like an unawakened seed in the soil—what then? This: that a month of such a child's time later may be worth a year of the over-strained child's; that acquisitions in arithmetic and grammar are poor tests of the worth of life. Too often, when the child has been allowed to sleep his two years, if necessary, strides ahead of his neighbor, who has never missed a school day, nor even an evening's study at home, we regard it as unusual talent and anomalous. How much genius is simply health! And how genius might be multiplied if we let Nature take us into her confidence and show the open secret that broods over the spring flowers.

Take another example: at about nine or ten or eleven most children pass into an awkward age which to the unsympathetic observer is most disagreeable. The growth is irregular and the feet and hands are too large for the body. The child, too, is just becoming conscious of them and keeps them well in the foreground—not only of his consciousness, but of the stage of the domestic and social life. In the same way his words are too big for his ideas and the dawning mental life expresses itself in the same awkward way as the physical. And thus we, who for years have been taking the child into the drawing room to show him off to strangers, now send him out of the room with a sharp word or, worse, a sarcastic reference to his awkwardness. It is not his fault that he wants to display himself: we have taught him that; until now he comes noisily into the room with the high-pitched voice and disagreeable behavior that children use to attract attention, and is irritating enough to us. But as it was our vanity that displayed the younger child, so it is our vanity that is hurt now; and if for once we were to follow, not the whim of our pleasure, but the good of the child, ought not our treatment of him to be opposite in both cases? The young child, so endlessly attractive to us because of the mysterious dawning of the soul we behold in him, needs nothing else so much as to be left alone to establish quietly the roots of his being in the soul of affection. Instead of jiggling him till his nervous system is exhausted, displaying him to all comers, and compelling him to go over and over his small vocabulary of baby words, we should restrain our vanity and let him lie much of the time in the lap of his nurse, Nature. While, on the other hand, the child in the awkward age needs nothing else so much as companionship with us and guidance and sympathy through the period of bungling expression until one of natural and ordered life is reached. The child who is over conscious of his hands and feet will not be made sweetly unconscious by sarcasm, and sharp suppression will hardly turn awkward words into natural and beautiful self-expression.

Not only that; the very awkwardness is the clue to the needed lessons. With the first consciousness of personality the child has no sense of proportion and is irritatingly aggressive in the assertion of opinion. All parents know the case: "Now, mamma, you think you said so, but I KNOW you didn't." The temptation is to suppress the child as vigorously as possible; and there is no doubt that impudence must be suppressed—for the child's sake. Yet the child who says just that annoying thing is ready to recognize for the first time that two people may come to diametrically opposite opinions, and both be earnest and intelligent. The true lesson of toleration can now be taught. Hitherto we might have preached about it incessantly, and the child could not have understood; now it is possible to develop in him that respect for the personality and opinions of others that gives proportion and beauty to intellectual relationship. Indeed, one may go beyond this: the child is also ready to understand that of the two in dispute, the right is probably with the one of larger experience; probably, not certainly, for sometimes the child is right and the parent wrong. Such cases do arise, and a little modesty will not lessen the parental dignity.

These examples out of the multitude that might be given must serve to show how all important is the law of periodicity in relation to child life. The problem of education is not to lead the personality along such a process as can be represented by a straight line, but to seek to understand the different periods of development and to adapt our educational influences to the successive phases of movement through which the personality passes. This must be achieved both generally and individually. It is necessary to understand the typical phases in the growth of the mind and spirit through which all children tend to pass, and also, among the innumerable modifications of these, those presented by the specific children with whom we must deal.—Edward Howard Griggs, in Moral Education.

Questions on June Reading.

What processes are represented in the two principal types of life? Why is it important to seek to understand the periods of personal development? What centers in this understanding? What has been observed as taking place in some children about the eighth year? How do you account for this dropping back? What is frequently done in case of such retarded growth? With what result? How may vanity be responsible for the injury wrought? What benefits may accrue by a rest from school work under such circumstances? What are some of the manifestations of the awkward age? How is the child affected mentally at this period? What is his greatest need? What is often the cause of the disagreeable manners of children? What treatment would be followed both now and at a previous time if the good of the child were made preeminent? Why does letting alone benefit the little child? How should this be reversed in the awkward age? What will be the effect of sarcasm and sharp repression? In the aggressive stage of what does the child become conscious? What does he lack? Why can the lesson of toleration now be taught? For whose sake must impudence be checked? Does the admission that the parent may not be in the right lessen his dignity? How should the process of education be adapted to the personality of the child? What modifications of development may be expected with different children? What do the examples given serve to show? What is the problem of education?

Hymn No. 202, Saints' Hymnal; prayer; reading from Home Column with discussion; roll call; business; closing hymn and prayer.

If all the skies were sunshine,
Our faces would be fain
To feel once more upon them
The cooling splash of rain.

If all the world were music,
Our hearts would often long
For one sweet strain of silence
To break the endless song.

If life were always merry,
Our souls would seek relief,
And rest from weary laughter
In the quiet arms of grief.

KAPLAN, LOUISIANA, May 10, 1911.

Dear Herald: In reading the columns of your paper I see in the conference minutes that Bro. Edgar H. Smith's mission field is Central Illinois, and in one of the HERALDS last fall, I saw where a sister had written that Bro. Edgar Smith had baptized ten; I supposed it was Bro. Edgar H. It made me rejoice. It is always good news to hear of one more following in the footsteps of the Savior.

I was sorry Bro. James M. Smith did not get to come and preach for us during the winter, as we would have enjoyed having him. My son got permission to have the schoolhouse as long as needed. We looked for him in vain.

This is a French Catholic town; have been here but a short time and not very well acquainted yet, but think it would take a French speaking person to do any good here, and they are such good Catholics. It is doubtful even if a French speaking person could convince them of the truth.

Your sister in Christ,

MARGARET S. KITE.

DESLOGE, MISSOURI, May 16, 1911.

Saints' Herald: My wife and I are the only Saints here. This is a large lead mines place. We are isolated from church privileges. We would like to get one or two elders to preach here, and they can make their home with us. I will help them get a place to preach in and will help them pay their way. If there are any elders who will come and preach, they can write me and I will help them all I can.

I take the HERALD, and that is all the preaching we have. We are still in the faith and trying to serve God to the best of our knowledge. We have trials and temptations sometimes, but hope we can overcome them by the help of God. We ask an interest in your prayers; that we may hold out faithful.

Your brother and sister in the gospel,

MR. AND MRS. GEO. E. RICHARDSON.

MOSCOW MILLS, MISSOURI, May 18, 1911.

Dear Herald: I am still trying to live in the true faith, but have a lonely life, as my husband died and I am all alone. I am now eighty-three years old, and I am not able to do my work and have to hire it done, but I am very poor. My husband was a soldier, but they did not leave me his pension, so I can not take the HERALD any more. I love to read the good news that is in it, but I can not pay for it. My health is bad, so pray for me that I may hold out faithful to the end. I ask the Saints to remember me in their prayers.

I wish some of the elders would come to Moscow, as I know some would hear them explaining the work, but they are very prejudiced; they think we are Mormons.

Your sister in the faith,

MRS. MARY F. WELCH.

GUILFORD, MISSOURI, May 16, 1911.

Dear Herald Readers: I have a desire this morning to write a few lines to the HERALD readers, letting them know that we are still in the faith, and are desirous of continuing faithful as long as life shall last. I am trying to live as best I know how. Although my imperfections are many, I am striving daily to overcome these things, and live nearer to God.

I have two sweet little children to raise, a boy and girl, and my greatest desire is to raise them in such a way and manner that God will be pleased with them and my manner of raising them. We, as parents, can not be too careful in our everyday walk in life, for children are great imitators, and the example we set before them when they are small, is likely to be remembered in after years, which would be a good thing if the examples have been good ones, and if they have not been good examples are likely to do them much harm.

As I look around me and see so many boys drifting off into the vices and evils of this world, and especially the craving for drink and its evil effects, I only hope that I may be able to raise my boy, Elbert A., somewhere near the level of his namesake.

I ask an interest in your prayers for myself and family, and especially for me and my companion, who is a great help to me, that we may be able to overcome our weaknesses and imperfections, and at last gain entrance into the haven of rest.

Your sister,

MRS. P. H. SCHMIDT.

ALEXANDER, KANSAS, May 14, 1911.

Editors Herald: I have been a reader of your columns for quite a number of years. As the HERALD has been the paper of most interest in our home as far back as I am able to remember, I am always anxious for the arrival of the HERALD and church papers. The interesting sermons containing the true principles of the doctrine of Christ are of much interest to me, also the encouraging letters of the missionaries speaking of the interest manifested, and of those embracing this glorious latter day message, that they be no more tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine.

We only wish that we were located where we could enjoy associating with more of the Saints and church privileges to a greater extent. We were disappointed that we could not have a stronger missionary force through the Northwestern Kansas District this year, but we are willing to say, "God's will be done, not ours."

We were very much disappointed that our mother and sister were not permitted to attend General Conference, but on account of mother taking sick, it was not possible for them to attend. Mother desired mostly to visit her mother, sister, and brother, S. W. L. Scott, who were in attendance at conference, and whom she has not seen for a number of years. She has been considerably worse since her brother, C. Scott, was there in March, and also since conference began, but she has begun to improve of late, and we wish to appeal to the Prayer Union for prayers in her behalf, that she may improve more rapidly.

Your brother in the one faith,

ARTHUR H. THOMPSON.

WEST JONESPORT, MAINE, May 15, 1911.

Dear Herald: Permit me to have a few words to say for our Lord and Master, because there is gratitude in my heart when I think of this great plan of salvation, which was ordained in time by the Father and Son in their infinite wisdom for a fallen and dying race. I can say that I have a hope of the resurrection, which was bought by the precious blood of that meek and lowly Jesus, that it gives courage and strength to make a success of this one fair chance for the welfare of my soul in the great beyond, although I have the same opinion of myself as Paul did when he said that he feared that he would be a castaway. But I am watching and praying, because the adversary does not always come as a roaring lion; he also comes as an angel of light, waiting to devour whom he may. I can say here to-day, with all soberness before God and man, that I am trying to walk in that straight and narrow road that leads to life everlasting, although I fall short, as probably all of you do. May we all be as one, and to work together, for the edification of the church of the first-born, which is our reasonable service.

Your brother in the one faith,

MERTON L. CROWLEY.

LEES SUMMIT, MISSOURI, May 16, 1911.

Dear Herald: Being deeply interested in the latter day work since 1890, my attendance at the late General Conference was truly a feast of good things, and many valuable lessons were learned. The Spirit of the Lord was richly enjoyed throughout the various services. The lecture and views of the Holy land by our Bro. G. T. Griffiths, fresh from the ground, was both inspiring and instructive to the vast audience that greeted him.

Believing it to be of general interest, I give the following prophecy delivered at the close of one of the prayer meetings, taken in shorthand by Sr. Belle James: "To the ministry: Those present who have met with opposition and their hearts sometimes have been filled with fear; because of that, the promise of the Lord is to you that if you will go forth in faith and steadfastness, the year now opening before you as you occupy when the Spirit of the Lord may direct, shall be one of fruitage such as you have never known before. The fruitage of God's Holy Spirit of joy and peace and comfort of yourselves, and the liberty which God alone can give in the declaration of his word. Therefore be of good cheer and perform your duty, and Israel's God will be with you and his angels your attendants."

To the same brother the following vision was given, and was declared to the Saints: "I saw the world in commotion; the atmosphere filled with danger: clouds and debris flying through the air, showing that storms and perils and dangers were around and near us. I saw the waves of the sea rolling in uncomfortable fury and reaching beyond their bounds. But I saw a light above all this and it was presented to me as where God wants his saints to occupy. Around this light was peace and rest. I feel that this is a warning to us as Saints to occupy where God has called us to occupy, above the world, above its pleasures, above its allurements, and above its sin: and dwelling in the light where is safety and peace and promise."

The cause seems to be onward in these parts. The branch at Lees Summit being guided under the faithful and vigilant watchcare of Elder Calvin Depuy. The stake authorities have in mind to start the tent campaign here early in June; we anticipate another successful season, with the Lord's help, and the blessing and cooperation of the members.

Some five miles northeast of here is another camp of Saints, known as Fairview, and under the wise and fostering care of our good brother, Elder S. H. McDonald. In that rural region, there is a promising outlook. Quite a nucleus of members have come and settled around of late. Priest C. L. Goldsmith and family, of Nebraska City, Nebraska, and the two Mengel families, from western Nebraska, are late arrivals. The writer enjoyed discoursing twice; the 14th inst., in the shady grove of Bro. and Sr. Fred Lund. Both the Sabbath school and the Religio are weekly interesting features with them. The little band not yet organized into a branch are anxious and deserving of the tent this season. We certainly miss the happy face of our late brother, William H. Bradford, whose spirit departed last March. His faithful widow is still earnest in the cause, and will receive a glad welcome in the sweet bye and bye, on the other shore.

Is anything more wonderful than another, if you consider it maturely? I have seen no man rise from the dead; I have seen some thousands rise from nothing. I have not the force to fly into the sun, but I have force to lift my hands, which is equally strange.—Thomas Carlyle.

News From Missions

Jerusalem.

Jerusalem has been a very busy city the last two weeks. There have been a great many visitors in the city, and all the churches have been running full blast every day. The Jews have been celebrating their Passover. The Greek, Roman, and Armenian churches have been holding Easter services and the Moslems have been celebrating their Nebie Mousa, which I am told means the Prophet Moses. They have a tomb down toward Jericho, which they call Moses' Tomb, and great crowds assemble there every year, and go through some kind of religious ceremony in memory of the great prophet. The poor, ignorant creatures do not seem to know that Moses never came on this side of the Jordan.

The services in the Greek and Roman Catholic churches were somewhat interesting at first, but they finally became tiresome and even disgusting. It was nearly all idolatry, pure and simple. The priests were robed in the most gorgeous and expensive gowns of satin, embroidered in gold, and heavy gold chains worn around the neck, attached to gold and diamond ornaments. As a spectacular display it was a success, but as a representation of Christ and his church it was disgusting. I do not wonder that many who witness such scenes go away infidels. Bells are ringing almost incessantly, from morning till night. The "Church of the Holy Sepulcher" is thronged by thousands, inside and out, all day long. Boys mingle with the crowd, selling bread and cakes. All along the sidewalk and in every conceivable corner where there are passers-by, men sit with a cloth spread in front of them covered with bracelets, beads, and other fancy ornaments for sale. The scene is something like a fair in our country, excepting that the costumes of the people are different. Here are people from nearly all countries, and presenting a great variety of dress.

I witnessed the feet washing, an ordinance of the Greek Church, the other morning. Though the ceremony was not to take place till about 9 a. m., in order to get standing room it was necessary to be there about 6 o'clock. At that early hour the place was crowded, but by paying two franks I was able to get a place to stand near the scene of operation. The house tops, balconies, and windows were crowded. Several companies of soldiers were required to keep something like order. In front of the church, a platform with a railing around it had been erected. At the appointed time, twelve priests with the patriarch handsomely robed, mounted the platform and were seated. Several other priests were on hand to act as assistants. On another platform a short distance away stood another priest, who in a sing-song tone began to read, I presume from the Scriptures. To this the patriarch responded. Then for some time, something over an hour, this responsive reading continued. During a part of the time the bells rang, and the boys cheered. Finally a silver and gold service was placed on the platform and the patriarch stepped forward and was assisted by two priests in removing his cap and cloak, and with a large towel thrown over his shoulder proceeded to moisten the feet of the twelve priests from the silver and gold lined basin and touch the moistened spot on the foot with the towel. This over, the robe and hat were again placed upon the patriarch, then there was some more speech making, after which a procession was formed, the patriarch leading, who as he marched through the crowd and along the streets sprinkled the crowd by dipping a bouquet of flowers in water, (I presume the same in which he had washed the feet) and throwing it upon them. There was a scramble made by the crowd for the little water remaining in the basin; this was sprinkled upon handkerchiefs. I shall long remember the look of rapture upon one old Russian Pilgrim's face after he had succeeded in pushing his way through the crowd and wiped out the dish, in which the feet had been washed, with his handkerchief. These people are continually crossing themselves when they are in the Holy Sepulcher, and kissing the pavement, the stones, and nearly everything within reach. Nor do they stop here; for some things that are beyond their reach they touch with a stick, and then kiss the stick.

Last Saturday I chanced to pass by the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, and seeing a very large crowd assembled, I entered, and found the church crowded with people, nearly all of whom had a bundle of candles in their hand. I could not see a soul that I could speak to and be understood, so could not ask what was going on, but it finally dawned upon my mind that this was the day that they were to receive the "Holy Fire." The Greeks teach these people that upon this occasion fire descends from heaven in the Holy Sepulcher. This the priest passes out through a hole to priests on the outside, and then the fire is passed from one to another to the whole multitude, who receive it with "joy unspeakable." Some rub their hands in the flame and candle grease and rub it on their face and in their hair. I did not remain to witness all this. It was too disgusting, and fills one with sadness to think that the beautiful religion of Jesus Christ should be so perverted. I am told that the Roman Catholics at one time indulged in the same fraud, but they gave it up. It is said there are many in the Greek Church that want to stop this deception, but they dare not do so, on account of the effect it will have upon the people. These poor people carry this fire all the way to Russia with them, to relight the candles in the churches with it.

Well, this will give you an idea of the kind of worship indulged in, in "The Holy City." God hasten the day when this darkness will give way for the light of truth. We are still trying to uphold the gospel standard, but its progress seems to be slow. We were somewhat encouraged last Sunday. We had several strangers out to hear us, and the good Spirit was with us in power, and all those present seemed to be visibly affected. I felt as though the seed sown would bear fruit in God's own time.

We are very anxious to hear the General Conference news. I trust some one will be sent to this mission. I put off starting for Australia as long as possible in hope that the missionary might reach here before I leave, should one be sent. If nothing prevents we will leave here about May 20, and sail for Australia May 28. We are both feeling well and hopeful.

In gospel bonds,

F. G. PITT.

JERUSALEM, PALESTINE, April 25, 1911.

Mobile, Alabama.

I am now near Bay Minette, Alabama, holding a meeting. I headed my letter Mobile so some who sent me papers to distribute, and money on the gospel tent, might know I am the same one who advertised in the HERALD some time ago. Many thanks to the Saints who gave me money on the tent, and the HERALDS, Ensigns, and Autumn Leaves to hand to the people.

We have received 1,159 HERALDS, 442 Ensigns, and 285 Autumn Leaves, and I have given out half of them and I will hand out the rest soon. We have received seventeen dollars through the mail; about seven dollars from Alabama, five dollars from one and two dollars from another; some from Mississippi, and the rest from various parts of the United States; but we have not, as yet, enough money to purchase the tent. Now, who will contribute next? Money sent to 425 Charles street, Mobile, Alabama, will reach us.

I would like to hear from my many friends scattered about; of course I have not the time and postage to answer, but will occasionally write to the paper.

I went to Texas about six weeks ago, and did all the gospel work I could; preached about nine times, baptized two, and was forced to hold a four-day debate with a Campbellite preacher or back down before all the people. It was near Cleburne, Texas, where Brother Higginbotham and I opened up the work about one year ago, near the home of Bro. C. W. Spence, a true Latter Day Saint indeed. The Campbellite began lecturing against us, and continued all the year. I went down to hear him and he made an attack, so I replied to him that night, and was challenged. He said they would furnish the house, so we went to work. I felt good in the debate, but will let the rest speak for themselves as to how they felt. Brother Higginbotham said he would write it up.

I baptized three at Bay Minette last Sunday, then came here to confirm two whom Bro. Albert Miller baptized. Brother Miller is a priest and is doing a good work. He is working in connection with me and traveling all the time. He was ordained about seven months ago on one Sunday and preached the next. He has baptized seven here lately and I think will get more. I wish all our young men would get the harness on and go to work for the Master like he is doing. We have another fine young man who was baptized, called, and confirmed five months ago. He is doing a splendid work, traveling, preaching, and working for the Sunday school.

This field is white, the harvest is great; we can not meet half the calls. People are calling on every hand for preaching. We have calls for about eight weeks' meeting in Mississippi, besides here. There are members in almost every community wanting preaching. We baptize some at nearly every place we preach. Can we not get more help from the local brethren? Some of them are doing well, really splendid. I bid them godspeed.

One local elder at Biloxi, Brother King, has opened up the work at Gulf Port, Mississippi, and there have been about fourteen or sixteen baptized through his efforts. You see what people can do when they try. There are many warm-hearted Saints in this mission at Gulf Port, Biloxi, Vancleave, Three Rivers, and Bay Minette, Mississippi; Theodore, Mobile, and Bay Minette, Alabama; with many scattered ones.

Dear Saints, we want your prayers and your help. Let us get the gospel before the people; talk the doctrine and give tracts, and in all other ways possible.

Your brother in the one faith,

405 CHARLES STREET.

ALBERT VANCELEAVE.

Papeete, Tahiti.

Knowing that many of the Saints desire to hear from the missionaries in the southern seas now and then, I shall write a few lines. Last Christmas was spent by the writer, wife and babies, upon the island of Rairoa, where a chapel was dedicated and a great feast was observed.

There were a great many Saints from the various islands in that part of the mission and in regard to the gathering will say that it was one that shall long be remembered by the writer, and our trip from beginning to end was one that could well be termed, "Pleasant experiences in the southern seas."

The program set apart for the "mahana oaoa"; that is, the day of rejoicing, lasted three days, and the numbers rendered by the various branches were very well prepared and rendered, both in connection with the Religio and the Sunday school work. The songs, map talks, readings, and in fact everything, were carried out without one mistake, to the knowledge of the writer. One feature was the singing of songs while the leader of the classes pointed out the places on the large Religio maps made by Sr. Lake, showing the journeys of the various colonies who sailed from Asia to America, the voyage across the waters, and the points of interest in connection therewith; also many things were sung in connection with the return of the gospel in these the last days, inasmuch as the hill Cumorah, Kirtland, Nauvoo, and Independence were shown upon the maps. The leaders kept time with their batons as they sang these songs, the words of which were in accordance with the pointing of the baton.

This feature was greatly enjoyed by those who "came from the land shadowing with wings," as we were referred to in the songs sung. These songs were very, very good. The singing of the Manihi chorus of seventy voices was excellent, and one song which had been taught one of the natives by an English professor of music while upon the island of Rarotonga some years ago was excellent, indeed, being equal to that of American choruses of that size. While listening to this song I thought what a splendid treat it would be for the Saints in America if they could have heard this chorus sung before the General Conference. While their genuine native songs grow monotonous to the ear of the foreigner, these English hymns and chorus songs that they sing are proof to us that they are gifted singers; and I thought while listening to the above-mentioned chorus, that when they "march into Zion singing their songs of everlasting joy" what a great time of rejoicing it will be. This gathering observed in Raidoa was one of great encouragement, and the spirit of unity that prevailed there is what made it so.

About the 21st of February last, Elder Savage and wife surprised us upon their return from Tupuai, where they had been actively engaged in the work of the Master from five to six months. Between that time and the latter part of March we printed 800 Religio quarterlies of 38 pages each, which had been written into the Tahitian language by Sister Lake since returning to America, and whose effort in that way has been of great assistance to the Religio work here.

The last day of March Brother Savage and wife, myself, and a few natives left Tahiti, and because of a contract I had made with the boat it went to Makatea on our way to Niau to take the Saints of that island to conference. We reached Niau the day before conference commenced. Two foreign Mormon elders were on the same boat on their way to conference upon another island to the north, but they did not get there until after their conference was over. When we reached the island of Niau and the boat whistled, the Saints all recognized the whistle, and knowing that we were intending coming upon that boat, some of the leading officers of the mission went to the water's edge to meet us, although they were then having their Sunday school program, and they led us into the beautiful, large, native gathering house, built especially for the conference. It was a large, well constructed, native building, covered with cocoanut tree leaves, was absolutely waterproof, cool, and much better adapted for meetings of that kind here than one built of lumber. It was 72 feet long and 36 feet wide, and was the best gathering house of its kind that I have seen in the islands. Its floor was built of American lumber, and at night it was lighted by a large lamp, giving a light much similar to the electric are lights in America.

As we were led, in the midst of the large assembly, to the front, they all arose and sang a song of rejoicing, of praise to God, as a greeting to us and as an expression of thanksgiving to God because of our safe arrival; and after this prayer was offered; then the congregation came forward, lined up to greet us with handshakes.

The morning following the conference convened, and I am pleased to say that from the beginning to the end all things passed off without contention and with a spirit of unity.

Sr. Belle Savage was appointed as the foreign secretary and she will inform the Saints in regard to the matters considered and the work done. I will say, however, that it was another gathering of rejoicing, and after conference was over the Sunday school and the Religio workers finished up their program, which lasted for two or three days after conference.

There were fifteen boats which carried the people to conference. There were five hundred Saints there and one hundred and forty outsiders; in all six hundred and forty people, representing ten different branches.

One day during the gathering there were seen some birds about half a mile out, flying low, close to the water, which is an indication of fish gathering in one place; a fish called the auhopu which generally weigh from four to six pounds and over. One or two of the natives went out in their native canoes and returned well laden, and then others went out, and when the six fishermen had finished their fishing there were 880 of these fish; that is, almost two tons and a quarter of nice, fresh fish spread out upon the seashore. They were distributed among the various branches, and no one lacked, for there were over six pounds of fish for everyone upon the island. This is a "fish story," but a true one. This was the greatest amount of fish ever caught at one time on this island, and the natives said that it was a gift from God. Lots of bread was baked and they had a feast of "loaves and fishes."

On the 20th. of April I left the island of Niau, also Brother and Sister Savage, who were contemplating a trip to Kaukura, and other islands. On my way back to Tahiti it was a calm for three days. We were very desirous for wind, but the night before reaching Papeete we struck a strong gale and a rough sea and we then desired another calm.

It was the strongest windstorm that I have ever been in, and a very rough sea. We were told that the light from the light-house on the shore of Tahiti could be seen from the deck. This sounded so good to me and a Catholic priest, a Frenchman bound for Tahiti, that we ventured out of the cabin on deck to get a glimpse of it, and the sea was so rough that a large wave swept over the deck and thoroughly immersed us. Well, I didn't mind it so much, as it agrees with our faith; but the Catholic priest, it was different with him, he did not enjoy it so much. One reason was, it put his pipe out. Thus his offering up of that kind of burnt incense came to a sudden and sad ending.

The following morning we were lying outside of Papeete's harbor, waiting for daylight that we might enter in through the pass in safety.

When I arrived at the missionary house I found all things well, and the baby whom we thought we would probably lose last February, was better in health apparently than ever before.

I must not fail to mention the one day's stopover of Brother Haworth on his way to the General Conference, which was a great day of rejoicing for us all. The branch of Tiona, and the "Pupu" people who were cut off from the church in Brother Burton's time, all assembled at our Tarona branch, and a crowded house greeted him. He preached from his chart on the restoration of the gospel, and Brother Savage did the interpreting. It was well done, both the sermon by Brother Haworth and the interpreting by Brother Savage, and it was enjoyed very much by all, and we look forward with great pleasure to the return of Brother Haworth.

I am now engaged again at the printing work, and will soon commence printing Sunday school quarterlies which were prepared by Bro. Charles H. Lake, who has been assisting us in other ways, although thousands of miles from us.

I trust that I have not wearied the readers; if so, kindly bear in mind that I seldom occupy your attention in this manner. I will close, saying that things are looking very encouraging in the Lord's vineyard in the isles of the seas, and although we are thousands of miles from the American shores and home, yet we feel perfectly at home when busily engaged in the service of the Lord.

With an anxious heart awaiting the news from General Conference, I remain as ever,

Your brother and Christ's servant,

J. CHAS. MAY.

News From Branches.

Independence, Missouri.

In looking backward over the events of the first half of May, we are glad to note the many indications of spiritual and material progress: and together with these, all Nature seems to join with us in a united song of praise.

On the 1st, thirteen were received by letter, and nine were granted letters to the South Side Branch; there have been also three baptisms, three blessings conferred on little ones, and two ceremonies of marriage were performed, both having been conducted by Elder T. W. Chatburn, one at the church on the 14th, the happy pair being Sr. Kate Filson and Melvin E. Johnson, and the other at the home of Bro. Roy Brocaw on the 15th, the contracting parties being Sr. Lottie Brackenbury and Bro. Joseph Roberts.

On the 8th Bro. J. C. Foss was called upon to conduct a sad, yet joyful funeral service at Bonheim Place, for Sr. Mary E. Passmore, who after an experience of a long period of severe affliction, had peacefully gone to a happier place of rest.

The cases of sickness which have been mentioned at the prayer meetings of late have been alleviated: and although a few are still afflicted, and the aged ones, who are not a few, are hampered somewhat by seasons of pain, weakness, and decrepitude, yet the brightness of brotherly sympathy and of a diviner love is able to cheer and help upward and onward many a burdened life.

We are glad to always have the pleasure of noting excellent interest in all the preaching meetings. The prayer services are not always so satisfactory, either in spiritual fervor or attendance. On the 3d Bro. R. Etzenhouser's effort in the line of archaeology was a success every way; and Brn. M. H. Bond and G. E. Harrington on the 7th at the preaching services held forth the gospel standard, to the joy of large audiences, and showed with boldness, also, the benefits accruing to a careful and critical study of the word of God, and of a critical examination of the erroneous theories extant here and everywhere. These brethren and all the elders cry out, as formerly in the days of Amos, "Shall there be evil in a city, and the Lord hath not known it?" "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, until he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets."

The services of the 14th also were grand and inspiring: the epigrams of Bro. T. W. Williams full of originality and advanced thought, on the religious extremes, credulity and skepticisms, and the beautiful metaphors of Bro. W. J. Haworth while discoursing, not upon "the negative qualities of the old morality" but upon "the constructive morality of the new Scriptures"—the message of peace, the gospel of love and good will to men.

Pastoral.

To the Missionaries, Saints and Friends of Mission No. 4; Greeting. Having been appointed as minister in general charge of the above named mission, which comprises as last year, Ohio, Western Pennsylvania, Virginia, West Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee and Kentucky, with the addition of Southern Indiana, I take this opportunity of thanking all those who in any way assisted to forward the cause of Christ during the year just past, and while those efforts may have been all we then felt disposed to perform, a just record of even the very least has been duly recorded in the archives of heaven, and whether they equal the widow's mite or otherwise it remains to be revealed when the Book of Life is opened. And while the credit account has been recorded for our good, we must not forget that with equal accuracy the debit column has been receiving the marks indicating our willful failures, and while that, into that Royal Bank on high has been to our credit deposited, where neither thieves, moth nor rust can lessen our account; with equal propriety we must solemnly consider the fact that from our debts nothing will be detracted but our own earnest efforts. Therefore that the blessings of God may more fully attend our every effort for good, let us, as far as lies in our power, make due reconciliation for all the mistakes of the past and in future "live at peace with all men, especially with the household of faith." Then with an earnest prayer to God for his Spirit to guide aright, and with a willing hand, pen, voice, and purse, let us move out in the work with a zeal as though this were our last year of time prior to the coming of the great King, and this will surely be a record year for the achievement of good.

The assistant ministers in charge, their fields and men over which they have especial care are:

That all those directly concerned may the more fully keep in touch with the workings of the branches and districts, it is required that upon the first day of July, October, January, and March, the branch presidents forward to the district presidents for the terms just past of four, three, three and two months respectively their branch report, who in turn will at once forward the same to the assistant minister in charge, from whom the minister in general charge desires a summarized report by the tenth of the above months. It will also be necessary for the district presidents to at the same time, forward a similar report to the secretary of the First Presidency, Pres. Frederick M. Smith, 630 South Chrysler street, Independence, Missouri.

The missionary force will forward to the assistant minister in charge, and he to the minister in general charge their reports at the times stated for the branches and districts respectively.

Bishop Becker will report his missionary labors directly to the minister in general charge.

ELDERS' COURTS.

The means of travel having become so facilitated that competent elders to compose courts are within easy reach of almost every branch in the mission, the missionaries are therefore respectfully requested to decline to act as members of a court until due consultation has been had with the minister in general charge.

DEBATES.

That our cause may at all times be championed by the best possible efforts, the priesthood of the mission will please refuse to sign propositions for public discussion, until suitable consultation has been had with the assistant or minister in general charge.

The building up of the kingdom of God, and the establishing of its righteousness, being our motto, it therefore behooves every son and daughter of the kingdom to so live in the sight of all men, that the love of Christ in our souls may so beam forth from our countenances that those who know us may, of a truth, say "It is good to be a Saint in latter days."

Considering the vastness of our mission field, the fewness of our force, and the importance of our message, is it asking too much of each and every individual who has accepted the honors of the priesthood, to do all that lies in his power to plant the gospel standard in as many new localities as his opportunities may afford?

CONFERENCES AND REUNIONS.

Those having charge of the same will please notify the minister in general charge of the time and place of such, so that he may arrange the labors of himself and men to make it possible to supply any needed assistance.

Elder C. Ed. Miller will have charge of the Kirtland Temple.

All blank reports may be purchased from the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

Having located my home in Chatham, Ontario, all mail should be addressed to me there.

R. C. RUSSELL,

Minister in General Charge of Mission No. 4.

CHATHAM, ONTARIO, May 8, 1911.

To the Saints and Friends of the Southern Missouri District; Greeting: Having again been appointed to labor in Southern Missouri, I kindly ask for your cooperation in this the Lord's work during this conference year. Let me hear from the local ministerial force; tell me what you are able and willing to do outside of branch work, not forgetting the fact that if located in a branch that it must be cared for first if you are in charge. I shall be glad to hear from all the scattered Saints and friends that desire preaching, and I, or some one of the missionary or local force in this field, will reach you as soon as possible. Let us all put forth a strong effort, first, last, and all the time, in all humility, with prayer and fasting. My home address till further notice will be 2225 Empire street, Joplin, Missouri. Write me.

J. C. CHRISTENSEN, District President.

To the Saints of the Central Oklahoma District, and All Whom it May Concern; Greeting: Having been placed in charge of the work of the Bishopric in the above district, I desire to cooperate with you in every possible way to make our work a success.

The hastening time is upon us; the outlook for our work was never so encouraging as at this time. The field is ripe for the harvest, and great responsibilities are coming to the people. This responsibility is not all resident with God's ministry, but each one is or should be alike interested. The servants of God are called upon to leave home and loved ones, and go forth as harbingers of the work of the restoration and salvation, which is their part of the service. The Saints who remain at home have their duties to perform, which duties are just as necessary in their performance as that of the ministry, and when performed in harmony with the spirit of the law, like blessings will accrue, one working in the temporal department, the other in the spiritual, and thus both labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.

And now, as there is urgent demand for temporal assistance, that the families of the ministry may be supplied while the husbands and fathers go forth to the battle, let all lovers of God, and his work, see that they perform their part of the service by assisting with their tithes and offerings, thus preventing the Lord's work from being hampered or hindered.

We have confidence in the Saints, knowing that many of them have responded nobly in the past, and many more will respond just as rapidly as they comprehend their duty. The Lord has declared that he desires a willing heart and mind. Great faith in both God and his servants is necessary for the performance and success of his work.

Counselor E. D. Bailey will labor in the Central District at least a part of his time, and will receive and receipt for tithes and offerings. Also Bro. William Aylor will collect and receipt. Funds and communications can also be sent to me direct at Independence, Missouri.

Respectfully submitted,

ELLIS SHORT,

Bishop of Spring River, Eastern and Western Oklahoma Districts.

also two sisters, Mrs. C. A. Hoff, of Logan, Utah, and Mrs. Henry H. Hoff, of Montpelier, Idaho, and six brothers, all in the West, to mourn her death. She was baptized February 17, 1881, by Elder William Gibson, at Pleasant Grove, Utah. Was the only one of her father's family that ever joined the Reorganized Church, although her parents were members of the church previous to the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. Sermon by Elder W. H. Garrett in Saints' church at Independence, Missouri. All who knew her spoke in the highest terms of her, both members and nonmembers. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

ROBINSON.—Mrs. Mary Jane Robinson died of apoplexy May 6, at the age of 63 years, 1 month, and 23 days. She was born in Lasalle County, Illinois. SHRADER.—Sr. Bertha Shrader, of 206 South Crystal street, Butte, Montana, died April 9, 1911. Her husband, F. Shrader, and her daughter, Miss Bernice B. Webb, with brother, sisters, and friends, mourn her departure; but they "weep not as those who have no hope." She was a good woman, dearly loved by those who knew her, and will be sadly missed in her home and also by her many friends. Exact dates of birth and baptism are not at hand; but she was 50 years old, and was baptized in Sacramento, California, in 1877. Her husband and two of her sisters (Mrs. Carrie Sund and C. Haskill) were with her in her last sickness and did all that loving hearts and willing hands could do to make her suffering bearable. The Presbyterian minister, who married her to Mr. Shrader, twelve years ago, officiated at the funeral, our ministers being away at our General Conference.

GUIDE TO HEALTH.

The secret of Health, of the greatest importance is the proper food. Klar's Good Health Flour contains all the elements to rebuild the entire body. The best white flour is only a carbonate or heat producing element and by the use of same as a food with no other diet, will destroy the life of a horse in 10 days, a dog in 21, and human being 35 days. You may say "I am eating white bread," and I can say "If you make it the staff of your life, you are not in perfect health." You can be your own judge. Why waste your money on something you imagine is food and brings sickness? We all make mistakes but if you dispense with improper diet you will recuperate very quickly. Will not the sick horse become healthy when turned into grain, his natural food? There is positively no curative power in drugs—don't overlook this, $1 to test my statement and get on the right road.

MARRIAGE AND CANADIAN COURTS.

It would seem from the inclosed clipping that there had come a direct issue between the courts of Quebec and the Catholic and Protestant religious denominations. This is not to be wondered at when we think of the strong conservatism with which the Catholic Church has, as ruling in the state, always exercised to prevent its membership becoming mixed up with other faiths, results of which might be the lessening of the hold of the Catholic Church upon its members thus married. The mixed marriages referred to, it is evident, are those marriages in which Catholic men or women marry companions of the Protestant denominations. It seems that the courts have decided that these marriages are not binding. This seems to be a mark of illiberality, and is both improper and unjust.

Our view is broader, although there is a little tinge of intolerance in the statement made by us, that while we do not refuse the right of members to be married by other authority than that of the church (or to marry outside the church), we deprecate this by saying that such persons choosing to so marry will be considered weak in the faith. This seems to be somewhat illiberal when construed with our saying at the start that all marriages contracted before persons are baptized into this church of Christ should be held sacred and fulfilled. This marks no difference between the binding quality of such marriages.

There is this largely in favor of the Catholic view of marriages and their sacred character in that they allow no divorces. No provision exists, that I am aware of, in the Catholic articles of faith, for persons to dissolve the marriage covenant. When once married they are married for all time or until separated by death. We recognize but one scriptural cause justifying the seeking for a legal separation, but have attached to this declaration a provision to the effect, that, conforming to a somewhat ordinary custom of those who seek divorces under statutory regulations, those who choose to ask for separation upon some other ground than adultery, for the sake of avoiding the effect that the obtaining of a divorce under that direct charge would have upon the children of the divorced couple, should there be any children, should the cause exist at the time of the divorce being obtained, should the question be raised against the party in church courts, these parties may affirm that the scriptural cause did exist, and this would be a bar to further prosecution or additional proceeding.

The form to be observed in the marriage ceremony as presented in the book of common prayer as used by the Episcopal Church, and we believe also found in the books of discipline of other denominations, makes use of the term at the close of the ceremony, "MAN and wife,"—a most lame and impertinent conclusion. We believe that this peculiar ending was the result of a disposition of those making these forms, to allow too loose an observance in marriage relations outside of England, originating years and years ago. It seems peculiar that so weak a conclusion as this, after the apparent solemnity sought to be placed upon the marriage ceremonies, to be impressive upon the parties and spectators to it should still be left in the church manual.

We commend the reading of this clipping to our eldership, as it may be advantageous to us in presenting our view upon the marriage question:

EPISCOPALIANS DEFY CANADIAN DECISIONS.

SAINT JOHN, N. B., May 11.—In defiance of the recent decisions of the courts in the province of Quebec, in which it was held that the marriage of a Roman Catholic performed by a minister of any other denomination than the Catholic was null and void, the Anglican, or Protestant Episcopal churches of the Dominion will read from every pulpit of the faith in Canada on Sunday, May 21, a pastoral letter written by Archbishop Matheson of Winnipeg, primate of all Canada, and Archbishop Hamilton of Ottawa, metropolitan of the ecclesiastical province of Canada, on the question of marriage between Catholic and non-Catholics.

The letter will deprecate the solemnization of such marriages, but will insist that when such marriages have been performed they are as binding as any marriage and can not be dissolved by the church of Rome or by any court upon the ground that they were void ab initio.

The letter will bring out the position of the Anglican Church on the question of divorce and lay renewed stress on the fact that under the canons of the church a divorcee can not be married so long as the other party to the original marriage lives. The clergy of the church are especially forbidden to marry anyone under these circumstances.

The province of Quebec is overwhelmingly Catholic in religion and politics; to such an extent is this true that judicial decisions of the character named, which set aside the laws of the Dominion, are of frequent occurrence there.—Kansas City Journal, May 12, 1911.

REPORTED DISCOVERY AND THEFT OF ANCIENT AND SACRED RELICS.

Great excitement has prevailed in Jerusalem of late over the reported theft of sacred relics from the Mosque of Omar. The Literary Digest, May 27, has this to say of the affair:

Dispatches from Jerusalem indicate that a diplomatic tangle involving England and America with the Turkish Government is impending, due to a rash foray in archaeology made by an Anglo-American syndicate of excavators. Reports, heightened perhaps by more or less wild surmise, credits this body with having dug beneath the Mosque of Omar for sacred relics with which the whole digging party decamped. The members of the expedition, with their prizes, embarked at Jaffa, says a dispatch to the New York Evening Post. "They went aboard a yacht which had been awaiting them, and set sail before the people of Jerusalem learned what they had done." The promoters of the expedition hoped to discover the Ark of the Covenant and the seven-branched candlestick of the old Hebrew temple, so it is reported from London, "but a Constantinople dispatch of to-day (May 4) says it is believed that the explorers found Solomon's crown, his sword, and his ring and an ancient manuscript of the Bible." The inhabitants of Jerusalem were thrown into a riotous frenzy by the reports, so we read, with this also:

"Azmy Bey, the Turkish governor, was mobbed on the streets for supposed complicity in the profanation, and was hooted as 'a pig.' The mosque has been closed and is closely guarded pending the arrival from Constantinople of officers of the Government, who will make an investigation.

"The expedition worked for two years on a large scale, beginning at the village of Siloam, which lies at the southeastern end of Jerusalem, on the southern slope of the Mount of Olives, overlooking the Valley of Kedron and the Pool of Siloam. The explorers are credited with having excavated a passage from the Pool of Siloam toward the place where once stood Solomon's Temple, built in 1012 B. C., pillaged and restored, and finally destroyed by Titus in 70 A. D. Failing to reach the relic sought in this manner, the explorers, according to the alleged confessions of the guards of the mosque, bribed the guards, entered the mosque, and, after digging on six nights, spirited away the treasures, 'the whereabouts of which,' says an Arabic paper, 'none knew except God and these English.'—Literary Digest, p. 1057, May 27, 1911."

The Truth, published in Jerusalem, May 3, comes to hand with an editorial comment that may be of interest, reflecting as it does local sentiment. The editorial is headed, "The sanctum sanctorum despoiled," and reads:

The nocturnal theft of sacred relics and trophies from one of the subterranean crypts in the Mosque of Omar is still the absorbing topic of the day.

The commotion and indignation which the incident provoked, principally amongst the Mohammedans, has not yet subsided.

In the heat of the moment, we abstained, and advisedly so, from reporting this momentous event in the columns of The Truth, that we might have ample time to make thorough investigation, and sift the conflicting rumors in order to lay before our readers, comparatively reliable information instead of consummate fables.

Howbeit, we ourselves are personally convinced that notwithstanding the determined efforts of certain interested individuals to minimize the affair, and reduce it to an insignificant item of "faits divers," it is in reality an episode of historic and vital importance, and we are positively sure that the articles abstracted, when once universally declared to be bona fide, will revolutionize all religious thought and infallibly solve many historic and philosophic problems.

It is moreover beyond the shadow of a doubt that the place of concealment of the valuable objects, so long coveted by every Jew, and so much enlarged upon in the Babylonian and Jerusalem Talmud,—yes, that spot was not even known to the sacerdotal authorities of the Sanhedrim of the Second Temple.

It appears, from what we have heard on excellent authority, that the illustrious antiquarians came to their work of exploration in Jerusalem with a definite plan and program, based upon ancient Hebrew documents, written in Samaritan characters—dating from the destruction of Solomon's Temple and from the subsequent exile of the ten tribes of Israel to Persia.

These documents are said to have been only recently unearthed in the north of Ireland, and it was by virtue of their definite indications and minute measurements that the exact hiding place of the precious paraphernalia of the First Temple could be precisely located.

The summit of Mount Moriah, where the Mosque of Omar now stands, having been considered by every successive ruler too sacred for any but the unshod foot to tread, it would never have entered the imagination of anyone to penetrate below its surface.

Moreover, the place supposed to have been ransacked and despoiled is the most unlikely receptacle for such inestimable treasures.

A gentleman who has lately left for Europe, and whose truthfulness we have no reason to doubt, confided to us, amongst other information, the nature of the explorer's quest.

The following is a part of the inventory enumerated in one of the discovered parchments:

1. The Stone Tables of the Law.
2. The Stone Bottle containing Manna.
3. The Urim and Thummim.
4. The Crown of David.
5. The Golden Sword of Solomon inscribed in Samaritan characters. "The sword of peace."
6. The Ark of the Covenant, overshadowed by the golden cherubims, containing the first tables of the law, (broken by Moses).
7. Sundry vessels connected with the service of the Golden Altar.

According to this gentleman, the Urim and Thummim is inlaid with twelve precious stones, each bearing the name of one of the twelve tribes of Israel.

The Sheiks who have been suspected of complicity in this dramatic and sacrilegious pillage, are incarcerated in prison, and are daily subjected to corporal castigation and raillery.

Rumors are being persistently circulated that several very high officials are also implicated in the affair.

A commission, composed of Ottoman dignitaries, specially appointed by Constantinople, has already arrived at Jerusalem in order to make full investigation, and award exemplary punishment.

VIVID RECOLLECTION VERSUS VIVID IMAGINATION.

From an obituary in a recent issue of the Deseret News we take the following: "Amasa Potter was born January 10, 1833. . . . He moved to Nauvoo with his parents in 1842, and became acquainted with the Prophet Joseph Smith and retained a vivid recollection of him and his teachings." It is from just such "vivid recollections" of precocious nine year olds and babes that Utah attempts to establish their claims in regard to Joseph Smith. Why not be honest in the matter, and call it "vivid imagination"?

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

In another department will be found a very interesting article, entitled "Administration; for whom?" We have read it with interest and profit, but come back to our former conviction, that administration should be accompanied by faith on the part of the one administered to as well as on the part of the elders. Both should have faith, if the best results are to be hoped for, except in those cases where abnormal conditions of body or mind or immature intellect prevent the one administered to from exercising faith. In the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, section 42, paragraph 12, a class of people is mentioned who "believe," yet do not have "faith to be healed" even when they are administered to. Such are to be nourished with mild food and herbs. Why must they be nourished with mild food and treated with herbs? Because they are not healed by administration? Why are they not healed? Because they have not sufficient faith. If faith on the part of the elders were all that is necessary, some elder of faith could be secured and these would be healed. But no exercise of faith on the part of the elder can entirely make up for their deficiency in that regard, and so they are not healed, and recourse must be had to other methods. In administration the blessing is not alone "according to the faith" of the sufferer, or yet according to the faith of the elders; it is according to the faith of all persons involved in the administration and in the blessing desired.

"But when Elder Hammond speaks of the United States granting powers under which persons who have contracted polygamous marriages prior to 1890 are entitled to take care of their wives and so on, the elder becomes a little CASE-HARDENED." This is the language of the Salt Lake Tribune, and we reproduce it because of the term case-hardened which is used. We think it eminently the proper word, but do not confine it to Elder Hammond alone. It strikes us as the proper adjective to apply to every Utah Mormon elder we have ever heard.

There is a movement on foot in New York among the wealthy Jews to establish a fund to aid the Jews in Abyssinia who are generally supposed to be the lost tribes of Israel. Dr. Jacques Faitlovitch recently delivered an illustrated lecture on the subject in New York City. He represented that these people are satisfied with the reign of Emperor Menelik, but that their co-religionists are constantly being proselyted by Christian missionaries, and they are calling on the Jews of the world to help save this rapidly disappearing remnant of their race in that part of the world. Up to a few years ago the Falashas believed they were the only Jews left in the world, they having escaped to that corner of the globe after the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar. This tribe has lived in Abyssinia for twenty-five hundred years and are yet considered as foreigners.

A schism has occurred in the Orthodox Church of Holy Russia which, supported by the Czar, promises to begin a reform movement of that church. A monk, Father Ilidor, preached what the Holy Synod declared was heresy. The synod issued an order of banishment, but the monk went instead to Saint Petersburg and laid his case before the Czar. His Majesty authorized Ilidor to return to Tsaritsin and officiate at the Easter services. This has resulted in a rupture in the church. Ilidor is supported by thousands of the church and by some of the prominent bishops. They regard him as a martyr and a revivalist, saved from death by the intervention of the Czar as an instrument in God's hand. Bishop Hermogen has sided with Ilidor, although the synod had at first commissioned him to expostulate with the monk.

The Presbyterian General Assembly in session at Atlantic City will be characterized by heresy trials. President Brown and Prof. Adams Brown, both of Union Theological Seminary, are charged with lack of orthodoxy in recent writings concerning the virgin birth and the resurrection of Christ. Fifteen years ago the General Assembly passed a law forbidding presbyteries to receive candidates for the ministry who were not graduates of seminaries under the control of the General Assembly. This was aimed at Union, and it was from this seminary that the Briggs and McGiffert heresy cases came. In another form the same question was up last year, but the protesters were thrown out of court. They failed to prove their case, because they had no authentic report of answers of Union Seminary men in the presbytery. They will now provide a means of having these answers hereafter reported verbatim. This is looking forward to preventing Union Seminary graduates from getting into the Presbyterian ministry.

This is the year for the seventeen year locusts to make their appearance. It is expected that considerable devastation will take place in New Jersey, New York, and Pennsylvania. On their last visit to New York the swarms sometimes literally obscured the sun, and their larvæ when hatched burrowed into the ground where they have been waiting for the seventeen years to pass.

"Materialism and paganism will ruin this country if we are not careful." These were the words of Theodore Roosevelt at a recent meeting of ministers of all denominations in New York City. "That is our greatest danger to-day, and it is the first duty of you gentlemen to get together and take steps to remedy this condition. You must do it regardless of your creeds or your denominations." In talking of the duties of the clergymen he said they should get together for the common good. It appeared that he gave less consideration to creed than he did to the good accomplished. "Many will not preach against labor in spite of the fact that labor may be in the wrong; but I say to you, let capital understand that a thief is a thief, and let the labor leader know that murder is murder, and that murder is all the worse when done for such a cause."

Miss Kane Umezawa has the distinction of being the first Japanese girl to be graduated from the New York School of Deaconesses. She is from Tokio. She expects to return and teach at a parochial school there. Her experience has been pleasant, she says, and she thinks the American girl students are the brightest and best informed she ever met.

"All churches have creeds, written or unwritten. . . . The Presbyterian Church has its creed—the confession of faith—which sets forth in an orderly way the doctrines taught in the Bible as understood by us. We ask our ministers in their ordination vows to pledge their fidelity thereto, and while they may be permitted some elasticity in the interpretation of the phrase 'containing the system of doctrine taught in the Holy Scriptures' there should be no juggling with the phraseology and the acceptance should be sincere. And, further, the highest judiciary of the church must be the final court for the declaration of the necessary and essential articles of faith. Such a declaration was made by the general assembly one year ago.

"The Presbyterian Church has always stood for the sovereignty of God, for the Bible as the only infallible rule of faith and practice, and for the salvation through Jesus Christ, who died for our sins and rose again. These truths, and others in harmony therewith, have been the teaching of the church from the days of the apostle down to the present hour." The foregoing is from the annual sermon of the retiring moderator, Rev. C. E. Little, of the Presbyterian Church at its General Assembly at Atlantic City. We have referred elsewhere to the trouble brewing between the General Assembly and Union Theological Seminary. It will be seen that the Reverend Little is striking at this seminary in the quotation given.

Low salaries is given as a reason why there are so many empty pulpits in the Congregationalist churches in New York State. This is the findings of a committee appointed by representatives of that church in convention at Lockport. The average salary is five hundred dollars, according to the report of the committee.

Bishop Codman of Maine extols the value of war. He says, "Without it a nation would become effeminate, morally and physically. Disarmament is a mistake. War has developed noble soldiers, noble statesmen, and noble women."

A report of a committee to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church at Atlantic City shows that there are over two thousand vacant pulpits in the land among their churches, nearly three hundred more than one year ago.

The HERALD is in receipt of a very interesting mission letter from Elder W. H. Mannering, dated Torreon, Mexico, May 24. Brother and Sister Mannering and Brother and Sister Pender have had a taste of real war. Two battles were fought in close proximity to Torreon, and finally the Insurrectos entered the city, a detachment of them took possession of the house where our brethren were lodging, and converted the upper story into a fort while the occupants were lodged in the lower story. Flying bullets gave additional and unwelcome ventilation to the living rooms. The Federalists were finally driven from the town and order was restored. The letter will appear next week.

Alone, we can do little. Separated, we are the units of weakness; but aggregated, we become batteries of power. Agitate, educate, organize—these are the deathless watchwords of success. The fingers of the hands can do little alone, but correlated into a fist they become formidable. The plank borne here and there by the sport of the wave is an image of imbecility, but frame a thousand planks of heart of oak into a hull, put in your engine with its heart of fire, fit out your ship, and it shall cross at a right angle those same waves to the port it has purposed to attain. We want all those like-minded with us, who would put down the dramshop, exalt the home, redeem manhood, and uplift womanhood, to join hands with us for organized work according to a plan.—Francis E. Willard.

Elders' Note-Book

MORE ON MARK 16.

A late HERALD contains a contribution in reference to C. F. Russell and Mark 16.

I do not know but what my attention was first called to the position that the latter part of Mark 16 is an interpolation, when many years ago I was reading the books, Notes on Ingersoll, and Tactics of Infidels, by Father Lambert. I have not the books by me, and I forget in which one the issue is raised—probably the former. The infidel states the claim made by some of the clergy that said passage was interpolated. The learned priest makes his clear-cut reply, citing his authorities in refutation of the claim.

Recently I have been reading the "Russell-White Debate" which took place in Cincinnati, Ohio, February 23-28, 1908, and published by Mr. Rowe, of the Christian Leader. Russell is the "Millennial Dawnist" and White is of the "anti" wing of Disciples. The consideration of the same question pertaining to Mark 16, arises between these two polemics, C. F. Russell affirming the interpolation theory and L. S. White denying it. (I tell you these Russells are critics!)

On page 150 Mr. White observes: "But I am aware of the fact that Elder Russell teaches that the last part of the sixteenth chapter of Mark is spurious, and I believe he intends to bring that up this evening, at a time when I have no reply; so I will anticipate him by saying that this preaching, such as he does on that line, is more inclined to make infidels than Christians. He says the scholarship of the world says that the last part of the sixteenth chapter of Mark is an interpolation. I deny it. The scholarship of the world says no such thing. Here is the American Revised Version, standard edition, that does not put it in as an interpolation; here is the Emphatic Diaglott that does not put it in as an interpolation; here is the critical Greek and English Testament that does not put it in as an interpolation; here are the Living Oracles that do not put it in as an interpolation."

Russell replies, page 154: "These are the authorities for my statement that the passage in Mark 16: 9 to the end of the chapter is an interpolation. This is the Holy Bible, American Standard Version. It says: 'The two oldest Greek manuscripts and some other authorities omit from verse 9 to the end.'

"The Emphatic Diaglott says: 'From this verse (9), to the end of the chapter, is wanting in the Vatican manuscript and in many other ancient copies.'

"New Testament, Revised Version, says (verse 9 to the end): 'The two oldest Greek manuscripts and some other authorities omit from verse 9 to the end. [Applause.]"

On page 179 Mr. White comes back as follows: "The last part of Mark, from the 9th to the 20th verses, inclusive, he teaches is an interpolation, that it is a spurious scripture. I presented to him the Authorized Version, the American Revised Version, standard edition, the Revision of 1881, the Living Oracles, and the Emphatic Diaglott, together with the Critical Greek Testament, with the original Greek in itself, and asked him to show from one of these where either of them repudiated the latter part of the sixteenth chapter of Mark as an interpolation. And he read a statement from two or three of them where the Vatican manuscripts and some other old manuscripts omitted the latter part of the sixteenth chapter of Mark, and his brethren seemed perfectly satisfied over it. Did you know that the Vatican manuscripts and some other manuscripts omit the entire Book of Revelation, together with some other parts of the New Testament?"

Let me add that the book of Hebrews in Codex Vaticanus (Vatican MS.) of 1475 extends only to the 14th verse of chapter 9, and Hebrews has thirteen chapters.

Of course the point in contention between Messrs. Russell and White was the essentiality of water baptism, which is taught in Mark 16: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Russell found it convenient in order to wipe away essentiality to wipe away the passage. I wonder if the Disciple man would be so loud about genuineness or authenticity if he were arrayed against one of our men who stood for "these signs shall follow," etc., as he stood for "He that believeth," etc.? Or, would he play Russell, as some have?

ADMINISTRATIONS; FOR WHOM?

Administrations; for whom? John 5: 39: "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life." Matthew 24: 4: "And Jesus answered and said unto them, Take heed that no man deceive you."

These two texts were of the greatest importance to the people in the time of our Savior, the admonition probably was of a specific character in the first instance spoken of, but the first part is just as requisite in our day and especially to our people, as at any age in the past.

"Search the Scriptures," and coupled with this comes the reason for a careful search. Jesus, knowing that many false ideas would be foisted on the world, gave the warning voice which was reiterated by his ministry later, "Take heed that no man deceive you."

Yes, says one, those admonitory words were given for a cause back in the early ages; but what has it to do with the subject as outlined here?

Just this, my friend; the world at the present day does little or less thinking on religious matters than they did back in the days of Christ and his apostles. It is estimated that but a fraction of one per cent of the human family does any thinking in regard to religious affairs. They have become confirmed imitators or copyists, and in this deplorable condition, should the leader make a mistake, the whole line of imitators make the same mistake.

But, says one, the elders of our church are not guilty of mistakes; they are led by the Spirit of God, and the Spirit leadeth into all truth and righteousness.

Very true that the eldership, when speaking under the direct inspiration of the Almighty, are less liable to lead into error; but alas, how often we have those speaking who have not this all important inspiration at all times.

Then you contend that the eldership are not safe instructors?

Yes, sir; providing we accept those instructions regardless of what is written.

Jesus never intended that we should open our mouths and swallow every form of argument that would be presented, hence he says, "Search the Scriptures." And the Prophet Isaiah had the same idea in mind when he said, "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isaiah 8: 20.

Well says one, is there any scripture that you know that has been misquoted by our elders?

Yes, sir; there is one comes to my mind now, that almost every elder misquotes; and it changes the whole sense of the word, and puts a premium on ignorance.

It is in regard to doubting Thomas as recorded in John 20: 26 to 29. Especially is the 29th verse made to read incorrectly, and what is added is emphasized more particularly.

They quote it as follows: "Jesus saith unto him, Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed; but more blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed."

I never could understand why a person should be blessed with a double portion because they believed without evidence. This leads me to investigate and I discover that there is no such statement, much as some would like to have me believe it, for it reads: "Jesus saith unto him, Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed: blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed."

This signifies that they were both blessed, but not the undoubting any more or greater than the doubting.

It seems to me that the very safeguard of our institution demands a searching of not only the Scriptures, but the argumentative productions of all the teachers of the people.

It is this everlasting inquisitiveness that has led me to investigate the teachings or instruction of our representatives, and from what I discovered in my research, has led to the heading of this article.

Administrations; for whom? Many, many times I have witnessed the elders perform this ordinance, and I have heard them say: "According to your faith be it unto you."

This led me to wonder; must a man have faith to be healed before being administered to?

Is it right to make their healing in our prayers just in proportion to their faith? Are the sick the only ones who are to exercise faith for restoration to health?

With these thoughts in mind I begun an investigation and I discovered there was more than one form of healing.

Firstly, Spontaneous healing, applicable to those who have faith to be healed.

Secondly, A spontaneous healing done by Jesus and his disciples apart from administration. "According to your faith be it unto you," and,

Thirdly, Administration for those who have not faith to be healed.

In conversation with one of our elders, he said the Bible was filled with instances where Jesus administered and said: "According to your faith be it unto you"; but his saying so did not make it so, for the truth of the matter is that no such statement appears in the Bible.

The instances where these words are used or words akin to it are: Matthew 8: 13; 9: 2, 22, 29, 30; Mark 5: 34; 7: 29; 10: 52; Luke 5: 13, 24; 7: 10; 8: 48; 17: 19; John 4: 50.

But in not one of these cases is there the least suggestion that hands were laid on anyone; the healings were spontaneous.

Jesus and his apostles performed other healings apart from these mentioned, but the particular order of administration is not mentioned; these are recorded in Matthew 9: 35; 12: 22; 15: 30; 19: 2; 21: 14; Luke 9: 11; 14: 4; Acts 5: 15; Book of Mormon, Book of Nephi 8: 2, small edition.

And those actually done by the laying on of hands are three times by Jesus, Mark 6: 5; 8: 23; Luke 13: 12, 13, and two other instances by Ananias in Acts 9: 15 and one by Paul, Acts 28: 8.

Now the first instance that we have of healing by the laying on of hands recorded in the Bible is a case where the faith of the people was at a very low ebb, as is recorded, "And he could there do no mighty work, save that he laid his hands upon a few sick folk, and healed them."

The second instance even the Master seems to have had to repeat the administration the second time before the results were obtained.

And the third was an instantaneous healing, but in none of these cases does it speak of any great display of faith on the part of the individual.

The one instance by Ananias was in relation to Paul who at this time was not in the church, just how much faith he had in the ordinance it does not say, but from his late experience it is to be supposed he had very little.

The last instance was that by Paul, where he laid his hands on the father of Publius and healed him.

These cases are seemingly in the same category as those spoken of as being performed by the Christ; no great display of faith on the part of the sick individual.

Now going to the law as given to the church in the latter days we read: Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12: "And whosoever among you are sick, and have not FAITH to be healed, but believe, shall be nourished with all tenderness with herbs and mild food, and that not by the hand of an enemy. And the elders of the church, two or more, shall be called, and shall pray for, and lay their hands upon them in my name; and if they die, they shall die unto me, and if they live, they shall live unto me."

Now I notice particularly that this mentions that administration is for a class of people who have not faith to be healed, signifying that if they have faith to be healed that the administration would be unnecessary, though not forbidden.

Again we read in Doctrine and Covenants 119: 9: "Bear the burdens of body of which the spirit of healing from the Lord in faith, or the use of that which wisdom directs does not relieve or remove, and in cheerfulness do whatever may be permitted you to perform that the blessing of peace may be upon all. Amen."

This again gives us to understand that some will not have faith to be healed. They have complied with the law, been administered to, but the spirit of healing has not come; it is like the former, if they live they live unto the Lord, or if they die they die unto the Lord.

Again in Doctrine and Covenants 125: 15: "Pray over the sick, anoint them with oil, as commanded in the law, and leave them in my hands, that the Spirit may deal with them according to my wisdom."

These are plainly individuals who have not faith to be healed. They believe in the ordinance, however, and in being administered to they are fulfilling the commandment.

There is not a doubt in my mind but what many of the sicknesses which come upon us are from a direct disobedience of the laws of health and of God, and disobedience is sin.

There are but two ordinances in the church, that

I know of, through which sins are forgiven; one is baptism and the other is administration (James 5: 15); and the ones most likely to disobey, commit sin, and hence be made sick, are those who have not a superabundance of faith, and it seems to me that primarily administration is for them, sins being forgiven through the ordinance, and in this sense they are cleansed and brought under the direct influence of the Spirit of God; hence if they live or die they are the Lord's.

Oh, well, says one, the Scriptures say the prayer of faith shall save the sick.

Granted; but who is it that should offer the prayer of faith? This seems to be the key to the whole situation, and the exact place where the faith should be centered. Let us see what the Scriptures have to say with reference to it.

Mark 16: 17, 18 says: "And these signs shall follow them that believe: In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." Book of Mormon, small edition, Mormon 4: 7; same thing.

Now we all know the laity have no authority to lay on hands. Who, then, does it mean,—the elders? I never heard of any of the laity casting out devils; who, then, does it mean,—the elders?

Again in James 5: 14, 15: "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them (the elders) pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him."

Now, who shall pray over him? The elders; therefore the prayer of faith is in the elders, and not necessarily the sick individual.

Doctrine and Covenants 66: 5, admonition to the elders, "lay your hands upon the sick and they shall recover."

Doctrine and Covenants 83: 11: "In my name they (the elders) shall do many wonderful works; in my name they shall cast out devils; in my name they shall heal the sick; in my name they shall open the eyes of the blind, and unstop the ears of the deaf; and the tongue of the dumb shall speak; and if any man shall administer poison unto them, it shall not hurt them."

Doctrine and Covenants 23: 6: (The elders) "Require not miracles, except I shall command you; except casting out devils; healing the sick;" etc.

Doctrine and Covenants 34: 3: (The elders) "And whoso shall ask it in my name, in faith, they shall cast out devils; they shall heal the sick," etc.

Doctrine and Covenants 107: 30: (The elders) "He shall heal the sick, he shall cast out devils," etc.

Again we find that among the gifts given to the eldership it is specifically mentioned, Moroni, 10: 1: "And to another, the gifts of healing by the same Spirit."

Doctrine and Covenants 46: 7: "And again, to some it is given to have faith to be healed, and to others it is given to have faith to heal."

From these citations (and they are everything we have in the three books) we would conclude that administration is primarily for the individual not blessed with strong faith; that the main spring of faith should be centered in the elders administering, that they should not say according to your faith be it unto you, but according to our faith we rebuke the disease, leaving it with God to deliver, and the eldership should live such pure, consecrated lives that this power should be resident in them. It is the gift of God to the eldership.

Healings are spoken of sixty-nine times in the Bible, four times in the Book of Mormon, and twelve times in the Doctrine and Covenants; and in every instance the healing faith by administration indicates the eldership as the possessor.

"Search the Scripture, take heed that no man deceive you."

VARIOUS PHASES OF THE FINANCIAL LAW.

An address by Bishop E. L. Kelley, followed by questions and answers. Being the report of a "round table" conducted by Bishop Kelley, at Lamoni, Iowa, Sunday evening, October 16, 1910. Reported by Annie E. Allen.

If I understand properly, this is a question meeting, and it is the audience that furnishes what may be brought out during the exercises. We have quite a number of questions already placed upon the stand, and if there are any others that any may wish to bring, they may do so now.

The religious question, from the standpoint that our Savior presented it to the world, is not simply a matter of formal worship, but has to do with the actions of men and women in this life; and it bears upon these actions, whether they relate to duties to be performed of a spiritual nature; that is, of prayer and praise, in connection with what are termed the ordinances of the church, or whether they relate to the temporal work of life, such as things which come into our hands of a temporal character.

I think it is a proposition in which you will all agree with me, that so far as the people are concerned in this life, they are not absolutely owners of anything. Whatever comes into our hands we are stewards of rather than owners. Jesus certainly taught this principle in the 16th of Luke, and what he taught we can safely rely on at all times. We are stewards under our heavenly Father for whatever we have, and being stewards, when we leave this life we certainly must render an account of the stewardship when we pass to the other side.

The principle or fact that we must render an account of the stewardship when we pass to the other side, calls to my mind another thought that is found in the record which I will read, showing that the people should render their accounts as we move along in this life.

For verily thus saith the Lord, It is expedient in me for a bishop to be appointed unto you, or of you unto the church, in this part of the Lord's vineyard; and verily in this thing ye have done wisely, for it is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship, both in time and in eternity. For he who is faithful and wise in time is accounted worthy to inherit the mansions prepared for them of my Father.—Doctrine and Covenants 72: 1.

Now, I know the thought often comes to the mind, we may render our accounts when we go over on the other side; but if our heavenly Father has provided in his law that we may render our accounts here when we have the things in our hands, so that we may pay or settle the account if against us, is it not better to do so than to wait until we are out of the stewardship and then have to render the account? If you will but reason for a moment, you will see that this is the better way, besides being God's order. Certainly all through the Bible, and in all the revelations in the world's history that we know anything about, it is held proper that we should render our accounts here. When men and women who fail to do this, go upon the other side and are brought face to face with the proposition, then they will wish they had answered or worked out the account before they ever went there.

Better to have the account rendered here. That is the reason Abraham rendered his account, and he is referred to in the Scriptures as being the "father of the faithful." If we are in Christ, the apostle says, "then we are Abraham's seed": and he rendered his account when he was here. So we follow along and find that Jesus rendered his account when he was here. He came to John in beginning his work and asked to fulfill the law, and John forbade him. Jesus said, "Forbid me not, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." He proposed to render his account, fulfill the law, as he went along. We should render our accounts not only as stewards of the goods that come into our hands, but of our conduct in life. Men and women can not afford to appear on the other side without having rendered an account as to their conduct while here. This is a matter about which the apostle treats when he says: "Some men's sins go beforehand to judgment." We have the opportunity to render the account here and our sins are blotted out. "Others follow after." Do we want ours to follow after?

This evening's lesson, as I understand it, is more particularly with reference to the things that belong to this world, known as the riches of this world, and I suppose that the questions this evening will relate more particularly to that phase of stewardships.

Q: Do you understand that those who refuse to comply with the law of consecration as taught by the church must go to hell? and that those who fail to become members of the Order of Enoch will miss celestial glory?

A. Let us base the answer to these upon a different inquiry. I understand this, that no one goes to the good place who does not conform to the law of Christ. The law of Christ is that we shall fulfill the law by complying with our duties in things that pertain to temporalities just as well as in other things. Jesus said of this, Luke 11: 42, "These ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone." That is what Jesus said about it. He did not teach one part of the law applicable to the people and another part not applicable: but in speaking of tithes and offerings and other duties under the law, he said: "These ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."

Now, this is a part of his law as given to the people by him, and not only taught by him in the instance we have here, but in many. Note the instance to which I referred this morning, showing that the father of the faithful in Christ, Abraham, went to the keeper of the storehouse of God, Melchisedec, and paid his tithes and offerings. I will turn and read it. Abraham was a preacher of the gospel himself. He would not have conformed to this part of the law if it had not been necessary for him to do so:

And men having this faith, coming up unto this order of God, were translated and taken up into heaven. And now, Melchisedec was a priest of this order; therefore he obtained peace in Salem, and was called the Prince of peace. And his people wrought righteousness, and obtained heaven, and sought for the city of Enoch which God had before taken, separating it from the earth, having reserved it unto the latter days, or the end of the world; and hath said, and sworn with an oath, that the heavens and the earth should come together; and the sons of God should be tried so as by fire. And this Melchisedec, having thus established righteousness, was called the king of heaven by his people, or, in other words, the King of peace.—Genesis 14: 32-36, Inspired Translation.

Now I presented the thought this morning that the object of all complying with the temporal law was to establish a system of righteousness by which we would grow in faith, become stronger morally, socially, and spiritually, as well as physically, thus becoming better all the time, that we may arrive at a higher condition than we as yet have, or any of the peoples of the world for the last two thousand years have reached. I am not satisfied with the kind of religion the world has manifested the past two thousand years. Are you? Are we not striving for something higher and better? Will not any denomination tell you that?

You will say, It was good enough in Christ's time. That is true. The principles were good enough if the people had continued to live according to them. But the apostle, speaking with reference to carrying out the principles, said,

Let no man deceive you by any means [that the day of Christ is at hand]: for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition."

The man of sin was revealed afterwards and the people of God were overcome, until it was referred to in the letter to Timothy, they had only a dead form left.

But I will finish reading the account of Abraham:

And he [Melchisedec] lifted up his voice, and he blessed Abram, being the high priest, and the keeper of the storehouse of God; him whom God had appointed to receive tithes for the poor. Wherefore, Abram paid unto him tithes of all he had, of all the riches which he possessed, which God had given him more than that which he had need. And it came to pass, that God blessed Abram, and gave unto him riches, and honor, and lands for an everlasting possession; according to the covenant which he had made, and according to the blessing wherewith Melchisedec had blessed him.—Genesis 14: 37-40, Inspired Translation.

I want to call your attention to two prominent characters in history; one character is recognized in Abraham; the other character in his nephew Lot. These two persons came up out of Egypt well to do in this world's goods. Each one rich in silver and worldly goods. There began a strife between the herdmen of these individuals. Abraham went to the nephew and said to him, "Lot, we are brethren; there should be no trouble between us; there can be no falling out here. There is plenty of room in the world; you take your choice; if you go to the right hand, I will go to the left; if you go to the north, I will go to the south; just look about you and choose for yourself, and what is left, I will take." That was one character, the character that God afterwards blessed. God did not call and so specially bless Abraham until after he had proven himself a great man with such a proposition of unselfish adjustment with Lot.

Lot is a different character altogether; he stood up and heard the proposition, and straightway he looks to the banks of the Jordan, and saw that it was very rich, like the garden of the Lord, the rich fields to be seen as they come up out of Egypt: well watered: and Lot set about and chose all the good land, and all the good grass and water, and pitched his tent in the rich valleys, and Abraham went up into the hill country. And that night, after Abraham had gone into the hill country, after he had made peace, a peace that he was willing to sacrifice everything for if demanded, the Lord appeared to him and said, "Thou shalt no longer be called Abram, but Abraham. Arise and look to the east and the west, to the north and the south; and all the land that you see I will give to you for an everlasting inheritance." Lot went off, and it was not long before he went into Sodom; and not long before he was driven out of Sodom and went over the hill into the little town of Zoar, and his life there was discreditable. In his selfishness manifested with Abraham he was willing to take everything that was offered; willing to select all the good ground; all the fine building spots, the good water and good grass; and when you see a man or a woman, a brother or a sister, come to one of the stakes of Zion, or Zion itself, seeking to get all the best that is before him, make up your minds that he will not be satisfied very long.

That is not the kind of principle to manifest; the kind of principle that will please the Lord is to give your brother the first opportunity to make a selection. If we can not rise to such a situation as that, then we have not attained the place where we are fit to meet the people of Enoch when they shall return.

So I answer with reference to this question, that nobody will receive the commendation of God when he goes on the other side who has not kept the commandments of God, and he should have rendered his account here.

Q. If a brother is working by the day for a living, having no surplus or tithing, what must he do to become a member of the Order of Enoch, or how does he become a member of the order?

A. Of course, you have no Order of Enoch in this stake at the present time. There is a proposition before the people now for the organization of an order, and they may call it that, and they may name it something else. It is an order of benevolence. I believe the indications are that such an organization is wanted in this place, but the people will have the right to name and say what it should be, and to pass upon the principles that enter into the order.

The order, known as the United Order of Enoch, of Independence, provides this, that any person not a minor who has complied with the law of Christ, both in things relating to what is termed spiritual duties as set out in the Scriptures, also the law of Christ as relates to duties in temporal things of which he is a steward in this life; in other words, shall have rendered an account of his stewardship to the proper officer set in the church for this work, may become a member. And a person who may not have anything in the world must render his account just the same as though he had. The member who has not anything ought to render his account and file his statement, because he is one we are to look after. Are we simply to render our account when we have something to turn over? Oh, no. But we are to look after the conditions of the people and see who are needy, so that when they show a proper record, and are willing to live according to the proper law, they can receive the help they need.

Let me give you an instance. A short time, about a week before I started to California, the first of August, a gentleman in Kansas City, a good church member, said he was about to lose his home in that city. He would lose it unless he could raise so much money by the next Monday. He never was a member of the Order of Enoch. He wrote over to me and said he had to have so much money, and the banks would not then loan him the money. A man doing good work in his business, but he could not borrow the money then. And there are people in this world, if they find a man in hard circumstances, and they can make something out of it, they are willing to do it, just the same as Lot was willing to take all the good land. I wrote back to him that I thought we would try and find some way to keep him from losing his home, and encouraged him to do the best he could. Saturday before Monday he sent his daughter over to call my attention to it, so it would not be overlooked, as he had only until Monday and had not been able to make arrangements. The treasurer of the Order of Enoch was in my office in the course of an hour afterwards. I stated the case to him, and said, This is a good time to show forth your works in helping the needy. He said, Is he a member of the order? I said, No; it is not required under the law that he should be a member: the order is for helping the children of God who are in need, and we would not refuse to help a good Methodist or Baptist or anyone else who was in actual need. We would not say, You can not have anything because you do not belong to our church. I said, What can you do? He said, Well, I guess we can send it over to him. I said, You will get your money back in due time. He said, I will send a check right over. The man got the money and saved his home. He never had and does not now belong to the Order of Enoch. That is one thing the order is doing, and this shows why every man in the church should render his account if he has not done so, whether he has anything or not.

So it does not make any difference whether you are working by the day, if you just so state; if you fulfill that part of the law. The Lord said, "And it shall come to pass that everyone that cometh up to the land of Zion [or one of her stakes] shall lay all things before the bishop:" shall make a statement of what they have; the same as you would lay before the bank in which you want to borrow $500. They would throw down a special form and say, What is your property? what is your indebtedness? and it is proper, too, for them to do so. When the Lord says these things shall be laid before the bishop, some begin to ask, Will we not have any control over it? Answer, Just the same control you had before.

God does not ever ask anything unreasonable of any of his children. So men and women who imagine these unreasonable things are imagining something that our heavenly Father has never asked of them, and I find a good many of these imaginations as I go along. When in southern California, as I presented this matter, they asked questions, and some said afterwards, "Well, we confess we have been afraid; but we never understood it before."

Q. Can we do more good in the Order of Enoch than out of it if we are neither poor or needy nor have more than we need? Where is the line?

A. No; it is possible you can do just as much good outside as inside, and it is left with each individual whether you should join or not. Do not think you must have some man to direct you all the time. Go and present it to the Lord and ask him to direct you. If I had not lived that way, I would not be a preacher this evening. If you want direction as to whether you should join, just make it a subject of prayer, and remember that you are a steward of God and that you must answer to him; not simply answer to his servant in this world. "Everyone shall give an account of himself unto God," is the language of the apostle.

Q. Does the church in its instructions relative to consecration, teach that those of the membership of the church who have neither a business nor an income, but who possess a little are required to make a consecration?

A. Nobody is required to make a consecration unless they have something to consecrate; but everybody is required to set forth what they have, make an inventory; lay all things before the bishop; if he has only a couple of towels to dry his face when he washes, he ought to set forth that; and if he does not have a wash basin, we would try and furnish him that, because we think everyone ought to have a chance at the wash basin. And if he will do that, simply lay the matter before those who have charge and direction in the things pertaining to temporalities, so that we may know when application is made whether the party is in need, and that it is proper to help, and that we may know, too, whether he is an industrious man, not idling away his time, that he is doing the best he can and not given to squandering his means so that he would not squander what is placed in his hands.

Let me tell you what I did last spring. I requested the bishop in San Francisco to hand sixty dollars to a young man that many know in this town, if I would speak his name. He had been complaining that he could not get means to go to his wife and children who lived in the East. The bishop gave him the sixty dollars, and told him he could have a ticket as soon as he could get ready to go. He saw him in a few days afterwards and met him, and the fellow was begging ten cents to buy something to eat. The bishop asked, What did you do with what I gave you? and he said, Oh, it just went, that is all. Such an individual as that we can not treat as one who would do right. I wrote afterwards to the bishop not to give him any more; a man that will do that in face of the fact that he could go and help his own family, stands in the position of the one the apostle speaks of: "He that will not provide for his own, and especially those of his own house, is worse than an infidel," having already "denied the faith."

Thus parties should file their statements, and if they have anything to consecrate, the decision will be made by themselves first, and they then present the matter to the bishop, who acts upon the matter, and he gives his statement upon it. If they disagree, then it is referred to twelve disinterested parties of the church, and these twelve pass upon it, and say whether the bishop or the individual is right. If they decide with the bishop the person making the report will pay, or he can not come within the rule. If they decide with the party, the bishop stands back and the party pays the amount he himself fixed.

Q. Is it compatible with the revelations of God as given to the Church of Christ, that there should be established or organized more than one United Order of Enoch, of equal authority, to operate and transact business in the church?

A. We discussed that to some extent this afternoon before the other meeting. We think this question proper, for if this is a stake, an order should be established in this stake; and since the organization of the church in its corporate capacity is here, I do not see why the Order of Enoch ought not to be in harmony with the general organization of the church. So there is no use, so far as I am concerned, in discussing that. If anyone thinks I would have a preference on account of locality, I do not know that such a thing has ever entered into my mind in performing my work; and in preparing the Articles of Incorporation that will be presented here, whatever is given to us in that line will be presented, and whatever of wisdom is given will be presented, that all may pass upon it.

Q. Is there any authoritative commandment of God that church members are to turn over to the Bishop of the church all their earthly possessions—chattels and real estate?

A. Once a man appeared to Jesus and inquired what to do, and we read the statement of Jesus, "Go and sell all that you have and give to the poor, and come and follow me." Let me turn and read the statement as it is in the law, as given to the church:

If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them.

Some people interpret that to mean all their property. We say that is not a correct interpretation of it. Christ did not teach that these individuals should turn over everything they had and not keep anything for their wives and children. That is not the proper reading. Jesus in talking to his ministry, sent them out without purse or scrip, and when he talked to them that way, he left the multitude and took his disciples and went up into a mountain, and after he was sat he taught them. But he did not tell the multitude to take no thought for the morrow.

Parties must turn over what is specified in the law, and the law specifies that you "lay all things before the bishop," and that which you do not have need of is termed surplus, and you should turn that in; and what you would have need of is that which would make you a living here in this life, your stewardship; and everything you can do without you ought to be willing to turn over to the work of Christ. Everybody has a right to his stewardship. He should render an account of the stewardship from time to time.

Q. Is the organization at Independence called the Order of Enoch, in fact the Order of Enoch as outlined in the Doctrine and Covenants, sections 77, 81, 93, and 101? If not, will there at any future time be such an order established?

A. The Order of Enoch as organized at Independence is a helping order for the benefit of the poor, and that is what the Order of Enoch was that is referred to in these sections. The organization that is referred to in these sections was never had on this continent. These are revelations showing the order in Enoch's time. We have the most complete Order of Enoch that has ever been filed in this country, so far as the incorporated articles are concerned; the most complete statement of the articles of the order that was ever filed in our time. The most complete thing that has ever been written out to our knowledge. What we had done has been recorded and is in accordance with the laws of the land. The revelation instructed Bishop Partridge that he should found his organization in harmony with the law, just the same as the late revelation instructed the bishop to found this organization, taking into consideration, of course, that these bishops must advise with others. Always understand that he is not to lose sight of the fact that he advises with his counselors and other members of the church that are his advisers. And so Bishop Partridge was authorized to do that. I think we are in accordance with this section so far as our organization has been brought about. There may be a few things that we have not touched. We are not going to pass upon that question.

Q. What must a member of the church do to become a member of the Order of Enoch, those who have no property?

A. He has to show that he has complied with all the laws of the church which Christ has given, so far as he could; and he must then make his application, and if all is in order, then he must be recommended by three worthy brothers of the order, or, if it is practicable, those who are trustees of the order, so that they could pass upon the matter; and if he can show a worthiness, if he is not worth a dollar in the world, but is a worthy man or woman, they are admitted to the order.

Q. What is the bond or covenant required to become a member of the Order of Enoch?

A. None of us have filed any bonds at all; but all of the people of God everywhere who have done their duty, have covenanted with God that they will live in accordance with his law and keep his commandments; everyone of you have done that, have you not? All that have entered into his church, and you renew the covenant with him when you enter into the Order of Enoch. Voluntarily on your part; no secret oaths; nothing but what I might name right here from the pulpit.

Q. Explain the difference between an inheritance and a stewardship?

A. A stewardship may include the inheritance. A stewardship is usually referred to to be the means of living of an individual; in other words, his business, by which he makes a living; while an inheritance is often referred to as the home.

Q. Will properties over which men are placed as stewards be held in the name of the order or in the name of the individual, as a rule?

A. In instances where they have shown themselves competent, and the stewardship is not to care for trust property, they will hold their own stewardships in their own names, just as provided in the law; but a person may have a stewardship turned over to him that will not be in his own name at the time, for the reason that he may be like the party already referred to; he may not be willing to keep it if it is turned over to him. The law is, "It shall come to pass that after these things are laid before the bishop of my church, and after that he has received the testimonies concerning the consecration of the property of the church;"—he is to receive the testimony. There is no statement that the bishop is to take it because it is offered. A number have offered me property that I would not receive; I have turned it back to the parties because it was more than they could afford to turn over. The bishop stands as a defender of the member as well as the church; he does not occupy as bishop in order to get all he can for the church, whether right or wrong. And if you say that I stand in such a place as that, then turn me out. I want you to do that.

The bishops stand in a position to know whether a man is doing more or less than he should do, because they understand the circumstances, being in that kind of work, and if they simply take it because they can get the property, they are not worthy to stand there as representatives of our heavenly Father. Some of the brothers and sisters here in this city have rendered their accounts, and I will refer you to them and you go to them and ask them with reference to the work, and see if the bishop was as much interested in their welfare as he was in the church's welfare. I am willing for them to answer.

And after that he has received these testimonies concerning the consecration of the properties of my church, that they can not be taken from the church, agreeably to my commandments; every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration.

If a person does not have anything, something will be given to him, so he will have a stewardship; so that every man and woman can have something and there will not be any beggars, neighbors, or anyone that does not have something to eat and wear; who can not be presented properly for Sunday school and church; who can not go out among their brethren and feel right, because their brethren are so far ahead of them. We want all such work as that to stop, we do not want to find it in our midst; we want to see that everyone has his proper opportunity in this world, and if he will do good, he will. Suppose we give them something and they throw it away! The law says they shall not be permitted to abide in the church;—we do not have to have that kind of people in the church; so we can not excuse ourselves by saying they will squander it. The law of Christ provides that such a person shall not have place in the body with those who work, and it turns him out.

Properties then as a rule will be held in the name of the individual. There may be instances where they will be held in the name of the church, and there may be instances where they will be held in the name of the order. For instance; we have eighty acres of land that a brother is upon at the present time that belongs to the church, and he pays over the rents and profits from it, and that would be his stewardship for the present; but he is not the owner of the land. The order may have its own property, and it may have a steward, for instance, and somebody be put over that steward. Some individuals prefer to have their wages a part of their stewardship. Some men live better upon a wage than they do working for themselves. I can give you the names of some in this community who prefer to work that way; but they can not work for themselves successfully, and it seems they must be helped along. If they do that way, their stewardships will be the amount they receive for themselves and their families.

Q. If individuals give all of their surplus to the bishop before entering the order, how will the order secure property to give inheritances and stewardships?

A. The order does not give inheritances, nor stewardships in the full sense either. The church does that, the order assists, and the order's money comes from the offerings that come to the order. Those individuals who pay their tithing have means to work with. Any member helps the order. I received three hundred dollars from one sister for the Order of Enoch. She said, Turn it over to the Order of Enoch. I said, Have you done everything that you can in the way of tithes and offerings? She said, I think I have done everything, but if not I can pay it, and I want to do that much for the order. I only mention this to show you how the order is supported.

Q. Does loss of membership in the order mean loss of membership in the church, or vice versa?

A. Loss of membership in the church would be loss of membership in the order, but not vice versa. For instance: An individual may lose his membership in the order because he failed to report to the order and have dropped his name as a member; but not necessarily lose his membership in the church; and he might bring his reasons for dropping out of the order that would not affect his membership in the church. If he was dropped on account of being dishonest, that, of course, would affect his standing in the church.

Q. What will become of the surplus money given to the church? and will all surplus go to a united fund generally, or to each stake?

A. The surplus money of the church is used for the purchase of lands for the settlement of the Saints, and the settlements are made by the help of these orders. Not made by these orders exclusively, because they can not do it. It is made by the help of these orders, and it is because the church needs help to carry out its work that we have such an order. The same as the church needs help to educate the children of the church, so they have a Sunday school and Sunday school work; and the church needs help in the way of the Daughters of Zion, so they have their helping societies. So it is helped by the Order of Enoch, but the Order of Enoch does not take the place of the church in any sense; the church fills its own place, and the order is a helping order for the benefit of the poor, and that is what the order was in the time of Enoch, for the benefit of the poor. Surplus properties are held for church purposes, and we have already invested more than double the amount of surplus properties in land for the benefit of the church, and than has ever been paid into the church; not only the surplus but many tithes and offerings.

Q. Should a boy eighteen years of age who is working for his father and getting all of his support from his father, be entitled to pay tithing?

A. Certainly; every young man should pay tithing. Every boy and girl who is a member of the church should pay something. If they are old enough to become members and understand the church law, they ought to understand that they are to begin helping. Do you think that any boy or girl eight years of age, as a member of their own home, ought not to work any? I met two little children Saturday, one a four year old, the other three years old, and was talking to them outside of the house. I said, "What do you two do?"

"We help mamma."

"How do you help mamma?"

The little boy said, "I help carry water," and the other one said, "I help take care of the baby and help do a good many things."

A boy or girl eight years of age, and does not have anything to do! Is that the way you are raising your children? Boys and girls in this world who are not raised to work, are not the boys and girls that will come out ahead by and by.

Should a boy who is eighteen years of age pay his tithing?

Certainly; not only entitled to, but it is his duty to pay tithing upon what he has. Every boy of that age has something. Let their parents teach them to conform to the law of Christ, and few things have pleased me more than when my own children have shown a desire to pay their tithing. I remember just a few days ago I was surprised. Most of you know that my daughter has been trying to raise money for two years in order that she might go away and finish her studies. She spoke to me about two days ago and said, "I want to pay my tithing before I go." I was surprised because I had thought she was so interested in gathering a little money to go on that she would never think of having any for tithing. But I confess it gave me encouragement in letting her go.

Q. To what extent are the poor to be benefited by the purchase of a lot 50 by 140 in the Edgewood Addition to Independence (the property as advertised for sale by the order at the rate of six dollars per foot) with no other property and no other source nor assurance of a livelihood?

A. I would not say an individual would be benefited one penny. If that is the way you are looking at the proposition, I would not have you purchase at all. We know that after the street is graded and cement sidewalk all along, we could find men that would take ten, twelve, or twenty at a time; but it may not benefit an individual looking at it from away up here; it may not benefit you a particle. But if you wanted a home and did not know how to get one, then it is possible we could show you how you could get a home, and you would not have to pay from ten to sixteen dollars per month rent, and very few rooms in your house at that. We are not offering these lots generally for sale; but we have the lots there so we can accommodate individuals who need them; and those who do not need, we do not want them to buy the lots; and we have passed a rule that two lots can not be sold to the same individual unless they show they are properly needed.

Q. What prospects would a poor man have in obtaining a living if locating on one of these lots?

A. I have already answered that question. So far as that is concerned, you are only looking at one side of it.

Q. Since it is the object of the order to care for the poor, what would be the nature of such care and assistance if the poor had no means at all by which to purchase?

A. If the poor had no means at all by which to purchase, the order would arrange so they would get a lot anyway, if they made the proper showing of being worthy, whether they have a dollar in the world or not.

Q. How much of one's property should be turned over to the order when joining the same?

A. All that he possibly can spare, he having done his duty to the church before. Let us do all we can. This idea of half worshipping God does not work well. Do all we can. I believe we ought to worship God with our whole might, mind, and strength; and if we will do that we will soon be fitted as a people, and the Lord will come, and that is what we are looking for. We should not care for the things of this life in comparison with the church. Jesus says, "What and if we should gain the whole world?" and again he says, "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." The worship of God is one thing, and looking after the things of this world is quite another thing; and when we simply examine ourselves to find out whether we should become a member of the Order of Enoch, let us not have it in mind how much we are going to get out of it, or we will find ourselves in the condition of Lot, instead of Abraham.

Emerson says: "The truest test of civilization is not the census or the size of the cities, nor the crops; but the kind of men a country turns out." Manhood overtops all titles. "A man is rich or poor not according to what he has, but what he is." "Tis only noble to be good." Collateral can never take the place of character. Character is capital.

Of General Interest

I am inclosing a cutting from one of the most reliable papers in the North of England, and the extract that is used is taken, as you will see, from the well known journal Truth, of which Mr. Labouchere was the editor for many years.

Personally, I am convinced by what I know of conditions in England, that this extract is most likely to be near the truth in the case, and the agitation is evidently engineered by Mr. Hans Freece, an American attorney, and he is finding ready assistants in the Episcopalian and other ministers, who apparently have so far forgotten the essential principle of the Christian faith, "My kingdom is not of this world, else would my servants fight"; that any means which will accomplish their end are considered quite legitimate.

I am of the opinion that the agitation will end in proving the fact that the Government of Great Britain is not able to turn the Mormon missionaries out of the country, nor even able to prohibit the elders of the Mormon Church from holding services and preaching whatever of their doctrine they wish to, unless it can be proven that such men are actually guilty of inciting or conspiring to procure any persons for criminal objects. When the agitation has ignominiously failed, as it will do, then the Mormons will have strengthened their hold and be able to parade the agitation as a religious persecution, and with something like justification.

It is a sad comment upon the intelligence of the public, and a still more deplorable witness against the foundations of the faith of those who are engaged in this affair, that such methods have to be employed in order to overthrow the opposing claims of the Mormons and so save their own concerns.

I am sure, however, that in this agitation there is a splendid opportunity for the Reorganization to take the matter up in an official way and through the proper ministers or government authorities approach the English Government and have the facts presented once for all in a clear and authentic manner, so that Mormonism will be properly catalogued and the Reorganization made to appear in the true light, to the vindication of the latter day work and its originator.

In looking over the names of the leaders of the agitation I know most of them, and with about two exceptions most of them could be described as hypersensitive and narrow. I confess surprise to find such men as Bishop Weldon, Dean of Manchester, Dr. Scott Lidgett, and Rev. F. B. Meyer among those who are taking an active part, and believe it is the outcome of mistaken sympathy and zeal. Dean Weldon is a very scholarly and broad-minded churchman, whose ability and breadth of sympathy are established in many ways and places, as a scholar, minister, and humanitarian. Doctor Lidgett is zealous and strenuous, but a fair fighter, and while as a controversialist he has the reputation of being a "hard hitter," yet is not guilty of unfairness. Rev. F. B. Meyer is one of the gentlest of our pastors, and his works and writings prove him to have a lofty conception of the Christian ideals. I am sure that if these men knew the facts, they would as strenuously labor for the right and just interpretation of this difficult question as they are now for the banishment of the Mormon ministers from the land.

In the meantime let us not be too harsh in our judgments. At least one thing is clear, they seem to be convinced that the latter day work as presented by the Mormons is wrong, and in its actual issues a grievous thing for the ones who accept it, and we surely can sympathize with this conclusion, who have seen some of the tragedies and witnessed the peculiar degeneracy which has followed its movements whenever and wherever it has obtained power. But after all, the only way to overcome evil is by exhibiting the good and showing in contrast how much more desirable is the good than the evil. This was the Master's way, and if we are his followers we will be quite contented to adopt his way of doing things.

Sincerely,

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

THE ANTI-MORMON OUTCRY. A PROTEST AGAINST IT.

"In the current number of Truth a characteristic reference is made to the movement against Mormon propagandism. The writer says:

"In the United States, where the facts ought to be known, nobody seems to regard Mormonism as a danger to society. The Mormon religion may be silly twaddle, but in its original shape there was no moral harm in it. Polygamy was a supplementary embellishment introduced by Brigham Young after the "Saints" were established at Utah. Credible witnesses testify that the Mormons are a well-behaved, industrious, and harmless, if cranky, folk. Mormon missionaries have always been at work more or less in this country, and a few silly people—mostly women—are persuaded by them to emigrate to Utah. If the emigrants were deceived, if they found themselves unhappy in their new home, their friends in this country must have heard about it. But there is no evidence of anything of the kind.

"In this state of things it seems to me that those who are stirring up public feeling against these wretched Mormons ought to tell us what they know instead of confining themselves to mere denunciation and abuse. Personally I have no sympathy with Mormonism or any such nonsense, but I hate religious persecution, and that seems to be the spirit abroad at present.

"Ministers of religion of all denominations—other than Mormon—have joined with sensation-mongering journalists in working up public feeling. If they know anything about the Mormons, they owe it to themselves to produce their facts. Even if they have any facts, they would do much better to protect their flocks by preaching against these intruders than by stirring up a spirit which is sure to show itself in the breaking of Mormon heads. The whole force of Anglicanism, Romanism, and Nonconformity in this country ought to be able to counteract the efforts of a handful of cranky missionaries from Utah. The bishop of Lincoln (sic) much to his honor, pooch-poochs the whole outcry, and thinks the matter "can be left to the good sense of the British people." So one might hope; but, thanks to British journalists, the good sense of the British people is rather at a discount in these days.

"Before we actually lynch a Mormon missionary as a sacrifice to British virtue, it might be as well to reflect that plurality of wives is a legal institution in a large area of the British Empire. Fascinating young Hindus come over here and marry British damsels—usually, I believe, their landladies' daughters—without any public protest or any call for State interference. Yet the position of these wives when they reach their eastern homes is a very much more melancholy matter to think about than anything that is likely to happen to a servant girl who is tempted to emigrate to Utah.—The Yorkshire Weekly Post, April 29, 1911.

BISHOPS LEAD IN ENGLISH CRUSADE AGAINST MORMONS.

LONDON, May 13.—The hostile agitation against the Mormons in this country has grown to remarkable proportions, and promises to become a national crusade, led by the Government itself. Already the home office is conducting a strict inquiry into the propaganda of the Latter Day Saints among English people, and Home Secretary Winston Churchill, questioned in the House of Commons has admitted, in effect, that he would like to put the aliens act in force against them and have them deported as "undesirables."

Anti-Mormon feeling has been intensified by the publication of astonishing figures showing the numbers of their "converts." These statistics, which are the official returns for last year issued by the British Mormon Mission, show that 18,228 inhabitants of the British Isles, including 1,364 children under eight years of age, embraced Mormonism during 1910.

The mission seems to have had its greatest success in the large cities of the North of England, especially Liverpool and Newcastle. The number of persons who left this country for Salt Lake City during 1910 was 555—mostly young women.

Bishops of the Church of England have joined in the general outcry against the Mormons, who, with all their protestations of innocence, can not persuade English people that polygamy is not practiced in Utah. Bishop Talbot of Southwark issued the following warning in the press: "I think it behooves England to be on her guard for the sake of her young girls. There seems to be two sets of Mormons, one of which apparently disapproves of polygamy, but I feel that this country must keep a very sharp lookout."

Other bishops have expressed themselves quite as strongly or more so. The bishop of Bristol says: "Mormon missionaries should be cleared out of these islands."

The bishop of Exeter says: "I am in favor of any steps that would rid our country of the Mormon pest."

The bishop of Manchester says: "I consider the preaching of Mormon doctrines in England is a danger, and favor legislation to prevent Mormons from inducing English girls to go to Utah."

The bishop of Chichester says: "Strong measures should be taken to repress the preaching of polygamy, whether openly or covertly, defying the civil as well as the moral law."

The bishop of Landaff says: "I think that Mormon teaching is becoming a serious danger, and that legislation is needed to protect the weak and ignorant from being led away by its plausible representations."

The bishop of Newcastle says: "I am firmly of the belief that the preaching of Mormon doctrines in England is a menace to England's social life, and I think drastic steps should be taken to prevent Mormons from luring English girls from their homes under Mormon influence."

The bishop of Truro: "I am in favor of legislation against white slave traffic in any form. English men, not English girls are wanted in Utah."

Bishop of Bangor: "I think it a matter which, if reports are true, the Government will be criminal if they overlook."

Bishop of Carlisle: "I am wholly against Mormon teaching and practices. I have not fully considered the question of legislation."

Bishop of Durham: "This suggests grave evils, but it is possible that legislative action would be justified."

Father Bernard Vaughan, the fashionable West End Catholic priest, puts the case in more vigorous language. "The Mormons," he says, "should be taken by the scruff of the neck, rushed across the island, and dropped into the sea."

NO CONVERTS IN AMERICA.

The chief organizer of the campaign against the Mormons in England is Hans Freece, an American, who claims to be the son of a Mormon mother. After working hard in the United States to check the spread of Mormonism in the Eastern States, he has come to this country where he has been more successful in arousing public interest. He says there are eight thousand members of the community in England, and six thousand are paying a tenth of their income to the Mormon treasury.

"They can not get converts in America," says Mr. Freece, "because we know them. They come to England and get young people, particularly girls, because in five years these girls obtain a vote in Utah. The whole organization is devoted to keeping Utah under Mormon control, because, unless that is done, the crime of polygamy will have to cease."

Mr. Freece has been conducting for many weeks a vigorous campaign in the press, which has so inflamed public opinion that in some places the Mormon missionaries have been obliged to abandon their work under threats of violence, and even violence itself.

The novelist, Winifred Graham, has published some powerful articles describing life in Salt Lake City and the conditions under which plural wives live. Mormonism has been painted in lurid colors and much has been made out of the admissions made by President Joseph H. [F.] Smith before the Senate Committee dealing with the case of Senator Reed Smoot.—New York American.

Love, Patience, Firmness.

We as sisters and members of the church of Christ are ever striving to overcome and arise to a higher plane of life, and while casting about in my mind for a subject for the paper that I was to prepare for this meeting, the words of Paul came to my mind where he was telling the saints about the different qualities we were to add to make us perfect, and in enumerating the eight mentioned, I wondered which three were of the most help to us as mothers. We know different societies of the world have three of the virtues as sort of a motto. The temperance society has faith, hope, and charity, and the Odd Fellows have friendship, love, and truth, and so on. These are not all found in Paul's letter referred to, but they are all good and necessary for a perfect life.

In trying to decide which three would be of more value to us as mothers, I decided that love would take first place and then patience, and then I thought we would have to add one not mentioned in the list; that one was firmness.

Now we all say we have the first named virtue, love, but do we manifest it to the comfort and satisfaction of our children? I have in mind an instance that came under my own observation. A little girl of about ten years was visiting a little friend after school. When supper was over the mother took her little daughter on her lap and kissed her. The little visitor looked on with hungry, wondering eyes, and afterwards said: "My mamma never holds me like that. She says I'm too big; but oh, if she only would! She never holds or kisses me, but I know she loves me."

And patience, how sorely we need this virtue, especially in training a family of little children! We do not feel well and things go wrong around the house, and we think we are so tried; then how beautifully this God given patience would assist us in maintaining a right disposition, and how quickly our little ones notice the lack of it, too!

Said one little tot to another, "Just look at your clean dress all spattered. You'll get a licking when you get home for that."

"No, I won't," said the other, "for I did not mean to get it dirty, and my mother won't punish me for a thing I could not help. She never does."

"My!" said the first speaker. "I wish my mother was like that. Mine gets mad so easy. Why, she just flies."

Now the third virtue, firmness, is indispensable, even though Paul has not mentioned it, neither does the word occur in the Bible to my knowledge, yet we all know its value, and no matter how nicely we mean to bring up our children, if we lack this much needed quality it will show in their conduct, and they soon learn that mother's "no" does not mean "no," and they are not slow to take advantage.

Two little boys were playing and this conversation was overheard:

"I'm going to ask mamma again for an orange."

"But she said you couldn't have any more," answered the other little fellow.

"Yes, but you don't know my mamma like I do. Now you just watch. Mamma, can't I have another orange?" whined the lad.

"Didn't I tell you you couldn't have any more? Now run away and play."

Whereupon the little fellow, who was acquainted with his mother, set up a howl which lasted until his exasperated mother gave him an orange, and as he stopped his howl he said to his playmate, "Didn't I tell you so?"

Dear sisters, while we need all the virtues mentioned in 2 Peter 1: 5, I think you will agree with me that the three most necessary are love, patience, and firmness.

To the Matron of the Children's Home: Seeing your appeal yesterday in the newly arrived HERALD, I take this opportunity to forward you my "two mites" toward getting those cows for the Children's Home. How I wish I could make it ten dollars instead of two, which seems so small. But even this requires a degree of sacrifice of personal requirements, which, however, is only as it should be; for if one had no special use for money given, the giving would not be so acceptable to the Master. You see I make the most of the money that I give, that is, I always seek to have it answer two purposes, one for the purpose named, and the other to please the Lord Jesus whom I love.

May your work be a joy to you and a blessing to those about you.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

[The above letter, which is one of several that has come to Sister Robinson inclosing consecrated offerings for the same purpose, we have been permitted to use, though it was not intended for publication. And as we write the thought comes to us, Are there none who will read this touching little testimonial from the heart of one who has served the Master long and faithfully, and whose sacrifices for his cause have been unnumbered, whose hearts will respond as liberally according to their circumstances as she has done? And among the many Saints in the State of Iowa, is it not possible there may be some who could from their flocks and herds contribute a cow, or even a calf which will soon grow into one. If so, ship to Bro. W. P. Robinson, Lamoni, Iowa, when the freight will be paid and Brother Robinson will take the best of care of every contribution, whether large or small.—EDITOR.]

ARGYLE, MICHIGAN, April 4, 1911.

Dear Sisters: Having just received the HERALD to-day and scanning its pages o'er I came to the Mothers' Home Column, which I always stop and read, for I have received so much help and encouragement from it. But I have often thought some of those articles are lovely, especially those articles like in this week's paper. But there are two sides to look at that question. In the article only one child is mentioned, while she also had a maid and mother to assist her in her household duties. It would be an easy matter for her to be that way with her child, and would also work where there are two or three; and that is the way with most all of those articles, only one or two children to contend with.

So I have often thought while there is lots of good food in them to help us, oh, why do not some of the sisters who have large families write of their experiences, not among the well to do, but those who are poor in this world's goods, who have to plan and work in almost every way to get a livelihood, and then tell us how they manage a large family under some of the trying times there. I believe an article from such a one would assist far more, as it would bring it to a point of everyday life among the tried who need help and encouragement; for I know some are sorely tried to know what is best to do at times to accomplish the best good and rear them up to love and fear their Maker.

I am the mother of seven children living in a three-roomed house where it seems they can hardly turn around but what there is something to get into, and I have often thought I would like to see some of those mothers placed under those circumstances to see what they would do. It doesn't seem to me their rules would always apply in such cases, for I find the demands on my time are such that it would be a case of go hungry or half clad in order to comply with the advice usually given.

While there is much good to be obtained by reading them, it seems to me more good could be obtained under different circumstances, so have often thought, as said in the beginning, oh, why do not some of the mothers write who have large families, that we might learn how they manage under some of their trying times!

I have always found to be firm and kind under all circumstances brings the best results; but I also find it requires much patience, together with oft resorting to secret prayer to be able to meet all that is required in these trying times; for children are not what they used to be, and try as hard as you may, where they have other influences besides the home, it is very trying to know what to do.

I am not writing this in a fault-finding way, but would like to read both sides, and try to receive strength where I feel I need it. Nor yet do I wish to say I have the worst family there is; for that is not so, for I find most all children the same as my own with an occasional one better or worse; but they have to be trained daily and hourly in order to rear them aright, and they are continually on my mind to know what to do for their best good. And of the many things I pray for, one is wisdom to know how to guide them aright, for I realize without God's assisting grace we are liable to fall or err.

Pray for me, a weak sister, who is trying to become strong, so I may guide the young and erring aright.

MRS. CLARA SHEFFER.

[We earnestly hope that the above letter may call forth replies from those mothers, who, having had a like experience, may be able to offer helpful suggestions.—EDITOR.]

Dear Herald: I have been reading your valuable paper, and as wife has taken it away from me, I was thinking of the church and the good sermons that I have heard. We are isolated from the Saints, and the only preachers that we have are the papers, and they are surely welcome in our home. We move around from place to place. I am a railroad man and do not stay long in one place, but it is my intention to make this place my permanent home. I am trying to live closer to the Lord.

I was baptized four years ago, and I know that this work is true, and if this work is not right we have far more than any of the rest of the churches. We must not fail in our welldoing, but live for Christ and continue to pray. If we do, God will be with us. We must do our part before we will get help from on high.

Brother Quick, I have not heard a sermon since the one you preached at Nelagong over a year ago. Drop in and see us.

Yours for the truth,

FRANK NORTH.

SPRINGVIEW, NEBRASKA, May 7, 1911.

Saints' Herald: In the last days we are to dream dreams and see visions, and the Lord is to pour out his Spirit upon all flesh. I will tell you of a vision I had last fall: I was told that there was to be a reformation and a great spiritual awakening among the Saints, and it was to prepare the way and make ready for the coming of the Savior. The time is at hand to begin at once; it has already begun to bud. We can see all matters of business in the church. The conference at Lamoni this spring has been held with more interest than usual. It always has been since the world began, that whenever any good was about to come forth, Satan would rage. While we Saints seek this great reformation and spiritual awakening, the workers of evil will seek to overthrow us; but if we ask God for more wisdom and more enlightenment on the good work, he will strengthen us and we will gain the victory.

Let us put on the armor of God and work manfully for the right. Let the church as a body unite in prayer for the good of this reformation, that we may enjoy more fully the blessings and gifts of God as in days of old. Christ said, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do." All we lack is this reformation, and as it has begun to bud, let us ask God for wisdom and more light to make us right, that the bud may bloom in time to be a beautiful white lily. May the seeds from this pure white lily be planted over the land till God's earth may be made into a Garden of Eden, and all the honest in heart become pure and white as the lilies.

Bro. J. C. Crabb sent me a card stating his intention to call here in his missionary work. Pray for him that he may be blessed in sowing the good seed, and that he may do much good in this part of the vineyard. Let us also pray for all the traveling missionaries that God will protect them, bless them and give them wisdom in preaching the gospel. Let us also remember Brother Gamet at Elk Point, South Dakota.

Your readers are filling a good mission by sending all their church papers to those who know not the faith. I was told in vision that I had a mission, and I think that distributing the church publications to the people is a good mission. By distributing them to the people they can not say they have not been warned. Do not burn or waste any of your papers, but send them to me, and let us try and warn the world in every way we can, for we may be the means of bringing them to God by so doing. I ask your prayers also that I may live up to everything I profess, and be an example to the world for good.

I have many trials to fight against, and it seems that when I would do right evil is also present. This proves that when there is any good Satan is opposed and ready to fight, but by the grace of God let us go on to perfection.

Your sister,
MRS. ANNA CULBERTSON.

Dear Herald: During this month I have traveled with a team through Fremont, Page, Montgomery, Cass, Adair, and Dallas counties, Iowa, and preached and distributed tracts, HERALDS, Ensigns, Voice of Warnings, and Books of Mormon. The people are anxious to hear preaching, as there has not been any preaching done, though there are some who believed the words I taught.

MADISON, WISCONSIN, May 16, 1911.

Dear Herald: It gives me great pleasure to read letters in the HERALD written by brothers and sisters with whom I am acquainted. I do not know many people of this denomination, for I have only been in this marvelous latter day work about a year.

Elder Jasper O. Dutton baptized me September 3, 1910, at Madison, during the reunion which was held at that time, and I can truly say that I have never once regretted the step. It seemed to me that it was the happiest day that I had ever spent. I am striving to-day in my weak way to perform the duties and keep the commandments which the Lord has set before his people, although it is harder for some than it is for others to live in that way and manner which is pleasing in the Lord's sight, especially the isolated ones, who have not the opportunity to attend the meetings each week, as we Saints at Madison have.

There is a membership of perhaps fifty-five in the branch, and about the same in the Sunday school, which is prospering very nicely, and we have a Religio Society of forty members which the writer is president of.

Elder W. A. McDowell was here the 7th of May, which was our sacrament Sunday. He delivered a very fine sermon in the evening, and a large crowd was present.

Elder C. J. Goodenough has been with us since the Southern Wisconsin reunion, but had to go home on account of his wife's sickness, and also his own, as he had a very severe siege of the grip, but through the administrations he and his wife have been wonderfully blessed. He is now preparing to leave for his new field, (which is the Kewanee District,) but we Saints regret very much that we are going to be deprived of his service, for he has presented thoughts on different subjects which we as Saints need in our everyday life.

I will close, hoping that God may speed the day when we may all come into the unity of the faith; and it is my prayer that we, as the children of God, may be worthy of his blessing, which he sees fit to bestow upon us, and that we may be saved in the celestial kingdom.

Your brother in the one faith,
ROY R. FARBER.

SALEM, MISSOURI, May 21, 1911.

Dear Herald: We are still in the faith and are trying to so live that we may be found worthy at all times. We enjoy reading the HERALD and Ensign, and the many interesting letters, and the progress of the church in many places.

I would like to know who is in charge of this part of the State. As near as I can learn there has never been any preaching done here, but I have been told there had been two Utah elders here at one time. I see no reason why an elder could not get an opening here as well as elsewhere, as I find as good people here as anywhere, for we have lived in many places. By associating with them I find they are very liberal, but it is hard to tell what they will do when the testing time comes. There are plenty of country schoolhouses and seven churches here in town. One sect calls itself the Open Bible; they preach on the streets nearly every Saturday afternoon. I think an elder would have the same privilege.

I have been treated with kindness ever since I have been here and have many friends, but hope no enemies. I have done exceedingly well with my little business. I am better known as the "Pop corn man." The town and country was settled as far back as the rebellion in the thirties and forties. A number of old soldiers now live here. The town did not make much of an advancement until fifteen years ago, but since then, many northern people have come here and on seeing how cheap the land was, have made many improvements, until now there is a population of 1985. It is the county seat of Dent County. It has a good court-house, four banks, two grist mills and elevators, fourteen grocery and dry goods stores, five wagon factories, and four dry goods stores, but with all this there is still room for more. We need a good foundry man, the foundry having its machinery already in, an up-to-date restaurant either to lease or to sell, with many more things that could be made to pay well with means to develop them, such as a creamery and an ax handle factory. We have just finished a high school building; it has electric lights and granitoid sidewalks.

Our daughter and husband have moved here and are now located on a small farm, one mile from town; so we feel it is now our home for good. We greatly desire to have more of the Saints locate here, get hold of some of this cheap land and live easy. We are in the "region round about." We find it a good place to live, if it is in the Ozarks of southern Missouri. We stand ready and willing to assist and help as far as lay in our power to do so.

I had a short letter in the Ensign last winter and I received half a dozen inquiries. I answered all, but no one has ever shown up, so I say to those that read this, if you want any information in regard to the country and have fully made up your mind to come and even look, write me, and I will meet you at the depot.

Your brother and sister in Christ,
MR. AND MRS. D. BOWEN.

Bro. Swen Swenson, Higbee, Missouri, May 18: "Bro. W. B. Richards and myself are preaching here. I have been in my field for three weeks. I have baptized two and blessed two children this conference year. So we labor on and do the best we can."

Bro. Benjamin Pearson, Tigris, Missouri, May 17: "We enjoy reading the reports of other districts; also all matter published in HERALD, and appreciate the effort made by you and others to enlighten humanity."

We note with joy and thankfulness the comments in the newspapers regarding our ministers, and especially those of later date in reference to Elder T. W. Williams. Our mind reverts to the close of the year 1894 when he held such an interesting debate with Rev. C. W. Savage of the Peoples' Church, of Omaha. One night in particular Reverend Savage was so confounded and confused that he could find very few of his references, and some of them he could not read after finding them, but Elder Williams was wonderfully blessed of the Lord, and it surely was a glorious victory for the truth. I was shown that night there was a power in the gospel that I had not known before, and after a year of investigation, and feeling that I was an outcast, considered it would be wise to cast my lot with the Saints. Will always feel grateful towards Brother and Sister Williams and a few other faithful Saints, who were so kind in making the way clear.

Sunday, May 21. Morning sermon by Elder Tanner regarding "We should be temperate in all things." We should pay strict attention to the instruction given, and endeavor to live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God. Evening sermon by H. P. W. Keir, taking for his text Psalm 119: 60: "I made haste, and delayed not to keep thy commandments." How necessary that we do not procrastinate, but strive to perform our daily tasks in an acceptable manner before the Lord.

Tuesday evening Elder Rudolph Etzenhouser gave a very interesting lecture and stereopticon display of prehistoric views of ancient America, which surely makes the Book of Mormon more precious to us. A number of the West Side Saints were in attendance.

The surroundings add to its merit for such a gathering. Splendid groves afford shelter from the burning sun, and splendid fields recreation. We have a nice stone church within a stone's throw from the lake, and we have many true Saints to take the best of care of the visiting throng; so that whether in tent or church we are at home. We have selected a time when from the factory and store and farm may come the Lord's people to renew their spiritual, mental, physical, and social strength. We hope you will place the reunion before all other outings, and make the reunion. Just think of the prayer meetings, the Religio, the Sunday school, the preaching; then of the boating, the bathing, the ball playing, and then the splendid association of the Saints from every part of the country, and then write to us at once and order tents. Tents will be as follows, size 7 by 9, per week $1.50; 10 by 12, $2; 12 by 14, $3. We will provide beds at 25 cents for the entire reunion. Bring bedding with you. We hope to supply good meals at fifteen cents. We would suggest that you make arrangements as to tickets with your local agent, as the delegate plan might not work satisfactorily to all, as some will go by boat and others by train. The station is near the grounds and we will try to have the committee represented at the station. If you come, please write as soon as possible to Bishop R. C. Evans, 35 Huron street, Toronto, Ontario, telling how many are with you and the size and number of tents you require. We extend an invitation to our chief missionary and all missionaries laboring under his direction, to come with us and have a good time. This is the first time Canada has had a reunion of this kind. Those coming for the full time of reunion will have to pay two weeks' rent for their tents, and those coming, if only for a few days, will be charged one week rent, as the tent makers will claim rent for the tent from the time it leaves them till its return. The prices we quote are those given us by the tent owner. The missionaries coming will notify us as soon as possible, so that we may provide free tents for them. R. C. Evans for committee.

Pastoral.

To the Saints and Friends of Southern Indiana, Kentucky and Tennessee; Greeting: Inasmuch as the duty of acting as assistant minister in charge for the above-named territory has been assigned to the writer, we take this means of calling upon you for your assistance and cooperation. This is a large field with but few ministers. Brn. Jacob Halb and E. O. Byrn will labor in the Southern Indiana District; Brn. J. R. McClain, Fred Moser, jr., and J. W. Dubose will work in Kentucky and Tennessee.

We kindly request the assistance of Saints and friends, in all this vast territory, in making new openings and endeavoring to create an interest in the gospel. If the local ministry will do all in their power to lift up the gospel standard, it will be a help to the missionaries.

There is a large territory in Kentucky and Tennessee where there has been no work done. Any having friends or relations in this field who might be willing to hear the truth, we would be pleased to receive their names and addresses. Our desire is that all the missionaries make a special effort to obtain new openings.

Correspondence addressed to us at Holden, Missouri, box 396, will be promptly forwarded to us in our field.

Let us each do what we can.

MAY 22, 1911.

H. E. MOLER.

To the Saints and Friends of Far West District; Greeting: Having been selected as missionary in charge of this district for the coming year, as you will see by consulting pastoral letters of Brethren White and Curtis in Ensign of May 11, 1911, I greet you with a kindly and interested feeling, with hope and prayer for the progress of the work in our district.

I expect the cooperation of every man, woman, and child that has named the name of Jesus. (2 Timothy 2: 19. And, let everyone that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity. If we keep this commandment we will be a mighty force for good.)

Remember the bishop's agent with your tithes and offerings, that God may open the windows and pour you out a blessing. We need the Lord's blessings. Study and pray for wisdom, and that God will make an opportunity for you to do something special and out of the ordinary for the work this year.

If you have any plans for a meeting and want help, write me and let me help you. I would like to meet as many of the Saints at the conference June 3 and 4 as possible. Will consult the missionary force there and arrange for the work before us. Those who are living away from branches, should make an effort to warn their neighbors. Will you please write me immediately.

The branches will be given help by the proper ones. Bro. T. T. Hinderks is district president. We want to open up new work, hence we plead for your help.

I hope and pray that our efforts may be properly directed and that God may abundantly bless us.

Your brother,

E. L. HENSON.

KNOBNOSTER, MISSOURI, May 22, 1911.

To Whom It May Concern; Greeting: Pres. Frederick M. Smith now intends to visit the Minot, North Dakota, and Canadian reunions, to be held in Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba. In case he does, I do not expect to be present, as it has become necessary to conserve my health. Let any advice from him be cheerfully acceded to, and correspond with him direct as to time and place of said reunions. Unless necessary to confer with me direct the various missionaries will please keep more directly in touch with their respective assistant ministers in charge, who in turn will take the burden from me as far as possible. Last year I overworked and reached the verge of nervous collapse—hence this notice. There is no cause for alarm, but with this request please comply. This does not interfere with the direct reporting as noted in pastoral. Bro. William H. Kelley, president of the Twelve, anticipates visiting the above designated field also, in which case accede to his advice the same as to mine. Bro. R. O. Self expects to visit Nebraska during the summer months, and is hereby recommended to the notice of all with whom he may labor in the gospel.

In bonds,

J. W. WIGHT.

To the Saints and Friends in Northeastern Missouri District; Greeting: Having been appointed to labor in your district this year, and also having been put in charge of the district for the conference year, I would be pleased if you would write me and let me know if we can come and make new openings where you live, so the people will have a chance to hear the gospel story. We like to magnify our calling and seek to extend the gospel in new places, so we ask your help that good may be accomplished in this field, and that Zion may be redeemed, and that we all may labor together for the Lord. We have only two appointees in this field this year; Bro. W. B. Richards and myself. This is a new field for me, so please let me hear from all. You know the Lord has said for us to warn our neighbors, so let us all do so in the Spirit of our Lord. May his Holy Spirit be with all of you. My home address is Kingston, Missouri, R. F. D. 2. Field address, Bevier, Missouri, care W. B. Richards, box 457.

Your colaborer in the gospel faith,

SWEN SWENSON.

Died.

HART.—Nathan Hart was born September 11, 1831, and died at Fresno, California, April 29, 1911. He united with the church in the stirring days of 1843, but was not identified with the Reorganized Church. He crossed the plains to Utah but soon became dissatisfied and crossed the mountains to the coast. Nine of his twelve children, with many grandchildren, survive him. He was a son of Elias Hart, known in Nauvoo and in the early days of the church. He was anxious to go; death had no terrors to him. Funeral service in charge of Elder J. B. Carmichael.

MILLER.—Elder Nathaniel K. M. Miller, died at his home in Bluff Creek Township, near Albia, Iowa, May 11, 1911, aged 70 years, 8 months, and 23 days. He leaves to mourn a widow with whom he shared forty years of married life. From this happy marriage there were eleven children, the firstborn dying in infancy, and ten children still living, six sons and four daughters. These were all present at the funeral except the oldest son, whose residence is in Montana, and who was unable to come. Elder Miller joined the church in his youthful manhood, and for many years was active in the duties of his office. He left a good name, loved and respected both by the Saints and those not of the church. Funeral May 14, Elder C. B. Brown in charge. Sermon by Elder John Smith, burial at Albia, Iowa. He is at rest with "a good name." That "is better than riches."

HAILEY.—Jesse A. Hailey, April 24, 1911, at Avenue City, Missouri, from an accident and complication of diseases; aged 18 years, 6 months, and 28 days. He was born September 26, 1892, at Avenue City, Missouri. He was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in April, 1906. He expressed himself as having hope, and not being afraid to die, realizing that his sickness was unto death. He placed himself in the Father's care, and relied upon his love and power unto his last conscious moments. It is said of him that he displayed unusual ability for one of his years. Father and four sisters survive to mourn their loss. Funeral sermon by Elder V. M. Goodrich, April 26, at the residence of his father.

SHIPPY.—Saleda Elvert Shippy, the son of Bro. Saleda D. and Sr. Jane Shippy, died at his father's home in Lamoni, Iowa, May 16, 1911, after a long sick spell. In infancy he was injured and has been a sufferer all his life. He was born at Blenheim, Ontario, Canada, June 1, 1874. He was baptized in 1885 by Elder Joseph Shippy (his great uncle), in Michigan, and has been a steadfast adherent to this faith unto the end. He leaves a wife and four children, father, mother, and two brothers, to mourn his departure.

Protestant Bishop says Catholic Church in America is Doomed.

In a remarkable article on "The Conflict Between Religion and the Church" in The American Magazine for June, Episcopal Bishop Williams, of Michigan, says: "While the Roman communion keeps up a specious appearance of outward prosperity, yet that appearance is maintained only by the floods of immigration that pour in upon us annually from Latin countries. The second generation of these immigrants, born on American soil, largely drifts away from the church. And unless the ultramontane and reactionary policy of the present papacy can be modified by modernism and Americanism, Rome must still more rapidly lose its hold on the American mind and life. It may prolong its life by political alliances and social influences, but its root is cut."

Panama's Vital Importance to the United States.

The military, or strategic, significance of the Panama canal, therefore, is that it will be the most vital chord in that system of transference by which the navy of the United States can come promptly to the support on either coast of the local defenses, which it is to be presumed will be organized as Australia contemplates; even though the presumption be over-sanguine, in view of our national ignorant self-sufficiency. With a competent navy, and with the Panama canal secured, not merely as to tenure, but with guns of such range as to insure deployment in the open sea at either end, a necessary condition of all seacoast fortification, invasion will not be attempted, for it can lead to no adequate results.—From Rear-Admiral A. T. Mahan's "The Panama Canal and sea power in the Pacific," in the June Century.

Aspects of Islam.

This valuable contribution to the study of comparative religion is the third in the series of Hartford-Lamson Lectures, following the publication of Principal Jevon's Introduction to the Study of Comparative Religion and Doctor De Groot's The Religion of the Chinese.

Two lectures have been added to the eighth actually delivered in accordance with the requirements of the foundation in order somewhat to round out the aspects of Islam there touched on, and to make them a more complete introduction for the young missionary in his new and strange world. The work is replete with valuable suggestions as to the training and methods of the missionary to Muslims, especially in such broad and human aspects as sympathy, courtesy, and patience.

This is a book for beginners rather than scholars; it deals in broad outlines and statements, and not in detail and qualifications; for this reason the book will perhaps appeal especially to the general reader. At the same time the work is absolutely accurate as to conditions, despite the fact that in all probability some "Arabists" will be surprised at many of the things here set down. Doctor Macdonald's long and varied experiences in the far East have rendered him absolutely competent to describe accurately the trend of modern theological thought in the Muslim countries. This he has done in the present work, which is a valuable contribution to current discussion on the subject. It is not scholastic; it is not phrased in the technical language of the schools; the thoughtful layman will readily understand it. The work will prove of exceptional value to any who may come in contact with the various forms of Muslimism.—Duncan Black Macdonald.

GOOD HEALTH FLOUR

has done things for individuals through the United States that seem miraculous to many. This wonderful food will actually prolong life, and why not order a sack to-day. As the hot days are very near at hand, you must dispense with white bread, corn cakes, buckwheat cakes, etc., due to the fact that they are almost entirely carbonaceous, producing heat or fat. Eat meat sparingly as this also produces heat and fills the system with uric acid. The uric acid causes the blood to be slow, heavy and stupid, thus causing many very serious diseases too numerous to mention. A thorough test of Klar's Good Health will bring you more joy than a barrel of money.

VOLUME 58

LAMONI, IOWA, JUNE 7, 1911

NUMBER 23

Editorial

THE VALUE OF THE WILL.

It is evident that the power behind the force which is exercised in what appertains to human affairs is will. It is this that directs, governs, controls. The biblical relation of creation states, that the command was, "Let there be light." This expression shows the determinate will of the creative power. The affirmation in reference to the conclusion of this command is, "There was light." And this holds good in each successive age of creation. It seems, then, that we are justified in concluding, that behind the creative force there was a determinate will. When Jesus the Christ came and stated the authority which sent him, he said, "I came to do his will," and significantly adds, in the seventh of John, that if any man will do his will, there shall follow to him a confirmatory conclusion of infinite value. Subsequently to this he gives a broad commission unto his disciples, which briefly stated is, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." This is the predicate of our argument.

Those to whom the gospel is made effective are those who by reason of opportunity afforded them hear the proclamation, take it into consideration, and by virtue of the reasoning faculty decide the will to accept. This moves to obedience, and the individual so determining finishes the work of his will by being baptized.

Mr. Moody, the great revivalist, when conducting a revival in New York City quite a number of years ago, in defending his quick method of getting religion, as an argument against baptism by immersion, made the statement, "If I thought baptism was essential to salvation I would take a bucket and a broom, and standing upon Broadway would baptize everybody who passed me." Now here is the contrast. If Mr. Moody had undertaken such a baptism as this, he would have been arrested for being guilty of a species of malicious mischief in spoiling the clothing of those who passed him, while he was doing this pious act. The question of his guilt would have turned upon the expression of those thus sprinkled, "I object, because it was baptizing me against my will." The will must lie behind the act.

The degrees of murder as held in the criminal courts depend upon the nature of the will of the one who commits the murder, as shown by the testimony, as to whether it was willful and malicious, a case of sudden anger, or a matter of self-defense and justification. In one only of these degrees is the will of the murderer as to the amount of injury intended to be inflicted, held in abeyance, and that is that of sudden anger, in which it may be said there was not time for a deliberate determination of the will.

We have chosen these instances as examples to prove the correctness of our premise. Passing along the testamentary evidence found in the Bible we come to that wonderful epistle of John upon Patmos, and there we discover this remarkable language: "Let him that heareth say, Come, whosoever will may come." In the mind of the Apostle John, however positively he may have written, he did not forget that part of the divine economy which takes into consideration the individual sovereignty and responsibility. There must be no slaves, made so by the gospel economy. As revealed by the word to those who are to be heirs of salvation, in this case, as in the one stated, "the willing and the obedient" are to be the recipients of the great blessings offered. No man whose will is blunted by force or is cheated by blandishment justly can be said to be willing. Nor yet will he be in the highest sense obedient; for true obedience demands such a yielding to the requirements of obligation by the deliberate will of the individual.

When the Savior gave his commandment to his disciples, as found in the twenty-eighth of Matthew, "Go ye, and teach all nations," he gave them the preliminary power to present before those to whom they came the determinate will of the Father; and when he followed this statement up with the additional command, "Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," he laid down the completed and determinate will of the power behind the creative force, and which was to finish all that had been contemplated to be done for man.

Let us now see; how stands the Savior in the light of the prayer: "Thy kingdom come: thy will be done, as in heaven, so in earth." This occurs in Luke the eleventh chapter, seventh verse, and if possible shows the earnest desire of the Savior, that as the will of God was done in heaven, so should it be in earth. In other words, it is equivalent to saying, that the will of God expressed upon earth should become the governing principle which would bring to pass the yielding of obedience, because the will of man deliberately determines the yielding of obedience to such expressed will of God.

A man may say, "I can not believe." Does he state the truth? Is he by such expression as that justified in refusing obedience? Has he made proper endeavor to weigh well the command, the reason why it is given, and why he should yield obedience? Is a man justified in waiting until his will is enforced? Is it not better for a man to take the matter under advisement and by the exercise of his own will realize the product of a willing obedience? We think so. Then in this light answer the question, and in this light answer the requirement, "Whosoever will may come." In these two terms the will is expressed by the words, will and may. No man justly may come and realize the full fruition of his hope in coming, until he has willed to do so, and thus has brought himself into subjection voluntarily to the will of the Father. No man can understand justly the character of the obedience of the Savior to the will of his Father in any other light than that expressed in this statement.

So far as the gospel is concerned, has there been a change in the will of the Father? Who is prepared to say that there has been? Surely not those to whom the fresh expression of that will has come in the revelations of these last days. The statement then is broad; that in whatever country, under whatever government, and in whatever condition a man may hear the language of the Savior's message, "Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

There is an element that may be advanced in this discussion and the learning of the professors who lecture upon the will may be challenged to reconcile the negation of the will with their proposition, that the will may determine nothing, or that we can will nothing. Elder D. S. Mills, of California, in a sermon preached at Stockton, California, struck a fatal blow at this proposition of the learned professors in the following statement. Quoting the statement, "Whosoever will may come," he said, "This passage has been quoted a great many times, and it can not be disputed that there is a great deal of will in the world, but unfortunately a great deal of it is a will to won't." Now here is the proposition in a nutshell. In the days of the Savior, when invited to come, the great majority willed to won't. It meets its counterpart of refusal to accept the message, by a will not to come. Go back along the history of the dealings of God with men, ye who think that he has changed because conditions have changed with men, and see what you will find. In the words of the good old prophet, Jeremiah, as found in the sixth chapter, and sixteenth verse, "Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

A few days ago there was a notable demonstration of healing by means of hypnotic suggestion in the city of New York. One Melchior Luysterborgh, who has been paralyzed from his waist down, was made to arise and walk about the room, and after the hypnotic spell had been removed he retained considerable ability to use his lower limbs. Within three months the doctor, Doctor Fox, expects to have this man completely cured.

The Jewish Daily News, New York City, says General Bingham's statement that much of the lawlessness of New York is done by Jewish desperadoes is true. These Jewish crooks, however, confine their operations mostly to the Jews themselves, and so the Jews should be the first to undertake to put a stop to it. The passage of a law in New York State prohibiting the carrying of weapons will have a wholesome effect on the sort of crime which characterizes New York City.

When Secretary of State Knox announced a universal arbitration treaty it was said that only England, France, and United States were to be parties to it; but now comes the Mikado's government and asks to be included. This will have a strong counter effect to the many rumors that Japan intends to make certain acquisitions to territory by the war method. These four great nations can have a powerful influence toward the prevention of war between other nations.

"The history of religion shows that it has never failed to attain a reconstructed form whenever the social life became reorganized," says the New York Churchman (P. E.). "Society to-day shows none of the symptoms of weakness and apathy that were so marked in the later centuries of the Roman Empire. People are alive and alert, they are intent on curing social disorders, and they have the fullest confidence in the power of scientific research and experiment to overcome the natural obstacles that stand in the way of man's development along the whole line. The enormous dynamic power of moral ideals is to be seen in the various reform movements which deal with temperance, child labor, prison reforms, social hygiene, juvenile crime, poverty, foreign immigration, peace movements, race problems, congestion of population in cities, administration of charity, and the multiplied attempts to meet the needs of ill-conditioned humanity in general. Are these movements religious or secular? This is a test question that should call forth much searching of heart in the members of the churches. Are we to restrict the term religious to the church member who gives without forethought a dole of almsgiving, and deny to the philanthropist who is devoting his energy to the understanding and removal of the conditions and causes which make the street beggar a possibility?"—Evening Post, New York.

Because the directors of the Mother Church in Boston have declared that they have authority to control the teaching of Christian Science and have condemned the teachings of A. E. Smith, of the Fourth Church of Christ, Scientist, of Minneapolis, the members of that church have declared by almost a unanimous vote to withdraw from the Mother Church and will have no further connection with it. Their resolutions are as follows: "The church organization is only a material framework and not the church universal, and when a church organization becomes large, rich and powerful, its members magnify and worship their particular church organization merely as a temporal help whereby those humbly seeking to follow Jesus may cooperate to save their fellow-beings. Therefore this church hereby severs its connection with the Mother Church." Mr. Smith's teachings were questioned and after an examination by the directors they declared them to be erroneous and incorrect and Mr. Smith was asked to correct his views.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in session at Louisville, Kentucky, have decided to let the creed of "infant damnation" stand for another year at least. The progressive element of the Presbyterian Church are demanding that it be made plain that children who die before baptism will not be condemned to eternal punishment. It is believed that the desired change will be made next year.

The following is taken from Cannon's article in Everybody's Magazine for June. Just what Ex-President Roosevelt will do with this statement is unknown, as he has maintained silence in regard to it to date:

"The character and impulses of the President were of a sort to make him peculiarly susceptible to an appeal for help on the part of the Mormons. He sympathized with those who dared, for their own opinions, to oppose the opinions of the rest of the world. He had received the most adulatory assurances of support for his candidacies and his policies.

"The Mormon appeal to his generosity was not confined to Washington. On his travels he met President Smith more than once—the prophet being accompanied each time by a different wife—and naturally Smith made every effort to impress President Roosevelt with his earnestness, the purity of his life, and the high motives that actuated the exercise of his authority.

"And it is told—sometimes solemnly, sometimes with a grin—that in the temple at Salt Lake a proxy has stood for him and he has been baptized into the Mormon Church, that proxies have stood for the members of his family, and they have been sealed to him, and finally that proxies have stood for some of the great queens of the past, (who had not already been sealed to Mormon leaders,) and that they have been sealed to the President for eternity!"

Bro. W. J. Haworth's book, The Fall of Babylon, is in course of republication at the Herald Office, and will be sold for one dollar and twenty-five cents per copy. The object in getting out this edition is to raise means for the purchase of the ground which the office of the Gospel Standard now occupies. The Australian Saints are doing what they can to buy this property, and here is a splendid chance to help them, and at the same time get your money's worth. The book is a treatise of the apostasy and restoration, and other gospel phases, and contains a large number of illustrations.

A series of events of interest to Lamoni people came to a close Wednesday, May 31, at which time Graceland College commencement exercises were held in the Brick Church. The address by Professor W. C. Wilcox, of the Iowa State University, was one of the best ever delivered in Lamoni. A large class of Graceland students received diplomas. Other events preceding this were high school commencement exercises, speaker W. F. Barr, of Drake University; the baccalaureate sermon for the college, by Elder John Garver; the baccalaureate sermon for the Lamoni high school, by Elbert A. Smith; memorial sermon, by Elder John Smith; Decoration Day addresses by I. A. Smith and Heman C. Smith; also recitals and programs rendered by various departments of the college, as well as annual banquets of college and school alumni.

We call the attention of the HERALD readers to the advertisement of Bro. Daniel MacGregor's work, A Marvelous Work and a Wonder, now running in the HERALD. This work is preeminently one for missionary purposes. Send in your orders.

In another department will be found certain questions and answers prepared and submitted by certain members of the United Order of Enoch. These answers will be of interest to our readers as they deal with basic and vital principles; and they should be considered carefully by those who contemplate uniting with the Order, as well as by those who are already members.

A brother writes from Toronto regarding the work being done there by Bro. R. C. Evans, and says he remembers the time when the branch was "organized, with ten members, all sitting on a plank in a little rough building." "Now," he says, "we have three branches and three churches, twenty thousand dollars' worth of church property, and about one thousand Saints."

The conference of the Lamoni Stake met in Lamoni Saturday and Sunday, June 3 and 4. At this conference Joseph Roberts was selected as stake bishop, in harmony with the recommendation of the joint Council of the presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric. Brn. Richard J. Lambert and Oscar Anderson were selected by Bishop Roberts to act as counselors, and the selection was ratified by the conference. On the recommendation of the stake high council, Gomer R. Wells, Amos Berve, and John Midgorden were selected to occupy in the stake high council, and the ordinations were attended to at the Sunday prayer service, together with the ordination of the two counselors to the stake bishop, and Joseph Braby to the office of deacon, and C. E. Burke, of Hiteman, Iowa, to the office of teacher.

A press clipping sent us has the following: "COPENHAGEN, May 27.—Following the anti-Mormon agitation in England a similar effort to clear Denmark of Mormon missionaries has suddenly sprung up. The matter is a rather remarkable one, because for sixty years the Mormons have been left undisturbed to exercise a rather extensive propaganda in the northern countries.

"Their organization is on a very extensive scale. In Scandinavia alone they employ about 200 missionaries, besides a permanent staff of local priesthood scattered all over the countries, and numbering 600.

"It is not surprising, therefore, that out of the Mormon adherents in Utah, according to a recent census, almost 30,000 are Danes."

It will be remembered that some time ago Edwin Markham appeared in one of the leading magazines with a short sketch called "Moth holes in Mormonism," in which he revamped the old Spalding Romance story in an effort to explain the origin of the Book of Mormon. At the time we wondered how so great a man came to write such vapid and worn-out criticisms. Now all is explained. In the Literary Digest, May 20, 1911, (quoted from the New York Sun) Mr. Markham's morning method is outlined. He says: "I like the morning hours best for work, and I write every day whether or not I feel inspiration. If you have nothing to say, of course you say nothing, but by keeping at your writing methodically each day you prepare yourself to express the inspiration when it comes." Evidently his consideration of the Book of Mormon fell on a day when he had nothing to say, so he said it. Inspiration lingered, but the ink flowed on.

A fault-finding, criticising habit is fatal to all excellence. Nothing will strangle growth quicker than a tendency to hunt for flaws, to rejoice in the unlovely, like a hog which always has his nose in the mud and rarely looks up. The direction in which we look indicates the life aim, and people who are always looking for something to criticise, for the crooked and the ugly, who are always suspicious, who invariably look at the worst side of others, are but giving the world a picture of themselves.

This disposition to see the worst instead of the best grows on one very rapidly, until it ultimately strangles all that is beautiful and crushes out all that is good in himself. No matter how many times your confidence has been betrayed, do not allow yourself to sour, do not lose faith in people. The bad are the exceptions; most people are honest and true and mean to do what is right.—Success.

Hymns and Poems

Selected and Original Admonition.

Father, unto Thee we raise
Our hearts and voices, in thy praise,
Be thy precious name adored
For every gospel gift restored.

None can in thy work have part
But they of pure and contrite heart;
Humble too, and full of love,
Blest admonition from above.

Kind and patient they must be,
With faith, and hope, and charity;
Temperate in whatso'er
Shall be intrusted to their care.

These gifts and blessings should abound
Wherever God's true Saints are found;
Saints indeed, such ones will be
And reign with Christ eternally.

SERMON OF JOHN W. RUSHTON.

(Delivered at Independence, Missouri, November 24, 1910; reported by Mrs. A. Morgan.)

The sixth chapter of the epistle of Paul to the Romans:

What shall we say then? Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound? God forbid. How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein? Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection: knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. For he that is dead is freed from sin. Now if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him: knowing that Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him. For in that he died, he died unto sin once: but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God. Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord. Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof. Neither yield ye your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin: but yield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God. For sin shall not have dominion over you; for ye are not under the law, but under grace. What then? shall we sin, because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid. Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness? But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you. Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness. I speak after the manner of men because of the infirmity of your flesh: for as ye have yielded your members servants to uncleanness and to iniquity unto iniquity; even so now yield your members servants to righteousness unto holiness. For when ye were the servants of sin, ye were free from righteousness. What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? for the end of those things is death. But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

So ends the reading of our lesson. In the twenty-eighth chapter of the gospel written by Saint Matthew, commencing at the nineteenth verse:

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world.

May I remind you of the three points we have made this week, lest you have forgotten? The point we set out to make on the first evening of our preaching to you was the definition of the end or purpose of religion, which in our opinion we were led to conclude was nothing short of conscious friendship or companionship between the individual soul and God. In the language of the late Professor James, of Harvard University, the leading writer and lecturer on psychology, it meant the establishing of proper connection between the individual and the higher powers. That was the first point. The making of a right connection between the individual and the higher powers. The point on the second evening, in regard to faith, was that we were required to have absolute confidence in the superlative wisdom, the superlative love, and the superlative power of almighty God, and to carry out, as the expression of that confidence, faithfully, the commandments and injunctions that would issue from that supreme intelligence; and the point on last evening was that faith of this kind would issue in a truly repentant state, in which we should be concerned most earnestly, and give grave thought to all our future projects, so that we should not persist in doing those things that would widen the difference between what I am and what I believe God would have me be, but readjust myself so that I shall begin at least to do the things that shall bring me into perfect relationship with what I believe is divine. Now these are the three points we have been trying to make during the week, and to-night we shall present the subject of baptism in the light of these three salient features.

The author of the language that I have quoted as the text is Jesus Christ, and he certainly will not be disputed, as an authority. For my own preference I would much rather quote the gospel written by Saint Mark; but, as some of you know, the last few verses of the sixteenth chapter of the gospel according to Saint Mark are disputed by many of our Bible critics, and they say they are interpolations of a later date and are spurious. I have never read or heard of any critic finding fault with the gospel of Saint Matthew, so far as the latter portion of it is concerned, and I don't know but what the reading of Matthew will serve as well as the gospel according to Saint Mark. The author of that language is the One,—notice carefully what I say—who, beyond all possibility of serious questioning, succeeded in demonstrating a complete connection between himself and the Highest Power, demonstrating the actuality of that connection in his utterances, his deeds, and the fruitage and work of his life, proving himself to be the master of every situation, serenely calm in the times of disaster that produces confusion and wreckage in the minds and experiences of others. Able to pronounce the word of command that could convert the chaos of evil into the order of righteousness. Able to utter the word by which the mute, the blind, and the deaf could once more assume their normal faculties, and enjoy life in the fullest possible extent; and above all, taking hold of the wreckage of humanity left there as the result of sin, and heal it so that this became the standing witness of the power of Jesus, and the most abundant trophy of the saving grace of the cross of Christ. Finally, the Miracle Worker is dead; and, naturally, the miracle must cease. Instead of the cessation of miracle with the death of the Miracle Worker, the most conspicuous and startling of all these events, the result of establishing a proper connection between himself and the higher power, is brought into being,—the Miracle Worker is raised from the dead Himself, and is here before the people invested with new powers, and new influences, and is able to penetrate into conditions that hitherto he at least had never exerted his power to accomplish.

This is the author of my text. Had you not better be careful as to how you dispose of the injunction? Is it not in itself, by the mere relation of this synopsis of the historical background, sufficient to propel you, even against your will, to a careful consideration of every utterance that proceeds from the lips of so remarkable an individual. Triumphant over sin, environment, and circumstances; powerful to save in every condition, and found invincible in the face of death, the grave and hell—we have never had so remarkable a combination of power. We have had men who were merely good, like Socrates; men who were able, by the force of their magnetic influence, to draw men to them, like Demosthenes; but they could never bring back health to those stricken with disease. Men and women who, by reason of their strong personality, could inspire nobility of character in other men and other women, but we have never had duplicated the remarkable combination, the highest qualities the world has ever seen, as they were represented to us and for us in the person of our Lord, Jesus Christ, and when I think of the way that we are disposed to treat the sayings of this person, I am amazed that God can be so tolerant with us as he seems to be.

You remember on reading of three occasions the Pharisees, looking up through their scaly eyes, having their attentions attracted for a brief moment from their personal creeds and theologies, "this fellow"—that's all they said of Jesus. That was all they could say about him. We are guilty of sin, but not precisely in the same way, so far as detail is concerned. Our attitude very often is the quintessence of the nonchalance and indifference of these people. The way we treat his commandments, and his word! I therefore emphasize that you have never had in all the history of the race, so remarkable a combination of characteristics and powers and supreme nature as you have in the person of Jesus Christ. Consequently when this man, the monumental witness for God in the history of the race, ventures to center to himself a little coterie of people and give to them commandments; I say, in the very nature of things, we can not do other than consider, with the deepest respect and the gravest of investigation, all he may have said.

Now, my friends, another thought: After the resurrection of the Miracle Worker from the dead, tradition says he was with men about forty days and forty nights, and afterwards he ascended to heaven, where it is recorded, in the least authentic of our epistles, he now sits at the right hand of God, the Father Almighty. From thence he shall come to judge the living and the dead, and the Apostle Paul, the most authentic of all our evangelists, says that,—listen—the purpose of eternal judgment is this; that God will judge us individually by contrasting us with that Man Christ Jesus, and the measure of my success in identifying myself with the characteristics of my Lord will determine my eternal destiny. Shall I succeed? Shall I gravitate to his center of brilliancy? If I fail I must have and be content with an environment adapted to my personal character. Two points in regard to the person. His test is present and is future.

Now notice the difference. All authority in heaven and in earth is given unto me. Who is going to dispute it? What does authority mean? I am not going to juggle with the theological idea, but like an ordinary, sane man would treat a common sense word. I wouldn't commit my brethren to this, for I may be a heretic on this point, but will submit it to you. Authority means the right to act by virtue of power; power is the result of knowledge, and knowledge is the fruit of experience. The power and the right can only be the result or fruitage of knowledge. There can be no knowledge, only as the result of absolute experience. The priest of God, therefore, is the man who will represent God by right and power born of knowledge, the result of actual experience. Now you can discuss this question with any of the various ecclesiastical systems, I care not which, and that definition of authority alone must determine, ultimately, the rights to the claim of any one of them for the priesthood of God. Now, then, if that definition of authority is right, examine this statement of Jesus in the light of it. Has anyone ever told us more of God than Jesus our Lord? Has anyone ever brought God so near to us as our Lord Jesus Christ did? It was our Lord himself who rescued God from the lambent fires of hyperbole and gave him a living reality in the most holy and affectionate of all his names. "Our Father who art in heaven." Notice the statement made by the writer of the letter to the Hebrews. This is a remarkable association of words. "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds" (1:1, 2). Notice,—“whom he hath appointed heir of all things.” Who will compete with Jesus in regard to the authority to represent God and heaven, through “whom also he made the worlds”? Now listen: “Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power” (1:3). Friends, if you know anything at all of language, know that this man strains language to its utmost. There isn't any language in the whole of our prolific dictionary that can be employed to describe the value of Jesus Christ as this. All authority in heaven is given unto him. He knew more about God than any of us, and by the right of his knowledge, born of experience, he had the unquestioned right to speak for God and command us. I think that is orthodox logic.

Now notice the other side of it. Has anybody the right to represent men more fully and more accurately than Jesus? Does anybody know more about the deeps of human sorrow and human anguish than Jesus? Does anybody know more about the heights and altitudes of the possibilities inherent in man than Jesus? Has he not circumscribed the whole of the realm of human experience in his own nature and none can say, But my Lord never had to bear my burden, for the Lord has been the burden bearer of the world; and, as recorded in the prophetic language of John the Baptizer, Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world. He has the right, therefore, I shall not dispute it; thank God, he has the right to represent me before God every bit as much as he has the right to represent God to me. Now listen. Therefore, that means because of this, in virtue of this, as a result of this, therefore, “Go ye into all the world, baptizing all nations in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.” Now, I needn't argue this point much further, but will ask you one or two questions; and let me ask you to answer them at least in your own minds: How many places do we believe in, my friends? See if I represent most of you correctly. I believe in heaven; I believe in the earth; I believe in hell. I have seen all three places; I am forced to believe in them. He has authority in heaven. He has authority on earth. But it doesn't mention a word about the other place. Who controls down there? We are told that the Devil does the controlling down there. Well, listen: All power is given unto me in heaven and earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit.” Where does the authority come from by which baptism is denied? Now, when you have answered that, I needn't preach about baptism any more. I want you to think about it, if you will. It is serious. The thing is so amazingly plain and astonishingly simple that the more I read about baptism, the more I am wondering why we have to preach about it.

We shall next discuss the object of it. We have given you the authority. I needn't begin multiplying Scriptures to prove it. That could be done with a great deal of profit and interest, but I will leave it there, for most of the religious people believe that is the last word about Jesus Christ, and I know some have sometimes expressed a great deal of indignation when they heard that Jesus Christ has spoken since this, as claimed by Latter Day Saints, but he has never yet spoken to us a word of contradiction or would give us any encouragement in avoiding it, but every word has been toward its confirmation.

There is so much, therefore, for the origin and authority of baptism. Now, its purpose: The purpose of religion, let me repeat it, is the establishment of companionship between my soul individually and God consciously. The establishment of proper connection between the individual and whatever he conceives to be divine. That's the purpose of religion. Now, did you notice the way the Apostle Paul elaborated his wonderful argument on baptism? Turn with me to the sixth chapter of his letter to the Romans, once more. Now notice how this reads: “What shall we say then? Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound? God forbid. How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?” There had been a spiritual crisis in which the very power and influence that made impossible the perfect relationship between the individual and his God had been terminated, and that influence, as we showed you last evening, was the influence of sin, and by sin we mean the measure of the disparity between what I am and what I know God would have me be. Now, these hindering forces had been abolished in the spiritual crisis to which the Apostle Paul refers. What is it? Well, he reveals it. “Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?” It was a baptism of divorcement; a baptism of death. Now, what is death, my friends? Let me give you the definition of Herbert Spencer. I think you will find it in Drummond's “Natural Law in the Spiritual World.” Also in Herbert Spencer's works, I believe it is in that one of his works called “The First Principles.” “Life is the power of correspondence between the internal relation and the outward environment. Correspondence between the individual and the environment. Death is a cessation of correspondence between the individual and his environment.” I am sure that pretty well expresses the very thing I am talking about sin. Now let me ask you once more to notice it. “Life is the correspondence between the individual and his environment. Death means a cessation of correspondence between the individual and the environment.” Baptism, therefore, into Jesus Christ involves first of all the baptism of death, in which the individual becomes divorced from and ceases to correspond with the old environment. "We were buried, therefore, with him through baptism unto death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of his resurrection." In baptism, therefore, this peculiar spiritual crisis must take place. The cessation of correspondence between me and the old environment, and there must be a correspondence between me and a new environment if I am raised as Jesus was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father to newness of life. "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection; knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin." It is an experience, my friends, yielding knowledge and therefore authority. That's the argument in favor of the remission of sins. "For he that is dead to sin is freed from sin." Authentically declared to be free from sin. Now notice. "Now if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him."

You see the end and purpose of religion was the establishing of proper connection between self and God. In the language of the New Testament, it was the establishment of companionship between the individual and God and Jesus Christ. In baptism the issues are twofold. First the cessation of correspondence between the individual and the environment of sin, and the establishment of a new correspondence with a new environment, which issued in companionship with Jesus Christ. Now these therefore are the two purposes of baptism and involved in the evangelical baptism of the New Testament. May I now ask you one or two questions, my friends, in relation to this? Can a man be saved unless he is baptized? Is he to be saved first? We have here several definitions. One was that a man is saved when he can escape the consequences of his guilt. He is saved when he is made the recipient of the celestial place and favor of God. Salvation is neither nor both of these. I am going to borrow a quotation from Dr. Joseph Cook, Tremont Temple, Boston. He says a state of salvation means the loving of that which God loves, and the hating of that which God hates, and I think that Doctor Cook got that quotation from the Wesleyan hymn, for it contains one of Charles Wesley's inspirational songs, and he begins it like this, I think:

"Breathe on me the breath of life;
Fill me with life anew,
That I may love what thou dost love,
And do what thou wouldst do."

A man, therefore, to be in the enjoyment of salvation, must love the thing which God loves and hate the thing which God hates. If God loves baptism and I despise it, can you suggest how salvation can be experienced under these two different likes and dislikes? Dr. Joseph Cook is right. All theologians who have undertaken to discuss the matter with sincerity have reached that conclusion. Even Saint Augustine, the author of Christianity in Great Britain, gave utterance to this spiritual truism. "I am restless until I rest in thee, for thou hast made me for thyself." A man to be saved must be consciously at peace with God, and his emotions urging him continuously, to aspire after those things upon which the approval of God can be fixed. What's the use of asking me what I believe about baptism? In the light of that, the only question to be asked, and the only question of any concern, is the spiritual principle involved in the doctrine and rite of baptism necessary to the realization of this experience that determines the salvation or the want of it in any individual life?

Now the thing of which baptism is but the symbol—and when I say that I don't want you to think for a moment that I despise baptism as an ordinance, but I don't want you to think more of the ordinance and rite than you do of the principle involved in the rite and symbol. Baptism of itself is a mere rite, and ordinance, a shadow of the thing which the baptism is intended to symbolize. Now I have given you an illustration of the principle. It is the abandonment of sin, and issuance into correspondence with God. The remission of sin and raising up to a life divine anew. Enoch's condition was the description of a saved state. Enoch walked with God and talked with him; and, says Paul, "the life I live is hid with Christ in God." That's the end of it all. The object, therefore, of salvation, is that we, individually, shall emerge from the kingdom of death into the kingdom of life. Out of the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son. But how is baptism to be performed? First, no scholar of reputation can be found who can deny straightforwardly but what the word baptism, so far as its performance is concerned, means anything other than immersion, dipping, or overwhelming. Baptism means the immersion of the individual in water, completely, and it was not until the thirteenth century that the churches began to change it from immersion to sprinkling. Our Bible says we are buried with Christ by baptism unto death. We can leave it there.

Now, in conclusion, my friends. Here is the situation as we see it. It is the establishment of proper connection between myself and the higher power. My confidence in God, in my Master, leads me to conclude that his wisdom is unquestionable, his love is unfathomable, and his power is without any rival. My faith in my Master will carry me, in the spirit of fidelity, to an absolute surrender to the mind and will of God. My repentance follows, therefore, as the fruit of my confidence in my Master, resulting in an abandonment of my old rebellion, and the commencement of a life of surrender to the mind and will of God. May I stop here a moment to clothe this thought? Suppose we take for a moment the ordinary conditions of salvation, that a man to secure the favor of a heavenly place; or escape the threatened punishment because of a violation of the law of God, and he bows to the mind and will of God to become entitled to the favor of God. A surrender to the mind and will of God, and persistent fidelity to his will. Quite so. That being the case, what will you do with baptism? Our baptism, therefore, involves that we shall carry the process of our spiritual evolution to this extent, that when our repentance has issued in after-concern for our future, we shall begin to adjust ourselves to the mind and will of God as revealed in Christ Jesus, and the first thing that Jesus demands is, "Go ye into all the world. Teach all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," and with this point I will close. So the splendid psalm we had read for us this morning, the twenty-third, involves this same principle. The Old Testament reverts to it on several occasions. The Apostle Paul refers to it in his first chapter to the Romans. "For thy name's sake." The appeal of the prophet for the arm of the Lord to be made bare in the rescuing of Israel from threatening danger was based upon the honor of the name of the Lord. "He leadeth me beside the green pastures and still waters," for his name's sake. The honor of God is at stake to take proper care of me; supplying me with due nutrition, and with proper refreshment for his name's sake. Paul says, our gospel was printed abroad in all the world and men heard and believed, and were saved, for his name's sake. The honor of God is at stake. Baptized into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, means that we may be the common sharer of the responsibility of defending the honor of God and the escutcheon of heaven. God grant we may do so with fidelity.

SPIRITUAL DISCERNMENT.

The human intellect has made such wonderful conquests, and so often startled men, that when you confront them with a proposition of any nature, they refer it at once to the court of reason, inquiring of its reasonableness. They sometimes forget; indeed, it is the rule that they forget that this court of human reason has often been convicted of prejudice and bias so flagrant as to nearly discredit its dignity.

When we present the doctrine of Christ to the wise and learned, as the world goes; when we give them his theory of the creation and end of man, they at once meet us with the argument that it is unreasonable, and will not hear enough of the case to determine whether it is or not. It is not to be greatly wondered at that they are indifferent about hearing us, for they have been faked so often they suppose it is all a fake, and themselves are fakes with the rest of creation, if you could get their opinion when they think most soberly.

I shall not be understood as condemning reason; one should employ all the reasoning power he has, and pray God to give him greater power. But when he has done all of this, he needs to know that there is a well defined limit to the powers of the mind, beyond which we can not possibly reach, and that "We can not, by thinking, find out God." (Job 11: 7; also 37: 23.) Why can we not find him out? because he is unreasonable? Rather say he is beyond reason, and that reason will not reach unto him. That which is beyond reason is not necessarily contrary to reason; and it exalts God in our estimation when we know that we can not at will reach up and touch him, and leaves us without despair when we know that we can go into condition where we can call and he will come to us. There are conditions where he has promised to meet us, come to us, he being the active one, the movant.

To understand the limits and capacity of the mortal mind, it is well to consider that its entire capacity is comprised in the five senses. These five senses are avenues over which we get impressions on the mind, over which ideas come to us; and they are the only way we can get an idea. An idea is a picture on the mind, and reason is a comparison of these pictures. All physical things can reach the mind and leave their pictures there by one or the other of these five senses; but that which is metaphysical, beyond the physical, that which is spiritual can not reach us over a physical road any more than a locomotive can travel on the water; no more than sight could reach us over the sense of hearing. But suppose we add to the finite mind a sixth sense, called a spiritual sense. Could we not have impressions then of spiritual things, and reason over them? Would not pictures of spiritual things reach our intellects over the spiritual road? Wherefore it is written, in substance, "The world seeketh to know these things and knoweth them not, because they are spiritually discerned." In order to discern by the Spirit, we must have the Spirit; hence the ordinance of laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. When this comes, is it not the sixth sense to us? This is a new and additional characteristic or faculty given, begotten in us, with reference to which we are "new born babes" and the faculty is not at once given in full measure. We only catch a glimpse here and there, "see through a glass darkly," and can not comprehend at once the whole realm of spiritual truth. But we nourish this faculty by faith and obedience and "grow in grace." Then we do not reason of the beauty of landscapes to him that hath no eyes, nor of sweet music to him that hath no ears, nor can we show reason of spiritual things to him that hath not the spiritual sense. From thoughts kindred to these, I think, it must have been said, "Cast not pearls before swine," for they have not the capacity to appreciate them.

But I do not intend this last quotation in harshness to the world, for they are to be pitied and to be endured with patience, for they are cripples, not able to see as we see. But when there are wise men that want to reason, reason to them of the doctrine of Christ, showing them what position they must take to comprehend it.

Ever praying for the one cause,

LAY MEMBER.

WHO MAY BECOME MEMBERS OF THE UNITED ORDER OF ENOCH?

Those who have complied fully with the law of Christ, both as relates to duties known as spiritual and those referred to under said law as temporal . . . Thus complying with the law of equality. See Article 7, Articles of Association.

After a man has paid his tithing, how much shall he turn over as surplus? All above what is necessary for the support of his family. (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8, 9, 10, 11, and 14; also 18: 5; 58: 7.)

How much is every man made a steward over? As much as is sufficient for himself and family. (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9.)

How can a man carry on a large business if he turns over to the bishop all above what may be necessary for ample support for himself and family? The order will furnish him the amount necessary to carry on the business. (Doctrine and Covenants 101: 12.)

Is there any provision made for appointing stewardships in the order? Yes. (See Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2.)

Is there any difference in the stewardships given by the bishop and those received from the order? Yes; there may be. The Lord makes every man a steward over enough for himself and family through the bishopric. (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9.) And the order may enlarge his stewardship if he has the ability to operate a large business, and place him over any kind of business, large or small. (Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2, 3, 10, 12; Matthew 25: 15.)

Do all get stewardship from the bishop? Yes; when the law can be and is fully carried out. (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9.)

Do all get a stewardship from the order? All are not members of the order. That may be considered when the whole church is organized. (See Doctrine and Covenants 128: 1.)

If I have a stewardship from the order, should I report yearly to the order? Yes; see article 7, note A, Articles of Association.

When I join the order, should I receive a certificate, as mentioned in Doctrine and Covenants? Yes; you are entitled to a certificate when the law is fully complied with.

Is there a pattern or example given by the Lord, so we may know just how to comply with the law? Yes; Doctrine and Covenants 18: 5; 58: 7; also 42: 9, 10, 14.

Can equality obtain in the church if this law is not complied with? No; not as I understand the law.

Who is to determine, and say when the law is complied with? The bishopric and the individual; and if necessary, the high council may be called to determine the matter. (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8, 10; 51: 1, 2; 122: 6.)

Can Zion be built up and accepted of the Lord if this law is not carried out? No; see Doctrine and Covenants 38: 4-9; 42: 10; 49: 3; 51: 1, 2; 70: 2, 3; 77: 1; 102: 2, 3; 128: 8. What think you, brethren; are these answers correct?

IN WHAT DOES TRUE CHARITY CONSIST?

EDITORIAL NOTE.—To the foregoing question a number of prominent men have made answer in short articles in the Boston Globe. This week we give the answers of three of these gentlemen. In a later issue we follow with the remaining answers.

SIMPLE HUMAN KINDNESS—J. FORBES-ROBERTSON.

It has been suggested to me editorially in the short symposium in which I have been asked to express my views on the seasonable topic of "In what does true charity consist?" that my present medium of Mr. Jerome's symbolic play, "The passing of the third floor back" offers probably the best and most timely illustration of the subject in its underlying motive and observation of character. With this I am inclined to agree, for I am old-fashioned enough to believe that the modern misuse of the word charity as applying only or chiefly to money does not embrace the entire meaning of the expression in its broader and inner sense.

"Charity suffereth long and is kind." Unselfishness in thought and action is the mainspring of all true charity, as it is incidentally, perhaps, one of the prime motives which prompts "The passing of the third floor back."

One of the most inspiring features of my association with Mr. Jerome's work, as an actor and also as manager, is the extraordinary number of letters I receive from total strangers and playgoers of all kinds, from ministers and clergymen of all denominations and irrespective of creed, and from people who, generally speaking, never attend the theater in the ordinary way, testifying to the great good that is being done by this modern and by no means solely religious play.

And these are obviously written in no pharisaic spirit, but evidently come direct from the heart. In one such letter which I have received lately from a lady I have never had the pleasure of meeting, my correspondent, after many flattering tributes to play and players that I need not quote here, says:

"After all, souls can not lie, and we do see through people, though we often try to disguise the knowledge from ourselves. . . . And finally, is there anything of ultimate importance except to 'grow in grace' and 'Be ye kind one to another.'"

In this latter sentence it seems to me that we have the true and sacred meaning of charity in a nutshell, viz, kindness and forbearance to others. "Wherever you are, life shall be a little brighter; dull, tired faces shall be made to smile."

And what could be more appropriate at this charitable season of Christmastide than to ponder over and act upon this beautiful motto? For in this we have the Christian meaning of charity—the giving not merely of money, but the best that is in our better selves. And this, I think, is what Mr. Jerome has intended to convey in his message, which I have endeavored to embody in my personification of this modern "Passer-by," from whose mouth one seems to hear the echo of a divine voice ringing down the centuries and through the corridors of time: "You shall give me as a gift this promise, that through all times to the end you love one another."

A STATE OF MIND—CHARLES FLEISCHER.

A pope (the one whose initial means Alexander) sang a number of platitudes in his poetic "Essay on Man." Just the sort of thing to quote in trying to answer so frankly threadbare a query as to the nature of true charity. It is to the effect that, while in faith and hope mankind may disagree, all men's concern is Charitee.

Of course, I do not mean to mock this universal concern by my deliberate misspelling of it. I am quite willing that Alexander Pope's prosaic verse should really be a poetic fact.

But is it? Or is it not just a little "too good to be true"—as yet?

I may be pardoned a bit of autobiography, which lets me confess that I like to believe the best of everybody, and I want to suspect that abstraction, called "the human race," of all manner of fine qualities, real and possible.

Especially as Christmas comes along, it is pleasant to try to believe that all mankind loves—to love.

But I can not forget, as I write, the Russian lad who has just been with me. Four years ago he left "Holy Russia" (the sarcasm is not mine, but lies in Russia's assumption of the title) and, with becoming hope, he came to America and settled in one of the suburbs of Boston. Intellectually gifted and ambitious, he made that wonderful progress in his studies which has become a characteristic and commonplace classic with these young Russians. So long repressed over there, mind and soul expand abnormally in this land of opportunity.

The fellow's eyes fairly glistened with tears of spiritual joy, as he told me of his delight in mathematical problems.

And my heart groaned in agony as I listened to the further story of the petty persecutions which he suffered at the hands of classmates, teachers and "ministers of religion" (again, the sarcasm is in these men's use of the sacred title)—all because this young Jewish Russian's "Faith" disagreed with theirs, and because their good will, their "Charity" could, therefore, not enfold him.

Have I answered the question? By implication I have. And I regret that I must even seem to echo Thomas Hood's lament:

Oh! for the rarity
Of Christian charity—
Under the sun!

Charity, the word, comes from the Greek "Charitas," more familiar to us in the Latin form "Caritas." And it means good will, kindness, love. It is not a thing, nor even a deed, but a quality, a spiritual attitude. Like Boston, it is "a state of mind."

You can not "give charity"—that is, in terms of money, with hatred in your heart. Read James Russell Lowell's "Vision of Sir Launfal," and learn again: that "the gift without the giver is bare."

All of which, by this time, is perfectly obvious. We all know it. But much old knowledge, especially of ideal truth, remains new because we do not live it, do not practice it. And as for Love, we talk much twaddle about it. Hood was right: the spirit of Charity still is rare.

We may as well bathe ourselves in that finer ether of Charity, in the Christmastide, and pray that it "strikes in" and we begin at last to learn to love one another. That is what the great Jew, Jesus, taught. And, ages before him, another great Jew set up a similarly ideal standard, toward which we are striving with persistent and incurable growing-pains:

"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Such is real Charity.

GIVING AND GETTING—W. LATHROP MEAKER.

When our good friend Paul remarked to the Ephesian elders that "it is more blessed to give than to receive," he wasn't springing a private opinion on them. He was telling them of an eternal law. The evidence of this is in your own experience. When you sit in the calm of the evening hour and recall the events of the past, which does your memory love to linger over—the times when you helped or the times when some one helped you? The things you got or the things you gave?

Surely it has been more blessed to give than to receive, and, if you were natural, your whole aim in life would be to give, give, eternally give. Getting would be merely an incident—an accumulating of things to be given.

Yet we spend most of our time to-day in getting; and when we do give, it is so often grudgingly and of necessity. If you don't believe this, suppose you try a little experiment. Stop in to see a friend and propose to him something that will be to his advantage, and notice the glad hand you get. Then hunt up another friend and propose something by which you gain and he loses. "I'll think it over," says he. "I should like to do it, but——"

And we are all very much alike in this. We open up wide when things are coming our way. We close up tight when things are likely to get away from us. We act on the principle that it is more blessed to receive than to give.

How in the world did we ever manage to get things so hind-end-foremost? I'll tell you. It is not because we are vicious and malicious and selfish creatures. We are not. Our instincts are sound and our intentions are good. But we are handicapped, and we have to be careful.

Giving can be a natural and spontaneous process only when getting is equally natural and spontaneous. But getting is not natural and spontaneous under our present economic system. Most men do not get the full, normal return for their labor. And if they give a normal giving, without getting a normal getting, they will soon have a minus quantity on their hands. Therefore, they have to be exceedingly cautious.

What shall we say then? Shall we continue in selfishness that we may not go broke? God forbid! Rather let us correct the system which keeps most men from getting all that is coming to them. With the restoration of a natural income there will return a natural outgo, and "giving" and "blessedness" shall go hand in hand once more.

"If some of us were as diligent in the use of eyes and ears as we are in the use of our tongues, our wisdom and our attractiveness would increase."

THE BASIS OF CREATIVE WORK.

Dreaming is not always castle-building. Every real castle; every home, every building is an air-castle first, says Orison Swett Marden in Success Magazine. Legitimate dreaming is creative; it is bringing into reality our desires; the things for which we long and hope. A building would be impossible without the plans of an architect; must be created mentally. The architect sees behind the plans the building in all its perfection and beauty.

Our visions are the plans of the possible life structure; but they will end in plans if we do not follow them up with a vigorous effort to make them real; just as the architect's plans will end in his drawings if they are not followed up and made real by the builder.

All men who have achieved great things have been dreamers, and what they have accomplished has been just in proportion to the vividness, the energy and persistency with which they visualized their ideal, held to their dreams, and struggled to make them come true.

Do not give up your dream because it is apparently not being realized; because you can not see it coming true. Cling to your vision with all the tenacity you can muster. Keep it bright; do not let the bread and butter side of life cloud your ideals or dim your vision. Keep in an ambition-arousing atmosphere. Read the books which will stimulate your ambition. Get close to people who have done what you are trying to do, and try to absorb the secret of their success.

This mental visualizing of the ideal as vividly and as sharply as possible is the mental molding of the thing that will finally match your vision with its reality; that will make your dream come true.

Take a little time before retiring at night and get by yourself. Sit quietly and think and dream to your heart's content. Do not be afraid of your vision, your power to dream, for without a vision the people perish. It is a divine gift intended to give you a glimpse of the grand things in store for you and lift you out of the common into the uncommon; out of hampering, iron conditions into ideal ones, and to show you that these things can become realities in your life. These glimpses into paradise are intended to keep us from getting discouraged by our failures and disappointments.

BEARING BURDENS.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."—Galatians 6:2.

What a different world this would be if all the people belonging to the Christian churches could realize in their thinking and living Saint Paul's commandment! And it is also Christ's commandment, for it is but another way of putting his great law of love. And that means not only justice toward God and man, but active sympathy and the spirit of helpfulness.

How often we forget that the religion of Christ is something that is to make better and broader and stronger our characters; develop within us a friendlier, kindlier, more understanding sympathy with our fellow. The law of Christ is not all fulfilled in observing the round of religious services, however necessary and helpful. At most they are but means to an end.

In "bearing burdens" we fulfill the law of Christ, for if borne in the right spirit they will be prompted by love. And that leads us to the question, What are burdens? They are not alone sickness, accidents, misfortune, but have to do with the things of the spirit—troubles of the mind and soul, the struggle to be decent and Christian. To one having a hard fight to do right a little appreciation, a little charitableness, a little unselfish boost, may turn the tide toward victory.

But how different it sometimes is! We criticise, we question, we condemn, or at least remain silent when we ought to speak.

Fulfilling the law of Christ is simply carrying the spirit of Christ with us into all the relations of life. It is putting ourselves in the other fellow's place and then doing to him as we would have him do to us in like conditions. It is not to be sentimental or "gushy" or force ourselves on others. Sometimes we can best help to bear burdens by keeping silent, by simply holding in our minds the feeling of sympathy and love. If we maintain that attitude toward our neighbor and the world they will come to know it and feel it.

There is such a thing as spiritual telepathy. And it is not only the word and act but the thought that radiates the soul that will come to be an inspiration and help to our fellow.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ," the law of brotherliness, the law of love.—GUY ARTHUR JAMIESON, Saint Stephen's, Bentley Manor, New York City.—New York Herald.

HIGH PRICES LAID TO BIRD SLAUGHTER.

The National Association of Audubon Societies has come out with a statement that much of the high prices is due to the slaughter of birds, and that $1,000,000,000 of the increase may be charged each year to this source alone.

It is the pot hunter, the man who kills all and several that come within range of his gun, that the public must hold responsible for the depletion of its purse, says the association, for the slaughter of the birds which prey upon small rodents and insects that are harmful to growing crops has permitted the increase of the crop enemies to a point where little can be done to combat them. This slaughter is due to feather collectors, plain bird butchers, as well as to pot hunters, and it has brought on the already overburdened public an added load of woe, the ornithologists say.

The destruction of feathered insect eaters alone, the association says, has permitted the increase of the insects to such an extent that the total loss in added cost of food and clothing amounts each year to at least ten dollars for each man, woman, and child in the country. And all there is to show for this is gaudy plumage on milady's bonnet.

The statement by the associated societies says that the cost to the public is ever increasing, cumulative as the years go by. Each year that milliners and others are permitted to take their toll of bird life, higher prices must be the rule to the consumer of vegetables, fruit, cotton, and linen, and other staple goods of food and clothing. And, it is maintained, this statement is conservative, based on figures which can not be refuted.

Take the cotton crop: It is estimated by the ornithologists that the loss last year was between $25,000,000 and $30,000,000, principally because of the destruction of birds which feed upon the boll weevils that destroy the staple. This loss was shared by everyone who buys cotton, and, it is asked, who doesn't?

The story of the boll weevil some are prone to consider a joke, but, it is declared, it is far from being one. The States of Louisiana, Texas, Mississippi, Missouri, Alabama, and Arkansas are overrun with the insects and the ornithologists report that the rapidly disappearing bird life is permitting them to increase so that before long every plantation will be affected. And each penny of damage which the pest causes, must be paid in the last analysis by the American people.

The corn crop, too, has been grievously affected, it is said, by the disappearance of the birds which feed upon insects that destroy it.

Practically every article of food except meat, and even that has been affected indirectly by the added cost of fodder, it is said, has been raised in price as a result of the killing of the birds. Investigation by government ornithologists show that if it were not for the protection of birds, that devour or drive away the pests, the yields of gardens, fields, and orchards would be decreased by many millions of dollars a year. T. Gilbert Pearson, secretary of the National Association of Audubon Societies, says:

"Though the Easter season is saddened by the sight of wild bird feathers on bonnets, there is this year a plain economic reason for revolt at this show, in the findings of the government experts of the Department of Agriculture. We have heard of the butchering of meadow lark, whose diet is proved to consist of 75 per cent of crop destroying insects, in one Georgia community."

In conclusion a warning is uttered against further slaughter, and the need of immediate legislation to prevent it is urged.

My Mother.

She gave the best years of her life
With joy for me,
And robbed herself, with loving heart,
Unhesitatingly.

For me with willing hands she toiled
From day to day.
For me she prayed when headstrong youth
Would have its way.

Her gentle arms, my cradle once,
Are weary now;
And time has set the seal of care
Upon her brow.

And, though no other eyes than mine
Their meaning trace,
I read my history in the lines
Of her dear face.

And, 'mid His gems, who showers gifts
As shining sands,
I count her days as pearls that fall
From His dear hands.—Milton L. Murdock.

SCAMMON, KANSAS, April 9, 1911.

Dear Home Column: To the readers of the HERALD and especially to the Sisters' Prayer Union I am directed at this time to write. I have felt for some time to write for the prayers of the Sisters' Prayer Union, as I am the mother of seven children who need a mother's love and help and care to train them up in the way they should go; and I am trying to do this, but it seems very difficult sometimes, and so very trying on my nerves in the afflicted condition I am in at the present time. I have been taking medicine nearly a year from Bro. Joseph Luff. My afflictions seem mostly in my head. My right ear has gone entirely deaf, and my left ear seems to be gradually going deaf. I have been administered to many times, and my hearing will get better, then it seems a little cold settles in my head and my hearing is gone again. I know the Lord is able to restore my hearing back to me even in both ears, if it is his holy and righteous will, and I try always to pray to know what his will is concerning me, and if it is not his will to restore my hearing to me in this life that he will make me satisfied to be deaf, if he wants me to be so. Only I desire to know for myself what his will is concerning the matter. As a mother in Israel, I feel the great responsibility resting upon me to raise my loved ones up right, and it is my greatest desire to live to raise them up to manhood and womanhood and to do my duty by them in all things and at all times, and I am so severely tried when I can not hear what they say. There have been times when they have had to speak very loud to me and then I could not make out what they would say, but I am not quite that bad at present. I have had this affliction nearly thirty-five years. Sometimes it appears as though my mind would entirely leave me if I do not get well of it soon, for there is always a noise in my ear that I do hear that is going, going, going all the time, day and night. It never stops, and it seems sometimes that I can not endure it much longer. But God knows just what we can stand.

I have been healed many times and have seen my children healed many times, and I know God's arm is not shortened, and that at his word through his servants I can be healed, if it is his will. Please pray for me, dear sisters of the Prayer Union, and all who have taken upon them the name of a Saint, I would love to have your prayers in my behalf at this time. I feel my weakness and unworthiness as a Saint, but am striving daily to overcome self and to live for the good of others.

I have just read the letter in the HERALD of March 22 from Bro. D. S. Leavey, and I just thought, if that man can be restored to health and hearing, why can not I be too? There is nothing impossible with God for them that love him and serve him and keep his commandments. I expect there will be many of the Saints who read this letter who know me personally. I am the oldest granddaughter of Bro. W. S. Taylor, who lives in the Columbus Branch. That branch has always been my home until about three years ago we moved here to Scammon and joined the Scammon Branch.

Now once more imploring the Saints for their earnest faith and prayers that I may be healed or that God may speak peace to my soul as to what is for my best good, I will close for this time.

I remain your sister in the true faith,

CLARA M. MERCER.

Request for Prayer.

Florence Hays, of Taberville, Missouri, requests the Saints of the Prayer Union and the Saints everywhere to pray for her, that if it is the Lord's will she may be healed of her sore affliction. She is a worthy Saint and she has two little ones that need a mother's care.

Going higher and higher, shining more and more, growing stronger and stronger, "forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth to the things which are before," these are the natural impulses of the consecrated life. As one has aptly said, "Not retrospect, but perfect, should be the Christian's watchword." Christians, thank God that there are peaks to climb, troubles to burnish us, and tonics for the spirit's life. God is the goal. Heaven is the place. They are both above us, as high and holy incentives for our best climbing, brightest shining, and greatest strength. God help us to do our best to reach such a goal, with such holy environments.—Ida Q. Moulton.

SAINT JOSEPH, MISSOURI, May 26, 1911.

Editors Herald: I sent you a pastoral letter last week. In that letter I refer to the Far West district conference to be at Cameron, Missouri, June 3 and 4. I made a mistake;—the conference will be the 10th and 11th of June.

Your brother,
E. L. HENSON.

CHATHAM, ONTARIO, May 27, 1911.

To the Editors Herald: In my pastoral letter of May 24, 1911, in the appointment of the missionaries to their fields, I wrote you "Thomas Miller," which should have read "Thomas Mills." Please make the correction soon as convenient, noting it to be my fault, not yours. In line twenty of the pastoral letter, the word by should be put in immediately after the word but, thus reading "but by our own earnest efforts."

I thank you for promptness in publishing the pastoral and for its neat appearance. With best regards,

Sincerely your brother,
R. C. RUSSELL.

OWENSVILLE, INDIANA, May 21, 1911.

Dear Saints: As I am alone this beautiful Sabbath morning, and have no church nor Sunday school to go to, I will try and bear my testimony through the HERALD. I am still trying to live true to God, and when I call on him in the right way for help, my prayers are always answered. I have many trials and troubles surrounding me, but I am thankful that I can call on the good Master to help me shun the very appearance of evil; he is always ready and willing to help us all if we are faithful unto him.

I read the HERALD and Book of Mormon. I find them a great help. I have heard no preaching since Elder Jacob Halb was here in March. We are expecting him back in a month or so. The people in this part of the country love to go and hear, and show a good interest, but don't believe in baptism as they should. They have let other denominations make them believe there is no such thing as baptism, but I think if we can get another elder in here, before long there will be a few obey the gospel.

There are very few Saints here. Hope it will soon be so we can get a branch started, as it would be a great help for the Saints, and give them work to do for the Master.

Oh, Lord, "I want to live so humble unto thee, that in thy presence I may spend a blest eternity."

With love to all the Saints,

MARY J. THOMPSON.

MINDEN CITY, MICHIGAN, May 25, 1911.

Dear Herald: Of late the thought has come to me so many times to write a letter to the HERALD, and I would always put that thought off, thinking I hadn't time, and if I wait a while perhaps some one of this branch more talented than I would write soon and that would let me out. But to-day as I was reading the HERALD and felt so wonderfully blessed, the thought came again, You must write; and though it may be little I can give you, dear readers, yet I feel I must do my part and not only receive food for the soul, but give a little too.

Many times when I felt discouraged on account of the many mistakes I make from time to time, I have been greatly cheered by reading our church papers; so I trust and pray that this may at least help one who may be struggling as I am to gain eternal rest. We as a branch have great reasons to rejoice, for we truly have been and are being greatly favored of the dear Lord. Have had quite a number of valiant soldiers of the cross to preach for us within the last six months. They were Elders B. St. John, William Davis, R. Etzenhouser, William Dowler, F. Gregory; also Bro. R. Weaver visited our branch and we felt sad when the parting time came and we had to say good-bye to each of these brethren. They all gave us much cheer and we felt better able to fight the battles of life; and we believe they felt cheered while here, at least some expressed themselves so, for they knew their labors of love were appreciated. Elder Leverton has been with us most of the time for six months. We truly are glad he came to Minden City, for his "help meet."

We had a time of rejoicing last Sunday during our prayer meeting. The gift rested on Brother Leverton and two of my brothers were called to office,—Jacob Volz to the office of teacher, and William Volz to the office of deacon. Brn. Joseph O'Brien and Tennyson Summers were called to prepare, as the Lord has a work for them to do in his great harvest field, to bring souls into his kingdom. Oh, that we all together may be lively workers to build up the cause of Christ, which we love so much.

I am sorry that some of this branch are not as active along gospel lines as we would like to see them, but thankful that it is no worse. Hope that we may all arise to a higher sense of our duties and not be slothful or shrink from any duty that may cross our pathway.

I am thankful for the gospel and the many blessings we have received all along life's journey. Have had some trials, as all Saints do, for we are not to travel on flowery beds of ease in this world. I am thankful that my parents taught me to pray, for in prayer is my greatest strength. Even when I was quite young in years before I belonged to this church, I would ask the Lord to help me when difficulties arose. I hope to live humbly, and faithfully discharge every known duty, that I may enjoy more of God's Holy Spirit, and that when my life's work is ended that I may dwell with Christ and the pure in heart.

I am longing for Zion to be redeemed. I hope that those who do not pay their tithing will do so before it is too late. Surely the Lord will bless you, and he only asks for his just dues, so Christians wake, no longer sleep; shall we rest while others weep; shall we sit with folded hands when the Lord himself commands?

Please, dear readers, remember me in your prayers, for I feel my weakness much, and I desire to be an overcomer.

LENA VOLZ HENRY.

WEBSTER, SASKATCHEWAN, CANADA, May 20, 1911.

Dear Friends: I presume you will be surprised to hear from a lonely reader in this far away country of Canada. But my heart longs for earnest prayers of God's believing children who feel an interest in a lonely mother that is looking, hoping, and trusting to our God for a home in her old days. I am here with my three girls and am planning on putting the two oldest in an Iowa school and going to Montana to take up homesteading life again. I feel a great need of God's help and divine power, for in him I trust to show me where best I should go for land and friends; and wherever I go and settle, I shall say the Lord sent me there and will not leave me nor forsake me. I have some means to start with on a home, but will feel the greatest need of God and his presence, for I have no mother or father or human hand, only as God gives me strength to bear up and sends his ministering spirits.

Will my sisters and brothers plead and pray for me. I feel lonely, but "simply to the cross I cling."

From God's believing child,

LILY B. STEARNS.

FANSHAW, OKLAHOMA, May 24, 1911.

Dear Saints' Herald: We are striving to keep the banner of Prince Immanuel aloft, but have to labor against adversities, as will always be the case until Satan is bound and the Saints are gathered home to Zion. Bro. E. A. Erwin and J. W. A. Bailey have just closed a very interesting meeting at this place. Peace and good will seemed to prevail throughout the services. Saints were strengthened and built up, and the gospel seed sown in some honest hearts outside of the fold.

Our branch is in a fair condition to grow spiritually and numerically, if all will be faithful to the cause, push forward in the work. The conference of the Eastern Oklahoma District meets with us June 3. We are hopeful for a grand and good time. Pray for us, dear brethren and sisters everywhere, that we may overcome the power of the evil one.

In bonds,

W. O. BRANNON.

From Warring Mexico.

Perhaps you have heard of the battle at Torreon now ten days past, but until yesterday no one was permitted to send letters out from Torreon. After two days battle in the country and one day and two nights in the city, the Federal soldiers fled, while the victorious Maderistas turned the prison into smoke and freed their comrades so long confined within its walls. During the season, honest, God-fearing men, because of their political sentiments, were caught and taken to that prison, some of whom we have heard pray at our own church services.

In the country, two battles were "on" at the same time, one north of the city, the other east, the mountains joining the town on the south and west completed the boundary. The country battles were so close that we could see soldiers, hear the guns, and even some bullets buzzed over our houses. As the Federals worked their way back within the city fortifications, the Maderistas followed, filling the streets with loud shooting and cries for "Viva Madera." Discovering at once their sympathizers, the Maderistas entered the largest houses, including the one where we have rooms, turned them into forts, and fired from the upper stories. Consequently we readily accepted the invitation to exchange for rooms in the lower story, where the walls were thicker and quite safe from danger.

Some forty Maderistas took up their abode in this house, and prominent among the willing cooks were to be seen Sisters Pender and Mannering. The constant firing from street and house top continued one day and two nights, ending in the death of several hundred. A few were even killed by bullets passing through their own house wall. Dead men and dead horses were in close view of our door. Our rooms were scarred with bullets, and new airholes we found in Brother Pender's door.

Trusting in the Lord who sent us, we did not expect severe injury, but the changing of beds and from floor of wood to brick has doubtless to do with the cause of Brother Pender's present relapse. The city is yet to be reconquered and then we will be safe to resume our mission work.

The news of the resignation of President Diaz is hailed with gladness throughout the republic, and we expect better days for Mexico. The long desired liberty which seems to be dawning will doubtless prove helpful to our religious cause. Three fourths of the great Madera Arma wear pictures of Mary, Jesus, and ancient saints upon their hats. A young soldier told us that "We wear these pictures because they help us." One thing we observed was that among those without pictures on their hats were several of the officers and we are informed that Madera himself is not a Catholic.

There are a few thousand soldiers here yet, Maderistas, and the Catholics go right on with their meetings.

We Protestants in general, are awaiting more satisfactory conditions, which must necessarily come. Outdoor religious services have heretofore been prohibited in Mexico. We hope the coming change in the Government may be more tolerant in this respect. A certain Protestant denomination here was fined fifty dollars for holding a baptismal service at the river. They were reported by a Catholic priest. The Adventists' font, which we used in our baptismal service, is inclosed by a room.

Hopefully in the cause, I am your brother,

W. H. MANNERING.

Aylor-Chism Debate.

Another forensic battle has been fought and another victory for the restored gospel.

Fitzhugh, Oklahoma, is a "new place" for our work, the first opening being made here last winter by W. M. Aylor. Everybody here is highly pleased with his preaching, except a few who call themselves "Christians." They insisted on a debate—nothing else would satisfy them: now they have received what they ordered—perhaps they are satisfied. Indeed, about ninety per cent of those attending are jubilant over the complete victory won by Bro. W. M. Aylor. Bro. Earl D. Bailey acted as moderator and won many friends.

Mr. Chism followed his usual line of argument (please pardon the word) and vindictive opposition. He makes a strong effort to prove the apostles a constitutional committee in a provisional government; and as such they have no successors. He contends that there was no church before Pentecost,—only a provisional one, a kind of territorial form of government, and that the apostles were, as stated above, a constitutional committee. Mr. Chism also contends that the church was fully and completely established on the Day of Pentecost—hence it would logically follow, according to his own position, that there should be no apostles after Pentecost. But this argument would prove too much,—hence nothing.

This champion of Texas claims that Barnabas, of Acts 13: 2, is the same man as Matthew the publican, Matthew 10: 3.

Again, in 1 Corinthians 12: 1, the word gifts should not be there, it being interpolated—supplied by the translators. Therefore the verse should read: "Now concerning spiritual brethren, I would not have you ignorant." This was a new twist he introduced to set aside spiritual gifts. But fortunately the people would not believe that way.

Before the debate he and his brethren boasted much about defeating Aylor, frightening him off the first session, and burying Mormonism. Mr. Chism opened his first speech with a vicious tirade against Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon. I never saw him before in such a rage. He promised what he was going to prove against Joseph Smith, and then in a fit of passion, said: "Get after me—get after me—get after me." It was not only Brother Aylor to "get after" him, but his own brethren, and the mass of people who attended the debate turned against him.

The people were very friendly to us all through the debate, and many told us they had a better opinion of Joseph Smith the Prophet, than before. The debate closed Sunday night. We announced meetings to continue, and last night we had sixty or more out to hear us on the mission of Christ. We are very grateful for the favor of the people and the blessings of God. Surely the Lord is with us; and verifying his promise wherein he said: "I will give you favor in the eyes of the people." We have much assurance of the truthfulness and divinity of our work. "We have met the enemy, and they are ours." We give God the glory for the victory of his truth.

My mission address is Cleburne, Texas.

Yours rejoicing in the truth of the angel's message,
FITZHUGH, OKLAHOMA, May 23.

News From Missions

Missouri.

After a stay of nine days at the General Conference, which was pleasant and profitable, I left for Hiteman, Iowa, to pay a long expected visit to my nephew and family, J. L. Morgan. Hiteman is a coal mining town, of about four thousand population. One of the mines there has a record of hoisting twenty-one hundred tons of coal in eight hours. There is a branch of the church of 174 members. Bro. Parley Batton is the president, and has the good will and support of all his brethren. It is a pleasure to find the brethren dwell in peace; long may unity and love rule supreme. This branch is fortunate in having so many faithful workers. The Sunday school is outgrowing its accommodations, and they can with consistency sing, "Give us room that we may dwell."

The Religio is also alive. I have forgotten the names of those in charge of the Sunday school and the Religio. I judged they would not have any difficulty in getting efficient officers for either, as there is plenty of good material to choose from.

I preached twice on Sunday, April 16, and four nights in the week. I had promised to be at Ottumwa, Iowa, the following Sunday, the 23d, or I would have remained at Hiteman as there was a strong pressure brought to bear to have me postpone the appointment; but I thought, as they had so many good local men, and were frequently visited by the officers of Lamoni Stake, and some of the missionary force, that I had better fill my appointment at Ottumwa. At Hiteman there is quite a number of young people, and I was impressed to speak on Monday evening to them especially, so an invitation was extended to all the boys and girls, within and without the church, to be present. The evening was rather unfavorable, indications of a wet night, but there was a large gathering of the young people and a good sprinkle of the older ones. The following is an outline of my talk:

First, obedience to parents. Second, reverence and respect for the house of the Lord; not to be disorderly while coming in or going out, or while in their seats; no whispering or passing of notes during the service. Third, to observe the Lord's day; not to go to places of amusement, ball games, fishing, theaters. Fourth, to seek for their associates such as reverence and respect the Lord and his truths. Fifth, courtship not to begin in their childhood days. Sixth, not to have too many on the string at one time; that is, not to make appointments to go with one one night, and three or more others during the week. Seventh, not to keep late hours. Eighth, matrimony. In seeking the hand of one as a companion in life, do so with a prayerful mind. A son or daughter who is kind or affectionate to those of their home, father, mother, brother or sister, will do well to tie to. But the one who is unkind, sulky, snappy, does not appreciate a good home or the inmates, and is above doing an honest legitimate labor; go slow. See that he or she has been converted.

I do not know that the young people of Hiteman needed this line of thought any more than they do elsewhere, but I think it was timely and profitable.

I came to Ottumwa, Friday, preached at 11 a. m. and 7.30 p. m., Sunday, the 23d, and during the week; and again twice on Sunday, the 30th. There is a membership of about seventy-four, in charge of Bro. Daniel Williams, priest. In my judgment Ottumwa is a good field for labor; it has a population of twenty-two thousand. Quite a number are interested in the work, and I hope that the district authorities or the missionary in charge will supply the needs for that place. The sisters' aid society are having their church building painted, and the next step will be to equip the house with electric fixtures. While there I made my home with my sister and husband, Bro. and Sr. Howell Price. Bishop George Lambert suggested to me at Lamoni that I pay the Saints there a visit. I also consulted the missionary in charge.

While at Hiteman I was called to the home of Bro. J. Watkins, of Ward, (a small mining town two miles from Hiteman,) to administer to their son, Alma, who was severely sick with pneumonia, in company with other elders. Next morning I heard that a chance for the better had come, which surely must have been appreciated very much by the family, and all the Saints and friends. The church building from Cleveland, Iowa, was moved to Ward. There was, at one time a good branch at Cleveland, which is about three miles from Lucas. The mines closed down, and the happy homes of the Saints were broken up. Quite a number located at Ward. I called on Bro. and Sr. Howell Jones, whom I met at Aberaman, South Wales, England, in 1903. They have family of four little girls and a baby boy, the picture of health. Brother Howell still makes the house echo with the songs of Zion, especially when he can get a few of the Saints to join him, while he makes the organ do its part. It was only a call with the understanding that at some future time we would renew the visit.

As we were passing the Saints' church on our way back to attend the Saints' service at Hiteman, 2.30 p. m., the sweet influence that accompanied the song within the little church, though only a few present, not to exceed twenty, greeted our heart and ears, so that we concluded to worship with the Saints at Ward. We enjoyed ourselves not only listening to the earnest prayers and testimony but taking part with them. Although a stranger to nearly all I felt perfectly at home. During our meetings from Hiteman several of the Saints from Ward were present, and if we visit Hiteman again, shall try to spend part of the time at Ward, where there are good Saints.

Bro. John Thomas of Lucas, formerly of Perth, South Wales, with his motherless children, make their home at Ward, Sister Thomas having passed on to her reward nearly two years ago. She was truly of Israel; a woman of great faith; wonderful blessings came to her and her family in answer to prayer.

My field of labor this coming year is my home district, Far West; but by request and consent of those in charge, I am to labor the summer months in the Saskatchewan District, Northwestern Canada. Expect to leave for my field, the first week in June. My daughter Ruth will accompany me. Our district conference convenes here, June 10 and 11. It is expected that there will be a large attendance.

In the daily program of the Cameron Chautauqua, to be held at Cameron, Missouri, July 29 to August 6, 1911, the name of Bishop R. C. Evans of Toronto, Canada, appears as one of the speakers. He is to lecture Saturday, May 5, at 3 p. m., subject, "What is man?" Glad our brother is coming. Hope he can hold a series of meetings at Cameron, and also attend the Stewartsville reunion, which will be the first week in September.

May has made a new record. It has been ninety to ninety-four in the shade most of the time, with only light, scattering showers, but from eleven o'clock last night, until seven this morning, we have had a good rain, which was very much needed. It has cheered saints and sinners. This has been an excellent spring for the farmers to get in their crops. We hope to have a good harvest of grain and fruit.

Your brother,

CAMERON, MISSOURI.

WM. LEWIS.

Cookes Point, Texas.

Here I come again, to tell your many readers something about how we are getting along in these parts. We are still keeping the camp fire blazing, Sunday school every Sunday, good attendance and interest all the time. Preaching regularly, and good interest and attendance, too.

A brother by the name of Spiller, who lives at College Station, came last Saturday and brought his wife and children; his wife to be baptized, and his children to be blessed. She was baptized Sunday, and the children were blessed, by the writer. We had an interesting and profitable service. Brother Spiller and wife went on their way homeward Sunday evening, rejoicing, because they had discharged their duties. The brother seems to be very sanguine as to the prospects for the good cause at the College.

We move along slowly but surely in Texas. The Utah missionaries come around once in a great while, to visit our section; there were two in our section last week; they said that they were told before they arrived in our part that we were of their church, but when they found out better, they did not ask us for the privilege to preach for us (or to us). I had quite a talk with them; they gave me a copy of their Elders' Journal, published at Independence, Missouri. In it I noticed a sermon preached by Joseph F. Smith at their general conference, in which he states that there is no man on earth at this time that has the authority to practice polygamy or to take a plural wife. He seemed to be very anxious for the United States to make additional laws to prohibit it, and he proposed to assist in executing such laws with all his power; yet he has five living wives at this time that he cohabits with. Oh! Consistency, where art thou? Not with Joseph F. Smith. If he wants and expects the people to believe that he is sincere in what he preaches, he must practice what he preaches.

I baptized little Amelia Franklin last Sunday; she is now in her eleventh year; I blessed here when she was an infant. She is a member of our Sunday school. I felt well in baptizing and confirming her; I am very hopeful that she will make a faithful member of the church.

I am yours in gospel bonds,

MAY 28, 1911.

E. W. NUNLEY.

"In our civilization the trouble is that all is for youth and too little for age. The man who can lift the load, run swiftly, hit hard, and push his fellow down the hill is the man for whom all the plans are made. There is little planning, little place or honor in the world of to-day for the old; little heed is paid to their dreams; there is little appreciation of their kindness and unselfishness. But it will not always be thus. The day will come when the youth will listen with respect to the teachings of the old and look with love and reverence upon the unselfishness of the old. That day will come, and, let us hope, will not long be delayed."

When faith and patience, hope and love,
Have made us meet for heaven above,
How blest the privilege to rise,
Snatched in a moment to the skies!
Unconscious to resign our breath,
Nor taste the bitterness of death.

News From Branches.

Saint Louis, Missouri.

Since last report we have been favored with having Bro. J. A. Tanner with us en route to his Chicago mission, and were pleased to listen to several instructive sermons delivered by him. Bro. T. J. Elliot and George Reeves also gave us some good thoughts for consideration, and on the morning of the 21st, a series of short talks by various members of the priesthood was enjoyed. The theme they discussed being, Why do we not grow?

We have had one baptism the past month, that of a brother by Brother Beaird.

The Sunday school and Religio officers are working energetically to make things interesting and pleasant. The Sunday school is to have a bazaar the evening of May 31, the profits of which are for our Christmas Offering.

Some have been very seriously afflicted during the past month, but we are very thankful indeed that all are reported as improving nicely. We appreciate the love and mercy of our heavenly Father. We trust God's blessings will be with his servants the coming year and much good will be accomplished.

Yours in Christ,

E. M. PATTERSON.

Central Church, Kansas City, Missouri.

Bro. W. E. LaRue preached his farewell sermon on Sunday morning, the 15th instant, to quite a large audience, and is now preparing to leave for his appointed field of labor in Greater New York City. At present he and family are visiting relatives in Independence. During Brother LaRue's pastoral labors of some two and one half years, himself and family have made many friends who regret to have him part with us at this time; and the work in the First Kansas City Branch has been built up very materially. The members and friends of Central Church extend to Brother LaRue and family their kindest regards for success in their future fields of labor.

Bro. T. W. Williams, who succeeds in the pastorate here, returned to Los Angeles Wednesday last in order to make preparations for removing here. It is to be hoped that he may be able to return with his family at an early date. In the interim it remains for each one of us to put his shoulder to the wheel and keep everything going. No true soldier will desert the ranks now. Let it be said when Brother Williams returns, that the ranks were full and every soldier holding the banner of the King aloft.

Sunday the Stake Presidency occupied the pulpit, Brother Bond in the morning and Brother Harrington at night. The attendance was light, but the sermons were very edifying and highly appreciated.

The attendance at Sunday school was only 114. This is a record breaker—not for the bigness of it, but the opposite. We are unable to account for the slump. Of course it rained, but what ought that to do with it?

At the quarterly business meeting, the 10th inst., the following were elected to fill the different branch offices: Thomas W. Williams, president; Harvey Sandy, presiding priest; W. C. Rambo, presiding teacher; G. W. Salander, presiding deacon, and L. H. McDonald, assistant; Lott Sandy, clerk; Srs. S. C. Diggle and Amy Winning were sustained as chorister and organist, respectively; Sr. D. H. Blair, member of the library board. Bro. R. Winning was received on letter of removal from Saint Joseph, Missouri.

The Union Oratorio Society and Mendelssohn Quartet sang "The Holy City" at the church Thursday evening, the 25th inst. This society is composed of the choirs of the Howard Memorial, Independence L. D. S. and Central L. D. S.

churches. Admission was free to all. A large, appreciative audience was in attendance.

Bro. Raymond Burroughs was baptized by Brother LaRue at the font last Wednesday evening just before prayer meeting, and confirmed by Brethren LaRue and Williams.

Bennington Heights.

When we organized our branch, we called ourselves the Centropolis Branch, but after the organization, we bought a lot on which to build a church at corner of Bennington avenue and Thirteenth street, a mile west of Centropolis, where we are now worshipping in our own church building. We organized with forty members; we have received into our branch since fourteen members by letter, and last Sunday Brother and Sister Jackson's oldest son and daughter were baptized, Bro. B. J. Scott officiating.

We have a good, prosperous Sunday school, also a good Religio. Most all our preaching has been by our local minister. At our last business meeting we elected officers as follows: Elder, D. F. Winn; priest, C. A. Selbe; teacher, George Dries; deacon, James Cleveland. We also elected Bro. H. L. Ashbaugh chorister; Sr. Clara Tonnehill, organist; and Brother Dries, secretary. Sr. H. L. Ashbaugh made the branch a present of the piano, which was very much appreciated and acknowledged by a vote of thanks.

F. C. WARNKY.

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, 6223 East Fifteenth street.

Independence, Missouri.

The Ladies' Aid and Laurel Club continue to be faithful in their efforts to liquidate the debt on the dining hall.

On Sunday, the 21st, there were seventy-five out at the eight o'clock meeting, and the attendance at Sunday school was 744. Bro. S. A. Burgess reviewed the lesson; also on Monday evening delivered an interesting lecture, before an audience of about sixty, on the subject of government. He treated on monarchy, including empire, kingdom and oligarchy; and our brother upheld the idea that if the king was a righteous man, being in the possession of the attributes of a Christ-like leader, then would that government be the kind that God would delight in, and it would be a blessing to all his children.

Bro. W. E. LaRue, at the opening of the Sunday morning sermon, read from the eighteenth chapter of Acts, from the twenty-fourth verse to the end. Our brother stated that he was opposed to the title of "Church of the Devil" as applied to the sectarian churches, and thought men may take pattern from this man Apollos and some of the religionists of the Old World. He said, "not to do so, would be narrow-minded and intolerant." The text reads, "For he mightily convinced the Jews, and that publicly, showing by the Scriptures that Jesus was Christ." Also, "They took him unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly, and have only attained a degree of proficiency for service."

Like the morning sermon of the 14th by Brother Williams, this discourse was criticised by a few; but throughout it was fraught with spiritual fervor, and a liberality of sentiment toward all men; and there was an optimistic viewpoint in all his utterances, even concerning many conditions prevailing in the world.

The afternoon prayer meeting, also that of the Woman's Auxiliary, held later, were both of much import. Mrs. Cora R. Morris, a visitor, read before the sisters a fine paper on educational lines, and child training; and as newly elected executive local officers, in this work, we now have Srs. D. J. Krahl, B. C. Smith, Abbie A. Horton, and J. C. Nunn.

At the prayer service the Saints were encouraged and edified by the testimonies of Brother Arber, who also held forth in the evening, Brother Kemp, Bishop May, Brn. Deam, and H. R. Mills, and Brother Chatburn and Sister Frick. Elder W. J. Haworth from Australia presided. He exhorted the Saints in the spirit of brotherly love and cheered the brethren in closing with these words, "The same Spirit accompanies God's people everywhere, and is brightly burning in the hearts of his children."

The events of importance to the Saints transpiring from day to day, and week to week, have hitherto been running so smoothly, that it has been an easy task for the humble writer to give a full and succinct account of them. Not so of the doings of the past week. Meetings upon meetings, intermixed with secular functions, have been the order; and yet every event has been enjoyed, and every sermon or lecture has had its appreciative audience, though occasionally this has been made apparent to only a small minority of our membership.

On Monday evening, the 22d, before a gathering of about sixty, Elder S. A. Burgess, of Saint Louis, began a series of educational lectures of government,—the subject divided into the monarchy, the empire, the kingdom, and the oligarchy. His effort from first to last evinced clearness of thought and deep research; and no speaker could be more enthusiastic or have a more forceful and happy way of treating this important subject, before both old and young, than our brother.

On the same evening, the "Good Times Club," in the capacity of a box social, met in the hall. There was much excitement, but nobody was hurt, and judging from the volume and quality of the sound, which was heard about a block away, there was a fine attendance, and the consensus of opinion is that the society is well named.

On the evening of the 23d, was an assembly at the Central High School composed of graduates, pupils, and parents, many of whom were Latter Day Saints. They met, as is the custom annually, to enjoy and engage in commencement exercises and to show as citizens and patrons, their keen appreciation of the people's rare educational privileges enjoyed not only here, but throughout the States. Out of seventy-three graduates from the high school, several of our boys and girls received prizes and honorable mention for essays and proficiency in their studies.

At the same hour also "The Holy City," a sacred cantata, was given at the church by about seventy trained singers, among them several from the choirs of the Central Church, Kansas City, and of the Stone Church, Independence. The chorus filled the auditorium with rich melody, and it was a fine display of musical talent, and a rare treat for the immense audience present.

On the evening of the 24th, there was to the Saints a good opportunity presented to choose between going out to a lecture at the church and to a second meeting at the high school for the benefit of the ward schools, having sixty-three graduates. By the way, these children who are interested in a most laudable work, depend not only upon their own efforts, in order to succeed at school, but also upon their parents' help and encouragement. But the appointment for the second of the series of meetings by Bro. Burgess had been duly made, and although the interesting subject of democracy was discoursed upon, there were not over eighty present to hear it.

The last two lectures by our brother followed on Thursday and Friday evenings, and the subjects presented were, The growth in toleration and liberty of the last hundred years, Church and state, the government of the church, Religious liberty, Ecclesiastical courts, The attitude of the civil courts, and the holding of property.

The meeting of the Religio was held as usual on Friday evening in the basement, and both crowds of Saints pursued their way without any harm or annoyance to either of them.

Although the Good Times Club, Religio, and the high, ward and rural school exercises conflicted somewhat with our little meetings at the church, there was excellent interest shown, and to our Brother Burgess was given at the close a vote of thanks, and an expression of our appreciation for his kindly effort.

The Sunday school and prayer meetings on Sunday were well attended and enjoyable and at the preaching service, the Saints received excellent instruction from Brn. H. O. Smith and J. W. Rushton. Bro. Joseph was present, and in the morning gave the parting blessing, and his presence was to the Saints an expression of love and good will, for he came to worship and rejoice with the brethren, though amid many trials and afflictions, in the goodness and tender mercies of our heavenly Father.

ONTARIO AND QUEBEC DISTRICTS.

Bishop R. C. Evans, 35 Huron street, Toronto, Ontario, for the present year is hereby given charge and supervision of financial work in the districts of Chatham, London and Toronto, Ontario and also the Territory of Quebec. Bishop Evans has heretofore been supervising financial work in these districts, together with western districts of Canada, which are now placed in separate missions, and the agents and Saints are well acquainted with his work and address without further special notice from this office.

We ask for Brother Evans, as also each of the bishops and agents referred to herein, the special help and cooperation of the Saints and friends of their respective districts and fields. Trust the Lord will bless and strengthen each one in his work and that by the close of the year it may be seen and known that the financial work has moved forward with such strides that the church is placed in a better condition to carry on its work, both in the home and foreign missions, and with more liberality than heretofore. Let us all be watchful and "work while it is to-day," so that it may be well and truly said in the end, each has performed his part in the warfare for the Master's cause.

In behalf of the Bishopric,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 25, 1911.

Pastoral.

To the Brethren and Saints in Texas; Greeting: As it has pleased the appointing powers to request your humble servant again to labor in the Texas Mission, I take this method of offering a few suggestions to those especially who have accepted the angel's message. There is more expected of us than of other people. "Where much is given, much is required."

Our success, and the success of our work depends largely on our devotion and consecration to God. The strength and force in the Christian religion is not so much in the advocacy of its doctrinal principles, as in the compliance of the godly character exemplified in the life of Jesus the Christ. We all know, by our own experience, that we are extremely human—so much that we fear, at times, lest we fall by the way. But God has given us a supply for every demand—he expects us to seek for that supply—hence has admonished us to pray. We can no more live in him without prayer, than we can live in this physical world without food. Let us therefore respond to his counsel and be fervent in prayer. Then we cooperate with him for the advancement of "the work intrusted to all."

The ministry will have better success where they find a devoted membership. Do not be deceived in expecting the ministry to advance the work in your locality, unless you are devoted to God and do your part. We humbly entreat your cooperation. Our good desires are commendable, but so often we do not follow them far enough.

We would urge the ministry, both general and local, to active diligence. For my part, I hope to keep busy, and I hope the Saints and friends wherever I go will help me to keep busy;—don't let me be idle a day. Plan to have meeting twice a day if you can. The time is short; conditions bid us be active. Avoid temptations, shun the very appearance of evil, beware of covetousness, have faith in God. He has promised to provide, and we hinder him, delay the blessings, and damage ourselves by covetousness and doubt. Trust in the Lord.

We should have confidence in each other; therefore should avoid suspicion and "vain imaginations." Do not speak evil of each other; let love and charity abound, for that "preventeth a multitude of sins."

I may not be able to visit all parts of the mission during the year, but will do the best I can, as the Spirit may direct. By unity, faith and love, I see no reason why we should not have a prosperous year for the angel's message in Texas. "In unity there is strength"—let our unity be with the Lord and with love for his cause, and trust him for the result.

My mission address till further notice will be Cleburne, Texas. Correspondence kindly invited.

In gospel bonds, R. M. MALONEY.

WE ARE printing them already. Why not send in YOURS? We mean the bills for your reunion.

To All the Saints and Friends in Arkansas and Louisiana: I take this method of addressing you. As I have again been appointed to labor in the above-named field for the coming conference year, and having been chosen as assistant minister in charge, let me say to the ministry that have been appointed to labor with me in the field, let us all enter into our field of labor with renewed zeal and courage and strive to make this the most successful year of our ministerial work, and to reach more people with the angel's message.

Let me say to the scattered Saints throughout the field, though you may be living in isolated places, we would like to hear from you if you desire to have the work opened up and your friends and neighbors warned of the angel's message and will give us your help in getting a place to preach to them. We want to hear from you, and that we may be able to more systematically arrange our work, so as to reach the greatest amount of people possible with this gospel message, we would like to hear from those that want preaching at their places just as soon as possible, so that we can arrange our work to get to you without delay or unnecessary expense. Let us remember, Saints, that the railroads will not carry the preacher for nothing. So, if you can help them a little on their way, it will be very acceptable, and you will be helping the Lord's work and he will reward you for it.

And to those that may have tithing, consecration, or free-will offerings, don't be afraid to let us hear from you, for I have a bishop's receipt book and will receipt you for any amount that you may have. And I wish to say to the local ministry throughout the field, that we want all the help you can give us. I want you to feel free to get out in your part of the country and do all the preaching you can, and if you should need any help from the missionary to assist you in holding a protracted meeting where you may have or think there may be an interest aroused, we will respond. So let us all do all that we can for the spread of the gospel, and thus become workers together with God in striving to build up his kingdom and establish his righteousness.

I would be glad to have a report from all the local ministry by March 1, 1912, of the work done and how many baptized, that I may be able to make a full report for the field during the year. Let us make the greatest effort of our life in the spread of this great latter day work. Address me at my home address, Fairland, Oklahoma. Praying that God may bless us all with his Spirit, that we may prove faithful and be able to accomplish the work assigned to us,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

THE NEW ERA.

(An address by Elbert A. Smith before the Alumni of Graceland College, at the annual gathering, May 26, 1911; delivered in the College Chapel.)

Those who read and observe, even casually, must have discovered that we are living in a transitional period. "The old order changeth." Old and formerly accepted standards are challenged, in religion, in politics, in education, and in business. We are crossing the threshold of a new era.

We hear a great deal about modern inventions, modern theories, modern discoveries, even modern women. Yes, modern women; for since the suffragettes have shaken London and New York with their meetings demanding "votes for women," we are told that the old proverb, "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world," has been revised to read, "The hand that rules the cradle rocks the world."

AN ERA OF MANY NEW THEORIES.

I can not hope to thoroughly analyze the new era or to predict all that will be developed during the next fifteen or twenty, or even ten years. To do so would require one to specialize in economics, sociology, political science, and prophecy. Only a Jeremiah or a David could accurately outline the future. Who can tell whether its record will finally furnish material for another book of lamentations, or inspiration for new psalms of rejoicing.

The new era is prolific of theories, schemes, and proposed experiments. One poet thus characterizes it:

"A thousand creeds and battle cries,
A thousand warring social schemes,
A thousand new moralities,
And twenty thousand thousand dreams."

GOOD AND BAD COMMINGLE.

It will require study and experiment to separate the true from the fallacious, the real from the visionary. It will probably be discovered that some of our most cherished plans, like many human institutions, are partly good and partly bad. They are like the farmer's cow. The farm boy returned from milking with an empty bucket and draggled clothing. "What is the matter," queried the farmer, "didn't the cow give anything?" "Yes," replied the boy, "five quarts and one kick."

It requires nice discrimination to stop just after we have got the five quarts and just before we get the kick. We may use the labor union as an illustration. There is a widespread prejudice against labor unions. And yet in many of the trades the laboring men are practically compelled to organize. John Mitchell states the argument for organization something like this:

The individual laborer goes to his employer, and says, "The cost of living has advanced. My wages have not advanced. I can not live on the wage that I am getting."

The employer replies, "Very well. You may quit. There are plenty of men to take your place."

The individual laborer goes to the employer, and says, "I am required to work under conditions that are not sanitary and with dangerous machinery that is not properly safeguarded."

The employer replies, "Very well. You may hunt a job elsewhere."

But if five hundred organized laborers go to their employer with complaints or requests they command recognition. In many trades the individual laborer stands little show when he attempts to bargain with organized capital. The day of individual bargaining is past. Self-preservation demands organization.

The union is formed, and presently goes on a strike. So far so good, as it is the right of any man to quit work if he considers that he is not justly dealt with. But presently appear things of doubtful propriety, such as the "secondary boycott" and the "sympathetic strike," and in some instances the lawless element secures control and property is destroyed and nonunion men are wounded or murdered. This example will illustrate the mingling of good and evil in human institutions, primarily intended to accomplish good.

THE MAN "FARTHEST DOWN."

The new era is an industrial era, and many of its problems are industrial, or at least concern the accumulated earnings of industry. Obviously we can discuss only a few of the problems and the proposed solutions. There is a dark side and a bright side to the new era, but to-night we will speak only of a few of the proposed movements that are hopeful in character.

One of the problems before us is thus stated by Andrew Carnegie: "The subject of wealth distribution will not down. It is obviously unequal, strangely unequal."

When Booker T. Washington visited Great Britain and Europe recently in search of the "man farthest down," he found him in London, in the former laboring man who for some cause is down and out, without home, friends, or money. Mr. Washington discovered that in London the coroner officially reports in excess of fifty-two deaths per year due to starvation, an average of one each week. This suggests that where so many actually starve, there are hundreds who constantly suffer from privation, and thousands who are never free from the haunting fear of want. This supports the statement made by Mr. Charles Booth in his book on social conditions in London, wherein he divides the population into eight classes and states that not until the fifth class is reached in the ascending scale are men and women reached who have constantly enough to eat.

THE MAN "FARTHEST UP."

Yet by way of contrast, The Chautauquan, May, 1911, mentions one Englishman, the Duke of Devonshire, who owns four hundred and thirty acres of land in London and twenty thousand acres in the country. He is one of many in his class.

Ruskin says that the modern Pharisee is unlike the Pharisee of old. The Pharisee of old said, "Lord, I thank thee that I am not as other men, for I fast twice each week while others feast." But the modern Pharisee says, "Lord, I thank thee that I am not as other men, for I feast seven days each week while others fast." One gives an example of religion gone mad; the other of materialism gone mad.

Emerson says: "The aristocrat is the democrat ripe, and gone to seed,—because both parties stand on the ground of the supreme value of property, which one endeavors to get and the other to keep."—Representative Men, p. 186.

We can not find fault with the aristocrat so long as we with him concede the supreme importance of property. But the new era begins to discover that property is not the end, it is only a means to an end. Roosevelt says that in the long run property rights and human rights coincide, but where they do not, human right should have the precedence. It is perhaps true that human rights and property rights of society coincide as a rule; but the human rights of society frequently collide with the property rights, or fancied property rights of the individual; and we are just beginning to realize the sacredness of social human rights.

SOCIALISTS AND SOCIAL REFORMERS.

There are two classes of men who are studying conditions, both of which are keenly alive to the evils, abuses, and excesses of our present system as it has been administered. I refer first to the Socialists, and second to social reformers.

Socialists tell us that the old system is entirely corrupt and must be entirely done away with to make room for the new system of community ownership of land and tools, meaning by the term "tools," all the intricate system of machinery and factories used in the industrial world. They tell us, in fact, that the change is inevitable and will come whether we fight for it or against it. That the industrial world is and has been in process of evolution, and the next, final, ultimate, inevitable stage is Socialism.

Social reformers reply that Socialism is a theory, never having been tested. That if tried it must be an experiment of doubtful issue. That there are no evils of the present system pointed out by Socialists that social reformers are not conscious of and attempting to rectify. That these evils can be corrected without destroying the system; and that it is better to expend energy in correcting them rather than to destroy the system and establish another, experimental in nature, whose evils may be as great or greater than those which now confront us.

The issue thus raised between these two classes will become of increasing and vital interest to the men and women of the new era.

Let us now consider some of the proposed measures of the new era. There are many allied questions that crowd to mind; but of course we can touch upon only two or three, and upon those briefly, and it may occur that we shall fail to select the most important.

INHERITANCE TAX AND REGULATION.

We have already mentioned the unequal distribution of property,—the accumulation of great estates and swollen fortunes, characteristic of America as well as England. All property changes hands at least once each generation. This transition period affords the community an opportunity to step in and direct by inheritance regulation and graduated inheritance tax in such a way as to encourage the diffusion of wealth.

But some one may urge that this would be an interference with the sacred rights of property. Not necessarily so. The right to hold property is one question; the right to inherit it or to bestow it by will upon particular persons after death is a very different question. Blackstone lays down the principle that all dominion ceases at death. That it is not a natural right to direct as to the distribution of property after death. It is more in the nature of a privilege, or a legal right, that may be greatly modified or entirely withdrawn by law. In the United States this position has been sustained by the Supreme Court. Reference to the laws of nations shows how this right of inheritance and right of bequest may be modified by law. In England primogeniture prevails and the landed estate goes to the firstborn son. Such a law tends to preserve unbroken vast estates from generation to generation. In France, on the other hand, the estate is divided among the legal heirs, and this procedure tends to break up large estates and establish small holdings.

This example will show that it is possible to regulate the passage of property in ways that will benefit the community by correcting to a degree unequal distribution. The inheritance tax comes in here for consideration, and of it, Andrew Carnegie, himself a millionaire, has said, "The subject of wealth distribution will not down. It is obviously unequal, strangely unequal. . . . I am not in favor of touching the bee when it is making the honey. Let the bee work. But when he passes away, then I say the silent partner, the community that made the wealth should receive its dividend—a large proportion."—Carnegie, in a speech before the National Civic Federation, See Chautauquam, February, 1907.

"The growing disposition to tax more and more heavily large estates left at death is a cheering indication. . . . Of all forms of taxation this seems the wisest. . . . By all means such taxes should be graduated, beginning at nothing upon moderate sums for dependents, and increasing rapidly as the amount swells until of the millionaire's hoard, as of Shylock's, at least 'The other half comes to the privy coffer of the state.'"—Carnegie, quoted in History of Taxation in Iowa, by John E. Brindley, vol. 2, p. 456.

Various foreign nations, notably Switzerland, have adopted an inheritance tax, and the idea has won its way in the United States until now there are thirty-seven States that have some form of inheritance tax. In most instances, as yet, the tax is so light that it serves more as a source of revenue to the State than as a check on swollen fortunes; but if public sentiment shall be educated to the point reached by Carnegie, who advocates a fifty per cent tax on estates of millionaires, the tax may be made a real check. In New York, at present, a tax of twenty-five per cent is levied on the excess over the privileged amount of a legacy of one million dollars going to a distant relative or a corporation.

It is proposed to return the money secured by this tax to the community in various ways, as in parks, schools, community owned water or gas plants, old age pensions, etc.

OLD AGE PENSIONS.

The condition of aged workers has engaged the attention of legislators in the new era. Within the past two or three years Great Britain has adopted an old age pension system. Germany, France, New Zealand, and Victoria and New South Wales in Australia, have old age pension systems of longer standing.

The growth of the system is shown by the fact that in France in 1909 there were 495,000 pensioners; four times as many as in 1905. In 1910 Great Britain had over 700,000 aged people on the pension list; in 1907 New Zealand had over 13,000.

In the United States we have no civil pension system for the aged,—but we have over twenty railway systems, and many other corporations, such as the Deering Harvester Company, that are paying pensions to aged employees. Over sixty colleges are pensioning aged professors, from means furnished by the Carnegie fund. And in numerous large cities school-teachers are pensioned after a certain term of service.

All this is good to an extent, yet there is a "more excellent way." In most of our old age pension laws it is expressly stipulated that pensioners must have been industrious, temperate, and frugal,—very exemplary citizens, in fact. Now we submit the thought that if our industrious, frugal, and temperate laborers are given a just wage they will seldom need an old age pension, under ordinary circumstances. We should see to it that a just wage is maintained, and our laborers will be self-supporting. Those who through sickness or misfortune lose their holdings may receive the pension honorably; the poorhouse may be reserved for the shiftless and intemperate.

On this point I quote from D. Lucile Woodward, who writes on the Old Age Pension Law: "It is not a normal, healthy state of conditions for any country to have a group of old people who have been unable to produce the means by which they can care for themselves comfortably in their old age. If there are such people something has been wrong in the beginning. It may have been industrial conditions and low wages. A just wage will be large enough to allow the earner to provide for his daily needs and also to lay aside enough to assure his being well cared for in his old age."

CHILD LABOR.

Another thing that we wish to mention is the added attention being given to the well-being of children. The children of to-day will be the nation of 1935. The new era is awakening to the supreme importance of conserving race vitality and intelligence. Percy Alden, member of the British Parliament, in an article on "The child and the state," says: "Of late years there has been a marked tendency to lay stress upon the vital importance of the child and to encourage every measure which is made for its physical well-being."

There are many allied movements, such as the movements to secure proper food supplies for children in cities, proper housing, suitable schools with manual training and industrial instruction for boys and domestic science for girls, ample playgrounds, juvenile courts, and prohibition of child labor in factories, shops, and mines.

I will speak only of the question last named. The "industrial age," as it is called, began during the latter part of the eighteenth century, approximately 1770. Prior to that time hand workers operating in their own homes manufactured all the articles that figured in the daily life of the period. But the advent of the machine and the factory revolutionized industry and drove the hand workers out of business. Simultaneously it was discovered that little children could tend many of the machines and that their labor was much cheaper than adult labor. Terrible abuses followed. Little children of tender years, five, six, eight, ten, or twelve years of age, were crowded into factories and kept at work for ten or twelve hours, and even longer each day. Conditions were very nearly as bad in this country during the early part of the nineteenth century. Little children were kept at their unnatural tasks with the aid of the black snake whip; and it is a matter of record that some of them committed suicide to escape the drudgery.

Less than twenty years ago, in Illinois, in the city of Alton, in the great glass factories, little children were employed to wait upon the glass blowers. These little children were appropriately called "blowers' dogs," though their lot was meaner than that of any dog that roams the streets of Lamon.

Our schoolboys are weary after running for an hour or less in the open air. These little lads were kept constantly on the trot, hour after hour, fetching and carrying, in the intense heat of the furnaces; bearing their loads of superheated glass, by which they were frequently burned. They took their refreshments with the men at the near-by saloons, drank, smoked, swore, and cherished all the vices and immoralities of their adult associates. When they reached the years when the ordinary burdens and duties of maturity come to men, they were wrecked in body and mind, absolutely without education, training, or endurance to fit them to take their part in life.

A DOUBLE ROBBERY.

A double robbery had been committed. The factory had robbed the boy of his youth and his manhood; it robbed society of a man. During the days of slavery, a healthy black man sold for fifteen hundred dollars. Healthy, freeborn Americans ought to be worth at least as much. So it will be seen that there was an economic as well as a humanitarian side to the question.

This occurred less than twenty years ago in Alton, the city where Lovejoy was martyred in the interests of abolition; and in Illinois, custodian of the sacred ashes of Abraham Lincoln, the Emancipator. But in 1893 Illinois passed a law, similar to the law now in force in New York, New Jersey, and other States, prohibiting the employment of children under fourteen years of age in factory or mine.

FROM FACTORY TO SCHOOL.

It is a significant fact that in Alton, Illinois, and in Millville, New Jersey, when such law was passed it was found necessary to build additional school-houses to accommodate the children turned from the factory. It is a hopeful sign of the new era when the school supplants the factory in child life. Investigation showed that very few of these children were supporting widowed mothers. Some of them were supporting indolent fathers. More were claimed by so-called guardians who had secured them from poorhouses and orphanages and were living on their little wages so hardly earned.

Florence Kelley, general secretary of the National Consumers' League, in her book, Ethical Gains through Legislation, presents the following items as the basis of the ideal law regulating child labor:

"Labor should be prohibited, (1) for all children under the age of fourteen years, (2) for all children under sixteen years of age who do not measure sixty inches and weigh eighty pounds, (3) for all children under sixteen years of age who can not read fluently and write legibly simple sentences in the English language, (4) for all children under the age of sixteen years, between the hours of 7 p. m. and 7 a. m., or longer than eight hours in any twenty-four hours, or longer than forty-eight hours in any week, (5) for all children under the age of sixteen years in occupations dangerous to life, limb, health or morals."

A THOUGHT, A FAITH, A STRUGGLE, A FACT.

If asked on what authority or by what right the society of the new era will venture to interfere in matters heretofore considered individual and private; we reply that authority is found in the law of self-preservation. An absolute despotism can exist for a long time, with a strong standing army to maintain order, on condition, as some one has said regarding a certain party, that there are a few able men to lead and a great many fools to follow. But a republic like the United States or a free constitutional monarchy like Great Britain can not long endure without an intelligent and prosperous electorate. Anything that builds up a few at the expense of many, weakens the mass of the electorate and threatens the life of the nation.

If progress shall be made in the new era, commensurate with our hopes, let us remember that it will be in harmony with the statement made by the Honorable David Brewer, of the Supreme Court, who thus outlined human progress: "First a thought, then a faith, next a struggle, at last a fact."

GRACELAND'S TEMPORARY ENDOWMENT.

FIELD WORK.

Time for the July payments will soon be here, and we trust that we may be pardoned for calling attention to the matter. The church has made us, the Trustees and those appointed by the Trustees, responsible for the work of the school, and we would come short of doing our duty did we not do all we can to bring about that success. This is our apology for asking consideration at the hands of the Saints in the matters herein mentioned.

We are compelled to provide a better and more adequate system of heating, as the plant in the main college building is about useless. The Board have decided that the proper thing is to put in a central heating plant, which will be much more serviceable and more economical in the amount of fuel required.

In connection with the heating plant a gymnasium and manual training rooms are contemplated. This improvement is very much needed, because of the need of more class rooms, which can be provided in the basement of the main building when the furnace and shop are removed.

The buildings need repainting and repairing, which will require quite an outlay of means; and for these improvements six or seven young men of the student body have been retained to work during the vacation, their wages above actual present necessities to be applied upon their next year's schooling.

The putting in of a septic tank for the use of the various buildings with their closets is an improvement that is absolutely necessary in order to preserve the health of the community, as well as to comply with the laws of health and good sense;—the laying of the tile for this has already begun.

It will be seen at once that we shall need every dollar of the endowment fund due July 1, and more to do this work that is only necessary. Not only so, but the trustees feel that there are many more of the Saints who would be glad to share in the privilege of contributing to the support of the educational work of the church, who have not yet subscribed.

In order that this privilege may be extended to as many as possible the board have arranged with Prof. Roy V. Hopkins to give his time and his services during the vacation to field work, visiting the various branches and presenting the work of the college and its needs and soliciting aid. Brother Hopkins is an elder in the church, a young man, intensely interested in and in full sympathy with the needs of the young people, the Religio and the Sunday school. He will do the young and old and everybody else good in his addresses, and we bespeak for him a cordial reception and through him a hearty boost for Graceland.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Oscar S. Straus, formerly Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor and later United States ambassador to Turkey, who is active in the world-wide movement among the Jews to rescue what are generally supposed to be the lost tribes of Israel that have been living in Abyssinia. Mr. Straus gave a big impetus to the cause by holding a meeting at his New York home, which was attended by the leaders in the work, among them being Dr. Jacques Faitlovitch, Isador Straus, Rear Admiral Marix, Judge Nathan Bijur, Judge Irving Lehmann, Edgar J. Nathan, Prof. Richard Gotheil and Prof. Israel Friedlander. Doctor Faitlovitch gave a lecture on the situation, illustrated with moving pictures, and the others joined in the discussion of means to remedy the conditions.—World Herald (Omaha) June 4, 1911.

THE PREACHER.

But what is it to preach, and how can one make himself a preacher? Here again we are thrown back on the basal fact, that the sermon depends on the man. The sermon is, indeed, the man. The man himself must be a sermon. Preaching is not an art in the sense in which sculpture, music, and painting are arts. It resembles these, but it transcends them all. The work of the artist can be divorced from his characters. In preaching it is the character of the preacher which is the preacher's power. Preaching is not a trick which can be mastered some bright morning, or a secret which can be transmitted from one man to another for a consideration. There is a stupid fellow mentioned in the Book of Acts, who supposed he could share in the apostles' power by the payment of a sum of money. Stupidity of that sort has not yet vanished from the earth.

Even to-day there are men who think that the chief thing in preaching is an artful use of the voice, or a crafty combination of gestures, or a cunning carving of diction, or an expert jugglery of illustrations, or a dexterous maneuvering of ideas, or a clever and impressive display of learning. In this view, preaching is a sort of magic, a sleight of hand or of tongue, an ingenious piece of legerdemain by which souls are mesmerized and the boundaries of God's kingdom extended. The sermon is a contrivance which can be wrought out by an adroit schemer, a stratagem which can be laid by a long-headed intriguer, a device which can be created by an industrious artificer. Men who hold this view sometimes go to hear preachers preach in order to learn the secret of their power. They never find out. God hides certain things from the wise and prudent—and also from fools.

The man who thinks that preaching is a trick of voice, or thought, or language, never learns how to preach. No men are so wearisome in the pulpit as the men who know they have good voices, and are evidently making an effort to let their hearers know it too. The best thing that a preacher can do with his voice is to hide it. The best voice for preaching is the voice that no one ever hears. Gestures which are striking make an impression the first few times, but if they keep on striking they give pain. Eloquence is good occasionally, when it comes by the will of Heaven, but no congregation can endure eloquence every Sunday for five consecutive years. Manufactured eloquence is declamation, and declamation is not eloquence at all. It is a wooden imitation of celestial fire, and is a great weariness. A beautiful style, so beautiful that the rustling of the verbal finery drowns the music of the thought, is also a burden. When all the sentences roll out after the fashion of those of Macaulay or of Burke, men sigh for relief.

The best pulpit style is the style that is not seen. Blessed is the preacher who succeeds in beating his style down into invisibility. Voice and language ought to be like the atmosphere, life-supporting, but invisible. Illustrations are also a nuisance, unless they grow up naturally, like flowers, along the path which the sermon takes. Expert illustrators grow irksome after the second year. Quotations are also gewgaws which entertain for a season, and then lose their charm. They never impress any but the unlettered, for all men who are acquainted with the world of books know where and how to get them. Stringing quotations is like stringing beads, it requires no intellect, and is hardly serious business for a full-grown man. It is only when the words of other men force themselves by sheer strength of undeniable superiority into the company of your sentences, and bend themselves whole-heartedly to the task of carrying on your thought, that they can be considered other than impertinent and mischievous interlopers.

As for ideas, a preacher can have too many of them. Great thoughts are oppressive if too abundant. It is not thoughts, but thought, that a congregation wants, and you can not have thought without a thinker. The ideal preacher is not a retailer of beautiful thoughts, but a man who can bring to the discussion of every moral and spiritual question the illumination of a sane and discriminating mind. Learning is also out of place in the pulpit.

Learned sermons are the easiest of all to write, and the most fatiguing to those who hear them. Anyone can write a learned sermon who is alone with an encyclopedia for half a dozen hours. Many a church has had its life crushed out by the learning of its pastor.

All these things—voice, gesture, rhetoric, illustrations, quotations, ideas, learning—have a certain value, but they are at best superficialities, and all of them, unless backed up by something better, soon grow thin and tame. After a little time artificial elocution becomes unbearable, rhetorical display unendurable, excessive illustration insufferable, the exploitation of novel or abstract ideas intolerable.

Nothing wears but manhood. To remain ten or twenty years in the same parish, a preacher must be very simple and very true. Goodness never grows stale. Love never becomes monotonous. An industrious man in good health with disciplined powers, whose life is hid with Christ in God, can speak year after year to the same people with the dew of the morning always on his message.

Preaching is primarily a matter of manhood. The sermon depends on the mass of the man. His character must be massive, or he can not do the work. One sometimes hears an expression which tells much. "He is not a big enough man for the place." Is he not educated? Yes. Is he not clever? Very. Bright? Exceedingly. Brilliant? Often. And yet not big enough for the place! The world makes a distinction between a man and his gifts. The church of God must have the man.—Charles E. Jefferson, in The Building of the Church, pp. 282-287.

The world bestows its big prizes, both in money and honors, for but one thing. And that is Initiative. What is Initiative? I'll tell you: It is doing the right thing without being told. But next to doing the thing without being told is to do it when you are told once. That is to say, carry the Message to Garcia; those who can carry a message get high honors, but their pay is not always in proportion. Next there are those who never do a thing until they are told twice; such get no honors and small pay. Next are those who do the right thing only when necessity kicks them from behind, and these get indifference instead of honors, and a pittance for pay. This kind spends most of its time polishing a bench with a hard-luck story. Then still lower down in the scale than this, we have the fellow who will not do the right thing even when some one goes along to show him how and stays to see that he does it; he is always out of a job, and receives only the contempt he deserves, unless he has a rich Pa, in which case Destiny patiently awaits around the corner with a stuffed club. To which class do you belong?—Elbert Hubbard.

LATTER DAY APOSTASY.

Mormonism, so-called, seems to be creating quite a stir in the Old World at present, from newspaper reports. So far as we are related to this question, to my mind it could have been settled long since had we taken the proper course in sending out our ministry. For instance, a document signed by the clerk of the county in which he resides, certifying that the elder represents a church whose membership is supposed to be law-abiding and are therefore opposed to polygamy and all other unlawful practices. Said certificate should be addressed "to all whom it may concern." This certificate inclosed with his certificate of appointment by the General Conference and sent to the secretary of the State in which the elder lives, would no doubt get the signature of said officer. And in the event of the elder's being sent to foreign fields, these certificates could be forwarded to the Secretary of State, and get a certificate from him, setting forth the same facts.

An elder armed and equipped with such documents could, in any city, state or country, present his credentials to the mayor, governor, president, or king, and be recognized in his work by said authorities. And in the event that said authorities failed to so recognize, the sin be upon their own heads. And people who sustain such authorities would be under similar condemnation.

The fact is, there has been a latter day apostasy, and all are not able to locate it. In fact, no one, without the aid of the Spirit of the Lord, can locate it. For, "if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." (Matthew 24: 24.) And we, who profess to be in the light as a church, should be willing and anxious to set our case before kings and rulers, and not wait for some mob to appoint a committee of investigation for us to appear before. It may be that said mob wants something besides facts.

The writer believes that Daniel saw the rise of our beloved Government, as well as the stone kingdom (the church) and saw that they should work together and yet each work independent of the other, and would eventually succeed in breaking to pieces all kingdoms who oppress the poor and cheat the hireling in his wages, and plant that principle of freedom of thought and freedom of action that should have free course among all mankind, not by force of arms necessarily, but by force of example. This gospel is too precious a boon to expect elders to go cringing in at back doors to get to talk to a few people now and then. I hope to live to see the day when the gospel with all its advantages will be in greater demand than at present. God has said concerning Israel, both ancient and modern, "Behold, at that time I will undo all that afflict thee; and I will save her that halteth, and gather her that was driven out; and I will get them praise and fame in every land where they have been put to shame."—Zephaniah 3: 19.

History speaks of no greater "shame" brought upon any people than that brought on the Latter Day Saints by the latter day apostasy. And that the eyes of the honest seeker after truth may be opened so that he can locate the apostasy and be governed accordingly, is my best wish. Then throw on the light, and throw out the life line, "that the honest may take hold with an everlasting grip, to hold on to the end."

IN WHAT DOES TRUE CHARITY CONSIST?

EDITORIAL NOTE.—In a recent issue we presented the answers to this question from three prominent citizens of Boston. Below we give two more answers, as published in the Boston Globe.

NOT IN GIVING GIFTS—EDWARD H. CHANDLER.

It does not especially encourage a starving man to be the object of loving sympathy. He would undoubtedly prefer food, even if it should come from an unfriendly and unsympathetic person. Yet is it not true that, whether he is conscious of it or not, his deeper need is for something as vague as brotherhood and as visionary as justice?

A child may prefer a toy or a doll to the adoration and loving caresses of admiring relatives. And such a preference is clearly to be commended in view of the common adult gushings over attractive children. But both toys and dolls pall very easily, especially at the day's end. Then a cuddle in mother's arms is the only satisfying restorative.

Things do bring a lot of human comfort and real pleasure. Christmas things, if they are the real things and not a tawdry substitute, do carry joy with them. To feed and clothe the needy and to give delight to the children at the Christmas season is a step in bringing about the universal good will.

But let it be clearly understood that food and clothes and toys are not to be confused with the real meaning of the holiday. They are not the good will. And if the good will be not behind them and in them they will fail to grip the souls of those who receive them. Joy and peace and hope are what even the hungry and the naked and the little children want most. To give them these is true charity.

For the word charity is bigger and broader than soup-kitchens and orphans' homes and wayfarers' rests, and dinners to the homeless. It is infinitely beyond all taint of patronage in its true meaning. In fact, it is the very opposite of that pretense of virtue shown in the condescending coin thrown to poverty by riches to ease an uncomfortable conscience. It can not be even suggested in the often quoted utterance, that charity is giving away what you can't use yourself.

Charity, which is love, is essentially a pouring forth of personality. And the bigness of charity is to be measured, not by the quantity of things given, but by the largeness of the soul of the giver. When the true list of the largest givers is once made known it will include names of some great souls, whose material possessions have never attracted the attention of the tax collector, who have suffered in cold and hunger, even while giving their greatest gifts to their fellows.

Such a roll will include the name of Tolstoi—not merely for his distribution of his wealth and his voluntary poverty, but because there was ever flowing from him into the great mass of needy human sufferers the vitality of justice and righteousness and brotherly love. With him as their helper their troubles would some time be ended.

No autocracy, however indifferent to the humble peasant's needs, could silence such a spirit. The whole nation and the whole world needed what he had to give.

If this, then, is charity, why is there not more of it? Nothing is easier to give than one's own personality. And yet nothing is harder if one has never tried. It surely can not be that too few have great enough souls to make a great gift. Yet even those may make the attempt and enlarge in the making. Souls expand, not shrink, in outpouring. Pity it is that we should ever be so shortsighted as to be contented to give only material gifts when it is the heart and soul of us which is needed. For we gain in the giving, even more than they to whom the gifts come.

TRUE AND FALSE CHARITY—MARY B. O'SULLIVAN.

Never did seven letters spell a word that means more than the word charity. It is asked, "In what does real charity consist?" Let us recall Cardinal Manning's definition: "In the grace of charity," he says, "are contained gentleness, compassion, tenderness of hand in touching the wounds of other men, fair interpretations, large allowances, ready forgiveness."

This definition is as comprehensive in its scope as it is beautiful in expression. It expresses the kind of charity which all classes need, and which would fill life with happiness were it more generally practiced. It is the Christian conception of charity in its highest form, having its origin in love of God and of one's neighbor for his sake. But there is a more restricted interpretation of the word charity. We are told that in current speech and literature charity "may be popularly defined as the habit, desire, or act of relieving the physical, mental, moral, or spiritual needs of one's fellows."

We are in the habit of using the word carelessly, without giving thought to its true meaning; and there is not an hour in the day when it is not misapplied. Thus the employer cuts down the wage of his employees below the living rate, and then writes his name large on a handsome check for a public charity, and the public lauds his generosity. The fashionable lady, posing as the patron of Christmas trees and free dinners, gives no thought to her unpaid bills that would provide much needed comfort for the patient toilers whom she calls her tradespeople; yet her charity is extolled. The smug little philanthropists in the nursery gather their broken toys for the poor little mortals of poverty land, and then clamor for the new supply that is to be the reward of their cherubic charity. The poet who lives (or dies) by his pen is asked to contribute a poem to elevate the minds and hearts of club members, the cost of whose cigars would square with the poet's yearly income. The music student working her way is invited to advertise her art by giving a free performance for tenement mothers, and the promoters of the function as they motor home say, "how sweet" it is of the young musician to give her services to the poor. And so it runs, the endless chain of popular acts that are not linked with real charity.

And then there are the turkey dinners for Thanksgiving and Christmas, when the poor (and many who are not needy) are marshaled in ranks, ticketed, fed, and sent forth laden with bags of peanuts and stick candy, all of which reproduce touchingly when the beneficiaries are "snapped" by the press photographer.

The intention of the benefactors may be all right, and certainly the work of preparation must be arduous, but the system is wrong. Poverty facing the camera with a joyous smile does not give promise of producing self-respecting citizens. A decent, honest pride is a valuable asset of character, and no man, woman or child should be asked or encouraged to make a public parade of indigence. Children, more than any other class, should be shielded from the injudicious, so-called charity that fosters poverty by deadening pride in the individual. If it could be managed, the interests of real charity would be served by giving anyone able to work a chance to earn a dinner that, in most cases, could be eaten at home, and, therefore, with greater zest.

And here we touch on the great economic problem, a solution of much of the misery that confronts the charitable minded. Providing work for those who are able and willing to do it is true charity and means a gain in ambition and self-respect as well as self-support. It would sift out the intemperate and the lazy, would discourage beggary, and would compel idlers to obey the mandate to labor for their daily bread. It would also make more generous provision for the weak and helpless, who are dependent through no fault of their own and who are entitled to tenderness and compassion.

PALESTINE'S TRANSFORMATION.

Not only the high, narrow plateau of Judea, whence came the religious inspiration of nearly one half the world's inhabitants, but the neighboring regions of Palestine, the Arabian desert and Asia Minor, have long puzzled geologists, historians, and archæologists. Here was once an extensive empire, rich and densely populated, but now the abode of desolation. Over the sparsely peopled deserts are scattered the ruins of such important ancient cities as Palmyra, Petra, Philadelphia, Gerasa, Hebron, and Beersheba, innumerable villages, and the remains of orchards and vineyards, temples, aqueducts, baths, theaters, and similar remains of a luxurious civilization.

Various answers have been offered to questions regarding the transformation of this empire into an arid waste. The most plausible and generally considered is climatic changes. Others are the ravages of war, deforestation, exhaustion of the soil, changing tides of commerce, and a failure of the inhabitants to conserve their resources. None of these, in itself, is wholly convincing. Now modern geography and the newer methods of science offer what seems to be a complete and plausible solution of the mystery in this new book by Professor Huntington.* What is more, the author indicates in an equally convincing way how the variations in moisture, to which he attributes the transformation, have molded the history of Israel and the neighboring peoples and may continue to do so in this region.

A work of Prof. George Adam Smith's, on the historical geography of Palestine, inspired the undertaking. Professor Huntington's travels in Asia Minor, Persia, India, and Central Asia served as a preparatory step, and whetted his curiosity regarding the influence of physical surroundings on the story of the Jew and the changes which have depopulated Palestine. Funds from Yale, where the author is Assistant Professor of Geography, financed an expedition to Palestine in 1909, and upon the results of this the book is based.

Heretofore the changes in the climate of the region have been attributed to deforestation and to progressive and pulsatory alterations in the rainfall. They have been evidenced by the density of the population at various periods, the distribution of forests, trade routes, and lines of invasion, ancient migrations, and indications of an ample water supply, including the fluctuations of the Dead Sea.

Professor Huntington explored the shores of this sea and drew a series of conclusions from the ancient beaches he found there. These results were compared with similar data obtained on lakes in widely separated parts of Asia—Lake Buldur, in Central Asia Minor; the Caspian Sea, the Lake of Seyestan, on the borders of Afghanistan, Beluchistan, and Persia, and Lop-Nor, in Turkish Turkestan, more than three thousand miles distant from Palestine. The ancient levels of these bodies of water developed interesting analogies with those of the Dead Sea. Professor Huntington then analyzed the trade routes across the Arabian desert and Palestine, the rise of Petra and Palmyra and their decay, and summarized the evidences of a dense population east of Palestine, quoting largely in this connection from the conclusions of Prof. Howard Crosby Butler, of Princeton. All of this evidence and the latest meteorological reports are advanced to support Professor Huntington's theory that vast regions of Asia are subject to pulsative periods of moisture and drought, with evidence thereof as early as 3000 B. C., and diminishing periods of moisture since the beginning of the Christian Era. Thus these periods of moisture may transform Palestine into a fertile garden, and their absence convert it into a desert waste, to be deserted by its inhabitants.

This, rather than such minor agencies as deforestation, land waste, misgovernment, and war, is held responsible by Professor Huntington for the ruin of Palestine. Indeed, he regards the more familiar explanations of invasion and carelessness as the results rather than the direct causes of the desolation. The history of Palestine thus becomes a never-ceasing struggle for sustenance—an expression of the instinct of self-preservation.

The more scientific phase of the subject, which makes the book important in itself, serves to emphasize Professor Huntington's summary of the history of Palestine and the neighboring regions. This is illuminating and truly admirable and will probably be of first importance to most of the book's readers.

Taking for granted an absorbing interest in Palestine, the modern historian can not go very far into the subject before he must choose between two horns of a dilemma or stop, passive and questioning. On the one hand is the biblical viewpoint, unconsciously absorbed unto the very fibre of his spiritual self. On the other, he is confronted by the newer form of scientific research and an amazing series of archæological discoveries in Central and Western Asia and the basin of the Mediterranean. By the latter, of course, history is being rewritten. The general theme supplants the particular instance. Chronicles which are merely national or provincial become episodes in a broad panorama of race movements and successive civilizations. Thus the contracted scenes of the biblical narrative and the vast panorama of the newer history, when viewed together, create a distorted perspective, as though one were looking at a distant object through field glasses with lenses of different foci.

Who does not welcome an adjustment of the lenses that he may see in the true perspective of world history those ideals which have come to us from the holy places of Israel? There are numberless books on Palestine, of course, but many are superficial or merely repeat the records of history and of tradition. Many more are controversial—orthodox or heterodox, conservative or iconoclastic. It is only the newer criticism of recent growth that enables us to approach the subject in a judicial spirit, giving due credit to science and archæology, without violence to our religious convictions. And when this spirit is perceived, how many questions are asked that the lenses of ancient chronicle and modern knowledge may be brought into focus? There is, for example, the geological story of Palestine and of the unique Jordan Valley and Dead Sea. Of the ethnological phases, there are the Jew preserving his entity and ideals in isolation, while the execrated Philistine succumbs, the Phœnician is driven to put to sea in ships, and a splendid pageant of war and commerce reaches from Egypt to Babylon, past Israel's gates.

Professor Huntington answers all of these questions in a narrative of absorbing interest, which suggests the broad panorama of the newer history, and at the same time supplements rather than criticises the biblical narrative. At no point does the reader feel that the author's attitude is other than sympathetic toward the religionist. After the manner of the newer histories, the Jew becomes one of a group of historical figures; the scene extends from Palmyra to Egypt.

Many of the details are, of course, familiar. Obvious facts also strengthen one's faith in the biblical narrative by turning its current into natural channels. One realizes again, for example, how the highlands of Judea isolated and preserved Jewish ideals in their purity, as in an acropolis, while the streams of commerce across the plains of the Philistines and through the hills of Samaria exerted influences that were negative at first, then disintegrating. The Phœnicians are shown in a land looking only toward the sea and impelling them toward their ships. The invasions of Moab, Edom and the Negeb became inevitable with the lack of natural barriers on the desert, just as the broken, wooded hills of Gilead preserved their simple inhabitants from their enemies.

These facts are emphasized, too, by familiar parallels. The mountains of Samaria and Gilead are compared with the long ridges of the Appalachians, the Sea of Galilee at its best with an Italian lake, the plateau of Judea with the Allegheny highlands of Kentucky and Tennessee. By such familiar instances these ancient lands and peoples seem to live again, vividly human and impressive.—New York Times.

ABANDONING ALCOHOL.

It was brought out at the recent meeting of the American Therapeutic Society that alcohol, excepting for the purpose of bathing, has been practically abandoned as a medicinal agent, and it is likely to be left out of all official formulæ in the Pharmacopœia.

Dr. Wiley, in his annual address before the society, after refusing to express an opinion against a moderate use of wine or beer as a beverage, said:

"No one would think of giving a man alcohol to-day if he had to meet extremes of heat or cold or fatigue. It was formerly supposed to be a panacea in such cases. To-day it is known to be detrimental. No one would give alcohol to one engaging in athletic feats or about to run a marathon."

This marks a notable change in scientific opinion in very recent years, and shows how rapidly long-established notions are being exploded in these days of investigation and careful observation.

If any one idea has prevailed more than another on the frontier it has been the sovereign power of alcohol as a protector against cold, and as a stimulant in cases of fatigue. The scientific world has exploded it, and the nonscientific world will gradually assimilate the scientific verdict.

With alcohol gone as a medicinal agent the excuse for its use as a beverage will be largely gone also. If alcohol has no permanently beneficial effect there is nothing to be said for it further than that it gives a temporary buoyancy of spirits, and that so readily develops into a plain case of being drunk that the end does not justify the means.—Register and Leader (Des Moines, Iowa).

PLACING FIGURE OF BRIGHAM YOUNG ON BATTLESHIP UTAH'S SILVER SERVICE DENOUNCED BEFORE HOUSE COMMITTEE.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—The House Committee on Naval Affairs made public to-day a sensational and bitter attack on Mormonism. It occurs in printed evidence submitted by the Rev. Robert M. Stevenson, president of Westminster College at Salt Lake City, and others.

Non-Mormons are making an effort to defeat the acceptance by the Navy Department of a silver service bearing the figure of Brigham Young, offered by citizens of Utah for the battleship Utah. At the hearing on this subject the Rev. Mr. Stevenson made the following statement:

"After New Mexico and Arizona become States of the Union the Mormons will control sixteen votes in the United States Senate."

Speaking for the non-Mormon party, Mrs. H. S. Owen, of Salt Lake City, said:

"I come protesting against Brigham Young and his teachings. Brigham Young defied and insulted the power of the nation. He was the great exemplar of polygamy. He was a murderer. You have here in your archives the evidence that he was responsible for the Mountain Meadows massacre.

"Brigham Young died in 1877, leaving twenty-five acknowledged widows and more than fifty children. That I can prove. He was a traitor."

Mrs. Owen said that non-Mormon men of Utah could not testify before the committee for the reason that they would be thrown out of work.

"Their incomes," said the witness, "are dependent upon the good will of the Mormon Church."

Mr. Meyer, Secretary of the Navy, told those who made a protest to him that he could refuse the silver, but added:

"You ladies seem to think that this is a very small matter, but it is a matter that demands a great deal of care."

The President, Mrs. Owen said, declined to take a hand in the matter. He turned everything related to it over to Mr. Meyer.

The silver service, Mrs. Owen admitted, is not a gift of the State, but of private contributors.

"This is a sectarian movement," said the Rev. Mr. Stevenson. "The purpose of it is to take advantage of the United States and propagate a sectarian religion by the use of the navy."

Miss J. E. Richards, representing the Daughters of the American Revolution, declared:

"The point we are trying to bring out before the American people and before this committee is that we consider Brigham Young the most undesirable type of American citizen to be chosen to decorate the silverware of any battleship of the United States, to go around the world under the American flag. We submit that the character of this man was such that it will be an insult, not only to the women of the country, because of what he stood for, but to the brave sailors and officers of the navy.

"The figure of Brigham Young and the Temple on the coffee tray are all that we object to. The Mormons are determined to have their religious symbols appear upon this silver service. The Gorhams, to whom the contract for this service was given, do not wish to proceed with the order for the tray. They find that many wealthy people in New York who are accustomed to give them orders disapprove this design. The Gorhams have been told that if they finish the coffee tray they will lose one hundred thousand dollars worth of work."—New York World.

ITS PUT-ON STUPIDITY.

Last night the church organ undertook to make a great mystery of the statement which we made that "the church does not want the liquor traffic suppressed, but it simply wants to change the form of it and to get the benefit of that traffic for its own organizations and its own privileges."

Upon that the organ wants to know what its organizations are, whether we refer to its stakes, its wards, and whether we suppose that it wants to establish stake and ward saloons. The statement in connection with our representation on this matter is perfectly plain. We have referred to it time after time, and there is not the least honest point of doubt. We refer in that connection to the Z. C. M. I. drug store, the Smoot drug store, and generally to the Z. C. M. I. business organizations which sell liquor along with other articles on sale. We have constantly kept this before the public, and have constantly referred to the Z. C. M. I. drug store's liquor traffic as the traffic which the church purposes to protect. We specifically referred to that yesterday morning in discussing the Smith attitude toward the Z. C. M. I. drug store liquor sales.

This liquor question is one of much scope and of general importance. It is not worth while for the church organ to undertake to sneak behind quibbles and attempt to raise small imaginary points of difficulty. If it will for once be honest and proceed upon a straightforward, candid line of argument and presentation, it will make more strength for its cause, and will show a decency which it has heretofore lacked, and which it lacks all the time when it refers to The Tribune as the organ of the saloons.—Salt Lake Tribune, June 6, 1911.

GRANT HERESY TRIAL.

The Rev. Dr. William D. Grant, whose trial for heresy before the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church at Atlantic City recently mentioned, was found guilty. He was charged "with disseminating by pulpit and public utterances doctrines contrary to the teaching of Holy Scripture and the Presbyterian Church. . . Doctor Grant was charged among other things with preaching a sermon on 'reasons why I do not believe in the inspiration of the scripture,' in December, 1909, whereas his testimony is that in the morning of that Sunday he preached a sermon on 'difficulties in the way of believing in the scripture.' . . There were also complaints against a sermon on 'An Easter echo' preached Easter Sunday, 1909, and another on 'capital crime' preached in May, 1908. There was special complaint on alleged utterances of Doctor Grant, 'It matters not whether Christ rose from the dead, we would have been saved just the same.' Another phrase, 'If Christ rose from the dead,' was questioned, and the sentence, 'The time will come when there will be ten thousand Christs.' He was alleged to have said that 'a new and better Bible could be written to-day,' and that Jesus Christ did not rise from the dead or that Christ was not divine."—New York Herald.

The findings of the court were as follows: "The commission finds that he taught in a manner that impugns the authority of the Old and New Testaments,' announced Mr. Cairns. 'In doing this he is guilty of an offense against the standards of his church, as no minister is entitled to maintain his status in the Presbyterian Church who takes such a position.' . . . Mr. Cairns announced Doctor Grant's suspension 'until such time as he shall make manifest to the satisfaction of his presbytery renunciation of the errors he has been found to hold, and to promise to teach them no more.'"—New York Times.

Doctor Grant desired to have a statement read before the decision of the court was announced, but was refused. The statement was as follows: "Few men have suffered as much for their beloved church as I have suffered for the church of my fathers. I reverently and lovingly bow to its decision. I do now affirm, as I have many times affirmed during these proceedings, my unqualified faith in my blessed Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, in his deity, virgin birth, resurrection, and mediatorial work, and in the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, as the infallible rule of faith and life. I have never knowingly taught anything contrary to the above declarations. Some of the statements I have made in my articles I can now see are subject to misconstruction, but if I can not preach the great doctrines of grace, as given us in the New Testament, in the Presbyterian Church, I ought to leave her ministry, but I trust it shall be my privilege and joy to continue to proclaim those doctrines as long as God shall give me strength to do so.'"—New York Times.

An action more important than the verdict of guilty in the trial of Doctor Grant was an action taken to restore harmony between the assembly and the Union Theological Seminary from which Doctor Grant was graduated in 1887, a sort of olive branch:

"Resolved, First, that the former doctrinal deliverance of the General Assembly be affirmed.

"Second, that all ministers of the church be admonished to refrain from utterances calculated to disturb its peace or contradict its doctrines.

"Third, that no further action be taken on the overtures in question."—New York Times.

Also:

"Whereas, the Union Theological Seminary in the City of New York was founded by the Presbyterian Church and has been largely endowed from Presbyterian sources; and

"Whereas, for some years past there has developed a condition which led to the severing of the relations which have existed from the organization of the seminary between it and the General Assembly; and

"Whereas, we are persuaded that there are in the Faculty and Directorate of Union Theological Seminary men who are in accord with evangelical Christianity as expressed in the standards of doctrine of the Presbyterian Church, and who are zealous in all good works for the growth of the kingdom of our dear Lord Jesus Christ and the world; and

"Whereas, we believe that it would be a signal manifestation of the spirit of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, who prayed that they all might be one; for Christian brethren under the gracious guidance of the Holy Spirit to remove all misunderstanding, alienation, and antagonism, and to become vitally and aggressively united in the doctrine and fellowship of our beloved church in the work of bringing the Nation and the world to Christ; therefore be it

"Resolved, That this General Assembly authorizes the moderator to appoint a committee of nine, to consist of five ministers, of whom he shall be one, and four ruling elders, none of whom shall be connected with Union Seminary, to confer with the directorate and faculty of said seminary with a view to the reestablishment of harmonious relations between the seminary and the General Assembly on the basis of the standards of the Presbyterian Church, this committee to report to the next General Assembly."—New York Times.

"The visions of youth are clouded by unworthy, selfish and petty ambitions, and the dreams of age are made hideous by poverty, anxiety, and other evils that old age should never know. However, a better day is coming, and coming quickly. For the first time in the history of this earth there are entire great nations, all of whom can read and may think if they will. Selfishness will die out as thought and intelligence progress. Knowledge is no longer in the possession of a few, keeping the majority in ignorance and in want."

Oklahoma has a new kind of compulsory law. In the case of a widow who is dependent on her son's assistance for support, he being yet of school age, the law provides that the son shall remain at school, and the mother shall receive from the State a sum equal to his wages.

The Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service.

We had thought to have given notice of the change of our name and the reasons therefor before this, but things move slowly when we have to correspond back and forth to complete our arrangements. Hence the delay.

No doubt the question has been asked by many who were not present at our general business meeting, why did we make the change? To such we will now give our reasons.

While to the mind of Latter Day Saints the term, Daughters of Zion, conveys an idea of an exalted condition, it assumes too much for us at present. It does not in any way indicate the object and purposes of the society, so that when speaking of it to nonmembers we always have to explain its meaning. To those outside the church that name is more suggestive of an organization of colored women or holiness people than anything else, and often when the name has been spoken in their presence, we have felt rather than heard the sarcastic remarks they would make by the derisive smile on their faces.

The new name, The Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service, explains itself. The woman's, that is, all the women of the church banded together as an auxiliary to the church, to help in all lines of social service in the home, in the school, in the church, in society or civic interests. We hope to see them so organized in the future, that wherever there is a need for help, some one will be ready to attend to it. We scarcely dare express our vision of the possibilities that open up to us with such an organization under the new name, lest we be called visionary. We read in a little magazine the other day that, "A vision without work is visionary, and work without a vision is drudgery," so we will not think to see a realization of our vision without work and plenty of it, too, and in our work we hope to keep our vision before us to inspire us when difficulties and discouragements arise.

Sometimes sisters have said to us that they would like to work with us, but they could not see anything we were doing that they needed, or on lines in which they were qualified to work. To such we now say, Find your work or your need and come in with us. If you can help us we shall indeed be glad, and if we can help you we shall be more than glad.

We have appointed a finance committee, with Mrs. L. R. Wells, 700 South Chrysler street, Independence, Missouri, as chairman, so if you can work along these lines, communicate with her for directions or suggestions.

We refer those interested in social purity work to Mrs. F. M. Smith, who is chairman of the social purity committee, and she will be glad to help you with this work. The ways and means committee will look after the extension of our work and its general interests, and we hope soon to see it assisted by appointed and authorized workers in every district of the church in pursuance with the resolution passed at the last General Conference, "That the district and stake presidents cooperate with the Advisory Board in appointing a sister in each stake or district to work in the interest of this society." The chairman of the committee is Mrs. T. A. Hougas, Macedonia, Iowa. The readings committee consists of Mrs. C. B. Stebbins and Mrs. Vida E. Smith, and if you come across anything especially good in your reading you might pass it on to them.

There is work for all, and we trust that we shall receive the hearty cooperation of the sisters everywhere, both old and young. We need financial help or we can not carry out our plans. Our finances are all raised by volunteer contributions, that is, we have no fees or dues, but everyone can give as he feels able or willing. Because we have no fees we should not feel that we have no responsibility in the matter, but should show our interest in the work by our willingness to contribute to its support. Do not wait until you can give some big sum, but remember that many little make much.

OWENSVILLE, INDIANA, May 28, 1911.

Dear Herald: Since 1902, I have been trying to live a true Christian life. I came into the latter day work in 1902, was baptized by Elder James D. Porter, on May 26, and in July my husband and many others were baptized. There were several in the branch there, and it was a grand time for the Saints, but since we have come to a different place, where there is not even a church or Sunday school to attend, it makes it lonely for us few Saints. I hope times may soon be as they used to be.

The weather is very hot and dry here now; people can not do much towards their crops, as the ground is so dry and hard. I hope we may get a good rain soon. May the good Master hear and answer the prayers of all praying people.

"Oh, Lord, we come before thee now,
Thy words to speak and hear;
Oh, help us at thy feet to bow,
And feel that thou art near."

Still trusting the good Lord may help us every day, is my prayer.

Your sister in bonds,
MARY J. THOMPSON.

STUEBENVILLE, OHIO, May 22, 1911.

To the Senior Editor of the Herald; Greeting: Herewith I present for your consideration the narration of an incident that occurred some two and a half years ago in the land of Wales. Many a time I have been urged, and I believe by the Spirit, to present it to you for publication in the HERALD. I feel that it would do good to those who believe in the manifestation of the Spirit.

I obeyed the gospel nearly three years ago, and being of a skeptical nature, sometimes worse than others, I underwent some peculiar experiences. Soon after my baptism, I was ordained to the office of teacher. Seeking to do the duty of said office, I proceeded one evening to visit a family of Saints who lived in a cottage situated with a few others on the mountain side. In order to reach that spot one had to traverse a winding and rocky pathway, on one side of which were small stone quarries, on the other side were huge bowlders, and when conditions were not favorable for traveling, it was a dangerous pathway. Part of the way I was accompanied by the president of the branch, and on leaving me he wished me good-bye, and made use of the expression, "God be with you."

I began to think doubtfully, How can God be with me? at the best he is in heaven, even if he does exist at all. In this mood I reached the place where I should leave the main road. Looking up toward the cottage where the family of Saints dwelt, I perceived it was exceedingly dark, the windows of the cottages were not to be seen, for they nestled in a slight depression in the mountain side, and I could not discern the line where the mountain tops and the sky met. I at once became anxious with regard to getting up the path. I did not want to go back, so I started out, after a little hesitation, but instead of keeping to the path, I wandered across the mountain side and fell into a ditch.

I retraced my steps to where I thought I had started (the foot of the path) and an impression came to me to pray to God for help. I did not yield, and tried to continue my journey, but again I stumbled, so I decided to pray for help. I knelt down on the mountain side, and while praying, I remembered I had not removed my hat, so I took it off while praying. I arose to my feet, feeling satisfied that I had obeyed the impression to pray. I commenced my journey again, but still I stumbled over the loose stones, so I charged myself with lack of faith. I didn't have the remotest idea how I should be aided, but I began to think of Paul lifted into the third heaven. Simultaneously a sort of fear or doubting arose within me, and immediately the power vanished. Now I realized I had "quenched the Spirit."

I began to think how foolish to resist this power (I had felt it to a degree before) that brings peace and joy. While thus in a repentant mood, I was covered with the Spirit of God like unto a mantle, and commenced to walk that path in a sublime ecstasy, clapping my hands for joy. I knew that unseen angels were my companions and also that burning influence within my breast was the Spirit of God, and thus I traversed the "dangerous path" and was set down at the first cottage and fell to one knee as the Spirit was removed. As it is written of former days, "The Spirit of the Lord caught away [or carried] Philip," so it is written in latter days, "The Spirit of the Lord carried James."

I was ordained teacher by Rees Jenkins, now under appointment to Palestine, and was baptized by his brother John. This incident happened on the outskirts of "Porth," known as Trebanog. The cottages were called "The Spiders' Castle."

Dear Herald: We are still trying to hold regular branch meetings and Sunday school. Bro. W. E. Haden was here and did some good preaching, and the writer tries to give the Saints a talk every third Sunday in each month. I wish some of the elders would go to Dallas County, Iowa, and hold meetings between Adel and Desoto. The people are anxious to hear. I was there this spring and did some preaching.

Yours in bonds,

BARTLESVILLE, OKLAHOMA, June 2, 1911.

Editors Herald: Having been associated with the Saints in the center stake prior to our coming to Oklahoma, three years ago, Sister Mills and I have had our first experience in being numbered among the isolated ones. From this experience we have learned that it requires more courage and strength to remain loyal and zealous when one must fight the battle alone, and that the benefits resulting from the gathering of the Saints are very great. However, the scattered ones who are truly devoted to the Lord's work have the opportunity of assisting in spreading the gospel, and of bringing honor to the name of the church.

The HERALD and Ensign have been very helpful to us, and we often wonder how the isolated Saints can be content without this means of keeping in touch with the progress of the church. We hope the day is not far distant when the church papers will be carefully read in every Latter Day Saint household.

Bartlesville is a city of about eight thousand inhabitants, and most of the popular sects have splendid houses of worship. No opportunity being offered in these churches for promulgating the true faith, we began work in a little union Sunday school in the suburbs. While this move brought opposition, it did us no harm, as some of the best members in the school became our sympathizers, and were afterwards organized into a Bible class. Thus far three baptisms have resulted from our work in this class, supplemented by the preaching of Elder Lee Quick. We have no public place for our services, but meet regularly in private houses for our Religio, Sunday school, and sacrament services. Though we are not gaining rapidly in numbers, we are holding our own and training ourselves for greater efficiency in the Lord's service.

Our membership is in the Vera Branch, located twenty-five miles south of here. This branch is largely the result of Brother Quick's labors.

At the request of Bro. and Sr. W. W. Shoemaker, who were the only Saints in the community, Brother Quick went to Vera for the first time, in May, 1908, having been appointed to Oklahoma that year. His efforts were strenuously opposed by the Society of Friends, or "Quakers," but by diligence and courteous demeanor he soon won the respect of the people. After preaching for two weeks he baptized fourteen persons, and before the close of the meeting eight more had requested baptism. Among these were some of the most prominent citizens of the place.

The Vera Branch was organized December 20, 1908, by Elders Lee Quick and A. V. Glosson, and the following officers were placed in charge: W. W. Shoemaker, president; Joseph Faulk, priest; James Brown, teacher; and William Heindselman, deacon. Subsequent efforts of Brother Quick have resulted in added interest, and new members. The esteem in which he is held by both members and nonmembers is shown by the cordial treatment he receives when in their midst. The increasing membership necessitating a house of worship, a church was commenced November 21, 1910. Marked unanimity and zeal of both men and women characterized this effort, and nonmembers assisted financially. The church, which is a credit to the Saints and to the town, has been completed, and only a small debt remains. This is the first Latter Day Saint church to be built in this part of the State. The branch now numbers sixty members, and prospects are bright for the progress of the work.

Your brother in Christ,

FRANK W. MILLS.

RICHMOND, VICTORIA, AUSTRALIA, May 8, 1911.

Editors Saints' Herald: I am inclosing you some clippings from two Melbourne daily papers which may prove of interest to you and show you how the Mormon question is being brought to the forefront. In almost every daily paper, there is either a cable from England about them or a write up more or less sensational and mixed with truth and falsehood. Polygamy, of course, is the chief theme and deceiving girls and married women to Utah, the principal cause of attack. Joseph Smith, the Martyr, in most if not all of these articles gets the credit (?) of introducing polygamy into the church. The Mormon elders are either willfully or ignorantly aiding the world in the perpetuation of this "not proven" charge. Editors knowing the public like to have it that way, pander to the "vitiated public taste" and consequently it is difficult to get the truth before the people.

I have succeeded in getting several letters into some of the leading papers, one of which (that in the Age) being of especial importance to our work. The privilege of getting this evidence so prominently before the public has never before, to my knowledge, been granted us, at least in the Victoria press. Surely this is a hopeful sign, and after all God may make the wrath of man redound to his glory and the extension of his kingdom. We are also seizing the opportunity to attend the open air meetings of the Utah elders and at their close explain the truth to the people. On the 5th inst. at such a meeting we had a fine crowd, many of whom asked us to come again. We advised the people not to persecute the Utah elders, but to reason the matter out. This we offered to do on a public platform, but the Utah men refused, though previously in their speeches they expressed a desire to ventilate both sides of the question.

We rejoice to know that the Reorganized Church has no secret doctrines to conceal and that its representatives may boldly face the "light," fearing no foe. These Utah elders seem so frightened with secret doctrines, etc., that they seem afraid to speak out too loudly, lest some of their concealed matter should leak out. A truly pitiable condition for free men to fall into! We intend, God helping, to continue in press and upon street so long as the opening lasts.

Things in this mission generally seem quiet, but there are indications of a forward movement in the near future. Three were baptized in the Richmond church on the 3d inst., one a young man of intelligence who has studied the Mormon question quite exhaustively and whom the Utah elders tried to teach polygamy but failed. He is very anxious to start a campaign against them. Another was a young woman who received the truth at our Bible classes, and another the daughter of an old Saint, granddaughter of Bro. John Gaydon, whom Sister Burton will remember.

We are desirous of pressing forward to the grand consummation,—unity, honor, sanctification and glory, named in the last revelation, and hope to have a share in the blessings throughout eternity.

Faithfully yours in gospel bonds,
J. H. N. JONES.

SAMPSEL, MISSOURI, June, 3, 1911.

Editors Herald: We enjoy reading the HERALD and helpful letters which it contains very much. We are isolated Saints and haven't heard one of our preachers for over a year. If any preachers would come here and preach, we would be so glad and would do everything in our power for them: Pray for us that we may be faithful until the end.

MR. AND MRS. CHAS. HOLMES.

1011 DENVER AVENUE, LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.

May 25, 1911.

Dear Saints' Herald: In studying the life of Jesus, it is plain to be seen that as a teacher of the world, he was never rude. He never gave pain to a sensitive soul. He fearlessly denounced hypocrisy, unbelief, and iniquity, but tears were in his eyes when he uttered these rebukes. He wept over those who refused him, "The way, the truth, and the life." Every soul was precious in his eyes, and when they rejected him, "the Savior," it made him weep. He bore himself with divine dignity, yet he bowed with tenderest compassion and regard to every member of the family of God.

Christ reached the people where they were. The humble, poor, and unlearned could comprehend through faith in him, the most exalted truths of God. He was definite and simple in his instruction. He traveled on foot, teaching those who followed him as he went. His garments were worn and dusty, and his appearance uninviting,—but the simple, divine truths which he taught soon caused his hearers to forget his appearance, and to be charmed, not with the man, but with the doctrine which he taught. These lessons, while overlooked by many, are as vital to-day as when they were uttered by him who "spake as never man spake."

The true, practical missionary can best represent Christ in deeds of healing the soul, as well as the body. Christ never caused anyone to turn away from him, he drew them to him. He was no respecter of persons. He found a way to reach all people, not with self-praise, but in his quiet gentleness, and great love for lowly and poor. He taught those things which appealed to the soul, not the scientific principles. They sought comfort of their souls, as people of to-day do. They longed for a higher, purer life than drudgery. He had nothing in common with worldly people, and did not choose such as his disciples, and strange as it may seem, those who may be striving hardest to serve the Lord Jesus and live in the way of the gospel, are often looked upon by friends or those who should be friends, as though they had committed some dreadful deed,—and are shunned by the majority, when they think they are living a good Christian life. Does it make him or her a less desirable citizen of this beautiful world to become a follower of Christ? Was it a little thing that our Lord left his place in heaven, the companionship of the angels and the presence of God, and came to the sin-loving ones of the world to live in poverty and obscurity? Those who have never felt the heart longing to see the salvation of others, can never know or understand the sacrifice and bitterness of the cup of Gethsemane.

Of course if we abide in Christ we have died to the world and do not look for the sympathy of others. We have become a peculiar people, and we no longer take interest in the things that give pleasure to those of the world. Saints, each day the plans of God are drawing nearer completion; Jesus is coming again in these latter days. This earth with all its wonderful works will be burned up, and a new and spiritual order will be ushered in. God has said this, and all he says is true. Will all who have accepted this gospel of Christ fit in this new order? We need to be men and women of firm character to stand in these perilous times. Fear God and keep his commandments and laws, is the whole duty of man. Dark evil has long had its sway. Its end is coming and near, for Jesus, God's Son, shall come to his throne. Get ready to welcome your king.

LANGLEY, WASHINGTON, May 23, 1911.

Editors Herald: I am writing to let you know the Saints in this district are all very well, and crops all seem to be doing well. There are three Irish evangelists here holding meetings in the schoolhouse, and they don't believe in any organization at all, and the two women came up to our place one day and father and they got to talking over what they believed. They criticise every denomination, and they also had to call us Mormons before they got through telling what they started, and papa told them we weren't Mormons. One of them said we were once in the same branch, and we told them that some of the people apostatized, and followed Brigham Young to Utah, and there baptized them all over again. She finally said she knew there was a difference between us. One Sunday evening the Methodists asked them to preach in their church. But I heard that they had been ridiculing them and the Friends both, and since then I have noticed the Methodists haven't asked them to preach in their church.

May God's greatest and most precious blessings be with his Saints, and protect them; and may everyone of them be worthy of his blessings, is my prayer. Asking an interest in all the Saints' prayers, that I may be faithful,

Your sister in Christ,
MISS BLANCHE A. CRANDALL.

Editors Herald: My last letter was written at Lamoni. Since then I have traveled this far upon my return journey to the land of the Southern Cross. About ten days were spent in Independence, visiting among the Saints and viewing the land. As at Lamoni, I found the Saints very hospitable and anxious to help a stranger from across the seas. I found the Saints of Independence good people to know, and the more I got to know them, the better I liked them. I regret that my stay was necessarily so brief. I should like to have visited many more than I did, but those who were neglected will please take the will for the deed, and not think too hardly of me.

Bishop May "took me under his sheltering wing" and sometimes by means of a buggy, sometimes in street cars, showed me many of the sights of the center stake of Zion. I have seen much beautiful and fertile country, but I have never seen any place where the land was at once so beautiful and fertile as is the country about Independence and Kansas City. The Lord was good to his people when he selected that country as their inheritance. Much of it has been lost to us, but it is worth the effort to redeem it. I was much pleased with the efforts already made in this direction, but much remains to be done, and this can only be accomplished by a devoted, clean-living, pure-minded people. Upon such the blessing of God will rest, and that which seems impossible under the present conditions, will be brought within the realm of practicability, I feel sure, when God's people rise to the exalted station he would have us occupy.

I left Independence May 24, for the West, going by way of the Colorado Midland and Denver and Rio Grande routes. The mountain scenery was simply superb. I had been prepared for something grand, but the magnificence of it far surpassed all my anticipations. No such titanic peaks and chasms in sunny Australia, no perpetual snow on the mountain tops. Some mighty upheaval in ages past has been responsible for throwing all things material out of their natural formation in places, and unconsciously the mind is found to be reaching out for a solution of the wild disorder. For the first time in life I handled snow. Nearing Salt Lake Valley we found it was snowing, so at the first stop a quantity of snow was brought into the car and the first snow battle in which I ever took part, occurred. I am afraid we behaved a good deal like happy children. Foolish, perhaps, but I can't be sorry.

Arriving at Salt Lake City, I was met by Brother and Sister Chase and daughter and taken to their home, where I was made comfortable during my stay in the city. The various points of interest were visited, Brother and Sister Chase being good guides. These points have been described so many times in the HERALD that I will forbear a repetition. I was pleased to take part in the street services Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon. Brother Chase is doing a good work on the street corners. A large crowd gathers immediately the automobile is brought into position, and from its floor, used as a platform, goes forth the gospel in song, story, word (literature) and power.

It did me good to see the way the tracts were handed out. Those who want them have to come for them, but this does not prevent our brother and his assistants from disposing of a large quantity at each service. None are wasted, for people will not come for them unless they wish to read them.

I also met the Saints and preached twice in their hall. There are a nice lot of young people, a good Sunday school, and a thriving Religio. Work seems to be uphill there all round, but good is being accomplished. It would be a fine thing if some kind of a bureau of information to set forth our position to the many tourists who visit the city, could be established. The Utah people at present have things all their own way in that direction.

I left Salt Lake May 29, and arrived here next day. I am staying with Sister Burton, whom I had not met since she and her husband and daughter left Australia, twenty-three years ago. We are having a pleasant time, talking about old times and comparing present conditions in the Australian Mission with what they used to be many years ago. I was but a boy when Brother and Sister Burton were in Australia, and they established quite a good influence over me. I loved them through the dark years of doubt when I kept away from church influences, and it seems good to me to meet our sister now. Many blessings came to me through her in my boyhood, fine spiritual experiences which have been good to dwell upon in the intervening years, and which come to me again in power now. May God bless our dear sister in her declining years and bring her the peace and comfort her life of service has so richly merited.

Your brother in Christ,

Brethren: I think if you will examine my manuscript, third paragraph, you will find (in my article of last week) that you changed it from C. A. Russell to C. F. Russell, which is a mistake. The Russell of paragraph one is not the Russell of paragraph three, and I do not wish to make it so appear.

I entered my field May 6 and have baptized three and blessed two children. Am en route to Henderson conference.

Editor Herald: This letter will notify the Saints of Clinton Missouri, District, that having been assigned to labor principally this conference year in that part of the district lying east of Eldorado Springs, I need your cooperation. Will each one interested in spreading the Master's work kindly send me his address, with an outline of what is needed in your vicinity, locating yourself so that I can find you? I am on the scene of action and ready for business. Let us work together for the accomplishment of the work assigned to all, and see what we can accomplish for the Master this year.

My mission address is Nevada, Missouri.

Your collaborer in Christ,
C. J. PETERS.

RED ROCK, OKLAHOMA, May 31, 1911.

Dear Herald: We were privileged yesterday to preach to an audience of several hundred Lamanites. Baptized one on Sunday last, and confirmed another. Others have asked for baptism which will be attended to soon. We are putting straight time here now and doing home preaching every day by visiting from place to place. Prospects for a permanent gospel planting are good here, but it will take work and patience and a reliance upon the one source of all our success to accomplish it.

There are uphill pulls in this division of the work as well as in others. We are not looking for downy beds of ease; but hope to meet the shifts of battle as unflinchingly as others in the varied ranks of the army. Our Lamanite Saints and friends are contributing quite liberally to the needs of my family by furnishing provisions unsolicited which, in a measure, coming as a sort of last extremity, counterbalances the wry fact that missionary family allowance has dropped behind until we are forced to pay usury at the banks for money to live. The sum of all such usury paid out by the church and its individual members would, if it were possible to save it, be no small item of saving.

JAMES E. YATES.

DANVILLE, MISSOURI, May 25, 1911.

Editors Herald: This is my first attempt to write a letter for publication. We hope some brother will come this way, as there has never been any preaching by the Saints here. I have been letting some of my neighbors read the HERALD and they seem anxious to hear some preaching, and as Bro. J. S. Roth has not seen fit to come yet, we would gladly welcome any minister. We have expected Brother Roth since last November. According to his last promise, he would be here soon after General Conference. We had made arrangements for a place to preach, and now we see by HERALD he is billed elsewhere for most of the summer, leaving us in disappointment, as well as our neighbors who have never heard God's message.

This is a good country. One with small means can get a good home. Our fruit prospect is fine.

IDA MCKINNEY.

KINGSDOWN, KANSAS, June 2, 1911.

Dear Herald: A few moments' time has been allotted me for reflection, aside from the common cares and conversations with the Saints. I thought I would write you some things that fly through my mind while detained so far away from my home in Saint Joseph, Missouri. This is a beautiful country to what it was when I was here thirty years ago. The landscape scenery is level, and as far as one can see in any direction is small grain, most of which is headed. Frame houses have taken the place of sod houses and dugouts, which we used to live in many years ago, and the prairies once inhabited by the American Indians are turned into vast wheat fields.

When I was a boy eleven to fifteen years old, our greatest fear here was the Indians, the wolves, and the wild cat; but what a change! The meadow larks still sing the same songs, though they have a better living now than when the rosin and tumble weed grew so rankly and when the cattle and sheep grazed in herds of a thousand or more. The prairies were dotted here and there with patches of wild onions, which were distasteful to the buffalo, antelope, and deer, but always were chosen by the Indians for a camping place, and to this day the Jews are fond of that vegetable.

At that time I lived with my brother and sister and widowed mother in a dugout with one room, where snakes and striped ground squirrels, badgers, prairie dogs, and wolves greeted us at the door, begging us for water and crumbs, and all we had to drink and eat were water and parched corn ground in a coffee mill and eaten with milk. Sometimes, when we had sugar, we had red root tea, and to keep ourselves warm in winter, we would have to cut corn stalks three hours a day from a little patch we raised every year. When a grasshopper year came on, the Indian Commissioner took pity on a few deserving families and we drew food same as the Indians. God will reward him.

At that time I had little thought of any plan of salvation. We had a Bible, but we kept it to record deaths in, and we looked upon it as a solemn, safe keeping record of obituaries which contained the deaths of our father, one brother, and two sisters.

Finally our mother became very sick and she thought she would soon die; she wanted to get homes for us little ones, and she finally got a home for me. But they always had family prayer and asked blessings at the table, and it didn't suit me, and I ran off, and heard several weeks later that my mother was dead and buried and that brother and sister were adopted by a Mr. and Mrs. Wooley, and I went and claimed adoption too. As they were my mother's choice and I was admitted to their family, we all soon emigrated to Council Bluffs, Iowa, and my sister married a Mormon several years later. But I joined the Reorganized Church and years later moved to Saint Joseph and am now branch priest of the Second Branch and correspondent for Ensign and bishop's agent under Bro. Charles P. Faul; also assistant district secretary of Far West District.

One can see how the Lord works to lead out the lowly to higher and nobler work. My mind is now drawn to the great plan designed by our heavenly Father to save fallen man and how he organized perfect man with all his parts to match the church in fundamental principles. When God made man, he gave him six gifts all at one time,—life, hearing, seeing, smelling, tasting, and feeling. He had just given him six parts,—the two lower limbs, the two arms, the head and the body. Making six parts to man, he gave six gifts to the head,—two eyes, two ears, mouth and nose; then there are five openings in the head, for the five senses,—ears, two; nostrils, two; and mouth. There are six fundamental principles in the doctrine of Christ, and six principles in man's organization. The right foot is faith, the left is repentance, the right hand is baptism, the left hand is laying on of hands, the body is the resurrection, and the head is eternal judgment. The head contains six principles,—two eyes, two ears, mouth and nose. As there are twelve different principles in man's perfect organization, there are twelve officers to govern him,—apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, deacons, priests, bishops, elders, seventy, high priests, and patriarchs. There are twelve apostles in the church,—read 1 Corinthians 12: 12. There is a group of six blessings for man,—revelations, visions, dreams, ministry of angels, power to cast out devils, power against deadly poison. There are nine spiritual gifts to man, namely: wisdom, knowledge, faith, healing, miracles, prophecy, discernment, tongues, and interpretation of tongues. There are nine gifts or parts to the body of man—flesh, blood, bone, muscle, sinew, nerve, vein, tissue, hair and nails compounded, which are only the appendages of the skin. We can see that the church of Christ and man are organized in harmony, in office and gifts and blessings, none of which can be done away with without suffering loss.

No one can take the Bible and make the believers disbelievers. If I were to preach any thing else than that Paul preached, it would be my duty to first serve notice on the people that I had called upon the wise men and by their aid we had framed articles of faith different from those bound up in the Bible, and thus be honest with those to be taught rather than fasten my views on the Bible. If I were the author of a new religion, it would likely be closer to tradition if human wisdom were my man of counsel than it would be to God's plan. Hence the church I would organize would be after the pattern of the emblem of the Isle of Man, which is a three legged man with no body, no eye to say to the ear, "I have no need of thee." The foot could not say to the hand, "I have no need of thee," for there is no hand, no head with ears, eyes or nose, no brain emblematic of the president, no eyes to direct the two counselors, no ears to hear the petitions of the body, no believers to go on to perfection, no signs to follow the believer that they might be perfected, no baptism by authority, no laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. All these principles of the restored gospel would be ignored wheré there were no new revelations to guide into all truth.

An Account of the Williams Special Series of Meetings Held at Webb City, Missouri.

Early in February, action was taken at our regular business meeting by which a special effort was started to make arrangements for a special series of evangelical meetings to begin at this place as soon as convenient after General Conference. After some deliberation, an arrangement committee, consisting of four young men, was chosen, who went right at work with the following glowing results.

Correspondence was taken up with the missionary in charge, and in turn referred to Apostle I. N. White and associate, and later taken to the President, who showed us his usual willing and helpful hand. After an unsuccessful attempt in securing the speaker we sought, we undauntingly recast our efforts in another direction, through practically similar channels. At first the sentiment of the majority of our people seemed to favor Bro. R. C. Evans as our speaker, possibly through reading of his recent reputation gained in the Toronto pulpit, and our first impression was to secure him if possible. But failing in this, the committee with a single voice decided to engage Bro. T. W. Williams, and after considerable correspondence, received his letter of acceptance; and we wish to say that very few, if anyone in Webb City, had cause to regret the wisdom of that effort.

Our first labor in the way of securing the finances to meet the expenses of our meeting was a box supper, from which was realized the small sum of six dollars and seventy-five cents. Of course this looked rather discouraging, but with the assistance of our finance committee, half of which was composed of three promising, rustling young ladies who went after the "coin," we succeeded in gathering about one hundred and sixty-three dollars. Considerable opposition was met with, but we pushed forward with a vim born of unremittent faith.

Four collections were taken up, the first one after the meeting had been in progress one week, the next two the following Sabbath, and one at the close of the meetings, which netted about fifty-five dollars.

The Sunday school and Religio also came in with their no small mite for the occasion, and one man (an outsider) handed us twenty dollars and told us if we needed any more to let him know. By the way, this same man told us if we would get Williams to come back here to stay for a year, he would give ten dollars per month toward his support.

We advertised extensively, sparing no pains, laboring day and night, in letting everyone know that "something was going to be doing in our town." We had two large signs painted on muslin about seven or eight feet long, announcing the meetings and speaker. One was placed on the church, and the other on a vacant business lot, on the corner of the most prominent place in town. In addition to this, three sets of advertising matter were used, including large placards about eleven by fourteen inches, smaller ones about four and one half by ten inches, and pocket sized cards, the two latter ones containing Brother William's picture, and a list of his sermon subjects, with corresponding dates. We succeeded in gaining a prominent place in our daily newspapers without much trouble, each giving us royal support and one of them giving us an elegant editorial. We had nearly a two column write up or synopsis every publication. About two hundred extra papers were printed each day.

We must not fail to mention the musical feature of our meeting. Our music leader, Bro. Hale W. Smith, son of our venerable President, was no novice indeed, and rendered us excellent service with his choice selection of solos, anthems, duets, etc.; and with his superb sense of leadership on lines of music, he won the hearts of all who heard him. We wish to thank Brother Carmichael for releasing Brother Smith to us for the occasion. Brother Williams was accorded the special privilege, by invitation, of addressing the high school pupils, and Brother Smith sang a solo. Both were applauded and many compliments were given them. Brother Williams was afterwards invited to address the Boys' Club, which he did.

Most favorable comments were given Brother Williams after his discourses, which we can not give in the small space accorded us; but, suffice to say, we have heard numbers say they never heard anything like it in their life.

No pains were spared in providing for the comforts and conveniences of our speakers or the general public in attendance. Another feature of our meetings was the question card. We had printed cards, pocket size, and handed them out at the beginning of the meetings, and at the close the ushers gathered them up and they were answered from the pulpit. This feature was well patronized and brought forth much thought that went to prove our standpoint. Some of the questions which were handed in contained questions (from nonmembers) similar to the following: "When are you coming back, Mr. Williams?"

The Sabbath prior to the beginning of our meeting was spent in fasting and prayer by the arrangement committee. We did heroic work in our tract distribution effort, about six dollars' worth of them being distributed. Among them were: "Latter Day Saints, Who are They?" "Future Punishment," "Was Joseph Smith a Prophet of God?" "71 Theological Questions," "Is Water Baptism Essential to Salvation?" "Good News," and others. All were eagerly sought after. Many Ensigns and HERALDS were given away.

Truly, "the man with a message" came in our midst and showed us where "The Pearl of Great Price" was to be found. Indeed this is an excellent field for future maneuvers, and it now lies with the powers that be whether we merit more generals in our field. We await the decision of our superiors.

Respectfully,

F. L. FREEMAN,
O. L. BRADFORD,
C. H. HOBART,
FRANK H. COWEN, Committee.

News From Missions

Nauvoo District.

Several changes in the personnel of this district have come of late through appointment of the "powers that be," including the General Conference. Our associate president and secretary, Bro. Mark H. Siegfried, has been appointed to the editorship of the Ensign and has removed to Independence. We believe Brother Siegfried is working along the line for which he is best adapted, and will prove a success in his new work. We wish him well.

The writer was appointed to the Pittsburg District. Our purpose has been previously to get to our field as soon as possible after General Conference, but circumstances seem to require our presence here for a short time this year. Being the only officer left in the district besides Bishop Lambert, we were permitted by our missionary in charge, Bro. R. C. Russell, to remain until the district conference convened at Ottumwa, June 3 and 4, when new officers will be chosen. Immediately after the conference we take our journey to the East to take up the duties of our new field.

During the four years we have labored in Burlington and Nauvoo District, many ties of friendship and saintly love have been formed, which cause us to regret the separation, but duty and the service of God come first in life, and though separations often occur with the ministry and those for whom they labor, yet the ties of friendship are not broken altogether. New ties are being formed constantly, to continue through life, and no doubt in eternity.

We have visited nearly all the branches in the district and expect to close our work here at Ottumwa with the conference. A number of newspapers in our district have opened their columns to articles touching upon church work. Brother Siegfried has had several articles in the Macomb Journal and they have been copied by others. Observation and experience teach us that most publications are willing to accept articles written affirmatively, and which are of general interest to the public, or what the publishers call "news." None of them care for negative articles unless they should deal with matters in which their readers are specially interested; nor are they willing to accept matter in which the editor or paper is blamed for something which has previously appeared. A mistake is often made in trying to cover too much ground in an article, especially along doctrinal lines. A very little doctrine spiced in with interesting historical or other matter will be more effectual than many columns of straight doctrine, which often appears dogmatical to the reader. It is often worth while to furnish a few cuts to illustrate articles,—the expense is not great and the cuts may be used repeatedly.

On the 24th instant the largest social assemblage of Saints and friends we had seen in Burlington, suddenly took possession of our home at 8 p. m., and continued in possession till the evening had passed. A committee worked secretly in a guarded room, and in due time the pastor and his family were brought in, and in a very appropriate speech Bro. H. E. Jarvis, on behalf of the Saints and friends, presented a very handsome set of silver plated tableware. Appreciation of the love and esteem as manifested through the beautiful and useful gift, was expressed in a speech of thanks by the pastor, who also briefly reviewed the work of the past four years.

We truly feel that we carry with us the hearty good will of all the Saints here. May the Lord bless his people and prosper his work to the saving of many souls. We are certain our successor, Bro. F. M. Cooper, will find a band of Saints here whom he will not fail to love, and we pray the blessing of the Master to be with him in his work.

CHARLES FRY.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, May 31, 1911.

Southern Nebraska.

A few lines from Southern Nebraska may not be out of place. We are moving along here as well as can be expected, seeing that there but few missionaries in this district.

I was in Plattsmouth, Nebraska, on the 17th. I had the pleasure of leading two heads of families down into the waters of baptism. There are more to follow soon. The work there is doing nicely. Brethren Jones and Baldwin are earnest workers and sound in the faith, and will do something for the work there in the future. Plattsmouth is a town of about five thousand and is the county seat of Cass County, Nebraska, and is situated at the mouth of the Platte River.

The Utah elders have been there of late canvassing the town, going from house to house, saying, "We are the Latter Day Saints and the true church of God, of which Joseph Smith was the founder," and that the Reorganization is the same in faith and doctrine, but have departed or severed their connections with the true church, that they have apostatized.

They came to our meetings and we gave them a little straight talk which they did not seem to like, and the Lord came to our help and gave Brother Baldwin a vision, and the valley of the mountains was open to his view, and the land all around was spiritually barren and a mist of spiritual darkness hung all over the valley; and while he thus stood gazing upon the scene, a light came down from heaven and he could see two large holes in the valley at the foot of the mountains. There were worn paths leading from the holes, and a large beast came out and came to where our brother was standing, and he took hold of the beast with his right hand and held him fast with ease. His wife and child appeared on his left hand and the beast tried to get at them to do them harm, but he controlled him completely and the vision vanished. This was given on May 11, and the 13th was the Sabbath and the Saints were gathered at his house for meetings. He entered the meeting and shook hands with all present, and when he came to two young men whom he knew not and shook hands with them, the voice of the Spirit said, The Beast, the Beast, so plain that it filled his whole being with astonishment and conviction of the truth of the vision. The young men were Utah elders.

The two holes in the valley at the foot of the mountains represent the temple and tabernacle where the beast dwells from which the elders are sent forth. So the Lord is coming to rescue and making plain the prophecy of Brother Joseph, when he said the difference between us and the Utah people shall be made plain to the people.

Your brother for the truth,

WM. SELF.

NEBRASKA CITY, NEBRASKA, May 23, 1911.

Australia.

I fear I have not been so faithful in reporting my experiences and travels in this sunny southern land as I promised to be, but will try to make amends for past failures by doing better in the future. On the 10th day of August, 1909, Elder J. W. Davis and the writer arrived in Sidney. We found a body of noble-hearted and enthusiastic Saints ready to welcome us into their midst, and to do all in their power to make our stay in their country both pleasant and profitable to ourselves, as well as conducive to the good of the work.

By arrangement with the minister in charge, Bro. C. A. Butterworth, the writer remained in Sydney the greater part of the first half year, laboring in connection with the branch at Leichhardt. I can not say that this was altogether agreeable to me, as I was not accustomed to city work, and would have very much preferred laboring with Brother Davis in the country. However, I did the best I could, and if I failed to accomplish as much as it was hoped, it was not through a failure to try.

At the conference held at Christman, 1909, Brother Davis was sent to look after the work in the city of Adelaide, South Australia, and I was given the north coast mission, comprising the various branches along the coast north of Sydney in New South Wales. This is more like the work I was used to at home than the work at Leichhardt, and was more agreeable to me. I think also it was more productive of good results.

During the year 1910 I traveled approximately two thousand miles with horse and sulky, having as companions Brn. Victor Seaberg, C. A. Butterworth, W. J. Haworth, and George Lewis. We labored in the branches of Hamilton, Wallsend, West Wallsend, Bulahdelah, Tuncurry, Laurinton, and Argents Hill, and at several other points. Several were added to the church at various places, the Saints strengthened and encouraged and, we think, the work generally placed upon a better footing.

Just before Christmas, we held a four-night debate with Christadelphians at Weston. It came as result of their throwing out challenges to the world to meet them, and was a new opening for us. While there were no baptisms as a result, the general consensus of opinion was in our favor. One gentleman, a shorthand reporter, member of my opponent's church, told me he thought I had a better doctrine than they had. He also commended me for treating my opponent so courteously. I would like to give special attention to the work there, but unfortunately the field is so large and laborers so few that we can not meet all the demands made upon our time.

At Teralbe, near Wallsend, through the efforts of a shut in brother, Jack Thornton, and a wide-awake and energetic sister, we secured an opening resulting in the baptism of three noble souls and the beginning of a work which, if I mistake not, will redound to the good of the work in that part of the mission in years to come.

On the 14th of April, our district reunion convened at Bulahdelah, and was a spiritual feast throughout, although it was at the festive season when great doings were going on in Sydney and thousands were going in from the country to attend the shows and exhibitions. The Saints, young and old, seemed anxious to leave the scenes of gait behind them and gather to the sequestered little village to spend their holidays praising the Lord. One could not but feel that the prospect for the work in this mission was glorious as he listened to the earnest prayers and testimonies, especially of the young Saints, who with grateful tears coursing down their faces told of their willingness and determination to labor in its interest to the end. The last preaching service of the reunion was given over to three of the young men, all members of the branch at Balmain, and with little experience as preachers. But as we saw them standing before us, their faces shining with holy zeal, and speaking under the Spirit's guidance, our hearts were made to burn within us. We saw how easily the Lord could find laborers to carry forward this grand work. There are several young men of talent in this mission who in years to come, if they continue faithful, will become a mighty force for good.

At the close of the reunion, I came to this place, a distance of two hundred miles, by bicycle, being called to the bedside of an aged sister who was declared by the doctors to be dying with cancer of the stomach. I found her able to sit up and sew. She had called in the local elder and been anointed and received a blessing from the Lord. I have witnessed a number of marvelous cases of healing in this mission which speaks well for the faithfulness of the Saints. I visited one home and found the sister in great pain; the cause of her suffering was an internal tumor. She received administration and the pain immediately left her, and the enlargement gradually disappeared. Another sister was told that her only hope was to submit to an operation for the removal of a tumor, but she placed her case in the hands of the Great Physician and the tumor came away of itself.

There seems to be a great desire on the part of the Saints here to understand and comply with the law pertaining to temporalities. Some seem to think, however, that the law of consecration to obtain the land of Zion should not be observed by the Saints in their scattered condition. I believe and teach that the name Zion is applied in three ways: first, to a people, second, to a condition, and third, to a place. The best, quickest, and surest way to get Zion established in the proper place, is to get the children of Zion in the proper condition, wherever they may be, and this can only be done by observing the laws that will obtain in Zion.

May the Lord bless and prosper his work in all the world in my ardent desire.

Nothing can be so inspiring to a human being as the idea that he is of value, that his help is really wanted. Nothing can so enforce the doctrine of responsibility as the realization that it rests with us to choose whether we shall mend or mar, shall beautify or deface, some portion of the work.—Oliver Lodge.

Died.

CRANDALL.—Roscoe Crandal was born June 27, 1876, at Flint, Steuben County, Indiana, and has lived in this county all his life. He was the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Crandall. He was united in marriage to Maud M. Holden. To them were born R. Clair, H. Wayne, and Richard Dale, the last named dying at the age of six months. He was a true and loving husband and father. He was a member of the church and had lived a Christian life. When it was made known to him that death was near, he said he was ready to go without any fear. He advised all to live faithful. He was a member of the order of Odd Fellows. He passed away quietly on May 9. Funeral services were held in the Angola Congregational Church, May 12, 1911; services conducted by Elder G. A. Smith, assisted by Reverend Humphrey, pastor. He was buried nicely, under the auspices of the Odd Fellows.

BEACH.—Sr. Mary E. Beach went home to God, from the home of her daughter, Sr. Ella M. Edwards, in North Weymouth, Massachusetts, at 2:45 a. m., Friday, May 12, 1911. Her age was 76 years. She first heard the gospel about thirty-two years ago, in Douglas, Massachusetts, and was baptized two weeks afterward. All of her children and many of her relatives accepted the truth about the same time. As long as she had a home of her own, it was truly open and not ajar to all of God's Saints and any others in need of help, either temporal or spiritual, and she was never so happy as when taking care of the preachers, who very often made her house their headquarters, both for preaching and sojourning while in her neighborhood. She was ever gentle, loving, and true; her life was truly one of sacrifice for others. She leaves two daughters and one son, who loved her tenderly, to mourn her loss.

LANE.—At Lamoni, Iowa, June 1, 1911, Bro. Joseph Lane, aged 63 years, 1 month and 28 days. He was taken with abscess of the liver one year before death and suffered much. Wife and two sons and four daughters mourn his departure. He was baptized at Gallands Grove, Iowa, in 1875, by Bro. John Hawley, and later was ordained a teacher in the Earling Branch. Bro. D. D. Young offered prayer at the house. Bro.

J. R. Lambert had charge at the church, and Bro. H. A. Stebbins preached the sermon.

GORTON.—Sr. Sierra Nevada Ann Hawks Gorton was born at Carlinville, Illinois, September 18, 1855. Was married to Wilson Gorton July 18, 1878. To this union five children were born; the eldest died in infancy. Those who mourn the loss of a loving mother, are Weaver and Effie F. Gorton, of Chicago, Elsie Hardin, of Plano, Illinois, and Clara Pearl Wilson, of Madison, Wisconsin. Besides these are her aged father, A. S. Hawks, of Plano, two brothers, D. L. and Jesse, of Chicago, and two sisters, Mrs. J. W. Muher, of Hurdsville, N. D., and Mrs. Ann Smith, of Bassett, Nebraska. Also five half brothers, Nat, Robert, George, and Edward Reeves. She was baptized October 14, 1885, by Elder W. Vickery. She was a faithful wife and mother. She passed gently away at her home in Plano, May 28, 1911. Her husband had preceded her a few years. Funeral at the Stone Church. Prayer and scriptural reading by Elder C. H. Burr; sermon by Elder E. M. Wildermuth. Interment at the Plano cemetery.

ALLEN.—Jennie Allen died at home, Milton, Florida, June 2, of heart disease. She was born April 27, 1861, at Milton. Her maiden name was Robinson and she was one of a family of ten,—one sister and three brothers surviving. She was married to S. D. Allen, March 26, 1882, and to them seven children were born, of which three girls and two boys are left to mourn. She was baptized October 19, 1893, by M. M. Turpen, and confirmed by M. M. Turpen and A. D. Greer. The funeral sermon was preached by C. J. Clark. Sister Allen's life was an exemplification of the gospel of Christ. Wherever her name was mentioned, the expression, "She was a good woman and a true Latter Day Saint," followed it. She leaves a host of friends, both in and out of the church.

SMITH.—Mrs. Elizabeth Bissel Smith in Mantua, Ohio, February 28, 1839, and passed from this life May 18, 1911, at the age of 72 years, 2 months, and 21 days. She was married to Sherman I. Smith, April 5, 1859, and came to Michigan to live in October of the same year. In January, 1860, they began housekeeping on the farm where they have lived for over fifty-two years. Three children came to bless their home; Ida, who died in infancy; Arthur, of Kalamazoo; and Herman, who has always resided on the old homestead. She also leaves six grandchildren and one great-grandchild, besides an extremely large circle of friends and other relatives to mourn her loss. She was a devoted Christian, a loving wife and mother, and a sympathizing friend, being extremely thoughtful for the good of others, even to the last hours of her life, and was also noted for her generosity and hospitality. Her sunny smile and genial spirit had endeared her to everyone who had been privileged to make her acquaintance, and though she will be greatly missed, our loss will be her gain.

Wife, we've been long together,
'Tis hard to part when friends are dear,
Perhaps 'twill cast a sigh, a tear.
Then steal away, give little mourning,
Choose thine own time, say not good-night,
But in some bright clime, bid us good-morning.

S. I. SMITH.

New York's Up-to-date Library.

On the top floor of this four-storied library is the main reading room extending almost the length of two city blocks, and furnished with the latest devices in elevators, pneumatic tubes, and telephones, for instant communication with the stacks and with rooms containing special collections. The main book-shelves are immediately beneath this sumptuous room—seven levels, allowing of sixty-three miles of book space. Adjoining this reading room is the catalogue section, with its six thousand card drawers. This is the heart of the library as far as reference work is concerned; for not only will the reader be able to place his hand upon any book the library contains, but, by means of the "union" feature, he will be able to locate volumes in other libraries, which are not contained in this.

Through spacious halls, rich in tone and almost severe in lines, one is carried to the special departments—technical and artistic; along corridors monastic in depth to reading rooms set aside for newspapers and periodicals, and into galleries for pictures and prints. In the basement is a model children's department; on the same floor provision has been made for a training school, and for a printing plant for library publications. The modern conception of the library as a business necessitates advertising in order to reach the varied interests of a democratic reading public. Book lists for free distribution are compiled, and by these suggestive means, the library is able to indicate its full resources.—From "The New York Public Library," by Montrose J. Moses, in the American Review of Reviews for June.

Now, the casual reader of the average telegram or column of American news might easily be excused if he regarded the United States as a land where nothing but tornadoes, lynchings, skyscrapers, society divorce scandals, freak dinners, and railway accidents of an ingeniously harrowing description happened all the time; a land wholly given over to a sordid hustling to get rich quickly, a place where vulgar millionaires manipulate the price of pork for their private ends, and where plain living and high thinking are at a discount. Nothing could be really further from the truth.—From "America in Earnest," by G. C. Ashton-Jonson in The Chautauquan for June.

We do not appreciate how necessary it is for a man to believe in those about him just as far as he can and cooperate with them just as fully as he can. No matter how high the ideals for which we stand, we can not expect others to follow us unless we have confidence in them. We can not expect devotion if we return it with distrust. We can not expect cooperation unless we are prepared to give freely of our confidence.—Arthur T. Hadley.

Stay at home, my heart, and rest;
The bird is safest in its nest;
For all that flutter their wings and fly,
A hawk is hovering in the sky;
To stay at home is best.

—H. W. Longfellow.

THE LATE CONFERENCE.

It may not have occurred to anyone to discuss the late conference; that is, the conference of 1911. Incidentally, we have heard from a small series of side issues, and more or less from those who were not present at the conference, that it was a "tame affair," one critic using the term, "exceedingly tame."

What kind of a conference may have been in the mind of these critics at the time the criticism was made does not appear clear, unless one takes pains to remember conferences past, in which there has been a much greater amount of boisterous discussion upon more or less important questions, upon which disputants differed, such difference seeming to be serious. However, passing events may be best measured by the results which flow therefrom, or the succession of events which follow after, resulting from either the spirit under which the event occurred, or the things which led up to the event. From letters, correspondence, communications, so far received by the Bishopric and the Presidency, the conference of 1911 has been fraught with good results, the spirit of such communications partaking largely of the quiet and strength of the Spirit which prevailed at the conference itself.

At the conference there was a striking absence of introductions and resolutions, seemingly intended to further the individual notions of the movers and of those calculated to stir up strenuous opposition, always working to take advantage of the occasion, and to strike at what appears to be obnoxious to it. It is true that there were several resolutions introduced upon which time was spent, and to the looker-on evidently wasted, the end of which discussion was, however, beneficial, or as two or three remarked at its close, "educational to the body." Not a vote was sufficiently close as to cause either those for or against a measure to call for the yeas and nays. As a result the actual representative voting strength of the church was not recorded, the business being done by the ordinary calling of the vote.

The reports from the different branches and departments of the church were full and quite definite, showing in many respects a marked increase in effort and result in the year that had passed. This was encouraging. Matters were committed to various quorums and committees for action, the result of which action is not yet apparent, as some parts of this work were quite difficult, and must be necessarily the result of time for consultation and mature consideration.

There was a spirit of quiet but strong hopefulness prevalent during the entire session. This was evident in the preaching services as well as in the prayer and fellowship meetings. The weather at times was unpropitious, but dampened neither the spirits nor the ardor of those attending the session. It is doubtful if Lamoni ever saw gatherings at an annual conference upon the occasions of preaching the word at which there was a greater attendance, a more intense and earnest interest than on the two Sundays over which the session held. The spirit of strong assurance which the apostle characterized in the sentence, "For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance;" as stated in 1 Thessalonians 1: 5.

The principles upon which the reorganization of the church was based, and upon which its superstructure has been builded were enunciated by the President of the conference in the morning of the first Sunday of the session, the basis thus taken having been furnished in the unchanging design of the Almighty as given in his word. In respect to this basis and the building of a superstructure upon it, the early movers in the reorganization effort builded far better than they knew, unless we grant unto them the presence of the prophetic prescience. As an evidence of this it may be remembered with profit that at the conference held June 12, 1852, a resolution was introduced and was discussed and adopted declaring the faith and the allegiance of these restorers in the primitive faith of the church as enunciated by the church, in the adoption of the commandments of God as compiled in 1835, and as found in the Bible, in the revelation of God called the Book of Mormon, and the commandments and ordinances given in the formative period of the church during the active regime of the Prophet Joseph Smith and his brother, Hyrum. This resolution was strengthened by a bold and confident renunciation of adher-ance to all principles of faith and practice which were counter to the declaration of faith made by them, and practices which were contrary to the revealed word.

From the communications received from the brethren since conference, it is quite clear that the superstructure of our work is buttressed and strengthened in all its parts by the brethren in the field, by the application of the principles to which this quiet and strong assurance referred to above applies. Peace and the continued assurance of the Spirit will abide with those workers who maintain their independence of character and continue to found their faith and their presentation of it upon the basis of the word of God. All power, and honor, and glory be to Him for ever. Amen.

LOOK OUT FOR HIM.

The Peter S. Morrison whose name appears in the clipping below, taken from the Kansas City Journal for June 4, is something of a fraud. Brn. T. W. Chatburn and Hale W. Smith came across him out in North Dakota, where he took the brethren's attention and sympathy by a story he told of having been acquainted with the Prophet Joseph Smith, and having seen him the morning of the day that he left for Carthage. He also stated that as a boy he was taken into the family of Grandmother Smith, the Prophet's mother, and was taken care of by her for many years. He professed to have a great deal of property. In company with one of his grandsons or grandnephews he had a great herd of horses in the West which he was going to ship west, but he had met with some losses and needed a little help. He stated that, after the death of the Prophet, he wandered away from the city of Nauvoo, settled not far from Grand Rapids, Michigan, where he became identified with the Baptist Church. He talked so nicely about the church and the doctrine, that he fairly fooled the brethren, and was baptized by one of them, and was brought into contact with the Spokane Branch, where the brethren attempted to help him temporarily. The brethren found a place for him to room, and made arrangements for him to board. He stayed a few days and slipped away, leaving the brethren to pay the bills. If he should come your way, look out for him. Grandmother Smith's history is silent so far as the name of Peter S. Morrison is concerned, and had the circumstance which he stated occurred, it was so unusual that she would have noted it in her history. He claimed to be an old soldier, being some ninety years of age, which he still seems to hang on to. Don't let him fool you.

CHICAGO, June 3.—A gray bearded man, carrying a hickory cane, called at the municipal lodging house in North Union street last night and said to the clerk:

"Young man, I was directed here for a night's lodging. Do I get it?"

"Name?" asked the clerk as he reached for a registry card.

"Peter S. Morrison," was the reply.

"Age?" was the next question.

"Ninety-eight the 11th day of last March."

"What?" exclaimed the clerk in a doubtful tone. "Come, come, old man, give me your right age."

"Never lied in my life," was the patriarch's quick retort.

"I'm ninety-eight, and if you say I'm not I'll crack you across the head with this cane."

Morrison, who says he is a veteran of the Mexican and Civil wars, lives in Big Horn Basin, Wyoming, and came east on a visit. He draws a pension and had money enough to take him home but on the way from Detroit to Chicago was robbed. He has telegraphed to his son in Wyoming for money.

CHARLES F. LUMMIS ON AMERICAN ARCHÆOLOGY.

Charles F. Lummis, a well known California author and former editor of the Outwest magazine, and regent of the School of American Archæology, has recently returned from a tour of Guatemala, where the school has secured a grant of eighty acres on which are located some remarkable ruins that are being investigated. In an interview in the Los Angeles Times, May 18, 1911, he is reported to have made the following statements regarding his expedition:

"In the last two weeks of the expedition's work, this enormous felling was burned off. Fire paths were made around a dozen different areas, and these were burned singly. This was matter of frontier experience, for the green jungle burns almost like tinder, especially if full of manaca palm. The area is now cleared of everything except the hugest logs of mahogany, ceiba, cedar, Santa Maria, and other precious woods, and excavation was begun in the last few days of the expedition. It was richly rewarded by the discovery of unguessed friezes of heroic sized heads, of a sculpture fully equal to the middle age of Greek art; and the discovery of the key to them.

"Each of the extraordinary monuments at Quirigua has, besides its wonderful sculpture, a long series of glyphs. Some of these refer to matters not yet deciphered; but the chronological glyphs have been unriddled by Mr. Morley of the expedition, one of the foremost in his line. The Mayas had a chronology fully as complete as ours, and rather more logical. It has been greatly abused by 'closet scientists,' (who never saw the monument or the fleas) of Guatemala. Their 14,000-year antiquities are absurd; but the best evidence to field scientists warrant an allotment of about 1500 to 1800 years to these ruins.

"Here, better than almost anywhere else among the ruins of prehistoric America, will be solved the fascinating problem of how, and how far these 'savages' lifted and transported for miles, blocks of rock weighing eighty to a hundred tons apiece; and with what tools they sculptured them in a relief of from eight inches to a foot. If it was with stone implements, as has been held by scientists, it is the most extraordinary work ever done; being not only equal to, but in fact, far surpassing, the best work of one Inca with their tempered bronze, and equaling anything in Egypt. An exhaustive series of photographs of these carvings, showing every face and glyph, has been made by the expert photographer of the expedition, Jesse L. Nasubaum, and later, casts will be taken so that any one of these monuments can be reproduced in cement. It is expected that some of the replicas will adorn the court of the Southwest Museum.

"No less astonishing than the Monoliths, are the great pyramids grouped about this sacred city of the Mayas. With the earth which forms their core, and the cut stone with which they are faced and terraced, these artificial eminences contain millions of cubic feet, and as the stone was brought from a distance of at least three miles, some idea can be had of the labor and the time required to construct this religious center of several hundred square miles. Quirigua is only about thirty miles, in an air line, from the famous ruins of Copan in Honduras—though it takes a three days' ride by mule, following a fifty-mile railroad trip, to reach Copan from Quirigua. The latter city survived somewhat longer than Copan, as is proved by their respective date-glyphs.

"Within a very few years Quirigua will be one of the most prominent attractions of the traveler in Central America. No other of the marvelous ruins north of Panama is so easily accessible, for Quirigua lies but a few miles from the station of the same name on the Guatemala railroad; and switch tracks of the fruit company run by the very corner of the school's reservation. This will be probably the first archaeological park in the world, and will be almost as interesting for its park features as for its antiquities. Here is confessedly the noblest specimen of the Central American jungle. In five years hardly anything will be left of that magnificent forest whose floor-like top averages 150 feet in height, and whose roots are in everlasting shade and coolness, despite the tropical sun. Wherever the jungle grows bananas will grow; and the jungle is rapidly being replaced by the waving fronds of the succulent musa. But the school is sacredly saving some sixty acres of jungle for a "frame" around the ruins, so that the remnant of this ancient civilization will be seen in its original setting—the matchless Guatemalan forest."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE CONSTITUTION OF MISSOURI ON RELIGIOUS CORPORATIONS.—We call attention to the article under the above heading appearing in another department. Bro. S. A. Burgess, an attorney at law, has been to some trouble to make extracts from the Constitution of Missouri. These extracts, together with his comments thereon, will be of interest to our readers, especially those who have made inquiry as to the development of the Constitution of Missouri, its changes, if any, since 1830, and its present attitude toward religious corporations.

ZION WITHIN FIVE YEARS.—The Kansas City Journal for June 9, 1911, contains the following interesting item:

"That everything indicates the fulfillment of the prophecies, and, that there will be a Jewish nation within the next five years, is the belief of Pastor Russell of the great Brooklyn Tabernacle, who will speak in Convention Hall Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. The meetings are free to all who attend.

"Many years ago Pastor Russell discovered that hundreds of texts in the Hebrew prophecies relative to the promises to Israel were as yet unfulfilled, and he became intensely interested in their history, past, present and future, but especially in the future, as the blessings promised to all nations must follow the reestablishment of the Jewish people as a nation in Palestine, their promised land.

"Since his return from his 1910 tour of the Holy Land he has addressed many large Jewish audiences on "Jerusalem," "Zionism in Prophecy," and "Zionism, the Hope of the World," the latter being the subject for Kansas City Wednesday night.

BISHOPS' DAY IN LAMONI.—Sunday morning the stake bishopric occupied the stand in the Brick Church, Bishop Joseph Roberts being the speaker, his theme equality. In the evening Bishop A. Carmichael occupied in the park, dwelling upon economic questions. Park services will be held each evening during the week, excepting Saturday evening. As a rule these park services are a very pleasant and profitable feature of devotional life in Lamoni during the summer months.

SERVICES IN CAMERON, MISSOURI.—The Cameron Daily Observer, June 13, devotes a column editorial to the services recently held at that place by Elder Hale W. Smith. The editorial includes a synopsis of one of his sermons. Elders should make it a point to get in touch with the local newspaper wherever possible.

Hymns and Poems

Selected and Original The Fountain of Life.

O, for grace to live completely
In the power of Jesus' name,
That our lives reflect so sweetly
Beauties of our Savior's fame.

Would we know surcease from sorrow?
Bid our beating heart be still?
Would we look for joy to-morrow?
Let us bow to Heaven's will.

Make our Master's will our pleasure
Fill our hearts with love divine;
Then the gold of heaven we'll treasure,
All the wealth of worlds be mine.

All the riches of the mountains,
In the mines or fruits above,
Don't compare with Heaven's fountains
Or the wonders of His love.

Come, then, drink at this pure fountain,
Lave from care the heated brow,
Leave thy griefs on Calvary's mountain,
Give your heart to Jesus now.

For this fountain freely opens,
All may come and drink at will,
Though our hearts be wounded, broken,
We may come and drink our fill.

Elders' Note-Book

ADMINISTRATIONS.--NO. 2.

I was pleased to note in HERALD, of May 31, under "Notes and comments," that the article on administration had been read with interest by the editors; but I must arise to a point of order, Mr. Editor, on the rendering of section 42, paragraph 12, of the Book of Covenants.

I will state that I had somewhat of the same conviction as yourself for many years, but I find the position unsupported by facts, and am forced to abandon it.

Now let us read section 42, paragraph 12, as you have given it, and see if it can be harmonized with the true rendering, which is supported by the three books as three witnesses.

"Notes and comments" rendition: And whosoever among you are sick, who believe, yet do not have faith to be healed even when they are administered to, such are to be nourished with mild food and herbs, because, they are not healed by administration, because they have not sufficient faith.

Book of Covenants rendition: "And whosoever among you are sick, and have not faith to be healed, but believe, shall be nourished with all tenderness with herbs and mild food, and that not by the hand of an enemy. And the elders of the church, two or more shall be called, and shall pray for, and lay their hands upon them in my name; and if they die, they shall die unto me, and if they live, they shall live unto me."

It seems to me that in "Notes and comments" you have simply gotten the cart before the horse. These individuals spoken of have not faith to be healed (the great gift spoken of in Doctrine and Covenants 46: 7; a specific gift, independent of, and in no way connected with administration), but they are believers in the gospel ordinances, and as children of the kingdom are entitled to the care and protection of the great Father of all.

They believe, hence they must be cared for by those of the household and not turned over to an enemy. They must be nourished with herbs and mild food. I think I can comprehend the great wisdom of this admonition, mild foods which are not of a character to overload the tissues with carbonaceous material, but of sufficient strength to support and sustain life and at the same time not raise the temperature in its metabolic processes, and herbs which the Lord has provided for the benefit of mankind. Just similar to that which is stated in the Book of Alma, large edition, chapter 21, verse 53.

"And there were some who died with fevers, which at some seasons of the year were very frequent in the land; but not so much so with fevers, because of the excellent qualities of the many plants and roots which God had prepared to remove the cause of diseases to which men were subject by the nature of the climate."

Now I do not wish to appeal, nor offer an apology in this last quotation for the use of drugs, but there is one prominent fact which looms up here that is worth noticing in that direction, viz: That the quinine and cinchona bark, cinchonine and cinchonidine are drugs, derived from the very part of the country in which Alma says such fever reducers grew in his day.

I think these herbs spoken of in section 42 can come under the same category. The sick ones lack that great gift of faith which is to raise them up, but this secondary assistance is within their reach, hence, they must avail themselves of it. And by the way, it is God-given, God's preparation, and wisdom from God says it must be used for the benefit of his people.

I notice in the editorial rendition of this paragraph, that the herbs and mild food follows the administration, but, in the section quoted I read that it is after the taking of the herbs and mild food or synchronizes with it.

The statement that they are not healed because of their lack of faith, is exactly my contention. They have not faith, but believe, and are nourished with herbs and mild food, and the elders are called to administer to them (they, the elders, being the ones in whom there should be this faith, because it is a peculiar gift to them); the sick one's sins are forgiven and they are made fit subjects for God to take, if his Spirit so will (Doctrine and Covenants 125: 15).

Again we might cite to the words of our Savior as recorded in Matthew 17: 21, "Howbeit this kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting." You will notice particularly that healing the sick and casting out devils are coupled together in the charge to the elders in the three books, and if there are devils that go not out but by prayer and fasting, then the supposition would follow that many cases of sickness would come under the same law or order.

"Notes and comments" states: "If faith on the part of the elders were all that is necessary, some elder of faith could be secured and these would be healed. But no exercise of faith on the part of the elder can entirely make up for their deficiency in that regard, and so they are not healed, and recourse must be had to other methods."

I can hardly agree with this, for I can not conceive of an all wise and all powerful God commanding a man to do something that he, God, can not successfully cooperate with and accomplish, and the commission is specific, to my mind, when he charged the elders to go and accomplish certain things, especially heal the sick. This commission, it seems to me, stands out the most prominent in the whole of the charges to the eldership, and I can but think that God meant just exactly what he said when he charged them, and if we are mistaken in the understanding we have had of our commission in this respect, let us not try to twist things to meet our conceptions of things, but rather let us be reconciled to God's ways and so be reckoned as faithful servants.

Again, this statement hardly seems to be consistent with the words of Jesus in Matthew 17: 20: "And Jesus said unto them (the disciples, elders): Because of your unbelief; for verily I say unto you, If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove, and nothing shall be impossible unto you."

This seems to me to be applicable to administrations as much as to the removal of mountains, and especially when it states, "nothing shall be impossible."

Again, I notice in "Notes and comments," it makes an exception in the cases where abnormal conditions of body or mind or immature intellect prevent the one administered to from exercising faith.

Why should we make an exception? I know of no statement suggesting such an exception in the three books given us as a guide, except that it suggests the eldership as the instrument through which the blessing is given to all except those who have faith to be healed; and this is my contention, that all sick people are in an abnormal condition, incapable of exercising that strong faith, and the Lord has placed the responsibility just exactly where it should be, in the eldership, who may be called to administer.

If this were untrue, I think we would discover in our research some facts to form a basis for thinking otherwise; but we find the entire evidence points to administration being for those who are not strong in faith, or who have not faith to be healed.

In my research of cases attached to the marvelous side of the question, I have discovered that the greatest cases of healing have come to the unconscious, the delirious, and the infant, not one of whom were in any condition to exercise the least particle of faith, but were blessed by being so fortunate as to have for their supplicant one filled with faith, and exercising his gift according to the wisdom of God.

In conclusion, If we have convictions contrary to the written word, or if we distort the written word to conform to our convictions, we are doing an injustice to ourselves, lending a wrong influence to the following multitudes, and standing in the way of progression.

W. A. SINCLAIR, M. D.

DOES THE INSTITUTION IN DANIEL 2:44, REFERRED TO AS THE KINGDOM, COMPREHEND THE CHURCH?

It is distinctly stated that it (the kingdom referred to) is to be set up in the last days when certain kings are to reign, designated by the feet and toes of the image. It was never to be destroyed, but it would consume all other kingdoms and stand for ever. In the first place God never had but one institution variously referred to as a "house," "body," "church," "sheepfold," and "kingdom." It has been set up, thrown down, and disorganized by the wickedness of men repeatedly; and even destroyed, so far as its earthly existence is concerned. But the kingdom referred to by Daniel was never to be given to another people or destroyed. This, I believe, identifies it with the church of the restoration from the fact that it is declared in Doctrine and Covenants 32: 1, and 39: 5, that this is the eleventh hour and the last time that the Lord would send forth laborers to prune his vineyard.

In section 65 we read, "The keys of the kingdom of God are committed unto man on the earth, and from thence shall the gospel roll forth unto the ends of the earth, as the stone which is cut out of the mountain without hands shall roll forth, until it has filled the whole earth; yea, a voice crying, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, prepare ye the supper of the Lamb, make ready for the Bridegroom; pray unto the Lord; call upon his holy name; make known his wonderful works among the people, call upon the Lord, that his kingdom may go forth upon the earth; that the inhabitants thereof may receive it, and be prepared for the days to come, in the which the Son of Man shall come down in heaven, clothed in the brightness of his glory, to meet the kingdom of God which is set up on the earth; wherefore, may the kingdom of God go forth, that the kingdom of heaven may come," etc.

Here we have it distinctly stated that the "kingdom of God" is set up upon the earth, when the Lord comes, and we are informed in Doctrine and Covenants 1: 5 and 19: 1, that the foundation was laid with the establishment of the church in 1830. It is a provision of divine wisdom that in all things there must be a beginning, an embryonic state or condition. History records no such paradox as the birth of a full-fledged kingdom in a day. The kingdom of heaven had a beginning like the mustard tree, and it must grow and develop until it becomes "very great." The terms church and kingdom are used synonymously by the Savior, as the following references show: "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand." (Mark 1: 15.) "And from the days of John the Baptist until now, the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." (Matthew 11: 12.) Both of these texts refer to the church in the present tense. A favorite proof text with us is, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God,"—the church. Jesus, at that time, was preaching the "gospel of the kingdom," and along with his preaching he said, "I will build my church." His primary instructions to his disciples were, "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God." (Matthew 6: 38.)

When he was interrogated by the Pharisees as to when the kingdom of God should come, he gave them to understand that it was at that time in their midst, among them. (Luke 17: 21.) Again he said, "The law and the prophets testify of me; yea, and all the prophets who have written, even unto John, have foretold of these days. Since that time, the kingdom of God is preached, and every man who seeketh truth presseth into it." (Luke 16: 17, 18.)

The foregoing scriptures clearly teach that the church and the kingdom are one and the same thing. I submit, therefore, that if the church of modern times is a restoration of the primitive church, then the prophecy of Daniel, relative to the setting up of the kingdom in the last days, comprehends the church. The statement, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world," has been proclaimed far and wide for nearly a generation in support of our claims to a restoration of the ancient order of things.

I believe the kingdom of Daniel 2: 44 is the church from the further fact that it is symbolized by a "little stone" which grew and became a "mountain," signifying growth and development, which in a particular manner applies to the church in its militant state. The church is the kingdom of God in preparation, but owing to present conditions and environments it may not be completely organized till the Savior comes and personally establishes it in its perfection. The church, as organized April 6, 1830, was a very small affair, like the mustard seed, but soon advance steps were taken, high priests were ordained and apostles were chosen, stakes were organized, etc. It was the same institution all the while, but was undergoing a process of development, to finally culminate in a complete organization as a universal world-power, when the Master shall come to reign in person. Then will be realized the promise, "The kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ."

Original Articles

THE CONSTITUTION OF MISSOURI ON RELIGIOUS CORPORATIONS.

As a number seem to have the idea that the laws of Missouri were much more favorable in 1830 towards religious corporations than to-day, it may be worth while to give a few brief citations.

In the first Constitution of Missouri, adopted on the 19th day of July, 1820, we find the following:

ARTICLE XIII.

"4. That all men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences; that no man can be compelled to erect, support or attend any place of worship, or to maintain any minister of the gospel or teacher of religion; that no human authority can control or interfere with the rights of conscience; that no person can ever be hurt, molested or restrained in his religious professions or sentiments, if he do not disturb others in their religious worship.

"5. That no person, on account of his religious opinions, can be rendered ineligible to any office of trust or profit under this State; that no preference can ever be given by law to any sect or mode of worship; and that no religious corporation can ever be established in this State."

This continued in force until the Constitution of 1865. We will ignore minor changes and just show a few of the landmarks.

In passing, we notice that thus early was the right of liberty of conscience guaranteed. It was no defect of the law that permitted the outrages of 1837 and 1838. These features of the law have continued substantially to the present day, with such changes as have rather enlarged the rights of the people and protected them from religious domination. The difficulties of religious intolerance in the past hundred years have not been in the laws, but because the body of the people were not fully converted.

The clause providing that he do not disturb others in their religious worship, was afterwards enlarged, "but the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, nor to justify practices inconsistent with good order, peace, or safety of the State, or with the rights of others." (Constitution of 1865, art. 1, sec. 9.)

This is a very frequent provision of constitutional law, and would be a good restriction without the special sanction of the Constitution.

The Constitution of 1865, article 1, sections 12 and 13 reads:

"12. That no religious corporation can be established in this State: except that by a general law, uniform throughout the State, any church, or religious society, or congregation, may become a body corporate for the sole purpose of acquiring, holding, using and disposing of so much land as may be required for a house of public worship, a chapel, a parsonage and a burial ground, and managing the same, and contracting in relation to such land and buildings thereon, through a Board of Trustees selected by themselves; but the quantity of land to be held by any such body corporate, in connection with a house of worship, or a parsonage, shall not exceed five acres in the county, or one acre in a town or city."

"13. That every gift, sale or devise of land to any minister, public teacher, or preacher of the gospel, as such, or to any religious sect, order or denomination, or to or for the support, use or benefit of, or in trust for any minister, public teacher, or preacher of the gospel, as such, or any religious sect, order, or denomination; and every gift or sale of goods or chattel to go in succession, or to take place after the death of the seller or donor, to or for such support, use or benefit; and also every devise of goods or chattels, to or for the support, use or benefit of any minister, public teacher, or preacher of the gospel, as such, or any religious sect, order or denomination, shall be void; except always any gift, sale or devise of land to a church, religious society or congregation, or to any person or persons in trust for the use of a church, religious society or congregation, whether incorporated or not, for the use and purposes and within the limitations of the next preceding clause of this article."

In the Constitution of 1875, now in force, the above was greatly condensed and modified, as follows:

ARTICLE II. SECTION 2.

"8. That no religious corporation can be established in this State, except such as may be created under a general law for the purpose only of holding the title to such real estate as may be prescribed by law for church edifices, parsonages and cemeteries."

It will thus be perceived that the Constitution of Missouri has become more favorable to religious corporations during the passage of years.

Whatever may be said of those who went to Independence in the thirties, and whatever may be said about the increased cost of land at this time, it does not appear that we can excuse ourselves on any plea, that the laws were more favorable in 1830 than to-day; since the exact contrary appears to be the fact. There is no restriction on the amount of land, but there still is a restriction of purpose. (Article 13 of the Constitution of 1865 is entirely omitted in 1875 and since.)

When we notice the amount of property that is held on behalf of religious organizations, we must at once be struck with the fact that the term "religious corporation" has been given a strict construction. It does not include a home, sanitarium, college, or the like, under the direction of a general conference or a synod. It does include an organization, whose special purpose is to do missionary work, and to promulgate and direct the preaching of religious doctrines, or one whose special purpose is to train men for missionary work. But a college established for the purpose of liberal education, does not become a religious corporation, because religious education is given therein. It is the special and the dominant purpose of the organization which controls. So a benevolent corporation for the benefit of the poor and needy is not a religious corporation, nor is it a church, nor the church, even though its purpose may be to carry out gospel principles in a practical way, in an attempt to solve the social question.

BOYS.

The problem of boys is one that has never been solved, and the writers of this article make no claim to having solved it, but having reared less than six children we feel disposed to tell you some of our experiences, and what success we have had. It is not our intention to set up our methods as never failing rules, but if what we write will help you, our task will not have been a fruitless one.

Our boys were not mollicoddles. They could turn handsprings in the parlor, tramp on the cat's tail, eat all the cookies and pie they could find, leave an empty fruit jar as an evidence of their love for peaches,—in short they were just boys, full of life and energy and noise and mischief.

To commence right with the boys we must start with ourselves; which we did by loving each other, and it was made manifest by our kindly, considerate, and unselfish feeling toward each other, always seeking for opportunities to help one another in the various duties so common to a home. In government we did not divide. Whatever either one said, in his or her respective spheres of authority, was law. If we had any different views we talked them over privately. We did not permit grandparents or uncles or aunts or any other persons to share the authority or responsibility with us, believing such to be pernicious and destructive of the discipline so greatly needed in a well-regulated home.

Our lives have been spent in a metropolitan city, and we have no sympathy with the half intoxicated and befuddled ideas of city life that are common to those who get their information from yellow journals instead of from practical life as it has come to the writers. With good books, healthful outside play, quiet games inside, Sunday school, the public school, the beautiful parks, and other things of interest, we did not find time to regale them with stories of the redlight district, of gamblers, and saloon life, they had no curiosity to go there. The Y. M. C. A. and public library had more interest for them. They had ample opportunity to work within their ability without interfering with their school life, it being possible the last four years to earn enough money to clothe themselves and meet all the incidental expenses common to boys of that age.

Going to Sunday school was imperative, and both or one of us went with them, except when justifiable reasons kept us away. During the period when the children needed a mother's special care she declined the responsibility of both officer and teacher, believing that her first and most important duty was to her own children. Going to church was an incidental matter with the children. It was not always obligatory, but was often encouraged, especially to sacrament services, after they were baptized. When we insisted on them going to church it was at the morning service, never in the evening. Between twelve and fourteen years of age they began to attend the Religio. Until one or more of them was old enough to be safely left at home, one of us always stayed at home on Sunday evening with them. Our reasons for not insisting that they should go to church was that the preaching that we commonly hear is not adapted to the capacity of a child, and to compel them to listen to things that did not appeal to their understanding would be an act of tyranny, and we believed that the Sunday school was the best public institution to reach the child and help develop his spiritual life; and still another very important reason is that their physical bodies need rest, and the place to get it is at home in bed, and not in the pew at church.

The proper observance of the Lord's Day was a very difficult matter, and we do not say that we observed it as the Lord would have us; but we did the best we could, and we have not yet observed a method any better, judging by results and not theory. We have tried to get the golden mean between the two extremes of Catholicism and Puritanism. Everything in the way of preparation was done that could be done to avoid work on that day. We did not interdict company, but did not encourage it. A portion of the day was used in reading from the Hope, Autumn Leaves, and good books, such as would be of interest according to their age, and this was especially true in the winter months. The most of the reading was done by the wife, the husband's occupation preventing him from being at home. In addition to the Sunday school and public libraries, we added to their own each year, suiting them to the age of the children, so we have at present, from Little Jack Horner, to Boys' Life of Theodore Roosevelt. The American Boy and the Youth's Companion have always been very enjoyable reading for them. Now that the habit is developed, our principal work is to secure good books for them.

In the summer time in the afternoon the city parks were often visited. We never found anything in them objectionable to the code of good morals; objectionable things are usually found in private parks, often outside the city limits.

Fritz and Pete were fond of outdoor sports, and especially baseball, and it was the trial of our life, on the Sabbath day, and the only time when we wished for a fence that the noise would not go through, because when they heard the cheers of a home run half a mile away they were like a regiment of cavalry horses after the bugle had sounded the charge. Sometimes they went and sometimes we persuaded them not to go. On one occasion we asked Fritz what Jesus would say. He replied that "he would not be hard on a boy that went to school all week, worked every evening, and Saturday, and went to Sunday school and church in the morning."

Pete is a boy scout and would like to hike on Sunday, but the good Scout Master says "No," and one of the rules of that organization is "obedience." I am glad he is a boy scout, all the good in this world is not confined to the home, if so we would not need to go to church and Sunday school, or the public school. If the Lord looks on such boys with displeasure we are inclined to the opinion that the stripes will have to be more and laid harder on the gay party of automobilists that spins by at forty miles an hour, on the Sabbath day.

We furnished nails, boards, lathes, tools of various kinds, and the boys' imagination did the rest; fortifications, canals, railroads, tunnels, wireless telegraph stations, and fire departments appeared and disappeared according to their fancy. We know the saw and hatchet were dull when we wanted to use them, but there were some happy hearts that thought there was no place like "home, sweet home."

To conclude, if to be free from the vices so common in the world, to be honest, industrious, clean in person, diligent in school, faithful in Sunday school, Religio, and church duties, and to have the good will of good people is a sign of success, then we have succeeded.

• DIVINE HEALING.

(Synopsis of a sermon by Elder T. W. Williams, as reported by the Webb City Register.)

Our fathers believed this life unreal; a mere makeshift; a condition to be endured, where pain was inevitable and disease a natural sequence. Pain and piety were akin; religion and poor health synonymous. Disease was a divine inheritance; good always afflicted, for "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth." Not unless he deserveth it, brother. Men tortured themselves, believing pain a sure passport to grace. They used to bleed men in order to make them religious. Red blood was a badge of sin. They shifted the responsibility of human folly on God. Disease and pain had no scientific connection with conduct. Thanks to science, we know that every abnormality is the result of a violated law.

We affirm the power of mind over matter. People should talk health, not sickness. The sick room is no place to discuss disease. God does not make people sick. He does not afflict men to serve a passing whim.

Did God afflict blind John Milton or our beloved Helen Keller? No; a thousand times, No. Pain and disease spell disharmony. They exist against God's will. Man, not God, is responsible. Error is the antithesis of truth; darkness the absence of light; evil, the perversion of good; sickness the infraction of law. The old legend, "Man will not die until his time comes," is worm-eaten and holey.

I am asked by my Christian Science friends to believe that "Matter is not." "Matter is nothing beyond an image in mortal mind," "Matter and mortal body are the illusions of human belief." "There is nothing but mind—matter is unreal; mind is everything." I can not. To cure disease these Scientist friends demand that I deny the actual existence of my own body. There can not be any pain in my body because I have no body. They affirm "There is no disease—no evil," "All is mind—God."

Again, "What we term the five physical senses are simply beliefs of mortal mind." Is this correct? Shall we discard these safeguards at the mere dictum of one woman, however sincere she may be? Do these people know anything save through these senses? We challenge them to demonstrate mind in any other way.

Again, "Divine Science reverses the testimony of the material sense." "There is nothing but mind. Matter is unreal." According to this there is no material universe, no earth, no sun, no stars—nothing. We object.

Again, "The blood, heart, lungs, have nothing to do with life." If our friends will demonstrate that they can function in life without either or all of these organs, they may have some claim upon us. "No such thing as disease." What is gained by denial? Let us do as Jesus did. Recognize the disease as abnormal, proceed to correct the evil, and heal the body.

"All causation is mind and every effect a mental phenomenon." According to this there was no need to send Schley to Cuba to bottle up Santiago Harbor. All that was necessary was for the President to project an idea and, presto, the work was done.

"But we know that poverty is a human belief, like any other disease, and the only cure is the realization of its nothingness." The woman who exploited this thought died a millionairess. She took good care to see that the "nothingness of poverty" should not camp round her door. Her devotees charge a fee for treatments.

She also said: "Growing thoughts will keep us young. This new system will make us younger at seventy than at seventeen."

But the dear, aged woman has passed beyond, and her death demonstrates the falsity of her claim.

Again, "Food neither strengthens nor weakens the body." This woman, up to her death, continued to eat. Why? If any Christian Scientist in America will demonstrate the verity of the above by continuous abstinence from all foods we will concede this position. As long as they continue to eat we are justified in rejecting their position.

Again, "You say a boil is painful, but that is impossible. The boil simply manifests your belief in pain through inflammation and swelling, and you call this belief a boil." "The property of alcohol is to intoxicate, but if the common thought had endowed it with a nourishing quality like milk, it would produce a similar effect." In other words, if people only thought so they could feed alcohol to their babies with impunity; old toppers could become gloriously drunk with a nursing bottle.

Again, "Brains do not think, nerves do not feel." If brains do not think, what does, brother?

The world needs health. We should follow the divine prescription. Disobedience spells sickness. Obedience means health. Delusion, through denial of the real, is abortive. Faith in God, a realization that the body is God's temple, that all laws are immutable, that we reap what we sow; together with a strict observance of God's method of cure, is the only salvation. In olden day, through prayer and the imposition of hands, the sick were healed. God has not changed. Like cause will produce like effect.

EYE GRAFTING IS NO NEW THING TO OUR SURGEONS.

New York surgeons nodded their heads in approval yesterday when they read a dispatch from Paris in which Doctor Borsch told the French Ophthalmological Institute how he had cured a man's blindness by transplanting to the eye of the patient the front part of the eye of a dog, which had been sliced off for the purpose. Just before the grafting the front part of the man's eye was cut away. The mended eye was kept in place by a glass cover and into it was injected a serum.

Eye grafting is only one of a number of wonderful things that have been done in New York by surgeons in the last few years. As far back as September, 1908, Dr. Henry R. Lesser grafted the cornea from the eye of a rabbit upon the eye of a young man who had been blind for fifteen years. The result was a restoration of the man's sight.

In June, 1910, Dr. Royal S. Copeland, dean of the Flower Hospital staff, brought the gift of eyesight to a woman who had been blind since infancy by transplanting over her own eye pupil a portion of the cornea from the eyeball of a man. Professor Copeland in the same year grafted the cornea of the left eye of Mamie Ost upon the left eyeball of Sing Long, a Chinese laundryman.

OTHER WONDERFUL OPERATIONS.

In Yonkers, in February this year, surgeons took an eye out of a girl's head to get at a bullet. The eye was put back in the socket and the girl's sight was resumed as usual. In Philadelphia recently Miss Esther Heacock was cured of eye-twitching by paralyzing the tri-facial nerve.

At the Rockefeller Institute, in this city, animal tissues have been grown away from the bodies of the animals whence the tissues came. Body cells have been caused to grow faster by transplanting. Thus the tissues of a five-year-old dog have been made to grow quicker than those of a puppy. Kidneys have been grafted from one cat to another. The legs of one dog have been put on another.

The experiments now under way with the aid of the millions of money supplied by the elder John D. Rockefeller indicate the possibility of growing young men from old, of giving fresh brains to the aged, and of creating new forms of animal life. Tissues taken from living or dead animals are kept alive and are made to grow. Thus a surgeon in the near future may always have on hand a well selected stock of skin for grafting purposes, and the papers will not be called upon to chronicle the pitiful stories of play-mates, etc., who sacrifice their own skin for the sake of their injured comrades.

MAY CURE COWARDS.

Doctor Bounier, of Paris, announces that fear and melancholy can be banished by severing a small nerve which springs from the human brain near the medulla oblongata, at the top of the spinal cord. In Chicago, a boy who lost his own leg now walks with a sheep's leg which was grafted on him. At Bellevue, a patient with a brittle artery, which was likely to burst at any time, was kept alive by coiling a gold wire as thin as a silk thread around the inside of the artery. The wire braced the wall of the artery.

Surgeons have found out how to massage a dying heart back to life, and by squirting salt into the veins the doctors have learned how to keep many a person alive for weeks or months after oxygen and all other means have failed. In Michigan a severed hand was made to grow again on the wrist.

In the Cumberland Street Hospital, in Brooklyn, the surgeons cut in such a way the prematurely hardened skull of a child that the brain was given a normal chance to develop.

Adenoids, it is asserted, make children bad and defective in study, and so the surgeons and doctors have found four ways to remove them without danger to the patient. Adenoid surgery, it is said, will work wonders in the juvenile population of this town.

A visiting German specialist at the Rockefeller Institute has shown how a man's lungs may be safely operated on. The expert demonstrated in a box, in an airtight glass cabinet, in a partial vacuum. The lungs would have collapsed under ordinary pressure. —New York World.

The Dalai Lama Interviewed at Last.

The mystery that formerly hedged a king is nothing to that which has surrounded the personality of the Dalai Lama—ruler and divinity in one. This ruler of Tibet is one of three living human beings who are seriously and sincerely regarded as deities by any considerable number of persons—the other two being the Emperor of Japan, and Abbas Effendi, the "Messiah" of the Behaists. The Dalai Lama, says Mr. William T. Ellis, "is, with the least qualification or explanation, regarded as divine by the greatest number of persons." And though now an exile from his capital city of Lassa he is still virtually ruler, since the British and Chinese have been unable to impose any successor upon his people. Mr. Ellis, who has traveled extensively in the East for the purpose of giving the world facts from the layman's point of view in support of missionary propaganda, is, in his own belief, the first journalist who has ever interviewed this mysterious ruler. In The Continent (Chicago) Mr. Ellis gives this picture of the Lama's personal appearance:

"The Lama seems even younger than his thirty-seven years. He wears his hair close cropped. His complexion is a light yellow, and his features are not pronouncedly Mongolian. His face is thoroughly pock-marked, but not deeply. The ears, which are large and noticeably pointed at the top—quite as cartoonists are fond of representing another personage who is never called 'his holiness'—are his most noticeable feature, although his teeth are large and white and show fully when he smiles, as he does frequently and rather winsomely. His small black mustache is waxed horizontally, and his under lip bears a few hairs. Some of the men of his retinue have enough hair on the chin to plait into tiny pig tails.

"The shape of the Dalai Lama's head argues against intellectuality; in a lesser personage it would be called bullet-shaped. His face gives the impression of craft, rather than of mental alertness, although this is redeemed by real geniality. Those who know say that he is very considerate of his followers, and loved as well as revered by them. The current tales as to his never washing his face are patently false; I have means of knowing that his personal habits are quite unorientally clean. He sleeps every night between spotless satin sheets; and he eats from a golden bowl and drinks from a golden cup.

"When the Chinese Government tried to depose the present Dalai Lama, it accused him, in terms that made the reader gasp, of all kinds of gross immorality, practiced during his long wanderings about the Chinese empire, succeeding the invasion of Lassa, his never-before-violated capital, by British troops. But his face is not that of a dissolute man, and from two persons in Darjeeling, excellently situated to know, I have learned that his private character is above reproach. The charges were but a bit of Chinese politics; and they seem to have failed, for the Tibetans would not hear to another Lama, and only the peaceful orders of this man kept them from waging war to the death upon the Chinese troops."

What the Lama told Mr. Ellis seems to point to an extraordinary change in the former instincts for seclusion displayed by this people and its head:

"After the usual polite preliminaries concerning health and the pleasure of meeting, his holiness touched upon my nationality. His eyes lighted up, and his teeth showed in a hearty smile, as he spoke in a strangely soft, low voice, which seemed to proceed from the depths of his throat, of his interest in America. This was no perfunctory remark; in his travels he has learned many things, and he dwelt especially upon the interest of Americans in religious subjects. His own interest in life, he assured me, is wholly religious. He has heard that Buddhism is spreading in America—as, of course, it is, through Asiatic immigration. He dwelt on his friendship for W. W. Rockhill, former United States minister to China, and expressed the hope that America would use her good offices to facilitate the ending of his exile. Negotiations are now in progress, and he hopes to return ere long to Lassa.

"His holiness volunteered the remarkable statement that it had been his plan, on his return to Tibet after his long wanderings consequent upon the invasion of the sacred city by the Younghusband expedition, to follow the Chinese example, and send his young men to America for a western education. He also designed Tibet, and even Lassa itself, should depart from its immemorial policy of seclusion, and open its doors to foreign trade and travel. That plan had been prevented of fulfillment by Chinese efforts to dethrone him and by his present exile, but when he returns he purposes to put this policy of modern enlightenment into operation.

"Such a statement from such a source, is perhaps the best possible illustration of the universality of the tides of change and unrest that are sweeping over the earth. If the Dalai Lama, the personification of mysterious, romantic aloofness and seclusion, is desirous of flinging wide open the doors of the last and most conservative of the hermit nations, then indeed is the world awake in its remotest pulsation."

The Lama is ultra modern in one of his beliefs—that of the future universality of one religion. That religion, as might be expected, will of course be Buddhism. He looks forward to a purification of this faith, though he expects that four centuries will be necessary to effect the change. Mr. Ellis concludes with some reasons for the hold this exile still has over the millions of his people. In the first place, he succeeded in surviving infancy, contrary to the custom of his predecessors—

"He broke the precedent concerning the early mortality of the earthly incarnations of Buddha. So when the Chinese tried to have another drawing of infant names from the golden urn, the people and the monks—Tibet is a monk-ridden land—objected, and no successor to the absent Lama has been chosen. Moreover, this Lama is regarded as of especially supernatural origin. When but a little babe he picked out the uncle of the previous Lama as 'my uncle,' thus showing his consciousness of his previous incarnation.

"He is said to be a paragon of religious wisdom. In debates with the learned monks upon abstruse matters of the law, he has always been able to confound them, and the discussions end with their falling down and worshipping him. Still further—of course I am quoting current Tibetan report and belief—he has attained to the highest degree of spirituality. There are ten stages of religious progress in this life. Even the learned and pious rarely get beyond the fifth. But this Dalai Lama has reached the tenth.

"Is it any wonder that all these considerations, plus the natural human interest created by his wanderings, should evoke for him a loyalty and a devotion and reverence such as was given to none of his predecessors?

"Aside from a merely curious and intellectual interest, Christendom is concerned in this young man chiefly because he may have the deciding voice as to peace or war in this remote yet strategic corner of the earth, where the war clouds seem to be gathering even as the clouds gradually envelop the crowns of the mighty Himalayas. Other minor matters we discussed ere I bade farewell to this eager young man, so zestful of life, yet doomed to the awful isolation of the most venerated throne that ever mortal sat upon. I did not dare show the pity I felt for him, as, a ceremonial shawl of greeting having been thrown over my shoulders as a gift, I bowed myself out backward."—Literary Digest, June 10, 1911.

Origin of The New Testament Given.

And now let us ask ourselves the question, "How did the world get the original of the New Testament?" Nineteen centuries ago Christianity was in its infancy. Its founder had just taken his departure from the world. His apostles, together with his other missionary workers, were gathering and establishing congregations and keeping them in flourishing condition. They did this by preaching which was the expounding of the thoughts which the Founder of Christianity had delivered and made part of the heritage of thought for the world. But for some time there was none of this thought in written form. The eyewitnesses of the life of Jesus and others told the story over and over again in their addresses until many of the sayings of Jesus were in everybody's memory, until all of them were in somebody's memory. And the foundation of sermons on the part of such men as Peter, James, John and the other apostles and the other preachers was a recital of the facts in the life of Jesus. But soon a body of literature began to arise which became recognized as the product of holy men of God, who had spoken as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

The first specimens consisted of letters to specific churches by the ablest man among the Christians. He was a young man who had been born and reared at Tarsus in Asia Minor in the shadow of a university of which he might have been a student if he was not, because quotations from classic Greek poets fell from his pen as easily apparently as a minister might weave into his sermon quotations from the great English poets. He had placed himself under the teaching of the most eminent Hebrew teacher of his time and had started upon a career of honor in the Jewish nation. But Christ had met him face to face at the ancient city of Damascus, which projected its history back to Abraham's day but had never witnessed a more momentous thing transpiring beneath the shadow of its walls than this young man's conversion. He had gone up to Damascus the sworn foe of Christianity. He came back from that city Christianity's champion. It was Paul, who became the most effective of all the apostles. Thenceforth he spent his life founding churches, visiting and revisiting his fields of labor, writing his flocks comforting and sustaining letters in his absence from them. These letters became the first written communications of sacred thought to the young Christian churches. And once their beneficial character was recognized they were passed around among the churches as even also was advised concerning some of them by their author. Then as the eyewitnesses of the life of Jesus began to grow old and their death became likely, the facts of the life of the Founder of Christianity were put down in writing for preservation for the future. So came the Gospels and the Acts of the Apostles, and the other writings.

The Gospels are memoirs of the life of the Master which were written to prevent the basal facts of this Christianity which the letters of Paul as well as his preaching were helping to push forward from being lost to the world. Two of them were the recollections of eyewitnesses to the life of Jesus, the Gospels of Matthew and John who were apostles; the other two were by men who were the pupils and intimate friends of apostles, Mark, who was the pupil of Peter, and Luke who was the pupil of Paul.

Each of these four, Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, had a distinct purpose differing somewhat from that of the others in putting forward his account. Matthew wrote for Jews, Mark for Romans, Luke for Greeks, and John for advanced Christians of all types.

In regard to their subject-matter they also varied, Matthey presented his Master, as that Messiah and Lawgiver whom the Old Testament had predicted; Mark as the Mighty Conqueror and Worker of Miracles; Luke as the Sympathetic Friend, and John as God manifested in the flesh.

The first one to write a Gospel, which word gospel means in original Greek, "good message," and from its Anglo-Saxon derivation "good story," was a man named Matthew. He knew the facts of which he wrote from personal observation. At his post of duty as collector of customs at Capernaum, the Great Teacher said to him one day, "Follow me." And apparently won completely at once by the call, he forsook all things and followed him. Thenceforth he was a disciple and shortly afterward made an apostle, following Jesus up and down through Palestine till his Master's death on Calvary parted them. Then when it seemed that the events of that supreme life should not be lost to posterity because of fading recollection and the removal of eyewitnesses by death, he set down what he knew and the way he interpreted it. His book is not a biography in the true sense of the word, that is, reciting facts in their chronological order. On the contrary he groups his facts under topics. And the whole was a contention, namely, that the Old Testament expectation concerning a Messiah was fulfilled by Jesus of Nazareth.

Now these were Matthew's recollections of the events of the life of Jesus. But what a pity it would have been for the world if it had been deprived of the picture of the life of Jesus which the memory of so striking and unique a personality as that of Peter who had been a constant and close companion of Jesus, carried in the mind's eye. Peter exerted a most profound and powerful influence upon the infant church after the death of Jesus. To him they often deferred much because he had known the Master so well—the Nestor of the Apostolate, the Dean of the Discipleship. And here, in the Gospel of Mark, the early fathers believed, we have Peter's view; and sometimes it was called Peter's Gospel. For the young man who was the writer of it, John Mark, was Peter's pupil.

Mark was the son of a certain Mary, who lived at Jerusalem. Her house was often used for meetings of the early church. Thither Peter went when he was liberated from prison. Lange mentions the opinion that she owned the Garden of Gethsemane or a house near by.

Mark was probably converted through Peter. Afterward he became Peter's helper. Papias says Mark was Peter's interpreter. Clement of Alexandria says that the people of Rome were so much pleased with the preaching Peter that they asked Mark to set it down in writing. Jerome says that Peter was the narrator and Mark the writer. And the Gospel looks like Peter; Peter who always rushed for things. So the Gospel of Mark carries not for angelic prediction, the infancy at Bethlehem, the flight into Egypt, the boyhood at Nazareth, but speeds right to the ministry of Jesus. The Gospel gives us a brief chronological statement, a birds-eye view as one might say, of instances in the life of Jesus; although none of the Gospels purports to be a complete biography, and John specifically states the contrary. But again one may say what a pity it would have been for the world if we had not had a presentment of the life of Jesus as it had been reported to a man like Paul. And in the Gospel by Luke, according to ancient opinion, we have Paul's view.

Luke was a close friend of Paul. Paul called him "the beloved physician," for he was a medical man. Both the Gospel and the Acts which he also wrote have many medical terms in them. The best Greek writer among the evangelists, Luke shows his education in his Gospel. He wrote for the Gentiles, as his teacher, Paul, devoted his preaching to them. A valuable Gospel indeed it is, because it gives us the views of an educated man face to face with the wonders of the Life of Lives.

Finally, John, the man who had known Jesus best of all, gives his recollections. And so much did he recall that he could pass by many things which the other three evangelists had mentioned as not necessary to be repeated again, and had still plenty of material which the others had not mentioned at all with which to fill his book. Schaff has called his Gospel "the Holy of Holies of the New Testament." Clement of Alexandria said John contributed spirit to the Gospel, where others had contributed the bodily. How much should we have lost if John had not written!

Having written a Gospel, Luke then also wrote the first Christian church history, the Acts of the Apostles, recording events in the early days of the life of the Christian church.

As I said before, Paul was the first to set pen to paper for the upbuilding of the early Christian churches. This material lies in the shape of letters to the churches which he had founded and to converts and pupils whom he had led to Christ. They grew out of conditions which he found existing in the churches and he wrote them to correct those conditions. But in so doing he wrote for all time. For the foundations of Christian theology were laid down by Paul in these letters. All the great Christian doctrines find their mention there. And the world has been placed under a debt of obligation to him for all time.

PAUL'S LETTERS TO THE CHURCHES.

Thessalonians was written first A. D. 52 or 53; the Galatians, Corinthians, Romans, then Colossians, Ephesians, Philemon, Philipians, then Timothy and Titus. There also appeared the epistle to the Hebrews.

To Christians in general, also, the Apostles James and John wrote brief letters, as also Judé. And finally, John left the strange, mysterious book of the Revelation. Thus came the several books of our New Testament, but we have not yet gotten our answer to the question, "how did the world get the Book, the assembled body of the books of the New Testament, the Canon as it is called?"

The process in the formation of the body or canon of the New Testament was similar to that of the Old. It was gradually that all the congregations of the early Christians came to agree upon all of these twenty-seven books which now stand in our New Testament as conforming to the standard as expressed in the Scripture.

"Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction, which is in righteousness, that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely into every good work."

It seems to have begun this way. Individual churches appear to have gathered copies of all the writings which they thought inspired, whether gospels or epistles, which they could obtain for use in their services. Thus one congregation might have some books not now in our canon which they regarded scriptural, another others. Thus discussion over these books would arise as to whether they were scriptural or not. As a matter of fact this did occur. Some of our present New Testament books were slower in convincing all the churches that they were inspired than the others. Such were Second Peter, Second and Third John, Jude and Hebrews. But by the middle of the second century all the churches had come to recognize as inspired all the books now in the New Testament.

So the copied editions of the Bible were handed on and on through the centuries until the art of printing came and obviated the necessity of copying by hand.

So has been transmitted to us through the medium of the accurate Greek tongue the original of the New Testament. As Doctor Schaff has said, "the books thereof are related to each other as regeneration, sanctification and glorification; as foundation, house and dome. Jesus Christ is the beginning, the middle, and end of all. In the gospels he walks in human form upon the earth and accomplishes the work of redemption. In the Acts and the epistles he founds the church and fills and guides it by his Spirit. And at last in the visions of the Apocalypse he comes again in glory and, with his bride the church of the saints, reigns for ever upon the new earth in the city of God."—Rev. A. D. THE MOTHER WHO WORRIES.

In taking a mental survey of our friends and acquaintances, it is surprising how small a number of them we can name who escape having their lives shadowed or their usefulness impaired, to a greater or less extent, by some form of worry. It is not speaking too strongly to say that this almost universal tendency is one of the curses of our over intense modern life, and one even less manageable than the liquor evil or the tuberculosis problem. Furthermore, this "disease of the age," as a well-known medical writer has termed it, is one whose ravages are constantly increasing, as each generation of humankind comes into the world more ambitious, more highly strung, and with a larger inheritance of nervous tendencies behind it than the last. The greater the tension under which life is lived, the greater becomes the liability to nervous disease; and many breakdowns which are credited wholly to overwork are in reality due quite as much to overworry. Work alone, the modern physician tells us, seldom hurts anyone, when done under proper conditions;—even severe mental work tends to strengthen the mind rather than to exhaust it, as a healthy muscle is strengthened by exercise. But overwork and overworry together form a most deadly combination, and seldom fail to produce a disastrous effect, sooner or later. The anxious condition of mind reacts inevitably on the body, lessening its surplus nervous energy and weakening its vital resistance; by and by some slight illness, unusual fatigue, or emotional stress proves the last straw, and the result is a new recruit for the sad army of victims to nervous breakdown.

This disease called worry may be said to assume both a local and a general form. The sufferer from the former may take a cheerful view of every subject except one, but is under the thrall of a single wearing anxiety, which may in time come to poison her whole existence. Worries of this type, when lived with year after year, are apt to become the "fixed ideas" or obsessions common in some forms of nervous disease. The other type of worrier,—and it is she whom we know best,—instead of settling upon one chronic anxiety, has a fresh one every hour, and makes little distinction between the important and the trivial. She wakens early in the morning to worry lest the alarm clock may not go off; she lies awake after retiring to worry over the possibility of unlocked windows and midnight marauders. Her forehead is chronically puckered, her nerves for ever on the stretch; the thorns upon her roses of life have grown to such gigantic proportions as almost to hide the blossoms themselves.

Pernicious as the habit of worry is for anyone, it is especially so for the wife and mother. It not only affects her own health and happiness, but clouds the household serenity, and makes the home a less restful place for the tired head of the family. In addition, it has an especially bad effect upon her children, born and unborn. The pregnant woman of the present day readily realizes the necessity for hygienic living, proper diet, and appropriate clothing, for the sake of her child's future health, but she is less apt to consider the equally great necessity for maintaining a serene mind and an optimistic spirit, if the world have a happy and sunny natured child. Strong as the power of heredity is in transmitting physical characteristics, it is even more powerful along the line of temperament and mental traits, and every hour of pregnancy is an opportunity for planting seeds of character. After childbirth, during the period of lactation, great anxiety or nervous tension on the part of the mother has an unfavorable effect on the quality of the milk. And in the impressionable early years of childhood, when the influences of environment are the strongest, and the imitative instinct at its height, an atmosphere of serenity, or of anxiety about a child may mean a molding of character that all the after years spent in a different environment can not counteract.

We hear much at the present day regarding the education of the mind and will; and there can be no more practical field for self-improvement than the cultivation of a serene and optimistic spirit. It is not an easy task, nor can it be accomplished in a moment, but each step in the right direction makes the following one easier, as in the formation of any other mental or physical habit.

It is by no means the case that the greatest worriers are always those who have the most cause for anxiety; often those who suffer most from the habit would be surprised to discover how little their state of mind depends upon their outward circumstances. It is not altogether a pleasing reflection, but it is none the less true, that our mental states, exalted or otherwise, are very strongly influenced by our bodily condition; and many victims of worry need more than anything else to ask themselves a few frank questions as to the sort of life they are leading. The worrying woman is frequently the woman who does not have sufficient sleep, or who, though she may spend the proper number of hours in bed, fails to get the real rest that follows the thorough relaxation of the body,—letting the bed hold her, instead of her holding it,—and the emptying of the mind as far as possible of all active thoughts. Insufficient air in the sleeping room at night has an injurious effect upon the mental as well as the physical health, and the same is true of the lack of open air life and exercise during the day. Again, all work and no play is said to make Jack a dull boy, and it is quite certain to make Jill not only dull but nervous and irritable, and an easy prey to all manner of anxieties. Recreation, however, should be truly recreating and refreshing, not merely exciting or violently stimulating. . . . The state of the digestive organs also exerts a pronounced influence upon the mental and emotional condition; the worrying woman is often ill-nourished, and it is well worth while for her to seriously consider whether her meals are taken at regular and proper hours, whether she eats too scantily or too heartily, and whether her menu is a well-balanced and nourishing one, and her food properly cooked and attractively served. She should use especial care to keep clear of constipation, in whose train come all sorts of nervous disturbances.

Reorganization of life along some of these lines would, in the case of many women, build up depleted nervous energy to such an extent that the control of states of mind would become surprisingly easy. Many women, the busy mother of a family as well as her sister who leads a strenuous society life, cut short their hours of sleep, eat irregularly, hurriedly, or injudiciously, sleep and work in close rooms, or take no exercise except what they get in the daily round of duties and engagements. And yet they are surprised when the resulting nerve exhaustion begins to show itself in irritability and unnecessary anxiety.

The woman who, when she recognizes the need of rest, can lay aside her work and drop upon her couch, relaxing entirely in body and mind, and rising in ten or fifteen minutes to resume her occupation with new energy, is using the strongest sort of preventative measure against the inroads of morbid anxiety. A condition of worry usually means fatigue somewhere; and if on the first approach of the state of anxiety, one would make use of this same procedure, many attacks of worry would be nipped in the bud. In spite of the energy with which the "gospel of relaxation" has been preached in the last few years many women have no knowledge of how to relax, and are not even conscious of their own state of tension. To attain perfect relaxation, one should lie down flat on her back, arms dropping loosely at her sides, and the head falling back easily upon the pillow. Then, beginning with the muscles of the extremities, and thinking of the muscles of each part of the body in turn, she should proceed by a direct act of will to render each part limp and heavy, so that if an arm, for example, were lifted by a bystander, it would fall back as if it had no power of its own. Physical relaxation paves the way for the mental relaxation which should follow; the emptying of the mind, as far as possible, of definite trains of thought. These procedures may seem difficult at first, but they soon become easy, and their value in resting a tired body and mind, and as an aid in fighting unwholesome thoughts, can not be overestimated. The time spent in such self-repair is far from wasted; even if the housework and the mending basket are clamoring for attention, the brief resting space pays for itself many times over in the increased ease with which work is done, as well as in quieted nerves and lessened mental tension.

One of the greatest aids in curing the habit of unnecessary worry is the training of wholesome thoughts to dominate the mind, to the exclusion of mischief making thoughts. There are plenty of fears and anxieties abroad, to come knocking at the door of our minds, but we can refuse to allow them to enter and take possession by keeping our mind house filled with thoughts of cheer and hope and courage. It is possible, to a greater extent than we often realize, to choose our subjects for thought. If, then, we choose those that are wholesome and optimistic, and, when a worry appears in the focus of consciousness, deliberately turn the attention to something else, the anxious train of thought, though we may be conscious of its presence at no great distance, will not get such a hold upon us.

. . . Idleness is a great friend to worry, but work,—interesting, congenial, purposeful, work—is its deadly enemy. And it must not be forgotten that physical movements and attitudes have their effect upon the mind; it is far less easy to be absorbed in anxious thought when the corners of one's mouth are trained to turn up instead of down, when the chest is raised and head erect instead of bowed, when the step is brisk instead of lagging, and when the voice is animated instead of melancholy.

Religious faith, with the ideas of trust, hope, serenity, courage, and Christlikeness that it inculcates, is of course the sovereign antidote to worry. If faith in a Divine Power means anything at all for the life that now is, it ought surely to give one an assurance that above the chances and changes of mortal existence there is a beneficent Force, in the strength of which the soul may safely confide.

. . . It requires no more time and energy, and far less nerve strain, to consider in a calm and businesslike way what one could best do in case the threatened stroke actually fell, than to keep one's eye fixed fearfully on the uplifted sword, and bend one's neck prematurely to receive the blow.

The case of the worry ridden woman, then, is by no means hopeless of improvement, if she will examine into the causes and the character of the anxiety that besets her. If her hours of depression are the result of an unhygienic or injudicious way of living, let her call a halt, and at once, before she has to face the difficult problem of a breakdown. If she is allowing herself indulgence in unwholesome broodings and fruitless speculations, let her summon to her aid all her force of will and all her strength of desire after sane thinking and rational living, and, by holding healthful thoughts deliberately before her mind, endeavor to drive out the morbid imaginings. And if the shadows are real and dark, let her teach herself to fix her eyes steadily upon what sunshine may remain, multiplying wholesome interests for herself, calling into action all her trust in the Eternal Goodness, and, when the clouds fall so heavily as to cut off all else, facing them with a brave front, and with an unflinching confidence that there is a cloud without a rift somewhere, to one who seeks it with courage and with faith.—Minnie Genevieve Morse in American Motherhood.

ON THE SUEZ CANAL, May 28, 1911.

Editors Herald: We have started on our three weeks' ocean trip to Fremantle, Australia. It is a beautiful day and our steamer Roon is moving slowly down the canal, about six miles an hour toward the Red Sea.

We bade the Saints and friends of Jerusalem good-bye last Saturday week, and early in the morning boarded the train for Jaffa, and on the afternoon of the same day took steamer for Port Said. There was a stiff breeze blowing and the sea was a little rough, but we managed to embark without accident and reached Port Said early Sunday morning. Sister Floyd came out to the steamer in a small boat and her boatman soon had our grips and trunks ashore and assisted us in locating a good hotel, where we spent three days very pleasantly. I preached Sunday afternoon to an audience of five. The Lord blessed me with excellent liberty and I trust some good was accomplished.

Wednesday we went to Cairo, visited the pyramids again, and had the pleasure of entering the largest one, finding it very interesting. I may have time to write up a brief account of our visit later. On our way to Cairo, we encountered a wind and sand storm. The wind was extremely hot and blew the fine sand in great clouds, obscuring the sun. It reminded us very much of our western blizzard, excepting that instead of snow we had sand, and instead of cold wind it was more like that coming from a blast furnace. But it only lasted about two hours. Then the sun appeared and the air became cool, and we have had beautiful, cool weather since. We spent three days in Cairo and spent one day in the museum, which we will try to tell you about later.

We are both feeling well. We have had good accommodations and our associate passengers, though mostly German, seem to be a good class, and everything points to an enjoyable trip. There seemed to be little, if any, opportunity for church service, so we did the next best thing. Rose availed herself of her opportunity in making use of the piano, and our part of the ship resounded with the beautiful hymns from Zion's Praises.

We expect to reach Suez to-morrow, from which point mail will be sent ashore. The Lord has certainly favored us in all our travels thus far, so we are hopeful for the future.

PERSIA, IOWA, June 7, 1911.

Dear Herald: The conference of the Little Sioux District passed off pleasantly and peacefully, at Sioux City, June 3 and 4. There was the most peaceful spirit, and everyone seemed to partake of it to the extent that all were delightfully happy. Two were baptized, the outward manifestation of the Spirit was had, and above all else the peaceful influence of the Holy Spirit, of which all seemed to partake, was simply sublime.

The conference was presided over by the writer, assisted by Elders Levi Gamet, W. A. Smith, and Joseph Lane. The preaching was done by Elders Fred A. Fry, J. C. Crabb, J. F. McDowell, and Joseph Sedden. You see the injunction, "in honor in preferring one another," was observed, not one of the presiding officers being placed on the program. If this rule were more thoroughly observed in both districts and branches, greater unanimity and greater blessings would be enjoyed. Nothing tends to break down the interest in meetings in branches sooner than for the branch president to do all the labor where there are others to assist. See here, Mr. President; it is your duty to develop the talent of those of the priesthood, especially the lesser priesthood, over whom you are called to preside. How do you expect these men to advance and make growth unless you put them forward. You may be the best preacher in fact, or maybe you are only the best in your mind; but however good a preacher you may be, I assure you the people will want a change, and if you show a spirit of selfish egotism they will soon be so bored that they won't come to hear you, and they are not to blame.

But if on the other hand you give way and put others forward, prayerfully and cheerfully assisting, then others will see that you are unselfishly trying to advance God's work, and you will enjoy the esteem and confidence of your brethren, your usefulness be enlarged, and the peace of God will be yours; and by your unselfish example much of good will come to those over whom you have been called to preside.

Our next conference will be held at Woodbine, October 7 and 8.

We very unselfishly voted down the proposition to merge our reunion into one permanently located which our people would not attend. Why do not those who wish to change in this matter counsel with the districts to be affected. Surely those in charge of districts and branches will know, or ought to know more about their affairs and what changes would be beneficial than others not so closely connected with them.

Yours in bonds,

SIDNEY PITT, District President.

Editors Herald: I am glad to be a member of this great church. Before I came into this church, I was a member of the Methodist Church, and also had licenses to preach in the same. But I was not satisfied, and sought the Lord many times in regard to holiness and the church. But the Spirit of the Lord always seemed to tell me the Lord had a church in the West, and that sometime I would be connected with it, although I never once thought of the Latter Day Saints, or that there was any difference between them and the Utah Church, until it was made known to me by my brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Fisher, members of the church, through the efforts of Brother Knisley.

I see a brother writing from Ontario and making inquiry in regard to the lost tribes of Israel; I would consider from 2 Esdras 13: 39-50, page 22 in Compendium, that the name of the north country is Euphrates, and that the Euphrates River takes its rise there and bursts out in one of the subterranean passages of the river and connects with the original river. That they entered by the narrow passage of the river, the Lord having dried the stream and led them in by signs,—that is, up the river bed, and I would think that as they proceeded through the narrow passageway of the river through the rocks, the river widened out and that they called that land Arsareth; that they shall come down in the same way, down the river bed, (the Lord having dried the springs of the stream at the fountain head and that when they come to the narrow passageway that connects from Arsareth to the original river there will be with them men clothed with power to smite the rocks and the ice and water shall flow down before them as given in revelation.

We learn from scripture that their coming forth is similar to a birth, and that Israel shall swear by the Lord God that brought them from the north country, that is, their bringing forth shall be greater than their coming out of Egypt. I would like for some of the church authorities to write upon this matter.

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO, June 8, 1911.

Dear Herald Readers: I like to read the letters in the HERALD, and I think it right to try to interest one another, and it encourages us to know that so many are striving to do the Master's will. I am thankful that I have heard the angel's message. I never belonged to any church, for their teachings were not reasonable, and when I asked a question I could never get an answer. They said it was too deep for us to understand, and we should not pry into the deep things of God. I am thankful that I am living in this day and age, to be brought into the light, where we can have things explained and have the Bible mean what it says.

I had a minister call on me quite regularly, and he would tell me I ought to have a change of heart. I never knew how to answer him, but I often wondered how I could get it and not do anything but believe. I thought religion was a strange thing, yet my desire was to live a good life. I feel that I was fortunate not to have belonged to a church. It might have been hard for me to break away from it, for I have seen many like that. No matter what they hear or read, they can be nothing except what they are. I was interested in the first sermon I heard. I said to my husband that there was something good in those people, but he could not see it, for he was opposed,—he had heard so much against them. But I got him to come with me until he saw that it must be right if the Bible was right. We have six children, of which four are in the church.

I want to live faithfully to the end, and try to live to be an example to those outside the church. My husband was baptized three years ago by Elder Belrose. Elder Macgregor was here at the time.

Your sister,

SARAH GIBBONS.

CHEMANIOUS, B. C., June 4, 1911.

Dear Saints: I will try to let you know that I am still trying to live as all professors of the dear Lord's teaching should. I feel my weakness. Pray for me, all who are interested in the lonely ones. I have come to British Columbia for my health, and if there are any Saints in the vicinity of either Chemanious or Lady Smith or Nanaimo, will they please either write to me or come and see me. I am anxious to get in contact with some of our people while I am up here. I know there is a branch at Nanaimo, and would like to know how to find them. Would so like to hear our elders once again. I has been two or three years since I heard our doctrine taught. I haven't seen or heard of our people. I belong to the branch in Seattle, at least I suppose I do, but I never heard one word from the people there. I thought it was the duty of the priest to hunt up (either in person or by mail) the scattered ones.

I have started a little Sunday school here of seven members, and think probably I will have three more; ten in all. As it is a missionary work, I would like to furnish the supplies, but I am not able. Isn't there some one in the Sunday school that has more than they need? If so, we would accept them thankfully. The primary grade is what I need. I have a Gospel Quarterly for myself, and as there is only one other adult, the one quarterly will do for both. Will be here three months, if not longer.

Again I ask the prayers of the Saints for my health, and that God will give his Spirit to strengthen me, that I may scatter a few seeds in fertile soil, that one little seed may spring up and yield a rich harvest for the Lord.

With love to all the sisters and brothers,

MRS. ETTIE HILSINGER.

OELRICHS, SOUTH DAKOTA, June 6, 1911.

Dear Herald: I am interested in the Mothers' Home Column, and after reading, "Thoughts for the thoughtful" in the HERALD of May 10, I wondered why the Latter Day Saints could not organize a league similar to the Consumers' League spoken of in the article. Can not some of the more able writers give us some idea on that subject? I for one am an advocate for plainness of clothing, also of the hair. In 1 Peter: 3, we read, "Whose adorning; let it not be that outward adorning of plating the hair, and wearing gold or putting on apparel." That makes it plain, to my mind at least, that we should be plain in all things.

I am the only member of the church in this neighborhood, and I have been giving my papers away to some of the neighbors. There is one old gentleman (raised a Baptist, but now believes the Unitarian doctrine). I gave some of my papers to him. One was a sermon by R. C. Evans in the Ensign of November 25, 1897, "If a man die, shall he live again?" He read it and then loaned it to one of his neighbors. He said if I had any more like that, he wanted me to save them for him to read. I told him there was a paper printed in Canada that published that same man's sermons each week. He says, "Well, I'll sign for it." So I got the address and he gave me two dollars and I sent his name and address with the money to the Toronto Sunday World. He has received one paper, and when he read it, brought it to me to read and said it was fine. When I got through with it, he wanted it to loan one of his neighbors. So if there are any isolated members that think there is nothing for them to do, just give your papers away.

Now I have a request before I close. If there are any that have good sermons or tracts to spare, especially the atonement of Christ, and the final destiny of man, will they please send them to him, for he will read anything, and his address is Henry Fisher, Oelrichs, South Dakota.

With love to the readers of the HERALD,

EFFIE J. D. DENTON.

NEW HAMBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, June 12, 1911.

Dear Herald: The Baldwin Branch, of this place, will dedicate their new church Sunday, June 25, at 11 a. m. Services Saturday, preaching at 10 a. m., 2 p. m., and 8 p. m. Social service at 2 p. m. Children's services, 8 p. m. Welcome.

Editors Herald: When the mail came this forenoon, it brought a letter telling me that Bro. John Jarvis passed from this life on the 17th day of last month at Iuka, Illinois, and my mind went back to the time I first met Brother Jarvis, thirty-two years ago, in his home. I was young then; just starting out in the ministry, and I found the home of Brother and Sister Jarvis a haven of rest, indeed. He did not belong to the church at that time, but his door was always open to the elders and he seemed to take as much pleasure in making them feel at home, when in his house, as anyone could; and he often gave them money to help them on their way, when they left his place, too.

After the death of his wife, who was a dear, good Saint, he came into the church, throwing his life into the work. He was a good man, loved the people of God, and was always glad to do something to help the work along. For many years his home was one of my regular stopping places, sometimes for days, and sometimes the days would run into weeks, and to me he was a brother; indeed, one whom I dearly loved. May his soul rest in peace, and may the Lord comfort the loved ones who are left behind.

In gospel bonds,

ISAAC M. SMITH.

MOORHEAD, IOWA, June 13, 1911.

Editors Herald: I have before me a copy of the Evening and Morning Star for May, a marked copy, which claims to be very important. This is the second copy of this little sheet I have received. The publishers of the same may or may not be honest in their endeavors, but it looks to me very much like they, not being able to do anything themselves, are trying to tear down what God has been able to do through his faithful followers. In the first copy sent me, my attention was drawn to an article called "More mutilated revelations," or something like that. After reading the article, as they claim it was the original, and then reading the corrected article as it now appears in our Doctrine and Covenants, I fail to see where the meaning is changed. By dropping superlatives and adding some words which make the article shorter, it reads with more ease, and since the real meaning is exactly the same, I don't see where the Reorganization has committed any sin or crime against God; and if this is a sample of their best proof that we have changed the laws and covenants, I wish to say to them that they are wasting time and gray matter in quibbling over anything so nonessential to our souls' salvation. Why don't they try to show that we have usurped the leadership of the church? Or why don't they show something to prove that Granville Hedrick was an authorized leader of God's people? I say it is simply because they have no such proof, and they know it.

Do they suppose that because we are new members of the church we came in blindfolded? No, my dear Evening and Morning Star, be it known to yourselves and as many others as chance to read these few lines, we spent years searching for the true church, and we gave every organization a fair investigation,—tried them by the Bible standard of truth, and we are perfectly satisfied that we are safe in the true fold of God.

The second copy of their literature contains a long harangue about the reprint of fourteen copies of the Evening and Morning Star, which they claim to be the original. I don't or will not dispute their right to publish any article they wish. In the last marked article they refer to the Temple Lot and say some churches have money and workmen and specifications to build a temple, but they have no lot to build it on. I wish to say right here that I believe God knew full well when he directed Joseph Smith to dedicate a certain spot on which his temple was to be built in due season, just what would afterward take place. The lot belongs to them by right. Satan has often found human instrumentality with which to retard the progress of the Saints. Yes, he has only been able to retard them; he never can defeat them; and God will show how easy it is to wrest his own possessions from the hands and power of Satan. Some day the beautiful temple of God will be erected on this aforesaid temple lot. Might is not right, and the power of man is a very weak thing when God sets his hand to accomplish his will. If the Devil were not a little stupid, he would discover that the more he tries to down God's kingdom, the stronger grow the true Saints.

We are stronger than ever in the faith, and I ask the interest in your prayers that we may be always found faithful, and ever working to build up the true kingdom of God.

Your sister in one faith,

SADIE BURCH.

Dear Herald: To the readers of the HERALD, if any one of you can give me the address or location of Bernard McNamara, a priest in the church, you will oblige me very much, as we have a very important matter for him to look after here.

FRED J. MILLER.

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.

I have just arrived here after a pleasant trip, and am stopping with Bro. B. J. McGuire at the above address until we get located. No doubt many of the Saints and friends who read the HERALD have relatives and friends living in this great city whom they would like me to give personal attention, and if they will write us as to their location, and give particulars, etc., I shall be pleased to make their acquaintance and seek to get them in touch with the church.

If you will make a note to this effect and publish in HERALD, I shall be grateful for the favor.

Editors Herald: It is some time since I occupied any of your valuable space, but my interest is still in the work, my great desire for its advancement. I am not troubled about what I am to obtain, either in this world or the next. That should take care of itself if I do my part. But nothing less than complete faithfulness brings full satisfaction of conscience and makes it possible to exercise real "faith in God." The way of faith does not always receive at once the recognition of man. Man is much given to measuring himself by a human rather than a divine standard. It lets him down easy. The divine rule gives him nothing to boast of, much to attain unto that requires crucifixion of the natural man. We are trying to hold up the real standard in its completeness, to saint and sinner; first, in our own conformity to the gospel, spiritually and temporally; second, in what we teach, publicly and privately.

I would rather convert one man to all of the gospel, than branch out farther and foster and convert hundreds to a part of the plan. The standard here needs to be held up, not only in argumentation on "the differences," but in living examples and epistles. Those who have made the covenant must be squared and plumbed by its specifications, or held to their agreement. The priesthood is most responsible. "The priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law at his mouth: for he is the messenger of the Lord of hosts" (Malachi 2: 7). They are to be purged and purified "that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness" (Malachi 3: 3).

But who that desires righteousness is going to seek the law at the mouth of a priest who does not keep the law himself? Is the priest to lead or be led? How shall a people be "the light of the world," when this priesthood is absent or inoperative as to the pungency, force, and power of it? If it is not of saving efficacy in and for the church, how can it be in and for the world? Shall Satan be left to rule the church, while its officers leave the church and go forth to proselyte? There are those who dote on members, measure success by quantity rather than quality. Glory in this world and glory in eternity will be to those whose progeny are most numerous. But what is written? If I will, saith the Lord, raise up seed unto me, "I will command my people." The commandment was and now is by the latter day revelation of the gospel in its fullness, "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife, and concubines he shall have none." (Jacob 2: 6. Book of Mormon.) Those who want to raise up seed unto the Lord should be content with the basis he established in the opening of the latter day dispensation, and which was to be "my law to govern my church." The law as to marriage and offspring was further stated through the Seer: "Marriage is ordained of God unto man: wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation, and that it might be filled with the measure of man, ascending to his creation before the world was made" (Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3; Utah edition 49: 15-17).

We count the church as those who keep the commandments; such the Devil hates, but God loves. "The dragon was wroth with the woman (church) and went to make war with the remnant of her seed which keep the commandments of God and have the testimony of Jesus Christ" (Revelation 12: 17).

Now I do not care how mad the Devil gets at my insistence on "the faith once delivered to the saints" in its entirety. I will not say to the people, "Do as I say, but do as I do." Yet this is the equivocal position of some who assume to be leaders and hold priesthood. Ah! priesthood; what is it? Not a mere name or even calling from God. "Many are called, but few chosen." The real priesthood is with the chosen, in life, light and power to act in their calling and execute God's will and law. He who acts without that light or Spirit does so contrary to the commandment "if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach," and consequently without authority. The power of the priesthood to sanctify is, "through the truth" (John 17:17) or through the law. "They should seek the law at his [the priest's] mouth." Is there failure to seek, or failure to teach the law according to its specifications, or both? Is there faith in God as to what he has given, on the earth? Is the official visitation of the priesthood as provided in the law effective, or is it in many places a dead letter?

Does this responsibility rest wholly with the Aaronic or lesser priesthood? Or in all these duties is the priest to "assist the elder if occasion requires"? (Doctrine and Covenants 17:10.) Is there not in many instances, too much work for the teacher because the "ounce of prevention" by the priest or elder has been withheld? We can only exercise real faith in God as the whole law is regarded, and united faith and action in harmony with all the provisions of the law will strengthen and endow the church.

The elders must lead; see that the law is kept in themselves and the priesthood over which they rule. The members, the sheep, will follow the true shepherds of the flock; they will come up to the standard set by their spiritually endowed and qualified leaders. They will receive the law at their mouth, and many will be added to the church who can not now see the light because it is not in the church to that extent that it can not be hid, as the Savior requires. It is too dim, comparatively "under a bushel" by reason, at least in part, of the lack of spiritual leaders or leadership; not always a lack of men, called and ordained, but a lack of those sanctified and chosen and qualified to "feed the flock" with "knowledge and understanding," not alone publicly but in private and family administration, as the law requires. There are not a few members of the church of years' standing, who have yet to receive the first official visit of a pastor or teacher. The trouble then is not always that the missionary has erred in baptizing. Those who were baptized were left "as sheep without a shepherd," and, sad to say, they fell away. This seems to be the condition here, and we relate it without reflection upon any.

We will make haste by going slow. The Lord says, "I will hasten my work in its time." When the foundation of a building is well laid, the building itself may be hastened, but take heed how you build even then. "For the day will come that will reveal every man's work of what sort (quality, not quantity) it is. We are having indications of success, if not success itself. Only upon the basis of faith in God, do we have expectations of victory. Man's extremity is God's opportunity. We see his hand to some extent and are encouraged to "press with vigor on," endeavoring in cooperation with the church and its membership to "reach the people"—the many. We hope for the many, we desire the many, but if we reach them it will be through the faithfulness of the few. We can force no man into the kingdom, if we might possibly into the church. The strongest arguments may convince but not convert. But what is the strongest argument? Personal, individual righteousness will win the respect of God and man. We read of Jesus, "he grew in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man."

The true gospel comes "not in word only, but in the Holy Ghost, and in power and in much assurance, for (as Paul wrote) you know what manner of men we were among you for your sake." (1 Thessalonians 1:5.) May God's law be written in the minds and hearts of his people, especially those called to lead in any capacity, that they shall not succumb to any pressure of evil or difficulty of environment, any power of sin or Satan, but in the midst of trial, difficulty, and opposition, develop strength and power of resistance to overcome, or react upon the environment. Witness the success of the sons of Mosiah in what was considered by their brethren an impossible work, the conversion of the Lamanites. What was the touchstone? "They had searched the scriptures diligently, that they might know the word of God. But this is not all: they had given themselves to much prayer, and fasting, therefore they had the spirit of prophecy and the spirit of revelation, and when they taught, they taught with the power and authority of God" (Alma 12:1, Book of Mormon). Who is weak, let him become strong; strong first to subdue and rule himself, to keep all the commandments. They "are not grievous," impossible of observing. All Saints are called to be leaders, not followers of men, especially those of the priesthood. Is there difficulty, are there bands that bind? "Have faith in God." When thou hast done all, stand, await his deliverance, the operation of his providences, the manifestations of his power. A race of heroes and heroines is the need of now. To run from trial or difficulty in one place is only to invite it in another. The place of no trial, if such may be found, is the place of no development and no salvation. The greater the trial, the more we are honored by the confidence of the Lord in us, and the greater the need of deliverance, the greater will that deliverance be. It came to the three Hebrew worthies in the fiery furnace; it came to Daniel in the lions' den; it came to Paul and Silas in the prison, and to many witnesses of the Lord in former and in latter days.

Shall we not have faith in him and persevere? Will he not be equal to our necessities and our extremities, if we are wholly and entirely his?

If he is for us, who or what can be against us? Let us be as firm as the truth itself is firm to resist evil, firm to resist Satan, firm to stay with our convictions of right as God gives us to see the right, fearing only to do or be wrong, and the dominion of Satan in us and over us will end. We may emulate a character like Moroni's of whom it is said, "If all men had been, and were, and ever would be, like unto Moroni, behold, the very powers of hell would have been shaken for ever; yea, the Devil would never have power over the hearts of the children of men." (Alma 21:31, 32.)

We are glad to be in the company of such men, whose faith was firm in Christ. We are not ashamed of the gospel as delivered to them and restored to us, and if we keep the faith, victory will perch upon our banners, and honor come to our cause, and Utah will be no junction among the battlefields.

O God! give strength to all thy Saints,
And courage give them too;
And oh! lend them thy mighty hand,
To conquer every foe.

Especially would we pray, Give strength to every elder, priest, teacher, and deacon, and ask God to raise up more laborers in the church. We do not want to see every elder and priest a missionary, unless to the flock, and in the missionary spirit extend the work as it may be practicable.

With the house of God in order and a habitation of the Spirit, the people will not be difficult to reach. Let the good work begin in the mind and heart of every Saint, the work of purification, of consecration, of complete obedience, of sanctification. Let it begin with me and with you, not the other fellow. It is laid at our door. It is up to you and me now; the time of blessing to the faithful, of cursing to the unfaithful. Who will be able to endure? Who will be able to stand? Shall you? Shall I? "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." Let him watch and pray.

I close this perhaps too long letter with a quotation from the Doctrine and Covenants: "And let all my people who dwell in the regions round about, be very faithful and prayerful, and humble before me." May God bless the faithful and those who are striving to be, and may those who are otherwise be aroused to action and faithfulness, is the prayer of

M. F. GOWELL.

MAGNOLIA, INDIANA, June 5, 1911.

Editors Herald: After enjoying a great feast at General Conference at Lamoni, and visiting my folks at Swanwick, Perry County, Illinois, for a week, I arrived in my field of labor April 26.

My first stopping point was Oatsville, Indiana, where I preached several times during two weeks to an interested crowd. Baptized two in this place and others are near the kingdom. Some said they were just getting interested and wished I could stay a week or two, but on account of our district conference meeting at Wirt, May 20, I had to leave, but hope to get back soon. The few Saints near Oatsville are indeed willing to do their part, and seem to have the spirit of the work. The ones baptized were Hosea Burke, whose wife has belonged to the church for some time. He is a fine young man. The other a sister, Esther S. Ingle, who we feel will also be a help to the work.

We also preached one night at Littles, where there are a few Saints and a few outsiders who are very much interested, and they are anxious to have us come back soon. Also preached a few nights at Louisville, Kentucky, as Louisville is in our district now. I also preached one night at New Albany, where Elder Byrn met me and we went up to Wirt together to attend conference.

Arriving there a few days before conference commenced, we held meetings and were indeed pleased to see Elder H. E. Moler, from Holden, Missouri, arrive in time for conference. We hope he will soon surprise us again. Elder Moler did the preaching for us during the conference, and I hope all have received as much good out of the instructions that were given as the writer has. I believe all that were at the conference were glad they were there.

After conference, leaving Brother Moler at New Albany, Elder Byrn and the writer went to Corydon, stopping with James M. Wynn. All the elders that have been in this place will remember Brother Wynn, as it is like going home when they go there. We stopped six days in this place, found some quite interested. The next stop was at Leavenworth. We arrived at Leavenworth a week ago to-day. The writer left Elder Byrn there this morning. Brother Byrn baptized a brother there last Thursday, his being the first he has ever baptized. It was a day he will long remember.

The writer starts meetings here at Magnolia to-night. This being a new opening, do not know what success we'll have. Wishing you all God's best blessings, as ever in gospel bonds,

JACOB HALB.

A Word from the Presidents of Seventy.

In the address of the beloved President of the church at the close of the conference of this year, reference is made to the work of the Presidents of Seventy, that has not to some correctly reflected that which has governed us in all that we have done, hence this brief explanation.

We have made all our selections of men to occupy in the office of seventy, as the law of God makes it obligatory,—see Doctrine and Covenants, 120: 10,—as we have been "guided by wisdom and the Spirit of revelation, choosing none but men of good repute," and we have always considered in each selection the conditions referred to in the instructions contained in this address relating to this matter, always seeking also, while in performance of our duty, to jealously guard the interests of every other department of the church.

A Dream and its Interpretation.

I dreamed of seeing that I came from the Missouri Pacific depot to the Stone Church. Upon arriving at the street car track, I met two men. Thus far I had turned neither to the right nor to the left; and upon meeting these men I tried to turn out or away from them; but I discovered they wanted me to stop with them. While we stood there, there was a voice came, I know not from whence, and it was directed to the men—the men had come from the west side of the church, where others were assembled—and more especially to the younger, and said: "You hurry up, for you are going too slow." I saw the older one was not willing to move, and also saw as the younger man shoved his foot, it compelled him to move.

I then saw a thousand or more men standing on the west side of the church, who had for clothing only shirts and pants; each of them had a bushel basket, the same sitting on the ground, which necessitated that each was stooping over; the basket being covered up, they were all in the act of uncovering that I might see that which they had concealed therein.

Upon examination I beheld each basket had rich, yellow corn, and golden color; and I beheld that it was very full in the ear. Each basket contained the exact same amount, and of the same richness of color.

JAMES MADISON.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 1043 Orchard Avenue.

Dear brother, the dream is of the Lord, He who revealeth secrets unto his children, even unto those whom he loveth.

In going from the depot, signifies you coming from your former places of living. As you have lived at different places, signifies traveling, as upon the railroad, so you come to Independence and are met by two men. They are in a sense representatives of the great latter day work: not signifying any individual, as two men, but rather the divisions of the work of God in the last days. Two classes, one signifying the older, the other signifying the younger; so, as we have the latter organization now commencing willingly to move on, agreeable to the admonition of the voice, while the older wishes to move slowly, but the compelling power will be made manifest, as you saw the movement of the foot.

So many men at the west of the church building,—no women or children—signifying these are the men of the priesthood who have the golden truths to give out to all Ephraim; as he may come here to Independence. And as you saw their dress, even so you saw their equality; and also with coats off ready for work.

And as yellow corn represents the richness of that cereal, even so was represented the richness of everlasting life that the representatives of the priesthood have to reveal. All baskets being of the same fullness, so also all who come into this order. And also, the harvest is to its fullness, inasmuch as the kernels were so well filled out to the ends of the ear.

Concerning the Sanitarium.

I feel it but right that I should offer the following in behalf of the Sanitarium as an institution. Having been a recent inmate, I found it to be all that one can reasonably expect from such an institution. If all receive as good care as I did, there can be no just cause for complaint. It may be said that it was because of my official position, but upon this point it can truthfully be said that there was no evidence of anything of the kind.

A very close observation convinced me that real suffering and need were the things considered as the requirements for any special assistance and not official position in the church. I was really glad to see that such was the case. I got nothing like the amount of attention that some of the patients did, because I did not need it! However, I got all that was due me, and that is all that any reasonable person can expect. Inmates ought to consider that nurses are busy people and that it is not to be expected that they can run at every beck and call.

I found a religious atmosphere not always found in such institutions, yet of a pleasant and unostentatious nature. I am certainly pleased that as a church we have such an institution, and hope that it may be liberally maintained.

Those who have desire and can assist in helping to furnish the institution should remember that quilts are of no value there, but that blankets, sheets, towels, pillowslips and spreads are valuable as well as money. It is a worthy institution and should have assistance. It may be well to remember that the bedsteads are but three-quarter and not full width.

Sincerely,
J. W. WIGHT.

News From Branches.

Burlington, Iowa.

The item of chief interest to Burlington during the past few months is the removal of our pastor, Bro. Charles Fry, and family, to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he was appointed by the April conference. After their four years with us, we felt sincere regret at the loss, for his helpfulness in a pastoral way and efficient help in the music and the Sunday school and Religio work; and, too, for the loss of five names to the Sunday school and cradle roll. We feel, however, that our branch will be in good hands, for Bro. F. M. Cooper, who was appointed to Burlington, visited us over a Sunday a few weeks ago, speaking both morning and evening, and left a very good impression. Just at present we are "pastorless," Brother Fry and family having left Thursday, the 8th, and Brother Cooper not expecting to arrive until after Sunday, the 11th.

Our numbers have been somewhat depleted of late, as we have lost two by death and one family by removal, which took four from the Sunday school. We have, however, gained some five or six by letters of removal, all of whom have made themselves welcome by proving to be ready and willing helpers.

Bro. F. M. McDonald, of Montrose, Iowa, came to Burlington Sunday, May 28, to use the font for two baptisms, one being Sister Muldoon, of New London, and the other Bertha Graham, of Fort Madison.

The district conference which was held at Ottumwa, June 3 and 4, was not as largely attended by Burlington people as might have been, owing to distance and local needs.

Bro. Charles Harpe, newly appointed to the district this spring, attended the conference and was chosen as district president in Brother Fry's place.

Just previous to the General Conference Bro. R. Etzenhouser was in Burlington with his stereopticon views of the Michigan relies. Brother Fry had also purchased a stereopticon outfit and has recently given us the benefit of it, both at Religio and Sunday evening services. The views were good, and some of them were especially interesting, being views which Bro. F. G. Pitt had sent from Jerusalem.

Bro. Rufus Willey, of Lamoni, is with us for a time at least, being employed in the mail service out of Burlington. He assisted in the sacrament service Sunday, June 11.

A movement was started by the ministerial association here early in the spring, in which our church was given opportunity to participate, to place in the hotels, depots, etc., a church directory showing location, hours of meeting, etc. Brother Fry reported at our last business meeting that he had heard of no definite results. We hope, however, that the plan will be carried out, so that visiting Saints and friends may find us more readily.

Our plan of writing the names of all those on time on the blackboard still works well, as the Sunday school pupils are especially anxious to read their names from the list.

Sacrament service in charge of Elders F. M. Cooper and P. Pement. The spirit of the meeting appeared to be that of thankfulness, and that we were not receiving the blessings desired, because the benefits and privileges of the gospel were not fully appreciated; but are sure everyone desires to make improvement.

Elder Tanner preached at West Pullman in the morning, and occupied our pulpit in the evening, expressing many good thoughts regarding the trials and heavy burdens being just what we need to develop, if we are humble and following the Master to the best of our ability. "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth." "The path of sorrow, and that path alone leads to the land where sorrow is unknown."

At business meeting Monday evening the following officers were elected: President of the branch, E. J. Lang; priest, W. I. Cochran; teacher, James Lang; deacon, C. E. Cotton; clerk, H. P. W. Keir; organist, Edna Fike; chorister, Fanny Prentiss McGahan; correspondent, as appears below. The delegates elected to the district conference at Mission, Illinois, convening on the 10th inst., were Bro. J. A. Tanner, J. J. Oliver, P. Pement, W. I. Cochran, and E. J. Lang; Sisters H. P. W. Keir, W. I. Cochran, P. Pement, E. J. Lang, and Hazel Lang.

Wednesday evening prayer meeting in charge of Brother Cochran and H. P. W. Keir. How much happier we feel if we are doing our duty, and we pray that the Saints may become more zealous and strive to attend this much needed service.

"Happiness is increased, not by the enlargement of the possessions, but of the heart."

"Who is the happiest of men? He who values the merits of others, and in their pleasure takes joy, even as though 'twere his own."

The man who is always doing things with a view of making a reputation succeeds only in obtaining notoriety; while he who never thinks of anything but duty secures a reputation without being aware of it. A young man who shunned publicity and who did his work as he thought, out of sight of the world, recently passed away. In his last illness he was surprised to learn of crowds who came to express their sympathy—many of them people of whom he had never heard. They had quietly watched his quiet work and knew him not by his efforts to make himself known, but by his efforts to be faithful.—Exchange.

News From Missions

Kewanee District.

Your request for a letter, for the "News from missions" column was received by us some time ago, and would have complied thereto sooner but for the press of work along other lines. But will essay the task, with the hope it may help to stimulate, "some especially in the districts" to new zeal and a greater love for the "true cause of Christ."

I do not believe I am capable, nor could I consistently tell the true statistics of this whole district, more especially for lack of acquaintance, as in reality I am more or less a stranger to many and most places, for my appointment last year, while in the district, was but a small part, namely Kewanee City, objective point. However, this I can say, that so far as it has been my privilege to meet the Saints, I can say that nobler hearted people I do not expect to meet anywhere; in fact their kindness to me has surpassed my sanguine expectations. And in return for such thoughtful considerations, I hope never to betray the confidence of my brethren and sisters in Christ, but rather prove myself an honorable man of God, in all that that term may imply. After removing my family to our home in Independence, and getting them settled once more, I reluctantly left them May 26. Reaching Moline, I was made comfortable at the home of Bro. Alfred Needham. I preached Sunday morning for the Saints of Moline, also attended and took part in their Sunday school. In the afternoon, by request, I went over the river to Davenport and preached for them twice on Sunday and the following Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings, at which time six were baptized by the branch president, Bro. I. A. Chamberlain, which will add strength and force to the little struggling church in that place. The few faithful ones deserve much credit in their work.

Leaving that place, I went to Joy, to attend the Sunday school and Religio conventions, also the district conference. To say it was merely a good conference, will do injustice to it, for from the opening exercises of the conventions on Friday morning, to the close of the conference, on Sunday evening, it was simply a continuous feast of spiritual things. The Saints of Joy deserve much credit for the kindly way in which they provided for the physical and spiritual needs of all. The preaching was of a high, elevating order, and the social services,—well, I can perhaps better express it in the language of another who was in attendance, who said, if heaven were grander and happier than was this experience, she was content to remain in such bliss and joy as was felt then. Through the gift of prophecy, the Saints were warned of dangers and disaster to come, but if faithful to Him they should receive joy and peace and ultimate salvation in the kingdom of God. Two were baptized, one child blessed, and in all, twelve sessions were held.

Being desirous of utilizing all our time to the interest of the work, we at once left Joy and came to Millersburg, where Brother Goodenough will remain over Sunday and I shall go to Buffalo Prairie to comply with a previous appointment to assist the Sunday school with their children's day exercises. Brother Sade, too, is booked for the same place.

After that we are uncertain what our course will be. We have in mind a number of places where we hope to present the word. We would be much gratified if any of the Saints will correspond with us if they know of any place when we might effect new openings. Any having friends or relatives in this field who they believe would listen to the truth, we certainly would be pleased to have their names and addresses. We are hopeful of a successful year; and remember, dear Saints, the preacher can not do it all. It has been truly said, "For we are laborers together with God."

We may be reached by addressing us at Independence, Missouri, from whence all letters will be forwarded to us in the field. Trusting that the Lord may bless you with his Holy Spirit, and as you receive, may you be disposed to give to others, that all may receive the blessings of our heavenly Father.

If not, let all who come by rail secure receipts from the agent when they purchase tickets, and if fifty are purchased, the secretary can O. K. them, which will entitle the holder to purchase a return ticket for one third fare. This reunion has been arranged by consultation with Saints at different points, who favor the plan, and we trust that Saints and friends of Idaho and Oregon will rally and help make this a grand success.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of Minnesota; Greeting: Another year of gospel labor has come, and soon will be gone, and the good that may come into our own lives and others in this world and the one to come, will depend on our own efforts. The present time is an opportune one. Let us not let it pass. Let us not be one of the foolish virgins spoken of by the great Master, but let us remember the work entrusted to all. And as one appointed to assist in looking after the missionary work in Minnesota, I wish all Saints who have friends or know of isolated Saints who would entertain a missionary and thus give opportunity for new openings, would write and let me know the address of all such, and we will do all we can to reach them while in the missionary work. My address will be Clitherall, Minnesota.

Your colaborer, in gospel bonds,
LEONARD HOUGHTON.

To the Ministry and Saints of Nebraska; Greeting: Again have we the privilege of addressing you as colaborers in the vineyard of the blessed Master. I believe that we are all cognizant of this truth,—that if we will be blessed, in this great calling to sainthood in Christ Jesus it will be because we are willing to practice the injunction "to love the Lord with all our might and strength." In the first place, it is made the duty of the general ministry to push their labors into new fields and thus warn the world. Now, unless the scattered Saints will give their assistance to these men, in their endeavors to open new fields, they must of necessity move the more slowly in this work. Therefore, dear Saints and friends everywhere, let us go to and put our hands to the task, and thus show our faith and love by our works. And another thing, these representatives of Christ will need assistance in the way of clothing and money, and don't be afraid that the minister will have a few cents left over when he arrives at the next place. He will have to have means for correspondence, and incidentals of various kinds, so please try to cheer his heart along the way.

I trust the Saints everywhere in this State will remember their obligations to the church in a financial way. There will be three reunions in this State this year. One at Bayard, and also at Eustis and Comstock. I hope the Saints will feel free to come and make these gatherings a place of real spiritual enjoyment to themselves as well as to help the outsiders hear the message of truth.

My mission address will be Blair, Nebraska, while my permanent address is Limon, Colorado, Box 186.

In bonds,
J. R. SUTTON.

To the Saints of the Western Oklahoma District; Greeting: Another year has placed us in your midst, and it has been my good pleasure to labor here for eleven years. I trust we may have the same cooperation and good will that has been manifest in the past. Bro. J. H. Baker will occupy the northwestern portion of the field with such local help as can assist in the work, and I trust all will do their best to help to forward the great work of the Lord. Brethren Price and McGeorge will labor together, and I trust the Saints will receive these men of God, and sustain them by their faith and prayers, and not turn the servant of God away empty-handed. This is going to be a very hard year financially, as the drought has continued so long, but, dear Saints, that is just the best time to get the gospel before the people; they will go to church more and give more thought to the things of the Lord. And while it may require a sacrifice on our part, that is only our duty. I trust the Saints will not forget the fact that the Lord knows how to do their duty as well as those who fail, let us labor as unto the Lord, and not as unto men. Brother Short is the bishop for Central District, but Brother Kelley insisted on my acting as agent as he is posted in the Western District. So please take notice and send your tithes to me as heretofore at Kingfisher, Oklahoma.

HUBERT CASE.

To the Saints of Western Canada; Greeting: Having been appointed assistant minister in charge of Western Canada, I take this means of addressing you in the interests of the cause we love. The field is very large and the laborers very few. We will appreciate the cooperation of all who desire to see the work progress, especially in getting our message before those who have never heard it. We will be glad to hear from all who are isolated that perchance we may effect an opening in your locality. My field address for the present will be Sedley, Saskatchewan, care of T. J. Jordan. My home address is Lamoni, Iowa. The field force will labor as opportunity affords until the conference at Sedley. We will then arrange our work according to the demands. Let all attend if possible. We already have calls for preaching in new places, and prospects for a busy year are bright.

In gospel bonds,
E. E. LONG.

Notice to the Priesthood.

Bishop A. Carmichael will lead in the discussion of the subject: "Qualifications for membership in the Order of Enoch," at the meeting of the priesthood of the Lamoni Stake, which will be held on Sunday, June 25, at 2.30 p. m., in the church at Lamoni.

This will be a good time to determine whether you are ready to join the order or not. Come prepared for an open discussion of the subject, and do your part to make the meeting a success.

BY ORDER OF THE PROGRAM COMMITTEE.

A great deal of time is wasted by those who are fond of planning and dreaming, but who neglect the thing in hand. However obscure the present place, or how simple the present duty, our obligation is to put our strength into that which fills here and now. To-day is ever a stepping-stone to to-morrow.—Selected.

300,000 DIED

In the year of 1910 for the want of air. How many do you suppose died for the lack of proper food? It is said that 95 per cent of the people dig their graves with their teeth. Why don't you feed your dog hay? Or your child sawdust? You say that would never do. Well, will you tell me why you eat white flour? You say it tastes good and you can thrive on it, certainly you can if you eat enough and all kinds of vegetables and fruits. Eat white bread and butter for ten days and then eat Good Health with honey and see how quickly it rebuilds your system. I am patiently looking forward to the time when the government will compel the manufacturers to have Nitrates and Phosphates as well as Carbonates if they want to call it flour. White flour is the greatest injury in food products that has ever been placed before the public. Test my statements at my expense. The Truth will stand.

THE TRUE PATRIOT.

A true patriot is a good citizen in love with his country. A good citizen in love with humanity is a world patriot.

In every land there are many gunpowder patriots who make themselves prominent on the occasion of any national celebration. America is no exception, as we are reminded each Fourth of July, our national Independence Day, which one writer says has become a three day period of agony—"preparation, celebration, and cauterization."

But the noisiest man is not always the best patriot. It takes brains to be a patriot—anyone can shout. Reginald Wright Kauffman says: "Were you ever in a theater when the orchestra played 'Dixie'? There is always a storm of applause from a dozen youths under twenty-one, all born north of the Mason-Dixon line. And when the tune is 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' at least a hundred persons will rise—persons that don't know the words of this anthem and that won't hesitate to cheat their Government by reusing a canceled two-cent postage stamp."

A charitable view of such persons is that their emotion is genuine, but they permit a very noble impulse to pass with the thrill that agitates their spinal chords and do not follow it up with any effort to make their nation greater by themselves becoming good and honest citizens.

War is supposed to call forth the best exhibitions of the highest type of patriotism. We would not in any way discount the valor and integrity of those who have fought to secure liberty for themselves or others, or engaged in defensive warfare, have fought to maintain liberty already acquired. But let us remember that the patriot is not out of a job in times of peace.

War occupies a comparatively small part of the time of nations; but the perils that suddenly overwhelm them in times of war may have accumulated during long periods of peace. It is the work of the patriot to detect and challenge the forces of evil that foment these perils.

In 1844, when Joseph Smith publicly advocated the purchase of the negro slaves by the United States Government, their emancipation, and a peaceful settlement of the slave question, to be effected before 1852, he was as true a patriot as any soldier who shouldered a gun and marched away to the tune of "John Brown's Body," after the beginning of the actual war, in a costly and bloody struggle to force an adjustment of the vexed question of slavery.

It takes brains to be a patriot; also moral courage, a degree of inspiration, breadth of view, and morality. These people who smoke, booze, gamble, carouse, gorge, and explode on the Fourth of July, Decoration Day, Labor Day, and election day desecrate patriotism by their profession.

Consistent Latter Day Saints are true patriots. They are good citizens because of their moral character and the nature of their teaching—and a true patriot is merely a good citizen in love with his country. A good citizen in love with humanity is a world patriot.

No one can be a patriot who will not obey the laws of the land. Our people are specifically bound to keep the law of the land, by the following commandment: "Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land."—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5.

The above instruction may be supposed to apply in principle in every enlightened country, and our people, so far as we know, do as a rule observe it in every civilized land in which they reside, whether in the United States, Great Britain, Canada, Germany, Australia, or Scandinavia. Nowhere are they defiant of the law or engaged in any seditious effort to undermine government. They expect to be subject to the powers that be until Christ comes. Nevertheless, in those lands where they hold suffrage, they are bound to cast their votes with a view to the putting of good men into office. An intelligent exercise of the franchise is one function of patriotism, and certainly requires as much intelligence as it does to fire a musket.

So far as the Saints who are resident in the United States are concerned, they are plainly told that they should befriend and support "that law which is the constitutional law of the land." Thus we are enjoined to support the constitutional law. No community or individual teachings or practices should be sanctioned (nor are they sanctioned by the church) when in violation of constitutional law. Even reforms when sought, if contrary in spirit to the constitution as it now stands, should be secured by constitutional amendment, and not by an attempt to force them through contrary to the spirit and letter of that venerable institution.

So far as this land is concerned, we are told that it shall never be brought into bondage to any other nation unless the people lapse into iniquity. We can not be overthrown politically by foreign powers unless we have first been overthrown morally by internal forces of evil.

The true patriot, then, is the one who is a good citizen all of the time. The defender of his country is one who by his acts teaches and affirms the policy of individual and collective probity in politics, commerce, and private life; and denies and antagonizes those policies, institutions, and men, evil in nature, that conspire to debauch the nation.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

A WORD OF CAUTION.

In conversation with a late inquirer after the faith once delivered to the Saints, a young man, a Jew, who had come into contact with Christianity (under Baptist administration), and had been baptized by a Baptist minister, he stated, that in conversation with some of our brethren that they had told him that he was doing wrong, that his work was amounting to nothing, though he was striving to tell the good that he had received by his study of Christianity, even under such administration.

To us such blunt disparagement of what a man had been led to do, even under the administration of the means of one of the denominations of the time, is not only a mistake, but is cruel, the mistake being that it is not true as we understand the gospel teaching. The Book of Mormon tells us that whatsoever enticeth men to do good cometh of God, and whatsoever enticeth men to do evil is of the Adversary. While we regret the bigotry and intolerance which have been exhibited toward the faith by members and preachers of different denominations, we have had reason to know that some of the preachers and members of each of the denominations have been good men and women, according to the light which they had received. Jesus distinctly stated in the twenty-fourth of Matthew that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in all the world beginning at Jerusalem. Why not, then, give credit to those who preach repentance and remission of sins, even if they be not fully advised as to the scope of the New Testament teaching.

We said to this young man, that the zeal of our brethren had caused them to err. We tried to show him that baptism to be effectual must be authoritative, and this he readily admitted. The question was in his mind, as it necessarily is in the minds of all earnest inquirers, "Where and to whom can I go for such an authoritative baptism?" Brethren, why not show that charity which the Apostle Paul, in the thirteenth chapter of Corinthians, says, "thinketh no evil"? Is it not better for us to recognize the good that men do in attempting to teach others to leave pernicious ways and practice that which is good toward their fellow-men, upon the hypothesis that, for each good thing which a man does he will receive a proper credit in the great day of settling of accounts? We believe so, and so advise.

Be patient in your administration. Be careful not to condemn and hurt, and not repulse the earnest inquirer by too harsh and too positive condemnation of the efforts they have put forth for the securing of the good which they believe has come to them in the gospel economy. Let the Master's example be sufficient in these ways.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE POPE LONGS TO CONVERT ENGLISH SPEAKING NATIONS.—Of late years the Catholic Church has made some notable conversions from the Episcopal Church, as well as from certain Protestant denominations. The following press dispatch, dated Rome, June 19, records the conversion and ordination of six former Protestants, and reveals the ambition of the pope to convert English speaking nations:

Cardinal Merry del Val has ordained as subdeacons six English clergymen who abjured Protestantism and entered the ecclesiastical nobles' academy here with the object of joining the Catholic priesthood. The ordination was held in the Pauline Chapel in the Vatican.

The services were of great solemnity, and were attended by all the students of the academy and many prelates.

After the ceremonies Cardinal Merry del Val accompanied the converts to the papal apartments, where they were received in audience by Pius X. He welcomed them cordially and blessed them.

The pope said it afforded him the greatest consolation that six Protestant clergymen should join the church, as he was convinced that their example would be followed by other Anglicans in England and America.

Continuing, the pope said that he prayed daily for the conversion of England, which constituted his fondest hope, as he believed that if this occurred it would lead to the conversion of all English speaking countries.

Rev. Clarence Riggs, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was in Lamoni over Sunday, June 18, and preached twice in the Methodist Episcopal church here. He is a native of this place, his parents, now residing in Indianola, Iowa, having been early settlers in this corner of Decatur County. Reverend Riggs is home on a visit from India, where he has been serving as a missionary for a number of years. His narrative of the people in that distant country was very interesting. He left Lamoni on the 19th and expects to return soon to his work in an English college in the city of Burmah, India.

A leading eastern paper recently contained a letter concerning the length of sermons. The title of this was, "Would limit sermons to twenty minutes." Its juxtaposition to another entitled, "For the world's peace," leads to the thought that there are as many causes assigned for war as there are reasons for the present high cost of living.

The branch authorities at Lamoni have conducted a week's meetings in Central Park which have been quite successful. During the heated season all Sunday night meetings are held in this park unless storm prevents.

Bro. R. S. Salyards, Church Secretary, is in New England for the summer. He is at present in Maine with Bro. U. W. Greene, and expects to enjoy the Eastern reunion before his return.

Bro. F. M. Smith writes that he is starting on his trip to Wisconsin and Canada, where he expects to attend a number of reunions.

Work on the Children's Home is progressing nicely. When this home is completed it will be a fine memorial to the humanitarian principles on which the church is founded. Brother and Sister Robinson seem to have the spirit of the work and are working early and late to get the place in readiness for the children who need such a home.

Unlike one year ago this section of country is suffering from lack of rain. There was an exceptionally fine prospect for farmers because the open weather had allowed them to get their crops in and take care of them, but for three weeks intense heat and practically no rain have caused the corn to curl and unless relief comes soon there will be a great loss in production.

SAINTS' HERALD DOCTRINAL SERIES.

VIII.—THE HOLY SPIRIT; ITS OFFICE WORK.

BY ELDER FREDERICK A. SMITH.

One of the most comforting and helpful promises made to the follower of the Christ is found in the fourteenth chapter of John's Gospel, verses 16 and 17, as follows:

And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.

For three years the disciples had been with Jesus and had found in him an ever present help and comfort; no obstacle was too great for him to surmount, no problem too complex for him to solve, no sorrow so great that he could not find a solace. They had learned to lean on him in every extremity, like the child that runs to the parents to seek shelter in the arms of their love from the dangers that confront them, or to have the pain from every bump kissed away, or to have the balm of consolation poured upon their wounded feelings; but now they were made very sad, for the Master had told them that he was going back to his Father. Their hearts were filled with sorrow and disappointment and they cried out against it. The Master in comforting them gave them the promise related above, which was but the reaffirming of the promise made by John in the early part of his work.

The fact that the Master used the term "another Comforter" would lead one to understand that this was to take the place he had occupied while among his disciples on the earth. To do this, it would have a very peculiar work to do, and would be of great benefit to the earnest child of God who is seeking eternal life; to attain to this glorious condition, he must overcome the evils of the world that will beset him on every side and will need all the help he can obtain. As the Christ was a help to those with whom he labored, so we believe that the Comforter he promised his disciples as an abiding Comforter, will be a help to them in all their efforts honestly made to follow the teachings of the Master. Let us take a look at what the Christ said about this Holy Spirit; his definition as to what this Spirit was to do will be the safest to go by and should be satisfactory to all. John 14:26 reads:

But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.

It surely must be evident to everyone, that, emanating from God himself, he would be qualified to act the part of teacher and prompter that would be of great worth to the child of God; no matter what age he might live in. We can readily admit that the necessity for such peculiar instruction as this teacher would be able to give exists to a marked degree among men in the age in which we live, filled as it is with skepticism, doubtful theories, and extravagant ideas of God, and we are sorry to say, that which seems to be a growing ignorance of what the Lord has said to the world for their salvation. If this Spirit is to take up the work of the Master, are we not justified in the belief that a part of his work would be to give aid and help in all the affairs of men, as well as in the spiritual alone? Should it be counted a strange or wild idea to claim that God will hear the cry of his humble, earnest children and help them in all their extremities? Has he not done it in the past, in the affairs of nations and of individuals, and if we are willing to live so close to the divine plan God has given that it will please him to so bless them, why not now? As a prompter, the child of God needs him, and he is ready to direct; but alas, how often does the prompting go unheeded! Like the parent, or nurse to the child, he is ever ready to lift the warning voice and save the burn or the fall; but, like the willful child, we do not heed the warning, only to smart with the burning pain of regret and remorse, or the humiliation of the fall, with its consequent wounded feelings and broken confidences.

There is still another work for this Spirit that is of great worth to the follower of the Christ, mentioned in John 15:26, which reads:

But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me.

He shall testify of me. This is one of the things that one must have if he would stand the storms that will beat upon his faith in the warfare against sin that the follower of Christ must wage. In the midst of the howling winds of doubtful theories, and the scoffing of the skeptic, the lightning of the higher criticism, and the thunders of the atheist, the true follower of Christ can stand secure in the knowledge that his Redeemer lives; and amidst the tempest of conflicting opinions he thanks God for the gift of the Holy Ghost, the Comforter sent from God, which testifies of the Christ. What a kind provision God has made for his children and how they should appreciate it!

We are not through yet, there are still some things that we wish to call your attention to; John 16:12-14 has something to say on this subject:

I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye can not bear them now. Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth; for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come. He shall glorify me; for he shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you. All things that the Father hath are mine: therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and show it unto you.

We discover from the above reading that even these disciples who had been permitted to hear the wonderful teachings of the Christ as they fell from his lips, were not yet able to bear all the wonderful knowledge he had in store for them, but when this Comforter should come he would guide them into all truth; he would teach them all things; he would show them things to come. If those who had lived so close to the Master needed a sure guide, how much more those who have lived so far from the time of the Christ's personal work among men. Amidst the confusion of so many Lo Here's, and Lo There's, all clamoring for recognition, we surely need something more than the wisdom of man. We need a sure and tried guide that knows well the way of the Lord to guide our feet lest we stray; and again the comfort of the promise comes forcibly home to us, for in the Holy Ghost we have such a guide and teacher; the Master has not left his people without a Comforter, a help in the time of need. The peculiar office work of this Holy Ghost provides for the very emergency that may arise, provided we are willing to be submissive to the law that he has given, by obedience to which we become the children of God and are entitled to the promise with all of its blessings.

That part of the promise that says "he will show you things to come" opens wide the door of possibility, and invites us to enter the infinite fields of knowledge and wisdom, where we are unable to glean in the finite powers of man; enlarges the powers of understanding and clears the vision, until we are amazed at the manifestation of the kind provision God has made for his children.

"I will take the things of the Father and show them unto you," follows with the assurance that we need not stand doubting, if we are willing to be taught by the wonderful teacher that has been provided for us, and yet we hesitate. As we look over the past we discover that the Apostle Paul was taught by this same power until he was able to so grasp the things of God that he became a wonder himself as a representative of the gospel of Christ, and he tells us that it was by the teaching of this same Holy Ghost that he knew the wonderful truths concerning God and his work. Turn to 1 Corinthians 2:7-13, where we have the following expression by the apostle that very nicely touches the point under consideration:

But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory: which none of the princes of this world knew: for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God. Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God. Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual.

One of the principal thoughts in this is, we can not find out God by the learning or wisdom of this world; it requires a revelation to mortal man to gain this knowledge, and in the office work of this Spirit we find the means appointed of God for that very purpose. Again we discover that Paul but confirmed the expression of one of the prophets of old in the thought that he quoted, "Eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man, the things that God hath prepared for them that love him." This would emphasize the great need of some means by which man could find out these things, could get in close touch with his Maker, could understand the will of him that has asked us to follow him and love him, therefore the office work of the Spirit; it searcheth the deep things of God, and revealeth them to the humble follower of the Christ. Thus we discover that God in his love and kindness recognized the need of poor, mortal man; and knowing his frail, weak condition, provided a means wonderful and mysterious, yet suited to the needs of the strong as well as the weak. For we discover that Paul, with all of his education, was under the necessity of learning through this means, as well as were the poor fishermen, who evidently were not blessed with the education Paul had received. So we are more and more impressed with the importance and necessity of this abiding Comforter, and are not surprised that those who deny the power and office work of this Holy Ghost are not able to discern the kingdom of God, nor the Lord's body in the organization among men known as the Church of Christ. Now we are sure that there should be an appreciation of this Holy Spirit that is not always manifest, but it should be understood properly and the workings of this Comforter should not be confounded with some of the fanatical exhibitions we see from time to time; for such a teacher would without doubt be one of intelligence and wisdom.

We are told that there are gifts and fruits of the working of this same abiding Comforter, but of that we will not write at this time; suffice it to say that as we look over the work of the Spirit we can see in its workings that which will give us the help we need so much; that will inspire a greater faith in God; that will fortify us for the hard struggles in life, enabling us to maintain our integrity to the end, guiding our feet in the ways of truth, that we may avoid the pitfalls and snares and ever choose the safer course, strengthening our faith and confidence in God until we can look up through our tears with the star of hope still shining before us. Helping us out of the slough of despond, it draws back the curtain and lets the light of peace in during the time of fear; and when the dark clouds of doubts surround us, reaches out and lays hold of the power of God, bringing it to our relief when disease seeks our destruction. It opens the fountain of knowledge and strengthens our defense when the enemy attacks us; brings us close to God when we feel that we are left alone by humanity,—an abiding Comforter to the child of God.

What a precious promise indeed: "I will send you another Comforter that he may abide with you forever." As a teacher, comforter, guide to truth, revelator, witness, the office work of this Spirit becomes indispensable to every true follower of the meek and lowly Nazarene.

FAITH OR WORKS?—DEATHBED REPENTANCE.

SERMON BY BISHOP R. C. EVANS, AS REPORTED IN Toronto World, JUNE 4, 1911.

Permit me to draw your attention to the second chapter of the epistle of Saint James, fourteenth verse, where you will read these words: "What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith save him?"

The subject under consideration to-night is death-bed repentance. One of the leading doctrines of the Reformation was the doctrine of justification by faith; or, in other words, the idea that faith alone can save you; that we are not to depend upon works at all, and, consequently, the moment a man professes faith in Jesus Christ, they tell you that at that very moment he is saved, whether he is on the gallows or on his deathbed, or in the revival meeting. Now, I don't believe that, and my reason for refusing to accept such teaching as truth is because it is contrary to the Bible, first, last, and all the time. This doctrine is so contrary to the teaching of Holy Writ, that you would hardly believe me were I to tell you what the general Protestant church teaches regarding this doctrine. And so, at the risk of being a little tedious to-night, I am going to read you certain statements relative to this doctrine from the leading ministers and some of the churches' disciplines, just to prove what I say, and in order that you may know just what they teach on this matter from their own lips.

THE "FAITH ALONE" DOGMA.

Article 11 in the Church of England Prayer Book, on the justification of man, reads as follows: "We are accounted righteous before God only for the merit of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, by faith and not for our own works or deservings: wherefore that we are justified by faith only is a most wholesome doctrine, and very full of comfort." This is also found in Buck's Theological Dictionary, page 809, and in the Methodist Church Discipline, published in Toronto, page 6.

In "Gems of Truth and Beauty," published in 1889, page 125, we read as follows: "Bring out from the dust of six thousand years the old covenant of Eden, and on that soiled and torn banner you read the fading motto, 'Do and live.' But what read we on the folds of this banner, which, defiant of hell and the world, waves above Calvary and under which believers march to victory. The eye of a sinner's hope kindles at the sight of another and a better motto, for there inscribed in the blood of Jesus, like red letters on snow-white ground, we read: 'Believe and live'; salvation is the only thing needful for man, and faith is the only thing needful for salvation."—Gutherie.

The Rev. Dr. Van Horne preached in the very shadow of the Wesleyan University at Mount Pleasant, Iowa, in April, 1892. The following is copied from The Mount Pleasant News: "What must I do to be saved?" This is the text from which Doctor Van Horne preached to a full house last evening. He said: "This question presupposes two things; first, a desire on our part to be saved from sin and its consequences; from that which is distressing to that which is blessed; righteousness and peace for that which will be useful and ultimately heaven.

"Second, to receive this salvation what must we do? 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.' What does this mean? First, we assent that Jesus came into the world to save sinners. Second, we consent with our heart and our will that he came to save us. When these two requisites are fulfilled we will be saved."

Doctor Talmage, in September, 1894, made the following statement: "There is only one road to heaven, and that is the road of faith. There is only one boat to heaven, and that is the boat of faith. There is only one step to heaven, and that is the step of faith. For how much is heaven and pardon offered to you? A million dollars? less than that; a thousand dollars? less than that; a hundred dollars? less than that; one dollar? less than that; one farthing? less than that. Without money and without price you may have it: there is no journey to go, no penance to do. Only one decisive action of the soul: 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved.'"

D. L. Moody, the great evangelist, made this statement: "An old man arose in my meeting one time and said the finest thing I ever heard. He said he had been forty years finding out three things. First, 'I can do nothing to save myself'; second, 'God expects me to do nothing'; and third, 'Jesus did it all.

You have only to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and you are saved.'"

The Evangelical Alliance makes this statement: "Whosoever believes that salvation is secured by faith in Jesus Christ is evangelical: and whosoever accepts more or less than this as a means of salvation is not evangelical."

BELIEVERS' SINS EXCUSED.

Here is another statement from a leading man: "Believers ought not to mourn for sin, because it was pardoned before it was committed." Eaton's Honeycomb of Justification.

"God sees no sin in believers, whatever sin they commit. My sin might displease God, my person is always acceptable to him; though I should out sin Manasseh, I should not be less a pleasant child, because God always views me in Christ. Hence, in the midst of adulteries, murders, and incests he can address me with, 'Thou art all fair, my love, my undefiled, there is not a spot in thee.' It is a most pernicious error of the schoolmen to distinguish sins according to the fact, and not according to the person. Though I blame those who say, 'Let us sin that grace may abound,' yet adultery, incest and murder shall, upon the whole, make me holier on earth, and merrier in heaven.'" This a statement of the famous Richard Hill, a friend of the great Fletcher; and it is found in Fletcher's Work, volume 4, page 97.

On this same question the famous Martin Luther on the 1st of August, 1521, wrote to Melancthon the following: "Sin, and sin boldly; but let your faith be greater than your sin. It is enough for us through the riches of the glory of God to have known the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world. Sin will not destroy in us the reign of the Lamb, although we were to commit fornication or murder a thousand times in one day." This is taken from a book entitled, Faith or Fact, by H. M. Taber, page 86.

PERNICIOUS DOCTRINE.

Now, I may say in conclusion upon this point, there never was a doctrine so sure to breed moral pestilence as the doctrine of salvation by faith alone.

John Wesley upon this matter says, "That grand pest of Christianity, a faith without works, was spread far and wide when Saint James wrote his epistle."—John Wesley's 63d sermon, entitled, "The mystery of iniquity."

Here you have it from their own lips, that it does not matter whether a man commits adultery, murder, incest, fornication, or any other crime; if he has faith in Christ, he is "holier on earth and merrier in heaven." You are told that the thing that is a sin in the unbeliever, sufficient to send him to hell, God will take no notice of that sin committed by one that has faith, for he sees no sin in believers.

One of your writers practically says it like this: That if a Christian is committing sin, and that in the commission of it God happens to look his way, he just dodges behind Jesus Christ and all that God can see is Jesus when he looks in the direction of the sinner. We are told of the great doctrine from Eden down to Christ, that upon the banner was written, "Do and live," but that that banner had faded away. Now we don't have to do anything; on the Christian banner is written, "Believe and live."

One of their hymns, that is so frequently sung at their meetings, runs like this:

"Nothing either great or small,
Nothing, sinner, no;
Jesus did it, did it all,
Long, long ago.

"Wherefore, weary plodding one,
Wherefore toil you so?
Cease from doing, all was done,
Long, long ago."

And the closing lines has it like this:

"Doing is a deadly thing,
Doing ends in death."

OPPOSED TO COMMON SENSE.

Now, there is where you get the doctrine that a man can serve the Devil all his life, and, after the lawyers have eaten up his farm, and his last dollar in defending him, and he has to go to the gallows; then the preacher fixes it all up and sends him off to heaven in the thought that the moment he says he believes in Jesus Christ, that very moment he is saved. Or, in other words, a man can serve Satan all his life, and when, with the ashes of a misspent life, he is lying on his deathbed, he says, "Here, Lord, you can take this," the Lord says, "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." I remark that this doctrine is contrary to equity, to justice, and to all the laws that we have read, either human or divine, on the question of rewards and punishments. It is, moreover, a theory unsupported; except in the frenzied brain of the evangelist, the professional hypnotist, and his dupes.

"DOING"—AN ESSENTIAL FACTOR.

Now let us prove that, they say. We have not to do anything; doing ends in death. Let us measure that first. I will draw your attention to Saint James' Epistle, first chapter, verses 22 to 25. "But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. For if any be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass. . . . But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed." Jesus says, Matthew 7: 21: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Again, Luke 6: 46, 47 (Christ, too, found the people who thought that faith alone would save them), they regarded him as the Lord, and he said to them: "Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" Again, John 7: 17, we read, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." And John 13: 17, says, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." And I could read you a hundred passages and more, that fling the false statement into the face of modern "Churchianity," when they teach you that "doing is a deadly thing," that "doing will end in death." And that faith alone is a "good and wholesome doctrine, and very full of comfort."

FAITH DEAD WITHOUT WORKS.

But let me just for a moment examine that thought of faith alone, for my text says, "Can faith save him?" Now, let us hear the apostle answer. Second chapter Saint James' epistle, seventeenth verse: "Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone." Now, just note that carefully. The Methodist Discipline and the Church of England (article 11) says that faith alone is a "good and wholesome doctrine, and very full of comfort"; but the Bible says faith alone is like a decomposing corpse, for as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also. The body without the spirit is a corpse. Isn't that very full of comfort! And you know that that corpse in process of decomposition will get worse and worse, till it spreads not only an indescribable stench, but spreads disease also. And as a dead body literally will spread disease among a community, so this doctrine of faith without works will spread a moral pestilence to the soul; and as Wesley says, is "That grand pest of Christianity."

I now draw your attention to the 1st Corinthian letter, chapter 13. You may read at leisure the whole chapter with great profit. It is a sermon by Saint Paul on charity. I just glean a few thoughts from it, as follows: "And though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing." Oh, you say, that does not mean a saving faith. Bless your heart, my friend, if you have all faith, how much more faith can you have than all of it? Yet the writer here says that though you may have all faith, and yet lack the essential something else, it will profit you nothing. How can it save you then? In the closing verses of this chapter he says: "And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity." Why, if faith alone will save you, why didn't he say, the greatest of these is faith?—but he didn't.

THE REFORMER'S MISTAKE.

Now, I do not wish to speak disparagingly of faith, for I believe with the Bible that without faith it is impossible to please God; that faith is the great motive power of every intelligent action; and that faith is the first principle of the Christian doctrine. But that faith alone will save you, I believe to be a palpable misconception of Christ's teaching, as found in the New Testament. I believe that some of our reformers—good men as they were in many respects—went to the extreme on the question of works. While Romanism was placing its whole trust for salvation on indulgence and penance and such things as that, which was wrong and contrary to the Book; these men went to the extreme in the other direction, when they began to teach and to show that works had nothing to do with our salvation. Here is their strongest point; for it is not fair to give the evidence on the one side and omit the evidence on the other. I am going to read you the entire verse. Second chapter of Galatians, 16th verse: "Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law: for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified."

WHAT IS THE FAITH?

Now, there are two points named there; first, something is referred to as the faith of Jesus Christ. I can marshal forty texts to prove that the faith of Jesus Christ is the gospel God sent Christ to preach; which Paul, this very same writer, declares to be the "power of God unto salvation" (Romans 1:16). That it is unfair to say that the faith of Jesus Christ is wrapped up in one principle called belief; but that the faith is the gospel economy. Hence Jude could say, "Contend for the faith once delivered to the saints"; or, as we have it in Acts 13:8, where Elymas the sorcerer sought to turn away the deputy from the faith; that is, the gospel, from the church, the true church. Or, as we have it in Romans 1:5, "For obedience to the faith among all nations." That is, to the gospel among all nations. Again, in Paul's first epistle to Timothy, 4:1: "Some shall depart from the faith." That is, from the gospel of Christ. The doctrine that Christ taught, the law and the spirit of Christ, as revealed in the gospel, this is called the faith—not an abstract principle called faith.

THE MOSAIC LAW IMPERFECT.

Now, what is it Paul is referring to here as the "works of the law"? Mark you, he is not denouncing the works of the gospel, that God foreordained that we should observe and walk in; but he is denouncing those who refused to obey the faith of Jesus Christ as contained in the gospel ordinances, placing their dependence upon the works of the law—that is, the Mosaic law. That is to say, they were putting their dependence for salvation in such things as circumcision, the blood of bulls and of goats, the ashes of a red heifer, and all those ceremonies and laws of the Mosaic economy. Paul was trying to urge upon them the thought that that law was imperfect as a means of salvation, "that comers thereunto could not be made perfect." And at the same time, he was giving them a splendid introduction to the perfect and undefiled law of the Lord, which David, in the nineteenth psalm, speaks of when he says, "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul."

GRACE FOR THE OBEDIENT.

Now, we have so much for that strong passage; but here is one that they say is stronger. It is found in Ephesians, second chapter, eighth and ninth verses, which I will read in full: "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast." "Oh," I hear one man say, "I am sorry you read that verse, for it says there we are not saved by works, we are saved by grace." Let us look at it. What is the meaning of the word "grace"? "Oh," says one, "it means favor." Yes, that is so. Then by the grace of God, or favor of God, we are going to be saved? Yes: Supposing, for instance, that you wanted a favor from me, how would you be most likely to obtain it? Why, by just doing what I told you to do. For you to constantly refuse to submit to the conditions that I imposed upon you, and yet for you to come up with a lot of what the world sometimes calls "taffy" or "soft soap," and say, "You are the lily-of-the-valley, you are the one altogether lovely, you are the chief among ten thousand, I love you, believe in you." Would that satisfy me, if you continued to disobey me; if you continued to disregard my wishes? Why, I should be likely to say what Jesus said, "Why do you call me Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I say?" "If you love me, keep my commandments." "For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments." And it is not the hearer but the doer of the word that shall enter into the kingdom of heaven. Can you see the point? that if you are to be saved by grace, you can only obtain that grace or favor by complying with the conditions God has laid down. And what are those conditions? Briefly, they are this: You must obey the ordinances of the gospel, the doctrine of Christ. For Paul wrote to Timothy saying: "Take heed unto thyself and unto the doctrine, for by so doing thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee." And again he wrote in the first chapter of Romans, "The gospel is the power of God unto salvation."

WORKS OF MAN ARE VAIN.

Hence, to be saved by grace means that by the favor of God, through obedience to his gospel, you may be saved; but "not of works, lest any man should boast." True, not the works of a man lest that man should boast about some invention he had discovered by which you were going to be saved; for God is a jealous God, and no works of man can be placed before the works of God. Let me show you what that means. Supposing, now, I am a Catholic priest. I build a little place up here, and you sit on one side of it and I on the other, and you whisper to me all that you have done and all you would like to do, and all that you are going to do, and by this confession that you make to me I dole out your pardon. I made this confessional box; that is the work of a man, and God had nothing to do with it. If I saw great good was being accomplished by my little house here in the corner of the church or elsewhere, could I not lie back in my chair and boast of all that I was doing? Do you see? "Not of works, lest any man should boast."

Now, let us look on the other side. Suppose I am a splendid hypnotist or mesmerist, or modern Protestant revivalist (it is all the same thing!), and I have invented a penitent form, and I tell you stories about fire and brimstone and hell, and picture your dead mother in heaven looking over the battlements and watching for your approach. By all these stories I make you sniffle and cry, and you come up to this penitent form, and I say to you, "Do you feel the power?" and you say, "Amen, I feel it; I have got the glory in my soul; I have just found it; I am saved!" Again, I can lay back and say, it was I that fixed up that penitent form idea,—for it is unknown in the Bible. That is the work of man, just as the confessional box on the other side is the work of man. The apostle condemns the work that man may do, lest any should boast; but does it say that you are not to do the works of God?

STUDY AND WEIGH THE CONTEXT.

Now, let us read the next verse. "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." (Ephesians 2:10.) Here you have it clearly stated that you are not saved by the works of man—the penitent form or the confessional box; but that you must comply with the conditions, and work the works of righteousness that God has foreordained that you should walk in. So much for the works. The great trouble in this theory, as with many others, is that people pick out one isolated passage and begin to make a creed from it. For instance, we read in Romans 8:24, "For we are saved by hope." Does that prove that we must not have any faith, nor any repentance, nor any baptism—just saved by hope? No! We read in Romans 10:9, "That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." Now, says one, you are just saved by belief. Why, there are millions that believe in Jesus, and that God hath raised from the dead, and yet they commit all kinds of crime and are very sinful men, and do not make any claim to be Christians at all; though they may have been taught and raised to believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. To take that as an unsupported text, and say that anybody who just says that Jesus is the Christ, put him down as another soul on the way to glory—is not true scripture. That is where the revivalists get most of their converts—often the same people over and over again, as each mission comes and goes.

SALVATION INCLUDES MANY ELEMENTS.

Titus 3:5, "According to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration." There, says one, I am not saved by hope, I am saved by mercy. And another says, I am not saved by mercy, I am saved by regeneration. 1 Peter 3:20 and 21, "Eight souls were saved by water. The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us." "That," says somebody else, "is what saves us. I am going to have a plunge; I don't have to have any faith or repentance, I don't have to depend upon God's mercy, I am saved by baptism." Now, that would be nonsense, wouldn't it? To illustrate this: Supposing I have a farm here. I am showing you round the land and the buildings, and I say that land produces me fifty bushels of wheat to the acre. See that plow? that plow produces me fifty bushels of wheat to the acre. That harrow produces me fifty bushels of wheat to the acre. That sun produces me fifty bushels of wheat to the acre. The rain produces me fifty bushels of wheat to the acre. Suppose it was all rain and no sun, should I have had fifty bushels of wheat to the acre? Or suppose that it was all plow and no land, should I have been able to produce fifty bushels of wheat to the acre. Suppose, further, I had the land, but the sun did not shine, and the rain did not come, and I had no plow or harrow, should I have secured fifty bushels of wheat to the acre? Of course not! for it takes all these to produce the fifty bushels of wheat to the acre. So my brethren, it takes hope, and faith, and charity, and mercy, and grace, and baptism of water and of the Spirit, and all the different parts of the gospel, known as the perfect law of liberty, to produce the conversion of the sinner, and to make him a saint. The salvation of a single soul includes all these essentials. And the man that refuses baptism, refuses hope, refuses mercy, and just depends on faith is not really following the commandments of his God with regard to salvation.

REWARD FOR THE DOERS.

But, some one says, it is written, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." There is no baptism there, Bishop Evans, it is just believe. Stop, my friend, let me call your attention to the fact that while the word baptism is not there, neither is the word repentance to be found there; and by the same logic that you use when you say you can be saved without baptism, because baptism is not mentioned in the text, you could prove, also, that you could be saved without repentance, because repentance is not mentioned in the text. Let me here say to you again, dear friends, that the great curse is, we build on one text to the exclusion of all others; we place our whole superstructure upon one principle called faith—good in its place and essential to our salvation—and lose sight of all the other elements. If we do this, and exclude all the other principles of the gospel—repentance, and baptism, and all the rest—we can not be saved; for Jesus Christ said, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God" (John 3:5); or, in other words, "If thou wouldst enter into life, keep the commandments."

The whole Bible supports the doctrine of works as being necessary to salvation. Just a thought on that. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap" (Galatians 6:7). What about Luther? What about Hill? who both tell you that you can commit fornication and murder and adultery, and that your faith will save you? Again, Ecclesiastes 12:14, we read, "For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil." Again, we are told in Revelation 22:12, "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be."

INJURIOUS TO THE COUNTRY'S MORALS.

Now, with these thoughts before you, for I must hasten on, I draw your attention to this question: If it is a fact that man is going to be judged according to the deeds done in his body; if he is going to be rewarded according to his work; if he is going to be saved by obedience to the commandments and works that God has foreordained that he should walk in; if he can only be saved through obedience to the gospel; if salvation depends upon the development of his character along gospel lines; then, how can he step from the gallows into heaven? How can he go from his deathbed through the pearly gates, after he has served the Devil all his life? If he is a criminal almost to his last breath, what works has he performed that will entitle him to salvation? Let me illustrate this. Doctor Thomas, of Chicago, a leading minister, listened to Doctor Brown make remarks over a murdered woman. A young girl had married a man. He became jealous of her and shot her down in a moment of passion; and, according to the preacher, she went to hell, for she had never been converted. Without a moment's warning she went to hell. It so happened that the court was in session at this time, and this man, her murderer, was brought up and in a very short time afterwards he was found guilty and sentenced to be hanged; and the same Doctor Brown, in the presence of Doctor Thomas, preached a funeral sermon for him, and he preached him into heaven. The murdered girl went to hell without a moment's warning; the man, with her blood upon his hands and heart, turned round and walked into heaven by an instantaneous conversion. And Doctor Thomas declared that such teaching was hurting the morals of the country, and was putting a premium on crime. The Methodist Church took Doctor Thomas to task for this, and sought to have him tried for heresy because he refused to believe this hellish doctrine. I listened to Doctor Thomas myself in Chicago Theater, and I may say to you to-night that Doctor Thomas learned much of his common sense sermons from Latter Day Saintism.

BLACK PAINTED WHITE.

Another case. Over here a man by the name of Day took his wife to see the wonders of Niagara Falls, and as they sat upon the brink, she watched that wondrous display of beauty; she gazed upon the wild, white-crested foam dashing down its leap of one hundred feet to the river beneath—the spray rising heavenward, like so much incense to its God. She gazed and wondered, filled with the glory of that wonderful exhibition of divine potentiality, when, as she gazed, the husband got behind and pushed her over. And when she was found, almost every bone in her body was broken; and her stomach contained grass in it, showing that the poor soul had tried to sustain life by eating grass before she died. Day, in a little while, after lying a few months, and swearing he did not commit the deed, was found guilty. The preacher met him and he claimed to be converted, and it is said that the choir sang as he dropped from the gallows rope, "Safe in the arms of Jesus, Safe on his gentle breast."

Another case. A young man in California by the name of Durant, a professing Christian, a church boy. A girl, Minnie Williams, wanted to borrow a book that was in the church library. She met Durant; he insulted her in the sacred temple of his God. She struggled for her honor. Weeks afterwards her decomposing body was found in the belfry of the church, with some of her linen crammed down her throat. The night of that crime, that boy attended a religious service. The evidence showed he sold her rings at the pawn shop. Two or three days afterwards, Blanche Lamont, another beautiful girl belonging to the church, was enticed under some pretext to enter the sacred precincts within, and her body was found, murdered by that wretch. It is said that the night he murdered Blanche Lamont, without even washing his hands, he went to a religious service. All that money could do was done to try to save that man's neck, but the supreme court decided against him. And so great was the contempt and indignation of the general public in that district for him, that they would not allow his dead body to be buried in a respectable cemetery; and I am told that they reduced it to ashes and flung it into the lake. But just before they put a necktie about his throat he changed his religion—got a new one, and went home to glory!

THE HOPELESSNESS OF CRIME.

Brethren, I refuse to believe that a man, with his hands still stained with the blood of his victim can step aside and play on a harp of a thousand strings in heaven. I refuse to believe that a man can change his black cap of criminality for a golden crown. I refuse to believe that the hands now tied behind his back, in a moment can be fingering a harp in the presence of the angels. I refuse to believe that those feet now pinioned as the result of crime, the next moment can be walking through the streets of the New Jerusalem. In a word, I refuse to believe that when the justice of earth is passed upon a man, and has said that he is unsafe and unfit even to live within the stone walls of an earthly penitentiary, that that character is worthy to dwell in the presence of God, and immediately become an associate with the angels. I don't believe it!

THE TRIUMPH OF CHARACTER.

Now you may come to me and say, what about the "eleventh hour" in the Bible? What about the thief on the cross? My only reply to that is this: I have shown to you the doctrine that faith alone is not a "good and wholesome doctrine," that it is not "very full of comfort"; but that it resembles a putrefying corpse that will spread pestilence—physical disease on the one hand, spiritual disease on the other hand. I have, moreover, shown you that man is to be rewarded according to his work; that it is character and not reputation that counts before God. I have shown you that a man must obey the gospel in order to be saved and that the man pinioned on the gallows can not do that; therefore, your deathbed repentance and your gallows conversion is unsupported in the Bible.

Next Sunday I hope to take up the question: Was the thief on the cross a baptized believer? or was he just suddenly converted on the cross? If I live to the following Sunday evening, I will take up your "eleventh hour" question, as referred to in the Bible, and show you that it has no reference to deathbed repentance. I thank you.

Bishop Evans will preach to-night, on the subject: Was the thief on the cross a baptized believer?

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

MEN AND RELIGION FORWARD MOVEMENT.

Men and Religion Forward movement is the latest among the churches. It has been marked thus far by a number of banquets in certain cities at which speeches have been made and an organization started toward a general uplift movement in which sects and creeds are to have a common share and are not to be considered. A "Banquet" religion it has been called. It looks to political purity as well as religious unity. An exchange says:

Movements toward harmonizing religious differences are not new to our time, nor to our town. But the launching of such a movement at a hotel banquet is a novelty. Speeches took the place of sermons, there were toasts instead of prayers, and such music as sounded forth was not that of psalm singing.

It is evident that we are to have a distinct, up-to-date, new movement. And it is a rational movement. Men are much more likely to agree at a banquet than at any church service. Where there is no altar nor priest, there is neither dogma nor heresy.

RISKS HERESY TRIAL.

The Rev. R. S. McArthur, Calvary Baptist Church, New York, says, "The story of Adam and Eve is assuredly untrue in my mind. No snake ever tempted the mother of the human race to sin. It was a seraph who entered the garden and did the wicked thing." Another story which he says quite sure was invented by man is that of the Israelites crossing the Red Sea, which he says could not have been anything other than an accident caused by the tide and the wind. The reverend is in line for a heresy trial.

COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE METHODISTS.

A supreme court is planned for the Methodists. It will be known as the Final Court of Appeals. Its membership will be fifteen, three bishops, and six each of ministers and laymen. Members are to be chosen by the General Conference, the bishops to serve four years, the others four and eight years.

Coordinate with this new highest court will be others for members, local preachers, and ministers. Methodists find the General Conference, meeting every four years, to be both too large and too much burdened with other work, to sit as a court. They reason, besides, that the same body that makes the laws ought not to construe them, so the new and highest court will have as its chief function the interpretation of Methodist enactments.

A commission has just made a report on this matter of courts, and it is considered certain that its report will be approved and the courts established by the next General Conference, meeting in May, 1912. Presbyterians recently perfected their judicial system. So did the Episcopalians. Other large Protestant bodies are either doing so or are studying the question.—Exchange.

HENRY MAXIM ON ARBITRATION.

Henry Maxim, famous inventor, says that arbitration must inevitably be a failure. This was said at the annual dinner of the Economic Club of New York recently.

"Disarmament is a beautiful dream," said Mr. Maxim, "but it does seem to me to be impolitic and impracticable. The coming International Tribunal will need all its guns to enforce its mandates. . . .

"The nations of the earth will not unite, and can not unite, for any purpose not prompted by individual self-interest," said Mr. Maxim, as the first text of his speech. . . .

"It would be impracticable for the carnivora and the herbivora to make an arbitration pact to settle their differences, for the one is constituted to prey upon the other, and its very existence depends upon the sacrifice of the other." Like the attitude of the carnivora to the herbivora, he said, is that of the big nation to the small and of the aggressive Occidental to the peace-loving Oriental.

"Will arbitration be able to see that all, even the meanest, get equal rights to the enjoyment of property, life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness?" he asked. "If not, it is destined to fail, and wars will still come.

"There are half a billion pairs of eyes in China looking admiringly toward Japan. There are in China, and over the vast neighboring areas, uncounted myriads needing but a leader and arms and training to hurl themselves upon western civilization and smite us hip and thigh as their ancestors smote ours in years ago. These people are now awakening. They are training. They are arming. The great yellow storm cloud is slowly rising along the whole eastern sky, and it is only a question of time when the storm will burst upon the Occident with unprecedented fury.

"Possibly we may be able to control it by arbitration, but this can be done only by such arbitration as shall render equal justice and a justice made visible to the eyes of those uncomprehending millions, who are smarting under the sting of humiliation, heaped upon them through the centuries."

Mr. Maxim warned the diners that with international politics will come international graft. . . .

"The only rejuvenator of nations has been the sword," said Mr. Maxim, unwilling to believe that war is wholly bad, anyway. "War alone has swept away the unfit with their unfit laws, and has given place to new and fitter blood and fitter laws. Has the world so far progressed that wars are no longer needed to correct effeminacy and degeneracy, to sweep away the old and corrupt and establish new and healthier conditions? . . .

"Just as the paper dollar presupposes gold on deposit, so does law presuppose an adequate power behind it to enforce it; otherwise it has no influence and no meaning. At the coming Hague Tribunal who will be the most eloquent orators? They will be the deep-throated guns on the battleships and in forts, and the men and resources behind the guns of the banded nations."—New York World.

MRS. EDDY'S STILL LIVES.

Mrs. Augusta E. Stetson, former leader of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, of New York, says Mrs. Eddy still lives, and adds that the very stones would cry out if she did not aver her immortality and her teachings. She criticises the directors of the Mother Church in erecting a monument to Mrs. Eddy, claiming such an act is an admission of their belief in her death. "Mary Baker Eddy caught the lost chord of Christ, swept her hand over human heartstrings, and has attuned to the anthem of eternal life all who are ready to accept and to endeavor to demonstrate her teachings."

DEITY ON THE STAGE.

Almost the latest in legislation is an act passed by the New York legislature, which aims to compel recognition in the theater of the convictions and prejudices of religious persons. It prohibits the performance of plays in which there shall be a living character representing the deity. A clipping sent us from the New York Times comments as follows:

The prohibition would have applied lately to no acted play of evil intent or large popularity. Maeterlinck's Sister Beatrice represents the Virgin Mary assuming the garb and offices of a peccant nun and performing her duties for a term of years to save the nun's soul from damnation. In his Marie Madeleine the voice of the founder of Christianity is briefly heard. In La Samaritaine, by Rostand, Jesus of Nazareth is both seen and heard. Some church people objected to the performances of the last named play. It was given twice in this city, in French, and prohibited in some other cities. Against the two Maeterlinck plays there was no conspicuous protest.

It is perfectly true that the theater can exist and prosper without infringing on the Bible or the legends and beliefs associated with the Christian church, or any other church. Mr. Black's bill, which has passed both houses, would prohibit the performance of the Prologue in Heaven of Goethe's Faust, but doubtless the American theater can survive without that. Nevertheless, this kind of legislation is trivial and uncalled for. There is no noticeable disposition on the part of theater managers to put the deity on the stage. The religious play of the Maeterlinck and Rostand type is not popular. Two of the three plays which have inspired this needless bill are beautiful and uplifting works, which were performed in a reverent spirit and so received by a few audiences. The public is the best judge of the plays it wants. Public opinion will decide all such questions as this without legal interference. The governor would do well to withhold his signature from this bill.—New York Times.

ECHO OF GRANT HERESY TRIAL.

An elder in the Presbyterian Church, signing himself Robert S. Grant, writes a letter to the New York Globe in which he takes up the conviction of Doctor Grant for heresy. Among other things he says:

Doctor Grant's views on Presbyterian Church doctrine, miracles, etc., are exactly the same as those of thousands of ministers and certainly the same as those of hundreds of thousands of Presbyterian Church members. As to the mysterious birth of Christ, well, that fairy story never took with thinking men at any time, and certainly does not take with thinking men to-day, yet the church to-day is doing exactly as it (or she) did in Erasmus's day—fighting tooth and nail to keep up the old ignorance and superstition.

Doctor Grant differs from the majority of ministers in that he has the courage of his convictions. He has done as Christ did when the chief priests accused him of not preaching according to the law and the prophets and laid the book before him. Christ closed the book and said, "The law and the prophets to me is love God and man," and practically told them that he preached from the heart, the feelings and the voice of conscience. If we had more ministers like Doctor Grant the majority of churches would not be so nearly empty on Sunday as they generally are now. The church—what has the church-organized religion done for the world? It has caused the wasting of billions in money and, to say the least, the sacrifice of millions of human lives through religious wars (think of it!) in the endeavor to suppress thought, and they are keeping up the war, but in a different way, to-day, trying still to suppress thought by force—how is only too well known. It has been the thinking men outside of the church in all times who have instituted and carried out reforms of every kind, especially along the lines of education. Why, in all lands except perhaps Ireland, have the clergy been divorced from the schools? Answer that and you have something to think about, and anything that will make men think is good.

Doctor Grant is a broadminded, fearless servant of Christ, who teaches human, absolute religion as Christ taught; the religion that has always been in the heart of man; the only religion; all other religions are transient. Theodore Parker said when he was told that the church was dying, "That child of many fathers can not die too soon." He said also organized religions fail and pass away, but God's word from the heart of man never.

I am an elder in the Presbyterian Church and know that when the church cuts out all frills and fairy stories and makes its business that of actually teaching love and service to man and practising as she preaches, then and not till then will she be doing as the lowly Nazarene did.

THE WISDOM OF MEN.

George Bernard Shaw, the prominent Englishman, is reported as having said that Christ was a failure.

Mention of God has gone out of fashion. You never hear about God in Parliament, and only occasionally in the law courts. People are governed by a system of idolatry. Clergymen, judges, and kings are all idols, who generally have to be given sufficient money to dress better and live better than other people.

Kings can not impose upon me. I know that the king is a man, but hardly anybody else in England seems to know it.

When Charles Darwin came along with his theory of natural selection, people jumped at it and kicked God out of the window.

A MOST NATURAL PROCESS.

According to the French scientific review Cosmos two French biologists have produced butterflies without heads. They carefully removed the heads of a number of larvæ and most of them survived the operation, continuing to develop into the pupa stage, but only some few underwent the last change and emerged as normal butterflies—minus the head. We have at last discovered the process by which churches have been organized without Christ as a head. He was at first "carefully" removed and since then they have quite naturally sprung up without him.

"Every wrongdoer has a ready excuse. Therefore it is better to refrain from excusing ourselves, even with good reason. To forego excuses is an element of strength. It is nobler and wiser to abide by the consequences of mistakes without a whimper, and to learn their lesson to the full."

All On Account of the Baby.

An ache in the back and an ache in the arms,
All on account of the baby;
A fear and a fright and a thousand alarms,
All on account of the baby;
And bottles and rattles and whistles and rings,
From cellar to attic, a clutter of things,
From morning to night and to morning again,
More fuss and more fume than an army of men.
And a head that is stupid for lack of its sleep,
And a heart where a flood of anxieties leap—
All on account of the baby.

A joy in the heart and a light in the eyes,
All on account of the baby;
A growing content and a growing surprise,
All on account of the baby;
And patience that conquers a myriad frets,
And a sunshiny song that another begets,
And pureness of soul as a baby is pure,
And sureness of faith as the children are sure,
And a glory of love between husband and wife,
And a saner and happier outlook on life—
All on account of the baby.—Sel.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Dear Sister Walker: I have been reading Sr. Clara Sheffer's earnest appeal for some of the sisters with large families and small accommodations to write of their experiences, and how to succeed in training children under such circumstances.

It is not because I feel adequate to the task of enlightening another upon these vital questions that I undertake to write a few thoughts; on the other hand, being in the school of experience myself, I feel my insufficiency.

Where parents have to "work and plan in almost every way to get a livelihood," as Sister Sheffer says, and seven children with father and mother have to be accommodated in three rooms, I can appreciate the fact that one's ingenuity must be taxed to the utmost. Yet many families have been successfully raised under just such circumstances. I learned to-day of a lady who was left a widow with several children. She set up a small store in her front room, a notion store. She kept two cows and sold milk, and took in washings. Her boys, through her careful training, became very reliable, dependable boys, and grew up to be an honor to her. We know of another family of seven children, who, part of the time lived in a house of three rooms. The mother was not a strong woman, but did dressmaking, and the children carried on the housework and grew up to be highly respected citizens.

Obedience seems to me to be the foundation for the success desired. It is the first step toward making children happiest, the household peaceful, and the future days of parents days of tranquility. Not the forced obedience, but obedience from the heart. The acts we command or forbid should be few at first, but inexorable. When sometimes unpleasant requests have to be made, the mood of the child should be considered, and there should be increasing care, lest authority be compromised or sympathy ruptured.

Every Latter Day Saint mother desires her children to grow in spirituality when they have arrived at an age of understanding. I know of no better way to have a spiritual atmosphere in the home than by regular, family devotions. The influence for good that emanates from the circle around the family altar is incalculable, and the recollection, when boys have become men, is one that touches the most responsive chord in the human breast.

To have a calm and patient spirit is the most priceless gift a mother can possess. When we think of the unnecessary energy we are expending by our impatience, and how little we help matters by losing control of temper or tongue, is it worth while that we are ever anything else but patient?

I know what it is to get five children ready for Sunday school, plainly but neatly dressed. I have known what it is to have buttons sit up all Saturday night so they would be weak enough to fall off on Sunday morning; to have some unthought of buckle on the boys' trousers to loosen from its moorings just when you are ready to start; to discover a hole in some one's stocking that in some mysterious manner crept there since they were folded away. To be calm and patient in all these little things is a test of the love of God in our hearts, for if we are patient in these it shows that we love God more than we do the things that gratify us.

We must, I believe, recognize the fact that even very small children have certain rights. Their faculties of sight, feeling, smell, etc., are given them for use; and when they hover around your table when you are kneading the bread, instead of saying, "Now don't touch the dough," give them a piece of dough to manipulate just as they want to. It will be such a delight to them to do just like mother does. Besides you have relieved yourself of the anxiety of fearing they will put their hands on the dough, and again, you have avoided the opportunity for the beginning of the teasing habit which so often occurs in just such ways as this.

One way a mother may familiarize her children with the chief events of our country is to take a piece of cardboard and write large figures upon it, say, 1492, hang it upon the wall, and then ask if anyone can tell what happened in 1492. Those who have gone to school will delight in telling the younger ones the story. Then when they have become familiar with that event, take 1620, and have them learn the history of the landing of the Pilgrims. Then the event of 1830. Then the names of the presidents of the United States, etc.

For all that we would have our children become, the price is "eternal diligence." Situated in a palace or a cottage, the same watchful care and guidance is necessary, rich and poor alike must pay the price. And I believe we will find it worth while for our own peace of mind, if in that great day when the Master shall say, "Where are those I gavest thee?" we will be able to say, "Here, Lord, are these thou gavest me, and none of them are lost."

LOUISE WINTERS.

KERNVILLE, CALIFORNIA, June 6, 1911.

Dear Sisters: I have just received the last HERALD and read what is of most interest to me, the Mothers' Home Column, and I wish to let you know how I manage my four babies, and to ask advice. My oldest boy is five years and eleven months, and my second boy is just thirteen months younger. My little girl is three years three months, and my baby is two years old. The two oldest are very nice boys, but the other two are different. My little girl is very disobedient, and I do not know how to teach her to be different. If I talk to the boys they mind, and I never have to strike either, and seldom need scold. My little girl needs, or I think she needs many whippings, but dislike the thought or feeling of remorse I witness after whipping her. I make her sit in a corner, but she is just as contented there as anywhere, in fact she spends a great deal of her time there without being compelled to. If I send her to bed, she either gets the boys to give her a book or she lets the kitten in with her and they have a big romp.

I am cooking for nine men now and I find it quite a trial to keep from striking her or baby, and not being a member of what is called "The Old School" I think there is another way. Sister Simpson's paper on "Love, patience and firmness," is fine. I expect to raise a large family and am anxious to see a reply to Sister Sheffer.

My children are not meddlesome. I have never found it necessary to punish any of them for touching or asking for anything belonging to another. My baby is two and at the "meddlesome age," but I can take him to a neighbor's and trust him to leave everything alone unless he is told to take it to play with, then I think it is his right. The two oldest gather up the dishes for me after each meal except supper, when they must fill the wood box and bring the chips to cook breakfast. All are very willing and but for crossness on baby's part, and disobedience on Lila's part, I consider them model children. Pray for me that I may be able to attend the reunion this coming fall as it has been seven years since I heard the gospel.

Wishing for the advancement of the work, I am,
SR. MAUD TROSPER.

Request for Prayers.

Will you oblige me by printing the notice in the HERALD for a fast day, say the first Sunday in July, 1911, in behalf of my poor daughter? I should like that the church everywhere would fast and pray for her. She has fits and has suffered for four years and we have tried everything we have heard of. She is the youngest daughter of Bro. and Sr. Joseph Lane. Her father died on the first day of June, 1911. I am her mother, Mrs. Ellen Lane, Lamon, Iowa. She will be administered to at the afternoon meeting of that day.

Yours in bonds,

MRS. ELLEN LANE.

Joy of life seems to me to arise from a sense of being where one belongs, as I feel right here; of being foursquare with the lives we have chosen. All the discontented people I know are trying sedulously to be something they are not, to do something they can not do. In the advertisements of the country papers I find men learned or rich—overnight—by inspiring good farmers and carpenters to be poor doctors and lawyers. It is curious, is it not, with what skill we will adapt our sandy land to potatoes and grow our natures. We try to grow poetry where plumbing would thrive grandly, not knowing that plumbing is as important and honorable and necessary to this earth as poetry.—David Grayson, in Adventures in Friendship.

Letter Department

HOOD RIVER, OREGON, June 11, 1911.

Editors Herald: My mother lives in Pomona, Missouri. She lived there nineteen years ago and said that there was a Saints' church there then and in good standing. She moved back there again this last year and finds that they still have the church, but no elder. She says there are some of the Saints there now that were there when she lived there before and they would like to have an elder come and hold meetings as they have not had one there for two years.

My mother lives in town, and will make an elder comfortable until the saints come in town for him. I wish to ask you to do whatever you think best about this. I thought perhaps you could write an article and publish it, which would help some one to volunteer to go down there.

I am a Latter Day Saint myself; have belonged to the church two years. Hoping that you can do something for these people, I am thanking you in advance.

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. MYRTLE MORRIS.

CASTLEBERRY, NEW MEXICO, June 15, 1911.

Editors Herald: On the 6th inst. I bade farewell to loved ones and took train for Tucumcari, New Mexico, met Bro. T. J. Sheppard at the train the next morning, and after a light breakfast took a drive of some thirty-five miles, where Brother Sheppard had a ten day's meeting announced. We reached there in the evening and met a fair congregation at the school-house. The entire time was profitably spent, and while we did not trouble the water, we left a number there who are not far from the kingdom, and we expect to visit Jordan again ere long and tell the good people a little more about the precious angel's message.

We returned to this place yesterday and will occupy here over Sunday. Next week we have an appointment at Tolar, and trust to be able to get the truth before the people there. We should be glad to hear from anyone living in New Mexico or Arizona, who would like to have preaching in their respective localities, and we will be glad to make the necessary arrangements.

Mail sent to me at Castleberry, New Mexico, care of T. J. Sheppard, will be sure to reach me. I hope we will have the cooperation of all in the good work.

Hastily,
J. E. VANDERWOOD.

COLLEGE STATION, TEXAS, June 8, 1911.

Dear Editor: I do enjoy the good letters and sermons so much. I don't see how anyone can well do without the church papers, they are so much help to one that has no chance to hear the gospel preached. Of course the Lord will reveal many things to this people through and by his Holy Spirit. It is such a great help to one just to read the good letters and to know what is being done throughout this land and country.

I was very sorry to notice in the church papers just after General Conference, how few there were appointed to Texas. We need more laborers in this great State. There are people in many places that are starving spiritually for the want of hearing the true gospel preached. I feel that this year will prove to be the banner year for the gospel work.

I will make this letter as short as I can, but I will have to tell how the good Lord has blessed me and my family. I have lived here at College Station for a number of years. I had never heard of the Latter Day Saints until during the year 1908. This gospel was brought to this place by Bro. J. D. Wiltfong, of Independence, Missouri. He was at that time employed by the college as instructor in blacksmith work, "God bless his old soul." The last time I heard from him, he was working for the Government, employed as instructor in blacksmith work at the Haskell Institute at Lawrence, Kansas.

I was baptized by him on March 16, 1909. The following year God say fit to call me to the office of priest, so on March 19, 1910, I was ordained under the hands of E. W. Nunley, who is elder at the Cookes Point Branch. I have had very little chance to get out and work for the Master, but I feel like I will be able to do more this year. He has done so much for me and I have done so little for him. Let us all try this year to do all we can for the upbuilding of his kingdom.

When I made up my mind to be baptized, I told my wife that I could not put it off any longer. I told her that I would love to see her with me in the same faith, but I did not want her to come in just because I did. I wanted her to read God's word and satisfy herself. So not long ago she acknowledged that she was ready for baptism, and on the 28th of last month I had the pleasure of seeing her baptized, also our three children blessed. Pray for us, that we may hold out faithful unto the end. I want the prayers of all the Saints that I may be healed, as I am in very bad health, hardly able to be up part of the time.

Yours in gospel bonds,
G. L. SPILLER.

FRESNO, CALIFORNIA, June 15, 1911.

Dear Herald: I have just closed a little meeting in which I was the only worker. I came to Dinuba to spend a few days with a nephew of mine and got an opening for preaching, and although I was only able to sit up part of the time, I preached nine nights in succession and had a good crowd every night there. Made many friends.

I was not able to stand up, but I sat in a chair and talked to them. I talked one hour and twenty minutes each night, and the Lord blessed me with a clearness of thought that put me in mind of the days ago. I rather think I was over zealous, for at the close of my effort I was quite used up; but it seemed I could not neglect such an opportunity. I felt sometimes that if I should hold my peace the very stones would cry out. I left the good people of the place with many good wishes for my comfort and many invitations to come again.

J. C. CLAPP.

WICHITA, KANSAS, June 11, 1911.

Editor Herald: As I promised to write and give you a short report from Wichita, also that the Saints in the surrounding country may know that we have a branch here, and to extend an invitation to all passing through here, both layman and elder, I am writing this letter. We have a large field, and I believe a good one to work in. Bro. J. F. Curtis came May 18, and after looking the land over, he commenced to hold meeting on the street, assisted by a few of the Saints. Brother Curtis preached to quite a number every night, with good interest and seemingly good liberty. After the first night or two, here and there on the street, he would be hailed while going down to the place of meeting with, "You are the man that is preaching on the street; well, I enjoyed your talk. I never heard anything as good in my life before." Others would say, "Where is that fat man who was here last summer?" That was Bro. F. C. Keck, and they spoke very highly of him; so you see the seed is sown and you can not tell what fruit it will bear until the books are opened, for God giveth the increase.

On Tuesday, May 30, fifteen Saints, with a few visitors, gathered at the little church house for the purpose of organizing the members into a branch. After a season of prayer and testimony, Brother Curtis proceeded in the organization. One was called to the office of elder. Bro. H. H. Oviatt, who was a deacon, was called to the office of priest, and Bro. H. L. McDivitt was called to the office of deacon. The above were ordained and sustained by the members as branch officers. Bro. Sam Spease, who holds the office of teacher, was elected as teacher of the branch. Five children were also blessed by Apostle Curtis before the close of the meeting. Sister Annetta Reid was elected secretary, and her sister, Dollie Reid, organist. Brother Curtis stayed one more day and then left for Fort Scott, Kansas, June 1.

I believe the Saints are putting forth more of an effort now than in the past, and we hope and pray that the Lord will be with us, that many may be added to our number, and to God be all the praise.

In gospel bonds,

News From Missions

Western Nebraska.

"God moves in a mysterious way, his wonders to perform. He plants his footsteps on the sea, and rides upon the storm." Here we are again, once more traveling over the sand hills of western Nebraska. One month ago we had no thought of being permitted to meet with the Saints and friends of this mission. Here is where we labored for three years, traveling in the interest of this great latter day work, and to once more meet and shake hands with those of like precious faith, and to see the development, only causes our hearts to rejoice.

When we left this mission five years ago, the Saints here of South Tyron had only a little sod schoolhouse to meet in; now, with a nice little frame church of their own, they can meet whenever they feel so to do. As they have no branch organization, they meet once a week for prayer meeting and have a nice Sunday school, with a membership of thirty or thirty-five, and also a Religio, presided over by Bro. R. L. Coleman. Although the Saints are scattered and most of them have four or five miles to go, yet all seem very anxious to be always at the meetings and ready to do the work assigned them.

We see there have been some good additions to the church in this part, which has been a great help to the Saints, and while they have been blessed in their church work, we can see God's hand has been with them in their temporal affairs of life. Nice, new, frame and cement block houses are fast taking the place of the old sod houses, and this is making their homes much more comfortable. Although twenty to thirty miles from the railroad, we see the Saints enjoying themselves, and receiving the great blessings of God as they do in the more thickly settled places.

How thankful we as Saints can be to know that wherever we may be, and no matter what our condition and circumstances may be, if only true and faithful to the law of God, his promises are ours. As he has promised, the Holy Spirit will be with us to lead and guide us in all truth. As Saints, we have so much to be thankful for when we meditate upon God's promises to us.

We miss the face of Bro. S. D. Payne, who was called home four years ago this summer. When meeting his wife and family, a feeling of sadness comes, and we can only wonder why. The Lord knows why, and that's enough. Would that we could at all times say, The Lord's will be done. We had the privilege of meeting Bro. James Kelley in North Platte, as he was on his way to Bayard where a church is to be built. We were glad to hear this, and may the time soon come when the light from the glorious gospel may shed forth till every village and hamlet in this Northern Nebraska District will have a meeting place of the Saints. There are many good, honest people scattered through these regions. May they hear the angel's message and be obedient to the same.

Sunday, June 10, was a very busy day, and one that the Saints can look back to with joy. At 10 o'clock we met for Sunday school and at eleven o'clock Brother Self preached the funeral sermon of Grandma Godfrey, who passed away something over a year ago, and also her son Henry, who passed away June 3 in Pueblo, Colorado, and was buried here June 6.

After thirty minutes' recess, we again assembled, this time to partake of bread and wine in remembrance of Him who is our Savior and Redeemer. An hour was profitably spent, the Spirit of God being manifest in counsel and advice. Again in the evening at 8 o'clock preaching. Four meetings a day, where all are so scattered, is very good. We expect to remain here some time, then on to other places through Nebraska. We feel the Spirit in our work, and rejoice in the decision we made while in Lamon. Hoping for the triumph of the work of God, we remain,

We are trying as best we can to advance the Lord's work, though we have some disadvantages. The people in general seem to have a morbid indifference toward churches and religion. The causes may be obscure, but I believe they may be discovered. Generations past it seems that the people were more willing to follow given or self-appointed leaders than they are to-day. There was more response given, more confidence expressed in men who would attempt to lead. During the exciting years of the Reformation, men were hungering for better things,—they were willing to follow; they were hopeful of finding relief in any new movement, for the tyrannical oppression had held the world in religious bondage for centuries. They gave credit to the various experiments, until in the examination they were distressed to conclude they had been following a phantom. They fed and filled up on what was given them, but their hunger still remained,—their soul was not satisfied. Like the story in our school reader, they had cried, "Wolf, wolf," until there was no more confidence in their cry.

Now in time, the real, true gospel made its appearance. Hundreds, yea, thousands cheerfully came to bask in the radiant light of its glory. But, like the candle and lamp on a summer's night, midst the prolific growth from the fertile soil, comes the candle moth, the winged bugs, until the lights are blurred, the globes are broken, and the radiance grows very dim. Then without true reason or investigation, people begin to withdraw; they foolishly conclude the oil is no good; lamps are bad, and if they should remain, the light would disappear and darkness ensue. The truth of the words of Jesus is here proven, "Because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold."

In order to restore that confidence to humanity, there must be a replenishing of the light and power divine in the lives of those who are supposed to stand "as the light of the world," "the salt of the earth." We need not expect to win the people to us or convert them to Christ by smiling faces, pleasant manners, and fawning methods alone. The first two, however, are worthy methods, and should be employed. But the needs of this good hour are the power of God and the Spirit of Christ in the lives, habits, ways, and expressions of his people.

We, as a people, have done well in "contending for the faith once delivered unto the saints." We have the theory well established; hope to continue to thus "contend." But may we not with just as good grace contend for the same manner of life that brought that faith to them? Can we obtain that faith without the same good works? Those saints of old who possessed great faith, did they go from day to day, week to week, and for months without bowing on their knees to pray? Were they devoted to God in earnest, secret prayer? Were their hearts and minds consecrated to his service? Do you think they were full of worldly pride, addicted to filthy habits? Would they have voted to support and sustain the degrading saloon business? Did those worthy saints of old who were made free from the fire, lions, death by the sword, exalted from prison to throne, fed by the ravens and sustained in various ways by the power of God,—did they conform to God's ways, cooperate with him and their brethren in peace and love; or did they "go about to establish their own righteousness"? Faith of that kind can only be obtained by diligent, consecrated service to God. It requires much training to be in that condition. We must become oblivious (in a sense) to the many attractions and ways of the world; we must form a dislike for them. Learn to hate the things which hinder our progress in God's work, and love only those things that assist. We welcome the day when God will give us a special endowment of divine power,—when the ministry and entire membership will have greater influence with the people because they can see and know of a truth that God is with us. The angel's message is divine.

I am happy to acknowledge the good improvement in our work. I rejoice that our membership is cheerfully responding to the aid and assistance of the ministry in pushing our work forward. These efforts are evidence that God is working with us as a people. We are learning; we are advancing. The moral and spiritual support and cooperation given to Bro. R. C. Evans in Canada has made it possible for him to make marvelous advancement for the angel's message. The Saints and friends at my old home, Webb City, Missouri, are entitled to much credit from us all, and our sincere appreciation for the noble response they have given Brn. T. W. Williams and Hale W. Smith in their work there. Without that spiritual support and cooperation, I doubt if even these able brethren could have accomplished the good work they did. We are all workers together. I very well know that we do not all possess the same ability in public work, but all of us could do much better with the hearty support and cooperation of our brethren. We need it. The work can not prosper without it. The "new commandment" should not lose its polish nor its divine fragrance, "Love one another."

John the Beloved gave us these words, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death." The same writer gave us this statement, "He that loveth his brother, abideth in the light, and there is no occasion of stumbling in him. But he that hateth his brother is in darkness and knoweth not whither he goeth, because darkness hath blinded his eyes." Love is of God and will give us light, unity and peace. We need more of it. It comes by reason of true devotion, humility, faith, and prayer.

I am trying to "make good" as a servant of Christ and minister of the gospel restored; in every way, in every line where I can do good for the Saints of God. It is lawful to do good in every way we can. "The law is for the unrighteous man." I hope to continue in faith and good works.

Yours for advancement,

R. M. MALONEY.

ALVARADO, TEXAS, June 13, 1911.

New York.

Feeling that a word from this part of the vineyard would be of general interest and appreciated by some, I write. Our district conference convened June 3 and 4. A good, peaceful time was enjoyed by all. The Saints from visiting branches expressed themselves as having been strengthened. The conference was held in the district tent, which was pitched at the corner of Parkdale and Patomac, Buffalo, New York.

The services of Sunday were the beginning of a series of meetings to be continued so long as interest should warrant, and thus far, interest has warranted an effort of twelve days, and the interest is apparently growing, but as is the case in most every place where the servants of God are trying to present the word of life to the world, they meet opposition from those who have shut up the kingdom against themselves, and stand ready to prevent others who would go in from so doing, by throwing at or pelting the name of Joseph Smith with such epithets—so vile and inconsistent that the honest hearts of fair-minded men and women are touched and they are heard to exclaim, shame, he is unfair, he is not telling the truth, etc. This very scene occurred on Friday night, June 13, when a person entered the tent with quite a number following him. He, being backed by a superannuated Methodist minister, assailed the Saints, their doctrine, Joseph Smith, his character, and in fact everything connected with the church. He did a stunt in speaking in tongues, (spoke a little German), ridiculed the gift (to his own hurt, however), making light of it and those who were foolish enough to believe in it. However, there is nothing lost. Bro. Alma Booker was equal to the occasion, met him and his argument in a masterly way, and to the satisfaction of the hearers and pleasure of those who desired to see fair play, and we trust to the convincing of some who are honest in heart.

There is one thing assured, that the church, its tenets, its people, are receiving an airing before the populace of Buffalo, New York, that they have never received before. While some of the newspaper reports are to be deplored, and will be answered by Bro. H. J. Davison, still much truth has been stated, and on the whole it is quite fair compared to what we receive at the hands of the sensational press as a rule. The Saints are being strengthened, friends are being made, while Satan is raging, and, if indications are not misleading, there are better prospects for the work here in this city. The young Saints seem to be quite jubilant and active, presiding at the organ, singing the songs of Zion, and, where opportunity affords, are standing up in defense of their belief.

So may the Spirit of the Prince of Peace dwell in the hearts of all, that good may crown the efforts of the brethren here. The Saints have rallied well to the aid of the work in various ways. Brn. Alma Booker and H. J. Davison are associated in the tent work, and the writer being interested, has assisted some. I trust that lasting good will be done and that God will richly bless every effort put forth for the advancement of his great cause.

During my stay in the city, I have had some very pleasing experiences, among which was the one of Sunday, June 11. Early in the morning we were favored with a visit with Bro. R. S. Salyards, he coming into the city on an early train and wishing to see one of the great sights and wonders of God's handiwork, and only having a short time to do so, he journeyed with the writer to Niagara Falls (the writer being appointed to speak there on that date). Brother Salyards was introduced as the speaker, giving us a very interesting discourse, which was edifying to the Saints and friends. Service over, we partook of the hospitality of Bro. and Sr. George Landes, after which, in company with Bro. Frank Mesje, we visited the historic falls of Niagara. To say that the brother from the Middle West enjoyed it, does not do him justice,—he was so greatly impressed with the magnitude, grandeur, and awfulness of such a stupendous thing, that it was extremely hard for him to leave the different points of view. It truly did one's soul good to see one so revere the works of nature as designed by the great designer, God. Our associations were very pleasant, and the good-bye came altogether too soon, but duty called and we had to obey. It was now time for evening service, so good-byes were said, parting salutation exchanged, and Brother Salyards boarded the car to complete his sight-seeing by taking the Gorge Route ride, one of the most beautiful scenes in the world, after which he would take train for Buffalo City, and thence to his eastern destination. The writer took car, in company with Brother Mesle, to the little brick church on Willow avenue, to dispense the word to Saints and friends.

In the city of Buffalo, preparations are being made for one of the greatest conventions that ever met here. The Woodmen of America meet in convention June 17. Already, in one of the beautiful parks of the city, there are tents pitched to accommodate between six and seven thousand men, all to be uniformed, and parade the streets of the city next Wednesday, the 21st, and while looking for information regarding them and their numbers, we learned that the association was just a few years old, less than twenty, and had a membership of over one million. Contrast that with the church and its sixty-five thousand, and its fifty-one years of existence, and our heart yearns for greater convincing power, that more might know the truth of the great work in which we are engaged. Men of the world, as a rule, are not ready or willing to pay the price of life eternal, because it calls for a sacrifice of worldly pleasure which seems to be so closely associated with mankind that it is truly part of their very existence. So it is hard to persuade men that there is any beauty in the Christ-like life or way of living. When one passes through the busy streets of our great cities, he is made to ask himself the question, How long, O Lord, before the convincing power of the gospel will be delegated in full to those holding the right to represent the Lord Jesus Christ in these last days, that man might be brought to see the folly of living by bread alone, and come to the fountain of eternal truth, and there drink and satisfy his soul.

Yours hastily,

A. E. STONE.

Southern Indiana.

As it has been some time since something appeared from Southern Indiana District in a general way, I will try to write as near as possible so as to give our conditions as they exist. Realizing that it is natural for those that write to always give the bright side of things, and to make it appear always for good, I am led to think that it often is a mistake to do so. I have made these mistakes myself, and hope, as the years pass by, I may be endowed with more wisdom, knowledge, and understanding in this great gospel work. I have long ago found that it is not only the spiritual side that makes us good Saints, but we must remember the financial side as well. In short, we must come to a realization that it will cost us money to become good Saints of God. Spiritual progress can not come except we heed this. I trust that the time has come when the doctrine of money will cease to be preached, and the doctrine of the need of financial aid will be realized. The establishment of any institution must be on a financial basis, and it is not necessary for me to dwell at length on this, for we well realize that it took money, time, and great sacrifice for Solomon to build the temple God instructed must be built. We also realize that when Nehemiah returned to build up the walls of Jerusalem that he took with him silver and gold, as well as workmen, and he says, "the people all had a mind to work." This is what we hope may be instilled in the minds of all Saints that read this,—namely, that they all will have a mind to work.

When Kirtland Temple was built, it took much money, time, and hardship to accomplish the same. Women worked as well as men, and many a meal was on the scantiest supply of food; many were the hardships and the sufferings endured, because "the people, all" had a mind to work.

In looking over the records of our district, and viewing the landscape, we notice that it is one of the oldest districts on record. We find that the work was established in the early days of Joseph the Martyr. It was in our district that he had the marvelous escape from death by poisoning, near New Albany, on the Ole Paint's Pike, at an old tavern in the little town of Greenville, the remnants of which still stand. We can only look upon the old Mount Edwin, West Fork, Mount Pleasant, Whitestown, Manville, New Trenton, New Marion, Plainville, Washington, Rego, Ariaie, Millstone, and Birdseye branches as past and forgotten in many instances. Of course many noble souls were brought into the light of this glorious latter day work by the efforts put forth in these old places.

We scan the present branches briefly, and speak of some with sadness. At Union, while this is one of the oldest branches existing, we have not been able to muster enough life in anyone this season to lead a Sunday school, no meetings are being held, and if changes are not soon brought about, it will be in the past. Only one Saint this year has paid tithes at this point. At Byrnrville, while viewing this as one of the old landmarks, it seems that the lack of work and indifference on so many is bringing the work to a very low standard in activity, even though it is the largest branch in numbers. There was not enough tithes and offerings paid by the entire branch last year to keep one missionary family two months. We do hope that a great change will take place here soon, for there are yet some noble souls, but they need to allow their light to shine. The old Leavenworth Branch has taken on new life of late, and at least a commendable effort is being made by several. They are now in the midst of a good revival, with the help of Elders Jacob Halb and E. O. Byrn. The Hope Branch (Derby) is doing well from a financial standpoint, for more money was paid in tithes than any other branch in the district. We would like to mention some names, but for fear of indulging in too much praise, we are not permitted. Here is where we will enjoy our first annual reunion, July 1 to 9, and anyone never having had the experience, ought to attend. It is a beautiful place, overlooking the Ohio River. While the Clay City Branch is a new branch, we are sorry not to be able to report any progress there this year, as we have not even been able to muster out a Sunday school report, but hope for a change soon. The New Albany Branch, while in its fourth year, could of course, it seems, do more. Yet taking into consideration that it has the best Sunday school in the district, the best local Religio, has more than twenty public meetings each month, is the second branch in the district in amount of tithes, the first in offerings, with a membership of only twenty-nine, we can say at least that a commendable effort is being made. The Louisville Branch, which is now part of the district by action of last General Conference, is now on the way of progress that seems to show for much good. The Sunday school has been put into active working order, and if the present activity continues, it proves that they will lead the district. A local Religio was organized June 2, and regular meetings for the first time in our history are being held at the church, making over twenty public services each month. However, they have not yet caught the spirit of helping on the financial side of the work in the way of tithes and offerings. But we are inclined to think that they will get the habit soon.

We wish to mention aside from the seven branches reported above, that there is a small Sunday school and Religio at Indianapolis, which we trust will develop much good. Also an effort is being made at Bicknell, Indiana, and we trust a branch will be raised up at both the above places.

The Spirit seems to be burning in some of the scattered Saints, in Corydon, Magnolia, Lamar, Owensville, New Harmony, and Francisco, where we hope good missionary work will be done and the work established. We have at present only four resident elders in the district; namely, Jacob Halb, who is now president of the district and president of the Union Branch; E. O. Byrn, who is vice-president of the district, president of the Byrnville Branch, and assistant superintendent of the district Sunday school work; Charles Fish, who is district secretary and president of the district Religio work; John Zahnd, who is bishop's agent of the district, president of the New Albany and Louisville branches, and district Sunday school superintendent. Elders Halb and Byrn are doing active missionary work under General Conference appointment. We have six active priests in the district; namely, D. H. Baggerly, C. F. Davis, E. A. Jeagers, Henry Oliver, Robert Grimes, and William N. Hanner, some of whom are at least trying to do their part, and God is blessing them by so doing. To our knowledge, we could name active teachers as follows: G. B. Miller, John E. Miller, C. N. Mayman, R. S. Willis, C. S. Oliver. There may be more, but we do not know them now. We only know of the following deacons that are making an effort: G. H. Ferguson, J. S. Oliver, and Charles Ferguson. It can readily be seen that with the workers at hand, the conditions will have to be handled the best possible.

Trusting the lay membership of the district will lend the needed financial support to get more workers in the field, I will close, for fear this will not escape the wastebasket on account of its length.

News From Branches.

Independence News.

The blue grass on the temple lot, the pasturage in the twelve-acre meadow to the southeast, and the fields and gardens are all famishing. They are parched and yellow, for they have long been lacking the cool and refreshing rain. But the Saints have enough to do, and slacken not their activities in the Master's cause, or in whatever line of work they feel that duty calls them.

Independence celebrated her eighty-fourth anniversary on the 1st of the month, and Bro. J. E. Lewis being in charge of Maple Hotel, received many guests, among whom were, they say, ten ex-mayors of the city. It was incorporated June 1, 1827, five years before the Saints came here.

Pres. F. M. Smith has recently received an added degree to his title received at Graceland, and now bears that of Master of Arts.

Bro. R. C. Kelley has accepted the position of Provisional Superintendent under the Government in the island of Iola in the Philippines, and is to depart for duty June 15.

Children's Day, with its delightful vocal music, its duets, chorus, and class pieces, its baptisms of one adult and twelve little ones, and blessing of one tender bud of promise, passed off to the satisfaction of all the Saints who were present to help celebrate it. The address on "The Sunday school and its advantages," by F. M. Smith, and the little talk on the subject of "Our Sunday school thirty years ago," with its jollity and quaintness, by Bro. Joseph Luff, in the evening, together with two fine numbers by a double quartet and the sweet solo, "The Lord is my Shepherd," by Bro. Paul Craig, all made complete an excellent program. Brother Joseph and Sister Ada came out, thinking to hear something fine and enjoyable, and so did we all, and we heard it.

The regular business meeting of the branch was held Monday night of last week. The main items of business were the election of officers and the consideration of the matter of the new church lot. Elder W. I. Fligg was sustained as president; Elder F. Gray, priest, with J. Winegarden as associate; W. A. Hardey, teacher; R. Y. Martin, deacon. Sister Ethel Cambridge was chosen organist, and G. B. Richardson, choir master. The collecting committee was sustained for another month. Over two thousand dollars has been solicited, but this is not enough to purchase. The committee hopes to raise the required amount. The Sunday school is progressing nicely. All are anticipating a big time at the annual union picnic. Elder F. Gray, the superintendent, is a booster. The sewing circle is a very busy organization. They have contributed a large sum for the purchase of a new church lot, and are at present working hard for a strawberry social. Sr. Ella Harrison, president, is certainly a worker in the right place.

Brother and Sister Insell have returned from a trip to British Columbia. Bro. Garfield Truesdale, who has been at home, sick, for several months, is convalescing in the country with his aunt. Sister Meadows, mother of Elder Fligg, being quite ill for several weeks, has been in the hospital. Grave hopes are entertained for her recovery. Sr. R. Martin has been visiting with Sr. Kinsman at Longwood. Sickness in the family, has called Sr. Frank Gray to Hamilton for a few days. Sr. Louis Bernard has been visiting her parents for a few days near Toronto.

Open air work on the market has been started again with Elder George Henley in charge. Elder Fligg has spoken a few times, and a growing interest is being manifested. It is hoped that good may result from these meetings.

W. A. HARDEY.

Central Chicago.

Sunday, June 18. Children's Day exercises occupied the time of our usual Sunday school session, and also the preaching service. On account of the district conference held at Mission, Illinois, on June 11, our exercises were postponed one week. The children and older people did very well, so feel all were entertained and instructed. Sr. Jessie Pement had the drilling of the children in charge, and we think her efforts should be commended. Bishop Hilliard gave an excellent talk, advising the children and older, as well, to take care of these wonderful bodies of ours, so we would be strong and able to do the Lord's work in an acceptable manner.

Elder C. H. Burr occupied in the evening, stating that those who do the will of the Father will be the ones who will enter into the kingdom. That we may all endeavor day by day to realize our standing in the Lord's sight. We may deceive our friends and neighbors, but the Lord reads the intents of the heart.

Wednesday evening prayer meeting in charge of Elder Robert Burwell, of Hammond, Indiana, and Bro. A. F. Sherman. Better attendance than usual and good meeting.

Our union picnic with the West Side and West Pullman Sunday schools will be held on the Fourth of July at Eighty-first and Stony Island avenue. Take the Sixty-third street car and transfer to the Stony Island car, then get off at Seventy-ninth street and walk two blocks south in order to avoid paying and extra fare. We hope for a pleasant day, good attendance, and pleasant time. A cordial invitation is extended to anyone not a member of these schools, who might happen to be in our city on that day, to attend and make our acquaintance.

"Let us gather up the sunbeams,
Lying all around our path,
Let us keep the wheat and roses
Casting out the thorns and chaff,
Let us find our sweetest comfort
In the blessings of to-day,
With a patient hand removing
All the briars from the way.
Then scatter seeds of kindness
For our reaping by and by."

Conference Minutes.

SOUTHERN MICHIGAN AND NORTHERN INDIANA.—District conference was held June 3, at Coldwater, Michigan. One hour prayer service preceded the opening at 10 a. m., with district president G. A. Smith in the chair. A permanent organization was effected with Apostle Frederick A. Smith as chairman, assisted by the district president and his counselors. S. W. L. Scott acted as chorister, choosing his own assistants. Eleven of the twelve branches reported, showing a present membership of 805. Six elders reported, showing an aggregate of 231 sermons preached, 4 baptisms, 7 children blessed, 65 administrations to sick, 1 Religio organization, and 2 Sunday schools. Two priests, Star Corless and Clyde Ellis, reported an aggregate of 112 services of preaching and assisting. Bishop's agent's report showed a balance on hand last report of $18.71, total receipts $1,716.22, total expenses $1,274.24, leaving amount due church June 1, $460.69. S. Stroh tendered his resignation as bishop's agent, which resignation was tabled, and in its stead appeared a resolution to sustain, for though in ill health, his services were considered of great value to the district. By motion of Coldwater Branch, Starr Corless was recommended for ordination to the office of elder. His ordination was performed under the hands of F. A. Smith and E. L. Kelley. Conference ratified the two ordinations performed by G. A. Smith at Blissfield.—Eugene Butts to the office of priest, and George Yeager to that of teacher. The recommendation from Belding Branch that J. D. Aelick be ordained as teacher was concurred in, and said ordination left in the hands of minister in general charge. Two persons were baptized and confirmed and one child blessed during the conference. On Saturday evening Clyde Ellis occupied the pulpit and we all felt the force and beauty of youthful devotion and sacrifice in the cause of the Master. On Sunday, the Coldwater chapel, which had been moved from the country and beautified by an expenditure of about $2,200 was rededicated. Opening prayer by E. A. Blakeslee, sermon by E. L. Kelley, dedication prayer by F. A. Smith. Coldwater Saints rendered some excellent music. The entire service was very impressive, being brooded over by the sweet Spirit of God. The sermon of E. L. Kelley called up many pleasant remembrances on part of the senior members, he being one of the first missionaries who labored here, forty years ago. F. A. Smith delivered two masterly discourses,—the one Sunday afternoon, the other Sunday evening. They were logical and convincing,—just such sermons as each Saint needs to appropriate to his own use. If any better sermons have been preached it has not been our good fortune to hear them. Conference adjourned to meet at Clear Lake, Indiana, in October, at call of the district president. The social services were spiritual and encouraging. All parted with a feeling that Coldwater understands the art of entertaining, that "It is good to be a Saint in latter days." Mrs. J. H. Royce, secretary, Three Oaks, Michigan.

NORTHEASTERN KANSAS.—District met with the Scranton Saints at 10.30 a. m., June 11, 1911; district president Samuel Twombly and assistant minister in charge W. E. Peak presiding. The following branches reported: Aitchison, 84; Blue Rapids, 116; Centralia, 34; Fanning, 116; Scranton, 101; Topeka, 57. Idylwild and Netawaka not reporting. The ministers reporting: Elder's: Oscar W. Okerlind baptized 3, Frank G. Hedrick baptized 8, Mahlon Smith, Fred A. Cool. Priests: J. D. Conference Notices.

Saskatchewan district conference and convention will convene in the town of Sedley, Saskatchewan, on July 27, 28, 29, 30. We are looking for a large gathering of Saints and their friends at this time. This no doubt will be a pleasant and profitable outing. Ample provision for all. Board free. Reduced rates are being arranged on all railway lines in the three provinces. This should be an inducement for all to come. President F. M. Smith, of Independence, and Apostle William H. Kelly, Patriarch William Lewis, and many other prominent men of the church will be present. Sedley is situated on the Arcola line of the Canadian Pacific railway, between Regina, Saskatchewan, and Winnipeg, Manitoba, just the third station from Regina. All coming from the west, north, and northeast come to Regina, then to Sedley. All coming from south and southwest come via Weyburn and Stoughton, and those coming from east and southeast come via direct line. T. J. Jordan, district president; Mrs. Alvin Beckman, district secretary.

The Texas Central conference will convene at the James Schoolhouse, July 7, at 10 a. m., to continue two days. This place is about ten miles east of Newbuden, Texas. There will be a reunion to follow the conference at the same place, which will last over the 16th of July. Be sure to come, all Saints and friends throughout the district, and let us have a good time. We expect the missionary in charge and others of the missionaries with us. R. M. Maloney, district president, J. M. Nunley, associate president.

The district conference of the Central Nebraska District will convene at Comstock, August 5 and 6, after which a reunion of one week will be held. Bro. J. R. Sutton wrote me he had arranged for an able corps of speakers, also expected Patriarch Carlile to be present. We hope to have a good representation from every branch in the district. Branch clerks please forward your reports promptly to Orchard, Nebraska, R. F. D. 2. F. S. Gatenby, secretary.

The Southern Nebraska district conference will meet at Fairfield, Nebraska, July 23 and 24. Prayer service, 9.30 a. m. To be in attendance should be considered a duty and a privilege; the business of the church must be attended to if Zion's glory is to shine, and the association of Saints should invite the fulfillment of the promises of God. Let all who can be in attendance. Paul M. Hanson, president.

Convention Notices.

Reunion Notices.

The missionary in charge and district president of the Oklahoma Central District hereby give notice that the Central Oklahoma District reunion is canceled for this year. Taking into consideration the severity of the drought and shortage of crops which is quite general over the district, and which because of close finance would materially lessen reunion attendance, thus making it burdensome to the few, and the fact that to be a success, a reunion should be what the name implies, a reunion or gathering together of the Saints, not merely a local missionary effort; and also considering that Oklahoma will hold two reunions this year, one in the west and one in the east, and after corresponding with the chairman of the reunion committee, it is decided to cancel or indefinitely postpone the central reunion. The district conference will be held at Ripley instead of as formerly arranged, and will convene on Friday, July 21. Bro. W. M. Aylor is billed for a debate with a representative of the Christian Church at Ripley, beginning July 18, and to continue over the date here set forth for our conference. Those who had expected to attend the reunion might with profit to themselves and the work, gather with us there and remain for the conference. Those who come to the debate, however, should not allow the spirit of fight to have place in the mind when hearing the truth assailed by persecutors, and should be prepared to be slapped in the face by our enemy without hating him. The Christ Spirit is the only means by which to win a permanent victory. A fight merely for the sake of the prey will defeat us. Whether you come or stay, let your prayers sustain God's banner bearer for the occasion, and for the conference, let all branches send statistical reports covering period since last report. We hope to have a full report from all the ministry, general and local, elders, priests, teachers and deacons.

J. E. YATES, President.

The annual reunion of the Kentucky and Tennessee District will convene July 15 to 23 at High Hill Branch, near Lynntown, Kentucky. Let all come who can and bring your tents. It will be expected that all who can will be self-sustaining, and those living at a distance will be provided for.

O. S. CALDWELL, Secretary of Committee.

The annual reunion of the Lamoni Stake will be held on the usual camp grounds near Lamoni, August 17 to 26, inclusive. Place your order for tents with the secretary before August 5. The following are prices for rent of tents: Low wall: 10 by 12, $2; 12 by 14, $2.60. High wall: two room 10 by 14, $4; 12 by 14, $4.75.

JOSEPH ROBERTS, Secretary.

The Eastern Iowa and Kewanee, Illinois, districts will hold a joint reunion at Prospect Park, Moline, Illinois, August 11 to 21. All who purpose attending, please send all orders for tents, cots, etc., to Elder Amos Berve, Lamoni, Iowa, not later than August 1. Parties ordering later than this date will have to pay the extra freight and drayage charges. A complete price list of tents, cots, etc., has been mailed to each branch president of the two districts. We look for a large attendance and a spiritual feast.

J. B. WILDERMUTH, Of the Committee.

Pastoral.

To the Saints and Friends of the Des Moines District: May grace and peace be with you. The missionary work in this district being to a certain extent placed under my direction, and feeling the responsibility of directing for the greatest good of all, I seek for such information as will give knowledge of the needs of the work in your vicinity, or among your friends in the district. The tent work begins at Fraser, and will be carried on wherever there may be a demand, the Spirit of God may direct, and time will permit. On account of affliction my labors have been restricted, but we hope for relief, and desire to be in the field most of the time, and will, if God permit.

There being only three missionaries for this large field of operation, it will be necessary that such help as can be rendered by those interested in the spread of the work will be rendered. The patriarch is expected to assist what he can in the line of his work, and those who desire his assistance will write him at Dow City, Iowa. The bishop's agent, W. Christy, should be remembered, and that which is due the Lord remitted at once to him at my address. Anyone having means to assist in the tent work will also send that to Bro. W. Christy, at my address.

With unwavering faith in God, let us come up higher in Christian character, and let the Spirit of the Christ rule in all our ministrations.

Your brother and coworker,

J. F. MINTUN, Assistant Minister in Charge.

1205 Filmore street, Des Moines, Iowa, June 15, 1911.

The Presidency.

Notice is hereby given, the ministers in charge and the Presidency concurring, that the appointment of V. M. Goodrich has been changed from Far West District to Far West District, Saint Joseph objective point. Those concerned in this appointment will please govern themselves accordingly.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

By Frederick M. Smith, Secretary.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, June 16, 1911.

Quorum of High Priests.

Greeting: At the April sessions of the quorum there was provision made for the issuing of a 1911 annual, and that it shall be up-to-date and of service to the membership it will be necessary that I have all addresses correct. Therefore, if you have changed your address since reporting last spring, please notify me at your earliest convenience. If I receive nothing from you I will publish the address as last sent me.

Your fellow-servant,

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

LAMONI, IOWA, June 20, 1911.

Order of Evangelists and All Others Whom It May Concern.

It should be borne in mind that for this conference year, we could only have about five (six at most) available patriarchs who are physically able to labor continuously, and travel when necessary. Think of it! If, therefore, the few who receive appointment from the First Presidency and Twelve were to be wholly confined to the territory to which they have been assigned, it would limit our ministrations to the few, and deny to many the benefits of divine provisions and promise to which they are entitled, and for which they ask. Would this be right?

For this reason, we have felt that we ought to extend our labors as widely as we consistently can. For, is it not true that the importance of the patriarchal work and the wisdom of the original provision of the law are plainly indicated in the following statement: "It is the duty of the twelve, in all large branches of the church, to ordain evangelical ministers, as they shall be designated unto them by revelation."—Doctrine and Covenants 104:17. Under existing circumstances, we must of course do the best we can, and approach the original design as rapidly as is found to be practicable.

Two things are important, and we ardently desire that they will not be overlooked. First, we must labor in harmony with the local authority wherever we are. Second, when under appointment, we must duly respect the missionary in charge. When it becomes necessary to leave the field to which you have been assigned, if at all practicable, first obtain permission from the missionary who is in direct charge of that field. If not practicable, kindly notify him as soon as possible,

WE ARE printing them already.
Why not send in YOURS?
We mean the bills for your reunion.

and explain. Do not take it for granted when you are requested to go into another field for a time, that permission has been secured from the one in charge. The president of the order does not always know who is in charge, and for this and other reasons, it is better that each patriarch apply for the needed permission to the one in charge of his field.

Every once in a while, the financial problem connected with the giving of blessings bobs up from some quarter. After explaining the matter again and again, we have one request to make. Will all those who think it wrong to donate anything when receiving a blessing (that is that it is more blessed to receive than to give) please expend ten cents in the purchase of The Patriarchate, at the Herald Office, and then read carefully a few paragraphs on pages 49 and 50, under the head of expenses. Then, if they still believe their position to be correct, let them improve the first proper opportunity to defend it and expose ours; but if they see that we have been misunderstood and misrepresented, then let them adjust themselves to the situation according to the gospel, so that we may all move on harmoniously in the accomplishment of the work which our loving Father has given us to do. We do not object to friendly criticism. Far from it. But when the critics refuse to investigate, their criticisms are apt to be unjust, and therefore unprofitable and undesirable.

It should be borne in mind that the patriarchs, in common with the other ministers of the church, are required to make out and send to the Bishop of the church, annually, an itemized financial report of all receipts and expenditures. If anyone does not do this, and is not reported to the order, then the Bishop is derelict in duty. It has been noticed, and keenly felt by some, that our work, as patriarchs, is measurably unpopular in the church. Perhaps we have all felt it more or less, but some take it too much to heart. We are not the only ones who have been confronted with this peculiar condition. The most effectual way to neutralize this sentiment and feeling is to be patient, exercise more faith, and see to it that the character of our work is the best advertisement in its favor. If our work is what it ought to be, the better it is understood, the more it will be appreciated; and I am pleased to state that, in my opinion, our work is being better understood and appreciated each succeeding year. The demand for the patriarchs at the reunions this year is greater than ever before.

Dear brethren of the order, if the condition complained of does actually exist, it is our part to meet and overcome it by the exercise of wisdom, patience, courage, blameless example, and faith in God. Remember, we are not mere machines. Carefulness is greatly needed in our work. We are, or should be, "workers together with God." Some years ago, Pres. Joseph Smith as editor of the HERALD, in meeting the charge of being a "slow prophet," wrote: "It is better to be a slow prophet than a false one." Let us remember this in our work. Prophecy is not an essential part of a patriarchal blessing.

In acting as spiritual fathers to the church, it is necessary and important that we should "take heed unto" ourselves as well as "the flock." To think of ourselves "more highly than" we "ought to think," would perhaps disqualify us for duty, and more effectually neutralize our work, than it would any other class of ministers in the church.

It has been properly arranged for Bro. William Lewis, of Cameron, Missouri, to spend several months in the Northwestern Canadian territory. Pray for his success.

J. R. LAMBERT, Acting President.

LAMONI, IOWA, June 18, 1911.

Died.

DAVIS.—Mrs. Pearl Williams-Davis was born July 29, 1870, in Buchanan, West Virginia; died May 5, 1911, at Kansas City, Missouri. She was married to Russell Smales, and to this union was born one child, Ernest Smales, now of Kansas City. Later she married Richard Davis, and to this union were born a daughter and a son, the father and the daughter preceding her to the other side. The sister suffered very much, and had an abiding faith in the angel's message. She was highly esteemed by all that knew her, which was surely attested by the large attendance at her funeral, in the Presbyterian Church, at Mound Valley, Kansas. Sermon was by J. Arthur Davis, assisted by Rev. J. L. Masters. She was laid to rest in the Richland Cemetery by the side of husband and daughter.

HOWARD.—Fred A. Howard, born in Harrison County, Iowa, March 25, 1878; aged 33 years, 2 months. Married to Katy McClean in October, 1900. To this union were born three children, Arthur, Eva, and Lee. He died May 25, 1911, leaving three children, father, mother, six brothers, and two sisters, besides a host of relatives and friends to mourn his loss. Said brother united with the church in the fall of 1894, and died in the faith and hope of the resurrection. The hospital authorities said they never saw a more patient sufferer or one who gave less trouble. Funeral sermon by Elder Sydney Pitt.

GODFREY.—Mary E. Godfrey, born March 20, 1840, in Murice County, Pennsylvania, baptized June 1, 1893, by Elder James Caffall, died December, 1909. Funeral sermon was not preached until June 10, 1911, when that of her son Henry, who recently passed away, and that of herself were preached in the South Tryon church by Elder R. O. Self. Said sister was the mother of ten children, eight of whom are members of the church. Her husband had preceded her to the better land.

GODFREY.—Bro. Henry Wesley Godfrey was born September 9, 1880, in Van Buren County, Michigan, and died June 3, 1911, aged 31 years, 7 months, and 25 days, in the hospital in Pueblo, Colorado, where he had been confined for over six years. He was baptized at the age of thirteen by Elder James Caffall, and was laid by the side of his parents in the Allison Cemetery, New North Platte, Nebraska. Funeral sermon by Elder R. O. Self.

ENERGY

Is it not the desire of every person to gather up all the energy to be had? A few thoughts to aid you in the following way: Eat the food that will produce the greatest energy with the least amount of energy to assimilate. The earth has 14 elements, so has the vegetable kingdom and your body. Nature has placed the great drug store (vegetable kingdom) so as to prepare the elements so we can make them a part of ourselves. Why give the vegetable to the animals and have them use 70 per cent of the energy, then kill the poor animal and eat the bundles of fiber full of uric acid, asthma, tuberculosis, etc.? The body then uses 10 times the energy to assimilate. All I ask is: You make a test of Good Health Flour for 30 days, and if not more than pleased I certainly will pay back every cent you wasted. White flour, meat, lack of water, are the direct causes to produce constipation, rheumatism, appendicitis, dyspepsia, etc. Order a barrel to-dav.

GETTING INTO THE NEWSPAPERS.

"In these times we fight for ideas, and newspapers are our fortress."—Heine.

A sermon delivered before fifty people may reach five hundred if a synopsis of it can be gotten into the local newspaper. But how can we get sermons and articles into the local newspaper? What kind of articles appeal to newspaper editors?

A certain famous baseball player is much admired because of his celerity in getting started the moment the ball touches his bat. And for his ability to keep in motion once he is started. Humanity loves action. Editors are human.

There are two ways of writing. In the one, language is used to conceal thought—or at best to give up its treasures grudgingly to learned students. Here is a sample, from Spencer's definition of evolution: "Evolution is an integration of matter and concomitant dissipation of motion; during which the matter passes from an indefinite, incoherent homogeneity to a definite, coherent heterogeneity; and during which the retained motion undergoes a parallel transformation."

Now what was it that Spencer said? You get the idea after the third or fourth reading. But people do not read articles by Latter Day Saint elders that many times. Spencer's style may be a good style for scientific exposition. It is also a good style for Latter Day Saint elders to avoid when writing for the press.

The short, snappy article that is full of life stands the best chance to be published. Short, crisp sentences command attention. The long, prosy, tedious article gets past the wastebasket only by a miracle. And newspaper editors do not believe in miracles.

We sometimes hear the complaint that newspaper editors are prejudiced against our people. Probably there are some editors who are little, mean, hide-bound, and prejudiced. But there are many editors who are very liberal. Some of them do not care enough about denominational differences to be prejudiced. Their business is to get more news for their readers and more readers for their news. They are willing to give us a chance, providing we recognize certain limitations.

If the copy sent in is interesting, so as to add to the interest of their paper, they welcome it. But it must be gotten up in decent shape to meet initial requirements. Some people will send in hastily written lead pencil scrawls, which show at once that the author did not go to the trouble of reading the article over or rewriting it after making the first rough draft. If you think so little of your message as that, into the wastebasket with it. Newspaper editors will work a long time to get a paid advertisement or a piece of county printing into shape. But Latter Day Saint sermon briefs are not paid advertisements.

All other things being equal, a typewritten article stands the best chance to be published. Manuscript legibly written with pen and ink stands the next best chance.

It frequently happens that editors will accept an independent affirmative article, when they would reject one containing an attack on some other religious denomination, or the pastor of some other denomination. They are human, and while willing to give us a chance, do not wish to do so at the expense of paid up subscribers.

In fact, newspaper editors watch the business end of the proposition pretty closely. If actually convinced that their subscription list will be increased instead of diminished, they come with much better grace to the rescue of downtrodden truth.

It will be remembered that the Toronto World, (Ontario), opened its pages for us, and is giving space to a sermon by Bishop Evans each week during the present year. They did this when assured that the Saints would secure them five hundred new subscribers.

Smaller papers in smaller towns will talk business quite liberally, when assured of a certain number of new subscribers, not nearly so large as the number above named. In many towns where our people have a following of one hundred or more they can get into the newspapers, providing some one will bring the matter to the attention of the managing editor and assure him that representative articles from our standpoint would induce numbers of the Saints to subscribe. This of course must be followed by a canvass for subscribers. And in most instances Saints can be found to subscribe when the situation is explained. Then all that remains to do is to see that suitable articles are prepared. Such a plan can be and has been successfully carried out to the mutual profit of the newspaper and the church.

A series of special services affords an excellent opportunity to reach the public through the press, especially if the services are so extensively advertised as to arouse interest, as the press is always willing to cater to an aroused interest. At Webb City, Missouri, at the beginning of the special meetings conducted at that place by the branch officials, with Elder T. W. Williams as speaker, the press was rather indifferent. But when they awoke to the live wire character of the campaign, they gladly published each day a synopsis of the sermon of the evening before, accompanied by very favorable editorial comment.

In most places the local paper will willingly publish short items reporting baptismal or confirmation services, district conferences, or occasional sermons by ministers from a distance. Such brief reports serve to enlighten the public as to our existence, activity, and belief. A brief report of baptismal services may easily be made to show our position regarding the mode and object of baptism. A brief account of confirmation services may be made to set forth our belief regarding the laying on of hands.

During the past year, one of our elders, who is a district historian, succeeded in getting some valuable articles on church history into the local papers. He helped himself in this matter by furnishing cuts free to illustrate the articles. The cost of cuts is not prohibitive, editors like to get them—for nothing,—and an illustrated article usually attracts notice.

An article in the Literary Digest, June 24, on "Calling the press to the aid of the pulpit," says: "If the voice of the pulpit is drowned in these days by the roar of the printing-press, why not enlist the press to help sound the preacher's call? If the people stay away, it is still the minister's duty to get the message to them somehow."

If there is to be a closer working alliance between the press and the pulpit in the future, we may as well reap our share of the benefits. Let us not consider ourselves excluded and defeated by prejudice at the outstart before we have put our fortunes to the test. It may be our own fault if we do not get the right kind of publicity.

Hymns and Poems

Selected and Original Death of the Prophet.

Oh inspired spirit of poetry,
Lean o'er me, ye silent sentry,
Fold closer thy wings of inspiration,
Push back the curtain of infinite creation,
Fill my spirit with rhythm and awe,
As unfolded I see what prophets saw!

Dimly the darkness clears,
Fast drop my falling tears,
See! Bleeding, wounded, dying he lies,
As o'er all the angel of darkness flies.
Savior of men, send us thy aid!
This spirit of doubt dispel and fade.

Suddenly, harp and music ring,
Sweet voices of heavenly angels sing;
Then a band of heavenly host,
Sweet the Spirit, the Holy Ghost,
Gathers above the earth worn clay,
Tenderly chant over it this lay:

"Chosen of God, receive now thy reward,
Praise in the Highest, our blessed Lord!
He thy spirit receiveth and praiseth
Prophet of our Father, whose love this raiseth.
Peace on earth, good will to all men,
Courage, my people; my Spirit I send!"

The vision ends, the curtain is drawn;
Darkness falls and the sight is gone.
Musing, my heart with pity is torn;
Sadly droops my spirit forlorn.
Then I recall the tortured, forgiving few,
Who prayed, "Forgive them,
They know not what they do."

Number Me with Thy Saints.

Number me with thy Saints, dear Lord,
The sheep of thy pasture green!
For I would feed on the living word
And drink from life's cooling stream.
"As panteth the hart for the water brook,
So panteth my soul for thee."
And near to thy side would I ever abide,
With thy Saints, oh, number me!

Number me with thy Saints, oh, Lord;
In the front, on the battle field!
In thy armor bright I would valiantly fight
And the sword of the Spirit wield!
For the battlefield is as broad as the world,
And thy foes are on every hand!
Then number me with thy Saints, dear Lord,
Who but wait to obey thy command!

Number me with thy Saints, dear Lord,
Who rest when the day is done;
Who have fought a good fight and have kept thy faith,
And the crown of the victor won!
When the trumpet shall call the quick and the dead -
To meet their Lord in the air,
Oh, number me then, with thy risen Saints,
Who greet our Great Captain there!

IX.—BAPTISM; THE SCRIPTURAL MODE.

BY HALE W. SMITH.

This article should have appeared as number 8, but not being ready at the time, it was held over, and is inserted at this juncture.—EDITOR.

The mode of baptism is one that will always be of interest, at least so long as there exist so many different opinions among religious teachers. A man having reached the age of thirty, who having lived a perfect life from his birth without sinning, would not have to be baptized "for the remission of sins," but rather to "answer a good conscience towards God," and to enter into the church.

HALE W. SMITH.

Nearly all admit that baptism is necessary to salvation, but when it comes to the manner of administration, many differ. Some think "to sprinkle water on the man" is sufficient, others think "to pour water upon the candidate" is better, and still others say, "We should baptize the man in water, completely immersing his body."

We do not care what man may think, but what says the Bible? It might be well, however, to clearly understand some of the reasons why baptism is administered, namely, a step upward; the act of entering into the church; the putting on of Christ; death of the old man and birth to the new man, and so the viewpoint from which we wish to discuss it is, as "an ordinance by which one is admitted into the church." (John 3: 5.) "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God."

A fish passing from the Missouri River into the Mississippi River emerges completely from the dirty water of the Missouri into the clear water of the Mississippi. An Englishman who becomes a citizen of our country, completely leaves his mother country and unites with ours. A branch that has been cut from a tree, in order to receive the benefit of the sap in another tree, must be grafted into that tree,

It no longer partakes of the sap from the old tree, but receives benefit from the new tree's sap.

The statement by the Savior, "Except a man be born again he can not see the kingdom of heaven," clearly teaches a new birth. Let us see; birth means "passing from one element into another." The fish passes from the Missouri into the Mississippi. The Englishman passes from England into America,—he leaves the English Government and unites with the United States Government. The branch is cut from one tree and grafted into another tree.

Read 1 Corinthians 5: 17: "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature. Old things have passed away; behold, all things are become new." Through baptism, the new birth, being born again, one leaves the old element and enters the new. He leaves the world of sin and enters the world of purity. He leaves the element of sin and enters into the church (Christ's mystical body). How do people do when they wish to become citizens of the United States? They comply with the law governing the adoption of foreigners. How do people do when they wish to get into Christ's mystical body? They are baptized. See Paul's argument, Galatians 3: 27, "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." I can not see how a man can be in the United States without being immersed in the environment of the United States. I do not see how a fish could leave the Missouri River and emerge into the Mississippi without being immersed in the water of the Mississippi.

The mode of baptism may be learned from the meaning of the word used in the command to baptize. The New Testament was written in Greek, and in that language there is a particular word for each specific kind of action. For example: cheo means to pour, as in John 2: 15; rantizo means to sprinkle, Hebrews 9: 19; baptizo means to dip, immerse, Mark 1: 4; lono means to wash the whole body, Acts 9: 37; nipto means to wash part of the body, John 9: 7; katharizo, means to cleanse in a general sense, Matthew 23: 25. The word, cheo, to pour, or rantizo, to sprinkle, is not used in a single instance in the New Testament to designate baptism by water. Hence pouring and sprinkling can not be New Testament modes of baptism. They are specific terms and never mean dip or immerse. Such baptism is not of divine authority. Neither is the term katharizo ever used, since it is a generic word, and if applied to a mode of baptism, it would leave us in doubt as to the manner of performing the act. But when the word baptizo (to dip) is used, or some form of it, we are not left in doubt, since it has a specific meaning, always signifying to cover completely. It never means to pour or sprinkle. The Savior did not give the command to baptize without telling how.

The Greek word baptizo is not translated into English; it is merely transferred with an English terminal, and has the same meaning in English that it has in Greek, always to cover completely. Literally, it can always be translated by the word dip or overwhelm. John baptized (dipped) in Jordan, Matthew 3: 6; Jesus came to Judea and was baptized (dipped), Matthew 3: 22; Peter, on the day of Pentecost said, "Repent and be baptized" (dipped), Acts 2: 38. "They were all baptized (overwhelmed) by the cloud and in the sea," 1 Corinthians 10: 2.

The place and circumstance often help to make the meaning clearer. John baptized in Jordan, Matthew 3: 6; Jesus was baptized in Jordan, Mark 1: 9. Both Philip and the eunuch went down into the water, which was not necessary except for the former to baptize (dip) the latter. Further light is thrown on the meaning of the word baptize by its being compared to a burial, "so many of us as were baptized into his death; therefore we are buried with him by baptism," Romans 6: 3, 4.

We are only buried by baptism when we are completely covered, dipped, or immersed, and not when water is sprinkled or poured upon us; therefore, sprinkling or pouring must be eliminated, not being New Testament baptism.

Again, baptism is likened unto a planting, Romans 6: 3, and when seeds are planted, they are completely covered. When the word planting is used, it does not mean transplanting, which has no resemblance to baptism.

One of the best authorities of the mother church (Catholics), Cardinal Gibbons, says, "For several centuries after the establishment of Christianity, baptism was usually conferred by immersion, but since the twelfth century, the practice of baptism by infusion has prevailed in the Catholic Church."—Page 317, Faith of Our Fathers, 1898.

WHO ARE THESE THAT FLY AS A CLOUD AT THE TIME OF THE END?

At the time of the end many shall run to and fro and knowledge shall be increased. This remarkable prophecy, stated in so few words by the Prophet Daniel, certainly applies to the rapid development of science and invention in our present age.

The achievements of past ages, though great, are more and more being buried in the shadow of eclipse by the astounding discoveries and magic accomplishments of our present time. Knowledge is increased.

IT IS THE TIME OF THE END.

Not content with the rapid running to and fro aboard the steam and electric chariots, which the Prophet Nahum is thought to have referred to so long ago, men now take to the air and proceed to fly to and fro.

The time when Nahum's chariots were to jostle in the streets, rage in the Broadway, seem like torches and run like the lightnings, is designated to be in the day of God's preparation. Joel seems to have foreseen the same time (the latter days) and to have clearly forecasted events even beyond the day of preparation. All nations are to be gathered to battle in the "valley of decision" (chapter 3), the sun and moon are to be darkened, and the stars to withhold their light. Then the Lord is to utter his voice in Jerusalem, and dwell in Zion.

Micah also foretells events incident to the time of the end. After a portrayal of the great night of apostasy (chapter 3, verses 6, 7), he proceeds in the next chapter to tell us that "in the last days" God will gather her that has been driven out and afflicted, her that has halted as a remnant, and will make her a strong nation. At that time many nations will attempt to defile the nation of God's choice, but the Almighty will "consecrate their gain to the Lord and their substance to the Lord of the whole earth."

He says further that there shall be a plague upon the horses, destruction of cities, throwing down of strongholds, an overthrowing of the statutory art in which the nations take pride, and that God will execute vengeance and fury upon the heathen, such as they have not heard.

So by these prophecies, if we have reached the time of the end indicated by the great increase of knowledge, we may safely calculate the nature of the next great world events to be a preparation for, and the enactment of these scenes of turmoil described.

Ezekiel testifies at great length concerning this same latter day culmination of events in chapters 37, 38, 39, and adds to the coming scene of terror a pestilence of blood, overflowing hail, rain of fire and brimstone, with vultures upon the battlefield devouring the flesh of human beings and horses.

Nearly seven hundred years after Ezekiel records his graphic description of this last great drama of the world, upon the stage of time, we find John the Revelator making exact mention of the same things, chapter 19, verses 15, 16, 17, 18. Thus the testimony is accurate, reliable, harmonious, and strong.

There can be no question but that Zechariah also has written with great clearness upon the same matter in chapter 14. Here the exact result of the world's last battle is told in plain words. Also the identical spot where the Savior is to alight upon his return to the earth is named, also the fact that all his Saints will be with him—then the reign of peace.

It would seem that the clearness of these uniform prophecies of the many who were moved by the Holy Spirit to write in the different ages of time, would leave this present generation without excuse as to being informed of the signs of the times. But as the people were taken by surprise at the time of the flood, notwithstanding their warning, even so Christ said the world would be taken as by a thief in the night at his second coming, and we may expect it to be so. But as there is to be a people prepared for the Lord; herein lies the work for all who understand these things and are not asleep.

The prophecies of both Old and New Testaments, which touch this subject of the time of the end, are so numerous that we will not attempt to mention even a small portion of them, but will conclude this brief review with a glance at Isaiah, sixtieth chapter. Verse 2 mentions the night of apostasy, which all the prophets are agreed was to be broken by the light of restoration. Thus the chapter points at once to events of the latter days. Next the prophet predicts that Gentiles and kings shall come to the light of Israel's rising, and Israel shall flow together and be enlarged—shall gather flocks of Kedar, and silver and gold from far. "Sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee . . . thou shalt suck the milk of Gentiles and the breast of kings."

Now without question all this points to the latter days, the time of the end, in which Daniel said knowledge would be increased, and bearing in mind the observation already made that this same increase of knowledge has put multitudes into rapid and perpetual travel "to and fro," and man among the clouds now begins to challenge the very birds of the air, what is the meaning of Isaiah, in the eighth verse of this same chapter, in the following?

"Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows?" Is Isaiah to vie with Nahum in explicit suggestion of modern invention? Now smile, everybody, and say, How far-fetched an application! Well, perhaps so, but it may be hard to explain, if the prophet meant by the word fly in this instance, merely a fleeing away on land, why he said "fly as a cloud," and why his next simile of comparison should be a bird in the air, fly as doves."

But be this as it may, the important features of the prophecy are sure, and all culminates in the glory promised to the people of God by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began: "when violence shall no more be heard in the land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders. . . . A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation: I the Lord will hasten it in its time."

Shall we be prepared for the harvest of days, the sabbath of the cycles, the climax of years, the time of the end?

RIPLEY, OKLAHOMA.

AN OPEN VISION.

The following vision given to Bro. E. E. Keeler the 3d of last March, contains a message of comfort not only to those who were personal friends of Elder David W. Wight, whose sudden death in 1901, after a brief illness, was a shock to many of the Saints; but also may be comforting to others who have grieved over the loss of loved ones taken away from the earth life when it seemed they were so sadly needed here. After hearing Brother Keeler relate the vision I requested him to dictate the same to me that I might obtain a copy. This he did, and a number have asked for and received copies; but feeling that there are many others who would like to read it and who will receive comfort from it, after obtaining his permission, I send it in for publication. I might further add that some years ago a vision was given to me, which, in every point given, harmonized completely with this vision of Brother Keeler's.

ESTELLA WIGHT.

On the night of March 3, 1911, I was wrapped in vision. I found myself following in the wake of a large multitude of people. While wondering in my heart what this great multitude meant, I saw descending from heaven two messengers, or angels, alighting on the ground on either side of an individual. They immediately arose and ascended gradually out of sight. This was done several times; but there seemed to be one that was directing these messengers, and I saw him coming towards me, and I said to him, "Where are you taking these people?"

He said to me, "Come and see."

He kept about one step ahead of me, and we arose from the earth, as did the others that I had seen, and when we had arrived at the stopping place I looked around me, and the whole face of the country appeared to be level, set with a sod of blue grass about three inches high, a beautiful place, such as I never had seen. The light was of that mellow kind, not a dazzling or brilliant sunlight, but one in which I could see so far, and this country seemed to be all alike.

I noticed here and there little groups of people. They seemed to be in conversation with each other, and small children playing about perfectly happy—nothing to hinder or mar their pleasure. And these messengers that I had seen come and take one, I saw three different places among these little groups where the one they had brought was received joyfully. There seemed to be a great rejoicing when they would bring a person to them.

And I said to this one that was with me, "What is this?"

He said, "This is Paradise."

I turned and looked him square in the face, and to my astonishment it was David Wight, and I said to him:

"David, is this you?"

He smiled and said, "Yes."

I said, "We missed you. We needed your service below."

He said, "Say to my people that I'm just as busy here as I was there."

He looked to me just as natural as he did in life when we were associated together here upon earth. I said to him:

"David, I believe I will just stay here, now while I am here."

"Not now," he said, "not now."

He seemed to have the direction and authority to take them.

I said to him: "David, what does all this great discourse of people below mean?"

He said, "It is mammon, mammon."

They all seemed to be going in one direction, pushing and crowding each other to get to some place. He gave me to understand that this was the condition of the world, that their only thought was to accumulate the things of this life.

The vision closed. I found myself very wide-awake. Whether in the body or out of the body I do not know, but it seemed to me that I was in the body; had all my senses about me.

E. E. KEELER.

Brother Keeler stated further that the little children that he noticed did not seem to be over six or seven years of age. Concerning the trees, he had never seen any just like them, but the leaves looked something like the magnolia leaves, were long and looked as though they were varnished; that David looked just as he had seen him in this life, and moved about quickly as he always did here. THE WOMAN IN REVELATION 12.--IN FOUR PARTS.

I.—PRIESTHOOD AUTHORITY VS. THE MAN-CHILD.

BY H. J. DAVISON.

Since there is still a difference of opinion upon this subject, which seems to me so clear and void of contradictions, I would ask my readers, especially those of the priesthood, to consider with unprejudiced mind that which I shall endeavor to set forth, in a few short articles. Please preserve them for reference, possibly until the vision of Jared's brother comes forth (Ether 1:113, late edition,) and see how far this position will be from that revelation.

In claiming light upon it I do not so proclaim for the purpose of using undue influence, but to explain the interest that impels me to write. The writing itself, with the light that is in the brethren, will determine largely how much of divinity is in the position, although it is possible in some individual cases it may be true that the light shineth in darkness and the darkness comprehendeth it not.

To John on the Isle of Patmos was given of God one of the grandest exhibitions of moving pictures ever witnessed by mortal man, the heavens being the canvas upon which were thrown representations of many important events of the world's ecclesiastical record. They are called signs in the Inspired Version, events seen in heaven, or on this heavenly canvas, and I shall use that version.

The one in Revelation 12 represents a woman, which is the church (verse 7), clothed with the highest type of light known to earth; representing the highest that can be given to the church, present revelation; having risen above (and not necessarily standing upon, as a foundation,) a lesser light.

"Upon her head a crown of twelve stars." The crown indicates authority. The twelve stars indicate the kind of authority. That is to say, the authority vested in the "twelve," namely, the priesthood of the church—Melchisedec priesthood (The Aaronic is included).

These stars are not the "twelve" themselves, for they are incorporated in the organization of the woman, and must receive their portion of the "crown" (authority) to enable them to be a real living part of a live "woman."

Thus we see the church (woman) standing in her royal glory, before the man-child was born. So the man-child can not be the priesthood. (I have a letter from Brother Joseph indorsing that position.)

It would seem that if the vision was to teach that the woman was to lose her authority there should be some reference made to that crown. But there was not, neither in any other part of God's word that I have found. That woman was spoken of as "The woman" all the way through her history, both in the Bible and Doctrine and Covenants, which she would fail to be were her authority taken from her. The church could not exist as an organized body without it. And the church must exist as such either on earth or in heaven. (Ephesians 3: 15.)

Let us notice that priesthood authority is limited; to rule only in the church, not the nations outside. Even criminals, offenders in the church, are turned over to national tribunals.

Now let us leave the priesthood where it belongs, on the head of the woman, and turn to something else, the man-child, which is a production and offspring of this crowned woman. This man-child was to rule all nations by the rod of iron—or in other words the word of God, or divine instruction.

The term "rod of iron" is used three times in the Bible, King James' Translation, Psalm 2: 9; Revelation 12: 5; and Revelation 2: 27. Inspired Translation renders it "word of God" in the last reference.

Let us read what the Spirit says unto the churches (or collectively the church) verse 26, "And to him who overcometh and keepeth my commandments unto the end will I give power over many nations."

Thus we see that out of the church may be born or produced, because of faithfulness in overcoming and keeping God's commandments, a power and authority differing from the priesthood authority in that it extends to the ruling of the nations. Christ, as a Melchisedec priest, had not this power before his resurrection, but obtained it, the same as others will, by overcoming (Revelation 3:21).

"To him that overcome will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne." We learn that this power, authority, or prerogative is not to be exercised by the church or her offspring until after the end (of the present world), then it will be exercised in connection with Christ; 27th verse tells us how.

Again, turning to Revelation 12, we learn that the woman was to give birth to a child. Now for a woman to give birth to a legitimate child is always understood as gain, not loss, as some interpretations represent. The woman travailed in pain to produce it, not to lose it. That this child should be legitimate the woman (church) must needs have close relationship with her husband (Christ). Ephesians 5:23 teaches us that Christ holds the same relationship to the church as the husband to the wife.

So from this close spiritual walk with Christ was born this child, a body of overcomers, as well as this exhibition of the overcoming process, which has claim upon this rod of iron authority.

The history of the church in her struggle fully portrays the travailing experience. Thank God that there are some overcomers. I am afraid there will be some of the church not fully overcomers, and consequently they will not attain to that honor.

The name of this child is called in verse 7, Inspired Translation, the "kingdom of God and his Christ," or the king power, the nation ruling power of God and his Christ, and is applied to those who attain to it the same as the term priesthood refers to those holding the priesthood authority, as well as to the authority itself; thus "John is soon to have conferred upon him the priesthood" and later "John is now one of the priesthood." Now, that all may understand my position, I state it thus: Out of the church (which sometimes is called the kingdom, but I understand in its limited sphere) will, because of being overcomers, be born or produced a body of people that are to rule the nations in the future, which will be called the kingdom of God and his Christ, because they have conferred upon them the man-child authority which bears the same name.

This man-child was not lost—it was simply taken by God to his throne to be restored in our time. It is the legitimate child of the church and the Dragon did not prevail against it (Revelation 12:7).

Brethren, it is our privilege to attain to this honor and dignity. Some undoubtedly will. As I understand, the keys of that kingdom are committed to earth in these days, as well as the priesthood authority only, but will not be exercised until Christ sits upon his throne and his "overcomers" with him.

This seems a reasonable and scriptural interpretation, and does not compel us to the idea that a church can produce her own authority, as our sectarian friends think; nor does it ask us to accept the rather peculiar proposition that a woman can give birth to her own husband, as some interpretations do.

The next article will be entitled "The flight of the woman."

Of General Interest

THE WHITE GODS IN CENTRAL AMERICAN ART.

Whence came the "White God" whose visage is preserved in the clay vases collected from Peruvian graves? This problem in archæology is attacked by Dr. Macmillan Brown, who revives for us the figure of Montezuma pictured by Prescott, looking with superstitious fear upon the visitations of flood, plague, and famine as forerunners of the return of this white divinity. Though conquered by the stronger Aztec, the white predecessor went away with the promise of an ultimate return. Time elevated him into the position of a god in the mind of the Peruvian. "The fair-complexioned reformer and civilizer," says Doctor Brown in the Lone Hand, an Australian monthly, "had gone back to the land whence he had come; but his threat of coming again paralyzed the will of the emperor-priest"; who "dared not raise a sacrilegious hand against his god."

The white gods bore nothing like the "sloping-browed, negro-lipped faces" that Montezuma saw about him. They had pale faces and beards—"two characteristics that do not by nature belong to the indigenous races of America, but are extremely frequent in the representations of gods both in Central America and in Peru." Even to-day, we are told, "one of the singular things about the people of the isthmus [of Panama] is that there is a large sprinkling of blonde-haired, blue-eyed European-like men and women in all the Indian tribes that live near these great stone ruins, right along the mountainous provinces that face the Pacific, in Guerrero, Oaxaca, Soconusco, Guatemala, and Honduras, and even in the more northerly Yucatan." We read further:

"This Europeanism of feature, skin, and hair is too widespread and too constant to be explained on the favorite theories popular among white men in Central America; most of the friars were Spanish and dark; the English buccaneers were too few and too coastal in their habits to go so far; and the German settlers, the last resort, are too recent to account for anything ethnological in this region; the Indian physiognomy is recognized by all observers to be far more persistent than the European, which usually disappears in the second generation of cross-breeds.

Only a very ancient infiltration can explain the persistency of this Europeanism, and even blonde Europeanism, in this region. It is marked on the story of those bearded white gods that founded Central American civilizations, and that came over the ocean and then westward along the isthmus.

"It is the same with the Pacific coast of South America. Most of the civilizations were initiated by bearded white strangers from the ocean, many of them like Manco Capac, the founder of the Inca dynasty, and Viracocha, the oceanic deity of the Aymaras, and of Tiahuanaco, being golden-haired. And among the faces of gods and kings and nobles represented on the vases found in the graves, there is a considerable proportion highly European, and only a very small proportion that are oblique-eyed. In large public and private collections that I have examined, the European-like faces seemed to predominate. So did the representations of sea scenes, sea denizens, and sea gods seem to predominate. Even Manco Capac, long before the Inca dynasty and empire which he founded had approached the ocean, acknowledged its oceanic basis and origin. On the terraces of his palace near Cuzco there is a rude carving; and when carefully examined it is found to represent a creature half-woman and half-fish, like our mythical mermaids.

"All these facts have to be taken together in order to find an explanation of any one of them. The Europeanism, much of it blonde or golden-haired, is confined to the coasts of the Pacific Ocean or the ranges near to it, just as the stone culture, and especially the great-stone culture, is confined. Here, too, and here alone, we find American empires and a rich development or barbaric civilization—the first conditions for the erection of such great stone monuments. Here, too, and here alone, we find the tradition universal of bearded white gods founding these empires and civilizations, and bearded white gods that came across the ocean. It is clearly the Pacific Ocean; for it is only two narrow strips on its coast in America that exhibit these phenomena. And, just as clearly, it is not the Japanese or Chinese or Hindus or Egyptians that supply the bearded and often golden-haired strangers."

Only great oceanic warriors and navigators with a blonde strain in their European humanity and with megalithic art in their hands, asserts Doctor Brown, can have migrated in sufficient numbers to impress this Europeanism and this art upon an alien race. The only people in or about the Pacific who fulfill these conditions, he further argues, are the Polynesians:

"They are acknowledged to be Caucasian, that is, European in origin. Their children have frequently bronzy hair, up till puberty; while many families have hair always red. Undoubtedly the first race in Polynesia was from Europe, and had a large sprinkling of blondes in its ranks. The last comers into the region were from southern Asia, and brought the aristocratic negroid nostrils and lips with them from Melanesia. As their islands kept sinking they streamed off in their oceanic canoes in all directions; many must have made eastward to the coasts of America, and, with their skill in war, carved empires for themselves, and thus gave a basis for the development of the indigenous textile, ceramic, and metal arts, and for the megalithic art that they introduced. Thus and thus alone can be explained the European and even blonde streak down the Pacific coast of America, and the appearance of negroid lips and nose in the sculptures that represent the ancient rulers of Central America.

"But there is a second movement involved in this primeval immigration. The coast of Peru lost its rains many millenniums ago; but the ranges still got them; and had the empires on the coast left the trees and bushes on these mountains untouched their lands would not have become the desert it is. But they cut and cut till the rains rushed down only temporary in torrents, and the people had to seek sustenance elsewhere; those that had the Polynesian seacraft among them went away north to the coasts of Central America, an easy voyage. For we have many indications of Peruvian influence in the north. The conventional decorations of the facades of Mitla are largely the same as those that adorn the pottery and textiles of Peru; one favorite scheme, the combination of a flight of steps with a spiral, is, as Doctor Uhle, of Lima Museum, has shown, the condor's head of Tiahuanaco, conventionalized and geometrized. . .

"An article could easily be filled with these manifest derivations of Central American conventions from Peru. If confirmation of this Peruvian influence were needed, it would be found in the representations of the head and neck of a llama that I came across on an ancient pottery in Yucatan and Tabasco, and on an ancient wooden drum from Tlascalala, the ally of Cortez against the Aztecs. This American camel is to be seen only on the lofty sierra of Peru and Bolivia, and can not live at a lower level."—Literary Digest, May 6, 1911.

"The young woman in all her beauty and power, with her courage in childbirth and her marvelous capacity for devotion, is yet not as beautiful or as noble a specimen of our race as the white-haired grandmother, unselfishly devoted to younger people, happy in the memories of her youth and serene in the peace of old age, unselfish and benevolent and as far in peace, dignity and beauty above the turmoil and passionate eagerness of youth as is the white cloud above the black soil cut into furrows."

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

FREAK RELIGIONS.

We frequently hear of some new religion—the latest, which, like the fashions, ought to be the proper thing with some people. Among the late freakish religions, so-called, we note the following:

The Russian Quakers, who settled in Canada, are the most peculiar on record on this continent. The holding of property, they were taught, was a grave sin. At the command of their elders they liberated their cattle and began to wander about, trying to make converts, and with absolutely no means of sustenance. Eventually the Government was obliged to interfere. The Russian Quakers wore their hair long and went barefooted.

About a year ago London was invaded by a strange sect calling themselves "The Elect." They believed that the Creator had chosen exactly 144,000 people to share heaven with him, and all others were of a lower order in the divine estimation. "The Elect" wear their hair and beards long to distinguish themselves from the unregenerated masses.

The "Cooneyites" are an Irish sect which does not believe in the holding of property. They are allowed to have only one suit of clothes, and neckties and collars are set down as inventions of "ould Nick" himself.—Selected.

"OLDEST CITY."

Here comes another "oldest city" press item which we give for what it may be worth. Brethren who are in position to investigate might look into this question and write it up, if there is any truth in it.

Still another "oldest city in the world" has been discovered. When T. Hewitt Myring found vases in Peru in ruins which were said to be seven thousand years old it was imagined that the remains of early civilizations had been pushed as far into antiquity as they would ever go.

But A. Lafave, a mining engineer, has found the relics of a town in an Arizona table-land near Phoenix which he insists are at least ten thousand years old. The buildings are on a level stretch of country where neither silt nor wash was possible, and yet the ruins were covered with ten feet of prairie dust, which the discoverer claims required ages to accumulate.

The buildings of sandstone show great architectural skill, and in the walls were found a box of cotton bolls and a sealed jar of corn, both well preserved. The Arizona climate does not permit the growth of cotton in the present age, so Mr. Lafave assumes that sufficient time must have elapsed since the cotton which he found was grown to have wrought a complete change in the character of the country. This period he also gauges as something like ten thousand years.

He is satisfied that the ruins are older than those of Nineveh or Babylon. He believes that the race which built this town was possessed of a high civilization, from the abundance of artistically wrought pottery, and that it subsequently was broken up by internal dissension and possibly degenerated into the cliff dwelling tribes.—Exchange.

SALOONS IN IOWA.

The following will be of interest to Saints in general, and especially to those who live in Iowa, as it shows what advances are being made in the movement to wipe out the open saloon:

In a report completed a few days ago, the secretary of state of Iowa gives a comparative statement of the number of saloons in operation since 1906. These statistics show that tremendous inroads are being made by the anti-saloon forces on "wet" territory in Iowa.

The report shows that during the period from September 30, 1906, to the same date in 1910 the number of counties permitting the operation of saloons decreased from 43 to 38, while in the same period there was a falling off of almost twenty-five per cent in the number of saloons in operation in the State.

In 1906 Iowa had 1,770 saloons, while on the closing day of September, 1910, the number had decreased to 1,356, indicating that in four years 414 had closed their doors, an average of more than one hundred per year.

Iowa has a city and municipal license and this varies in different parts of the State. Coon Rapids has a city tax of $4,000 and has but one saloon. Other places have as high as $2,500 a year tax, while Burlington saloons pay nothing whatever to the city.—The American Issue.

PEARY UPHELD.

Two experts of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey have gone over Peary's notes and map of route and believe he made a slight error and instead of being at the pole missed it by a mile and a half. If this is true we should give Peary his full meed of credit, as we do not believe in this case that "a miss is as good as a mile."

CHRISTIAN UNITY MEANS STAGNATION.

Now comes a minister of the gospel and declares that any unity of organization among Christian churches means stagnation, and that such a thing has no great charm for the Baptists.

PHILADELPHIA, June 20.—Standing before delegates from all parts of the globe, the Rev. John Clifford, of London, England, president of the Baptist World Alliance, now holding its second congress in this city to-day took a decided stand against any "unity of organization" among Christian churches.

"We rejoice in the efforts now being made on behalf of unity of the followers of Jesus Christ," he said, "and gladly cooperate with these endeavors. We should hold ourselves guilty if we created or upheld any ecclesiastical division on mere technicalities of the faith or on insignificant details of the practices of churches.

"But with equal frankness we say that a visible, formal, and mechanical unity has no charm for us whatever. It is not the unity Jesus prayed for; nor is it the unity that increases spiritual efficiency, augments righteousness, or advances the kingdom of God. Nor can we forget that the welding of the churches together by bands of state gold, mostly leads to slavery and not freedom, to subserviency and not manliness, to stagnation and not life. Unity of life, of love, and of governing ideas and ideals, let us have by all means, but unity of 'order,' of 'machinery,' or of 'creed' is not in keeping with the 'unity in diversity' either of nature or of grace."

This declaration was received with applause by the great congregation of delegates.—Selected.

GRACELAND COLLEGE.

In the weekly write up of colleges in a recent issue of the Omaha Bee was a notice of Graceland and the year's work, an account of commencement, the enrollment for the past year. We are pleased to see Graceland thus recognized with others.

SUNDAY BASEBALL.

Rev. J. W. Larkin believes in Sunday baseball, and to prove his sincerity he lately addressed a thousand people assembled at the ball park in the city of Poughkeepsie, New York. The sermon had been advertised as a feature of the game and it lasted for a full hour.

"My heart is filled with love and joy and gratitude toward you," he said. "In the enjoyment of this sane and sensible recreation your hearts will, I am sure, be open to the few words I am about to address to you on a subject which is of deep interest to all of us."

One minute after the clergyman had retired the umpire shouted: "Plav ball" and the game was on.—New York Times.

RUSSIA AND THE JEWS.

The situation between the United States and Russia is somewhat strained at present because of the refusal of the latter Government to recognize passports from this country when the bearers happen to be Jews. This is a violation of the treaty which has been in force between these countries for a good many years. The President is taking up this matter, and we hope he will be successful in compelling Russia to recognize American citizens, irrespective of religion. It is said that before a passport will be "vised" at the present time by the Russian ambassador, the question is asked, "What is your religion?"—antagonistic to the spirit of this country where religion must not be considered in matters political.

A NEW HYMN.

A new hymn of international peace has been written lately and sung at some of the eastern churches. It starts:

Two empires by the sea,
Two nations great and free—

We recently noted that in an eastern church a Scotchman took exception to this song, and asked the pertinent question, "When did the United States become an empire?"

DOCTOR HADLEY ON FAITH.

We reproduce the following from an exchange because of the splendid good sense contained therein:

In his baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class of Yale University to-day, President Hadley took for his text, "Fight the good fight of faith; lay hold on eternal life." Doctor Hadley said:

"There are very few men who are strong enough to play their own game to the bitter end in defiance of fate. Very few who have striven to live their own lives without identifying themselves with some cause which will last after they are gone have maintained their purpose unbroken through adversity. The man who believes in himself alone is usually putting his trust on a fragile support.

"Sure and permanent achievement belongs to him who lives for something outside of himself, whether it be his friends or his country, his principles or his faith. The heroes who have been able to assert their personality alone in the face of gods and men have been for the most part heroes of fiction rather than heroes of history.

"The more a man knows of life, the more he feels the need of having things outside of himself to live for. He needs friends; he needs traditions; he needs ideals. These he must have in order to give him stability of purpose and clearness of vision, to steady him in the hour of defeat, and to supply the hope of added strength for the contests that are yet to come. These he must have in order to make the end itself seem worth while."

LO, THE POOR INDIAN!

From the New York World we cull the following which gives us a glimpse of what is being done with the American Indian:

It is stated officially that Indian students at the Carlisle School are in great demand throughout the Eastern States as mechanics and farmers, and that 479 are now detached from the institution for such work. It is fortunate for the Indian that he can adapt himself to the white man's pursuits, but it probably means that some day he will be fused into the great American mass, since there is no color prejudice against the red man, who has always been a warrior, fully equal in battle in the United States and Canada to the Frenchman, Englishman, and American with whom he came in contact.

But it is the wild Indian who will always appeal to the imagination. It is the Indian of the forest and the trail who has made such an impression upon the minds of the white races. It is not likely that civilized tribes will ever produce such famous men as King Philip, Brant, Little Turtle, Pontiac, Tecumseh, Roman Nose, Chief Joseph and Sitting Bull.

PAGANISM IN RUSSIA.

The correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette, London, recently sent in the following communication in regard to certain districts in Russia:

According to official statistics published by the Ministry of the Interior, large numbers of the peasantry in the governments of Perm, Uja, and Viatka have fallen into a state of paganism, worshipping the ancient gods, Flor and Lavra. There are now 20,000 idolators in Viatka, 4,000 in Perm, and 11,000 in Uja.

Local officials say that the worship of Flor and Lavra had never totally disappeared from these districts, but assumed alarming proportions after the bad harvests of the past three years. The pagan priests who still lingered in remote districts carried on active propaganda among the peasantry, telling them that Flor and Lavra sent bad harvests as a sign of anger.

The consequence was that many thousands of peasants ceased to attend the churches, took to sacrificing cattle to Lavra and Flor instead, and attended services in forest groves consecrated to those gods. The police are trying to put a stop to the movement, but without avail, as the large forests shelter the idolators.

The ministry has sent out Doctor Kuzniecowa, of the Moscow Archaeological Institute, to study the movement. The orthodox priests complain that many of their churches are standing quite empty, while in some cases the peasants force them to hang in their churches the hides of cattle which have been sacrificed to Flor and Lavra.

"AS A WISE MASTER-BUILDER, I HAVE LAID THE FOUNDATION, AND ANOTHER BUILDETH THEREON."

—1 CORINTHIANS 3: 10.

The mere changing of architect in the work of finishing Saint John's Cathedral in New York City has precipitated a merry war over the architectural work on that great edifice. Listen to the following criticism found in a letter to the New York Times from one W. Scott Cameron, Southampton, Long Island:

The controversy over Saint John's Cathedral has arisen many years too late, though sooner than I expected. Let us realize at once that it is even now a fearful monstrosity, which nothing can justify, nothing correct. This great cathedral was never intended to be a composite representation of all the polyglot churches, creeds, and sects of Christianity—Greek, Roman, and Protestant. If it was to mean anything it was intended to be a mute but elegant symbolization of the Protestant Episcopal Church, directly transplanted and descended from the Church of England. Its architecture should have been an expression of this. Any Byzantine, Romanesque, or Italian architecture mixed into it is as grotesque and offensive, because historically absurd, as would be details borrowed from the Taj Mahal or the Temple of Karnak. Yet pure Byzantine, Romanesque, or Italian would have been better than the fearful conglomeration of everything in general and nothing in particular which has been perpetrated.

Turning to the great English cathedrals, which alone should have been studied to inspire the design of Saint John's, it is true that few of the former are harmonious throughout. Durham is pure Norman; so is Peterborough, with the exception of its western facade; Salisbury, which was built within two generations, is pure Early English. Most of them, however, exhibit under one roof succeeding periods of Norman, Transitional, Early English, Geometrical, and Perpendicular. But there is nothing vulgar nor ridiculous in this, because each tells a story—a poem, perhaps—of the history of the church, the succeeding dynasties, and the development of artistic taste and architectural skill among the people, as each pious old archbishop or abbot little by little did what he could to improve and beautify the church he had grown to love—first always the choir, next the transepts, finally the nave. Yet if an architect of the fourteenth or fifteenth century had proposed deliberately to build a church with the mixed up architecture of the preceding three centuries he would have rightly been judged insane.

Far worse than this has been done with Saint John's, for every type of architecture, with the possible exception of Chinese, has been shoveled together, and the effect is appalling to behold. The columns which outline the apse would be impressive in their great size if it were not that they seem to have no architectural excuse for being where they are, and the added absurdity that they are crowded so close together as to mask one another, even when viewed from the crossing. The soaring height of the great arch at the western end of the choir would be majestic in its dignity—and this in northern France or England four hundred years ago would have been carefully accentuated by clustered columns or very deep moldings—but, horror of horrors, it has been utterly destroyed and brutalized by the niches which have been chopped out of it from top to bottom. One of the completed chapels is adorned with columns, spirally fluted in the Norman style, crowned by Greek capitals and lighted by windows with fourteenth century Gothic tracery, so bad that one is almost tempted to believe it was done as a joke.

It is too late. Perhaps we should not wonder when we remember how our most eminent sculptors can in their ignorance design gold coins which will not stack and a statue of General Sherman mounted upon a horse which combines two sexes in its sculptured anatomy. Saint John's Cathedral, like the Yale campus, must stand as a monument to the fact that in our times American wealth, prosperity, and generosity had far outgrown American good taste and artistic perception.

We have the idea forced home to us that more concern should be shown in regard to whether the Great Architect is at the head of these churches, and less as to such immaterial things as outlined in the foregoing letter.

"THE MELTING POT."

Dr. Charles A. Eaton, of the Madison Avenue Baptist Church, New York City, characterizes that city as the "bloody angle" in the Nation's struggle to save its soul. He says:

It is a blessed and glorious privilege to be a pastor anywhere, but especially so in New York. First of all, because New York is probably the hardest field for religious work in America, and therefore the most attractive. This is not because the people are more wicked or unbelieving than others. Human nature here is like human nature everywhere, only there is more of it. But because of our racial diversity and the amazing swiftness of our growth New York is in a state of intellectual and moral fluidity. Our common meeting ground is external and secondary. The only universal language we know is the language of meat and drink. Those deep, divine experiences of the Spirit which constitute the real life of men remain the secret possession of the individual. . . . New York people are just folks, whether on the avenues or in the alleys. I find love everywhere. I suppose I could find hate if I were looking for it. There is appalling sin and sorrow and suffering. No one can deny the gross materialism which stupefies conscience and stimulates greed and envy and vulgar display. But above all is the growing authority of the civic conscience which betokens the real existence of real morality among the people.

Rev. Christian R. Reisner, of Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, One Hundred and Fourth street, denies that New York City is a graveyard for ministers.

Before I came to New York, I had often heard it spoken of as the graveyard of ministers. To defamers we have the worst city on earth. I have been here a year now, and I can truthfully say that it has been the most encouraging year of my life. I have found the people of New York responsive to the appeal of the gospel.

It seems to me that the people of this city are becoming tired of display and excitement. I am reliably informed that only two or three theaters made any money last year. There is a demand for a new form of excitement, deeper and more lasting than the theater can give. Religion and its allies must be used to satisfy this demand.

RELIGIOUS ENVOY TO THE CZAR AND POPE.

Rev. Dr. Robert S. MacArthur, who was recently elected as president of the Baptist Word Alliance, will soon go to Russia to see the Czar, and later to the vatican. There are in New York a number of Russian Baptist ministers, whose apostasy from their original faith brought many of them to prison, some of them being in this country on bail. Russian government spies are said to be here watching these ministers. Reverend McArthur said: "The time has arrived when the Czar and the Pope must learn that this is the twentieth century, not the fifteenth, and when the voice of religious democracy must be heard even in Peterhof and the vatican."

LAWS OF THE AIR.

Among other problems to be solved by the birdmen is that of the laws of the air. Perhaps this will be left, however, with lawyers and legislators who will never know what it is to get away from the solid ground except in an elevator. Will it be a delegation of authority or a restriction of rights? At present they seem to have little rights. Parliament passed certain laws in regard to flying men to be effective during the coronation celebrations in London. We clip the following from an exchange which will give some idea of the problem:

Our correspondents find continued difficulty as well as continued interest in the problems of ownership raised by the new art of aviation. Their letters on the subject grieve us, however, because of the mathematical heresies which they all contain.

To one writer, who claimed that aviators could fly in unregulated because unowned air if only they would stick to channels between prisms erected on each separate parcel of land, we carefully explained that there would be no such prisms and no such channels—that ownership went by pyramids with their points at the earth's center and their bases infinitely remote and infinitely large, so that all space was included by them.

This elicited an epistle declaring pyramids as wrong as prisms—which of course they are not. Later came one that denied any ownership at all of the space above owned land for the curious reason that because of the motions of the earth that space is constantly changing, making possession impossible. Plainly this is not true, since what the landowner claims is not a fixed fraction of space, but the monopolistic use of whatever space may be above his land at any and all times. Of this claim there can be no contestants unless other worlds have inhabitants.

The fact is that under the old and hitherto unquestioned theories of ownership the aviator has no right of way anywhere except over navigable waters, and there is nothing to do except to modify the old theories and bring them into accord with new conditions.

"Already in an imperfect way we see a realization of what we take to be the meaning of that text from the Bible. A young man starting out, even in our distorted civilization, sees visions of wealth and power for himself. He has the power and gets the wealth, and in his old age dreams dreams of a better world, and gives back tens of millions to those from whom he took the money and power that he can not and would not take beyond the grave."

The Seeds.

Deep in the woods, beneath the snow,
The little seeds in patience lie;
But when the winds of March shall blow
And glory fills the earth and sky,
The seeds all hidden there to-day
Will have performed their duties well;
Each petal blown across the way
The pleasing tale shall sweetly tell.

The gentle words we speak are seeds
That often lie long winters through Before they blossom into deeds,
Or bring the gains we wish them to;
But though the chilling winds may blow
And barren regions stretch away,
From seeds of kindness that we sow
The blooms of joy will spring some day.

—S. E. KISER.

SALINA, KANSAS.

Dear Sisters: As this is Sunday and no preaching of the gospel here, I thought I would write asking about your work, if isolated Saints can join your column. I have been a reader of the HERALD for many years, also of Zion's Ensign, and could not well do without them as we are away from all church work. It is true they have an Adventist Sunday school and preaching at our schoolhouse, but if you have been isolated as I have and trying to show them the truth, you will understand why they don't want me to attend. When they go past me the Adventists will not speak to me, so it isn't pleasant for me to attend there, so I am, as it were, lost without the opportunity to attend Sunday school. I have been giving reading matter to those who would read our church literature, until, while none have, as yet, come into our church, they have, as it were, outgrown other churches. They are not very religiously inclined here, but are enlightened enough so they seem to think more favorably of the true gospel than of the others. The United Brethren people were here for two or three years, but they were run out by the Adventists, so they have no preaching here, and now the Adventists are about to close and hunt for better fields. They say I am fighting them and tearing down their work, but my conscience is clear on that point, as I try never to answer only by giving them passages of scripture. I am made to know that Jesus spoke the truth when he said, "If the world hate me, it will hate you also." But I rejoice in knowing we have the truth. I feel sorry when I see them fighting the church of Christ, and feel that I want to do all I can to get them to understand, and if there are any honest hearted people here, my prayer is that the gospel may reach them.

I have six children. Three have been baptized, two girls that are married, but they have husbands that are not interested in religion, and my only son, who is fourteen, was baptized by Brother Madden; but it is a hard place to raise a family where it is as it is here, and they have uncles that are not interested or do not care for religion at all. My husband died three years ago, so I feel a great responsibility resting on me now. I ask the prayers of the mothers for myself and children, if it be God's will that they may become interested in the gospel. They say, "Why, ma, I couldn't stand the slurs they throw at you," meaning the Adventist preacher. He is so abusive to the Saints as he knows he hasn't many to meet here. He talks about "Old Joe Smith" in his sermons and tells the people our teaching is of the devil.

Pray that the seed sown here may bring forth fruit to the honor and glory of God. I would love to have the association of the Saints, but want to be where my heavenly Father wants me to be, and to do as he wants me to do. Pray for me that I may have wisdom to do nothing that will injure the work if the time comes that the gospel is preached here. We have only had a few weeks' preaching here in the last ten years.

Will close asking your forgiveness for intruding so much, but if you knew how lonely I get and how hungry to hear the gospel I am sure you would pardon me.

ANNIE HARRIS.

Letter Department

OTTUMWA, IOWA, June 21, 1911.

Editors Herald: Will you say through your columns that each branch president of this district should send me, July 1, a report of his branch for the closing quarter. Get the reports in promptly as possible; save delay, so the report will find its way soon as possible to the minister in charge, and finally to the First Presidency. Any president not having blank provided, write to me at my home address, Lamoni, Iowa, or Herald Publishing House.

Having been chosen to succeed Brother Fry as district president, I take this means of letting each reader of the HERALD know I am in my field of labor, which is altogether new to me. I desire the cooperation of each Saint in the district. I trust we may continue the grand work by conducting ourselves in a proper manner, for on that our success depends. When we stop to think, we are in historic places, dear to the hearts of the Saints, and may we profit by the mistakes of bygone days. I trust we may show a marked degree of spiritual development this year, and thus honor our heavenly Father by doing those things that are pleasing to him. Let us keep the grand work before ourselves, our friends, and associates. We are living in the hastening time, so let each one do his or her part faithfully and well, coming up to the condition designed by our Master.

We should like to hear from the scattered members in regard to new openings. The district is large, and we find only one other minister appointed to this field besides ourselves, and he has to divide his labor with the Eastern Iowa District. We have confined our labors thus far to the city of Ottumwa, since coming to the district, for we found plenty to occupy the time visiting and administering to the sick, preaching, and performing other duties of a minister of Christ. If there is an elder who contemplates making a change in his location, Ottumwa has a population of about 23,000 and a branch of 81 Saints, and they need an elder very badly, so if any could move here, labor is plentiful in the mines, factories, and railroad shops. If any elder reads this, let him correspond with some of the Saints in regard to coming.

I have not yet decided on a field address. My home address is Lamoni, Iowa. What does each branch in the district think of going in with Eastern Iowa and Kewanee Districts for reunion? Let us hear from each branch and when you say you wish to have the reunion in your home district, it means you are to attend. Otherwise we take it for granted that we shall have a reunion in name only. A reunion is first for Saints; second, for friends and outsiders who wish to attend.

Trusting the Lord may kindly remember and bless all. Let us hear from each branch president when sending in their report July first.

Your brother in Christ,

CHARLES E. HARPE.

PITTSBURG, KANSAS, June 15, 1911.

Dear Herald: Just a few lines from our district conference, which was held at Fairland, Oklahoma, in the Saints' chapel and was presided over by J. F. Curtis and J. Arthur Davis. And be it remembered that this Spring River District takes in a part of Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Arkansas, and will take the new man some little time to locate it.

All were highly pleased to meet Apostle J. F. Curtis, and also our new missionaries, T. W. Chatburn and H. Sparling. The last two, by their peculiar and agreeable characteristics, seemed like twin brothers, only that one is an American minister, the other came across the waters, so we are told. However, they are both great workers for the Master, and the conference as a whole was a pleasant one and educational. The sermons were by Elders Curtis, Sparling and Chatburn, and were highly commented upon. The church could not hold all the people. The branch had provided a dining hall for the visitors, thus relieving the sisters of that burden, so they could attend the conference sessions,—a very commendable move.

As there are many interested there, I believe the meetings will be continued by Brother Curtis during the week, Brother Sparling going to Scammon, Kansas, to hold tent meetings. Brother Chatburn was received as district president. We can truly say here, the field is large but the laborers are few; yet there are many local laborers that will help very materially, and may the Lord bless the efforts of all.

In gospel bonds,

J. A. DAVIS.

GORDON, NEBRASKA, June 18, 1911.

Editors Herald: Wishing to get in touch with those in charge of this district, I write to the HERALD, as I am not well enough acquainted with Nebraska to know in what district we reside. Wish to say that Bro. Levi Gamet held a few meetings here last summer against great opposition. I tried to get the Christian Church, rented by Saints of God, so-called, but they would not let us have the use of it again.

What I wish to say is this: I believe if there is a tent for this district and it could be sent here real soon, we would be able to get out a fairly good crowd. I think this would have to be either before or right after haying. If one or two elders could come, prepared to stay a while, I believe some prejudice might be removed at least. I would do all I possibly could to care for the elders and think the majority would help what they could, although most live a great way out of town. Any elders or Saints passing through Gordon would be welcome at our home, one mile west of Gordon, should they have opportunity to stop here. Crops here need rain, especially small grain, and unless we have it soon, it will do no good. I miss the associations of the Saints much, and trust the time will speedily come when the honest hearted ones of this place will have a chance to hear and will have courage to obey the restored gospel. Am thankful that I have had the opportunity to obey, and wish the prayers of the Saints that I may hold fast to the rod of iron that leads to eternal life, there to be surrounded by my entire family, some of whom have not as yet accepted the truth.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion and her people,
MRS. ELI BUTTERWORTH BABER.

Editors of the Herald: I call you brothers, for we are brothers in several ways, though we do not belong to the same church organization. First, we are brothers as all humanity are brothers, because we are all the children of Adam and Eve. Again, we are all the children of Noah, and we are brothers as all believers in our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, are brothers. We are also brothers in the belief in the Book of Mormon, a faithful witness of the divinity, birth, mission, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ. It also foretells, as does the Bible, that all mankind shall rise from the dead and stand before the throne of God to be judged of their works, and of their final state of eternal happiness or eternal misery.

I will not write a long article this time, but if you see fit to print this, may write again. I was interested in the autobiography of Bro. James Kemp which was in the HERALD not long ago, for it brought to me thoughts of my childhood. We, too, left Utah for the States in 1865. Father and mother were convinced by the elders of the Reorganization that they had left the word of God and were following men. And they joined the Reorganized Church. It may have been my father's oxen that helped Brother Kemp out of his difficulty. We, too, had a division, and we may have been the party that separated from Brother Kemp's party. I remember distinctly that Brother Thornton was with the party that separated from us. If we were the party that Brother Kemp refers to as losing everything, he is mistaken, for we merely lost our horses and some things we burned that the loads might be lightened for the oxen, for we still had ox teams to draw the wagons. But I would not make him an offender for a word. It was not pictured on his mind as vividly as it was on mine, for I saw the Indians when they came after the horses.

I wish to relate an incident that refers to the gift of tongues. I believe in the gifts of the gospel, and that they should be in the church, and that they should not be abused. Father, mother, and myself and brother and some of our neighbors had joined the Reorganization and we had meetings in our house. There was a sister that frequently spoke in tongues and her husband interpreted them. My mother prayed for the gift of interpretation of tongues, and one evening mother had the interpretation of the tongue the sister spoke, but she did not tell it in the meeting, but after they went to bed she said to father, "I believe I had the interpretation of that tongue, for I saw as plainly as though I was reading it that Sister Thornton and her children will join the church and go back to the States. The brother interpreted it just as I saw it, but he added 'with her companion', I did not see that, but of course he will go, for he belongs to the church now, so he must have had it more perfectly than I had it." Sister Thornton and two of her sons joined the Reorganization, and with her companion they started to the States, but they were with the party that separated from us. But Brother Thornton died and was buried in one of the Territories. So we see that sometimes things are added to the word of God. This tongue was doubtless given and interpreted as it was to cause people to trust in God but not in man.

I thank God for the gift of his Son, and I believe I will yet overcome the temptations of Satan and be saved in the kingdom of God. And I pray that many will repent and be saved in his kingdom.

H. A. THOMAS.

MURRAYVILLE, B. C., June 8, 1911.

Dear Herald: As it has been my lot to be left alone the greater part of the time, in the past few weeks, I thought I could not occupy my time in any better way than by writing to this valuable paper, which has been and is a source of great comfort to me. It is now about fifteen months since we left Michigan to come to this western country, and since coming out here it has not been our privilege to meet with the Saints in a house of worship; but before another year rolls round, I hope to be so situated that we may be able to have that privilege once again.

We are still striving in our weak way to uphold the banner of truth and to defend the gospel whenever we have an opportunity. It seems to me at times that we are wasting our time out here, for well I know we are not advancing along the lines of church work the way we ought to, and when one stops to consider it, what else in this life is there to live for but to prepare one's self for the world that is to come, and to help others; for by helping others we help ourselves. We may be enabled to advance in temporal affairs more rapidly here than elsewhere, but if we are not advancing in spiritual affairs, I feel that we are losing instead of gaining. I have always had that desire to be active in the service of the Master, and unless I am my mind is uneasy. I believe the happiest days of my life I spent teaching a restless class of boys and girls at Bay Port. Some of them are now members of the church, and my earnest prayer is that more of them will be.

I was much impressed with the article on the Children's Home in the Autumn Leaves, and believe that Brother and Sister Robinson are undertaking a great work; for to my mind, there is no grander work than that of training the pure, innocent minds in the right way. I believe the church needs just such a home, and I feel to thank God that it has such a fair start. I have one baby boy of my own, and if I ever had to part from him, I should want to know that he was going to just such influences as Sister Robinson is going to have in her home. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am

Your sister in the faith,
KATIE DUTCHER McNAMARA.

SANDOVAL, ILLINOIS, June 16, 1911,

Editors Herald: The HERALD brings glad tidings to us and we anxiously wait each week for the spiritual food it brings. This is the only way I have to bear my testimony to the work I love, and which is all the world to me. When reading from time to time of Saints being isolated, I have thought how lonely it must be, but not until now could I truly sympathize with those who are alone,—I say alone, for oh, how I feel without the Saints I have loved so well. When I parted from the Springfield Saints who were so cheering to us, it nearly broke my heart, and now no one is here for me to talk to. This is such a wicked place; their conversation is like a bell with a clapper. How many times do I repeat, "How sweet to my soul is communion with Saints."

But I am trying in my weak way to let my light shine and to be worthy of the name I bear. I have always prayed to be ready when the trump of God shall sound, that I may come forth in that glad morning to reign with Christ a thousand years. This has always been my desire, and I have always prayed to that end, but I felt unworthy, as though something was left undone, and I prayed and asked the Lord that in some way I might know what my fault was.

I will relate my dream, for perhaps it may be of some help to some one. I dreamed of the day of resurrection and thought I saw the Savior. He was such a common looking man to be the Christ. All those around me had been resurrected, and he just shook his head. Oh, what a thrill of pain, and how bitterly I cried. When he came again, I asked, "Haven't I lived as good as I could?" and he said, "Yes, you have only one fault." Then he explained to me a fault that I have so long prayed to know.

I want to be ready with oil in my lamp to hear that "Well done, good and faithful servant." Those words bring joy to my soul, and I long "for a faith that will not shrink, though pressed by every foe."

I feel more and more like pressing onward and upward as I go along, and even though I feel my weakness, I am encouraged when I look back. It is my desire to live to receive the blessings God has in store for his children. I have added testimony to this work, and I know that if we do our part God will do his. It is my desire to live and raise my children so that when they grow older, they may be instruments in God's hands.

Ever praying for the welfare of the Saints, and the redemption of Zion, is the prayer of a weak Saint.

AMOS HOLVEY.

Editors Herald: While there appear a great many explanations on different truths, the explanation on the sixth of Romans by Bro. J. W. Rushton should for ever settle the question of baptism and its object. My attention has been attracted to the prejudice in some parts of England. This is nothing new; it originated in the days of Christ, when the scaly eyed creeds opposed Jesus and his followers for years, as history informs us. And the victims are always Christians that fall a prey to this unconsolable appetite. In view of their leader, the Devil, he being such a popular individual, should not some of his pupils possess his characteristics. Maggots will eat on the victims till some strong antiseptic is applied which prevents their operations. This is only a faint illustration of the Bible in the hands of a Christian or a Mormon, against the deadly inroads of abominable creeds. The word of God is what they hate if it is strongly against them. Already too much time has been consumed in the letter, but only a few ideas have been touched. While I correspond for two or three leading Canadian papers, let me remember to produce a few remarks for the gospel and our brethren who devote their time and talent in producing the truth for our welfare.

W. W. BOYCE.

DES MOINES, IOWA, June 24, 1911.

To the Saints of the Des Moines District: Having many requests from the Saints who have manifested so kind an interest in the welfare of my companion, to let them know of her condition as soon as mail service was restored to Durango, I take this means of writing you all at once. She has passed through two very serious operations, one March 16 and one June 1. While the first was considered much the more dangerous, yet she barely escaped death in the last as the result of an hemorrhage. Letters since, report her out of danger and seeming to be doing very well, with a prospect of better conditions and health in the future. Our son Eugene is passing through a siege of typhoid fever, but at last report was improving, with a fair prospect of breaking the fever soon.

I have greatly appreciated the sympathy and help of the Saints in our years of trial. I have made some conditional promises to some of the Saints in the district to do missionary work, and if I disappoint you, it is not of choice. Additional expense is added with additional sickness, and I am making every effort to raise means to meet same by hard work, and I have done fairly well. When free, I hope I can be in condition to resume the work as a missionary. It is hoped that Mrs. Christy can return to the States not later than September 1, and sooner if advisable.

We are purchasing a new tent for district work, and have funds enough on hand to purchase, but scarcely sufficient to pay freight and a week's running expenses. If any can help in this good work, send all the money to me at 1205 Filmore street, Des Moines, Iowa. Please send all church money to me at above address, care of J. F. Mintun, as there is less danger of its getting lost. I am constantly on the move, looking after business matters, and Brother Mintun will give my mail careful attention. With kindest regards to all, I am

Your servant in the gospel,

W. CHRISTY.

BRANDON, MANITOBA, CANADA.

Dear Editor: I want to go farther west and take up a homestead, and I would like to go where there is a branch of Saints if I could. I should like to have some of the Saints out west write to me and give me any information they can about locating in the west. There are my wife, a little girl six years old, and myself, and since we came here there was a young man just from school in England who came here. We have talked the gospel to him and he is reading the Book of Mormon, and he would like to get a place on a farm with some Latter Day Saints. The man we are working for is an elder in the Presbyterian Church, and has tried to poison the mind of this young man against this latter day work, but we have shown him differently. He is sixteen years old and small, and he likes farming. So if there are any Saints that want such a young man, please let me know.

ALBERT E. MARTIN.

139 SIXTEENTH STREET.

TOLEDO, WASHINGTON, June 21, 1911.

Editors Herald: I am still in the work. I left home on the 10th of May, and came to my field of labor, bringing my family with me. We arrived in good time, after a splendid journey.

The writer has done some preaching since coming to this district, but I find that the class of people who live in this western country are not very strongly inclined to be religious, and do not turn out very well. The great moving influence here is the "greed for gold."

I desire to do all I can while here to get the gospel before the people, so that the honest in heart may hear and obey. In this the scattered Saints and friends can help very much by sending word to the writer, or others of the missionaries, when opportunities for preaching are to be had. We desire to see the work opened up in new places and continued and strengthened in those places where it has been opened. Let us remember the admonition of Paul (Ephesians 6: 18-20), that we should pray for all Saints and for the ministry, that we may be able to open our mouths boldly to make known the mystery of the gospel. This is a momentous age, one in which the conflict between right and wrong is at its height, and for this reason we need to be very careful or, like the "picket" who was taken unaware, enabling the enemy to capture the whole army, we also may be taken unaware, as God's earthly pickets, thus not only suffering loss ourselves, but causing great havoc in the army of the Lord.

I desire an interest in the prayers of all God's people. May the conflict for truth prevail, is my prayer.

P. T. PLUMB.

OWENSVILLE, INDIANA, June 11, 1911.

Dear Saints: I don't know very many of the Saints that write, but love to read their letters as it gives me greater courage. I should love to have a few of the Saints I know pick up a little more faith and write a letter once in a while, as there are several Saints I should love to hear from, especially those that are so far from me that belonged in our branch. I very often think of the good old times I used to have when I belonged to a large branch; but now as I look around, seeing so many wicked ones, it disheartens me very much, although I try to live as nearly right as I can. I feel that I could live better if I were where good Christian people were about me all the time, but I suppose there are good and bad to be found everywhere. I may do things sometimes contrary to the teachings of the good Master; and when I look back, thinking I have done something wrong, I will ask him in the humblest way I know how to forgive me. I have read in his word where that is what he commanded his children to do.

Dear Saints, I think we should all strive to do our parts, and we should not wait for another, for when we do our duty, the way will be clearly opened unto us and there will be no stumbling-block in our way. This path will lead us to life everlasting, our blessed eternal home, where there is no pain or death. Dear Saints, I feel the Spirit dwelling with me very much to-day, and when I feel the Spirit it makes me feel happy, just like the good Lord is near by me and keeping me from every harm. I want all the dear Saints to remember me and my husband in their prayers, that we may be true workers for God, gaining truth and knowledge in this world, for we must go along step by step, not doubting or wavering, but with the Lord's help holding fast that which is good.

"How will the Saints rejoice to tell,
And count their sufferings o'er,
When they upon Mount Zion dwell
And view the landscape o'er."

Ever trusting that I may hold out faithful and gain a home in heaven,
Your sister in Christ,

MARY J. THOMPSON.

FRASER, IOWA, June 20, 1911.

Dear Herald: Working in Des Moines District seems like getting back home. Many old familiar faces, and new ones, but some have passed. After conference, by request, I went to Perry. Held services from Friday to Monday evening, when I had to leave for tent work here. Found a willing band at Perry,—the sisters willing to work and the brethren willing they should. Sister Martin is doing acceptable work in the Religio, putting the Book of Mormon in poetry. This is illustrated by cuts from books and papers by Sr. Alta Walters. These make an impression on the youthful mind and can not fail to impress them for good.

We had the pleasure of admitting a daughter of Sister Walters and Sr. Alice Izenhart through the waters of baptism into the church. Since coming here have admitted one into the fold and three more have given their names. I find my motorcycle a traveling convenience, and reach the people with the message from whom I would otherwise be debarred. The people here are interested in gospel themes, and we hope to reach many with the light of truth. By God's grace, we'll keep on striving.

Yours in bonds,

WHEELING, WEST VIRGINIA, June 21, 1911.

Editors Herald: We are not behind in up-to-date advertising here in Wheeling. We have the city well lined with advertising matter. Cards eleven by eleven inches, printed, cut in center. These we hang in business places in windows and tack in conspicuous places; also two thousand hand bills scattered, announcing meetings and some of the subjects to be discussed. Some of the papers have given us a write up. One paper used a cut of the speaker, and a bold heading about as follows: "Mormonism Exposed," to be the main topic, and the article declaring the difference between us and our western friends. Fairly good attendance each evening. A bunch of wideawake Saints here. Some excellent young people.

Hopefully,

O. R. MILLER.

BIRMINGHAM, ENGLAND, 112 Fernley Road, Sparkhill.

Dear Sir: Will you kindly correct the following errors that appeared in the HERALD of May 24, 1911, respecting the Birmingham annual district conference minutes? Where the name C. Waldon is mentioned, it should be or read C. Walton. Wherever the name Waldon is mentioned, it should read Walton. C. Norton should read E. Norton; J. C. Meredith should read J. E. Meredith, G. L. Greenwood should read G. S. Greenwood in both places, E. A. Meredith should read J. E. Meredith in both places, John Leho Field, secretary, should read John Schofield, secretary.

Very respectfully,

J. SCHOFIELD.

Kirtland Temple.

This conference year finds me pleasantly located in the old historic Kirtland Hotel. For the first time since I took the field five years ago I have the privilege of having my family with me; my past lot having been to be a thousand miles away from home for ten months of the year.

G. T. Griffiths and R. C. Russell, of the Twelve, have visited here of late. Brother Griffiths gave wise spiritual counsel to the Saints, visiting and cheering old acquaintances. Brother Russell's short stay was a strenuous one. His will and energy were directed toward accomplishing something useful along temporal or physical, as well as spiritual lines. The heavy asbestos curtains in the temple were hung hurriedly some years ago when they were put up, and sagged more every year until they were unsightly. Brother Russell and the writer have them in neat shape now, R. C. doing the larger part of the work. It required considerable ingenuity to do the work right, but R. C. was equal to the task. The writer took some lessons in Canadian culture or cultivation, and the hotel garden is the better for it. Some of our live stock is more alive since R. C. was here (which is not always the case when preachers are around), especially the old mare, which has been resurrected by Brother Russell, and she makes the trip to Willoughby now in eighteen minutes!

The Saints are already preparing for the joint reunion, which is to be held here August 17 to 27, by painting, paper hanging, etc. The reunions in this part of the country are important yearly features of the lives of many of the Saints, and are looked forward to with pleasant anticipations. This year I believe will be the banner year in size, and spiritual and physical enjoyment. The facilities are here for a magnificent gathering and an enjoyable time.

A few words about the Kirtland Temple. Many of your readers have never had the privilege of seeing this noble old building, so a short description may be timely. It stands high, and from the belfry, one hundred and twenty feet from the ground, can be seen Lake Erie, six miles away. Tourists grow enthusiastic over the gorgeous view spread before the eye, as the sun is setting on the distant lake, and the Saints have been complimented time after time by the Temple visitors in selecting such a sightly spot for the house of the Lord. Millionaires Sherwin, Moore, Everet, Andrews, etc., by building mansions around Kirtland, agree with Saints of former days that Kirtland is a nice place to live in, or "at."

Is a fine locality for the ministry. Brother McConnaughey, of the Seventy, has lately moved in, and Bro. N. L. Booker is coming, I understand.

The building is of stone, with walls two feet four inches thick, plastered outside with a hair plaster with a top coating of cement, making a covering over the stone of about three quarters of an inch. The cement is held together in a most wonderful manner, and only the highest devotion suggested the method. The women of the church took the chinaware of a hundred years ago (so much sought after now by antiquarians), from their tables, crushed it, and mixed it with the cement! It can be seen shining in the sunlight.

There are four beams in the cellar, each about fifty-eight feet long, of hewn oak, about thirteen inches square, extending from one side of the foundation to the other. The eight pillars in the building rest on these beams, which in turn are supported by large stone pillars.

The lower auditorium is strikingly original in conception, certainly nothing on earth resembling it. In both the lower and upper auditoriums, there are four tiers of pulpits at each end, with provision made for the upper three tiers to be occupied by three persons in each tier. The pulpit where the speaker stands is of walnut, with a large walnut apron hanging down from it, which was used for the sacrament service by raising the apron. It has "P. E. M." inlaid in it with some kind of white wood, which means, "Presiding Elder Melchisedec priesthood." The other end of the building is the Aaronic priesthood section, curtains dividing the two sections exactly in half, when desired. The pulpits are all lettered, according to the authority which was to occupy them.

The second auditorium was to be used as a schoolroom for the ministry. The arrangement of the pulpits and curtains is something similar to the lower auditorium, but the seats are not the same. On the first floor are the old-fashioned box pews, with doors, while on the second floor there are no doors to the pews. This floor has one of the finest specimens of a colonial window, architects say, to be found in the country. It is black walnut; what a pity that it has been painted! It is all hand work, with a beautiful twining vine crowning it. The Saturday Evening Post and the Ladies' Home Journal seem to deserve credit for discovering or at least advertising the beauty of the simple swastika, which bids fair to compete with the beautiful fleur de lis. But the builders of the temple knew of the beauty of this design and worked it in most ingeniously and artistically on this window seventy-seven years ago!

Some of the plaster has fallen on this floor, revealing the method of lathing at the time the building was erected. A thin board was selected with erratic grain, nailed on one edge, split, pulled out, and nailed, and the process kept up until the whole board was hacked and nailed, making what was then termed "split lath." There is a board in the back of one of the seats of a pulpit which is thirty-two inches wide.

The third floor contains five rooms which were used for quorum meetings, and important ordinations took place in them.

There are three thousand five hundred panes of glass in the building; much of it has stood the storms of all these years. The original glass is easily discernible.

Briefly, this is the building which those who will attend the reunion will have the privilege of worshipping in. It is a structure which yearly draws Mr. Rockefeller (made one visit this year) and the most humble artisans to view the wonders of its construction. Its fame has spread over the world and has materially helped to advertise our cause. A number of the Utah elders have been through it this year. Have had some arguments with them. I have the original edition of the Book of Mormon and the 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, which I exhibit to visitors as means to introduce the subject of the differences between the two organizations. These books silence the polygamist and convince the stranger on the polygamy question. The ex-mayor of Cleveland, with a large party, passed through several weeks ago and said, "The State of Ohio should take enough pride in this building to appropriate means whereby it can be kept in perfect repair. It is a noble monument of the resources of the State in timber, stone, and men of past years, and should be preserved for the future."

Will close with this poem composed by John Curry for the coming reunion.

KIRTLAND, OHIO, June 26, 1911.

KIRTLAND TEMPLE.

Oh, sacred edifice! built by the Lord's command!

Witness the House of God, a crown upon this land;
Throughout the entire earth this temple stands alone
As one required of God, an edifice his own.

By sacrifice 'twas reared, its walls oft felt the tears
Of noble-hearted men, pilots in early years;
When darkness thick o'erlaid this village like a pall,
Their prayers here rose to him who pilots all.

With kindred love to-day, a reunited band
As Saints of Jesus Christ, inside these walls we stand;
Our purpose, God to serve; his glory our delight,
We'll now enlist anew to battle for the right.

With charity for all, our brethren we'll forgive,
That God may own us both we'll look on him and live.
Inside these walls or out we'll serve the Lord with zeal,
We pray for light and strength; may we his presence feel.

BOULDER, COLORADO, June 22, 1911.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I have burdened the columns of your valuable paper, but thinking that a few items would be of interest to your many readers, I will attempt to give you a few of the many events that are transpiring in this part of the vineyard.

Immediately after conference I returned to my field of labor and was called upon to defend our work in a public discussion near Burlington, Colorado, with a Mr. Goalen, of the so-called Church of Christ. The debate lasted for eleven evenings, and we believe good was accomplished. Some of the positions occupied by my opponent are as follows: On the name of the church he objected to our calling it "The Church of Jesus Christ." He challenged me to show where the Master was called Jesus Christ, before he was baptized. I feel safe in saying that in the future he will not challenge us to show where he was called by that name, even before he was baptized. I gave him many quotations to prove that the correct name of the church would be called after the name of Jesus Christ.

He objected to any but Christ being the head of the church, and had an image with two heads and one body, using it to illustrate how our church appeared. He never attempted to meet the statement made in 1 Corinthians 11:3, where we find the following: "But I would have you know that the head of every man is Christ; and the head of the woman is man; and the head of Christ is God." Under this same rule of logic we would have four heads and only one body, but the plain teaching of the Scripture is that God is head over all and yet each have a head of their own.

He also claimed that there were four kinds of apostles, and that he himself was an apostle the same as Barnabas. He also claimed that to be an apostle they must be a witness of the resurrection of Christ. He failed to tell us where we could find the scripture telling of the four kinds of apostles. He claimed they have apostles the same as the Jews had Moses and the prophets—in word only. He asked me to show where there were any apostles after John, and we in turn asked him to show where there were any elders in the church after John. In affirming his church, he claimed that there were no laity, but all were priests and kings. We asked him to tell us of one member of his church that held the office of king. This he never did.

Of course his church had its origin on the day of Pentecost (?) but the history of it seems to commence at a very modern date; in fact, the first we find it in existence was when Thomas Campbell was found baptizing from the roots of a tree in the year 1811. See Life of A. Campbell, by Grafton, page 82.

I quoted from Sketches of Our Pioneers in regard to the strange manifestations that were had in some of the factions that finally made up the church that my opponent represented, showing that they barked like dogs, had the "jerks," and many other manifestations equally as bad, and yet these manifestations were called "heavenly" by the members of this "infant church" as it was called by their historian.

He repudiated almost every publication that was introduced except Linn's History of the Mormons, from which he read quite extensively, also Neal's literature. He resorted to the same methods that the opponents of the latter day work generally use, but when examined by those who are really wanting truth they fall to the ground without much weight.

I have heard all kinds of bad things said about the Book of Mormon, but my opponent was the first person to object to it for saying that polygamy was an abomination, (unless the Salt Lake people have objected). He claimed that polygamy was not an abomination and defended it all the rest of the debate. He stated that polygamy was permitted the same as divorce. Certainly when men can't find any better argument than to object to its calling polygamy an abomination they are quite hard pressed for something to say, and should have the honesty to quit the controversy.

The objection was urged that the day of miracles was past, and that there could be no more miracles, but when my opponent's attention was called to the resurrection of the dead, which is still in the future, he seceded from that position and made the claim that it was not to be in force now, so was no part of the plan of salvation. He claimed there could be only one high priest at a time, so we could not have an indefinite number at the present time.

Brother Curtis acted as my moderator, and rendered valuable assistance, especially along the lines of Greek, which my opponent used quite freely in trying to confuse the minds of the audience as to the plain teaching of the scripture. Brother Curtis signed propositions to hold a debate in Burlington if a building can be had for that purpose.

I came to this place and began preaching on the street, and was glad to have Bro. R. Bullard come and help me out. We have had a fair hearing and hope to see some good come from our efforts. There are many other places that need preaching which we hope to reach later on. Bro. O. B. Thomas expects to labor in this part of the district, and no doubt will render valuable aid.

Hopefully,
L. G. HOLLOWAY.

Saint Louis, Missouri.

Our monthly sacrament service was presided over by our pastor, T. J. Elliot, and Bro. S. A. Burgess delivered food for thought along the line of the gifts of the gospel. Two were confirmed at this service by Brn. S. A. Burgess and N. N. Cooke.

Brother Dowker, of the missionary force of this district, whose home is in Independence, has been doing street preaching in Alton, Illinois, the last few weeks with good interest. He delivered the morning and evening discourses and also presided over the prayer meeting in Saint Louis June 25. The remaining discourses of the month were delivered by Brethren Elliot, S. A. Burgess, and George Reeves.

At our branch business meeting which was held June 6, the following officers were elected to serve during the ensuing term: T. J. Elliot, president; George Reeves, priest; W. Rhoades, teacher; W. R. Cowlshaw, deacon; G. S. Trowbridge, clerk; A. W. Smith, library board; the undersigned, correspondent.

Our district conference which convened at Lansdowne, June 17 and 18, was reported as being one of the best we have ever had. Although the weather was rainy, an excellent attendance was on hand. Apostle I. N. White was in attendance, also Brethren Jenkins, Dowker, and Paxton, we have been informed. There were five ordinations and four baptisms reported and an excellent feeling, and the influence of the Master's Spirit prevailed. Singing has been a feature of our evening services of late, beautiful anthems and solos being rendered.

On the evening of May 31, the Sunday school held a successful bazaar for the benefit of our Christmas offering. Each class had a stand with something good and useful to sell. A nice little sum was realized and a pleasant social time was spent. On June 25, Sister Swift had charge of our children's day program. The little folks, in their little songs, recitations, and instrumental music did splendidly, and, grouped behind palms and ferns in their little white dresses, made a pleasing picture. One little babe was blessed, the son of Brother and Sister Lane. Three little buds received prizes, which were small New Testaments, for regular cradle roll attendance during the year.

The Religio has been advancing nicely, good interest and programs of late adding to our attendance.

Your sister in Christ,
E. M. PATTERSON, Correspondent.

Independence, Missouri.

The excessive heat of the last few weeks has not abated, so that much of the vegetation is suffering, the result being high prices for all kinds of garden truck and home grown fruit, and a scanty pasturage. Although the condition of the atmosphere tends to a relaxing of the physical forces, there appears to be no cessation of activity in every direction.

There is a great deal going on by the pleasure seekers,—much automobile riding on our streets, and to the parks and the city suburbs. The funeral service of a relative of some of the Saints here (Mr. John Steuterman), took place at the church yesterday in charge of Brother Garrett. He was killed in an auto accident. The theaters, five-cent shows, the bargain counters of the stores, and the ice cream parlors, together with the summer places of resort with their swimming pools, dancing halls and outdoor games,—all claim their patrons.

The Saints too, continue in their special line of activity, and we hear of ice cream socials, Sunday school and Religio picnics, and little musical and literary gatherings here and there at the homes or at the church. The husbands of the ladies of the Laurel Club gave an entertainment on the 13th consisting of piano and violin solos, and also a vocal duet, trio, and quartet, together with fine stereopticon views of Bible scenes. As a result of this, with an ice cream supper at the close, made doubly acceptable by the addition of the music of the city band, a much desired end was reached. The debt on the dining hall, now styled the "Hall of Fame" because of this strenuous effort of the brethren, is liquidated, and beside, there is money in the treasury. The Ladies' Aid gave the supper. The church officials too, are untiring in their efforts to furnish comfort and religious instruction to the needy and appreciative Saints who receive from time to time of the blessings provided in the shape of improved homes, modern conveniences, etc.

A few at the home and Sanitarium are afflicted, some are convalescent, while others have sent in from their homes written requests for our faith and prayers in their behalf. We mention the name of Sr. Isabel Quigley, also our aged brother, F. Dundee, ninety-one years of age, who two days ago was injured by being "run down" by our street cars. At present he is at the Sanitarium and depending on the efficient and tender care received there by all the Saints, and we hope for his recovery.

On Sunday, the 18th, Brn. R. V. Hopkins and J. A. Gun-solley delivered excellent addresses, their theme, in the main, being Graceland College, its superior advantages, its highly moral and spiritual atmosphere, its needs as a college, and lastly its financial requirements, to the end that its standards may be maintained as firm, true, and lofty as those of any well equipped educational institution in the land. Our brethren spoke with earnestness and exhorted their hearers to cultivate the spirit of prayer, love, and sympathy. Pledge cards were distributed, and several of the brothers and sisters responded to the efforts of the brethren from Lamoni, which were appreciated because so ably and kindly presented; and they know that the work they are engaged in is a noble one.

These were referred to a committee of Wiriamu, Tenati, and Turatahi for investigation. A request from the Avatoru Branch that the mission conference of 1912 be held there was read. Moved and carried by unanimous vote that their invitation be accepted. At 1 p. m., report of committee on the dividing the land in Tarona among the districts of the mission was read. The division as specified by the report and chart was accepted. The same committee was retained and appointed to measure the land and set stakes at the boundaries of each lot. Voted to leave the part of Tarona next to the seacoast for any branch to build on in case they should be crowded in their lot inside the wall. In the evening the Tikehao Branch gave a recital on gospel chart, covering the history of the church set up by the Savior, the apostasy, the latter day restoration, latter day apostasy, rejection of the church, the destruction of the Nauvoo temple by fire before it was completed, the reorganization of the church and the call of the son of the prophet. This was another of the large charts sent here by Bishop R. May. Song services after the recital.

On April 8 at 8 a. m., report of quorum of elders read: Sermons, 904; baptisms, 12; children blessed, 78. Resolved, That the charter of the Mahu Branch at Tupuai be annulled, since there is no officer in good standing at that place to take charge of the work. Adopted. Committee of investigation recommended the following names for ordination: Teare, Mahinui, and Tuamea to the office of elder; Tahua and Turoa to the office of priest. These names were accepted and ordinations provided for. At 6 p. m., a recital was given by the natives from Rairoa, Tikehao, Makatea, Kaukura, and Manihi. They used the largest of the gospel charts sent here by Bishop May. This chart is an excellent piece of art, illustrating the most important events of church history from 1830 to the present date. It furnished a splendid display of all the public buildings of the church to date, and is highly appreciated by the natives. They certainly did the chart justice by the quality of their work, which was arranged and planned by them without any assistance from the white missionaries. On these occasions all the hymns used are original, and apply directly to the subject under discussion. For example, this evening one hymn entitled "The burning of the Nauvoo temple" detailed the entire history of that edifice.

On Sunday, April 9, at 8 a. m., preaching by Elder Tapuni, of Tupuai. At 10 a. m., preaching by H. W. Savage, assisted by Tenati. Sunday school rally program from 1 to 5 p. m. At 7 p. m., preaching by Wiriamu, assisted by Tehao. After preaching services all present took part in song service and general discussion of twelfth chapter of Revelation.

On Monday, April 10, at 8 a. m., voted that Tetaku, bishop's agent of the mission, take charge of the Tarona chapel fund. Reports of receipts for Tarona chapel fund were read as follows: Turepaoa Branch, of Manihi, $115; Hititemanava, a brother of Tikehao, $5. A resolution introduced by M. Turatahi that we build a vessel for the use of the mission, was discussed. It was decided that it would be too great a financial burden to assume in addition to the present expense of building Tarona chapel and the wall of Tarona. Report of Elder Teuraevaea was read: Sermons 29. Sunday school rally program from 1 to 3 p. m. The remainder of the afternoon was devoted to committee work and a meeting of the officers of the several Sunday schools represented at the conference. Gospel recital and singing services in the evening.

On Tuesday, April 11, at 8 a. m., report of bishop's agent, Tetaku, having been found correct by auditing committee, was accepted. Reports of receipts for Tarona chapel read as follows: Niau Branch, $99; Takapoto Branch, $17; Takarua Branch, $14; Apataki Branch, $15; Kaukura Branch, $10. Total amount on hand in Tarona chapel fund, $275; total amount on hand in Tarona wall fund, $22. Sunday school rally occupied the time from 1 o'clock till 5 p. m. Song service and a general discussion of the question, "In what way does Joseph Smith the son, (present prophet) compare with Moses?" was the program of the evening.

On Friday, April 12, at 8 a. m., Manihi Branch proposed for ordination, Marerenui to the office of elder and Kaua to office of priest. Referred to a committee for investigation. These were later reported favorably and ordination provided for. The following appointments were read: J. C. May, president of lower division; H. W. Savage, president of upper division; Hotu, assistant president of lower division; Wiriamu assistant president of upper division; Turatahi, secretary of the mission; Temaunu, assistant secretary of the mission. Tetaku, bishop's agent of the mission. Varoa, Taia, Tetai, Araiiti, Paia, Tefautuata, and Pahoa, presidents of the several districts. Kehauri, Tapuni, Hiti a Hiti, Teihoarii, Bishop's agents appointed by Tetaku, bishop's agent of the mission, are as follows: Hoku, M. Turatahi, Taapai, Tuhiri, Natua, Tumea, Pahoa, Teare, Taputupunia, and Tanenui. These appointments were sustained by vote. Conference committee on general matters reported: Number of guests gathered here from other islands, 480; total number including population of Niau, 640; number of Saints present at the conference, 500. Voted to sustain all government officials, all officers of the mission, and all officers and quorums of the church. At 9 a. m., voted to adjourn to convene again in Avatoru, Rairoa, April 6, 1912. Closed with a hymn, closing prayer by Wiriamu.

This closed our mission conference. According to Pohemiti and other elderly natives, this may be counted as the most peaceful conference known in this mission for years. One point especially noticeable was the spirit of unity and brotherly love existing between the Saints of branches which came from different islands. Belle Savage, foreign secretary, Tupana, Niau, April 6.

Conference Notices.

The next conference of the Clinton, Missouri, District will be held at Taberville, Missouri, instead of at Nevada. After consulting the missionaries in charge and by the unanimous consent of the Nevada Branch, relinquishing their right to the October conference, it is thought wise to change. The Taberville Branch by vote asked for the October conference. They sent their request to the conference at Fort Scott, but it did not reach the conference in time. The chapel at Taberville will be dedicated at the conference. Instruction in regard to getting from the railroad will be given by the secretary in due time. James Moler, president.

Reunion Notices.

Joshua Carlile, patriarch, will be prepared to give blessings at the reunion to be held at Comstock. The following elders will be present: J. C. Crabb, J. R. Sutton, Edward Rannie, C. W. Prettyman, and Levi Gamet. We extend an invitation to Elders James E. Kelley and W. M. Self, if they can arrange matters there.

F. S. GATENBY, Secretary.

The annual reunion of the Fremont and Pottawattamie districts of the Latter Day Saints' Church will be held this year, August 4 to 13 inclusive, on last year's camp ground in J. E.

Claiborn's grove, east of Thurman, Iowa. Tents may be rented as follows; 10 by 12, 3 foot wall, $1.75; 12 by 14, 3 foot wall, $2; 12 by 14, 6 foot wall, family tent, $5; spring cots fifty cents each; camp chairs fifteen cents each. All orders for tents must be in secretary's hands by July 25. No extra tents will be ordered. There will be a stand to supply refreshments and provisions. Also a boarding house where meals will be served at twenty-five cents each, or a ten meal ticket for $2. Feed for horses may be procured on the grounds. All day trains will be met at McPaul, provided notice is given secretary, stating time parties expect to come, number of persons, and amount of baggage. As this transportation is done free of charge, notice must be given as requested or the committee are not at fault. Good water will be provided, and the committee will spare no labor to make the camp comfortable, and the meetings a success. An effort is being made to secure good speakers, and the missionaries belonging to the two above named districts are recognized as a part of this reunion and are expected to be present as representatives of the districts. Order your tent now, don't delay, neither come expecting to find a tent waiting for you. If you have none ordered, there will be none. Remember the dates and notices for meeting trains.

Hoping for a good, old-fashioned camp meeting, and a large attendance.
 C. W. FORNEY, Secretary.

The reunion at Plano this year will be held at the usual place, Steward's Park, one half mile east from the station at Plano, Illinois, and will begin August 18 and close August 28. Those who expect to attend this reunion will do well to decide early and then write to Elder J. A. Tanner, whose address is 1649 South Homan avenue, Chicago, Illinois, who can give you all the information necessary as to the cost of tents, cots, etc. Brother Tanner is corresponding secretary of the reunion committee, and will be glad to inform you along these lines. Don't wait too long before ordering your tent if you expect to attend this reunion, because we must have your order in advance or we can not supply you with a tent.
 CHAS. H. BURR, President.

Notice.

We desire to locate the following lost members belonging to the Spokane, Washington, Branch: Frank Greenwood, David E. Crockett. Tole Tollekson, Minnie Quinn, Laura Nelson, Thomas Tyler, Mary Smith (Hicks), Peter S. Morrison, the latter also belongs to the Lamoni, Iowa, Branch. Also Margaret A. Smith and Augustus G. Smith, in the Roslyn, Washington, Branch. Information regarding any of the above will be appreciated by W. W. Fordham, South 28 Haven street, Spokane, Washington, secretary Spokane District.

Pastoral.

To those concerned: Greeting: A resolution looking to the combining of Western Iowa and Eastern Nebraska in reunion service has been adopted by Northern Nebraska, Pottawattamie, and Gallands Grove districts, while Little Sioux has "very unselfishly" (!) voted it "down." We have not heard from Fremont.

As one of "those who wish to change in this matter" we did "counsel with the districts to be affected," and that after learning from one of the presidency that he favored such a change. No coercion in the matter, however, was sought. We simply acted in harmony with what we felt was the prerogative of the minister in general charge. Too bad that a district president will write a paragraph for publication like the one from which the quoted excerpts are taken. The animus in it indicates that some one has sought to force the matter without "counsel with the districts." Will those favorable to the proposition and who are on committees looking to its consummation get together as early as possible to confer with relation to the matter.

Very sincerely and "unselfishly,"

J. W. WIGHT, Minister in Charge.

Just before she died she asked her husband and Sister Edwards, who were with her, to pray audibly so that she could hear them pray once more on earth. She leaves a husband and three small children to mourn their loss. Buried March 23, at Trealew cemetery, Porth. Elder E. B. Morgan preached the day of the funeral and also the memorial sermon, assisted by Elder John G. Jenkins.

He married Rebecca Crane, settled on a farm near Corinth, where he lived and raised a family of ten children, three sons and seven daughters. His wife and one son and two daughters passed on before him. He was baptized in Zone, June 12, 1876, by Robert Davis, and was ordained a priest at the London conference, October 16, 1876. He was later ordained an elder, acted as president of Corinth Branch for about thirty years, was active in his Master's service till his last sickness and death, which took place at his own home, April 10, 1911. He bore many faithful testimonies to the truthfulness of the latter day work and the power of God, he being visited by angels twice. His home was a home to many of the elders and Saints. He leaves behind two sons, Isaac of Saint Thomas, Thomas at home, and Mrs. Edith Laur, Mrs. Hannah Bearss, Mrs. Ella Borbridge, Mrs. Ada Pearson of Corinth, Mrs. Kipp of Michigan, to mourn the loss of a loving father. There remains to mourn, his wife, a dear old sister seventy-two years of age, and the two last named children. Many relatives, and a host of friends who had learned to love him on account of his exemplary life. He united with the church seventy-two years ago. The funeral was from the Saints' church at Greenwood, and the sermon was by Alma Booker.

Hilliard in the fall of 1893, in Illinois. He lived and died in the gospel faith and was buried in the Odd Fellows Cemetery at Xenia, Illinois. Funeral in charge of I. A. Morris, sermon by G. H. Hilliard. He leaves a wife, three daughters, one son, several grandchildren, and many relatives and friends to mourn their loss, while his spirit rests in paradise for the glorious resurrection.

MCKENZIE.—John McKenzie died at the home of his son, George E. McKenzie, 754 Witherbee street, Flint, Michigan, April 22, 1911. He was going down stairs to the basement when he fell and struck his head against a gas pipe, fracturing his skull. The doctors were summoned, but he was too old to survive the shock. He was born in Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, March 9, 1822. He was married to Miss Flora McKinnon in 1845, and in 1854 moved to the Canadian Northwest, where he lived twenty years and the remaining years of his life were spent with his son, where he died. He was baptized by Elder John Shipley in 1870 and remained firm to the end. He was buried from his former home at Blandford, on April 30, 1911, Elder Fligg, of London, Ontario, officiating. He was laid at rest by the side of his wife, there to await the resurrection of the just.

If You Have No Ice.

The July Woman's Home Companion contains a great variety of practical housekeeping suggestions. Here is one for the housekeeper who gets along without ice:

"Obtain a large, common flower-pot and seal the hole in the bottom with plaster of Paris. Place in the pot the bottle containing milk, or a covered crock containing butter, and fill the pot with water to as great a depth as possible without the bottle or crock floating. Cover the pot with a board or a plate and set out in the open air, away from the direct sunlight, and preferably where there is a current of air. The evaporation of the water from the surface of the porous pot will keep the contents several degrees colder than the outside air, when there is the slightest amount of air stirring. The higher the wind, or the drier the air, the greater will be the cooling effect."

Every great man is always being helped by everybody; for his gift is to get good out of all things and all persons.—Ruskin.

Everything depends on where we look in the running of this great race of life. And the supreme comfort, the comfort of all comfort, is that, in looking to Christ, we are not looking to an example only, or to a written word, a code of instructions. We have something more and far more precious. We have a living Friend and Savior, close at hand every day, a Friend with whom we may hold actual fellowship, with whom we may live, by whose strength we may be made strong.—Charles Brown.

Since each thought needs an over thought,
To temper and refine it,
Each plan a higher planner
To consider and confine it,
Could we but win that subtle grace,
Discretion, pure and real,
Far nobler, then, would be our lives
And nearer the ideal.—A. Judson Sage.

The scientist Metchnikoff said a few years ago, "If Auto-Intoxication (a poisoning of the body caused by the putrefactive processes of the contents of the intestines) could be stopped, the average span of human life would be prolonged twenty years." NUMBER 28

Editorial

IN THE WORLD BUT NOT OF THE WORLD.

In the revelation given to the church two years ago the Saints are admonished that they shall so live as to be in the world but not of the world. This instruction is pregnant with meaning.

The same idea appears in the memorable prayer offered by the Master shortly before his crucifixion. He said: "I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil. They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world."

A great many men and women accept the idea that they can not remain in the world without being of the world. They regard the religious life as a thing impractical. Consequently they become entirely worldly, ordering their lives in accordance with some phase of the philosophy: "Eat, drink, and be merry, for to-morrow we die."

Others, in a vain attempt to flee the world, have buried themselves in monasteries and convents, and in inaccessible mountain and desert places, giving themselves over to the rigors and austerities of a mistaken fervor. But they seldom succeed. The lusts and passions of the world pursue them. There is not a crime in the calendar of crimes that has not been committed by religious recluses in the seclusion of religious retirement. The effort is as unnecessary as it is futile. The Lord does not propose to take his people out of the world, for they have a work to do in the world. Jesus and John came back to the world after their temporary seclusion.

During the past one hundred years more than fifty communities have been founded in the United States for the purpose of carrying out one phase or another of communism, religion, or social improvement. Many of these communities in an earlier day pushed out onto the frontier and into the wilderness in an effort to get entirely away from the world. But the world always followed them. Man's independence must be spiritual. Physical isolation is neither sufficient nor practical. Our independence must be spiritual. We must rise superior to our surroundings.

It is true that we believe in the gathering, and that in a gathered condition worldly influences for evil will be minimized. But even in a gathered condition, we are yet in the world, surrounded by the world; and in the language of the revelation, we can not even withdraw ourselves from a "qualified dependence" upon our "Gentile neighbors." Therefore the task is set for us to be in the world but not of the world.

Reflection will call to mind many particulars in which Saints must differ from worldly people, if it is to be said truly that they are not of the world.

In the first place we must have greater faith in God. That was one of the first lessons that Christ sought to impress upon his disciples. On the occasion of the parable of the fig tree, when he had riveted their attention by the power of his curse in blasting and withering the fig tree, the burden and climax of his discourse was contained in one burning sentence of eternal import: "Have faith in God." Faith is best evidenced by obedience. Judged by that standard the world does not have faith in God. We must not be of the world.

Christ told his followers: "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 5: 20.

Here we discover one distinguishing feature—that of superior righteousness. The statement above quoted may well apply to us now. The Pharisees of old were those who professed to believe the law of God, but in fact did not obey it. The Pharisees of to-day are the professed believers, no matter of what denomination, who in practice repudiate their professions. Except our righteousness exceed theirs we can not inherit the kingdom. We may derive a moment's pleasure from pointing out the failings of the Pharisees of to-day. But remember, we will not be crowned for the faults of others. Their shortcomings will not increase our glory. We shall receive according to our own deserts.

Our ideals should differ from those of the purely worldly. The world has two ideals,—pleasure and money. Emerson says that both aristocrats and democrats acknowledge the supreme importance of property—the difference being that the aristocrats have it and the democrats are trying to get it. The word of God indicates that men love pleasure rather than God.

We can not concede the supreme value of property. Men and women are of greater importance. All property should be consecrated to their salvation. There is nothing more important than the salvation of men and women. This work is committed to the church.

So far as pleasure is concerned, it is secondary. Service is first. Pleasure is not forbidden when it is consistent with duty.

Many in the world have adopted the theory that one can not succeed in any business that is conducted honestly. This is an error. Every man who rejects it makes it easier for others to reject it. One ton of fraudulent weights and measures dumped into the bay at New York City by inspectors in one day indicates the widespread acceptance of the maxim. Saints should erect a standard of honesty in business far superior to that of the world.

It is not our intention to attempt to catalogue the virtues that should characterize the Saints, distinguishing them from the world. They are all embraced in the perfect law of liberty.

The Master's language in the text above quoted is significant as an explanation of the term "in the world but not of the world." He said: "I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil." If kept from the evils of the world, we are not of the world, even though we may accept the good that may come to us from the world.

Again, the Doctrine and Covenants reference says: "It is incumbent upon the Saints . . . to so conduct themselves . . . as to be in the world but not of it, living and acting honestly and honorably before God and in the sight of all men, using the things of this world in the manner designed of God."—Doctrine and Covenants 128: 9.

We may well examine ourselves. Are we in the world but not of it? Or are we both in the world and of the world? The great difference is in character. What about our lives? Can men discern, as they did of old, that we have been with Jesus? Let each one answer this question in such manner as to justify himself in the day of judgment.

E. A. S.

"There are many periods in the lives of human beings, each with its possibilities of happiness and compensation. Especially distinct and different are the extreme ages of active youth and thoughtful old age. In the life of the man who lives properly there is great joy in youth, but greater joy in age. Each extreme of life is happy, and the life of youth and of age ought to be as far apart as the valley and the mountain peak."

THE FOUNDATION PRINCIPLES OF "MORMONISM."

We beg pardon of the readers of the HERALD for using the term "Mormonism" in this connection, we having refused to be called Mormons. It is not because we have any prejudicial objections to the name Mormon, but simply that the term is a misnomer, as applied to us.

In order to get at the primitive faith of the church as it existed in the minds of the human actors in its institution and development, the mind reverts to the Book of Mormon, the things taught in the book, and the names of those who were writers in it, of whom perhaps the most important are Mormon and Moroni. It is with the faith, using the word to signify the various branches of belief, that we propose making an effort to deal. Had this faith foundation principles? Were they strongly laid and of such basic proportion as would bear all the beliefs and hopes that might be built thereon?

It may be said that truth is the foundation upon which the faith rests. One of the mottos used at the head of one of the early publications was the Latin phrase, signifying, "Great is truth and it will prevail." While it is true that truth may be said to be the underlying principle of the faith, it is too general for the purpose of this article. Jesus said, "Upon this rock I will build my church." This was not a declaration signifying the whole faith. It meant one specific item; some portentous fact which should have the characteristic of the rock. It is in this sense that we make the inquiry of the caption. We repeat the questions for the sake of emphasis. Were there foundation principles, safe, sure, solidly laid, and sufficiently sound and strong, unbroken and immovable, upon which the whole superstructure of faith, doctrine, and conduct could be securely laid, and justify the hopes of all who should gaze thereon? What were these fundamental principles?

The first that strikes our attention is the principle of present and direct revelation from God to men. It was by this principle that the attention of these early builders was aroused to the conditions which enabled them to go confidently forward. We need not elaborate here, to mention the different means by which the principle of revelation developed what has been called "Mormonism." It is sufficient to state that by it certain things were brought to light, evolved, or discovered, by which the work done was accomplished. The acknowledgment of the principle made revelations from God possible and available. We must characterize the things revealed as the foundation principles, upon which the whole structure was to rest. We may safely place the Book of Mormon as one of these foundation principles. The character of this principle as a foundation is expressed in the term, "The new and everlasting covenant." It must be obvious that the book as an insensate collection of words and phrases is not to be taken as within the true meaning of the term, "foundation principle." The things which are therein set forth, as faith, belief, and rules of spiritual and temporal conduct must necessarily be considered as within the real meaning of the term, "foundation principle." This is buttressed and enforced by the later declaration, by revelation, in the words following: "Thou shalt take the things which are written in the Book of Mormon, even the new covenant, not only to say but to do according to that which is written."

The next we note as a foundation principle is the Bible, the King James Version of the Scriptures.

Taking the same view of this book as taken of the Book of Mormon, it must not be the physical arrangement of letters, words, and phrases, which is to be taken as the real foundation principle. It must be that which the language of the Scriptures conveys, that is to be regarded as a foundation principle, securely laid by the Great Divine Head of the Church, through the principle of revelation. The King James Version of the Bible was in existence, forming the bases of various faiths in Christ, before the Book of Mormon was produced as the opening principle upon which the restoration of the gospel was to rest. This is certified and enforced as a foundation principle by direct command from God through revelation.

"And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5. "Thou shalt take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee in my scriptures for a law, to be my law, to govern my church."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 16.

These commands were given through Joseph Smith the Seer to the church during the formative period of church building, in 1831. It follows that the things taught in the two books as articles of faith, belief, and spiritual teaching were expressed and specifically commanded by the Great Builder of the Church, as foundation principles, upon which the work of the restoration of the gospel was to be carried on.

The Inspired Version, or the Holy Scriptures, was made by the principle of revelation a third foundation principle of the faith and doctrine as to scriptural teaching and temporal conduct, upon which the same great work of the gospel dispensation was to be carried on. We take from these three works (the Book of Mormon, the Bible, and Holy Scriptures) the following, which justly are entitled to be considered as essential fundamental principles, upon which the superstructure of the church, organized in 1830, was to be securely established and continued to be built, until the end designed by the divine mind in establishing the restoration of the gospel should be accomplished:

"Thou shalt not kill."

"Whosoever sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed."

"Thou shalt not steal."

"Thou shalt not lie, nor bear false witness against thy neighbor."

"Thou shalt not commit adultery."

These are found in the Bible and the Holy Scriptures and are reiterated in the New Testament of both versions. They are also directly stated by revelation in section 42 of the Doctrine and Covenants, paragraph 7. The temporal conduct of men in respect to the marriage relation is to be regulated by the following foundation principles, given in the same scriptures:

"For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother and cleave unto his wife, and they shall be one flesh."—Genesis 2: 24. This foundation principle was laid down at the creation, and he by whom it was stated reiterated the commandment when incarnated in the flesh, as stated by Matthew and Mark, and it is significantly qualified in these gospels by the introduction of the word twain (Matthew 19, and Mark 10). This foundation principle is strongly enforced by direct revelation, given to the human builders in the same formative period, in 1831, in the following terse terms: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and cleave unto her and none else; . . . Thou shalt not commit adultery."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7.

It must be remembered by the reader that the purpose of this article is not merely to state what the foundation principles of the gospel are, but to affirm what the foundation principles of the faith and doctrine and spiritual teaching, touching the religious and temporal life of "Mormonism" were to be and are. In this view, the Book of Mormon, with its direct commands and specific restrictions, is, by revelation from God, established as a specific command in foundation principle, to all believers and devotees of the faith of the restored gospel. Hence, without hesitation, we name as one of these foundation principles the declaration of Jacob, which was given him of the Lord, to deliver to his people, as stated in the second chapter of Jacob, Book of Mormon. This statement of principle involves the placing of a misused quotation before the specific command is given: "For if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people." "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none: for I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women." This, clearly and specifically stated means, that when the Lord proposes to raise up a righteous seed unto himself and conserve the chastity of women, he has commanded and will command the observance of the monogamous system of marriage. No possible sophistry of argument or frail excuse of departing men from the faith can change this principle. This foundation principle is strengthened and enforced by revelations from God touching the conduct of men on this land, the land on which the work of restoration was to be accomplished, given in the same formative period in 1831. "Whoever forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made."—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3.

It should be unnecessary to add to this last quoted direction, that this discloses the divine purpose of the Creator in instituting the marriage relation for this earth. It was established before the foundations of the world were laid. Who dares to say that this is not a foundation principle, to govern in the conduct of men, on this land, variously called the land of Zion and Joseph's land? It remains for us to state but one more foundation principle, given in the same formative period of the church, and closing with one of the most remarkable statements to be found in Holy Writ: "Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until he reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet. Behold, the laws which ye have received from my hand are the laws of the church, and in this light ye shall hold them forth. Behold, here is wisdom."—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5.

It is needless to state that the institutions of the land and the laws of the States are clearly in accordance with the foundation principles of the faith as given above. "Other foundation can no man lay, than that is laid."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

We have received newspaper accounts of the rededication of the church at Fall River, Massachusetts. Bro. Alma Coombs has given us an account of the services; his letter will be found in the Letter Department.

Something to Do.

O how sweet is the season when Saints of the Lord Assemble together, as taught by his word,
And in blissful communion their voices they raise,
To witness for Jesus and sing to his praise.

May we ever remember, though many, or few,
Each one who is present, has something to do.
Just a word for the Master, a prayer, or a song
May cheer the discouraged, a weak one make strong.

Let no man-fearing spirit our blessings prevent,
But grace from thy presence, dear Father, be sent
And fill every true heart, now, with zeal and with love
While angels, rejoicing, look down from above.

At Home.

Thank God for the dear ones safe to-day,
Safe at home on the happy shore,
Where the smile of the Father beams for aye,
And the shadow of pain shall fall no more.

Thank God to-day for the pilgrim feet
Which have trodden the last of the toilsome way,
For the strong, for the frail, for the babes so sweet,
Who have left for ever this crumbling clay;

Who have changed earth's trials and loss and moan
For the victor's palm and the voice of praise,
Who dwell in the light of the great white throne,
And join in the songs which the ransomed raise.—Margaret E. Sangster.

THE WOMAN OF REVELATION 12---IN FOUR PARTS.

II. THE FLIGHT OF THE WOMAN.

BY H. J. DAVISON.

In the 12th chapter of Revelation there is not a word said of the woman becoming disorganized—of losing her crown (priesthood authority), or of going into apostasy and becoming another woman that was to miserably perish (see chapter 18), but that she (this crowned woman) fled into a place: this implies locality rather than condition.

We would never use the term "fled into apostasy" or "fled into disorganization." We might, however, use the word fell, but that is just the opposite to what we would understand from a flight by the use of wings. Notice, she started with wings and reached her destination successfully and remained there the allotted period.

Don't let anybody think that the writer ignores an apostasy, no more than that after 1844 there was certainly an apostasy (Brigham and others apostatized from the church), but we are all pleased with Judge Philips' decision that the church still remained intact.

The difference in the two cases is that after 1844 the woman remained and is nourished here under the sometime name of the Reorganization, whereas in about 570 the woman fled away intact to a place that God had prepared for her where she was nourished 1260 years, from the face of the serpent. ("At the hands of the serpent" seems like an unwarranted interpretation, since that excludes the flight idea, which is most emphatically taught.)

We must always keep in mind that in verse 7 (Inspired Translation) we are distinctly told that the dragon prevailed not against the woman, which was the church of God.

In verse 14 we learn that the woman receives two wings of a great eagle. What for? To degenerate into apostasy with? Does the analogy hold good with that interpretation? Let us see. What did or does God give wings to eagles for? To rise up from the earth, certainly. And as the eagle is said to be the highest-flying bird, the term "two wings of a great eagle" ought to appeal to us with peculiar significance.

And why flee away, and from what? Verse 13: For the dragon persecuted the woman. "Therefore" (because of that) the woman fled to a place beyond persecution. "And the serpent casteth out of his mouth water as a flood after the woman."

Does not the word after indicate that the woman was beyond his immediate reach? But his effort to drown or carry her away was futile. The project fell to the ground. In other words, the earth opened her mouth and swallowed up the flood—absorbed it—the same terms are used in relation to the blood of Abel (Genesis 4: 10, 11 authorized).

This is how the earth helped the woman, exactly as it reads—swallowed up the flood that was sent after the woman that had taken her flight. (To explain the analogy of the flood would make this article too long.)

The dragon is now exceedingly wroth with the woman, but he can not reach her any more. She has fled. So now he makes war with the remnant of her seed. What is that?

Well, suppose that there was but one branch of the church in the world, and all the priesthood, being forbidden of God to ordain others, should die, their bodies going to the grave and their spirits to the paradise of God, what would be left?—the remnant of the seed of the church.

The church could not be said to be there—the priesthood having all gone; although there may be many good, honest Christians, men and women that have the testimony of Jesus—the spirit of prophecy—and keep the commandments of God.

And is it not a historical fact that during the 1260 year period the "dragon" did persecute and make war with a large body of honest worshipers who could not be called the true church; but rather the remnant of the seed of the church.

It does not follow that because the true church and the fullness of the gospel is not upon the earth, the whole world is turned over to the pleasure of Satan. It was not so in the days from Moses to John the Baptist, nor on this continent from the days of Lehi to Alma.

God is with the people in all such times, yet the corelationship is not so close.

Just a thought in closing: If the woman had yielded and played into the hands of the dragon, would the dragon have been angry with her? I think the point will be seen and conceded.

The above seems to establish the fact that the woman took flight from the persecutions of the dragon for her preservation. The next article will be entitled, "Where did the woman go?"

(To be continued.)

"Far more admirable and beautiful is the old age of peace and of unselfishness. The old man looks upon the grandchild, dreaming dreams for that child's welfare, thinking not of himself, yet deeply and intelligently considering the future in which he is to have no share, guiding and restraining impetuous youth, and wisely stimulating imagination. There is a sight more to be admired than any accomplishment of fiery youth."

A REVIEW OF MORMONISM AGAINST ITSELF.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

A book consisting of 321 pages, entitled Mormonism Against Itself, is now before me. The work is issued by the Standard Publishing Company, Cincinnati, bearing the name of Samuel W. Traum as writer.

"Another book on Mormonism?" Yes, an appendix to "Anti-Mormon literature." The object is to kill something which has been declared "killed" as often as weapons of this character have been forged, during the past seventy-six years! We are reminded of that queer poem written by some one, some time:

"To kill twice dead a naughty snake,
And off his scaly skin to take,
And through his head to drive a stake,
And every bone within him break,
And of his flesh mince meat to make,
To burn, to sear, to boil, to bake,
Then in a heap the whole to rake,
And over it the besom shake,
And sink it fathoms in the lake,
Whence, after all, quite wide awake,
Comes back that very naughty snake."

Every little while, some indignant shepherds, by combination of circumstances, are driven to the front, after slaking their thirst at the fountain of sloth, and give evidence to all honest people of the emetic which they have taken, by belching forth a tirade of ridicule, misrepresentation, and abuse against the whole system they have come to combat. They scarcely discriminate between principles and men. They simply (its merits seldom considered) condemn the entire institution, by making the character of its advocates look black. Books of this character are occupying literary space, "ad infinitum, ad nauseum!"

EARLY CHRISTIANS MISREPRESENTED.

The Christianity of New Testament times had to meet a library of this kind. The historian records these lines upon the subject: "Certain fictitious acts of Pilate and our Savior, full of blasphemy, were, by the emperor's approbation, circulated through his dominions, with orders to facilitate the publication of them in all places, and to direct schoolmasters to deliver them to youth that they might commit them to memory." After specifying some lascivious practices of the baser sort, the historian continues: "These, and other slanders were registered, copied, and sent to the emperor as the authenticated confession (of the true Christians), and he circulated them through his dominion." Here is "revealed" the historic fact, that manufactured testimony was sworn to, before an officer at Damascus, incriminating the disciples of Christ. The effect of this baneful method is stated as follows: "Children in their schools daily sounded Jesus and Pilate, and other things, invented to asperse the gospel." (See History of the Church of Christ, Milner, vol. 2, p. 35.)

So the methods adopted to strike down a system of religion in the present century do not differ in some respects from the methods used in the first, second, and third centuries of the Christian era.

ORIGIN OF PRESENT AFFAIR.

Samuel W. Traum's book seems to be the outgrowth of a polemic tilt engaged in July 25 to August 5, 1905; his adversary-in-arms being Elder Columbus Scott, of Lamoni, Iowa. The issues debated were the two churches, The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, versus The Christian or "Campbellite" Church, and the Book of Mormon. Propositions were framed embodying the debatable ideas in those issues. In the brief, calling attention to their discussion, found in the preface to his book, my name occurs with the personnel of moderators; but for some cause (known to himself) Mr. Traum has entirely omitted one important act in the drama, of which I was a factor with himself, i. e., in concluding his part of the debate, he related a story of the small boy placing ten loads of ammunition in a gun, and after one load had been fired by the boy's grandmother, the little fellow said: "Do not be afraid, grandma, there's nine more loads in it." I advanced to the pulpit, and told him that any time he wished to fire any one or the nine loads remaining, we would try to be in range of the shots. But Mr. Traum declined. Some time after my return to Michigan, I renewed my challenge to him by writing, stating that I wished to canvass the grounds with him before his pastorate in the city of Madison, Indiana. He again declined. Whether this volume, Mormonism Against Itself, is the next "shot" in succession, or the entire nine, he has not stated. If he is the "gun," and the shots are in evidence, the dear grandma (his church) which used the gun is enveloped in smoke, and the three—boy, grandma, and gun, are responsible.

Mr. Traum conveys the idea that his work in the vicinity of the Union Branch, where the discussion was held, is to be credited with producing a defection among the Saints. Allow us to say, not without clemency, that Mr. Traum is the echo of a number of fighting satellites, and we have yet to learn of just one affected by his work. As to the debate, if public sentiment pointed in any direction, it was to the effect that Mr. Traum failed, absolutely failed to carry his points. Why should he not fail in the effort of defending that which is indefensible, and successfully setting aside the bulwark of truth, especially, as he now admits in his book that his evidence was not all in, at the time of debate, and during the controversy he admitted that it was a "matter of experiment" with him, as per notes on debate? The defection mentioned by him began before the controversy was conceived of. Mr. Traum's opponent, Elder C. Scott, during the debate of 1905, was in Indiana on his regular appointment from General Conference, reading "Indiana and Ohio," and while under this regular appointment he preached in Indiana. Both Samuel W. Traum and M. R. Scott, jr., attended, with large audiences. Elder Scott would have been pleased to reclaim his cousin, but made no personal effort, as he,—M. R. Scott, jr.,—had said more than a year previous, that he had made up his mind to leave the Reorganized Church and this more than a year before he ceased preaching occasionally, for this church, or sent his license to the authorities. Thus, the unsupported statement of Elder Traum, that Columbus Scott came from Lamoni, Iowa, "presumably to remonstrate with, and, if possible, to reclaim his apostate cousin," is a presumption, of bad omen, but very characteristic. It is absolutely a manufactured theory.

It is a famous fact, that all Mr. Traum did in the debate while affirming his own church proposition, was to try to strip the church described in the New Testament of its divine organization, as built by Christ, as described in Matthew 16: 16, 18; Romans 12: 4, 8; 1 Corinthians 12; Ephesians 4: 1, 13. As a body "fitly framed together," and the principles of Christ's doctrine as its basis. John 7: 17; Hebrews 5: 12; 6: 1, 2. He made the effort to render the living "body of Christ" a corpse, by lopping off its spiritual endowments, and robbing it of its spiritual manifestations. He thus would have the "habitation of God by his Spirit," a paralytic—a figure with no life nor limb! He tried to show that one local congregation, one charge, one pastorate, or branch of the New Testament church with, as he asserted, elders and deacons, was the church, is the church of Christ. Just as well argue that a district is a township, or a township is a county, or a county is a State or the United States, for above the branch or local congregation, God sets in the general body, as members of the church, high priests (Hebrews 5: 1). David, when he foresaw the church of God, exclaimed: "I will also clothe her priests with salvation, and her Saints shall shout aloud for joy."—Psalm 132: 16. We should refresh Mr. Traum's memory that God set apostles and prophets in the body—general body, as well as elders and deacons in branch organization. He should also remember that he failed to mention the so-called Christian church of modern times, or even its origin. His opponent was compelled to bring it out of its hiding place, as it seemed to be cooped up and invisible.

NAME OF THE CHURCH.

Chapter one of Mormonism Against Itself, under the heading "Mormonism: what it is," contains an attenuated effort to define both the system and the advocate. In his, the author—like others who chink with untempered mortar to win by prejudice—indulges in innuendo and misrepresentation. As usual, no distinction is made as to the separate peoples, he merges them into one. To him the Josephites are Mormons and are affected by the system which he condemns, and seeks to destroy wholesale. He draws no lines. He fails to note the attitude of the Reorganized Church toward the apostasy in Utah. He files all on the same wire in his definition, and the Reorganized Church is one with that body who resorted to the fastnesses of the mountains in Salt Lake City, and so long challenged the moral sense of the civilized world and the powers of the Federal Government.

Before calling attention to this, further, we note a statement on page 24. Mr. Traum says: "There appears to be some antipathy to the use of the word Mormon, when applied to individuals; or Mormonism when applied to their system of religion; or Mormon Church when used in a manner descriptive of their organization."

We wish to say: "There are others." Appropriating this mode of expression to a parallel, it reads thus: "There appears to be some antipathy to the use of the word Campbellite, when applied to individuals; or Campbellism, when applied to their system of religion; or Campbellite Church, when used in a manner descriptive of their organization." Does Mr. Traum gracefully yield? The terms Mormon, Mormonism, and Mormon Church, are not in the "Articles of incorporation" adopted by the church. Article 1 reads: "The name of this association and organization shall be, 'The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints,' and shall be incorporated under the laws of Iowa by that name." Again, "The church adheres to the doctrines and tenets of the original 'Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints' as organized by Joseph Smith the Martyr, on the 6th day of April, A. D. 1830, as the same has been reorganized by Joseph Smith, formerly of Plano, Illinois, now of Lamoni, Iowa, with the advice and assistance of Jason W. Briggs, Zenos H. Gurley, sr., William Marks, sr., Israel L. Rogers, Isaac Sheen, and many others." The Articles of Association were adopted June 6, A. D. 1891.

For the benefit of Mr. Traum, we wish to say: We were never baptized into a Mormon church, nor confirmed in a Mormon church, neither were we ordained Mormon preachers. My license does not read that way. My certificates of appointment do not read that way. The corporate seal granted under the law, by articles of incorporation, does not read that way, and the terms thrown at the Reorganized Church, or its system of belief and practice, or its individual members are gratuitous.

We call attention to this because Mr. Traum does not state the fact when he says: "They are not agreed among themselves as to a term universally acceptable." It will be observed that our agreement touching the name of the church is found in the articles of association referred to.

Again, he says: "They were first called, or rather, they first called themselves, the 'Church of Christ'; that title appearing upon the title-page of the Book of Commandments as late as 1833."

That he is wrong in this, will appear from the statement of Church History as follows: "Having opened the meeting by solemn prayer to our heavenly Father, we proceeded (according to previous commandment) to call on our brethren to know whether they accepted us as their teachers in the things of the kingdom of God, and whether they were satisfied that we should proceed and be organized as a church according to said commandment which we had received. To these they consented by unanimous vote. I then laid my hands upon Oliver Cowdery and ordained him an elder of the 'Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints,' after which he ordained me also to the office of elder in said church."—Church History, vol. 1, page 77.

The above narrative, containing the name of the church when its organization was effected, April 6, A. D. 1830, should be sufficient to "reveal" the mistake of Mr. Traum. The name was not "expanded subsequently," nor contracted before, as the above proof with the following clearly shows: "God imparts instruction to the 'high council of my church in Zion (for thus shall it be called) and unto all the elders and people of my church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints scattered abroad in all the world, for thus shall my church be called in the last days, even the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.'"—Church History, vol. 2, p. 151.

In the light of the foregoing, what is the deserved fate of Mr. Traum's would be evidence that they first called themselves the Church of Christ, and before they left Kirtland, they were called the Church of Latter Day Saints, "the name of Christ having been elided"? "Subsequently," says Mr. Traum, "this was expanded to read, 'the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.'" In 1838, the date of instruction given to high council in Zion, the name by divine command is the same as in the year 1830, the beginning of organization.

MORMONISM BOUNDED.

On page 28, the author sets up the boundary lines of that which he styles "the kingdom of Mormonism": "On the north by polygamy; on the east, by the Adam-God theory; on the south by the doctrine of blood atonement; on the west, by the Mountain Meadow massacre." We have no defense to make for the abominable boundary lines which he employs, and later admits to be fictitious and artificial—but the school children know when any one of the states of the Union is bounded, that the thing which bounds it is not a part of that which is bounded. Thus, if he strikes the Utah hierarchy, he leaves it free from these obnoxious features. But while he recedes from this faulty boundary, so as to include the "Josephite," he opens himself to more severe criticism.

He continues: "A more proper definition of the boundary lines would show that the domain of the Mormon is bounded on the north by the Book of Mormon; on the east, by the prophetship of Joseph Smith, jr.; on the south, by the doctrine of continuous revelation as shown in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants; and on the west, by the Aaronic and Melchisedec priesthoods." This, again leaves the thing bounded separate from that which bounds it.

On page 26, he defines a "Mormon" as "one who holds to the inspiration of the Book of Mormon, and to the divinity of Joseph Smith's mission as a prophet of God." The aggregate of such believers he styles "Mormons"; and "the full development of that system of religion, which is shown by its theory and practice to be the product of this man and his books," he calls "Mormonism." With his definition of "Mormonism" as a "product" before us, and his sudden change of boundary lines from polygamy, blood atonement, Adam-God, and Mountain Meadow massacre, to the Book of Mormon, prophetship of Joseph Smith, jr.; continuous revelation, and the Aaronic and Melchisedec priesthoods, he confesses that in this latter list of boundary lines, (at least in the Reorganization) the former abominations can not be found, neither in "theory nor practice." If he could have found them in that which he styles "the full development of that system of religion," which is the "product," why change the boundary lines?

BOOK OF MORMON AND NEW TESTAMENT.

"The gospel of the Book of Mormon is not coextensive with the gospel of the New Testament."—Page 25. This assertion is wide of the truth. The complete harmony existing between the two books, in the revelations of the divine economy, is simply marvelous. The same principles and doctrine are taught; the same scheme of redemption universally applicable, and founded on the same immutable bed rock. Its voice is truly accordant with the Bible in proclaiming the divinity of Jesus Christ, and the fact of his glorious resurrection from the dead, on which facts hinge the matchless work of redemption revealed in the gospel.

The Apostle Paul teaches that "life and immortality" is "brought to light through the gospel" (2 Timothy 1: 10), and mankind should be interested in the evidences which prove the divine assurance of these things. The Book of Mormon unites with the Bible in teaching that "as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (1 Corinthians 15: 22), "but every man in his own order."

Testimony that is clear and sound in support of this claim, is of great value to all, and such testimony is supplied by the Book of Mormon. In the language of King Agrippa to Paul, let the Book be "permitted to speak for itself." Emblazoned in perspicuous terms upon its portal, at the very gateway of this treasure house, appear these words: "And also to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations."

A loftier purpose can not be conceived by the soul, than the one pointed out in the above.

Again, page 490 of Lamoni edition: "And this is the commandment which I have received; and behold they (the writings) shall come forth according to the commandment of the Lord, when he shall see fit, in his wisdom. And behold they shall go unto the unbelieving of the Jews: and for this intent shall they go: that they may be persuaded that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God; that the Father may bring about, through his most beloved, his great and eternal purpose, in restoring the Jews, or all the house of Israel, to the land of their inheritance, which the Lord their God hath given them, unto the fulfilling of his covenant, and also that the seed of this people may more fully believe his gospel which shall go forth unto them from the Gentiles."

The foregoing are plain and concise terms, setting forth the important purposes of the record.
