Many people came in to visit the school during the sessions and expressed themselves as highly pleased at what they saw. Mr. Edwards, the city superintendent of schools, told the conference of teachers that our school was "particularly satisfactory." Mrs. Boville, wife of the national director, told us that we had the "prettiest room of them all." She meant by this that our decorations were most appropriate. The city industrial superintendent and the kindergarten superintendent also had many warm words of commendation to offer us upon the merits of our school.

Of the twenty-seven schools in the city ours ranked in tenth place. Many of the other schools had been running other years and did not have the prejudice to overcome that we did. Our daily average attendance for the time was one hundred and nine. This number compared with those of other schools shows that we did as well, and in many instances, a great deal better than many of them.

One thing occurred, that for a time seriously interfered with the progress of the school. As before noted, just one half of the children enrolled were Catholics, and many of the children told us that the priest had forbidden them to come; they said he had announced from the altar that all children should refrain from going to our school and for this reason many of our most regular attendants ceased to come. One little girl told one of the teachers that when she went to confession, the priest told her she had committed a "mortal sin," by going to our church. She told it in a way that indicated something of doubt upon her part. One boy about twelve years old, remarked to me that he wasn't going to confession to "Old Father O'Hara any more, because he is getting a little too fresh." Some said, "Well, I am as good a Catholic as any of them but I can not see the harm in coming here." Several children told me they had never been in any church, other than the Catholic church before. Notwithstanding the drastic order of the priest and the fact that he took one boy by the collar from near the church and led him home, many of the children continued to come in defiance of his wishes, and we are sure they will always feel friendly to us for what we did for them.

In some way, the Brooklyn Eagle heard about the priest opposing our school, and they sent a reporter to look into the matter, but as we had nothing to said by way of condemning the priest, the matter was unnoticed.

A policeman, whose residence is next door to a family of our people, took it upon himself to warn some of the Catholic children to stay away from the school. We could easily have made it interesting for him as the association officers were anxious to take up the matter of his conduct with the police commissioner, but upon our suggestion the matter was dropped. We think it best not to antagonize anybody.

Our closing exercises and exhibition of finished work done by the children was held on the evening of August 17. The church was full. A brass band had been engaged to play some popular pieces on the outside and a large crowd had assembled. The entire rear of the church was filled with the children; the kindergarten being on the platform and all eager to do their parts in the program. From the ceiling, and other places in the church, were hanging forty-three full-sized hammocks, some of them made in colors; while elsewhere could be seen a great number of baskets, broom holders, napkin rings, picture frames, horse lines, aprons, dust caps, Indian baskets, and a lot of other articles too numerous to mention. Bro. U. W. Greene favored us by his presence upon this occasion and made a short but appropriate speech. He said the apparent success of the school had exceeded his anticipations and commended us for the work accomplished. The city superintendent, Mr. Edwards, had promised to be with us, but was unable to come and sent a message expressing his regret and offering congratulations.

Next day, we had an opportunity to visit the school at the Church of Incarnation, and witness their closing exercises. In company with Brother Greene and Sr. Ella Squire, we arrived there at the time appointed and after witnessing what they had to present, Brother Greene joyously remarked, "You have them beat to a frazzle." I was truly surprised to note the scant amount of their industrial display, and their program lacked the enthusiasm and was rather cold and formal. This church is equipped with every convenience; had paid teachers and every thing to do with.

I think one reason why our people have been able to succeed so well with this line of work, is because they have put more heartfelt interest and sympathy in it, than others have done. Our teachers have sacrificed to teach solely for the good they might do, while these paid teachers have had the financial remuneration largely in view.

It was with a great deal of delight that we heard such favorable comment of Brother Smith's school in Philadelphia, announced in our conference. While there was one school there that professed to be in the lead for average attendance, nothing was said about their merits while Brother Smith's school was highly praised upon different occasions.

Now that I have the addresses of all the children who attended our school, we intend to follow up the interest as best we can and keep in touch with them. We intend to give a stereopticon entertainment at the church soon, and send them an invitation to come; and next year if a school is held here it will be much easier to start than it was this year.

Our church is situated in a neighborhood that is decidedly Catholic, and all who know anything about the Catholics, will recognize that in enrolling one hundred and fifty six of them, we have done remarkably well. Personally, I commend this school system as being a practical means of doing good in the world. As for the benefit it brings to the church, it is surely an indirect method of breaking down prejudice, and establishing acquaintance and friendly intercourse with the people. As such it is a valuable thing for our local churches to adopt, where possible, and if tried it will be found to be possible in almost every place where tried.

We wish to note that we had the pleasure of meeting Bro. W. N. Robinson and wife and children, and saw them off as they sailed on the great steamship Amerika, for Germany. We also met Bro. and Sr. O. L. James who were there to bid them adieu. Dr. Leonard Harrington and wife, of Kansas City, Missouri, made us a brief but pleasant call, coming here from Boston, where the doctor had been taking some special studies. General church secretary, R. S. Sal-yards, of Lamoni, Iowa, has also been in this city of late and we enjoyed a visit with him.

I would like to repeat a suggestion I made some time ago, that anyone reading this, who may have relatives or friends residing here, whom would like me to visit in the interest of the church, I will be pleased to comply with such requests.

Before we came here, so many of our friends warned us of the heat unendurable, but we have found that this is not the hottest place by any means. With the exception of a few days in July, the weather has been perfectly agreeable and so far as climate is concerned we would just as leave be here as elsewhere. Living expenses here are far advanced and we wonder how people get along as well as they do. I am sure it would be most impossible for our ministers to do so, were it not for the generosity and good heartedness of the people—those who know the Brooklyn Saints, know that they measure up well in these qualities.

Several of our people are away on their much-deserved vacations, and we are now looking forward to the first Sunday in October, which we hope to arrange as a Rally Day, when we will all start in upon our fall and winter campaign.

WARMING TRUTH VERSUS COLD FACTS.

It was grand, sweet, clarified inspiration in the free warble of a feathered songster 'mong the wild beauty of Nature's woodland, which charmed the soul of a pilgrim by the wayside. Under that refreshing melody, the Pilgrim seemed to forget that he was needy and lonely, and weary.

There is such a thing as truth in grills, truth in frills, and naked truth.

In grills, from the fact that however sweet the promise, voiced in soul language of melody, the pilgrim, when the prophecy of song is spent, is a pilgrim still.

In frills, because the texture of enjoyment, as a splendid mantle, was, so long as it lasted, a real fabric; wrapping a dreary soul in rapture, and buttoned about with gleaming gems of harmony.

Naked, because aside from the soul, the pilgrim possessed a body so nearly so.

There is also such a thing as temperature of facts. The prosy, comfortable facts, the warm, the lukewarm, and the cold facts.

An ample bank account is a very comfortable kind of fact.

A fluctuating income may be a fact which varies in degrees of lukewarm temperature; but it is the needy and destitute who know the chill of cold facts.

Naked truth and cold facts are twin brothers who, when shorn of certain habitual and popular modest embellishments, may appear quite grim. The twin brothers are good fighters, however, as soldiers in a good cause, when in their own rank and not masquerading in society circles as civilians.

It is a soul-warming truth that the heavenly Father does confirm the work of his latter day ministry with gospel signs of wholesome spiritual excellence wherever our gospel is applied. That truth is clothed in raiment of splendor in plain view of all who behold the latter day light, or listen to the woodland song of holiness in the living present.

As an example of the gracious habiliments of this majestic truth, we recite the following quite recent sketch of a pilgrim's experience.

Place: Calumet, Oklahoma.

Time: September, 1911.

Instance: Elder Hubert Case and the writer preached the everlasting gospel through a five-week series of meetings to an aroused community.

Results: Twenty-four to date, were constrained to accept the word and have been baptized, and a number of others have already given their names for baptism.

The word of God wrought mightily in their midst to the extent that persons hitherto at sea all their lives as to religion, bore fervent, valiant, convincing testimony.

During one very spiritual prayer meeting, a young woman (Lillie, the married daughter of Brother and Sister Sanders) who had been grievously afflicted for weeks, and unable to leave the bed without severe relapses, arose and standing upon her feet declared that the Lord had healed her. The gift of prophecy being also manifest in the same meeting, and all with so much power that persons not of the church who were present, were convinced then and there. The young woman so marvelously healed was able on the next day to go several miles to her home, and upon the following Sunday was with the Saints again smiling and happy. Signs do follow. Weary hearts are cheered. Hungry souls are fed, and ill-shapen creatures are born anew; and all this truth is as the deep inspiration of a heavenly song. But when all this is attained, when those who have thirsted for righteousness, drink deep; when members rejoice in salvation, and the weary laborer who has all but exhausted his strength in battering down false creeds in order that the precious light may shine in, receives a letter from his wife saying: "Ruth and Esther need shoes, the grocer is crowding us for his bill, the interest on the note for payment of the last one is due." We assert that the temperature of that fact is several degrees lower than the former.

We also make bold to say that when, as in the present dilemma of the writer, first, that the allowance for family need is scarcely adequate, and second, that not one dollar of that has been received for a period of time now growing on three months, this might well be termed a rather cold fact.

We gratefully acknowledge helps in a personal way from Saints and friends, however, during such cramped times, and only would that we with other poor in this world's goods might be worthy of receiving manna in the Lord's way when men's banks fail.

With Paul as in 2 Corinthians 11: 26, 27, we are Yours, "In journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils of mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness."

PEACE OR WAR.

In HERALD for September 6, I note an article from the Christian Herald, relative to the "Peace Movement," its progress, etc. Happy would we be if peace could be established through the channel suggested and "All nations be as brothers and war a thing of the past." But Latter Day Saints know that no peace is in sight for some time, notwithstanding the "leading nations" may sign the "Peace Compact." The revelations both ancient and of modern time, dealing with latter day events, especially of war, inform us that "The Day of Peace will not come until "after every nation has made its final struggle against its neighbor."

The prophet viewing "latter day events" lifts well the curtain revealing the attitude of the nations. We hear him: "Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles; Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up: Beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning hooks into spears: let the weak say I am strong."

Could the ancient prophet stand with us to-day and view the present growing attitude he would know that he spoke the truth ages before.

In Matthew 24: 3-7, the Savior makes mention of certain events to transpire "before the day of final peace." He says: "Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom." In Doctrine and Covenants 1: 6, the Lord, speaking through the latter day prophet, says, "Again, verily I say unto you, O inhabitants of the earth, I the Lord am willing to make these things known unto all flesh, for I am no respecter of persons, and willeth that all men shall know that the day speedily cometh, the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth, and the Devil shall have power over his own dominion; and also the Lord shall have power over his saints, and shall reign in their midst, and shall come down in judgment upon Idumea, or the world."

From the above we learn that "peace shall be taken from the earth." The nations are ripe for destruction is the cause.

The revelation on the rebellion puts in a very strong and comprehensive manner that which we may look for. It says, "The days will come that war will be poured out upon all nations . . . until the consumption decreed, hath made a full end of all nations."

It has then been decided by "divine authority" when we may look for peace. Nations may try their best to avert war, but they can not do it, for they are corrupt and the voice of inspiration declares that their "doom is sealed." But "after" the sword has been "once more" bathed in blood, we confidently look for the "great day" of peace and as predicted by Isaiah, when they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks. (Isaiah 2: 4.) Nation shall not lift up sword against nation neither shall they "learn war" any more.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

COLLEGE PROFESSORS INFIDELS.

"The American Republic is doomed because the majority of its college professors are infidels," says Rev. Dr. S. T. Willis, president of the Virginia Christian College.

"Unless the college professors of the present day," declared Doctor Willis, "lay more stress upon the teachings of Christianity instead of sending out into the world students and graduates with a great store of book learning and little or no conception of what an upright life should be, this Republic will go the way of the first French Republic, the Roman Republic, and all others where lack of morals, unchristian living, an improper understanding of a man's obligations to his neighbors and similar deteriorating elements have held sway."

CHOOSING PASTORS.

The Rev. Dr. MacArthur has proposed a plan whereby his congregation should choose his successor. He strenuously objects to the popular method of having trial sermons of the various candidates, as it is "humiliating" he says, "degrading" thus to be "exhibited like a sample of dry goods." He recommends that the congregation send its pulpit committee on a tour so they can visit the congregations of the applicants and hear and observe where these reverends are doing their regular work. The New York Times, in commenting on Doctor MacArthur's plan says:

The effectiveness of a trial sermon or two may be misleading. Moreover, the man to fill the place in which this Baptist clergyman has exerted so great an influence must be a man of exceptional attainments and promises. Such men, in any walk of modern life, are not going about seeking positions. The office must seek the man. There is, in these days, no surplus of great preachers who have also the skill and discretion and tireless industry of efficient pastors. Doubtless there are men well qualified to fill Calvary's pulpit who would gladly accept a call to a post so influential, but would decline to enter into a competition for it.

The higher professions are not quite so overcrowded as they used to be, and there is a well-recognized deficiency of leaders in thought and action in many professions. There are still plenty of ordinary men, but Calvary needs an extraordinary man. The church must seek for him diligently and patiently, and in the way the retiring pastor points out. In that way he can be found, eventually, and the example of so powerful a congregation in discarding the old method of trial candidates will doubtless be followed by other churches.

PRAISES ROMAN CHURCH.

Reverend C. S. Horne, of London, recently addressed a gathering of Protestant ministers and somewhat startled them by upholding the Roman Church when she claimed imperial sway. He said:

If the church does not take the leadership in international brotherhood and the leadership in social and political reform, then some one else will. The greatest opportunity in the history of the world is before the church to-day. . . . The Church of Rome was right when she claimed imperial sway. Though I think she sought to gain her ends through means often unjust and far from praiseworthy, her glorious ideal was exactly right, and to it all churches must come. It was the ideal that there was nothing outside the sweep of the church, and that all government and all law must come to the church as the court of last resort. Whatever we think about the history of the Roman Catholic Church, we must admit that her aim has been the only true one, for it aimed at authority.

AMERICAN DIVINE ON CATHOLIC WAY.

Reverend Krantz in a dedicatory sermon at Westfield, New Jersey, took occasion to warn the congregation that there was much to be learned from the Roman Church.

The Catholics love their church. The head of the church impresses the people that they need the church, while the Protestants are inclined to preach that the church needs the people. They are right; it is the people that need the church and not the church that needs the people.

The Catholics know how to build churches. Their magnificent cathedral in Fifth avenue was paid for principally by small offerings. They love their church and attest their loyalty by their attendance Sunday mornings. Catholics don't allow any trivial excuse to keep them away from church, a worthy example for Protestants to follow.

MARRIAGE OF DIVORCEES.

"Very often," says The Continent (Presbyterian) of Chicago, "even the crimes and shames of modern society turn out to be demonstrations, not that the world is growing worse, as the superficial so easily conclude, but that in reality, judged by the bettering of mass sentiment, the world is growing steadily better. For example, the Astor and Force wedding—in all respects one of the grossest transgressions of domestic ideals that America ever witnessed—becomes, however, discouraging in itself, really encouraging in the tremendous volume of protest it has evoked from all classes except vacuous and inane circles of idleness. The immense trouble of the bridegroom in finding a minister willing to give even the most nominal countenance of religion to a union so obnoxious is alone a sign of rising moral feeling. The reprobation from both his church and his city which befell the minister who did consent to earn Astor's extravagant wedding fee, is a still broader phase of the same good omen. The time is clearly here when no man who wishes to retain influence as a Christian minister can assume responsibility for pronouncing the blessing of the church on any wedlock where either party has been unfaithful to a former marriage relation. And in order to escape that sure condemnation, the wise minister will be compelled to decline to officiate at any marriage where he can not know the antecedents of both bride and bridegroom."

COMMANDMENTS NEED AMENDING.

This is the startling announcement from the "effete east," that the "Ten Commandments" are too fundamental and provincial. We think the following comment by the Christian Register is good:

There is a very distinct movement toward mending old constitutions and creeds. With all the rest we hear a proposition to amend the Ten Commandments. One reason given is that this little handbreadth of moral law is too prolix. It takes up too much time to go over the Commandments when we are in a hurry, as we substantially always are. But the real difficulty is that these laws are not up-to-date. They are fundamental in nature, but in their setting they are mixed up with a good deal that was local and temporary. We have lost almost all our respect for antiquity, as such. Everything has to be weighed according to its contents and their usability. The only mortal sin left in the calendar of the twentieth century is waste of time. We are crowded by events and inventions and revelations and duties until we are obliged to economize our breath. To say twice as many things as we mean in order to get at the pith of the matter is not endurable.

This highly trained army was a mechanical thing of minute precision. It marched, ate, and slept in perfect obedience to law, and no motion was made that was not necessary. A great mind was the life of it, a master mind that instilled into every man that vital thing, faith, without which an army no matter how well drilled and mighty to look upon, is a dead thing. Washington inspired perfect confidence in every soldier; and this confidence, given freedom to play through the wonderful discipline taught the army by Von Steuben, made the army the force it proved to be.—Robert Neilson Stephens in A Soldier of Valley Forge.

The essential difference between the educated and uneducated man, if we grant each other an equal measure of pluck, persistence, and endurance, lies in the superior ability of the educated man to analyze his problem effectively and to proceed intelligently rather than blindly to its solution. I maintain that education should give a man this ideal of attacking any problem.—William Chandler Bagley in Craftsmanship in Teaching.

In the Twilight.

When the children come home in twilight, come home from the field and the street,
Come home from the paths that have tempted the recklessly brave little feet,
Come home from the sun and the shadow, come home with their laughter or tears,
They find in the home place a balsam for all of their frets and their fears.

The lamplight gives all of them welcome; not one will be turned from the door;
Their footsteps make merriest music as softly they trip on the floor,
And sheltering arms creep around them, and fingers of love drive away
The stains of the tears and the frownings that somehow have come with the day.

And all of the children—they know it, they knew that when twilight comes,
With stars creeping out through the hazes, when all of the bees hush their hum,
When over the hills and the valleys each bird flutters home to its nest,
They know that the playtime is ended, that home and shelter is best.

And some have been given to mischief, and some have been truant and wrong,
And some have been gentle and kindly, cheery and with laughter and song—
But they that were bad are forgiven, and they that were good given praise,
And all are rejoiced when they gather at home through their devious ways.

I wonder and wonder and wonder, if we with our codes and our creeds,
If we with our jeers and our judgments of words and of dreams and of deeds,
Will find when we come in the twilight, a-weary of life and its way,
That we come as good and bad children creep home at the end of the day.—Chicago Post.

The Bible and the Schools.

As there are a multitude of things recorded which can be proved beyond a doubt, a sensible person will take the Bible for what it is worth; the portion which he understands he will apply in his everyday life and that part which, after study, he is unable to understand he will have the faith to believe true or it never would have been placed there.

Experience has taught us that to follow the precepts laid down in the Bible leads to happiness and success, and to disobey and disregard them have for a result disappointment, failure and destruction.

This alone is sufficient to establish the truth and greatness of the book; that there are some things contained in it which man can not comprehend is no proof that those things are not true.

Every great law, whether written or unwritten, natural or civil, draws upon the Bible for its fundamental principles, and a law which has not its origin here, is tyrannical, erratic and of short life; this is another great proof of the infallibility of the book.

Then how can we conscientiously bar these great principles from the public schools? Should we withhold from the child those things with which he early in life should become acquainted?

Man is born in the midst of sin. His natural propensities are to that which is evil instead of to that which is good, therefore early in life something should be brought to bear upon him which will counteract these conditions, and for this reason the child, while he is acquiring knowledge along other lines, should become thoroughly conversant with those principles which will tend to lead from that which is evil to a higher and better plane of living, and where can these principles be taught to a better advantage than in the public schools?

That the exclusion of the Bible from nearly all the schools of the country has resulted in more crime among children, was a declaration made by Rev. Melbourne P. Boynton in a prelude to his evening sermon at the Lexington Avenue Baptist Church.

The pastor had taken "The Bible and the Schools" as his subject, and one of his strong charges was that "the one supreme blunder that has been committed by the public school system of this republic is found in the exclusion of the Bible from the schoolroom."

"One of the appalling facts of modern history," said the preacher, "is the increase of crime among children. Youthful criminals are a menace to society. What is the cause of the astounding increase of criminality among boys and girls? It is found in the lax, indifferent, almost compromising attitude toward morals on the part of our public school policy. This laxness is not characteristic of any one section in our republic, but is quite generally the case everywhere.

"What is the cure for such indifference toward ethical training? The cure will be found in the restoration of the Bible to the public school. The Bible has been since time immemorial the fountain head of morality and effective ethics.

"The decline of faith in the immortality of the soul is traceable almost directly to the widespread ignorance of the Bible. This condition is found not only in the public schools, but also in the colleges and universities.

"When the boy and the girl most need training in the word of God they are fed on the dry husks and the death-dealing dusk of the classics. They are made to wear a weary path over the stony wastes of the past. Our Christian college student comes away from the colleges with a better acquaintance with the heathen gods and their immoral practices than he has with the one true God and his matchless program for endless life.

SHOULD BE TEXTBOOK.

"The English Bible should be the chief textbook in the study of our language and in the study of English literature. There is no reason in the world why the Bible should not be the supreme textbook of every Christian school. The place to restore it first of all in our schools is in the higher institutions of learning. Then the public schools will follow.

"To say that knowledge of the Bible in the public schools tends to make a certain type of Christianity, and to hurt and damage another type, is one of the most fatal absurdities that ever found currency in American life. The one supreme blunder that has been committed by the public school system of this republic is found in the exclusion of the Bible from the schoolroom on such flimsy, unreasonable grounds as those to which I have referred.

"Next to the establishment of this splendid republic as an achievement in the world's history is the creation of our public school system. Our government is secure only as we keep this source of our national life pure. It can not be kept pure in the absence of the Bible from the schools."—Selected.

We have just received the news of Mary Gregg's death at Holland, Michigan. She belonged to the Hopkins Branch in Michigan.

JOSEPH KIRBY.

CASTLEBERRY, NEW MEXICO, October 1, 1911.

Editors Herald: Our hearts are sad to report the death, on September 28, of our beloved and faithful brother, J. F. Mannering whose home was near Logan, New Mexico. He leaves a wife and seven children, father, mother, and several brothers and sisters to mourn. Brother Frank had made many friends among his neighbors and had gathered around him a host of staunch associates, who loved him for his faithful, practical Christian life.

Yours in haste,

T. J. SHEPPARD.

Institute for the Deaf,

BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO, September 20, 1911.

Editors Herald: As a reader of your columns I have been strengthened by the letters of the Saints and have been led to meditate on the wide range of God's mercy and his untiring watchcare over his chosen people, scattered though they may be. I am an isolated Saint, living in the above-named institution as a teacher, I mingle with those who are of the world and who uphold "human creeds."

Last April one of our little pupils was at her home in Saint Thomas owing to ill health, when she asked for baptism, after having attended Sunday school for some little time. She is nine years of age and her faith is most wonderful. She has returned to school this fall and when I asked the superintendent of the school if I might take her to my room for a half hour or so each week on Sunday and teach her the Sunday school lesson he told me, that not he, but the Educational Department at Toronto could give me permission so to do. In the same sentence he continued thus: "You know Miss Hunter, a—er—a—well,—what we do not know doesn't hurt us." I naturally inferred that the child, our beliefs, and myself had been taking an overhauling somewhere here. The conversation was then interrupted; that was this morning and I feel to-night to ask the individual and united prayers of the Saints both for us and for those with whom we must associate who do not yet know the doctrine of Jesus Christ.

I also request your prayers in behalf of the little girl, Catherine Hammond, that she may remain steadfast and firm even under her affliction and that her faith may stand unshaken.

I should be glad to hear from any Saints to the above address.

Ever striving to do God's will and live an exemplary life before the world, I am,

Your sister in the gospel,

LORA HUNTER.

SHELL BROOK, SASKATCHEWAN, CANADA, Sept. 14, 1911.

Dear Herald: We are the only two families that are in the faith here that we know of, and if there are any others we would like to hear from them. My husband and I have not been baptized and have been waiting for an opportunity. My father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Sims, and sister Ruth have been baptized. We have been wishing for a minister and thought one would be called here, and that probably we could get an elder by writing to the HERALD.

We were in hopes of Bro. E. E. Long as we saw in the HERALD where his field was in Saskatchewan for a time.

We started a Sunday school last spring and quite a few attended. But since there has only been a few and sometimes none but our two families. Christ says where there are two or three gathered together in his name he is with them. We hold Sunday school in our houses, and would like the prayers of the Saints that we may carry it on. If we could get an elder maybe we could get a branch started here, for the harvest is great and the reapers are few.

We have two little children to be blessed and I think there will be more baptized when they see the right way.

Hoping the Lord will help us, I am,

MRS. GEORGE CRUCE.

MANCHESTER, TEXAS, September 25, 1911.

Editors Herald: I shall not attempt to tell or speak of all the good nor all the bad; all the joys nor all the sorrows that I have seen and heard and passed through even since I came into this latter day work, the gospel as has been restored in these last days. It would be asking too much of you busy editors, but suffice it to say that I have shared well in both the joys and the sorrows, the bitter and the sweet, and while my pathway has in many respects been a rough and rugged one, and while the path so far as this present world is concerned is still dark, to-day I am rejoicing in the good, the light, and joy that has come to me through the gospel, and the hope and the comfort that it affords me in the great beyond if faithful to the end, which I hope to be able to do. I am in the fight by the help of the Lord for life. I do not know what is to befall me ere this life is at an end; neither does anyone else unless it is revealed.

I came into the gospel fourteen years ago and I was in very good circumstances for a renter, having a large family, lots of stock, wagons, vehicles, farming tools, and making money. As many of the Saints and ministry know I have tried to do my best to hold up the banner of Prince Immanuel, the gospel to the world, and to let my light shine, but I presume I have made my mistakes as have others.

In July, 1900, near the spot where I am now seated I was ordained an elder and in the same year I was informed—positively informed in open daylight vision that I would reach a condition that I could not help myself in a financial way, and that my physical condition would be such that I could not do manual labor. I could not see, and I was not informed why it would be nor how. However, I related it to my brethren of the ministry and many of my brothers and sisters, but continued to make the fight as best I could, thinking possibly there might be some imagination or deception about it all and that possibly I might be able by earnest efforts to escape such a condition. I paid my tithes with possibly some exceptions and did all I could as I thought to spread the gospel.

In 1907-8 I was under appointment by the church, labored as faithfully as I could until October, 1908, having made so many crop failures and being in debt and a large family to be supported and being impressed that I had better quit the field, and having consulted the missionary in charge, Bro. William Aylor, and being rather advised by him to do so I asked for a release from the appointment which of course was granted, went home and my boys and good wife made an earnest effort to make a big crop the next year so as to get from under the financial embarrassment.

In March I fell a victim to a disease that came very near being fatal and only by the power of God I am here to-day. I lost my year's work, a large doctor's bill to pay, another failure in crops, had to dispose of my little school claim I was then on and all my work stock in order to get out of debt and then did not get out, secured a little house and lot in the town of Detroit, Texas, worth about three hundred dollars. If I could get that for it it would take about all to square me with the world. Since having the seige of sickness mentioned I have not been able to do any manual labor to amount to anything much, don't ever expect to be so.

I have lived to see the manifestation given to me in 1900 come literally true, still I am in the fight. No place as I see it to lay down the armor. My family is scattered as it were from Dan to Bersheeba. I have been putting in a large amount of my time when able to do anything, valiantly trying to preach the angel message.

Not being able to find occupation for myself and family I left my little home in Detroit, Texas, went to Wilburton, Oklahoma, started a little trade there that I thought might bring in something that would help me out some, but because of conditions it proved a failure, so on the 29th of June I left on a preaching tour, spending five weeks in eastern Oklahoma and northern Texas, returning home August 4 to attend our reunion which was indeed a feast of the good things that God has in store for his children even in this life. Some were added to the kingdom, many hearts comforted, much prejudice removed, and it is hoped great good accomplished. Remaining home during the reunion two weeks I got a call from a lone brother who lived eight or nine miles west of Sulphur Springs, Oklahoma, to which I responded, reaching there on the 27th of September.

I began preaching on the night of August 28, preaching till the 5th of September with fine liberty and fine interest all through. Sold one Book of Mormon to a doctor who seemed very much interested. Baptized on September 5 one of the most wonderful men I have ever been permitted to meet, a man of fifty years, one who will surely make his mark in the world. I am sure he will be of great worth to the gospel. There had never been any preaching done in that part anywhere that I could hear of, the brother who lived there having moved from Texas six or seven years ago. I left a good feeling among most of the people with many invitations to come back this fall which I expect to do some time in October, if the Lord wills. I left home for that place with just money enough to get to that place and my wife needed it to pay house rent. I had promised Bro. E. A. Erwin to try to meet him near Dalley Springs to help him in a meeting. The friend furnished means to get to Bagwell, where I stopped and preached three times at a schoolhouse four miles away, another place where there has been no preaching. Not having heard from Brother Erwin and not knowing just where he was and having a daughter living at this place, old Manchester, who has a child very sick with typhoid fever, I am stopping here for the time being.

I expect to move on as the way opens up and continue to do what I can in the interest of the grandest cause that any mortal being has ever been engaged in, the gospel, as long as I have strength of body and mind and the presence and power of God's Spirit to enable me to do so. I expect to do all that I can find to do for the advancement of God's kingdom and the establishing of his righteousness in this earth. I see nothing else for me to do now. I am not under church appointment and do not get any reductions on railroads; neither have I written this letter for the purpose of trying to induce any one to donate to me, far be it that I should engage in such a work as the preaching of gospel for money, not I, but I have a wife and three children principally making their own living and they have to pay house rent and if anyone is interested in the gospel and in sympathy with my wife and family while I am away from them, trying to do what I can in the interest of the gospel, and feel that they have a dime or a dollar that they don't need and would like to send it to my wife, her name and address is S. B. Bussell, Wilburton, Oklahoma, and further, if there are those who may chance to read this and have an opening for preaching and would like to have some preaching done, and are able and willing to bear my expenses to and from, and will address me at Wilburton, Oklahoma, I will gladly respond at the earliest opportunity. I will be at home some time in October on my way to Sunshine Schoolhouse near Durns, Murray County, Oklahoma, where I left the 5th of September.

May the Lord's blessings be with his people and may we all labor and pray for the redemption of Zion.

Yours in bonds,

P. B. BUSSELL.

*"Wenn jemand eine reise thut,
So kann er was erzählen."*

And in some quarters it is expected that he will, even if he tells nothing more than what has happened to him, or about his successes. Furthermore, Cæsar's famous example of brevity is of little use as a model now-a-days in describing an itinerary, as your pages repeatedly evidence. But after all each man's universe has its center close to him, and we move and have our being in a little world of our own; so may we not be excused, Mr. Editor, if our stories center largely in ourselves. We, too, Brother Editor, have made a trip, and beg your indulgence while we tell our little story.

At last General Conference we received the first of the large number of annual invitations to attend various reunions. The invitations do not usually come in quite so early, and it rather startled us by the suddenness of it. Furthermore, it was extended in person, by Bro. T. J. Jordan, of Sedley, Saskatchewan, who urged us to attend the conference of that district at Sedley, July 27-30, and the reunion at Edgerton, Alberta, August 5 and 6. Perhaps it was because of the suddenness of the invitation that we partially accepted by telling Brother Jordan that we should try to be there as desired. And so we made our plans.

But the Minnesota and North Dakota districts lying between Zion and the Canadian Northwest were each holding reunions, so, incidentally, we planned to be in attendance thereat. The Minnesota reunion was set for June 24 to July 2, so we left home in time to reach Frazee, Minnesota, the place of the reunion, on the afternoon of the 24th, where we were met by some of the committee and conducted to the tent and to the hospitable home of Bro. and Sr. P. M. Martin, where during the reunion there was always to be found genial hospitality. The committee found quarters for the writer at the home of Mr. and Mrs. T. M. Dennehy, whose warm hospitality made us feel quite at home.

With due deference to the office we hold the reunion and the district conference chose us president and associated with us the president of the Twelve, Bro. W. H. Kelley, and the district president, Bro. Leon Gould. In a reunion so well organized as the Minnesota reunion the office of president, conferred by official courtesy, becomes somewhat perfunctory, the many details having been worked out by the reunion committee. However, we tried to make the office more than a sinecure, and trust our work was something more than perfunctorily performed. In the preaching the writer and Brother Kelley were ably assisted by Brn. J. W. Smith, Leonard Houghton, J. E. Wildermuth, and W. E. Shakespeare, of the general ministry, and others of the local force.

We shall not attempt to mention by name those who especially contributed to the success of the reunion. Suffice it to say that all seemed anxious to do all they could to make the reunion profitable spiritually, with the result that at the close the consensus of opinion was emphatically to the effect that in spite of the inclemency of the weather (wind and rain), which played havoc at times with the well-worn tent, the meetings had been enjoyable and spiritually profitable. The ordinance of baptism was administered on several occasions in one of the beautiful little lakes which abound in Minnesota. We were pleased to note how quickly the new members sensed the warm feelings of fraternity which exist among the Saints.

The reunion closed on the 2d of July, camp being broken on the 3d. In the afternoon of the 3d Brother Shakespeare and I, fishing tackle in hand, walked to the home of Brother and Sister Albertson, on the north shore of Albertson Lake, not being able to resist the temptation to indulge the family propensity for piscatorial pursuits. The evening of the 3d and nearly all day the 4th we spent on the water with only indifferent success as fishermen, but thoroughly enjoying the recreation in company with Brother Albertson.

On the 5th, Brother Kelley having gone on ahead, we parted from the Frazee Saints and Brother Shakespeare, and went to Fargo, North Dakota, expecting to find Brother Kelley at the home of Bro. J. E. Wildermuth. But he had flown to parts unknown to the writer and we did not see him again till he reached the North Dakota reunion some days later when he reported holding several meetings at Berlin, North Dakota.

On the evening of the 6th (July) we met with the Fargo Saints at the home of one of the Saints where we talked to them for about three quarters of an hour, the effort being well received. After a pleasant three days spent in Fargo, early on the morning of the 8th, we boarded train for Milroy, North Dakota and after two changes (at Grand Forks and Towner) we reached Milroy, North Dakota, the place selected for holding the North Dakota reunion. Milroy can not truthfully be called a metropolis; and as we on "landing" beheld the seven buildings all told which constitute the village set down on the wind-driven, sandy prairie, we questioned the wisdom which had selected the place; but as we later saw the surprisingly large number of Saints and strangers who came for miles over the prairies in well-ordered wagons, carriages, on horseback, and even in automobiles, we saw the North Dakota Saints understood North Dakota customs and ways better than we did.

The North Dakota reunion began on the 8th of July, holding over the 16th. Here too, official courtesy was observed and the First Presidency honored by making one of its members president. But again our work was made easy by having associated with us Brn. W. H. Kelley, representing the minister in charge, and J. S. Wagener, the district president. In the preaching Brother Kelley and I again found excellent assistance from those of the general ministry present, namely: Brn. C. E. Butterworth, J. E. Wildermuth, William Sparling, Alonzo Whiting, James E. Page, and J. B. Wagener.

The attendance at the reunion was good throughout, and the meetings enjoyable and pleasant, though some difficulty was experienced in keeping the tents in place. Those North Dakota wind and sandstorms are certainly fierce. But good nature prevailed through the bad and unfavorable weather, and while good and favorable weather prevailed as it did generally, the Saints enjoyed every meeting, and the interims in visiting, comparing experiences, exchanging thought, etc. The writer was one of several who were comfortably domiciled in the "elders tent," while others bunked in the church building, the few tents on the ground, and at Bro. Wagener's home. Meals were largely served at the latter place, being prepared in a large "cook car" under the direction of one of the sisters well trained in the culinary art.

Altogether the North Dakota reunion was a pleasant affair, which seemed to be enjoyed by all, the general testimony being that the Saints had been well repaid for coming. We found the North Dakota Saints whole-souled, kindly and earnest. After the close of the reunion a number were baptized by Brother Sparling, at Denbigh, the nearest point where suitable facilities could be found.

On the 17th of July Brother Kelley and I, together with several others of the Saints boarded train, and going via Towner went to Minot, North Dakota, where we spent two or three days resting at the very hospitable home of our earnest, zealous, and active brother, William Sparling, and visiting others of the Saints there, among others an old boyhood classmate in the person of Bro. Charles F. Graham.

Very early in the morning of the 20th (about 2 a. m.), Brother Kelley and the writer again boarded the train, headed northwest into King George's realms. We crossed the international boundary line at Portal, where we went through the usual experience and concomitant delay of having our "baggage inspected." Going on via Weyburn and Stoughton, we reached Sedley, Saskatchewan, about 1 p. m., where we were met at the station by Bro. T. J. Jordan, and taken to his home, where we found everybody busily engaged in preparations for the conventions and conference the following week.

The town hall has been secured for the conference, and on Sunday, July 23, services were held, Brother Kelley and the writer each preaching once. On the 27th the conventions began, conference holding Saturday and Sunday, the 29th and 30th. The question of "Who shall preside?" which is somewhat perennial in character was again decided by official courtesy and the First Presidency was recognized in the presidency of both conventions and the conference, the latter being presided over by the writer, associated with Brother Kelley of the Twelve, Brother Long, in charge of the missionary force of the field, and Brother Jordan, district president. Others of the general ministry present were Brn. J. W. Peterson, C. C. Joehnk, E. E. Moorman, Patriarch William Lewis, J. L. Mortimer, and S. W. Tomlinson. The organization of each convention and the conference was perfected readily by selections from the large corps of willing and able workers of the district.

We were impressed by the sight of the scores of Saints coming long distances by rail and wagon to be present at the four-day meeting. Such zeal we felt sure could not but be rewarded, and so it proved, for the meetings were lively, spiritual, and encouraging. Even the preachers responded to the general influence with the result that on the whole the preaching was well received and generally satisfactory.

We had the pleasure of organizing at this conference a quorum each of priests and deacons. Bro. J. R. Neil was chosen president of the former, and C. B. Bergersen, a former Lamoni boy, president of the deacons. Account of this has appeared elsewhere.

We were much pleased to meet the many old acquaintances from the States and particularly those formerly of Lamoni, and with the goodly, fraternal, and saintly spirit prevailing among the splendid people of the great Northwest. They are alive to the interests of the work, and are, we feel sure, ready to make any necessary sacrifice the progress of the work may demand of them. An evidence, as we take it, of this spirit was the readiness with which they came to the support of Graceland in response to the call we made for subscriptions. At this conference we secured more subscriptions than we had at the Minnesota and North Dakota reunions combined, and we thought the latter had responded liberally. At the three reunions fifty-one ten-dollar subscriptions to the temporary endowment fund were secured. Pretty well done, we think.

We were both highly pleased and much encouraged by our visit among the Saskatchewan Saints and felt sure we should find the same spirit prevailing among the Alberta Saints at the Edgerton reunion that we had found at the Sedley conference; and in this we were not disappointed. So after a very pleasant sojourn at Sedley, we reluctantly left the genial home of Brother Jordan on August 1, for Regina, where we stayed a day or so to visit the Dominion Fair, then in progress. The writer stayed at the rooming quarters of Bro. Harry Kozman, a former Graceland student, who with Bro. Victor Smith spared no efforts or expense to make our stay pleasant, and we assure them it was.

On the morning of August 3, Brother Kelley, Brother Lewis and daughter Ruth, and the writer, boarded train at Regina for Saskatoon, which we reached after nearly an all day's ride on the Canadian Northern. We were met at the station by Mr. and Sr. W. E. Dorr, at whose home we were comfortably domiciled till the following morning, when we boarded a Grand Trunk Pacific train for Edgerton, Alberta, where we arrived about 4 p. m., going immediately, along with quite a number of other visiting Saints, to the home of Bro. Fred Rowe, where we found the usual generous saintly welcome.

On Saturday and Sunday the Edgerton reunion was held, which was surprisingly well attended and apparently much enjoyed by the attending Saints. Brethren Kelley, Lewis, and the writer did the preaching, the meetings being held in the schoolhouse on Saturday and in the school yard on Sunday because of some objections to the schoolhouse being used on Sunday. The directors were the objectors, they holding that the house could not be used by any denomination on Sunday. But our meetings in the yard and our open air "picnic" meals were thoroughly enjoyed, and we trust the meetings were not without profit to the attending Saints.

Brother Kelley and I, leaving Brother and Sister Lewis to do further work, left Edgerton on August 7 for Edmonton, where we were due by train schedule at 9 p. m., but owing to delay caused by wreck we reached there about 3 a. m. We spent the rest of the morning sitting in the depot and walking the streets, and finally walking two or three miles between Edmonton and the Canadian Pacific Railway station at Strathcona, where we boarded a train which landed us in the afternoon at Calgary. At Calgary we were surprised and pleased to be met by Brn. J. L. Mortimer and G. T. McLeod. The latter took us for a hasty, somewhat muddy, but very pleasing ride in a motor car over the rapidly growing city and then to his pleasant home for supper and a few moments chat with his family before the writer took train for Lethbridge, homeward bound. We left Brother Kelley at Calgary after having been associated with him for several weeks in reunion work. After an all-night stay at Lethbridge, Alberta, and Great Falls, Montana, we finally boarded a train at the latter place which landed us in Kansas City on the morning of August 12.

On reviewing the trip into the Northwest, covering a period of seven weeks, we found we had been pretty busy, having attended three reunions and three conferences, besides several conventions,—altogether something like eighty or ninety meetings. We preached about twenty times besides making several speeches, not to say anything about the two games of ball we helped the lively Alberta boys play at Edgerton, nor the gophers we shooed away from Brother Jordan's garden, nor the fish we didn't catch in the Mouse River in company with Brother Darling.

We returned from the Canadian field well pleased with what the Saints there are trying to accomplish, and feeling that that field is one of the most promising we know of for missionary work. The splendid fertility of the soil which a generous government is putting into the hands of desired settlers promises to do much for our people who are settling there. Perhaps in many instances the "unearned increment" will also do much. Anyway, we feel that the Saints who have homesteaded there have generally done wisely. We hope they may and feel they will be blessed.

On the 19th of August, one week after coming home, according to arrangements previously made, and by invitation largely extended to us through the influence and activity of Bro. Charles P. Faul, we lectured at the Maysville, Missouri, Chautauqua on the subject, "The Missouri Criminal," a study in criminology and a plea for needed prison reform. The audience was large (about 2,000) and very attentive, and if we are to judge from the many flattering compliments paid us, the lecture was well received. The Maysville Chautauqua is the oldest and one of the best and largest in the State. It is sometimes called the mother of Missouri Chautauquas. It is independent, being managed by local people altogether.

Since coming home we have kept busy at various things. Nearly every Sunday we have "occupied" in Independence or neighborhood and Lamoni. This may be evidence to some that we are still "in the faith," perhaps greater evidence than if we simply said so.

Your servant,
FREDERICK M. SMITH.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 30, 1911.

News From Branches

Independence, Missouri.

On September 17 the Woman's Auxiliary held its regular monthly meeting in the upper room with Mrs. Grace Krahl in the chair and Mrs. A. A. Horton, secretary.

Considerable time was spent in enumerating some of the unsanitary practices in the ordinary school regime, and it was deemed advisable to look up the school laws of the State, and where there are failures to give pupils the advantages accruing to well-kept school laws, to appeal to the proper authorities for such changes of conditions as may seem wise and necessary.

A very interesting talk on the subject of the Children's Home, its aim, purposes, progress, etc., was given by Sr. B. C. Smith.

The early prayer meetings of the 24th and 1st were spiritual, and the subjects of divine healing and the instruction gained by reading the literature put forth by the church were much talked about during the time given for testimony. And, by the way, among the inexpensive little volumes issued lately is the Two-Story Book, which for telling the gospel in a plain, interesting way to the youth, is an excellent work for the holidays.

We are pleased to note the vivacious, hearty singing in our Sunday school under the leadership of Bro. A. H. Mills; also his excellent work in the orchestra which gives a zest and enthusiasm to the musical part of the exercises.

The attendance record of the last two Sundays was 832 and 758; officers present 25; and collections over $15 each day. The kindergarten and normal class work and teachers' meetings are all worthy the consideration of earnest Sunday school workers.

As to the church services, the Saints have enjoyed excellent sermons and the prayer meetings as usual have been interesting and uplifting.

The Saints with a spirit of thankfulness have listened lately to the calm, inspired utterances of Brn. M. H. Bond, J. R. Sutton, J. E. Lambert, and J. F. Curtis. At the hour of 1.30 p. m. on the 24th, Bro. W. H. Garrett, our beloved pastor, preached the funeral sermon of Elder John H. Lee, a reverend veteran of the cross, who during many years toiled and ministered in our midst.

Among the many words of encomium spoken were those concerning his long and useful life, his peaceful and loving spirit, and his straightforward walk through a life of toil. Battle-scarred he went to rest bearing honorable wounds inflicted in the strife of a busy life, and while in the honored association with good and worthy men of earth. What more fitting words could we speak than these: "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his"?

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Brooklyn, New York.

Yesterday, Sunday, October 1, was observed by the Brooklyn Branch as "Rally Day." The church was nicely decorated with flowers and plants and while the weather was rather unfavorable, the meetings were especially enjoyable. At 9.45 the Sunday school met with eighty-six present. This is the largest attendance we have had for many months. A few of the children whom we brought off the street to attend our daily vacation bible school this past summer, are coming to the Sunday school, and we hope to see a greater number with us. At 11 a. m. our monthly communion service was held, with a goodly number of the Saints present, and the Spirit of God was felt in every heart.

The Brooklyn Saints are a generous, good-hearted lot of people; they mean to love each other always and do the right thing. However, there has been some difficulty and misunderstanding in evidence here for some time past, which has led to undesirable conditions. The brethren who were principally involved in this unpleasantness, we know deeply regretted its existence and finally they got together and made concessions to each other, and when the opportunity for open confession before the church, before partaking of the sacred emblems, was given, they arose in a commendable, manly, and humble way, confessing their faults and asking forgiveness of any and all who might have been aggrieved at their conduct. We can not but believe that a brighter day is dawning for the Saints and the work here; and if the spirit of love and unity and the desire for progress and improvement continues, it is bound to come.

At 2.30 p. m. we opened the first mission of the Reorganized Church in New York City, in the Genealogical Hall, 226 West 58th street. Several of the Saints from Brooklyn were present and a few strangers who had been attracted by our advertising in the papers. The meeting was enjoyable and the Spirit of the Master was felt by all. For many years the Saints in Brooklyn have longed and waited for the day to come when some move would be made to reach the millions of people in this the greatest city on the Western Continent. Our effort must necessarily be humble in the face of such a great undertaking, and Saints who visited the hall seemed pleased with its central location, its appropriateness and convenience for our purposes. Regular services will be held in this hall every Sunday afternoon during this fall and winter as follows: Bible study at 2.30, and preaching at 3.30 o'clock. The Saints in Brooklyn show commendable interest in this movement, helping it by their presence and their means. We have several members who live in New York City, who find it rather inconvenient to come to Brooklyn for regular services, and many of them are exceedingly pleased that we have started the work there. The Lord has sent us as "fishers" and "hunters" to fish and hunt for his lost and loved ones, and surely he must have a great number whom he will call to his kingdom in such a great city. May his good Spirit lead, and his grace and wisdom attend us in our humble efforts.

WM. E. LARUE.

1331 PARK PLACE.

Fall River, Massachusetts.

"Lest you forget," we reiterate our former statement, "Fall River is still on the map." After enjoying a season of rest and recreation at reunion we have returned to perform our little part on this world's stage of action.

On October 7 and 8, the Saints of the Massachusetts District will assemble at Fall River and review reports and conduct such business as is deemed necessary for the best interests of the district.

Our former companions, John Sheehy and wife, have removed to the State of Maine, where through the assistance of his heavenly Father, his wife, and the Saints, John will endeavor to deliver the word of God to the best of his ability.

May the Saints always do that which is pleasing to the Lord, and tell the joyful tidings unto others for,

"The Lord of the harvest will soon appear,
His smile, his voice, we shall see and hear," providing we are worthy, is the wish of your brother,

ALMA M. COOMBS.

San Francisco, California.

We have returned from the reunion of the Northern California District, which was held September 1 to 10, at Irvington. We had a very pleasant, and we trust, profitable time. The weather was ideal; some fog, but that only made us San Franciscans feel more at home. We had the largest attendance in years,—outgrown the grounds in fact, and the matter of procuring new grounds where bathing facilities are attainable was agitated. Very few of the citizens of the place where we have held the reunion for years attend our services and it seems they have been sufficiently warned. Bro. J. M. Terry, who has served for so many years on the reunion committee, resigned. The members of the reunion committee at present are: Brn. F. B. Farr, J. D. White, H. D. Simpson, H. F. Ewing, and C. A. Parkin. We wish them success in their arduous undertaking.

Our branch seems to be holding its own in spiritual interest. Our president, Bro. G. S. Lincoln, has the confidence and esteem of his flock. Bro. H. D. Simpson, as priest; A. Cecil Hawley, teacher, and Kenneth Richmond, deacon, are the officers that see to the affairs of the branch. Brother Lincoln believes in giving every man a chance, so when we have no traveling missionary present the preaching is done in turn by the local brethren. Practice makes perfect, so we believe this is a commendable feature.

Our choir is managed by Bro. J. A. Saxe with his daughter Irma, our faithful organist. For our solo work, we have Sis-tters Lillian Simpson Ewing, Bessie Holling, and Grace Hart-sough. The Sunday school, under the superintendency of Sr. M. A. Saxe, has grown to be a first grade school. A new feature was introduced at the close of this last quarter; each teacher was requested to write a report of his or her class work for the three months. We believe this will stimulate greater interest among the members.

Our Religio, under the able and energetic leadership of Bro. Ray Lawn, is making excellent progress. As Bro. A. Carmichael said at the reunion, "The road to success is hard work."

Sr. C. A. Parkin, the president of our "Ladies' Aid," has been on the sick list of late, but we hope for her speedy recovery. This society voted to hold a series of suppers or entertainments to raise funds for our church debt. Sister Clea had the first, a "cafeteria dinner," and a snug sum was the result. Sr. Rose Page navigates the next one for October 5.

Sr. Vira Lawn is the president of our Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service. We have very well-attended meetings and an interesting program each month. A while back we had a week of sacrifice, each doing without some luxury, as plain lunches, walk to save car fare, etc., and the sum so obtained was sent to the Children's Home.

We have had Bro. E. Keeler and wife with us lately; he preached an able sermon September 24, in the morning, and Bro. F. M. Sheehy in the evening. Brother Sheehy is our missionary in charge and he has given us some grand counsel. We were going to say, "May his shadow never grow less," but I do not think he would appreciate that, so I will say may he be spared to the cause many, many years, and may he have charge of this mission as long as we are members of it.

Editorial

THE MISSIONARY SPIRIT.

they call it that, and concede the possibility of divine healing.

METHODS AND TACTICS.

All of these things that I have mentioned are in the nature of preparation for this work, and under the commission given us as free men, we are permitted to go into all these fields and obtain knowledge and wisdom to use in our work.

The Apostle Paul was one of the greatest missionaries who ever lived. You may discover that he not only made this preparation, but he was not so great that he could ignore methods and tactics in his work. Why, he was one of the most adroit men that I ever read of, to take advantage of conditions as they presented themselves. You remember how it was when the Romans were about to beat him, and he said, "Is it lawful to scourge a Roman citizen?" He was a Roman citizen; and he took advantage of the fact. When he was arraigned before the council of the Jews and he saw that the Sadducees and Pharisees were divided among themselves, at once he was a Pharisee. It was true that he was raised a Pharisee; and he lined up with them on the question of the resurrection, on which principle they were in the right, and by his conduct divided the council so that it could not bring in a judgment against him.

I notice here that he says that "I have become all things to all men, that I might by all means save some." This, possibly, is a text that has been misunderstood even as others have been. I do not believe that the Apostle Paul meant to convey the idea that he would sacrifice principle, that he would become a man without conviction, that he would fail to assert himself in defense of the right, but he meant that he sought to adapt himself to conditions so that he could reach men with the least possible friction. When he was among the Romans he did not fly in the face of the Roman prejudices. When he was among the Jews he adapted himself to the Jews, and we must learn a similar lesson in this day and age of the world as well.

It will not do for one of our men who goes from the North down into the Southern States to run contrary to prejudices and manners of the southern people. He must become one of them. And when one of the elders comes from the South and enters a northern region, he will find that he must observe the same practice. When we go among the poor and the lowly and the common people we must not dress ourselves extravagantly, or talk to them in words of many syllables, because if we do we will surely defeat our object. On the other hand when we go among the cultured and educated, we must not appear before them dressed in a slovenly manner and using ungrammatical language, because if we do they will not hear us. We must become all things to all men in the sense that we adapt ourselves to the conditions that we find surrounding them and meet them on a plane where they can understand us and where they will not repulse us and reject our advances.

GOD WITH US.

But the greatest thing in all Paul's ministry, the thing that finally accounts for his success, is revealed in the statement that was made on the occasion when he had been tried before the Jewish council and afterwards was cast into the prison, while the Jews were going about swearing that they would neither eat nor drink until they had killed Paul, we are told that in the meantime God "stood by him" and said, "Be not afraid." That, finally, after all our human effort, must be the secret of our success,—that God will stand by us because we have cooperated with him.

I imagine that no matter how I have presented these ideas, you have recognized that there is a principle of truth in some of them, at least; and you will see that these are things for the missionary to heed. But, my friends, they do not apply to the missionary alone, because I read in Doctrine and Covenants 119, paragraph 8, this language:

"Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may. All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."

A DUTY THAT RESTS UPON ALL.

Then we are all missionaries, or should be, and we are all engaged in this great work. The missionary who goes out to preach, the man who toils in the affairs of business, and the man who labors in the mechanical or manual pursuits of life,—the responsibility and burden of this work is laid upon all of them. Truly, no matter what field they may occupy, they can say, in the language of Paul, "Woe unto me if I preach not the gospel."

But I perceive that the Apostle Paul wants us to do this thing willingly. In the 17th verse he says: "For if I do this thing willingly, I have a reward; but if against my will, a dispensation of the gospel is committed unto me."

WILLING SERVICE.

It is true that God loves a cheerful giver. In all of this service we must give it voluntarily, and not because we are compelled to do it.

One of the missionaries was telling me a few days ago the trouble he had with his little boy in trying to get the little fellow to come home from school. After the school closed in the afternoon he played on the way and they couldn't get him to come directly home. They gave him forty-five minutes to come three blocks,—fifteen minutes to the block. Finally the father told him that for every hour exceeding the forty-five minutes that he was absent from home after school, he would have to spend an hour in the attic tied to a post. And so the first week when Saturday came, the boy had to spend three hours in the attic, not in the dark, but tied to a post; and the father said that while the boy was undergoing his punishment he went up to the attic and looked in. There sat the boy, tied to his post, and singing, "Trust and obey, for there's no other way."

Now you perceive that with him there was no other way at that time. How much more pleasing it would have been to the father had the boy trusted and obeyed while there was another way, instead of waiting until he was bound to the post and could not do anything else. How much more pleasing it is to God if we yield him our "reasonable service" willingly, and not because we are bound to do it or feel that we are.

VARIOUS WAYS OF PREACHING.

We are told in this passage that I have read that we are all laborers together in this work, that we are all called to be missionaries. Now we can not all preach. That is a foregone conclusion. Not all are preachers in the sense that all stand in the pulpit and declare the word of everlasting life; but, my friends, there are many ways of preaching, and those who are not called to the ministry are called to warn their neighbor, if they have been warned themselves, and one way that can reach their neighbor is by deeds of kindness that mellow the heart, touch the affections, and win the respect, thus paving the way for a future teaching of the principles of eternal life.

One of the finest stories that Doctor Maclaren tells us in his book Auld Lang Syne, is concerning the conversion of Milton. Milton was one of those hypocrites who profess religion but are dishonest and unmerciful to the poor, and in their lives contradict their profession. Among those Scotch people by whom he was surrounded he was held in disrepute, until the time came when he had absolutely no friends. But one year while in this condition, he was taken seriously ill, and very nearly died. When seedtime came his farm was unplowed and unsown. There was no prospect for a harvest for him; but one day as he lay on his bed, looking out of the window, he saw his neighbors assemble one by one, until there were twenty plows and twenty teams in the field. Before the day was over they had all of his field plowed, and their neighborly kindness at such a time so broke his hypocritical old heart that he became a changed man.

I think Latter Day Saints can see the point. Many times brothers and sisters can go into the homes of "outsiders," as we call them, in times of need, and minister to their wants, and thus by kind deeds prepare the way for the preaching of the gospel. Sometimes the sisters can produce more visible results in this line than the active ministry.

Again, those of you who have read the last number of the Autumn Leaves will perhaps remember the article by the sister in Kansas City who has been active in scattering good literature for Zion's Religio. She has been directed in this work by the Spirit of God, which is very necessary because it requires wisdom as well as zeal in that kind of work, otherwise more damage would be done than good. But as a result of her work it is reported that some thirty baptisms have occurred in Kansas City during the past year. There is the manifestation of the missionary spirit.

I remember also of preaching a sermon on consecration on one occasion, and after I had finished, an aged sister, unmarried, who had worked for her living all her life, came to me and gave me a check for one hundred dollars to be sent to Bishop Kelley as her surplus, a consecration. It was the missionary spirit that kept her toiling at those tasks that belonged to a servant, year after year, living frugally day by day, until she had accumulated one hundred dollars that she laid on the altar of God to keep a missionary in the field that he might preach a certain number of sermons for the conversion of sinners.

NOISE VERSUS POWER.

It is not always the man who makes the most noise that has the most of the missionary spirit—I was reading of a conversation between two girls. One said that her preacher could pound the desk harder than the other man. And the other girl said that her preacher could shout louder and jump higher. But noise is not always a demonstration of power. A writer in the Technical World notices the fact that across New York State there extends an aluminum wire stretched on the top of tall steel towers. At one end of that wire is Niagara Falls, thunderous and tumultuous beyond our power to describe; and at the other end, silent and invisible, is over ninety thousand electric horse power to run the factories and light the cities of men.

As we have said, noise is not always a demonstration of power, and some of you elders will remember that during the summer when you are a long ways from home and there are no admiring audiences, and you feel that at home your families are in privation, living just a little below the average level of life in the church, then is the time when the greatest power of the missionary spirit will be displayed if it keeps you in the field and at your task; it will also be displayed in your home in the life of your companion and your children who are performing a great sacrifice in the interests of the gospel.

WHAT IS THE MISSIONARY SPIRIT?

What is the missionary spirit? Why, it is the result of an intense conviction that men are dying. Can we conceive that? And that we have a message that can save them? I think sometimes that we regard this work as a beautiful theory. We are glad to see the church grow; but can we realize that men are lost, that they are going to hell, and that we have the message that will save them? We must have that conviction, that realization, if we are to have the missionary spirit.

Some of you remember, about two years ago, I think it was, when a great disaster occurred in the Saint Paul mine at Cherry, Illinois. You remember how the flames cut off the escape of the miners, and how the mothers and wives and sweethearts and children gathered around the burning shaft. Down there below in the heart of the earth somewhere were their loved ones. They saw the shaft sealed over that the flames might be smothered, and for seven days they wrung their hands and broke their hearts waiting for that shaft to be opened. Finally it was opened, and men with oxygen helmets went down into the mine. And by and by the cry came up out of the mine, almost unbelievable, "We are bringing up living men!" Can you imagine the thrill that went through the hearts of those wives and mothers at this noble work of rescue?

This earth has been lying in darkness and sin, and destruction has been coming upon the wicked. God has sent his messengers out into the world to carry salvation. We are told that there is rejoicing in heaven when the cry goes up, "We are bringing up living men." When one sinner repents we are told the very angels rejoice. My friends, does not that fill us with missionary zeal? Can we realize what actual salvation is? Perhaps we can if we stop to think a moment. I believe there are men in this church, brethren who are here to-day perhaps, who had they not heard this gospel would have been drunken, demoralized, degraded sots; but because the gospel touched their hearts in time they are now honorable, upright, intelligent citizens. There are thousands of such men in the world who are waiting for that message,—thousands of women. Think of the change in Mary Magdalene. Think of the Mary who was the prey of men and the habitation of devils, degraded and debased; then think of the Mary transformed by the gospel power who stood by the open sepulcher on that first Easter morning and became the first messenger of the resurrection. Think what the gospel does for men and women. Does not that thought fill us with zeal to say that we will go out from this conference and we will carry that message just as far as we can? Is not that an incentive to those who stay at home and toil and labor in the affairs of business that they will see that these missionaries are supported financially and have their moral support as well in the work? Ah, if we can have thousands of praying homes of Latter Day Saints, and have their prayers going up for the missionary force, and their means also going up into the bishop's hands, then the missionary force can go out this year and they can accomplish a work such as we have never seen in the history of this church.

May God bless the missionaries and the missionaries' wives and the missionaries' children, the business men and the farmers, and the elders, all those who have set their hand and affixed their seal to the thought that this work is divine, that during this year we may consecrate every dollar that we have, every ounce of energy, every mental faculty to the upbuilding of this cause. May God help and bless us and accept the offering that we bring in our prayer.

Conference Minutes.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.—Conference of the district convened at Irvington, California, on September 4, 1911, at 2 p. m. J. M. Terry, district president, and F. M. Sheehy, minister in charge, chosen to preside over conference. J. A. Lawn and A. C. Hawley chosen as secretary, and assistant secretary, respectively. Ministerial reports were read from the following: Elders C. A. Parkin, H. D. Simpson, J. S. Hommes, C. W. Deuel, M. Cannon, J. A. Anthony, J. A. Lawn. Priests A. Kern, W. H. Dawson, F. H. Lawn, H. A. Hintz. Statistical reports were read from the following branches: San Francisco, Oakland, San Jose, Santa Rosa, Ukiah, Chico, Sacramento, Stockton, Fresno, Tulare and Irvington. Oakland was selected as the place for holding next conference; time left to district officers. Adjourned according to previous resolution. J. A. Lawn, district secretary.

Reunion Minutes.

CLINTON.—The twelfth annual reunion of the Clinton, Missouri, District met August 18, 1911, in the East Park at Rich Hill, Missouri. The Saints came together in the spirit of humility, and the Lord blessed with his Holy Spirit in all of the services. President James Moler and Apostle J. F. Curtis were chosen to preside. The preaching was by James Moler, Apostle J. F. Curtis, Elders Hale W. Smith, W. H. Lowe, A. C. Silvers, and Amos T. Higdon. There were nine baptized. At the business meeting it was decided to hold a reunion in 1912, at the same place, the time being left to the missionary in charge and the district president. A. C. Silvers, secretary of reunion.

NORTHWESTERN NEBRASKA AND BLACK HILLS.—Reunion closed at Bayard, Nebraska, September 25. The attendance of the Saints of the district was fine; some having driven one hundred miles to attend. Brn. C. W. Prettyman and R. O. Self presided over the reunion. Elder J. L. Detrick was chosen chorister, and Sr. Clara McFarlane organist. Besides the above-named elders, there were also present J. W. Wight and James E. Kelley. Sr. R. O. Self was also present during the latter part of the reunion, and with her usual cheerfulness, assisted us greatly in the singing, which was appreciated by all. Four were led into the waters of baptism at the close, and there were more fully persuaded but slow to accept the angel message. There were 28 sermons, 10 prayer meetings, and four babes were blessed. We voted to hold a reunion next year at Gering, Nebraska. Saints of the district should arrange to attend, as so many of us are more or less isolated. The expense of the reunion was met without any difficulty, and all went home feeling that it was good to have been there. Mrs. Clara McFarlane, secretary of reunion.

Conference Notices.

Semiannual conference of the Eastern Maine District will convene at 2 o'clock, Saturday, November 4, at Jonesport. Please get your statistical reports to Sister Walker on time. J. A. Koehler, president, Jonesport, Maine.

Convention Notices.

Having been appointed secretary of the Religio association of the Northern Nebraska District, I wish to state that said association will not convene the second week in October at Columbus, Nebraska, owing to the institute work that will take place here in December. Stella Stoff, secretary, Omaha, Nebraska.

Convention of the Eastern Michigan District Zion's Religio-Literary Society and Sunday school association will convene at Marlette, Michigan, Friday, November 3, 1911. Will all schools and locals kindly return reports promptly? Emma H. Mead, secretary, Marlette, Michigan.

The Eastern Michigan District Zion's Religio-Literary Society will meet, in joint convention with the Sunday school, at Marlette, Michigan, November 3. Order of meetings as follows: 9 a. m., social service; 10.30, institute work; 1.30 p. m., business and election of officers; 7, model Religio session. Bring your quarterlies and a studied lesson. You can do much good and receive much benefit if you come prepared and praying for the Lord's blessing to rest with us. William F. Sage, president, 27 Lyman Place, Detroit, Michigan.

Zion's Religio-Literary Society of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District will meet in convention at Clear Lake, Indiana, October 27, 1911, at 9.30 a. m. It is to be hoped the district will be well represented, a greater interest created in this good work until every branch of the church in the district shall grasp the opportunity of having a good live Religio in their midst and better acquaint themselves with the books of the church. Mrs. Elsie Lockerly, secretary.

The Bishopric.

To the Saints of Northern California, Greeting: I want to congratulate all who have honored the law of Christ pertaining to temporal things. Although some distance off, the end of the year is approaching. We ought to all be sufficiently interested in the work and in cooperating with the Master to do what is required by it as "fellow-citizens with the Saints" and of the household of God to be anxiously engaged in doing what is required of us as such.

Just a word. Let us make up our minds to pay the tenth of our increase to the Lord, so we can reasonably expect his blessings. "Prove me herewith." Ask yourself what that means. Let us go to with a will. How can you prove the truth or correctness of anything if you never try?

Here is a statement: "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say." Section 81:3. When is the Lord bound? "Prove me herewith." Do you believe it? If so, your duty is clear. Would you rather have all that comes into your hands and have no promise from the Lord, or pay the tenth with a consistent life in other things and have all the promises God has made to his people?

We must not withhold because we find it needs effort and diligence on our part, nor because of the need of sacrifice, because the Lord says, "Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."—Psalm 50: 5. Paul says, Work out your own salvation. Yes; according to the pattern, not some other way. "All the world and they that dwell therein, are mine," the Lord says, and we especially are. If we are the saints of the God "who made heaven and earth," let us wake up if we have been asleep to our privileges and duties. We are no better than others unless we do better; don't forget that. Some people think because they are Saints they are all right. Well, you are all right when you are right. When is that? "This is the love of God, that we keep his commandments." He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him, is the sentiment expressed by John in his first general epistle. Do you think God ever gave any unnecessary commandments? Prove yourselves. How? By your works. When are we real Saints? When we make a reasonable effort to do what the law says. Don't you think so? Sometimes we can't see just how things are "coming out" so we will wait. But you may wait too long and let the chance go by, like those foolish virgins did, and when you want to do it it's too late. Now, is the accepted time, the just shall live by faith. Have faith in God, not in your own way. Read Jeremiah 10: 23. Let us be "wise servants."

Died.

THORBURN.—Sister Thorburn was born November 22, 1839, at Cambuslang, Lanarkshire, Scotland. Died September 1, 1911, aged 71 years, 9 months, and 9 days. Married to Robert Thorburn, May 2, 1856. Ten children were born to them, of which four remain. Elder George Thorburn, of the missionary force; Walter Thorburn, of Seattle, Washington; Sr. Jennie Mehan, of Boone, Iowa; and Sr. Mary Somerville, of Cumberland, British Columbia. Sister Thorburn was a woman of a remarkable character, held in high esteem by all who knew her. Funeral services under the auspices of the Rebekahs; sermon by Elder William Johnson, at the home of deceased at Renton, Washington.

CARPENTER.—Bro. John Carpenter died February 25, 1911, at Goose Creek, Ritchie County, West Virginia. Born March 16, 1830, at Williamsburg, Burnsey County, Ohio, and was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, February 10, 1889, at Goose Creek, Ritchie County, West Virginia, by Elder G. T. Griffiths and confirmed by the same. Ordained an elder January 13, 1891, by Elder D. L. Shinn, at Goose Creek, West Virginia. Funeral sermon by Elder Samuel Brown, Sunday, September 10, 1911, in the Saints' Church at Goose Creek, to a full house and enjoying the best of liberty in presenting the state of the dead. He was faithful to the charge intrusted, and served part of the time as president of the branch and was respected by all who knew him. His last end was peace.

How to Gain in Weight.

In the October Woman's Home Companion Dr. Jean Williams, writing her regular "Doctor's Page," tells how thin people can gain weight. She says, in part:

"Cream, butter and olive oil are all highly valuable and, as a rule, one or more—sometimes all—may be liberally used. If well tolerated, they may be taken as follows: Butter thickly spread on bread, at each meal, or used in gravies, sauces, on hot cakes, toast, etc., in which form it is less easily digested. Cream is best taken on cereals and in the form of rich milk. When used whipped, with sugar and flavoring on rich desserts, it is difficult to digest, or, rather, the combination is. Olive oil may be taken directly after each meal, or one hour after. Beginning with one teaspoonful, the amount may be gradually increased to one table-spoonful after each meal. In addition to this, it may be freely used on salads.

"Cereals, bread, potatoes, etc., are possibly the most valuable we have as flesh makers, and they may be taken, unlike fats and sugar, in generous quantities. Fats and sugar are so highly concentrated that a comparatively small bulk furnishes many units of heat and energy, and the body chemistry is soon disordered by more than can be conveniently handled. Remember, it is not the quantity we eat that gives results in energy and flesh, but the amount that is assimilated. Too much unassimilated food heavily taxes the eliminative organs, thus producing a condition that helps to defeat our object."

Libel in England and America.

(Extracts from an article by the Hon. William J. Gaynor, mayor of New York, late Judge of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, in the October Century.)

Democratic institutions have no deadlier enemy than the professional falsifier of daily events or the professional libeler who ruins reputations and poisons the community through the printed sheet; and free government can not survive the continuance of such a condition.

Freedom of speech and of the press means freedom to speak and write the truth, not falsehood or abuse.

There are about 23,000 newspapers in the United States today, served by perhaps 100,000 writers. The immensity of the power for good represented by the American press, supplementing the work of half a million public-school teachers, to say nothing of 215,000 ministers of religion, makes it all the more important that no shelter should be given to him who turns journalism into systematic deception or moral assassination.

The abuse of the power of the press, especially by that part of the press which, to gain greater circulation, appeals to the passions and prejudices of the ignorant and thoughtless, causes more misery than war or pestilence; and in the United States it is principally responsible for the frequent failure of men of ability, character and patriotism to enter or continue in the public service.

Though the American people detest a libeler, the law of criminal libel is very poorly enforced, and in most localities, especially in large cities, scarcely at all.

Conan Doyle at His Best.

The story-reading world seems to be unanimous in the verdict that Sir Arthur Conan Doyle is at his best in his Sherlock Holmes stories. The Chicago Record-Herald is now in the act of breaking another record by printing in its columns all the Sherlock Holmes stories ever written, both short and long. Some it has published in the past, but many of the best are still to come. It is the only paper in Chicago now running Sherlock Holmes stories.

The Record-Herald has only recently begun on the "Memoirs of Sherlock Holmes," a series of thirteen of these famous detective tales. The stories, which have been appearing only on Sundays, are now to run right along through every day of the week until completed. This series is to be followed by two long Sherlock Holmes serials—"A Study in Scarlet" and "The Sign of the Four." Many persons are taking advantage of this chance to read the world's best detective stories.

Sherlock Holmes has the honor of being the most widely known character in fiction. The fascination of his adventures and of his marvelous detective powers is felt by all classes of readers. You can always find some of the best popular fiction of the day in The Record-Herald, but this Conan Doyle series is something out of the ordinary, even for that enterprising paper.

Land + Water = Good Crops Land - Water = Failure

The Big Horn Basin and Yellowstone Valley Have an Abundance of Water for Irrigation Purposes

The Government has made ample provision to supply each and every farmer under its canals with sufficient water during the crop growing season to cover each and every acre of his farm two feet deep. This is equal to twelve heavy rains of two inches each. Just think what it would have meant to your community during the crop growing season, just closed, if your farmers could have turned on twelve two-inch rains at will. You can do this next year and every year thereafter as long as you are farming, if you will go with me to Powell, Wyoming, and file on one of the government irrigated homesteads, now ready for entry.

EFFICIENCY

The slogan of success everywhere to- day. To progress one must be efficient, physically and mentally. The alert mind, keenness of vision, the ability to grasp opportunities, and the energy and endurance to carry out one's plans, these are possessed only by the man and woman with abounding robust health. The world has no use for the invalid. You want to become efficient, you want to at- tain to the full measure of your powers to do a noble work in this world. It is brainy food that produces Brain Energy. It is muscle food that produces Muscle Energy. Now, let me ask you what food you eat to produce these great factors in efficiency. KLAR'S GOOD HEALTH FLOUR, made from the select grains of wheat, the outer hull removed is sci- entifically arranged with both elements and will increase you physically and men- tally from 10 to 20 per cent in 30 days. Will gladly submit a sack for your in- spection and pay when used if you are of a doubting disposition. 24½ pounds of Good Health Flour has over 4 pounds of life; 2,000 pounds of the finest quality of white flour has less than 20 pounds. Will you be convinced?

THE SANITARIUM.

FACTS; AND THOUGHTS CONCERNING THEM.

It is obvious that the Sanitarium, located at Independence, Missouri, and built by the Saints, was commanded to be established for the purpose of fostering and developing the faith of all true devotees in the system of healing instituted of God through the ministry of Jesus Christ, and subsequently his disciples. There should not be the least hesitation in accepting this as a fact.

Those who are observant, whether they be in the ministry or not, have long deplored what seemed to be a failure in the healing of the sick, through the administration of the laying on of hands and the anointing with oil, as found directed in the New Testament Scriptures, and in the revelation to the church as instituted in 1830. The misfortune of the case is that too frequently the administration, anointing with oil, and the laying on of hands is performed under conditions that in some way prevent the complete exercise of faith, both on the part of those administering and those that are administered to. These adverse conditions are to be found at the homes where the sick are treated, and are of such a character that those having the care of the sick can not readily set them aside. The Sanitarium affords a place where conditions may be, to a greater extent controlled, and peace of mind and quietude of body can be secured, while the healing processes may perfect their work.

The faith of the true Saint puts no limit upon the power of God, and does not question the validity of the command requiring the calling of the elders and the administering with the oil and the laying on of hands. The same true Saint always considers that God could grant immediately the healing, by the exercise of his power, if he would, and the question of the Saint is, whether he will; that is to say, whether it will be found wise in his sight, that the individual administered to shall be healed.

We know of no promise which in its nature warrants the belief that the healing which is desired shall be an instantaneous healing, in which the ravages of disease shall be stayed, and the evidences of such ravages be removed absolutely, and perfect health be granted immediately. The promise given by the Savior is, "They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." This recovery may be quick or it may be slow, if in the wisdom of God it takes place. It follows then, that when we insist in our faith, that all healings shall be of an instantaneous character, we are going beyond the promise of the word. This also is a fact.

Provision is made for the administration to the sick at the Sanitarium, under the best conditions that are possible for an institution of the kind, and the elders of the church are called by the authorities and at the requests of those that are desiring to be administered to, and as far as we are acquainted with the work hitherto done at the Sanitarium, care has been taken that those who are in charge and those who are assistants are in direct sympathy and accord with this branch of the system of healing, which is intended should be effected by the establishment and the operation of the Sanitarium.

Prayer service is held each morning, at 8 o'clock, at which all who can attend are present; that is, all who are Saints, those being treated and those who are connected with the service. The physician in charge and his assistant have the right to require of all who are connected with the service, that they shall in word and deed be in harmony with this system of the laying on of hands and the anointing with oil, as a means of counteracting and overcoming disease. It is but just and right that this statement should be considered as a fact.

It is also evident that there was intended to be another phase of the healing system, by an appeal to medical skill and knowledge under what may be known as the science of medicine. This was contemplated in the revelation and was taken into consideration in the building and fitting out of the several departments which would be included in this idea of administration to the sick. It was intended that this should be for the benefit of the Saints, they being the first to be considered in the treatment accorded to the sick, either in this branch of healing or in the laying on of hands, but the Sanitarium being established at Independence, it was directed also in the revelation, that it would be open to the reception and for the treatment of those not of the faith, and outside of the church; and in order that it might be made as useful as possible, a physician in charge was provided for, together with an assistant or assistants, as the case might be and require. This is also a fact.

In connection with this which we may call the medical branch of the Sanitarium and its work, the treatment of those who might be received into the Sanitarium should be so arranged that anyone who might desire the treatment of a physician should be permitted to select, according to their wish, the system of treatment and the physician who might practice it, and should not be compelled to accept the treatment of the church physician, if they did not so wish. The physician in charge, in the opening of the Sanitarium, distinctly stated that those who were received and desired the treatment of other physicians than those who might be appointed by the church, should be permitted to have such a physician as they might choose; and this has been, so far as we understand, granted, and many have been so treated.

In order that there might not be any hindering cause to prevent the successful treatment of those who might be received into the Sanitarium, it was provided that nothing should be done in or about the Sanitarium which, in its nature, could create possible irritation or create nervousness on the part of those being treated, either by administration of oil and prayer, or under medical care; and the physician in charge would have the right to direct as to that which might be considered hurtful or that might be considered to be conducive to the best results. It was also provided that those who should be received from among those not of the faith should be received, or refused, upon the discretion and judgment of the physician in charge, or, in his absence, of his associate physician, who is on duty at the Sanitarium itself constantly. This was in order that in case of emergency or accident the person injured or whose treatment was necessary, because of imminent danger in delay, should be compelled to be sent to another institution at a distance, causing a delay that might be fatal.

There have been numbers received and treated both by the physicians in charge of the Sanitarium, and also under the treatment of other physicians, resident or from the city, whose patients have been received into the Sanitarium for treatment. Many of those who have been treated have received marked benefit. Of course there have been instances in which treatment could not be effected, as life power had been destroyed when they were brought to the Sanitarium, and treatment under such circumstances could not be effective.

There may have been and we believe there has been some speculation among the Saints, and especially among the elders, as to the scope of the words, "in case of emergency," referring to those outside of the church who might need or apply for treatment in the Sanitarium. This speculation may cease for the reason that the reception or the rejection of those desiring treatment in the Sanitarium must be referred to the physician in charge, or his assistant, under provisions made by him, before such persons may be admitted. The obvious reason for this is, that if there is not care exercised in this regard, there would be danger of overwhelming the capacities of the institution, and those would be admitted who would hardly be entitled to such reception, or who might be in such condition that no benefit would accrue by being received and treated in the Sanitarium. This is right and proper.

A physician to the church was appointed, and he has been accepted in his office by a vote of the church, and there should be the completest confidence exercised by all, that in the administration of his office and the duties belonging thereto, he would conduct himself upon the strictest regard to the spirit of the revelation by which the institution was directed and in the rendition of the letter of communications received by the church, and would decide upon all questions submitted to him, including the reception of cases for treatment, upon the broadest and most humane terms, so that if an error was made it would be on the side of mercy, and upon the principle taught in the word, by the story of the good Samaritan and his administration to the needy.

It is not proper for the Saints to cavil over the matter of the school of medicine adopted by the physician in charge, for his having been chosen by direction, was after he had studied and qualified to administer in the school of medicine which had been chosen by him. There is the best of reasons for confidence in the administration of the physicians in charge of the Sanitarium, within the lines of the school chosen according to the spiritual directions under which the Sanitarium was established, and also within the provisions of the command to the church in what is known as the "Word of Wisdom," fully understanding the terms as to the treatment of those who have not faith to be healed by the administration of oil, and the laying on of hands, wherein it is stated that they shall be administered to with "herbs and mild food." The system of practice which is being administered at the Sanitarium is the "herb" system, and will be strictly adhered to under the direction and care of the physician in charge and his assistant, who will carry his measures into effect.

There is no restriction to be placed upon physicians of other schools of medicine who may be called to treat patients who may choose their services, as to affect their service in their own school of medicine. They are free to conduct their cases according to their own school and to the direction of their own discretion and judgment. Hence there need be no fear of a conflict between practitioners of different schools of medicine, at the instigation or instance of the physician in charge or his assistants. Conflict, if it would come, would come from individuals of other schools, and would certainly be uncalled for under all circumstances and conditions of the case. There is no disposition upon the part of the physician in charge to interfere with men of other medical profession, in the discharge of their duties when attending patients at the Sanitarium, of the request of patients so treated.

There is another side to the question that it is necessary to take into consideration, and that is, the matter of expense. It must be clear to everybody, both those in the church and those out of the church, that the operating of an institution like the Sanitarium is attended with great expense, and it is the endeavor of those having the matter under their care, to provide for these expenses, with as little burden to the church funds as is possible. There is no need to discuss in this paper the business methods decided upon by those having actual charge of the business affairs of the institution. The reports made to the conference from time to time will show what these methods are and the result thereof. It is fair to presume that the opening of the Sanitarium for the treatment of those outside of the church, or not in the faith, was had in consideration by him from whom the direction for its institution came; and it is quite within the realm of reasonableness, that those who are admitted to the Sanitarium, who are not members of the church, should be required to pay a proper quota of this expense, whatever it may be, incurred in caring for them, so far as care is extended by the service of the officers and attendants in the Sanitarium work. It is proper to believe that the physician in charge and his assistant would have this matter of expense in view, in deciding upon the admission of individuals for whom room in the Sanitarium would be asked. We understand that, in the admission of those outside of the church, there will be no unjust or improper objections made, but that all applicants will be treated fairly and honorably with the understanding that while there is room in the institution not occupied by members of the church, undergoing treatment, others will be received, and that, without imposing restrictions or disabilities that would be unfair, or injurious either to those of the church or those without. This should be considered by the Saints everywhere, for there should be credit given to our friends outside of the church, for willingness to assist in so good a work as the Sanitarium was instituted to perform; while there will be no effort to carry the idea of money consideration beyond its proper limits, in the admitting of patients at the Sanitarium, either from among the Saints or from among those outside of the church. Fairness and due regard for suffering humanity will be among the considerations upon the part of those having charge and whose duty it is to look after both the spiritual and medical and business portions of the work.

There are a number of facts in what has been written above. It follows, that in the carrying into effect the purposes of the institution of the Sanitarium, all persons belonging to the church who are employed in the Sanitarium service, whether as physician in charge, assistant physician, elders called to administer from time to time, janitor having care of the building and its machinery, or nurses of every grade of qualification and position, should give their earnest attention unto the spirit as well as the letter governing the purpose of the institution, as well as give their confidence and sympathy to the patients who are treated, and to those who treat them. It would be improper, injurious, and disastrous for nurses, whether in charge or otherwise, to prevent the best results sought to follow the administration of the elders, or by careless attendance upon the sick, or the making of derogatory remarks in regard to that branch of the service, either to those administering or those administered to. It is equally unfair and injurious to the physician in charge and his assistant, for nurses to put discredit upon either the school of medicine or the service under that system that may be given by the physician in charge or his assistant, or by neglecting to carry into effect the directions given in the treatment of the sick. Nurses should be careful not to prejudice patients against either the physician in charge or his assistants employed by the church, by careless treatment of directions given or by disparaging remarks as to the effects that might or might not follow the administration of medicines given the patients. They should pay strictest regard in carrying into effect all directions for those under their charge, given by the physicians, either those who are treating those outside the church or other schools of medicine, as they should give the same care and consideration to carrying out the directions of the physicians whom the patients may choose of different schools, that they should be expected to give those directions given by the physician in charge. It is not proper, if a nurse has a preference for one school of medicine above another, that such nurse should disparage the other school by speaking slightly of them or neglecting to properly carry out the instructions given by a physician practicing under any one of those schools. An institution of the kind among men would not tolerate assistants who would not give proper service, devoid of the exhibition of withholding of confidence or lack of sympathy in the treatment of cases intrusted to their care.

All persons engaging in the work of the Sanitarium should work in good faith, and in harmony each with the other, and with the institution as a whole the best results may follow. The Sanitarium is doing a good work, and in order that it may reach the completion of the design had in its institution it is necessary that there should be a working together, and that elements which are discordant should either withdraw or be shaken out by a proper regard for carrying into the best effect the provisions of the directions under which the Santarium was instituted.

A MAGAZINE NUMBER OF THE HERALD.

"THE BISHOP'S NUMBER."

A special Magazine Number of The Herald will be issued October 25, to be known as "The Bishop's Number." As the name indicates, this number is to be devoted to the financial arm of the church work, and most of the writers are bishops. All the articles are illustrated. Following is an outline of the contents:

EDITORIAL:

1. An introduction to the Bishops' Number.

HISTORICAL:

2. "A history of the presiding Bishopric," by Herman C. Smith, Church Historian, illustrated with pictures of Bishops Partridge, Rogers, Blakeslee, and Kelley.

ORIGINAL CONTRIBUTIONS:

3. "The law must be fulfilled," by E. L. Kelley, Presiding Bishop.

4. "Equality and how to reach it," by G. H. Hilliard, of the Presiding Bishopric.

5. "Shall we teach our children to obey the financial law?" by Bishop Richard Bullard, of the Independence Stake.

6. "The care of the poor," by Bishop Joseph Roberts, of the Lamoni Stake.

7. "Duties and responsibilities of a bishop," by Bishop R. C. Evans, of Canada.

8. "Responsibility of taking care of the poor," by Bishop Albert Carmichael.

9. "The bishop at work," by Bishop Charles J. Hunt, of the Gallands Grove District, Iowa.

10. "The bishop; his duties and calling," by Bishop J. A. Becker, of Kirtland, Ohio.

BIOGRAPHICAL DEPARTMENT:

11. Bishop George Lewis, of Australia, by Elder Gomer R. Wells.

12. A group of well-known bishops, including short biographical sketches of well-known bishops.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Herald Publishing House has appointed Elder Frank Gray as their representative in London, Canada, District. Brother Gray is also authorized to solicit, receive and receipt for subscriptions to the church papers from the Saints in any of the districts that he may visit.

TENT MEETINGS AT SAN JOSE.—We are in receipt of a large lithograph card advertising the tent meetings of Bro. Fred B. Farr at San Jose, California. It includes a large picture of the brother and brings up prominently the fact that he is preaching the "old Jerusalem gospel." Along with this display card comes a "doorknob" caller or tag which we suppose is used in a house to house campaign of advertising of these meetings.

JOHN HENRY SMITH DEAD.—From press items we learn of the death of John Henry Smith, second counselor to Pres. Joseph F. Smith, of the Utah Church. John Henry Smith was the son of George A. Smith, cousin of the Prophet, Joseph Smith, jr., and has been prominently connected with Utah and public affairs during a long and eventful life. The Salt Lake Tribune gives an interesting resumé of his life and pays him a fine tribute for his public services as follows: "When the history of the rise and development of Utah shall be written, his name will stand high in the ranks of the men who have accomplished great deeds and who have built up a commonwealth from a desert." He was born in Council Bluffs, September 18, 1848; was a member of the first territorial legislature; and presided at the constitutional convention which formed the present constitution of the State of Utah. His death Thursday, October 12, was unexpected, death resulting from hemorrhage of the lungs.

Autumn.

With what a glory comes and goes the year!
The buds of spring, those beautiful harbingers
Of sunny skies and cloudless times enjoy
Life's newness, and earth's garniture spread out;
And when the silver habit of the clouds
Comes down upon the autumn sun, and with
A sober gladness, the old year takes up
His bright inheritance of golden fruits,
A pomp and pageant fill the splendid scene.

Oh, what a glory doth this world put on
For him who with a fervent heart goes forth
Under the bright and glorious sky, and looks
On duties well performed, and days well spent!
For him the wind, ay, and the yellow leaves,
Shall have a voice, and give him eloquent teachings.
He shall so hear the solemn hymn that Death
Has lifted up for all, that he shall go
To his long resting-place without a tear.

A REVIEW OF "MORMONISM AGAINST ITSELF."--PART 10.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

THE HYPERCRITICAL MR. TRAUM.

Mr. Traum quotes, "And it came to pass, that after we had sailed for the space of many days, we did arrive at the promised land. And we went forth upon that land, and did pitch our tents, and we did call it the promised land."

He then adds, "Thus in the space of forty-three words, there is told us all that is known of that remarkable journey by sea."

This is untrue, and had Traum been impartial in his readings, he would have commenced with verse 34 on page 41, and the description consists of over one thousand words. But this is about as near, prox, as he has been, all the way through his book.

But had the remarkable journey by sea occupied only forty-three words in the account, what of it? If he will turn and read the eighth chapter of Genesis, he can read in just twenty words, (less than one half of Nephi's account) all that we know of the remarkable journey of the ark, and that other little colony out on the stormy sea, during the "flood." What wonderful things has our critic lost, just because the Lord did not preserve to us the log book of the voyage of Noah and Lehi!

Does Traum accept the cynical philosophy of the late lamented Phineas T. Barnum, that "a sucker is born every minute, and the public really likes to be humbugged"?

ETHNOLOGY OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.

Chapter VII is headed: "The ethnology of the Book of Mormon." In this chapter, as in previous ones, he proceeds on the hypothesis that the Book of Mormon gives a history of the "ten tribes" in America. Some of the keenest archaeological critics have expressed themselves in these terms: the Book of Mormon pronounces in exact terms that its personnel consists of a remnant of one tribe,—some of the descendants of Joseph. A lengthy quotation from Short's North Americans of Antiquity, used by Mr. Traum, opens with just such an erroneous statement. But our critic accepts Short's opinion of ancient North Americans as the established facts of the ancient South Americans. The quotations he has given from different authorities, though few, he treats in the same staccato style as he does the Book of Mormon. In quoting Bancroft twice on page 106, Traum puts his statements together in such a manner as to make Bancroft reject the preponderance of evidence. He then assumes, because of a quotation from him "elsewhere," when he uses the language: "Hence it is that many not unreasonably assume that the Americans are Autochthones until some good proof is given for believing them of exotic origin," etc., that Bancroft is of the same belief on this point as the "many" he latterly referred to.

If no one can, at present, tell the origin of the ancient Americans, [as Bancroft says in the quotation] on what grounds does Mr. Traum undertake to show them not exotic? He makes Mr. Bancroft reject "the extent of investigations, the multitude of parallelisms" that "exceed by far anything he has encountered," in support of the "hypothesis" that "the Americans are of Jewish descent," and to adopt the "assumption of many," based on less "investigation," the less number of "parallelisms," that the Americans were not of "Jewish descent," when Mr. Bancroft never said so.

Mr. Bancroft's statement still stands, very favorable to the theory that the ancient inhabitants of this continent were of Jewish descent. On page 107, Mr. Traum quotes Frederick S. Dellenbaugh, as follows:

As for the lost tribes of Israel theory, on which Kingsborough was wrecked, no archaeologist of to-day would be willing to give it a second thought.

Sure, Mr. Traum, it would wreck, not only Kingsborough, but Queensborough, to prove the theory that the "lost tribes of Israel" came to America. In refusing to give such theory a second thought, Mr. Dellenbaugh favors the Book of Mormon, that it would be a wrecking effort to attempt the work. He next gives us reply to a letter written W. H. Holmes, chief bibliographer of the Bureau of Ethnology, Washington, District of Columbia. It reads thus:

I may say very briefly that at the present time no scientific ethnologist for a moment entertains the notion that the American Indian is descended from the Jew, or has a trace of the lost tribes in his veins, unless acquired in very recent years. The American race stands alone, the result of a long period of development, a period which might be represented by tens of thousands rather than thousands of years. If the Indian of to-day can be traced beyond the Western Continent, he will be found to connect most directly with the peoples of eastern Asia, as he is undoubtedly more closely allied to the Mongolian race than to any other.—Mormonism Against Itself, p. 107.

Here is scientist against scientist. I suppose Mr. Holmes has Indian blood to let. He has doubtless, taken a quart of every tribe of Indians, and with an equal proportion of the blood of the Jews, submitted the same to a chemical analysis, and is prepared to render verdict for the whole scientific world! After all it is simply a matter of conjecture with these wise men, as note Traum's next reference, on page 108. Here Livingston Farrand is advocating the old, abandoned theory, with slight change, that the civilizations anciently existing on this continent, entered by the way of Bering Straits, and pushed its settlements southward. But the strongest evidence from scientific research argue with, and are in favor of the Book of Mormon, that the ancient civilizers of America entered at the south, trending to the north.

The relics brought to light represent recent stages of development, as well as aboriginal accultural artifacts pointing to South America. The director of the Bureau of American Ethnology, in his report for the year 1900, writes as follows:

The researches of the last two decades have shown clearly that the customs of the aborigines in what is now south-eastern United States were affected by extraneous motives and devices; the phenomena have suggested importation of objects and ideas belonging to what is commonly styled "Caribbean art" from South America by way of the Antilles; and it was thought desirable to seize the opportunity offered by recent political changes for special studies in the Antillean Islands.—Annual Report, page 59.

Yes, this agrees with the Nephite account that South America, not North America, was the earlier seat of civilization, and its flowers and fruits spread northward.

Mr. Brinton, A. M., M. D., LL. D., Sc., and professor of American archæology and linguistics in the University of Pennsylvania says:

According to both linguistic and legendary testimony, the Caribs, the Arawacks, and Tupis, and perhaps we should add Symaras and the Quichuas, wandered forth from the steppes and valleys at the headwaters of the Rio de la Plata toward the Gulf of Mexico, where they came face to face of the other wave of migration, [the Jaredites who settled in Central America] surging down from the northern latitudes. For the banks of the River Paraguay, and the steppes of Bolivian Cordilleras, are unquestionably the earliest traditional homes of all these stocks.—Myths of the New World, pp. 47, 48.

That is, the South American races scattered through Peru, Chili, part of Brazil, and the Orinoco country,—the "Caribs" reached to the "Antilles." See also page 45.

Squier, Gibbs, and numerous other American ethnologists believed in a migration from the west to South America.—Prehistoric America, p. 523.

This in harmony with the Book of Mormon, they came from the west coast, and spread northward and eastward.

In writing of the first inhabitants of Peru, Rivero Tschudi, in Peruvian Antiquities, page 52, says "Its first inhabitants flowed in abundance toward the valley of Cuzco, conducted by four brothers. This gives us quite a little colony, the four families, and "these men's sisters." "The youngest of the brothers was at the same time skillful and handy." Doesn't that remind you of Nephi, Elder Traum?

According to Prescott, in the Conquest of Peru, volume 1, book 1, chapter 1, page 31, the first Peruvians came from the region of Titicaca.

They bore with them a golden wedge, and were directed to take up their residence on the spot where the scared emblem should without effort sink into the ground. They proceeded accordingly but a short distance as far as (the Valley of Cuzco) the spot indicated by the performance of the miracle; since there the wedge sank into the earth and disappeared for ever. Here the children of the Sun established their residence, and soon entered upon their beneficent mission among the rude inhabitants of the country. Manco Capac teaching the men the arts of agriculture, and Mama Oello initiating her own sex in the mysteries of weaving and spinning.

Doesn't that "golden wedge," called by others "golden rod," and still by others, "golden branch," remind one of the "round ball of curious workmanship, of fine brass," spindles to the number of two, and "one pointing the way whither we should go into the wilderness," possessed by the Book of Mormon colony in their itinerary along the shore of the Red Sea?

But in the "linguistic and legendary" lore it is "Viracocha," the Creator, that directs them. Mr. Brinton says, Hardly a nation on the continent but seems to have had some vague tradition of an origin from four brothers, to have at some time been led by four leaders or princes, or in some manner to have connected the appearance, and action of four important personages with its earliest traditional history.—Page 94.

He then quotes Brasseur de Bourbourg as follows:

In all the Aztec and Toltec histories there are four characters who constantly reappear, as kings and rulers of monarchies after their foundation; . . . and even to the times of the conquest, there are always four princes who compose the supreme government, whether in Gautemala or in Mexico."—Pages 96, 97.

The old manuscript called "The Cakchiquel" contains the following:

Four persons came from Tulan, from the direction of the rising sun,—that is one Tulan. There is another Tulan in Hilbalby, and another where the sun sets, and it is there that we came; and in the direction of the setting sun, there is another, where is the god, so that there are four Tulans; and it is where the sun sets that we came to Tulan, from the other side of the sea, where this Tulan; and it is there that we were conceived, and begotten by our mothers and fathers.—Donnelly, p. 166.

The foregoing points to the other side of the sea as the birthplace of their races at a place called Tulan, and when they crossed the sea they formed a settlement and named it in honor of the one where they were born.

Baldwin quotes Montesinos, saying: "The youngest one of the four brothers, became the first of a long line of Peruvian sovereigns."

To support the idea that the former civilizations, —Jaredites, extended from south to northward, we quote Mr. Baldwin once more:

That appears to me the most reasonable suggestion which assumes that the mound builders came originally from Mexico and Central America. It explains many facts connected with their remains. In the Great Valley their most populous settlements were at the south. Coming from Mexico and Central America, they would begin their settlements on the gulf coast, and afterward advance gradually up the river to the Ohio Valley. It seems evident that they came by this route; and their remains show that their only connection with the coast was at the south. Their settlements did not reach the coast at any other point.—Pages 70, 71.

Again, "This colonizing extension of the old Mexican race must have taken place at a remote period in the past."—Page 73.

Certainly this is the theory of the Book of Mormon, only the book has the start of these men. The teaching of the record upon these points is, that two principal civilizations existed on this continent in pre-Columbian times. One from the Plains of Shinar, at the confusion of tongues, when God scattered the people abroad upon the face of all the earth, about 2200 B. C.; the second a civilization from Jerusalem, about the time of its destruction by Nebuchadnezzar, 600 years B. C. Both civilizations entered this continent at the south. The first, at Central America, the second, on the west coast of South America, there being something like 1600 years difference in time of occupancy by these civilizations.

To the fact of the ruins bearing evidence of two separate and distinct peoples dwelling on this western domain almost all archaeologists agree.

DO INDIANS SHOW TRACES OF JEWISH DESCENT?

But as Mr. Traum has grouped the principle points of this chapter in about two propositions on page 110, we state them thus:

First: If the Americans are descendants of Jacob and belong to any branch of the house of Israel, at least a few of the characteristics of that peculiar people, a people of the most pronounced type, would have been transmitted. The fact that not a single distinctive trait has ever been found among the American Indians, goes far to prove that there is nothing in common between the two races of people, and that the latter can not have descended from the Jews.

Second: The Book of Mormon claims that the ancestors of the American Indians were Jews, and therefore are descended from an enlightened and highly civilized people, whereas the facts show that they were original barbarians.—Mormonism Against Itself, p. 110.

The first proposition is untrue, or the scientists have recorded falsehoods. Allowances must be granted, doubtless, for the record these men have given us as to the comparisons made, and the grounds upon which they make them. Mr. Ridpath, LL. D., in History of the United States, four volumes, in one makes this declaration:

When Europeans first landed on the eastern shores of these continents the country was found inhabited by various races. In some parts, especially towards the north, there was savagery and barbarism, in other portions higher forms of civilization were discovered. In Central America and in the adjacent parts of the two greater continents evidences of the civilized life were found scarcely inferior to the existing conditions in the best parts of the world. In comparing the cities and peoples of Peru, Central America, and Mexico with European communities of the same century, or with the civilized races of the ancient world, much allowance must be made for ethnic prejudice and for the fact that the materials of the inquiry have all been gathered by men of the conquering races.

In view of the above we can also say that when men prejudiced against the Book of Mormon request the opinion of the scientist, and accompany the request with outspoken prejudice, they can most always get the answer they fish for.

Mahenda and Acosta both affirm "that the southern Indian observed a jubilee year according to Israel's usage."—Boudinot, p. 250.

Acosta says that "the southern Indians dress like the ancient Jews, they wear a square little poke over a little coat."

Palacio says: "at Azori, in Honduras, the natives circumcise boys before an idol called Icelca."—Carta, p. 84.

Mr. Short says: "It is a matter of surprise how much has been written to establish the theory that the Mexicans were descendants of the Jews both in race and religion;" and he proceeds to give a list of what has been claimed to be analogies with Jewish doctrine. See North Americans of Antiquity, pages 459, 465.

The fact that so much has been written about the ancient inhabitants being descendants of the Jews on the ground of distinctive traits, similarities in their traditions, and customs, evidences the fact that so much has been found, yet Mr. Traum, with characteristic effrontery, affirms that "not a single distinctive trait has ever been found among the American Indians." Thus it is Traum against his witness.

Kingsborough, who "wrecked" himself in antiquarian research, says in Mexican Antiquities:

It can not be doubted that human sacrifices were common throughout Palestine, and if the Holy Land was polluted with these abominable rites which the Jews are said to have learned from their neighbors, the Canaanites, where is the difficulty in supposing that in after years they were transplanted to American soil by their descendants. . . . It is a very remarkable fact that the Indians were accustomed to pass their sons through the fire as a kind of baptism.—Mexican Antiquities, tom. VII.

The doctrines of the Mosaic and Christian institutions have most all been found in the corrupted forms, ceremonies, and traditions of the American Indian.

In Our Wild Indians, Colonel R. I. Dodge, who had an experience of thirty-three years among them, pages 42, 43, says: "The Indian is, to my mind, an evidence of the unity of the races. Wherever we find them, savages have something in common each with the other. Supposing the Western Continent to have been originally uninhabited by man, there is no physical or geological reason why it should not have been peopled from Asia. Even before the days of David, people "went down to the sea in ships"; the winds blew then as now, and a succession of adverse storms might have peopled America, from any one of the earlier maritime nations of the Eastern World. Whether the very many customs which the Indians have in common with the ancient Jews are evidence of Israel being found, or whether fair complexion, blue eyes, similarity of language, and "Coracle" of the Mandans, prove that Madoc settled on the banks of the Ohio, is not my purpose to inquire."

Again, page 131 he writes: "Several of the wild tribes have a mysterious, material something which they regard as the Jews did the "ark of the covenant." "The Plains Indians are in no sense idol worshipers, and this something is not worshipped but loved, venerated, and held in sacred awe."

He says on page 512, that the practice of "scalping" is probably a Jewish custom, as it was practiced on the Jews during the career of Antiochus, and cites a passage from the annals, that "the skin was torn from the head."

Boudinot, in the American Indian, pages 98 to 101, says:

Their language in its roots, idioms, and particular constructions, appears to have the whole genius of the Hebrew, and what is very remarkable has most of the peculiarities of that language, especially those in which it differs from most other languages.

Prescott, in the conquest of Peru, says:

When the Indians make their feasts, they remove all fire, . . . and rekindle it before the food is put on to cook, so as to be sure and not have anything unclean about the feast. For my part, I am forced to believe that these feasts have been handed down from the children of Israel.—P. 241.

Bancroft affirms, "the opinions of the Mexicans with regard to the resurrection of the body accorded with those of the Jews."—Vol. 5, p. 86.

Josiah Priest, American Antiquities, page 59, says of Hebrew "customs" in the Ancient Americans: "Their Jewish customs are too many to be enumerated in this work."

Many more evidences along this line could be adduced, but we will reserve them for reply to the next chapter, entitled "Philology of the Book of Mormon." Those presented are quite sufficient to sweep Elder Traum's first proposition from the field.

Kindliness of heart is not the greatest of human qualities—and its general effect on the progress of the world is not entirely beneficial—but it is the greatest of human qualities in friendship. It is the least indispensable quality. We come back to it with relief from the more brilliant qualities and it has the advantage of going with a broad mind. Narrow-minded people are never kind-hearted.—Arnold Bennett in Mental Efficiency.

Of General Interest

The English of the Bible.

A SPECIAL RHYTHM THAT APPEALS TO THE EAR.

In discussing the English of the Bible, the London Spectator says: The style of "the noblest example of the English tongue" will bear analysis as its subject-matter has borne criticism. It is a lamentable fact that we do not possess, as the Greeks possessed, any scientific treatise on the dynamics of our own tongue. The completion of the Oxford Dictionary may facilitate the inception of such a study by digesting the necessary materials. As it is, we know more of the mechanism of Latin than of English prose. As for the prose of the Bible, even its more dominant elements are difficult to isolate. They are as much psychological as linguistic; elements not only of the English tongue, but of the English spirit. Of the prose of the Bible it may indeed be said, "Le style c'est le peuple." For instance, there is the adaptation of Hebrew ideas; it is an adaptation, not only in expression, but in substance. No doubt there are few ideas which are absolutely identical in two languages. Among those few would be classed the concepts of mathematics.

Yet we can not be quite sure even about these, for, while to an Englishman a given arithmetical idea presents itself in a numerical form and with a numerical content, to an ancient Greek it was geometrical, his unit of number being a line and his concept of multiplication a rectangle. It might seem inevitable that in a translation from the Hebrew the essence of the ideas at least would remain Hebraic. But there are good grounds (among them being the influence of the Bible upon the English people) for believing that this is not the case.

After citing a number of passages, the article says: Clearly the passages cited haphazard out of hundreds of thousands like them bear a special stamp. When we consider them, we find that they have a particular appeal to the ear. And, in fact, we may take it that the first and most prominent characteristic is a special rhythm. It is of a simple type, but, as the least study will show, it is handled with extraordinary art. It is neither too fluent nor too slow, but it is both smooth and weighty. It is carefully balanced in the complementary members of a sentence, yet it never degenerates into metre. The rhythm of many English writers tends to be either dissipated among polysyllables or emphasized to monotony, iambic as in Blackmore, hexametric as in Ruskin. But the rhythm of the Bible, though built of the same elements as the verse of Shakespeare and Milton, is specifically a prose, not a verse, rhythm. The perfection of its technique is infallible; the type is only deserted when, if we may so put it, the inspired words are forced to accommodate themselves, as occasionally is inevitable, to the more commonplace details of a narrative. This rhythm, we submit, is unique in English literature, and to it our Bible owes the greater part of its literary appeal.

A second characteristic is the dividing or doubling of a thought. The Psalms supply the most familiar example. Here, it must be admitted, we have to do with a specific quality of Hebrew poetry, though such "parallelism" is inherent in all verbal expression. It is too familiar to quote specimens, but how well it is adapted to the sentence-rhythm! A comparison of the Authorized Version of the Psalms and the Prayer Book version is interesting in this connection. For it is a curious fact that the Authorized Version Psalter shows the characteristics of rhythm and of parallelism in their least perfect form, while the Prayer Book version shows them at their best. There is no doubt that the latter version is entirely the work of Coverdale. In it he surpassed himself. Among minor qualities are the tendency to the use of weighty monosyllables and the almost entire absence of abstract ideas. It may be said that every idea, every concept, every image, is both concrete and vitalistic, a living organism. Even a phrase like "out of it are the issues of life" is no exception, for the older sense of "issue" is frankly concrete. Again, as in all great style, there is "the inevitable word."

The transmutations undergone by the Scriptures in their passage from Hebrew and Greek to English were various. Coverdale speaks of translating "out of Douche [German] and Latyn into Englishe," and also "out of fyve sundry interpreters." Of a perfect translation it may be said without paradox that its final merit is faithfulness, not to the original, but to the copy. The result in this instance is the greatest organic monument both of English genius and of English speech.—The Evening Post, New York.

Bible Natural History.

No more interesting collection of its kind has been shown in London than the Bible natural history exhibition at the Natural History Museum in South Kensington. In a recess on the right of the large central hall are specimens of the various animals, birds, plants, minerals, precious stones and so on mentioned in the Bible.

In the center case are a number of pressed flowers, grasses, leaves of trees, sections of felled tree stems and photographs of typical scenery. We are shown the narcissus, which is probably the "rose" of the Song of Solomon and Isaiah 35: 1, which the Revised Version suggests should be the autumn crocus. Another case in which the Revised differs from the Authorized Version and the notes at the exhibition occurs in 2 Samuel 5: 23, 24. Here the Revised Version suggests that "mulberry trees" should be balsams, whereas the note given us at the exhibition describes them as "aspenlike poplars." Certainly the words "when thou hearest the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees" (becaim) seem to suggest that poplars should be the correct version, for in no tree does the wind make a more distinct and separate sound than in the lightly hung, long stalked leaves of the poplar. We see next "the husks which the swine did eat" in the parable of the prodigal son; they are the beanlike fruits of the locust or carob tree, which blossoms at the end of February and is covered with pods in April. Then there are specimens showing the growth of tares, the darnel (Lolium temulentum), which is a common weed in countries of the Mediterranean. The parable gains point from the fact that the young plant is indistinguishable from wheat, but its seeds are poisonous. Other problems in identification are not so easy. The sycamine of Luke 17: 6, is probably the black mulberry, which is still known in Greece as sycaminea. But there is more doubt as to the gopher tree, which is mentioned only once, in Genesis 6: 14. Gopher wood, of which the Ark was made, seems not likely to be cypress, which is copher in Arabic, and is abundant in Chaldea and Armenia. Another disputed identification is the manna of the wilderness. But it answers well enough to a certain lichen, Lecanora esculenta, found in northern and eastern African deserts. This lichen is caught up by the wind and laid in drifts; the lumps are whitish brown, varying in size from a pea to a hazelnut, and are still regarded by the natives as food from heaven.

The identification of the birds of the Bible must necessarily be uncertain in many cases, not only because the meaning of the word originally used seems sometimes to be lost altogether, but because the naming of birds, not only in biblical times but in days when the translation was made from the Hebrew, was uncertain and irregular. Some are plain enough; tor, the turtle dove, for instance whose voice names him at once; he is turtur in Latin. But there is much confusion in the naming of other birds, the hawks and owls, for example. The word tachmas was possibly translated nighthawk owing to the similarity of the word nightjar, though the nightjar's nearest relative among British birds is the swift; but by tachmas is probably meant one of the larger owls, perhaps the barn owl. But different words have been translated owl even in the same chapter; for instance, in Isaiah 34: 11 and 13, cos in the latter verse is probably the southern little owl, Athene glauc; in the former verse owl ought to be ibis. There are other passages where the bird intended seems to be the ostrich. Equally difficult to identify with certainty are the hawks. The word nesher in Leviticus 11: 13, rendered as eagle, seems to be equivalent to the Arabic missr, the griffon vulture; this is Nisroch, the vulture god of the Assyrian sculptures. By ospray we should perhaps understand the short toed eagle, and peres, the ossifrage, is undoubtedly the lammergeier; in verse 19 of the same chapter lapwing should be the hoopoe. The word sparrow is used for any small perching bird, but in Psalm 102: 7, "I watch, and am as a sparrow alone upon the housetop," the bird referred to seems to be the blue rock thrush. In Isaiah 38: 14, "Like a crane or a swallow, so did I chatter," crane is the translation of the Hebrew sis, but sis is the swift. Then again there are generic words, such as oreb translated raven, whereas it should stand for the whole crow family. The suggestion has been made that the ravens which fed Elijah by the brook Cherith were Orebim, the people of Orbo, a small town of the Cherith Valley.

In some ways the animals have been more oddly misnamed than the birds. In the collection in South Kensington there is not sufficient space to exhibit stuffed specimens of all the creatures mentioned; indeed to do so would be unnecessary. But of the larger animals we get photographs and drawings, or references to the animals in other parts of the museum. One at least can not be exhibited; the aurochs, or wild ox, has long been extinct, though we know from Assyrian sculptures that it was living in biblical times in Asia Minor. The aurochs appears to be rem, the unicorn. Some odd mistranslations occur in Leviticus 11: 29, 30, where we read, among creeping things declared unclean, of "the weasel, and the mouse, and the tortoise after his kind, and the ferret, and the chameleon, and the lizard, and the snail, and the mole." There are no moles of our British species in Palestine, and probably by weasel is meant the molerat, Spalax typhlus, of eastern Europe and Egypt, a curious creature with a flattened snout and eyes completely hidden; but the molerat, as a fact, eats roots and not insects. Ferret is a quaint mistake; the unclean creature is more likely the gecko, either the fan footed or the common kind. Tortoise is probably another kind of lizard, the large spiny tailed species named in the Revised Version the great lizard. It appears too that the spider mentioned with the cockatrice and viper in Isaiah 59: 5, should be one of the lizards, most likely the gecko.

Vague names, such as behemoth and leviathan, have naturally provoked different theories. Behemoth, the water ox, is pretty certainly the hippopotamus; but leviathan can not be one animal only. The description in Job evidently refers to the Nile crocodile, timsa, but in Psalm 104: 26, the leviathan of the sea can not be a crocodile; he is more probably the whale, and possibly the large sperm whale which belongs to the Mediterranean. . . .

There is a case containing a stuffed baby sperm whale, and stuffed specimens of crocodiles, of course, are to be found in the reptile room, only a few paces away. Perhaps the most generally accepted biblical mistranslation is the familiar conies of the 104th Psalm. Cony is the old English name for the rabbit, and though the word only survives now in legal documents and old law phrasing, and has lost its place in the ordinary language of the country, it keeps its meaning in the Bible, and the meaning, unfortunately, is wrong. Conies should be hyrawes, and the hyraw is a very different creature from the rabbit. Yet without doubt this is a case where correct translation would transmute and damage the spirit of the passage in which it occurs. The word cony is known to Bible readers as the name of a feeble folk, whereas the word hyraw is not; a hyraw; indeed, sounds a formidable creature, and can not easily be explained to a child who has never seen one. But there is one mistranslation which ought to be entered into all teachers' notebooks, and that is the reference in the description of the building of the Temple to badger skins. The word thus translated is the Hebrew tachash, which is probably equivalent to the Arabic tachash, and denotes the porpoise, dolphin and dugong of the Red Sea. For badger skins undoubtedly ought to be substituted the skin of the dugong, a tough leather fitted for the purpose to which it is described as being put. In the Revised Version the translation is seal skins, but the seal is, of course, a different animal from the dugong, the strangely shaped creature from whose odd appearance in the water we get the legendary merman and mermaid.—From the Spectator.

A Work for All.

One thought in the September reading for the Woman's Auxiliary was neglected—duty toward our neighbor's child. Let us make some practical use of the lessons we learn each month. Just now we can do this by fulfilling our duty toward the homeless child.

The Children's Home is established, but that is only a small beginning. We are partly responsible for its existence, therefore we must help maintain it. To do this we must all help. Every local society should start immediately on some plan of work to this end, also the sisters in branches where there are no locals.

The general society has appointed us (the finance committee) to suggest ways and means of raising funds for the home. We are willing and anxious to assist any who will take up the work and shall also be glad to receive suggestions from those who have any to offer.

There is one plan that can be adopted in all branches, whether large or small. It is the one being used in this place, also in Lamoni, that of five-cent monthly subscriptions. One sister, or a committee of two or three, is appointed to take charge of the work. They in turn appoint others who collect regularly from a certain number of persons each month.

We should like to see this plan adopted everywhere, but if this does not suit your needs, let us hear from you and we will make other suggestions.

We have on hand a number of cook books which were offered to the auxiliary at a reduced price at the last General Convention. Our committee was asked to dispose of them through the locals and other societies. We shall be glad to send a sample copy to any reliable person who will endeavor to dispose of some of these books. Price fifty cents each.

Remittances for cook books should be sent to the undersigned.

We have written personal letters to all locals who are not already at work and we hope to see good returns from all of them. We are glad to see the splendid results from the work of the sisters at the Kirtland and Magnolia reunions.

BABYHOOD.—NO. 1.

An ache in the back and an ache in the arms,

All on account of the baby;

A fear and a fright and a thousand alarms,

All on account of the baby;

And bottles and rattles and whistles and rings,

From cellar to attic a clutter of things,

From morning to night and to morning again

More fuss and more fume than an army of men,

And a head that is stupid for lack of its sleep,

And a heart where a flood of anxieties leap,—

All on account of the baby.

A joy in the heart and a light in the eyes,

All on account of the baby;

A growing content and a growing surprise,

All on account of the baby;

And patience that conquers a myriad frets,
 And a sunshiny song that another begets,
 And pureness of soul as a baby is pure,
 And sureness of faith as the children are sure,
 And a glory of love between husband and wife,
 And a saner, happier outlook on life,—
 All on account of the baby.

—Amos R. Wells.

"My baby," the fond mother and father both say. They say rightly; and what a wonderful tie is the bond of this possession,—a tie that soon finds expression from the other side, and even before words have come to his aid, baby says with eager face and outstretched hands, "My mother; my father." How all wise and loving the Creator who placed us in families and who made the baby the most helpless of the young of all animals, thus giving strength to this tie by the dependence of the child and the devotion of the parents.

But the mother and father can not claim sole possession of their child. He is their's, but for a purpose. His soul is his own. He belongs to himself that he may give himself to God, to whom before all others he belongs. So the parents hold him in trust to prepare him for this voluntary service to God. They are his that they may guide him until he can assume full responsibility in his relations to his fellow-men. Society, the church, the nation, each has claim upon him and each has duties toward him. He belongs to them and as he is fitted to give service to them, such will be the measure of his service to God.

Only in love can the child give his best service to the world, and since "like begets like," then "only in love and in happy expectancy should a little life be begun." We have the authority of scientists for the statement that love is vivifying while hate and anger are destructive of life and strength. This emphasizes even the physical value of love as a prenatal influence and explains why a fit of anger in the nursing mother has resulted in the death of her child who nursed during the time of the mother's great agitation.

For the greatest returns of happiness to the parents and for the best development of the child, true love should be the moving power in all that concerns him, for "love is the real keynote of everything worth while." Ruskin said, "All education to beauty should be first in the beauty of gentle human faces round a child."

But the most loving of parents may be lacking in the wisdom to give the best physical care, as also the right spiritual training to the little ones intrusted to them. Can we conceive of any matter concerning which they should be more anxious to become informed?

"If the fathers were better informed as to the needs of the infant it would be better for the race. They would see to it that fewer mistakes were committed by ignorant nurses and caretakers. . . .

"The foundations for lifelong invalidism may be laid in the first hours of independent life, because no one was wise enough to secure health by the needful care. . . .

"If the father, feeling the greatness of the trust placed in his hands in the care of a human soul, knew what to do and would see that it was done; much pain might be spared and many lives might be saved."—Dr. Mary Wood Allen.

"Undoubtedly the most vital question before the people of the United States to-day . . . is the conservation of human life, the prevention of infant mortality, which has reached such alarming proportions. Think of it! Six million children under two years of age die in the United States every decade—six hundred thousand every year. . . .

"Recent investigations and experiments have proven conclusively that the most prolific cause is ignorance and that the average mother does not know how to properly care for her own child."

The friends who have admired a baby because it was "not a bit red right from the first" probably did not know that the red baby is such because it has a full supply of blood, while the white baby has entered life at a disadvantage, having been cut off from this birthright by the severing of the umbilical cord before it had ceased to pulsate.

The first care to be given the baby by the physician or attendant who receives it is to cleanse the eyes and mouth. For this purpose small pieces of gauze or of clean soft linen in a saturated solution of boracic acid are made ready beforehand. The baby is then held face downward on the palm of the hand and patted on the back to dislodge any mucous in its throat. The welcome first cry that proclaims the baby "all right" usually follows this proceeding if it has not occurred before. The baby should be covered warmly while waiting until the pulsations in the cord have ceased. For tying the cord fine white darning cotton doubled and twisted may be used. The cord of silk or thread is too hard and is liable to cut the cord. The cotton is wrapped twice around, being drawn as tightly as possible, then tied; two ties are made, an inch apart, the first being about two inches from the navel.

The attendant may then "dip her hands in warm lard or sweet oil and rub the baby all over in front of a warm fire, then wrap it up and put it where it will be perfectly warm until there is ample time to dress it, which need not be for two or three hours, and all the better for the baby."

Even the oil bath may be deferred until later, the baby sleeping in its cozy nest until the convenient time for its toilet. Then the eyes should be washed again very carefully with the boracic acid solution as a precaution against blindness, which is sometimes caused by germs deposited in the eyes at birth. The mouth, too, should be washed with a little soft cloth or piece of gauze wrapped about the finger, with which every part of the mouth should be reached. It should be cleansed in this way every morning, using clear water and a fresh cloth every time.

When the eyes are cleansed immediately after birth and kept shaded from the bright light, they will need no care save cleanliness, and the nose no care save to cleanse with the warm wet corner of the washcloth during its bath.

After the hand rubbing with oil, the oil may be wiped off with a soft cloth, care being taken to cleanse every fold of the skin. For the first bath the oil cleanses better than soap and water, and for delicate babies it may better be substituted for the sponge bath at least a part of the time for several weeks. After the navel has healed the baby may be given a tub bath every morning. It should not be left in the water more than two or three minutes at a time. As soon as the cord is severed it should be washed with alcohol, and then covered with surgical cotton or a clean cloth. Old table linen is good for this purpose. The alcohol should not be allowed to touch the tender skin of the baby.

When the child has had its oil bath and is ready to be dressed, the cord is drawn through a hole in a three inch square of absorbed cotton or sterile gauze, which is then wrapped around it; the end turned upward toward the left side of the body, and it is held in place by a flannel band. The band should be of soft white flannel, or outing cloth, eight inches wide, unhemmed, and three fourths of a yard long. The latest method of fastening the band around the baby is not to lap the ends but instead to hold them both in the left hand, pinning them together snugly against the baby, then lapping them to one side, leaving the row of pins exposed.

After dressing, the baby may be given a teaspoonful of warm water (without sugar) and laid down on its right side, when it will probably go to sleep again. Laying the baby on its right side assists in the closure of a valve in the heart.

which should close soon after birth. When this valve does not close the blood can not circulate properly and we have the "blue baby" which usually does not live long.

"Let the baby sleep after it is dressed and made comfortable, and trouble it with no food except what it gets from the mother's breast. Sweetened water, teas, etc., are unnecessary and would better not be given. If it fusses, a little warm water is all that is needed. . . . Four to six times in the twenty-four hours until the milk comes, is sufficient to put it to the breast. This benefits the mother by assisting in the contraction of the uterus, and this first milk moves the baby's bowels naturally. When the milk flow is established, put the baby to the breast regularly once in two hours. Do not feed it more than once in the night after ten o'clock, and discontinue this when two months old, feeding it at ten and should it waken, at five or six in the morning. Then mother and child can have a good night undisturbed, and the baby will be fixing habits of regularity that will be a blessing all its life through.

"Commence the regular habits as soon as it is born. More than you can imagine depends upon its first week of life, and if its caretaker will make it comfortable and then let it alone to its rest the whole after months of its babyhood and its childhood will repay a thousand fold this wise letting alone of its first weeks."—Dr. Emma F. A. Drake.

"Babies tire of lying in one position as well as older people. The change of position when being fed rests the little body. After the baby has finished its meal, the clothes should be carefully adjusted so as to be comfortable and the baby put back to bed. A young baby should not be rocked nor held between meals. Quiet is necessary for the development of the nervous system. The habit of jolting young babies on the knee is very injurious and often forms the foundation for an irritable, nervous system. If the baby cries, with no apparent cause for its crying, give it a drink of water and the probabilities are that it will go to sleep again. Babies require water between meals. If very thirsty, milk does not satisfy the thirst and the baby may need water immediately after nursing."

In these times, when we learn of the great anxiety of liquor sellers to create in young boys the appetite for strong drink in order to assure the success of the liquor business, it hardly seems possible that anyone with love for the baby could administer the old-fashioned remedy of whisky and water for colic. As soon inoculate the child with some fatal disease as to run this risk of binding him over to this body and soul destroying power.

Some perhaps will tell you, "You should have no particular affection and friendship, because it occupies the heart, distracts the mind, and begets envy"; but they are mistaken in their counsels; because they have seen in the writings of some devout authors that particular friendships and extraordinary affections are of infinite prejudice to the religious they therefore imagine it is the same with other people. But no one surely can deny that our Lord loved Saint John, Lazarus, Martha and Magdalene, with a very tender and special friendship, for the Scriptures testify it. We know that Saint Peter tenderly cherished Saint Mark, as Saint Paul did Saint Timothy.—Perfection, therefore, consists, not in having no friendships, but in having none but such as are good, holy, and sacred.—Saint Francis de Sales.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, October 2, 1911.

Editors Herald: On the night of July 23 I had a very remarkable answer to prayer. I have thought it perhaps would be a help to some one who is in doubt, as I was, so will send an account of it to your valuable paper.

My companion and I had been spending the evening with a neighbor, an old elder in the church. The question of the apostasy of the church came up, and the old brother said: "The church never did apostatize"; which caused quite a discussion, as there were several besides ourselves there. I went home greatly disturbed in mind, as I know the apostasy is taught by the church. I could not sleep, and I finally prayed the Lord to show me what was right in the matter. All at once I saw a long, narrow strip of paper held up before me. On it was writing such as I had never seen. It resembled hieroglyphics, but I could easily read it. This is what I read: "The church and the human body are alike, in that each has a physical and a spiritual part. When the human body dies, the Spirit goes to God, but at the resurrection will again take up a new body. So with the church. The physical or personal part died; that is, went into apostasy. The spiritual part with the apostles and prophets, went—it matters not where. But when the church was restored, the spiritual part came back and took up a new body."

The paper disappeared, but I can now see every word as plainly as when I read it. I am thankful for the vision, for I know it came from God, in answer to my prayer for wisdom, and as there has been a good deal of controversy over that subject in the papers, I thought I would let others have the benefit of it.

Praying the Lord to bless and enlighten all of his children who seek after the truth, I am,

Your sister in the true faith,

MRS. I. R. PAULGER.

ADALINE, WEST VIRGINIA, October 2, 1911.

Editors Herald: Please find room in your columns to let the Saints know that the little branch at Glen Easton, West Virginia, is still among those that are trying to serve God.

We have just closed a series of meetings which was conducted by Bro. O. R. Miller, in which many beautiful lessons were given, even to the Saints. We can plainly see that God's Spirit goes and dwells with his servants. Our sincere prayer is for all God's people, for the building up of Zion; that they may still and ever put their trust in him who never fails, and fight on as soldiers in the great warfare until that which is perfect has come, and that God's people hold fast to the great work that has been restored, until all things that God has for his people to do are well done, and all that are honest in heart may be gathered into the fold of God.

I will close with prayers for God's people.

Your brother in the one faith,

MASONTOWN, WEST VIRGINIA, October 4, 1911.

Dear Herald: I write to let you know that the work is progressing out here. I know that the work is true. I love to read the HERALD, it gives me strength and courage to read of the progress others are making in this great work. I am young in the work, being a girl of fourteen.

We have a branch, organized of twelve members. My sister and I were baptized on September 21, 1911, by Bro. R. C. Russell, and confirmed by Bro. Samuel Brown. Brethren

Russell and Brown blessed little Brother Verlyn and Cousin Grace.

The people are prejudiced in this part of the country, but we are trying to let our light shine.

"Oh for a faith that will not shrink,
Though pressed by every foe,
That will not tremble on the brink
Of any earthly woe."

We have Sunday school at 2 p. m., and prayer meeting at 7.30, every Sunday at my home. Five in the church, my father, mother, and two sisters.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain,

Your sister in Christ,

MISS RESSIE RODABAUGH.

MACKLIN, SASKATCHEWAN, CANADA, Sept. 28, 1911.

Dear Herald: I have waited for some months to write you about this country, so that I could be sure of what I wrote. After traveling over it from one to a dozen times, I am now prepared to write intelligently about Canadian homesteads. I am no land agent, and have no financial aim in this letter other than to benefit the Saints who may be in a condition to take a homestead in the Northwest. I was raised on a homestead, or very near one, and think I know what land is when I see it. I have been here long enough to see one crop raised and know something of the yield. I hesitate to write, however, lest some may not like the country when they see it and may blame me for it. There are some that can not be satisfied anywhere, and of course would not like it here, but as a rule everyone seems happy and contented.

There are dozens of homesteads here in the neighborhood, one of three branches, and some of the Saints would be pleased to locate you providing you write ahead and state your financial conditions. Persons with nothing would see a great many hardships that would discourage them and would also become a burden to others. Persons with means could easily double their worth in a short time. There are thousands of acres of Hudson Bay land and railroad land that can be bought on ten-year payments, and a low rate of interest, at about one tenth down. That would be the best proposition for a man with some means. The best homesteads are all gone, but there are a number of good ones yet that are going fast.

One branch was organized last Sunday near Macklin, with about fifty members, where last March there were only one or two families. These homesteads are located five to eighteen miles from two main lines of railroad. There is wood enough for several years, which is quite an item in this cold climate, and the price of coal so high. The water is most excellent and lakes are abundant. This is no country for corn or hogs, but the grass cures on the ground and cattle and horses live all winter and fatten on it. Snow is not very deep, and blizzards are not so severe as farther south.

Of course the great drawback is the frosts. Grain only requires about a hundred days to ripen in this country of long summer days. The nights are so short that the ground does not have time to cool off, and everything keeps on growing. I have never seen finer gardens than grow here, and potatoes especially. Some garden vegetables, of course, can not be grown here. One may expect to lose a crop once in a while with frost. But I was never in a country where there had never been a failure of crops from some cause. Where one can get a half section of land for nothing, or buy so cheaply, and where taxes are so low, they can afford to lose a crop once in a while. Some men never lose a crop and others do. The early farmer here, above all other places, is safest. I should think many of our poorer Saints in England (if there be such) better be here, and many that are merely existing elsewhere could be benefited, provided they could raise money enough to keep them one year and pay for breaking up the homestead for the first crop. The country is quite thickly settled and towns and railroads are abundant.

If there are any Saints interested, Bro. W. J. Levitt tells me he would like to correspond with them. He is president of the branch recently organized. His address is North End P. O., Saskatchewan, Canada, via Macklin.

Should anyone desire to write me, they may do so at Nutana, Saskatchewan, Canada. Anyone having friends or relatives here, of course it is best to write to them.

Very kindly,

J. W. PETERSON.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, October 9, 1911.

Our district conference is a thing of the past; it convened the 7th and 8th of this month. That date was chosen because of the fact that reduced rates are in force for the semiannual conference of the Mormon Church, and State Fair, which are held here simultaneously. Brother Stubbart was called south on business just in time to miss the interesting times, but we had with us Bro. J. W. Rushton, M. F. Gowell, and John Davis, and with their help carried on an interesting series of street services, beginning the 4th, and not ending yet. Yesterday was one of the largest that we have ever held in the city, and we have held some that were not small, and a goodly number of interested listeners found their way from the street service to our hall, for the evening sermon, which was by Brother Rushton.

Our Sunday school and Religio convention was held the 6th inst. This and the conference were characterized by a good spirit. Saints were in attendance from as far south as Sevier County, and from Malad on the north. There was one ordination, that of Bro. C. A. Smurthwaite, of Ogden, to the office of elder, and we rejoice at the prospects of a useful career opening before this brother.

Inclosed find an open letter and challenge which we offered to the papers here for publication, but none of the four would accept. It may be of interest to your readers. Ever in the faith,

A. M. CHASE.

A CHALLENGE TO THE MORMON CHURCH IN GENERAL, AND ELDER B. H. ROBERTS IN PARTICULAR.

An unreliable historian, will the Saints continue to sustain him as their representative before the world? Is their cause of such a character that it takes a "refuge of lies" and consequently, a historian who does not scruple to attempt to build such a refuge that this work may not be overthrown?

Of all the living historians of the Mormon Church, there is, perhaps, none who has been more prolific in his writings in support of the cause than Elder B. H. Roberts. Among his productions are the following books and brochures, History of the Church, in five volumes; Mormonism, Its Origin and History; and Succession in the Presidency of the Church. In each of these works the church he represents is committed to falsehood by the writer, that a fair showing may be made for the cause. Are the rank and file of the people who will be called upon, at the coming conference, willing to sustain him in these untruths? Dare they refuse to sustain him in that which the Presidency consents unto by copyrighting his productions for the church, and thus assenting to and vouching for his untruths?

Let us briefly call the attention of the reader to a few of these departures from fact and truth.

In the Church History, volume 5, pages 395 and 396, also in the Succession in the Presidency of the Church, second edition, page 146, Elder Roberts writes concerning Stephen

A. Douglas as follows: "Stephen A. Douglas did aspire to the presidency of the United States, and was nominated for that office by the Democratic convention, held in Charleston, on the 23d of June, 1860. When in the convention he was declared the regular nominee of the Democratic party, the whole body rose to its feet, hats were waved in the air and many tossed aloft; shouts, screams, and yells and every boisterous mode of expressing approbation and unanimity, were resorted to. When Mr. Douglas aspired to the presidency, no man in the history of American politics had more reason to hope for success. The political party of which he was leader, in the preceding presidential had polled, . . . a popular vote of 1,838,169, as against 1,215,728 votes for the other two parties opposing."

That this is a false statement we declare, and give the following history of the times, as taken from Greely's American Conflict, pages 318, 319, and American Politics, third edition, revised and enlarged, page 179. The Charleston convention was held in April, not June, 1860, and at this convention, instead of putting out a candidate of the Democratic party, many of the southern delegations withdrew, protesting against the "Douglas platform," and the delegates remaining, after balloting fifty-seven times in vain endeavor to do so, adjourned to meet in Baltimore, Maryland, June 18. At this assemblage, others of the southern delegations withdrew, and here Mr. Douglas was nominated by a fragment of the Democratic party. Nor is this all. The popular vote cast by the political parties who had candidates in the field in the preceding presidential election, is given by these authorities as follows, Buchanan, Democrat, polled 1,838,169; Fremont, Republican, polled 1,341,264 votes; Fillmore, Know Nothing, polled 874,534 votes; total opposed to Buchanan, 2,215,798.

Was it, nay is it necessary to falsify these returns a million votes that the Mormon cause may be sustained? Do the rank and file of the Mormons delight in this kind of misrepresentation?

Again, there is a controversy between Elder Roberts, as historian for the Mormon Church, and Elder H. C. Smith, as historian for the Reorganization (a rival claimant for the honors of the successorship to the faith of the church from 1830 to 1844,) over the wording of an alleged revelation given to Parley P. Pratt, as found in his Autobiography, page 371, both editions. On page 96 of Succession in the Presidency, Mr. Roberts puts the matter beyond the realm of a mistake by declaring it to be a question "of a personal nature," and asserting that he has quoted P. P. Pratt correctly when he makes him say that the word of the Lord to himself was that the church should "make no movement in church government to organize or alter anything," etc. Unfortunately for this historian, those who will take the trouble to look the matter up, (and this book may be consulted at the public library, edition 1874, or in the library of the writer, edition of 1888,) will find that the communication reads: "Make no movement in church government to reorganize or alter anything."

Again we ask the question, Is this necessary, or do they like this kind of work?

In Mormonism, Its Origin and History, page 58, we find this statement in reference to the "work the living may do for the dead." "In pursuance of this work, and that it may be acceptably done unto the Lord, the Latter Day Saints have built at great sacrifice of labor and means, so many costly temples. One at Nauvoo; one at Salt Lake City; one at Logan; one at Manti; and one at Saint George; in which the ordinances of salvation for the dead as well as for the living are being daily performed." . . . (Italics mine.)

Here are five temples, the property of the Mormons, in which they are "daily performing" these ordinances. Does it not require quite a stretch of imagination to do that work in the Nauvoo temple "daily," since it was destroyed in 1848? See Church Chronology, by Andrew Jensen.

Again we ask, Will the Mormon people stand for this kind of work, even though "This brochure is issued under the authority of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints"? See page 1 of this work referred to. With such examples before us, of the misrepresentations of the authorities of this church, is to be wondered at that when we compare section 121 of their Doctrine and Covenants with the original letter, as found in Times and Seasons, volume 1, pages 99 to 101, and 131 and 132, that we find that even the doctrine of the God-head is changed from that of one God to the doctrine of plurality of Gods, and yet credited to Joseph Smith, the founder of the church in 1830?

Will there be a few of the Mormons who may read this, have the courage to make the investigation, and then having satisfied themselves of the correctness of the things here stated, refuse to sustain this historian (and the leaders whom he serves,) as their representative before the world?

Will B. H. Roberts undertake to defend himself for these, and other misrepresentations which may be found in his works written to promote the faith of his people?

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, 880 East Fourth S. St., Oct. 4, 1911.

CLARKSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA, Sept. 25, 1911.

Editors Saints Herald: On the evening of August 26, Sisters Brown, Leslie, and myself started from our home, Stevenson, Ontario, for the reunion at Kirtland (sacred spot), arriving in time to hear many fervent testimonies to the great latter day work, and meeting many old acquaintances and friends of the past thirty-three years, Bro. John McKenzie, Sr. Hanna Bearse, Bro. William Jenkins, Isaac and Charlotte Pearson, and William H. Gray. These are old pioneers of the London District. Met a number from London, who became members of the church in later years. Also was pleased to meet Patriarch John H. Lake and wife. Age is doing its work on the aged veteran, who has wrought faithfully from early life, and is patiently awaiting the change to a better place, where no pain or distress will be.

We enjoyed Sunday in meeting many friends from the various districts. Sister Brown also enjoyed the visit and was very much pleased to see the temple of the Lord, built by the sacrifices of the Saints in the last days. After spending a day with the Saints and friends and the sweet influence of the Spirit, we retraced our steps to the sweet land of liberty where the Union Jack floats, arriving home on Monday, feeling that an enjoyable time was had, and one long to be remembered. Oh Thursday I bade adieu to loved ones and home, for Goose Creek, West Virginia, which is the sad part to a missionary and his family, and makes a person sweat at the eyes whether he wants to or not. At Corawallis, I was met by Bro. B. Beall and others, who conveyed us to Goose Creek, where the Saints were to convene the next day for conference. Bro. R. C. Russell, missionary in charge, and H. E. Winegar were there, and a goodly number were present.

By resolution, Bro. R. C. Russell was chosen to preside, myself and Bro. D. L. Shinn being associated with him. The business passed off pleasantly, and a goodly amount of it was done, which was educational. A district Sunday school was organized, Bro. Joseph Biggs being chosen superintendent and Bro. Frank L. Shinn assistant; Sr. Katy Ross, secretary and treasurer. I bespeak success for the young district.

The preaching was done by Brethren Winegar, Shinn, Russell, and Brown. The preaching was counted good. Bro. R. C. Russell spoke on Monday evening to a full house; so on Tuesday Brethren Winegar, Russell, and myself left for Cabinrun Branch, being met at the depot by Bro. Charles Williams, who conveyed us to his home, where we were kindly cared for by Sister Williams. The turnout to the meetings held in the Saints' church at that place was fair, while Brother Russell presented the gospel in a very plain manner. During the day we visited Brother Williams' parents. Brother Boyd and wife, of Columbia, were home on their vacation, he being a mail clerk, which made our sojourn there of a pleasant character. So on Friday we took our departure for other parts; Brother Russell for Clarksburg; I for Goose Creek, to be there for Sunday; Brother Winegar to be at Mr. Cotrell's to hold meetings at a schoolhouse for a time, about four miles from the branch. While at Goose Creek, I preached to a fair congregation on Saturday evening, and Sunday preached the funeral sermon of the late Bro. John Carpenter, to a large concourse of neighbors and friends. Also held services in the evening again, and on Monday made my way to Clarksburg to join Brother Russell.

On my arrival I learned that he and Brother Shinn had advertized a week's meetings. One afternoon, reference had been made to the Saints by an evangelist holding street meetings, so we made it our business to attend, and Brother Russell asked some questions as to how a person could be saved. The answer given was to believe on Christ, and as his reverence had no desire to hold any controversy, decided to pack up his kit and leave. There being a fair crowd present, Brother Russell opened fire on the reverend, showed the fallacy of his plan to save mankind in presenting Jesus' way of saving men, also of the hell fire scene, etc. So by this time quite a crowd had gathered to hear what the stranger had to say. They wondered who he was, and what church he represented. Some supposed him a Russellite. Others said he was a Mormon. And a tall, slender Southerner was heard to say he was a hell outer.

"What," said a bystander, "hell outer, what are they?"

He replied, "Why he puts everybody out of hell. Just listen to him and see if he don't."

A great many questions were asked during the talk. Some said he preached the truth. Others denied it, and so it went, and we have reason to believe some gleaned new ideas relative to the Bible teachings. We left them to think over what had been said, and continued our meetings until Friday evening, with fair interest, feeling satisfied that we had done our duty, and on Saturday we took our departure for Dellslow, where we were to attend a reunion of a number of Saints to be held on Sunday; calling at Sister Griffiths' for dinner at Shinnston, and from there to Fairmont and to the home of Bro. George F. Baker for supper.

In looking over the daily papers of that city, we discovered a statement from the pen of a Reverend Bonner, Disciple, where he stated that on Monday, the 18th instant he would be at the courthouse to meet the Mormons in debate at the hour of seven o'clock, and in the event they were not present he would expose Mormonism by the help of God, and that Elder McVey, of Fayette City, would assist; so we concluded to be in attendance, as Brother Russell had a debate with McVey last winter. We continued our journey to Morgantown, Brother Baker accompanying us; arriving at Brother Saunders' about eleven. We retired about midnight, were called early for breakfast, so as to take train for Dellslow, arriving at the home of Brother Maxon in time for service at 10.30. A number of Saints gathered, some from Masontown, nine miles over the mountains. Brethren Rush and Jeffries from Vanvoorhis, and Brother Kennedy and wife and daughter from the other side of Morgantown. Brother Russell was elected the speaker at the morning service, His discourse was listened to very attentively by all, as a feast of good things. We were invited to Brother Maxon's house a few rods away, where the sisters unveiled the contents of their baskets; everyone seemed to make good use of a hand to mouth contest for a few minutes, and during the intermission a pleasant time was had in getting acquainted with Saints and friends, and at the time set for prayer service all seemed to enjoy themselves, for a goodly degree of the Spirit of the Master was present.

Sister Downs, an aged sister, stated she had prayed earnestly for the day to be pleasant for it had been raining about every day. It was pleasant, the sun shone all day. The trees shaded us in the afternoon service, so we concluded God had heard our prayers, and granted the sister her request. The writer occupied the hour in the afternoon, enjoying good liberty in the dispensing of the word, and at the close most of the Saints took their departure, leaving Brother Russell and me at Brother Maxon's for the evening service, which was held in his house.

Quite a remarkable feature of the day's service was Brother Russell's sermon. It was on the "rock," and in the afternoon I followed suit, something neither of us ever witnessed before. It was not on Christ's revelation or Saint Peter, but an actual rock, of level surface, about four to eight feet above where the people sat. It was on this rock we preached to the people in the Alleghany Mountains of West Virginia. Dellslow is very rocky and rough, one rock above another. There is a stream of water running by Brother Maxon's house. It seemed to me as though it was nearly foot to foot of a fall, enough that the water was kept in a turmoil all the time, a grist mill had been erected of stone, with an overshot waterwheel, and stone burrs for grinding, built in the year 1807. It stands quite firm, and does daily grinding.

The evening was occupied by Brother Russell, with a scriptural comparison of the teachings of men and churches. It was listened to with interest, the brother occupying about two hours. After service, by invitation of a brother-in-law of Brother Maxon's, have forgotten his name, we stayed at their home. The mistress had or did belong to the Bickertonites, a number of that faction residing in the locality.

On Monday we went to Fairmont; arriving there about 2 p. m. went to the home of Brother Baker. At the set time we were on hand in the courthouse. In front in the rostrum were seated Evangelist Bonner, McVey, and a number of Disciples, waiting the set time to give Mormonism its just dues. About half an hour after the set time, Mr. Bonner arose, wanting to know if Elder Jincin (I think that was the name) was present. He arose and stated that their man, whom they had engaged to do the debating, was not present, but they were there to sign the contract for discussion and the time was set for December 11, 1911. So the contract was signed, and Mr. McVey was called on to preach, as there would not be any lecture on Mormonism. Brother Russell and I had several questions for them to answer if it had been an attempted exposure. At the close we made the acquaintance of several of the Mormons, making inquiry as to their membership, and place of meeting in the city. They report a membership of about twenty-six and have a hall to meet in, Sunday school in the forenoon, and preaching every Sunday evening; so we will keep an eye to that part of the vineyard and try and be in Fairmont for December 11.

On Tuesday we left Vanvoorhis, and we were met by Brethren Rodabaugh and Downs, who conveyed us by team to their home, at Masentown, where arrangements had been made to meet for the purpose of organizing the Saints of that place into a branch. At the set time the Saints gathered, Brother Russell in charge, I acting as scribe. The branch was organized with Bro. Joseph Maxon presiding elder; Bro. George A. Rodabaugh presiding priest; Bro. Thomas Downs, teacher, a man of seventy-nine years, of good physical and mental ability; Bro. Philip S. Rodabaugh, secretary and treasurer. The branch is to be known as the Masontown Branch, with eight charter members, and more to unite with it. We made our sojourn for the night at Brother and Sister Downs', and on Thursday Brother Russell baptized two of Brother Rodabaugh's daughters.

We had to hasten to catch the train at Masontown, which was due there at 10.45, a distance of three miles over mountain on foot. The morning was warm and it made us sweat freely.

From there to Vanvoorhis to organize the branch in that place. Sister Rush had supplies prepared for us, to which we did justice. Brother Russell took charge, it being presented to us to recommend the ordination of Bro. W. E. Rush to the office of elder, and Bro. George J. Jeffries to the office of priest. The brethren professed willingness to act, Brother Russell being spokesman in ordaining Brother Rush, and I being spokesman in ordaining Brother Jeffries. Brother Rush was elected presiding elder, and Brother Jeffries presiding priest, Sr. Kate Rush secretary and treasurer, Brother Jeffries solicitor for bishop's agent, the branch to be known as the Vanvoorhis Branch, with seven charter members, with others to unite.

And so goes the great latter day work. So on Friday morning Brother Russell and I struck hands the first in a month of our association. He left for Fayette City and Pittsburg, I for Clarksburg, Orlando, thence to Virginia for about two months. May God hasten the time when we shall meet to part no more.

SAMUEL BROWN.

CRESCENT, IOWA, September, 1911.

Dear Herald: It has been a long time since my pen wrote a letter to your pages, but not being willing to continually absorb without giving something in return I desire to say to all my old brethren and sisters and friends that I still live physically, and am trying hard to keep alive spiritually, but confess that it requires a constant watch on my part, and a struggle which I realize I must keep up to the end. I sometimes think the foe makes greater efforts for my overthrow than he ever did, and I never expect to see the day in this life when his cunning efforts will cease. But I trust in the promises, somewhere written to this effect, "That no temptation shall overtake us, but God will make a way of escape." I have been told there was no danger of my falling, but I thank God, I know myself better, and try to avoid the danger.

I had the pleasure of attending the reunion at Magnolia, and am pleased to say that to my mind it was not a whit behind any reunion held in western Iowa. It is true there was a little hitch in the business meeting, owing to the much regretted fact that we are not all completely purged of selfishness, but I think all meant well.

Another reunion was appointed in the same place without a dissenting vote, I believe, and it was justly due the Saints and citizens of that place that it should be there again.

I was invited by Pres. Sidney Pitt to assist him in tent work at Sandy Point, where he has pitched his tent. I responded on the 19th of September and we preached turn about, the audience increasing every night, and good attention paid. We were the guests of Bro. John Pratt and family, for all took an active part, cheerfully, in making us feel at home with them, and also in the singing, while Brother Pratt acceptably conducted the services, he being a teacher. The brother properly believes in honoring each one in his calling, hence invites the local brethren to the front. Such a course will command the respect of his brethren, always. I remained with Brother Pitt until Monday, the 25th, when rain and cold admonished me that I was no longer young, and not as well fitted for tent work as formerly. Brother Pitt kindly brought me to Modale, where I went home by train, my fare being paid by the friends.

I found a telephone message at home requesting me to come to Crescent to preach the memorial sermon of dear old Sr. Agnes Lapworth, of this place. She was a faithful saint, dying firm in the faith, after long years of severe trial in Utah, because of polygamy, but being a woman of a strong mind and firm determination, she would not submit to the delusion, and she brought her children away and united with the Reorganized Church, of which she and her children were consistent members, useful and prosperous until her death. Her children remain so, and they truly appreciate their loving mother's example, and have stood nobly by her through life and in death. I have known them ever since their return from Utah in 1869, and know whereof I speak.

I am requested to stay here through the Pottawattamie district conference. Convention begins to-morrow, and conference on Sunday.

Wishing the greatest and grandest success to the work of God.

Respectfully submitted,

CHARLES DERRY.

VANSCOY, SASKATCHEWAN, CANADA.

Editors Saints' Herald: We have had the honor of Elder E. E. Long entertaining us and the surrounding vicinity of late, who gave us some able and instructive sermons, and we were benefited very much. We also enjoyed the cornet accompaniment by Brother Moorman, and we know that much good has been done, as three precious souls made a new covenant and yielded to the holy rites of baptism and confirmation.

This was followed by our worthy Patriarch William Lewis, who also taught us grand lessons, and we were much edified and felt a greater desire to move onward. He preached some noble sermons and gave some grand evidences concerning this latter day work, and may the Spirit which emanates from the high throne of heaven continue to be his guide and counsel as long as he lives, for the Spirit of the Master was in power while he administered the word, and we felt rejoiced. A great many received their blessings under his hands and resolved to do better, that they might be instruments of righteousness to their Creator.

We have a nice branch here. It is called the Minnesota Prairie, with two elders, two priests, and one teacher, the writer of this article, if he is worthy to be called such. So with these officers our determination is to try to do right and try to overcome that which is contrary to the commandments of the Lord, and at the same time be able and willing with patience to endure unto the end, that which is to try us. I sometimes think I will fail in my efforts to reach the highest glory and to behold the face of the Master. My reason for so thinking is that very shortly after I had obeyed the gospel I had a dream. I dreamed it was the resurrection day, whether it was the resurrection of the just or the unjust I am not able to say. I was coming down a slight incline and at the foot of it was the judgment throne, designated by a low rail, about knee high. As I came near, two men that had been standing opposite the throne just a little to the left of it came to meet me; as they approached me they said, "Well, brother, I guess you are next," so they divided one on each side of me and accompanied me to the judgment seat, as I supposed it was, by the great splendor and magnificence of its surroundings. I also noticed that the two men that stood on each side of me were large in stature, well built, and quite tall. Not until then did I notice my figure, and as I stood between them I noticed that I was exactly their equal, and this was a surprise to me, because I knew before I came there that I was very short and small in stature. However, we stood facing the throne, and there was given me a great charge. Our Lord and Master was talking to me, although I was not permitted to see his face, and this troubled me greatly. However, I could hear him speak and could understand every word, for he spoke a long time, and in the discourse he said, "You shall be ruler over that star." This is what troubled me for a long, long time, as I always thought and do yet that I shall just be able to obtain a celestial glory instead of a celestial one. I turned around and looked and saw the star to which I was designated to go. I also, at the same time, while looking at the star (for it was large like unto the moon when it rises over a body of water), saw great concourses of people. They were all looking at me, and were dressed in white, and all seemed to be happy, but I could not say that of myself. However, after I got through looking at the star I again turned, and the Master talked a long time to me, and then we turned and went away, and it just seemed a moment of time when we were in this star world, and instead of going down an incline I was then going up one. Seemingly I was in the lead, as the two men were still with me, and as we got to the top of this incline there was a seat. It was a chair, quite large, with a very high back, and I stopped and looked at it, in great astonishment, for the framework of it was of ivory. Throughout the framework were studded evenly all manner of precious stones, and the upholstery was most beautiful, so sparkling were the gems of all colors. The chair itself was a radiant of light. The man on my right said, "Sit down."

"No," I said, "I am not used to sitting in a place like that."
 "Well," said he, "the Master said this is your seat."
 "Well," I said, "maybe it is, but I did not see the Master."
 He seemed to be surprised at this, and he said, "You will see him, so sit down."

At this time both men stood by me at the right arm of the chair, and as I touched it, it was so even in balance it was like the needle of a compass. It took a long time for it to come to a standstill, as it was of the rocker system. However, I sat down; then each one of the men took his place, one on my right and the other on my left, and while I sat there my whole body was filled with joy unspeakable, and my eyes were opened, and I saw all the inhabitants of that world; and I said, "Have I got to be boss over all this people?"

And they said, "Yes."

"Well," I said, "I feel out of my place, as I had to work for a living, like them." However, I stretched out my arms to put them on the arms of the chair, and as I did so I laid my left arm across Elder David Smith's face, and it aroused him so he awoke, and I told it to him.

I hope that all the Saints of the most high God will be able to so live that when they come to pass away from this stage of action they will inherit a celestial glory instead of a celestial one.

LIVING IT OVER AGAIN.

As the beautiful flowers are dropping their ripened seed, the goldenrod skirts lane, meadow, and field, the Kansas sunflower turns his face to the wandering sun, and while the harbingers of frost indicative of dying days appear, we are called by the powers that be to participate in, and assist in the exercises of the old Far West reunion, located at Stewartsville, Missouri, where for ten days we shall live it over again. Nineteen years ago, ye jots man, with J. M. Terry, Walter Head, C. P. Faul, Jacob Taylor, Tom James, Delano Flanders and others organized the Northeastern Missouri Reunion. There was no brilliant star to guide our feet or lamp to light our path that would lead to the sunny ways, but with youthful vim and determination on the part of each to do the Master's will—and with every succeeding effort, the good Spirit bearing witness—"The plant was in good soil and its fruitage was sure."

For fourteen years we have not met with them; our mission fields every year being from one thousand to two thousand miles away; but we were always pleased to get the usual notice in our far-away field, and with equal pleasure we have often answered by letter, but this year it was our good pleasure not to answer by letter but by the real thing itself, and we assure you it would have been a fullness of joy if our brother, J. M. Terry, could have been with us. However, disappointments have their bright side—"There's a reason."

At the appointed time we were whirling north on Nahum's steed who shrieked our welcome to the quiet city. Our Charley was a rustler at the station, conveying us to the "old camp ground" where we arrived at 8.30 p. m., amid the gleam and glow of the camp fire lights, the prattle of babies, and the laughter of youth; but this was the new crop for which Missouri is famous—many of the older had been gathered to the paradise of God—the young of two decades had outgrown the image of memory—lovers had wooed and won, and families reared. Greetings under such conditions are at times embarrassing, and make one feel like a cat in a strange garret, but a few days mingling bridged the intervening years and we were soon delighted to take a cup (coffee) of kindness yet for the days of "auld lang syne." But of this reunion child, what a stalwart it has grown to be from the handful at Harvey's Grove nineteen years ago, with two tents, and one covered wagon on the ground, to a white city of such imposing dimensions; and what a striking contrast in the equipage of the camp!

We call to mind an incident in the first camp. Sister Seely's old Charley horse—while we slept—ate all the bread in camp and was still hungry. The good sister consoled us, however, by saying, "I really don't think it will hurt him, I often feed him bread at home." It was not the old horse we were thinking of so much, as it was, "Where, oh where" was our breakfast?

The excellent order (without a policeman), the high order of the preaching, the grand spiritual prayer meetings, the wholesome camp ground meals (15c), the real spiritual uplift of the meeting will be noted by another pen.

We note the oncoming hosts of the young men and maidens taking active part, following closely in the footsteps of their noble sires, will be an acquisition to the church in its onward march which will be heard and felt.

The camp fire songs, and "When the battle's over" of the olden time were all inspiring indeed.

"Our Charley," is as jovial as ever, yet we think his star is setting under the trials and oft disappointments in life, yet he is still a busy man and from every indication he is yet hopeful that his offerings may be accepted and he may find rest in the by and by. We doff our new hat to the old Far West reunion as the best in our experience, and from our souls we sing, "God be with you, till we meet again."

Des Moines District News.

Our late district reunion, held at Colo, was not largely attended, but could hear such expressions as "The best we ever attended," "We expect to come back next year." The Master abundantly blessed his servants in preaching the word. The prayer services were exceptionally spiritual, the Lord manifesting himself through Bro. J. W. Wight in tongues and interpretation. We very much regretted that Bro. Charles R'cheson had to leave before the reunion closed. Sister R'cheson was taken ill and the family returned home, and I am informed her sickness proved to be typhoid fever and their little girl has also contracted the same disease. However, I learned that the mother and daughter are improving.

Since the close of the reunion Brother Reiste held a series of meetings at Enterprise, baptized five; at present he is holding meeting five miles northwest of Newton. The writer was with him two nights this week—spoke once. He is enjoying the hospitality of Sr. Sarah Cushatt and family. Mr. Cushatt has not yet obeyed but he makes a good brother-in-law and we hope ere long he will be one with us.

Some two years ago there were a few isolated Saints living at Perry, Iowa. Elder E. O. Clark, a local man, called there, preached twice, assisted in organizing a Sunday school; afterwards a Religio was started. The gospel blaze seemed to burn anew. The willing workers united their efforts. Missionaries J. S. Roth, S. M. Reiste, C. E. Butterworth came in their turns. Local brethren, Wardell Christy, E. O. Clark, and the "Deep Red Man" continued their efforts but the great part of the work done as far as man is concerned is to be credited to the local Saints living there, and such united efforts of course bring results. Some fourteen had been baptized up to September 1, 1911, and they are the kind that will help the work.

Last Friday evening when the writer returned home, he found a letter from a young man asking me to arrange to come to Perry so as to baptize him. About 8 a. m., Sunday morning, I complied with his request, and when I reached Perry I also found three others ready for the water, a Mrs. Pool and two daughters, although they had not yet heard a sermon. Bro. William Dose was doing carpenter work for them some time ago and he did not forget to inform them of the angel message. Later, Sister Walter's ten-year-old girl by chance rode with this lady, and by the child's request, and what had already been told her, she made a thorough investigation, after which she could not do otherwise than accept.

Well, with Sunday morning came foul weather, a little rainy, but we were looking for water, so wended our way to the river and buried in baptism the four candidates. Hastened back and at 10 a. m. held confirmation, prayer, sacrament, and testimony services. The writer spoke at 11 a. m. and at 1 p. m. was on the way across country fifty miles to Nevada to bury one more precious soul in baptism. At 4 p. m. found the crowd waiting and to the credit of the faithful at Colo some eight miles away they were there in full force to witness the ordinance attended to. Spoke again at Bro. W. C. Hardy's home at 8 p. m., also Monday night; closing a series of some fourteen or fifteen preaching services at the brother's home. Our meetings were not largely attended, but much interest was manifested. The writer worked every day.

October 8 will be the second annual Home Coming Social Day of the Des Moines Branch. We expect some to be baptized.

So the good work moves on. I am pleased to subscribe myself,
THE DEEP RED MAN.

Extracts from Letters.

James E. Yates writes from Ripley, Oklahoma, October 9, 1911: "I am just home from a brief campaign with Bro. W. M. Aylor, at Holdenville, Oklahoma. Results are that he baptized a number there yesterday, I don't know exactly how many, and I was privileged also to lead two into the kingdom of our Lord yesterday at Shawnee City. We begin another debate on the 11th inst., at Bristow, Oklahoma. So goes the cause in our part of the work."

He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much.—Luke 16: 10.

News From Missions

Nebraska and Kansas.

After the reunion held at Eustis, Nebraska, which we are pleased to report was all we could expect or wish for, as the good Spirit was manifest in every session in a marked degree, and harmony was one of the leading features among the Saints and all felt well paid for coming, wife and I and daughter Leta took a trip into northwestern Kansas. We started from Fairfield, Nebraska, on the 6th of September and reached Downs, Kansas, 8.30 the same evening, where we stayed over night. The next morning a cold, drizzling rain was falling, but being anxious to reach our destination, we took the 7.35 westbound train and were soon speeding along past barren fields and small villages, reaching Lenora about noon. There we found our genial brother, J. N. Boyd, at the depot awaiting us. After hearty greetings and warm hand clasps, we were cozily bundled into the waiting conveyance, and hoisting umbrellas were off for an eight and a half mile drive over the Kansas prairies.

The change of scenery was very restful to the eyes, and I can assure you conversation did not lag, and notwithstanding the damp chilliness of the atmosphere we enjoyed that drive. But if we did suffer a few discomforts or inconveniences, we felt amply rewarded by the hearty, whole-souled welcome given us by Sister Boyd and her daughters, and the bounteous repast that had been prepared awaiting the hungry travelers.

Brother Boyd gave up all thoughts of farm work and gave his time and attention to us with a view to making our visit as pleasant as possible; and in this he fully succeeded, taking us over the country, visiting friends and relatives, and different places of interest, and everywhere we found that Kansas, like Nebraska, had suffered from the drought, and crops were very near a failure.

This brother and family are the only Saints living at Lenora. Their friends and neighbors belonging to different denominations, the majority being Methodists. So they were very anxious for us to do a little missionary work, writing us beforehand to bring our books and come prepared to act. We gladly complied with their wishes and announced meetings at their schoolhouse near at hand. We preached every evening of our stay, except two, and had a very good attendance, and the last evening the house was filled to its seating capacity and some were standing. We gave the privilege to ask questions, and several were asked, which we think were answered to their satisfaction. The people seemed very much interested, and we think a good work could be done if the interest was followed up. Perhaps some of the ministry could go there soon.

Everywhere we were treated with the utmost kindness and hospitality by the friends of our brother and sister; showing they have tried to let their lights shine, and have gained the respect of the people around them.

On the 16th, with Brother and Sister Boyd, we took a thirty-six mile drive across the country to visit the family of Bro. and Sr. James Teeters, and we found them the same kind, loving Saints as when we knew them in Nebraska. We all rejoiced to meet each other again, and we were pleased to note the same old zeal for the work of the Lord as of old. At their request, we preached in the evening, and I never saw greater interest. They all seemed to be pleased to hear the good old sound of the gospel, and those in the church and out felt the force of the truth of the angel's message. With great reluctance we said good-bye to Brother James and his good wife Lida, and on the evening of the 18th reached Omaha. Thence across the river to Council Bluffs, where we visited a few days with friends and relatives, and on the evening of the 23d reached home, where we found all well, and judging from the good order of the house and things in general, we think our boys would make good bachelors.

BRO. AND SR. W. M. SELF.

NEBRASKA CITY, NEBRASKA, October 5, 1911.

Arizona.

We are trying in our feeble way to keep the good work moving in this part of the country; unable, however, to accomplish what we would like to, but we try to be optimistic in the efforts made, and look for permanent results in the sweet by and by. Have succeeded in taking a number of subscriptions for the Ensign here, which we trust will do the work of a weekly missionary, in getting the pure and wholesome gospel before the people who are willing to read and think for themselves.

By the assistance of the Ladies' Aid Society of this place we have placed a year's subscription for the Ensign in both the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. of this place. These Ensigns will be placed on file with the rest of their periodicals, and therefore read by a good many. In the mind of the writer that is one way of spreading the gospel, and we believe a good way, too. We also tried to place it in the library here, but those in charge would not accept it on the grounds that the paper was considered denominational, and therefore according to their rules could not be accepted.

Have been visiting considerably of late, and while we may not see immediate results, I find it one of the best means we have to get the gospel before the people. We perhaps don't have so many sermons to report, but often preach a great many more in reality than we could do by any other means. The good Lord has bidden us to go from house to house and teach the people, and has promised to go before us. (See Matthew 6: 25, 26, Inspired Translation.) It occurs to my mind that if that method were pursued more closely it would bring greater results.

The peace of mind and the comfort of the Spirit that attend our efforts along those lines indicate a move in the right direction.

We are hopeful in the work here, and by the grace of God will try to plant the work in a way that will be permanent, and therefore effectual.

BISBEE, ARIZONA, October 5, 1911.

Ohio.

I have been in Bryan since September 5, holding meetings in the tent each evening, with from large to small audiences, excepting Saturday evenings, when we preached on the public square to large crowds. This is one of the prettiest little cities in Ohio, composed mostly of retired farmers, so you may know what we are up against when it comes to presenting the gospel to them. We have, however, been able to remove much prejudice as to our being Mormons; preached last night to a tent full of apparently interested people upon the subject of the Book of Mormon, announcing that we would continue the subject to-night.

At the close of our meeting last night a gentleman that has been attending most all our meetings gave me an order for a Book of Mormon. There are several very fine people quite interested. Can not tell what the results will be. Will have to close soon; getting too cold for tent work. I find that the tent is the best way to reach the people. We have five members here, one brother and four sisters. They are noble Saints, trying to let their light shine before their neighbors, and willing to do all they can to assist in getting the gospel before the people. They have had quite an expense at this time, but are willing to do more. If the Saints were all as willing to do, this work would take on new life, and the gospel roll forth. May the Spirit of the work soon be implanted in every heart is my prayer.

We were invited to several homes to visit and take meals, which we accepted gratefully, and felt our visit was profitable to each. Ye missionary receiving of temporal things, of life while we imparted to them of the spiritual.

At the close of our meeting last Thursday evening, just before announcing the closing hymn, a gentleman who had been attending our meetings regularly, arose and came forward and laid a piece of money on the stand, and then another came, until several had come and laid their offering down. We had not taken up any collections. Were we surprised? Ask the audience. We will not try to explain.

Continued our subject Monday night as announced; Book of Mormon, God's way, and the means used, in bringing it forth. Not so many present as the night before, but all seemed to be much interested.

At the close of the service we received orders for three more copies of the Book of Mormon, and one of the Doctrine and Covenants, making in all, four of the Book of Mormon, three of the Doctrine and Covenants, and one HERALD, and one Autumn Leaves.

Ever praying for the advancement of this glorious work, I remain,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

News From Branches

Pleasant Hill.

It is nearing the middle of October. On the first we had four services; Sunday school at 10 o'clock, and at 11 preaching by J. G. Vickrey; after preaching services, the sacrament service, and in the evening we had the Religio, at which we had four short talks which were instructive. Also at the midweek prayer meeting we had a spiritual feast.

On October 8, Sunday school at the regular hour and preaching at 11 by A. A. Weaver, Religio at 4, and the lesson was interesting. There were several talks by the young that were encouraging.

Speaking of the young, we will make mention of the reunion, for I never saw the young take so great an interest in meetings as they did then.

We are still trying to let our lights shine. The work is progressing in this part of the vineyard; slow, but I hope it will be sure.

W. H. DRAKE.

Independence, Missouri.

On the afternoon of October 1, Bro. W. R. Dexter, Pres. Joseph Smith's stenographer, was ordained president of the Fourth Quorum of Priests by Elders J. F. Curtis and I. N. White; also three children were blessed under the hands of Brethren White, Curtis, and Garrett.

It was sacrament Sunday, the Holy Spirit was present, bringing joy to the Saints, and every seat was occupied.

Before the close of the morning service Brother Garrett spoke in glowing terms of Graceland College, its workers, and patrons, and a sum of over fifty dollars was at once subscribed.

About fifty were present at the early prayer meeting of October 8, Brethren Sterrett and Shearer presiding. The attendance at Sunday school was 695 and as usual, at the close, a few notices were given, as follows: A three-course supper, to be given by the orchestra, accompanied with a fine musical program; of an entertainment, in a hall, by the Ladies' Aid, and a Rally Day to be celebrated on the 22d inst. by the Sunday school.

On the 5th the church choir bubbled over with fun at a hayride, and on the following evening the sedate people who had migrated here from Plano in 1881 met at Brother Joseph's, where they participated in a program of reminiscences which, together with the reading of a couple of poems, and the usual refreshments, conduced to the reviving of their drooping spirits.

At the morning service of the 8th, after the prayer by Elder H. Resch and the singing of "The Lord is my refuge," Bishop E. L. Kelley taking for his text Mark 12: 22, "Have faith in God," launched out in a most stirring, penetrating appeal to the brethren for a higher and more Christlike moral standard. Said he, "true faith excludes boasting, and we should not judge one another, criticism being beneficial only as it applies to one's self, and not to another: we should work for unity, instead of for strife and division. Let us," said he calmly, "dismiss from our minds and hearts everything that casts discredit on our own faith in God, move forward, and all things will be done for our good in this life and we shall receive in the next the commendation of our heavenly Father."

"Not to the strong is the battle,
Not to the swift is the race,
Yet to the true and the faithful
Victory is promised through grace."

The sermon of the evening, by Elder B. J. Scott, is reported to have been one of forcefulness, based on texts found in Proverbs 14: 12; Matthew 7: 13.

Many notable events, besides those mentioned, have occurred near by us, within the past few weeks; namely: the dedication of the South Side Church; the ceremonies connected with which being ably conducted by Pres. F. M. Smith, Bishop E. L. Kelley, and Brn. I. N. White and R. Bullard. Another, the convening here of the Twenty-ninth Annual Convention of the Missouri W. C. T. U. on September 27, and, also, of the Conservation Congress in Kansas City, honored by the presence of President Taft, and at which were assembled, of the honorable men and women of the State, not a few. They had met to counsel together on weighty matters in which the Saints also are much interested.

Together with these also, the keen observer of events, prophetic, worldwide, and phenomenal, may well have noted the appearance, in our Independence sky, on yesterday, about noon, of the famous bird-man, C. P. Rodgers, the ocean-to-ocean flyer, on a short trip to Swope Park, Kansas City.

They tell us that any time you look up nowadays, may be seen aeroplanes taking through air their impromptu flight.

Will some of us, some day, say with the poet,

"Many fair projects, that end in naught,
The years have brought, the years have brought?"

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Do you fear the force of the wind,
The slash of the rain?
Go face them and fight them,
Be savage again.

Go hungry and cold like the wolf,
Go wade like the crane;
The palms of your hands will thicken.

The skin of your cheek will tan,
You'll grow ragged and weary and swarthy,
But you'll walk like a man!—Hamlin Garland.

Conference Minutes.

BRITISH ISLES.—The annual conference of the British Isles Mission convened at Manchester, August 5, at 2.25 p. m., Apostle G. T. Griffiths in the chair. The session was opened with singing, and prayer was offered by Bishop R. May. Brother Griffiths stated that he was pleased to meet with so many of the brethren in conference capacity. John Foden was elected chorister of the conference; Cyril Armstrong was elected usher, with power to choose his assistants. The following missionaries and presidents of districts reported: Seventies: E. B. Morgan, R. Baldwin, Rees Jenkins, and W. H. Greenwood. High priests: H. Greenwood, T. U. Thomas, Thomas Taylor, Thomas Jones, G. W. Leggott, and J. W. Taylor. The following districts were reported: Manchester, by H. Greenwood; Western Wales, by J. R. Jenkins; Eastern Wales, by E. J. Trapp; Birmingham, by William Ecclestone; Sheffield, by J. Taylor; London, by vice president John Judd. Branches not on district, Leeds, Wortley, by Priest H. Harper; Burley, by Priest A. Mandefield; Exeter, by T. M. Nicholls; Plymouth, by Deacon F. J. Brooks. Patriarchs James Baty and Joseph Greenwood reported. Others of the priesthood who were in attendance and participated in the business were: Elders J. E. Meredith, president of the Seventh Quorum of Elders; W. R. Armstrong, secretary of the mission; Joseph Dewnsup, financial clerk and treasurer of the mission; S. F. Mathers, G. Towers, J. Schofield, D. Hope, J. Harper, C. Cousins, J. Holmes, R. Rallings, J. Bailey, H. Griffiths, James Schofield, J. Waugh, J. Baty, W. Worth, A. Jones, N. J. Weate. Priests: A. Hall, president of Priests' Quorum, R. Maloney, J. H. Sykes, S. Holmes, Trapp, A. Maune, S. Mathers, Joseph N. Dewnsup, G. Gaydon, A. Gaider, and many others, also teachers and deacons. Joseph Dewnsup, financial clerk and treasurer, reported. Interesting speeches by the brethren of the missionary force were given by Bishop R. May, R. Baldwin, T. U. Thomas, and the president. At 7 p. m. an application from Joseph Gill, relative to the Boys' Brigade, was referred to a committee of three, R. May, J. Baty, and J. E. Meredith. The committee reporting favorably, the application was granted. Another committee was appointed, E. B. Morgan, E. J. Trapp, to take stock of books in the hands of the British Isles Mission book agent. It was further resolved that a committee be appointed to formulate a petition to be sent to the Herald Publishing House, requesting them to establish a book depot in this country. Brn. J. M. Taylor, W. R. Armstrong, and Thomas Taylor were appointed by the chairman. Said committee's report was received and adopted as follows: "We, your brethren of the British Isles Mission, respectfully petition the business manager (Brother Carmichael) of the Herald Publishing House to consider the advisability of immediately establishing a book depot under the supervision of the bishop of the British Isles, for following reasons: (a) The increasing demand for literature by non-members in consequence of the recent anti-Mormon agitation. (b) The inconvenience experienced by intending purchasers in having to wait so long for books, etc., required. (c) Sales are very often missed and persons disappointed in consequence of the above, and have lost their interest in investigation of our work. Therefore, we desire to be able to obtain books, etc., in one or two — from date of application for the same." The Seventh Quorum of Elders reported through its presidency, J. E. Meredith, S. F. Mathers, and W. R. Armstrong. The Sixth Quorum of Priests reported through Bro. A. Hall, its president. Both quorums had held peaceful and profitable meetings. On Sunday, August 6, at 10.30 the Saints assembled in the Long-right Public Hall, G. T. Griffiths and T. U. Thomas in charge. Bishop May was the speaker. His effort was greatly blessed of the Lord, and highly appreciated by the assembly. The singing, under the directorship of John Foden, was of a high order and inspiring. At 3 p. m. a fellowship meeting in charge of E. B. Morgan and T. Taylor; a special prayer was also offered in behalf of the sick by G. T. Griffiths. The Spirit's power was manifested in the gift of tongues, interpretation, and prophecy, to the edifying of all present. At the close of this service the ordination of G. W. Leggott, and J. W. Taylor to office of high priest was attended to by G. T. Griffiths, R. May, and T. Taylor. At 6.30 p. m., J. W. Taylor and H. Greenwood in charge, preaching by R. Baldwin, who took for his subject the parable of the sower and the seed. This sermon was greatly appreciated by his hearers, and the speaker enjoyed an abundance of the Spirit in its delivery. A beautiful anthem was sung by the choir, and a solo by Lena Howarth. On Monday, August 7, at 9 a. m.,

the resignation of J. Dewsnup as financial clerk and treasurer of the mission was received and accepted and a vote of appreciation and thanks was tendered to the brother. Bishop R. May was elected financial clerk and treasurer, also book agent for the mission. W. R. Armstrong was reelected secretary of the mission, and J. W. Taylor his assistant. At 1.30 p. m. J. E. Meredith was reelected auditor for three-year term. It was resolved that the place for holding the next mission conference be left in the hands of the mission president. Some time was given to parliamentary drill, after which privilege was given to Bishop May to speak on the financial law of the church. The general and local authorities of the church were sustained by vote, also a vote of thanks was tendered to the locating and catering committees, the chorister, organist, usher, and his assistants. At 6.20 p. m., the president addressed the conference. His speech was directed to the priesthood in relation to their duties as officers on the church, at the close of which the service was turned into a social meeting, which continued until 10 p. m., during which time the Spirit of the Lord was made manifest in great power. It was said by very many of the Saints that the conference was one of the most peaceful and spiritual ever held in the mission. William R. Armstrong, John W. Taylor.

NOVA SCOTIA.—District conference was held at Williamsdale, Nova Scotia, on July 1 and 2, 1911. Business meeting was called to order at 3 o'clock, Saturday, July 1. Elder Daniel Macgregor was elected president of the conference, with Elder John Sheehy as assistant. Cala Filtmore was elected organist. Motion prevailed that an auditing committee of three be appointed. Motion prevailed that Ralph W. Johnson, Boyd Johnson, and Annie O'Brien be the auditing committee. Report from the district president, S. O. Foss, was read. The Bishop's agent, Mrs. Leander Johnson, reported on hand and collected since last report, $137; disbursements, $105.50; balance on hand, $31.50. The account was referred to the auditing committee. Williamsdale report was read: Present number 21. South Rawdon Branch reported, present number 18, 10 absent. Reports adopted. A motion carried that the district purchase a gasoline lamp for its own use. Nature and appointment of meetings during conference were left with Elders Macgregor and Sheehy. The following officers were elected: Daniel Macgregor, district president; Ralph W. Johnson, secretary-treasurer; Lois Johnson, bishop's agent. Elders John Sheehy and Daniel Macgregor were appointed delegates to General Conference. Motion prevailed that the next conference be held in the tent at Glenville on the last Saturday and Sunday in June. Auditors having examined bishop's agent's report, reported same to be correct. The following services were held: Saturday night at 8 o'clock preaching service by Elder John Sheehy, assisted by Elder Daniel Macgregor. Sunday morning at 9.30, sacrament meeting in charge of Elder Macgregor, assisted by Elder Sheehy. Two prayers, and nearly all took part in testimony. Preaching service at 11, by Elder Sheehy, assisted by Elder Macgregor. Baptism at 1.15, candidate Agnes McDonald, by Elder Macgregor. Sunday school at 2, conducted by Sr. Maggie Macgregor, assisted by Elder Sheehy, at the close of which a short talk was given on the home department by Ralph W. Johnson, district superintendent. Preaching and confirmation service at 3 by Daniel Macgregor, assisted by Elder Sheehy, subject Mormonism. Preaching Sunday night by Daniel Macgregor, assisted by Elder John Sheehy. Adjourned to meet at Glenville on the last Saturday and Sunday in June, 1912. Kenneth Hyatt, secretary.

SOUTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—District conference convened at Brush Creek, September 2, 1911, at 10 o'clock a. m., Pres. F. M. Davis, his associate, John Henson, and George Jenkins, missionary in charge, chosen to preside, A. H. Burroughs clerk, Brother Tanner chorister, Sister Lassetter organist. Branches reporting: Poplar Creek, 69, 6 baptized, 1 died; Tunnel Hill 192, 17 baptized, 2 received on certificate of baptism, 2 died, 1 elder ordained, 1 marriage; Kibbie 55, no change; Dry Fork 53, 1 baptized, 1 died; Brush Creek, 380, 10 baptized, 1 married; Parrish, Springertown, and Bungay not reported. Ministry reporting: Elders: S. H. Fields baptized 4, W. R. Brown, Sam Hoover, F. M. Davis, I. A. Morris, William Clements, William G. Smith, L. C. Moore baptized 5, Henry Walker baptized 1, John F. Henson baptized 3. Priests: Fred O. Pritchett baptized 3, A. H. Burroughs, Joseph Kurtz. Teachers: J. W. Slover, James Brown. Deacon: W. W. Henson. Bishop's agent reported total received, $488.06; expended, $226.75; balance on hand $261.31. Report audited and found correct. Committee appointed by last conference to solicit means to seat district tent reported. Expended for material $28.15; collected $15.80; the balance was made up by the Saints present at once. District treasurer reported: Received from assessments, $7.50; on hand, $7.50. Branches paying assessment: Brush Creek, $1; Poplar Creek, $1; Dry Fork, $1; Tunnel Hill, $1; Kibbie, $1; Springertown was chosen as the location of the next conference; time, light of the moon in January, 1912. A. H. Burroughs, clerk.

POTTAWATTAMIE.—District conference met at Crescent, Iowa, September 30 and October 1, the district presidency presiding. Chorister, organist, and ushers having been appointed and a report on credentials of delegates prepared by the district secretary was approved, and the following reports from branches read: Boomer 65 members, gain 4; Carson, 40 members, gain 3; Council Bluffs, 338 members, gain 3; Crescent, 153 members, loss 1; Fontanelle, 35 members, gain 2; Hazel Dell, 61 members, no change; North Star, 136 members, loss 1; Wheeler, 44 members, no change; total enrollment 875, net gain 10. Reports read from ministry: Elders: Joshua Carlile baptized 4, J. A. Hansen, D. Parish, C. B. Bardsley, S. Harding, P. L. Anderson, A. J. Davidson, R. McKenzie. Priests: George E. Whitehead baptized 3, C. C. Larson, H. G. Pierce baptized 1, E. D. Blair, J. R. Lentell, J. P. Christensen baptized 1. Teachers: H. M. Lile, Hans Anderson. These report 783 sermons, 9 baptisms, 15 confirmations, 1 marriage, 11 children blessed, 80 sick administrations, 19 official visits. The secretary reported 77 scattered members on the district rolls. The conference authorized the district president and secretary to take up the matter with these members and seek to secure their enrollment in the branches. The secretary presenting a bill of $3.35 was authorized to draw on the district treasurer for the amount. The bishop's agent reported: Balance on hand last report, $474.17; received since, $692.20; total amount, $1,166.37; paid to Bishop E. L. Kelley, $3.50; families of ministry, $188; ministry, $246.50; indigent, $10; total $794.50; balance on hand, $371.87; district fund, on hand, $6.04. Adopted, subject to the approval of the auditing committee. Report of joint committee for western Iowa and eastern Nebraska reunion recommended that it be located at Missouri Valley, Iowa, for not less than five years, and not to exceed twenty-five years. First session to be held August 23 to September 1, 1912. Further recommended that each district of the association appoint a member of their district to become a member of said reunion committee, with authority to select such other members to compose the reunion committee as will be necessary, each member to be so situated as to give about fifteen days' service annually to reunion work as long as he is a member of said committee. Report adopted, but recommendation of location and time disapproved, whereupon the following was adopted, "Resolved, That as a district we favor the holding of a reunion at Council Bluffs, Iowa, if held in 1912, to be known as the Western Iowa and Eastern Nebraska Reunion, but do not favor the locating of said reunion permanently, for the present, at least." As an amendment it was moved that we adopt the action of the committee so far as the consolidation of districts already taking action are concerned, and favor the consolidation of all the territory prescribed in the above resolution. The districts refusing to be incorporated were Pottawattamie, Gallands Grove, Northern Nebraska. Samuel Harding was appointed committeeman for Pottawattamie and J. Charles Jensen, alternate. On motion the time for holding the reunion was left to the committee from the various districts. J. Charles Jensen, C. B. Bardsley, and S. C. Jacobson were appointed to audit the accounts of the bishop's agent for 1911. Priest's license was issued to E. D. Blair. A collection for Graceland College was ordered for Sunday afternoon, the remaining services having been provided for. The conference adjourned to meet the last Saturday in February, 1912, at Council Bluffs. J. Charles Jensen.

CLINTON.—District conference met at Taberville, Missouri, Saturday and Sunday, October 7 and 8, 1911. Bro. James Moler and W. S. Macrae were chosen to preside over the conference, with John W. Noyes secretary, and Amos T. Higdon assistant. Sr. Mabel Braden was chosen chorister, and Sr. Adrain Lowe organist. First session opened with a good Spirit, and it continued with us all through the conference, many stating that it was one of the most spiritual conferences they ever attended. The following branches reported: Taberville, Coal Hill, Rich Hill, Eldorado Springs, Wheatland, Walker, Veve, Nevada, Mapleton, and Fort Scott. The following district officers reported: James Moler, president; John W. Noyes, secretary and treasurer; Lucy October 8 at 11 a. m., the Taberville church was dedicated, Bishop Hilliard preaching the dedicatory sermon, after which Bro. W. S. Macrae offered up the dedicatory prayer. At 2 p. m., the Saints met in a prayer and testimony meeting, and a great outpouring of God's Spirit was enjoyed by all, the gifts of the gospel being manifested. Adjourned to meet at Nevada, Missouri, February 24 and 25, 1912. John W. Noyes, secretary, 1029 North Ash street, Nevada, Missouri.

Conference Notices.

Saints attending the Western Michigan district conference to be held at Cadillac, October 20, 21, and 22, will be met at trains by a committee wearing red and white badges. Arrangements have been made for meals at restaurants conveniently near the church, at the price named by conference of 1910. Sleeping accommodations at Saints' homes. We hope for a large attendance. Sr. D. Hartnell.

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana district conference will be held at Clear Lake, Indiana, October 28 and 29. Mrs. J. H. Royce, secretary.

Convention Notices.

The Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana district Sunday school association will meet with the Clear Lake Branch, October 27, 1911. We hope to see a large delegation as there will be an election of officers to this convention. Mrs. J. W. McKnight, secretary.

Two-Day Meeting.

A two-day meeting will be held at Knox, Indiana, on October 21 and 22, by request of Knox Branch. G. A. Smith, president of Northern Indiana and Southern Michigan District.

Pastoral.

To the Saints and Friends of Rosendale and Winnipeg: Greeting: From an urgent request by and from you, Elder E. E. Long, missionary in charge, has transferred me from Saskatchewan to Manitoba for the balance of the conference year. And I beg to say, having disposed of my property in the West, and moving my family to Niagara, has delayed my coming, but hope to reach Rosendale about the 25th. My reason for going direct there, is to get the work well on before the severe winter sets in, and devote the balance of time in Winnipeg.

I trust you will be good and keep sweet, that we may have a time of rejoicing together, and the work we all love so well may prosper, and souls be added to the fold.

Your old pastor,
 S. W. TOMLINSON.

NIAGARA FALLS, ONTARIO, 81 Saint Lawrence Avenue.

The Bishopric.

CHANGE OF AGENT.

To Saints of Des Moines District: Owing to fact that I will be out of district for a time, you will please send all tithing and church money to Elder J. F. Mintun, 1205 Filmore street, Des Moines, Iowa. Make your orders and drafts payable to him. I am your servant,

W. CHRISTY, Bishop's agent.

Appointment of Brother Mintun approved October 14, 1911.

E. L. KELLEY, Bishop.

Died.

ALLEN.—At the Saints' Home, Lamoni, Iowa, September 9, 1911, Bro. Thomas R. Allen. He was born September 26, 1820, at Little Lever, Lancaster, England, and was baptized at Saint Louis, Missouri, February 21, 1864, by George Thorpe, and confirmed by Henry Cuerdon. Ordained an elder the same day of his baptism by Henry Cuerdon. Married in Yorkshire, England, November 15, 1841, to Betty Hollws. To this union were born twelve children, and but two are still alive. Funeral at Saints' Home, September 10, in charge of Asa S. Cochran, and sermon by Robert M. Elvin, from Revelation 20: 5, 12. Interment in Rose Hill.

NEWLAND.—Jacob G. Newland, near Liberty, Missouri, October 2, 1911, aged 75 years, 4 months, and 2 days. He leaves a wife, three sons, one daughter, and eleven grandchildren. He was baptized by Elder Ammon White, at Independence, Missouri, November 15, 1903, and confirmed by Elders H. H. Robinson and J. R. Lambert. Funeral sermon at their residence by Elder J. C. Foss.

RICHARDS.—At Madison, Wisconsin, August 20, Bro. Frank E. Richards, born January 27, 1862, in Mazomanie, Dane County, Wisconsin. He leaves a wife who is ill at her home in Black Earth, Wisconsin, and a sister, Mrs. S. H. Rogers, 502 South Mill street, Madison, Wisconsin, and Mrs. W. D. Lewis, Verona. The funeral at the Methodist Episcopal church in Green Bush, Elder J. O. Dutton officiating. Interment at Forest Hill Cemetery.

GOFF.—Elizabeth M. Goff was born August 31, 1840, at Pecatonica, Winnebago County, Illinois; baptized into the Reorganized Church November, 1876, at Santa Ana, California. She was married September 21, 1861, to Henry E. Goff. He preceded her to the better land. She leaves two sons and three daughters to mourn her departure. She died September 11, 1911. Funeral at the Saints' chapel, in Nevada, Missouri. Sermon by F. C. Keck, C. W. Keck in charge. Of her it may be said, She was a true wife, an affectionate mother, a Saint of God. Loved by all that were acquainted with her.

MILLER.—Annie Isabel Sartwell was born February 6, 1873, being aged 39 years, 7 months, and 20 days. Died at her home near Savanna, of typhoid fever, September 27, 1911. She was baptized in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, May 30, 1897. She died firm in the faith of the restored gospel. Was united in marriage to Eli Miller, of Shannon, January 18, 1898. She leaves to mourn father, mother, two sisters, and three brothers, a loving husband and three children, Hugh 8 years, Helen 6, and Winifred 4 years of age. The services were conducted in the schoolhouse, by Elder E. W. Voepel, of Clinton, Iowa, with the host of friends to pay their last tribute to our loving sister.

BRUNSON.—Abigail Sterling was born April 5, 1834, at Canaan, Ohio; died October 3, 1911, at the home of her son Hiel, near Amboy, Illinois. Married William Brunson at Peoria, Illinois, November 11, 1861, who died at Plano, Illinois, April 2, 1886. She was baptized February, 1863, by George Parrick and lived a true Christian life and died firm in the latter day faith. She leaves to mourn her loss three sons, Hiel, of Amboy, Illinois; Manson and Claude, of Eldorado Springs, Missouri; one brother, and a host of relatives and friends, for none knew her but to love, as she was a friend to all.

HEADLEE.—Sr. Lorena Headlee died at Patterson, Oklahoma, August 1, 1911, aged 56 years. She was laid to rest in the Wilburton Cemetery. Funeral services by V. L. Lum. She was baptized April 30, 1900, at Independence, Missouri, by Elder H. H. Robinson. She has gone on to the reward, but not as one without hope.

A really religious life—a thoughtful, steady, faithful, religious and church life—promotes intellectual discipline. It may be as valuable as mathematical, linguistic and scientific studies in the promotion of a personal training worthy of being called an education. Look at that for a moment. Consider the intellectual activity and breadth required by one who thinks much about God—his existence, his infinity, his character, his activity in this vast universe and in the reaches of the centuries. How the effort to grasp the idea of God expands all the powers of the soul; commanding self-control, fixed and persistent attention, intensity of interest, eagerness to know, to understand, to realize God. How the problems that are started in one's soul at the thought of an Infinite Deity kindle wonder and desire to stimulate the imagination and arouse the will force. Thus prayer—intelligent, earnest, absorbing, fervent, believing prayer is intellectual praxis equal to and in some respects having an advantage over mathematical and linguistic studies.—Bishop John H. Vincent, in October Chautauquan.

Is this, then, life? 'Tis glorious, so fair!

The sweet, soft breezes playing round our rest,
The summer fragrance growing everywhere,

The happy birds low cooing in the nest.

What meant the fear with which we put on life?

It is all good, and hope comes after joy.

Come anything in this delightful strife,

Storms can not daunt us, sunshine can not cloy.

—Sarah Williams.

KEEP COOL.

You say "If I only could." Will you make a test for 7 days? It is admitted by every sane person that some food creates more heat than others. Now would it not look reasonable for you to discontinue foods that are practically all carbonaceous or heat producers. Drink from one pint to one quart of water upon rising, 30 minutes later eat a goodly sized dish of Good Health Breakfast Food, this has sufficient nourishment until dinner. Drink plenty of water between meals. For dinner eat plenty of Good Health Bread, see that it is made from my flour and not a counterfeit production, select one or two vegetables, a little fruit and be sure to masticate your food as fine as possible as this reserves the energy of the stomach. It requires but a very small amount of food in hot weather as the larger part of the usual diet is carbonaceous. Eat meat sparingly at all times. It is impossible to have consumption or appendicitis if you let meat alone.

The word has been already given in agreement with revelations long since delivered to the church, that the temporalities of the church were to be under the charge and care of the bishopric, men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head acting for the church in the gathering, caring for, and disbursing the contributions gathered from the Saints of moneys and properties under the terms of tithing, surplus, free-will offerings, and consecrations.

BISHOP EDWARD PARTRIDGE

A BRIEF CHARACTER SKETCH AND HISTORY OF OUR FIRST BISHOP, BY JOSEPH SMITH THE MARTYR

"It was in December that Elder Sidney Rigdon, a sketch of whose history I have before mentioned, came to inquire of the Lord, and with him came that man, (of whom I will hereafter speak more fully,) named Edward Partridge. He was a pattern of piety, and one of the Lord's great men, known by his steadfastness, and patient endurance to the end."—Times and Seasons, vol. 4, p. 320.

"As Edward Partridge now appears, by revelation, as one of the heads of the church, I will give a sketch of his history. He was born in Pittsfield, Berkshire County, Massachusetts, on the 27th day of August, 1793, of William and Jemima Partridge. His father's ancestor emigrated from Berwick, in Scotland, during the seventeenth century, and settled at Hadley, Massachusetts, on Connecticut River. Nothing worthy of note transpired in his youth, with this exception, that he remembers (though the precise time he can not recollect) that the Spirit of the Lord strove with him a number of times, insomuch that his heart was made tender, and he went and wept, and sometimes he went silently and poured the effusions of his soul to God in prayer. At the age of sixteen he went to learn the hatting trade, and continued as an apprentice for about four years. At the age of twenty he had become disgusted with the religious world. He saw no beauty, comeliness, or loveliness in the character of the God that was preached by the sects. He, however, heard a universal restorationer preach upon the love of God; this sermon gave him exalted opinions of God, and he concluded that universal restoration was right according to the Bible. He continued in this belief till 1828, when he and his wife were baptized into the Campbellite Church, by Elder Sidney Rigdon, in Mentor, though they resided in Painesville, Ohio. He continued a member of this church, though doubting at times its being the true one, till P. P. Pratt, O. Cowdery, P. Whitmer, and Z. Peterson came along with the Book of Mormon, when he began to investigate the subject of religion anew; went with Sidney Rigdon to Fayette, New York, where, on the 11th of December, I baptized him in the Seneca River. Other incidents of his life will be noticed in their time and place."—Times and Seasons, vol. 4, pp. 368, 369.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

INTRODUCTION TO THE BISHOP'S NUMBER.

IMPORTANCE OF THE FINANCIAL ARM OF CHURCH WORK.

In connection with church work we are inclined to think of spiritual things as being all-important. But in all the realms of creation spiritual things and temporal things are closely united. In man, spirit and body are so united as to constitute the complete man, and if either is diseased or inefficient the whole man suffers. In the church, of which the body of man is used as a type, there must be material development as well as spiritual development in order to have an efficient church organization, and if we lack in either the redemption of Zion is delayed.

Even in the days of Christ, when the message was confined to the "lost sheep of the house of Israel," and consequently the area of activity was very small, it was necessary to have one who "carried the bag," . . . receiving and disbursing moneys and means. Afterward when the field was wider and the disciples had "all things common," and received contributions from those who had sold that which they had to sell, and distributed the means thus received among those who were in need, the financial operations of the church must have been much more extended and complicated, though the record is so very brief.

And to-day when the message is to all the world, and no limit is put upon the field of operations, we can hardly overestimate the importance of the financial department of the work. Foreign missions must be maintained, as well as the work in "Joseph's Land." The families of the elders must be provided for or the elders can not go into the field. This provision must be adequate, so that these families shall not fall below the level of decent living and well-being, and the allowance should be received with regularity so that they need not fall into debt and thus into disrepute. Education and at least a fair opportunity to get a start in life should be within the reach of their children.

In addition to this work, which is of vital importance, because the sending of the gospel into the world should take precedence over all other undertakings, there are various church institutions to be maintained and managed, such as the church publishing houses, the Sanitarium, the various homes for aged Saints, children's homes, and the College, with the prospective building of the temple or temples, the buying of land for the locating of Saints in Zion, and the general upbuilding and establishing of industrial Zion.

This work devolves entirely or in part upon the bishops, so far as the administering of finances goes, besides their other work as judges in Israel. It can readily be seen that maladministration on their part might seriously injure, perhaps wreck the church.

Therefore it is of the utmost importance that they shall be men of sound wisdom, blessed with great spirituality, and with the confidence of the people, worthy of and receiving the prayers and support of the people, as well as the blessings of God.

They should have the confidence of the people, otherwise contributions will be withheld. To that end they are exhorted to see to it that the temporal means that they receive shall be truly used for the purposes of the church and not as a weapon of power or for self-aggrandizement by any man, be he whomsoever he may. And they are held accountable and must answer to God, as must we all, in the day of judgment, for the manner in which they have kept their trust.

Yet these men stand in a peculiar and often trying position. It is said that the pocket-book nerve is the most sensitive of nerves. These men, standing as they do between classes, receiving from those who are prepared to make donations, sometimes the price of sacrifice, and those who are in need and must be aided financially, they are in a position that is rife with opportunities for misunderstanding and jealousy.

Therefore the people should be very slow to withdraw their confidence and support, slow to find fault without due investigation and understanding, having a patience and charity in proportion to the delicacy of the situation. It will be a long time perhaps before perfection will be obtained in this department, as well as in other departments of church work. We must expect that mistakes will be made. But the man who withholds his help and will not perform his financial obligations to the church because the bishops sometimes make mistakes, is demanding of them a standard of excellence that he himself does not possess. None of these remarks, however, are to be construed to mean that the bishops (each in his particular field) shall not be held to a strict accounting in a proper manner for the honorable and sensible management of the affairs intrusted to their care. Such an accounting protects them as well as the church. It is the right of the people to know what is done with their money.

HISTORICAL DEPARTMENT

A HISTORY OF THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC.

BY HEMAN C. SMITH, CHURCH HISTORIAN.

It is fitting that our "Bishop's Number" should be introduced with a historical sketch of the Presiding Bishopric. Such a sketch, brief, yet as comprehensive as it can be made, has very kindly been prepared by the Church Historian and is here presented.—Editors.

Since the organization of the church in 1830 there have been but few changes in the personnel of the Presiding Bishop. A few more changes in his counselors have occurred.

passage: "Concerning bishops, we recommend the following: Let Brother Isaac Morley be ordained second bishop in Zion, and let Brother John Corrill be ordained third. Let Brother Edward Partridge choose as counselors in their place, Brother Parley P. Pratt, and Brother Titus Billings, ordaining Brother Billings to the high priesthood. Let Brother Morley choose for his counselors, Brother Christian Whitmer, whom ordain to the high priest-

BISHOP EDWARD PARTRIDGE.

The first bishop of the church, called and ordained in 1831.

In February, 1831, a revelation was given designating Edward Partridge for that position, and he was soon after ordained (see Doctrine and Covenants, section 41). In June, 1831, Isaac Morley and John Corrill were ordained counselors to Bishop Partridge. In a letter of the First Presidency, written at Kirtland, Ohio, June 25, 1833, to William W. Phelps and others in Zion, occurs the following hood, and Brother Newell Knight. Let Brother Corrill choose Brother Daniel Stanton, and Brother Hezekiah Peck for his counselors; let Brother Hezekiah also be ordained to the high priesthood."—Church History, vol. 1, p. 299.

These recommendations do not seem to have been carried into effect in the case of Isaac Morley, as he subsequently acted as a counselor to Bishop Partridge, but John Corrill and counselors acted for the bishopric in Zion at the General Assembly of 1835. At a conference held at Far West, Missouri, November 7, 1837, Isaac Morley and Titus Billings were chosen counselors to Bishop Partridge. These seem to have been occupied until the death of Bishop Partridge, at Nauvoo, Illinois, May 27, 1840.

January 19, 1841, a revelation was given in which a successor to Bishop Partridge was provided, but the language used is somewhat ambiguous, and it may be interpreted either in favor of George Miller or Vinson Knight. The 8th paragraph (Doctrine and Covenants, section 107,) speaks of George Miller as follows:

And again, verily I say unto you, My servant George Miller is without guile; he may be trusted because of the integrity of his heart; and for the love which he has to my testimony, I, the Lord, love him: I, therefore, say unto you, I seal upon his head the office of a bishopric, like unto my servant Edward Partridge, that he may receive the consecrations of mine house, and that he may administer blessings upon the heads of the poor of my people, saith the Lord. Let no man despise my servant George, for he shall honor me.

The 45th paragraph of the same revelation reads:

And again, I say unto you, I give unto you Vinson Knight, Samuel H. Smith, and Shadrach Roundy, if he will receive it, to preside over the bishopric, a knowledge of said bishopric is given unto you, in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

Upon the face of these passages it would seem doubtful who was to be presiding bishop, George Miller or Vinson Knight. However, the church

BISHOP E. L. KELLEY.

This cut is from a picture taken some years ago. Bishop Kelley has filled the position of Presiding Bishop since 1891.

George Miller, as is evident from the following notice published in the Times and Seasons, the church organ, for February 1, 1841:

George Miller has been appointed, by revelation, bishop, in place of E. Partridge, deceased.

This also indicates that they interpreted the revelation in harmony with this action. No counselors for George Miller were named in the revelation, nor is it clear that he had special counselors in the bishopric.

On August 7, 1841, Don C. Smith, president of the High Priests' Quorum, died, and George Miller was chosen to succeed him.

Bishop Miller retained the counselors of Elder Smith, viz: Noah Packard and Amasa Lyman. It is probable that they also acted as counselors in the bishopric, but on this point the evidence is not conclusive. Bishop Miller served as presiding bishop until the death of Joseph Smith, in 1844.

April 7, 1860, at the Annual Conference, at Amboy, Illinois, Israel L. Rogers was chosen presiding bishop, and served in this capacity twenty-two years, resigning at the Annual Conference of 1882, at Independence, Missouri.

His counselors, appointed in 1860, were William Aldrich and Philo Howard. Philo Howard died January 25, 1869, and William Aldrich resigned April 9, 1873.

At the April conference of 1873, Elijah Banta and David Dancer were chosen and ordained counselors. Elder Banta resigned September 22, 1874, and on April 11, 1875, he was succeeded by Elder Henry A. Stebbins. Elders Stebbins and Dancer resigned simultaneously with Bishop Rogers in 1882.

Upon the resignation of Bishop Rogers, Elder George A. Blakeslee was chosen and ordained as his successor, serving in that capacity until his death, which occurred September 20, 1890.

His counselors, chosen in 1882, were Elijah Banta and Edmund L. Kelley. March 19, 1889, Elijah Banta died. Edmund L. Kelley served as counselor during the lifetime of Bishop Blakeslee, and at his death served as acting bishop by appointment of the President of the church.

At the Annual Conference of 1891, at Kirtland, Ohio, Acting Bishop Kelley was chosen and ordained presiding bishop to succeed Bishop Blakeslee. At the same time George H. Hilliard and Edwin A. Blakeslee, (son of Bishop George Blakeslee,) were chosen counselors.

Since 1891 there has been no change in the Presiding Bishopric of the church. The personnel now being Edmund L. Kelley, bishop; George H. Hilliard, and Edwin A. Blakeslee, counselors.

THE LAW MUST BE FULFILLED.

AUTHORITY MUST BE HAD TO ADMINISTER IN TEMPORAL THINGS.

BY E. L. KELLEY, PRESIDING BISHOP.

Frequently we hear the questions: Does it matter how I give my money, just so it goes to help the poor or the missionary? If I give my means directly to the poor, will it not be counted as tithing? These questions involve the supposition that a man may act as his own bishop. In the following brief but concise article Bishop Kelley deals with these questions.—Editors.

Whatever may be thought or conjectured as to the undertakings in church work known as helps, or aids, in its financial life, the fact must not be overlooked that the law as it emanated from God must be scrupulously fulfilled.

It is right and proper for all to stand ready and anxious to help "in every good work"; and those who do so, not having thereby postponed or neglected to fulfill the divine rule which is ever binding until faithfully complied with, must receive great strength and reward, but the performance of one's part in these helps in no way answers the place of a strict compliance with the demands couched in the written law.

Saints readily see that however zealous a person may be in the good works of repentance and invocation, he is not on safe ground if, while standing thus, he neglects or refuses to comply with the law of baptism or the laying on of hands. But it is not so easy for them to see that a fulfilling of the law in temporal things is equally essential. It is not for us to say what works we shall engage in or how we shall comply with the same; we are all under the divine decree, and it is binding and obligatory until fulfilled under divine approval and sanction.

Salvation is brought about, not by works of our own choosing, which we may do, but by obedience to the law of life which makes us participants in the divine promise,—“Not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained (or prepared) that we should walk in them.”

To walk after his commandments then, is to stand in the way of life, or salvation; and to walk out of this way is to wander in the ways of sin and death; for “straight is the gate . . . that leadeth unto life,” but broad is the way that leadeth to destruction. It is asked, however, “Are there no exceptions?” The answer is that of the apostle to the Gentile: “God will render to every man according to his deeds,” “for there is no respect of persons with God.”

The Lord in his instruction to the Saints in 1861, referring to their work in temporal things, called special attention to the necessity of “fulfilling the law.” This is like Christ. He ever urged that the law should be kept as a whole without an exception. “He that breaketh the least of these my commandments and teacheth men so to do shall not be saved in the kingdom of God.”

To be in Christ then, is to be in harmony with his teaching, his laws; that is “fulfilling” them. The testimony of John is in strict harmony with this: “Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.”

In December, 1831, the following instruction was given:

Verily thus saith the Lord, It is expedient in me for a bishop to be appointed unto you, or of you unto the church, in this part of the Lord's vineyard; and verily in this thing ye have done wisely, for it is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship, both in time and in eternity. For he who is faithful and wise in time is accounted worthy to inherit the mansions prepared for them of my Father.—Doctrine and Covenants 72: 1.

This settles the question, then, that the law touching temporalities is a part of the eternal plan, and extends both here and hereafter, and, as Jesus states, "He who is faithful and wise in time is accounted worthy to inherit the mansions prepared for them of my Father."

E. L. KELLEY, PRESIDING BISHOP.

"The law as it emanated from God must be scrupulously fulfilled."

This is as he taught in Judea: "But if ye would rather give alms of such things as ye have; and observe to do all things which I have commanded you, then would your inward parts be clean also."—Luke 11: 42, I. T. The Lord's ways and his teachings are ever the same; man's ways are devious.

In the administration of a law of the kingdom of God there is necessity for an authorized administrator as well as proper subjects to comply. To Peter, and later to many others, Jesus gave authority to act, to administer the laws in the house of God, the church. "Whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven"; each to execute according to authority conferred. But in no divinely directed body would it be thought proper for the teacher or deacon to be set apart to baptize, or the priest to confirm by the laying on of hands; and should such undertake to perform these rites, there would be no binding,—no ratification,—on earth or in heaven.

The act would be void and without recognition in the divine order.

So also in the administration of the law relative to temporalities. It must be performed by one authorized to act, to bind on earth in administering this law, and to bind in heaven; and it would be as inconsistent for a person to assume to be his own bishop in fulfilling the law of tithes and offerings, as for him to undertake to act as his own administrator in baptism. To have a ratification of the act there must be an authorized administrator.

In the divine direction, providing for the execution of the law of tithes and offerings, it is commanded that we "lay all things before the bishop in Zion." (Doctrine and Covenants 72: 3.) This is in keeping with the thought of an authoritative administration.

All things are not given to the bishop; but he is fully informed of the whole condition—assets, liabilities, and condition of family, so that the law may be administered wisely. The act done in righteousness is binding here and hereafter, and what is true of the bishop's authoritative act is also true of his assistants in this work, if performed in wisdom.

EQUALITY; AND HOW TO REACH IT.

BY G. H. HILLIARD, OF THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC.

The great questions uppermost in the minds of the Saints to-day are: What is true equality? How can true equality be obtained? No man has faced these questions more fearlessly than Bro. G. H. Hilliard. Our readers will surely be interested in the following article from his pen.—Editors.

That God designed his people to be one, with equal opportunity to develop their talents and reach the highest condition of usefulness in their lives here, is clearly set out in the parable of the talents. (Matthew 25: 13-30.) And that everyone made a covenant to give his services when he entered the church, I presume will not be questioned by any. That all who serve him faithfully are to receive alike, is taught in Doctrine and Covenants 38: 3. The Lord says, But it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin. (Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3.) The Lord then designs that his people should be equal in this world as well as in the world to come.

In Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1, we read:

For if ye are not equal in earthly things, ye can not be equal in obtaining heavenly things; for if you will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world, you must prepare yourselves by doing the things which I have commanded you and required of you.

Obedience to the celestial law will bring about this condition. And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom, even that of a terrestrial kingdom, or that of a telestial kingdom, for he who is not able to abide the law of a celestial kingdom, can not abide a celestial glory.

That the Saints might understand and keep the law of Christ, he commanded them to go to Ohio, and there he would give them his law. In section 42, we have that law; and on this part, it says in paragraphs 8 and 9:

If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which can not be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me, and not, from time to time, that every man who has need may be amply supplied, and receive according to his wants.

This will supply the Lord's storehouse, and place the bishop in condition to help the poor into a condition where they can help themselves and educate their children; thus giving equal opportunity to all the children of God for development, and also equality in temporal things; and bring to pass what the Lord says in paragraph 11:

For it shall come to pass that which I spake by the mouths of my prophets shall be fulfilled; for I will consecrate of the riches of those who embrace my gospel, among the Gentiles, unto the poor of my people who are of the house of Israel.

Again, in paragraph 14, the Lord says:

Thou shalt stand in the place of thy stewardship; thou shalt not take thy brother's garment; thou shalt pay for that which thou shalt receive of thy brother; and if thou obtainest more than that which would be for thy support, thou shalt give it unto my storehouse, that all things may be done according to that which I have said.

Here we have the amount definitely stated three times, what every man is to have, and the Lord makes no difference, whether it was his own property, or whether he had received it by consecration.

Every man should be amply supplied, and should be satisfied with enough.

Can we do it?

Instead of this pauperizing the church, it would put each one in condition to help himself and have plenty.

This law was given in February, 1831, and the Lord knowing the existing laws of the land, and that one man, with only enough of this world's goods to amply supply himself and family, in his own right; in fee simple (which everyone should have) could not carry on business on a large scale; and as they could not as a church go into ordinary business, buying and selling real estate, personal property, etc., they must put themselves in harmony with the laws of the land, as well as the law of the Lord. So in May, the same year, only three months after the law was given, we have a command to the bishop to organize, as we see in Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1:

For it must needs be that he receive directions how to organize this people, for it must needs be that they are organized according to my laws; if otherwise, they will be cut off.

What is first now in this new country:

Appoint unto this people their portion, every man equal according to their families, according to their circumstances, and their wants and needs; and let my servant Edward Partridge, when he shall appoint a man his portion, give unto him a writing that shall secure unto him his portion, . . . and thus all things shall be made sure according to the laws of the land.

Here we see everyone is to hold enough for himself and family in his own name, according to the laws of the land; even if he is cut off from the church. In paragraph 2, it says: "And let every man deal honestly, and be alike among this people, and receive alike, that ye may be one, even as I

ELDER G. H. HILLIARD, OF THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC.

"God designs his people to be one, with equal opportunity to develop their talents and reach the highest condition of usefulness here."

they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors, two of the elders, or high priests, such as he shall or has appointed and set apart for that purpose. . . . every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration, inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family.

Here it is clearly stated how much the Lord makes every man a steward over; whether he owns the property before, or has received it by consecration, both are to be alike. This defines it, and brings equality. This is a first consecration; and in case a man has not turned over all he can spare above the needs of his family, in paragraph 10, we read:

And again, if there shall be properties in the hands of the church, or any individuals of it, more than is necessary for their support, (here the amount is again defined) after this first consecration, which is a residue, (or what surplus was left after the first consecration) to be consecrated unto the bishop, it shall be kept to administer unto those who have have commanded you." In paragraph 5, we find this was an example for all other churches in other places. They had been taught unity of purpose, and the purpose was to build up the kingdom of God, not lay up riches for themselves.

In 70: 2, 3, we find this rule applied to the leading men of the church, to consecrate and turn into the storehouse, all above their necessities, Behold, this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, even as I, the Lord, have appointed, or shall hereafter appoint unto any man. And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God.

All are here included, who belong to the church. In less than one year from this time he told them to organize or they would be cut off, in March, 1832, he gives the order that he gave to Enoch, for their further development and instruction. They must organize and move forward. One month later, April, 1832, another revelation comes giving further instruction, still urging equality and unity of purpose to establish God's order, enlarge their stewardships by furnishing competent men, with money from the Lord's treasury to carry on any proper business to the extent of their talent or ability, for the benefit of the order—all above their necessities being cast into the Lord's storehouse, or common treasury. The man, competent to do a large business, being furnished the extra capital by the treasurer of the order as a loan, could do business in his own name, and as long as he was a wise steward and faithful laborer, he was supplied in his stewardship, and when he gave up that work, the extra capital, above his own, would belong to the order, and another could take his place; the one going out taking what he owned in his own right, enough for himself and family. Thus maintaining equality of opportunity and property, and unity of purpose, every man working in his line, to his full capacity, paying his tithing and consecrating his surplus; satisfied with enough, and working for the good of his neighbor and the glory of God.

In August, 1831, the Lord gives an example, 58: 7:

And now I give unto you further directions concerning this land. It is wisdom in me that my servant Martin Harris should be an example unto the church, in laying his moneys before the bishop of the church. And, also, this is a law unto every man that cometh unto this land, to receive an inheritance, and he shall do with his moneys according as the law directs.

What does the law direct every man that comes to the land to do? Just what the Lord commanded Martin Harris to do the year before, March, 1830, "impart a portion of thy property; yea, even part of thy lands, and all save the support of thy family."—Doctrine and Covenants 18: 5. This is the general law as clearly stated in section 42, and no exception whatever.

Men are very much alike in trying to justify themselves and have their own way in all ages. So it was in the old church, after all the urging the Lord had done, or could do, many of the people would not comply with the law. In 1834, section 101, the Lord renews the command, because some had broken their covenant by covetousness and with feigned words, and says,

It is wisdom in me; therefore, a commandment I give unto you, that ye shall organize yourselves, and appoint every man his stewardship, that every man may give an account unto me of the stewardship which is appointed unto him; for it is expedient that I, the Lord, should make every man accountable, as stewards over earthly blessings, which I have made and prepared for my creatures. I, the Lord, stretched out the heavens, and builded the earth as a very handy work; and all things therein are mine; and it is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine; but it must needs be done in mine own way; and, behold, this is the way, that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my saints: that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low; for the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare; yea, I prepared all things, and have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves. Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.

The Lord says all this work must be done in his own way. I can not become a law unto myself, and give just what I please, and escape the result. The Lord says he has decreed to provide for his Saints in his way; and we can not change God's decree. Let us choose the right way and reap the good reward. In the same year, 1834, the Lord says, that they had not learned to be obedient to the things he required at their hands, and would not impart of their substance to the poor and needy; and again reminds them that Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the celestial law. All were not under this condemnation, but many would not go up to Zion, but would keep their money, hence, brought themselves under condemnation, but not the whole church. Then, in 1838, they inquired to know how much the Lord required of them as a tithing; and he repeats the law in substance, set out in section 42, only in other terms. One says, "all only what would be for thy support, or all above what is necessary for the support of thyself and family." The other says, "all thy surplus property"; the result is the same in both cases. Section 106 says that after having turned over the surplus they pay one tenth of the increase annually, as tithing for the priesthood, and this shall be a standing law for ever; but consecration, or turning over surplus continues also from time to time, as it accumulates, and preserves equality, which must exist, and that willingly; no man in the church is exempt from it.

Does this law in temporal things apply to us? Yes. Section 42 is renewed to us in section 122: 6, and section 102 is renewed to us in section 127: 7, and in 126: 10 we are told that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto.

This includes the whole book.

Now the Lord has instructed that the bishopric be authorized to take such measures as will bring to pass the organization of those who are desirous and willing to form parts in colonization under terms of association in different localities where settlement may be made and may lawfully secure and hold property for the benefit of themselves and their fellow church members and the whole body of the church when organized. . . . The bishop and his counselors, together with the other bishops of the church, and such other officers as the bishop may call together, with whom he may confer in council, are authorized to devise the methods of procedure; and they will be guided by the spirit of wisdom and revelation to do the work intrusted to their care.

The conference in general assembly authorized us to organize. We have done that work, and organized with those who said they were willing to keep the whole law of God. We who are associated in this organization by our actions have declared our faith in the law of equality. See article 7, Articles of Association.

No one can be in harmony with the law of equality and consecration, as required in sections 42, 51, 70, 77, 81, 101, and using this world's goods in the manner designed of God as stated in 128: 8, who owns in fee simple tens of thousands of dollars' worth of property, above what is necessary for the support of his family, and to leave others without even homes or inheritance, and no proper effort made by the rich, to help the poor into conditions where they could pay for a home and help their family to comfortable conditions. To do so and think we are in harmony with the law of God, as required to become a member of the Order of Enoch, is to deceive ourselves, and expose our ignorance of the law, to men capable of judging in such matters, and to remain silent when such conditions exist, is to bring condemnation to ourselves, and failure to the cause we profess to love.

Therefore, hearken once again unto the voice of inspiration, in warning and instruction, and conform to that which is given and receive what is awaiting the upright and the pure in heart.—Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8.

As ever, working and praying for gospel equality and unity of purpose, being satisfied obedience to God's law will bring and perpetuate this lovely condition designed of God for his people.

SHALL WE TEACH OUR CHILDREN TO OBEY THE FINANCIAL LAW?

BY BISHOP RICHARD BULLARD.

Bishop Richard Bullard, who has recently been given oversight of the work in the Independence Stake, has an eye on the future. He believes that we should start right by educating our children to observe the law, thus raising up a generation of men and women who will support the work of God financially. Is he right?—Editors.

BISHOP RICHARD BULLARD, OF THE INDEPENDENCE STAKE.

"It is good for parents to place some financial responsibility upon their children."

Why the financial or temporal law should be any less emphasized than any other part of the gospel economy, I can not understand, as it is part of the great whole, that has been arranged by the Father and Son as a means of salvation for the people of God.

"The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul," therefore it is intended that the whole law should be observed, to bring about the perfection of life and character that will entitle mankind to the presence of the Father. Then what is binding upon the parents as law is also binding upon the children, as there has been but one code of laws for the old and young, and as the parent is the custodian of the offspring, whatsoever will be of good for the child, should be taught him, as the Master has enjoined.

There can then be but one answer to the question propounded, in the light of what has been given us of the Father, and we will answer the question with an emphatic yes, and give some reasons why we so decide.

Some of the duties of parents to their children are outlined in Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4, in the following language:

And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents. . . . And they shall also teach them to pray, and walk uprightly before the Lord. . . . Now I, the Lord, am not well pleased with the inhabitants of Zion, for there are idlers among them; and their children are also growing up in wickedness; they also seek not earnestly the riches of eternity, but their eyes are full of greediness.

The Lord rebuked four of his elders, fathers in Israel, because they had not properly taught their children the law of God, not only the first principles, as we call them, faith, repentance, laying on of hands; but the laws of industry, benevolence, and love towards their neighbor, etc.

The laws made binding upon ancient Israel under the prophet Moses included the financial law, as recorded in so many places (as in Numbers 18; Leviticus 27: 30-34; Deuteronomy 26: 2-12, etc.) In Deuteronomy 6: 4-9 we have this striking language addressed to God's chosen people:

Hear . . . O Israel: the Lord our God is one Lord: and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might. And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart: and thou shalt teach them diligently to thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up.

Here the duties of parents are emphasized, and the promises of God to Israel in relation to their success in the promised land could have their fulfillment only as these commands were carried out. Their children were to know these laws; and they were held responsible before God for this instruction.

The father in a sense was to be a priest in his own house, an expounder of the law, by example as well as by precept.

These commands are made binding upon us not only as per the law and testimony as found in the Jewish scriptures, but as found in the Zionite law to us—as given in Doctrine and Covenants (this to us and our generations), therefore we have the commands in a twofold sense.

It is good for parents to place some financial responsibility upon their children, at an early age, some way of them having charge of small amounts they may be taught to earn, and in this way they can be taught to place a value upon money coming into their hands, and they will very soon, if properly taught, learn their duty to God and the church in the law of tithing and consecration, and thus the dimes and cents earned may help to bring blessing to them and the church.

When a child is taught that a tenth of increase thus obtained is the Lord's, and will help to send missionaries into the field, he will take a delight in thus helping the work of God, and will not easily get away from the lesson learned.

Teach the child that the law of consecration is also attached to the law of tithing, and leave to the child what he or she will give as a freewill offering, and thus help him to enlarge the soul by the cultivation of a generous spirit.

How gratifying to the parent to see the expansion of soul the cultivation of this spirit will bring, instead of the growth of selfishness that is so common among so many of the young, who seem to want to consume everything coming their way, in candy, chewing gum, rings, bracelets, and other expensive articles of ornamentation, moving picture shows, and the theater.

Our Sunday school and Religio societies have done a noble work along the line of instruction to the young of our church, and will show a splendid fruitage in the years to come. May the Master speed the good work thus in hand. The home is the place where this work should begin, then the work of father and mother will be supplemented by the teachings the children receive from the stand, by the servants of God, the Sunday school, and the Religio, as they treat upon the financial law.

But we find too often a lack of this knowledge in our scholars until the matter is brought before them in the lesson study, and the work that will bring the "well done" from the Master, rightly belonging to the parent, if following out the injunctions of our Father, will have to be transferred to those who have shown a more lively interest in the welfare of the children, along these lines.

The Zion of latter days must be built, as was the Zion of Enoch, upon celestial principles or laws, and if our children are to fill the place of the passing generation, it will be because they have become the possessors of the knowledge of celestial laws, and can teach them, and as parents we are to see to it we impart to them what the Master has commanded or enjoined upon us.

"Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God has shined." Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God is again to shine; and he has promised that his glory shall rest upon Zion of these days, as a light, a glory, a pillar, which is to be the protection of Zion in the day of terror; so that nations will stand aghast at the display of God's power and glory, but he will never thus advertise himself, and his Zion, a people pure in heart, the place of his glory and power, where the celestial laws are taught, unless we with our children are not only made the custodians of these priceless laws, but have put them into practice in our lives and characters, and we with our children are perfected by them.

This is the time spoken of by Malachi, that the hearts of the fathers were to be turned to their children, and the hearts of the children turned to their fathers; and we might add, the fathers were to turn the hearts of the children to God and his laws, the doing of which will help bring about the purposes of God, in the establishing of his Zion, the building up of the "New Jerusalem," that at the advent of his Son to the earth he may receive a royal welcome by a loyal people. May we with our children be prepared to meet and greet him.

THE CARE OF THE POOR.

BY BISHOP JOSEPH ROBERTS.

There is a great deal of haphazard giving in the world to-day. Students of sociology say that much of it does more harm than good. God has a definite way of dealing with the poor. When his plan is intelligently carried out giving will be a blessing to the one who gives and to the one who receives. In this article Bishop Roberts, of the Lamoni Stake, deals with this question of caring for the poor.—Editors.

"God so loved the world that he gave his Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish; but have everlasting life." The poor come in for a share of God's love, are called blessed, and are promised inheritance upon the earth, to possess it in time and eternity.

THE POOR ARE WITH US.

Peculiar to the divine message of love, the poor in the world have the gospel preached to them. Some hear and obey the message with gladness, thus becoming members of the kingdom and fold of God. On account of sickness or failing health, or having grown aged or infirm, some are deprived of the means of self-support. Some are widows and orphans that through death of husband and father are deprived of support. Through poor management or otherwise some become needy. Others through lack of proper opportunity can not be other than poor. All these and more are catalogued "the poor."

MORAL RESPONSIBILITY.

As brethren of one great, common family, the church, we are our brothers' keepers. The same moral responsibility attaches to the church in caring for its poor as attaches to the care of the sick or watching over its membership, creating spiritual growth or casting out iniquity. A man that will not provide for the needs of his family should have no family; so the church has little business with membership if it is powerless or unwilling to make the necessary provisions for its members along both spiritual and temporal lines.

ALL POOR DO NOT HAVE CLAIM UPON THE CHURCH.

The distinction must be made between those who are worthy and those who are unworthy. If it were not so the idler could eat the bread and wear the garments of the laborer, which the Lord says should not be. (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12.) Furthermore, "The idler shall not have place in the church, except he repents and mends his ways."—Doctrine and Covenants 75: 5. This includes idle poor as

BISHOP JOSEPH ROBERTS, OF THE LAMONI STAKE.

"There is nothing good but what we as Saints should stand for. The cause of temperance, the cause of freedom and education, the cry of the oppressed and distressed, as also the pleadings of the innocent, to all these and many more, as children of the light we can not turn a deaf ear."

also idle rich. The gospel of Christ makes men and women industrious, not slothful. "For it is not meet that the things which belong to the children of the kingdom, should be given to them that are not worthy, or to dogs, or the pearls to be cast before swine."—Doctrine and Covenants 41: 2.

ALL POOR DO NOT REQUIRE THE SAME SORT OF CARE.

The helpless must receive directly from the Lord's storehouse such comforts of life as their necessities demand. The helpful poor, those who are able to perform service, need only the opportunity furnished to enable them to wholly or in part provide for their own needs. This is helping others to help themselves. The latter class are not asking that something be given them aside from the mere opportunity to earn support, neither do they wish something for nothing.

ALL TO SHARE IN THE CARE OF THE POOR.

Pure religion prompts the individual to visit the homes of want, and succor the distressed, to do good to all, and especially to those of the church. These are some of the things which constitute, using scriptural language, "a neighbor."

This is one of the places where we need not wait to be called into service by others. The power is resident within each to bring to pass much righteousness. It is only the slothful who wait to be commanded in all things. As individuals, as branches, as districts, as stakes, as a church, all share in the care of the poor, each performing their several duties as becometh Saints.

THE POOR ARE TO BE ESTABLISHED.

The Lord intends, by revealing his will to the church in these latter days and by calling and setting apart individuals to teach his law, to bring to pass a condition in the church where there will be no poor, in that there shall be no rich. This is taught in the law given to govern this church, which law is the same now (1911) as when first given. The Lord holds ownership of all the earth, we are but stewards, each is entitled to a sufficiency for himself and family—no more, no less. If we have more than is sufficient, it is to be given to the Lord's storehouse. (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9, 14.)

This condition of no-poor-no-rich is to be brought about in the Lord's way (not man's), for he has promised to provide for his Saints. This is the way: "The poor shall be exalted" (poor no longer) "in that the rich are made low," (no longer rich).—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 1. The law as stated in Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8, 9, 10, 11, is the leveling process to exalt the poor and humble the rich.

New converts are continuously being made to the church, out from the world of rich and poor. If these converts are poor, they can not remain so; if they are rich, they can not continue so, under the law of Christ.

True to these facts is the statement of the Master, "I will consecrate of the riches of those who embrace my gospel among the Gentiles, unto the poor of my people who are of the house of Israel."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 11.

So the rule applies to the new converts, the rich will consecrate, the poor will be provided for, all having sufficient, consistent with just needs. These needs are: first a home, an inheritance; second, a stewardship, an occupation for all who are able to perform service. Putting it in a more simple way, everybody needs a home and something to do. The Lord's way of establishing his Saints is to provide all who need with inheritances and stewardships. The Lord can not do this until the Saints are willing to comply wholly with his law that makes Saints equal, and organize to carry into operation the law of equality. The poor may then be established, and, until such time the poor will be among us.

THE IDEAL CONDITION TO OBTAIN.

As a result of living the perfect law of the gospel there were no poor among the saints in Enoch's day. (Genesis 7: 23, Inspired Translation.) Until such law was understood and fully observed there may have been, and probably were, poor among Enoch's people, as there are among the Saints in this latter day dispensation. Christ made the statement to some of his disciples, "The poor ye have with you always." True, they had, but had the statement been made to Enoch it could not have applied. Only through the failure to carry into operation the whole gospel law can this statement be made applicable to us, unless it could be construed to mean the poor in the world, and in that sense we would have the poor among us. But the ideal condition to obtain is where the Saints are established under the terms of gospel equality.

The poor, as also the rich, may hold membership in the church. I know of no rule that will keep them from holding membership and at the same time continue the poor and remain the rich. This seems to be left with the membership as to whether they will continue so or not. If the rich determine to continue in the church and not consecrate of their properties, some of the poor will out of necessity need perhaps to continue poor. Just to the extent that the membership comply with the law of consecration will be the extent that the poor will be provided for in the law, thus determining the measure of equality existing.

Yes, we can remain in the church with our riches and with our poverty and take our chance. Here is our chance: "If any man shall take of the abundance which I have made and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2. Do we care for the chance? What is this portion to impart according to the law of the gospel? Answer: All, except that which is sufficient for himself and family. (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9.) We must not lose sight of the fact, however, that we shall not be able to purchase eternal life by means of offering our possessions alone; for it will profit us nothing, according to the Apostle Paul, though we bestow all our goods to feed the poor and have not the pure love of God connected with our labors.

What has been done and what is now being done by the church by way of helping the poor is commendable. Homes have been established for the aged, a college erected for the education of the young, the sanitarium builded for our infirm, a children's home completed, the Order of Enoch organized; progress is steadily being made and the future seems bright. But the ideal has not obtained, the redemption of Zion has only begun, the poor are not established upon their inheritances nor granted stewardships. Before such conditions do obtain heed must be paid to the word of the Lord which has been given if the church is to receive and enjoy the blessings which have been looked for when Zion is fully redeemed. "Therefore, hearken once again unto the voice of inspiration, in warning and instruction, and conform to that which is given and receive what is awaiting the upright and the pure in heart."—Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8.

DUTIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES OF A BISHOP.

BY BISHOP R. C. EVANS.

What are the peculiar duties, responsibilities, and privileges of a bishop? These questions Bishop R. C. Evans, of Canada, takes up and answers in detail in the following brief but interesting article.—Editors.

BISHOP R. C. EVANS, OF CANADA.

"I write with the prayer that I may reflect some light by which some may see the way of the Lord more perfectly."

From my reading I have learned that "A bishop was a prelate consecrated for the spiritual government of a diocese. The word comes from the Saxon bishop, and that from the Greek swiohowog?—An overseer, or inspector." (See Buck's Theological Dictionary, art. Bishop, p. 66.)

The above seems to be supported by another justly celebrated writer: "Bishop. This word applied in the New Testament to the officers of the church who were charged with certain functions of superintendence . . . general superintendence over the spiritual well-being of the flock."—Bible Dictionary, by Dr. William Smith, art. Bishop, pp. 89, 90.

The great historian, Mosheim, speaking of the little church in the early part of its existence, says, "But the number of presbyters and deacons increasing with that of the churches, and the sacred work of the ministry growing more painful and weighty, by a number of additional duties, these new circumstances required new regulations. It was then judged necessary that one man of distinguished gravity and wisdom should preside in the council of presbyters, in order to distribute among his colleagues their several tasks, and to be a center of union to the whole society. This person was, at first, styled the angel of the church to which he belonged, Revelations 2, 3, but was afterwards distinguished by the name of bishop, or inspector; a name borrowed from the Greek language, and expressing the principal part of the episcopal function, which was to inspect into, and superintend the affairs of the church. It is highly probable that the church of Jerusalem, grown considerably numerous, and deprived of the ministry of the apostles, who were gone to instruct the other nations, was the first which chose a president or bishop. And it is no less probable that the other churches followed by degrees such a respectable example. . . . The power and jurisdiction of the bishops were not long confined to these narrow limits, but soon extended themselves, and that by the following means. The bishops who lived in the cities, had, either by their own ministry, or that of their presbyters, erected new churches in the neighboring towns and villages. These churches continuing under the inspection and ministry of the bishops, by whose labors and counsels they had been engaged to embrace the gospel, grew imperceptibly into ecclesiastical provinces, which the Greeks afterwards called dioceses. But as the bishop of the city could not extend his labors and inspection to all these churches in the country and in the villages, so he appointed certain suffragans or deputies to govern and to instruct these new societies, and they were distinguished by the title of chorepiscopi, i. e., country bishops. This order held the middle rank between bishops and presbyters, being inferior to the former and superior to the latter."—Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History vol. 1, chapter 2.

"Bishops, spiritual overseers that have the charge of souls to instruct and rule them by the word."—Cruden's Concordance, art. Bishop.

The position above quoted is in accord with many other authorities that we have read after on the subject, and seems to agree with the word of the Lord, as given both in former and latter times, from which we learn that a bishop is not only to receive tithing, offerings, surplus consecration, and expend it in caring for the poor and needy, the missionaries and their families, building churches, holding church property in trust for the church, under what is sometimes called the law of temporalities, as some seem to think, but he was regarded as a leading authority, as a superintendent or inspector in branches and districts or dioceses, in spiritual matters as well as the temporal responsibilities.

He was a local authority, and not a missionary. While he might visit the branches in the various districts, yet his calling was not like the Twelve and Seventy, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel."

In the Doctrine and Covenants, which contains the word of the Lord to his people with regard to "the duties and responsibilities of a bishop," we learn the following: "Every . . . bishop . . . is to be ordained by the direction of a high council or general conference."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 17.

A bishop is to be ordained under the hands of the First Presidency. (See Doctrine and Covenants 68: 2; 104: 8.) The bishopric is the presidency of the Aaronic priesthood (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 8.) A bishop must have two counselors, and the three are known as the bishopric. Their duties are numerous, and are set forth in section 104, and other parts of the Doctrine and Covenants.

A bishop is a "judge in Israel, to do the business of the church, to set in judgment upon transgressors . . . among the inhabitants of Zion, or in a stake of Zion, or in any branch of the church where he shall be set apart unto this ministry."—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 32, 33.

The bishop presides over the common council, and if the First Presidency of the church should fall into transgression, the bishop's council, assisted by twelve counselors of the high priesthood, shall try them, and their decision shall be final. (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 37.)

It is not only true that the bishop shall preside over the court that is to judge the First Presidency, if in transgression, but the law clearly states that "No bishop . . . shall be tried or condemned for any crime, save it be before the First Presidency of the church." (Doctrine and Covenants 68: 3.)

A bishop's court has both original and appellate jurisdiction, and may in turn be appealed from, according to the law of the church. (Doctrine and Covenants 99: 1; 104: 35; Rules of Order, chapter 15, 172.)

A very important part of the work which a bishop is called upon to perform is that of administering to the needs of the poor. (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 23.)

Those wishing to locate in Zion are instructed to correspond with the bishop. (Doctrine and Covenants 123: 12.) And when it is wisdom for the people to gather to Zion, the bishop with the First

Presidency is called upon to take an important part in locating the incoming Saints, in the dividing of their inheritances. (Doctrine and Covenants 48: 2.)

In conclusion, we opine that perhaps the most important part of a local bishop's work along monetary lines is to teach the Saints that God is the possessor of all that exists upon the earth; and that in his law he has made claim upon every human gainer and owner of substance, and that his demand is that one tenth belongs to him. This amount of your holdings should be rendered to him directly, as proprietor and ruler, in token of his original and fundamental ownership, and our allegiance, dependence, and stewardship. This tenth should be paid to God's selected representative, known in the church law as the bishop, or his counselors or agents. (Genesis, 14, 18, 20; Hebrews, 7: 1-9; Genesis 28: 22; Leviticus 27: 30-34; Deuteronomy 14: 22-28; 26: 12; Matthew 23: 33; Luke 18: 12.)

It is also made clear in the law of the Lord, that having paid their tithing, every person holding membership in the church should make an inventory to the bishop of the branch, district or stake where he resides. This means that he should file with the bishop a statement of his holdings, or as it is called in the law, "laying all things before the bishop," who will give him a certificate, to be presented to the presiding bishop in Zion, should the person be called to go to Zion. For a more complete account of this law the reader is referred to Doctrine and Covenants 72: 3, 4; 42: 8, 9; 58: 7; Leviticus 27: 9-15, 16, 23.

Believing that I have taken the allotted space provided for this paper, I will close with the prayer that the other bishops may take up these and other parts of the "duties and responsibilities of a bishop," and that the special number of the HERALD, will be blessed, in that the church will not only understand the law more perfectly, but be inspired to keep it, that love and unity may result in the redemption of Zion.

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF TAKING CARE OF THE POOR.

BY BISHOP ALBERT CARMICHAEL.

The man in the street throws a nickel or ten cents or perhaps a dollar to some object of charity. His sympathies are touched. His act shows that he recognizes the responsibility of helping the poor. But this method is inadequate. Paupers are made and drunkards encouraged by this kind of giving. The Lord shows us a more excellent way. In this article Bishop Carmichael, manager of the Herald Publishing House, tells us more about that way.—Editors.

"The poor ye have always with you." So God's perfect system would not fail to provide for such. The ideal condition to be obtained is one in which there will be no poor. We have not reached that perfection. The gospel is given to help us so to do. Among the many to be helped are the poor. This class of unfortunates have always been under God's especial watchcare, as the following quotations show:

"Thou shalt not wrest the judgment of the poor in his cause."—Exodus 23: 6.

I know that the Lord will maintain the cause of the afflicted and the right of the poor."—Psalm 140: 12.

Read the following carefully:

Your iniquities have turned away these things, and your sins have withholden good things from you. For among my people are found wicked men: they lay wait, as he that setteth snares; they set a trap, they catch men. As a cage is full of birds, so are their houses full of deceit: therefore

BISHOP ALBERT CARMICHAEL.

"The Lord never changes nor forgets, so in modern revelation we find him championing the cause of the poor."

they are become great, and waxen rich. They are waxen fat, they shine: yea, they overpass the deeds of the wicked: they judge not the cause, the cause of the fatherless, yet they prosper; and the right of the needy do they not judge. Shall I not visit for these things? saith the Lord; shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?—Jeremiah 5: 25-29.

Also Isaiah 10: 1, 2:

Woe unto them that decree unrighteous decrees, and that write grievousness which they have prescribed; to turn aside the needy from judgment, and to take away the right from the poor of my people, that widows may be their prey, and that they may rob the fatherless.

Again we read:

Forasmuch therefore as your treading upon the poor, and ye take from the burdens of wheat: ye have built houses of hewn stone, but ye shall not dwell in them; ye have planted pleasant vineyards, but ye shall not drink wine of them. For I know your manifold transgressions and your mighty sins: they afflict the just, they take a bribe, and they turn aside the poor in the gate from their right.—Amos 5: 11, 12.

These texts, with many others, show plainly that the poor have their rights, and that it is the duty of some one to see that they get these rights. Whose duty is it? "The righteous considereth the cause of the poor: but the wicked regardeth not to know it."—Proverbs 29: 7. Isaiah 58: 1-12 tells us how God intends to have the poor taken care of. Ezekiel 16: 49 speaks plainly; hear him: "Behold, this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fullness of bread, and abundance of idleness was in her and in her daughters, neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor and needy." Just how we should "strengthen" the hands of the poor and needy is plainly revealed in a latter day revelation.

The Lord never changes nor forgets, so in modern revelation we find him championing the cause of the poor. In Doctrine and Covenants 38: 8 we find the Lord commanding that a certain number of men be appointed to search out the poor and needy. This was given because there had been no bishop appointed. Shortly afterward a bishop was given and he was designated as the one on whose shoulders the responsibility of taking care of the poor should rest. Doctrine and Covenants 41: 3. The next section (42) tells the bishop just how to proceed. Doctrine and Covenants 44: 3 again reiterates the command to take care of the poor and needy "until all things may be done according to my law." When all things are done according to God's law, like Enoch's city of old, there will be no poor amongst us. God does not want his people to be poor, and some day he will accomplish that which he designs.

Section 51 gives in detail just how the bishop is to proceed to enable him to carry out the principles of church government as enunciated in section 42. The same may be said of all other revelations given to the church. They are but exemplifications or enlargements of section 42. These revelations make the taking care of the poor, the retaining of their "just rights," that they get justice and equity, the burden and responsibility of the bishopric of the church. What quorum in the church to-day needs greater wisdom, more of the Spirit of the Master than this quorum, especially when we consider that to accomplish this stupendous work, the habit of a lifetime, the environments of centuries, the whole spirit of present day commercialism must change and give way to God's appointed plan. The bishops of the church can never succeed in carrying out this plan of properly taking care of the poor except the work of properly "transforming" is done by those on whom this duty rests—the missionary—presiding quorums. Thus, after all, the mighty responsibility rests on all of God's chosen servants.

THE BISHOP AT WORK.

BY BISHOP CHARLES HUNT.

How may a bishop present the law systematically? He has an opportunity to reach the people in various ways,—from the pulpit, by the fireside, and through the printed page. How can he best use these methods? In this article Bishop Hunt endeavors to answer these questions. His paper contains many practical suggestions.—Editors.

BISHOP C. J. HUNT, OF THE GALLANDS GROVE DISTRICT.

"As servants of the Lord we should keep the law of obedience before the people."

The principle of indoctrinating is very old. The Holy Scriptures give many examples of systematic teaching. The Great Teacher begins the account of creation by directing Moses to write: "Behold, I reveal unto you concerning this heaven and this earth; write the words which I speak. I am the Beginning and the End; the Almighty God. By mine Only Begotten I created these things."—Genesis 1: 1, 2. I. T. In the verses and chapters following, the great events are taken up in their order, from which we may learn lessons of how to better present the temporal law to the Saints in a systematic and impressive manner.

The speaker should be kind, full of faith, having charity for the young and the old, the rich and the poor; he should never carry the "blues" for distribution, but be cheerful, hopeful, always abounding in good works,"—a light to the Saints.

The following words of instruction on teaching, by the apostle to the Gentiles, should be carefully observed: "We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake."—2 Corinthians 4: 5.

Then as servants of the Master we should keep the law of obedience before the people, making no apologies for it, neither "accusing nor excusing" any, but in a kind, straightforward way present that which is our duty to teach; knowing that in complying with the temporal law we will bless the church and help to eradicate that soul-blighting, destructive spirit of selfishness, so much at variance to the gospel.

EPOCHS OR DISPENSATIONS.

It is well to impress every church member with the fact that there have been several gospel epochs since God said, "Let us make man." Saint Paul called the present epoch, "the dispensation of the fullness of times"; and the Seer of Palmyra was inspired of the Lord to write of our day, "It is the eleventh hour, and the last time that I shall call laborers into my vineyard."—Doctrine and Covenants 32: 1.

In the several epochs or dispensations we find that on the question of temporalities there were general laws which were binding on the Saints of God without exception. Then there were special or specific requirements of his followers, as found in the case of building the city of Enoch, which was taken to heaven (Genesis 7, I. T.); the erecting of Noah's Ark; the making of a portable tabernacle by Moses and the Israelites. It required, as usual, both faith and works to erect them, but the great blessings realized by those participating was glorious indeed, and the lessons to be learned from those narratives will produce strong incentives to-day "to be not hearers of the word (the law) only, but doers of it too."

The general law, called the tithe and freewill offering system, which belongs to the everlasting gospel in every dispensation, will, when fully observed, make it possible for the preaching of the word, the caring for the missionaries' families, and the worthy poor and needy of the church. (See Alma, chapter 10.)

FROM THE PULPIT.

Every Latter Day Saint should be taught that sermon delivered from the holy pulpit in heaven by the Lord, November 1, 1831, and recorded in the first section of the Doctrine and Covenants, which instruction was delivered to His church in this dispensation and with the same love and interest that was in "the sermon on the mount" in New Testament times. He said, "Hearken, O ye people of my church, saith the voice of him who dwells on high, and whose eyes are upon all men; . . . the rebellious shall be pierced with much sorrow, . . . and the voice of warning shall be unto all people, by the mouths of my disciples, whom I have chosen in these last days, and they shall go forth and none shall stay them."

What congregation of Saints would not be strongly impressed with a sermon introduced by the words of the Lord just quoted? The listeners would feel that they were being addressed personally, that the message to follow was for them, and then voicing the instruction of the Psalmist: "Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord, that delighteth greatly in his commandments," (112: 1) and who also said, "The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof; the world and they that dwell therein." Particularizing further he wrote, "For every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills."—50: 10.

We are only stewards, and should be made acquainted with the fact that the final crowning of this work by the Master depends on the church observing every command given by him, hence it is the imperative duty of those appointed to teach that part of the gospel called the temporal law, to so impress them with the necessity of bringing all their "tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house."—Malachi 3: 10.

The church has by action of General Conference decided that, "The word tithe, means tenth; and a rendition of a tithe referred to in the Bible, is the turning into the hands of the bishop appointed to receive the same, the tenth part of what a man has, over and above his indebtedness; or 'a tenth of the increase.'"

Yes, my fellow-workers, this church of which we are members, and should be tithepayers in, is the very one in succession from 1830, spoken to from that pulpit in heaven, declaring it to be "the only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth, with which I the Lord am well pleased, speaking unto the church collectively and not individually."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 5.

Now the Holy Scriptures bear faithful witness that Abraham, Jacob, and others observed and taught the temporal law, and that Jesus also commended and required the keeping of it when in missionary work here on earth. Would he not teach the same laws if he were here to-day? Yes. And it would be a part of your duty to faithfully observe it as long as you live. How comforting are the words, "I am the Lord, I change not," and how true their meaning and fulfillment has been to this church in every respect, the temporal as well as the spiritual, for it was only a few months after the organization of the church, in this last dispensation, when from that same pulpit on high this organization was directed to observe the law of tithes, freewill offerings, consecrations; and later that of surplus.

Are we observing those laws? Is the missionary arm of the church suffering? Are there fewer laborers in the great harvest field than should be?

Are the worthy poor still pleading for aid? Is the United Order of Enoch hindered from fulfilling its mission of charity, as designed of God, because the law of temporalities has not been fully complied with? If you have not heard it explained, send to the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, for a supply of reading matter on the subject and you will be favored at once.

BY THE FIRESIDE.

Saint Paul said: "Our conversation is in heaven."—Philippians 3: 20. Experience and observation has proven that one of the most successful ways to teach the greatness of the tithing law is in the homes of the Saints. In this way we can carry the blessed message of peace, assurance, and sympathy to them, and as a rule they will be reasoned with, instructed, and encouraged to do their duty. It is a good time and place to talk to them about the great gospel work, the blessings already received, the prospects and possibilities before us. But in doing this be sure to obey the Lord who said "be of good cheer," for the opposite breeds discouragement and final loss to the cause.

If the member you visit is not a subscriber to the church papers, help him make selection of one or more, so he can by reading of the onward march of the angel's message to the world, receive and enjoy intellectual food and spiritual life so very essential to the development and welfare of everyone. With the aid of the church papers it may be seen that the observance of the spiritual law pertaining to temporal things can be so much better understood, hence easier complied with than without such good help. If the one visited offered five dollars tithing, could not spare more, and is not a subscriber to one of our church papers, it is well to encourage him to enroll his name, deduct the price of the paper, then receipt for the balance.

BY PRINTED WORD.

Every bishop or agent in charge of a district, mission, or stake should issue a circular letter, sermonette, or booklet annually on church finances, mailing one to every Saint holding membership in his district, far and near inclosing a self-addressed envelope for reply. The branch clerks can, as a rule, furnish names and addresses; and the expense of printing, postage, etc., should be paid by the district or from the tithe and offering fund. Make the printed matter readable, as well as instructive, and it will be "like bread cast upon the waters," or as "seed sown upon good ground," bringing good returns in due time.

This was demonstrated by a local bishop who mailed about one thousand circulars or booklets, and in less than thirty days received church funds from Indiana on the east to California on the west, and one day's mail brought gifts for the Master's cause from members living in five different States, some of whom never had their names on the bishop's books before.

Yet, it pays to use the printed word to help educate the Saints to "lay up treasures in heaven," and to "seek first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness," (Matthew 6: 38 I. T.) for all must yet know that Jesus will not come to reign on the earth a thousand years, neither will the resurrection, the uniting of loved ones from heaven and from earth be until "this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."

Are you by withholding your tithes and offerings, helping to delay the Lord's coming and glorious reign on the earth? Do your duty. Do it now.

THE BISHOP; HIS CALLING AND WORK.

BY BISHOP J. A. BECKER, OF KIRTLAND, OHIO.

The average member of the average religious denomination, if asked to define the duties and calling of a bishop and support his definition by scriptural evidence, would be at sea. The Bible names the bishop but is silent as to his duties, as is the case with other officers that we might name. Those who "speak where the Bible speaks and are silent where the Bible is silent" must ignore these officers or else resort to a human definition of their duties. However, for those who believe in continued revelation there is still opportunity to learn the will of God in all matters. In this article Bishop Becker outlines the calling and work of a bishop as it is revealed to us.—Editors.

The gospel economy contains provision for the office of bishop; however, the Bible has but little to say about such official further than mentioning his existence. The apostle Paul mentions the bishop in writing to Timothy:

This is a true saying, If a man desire the office of a bishop, he desireth a good work. A bishop then must be blameless, the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober, of good behavior, given to hospitality, apt to teach; not given to wine, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre; but patient, not a brawler, not covetous; one that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity; (for if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?) Not a novice, lest being lifted up with pride he fall into the condemnation of the Devil. Moreover, he must have a good report of them which are without; lest he fall into reproach and the snare of the Devil.—1 Timothy 3: 1-7.

Also in writing to Titus:

A bishop must be blameless, as the steward of God; not self-willed, not soon angry, not given to wine, no striker, not given to filthy lucre; but a lover of hospitality, a lover of good men, sober, just, holy, temperate; holding fast the faithful word as he hath been taught, that he may be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers.—Titus 1: 7-9.

In these two quotations we have a brief statement as to the qualifications of a bishop. However, it is sufficient to prove to us that such an official existed in the church in the days of the apostles. If this "royal law," this "perfect law of liberty" contained such an officer, his work must then be essential to the salvation of mankind, that together with the other officials their work may make a perfect whole.

From such a brief description of the qualifications of a bishop, and with the utter silence as to his duties, it is not to be wondered at that some religious societies do not have such official in their organization, and that those that have retained the office are so divided as to his duties. It is but an added demonstration of the present necessity of receiving divine communication from him whom we are worshiping.

From the Catholic Encyclopedia we quote:

During the first three centuries the entire religious life of the diocese centered around the person of the bishop. The priests and deacons were his auxiliaries, but they worked under the immediate direction of the bishop.

Again from the same source:

The primitive Christian communities were administered by a college of presbyters; those of the presbyters who administered the finances were called bishops.

Again:

In his diocese, the bishop is judge in the first instance in all trials, civil and criminal, that pertain to the ecclesiastical tribunal.

McClintock & Strong, in their Cyclopedia of Biblical, Theological and Ecclesiastical Literature, have this to say of the New Testament use of the word bishop:

The apostles originally appointed men to superintend the spiritual and occasionally the secular wants of the churches.

They also present the thought that no difference of order existed between elders and bishops. The common definition given to the word bishop in the post-apostolic period was, "A church functionary superior to, and ruling over the elders or presbyters." The more modern definition, "A spiritual overseer ranking beneath an archbishop, and above the priests or presbyters and deacons of his diocese, but his jurisdiction is territorial, not personal."

One writer expresses the opinion that the office of bishop was brought into existence through the persecutions to which the early Christians were subject. His statement is this:

Times of persecution bring the strongest to the front, and that strong man would, at nearly every crisis, preside over his fellows. He would become their natural leader, and after a time their actual leader. A distinctive appellation was required to discriminate him from his colleagues, and gradually he monopolized the term overseer or bishop, leaving the humbler designation of presbyters or elders to his former equals.

In the light of the above, and when from the Scriptures it is evident that bishops were in the church, but their calling and duties merely hinted at, it is evident that we need light from a higher source than man. It is with pleasure and satisfaction that we point the reader to this light that has been given in response to the earnest desires of those who have been striving to walk in the paths of righteousness. A careful consideration of it, with a sincere desire for more light, will bring you the evidence that the word is from the Lord. Your love for God and your confidence in his promises will be increased.

HIS CALLING.

From the Doctrine and Covenants we quote:

I have called my servant Edward Partridge, and give a commandment, that he should be appointed by the voice of the church, and ordained a bishop unto the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 41: 3.

There remaineth hereafter in the due time of the Lord, other bishops to be set apart unto the church to minister even according to the first; wherefore they shall be high priests who are worthy, and they shall be appointed by the first presidency of the Melchisedec priesthood, except they be literal descendants of Aaron, and if they be literal descendants of Aaron, they have a legal right to the bishopric, if they are the firstborn among the sons of Aaron.—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 2.

The office of a bishop is in administering all temporal things: nevertheless, a bishop must be chosen from the high priesthood, unless he is a literal descendant of Aaron: for unless he is a literal descendant of Aaron he can not hold the keys of that priesthood. Nevertheless, a high priest, that is after the order of Melchisedec, may be set apart unto the ministering of temporal things, having a knowledge of them by the Spirit of truth.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 32.

From these quotations we get a clear conception of the calling of a bishop. He must be a high priest, thus holding the Melchisedec priesthood, unless he is a literal descendant of Aaron. He is to be appointed by the First Presidency of the Melchisedec priesthood. His calling is to preside over the Aaronic, or lesser priesthood, when no literal descendant of Aaron can be found.

HIS WORK.

The bishop is to be "set apart unto the ministering of temporal things." This seems to be his first and principal duty. "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul," says the Psalmist. James calls it "the perfect law of liberty." It includes provision for every need. Our heavenly Father, in order to develop us into perfect characters, has given laws to govern us in our temporal affairs, as well as the spiritual. The execution of these laws governing in temporal things is made the special duty of the bishopric as is revealed in the following: The temporalities of the church are to be under the charge and care of the bishopric, men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head acting for the church in the gathering, caring for, and disbursing the contributions gathered from the Saints of moneys and properties under the terms of tithing, surplus, free-will offerings, and consecrations.—Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8.

They are to gather, care for, and distribute the contributions of the Saints under the terms of tithing, surplus, free-will offerings, and consecrations.

Tithing, the tenth part of the increase.

Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people.—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5.

This is in harmony with the biblical evidence. Abraham "gave him (Melchisedec) tithes of all." (Genesis 14: 20.) Jacob also made a vow saying,

If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, so that I come again to my father's house in peace; then shall the Lord be my God: and this stone, which I have set for a pillar, shall be God's house: and of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee.—Genesis 28: 20-22.

In the days of Moses they observed this law.

And all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's.—Leviticus 27: 30.

Thou shalt truly tithe all the increase of thy seed, that the field bringeth forth year by year.—Deuteronomy 14: 22.

The Savior enjoined it upon his hearers in his day.

Ye tithe mint and rue, and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.—Luke 11: 42.

Malachi presents the thought in its serious aspect.

Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it.—Malachi 3: 8-10.

It is the especial duty of the bishop to see that this law is observed by the children of God. However, he can not assess them or deprive them of their property. Observance must be in harmony with the instructions of Paul.

Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver.—2 Corinthians 9: 7.

The giving should be prompted, not by the mere desire to be in harmony with the law, but by their great love for the Lord and his work. In fact, giving with any other motive would not be in harmony with the law.

Surplus, "Whatever amount or kind of property can be spared by any person without injury to his business, or impairing his stewardship, is under the law properly termed surplus. In other words, it is that part of man's properties which he has more than he has need." The observance of this law is a means of eradicating selfishness among God's children, and a step preparatory to the bringing about of equality among them, which condition must obtain before they can become perfect in their service. The Lord is long-suffering with his children, nevertheless he insists upon obedience as will be observed from the following:

I prepared all things, and have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves. Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

Free-will, consecration. The greater the love for the Lord the greater the desire to sacrifice for his cause. Therefore the Lord extends unto his children the further privilege of making a free-will offering or a special consecration out of what is left after the former duties have been observed. In the teaching and carrying out of these laws the bishop assumes a great responsibility.

How shall he distribute the contributions?

From Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2 we learned it is our duty to impart our portion "according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor and the needy." Part of the contributions, at least, are for the poor and needy, and it thus becomes the duty of the bishop to look after their wants. He is to "travel around about and among all the churches, searching after the poor, to administer to their wants by humbling the rich and the proud." (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 23.) He is to look after the wants of the missionaries.

(Doctrine and Covenants 60: 3, 72: 3.) Also his family, that the missionary may be free to wait upon his ministry.

In counsel with "other officers" the bishop is privileged to use the contributions with which he is intrusted, for the purchasing of lands, building of houses of worship, building up the New Jerusalem, and the gathering of the people. (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 6.)

In addition to these duties in temporal things the bishop also has duties in spiritual matters resting upon him. He is "to be a judge in Israel, to do the business of the church, to sit in judgment upon transgressors, upon testimony, as it shall be laid before him, according to the laws, by the assistance of his counselors." "Thus shall he be a judge, even a common judge among the inhabitants of Zion, or in a stake of Zion or in any branch of the church where he shall be set apart unto this ministry, until the borders of Zion are enlarged, and it becomes necessary to have other bishops, or judges in Zion, or elsewhere: and inasmuch as there are other bishops appointed they shall act in the same office." (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 32, 33.) His duties are great, and as a help and a safeguard he is given the assistance of two counselors, that together they may protect the interest of every child of God. He is privileged to receive divine assistance from above to aid him in the work intrusted to his care. We are made glad and our hearts rejoice when we realize the wonderful work of the Lord, the completeness of his organization, and the loving manner in which he directs his servants to carry on his work. It is a joy and a comfort to be enlisted in his cause.

Was it long ago, or was it but yesterday, that we prayed for strength to perform a certain duty, to bear a certain burden, to overcome a certain temptation, and receive it? Do we dream that the divine force was exhausted in answering that one prayer? No more than the great river is exhausted by turning the wheels of one mill. Put it to the proof again with to-day's burden, to-day's temptation. Thrust yourself further and deeper into the stream of God's power, and feel it again as you have felt it before, able to do exceedingly abundantly. Remember and trust.—Henry Van Dyke.

Pray and read and read and pray, for a little from God is better than a great deal from men. There is nothing that so abides with us as what we receive from God; and the reason why Christians at this day are at such a loss as to some things is because they are content with what comes from men's mouths, without searching and kneeling before God to know of him the truth.—John Bunyan.

BIOGRAPHICAL DEPARTMENT

Bishop George Lewis, of Australia. An Appreciation.

BY GOMER R. WELLS.

Readers of the "Herald" will be interested in hearing about our Australian bishop, Bro. George Lewis. We are fortunate in being introduced to him through Elder Gomer R. Wells, long-time missionary to Australia, and personal friend to Bishop Lewis.—Editors.

BISHOP GEORGE LEWIS, OF AUSTRALIA.

George Lewis, the first bishop of Australasia, was born of Welsh parents October 30, 1867, at Minmi, a coal mining suburb of New Castle, New South Wales, Australia, and he has resided in the New Castle District ever since. He was baptized by Elder Joseph Burton, at Wallsend, on the 28th of June, 1885, and three years later was ordained teacher and was serving in that capacity for the Wallsend Branch at the time we first met him.

After leaving school he chose the baker's trade, which he learned but had to abandon because of a physical tendency to asthma. He then turned to mercantile pursuits, learning all the intricacies of a large general store in Wallsend, and for years held a responsible position therein. Believing that he should launch out for himself he started a grocery and dry goods store about eight years ago at Wallsend, much to the regret of his employer. His large acquaintance with the miners, and his genial disposition, soon won for him a large trade, and he was in a fair way to get onto his feet financially when there occurred one of the biggest strikes that the coal-mining world has ever known. He was unable either to carry his customers through it or to stand the loss of trade sure to follow such inability, and he had to close up his business to satisfy his creditors.

Since that time he has devoted his time to his special work in the bishopric and doing such other ministerial work as opportunity presents, all of which keeps him busy.

He is the father of a large and bright family, mostly daughters, some of whom were of assistance in his store. Both he and his estimable wife belong to Latter Day Saint families and they remember the first missionaries sent by the Reorganized Church to Australia. One of the first things Brother and Sister Lewis decided to do when starting a home of their own was that they would endeavor to always provide a stopping place for the missionaries passing to and fro. They have lived up to this ever since, even in the midst of increasing family and business cares. Thus one of the qualifications for a bishop named by Paul in his first letter to Timothy,—“given to hospitality,” began early to be cultivated. We are pleased to say that the other qualifications mentioned by Paul are not wanting in the bishop of Australasia.

Our first remembrance of Brother Lewis dates back to one Sunday morning in August, 1893, a few days after Brother Kaler and the writer landed in Sydney. Brother George and his brother Dave came down from Wallsend, about a hundred miles to the north, to see the new missionaries. While out for a walk, he handed me a strange piece of paper which I afterward discovered was a pound note and was intended to pay my fare to Wallsend the following day with him as my guide. We stayed at his home and made the acquaintance of his relatives and the Saints of the district. Our relations were ever after most cordial. Brother Lewis inherited musical talent and was ever ready to “have a sing” from our song books. On January 1, 1900, I had the pleasure of ordaining him to the office of elder.

The General Conference of 1901 sent the Presiding Patriarch, the late Alexander H. Smith, to Australia and the Society Islands, there to assist the brethren in arranging their missionary work, and to ordain a bishop. The New South Wales district conference of that same year met during Christmas week at the new church at Wallsend. Brother Smith had not yet arrived. We knew he was in the islands, but knew not when he might reach our shores.

It was Sunday afternoon, December 29. The writer was presiding at a fellowship meeting, and the church was full. While the Lord's supper was being administered I saw a familiar face at the door. It was the long expected Patriarch. Bro. John Kaler was sitting near the entrance, and I shall never forget the beaming expression on his face as he arose and grasped the hand of Brother Smith, whom he had not seen for over nine years. And as I write these lines I can not but think those two brethren have lately met again, this time where parting shall be no more.

As soon as I could conveniently do so I announced that President Smith had arrived from the islands and was now in the audience. Sitting by me was Elder Walter J. Haworth, who had been called to the work of a seventy at the previous General Conference. At my request Brother Smith came forward and was spokesman in the ordination of Brother Haworth. The meeting was then turned to testimony, but it was very apparent that the Saints were anxious to make Brother Smith's acquaintance, and we soon brought the session to a close, with the request that no one should wait for a formal introduction, but all form into a line and each one introduce himself.

After the benediction an informal reception began. I had gone back of the stand to put away my books, and while doing so happened to glance over my shoulder at the pleasing scene and saw that Bro. George Lewis had just introduced himself and was standing with his hand still in Brother Smith's, having a few short words of conversation. There came to me this intelligence: "He (Brother Smith) is now shaking hands with the future bishop of Australia"; but I said nothing to anyone about it, preferring to wait for the fulfillment.

Elder Kaler, one of the presidents of the district, approached Brother Smith the next morning regarding the manner in which a bishop was to be chosen. "I suppose," said Brother Kaler, "that you will present a name to the conference?" "No," said Brother Smith, "I will expect you brethren to nominate and then I will consider it."

In the business session that followed, with Brother Smith in the chair, Elder Kaler arose and presented the name of Elder George Lewis for ordination to office of bishop, doing so according to spiritual direction.

After giving opportunity for further nominations and receiving none, President Smith arose with tears in his eyes and related how that on the yesterday while shaking hands with Brother Lewis the Spirit rested upon him and told him that this was the man he was to ordain to the office of bishop in Australia. He therefore had no hesitancy in concurring in the nomination, believing that the Spirit was directing the matter. We then felt it our duty to arise and bear testimony of the independent evidence that came to us at the same instant mentioned by President Smith.

The vote was unanimously in favor of the ordination, and on January 1, 1902, President Smith ordained Brother Lewis to the office of high priest and bishop, and also ordained the writer as his first counselor. On February 23, 1902, he ordained Elder J. D. Imrie second counselor; but he lived but four months and the writer continued to act alone as counselor for six and a half years, or until the last conference, Christmas, 1908, before leaving that mission. At the same conference Elders John Jones and George Stewart were ordained counselors to Bishop Lewis. As we write this we see from the Gospel Standard, of July, that Brother Stewart quite recently moved to New Zealand, which will probably mean another change in the bishopric.

Two important benefits resulting from the giving of a bishop to Australia were the unifying of the finances and the convenience of having an appellate court. Before this there were several agents, acting separately, and each reporting to the Presiding Bishop in America. If a weak district ran short there was a delay of months in getting assistance from the main treasury. That was changed after they were given a bishop for the mission, and they were not slow to appreciate the advantage. Now the surplus in a large and strong district goes promptly to help the small or weak one, through Bishop Lewis' agents. The Presiding Bishop has but one officer to deal with, which relieves his office somewhat.

Hence we conclude that there was divinity in the direction to send the Patriarch to that land to do that work, and it is apparent from the facts above related that the right man was put in the place. We saw him develop from a man of uncertain delivery in the pulpit into a forceful preacher. We were glad when we heard recently that he was devoting his whole time to his ministry, and we hope he will increase in wisdom and power for good to that mission. We consider it the next best field outside of America: The Saints number only about one thousand, yet they so carefully remember the treasury that the Presiding Bishop has seldom had to send them financial help, notwithstanding they often have droughts, to which the country is peculiarly subject, and were passing through a very long one when their bishop was called. They have not only supported the missionaries that have been sent over there and those who live there, but have helped pay the fare of nearly all who have returned.

The late Bro. John Wright, the bishop's agent who preceded Bishop Lewis in New South Wales, served the church nobly, and Brother Lewis received from him a neat and well kept set of books, due to the care of his assistant, Bro. C. S. McLaren.

A more thoughtful, devoted, and kind-hearted lot of Saints can not be found anywhere. They are worthy of the best helps in the way of better organization and missionaries that the church can give to them. We trust their mission will continue to thrive and maintain its place as one of the brightest jewels in the gospel crown of latter days.

A Group of Well-Known Bishops.

BISHOP RODERICK MAY.

Bishop Roderick May was born September 15, 1850, in the old Scotch city of Glasgow. He was baptized May 17, 1876, in the city of London, Ontario, and is still remembered by the Canadian Saints as one of the leading church men that have come from the London Branch. He was ordained to the office of bishop, April 21, 1900, having previously filled the offices of priest, elder, and high priest. He was chosen bishop of the Independence Stake at the time of its organization in 1901, and occupied in that position until the present conference year, at which time he was appointed to the British Isles. We have the following sentiment from the pen of Bishop May:

BISHOP RODERICK MAY.

"The people of the old church forgot the equality or union required by the laws of the gospel, the celestial kingdom, and were driven out of the land of Zion. They did not learn obedience in the things that God required of their hands, and finally the church was rejected as a church. (Doctrine and Covenants 102:1.) Now we have asked the Lord for revelations to direct us in temporal matters, and he has directed us to organize ourselves as he did the church in 1831. We are required to be united and equal according to the laws of the celestial kingdom; otherwise we will be cut off. No, God does not propose to establish an aristocratic church until he comes whose right it is to reign, nor an aristocracy among his people, and he has said, 'If ye are not one ye are not mine.'

BISHOP ELLIS SHORT.

Bishop Ellis Short was born April 18, 1848, at Freeland, in the Hoosier State of Indiana. He united with the church August 20, 1875, and was ordained to the office of bishop May 13, 1900, having previously acted as priest and elder. Bishop Short is treasurer of the United Order of Enoch at Independence, Missouri, and presents this plea in connection with the Order of Enoch:

BISHOP ELLIS SHORT.
(Spring River District.)

"For every one that feareth God and worketh righteousness, is accepted of him.' Now if we are accepted on account of righteous works, it follows that those who work approximately nearest the law of life will receive the greater commendation of our heavenly Father.

"I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise.' Doctrine and Covenants 81: 3. There could not be a more far-reaching and positive declaration made to the people than that. Are you certain that your service of obedience is 'binding' the Lord?

"See all of section 106, then examine yourselves. Section 42: 8 also furnishes and excellent foundation for self-examination, and in part we read as follows: 'If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me, and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, . . . and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me.'

"Have you observed the above enough to have the Lord 'bound' in our behalf; especially have we, since the United Order of Enoch has been organized? If not, can we claim the promises while the cries of the worthy poor can not be answered?"

BISHOP JOHN ZIMMERMANN.

BISHOP JOHN ZIMMERMANN.
(New York and Philadelphia District.)

Bishop John Zimmermann was born November 28, 1855, in Germany, and coming to the United States was baptized January 20, 1884, at Camden, New Jersey. He was ordained a high priest and bishop, April 15, 1905. He is a man of considerable ability as a financier and business organizer, and never hesitates to use his accumulated means in the interest of the church work. He is eminently a man of deeds and not of words, and so we have been unable to secure anything from his pen.

BISHOP MYRON C. FISHER.

Bishop Myron C. Fisher was born June 21, 1870, at Manti, Fremont County, Iowa. He united with the church August 4, 1878, at Shenandoah, Iowa. He was ordained bishop April 19, 1908, having previously acted as priest, elder, and bishop's counselor. He is bishop of the Massachusetts District.

BISHOP GEORGE P. LAMBERT.

Bishop George P. Lambert was born December 5, 1858, at Rock Creek, Illinois. He comes of an old Latter Day Saint family, being a brother to Joseph R. and Daniel F. Lambert. Early in life he united with the church, being baptized April 2, 1878, in the old city of Nauvoo. He was ordained to the office of bishop June 11, 1904, and has since acted as bishop of the Nauvoo District. Previously he had held the offices of priest, elder, and high priest. Bishop Lambert presents the following report of his work in the Nauvoo District:

"Our present year's work is in advance of any other. Not because times are better and money more plentiful, but because we are educating, as we believe, along right lines, and our brethren are developing in their love for God and his work. When we are fully converted and understand that

God desires us soul and body, spiritually and temporally, it is not a difficult matter to see that he wants us to work along both these lines; yes, often, in a real, substantial, materialistic manner. When we are once set about keeping 26, 1901, under the hands of Patriarch Alexander H. Smith, on the occasion of the visit of the latter to the South Sea Islands and Australia. He died April 18, 1909. He was a man of great integrity and honor and was one of the ablest men that the South Sea Islands Mission has produced. In a letter to the HERALD Editor, Joseph F. Burton bore this testimony to his character:

"He is an honorable man, a good Latter Day Saint. He was first baptized by Elder Paita, in 1871, and was again baptized by Elder Gland Rodger in December, 1873 upon hearing of the Reorganization under Joseph, the son, and has remained a firm, faithful member of the church until this day. And when it became necessary to place the little Evangelia under the ownership of one of the membership of the church, the advice of the leading merchants of Papeete was sought concerning the person best qualified to bear faithfully the responsibility of ownership under the French laws. Their reply was that Metuaore could be safely trusted as he had always proven himself an honorable man among them."

In the year 1901 Bishop Metuaore visited the United States and attended the General Conference. At that time he expressed the following sentiments through the columns of the HERALD:

"And oh, my beloved brothers, I have received very great pleasure indeed in all the good things (spiritually translated) which have occurred amongst the Saints, and in that way will the work of God become flourishing and the kingdom of God move forward when we stand upon the unshakable foundation—that is—Christ."

BISHOP C. A. PARKIN.

Bishop C. A. Parkin was born April 24, 1847, in Sheffield, England. He united with the church May 17, 1867, in Nevada. He was ordained bishop September 6, 1900. Previously he had occupied as priest and elder. Bishop Parkin bears this testimony:

"When I learned that I was to be a bishop, I made up my mind to decline, but I made it a subject of prayer, and the Lord confirmed the call to me in such an unmistakable way that I did not dare to decline. I am responsible for the use I make of my opportunity to prove my worthiness as a wise and faithful servant. My observations have been, that where the people have tried to make an honest effort to honor the law, God has been true to his promise to bless. It would make this effort too long to tell how the Lord has blessed me, but I do know that it pays (in more ways than one) to 'honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thine increase.' (Proverbs 3: 9.) The Northern District of California is in a prosperous condition, and I congratulate all who have made use of their opportunity."

BISHOP WILLIAM ANDERSON.

Bishop William Anderson, deceased, was born February 1, 1840, at Glasgow, Scotland. It will be seen by this that Glasgow has furnished us two of our bishops. He was baptized September 11, 1864, at Saint Louis, Missouri. He was a member of the Standing High Council from the time of its organization until his death. He was ordained bishop April 21, 1900, and acted as bishop of the Lamoni Stake until his death, March 4, 1911. Previously he had held various offices, including those of elder and high priest. On the occasion of his funeral Bro. Heman C. Smith bore this tribute to his character:

"I do not know whether all of you have observed it or not, but one of the chief characteristics of the life of William Anderson, that I have noticed, was his tenderness, his love, and his consideration in the home circle; to make it a place of peace, of happiness, of comfort, of joy. So far as I knew

CONSTIPATION.

Mr. E. D.—32 years a victim of this dreaded disease (claimed incurable) was actually cured by the use of three sacks of Klars Good Health Flour.

Constipation is the first step to bring on many other diseases. That is the reason your physician will investigate this important condition at once. Mothers innocently give the baby white flour boiled, commonly called "Pap" in the morning. This will starch the stomach and bowels just the same as it will your laundry or the wall paper. When evening comes the poor mother will say, "Oh, my, but the baby was restless. I must give it a big dose of castor oil or something to assist Nature." Mothers, stop and think. Do not be so thoughtless, always remove the cause. If your baby is restless, let me help you Free of Charge. I love children too much to see the little ones abused and whirled into a premature death. Constipation among wild animals is unknown, likewise with domestic animals if fed properly.

PROPHECIES.

The Lamoni reunion of 1911 was pronounced by many one of the best reunions ever held in the Lamoni Stake. The prayer meetings were spiritual feasts, the Spirit being manifested in an unusual degree. The following prophecy was given to the Saints by the Spirit through Apostle J. W. Wight at the morning prayer service of August 25:

Yea, thus sayeth the still, small voice of the Spirit—that Spirit that pierceth the soul, that comes as a comforter, sent to the people of God, promised by the Son of God as a comforter—saying to my people, I have come to you in special enduing power during the sessions of this reunion, and had my people been more faithful, more humble, I could have exercised greater power among you, and your lives would have been made to rejoice even more.

This special endowment has come to give unto my people a foretaste of what it means to dwell in Zion, and to help you to make the needed preparation for that great event. Oh, in pleading with you this morning, my people, will you from henceforth make greater effort and seek to overcome more of your own follies, foibles, and weaknesses, and to heed the injunction given thee? More especially will the young of my people, hearing, give heed to my voice and to my pleading, and forget not. Go not away and turn again to the follies of the world. Let all my people cease their bickerings, their strife, their backbiting, their follies. Overcome these weaknesses. Cease to be jealous one with another. Seek to please God in all that you do and say, forgetful as to whether it shall please man or not; but seek to be examples of that life lived by your Master so long before you as an evidence of the attainment that my people may be permitted to reach.

Your Father has sent forth his Spirit this morning to witness unto your souls, to give you comfort and consolation, and has spoken to one of the handmaids of the church for special reasons, to give her encouragement in the hour of need, and now speaks to one and all, that inasmuch as you give heed to the injunctions of the voice of that Spirit, that still small voice that comes in the very hour of need, if you will but prepare for it, now speaks to you, and again admonishes to be faithful, be diligent, be earnest, be prayerful; overcome the temptations and trials of life; seek to build characters for God, so that in the day of preparation, you may really be among the number that shall see Jesus; and diligently strive that you may be with the faithful, having made the necessary preparation to meet your God.

Oh, will my people hear the pleading of my voice, and live more humbly, more faithfully? And then will the blessings be poured out more and more, and there will come to you that comfort, that consolation that nothing else can bring. Thus saith the voice of the Spirit. Amen.

The following was given through Bro. John Smith at the afternoon prayer meeting on Sunday, October 1, 1911:

I say to thee, Brother Berve, thy heavenly Father has brought thee to this place to take this position. Thou art called upon to be among my people. I know it is a trying one, but if thou wilt be faithful and diligent, I will be with thee and bless thee. Thou shalt be a father to my young people. Fear not what may come to thee: I will be thy help and thy strength. I know of thee and what thou wast capable of doing among my children, and this is as much a part of thy work in my ministry as preaching the gospel, and I will bless thee in all thy ministerial service among my people. Thou hast been troubled with many discouragements, but I will be with thee.

Therefore, I admonish thee, in all these trying conditions that will come to thee, from time to time, to cultivate that patience which is necessary to enable thee to become successful in thy work. Go to thy secret chamber frequently, and I will listen to thy prayers, and my Spirit shall rest upon thee, and I will bless thee among my people in all thy work.

Be not afraid of those who may be jealous of thy success. Therefore, fear not; but let thy heart be cheered and thy soul be glad; for thy heavenly Father will be thy friend indeed.

And unto you, my Saints, our Father says to you, It is pleasing to me for you to gather together in my service. I have spoken to you of late by the manifestations of my Holy Spirit, as I am doing in the gatherings of my people in many places. This is the hastening time, when troubles and distress and turmoil and strife are abroad in the land, and it is nearing the time when my people desire to gather together, and this is the reason that my Spirit rests upon them, and they are longing everywhere, from the farthest parts of the earth, that are in my gospel, to gather unto the land of Zion; but they can not be gathered unless they are individually prepared as well as the church, according to my commandments.

Let us not forget that our Father has said in the revelations to his church, It must be done in mine own way. No other way can I accept but that which I have revealed in my law for the good of my people, and under no other condition or circumstances can that equality be brought about that you so earnestly sought for and hope for, and many are longing to understand and participate in.

Therefore I will pour out my Spirit, not only upon the membership of my church, but upon my ministry also, so that they will be better able to unfold the true interpretations of my law and commandments for the salvation of my people, for the glory of my truth, and for the well-being of Zion. Therefore, I say unto you, my children, be faithful, be patient, be prayerful; shun the things that are a sin in my sight, and nothing shall prevent you from overcoming in your warfare against sin, and my blessings shall fall upon you like a benediction from heaven, so that as a people you shall rejoice in my truth and be mine if you are faithful to the end. Amen.

OBEDIENCE TO CIVIL LAW REQUIRED BY CHURCH COMMANDMENT.

If there is any people, existing in the United States, or anywhere else for that matter, where statute law exists in defining rules of conduct, we should be obedient to existing laws, the Latter Day Saints are clearly of that number; nor is any class of believers in "Mormonism," using that term to signify the faith and practice instituted by command of God, April 6, 1830, exempt from this obligation. Obedience to the law was enjoined upon the church by divine commandment through revelation which was credited and adopted by the church in solemn assembly.

"Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land." This is clear, plain, and explicit, and so far as we know has never been repealed. The statutory laws of the United States are all based upon the law, usually called the English common law. This law has its original basis in the commandment uttered long, long ago, found in the sentence inscribed on the table of stone, "Thou shalt not kill." The perpetual penalty for permitting the crime of shedding human blood is found in the brief sentence, "Whosoever sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed."

The attention of the citizens is daily called to scenes of injury and murder, inflicted upon men by others, which comes under the inhibition which we have just recorded, "Thou shalt not kill." The heart of the good man is wounded every day in contemplating the sad catalogue of suffering and evil, including the shedding of blood, inflicted by men upon their fellows, neither age nor sex being immune from the execution of this cruelty.

Our attention was notably called to an instance which occurred not many weeks in Nebraska, the result of which has been the blighting of the lives of six persons, besides inflicting grief and sorrow upon a wide circle in the community. The story runs something like this. Two young men were paying attention to a young woman. One of these young men apparently was a favored suitor; the other was not. The young woman was displeased with the attentions of one, and desired he should cease paying them, feeling herself persecuted by them. Notwithstanding his attentions displeased the young woman, he did not desist from forcing himself upon the young woman's attention. This condition of things coming to the knowledge of the favored suitor seemed to call for his interference. He felt called upon to put a stop to these obnoxious attentions to the woman he loved. Instead of making an appeal to the protection of the law, either by advising the young woman to make complaint before proper authorities or to permit him to do so, he secured the assistance of three other young men about his own age, and proceeded unlawfully to take this importunate suitor from his home, and hung him to his death.

It appears that two of the young men who assisted the favored suitor to thus stop the attentions of the one complained of, reflecting upon what they had done went before legal authority and made a statement of the affair. The enormity of the crime which the four young men had committed did not seem to be realized by these young men. They appeared to think it was a correct action, to stop the obnoxious pursuit of the young woman.

The attention of the authorities having been called to the crime which had been committed, the two young men who gave the information were placed in custody and the principal and other accomplice were arrested, and the whole four placed in confinement. A warrant was issued for the young woman as a possible accomplice before the act and the whole were arraigned before the court. It was a greivous crime, and when the enormity of the deed which they had done dawned upon these young men, regret and remorse began their work, and in sadness and sorrow, resulting from confinement, and the shadow of the jail or the gallows their constant recurring mental inquiry was: Why, why did we do it?

The end was inevitable. When arraigned before the court by due process of law, these four young men pled guilty to murder in the second degree, and were sentenced to imprisonment for life. The young woman was not held as an accomplice before the fact, and she was dismissed from the court. When facing the dread inquiry of justice instituted by the court, no plea of justification could be made by these men. They had taken the life of a fellow-being. They had done so apparently without thinking that they were doing anything more than a proper action of defense by which a woman was protected from an obnoxious suitor.

By what peculiar process of conversation and reasoning these four young men, just starting in the activities of life, were made to take common cause which deprived a fellow-being of their own age in years from the opportunities and privileges of the life which now is, and ended his life by a disgraceful death, will not be known until these young men themselves set it down for their fellow-men to read.

Our object in reciting the foregoing story which has lately been written upon a page of history in action is to call attention of the Saints to the terrible consequences of too lightly holding our allegiance to the laws of the land. It would seem, that if any one of these four young men had thought seriously for a single moment of the terrible deed which must have been suggested and talked over among them, before it was done by them, it would have aroused the latent understanding of all, that they were putting themselves into the dark shadows of the penitentiary or the gallows, and that the deed would surely result in their punishment.

Here are the lives of six persons ruined. One life is blotted out, that of the unfortunate suitor: one is sent out from the court with a weight of regret and sorrow which will last her all her life, no matter how long or short that life may be, and that by no fault of her own: four other young men, with lives just opening upon the opportunities and activities of life, are shut in confinement, virtually cutting them off from human associates in the darkness of the jail and the dungeon. Who will say but what the imprisonment for life with these young men is almost the fate which the young man met at their hands. Think of it, young men who read the HERALD, and when tempted by fancied or real insult or injury as a cause, be sure that your thoughts are right and will bear the scrutiny of the Just One who in the meridian of time reiterated to his apostles the commandment of his Father uttered in the morn of time, "Thou shalt not kill"; and subsequently when reviving his work, in these last days, by his Spirit again placed the divine sanction upon the rightness of the statutes of men, providing the penalty in the sentence, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed," reiterating as if from the thunders of Sinai, "Thou shalt not kill."

All lesser obligations of the law should be kept by the Saints, that when the end shall come, and all have to answer, we may be able to say not only that we have "kept the faith," but that we have kept the law and our lives bear testimony.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

MISTAKE.—Some little time ago we received a letter from Bro. G. T. Griffiths, of some six or seven pages. When our assistant copied this letter it was discovered that page five was gone, whether it was lost after reaching us we were unable to discover. This was annoying, to say the least, and all we could do was to bridge the hiatus as well as our knowledge of the situation permitted, and thus publish it. It appears from a letter from Brother Griffiths that this accident has embarrassed him somewhat in his references to the work in the British Isles. For this we are sorry indeed, and herewith make apology for whatever blame attaches to the editors as a result.

SAINTS RECOGNIZED.—From a late press item we note a dedication of the Logan, Iowa, courthouse, to take place November 3. We are pleased to note that among those who are to have a part in the speech making are a number of our members: S. B. Kibler, Woodbine; A. M. Fyrand, Magnolia; Joseph Seddon, Sidney Pitt, Persia; and J. C. Crabb, Little Sioux. We wish to commend the Saints of Harrison County for the upright conduct and good citizenship which merit such recognition on the part of the county at large.

A FAVOR DENIED.—A brother in writing in regard to a correction he desires us to make in conference minutes sent by him, refers to the report "which I had especially requested might be inserted in HERALD of the 11th inst., a favor that was denied those interested." Now we wish to call attention to the fact that there is no disposition on our part to deny any favors within our power to extend whenever requested. It is often true that we are unable to do so. We want to be impartial. Conference minutes from the various districts are equally important and are used as soon as possible. We do not recall the particular request referred to by the brother, but in all likelihood the minutes were received too late for insertion, or for copying and insertion, because we have to copy on the typewriter the greater part of our material, and copying requires time. In this connection we wish again to call attention to the fact that "good copy" will always stand the best show for early use in the HERALD—quite naturally.

Under date of September 9, Brother Pitt writes from Geelong, Australia, saying that he is enjoying his work in Australia and meeting with good success. His address is care of Standard Office, Darling street, Roselle, New South Wales, Australia.

NORTH PHILADELPHIA INSTITUTE.—From Brother Walter W. Smith we receive a column article clipped from a Philadelphia paper concerning the institute or Bible school held under the auspices of the Reorganized Church at that place. It gives a brief outline of the history of the school and commends the work done there. The schedule for the coming months is given, as also the names of the board of managers. We quote:

"Night classes have been maintained for some time. In 1909 the Daily Vacation Bible School was added for children under fourteen years of age. The Women's Auxiliary conducted evening classes for girls during fall and winter of 1910. The same fall the Young Men's Association opened reading rooms and gymnasium with night classes for both girls and boys. With the growing demand has come a number of persons with college training volunteering to teach, and the offer of the Saints' Church of its basement, gymnasium, and school rooms for this purpose, so that there is offered to the student a wide range of work, including both the elementary and college preparatory subjects in a well-equipped institution.

The school is nonsectarian, being open to all without regard to church affiliation." Brother Smith writes that they have enrolled about two hundred students.

ANNIVERSARY AT PORT ELGIN.—From handbill sent us we learn of the celebration of the tenth anniversary of the Port Elgin, Ontario, Branch, to be held Sunday, November 12, Bro. F. A. Smith to be the principal speaker. The church is one and a quarter miles south of Port Elgin. Saints and friends are cordially invited to come, and they will be cared for by the branch.

SOUTHERN INDIANA CONFERENCE.—The Courier-Journal of October 22 contains a picture of the meeting place of the Saints in Louisville and a write up of the conference recently held there.

SAINT MARYS, ONTARIO.—The Saint Marys Journal of October 16 has a history of the Saint Marys Branch and an account of the reopening of their church, which has undergone extensive repairs. The distinction between us and the Utah Church was clearly made as follows: "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints who are a distinct and separate body of people from the Salt Lake, or Utah Mormons, who are improperly called Latter Day Saints." We hope to reproduce the entire article in an early number.

WOODS' LECTURES.—Bro. Solomon Tripp, Fort Madison, Iowa, has taken a Mr. Woods (a lecturer against Mormonism who has been occupying at that place) to task for certain statements regarding the Prophet Joseph Smith, and publicly challenges him to prove his assertions. Brother Tripp has the correction and challenge printed in the Daily Madisonian.

THE CHRISTIAN STANDARD.—One O. P. Burris, Thomas, Oklahoma, writes to the Christian Standard that the Mormons have undermined the work of the Christian Church at the town of Weatherford, Oklahoma. We are in doubt as to whether he means our church or the Utah Church. He calls for assistance in cash, and wants "some one to volunteer to come here and chew up these Mormon elders." The gentleman shows a resentful disposition. In a later issue we note that one Williams, of Joplin, is notified to make collections, as Reverend Boles is to be sent to Thomas to take care of the Mormons, and one R. E. Snodgrass insists on Reverend Boles being sent and expects to drive the Mormons out of the country. Bro. C. M. Wilder, Logan, Iowa, writes us regarding a debate soon to take place there between Bro. S. W. L. Scott and this same Rev. W. H. Boles. The discussion begins Tuesday, October 31, and is to be held in the Christian church. Reverend Boles seems to be a very busy man.

October's Tapestry.

By the mountain stands October,
Like a weaver brown and old;
For his warp he uses sunbeams—
Threads of palpitating gold;
And the loom spread out before him
Is the forest dim and green.
While his shuttle plying swiftly,
Is the wind of autumn keen.

For his woof he chooses colors—
Amethyst and purple lost
In the blue of smoke and shadows,
In the gray of early frost;
Vivid carmine, saffron, amber;
Faded tints the summer left;
Mauve and lilac softly blended—
All these form October's weft.

All day long I hear the music
Of his shuttle and his loom;
All day long I watch him weaving
Till the stars begin to bloom.
And the figures of his fabric,
As each day they brighter grow,
Seem the forms and flow'r-like faces
Of the Junes I used to know.—Alice E. Allen.

A Song of October.

Ho! October is fast coming,
Ever blithe, and ever gay—
For I saw his roving footprints
In the meadows yesterday;
Flame of sumac he had kindled,
Golden tracks traced in and out,
Through the woodlands and the marshes,
And the little streams about.

Over uplands and on hillsides,
Plumes of gorgeous goldenrod
Shimmer in the molten splendor
Shining down on sand and sod;
And in shady, woodland passes
Autumn leaves are softly falling
To the rhythm of the grasses—
Of chirping crickets calling.

In the tawny fields are gleaming—
Oh ripe and round and yellow—
Pumpkins, like a gold moon-beaming—
Through tang of apples mellow
From the rich expanse of orchards
Where the boughs are hanging low
With their red and golden fruitage
In the summer's afterglow.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

THE STEADY LICKS COUNT.

The Men and Religion movement does well to recognize the value of publicity as an aid to its work of evangelization, but it, no more than any other sane enterprise, should build upon the boom basis. Not the splurge, but the steady licks, is what it is counting on in its own efforts for results. That is what will count more, too, in the help it gets from the public prints. No serious effort of any kind may safely depend upon the spasmodic burst, the impulsive gust of enthusiasm for its success or highest achievement. The movement under discussion was foresighted enough to provide for the conservation of its resources and results. That gives it character, which some other kindred enterprises have lacked, but conservation and monthly booms do not go together.—Omaha Bee.

A QUESTION IN ETHICS.

By a majority of the members of the First Baptist Church Bible class [Philadelphia], it was decided that the telling of a lie is sometimes justifiable. The discussion of the question, "Is a lie ever justifiable?" was participated in by the members, and sharp differences of opinion developed.

The Rev. F. L. Hardy, pastor of the church, and teacher of the class, related that his mother came near dying recently, and his physicians advised him to cable for his sister, at Honolulu. When Mrs. Hardy heard her daughter was coming, she asked the minister if he had sent a cable. The minister said he did not lie outright, but he admitted that he evaded the question in such a way that he might as well have lied in a straightforward manner.

The class agreed that the action of the minister in failing to tell the truth was justified.—Press item.

INDIANS TO HOLD CONGRESS.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 8.—Final preparations for the opening of the convention of the American Indian Association here Thursday were made to-day. In the convention for the first time in the history of the American Indian, representatives of all the tribes will gather to act for the common weal.

The initial meetings Thursday will be for the delegates only, and plans for the formation of a permanent association will be made. A public meeting will open the convention, at which addresses of welcome by Dr. W. O. Thompson, President of Ohio State University, and Governor Judson Harmon are scheduled, with others by many distinguished statesmen and Indian leaders.

Many efforts have been made to establish an Indian association, but never before have the Indians attended in a body and with every existing tribe represented. The majority of the Indians attending are professional or business men. Among those to speak are Charles E. Dagenett, Federal Supervisor of Indian Employment, Denver, Colorado; A. C. Parker, New York State Archaeologist, and General R. H. Pratt, founder of the Carlisle Indian Institute.—Press item.

A CHINESE REBELLION.

The Chinese rising has become the Chinese rebellion. The Outlook has chronicled the rising in Szechuan, the westernmost province of China proper. Last week the rising spread eastward down the Yangtze Valley into the adjacent province of Hupei, the capital of which, Wuchang, together with the adjacent cities of Hankow and Hanyang, fell into the hands of the rebels. The chief cause of the rising is the long cherished desire on the part of the Chinese to overthrow the power of the Manchu dynasty at Peking. About three hundred years ago the Chinese called in the Manchus—a warlike race—from their home in Manchuria to assist in suppressing internal troubles which threatened the overthrow of the Ming dynasty. Their work done, the Manchus refused to withdraw from the country, but proceeded to conquer it for themselves, and in 1644 proclaimed the son of their own ruler as the first emperor of a new dynasty: a tenth emperor of that dynasty now reigns. To their credit be it said that the Manchus have endeavored to rule on Chinese lines of polity and have made many efforts to conciliate the natives, especially in abstaining from appointing Manchus to office; a few years ago it was stated that of the nearly one hundred and fifty officials then forming the emperor's supreme government, only one-fifth were Manchus. Despite this, however, the two peoples have existed side by side with more or less of clashing; in the Yangtze Valley and south of it there has always been unrest and resentment, now tragically emphasized by the massacre of Manchus at Hankow. At the present time there is also resentment against the high cost of living, and especially against those who have profited thereby; there is also some opposition to the building of the Yangtze Valley railways by means of foreign capital, and a convenient forgetfulness that half the local capital originally collected for that purpose was squandered. But, compared with the anti-Manchu feeling, antiforeign feeling is slight. This is seen in the fact that the Revolutionary Committee has threatened to behead anyone who attacks a foreigner. While this should reassure other nations, it may have a sinister significance to the Imperial Government at Peking, for it would indicate that the rebellion is better organized than was supposed. Other Chinese outbreaks have generally meant wholesale rioting, in which the lives and property of foreigners were in danger. But, in proportion as the leadership of revolt is intelligent, its suppression is all the harder. And latest indications lead us to suppose that the present rising is the most important since the Taiping Rebellion, fifty years ago.—The Outlook.

CANADA'S INDIAN POLICY.

The Indian policy of the Canadian Government was inherited from the British procedure in the American colonies. The reserve system appeared at the earliest, and there was but little difference between the policy of the French and British in Canada, except that with the French the evangelization of the Indian was an important feature. Thus, in 1867, when the Dominion Government took over the administration of Indian affairs, there was a certain well established policy. In the Maritime Provinces and Quebec the Indians had received grants of land—or reservations; and in Ontario the Indian titles had been surrendered by treaty for a consideration in land and money. The first of these treaties had been made by Governor Haldimand in 1784.

In earlier times the untamed and warlike nature of the Indians was a real menace to the colonization and development of the country; but now this nature seems as a fire that is waning; it is being displaced by the principles of Christian conduct and civilized manners and customs.

But even in his most uncouth and savage condition, he was unspoiled by the white man's arts of sly lying, paltry cunning, and low vices. He believed in the sacredness of treaty promises. Whatever has been written down and signed by king and chief both will be bound by so long as "the sun shall rise and set." This trait of the Indian character has been taken advantage of by British and Canadian Governments, and the Indian made a friend and ally by treaties judiciously made and sacredly kept.

This treaty policy so well established previous to the Act of Confederation going into effect in 1867, has been continued, and nearly all Canada is covered by these Indian treaties and surrenders. A map colored to show the territories affected by these treaties would make Ontario look like a patchwork quilt; and the patches lie edge to edge westward and northward to the confines of the new provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta.

We give the terms of the last treaty made with the Indians of Ontario, when in 1905, 90,000 square miles in the northern part of the province around James Bay was surrendered, as a sample of the policy of the Dominion Government in dealing with the Indian. Eight dollars was paid at once to every man, woman, and child; then ever after, "so long as grass grows and water runs," each person was to receive four dollars each year; they were to receive reserves of one square mile to every family of five or in like proportion; schools were to be provided for their children; and the chief was to receive a flag.

Thus the Canadian Government becomes a "father to the Lamanites" and they as wards of the Government are educated, settled upon homes of their own, and receive their yearly allowances. This is a policy that has been of advantage to Canada as a whole, and tends to lift the Indian to a higher and nobler plane in life, preparing him for the time when the "Lamanite shall blossom as the rose."

CHATHAM BRANCH AND DISTRICT.

The Sunday school, Religio, and Willing Workers of Chatham Branch are progressing. The church services are largely attended, and within the last month five have been added to the church through baptism. Two babies were blessed.

The reunion at Erie Beach, August 5 to 14, was a success. The village of tents was very attractive and unique. Many outsiders heard the gospel on Sunday. They were mostly friends of the Saints who came out on the trolleys from Chatham, Wallaceburg, and other places.

Arrangements are being made for the fall conference to be held at Chatham, October 14 and 15. A mission will be conducted afterwards. The interior of the church is now being decorated and painted. Everything is being done to make the conference a success.

Sister Badder, from Wabash, Ontario, was visiting with Chatham Saints for a couple of days. She was introducing the work of the Woman's Auxiliary and endeavoring to effect an organization here. The work is much needed and its aims are pure and practical. Judging from what we have read and heard, it will bring about better conditions among God's children by bringing the sisters into closer unity and Christian fellowship. It is to redeem and reclaim the erring and negligent ones. It is also to bring about better conditions in the home of every Saint, to eliminate evil speaking and gossip, which have a tendency to wound or be unkind. One of the aims is to help the mothers learn how to bring up their boys and girls to be both moral and spiritual, and also to establish truer parenthood, happier homes, and purer society. One of the leading objects of the organization is mutual benefit through increased love of home, which will lead us to educate our children in the principles of the gospel, thus preparing them to resist the evils of the world and become active agents for good. The organization seeks to promote social purity and to lead the sisters to realize the great responsibility of motherhood, that they should be mothers indeed, guardian of the interests of not only their own children, but also the children of others, and extending the helping hand to win erring ones back to the paths of righteousness.—E. CHURCH UNION.

The progress of church union in Canada is interesting and suggestive. Thirty years ago the different sections of the Presbyterian Church were united, and to-day nearly the whole of Presbyterianism is ranked under one banner. Eight years later the Methodist, the Methodist Episcopal, the Primitive Methodist, and the Bible Christian churches came together as the Methodist Church, which, with very few exceptions, embraces the entire Methodism of Canada. The Baptists are also one body, and have never been separated, as they are in the United States and other lands. The denominations are therefore practically one among themselves, and this argues well for the wider union now considered by the Presbyterians, Methodists, and Congregationalists.—Rev. J. P. Gerrie, in Review of Reviews, vol. 31, p. 720.

WHAT THE CHURCHES SAY OF GRAFT.

The Presbyterian Church, the Anglican Church, the Methodist Church, these in the last few weeks, [This article was published October 3, 1907.] at their respective conferences in Canada, have declared strongly and unequivocally against the corruption—political, social, moral, and commercial—in Canada.

At a meeting of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, held in Montreal recently, G. M. Macdonnell, K. C., a leading Kingston lawyer, declared in effect that "the national curse of Canada to-day is graft, not intemperance," and that "the people of Canada were no longer an honest race."

At the Anglican Synod, in Toronto, the following resolution was adopted: "That it is the conviction of this synod that a great purification of politics, financial, social and business methods in this country is imperatively demanded to-day, and that the church, her bishops, clergy and laymen should take a leading part in the immediate improvement of the present deplorable state of affairs."—W. R. Givens, in Independent, vol. 63, p. 804.

THE INDIAN RACE NOT BECOMING EXTINCT.

The theory that the Indian race is waning into limbo along with the dodo and the bison is a theory that will die even harder than the Indian. It is impossible that the race should ever expect much influence again on American life; it is probable that it will gradually be absorbed into the national life by intermarriage and education. But for the present, the Indian population is generally accepted as at worst stationary. There are many grounds for believing that there are more Indians living in America to-day than there were when Columbus landed. The wild exaggerations natural to the excited and terrified pioneers were too long accepted as truth. As a matter of fact there were vast tracts of territory which the Indians never traveled. The very necessities of the hunt made a crowded civilization impossible. They lived in small and widely isolated tribes. Famine was their bitterest foe, and their legends are full of the ravages it made in their numbers. Starvation, pestilence, and inter-tribal war kept down their numbers long before the white man's gun startled the forest.—Historians' History of the World, vol. 22, p. 503.

RALLY DAY AT VANCOUVER, B. C.

The British Columbia Saints had a very successful rally at Vancouver on Sunday, October 8. Saints from New Westminster, Clayburn, and Nanaimo were present. The order of meetings was as follows: Prayer, testimony, and sacrament meeting at 11 a. m., Sunday school at 2 p. m., preaching at 3 p. m. and 7.30 p. m. A goodly degree of the Spirit was enjoyed in the morning meeting. There were eight prayers, twelve testimonies, and a few words of admonition from the Spirit, telling the Saints to lift up their heads and rejoice. And they did rejoice, for it would be hard to find a happier band of Saints anywhere. Success does not always depend upon the number present; but numbers meant something to the Saints of Vancouver, because for years they have had to struggle along with the ones and twos. In fact, Elder I. McMullen has had the distinction of preaching to a congregation of one. Is it any wonder that they felt glad to see so many present?

We are pleased to report that our numbers are increasing though not from baptisms, but from Saints moving here from other branches. We were glad to meet for the first time Brother and Sister Elliot, from the South Salford Branch, England; also Brother Kettlewell, from Longwood Branch, Ontario; and at the time of writing, Brother and Sister Bagnell, of the London, Ontario, Branch, have arrived. Brother Bagnell has lately been ordained a deacon, and London's loss will be our gain.

The Saints are very much pleased that Sr. Mabel Clark has returned to Vancouver again.

Patriarch Ammon White was the speaker at the rally, both afternoon and evening, and his sermons were very much enjoyed. Brother White has done good service for the church since coming here some months ago, having preached every Sunday in Vancouver in the afternoon, and at New Westminster in the evening. The Saints will be sorry when he leaves. He will leave the Saints in a better condition and will be kindly remembered.

The success of the rally did not depend entirely on one individual, for everybody seemed willing to do all he could. Brother Reid had charge of the singing; Sister Muir, of Nanaimo, presided at the piano; Priest Hartnell, of Weyburn, assisted Brother White in the afternoon, and Elder I. McMullen in the evening.

Refreshments were prepared for all at Elder McMullen's and between meetings a nice social time was had and much singing indulged in, which made it a very happy and busy day.

Babyhood. Supplementary Reading.

While our boy has a happy disposition he is not a particularly easy child to manage. As a consequence he furnishes much more educational material than if he never made any trouble at all. . . .

Our first great problem came from a habit, acquired in the first three weeks of the baby's life—finger sucking. It did not seem as though a habit could become very permanently fixed in so short a time, but our boy at that early age showed one of his prevailing characteristics—that of becoming firmly fixed in his ways and then being very hard to change. This, of course, has taught us to be very careful of the first things; that is, we must not allow him to do once what we do not want him to continue doing. With some children it may do to make exceptions; with this child only that which is to be regularly allowed should be permitted at any time.

To go back to our first problem, however. At three weeks we started to break him of the finger sucking habit, thinking that it would only be a matter of a week or so. We devised methods for keeping his fingers away from his mouth, tying his arms by ribbons to the side of his bassinet, putting on fuzzy mittens, making the sleeves of his nightdresses long and closed at the end.

We watched him when awake to take the fingers out of his mouth whenever they strayed to it. At four months, according to the record, if I would touch his sleeve without exerting any force, he knew what I wanted and took his fingers out of his own accord. The first lesson in obedience was thus learned very early in life. In a very short time he learned the meaning of the tones of my voice when I would say, "Bruce, take your fingers out of your mouth," for he obeyed the spoken command with no movement on my part to show him what I meant. Finally, if I just said "Bruce!" in a reproving way, he would obey, showing that he knew that what he was doing was not allowed. Sometimes he would smile mischievously and keep them in a few seconds, but eventually they were removed.

It seemed as though we had conquered the habit, when his teeth began to bother him a little, and then the desire for his fingers returned with overwhelming force. This called for redoubled energy on our part. We tried dipping his fingers in aloe, but the bitter taste did not seem particularly objectionable. The only effective method is for us to watch him when he is awake and put mittens on him when he goes to sleep.

Even yet, at ten months, the habit is not entirely broken. When he is sleepy or uncomfortable, his fingers gravitate in the forbidden direction. Still we do not feel that our work has been wasted. We have kept him from giving himself up to the habit. For instance, some babies can not go to sleep without their thumb or fingers or soother. Bruce looks upon mittens as a part of the regular bedtime routine. If the fingers get into the mouth before the mittens have been procured, when I produce them he will voluntarily take his fingers from his mouth and put his hand in the mitten, laughing up into my face as though it were some pleasant game. We have kept him from wanting something to suck at other times, so that, unlike many babies, he is not seen on the street car or in the house amusing himself in that way. And we expect that some day he will get over wanting them at bedtime—and then will come the reward of our long-continued efforts. His desire for this form of pleasure will die out without the fight that many children must go through before they can give up the sucking habit. Moreover, observation has convinced us that the baby sleeps much more soundly when his nerves are not allowed the desired excitation.

You have been told how he plays by himself—but even that happy condition calls for constant watchfulness. He wants attention just as much as any baby ever did, and once in a while he demands it. If he has not been as well as usual, so that it has been necessary to give him a little extra care, he immediately gets the idea that such attention is very desirable. The next day, therefore, when put upon the floor to play alone, he may begin to cry loudly in expression of his desire for attention. Then is the time for firmness. As a rule, everyone is sent away, and he is left to cry to the air about him. In a little while he sees that he is without an audience; a toy attracts his attention—and in two minutes tears are a thing of the past. But the lesson is not learned by once doing, nor by twice, but must be repeated at intervals whenever the necessity arises.

It has been a surprise to me to see how easily a good baby may be spoiled. On the day we moved, it was necessary for his grandmother to have him at a neighbor's. As his surroundings were strange, he refused to leave her lap, and for the sake of the friends in the home, it seemed best to humor him. But that one day resulted in weeks of struggle. He gained the idea that grandmother ought to be always within reach. Let her step from his side and a howl was the result. Each day the cries were heard, even though those of the day before had been unsuccessful. We sometimes think that even yet we are struggling against the effects of that one day's indulgence. For several weeks he will be perfectly content playing alone; then suddenly he will get the notion that some one should be devoting herself to him, and a tempest of tears results. The rule is, however, that he must not be taken up when crying, and that rule is rigidly adhered to. Sometimes it becomes necessary to use stratagem to get him quiet in order that he may be taken up, in which case his attention is diverted and smiles brought to the little face before he is lifted in loving arms.

Another unbroken rule is that he must have nothing given him from the table. He is fed before we sit down to the table, so that he is not hungry. Then he is put in his jumper where he can see us and feel himself a part of the family gathering. A hard roll is given him and this he sucks and nibbles on, watching us intently, laughing at every joke, and sometimes making some of his own in his own language. The roll is made of entire wheat flour, unleavened, and is so hard that he can get nothing off until it is well soaked with saliva, and by that time we are ready to leave the table.

Of course he reaches out his hands for things at the table, asking for them in his pretty, pleading way. But they are not given him, for to give him even harmless things would be to encourage him in the idea that he can expect something from the table every time, and that would not be a desirable state of affairs. His pleadings soon stop, as they are without avail, and he turns his attention in other directions. Were his wants met once or twice, such a happy state of affairs would soon become impossible.

I have heard it characterized as cruel to put a baby to bed and leave him to cry himself to sleep. But why cry himself to sleep? If he is used to being put to bed in that way, he will not cry himself to sleep as a rule. Our boy laughs when put in his bed, watches with interest the pulling down of the curtains, and waves his hand by-by when finally left to his own devices. Sometimes he plays by himself for twenty minutes before dropping off to sleep, and a pretty sight it is to peek in and catch a glimpse of him playing with his pink toes and talking to them so happily.

Of course, when he is not feeling as well as usual, he may object. But the kindest thing, experience proves, is not to go near him. He cries sometimes because he is so sleepy that he is uncomfortable. To go to him or to take him up is but to prolong his unhappiness. Left to himself, his cries are brought to an end by the sudden descent of oblivion—and that is the happiest thing that can come to him. Moreover, I have noticed that he sleeps unusually well after such a cry, and wakes up remarkably happy. So the cry is not a real sorrow.

The other day I remarked to a visitor, "I must go up and see if my baby is awake." "Why, won't he let you know when he wakes up?" she asked in astonishment. "I should think you would hear his cries without any difficulty." A few minutes later I took her upstairs with me to peek in our bedroom door. There was the boy, his feet in the air, the stocking removed from one foot, while the mittened hands were busily engaged in pulling off the remaining bit of foot covering. The only sound to be heard was soft, happy talking.

"There's no way of telling how long he's been awake," I told her, "for he was playing when I first looked in."

I have learned that he is better tempered if left to play by himself for a short time in this way than if taken up the moment his eyes open. He awakens gradually, probably takes a few dozes in the process, and is not disturbed until fully aroused and active once more.

Some months ago we began playing a new game with him. Whenever he handed us anything, we smiled and nodded and said, "Thank you." He thought it lots of fun; and now, if we want to take anything from him, we hold out a hand and say, "Thank you," and the desired object is placed in our hands without a demur. There is no snatching things away from him; if we don't want him to have it, all that is necessary is to say, "Thank you." As a rule, whatever he picks up from the floor or the beach is handed to some one for the "Thank you" that is sure to follow. This is better than having them put in the little mouth.

In everything possible we allow him to follow his own desires, interfering only when it becomes evident that what he desires is unwise. For instance, he is never allowed to pull hair or scratch faces. When his overflowing energy takes that direction, we take hold of the little hand and pass it lovingly over the face he has been attempting to scratch, and say, "Nice father," or "Nice grandmother," as the case may be. He laughs at the new game and forgets his original impulse. Because that was done every time, he almost never attempts now to scratch or pull hair.

In the same way he started pulling glasses off noses. That was not allowable, however; so whenever the little hand clutched the attractive glasses, it was taken in a firm clasp and compelled to let go.

Mother's glasses are fastened by chain to a spring, and it is exciting fun to pull them out and then watch them spring back into place. This, too, is tabooed, however. At first, to be removed from this fascinating plaything caused tears and loud cries. Now, however, the little hands hardly ever reach after the "forbidden fruit," and when they do, a "No, no," causes the attention to be turned, without complaint, in another direction.

We have few rules—but those rules are followed unswervingly. Thus the boy is allowed the freest life possible, and knows where the limits are placed. This, I believe, is one reason for his serenity.—Rose Woodallen Chapman.

OSTERDOCK, IOWA, October 12, 1911.

Editor Herald: The Saints of the Osterdock Branch were made happy a few weeks ago when Elder J. S. Roth, who contributed much in starting the branch about twenty years ago, came among us again, and much to the spirituality and pleasure of us all, preached about ten or twelve times and baptized five.

While the writer has preached here considerably in the past six years, and succeeded in building up the branch numerically, at least, we were pleased to have Brother Roth come among us and do some reaping.

Sr. Lucy Schrunk is in very ill health and requests the prayers of the Prayer Union, and the Saints, that she may have normal health according to her years. Pray for her, dear Saints.

In gosrel bonds,

J. B. WILDERMUTH.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Editors Herald: I just arrived home from Bucklin, Kansas, where I was called to preach the funeral discourse of our noble young sister, June F. Redfield, who passed from earth life October 7. Her father died a year ago last July. There are only two families of Saints living there: Redfields and E. L. Basket. Bro. F. C. Keck was there a few weeks ago, and preached several times in the Christian church, to a few, the people being as hard against the Christian Church there as they are against us. We had no church building to hold forth in. The Rev. Mr. H. A. Doty sent word that we could use his church, and we gladly accepted. I called upon to assist me. He did so, and took me in his buggy to the cemetery, and closed the service there. The church was filled with attentive listeners, and many stood outdoors and listened. Many remarks were made by the people, how well they liked the sermon.

On Tuesday night I spoke at the boarding house of Sister Redfield. Some remarked they could sit all night and hear that man talk. I was blessed with the good Spirit in delivering the Father's message. I was highly pleased to find so many that spoke so highly of our Sister June. Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his Saints. It was hard for Sister Redfield to give up her baby girl, but God showed her that he had work for her in paradise. She saw her class surrounding, with her sitting inside the circle with a rule in her hand, teaching the younger ones. Oh, how we can exclaim:

Oh, happy day! happy day!
When Jesus washed my sins away!
I am as ever,

J. C. FOSS.

TORONTO, CANADA, October 13, 1911.

Dear Herald: I am pleased to see you have reserved a part of your valuable space for Canadian news. I believe this is a step in the right direction. The HERALD is the official organ of the church, and I must say it is ably conducted. I have enjoyed and benefited by it to a great extent, yet it has always seemed to me that it was more an American than an international paper. For weeks at a time there would be very little Canadian or foreign news. This gave a one-sided appearance, perhaps not intended by the editors. I understand if the members of the church in Canada and foreign lands did not contribute any news, the Editor would not have any to publish. Perhaps many members of the church have thought as I have, the paper is always so full of American news, there seems to be no room for anything I might say. This may be the reason why little has been contributed from this side of the line. I trust that in the future every copy of the HERALD will contain something of interest to its many readers from this part of the great work, and that the brothers and sisters will see to it that the space that is so generously set apart by the Editor will be filled with interesting matter.

Our district conference is over, and it has given to those of us who attended plenty of material for thought. In some respects it proved to be a disappointment to many of us. We saw demonstrated how very little dependence can be put in spiritual manifestations from any source whatever. We have seen how very much of it is of man.

We all enjoyed the presence of the general missionary in charge, Apostle F. A. Smith, who by his kind and courteous manner made a host of friends amongst the Saints. If we can judge the rest of the brethren by him, the church has a quorum of apostles that they may feel justly proud of, and our prayer is, that he may long be spared to take charge of the latter day work in these parts. Some of us made an unsuccessful effort to win him from Uncle Sam, but we trust that if the General Conference will leave him with us he will yet see the error of his ways, and become a citizen of this grand young nation.

Wishing you and the HERALD every success, I will do all that lies in my power to make the Saints see what they are missing by not being subscribers to our paper,

Your brother in the gospel,

JAMES A. WILSON.

WILBURTON, OKLAHOMA, October 3, 1911.

Dear Editor: I find lots of work to do for the Master. Truly the field is white and the laborers are few. I believe Oklahoma is ripe for the gospel, as I find lots of calls for preaching,—more than we are able to fill.

Our reunion was in August; was fine. I believe some good was done, as we have gathered in some since. As the result of the good preaching during the reunion, I baptized a fine young woman and her husband.

Last month at Panola, [Paola?] Oklahoma, two were convinced during the time. I am busily engaged; every Sunday away from home except the first, as I am the president, and that is sacrament day.

Although I find much more pleasure out preaching to the world, as it is a new thing to them, I find there is a good work to be done among the Saints. Sometimes we are made to feel many have gone astray; so we find lots of work to be done in the branches. There are so many things to draw away our people. We are blessed (?) in Wilburton with picture shows. You can hear their music before dark, and at late hours. It is tempting to the young people.

When I accepted the gospel I laid all those things down. Some tell me I am too hard on such. I believe we should be temperate in all things. I hate to see our people, especially the priesthood, indulge in those things. I believe those things are of the world, and Jesus said the world will love its own. If a man can go to heaven and indulge in those things, the gospel is not what I think it is. More money is spent in Wilburton by our people at the shows, than goes to the church.

Jesus said: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." We find in the Doctrine and Covenants that "the elders must see that my law is kept."

Now, let us keep clean of those things, and then we can be able to teach the people. Ever praying for the welfare of the church at large, and those who bear the vessels of the Lord,
Your brother in Christ,

VIRGIL L. LUM.

DELOIT, IOWA, October 13, 1911.

Dear Herald: I just received your welcome pages of October 11, in my home, and glancing over the columns, I read the poem written in memory of the Magnolia reunion of 1911, by Sr. Vida E. Smith, and as the sweet memory of this reunion lingers with us, the blessed influence of that Holy Spirit which pervaded the camp of the Saints, and gave them renewed courage and strength, giving them another evidence that "God is a rewarder of those who diligently seek him," it makes me feel it my duty to write of the special blessing I received while there.

I hope it may encourage some who have also had trials. We have for some time longed to attend this reunion, but on account of the serious condition of my health for the past year and a half, we were very much undecided whether it would be wisdom to make the effort. However, on the first Sunday we made up our minds that we would try it, trusting in the Lord for help and guidance. I was in very bad health when I went. The Lord only knew my true condition, as I could not tell myself. I had received great benefits in answer to prayer and the administration of God's servants all along. The earthly physician had said he had done all he could, but the "All Wise Physician" came to my rescue, and by his blessings it gave me greater confidence to place all my trust in him, whom I knew had all power, and nothing was impossible, if it was his will to perform. My faith in the Lord was strong, but my faith in the arm of flesh was very weak. I have noticed those who depend upon our earthly physicians for aid, if they did not get the necessary help, call time and again. Knowing how much more merciful is our heavenly Father, and that he is more ready to hear his children and give them good gifts and blessings, than we are to our children, if we are worthy and ask aright, I always felt it was my privilege to call often on God and ask him for divine help in time of need, therefore I have often called upon God's servants to administer to me. And during this reunion, I wish to bear my testimony that God heard the prayers of his servants in my behalf.

I began to grow better and stronger each day at the reunion. The last time I was administered to, all of the administration committee were present, and the Lord was also with us by the power of his Holy Spirit, and I received a special blessing, and also my husband; and the Lord did wonderfully bless me, and I dwelt under that peaceful influence of his Spirit for days, and I was led to exclaim praises to God for his mercy and blessings.

My health has continued to grow better and I am very much stronger. I am still trusting my Creator, who knows all about the human body, to restore and strengthen each organ that I may still be of some use in his service.

I am indeed thankful for the plan of salvation; that we have one who is a present help in every time of need. I still ask to be remembered in your prayers.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

ELLEN HERR.

NEWBERRY, MICHIGAN, October 8, 1911.

Dear Herald: I am always glad when you come. I love to read the letters in your dear pages, as they are such a help to me. We have no branch or Sunday school. Bro. Alvin Ellis is preaching around this part of the country now, he seems to have a good interest.

It was three years ago last July since we joined the church. I have always been thankful to our heavenly Father for sending Bro. B. S. Lambkin to preach the gospel to us.

I wish to tell you a dream that I had nine days after I was baptized that has always been a comfort to me. I dreamed that the end of the world had come, and I saw an angel descend from heaven who seemed to be clothed in a robe like those worn in olden times. I thought he was going about gathering the people together, and I looked around and I saw something like a large blackboard put up high on two posts, which seemed to be about fifteen or twenty feet high. I saw the figures "70" in large characters, and there were some smaller figures that I could not read.

While I was looking, all those things vanished away and I thought I was walking all alone in what seemed like clouds the color of a beautiful sunset, and I saw a person coming toward me who was in the likeness of the express image of our Savior, as I have seen him shown in pictures, and he seemed to be clothed in a pure white robe. As he came toward me I held out my hands and said, "Be my guide." I repeated these words three times, and he came and took both my hands in his and said, "Come," and I went with him. I was walking by his side when I awoke, and I was so happy I could not express the joy I felt.

That dream has always been a great comfort to me, for I know that if I always go to Jesus to be my guide he will never fail me, and will lead me into all righteousness.

I ask the prayers of all the Saints that I may live faithfully, so that when Jesus comes to claim his own, I may be prepared to meet him.

A sister in the true gospel,

MRS. ANNIE PENTLAND.

KNOX, INDIANA, October 10, 1911.

Editors Herald: I have been in the church but a short time, and have read but few of the HERALDS,—what I have read being borrowed from brothers and sisters in the church. It always makes me feel good to have an opportunity of reading the letters from those whom I have never seen, but am interested in their welfare and happiness.

Perhaps it would interest you to learn how I found the true, and what I consider the only church of God. Last winter, while two of the elders from Michigan were holding meetings, a lady, who at that time lived near us, asked me to accompany her to church. As she had no one to go with her, and did not like to go alone, I went, and was much surprised to hear the gospel so truthfully put forth. I, like many others, had heard much against the church, and until that time been used to hearing sermons made up to suit mankind. It was indeed a happy surprise to find there was at least one church that put the gospel before the people as it is. The following evening I went to church again, and continued to go as long as the meetings lasted, missing only one night.

At the close of these meetings the elders went away, and in a few weeks returned, and gave a few more interesting talks. At the end, I was convinced that I had found that which for the last three years I had sought in vain in all other churches. What did I seek? I sought a church in which I would feel welcome and at home. Also one that contained all the officers that should be in the true church of God; and many other things that are in this church, but not existing in others. It was my desire to be baptized into the church at once, but it being cold weather, my father objected, as he feared the consequences. So I put it off until May 21. At that time we sent for one of the elders, and another sister and I joined the happy little band of Saints living here. Another sister had desired baptism at the same time, but was prevented on account of illness.

A few weeks later we attended conference at Coldwater, Michigan. The sister who was unable to be baptized accompanied us and was baptized during conference. The elders organized a Sunday school while they were here in the winter. Our number was small at that time, but has since been slowly though steadily increasing in number as well as strength. At the present we have Religio every Thursday night, Sunday school Sunday mornings, prayer meeting Sunday night, and sacrament the first Sunday of each month.

How well I remember the next to our last sacrament meeting when one of our dear sisters partook of the sacrament with us for the last time; Sr. Maggie Collins, an energetic worker for the upbuilding of the church. On September 15 this dear sister took suddenly ill with what the doctors called bronchial pneumonia. For a few days the sister suffered severely. She was relieved through administration by Brother Scott. She did not seem to suffer so severely as she had been, but passed quietly and peacefully into another life, where we feel that she will take up the work she left off here.

Perhaps all realize what it means to have such a great worker and helper taken away. We find it a great trial to try to get along without her, but feel the heavenly Father needs her worse than we do. This feeling comforts us. The sister was president of our Religio, and a very helpful leader we found her. She was also chorister in Sunday school.

We hope to have a two-day meeting in our branch during this month or next. Asking an interest in the prayers of the Saints,

MISS PEARL MALOTT.

DUNEDIN, NEW ZEALAND, September 13, 1911.

Dear Herald: I arrived here August 19, after a pleasant trip from Kansas City, westward. On arrival, I found that the brethren had been having an interesting time over an agitation for the expulsion of the Mormons from New Zealand. Learning that the matter was to come up in the Dominion Parliament, Brethren Hall, Bradley, and Leberz each wrote their respective members relative to our teachings and standing in the community. This resulted in Mr. G. M. Thompson, M. P., publicly announcing the difference between the two churches on the floor of the House, as well as a man of the world, not too well acquainted with our work, could be expected to do. A report was published in "Parliamentary Debates, Fourth Session, 1911."

Mr. Thompson also wrote to the Otago Daily Times, a letter of which I inclose a copy. This aroused the ire of Elder A. Y. Shirling, of the Mormon Church, and he wrote a letter of which I will try to obtain a copy. To this, Brother Hall wrote an answer, but as the newspaper kept this in hand for nearly two weeks, I also wrote a letter. Shirling replied, and I got another letter in, but the editor shut down on the correspondence before I could get the third reply. I should have liked a chance to reply, as I had made a mistake in asserting that Taylor and Cowley were still members of the Utah Church. In traveling, I missed any such announcement as that made in Shirling's last letter. Of course I should have "owned up" to the error, but would have pointed out his inaccuracy in stating that they were expelled for polygamy, and then furnishing evidence of their expulsion for something else. I should also have dwelt upon the tardiness of the church in expelling for polygamy in 1911, when in 1904 and 1906 they were aware of their having plurally married after the Manifesto and dropped them from the twelve for it.

The plurality of gods argument would have given me little trouble; it was only used to cover up the fatal fact that they were beaten on the other issues. However, being denied the privilege of reporting his arguments, we shall take other measures to inform the public. I inclose the correspondence, having procured all of it, and include a challenge to the Brighamites, issued since I wrote this letter.

We are doing fairly well. The branch is small and new and the work of building up rather slow. This is a Scotch town, with many Presbyterian citizens. It is awfully difficult to get people to our indoor services. We are having fair audiences; however, we would like to have them larger.

I leave here for Australia November 15, and expect that Brethren Davis and Robertson will be here to take up the work early next year.

With kind regards,

W. J. HAWORTH.

Care R. W. Hall, 62 Macandrew Road.

WOODLAND, TEXAS, September 9, 1911.

Dear Herald: We are here alone trying to battle with the wiles of this world. We are holding onto the rod of iron, though like other Saints we have our trials, but the Lord comes to our help. Of a truth he is our helper in every time of trouble. We have been blessed with a very good crop this year, considering the great drought that struck Texas. What few Saints I know of will make very fair crops. All have left northeastern Texas for Oklahoma, except just a few that are scattered about so much that it renders it impossible to even have prayer meeting or any kind of meeting. My husband has heard but a sermon or two since he was baptized, and he is anxious to hear more preaching. I am anxious for him, for I realize the need of understanding the whole law, so one can comply in order to obtain a whole salvation.

We have been in debt, like a lot of people in this country, but I have earnestly prayed the Lord to prosper us, that we may owe no man anything, and that we may yet be able to help push forward his work among the nations of the earth with means as well as faith and prayer, for it takes our all in this great latter day work; not a part, but our all. The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof. We ought not to say that all we have is ours, for when we consecrate ourselves to the Lord, and our work to his work, and to be collaborators with him, we are of a truth his, and all we possess is his.

I want to ask through your columns for an elder to visit us and preach for us and the people, as there is an interest here that needs seeing after. There have never been any of our elders preach here, and there are as many as three families here that have all expressed themselves to me that they want to hear some of our elders. The Utah elders preached here. This is one of their old trails, and they have the people stirred up with the first principles of the gospel, and since we came in here have revealed the fact that they have strayed from what the church taught in the early days. The people are more anxious than ever. I talked with a fine lady the other day, and was telling her about the work and the Book of Mormon, and when I was through she said, "Well, that is the most reasonable thing I have ever heard." She said, "When I was going to school I often wondered why our history did not tell us something about the people that Columbus found on this continent, and it has always been most mysterious to me."

Another family, fine people to the gentleman, seem to be very much interested in the work. He treats those Utah elders very kindly, but says he is not able to accept some of their doctrine; the first principles are fine.

I believe that those people and a lot of others have a fair understanding of the angel's message; so hoping you will publish this and some of the elders will read and come to our call, we will meet them at Detroit, Texas, on the T. & P. R. R. I can hear of their being there once in a while, but I am never able to see any of them. Any that will stop off there a week or so and will drop us a card at Woodland, we will come after you and take you back.

Yours for the spread of the truth,
MRS. M. M. AARONS.

HARTSHORNE, OKLAHOMA, October 8, 1911.

Editors Herald: I feel glad to know that I have obeyed the gospel in its purity and simplicity. I can say that it is the work of God, and that he is a rewarder of those that diligently seek him, but I do many things that are not pleasing in his sight. We are among the isolated ones, with no church privileges, yet we do all in our power to show our neighbors the right way. They are very prejudiced against our faith. Our neighbors are all Campbellites, or Christians as they call themselves, and Missionary Baptists. They persecute us because we believe Joseph Smith was an inspired man, and that the Book of Mormon was translated by inspiration. They say it is all humbug and foolishness to believe any such stuff. I got one lady to read the Book of Mormon; she says it is all right, and now one of the Christian brethren claims as reading it, but I think he is afraid, for they choose darkness rather than light. Oh, how I do wish some of the elders would come and preach the gospel here. Bro. Jesse Simmons was over last spring and preached some, and came very near scaring the Christian preacher out of his wits. He said there wasn't any use of Brother Simmons preaching, for there weren't any Saints here. Brother Simmons told him he might make some Saints, for we had baptized some of his brethren. That made him very angry.

I love to read the HERALD. The first thing I do when I get my paper is to see if anyone that I know has written, but I have never seen more than one letter from anyone I knew, and that was from Brother Calley, at Dalbey Springs, Texas. We were glad to see a letter from him, as it was in my husband's wagon that he rode to the water to be baptized. We were glad to know that he is still trying to live up to the gospel law.

My husband is in very poor health and has been for some time. I want the prayers of God's people in his behalf, that he may be restored to health, and that he may live better in the future than he has in the past. May the Lord's blessings rest on each and every one of his children, and may the abiding Comforter guide, guard, and lead them in the straight and narrow way that leads to everlasting life, is the prayer of your sister,
SALLIE RICHARDSON.

LOWER LAKE, CALIFORNIA, October 15, 1911.

Editors Herald: After returning from the reunion, and getting down to my usual fall work—gathering in the corn crop,—my thoughts frequently revert with pleasure to the happy, and spiritually profitable time spent with the Saints. I can truthfully say that we felt spiritually and physically renewed and are already planning for the next season's meeting. And we hope, with a large majority, that it may be again on the old grounds.

It was moved and seconded that we hold the next reunion at Santa Cruz, which was changed to Monterey. But judging from the gloom that overspread the faces of nearly all the assembly, and the long list of signatures to have the motion reconsidered, clearly all but a few desired that Irvington should have had a vote which would have resulted in an overwhelming "yea." I am safe in saying that I voice the general sentiments of the Saints of Nevada, Sacramento, Chico, San Francisco, Oakland, San Jose, Ukiah, Windsor, Fulton, Napa, Santa Rosa, and Lower Lake when I say that we could not attend any place at a greater distance than Irvington! Many representatives of the above places expressed themselves as being unable, financially, to attend a reunion if held at Santa Cruz or Monterey.

The people of Irvington in general, regardless of any financial benefit that might accrue from the patronage of the Saints, expressed themselves as willing to assist in procuring suitable grounds for their convenience in holding reunions. The Chamber of Commerce, and the Ladies' Aid Society offered to take up the matter! It seems strange that missionaries, who are unlikely to attend every year, should have a place on a committee that concerns the convenience and financial ability of the greater part of the Saints.

It was finally decided that the "reunion committee" be empowered to select the permanent grounds on which to hold future reunions. Below we quote a brief article from the Washington Press (a local paper): "Irvington has been greatly enlivened this week by the annual gathering of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The meeting this year is one of the largest and most interesting held in Irvington in recent years. The attendance at the present meetings has come from many parts of California, as well as from other States. Some are from Oregon, Washington, and even as far away as Minnesota; four hundred people in attendance. Fifty-six tents are pitched on the camp grounds, being the largest number to be occupied at any of the gatherings held in Irvington in recent years.

"Services are held every evening in a large tent, and this Friday evening will be children's meeting. The assembly this year is marked by the excellent music which is rendered. Those in attendance are of a superior class of people, and Irvington congratulates itself on being the permanent annual meeting place of these people."—September 8, 1911.

Our little branch meetings are held in Brother Minton's home each Sunday, at 1 p. m. Sunday school, at 2 p. m. preaching, and at 3 p. m. reading, a sermon from the Toronto World by Elder R. C. Evans. Brother Minton's eldest daughter is a nice, efficient little organist, so our music is of a high order. Sacrament services on first Sunday of each month, Religio Sunday evenings. As superintendent of good literature committee we have distributed over a hundred Ensigns, loaned many tracts, Voice of Warning, and Two-Story Books. We are moving along quietly, but doing all we can for the cause of the Master in our little way.

Hoping that our heavenly Father will bless our efforts along these lines.

Yours in gospel bonds,
EDWARD F. ADAMSON.

COMSTOCK, NEBRASKA, October 19, 1911.

Editors Herald: I write you a line to say that I went up into the vicinity of Plano, Iowa, the first of this month and introduced the gospel. This is a new point—none of our ministry having been there before. By the help of the Lord I aroused an interest there. Baptized one fine man by the name of J. T. Bills. As this is not far from Lamoni, I wish the ministry there would look after our interests at that point. Address Bro. J. T. Bills, Plano, Iowa.

I am glad to say that the outlook is favorable for gospel work in my field. Our Bayard reunion was a good one; Bro. J. W. Wight favored us with his presence there, and we enjoyed his able sermons as I wise counsel very much. Western Nebraska is becoming an important field for gospel work, and needs more laborers badly. Let us pray the Lord of the harvest to send the needed help.

I am feeling well in the gospel work. Glad to say the Lord has blessed me and mine in a marked degree in my efforts.

Yours in the one faith,

C. W. PRETTYMAN.

IPSWICH, QUEENSLAND, AUSTRALIA.

Dear Herald: I am the only member of the church here, the nearest Saints being about thirty miles away. I am thankful to our dear Father in heaven for permitting me to come under the sound of the glorious gospel, and for his wonderful love to me, for the many demonstrations of his wonderful power in me from time to time. I have a hard road to hold here, as the people are intensely bigoted, and the elders of the Utah Church have caused the name of Joseph Smith to become a stench in the nostrils of the people.

I am doing my best to spread the truth here and insist on telling and showing the people the difference between the two churches. I am always glad when the HERALD arrives, and scan it eagerly for the spiritual food it contains. I also rejoice to hear how the work is going on in other parts of the world, and have been helped by some of the letters contained therein. I hope the Lord will soon come into his kingdom.

Your brother in Christ,

F. EDGWORTH.

NORWOOD, MISSOURI, October 21, 1911.

Brother Editor: I am now three and a half miles south of Norwood, with the gospel tent well stretched and meeting in full blast, meeting announced for to-night and snowing fast. Now, what think ye of that? The fields are already white, and there are no signs of a let up.

I have been with the tent all summer, and some excellent meetings have been held. We have baptized a few honest souls and left many interested. The Saints are also encouraged, and feel determined to press forward in this glorious work; but looking out this morning and seeing the snow falling so thick and fast, I wish the tent was housed away for the winter and our meetings announced for some schoolhouse. Tent meetings in the winter are not what some people might think them to be; especially when a man's summer underwear are worn out, and he has no money with which to secure more substantial for winter; and what is worse, no overcoat for the winter. But I will not complain; if it don't warm up I will move on farther south, where it will suit my clothing better, but my field of labor only extends to the southern boundary of Missouri and then I will have to come to a halt. What then? Why, do the very best you can! I hear some one say; that is as good as the angels can do. Yes; but sometimes when we do the best we can, that is bad enough, and really too bad, unless others would also do the best they could, that we may be laborers together, and also be a little more equal in the things of this world, that the abundance of the Spirit may be not withheld.

I hope to be able to get to our district conference at Thayer, Missouri, November 4 and 5. Any wanting preaching in their vicinities may write me at 121 South Fuller street, Independence, Missouri. This is my home address, and it will reach me in due time, and I will do my best to reach the different points.

As ever,

W. R. SMITH.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS.

Editors Herald: The Morgan-Norman Debate of twelve consecutive sessions closed September 16. Discussion was on the usual church identity proposition, including the authenticity of the Book of Mormon, and the inspiration of its translator. A vacant lot near the center of the city was selected and procured at a cost of twenty-five dollars, a rostrum was built, lot seated, and lighted with electric lights, as one of the most suitable places at which to hold the debate.

The Church of Christ in this controversy was represented by Evangelist J. E. Norman, who, though perhaps more pleasant in the main, than the usual debater of that society, resorted to the Pharisaical method of demanding a sign, and sought to prejudice the audience, as well as to intimidate his opponent, by reference in a bombastic way to some supposed practice of the Saints of evil character, result of their doctrine, that would be made public in the form of certain affidavits; intimating criminal negligence.

Said he had fifty pounds of thunder (of the Chism, Arceneaux order) in his grip, to spring on the Saints at the proper time. He seemed to delight in the use of slang, in which he was quite proficient, often repeating misapplicable and rude stories, frequently saying: "Now elder, show us a sign; deliver the goods; or down goes your theological cob house. Why, elder, if you were running a silk factory here, we wouldn't get enough out of your argument to make a necktie for a red ant."

Said he would prove that we did not believe our own doctrine, took a five dollar bill, laid it on the stand 'midst the roar of his rumbling Arceneaux thunder, and said, "Now, it's yours, elder, if you will just work a sign; just any old thing will do; just make your own choice, but for goodness' sake do something and redeem yourself." Turning to the congregation he said: "He can't; he knows he can't; but he is one of the inspired (?) like old Joe, and that is the way they deceive the people." This challenge was repeatedly made, each time with renewed emphasis, and self-assurance of defeat. So at the close of the last night on second proposition, Brother Morgan gave the usual sign by reference to Matthew 12: 38, 39, as also to Acts 8: 18-22, in the following poem:

"Now a little story I wish to relate,
'Tis just concerning this debate,
My opponent here put up a plea,
And roared for a sign you see.

"With thunder loud he surely roared,
Laid his cash right on the board,
He roared and roared with all his might,
To see a miracle wrought right in his sight.

"A sign, said he, and to the creek I'll go,
He'd take a plunge right in with us you know,
Though he said we were all in folly and sin,
But for a sign he'd jump right in! ! !

"Now there was Simon, a man of old,
Who offered some of his filthy gold,
He too, had a sign seeking eye,
And sought some gifts to buy.

"His heart was wrong we are told,
And that he would perish with his gold,
He couldn't purchase God's will
By a filthy five dollar bill.

"Modern Simon said here is the cash,
A sign now, or your cob house goes to smash.
But soon he changed, said 'twouldn't do,
Hypnotics can do that sign business too.

"Now when we fired a testimonial gun,
Straight for the Hypnotic he took a run,
Turned his back on the gospel creek,
'Cause he was a Simon Magus freak.

"But such men we couldn't take to the river,
Who for a sign would their cash deliver,
So we said, Just halt and go a little slow,
You'll have to repent before we go."

He said at one time that the perfect thing mentioned in 1 Corinthians 13: 8-10, reading, "But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away," terminating the period of miraculous demonstrations, occurred at the ascension of Christ. Then again it terminated in the year 96 A. D., with John on the Isle of Patmos. Again, when the last one died that had had the imposition of apostolic hands. To this Brother Morgan replied, quoting the 12th verse of the same chapter, which is: "For now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face; now I know in part, but then shall I know even as also I am known," commenting with emphasis on the "I" and "We," as a time future to this earth life, for Paul the apostle to receive, with the church of his day the perfect condition, contemplating evidently the reign of Christ, or the millennium, terminating the miraculous period during this age, and thus continuing the age of spiritual gifts till at least after the resurrection. To this position Evangelist Norman never replied, save only to deny his shifty position.

He denied Alexander Campbell, his church father, showing himself to belong to that class of disobedient children, without natural affection, referred to by Paul in 2 Timothy 3: 2, 3, and started in back with the apostles of Pentecost for a straight run down to the present. Brother Morgan bound his fifty pounds of printed thunder by Bible logic so that it never got on the outside of his ponderous book satchel, save but a little weak affidavit to the effect that a certain Saint got sick and died!! The intention, however, was to show that medical aid was denied her, or omitted on account of faith of the church. Brother Morgan was prepared for this, and presented an affidavit signed by a practicing physician, certifying that medical aid was given her from the start; also, the oral testimony of the husband of the deceased, given before the audience and thus came to naught his roaring insinuations of criminal negligence, and his effort to prejudice the people.

In his affirmation Norman set up no officers in his church organization, claimed faith, repentance, baptism in the singular, resurrection, judgment, and collections. Said it was the "perfect thing," and identical with the one set up by Christ.

To the Scriptures offered in proof of the authenticity of the Book of Mormon, he absolutely offered no argument against them, but said if he could show that the witnesses were corrupt, which he could, especially old Joe, and that he and all the rest had gone to perdition, that the whole scheme would be proven a fallacy. Accordingly he proceeded to introduce the testimony of certain women, the coin of Utah Mormonism, and said Brother Morgan was a woman hater because he rejected their testimony. Brother Morgan replied, that when it came to women of that kind that he had no more regard for a dishonest woman than a dishonest man. Their character was shown to be not the best, and their testimony contradictory, by judges of the Supreme Court who had been called upon to examine them. The testimony of Joseph Smith's legal wife, Emma, was shown to condemn them, to whose honor Norman proved to be the woman hater.

This was turned against him, as it was shown what kind of company he associated with, and Acts 17: 5 was read, with a little variation as follows: But the Church of Christ which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd women of the baser sort, and gathered a company and sought to set all the city of San Antonio in an uproar, and assaulted the house of one Mr. Davenport, and sought to bring them into reproach.

We think good was done for the cause, much prejudice removed, and a spirit of investigation started. The debate was closed with quite a friendly feeling existing in the main, particularly with the two disputants as no personal feeling had been created.

FLOSSIE JETT.

HEYBURN, IDAHO, October 15, 1911.

Dear Herald: I am away out in Idaho with no church privileges; live on a ranch on the Minidoka project. My husband works away from home a great deal at carpentering and that leaves me alone, as our children are all married.

I would be glad to give some one a home, and of course I would prefer some one in the church—a maiden lady or a widow without children rather than a young girl, on account of company, as the girl would be in school all the time. Anyone wanting a home and seeing this letter could write me at the above address.

In gospel bonds,

MRS. E. A. GILL.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA, October 23, 1911.

Dear Herald: We as a few are striving to keep the gospel banner afloat. We have two members of the Utah faith here, and one lives just across the avenue from our place of meeting. Two of the Utah elders make that their headquarters.

We have had Elder J. B. Wildermuth with us for a week, and they and their members have attended for four or five nights. They have discussed the differences two nights, last night they divided the time on the sermon. They were quite pleased at the hospitality, but the husbands of the two ladies who have joined their faith have not joined as yet but came every night and are not opposed.

Brother Wildermuth was called home on account of the serious illness of his mother-in-law, who is not expected to live. He felt very sad at heart to have to part with the dear ones of life, but rejoice that she is one of God's children and will be free from the sorrows and cares of this world.

1306 C STREET WEST.

MRS. L. DULIN.

JERUSALEM, PALESTINE, Care French Post, October 1, 1911.

Elder R. M. Elwin; Dear Brother: We are glad to say that our health is fairly good just now. The climate seems to agree well with us, though it is hot, and we have not seen it rain since we came here. We had a little rain while passing through France, and that is the last that we have seen. This is a delightful country, though at present it presents rather forbidding aspects, the results of many centuries of withering aridity; and also the ruins of ancient towns and cities, now in disordered heaps. They show no trace of even a single wall; that is, many of them do not. Nevertheless, the land is extremely rich, and its richness is beginning to become known, so land will soon be advancing here. The tokens are that the times of the Gentiles are rapidly coming to an end. And the work here will be advancing quite rapidly after awhile; but not yet.

The church will have lots to do in order to place herself in a good position to prosecute it with effect. We must meet conditions here as we find them, and take all the advantages they afford, for they have their advantages as well as their disadvantages. But their advantages are of slow processes but sure results.

We had a splendid meeting here on Thursday afternoon. The gifts of the Spirit were enjoyed for the first in Jerusalem for many, many centuries, so far as we know. The promises were good. The Carr family here were promised great blessings; and that they would be instrumental in bringing the work before the people. An Arab brother who was present was also spoken to, and he and his family are to be blessed in bringing the gospel to their people, or nation. We all rejoiced under the hallowed and peaceful influence of the Holy Spirit. On last Friday evening Sister Jenkins and myself went to temple grounds, on which now stands the Mosque of Omar, and went to the wailing place of the Jews, which is on the outside of the wall surrounding the temple ground or court. It is the ancient wall, and the Jews, rich and poor, congregate there to bewail their great loss. The scene is one of anguish and painful woe. We turned away in sorrow;—Solomon's dedicatory prayer having been brought forcefully into mind.

We hear to-day that the Italian Post has moved out of the city in a great hurry, and the Italian consul is packing up to go in a hurry too. So it seems there is something radically wrong between Turkey and Italy. We do not know anything about how the world is moving here, as we seldom get any news, but we have had a clew that Italy and Turkey were "scrapping." But it seems now that a real war is on. In closing I may say that conditions within the branch here are promising and encouraging.

With kind remembrances and best wishes and regards, we remain as ever your brother and sister in Christ,

R. AND H. JENKINS.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, September 23, 1911.

Dear Herald Readers: As we look out upon Mother Earth, here and there dotted with the different shrubberies; the leaves that just a few weeks back were a beautiful green, now a golden yellow, denotes that fall is upon us. Never can the hand of Nature be excelled: just so in all things, God's hand is mightier than all. My mind now drifts out along another channel, which displays to us again, that God's hand is in all and through all, and by a constant, faithful effort on our part, the end sought for will be accomplished; just so in regard to us as a branch here in the city of Omaha. By constant persevering upon our part, and God's divine direction, we are made to rejoice, at last, that we are privileged to worship in a new church building, which we have long sought for and prayed for. This building stands on one of the most beautiful plots in this vast city on the corner of Ohio and North Twenty-Fourth streets, making it convenient for members to have access to. Two car lines pass in front of the building, and another two blocks away.

As the building does not stand on a level with the car line, but very much higher, makes it more pleasant and agreeable to all who may sit and listen to a discourse by not being disturbed, by the passing street cars.

We sincerely hope, that now we have been so fortunate as to have such a neat, commodious building to worship in, and such a desirable location, that we will be able to attract more people of the world as they pass by, and probably a great many through mere curiosity, will drop in and hear the beautiful message of truth. I think there are a great many that are now enjoying this beautiful gospel, had it not been for mere curiosity on their part to see and hear, they would not to-day, be enjoying this great spiritual feast. Oh, how many there are hungering for this great plan of salvation! To me it is a problem, how we are to understand each other's lives.

"There's many a stone along life's road,
That we could from the pathway take;
There's many a word that we might say,
To those whose hearts with anguish break;
If we but knew their bitter need,
We'd offer them a helping hand,
But carelessly we hurry by,
Because we do not understand."

The constant desire of my heart is to be able to lend a helping hand, give a kind word somewhere, somehow, or some place. I do not want to be cast off as one who shrinks their duty in the Lord's work, but I want to be up and doing while yet it is day, for soon the night cometh when man's work is done. My days, your days, are gliding swiftly by, soon the time will come when we can not render the assistance that we now can, because of advanced years. The trembling hand, the tottering foot, the locks of silver hair, will all denote that our race is nearly run.

Oh, I wonder how many of us take the advantage of each passing day to make our standard, at least one degree higher, for we know not the day nor the hour when the Son of Man cometh.

"Lead me, Savior, lead me ever,
Never from thee let me stray;
Keep me close, that naught may sever
Me from thee, or from thy way;
I would walk fore'er beside thee,
While life's darkest vale I roam,
Thou alone canst safely guide me
To my everlasting home."

In gospel bonds,

IDA L. SNOW.

GUERNSEY, CALIFORNIA, September 28, 1911.

Dear Saints: Though I am a beginner in this great latter day work there are a number with whom I have become acquainted and who will be wondering what I am doing since the church has intrusted me with the responsibility of a missionary appointment.

From General Conference my time has been spent, up to the middle of this month, in a very pleasant, yet not altogether satisfactory way, considering my appointment. Being young in the work, as well as green in the missionary ways, I dared not to launch out too bravely or confidently; but waited for my companion of appointment, who was unavoidably delayed from entering the field until very late.

While waiting, I visited in succession the following places: Independence and Kansas City, Missouri; Lawrence, Kansas; Los Angeles, Stockton, Sacramento, Oakland, and San Francisco, California; preached as often as opportunity was offered me, and everywhere I went I was used as long as I remained there. I visited amongst the Saints, and became acquainted with a great number in this district as a result.

Too much time for visiting may be the cause of my finding a certain young lady in Sacramento, and learning enough about her to get her consent to have a ceremony performed that made us man and wife.

Like all other married men I must say that I am happy, but it comes rather hard, when I was forced to leave my wife after only two weeks of this new life.

I am confident that no earthly position or emolument could have pressed me into making such a sacrifice; but in this work of God I have done this thing with good grace and I enjoy the preaching of the gospel to those who will come and hear. Only those who have had similar experiences can fully appreciate my present position.

At Guernsey we are well cared for in the hospitable home of Bro. Joseph Flory. He has rented a hall near the depot, in which we tell the "Angel's Message" to all who will come and hear. The inhabitants hereabouts are farmers, and come from various distances to hear; some as far as nine miles.

Brother Farr was here last winter, before General Conference, and created a stir. He is intent upon getting the same motion upon public interest as he had then, but there seems to be a careless, listless spirit predominating. Needless to say, both Brother and Sister Farr do their part well; and it is no fault of theirs if the people will not see the truth. Sister Farr's solos, both vocal and instrumental, and the instrumental duets by her and Sr. Mabel Flory add much to the attractive part of our meetings. Brother Farr and I take turn about preaching. We have had as many as forty out to hear, up to this writing, and we began the 17th.

Yours in the gospel army,

BENJ. BEAN.

SUMMERS, ARKANSAS, October 1, 1911.

Dear Saints: We are in Washington County, Arkansas; came here March 1. I would like to know if there are any Saints near here. I have inquired and can not hear of any. This is a very lonely place to live. I want to live in a branch of the church. I am sick of being out in the world, so to speak.

I have been sorely afflicted with neuralgia in my face.

Would like very much to sell out here and live among the Saints. I desire an interest in your prayers. May the Lord bless his Saints. I would like to know the address of secretary of the Springfield, Missouri, Branch.

If any of the elders come this way, please call, twenty-five miles west of Fayetteville, three miles north of Summers.

Your brother in the one faith,

THOMPSON COCHRAN.

In Memory of Elder A. J. Smith.

Again the angel of death has visited the Spokane Branch, and claimed our worthy president, Elder A. J. Smith. The funeral service was held at the Saints' Church, Sunday, October 1, 1911, at 2 p. m., Apostle W. H. Kelley officiating, assisted by W. W. Fordham. Interment at Greenwood Cemetery. Elder Amos J. Smith was born May 17, 1857, in Eyota, Minnesota, died September 29, 1911, at Spokane, Washington, age fifty-four years, four months, and twelve days. He was baptized June 11, 1893, by Elder Swen Swenson, and was ordained to the office of elder, October 14, 1900, by Elders I. N. Roberts and T. J. Martin in Audubon, Minnesota. Was married to Isadora Dorety February 29, 1880, at Saint James, Minnesota; to them were born seven children, four sons and three daughters; the oldest daughter died in infancy. The six children and wife survive him. The deceased brother was a resident of Minneapolis twenty years, president of the Minneapolis Branch four years, came to Spokane in March of 1901. Soon after his arrival here he was elected to the office of branch president, where he has occupied as a faithful servant, and departed strong in the faith. His parents emigrated to Olmstead County, Minnesota, in 1854, his father a native of New York and his mother of New Hampshire. He was the first white child born in Olmstead County, Territory of Minnesota.

The last year of his life was a year of suffering, but he bore it with patience. He was a faithful servant and made his Master's work his first duty. He leaves four brothers and three sisters, which are not members of the church, and a host of Saints and friends, to mourn his loss. We mourn not as those without hope. We wish him not back in this world of suffering, believing he was prepared to meet his Savior. The branch loses a good shepherd, but our loss is his gain. In times of discouragement and trial he was always cheerful, and imparted words of comfort and consolation to the Saints. He was a good husband and a loving father, and was always ready to go and administer to them that were sick and afflicted, even while the hand of affliction rested heavily upon him, and was conscious up to the last, realizing his time had come to depart, having set all of his temporal things in order. When the brothers and sisters called at his bedside, he was always talking of the gospel hope and how grand it would be when we all could pass over on the other side. In his temporal work in life he was active in railroad service, having occupied several responsible offices for different railroads; was a man of business ability and was held in the highest esteem by all who knew him. At the time of his death he held the office of president of the Priest River Electric Power and Railway Company. He attended and presided over the weekly prayer meeting the week before his death, bore a strong testimony in the gospel work, that he would not give in exchange his hope in the gospel for all the world, and he was ready to go at any time when his Savior should call him home.

Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth, yea, saith the Spirit, for their works do follow them.

Dearest brother, thou hast left us,
Here thy loss we deeply feel,
But 'tis God that has bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal.
Yet again we hope to meet thee
When death's gloomy night has fled,
Then on earth with joy to greet thee,
Where no bitter tears are shed.

EMMA BELL.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, October 4, 1911.

At the Rich Hill Reunion.

At the reunion held at Rich Hill, Missouri, August 18, to 27, 1911, the Sunday school and Religio departments were ably represented by Sr. Altha Deam.

The reunion committee granting us the time for a meeting each day in the afternoon, the time was occupied in Sunday school and Religio work alternately. The nature of the work was instructive and entertaining. Sister Deam does not believe in doing all the work herself, but, like a true teacher, keeps all her helpers busy. However, all seemed to enjoy helping with the work, for it was made so pleasant that they could not but enjoy the work.

Clinton District has some good workers in these lines, and with the help of such workers as Sister Deam, we hope to see them, in the near future, taking prominent places in the work.

Let us begin to make preparations for the reunion at Rich Hill in 1912.

A. C. SILVERS, Secretary of the reunion.

There is no happiness in the world into which love does not enter; but love is the discovery of ourselves in others, and the delight in the recognition.—Alexander Smith.

News From Missions

Northeastern Texas.

From the field of the Eastern Oklahoma District, on the 11th of September, I started for northeastern Texas, to hold some meetings. On the evening of the 12th I began preaching near Avery, Texas, and was joined on the 15th by Bro. Lee Quick. We were then carried south by Bro. W. H. Cox, fifteen miles through the great forest and over Cow Horn Prairie, to find a brush harbor which Bro. J. N. Cox and other brethren and friends had prepared for a meeting.

On the evening of the 16th we began preaching, with Brother Quick in the stand with his mighty voice. About one hundred and fifty were there to listen to the "angel's message." The horned owl, the great bird of the West, soon woke up to the fact that there was some one else in Sulphur Bottom besides himself. Brother Quick's voice was soon echoing on the distant hills.

So the meetings progressed, with an increasing crowd, until about three hundred people were on the grounds. On the evening of the 24th we retired to the water to attend to baptizing the five that had asked for it. After we had opened the service and Brother Quick had administered the ordinance and I was about to dismiss the crowd, a man stepped up to me and said, "Brother Erwin, I want to be baptized."

I told him it was all right, and then I spoke to the crowd and invited others. Six more followed making twelve in all. The Spirit was manifested in such power that it looked like half of the crowd would go into the water, and it was estimated that there were four hundred people on the grounds.

We had the confirmation and prayer meeting in the afternoon at three o'clock, and indeed we had a joyous time; many wept because of the outpouring of the Spirit. That evening at the preaching service eight more good men and women asked for baptism, so next day we went to the water again, and the writer led eight more good people into the water. That evening we closed the meeting with many others about converted.

The brothers and friends did not forget us on the financial line, they indeed supplied our needs.

Sr. Dr. H. L. Dalbey was with us and rendered us great help in the way of singing and talking to the people about the gospel. We want to say, Sister Dora, keep on telling the message. Sister Dalbey has many relatives in the northeastern part of Texas whom she is visiting.

We went to Avery to preach a few days, but the good Christians at that place would not let us have their church to preach in. Bro. W. S. Goodman and wife, who live at that place and are noble Saints, told us to preach in their house; so we occupied a few days and closed with a good crowd and some interest. On the morning of the 2d, Brother Quick bade us good-bye. Bro. P. B. Bussell joined us at Avery, and we went to Bowie County. We preached there a few days; baptized a noble old lady and man. From there we came to this place, on the line between Texas and Louisiana, where the pines grow tall, and the owls holler loudly, and the mosquito bites hard.

We began meetings on the 9th with a very good crowd, which is still increasing; with some interest manifested. Hope some will be gathered in. Bro. Alford Durham and Bro. George May live here. They are noble Saints, doing all they can for the gospel.

Ever hoping and praying for the building up of Zion and the spread of the gospel, so our Savior can come to reign Lord of lords and King of kings, and we can return home singing songs of everlasting joy.

E. A. ERWIN.

SIMS, TEXAS, October 12, 1911.

Saskatchewan.

Following the subsidence of the reciprocity and annexation scare, we have the census excitement, and, judging from the meetings being held in various places, and the protests being made, there is widespread dissatisfaction because the count of noses was not big enough, while the baseball "fans" eagerly scan the bulletin boards for the latest returns from the world championship series between the Giants and the Athletics.

In the midst of all the contending forces calculated to absorb human interest, we find the Saints generally maintaining a commendable equilibrium. How important the injunction to "stand in holy places."

Like all other missions, Western Canada has its advantages and disadvantages. In the first place it is a great big country with multitudes of people of all classes seeking and making homes, affording exceptional opportunities for spreading the gospel message. While all this is true, we have, as elsewhere, the combined opposition of sectarian prejudice to combat; and, if anything, it is more pronounced here than in many places in the States.

In a number of instances where we have tried to effect new openings we have been met with the stay-away plan, after the first or second meeting, usually instigated by the local preacher. This seems to be their only way to escape the dire consequences incident to a comparison of "creeds." Another disadvantage is the scattered condition of the people in the country districts, owing to the fact that they all have from a quarter to a section and a half of land with considerable open land in between which is held by speculators; so that it is hard to get a crowd of any size in a given locality. Some must go quite a distance, and in the newer settlements there being only a "trail" as yet, they will not venture very far away after dark. Consequently we can do little more than hold public meeting on Sunday and be content with a small crowd. Naturally, progress under such conditions is bound to be slow. Being used to holding services nightly for weeks and months at a time, it is difficult for the American missionary to adjust himself to the conditions without a bad case of the "blues." However, we are making some progress.

On September 24 I organized a branch at North End, Saskatchewan, with W. J. Levitt as president, Willie Cornish as presiding priest, and Samuel Kilpatrick, deacon. There are about fifty Saints there, mostly from Michigan, Elder J. J. Cornish being among the number. The branch bears the name of Michigan; so in Saskatchewan we have the Iowa, the Minnesota, and the Michigan branches. Bro. J. W. Peterson was with me here and rendered efficient service, as we had some ugly "cleaning up" to do. He returned to Nutana, intending to go to Prince Albert, where there is a demand for preaching and baptism.

From Macklin I went to Calgary, where Bro. J. L. Mortimer has been since the conference at Sedley; Bro. E. E. Moorman having joined him later. We found some interest manifest there, despite opposition. The Utah Mormons seem to have quite a following in the city, some of whom are becoming interested in the "Reorganite" claims.

From Calgary I went to Innisfree, Alberta, where I organized a branch with about fifteen members to be known as the Innisfree Branch; Bro. William H. Ray, president; John Newberry, teacher. This band of Saints are mostly, if not all from Grand Valley, Ontario. They seem to be alive to the interests of the work, meeting regularly for Sunday school and prayer service. This is as it should be. Two were baptized by Brother Ray and confirmed by the writer.

I left Innisfree the 16th and came to Sedley, Saskatchewan, where I am at present domiciled at the home of Bro. and Sr. T. J. Jordan, and headed homeward, where I am to meet W. G. Roberts in public discussion for eighteen sessions.

By request of the district president, I will stop at Weyburn to attend to some matters there. At last accounts, Bro. C. C. Joehnke was at Mayner, Saskatchewan, preaching every Sunday in Bro. Albert Armstrong's home. Bro. S. W. Tomlinson has sold out and moved his family to Niagara Falls, since which time I have heard nothing from him. It will be seen that our missionary force is small, compared to the extent of the country and the opportunities for work. We need men in this mission who could devote the summer months to street preaching; as Winnipeg, Brandon, Saskatoon, Regina, Calgary and Edmonton, with a host of smaller towns, afford excellent opportunities for such work. Truly the harvest is great but the laborers are few. E. E. LONG.

News From Branches

Omaha, Nebraska.

On last Wednesday evening, at our regular quarterly business meeting, we decided to hold prayer service every third Sunday morning, at 11 o'clock, in the place of preaching, making two Sunday morning prayer services a month. The first Sunday of each month is devoted to sacrament and prayer service.

We have been in our new church on Twenty-fourth and Ohio streets, a splendid location, since about the 15th of August. We feel that the spiritual condition here is growing better; although we yet can see much that we lack.

The attendance at our Sunday school averages about sixty. Bro. H. A. Scott is an able superintendent.

Our Religio is showing an improvement, but as yet we have an attendance of only about twenty-five. Brother Hicks, the president, is kept from doing more work on account of the severe sickness of his daughter, Florence, who has been sorely afflicted for some time.

Zion's League, which is an organization composed of young folks, under the age of thirty-five, organized for the study of church literature, and for general social, spiritual, and intellectual development, meets one evening a week. The first meeting night of the month being a prayer service, held at the church. The second and third meetings are for lesson study at the homes of the members, and the fourth is devoted to social gatherings, such as parties, etc. A. E. Stoff, as president, makes a good leader among the young of the branch.

Choir practice every Friday evening, directed by Sister Fitzpatrick.

Ladies' Aid meets every Thursday afternoon, and have a social lunch once a month.

Brother Baker, our missionary, gives us some excellent sermons from time to time.

MABLE L. STOFF.

Comins, Michigan.

We are still striving to follow on in the steps of our Savior. At our two-day meeting we are pleased to note a good time was enjoyed by all. God's Holy Spirit was with us, and on Sunday evening three precious souls were buried beneath the waters in baptism, to arise and walk in newness of life.

Bro. Noel Starks was ordained to the office of elder on September 30, and Bro. Ed Yoder was ordained a priest. On October 8, Brn. William Hogle and Winfield Scott were ordained to the office of deacon.

On October 8, we again had the opportunity of assembling together beside the waters, and another soul was brought into the fold. We are also made glad to rejoice in our prayer meetings. Last Sunday, October 15, the sweet, peaceful Spirit of God was again with us, and the cheering and comforting words given through Sr. Myrtle Scott brought comfort and strength to all who heard.

Many of this place wished to attend the Beaverton conference, but were disappointed. One sister had made many preparations for that time, thinking of the happy time ahead; and that God would surely open the way, but none was opened. Although disappointed we may have been, God had not forgotten us, and still continues to bless us. We are all made to realize many times that God knows best.

Brother and Sister Fultz were permitted to attend, and reported a good time. The peaceful influence is also felt in our preaching services here of late; we are all made to rejoice in this great latter day work.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion,

LAURA DIMICK,

MARY HOGLE,

Press Committee.

Saint Louis, Missouri.

Our sacrament service last month was in charge of Bro. T. J. Elliott, assisted by Brn. Reeves, Rhoads, and Gall. Brother Reeves in his opening remarks referred to a contract between man and man as being considered sacred, but a covenant between God and man being the most sacred covenant made.

The preaching services the past month were by Brethren Sawley, Elliott, and Reeves. Among the subjects were, A doer of the work, Trials and God's hand in them, What is in a name? Charity and faith; edification being received from each.

Brother Sawley expressed himself as feeling well in the work, having worked almost entirely in new fields, thus presenting the gospel to many who had not heard it before.

The efforts of Brother Dowker in Belleville, Illinois have been meeting with success, he holding nightly services for some time, resulting in the baptism of eighteen, and a splendid interest among others.

Sister Swift has been very ill since last report and should be remembered in our prayers.

Conference Minutes.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.—District met at Alpena, October 14, 1911, at 10 a. m., district president J. C. Goodman in charge. A. R. Ellis and J. H. Blackmore chosen to assist. C. N. Burtch chosen secretary; Cara Goodman, chorister; Alice Joslyn, organist. Secretary being chairman of the press committee, chose S. W. Rudd and Alice Joslyn to assist. Reports of officers read, showing an improvement and gain in their districts. A petition was presented from the Saints at Reyburn to have a branch organized at that place; this was referred to the district presidency. The names of S. W. Rudd and E. O. Banks were recommended to the office of elder; and that of Ernest Orton to that of priest. Conference voted that they be so ordained. Delegates were elected for General Conference. Officers selected as follows: J. C. Goodman, president; J. H. Blackmore, vice president; Charles Burtch, secretary; Ada Aldread, treasurer. Time and place of next conference left with district presidency. Preaching by J. H. Blackmore, N. Stark, J. C. Goodman and A. R. Ellis. Charles Burtch, secretary.

WEST VIRGINIA.—District convened with the Mount Zion Branch at the Goose Creek church, September 3, 1911. The conference opened with the district president, Samuel Brown, in charge. Missionary in charge, R. C. Russell, elected to preside, D. L. Shinn and Samuel Brown associates. The following officers elected for the ensuing year: Samuel Brown, president; Joseph Biggs, first vice president; B. Beall, second vice president; Frank L. Shinn, secretary; Sr. B. Beall, treasurer; B. Beall, bishop's agent. Branch reports were received from Clarksburg, Mount Zion, Cabin Run. The following elders reported labor done in the district: Samuel Brown, Joseph Biggs, D. L. Shinn, and B. Beall. Frank L. Shinn and B. Beall were elected delegates to the joint reunion of the West Virginia, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Kirtland districts. A Sunday school organization was perfected with the following officers: Joseph Biggs, president, Frank L. Shinn, vice president; Katie Ross, secretary and treasurer. The following delegates were elected to the next General Conference: R. C. Russell, Samuel Brown, B. Beall, Brother Winegar, and D. L. Shinn. Bro. and Sr. Charles Moore, of the Bell Grove Branch were granted letters of removal to the Kirtland Branch, the Bell Grove Branch being in a disorganized condition. The following were the speakers during the conference: R. C. Russell, Samuel Brown, D. L. Shinn, and Brother Winegar. A resolution was presented to make the arrangements to have some changes made in the boundary line of the district, and the matter was referred to the district officers, who were instructed to prepare the necessary papers and present them to the General Conference for approval. Conference passed very quietly and peaceably, and all had an enjoyable time. Attendance was not as large as it should have been, showing that there are many Saints in the district that are sleeping on their rights. The conference adjourned to meet with the Clarksburg Branch, the time being left with the missionary in charge, and the district president. Frank L. Shinn, secretary.

FAR WEST.—District conference convened with the Second Saint Joseph Branch, October 7 and 8, 1911. Bro. F. M. Smith, T. J. Curtis, and district president, T. T. Hendricks in charge, Charles P. Faul, A. A. Richardson, and S. J. Hines, secretaries. The following recommendations from branches were received: First Saint Joseph Branch, Blair Dobson to the office of elder; German Stewartsville, Elias Hinderks to the office of elder; Pleasant Grove, Leon Bean to the office of teacher. These recommendations were adopted by the conference, also the recommendation of T. T. Hinderks, that George W. Mauzey be ordained to the office of elder. These brethren were ordained to these offices, with exception of Leon Bean, whose ordination was provided for because of his absence. District treasurer, B. J. Dice, made a report of his accounts which was adopted. The following two-day meetings were provided for: First Saint Joseph, November 11, 13; Second Saint Joseph, November 18, 19; Third Saint Joseph, November 11, 12; Edgerton Junction, November 25, 26; Norborn, November 11, 12; Alma, December 2, 3; Kingston, October 28, 29; Far West, November 25, 26; Oak Dale, October 21, 22; Cameron, December 16, 17; Delano, November 25, 26; Stewartsville, December 9, 10; Pleasant Grove, January 13, 14; Coventry; German Stewartsville, January 27, 28; DeKalb, December 16, 17; Trenton and Mount Hope to be arranged for by E. L. Hensen and J. A. Roberts; Boxford, October 21, 22. Branches reported: Pleasant Grove 73, loss 5; Edgerton Junction 48; DeKalb 53; Far West 49, loss 10; Delano 85, loss 3; Kingston 82, loss 5; Oakdale 40; Carmen 143, gain 7; Alma 40; Norborne 48, gain 1; Stewartsville 231, loss 5; German Stewartsville 82, gain 1; First Saint Joseph 552, gain 5; Second Saint Joseph 117, gain 1; Third Saint Joseph 97, gain 4. Preaching by J. A. Roberts, Fred M. Smith, and F. J. Curtis. Adjourned to meet with First Saint Joseph Branch, February 3 and 4, 1912.

NORTHEASTERN KANSAS.—District conference convened at 10.30 a. m. in the church at Fanning, September 9, 1911. District president Frank C. Hedrick and W. E. Peak presiding. The branches reporting were: Atchison 89, Blue Rapids 129, Scranton 100, Fanning 114, Centralia 32, and Topeka 53. Ministry reporting: W. E. Peak, Oscar W. Okerlind, Frank G. Hedrick, Mahlon Smith, Fred A. Cool, J. D. Shower, L. W. Hays, A. V. Armstrong, William Brooks, John McDougal, G. H. Robinson, H. B. Sprague. Be it resolved that branch clerks be instructed to include their statistical reports to the conference the number of scattered members. Also to forward as soon as practicable, to the district secretary a list of names and addresses of scattered members of their branch. Atchison was selected as place of next conference; time of next meeting left with district president. Preaching by W. E. Peak and Oscar W. Okerlind. Emma Hedrick secretary.

NEW YORK.—District conference was held at Niagara Falls, October 7 and 8, 1911, at 10 a. m., president, Elder Stone in charge. Organization resulted in the selection of the minister in charge to preside, associated with the presidency of the district. The district secretary was chosen to act as secretary. Fannie Schofield chosen chorister, Anna Landes organist, and Fred Mesle and Brother Warner ushers. Visitors granted the privilege of the floor. Morning sessions devoted to social service, short speeches being made by many of the Saints present. Statistical reports from Niagara Falls, Buffalo, and East Pharsalia branches read and accepted. Ministerial reports of Elders A. E. Stone, F. C. Mesle, L. H. Lewis, William Brothers and Alma Booker, and Priest F. H. Rathbun, read and accepted. Treasurer's report read and book referred to an auditing committee, appointed by the chair. Report on funds raised for the purchase of an organ for the tent was read and accepted and a vote of thanks tendered the committee. Reports on Sunday school and Religion convention, held October 6, read and accepted. The order of meetings was left with the presidency. Elders Davison and Mesle were appointed press committee. Motion prevailed that collections be taken up at each preaching service during the conference, and the amount collected be divided equally among the missionaries present, after the expense of the conference was paid. Communication read from East Pharsalia Branch, requesting that the next conference be held at that place. By resolution the time and place of the next conference were left with the missionary in charge and presidency of the district. Auditing committee's report on the treasurer's book read, and recommendations contained therein (to be forwarded to the treasurer with instructions that he comply with the same) accepted, and auditing committee dismissed. The following delegates for General Conference were nominated: Elder Greene, Elder Stone, Elder Davison, Elder and Sister Booker, Elder and Sister Brothers, and Sister Mesle. The nominees were accepted as representatives or delegates to represent the district, entitled to cast the full vote of the district, and in case of division to cast a majority and minority vote. Report of tent funds read. Motion prevailed that the present district officers be sustained, and that hereafter the district officers be elected annually at the spring conference. Motion prevailed that we, as a district, adopt for the officers of branches and district the method of reporting on blank forms, to conference; that said reports be sent to the district secretary one week prior to the convening of the district conference; and that a committee be appointed to draw up a form, have a supply printed, and draw on the treasury for the amount necessary to defray the expense. Motion prevailed that the executive of the district constitute the committee for securing said forms. At 8, preaching by Elder Booker; at 9 a. m., sacrament service in charge of Elders Angus and Stone. At 10.45, preaching by Elder Greene. At 2.30 p. m., preaching by Elder Stone. At 8, preaching by Elder Greene. Vote of thanks extended to the members of Niagara Falls Branch for their hospitality. Lila B. Schofield, secretary.

Convention Minutes.

TORONTO.—The Zion's Religio-Literary Society of the Toronto District met in convention at Grand Valley, Ontario, September 29, 1911, at 10.15 a. m., with Pres. Floralice Miller, and Vice President J. T. Whitehead in charge, they choosing Apostle F. A. Smith as their assistant. Sr. Ada Hamilton was selected to act as secretary pro tem. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Floralice Miller; vice president, James Pycoc; secretary, Victoria Snell; treasurer, N. E. Leeder; librarian, Thomas Dodd; home class superintendent, Burney Galbraith. In the evening a joint session was held with the Sunday school when an appreciated program was rendered. Addresses were given by Apostle F. A. Smith, James Pycoc, J. T. Thompson, and R. C. Evans. Music was contributed by Misses Hazel Hathaway Elsie Hill, Laura Rhodes, and Messrs. Norman Rhodes and R. W. Tarzwell. The next convention will be held at the same place as the district conference. The local secretaries of this district will kindly send all reports to Victoria Snell, Port Elgin.

Convention Notices.

The joint session of the Massachusetts District Sunday school association and the district Religio association will convene in the Saints' church at Sewall street, Somerville, Massachusetts, November 11, 12, 1911, at 2.30 p. m. Ora Viola Holmes and Ada Manan Lewis, secretaries, 202 School street, Winter Hill, Massachusetts.

The Minnesota District Sunday school convention will convene during the conference at Bemidji, Minnesota, November 4, 1911. P. W. Martin.

Two-Day Meeting.

There will be a two-day meeting with the Valley Branch, Bay City, West Side, Michigan, November 25 and 26, 1911, for the purpose of dedicating the church. We expect Apostle Frederick A. Smith to be present and doubtless other able speakers will be there. All Saints are invited. Come and enjoy the good things of God. E. A. White, assistant district president, 610 North Chilson avenue, Station A, Bay City, Michigan.

The Presidency.

Those concerned will please note that by concurrence of the ministers in charge of the respective fields and the First Presidency, Bro. C. E. Willey is transferred from the Seattle and British Columbia District to the Des Moines District, where he will labor for the remainder of the conference year.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, Secretary First Presidency.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 25, 1911.

Notice is hereby given, the First Presidency and missionary in charge concurring, that E. B. Welch has been released from his appointment for the balance of the conference year.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY, By Secretary.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 23, 1911.

The Bishopric.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of the Spokane District; Greeting: We are truly appreciative of the financial support the Saints in this district have rendered in the past and are assured the Lord will amply reward the same; but at present time this department of the work is in need of help, while the burden we have to bear this conference year is not great, yet the allowances of the missionaries' families should be paid promptly. The burdens of the missionaries are sufficient without having to worry about the support of their families. So, dear Saints, whatever you have in tithes and offerings please send it promptly. Do not wait until you have a large amount before remitting. If you will do this, we will be able to meet the obligations we are under. Let us not be forgetful of our duties, but remember the needs of the Lord's work.

The following counties are in the Spokane District; Stevens, Ferry, Okanogah, Chelan, Douglas, Grant, Lincoln, Spokane, Whitman, Adams, Franklyn, Kittitas, Walla Walla, Columbia, Garfield, Asotin, Benton, Yakima, and Klickitat. Counties in Idaho: Benner, Latah, Shoshone, Kootenai, Nez Perce, and Lewis. Members living in any of the above counties having tithes please forward to

W. W. FORDHAM, Bishop's Agent.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, SOUTH 238 HAVEN STREET.

Pastoral.

Inasmuch as some think, and others have said that we have never taught "The temporal law" or the law of tithing, etc., in the West Virginia District, I would ask the Saints of the district and others who have been interested, to read the following pastoral notice, which was published in THE SAINTS' HERALD, October 7, 1893. (Vol. 40, no. 40, p. 641.)

To the Saints of the West Virginia District. Dear Saints: You will see by reading the minutes of our late conference, in bishop's agent's report, that there is but one dollar in the treasury. Now this is the Bishop's treasury into which we are to pay our tithes and offerings for the support of the work. Every member of the church when uniting therewith entered into the covenant of the church with the Lord to believe and obey all the words and commandments of the Lord. The doctrines of the church were all formulated and established before we joined it, and therefore let us consider that we have by joining, indorsed all its laws and principles. There are two departments of rules or laws in the church for its government; namely, the spiritual, or those rules relating to our moral conduct and faith, worship, and eternal inheritance; and the temporal department, or those rules which govern in temporal affairs, called by some, "the temporal law." In this department of the church work we are all to be engaged in paying our tithes and offerings annually. The Lord says he requires us to pay so much and in a particular way. (See Doctrine and Covenants, section 106.) This is explained by the Bishopric to mean a tenth of what we have, and afterwards a tenth on our interest annually. If the Lord requires it we certainly should be obedient, and render unto God the things which are God's. The bishop of the church expects us to do this, and has appointed an agent in our midst who will receipt us for the tithes and offerings. It therefore seems requisite that each member of the church in West Virginia prepare for this good work. Some time ago there appeared an editorial item in the HERALD of July 22 which some thought to be a restriction on giving to ministers for traveling expenses, etc. In reply to a letter from me on the subject, the Bishop says: "No reference is made, as I understand it, as to persons aiding ministers traveling in their proper fields of labor for expenses. The law of the Lord directly teaches that ministers may be given food, and clothing, and money, and it would be just as proper to hold that no food or raiment should be given to the ministers as to say that they could not be given a quarter or a dollar to help them on their way by way of expenses.

In our late conference, a resolution was passed to the effect that traveling ministers should be aided in this manner. So you see we are in harmony with the Bishop as to these things. Let us, therefore, always be ready to aid the ministers in this respect. But we should not forget that the Lord requires our tithings and offerings which are used by him for the poor and the support of the families of the traveling ministry. Tithing is a debt we all owe to the Lord according to the Scriptures, and if we use the Lord's share of what we have, we are said to be "robbing God." (Malachi 3:8.) Paul says this, in acts 20:35: "I have showed you all things how that so laboring you ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive." Again, "If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?"—1 Corinthians 9:11. And again: "Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things live of the things of the temple? and they that wait at the altar are partakers with the altar? Even so, hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel." Those priests who labored in the temple, under the old law in Jerusalem, had their living in the temple. They were not given an inheritance of land with the rest of the people. (See Numbers 1:49-54, 18-20.) Thus the Lord "hath ordained" that the preachers of the gospel should have their living in the church when they are called to labor. Will anyone dispute this, and say it was not so in this dispensation? Let him read and be convinced. Paul says "even so"—as it was with them in old times, it is with us. But another says, "The preacher must not preach for money, but is to go out 'without purse or scrip,'" etc. But does this say that his family is to stay at home without purse or scrip? Paul says the preacher is to live by preaching the gospel, even so, as those priests in the Jewish temple did. Is not Paul good authority? If the preacher is to go without purse or scrip, then he is in no condition to make money for his expenses, clothing, or the support of his family, and this is the very reason why we should pay our tithes and offerings promptly. We are free, the preacher is not. He can not stop to provide from manual labor, means to support his family. The priests in the Jewish church depended entirely for themselves and families on the tithes and offerings of the people who received the increase and blessings of the earth. What would these priests and their families have done if the people had refused to pay their tithes and offerings? They were utterly dependent on the Lord—not being permitted to own farms and carry on business for a living as others did. They had to "live of the things of the temple," and content themselves to be "partakers of the altar." The elders and their families are also dependent. They "live of the things of the temple" (church), and can only be "partakers with the altar." If the altar gets nothing offered upon it, what is to become of those who "wait at the altar"? Now if God has ordained these things, and has so ordered it; why should anyone object to it or neglect it? But I have proved that the Lord has ordained it. Paul, showing the laws for the support of the Jewish priests and Levites, declares that the Lord hath so—"even so"—ordained the laws providing for the living of preachers of the gospel. It is therefore the law that "they who preach the gospel shall live of the gospel," and they who are of the church—the Lord's people—are to furnish the means. Let us therefore regulate our lives here to these divine laws.

Let the Saints in West Virginia seriously consider these things, and willingly and faithfully follow the truth, and develop a work in West Virginia in the next year that will be worthy of praise.
D. L. SHINN.

To the Saints of Nebraska; Greeting: I take this opportunity and means of addressing you all, and I hope these few lines may be carefully and prayerfully considered.

I learn from the reports from the brethren in the general ministry that in a number of places a number of successful series of meetings have been held; a number of good people have united with the church, and the Saints have been strengthened materially in a spiritual sense. Also from the local ministry comes encouraging reports of conditions in the branches, and of the wonderfully good spiritual uplift they have had from the several reunions throughout the State, of blessings received and promised through the patriarch, and the enjoyment of the gifts of the gospel, etc.

Now the question arises before me like this: What have we given, and what are we willing to give to this church in return for all the precious blessings we have received from the Christ? Jesus Christ has said, "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." And again, "If a man loveth me he will keep my words." In Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8 we find this statement: "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which can not be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me."

Now brethren and sisters and Saints everywhere, are we not all poor? And it makes no difference how much of this world's goods we have, do we not beg blessings at the hand of Christ continually? And oftentimes, we do not wonder why we are not receiving greater blessings that are so clearly promised in the word? Have we each and all complied with the law of tithing? And consecration? If we have not, should there be any wonder in our minds why the greater blessings are not received? Jesus says: "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I have commanded you." Can we expect to receive continually of Christ, and not manifest our friendship for him by doing his will? Only last Sunday, the statement was made by the Presiding Bishop of the Independence Stake that unless aid was forthcoming in a financial way, some of the ministry would have to be taken out of the field. It is true that this has been rather an off year, and crops in many localities have been poor, but let us economize a little closer. How about this picture? Here are two families living in the same city; one of these families consists of eight persons; the other of three. The family of eight are living quite well on fifty dollars a month and have paid a little tithing. The family of three are trying to live on one hundred dollars a month; are saving no money, neither are they paying any tithing. I do not need to tell you that in the latter case a desire to conform to the world in fashion and manner is the impediment in the way of their hope for financial gain, and consequently great loss to themselves spiritually.

In Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2, Christ says: "Therefore if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made and impart not his portion according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment." This is truly plain language, but we certainly must admit that Christ knows just where we shall find our immortal souls if we fail to keep his word. Let us therefore be doers of the word and not hearers only, as the Apostle James says, "deceiving your own selves."

Again I wish to say a word in regard to contributions for the Sanitarium. Being there and having found out from those in charge just what could be used to the best advantage, I find that they can use money the easiest, but material for sheets, pillow cases and bed spreads are always needed. As the sick are in bed so much of the time, these particular features of bed clothing are used all the time. Do not send quilts, as they have a supply on hand. Common flour sacks for dish towels are very useful. Canned fruit, well packed so it will not break in shipping, is very acceptable. Send all contributions to Dr. W. E. Messenger, Independence Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri. I hope the Saints will avail themselves of the opportunity of helping in this most commendable work.

Dear Saints, let us each and all who are strong help bear the infirmities of the weak, and I know Christ will bless us. None of us know how soon we may need the care and medical skill afforded us in this institution, where we may have the sympathetic watchcare of trained nurses of our own faith, and administration by the elders as often as needed. I did not know, neither could I have conceived, without the experience I had while there, the great blessing this Sanitarium is to the church, and the blessed influence pervading within its walls. May Christ's blessings according to the holy desires and faith of the covenant children, be and abide with Israel everywhere.

J. R. SUTTON.

Notice.

To the Members of the Quorum of High Priests; Greeting: I am now mailing to each member of the quorum, the "H. P. Annual of 1911." And inclosing a copy of the program of 1912 therewith, to your latest address that I have been able to obtain.

Now if you fail to receive these within a reasonable time, write me and I will send you others. Should you be absent from home, it might be advisable for you to write to the home folks immediately, telling them what to do with your Annual.

Once more, brethren, permit me to urge upon you, that if you make any change in your address, please file prompt notice with me.

ROB'T M. ELVIN, Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, October 20, 1911.

Missionary Appointments.

The First Presidency, missionary in charge and general bishop concurring, the following appointments are made to hold until the next General Conference, namely: Lyman Fike, to Arizona and contiguous territory; Charles Chase, to Utah; New Madden, to Idaho and contiguous territory.

F. M. SMITH, Secretary of First Presidency.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 17, 1911.

Corrections.

In conference minutes of the Pottawattamie District in HERALD for October 18, the Pottawattamie, Gallands Grove, and Northern Nebraska districts were reported as "refusing" to be incorporated for a common reunion. These were the districts which favored this project. Those interested will please note this correction.

Addresses.

Died.

REDFIELD.—Sr. June F. Redfield died at Bucklin, Kansas, of diabetes, October 7, 1911, age 19 years, 5 months, and 2 days. She was baptized and confirmed by Elder B. J. Scott, at Bucklin, Kansas, July 29, 1910. She leaves a dear mother, four brothers, two sisters, and a host of friends to mourn. Funeral services in the M. E. church, by Elder J. C. Foss, assisted by Rev. H. A. Doty.

STEDMAN.—Sr. Catherine Stedman died at Lamoni, Iowa, October 11, 1911, aged 80 years, 3 months, and 23 days. She was a daughter of Bro. and Sr. John Landers. Her husband, Charles Stedman, died in 1898. Five children survive her. Her parents obeyed the gospel in Canada in 1836, and went to Nauvoo in 1842, and when the Reorganized Church arose, they united with it. Sr. Stedman was baptized in 1886, by Bro. H. A. Stebbins. Funeral sermon was preached by Bro. R. M. Elvin. Prayer and sketch of her life, and of her parents, was read by Brother Stebbins.

MARTIN.—Sr. Sarah A. Martin died at Lamoni, Iowa, October 12, 1911, aged 59 years. Husband and three sons and two daughters remain. She was baptized in 1871 by Bro. J. S. Patterson, at Kewanee, Illinois. Married in 1877 to Bro. James Martin, and occupied faithfully as wife, mother, and Saint. Funeral service in charge of Bro. John Smith; sermon by Bro. H. A. Stebbins, assisted by Bro. R. M. Elvin.

WIND.—Peter H. Wind was born September 10, 1844, Loulan, Denmark; died October 5, 1911. Came to America in 1865 and married Mary Hansen April 19, 1868, near Council Bluffs, Iowa. To this union eleven children were born, four sons and seven daughters, one son having preceded him in death. His widow and ten living children, besides numerous other relatives, were present at the funeral. Brother Wind was baptized in 1868. Elder J. W. Wight conducted the funeral at the home, and the Masonic fraternity at the grave. The very large funeral concourse both at the home and the grave denoted the high esteem in which our departed brother was held.

GAULTER.—Loren Gaulter, second son of Louis and Harriet Gaulter, died at his home three miles south of Lamoni, Iowa, on Sunday, October 1, 1911. He was born in Brigham City, Utah, May 25, 1856, being at the time of his death, 55 years, 4 months, and 6 days old. Was married August 25, 1897, to Elizabeth A. Sumption, by H. A. Stebbins. Of this union were born two children, a son, who died in infancy, and a daughter, Nellie, who is a comfort to her mother. A kind and loving husband, father, and son has gone to rest, after months of pain and suffering; having visited various sanitariums, also undergoing an operation. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in his youth, and has remained faithful. Honest and upright in all his dealings, he won the confidence of all. There are left to mourn, his wife and daughter, aged father and mother, three brothers, three sisters, and many other relatives and friends. Funeral service in charge of John Smith; sermon by E. A. Smith, assisted by Amos Berve.

CREEK.—Christie Creek was born February 2, 1890, near Stewartsville, Missouri. United in marriage to Earl D. York, July 27, 1908; was baptized into Christ September 6, 1911. To this union was born one daughter, named Thelma York; little Thelma's visit was short; she passed on to the other shore at the age of 6 months and 27 days, July 27, last. The mother followed October 8, 1911; laid to rest in the Stewartsville cemetery; service held at the church in charge of Bro. D. E. Powell; sermon by Bro. William Lewis, to a large, sympathizing audience.

DAUGHERTY.—Rebecca Daugherty, at Saint Paul Minnesota, May 19, 1911, aged 65 years and 29 days, leaving three sons; William, of Plattsmouth, Nebraska; Fred, of Havelock, Nebraska; and Harry, of Saint Paul; and two daughters, Mrs. W. H. Wallace, of Havelock, Nebraska; and Mrs. J. E. Miller, of the same place to mourn her departure. Rebecca A. Richardson was born in Marion County, Indiana, April 20, 1845, and married to Madison Daugherty in Harrison County, Iowa, March 17, 1867. Baptized into the Reorganization at Plattsmouth, Nebraska, May 11, 1890, by Jesse Spurgeon. Sermon by J. W. Peterson. Remains were shipped to Sioux City, Iowa, for interment.

TOWNLEY.—William Townley was born in Gloucestershire, England, February 14, 1828; was baptized into the Latter Day Saints' Church in 1849; married to Miss Henrietta Folk, June 3, 1850. In the spring of 1865 he and his wife emigrated to Utah, but his wife died on the plains. He was married January 15, 1868, to Miss Anna Festeren at Echo City, Utah. To this union were born six children, three remaining: Joseph, John W., and Mrs. Etta Jennings. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in January, 1870, and removed to Moorhead, Iowa, shortly afterwards, living there ever since. He passed away October 12, after an illness of only twenty-four hours. He was a faithful Saint, loved and respected by all. There are left to mourn, his wife, two sons, one daughter, grandchildren, and a host of friends. Funeral sermon by Elder J. C. Ballantyne, assisted by Elder Mark Jensen.

MORRIS.—Miss Pearl Morris, of Comstock, Nebraska, died October 15, 1911. She was born March 28, 1894; and being an exceptionally good girl, will be missed by everyone. There are left to mourn, a mother, eight brothers and sisters, and numerous relatives and friends. Funeral sermon by C. W. Prettyman.

MARK.—Edith L. Mark died September 24, 1911, at Flagler, Colorado. Her body was brought to Pleasanton, Iowa, and interred in the Hamilton Cemetery. Sermon was preached by M. M. Turpen, to a large crowd of friends of the deceased. She was born February 8, 1884, and united with the church November 19, 1903. Married to Charles E. Mark, February 21, 1904. She was of a quiet, lovely disposition, and had a spotless reputation.

SPANSWICK.—Valentine Spanswick was born in Easton, Wiltshire, England, July 30, 1868. Died September 13, 1911, at Logan, Iowa. He came to America with his mother, two brothers and two sisters, in September, 1886. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church June 13, 1887, by Elder David Chambers, at Persia, Iowa. Married to Mrs. Anna Clayton, January 17, 1892, from which union seven children were born, all of which, with the wife, survive to mourn. Brother "Vant," as he was familiarly known, was a kind and loving husband and father, and a good neighbor; one held in high esteem in the community, as was evidenced by the large attendance at his funeral. The services were held in Bethel Church. Sermon by Elder Robert Chambers, of Magnolia, Iowa. The Spirit ministered to the need of the bereaved ones through Brother Chambers to a wonderful degree, many saying they had never heard such a consoling funeral sermon. Interment was in Bethel Cemetery.

CONSTIPATION.

Mr. E. D.—32 years a victim of this dreaded disease (claimed incurable) was actually cured by the use of three sacks of Klar's Good Health Flour.

Constipation is the first step to bring on many other diseases. That is the reason your physician will investigate this important condition at once. Mothers innocently give the baby white flour boiled, commonly called "Pap" in the morning. This will starch the stomach and bowels just the same as it will your laundry or the wall paper. When evening comes the poor mother will say, "Oh, my, but the baby was restless. I must give it a big dose of castor oil or something to assist Nature." Mothers, stop and think. Do not be so thoughtless, always remove the cause. If your baby is restless, let me help you Free of Charge. I love children too much to see the little ones abused and whirled into a premature death. Constipation among wild animals is unknown, likewise with domestic animals if fed properly.

THE STUDENT; HIS AIM AND METHODS.

Baccalaureate sermon delivered by Elder Elbert A. Smith before the graduating class of the Lamoni High School, May 21, 1911. Reported by Estella Wight.

I greet the teachers of the high school, the class of 1911, and the friends and brethren who are here this morning, and invite your attention to a scripture reading from Proverbs.

A wicked man hardeneth his face; but as for the upright, he directeth his way. There is no wisdom nor understanding nor counsel against the Lord. The horse is prepared against the day of battle; but safety is of the Lord. A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor rather than silver and gold. The rich and poor meet together: the Lord is the maker of them all. A prudent man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself; but the simple pass on, and are punished. By humility and the fear of the Lord are riches, and honor, and life.

The lesson that I have read presents the thought that the wise and prudent man will direct his own way with a view to pleasing God. The subject that I have selected is in harmony with that idea.

THE STUDENT, HIS METHOD, AND AIM.

And as a text, I call your attention to the 15th verse of the 2d chapter of 2 Timothy: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

Any class of men or women engaged in any legitimate enterprise can safely take this text from its original setting and apply it to themselves.

An occasion like this, that calls us together this morning, is especially pleasing to me. Here we have certain young people who have carried their education to a certain point in the free schools of the land; having reached that point, the community, the press, and the pulpit take notice of that fact in a formal way, and bid them godspeed in their further development in the activities of life.

I congratulate these young people in the thought that Providence has been very good to them in permitting them to be born and to reach maturity in an age of remarkable mental and material activity and development in the land of the free. I know some people like to poke fun at our boasted American liberty and freedom, and one Englishman has said in this regard that our boasted liberty means merely that we are free to "eat peanuts and scatter the shells wherever we please." That, in a small way, is supposed to be typical of our larger licenses in the sacred name of liberty, and I think if you will watch Americans you will discover many of them, figuratively speaking, scattering their peanut shells where they will annoy and disturb other people; but really I think that we have a larger measure of liberty than we appreciate, perhaps. I notice that when Booker T. Washington was traveling through Europe some time ago, when he was invited to deliver an address before the Y. M. C. A. at Budapest he was required to announce his subject three days before the date of the lecture. When he delivered his address a stenographer was there representing the Government, to take down his address so as to discover whether there were objectionable sentiments expressed. In this land no speaker is required to announce his subject beforehand. There they seem to think that all public speakers are anarchists. But here we proceed on the supposition that a public speaker is innocent until he is proven guilty. Sometimes I have thought it would be a good thing if some of us were required to announce our subject,—then people would know what we were talking about.

THE STUDENT SHOULD SUCCEED.

We must admit that we are living in an age that demands success. The usual question asked about a young man who applies for a position is, Can he make good? The usual question that is asked about a man who has filled a position in life for some time is, Has he made good? The world demands that men shall make good. The world is right. God demands that men shall make good, that they shall succeed, but God and the world do not always measure success by the same standards.

All things being considered, the student stands the best chance of any man in the world of being successful. The student is a factor that looms large in the history of the world. The blessings of the world have come through the student class. When I make that statement I do not wish it to be misunderstood. Some people think that a student is simply a book worm, and we are told that there are two kinds of book worms: men who would rather read than eat, and worms that would rather eat than read. But neither of these book worms is a student. The student engages in thought and research, yet reads what pertains to the present times, men, and events; he mingles with the affairs of life and with the world in such a way as to bestow upon the world the benefits of his study.

A RELIGION OF ACTION.

An accumulation of facts, reflection upon these facts, action based upon the conclusion that comes as a result of that reflection, that is the life of a student. I believe that such a course is typical of our modern western ideas, and it is also in harmony with Christianity, and not in harmony with some of the philosophies of the Eastern World, those Hindoo students of Brahminism. Their idea was that the ultimate goal of mankind was to be absorbed in Deity. All entity ceases and the individual becomes absorbed in God. This does not come as a result of good deeds by any means; in fact, according to their philosophy, good deeds may be a hindrance. Why, they say that deeds may be like a chain, it does not matter whether the links are of gold or of iron, if it binds a man. So it does not matter whether their deeds are good or bad so long as they bind men to the world and hold them in touch with mundane affairs. So they retire from the activities of men and engage in fasting and scourgings and meditation, extending over many years, until they come into possession of the knowledge which is their salvation.

The Buddhists have a slightly different idea, yet much the same. Their idea of celestial glory is a place in which the individual passes beyond all toils, all desires cease, all passion is over, and that condition is obtained in precisely the way that we have outlined.

But Christianity is directly opposed to this. It is Christ against Buddha. Christ admits action based upon the conclusions at which we have arrived through study. That is why, in harmony with our western ideas, one of our poets has said,

"Let us then be up and doing
With a heart for any fate."

That is in harmony with Christianity, and in harmony with the true idea that moves the true scholar.

MEN DO NOT RIDE HAPHAZARD INTO GLORY.

But some of you may say, You certainly will not put the scholar class higher than the great warriors and statesmen and others who have blessed the world. When I say that our greatest blessings have come through the student class, I refer to that student class that is found among all classes of men, and when you read the history of the world you will discover that those men who have been successful in any field have been students. We might question how it was concerning the great military men. We turn over the pages of our history to the great Civil War. On the Northern side of that conflict there were three great generals developed, Grant, Sherman, and Sheridan, differing a great deal in their individuality, still they came to the front. When we discover that they came to the front among many, many thousands of men, it is not necessary to say that they were men of courage and of ability; but there were many who were just as courageous and just as brave among the privates. And on the Southern side there was one that was the peer of any one of these, just as good and just as brave. General Robert E. Lee. These four men were educated in the government, military school at West Point, every one of them. They had studied warfare theoretically, and they studied it in actual practice when they came to the scene of battle. They were students of their profession. That was one reason why they came to the front.

In the Spanish American War there were three admirals who came prominently before the people, Dewey, Sampson, and Schley. These three men were educated in the naval academy at Annapolis. There were just as brave men in their vessels as they were, but these men knew how to handle battleships. That was their profession. They were competent. They had studied their profession.

Passing back of our own brief history; we find that the great Napoleon at the age of ten entered a military school, and later passed from that into another one in Paris. His great adversary, Wellington, was educated in a British military school. These men continued students when they actually came into the practice of warfare, and Emerson tells us in his essay on Napoleon, that his battles were all planned on paper; they were all fought out carefully before he ever entered upon them. Men do not ride haphazard into glory.

THE STUDENT IN THE WHEAT FIELD.

Passing from these bloody fields of battle to the more profitable profession of agriculture, we are told that there was a time in the history of Rome during its decline when the farmers who sowed seed in the ground, only reaped four and sometimes only two bushels for each bushel of seed that they had sown. Why was it? It was because no one was studying agriculture. The free men of intelligence were studying politics and war; the serfs were in the fields. There was plenty of muscle in the Roman fields, but there were no brains.

To-day men recognize the advantage of the study of agriculture. We have our various agricultural schools. We have one at Ames, in Iowa, and it is said that Professor Holden has increased the yield of corn in the State many thousands of bushels by his methods of seed corn testing and teaching the farmers corn culture.

I have before me a letter received from the school at Ames just two or three day ago. It says:

In response to many requests the State College at Ames will hold a summer school there June 12-24, 1911. An opportunity will be given to study horses, hogs, sheep, cattle, poultry, butter, cream, soils, fruit, vegetables, flowers, grasses, weeds, insects, corn, oats, cooking, sewing, sanitation, manual training and numerous other subjects, besides having a chance to review arithmetic, reading, physics, algebra, and other studies required for teachers' certificates.

The teaching will be done by the regular college faculty and other experts. Besides the regular class work, use will be made of the laboratories, experimental plots and fields, and the live stock and other valuable equipment belonging to the college.

There will be lectures, demonstrations and conferences to consider ways, means and methods. A convention of all the county superintendents in Iowa will be held at Ames, June 8, 9, 10, to consider public school problems. The last week will be "Rural Life Week" and many conferences will be held by ministers, educators, and others interested in rural life, and prominent people from this and other States will address them. Excursions and entertainments will enliven the time. Anyone may enter and choose any subjects offered. The program will be so planned that those who wish to take certificate subjects can do so and also take agricultural work while those who do not wish the certificate subjects may put the entire time on agriculture, nature study, home economics, and manual training. These two weeks will be packed full of valuable study and healthful recreation, and all who can should accept this opportunity. The fee is only three dollars.

By way of contrast with the agriculture of Rome I mention the achievement of Jerry Moore, of Winona, South Carolina, who holds the world's record as champion corn grower. In 1910 he produced two hundred and twenty-eight bushels and three pecks of corn on one acre of land. Jerry Moore is a student of corn and soil.

THEORY BASED ON FACT.

We have discovered that the student is the man who succeeds in agriculture as well as in war. We do not need to examine other fields because we will find that it is true in all of them that the man who studies his profession is the man who is valuable to society, and the man who will succeed. Of course this is not in harmony with the idea that we sometimes entertain, that while individuals are passing through school they are students; then they graduate and are students no longer. We believe that education should begin with the cradle, and it should not end this side of the grave. We believe that students should proceed in their studies with the idea of discovering truth. Darwin tells us that when he began to study into the origin of species, he spent five years collecting facts before he ever stopped to formulate a single theory. When he had collected all these facts he began to speculate and attempt to reach conclusions based upon those facts. The conclusions that he reached were opposed to those of his fellow-scientists, as well as the religious world, but nevertheless he published them. Whether we accept his theories or not we must concede, that in at least that particular, he followed the correct course. He based his theories on that which he considered to be a fact. He did not adopt a theory, and then go out and try to find facts to support it, and failing to find these facts, wrest facts so they would support that theory. Many individuals do that in this day. They do it in politics; they do it in religion; they do it in science. Like the archæologist, who, it is said, was discovered on a hillside one day attempting to roll a large rock from a certain place; when asked why he was doing it, he said that it was in a wrong geological position. It did not support his theory, and so he moved it. Many individuals go through life carrying out that philosophy. Religionists have accepted a certain theological idea, perhaps from their fathers, and they go through the Bible wresting the Scriptures to harmonize with that idea. Men have been trying to roll the great rocks of truth from where God has placed them to a point where they think they ought to be.

AN ACT TO PREVENT DIVERSITY OF OPINION.

Darwin was right in the next particular. When he discovered that which he thought to be a truth, he did not hesitate to accept it, even though it was contrary to the generally accepted idea. Some people think that we must not have diversity of opinion, but that we ought to conform to one standard, and it is said that some generations ago in England, Henry the Eighth caused Parliament to pass a bill that was called "An act to prevent the diversity of opinion."

But the idea of the student should be to arrive at that conception of truth which is pleasing in the eyes of God, that which will stand investigation, that which does not conflict with fact.

PERSONAL ENDEAVOR.

The next idea that is suggested by my text is that of personal endeavor. "Study to show thyself approved." Why, Paul even placed salvation on personal endeavor. He said, "Work out your own salvation in fear and trembling," of course predicating that work on what Christ had already done for man.

We talk about giving people an education. We can not give anybody an education. Everyone must get his education for himself. We can make it easier for men to get an education. We can place it within their reach, but they must acquire it themselves. It is the right of every free-born man and woman to stand on his or her own feet, self-supporting, working out his or her own salvation in harmony with his or her ideas of truth. It is true that we receive from society and from our friends that which we can not do for ourselves. But we must not lose sight of the fact that we should make to them in some way a return of that which is received. We must aim to pay our debts as we go along—our debt to society—and we must not wait until we are forced to pay it either.

PAYING OUR DEBTS.

Some men, however are like one of two traveling men, Jewish salesmen, who were on a train that was held up by train robbers a little way this side of Reno. And when the train robbers were coming through the train, making all the passengers give up their money and their valuables, one of these men took a roll of bills from his pocket and taking five of these bills handed them over to the other one saying, "Here is that fifty dollars that I have owed you for so long."

Now the man who was paid did not receive any benefit from that money. It was not of any value to him just then; but the other man saw that he could gain by giving it, and that nothing could be gained by keeping it any longer. He thought that the debt was canceled, and so it was, legally.

We have other men who proceed along this line. They go through life grinding the faces of the poor, accumulating wealth by dishonest and cruel methods, and finally, when death, that grim "hold up," is about to take everything from them, they fling back into the community an endowment for a hospital or a college and say, "Here, my debt is paid."

Is it? It may be, legally. The community may accept it in charity and say it is all right; but what about God? Ah, my friends, there is a point. We have forgotten God, and my text says that we should study to show ourselves approved, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. Let us then pay our debts to the community and to society and to God as we go along.

SELF-APPROVAL.

The next thought that I desire to present is the idea that we must all pass our own judgment, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." That suggests the idea that we are being judged or that we will be judged, of ourselves and that if we do not come up to the proper standard we will be ashamed.

Who is it that passes this judgment? Well, we might say that we pass this judgment on ourselves. I have a clipping before me from one of the papers that states that the collector of revenues at New York City recently received an anonymous letter containing ten dollars to go into the "Conscience Fund." What is this "Conscience Fund" that the Government must maintain? It is a fund to which men contribute who have cheated the Government, and their consciences will not permit them to keep that which they have obtained. They have escaped detection, but they are unable to escape themselves. What was it in the heart of that man that said, You must give that ten dollars back again? We call it conscience. It is that within us that sits in judgment and passes verdict on our own action. It is largely the result of our education; but we must, to a great extent, be governed by it, because we can not be governed by the consciences of other men, and so it is of the greatest importance that we should base our conscience on a proper education, a proper study of morals and of divine law, that we may know that our conscience is in harmony with divine conscience, and then we will be safe.

Conscience alone is not a safe guide, because it is a creature of circumstances. Away back yonder in the history of Jerusalem there stood outside of the walls in the valley that was called the "Vale of the Groans of Little Children" a brazen image that was fitted with a furnace so that it could be heated extremely hot, an image erected to the god Moloch, and there came mothers with their little children who gave them to the priests, and the priests threw them into the arms of the brazen image, and they were burned alive, and the conscience of those mothers told them they were doing a worthy deed. It is true that the priests stood and beat their instruments so that the mothers could not hear the cries of their infants, else their conscience might have been aroused to a different verdict.

Our consciences have changed since then. We do not do that now. It is true that as a community every year we fling a certain number of our children to the saloon and the legalized red light district, and the politicians make so much noise about the revenue received to apply on taxes that we can not hear the cries of our children. But the day will come when we will no longer tolerate such sacrifices. Conscience is a matter of education, and we should study that our conscience may be in harmony with God. It is of great value to us that we can have the answer of a good conscience in our conduct in life.

VALUE OF A GOOD NAME.

We also pass under the judgment of other individuals around us. But some one says that it does not matter what other people say. Now, why does it matter? Yes, it matters; because human fellowship is a valuable possession. Human fellowship makes life bearable. It is a terrible thing to be ostracized, to be shut off from our fellows, to extend the hand of fellowship and have it rejected. If we were to strike out from our vocabulary the words father and mother, brother and sister, wife and sweetheart, friend and comrade, take out of our lives all that these mean, life would not be worth living. If public sentiment is against us, our fellowship with others is necessarily curtailed. We are cut off from friendship and from association, and from the sweet comradeship of life. We can not afford to be thus deprived unnecessarily. It is true that we sometimes must do it in the interests of a great cause, as when Christ sent his apostles out and told them that they should go, leaving their homes and their relatives, and should freely make the sacrifice, even though public sentiment should be against them. It will not matter much under such conditions what people say. But we can not afford to lose the confidence, the love, the fellowship of good citizens of the community without good cause. We can not afford to do that to gratify ourselves in passion, or in pride, or in dishonesty, or anything that would lower us in the estimation of men who are good and honest and upright.

It is true that sometimes we attach too much importance to the opinion of certain individuals, and we gauge our opinion of them according to their circumstances in life. A case in point is regarding the Parisian newspaper that chronicled the return of Napoleon from his exile in Elba. He came back to France to seize the reins of government again. The first announcement of his return said, "The Corsican outlaw has landed on the coast of France." The next one said, "The base usurper has reached Cannes." But as Napoleon drew a little bit nearer and his power began to ascend, the next edition of the paper had this, "General Napoleon Bonaparte has reached Lyons." And after three or four days the paper came out with the announcement, "His Imperial Majesty, the Emperor, has reached Paris." The "base outlaw" became "His Imperial Majesty" when he ascended to a position of power, and I think sometimes that we value the good will of men according to the position that they obtain by oppression, or by virtue of money, or some other influence that they have brought to bear. Men who yesterday we considered dishonorable to-day are favored with honorable mention because they have reached a position of power. The title has changed, we have changed, but the man is not changed.

THE APPROVAL OF GOD.

The next tribunal that sits in judgment on the affairs of men is God himself, and right here we find the great lesson that is contained in my text, that God is the Great Judge of all. We are answerable to him. He is scrutinizing our every act. We can not escape from his all-seeing eye. Some day, some time we must come before him in judgment. It is of the greatest importance that we shall so live our lives that we shall merit his approval now, and also receive it in the day of final judgment.

So I believe that this morning I can not do better than to extend to these young people the apostolic admonition, that they shall study to show themselves approved unto God, workmen that need not to be ashamed.

SAINTS' HERALD DOCTRINAL SERIES.

XV.—THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST; WILL IT BE LITERAL?

BY W. J. HAWORTH, EDITOR OF THE AUSTRALIAN "GOSPEL STANDARD."

Will the second advent of our Lord be literal? While many believe it will be so, a great many believe that he simply comes back at the death of every Christian and takes the faithful one to heaven, to be for ever with him. Another and smaller section believe that the second advent took place at the fall of Jerusalem. The first theory is out of harmony with the idea of the "second" coming of Christ, inasmuch as it would keep Jesus constantly employed in coming back to earth for dying Christians. The second can not be true, because it leaves no room for the fulfillment of the prophecies relative to the prior "falling away" from primitive Christianity. One of these prophecies is positive. Speaking with regard to the coming of Christ, Paul says:

"That day shall not come, except there come a falling away first." (2 Thessalonians 2: 3.) Though Paul states that the "mystery of iniquity" was already working (verse 7), the "falling away" had by no means become universal at the fall of Jerusalem, and this precludes the possibility of the second coming having taken place then.

A LITERAL APPEARING.

The language employed with reference to the appearing of the Savior is so definite that it is a logical impossibility to reach any other conclusion than that his advent will be literal. The following texts are in point:

Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation.—Hebrews 9: 28 (see also Psalm 102: 16).

Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ.—Titus 2: 13.

Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.—1 John 3: 2. (See also Job 19: 25.)

Just as literally as men "look for him" will he "appear." And John puts the matter beyond controversy when he says "we shall see him." His feet shall "stand" on the Mount of Olives also. (Zechariah 14: 4.)

HIS COMING WILL BE VISIBLE.

The promise that "we shall see him" is reiterated in several places in Scripture. The following are examples:

And they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory.—Matthew 24: 30.

Behold, he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him.—Revelation 1: 7.

And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory.—Luke 21: 27. (See also Mark 13: 26; Daniel 7: 13; Isaiah 40: 5, 10.)

THE PROMISE OF HIS RETURN.

The nearness of his ascension weighing upon him, and looking forward to their grief when the approaching separation came, the Savior spoke the following words to his disciples:

Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.—John 14: 1-3.

He was going to heaven to prepare for his people a place in the city of God. Later on, we shall prove that he is coming back to prepare the earth for the descent of the holy city to it. (See Revelation 21: 1-4.) Then his perfected Saints will dwell in the very presence of God in the "mansions" which he has prepared for them.

At the ascension the promise of his return was again given:

While they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Gallilee, why stand ye gazing into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven.—Acts 1: 10, 11.

There is no question of the ascension being literal. The above proves that the return will be just as literal. He will come in like manner as they had seen him go.

AS LITERAL AS THE FLOOD.

The disciples were taught to be continually watching lest the second advent should find them unprepared. Christ will come without warning—as a thief in the night (Matthew 24: 43)—suddenly, as the lightning flashes from east to west. (Matthew 24: 27; Luke 17: 24.) The thief and the lightning are realities, and that which comes as suddenly and swiftly must also be actual and literal.

The parable of the ten virgins (Matthew 25:1-13) also teaches the necessity of watchfulness, and the sudden, literal appearing of our Lord. The same truths are taught in the parable of the man traveling in a far country. (Matthew 25: 14-30.)

The stern, retributive reality of the flood is also used to impress us with the literal nature of the coming of Christ and the necessity of righteous living. We are informed that "as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be" (Matthew 24: 37). Before the flood the majority of the people were given over wholly to worldly pleasure and unrighteousness; so will they be before the coming of Jesus. This is literal in both instances. So also was the flood. In the light of such a comparison can the second coming of Christ be other than literal?

WITH TEN THOUSAND OF HIS SAINTS.

Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied while the father of the race was still alive: "The Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints."—Jude 14. Paul refers to the same event when he says "them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." (1 Thessalonians 4: 14.)

Zechariah also states: "The Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee."—Zechariah 14: 5.

The coming of Christ will be the signal for the resurrection of the righteous dead—the first resurrection. Their bodies lie in the tomb. He will bring their spirits from their resting place in paradise. (Revelation 6: 9-11; Zechariah 14:5; 1 Thessalonians 4: 14.) Paul says:

For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord.—1 Thessalonians 4: 14-17.

Here combined with the rapture of the living saints and the resurrection of the ones that "sleep in Jesus," we learn of the literal appearing of the Lord himself.

The same event is treated in Revelation 19: 11-21 and Revelation 20: 1-6. However, a little more detail is given. In chapter 19 it is seen that at his coming the combined forces of the earthly kingdoms will be arrayed against him. We look out over the world to-day in a mental glance, and we are amazed at the contribution of each nation of prominence to the vast and varied store of death-dealing instruments,—by sea, the mighty dreadnoughts and super dreadnoughts, with their tremendous armament and swift moving coteries of cruisers, destroyers, and submarines, by land the seemingly impregnable fortifications with their tremendous gunpower, and artillery, cavalry, mounted infantry, infantry, etc., with their up-to-date and efficient equipment. Think of the aggregated power of these stupendous fighting forces gathered in one army, if fighting against ordinary flesh and blood mortals!

Such an army would be all-conquering if fighting against mortals, but what will be the utility of these terrible engines of death when opposed to a "deathless army"? Opposed to the King of kings and his heavenly host the earth forces will suffer utter extermination. There is no indication, however, that this fate will befall the peaceful inhabitants of the earth. But we will give further attention to these presently.

The 20th chapter opens with the binding of Satan. He is cast into the "bottomless pit," shut up and a seal set upon him, "that he should deceive the nations no more" till the millennial reign of Christ and his people is over. This indicates that there will be nations upon earth from whom God desires to remove the possibility of satanic temptation during the reign of Christ. The 4th and 6th verses show that the righteous dead participate in the first resurrection, are made kings and priests unto God, sit upon thrones, receive judgment and "reign with Christ a thousand years." "The rest of the dead live not again till the thousand years are finished" (verse 5.)

Revelation 5: 10, indicates that this reign will be upon the earth—"we shall reign on the earth." This is in harmony with the promise of the Savior, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne."—Revelation 3: 21.

"THY KINGDOM COME."

The Savior taught his disciples to pray: "Thy kingdom come!" Not only is the Lord coming again, but he is coming to establish a literal kingdom in answer to the above universal prayer. The Jews looked for his coming to establish this kingdom, for it had been long foretold. They overlooked, however, the prophetic utterances with reference to his first advent. "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom," was the request of the dying thief. The request of the two sons of Zebedee that they should sit one on either side of the Savior in his glory shows also the trend of his teaching.

Daniel says of Christ's second coming and reception of the kingdom:

I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed.—Daniel 7:13, 14.

This literal, world-wide kingdom, with everlasting dominion, is the direct gift of God as seen above. It has been long promised: "I will declare the decree: The Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my son; this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel."—Psalm 2: 7-9.

At the coming of Christ all earthly kingdoms will be "dashed in pieces" and merged into the "kingdom of God and of his Christ" (Revelation 11: 15). "The uttermost parts of the earth," will be included in his dominions. His kingdom is thus seen to be literal and world-wide. In Daniel 7: 27, the territory of the kingdom is shown to be "under the whole heaven." ("Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end." Isaiah 14: 9), and he will "govern the nations upon earth" (Psalm 67: 4). In this kingly reign his perfected and immortal saints will participate. They are "heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ" (Romans 8: 17). He makes them "kings and priests" (Revelation 5: 10; 20: 6); they shall "reign on the earth" (Revelation 5: 10).

A LITERAL INHERITANCE.

David spoke of a literal inheritance when in Psalm 37:11, he wrote: "The meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace." The Savior, who taught a literal second advent, and the establishment of a literal kingdom, also stated: "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth" (Matthew 5: 5). Daniel adds his testimony, "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." (Daniel 7: 27; read also verses 18 and 22.)

It is therefore apparent that the resurrected, immortal saints are to share with Christ the possession of the kingdom upon earth.

A LITERAL REIGN.

We have seen that Christ is to receive the "heathen as his inheritance" (Psalm 2: 9), that he is to "govern the nations" (Psalm 67: 4), be "king over all the earth" (Zechariah 14: 9), and that "all dominions shall serve and obey him" (Daniel 9: 29). In this reign his people are to share (Revelation 5: 10; 20: 4, 6). The seed of the church—Christ's bride—is to "rule all nations with a rod of iron" (Revelation 12: 5). This "seed" is her faithful offspring, who have overcome the world, subdued the weaknesses and imperfections of the flesh, and possessed themselves of titles to eternal kingship and priestly dominion in the kingdom of God. Collectively they are the kingdom of God, triumphantly manifested (Romans 8: 19), and brought to birth by the militant church (see Revelation 12: 7, I. T.).

This is in harmony with the promise of the Savior:

And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: even as I received of my Father.—Revelation 2: 26, 27.

Here we learn that the saints are to receive "power over the nations" and that they "shall rule them." This demonstrates the fact that there will be others besides Christ and his immortal saints upon earth, which corroborates the testimony on this point already given (Psalm 2: 9; Daniel 7: 27). The following is also in harmony: "Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? . . . Know ye not that we shall judge angels?"—1 Corinthians 6: 2, 3. Some believe that this judgment of angels will take place in heaven, and that the resurrected saints will go there for that purpose. But the fallen angels, not heavenly beings, will be judged (see Jude 6). The judging and ruling will be upon earth, over living nations and fallen angels. A literal reign!

A LITERAL SEPARATION.

When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats.—Matthew 25: 31, 32.

This is not the final judgment mentioned in Revelation 20: 11-15 over which God himself will preside. It is the beginning of the rule of Jesus, the Prince of peace. There will be some surprises in that day. Read the remainder of the chapter (Matthew 25). Note the distinction drawn between "all nations" and "these my brethren." Note also the surprise of those gathered on the right hand when told that they had ministered to Jesus, through "these my brethren." Again, note the chagrin of those on the left hand who have not thus ministered. It is a fact that many will be rewarded in that day for thus ministering who have not professed Christianity, while many who have made the profession will be punished for not ministering to "these my brethren." These will probably be those over whom Christ and "his brethren" shall reign.

For evidence of mortals upon earth during the reign of Christ, read Isaiah 62: 17-25, noting particularly the death of the "sinner" and of the "child" at the age of a hundred years (verse 20). Read also Isaiah 11: 1-9, noting the "little child" (verse 6) and the "sucking child" (verse 8). Children could only be born of mortal parents, for "in the resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of heaven" (Matthew 22: 30).

In Zechariah 14, the story of the second advent is retold. The destruction of the armies of the nations is forecasted; the coming of the Lord with power and great glory; the coming of his saints from paradise (verse 5); the establishment of his rule over all the earth (verse 9). Verse 16 informs us that some will be "left" of the nations whose armies are destroyed, while verses 17 to 19 furnish us with proof that those that are "left" will be mortal beings, subject to the inconveniences of mortality and the ravages of death.

CHRIST THE RESTORER OF ALL THINGS.

Because of the fall, the earth was "cursed for man's sake." Since then it has brought forth thorns, briars, and weeds in such abundance and variety that the curse pronounced upon man "in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread" has been an established fact. The world has grown old in sinning and the harvest will reveal a heavy crop of vice, villiany, ungodly graft, pleasure seeking, selfishness, drunkenness, gluttony, debauchery, financial depravity, and the thousand and one noxious "weeds" which disfigure the "great harvest field." There is consequently much sickness, disease, and death. He is coming to remove the curse from the earth, to cause it to "yield its increase" (Ezekiel 34: 27) instead of producing the large percentage of rubbish incidental to the curse. He will also restore righteousness and banish sin. The day of the usurer and the grafter will be past. The millionaire oppressor, the unjust employer, the greedy landlord, the maker and vender of soul-destroying liquor, the dealer in sexual shame and immorality, the gambler, the "grab-all," and all who love sin and iniquity will be banished, and a kingdom based upon truth, holiness, and obedience to God, established. This will mark the "restitution of all things" (Acts 3: 21), and until this time "the heaven" must "receive" Jesus.

Paul enlightens us upon this phase of the subject as follows:

As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming. Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, the Father; when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power. For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death.—1 Corinthians 15: 22-26.

It is the Savior's desire to present to the Father a "glorious church (kingdom) not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing" (Ephesians 5: 27). With this object in view he will reign until all enemies have been subdued and "everything that offends" has been cast out of the kingdom. His rule will be so absolute and his work so successful that at last, all other enemies having succumbed, the grim monster death will be destroyed. Then he will deliver up the kingdom to God, "that God may be all and in all" (1 Corinthians 15: 28). Previous to this, however, the end of the thousand years will have arrived, and Satan will be loosed out of his prison. There will be a "little season" (Revelation 20: 3) during which he will be active and will deceive vast numbers of the subjects of the nations upon earth. They will make war against the saints and meet with destruction (Revelation 20: 9). After this the judgment will sit (verses 11-13), God himself being the great judge. All the wicked dead will then be raised and judged, after which the complete victory of Christ will be apparent.

THE MANY MANSIONS.

"I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband."—Revelation 21: 2. Now, the city of God, with the mansions which Jesus went to heaven to prepare (John 14: 3), is upon the earth. The earth has been cleansed, purified, and made fit for the "many mansions" and the saints may now enter and dwell with the great God.

And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he shall dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away.—Revelation 21: 3, 4.

The triumphant Savior has handed up the kingdom to God, and is himself subject to the Father (1 Corinthians 15: 28). He has conquered every foe, and eternity now smiles upon a kingdom of peace, equity, unity, and true worship of the only true God. Truth and right are triumphant over worldly power and pomp and might. Virtue is enthroned where vice once reigned. The pain and suffering incidental to the curse are banished and there is no more death. The self-righteousness of man has given place to the righteousness of God. Tried and found faithful, cleansed, purified, perfected, the saints dwell with Jehovah and his Christ. Faithful unto death, through trials, temptations, persecutions, afflictions, they enter upon their eternal reward, their joy complete.

Reader, is the coming of Christ literal? Will he really establish his kingdom? Will he restore all things? Will he banish the curse and cursed conditions? Will he conquer every foe? Will he make the earth fit for the descent of the city of God? Will he fulfill his promises in this direction? What think you? As for me

I am looking and I'm longing for the bright and glorious day
When the blessed Lord shall come to earth again,
When his loving voice shall say, You with all the faithful may Enter in upon the great millennial reign.

Chorus:

Looking and longing with love in my heart,
Looking and longing, longing for him,
Looking and longing with joy in my soul,
Yes, looking and longing for him.

I am working and I'm praying that my soul may be prepared
In his glorious kingdom evermore to dwell.
If against the world I've dared, make the character I've reared
A just rebuke to sin, 'twill all be well.

I am hung'ring and I'm thirsting for his righteous will to be Established on this earth of sin and woe,
In that great millennial day, when all men shall own his sway,
And his kingdom triumph over every foe.

Of General Interest

Christ's Influence on Law.

Christ was not a lawyer. But he knew the law—the principles that abide; and the prophets were his familiars. He loved justice for its own sake and adjudged the erring with compassion. Witness, his decree pronounced against the scarlet woman—"Go and sin no more." Morality and absolute right he sought to make the law's enduring cornerstones.

With the passing years the principles he declared are finding lodgment, more and more, in the hearts and minds of men. They are becoming the basis and are entering into the letter and spirit of the law of every land and between all nations. Statutes are built and constitutions founded upon them. Before them cruel and inhuman punishments are giving way, death penalties are being abolished, children are no more hanged for petty theft, fair dealing for the weak is being demanded and rightful relations among men established. He is no longer a stranger in the court-room or the bench. All judgment seats are becoming his. Himself the victim of the most cruel and criminal miscarriage of justice the world ever knew, he has set in motion influences that will yet strip the ermine from the unjust judges of all the earth and lift the law above the reach of might or hate.

His code of ethics even now directs the conduct of the world's best statesmanship, and has made such progress in civilized countries that the statesman who refuses to be bound by its provisions can not hope for continued lease of power.

His precepts in some degree have become a part of the laws and the constitutions of all countries, and have taken such grip upon the mind of the race that the government which refuses to adopt them in some substantial measure has no assurance of peaceful existence. Such a government would soon find itself at war not only with the other nations of the world but with its own people, and could not long abide the white light of this new century.—From My Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, by J. Frank Hanly, former governor of Indiana. The Bobbs-Merrill Company, publishers, Indianapolis, 1911.

Church Reopening.

LATTER DAY SAINTS' BUILDING IS NOW A PLEASANT PLACE FOR WORSHIP.

The Latter Day Saints' church building of Saint Marys, which has been undergoing repairs for some time, was reopened with special services on Sunday. This is one of the oldest public buildings of frame structure now standing in Saint Marys. It was first used as a Presbyterian church, then as a Methodist church, and was finally purchased by a former resident of Saint Marys—the late Robert Brown. And nearly thirty years ago became the property of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, who are a distinct and separate body of people from the Salt Lake, or Utah Mormons, who are improperly called Latter Day Saints. A number of district conferences, and regular services were held in the building for years. Then because of removal to many places the membership became reduced, so that the building was not used so regularly and sank into a dilapidated condition.

The question agitating the remaining members was whether it was really worth the cost and labor of repairing. Upon examination, however, it was found that all the important timbers were as sound as ever, the building being heavy barn framework, and only the best of material having been used in its construction.

During the past summer Elder G. M. Shippy (now of Detroit) came to perform missionary labor here. He, being a natural genius, and many trade mechanic, was willing to use his days to work without pay, and also preach what he could evenings and Sundays. Cheered by this offer, those who thought the building would pay for repairing, and had already proposed to do so, came to the rescue with their means to purchase the material. Amongst the foremost of those was Elder G. C. Tomlinson, who has been absent on mission work for years, until owing to the sad bereavement that came to his home in the death of his son Charlie, and the ill health of his wife, he was obliged to remain home. He was supplemented, with work and means, by Messrs. Lee Gross and Frank Oliver, in a special manner. Still others aided with the work, and lesser amounts of means. The result is that the building is now a respectable-looking and pleasant place for worship, and not a dollar of debt against it.

The reopening day was disagreeable, because of the heavy and continued rain that was falling, which doubtless prevented many of the town's people from attending. Nevertheless, a goodly number drove in from the surrounding branches of the church, Rostock, Stratford, and Mitchell. A few came over from London on Saturday, and an auto load on Sunday.

The preaching was done by Elder R. C. Longhurst, of Vanessa, president of the London District, who has occupied the aforesaid position for the past seventeen years; and Elder John Shields, well known in Ontario because of his having lived twenty years of his life on a farm near Shelburne, and for twenty-four years has been steadily engaged in mission work in this province. Elder Longhurst returned to his home on Monday. Elder Shields remains for a few days, speaking in the church, Tuesday and Thursday evenings of this week.—Saint Marys (Ontario) Journal, Thursday, October 26, 1911.

It can not be too strongly urged that no one should send or bring a child to the home until fully authorized to do so. Needless trouble and expense may be avoided by giving heed to this admonition. At present the home is full and there is no room for those who come expecting to be accommodated there.

To many friends of the Children's Home the harvest time has brought enough and to spare. From the bounties with which you have been blessed will you not count it a privilege to give a portion for use at the home? Vegetables, fruit or grain will be gratefully received.

We are behind in the payment of our bills and each month adds a large amount for running expenses. We are depending upon free-will offerings to meet these expenses, and your help will be appreciated.

Babyhood. Supplementary Reading.

In my last report I spoke of the fact that for nearly a year we have been endeavoring to break our baby of the habit, formed in the first three weeks of his existence, of sucking his fingers. I am sure if it had not been for the wisdom and persistency of the editor [Dr. Mary Wood-Allen, the baby's grandmother] this effort would have been given up as hopeless. As it was we continued covering the hands with mittens at night and whenever the baby was put down for his nap. Once or twice we thought we saw an improvement, and lessened our vigilance, only to discover that the battle had not been won. When his teeth began to appear, this habit seemed for a time to grow stronger. Then we noticed that he didn't attempt to put his fingers in his mouth during the day, and so left off his mittens when he went to his day time nap. Two days later, we were encouraged to try leaving his hands free at night, and to our surprise we found that the habit was completely broken; and we have never been troubled with it since.

A year seems a long time in which to keep up such a struggle, but as we look back now we feel that it more than paid. Our boy has never gained the idea of having something to put into his mouth to quiet his cries or divert his attention or soothe him to sleep. We are quite sure that our not allowing him to suck his fingers or to use a soother has made it easier for us to keep him from forming the habit of putting all sorts of things into his mouth. At nine months he was given buttons to play with. He started to put them to his mouth, partly, no doubt, for the purpose of using the more sensitive nerves of the lips to tell him what these new things were like. He was told not to put the buttons to his mouth, however, and was shown how to drop them into a bottle and shake them out again. This greatly interested him, and after carefully watching him for a few days, we became convinced that it was safe to leave him alone with such playthings. As a consequence of his training, we have never had to be particular about what might be left within his reach. Pins he never once attempted to put in his mouth, but from the first, picked them up and handed them with the most engaging exclamation to whatever older person was in the room.

The method pursued in this case is typical of that used in all circumstances. It is our desire to prevent him from forming undesirable habits and so avoid the unpleasantness of breaking such habits later on. For instance, when he was first put up to the table in his high chair, he thought it interesting to pull on the tablecloth. He was not allowed to continue this form of amusement, however, but was told he must not do so; when he persisted his fingers were lightly snapped. He never has been touched hard enough to cause him the least physical pain, but he recognizes the snapping of his fingers as a sign of disapprobation, and being of exceedingly sensitive temperament, he is influenced thereby, and after two or three attempts, gives up that which has met with disapproval.

It was at about this same time that he began to throw things down from the table, or his chair, evidently with deliberate mischievousness. Of course, for the first time or two, before we realized the import of his actions, we picked things up and restored them to him. It soon became evident, however, that that was the purpose of his activity, whereupon the edict went forth that none of the things which he threw upon the floor were to be picked up and handed to him. It took only a few days for him to learn that whatever was thrown upon the floor was thereby lost to him, and, as that did not add to his enjoyment, he very quickly desisted.

His inclination to pull hair was treated in much the same way. He was not allowed to find any enjoyment in that way; but, on the contrary was told that he must not do so, although he was allowed once in a while to take out the hairpins. This he found most enjoyable and would pull them out carefully, almost never catching the hair with them, and then he would gravely stick them back in wherever his fancy dictated.

Like all babies, he has had the inclination to strike. He has never been allowed to hit anyone in the face. Once or twice he has done so with something in his hand and whenever this has occurred his hand has been turned against himself, and he has received a tap in the face with his own hand, of sufficient force to make him realize that it was not an enjoyable experience. He has never cried at these times, but has had a most astonished expression upon his face, for he does not know what it is to receive physical pain from another human being.

It must not be thought, however, that these desirable habits are taught him in a short time and once for all; on the contrary, it takes everlasting vigilance to keep him the happy, well-controlled child that we want him to be. For instance, every once in a while we notice a new attempt on his part to get his way by teasing. This takes different forms as he advances in intelligence and activity. He tries it one way; it does not succeed and he drops it for a time. Then it appears as though the thought came to him, "Now maybe I can get what I want in this way," and so he tries a new method. Of course, we may not always recognize it at the very start as tending toward a bad habit, but we are always on the lookout to see what the tendencies are and, as soon as we become convinced that he is forming the habit of getting his will in some undesirable way, we immediately set to work to overcome that tendency.

Like most children he is very persistent, and we have to be equally persistent, if we would be successful in our efforts. For instance, a couple of months ago he was given a tack hammer as a toy. It has been his daily companion. He never seems to tire of using it. He has been told over and over again that he can pound on the floor or on his block of wood, but that he can not pound on the walls, or the doors, or the book shelves, etc. Yet he still comes every now and then to some forbidden spot, and begins to tap with his hammer, keeping one eye fixed on his mother or grandmother, to see whether or not they are going to forbid him this time, as they have done previously. This is really a testing of those who have him in charge, and realizing it as such, they try always to call his attention to the fact that he is not allowed that form of amusement. There is a spirit of mischievousness there, also, which leads him to persist in his query; but no attempt is made to punish him for this spirit of fun. The prohibition is given each time and consistently adhered to, and in a little while he seems to get all the fun out of it that he desires, and goes back to safer methods of enjoyment. Once in a while there crops out a bit of contrariness, but, as a rule, if no attention is paid to it, he almost immediately comes happily to do that which has been required of him. To resist him at such times would doubtless strengthen the contrariness into obstinacy. It seems to be a part of the universal boyish desire to tease, and as soon as he sees that his actions do not have any teasing effect, the fun is gone out of it for him, and he readily does whatever is asked of him.

In the former report an account was given of the little "Thank you" game which was played with him before he could talk. Among the first words in his vocabulary were those of "Tat too," which is his pronunciation of "Thank you." He always says it when he gives or receives anything; and indeed, if any one of the family is remiss in this particular, he calls their attention to it. He has also learned the efficacy of "Please"; and he surprised the other members of his family several months ago by always remembering to say "excuse me," whenever he sneezed or yawned. Thus it may be seen that, early in life, the foundation principle of good manners may easily be taught, and thus will become second nature.

It seems to be a rather prevalent idea that a child who is brought up by principle must be surrounded by a multitude of prohibitions which deprive him of the amount of enjoyment which should belong to childhood. I feel sure that an unbiased observer would not find such to be the case with our boy. There are but few rules which he is required to respect. He is not allowed to eat between meals; he must take a nap every morning; he must not pound on the walls or the furniture; nor tear books or papers. Aside from these particulars, he is allowed to do almost all that he chooses to do. He is encouraged whenever possible along the lines he attempts. For instance, when he first showed a desire to climb upstairs, pains were taken to show how that might best be done, and day after day someone was found to stand behind him while he climbed the stairs, three, four, five, six times in succession. This was kept up until the novelty had worn off, and he was ready to take up something else.

One of our correspondents asks how we have been able to teach a nineteen-months-old baby to feed himself neatly. It has been done simply by following out the idea of encouraging him in that which he attempts. Of course, like all children, he desired to feed himself; so instead of saying, "No, no," and interfering with his wishes, we simply guided his hand so that the spoon took up a fair amount of food and carried it with safety to his mouth. By so doing his muscles soon learned the proper attitude and motions, and in a very little while he was able to feed himself quite neatly. He now uses his spoon in his right hand and his little silver pusher in his left, and eats with the same gravity and decorum as the older members of the family.

He finds his greatest joys in helping with the housework. At nineteen months of age he trots out into the kitchen with the silver which has been given him, or something else that is safe for him to carry. He superintends the process of washing and wiping the dishes, and helps to put them away.

But best of all he loves to make bread. He sits up in his high chair beside the table and turns the handle of the sifter; he pours in the water or the milk, and then, finally, is given his own little lump of dough which he kneads, and watches when it is put into the oven until it comes out done. We see here the very beginning of that process of helpfulness which may be developed in a very little child, if the proper opportunity is given.—Rose Woodallen Chapman.

[We publish the following because the sister has many friends in Lamoni who, we are sure, would be glad to hear from her, as we were, and because her action may inspire others to "go and do likewise."]

COQUILLE, OREGON, October 25, 1911.

Inclosed you will find ten dollars for the Children's Home. It has been a long time since I left Lamoni, but I presume you have not forgotten me, as you are distinctly in my mind. I shall never forget the people that I mingled with in Lamoni; it is a bright spot in my memory; there are some we shall never see again; others that we may.

Sister Resseguié, this Sister Leboe is past seventy-five years old, she is a sister of Bro. Albert Haws, and a daughter of old Peter Haws that was with the church in early days; was quite prominent in the work at Nauvoo. She saw Brethren Joseph and Hyrum after they were killed, and were lying in the pool of blood. She is a very interesting old lady. She lived at Salt Lake City. Sister Mast is her daughter.

I am very much interested in the Children's Home; I think it is one of the grandest works there is, to save the children. To me it is greater than the missionary work. I know that that is necessary, but if the children were saved there would be less of such work needed.

There is so much in one being entirely consecrated to the work, being, in earnest, being filled with the Spirit, and showing it by their example, and by controlling themselves. In so doing they are helping themselves, as well as the children. I know we are surrounded with those things that try one's patience and strength, but when we know we must control ourselves in order to have the desired effect upon ourselves, as well as setting a good example to the children we love in our care, then is when we are helped and strengthened. It is a grand work, and my prayer is that God's blessings will be with all those of the home, that he will be with them to direct them in all their ways. I shall continue to do all I can, and am interesting others, and the Sunday schools, that there might be more or less sent to the home.

Hoping and praying for your success.

MRS. LAURA A. SAVAGE.

A sister from Adrain, Illinois, writes:

To the Matron of the Children's Home; Dear Sister: While eating our evening meal this Lord's Day we were talking among ourselves of buying articles to wear, etc., when my mind wandered to the Children's Home and the letter of Sister Burton in the HERALD. I made the remark that we had better be sending an offering to the home to buy a cow.

My little boy, who is eight, asked what for, and I explained to him. In all earnestness he said, "I'll send ten cents, mamma." I laughed and answered that that would be a small amount.

In silence we ate on, when presently the sweet influence of the Master stole over me, and all in vain did I turn my head away to hide the falling tears. As I wept and understood the beautiful spirit of sacrifice the boy slid away from the table, and the next I knew I heard the dear voice counting out the pennies. I bowed my head and asked Him who knows our vanities to forgive me my follies and I would send a small offering along with the pennies. In the light of the blessed Spirit, how little our clothing amounts to when compared with his work, and surely the home is a work of love.

My boy has the habit of saving all his pennies and banking them. Has a nice little deposit in his own name, but only had a few at this time at home. As he deposited them on the table in a pile, he said: "I don't want to be stingy with my money. If anything needs helping, I'll help it. I know this is a good cause." A childish way to express it, but how true!

I told him that I would send his offering and one of my own; not that it amounts to much, but I wish to encourage him along this line. He decided by saying that God would help him get more money, and who can say that he won't help us all, when we help him willingly and humbly, as a little child? I always love to give when money is convenient, but will admit that a new dress or hat, for instance, tempts me sorely and most always the offering waits; hence the request for pardon.

Do not know why I brace up enough to write you this, for I am too backward to write lots of times when the Holy Spirit would dictate.

Inclosed find our two mites, as Sister Emma called hers, and may you be blessed in your management of the home. I trust the cows and other necessities will be forthcoming.

Excerpts from Letters Received.

We are a little band of isolated Saints who wish to help provide for the children in the home. We would like to know what is most needed.—Mrs. Flora Reed, Coodys Bluffs, Oklahoma.

Am sending you a bill of lading for a barrel of clothing, sent by freight. Will send our pledge money right away.—Mrs. P. E. Bellesle, Port Huron, Michigan.

A good idea, of saving our nickels, so I am going to start at once. I ask you to accept one dollar for the past year. I hope to do better next.—Mrs. A. E. Hooper, Inglewood, Ontario.

Letter Department

FULTON, IOWA, September 25, 1911.

Editors Herald: We are still alive and moving onward. Some time ago Bro. L. E. Hills was here and preached about ten sermons for us and baptized eight, four heads of families and four Sunday school scholars. One was baptized earlier and one since. They all seem to rejoice in the gospel. These that were baptized were about ready some time ago. There are others near the kingdom now.

After our reunion at Moline, Illinois, Bro. J. S. Roth came here and preached one week, and he was indeed a welcome brother, as he was the instrument of raising up the Fulton Branch. His preaching was powerful and very instructive. We hope he will visit us again soon. As he had previously made arrangements to be at other places he could not stay longer here. I took him to see other old-time Saints who were very well pleased to see him. All the Saints here have a very warm welcome for our dear old veteran soldier of the cross. May his life long be spared, so he may labor for the Master and bring souls to Christ.

Also at Maquoketa, seven miles from here, the work is onward. Baptized a man there September 17, of the Advent faith. He now seems to be happy in the gospel. His wife was to go with him but for some reason put it off until she understood the work better. We still look for others there. Oh, would only the Saints all live pure, devoted lives for the Master, what a power for good they would wield! We all have an influence over our fellow-man. Then let us do our best and do it well.

Our Sunday school Quarterlies have been very good and gave those who were baptized a better understanding of our work. What noble literature we have for the young and if parents see to it to have their children read the publications there will be no need of them going astray.

May God bless his work.

JOHN HEIDE.

WARRINGTON, ENGLAND, October 19, 1911.

Dear Editors Herald: There are so many of the Lancashire Saints in America that I feel it will interest them to know that the Wigan Branch of the church, in Lancashire, England, is once again in a very good condition; and after being closed for a period of four years is now holding regular meetings under the presidency of Elder William Spargo. The interest is exceedingly good; and many are investigating the work.

I have charge of the mission for the time being, and I baptized four precious souls into the kingdom on October 5; there are more that have given their names for baptism. We have also been called in to administer to others that were sick; and they were not members of the church; and many requests for ministration come to hand from those who are interested in the church. I have a feeling that the day is not far distant when the "work of God" will be sought by many; and we as the ministers of the church will be called upon to demonstrate the powers of the church to save the tempted and tried; I should therefore like to ask that all the ministry should work with one idea in their minds, and that is, that the worth of souls is very great in the sight of God; and it is far better to be saving souls than squabbling over trifling incidents that distress the minds of all those that are engaged in doing so.

I am laboring by appointment of Apostle Gomer Griffiths, under Brother William H. Greenwood; and I find that the doing of one's duty fearlessly and with devotion to God and his truth, brings so many joys into one's life that I am called upon to marvel at the many privileges that are missed by those who are not in harmony with their brethren; I well remember our beloved John W. Rushton saying that "There are many men who take a sordid delight in watching the work go to pieces in order to satisfy some pet theory of their own." This is, sad to relate, the idea of many men; and I find that the only remedy is work! work!! work!!! for God and the truth; and find there is no time for idle scorn and apathy in the work.

I am daily convinced that the people want the gospel; and the demand is growing for a living system; and one that can demonstrate its power for God; and I am thankful for the many blessings that the Lord has given to me in the church. I pray that all will put on the gospel armor, and go forth armed for fight in this grand and noble work. Kindly permit me to thank all the numerous Saints that I have learned to love for their kind and loving sympathy; in their devotion to the church; and the attention they have given the ministers who labor amongst them; in seeing that they are provided for in food and shelter.

WM. H. CHANDLER.

MASON TOWN, WEST VIRGINIA, October 25, 1911.

Dear Herald: The work is going along finely at present, and I hope it will continue to do so. We are isolated, but the Lord has said that where two or three are gathered in his name, he will be in the midst of them. What greater promise can we have than that? I was baptized October 24, 1910, by Brother Maxon, and my heart is made to rejoice in this great latter day work. I know the work is true, and I love to go on serving the Lord in all things. I have never regretted the step I have taken, but hope to serve the Lord more every day. I meet with but few of the Saints. We are trying to let our lights shine, and by the help of God we may be able to do so. My heart's desire is to see others accept the gospel, so they can testify that they know the work is true.

I will tell you a dream I had before obeying the gospel. I had been praying to God to show me which church I must join, and that he would show me in a dream. I dreamed I saw Bro. L. D. Ullom on a white rock and he was holding his arms out, and all around him was the loveliest place I ever saw. He had the prettiest countenance, and was saying, "Come on," and I said, "I will." What have I to doubt of this great latter day work?

Brother Maxon was up and preached two spiritual sermons. I am only a girl of seventeen, and how thankful I am that I have seen the day I heard the gospel preached. And how it strengthens me to hear of the progress others are making in this great latter day work.

"Sure I must fight if I would reign;
Increase my courage, Lord.
I'll bear the toil, endure the pain,
Supported by thy word."

Praying for the welfare of Zion,
Your sister in Christ,
MISS ELVIRA RODABAUGH.

GLOUCESTER, ENGLAND, October 17, 1911.

Dear Herald: I am glad to be able to report that six excellent young people have recently been baptized at Exeter by the local ministry in that region. Two were promising young men, and the sisters, too, will make a splendid addition to the life of the branch. I can venture to predict that others will join with them soon, which will be a further stimulus to the Master's cause. At Gloucester, two were added last week, one a useful brother from the Free Baptists, the other the wife of our worthy brother, John Harris, of this branch.

We have a good organization in this city, which by God's help is going to be a power for good in the spread of truth. Bro. E. J. Trapp is full of go and inspiration to others. We have had lively times at street work. The Brighamites came out four abreast here on the streets, but they beat a hasty, though undignified retreat before the pom-pom questions of the characteristic Josephites.

We are hopeful of several baptisms at Gloucester of some who are at present interested. I am expecting to be at work in the mines by the time this letter reaches you. It is because of the lack of support; it will be with regret that I do so, as we have such good prospects in several places, which makes it harder to leave.

Yours in Christ,
85 ROSEBERRY AVENUE. THOMAS JONES.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 31, 1911.

Dear Herald: I enjoy reading your articles, and you little know what a comfort they often are to hearts that are sad and burdened with the cares of this life. I do not mean the toil or hardships of that kind that usually fall to the lot of the poor, like myself, but sometimes it falls to our lot to have to endure great sorrows as I am at present, that seem to be more than we can bear; when we snatch at every crumb of comfort as a drowning man would grab at a straw. Then it is that we appreciate most the comforting words that we find in the church literature.

A few days ago while I was feeling so downcast, I went to get some tracts that I had bought, to send away, but instead of picking them up, as I thought I was doing, I got hold of an old HERALD, dated March 8, 1911. Well, I thought I would look it over, for it might contain something comforting, and oh, how well rewarded I was! The first article was an editorial by Bro. Elbert A. Smith, beginning with John 14: 27. The article was grand all through. I want to paint a wreath of flowers on cardboard, and in the center write the text in glowing colors.

I want to ask all who will, to pray for me that I may be able to bear all that falls to me to endure, and keep my reason. I have been blessed wonderfully, and I am thankful for it; and some of my family have been healed often and almost instantly in answer to prayer. My home is a peaceful one, or as much so as can be, considering the outside influences. Better boys to a mother would be hard to find, although they are weighed down with the cares of the family. So I realize that I have much to be thankful for. Dear Saints, let us take our troubles to the Lord in prayer, and bear up as best we can.

Your sister,

HARRIET SEDORIS.

WHEELING, WEST VIRGINIA, October 29, 1911.

Editors Saints' Herald: The work here is moving along slowly; no additions to the branch recently.

Elder O. R. Miller held a series of meetings during the month of June. Large placards were tacked on poles throughout the city by the brethren, announcing the meetings. We had a few strangers at the meetings; none were baptized, but the Saints were strengthened, and satisfied to know that an effort was being made to warn their neighbors.

Our city was invaded with Utah missionaries last winter and spring. They tracted the place. They attended our preaching services regularly, and were a husky looking set of young fellows; well-dressed and well-behaved. One thing that impressed the writer was that some of them had been in the field for several years without going home. Quite a sacrifice for an unpopular cause.

Sister Hughes arrived here Tuesday from Colorado Springs, where she has been visiting her son, Joseph Ebeling.

Sr. Liston Brewster and her son Thomas, leave on the 30th to visit Saints and friends at Clarksburg, West Virginia. Sr. Rhoda Gunn, of Glen Easton, is the guest of Sr. Annie Smith.

Our branch president, O. J. Tary, and family, returned recently from Niagara Falls and Canada.

Elder O. L. Martin was in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, last week on business.

LOUIS A. SERIG.

NEW SALISBURY, INDIANA, October 30, 1911.

Editors Herald and Readers: Almost six years have passed away since I have obeyed in part this blessed gospel, sufficiently so that I am numbered with the Saints of God to-day, for which I am indeed grateful. It is regretfully I say that I have never penned a line to the church paper in all that time, save the notices sent in from time to time. This being my first, I shall try not to occupy so much space with matters uninteresting, that would justly send this to the wastebasket.

Since being baptized, December 11, 1905, by Bro. J. W. Wight, one whose labors of love and righteousness shall never be forgotten in these hills of southern Indiana, I have enjoyed many, many blessings from the bountiful hand of our heavenly Father. I hope to prove myself grateful.

On November 27, 1906, I was set apart to labor in the lesser priesthood. Four years to the day from that time I was ordained an elder. In this brief space of time reflecting back over the past, I can realize that the gospel has changed my life to a great degree. I have been permitted to sit in heavenly places with the Saints of God and receive the blessings which can come only to the household of faith. Have been privileged to associate and labor with quite a number of the faithful ministry, which space will not permit me to mention now, only as pertaining to the work just past in our district. Being appointed at last General Conference to labor in my home district, from our conference of last May, I have labored in the field with Elder Jacob Halb, though being separated most of the time. Am glad to say a more agreeable companion to labor with is hard to find.

Also have had the privilege of enjoying the association and labors of our worthy assistant minister in charge, Elder H. E. Moler, for a brief space; he at times being at our conferences, and reunion. We look for his return soon to our field.

One of the best conferences ever held in the district was held with New Albany Branch October 21 and 22, most all the workers of the district being present. Conference was presided over by our worthy missionary in charge, Elder R. C. Russell, assisted by Brn. H. E. Moler and Jacob Halb. The conference as a whole was edifying and inspirational, Bro. R. C. Russell being principal speaker. One of the most inspiring discourses we have ever been privileged to hear, was enjoyed at the morning session, Sunday, delivered by Bro. R. C. Russell, his theme being the financial law and duties of Saints. The Spirit of the Master was present, helping the Saints to see the beauties of the gospel law, and the love of the Father manifest in the administration of the law in all its parts. We noticed especially one who was heartily in accord with the sermon, that being our energetic and tireless worker as bishop's agent, Elder John Zahnd.

It is evident that the Saints of the district are gradually being aroused in the observing of the financial law as a part of the great plan; and surely it is to be hoped that all the pure and good, or those striving to be so, may obey in fullness the law. Mention may also be made of the sacrament meeting Sunday at half past two, the presidency of the conference being in charge. The Saints present were made to rejoice in the restored gospel, the Holy Spirit being present.

Conference closed at the Sunday evening session, Bro. R. C. Russell again speaking forth the powers and beauties of the perfect law.

From the conference Elder H. E. Moler started for home for a few days' stay. Elder Jacob Halb started a meeting at Highland Park, Louisville, Bro. R. C. Russell coming to Byrnsville, the home branch of the writer, and preached three sermons for us, which were meat in due season; it being the brother's first stop with us. We regretted his stay was so short and hope for his early return to our field. Viewing the work that is ahead of us, with conditions as they are now, and as we are hopeful of them becoming in the next few years, it is plain to see that the works of righteousness, by the people of the Lord are to be wrought by the faithful; that Zion may make herself ready. To this end we hope to ever labor together with God and all his.

Asking pardon for using so much space, and thanking the Editor of the dear HERALD if he consents not this to the wastebasket.

Your colaborer,

E. O. BYRN.

News From Missions

Oregon and Idaho.

In the latter part of May, Bro. S. D. Condit joined us at Vale, Oregon, where we were stopping with Brother and Sister Propst, and all proceeded to prepare bed and baggage for the summer. On June 1, Elders Condit and Madden went to Weiser, where they were to begin the summer work. Brother Condit was in charge of the tent. Two days later, baby Florence and I joined the missionaries just in time to attend the evening service. The next day the gospel work began in earnest. When Brother Condit suggested preaching on the street, which we had been expecting, we said, as cheerfully as possible, "All right," but hated to see the time come.

Oh, how my heart beat as I offered a silent prayer to the good Lord that he would aid me to do my duty, now that I had left all for his work. At the service, as I opened the Hymnal to number 120, and sang the words, "When earth in bondage long had lain," I really was surprised, for my voice had never sounded so clear to me before, and as we sang to the passers-by, I realized my first attempt had been aided by the One that is far greater than man.

They continued to hold meetings in the tent and on the streets until the 13th of June, when Brother Condit entered into a discussion with Elder Dix, of the Christian Adventist faith, which lasted sixteen nights. At the close three precious souls were added to the church. Thence to Boise, in time for the reunion and district conference at that place. There we made the acquaintance of Apostle J. W. Rushton, and Elders John Davis, T. C. Kelley, and A. J. Layland; besides several other Saints. We greatly enjoyed the spiritual sermons that were delivered, and the instructions given to the ministry by Brother Rushton.

After conference, Brethren Layland and Madden were left to hold meetings a while longer, but not being able to get many to attend our tent meetings, they held ten meetings on the streets. Brother Cato then moved our tent and fixtures to Meridian, where we held forth for about two weeks with some interest. Brother Condit returned while we were here, and Brother Layland went to other points of the district. They here borrowed a team and wagon and moved to Caldwell, where they held meetings on the streets and in the tent, part of the time to nice crowds, especially on the streets. Here we met with some opposition, and our tent received several showers of stones. But I think several people had a better opinion of us when we left than when we came. We stayed here three weeks and then went to Vale, Oregon, our home town, and met our little boy whom we had not seen for three months. It was a joyful homecoming. We, my husband and I, had returned home from our first missionary trip and could say with the apostles of old, "We lacked nothing."

After three weeks of street and tent work here we returned to Weiser, leaving some interested in the gospel story. The night being quite cool and not much interest being taken in the meetings, we, after holding a few meetings in the evening, rolled up our tent and stored it away for the winter. I will just add a brief account of the financial side of the tent work: tent fund on hand from last year, $10.35; received during the summer, $25.45; total, $35.80; paid for oil and fixtures, $5.07; for provisions, $9.90; for freight, $11.00; for traveling, $9.60; total, $35.57; balance on hand 23 cents.

We thank the Saints who have so kindly supplied our needs during the summer, and pray the heavenly Father to repay by bestowing his blessings upon them.

WEISER, IDAHO.

MRS. E. L. MADDEN.

From the Northwest.

After the close of the Saskatchewan conference, held at Sedley, July 27 to 30, it was thought advisable to extend our labors into Alberta. A two-day meeting was to be held at Edgerton, Alberta, August 5 and 6. As Bro. W. H. Kelley and F. M. Smith have given a brief account of that gathering, and of that country, I shall not add anything. I held several meetings with the Saints of Edgerton, made the home of Bro. and Sr. Fred Rowe our stopping place, where we felt welcome. There are faithful Saints in Edgerton. Bro. Fred Rowe is in charge.

From Edgerton we went to the Ribstone Branch, August 1, a distance of about twelve miles, southwest. Sunday the Saints of the Edgerton Branch met with the Ribstone Saints in Sunday school and preaching service. Owing to the rain there was no service in the evening. We were all glad to see the Edgertons come and worship with us, and I think it wise where branches are within a few hours' drive of each other to hold union meetings at least once a month, when the weather is so they can. For twenty years or more the four branches near Stewartville, Missouri, have held a union meeting the first Sunday of each month, and it has been a source of strength to all who have taken part. The branch here numbers about fifty, and derives its name after the beautiful valley of Ribstone, through which flows a small stream. The soil is rich; on the sandy order; water good and plentiful. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railroad is within a few miles of the branch. Prairie land is offered at twenty-five dollars per acre, which is cheap for that part of the country. Bro. J. Beckley is in charge of the branch. He is highly spoken of and an able representative of the work. We made the pleasant home of Bro. and Sr. Thomas Smith our headquarters, and became very much attached to the family. At Ribstone, and also at Edgerton, several blessings were given.

August 18 we left for Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, much pleased to have formed the acquaintance of the dear Saints of Edgerton and Ribstone.

In Saskatoon, we stopped at the home of Mr. and Sister Dorr, over night. The next day Bro. J. A. Beckman, president of the Iowa Branch, which is about fifteen miles out from Saskatoon, came in and we accompanied him home, which is surrounded by trees and shrubbery, a welcome change. So far this is the best farming land we have seen in our travels here. Water is good, and plentiful, crops fine, and from ten days to two weeks earlier than in some other parts. Harvesting just begun. Sunday the 20th we met with the Saints, spoke at 11 a. m. and at 8 p. m. Bro. J. W. Peterson preached. Owing to the rain some of us did not leave the schoolhouse till nearly 2 a. m. Brother and Sister Peterson entertained us, singing some of the songs of the Saints of the Islands in their language. As it was harvest time we did not hold meetings during the week, but attended to the other line of work.

August 26 we bade adieu to the Saints of the Iowa Branch and regretted that we had not had the privilege to meet with them often during our stay there; but as the old saying goes, "Make hay while the sun shines," and as harvest comes but once a year, it is wise to thrust in the sickle and reap, and not let the golden grain go to waste. Brother Beckman and family, and a large percentage of the Saints of the branch, came from Iowa some eight years ago; they have good farms and good market. Farms are worth from forty to fifty dollars per acre. Saskatoon is a wideawake, thriving city of seventeen thousand, on the banks of the Saskatchewan River. Farms nearer the city are much higher. We were at home with Brother and Sister Beckman; she is like Martha of old, a woman of works and not so much of words.

Brother Beckman conveyed us back to Saskatoon, from whence we took the train to Vanscoy, fifteen miles out. We met there by Bro. Ernest Anderson, who conveyed us to his parents' home; E. B. Anderson, about seven miles into the country; this is called the Minnesota Branch. In this vicinity there are about seventy that are relatives. The branch has a membership of over fifty, and is quite properly called the Anderson Branch, for there are thirty-six by the name of Anderson; and I am pleased to say all are good people, and a credit to the church and community. Father E. B. Anderson is president. We there met Bro. E. E. Long, who had been holding meetings with some interest. A hail-storm did much damage in this part on the 16th of August. The Minnesota and Iowa branches are only about eighteen miles apart, but there is no bridge to cross the river at this point, they have to go by way of Saskatoon, which is nearly forty miles. I preached four times here and attended to the blessings.

This part of country is like it is in the neighborhood of the Iowa Branch, (good). Father and Mother Anderson are old stand-bys in the work, and when they shall pass on to their reward they shall be missed here and be made welcome with the faithful of all ages.

From Vanscoy we went to Sedley, by request of T. J. Jordan, president of the district, to attend to the ordination of Bro. C. V. Smith, of Regina, to the office of elder, who was recommended by Pres. Fred M. Smith and approved by the missionaries and district authorities. Brother Smith will be a valuable minister. From Sedley we went to the Rosendale Branch, Manitoba; stopped at the modern home of Brother and Sister Wilson, near Treherne, Manitoba. This is a good field for missionary work. The branch bought the two church buildings, about ten miles apart. Bro. William Henry, priest, is in charge. I spoke in both buildings, at 3 and 8, Sunday, September 4; had good attendance in the evening. All were busy threshing there, so we held no meetings in the week. Several blessings were given. The Saints here will welcome any of the missionaries to labor in their midst, and the latchstring is always on the outside of their doors, and a good welcome within. I speak from experience that we had from the hands of Brother and Sister Wilson and others.

We arrived at the home of Bro. and Sr. William Arnold, 535 Richmond street, Winnipeg, Manitoba, September 15. There are about ninety members in the Winnipeg Branch, with Brother Arnold in charge. They have a neat church building. We stopped over two Sundays; preached several times, and gave a large number of blessings. Winnipeg is a modern city, with a population of one hundred and sixty thousand, gaining very rapidly. It is the young Chicago of the Northwest.

We found the Saints, with few exceptions, not only in the faith, but in the spirit of the work. I had the pleasure to see and to have Ruth copy five patriarchal blessings given by Father Joseph Smith, sr., the first patriarch of the church in this age. They were given in Nauvoo, June, 1840. One was given to our late Bro. A. Haws, of California, when he was but a lad of about twelve years, and his father, mother, brother, and sister. Brother Haws was told that he would preach the gospel, and other comforting promises were given. Two things were observed in the blessings; godly zeal, and strong faith. If any of the readers of the HERALD know the history of Brother Haws and his folks, will they kindly give me the information, and I shall appreciate it very much.

This brings our four months' labor, lacking a few days, to an end, and it has been the busiest time of my life. We had intended to call at Minneapolis, by suggestion of Brn. F. M. Smith and E. E. Long, but not receiving any answer from Bro. Charles Lundeen, to whom we had written some ten days before leaving Winnipeg, we did not stop, as we did not have the addresses of any others of the Saints. While we would have liked to meet with the Saints there, we were glad in one sense that the invitation to stop did not come, for we needed rest, and there is no place to enjoy it as well as at home, be it ever so humble.

The Saints where we have been have used good judgment, with very few exceptions, in the selection of their homesteads. They have the cream of the neighborhood, and as a whole are good workers of the soil, and the gospel plow, and in the very near future will be of much value to the church financially; and from some of those away off prairie homes will the Lord call and equip some that shall be pillars in his work, who to-day are scarcely known in their own branches. While in that field it was work, work, work. I am grateful for the privilege and appreciate the experience and the kindness of the Saints in helping us to make our way from place to place.

While in the Minnesota Branch I had the following impressive dream, September 1, 1911: I dreamed that I was in the northwestern part of Canada, extreme west; some of the ground I had been on before, and the climate had changed, from a short season, when wheat, oats, and flax was not a sure crop owing to the frost, to a long season; weather pleasant and balmy; raised all kinds of grain and vegetables. I inquired, What has brought about the change? The answer was, The Spirit of the Lord, which I thought covered or reigned supreme over the land. May those that are Saints, and the hundreds that we hope will be, so live that the good Spirit may rule supremely, and bring about conditions that will be of lasting benefit to all that live righteous lives, and to the honor and glory of the Lord, is my earnest desire and prayer.

If any that we have mailed copies of blessings to, did not receive them, please let me know at once.

My home address is Cameron, Missouri, Seventh and Harris.

WILLIAM LEWIS.

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, September 26, 1911.

Illinois.

Just closed a meeting at the Poplar Creek church and began last night at Cold Corner. The Saints of the Poplar Creek Branch having completed their church building, met on the 22d for dedication; the writer being selected to preach the sermon, and J. F. Henderson offered the dedicatory prayer.

It is a good building and free from debt, and best of all it is a good branch of Saints with which to meet and enjoy the presence of the Holy Spirit. They surely know how to care for the missionaries and extend them a hearty welcome. The meeting was good from beginning to end, especially the dedicatory service.

This is the old stamping ground of Bro. F. M. Slover, who will be glad to hear that they have their building all complete and can worship under their own vine and fig tree, as their neighbor churches would not let them worship in their building. Now they have one of their own where they can invite their neighbors in to hear the old Jerusalem gospel, unadulterated and simon pure.

Bro. J. F. Henson, who brought Elder F. M. Slover into the church, is still as energetic as ever, but not quite as young, trying to convince others that we have the pure gospel.

Brn. I. N. White, J. F. Curtis, and H. Sparling well remember the skirmishes that they had in this community. We want to say that we lost nothing in the engagement that they had here, but again Reverend Boles refuses to meet Brother Sparling, so I hear. Well, a burnt child dreads the fire, hence Reverend Boles goes north, where he thinks it will be cooler, to meet S. W. L. Scott; of course he will see that the furnace is well supplied with the best of fuel, as S. W. L. Scott has been selecting for lo, these many years, just the kind of material to make the best of welding heat. Reverend Boles wants an educated man as his contestant. See?

More calls in here than we can possibly fill. We pray that the time may come when there will be more means placed in the hands of the bishop, so there can be many times more missionaries sent out than there are at the present time. The missionaries of the locals are pushing out with a zeal that is commendable, to get the truth before the people.

News From Branches

Boston Rally Day.

October 22, 1911, was celebrated as our Rally Day in the Boston Branch, a special program was arranged for the day, and invitations sent out to the Saints and friends to make an effort to attend that it might be a rally of note.

U. W. Greene, missionary in charge of the Eastern Mission, was with us for the occasion, occupying morning and evening. There were many visitors from other branches. The weather was very unfavorable, raining the greater part of the day, but notwithstanding this everything went well and an enjoyable time was had.

The morning service began with a voluntary. Hymn 152 Saints' Hymnal; prayer was offered by Holmes J. Davison; an anthem by the choir, followed by the pastor's address of welcome. Then came the history of the branch, read by Susie E. Sinclair, which is as follows:

HISTORY OF THE BOSTON BRANCH, A LOOK INTO FORTY-FIVE YEARS OF THE PAST.

In February of eighteen sixty-six, or seven, In Boston was planted the gospel leaven; It sprouted and grew, midst a world of strife, Pointed sinners to Jesus, the way of life.

George C. Smith was the first to preside, With Elias N. Webster as scribe at his side, And Edgar Woodward, as a good priest should, Taught the Saints their duty as best he could.

Jeremiah C. Wentworth was ordained a teacher, Which our doctrine declares is the standing preacher, Who with James Woodward, the deacon elected, Were by the Saints in their office respected.

These worked in their offices for ten years, When, alas! Satan entered, and caused many tears, Filling some with distrust; others openly rebelled; Who would not repent, by the church were expelled.

The faithful still stuck to the gospel boat, And with earnest endeavor kept her afloat; They prayed, and they pleaded for spiritual light, That would show them the way, and lead them aright.

So 'midst sunshine and rain, light and dismay, The old gospel boat wended its way, And the youth and the aged, with talents combined, To serve the Lord with their soul, might and mind, Received of his favor, and soon to their aid Came Alonzo H. Parsons, with power to persuade; For a year and a half he stood to preside, And taught gospel truths, as a true, faithful guide.

Then Joseph Woodward, for five months or more, Took the president's place and handled the oar; But in eighteen hundred and ninety-one Richard Bullard came forth, and his work begun.

He soon trimmed the ship, and under full sail She rode every billow, defied every gale; The officers hastened to obey his command, And soon gathered in a strong working band.

For eleven years he guided their spiritual walk, Kept their feet well placed on the old gospel rock; Though he's passed from his post, he is still our well-wisher, And the next head elected was Myron C. Fisher.

The church had now prospered, her numbers increased, But many had died, some removed, some released. Myron filled the office of president well, And retiring, the lot fell to John D. Suttill.

John served only in name; this his line of defense, He resigned his position, stayed in Providence; Thus E. H. was elected to serve in his stead, And with his teachings the hungry were fed.

One year ago our branch fabric received one more stitch; To the presidency elected was Calvin H. Rich: Thus forty-five years in the history of fame, Nine presidents true, have engraven their names.

And we hope all elected in far future years Will remember their counsel, their prayers, and their tears; Keep the gospel ship headed towards the harbor of rest, The home of the ransomed, the redeemed, and the blest.

The Boston Branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was organized by Apostle James W. Gillen, missionary in charge of the Eastern Mission of the church, some time in February, 1866. The exact date is not known. Elder George C. Smith was chosen president; he being a member of the old church, baptized in 1838; and Elias N. Webster was chosen clerk.

The original charter members are not definitely stated; the facts, as near as we are able to arrive at harmonious figures, are; that the original consisted of six or seven names.

The Massachusetts District was organized February 14, 1866. William Cottam, of Fall River, was chosen first president of the district; and the first conference report sent in from Boston Branch is reported in the SAINTS' HERALD December 15, 1867. It states: Boston report, number of members 20, elders 4, priests 1, teachers 1, deacons 1, 12 added by baptism, 2 by letter of removal; G. C. Smith president, E. N. Webster clerk.

While the report reads 20, we find by the report of baptisms recorded as having taken place in Boston and becoming members of the Boston Branch that the number is possibly 23 at that time. Perhaps it would be interesting to know the names of these 23, and what became of them.

George C. Smith, an elder, baptized 1838, removed to Saint Joseph, Missouri, February 4, 1878; James Appleton, an elder, baptized June 4, 1867, removed to England, 1870; Thomas Verge, an elder, baptized November 3, 1867, expelled July 13, 1873; Elias N. Webster, an elder, baptized 1866, died April 9, 1902; Cyril E. Brown, an elder, baptized June 7, 1866, died January 7, 1895; Charlotte G. Smith, baptized August 4, 1867, removed to Saint Joseph, Missouri, February 4, 1878; Robert Ryder, baptized October 27, 1867, expelled January 9, 1870; Jeremiah C. Wentworth, teacher, baptized November 3, 1867, expelled January 2, 1870; Elizabeth Brown, baptized October 14, 1866, removed October 24, 1869; Charlotte E. Webster, baptized October 2, 1866, removed to Dennisport, Massachusetts, February 7, 1872; Rosina Kafer, baptized October 13, 1867, expelled August 7, 1884; Mary Z. Mc-Irtire, baptized November 3, 1867, died May 24, 1898; C. Ennora Eldridge, baptized September 25, 1866, removed to Dennisport, Massachusetts, February 21, 1872; Martha E. Miller, baptized 1842, died June 6, 1891; Susan B. Ryder, baptized October 13, 1867, expelled January 31, 1869; Thomas Everell, baptized December 1, 1867, expelled January 9, 1870; Fannie B. Wentworth, baptized November 3, 1867, expelled January 2, 1870; Ann Woodward, baptized June 9, 1867, expelled April 7, 1872; James Woodward, deacon, baptized August 4, 1867, expelled April 7, 1872; George Woodward, baptized November 3, 1867, expelled July 13, 1873; Edgar Woodward, priest, baptized June 9, 1867, removed to Saint Joseph, Missouri, February 4, 1878; Margaret Woodward, baptized October 13, 1867, removed to Birmingham, England, August 24, 1873; Joseph Woodward, an elder, baptized October 18, 1867, still a member of the Boston Branch, the only one of the original members.

So far as we can determine, Boston has had nine presidents, as follows: George C. Smith, from the organization until February 4, 1878, eleven years; Elias N. Webster, from February 4, 1878, until May 5, 1889, eleven years; Alonzo H. Parsons, from May 5, 1889, until January 5, 1891, one and one half years; Joseph Woodward, from January 5, 1891, until May 12, 1891, one half year; Richard Bullard, from May 12, 1891, until May 1, 1902, eleven years; Myron C. Fisher, from May 1, 1902, until October 29, 1909, seven and one half years; John D. Suttill, from October 29, 1909, until January 25, 1910, three months; Edmund H. Fisher, from January 25, 1910, until October 28, 1910, nine months; Calvin H. Rich, from October 28, 1910, until the present time, having been in office one year.

From the organization of the branch until the present time the entire membership, or total enrollment, has been 464. The greatest year for baptisms was 1877; baptisms 17. The greatest year for receiving by letter was 1879; letters 13. The greatest year for removals was 1878; removals 23. Nearly equaled in 1903 with removals 21. The greatest year for expulsions was 1897; expulsions 10. The greatest year for deaths was 1898; deaths 7.

The earliest baptisms we have recorded as having taken place in Massachusetts or near-by States who became members of the Boston Branch are: Mary Webber, baptized by James Snow, at Littleby, Maine, in August, 1831; George C. Smith, baptized by D. MacArthur, September, 1838; Albert Nickerson, baptized by F. Nickerson, at Medway, Massachusetts, July 27, 1842; Martha E. Miller, baptized by Erastus E. Snow, at Salem, Massachusetts, April, 1842; Dorcas Tucker, baptized by E. P. Maginnis, at East Boston, Massachusetts, in 1843.

The elders baptizing the most candidates in Boston were: Elias N. Webster, 84; Richard Bullard, 78; George C. Smith, 23; Thomas W. Smith, 20; Albert N. Hoxie, 19; Myron C. Fisher, 14; Frank P. Busiel, 14; Myron H. Bond, 13; Ulysses W. Greene, 11; Francis M. Sheehy, 10; and numerous others, ranging from 1 to 9.

The ministry who were ordained in the branch, or who became members and worked in the Boston Branch were: Apostles 2, seventies 5, high priests 1, bishops 2, elders 19, priests 17, teachers 10, deacons 12.

The changes which have taken place in the forty-five years have been: Deaths 63; expulsions 52; removals 143; marriages 50.

Our branch to-day has an enrollment of 197; of these 113 are living within the jurisdiction of the branch, and 84 are scattered over the entire globe. In the priesthood at present there are recorded 2 apostles, 1 bishop, 1 high priest, 3 seventy, 5 elders, 5 priests, 3 teachers, 6 deacons. Calvin H. Rich is the pastor of the flock, and Elnor G. Bradt is the chief scribe.

Our increase has been exceedingly slow, about four and seventeen forty-fifths per cent per year, but even at that we're here to stay. Boston may not reap a great harvest numerically, but she can fit men for active warfare in other fields, where the harvest may be of a better quality for reaping, and in this way help to fill the garner with the fruits of righteousness.

THE BOSTON BRANCH IN A JUMBLE.

We have Bakers and Busiels, two busy B's,
And Briggs and Bracketts, two more you may see;
Bertelsen and Brandt, we'll add to the roll,
And Carter and Chester, also Clough and Cole.

Then we've Davison, Dobbins, Edwards, and Cowan,
Enos, Eaton, Farrell, and Warren,
Fairclough, Fisher, Goff, and Gould,
Who all rally round the good golden rule.

We have Garrish, and Grover, Haynes and Wood,
And Greene, who feeds us on spiritual food;
Hoxie, and Haseltine, Lewis, and Trask,
And Newcomb who cheerfully takes up his task.

Hill, and Ivester, Johnson and Knowleton,
Kimball and Lanman, MacCarlie and Thompson;
Mortimer, Miller, Phillips, and Prouty,
And Sanford who never will shirk his duty.

Nickerson, Pierson, Robinson, Rayner,
Rogers, Sinclair, and Wentworth the Mainer;
Rich, Studley, Sears, and Steel,
And Webster, too, such names we reveal.

Wetmore, and White, and Sheehy, and Lake,
Are names of importance, and good history make;
And Whiton and Woodward, cheerful and kind,
With Whitehouse and Traver we finish our rhyme.

W. A. SINCLAIR, M. D., District Historian.

We were next favored with a solo by Ada Lewis, after which Bro. U. W. Greene addressed the congregation on the subject: "Though I speak with the tongue of angels," etc. His theme was "love." Referring to the history as read, he said: "I noticed by the reading that but very few of those who pioneered the work here were steadfast to their trust; it but proves the fact that if we do not occupy we will be removed, the work will still go on; though we all fail, some one will carry it onward; the work is still here in Boston, though its first advocates have passed beyond the great divide."

Another anthem was rendered by the choir, and then the clerk, Eleanor G. Bradt, read the roll call. One child was baptized by the pastor, and the morning service was brought to a close.

Sunday school convened at eleven fifty, under the guidance of both district and local officers. We were pleased to have with us our former superintendent, Albert N. Hoxie, jr.; his smile was pleasant to see. Of course he had a right to smile this time. He was on his honeymoon, and was happy, as he deserves to be. We were also pleased to see Clara and congratulate them both on their choice and good judgment, and wish them years of joy and sweet companionship together.

Brother Albert assisted materially with his violin. Our program was altered considerably from the usual procedure. The main changes were a confirmation at the beginning; a solo by Laura Pierson, and very interesting remarks by District Superintendent Lucie H. Sears, Albert N. Hoxie, jr., and E. A. Fox; the primary department had rally exercises before the main school, after the lesson; this was followed by the blessing of Baby Fisher, by U. W. Greene, C. H. Rich, and his father, Myron C. Fisher. This brought the Sunday school session to a close.

The Religio had special rally service at five forty-five, and the evening service had special music. Thus closed a very profitable day and we hope it is but the beginning of our rally, which will increase in magnitude until we have reached the goal of our endeavor, and secured the occupancy of immortality and perfectness.

W. A. SINCLAIR.

Cleveland, Ohio.

Cleveland Branch is alive and growing. We have had a large attendance lately. There has been unity among the priesthood; the Sunday school has made a good showing; and we have had several baptisms since our last letters.

Our outdoor meetings have ended for the season. We have regular services for the week as follows: Sunday school, 9.10; morning service, 10.30; Religio, 6; evening service, 7.30; prayer meeting on Wednesday evening; young people's prayer meeting, Thursday evening; Doctrine and Covenants class, Friday evening; Daughters of Zion once a month. The last three are at the homes. The others are at the regular meeting place on Wade Park avenue at Seventy-first street, where we are glad to have anyone drop in who is in the city.

F. C. WEBBE.

Independence, Missouri.

Some one in admiration of Dame Nature says that the box elder, maple, elm, and other trees are at present "dissipating the gold they have collected in the summer in a last riot of color." At this time of the year it pays to take a walk through our beautiful streets and avenues, and take notice of the gorgeous tints of autumn.

Our record of interest and attendance at the meetings has been fairly good until within a fortnight, when a season of malignant sickness set in; but our midweek prayer meetings of late have been full of spiritual uplift and instruction.

Bro. A. H. Parsons, on the morning of the 15th gave an excellent discourse from the text in Psalm 19: "The law of the Lord is perfect," and John 17: "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." "Law," said he, "is commanding of what is right, and the prohibiting of what is wrong: A man who has been educated and read all good books is better fitted to represent this work, and God wants us to be learned in those things that concern our higher development."

Our brother spoke of the duties of the Saints concerning the financial law, and quoted passages in sections 42 and 106; also counseled in regard to conforming to an economical manner of living; for quoting Luke 16, said he, "who will trust you with eternal riches when you are profligate with what is needed in this life?" he continued, "Truly, thy law is truth, a light to my feet, and a lamp to my pathway. May this be the case with every one of us, and is our prayer in your behalf." In the afternoon a young sister who had been baptized was confirmed under the hands of Brethren Hilliard, Christie, and Kemp.

At this service of prayer and testimony, Bro. John Weston, being filled with the Spirit in the gift of prophecy, gave cheering counsel and encouragement, and these words are part of the Spirit's admonition: "Lift up your heads, O my people; give up your pride and your pleasure seeking, for I desire to clothe you with the jewels of my Spirit, for the gathering time is now, and many are waiting to come to this place. Keep my commandments and you shall indeed lift up your heads, and rejoice in me."

On that same afternoon the Woman's Auxiliary held an unusually interesting meeting in the upper room, which we will be pleased to note in our next. This part of the work is, with the other auxiliaries, advancing in interest and importance.

Among the things of general import we may be permitted to mention that on the 20th the Jackson County Teachers' Association convened at the Central High School, and among the subjects discussed were: Teaching for efficiency; education for citizenship; and, some practical problems in school subjects. The professors who took part were interested in "practical education, horticultural and stock and poultry exhibits at state and county fairs, summer schools, night schools, reading circle work, supplementary reading and study, teachers' meeting, and agricultural education." Taking them all in all, we should say they were a jolly bunch of progressive pedagogues, for they advocated the doing away with "stuffing" in the public schools with the adhering strictly to the common text books, and believe in the boys and girls learning geography and arithmetic in the grocery store around the corner, and in having an eye for the daily newspaper, and especially the "Government Bureau's Annual State Report." Also, last, though not least, in moral ethics they know our children need "a good start."

On October 22 our attendance at Sunday school was considerably decimated on account of the prevalence of diphtheria, three precious little ones having passed away, among them Maggie Stevenson, of the South Side.

At the morning service Pres. G. E. Harrington, after a long absence from church meetings on account of his devoted continuance at the summer tent work, made his appearance in the pulpit and treated the Saints to an excellent discourse, and Elder M. H. Bond in the evening. Also they have on the 29th been privileged to hear for their edification and spiritual encouragement two fine sermons from the brethren visiting here from Lamoni, Pres. E. A. Smith and Elder John Smith.

There have been recently quite a number of welcome visitors, also quite a few afflicted ones who have come to receive rest and benefit at the Sanitarium, for whom we ask the prayers of the Saints. In our list of visitors we will not fail to mention the appearance of the Magazine Number of the HERALD for 1911, with its gospel message and its eighteen lifelike photos, and twenty testimonies of bishops, in whose faces are imprinted the lines of dignity and faith, and whose counsel is and ever was, "Be kind, full of faith, having charity for the young and the old, the rich and the poor."

"Show me the tie that me to others binds;
That makes men lovable when understood;
Too long I've had the narrow wish to be Clad in the garb of cold austerity."

ABBIE A. HORTON.

His conscience knows no secret stings,
While grace and joy combine
To form a life whose holy springs
Are hidden and divine.

Conference Minutes.

GALLANDS GROVE.—The quarterly conference of the Gallands Grove District convened at Cherokee, Iowa, October 14, 1911, at 10.30 a. m. C. J. Hunt and Leonard Butterworth chosen to preside. Reports from branches read: Coalville 63, gain 3; Cherokee 52; Mallard 70; Lanesboro 40; Gallands Grove 248, gain 12; Deloit 218, gain 2; Harlan 62, gain 12; Dow City 143, loss 1; Auburn 55, loss 4; Salem, no report; total gain for the district 24. Ministerial reports read: A. R. Crippen, J. R. Rudd, Alfred Jackson, J. L. Butterworth, George Juergens, C. J. Hunt, Burton McKim, C. E. Butterworth. Brn. J. L. Butterworth and LeRoy Hatch were chosen as committee to audit the bishop's books. Bro. J. W. Wight read resolutions adopted by the Pottawattamie District concerning the consolidation of the reunion districts. It was decided to hold the next conference at Deloit, Iowa, October 14, 1912, at 10.30 a. m. District tent expenses for the summer were reported. On hand and received $29.29; expended, $20.04; balance on hand, $9.25. C. J. Hunt, bishop, reported: On hand at last report, $191.41; tithes and offerings received, $629.89; expenditures, $720.69; balance on hand, $100.61; received for the Graceland College fund, $5.00; temple fund on hand at last report, 50 cents; paid Bishop Kelley, 50 cents; on hand for the Children's Home at last report, $1.00; paid Bishop Kelley, $1.00. The following resolutions were moved: Resolved, That as a district we favor the holding of a reunion at Council Bluffs, Iowa, if held in 1912, to be known as the Western Iowa and Eastern Nebraska reunion; but we do not favor the locating of said reunion permanently, for the present, at least. Resolved, further, That we adopt the action of the committee so far as consolidating of the districts already taking action is concerned, and favor the consolidation of all the territory prescribed in the above resolution. A substitute was carried that a vote as to the consolidation be taken, but that the final action be deferred until the February conference. The conference voted to pay one third of the expense of printing of reports of committee on consolidation. Preaching by J. W. Wight and C. E. Butterworth. William Shove was ordained to the office of elder, and John G. Julius to the office of deacon. Three were baptized during the conference. Mrs. C. J. Hunt, assistant secretary.

LONDON.—Conference of the London, Ontario, District convened with the Saint Thomas Branch, October 7, 8, 1911, at 10 a. m. Apostle F. A. Smith in the chair, associated with the district presidency. By vote, R. C. Evans was associated with the presiding officers. The district secretary, P. H. Phillipin, was chosen as secretary of the conference; Bro. C. C. Raison, chorister; Sister Burch, organist; Deacon Skelding, usher with power to choose assistants. Credential committee: George Henley, May Constable, John McKenzie. Auditing committee: John Shields, Daniel Macgregor, George Tomlinson, jr. Administering committee: John Shields, J. McKenzie, W. Fligg, F. Gray. A statistical report was read as follows: Number of branches in district; 14; branches reporting: Corinth, Ellice, London, Listowel, Mitchell, Saint Marys, Saint Thomas, Stratford, Vanessa, Ushorne, Waterford. Branches not reporting: Delhi, McKillop, Selkirk. Total membership of district 959, showing loss. Ministry reporting: F. A. Smith, R. C. Longhurst, J. L. Burger, G. C. Tomlinson. District officers elected for the ensuing year: R. C. Longhurst, president; J. L. Burger, vice president; P. H. Phillipin, secretary; Joe Winegar, sr., library commissioner. There were two baptisms, and one ordination to the eldership during the conference. Delegates to General Conference: F. A. Smith, R. C. Evans, R. C. Longhurst, J. L. Burger, Elder and Sister Henly, Elder and Sister F. Gray, Elder and Sister Fligg, Elder D. Macgregor, Sr. R. Gray. Conference to convene with London Branch, in 1912, time to be set by the district presidency. There were held a total of eight sessions. There were some remarkable evidences of God's power at the prayer services. The preaching was of a very instructive order. The speakers were: D. Macgregor, W. Fligg, R. C. Evans, and F. A. Smith. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered the Saint Thomas Saints for the kindness shown. The Sunday school association authorities presented the district banner to Brother Moore, it having been awarded the Rostock Sunday School for the ensuing year. The attendance throughout the conference was good, and the order all that could be desired. The Saint Thomas conference will long linger in the memories as one of the most instructive in the history of the New London District. P. H. Phillipin, secretary.

MONTANA.—The conference of the Montana District, which convened at Deer Lodge Saturday, October 14, was opened by A. J. Moore, at 9.45 a. m. Brn. John W. Rushton and I. M. Smith were elected presidents of the conference; Brother Eliason was elected deacon; Sister Victoria Beck was elected chorister; Sr. Anna Wyckoff organist; in the absence of Bro. J. P. Wyckoff, Bro. Frank Esgar was elected secretary pro tem. Reports were presented and read from J. H. Wells, I. M. Smith, A. J. Moore. Statistical report from the Bozeman Branch was read. Bishop's agent's report was presented by Bro. Thomas Reese, and was referred to an auditing committee. Petition from the Warm Springs for the approval of conference of the recommendation of Jacob Staffanson to be ordained to the office of teacher, and Bro. J. R. Beck to be ordained to the office of deacon, was read. By vote a committee was appointed to draft a code of by-laws for the government of the district, to report at the next conference, the chairman to be included. The chair appointed Brn. A. J. Moore and I. M. Smith to act with himself upon that committee. At this juncture several of the brethren gave speeches on the condition of the work in the various parts of the field, and expressed pleasure at the prospect before the church at the present. The petition from the Warm Springs Branch was approved and provision for the ordinations was made by the chair during the conference. The general and local authorities were sustained by our faith and prayers. A vote of thanks was given to the Deer Lodge Branch for hospitality extended to the visitors, also the entertaining of the conference. The next conference will meet in Bozeman in response to invitation, on the Saturday before the full moon in February. The auditing committee reported that the accounts of the agents were correct. The committee was dismissed with thanks. S. A. Davis' report was read. Election of officers resulted as follows: President, A. J. Moore; vice president, Frank Christofferson; Jerome P. Wyckoff, secretary; Thomas Reese was elected treasurer; Thomas Reese was also sustained as bishop's agent. Moved, That whereas the Hollow Creek Branch has been disorganized, and as there are some noble members that should belong to some branch, be it Resolved, That the district secretary be and is hereby authorized to grant letters of removal to Clint Williams, Frank Williams, Andrew Green, and Sister Belle Huller. Carried. Devotional and preaching services were as follows: Saturday evening in charge of A. J. Moore; Bro. I. M. Smith, preacher. On Sunday at 10 a. m. Sunday school in charge of local officers; preaching at 11 by J. W. Rushton, F. Christofferson in charge; at 2.30 p. m., sacrament and prayer meeting in charge of A. J. Moore and F. Christofferson. During this service Brethren Staffanson and Beck were ordained, several sick administered to, and one child blessed. Evening preaching by J. W. Rushton, A. J. Moore and I. M. Smith in charge. Frank Esgar secretary pro tem.

MASSACHUSETTS.—District conference convened at Fall River, Massachusetts, October 7, 8, 1911. Presided over by the district presidency: C. H. Rich, H. W. Howlett, G. H. A. Gates; and the president of the Fall River Branch, H. O. Smith. The secretaries of the district, W. A. Sinclair, S. E. Sinclair were chosen to serve the conference; Thomas Fielding was chosen chorister; Alice H. Fielding organist; and the deacons of the Fall River Branch were chosen ushers. Notice to District Presidents.

The First Presidency desires to have reports quarterly and annually from every district president in the church. The Presidency desires the district presidents to feel free to report in such a way as will give the Presidency a comprehensive idea of the general condition of the work in each district, and hence do not feel to ask district presidents to confine themselves to statistics alone; but to feel free to report details at as great length as wisdom might indicate is necessary.
 The object in securing these reports is that the Presidency might know the needs of the local work, and such needs can not be reported by confining reports to statistics, although statistics are valuable when properly collected and understood. We are particularly desirous of knowing and having reports from the district presidents on the spiritual condition of the various branches and the whole district at large. These quarterly reports should reach us as soon after January 1, April 1, July 1, and October 1, as possible.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
 By Frederick M. Smith, Secretary.

The Presidency.

By arrangement between the ministers in charge of the respective fields, Elder Holmes J. Davison is transferred from the Eastern Mission to the Pacific Slope. This transfer is absolutely necessary owing to the conditions of his health. This transfer is concurred in by the First Presidency.

The Bishopric.

To the Saints of Western Michigan; Greeting: Having been appointed as Bishop's agent for this district, I take this opportunity to notify you through the columns of the HERALD that I am prepared to receive your tithes and offerings and receipt you for the same.

Dear Saints, we are much in need of financial aid, and I hope all will respond promptly. Although times may be hard, let us make the necessary sacrifice, that the work may not be hindered. Remember, this is a day of sacrifice, so let us go to with our mites (we who are toiling in the affairs of life), that the families of the missionaries may be provided for while the missionaries are making the sacrifice of home comforts and loved ones, that he may tell the truth to those who are in darkness.

I hope that all will try and get their names on the tithing

Died.

SCHRUNK.—Mrs. Lucy Schrunk, whose maiden name was Hammond, was born in Germany, March 12, 1847. When she was five years old her parents came to America. On the way over the mother was taken sick, and died soon after landing in New York in May, 1853. The father and children located near Garnovilla, Iowa, where Lucy grew to womanhood. She was married to Thomas F. Schrunk October 10, 1868. They began married life on the farm near Osterdock, improved it, and builded themselves a home and an honorable name. They are the parents of nine children. The two first born died in infancy. Two sons and five daughters, along with their father; and eighteen grandchildren survive to mourn this heavy loss of a beloved, devoted wife and mother; a sociable neighbor, a kind friend, and a true Christian. Sr. Lucy Schrunk united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints on June 11, 1893, and she has lived a faithful and devoted life, as became a child of God. She died in the triumph of faith at 5 p. m., October 24, 1911, aged 64 years, 7 months, and 12 days. Funeral services were held at the Bethel Church at 11 a. m., October 27, 1911, Elder James McKiernan, of Farmington, Iowa, in charge. Interment in the Bethel Cemetery.

BACON.—Charity Leona Kenneda was born July 9, 1842, in Hector, New York; emigrated with her parents to Wisconsin at the age of about one year; was married to Charles Dean Bacon, February 14, 1866, at Kenosha, Wisconsin. To this union were born four children; the three daughters are Mrs. Sherman Johnson, Mrs. Joseph Galbreath, and Mrs. J. Otto Colpitts; and one son, Roy, who died in infancy. After having been identified for some years successively with the Presbyterian and Christian churches, she was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, August 21, 1897, by Elder O. B. Thomas. Departed this life October 20, 1911. Funeral services conducted at Kirk, Colorado, by Elder Thomas. The three families above mentioned, and many friends and relatives who had long known her as an esteemed citizen and a faithful Christian, mourn their loss. Interment in the cemetery near Kirk.

STEM.—Alva J. Stem, son of Nathan B. and Margaret E. Stem, was born at Orbiston, Ohio, August 11, 1894; died at Bicknell, Indiana, September 15, 1911, after an illness of one month with typhoid fever. He was baptized by Francis May, February 22, 1907, at Danville, Ohio. He leaves to mourn a father, stepmother, two brothers, six sisters, and a host of friends. The funeral was conducted by Elder Jacob Halb. Alma was loved and esteemed by all who knew him.

STEM.—Goldie P. Stem, daughter of Nathan B. and Margaret E. Stem; was born at Orbiston, Ohio, January 11, 1897; died October 16, 1911, at the age of 14 years, 9 months, and 5 days. She leaves to mourn a father, stepmother, two brothers, and five sisters, besides a number of relatives and a host of friends. She was a faithful member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints for over five years. She was loved and esteemed by all who knew her. The funeral was conducted by Elder Jacob Halb.

Five Great Philosophies.

The five centuries from the birth of Socrates to the death of Jesus produced five principles: the Epicurean pursuit of pleasure, genial but ungenerous; the Stoic law of self-control, strenuous but forbidding; the Platonic plan of subordination, sublime but ascetic, the Aristotelian sense of proportion, practical but uninspiring; and the Christian spirit of love, broadest and deepest of them all. The purpose of The Five Great Philosophies of Life, by William DeWitt Hyde, president of Bowdoin College, which is published this week, is to let the masters of these sane and wholesome principles of personality talk to us in their own words; with just enough of comment and interpretation to bring us to their point of view and make us welcome their friendly assistance in the philosophical guidance of life.

The book is really a rewritten edition of From Epicurus to Christ. The reason which the author gives for the change in title is particularly interesting and shows somewhat the trend of modern letters. "Why a new edition under a new title?" President Hyde asks. "Because," he replies, "From Epicurus to Christ had an antiquarian flavor; while the book presents those answers to the problem of life, which, though offered first by the ancients are still so broad, deep, and true that all our modern answers are mere varieties of these five great types. Because the former title suggested that the historical aspect was a finality; whereas it is here used merely as the most effective approach to present-day solutions of the fundamental problems of life."

What is Your Family Worth?

If your family is worth the best you can afford in house and food and clothes, is it not worth the best reading as well? And the best reading—best for boys and girls, best for men and women—is to be found in The Youth's Companion.

Of stories alone The Companion will print nearly 300 in 1912. With all the rest of the paper thrown in, and counting the glorious long serial stories, they cost the subscriber less than a cent apiece. Moreover, you will look long before you will find stories so varied and interesting—stories of coolness in the face of peril, strange adventures with creatures of the forest and the sea, moving stories of life's obscure heroisms, stories breezy with good-natured humor, quaint and curious character sketches.

Now is the time to subscribe, for you will receive free from the time your $1.75 is received all the issues for the remaining weeks of 1911, containing the opening chapters of Ralph D. Paine's great serial story of the Boxer rebellion, "The cross and the dragon." And there is the gift of The Companion Calendar for 1912, "On the New England coast," lithographed in ten colors and gold. Only $1.75 now for the 52 weekly issues, but on January 1, 1912, the subscription price will be advanced to $2.00.

Western Students Versus Eastern.

The western students have much to learn from the East. They must learn that loitering over a wise old book is not necessarily idleness; that information is not knowledge; that many things are worth learning even if they will never add a penny to one's income. But it is in no unfriendly spirit asserted that the average student of the East may learn as much or more from the average student of the West; that the four years of college are not four years of polite leisure admixed with athletics before entering upon the true business of life, but four years of courageous effort toward a definite end, and that the mere chance to make this effort is worth buying perhaps at a heavy price.—From William Stearns Davis's "The Western student as seen by his instructors," in the November Century.

Three Books to Read Together.

The setting forth of existing wage conditions, true stories of what these conditions mean to different classes of workers, and an exposition of the possibilities of social reform—these are the subjects of three books which have just been published. In Scott Nearing's Wages in the United States the facts are presented, incontrovertible statistics as to the wages received by American working men and women; in Sue Ainslee Clark and Edith Wyatt's Making Both Ends Meet specific instances of the fruitless struggle to make the earnings meet the necessary outlays are told, often in the own words of the discouraged toiler; in Frank Goodnow's Social Reform and the Constitution those barriers which stand in the way of social reform are analyzed and the possibilities and results of advance considered. The interrelation, the way in which the three volumes follow one another in subject matter, make them collectively the most important addition to the literature on one of the greatest issues now before the American public that has ever been published.

Leave God to order all thy ways,
And hope in him, whate'er betide;

Thy all-sufficient strength and guide;
Who trusts in God's unchanging love,

CONSTIPATION.

Mr. E. D.—32 years a victim of this dreaded disease (claimed incurable) was actually cured by the use of three sacks of Klar's Good Health Flour.

Constipation is the first step to bring on many other diseases. That is the reason your physician will investigate this important condition at once. Mothers innocently give the baby white flour boiled, commonly called "Pap" in the morning. This will starch the stomach and bowels just the same as it will your laundry or the wall paper. When evening comes the poor mother will say, "Oh, my, but the baby was restless. I must give it a big dose of castor oil or something to assist Nature." Mothers, stop and think. Do not be so thoughtless, always remove the cause. If your baby is restless, let me help you Free of Charge. I love children too much to see the little ones abused and whirled into a premature death. Constipation among wild animals is unknown, likewise with domestic animals if fed properly.

Editorial

THE MARRIAGE LAWS OF THE STATE OF MISSOURI.

Some time ago our attention was called to the law of the State of Missouri on marriage through a question sent to the HERALD, making inquiry as to the right of our ministry to perform marriages. An answer to the question was published in the HERALD, but a later inquiry seems to make it necessary that we call the attention of the readers of the HERALD, and especially the ministry traveling and local, to the Missouri statutes on the subject of marriage.

Under section 8280 (Revised Statutes of Missouri, 1909) certain marriages are prohibited, as follows:

All marriages between parents and children, including grandparents and grandchildren of every degree, between brothers and sisters of the half as well as of the whole blood, and between uncles and nieces, aunts and nephews, first cousins, white persons and negroes, white persons and Mongolians, are prohibited and declared absolutely void, and this prohibition shall apply to illegitimate as well as legitimate children and relatives.

According to the statute, the following marriages are void:

All marriages, where either of the parties has a former wife or husband living, shall be void, unless the former marriage shall have been dissolved.—R. S. Missouri, 1909.

The individuals who may perform marriages are stated as follows:

Marriages may be solemnized by any judge of a court of record or justice of the peace, or any licensed or ordained preacher of the gospel who is a citizen of the United States.

This section designating those who are authorized to perform marriage ceremonies was amended, March 27, 1911, to read as follows:

Marriages may be solemnized by any judge of a court of record or justice of the peace, or any licensed or ordained preacher of the gospel, who is a citizen of the United States or who is a resident of and a pastor of any church in this State.

It would appear from the foregoing, that white persons, citizens of the State, over twenty-one years of age for men and eighteen for women, and who do not come under the prohibiting sections above named are entitled to marry, but must first procure a license from the county recorder's office, authorizing the solemnization of such marriage. This license must be returned by the person officiating within ninety days from the date of issuing. A penalty for failure to return is provided in the statute, in the following language:

Every officer or person who shall fail to return a license within ninety days after the issuing of the same, or who shall make a false return thereon, or any recorder who shall willfully make a false record of any marriage license or return thereon, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished as provided in the preceding part of this section.

The preceding part of the section provides that he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction he shall be fined in any sum not less than five nor more than one hundred dollars.

We call attention to these portions of the law for the State of Missouri, especially to that clause, "Who may perform marriage ceremonies," for the reason that the law is somewhat different from that of Illinois or that of Iowa either. And as there is an attraction on the part of the Saints to move into the State, we deem it advisable that all persons should be informed in regard to the law, that they may avoid laying themselves liable to prosecution.

Section 4728 gives the penalty for performing any such marriage, as follows:

Every person who shall solemnize any marriage, having knowledge of any fact which renders such marriage criminal in either of the parties under the preceding provisions of this article, or, having knowledge that either of the parties shall be under the age of legal consent, or where, to his knowledge, any other legal impediment exists to such marriage, and every person not authorized by law to solemnize marriages who shall falsely represent that he is so authorized, and who, by any pretended marriage ceremony which he may perform, shall deceive any innocent person or persons into the belief that they have been legally married, shall, on conviction, be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and be punished by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year, or by fine not less than five hundred dollars, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

There may have been marriages performed by some of our elders in the State of Missouri, who at the time of the performance of such ceremony were not citizens of the United States. It is nowise probable, however, that at the performance of such ceremony the elder officiating knew that he was not acting legally, or that he was in any wise deceiving the parties who were so married by him; and thus bringing himself within the condemnation of the statute, and subjecting himself to the penalty imposed upon such misdemeanor. Any who may have performed marriages within the prohibition may therefore not be seriously disturbed in reference to the matter, as the absence of criminal intent would relieve the situation so far, that a jury would assess either a fine or imprisonment.

We advise the elders everywhere to inform themselves concerning the law of the State, Territory, or Dominion, where they may be laboring or living, where they may be called upon to perform marriage ceremonies, in order that they may keep within the provisions of the statutes governing in such cases. To adopt a homely phrase, "Be sure you are correct, and then go ahead."

PILGRIMS OF THE PLAINS.

As a bit of interesting history for careful reading and reflection, evidently written by one who knows his ground, we commend the following letter, recently published in the New York World:

To the Editor of The World: I wish you knew how interesting and unrecorded a theme you opened up in your statement as to the motives for the western exodus of the "Pilgrims of the plains." I had occasion to spend some four years making search into the prepioneer era in the Far West. On examining the diaries of Mormon pioneers—both of my grandfathers having been in the movement—I found that they met while on these supposedly "trackless" plains more people coming east than were in their party going west—the eastbound traffic being the normal season's travel of fur traders over a wagon road that went to Oregon; that the Mormon pathfinders were given, this side of the Rockies, three newspapers published beyond the Sierras by Americans (two in Oregon and one in California); that they were only one of four large companies then westbound for settlement; that Fremont, in 1843, at almost the summit of the Rockies, had been compelled to "turn aside from the trail because of the deep dust from the previous traffic"; that after 1830 there was a regular wagon route to the Wind River Mountains; that Brigham Young had been in conference before starting with Father De Smet, the Catholic priest who had pulled Indian arrows out of Jim's Bridger's hide and had gone from coast to coast; that Father De Smet takes credit in his narrative as the possible source of Brigham Young's liking for the Great Basin; that the Great Salt Lake, as a name, is altered from the French form, just as the Grande Ronde in Oregon, the Teton Mountains in Wyoming, the Duchesnes River in Utah, and the Provo City (from Etienne Provost, a trapper), attest the prepioneer presence of the French "voyageurs."

I found that Ogden City, Utah, carried its name from Peter Skeen Ogden, and that as "Ogden's Hole" it had been for a decade prior to 1830 the extreme eastern outpost of the British invasion of the Far West. I found that from a battle fought by Americans and Ogden's men in Cache Valley, named from the fact that Ogden kept his furs there till shipping season, the real American interest in the country originated. This was because Ashley captured all of Ogden's furs, and got $250,000 plus the cordial competition of John Jacob Astor for them in Saint Louis. After that Ashley's men and Astor's men chased each other all over the mountain country, and jointly bucked the British and rowed with Indians friendly with British trading posts. They were the men whose howl for help against British opposition stirred Congress into sending out Fremont.

Ashley, unfortunately, died before interest in the Far West got beyond the then frontier; Jim Bridger had the pleasure of hearing himself called a liar for fifty years because he tried to tell people who tapped their heads when he drew near that there was a Yellowstone Park; Powell, the explorer, coming down the Greene River—named from one of Ashley's subordinates—fifty years after Ashley, found an inscription on a rock far above some rapids. It was where Ashley had been wrecked in a journey which gave Americans their first knowledge that the Colorado River's upper reaches really led to the Pacific instead of the Atlantic. And so far, except that a river running into the Greene is known as the Ashley River, no more honor than that done him by Powell has ever been thought of. Jedediah Smith, who bought Ashley out on the Great Salt Lake in 1827, and then rounded the southern rim of the Great Basin, abolishing those old-style maps which picture the Buenaventura River as running west from the Rockies to San Francisco, was killed by a Comanche's arrow.

Yet the data are all available, and State Historical Societies are gradually ridding themselves of the old myth that begins Western history with Fremont and the immigrants and makes the settlers appear as "trail blazers."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

At the last meeting of the Commercial Club, an organization composed of the business men and many of the citizens of Lamoni, a committee consisting of W. J. Mather, T. B. Nicholson, and F. B. Blair was appointed to promote the location in Lamoni of small manufacturing industries calculated to furnish employment for the people who are anxious to move here. Lamoni has excellent schools, as well as Graceland College; low rents; real estate can be had at a reasonable price, making it a desirable place for working men to make their home, provided they can find employment. We presume that scattered throughout the church there are many men who are now employed in factories who could better their condition by starting a small factory in Lamoni, provided the capital was in hand. This committee of the Commercial Club, of which F. B. Blair is chairman, would be pleased to correspond with men who are now employed in factories and who are capable of conducting a small factory with a little help financially. It is not thought, at first, to make a move for any large factory, but if several smaller concerns could be secured, it is thought that the chance for success would be greater. Anyone reading this article and desiring further information can secure it by writing to the chairman of the committee.

CHINA AND TRIPOLI.—We desire to take notice of world movements which seem to be in fulfillment of prophecy. At the present time there is a seething revolution in China, the outcome of which none can tell at this time. Italy and Turkey are in the throes of war in Tripoli, and the papers are full of reports of bloodshed and savagery in that African country. As it is our desire to note results in their relation to each other, we are not attempting to make any record of events. We expect to record final good when the conflicting forces work out the destiny of the God of nations.

REFUSES TO DISTINGUISH.—The Rev. A. M. McVey with whom Bro. F. J. Ebeling recently debated at South Sharon, Pennsylvania, has written to the Christian Leader and the Way in regard to that discussion. His letter is devoted mainly to the Utah faith and doctrines, and to a coming debate to be held in Fairmont, West Virginia, where he says the Brighamites have already gained a footing and have quite a following. We believe that in the interest of truth Reverend McVey should make some mention of the difference between the church represented in the debate at South Sharon and the one to be held at Fairmont. One might easily believe from the reverend's letter that his failure to give either the name or the church of his opponent at South Sharon is the natural result of his desire to confuse and to perpetuate common error and ignorance among the people in regard to the two churches. In another issue of the same paper are found a press item credited to the North American, Philadelphia, another from a South Sharon paper signed "Outsider," followed by a short note signed "C. D. M." All of these relate to the Ebeling-McVey debate and dwell at length on Reverend McVey's challenge to Brother Ebeling to drink carbolic acid as a test of faith, producing at the same time a bottle of the liquid. Both press items say: "McVey was not slow to seize the opportunity, and, drawing a bottle of carbolic acid from his pocket," etc., indicating to us that "Outsider" of the South Sharon paper is also correspondent for the North American, and we suspect his initials are "C. D. M."

SAFFORD (ARIZONA) GUARDIAN.—A copy of the Safford (Arizona) Guardian is sent us which contains a communication from Bro. J. E. Vanderwood, missionary. He gives a short outline in the belief of the church and quotes Doctrine and Covenants to show the position of the original church on polygamy. We note by scanning other columns of this paper that he is in a Utah Mormon settlement, as evidenced by such headings as "Saint Joseph Stake News," "Ward conference appointments," etc., and presume that it is a good place to make plain the mission of the Reorganization. Strength to the arm and logic of Brother Vanderwood.

BROOKLYN DAILY EAGLE.—Bro. W. E. LaRue has been interviewed by a reporter for the Brooklyn Daily Eagle, and in its issue of November 5 this paper devotes almost two columns to a general write up of our work in greater New York and a historical sketch of the Reorganization. It is a very satisfactory report, most of it being quotations from replies made by Brother LaRue to direct inquiries. The differences between us and the Utah Church were sharply drawn. Brigham Young's connection with the revelation was set out briefly and convincingly. Brother LaRue is to be commended on securing such fair representation and the Brooklyn Eagle deserves credit for its disposition to show up the real facts.

BOLES AND BOLES.—We are advised by Bro. J. W. Wight that there are two Boles, Marion and W. H., the former being the one with whom Bro. S. W. L. Scott is debating at Logan, the latter the one who has been commissioned to "eat up the Mormons" in Oklahoma. They are brothers.

DEBATE AT LOGAN.—From Bro. J. W. Wight we have the following under date of November 9, in regard to the discussion at Logan: "The discussion here is just half over, and so far there is a largely prevailing sentiment in favor of Scott being much the abler man. The interest is intense and the attendance so far has taxed the capacity of the house. Some grandchildren of Mr. Gilson—the man with whom I had the newspaper controversy that led up to this debate—are to be baptized by their grandfather, Bro. Sidney Pitt, sr., as soon as the debate is over. I am certain from present indications that much good is being accomplished for our glorious cause."

AUTOMOBILE OR "AUTO-HYPNOSIS."—The Evening Sun (New York) attributes the large number of church sleepers to the automobile: "The reason for the increased tendency to drop asleep in church is said to be the automobile. The persons who have driven rapidly through an open and exhilarating air fall an easy prey to drowsiness if they are incautious enough to leave the automobile and sit down in a warm, stuffy atmosphere." We have heard the other theory that it is auto-hypnosis, resulting from such concentration of attention upon the preacher and his theme that the listener finds himself in the arms of the god of sleep only to be released by the cheering strains of the doxology.

PATRIARCH JOHN SMITH DEAD.—From newspaper reports and by letter from Pres. Joseph Smith we learn of the death of Patriarch John Smith, of the Utah Church, on last Monday, November 6, at Salt Lake City. John Smith was the son of Hyrum Smith and was born September 22, 1832, in Kirtland, Ohio, and went west with the family of Heber C. Kimball, but did not reach the valley until September, 1848.

He began labor in connection with the Utah Church at an early age and has served many years as presiding patriarch in that body. His life has been an eventful one. His death leaves Pres. Joseph Smith, of the Reorganized Church, the oldest living member of the descendants of Joseph Smith, senior.

PRES. JOSEPH SMITH'S ANNIVERSARY.—President Smith celebrated his seventy-ninth birthday on last Monday, November 6, and was generously remembered by relatives and friends, receiving many letters and post cards from his countless friends. He begins his eightieth year in full possession of powers of mind and heart. The loss of his sight is of course a grievous one, but he bears it without complaining.

Gethsemane.

In golden youth, when seems the earth
A summer land for singing mirth,
When souls are glad and hearts are light
And not a shadow lurks in sight,
We do not know it, but there lies
Somewhere, veiled under evening skies,
A garden each must some time see,
Gethsemane, Gethsemane,
Somewhere his own Gethsemane.

With joyous steps we go our ways,
Love lends a halo to the days.
Light sorrows sail like clouds, afar.
We laugh and say how strong we are.
We hurry on, and hurrying, go
Close to the borderland of woe
That waits for you and waits for me.
Gethsemane, Gethsemane,
For ever waits Gethsemane.

Down shadow lanes, across strange streams,
Bridged over by our broken dreams,
Behind the misty cape of years,
Close to the great salt font of tears
The garden lies; strive as you may
You can not miss it in your way.
All paths that have been or shall be Pass somewhere
Through Gethsemane.

All those who journey, soon or late
Must pass within the garden's gate;
Must kneel alone in darkness there
And battle with some fierce despair.
God pity those who can not say—
"Not mine, but thine;" who only pray,
"Let this cup pass," and can not see
The purpose in Gethsemane.
Gethsemane, Gethsemane,
God helps us through Gethsemane!

Morning Song.

Once more the morning light appears
And drives away the night;
So perfect love expels all fear,
And floods our souls with light.

All praise now be to God on high,
Who makes our prospects bright;
Who softens every tear and sigh,
And floods our souls with light.

D. R. BALDWIN.

He Is Mine.

We'll reverence his name, in him we'll abide;
We'll love him and serve him, whatever betide;
Sing his praise for ever, sing his praise again;
Sing the story, hallelujah. He's my Savior, Amen.
If we trust and believe and always endure,
He saves by his grace and his promise is sure,
He loved us so well he died for our sin,
If we trust him for ever, we surely shall win.
When Jesus was hanged on Calvary's tree,
He died to save sinners—for you and for me;
Sing his praise for ever, sing his praise again;
Sing the story, hallelujah. He's my Savior, Amen.
SUSAN M. PEPPER.

Prayer.

Tune—"Fellowship," number 168, in Saints' Hymnal.
When oppressed and discouraged I seek a retreat,
All alone for communion at God's mercy seat;
Heaven's gates seem to open while I'm pleading there,
I get glimpses of glory when kneeling in prayer.

Could I compass all nations by sea and by land,
And partake of the pleasures the world can command,
They'd be tasteless and worthless, not fit to compare
With the sweet hallowed season when kneeling in prayer.

I will follow the footsteps of Jesus my king,
And glad tributes of service to him I will bring;
For I know when the Tempter my soul would ensnare,
He will give strength to conquer when kneeling in prayer.

Ever blest be the dawning of that joyous day
When my sins by baptism were all washed away;
Now on one that is mighty I'll cast every care,
And praise him for his goodness when kneeling in prayer.
J. L. EDWARDS.

The Soul's Gain.

What? Refuse to enter the race
Because you can't see the goal?
Unwilling to keep up the pace—
Want to win, and yet not pay the toll?

My friend, success would be naught,
Were it easy always to attain;
The effort with which it is bought,
Counts greater than all other gain.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

PHILOLOGY OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.

The second proposition (already quoted) is more faulty than the first, and exhibits a lack of investigation of the subject, and a desire to say something, whether right or wrong, just so it is against the Book of Mormon.

Elder Traum says: "It is true that the Book of Mormon describes the Lamanites, or descendants of Laman, the brother of Nephi, as a warlike people, and the two nations, Lamanite, and Nephite, compared in their historic career, show a wide difference in the concomitants of civilization. After the destruction of the Nephites, by the Lamanites, and when the latter were permitted to roam over the western domain, we can expect the beacon lights to be destroyed and civilized conditions to be swallowed up in the barbarism which followed."

But what about that civilization of which Mr. Baldwin, on page 33, says, "To make such works possible under any circumstances, there must be settled life, with its accumulations, and intelligent, organized industry. Fixed habits of useful work directed by intelligence, are what barbarous tribes lack most of all."

What about the civilization that began in the valley of Cuzco, in Peru, of which Mr. Baldwin says, p. 236, "the uniform, and constant report of Peruvian tradition" placed there, and adds, "There appeared the first civiliziers, and the first civilized communities."

The Chichimecs belonged to the savage class, or the wild Indian, the Indian whom the ante-Columbian discoverers found wandering through the forests. They were scattered over the country around the semicivilized nations of Mexico, Central America, and Peru. The legendary lore and traditions of these nations show that the Chichimecs lived and were the tormentors of the civilized nations as far back as their traditions go. But we are not going to be so "stupid" as to say these Chichimecs destroyed civilization so soon after the first population was swept off the land. The Spaniards found, in ante-Columbian times, when they came over here, the Aztec, the Maya, and the Inca, and were amazed at their government, the extent of their empires, the grandeur of the chief cities, the manner of life, the luxury of their appointments. Unexpected as it was, to find these splendid conditions here, still more surprising was it to the antiquarian, who proclaimed these latter civilizations to be but the "fading rays" of a grander one which has preceded on this continent.

Prescott says: "Their civilization, such as it was, was not their own, but reflected, perhaps imperfectly, from a race whom they had succeeded in the land."—Conquest of Mexico, vol. 3, p. 201.

No, it is a profound mystery to the scientific as to who the ancestors of the American Indians were. They do not believe that the ancient civiliziers were related to them directly. But apostate Israel, on the Eastern Continent, and apostate Israel on the Western Continent, sink to conditions similar, and engage in similar practices, as will appear later.

We will introduce Mr. Bancroft once more, and give our critic another opportunity of the staccato passage. Remember, we claim Mr. Bancroft in the matter of Jewish parallelisms yet, and he will confirm his precious statement by the following:

Many traces of their [Jewish] old laws and ceremonies are to be found among them at the present day. . . . There do actually exist, besides, many Hebraic traces in the American languages.—Native Races, vol. 5, pp. 82, 83.

And again, he explains:

The Jews were famous for their fine work in stone, as is shown by the buildings of Jerusalem, and a similar excellence in this art is seen in the American ruins. The Mexicans have a tradition of a journey under taken at the command of a god, and continued for a long time under the direction of certain high priests, who miraculously obtained supplies for their support.—Ibid., p. 81.

"High priests" are a Jewish institution of "the covenant at Sinai," so Mr. Campbell informed us, and the latter quotation from Bancroft, as explained by Mr. Campbell, gives us a more "distinctive trait," proving Jewish relationship.

Thus the Aztec, the Maya, the Chichimec, the Inca, are fragments from the "wreck" that occurred to previous civilizations of antiquity. Professor Baldwin uses the characteristic words as follows:

Of the civilization of the Aztecs, who built the old city of Mexico, it is evident that when they came into the Valley of Mexico they were much less advanced in civilization than their predecessors, the Toltecs, but when they rose to supremacy they adopted, so far as possible, the superior knowledge of the Toltecs, and continued with a lower standard the former civilization. It has been said, not without reason, that the civilization found in Mexico by the Spanish conquerors consisted to a large extent, "of fragments from the wreck that befell the American civilization of antiquity."—Ancient America, p. 92.

LANGUAGES CHANGE AND DECAY.

The "distinct character" of languages common to all the Americans, and "apparently" different from those of the other continent, assuming their forms from natural causes, as assumed by Mr. Gallatin's summary and adopted by Elder Traum, avails nothing as an objection. Mr. Lyell says:

None of the languages of Modern Europe are a thousand years old. No English scholar who has not specially given himself up to the study of Anglo-Saxon can interpret the documents in which the chronicle and laws of England were written in the days of King Alfred; so that we may be sure that none of the English of the 19th century could converse with the subjects of that monarch, if the latter could now be restored to life.

The same can be affirmed of Germany:

They who now speak German, if now brought into contact with their Teutonic ancestors of the ninth century, would be quite unable to converse with them, and, in like manner, the subjects of Charlemagne could not have exchanged ideas with the Goths of Alaric's army, or with the soldiers of Arminius in the days of Augustus Cæsar.—Lyell's Antiquities of Man, p. 459.

If we turn to France, we meet again with similar evidences of ceaseless change. Chevalier Pertz has printed a treaty of peace a thousand years old between Charles the Bold, and King Louis of Germany, (dated A. D. 841,) in which the German king takes an oath in what was the French tongue of that day, while French king swears in the German of the same era, and neither of these oaths would now convey a distinct meaning to any but learned in these two countries.—Lyell's Antiquities of Man.

So in Italy:

The modern Italian can not be traced back much beyond the time of Dante, or some six centuries before our time. Even in Rome, where there had been no permanent intrusion of foreigners, such as the Lombard settlers of German origin in the plains of the Po, the common people of A. D. 1000, spoke quite a distinct language from that of their Roman ancestors of their Italian descendants, as is shown by the celebrated chronicle of the Monk Benedict of the convent of Saint Andrea on Mount Soracte, written in such barbarous Latin and with such strange grammatical forms, that it requires a profoundly skilled linguist to decipher it.—Lyell's Antiquities of Man, pp. 459, 460. Present Conflict, pp. 424, 425.

Of the tribes in South America, Professor Hutson says:

Travelers among the Brazilian Indians tell us that when a branch of a tribe has lived apart from the main stock, it develops different customs, and a totally different language. This is probably universally the case with savages, and it is, no doubt, the reason why the great diversity of languages among the black, the red, and the yellow races is nowhere supplied with a clew which shall enable us to trace them to any common origin.—Beginnings of Civilization, p. 107.

Colonel Dodge, with thirty-three years' personal experience among the Indians, has summed up the thought thus:

At this moment there are no less than sixty-six bands of Utes separated widely in localities and speaking languages undoubtedly referable to one root, but so various as to dialect, that any but the closest observer might with reason insist that they are different languages.—Our Wild Indians, p. 45.

So pass ancient languages: they are born, they run their career, they die, and are consigned to the tomb. With one more we close this chapter. Stephens says on this point, considering the ruins of Palenque:

The intermediate country is now occupied by races of Indians speaking many different languages, and entirely unintelligible to each other; but there is room for the belief that the whole of this country was once occupied by the same race, speaking the same language, or at least having the same written characters.—Travels in Central America, Chiapas, and Yucatan, vol. 2, page 343.

Mr. Traum can see that the "distinct character" of language common to all in America, and "different" from those we know on the other continent, offers no violent objection to the Book of Mormon that it does not offer to the Bible.

LANGUAGE OF THE NEPHITES.

Chapters 8, 9, and 10 of Mormonism Against Itself are so closely allied to each other in subject matter, that we group them together, and review the objections which are pertinent, as a whole.

We will state first the Book of Mormon claims as to the language in which it was written. The opening paragraph of the Book of Mormon contains the following:

Yea, I make a record in the language of my father, which consists of the learning of the Jews, and the language of the Egyptians.—Page 1, par. 1.

On page 141, paragraph 1, King Benjamin taught his three sons:

In all the language of his fathers, that, thereby they might become men of understanding.

Speaking of Lehi, who came out of Jerusalem, B. C. 600, King Benjamin says:

For he having been taught in the language of the Egyptians, therefore he could read these engravings, and teach them to his children, that thereby they could teach them to their children, and so fulfilling the commandments of God, even down to the present time.

On page 500 of Book of Mormon, Moroni, the last writer, gives us the following concerning the language of the record, and their knowledge of Hebrew:

And now behold, we have written this record according to our knowledge, in the characters which are called among us the reformed Egyptian, being handed down and altered by us, according to our manner of speech. And if our plates had been sufficiently large, we should have written in Hebrew; but the Hebrew hath been altered by us also.

These statements are unambiguous, and furnish no evidence of fraud. The language in which the record was written was a combination of "the learning of the Jews and the language of the Egyptians." They understood this language, teaching it to successive generations. It was handed down, a combination to begin with, and "altered" by them according to their "manner of speech." They understood the use of Hebrew in a changed form—"the Hebrew hath been altered by us also."

The reformed Egyptian being the shorter method of writing, was used in making their records. It was not so correct as the Hebrew, for they say: "And if we could have written in Hebrew, behold, ye would have had no imperfection in our record."

It is well to keep before Mr. Traum the fact of Israel's contact with Egyptian learning, customs, traditions, and language for four hundred years. The further fact that Ephraim and Manasseh are the sons of an Egyptian lady, to whom Joseph was wedded,—the daughter of the priest of On, the fair Asenath, and it is not reasonable to believe they went out from Egypt under Moses, "who was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in words and deeds" (Acts 7: 22), without taking with them a knowledge of the Egyptian language.

It is an additional fact that "the language of the Egyptians remained the same from the date of the third dynasty until about 700 years B. C.," and that "difference in dialect, due to difference in speech, in upper and lower Egypt, had entered into correspondence, as early as the time of the Empire." (See Encyclopædia Britannica.)

Again, Egyptians employed three distinct systems of writing, "hieroglyphic, hieratic, and demotic," or the "enchorial." (See Rawlinson, vol. 1, p. 120.)

The "hieroglyphic" were used on "monuments," the "demotic are commonly employed in the papyrus, rolls, or books of the Egyptians." (Ibid.)

Now, Traum's witness, E. D. Howe, quoting W. W. Phelps' letter in History of Mormonism, 1840, on page 273, says Phelps wrote: "At New York, they (the Book of Mormon characters.—S. W. L. S.) were shown to Doctor Mitchill, and he referred to Professor Anthon who translated and declared them to be ancient shorthand Egyptian."

Presto! Traum parades Lamb (not of Calvary, but of Utah), who furnishes the testimony of the "hieroglyphic," from the monuments of Copan. Which one of these our critic will abide, he does not say. "The phonetic represents a sound—either a simple articulation, or complete sound—syllable," so Egyptologists inform us. The "hieroglyphic," used on monuments, is more the "pictorial" system.

But by a comparison of the Egyptian hieratic, (although we do not believe this to be the system employed to write the Book of Mormon) with the "characters" of the book, "the family resemblance does appear:"

MAYA HIERATIC.

Λ IL ∞ 2 - 2 V C O X T

BOOK OF MORMON.

Λ IL ∞ 2 - 2 V C O X T

EGYPTIAN HIERATIC.

|||| X 4 3 2 A = 2 2 = 4 X 9

BOOK OF MORMON

||||| X 4 3 2 A = 2 2 = 4 X 9

As also the Maya hieratic when brought into a line of comparison.

But suppose the resemblance in the family of glyphs should not be so readily seen, what is the "moral deduction"? That the Book of Mormon is a fraud? Archaeologists affirm that there is a resemblance, yet it would not militate against the book's claim if no analogy could be produced. This continient has been a wonderful theater for lights and shades in the picture of civilization; centers have been found and languages changed; heights have been reached in national development; and depths found where glory has wrapped herself in dust, in the hecatomb of the past.

The difficulty with which the investigation is beset is stated by the Bureau of American Ethnology, in the 28th Bulletin, Mexican, and Central American Antiquities, 1904, p. 596, as follows:

Archæologic difficulties are also added to this difficulty of ethnologic investigation. A multifarious swarming of races prevailed in Central America; civilized nations roamed hither and thither; centers of civilization flourished and perished; numerous languages existed side by side, and were exchanged, changing and altered with marvelous rapidity. Without transcending the limits of science in fanciful suppositions, which are never more dangerous than in this domain, we may assume that many chapters of human history have sunk into oblivion on Central American soil, and that many a civilized race, of which not the slightest memory remains, existed upon that soil long before the conquest. Where there is no difficulty in determining the local origin of remains, as is the case of buildings and monuments, the obstacles in the way of an ethnologic and chronologic determination are often all the greater.

In view of the above scientific statement, it would seem that the Book of Mormon has been telling the truth all these years. This settles the question "languages" have been "altered," "changed," just as the Book of Mormon affirms, and this statement is confirmed by the brains of the archæological world at Washington, District of Columbia.

That the system of "glyphs" in America resemble the Egyptian, we quote as follows:

In tracing then, the ancestry of the Mexicans and Peruvians, by analogy in their hieroglyphic system, where shall we take them but to Egypt and Southern Asia?—Delafield's American Antiquities, page 47.

The Book of Mormon nowhere intimates that the "reformed Egyptian" on the plates was the only universal system for all purposes known to the Nephites. It does inform us that the Nephites kept many records, and wrote on many subjects. The Nephites and Lamanites had one language, but it is not true that they employed but one system of writing; not only does the "glyph" system point to the Egyptian, but the hieratic also.

Professor Le Plongeon, the French linguist who devoted years to the study of the "glyphs" in Mexico and Central America, says:

The ancient Maya hieratic alphabet, discovered by me, is as near alike to the ancient hieratic alphabet of the Egyptians, as two alphabets can possibly be, forcing upon us the conclusion that the Mayas and the Egyptians either learned the art of writing from the same masters, or that the Egyptians learned it from the Mayas.—Sacred Mysteries, 113.

Again, Josiah Priest and Delafield:

But at Lexington, Kentucky, the traits are too notorious to allow them to be other than pure Egyptian, in full possession of the strongest complexion of their national character, that of embalming, which was connected with their religion.—Priest's American Antiquities, p. 116, in ed. 1834.

One of the most interesting sources of comparison between Mexico, Peru, and Egypt, is to be found in an investigation of their hieroglyphic system. Each of these countries had a peculiar method of recording events by means of hieroglyphic signs, sculpturing them on monuments and buildings, and portraying them on papyrus and maguey.—Dalafeld's American Antiquities, p. 42.

It is the opinion of the author that further investigations and discoveries in deciphering Mexican hieroglyphic paintings will exhibit a close analogy to the Egyptian in the use of two scriptural systems; the one for monumental inscription, the other for ordinary purposes of record and transmission of information. We find the three species of hieroglyphics common to Mexico and Egypt.—Ibid., p. 46.

Now, Mr. Traum, is the impression you sought to convey of Joseph Smith true? Why not you confess that you are overtaken, or your would-be theory, with the "fatality that is the fate of blunderers."

HOW THE LORD ANSWERED A PRAYER.

Some years ago I baptized a sister at the town of R— and a few months later she was taken ill with a painful affliction. She had desired to know if the Lord acknowledged her, and now she desired administration that she might be relieved of her affliction; there being no elder in the town and not knowing where to find one, she went to the Lord in prayer, asking that the Lord would send the one who had baptized her, and if he should be sent within three days she would consider it a direct answer to her prayer. The days passed by until the evening of the third day, and it seemed to her that her prayer would not be answered.

That day, which was Saturday, the elder she had prayed for had come to the town of G—, about twenty-five miles west of R—, to remain over Sunday, but he met a brother from the country who informed him that a certain sister at H— was dangerously ill, having been stricken very suddenly, and search was being made for an elder to come and administer to her; and that a phone message had come for the writer.

Under the circumstances we thought best to yield our Sunday appointment to the local brethren, and go to administer to the sick sister, but to do so we had to go to R—, remain over night, and take an early morning train to H—. There were two or three families of Saints living at R—, and as we reached the depot we felt impressed to go to one of them which lived on the other side of town. As we reached the door one of the little "Hopes" ran to the home of the sister who had been praying for three days for the Lord to send me, and told her that Brother F. was there. Her prayer was suddenly answered, at the last moment, and upon her request we went and administered to her and she received a blessing. We administered to several other of the Saints who were sick, and in the morning went on to visit the other sister who was so seriously ill at H—.

Coming to the schoolhouse where Sunday school and church were to be held that morning, we met the husband, who told us that his wife had been as suddenly relieved as she had been stricken, and she was all right now except some weakness. After preaching to the people who had gathered we went home with the brother whose wife had been ill, and she was able to sit at the table and eat dinner with the rest.

WHY AM I AT GRACELAND?

I realize that I am something of a pioneer in the field that I have undertaken to traverse to-day. But these few thoughts that I will endeavor to present have so impressed me at times that I would feel guilty of a misdemeanor were I to keep them to myself.

I want to make this explanation before presenting the thoughts in question: It was not a personal feeling that led me to think along these lines, but the deep and tender feeling that I possess for present and future Graceland.

When I came to Graceland, I brought with me some very foolish notions concerning this community. One was, that I would find ideal conditions existing here. I can not tell why I happened to form such a notion, but I am very thankful it was not true. That may sound like a queer statement, but as it was stated from our platform one morning, if we were perfect, we would all take wings and fly away, or something to that effect, and that would be sad indeed.

But laying aside all joking, let us take a serious introspection of our conditions as we find ourselves at the present time—our relations to each other as individuals—our relations as a student body—to the institution we claim to love and uphold. Let each individual examine the innermost recesses of his soul and ask himself the question, "Why am I in Graceland? Whose interests have I most at heart; my own or those of the institution I claim to love? When I leave, will Graceland have been better or worse for my having been here?" These are questions which every individual must answer for himself or herself. No one can decide them for you. No one has any legitimate right to decide them for you.

We are given to understand that this institution is a result of divine commandment. We also understand that it is to have a part in the redemption of Zion. Students, does this mean anything to us? If so, what? Does it mean that because this institution has divine sanction that we should lie down in our boats, throw away the oars, and drift with the tide? Does it mean that we will be carried to our paradise on flowery beds of ease? If so, God has changed, for his work along other lines has never been accomplished that way. To my personal knowledge, nothing has ever been accomplished but through sacrifice. If I am wrong, I would be pleased if some one corrected me.

Now let us examine our Graceland as she stands to-day. Sixteen years old. Just in the bloom of young maidenhood. Having divine sanction, full of latent possibilities. Here are we, a student body, all professing to love and respect her. Now let us ask ourselves the question, "Do we represent the false lover, or the true?" When we decorate our rooms and our bodies with the blue and old-gold, when we sing praises to her name, when we shout Rah for Graceland! are we sincere in our hearts, or are we hypocrites? Are we praising her in words only and not in deeds?

Some of you will be saying by this time, "What is she hinting at anyway?" Let me whisper to you. I have ten times the respect for a student who will come right out and say, "I have no use for Graceland; I think your community here is rotten in management; I think your faculty are bughouse." I repeat, I have ten times more respect for such a student than I have for the one who puts on a smiling countenance, who flaunts the college colors, who says, I love Graceland, and I think we have such lovely teachers, and then watches for every opportunity to trespass the rules that these lovely teachers have established. Who takes every advantage he possibly can to pull the wool over the faculty's eyes, and who thinks that nothing is wrong if he is not caught at it. Students, these are the leeches that are sucking the life blood of our college ideal. These are the wolves in sheep's clothing whose bark must be silenced before Graceland can take the place she is designed to fill, and it lies with us individually and collectively to decide the question.

Some one voiced the sentiment a short time ago that Graceland needed a higher moral plane. I shout "Amen" to that statement. Our president, I believe, made the statement in chapel one morning that in the near future every student who enters this college will be required to show a good moral recommendation. We hail that day with joy; but are we preparing a school that will be fit to receive such a student? Is our gate-keeper going to point to an inclosure, surrounded by a high wall, and say to him, If you succeed in scaling that wall there is a bounteous repast inside for you, and then after he has strained every nerve and exercised every ambition to scale the wall, will find nothing but scraps? Students, are we thinking of these things? Are we striving to perfect ourselves? are we willing and have we the moral spine to stand by the right in the face of opposition and possible persecution? Are we willing to sacrifice our time, our talents; nay, our very lives if necessary to uphold the Graceland banner and keep it from trailing in the dust of hypocrisy and deceit? Are you not going to strive to plant in each heart's garden a tiny seed that will sprout and grow during the coming years, and finally develop into a perfect flower to shed forth its beauty and fragrance upon a cold but admiring world?

We have on our faculty, and as our supervisors, some whom we know are divinely appointed for the positions they hold. Young people, have we any right as students to oppose their plans and their methods unless we are divinely instructed? Let me make the question broader. If these people in authority were none of them divinely appointed, have we, as students, any right to resist their authority? What is the one great object of our school system to-day? To create law-abiding citizens, of course. If the elementary school fails in individual cases, what happens? Nine times out of ten we find that individual in some of the penal institutions of the State where he is manacled and compelled to submit to authority. Now, young people, examine yourselves. Have you escaped through the elementary schools without having that all-important lesson imprinted on your minds? If so, why are you at Graceland? This is not a reformatory. Graceland can not supply you with a ball and chain and a striped suit; that is not Graceland's mission.

If you wish to get what Graceland has to offer, you must come here with a spirit of helpfulness. Prepare yourselves to get a taste of the true Graceland spirit, and having once imbibed that, you will never need to ask the question, "Is this or that right or wrong?" For if it is wrong, it will produce such a discord with your nature as will leave no doubt in your mind. The trained musician does not argue one moment when he strikes the discordant string; he knows instantly that it is inharmonious.

Young people, the proposition is before us. Are we going to rise to the occasion? Graceland is going forward! Graceland is going to advance, and the combined powers of earth and hell can not stay her progress; but the questions for you to decide are these: Are you going to be a lifter or a leaner? Are you going to be a booster or are you going to face the foot of the hill and use your strength and talents to impede the onward march? Young men and young women, the time is now ripe for your decision. Do not delay. There are young people before me now who are trying to lull themselves to sleep; who are listening to the whisperings of the Evil One; who are allowing weaker minds to influence them into wrong channels; who are trying to still their conscience by keeping away from the influences that would arouse them to action. Young people, remember, you are free agents. God is not going to compel you to take your place in this grand march of progress. You have the privilege of pressing forward to the goal and receiving your rewards, or of using your talents to retard this work to your utter condemnation. The choice is yours, and beware that you choose not unwisely. This is a place in your lives where you can not remain neutral. You can not stand still. You must either go up or down. I would say to the strong, "Gird on your armor; do not hesitate"; to the weak, "Be humble; do not lean on the arm of flesh, but between you and your God, settle this question, and settle it once for all."

Then you will see with new eyes, and will hear with new ears, and you will experience a joy never before felt.

I stand before you this morning and deliver this message with no fear of any earthly authority, with no fear of the effect these words might have upon you. I stand here in the assurance of a duty performed and with a feeling that I would rather stand before every member of the faculty, than to stand condemned before every student in Graceland and before every member of the faculty, than to stand condemned at that heavenly tribunal where we must all answer for deeds done in the flesh.

Two Miracles.

IN OPEN MEETING THE ICE FLOATED BACK.

I see in the Illinois Baptist wonderful experiences in baptisms—I will tell you one of my experiences. I was conducting a revival at Union Chapel, Scott County. Those converted at night would insist on being baptized the next day. There were as near as I can remember, seven conversions the night before this baptizing. The next day we went as usual to the Illinois River to attend the ordinance of baptism. Bro. George Murry was to do the baptizing. When we arrived at the river, we found it full of floating ice, as far as we could see, up and down the river. We had been cutting the ice to do the baptizing, but a thaw had now broken it up and it was in large blocks about four inches thick. We were on the east bank and a strong northwest wind was blowing. We did not know what to do. The people said, "There will be no baptizing to-day." When lo! and behold the ice began receding against that strong wind! Could we be deceived? At first we thought this was the case, but no; the ice went back fifty yards or more for about a hundred yards up and down the stream. It stayed this way long enough for Brother Murry to baptize the candidates; then floated back. I considered this a miracle, as did all those who were present. This was in February, 1901. The people living in that neighborhood can verify the truth of this narrative.

A REMARKABLE INCIDENT AT A BAPTISM.

Some eighteen years ago, while holding a meeting in the west part of the State of Indiana, near the little town of Coal Bluff, I was given by eye witnesses a remarkable incident of a baptism that occurred in that community some twenty years before. The names of the parties I have forgotten and perhaps in some respects part of the incidents have passed out of my mind, but such was the impression at the time that some things in regard to it I have not forgotten. A meeting was in progress at a Baptist church in the community. Many persons were being saved and rejoicing in the fact of being justified by faith. In the neighborhood was a woman who was thought to be in the last stages of consumption. The family consisted of husband, wife, and three children. During this meeting so great was the influence for good that this lady became interested about her soul's salvation. A meeting was held at the home of the family, as she was not able even to sit up. During this meeting she professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and immediately asked for baptism. Her condition was such that the attending physician said that it meant perhaps instant death, but during the next week she talked of nothing else but following her Lord and Master in the ordinance of baptism, and so great was her desire to be baptized that a consultation was held with her physician. The physician agreed that she could not live but a few days and that if her husband would take the responsibility, he would say no more against her being baptized. A meeting of the church was held at the home of this lady. A statement of her faith and desire to be baptized was expressed to the church thus assembled. She was received as a candidate for baptism. Near by the home was a pool of beautiful water which had been used for many years by the church for baptismal purposes. The lady was carried in a chair by two men from her room to the pool. The church assembled upon the banks of the pool to witness the sacred ordinance. She was carried into the water, the chair lowered and the minister with uplifted hand repeated the baptismal ceremony and buried this woman in the water with her Lord and Christ. As she was raised up out of the water, people upon the bank almost without exception involuntarily exclaimed, "See that angel." Those who witnessed the ceremony declare that they saw an angel hovering over the baptismal scene.

It was my privilege to visit and talk with this lady during my stay in that community twenty years after her baptism. She had lived to raise her three children, and when I talked with her, she gave me the facts as stated above.

During the meeting it was my privilege to baptize two of her children at the same place where the mother was baptized twenty years before.—Illinois Baptist.

Things are not worth reading merely because they are new. What is not valuable when old is seldom so when new; and everything we learn will be old soon, so that we should not let our knowledge become worthless by the time it is well in our possession. We ought to get knowledge that will last, and not have our attainments grow less with their age.—Austin Bierbower, in Reading and Home Study.

The lover never sees personal resemblances in his mistress to her kindred or to others. His friends find in her a likeness to her mother, or her sisters, or to persons not of her blood. The lover sees no resemblance except to summer evenings, and diamond mornings, to rainbows and the songs of birds.—Emerson.

Modern research and experience prove that mother's milk is the ideal infant food, and physicians declare that it is not only better for the baby, but better also for the mother, that she nurse it. The New York City health department, which is making such a strenuous crusade against infant mortality, declares that "Ten bottle fed babies die to one that is breast fed."

Other cities are entering upon this work of saving the babies, warning against bottle feeding and seeking to educate the people in the proper care of infants, especially among the poor, where the mortality is greatest. They are recognizing the truth in the statement of Dr. Samuel G. Dixon, Pennsylvania State Commissioner of Health: "As soon as a child is born it becomes a ward of the State. . . . It is a part of the commonwealth; belonging not only to the parents, but to the whole people." See "Philadelphia's fight for her babies," American Motherhood, March, 1911; or a synopsis of this article in September Autumn Leaves.

"In France placards are placed in all factories and places where women are employed, telling of the advantages of breast feeding, and special rooms are set aside where women may nurse their babies.

"In this country, on the contrary, there has been a steadily growing disinclination among mothers to nurse their babies. Sometimes selfishness, the refusal to be "tied down," prompts the mother to neglect this duty to her child. Again, the neighbors and relatives advise her not to do so. They tell her it is too much bother, that she 'hasn't enough' for it, or that she is not strong enough. Believing that artificial feeding is just as good, she gives her baby the bottle, often with fatal results.

"And yet mother love is so strong that if every mother were made to realize that her baby's life and health and future depend upon her giving it the breast, there would be few if any mothers who would shirk this obligation.

"As a matter of fact only one mother in every thousand can not nurse her baby. And even if the mother has not sufficient milk to give it all the nourishment it needs, she should give it the breast and supplement it with whatever other food best agrees with the little one.

"When it is necessary to give the baby the bottle, extreme care must be taken to insure absolute cleanliness, for bottles and nipples that are carelessly handled are a deadly menace to baby's health. Immediately after use rinse the bottle and nipple in cool water, then wash thoroughly in hot water and soda to keep them sweet. If the baby does not drink all the milk or food, do not keep it and warm it over, but throw it away and prepare fresh next time."—From "Infant mortality—the crime of the age," American Motherhood.

"It has come to be a fad to bottle feed the little waifs that drift to our shores (and pity it is that so many of them do drift,) while the one purpose should be to nurse them unless absolutely impossible. By persistence the milk supply which seems reluctant at first can usually be brought up to the standard amount and the baby thrive on it.

"More often than otherwise the young mother is dissipating her energy that should be given to generating a food supply sufficient for her baby. . . .

"The mind and the nerves are the culprits and they must be schooled out of their bad habits. By resolutely putting away any and everything, no matter how dear to the heart that takes so much of time and strength that baby is cheated, the mother will come into her full inheritance, and while the little one is drinking in its life 'more abundant' from her, she may be growing upward and planting many a seed of faithfulness that will spring up and blossom later for her children and the world in a larger, fuller life than she could otherwise have known. . . .

"Plain, wholesome food, quiet restful living, and the full determination to give her little ones their rightful due would settle many a question without the aid of the doctor, and the mother be richer for it. I verily believe that the time spent in nursing can be made the richest hours in a woman's life. Think of the sweet purposes and desires and ambitions that are born while the little one draws its life from her; yes! and the strength of their fulfillment as well."—Dr. Emma F. A. Drake.

But "do not imagine that every time your baby cries he is hungry and give him the breast or thrust the bottle in his mouth. A baby whose stomach is 'crowded' can not thrive. Even a grown-up who eats at all hours will soon become a dyspeptic, and a baby's stomach is much more delicate than that of an adult. . . . Whether the baby is breast fed or bottle fed he should have his meals at regular intervals."

Few infants can digest cow's milk unless it is changed to make it more nearly resemble mother's milk. The following formula for modified milk is from The Care of the Baby, by J. P. Crozer Griffith, M. D. This book is one used in the trained nurse's course in many of the large hospitals, and is recommended by a nurse who has had the best of success with babies. She says, "Tell the mothers to raise their babies by a reliable book and not by the uncertain advice of neighbors and friends; and first of all tell them to nurse their babies if they can."

TOP-MILK MIXTURE.

Top milk 2 ounces, lime water or soda solution $\frac{1}{2}$ ounce, milk-sugar $\frac{1}{2}$ ounce, water sufficient to make 8 ounces.

Doctor Drake gives this same formula for modified milk, except that the amount of water (boiled) is sixteen ounces, suitable for earlier feeding. She says: "The first food tried should be modified milk. Give plenty of time for a good trial of this before turning to another. . . . This preparation does for the child until three or four months old. Then increase gradually, a half ounce at a time, the milk until the child can take the straight milk. Get the freshest and cleanest milk possible, preferably herd cows' milk, as it is a more even mixture and is sufficiently rich. Jersey milk contains too large a proportion of fat. Let the milk stand on ice or in cold water from four to six hours before removing the top milk."

This accords with Doctor Griffith's instruction, although he says that because of the individual peculiarities of the child the proportions may need to vary or the food be modified in some other way, and he adds: "I can not too strongly urge that no mother make these trials on her own responsibility. The problem is too serious for any unskilled experiments and the solution exceedingly difficult even for the most experienced physician."

Another eminent authority, L. Emmett Holt, M. D., in his book, The Care and Feeding of Children, gives very full directions for preparing modified milk in proportions to suit babies of different ages and conditions of health. This little work contains most valuable advice in simple form, and is very highly recommended.

"Regarding the numerous patented foods it need only be said that some of them are harmful and none of them are necessary or desirable for a child with a healthy digestion. . . . Although many of them claim to be a perfect substitute for mother's milk, none of them are this, and many contain starch in considerable quantities. Others, although utilizing starch, have transformed it into dextrin or malt sugar in the process of manufacture. This procedure certainly presents no advantage over and is in most respects inferior to the direct addition of milk-sugar to the milk in the manner recommended.

Apart from the fact that the patent foods are very prone to produce rickets or scurvy, the very best of them are only tolerably successful efforts to simulate mother's milk, and this is no more than we can do by following formulæ given by a physician.

"There is one form of prepared food on the market which is scarcely ever admissible—namely, condensed milk. When it is diluted sufficiently to make the proteids digestible it contains far too little fat; and in many cases it is diluted so much that the proportion of proteids also is much less than it should be. I have seen so many babies starving on condensed milk that I now rarely give it. It is true that some babies grow fat and are seemingly healthy, but the health is often only apparent and rickets is very liable to result."—J. P. Crozer Griffith, M. D.

For occasional use, as on a railway journey, or where it is thought necessary to give food before mother's milk arrives, Doctor Griffith approves of condensed milk. Some other physicians recommend it for short periods for delicate babies, or to use it for alternate feedings with modified milk.

"As the foundations of health are laid in infancy, so are the foundations of character. . . . The truth is that education begins with life itself, and at no time is the baby rightly a mere source of amusement. Everything pertaining to his care has a moral quality. In the regularity or irregularity of his times of feeding he is being educated in temperance or intemperance. In the atmosphere of his home he is being taught love and gentleness or the contrary. The tones and manner of those who speak to him are teaching him fear or courage, good temper or irritation. Even in babyhood he is learning cruelty or kindness, obedience or rebelliousness, and later, direct efforts may not be able to undo the evil so thoroughly taught by indirect means. And the child may be severely punished for that which he has been taught to do by the parents or friends who had no idea they were so teaching."—Dr. Wood-Allen.

"Very soon, I am sure the mother has to make the baby feel that she herself follows a higher law than her own will; that she seeks the baby's welfare, body and soul, and having found the path to it, she can not yield to influences which would lead her to disobey this direction. I believe this to be a fundamental principle of influence. The child soon recognizes that its mother is swayed by no variable mood, by no self-will, anger, or impatience, but by the steadfast love and devotion to duty, and this becomes in time to it a guiding force. . . .

"The baby should have its wants anticipated, to prevent its crying to express them, and attention should be given to it quietly, promptly, lovingly; it should never be needlessly thwarted in its desires, never be made passionate by inattention or resistance; it should be kept serene and happy, and this care should extend to every moment of an infant's day. With recurrence of actions at stated times, habits are formed, and the child will soon fall into sleeping and taking its food at regular intervals. These should be carefully though not too rigorously observed."—Mrs. Frank Malleson.

"An infant can be taught to go to sleep in his own bed unattended just as easily as he can be allowed to think he must be rocked to sleep or have his hands held by a slavish mother until he falls asleep. But if he is held and rocked and talked to and crooned and fussed over for the first six months of his life for any reason whatever, and then put to bed in a darkened room unattended, he is with perfect right going to set up a howl for the things he has been accustomed to. Why should not this be so? Habit is strong with him and reason is small.

"Remembering from the first that the baby is here for his own sake and not for that of others he is not disturbed to show to admiring friends, but allowed his fullest right to quiet, peaceful sleep, and an opportunity to get acquainted with himself and the world according to his own powers."—Dr. Wood-Allen.

"If a baby's eyes come open oftener than his mouth does in the first few months of his existence, it is a bad sign. He is geared to sleep twenty-three hours out of the twenty-four and to grow every minute that he sleeps. A healthy baby during the first half month should scarcely make more noise than a potato and should be treated like one: planted in a warm, sunny spot, watered well, and disturbed as little as possible. When he wants anything he will wake up and mention it, but only just loud enough for you to notice it unless you are inattentive enough to require him to repeat his remark. But this will seldom happen if you are politely attentive to his first suggestion. A baby never cries just to expand his lungs or to hear himself. . . .

"We hardly realize how closely connected sleep and growth are. While we are doubling our weight every eight months in babyhood we sleep eighteen to twenty hours a day. As long as we can sleep ten or more hours a day we continue to grow. . . . The baby sleeps so that he can devote his undisturbed attention to the business of growth and such a success does he make of his business that he grows five times as fast as he ever will again. . . .

"Why should we be so anxious to keep the baby warm and so fearful that he will get chilled when he is manufacturing nearly twice as much heat in proportion to his weight as we are? The explanation is simple: He has so much more surface in proportion to his bulk that while he is heated hot in a moment he is quickly cooled. The way to keep a baby warm then is not to overheat the room but to keep his body well covered. Only do that and you will find him a perfect little furnace. But like any other furnace, if he is going to keep up a hot fire he must have an open draft, so whatever you do don't cover his face or you will chill him precisely as you would a stove by shutting the draft and turning down the damper. . . . Babies are exceedingly sensitive to foul or overheated air, not at all so to cool, fresh air."—From Nursery Danger Signals, by Woods Hutchinson, M. D., in the Cosmopolitan.

After the first few weeks, when the baby's eyes must be shielded from the light, frequent sunbaths are recommended for him except in very warm weather. Stripped of his clothing, or of most of it, where the sunshine pours through a window in a warm room, let him lie and wriggle and kick to his heart's content. After the fifth or sixth week, he should be out in the sunshine several hours every day, except in very cold or very warm weather, his eyes and face being protected from the direct glare of the sun.

Do not keep the baby too warm, for this is weakening both by reason of excessive perspiration and the liability which follows of taking cold with every change of temperature. For summer use hair mattresses and pillows are much cooler than those of feathers.

"Although there is much benefit in exposure to the outdoor air, it is a mistake to be in too great a hurry with the process of 'hardening,' so called, since this frequently only succeeds in making the child ill, just as pampering makes it delicate.

"Damp, windy, or very cold days are always to be avoided during the early months of life, and even after this period, exposure to them is of questionable advantage, for we have always to balance the good that may come from the outing against the harm that may result from the unfavorable weather. Even on the best days it is important to avoid chilling, and to keep a close watch over hands and feet. The least chilliness of these is a warning to go in.

"One plan which can be safely adopted with autumn and winter babies is that of opening the windows in one of the rooms of the house, wrapping the baby thoroughly and walking with it in this room, just as though it were out of doors. This may be begun when it is about a month old. The windows should at first be closed before the baby is taken into the room, but later they may be left open if the weather is not too cold. Of course drafts must be avoided."—Doctor Griffith.

In pleasant weather the baby will be benefited by taking his daytime naps out of doors after being accustomed gradually to the outside air.

What is said of prepared baby foods? Why should condensed milk not be used as a steady diet for children?

What foundations are laid in infancy? When does education begin? What mistake is made when the baby is regarded merely as a source of amusement? By what means does the baby receive his first moral impressions? For what is a child frequently punished? What is a fundamental principle of influence in the child's early life? What does the mother's fidelity to purpose in time become to the child? What kind of care should the infant receive? How should the stated times for food and sleep be observed? What is strong with a baby and what small? It he is to be taught to go to sleep unattended when must the habit be formed? Why should the baby not be disturbed to show to admiring friends? What is the relation between sleep and growth? How should the baby be kept warm? Why should he not be kept too warm? What caution should be used with regard to the baby's outing?

Request for Prayers.

Bro. David Campbell, Wallaceburg, Ontario, asks the prayers of the sisters in the Prayer Union, and all the Saints, in behalf of their boy, Ray Campbell, who has been sick since last February; that if it is the will of the heavenly Father, he may be healed.

There is as much need of a system in using literature as in studying chemistry. One may read to know, read to think, or read for entertainment. For the first, truth is necessary; for the second, originality; for the third, novelty. In the first use the reader must bring his wits to his reading; in the second he gets them there; in the third he often disposes of them there.

Letter Department

NORTH CHARLEROI, PENNSYLVANIA, November 2, 1911.

Dear Herald: Myself and family are members of the Fayette City Branch, but we are the only Saints living in this place. We are trying to let our light shine before the people of this place in word and deed, and knowing that it is our duty to warn our neighbors we have tried and are still trying to do so. During the month of February, 1910, Elder Richard Baldwin began a series of meetings here, in the city hall. He preached some fourteen sermons but was suddenly called away, leaving many deeply interested, and many are anxious to see him return. Brother Baldwin announced at the close of his meetings that, if anyone had any fault to find, he would refer them to me and that I would fight his battles for him. The battles were few, Brother Baldwin!

We feel pleased to have the privilege to announce through your columns that Elder O. R. Miller has lately been with us and preached some twenty-one sermons, which has caused us all to rejoice and has caused some comment in the papers. One paper spoke of Brother Miller as being a powerful speaker. Many have been made to rejoice who never before had heard the angel's message, and those who had heard it in part seemed to think it a story that never grows old. Some expressed themselves as being about ready to enter the kingdom, and some others we think are deeply interested. So we believe that there has been much good done here.

Brother Miller has been afflicted with a soreness in his breast and the climate along this river valley does not seem to agree with him. The last few efforts caused him much pain in body, but he was blessed in Spirit. We are sorry that his poor health will not permit him to remain longer, and while new openings are not looming up in a flattering way, yet many of this place would be glad to have him remain here and speak in the hall each Sunday. They expressed themselves as willing to assist with their presence, and also financially. It makes us rejoice to know that we have such able, talented, defenders of the angel's message which was first delivered to the boy prophet. Come again Brother Baldwin and Brother Miller.

While I do not do much pulpit work, yet I try to do what I can to assist the work by giving the missionaries a comfortable home while here, and I also try to warn all possible by daily conversations. I have confidence in God and his great plan of redemption and want to do what I can to upbuild his kingdom and establish his righteous reign upon this earth.

In gospel bonds,

SAMUEL GASKILL.

HOLDENVILLE, OKLAHOMA, November 6, 1911.

Editors Herald: This leaves me busy in the missionary work. I find plenty to do; more calls than we can fill. We have to stop once in a while and attend to the Campbellites. I have had three debates with them this year. We have baptized in every place where we have met them. R. B. Neal and company will have to furnish something different from what they are now if they make a success fighting us. They always seek to put us in a false light before the people, depend upon that for their success in debate. I aim to not let them do that with me, and so far have had good success in exposing them.

I have just closed a successful meeting east of here seven miles, in H. B. Gooch's neighborhood. Baptized five: H. B. Gooch; his son, Jesse; Selva, and Rosa Schultz, and their brother, Charlie. Several others could scarcely keep out of the water, and will come later, we hope. Many of the Saints will be glad to hear of Brother Gooch being baptized, as he is quite well known among them. He has believed in this work, or has been interested, for several years. He tried his membership a while in the Campbellite Church, but soon found that was not the place for him.

We also organized a Sunday school and put him in as superintendent. We thought we would put him to work right away. He has been quite successful, financially; I hope to see him a help to the church in this way as well as other ways.

I go from here to Fitzhugh, to begin meetings Wednesday night. That is the place I met J. W. Chism in debate last spring. Some more are to be baptized there, from all reports.

As ever in the conflict,

W. M. AYLOR.

WAUSAU, WISCONSIN, November 6, 1911.

Saints' Herald: We are now located in this city, coming here from Madison, Wisconsin, and we naturally feel isolated and lonely. If there are any Saints living in or near this city, we will be very much pleased to hear from them, and will make an effort to look them up. We are under the impression that there is a branch at Tomahawk. If so, will you please write us when and where your services are held? We will try to attend.

Should Brother and Sister Goodenough, formerly of Madison, chance to see this, please write us, and we will be glad to hear from you, as we often wonder where you are and how you are getting along. Also if any elders passing through here will stop, they will be sure of a hearty welcome. Just inquire of most anyone for Kiefer's creamery, and you can easily be directed.

Ever wishing for the advancement of the gospel,

Your sister and brother,

MRS. W. WOODSTOCK.

A. E. WOODSTOCK.

DELOIT, IOWA, November 6, 1911.

Dear Herald: We enjoy reading your paper, and especially the letters from the different people. It gives us strength and encouragement to hear how the Saints triumph everywhere. God has dealt mercifully with us since we accepted this latter day work. We became members of the church May 1, 1910, and have been striving to live our religion. We were the first of our family to accept the gospel, and have found it quite trying and difficult to stand the frowns and scoffs of the unbelieving. Nevertheless, God has ever been mindful of us, and we have been blessed in many ways. I think the Saints should be the happiest people on earth to know that God is ever willing to bless us when we call on him in faith believing.

I will relate an especial blessing we recently received, hoping it will benefit some. Twin babies came to our home last March, a boy and a girl. They were very weak, frail little creatures, and we hardly expected them to live. Sometimes I think it a miracle that we kept them. However that may be, they are still with us. They grew very well until they were six months of age, when the little girl took a severe cold; this settling in her head, resulted in an attack of the earache, which lasted for some time. Everyone, especially mothers who have had little children suffer with this disease, know what it means. The little one suffered almost constantly, for days, and commenced to look pale and thin. We again began to think we could not keep her, having tried so many remedies to no avail. One night while sitting up, attending her, the thought came to me, Why should we permit our little one to suffer, when God is ever ready to hear our prayers? I told my husband we would have our baby administered to when an elder came; that God surely would not withhold the blessing from our little innocent babe on account of our imperfections. We accordingly had her administered to, under the hands of Brn. J. Baker and C. J. Hunt, and can truthfully say that the baby received the blessing and has not had the complaint since. She is thriving, and as happy as a baby can be. We are willing to give God the praise for this, and all other blessings we have received since we embraced the gospel.

There are quite a number of Saints in this locality, but we are sadly in need of an elder. We are hoping and praying that God will see fit to call some one to this office soon. May this work continue to flourish everywhere, and the honest in heart be gathered before Christ comes to claim his own.

I am your sister in the faith,
MRS. LLOYD WINANS.

LUCAS, IOWA, October, 25, 1911.

Editors Herald: I am impressed to write a few lines to inform the Saints that we were once members of the Lucas Branch and have been scattered to other places because the coal mines were abandoned, making it necessary to move to other places and seek work elsewhere. This left only a few to care for the work here, but those that were faithfully striving to promote the interests of the work are certainly blessed.

We have been assisted by the stake presidency from time to time, and other elders, also, which has strengthened and encouraged us to struggle on and do the best we could under the circumstances.

Bro. John Garver has been with us for three weeks, preaching every night but two. Bishop Joseph Roberts preached twice. The Saints and outsiders attended well every night during the three weeks and good interest was manifested throughout. Many of the people are yet speaking kindly of the meetings and the members are made glad and thankful to be engaged in the great latter day work. The preaching was excellent and while no one was baptized, we are certain that the Lord blessed the efforts of the brethren. Good was done for the Saints and the people that attended. The result must be left with him that doeth all things well. I feel that Lucas will see a better day.

With kind love to all.

Yours in gospel bonds,
JOHN R. EVANS.

ALEXANDER, KANSAS, November 1, 1911.

Dear Herald: I am still alive and enjoying the work in the grand old gospel. Brother Teeters and I just returned home from a trip about ten miles south, and one west of Alexander, where we held fourteen preaching services. Brother John had good liberty very near all the time in his preaching. The great Father blessed us with his Spirit, for which we feel grateful. We left about a dozen thinking seriously of our work, some intending to unite later. May God help them to see the pure gospel as it is restored in the eleventh hour.

Last night Brother John and I drove seven miles south-east of here and started another meeting, where the gospel trump has never sounded. We are expecting Bro. W. E. Peak to come soon and give Alexander some of the good sermons like he gave in Osborne, Kansas, this fall. We have need of some one coming and preaching the first principles of the gospel of Christ; reviving the Saints and teaching others the true way. Some here have tried to keep the Sunday school alive, but now three Sundays have passed and no Sunday school. Saints, let us put on the whole armor of God and show ourselves approved workmen who need not be ashamed.

I expect some would like to know how my eyes are now, since General Conference at Lamoni. I think they are considerably better. I can read a few lines now, only at times, though. I have hopes of more blessings in this regard if I can be faithful to God.

The gifts and blessings of God are being bestowed in this Northwestern Kansas District more this year than I know of before. Heavenly messengers have appeared several times, even to children and the aged. With these signs, and the gospel being preached again as a witness in all the world, it shows the Savior will soon make his second appearance on earth. He will come to claim his bride (the church) without spot or blemish or wrinkle. Then, dear Saints, I hope to be among the faithful ones whom he will claim.

Your sister in the restored gospel,
MRS. EVA L. TEETERS.

GREENE, KANSAS, November 1, 1911.

Editors Herald: Bro. J. F. Curtis has been holding meetings near three weeks in Blue Rapids, Kansas. He baptized five; four of them heads of families; a full house very near every night. His preaching was fine, and the Lord was truly with him. He ordained Brother Kipper an elder, revived the Saints, and left them rejoicing in the Lord. I did what I could to help Brother Curtis in his meetings at Blue Rapids, Kansas. So the work of the Lord goes on.

I have been in the church over forty-four years; am nearly sixty-five years old; and I hope to remain faithful.

I am on my way to my field, Northwestern Kansas. My address is Holden, Missouri.

Eternal Judgment, Again.

Dear Herald: I read an article in your columns some time ago which has caused me much pain, and if I knew the brother who wrote it has the truth with him regarding the subject matter of the article, I would be very miserable indeed.

I refer to the article entitled "Eternal judgment," by Elder A. B. Phillips, and if I understand him aright there are many Saints including myself, who can never see celestial glory.

Now, if I may express my views regarding the subject I hope to offend none, and with all due respect to Brother Phillips I wish to say that I am sure he has overlooked some very important scriptures.

In the first place, the brother says that deeds which have been committed prior to baptism will be brought into judgment and while they will not condemn the one who has committed them, they will be weighed against him to determine what his future condition will be, and Ecclesiastes 12: 14 is used to support the claim. Now, if I were to use John 3: 16 or Acts 16: 31 alone, I might prove that faith alone would save, but but when other scriptures are used we can easily prove that it takes more than just faith to save one.

Come, let us reason together. If baptism is for the remission of sins, and I obey with an honest heart, are my former sins not remitted? And if they are remitted, will God, who is rich in mercy, remember them in judgment? I think not, for Paul says that some men's sins go before to judgment, and God says, "I will remember their sins no more." —Jeremiah 31: 34. Again we read, "If the wicked restore the pledge . . . one of his sins will be mentioned unto him." —Ezekiel 33: 15, 16.

Now, will we believe God or man? Peter says, "Repent ye therefore and be comforted, that your sins may be blotted out," and if they are blotted out will God remove the blot if we continue to do his will? Jesus said he came to seek and to save that which is lost. Will he save them only to show them what they have lost by being sinners? Is that the Christ life? Was the precious blood of Christ shed in vain or was it shed in order that all who would obey the gospel might be saved? Can we believe the Scriptures and still hold the idea that God will cause his servants sorrow by revealing their former sins? If I understand the nature of God, it is one of love and pity; for we read that there is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety and nine just persons who need no repentance.

Again the brother says, if my memory serves me right, that "we will have a perfect knowledge of all our past life." Let us examine the Book of Mormon and see if it bears out his claim. Page 74 of the small edition gives me a ray of hope. Let us read, "O my beloved brethren, turn away from your sins, . . . that you may not remember your awful guilt in perfectness." Can we believe this or not? I admit Paul says we must all stand before the judgment seat of Christ to receive according to that which we have done, whether it be good or bad, but if our former sins are blotted out we will not suffer loss because of them but will receive pay for the good done after we are born again out of the old condition into the new. Paul says, Romans 6, "We are buried with Christ in baptism that the body of sin might be destroyed, that we henceforth should not serve sin." Now, if the body of sin is destroyed and we are dead to sin, will that old dead body be raised up to mar our peace in judgment? Not if I understand the Bible at all. So we see Ecclesiastes 12: 14 refers to those sins which have not been atoned for. We may be wrong, but we have always understood that if one obeyed the celestial law and kept it they would be entitled to celestial glory, otherwise the law has not answered its purpose and David says, Psalm 19, "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul," and of course if we obey the perfect law are we not made perfect by continuing therein?

Paul was breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the saints, and also stood by and consented unto the death of Stephen, and if his sins (and he said he was the chief sinner) are weighed against him in judgment will he be entitled to enjoy eternal life in the fullest sense of the term?

Peter was not a perfect man by any means, if we can believe his own story (see 1 Peter 4: 3) yet we expect he will be worthy to enjoy the glory of the sun.

In conclusion let me say that in youth, before coming into the church, I was led far away from God into sin, but when I turned to God and obeyed the gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation, God forgave me, and in less than one year called me to the priesthood, and now I would like to ask how, in the name of consistency, can I preach the gospel to my fellow-men and tell the sin sick soul that if he will obey the gospel, God will bless him and he can enjoy eternal life when, if Brother Phillips is right, I will be shut out on account of former sins? Thank God for a gospel that is able to save all who obey it with an honest heart, and strive to do their duty.

There is more that could be said, but for fear the wastebasket will be the home of my letter I will close; however, I hope some one better qualified than I will take this matter up and throw more light upon it, as the article mentioned has caused more than one Saint sorrow.

BROWN CITY, MICHIGAN.

R. D. WEAVER.

COLTON, COLORADO, November 6, 1911.

Dear Herald: Something over a year ago, after reading of a commendable work done for the Lord and the church by some energetic sisters, I do not remember which branch of the many good works it was, but do remember of feeling a reflection upon myself, and the thought was: "How I wish I too was doing something for the Master, but what can I do here all alone?" Then the clear unvoiced words said: "Write."

Now it is just another instance of the perverseness of human nature that I have not written so much since as before. Not that I felt any inclination to rebel, but the question has ever been, "What shall I write?" Have made the effort a time or two, then regarded the result as not being worthy the space in the papers, and cast it aside. Yet I, like many others, frequently feel a responsive echo in my heart or thoughts when reading something unusually good.

I shall now venture something of the kind, though the reading took place three weeks ago in HERALD of October 4. A synopsis of a sermon delivered by Elder A. B. Kirkendall, at Kirtland, Ohio, while in the temple. I think the same beautiful spirit of peace that had its abode in the temple remained with the words there spoken, and shed its hallowed influence over me in an unusual degree, and in my "quiet," I read and enjoyed. Those moments are the sweetening of the cup of affliction whereby is brought about the "quiet" spoken of by the brother.

When the reading was finished, I hesitated to commence another article, lest it might contain something that would not be in harmony with the warm, gentle heart throbbings within, and cause that Spirit of light and peace to vanish away. But it was not so. The next reading was an article from the pen of Elder Charles B. Woodstock, under the caption "Social purity," but the theme was the gospel of Christ set forth by the brother as being the source of all purity. I hope the reading of that beautifully written article will appeal to the convictions of every reader as it did to me, viz, that indeed the gospel of Christ is the surest, and only means to bring about true social purity with Saints. If the gospel of Christ is calculated to prepare mankind for the celestial glory, what more is needed? Can man or woman add anything better, anything more effectual? Is not the gospel of Christ the foundation of all purity and goodness, gentleness, meekness, humility, and chastity? Every principle of morality and spirituality is embraced therein, and is calculated to bring about in the lives of those who accept the gospel as restored in these last days, all that is noble, pure, and Christlike, which will fit men for the presence of their Redeemer. But a mere profession, and outward loyalty to the church will not bring about this inward cleansing.

Jesus has given strong intimations that those who can not abide a celestial law—the financial branch of which is but a small part—will not receive a celestial glory. Is it abiding a celestial law to participate in almost every amusement, entertainment, and pursuit that the world's people do?

The Lord has given a commandment to come out from among them and be separate. Can we, as a people, please our Lord and Master and still not heed that admonition? neither the call of the Spirit to come up higher? How greatly the work of a higher life would be aided if the almost universal practice of light reading were laid aside, and the same number of hours, or half of them spent by God's children in reading something that is wholesome, profitable, edifying. Something that incites to think noble thoughts and do noble deeds, and thus build character. Light and trashy reading steals time, poisons the mind, discourages the spirit, and leads away from God. Who can estimate the great loss to the church spiritually, and as a natural consequence, to the onward march of the latter day work, by this habit of wasting time, and mental energy in light reading? While this is deplored, and the great need of a more complete return to the old paths, a putting away of the pride and ambition that prompts to keep up with the world; and living nearer to God, more as becometh a people hoping to attain to a celestial glory is felt, we yet have much to rejoice in.

Many good words are being sent forth, and many good works being accomplished by faithful, earnest, Godfearing men and women. Nor would I overlook the cheering and gratifying news that comes from various parts of the Lord's vineyard of the vigorous prosecution of the work, and the ingathering of souls. Also the noble and unparalleled work of vacation schools in large cities. Such devotion causes the heart to swell with an honest pride in the faithful workers, and God will honor those who honor him in their calling by whole-hearted service, for his word has gone out for it.

In conclusion I will add the interpretation of a tongue given by Elder J. F. Burton in the Sacramento Branch August 9, 1891. He says: "We had an excellent prayer and testimony meeting this afternoon. I spoke in tongues, and the interpretation as near as I can remember it was, 'Oh, the sadness of the pathway of the Saint who walks in crooked ways! Oh, the sorrowfulness of the mind of the Saint who does that which is evil! But oh, the peace of those who do the will of God; and the happiness of those who do right! The Lord loves you for your desire to do good, seek peace, and God will help you to do good; and the holy angel will walk with you while you do that which is right. But oh, with what sadness and sorrow will he turn from you if you do that which is wrong! Seek to do good continuously, and the Holy Spirit will be with you, God will bless you, and Jesus will redeem you, Amen.'"

E. B. BURTON.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, November 6, 1911.

To the members of the priesthood, and Saints of Eastern Michigan District: I wish to announce through the columns of the HERALD that as I have been reelected president of the Religio and as we desire the coming year to be one of the greatest and best in the history of the district, so we ask one and all to assist us with your efforts and advice.

We desire every Saint in the district to become enrolled on our records; so if you are isolated from church or Religio privileges, get in touch with our home department superintendent, Miss Nettie Cline, 1430 Tenth avenue, Port Huron, and become enrolled in her department.

I will be pleased to communicate with any who desire information on any phase of Religio work.

To the local workers, remember the translation fund; money for this fund should be sent to district treasurer, Miss Anna Isles, Valley Center, by November 25.

WM. F. SAGE.

MASON TOWN, WEST VIRGINIA, November 8, 1911.

Dear Herald: I am always glad to read the letters in your pages as they are such a help to me. I know this work is true, and I am glad I obeyed this gospel. Sister Ressie and I were baptized September 21, 1911, by R. C. Russell and confirmed by Samuel Brown. They organized a branch while here, and Brother Maxon is presiding elder; Brother Rodabaugh, my father, priest; T. Downs, teacher; P. S. Rodabaugh, secretary and treasurer. There are thirteen members. We have Sunday school at 2 p. m., and prayer meeting at 7 every Sunday; sacrament first Sunday of each month. I am a girl only fifteen years old, and young in the work. I can't write much, but I want to do my duty and live better. May the Lord's blessings be with all the Saints as an abiding Comforter until Christ comes to call his children home.

"Pray in faith and pray unceasing,

To the God we love and trust;
For our prayers are much availing,

If we walk upright and just,
Be not weary of exhorting,

Heed the lesson of each day,
And that we may be unwav'ring,
For each other let us pray."

I ask the prayers of all the Saints that I may live faithfully, so that when Jesus comes to claim his own I may be prepared to meet him. I ever pray for God's children.

Your sister in Christ,

MISS GERTIE B. RODABAUGH.

Be Children in Wrath, But Men in Understanding.

I read of the great contention that our people are having with the Utah Mormons in Utah, and elsewhere, and our effort to prove to them that they are wrong, and that we are right; but it seems to me to be superfluous, according to our own faith, or doctrine, for we say that we believe that the Doctrine and Covenants is true as a whole, and we all know that that book teaches that all men will be ultimately saved in one of the glories, except the blasphemers against the Holy Ghost, and that no man can blaspheme against the Holy Ghost except they first be a partaker of the Holy Ghost, and no man can be a partaker of it unless he be a member of the kingdom of heaven.

Of course we, as a (the) church, don't believe that any of the Utah Mormons are in the kingdom of heaven, or ever have been. From our viewpoint they will all be saved in their time and order. It seems to me that it is not wise to continue to nag at them, unless it is just for fun, or to gratify our ill feeling toward them.

I want you to understand that I have no more love nor ill feeling toward the Utah people than any other sect, but I do think that we ought to act like men when it comes to our acts toward them, and not so much like children, when it comes to wisdom. Let's be consistent in all things.

Yours for consistency and truth, no wand for ever,

E. W. NUNLEY.

Aylor-Black Debate.

This discussion took place at a point twelve miles south of Bristow, Oklahoma. Bro. N. E. Young of that place, had made response to a public challenge thrown out by an elder of the nonprogressive wing of the ecclesiastical descendants of Alexander Campbell, and the contest was the result.

Propositions were about in usual form, but exceptionally brief in statement. Elder Byrum Black, of Ravenden, Arkansas, led in the affirmative for the first six nights. The following is a specimen of his prominent affirmative points; and as it would seem just as easy to be right upon a few points as to be wrong upon all, the proposition of these fellows in their interpretation of the Scriptures is a source of perpetual astonishment, because of their colossal uniformity of error.

"We teach," said he, "that no acceptable offering to God was ever made before the cross." "That nothing was ever done in the name of Christ before the crucifixion" (Luke 10:17 to the contrary). "That there can be no succession of apostles" (Acts 1:26 to the contrary). "That the Holy Ghost is not for us now" (whole Bible to the contrary). "That we are saved by word only." ("Our gospel came not in word only"—Paul.) "We teach," said he, "that there is but one baptism, and that is water; in other words, but one new birth and that is of water only." ("Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter."—Christ, in John 3.)

"We teach that the only necessary officials in the church now are elders, deacons and evangelists; that there was no church established till on the day of Pentecost, mentioned in Acts 2." Contrary scripture used by Brother Aylor in his crushing negative: Acts 7:37, 38; 1 Corinthians 10:2-5; Hebrews 4:2-6; Hebrews 11:2-6, and Galatians 3:8-38.

Again, "The last case of Holy Scripture baptism was that of Cornelius, Acts 10," but Brother Aylor introduced Acts 19 with its positive proof that Byrum Black, though true to his bent, is wrong upon that point also. And thus by their positive and persistent reversal of truth and facts, if one of those fellows would assent that he was going north it would be quite safe to conclude that he was going south; or if he assumed an upward and higher course toward a given destination while living, a search through the lower regions would undoubtedly locate him when dead.

So with our opponent's unerring ability to put darkness for light and light for darkness, we were not in the least disconcerted to hear him say, in summing up, "What we, the church of Christ, teach": "We teach that the Book of Mormon is a base fraud, a bundle of lies and contradictions, and that Joe Smith was an impostor."

Again: "We teach that the local churches were wholly independent of each other and not connected in any way," that the righteous go now, at death, to heaven, but before Christ they went to paradise, which was then in hell, but has since removed." "Isaiah 2:2," said he, "was fulfilled at Pentecost when the church (the Lord's house) was established in the top of the mountains": Brother Aylor proved this prophecy to point to an event still in the future by the fourth verse of the same chapter. Upon the subject of the laying on of hands, Mr. Black used the following ridicule: "How ridiculous that in order for the reception of the Holy Spirit that the hands of some of Joe Smith's crew must be laid on, and that in some mysterious, mystical, twistical, incomprehensible way they have it funneled into them." Acts 7:51 was here used by Brother Aylor: "Ye stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost; as your fathers did, so do ye."

"These men teach," said he, "that unless their hands are laid upon you that the Almighty will damn your dimpled souls to a Devil's hell of everlasting God-damnation." These were his exact words, written as he spoke them. And with his frequent use of similar expressions, such as, "My God, Aylor, a mule ought to know more than that," etc., showed the man's strong disposition to use profanity. But when a man is disposed that way, it is about enough to provoke such fellows to swear, when their foibles are so mercilessly exposed.

Black declared that if Aylor would show one text where anybody was added to the church before Pentecost, he would give up the debating belt and go home and crawl under the bed. Acts 7:38 was cited with others, showing there was a church, and that Moses had been "added" to it. Brother Aylor here introduced his chart, illustrating Isaiah 28:20, with the figure of a man crumpled up on a bed, which was too short to stretch himself upon, and having only three slats, representing the only three officials in Mr. Black's church; elders, deacons, and evangelists. The illustration being so apt, provoked quite a burst of amusement and applause in the audience, which was intensified when Brother Aylor suggested that Mr. Black need not go home to crawl under the bed, but that he could just crawl under that one. Black declared that the bed was infested and Aylor's response was that as it had come from the ecclesiastical home of Mr. Campbell and Co. it would be no surprise to find it infested with vermin.

Mr. Black swung gracefully and naturally into the path blazed out so long ago by his venerable pilot, his satanic majesty, in demanding a sign. "They can't," said he, "even cure a pin scratch, or a common case of sore eyes, or an Arkansas chill; show me just one little sign and I'll believe." A wicked and adulterous generation sought a sign in the days of Christ and said, "Come down off the cross if thou be the Son of God," etc. When such points were urged against our opponent he would attempt to divert the attention of the people from the matter by a loud bluster of some kind, such as, "This is about twelve debates I have had with the different factions of Mormonism; have met Apostle Cowley and Captain Jack with a lot of his motley crew, and there is not a brilliant man among them." "There hasn't been a brilliant man among them since Joe Smith was shot, but I wouldn't hesitate to meet any of them, even if they weighed a ton and were nine feet between the eyes."

In referring to "brilliant men" Mr. Black displayed a smattering parrot knowledge of Greek, and then as Aylor said, cowardlike, tried to hide behind that. The self puff of brilliancy rather sickened when Aylor expressed his appreciation of the privilege of standing before a brilliant man, etc.

Some dreams which were given to several during the discussion may be worthy of notice. Sr. N. E. Young was shown a terrific and muddy stream, or flood, sweeping down upon us with fierce roaring, and that destruction seemed imminent until at a commanding signal by Brother Aylor, with a simple scepter in hand the storm flood broke at our feet and spread without harm. We saw the literal enactment of this metaphor at the debate. Another dreamed of seeing heavy timbers unloaded recklessly and dangerously thrown all about us, but without harm. We realized this also.

In a dream to the writer, our opponent was shown groping about in the dark, seeking some advantage but worried to find it, yet receiving fruit from some of his own people. This was also enacted before us in the applause from some of his people at such statements as the following, from the chaste ministerial lips of our opponent: "If some of these devilish boys would slip a little strychnine into their coffee there would soon be a couple of dead Mor—er,—I was about to say Mormons."

Our notes upon the debate are full of scripture arguments which were used, and of interest—many an incident of interest, but lest we should bid for more space in print than should be allotted to such matters, we will desist with a brief mention of visible results.

One man who had quite recently been appointed an elder in Mr. Black's church (they don't believe in ordaining) came to us and volunteered the statement that eight tenths of the people of those attending the debate admitted that Brother Aylor had most successfully maintained his position in the discussion, and that so far as he was concerned he would no longer be satisfied to continue an elder in such an institution.

One man recently from Pennsylvania who, because of his not being in sympathy with either church at the beginning, was named as a prospective chairman of the debate, not having known our work before, was baptized immediately at the close of the debate. So, where we were before only unfavorably known, we now have warm friends whose joy in the gospel brings joy to us; and there are others who will as surely enter the kingdom as it is sure that day is followed by the night.

But if any should conclude that it is nice and easy and pleasant to stand in defense of truth in such combats with the Arch Enemy and his deceived or malicious agents, they conclude wrongly; for there never was a truth so clearly manifest but that a willful opponent may attack it and make a showing in the minds of some.

The hallowed support of angels to a given cause or even the sanction of the infinite God has never insured a truth against violent attack from the Adversary.

The prince of the world prevented an angel from delivering his heavenly message to Daniel for three weeks; the Jews and Pharisees withstood the Son of God; Pharaoh withstood the power of God; and Lucifer, with his rebel hosts, defied God himself.

Thus may we yet a few years expect to have enemies with which to battle, but God grant that we may be courageous in the fight, always for the right till the end.

News From Missions

Spring River District.

Spring River District, situated in the corner of four States—Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Arkansas; is, to say the least, unequaled for location. With the mingling and commingling of products from such splendid soils, it could scarcely be anything but progressive. As an indication of the sturdy work done by noble toilers, there are eighteen branches and over two thousand members in this mission field; Sunday school and Religios in almost every branch; home class and ladies' aid societies in many of them.

At our last quarterly conference, the report of the secretary showed an addition by baptism of forty-nine for the last quarter. The missionary force has done well in their tent work during the summer months. The reunion held at Pittsburg under the guiding hands of J. F. Curtis, J. A. Davis, and the writer, with the local committee,—C. Kiser, chairman, was a success in every way. We look forward to 1912 for the best ever held in the mission.

Local ministers are all busy spreading the restored gospel adjacent to their respective branches. Some of them are doing well to excellent. Three churches have been lifted from debt, dedicated, and turned over to the Lord and the Bishop, in the past four months: Purcell church, in Missouri, sermon by Bishop E. L. Kelley; Pleasant View church, near Pittsburg, Kansas, sermon by G. H. Hilliard; Wier City church, Kansas, sermon by Bishop Hilliard. These services were all good and well received by appreciative audiences. The Wier City sermon was an exhaustive representation of our faith and was an inspired effort from first to last. The presidents of the respective branches are entitled to much credit for their arduous toil in making ready for dedicatory services. We would not forget the good sisters whose tocsin is, "A well-filled table, with a general invitation and a hearty welcome to all"; and the rule is, there is more (?) than twelve basket-fuls left.

We are not yet decided which State excels in subduing the inner man. We are glad to say the work in the Spring River District is moving along nicely—yet there is plenty of room for improvement.

Bro. J. E. Vanderwood and I are trying to lift the banner of truth and righteousness. We do not believe that the light is given to us to hide under a basket. Nor are we ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is the most precious gift unto man in these the last days.

We left Bisbee, October 20. I had been doing local work as the presiding officer of the branch, Brother Vanderwood, had been busy as usual, trying to tell the people the old, old story.

Our first night away from home we spent at Benson, a small town on the Southern Pacific, and as it seemed, made up of all the creeds and denominations.

After securing the use of the Methodist Episcopal church we advertised the town by attractive posters along the streets and visiting the homes, leaving our literature and conversing with the people so far as possible. We were at the place of meeting at the proper time, but no one came to hear our message.

As we were on our way to another people, we took the next train for Safford, where we now are. This town is in two divisions. Safford proper is composed of Gentiles, so called; and Laten is with few exceptions Mormons. They were very much surprised to see us, as we are the first representatives of the Reorganized Church to visit them.

We have held services every evening in the Methodist Episcopal church, as they were kind enough to let us have the use of their meeting house; and further, we have secured the use of it for such meetings as we might care to hold. Our attendance has been good.

We held one meeting in the town park. About seventy-five Mormons were present. And for the 1st and 2d of November we have secured the privilege of holding services in the Mormon meeting house in Laten.

We have been treated very kindly by these people. Since coming to Safford we have been staying with a member of the high council, Bro. George H. Crosby, a very pleasant place to stay. As we have been invited other places we will shift our headquarters from time to time.

As we visit the homes of these people this one fact is impressed upon our mind: We can not force people into the kingdom. If we would be instrumental in being the means of doing them good, which is our mission, we must show by our conduct and our utterances that we are interested in them; that we have come to do them good; not egotistical or dogmatic as the old Pharisee, feeling that we are perfect. You know our Master rebuked such. We must overcome that pugnacity which is the Adam nature. In other words the power which will bring them into the kingdom is the power of love, the most powerful dynamic in the universe.

If a missionary is to be any one thing above another he must be wise, a diplomat; having the power of discernment, discerning the situation and necessities of the individual. We must learn to agree just as far as the revealed word of God will permit us, and then if we disagree, do so as men.

The people here are opening their eyes, they are investigating, and if they will continue in the right way the results will be pleasing.

I will remain with Brother Vanderwood a month, then I will return home and take up my vocations to supply the comforts and necessities of life.

I am yours in bonds,

LYMAN W. FIKE.

News From Branches

Omaha, Nebraska.

Since last time we wrote there has been a death. Sr. Florence Hicks, about sixteen years old, who has been ailing some years and in bed for many months, passed away Friday, October 20, and was buried Sunday, October 22. She suffered very considerably but was very often relieved by administration by the elders, and was remembered in nearly every prayer, in many of our prayer meetings. The end came as quite a relief to her, and though parting was keen, all seemed to be resigned because it seemed for the best. We may not now know the reason why, but a kind Father will reveal it to us in his own due time.

During the past month J. W. Wight and his sons Leslie and Cyril paid us a short visit, Bro. J. W. Wight giving us two good sermons.

Elder J. R. Sutton, missionary in charge of Nebraska, preached here last Sunday evening. We were glad he was able to be with us again, after his long illness.

Our sacrament service last Sunday was well attended; the time was fully occupied, and the Lord admonished us by his Spirit to come out and be separated from the world, and also warned us that he was displeased with certain things that exist among us.

Our earnest prayer to God is that we might be enabled to wipe out that which is evil in our midst. When we remember that the Lord has said that nothing shall prevail against his church save it be the transgression of his people, we know that we, individually and collectively, must look to ourselves and institute a thorough examination there, for the only danger of the overthrow of his kingdom on earth.

May Zion soon be redeemed and the Lord come quickly.

Willis. Deacon Charles V. Ferguson. District treasurer reported amount on hand at last report, $3.72; expenses to date, $2.13; balance on hand, $1.59. The bills of John Zahnd for $2.20 expenses as chairman of reunion committee, and $5.90 expenses as chairman of committee on new district record were allowed, and a collection taken up to pay the same. A communication was received from the Louisville Branch, asking that the next conference convene with them, which invitation was accepted. A committee of six including the minister in charge, was elected to arrange the time and place for the next annual reunion. A committee was elected to audit the accounts of the district: G. B. Miller for three years; Henry Oliver, two years; Mrs. Pearl Brown, one year. John Zahnd resigned as a member of the committee on new district record, and E. O. Byrn was elected. The following delegates were elected to General Conference: R. C. Russell, H. E. Moler, Jacob Halb, E. O. Byrn, Charles H. Fish, John Zahnd, Erma Zahnd, Houston Glenn, F. L. Byrn, G. B. Miller, Effie Miller, Charles F. Davis. Upon the request of Elder Jacob Halb he was released from the office of president and Elder John Zahnd was elected to fill the unexpired term. At 8 p. m. the service was in charge of Elder R. C. Russell, preaching by Elder E. O. Byrn. Sunday, October 22, the morning hour was occupied by Elder R. C. Russell; at 2.30 sacrament service, and at 7.30 Elder R. C. Russell was again the speaker. A vote of thanks was extended to the press of New Albany and Louisville for their kind publicity. A vote of thanks was also extended to the New Albany Branch for hospitality and kindness shown to visiting members. Charles H. Fish, secretary.

SOUTHERN MICHIGAN AND NORTHERN INDIANA.—District conference met in the Saints' chapel at Clear Lake, Indiana, October 28, 1911, at 10 a. m. Minister in charge, F. A. Smith, as president, associated with district president, G. A. Smith, and his counselors; W. F. Shaub, secretary pro tem; E. K. Evans, assistant; R. G. McElhenie, chorister; Clara Kellog, organist. Statistical reports from the following branches were read: Alto, gain 2; Buchanan, Clear Lake, loss 3; Galien, gain 2; Hartford, loss 2; Sparta, loss 1; Belding, gain 1; Capital City, gain 10; Coldwater, loss 4; Grand Rapids, (first report) 42; Knox, gain 1. Elders reporting: S. W. L. Scott, S. Stroh, F. Earl, N. A. Hill, baptized 1; J. W. McKnight, baptized 2; Starr Corless, F. T. Field. Priests Clyde Ellis, baptized 2. deney of the district formulate a rota plan for the remaining half year for the district. Resolved, That the district authorities draw up and put in circulation, report blanks for the ministry in order that we may comply with Rule 4. An interesting debate as to the respective rights of the district president and branch president took place. Thomas Taylor was the speaker in the morning, and Bishop May in the evening, Sunday. The following morning at 9.30 Bishop May was privileged to present his suggestion. He believed in the British Isles Mission having a paper, published as in South Sea Islands, Australia, Canada, Kansas City, and Independence. It takes weeks before we can see anything here in the HERALD, whereas with a paper of our own we could be in receipt of news and information in a week or two. The following brethren were elected to be the delegates to the General Conference: G. T. Griffiths, J. W. Rushton, and Brother Snead, of Independence, late of Birmingham. Adjourned to meet at the place appointed by the presidency for the annual conference. The meetings were attended by fair sized audiences, which seemed to be interested. It was a helpful and spiritual conference. John Schofield, secretary.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints scattered abroad in Northern Texas; Greeting: I have been appointed by the Bishop to collect and receipt for all tithing and offerings such as you may wish to hand in. I am the only missionary appointed to labor in this great northwestern Texas. I find plenty to do, but I have never seen harder times for supply, I hope all, rich and poor, will come forward right now, with sums large, if possible. I know the small sums are possible.

Dear Saints, send the small sums. Do not delay, as hungry people can not wait. Ye missionary needs clothing or he can't go. Come one, come all to the help of the Lord's work, and show the church that we can be at least self-sustaining. It looks bad for us to have to call on Bishop Kelley for clothing which will have to be done unless the Saints in northwestern Texas respond quickly.

I am in a blizzard now, among strangers and busy. I am glad I can be busy and I want to see all the Saints busy. How can you and I afford to be otherwise? for faith without works is dead. Shall we surrender because the fight grows fierce, or shall we, like good soldiers, press on to victory? I anxiously await your reply, which means a letter from one and all with something of a substantial nature inclosed. Write to me at Loveland, Oklahoma, for the present.

Hoping and trusting, and praying for the rapid success of the Lord's work, especially in northwestern Texas.
 GLAZIER, TEXAS. S. W. SIMMONS.

Convention Minutes.

CLINTON.—District Sunday school association met in convention at Taberville, October 6, 1911, 10 a. m. A peaceful influence reigned throughout. Interesting talks were given by members of the different schools in the district. Bro. James Moler gave some good instruction on "How to get the older ones interested in the Sunday school." "On account of the condition of the smaller districts, the motion that a committee be appointed to appeal to the General Convention and request them to adjust the clause in the constitution regarding mass conventions, was carried. The Religio association also met at the same place and date at 2.30 p. m. The regular work of the convention was conducted, with the district officers in charge. An institute session was held at 7.45 p. m. Subjects discussed were as follows: Standard of excellence, Graded lessons, Lookout committee work, Bible story telling. Reading by Mrs. Blanch Smith. Zora Lowe, secretary.

Conference Notices.

Semiannual conference of the Spokane District will be held in Saints' Chapel, Spokane, Washington, at 10 o'clock a. m., December 9. Branch secretaries take notice and have statistical reports ready by December 4, and forward to the undersigned. A committee was appointed last conference to prepare by-laws for this district. They will be presented at this conference. W. W. Fordham, secretary.

Convention Notices.

The convention of the Spokane district Sunday school association will be held at Spokane, Washington, December 8, 1911, the day previous to the district conference. Secretaries of Sunday schools in district will please send in their

To the Saints of the Mobile District; Greeting: As the year 1911 will soon close, we, as Saints, ought to ask ourselves these important questions: Have I done all I could for the advancement of this great work? Have I been paying my tithes? The Lord has said that this is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of his people. (Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5.) So let us, Saints, comply with all the commandments he has given us and then he is bound to bless us according to his promise. I hope to see the name of every member of the district on the books before the close of the year with whatever amount you may feel able to contribute.

I wish to say also that those who do not live in the different branches can send their tithes and offerings direct to me. Those in branches can pay to the following: Dan W. Sherman, at Three Rivers; L. Goff, Bluff Creek; E. A. Bankester, Bay Minette. Hoping the good Lord will bless each one, I am your brother in Christ,

Notice of Release from Missionary Appointment.

For reasons which he deemed justifiable, Bro. T. W. Williams, on the 19th of October last, filed his request with the Presidency to be released from the mission appointed him last spring for the year. At the same time he resigned his charge as pastor of the Kansas City Central Church. The Presidency accepted the statement of Brother Williams in good faith, and notice is hereby given that he is so released from said mission, said release to take effect on the date of the application made for it.

Brother Williams will be at liberty to labor in Southern California District in the vicinity of Los Angeles as occasion may offer and wisdom direct.

With wishes for his success in the Master's cause, we are,
JOSEPH SMITH, for the Presidency.
I. N. WHITE, for missionaries in charge.

Many the joys I have welcomed, many the joys that have passed,
But this is the good unfailling, and this is the peace that shall last:
From love that dies and love that lies and love that must cling and sting,
Back to the arms of our sisters we turn for our comforting.

Books for Old and Young

Talks About Joseph Smith

By Orion (H. O. Smith).

We know of no better book to hand your boy or girl for a present. In fact it is an intellectual treat to both old and young. None can read it but will receive an uplift in a moral atmosphere. Such books as these are the ones to use to mold a true character. You ought to have it. Order No. 246, cloth. Price.....50 cents.

At Last

This dainty little edition is worth a place on the center table of any home. It is an illustrated edition of David H. Smith's poem, "AT LAST." The illustrations are mostly taken from subjects intimately connected with the author and his poem. Sister Walker has succeeded in her desire to make this work one of merit as well as artistic. Do not order by number, simply say, "send 'At Last.'" Only a few hundred remain. No more to be printed. The price is.....25 cents.

Composition of Man

A man of average weight of 154 lbs. is divided up as follows: Muscle, 68 lbs.; fat, 28 lbs.; blood, 7 lbs.; brain, 3 lbs.; skin, 10 lbs.; viscera, 14 lbs. All must be renewed from the food ingested. And from the food forces are also derived: force to labor, force to think, and force to generate heat. "Tis said the body of a man contains: a bowl full of sugar; enough salt to provide a dinner party; enough iron to make five carpet tacks; enough gas to fill a gasometer of 3949 feet; enough carbon to make 9360 lead pencils; enough phosphatus to make 8064 boxes of matches; there is fat sufficient to make 4.8 lbs. of candles; enough hydrogen to fill a balloon that would lift the man up to the clouds." Few know and realize what a wonderful piece of mechanism we are. Is this not sufficient to make you think it necessary to eat properly proportioned food? KLAR'S GOOD HEALTH FLOUR having all the elements arranged in the exact proportion, it is to your interest to at once become a consumer. As to purity, nothing can be superior. $1 for 24½ lbs. Died.

NEWBERRY.—Sr. Edith A. Newberry was born October 22, 1832, at Bustard, Leeds County, Ontario. Baptized at String Prairie, Lee County, Iowa, March 23, 1861, by John Shippy. Her maiden name was Benedict. She came to Iowa when she was fourteen years old with her parents and was married to James W. Newberry in 1847. They often made a home for the elders in the early days of the Reorganization. To them were born ten children, three of whom have died, as also her husband who has awaited her coming since 1895. She retained her health and faculties to a remarkable degree until a year ago, when a paralytic stroke gave her much trouble, but she was cheerful and hopeful through it all and seemed much better until a week before her death, when she was seized with another attack which terminated in a peaceful and painless death on October 9, 1911, at Argyle, Iowa. The funeral sermon was by Elder James McKeirnan in Union Chapel. Interment in the Meek Cemetery.

GORDON.—Bro. Alexander Gordon was born March 31, 1850, in Yorkshire, England; died September 19, 1911, at Barnhill, Ohio. He was baptized in 1895 by Brother Parrish; ordained to the office of priest April 3, 1896. Brother Gordon labored faithfully as long as health permitted him, to let those around him know of the hope he had in the gospel. Funeral at the Saints' chapel, New Philadelphia, Ohio; J. A. Becker officiating. Interment at the East Avenue Cemetery.

TANNER.—Sr. Mary Ann Boughen was born January 3, 1842, in Norfolk, England, and was married January 15, 1863, to Jonathan Tanner, in Brantford, Ontario. To this union were born nine children; two having died while young. She, with her husband, in 1867, moved to Isabella County, Michigan, where she lived until the fall of 1910, then moved to Weidman, where she died October 17, 1911. Pallbearers were her two sons and four sons-in-law. She leaves husband, two sons, five daughters, and a host of grandchildren, one great grandchild and many friends. Services were held at the Methodist church, the choir assisting. The Methodist minister was in charge; sermon by R. B. Campbell. Sister Tanner was baptized some twenty years ago. Her home was a resting place for the missionaries and local eldership. She will have her reward.

The Best Family Newspaper.

One of the modern problems that confront the conscientious homemaker is the wise choice of a daily newspaper. The ideal family paper must be clean, free from vulgarity and sensationalism, yet must offer something of interest to every member of the household, besides printing the latest news of the whole world in reliable and attractive form. A large contract, you will say. Yes, but an increasing number of readers seem to be convinced that The Chicago Record-Herald fairly comes up to the specifications. This great daily has made tremendous strides in the last year without lowering its standards one iota.

Business and professional men have long regarded The Record-Herald as the best paper for their own reading, because of its splendid news service and the reliability of its financial, agricultural and market reports. Young men perhaps find its greatest attraction in its excellent sporting department, covering the whole range of the world's sports. Wives and mothers emphatically prefer The Record-Herald on account of its feminine departments—its daily recipes and menus, its daily fashion hints, Marion Harland's famous page and the rest of the good things in the illustrated Woman's Section in the Sunday paper. Children enjoy the Zoo-Illogical Snapshots and other clean comic pictures, with the bright stories for boys and girls every Sunday. And all the family together can enjoy Mr. Kiser's humor and verse, Ralph Wilder's cartoons and other daily features outside the news columns.

The Chicago Record-Herald has every right to call itself the best all-around family newspaper in the West.

We may read ourselves full, or read ourselves empty according as we merely take in what we read, or use our reading to stir us into thinking or saying something. Reading should wake a person instead of putting him to sleep, and should always set him to doing something else than reading.

With an average man there comes a time when his mind crystalizes and his beliefs become absolutely fixed. He may not resent the discoveries of younger men; he certainly will not assimilate them. He may not oppose new methods of action; he certainly will not adopt them.—Dr. John Watson.

BELIEF AND FAITH.

WHAT "MUST" I BELIEVE?

We are frequently posed and sometimes perplexed, being asked the question: What must I do to be saved? The supposition is that the question is asked with a view to find out what the church has imposed as a prerequisite of belief, to entitle the individual to say of himself, "I believe within the requisition, and am therefore saved."

The church is publishing an epitome of faith, formulated in 1842, by Joseph Smith, in which the words, "We believe" occur, followed by certain propositions of faith; but there is nothing in that epitome of faith that imposes belief in these several statements as being absolutely requisite to the salvation of the individual seeking salvation, through the official acts of the ministry of the church.

When John the Baptist came preaching, his admonition was, "Repent ye, for the kingdom of God is at hand"; when Jesus came following John the Baptist he demanded baptism at the hands of John, but found it necessary to reinforce his request for baptism, by making the statement, "for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." His charge was, "Ye have faith in God; believe also in me." Nicodemus received from Jesus this direct statement, "Ye must be born again." The reason given for this is stated by himself: "Except a man be born again he can not see the kingdom."

When Philip was commanded to join himself to the chariot, when he was making his way from one city to another, he answered the question, "What doth hinder me to be baptized?" asked by the eunuch, by saying, "If thou believest with all thy heart thou mayest." And the eunuch said, "I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." Paul, in writing to the Hebrews, distinctly states, "He that cometh unto God, must believe that he is and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." This is the only place we discover the word must specifically used in regard to belief, though affirmative statements; occurring elsewhere, would carry a similar impression that this was the requisite; a belief in God as he existed and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. To this agrees the voice of inspiration, by revelation, that we are to receive those who testify that they have received the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins, and shall receive such unto baptism.

We conclude from this and other passages of scripture, ancient and modern, that whoever desires baptism and is able to confess as much as may be couched in one or all these declarations believes sufficient to entitle him to the administration of the rite of baptism and the laying on of hands; and that should he continue in such belief he is in a savable condition, so long as he thus continues, and will be received unto salvation in honor and glory at the end of the time appointed.

WHAT MAY I BELIEVE?

This question assumes this form as we take it: What am I warranted in believing; how little may I believe without being in danger of a sufficient degree of condemnation to forfeit my claim and hope to salvation; how much may I accept as believing without being in danger that I am believing more than is warrantable in view of my hope for salvation?

Accepting the Bible as containing the word of God, it would seem that there is a vast field of knowledge in the world, challenging investigation, acceptation, and belief, or disbelief and rejection, and how far can this objection and acceptation go without affecting a man's salvation?

Paul, when he stood at the head of the stairway and was told that he might speak freely in his own defense, counted himself happy that he was permitted in his own person to speak in justification of the hope of Israel. It is usually understood that this hope of Israel was the resurrection, the promised redemption. Paul justifies himself then in believing in the resurrection. There was a class among the Jews from among whom Paul came, who believed not the resurrection nor yet the existence of spirits. The Pharisees, though considered a hypocritical people, confessed a belief in both. Did the belief of the Pharisees favor their acceptation unto salvation, and did the unbelief of the Sadducees affect their salvation disastrously?

It is evident from reading the 11th and 12th chapters of Romans that there was a long list of things which it seemed to the writer they were justified in accepting and believing. Did these parties believe too much? Did their belief justify them in their hope? Would a disbelief injure their chance for salvation? The history of God's dealings with men, found in the Old Testament Scripture, contains many wonderful stories of wonderful things. It is evident that the meridian-of-time saints, followers of Jesus, together with himself, believed many of those wonderful stories. If we were now able scientifically and logically to disprove the actual happening of things stated in some of these stories, how would such disproving affect our chances for the salvation offered in the New Testament Scriptures in Christ? The absolute inability of man to so disprove the events said to have taken place seems to completely dispose of the objection to believing them, that believers in the New Testament Scriptures are willing to accord them. Would it be justifiable for a man to say, "I don't believe any of these things thus stated in the Old Scripture," justifying his so saying upon the thought that he has never seen in his own person and has never known of his own knowledge the transpiring of things like those that are mentioned? Is a man justified in saying, "I do not understand what has been stated, whether of faith as an abstract principle or doctrine as a rule of conduct or material event as a fact," because he does not understand them,—that is to say, because he does not know how they were accomplished? Is a man justified in saying, "I do not believe," because he does not understand? Is he justified in saying, "I do not believe," because he may think he is believing too much?

Not to make this little dissertation too long, we inquire lastly, What is belief? And for the sake of the argument we state; belief is a kind of confidence extended by the mind toward a principle, a statement of purported facts, of which the individual has not an absolute personal knowledge through the exercise of one of the outward senses. How may we distinguish this from faith? Faith is the assurance that a man receives of the existence of that of which none of his outward senses take cognizance, but of which his inner conscious being furnishes the assurance. Belief based upon that which appeals to the outward senses may and should affect a man so far as his knowledge is concerned; and this knowledge may be consistent with and favorable to his private judgment and conviction or it may be strikingly contrary to his private opinion and convictions founded thereon. In the one case it would be confirmatory to his preconceived notion, and in the other adverse to; but in what sense would either affect his hope for salvation?

Some men say, "I believe because I am compelled to believe." Other men say, "I believe because I prefer to believe." Which is the safer, so far as salvation is concerned, the man who waits to be compelled to believe, or the man who prefers to believe though he can not understand all things? If a man believes that Jesus is the Christ and maintains this standard of belief honestly and thoroughly, may he not, so far as the world of human knowledge is concerned, "go out and in and find pasture"?

Such a man might believe little or he might believe much, and in either case he would be safe.

INCENTIVE TO CHRISTIAN ACTIVITY.

Two appeals may be made to induce individuals to live in harmony with the teachings of Christ.

The first of these is an appeal to personal interest, and includes a statement on the one hand of the blessings and joys to be experienced at some future time by those who live right lives, and on the other hand of an awful punishment to be inflicted upon the wicked. An effort is thus made to stir people to repentance and obedience, that they may escape suffering and inherit bliss—in other words, to avoid the possibility of going to hell, and make sure of their own welcome into heaven. Such an appeal has constituted the burden of preaching by "revivalists" during past years, notably during the eighteenth and the early part of the nineteenth centuries. At its worst it was an effort at once to intimidate and to bribe.

It may be said in defense of such a course that God himself sets forth the fact that the obedient will be rewarded and the rebellious punished.

He states it thus in Deuteronomy 11:26: "I set before you this day a blessing and a curse."

The prophets of the old dispensation kept the alternative before the people in no uncertain manner.

Christ himself carried the idea over into the New Testament and said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." In many places in the New Testament the joys of the saved and the woes of the damned are very emphatically set forth. Similar teaching appears in the Book of Mormon, and in our own times it appears again in the revelations found in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, as for instance in the statement that those who refuse to give their portion to the poor and needy shall lift up their eyes in hell, being in torment (Doctrine and Covenants 101:2).

The reverse of this, as regards the temporal law, is stated in Malachi 3:10, where the Lord himself says that if the people will pay their tithes and offerings he will pour out upon them blessings that there will not be room to receive.

From all this we may conclude that the preacher may still properly set before the people "the blessing and the curse." Indeed, it is right and necessary that he should do so, that an intelligent choice may be made. If any man chooses to go to hell he should go understandingly. The blessing and the curse are both facts in the gospel economy and should be stated. The gospel is still the savor of life unto life or of death unto death.

But neither the blessing nor the curse nor both together constitute in themselves a sufficient basis for an appeal to active service in the Christian cause.

In the first place, such an appeal does not lift the mind to a sufficiently high plane.

In the second place, the plea appeals to a motive that is insufficient and impractical.

I am asked to live the Christian religion because I fear hardship and so wish to escape hell, and because I love comfort and so wish to enter heaven.

My motive defeats itself.

Christian service demands that I face hardship and sacrifice comfort. Christians are not borne to paradise on flowery beds of ease.

If I have become a Christian that I might escape suffering and win flowery beds of ease, my motive defeats me. Soon I encounter that which I wish to avoid and turn back. Thus backsliders are a natural result of an insufficient motive and an incomplete statement of the law.

Jesus appealed to a higher and more compelling motive. He said: "If a man love me, he will keep my words."—John 14: 23.

The same thought appears in Doctrine and Covenants: "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor."—Section 42, paragraph 8.

Love knows no hardship. For those whom we love we toil and suffer, and if necessary die. Love is an enduring, compelling, and noble motive. No one can estimate its power. And the same motive that prompts us to serve God impels us to serve our brethren who may need moral, physical, or financial succor. So we may conclude that a complete Christian education will include an intelligent knowledge of the alternative, "blessing and cursing," and a love of God, for what he is and has done, that will be the motive impelling to a life of active obedience, the natural result of which will be a reception of the blessing so much to be desired and toward which we all may look with joy and pleasure.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Crying never helps matters. We all get beaten one way or another, but there are other ways of being strong than with the fists. Gentleness is sometimes the greater strength and better weapon.—Nina Larrey Duryea in The House of Seven Gables.

ABOUT "THE OIL" AND ITS USE.

"Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders, who shall anoint them with oil and pray over them." "They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." The first is from James and the second is from Jesus.

Q. What kind of oil should be used?

A. There is nothing specifically stated in the law as to the kind of oil to be used. From the fact that the oil of the olive was in universal use in Jerusalem and other parts of the Holy Land, it is presumable that it was olive oil that was used by the Savior and the early saints. The olive tree still flourishes in Palestine and the oil is still in universal use; not only in Palestine, but all over those Eastern countries, and in fact almost everywhere. In Joseph's land it is used both as a food, a condiment, and a medicine. The oil used, therefore, should be the olive oil; the only exception being in case of an emergency, in which case, as necessity knows no law, the use of any kind of oil would be acceptable to the Master. It should, however, be good of its kind and as clean as possible. On the islands of the sea cocoanut oil is used and is acceptable. Any oil used should be as pure as possible. Pure olive oil, if kept in a cool, dark place, will keep clear and sweet for a long time. If put away in a place where the light can strike it and where it is hot, it will grow light colored and after awhile become rancid.

Q. How should the oil be blessed or consecrated for use?

A. If used for food it need not be consecrated any further than any other food which is placed upon the table is blessed at the returning of thanks for the benefits of the food received as a gift of God. If intended to be used for anointing purposes, where prayer is offered and the laying on of hands is administered, the oil should be blessed and consecrated for such use.

Q. In what manner should the oil be blessed?

A. There is no rule upon the subject that we are aware of. Our opinion is that oil intended to be used in "administration to the sick" should be blessed in the following manner. It should be presented before the Lord by being held in the hands of the elders in the bottles or cans in which it is kept and bought for use, the elders asking the blessing, using the following formula of language: Our Father who art in heaven, we present before thee this oil in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, thy Son, and ask thee that thou wilt accept it at our hands, that it may be blessed, consecrated, and set apart to right and holy uses. We pray thee to grant that whosoever may use this oil in administering therewith may do so in faith, nothing doubting; that those to whom this oil shall be administered may accept the administration in faith, having confident trust in thee; and that the blessing sought by the administration may follow the administration. Amen.

We suggest this merely as a formula and have not the right to say that it should be used and no other formula will be acceptable, as we believe that any form of words conveying the meaning of the request that the oil should be blessed of God would be acceptable to both the Father and the Son.

A very convenient way to secure oil that is to be blessed is for those who wish to have oil in their homes to take their bottles or cases of oil to the prayer meeting service, where it may be blessed by the elders, who should place the oil in the receptacles containing it upon the table, upon which the elements of the sacrament are displayed and blessed, and the elders ask a blessing upon the oil as it is thus presented. Many bottles could be blessed at one meeting. In such cases the elders may or may not gather the bottles together and hold them in their hands on the table, or leave them untouched by their hands, as the action might be dictated at the time the blessing was asked for and being taken.

Q. Should the corks be removed from the receptacles containing the oil when the blessing is being asked?

A. In all cases when it is at all practicable the receptacles holding the oil to be blessed should be opened, the corks being removed, during the action of blessing, to be replaced afterwards when the blessing service is ended. We believe that the omission to remove the corks from the bottle while the blessing is being asked would not vitiate the blessing, nor unfit the oil to be used; but as the use of the oil is provided for by divine commandment, it should be accepted by all as being as far removed from the influence of superstition as it is possible for sound-minded, honest-hearted believers in God and in Christ to hold and observe; it being a matter-of-fact transaction with the believers, the same as the asking of the blessings at our tables for the food of which we expect to partake as prepared for us.

Hence the nearer we proceed to this rite of administering with oil according to the dictates of common sense and prudence the more sacred our action will be to ourselves, and the more acceptable to God.

Love is made up only of the attributes to which your spirit clings. There is no earthly blot on it. It draws into itself all our human emotions and rises inevitably until it reaches the very boundary of heaven. There it hangs like a star, safely in the midst of limitless space.—George Wemyss in The Secret Book.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Truth, Jerusalem, October 20, contains an account of the death of Bro. Rollo Floyd, which occurred October 4. The sermon by Elder Rees Jenkins is liberally quoted in The Truth. Bro. Floyd was born October 5, 1838. In 1866 he went to Jerusalem with a colony of some thirty families. There he organized a tourist agency. He drove the first carriage from Jerusalem to Jaffa. The American Colony Choir assisted at the funeral.

Certain parties have written us in regard to an advertisement which appeared in our issues of November 8 and 15, making objection to its wording and claims. The HERALD management acknowledges error in using this advertisement in the form in which it was run. It was an oversight, neither the business manager nor the editors having noticed its peculiar wording until their attention was called to it by letters from HERALD readers.

Overconfidence in young actresses may result just as disastrously as a lack of prudence. They must not be too sure of themselves if they would steer clear of the pitfalls.—George H. Brennan in Anna Malleen.

A great man sometimes makes his mark in this world in spite of the fact that he is given, free of price to himself, the luxury of a pampered education. The usual grand prize winner is, however, the man who makes his own career, like Napoleon or Lincoln.—S. B. Neltner.

Manners are an art. Some are perfect, some commendable, some faulty; but there are none that are of no moment. How comes it that we have no precepts by which to teach them, or, at least, no rule whereby to judge them, as we judge sculpture and music?—Joubert.

What it means to call God "Father" and to think of ourselves as his "children," and to say that he "loves" us, we must largely learn in the very midst of our human relationships. Every genuine love is both an evidence of the divine love and a preparation for it.—Henry Churchill King.

Not enough, either, is the sentiment in that touching word of Jean Paul Richter, "How much ought I not to forgive, for we shall remain so short a time together?" There is something so much better. It is to look deep enough into him, to the possibilities that lie there. It is that my brother, with his evil, is in the way to being good, and that my forgiveness and love will help him thitherward.—J. Brierly.

SAINTS' HERALD DOCTRINAL SERIES.

XV. THE LORD'S SUPPER.

BY ELDER C. A. BUTTERWORTH, MINISTER IN CHARGE OF THE AUSTRALASIAN MISSION.

The above heading clearly indicates the fact that the institution commonly called the sacrament, or Lord's supper, is of divine origin.

It is one of the leading ordinances of the gospel, and occupies a prominent place among the fundamental principles of the doctrine of Christ, which makes its observance obligatory upon all classes of people who profess to be living by "every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

ITS OBJECT.

Primarily, its object was to bring vividly and impressively before the minds of the true worshipers the great agony endured and sacrifices made in order that all "might have life and have it more abundantly"; but its deep and wonderful significance has rarely, if ever found full expression by mortal tongue. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends," and friendship is only secured from the Master by "doing whatsoever I command you." God is the King of Saints, the Father of the spirits of all flesh, who has made ample provisions for the life, growth, and perfection of the spiritual as well as the natural man, "for in him we live and move and have our being." "He has made of one blood all nations of men, for to dwell on all the face of the earth," and is declared by holy men to be "no respecter of persons," without variation, and in the great scheme of human redemption he "changes not." He has sent his only begotten Son into the world ("I came down from heaven and am come into the world") as the desire of all nations, "the only Mediator between God and man," with this injunction, "Hear ye him." Of this Son it hath been wisely said, "Neither is there salvation in any other, for there is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." He was given to be a "leader and a commander to the people," and the burden of the government was to be borne upon his shoulders. Therefore, where he leads we are enjoined to follow, and when he commands we are required to obey. As a mediator, he merely carried out the wise instruction of higher authority, as we find in his own words; "for I have not spoken of myself, but the Father which sent me he gave me a commandment what I should say, and what I should speak, and I know that his commandment is life everlasting."

The learned rabbis marveled greatly at the flashes of light, wisdom, and inspiration that fell from the lips of him who had "never learned letters." He meekly and humbly informed them that the glad message he brought was not his, but the Father's who sent him, thus acknowledging his Father as being the source and center of all light, truth wisdom, and love.

Therefore, whether it be the baptism performed by John, Christ, or any of his servants, or the "Lord's supper" administered by himself or those upon whom the responsibility was enjoined, it was from heaven; and the divine benediction would fall like a gentle shower upon the faithful observer of these and all other ordinances connected with the everlasting gospel. We, as Saints in the latter days, view this subject, in many respects, somewhat differently from other bodies of so-called Christian people; believing it to be a part of the original plan, "once delivered to the saints." These saints who lived through the ages, from the days of Adam down to the birth of Christ, are reported by inspired writers as having obtained a "good report" and died in the faith, living close to the example of Zacharias and Elizabeth, who walked "in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless."

AUTHORITY IN ADMINISTERING.

Further, this ordinance must be administered by those divinely called and set apart by the laying on of hands, as were the ministers of the new covenant in the days of our Master, in order that the promised blessings may follow. The exact method of procedure is not definitely stated in the Bible, but the Lord has been true to his promise to "add line upon line," and make known many of the things they could not bear in the beginning; and we have from him the following: "And the elder or priest shall administer it; and after this manner shall he administer it: He shall kneel with the church and call upon the Father in solemn prayer, saying, O God, the eternal Father, we ask thee in the name of thy Son Jesus Christ, to bless and sanctify this bread to the souls of all those who partake of it, that they may eat in remembrance of the body of thy Son, and witness unto thee, O God, the eternal Father, that they are willing to take upon them the name of thy Son, and always remember him and keep his commandments which he has given them, that they may always have his Spirit to be with them. Amen."

The blessing asked upon the wine is very similar. All New Testament writers on this subject breathe a spirit of harmony; but some are more expressive than others. Paul says: "For I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, That the Lord Jesus the same night in which he was betrayed took bread: and when he had given thanks he brake it, and said, Take, eat; this is my body, which is broken for you; this do in remembrance of me. After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood; this do ye, as often as ye drink it, in remembrance of me. For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come."

ANTIQUITY OF THE ORDINANCE.

It can not be said that the footsteps and doings of him who is "the beginning and the end" are as clearly traceable through the prophetic age, as during the times of the apostles, although we are assured of the fact that he is the same yesterday, today, and for ever. Through the wear and tear of time, with the follies and imperfections of fallen humanity, much of the sacred history of God's dealing with his children in past ages has been lost, or set aside as being unworthy of recognition. God is said to have at sundry times and in divers manners, spoken in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, who in turn spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, yet many of these records are missing, and this is one of the reasons why we have such a vague account of the Lord's supper in early times. Only a few faint references are made to it, and these are often overlooked by the superficial reader.

When a body had been prepared for our Lord and he came into the world to bring "good tidings" of "great joy," and partake of the nature of us all, it was not difficult to understand his full meaning, when he took the bread, and blessed it, and gave it to his disciples, and said, "This do in remembrance of me"; but when he was declared to be the "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world," and had only been revealed in vision or by the mouth of the holy prophets, this great truth was not as readily comprehended as when God was made manifest in the personage of his Son.

The Inspired Translation of the Bible gives a clear and concise account of the faith of our Lord, in the days of Adam, Enoch, Noah, and others, who believed and were baptized into the true fold of God, and were made partakers of the divine nature; for it is said of Enoch, that he walked with God, and before his translation he had this testimony, "that he pleased God." God's chief attributes are light, truth, and love, and all those who assimilate these holy principles and permit them to abound in their lives, most assuredly are walking with God.

Abraham walked in "the steps of the faith," and continued his course onward and upward until he reached the paradise of rest, for like Moses "he endured as seeing him who is invisible." "Without faith it is impossible to please God," and while in the exercise of this living faith, Melchisedec, king of Salem, brought forth "bread and wine," (emblematical of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world,) and he was priest of the most high

God. This is no far-fetched or misty hint, but a clear-cut statement of the "Lord's supper" administered by the proper authority.

Christ, our blessed Master, into whose hands all power and authority was committed, was "called of God an high priest," after this order, and when suitable preparations had been made, he called his excellent ministry to a similar report. The emblems were blessed and distributed and partaken of by his disciples, with the instruction that this ordinance should be observed as a token "in remembrance of him," until he returned to the great marriage supper of the Lamb. God instructed Moses to communicate the following to the Israelites, "Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people; for all the earth is mine. And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation."

The Apostle Paul, when referring to these people, says, "The gospel was preached unto us as well as unto them," (The gospel is the power of God unto salvation,) but indicates that with many of them God was not well pleased, for they resisted the authority and rejected the true light of God. After stating that they had all been baptized in the cloud and in the sea, he says, "And did all eat the same spiritual meat, and did all drink the same spiritual drink, for they drank of that spiritual rock that followed them and that rock was Christ." This is a plain inference that they had ministered to them by the holy priesthood, not only baptism, but the "Lord's supper," for no one can eat and drink of Christ by faith alone, "for faith without works is dead," and the word here is, "This do in remembrance of me." Paul explains further by saying, "The cup which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ; the bread which we eat, is it not the communion of the body of Christ?"

When our Master's words greeted the disciples' ears, "Take, eat: this is my body, and the cup drink ye all of it." This is my blood, etc.; how readily they could understand the great underlying principle of eating and drinking of that "Rock of Ages" who had been with the true worshiper from the beginning of time.

The Apostle Paul's teaching on this subject is similar to all those who were before him. He says to the Corinthian saints, "For I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, That the Lord Jesus the same night in which he was betrayed took bread: and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat: this is my body, which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me. After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood; this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me. For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come."—1 Corinthians 11: 23-26.

TIME OF ADMINISTERING.

There is no special, or specific time given when this ordinance should be observed, that I am aware of. Our Lord first partook of the bread and wine with his disciples, "the same night in which he was betrayed"; but the account given in the Bible is that the disciples met together "upon the first day of the week to break bread," after the Lord had ascended to glory, and the practice of this custom is borne out by the writings of the early historians in ecclesiastical history. Paul says, "as oft as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup," etc., indicating that there was no set or fixed time for its observance, which harmonizes with the word of the Lord given in our day, "And the Spirit saith further: Contention is unseemly, therefore, cease to contend respecting the sacrament and the time of administering it; for whether it be upon the first Lord's day of every month, or upon the Lord's day of every week, if it be administered by the officers of the church with sincerity of heart and in purity of purpose, and be partaken of in remembrance of Jesus Christ and in willingness to take upon them his name by them who partake, it is acceptable to God."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 3.

The conclusions to be drawn from the above are, that at any time, either night or day, or any place on earth, where the authorized representatives of the faith may be assembled, the "Lord's supper" may be partaken of with profit and advantage to all who "discern the Lord's body," and do it "in remembrance of him." This supper may be followed with either good or bad results, which wholly depends upon the standing, and frame of mind of the person who embraces the opportunity to partake.

GOOD AND BAD RESULTS.

It is called "the cup of blessing which we bless," and it becomes a blessing to the souls of all those who eat and drink worthily before the Lord; for their spiritual strength is renewed, their hopes enlarged, and their joy "inexpressible and full of glory."

The unworthy are followed with such dire consequences as remorse, sickness, and sometimes death, as a result of their own folly, and disregard to make the proper preparation to partake at the Lord's table.

"Wherefore whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord, unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup; for he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body. For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep."—1 Corinthians 11: 27-30.

When new converts are "translated from the kingdoms and powers of darkness into the kingdom of his dear Son," they feed no longer upon the husks that result in death, but stretch forth their hand for the living bread, which was given for the life of the world. "The elders or priests are to have a sufficient time to expound all things concerning the church of Christ to the understanding, previous to their partaking of the sacrament," and then the matter of partaking is left entirely to the individual, to decide as to his or her fitness, unless he or she is known to be in transgression.

"But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup."—1 Corinthians 11: 28. "Nevertheless, if any have transgressed, let him not partake until he makes reconciliation."—Doctrine and Covenants 46: 1. The underlying principle of the whole matter seems to be couched briefly in this sentiment: a repentance and reconciliation toward God, that one can freely and truthfully sing, "To God I'm reconciled; his pardoning voice I hear; he owns me for his child; I can no longer fear"; with the elimination of every trace of hatred, malice, envy, jealousy, and variance toward all men, and implanting in the place thereof love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, meekness, faith, temperance, and all other qualities that will reflect the divine character in the human, from the new birth, until the thread of life is severed and we are wafted through the gates of the New Jerusalem, or "attain to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

Under certain conditions a person may be benefited by refusing to eat, when the opportunity is offered him, but much better for him should such conditions never arise. "Let him that partaketh and him that refraineth, cease to contend with his brother, that each may be benefited when he eateth at the table of the Lord." The church has never decided, that I am aware of, just where she stands upon this great and important subject; nor has she passed in her legislative councils any drastic measures that the ministry shall go, or see, just so far and no farther; but has been willing to allow the Holy Spirit, who is to lead and guide us unto all truth, to be the leading and directing power, with an open door for more light and knowledge from the Giver of all good. From years of personal experience and observation I have invariably noticed that an unusual power, a deep sense of the Holy Spirit's presence, the manifestation of light, wisdom, knowledge, and revelation have come to the waiting congregation almost immediately after communion, which has led me to believe that there was something more far-reaching in this ordinance than merely calling to our vision or remembrance the scenes of Calvary and the atonement made for us. "Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures, and the Scriptures mention many ways in which pardon is sought and found by the penitent believer. If sins can be remitted under proper conditions through this ordinance, then the problem is solved why this unusual outpouring is enjoyed after partaking of the bread and wine; for the tabernacle would be cleansed and be a fit abode for the Holy Spirit to come in and dwell. "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins," and yet we are baptized for, and receive remission of sins, if necessary repentance and preparation have been made by us. Faith in his blood is not enough to secure remission of sins unless we act our part, and that is to repent and be baptized for the remission of sins. At this stage we become newborn babes who are sanctified through the truth; but are liable to err and sin at any time along life's pathway. "If we say we have no sin we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us," but if we (Saints) confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and cleanse us from all unrighteousness." "And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the sin of the whole world." Here is seen a process of cleansing constantly going on among the Saints, or body of Christ, through the direction of our Advocate, who said to the Jews, "Verily, verily I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day."—John 6: 53-56. "For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed. He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me and I in him." And although they were unable to fathom this hard saying, yet he undoubtedly had reference to the sacrament, as he explained later on while celebrating the ordinance with his disciples. "And as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, take, eat; this is my body, and he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it; for this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins."—Matthew 26: 26, 27.

JESUS OUR MEDIATOR.

That is, his blood was to be shed to atone for the sins of the whole world, upon the conditions that they believe in and acknowledge him in all his ways. The way here is that the Saints acknowledge their faults, confess their sins, and eat and drink in faith, believing that he is just and faithful to forgive them their sins and cleanse them from all unrighteousness. "If we say that we have fellowship [or communion] with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth, but if we [Saints] walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ [represented in the cup] his Son cleanseth us from all sin." This fellowship where the blood cleanses appears to be at the Lord's table, when we witness by our acts that we believe in his blood.

According to John's testimony we have three witnesses on earth,—the Spirit, water, and the blood. By the water ye keep the commandment. By the Spirit are ye justified. By the blood are ye sanctified. (Inspired Translation.) To sanctify, means to cleanse, purify, or make whole, and this privilege the erring Saints have who confess their faults, forsake their sins, and eat and drink in faith, believing in his precious blood. Sins are remitted by faith and works, and as Saints continue to err, this ordinance appears to be a means to an end, and the end is the remission of sins to all those who repent, make restitution for the wrong done, approach the Lord's table in a humble and penitent frame of mind, and partake worthily before the Lord. This is the sentiment we sing so feelingly:

"O God the eternal Father,
Who dwells amid the sky,
In Jesus' name we ask thee
To bless and sanctify,
If we are pure before thee,
This bread and cup of wine,
That we may all remember
That offering so divine.

"That sacred, holy offering,
By man least understood,
To have our sins remitted,
And take his flesh and blood."

Bro. Joseph's late testimony (November 23, 1910,) is as follows: "Too many of us forget that in this sacred ordinance we put our hands and witness before God that we not only remember him whose flesh suffered upon Calvary's cross for us, and whose blood was shed for us, but that we should also remember those with whom we are associated, and blessing them by our life, by our precept and our example as we are striving to walk uprightly, fully answering unto the understanding that we have, that in thus partaking of the emblems before each other and before God and the angels, we have partaken of that that increaseth and sustaineth our spiritual life, and retaining thereby a remission of our sins from sacrament time unto sacrament time."

It is said "the blood that courses through the human system like ten thousand streamlets, bearing off in its flood all traces of impurity, disease, and germs of death, is the life of the body." So, in like manner, the blood of Christ, witnessed in the "Lord's supper," flows through the whole body, the church, cleansing, purifying, and sanctifying it, that at last it may be presented unto the Father, "without spot, wrinkle, or blemish."

To me the waters of regeneration where we are baptized for the remission of our sins, when entering the fold; the laying on of hands and anointing with oil that we may be healed, and pardoned of any sins committed that has brought on this condition, and the blood of Christ, represented in the sacramental cup, are all stepping stones along life's rugged road, which help to free us from sin and its consequences, and sanctify us for an abundant entrance unto and association with all the redeemed, in a world wherein "dwelleth righteousness."

A REVIEW OF "MORMONISM AGAINST ITSELF"—PART 12.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

BAYS REVAMPED.

What next? Here it comes. Commencing at the bottom of page 113, our critic details in the usual staccato, with sotto voice, the linguistic lingo of Moldenke, Angell, Davis, et al, copied from the work of D. H. Bays, who reproduces correspondence with these men to whom he sent copies of the characters:

James B. Angell, of the University of Michigan, submitted the letter and inclosure to his professor in oriental languages. He, as president of the institution, vouched for the professor's learning by saying that "he is a man of large learning in Semitic languages and archaeology." The professor said: "The document which you inclose raises a moral rather than a linguistic problem. . . . There are no Assyrian characters in it, and the impression is that the document is fraudulent."—Mormonism Against Itself, p. 114.

Charles H. S. Davis, M. D., Ph. D., of Meriden, Connecticut, author of Ancient Egypt in the Light of Recent Discoveries, had this to say:

"I am familiar with the Egyptian, Chaldaic, Assyrian, and Arabic, and have considerable acquaintance with all the oriental languages, and I can positively assert that there is not a letter to be found in the facsimile submitted that can be found in the alphabet of any oriental language, particularly of those you refer to—namely, Egyptian, Chaldaic, Assyrian and Arabic. A careful study of the facsimile shows that they are characters put down at random by an ignorant person—with no resemblance to anything, not even shorthand."

Dr. Charles E. Moldenke, of New York, commended by the above Dr. Davis as "probably the best Egyptian scholar in the country," said: ". . . I believe the plates of the Book of Mormon to be a fraud. In the first place, it is impossible to find in any old inscription Egyptian, Arabic, Chaldaic and Assyrian characters mixed together. The simple idea of finding the Egyptian and Arabic side by side is ridiculous and impossible."—Mormonism Against Itself, p. 115.

This scholarly defense was placed upon the dissecting table, and under the critical scalpel wielded by Elder Heman C. Smith, in reply to D. H. Bays, was piecemeal laid in its quiet grave. Being recently disinterred by Elder Traum, he sends it out in the condition Lazarus was in four days after death,— "Lord, by this time it stinketh." Elder Smith's reply, in part, is herewith subjoined:

It may be thought presumptuous to criticise these learned men, but of all productions of mortal man, the productions of scholars ought to stand criticism, and if they will not, no excuse can be made. Compare the following: (Some of the following italics are mine.)

"A few letters or signs are noticeable which correspond more or less closely to the Aramaic, sometimes called Chaldee language; for example, s, h, g, t, l, b, n."—Angell.

"I can positively assert that there is not a letter to be found in the facsimile submitted that can be found in the alphabet of any oriental language, particularly of those you refer to—namely, Egyptian, Chaldaic, Assyrian and Arabic. A careful study of the facsimile shows that they are characters put down at random by an ignorant person—with no resemblance to anything, not even shorthand."—Davis.

"In the second place, though some signs remind one of those on the Mesa Inscription, yet none bear a resemblance to Egyptian or Assyrian."—Moldenke.

"Greek and Hebrew letters, crosses and flourishes, Roman letters inverted or placed sideways, were arranged in perpendicular columns, etc."—Anthon.

"There is no evidence that the Hebrews kept their records upon plates or tablets of brass; but the Assyrians, in the eighth century before Christ, did."—Angell.

"No record has ever shown that the Hebrews, or any other Eastern nation, kept their records upon plates or tablets of brass."—Davis.

This is the contradictory mass that Mr. Bays relies on as evidence in rebuttal. Mr. Angell finds signs on the facsimile more or less closely resembling Chaldee; Mr. Moldenke finds signs that remind one of those on the Mesa Inscription; and Mr. Anthon finds Greek, Hebrew, and Roman letters; while Mr. Davis finds no resemblance to anything.

Again, Mr. Angell thinks that the Assyrians kept their records on brass; but Mr. Davis says "no record has ever shown that the Hebrews, or any other eastern nation," did. However, Messrs. Anthon, Davis, and Moldenke all agree that there are no Egyptian characters on the facsimile, while Mr. Angell says nothing on this point.—The Truth Defended, pages 125, 126.

The entire correspondence between Elder Bays and these learned men is brought under this analysis of Elder Smith. Mr. Traum has an invincible propensity for the staccato passage, and has omitted many explanatory clauses in the letters referred to. These learned men could not be expected to readily recognize Egyptian characters on the plates, for the record translated from them says, as before quoted:

And now behold, we have written this record according to our knowledge in the characters which are called among us the reformed Egyptian, being handed down and altered by us according to our manner of speech. And if our plates had been sufficiently large, we should have written in Hebrew; but the Hebrew hath been altered by us also; and if we could have written in Hebrew, behold, ye would have had no imperfections in our record. But the Lord knoweth the things which we have written, and also that none other people knoweth our language.—Book of Mormon, p. 500, Lamoni edition.

Just here we will correct Mr. Traum in the statement (page 114) that, "It has been, and is, the boast of Mormonism that the plates were covered with characters of the Egyptian, Chaldaic, Assyrian, and Arabic languages." This statement is false.

It is not even a claim, never has been, never will be, that the plates had any other characters on them but the "reformed Egyptian." Professor Anthon stated the plates contained "Chaldaic, Assyrian, and Arabic," the Saints, never. This is one of Traum's brainstorms!

If "the conclusion reached by D. H. Bays," and adopted by our critic, who stands away behind, chirping, "Me too; me too," is because of, or based upon, the testimony of these learned men, we hope they (the learned men) will agree before they come into court again, or that the plaintiff will see his ailing cause. "If Mormonism is true," says Traum, "the plates must have been written in Egyptian. The plates were not written in Egyptian. Therefore, Mormonism is not true." With all due respect to this sweltering syllogistic statement, we lay one or two alongside which are just as convincing: "Words come out of our critic's mouth. Snakes and toads are words. Therefore snakes and toads come out of our critic's mouth. Again, anyone whose sun never sets, is immortal. A hen's son never sets. Therefore, a hen is immortal!"

There is no claim that the plates were written in Egyptian. This is intentionally misleading. The claim is, the Book of Mormon writers used characters called by them "reformed Egyptian." Then let us put the syllogistic statement in another form: If "Mormonism" is true, it will harmonize with the Bible in its claims. It does harmonize with the Bible. Therefore, "Mormonism" is true. And if "Mormonism" is true, the three witnesses are not deceivers, Joseph Smith was a true prophet, and the "Mormon" Church the church of Jesus Christ.

But here, what an embarrassing attitude one of these learned men plunged into when he wrote another letter two years after he wrote the one introduced by Traum. In the latter, he contradicts his position in the former, thus:

MOUNT VERNON, January 13, 1898.

MR. FRANK M. SHEEHY,

Dear Sir: Your inquiry has not been answered by me sooner on account of stress of work. I had occasion to answer a similar inquiry to yours while in Jerusalem last year. While some of the characters bear a very slight resemblance to Old Hebrew and Egyptian letters, still the whole page shows plainly the work of the forger and ignoramus. In fact sentences lettered in Arabic, Hebrew, Egyptian promiscuously would be sheer nonsense. All the characters of this "Book of Mormon" are not even a clever invention but a barefaced and idiotic scribble. Returning to you the printed sheet I remain

Yours respectfully,
CHARLES E. MOLDENKE.

In the letter Traum introduces, dated at Jerusalem, 1896, he says: "None bear a resemblance to Egyptian," etc.; while in the latter, written to Elder Sheehy, 1898, he says: "Some of the characters bear a very slight resemblance to old Hebrew and Egyptian letters." In "reformed Egyptian," then, some "slight resemblance" to the Egyptian may be seen. Elder Sheehy presented a copy of the same characters of the plates, that D. H. Bays sent him, and the answers elicited, contradictory. It would seem that others not so "simple hearted" as the farmer,—Harris,—have been trying to fulfill Hebrew prophecy,—delivering "the words" of the book to the "learned."

EGYPTIAN ARCHITECTURE.

There is evidence, competent, reliable evidence, that the prehistoric nations in America were influenced by Egyptian civilizations. The architecture, as well as the "glyphs," speak in no uncertain way, as the following testimony will show:

Cuzco is built on acclivities more or less abrupt, and the ancient architects were obliged to resort to an elaborate system of terracing. The terraces were faced with walls slightly inclining inwards, of the kind called cyclopean. The monotony of the front is generally broken up by the counter-sunk niches resembling blind windows. These niches were always a little narrower at the top than at the bottom, as were all the doors and windows, resembling the Egyptian style of architecture."—American Antiquarian, vol. 25, p. 155.

Of the ornamentation of the walls at Cuzco, S. B. Peet, in American Antiquarian, vol. 11, p. 220, says:

In this there are some remarkable resemblances between the architecture of the New and Old World. We first refer to one peculiarity which has impressed many writers on architecture—the imitation of woodwork which is found on the stone structures. This was first noticed by Ferguson in Assyria. It, however, may be seen in Egypt, and is very common in America.

"The Earth and Its Inhabitants," edited by A. H. Keane, B. A., Member of the Council Anthropology Institute, corresponding member Italian and Washington Anthropology Society, author of Asia, etc., translates the following from Elisee Reclus, native historian of Peru:

At Chichen Itza Doctor Le Plongeon discovered under a heap of rubbish twenty-six feet thick the finest statue of Nahuatl art now preserved in the Museum of Mexico. It is the effigy of Chac-mool, reclining on his back and looking toward the right; the features are quite regular, and the head is adorned with fillets in the Egyptian fashion. The simple majesty of this statue stands in striking contrast to the figures overcharged with barbaric ornaments which are met in so many temples of Mexico, Tabasco, and Chiapas.

The recent Origin of Man, by Southall, page 41, presents the matter thus:

The pyramidal architecture of Egypt is recalled by the pyramids of Mexico, and Central America. . . . It is difficult to dispose of the fact that the sides of the American pyramids are all ornamented as in Egypt and Mesopotamia. The great pyramid known as Xochicalco—"the house of flowers," is scarcely distinguished from the ordinary type of those in Lower Egypt.

Elisee Reclus, as translated by Keane, says:

Southwest of Palenque about midway on the road to San Cristobal, capital of Chiapas, in an upland valley watered by an affluent of the Usumacinta are grouped the houses of Oocingo, whose name has been assigned to an ancient city lying five miles further east. By the Indians this place is called Tonila, that is "stone houses." Amongst them was discovered a plaster carving whose perfectly Egyptian expression greatly surprised Stephens, Catherwood, and Bras-seur de Bourbourg.—The Earth and Its Inhabitants, vol. 2, p. 163.

The Antiquarian, vol. 2, p. 215, says of the pyramids at Uxmal and Copan:

The pyramids in America combine the massiveness and solidity of the Egyptian, the terraced form of the Chaldean, and the palace-crowned quality of the Assyrian, and at the same time embodied the carved specimens which resembled the sphinxes of Egypt.

Elder Traum has called John T. Short as witness, he has interpreted his testimony as being against the claim of the Book of Mormon. We claim him as to the facts presented by him, Elder Traum can have his opinion. Here are the facts:

It is scarcely necessary for us to remark that the seeming analogies between the Maya (Central American) sculpture and that of Egypt have often been noted. Juarros, in speaking of Palenque art, says: "The hieroglyphics, symbols and emblems which have been discovered in the temples, bear so strong a resemblance to those of the Egyptians, as to encourage the supposition that a colony of that nation may have founded the city of Palenque or Colhuacan." Giordan found, as he thought, the most striking analogies between the Central American remains, as well as those of Mexico, and those of the Egyptians. The idols and monuments he considers of the same form in both countries, while the hieroglyphics of Palenque do not differ from those of ancient Thebes. Senor Melgar, in a communication to the Mexican Geographical Society, has called attention to the frequent occurrence of the (T) tau at Palenque, and has more studiously advocated the early relationship of the Palenqueans to Egypt than any other reliable writer. He cites Dupaix's Third Expedition, page 77 and plates 26 and 27, where in the first figure is a goddess with a necklace supporting a tau like medallion to which the explorer adds the remark that such is "the symbol in Egypt of reproduction or abundance." In the second place he finds an altar dedicated expressly to the tau. He considers that the cultus of this, the symbol of the active principle in nature, prevailed in Mexico in many places. Senor Melgar also refers to two idols found south of the city of Mexico, "in one of which two symbols were united, namely, the cosmogonic egg, symbolical of creation, and two faces, symbols of the generative principle. The other symbolized creation in the bursting forth of an egg. These symbols are not found in the Aztec mythology, but belong to the Indian, Egyptian, Greek, Persian, Japanese and other cosmogonies." This, the senor considers proof that these peoples were the primitive colonists of that region, and seeks to sustain his views by references to the Dharma Sastra of Manou and the Zend Avesta. The reader has no doubt been surprised at the frequent occurrence of the T-shaped niches in the Palenque palace, and has observed the same symbol employed on some of the hieroglyphics of the Tablet of the Cross. The Egyptian tau, one of the members of the Cruz ansata, is certainly present at Palenque, but whether it was derived from any one of the Mediterranean peoples who employed it, can not be ascertained. Among the Egyptians it signified "life," as is shown by the best Egyptologists.—The North Americans of Antiquity, pp. 415-417.

What is the fate of Elder Traum's soap bubble when punctured by the archæologist's "pick," in view of the above facts?

TRACES OF NEPHITE NAMES.

On page 118 Elder Traum presents the following:

Most assuredly should we expect that some trace of the ancient Nephites and Lamanites could be found in the language which they daily uttered. Here and there in this vast land once occupied by these people should be found some unmistakable linguistic evidence of that occupancy. The language of the Nephites and Lamanites must somewhere be clinging to the soil, though the lips that spoke it are resolved into dust. Some river should murmur or some mountain repeat the voice of that nation or those nations extirpated in their own land.—Mormonism Against Itself, p. 118.

"Some river" does "murmur the voice of those nations extirpated" in this domain, and we now accommodate our critic with a few evidences: In Rand and McNally's Atlas, on the map of South America, is given, in Ecuador, as one of the sub-tributaries of the Amazon River, the river "Morono"; the final letter i, as used in the Book of Mormon, is changed to o.

This name has been traced, under a slight variant, as the name of the river dividing French and Dutch Guiana, as far back as 1778, on various maps. Then it was the name also of "a people," as shown by "The Conquest of the River Plate," 1535-1555, almost three hundred years before the Book of Mormon was published. But in Prehistoric America, by Nadaillac, 1893, page 27, the name is given as follows: "In the French Colony of Guiana . . . on the banks of the Maroni."

In Bancroft's Native Races, volume 1, page 450, edition 1882, we have the name Neophites as the name of an Indian tribe.

In Stanford's Compendium of Geography of Central and South America, volume 2, page 23, London edition, the following occurs: "Mexican and Central American Stock Races, and Language. Ethnical and Historical relations."

Stock.	Main Division.	Location.
		Honduras.
Chontal	Layman	Costa Rica.
		Nicaragua.

The native Peruvian uses the word Lamans as the Indian tribes designated by the rivers of the same names, inhabited by them. See Geography by Reclus, page 283.

From the American Antiquarian, volume 22, page 129, we copy: "Near Manti, Ecuador, a remarkable archæological relic has been found—one of the most interesting monuments in South America, of an unknown and extinct civilization." The writer describes it as an amphitheater of massive blocks of stone, thirty stone chairs, each chair a monolith, cut from a solid block of granite, fine specimens of stone carvings. The seats rest upon the back of a crouching sphinx which has a decidedly "Egyptian appearance."

If Mr. Traum has investigated the Book of Mormon, he knows Manti was the name of territory, of a city, and of a man in the Book of Mormon. Again, in Rand McNally & Co.'s Atlas, 1904, which lies before me, you will find the name Cuemani, map of Colombia; also in the northern part of Colombia appears on the map, the city of "David." Again, in Bradley's Atlas of the world, Argentine Confederation, "J. 19," indexed, you will find the name Moron; and in Universal Geography, by Elisee Reclus, volume 4, page 425: "The long pear shaped island of which it forms a part has been well named a land of desolation, . . . recalling that other land of desolation which lies at the northern extremity."

By the "northern extremity," he doubtless refers to the land in Central America, called by the Nephites "desolation," and upon Spanish maps called Desaldo, which means desolation.

A writer who has been painstaking in the matter arranges a list as follows:

Book of Mormon 1830.	Lately found.
Nephites.	Neophites.
Laman.	Laman.
Manti.	Manti.
Cumeni.	Cuemani.
Moroni.	Morona, Maroni, Marroni.
David.	David.
Sam.	Sami.
Mulek.	Muluc.
Moron.	Moron.
Desolation.	Desaldo.

The word Muluc occurs over one dozen times in Bulletin 28, Bureau of American Ethnology, Mexican Antiquities for 1904. Bricks from Babel, page 64, says: "South America had (at the discovery) five cities with names identical with cities in Asia Minor, and North Africa." "This," says the author, "could hardly be accidental."

We can conclude that these names of cities were a remembrance of the region from whence the Book of Mormon people came.

Ezra changed the ancient names of several Bible places which had become obsolete, and substituted new names for them, by which they were called. See Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, p. 522.

Elder Traum ought to know that the present Candia was the New Testament "Crete," the city of the Cretans, of whom Paul quotes one of their prophets as saying that "Cretans are always liars, evil beasts, etc." The New Testament Crete was the old Testament Caphtor; its people now are Candians, they were Cretans; Cretans were Cherethite; Cherethites were Philistines; Philistines were Captorium. (See Researches in Archaeology in Sunday School Journal, and Bible Student's Magazine, February, 1901.) So Crete has a history, and archaeology finds interesting antiquities there. But note the changes right where civilization has been perpetuated. Names drop out of sight and new ones are coined to suit changed conditions. Different names for the same city or people are quite common occurrences. Jerusalem has been called Jebus, or Jebusi; then Salem, then it was called Ariel; and finally Jerusalem. The city of Dan was first called Laish (Judges 18). New York was originally called Amsterdam; the town in France formerly called Havre Mart was changed to Havre de Grace. Why, according to Traum's test of topography, the Bible, the United States History, with that of France, goes where the "woodbine twineth."

The Book of Mormon stands out yet in all the majesty of truth, and because we can, and have done more than he required, the record is not a myth!

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

LOSING MANY ELDERS.

From a letter received some time ago we learn that Elder Frank Gray, of London, and recently editor of Canadian Mirror, with his wife, is leaving London for Toronto. This will be a gain for Toronto, but a loss for London. London has been losing her elders in various ways for the past few years. Death claimed Elders R. B. Howlett and A. E. Mortimer, while Elder T. R. Seaton moved to Winnipeg and Elder Samuel Pope to New Westminster, in British Columbia; and now Elder Gray, who was ordained less than a year ago, goes to Toronto. This leaves but two elders in London Branch now, Elders W. I. Fligg and G. H. Henley. We had almost forgotten the removal of Elder R. C. Evans, bishop, from London to Toronto about two years ago; but then we usually think of him as belonging to Canada as a whole, rather than to any one particular branch.

AN ASSET OF FORTY MILLIONS.

Did you ever stop to think what the Saints of Canada are worth to the church as a financial asset? There are over five thousand Saints in Canada—all over eight years of age. We will suppose that four thousand of these are workers and that their earnings average five hundred dollars per year. This sum represents an investment of ten thousand dollars at five per cent. Then if each person be worth ten thousand dollars, four thousand will be worth forty million dollars; and their total earnings will amount to two million dollars. What would tithing on two million dollars amount to? Reckon it up for yourself. This is reckoned on the basis of an average wage of five hundred dollars per year, but if you think that either too high or too low, choose your own figure and reckon it, and in any case you will arrive at the conclusion that the Canadian districts are a valuable asset to the church; and further, that when all pay their tithing the church will not lack for financial means to carry on its work.

OTHERS VISIT CUMORAH HILL.

Parties of Canadian Saints have visited Cumorah Hill each summer for quite a number of years and have been inspired and encouraged by a short time spent upon the scene of the coming forth of the "marvelous work." We have not yet heard of any party of our people visiting the sacred spot this fall, but the following clipping from the London Free Press, of November 1, tells of others who are taking an interest in the birthplace of the most famous book of the nineteenth century:

A party of three hundred Latter Day Saints from Salt Lake City, Utah, arrived at Palmyra this morning in a special train. The pilgrims were taken out to Mormon Hill, where a special religious service was held, the Salt Lake City tabernacle choir of two hundred voices rendering a number of selections. Returning from the sacred mount, from the bowels of which Joseph Smith dug the golden plates from which the Book of Mormon was written, the party viewed the Chapman farm, which was the boyhood home of Joseph Smith. This farm was recently purchased by the Mormons, and it is said that a memorial building is shortly to be erected there.

A CATHOLIC, LIBEL, AND FREEMASONRY.

That a Roman Catholic may rightfully seek, in the civil courts, redress for damages occasioned by the creation of the suspicion in the public mind that he is a promoter of an organization partaking of the spirit of freemasonry, is the ruling of Justice Weir at Montreal, recently. This the result of an action for five thousand dollars damages brought by M. Girard, author of Marie Calumet, against Dame Henrietta Brimell and the publishers of La Verite, because of an alleged libelous article which stigmatized the "alliance Francaise," in which the author was interested, as a dangerous association, comprising among its members Catholics, Protestants, Masons, and even Musselmans. If this decision that it is actionable to link Catholics with Masons is sustained. It will give hope of redress to others who have suffered as a result of being associated in the public mind with another organization of like unsavory reputation.

METHODISTS VOTING ON UNION.

Methodist congregations throughout Canada are being sent ballot slips upon which to record their vote on the question of church union with the Congregationalists and Presbyterians. Only one question is asked, and that is: "Are you in favor of organic union with the other churches?" The question must be answered "Yes" or "No." There are four ballots. One is for the official board, another for church members, one for those under eighteen years of age, and the fourth for adherents contributing to the support of the church. It is expected that a complete return may be compiled next spring. The conferences have already signified their stand by a vote of ten and six to one in favor of union.

NEW ROMAN CARDINALS.

The pope will create a large number of cardinals at the consistory to be held on November 27. Three of these will be Americans, Archbishop Farley, of New York; Archbishop O'Connell, of Boston; and Mgr. Falconio, who is a naturalized American citizen. The Giornale D'Italia calls attention to the fact that after the next consistory the sacred college will be composed of thirty-two Italian cardinals, and thirty-one foreign cardinals, which points to the possibility of the election of a foreign pope. The Tribuna points out the preponderance of American cardinals, as compared with Canada, which is still without a red hat, and with Latin America, with only one cardinal.

LUTHERAN COLLEGE AT WATERLOO.

The growth of Lutheranism in Canada has been such that they have found it necessary to establish a college in the town of Waterloo for the education of young men desiring to enter the ministry. On the 30th of October this seminary was formally opened and dedicated in the presence of four thousand people. The impressive ceremony of dedicating the new seminary was conducted by Rev. E. Hoffman, D. D., president of the institution. The site is surrounded by a spacious campus and is an ideal spot. The new institution starts with five students, but this number is expected to be increased very substantially by the beginning of the New Year. This event marks an epoch in the progress of Canada Synod of the Lutheran Church.

R. J. FARTHING, Corresponding Editor.

A Word from Port Elgin, Ontario.

I was baptized on December 27, 1908, and I can not express the goodness that I have received and the divine assurance I am receiving daily. I am proud to feel that God in his tender mercy should ever pardon as vile a sinner as I have been, and that he should grant to such a one so much of his Holy Spirit as I have received, by which I hope to always be guided. In sickness I have been wonderfully blessed through keeping his commandments, even by calling on the elders to anoint and administer to me. He has many times raised me from a bed of affliction. On one occasion I was afflicted with a severe headache, and being alone these words came to me, "What the Lord has blessed is surely good." I arose and anointed my head with olive oil, lay down on the bed, and in a very few minutes the pain left. This was another evidence of the fulfillment of God's promises to his children.

Again, on the 14th of this month, owing to some repairing having to be done to the machinery in the part of the factory where I work, the hands were given a half day off. After dinner I took a walk to the lake shore, where I spent most of the afternoon in the sunshine, reading. Returning home, I enjoyed myself reading until late. On Sunday morning I had what I believe to be a vision. I saw Christ alive, and talked with him. He told me I would not die. I saw him dead and lying in the coffin, also saw him lowered into the grave and buried, and I beheld him in his resurrected form, encircled by many whom I knew. Then I awoke. I believe I was touched with the divine power, which gives me more fully the understanding of the words spoken by the Master, as recorded in Luke 13:32.

One night, a few months ago, I dreamed of talking to a woman upon the gospel. She became very angry. Feeling very sad I turned to walk away, but I discovered Sr. White, of Owen Sound, standing near. I said to her that Christ would not come the way some people expected him. The Latter Day Saints' Church appears clear to my vision as I see the world to-day in its self-righteousness thinking they can get to heaven by mere belief and scoffing at the commandments of God as taught by the Latter Day Saints from the Bible. So I realize full well the statement made by the poet:

"Education gained at college
Can not equal that self knowledge
Which by experience we gain
Through hardest labor, grief, and pain."

In another dream I saw two men, clothed in white, holding two large, white gates open. While I was standing a short distance away I saw wild animals of different kinds and sizes come rushing out. A large crowd of people on either side fled while I gazed on the beautiful sight. One large animal came running up, which I took to be a wolf. It played with me like a dog would play with a child, while I petted it and stroked down its long hair. I hope this will be of comfort to the true and faithful, and also a warning to those who are seeking this world's goods and the comforts and pleasures which may be derived therefrom.

Feeling my weakness and inability to serve God in an acceptable manner, I beg an interest in the prayers of the Saints, realizing that the prayers of the righteous availeth much. I trust that no matter what may become of this body, my spirit may live on and be free from sin.

A brother in the faith,
ADAM HAMILTON.

PORT ELGIN, ONTARIO, October 27, 1911.

Manitowaning, Manitoulin Island.

As this place has not been heard from for some time, I thought it would not be out of place for me to pen a few lines and let the Saints know how we are getting along on the Manitoulin Island. As we have stated at other times, the members of our branch are very widely scattered; so that though we have fifty-six names on our branch record, there are only about a dozen who live near enough to attend church regularly; and we have been living several years in this deplorable condition.

However, as a branch we are still trying to hold on as best we can; we keep up our Sunday school, prayer meeting, and preaching services each week. We had struggled along under these trying circumstances, not hearing a sermon except our own for over a year, till about the 25th of last September, when our hearts were made glad by the coming of Elder D. D. Smith, our worthy missionary.

He preached for a week in a manner that cheered our hearts, inspired our minds, and made us forget our mortuary condition. He stayed about a month in this vicinity and baptized three more precious souls into the kingdom; and he left quite a number much interested. Owing to urgent circumstances he could not remain longer, having to visit Saints at Little Current and on the North Shore before going home. However, we are living in hopes that we will get him back next spring and that he will be able to make a longer stay; if so, I feel satisfied that great good will be accomplished.

I remain, yours in the great struggle for truth,
NOVEMBER 8, 1911. W. R. SMITH.

Of General Interest

Woman--As Two Men See Her.

Two Englishmen have written in verse very recently their opinions of women.

Rudyard Kipling gave to his poem the stupid refrain: "The female of the species is more deadly than the male."

The Kipling poem went nowhere in particular. The poet didn't know what he was trying to say. Female cobras, monkeys and humans were mixed up in his mind. The total result of the poem was a disagreeable impression, reflecting an egotistical, distorted mind, incapable of true appreciation or any definite conclusion. To this poem Hall Caine, the famous English writer, has replied. That answer, given to the American people through the Hearst newspapers, is published on this page, and above it is published Kipling's poem which appeared in the Ladies' Home Journal.

Our readers will study both of these poems with interest. The poem by Kipling inspires disgust rather than interest. It is the utterance of a cramped, ingrowing mind, the thought of a conceited, undeveloped man looking with contempt, and with something of the hatred of impotency upon woman—the wonderful creative force in our race. Woman has been the leader and the inspiration of man from humanity's childhood. Woman had led man from the cave and the swamp, from brutality and barbarism, to the comparative civilization of to-day. And still woman leads onward, upward, in kindness and justice, in faith, self-sacrifice and devotion, infinitely above man. Kipling, typical, intellectually, of the barbarism left behind and typical physically of the type that woman does not willingly reproduce, turns his back on woman the leader, woman the guide and inspiration. He looks back into the swamps, the jungles, and the tree tops for his "female of the species," and he writes himself down a man unworthy of woman and incapable of understanding her, in a poem that is vicious and stupid, a mirror of masculine egotism in the meanest form.

Hall Caine writes with the best of intentions, but with all his good will he does not tell all the truth about woman or give her her real place in the world.

Hall Caine's poem, written for the Hearst newspapers, is an expression of the fine feeling of the average man who does not understand woman, for the very good reason that all men are unworthy of her and incapable of understanding her. He describes woman, first, as "Scapegoat to the male." Second, he describes her as "Temptress to the male." Third, he describes her as "Slave mate to the male." Finally as very great praise, Hall Caine describes woman as "The mother of the man."

Like many others, Hall Caine thinks about the best thing you can say for woman is that she is "The mother of the man."

That is very feeble praise indeed, taking the man of to-day as a sample. Woman would deserve sincere pity if she had to be spoken of only as "The mother of the man," as men are to-day.

Woman is the creative half of the human race. She has for her endowment qualities that must be transmitted and intensified in order that humanity may continue its upward march, from the swamps of brutality, vice and cruelty, to the magnificent heights upon which this race is destined to dwell.

Woman is the mother of the man of to-day. She was the mother of the cave man, the mother of the first wild, half human brute in whose brain consecutive thought was born on this earth. Woman through the ages has given birth to these men, making them better by the power of her own goodness. She has held in her arms the sons of these men, she has whispered kindness, affection and unselfishness to them, year after year, through the thousands of centuries in which painfully, in agony and sorrow, she has done her work, the creation of the human race. Woman is the mother of the man of yesterday, the mother of the man of to-day, not much better than the cave man. She will be the mother of the man in that glorious to-morrow, when there will exist on earth a human race, worthy of its women and of its mothers.

What Hall Caine forgets to say and what Kipling never thought is the fact that woman is the mother of the race, she is the mother of all the mothers. The mothers are the hope. Theirs is the character, the devotion. In the calm patient face of a good woman you may read the future of humanity. Through endless sufferings, experiment, gentleness, patience and devotion, women will create a race by whom the work of God will be done, and the will of God carried out; we are taught that it is on earth as in heaven.—New York American.

Thanksgiving.

I thank thee, Lord, for the blue of thy sky,
For the green of thy woods and fields;
For the river that ripples and sparkles by,
And the harvest the brown earth yields.
For the birds that sing and the flowers that bloom,
And the breath of the cooling breeze—
Thou hast made them all so beautiful,
I thank thee, Lord, for these!
I thank thee, Lord, for a brain to think,
And a will to dare and do;
For a heart which may give my fellow-man
A love which is strong and true;
For a spirit that is but the breath of God,
And is new when the world is old—
I yield them all to thyself, dear Lord,
They are thine to have and hold.

Only use them, Lord, in thy shaping hand
For an end that thine eye can see,
As day by day thou art fashioning
Thy child to be more like thee.
Let thine image shine from my faithful heart
As a light over life's rough way,
That others may find it an easier path,
And be led to a perfect day.

The Invitation.

It was one of those little German churches. It was small, perhaps only about six pews on one side of the aisle and six upon the other. The congregation was poor and ignorant. They were just the farmers and the country people who lived in the little houses in the fields round about.

There was one poor man there who was very poor and ignorant. He could neither read nor write. He could understand hardly anything which was read or said in the service. The service was above his head; there were too many long words in it. Even the reading of the Scripture was generally more than he could fully understand. Yet he loved to come to church because he loved the Lord Jesus Christ and felt nearer to him there than he did anywhere else. It was Easter Day and the minister was reading out of the Gospel of John how the Savior stood upon the shore and cried to the disciples, "Children, have ye anything to eat?" Now this was the only thing the countryman understood in the whole service. But this picture sank into his soul:—that his Savior was hungry, was standing before him and asking for something to eat. He sat there all through the service feeling so sad, and wishing that he could show his love for his Lord.

At last out of his full heart he prayed and said: "My dear Savior Jesus Christ! Didst thou indeed so ask for bread? Oh, if thou art hungry do come to my house next Sunday noon and be my guest! I am, thou knowest, only a poor, poor man, who can not prepare any rich feast for thee. Yet thou hast always shown thy love for the poor and for the sinners. Because thou art so gracious, thou wilt not despise my home and my table!"

He went home that day and never said a word to any human being about his invitation. But every morning that week he folded his hands and looking up to Christ he prayed his prayer.

"Lord Jesus Christ,
Come, be my guest!"

When Saturday came, he got up in the morning filled with great expectation. He said to his wife, "Come, let us make our house as clean and beautiful as we can! Let us take the best chicken in the farmyard and prepare it for to-morrow's dinner. Let the children go out to the meadow and gather a bunch of wild flowers for the center of the table! For, do you know, I have invited a noble guest for dinner to-morrow! Let us dress our children in their best that day! Let us make the house all clean and neat! For we must receive such a guest with all the best we have!"

Then the children began to dance around in glee, asking all together, "Who is it, father?" But the mother looked seriously at him and said: "What have you done, father? Have you asked a real gentleman to our house for dinner?"

The father only smiled, and said nothing. But his whole face glowed with secret joy when he thought of the surprise his dear wife and children were to have upon the morrow. On Sunday the church bells called them all to church. Through the whole service the father prayed in his heart his prayer over and over again,

"Lord Jesus Christ,
Come, be my guest!"

When the service was over, almost before the rest of the congregation were out of the doors of the church, the mother was already standing at the stove in her house, seeing if the chicken were really tender and the sauce properly mixed. Yes, almost before the clock struck twelve, she began to wonder why the guest had not arrived. The chicken turned out to be tender, the sauce was rich and thick and good. The table was covered with a white cloth and laid, the bunch of wild flowers was placed in the center of it. Everything was now ready. The clock struck one. The guest did not arrive. She became anxious.

"Tell me, my dear husband, why does your guest delay so long his coming? The sauce is just ready. The children are as hungry as they can be. And still there is no guest to be seen. Who is this 'gentleman'? I am almost afraid that you have forgotten to ask him!"

But the father signed to his children to take their places round the table, leaving the best chair vacant still.

"Don't be afraid," he said, "he will be here in a moment!"

Then he folded his hands and asked grace. He asked the same grace as he always asked, using the same words as are used all over Germany for the blessing upon food:

"Lord Jesus Christ, come be our guest, Share these thy gifts, and make them blessed!"

Just as he said these words a knock came at the door. An old, old man looked in through the door timidly and said in the most lamentable voice of poverty and need, "God bless you! Have pity on me. I ask you just for a crust of bread. All day long I have been wandering around in my hunger. Perhaps you could spare me just a bite of bread!"

The father hurried to the door, and taking the poor old man by the arm, he said, "Come, dear Visitor! How long we have been waiting for you! See, your chair has been ready for you ever so long! Come, help yourself! You haven't come too late." And so he led the poor old man with shining eyes to the place of honor at the table.

"And, mother, see!" he said, "See, children! Last Sunday I invited our Savior to be our guest to-day. I knew well that when one invited Jesus, he will never pass by on the other side. Oh, children, in the poor man to-day you see our Savior, Jesus Christ!"

WEBB CITY, MISSOURI, November 13, 1911.

Editors Herald: Just closed a very interesting two-week meeting at Joplin; fairly good attendance, and two baptisms. One was an aged Seventh Day Adventist lady; the other the youngest son of Sr. Hayton. That makes the family all in the kingdom.

I had splendid liberty, and the Saints cared for the speaker in their usual way. More invitations to visit than I could fulfill.

Several more are very near the kingdom. The branch is taking on new interest of late, under the leadership of our old war horse, Henry Smart.

I will commence a meeting at Webb City. The Saints have billed the town with attractive posters 'n many of the store windows.

HENRY SPARLING.

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA, November 12, 1911.

Dear Herald: As I am in Indianapolis and am not able to find our church, will ask you to inform me if there is a church here, and where it is located. I have been here in Indiana five or six weeks, and am getting homesick to go to church. There is a large opening for our work, as there are none of my folks who have heard the true gospel; and they are taken up with what little I can explain. So if some one could come, we could reap a good harvest here, and it would do me much good.

My brother and his son, and son-in-law, and their families all love the way, of which I told them. I had a chance to defend Joseph Smith in a church crowd. The minister's own audience said I talked better scripture than he did, and they laughed at him. He was a Campbellite. If one of our elders could come, we could have a reaping for the Lord.

Hoping to hear soon, I remain,

FARMINGTON, IOWA, November 13, 1911.

Dear Brother: I am sorry to have to report the death of another of our good sisters, Sr. Alice Jacobs, who will be sadly missed by the Keokuk Branch, and the elders who labor there. She deserves a far more laudable obituary than we can give; but there is a record in the books of God where full record is made, and full justice will be given. Till then we can wait.

The work where I have been of late, at Osterdock, Maquoketa, Anamosa, and Davenport, is in good condition, all things considered; but anxious for and needing more labor. Brn. Hills, Wildermuth, and Turner have done good work in that field, viz: the Eastern Iowa District.

JAMES MCKIERNAN.

WREN, OREGON, November 8, 1911.

Editors Herald: I have been a reader of the HERALD for several years, and, being one of the isolated members, it is a welcome visitor every week. I have been in western Oregon for about thirteen years, and during that time I have seen two of the missionaries, Bro. S. D. Condit about three years ago, and recently Bro. J. D. Stead, who held a few meetings in schoolhouses in my neighborhood, and removed some prejudice.

It is hard to do any missionary work in this part of the country, as it is sparsely settled, and as a rule the people have very little time or desire to consider their spiritual welfare. My desire is to press onward, and be faithful to Him who has done so much for us.

OLIVER JOHNSON.

GILLESPIEVILLE, OHIO, September 10, 1911.

Dear Saints: I have listened to some grand sermons in the last year by R. C. Russell, O. B. Thomas, N. L. Booker, A. B. Kirkendall, and J. M. Hooper. I live sixteen miles from a branch and appreciated them.

Some one has been sending me the HERALD and the Exponent. I don't know who they are, but they have my sincere thanks, and I have appreciated their weekly visits. I don't think everyone appreciates them as do we isolated ones. My health is poor, and I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may get strength to do my work.

I lost my only daughter April 27, 1911. She will be remembered by the Saints as Miss Bertha Pratt—married Harvey McWhorter. We sadly miss her, but our loss is her gain. It seemed to me that the expression of her face after death was enough to convince that she was at peace with God.

The brethren mentioned above have indeed done a noble work that will long be remembered. Bro. Hooper, of Iowa, was the means of convincing one head of a family. It does me good to see this glorious work roll on. I thank the dear brethren and sisters that have written to me, for your letters were a feast to me.

With best wishes to all,

SAREPTA R. PRATT.

PERU, NEBRASKA, November 7, 1911.

Dear Saints: I live on Bro. W. M. Self's farm; it is five miles from Brownville. I am the only member of the church here, the nearest Saint being about five miles away.

I am thankful to my heavenly Father for permitting me to come under the gospel, and for his wonderful love to me, the many demonstrations of his power in me from time to time.

The few Saints of Brownville got together and organized a Sunday school at that place, myself as superintendent, Sr. S. Nace as assistant. We have in all fourteen in the school, and I ask the Saints to pray for us and the school that it may be successful. Let us pray the Lord of the harvest to send the needed help. We have preaching once a week by Bro. W. M. Self. I ask the Saints to remember us, that we may be faithful wherever we may be.

NOEL THORNTON.

BOURBON, MISSOURI, November 7, 1911.

Dear Brothers and Sisters: I feel a desire to write to the pages of the dear old HERALD that we have loved so long and still love so dearly as one of the safeguards of our home; for we may be ever so badly discouraged, and things seem to go ever so wrong, but when we take up the HERALD or the Ensign and commence reading the good letters and inspired articles, we feel glad in our hearts and take fresh courage. We could not do without either of them. I know this is the work of God; but oh, how hard Satan does work on the hearts of the children of men to draw them away from this glorious work! I have seen his work until I feel like crying out, O Lord, how long wilt thou suffer these things to be so? It hurts me to see Satan's work in the outside world; but,

dear Saints, when he gets in the camp of Zion he is hard to handle. How careful we should live, so as to keep him from among us. How truly has James said, The tongue is a fire and setteth the course of nature, and it is set on fire of hell. (James 3:6.) How careful we should be, and how slow to speak in those cases. Let us ask of God for his wisdom and patience. Let us be willing to suffer wrong to get Satan conquered. Oh, if the veil could be lifted, if only for one second, to show us how closely we should be joined together as children of God; for we can not serve God and mammon.

I feel my nothingness in the sight of my great Master, and I ask an interest in your prayers for God's work in this place, that we may be renewed before the Lord.

I am going to ask a favor: I have a daughter living in Indianapolis, Indiana, who wants to find out where the branch is in that place. Please write to me, as she does not take the HERALD. I believe if she finds the Saints it will terminate in good, as she and her husband are both members and very young. The Saints may write me at Bourbon, Missouri.

With a prayer for the building up of God's work,

C. T. WHITESIDE.

TORONTO, CANADA, November 14, 1911.

Dear Herald: One day during the past week, while searching in the public library for a volume not in my own possession, from which to verify some figures for a scientific article I have in preparation, my eyes alighted, both with pleasure and surprise, upon a certain little journal or magazine that looked wonderfully like a certain little valued journal which,—strange to say,—used to find its way weekly across the Atlantic Ocean, to a spot within the "shadow of Bow-Bells," where a certain obscure astronomical writer used to receive it with gladness, and hail it with joy!

Upon a closer inspection, I found that this little periodical, in the midst of a row of "new light," theosophical and ethical magazines of one kind and another,—bore the well-known and now worldwide inscription of "THE SAINTS' HERALD; the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ or Latter Day Saints."

The sensation that filled my bosom at this sight was akin to the feelings of some brother or sister from the far-off wilds of Iowa or Missouri, suddenly beholding,—among the vast crowds leaving Saint Paul's Cathedral, or Westminster Abbey,—some dear familiar face from his own old country farm, or village homestead, and looking utterly lost and bewildered among these new, strange, and brilliant surroundings. How eagerly he rushes forward to grasp the dear, old, familiar, but perchance horny and toil-worn hand, with a grasp that says, "All the crowds of London and Westminster shall never part us again!"

Saints of the most high God! Do we in any adequate degree either appreciate our beloved HERALD, or realize the new-born mercies that literally shower upon our pathway from day to day?

One "sweetly solemn thought comes to me o'er and o'er," as I pen these concluding lines; and it is this: When, in past years and in bygone times I have been penning one of my astronomical articles for your widely-read pages, I have been compelled to go over my figures again and again, amazed at the truly marvelous things that those figures told me; and fearful lest I had made a mistake. But what, oh, what must be the awful power and unutterable wisdom of the Chief Astronomer on High, who can not only perform such marvelous feats in the higher mathematics that no human mind, even of our most learned scientists and astronomers, can follow Him, but created and controls more than 7,963,785,-864,599,000,000,000,000 of stars! Many millions of them vastly larger, brighter, and more resplendent than our sun in the firmament of yonder glorious sky!

Can we not, then, exclaim in adoring rapture and admiration:

"Great God! how infinite art thou!
What worthless worms are we!
Let the whole race of creatures bow,
And bend the adoring knee!"

"Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised; and his greatness is unsearchable!" but "Man is like to vanity: his days are as a shadow that passeth away."—Psalm 144:4, and 145: 3.

F. R. TUBB.

BIG SPRINGS, NEBRASKA, November 12, 1911.

Dear Herald: I love to read your valuable columns every week, and the letters always cheer my heart and cause me to love the church of Christ more and more. How I long to be situated so I can have the privilege of attending the services of some branch! so I take this means of inquiring of the Saints of a place somewhere in the bounds of Zion where there is a branch of the church near enough to attend that can be rented. I would like to rent for a year or two, as it is impossible to sell my land here at present for what it is worth on account of two failures of crops for lack of rain.

I own eighty acres of good table-land, and was offered thirty dollars an acre for it last spring, but held it for thirty-five dollars. If any of the Saints can find a farm for me to rent for even a year, I would gladly leave here, as I have lost all confidence in this western country, and do not care to venture more feed and seed in order to put in another crop here. I have not so much as got my seed back on eighty acres of small grain in two years now.

I am forty years old and have a family. Wife and I and our two oldest boys, though only eight and nine, are members of the church. The dear little boys were baptized by Bro. J. E. Kelley at the Bayard reunion, at Bayard, Nebraska, this fall. We drove there and attended the reunion, a distance of one hundred miles, but were amply repaid for the effort.

I would like to know if one could secure a homestead or a relinquishment reasonable within the stakes of Zion, as I have never used my homestead right. I hope to receive a favorable reply, and I will add my testimony and close for this time. We are trusting the Lord and he has cared for us during failures and disappointments, and has always provided us with the necessities of life, for which we are very thankful.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion,
We are yours in gospel bonds,
IRVING ANG JENNIE SCUDDER.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, November 11, 1911.

Editors Saints' Herald: I would like very much to get in communication with the dentists of the church, as I believe it would be a very good thing if we as the dentists of the church would formulate a plan to enlighten our church, especially the children, about the care of their teeth. There seems to be a nation-wide if not a world-wide movement along this line, and as I do not care to assume the responsibility of writing anything pertaining to it, I take this means of finding out the names and addresses of my fellow-practitioners in the church, if not out of harmony with your opinion in regard to the matter. Will you please insert some sort of a notice in the HERALD, and also let me know what you think of this?

Earnestly yours,

DR. W. E. STOFF.

Correction.

Will you please correct the following errors in conference minutes of Gallands Grove District, in HERALD of November 8, 1911. Time of holding next conference should be February 10, 1912, instead of October 14, 1912, also temple fund on hand should be fifty dollars instead of fifty cents.

Respectfully,

DELOIT, IOWA, November 13, 1911. MRS. C. J. HUNT.

News From Missions

Oklahoma.

The man Burris who said, "the Mormons had undermined his work at Weatherford, Oklahoma," should have said the Latter Day Saints, and he was unable to cope with them, so he sends for the man Boles to drive them out. We have some good friends there, and I believe we will still have when Boles learns the same lesson that Burris has learned. Their old fighting methods are repugnant to good thinking people. If they have anything good the people want it, but they demonstrated the fact they did not have the soul-satisfying gospel, so the Saints hold that fort at present and I trust we will when Boles has done his unchristian work.

The needs of the work are great, if we are to occupy as the Lord is now opening the minds of the people for the angel's message. Our work is in so great demand we ought as a people to put forth every possible effort to spread the gospel. We are in need of a cooperative effort; there are a few Saints paying tithing in the district, and many are not. I know times are hard, and they are likely to get no better until the Saints learn and do their duty toward the Lord. Bro. Yates drew a good picture of our needs in a recent letter to the church papers. Saints, please remember Bro. Case is still Bishop's agent for the Western District, and his home and mission address is Kingfisher, Oklahoma.

There are more people being baptized in the State than any previous year, and the increasing demands and calls for the preaching of the word never were so frequent as now in this mission. Thirty were baptized at Calumet and more are to follow there if we can possibly get to them to do more preaching.

Bro. Edgar Smith and the writer are here in the little town of Seiling, preaching to a full house. The contrast in the feeling of the people here is vast to when Bro. Crawley met D. B. Ray and the writer met Clark Braden. Now the Christian evangelist is asking us to hold a union meeting with him, they are not very popular now, and the Latter Day Saints can get the crowd and hold them. Interest is fine.

Exactness in little duties is a wonderful source of cheerfulness.—F. W. Faber.

A true friend is always useful but we should beware of thinking of our friends as brother members of a mutual benefit association, with its periodical demands and threats of suspension for nonpayment of dues.—H. Clay Trumbull.

The passport to your fellowship should be honesty of purpose and a devotion to the highest interest of your profession, and these you will find widely diffused, sometimes apparent only when you get beneath the crust of a rough exterior.—Dr. William Osler.

Time brings only one regret—that he had not more joy in the things that were, more belief, more patience, more love, more knowledge of the way things work out, more willingness to help toward the final result.—Jennie June.

News From Branches

Boston.

As I pick up the Herald from time to time and see news items from every branch under the sun, from Maine to California, and note that Boston is not among them, I am reminded that we lost our correspondent, along with a good many other things, when Mary O. Lewis decided to give up the varied positions of private secretary to the treasurer of the board of directors to Andover Seminary, branch clerk, district assistant superintendent of Sunday school, local vice president of Religio, teacher in Sunday school and Religio, auditor and correspondent for church papers, to accept the one and only position of being a helpmate and companion to Bro. Frank Mesle, a Latter Day Saint in good standing, well reported of by his own people and his own countrymen, pastor of the Niagara Branch, and favorably looked upon by those who were permitted the pleasure of witnessing the very pretty and impressive ceremony that made them man and wife, and demonstrating how fascinatingly alluring can that goal be made which sooner or later claims all our young aspirants. I shall not attempt details at this late day, but must say that it was by far the prettiest, daintiest wedding I was ever permitted to witness. Mary was back to see us in September, spending two weeks among friends and relatives, who are always glad to see her, for few have left us so universally loved and esteemed as our Marie, who though loaded with duties, found time to call on sick and afflicted and be a friend to those who needed one.

The sisters of the branch gave a supper October 26 to help out on the reunion debt; a sum of $20.50 was raised for that purpose, and a good time enjoyed by all present.

M. C. Fisher has purchased a home at 7 Miner Street, and E. H. Fisher at 8 Lee Street, Somerville. The last of the summer vacationers are back now, and our fall work has regularly begun.

We entertained the district Sunday school and Religio convention May 11, 12. Our membership is so scattered that it seems advisable to entertain our visiting guests in the church basement, but while some do not enjoy eating in the church, we are obliged to do the best we can and let that suffice, having demonstrated the fact that it is the only way we can handle the influx of visitors and be able to get anything from the convention ourselves. Convention was well attended and a general good time enjoyed.

The branch held successful rally day exercises October 22, throughout the various departments. We had several visiting members from different points in the district; noticeably among them to be mentioned were Bro. Albert Hoxie and his bride, who honored us with but a too brief stay, en route for Philadelphia from Cape Cod, where they spent their "honeymoon." District Sunday School Superintendent Lucy Sears, Assistant Superintendent E. A. Fox, Vice President of district Religio Frank S. Dobbins, and wife, were also present. Doubtless our president would have been here also had she not had her hands full already caring for a big baby boy.

Sr. Ora V. Holmes, of Providence, is now stopping in Somerville; that is, she is employed in Boston and has rooms with Sr. Lewis, as is also Sr. Clara Johnson, who is recovering from a prolonged illness.

Bro. U. W. Greene is home for a few days; he is feeling and looking well in body.

There is no sickness in the branch and conditions are favorable for a good winter's work.

There is strong talk of some of our members going to western Canada in the spring; but this may not materialize, although Bro. Owen Newcombe says he is going somewhere, whether the rest do or not.

Election of officers at the last business meeting made M. C. Fisher pastor of the branch again; A. L. Sanford, presiding priest; O. L. Newcombe, teacher, and George Carter, deacon.

Missionary work has been carried on with a degree of success during the summer months by our city missionary, Ralph W. Farrell; over twelve hundred have been warned, at least in part, though no immediate fruit appears as yet. Street preaching in our city is a new feature here, but several of the young sisters have helped valiantly with their talents of music and song, to attract the masses who go back and forth interested in about everything except the gospel of the kingdom.

The Religio is presided over by Sr. Rena Rich; and Sunday school by W. A. Sinclair, M. D.

Elder H. J. Davison has been home for a few days, but left November 1, 1911, for California, where he has gone for his health's sake. He was unfitted for preaching by reason of throat and lung trouble that made a change in climate necessary, for a time at least. We trust the change will be beneficial.

Ministerial reports were read and accepted from Elders G. W. Knowlton, J. J. Billings, H. R. Eaton, J. H. Robbins, Moody P. Eaton, J. C. Farnfield. Statistical reports were read from Stonington, Little Deer Isle, and Mountainville. Bishop's agent H. R. Eaton reported: On hand last report, $136.75; receipts, $155.44; expended, $110; due church $182.19. District Treasurer Pearl F. Billings, reported: Balance on hand, $5.55; receipts, $18.30; expended, $14.25; balance on hand, $9.60. These reports were returned to auditing committee for signature. District treasurer authorized to purchase a record for official use. District clerk was authorized to purchase a loose-leaf system of record for district use. Motion carried that next conference be held at Stonington in May, 1912, date to be set by missionary in charge and district president. General Conference delegates chosen as follows: Elders J. C. Farnfield, U. W. Greene, George W. Knowlton, H. A. Kohler, S. O. Foss, J. J. Billings. Delegates were authorized to cast majority and minority vote in case of division. Officers chosen for six months as follows: District president, George W. Knowlton, J. J. Billings and H. R. Eaton, counselors; clerk, Wallace A. Small; treasurer, Pearl F. Billings; Bishop's agent H. R. Eaton sustained. Motion prevailed that the fund raised for the purchase of an organ be used for district expenses. Preaching by Apostle U. W. Greene, J. C. Farnfield, J. J. Billings. W. A. Small, secretary.

Convention Minutes.

EASTERN MICHIGAN.—The Zion's Religio-Literary Society of the Eastern Michigan District met in convention at Marlette, Michigan, November 3, 1911, at 9.30 a. m., with Pres. William Sage, and Apostle F. A. Smith in charge. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, William Sage; vice president, J. R. Grice; secretary, Cora Anderson; treasurer, Anna Isles; member library board, Mrs. Daniel Macgregor; superintendent of home class, Annetta Cline. The morning session was devoted to institute work. Several interesting papers on home class and good literature work were read. The next convention was left in charge of the district presidency. Cora M. Anderson, secretary.

EASTERN MICHIGAN.—The Sunday school convention of the Eastern Michigan District met at Marlette, November 3, 1911, with Superintendent James Meade and Apostle F. A. Smith in charge. The following officers were elected for the year: Superintendent, Sr. Maggie Macgregor; assistant superintendent, David Dowker; secretary, Cora M. Anderson; treasurer, James Mead; member library board, Emma Volz; home class superintendent, Elmer Peer. In the evening a joint session with the Religio was held and an appropriate address by F. A. Smith was heard. Adjourned subject to call of the superintendent. Cora M. Anderson, secretary.

WESTERN NEW YORK.—The Western New York District Sunday school convention convened October 6, 1911, at 2.30 p. m., with Saints of Niagara Falls, New York, Superintendent George Landes in charge, assisted by Brn. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Superintendent, George Landes; assistant superintendent, Noble Wilkinson, secretary, Mary L. Mesle; treasurer, Alexander Warner; member library board, William Brothers; home department superintendent, Dellis Perry. The following were appointed delegates for next General Convention: Alma Booker and wife, William Brothers and wife, A. E. Stone, H. J. Davison, Frank C. Mesle and wife, Georgie Spinnett, Margaret Batcheler, U. W. Greene, F. J. Updyke and wife, Floyd Rathbun. It was voted that we favor grading in a modified form. In the evening a joint session was held with the Religio, and a program rendered, consisting of talks by U. W. Greene, Will Landes, Mary L. Mesle, F. C. Mesle, A. E. Stone, Charles Koehler, Noble Wilkinson; papers by Sr. Alma Booker and H. J. Davison. Music was furnished by the Buffalo and Niagara Falls choirs, a chorus of Buffalo young people, solos by Anna Brothers and Lottie Breegle; violin solo by William Chown. Next convention will convene at same place as district conference, the Friday previous, at 2.30 p. m. A session of Sunday school was held on Sunday at 1.30 in charge of Superintendent George Landes and his assistant, Noble Wilkinson. About thirty-nine were present, not including off-cers; collection $1.25. Reports to be sent hereafter to Mrs. F. C. Mesle, 1560 Willow Avenue, Niagara Falls, New York.

Reunion Minutes.

FLORIDA.—Reunion of the Florida District convened at Santa Rosa Church, near Berrydale, Florida, October 28, 1911, at 10.30 a. m. Brn. C. J. Clark, F. M. Slover, and S. S. Smith were chosen to preside. The reunion committee, consisting of Brn. F. M. Slover, William West, and W. M. Hawkins were elected to choose speakers and arrange time for services. Sydney McCall was chosen secretary; Bessie West, organist; Frank West, chorister. Later Bro. R. C. Russell was also made a member of the presidency, and of the committee to choose speakers. Prayer services were held each day at 9.30 a. m. Preaching at 11 a. m. and at 7 p. m., with the exception of Tuesday morning, which was devoted to the organization of a Sunday school association. The officers elected were: Sr. C. J. Clark, superintendent; Sidney McCall, assistant; Sr. Anna Worland, secretary; E. N. McCall, treasurer, and W. A. West, librarian. Speakers were: Brn. R. C. Russell, S. S. Smith, F. M. Slover, C. J. Clark, and Albert Warr. Quite a pleasant and profitable reunion was enjoyed by all; and we were exceedingly glad to notice a number of tents on the ground. Hope there will be more next year, for we realize that this is the only way to make reunions a success in the South. We had a unanimous vote for a reunion next year. A committee of five were elected to arrange for same as to time, place, etc. Sidney McCall, secretary, Botts, Florida.

Gospel Literature Bureau.

Bro. Harvey Sandy, 1007 Vine Street, Kansas City, Missouri, has been appointed superintendent of the Gospel Literature Bureau, to succeed Joseph A. Ferris who was obliged to resign because of change of employment. We have full confidence in Bro. Sandy's ability and worthiness and bespeak for him the kindly cooperation of all district and local superintendents. Bro. Harvey is very anxious to continue the good work of the department and its importance justifies the best efforts of all concerned.

Very respectfully,

J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

Graceland College.

"To the Board of Trustees: Your committee, to whom was referred the matter of jurisdiction of students living outside of the college premises, recommend the adoption of the following:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this board, that the jurisdiction of the college extends to every enrolled student.

"That every student is amenable to the college for his conduct, while a student.

"That the college has the right to discipline any student for conduct and behavior, detrimental to the best interests of the institution.

"That the right of jurisdiction is the same, whether the student resides on the college premises, in a private family, or in his own home.

"Resolved further, That no student addicted to the use of tobacco or intoxicants, who shall not cease such use within thirty days after his admission, shall be eligible to residence upon the college premises.

"Nor shall such student be eligible to membership in the college, unless he shall cease such use within three months of enrollment.

"Provided, That for the year 1911-12, these rules shall take effect upon publication, and the time shall be extended accordingly."

The above resolutions were adopted by the Board of Trustees of Graceland College at their regular meeting, November 10, 1911.

A. CARMICHAEL, Chairman.
S. A. BURGESS, Secretary.

WEEDMARK.—At Lamoni, Iowa, November 9, 1911, Bro. Nathan Weedmark. He was born in Leeds County, Carlton Township, Ontario, May 19, 1832, making his earth life 79 years, 5 months, and 21 days. Baptized at Harwich, Ontario, November 4, 1871, by John H. Lake. Was twice widowed, and by these marriages the father of twelve children, six of whom having passed on before, the other six were in attendance at the funeral. Was united in marriage August 9, 1899, to Sr. Ellen Cook, who with his six children, twelve grandchildren, and nine great-grandchildren, are left to mourn the departure of a kind husband and father, and a faithful disciple of the Lord. Elder John Smith was in charge of the funeral service, the prayer at the home was by Elder Joseph R. Lambert, and the sermon at the Brick Church by R. M. Elvin from John 11: 25. Prayer at the church and benediction, as also the prayer at the grave, by the president. Interment in Rose Hill.

JACOBS.—Sr. Alice Jacobs, wife of Mr. H. R. Jacobs, of 1502 Timea Street, Keokuk, Iowa, November 6, 1911. She was born May 3, 1844, at Westfield, Norfolkshire, England. With her parents she came to Keokuk in 1854. She was baptized April 6, 1873, at Plano, Illinois, by Joseph Smith. On May 3, 1882, she was married to Mr. Henry R. Jacobs; being his second wife, she became a mother indeed to his children, and they loved and revered her as though she were their own mother. She and Mr. Jacobs kept open door for the elders, and she was one of the mainstays of the work in that branch. For years she had been afflicted with asthma, and at times was a great sufferer; but her place of worship, in the Sunday school or church auxiliaries, was never vacant, when she could consistently attend. Funeral services were held at the home at 2 p. m., November 9, 1911, Elder James McKiernan in charge, assisted by Rev. R. B. Foster. Interment in Oakland Cemetery.

DERENZY.—Lydia Arleta, baby daughter of William and Pearle Derenzy, died at their home at Bellaire, Michigan, on September 21, 1911, of pneumonia. She was born September 28, 1910, blessed October 3, 1910, by Elder St. John. Funeral sermon by Elder J. Goodman.

JOHNSTON.—Aaron Lawrence Johnston was born February 20, 1851, at Toronto, Clinton County, Iowa. Died November 1, 1911, at Maquoketa, Iowa. He was baptized by John Heide, September 17, 1911, and was joyous in the gospel. He leaves a wife who is nearly blind to mourn his death, besides one sister and three brothers. Funeral sermon at the house by Elder John Heide; burial in the Esgate Cemetery. He had always lived near Maquoketa; had been a member of the Adventist Church for years, but of later years dropped out and clung to none at all; yet he realized the truthfulness of the gospel for some time ere he obeyed it.

The Youth's Companion in 1912.

No other paper is quite like The Youth's Companion. It is taken in half a million homes where the choice of reading is made with as much care as the choice of friends. It entertains, it satisfies the keen zest for thrilling adventure, it is rich in wit and humor, and all the while its purpose is to be to every reader a help onward—never a drag backward.

Among the contributors to the 1912 volume will be General Baden-Powell, the defender of Mafeking and founder of the Boy Scouts, Walter Camp, the celebrated football coach, Hudson Maxim, the inventor of high explosives, Governor Harmon of Ohio, Percival Lowell, the astronomer, Jacob A. Riis, Marion Harland, Harriet Prescott Spofford, Rev. Francis E. Clark, founder of the Society of Christian Endeavor, etc., etc.

The serial stories alone, which will follow one another the year through, will be worth $1.50 each when published in book form. By subscribing to The Companion you get them all and 250 other complete stories for $1.75, and the Articles, Miscellany, Boys' Page, Girls' Page, Household Page, etc., put in for good measure. Now is the time to subscribe, sending $1.75 for the 52 weekly issues of the new volume, for on January 1, 1912, the subscription price will be advanced to $2.00.

Do not forget that the new subscriber for 1912 receives free The Companion's Calendar for 1912, lithographed in ten colors and gold, and all the issues for the remaining weeks of 1911 free from the time the subscription is received.

There are no Secrets in Dietics.

Diet is the secret of Health, Strength, Beauty, Youthfulness, and Long Age. You will have no trouble at all to be in perfect health if you heed my advice as hundreds of others have through the United States. I can not recall a single individual who has followed my principles of eating the proper food but what has become a living advocate of Good Health Flour. It is so simple that, if you heed, the result is so quick that you can't help but rejoice. Good Health Flour combined with green vegetables, fresh, juicy fruit, tomatoes, act in rejuvenating manner and at the same time refine our mental faculties. This replaces the waste cell matter in the brain, nerves, muscles, bones, and teeth. Why eat white flour, a starch—lard, nuts, corn, butter, cream, producing heat and fat? Try my system for thirty days. Live on 10c per day and see the great surprise in store for you.

Editorial

A MISREPRESENTED STATEMENT.

The elders of the Utah Church in meeting the elders of the Reorganized Church in discussion, and attacking the position of the latter in regard to the Presidency and succession, are using a statement made by Elder John A. McIntosh, of the Gallands Grove District, in regard to the right and authority of persons who are connected with the so-called factions of the church. The remarks were made at a district conference held at Gallands Grove, October 25, 26, 1863, and published in the fourth volume of the SAINTS' HERALD, page 158.

Some of these elders have represented that the remark was made by Pres. Joseph Smith, president of the Reorganized Church. Pres. Joseph Smith was not present at the conference session named. There were hundreds of the church which scattered from Nauvoo, at the death of the Prophet and Patriarch, who gathered and made settlements in western Iowa, especially so north and northeast of Council Bluffs, and in Nebraska, on the west side of the Missouri River. Several minor factions of the church had started up after the death of Joseph and Hyrum; had flourished for a time, and then became disbanded. As a rule these factions insisted upon baptizing members of the old church applying for association with them.

Some of the adherents to these factions presented themselves for affiliation with the Reorganized Church, demanding as a right that they should be received upon the ordinations placed upon them in these factions, and that the work which they had done in such factions should also be acknowledged by the Reorganization, which required no rebaptism of those baptized prior to June 27, 1844, and those of whom it could be shown had been baptized by those who had held authority under the administration of the Martyrs, who were not in transgression at the time the baptisms were administered.

It was this class of men to whom the remarks of Elder John A. McIntosh, himself a member of the old church and an elder therein, is credited as having made at the conference referred to. The Reorganization did not require that those who had been baptized in the days of Joseph and Hyrum Smith should be rebaptized. Neither did they require rebaptism of those whom they could trace as having been baptized by one who held legal authority and who was not in transgression; but they refused to be bound by the baptisms and ordinations of those preaching and practicing what was contrary to the revelations of God given to the church by Joseph Smith the Seer.

The statement referred to as having been made by Elder John A. McIntosh at the conference named is as follows: "All official acts of any elder, while acting under the authority of the old church, are recognized by us as valid; but the acts of those elders who received their authority from any of the factious organizations, such as Brigham's, Brewster's, Strang's &c., &c. are not recognized by us as valid; for whenever any of those factions were organized, each member received his authority from that faction; hence whenever individuals, claiming authority under the church as organized by the first Joseph, became members of any faction, they immediately became divested of all authority except that received from the faction to which they had joined themselves. Thus when Brigham Young usurped the presidency of the church at or near Council Bluffs, the disorganization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was thereby effected, and Brigham's church was brought into existence. The same is true of all the factious organizations. Therefore from the time they set up for themselves their acts in a church capacity are spurious."—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 4, p. 158.

This was the position of an elder presiding over a district conference, but the position of the church itself will be found in the resolutions adopted April 11, 1866, and published by the church as resolutions numbers 71 and 72, in General Conference Resolutions.

"Resolved, That we recognize no other rule by which to test the validity of the baptisms of persons who have embraced the gospel, except the fruit and manifestation of the Spirit. Therefore, the question of rebaptism is a matter of conscience.

"Resolved further, That a connection with those factions during the dark and cloudy day, does not necessarily invalidate the priesthood; holding as we do, that those factions could neither confer nor take away the priesthood."

We see no vital disagreement between the intention as stated by Elder McIntosh and that expressed in the resolution, but should there be, any act of the body is greater than any integral portion of it; hence the position of the Reorganized Church is best expressed by its own action.

BISHOP R. C. EVANS' SERMONS IN PRINT.

We learn by letter from Bro. R. C. Evans that he is having forty-five of the sermons delivered by him and printed in the Toronto World during the last year published in book form. He informs us that he has already made arrangements and that the book will be ready to deliver by the middle of December. It will be 7 by 10 in size, about an inch thick, containing some four hundred pages of printed matter, in clear type on good paper, well bound, and will sell for $1.50.

Bro. Evans has long been one of the leading speakers of the church, and his sermons published in the Toronto World during the last year have probably be read by thousands of people. He went into the field while quite young in Canada, in connection with Brn. Shippy, Lake, McIntosh, and Arthur Leverton. The success of the work in Canada, especially in the province of Ontario and the Northwest has been largely due to the untiring energy and persistence of Bro. Evans as a boy and as a man. He was always ready and willing to stand in defense of the faith against all comers, and has won many signal successes in discussion against the attacks of able men from different denominations, and though some of his friends, both in the church and out, may have thought him a little harsh in some of his replies to the unwarranted abuse of those who attack the faith, his course resulted in inspiring a wholesome caution and fear upon those who otherwise would have unscrupulously attacked the faith.

Bro. Evans is now past the fiftieth year of his birth, and it may be considered that these sermons or his will be among the crowning efforts of his years of maturer thought and research. The sermons are educational and will furnish to those who read them a fund of information, in small compass, the result of Bro. Evans's effort to properly represent the acknowledged faith of others while he defended his own.

Many of those who took the World during the year past will undoubtedly secure copies when they come from the press, and probably many hundreds who did not have the opportunity to read them in the World will avail themselves of the opportunity to place in their library copies of this work.

Address R. C. Evans, 35 Huron Street, Toronto, Ontario.

MACGREGOR VERSUS THE MINISTERIAL ALLIANCE.

One more ministerial alliance has gone on record to the effect that the church divinely instituted in these last days is unchristian. The alliance at Niagara Falls has thrown down the gauntlet. Elder Daniel Macgregor picks it up and enters into the fray with vim and vigor.

The following is from the Buffalo News, November 18.

NIAGARA FALLS, November 18.—(Special).—The row in church circles, which was precipitated by the attack of Rev. U. S. Schaul, pastor of the Pierce Avenue Presbyterian Church, upon Daniel Macgregor, elder of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, has stirred up a lot of feeling in the city.

Elder Macgregor was formerly a member of the Presbyterian Church. He left that church to take up the work of the Latter Day Saints, and came to this city from Saint Clair, Michigan, to take charge of the local church. Upon his arrival Rev. Mr. Schaul had something to say from his pulpit regarding him, and this brought forth a most bitter philippic from Macgregor against Mr. Schaul and the Presbyterian Church in general, and a challenge from Mr. Macgregor to meet Mr. Schaul in debate on the subject under discussion. Back and forth these two divines bandied words until finally the International Interdenominational Ministerial Association took the matter up and adopted resolutions which were read last Sunday from every pulpit represented in the association. This resolution declared the Church of Latter Day Saints to be an unchristian organization and denounced Mr. Macgregor. There was no comment from any of the pastors, merely the reading of the resolution.

To this resolution Mr. Macgregor will make reply to-morrow from the pulpit of his church. As to his topic he makes this declaration: "Since it has pleased that Synodical Assembly, the Ministerial Alliance of Niagara Falls, to speak ex-cathedra, declaring at the last Sunday services that the Latter Day Saints do not belong to the Christian church, and since such inquisitorial decree was made in the secret chambers of the alliance aforesaid, without permitting a member of the Latter Day Saints' Church to be present to make answer for himself and his faith, I, therefore, announce that on Sunday, November 19, at 7.30 p. m., in the Saints' church, I will reply to this latest ministerial bull of excommunication and cordially invite any and all the members of that brotherly association to be present."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

MORMON CHOIR.—We note the following news item from the Kansas City Journal: "We thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet, was sung on the temple lot at Independence yesterday by the Mormon Tabernacle Choir, of Salt Lake City. The harmony floated across the streets and lots of Independence as far as the home of Joseph Smith, the prophet of the Reorganized Church. The choir was not invited to the Reorganized Church across the street, but they sang with a hearty good will on the temple lot, and it will be a long time before such music is heard there again. Then the Tabernacle Choir picked up leaves and twigs from the temple lot, and placed them away. When they left many were the lingering glances of the maidens towards the historic spot. Reverence, and not gayety, seemed to be the dominant feeling of the choir singers, the women being more impressed than the men." So far as Pres. Smith being able to hear this famous choir is concerned, we are inclined to believe the Journal reporter is making a play on sentiment. However, none is more appreciative of good singing than Pres. Smith. Just what feeling he might entertain at the thought of the followers of Brigham Young singing the song named in the press item, we can but conjecture; but of one thing we are assured, and that is that an abiding consciousness of duty done and a life well lived in his Master's cause brings to his soul sweeter music than that of voice or harp.

"Let them praise the name of the Lord: for his name alone is excellent; his glory is above the earth and heaven. He also exalteth the horn of his people, the praise of all his saints; even the children of Israel, a people near unto him."—Psalm 148: 13, 14.

HEDRICKITES.—Representatives of the faction called Hedrickites were recently in Lamoni, soliciting subscriptions for their official paper, The Evening and Morning Star. They made a house to house canvass and indulged in a number of arguments with members of the Reorganization. Is it not significant that of the churches claiming succession to the original church, the Reorganization is the only one whose record and work give Joseph Smith, jr., any standing before the world? The Utah missionaries bear a testimony to his prophetic calling and immediately assassinate him in the minds of the people by charging him with the responsibility for the wicked practice of polygamy. The Hedrickites base their whole claim to succession on the idea that he was a fallen prophet. Who are most responsible for his name being "had for evil"? To whom belongs the credit of it being known for good "among all nations"?

BISHOP EVANS'S SERMONS.—Bishop Evans's sermons continue to appear in the Toronto Sunday World. Recently there appeared a communication in this paper from a certain party who strongly objected to Bro. Evans's efforts. This was closely followed by a defense coming from some one who did not disclose his identity other than to state that he was not a member of our church. For the benefit of our readers who may be interested we reproduce this short defense in another column.

MORMON CHOIR AGAIN.—The Deseret Evening News for the 21st in giving an account of the Tabernacle Choir singing on the temple lot in Independence, says: "Pres. Joseph Smith, of the Reorganized Church, and I. N. Smith [White], apostle of the Reorganized Church, greeted the choir on the temple grounds. They extended a special greeting to David A. Smith and George C. Smith, sons of Pres. Joseph F. Smith, to whom they sent the warmest regards."

SCOTT-BOLES DEBATE.—We are indebted to Bro. C. Scott for a write up of the debate just ended between Elder Boles, of the Christian Church, and Bro. S. W. L. Scott, at Logan, Iowa. It will be found in our letter department.

TITHING.—We take pleasure in calling attention to an article found this week in our General Interest column which is quoted from the Sunday School Times. It is significant when representative papers of the sectarian world take such a pronounced view of the principle of tithing.

GATHERING.—We call special attention to the notice from the bishopric of the Independence Stake affecting those Saints who desire to remove to Independence or vicinity.

ARBITRATION TREATIES.—We desire to call special attention to an excerpt from the Congregationalist in regard to the Administration's proposed arbitration treaties. The quoted matter briefly sets out the features of these treaties and their desirability. There is considerable opposition to certain features of these treaties among the United States Senators. Action upon them will doubtless be taken at an early date after the beginning of the regular session of Congress next month.

CHINESE REVOLUTION.—We can not give a better resume of affairs in China than the following which we credit to the Outlook for November 25:

"Under the influence of the revolution, changes are taking place so rapidly in China that it is impossible for American readers at a distance of thousands of miles to keep up with them day by day and to understand their relative import. The Chinese themselves can hardly understand that import, and the newspaper correspondents can only cable the events of the day or of the week, leaving a general interpretation for some more decisive action or some more decisive result than the revolution has yet produced. The only thing which at this time can be said to be absolutely certain is that the old China is gone for ever. The old, mediæval, reactionary party has permanently disintegrated, and the ruling dynasty has yielded to the inevitable and taken a long step towards a constitutional monarchy by accepting Yuan Shi-kai as Prime Minister. The new cabinet which he heads, and which succeeds the cabinet, containing some Manchu princes and nobles, that resigned last week, is composed largely of commoners. Yuan Shi-kai is not only prime minister with the assent of the Imperial party, but is commander-in-chief of the Chinese army and navy. That his sympathies are liberal is indicated by the fact that in northern China he appears to be the favorite candidate of the republican revolutionists for president, in spite of the fact that by accepting the leadership of the cabinet he has undertaken to preserve a constitutional monarchy from the attacks of the radical republicans. It may be that his attitude is like that of Cavour, in the revolutionary struggle of Italy in the middle of the last century, who profoundly believed that the Italian people could best obtain human rights and political liberty, not by establishing a republic, but by sustaining a liberal and constitutional monarchy."

Original Articles

DOES DANIEL 2:44 REFER TO THE CHURCH?

I say no, and will give my reasons. In the first place, the vision is treating of earthly governments, and I know of no rule of interpretation by which to change to a spiritual kingdom when referring to the stone kingdom. I believe it possible for an earthly government to be set up, and that by the Almighty; and if so, it would be in truth a kingdom set up by the God of heaven. Such I believe the United States Government to be. It came at the right time, in the right way, in the right place, and is doing the work of destroying "all other kingdoms."

This Government was set up by divine appointment. Columbus was inspired to spy out this land (1 Nephi 3: 35, Plano Edition). Those following immediately after were inspired, and 1 Nephi 7: 1 tells us that the Lord would raise up a mighty nation on this land. So I offer the Book of Mormon as a witness in my favor. Now read Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10, "And for this purpose have I established the constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood."

This work of setting up the stone kingdom began when the Spirit of the Lord sent Columbus in search of the "choice land." I do not understand that the heart of this image would be in existence at the time the stone kingdom was set up. "And after them shall rise another kingdom," signifies that only one kingdom would be in existence at the time until those arose which were represented by the feet and toes. It is admitted that the Roman Empire is the fourth power of the vision, which became divided in 395 A. D. into the eastern and western empires, and in 476 A. D. the western empire fell, conquered by the Heruli, but the eastern empire continued as the Greek Empire until 1448, when it ceased to exist.

Those kingdoms that overran the western empire only continued for a short time, so that none of them are found at the beginning of the eighteenth century. The Vandals, Alani, Suevi, three of the first division in 409 were subdued by the Visigoths in 583. The Heruli were followed by the Ostrogoths and they by the Lombards in the sixth century. The Visigoths were subdued in 712, so that the stone kingdom was not set up in the days of the first division; but if it can be shown that the stone kingdom was set up in the days of ten, more or less, of the kingdom, the outgrowth of the subdivision of the Roman Empire, the conditions of the vision are fulfilled. This, I think, can be done.

By consulting Lyman's Historical Chart, I find at the beginning of the nineteenth century the following powers, which seem to be the successors of the first division: England, France, Germany, Papal States, Italy, Spain, Portugal, Denmark, Poland, and Turkey. Now there may be more, and there may be less. I do not contend for just ten kingdoms, but for a subdivision represented by the toes. Now, in 1492, America was discovered by Columbus. Others were inspired to follow. The constitution was framed, the result of divine wisdom, and the stone kingdom was set up. I claim it was a necessity before the church could exist. Other forms of government would not permit the free exercise of religion as was provided in the constitution, which was adopted in 1791, in the days of these kings.

Now about the work of destruction. How was it to be done? Why, by the inspiration that impelled Columbus and others to move out in quest of liberty. This spirit of freedom from the stone kingdom will permeate all others until it fills the whole earth, making it possible for the preaching of the gospel in all the world. France became a republic in 1807. The same year, religious liberty and freedom of the press were granted in Spain, and as early as 1868 nearly all the Central and South American States had presidents and a congress patterned after the United States. One feature of the stone kingdom was that it should never be destroyed, which I believe to be true of this Government, but eventually will be given to the Saints of the Most High, according to Daniel 7: 27.

The 1830 church was practically overthrown; at least, if we should tear it in pieces and scatter the material we would say that it was destroyed, although the material was left, only scattered over the land. The church was disorganized in 1844, and its material was so badly scattered that there was a necessity for a reorganization, just as it was necessary to gather the material and rebuild the house. Doctrine and Covenants 65:1 is referred to as proof that the church is the "stone cut out without hands." It does not say so; listen, "And from thence shall the gospel roll forth unto the ends of the earth, as the stone which is cut out of the mountain without hands shall roll forth, until it has filled the whole earth." If there is anything in the claim, the gospel is the stone; but there is nothing to it, any more than "ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil," made Adam and Eve gods. It is a comparison, showing that as the stone should roll forth, so, in like manner, to the same extent, would the gospel roll forth. But the stone must go first to prepare the way. It was a preparatory work set up by the "God of heaven."

The influence of this stone is being felt in other countries. Conditions are changing. These internal dissensions are bringing about a better condition of things; the spirit of liberty is taking hold of the people, and tyranny and oppression are being crushed out, and by and by republics will take the place of these kingdoms.

Others not of the church have recognized the divine influence that brought this nation into existence. W. H. Seward says, "Whoever will study the character of the early immigrants to this country will be ready to say that God in his providence seems to have collected from the nations of Europe, men of sturdy limbs, free minds, bold hearts, to lay broad and deep the foundation of a state, which, for the benefit of the human race, was to prove under the most propitious circumstances an experiment of a popular representative government."

Now, if I am wrong, I am willing to be shown.

A REVIEW OF "MORMONISM AGAINST ITSELF."---PART 13.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

ETHNIC UNITY OF ANCIENT AMERICA.

Taking the unity of civilizations in the regions where languages have "altered," "changed," and declined, we present the following:

If we sum up what the authentic discoveries from the territory of Vera Paz, the lands of Qu'ekchi and Pokonchi, teach us, it follows with certainty from the abundance and variety of objects and from their artistic conception and peculiar manner of decoration that the ancient inhabitants of these regions were a people of advanced civilization, and that their culture was of the same peculiar stamp to be met with in the monuments of Copan and Quirigua, although in an entirely different degree of grandeur. At the same time it seems that we must conclude from various evidences that the active intercourse existing between Laguna de Terminos and Honduras in ancient times, to which doubtless the above-named places owed their prosperity, also made itself felt in the valleys of Vera Paz by influencing their progress and by stimulating and developing them.—Bureau of American Ethnology, 1904, p. 110.

This shows the similarity of culture.

The argument adduced by Elder Traum on language being the "reliable guide," or "a reliable guide in determining" "ethnic unity" militates not against our claim in the least, as the following paragraph will show, for upon the basis of the calendar system and its expressions the scientists are moving together on similarity of "root" and "structural" peculiarities. Some, however, can not see ethnical unity, save in language, overlooking special elements that are similar.

Of this unity, the Bureau of Ethnology, page 266, of Bulletin 28, 1904, has this to say:

The Zapotecs and their kindred were a nation unrelated to the Mexicans. If they can be classed with any of the great language groups belonging to the region of the ancient Mexican-Central American civilization, it can only be the Maya group. Indeed, a number of roots and many structural peculiarities of the language seem to indicate such a connection. The whole region of ancient Mexican-Central American civilization is, however, a conspicuous example of what Adolph Bastian calls a "geographical province." For, independent of a linguistic difference, we find the special elements of Mexican civilization developed in an exactly similar way among all the peoples of this territory. This is true of the general conduct of life, the technical and military customs, the organization of state and of society, but more especially of religion and learning.

The unity of this entire region of ancient civilization is most clearly expressed by the calendar, which these people considered the basis and the alpha and omega of all high and occult knowledge. This calendar is a special product of Central American culture. Its essential peculiarities are the adoption of the fundamental number 20 as the leading unit, and the combination of this leading unit with the number 13. These are features which appear in no other calendar system hitherto known. Within the region of Central American civilization not only are these two essential peculiarities to be met with in the calendars of all the civilized nations, but also a close correspondence in the names of the individual days of a leading unit. This I have demonstrated in regard to the Maya territory in my work entitled "Über den Charakter der aztekischen und der Maya-Handschriften," and regarding the Zapotec territory in a work on Mexican chronology which appeared in 1891. The Zapotec calendar is distinguished from those used by the other nations by certain peculiarities which one is tempted to consider evidences of special antiquity, but which are, perhaps, only the result of a particular development and an especial use for augural purposes.

Cyrus Thomas attempted to show the relation of the calendar system of America to that of Hamair, and found that the agreement, in part, was close. "Two essential peculiarities of the system among Americans are met with in the calendars of all nations," says this bureau, and not only so, but "a close correspondence in the names of the individual days of a leading unit." How is Traum to evade the idea of unity as above taught?

Again, in an able article issued by the Bureau, Mr. Paul Schellhas, writing on the subject of the relation of the civilizations, both in Mexico and Central America, and south of these, says:

Side by side with this influence emanating from the races on the northwest border, we also find another factor of civilization whose origin we may seek to the south of the peninsula of Yucatan. It seems to be the genuine, aboriginal source of Central American civilization, which reached its highest development among the Maya races. In contrast to the stiff, angular, conventional type of Mexican art products, we find, the farther we pursue this factor of civilization, softer, more graceful, and at the same time more realistic forms. Among the antiquities which show this influence are the remains at Copan and Palenque, the Maya codices, and a great part of the clay figures in the Yucatan collection. All these facts point to a region south of the Yucatan peninsula as the true center of Central American civilization. There the origin of American glyphic writing is doubtless to be sought; there lie the roots of that ancient culture.—Bureau Ethnology, 1904, pp. 621, 622.

Despite the fact that his warlike temperament and disposition to roam have been to the Indian the cause,—fruitful as Babel,—of the confusion of tongues, yet are the scientists, explorers, linguists, and antiquarian, pushing their investigations to the center of primal civilizations, in accord with the record of his ancestry. But Traum can not find their ancestry, that is the reason the book in question with him is "fraudulent." But he can not find the Allemane in Germany to-day, either; will he lodge the history of them in the fogs of fiction also? The Græci are not found in Greece to-day; will he consign the Grecian history, with its memoirs, to the region of fraud? Such superficial philosophists should go out of their two by four intellectual den and gaze about them once or twice.

We will conclude this linguistic question, for the time, by a brief paragraph from Brinton. Of the multiplicity of tongues among the Americans, he says: "In the numberless changes of these languages, their bewildering flexibility, their variable forms, and their rapid alterations, they seem to betray a lack of individuality, and to resemble the vague and tumultuous history of the tribes who employ them. They exhibit at times, a strange laxity. It is nothing uncommon for the two sexes to use different names for the same object, and for nobles and vulgar, priests and people, the old and the young, nay, even the married and single, to observe what seems to the European ear quite different modes of expression. Their phonetics are fluctuating, the consonantal sounds often alternating between several which in our tongue are clearly defined. Families and whole villages suddenly drop words and manufacture others in their places out of mere caprice or superstition, and a few years' separation suffices to produce a marked dialectic difference; though it is everywhere true that the basic radicals of each stock and the main outlines of its grammatical forms reveal a surprising tenacity in the midst of these surface changes. Vocabularies collected by the earliest navigators are easily recognized from existing tongues, and the widest wanderings of vagrant bands can be traced by the continued relationship of their dialects to the parent stem."—Myths of the New World, pp. 20, 21.

A GUESS AT DATES.

Elder Traum selects certain dates set by archeologists with the word "probably" attached, and constructs a theory multiplied many times by the probabilities. The Toltec, Aztec, Chichimec, Colhuas, and Maya civilizations are the identical ones which scientists inform us reflect the original, and by which they seek to blaze the pathway backward. These modern forms are furnishing them with fading rays leading up to the star of first magnitude, but as to the date when the star was in the constellation, they are at sea. And until the date is determined by these men, outside of the information found in the record of the Book of Mormon, his deductions, based on uncertainty, probability, conjecture, etc., will not effect any more than a gnat on a sunbeam.

Mr. Traum selects certain "probable" dates for the existence of the civilizations upon the western continents, by which he flatters himself to have overthrown the Book of Mormon, thus: Short places man, according to Traum, on this continent twenty-five hundred years before the "Toltecs came in contact with him."

Foster, according to Traum, has the Toltec date reach back 955 years B. C. Then Traum adds the two improbable dates, and sets down the improbable result that the "cradle of American civilization" was under the shadow of the ruins of Palenque, Honduras Guatemala, and Yucatan 3,500 years B. C. But neither of these inform us when they came to America, and their dates are as fictitious as Traum's boundary of Mormonism.

We can assert on the authority of the Bible and Book of Mormon that they came here at the time stated in those books, and yet be within the supposed date of their existence, after the arrival, for Short says their existence here was twenty-five hundred years. But we will place these conjectured dates in a form to be seen:

Mr. Short has man on the Western Continent 2,500 years.
Mr. Foster has man on the Western Continent 955 B. C.
Mr. Traum has man on the Western Continent 3,500 B. C.
The Colhuas were living in America 4,000 B. C.
Le Plongeon has man on this continent 6,000 years ago.

To the list we add:

Wilson has man on the Western Continent 50,000 years.
Sir Charles Lyell has man on the Western Continent 100,000 years.

Professor Dana has man on the Western Continent 25,000 years.

Professor Agassiz has man on the Western Continent 10,000 years.

Can the dean of the Philadelphia bar inform us which date is reliable? Can there be a more uncertain, dreamy, speculative basis of guess-work than this on which Traum builds his air castle? Time and oft in the statements of Baldwin, Baum, and the rank and file is expressed the fact that the dates and age, are unknown. If we take the chronologies of the Bible, they differ as to the time which elapsed from the creation of Adam to Moses. The Hebrew chronology reckons it to be 2,445 years; the Septuagint, (from which our English Bible is translated) makes it 3,953 years; while the ancient Samaritan, (Pentateuch), differs from both, and makes the age of Terah, Abraham's father, one hundred and forty-five years; while the common version counts it two hundred and five. Now applying Elder Traum's logic to this point, if the combined scholarship and research of the world for thousands of years past can not with all the data at command, determine the correct dates of certain events, how can he expect these modern scientists in so limited a time, and with such slender data, to arrive at fixed, certain, reliable, and unchangeable dates, with reference to nations now in the dust?

WERE THEY CHRISTIAN?

Elder Traum attacks the Book of Mormon on the ground that the principles of Christianity were taught and practiced so long before the birth of Christ, and argues that as the Jaredites and Nephites were Christian, teaching the gospel, baptizing, and organizing a Christian church on this continent, it follows that what "the spade exhumes shall be a Christian civilization." (Pages 126, 127, 128.)

He should have told us what he means by a Christian civilization. If the civilizations he last described, such as the Maya, the Colhua, and Toltec are the ones "exhumed by the spade," can he affirm that civilizations not Christian, could have done the work he attributed to them? But it does not follow because Christians were living on this continent from before 2,222 years B. C. and 600 B. C. interruptedly, until 420 A. D. with an idolatrous nation contemporaneous, that the spade shall necessarily exhume "Christians." Oh, no, we await the resurrection power to bring out of the earth "every man in his own order," both the "Christian civilization" and anti-Christian. That the ruins may, or may not bear evidence of their attitude toward the Christian religion, we may concede. But what meaning is attached to his proposition is not clear. When, a Stephens steps into the territory of buried nations, and with scientific acumen uncovers "forty-four buried cities," and brains massive with archaeological lore follow up with tomes of corroborative evidence that millions of people had homes there, it would attest a sound mind to "pick" out a polished stone and ask it, "Have you believed in Christ? Or, were you baptized for the remission of your sins?" Or, "Was the man who smote you into sanctity a "Christian?" Nothing remains to the scientist, save the crumbling mighty ruins in the depths of the forest, and these attest the handiwork of a people skilled in stone cutting and joining. Archeology reveals the fact that "here were the remains of a cultivated people, polished, and peculiar, who had passed through all the stages incident to the rise and fall of nations, reached their golden age, and perished entirely unknown." (See Travels in Yucatan, Stephens, vol. 2; p. 356.)

The Book of Mormon describes two principal civilizations with about one thousand six hundred years difference in customs, manner, and architecture.

TWO CIVILIZATIONS.

Baldwin says:

We find architectural characteristics so different from each other that it is as impossible to attribute them all to the same people as to believe they were all built at the same epoch.—Ancient America, p. 156, Brasseur De Bourbourg.

Again he says, "These old constructions belong to different periods in the past."

On page 226 Baldwin reaffirms: "It is now agreed that the Peruvian antiquities represent two distinct periods in the ancient history of this country, one being much older than the other."

These facts are not denied, but opinions built up on them may be contested. Just here we present a statement subversive of Traum's theory of too much antiquity for these civilizations of America, or, he has the Colhuas resident here "4,000 B. C." Now on page 76 Baldwin affirms:

Ruins and other vestiges, revealing an ancient civilization, are found throughout the whole of Central America, extending as far north as New Mexico and Arizona. But here the antiquities do not all belong to the same period in the past, nor exhibit unvarying likeness. The monuments suggest successive and varying periods in the civilized condition of the old inhabitants, some of the oldest and most mysterious seeming to indicate the highest development. In the northern part of this region we find ruins of great buildings, similar in plan to those still used there, but far superior as monuments of architecture, science and skill. In the central part of the region spoken of development was still more advanced. Here in the last ages of American ancient history, was the seat of the Aztec civilization.

And on page 80 he continues, writing of Zuni:

Became a ruin in ancient times; and after remaining long in a ruined condition, it was again rebuilt, and again deserted after a considerable period of occupation. It is still easy to distinguish the differences in construction between the two periods. "The standing walls rest upon ruins of greater antiquity;" and while the oldest masonry is six feet thick, that of the latter period is only a foot to a foot and a half thick.

It will be borne in mind that these ruins in the Western Continent represent "settled life" with its accumulations, and intelligently organized industry. "Their unity as a people, which is everywhere so manifest, must have been expressed in political organization."—Baldwin, pp. 33, 35. Page 31, he says: "Careful study of what is shown in the many reports, . . . seem plainly to authorize the conclusion that they entered the country at the south."

"Sir William Jones has traced the origin of all the people of the earth to the three roots, Shem, Ham, and Japheth; according to the 10th chapter of Genesis. The fact mentioned by him is worthy of remark, that the dynasties of Peruvian kings are dignified exactly as those of some parts of the Old World, by the name of the sun, and moon." Continuing, he says: "States and empires could scarcely assume a regular form till within fifteen hundred or sixteen hundred years before the Christian epoch."—Haldane's Evidences, pp. 179-194.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL AGAIN COMES TO OUR AID.

Alexander Campbell adopted this line of argument to establish the truth of Christianity in debate with Robert Owen, see page 241. If the date set by Sir William Jones, and adopted by the founder of the so-called Christian Church, is approximately true, that "states and empires" could not have assumed "regular form" until 1500 or 1600 B. C., then what becomes of the argument of Elder Traum, that those "regular forms" of "political organizations" and settled life were in existence four thousand years B. C.?

The Jaredites, as well as the Israelites, brought their faiths with them to America, and for proof, we introduce a no less renowned character than Alexander Campbell. In debate with Robert Owens, to establish Christianity as true, he adduced this evidence:

The first discoverers of America observed there a reverence for the Sabbath and an acquaintance with many of the appointments of the Mosaic institution, and of the early history of the world. The contents of some of their manuscripts are curious in a high degree. One is a cosmogony which contains a tradition of the mother of mankind having fallen from her first estate of happiness and innocence; and she is generally represented as accompanied by a serpent. We find also the idea of a great inundation overwhelming the earth, from which a single family escaped on a raft. There is a history of a pyramidal edifice raised by the pride of men, and destroyed by the anger of the gods. The ceremony of ablution is practiced at the birth of children. All these circumstances, and many more, led the Spanish army at the time of the conquest to the belief that, at some very distant epoch, Christianity, or at least Judaism, had been preached in the new continent.—Evidences of Christianity, p. 230.

Here Mr. Campbell presents evidence establishing claims of the Book of Mormon,—both as to the Jaredite and Nephite immigrations; the "tower," the "flood," and the "fall," in the exodus from Babel; the "appointment of the Mosaic institution," in the colonies of Israelites from Jerusalem. We hope Mr. Traum will yield gracefully to the superior wisdom of A. Campbell.

TRADITIONS OF THE FLOOD.

We have space for but few of these testimonies. In testimony of the ages to divinity of the Bible, this evidence is given:

Traditions of the flood are, if possible, more common in the New World than in the Old. The form in which the natives relate them agrees so strikingly with the traits of the Bible history that we can not blame the astonished Spaniards, the first European discoverers, if they were to believe on account of these and similar traditions that Christianity must have been preached there in ancient times.—Professor Hackett's Translation from Auberlen.

Mexican Traditions.—This people had a tradition that a deluge had destroyed all animals with the exception of one man and his wife, who escaped in the hollow trunk of a cypress tree; and that after this, they had a numerous race of children born to them.—Humboldt's Vues der Cordilleras, ibid.

As undeniable proof that the ancients of the American Continent came from the tower of Babel, as the Book of Mormon claims, with the facts of the "flood" and "confusion of tongues" fresh in mind, we refer our readers to the plate which was found by Baron von Humboldt in his researches in Mexico. (See Priest's American Antiquities, pages 200, 201.)

As a sidelight to the plate, Priest records as follows:

They say the tongues which the dove gave to mankind, were infinitely varied; which, when received, they immediately dispersed. But among them there were fifteen heads or chiefs of families, which were permitted to speak the same language, and these were the Taltées, the Aculhucans, and Azteca nations, who embodied themselves together, which was very natural, and traveled, they knew not where, but at length arrived in the country of Aztalan, or the lake country in America.—Page 200.

Will Elder Traum explain how these Asiatic ideas came to America? We advise him to read the only authentic account recorded, found in the Book of Mormon. The fallacy of attempting to set dates by the ruins of these people, save by the aid of the written language of the people who occupied them is exploded.

Dr. Henry Mason Baum, D. C. L., says in Records of the Past, volume 2, page 215: "It is impossible to even approximate a date for the works of either North or South America."

Cecil A. Deane, in Denver Daily News, April 22, 1906, while writing of prehistoric people, says, "When, or whence they came is not known."

Dr. Baum says, in repetition: "When were the buildings occupied by the people who erected them, and what was the cause of their leaving them? No one knows.—Records of the Past, 1902, vol. 1.

Again, reaffirming; "Here in the bygone centuries primitive man lived his round of life. How many ages ago is at present unknown."—Ibid., vol. 2.

Prof. Cyrus Thomas adds his testimony, as follows:

The historical evidence is clear and undisputed that when the region in which the mounds appear was discovered by Europeans, it was inhabited by Indians only. Of their previous history nothing is known except what is furnished by tradition, or inferred from the study of their languages and customs.—Problem of Ohio Mounds, p. 9.

All these certify that Elder Traum's wild goose chase for dates is vanity, and the superstructure he has erected on so much fog tumbles into the nothingness, which is its only redeemable characteristic. The mound builders were here twelve centuries before the progenitors of the Indians came, according to the Book of Mormon. Foster says the testimony of the Indian is "uniform" that the "antiquity of the mounds reaches back to a period beyond the memory of their ancestors."—P. 375.

The Book of Mormon account reads as follows:

The king said unto him, Being grieved for the afflictions of my people, I caused that forty and three of my people should take a journey into the wilderness [in South America], that thereby they might find the land of Zarahemla; that we might appeal unto our brethren to deliver us out of bondage. And they were lost in the wilderness for the space of many days, yet they were diligent, and found not the land of Zarahemla, but returned to this land, having traveled in a land among many waters; having discovered a land which was covered with bones of men, and of beasts, etc., and was also covered with ruins of buildings of every kind; having discovered a land which had been people with a people who were as numerous as the hosts of Israel. And for a testimony that the things that they have said are true, they have brought twenty-four plates, which are filled with engravings; that the things that they have said are true, they have brought breastplates, which are large; and they are of brass, and of copper, and are perfectly sound. And again, they have brought swords, and the hilts thereof and the blades thereof are cankered with rust; and there is no one in the land that is able to interpret the language or the engravings that are on the plates.—Book of Mormon, pages 158, 159.

Every hour that passes, every hour to which you give close attention, every hour that you fill with earnest work, or with wise, reasonable recreation, or with needed sleep, is an hour well spent that adds to your power and chances in the future.

And every hour thrown away is a chance gone that will never come back.—Selected.

Two things the North Pole traveler guards as he would his life. His supply of alcohol, which means heat in condensed form, and his food closely packed. If he scattered his alcohol, to see it melt little holes in the ice, or if he threw his small supply of food to the birds and walrus, he would be no greater idiot than the man who scatters his precious time in foolish amusements, or throws it away in the company of other idiots like himself.—Selected.

Of General Interest

A Scene in an Indian Court.

The noon hour struck, tolled by the rail gong at the Treasury door, and in a moment all things came to a standstill. The Mohammedan lawyers, the village Moslems loitering about the court, even Mozuffer Khan with his guardian policeman, all reverently withdrew. A moment later they reappeared on the wide concrete veranda outside the window at my left. There they laid down their prayer mats, and, standing first with devoutly bowed heads and hands folded, they murmured the noon prayers of the Prophet's religion; then knelt, still praying, and made obeisance, prostrating themselves before Allah the Merciful the Compassionate. The reverence of their devotion was perfect and wholly free from the self-conscious shamefacedness that I should have felt, supposing that I, the magistrate had suspended court to pray there in public. Islam is a man's religion, a manly religion; there is something fine in the faith that takes men out to pray before the eyes of all, on the wide veranda of a police court.—Charles Johnston, in the Atlantic.

The Arbitration Treaties.

The President has proposed an action which is the beginning of the end of war. He has obtained the consent of Great Britain and of France to treaties of unlimited arbitration with the United States. They are the first treaties that do not except questions of vital honor. Not only do they remove peril of wars between the United States and her two sisters beyond the seas, but they make the immediate signing of like treaties with other nations inevitable. Already Japan and other nations have hinted that they are ready. Before ten years were passed, we venture to say, there would be ten treaties. Furthermore, these nations which have joined hands with the United States may soon begin to clasp hands with each other. Already there are rumors that Great Britain and France are talking of such a treaty. There you have the beginning of a League of Peace, which may soon become a league of power.

These treaties are also the first beginnings of disarmament. If the treaty between Great Britain and the United States is ratified, it will mean that neither nation will have to consider the other in its army or naval program. If Great Britain should sign such treaties with Germany and France and Russia, the world might almost disarm to-morrow. Whoever helps to put these treaties through puts a first block into the new and beautiful city of God's first peace on earth.

The treaties now require only the ratification of the Senate. Its Foreign Relations Committee has reported upon them adversely. It proposes changes which would strip them of their one chief value—that which makes the one step forward. All questions to be arbitrated which individuals would arbitrate. There should be no exceptions. The treaties should be passed as the President has framed them.

Since the action of the Foreign Relations Committee the President has started to tour the Nation in behalf of unqualified arbitration. The church never had a greater opportunity, to show the world that it, and not trades unions, not socialists, not chambers of commerce, leads in the inauguration of the kingdom of God. Every minister ought to uphold the President's hand with such prophetic sermons as those which Henry Ward Beecher sustained Lincoln in his great endeavor. Lincoln stopped man-selling for ever. Taft is trying to stop man-killing for ever. Let every church pass resolutions and send them to the Senators from its State, with one copy to the President. Above all, every Christian who reads these words would help more than he realizes if he wrote his Senators at once the strongest letter he can write. We are at the parting of the ways. For centuries we have walked the pagan way of war. Now the President offers us the Christian way of law, good will and brotherhood. The Senate will make that choice for us next December. The church should compel it to choose the Christian way.—The Congregationalist.

A Choir of Mormon Pilgrims.

All heathen religions, like the religion of the Roman and Greek Catholics, appeal strongly to the emotional side of human nature. In his attempt to compare his heathen faith with Roman Catholicism, the Chinaman said, "Catholie 'ligion and China 'ligion he all same." In the compromise that Protestantism has effected with worldliness during recent years, it may be noted that professed Christianity has indulged in dramatic entertainment in order to please the people. This departure is especially pleasing to women; and in consequence, popular churches are almost barren of male attendants. Those who would gain large audiences from the world, resort to spectacular displays or other entertainment pleasing to the emotional nature. One needs only to examine church advertisements to find that almost anything rather than straight preaching is being resorted to in order to please the masses. We noticed an advertisement of the winter season entertainments of the Christian (Campbellite) Church (white) of one of our cities. This sect has engaged the Glazier Circuit Cooperative Lyceum Bureau to furnish them fun this season. An entertainment by the Chicago Ladies' Orchestra will be followed at later dates by the colored Glazier Jubilee Singers, and other entertainers gifted in reading, oratory, science, and fiction.

The Salt Lake City (Utah) Mormons have planned for their famous choir of two hundred singers, a pilgrimage through the country, in the hope, doubtless, of making Mormonism appear more favorable in the eyes of the world. According to advertisements, this choir of two hundred singers will give a matinee and an evening entertainment in one of the Indianapolis, Indiana, theaters in the month of November.

No single attempt to entertain the people has yet out-rivaled John Alexander Dowie; but we are constrained to believe that the Mormon effort and other Protestant attempts will be more successful, since they are more tolerant and entertaining to the sinners and say less about the grievous sins of our day practiced in the name of religion. We are certainly living in a day when men are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God.—Gospel Trumpet.

Shall We Pay the Lord While We Owe Others?

That the paying to the Lord of a tithe, or tenth, of our income is the least that anyone and everyone should do, under any and all circumstances in life, seems to be plainly established in the Scriptures, Old Testament and New. The frank recognition of this simple principle, and the holding to it in quiet, joyous faith, will settle many a question that is commonly asked concerning the duty of tithing. Let us apply it, for example, to the situation described in the letter of an earnest inquirer in Nebraska:

"Should we pay tithe while we owe money? is a question which is puzzling us at present. We believe the tithe is the scriptural, also the just and reasonable, basis of giving. We believe that it is the least we can do to prove our love and gratitude to the One whom we recognize as the Giver of all the good things which have filled our lives. We have experienced the joy of giving, and are loathe to renounce that joy. But, in a way, it seems that our money is not ours to give while we owe it to others here. In another light it seems that the tithe is the Lord's and never ours to use for any other purpose whatever.

"We expect to be in debt for a number of years, and should we wait to begin giving again till the uncertain time when we shall owe nothing? It is a most uncomfortable feeling to owe money, and rests as a burden on us; but neither are we at all content to spend all our substance on ourselves when souls are dying without Christ. Would the systematic giving of smaller proportion, say one twentieth, be right?"

Should we be dishonest with God in order to be honest with men? Should we ignore a preferred creditor—one who because of our pledges to him and his claim upon us has a prior demand over all others—in order to pay an ordinary creditor? Should we steal here and there, break promises from time to time, in order to secure money to pay those whom we owe? As there can be but one answer to these questions, so there can be but one answer to any question as to postponing our current obligation to God while we meet our obligations to men. It seems undeniable, from scripture and from experience, that God will take care of us better, and pay off our debts to other creditors faster, with nine tenths of our income than with ten tenths. The one tenth that belongs to God is no more ours to give to another creditor than the money in our neighbor's purse is ours to pay our debts with.

Whatever we may have failed to do in times past in paying the tithe, the least we can do is to pay it in full from this day forward. That is what was referred to by "current obligation to the Lord." If we are in arrears in our tithing for years back, and we are led to believe that God is asking us to recognize and pay off that debt to him also, it may be obviously impossible to liquidate that debt in full before we spend a cent for any other obligation. But we can begin to-day to meet our current debt to God by using from this day on, for all other expenses and debts, only nine tenths of our income, and setting apart for the Lord the tenth that is his. He promises to bless us in this as he can not bless us otherwise.—Sunday School Times, November 18, 1911.

Extracts from Letters.

"Please accept our little donation, and may you all be blessed in the grand and noble work you have undertaken to perform. We will try and remember you at other times."—Murdock and Hurshes, Henning, Minnesota.

"Inclose bill of lading for barrel, also $10 from Willing Workers' Society, of Deloit, Iowa."—Mrs. J. W. True, secretary.

"Find money order for $1. I think the home a fine thing, and hope to help with my mite each year."—Mrs. J. H. Post, Katy, Texas.

"The Ladies' Aid Society of Dow City, Iowa, have sent a box of clothing for the children of the home."—Mrs. J. R. Rudd, president.

"Please find $2.35 inclosed which I have collected among the Saints of our little branch for the home. Praying God's blessing upon the children and those who have charge of the home."—Mrs. Hattie Barnes, Rock Island, Illinois.

"Inclosed find $5.50 for the Children's Home. It is not very much, but is all I can spare at present. I will try to send some more as soon as I can. It is too far to send clothing, for clothing is high here and the freight would cost quite a bit so I will send money whenever I can."—Dorothy Brown, Las Animas, Colorado.

"To-day the Willing Workers met with me and packed a barrel of dry goods for the home, requesting me to notify you. The goods are not all new, but we hope they will be of some use. This work is new to some of us, but what a happy lot we were, for there is nothing that makes sunshine like working for others. . . . After December 1 we will send another barrel and some fruit. Also look for cash donations."—Mrs. Joseph W. True, Deloit, Iowa.

"You will find post office order for the Children's Home. I am too far away to send anything but money, and that is always acceptable."—Julia A. Thomas, Rockland, Maine.

Babyhood.—Supplementary Reading.

After the first year of a child's life, the increase of muscle, the growth of bone, the cutting of teeth, the development of the entire body along normal lines, demand more varied nourishment. While cow's milk should still form the chief article of diet, other food must be now added. Carbohydrates are needed at this stage of growth, and to supply these in the most digestible form the cereal jellies are recommended to start with. Barley water is often used to dilute the milk during the early months; oatmeal jelly, when the meal has been boiled at least three hours and strained, is an excellent food, especially if a laxative effect is desired. When the whole milk is taken, these cereal jellies can be given by themselves once a day.

Rice that has been boiled slowly for three hours is a good dish to begin on; it should be salted to taste, and fed with either a small quantity of butter or with milk.

Hominy grits that have cooked for six hours, and corn meal mush that has cooked three, are also wholesome. If it is advisable to select food that can be prepared more quickly, one of the breakfast foods that require cooking is recommended. Cereals that are underdone are not only difficult for a child to digest, but are actually less nourishing; by slow, long cooking they become dextrinized and are readily assimilated.

Stale bread, toast, and hard crackers can be fed during the second year; fresh bread in every form is to be shunned at this age, as well as all soft, sweetened crackers and cakes.

Meat should be given in the form of beef juice, chicken or lamb broth. Beef juice is especially valuable for anemic children, or for those who can not or will not take sufficient milk. The juice should always be squeezed from fresh beef; it is generally taken with greater relish if well salted and slightly thickened with stale bread crumbs. Broth must boil for three hours, be strained and have all fat removed. One pound of meat makes a pint of rich broth; when chicken is used the bones should be broken and boiled with the meat. Rice or barley may be used to thicken the broth if desired.

Eggs can be given about the fourteenth month, either codded or soft boiled.

Orange juice, apple sauce, and prunes are the only fruits suitable until after the second year. Orange juice must be free from seed and pulp. Prunes and stewed apples should be pressed through a colander before feeding, and even then must be given in small quantities and a watchful eye kept as to results.

Remember to add only one article at a time to baby's diet list, and upon the first indication of disturbance, stop that food at once.—Anne Stokes, in The Woman's World.

THE BABY'S SLEEP.

Do you know the number of hours that the baby should spend asleep? Twenty out of the twenty-four are required for a very young baby; one of six months should spend at least sixteen hours in sleep, and until a child reaches school age, one half of the twenty-four hours must be devoted to sleep if the best results are to be expected.

Even the smallest of newborn babies should be provided with a separate bed, though that bed may be only a clothes basket with sides padded and a pillow for mattress.

Last year in Des Moines, Iowa, it is reported that ninety infants were found dead in bed with their mothers; in most cases they were suffocated by being rolled upon in sleep. In England this accident occurred so frequently that it became known legally as "overlying," and is punished by law. Aside from the danger to life itself, the child's health is menaced on account of the small amount of fresh air that it obtains when in bed with a grown person.

Some mothers complain that the baby is cold when it sleeps alone. For this reason the padded clothes basket above referred to is recommended as a cozy nestling place during the first few months. The white iron cribs, so sanitary and serviceable, are rather chilly in winter. This single objection can be avoided by placing between the mattress and springs several layers of newspaper, and by covering the head of the bed with a quilted pad made for the purpose, or by merely throwing a blanket over it. No good ever come from having a draught on baby's head.

The night clothes should consist of a flannel shirt, a flannel band, and a gown of outing flannel. This gown should reach several inches below the feet and be tied at the bottom with a drawstring like a bag. A hot-water bottle may be placed in the bed, not touching the little body, but near enough to supply it with heat. In bitter weather cotton blankets should be used as a substitute for sheets. A pair of woolen blankets and comfort made of wool or eider-down will be required. Thus protected, even the tiniest of babies will not feel the cold, and the room can be ventilated at night with benefit to both mother and child.—Anne Stokes, in The Woman's World.

An item in The Independent for June, 1911, reads as follows: "A Philadelphia court last week did a righteous act in convicting a woman who for forty years has been making and selling a soothing syrup for babies that contains morphine. The directions on the bottle allowed a dose four times as large as a physician would dare to give to a child fifteen months old. It is a crime to give any of these soothing syrups to stop a child's crying. The graveyards are filled with children fed on them."

"If you wait until the baby is two years old before beginning his training, you will find that he is ahead of you and has trained the entire family."

Requests for Prayer.

Sr. Sarah Scott, Leedy, Oklahoma, desires prayers, she being badly afflicted.

Sr. Elizabeth Ellwood, Byesville, Ohio, writes that she has been afflicted all summer and has had to undergo an operation. She asks that Saints pray for her.

SAINT CLAIR, MICHIGAN, November 15, 1911.

Dear Herald: The work of God, "the marvelous work and a wonder," occupies much of my thoughts, and as my knowledge of it enlarges, the glory and grandeur of it are far beyond the portrayal of my feeble words. A work at once so simple that he who runs may read, and so profound that it is too deep for the most learned. And it is so complete that it will transform fallen man and finally accomplish his eternal salvation in the kingdom of God. A salvation so great and complete is worthy of our most worthy efforts. We hear many say, "I love the gospel," but when we see many of the missionaries leaving their fields, compelled to go home in order to sustain their families, this sounds like an empty phrase. To say you love the gospel, means to put your hand in your pocket to help the missionary and his family. The Lord says, "By this shall ye know my disciples"; if they "feed you and clothe you and give you money"; "and verily this is a day of sacrifice of my people." This is the way the Lord has provided for the spread of the gospel and to warn our neighbors.

The financial law is a part of the gospel and must be kept. It is as important to keep the financial law in order to gain our salvation as the law requiring baptism and the laying on of hands; so do not say, "I love the gospel" until you are willing to comply with all of the gospel law. Our loving Father is always willing to pour out his blessings on his people, but in many cases he is repaid with ingratitude; for surely it is ingratitude to withhold from God that which belongs to him by right. God says: "Will a man rob God? . . . Yet ye have robbed me." The perilous times are upon us. Must some terrible crash overtake us before we can see our duty? Signs of the near approach of Jesus Christ are very evident. There is yet much to be done. Zion is to be redeemed, the work is crowding upon us, staring us in the face. The Children's Home, the Saints' Home, the Sanitarium, Graceland, the Order of Enoch, with the auxiliaries and other departments of the work, all needing help. There never was a time in the history of this work, when live, active, workers were more needed. There is no time now to think of pleasure and amusements. The line is drawn very sharply between us and the world. The Lord has said, "Stand in holy places." What you are losing now you are losing for eternity. If you neglect your Sunday school and Religio here, you can not pick up the loose ends by and by.

DOW CITY, IOWA, November 18, 1911.

Editors Herald: I write a few lines for the HERALD this morning, that you may know that myself and family appreciate its weekly visits to our home, where it has been a welcome messenger of good news ever since the spring of 1866, if my memory serves me right.

I remember with pleasure many of the early contributors, from whose writings I learned many precious truths, as well as from those who have all along these years made your pages interesting and instructive to the careful reader. Long may the HERALD continue its usefulness, and may its usefulness steadily increase until the coming of the Son of God, and "the wise virgins" are ready to enter into "the marriage supper of the Lamb." It is time to be up and doing if we shall all be found at that day with the wedding garments on, and our lamps all trimmed and burning.

Since last writing for your columns duty has called the writer to a number of reunions and branches, and though some of these meetings have been referred to by other ministers and Saints, I venture a few words which I trust may be encouraging and helpful to the Saints.

On my way to Milroy, North Dakota, reunion, I could but admire the beautiful country passed over, especially that of the Red River Valley, which is as beautiful as anything I ever saw, if not a little more so. All through Minnesota and Dakota the country seemed to be almost one continued field of beautiful, waving, golden grain, though in some places the crops were suffering because of the continued drouth. At this place I remember the kindness of the Saints, though strangers to me, and the courtesy of the ministry and officers, especially those in charge. The work of those who assisted me proved to be all that was necessary, and they have my thanks for their kindness.

At the Thurman, Iowa, reunion I found an interesting and worthy camp of Saints who seemed anxious to render necessary assistance where, and when needed, and as the writer sees things, the reunion from first to last was good, and the reunion committee made our trip to and from the reunion a pleasure indeed, and their hospitality was ample, and is appreciated. Here, too, I found good, willing helpers who acted as scribes, and their work, as at other points and by other Saints, was good, and is appreciated by the writer.

The reunion at Colo, Iowa, was not so large as the one at Thurman, yet it was just as spiritual, and the arrangements made by the committee were as good as could be, and the spirit of brotherly love seemed to prevail, and both preaching and social services were enjoyed by the writer, so far as he was permitted to attend them, and the kindness of those in charge is appreciated, and I trust that the good seed sown will in due time bring forth good fruit for the Master's kingdom.

Sr. Butterworth and our two younger children accompanied the writer to the Magnolia, Iowa, reunion, where we found a comfortable stopping place with Bro. and Sr. Bert Fallon.

Here we met many of the ministers and Saints with whom we have been acquainted for many years, and those in charge and assisting in the preaching of the word we have often heard before; yet the word is ever new and refreshing and encouraging to the writer and his family.

The conference of the Gallands Grove District, held at Cherokee, Iowa, October 14 and 15, and the conventions held on the 13th were quite spiritual and interesting, and seemed to be much appreciated by the few faithful Saints who live in that city and vicinity, and they did all they could to make their visitors welcome.

Later I visited the Mallard, Iowa, Saints and labored there a week, and found them trying to let their light shine, and willing to assist the minister as necessity required; and the missionary always finds a welcome and pleasant home with the Saints there.

At Coalville I found what seemed to be an improved spiritual condition, and had a good attendance at my meetings; enjoyed excellent liberty in talking to the Saints, as well as in doing patriarchal work, and left with a hearty invitation to return when convenient, and their hospitality was all that could be desired.

At Frazer I found the same kindly feeling manifested by officers and Saints, and I enjoyed my stay and labor among them, and left with an invitation to return and an assurance that I would find a welcome at their homes, and, as I understood it, in their branch.

At Boone I labored a week and enjoyed my labors there as a preacher and as a patriarch, and felt that the good Spirit was there, and that a good work might be done there if all would but take hold and labor unitedly for the good of the work. Meetings here were not as well attended as they might have been, but perhaps this may be said of more than one place. I found a welcome, and was kindly cared for, and have a kindly feeling for all the Saints of the Boone Branch.

The officers and members of the Gallands Grove and Des Moines districts will please take notice that if there is any work in my line desired, and they will notify me at Dow City, Iowa, where a letter will always reach me in due time, I will try and do the work desired, so far as possible. I am home for a few days of rest, but expect to move out as soon as possible.

With kind regards and best wishes for all, and ever praying and laboring for the advancement of the work of Christ, and the salvation of souls, I remain,

Yours in gospel bonds,

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

Editors Herald: In a recent issue of the HERALD I notice that an effort on the part of the Commercial Club is being made to locate small factories in Lamoni, a very desirable thing to be done; but there is one thing about it that seems strange to me and others that are out on the prairies of the West. We are anxious to see Zion develop, and are always pleased to read of things being done that indicate growth, for then we know that you are alive. The names indicate that they are our brethren, and of course have a special interest in our people, and of God's work; and while as citizens they have an interest in the town, the interest in our work ought to be greater, and what benefits our people will benefit the whole community.

In 1909, at the spring conference, we sought the Lord for direction so that we might the better proceed with the work of building up Zion; and that seeking was not in vain, for in answer to our earnest prayers we were given revelation 128 in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. In the latter part of paragraph six we have the following: "Under this head there may be placed industrial associations of such sorts as the varied qualifications existing among workmen may demand."

It seems that the Commercial Club has the same object in view that is set out in the revelation. The strange thing about this matter to the writer and others is that these brethren and others are not concerned in trying the divine plan that was given us. We have read of several meetings to consider the organization of an "Order of Enoch." Have the brethren lost faith in God's plan, that they are even afraid to try it? If you people that live in the stakes, where the law can be more fully carried out, are not willing to make the effort, how can you expect us that are scattered to join in with you? There are many opportunities in the business world for investment, better than in Lamoni. One of the great inducements to invest among the Saints and in the stakes should be that the effort to be made would be made according to the divine plan; if not, what is the use of making the effort?

This is not a personal matter with the writer; this question is of interest to hundreds of our people and we are anxious to know why our brethren are not willing to try the divine plan to establish industrial institutions in the stake.

PAUL PARKER.

NEW CAMBRIA, MISSOURI, November 17, 1911.

Dear Herald: We are a little band of Saints in the north-eastern part of Chariton County, and were organized into a branch last spring by Elder J. F. Curtis. We now number thirty-six; have one elder, two priests, and one teacher; have prayer meeting every Wednesday night, Religio Thursday night, Sunday school every Sunday, sacrament meeting the first Sunday of each month at 2.30 p. m., and preaching at 11 a. m. and 7.30 p. m.

This is a pretty fair farming country. Well improved farm land, underlaid with a good vein of coal can be bought for forty-five to fifty dollars per acre, and I think it will be a good location for any of the Saints wanting good farm homes. We have no church building of our own yet, but hold our meetings in a schoolhouse. If there is anyone interested in this part of the country, and who would like to hear more about it, I will answer any addressing me. If they would rather see for themselves I would be glad to show them around. We would like to have a few good families of Saints locate here.

The HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and Ensign are welcome visitors at our home.

Your brother in Christ,

DANIEL EDMUNDS.

R. F. D. No. 2.

CLITHERALL, MINNESOTA, November, 17, 1911.

Dear Herald: This is my first experience in missionary work, and while it was a trial to be away from home, being the first time in my life, I have enjoyed the work and have been very much encouraged in trying to tell the "old, old story." The scattered condition of the Saints in Minnesota, together with the foreign population, renders the missionary work rather hard, but we believe that some progress is being made. The majority of the Saints are anxious to do what they can for the missionaries. Some are anxiously looking forward to the time when Zion will be redeemed, and are cognizant of the fact that we are living in the last days.

Since having enjoyed the privilege of being at home and attending the Lamoni Stake reunion I have been privileged to meet and make the acquaintance of the Saints of Minneapolis, among whom are Bro. Charles Lundeen and family, Bro. Serrell and family, Elder B. S. Lambkin and wife and little Joseph, and many others.

From Minneapolis I went in company with Bro. Lambkin to Princeton, going there in response to a request from a young man writing through the Ensign, stating that he had never heard a Latter Day Saint sermon only through the Ensign and the Toronto World, and would like to have some of the missionaries come in there and hold some meetings. So, being assured that we could have the schoolhouse in which to hold meetings, we left Minneapolis on September 29, and were met at the depot by P. C. Van Someren, who proved to be much interested in our work. We were first taken to the hospital in the city to see his father-in-law, Mr. Holtman, from Wisconsin, who was expecting to undergo an operation the next day. He, also, is a Latter Day Saint with the exception of being baptized, and would have been baptized while we were there if he had been able. After having knelt in prayer at his bedside according to his request, we started on our ride out into the country about eight miles, where we were made welcome by the good wife of Mr. Van Someren. We were kindly cared for at their home, where Bro. Lambkin and myself helped to get rid of the potatoes and honey.

Meetings were announced and we began telling the gospel story to a number of attentive listeners. We continued over two weeks with the result that Mr. and Mrs. Van Someren were baptized and more are interested. Bro. Lambkin did the baptizing in the Rum River, near Mr. Van Someren's home. Bro. Lambkin said that was the first time he had baptized in "rum." We were greatly encouraged by the way the people received the word. Bro. Lambkin is a very firm man in his preaching, putting forth the gospel in plain and positive terms, but in a kind way. As for myself, I felt as though I was just helping to fill the time. However, I enjoyed the few weeks of association with Elder Lambkin; also our stay at the Van Someren home.

Parting with Bro. Lambkin and others, I then joined with Bro. Leonard Houghton at Clitherall, with whom I had labored during spring and summer. During the past few weeks we have been doing missionary work in the vicinity of Fergus Falls, part of the time near the home of Bro. Joseph Elliott, where we had a fair attendance and interest, and the remainder of the time at a schoolhouse near the home of Alvin O'Hair, whose wife is a member, and he is near the kingdom I think. We were very kindly cared for in both these places and appreciate the efforts to help the missionaries.

There are but two members of the church living in the latter locality, Sr. O'Hair and a Sr. Line, both formerly of the Boonesboro Branch in Iowa. They need to be remembered among the isolated ones.

The present finds us at Clitherall in the home of Bro. and Sr. Houghton, having been hindered somewhat by the late storms. Winter has begun in earnest after holding off warm for so long. Last Sunday, November 12, we had the pleasure of going to meeting through a snowstorm with the thermometer standing at about ten degrees below zero.

We expect to start holding meetings in a hall about five or six miles out in the country to-night.

Hoping the Saints will remember us in our labors in this part of the Lord's moral vineyard, and praying for the success of his work everywhere.

In gospel bonds,
W. E. SHAKESPEARE.

SCHLIEZ, REUSS, GERMANY, November 6, 1911.

C. I. CARPENTER, Esq., Lamoni, Iowa, U. S. A.

My Dear Brother in the Lord: Cordial thanks for the certificate blanks and the elder's diaries sent. Trust these lines may find you and yours and everybody else there well; I am, thanks to God.

I heard from Bro. Kelley on the 4th inst. and am preparing for my voyage to my beloved native towns and villages in South Thurington, where many doors and houses are open to me, trying to warn people and awaken them. A half dozen have bought the Book of Mormon so far, may the Lord bless them in the reading of it.

The earth is getting smaller from day to day! Here, in Schliez, I have met an old lady and her granddaughter from near Dubuque, Iowa, and of course I have not failed to supply them with HERALDS and ENSIGNS and speaking to them of the reestablishment of Christ's original, apostolic church. Also, an old friend of mine and townsman, Mr. Richard Bartholdt, of Saint Louis, Missouri, member of the House of Representatives at Washington, District of Columbia, I had, after thirty-eight years, the great pleasure of meeting here in our native town again, and now he knows, of course, quite a good deal about the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and has our three meeting places in Saint Louis, Missouri, in print—I cut them out of the Ensign for him and his wife.

I am distributing our tracts by hundreds as I wander through the country, and talking to the people wherever I can get hold of them, and rejoice in my calling of being a fisher of men.

May his peace be with you all! Give my love to everybody there, please, and oblige, dear brother.

Yours very faithfully, in gospel bonds,
A. B. PURFURST.

Scott-Boles Debate.

The debate held at Logan, Iowa, November 13, 1911, is now a matter of history. Four propositions were discussed. The first and third were the claims of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and the Christian Church, respectively.

The Book of Mormon and its claims were canvassed to an extent, and Mr. M. Boles affirmed the New Testament to be the finale from God till the second coming of the Savior.

The time to fully canvass the questions discussed was too brief to do anything like justice to our contention, at least. Bro. S. W. L. Scott presented the views of the Saints and maintained them with skill and ability; and at no time was he pushed to an extreme, or had to abandon a position. Elder Boles did as well for his position as could well be done, taking the position that God revealed himself to his children, when he saw it essential, for a period of four thousand one hundred years—from Adam to John the Revelator and then suddenly changed, and had said absolutely nothing to his children since, nor will he till Christ's second advent. A man, even, that would speak to his first three children, and instruct them to their success, and absolutely refuse to ever speak to the last three, arranging with his wife and the first three, that the latter three children, if obtaining any information, should consult the former children and absolutely refuse to speak to the younger children, is a fiend, and a religious system that makes the infinite God to be as mean as that must go without characterization.

He insisted that the church of the New Testament, in organization and endowment, spiritually, was confined to the first century, A. D.; that that expression of God's "will" was not his will with respect to later ages; hence, a change in his will, with another expression of partiality to his children.

As against the further continuance of the church, as described by Paul, and as set up by the Christ, (Matthew 16:16-18; 1 Corinthians 12; Ephesians 4:8-13; 2:21, 22,) Elder Boles tried to limit it to the first century, A. D., and departing from the organic pattern of church built by Christ, as described in the New Testament, we never can know what that church is, for God never has revealed since the first century what the pattern of the church should be. God never changed the form of worship under the first Sinaitic covenant one iota till the time came for him to abrogate it, but never was so particular about the church government and system of worship as established and consecrated by the shedding of the blood of his own Son (?).

On his own church affirmative of limiting revelation to the year 90 A. D., he occupied the ground that God's last will and testament was notified, attested by the apostles, sealed at Calvary, recorded by the New Testament writers, all of which every New Testament believer not only admits, but teaches and believes; but when it comes to the provisions of that will, he limited the provisions for the laying on of hands for the gifts of the Holy Ghost, and those gifts of the first century; hence, no revelation since that age. Referred to Daniel 9: 24, to "seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the most Holy,"—Christ. And after he was anointed and the will was consecrated with blood—Christ's blood—no more "visions and prophecy" were ever given of God. All gifts after the year 90 A. D. were spurious! Yet that "will" was of "universal application," and was to be preached in all the world; but he did not tell us what offices the ministers occupied, if any, nor just what they were to proclaim, only they should not preach what was preached in the first century, of a supernatural character. No "signs" could follow the believer as the attester of will promised, after the year 90. That might be prophecy or vision!

So poor John the Revelator with his visions and prophecy, his Gospel and epistles had to be counted out, since all were given and written since the year 90 A. D. To quiet this false claim, he cited the language of Isaiah 8: 16: "Bind up the testimony, seal the law among my disciples," and argued that this limited New Testament church organization, and the life, the spirit of the church, and intelligent, spiritual communication from heaven, to the first century of the Christian era. Nothing further can be done by God himself till Christ comes the second time. "The 'will' does all that can be done." To "bind" is "to oblige by a promise; vow." But Elder Boles was always sure to unbind or fail to show his audience that God promises in his covenant he would fulfill. Always silent regarding the promise, "These signs shall follow them that believe." (Mark 16: 16.) Also, "For the promise [of the gift of the Holy Ghost, as found in Acts 2: 39] is . . . unto as many as the Lord our God shall call." Yet the gospel call is to "every creature," all nations, in "all the world" construed to "bind," as God breaking his conditional promises, to even those who obey the call of God. To "seal" is to ratify, confirm, and establish; to make fast. The logic of which is to establish the church with a first presidency, (Galatians 2: 9, 10; Ephesians 5: 23-32; Revelation 12: 1-5,) apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, high priests (Isaiah 61: 6 with Luke 4: 17, 18; Hebrews 5: 1-4, 5), teachers, bishops and deacons (Ephesians 4: 8-13), all endowed with life and the light of the Son (sun) of righteousness, each member set in Christ's body, the church, and all members to perform their respective functions as the organs: head, eyes, ears, nose, mouth of the human body, with hands and feet. (1 Corinthians 12.) But after the binding and sealing and obligating by promise, and his vow, changed his mind regarding the entire arrangement—"will," covenant, and after the first century, something else took place. But as the will did not provide for the change, nor what the new church organization was to be, we are just left to guess, or to the judgment or opinion of man. And since no more revelation was to be given after the first century we can not know what the "will" to succeed the first New Testament "will" is to be! Just as well limit the resurrection to the first century of our era as to limit the laying on of hands for the gifts of the Holy Spirit to the first century; and why not? Elder Boles tried to limit the fulfillment of Isaiah 29 to the Jews alone, and the days of the apostles of old. Also to have fulfilled then all the glorious promises yet to be fulfilled before the overthrow of the house of Judah, before the final overthrow of the Jews by the Romans A. D. 65 to 72.

He forgot that Isaiah 29: 17-21 applies to all the Gentile nations that fought against Israel, "the multitude of all the nations that fight against Ariel."

Elder Boles tried hard to limit the fulfillment of Isaiah 29 to the apostles alone, the Holy Ghost, Comforter and its office work as found in John 14: 15-20; 15: 26, 27; 16: 7-16, forgetting verse 15. The apostles alone are to "keep my commandments," (verse 19), "because I live, ye (apostles) shall also live"; also verse 27, "my peace I give unto you," apostles, but these promises made in this discourse are limited to the apostles (?). And again, "I go to prepare a place for you" (apostles), are all limited to the apostles, according to his theory.

His effort against the Book of Mormon consisted of finding disciples called "Christians," Alma; and reading detached statements of some general passages, reading into them ideas not found expressed therein. He denied that anything was done "in the name of Christ" before his death, but made no reply when Luke 10: 17 and other passages of the same import were read. He kept dwelling on Luke 24: 46, 47—all done in Christ's name must begin "at Jerusalem," at Christ's resurrection. (See Matthew 18: 20; Mark 9: 38, 39.) The Apostle John saw a man casting out a devil in Christ's name. How did that man learn about doing things in Christ's name, before Christ's resurrection?

Mr. Boles tried hard to show that Paul taught that there was "a more excellent way" than the one which Paul set forth in 1 Corinthians 12, and it was to be realized when the "perfect" law had come; "New Testament completed." See 1 Corinthians 13: 9-12. But it was shown most graphically that Paul was in those verses not contrasting our imperfect law with a perfect law. "God is the Rock and his work is perfect," Moses says. (Deuteronomy 32: 4.) The gospel was perfect when ordained before the world was formed. (Psalm 19: 7.) Paul was commenting on and contrasting the imperfect condition of saints with the perfect condition to be attained by them by the means of the perfect church, divinely established, with its officers and members endowed with the perfect gifts of the Spirit according to God's will. The perfect condition is to be reached when we all come to be perfect men in Christ, and "to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." Christ was occupying the glorified state on his Father's throne when Paul wrote the words cited.

Mr. Boles occupied the anomalous position of having the very means provided of God to the perfect, immortal state,—condition,—"cease," "vanish away," at A. D. 90; but these, church, perfect law, and the spiritual gifts are some of the provisions of the sealed, bound, attested, "universally applied," unchangeable "will" of God, the divinely ordained officers named, and those perfect spiritual gifts.

Elder Boles labored hard to invalidate God's New Testament expressed "will," to make room for the institution known as the "Christian Church," which, it was shown, had not even the ghost of an existence in any history past or present, till its establishment by A. Campbell, Walter Scott, and their coadjutors in 1827-28, in the Western Reserve of the now State of Ohio. He could not show that Christ took his seat at the head of that institution when formed, had no way of knowing, since he does not reveal anything to anybody now, nor has he since Patmos. Prior to 1828 the people out of which the Christian Church was formed were members of the Baptist Church, even A. Campbell and Scott themselves were prior to that date Baptists, as attested by their own history.

Bro. Scott's opponent advocated the strange position that the kingdom was restored to Israel (Acts 1: 6, 7,) at Pentecost, and had Christ's coming in glory, (Matthew 16: 27; Psalm 2; Matthew 25: 31-46) his ascension to heaven, and glorify at God's right hand on the Father's throne,—his coming was his going, or vice versa! Strange position.

Although Christ told the apostle who asked him the question, "Wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" "It is not given to you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power" (Acts 1: 6, 7), yet he insisted the apostles did know "the times and seasons," at the day of Pentecost, and that Christ then sat on "the throne of his glory." Yet Christ told John, A. D. 96, that he was on his Father's throne, and contemplated being on his own throne at a later time. (Revelation 3: 21.) The Apostle Peter did by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost associate the great "resurrection of all things spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world began," closely, with the second coming of Christ in glory. (See Acts 3: 20, 21.) It is when he comes in glory to reward, judge, and reign that he will sit on the throne with his father David. (Matthew 16: 27; 25: 31; Luke 1: 32, 33; Isaiah 9: 6, 7; 40: 9, 10; Ezekiel 21: 25, 26, 27.) David's throne is not yet restored to Israel; Israel is yet in blindness. (Romans 11: 25, 26, 27; Luke 21: 20-25.) Yet Israel is to be restored to the land of their fathers, Palestine; the kingdom restored to them, and Christ shall reign on David's throne (Acts 2: 30, 31), after the fulfillment of the Gentile times; and Israel, now scattered among the Gentile nations, is to be gathered again. They are being slowly gathered back to their ancient home now, and Jerusalem is being "build as towns without walls," since God spoke to the "young man" by his angel, 1823 to 1830. The young man spoken to by the angel was Joseph Smith. The last time Israel was restored before their final overthrow by the Romans, their restoration from Babylon, God sent an angel to Daniel, an old man, and that angel told him, "the wall shall he build again even in troublous times." See Daniel 9: 25 for the history of the fulfillment; also Nehemiah 4 to 6. But in a civilized age when, as against gunpowder and dynamite, walls of stone are no longer of use as a protection, God was, as prophesied (Zechariah 2: 1-5), to so inform a young man that Jerusalem should be inhabited as towns without walls by Israel. God is fulfilling that at this time, now, 1911 A. D. No disputing this fact now; it is too late in the world's history. The time is now hastening when God will make, mark you, make a new covenant with the house of Israel and the house of Judah. (Jeremiah 31: 31-34. He offered this covenant to Judah at his first advent but Judah rejected it and their house (government) has been desolate to this day. (Matthew 23: 37; John 1: 11; Luke 21: 20, 24; Romans 11: 25-28.) The covenant.—Paul tells us here that the covenant is to go to Israel at the fullness of the Gentiles. Until then they are enemies to the gospel of Christ. The theory of Elder Boles that the New Testament is the last revelation from God till Christ's second coming would therefore cause the New Testament to fail and make Paul a false prophet, for he prophesies in Romans 11 that "blindness in part is happened unto Israel until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in," and defeat the great purposes of God in this matter. So Mr. Boles fails utterly to sustain his proposition. There is to be revelation from God in the last days.

The debate was held in the Christian church at Logan and was well attended throughout. Much interest was manifested. Numbers came from Pisgah, Woodbine, Persia, Magnolia, Mondamin, Missouri Valley, and some from Moorhead. Several Christian ministers attended, one Elder Penny, from Des Moines, attended part of the time.

The truth under test was laid before the people; the Saints felt confirmed in the faith of the gospel restored through the agency of the holy angel. A splendid feeling prevailed with the Saints and their friends.

Elder Baker, minister of the Logan Presbyterian church, with the exception of three sessions, occupied the chair with ability and dignity, and his decisions, when necessary to be made, were impartial and satisfactory. The other gentlemen who presided during the three sessions did well.

All seemed satisfied with the results, so far as expressions were offered. Truth was made to appear. Good was and will be done by the discussion.

News From Missions

Nelsonville, Ohio.

The work is still on the upward move in these parts, and many precious souls are entering the fold.

The year nearing its close has been an unusually busy one for me, notwithstanding the fact that I have tried never to let the "grass grow under my feet" in any year of the past. I have made it a rule of my life, in whatever vocation I may be employed, to give value received.

Our reunion at Kirtland was a success from several standpoints. It was the most intellectual one I have ever attended, and spiritually, it was up to the average, in the aggregate at least. Financially, it far exceeded any other. It was an epoch for Kirtland. We got wide and favorable notice from the paper. Ten were baptized, and most all seemed to enjoy themselves. That improvements can and will be made in the conducting of reunions in these parts we frankly concede. Each one furnishes its quota of experiences to benefit the next one. That we had a few kickers we admit, but God had them in heaven, and had to cast them out, but unfortunately for us, the same spirits invade the camp of the Saints on earth.

Our Canadian Saints, with their congenial and good-natured dispositions, added much to the success and pleasantness of the occasion. We say, Come again, Canada; but doubly strong next time. From indications it looks as though Kirtland will have the next reunion.

About September 1 I went into western Pennsylvania on some special work. Held a few meetings with the Hamburg Saints, which seemed to be appreciated. While at Sharon, I was informed that C. D. Moore was holding tent meetings at South Sharon, and had thrown out a general challenge for debate. The brethren invited me to take it up; consequently I called on Mr. Moore, and after some talk he decided he would not debate with me, but would get a man. I told him I did not care who he got, except W. G. Roberts, as he was too dirty and vile for a white man to stand before; but if W. G. Roberts would come properly indorsed as a Christian gentleman, I would debate with him.

He hustled off for Fayette City, and brought A. M. McVey, a man whom I met six years ago. We went at it for ten nights, five nights on Book of Mormon, and five nights on his church. He tried to get out of defending his church, but we insisted that they should affirm as many propositions and as many evenings as we.

Those fellows always demand us to affirm the Book of Mormon and Joseph Smith, their only object being to work on the prejudices of the people. We should in every discussion with those fellows make them affirm equal time. The negative always has the advantage, hence, when they debate me they will get no advantage on this line.

His first speech on his affirmative was consumed entirely in arguing that I would not be permitted to use any books, only those which they indorsed, and since they indorsed nothing but the Bible, I could use nothing but the Bible, and if I did, he would appeal to the chairman. He well knew what I had, and would do, with the books at hand; and I used them with disastrous effect in proving the origin of their church; that Alexander Campbell, and not Christ, was the author of their church; that it began in western Pennsylvania and southern Ohio, and not at Jerusalem, and that it was formed about the year 1827, and not A. D. 30.

In reply I told the people it was too late for him to come up at this hour and beg the question. That I had sat and listened to all kinds of histories and books in the last five nights. I told the people that by those books he was afraid of I intended to prove an alibi, and proceeded to do so. As threatened, he objected, but the chairman overruled the objection, and the shock almost "killed father." Seeking to get back their lost grounds, on the next night another matter was appealed to the chairman, and we were sustained in this also. These were really more than we expected, as it was quite evident to us all that the chairman was prejudiced against us. But in my first speech on McVey's affirmative, the Spirit of God rested on me so powerfully, enlightening my mind—so wonderfully, that I was enabled to make my position so clear the chairman was compelled to see and acknowledge the justice of our contention.

The only argument (?) McVey could make in trying to prove his church right was to continually seek for a sign, even going so far as to hand me a bottle of carbolic acid to drink. I kept the fact before the people that his church was on trial and not mine, and should I drink a barrel of poison and live, it would not prove his church to be true.

I think it will be a long time before he will offer me carbolic acid again. I think we made it sorer for him than it would have been to me had I drank it.

Of all the religious humbuggery, God-dishonoring, heaven-insulting, and glaring hypocrisy, those people outshine them all. One need only to know them to reject them. They are as spiritless, powerless, and Godless as the Zidonians of old. I don't ask five minutes preparation to show those fellows up in their true light.

Bro. D. E. Tucker was my moderator, and rendered good service. I never was at a place where the Saints stood by me any better than the Sharon Saints in this conflict. And all were strengthened and edified.

Immediately after the close of this debate, I hastened to Ironton to join Bro. Metcalf, and crossed the Ohio to Kentucky, to measure theological swords with a progressive Campbellite. On Monday I met the gentleman at Denton, signed propositions and rules to begin the following Monday. Accordingly Bro. Metcalf and I were on the grounds, but the gladiator, W. W. Strickland, did not put in his appearance. Left word by the postmaster he could not get a place in which to hold a debate, although I heard a man tell him he could use their schoolhouse one mile from there, and he would keep him all through the debate; or if he wanted to stop at Denton, would haul him to and from the place, if he would hold the debate at his place. He declined the offer.

In order that I might test his honesty, and not misjudge him, I wrote him a letter, offering to pay his way from Kentucky to Highland County, Ohio, board him and his moderator free, bring him to and from the depot, pay his way back, and do all within my power to treat him in a kindly manner, if he would come to the Highland County Branch and debate the propositions with me. I got no reply from him. It was quite a let down to some of the people who worked so hard to secure him to clean out the Mormons.

The debate having failed to materialize, we turned our guns on the Utah Mormons, from the same schoolhouse offered us to hold the debate in. While there riddling the Mormons in shreds, we were eating and sleeping with the Mormon elder, and fighting him between meals. We agree with you, it was quite "gally," but seventeen years battling on the frontier in missionary life, will naturally give a person enlargement of the gally.

From Denton I wended my way to Hocking Valley, stopping and preaching a few nights at Wellston, Hamden, Nelsonville, Jobs, and The Plains. At all those places I was kindly received and remembered in a financial way.

I put in five very busy days at The Plains. Preached five times, conducted one funeral, visited among all the Saints, administered to a number of sick, helped with their Sunday school, ordained Bro. Barnhouse to the office of priest, baptized and confirmed three, and blessed seven children.

Am now on my way to Wheeling, West Virginia, to hold a debate with the Utah Mormons. Will begin the 28th inst. They are importing a man from New York. I am to affirm the Reorganized Church is the true church in succession, and its teaching in harmony with Joseph Smith the Martyr. They affirm the Utah Church the true church in succession, and its teaching in harmony with Joseph Smith the Martyr. I shall try to have them repeat it at Fairmont, West Virginia, their state headquarters.

The Mormons and Campbellites are to begin a twelve-night debate at Fairmont, beginning December 12. I am under instructions from our missionary in charge to be there and challenge them both.

Doubtless the Campbellites will associate Joseph Smith with polygamy, and the Mormons will not deny it; and I think we should avail ourselves of every opportunity to remove this stain from the fair name of Joseph Smith.

So I am happy in the fight, and can see no place where I can lay the armor off; hence I shall try and keep it on and the sword of truth bright from use. Will press the fight against error until final victory is secured, but should I be called to lay the armor off in death, for which I have no fear, but rather welcome the day, I believe I may leave a record which future generations may not be ashamed to read.

News From Branches

Niagara Falls, New York.

Few, if any, of your readers have not heard of Niagara Falls, but we venture to say that not many know about the church work in our city. We are a branch of less than one hundred members, with a nice chapel built about five years ago, in which to worship. We have many good Saints here, and, like most branches, a few who do not honor the cause.

Five weeks ago last Saturday, Bro. Daniel Macgregor arrived in our midst, responding to an urgent request made by us, through Bro. Greene, for his help. One of his first moves was to visit the mayor to gain permission to preach on the streets of our city, but he was refused point-blank—after two or three repeated calls. The mayor argued there are plenty of churches in which to do the preaching. Said he belonged to two, Congregational and German Lutheran, and gave liberally for their support! an intensely "churchy" mayor we have, you perceive.

Meetings were commenced at once in our little chapel, which seats about two hundred, and which we have had taxed pretty nearly the limit a time or two on Sunday nights, when we have the largest crowds. Each night, except Saturdays, we have held services. Altogether a goodly number of outsiders have been reached,—two baptisms have taken place,—three more at least this week plan to take the step. The ministers are getting aroused over our efforts.

One week ago, on Sunday night, there was given out from their pulpits the edict or "latest ministerial bill of excommunication," as Bro. Macgregor terms it in the paper, that the Latter Day Saints do not belong to a Christian church. Last night one of our clergy friends of the Presbyterian faith, took for the topic of his discourse, "Joseph Smith, and how he faked the Book of Mormon." Being the only short-hand writer available, the writer was obedient to the advice that she go to take down his accusations.

After reading the last chapter of Revelation, he proceeded with the common stories of the shiftlessness of "Jo" (as he termed Joseph Smith throughout his lecture,) the lewdness and immorality of his parents, the purchase of the divining rod, the use of the peep stone, deception in regard to the plates, claiming it was only a brick—and not a gold one at that,—referring often to the neighbors' hen roosts being robbed, and much more of their common stock in trade which I will not mention.

It was the worst lot of lies against our work that I was ever privileged (?) to listen to. He advised his congregation if they had not mental caliber to appreciate the Presbyterian faith, go to the Christian Science people, a light weight people mentally! "Don't join the Mormons," said he, "I would rather be a Mohammedan any day than a Mormon. Would rather believe in their God, than the God of the Latter Day Saints." When my husband asked for ten minutes to reply, he was granted it after church was dismissed; and when he asked the reverend gentleman if he would meet the issue, to prove his assertions, on the rostrum of public discussion, he politely or unpolitely told my good husband that, to be perfectly plain, he didn't consider him worth talking to, thus making the second Presbyterian minister who has refused to meet Bro. Macgregor in public.

We don't blame them; they know where they would come out, but they like to give their flock the impression that we are "not worth talking to."

The first four Sunday mornings several of our people, both male and female, were out, rain or shine, though it was too early to shine, distributing between one thousand and eighteen hundred handbills in this part of our city, announcing the evening service. Last Saturday, however, Bro. Macgregor was successful in getting his handbill into the city papers, thus saving us much expense and work, and reaching more people. His discourse was a reply to the Ministerial Alliance. The Buffalo News came out Saturday night with a big heading about the Falls churches being in warfare; so you see we are getting publicity, but none too much. We welcome it. The persecution from the other religious bodies will surely make friends for us. Much comment is going on on all sides, and our neighbors realize we are here.

Our branch, in consequence of these efforts, is being built up spiritually. Some who have been neglectful and careless are coming to the front. Two brethren have been called to the priesthood, and we expect in due time to see the ordinations take place, which is surely encouraging, as at present we have but one elder, one priest, and one deacon.

Bro. Macgregor will not leave us yet, if interest keeps up. We rather look for his good wife, Sr. Maggie, to come to stay with us a while also.

We seem to more perfectly realize the worth of this glorious gospel, when so sharply contrasted with the darkness of the religious world. There are honest souls here as elsewhere, who are hungry for the truth, though they are scarce compared with the vast multitude who love darkness rather than light, and are following after pleasure rather than God. We are certainly in a pleasure-seeking city, if there are such places, Sunday baseball, etc., and much to lure the young people away.

Yours for the work,

MARY LEWIS MESLE.

1560 WILLOW AVENUE.

Saint Louis, Missouri.

Our monthly sacrament service was well attended, and a good spirit prevailed throughout. By a vision the branch was admonished to unity and forgiveness.

The priesthood held a meeting on the morning of November 5.

The speakers during the past month were Brn. T. J. Elliott, George Reeves, and S. A. Burgess. We are pleased to welcome Bro. Burgess home again.

Among the subjects discussed since last report were: We are friends of Jesus when we are grafted into the kingdom; faith; love as a basic principle between earth and heaven; and the value of the priesthood to the body.

Our Thanksgiving service will be held the first Sunday in December. The Mite Society is preparing an entertainment, supper, and bazaar, to be given Thanksgiving Eve. They are very desirous to be successful in their efforts, as one of the objects in view is to assist the Children's Home.

Bro. Dowker has closed a series of successful services in Belleville, Illinois, having been greatly blessed in his efforts. Twenty-two promising Saints were added to the fold, and the branch feels stronger in the work.

Your sister in Christ,

ELIZABETH PATTERSON.

Some days must be dark and dreary, but we take pleasure in noting many of the happy events for November.

Although a blizzard visited this city on the 4th, and on the 12th the church did not have sufficient heat for comfort, and the Sunday school attendance was only 516, there being quite a number of cases of diphtheria, yet the hearts of the Saints were made glad to hear again the gospel story, Elder W. J. Mannering from Mexico preaching an excellent sermon, and the afternoon meeting abounded in fervent prayers for the needy.

At 7.30 p. m. the choir gave a concert under the direction of our gifted sister, Audie Anderson, with Prof. R. G. Smith, our efficient and faithful organist.

Pres. F. M. Smith gave a fine lecture on the restoration, and imparted much instruction. On Tuesday, the 14th, the Ladies' Aid Society by their tasty and interesting way of entertainment, drew together a cheery, generous bevy of Saints, ready and glad to help these faithful sisters in their efforts to liquidate the church indebtedness.

Then, there have been going on recently, very attractive and profitable meetings in the Convention Hall, Kansas City, under the auspices of the Child's Welfare Association, and many of the Saints attended.

As usual, the business meeting for this month was a lively one, and full of suggestions and many varied opinions, but good will prevailed, and the statistics show six good, faithful Saints added by letter.

On last Sunday, the 19th, about eighty were present on time at the 8 a. m. prayer meeting. Several of the older ones, by restraint of the Spirit, kept silent so as to give place for the younger Saints, and we had the pleasure of hearing two excellent and soul cheering testimonies from Sr. Charles Lake and M. A. Etzenhouser.

The Sunday school attendance was 716; collection $14.29.

Bro. W. O. Hands, an officer of the Humane Society, conducted an interesting program during the Sunday school closing exercises and also at the morning preaching service, and gave place to two young ladies who gave heart stirring and pathetic readings descriptive of the cruel, inhumane treatment oft inflicted on the innocent, lovely little animals and birds which God has created to serve man's pleasure, and for his lawful use. But alas! they say the pathos of that description was deepened by the unfortunate appearance of two pairs of pretty wings on the hats of those young ladies, and the ruthless observer was reminded of such lines as these:

"On the battleships for ages past,
When crews prepared to die or win;
They nailed the colors to the mast
In token that they'd ne'er give in.
So, woman, at the present day
Will not capitulate; instead,
In token that she'll win her way,
She's nailed the colors to her head."

The young people enjoyed the morning's program, they said, fully as well as a generally appreciated long sermon.

The afternoon hours were occupied by two very important and profitable meetings,—of prayer and testimony, also of the Woman's Auxiliary. Like the meeting of October, the numbers of the program included interesting readings on the all-important subject of home and school life, the evils of divorce, and the proper education of the boys and girls. These and many other topics were discussed by the auxiliary, as well as the Child's Welfare Committee and the Conservation Congress.

At the fellowship meeting four little ones were blessed and a young sister was confirmed by Brn. W. H. Garrett and Bishop R. Bullard. Bro. Holmes J. Davison preached an excellent discourse at the evening hour.

On Tuesday afternoon quite a number of the Saints repaired to the temple lot to meet some visitors from Utah who came to view the historic spot. They had the pleasure of meeting a part of the famous choir, of hearing them sing a verse or two of the old-time hymn, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet," and they, by the way, witnessed the spirit of friendliness and Christian courtesy existing in the hearts of the notable Smith family, which differ so widely in beliefs and religious faith.

The Saints were all glad to see our beloved Bro. Joseph at this little pleasant outing on the green sward of that sacred spot, and on so pleasant an occasion on that beautiful November day.

Conference Minutes.

FREMONT.—District conference convened with the Riverton Branch at 2.30 p. m., Saturday, October 7, 1911. N. L. Mortimore and W. E. Haden were placed in charge, with power to choose a third. Upon motion R. E. Pratt was chosen secretary. Reports were read from Thurman, 210; Shenandoah, 125; Bartlett, 38; Riverton, 51; Hamburg, 66; Tabor, 58. Reports from Bartlett and Riverton were ordered back to clerks for corrections. Officers reporting were C. M. Roberts, James Comstock, M. L. Mortimore, E. S. Wilcox, W. E. Haden, C. W. Forney, L. C. Donaldson, and S. S. Clark. Bishop's Agent Lorena Leeka presented report: Balance due church June 3, 1911, $171.22; receipts since June 3, $905.25; total $1,076.47; disbursements since June 3, $937; balance due church October 5, 1911, $189.47. District Secretary C. W. Forney's financial report was read. Paid W. E. Haden and Alvin Knisley balance on hand district tent fund, $18.08; received from C. M. Roberts for Thurman Branch, $6.60; James Comstock for Riverton, $2; T. A. Hougas for Henderson, $3; N. L. Mortimore for Hamburg, $3. T. A. Hougas balance tent fund, $10; total $24.60. August 14, 1911, paid W. E. Haden $12.30, and Alvin Knisley $12.30. Secretary's expense account read: Balance on hand last report, $1.09; paid for postage, 52 cents; balance on hand October 1, 57 cents. Verbal ministerial report of Alvin Knisley was heard, which was followed by remarks by W. E. Haden, E. S. Wilcox, and C. M. Roberts. Invitation from the Shenandoah Branch was accepted, and a motion prevailed that when this conference adjourns it does so to meet with the Shenandoah Branch, the exact time to be left to the district president. Motion prevailed to place the order of the remaining meetings in charge of those chosen to preside. R. E. Pratt was given power to choose an assistant secretary. Jesse Donaldson was so chosen. Saturday at 9 p. m., preaching by C. M. Roberts, assisted by R. V. Greenway; Sunday at 10 a. m., Sunday school in charge of local officers; at 11 preaching by W. E. Haden, assisted by James Vinnard; at 2.30 social service in charge of James Comstock and F. Becksted; at 8 preaching by Alvin Knisley assisted by N. L. Mortimore. Motion was made to adjourn to meet with the Shenandoah Branch at the call of the district presidency. R. E. Pratt, secretary pro tem.

Convention Minutes.

LONDON, ONTARIO.—Zion's Religio-Literary Society of the district met in convention at Saint Thomas, Ontario, October 6, 1911, at 10 a. m. Pres. John Judkins was chosen to preside, Miss May Constable secretary pro tem. The following officers were elected for the ensuing term: President, James Winegarden; vice president, Mrs. Rose Gray; secretary, George Tomlinson, jr.; treasurer, Mrs. Frank Gray; librarian, Elder George Henley; home class superintendent, Ida Bannister. In the evening a joint session was held with the Sunday school, in charge of district president, James Winegarden, district superintendent, Elder Frank Gray, and Elder Daniel Macgregor, superintendent of the General Sunday School Association. Speeches were given by Elders R. C. Evans, Daniel Macgregor, Frank Gray, and Bro. James Winegarden. The next convention will be held at the same place and the day previous to our next district conference at 10 a. m. Local secretaries of the London District are requested to send their reports to George Tomlinson, jr., Saint Marys, Ontario. George Tomlinson, jr., secretary.

The Bishopric.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of the Des Moines District; Greeting in the Lord: Only a few days over a month of the year 1911, remains, and the standing law of tithing is "one tenth of all their interest annually." How does our account stand for this year? Does your name appear in evidence this year, indicating what interest you have received through the blessing of God? If not, it should so appear, if you expect the partnership and cooperation with God to continue.

Many of the Saints have done well this year, a few have done excellently, but some who have been greatly favored we hope and expect to hear from ere the year closes, and thus their treasures in heaven will be increased.

While we pray the Lord of the vineyard to send more laborers into the vineyard, we should remember that God does not call men to break any previous sacred covenant they have entered into. Every man who has a wife and family is sacredly bound to see that they are cared for so that they do not suffer, so far as it lies in his power, and when men are called from their temporal employment to spend their time and ability in spiritual things wholly, his plan is that the responsibility previously resting upon such one to care for the family now rests upon the church, and thus is given opportunity to all to lay up treasures in heaven. The burden of preaching the gospel, or the reward for so doing, does not rest upon the ministry alone, but all are called to this work, each to do his part.

Let not your offering to the Lord be grudgingly given, for God loves a cheerful, bountiful giver, and in accordance as we sow, so shall we reap.

Your colaborer,

J. F. MINTUN.

Died.

LAPWORTH.—Blanch Elizabeth, daughter of Charles W., and Elizabeth Lapworth died August 31, 1911, aged 9 years, 5 months, and 19 days. Baptized at Crescent, Iowa, August 7, 1910; by Patriarch Joshua Carlile, at her own request. Her father, mother, three brothers and four sisters mourn for the dear one. Funeral service by Elder C. Scott, assisted by Elder Samuel Harding. She rests sweetly in the paradise of God. Funeral was largely attended, as she was beloved by all. Interment in the cemetery at Crescent, Iowa.

GLICK.—At Ellston, Iowa, October 29, 1911, Bro. Elmer A. Glick, aged 20 years, 1 month, and 27 days. For over one year he gradually declined with consumption of the lungs. Father, mother, two brothers, and two sisters did all they could for him. He received the gospel, and was baptized last June, by Bro. H. A. Stebbins, who was called to preach the funeral sermon.

HUNTER.—Sr. Martha Hunter was born November 18, 1839, and was baptized in the fall of 1888 at Roman, Augusta County, Virginia, by Bro. Moler. Died at Mount Sidney, Virginia, May 6, 1911. Funeral services conducted by Rev. Files.

BANKS.—Sr. Margaret Banks was born May 21, 1841, in Holy Town, Scotland. Died November 13, 1911, at Auburn, Nebraska. She united with the church in her native land; came to America with her parents when nine years old, and settled near Saint Louis, Missouri. They afterwards moved to Belleville, Illinois, where she was married to Bro. Israel Banks, April 22, 1872. To this union were born four girls and one boy; two dying in childhood. She leaves to mourn husband and three children; Sr. Jennie Kregio, of Auburn; Bro. George Banks, of Omaha, and Sr. Mable Marrs, of Auburn, Nebraska. She was patient in suffering. She won for herself many warm friends by her good work, with kind acts, and was always ready to give a reason for the faith she espoused. Funeral sermon at her home, by Elder W. M. Self, Nebraska City, Nebraska.

MILLER.—Mary L. Miller, aged 13 years, 3 months, and 10 days. She was the daughter of Bro. and Sr. John Miller. She passed peacefully away Sunday morning, November 12, after a short illness with typhoid fever, contracted while in Indiana. She was of friendly disposition and loved by all.

Funeral sermon by Elder F. J. Ebeling, at Floodwood, Ohio, to a large crowd assembled in the Holiness meeting house.

DOUGLASS.—Zeller Glen Douglass, son of Mr. and Sr. Zeller Douglass, aged 4 years, 9 months, and 15 days. Funeral sermon preached by Elder F. J. Ebeling, in the Methodist church at The Plains, Ohio. Much consolation was given the broken-hearted parents from the text, "Their angels do always behold the face of their father." Little Glen was a bright and friendly little boy, and a favorite with all who knew him.

DOBSON.—John Dobson was born in Tazewell County, Illinois, December 21, 1834, died at his home in Deloit, Iowa, October 21, 1911, aged 76 years and 10 months. Bro. Dobson married Miss Lucy Winans, February 18, 1855. To this union ten children were born, two preceded him to the other side. He was tenderly cared for during his two months of sickness by the wife of his youth, with whom he traveled life's rugged road for over fifty-six years, and their youngest daughter Edith. He was baptized in 1866 by his brother, Thomas Dobson, and died with a bright hope of a glorious resurrection. Funeral services in the Saints' church at Deloit, Iowa, by J. M. Baker.

HARSON.—Sarah Harson was born December 19, 1818, at Lincolnville, Waldo County, Maine. Departed this life November 8, after a lingering illness. She was married to William Harson; to this union there were born eight children. Three sons and three daughters survive their mother. Sr. Harson united with the church, being baptized June 26, 1864, by Elder Thomas Jenkins, at Rockingham, Iowa. She was a faithful Saint, dying strong in the faith, and now awaits the resurrection of the just. Funeral services were held at the home in Rock Island, conducted by Joseph Arber, assisted by Alfred C. Needham. Interment in the Chippiannock Cemetery.

WELLINGTON.—Elder Thomas Wellington was born near Nauvoo, Illinois, May 16, 1849, and left motherless when a babe. His mother, an English Saint, was Elizabeth Kendall Wellington. July 13, 1863, he was baptized by Joseph R. Lambert, at Pilot Grove, Illinois, and ordained an elder May 14, 1876, at Fountain Green, Illinois, by Solomon J. Salisbury. He was married to Miss Martha B. Patterson, March 25, 1869, a union unmarred by a discondant note. To them were born ten children, of whom seven are living and with his faithful wife, mourn his death. They are T. W. Wellington, of Fort Madison, Iowa, Mrs. Nettie Orfield, of Decatur, Iowa, Mrs. Ada Whittier and Mrs. Lula Bedell, and Melvin, Ward, and Vida, all of Monte Vista, Colorado, where he had spent the last three years of his life. He was a pioneer of Decatur County, Iowa, where he lived for more than twenty years. He had great affection for his twelve grandchildren, and will be missed by them and his half brothers and sisters, John Kendall, of Nauvoo, Mrs. Isabelle Arnold, of Hamilton, Illinois, and Mrs. Elizabeth A. Smith, of Lamon, Iowa, and their children. He was a faithful husband, a kind father, and a humble servant of God. His body rests in the cemetery at Monte Vista while his spirit finds fairer fields in the paradise of God.

THANKSGIVING OFFERING.

The various locals of the Religio and interested members scattered abroad are expected to make an offering to this fund. All who are interested, whether or not members of the Religio, are invited to join in this effort. The money is to be used in translating the Book of Mormon into some foreign language, to aid in spreading the latter day work. The German edition is completed, and there is strong demand for editions in other languages.

For the Public Good.

One hears a good deal about the power of the press, but the fact is that no newspaper has very much real power over men or events in these days unless it is known to be standing sanely and steadfastly for the welfare of the whole community and nation. The day of the party organs is past. Sensational papers appealing to popular passions can not move thoughtful men—the men who make history. The only kind of newspaper that really has tremendous power in these days is the independent, reliable, disinterested journal of wide circulation, whose columns are known to stand always for the general good—for public honesty and a square deal, whatever happens. An excellent example of this sort of journalism is The Chicago Record-Herald. It has the enormous circulation that deservedly goes with the printing of all the news, but its power lies in its wise, conservative, independent editorial policy, which is shaped with one sole end in view—the public good. Its news and critical columns show the same spirit. It is an ideal paper for the home.

The Sacred College.

A cardinal's privileges are in keeping with his high position. He has a place and a vote in general councils, he is the only one to leave Rome as a legate a latere, he takes precedence of all other church dignitaries but the pope, in secular courts he ranks with princes of the blood royal, must always be addressed as "your Eminence," is robed in scarlet, has a sapphire in his ring, and wears a pectoral cross. Cardinals from religious orders, however, keep the color of their religious habit. So Cardinal Falconio will dress in Franciscan gray.

In the appointment of cardinals the pope is free, though the Council of Trent decreed that all Christian nations should be represented in the Sacred College. As a rule, they are, but not necessarily in numbers proportioned to their Catholic population, for the Italian cardinals usually predominate. The full number of seventy is seldom complete. The seventeen cardinals just created will bring the total membership of the church's senate up to sixty-six.

The Sacred College as it stands to-day is unquestionably a remarkably body. It is the only kind of international parliament that is practicable. Though thoroughly aristocratic in its character, its ranks are recruited from all classes of society, and a man of the people by meriting the cardinalate can become the equal of princes. Indeed, repeatedly in the church's history, holiness, scholarship, and administrative genius have won for their possessors the cardinal's hat and even the papal tiara. —From "The New American Cardinals," by Walter Dwight, S. J., in the Review of Reviews for December.

A notable series of papers, to appear soon in The Century, will discuss the American undergraduate, his general character, his relation to his college and to society at large. The writer, Charles Sedgwick Cooper, author of "College men and the Bible," has made a study of college conditions in the United States, Canada, and Europe for many years, and has visited recently practically all of the important educational institutions in India, Ceylon, China, Korea, and Japan. While Mr. Cooper has consulted largely with prominent educators and public men throughout the country, his facts and opinions are based almost entirely upon actual contact with students in lecture-rooms, fraternity houses, the athletic field and campus, in large public gatherings, and in thousands of personal interviews. It is perhaps through the latter channel, the intimate personal contact with the individual undergraduate, says Mr. Sedgwick, that one comes nearer to the real gist and trend of the college man's deeper sentiment.

AN OLD RULE APPLIED TO MODERN CONDITIONS.

A certain clergyman being asked the question, "Is Christianity a failure?" replied, "I do not know; it has never been tried."

This answer was not entirely correct, as we have at least two instances mentioned in the Bible and one in the Book of Mormon where Christianity was tried and an ideal society resulted. On the other hand, every effort to build a society or a nation not founded on Christian principles has failed, and such experiments still fail.

In his memorable sermon on the mount, Jesus propounded that which we now term the "golden rule," a divine philosophy, much lauded in theory and ignored in practice: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

There never was a time when general observance of this rule was needed more than now—particularly in America.

Conditions are not as they were in the days of our fathers and grandfathers. Individualism was the predominating note then. Men and women were pioneers—constantly pushing out upon the frontier, into the wilderness or on to the prairie. They learned to stand alone, independently. Perhaps they bought an ax, a rifle, and some ammunition; but their clothing they made from the raw material; their food they hunted in the forests, or secured from the soil that they tilled; they built their own homes and made their own laws. Thus was produced the highest type of individualism.

But those days are for ever past. "The old order changeth." Old conditions are rapidly passing away and new conditions are destined to come, the exact nature of which we can only surmise.

Society, complicated and intensive, now occupies the domain where formerly a few individuals dwelt in comparative isolation.

Interdependence is constantly increasing. We do some particular part of the work of society and in return others do many things for us. Our clothing and food we buy ready made and prepared. We no longer cut down trees and build homes. We rent or buy homes already erected, perhaps heated and lighted. Our lives touch the lives of others at a thousand points. Individual rights are constantly defined by the rights of other individuals or of society.

Individualism must be succeeded to an extent by social organization—and, let us hope the brotherhood of man, so long heralded by the prophets and poets.

But if this brotherhood ever does obtain (and we are assured that it will), it will come when men learn to obey the "golden rule" so simply stated by the Master. And this golden rule can be obeyed only by those who obey allied gospel principles. The selfish man would that others give to him all their substance and income; so by this rule he must give to others all his substance and income, and starve. Only that man who loves his brother as himself is in condition to obey the golden rule, because he asks from others only that which is just and to all others he is willing to accord that which he himself demands.

No community can exist in peace and harmony, with good will and justice obtaining, unless this rule of conduct is observed. When it is ignored strife and warfare, military or commercial, or between individuals, will always exist, openly or under cover.

The angels that sang about peace on earth and good will toward man knew that Jesus, whom they heralded, brought the plan that will insure peace. Never was there greater need for an observance of that plan than to-day.

The modern conditions which we have already mentioned need just such a rule to solve the many problems of our day, most of which grow out of man's relationship to his fellows. The more social man becomes, the more complicated his social relationship, the more apparent becomes the need of a general Christian spirit that will abide by the teachings of Christ.

Here in this Western World we have a splendid physical basis for a great Christian society and brotherhood. The problem of production is solved. Enough is produced every year to feed, clothe, and shelter all who are willing to work and all who are unable to work. But the problem of equitable distribution is not solved. It waits the dawn of a true

LORRA SCOTT

Christian era. Modern invention has provided means of transportation and communication that knit far separated states and individuals, making possible a community of thought and interest. We have the physical basis for the ideal society; alas, we do not yet have the spiritual basis.

A great deal is said of late about "scientific management." We are told that "scientific management" of factories, mines, and railroads would greatly increase their productiveness, and the sum total of human wealth. No doubt such management is greatly to be desired, that the hours of human labor may be reduced and the results of labor increased; but more to be desired than "scientific management" is Christian management. Without it we shall simply produce more wealth over the division of which we shall continue our present struggle, some features of which must be very abhorrent to the One who propounded the golden rule.

The war of man against the elements and adverse conditions is noble. The war of man against his fellow-man is ignoble.

Peace, harmony, and good will wait upon justice; justice attends obedience to the precepts of Jesus, prominent among which is the rule: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

MODERN IMPROVEMENTS IN PALESTINE.

The HERALD editors have recently come into possession of a copy of The Truth, published in Jerusalem, and dated November 18, 1910. This particular number is over a year old, but in it we find an article that may yet be timely and of some value to the HERALD readers. It deals with improvements and developments in the Holy Land, particularly in regard to transportation facilities, and is written by the editor who, of course, is on the ground and understands the situation. The material as well as spiritual redemption of the Holy Land is a matter that interests the Saints, as they have long foreseen it and have long realized that it is strictly in harmony with prophecies found in both Old and New Testament, as well as in the Book of Mormon and Book of Doctrine and Covenants. It is indeed one of the "signs of the times" so plainly manifest that "he who runs may read." The article is as follows:

The present striking progress of the old Land of Promise has its bearing upon the fulfillment of Old Testament prophecies, for it should be remembered that the country made over by an unconditional covenant to Abraham (and confirmed to Isaac and Jacob) by the Lord (Hebrew Jehovah) has never yet been occupied by his descendants. In Genesis 15: 18-21, we read: "In that same day the Lord made a covenant with Abraham, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt" (surely the Nile, and not the little brook marked in the maps, and which is dried up in the summer) "unto the great river, the river Euphrates," etc., etc. Other prophecies give the eastern borders, which are situated far beyond the borders ever occupied by the ancient Israelites. The "Dan to Beersheba" occupied by them was but a small portion of this Land of Promise. The reason the children of Israel did not possess the land is indicated in numerous places in the Book of Deuteronomy, in which we see that God made a conditional covenant with Israel, that if they truly served and obeyed him, he would give them the whole of the land promised to their fathers. But they did not obey, and therefore did not occupy the land. But this can not alter the unconditional promise of God made to Abraham: As Paul says in Romans 3: 3, "Shall their unbelief make the faith [promise] of God of none effect? God forbid." The promise shall be fulfilled when "all Israel shall shall be saved" (Romans 11: 26). Again, there are many Scriptures (of which Isaiah 11: 12-16 is an example) which show that when the Lord shall restore again his people, there shall be abundant and rapid means to take the seed of Abraham from all quarters of the earth to the Promised Land.

Now, within the last quarter of a century there has been, and is still, going on a rapid linking up of railway communications from all parts of the Eastern Hemisphere to the Promised Land, taking it in its Abrahamic sense. It is well known that the old Bible lands now belong mostly to the Turkish Empire. The Asiatic part of that empire was, until recent years, without railways. At the present moment it is the center of railway enterprise. The first railway opened in Palestine was one connecting the seaport of Jaffa with Jerusalem. Then followed one from Beirut, on the coast, to Damascus in Syria: and, more recently, the line from Haifa round the southern end of the Sea of Galilee to Damascus. There is at the present moment a line being built (the Hedjas Railway), and in part opened, from Damascus to Medina, in Arabia. ("Make straight in the desert a highway for our God."—Isaiah 40: 3.)

Other railways are either built or being built, which will open direct railway communication with Constantinople, and also with the great centers of Europe; while the Bagdad line, running through Mesopotamia, will also form a connection with the principal railway. Other lines will connect Persia and Palestine, running close by the ancient cities of Babylon and Nineveh.

Another feature marking the commercial progress of Palestine, and one which dates only from the Turkish revolution of two years ago, has been the concessions granted for mineral rights. Deuteronomy 8: 9, and many other scriptures speak of the mineral wealth of the Promised Land, but the chosen people seem to have paid but little heed to its existence. It is now being "discovered."

There are four or five very fertile plains around the Dead Sea, watered by both hot and cold springs, so that, taking them in their seasons, crops of vegetables may be grown throughout the whole year.

The only motor boat in Palestine is now on the Dead Sea, a concession for running it and other motor boats having been obtained by a Jew.

These particulars are of interest from the fact that there are references in the Scriptures to a better time in store for this region, the clearest of which, Ezekiel 47: 8-12, distinctly states that the waters of the Dead Sea shall be healed, and the banks thereof covered with vegetation. Although this final phenomenon will be the result of a miracle, it does not forbid, but rather implies, the view that before it is wrought the region will be one of great prospective value to the inhabitants of Palestine.

THE WAVES ARE STILLED FOR BAPTISM.

The following extract is from a letter written by Apostle U. W. Greene, dated Corea, Maine, November 23, 1911: "While seeking a suitable place for baptism at Bar Harbor last Saturday, I slipped on a ledge and dislocated several of my fingers, but with the left hand out of commission had the pleasure of baptizing three on Sunday. A peculiar feature of the baptism was this: A gale had been blowing several days, the surf was furious, and I doubted the ability of any woman to stand in the undertow. After prayer the sea became calm as a pond and remained so during the service. Immediately after closing the service the great waves began rolling in higher than my head, breaking like thunder on the beach. I have not ceased to marvel over the strange occurrence yet. Surely God was with us and his power manifest marvelously. My heart is filled with praise to him for his wonderful mercy."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

DEBATE AT FAIRMONT, WEST VIRGINIA.—From a notice in the Christian Leader and the Way we discover that the debate to be held at Fairmont, West Virginia, referred to by the Reverend McVey in a recent letter to that paper, will be between Pres. Ben E. Rich, of the Eastern States Mission of the Utah Mormon Church, and Rev. A. A. Bunner, Christian Church, of Sardis, Ohio. The debate originally set for December 11 has been postponed until January because Elder Rich is unable to get to West Virginia in December.

DR. ILIFF.—Dr. I. C. Iliff, of University Park, Colorado, has been lecturing on the subject, "Mormonism vs. Americanism," according to a clipping from the Osborne (Colorado?) paper, which is in doubt as to where the Doctor delivered his lecture. We note that he makes it plain that there is a vital distinction between the Utah church and the Reorganization, as the members of the latter are "law-abiding citizens" and have "never been polygamists."

RELIGIOUS ATMOSPHERE.—The Rev. Dr. Jowett, an English preacher who has been serving for a while in New York City, says he does not want to continue his work because his "peculiar qualities, both on an intellectual and spiritual plane, are very largely antagonized by the religious atmosphere of New York." This leaves us in doubt as to where lies the fault.

DR. CAMPBELL.—Dr. Reginald Campbell is another English preacher and is the founder of "new theology." Boston ministers are taking exception to his statement of belief that all sects can go to heaven.

The doctor is visiting in the United States on a tour of explanation of his "new theology," or "modernized Christianity," of which we hope soon to give our readers a brief outline.

LONG-ROBERTS DEBATE.—The Saints of Lamoni and vicinity are specially interested in a six-night debate west of Eagleville, Missouri, between Bro. E. E. Long and Rev. W. G. Roberts, of the Christian Church.

A "MODERN" CHURCH.—We believe our readers will find food for thought in the following news item from a New York paper: "The Rev. William Milton Hess, who dedicated a new church building in the Bronx last Friday and used it for the first time yesterday, left a four thousand dollar place to preach the gospel in New York at fourteen hundred dollars. His new building cost ten thousand dollars, and is a part of Trinity Congregational Church, Tremont. When James B. Reynolds left the University Settlement, and before Mr. Robert Hunter came to it, Mr. Hess was wanted for the place. He declined because he said settlements did not go far enough. 'Socialism is a quack remedy,' said he yesterday, speaking in his opening Sunday address on the uses of his new church. 'Only the old gospel will suffice. But that old gospel must be presented in new ways. There are seven saloons quite near my church. They have bowling alleys. So have we. They charge five cents. So do we. We are going to have a swimming pool one of these days. We have already moving pictures on Sunday nights. The street theaters don't get ahead of us. In my congregation are Catholics, Jews, Episcopalians, Methodists, everybody. They come once and they stay.'"

Genius is only the power of making continuous effort. The line between failure and success is so fine that we scarcely know when we pass it—so fine that we are often on the line and do not know it. How many a man has thrown up his hands at a time when a little more effort, a little more patience, would have achieved success. As the tide goes clear out, so the tide comes clear in. In business sometimes prospects seem darkest when they are really on the turn. A little more effort, a little more persistence, and what seemed failure may turn to glorious success. There is no failure except in no longer trying. There is no defeat except from within; no insurmountable barrier save our own inherent weakness.—Selected.

There is an ancient saying, famous among men, that thou shouldst not judge fully of a man's life before he dieth, whether it should be called blest or wretched.—Sophocles.

SCIENCE OR REVELATION? WHICH?

Synopsis of a sermon by Elder Edward Ingham, Oakland, California, July 30, 1911.

There is no conflict between genuine science and revelation, but between science, falsely so-called, and revelation there is an uncompromising and incessant warfare, and one or the other must eventually capitulate.

The sentences of the revelation are final, for God will not alter the things that are gone out of his lips; the sentences of science, on the other hand, are its last and best, but not final, and subject, therefore, to modification and change. The doctrine of "spontaneous generation" of life, once so popular in the scientific world, has been discarded by the foremost philosophers of our day, and the doctrine of "biogenesis" has received their acknowledgment. Tyn-dall has affirmed that "No shred of trustworthy experimental testimony exists to prove that life in our day has ever appeared independently of antecedent life." The theory of "evolution," as enunciated by Darwin and Spencer, involves this largely discredited doctrine of "spontaneous generation." According to the evolutionary order, the primal germ made the tadpole, the tadpole made the fish, the fish made the reptile, the reptile made the wolf, and the wolf made the chimpanzee, and the chimpanzee made the man. Now, the question is, "Who made the primal germ?" The scientist, in order to eliminate God from the whole scheme of creation must reply, "I don't know," or, "It was spontaneously generated."

The Bible account of creation informs us that "God created great whales, and every living creature that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly, after their kind, and God blessed them saying, Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the waters in the seas, and let the fowl multiply in the earth."—Genesis 1: 21, 22. And verse 24 says he created "cattle and creeping things and beast after his kind." It is significant that this scriptural account is specific as to the classification of genera—everything being created "after its kind" and the divine plan indicating that each kind should reproduce its kind and nothing diverse therefrom. It is a fact worthy of notice in this connection that Prof. Agassiz claims to have discovered on a reef off the coast of Florida, the remains of insects which he estimated to be 30,000 years old, and that they are just the same as the living insects to-day. There has been no change in 30,000 years.

Genesis 1: 26 informs us that God said: "Let us make man in our own image, after our likeness." This language clearly places man in a genus separate and distinct from the brute creation. There is no kinship. Man is not of bestial pedigree but is destined to exercise dominion over all the rest of creation.

Between the physical construction of the highest animal and the lowest man there is a chasm as wide as the world. The brain of the largest gorilla ever known measured thirty cubic inches, whereas the brain of the most ignorant man ever known measured fifty-five cubic inches; a difference of 25 cubic inches. Besides, there is a difference in the blood corpuscle, in nerve, in muscle, in bone, and sinew. To the processes of nature, however, evolution has its proper application and limitations. We have the wonderful metamorphosis of the acorn into the majestic oak, the transformation of the tadpole into the frog, and the caterpillar into the beautiful butterfly. We also meet with marvelous examples of what Mr. Darwin terms "Variation under domestication." We also encounter the hybrid in nature; but no hybrid is fertile. So that, after all, the statements of revelation that God created every living creature "after its kind" stands yet unimpeached by science, and the doctrine of biogenesis has never been frustrated.

Revelation further teaches us that there is no such thing as "spontaneous generation," in a spiritual sense. Christ enunciated the doctrine of "re-generation" as the only means of making eternal life accessible to mortal man. "Ye must be born again," said he. And he gave a most cogent reason for this in his further language, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the spirit is spirit."—John 3: 6. There we have a wide disparity. There is no kinship. They belong to different genera, hence the necessity of a regeneration.

It is pointed out in one of the Pauline epistles that there is a marked difference in their respective mental attitudes: "For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the spirit, the things of the spirit. For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. Because the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be."—Romans 8: 5, 7. The law of God to which the carnal mind can not become subject is previously referred to by the writer in this same epistle as "the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus."—Romans 8: 2. It is there mentioned in contradistinction to "the law of sin and death." Keeping these facts in view, we can the more readily appreciate the force of the apostles reasoning a little further along in this same epistle, "be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable and perfect, will of God."—Romans 12: 2. This transformation and mental renewing is wrought out through the operation of the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus. It is a direct result of regeneration. The doctrine of "spontaneous generation" has no place in this economy; be born and be ye transformed indictate that we are to be acted upon by some influence or agency outside of and superior to ourselves. We can not be "born" nor "transform" ourselves. Eternal life therefore, is not a product of spontaneous generation; neither is it a result of moral evolution. "Not by the works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost, which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Savior; that being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life."—Titus 3: 5, 7.

There is no disparagement of good works in this language, but merely an emphasis of the fact that eternal life is not predicated upon ethics. It is an endowment which comes to man through the medium of the law of the spirit of the life. The language: "We should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life" indicates this. We can not make ourselves heirs. Another inspired writer points out that eternal life is the gift of God through Jesus Christ, and those who ignore this truth are placing God in the attitude of a liar: "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself, he that believeth not God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave his son. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."—1 John 5: 10-12. It is significant that three different authorities should present practically the same thought in such terse yet distinctive terms; now notice, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the spirit is spirit."—Jesus. "To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace."—Paul. "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."—John.

It will avail us little to be like Israel in the days of old, having a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge; being ignorant of God's righteousness and going about to establish our own righteousness, but failing to submit ourselves unto the righteousness of God, that is, to the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus. We are called upon to act the part of intelligent creatures. We should not live in ignorance of our obligations towards God, but should recognize the demands of the law of the spirit of life and submit ourselves thereto, rather than take our own ideas as the measure of righteousness. Man's ascription of supreme authority to an idea merely because it happens to be his idea, proves nothing, unless it be potent enough to overrule all the evidence by which it is opposed. The doctrine of evolution has its proper place in man's experience, and likewise its limitations,—not the evolution from beast to man, but the evolution from the man Adam to the man Christ Jesus. "But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord."—2 Corinthians 3: 18. This is the evolution from corruption to incorruption and from mortality to immortality.

A REVIEW OF "MORMONISM AGAINST ITSELF."—PART 14.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

A CHRISTIAN CIVILIZATION.

If arts and learning and the principles of the Christian religion constitute evidences of a Christian civilization, then the American nations can furnish tons of such. Listen to the following:

The calendar system of Mayas and Nahuas present analogies to the system employed by the Persians, Egyptians, and certain Asiatic nations, and the presumption is very strong that the latter furnished the ground-plan upon which the Nahua system was constructed. The accuracy of the Aztec calendar must ever be a monument to their intellectual culture, and an undeniable proof of the advanced state of ancient Mexican civilization.—North Americans, by Short, p. 519.

Again:

The antiquities of Mexico and Central America reveal religious symbols, devices, and ideas nearly identical with those found in all countries of the Old World where Cushite communities formerly existed. . . . He [Humboldt] found evidence of it in the religious symbols, the architecture, the hieroglyphics, and the social customs made manifest by ruins, which he was sure came from the other side of the ocean.—Prehistoric Nations, p. 393.

Further:

The ruins show that they had the art of writing, and that at the south this art was more developed, more like a phonetic system of writing, than that found in use among the Aztecs. The inscriptions of Palenque, and the characters used in some of the manuscript books that have been preserved, are not the same as the Mexican picture writing. It is known that books or manuscript writings were abundant among them in the ages previous to the Aztec period. They had an accurate measure of the solar year, and a system of chronology, and many of their writings were historical.—Ancient America, p. 187.

Among the symbols of the Christian faith is the "cross,"—tablet of which was found in the ruins of Palenque. The monument has become widely known through Mr. J. L. Stephens's drawing in Incidents of Travel in Central America. It has aroused the attention of the amateur investigator and scientists everywhere, and while it has remained undecipherable, having 250 glyphs on both sides of it, all agree that it represents a "great sacrificial scene." It is made "of fine marble beautifully polished, about three feet high, and three fingers in width, and thickness." But archæologists ask, "How came this emblem of Christianity in America?" Can Mr. Traum answer?

Skelton's Appeal to Common Sense, page 45, says:

How it came to pass that the Egyptians, Arabians, and Indians before Christ came among us, paid a remarkable veneration to the cross, is to me unknown; but the fact itself is known, and in Egypt it stood for the signification of eternal life.

TWO LINES OF PRIESTHOOD.

The scientists inform us that the cross is among the most common emblems to be found in the ruins—on monuments, walls, etc. It blends with the service of the priesthood, and of that instituted among the neighboring nations of Mexico, called Zapotecs; we append the following:

There is in all parts of the world a certain fundamental uniformity in religious ideas, still more in religious practices, in spite of a wide difference in the details. Prof. Stoll has lately ingeniously set forth the cause of this uniformity in his book entitled Suggestion und Hypnotismus in der Volkerpsychologie. This uniformity is naturally more striking within the boundaries of one and the same larger or smaller area. Therefore it is not strange that we find the religious life among the Zapotecs, as far as our scanty means permit of elucidating the matter, proceeding on very much the same lines as that of the Mexicans or that of the Mayas, concerning whom we are much better informed on this point, especially in regard to the Mexicans.

Among the Zapotecs the organization of the priesthood seems to have had a somewhat peculiar development and was certainly more compact than among the other nations. They distinguished between high and subordinate priests and pupils, or children who were educated for the priesthood.

The high priests were called Uija-tao, "great seer." Their chief function was evidently to consult the gods in important matters concerning the whole nation or individuals and to transmit the answers to the believers.—Bureau American Ethnology, 1904, p. 275.

The two lines of priesthood—high priests, and subordinate priests, are clearly recognized, but how came they in possession of these "Mosaic rites"?

In Mexico, the high priest was called Quetzalcoatl in memory of the high priest who first taught religious practices, especially sacrifice.—Bureau of American Ethnology, p. 275.

But from the above testimony the real Mosaic idea attaches,—"consulting deity in important matters concerning the whole nation or individuals."

Will Mr. Traum explain, rationally, the origin of this service, outside of the Israelitish polity and Book of Mormon data?

It is evident that our critic is influenced in his interpretation by the theory propagated by the "Campbellites," that there was no gospel preached prior to Pentecost. Yet the cross dates back to fifteen hundred years before Christ, to the time when Moses was in the land of Midian awaiting his "call" to deliver Israel from Egyptian bondage, the time concerning which Paul affirmed, "Moses esteemed the reproach of Christ, greater treasures than those of Egypt."—Hebrews 11.

He (Elder Traum) is not pledged to the Christocentric idea that reaches as far in the past to the necessities of man, as it does in the future. Consequently he is forced to the narrow position that these millions of inhabitants on the western domain have gone down to an ever burning hell, because God, their Father, would not give them an opportunity of going the other way!

Le Plongeon, in Sacred Mysteries, page 48, says he "discovered the existence of twelve sacred orders with their priests," among the Mayas.

BAPTISM IN ANCIENT AMERICA.

De Roo says: "Baptism was in the Mexican empire a religious ceremony, which in Yucatan signified 'to be born again,' and the Nahuas freely admitted that it would cleanse the soul."—History of America before Columbus, 1900, vol. 1, p. 407.

Saint Giles confirms the testimony in relation to this custom, saying:

None might marry who had not been baptized; an unbaptized person was held to be incapable of leading a good life; the banquet at baptism was called the descent of God, and the baptized were spoken of as "born again."—Faiths of the World, p. 24.

Elder Traum should extend the hand of fellowship to these, for the Campbellite doctrine of "regeneration" was fully carried out. The ceremony was in vogue yet in 1898, for The Antiquarian of that date says:

Mr. F. H. Cushing was initiated into one of the sacred orders of the Zunis and was baptized by one of the Zuni chiefs in the waters of the Atlantic Ocean while on an eastern tour with these chiefs.—See vol. 20, p. 275.

Baptism was general among all the Peruvian nations west of the Andes.—Peruvian Antiquity, p. 180.

A belief in "the immortality of the soul," and the resurrection of the dead was common, both in North and South America," (Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, p. 89).

In summing up the details, and writing the result in one brief paragraph, Bancroft says:

The resemblance in the different groups of ruins in Chiapas, Yucatan and Honduras, are more than sufficient to prove intimate connection between the builders. The differences pointed out prove just as conclusively that the edifices were not all erected and dedicated by the same people, under the same laws and religious control at the same epoch.—Native Races of Pacific States, vol. 5, p. 359.

Indeed, "laws" and "religious control" reigned among some of the people who built the "mournful" palaces in Central America.

This testimony tacitly admits that the "spade" is disinterring both Christian and idolatrous evidences from the dust.

MATERIAL DEVELOPMENT.

The ancient Peruvians grew into power and wealth under laws given of God, and the Book of Mormon testifies that when they were loyal and obedient to the laws, they prospered exceedingly, and "there was no poor among them." And there were no rich among them, for "they were equal." All had plenty, and as attesting the truth of the book's record of these laws, and the beneficent conditions growing out of the application, we cite you to the testimony given in the following (Basis of Prescott):

Agriculture was extensively followed, and indeed so honored was the profession of the farmer that his knowledge was thought to be of divine origin. The Sun—the mother of all mankind—was fabled to have sent her two children to the earth: the one "Manco Capac" to teach men the culture of the earth; the other "Mama Oella" to teach women to spin and weave. How well these two divine missionaries performed their tasks, the remains of the ancient Peruvian farms with their systems of irrigation, and the Spanish Traditions of Peruvian fabrics, testify. Guano, now one of the chief sources of wealth to Peru, was known and used by its ancient people. Land was held by the state and rented out to the people in shares proportionate to the size of the family. The doctrines of communism were put into practice to an extent impossible under any save a strong paternal despotism. The tenure of land, while it rendered poverty unnecessary, nevertheless removed the chief incentive to thrift, as no one could become more wealthy than his neighbor.—Story of Labor in All Lands and Ages, by John Cameron Simonds, and John T. McEnnis, 1886, p. 556.

Surely it was of divine origin—this knowledge. The Book of Mormon teaches that it was God "leading Joseph like a flock." In fact, the control of law was so in keeping with the Israelitish polity that these same authors declare, "that the nearest approach to the ancient Peruvian constitution was in Judea, where on the recurrence of the great national jubilee, at the close of every half century, estates reverted to their original proprietors." (Page 555.)

These authors compare the ancient conditions, the ancient laws, with the present, and say they were similar to those ancient laws and conditions in Judea. They further state that "the land was fallow, one year in seven," and at the end of every half century, "a great jubilee occurred, and estates reverted to their original inheritors."

Elder Traum knows these laws were a part of the code of "redemption laws" of real and personal estate, by which Israel was protected from landlordism on the Eastern Continent; continuing down, under the judges, and after the return from the Babylonian captivity, these laws were renewed under Nehemiah. (See Deuteronomy 15:7-9. Nehemiah 5:11, 12.) But how were they duplicated on the Western Continent among the ancient Peruvians, outside of the Book of Mormon solution of the problem? Will Mr. Traum answer?

TEN REASONS FROM CATLIN.

Mr. George Catlin has given twelve reasons why he concludes the American Indians descended from the Jews. Ten of these reasons are here appended:

I believe, with many others, that the North American Indians are a mixed people—that they have Jewish blood in their veins, though I would not assert, as some have undertaken to prove, "that they are Jews," or that they are "the ten lost tribes of Israel." From the character and confirmation of their heads, I am compelled to look upon them as an amalgam race; but still savages; and from many of their customs, which seem to me to be peculiarly Jewish, as well as from the character of their heads, I am forced to believe that some part of those ancient tribes, who have been dispersed by Christians in so many ways, and in so many different eras, have found their way to this country, where they have entered amongst the native stock. . . . I am induced to believe thus from the very many customs which I have witnessed among them, that appear to be decidedly Jewish, and many of them peculiarly so, that it would seem almost impossible, or at all events, exceedingly improbable, that two peoples in a state of nature should have hit upon them, and practiced them exactly alike. . . . The first and most striking fact amongst the North American Indians that refers us to the Jews, is that of their worshiping, in all parts, the Great Spirit, or Jehovah, as the Hebrews were ordered to do by divine precept, instead of plurality of gods, as ancient pagans and heathens did, and the idols of their own formation. . . .

First, "The Jews had their sanctum sanctorum, and so it may be said the Indians have, in their council or medicine houses, which are always held as sacred places." Second, "As the Jews had, they have their high priests and their prophets." Third, "Amongst the Indians, as amongst the ancient Hebrews, the women are not allowed to worship with the men, and in all cases also, they eat separately." Fourth, "The Indians, everywhere, believe that they are the favorite people of the Great Spirit, and they certainly are, like that ancient people, persecuted, as every man's hand seems raised against them." Fifth, "In their marriages, the Indians, as did the ancient Jews, uniformly buy their wives by giving presents; and in many tribes, very closely resemble them in other forms and ceremonies of their marriages." Sixth, "In their preparations for war, and in peacemaking, they are strikingly similar." Seventh, "In their treatment of the sick, burial of the dead, and mourning, they are also similar." Eighth, "In their bathing and ablutions, at all seasons of the year, as a part of their religious observances, having separate places for men and women to perform these immissions, they resemble again."—Catlin's North American Indian, vol. 2, pp. 332-335.

Reason twelve is stated by Mr. Catlin as follows:

Amongst the list of their customs, however, we meet a number which had their origin, it would seem, in the Jewish ceremonial code, and which are so very peculiar in their forms that it would seem quite improbable, and almost impossible, that two different people should have hit upon them alike without some knowledge of each other. These, I consider, go farther than anything else as evidence, and carry, in my mind, conclusive proof that these people are tinctured with Jewish blood.—Ibid.

INDIAN LANGUAGES AND HEBREW.

Mr. Boudinot, whom we have previously mentioned, says:

Their languages in their roots, idioms, and particular construction appear to have the whole genius of the Hebrew; and what is very remarkable, have most of the peculiarities of that language, especially from those in which it differs from most other languages.—The American Indians, p. 98; also see page 101.

The following table from Short, prepared by the Mexican scholar, Senor Melgar, also quoted by Donnelly, page 234, will present the close affinity in the languages:

English.	Chiapenec.	Hebrew.
Son.....	Been.....	Ben.
Daughter.....	Batz.....	Bath.
Father.....	Abagh.....	Abba.
Star in Zodiac.....	Chimax.....	Chimah.
King.....	Molo.....	Maloc.
Name applied to Adam.....	Abagh.....	Abah.
Afflicted.....	Chanam.....	Chanan.
God.....	Elab.....	Elab.
September.....	Tsiquin.....	Tischiri.
More.....	Chic.....	Chi.
Rich.....	Chabin.....	Chabic.
Son of.....	Enot.....	Enos.
To give.....	Votan.....	Votan.

The Chiapenec (pronounced che-a-pa), is one of the most ancient races of Central America.

Senor Melgar is a Mexican linguist, who prepared the table above, from tablets and calendar.

Mr. A. A. Bancroft, father to the author of Native Races, gives the following description of a slab found in Ohio:

About eight miles southeast of Newark there was formerly a large mound composed of masses of free-stone, which had been brought from some distance and thrown into a heap without much placing or care. In the early days, stone being scarce in that region, the settlers carried away the mound piece by piece to use for building purposes, so that in a few years there was little more than a large flattened heap of rubbish remaining. Some fifteen years ago, the county surveyor (I have forgotten his name), who had for some time been searching ancient works, turned his attention to this particular pile. He employed a number of men and at once proceeded to open it. Before long he was rewarded by finding in the center and near the surface a bed of the tough clay generally known as pipe-clay, which must have been brought from a distance of some twelve miles. Imbedded in the clay was a coffin, dug out of a burr-oak log, and in a pretty good state of preservation. In the coffin was a skeleton, with quite a number of stone ornaments and emblems, and some open brass rings, suitable for bracelets or anklets. These being removed, they dug down deeper, and soon discovered a stone dressed to an oblong shape, about eighteen inches long and twelve wide, which proved to be a casket, neatly fitted and completely watertight, containing a slab of stone of hard and fine quality, an inch and a half thick, eight inches long, four inches and a half wide at one end, and tapering to three inches at the other. Upon the face of the slab was the figure of a man, apparently a priest, with a long flowing beard, and a robe reaching to his feet. Over his head was a curved line of characters, and upon the edges and back of the stone were closely and neatly carved letters. The slab, which I saw myself, was shown to the Episcopalian clergyman of Newark, and he pronounced the writing to be the ten commandments in ancient Hebrew.—Native Races, vol. 5, pp. 94, 95.

The Prophetic Watchman, commenting on this

"find," among other Hebrew relics, says of this stone, known as the Decalogue stone:

The last relic is an object of much interest. It was found in 1860 and has engraven upon it a figure of Moses, and the ten commandments. One side is depressed and the reverse protrudes. Over the figure there is a Hebrew word signifying 'Moses.' The other inscriptions are almost literally the words found in some parts of the Bible, and the ten commandments are given in part and entirely—the longest being abbreviated. The alphabet used, it is thought, is the original Hebrew one, as there are letters known in the Hebrew alphabet [not] now in use, but bearing a resemblance to them. All things on this stone point to the time before Ezra, to the lost tribes of Israel, and the theory is, that some one of these tribes found their way into this continent, and settled where the State of Ohio now exists.

In connection with the above, we would suggest that Mr. Traum read page 500 of the Book of Mormon once more: "And if our plates had been sufficiently large, we should have written in Hebrew; but the Hebrew hath been altered by us also." What does the Watchman' say? "The alphabet used, it is thought, is the original Hebrew one, as there are letters known in the Hebrew alphabet (not) now in use, but bearing a resemblance to them."

In May, 1861, Mr. G. R. Lederer, in Israelite Indeed, writing of this Decalogue stone, and the form of the characters engraved thereon, makes the following corroborative statement:

The form of the characters is neither the modern Hebrew, (adopted by the high council in consequence of the fact that the "Cuthiyun," or Samaritans, adopted the ancient Hebrew), nor is it the Samaritan, which shows again that the writer or writers had already forgotten much. Of one thing, however, I am morally convinced: that this stone is a genuine relic of antiquity, as it would be a greater difficulty to believe in the invention of such a strange mixture of characters, disorder of combination, and innocent blunders, than to believe it the handiwork of one long passed away.—From Ruins Revisited, by S. F. Walker, p. 213.

Will Mr. Traum rise and explain? The Book of Mormon informed us thirty years before this "genuine relic of antiquity" was "exhumed by the spade," that this ancient people of America were of the Israelitish nation, and brought with them five books of Moses and the prophets down to about the fifth chapter of Jeremiah, and they had altered the Hebrew, and understood it in a changed form. Did the "ignorant" boy make all the coincidences? Did he put that stone in the "New Ark" mound in Ohio? Did he "scribble" the characters on that stone? One more evidence we present as showing direct relationship of the ancient Americans with the Israelites, and as witnessing eastern science. In the twentieth annual report of the Bureau of Ethnology, is the account of finding a sun dial in Menard's Mound in Arkansas. The report says:

On the reverse side of the dial is a perfect analogy, the Yoni emblem found upon bottles, is depicted. The sun dial is divided into thirty-six divisions of ten degrees each, as Ahaa's sun dial, ten degrees being spoken of five times.

The sun dial of Ahaz, "is the first one we have record of in the history of the world" says Stoddard. The American dial can not get back of Ahaz's dial. Ahaz reigned 742 B. C. Isaiah turned the shadow back ten degrees, 713 B. C. (2 Kings 16: 20.) In 713 B. C. time was not divided into hours. The dial antedated the time when "hours" first began to be used. The first time "hour" is used in the Bible is in Daniel 3: 6. They are not spoken of in the Bible previous to 570 B. C. The dial found in America was wrought before the division of time into "hours." "It is not possible to ascertain the time on the American dial by any other system than the Ahaz sun dial system." The conclusion is legitimate, the American dial was brought to the Western Continent between the time Ahaz reigned and the time of the captivity in Babylon. The correlation is complete; it being a replication of Ahaz's sun dial, or else the original. The Book of Mormon gives an account of two colonies leaving Jerusalem about the time of that captivity, and settling in America. See Genesis 49: 22-26; Deuteronomy 33: 13-17; Jeremiah 49: 30-32.

TRAUM SUPPORTS THE BOOK OF MORMON.

Elder Traum has consumed time and energy in adducing evidence of the apostate condition of Israel on this continent. He has banked on the idolatry of later times, as brought to light by the "spade"; but his fatal mistake is the amalgamation of both the ancient and comparatively modern evidence as exhumed, and filing them together on the same wire.

Mr. Traum evidently thinks he is making a strong point against the Book of Mormon when he marshals evidence of an anti-Christian civilization, but he is making points directly in favor of it. Col. Ingersoll thought he made arguments against the Bible by showing up false theories, but his work was full of good things as showing that the Bible predicted that false theories and dogmas should be taught. He really proved that the Bible told the truth. So with our critic's work. His evidences establish the Book of Mormon, in that his work of proving the idolatrous condition of the nations on this continent in later days simply argues that the book told the truth. We can not help the mortification it causes Mr. Traum. It may be a bitter dose, but the prescription says, "take it every half hour."

Here is the prophetic statement of the book:

But woe, woe, unto you that are not pure in heart; that are fitly this day before God; for except ye repent the land is cursed for your sakes; and the Lamanites which are not are filthy this day before God; for except ye repent the land cursing) shall scourge you even unto destruction. And the time speedily cometh, that except ye repent, they shall possess the land of your inheritance, and the Lord God will lead away the righteous out from among you. Behold the Lamanites, your brethren, whom you hate because of their filthiness and the cursings which have come upon their skins, are more righteous than you; for they have not forgotten the commandment of the Lord, which was given unto our fathers, that they should have, save it be one wife, and concubines they should have none.—Book of Mormon, p. 117, Lamoni Edition.

Here is a prophecy that the Lamanites should possess,—overrun, this land after the destruction of the Nephites.

On page 491, we are offered a prophecy that deals with the finale of that people as follows:

And this is the commandment which I have received; and behold they (the writings, the Book of Mormon.—S. W. L. S.) shall come forth according to the commandment of the Lord, when he shall see fit, in his wisdom. And behold, they shall go unto the unbelieving Jews; and for this intent shall they go; that they may be persuaded that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God; that the Father may bring about, through his Most Beloved, his great and eternal purpose in restoring the Jews, or all the house of Israel to the land of their inheritance, which the Lord their God hath given them, unto the fulfilling of his covenant, and also that the seed of this people may more fully believe his gospel which shall go forth unto them from the Gentiles; for this people shall be scattered and shall become a dark, a filthy, and a loathsome people, beyond the description of that which ever hath been amongst us; yea, even that which hath been among the Lamanites; and this because of their unbelief and idolatry.

Again, page 33:

And I bear record that the people of Nephi did seek diligently to restore the Lamanites unto the true faith in God. But our labors were vain; their hatred was fixed, and they were led by their evil nature, and they became wild, and ferocious, and a bloodthirsty people; full of idolatry, and filthiness.

RELIGION MUST BE REASONABLE.

There are at least three reasons why we are interested in the appended clipping. First, Prof. Fiske is connected with Oberlin College, Ohio, in the library of which is deposited the famous Spalding manuscript, "Manuscript Found," from which enemies of the work have alleged that the Book of Mormon was plagiarized; also Oberlin College is to be noted as having been a pioneer in educational work in Ohio at the time of the restoration of the gospel, and took certain positions on educational questions that were in accordance with the spirit of the gospel that was being preached and accepted so widely in that region in those early years. Second, these opinions were expressed before a Canadian audience in the city of London. Third, there are pointed out certain reasons for the weakness of the hold which modern popular churches have upon the people.

Four opinions expressed by Prof. Fiske we particularly desire to have noted as matter for thought. First, a religion must be reasonable and intellectually trustworthy, to appeal to the hearts of men.

Second, Canada's social, immigration, and race problems will be as bad as those of the United States in ten years. Third, the fundamental principles of religion are the basis of Christian unity. Fourth, there are many obsequious caterers to the pleasure of the rich among modern preachers.

"If there is a citizen of the United States here he ought to feel as much ashamed of the conditions that exist there as I do," said Prof. Fisk, in his sermon on "The modern message of the church to men" at the Auditorium yesterday afternoon.

"There are people who say that men are not naturally religious and that man is a social animal," said he, "but I do not believe that. I believe that masculine men deep in their hearts are more easily touched at their hearts than a woman is but his religion must be reasonable and intellectually trustworthy and must appeal to his heart before he will listen to it. It must also be a religion that does things and proves its efficiency in transformed lives and regenerated activity." He then spoke of the different reformatations in religion at different times since the beginning of the world, and asked what he thought to be the question of the hour: "Is the church holding men as it used to?" "In answer to that question," said he, "I will say that there are more men attending the churches and Sunday schools in the past three years than there used to be, but I think church attendance is a poor test of religion among men. Why hasn't the church the power of determining the righteousness of politics and the right of power? Because in this age the social problem in the United States is so great that the children of a great many people are dependent on the decency of their neighbors for sustenance. Canada has not become as bad as that yet, because her cities are mostly small, but in ten years from now her social, immigration and race problems will be as bad as the United States. There are 164 major denominations in the United States to-day, but the difference in creeds is melting and the time will come when Christian people will merge on the fundamental principles of religion and then the poor man will get what is his due. Many preachers get up in their pulpits and preach only that which will satisfy certain rich members of their congregations, and some of those members if they had their just deserts would be serving time instead of walking boldly into a church, with their heads held high."—London Free Press, November 20, 1911.

Latter Day Saints believe that theirs is the most reasonable religion, and because of this are ever ready for free and open discussion; also they believe their system to be founded upon the fundamental principles of religion, and were calling the religious world to union on that basis over eighty years ago.—R. J. F.

FOR AND AGAINST RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Bishop Richardson, in his opening address at the laymen's missionary conference held at Saint John, New Brunswick, November 20, which is one of a series of like conferences that have been held during the past few weeks throughout Canada from the Pacific to the Atlantic, strongly advocated the teaching of the Bible in the schools.

Six days later, Bishop Williams, of the Anglican diocese of Huron, preaching at Saint George's Church, London, made a vigorous plea for religious instruction in the public schools of Ontario. We give his views expressed on that occasion as reported by the London Free Press:

"Not long ago, I received a copy of the regulations of the department of education of Ontario. In looking through the regulations on what the teachers have to teach I did not see the name of God mentioned once. The teachers are told to teach duty, but the name of God does not occur, and I defy anyone to point out to me a man who will do his duty, or who knows what it is, if he does not believe in God.

"It is a purely materialistic system that is promoted by the educational department. We need to reform it, and let our teachers have the privilege, at all events, of teaching the children their duty to God.

"The only place in this country to-day where duty and righteousness are taught is in the churches. It is not prescribed for the teachers, and if they do not teach it it is a work of supererogation. And this in Christian Ontario! Therefore comes the necessity for the Christian people of this country to see that truth and righteousness and moral light are maintained, propagated, and held forth in our churches."

That is one side of the question, as expressed by a representative Anglican. Now for the other, opposing the policy advocated by these learned bishops, the view held by the Baptists, their definite stand regarding this matter, was dealt with by Rev. John Hawkings, of Sarnia, in his sermon on "The introduction of Bible teaching into the public schools; why the Baptists oppose it," delivered at the Adelaide Street Baptist Church, London, November 19. He gives four reasons for the position taken, as follows:

"The Baptists oppose the introduction of Bible teaching into the public schools for several reasons. They oppose it first, because it violates the principle of separation of church and state, for which the Baptists have contended for ages. Introducing Bible teaching into the public schools makes the state the instrument of the church.

"You can not teach the Bible as literature, simply, in any Christian country. The Koran could be taught as literature here but not in Turkey.

"Second, the Bible should be kept out of the schools in the interests of the man who believes in it. I am not inveighing against the reading of the Bible in the schools without notes or comments, but teaching the Scriptures is a different matter. The state is without proper machinery for such teaching; it requires Christian teachers. If the Bible is taught in the schools the teaching will be shaded according to the religious views of the teachers.

"Third, the introduction of such teaching would make impossible the banishment of separate schools, because the moment such were introduced the public schools would become Protestant, and give the Catholics one of their strongest arguments. Honest, fair-minded Protestants then could not under these circumstances advocate the abolition of the separate school. The Baptists are sincere in their conviction regarding church and state. They have never taken a dollar of government money.

"Fourth, the place to teach the Bible is in the home and in the church and in the Sunday school."

The question of religious instruction in the schools is one that has very seriously agitated Canadian provinces in the past, the most important development being the famous Manitoba separate school question; and the above shows that the matter is still one requiring very careful handling at the hands of our provincial legislatures, because of the various and conflicting interests, views, and positions of the different religious bodies.—R. J. F.

Saskatoon, Saskatchewan.

I am writing to the Canadian Mirror Department to let all know that the work of this glorious gospel is growing and increasing in interest all the time in this great north-western district. There is no branch in Saskatoon, the nearest being fifteen miles away. Bro. J. W. Peterson is talking of hiring a hall in town and holding meetings every Sunday night. I hope he does. But very few people here have ever heard the restored gospel preached. I will do all I can to help, and though I am only one I have a few friends, and I will try to get them to go. One of my friends has been getting some of my papers to read. I would like to have a good branch here. This is my first letter to any of the church papers. I have been in the church ever since I was eleven years old, now over thirteen years. I have three children, one boy and two girls. My husband is not a member of the church, but have hope that he will be some time. I ask you to pray that the time may soon come when he will enter the waters of baptism.

I am your sister,

OCTOBER 13, 1911.

Mrs. W. E. DORR.

A quiet wedding took place at Manitowaning, Manitoulin Island, Ontario, on October 3, when Bro. Myles D. Sagle was married to Sr. Ina Sophia, the third daughter of Bro. and Sr. William H. Bryant, all of whom are members of the branch at this place. The ceremony took place at the home of the bride's parents. The writer officiated in the presence of a few of their friends. All wish much happiness to the newly wedded couple.—W. R. S.

CATHOLICS MARRIED BY A PROTESTANT.

The eyes of all Canada have been upon a certain case in the courts at Montreal in which the right claimed by the Roman Catholic Church to declare null and void ad initio the marriage of Catholics by a Protestant minister was at issue. A judgment was rendered March 23, 1911, declaring the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Hebert invalid, they being Catholics married by a Protestant minister. However, litigation was continued and eventually, on November 20, the plaintiff, Eugene Hebert, filed a desistment, resulting in the opposition to the original judgment being sustained. This left Mrs. Hebert in the anomalous position of being married in the eyes of the law, but not in the eyes of the church.

The Roman Catholic Archbishop Bruchesi, of Montreal, had issued a circular, No. 65, November, 1907, as follows:

"Tell your parishioners in our name that we will no longer grant dispensations, even though they bring forward the weighty reasons of temporal advantage or mutual affection, even though they threaten to seek the services of a minister of another religion. We would also remind you that there is excommunication against every Catholic who attempts to be married by a Protestant minister."

Archbishop Bruchesi also made the following claim on behalf of his church:

"We in the Province of Quebec where we demand that the civil power shall recognize the impediments to marriage ordained by the Catholic Church, do not solicit any favor, but demand a right guaranteed by treaty by the constitution of the country, and by the laws of our civil code."

The Protestant churches have taken decisive action in regard to the matter. A memorandum was authorized by a representative meeting of the Protestant churches early last month, which was prepared by a committee appointed by one of the churches and submitted to committees of other religious communions. It sets forth a historical resume of the law dealing with marriage in Canada, and submits seven conclusions, chief of which are the following:

"As 'legal equality among all religious denominations is an admitted principle of colonial legislation,' there is therefore given 'the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship without discrimination or preference to all his majesty's subjects.'

"A uniform system of laws should be enacted to regulate the procedure whereby the status of marriage should be created and evidenced, bringing, so far as possible, the laws for the solemnization of marriage of all the provinces into conformity.

"By such enactments every care should be taken to prevent illicit, secret, clandestine or improper marriages, and to compel by such means as may be legitimately devised that the same should be solemnized openly and publicly.

"That it be declared when such marriage status exists it can only be impeached under any statute that may be enacted by the Dominion of Canada, and that no communion, community or individual can otherwise question the legality of such marriage, discredit the parties to it, the legitimacy of the offspring or the civil rights flowing from it.

"That if there be any matter of doubt or question of law to be solved, a case raising all such questions be prepared by the Government and submitted at once for the opinion of the privy council."

This memorandum has been approved and adopted on behalf of the following: The Church of England in Canada, the Methodist Church in Canada, the Presbyterian Church in Canada, the Baptist Church convention of Ontario and Quebec, the Congregational Union of Canada, Canada yearly meeting of Friends, the Evangelical Alliance.

Bishop Farthing, of Montreal, a representative Anglican, makes a very clear and comprehensive statement of the matter, which we think worthy of a careful reading. He says:

"This present agitation has arisen chiefly through the action of the archbishop in annulling the Hebert marriage, which our courts have not, happily, now sustained. To permit a woman who has been faithful to her marriage vows, to be cast off with her innocent child, because she was married by a Protestant minister, duly authorized by the state to perform marriages, is much worse than divorce, which can in Canada only be granted for the cause of adultery. If this woman sinned against her church by her act, one would have thought that the fatherly heart of the archbishop would have persuaded her to permit him to validate the marriage according to the laws of his church, and not cast her away as a 'vile woman.'

"No one neither questions the rights of any church to make laws to govern its members, nor its right to discipline them when they violate these laws, but the extreme penalty which any church can exercise is to excommunicate the offender. No church or society can be permitted to annul marriages.

"The Roman Catholic Church has no special privileges by our constitution in Canada. Provincial legislation may have granted such, but not the constitution. Most earnestly would I appeal to his grace, and to all citizens who believe in the sacredness of marriage, not to force upon us in Canada, purely civil marriages, as is the case in Italy. We want equal rights for all in this Dominion; and it is the right of any citizen to say what officer shall officiate at his wedding, and when one who is authorized by the state does it, then the state must uphold the act of the officer who acted under its license. No one can be permitted to touch the civil status of such persons, or their offspring. The church may refuse them communion, that is her right; but she must not say that the marriage for ecclesiastical offenses is invalid. Nor must anyone impugn such marriages legally contracted. The state dare not permit any church to do so; if it does, then it undermines the stability of the state and the church."

We hope this discussion will not degenerate into a strife in which Protestant and Catholic citizens will be ranged on opposite sides. This would leave no part of the Dominion untouched by factional contest. It affects a civil right and most solemn contract, on which all should ask the blessing of the church to which they belong. But the civil law must settle the terms of this contract for all. The church should not place itself above the state in regard to marriage laws.

To show the marked contrast between the position of the Roman Catholic Church and that of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in regard to this question, it is only necessary to quote one sentence from Doctrine and Covenants 111: 1, which reads: "According to the custom of all civilized nations, marriage is regulated by laws and ceremonies: therefore we believe, that all marriages in this Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints should be solemnized in a public meeting, or feast, prepared for that purpose: and that the solemnization should be performed by a presiding high priest, high priest, bishop, elder, or priest, not even prohibiting those persons who are desirous to get married, of being married by other authority."

R. J. FARTHING.

Princess Theater Services, Toronto.

For some time past the Saints have been looking forward to the opening of the Princess. As the cold weather approaches the desire for big meetings gets hold of the people. These services have become a fixed part of our program and the happiest season of the year. We are now commencing our eighth winter in this line of work and find ourselves in better condition to start than on any previous occasion; all departments of the work are alive and active.

A few weeks ago the choir gave a successful concert for the purpose of raising funds to commence the work. This was followed on Thanksgiving Day (October 30) with a chicken supper under the management of the Ladies' Auxiliary. A splendid time was had and the proceeds will reduce the church debt by $100. The Religio came out with a banquet, celebrating the tenth anniversary of the organization of the Toronto Local. The tables were well supplied with the very best, and the floral decorations were beautiful. Toasts, vocal and instrumental music made up the program. These were a few features of our church work while waiting for the cold weather to commence the winter's work and were good indications that all were in hustling trim.

The spiritual condition of the branch is good. Our prayer services are well attended and we have enjoyed the gifts recently giving much encouragement and needed instruction. We have also had some notable cases of healing.

Bishop Evans has been going continually and has had an exceedingly busy year thus far, but it is largely his own fault, like the squirrel in the barrel cage, if he would keep quiet the cage would be still. However his reply ever is, "I am ready." No work is too much for him and it is fortunate that is his makeup, when he has such an array of young people behind him always looking for something doing. The branch by resolution closed the church on Sunday evenings asking Bro. Evans to take full charge of the services in the theater. He at once commenced organization for the winter and about one hundred and thirty Saints take part in the carrying on of this work.

The opening was set for November 19. The weather was fine. The choir and ushers were all on hand early and when all was in readiness the curtain went up and our eighth season was opened. Every seat was occupied and the prospects for a splendid season are good. The effects of the Sunday World were noticed, a number were present who had been reading the sermons and availed themselves of the first opportunity to hear the Bishop. They expressed themselves as being highly pleased.

Bro. Evans is hard at work making ready his sermons for publication in book form. The book will be ready for circulation about December 1, and will sell for $1.50. It will contain forty-five of his sermons preached this year. It will have a lot of very valuable information on every phase of the latter day work, and will be an excellent book to hand to an outsider as every subject will be thoroughly treated by one of our ablest men. They are real live sermons as preached by Bishop Evans to a Toronto audience and reported by the Toronto Sunday World stenographer. Send $1.50 to Bishop Evans, 35 Huron Street, Toronto. Do not send checks they cost fifteen cents exchange. Send registered letter or money order. The book will be 7 by 10 containing four hundred pages, large clear type. It will be cloth bound with gold trimmings.

If I were what the words are,
And love were like the tune,
With double sound and single Delight our lips would mingle,
With kisses glad as birds are
That get sweet rain at noon;

Babyhood.--No. 3.

As the baby grows, still remember the doctrine of "wholesome neglect," simply seeing that he is wisely fed and his bodily comfort assured, then leaving him to develop spontaneously. "Put him on the bed or on a quilt on the floor, or in summer on the grass, and watch him as he gets acquainted with himself and the world. He needs to be held constantly no more than you do, and if you do not stir up his brain unduly by talking to him or interfering with his mental processes he will, if in health, be happy in the freedom to develop according to his own nature. Those little aimless motions of his hands and feet are his efforts to get hold of and control his physical machinery. By these efforts he is building his brain material into actual brain power. As fast as his brain develops, he will gain control of his members. To stimulate him to more exertion will tax the immature brain too much and create irritation. Nature will indicate what his activity should be; and it is an injustice to a child to make an undue strain upon his immature powers in order that he shall amuse his elders. When he is strong enough to bear his weight upon his feet, he will get on them without aid. Let him alone and take your pleasure in seeing what he will do each day without assistance."

"The advisability of using 'baby jumpers' or 'baby tenders' is very questionable. The springless go-cart should be used very cautiously, as injury to the spine is liable to result from its use, especially with very young babies."

Do not use the baby's arms as handles by which to lift him, but rather pass the hands gently about his body, giving a broad support that will neither bruise nor strain any part of it. To judge of the practice of lifting a child by one arm (and even with a jerk as we have sometimes witnessed) we have only to think what would be the effect upon ourselves if treated in this way. Ligaments have been torn and little arms carried in slings for weeks as occasional results of this practice, but who knows of the lesser discomforts and injuries to helpless childhood inflicted by it?

Never permit the baby to be tickled. Religiously avoid all careless or unnecessary handling of sensitive parts, and insure the baby's comfort and safety from injurious habit by scrupulous cleanliness of these parts, and by freedom from stricture of clothing.

"Tossing and tickling, shouting and romping all unduly tax the undeveloped nerves and create brain disturbances that may manifest themselves later in irritability, sleeplessness, or even more serious troubles. Especially in the evening these things should be avoided. They are equivalent to an exciting entertainment for the adult, after which he finds it difficult to compose himself for sleep."

"Let the baby enjoy the dark. There is something soothing and recuperative in it when there is perfect freedom from fear. The eyes are far better for the complete rest which this gives, and all the senses are released from strain by it. If the suggestion of danger lurking in the dark is never made to the child, and the mother herself has learned to feel and show no fear in this connection, there is no reason why the baby may not from the beginning be left to sleep serenely in the soothing shadow. It need never occur to him that there is any reason why he should not."

The mother who says to her toddling baby, in an attempt to secure obedience, "You better come here; the dark will get you," shows weakness in herself, that she does not exercise control without such subterfuge, and is sowing the seeds of weakness in her child. He will be needlessly subject to fear and will soon learn to distrust his mother; two serious losses to the child.

The cruel practice of frightening children of any age can not but result in injury. The time to begin holding the confidence of your child is in infancy. See things from his viewpoint as well as from your own maturer one; think with him; feel with him; and apply the golden rule in all your dealings with him. Then because he can rely upon you, he will believe in the constant care of God, of whom you may be teaching him before either he or you may realize it. In the bowing at prayer time and in the reverence of word and tone he will be gaining the first essentials of worship. Then when he can notice the flower, the grass, and the trees, being told that God made them as mother has made the bread or the dress, he is adding to the impressions that will soon make God a living and loving reality to him. Then it will be easy to teach him to pray in the spirit. When the baby prays, let it be with reverence and faith in both mother and child, and never in any sense for show or amusement.

In the matter of dress, the comfort of the baby should be the first consideration, and comfort, simplicity, and daintiness embody the highest type of beauty, and can be had without excess of expense or work. There should be no stiff, scratchy embroidery, "no elaborate decorations to try the eyes of the mother, to annoy the skin of the delicate baby, or tax the strength and patience of the laundress." In the enjoyment of planning and making for the little one, too frequently the clothes are given undue importance, "The baby, not its clothes, is the attraction."

"'It is the most beautiful outfit I have ever seen,' exclaimed a friend to an expectant mother as she examined exquisite little garments upon which months of work had been expended. 'You should be proud.'

"The other's voice trembled. 'I am not,' she replied, the tears bathing her thin face. 'I am ashamed, so ashamed.'

"Her friend stared in surprise. The expectant mother explained: 'I have neglected my husband; he has not even had decent meals, just scraped up lunches that I might have more time, I have neglected my friends, my house, and myself, but oh! worst of all, I have neglected IT. Oh, why didn't I realize it before!'

"Her baby never opened its eyes. It would have lived, the doctor said, had she lived a healthy, normal life."

Formerly the baby was kept bandaged as tightly as possible for some weeks or months. "Science now dictates that this bandaging is not required. Only a loose band is needed for the first ten days, or until the cord drops off, and then it can be safely omitted altogether." Or the flannel band may be replaced by a knitted one with the object of keeping the abdomen well covered, which is important. Even in summer the little shirt should be kept well down over the bowels, and the flannel skirt not removed except possibly in the hottest part of the day. Woolen worn next the skin is very trying to some children. "If the soft wool seems to irritate at all, put underneath it either a silk or sheer cotton shirt; 'fussiness,' which often comes from this cause, will disappear like magic."

A good suggestion for a pinning blanket is to cut one corner from a yard square of flannel, leaving an edge of eighteen or twenty inches to be faced back with a bias strip, the other edges to be turned once and cat stitched. The faced edge fastens around the waist, being pinned to the shirt, back and front, with small safety pins, leaving the corners to wrap around the feet.

In dressing the baby, the flannel skirt, white skirt, and dress should be fitted together and put on at one time over the feet.

Three quarters of a yard, the approved length for dresses now, is a great improvement over the long, heavily trimmed ones of the past, which weighed upon the little body and hampered its movements. "But," says one doctor, "we must not go to the other extreme of dressing the new baby in 'short' clothes. One objection to this is that he is liable not to receive the careful handling accorded to a baby in long clothes."

"When the little one gets strong enough to walk, his inalienable rights demand that his dress shall be short enough not to be in his way. It is cruel and unjust to irritate the untrained mind of the baby by clothing him in a dress that constantly gets in the way and demands skill in managing." Creeping aprons are a boon to babyhood, as rompers are a little later on.

Both shoes and stockings should be watched carefully to avoid cramping the baby's feet. A doctor says: "Never, never put the foot of a child of any age into a shoe that is too short for him. That is the way to create bunions and other deformities."

The careful mother can very early teach the child to use the nursery chair. "By a little persistence in the early life of the child, much of the unpleasantness of the care of the baby may be done away with, but under all circumstances the baby odor can and should be avoided. As soon as a diaper is removed, if only wet, it should be dropped into a pail of clean, cold, water, then rinsed and dried before again being used. It is not necessary that it should be ironed, but it must be washed. The solid material should be removed before the diaper is thrown into the water. If old cloths are laid inside, they can be removed, burned, or buried, and thus much disagreeable work be avoided and all unpleasant odors obviated."

See that the baby goes to bed at night clean, and when old enough to come to the table, that he comes with hair in order and hands and face clean. Who does not love a sweet, clean baby! The practice of having the hands made clean after eating, started in babyhood, will so fix the habit that baby will hold up sticky fingers as if impossible to touch anything until they have been washed, and this habit, through the years to come will prove a great saving to books, clothing, furniture, everything that ought to be kept clean.

There are dangers to the baby when he comes to the table early in life. "An infant in the first few months of life possesses only slight power of digesting starch. Even after the age of four months the power increases very slowly. It is a very frequent custom with mothers to give children a crust of bread to bite upon. Indeed, a baby is lucky if it gets off without any further maternal experimentation than this, for it is during the first eighteen months of life that so many innocents are slaughtered by 'just a taste' of table food, given on the ground that because they wanted it, it was right for them to have it. It is best not to allow even a crust before the child is nine or ten months old, by which time a thriving baby may take starch in small quantities without disadvantage in the winter, although he does not need it. The better course, however, is to allow no starch, nor in fact anything but milk until the age of one year.

"These remarks apply only to thriving children. It sometimes happens in the last months of the first year, or even earlier, that the diet must be supplemented in various ways, as by certain meat foods, such as the yellow of egg, beef juice, peptonized beef preparations, etc., but a healthy baby does not need these things and should not receive them except by medical advice.

"After the child is weaned its nourishment may be gradually increased in strength. . . . It should not be suddenly plunged into the changed diet at twelve months, but the list and variety should be gradually increased while milk remains the principal article of diet. . . . Porridge of some sort is the first new article of diet to be tried, one not of oatmeal being first used, as this is rather more difficult of digestion than most other cereals.

"Although mothers are prone to worry because their children are not getting 'strong enough food,' there is less danger of this happening than of the food being too strong.

"It is always very important to make no change during the hot weather when it is possible to avoid doing so. On the least disturbance of the digestion, too, the diet should be cut down to milk for a day or two."—From The Care of The Baby, by J. P. Crozer Griffith.

"In days of ignorance, babies having reached the second year have been allowed to eat all manner of food utterly indigestible to them just because they happened to have a few teeth and more coming. This is entirely wrong. Until the end of the second year, the child should have no solid food. . . .

"The second summer need not fill the mother's heart with apprehension if she gives her baby the proper care and nutrition, but it is urgent that during this time of development the digestive apparatus should be kept in a perfectly healthy condition. Digestion is always a little more difficult of accomplishment during hot weather than cool, and therefore greater care and perfect regularity must be maintained.

"When at the table, if the baby never receives articles of diet not suited to it, it will soon learn not to ask for them." What the baby will or will not do or have should depend not upon the caprice of the baby but upon the discretion of the parent. Have you heard a mother say of her child, "I am sure that will make him sick, but he just won't let it alone," or, "I know that baby will take cold, but I can't make him keep anything on his head." What a confession! Where lies the responsibility? With the child or with the parent? Do you want your baby to be healthy and happy, obedient and kind? Who can have more to do with making him so than yourself? But your ideals for him must be right, and your example as well as what you expect of him must be a part of the guiding force that will lead him in the right direction.

A mother had been on a visit with her one-year-old baby. When she returned home, the older children of the family were so delighted to have the baby with them again that all were anxious to shower attentions upon him. But the baby's nerves were worn with seeing many people and so he would push the children away with a petulant whine. Instead of encouraging this disposition by saying openly to them, "Do go away and let him alone," the mother would say lovingly, "Nice brother, nice sister," laying the baby's hand caressingly on hand or face of the one near by. But she whispered to them aside, "He will feel better after a while, but I wouldn't trouble him now." So they waited patiently until he was rested and it was not long before he was wanting to play with them, saying sweetly, "Nice brother; nice sister," in the soothing frame of mind to which his mother had wisely guided him.

When the baby raises his hand to strike and some one laughs or says, "Oh, he doesn't know any better; he can't hurt anyone," there is something wrong with the ideal. The gentle restraining touch, or shake of the head, would so easily guide to better things. And that love is wisest and kindest which teaches the baby kindness and self-control.

"A partnership with God is parenthood;
What strength, what purity, what self-control,
What love, what wisdom, should belong to them
Who help God fashion an immortal soul."

Questions on January Reading.

What is "wholesome neglect"? Does this include leaving the baby to cry from discomfort? What freedom of development should be given the baby? How is his brain power developed? What injuries are liable to result from stimulating the baby's activities for the amusement of his elders? In what state of mind should the baby go to sleep? Why is it better for him to sleep in the dark? What serious effects may result from frightening the child? When should the mother begin keeping the confidence of her child? To what may this lead in regard to faith in God? How should the baby be taught to pray? What points should be regarded in preparing the clothing of the baby? What dangers await the baby who comes to the table early in life? What has just a taste of table food done for many babies? What should be the food of a healthy baby up to the age of one year? Should it then be suddenly plunged into a changed diet? What special care should be exercised in warm weather in regard to what the baby eats and drinks? Why shall the baby's choice not govern in all matters?

Letter Department

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA, November 18, 1911.

Editors Saints' Herald: Leaving Clarksburg on the evening of October 12 for New Hope, where Bro. Isaac Coffman lives, I took passage on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad and arrived at Harpers Ferry the next morning. Close by the station stands a monument to the memory of John Brown, an abolitionist who thought to stir the colored race to get their liberty by force of arms in 1859. A few months later, he, with several others, were hanged at Charleston. Near the monument stands three iron slabs with inscriptions on them relative to the battles fought there. The town is situated in a valley. Three States come together here, the Potomac River being the dividing line. Maryland puts in a very rugged appearance with its mountains towering high to the heavens, with the trees growing on their surface. Virginia has no smoother face, and West Virginia is also very broken and rough. A canal comes along the river from Virginia into Maryland, and the boats going up and down are loaded with freight and drawn by two mules. It is surprising to see the speed made; the man walks alongside the mules, which walk one ahead of the other.

At eleven the train left for Fort Defiance and reached there about four in the afternoon, where I was met by Sr. Vida Coffman. Her horse and buggy conveyed me to their home, where I was welcomed by Bro. and Sr. Coffman.

I am informed that Fort Defiance received its name about 1709, when the Indians were very numerous. The whites built forts there to protect themselves from the Indians, and some of them are there yet. A stone church was built about that time. The sand was carried on horseback; the women doing that part of the work.

I made my home at Bro. Coffman's and visited the scattered Saints. At a place called Roman, about eight miles from Bro. Coffman's, the Saints built a church in 1889 and had a membership of about sixty. The work moved on favorably for a while, but in 1891 or 1892 a mob came to the church during services in the evening, broke in the doors and windows, smashing the siding with sledges and throwing stones and other things into the church, which destroyed the lamps and furniture. The Saints escaped unhurt. Two years later the church got on fire in some way and burned to the ground. It was a total loss and there is not a stone to mark the place where it stood. It is surprising how evil some people can be. Some of the Saints have moved away, others are dead. The younger ones are married out of the church, and the prospects for future labor and the building up of the work there are not very encouraging. I visited Bro. J. H. Brown and family. He and his wife still hold to the faith but they are getting old. Sr. Root still holds to the faith. Her husband is not a member though very favorable to the work and kind to the Saints when they call on him.

Bro. Noah Bowman lives at Dayton, Virginia, about ten or twelve miles from Roman. He and wife still abide in the faith, having tried at different times to get the gospel to the people. Their two girls, Minnie and Mary, are very pleasant girls and will likely obey the gospel in time. While at Bro. Coffman's, they did all in their power to get the people to come to their house to meetings, but very few came, and no other place could be had to hold meetings. There are many Dunkards there who are very conservative in their worship. I have written a short sketch which will, no doubt, be of interest to the HERALD readers, as in many places there are none of that sect.

Bro. Coffman is now in his eighty-fifth year, being quite active in both body and mind. He has taken quite good care of himself, and above all has one of the best helpmates possible for one to get, and his good judgment is shown in making the selection. He heard the Mormons in 1868, and in 1872 went west and joined the Mormon Church at Salt Lake. He purchased a Book of Mormon and a Doctrine and Covenants and made a study of both of them. Soon after he returned to his home in Virginia; shortly after this Joseph Flory called his attention to the Reorganization and advised him to take the SAINTS' HERALD. He subscribed for it in 1872 and learned of the facts of the apostasy and the necessity for a Reorganization. T. W. Smith and wife were the first missionaries of the Reorganization who passed this way; they coming some time between 1872 and 1880. Bro. James Moler came in 1888, baptizing him and his wife. He has never had the slightest desire to make a change in his faith since, feeling satisfied with it.

On November 2, after bidding them good-bye and thanking them for their kindness, I left for Appomatox. Bro. Frank drove me to Staunton, a distance of eight miles, with his lively steed. I arrived at Appomatox that evening. I put up at the hotel for the night. Bro. Hewitt met me in the morning and conveyed me to his home in Vera. On our way we passed an iron slab where General Lee surrendered to Grant and a little farther on we came to the house where Grant and Lee signed the papers of peace. The old jail stands yet, very much weather-beaten from the many years of storm and sunshine. It is a three-story building, the lower story being used for a private residence. The courthouse was burned several years ago. Posts with iron plates attached to them bear the inscription where Lee's men marched in front of Grant's men and laid down their weapons of warfare. The country all around there for miles had been thrown up for breastworks. Guns and ammunition were left just where they surrendered, or where they were notified, and every man started for his home and the loved ones who were spared. A little farther on is a graveyard with an iron fence around it, where stand twenty slabs which mark the graves of known men who died in the conflict. I picked up two lead balls in front of a breastwork, so I take them home as a relic of the Rebellion.

Reaching Bro. Hewitt's about noon, we received a warm welcome by Sr. Hewitt, I being the first elder she had met for about a year. We set to work to get a place to hold meetings. The White Baptists had a meeting for Saturday afternoon and we were invited to attend, which we did in order to obtain an answer as to whether we could have the use of their church. At the close, when our case came up, Bro. Hewitt made his wishes known and we retired so they could talk the matter over. At the close an elderly man presented us with a slip of paper with their decision on it. So we set about to read it. Everybody began to get out of sight as soon as possible, the parson passing by as though he was sent for. By the time we read it they were about all gone. It read as follows: "Understanding that your church is not the same as the Mormon Church, but not knowing the difference, and feeling that the people would consider the two churches the same, and knowing that the Mormon Church has not to our own belief exerted the best influence for church and Christianity, we the members of the New Hope Baptist Church, report that we can not give you the privilege of our church." No name was signed, so we took it for granted we were turned down by them.

The colored Baptists had a church nearer to Bro. Hewitt's and were anxious for us to have meetings in their church, so they could hear. We talked the matter over and Bro. Hewitt thought it would be no harm to try it; and decided to, for the whites to sit on one side and the colored folks on the other. We held forth in the colored church for three nights; the whites were so indignant over it that they would not come to hear. The colored people attended and were pleased.

The way things were going, we thought it wise to close the meeting, and we came back to Bro. Hewitt's house, where we held several meetings. A goodly number of whites came, but no colored people were allowed to attend. There will be some obey ere long. Bro. Hewitt has made good use of his time in fireside talks and some are about ready for baptism and will eventually obey. If Bro. Hewitt is faithful he will do a good work in this part.

On the 14th I came to this place and am holding meetings at the home of Sr. A. R. Corson. She is the only Saint in this city.

Wishing you success in the Master's work,

SAMUEL BROWN.

EVERETT, WASHINGTON, November 25, 1911.

Dear Herald: As we are only a few to speak of, compared with the size of our city, it oftentimes seems as though there must surely be lots of honest-hearted people in this place to be gathered in some time.

We have a nice Sunday school and hope some day to have a branch, if God wills. The Lord and Master has commanded us to come up higher. Are we doing this? My earnest desire is that I may heed his calling voice and that my faith will never waver, that I may stand in the last days.

I thought a few lines from this place might find some Saint that does not know that we have a Sunday school or any Saints here; if so, we would be glad to have them make themselves known. We are holding our meetings at 8210 Everett Avenue at present.

The Lord has blessed us in our efforts in trying to do good, and I know he will continue to do so if we are only faithful.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. W. C. MILLIGAN.

SNOHOMISH, WASHINGTON, November 21, 1911.

Dear Herald: I am stopping with Sr. Scott and her husband, who certainly know how to make a missionary feel at home. We have not been able to hold any meetings here yet but hope to before I go away.

The work is progressing here in the West, and precious souls are being added to the true fold, and the work is developing in many places. The writer has had the pleasure of leading two souls into the waters of baptism since coming to this district.

At Bremerton I preached a week or more and organized a Sunday school. There are only five Saints there, but they are alive to the work, and I have heard good reports from the Sunday school since it has been started.

It is a hard matter to get people to come out to hear the gospel in this district, but those who do come, and especially the Saints and friends, are good to help in every way they can.

The Saints in Everett, eight in number, have a hall rented in which they hold their regular Sunday school and prayer meetings, every Sunday. They also have their Mite Society by which they are able to help the work in a financial way, not forgetting the missionary when he comes around.

The Saints in Seattle are making an earnest effort to keep the work moving and to pay for their church. Whatever their failings may be, they are surely good to look out for the missionary's family. May the Lord bless all who try to help in the good work is my prayer.

There has been some damage done here and traffic has been hindered by high water, bridges, and roadbeds being washed away. This has no doubt hindered in the spread of the gospel.

Your brother in Christ,

P. T. PLUMB.

OWENSVILLE, INDIANA, November 22, 1911.

Dear Herald and Readers: I am willing to do all the Lord has ordered me to do. I think if I do my duty and try to live up to his laws, and keep them fully, he will bless me and reward me as if I were more learned than I am. He tells us to seek and we shall find, knock and the door will be opened to us; so we find the Lord is no respecter of persons. We must turn away from all our sins and try to seek some one greater than old Satan when he tries to destroy the Lord's work and lead the Saints astray. I want to live as a true Latter Day Saint the rest of my life, and be prepared to gain all those heavenly blessings, and be numbered among the Saints when the Lord comes in the clouds of glory.

Dear brothers and sisters, I will tell you a dream that I had a year ago this month, about Thanksgiving time. At that time I was very ill and grew worse every day. I could not get anything to relieve me at all. I had no faith that there was anything that would do me any good, except to put all my trust in the heavenly Father, as he tells us in James 5: 13. So I did as the Lord has commanded. After praying faithfully I began to feel the afflictions removing from my body so that I fell fast asleep. I had a pleasant dream. I saw something appear at my bedside as if it were the image of a person having on a white robe, who, it seemed, was desiring to do something for me. Then the personage arose and flew over me. The dream seemed as if it were there to heal me, and I believe that from that day the Lord has answered every blessed word that proceeded from my lips and has given me more good health and strength in the past year than ever before. So I am indeed very thankful for all the great help he has given me. I can never forget how wonderfully he has healed me, and I have not had the least sickness since. I have three books that teach me the right way that will lead God's children home if they will follow these laws. They are the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants. I also read the HERALD and several books and papers which help me very much.

In bonds of love,

MARY J. THOMPSON.

BRIDGEPORT, OREGON, November 24, 1911.

Editors Herald: Imagine yourself carried by the wind of eastern Oregon across the Blue Mountains and dropped into a pleasant valley beyond, and it snowing on you for about nine hours with an adverse wind flowing down the back of your neck and once in a while a bunch of snow working under the cover to melt and soak through your clothes. This was the experience of the writer as we crossed the mountains from Baker to Bridgeport, where we are comfortably located with Bro. Lovelace. We are holding meetings, but the people here seem to be very well satisfied with what they have, as very few have turned out. Then there has been quite a lot of work done here by Brn. Enge, Chase, Allen, Roberts, Harris, Chapman, and Goodwin. There are a few that seem favorably disposed, but we have not been able to arouse them to obedience as yet. We are hoping that something will move them to action.

The place that we left to come here was seven miles out from Union, Oregon. We were very kindly treated by the people of that place. They turned out very well and we had little prejudice to overcome. Bro. W. A. Elmer is the only Saint there but he is awake to the work and is very desirous of seeing his family and friends accept the angel's message. He has been isolated from church privileges for several years, and he says that for a while he did not take much interest in the work, but after some serious meditation and prayer, the good Lord manifested himself to him, and, now desires to "love his neighbor as himself."

A few more such individuals would greatly assist the work in this part of the vineyard. We held twenty-five meetings there and some are investigating, and I believe we will return in a short time and gather some fruit. We hated to leave, but it seemed best under the circumstances.

There are some discouraging things to meet, but, by the grace of the giver of all good, we are in hopes of occupying acceptably. We are feeling good in the work and enjoy reading of the successful efforts of the ministry.

My home address is Vale, Oregon.

Yours in the conflict,

NEW MADDEN.

GALES FERRY, CONNECTICUT, November 18, 1911.

Dear Herald: In the last number of your valuable paper I read an article from a brother in Michigan in which he states that another brother had recently had an article in the HERALD that has caused many of the Saints to scrow because the elder had stated that even after baptism our former sins might or would come up before us in judgment.

I am personally well acquainted with the writer of the article complained of, and I am positive that his article hasn't been properly understood by those complaining about it.

I remember that Peter in speaking of Paul's writings, said that many were hard to understand, which the unlearned wrested, as they also did other scriptures, to their own destruction. The brother complained of has recently spent some time laboring in and around this place, and many are interested, and there were a number of edifying articles in the last HERALD that I wanted to have them read. But the article from the brother in Michigan has spoiled the HERALD for use among those interested in this place.

Dear brethren of the priesthood, why don't you establish the school of the prophets and get together and agree on what you are going to teach the people? By talking with you I find one who says it is wrong to have anything to do with secret societies; another belongs to a secret order. One says it is wrong to take part in politics; another that it is our duty to do so. I might name a dozen different things which you disagree upon. Now if you only had a place for newly ordained men to get together and be more thoroughly instructed in the things pertaining to our salvation, it would save a whole lot of discord and confusion.

I have had people say to me, "Your church believes it is right to get a divorce and to marry again," claiming that they have heard our elders say so. We must be exceedingly careful what we say. Concerning eternal judgment, I am satisfied after a careful study of the Scriptures that after we repent and are baptized for the remission of sins that our sins have gone on before to judgment; and those who have not so repented and been baptized, their sins follow and have to be met. I don't worry much about the kind of a crown I am to wear. My desire is to work out my own salvation with fear and trembling. Not fear of a merciful Father, but fear lest I may be overcome by the accuser of the brethren, even Satan.

If a brother be in fault let us write to him before we air him in print. Perhaps we might show him his error and make of him a friend. God gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life. Let us show our belief by our works.

Bro. A. B. Phillips has recently been preaching in New London, and five were baptized by him and others are interested. Satan is raging, causing his allies to slander us and the Seer, but we are beginning to prevail.

This glorious gospel is my life, as it were. It is twenty-one years next April since I was baptized, and I love the work better, if possible, every day.

With love for all the household of faith, I am yours in the gospel of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

THOMAS G. WHIPPLE.

CORTEZ, COLORADO, November 19, 1911.

Dear Herald: There are a few isolated ones here and we have no church privileges. I enjoy reading your articles and you little know the comfort they are to hearts that are sad and burdened with the cares of life. I am young in the faith; was baptized January 15, 1910, by Bro. J. D. Curtis and I have never regretted the step. I ask the prayers of all the Saints that I may hold out faithful to the end.

MRS. MYRTLE WILLIAMS.

CLARKSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA, November 24, 1911.

Editors Herald: St. Mary F. Kidd and her son, Bro. Ray Kidd, live in the city of Sioux Falls, South Dakota; also her daughter, Edna Boyles, all members of the church. They would have an elder visit them soon. Any of the Saints living near them should let them know of their place of meeting and home address. They are good Saints and members of this branch. Her address is 1021 North Mission, Sioux Falls, South Dakota.

A Testimony.

On April 25 I was thrown from a buggy, which crippled me in the knee. I doctored with two doctors at Divide awhile; they told me they could not do me any good, as the only remedy for me was to lie in bed with my limb straight out, and not move it around any, or I might lose my limb. I did so, but I did not get any better; so I concluded to go to Bluford, to a doctor, to see what he could do.

This doctor told me I would have to have my knee put in a plaster of paris cast. He said he did not know whether that would do good or not; he could not tell until it was tried; my knee was in bad shape, and would be a long time before I could walk any, for the joint was injured. So he went to work and put my knee in plaster of paris, and told me to leave it on four weeks. In three weeks from then, I was back to the doctor, and he told me I would have to leave the plaster of paris on for four more weeks, which would have been seven weeks in all; and then he would take it off and splint my knee. And then, he said, it would be a long time before I would ever walk any.

My knee was only in plaster of paris four weeks. I was administered to under the hands of Bro. Jenkins and Bro. Isaac Morris, and my father, J. F. Henson, on September 4, and was healed almost instantly. I got right up and walked, carrying my crutches, and have walked ever since. I had walked on crutches from April 25 till September 4.

I had a dream the night before I was administered to. I dreamed that Bro. Jenkins and Jesus Christ were talking to me, and told me I was going to die; that my time was near at hand; that the spirit was going to leave my body and go to a place of rest; that they had come to tell me about it; that my time was at hand now and I had to go. They told me I would be out of my misery,—I would not suffer any more. I thought I could hardly wait when they told me, and that my spirit took a flight. Seemingly I knew when I began to die,—I could feel my spirit leave my body. I thought I never felt so well in my life as at that moment; that I could feel myself flying through the air. I thought I had passed through death, but was still alive, and was out of my misery and suffering.

I think my dream meant being healed, for after I was healed I felt like I did in my dream. I never felt so well and happy in my life. It seemed as though I never would suffer any more, for I felt like I was out of my distress and misery, sure enough.

I think my dreaming of the spirit leaving the body meant the disease leaving my knee, and Jesus and Bro. Jenkins telling me my time was at hand, was that the time for me to be healed was at hand. I thank God for the great blessing I have received from his bountiful hand.

News From Missions

Massachusetts.

For weeks and even months I have intended writing you, but the needed stimulus seemed lacking till to-day, when, on looking over the HERALD, I noticed a mistake made by your Boston correspondent, in referring to the missionary work in this section. The sister states that Bro. Farrell has succeeded in warning twelve hundred. This should be twelve thousand. I mention it only as a preface to the account that follows.

Greater Boston is one of the largest cities in the United States, and to stand on its streets proclaiming the restored gospel, is but to reach the voice of Noah. Pemberton Square is one of Boston's historical spots, and for years it has been the custom for freak religionists to stand there every night in the week and preach freak religions. To the multitude we were no exception, for there is no religion in this city so unpopular as the true religion. Much as we might wish to the contrary, this could not be otherwise. At this place I had an audience of men (nearly all young) numbering from one hundred to three hundred. In the early summer the Brighamite elders preached here, introducing such subjects as the personality of God, the six principles, not forgetting to refer to the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith, etc. But after one of their converts, the so-called great-granddaughter of Solomon Spalding (by adoption, as she told me), had attempted to expose them, they have been seldom seen on the street or the Common.

While on the subject, it might be well for me to say a few more things concerning the "Mormon" subject. In the first place, they have no right to the term Mormon—it is distinctly a part of the true faith; but being now synonymous with the word polygamy, in the mind of the world, we have been obliged to introduce a continuous explanation. It is too bad, but can't be helped.

The young fellows are to be pitied greatly, for the word polygamy is a bugbear to them—and in this sense, the Greek word Mormo, which means "bugbear," is a hideous nightmare to them, for they are obliged to be on the defensive all the time. To their burden of defending an unpopular church, is added the need to defend the abominable teaching of polygamy, when driven to a corner, as is often the case in this country. Last year they sold nearly a thousand copies of the Book of Mormon in the Atlantic States, and distributed thousands of tracts. Whether this distribution of the stick of Joseph will result in good for us is, of course, an open question. They use much wisdom in their work. One of their strongest efforts is to get people to call at their headquarters, where they wield a tremendous influence. The younger men appear (and are, I think) sincere. Nice looking; well dressed; logical in their address; they would convert many thousands more a year were it not for polygamy. They are now operating on Sundays in a hall near the public library. It is a fine location.

On Sundays at three o'clock Bro. Alpha Baker and I assembled on the Common. Probably there is no other place in the world just like Boston Common. On this spot, in 1740 Whitfield preached a farewell sermon to forty thousand persons. The place has always been open to the expression of free thought. It is a modern Athens, and on it nearly everything in the shape of religion has been preached. So far as we know, the true message was never preached before this summer. Men who would not be listened to in a decent church, come here to find an audience—and they are not disappointed.

On Saturday nights I preached to prejudiced audiences at Davis Square, Somerville. At this place some of the sisters helped with the music. To mention their names is not necessary. For the help they gave, God will reward them in another world.

As I intimated in opening, from ten to twelve thousand adults listened to from one to ten sermons of the fifty preached in the four months of July, August, September, and October. Of this number only two visited the church. But we have discovered that it takes many sermons to educate a person out of the traditional darkness in which he has become rooted. Seed has been sowed; the church has been advertised; sinners have been warned; and the invitation to come to Christ has been extended. The final result can be left in no safer hands than the Lord's.

A word concerning the Religio Quarterly. I have been blessed in its preparation, and from the nature of the reports that have come to me, I believe that the change of lesson text was opportune, and that the classes are enjoying the study of the Book of Covenants. I am sorry that I could not put more time into the work; I regret that the lessons have been so long; but there are reasons, too lengthy to mention here. Comparatively no one has responded to my request for advice and criticisms. To me the revelations are equal to anything that has come to us in the line of sacred literature, with the exception of Christ's Sermon on the Mount. They may not be so poetical as Job, nor so eloquent, in the main, as Isaiah; but they are sublime in their simplicity and sincerity. The second quarter of the Quarterly will be more condensed in questions, so it will be possible to cover the lesson in the class. I think, however, it would be wise to have a whole hour for class work.

The preaching here is to be continued in hall and church, during the cold weather. This indoor work has advantages that the street does not afford. As a rule people who attend hall meetings are desirous of learning, while many who listen on the streets do so from idle curiosity. Yet, in my audiences I had editors, lawyers, theological students, and Catholics by the score, and some returned every night. They are willing to admit the logic and philosophy of our teaching, but are not willing to bear its stigma.

In this center of learning, I am planning to take one humble drink a week. Such free institutions as Wells Memorial and the Lowell Institute, offer exceptional advantages for study. I feel that I can take a course in Higher English one night a week, without doing violence to my calling as a Seventy.

I plead in defense of the length of this letter, that I do not write often.

With sincerity, I am,

RALPH W. FARRELL.

WINTER HILL, MASSACHUSETTS, November 26, 1911.

Alabama.

I am glad to say that the work is progressing nicely in this part of the field, notwithstanding the fact that there is always room for improvement. The last quarterly report showed a gain of about sixty baptisms in the Florida, Alabama, and Mobile districts. As the assistant minister in charge I have been ably assisted in this work by S.-S. Smith, whose counsel and advice have been excellent. I find him a good, humble, prayerful, and congenial brother; and an able defender of the faith whose efforts are greatly appreciated by the Saints. I felt impressed by the Spirit before the appointments were read last spring that Bro. Smith would be assigned to the Southeastern Mission.

Bro. Vanleave is an industrious, diligent worker as a missionary, who does not hesitate to push right out into new places and open up the work. His reports show that he is a busy worker. We have also had the assistance of two young elders, Brn. Albert Miller and Albert Wan, who have labored as missionaries but not under General Conference appointment. They are both hustlers and are doing well. Both are of that stamp that, if faithful and humble in the path of duty, they will make a mark for good in the church.

The reunion held at Berrydale, Florida, October 28 to November 5, was good. Apostle R. C. Russell, general minister in charge, was present the latter part of the meeting and gave much good counsel and advice, which was appreciated.

From there, he and the writer made a tour to Florida, Mississippi, and Alabama, where we met many of the Saints, which gave our brother an opportunity to get acquainted with them and give to them spiritual strength and comfort by his sermons, which were excellent. The Saints were greatly pleased with our visit, and as the saying goes, we both had a grand good time.

On the 17th of November Bro. Dan Sherman took us by boat to Horn Island, out in Gulf of Mexico, south of the State of Mississippi, where we both enjoyed a cold salt water bath in the roaring, surging waters of the mighty gulf, which is grand to look upon as the high, rolling, angry waves come and go with a roaring clash against the beautiful sand upon the southern shore of the little island, which is about one half mile wide and about eighteen miles long. The writer found two watermelons on the island, which were relished by the apostle from Canada, as were also the good, sweet, ripe oranges in the beautiful orchard which is owned by Bro. Jim Powell, of Theodore, Alabama. Jim and his good wife know how to make the missionary feel happy and at home in their beautiful orchard, laden with lovely Satsuma oranges. How we did enjoy that luscious fruit, fresh from the tree. The many oranges the apostle put out of sight while in that orchard was one strong evidence to the writer that he had fallen in love with the Sunny South. When ye northern people get the idea that the southern Saints do not make the missionary feel happy and at home you are badly mistaken.

Bro. J. W. Dubose, one of our new missionaries, has lately arrived in this part of the field and has been busy. Hear a good report from his efforts. He baptized an aged lady (a sister Hughes) here yesterday. We expect three of the branches in this part will soon have erected three good, new, substantial church buildings.

I feel well, am hopeful and happy in the work, and am determined to battle on in the good old way until the goal is reached. I pray God to bless the army of workers everywhere, that Zion may be built up and the way prepared for her King to come in power and glory with all his Saints.

Your brother in the bonds of love,
F. M. SLOVER.

The Bishopric.

AGENTS' NOTICES.

To the Saints of Florida District: Dear Brethren and Sisters: Have you thought about the year being so nearly past? Have you planned as to the amount of tithes and offerings which you are going to pay?

Malachi says, "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Christ said in Matthew, "These things ye ought to have done," speaking of paying tithes. Doctrine and Covenants says, "He that is tithed shall not be burned." One of the late revelations indorses tithing wherein it says that we should obey the temporal law as interpreted by the bishopric.

We wish to mention these few passages just to bring them to your remembrance. Can we pass this part of the gospel work thoughtlessly by and hear that grand welcome "Well done?"

Can you give a good reason for not doing? Let's obey the gospel, everyone of us, fully, along temporal lines as well as by obeying the first principles. Let's not let the year pass without sending something to help forward this great latter day work.

Please send any amount, little or much, to me at Dixonville, Alabama, and I will gladly receipt you. We would be glad to have the names of every member of district with some amount, even though it be small.

We wish to thank those who have so loyally supported us in the past.

E. N. MCCALL,

Bishop's Agent, Florida District.

DIXONVILLE, ALABAMA, November 26.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Southern Missouri District: Greeting: Having been placed in charge of the work in this district for the remaining part of the conference year, I ask the hearty cooperation of all the Saints in the district, and especially those of the priesthood; that the work may be revived in the old places and new openings obtained that the gospel may spread over the district and the honest hearted ones gathered into the fold. "He that is warned, let him warn his neighbor." In doing so, we can all be helpers or workers together for the spread of this glorious work.

I am well aware that this has been a hard year, and money is scarce; but one and all should remember that the tenth of our increase belongs to the Lord and we have no right to take that and apply it for our own benefits.

Bro. Benjamin Pearson, Tigris, Missouri, is the bishop's agent for this district. Please remember him. Also remember that the missionaries can not travel on the wind, but they have to pay the same car fare as anyone else; and they must have clothes to wear, and they are dependent upon the Saints where they labor for their expenses. Therefore the Saints should see that their expenses are supplied. The Lord has said to his ministry, "Whosoever receiveth you, receiveth me, and the same will feed you, and clothe you, and give you money. . . . By this you may know my disciples."

A letter addressed to 121 South Fuller Street, Independence, Missouri, will reach me in due time. Even praying for the welfare of Zion, I am as ever, your colaborer.

W. R. SMITH.

ALTON, MISSOURI, November 25, 1911.

Address.

P. T. Plumb, 105 Kilbourne Street, Seattle, Washington.

Notice.

I desire the name of each member of the Eastern Oklahoma District. There are many scattered all over the district, and with your name and post office I will furnish a list to the missionaries and they can find you, and not go by without knowing where you are. Will the ministry or anyone knowing the address of any Saint in the district help me to get this list?

A. Z. RUDD, District Clerk.

Died.

DARLING.—Jesse Vernon, second child of Joseph and Frances J. Darling, of Thorne, North Dakota, was born July 25, 1900; died November 3, 1911, being 11 years, 3 months, and 9 days old. He was baptized July 11, 1909, by Elder William Sparling, confirmed by W. E. Peak and J. W. Wight. Sermon by William Sparling.

MEADOWS.—Sr. Hannah Meadows was born August 16, 1846, at Carlisle, England; emigrated to Canada in 1872, settled in London, and has made her home there until death. She was baptized into the church in 1839 and continued faithful to the end, which came November 15, 1911. She leaves one son and an invalid sister, with many friends to mourn her departure. The funeral was from the home of her son, Elder Fligg. The sermon was by Elder F. A. Smith, assisted by Elder George Henly.

NANTAIS.—Sr. M. M. Nantais, wife of F. J. Nantais, died November 5, 1911, at Saint Thomas, Ontario, Canada. She was born October 5, 1852, at Mordiford, Herefordshire, England, and came to Canada in 1882. Baptized August 15, 1886, at Saint Thomas, by R. C. Evans. She formerly lived at Tilbury; moved to Providence, Rhode Island, where she lived for seven years, then came back to Saint Thomas to end her days. She died from diabetes. She leaves a husband, two adopted children, Mrs. Charles Kage and Stanford at home, also two brothers and one sister in England and one sister in Michigan. Funeral services were held at the church; G. H. Henley in charge. Interment in the Saint Thomas Cemetery.

WILSON.—Sr. Pearl Wilson died October 22, 1911, aged 34 years, 4 months, and 4 days. Born June 19, 1877. Leaves husband and six children, three sisters, three brothers, father and mother. Baptized at Weir City, Kansas, and confirmed by Elder Crawley under the name of Pearl Smock. Services by Elder James Buckley.

BACK TO JESUS AND HIS PLAN.

JESUS THE SAME YESTERDAY, TO-DAY AND FOR EVER.

Sadly at times we sing, "Change and decay in all around I see." All things human constantly change. We may be situated ever so happily, yet we are always conscious in the back of our minds somewhere that presently the "evil days" spoken of by "the preacher" will come, and old age, disease, or death change our estate. Vainly we look back to the happy days and pleasant scenes of the past, not one of them can we live over or reconstruct; possibly we would not enjoy the experience if we could, for we too have changed.

We have said that all things human change, but this must be modified. Human passions, appetites, longings, and needs never change. They are the same to-day that they were when Jesus was here. And Jesus himself never changes. He is the Lamb slain from before the foundation of the world. He is the "same yesterday, to-day, and for ever."

But humanity says, "He lived so long ago. Times have changed. His teachings do not meet the needs of our day."

What a terrible mistake! His gospel is the "everlasting gospel," adapted to all ages. Men cry, Lo here! and, Lo there! And advocate this philosophy, or that system, or the other party or association, as the solution of all our problems, when in fact the name of Jesus is still the only name under heaven given among men by which we must be saved. His gospel is predicated on the fact that "Ye must be born again." A regenerated society can only be composed of regenerated individuals. That gospel offers the only means of regeneration and thus meets at once the supreme need of the individual and society—the ever present and age-old need.

Try as we will to suppress vice, crime, graft, and immorality, under the guise of this or that commendable "reform," we discover that when suppressed in one quarter these evils appear in another quarter, or in a new form. It would seem that mere ethical teaching has gone about as far as it can go in reforming society. "Back to Jesus and his plan" should be the slogan of all who really have the good of humanity at heart.

We are familiar with the fact that communities and nations are born, grow, mature, decay and die. Thus went Egypt, Babylon, Greece, Rome, and all the ancient nations. Their fate presages the fate of all our dominant modern nations.

We say that this is a part of human mutation,—that nations and communities must live and die like individuals; that it is natural for them to do so. We forget that death is not "natural." It is the result of disobedience. That nation or community that finally adjusts itself to the perfect, divine plan will live for ever. That is why Christ's dominion will be from "everlasting to everlasting."

Of him it is written: "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever."

A WRONG CONCEPTION.

Under date of November 29 a brother writing refers to a certain action taken by the Commercial Club of Lamoni, Iowa, an account of such action being published in HERALD of November 15 under Notes and Comments.

For the benefit of the HERALD readers, as well as the church work within the Lamoni Stake, we desire to call attention to certain facts that have been overlooked. The inference is that the Lord's way of doing things has not a proper representation in Lamoni and that the Commercial Club is assuming the role of carrying out the work of the church in directing the gathering. And on the strength of this assumption our brother, who signs himself Paul Parker states, "If you people that live in the stakes, where the law can be more fully carried out, are not willing to make the effort, how can you expect us that are scattered to join in with you?" . . .

"This question is of interest to hundreds of our people and we are anxious to know why our brethren are not willing to try the divine plan to establish industrial institutions in the stake."

The Commercial Club may answer these questions for themselves if they so desire, but when the brother confuses the Commercial Club of Lamoni with the church work of the Lamoni Stake, we feel it is time to distinguish the difference, that the Saints may not be misguided.

For the purpose of carrying on the church work in its various departments, the Lord has directed the organization of Lamoni Stake and set in the organization certain ones to represent the stake work officially (Doctrine and Covenants 125:10). So long as these servants are performing their duty along both spiritual and temporal lines, the Lord's work will grow. But it will not be builded up by ignoring those whom he has chosen to direct the work. "Counsel has already been given to those gathering into the regions round about to consult with the elders and the bishops before removing into those regions; that such removal may be accomplished through the having of all things prepared before them who seek to remove and become resident in the regions round about."—Doctrine and Covenants 128:4. We are interested in seeing the Lord's work builded up within the stakes. We are told in the revelations to the church how that this building is to be accomplished in Zion and in her stakes; namely, by observing the laws governing the church, and working in harmony therewith.

The faith of this church is being taught, and, best of all, is put into practice, within Lamoni Stake. There are those who are ready and willing to be organized to place in operation the "organizations contemplated in the law." They have not "lost faith in the divine plan." There is but the one way for Saints to act and be in harmony with the revelations to this church, and that is to honor the law of Christ and respect every man or woman where the Lord has called, and move forward in faith.

No one is in a position to say that the Saints in Lamoni Stake are not prepared to do their whole duty who has come into possession of his knowledge by reading the action of some commercial club. Consult those who are prepared and authorized to advise is according to the divine way of doing things.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

PROFESSIONAL EVANGELISM.—As collateral to the much discussed question regarding the cost of saving souls, we believe the following will be of interest: "Professional evangelism," says the Continent (Presbyterian) of Chicago, "is fast becoming an offense. Let an evangelistic work begin in any large city, let the placards be big enough and black and red enough, let the machinery be elaborate enough, let the power of the singer and his chorus be great enough, and the audiences will pack the auditorium. The overwrought souls that can be carried off, or better, up upon their feet, will rise and throng the altar spaces by the platform. The personal workers will go hustling here and there, speaking effusive words in ignorance of the wants or circumstances of those to whom they speak, and next morning in great headlines the daily journals will report, 'Dr. Peter and Dr. John took twenty-five sinners in the dragnet last night. Twenty-five more souls delivered from the Devil,—and other legends of similar import. As a fact, neither Dr. Peter nor Dr. John has ever delivered one' single soul from the Devil, and souls are not saved by the netful caught like herring in shoals. We are glad that our General Assembly, after eleven years of experience, has abandoned official backing to evangelistic efforts. We have no word against the men who think themselves called to preach the gospel, not as settled ministers, but as itinerants, laboring where they can. We bid them godspeed, regretting only that their usefulness is limited by the requirements of the machine they have to keep in order and at work. To preach the clear, pure gospel of Jesus is task enough for any soul without the added burden of running a machine."—New York Evening Post.

Elder's Notebook

A SERMONET.

Text: "For the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light."—Luke 16: 8.

As the title implies, this is to be something small, and we will not attempt an analysis of the entire parable, which has reference to money and other forms of wealth. We will be content to refer to a few things in which the world is wiser than we are, though we claim to be children of light.

If we have been students and observers of modern industrial and agricultural conditions, we have learned that cooperation is one of the great means for mutual help to bring about conditions that will give us more of the comforts of life.

In Independence, Missouri, we have about four hundred families. A saving of $2.50 per month for each family on their living would be $1,000 per month or $12,000 per year, which would be a very small amount when we consider the great increase from the time it leaves the producer until it reaches the consumer. How can this be done? By having more of our people on the land adjacent to the city, to produce what we need to eat, and a storehouse where it can be handled by being bought, or received as tithing. A large percentage of the allowance of the missionaries' families could be paid in this way. What are we doing along these lines? Talking, mostly.

We have about three hundred men in the service of the church depending on it for support. They all need a suit of clothes about once a year. A tailor shop, giving employment to a considerable number of our people would be a saving of $5.00 per suit, or $1,500 for a year. For the four hundred families in Independence, for men and boys, there would be a saving of $2,500, and with a woman's department added it would be $2,000 more.

These few items give us an idea how we are wasting our money. What are we doing to bring about better conditions? Talking, talking. This waste is only in one community, and when we realize that we have many communities where similar conditions exist, and the waste is just as great, we can realize what an enormous waste is going on continually. It is easier and better for us to save that which is going to waste than to try to increase our income. You tell me it takes money to do this. Yes, that is true, and we have the money. If other communities have wealth in the same proportion as those among which I have been for nearly ten years, among our people, in one year $500,000, half a million, could be put in the bishop's hands and no hardship would come to any. What do we need? Just common sense. Plain common sense that any ordinary man would use in his everyday business affairs, and an earnest, honest effort to honor the law a wise and loving Father has given us.

A few cases of cooperation might help us a little. The State of Nebraska has a law which permits the school districts to levy a tax to purchase supplies for the school,—books, stationery, etc. Last year in the city of Lincoln the average cost for each pupil was sixty-seven cents. Where scholars buy their own supplies it will be from $3.00 to $10.00 per year. I one time mentioned this beneficent law to a friend and he thought children ought to go out and earn their books. Well, I instantly had a mental picture of several little boys and girls from eight to ten years of age spending about two or three months working out somewhere, perhaps in a store or somewhere else, when they should be spending their vacation with their mother.

In a city of ten thousand I learned of one hundred workmen that organized a stock company, each one paying ten dollars with which to purchase one thousand dollars worth of merchandise, so that they could save some of the money that comes from economical handling of goods. In the same city I learned of certain classes of merchandise that were sold at one hundred per cent in advance of the purchasing price; this did not represent the profit to the merchant. He had an enormous expense in the form of rent and other expenses to take out for handling the goods.

In many of our cities loan and building associations exist by which means many families whose income is small are enabled to pay for a home with no greater burden than paying rent, and we know of many who have obtained their homes in this way who otherwise could not have accomplished it. It is possible that one hundred of our missionaries do not own their homes. The rent paid out each month would pay for a home, so that in ten years each one would have a home by simply saving that which is being wasted.

Under present conditions, about ninety per cent is talking and telling how these things ought to be done, and about ten per cent is doing something. We want to reverse the proposition and see if better results will obtain.

The need of the hour is to make our little army a righteous one, with faith and confidence in God and his plan, and a willingness to work according to his plan, and then our leaders can say, "Come on, follow us," and if they hesitate to lead us we can push them so hard they will either lead us or get out of the way.

To the mind of the preacher it looks as if we are fulfilling the conditions named in that parable by the Master.

THE RICHES OF JESUS.

(Sermon delivered by Charles Derry, at Magnolia, Iowa, September 5, 1911. Reported by Estella Wight.)

I am in one sense glad to meet you, and in another sense not. I would be more glad if I were here as a listener; but as apologies are of no use in this work, I shall not attempt any, but simply ask an interest in your prayers that God may enable me to declare the truth in plainness.

Paul, in writing to the Corinthians, in admonishing them, says: "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich."

The word grace here signifies favor, the favor of our Lord Jesus Christ; how he favored the sons and daughters of men, "that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich."

Let us consider for a moment his riches. In the first chapter of John, if I read aright, we find something describing his condition; or rather the position that he occupied and the power he had: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." We understand that the "Word" signifies the Son. "The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made. In him was life; and the life was the light of men."

There we find the position he occupied in the great universe of God. We turn for corroboration of this to another statement made by the Apostle Paul in the first chapter of his letter to the Colossians. He says: "Giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light; who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son: in whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins: who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature: for by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: and he is before all things, and by him all things consist. And he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things he might have the preeminence. For it pleased the Father that in him should all fullness dwell."

That shows still further the position or condition, we use the expression for want of something plainer, of the Lord Jesus Christ. Being the creator of all things he was the possessor of all things. All power, all honor, all glory, all blessedness, all that could contribute to bless, intelligence, infinite or finite, he was the possessor of it all.

We talk sometimes of sacrifices that we make, but we read here that Jesus Christ made a sacrifice: "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, possessing all the riches of eternity, enjoying with his Father all the glories, all the blessedness, all the power that intelligence could possibly possess, "yet for your sakes he became poor." What? Became poor? Did he lay aside all the riches; did he lay aside all the glory? Yes, he laid it all aside. He consented to come in the due time of infinite wisdom to redeem the fallen race and to work out a redemption for all; but he had to lay aside all these glories, all the blessedness, all things that he possessed with his Father. Accordingly he laid them aside and consented to take upon himself our nature. To do this he must lay aside all omnipotence, all that infinite wisdom, all that infinite knowledge, all that infinite intelligence and power and glory, and be born as we are, born into the world. And you know it is said of humanity, when he is born into the world that he is like a blank sheet of white paper; there's nothing there. And so Jesus Christ consented to that degree, that the Prophet Isaiah says of him, "In his humiliation his judgment was taken away." I understand that judgment to be the intelligence, that it was taken away in his humiliation. It was his humiliation when he laid aside that omnipotence, that divine power, those divine glories, and consented to become like us, born into this world, of a woman; and stripped, as it were, of all his intelligence, and to become like unto man, grow, learn by observation, by experience, by teaching, and the various means by which humanity learns. Christ consented to come to that condition, and learn as mankind learns, and to grow in light, and in intelligence, as it shall come to his mind, whether by observation, experience, or revelation, or by whatever means it may come to his mind. There was this humiliation, and in this humiliation his judgment was taken away.

Paul, in his writings to the Hebrews says: "For, verily, he took not on him the nature of angels." He might have taken on him the nature of angels, but he did not. "He took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham. Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren." In all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren. Now consider the condition of his brethren. Poor humanity, weak, frail, subject to the evils of this world, liable rather to them, we will say to the evils of this world, the pains, the sorrows, the griefs, the temptations, the trials of humanity; he became liable to all these.

It is written of him again in the sacred record that he was tempted in all points like as we are. You know how we are tempted, and our natures, and how frail these natures are, and how it behooves us to watch, to pray that we may escape the evils, the snares, the pitfalls that sin and Satan hath strewn in our paths. These same snares, these same pitfalls, these same traps and cunning devices of hell were laid before him. His feet had to escape them by dint of watching and observation and prayer; for we find him praying continually. He was tempted in all points like as we are, and yet, thank God, it can be written in his sacred word, without sin. Without sin. "Oh," says one, "it was easy for him to escape temptation and escape all sin, because he was the Son of God, and he claimed all power." But he had laid that power aside; he had laid that glory aside; he had condescended to your condition and ways, and for what purpose? "That ye through his poverty might be rich." That was the purpose.

Friends, when we consider the condescension of the Lord Jesus Christ, it is far beyond human comprehension, far beyond all the intelligence that man possesses at the present day. By and by we may understand and comprehend and see as we are seen and know as we are known; but to-day we can not comprehend the height, the depth, the length of the Son of God's love; but, friends, you know it is written in God's book that God so loved the world that he gave his well-beloved Son that all mankind through him might have everlasting life, that the world might not perish, but have everlasting life. Friends, that was the riches, everlasting life. To have that riches in ourselves as he possessed that life in himself before he came into this world, that we through his poverty might become rich.

When I think of this condescension of the Lord Jesus Christ, and our people talk of making sacrifices for the cause of God, I wonder what sacrifice we can make that can compare in any sense with that made by the Lord Jesus Christ, enduring even poverty in this world. When I hear him saying, as it were, "Foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." Oh, that condescension, that love, that grace, that favor of the Lord Jesus Christ, it is beyond your comprehension and mine. Yes, but thank God it is true, though we may not comprehend it. Thank God, he gave himself as a ransom for mankind.

It is sometimes said that the Father could not have sent his Son into the world to be crucified; but I read in his word that he has given to the church in these last days, I came into the world to be crucified. And I read in the sacred record that he was as a lamb slain from the foundation of the world. Did God compel him to come? Oh, no; there was no compulsion in it. He saw the condition of humanity, what it would be, before the foundation of the world was laid, and he offered himself as a ransom; he offered himself to come and die for mankind, to redeem them by his precious blood through his life, through his suffering, through his death and his resurrection, that he might bring life and immortality unto all mankind who would accept the great salvation that he offered unto men.

Friends, when we talk of sacrifice for God and for the truth, and compare our sacrifices with that of the Lord Jesus Christ; oh, our sacrifices are dissolved into nothingness. All the sacrifices that we can possibly make are as nothing. We can sacrifice nothing that is to be compared with the great sacrifices that he had made. He endured scourgings, hatred, scorn, contumely of every kind from those whom he had come to bless, and then we find him nailed to the cross, and nailed there between the heavens and the earth, as though neither was worthy of him. He consented to all this for your sakes, for my sake, for the sake of all mankind, that we through his poverty might become rich. "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." What riches? Would it be, do you think, that he came and suffered and bled for us that we might simply obtain the wealth of this world? The gold or silver, the beautiful earth even, was that all? The mere possession of this for three score years and ten? Was that all that he suffered this for, that we might be made rich? No; the riches of eternity, the riches of God, the riches of Christ, the riches of eternal life, an inheritance that shall never fade away. The things of this world will fade away; but the things which Christ came to purchase for us by his precious blood will never fade away. They can not perish; they can not die. They are eternal; they are infinite. No; they can not fade away.

Eternal life; can we measure it? No; we can not. It is an impossibility. Paul was right when he said: "Eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man the things that God hath prepared for them that love him." But he says God revealed them unto us by his Spirit. But they are not revealed to us all at once, my friends. Oh, no. We are as newborn babes when we come into the church. Through the grace of God we have come out of the darkness into the light, and as a child, when it comes into this world, is not capable of gazing upon the sun, the brilliancy of that mighty orb, oh no, neither are our minds capable of gazing upon all the glorious truths that our Lord has prepared. But he reveals them line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little, just as our minds are enabled to grasp. God is a very good teacher; a wise teacher, infinitely wise. He knows humanity can not endure all this light at once. It would be destructive to our being, and hence he reveals it as we can receive, as our natures become prepared. And how shall our minds be prepared? By attention to what God has revealed, by attention to what God does reveal, by our considering those revealments, our trying to understand them, and by seeking unto God for light that we may comprehend them.

We talk sometimes about the Bible. I have read that book for eighty years. I was about five years of age when I first learned to read it, and I have read it from that time to this, and I have always enjoyed it. But, friends, let me tell you that I never take up that book to seek and to study that sacred word, but I find additional light made known to me; I find the truth of God shining brighter, more effulgently, and the glory of that truth shines more forcibly into my heart and soul, and I am pleased to say I am thankful to God that I can say that that's not the case with that book only; but every record that God has given to us for our profit and learning I find the same blessing attending; and that is what confirms me in the truth of God and his work in these latter days, because I find the same beauty, the same power, the same blessedness, the same light and glory coming to my soul from the studying of God's word.

We ought to study the word of God, we ought to study ourselves, to study our own natures. Solomon said it is a wise man that knows his own folly. I guess he was right. It takes us a long time to discover all the folly that is in us. It takes us a long time to discover all our weaknesses. We have to learn by experience as well as by observation, and Jesus tells us to "watch." Watch what? Somebody else? This man or that man? Oh, no. We are to watch our own hearts, the tendencies of our own minds. We are to watch always the enemy, lest the enemy should come upon us unawares and drag us into a snare, and lead us down into perdition. We have to watch, and not only watch, but pray, and that shows us our dependence upon a higher power. We may think we can stave off the enemy by watching only; that by keeping a keen lookout we can drive him away from us; but we want more power from God. He is a very cunning enemy; he is a very forceful enemy; he has had long experience in tempting the children of God, and we need to pray, to pray for strength, to pray for light, to pray for intelligence to shine upon us and to lead us in the way of godliness, and then God reveals him unto us by his Spirit, for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. Yes, by and by, when we see as we are seen and know as we are known, then we shall comprehend the height, the depth, the love of God for us. At least we shall understand it a great deal better than we do to-day, and I am willing to believe that we shall be enabled finally to fully understand and comprehend the wisdom, the love, the power, the grace, the mercy of our God. You know Paul says, "Great is the mystery of godliness," and the more I contemplate the nature and character of God, the more I am confirmed in the truth of Paul's version, "Great is the mystery of godliness"; and when I see, as it were, the Son of God laying aside his divine power and coming here and taking upon himself our nature; passing by the angels and consenting to become like us, and subject to all the temptations that mankind is subject unto, "for in all points he was tempted as we are," there's no temptation that befalls us, there's no snare laid in our path, there's no enticement that is offered that was not offered to the Son of God when he took upon himself our nature and passed through life as we pass through it, but yet without sin, oh, I thank God all day long for that truth, that though he was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin. Had he stepped aside from the path of right his power would have been for ever gone, the hope of humanity would have been for ever blasted. He came to be an example for us and to show to mankind that very nature with which God clothed him, and he gave him his existence here below that in that very nature we might serve God and avoid the evils of the world as he lived, and avoid sin in all its forms as he avoided sin. He showed us by his example that it was possible for humanity to do this.

I know some will say, Oh, that can not be so, Bro. Derry; I am so weak and frail. Yes; I know, we all are. I do not think there is a soul feels weaker than your humble servant does; but we trust in God, and he has said that if you lean upon him you shall overcome. He says he will give us strength. Jesus Christ prayed, he prayed continually. We find him going up into the mountains, and there in the loneliness of those mountains he offered his soul to God in prayer. What for, think you? For strength to overcome; for strength to fulfill the divine mission which God, the Father, had given to him to perform. He received that strength because he sought faithfully. He doubted nothing of his Father. No, he received strength. Some tell us it was because he was infinite that he could cast out devils. It was by the power of God that he cast out devils; but he received his power from God because he sought it, because he lived for it, and he was willing to die for it, and not until he had overcome death did he say, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." But when he had passed through death, through the portals of the tomb, and had arisen, and gone to his Father, God, and was clothed with that same power, then he could say,

"All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth."

Ah, my friends, you and I, if we live for the power that he possessed while upon the earth, we may obtain that power. Sometimes the question is asked, Why do not you Latter Day Saints heal all your sick people? Well, I can not tell you all the reasons, but I will tell you one of the reasons. Because we lack faith to a great extent. We are lacking in faith, a great many of us, and perhaps all of us are lacking faith in some degree. We lack humility; we lack diligence; we lack willingness to sacrifice for God. We lack this, and because of this we do not have the faith. We can not come up to the standard that God requires, that we may be enabled to cast out evil spirits, to heal the sick, to make the blind to see, the dumb to speak, and the lame to walk. Our sick would be healed if we possessed that faith in God and in his wisdom, and according to the faith of the individuals who should be restored, then it would be done.

I know there is a time appointed unto man once to die. And let me tell you, friends, that when that time has come, then all the prayers, all the sacrifices that we may make will not change the decree of the infinite God. No, friends; it is appointed unto all men once to die, but I do know, in the light of God's word, it is my privilege, it is your privilege, it is the privilege of all mankind that has become a child of God in Christ Jesus, that they shall live until they shall fill the measure of their creation, and if sickness should come upon them they may be made whole, as we have seen a great many made whole by the power of God, through prayer and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. But until the time comes that our measure of life is filled, and we are still worthy of that life, I believe that we shall live and have the power to live; but we need faith. I have thought a thousand times that we are living under our privileges as children of God, every one of us. I do not except myself for one moment. We are living beneath our privileges. We want to live higher up on the plane of righteousness and truth; then we shall be prepared to enter into and enjoy the riches of eternity. Paul tells us here in the 8th chapter of Romans, if I am not mistaken: "Ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness. But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you. Therefore, brethren, ye are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh. For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."

They are the sons of God, "as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." Oh, what a privilege that is. John says, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him."

What? Like Jesus? Like that glorious being that left the realms of glory and took upon himself our nature, passed through this life, the portals of death, rose again in glorified condition, celestialized,—be made like unto him? We are now the sons of God, but it doth not yet appear what we shall be; when he shall appear we shall be like him. "When he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." Yes, now we can not bear to behold the face of God, because it is so glorious we can not endure the sight; but then we shall be prepared, and all through the sacrifice that the Son of God made for us, all through his life, all through his death, all through his resurrection, this blessedness has been brought about.

And the apostle says still further: "For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God. And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may also be glorified together."

Here then is some of the riches. "Heirs with God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ." What is Jesus Christ heir to? To all the glory, all the blessedness, all the joys, all the power, all the wisdom of infinity, and we are called to be heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ. Oh, friends, this is the best riches, the best riches indeed to have eternal life. God promised it before the world began. Paul tells us that he lived in hope of that promise which God gave unto all, promised before the world began; that is, eternal life. Is it worth living for? Is it worth sacrificing for? Is it worth putting your hands into your pockets and bringing out your dimes and dollars and giving them to the spread of his light and truth, that you have received? is it worth it? Oh, yes; infinitely more than all the honors, all the glories, all the blessedness that this world can confer.

Shall we then refuse to sacrifice for Christ, since he sacrificed so much for us? Can we do too much for God? Can we do too much for Christ? Can we do too much to spread the light and truth among our fellow-men? Why, my friends, Jesus says when we have done all we are unprofitable servants.

I was preaching that one time, and a brother, an elder in the church, told me that he did not believe it. Now I told him I could not help that. It was simply the word of Jesus Christ. We are still unprofitable servants in that sense that all we receive is from God; all that you have, all that you shall possess, either in this world or in the world to come, is from God, and when you simply yield it up, you yield that which is his own, not yours, but his. He has leased it to you for your life, for your well-being, for your joy, for your blessedness, that you might be prepared for that eternal inheritance, that higher riches, that glory with God and with Christ.

Brethren and friends, may God help us each and all to understand better the condescension of the Lord Jesus Christ, understand more of his love, more of his patience and endurance for us; how he bears with us in our weaknesses, and if we make ten thousand failures, yet he does not cast us out. He says he will not break the bruised reed, nor quench the smoking flax, but will bring forth judgment unto victory. Then we need not be discouraged when we contemplate our weakness. We need not be discouraged when we contemplate our own condition and feel our weakness. God says he will be a present help in every time of need, and he says, If you will be with me, I will be with you; but if you forsake me, I will forsake you.

Friends, may God help us to cling closer and closer to the great pattern of life and salvation of our Lord Jesus Christ, and be willing to come up to the standard and make the sacrifices that we may obtain an inheritance that is undefiled and fade not away, is my prayer.

A REVIEW OF "MORMONISM AGAINST ITSELF."---PART 15.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.
SUN WORSHIP.

The emblem "Yoni" on the reverse side of stone bottles was a symbol of the sun god worshiped on "high hills." The Hebrew nation in apostasy supposed that sacred rites performed on elevated places were particularly acceptable to Deity, and they were accustomed to offer sacrifice upon mountains and hills, both to idols, and to God, (see 1 Kings 3: 4,) and to build chapels there (2 Kings 17: 29). And so tenacious of this ancient custom were the Jews, that even after the building of Solomon's Temple, notwithstanding the express law in Deuteronomy twelfth chapter, they continued to erect such chapels on the mountains around Jerusalem, and to offer sacrifices in them.

When Israel departed from God, they constructed images to worship,—merged into idolatry, as we read:

And they left all the commandments of the Lord their God, and made them molten images, even two calves, and made a grove, and worshiped all the host of heaven, and served Baal. And they caused their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire, and used divination and enchantments, and sold themselves to do evil in the sight of the Lord, to provoke him to anger.—2 Kings 17: 16, 17, A. V.

They made images of the things they worshiped. Of Manasseh, 713 years B. C., we read:

For he built again the high places which Hezekiah his father had broken down; and he reared up altars for Baalim, and made groves, and worshiped all the host of heaven, and served them.—2 Chronicles 33: 3, A. V.

Proceeding in evil, sinking deeper and deeper in abomination, the sacred narrative continues his persistency thus:

And he built altars for all the host of heaven in the two courts of the house of the Lord. And he caused his children to pass through the fire in the valley of the son of Hinnom: also he observed times, and used enchantments, and used witchcraft, and dealt with a familiar spirit, and with wizards: he wrought much evil in the sight of the Lord, to provoke him to anger. And he set a carved image, the idol which he had made, in the house of God.—2 Chronicles 33: 5-7, A. V.

Scattered all over Central and South America, as well as Mexico, are the "high places" where worship was offered to the sun god. Prof. Leon, head of the section of anthropology and ethnology, of the National Museum of Mexico, says: "As a rule, every four of the high places surround a court. All the pyramids were found to be quadrangular, and to have been built with special reference to the cardinal points."—Records of the Past, vol. 2, p. 224, 1903.

Mr. Baldwin, page 186, Ancient America, writes:

There was sun worship in America, and the ceremonies existed in some places in the time of Cortez. Humboldt was sure these symbols came to America from the Old World. But whether we adopt his explanation or some other, the traditions on both sides of the Atlantic are without meaning unless it be admitted that there was communication between the two continents in times of which we have no history.

The Temple of the Sun at Cuzco, Peru, is pertinent to this issue; a structure resplendent with gold and ornaments in excess of all the public edifices of Peru. Brownell says, describing it:

The most striking object in the interior was a huge golden sun represented by a figure of the human face surrounded with rays. This was so placed as to receive the first beams of the rising sun.—Brownell, Indian Races, p. 603.

Of the temple in Mexico, destroyed in the time of Cortez, he continues:

The colossal figures of the sun and moon covered with plates of gold, the hideous stone of sacrifice, and the terrible sound of the great war drum are mingled in the descriptions given by early chroniclers.—Ibid., p. 51.

Of discoveries in San Salvador, he writes:

The first is a temple consecrated to the sun, chiefly excavated in the solid rock, and having its entrance toward the east. On the archway of entrance are carved representations of the sun and moon.—Ibid., p. 124.

In the visions of Ezekiel, of the wickedness of Israel, the Lord shows him these "distinctive traits," recorded as follows:

And he brought me into the inner court of the Lord's house, and behold, at the door of the temple of the Lord, between the porch and the altar, were about five and twenty men, with their backs toward the temple of the Lord, and their faces toward the east and they worshiped the sun toward the east.—Ezekiel 8: 16, A. V.

The evidence seems to strengthen as we proceed. This vision was a scene of comparative abomination, for the Lord tells him to "turn and he shall see yet greater abomination," and in obeying the Lord's voice he saw this latter system of worship as it would be among the Israelites, some time, some place. About 700 years B. C. Josiah made war against this system of idolatry, and extirpated it on eastern soil, so we read:

And he put down the idolatrous priests, whom the kings of Judah had ordained to burn incense in the high places in the cities of Judah, and in the places round about Jerusalem; them also that burned incense unto Baal, to the sun, and to the moon, and to the planets, and to all the host of heaven.—2 Kings 23: 5, A. V.

That is, he cleansed the professed people of God, Judah, of this sin. Ezekiel had his vision over one hundred years after Josiah did this work; the Lord showing Ezekiel the future.

We see now that the sun worship of both these Israelitish branches—the attitude was "toward the east." The characteristics appear in five points. First, attitude of worship, "toward east"; second, the objects worshipped—"molten images of sun, moon, and heavenly hosts"; third, the building of "high places"; fourth, setting up idols; fifth, burning of incense, "mingled with incantations, and enchantments."

The idols were constructed from both stone and gold. Some of the latter finally reached the modern Jewish banking houses, and were converted into coin.

Israel, when in darkness, alienated from God, plunged into the worship of idolatry on the Eastern Continent, adopting the system of the heathens; and when departing from the God of their fathers on the Western Continent, they "set up" the system of idolatry. Take Egypt, for instance, under whose religious sway the Hebrews were enslaved for four hundred years. "Ammon" is represented on the hieroglyphic monuments of Egypt as the deity, and sits on a throne, holding the symbol of life and power, and wearing a crown with a peculiar ornament of two feathers, and a band falling behind and hanging down to the feet. Now note the comparison: "In Central America, the Inca symbolized the sun. He had a peculiar headdress with two feathers upright." "Ammon"—Ra,—Osiris, equals the sun, hence, the analogy between "Ammon" and the "Inca" can not be accidental, but is clear.

Dr. Latonche Treville, in the American Review of Reviews, February, 1904, gives the public the pictures of Aztec deities, and adds:

If one were as skeptical as Voltaire he could not help being astonished at the similarities, and could not believe they were accidental. Ancient Mexican architecture is strongly suggestive of an Asiatic origin. The statuette described in the antiquities of Tennessee (page 350,) and the deities found in Aztec countries are copies of the idols of the East.

Mr. Treville supplements the above, with the following:

Mexican folklore proves beyond a doubt that there are traditions among the Mexicans in which white men figured in long robes, who talked to the people in a language of goodness, and preached unto them peace, self-control, unselfishness, and righteousness.

From the mass of facts which has been injected into this article on the question of prehistoric religion, (and it is the very minimum of the mass which exists), it is evident that the system of deductions, or that line of conclusions growing out of the facts, which is in harmony with God's revelation in the Bible, is the one that will stand.

DOMESTIC LIFE IN ANCIENT AMERICA.

On the subject of "domestic life of ancient America," which constitutes the theme of chapter ten in Mormonism against itself, we must confine our rebuttal remarks to narrow limits. Indeed, there is no necessity for an elaborate contest, as we are required only to furnish the evidence to prove that to exist, or to have existed, that he sets out to demonstrate does not exist, or did not exist. I wish to punctuate here, just long enough to advance the thought, that if you tickle our critic the least bit, you will be very apt to find the evidence of "evolution" in the contortions, and hear it in the half audible laugh. The present subject develops this theory as the fulcrum which in the hand of this little Archimede is to turn Mormonism completely over, on the question of "metals and animals," as to the time when the book asserts their existence.

We will supplement the present rebuttal with a statement or two which we deem explanatory, first:

It is now agreed that the Peruvian antiquities represent two distinct periods in the ancient history of the country, one being much older than the other. . . . Cuzco of the Incas appears to have occupied the site of a ruined city of the older period.—Ancient America, pp. 226, 227.

The older period was the Nephite supremacy, and was ended by the Lamanites capturing the country. The Nephites moved northward. See Book of Mormon, pp. 136, 137, Lamoni edition.

Again, it is said there were three periods in the history of Peru, the first, "which began with the origin of civilization, and lasted until the first or second century of the Christian era."—Baldwin, Ancient America, p. 264.

This period will agree also with the Book of Mormon, and answer to the time, or period when the people of South America "revolted from the church," (Book of Mormon, p. 423, Lamoni edition,) "and there began to be Lamanites again in the land." This was in the year 194 A. D. Then we have given us, second:

there was a period of disintegration, decline, and disorder, introduced by successful invasions from the east and south-east, during which the country was broken up into small states, and many of the arts of civilization were lost.—Ancient America, p. 264.

This second period was the end of the Christian era in Peru—the apostasy from the church as described in the Book of Mormon. They abandoned the doctrine of "equality," or having "all things common." It is easy, after this religious decline, to lapse into a condition of "disintegration," turmoil, and "disorder," in attempting reinstatement, and finally to break up into "small" independent clans or "states." It is all recorded in the Book of Mormon. We can assert that this "disintegration" explains the neglect and loss of the industrial arts. The third, and last period, was the "Incas," who, says Baldwin and Montesinos, "revived civilization and restored the empire." (Baldwin, Ancient America, p. 264.)

Nadaillac says: "Nowhere in the world has man displayed greater energy than in Peru."—Ibid., p. 387.

GENERAL REVIEW.

This writing finds "ye scribe," in the city of Toronto, where he expects to reside for a while, at least, having forsaken the city of his birth, dear old London.

Church work and its outlook in Ontario is about the same. The old reliable branches are still alive, though some are not very active. With our limited supply of missionaries, we are doing the best we can. The best news we can give at this writing is that the Lord has spoken to his people quite recently at Toronto, Saint Mary's, and London, giving them some good cheering council, much to the edification of the Saints.

The fall conventions are now a matter of history, and summing them all up, we are compelled to admit they were not all of an encouraging nature, owing to the small attendance, and lack of business zeal, and no doubt there is a something lacking. This we believe should be well noted by those in authority and some remedy applied. How about the reuniting of London and Toronto districts, with Elder Daniel Macgregor as missionary in charge? How does that look, Canadians?

The London district convention held at Saint Thomas was the best of all. Although the business sessions were lifeless, the spiritual part proved to be a blessing to all present. There was some of that old-time feeling of good-fellowship, which each one carried away to strengthen himself through the journey of life. Among those familiar with mostly all the Ontario Saints present were Bishop Evans, Patriarch John Shields, Elders R. C. Longhurst, William I. Fligg, George Henley, G. C. Tomlinson, John L. Burger, John McKenzie, and Daniel Macgregor.

Elder Frank Gray.

As we stated previously in this article that the Lord has been pleased to speak to his people in these parts at different places, which has brought peace, happiness, and joy to the Saints, yet in a recent letter to HERALD comment was made on spiritual manifestations which seemed to indicate that there was a doubt in the minds of some as to the authenticity of some of the revelations given in Canada. While it is a fact that in Canada as well as elsewhere doubts have been entertained and have had good reasons for such, yet it is too broad a statement to let go broadcast, and we believe it to be our duty as a servant of God to protect the brethren who have been the bulwark of Latter Day Saintism on this side of the line, and more especially him whom God called and placed in the Presidency of the church. I want here to state what I personally know, and so far as I have ever heard, that never were Bishop Evans's spiritual manifestations questioned. This has been stated to me by the brethren in different parts of the mission who have not always seen eye to eye with our brother. This statement I desire to make in his defense, because I know it to be true. We should be careful how we write.

The Princess Theater campaign is again on, and we stood amazed as we watched the earnest workers for the Master busily engaged in preparing billboards and signs, and the organization of the bill distributors and billposters as they were making plans to advertise the entire city of the greatest missionary movement ever carried out by the Reorganization. And autos and wagons were used to place the billboards in different sections of the city, while men, women, boys, and girls distributed posters in stores and shops until the grand announcement of "Why I am a Latter Day Saint" was made all over the city.

Toronto is at present enjoying a good season of spirituality, and first-class prayer meetings are being held. On Sunday, October 29, one of the largest revelations ever given in Canada was enjoyed in Toronto, and was given through Ida Hamilton. The tongue was a form of Hebrew. This we know because of the fact that in the meeting was a Jew who had lately been baptized by Bishop Evans, and he stated that he could follow parts of it and knew what was being said before the interpretation was given. It made him rejoice, and no doubt will be a great testimony to him of the truthfulness of this latter day work.

The Lord spoke to the president of the branch, Archie McLean, and to the branch, words of cheer, fully indorsing their past labors and told them to continue their opera house meetings and if they were faithful the time would come when they would call for more laborers to assist in the work. The priesthood were instructed to form themselves into a class with Bishop Evans as their teacher, and the Lord would reveal to him what to teach from time to time. Sr. Evans's work in the ladies' auxiliary was spoken of, and other workers instructed to get in line; also the Sunday school and Religio came in for their share of blessing.

Bishop Evans's work was thoroughly indorsed and he was told to continue to occupy as he was doing, as he had been raised up for that very purpose, and although some murmured yet it was his will that he continue. These are not the exact words, but to that effect. The Lord further stated that he had stood by his bedside while he groaned under trial and suffering and could have stretched forth his hand and healed him, yet he permitted him to suffer that it might prepare him for a work in the future.

The Saints were also instructed to help him hasten the publication of his book of sermons, and that the good accomplished by it would never be known until the "Books" were opened.

The Toronto local Zion's Religio-Literary Society held a banquet on Friday evening last and two hundred and fifty people sat down to eat to the good will of the tenth anniversary. A good program, consisting of songs and speeches, was enjoyed by all.

FRANK GRAY.

Shellbrook, Saskatchewan.

As I am lonesome I thought I would write you a few lines. We live away up here in Canada in an isolated place, but we had the pleasure of having Elder J. W. Peterson preach for us last week, and we greatly enjoyed it. He baptized two, and I think if he could have stayed another week and the weather had continued warm, he could have baptized more. We hope to have him or some other good elder again in the near future.

Bro. Peterson writing to his wife while up here told her that he thought it the last house this side of the north pole. Bro. Zand came up with Bro. Peterson from Saskatoon to Shellbrook, then ten miles north to where we live.

We have been doing all we could in our weak and feeble manner to advance the latter day work. We hope to be able to organize a branch here in the near future. We shall pray and work to that end.

Your brother in the good work,

Conference Minutes.

TORONTO, ONTARIO, DISTRICT.—The third annual conference of the Toronto District was held with the Garafraxa Branch in Grand Valley on September 30 and October 1, 1911. All the sessions were held in the Agricultural Hall and meals were served in the same place, making it very pleasant and sociable for all, while outside the weather was anything but nice. The conference was well attended, the largest delegation coming from Toronto. The district presidency, consisting of Elders Shields, Taylor, and Leader; with Apostle Smith, Bishop Evans, and Elder Longhurst, of London District, presided over the conference. Mrs. Floralice Miller and Elder J. G. Thompson were the clerks. Elsie Hill was pianist, and Hazel Hathaway, Toronto's sweet soloist, acted as chorister and sang several solos. The secretary's statistical report showed a membership of 2697; a net gain of 95. Bishop Evans, chairman of reunion committee, reported the reunion held at Lowbanks in June a great success, and a balance on hand of $75 in goods and cash from the first reunion run by Toronto District. It was resolved to hold another reunion next summer with the same committee to manage it. The auditors reported they found all financial reports correct. The Masonville Branch was declared disorganized and their records were put in the hands of the district secretary. Conference indorsed the recommendation of the Hamilton Branch that Charles Hannah be ordained to the office of elder. The officers elected were: D. B. Perkins, president; J. H. Taylor and N. E. Leader, vice-presidents; Floralice Miller, secretary; David Pycock, member of library board; and Bishop Evans was sustained as bishop's agent and financial agent of district. The preaching was by Bishop Evans, Apostle Smith, Elders Thompson and J. Pycock. The Sunday morning prayer service was in charge of Bishop Evans and Apostle Smith. During the meeting John Shields was ordained to the office of patriarch. The time and place of next conference was left with the mission and district presidency. Floralice Miller, secretary.

Of General Interest

Another Victory for the Truth.

We have just closed a sixteen-session debate with the Re-organized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints (as they call themselves), in which we have won a decided victory for the truth.

Marion Boles, of Mount Vernon, Illinois, was our disputant, and W. S. L. Scott, of Coldwater, Michigan, was theirs. There were four propositions debated, each man affirming two and denying two, and if their man made a single point that was not fully met by Bro. Boles, I do not recall it. I think Mr. Scott is the best debater they have, or one of the best. But in trying to support the work of Joe Smith as called of God to do the work he did along with inspiration of their books and present-day revelation, it was no use with such a man as Bro. Boles. Not only well posted on the Bible, but on Mormonism as well, the debate was full of interest, and audiences were immense from first to last, and at the close the disputants shook hands and seemed to close as good friends as they began, and we feel that we made no mistake in Bro. Boles to defend the truth. He not only debated, but knows and presents the plea of the Bible as few men do—as fearless as Paul, yet meeting the keenest sarcasm and innuendoes with a smile that make him a power. On Tuesday night he delivered a lecture, "Christ divine without the Bible," to a fine house, who went away well pleased. No, brethren, the days of debate are not over. We were rejoiced and helped in the fellowship of Brn. Denny, Nichol, Price, Hall, of our preaching brethren, besides many from other places of the membership—from Woodbine, Missouri Valley, Council Bluffs and Omaha. Taking it all in all, the debate was rather a pleasant affair. And by the way, brethren, if you have a job of debating with the Josephites or Brigham-ites, I don't think you will make a mistake in sending for Marion Boles, of Mount Vernon, Illinois. For remember what is worth doing is worth doing well.

Bishop Evans O. K.

Editor Sunday World: In reply to your request for your readers's opinion about The Sunday World, would like to say that I have always had a high opinion of your paper. Its sporting, comic, magazine, art, and all other sections have been bright and clean, entertaining and instructive. Just now a column has got in which causes the only blemish I have ever noticed, viz: the "As others see us" column, in which one Bishop Evans comes in for some rather mean raps. Can I say a word in his favor and suggest that criticisms, though adverse, may be made in a more kindly tone? The bishop's sermons were classed as "twaddle." Now, people who throw stones must be careful that their houses are not made of glass, for on the instant that one man classes another man's earnest effort as "twaddle," that man's brand of "twaddle" is going to be sized up right away, and he will have to be mighty careful if he doesn't want a large hunk of contempt handed out to him.—Law of compensation; "As a man judgeth, so shall he be judged."

Then after "twaddle" comes "weedy words," "muddy thoughts," "obscene references," (my, how the writer of that must hate Bishop Evans), and he says the bishop has no views at all as to the future life. Now, that's wrong; for there is no man with more exact and pronounced views as to the future state, and who keeps reiterating them more than does Bishop Evans. Ninety-nine people out of a hundred who have heard him will surely bear witness to that.

Again, he says that Bishop Evans says, "this denomination is wrong; that denomination is wrong." Well, aren't they? Facts are always facts, and stating them will help, not hinder the cause of justice and truth. I have heard the bishop say that the Roman Church had fallen into apostasy and error. Are you going to say that is not so? If you are you will be contradicted by tens of thousands to-morrow. Is the Anglican priesthood valid? Romanists will deny it to a man, and the bishop says that the Anglican Church got its priesthood from the Roman Church, which excommunicated it; if the Roman Church is true the excommunication is valid; if the Roman Church was not true it had no true priesthood to withhold or bestow. Is there flaw in that argument?

What Bishop Evans has said of the other churches is also, alas, only too true. Of the local Methodist Church I might just state that Bishop Evans stood up boldly for the whole Bible while a D. D. college professor classed the first eleven chapters as a fairy story or something of the kind. The bishop agrees with none of these churches in their mode of baptism, preferring to follow his Master as closely as he can, for not many can think that Jesus went down into Jordan to be baptized and then was merely sprinkled when he got in.

In conclusion Bishop Evans's sermons are a good feature for a live newspaper, in my opinion, for one. I have yet to hear him say a single word in disparagement of the Man of Sorrows or of Christianity, or of his fellow-men as men,—merely of theories they advocate, and that's good and healthy. Keep in the sermons and omit this column to keep out muddy thoughts is the only suggestion I have to offer The Toronto Sunday World.

146 Langley Avenue.

P. S.—In case readers may think that some good member of Bishop Evans's church wrote this, I must say no; never was, never expect to be. Handed out merely in the interest of fair play.—Toronto Sunday World, November 12, 1911.

Wisconsin University as a Model.

Regents of the State University of Kansas, after a recent study at first hand of the University of Wisconsin, announce that the ideal and the method of the Badger state institution are to be imitated hereafter. The university campus is to be coterminous with the bounds of the State. All residents, adult or juvenile and in between, are to be students in theory, and in practice wherever possible. Oral and printed instruction is to find its way from the university to the remotest hamlet. It will have to do with butter as well as with the Punic wars, shedding light on the interstate commerce commission as well as on the Knights of King Arthur. Laws hereafter are to be the joint product of experts in social science and statutory drafting enlisted from the university's faculty as well as the result of the demand of legislators and constituents. In short, the State is to go into university extension, and the educational system is to be "democratically democratic," actually so and not only as a beautiful vision.

Illinois studied the same model a few years ago and came to the same decision. Probably the University of Michigan sooner or later must do likewise, or lose such status as it now has. President Vincent, of the University of Minnesota, takes up his new task with a great plant, a fine body of students and an unprecedented ultimate endowment in sight. But what is most needed now is an extension of horizon, and a passion of public service such as Wisconsin is teaching the country must characterize universities that are popularly supported and popularly controlled.

Given all the state universities dedicated to this broader conception of civic usefulness and wider diffusion of truth, and the region in which such institutions abound seems predestined to dominate even more than it does now in shaping national development and policy.—The Monitor, (Boston.)

The Uninvited Guest.

It was Christmas Eve and the sun had long since gone down behind banks of dark gray clouds, but above these the stars were shining, clear and bright. The air was full of frost, and a cold, biting wind swirled with pitiless force against such pedestrians as chanced to be abroad at this hour. These, however, were not many. A few belated shoppers whose scanty purses would not detain them long abroad, with here and there some clerk or weary man of business whose ledger had kept him beyond the usual time.

In the city of B— few were at this hour abroad in the streets, but the churches were ablaze with lights, and the warmth of summer, was within their walls, for to-morrow was the one day of the year—Christmas Day—and this was Christmas Eve.

Christmas Eve, and the churches were filled to overflowing! Such bands of gay, happy children, with parents, friends, and guardians all awaiting what of gifts and cheer the evening was to bring.

To those whose "eyes were holden" it was indeed a happy sight. Soft strains of music fell upon the ear, and the light reflected from many a brilliant color, many a costly gem, was not brighter or cheerier than the expectant smiles wreathing the faces of the hundreds of children waiting for the gifts which each felt sure he would receive. And yet it was not the birthday of any one of them, but they had met to celebrate the birth of Jesus, the Babe of Bethlehem. Celebrate it, and how! By receiving and not giving!

It is true they spoke of Jesus and sang his praise in many a lovely anthem and hymn, but alas, that was all, for no gifts were brought to him, and no treasure was laid upon the altars erected to his worship wherewith to advance his work, his cause in the world. And yet it was his birthday they had met to celebrate, and the gifts should have been brought to him. It is not thus we treat our earthly friends, and is it fair, is it just that we so treat that heavenly Friend?

I was a stranger in B—, away from home on business, and being lonely in my hotel had been attracted by the light and music to seek an hour's enjoyment, but most of all wanted to banish the home faces from my mind and so silence the craving to be with them. It was duty which kept me from them, and I wanted to do my duty in a spirit of cheerfulness.

I had not been seated long in the beautiful church when one was directed by the attentive usher to take the seat next to me. Politeness forbade more than a hasty glance at the man, but hasty as that glance was it revealed to me a fair and attractive face with a countenance so mild and benign that my heart was stirred within me in a strangely new emotion, and a long breath surged up from the depths of my being as waves of fire issue from a volcano when moved by unseen forces. Involuntarily I closed my eyes and raised my hand to my brow as if to clear my vision, and still the waves of emotion were beating against my breast.

Presently the stranger turned his face toward me, and bending upon me a most penetrating but tender glance he spoke, but in a tone so soft and low that while I understood distinctly every word which fell from his lips, his voice did not seem to reach or in any way to disturb others. While we talked the entertainment still went on as before, and gift after gift was distributed through the large audience. Indeed, it once came into my mind to wonder if we two were not in some mysterious way invisible to those by whom we were so closely surrounded. But I put the thought from me. "They are so intent upon their own pleasure, so completely absorbed in self as not to heed us," I said, and bent my head yet nearer to the stranger, that I might not lose a word which fell from his lips.

"Are you, too, a stranger in this great city?" he asked.

"I am an entire stranger," I answered.

"Then you will not be able to explain this festival to me?"

"Oh, yes," I answered, wondering in my mind that anyone should fail to know a Christmas entertainment. "This is an entertainment almost universally kept throughout the entire Christian world. They have met here, as elsewhere, to celebrate the birth of Jesus Christ. Did you not hear them singing his praises and telling the wonderful story of his birth?"

"I came in too late for that," he answered, "but why is it that if they have met to celebrate his birth they are bestowing all these presents upon others. It may be they gave to him before I came in."

"I think not," I stammered at last, for I found myself hesitating to answer the question. The thought had already been in my own mind, but when presented by another it assumed a force and significance greater than ever before.

"In those far-away times when the Savior was born," the low, penetrating voice continued, "the wise men from the East brought to him gifts of frankincense and myrrh. Surely times have changed since then, if this is indeed the way in which those who believe in him celebrate the day of his birth!"

I felt a strain of sadness penetrating his voice as he spoke, and a far distant look gathered in his eyes as if he were recalling scenes of the past and living them again in the present. I almost feared to speak, and yet I felt that if possible I must disabuse his mind of the thought that Christ was not being honored. That parents who brought their children here to receive gifts publicly for themselves, yet had beneath all a desire to teach them to honor the day because of love for him. But how could I do this, was the question. At last I said:

"Yes, times have indeed changed since then and Jesus no longer needs the gifts of earthly things. It is the adoration of the heart which he demands."

"Yes," replied the stranger, "and truly without that all else is vain. But tell me, my friend, if you can, in what way those children are being taught, by thus celebrating the day of his birth, to offer such adoration to him."

I could not reply, and after a few moments of silent waiting he concluded:

"You say that Jesus no longer needs the gifts of earthly things. In this you are mistaken. For himself he does not now and never did need them. But you forget that the work which brought him to the earth is not yet completed, and for this work the treasures of earth are needed to-day more than ever before, because as the years have multiplied so has the work, and is it not sad that those who profess to love him, who should be laborers together with him, should meet to celebrate the day of his birth and yet not lay upon his altar a single gift to help in carrying that work on?"

Again silence fell between us, for I could not answer the question, and again the stranger asked:

"You said that elsewhere people were to-night celebrating the birth of the Savior even as these are. Is it true that in all the churches of this fair land whose spires rise high towards heaven, the same manner of celebrating this wonderful event obtains? Are there none where Christ is really the guest of honor and where gifts as of old are presented to him?"

"If there are any such," I answered, "I do not know of them, and my heart almost failed me to make this reply, for I saw the face which had so won upon me taking on a look of sadness which it pained me to see. But suddenly the look of the stranger changed. A brightness illumined his countenance, and a glad light shone in his eyes, as rising and extending his hand he said, 'Come with me, then, and I will show you a place where he is not, as here, an uninvited guest, but is indeed the guest of honor.'"

Mechanically I arose and followed the stranger. But time, place, and distance were all unnoted until we entered a small church in what I judged to be a distant part of the city. The building was plain, but neat, and filled to its utmost capacity with a plainly dressed, but very attentive congregation.

At first it seemed that we would not be able to obtain seats, but as soon as he could make his way through the crowded aisles a man of benign and genial countenance approached and asked us to follow him. When we had pressed our way to the very front he seated us upon the top step of the pulpit, where we had a clear view of the entire audience and could hear distinctly all that was said.

The front seats were all filled with children, whose bright, happy faces it was pleasant to contemplate, and whose eager, expectant glances indicated that they were soon to take part in the exercises of the evening. I found myself wondering what these would be. Just across from where we were sitting at the other side of the pulpit a curtain was drawn, and towards this the eyes of the children occasionally wandered, but they seemed most concerned in little white envelopes which each one held in his or her hand and were evidently growing restless and anxious for the exercises to proceed.

Nor had they long to wait, for as soon as we were comfortably seated a venerable, white-haired man stepped forward and in plain, simple, but impressive language told to the children the sweet old story of the birth of Christ.

"We have come here to-night, children," he added, "to celebrate his birth, to honor the day upon which he was born, and I trust not one of us has come empty handed, but that each one has brought an offering—a gift to lay upon his altar to help in spreading abroad in all the earth the gospel which he came into the world to teach to men and which he gave his life to establish.

"To-morrow may not be the very day upon which Christ was born, there are none who think we really know that day, but it is the day that all Christians have chosen to keep in memory of his birth. No one may really know the exact day, but that should not keep us from celebrating some one day, and so honor his name and his cause.

"First of all, then, children, you will come forward class by class and deposit in the holly-wreathed basket here on the table your Christmas Offerings, which are given to Jesus just as truly as if he were here to-night in person to receive them. All through the year we know that some of you have been working for the offering you will give him to-night. Others of you have been saving your pennies, and yet others have cheerfully parted with money given to you. I could wish that all of you might have worked to earn your offering, for I think we know better the real value of that for which we labor. We could not do this, and the Lord who knows all hearts, will bless everyone who willingly and cheerfully gives to spread the glad tidings contained in his gospel. Come forward now and deposit your offerings."

It was a pleasant sight to see the dear children as they pressed eagerly forward and one by one deposited in the basket the little envelopes containing their gifts to Jesus upon his birthday. And sweeter music than the patter of those little feet upon the floor I think I never heard.

"Now," continued the speaker, "the four little girls who have been appointed to do so may take their baskets and pass them among your parents, friends, and relatives, that all may have the opportunity of joining you in this voluntary tribute to the Master.

When this had been done and the baskets safely deposited, the curtain at the side of the pulpit was drawn back, disclosing a beautiful tree loaded with presents for the children. "It is now your turn to receive," said their superintendent, "and your joy in your gifts will be doubled because you have tested and truly know that 'it is more blessed to give than to receive.'"

Then I looked at the face of the stranger who had brought me there, only to find it wreathed with a smile of ineffable sweetness, and his eyes bent upon the children seemed like clear pools of limpid water whose depths no one might fathom, and in the same soft, penetrating voice in which he had before spoken I heard the words:

"And again this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come, or the destruction of the wicked." Then rising and stretching forth his hands as in benediction upon the congregation he added:

"Blessed are all they who are permitted to help in this work and hasten the time of my second coming—the time when the pure in heart shall rejoice, when men shall know that I am God and every knee shall bow to me, that my Father may be honored and his will be done upon earth even as it is in heaven. Amen!"

As these words fell upon my ear my very soul seemed melting within me, and it was moments before I dared raise my eyes. But when at last I slowly turned them towards the place where he had stood, it was empty, and nowhere could I discover any trace of him.

But a moment seemed to elapse when I found myself pressing my way out from the church I had first entered and knew that I had been dreaming.

"Sleep has its own world," and in it many a sublime truth is learned. If God will but impress upon the hearts of others the truth contained in this as it was impressed upon mine, there will be no little ones sent this year empty handed to celebrate the Savior's birth, nor will any parent fail to realize the richness of the privilege of being permitted to help in the work which is to hasten the second coming of Christ and the beginning of his righteous reign upon earth.

Ebeling-Langdon Debate.

The debate between Elder F. J. Ebeling, and Elder W. S. Langdon of the Utah Church closed last night, having occupied four sessions of two hours each. The first proposition discussed is as follows:

"Is the church over which Joseph F. Smith presides, with headquarters in Utah, the true and legal church in succession from the church established by Joseph Smith, the Martyr, in 1830; and are its teachings in harmony therewith?"

This was affirmed by Elder Langdon and denied by Elder Ebeling for two nights, and a similar proposition for the Reorganized Church occupied the two successive evenings. The whole discussion was orderly and respectful on both sides, the main points being succession and polygamy. When pressed to it, Elder Langdon made a strong plea for the doctrine of "celestial marriage," including polygamy, and upon this point reached the climax of his effort. He held that "celestial marriage" lifted one above every element of lust, and that resultant children would be "celestial children," superior to others, but admitted that even the church in Utah had failed to come up to the standard required by that celestial law.

In opposition Elder Ebeling pointed out that polygamy was introduced by Brigham Young and his colleagues to justify the criminal conduct into which they had fallen, and as to the testimony of the Utah people seeking to locate the origin of the doctrine in Joseph Smith, jr., he pointed out no less than thirteen direct contradictions, thus proving, as Judge Phillips said, that they were guilty of falsehood, and the testimony could not be relied upon.

Elder Langdon had as his moderator, Elder L. M. Jensen, and as supporters twenty or twenty-five elders, while the writer assisted Bro. Ebeling as moderator, and Bro. O. J. Tary, branch president, Brn. R. Baldwin and L. A. Burdick, and the local brethren, gave such support as was possible.

The main effect, locally, of the discussion, was to convince the public that the Reorganized Church and the Mormon Church are not the same.

GENEVA, NEBRASKA, December 1, 1911.

Dear Readers of the Saints' Herald: As I am away from home, spending the winter with my sister, Mrs. D. C. Goodrich, of Geneva, Nebraska, and know of no Saints here, I should be glad to have any living in this vicinity call upon me.

Your sister in the faith,

MRS MARY A. DRAKE.

WICHITA, KANSAS, November 20, 1911.

Dear Editor: The great Billy Sunday is here thundering away in his great tabernacle and scores of people are going forward and giving their hearts, as they believe, to God. Under the strain and excitement of his plain speaking in regard to the evils of others, the promise of salvation to those who believe and come forward, taking their choice of any church they feel disposed to take; with all this going on, there is still a little handful of people meeting at 116 North Elizabeth Street striving to serve God and keep his commandments by meeting together in prayer and testimony meetings, Sunday school and preaching services each Sunday. While our attendance varies on account of the weather or the financial condition of the Saints, there are still some interested.

I had the pleasure of leading one precious soul into the waters of baptism, and if my dream is realized, there are nine more that we know of that are to be baptized here. I saw that before the branch was organized, but this is to be the work of the missionary while I was presiding over the branch. I am not saying that will be all, but that I was shown in dream.

May the Lord bless and protect his people is my prayer,

E. L. BARRACLOUGH.

ALGONAC, MICHIGAN, November 27, 1911.

Dear Herald: I sometimes get a chance to tell the story of the angel's message, and it does me good to talk about it. What few I do talk to say they never heard of it. I have offered them reading matter concerning our faith, but they don't seem to care about it. My husband is a Catholic; I often talk with him, but he doesn't understand the law of God at all and tells me I can't make a Saint of him. I tell him if God can't, I won't try. However, I am determined to tell him the true plan of salvation and trust God. In God's own time he may change his mind and give him an understanding of what is required of him, as he did for Paul, although he doesn't persecute the Saints but goes with me to church and conference sometimes.

He is a good husband to me. I thank God we are living so happily in our old days. Although our faith differs he never tries to prevent me from going to church when I can. Still I feel anxious for him, as he is troubled with his stomach.

I ask an interest in the prayers of all God's people for him, that he may be cured and myself also if it is God's will.

MRS. ELIZABETH CARRIER.

MOUNTAINVILLE, MAINE, November 27, 1911.

Editors Herald: Over nine years have passed away since I was led into the waters of baptism by our beloved brother and leader, Elder J. N. Ames, who has since gone to his well-earned reward; he having baptized my companion and myself at this place on the 6th of June, 1902. Looking backward, previous to that joyful event, I am made to wonder at the mighty workings and power of God to bring about seemingly impossible things when viewed from a human standpoint. From earliest childhood I was taught by example and otherwise in direct opposition to the Latter Day Saint teachings, not being allowed to attend their services, being taught to shun and avoid them in every possible way. So strongly did this tend to influence my mind that after marriage I would neither attend their services nor allow my wife to do so; neither would I read any of their books nor allow any of them in my house, although there was a Sunday school library here, besides other opportunities of getting such matter.

I had attended both the Congregationalist and Methodist churches and had taught in their Sunday schools for years, although my preference was for the Methodist, which I finally joined on six months' probation, according to their church law, before one can be admitted to full membership. Well, I thank God the full membership is still ahead as concerns myself, for, in answer to prayer and scripture study for more light, I was led by the Holy Spirit to talk with Bro. J. E. Eaton, then president of this branch, who showed up the truth in such a forceful manner that I was convinced of the truthfulness of the gospel, and after more study, prayer, and investigation, I was baptized as before stated, much to the surprise of many, both in and out of the Saints' church.

So I feel to-day to be able to say that after practical experience with other doctrines and churches, that I am a Latter Day Saint because I know that they have the doctrine and gospel that was once delivered unto the Saints, and what was necessary for the saints of former days is equally so for those of latter days. I am convinced of the truthfulness of this work because I have found that it not only agrees in organization and doctrine with that instituted by our Savior, but the signs also do truly follow the believer as he said, as I can testify and prove that on several occasions I have been raised from sickness to health by the administration of the elders of this church, where medical aid seemed of little avail.

How any fair-minded, intelligent person can study the word and then reject the gospel as taught by this people is more than I can understand. So I feel to rejoice in this great and glorious work, which is bound to progress and which will at last fill the whole earth with its beauty and glory, as seen by the Prophet Daniel in his vision. I want to be faithful to my baptismal covenant to the end, that I may enter in with the Saints to the celestial reward. To this end I am working and praying, and also desire the prayers of the Saints.

Your brother,

W. A. SMALL.

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, December 1, 1911.

Editors Herald: Having just read E. W. Nunley's article entitled, "Be children in wrath but men in understanding," I wish to voice my sentiments regarding contentions with people not of our faith. That the gospel must be preached, that right should be shown in contrast to error, that our testimony should be borne to the world, I do not dispute; but let us do it as becometh Saints who have the Spirit of Christ. For can we truthfully say we have the Christ Spirit when our hearts are filled with antagonism?

We sometimes lose sight of the object aimed at, and think only of gaining our point. Because we have the truth let us not use it for our own exultation in getting the best of an argument. Let us use the plan that God used. He so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that we might not perish, but have everlasting life. Let us do likewise; love them instead of always nagging them. If we have love in our hearts for our fellow-men (we are all God's creatures), and are not too intolerant of another's views, we will win the respect and love of those with whom we come in contact.

To me this seems the better way of furthering the Master's cause. We need not swerve from the faith that was once delivered to the Saints, but agree where we can and point out the differences in a kindly way. Then if they will not see, we have done our duty and we leave them in the care of a just God. Love them, whether they agree with us or not. Let us be broad, as Christ was broad, and may the words of the sixth verse of Joseph Luff's inspired hymn penetrate our understanding.

"Love ye me and love all people—
Love as I have loved you;
This your calling—this my purpose—
Thus be my disciples true.
Then in this exalted station
Your companion I will be;
Every promise of my Scriptures
Will be verified in thee."

ANNAH F. AYERS.

MAPLETON, KANSAS, December 2, 1911.

Saints' Herald: My debate at Adamson, Oklahoma, with Ben. M. Bogard, a Missionary Baptist, will be held from January 8 to 14, 1912. Church propositions will be discussed. Two sessions each day. This will be our third debate.

Yours in bonds,

J. F. CURTIS.

BAY CITY, MICHIGAN, November 30, 1911.

Editor Herald: The two-day meeting, held at Bay City November 25 and 26, was called to order by the district presidency, George W. Burt, and E. S. White, and organization perfected. Elder F. A. Smith was chosen to preside; the district presidency associated; Esther White was chosen organist; Lusella Laur was chosen chorister; Matthew Umphrey, usher; O. J. Hawin and E. S. White, press committee.

There was a goodly portion of the priesthood present, including Elders F. A. Smith, William Davis, O. J. Hawin, A. E. Burr, George W. Burt, M. A. Sommerfield, Joseph Sheffer, Samuel Pendleton, and the writer, and one ordained to the office of elder, making ten in all of the eldership, and sixteen of the lesser priesthood, as we had twenty-six at our priesthood meeting; however, there were gathered together about two hundred Saints and outsiders, to listen to the dedicatory sermon by our minister in charge, Elder Frederick A. Smith, assisted by Elder A. E. Burr. Dedicatory prayer by Elder O. J. Hawin. The chapel was dedicated to the Lord with a free platform and an open Bible, inviting all to come to Christ, and we believe that God is well pleased with our offering.

We had four services on Saturday, and six services on Sunday, while there was no great outpouring of the Spirit, that is, by way of the gifts; but all of the services were good, and a nice, quiet, gentle spirit prevailed all through our meetings, and we believe much good was done at our priesthood meeting, in the morning, the instruction given by our worthy leader, Elder F. A. Smith, being good, and highly appreciated.

The church work in Bay City has passed through some trying trials, and yet to-day it is in better condition than ever before, and we thank God for this; and now we wish to thank those who so kindly came to assist in the dedication of our church building to God.

Your coworker,

E. S. WHITE.

Reflections.

I believe in work, but I hate to do it.

An honest man changes his mind; a consistent man sticks to a lie.

Some people who are said to be sound in faith are simply sound asleep.

I believe in staying with the church, right or wrong, on the theory that the church is growing but is not infallible.

Be progressive, but do not progress clear out of the procession.

I believe in all religions that make men better, on the ground that all will be judged according to works.

The Chinese are losing their "pigtailed"—serves 'em right. They have been hugging their old traditions and superstitions for thousands of years while others have been making progress. And now it requires a terrible revolution to get rid of their old pigtailed. How many pigtailed do you wear? Better clip off a few before Father Time yanks them off.

I know why the men don't go to church; because they can't get an office. Men want office; women want to sing.

Maine has gone "dry" again. This makes the 'steenth time Maine has gone wet and dry alternately; which shows the unreliability of newspaper reports. I don't believe they had any election.

IRK HADLEY.

After the Battle.

Some time ago the Christians or Disciples in the town of Logan, in Iowa, hired a revivalist of their sect to shake up the dry bones, breathe a little life into them, and, if possible, add some new recruits to their nondescript religion. Thinking perhaps the Latter Day Saints had no friends in that town, and not having the courage to strike at any of the popular churches, and knowing that it would please his employers, he undertook to smirch the faith and character of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. But that people, always willing to learn all they can that is good, from infidel, Christian, pagan or Jew, attended his meetings, and at the close of one of his harangues he was approached in a gentlemanly manner and asked to explain, prove his assertions, or apologize. Being not disposed to do either, and being backed by his employers, a running controversy was carried on through one of the county newspapers which resulted in a sixteen session public discussion, held in the Christian church of Logan, between the reverend lawyer, Marion Boles, on their part, and S. W. L. Scott on our part. Neither of them are "slouches" in debate.

The questions, as nearly as I can remember, were, "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is identical in doctrine, organization and practice with the church set forth in the New Testament." Scott affirmed, Boles denied. The Book of Mormon, the Inspired Translation, and the revelations through Joseph Smith were attacked by Boles and defended by Scott as being from God. Not having the propositions in writing, I may not mention them in their order.

It is now nearly seventy years since I first heard of the people called the Latter Day Saints. The first word I heard of them was in defamation of their character and traducing their faith, and I was kindly warned to shun them as a dangerous people. But after some time I concluded, out of curiosity to go and hear them. I was then a member of the Freewill Baptist Church. I had been a student of the Bible from my early youth, and I love it. I heard them; they preached from the same Bible I had read at school and home. But they told me the Baptists had no authority to baptize. I stopped to hear no more.

One year rolled around before I would listen to them again. Full of prejudice I went again. They were holding communion service, and after they had broken bread and drank of the cup, in remembrance of Christ's death, they had a fellowship meeting in which they told of their religious experiences, and there I saw what I had often heard the Methodist people pray for, but had never seen nor expected to see. It was a pentecostal shower! I am not blaspheming, nor was it an illusion. It was real, just as Luke described it, save that no "cloven tongues of fire" were seen by me, but I felt the burning influence of that Holy Spirit as fire within my bones. I saw and heard the speaking of tongues, and heard the interpretation, and that in a manner beyond the power of those unlearned persons to imitate; and though I had gone with prejudice in my heart, yet the blessed influence was so great that I was compelled to say within my own heart, "If ever there was a pentecostal shower, it is here to-day." But as I mingled with the busy world other thoughts took possession of me and I kept on in my old track until after I was twenty-one years old; then I left the town of Walsall and moved to Westbromwich.

Here a bitter foe of the Latter Day Saints invited me to go and hear a discussion between the Methodists and the Latter Day Saints. I went expecting to hear the Latter Day Saints overthrown, but was astonished that the Methodist preacher had no weapon but calumny to use, and when he quoted scripture he distorted it from its meaning. I felt disgusted, but at the same time determined to look thoroughly into the matter, and I took the God of heaven into my confidence. I told him I wanted to do his will, and his only, but I must have his guidance or fail. I searched the Scriptures, I heard both sides of the question and tried to weigh them justly. Weeks rolled around; the powers of hell seemed to let loose upon me, trying to drag me down to infidelity, but I continued to seek God.

Light came—I was satisfied. I demanded baptism at the hands of the Latter Day Saints. They tried to postpone it. I told them, "Now is the accepted time. Now is the day of salvation. I must be baptized now." I was baptized that day. I found the "pearl of great price," and for more than sixty-four years it has been my staff and stay and has afforded me a hope of everlasting life through Jesus my redeemer. That hope glows within my bosom yet, and to God be the glory!

Since uniting with the church I have been witness to the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, giving words of comfort and instruction in other tongues by men and women who like the unlearned Galileans of old, knew but little of their mother tongue; while others, equally unlearned, were able by the same Spirit to give the interpretation, and all under the calm and gentle influence that heaven alone can bestow. Those inspired utterances were not wild, frantic utterances of disordered minds, but loving words of strength, hope, and encouragement such as an all-wise and loving Father would give to his tried and tempted children. Yes, hundreds of instances of divine outpourings have I seen and felt, and I know they could not have been the mere work of man, and it was and is an equal impossibility for them to have been the work of the Evil One, because they reprove sin and lead only to God and godliness. I have seen also, that that divine influence was not only manifest in those outward evidences, but also in the calm but overwhelming power of love and light that caused every heart to weep for joy they could not express; a joy that would task the tongues of angels to utter, a joy that fills and burns in the bosom of the writer, and moistens with tears from sweet remembrances his aged eyes as he traces these lines in his weakness. With this blessed evidence the Saints can endure the dark and angry frown, the cold and senseless sneers of the ten thousand scoffers at present divine inspiration. And yet they make no claim to infallibility, or even of impeccability, as our enemies would charge us with claiming, but God and his word are infallible; and because of this, and his abounding love, we are enabled to enjoy the blessings promised when we honor that word.

Under these conditions and with this knowledge engraven upon our hearts, the Saints could endure the cold sneers of a Boles with sorrow for the man who could give himself for filthy lucre to destroy the cause of truth and scoff at the idea of divine inspiration, while at the same time he claims to believe in a Bible that is God's guarantee that all may enjoy it who will seek unto God for it in his appointed way.

My purpose in attending the debate was to learn if there was anything new that I had never heard that could be brought against this latter day work, and see if our opponent had any truth that we did not possess; if they had I was willing to receive it. I am not of the school that believes that, "A man convinced against his will is of the same opinion still." Every man's opinion is dear to him, he fights hard to maintain it; but when convinced he is wrong, that is his opinion no more. I love that which I believe to be true, but if I could be shown that it is not true I have no more use for it. But I sought in vain for any truth we had not, or for any argument against our position that we had not heard scores of times, and that had not fallen powerless before the Rock of eternal truth in which we find shelter.

I did see some twisting of the word of God, constant misapplication of God's promises—an assuming to themselves of that which God had promised to another people under different circumstances. I saw that their claim to be "silent where the Bible is silent, and speak only where the Bible speaks" is an empty boast. I saw that their claim that the nondescript thing they call a church was identical in name, doctrine, organization, and practice with the church of the New Testament was false. May God help them to see and repent.

The debate has done good, softened down prejudice, made friends to our cause, strengthened the Saints, and we give God the glory. It is another evidence that when we humble ourselves before him and thus acknowledge his hand, he will not leave us alone and he will confound our enemies. It may have embittered those who love falsehood better than they love the truth, if such there be, but if there are such we are sorry for them and pray that the Spirit may still strive with and help them to see the preciousness of truth, and that truth alone can benefit the children of men.

Just a line from this part of the world to inform your readers of some of the things we have to cope with, and the apparent outlook here under present conditions.

I have been here nearly six weeks, and I think I have averaged a sermon a day so far, but it seems the end is reached here as far as the Utah people are concerned, since their stake president, Andrew Kimball, (a polygamous son of Heber C. Kimball), and a twin brother of one of the wives of Joseph F. Smith) has given orders that all the houses of worship in the Gila Valley shall be closed against me; and he also informed the people that if there were any weak ones that wanted to go to the Devil (meaning me) they could do so; but of course they were such as would receive the disfavor of the people, and since that time some who were hitherto very friendly have acted very shy, fearing lest they were to come under the ban and be publicly ostracised by this lion of the tribe of polygamy. It is certainly appalling to see intelligent people so priest-ridden, especially in this day and age and in our own United States; but it seems they are captivated largely by the spirit that upholds polygamy. I have labored with them lovingly and mildly, dealing only with issues and not personalities, and yet I have been called almost everything in the catalogue. But I rather feel complimented in that because our good Master has said: "If they have called the Master of the house Beelzebub, what will they call these of his household?" But it is hard to see people so completely captivated that they are not permitted to think for themselves, and yet many of them seem to think it is all right.

Of course I have some warm friends here, and there are some who would like to have things ordered otherwise, but haven't sufficient moral courage to take a stand in the matter and so just drift with the tide. Of course it means something to differ from the authorities of these ecclesiastical stakes and wards, yet I hope and pray that the day may be hastened when people will be awakened and arise in their manhood and stand for truth and right regardless of the orders and edicts of a polygamous hierarchy. Could they be awakened, there are many good, zealous people among them, but in the language of Moroni: "I fear that the Spirit hath ceased striving with them." As long as they prefer to trust to Mother Rumor and "old wives fables" in preference to the law of God, it is a hard matter to appeal to them; and as long as they believe in the infallibility of their leaders we can never get them to hear the law, since their leaders have outgrown both the law of God and man.

When I am brought face to face with such conditions as are found in this part of the world, I especially feel thankful to our heavenly Father for the true, pure, and unadulterated gospel, and I think of how we should appreciate it and rejoice in its saving power, and in the freedom and liberty that is found therein. May the day be hastened when the honest-hearted shall be freed from the powers of darkness that reign in the children of disobedience.

We have planted the good seed here and feel that it will not all be lost, but that some of it will sprout and grow and bear fruit to the glory of God and the good of mankind. Our work is the work of love, and if I can not appeal to and reach the people through the spirit of love, I can then only leave them in the hands of a just and very merciful God, who will reward every man according to his works and the desires of his heart, and he will do right by them. It is sufficient for me to know that I have done my part faithfully and my responsibility ends there, and that of the people begins.

I expect Bro. S. D. Condit here with me to-morrow, and since we have permission to use the Methodist Episcopal church here we will try to do good to the people by holding out to them the pure gospel of love and truth.

There are other towns in the valley in which we expect to present our work, and will ever pray that the Lord of the harvest will give the increase, that in time the golden sheaves may be gathered in as a result of our planting.

The good Lord has stood by me in my labors here and that peace that passeth all understanding has been given, and the Comforter, even the Spirit of truth, hath been an ever present companion and helper, and I feel to say with Paul, that there is "neither height nor depth, nor things present, nor things to come, can separate us from the love of God." His matchless power has sustained us, and we ought to be willing to render the service that he requires of us.

With a hearty Thanksgiving to all, I subscribe myself, your fellow-servant in a common cause of truth and love.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

SAFFORD, ARIZONA, November 29, 1911.

Canada West.

I crossed the line on the 24th of May and two days afterward I witnessed the last snow of the season, and on the 6th of November saw the first snow of this season. To those growing corn, cotton, or sugar-cane, so short a season would mean a calamity, but when money can be made in fewer months, it becomes quite a pleasure to drop corn, cotton, and cane and raise flax and wheat. No corn to plow, no corn to husk, no cotton to pick, no cane to strip; what a relief! Is it any wonder that hundreds of thousands from the States and most of them from Iowa are happy and contented in the great Northwest, where Uncle John gave them each a fine home? All healthy and doing well financially.

But the day of homesteads is about over. People in the States can scarcely imagine the size of this country nor the thousands of miles of fertile farms and substantial buildings; the number of railroads and prosperous cities; and here and there all over a family or two of Saints. We have as yet only one district in Alberta and Saskatchewan, but that is, with one exception, perhaps the largest, geographically, in the church. It is composed of thirteen branches, and with the exception of the Weyburn Branch, are largely settled in a community by themselves. The Saints that live twelve miles southeast of Saskatoon coming from Iowa have named their branch the Iowa Branch. Those coming from Minnesota, located mostly about twenty miles southwest of Saskatoon call theirs the Minnesota. Saints from Michigan, settling recently near Macklin, call theirs the Michigan Branch. Whole branches are being transplanted to these fertile prairies to be removed, again, shortly, to Zion, greatly strengthened financially and perhaps improved spiritually as well.

Missionary work outside of the branches is a problem. Too busy in the summer, and too cold in the winter for horses to stand out. But at their homes there are plenty of long evenings to read, and if the missionaries could be supplied with literature of an interesting character we may be able to interest some in that way. But who is to supply it?

Prices are high. Nearly every firm doing business in Canada is "limited," but one never sees that word on the price of an article. But that makes business flourish and towns spring up as by magic. Wholesale and manufacturing businesses are developing, but religion is in the way and not generally wanted.

I think I have seen more smoking in Canada during the last six months than in years elsewhere. Tobacco growing would be a most profitable business here. The pipe is the bachelor's comfort and there are thousands of bachelor home-steaders.

Last week I visited Shellbrook, away up in the far North. So far as I know, Bro. Albert Sims lives the last house this side of the north pole. Baptized their daughter and son-in-law and left others believing. I am under promise to return. They have six members now and are looking forward to the organization of a branch. Bro. Sims would like to know if there are any Saints in Alberta or Saskatchewan north of 53½ degrees, north latitude. He thinks he is the most northern Saint on the North American Continent, outside of Alaska. Had a fine time hunting moose, deer, and partridges while in that country. Moose and deer pass and re-pass the dooryard of Bro. Sims nightly. According to last report the district conference will meet at the Minnesota Branch, near Vanscoy and twenty miles southwest of Saskatoon, during the last two days of the year.

Bro. E. E. Long and the writer spent about a month in the Edgerton, Ribstone, and Michigan branches, all located within a radius of thirty miles, near the Saskalta line. We each found time while there, settling some difficulties seeming and real, preaching and administering, to file on a half section of land each. We have Bro. J. J. Cornish for a neighbor, some four or five miles away. I am now preaching in the neighborhood of Brn. Perchie and Nelson, near Birdview, thirty miles southwest of Saskatoon, which is the most important city in this north part of the country, and we generally mention distance from there. It is about two hundred and fifty miles north of the international line. Brn. Moorman and Mortimore are in Alberta. Bro. Tomlinson was to be in Winnipeg the last I heard.

Bro. Long returned home to engage W. G. Roberts in discussion, and that leaves me alone in Saskatchewan. I have not heard from Bro. Joehnk, but he was to remain a part of the year in Canada. Have been in written discussion with a Rev. Weir, of the Presbyterian faith. Bro. Lewis will remember him at Edgerton. He has not replied to my last communication. About the same old rehash. One gets weary after answering those old yarns a hundred times or so. If some encyclopedias and histories could be made to feel the law of slander it would save us lots of breath, and that's the thing we need when we are about to die.

J. W. PETERSON.

Oklahoma.

Since coming back to this place, I have baptized five more. This makes them twenty-three members in all. While I was away the last time, Bro. M. L. Newland baptized a fine lady out of the Utah Church. This good sister gave them a fine lot the other day for the church. So last Sunday they decided to build. And as we have baptized almost all mechanics, they will do all their own work. We have here a stone mason, six carpenters, and Bro. Newland, the cabinet man.

We also baptized a fine old brother, a shoemaker; so the other day he said he could not help do the work, but he would give twenty-five dollars, as his share. This good brother, with two other brothers, came in a short time ago. They all used tobacco, but now they have all quit.

I never felt a better spirit among people before than here. The work is moving fast. I am preaching every night in different parts of the city to good crowds. As yet they have no organization, but I believe they are getting ripe for one.

Yours in the conflict,

WAGONER, OKLAHOMA.

News From Branches

Independence, Missouri.

We take pleasure in noting the convalescence of some of our afflicted brethren and sisters who have been receiving effective and kind treatment at the Sanitarium, also in the homes, and in hearing of the kindness and loving deeds the Young Sunshine Band have shown toward the needy and aged ones, at this time of the beginning of the holidays. Then there are many earnest, faithful Saints who are bending all their energies toward forwarding the movement to liquidate the church indebtedness; among them the faithful sisters of the Laurel Club, who are preparing to open their bazaar to-morrow, in the work of helping in the good cause.

About one hundred and twenty-five sisters, members of several societies, chiefly the Woman's Auxiliary, Ladies' Aid, and the Laurel Club, met on the 23d of November at the pleasant home of Sr. M. E. Hulmes for the purpose of considering matters which pointed to the welfare and interest of all concerned.

A program, consisting of vocal selections and reading of papers, also addresses and a few short, informal talks, were provided, and at the close of this pleasant afternoon's entertainment, dainty refreshments were served. Mrs. D. J. Krahl made an opening address by giving a brief history of the Woman's Auxiliary, and a statement of the object and purpose of the meeting, namely: to consider the uniting under one general head of all the sisters' societies, that more effectual work may be done towards rolling on the cause of truth and by their influence assist in the establishment of Zion, the pure in heart.

The program was as follows: Vocal duet; an encouraging talk to the workers by Sr. E. L. Kelley; vocal solo; address by Mrs. F. M. Smith, presenting a plan of affiliation by all the societies; paper, by Mrs. J. C. Nunn, details of organization; paper by Mrs. B. C. Smith on cooperation, and short talks by Srs. Yingling, H. O. Smith, M. T. Short, D. H. Blair, et al. The effort was highly appreciated.

Sunday, November 26, was ushered in by a spiritual and instructive prayer meeting in which many of the young people took part. The attendance at Sunday school was 722, collection $13.02. The 11 o'clock meeting was in charge of Pres. E. A. Smith, and in the evening by M. H. Siegfried, an excellent effort. Bro. Smith related the one day's record of the Savior's work as recorded in Matthew 9 and stated that we make a serious mistake by running after this doctrine and that, and not heeding the preaching of the gospel. He spoke of the superstrenuous life which we are passing through now. Our fathers were independent, in a sense, alone; they were individualistic; but that condition is for ever past. He spoke of the struggles of man against man, of the advancement of science, and of our various services of telephones and railroads and telegraphs. The need of to-day is the practical use of the teachings of our Lord and Master, and that we may live to magnify these teachings was the speaker's earnest prayer.

Brother Joseph followed by expressing a few pertinent thoughts. "Have we reflected," said he, "how the industries are collected and diffused, and what would be the result if these accumulations were blotted out? Our Thanksgiving is approaching, and it is our duty to look about, and it behooves us to reach out the helping hand to those who have fallen into unfortunate conditions."

Thanksgiving services consisted of the usual sermon, which on this occasion was double and made up of informal recitals of happy experiences, both of a personal and general character.

Pres. E. A. Smith, also Pres. Joseph Smith, both of whom addressed a fair-sized audience, were in a happy, thankful frame of mind, the former taking for his reading Nehemiah 10, the latter as is his custom on Thanksgiving, referring at length to the manners and customs of the colonists, and the life and virtues of the noble men of those rugged and strenuous times. Prayer was offered by I. N. White, and the choir and congregation sang the sturdy old hymn,

"Aye, call it holy ground,
The soil where first they trod;
They have left unstained what there they found,
Freedom to worship God."

The Thanksgiving musicale given in the evening by the choir, consisting of instrumental and vocal numbers, under the direction of Mrs. B. M. Anderson and Profs. R. G. Smith and A. H. Mills, was of a classic order, and was appreciated by a full house of Saints and their friends.

The readings by Mrs. M. Warnock and Miss G. Kelley were fine, and shared the generally hearty applause given.

Conference Minutes.

EASTERN MAINE.—Conference of the Eastern Maine District convened at Jonesport, Maine, Saturday November 4, 1911, at 2.30 p. m., J. A. Koehler presiding, Mrs. E. M. Walker secretary. Reports received: Elders H. Arthur Koehler, J. A. Koehler, E. C. Foss, J. F. Sheehy, and W. E. Rogers. Priests: Newman M. Wilson, F. P. Smith. Teachers: W. C. Smith, B. F. Foss. Deacon Albert Marston. Bishop's agent reported, audited, found correct. J. A. Koehler sustained as president of district, Numan M. Wilson chosen secretary. District treasurer reported, audited, found correct. Delegates chosen to attend General conference as follows: J. A. Koehler, Mrs. Mamie Cummings, Edith Koehler, Arthur Koehler, U. W. Greene. The above named authorized to cast a full delegate vote, except in case of majority or minority vote. J. D. Wilson sustained as district treasurer. Adjourned to meet at West Kannebec sometime nearest the full moon in June, 1912.

NAUVOO.—District conference convened at Rock Creek, October 7, district president Charles Harpe presiding. Statistical reports from the following branches were read: Farmington, Ottumwa, Burlington, Rock Creek, Keokuk, and Montrose. Elders George P. Lambert, James McKiernan, F. M. Cooper, Charles Harpe, and Deacon S. Tripp reported. A petition from the Fort Madison Saints for the organization of a branch at that place was read and the matter referred to the submissionary in charge, James McKiernan, district president, Charles Harpe, and Bishop Geo. P. Lambert, for consideration and report. The invitation of the Kewanee and Eastern Iowa districts to join the reunion association was accepted by conference action. Rufus T. Willey was elected for the one-year term on the reunion board, and Geo. P. Lambert was elected to fill the unexpired term of F. M. McDonald. George P. Lambert, bishop, made some remarks on the finances of the district. In accordance with the conference resolution L. H. Haas was ordained to the office of priest. The resignation of M. H. Siegfried from the office of counselor to Bishop George P. Lambert was read and accepted. The next district conference will be held at Burlington, Iowa, the first Saturday and Sunday in February. W. H. Thomas, secretary, 1100 South Seventh Street, Burlington, Iowa.

SOUTHERN MISSOURI.—District conference convened with the Thayer Branch in the Cane Hill Schoolhouse, on Saturday, November 4, 1911, at 10 a. m., with the district president, J. C. Chrestensen, in the chair, and Benjamin Pearson, secretary. Statistical reports were read from the following branches: Springfield, 196; Ava, 90; Beaver, 89; Woodside, 48; Grove Springs, 47; Thayer, 35; and Macomb, 18; giving a gain of forty members to the district. Elders reporting: J. C. Chrestensen, G. A. Davis, C. T. Orr, Benjamin Pearson, O. E. Ensley, Grant Burgin, W. R. Smith, G. W. Anderson, J. F. Cunningham, T. J. Simpson, R. H. Counts; and Priest John B. Scott. H. J. Friend, of the Macomb Branch, was recommended for ordination to the office of elder, and conference petitioned to provide for his ordination. On motion this was accepted and placed in the hands of the district president. Elders W. R. Smith and G. W. Bootman were appointed as a committee to visit and labor with the Pamaona Branch and report to next conference. Benjamin Pearson reported as bishop's agent. Receipts, $93.15; expenditures, $85.70; balance on hand, $7.45. As district treasurer, balance and receipts, $3.65; expenses, $7.80; balance due treasurer, $3.65. Preaching during conference by W. R. Smith, R. H. Counts, Benjamin Pearson, and J. T. Riley. Next conference will be at Springfield on the first Saturday and Sunday in March, 1912. Benjamin Pearson, secretary.

Conference Notices.

Idaho district conference will convene with the Weiser Branch, January 6 and 7, 1912. It is urgently requested that all reports reach the district secretary not later than January 3. Address her at Weiser, Idaho. Mrs. T. B. Jackson, secretary.

The Bishopric.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of the Southern Missouri District: Greeting: As the year is now drawing to a close, come let us reason together and see where we stand. There are about six hundred members enrolled on the district record, and at the present time only one missionary's wife to support, and yet, during the last six montas the presiding bishop has had to furnish a part of that support, and still we are behind, and may have to call on him again, unless you come to the rescue with your tithes and offerings. What is the reason? Are we living on such a low plane, spiritually, that the Lord is not blessing the labors of our hands? or are we keeping it all for ourselves? Stop and consider where you stand, individually, and then pray earnestly for wisdom in this matter, and I am sure that there will be a change for the betterment of the work. Most of us wish that we had more elders in the field, but neither them nor their families can live on air. They must be provided for in the Lord's own way. Is that your way? If so, then let me hear from you. Make all money orders payable to the undersigned, at Tigris, Missouri. BENJAMIN PEARSON, Bishop's Agent.

Dear Saints of the Western Nebraska and Black Hills Mission: I wish to call your attention to our duty. So far this year there have been only five names on the book of the district—only five tithe-payers out of the large number in the district. There remains only one month in this year. From so many Saints there surely are none that can not spare a few cents in tithes and offerings. The work is suffering delay for lack of means. Let us all contribute our mite and the Lord will bless us. I am your servant.

BERT E. HART, Bishop's Agent.

Died.

WIGHT.—Lyman J. Wight, eldest son of Lyman Lehi and Eliza Leyland Wight, was born December 7, 1857, at Bandera, Texas. His parents afterwards moved to southern Missouri, and he was baptized at Galesburg, May 28, 1871, by Elder B. V. Springer. Later the family moved near to Ridgeway, Missouri, where he married Miss Mary Merrifield, February 14, 1900. Died November 25, 1911, at Topeka, Kansas, aged 53 years, 11 months, and 18 days, leaving a wife, two little girls, two sisters, and many relatives and friends to mourn their loss. The remains were brought to Lamoni, Iowa, to the home of his cousin, Heman C. Smith. Funeral services held at the house November 27, in charge of Rev. R. M. Shipman, sermon by Elder Columbus Scott. Interment in Rose Hill. Deceased was one strictly moral in character, honorable and upright in all his dealings, with a pleasant, genial nature, that endeared him to his many friends and to children especially, and in his home life was ever an example of kindness and tenderness.

BRYANT.—Mirriam Colbett Bryant departed this life July 7, 1911, at Machias, Maine. She was born in Michiasport, Maine, May 12, 1824. Married Mr. Asa Bryant in 1843. She had thirteen children—seven daughters and six sons, twenty-seven grandchildren, and thirty-six great-grand children. She was baptized in 1872 by Elder J. C. Foss and ever lived a faithful and consistent life. During her last illness she admonished her children to obey the gospel, so that they could meet again in the kingdom of God. A mother of Israel has gone to rest in the paradise above. Funeral sermon by Elder U. W. Greene.

DRAKE.—At Independence, Missouri, Sr. Margaret Drake. She was born in Carlisle, Scotland; aged 64 years; baptized in England. She leaves a husband, one son, and three daughters. One of the latter was present, from Saragosa, Texas. Funeral services at Bro. C. D. Carson's undertaking room by Elder J. C. Foss. Interment in the Mound Grove Cemetery.

DUNGEE.—At Kansas City, Missouri, Sr. Elizabeth Dungee, daughter of Bro. and Sr. Francis C. Graham, of Saint Joseph. Our sister was born October 8, 1872, at Saint Joseph, Missouri, baptized by Elder M. H. Forscutt in 1889. Married to Frank Dungee, February 20, 1900. Died from a gasoline explosion, her clothing catching fire; she was burned so badly that she died about four hours after. She leaves to mourn, husband, father, mother, one brother and two sisters. She was a true, loving wife, and a devoted member of the church, and beloved by all. Funeral in charge of Elder F. C. Warnky, sermon by Elder R. Bullard at the Central Kansas City Church. Burial in the Elmwood Cemetery.

BROWN.—Mary J. Edwards was born January 11, 1839, in North Carolina; married to John J. Brown at Stevensville, Texas, August 11, 1859. To this union were born nine children, of whom three have preceded her. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church at Castle Rock, Washington, November 23, 1897, by Elder A. M. Chase. Departed this life November 13, 1911, aged 72 years, 10 months, and 2 days. Funeral sermon in the Christian church at Hazelton, Kansas, by Elder J. W. Hughes. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery of that place. A loving-mother and a faithful Saint has entered into rest.

BARBER.—At Grant City, Missouri, December 1, 1911, Sr. Sarah J. Barber, aged 71 years, 1 day. She was born in Wayne County, Ohio, in 1840; married in 1857 to Amos Long. He enlisted in the army in 1862 and soon after the war died of a wound received. In 1870 married Stuart Barber. Of five children born, three daughters are living and were present at her last illness. She accepted the gospel and was baptized at Allendale, Missouri, in 1875. Funeral services in the Christian house of worship, H. A. Stebbins preaching the sermon.

BICKFORD.—At Wilton Center, Will County, Illinois, November 12, 1911, Sr. Nancy Minerva Bickford, aged 72 years. She was born in Sheffield, Vermont, in 1829, and married Joseph Bickford in 1856. Removed to Illinois in 1865. Bro. Bickford died in 1895. Of their four children, only the son, Arthur, is living. She was baptized in 1870 by E. C. Briggs. Her life was one of faithfulness to every known duty. For her funeral an elder could not be obtained so it was necessary to have the Baptist minister of Wilton conduct the service.

At Last

This dainty little edition is worth a place on the center table of any home. It is an illustrated edition of David H. Smith's poem, "AT LAST." The illustrations are mostly taken from subjects intimately connected with the author and his poem. Sister Walker has succeeded in her desire to make this work one of merit as well as artistic. Do not order by number, simply say, "send 'At Last.'" Only a few hundred remain. No more to be printed. The price is.....25 cents.

My Dear Sir:

Previous to using your GOOD HEALTH FLOUR I had stomach trouble in its worst form, at times not being able to eat anything for 48 hours. Others in the family had piles very bad. From the first meal we ate of the flour we were benefited.

After using 25 lbs., my stomach seemed well as ever, no pain; we all gained in weight; our living expenses were reduced, and the common verdict of the family was that nothing in food or medicine can equal GOOD HEALTH FLOUR, for it removes the cause of all diseases, it also satisfies, taking the place of meat, etc.

Have interested 9 families and can truthfully say your flour is a boon to mankind. A trial will convince anyone. May you live long to bring health and happiness to the afflicted. May we always have GOOD HEALTH FLOUR is our wish.

Very truly,

MRS. F. W. CANNON.

JESUS OF NAZARETH.

When over the plains of Judea was sung the angelic announcement, "Unto us a Son is born, unto us a King is given," it heralded the advent into the world of a being whose life and teachings were to have ever afterward a marked influence on the moral and ethical development of humanity. The King of Peace had come.

Jesus of Nazareth, as a Jew, was born in the midst of a nation representing the ethical standard of the world. Justice and equity were had as the objects of the statutory laws of that nation, the basic principle on which they operated being from the Mosaic economy, "An eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth." To the giver of stripes shall stripes be given.

The Christ, whose thirty years of preparation for the glorious work of the three years in which his world-and-eternity-influencing work was consummated, lived and worked under the protection of Jewish laws based on this principle. He recognized what of justice was in the law; but, animated by his intense interest in humanity, his loving heart in sympathy with them in their sufferings resulting from their errors, his lofty mind illuminated by divine wisdom emanating from the very presence of Jehovah, he gave to the world, by example and precept, the great epoch-marking, wonder-working, joy-producing principle of altruism, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," on which were based laws, more nearly just and equitable. This great ethical law, pronounced by the lowly Nazarene as being the first great commandment, has had its steadily increasing effect upon the forward march of civilization and intellectual and moral development. Trace, if you will, the effect of its dissemination, through the advancing cause of Christianity, and note the changes gradually wrought in the civil codes of the Christian nations, the effect upon laws calculated to establish equity. The principle of an "eye for an eye" demanded penal infliction for the sake of retribution, while the operation of the great basic principle of the Christian economy makes the great object of penal servitude not only the protection of society but the reclamation of the criminal. And justice and equity, though mercy may abound, are wrought by the operation of the great altruistic law of the Great Nazarene, Love thy God and make it known through love for thy neighbor.

The great ethical law is destined to change, it is now gradually changing (though we may think painfully slowly), the dynamic of our social operations. It should cause men (and we hope it does) to consider themselves as social units whose work is a social function, rather than to consider themselves personal units whose chiefest purpose is self-aggrandizement. It will remove us from egoism to altruism. Under the old law every man is impelled by motives springing from self; and penal servitude inflicted for infracted law was retributive in effect rather than reformatory. Under the Christian law one's motive is service to others, and our efforts will be to save not destroy the erring ones.

The Christ came to enhance the glory, not of himself, but of his Father, Jehovah. In his sojourn here he labored not for himself, but continually for others; and when at last he had passed through Gethsemane out upon Calvary, he died, not because of his errors, but as a sacrifice for humanity, that by the glorious consummation of his life of service to man and God, God and man through sin once separated could be placed at one. When the agony was over, and when the stiffening lips of the Master had cried, "'Tis finished!" the great atonement was accomplished.

His life, from birth to death, from Bethlehem to Calvary, was one of service to others. Harmonizing therewith, we find every teaching, every pronouncement breathing the altruistic principle. He constantly taught the eradication of egoism, the institution of altruism. In his humble life he exemplified it, in his glorious death he intensified it.

He taught and lived the love of God through service to man. Have his teachings found a response within us? Does his cry, "Love thy neighbor as thyself," find an echo in our hearts? Are we ready with service to others? Christ, who served us always, in turn demands service to God. Shall we not render it? He taught us how, and in return for his great sacrifice shall we not give him glorious service, render love to our great God by loving and doing for his sons, our fellow men? "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, and thy neighbor as thyself." "On these two hang all the law and the prophets."

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

CONGRESS IS IN SESSION. NEEDED LEGISLATION; TOGETHER WITH A REVIEW OF THE McNAMARA CASE.

"Congress will meet next Monday and the Senators and Representatives will repair to Washington and play at politics."—From a local orator, place immaterial.

The sentiment expressed by this quotation may be credited to a number of those watching political affairs, and to numbers of the newspapers of the time. Congress has indeed met and is in session, at the date of this writing, and the play at politics began almost immediately in a speech made by Littleton of Maine, arraigning Mann of Illinois as having outraged the amenities of the House by improper criticism of the course of Littleton, in certain matters committed to him with others, in committee form. Mann's evident reply was a "memorial" to the House, asking that Littleton be investigated. The inquiry by committee as to the fitness of Senator Lorimer to be entitled to his seat in the Senate has been suspended for further convenience on the part of the committee of investigation. Meanwhile the time goes on, and Lorimer smiles in his seat, and outside lookers on are inquiring curiously, whether the time to which Mr. Lorimer would have been entitled to serve as a Senator, had his election been entirely regular, will pass and the inquiry fall flat.

Pres. Taft sent in his first message, which was confined to a discussion of the carrying into effect of the anti-trust laws. One party in Congress applauds the message as fitting and timely, and the other criticizes it severely because it did not deal with the tariff question. And so the playing at politics goes on. However, there are matters of public agitation in which it is urged that there is great need of national legislation.

The interests of the citizens of the United States, possibly of all classes, religious and irreligious, have heretofore been aroused as to the need of a uniform law regulating marriage and the domestic relations attaching thereto. It does not matter what particular irregularity in the proper observance of the domestic relation between the sexes has arisen to disturb society, nor the locality where such irregularity has occurred. It is urged that there is too great a laxity in the laws governing marriage and divorce, and that therefore uniformity between the laws upon these subjects in the different States of the Union should be secured, clearly directing what is proper and in harmony with the general, popular sentiment, and in keeping with the institutions of the Republic. Certainly we of the Reorganized Church agree with this sentiment, asking for and expecting that Congress will take cognizance of what has been done, and may continue to be done, enforcing a demand for such legislation.

Without enlarging at too great length upon the subjects of needed legislation by the national law-making powers, there appears to be a demand for action of Congress with regard to the contention between capital and labor. The late development at Los Angeles, California, resulting from an attempt to bring to punishment the perpetrators of certain outrages, resulting in the destruction of property and the loss of human life, which occurred in the fall of 1910, at Los Angeles, California. These outrages were the destruction by explosives of the Llewellyn Iron Works and the Times newspaper establishment. In the first named of these no person was injured, though the property was destroyed. In the last named of these twenty-one persons were killed. The outrage was so atrocious that an investigation was set on foot by General Otis, the proprietor and owner of the establishment, and the authorities of the State, aided by the Merchants' Association of Los Angeles, and possibly by other associations of a similar character. W. J. Burns, a detective of quite extended national reputation, was employed to prosecute this investigation. His investigation resulted in the arrest of John J. McNamara, secretary and treasurer of the International Bridge and Structural Iron Workers Union, having its headquarters at Indianapolis, Indiana, for the blowing up of the Llewellyn Iron Works, and James B. McNamara, his brother, for the blowing up of the Times Building. The charges against the last named included one for murder in the first degree of one James Haggerty, whose body was found nearest the point of attack upon the building of the twenty-one persons who were killed by the explosion.

The arrests of these men were secured by strategy upon the part of W. J. Burns, and the two brothers were taken from their place of residence in Indiana, to attend the courts of California, located at Los Angeles, where the outrages were committed. The arrest and incarceration at Los Angeles of these two McNamara brothers upon such serious charges, and by the method adopted, aroused indignant protest upon the part of labor unions all over the United States, and immediate efforts were made by the particular union to which the brothers belonged to secure legal counsel, and prepare for a vigorous defense against the charges made. It is said that a defense fund of $190,000 was raised.

Clarence S. Darrow, an attorney of Chicago, Illinois, a leading criminal lawyer, who had successfully defended Moyer, Haywood, and Pettibone against charges for similar atrocities, in the courts of Colorado some years ago, was employed to conduct the defense for the McNamara brothers, and secure their immunity from punishment upon the charges made. The belief of the labor union was that the men were innocent of perpetrating the outrages or being in complicity with those who did commit them.

This belief in the innocence of the McNamara brothers was shared by certain political socialistic organizations, the press of which at once took up the task of pleading in print the innocence of the brothers, and deprecating the outrage upon their personal liberties, connected with their being arrested and made to answer before the courts, as to their guilt or innocence. These explosions took place in October, over a year ago, and some months were passed in securing data, by means of the investigation which had been undertaken, when the arrest was finally made.

When, some months ago, these McNamara brothers were arraigned in the circuit court, at Los Angeles, California, before Judge Bordwell, the prosecution on the part of the State being conducted by Prosecuting Attorney Fredericks and his assistant Ford, and the defense being conducted by Clarence S. Darrow and his associates, both pleaded not guilty to the charge made against them respectively, and the effort to secure a proper jury to sit and hear the case and decide as to the innocence or guilt of the parties, upon the evidence to be presented, was begun.

The nature of the outrages complained of upon the part of the State, the notoriety of the case, both before and after the arrest of the McNamaras, and the wide and intense interest which had been aroused made the securing of a proper jury a tedious and difficult task. Credit for honesty of purpose is due to both the prosecution and the defense in these cases, and it is perhaps just to each side to believe that their efforts were to secure such a jury as would give assurance that the defendants should have a fair and impartial trial, and that the prosecution should be able to secure a conviction, if the men were guilty, or that they should go free if the evidence justified such conclusion.

The trial began some four or five months ago, and doubtless the counsel upon both sides of the case resorted to every stratagem afforded by the rules of procedure before the courts, to secure results most favorable to their respective contention; the one for conviction, the other for defense. And for days and weeks the strife in the court continued; the prosecution persistent and aggressive, the defense grim and equally persistent in repulsion. It seemed to offer the appearance of a long continued and trying as well as tedious trial, likely to wear out the contending parties, the court, and especially the jury.

However, a peculiar and sudden ending of the of the case was brought to pass on December 1, when upon the opening of the court at the morning session the counsel on both sides of the case appeared before Judge Bordwell, and the proposition was made by Clarence S. Darrow upon the part of the defense, that he could not further proceed in the defense of his clients, being as he expressed it afterwards, that he found himself "up against a stone wall." He stated to the court that his clients, the defendants, desired to change the plea of "not guilty," which they had made, and to substitute therefor the plea of "guilty." By agreement between Darrow and his associates upon the one part, and Prosecuting Attorney Fredericks and his assistant Ford, the defendants, James B. McNamara, and John J. McNamara, his brother, appeared in court the day following, and formally, in open court, withdrew their respective pleas of "not guilty" and substituted therefor the plea of "guilty" on the part of each.

The scene was an impressive one. Two men charged with gross crime against society, who had stoutly contended that they were innocent, and in whose defense as able counsel as was in the land had sought to maintain such statement of innocence, suddenly abandoned their contention of innocence; such course being due, on the part of the counsel, to a conviction of guilt forced by a contemplation of the evidence to be presented, and on the part of the men themselves by virtue of a knowledge of their own guilt.

The effect of such a change of plea was to stop any further investigation before the court. The jury, so far as it had been impaneled was discharged, and the judge set Tuesday, the 5th of the month, as the time when sentence would be pronounced upon the now self-confessed guilty men. Accordingly on the day appointed John J. McNamara, secretary and treasurer of the above union referred to, was sentenced to fifteen years confinement in the state penitentiary of California, located at San Quentin, and James B. McNamara was sentenced to life imprisonment.

The commutation of the sentence pronounced upon James B. McNamara, arraigned for murder in the first degree, from death to that of life imprisonment, is the result of the long continued practice of the court, where confession of crime is made by the plea of guilty, to avoid fixing the extreme penalty as a punishment, in deference to the sentiment of mercy, which is proverbially to temper justice.

The effect of this peculiar and sudden termination to the trial of the McNamara brothers in the court at Los Angeles was instantaneous, peculiar, and widespread; not only upon labor unions everywhere, but upon their sentimental allies, socialistic organizations. The city of Los Angeles was itself in the midst of a municipal battle, between two parties, having tickets in the field, for the election of a mayor and associate officials. One of these parties appeared in the field of contention as the Good Government party, with George Alexander, present incumbent, as a candidate for the office of mayor; the other party under the Socialist Party with Job Harriman as its candidate for mayor.

The contrast between these two parties thus contending for municipal control of the city of Los Angeles must necessarily be strong; the one representing the present existing condition of affairs, the other presenting and contending for a striking and radical change in administration. The election was held on Tuesday, the 5th of December, the same day on which sentence was pronounced upon the McNamara brothers. At this crisis in the affairs of the city there appeared a new element in the politics of the State, and of course in the politics of the city. A recent state election had extended the elective franchise and given the ballot to the women, and the election in the city of Los Angeles, on the 5th of December, was the first one in the history of that city in which the women took part as voters. That there was great excitement in the City of the Angels goes without saying. How intense and strongly marked the interest of these contending parties for municipal control may have been it is not competent for us to state, nor is it proper for us to speculate upon, nor state how far the result of the trials of the McNamara brothers may have affected the parties at interest at the polls.

However, it is clear that great apprehension of trouble at the polls, owing to the excitement in the city, the intense interest of the contending parties, and the mixing of the new element exercising the elective franchise, was felt; and the existing authorities made preparation for meeting and providing for any irregularity of conduct or outburst of violence which might threaten the peace of the city. Whether owing to this precaution or to the native good sense of the people, the citizens of the city, the day of election passed quietly and in good order, there being no disturbance of which mention is made in the press.

The general result may be stated as being a triumph for George Alexander and his associate candidates, as against Job Harriman and his associates by a majority of over fifty thousand votes, or as stated by one paper, a vote of nearly two to one.

There has been a sentiment growing in the minds of the people, not connected with labor unions, that the demand made upon Congress for the passage of such laws as favor the contentions of the unions in defense of labor should be met by demands upon the same law making power for the adoption of such enactments as may favor the demands of associated employers, and as a consequence in favor of the individuals composing general society, in defense against exacting and unjust demands of labor. It is contended, as an argument in favor of the latter proposition, that organized industrial associations and incorporations, existing by virtue of law, are amenable to society, for the conduct of such associations and incorporations, in carrying out the objects intended by such organizations. It is further contended in the same direction that organizations of "predatory wealth" in the persons of capitalists, who may combine their interests, for the prosecution of enterprises agreed upon by them, are not only amenable to society for their observance of law, but that they are likewise subject to answer for injury to individuals which they may incur through carrying into effect the object of such organization. Hence the antitrust law.

Labor unions heretofore have not been held as incorporations before the law, and hence it has been held, that these organizations known as labor unions are not responsible before the law for what the individuals belonging to such union may do in the general interest of the organization. Hence these organizations have refrained from incorporating, becoming bodies politic and responsible as to how the objects of their association, individually and collectively are carried into effect; that they are in this sense immune from answering to society under statute enactment, for breaches of the peace, the destruction of property and injuries to individuals, perpetrated by members of the union.

It is not the object of this article to detract in and sense from the right of labor, using the word to represent all classes of men and women, to better their condition, and securing, by all proper means, the betterment of their conditions by the assistance of society, and the protection of the law against encroachment upon their rights, from "capital" in either individual or associated capacity. We have too long been a working man, in sympathy with fellow workers the world over, to say an unjust word or express an unjust sentiment in regard to the effort of labor to better its conditions, but we see no reason why associations among men, recognized as either "capital" or "labor," which as associations may indulge in teaching sentiments calculated to stir the latent evil existing in men, which result in individual acts against persons and consequently against society, such as the outrages complained of in the prosecution of the McNamara brothers, should not be held to account. If there is to be continued strife between "capital" and "labor," associations and organizations in both should be made subject to and held in check from improper and unjust aggressions upon each other.

We have not urged herein, that the International Bridge and Structural Iron Workers union was as an association responsible for the wrongdoing of James B. McNamara, whose act resulted in the death of James Haggerty and twenty others, employees of the Times newspaper institution at Los Angeles, or for the act of John J. McNamara, the secretary and treasurer of that particular labor union, in destroying the Llewellyn Iron Works at Los Angeles; but inquiry should be made by the outside element and society in general as to how it happened that such an officer, in charge of the minutes of meetings of the organization and the funds of the society, should have accumulated quantities of explosives and other materials for the making of bombs, the cost of which must have been considerable, and himself become an active operator in using those explosives. Did John J. McNamara use the funds of the society to pay for these destructive materials, including the clockwork machinery, by means of which the explosions could be arranged for, at any specific moment of time, day or night, without the knowledge and consent of the members of such labor union, either in their individual or organic character? Society may not have the right to inquire, but the inquiry will be made by individuals; did John J. McNamara use his own means for the purpose of buying material and risk his own safety against premature explosion and against punishment for injury which he might do property and life, upon his individual responsibility and unknown to members of the association, individually or in organized capacity?

The HERALD takes no position and makes no statement inculcating the International Bridge and Structural Iron Workers Union with the personal acts of John J. and James B. McNamara. It maintains a similar position in regard to every other labor organization, assuming that the astounding development made in the pleading of the McNamara brothers in the charges made against them comes to them as a shock, a thing almost impossible to believe, and for which they are in no wise responsible; and we sincerely hope that no one who reads this article will assume that we are in any sense hostile to labor and in favor of capital, our main object in writing being to maintain the equality of all before the law.

Whether the current rumor, that the fund raised by the labor unions was $190,000, either more or less, is correct, we do not know, from statements so far made; nor is it stated authoritatively, so far as we have seen, how much is the fee to be paid to Clarence

S. Darrow, nor how much to his associate counsel, nor how or in what way any of the remaining funds may have been spent. Resolutions were adopted by some labor unions that the fund already collected, meaning its unexpended remainder, be paid to the families of the victims of the disaster in the Times building, and that an additional fund to a considerable amount be added thereto. Whether such order will be carried into effect is doubtful; for the reason that while some of the unions urge that the raising of such fund for the relief of those deprived of their breadwinners would be a noble act and expressive of the sympathy of organized labor with those suffering from the cruel outrage inflicted upon them, and will be taken as a condemnation sufficiently and publicly made against those who did the wrong, other unions urge that the raising and expending of such a fund in such a way might some way be taken as an acknowledgment of actual or understood complicity in the outrage committed.

Expressing no view as to either contention we can only await the developments of events and the arbitrament of time.

Whether any further investigation will be made and further responsibility in these outrages at Los Angeles and others which have happened throughout the United States of a similar character will be prosecuted, as it has been stated would be the case, remains for further developments. We can only sympathize with the suffering, deprecate the wrongs done, and sincerely wish that they had never occurred, keep ourselves within the law and subject to right doing, upon the hypothesis suggested by a couplet of our brother David, the poet:

"Our neighbors' grounds are o'er the fence,
And Satan is his name,
And it will be at our expense
That we trespass on the same;
Our liberty is in the law,
And snares and chains lie just without,
So, never forget, never forget,
That over the fence is out."

COST OF LIVING IN PALESTINE.

[The Truth, published in Jerusalem, Friday, November 17, 1911, contains a short article on the cost of living in Palestine. As our people are interested in all matters pertaining to Jerusalem and the possibility of the Jews returning there and making a livelihood out of the land, we reproduce the article.]

Inquiries are made as to the cost of living, traveling, and labor in Palestine. The average income in Palestine is much lower than the average income in the United States. There are no very rich men here, and the domestic establishments of the wealthiest people are run on a much simpler scale than those of people of a corresponding station in America. Few people have their own carriages and horses. The amount of money spent on amusements here undoubtedly averages much lower than in the United States, for the simple reason that there are scarcely any amusements to spend it on. There are no street cars, and therefore no fares to be paid, and in other ways small items of expenditure which have to be met in America are not necessary here.

Europeans here claim that the cost of living is higher than in most places in Europe. By comparison with the cost of living in the United States that of Palestine seems cheap, although I am of opinion that, taking into consideration the ratio of income and expenditure, the difference is nowhere near as much as it would seem.

Rents of good houses may be said roughly to average about S.20 per room per year, although choice locations sometimes go up to nearly double that figure. The poorer classes living in less desirable houses and localities pay about half that rent.

CURRENT WAGES AND CLOTHING.

The following figures will give an idea of the cost of housekeeping, the piaster currency being converted into American terms, the prices being per rotl of 6½ pounds: Bread—best, 21 cents; cheapest, 17½ cents; beef—kosher, S. 1.05; taref, 63 cents; meat—goat 52½ cents; mutton, best, 73½ cents; cheapest, 66½ cents; sugar—best lump, 33¼ cents; cheapest granulated, 22¾ cents; coffee, raw beans, average, S.1.22½; flour, 15¾ to 20¼ cents; rice—best, 29¾ cents; cheapest, 15¾ cents. Nearly all beef is killed by the Jews and is mostly consumed by them. Taref is that which does not pass the regulations of the Talmudic law and is therefore sold at reduced prices to Europeans and other foreigners. The Mohammedans and Christian Arabs seldom eat beef.

The following daily wages are paid in Jerusalem: Unskilled labor, 24 to 40 cents; carpenters, 52 cents to S1.05; masons, as high as S1.60; stonecutters, 42 to 94 cents.

A complete costume of a poor Jerusalem native costs about S3.80; a peasant's costume is more expensive and averages S12. Many city natives have adopted European costume, and ready-made suits of clothes can be bought here for S6, and suits made to order for S.12 or less.

EXAMPLES FROM ACTUAL LIFE.

The following particulars, obtained from natives themselves, give an idea of the cost of living. None of the following is in the class of very poor people, but they may be taken as representatives of the average working class, who have, as things go with them, a fairly good income, and who may be said to be prosperous in their line.

A shoeblack.—He has a family of five besides himself, mother, sister, young brother, wife, and baby. They live in two rooms and kitchen, paying therefor S.28 a year. They use 5 rotls of flour a week, at 20 cents a rotl (rotl=6 1-3 pounds), and buy 3 or 4 okiehs (okieh=about one half pound) of meat once a week. The entire weekly expenses count up S3.86, including rent and clothes.

The latter cost, for entire family, about 120 francs (S.23.16) a year. The shoeblack calculates his living expenses at 1,200 francs (S.231.60) a year.

A porter.—He has in his family his wife, son, mother-in-law, and self, living in two rooms, for which he pays 100 francs (S.19.30) a year, food costing about 35 cents a day. He works at odd jobs of portage and makes 35 to 52 cents a day. Clothing for the whole family costs 100 francs (S.19.30) a year. This porter considers 1,000 francs (S.193) a year as enough for the family's expenses.

A stone mason.—He has 11 in his family—9 children, wife, and himself—residing in two rooms and a small kitchen, rental value 120 francs (S.23.16), which they get free from the Greek convent. The daily expenditure for food is about 60 cents. The mason receives 77 to 96 cents a day and finds employment about three fourths of the year. He also has a small income from property he owns in his village.

A dragoman.—Has three in his family besides himself—a father, mother, and sister in school. The sister's schooling costs 300 francs (S.57.90) a year.

He lives in three rooms, rent free from the Latin convent. He spends about 96 cents a day for food and S.77 a year for clothing for all the family. He dresses well, in European clothing. He needs 2,500 francs (S.482.50) a year.

A clerk in a bank.—His family consists of a mother and a sister. They live in a small house and keep a servant.

The clerk expends 600 francs (S.115.80) a year for schooling for his sister, while he dresses well in European style. His yearly expenses are 3,000 francs (S.579) and he receives 2,400 francs (S.463.20) yearly as salary and has a small income from some property.

COST OF TRAVELING.

Natives, as a rule, travel very cheaply, either walking or riding camels, donkeys, or horses and putting up at the guest houses found in every village.

The cost of tourist travel varies with the season of the year and the accommodation required. The first-class railroad fare from Jaffa to Jerusalem, 54 miles (the only railroad), is 15 francs (S2.89). Horses cost S.1 to S2. a day. Carriages in the city cost S.5 to 6 a day. A carriage to make the trip from Jerusalem to Jericho, the Jordan, and the Dead Sea and return, taking a day and a half, costs S.9 to S.12, according to the season.

Hotel accommodations range from S.2 to S3. a day, American plan. Dragomen (guides) can be had for S.1 to S.5 a day, according to the man employed and the season of the year. There are numerous tourist agencies with whom arrangements for traveling in Palestine can be made and who will furnish itineraries and estimates on request.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

REV. JOHN D. NUTTING.—Bro. W. E. LaRue, New York, has paid some attention to an attack by Rev. Nutting. It seems the reverend is mixed in his history, according to the following defense by Bro. LaRue, taken from the Bedford (Brooklyn) Bulletin.

Mr. LaRue said: "Mr. Nutting throws upon the screen the picture of Joseph Smith, jr., the founder of the Church of Latter Day Saints, with this statement: 'Joseph Smith, the man who made Utah famous.'

"Does not all the world know that Joseph Smith, jr., never set foot upon the soil of Utah? Is it not a fact that he was killed June 27, 1844, several years before the Mormons settled in the Salt Lake Valley? How then did he figure in making Utah famous?

"Notwithstanding Mr. Nutting stated that Joseph Smith, jr., was a 'conscious deceiver of men,' I here affirm that he did not teach or practice polygamy. I assert that not a single obnoxious doctrine which Mr. Nutting charges up to Utah Mormonism, as mentioned above, can be traced to Joseph Smith, jr., as its author. These unfortunate things were foisted upon the church under the leadership of Brigham Young, years after Joseph Smith, jr., had been assassinated.

"It is well known that there are two churches that lay claim to be the lawful continuation and succession of the church founded by Joseph Smith, jr., in 1830, and it is chiefly because Mr. Nutting referred to us as 'Mormons of both branches,' that I feel entirely justified in thus openly defending my church and my people, who are a God-fearing people, whose teachings are Christian in every particular.

"I presume that Dr. Hillis very likely gave the use of his church for the purpose of condemning what he believes to be an evil system. However, it is utterly inconsistent, un-Christian, unfair and wrong as wrong can be to in any way whatever cast the insinuation that my dear people, who for so many years have lived side by side with other Christian professed people in this City of Churches, who have ever been loyal to the nation as citizens, and whose homes are sanctified by the religion which they profess, to in any way class them with Utah Mormonism."

THE INSTITUTIONAL CHURCH.—The latest feature of the institutional church is outlined in the following: "Courting parlors for the young women and billiard and pool rooms for the young men of the parish will be established by the Rev. George F. Durgin, pastor of the Tremont Street Methodist Church in Boston, Massachusetts, if his plan meets with the approval of his Board of Trustees. 'I would clean out the basement of this splendid church and into that basement I would put attractions that would appeal to the young people,' says Dr. Durgin in outlining his scheme. 'What harm could ever come if we had a pool and billiard room or a bowling alley and gave opportunity for enjoyment, free from corrupting influences? Why should the basement of our church be used for lumber storage when parlors and courting rooms could be provided therein, the use of which would be a moral factor in the redemption of the city?'"

Elder's Notebook

EXTRACTS FROM DIARY OF ELDER J. H. LAWN.

Will now return to my Tulare trip. I held a few more meetings in the hall, then went to Visalia, held two meetings in Mr. and Sr. Samuel Evans's house. Old Bro. and Sr. P. C. Dailey (Sr. Evans's parents) were there, and wanted me to go and hold meetings in their house near Farmersville, which I did; but after two efforts, with but few out, we thought it best to apply for the schoolhouse in town, a mile and a half from Bro. Dailey's. Now be patient while I relate the greatest testimony of God's interposition in my physical behalf (so far as I know) from an assault of flesh, blood, and bones, I ever received. I got the consent of two of the trustees (men), and went to the third, a Catholic woman, who refused. I argued with her (or tried to), a long time, but she said, "No," from first to last. I finally told her she was unreasonable, and in the minority, that there were three against her (the two trustees and myself), and I would venture to use it to-morrow evening, to which she said, "If you do, you do it at your peril."

The remainder of that day and the next, I announced the meeting. In time for the meeting, Bro. and Sr. Dailey, and their apiarist and self arrived at the schoolhouse, which was on the main street of the village. There were quite a number of people standing in front of the door, which opened just as we drove up. While we were tying our team, we noticed a squad of men and boys, some on horses, others standing near, all in the school lot, somewhat back of the house. We went in, as also did the people in front. Sr. Dailey had brought six candles and two glass candle holders, and I proceeded at once to light up, as it was now getting dark, and first lighted the two candles on the stand in the glass holders. At this instant there was loud, boisterous talking at the door, which stood wide open, and in rushed that crowd of ruffians, some with spurs on, and quirts (a short, heavy, rawhide horse whip) in their hands. One bellowed out, "The old devil has emptied his bottles and plugged them with candles," at which they all laughed. Then one said to another, "Well Bob, what are you going to do?" He answered, "Let's go back and sit down a while, till the ball gets to rolling."

Then they began to move toward the rear of the room, which was large; and as they moved with a tramp, they would strike the floor with their spurs, and their legs with their quirts.

I could see trouble ahead unless God overruled it, so I said nothing to them except, "Good evening, gentlemen," as they entered. While they were parading to the rear, some of the respectable people began to prepare to leave, and I said to them in an undertone, "Please remain with me, as I know I am engaged in God's work. There shall be none of you harmed." They again became quiet, and the ruffians by this time were also seated. I then cut in two each of the four remaining candles, placed them, lighted, in the eight holders on the walls, while the rude fellows were lighting and smoking cigarettes. I confess that for a moment I felt that my own silence was becoming unbearable; but suppressed that feeling by silent prayer as I passed through the midst of the boisterous throng, placing those side lights. That done, I went to the stand where my Bible lay open at the lesson, Malachi 3: 1-6, which I had selected to speak from.

I then said, "It is now time to open meeting. We will omit singing and offer a few words of prayer." Well, they just began to howl, as I dropped on one knee instantly, and asked God to give me power to silence that mob (for such I was confident they were), and magnify his holy name. I think that was the shortest prayer I ever offered, and am sure it was heard by but few of those nearest the stand; for all those ruffians, some twenty-five, were stamping the floor with spurs still on, and groaning, mimicking me in prayer, or whistling, etc. When I raised to my feet, a few of them were standing, and I said, "Now, gentlemen, this is a religious meeting. Here are respectable people who wish to hear what I have to say." I then became bolder and continued by saying, "And I also want you to hear. Now be seated where you are, or take seats nearer the stand here, just back of those people; for you must listen to-night."

They began to speak to each other, when I walked an old gentleman, hat in hand, and took a seat directly in front of me on the middle chair of three which stood there vacant. He had no more than entered the door at my right hand, when every man dropped into his seat. As soon as this venerable looking old gentleman had sat down, he, looking up at me, placed his right hand behind his ear as if to say, "Excuse me, I am a little hard of hearing." I answered with a bow of the head, and continued speaking; forgot all about my Bible lesson. Do not remember of lifting that book from the stand more than once during that sermon, which lasted till long after the side lights had all burned out, and the two on the stand were low. I talked completely over the heads of the respectable part of my hearers, and directly to those rough fellows. I finally stopped, asked them to stand, and pronounced the benediction. They immediately made a start for the door, as near the wall and as far from me as they could get. I had stepped down two steps from the platform and stood on the last step to the floor, with my hand extended toward them.

The first one passed with his face from me, and the others right at his heels, when this old gentleman, who had stepped right up to my left side, raised his right hand and said, "Halt, let not one of you attempt to pass out of this room till you first give this servant of God your hand." They halted in an instant, and the leader turned back and gripped my hand, tears coursing down his face; and each in turn took my hand, and two or three begged my pardon for their rudeness, and one invited me to call and visit them. Several were weeping. Oh, what a victory! Not a spur or quirt to be seen or heard by anyone.

As they left the room, I at once turned to take the hand of my valiant old friend, but imagine my surprise, when I looked for him in vain. I made inquiry of all in the room as they stood there, also in amazement. I asked aloud, "Have any of you people ever seen this old gentleman before this?" To this they all, including Bro. and Sr. Dailey, said, "No; he is a stranger here." And some said, "Why, surely you ought to know him, from the way he spoke of you to those fellows. He said you were a servant of God. Don't you know him? Did he not come here with you?" etc. To which I said, "No; I never saw that man before, and never saw any man with such an effective, commanding voice." And so they all said. A few went immediately to the door to look for him as soon as he was missed, but returned in a short time to report their failure to find him.

We got home that night just before twelve. Bro. and Sr. Dailey and I talked of this mighty victory long after we got home, and then each in turn offerred a fervent prayer of thanksgiving, before going to bed.

This powerful servant of God was above medium height, with what might be termed a bony build, just a little stooped, and of very fair complexion. He wore long, white whiskers, and white hair, in waves almost to his shoulders. He was not at all bald, and very reverential in appearance. He wore a dark suit, with medium length coat. I saw no cuff on his wrist as he raised his hand to command, and it was almost in front of my face. His whole appearance reminds me of the picture in my mind, of some of the old patriarchs, and I am almost satisfied that this was one of the three Nephites which were to tarry in the flesh, and not taste of death till Christ comes, and then be changed in a moment to immortality. (See Book of Mormon, page 474, small edition.)

The day following that memorable night, we learned that gang of roughs came there prepared, and with the full intention of horsewhipping me, and then applying a coat of tar and feathers, and then carrying me out of town on a rail, or lashing me on the back of a wild, unbroken horse, and turning him loose and driving him, with his detestable burden, out on to the plains. We heard they brought a coal oil can half full of tar, and two feather pillows; but God, who is mighty in battle, frustrated their plans, and caused "the wrath of man to praise him."

The sacredness, divinity, and power of this and my former visitation (as related) have been and still are, my strongest anchors to the truth of the angel's messages and communications to Joseph Smith, the martyred prophet, seer, revelator, and translator of this, the dispensation of the fullness of times. Let me here bear my testimony with the Apostle Paul, for I do know that "the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart."—Hebrews 4:12. I witnessed this upon both my own physical and spiritual being, to my heart's content, immediately after my first heavenly visitor left me, and have many times strongly felt the influence and power of the Holy Spirit's presence when I heard no voice or saw no form.

Our Lord virtually told Peter that he could summon more than twelve legions of angels to his assistance, if he wished. I believe every word of it. But since I have witnessed what I have, I believe that the greater part of that vast host are employed in other worlds and kingdoms than this. For all other worlds and heavenly kingdoms belong to God, and inasmuch as our Lord himself visits each of those kingdoms in their appointed times, and the inhabitants thereof, it is reasonable to suppose that many angels also visit them. (See Doctrine and Covenants 85:13-15.) Then again, I doubt the necessity of many angels being delegated to this little world, when we know that their flight exceeds that of electricity, and their visits are sometimes very short, but the effect lasting.

Just grant me the companionship of that dear old friend, who stood with me that night in Farmersville, as my director and commander, and I would be willing to meet, in battle array, all this world's enemies to Christ and his cause. Believe I could identify him in a moment if ever permitted to see him again in the same garb and appearance as I saw him there, twenty-eight years ago.

A GLIMPSE OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Here beneath us lies a great city, a broad expanse of brick, wood, iron; crossed and recrossed by electric lighted, brick paved valleys down which living human streams surge with a sullen roar; of all ages, sexes and sizes, each intent upon his own little interest, and crowding his way to his own desired end, careless of the lives that may be crushed out by the way. We look down into this busy wasp nest, or beehive, and witness their wax making, honey storing, poison brewing, stinging and smoking out. What a spectacle humanity must present to the great, all-seeing Eye above. Like a mass of reptiles they twist and twine together, hissing, rattling, biting, and stinging, each struggling to get his head above his fellows.

'Tis midnight, and the giant monster Traffic, has been worn into a fitful sleep, but the gilded, purring, cushion-footed chariots of vanity and wealth are still rushing from brilliantly lighted hall to softly lighted mansion, carrying the gay devotees of the god of pleasure from one shrine to another, that they may flaunt his worship in the face of the gray morning, and then, exhausted, sink into a feverish, deadening slumber. The sable mantle of night brings not rest to this struggling mass, but only a curtain behind which to enact the plottings of the day. The noxious exhalations of the slums scarce hide a darker scene than is enacted in the gilded palaces of wealth. Vice and misery prowl together like moaning night birds in the one; and beauty, are, wealth, and unlicensed sensuality parade hand in hand in the other.

What a motley array is in this ant heap! The joyful and the sorrowful are there; men are dying, men being born; some few are praying and on the other side of a brick wall men are cursing. Here a mother softly hushes her babe to sleep, there an abandoned wretch mingles curses and laughter upon her tainted lips; here the sound of music, there the moan of wretchedness. Here the clinking of glasses, there the sobbing of the drunkard's wife and her hungry children. The proud favorite of fortune seeks his snowy, downy couch, while the poor wretch slinks into his nest of filthy rags, and in dark alleys men and women prowl like ill-omened birds of night, feeding upon festered vice. In all this struggling mass of humanity, how few are there who turn their faces toward the great all-seeing God above, or thank him for existence; in the slums his name is used for cursing, in the palaces as a jest. Churches are there; yes, great piles of brick and stone, but their conflicting creeds, selfish opulence, empty promises and misrepresentation of God have driven the people away from them, and into indifferent skepticism.

What a sight for God to look upon, and as we stand above it and look down, the pathos of men's lives, the poverty of their selfishness, the abjectness of their slavery to sin causes the heart to melt with pity, and we exclaim: "O great God above, thou whose all-seeing eye can penetrate and see it all, why dost thou permit it to go on? Oh, send some message from thy great throne of light, and dispel the darkness of their souls, and warn them of impending doom, for surely this beautiful earth was not made for such as this. Why is not this great, wicked city destroyed and blotted out, as were Sodom and Gomorrah? why are not thy judgments come upon it as upon the wicked world in the days of Noah? Look again! And we see shining in the darkness a few bright spots, glowing with a warm and holy light; one here, and there, and another there; just a few. They are the homes of those who truly worship God and seek to do his will. "I shall not destroy the good and the bad together, for mine elect's sake it is spared; they must be gathered out, and then will my judgments fall upon the wicked. Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain; escape to the mountain lest thou be consumed."—Genesis 19; 17.

Rise if the past detain you!
Her sunshine and storms forget:
No chains so unworthy to hold you
As those of a vain regret.
Sad or bright, she is lifeless ever:
Cast her phantom arms away!
Nor look back save to learn the lesson
Of a nobler strife to-day.

OUR WORK IS TO BE THE WORK OF SALVATION.

"The Son of Man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them."—Luke 9: 56.

This scripture suggests a line of thought to my mind that is worthy of the consideration of all mankind, and especially of those who claim to represent Jesus Christ. It brings to us the true mission of Christ and enables us to see what is required of the true disciple. The disposition of loving service should be cultivated; we should learn that the object of Christ was to save man from sin; and that necessarily implies more than a mere convincing him that he is a sinner. Before we are qualified to have part in the service suggested by the foregoing text we must learn to discriminate between the sin and the sinner; we must learn to love the sinner although we hate the sin; and through the love we have for him win him to a better life.

If we love a person we will not do him an injury, but will studiously consider his welfare, and then we will employ the means within our reach for his good. And before we can ever approach unto the service of saving mankind from sin, we will have to learn to love humanity irrespective of station or condition in life, and regardless of the weaknesses and failures with which man is cumbered, and in the spirit of the Matchless One, render unto him the service of love and good will. We must learn, too, that radicalism and self-righteousness must be entirely erased from mind and heart. We must learn to love righteousness and justice, and be willing to bear with the shortcomings and weaknesses of others; and while we may differ largely from them we should respect them in their God given rights and feelings, and when it becomes necessary to overcome their positions by force of logic and argument, it should be done in a way that will win them rather than destroy them. It is a grave mistake on the part of the minister to argue with another just for the sake of getting the better of the debate and carrying away the trophy.

In the humble judgment of the writer, no argument should be used and no evidence adduced that is not strictly fair and impartial, and in keeping with the Master's injunction, "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

We should never use anything as evidence or argument against another that we would not be perfectly willing to have used against us. We should never denounce another in radical terms, neither should we impugn the motives of any, but learn to deal with principles and not personalities.

Often our object and purpose is defeated by us, in the methods employed, and experience (though it be a dear school and the unwise must learn thereby) has taught the writer that the only methods that should be employed by us, if we expect to do effectual work in the saving of mankind, are the methods of pure, undefiled love, enabling our enemies, if such they be, to realize that we have no other motives in view than their eternal good, and the glory of God.

We should use great care in our words and demeanor, and so direct our arguments and denunciations of evil that we will win and save the individual while we are destroying the sin with which he has been bound, and by so doing avoid the too frequent mistake of condemning the individual and not the sin,—thus destroying the individual.

It is no honor to the individual who is on the right side of a question to defeat in argument the person on the wrong side; it is a shame to him if he can not, but the question which arises in the mind of the writer is, What has been accomplished by such defeat? Has the person in the wrong been won to you and the side of truth, or, has he been driven from you and injured?

This matter should not be passed over lightly. The beloved disciple has said: "Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment; because as he is, so are we in this world."—1 John 4: 17.

If we have labored as Christ would have done, if we have become like him, if we have exhibited love for all, and spoken kind words to the erring, used mildness with those that have evilly entreated us; and in fine, if we have become like him in all our actions and conversation, then will we be able to assist in the loving service of saving our fellow men from sin. And above all we will have boldness in the day of judgment. Why? Because we are conscious of the fact that our labors have been the labors of love and our words have been words of kindness; our deeds have been deeds of truth, virtue, and purity, and therefore we can approach the judgment without fear, knowing that our labors have been such as shall merit the approbation of the Christ who has said "it is more blessed to give than to receive." It will be a boldness of love then that will actuate us. We will not know fear, for the beloved disciple has again said: "There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear."—1 John 4: 18.

We should then remember to so deport ourselves and so guard our words that our entire life may tend to save men's lives, and not destroy them. We should always try to be consistent in our lives and professions, that thereby we may be able to create faith in those with whom we come in contact in life, and then be the means of enabling them to have faith in God, and through it lead them to the grand, the beautiful, and the sublime, and cause them to partake with us of the love of God that is by many termed charity, which the apostle says: "prevents a multitude of sins."

Seeing then we have this ministry, what manner of men ought we to be? It occurs to the mind of the writer that the only safe guide, and the only perfect standard we have is the Christ life, and we should approach unto it just as nearly as possible, that by so doing we may with him be able to save men's lives, and not destroy them.

In the hope of a complete victory,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

GRACELAND'S TEMPORARY ENDOWMENT, ETC.

HAVE YOU PAID YOURS?

Those of us who are intrusted with the charge of any particular work for the church owe it to the church to make the membership acquainted with conditions and the progress of our departments. Of course our reports are made to General Conference and are printed in the minutes; but it may be well to make other reports from time to time and to call the attention of the church to certain matters, in order to bring about better conditions, by a closer cooperation between us.

The Board of Trustees have zealously pushed the securing of subscribers to the Temporary Endowment Fund as started at the General Conference of 1910, until approximately one thousand such pledges have been obtained. The plan gave promise of great success, and our hopes of being able to make needed improvements, keep up interest, and gradually pay off the indebtedness, were bright. We took our pencils and began to figure as follows:

The General Conference established a college day, when every branch, and every isolated member of the church, would be expected to make a contribution for the benefit of Graceland. Five hundred, and more, branches averaging ten dollars each would be $5,000. But——. We have just mailed a second call to about two hundred and fifty branches which have not yet sent anything for their college day (October 1) collection. And more than this, instead of the average being ten dollars per branch some have sent as little as fifty cents, and it is doubtful if the average is above two dollars. The aggregate from this source is far below that of former years, and to date will probably not exceed fifteen hundred dollars.

Again, one thousand subscribers to the Temporary Endowment Fund at ten dollars each would be ten thousand dollars. But——. Nearly two hundred have canceled their subscriptions. Notices were sent to all June 15, reminding them of the July payment. A second notice was sent about the middle of August to from six hundred and fifty to seven hundred, reminding them that their July payment had not arrived. About the first of October a third notice was mailed to over four hundred. There are probably three hundred and seventy-five from whom we have not received a word, and many of these subscribed in April, 1910, and have not made their first payment.

We are still figuring. We know that some who thought when they subscribed they could make their payments, have found they could not, and we do not object to that; in fact, we are not objecting at all; but it is difficult to understand how anyone could promise on their honor to contribute a specified amount at a certain time to help the work, knowing that this amount would be expected at that time, and that the trustees would plan to use the amount for the purposes of carrying on the work for which they were elected, and then not only fail to pay as promised, but will not pay any attention to notices by answering any of three, and letting the treasurer know what they intend to do. We are figuring upon how big or how little such an one's sense of honor is.

And then we are figuring how we can honorably meet the obligations we have incurred in providing for the health, comfort, and education of the young men and the young women of the church in such a way as to preserve the honor and integrity of the college and the church. We have been compelled to borrow money to meet the deficit caused by the failure to realize as we expected from the July payments on endowment pledges and the college day contributions. We shall have to borrow more, if we can, to carry on the work the remainder of the year, unless there shall come a general and ready response from all who can.

We believe the church has a right to expect that every branch will do something—what it can—and it should be done at once. Certainly it is not too much to expect that every member and every friend will keep his promise. We have a right to either receive these amounts as promised promptly, or some word of explanation why the amount is not sent, and if impossible to continue the subscription, a request to have it canceled.

The trustees are striving hard to do their part. The students and faculty are doing their part. Are all others doing their part?

J. A. GUNSOLLEY, Treasurer.

A SIDELIGHT.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—The following article sets forth a serious charge against the spirit and proposed methods of socialism—the charge that in spirit and method socialism stands for lawless violence. That both sides may be heard we will agree to publish the best article of equal length to be received defending socialism against such charge, providing good representative articles are received. Such articles must set forth their own case without direct reference to articles previously appearing in HERALD. Writers must observe this restriction. The charges mentioned are frequently made. They are general in character, and it is not necessary to refer to previous writers in order to consider them.

Occasionally in the HERALD I have read from correspondents matter in favor of socialism. From my viewpoint, I think it an altogether questionable course for anyone in the church to advise another in the church to give support to the conglomerate ideas found in socialistic literature and sentiments uttered by socialist orators. I object not to the good there is in socialism, but to its failings. Every person who has heard "the great throbbing heart of humanity beat, should be interested in the uplift of the world. Because one does not march under the banner of socialism, is no reason for thinking one has no helping hand for the needy and oppressed. Because of what is comprised in the sum total of the movement known as "Socialism" one may with entire safety take heed before becoming an apostle in its propaganda.

I know that generally when the movement is criticized adversely the reply is made that the critic "does not know what socialism is." Socialism is a political movement. It is a delusion that it is Christianity, as some of its adherents affirm. It may be that some of its principles are identical with those of Christianity, but so has the Catholic Church, so has the dominant and dominating church of Utah, so has every system or philosophy some features that we all readily concede to be true. That much I grant to socialism, no more. Many of its principles I recognize as very good; but there is a spirit of lawlessness going with the movement. It is a spirit of anarchy. I am convinced there is in the socialistic movement an element of violence. Why it is not purged out I know not. No one who has heard the leaders of the socialistic party, or read their writings, can be blind to this fact. It may be said such utterances or writings are not truly representative of socialism; this may be, but the fact of the advocacy of violence remains, the advocates being called "Comrades." Must we not determine from the leaders and literature of socialism what socialism is?

During the progress of the trial of the McNamara men here in Los Angeles, socialist papers assailed the district attorney for the part he was taking in the case (a public officer sworn to do his duty); and attacked the grand jury (a body of citizens performing their duty under the law).

In the Social Democrat, the official organ of the Socialist Party of this State, there appeared in the issue of September 23, under the heading "McNamara Knives" an announcement from which I extract the following:

"Comrades and Fellow Workers:

"I have designed and ordered made a splendid pocketknife as a souvenir of the effort that plutocracy is making to railroad our comrades, John J. and James B. McNamara, to the gallows. On one side of the knife will appear good pictures of the McNamara brothers and on the other side 'Workers of the world, you must unite in your own defense.'"

Can anyone fail to get the suggestion? The price of the knife is said to be $1.50; the profits to be turned over to a committee of three to be used as they think best to "further the interests of labor." One of the committee to be Job Harriman, a leading socialist.

William D. Haywood, associate editor of the International Socialist Review (the "biggest Socialist magazine in the world"), in a booklet entitled Industrial Freedom, of which he and Frank Bohn are the authors, openly advocates anarchy, on page 57. And the booklet claims to be "primarily an introduction to the study of socialism." The booklet is sold by socialist news dealers.

Perhaps one more quotation is enough. I now offer what comes from the pen of Eugene V. Debs, one of the leading representatives of the socialist movement, the movement's candidate for the presidency of the United States in the late national election. What I refer to deals with the trial of the McNamara men, is found in the Appeal to Reason (the "greatest socialist weekly in the world") in the issue of September 2, and the article is entitled: "Wanted—A Few Men Not Afraid to Die." An inflammatory appeal follows, part of which reads:

"Let us arouse the working class and invoke their power to smite the conspirators and set our brothers free! They can be saved in no other way. The plutocrats who are responsible for the revolt when it comes may hide their cowardly carcasses, as they always do, but there will be an avenging force, let loose by themselves, to hunt them out and feed them to the furies."

"Arouse, you working men and working women of America!"

"A few men may be needed who are not afraid to die. Be ye also ready. Let us swear that we will fight to the last ditch, that we will strike blow for blow, that we will use every weapon at our command and that we will never surrender!"

I could submit more matter similar to the above; and could repeat utterances filled with a spirit of lawlessness which I have heard at different times from the socialist platform, but what I have presented is sufficient to indicate that with such a millstone around the neck of the movement it will endanger all who come in contact with the body; and undoubtedly lessen the influence for good of those in the ranks who continue to march under a banner where anarchists are called "Comrades."

The interpretation of socialism by its professed representatives covers a great range—all the way from a community of interests to anarchy.

Frightful to contemplate are the suggestions contained even in what I have presented in this article in quotation marks; and had not developments been of such a character as to lead to the confession of guilt by the McNamara men, there is no telling what would have been the outcome here in Los Angeles of the class hatred engendered; or to what extent through the nation under the influence of the inflammatory appeals men would hunt out the "cowardly carcasses" of "plutocrats" and "feed them to the furies." How soon again the same appeals may be made, and have no better basis than before, we know not; I am not so optimistic as to look for a sudden cessation of such appeals.

"Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land."—Doctrine and Covenants, 58: 5.

Every American citizen is duty bound to interpret the Constitution of the United States in harmony with itself—and so I protest against the element of violence, and have no desire to recall what I have written. The facts, I think, should be known.

Hymns and Poems

Selected and Original

Evening Peace.

Savior, again to thy dear name we raise
With one accord our parting hymn of praise;
We stand to bless thee ere our worship cease,
Then, lowly kneeling, wait thy word of peace.

Grant us thy peace upon our homeward way;
With thee began, with thee shall end the day;
Guard thou the lips from sin, the hearts from shame,
That in this house have called upon thy name.

Grant us thy peace, Lord, through the coming night,
Turn thou for us its darkness into light;
From harm and danger keep thy children free,
For dark and light are both alike to thee.

Grant us thy peace throughout our earthly life,
Our balm in sorrow, and our stay in strife;
Then, when thy voice shall bid our conflict cease,
Call us, O Lord, to thine eternal peace.

Chairman of Finance Committee: Mrs. L. R. Wells, 700 South Crysler Street, Independence, Missouri.

Chairman of Social Purity Committee: Mrs. F. M. Smith, 630 South Crysler Street, Independence, Missouri.

Chairman of Ways and Means Committee: Mrs. T. A. Hougas, Macedonia, Iowa.

Proposed Federation of Societies.

At the general meeting of the advisory board of the Woman's Auxiliary last April, the matter of introducing the idea of all the societies of the women of the church uniting under one head was given important consideration. After due deliberation it was their judgment that more effective work could be done by a united, systematic effort, much work hitherto untouched could be attempted, and the field of woman's endeavor be materially enlarged. It was decided that an effort should be made this year by the officers to introduce this proposition to all local societies of the church of whatever nature (that is, societies conducted by the sisters) for their consideration.

Accordingly the three members of the advisory board located in Independence, Mrs. B. C. Smith, F. M. Smith, and D. J. Krahl, with the assistance of the local social committee of the Woman's Auxiliary, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, L. R. Wells, J. C. Nunn, F. M. Smith, and E. L. Kelley, arranged a social gathering of all the societies of the Independence Branch and extended the invitation to societies in surrounding branches also.

Through the kind hospitality of the Mrs. Hulmes, we were permitted to entertain these guests at their beautiful and spacious home, 909 West Maple Avenue. About one hundred and thirty responded to the invitation, and the following program was given:

Vocal duet, Mrs. Audentia Anderson and Mrs. Clara Haberlein; paper, Greeting, by Mrs. D. J. Krahl; talk, Cooperation, by Mrs. E. L. Kelley; vocal solo, Miss Jeanette Kelley, "Hold thou my hand"; paper, Unity of purpose, Mrs. J. C. Nunn; address, Mrs. F. M. Smith; paper, Reminiscent and prospective, Mrs. B. C. Smith.

At the close of the above program those present were invited to express themselves on the question of unifying our forces. Sr. B. C. Smith took charge of the discussion that followed, which was quite informal.

Some of the thoughts brought out were as follows:

Q. How may a society join the Woman's Auxiliary?

A. By adopting the constitution of the Woman's Auxiliary. By this federation, however, the constitution and by-laws as they stand at present would no doubt have to be revised to meet the new requirements. This would probably be done by a committee appointed by the entire body at the next General Convention to draft a new constitution.

Q. Who would elect the officers of the Woman's Auxiliary?

A. All the societies in General Convention.

Q. What is meant by the present societies reporting?

A. It is meant that all societies, of whatever nature their work, whether for Children's Home, for local church assistance financially, for study, or relief work for the poor, shall send a condensed report of their year's work to the General Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, to be compiled in her report to General Conference, this being the only organization reporting to the conference.

Q. Is this the only advantage in joining the Woman's Auxiliary, to make a report or a show of what we have done, thereby letting our right hand know what our left hand doeth?

A. No; making a report of work done by us is not making a show any more than the Sunday school, or Religio, or the church itself makes a show by their reports. It is a matter of business. None of our great stores in the city would sustain a department of its business and not expect a report from that department as to its progress and success. The General Conference has sustained year after year the Daughters of Zion (Woman's Auxiliary) and it is only a matter of business that they should have a report from this department of the Lord's work. Heretofore the report they have heard has been but a fragment of the great amount of work done by the women of this church. Now we wish that all work shall be represented in a businesslike report.

Q. What will be the benefit to each society which unites with the Woman's Auxiliary?

A. First, the broader views that are always obtained by one individual coming in contact with another of like interests, or one society being in touch with another which is working in the same cause.

Second, When an alert committee at the head of each department shall by study and investigation prepare themselves to give counsel and advice to the societies in that department of work, the benefit must be apparent. For instance: where there are a few who desire to form a study club and would like to have a course outlined for them to follow, an appeal to the committee at the head of the literary department would furnish such outline.

And again, the societies who are working in a financial way could receive valuable suggestions for raising funds from a general finance committee who shall qualify themselves for giving such information.

Third, each society's field of usefulness will be broadened when, because of the combined forces, new lines of work may be taken up.

Space will not permit us to reproduce more of the discussion, but we believe that when the grand possibilities resulting from a complete organization are once understood, the women of this church will not be slow to lend their might, mind, and strength.

At the close of the discussion the social committee, with their assistants, took charge of their part of the program, serving a plate of dainty refreshments to each guest. A short time was spent in social chatting, the friends then taking their departure.

The papers read at this meeting will be published in this column for the benefit of those who are interested in this work. The following is the paper of "Greeting" by Mrs. D. J. Krahl:

GREETING.

It is a pleasure to extend to the societies and friends who have honored our invitation the greeting and welcome of the Woman's Auxiliary.

To my mind it is a matter worthy of note that it is the first gathering of this kind that has ever occurred, that is, an assembly of all the local organizations of the church in this vicinity that are conducted by women.

I am told it is thirty-four years ago that the first ladies' society of the church in Independence was organized; the original of what is now known as the Ladies' Aid Society. During this time other organizations have been formed which, in their turn, have taken up some helpful work in the church, but to-day the active organizations among us are the Ladies' Aid Society, the Laurel Club, an informal reading club, the Big Sisters (lately organized), a Relief Society, and the Woman's Auxiliary.

For a number of years, as societies we have walked side by side. Friendly feelings have existed between us, but each has pursued its own course and the word of appreciation of each other's aim or progress has been unexpressed.

And now because of the importance of woman's work in the church and of the mighty power of united effort the general officers of the Woman's Auxiliary present to you this invitation, to join hands with them and form one sisterhood, wherein shall be a unity of interests—cooperation with each other for personal development and world service. Where the smallest society can be linked with the greatest, where weakness shall gather strength, where timidity shall find courage because of the elbow touch of a common aim. Not that any one society shall forsake its present object, but rather that all shall be likewise interested. Nor that any society shall lose its identity until such time when by full consent our various lines of work may be formed into departments.

When we think of the great financial aid that is being rendered local needs by the Ladies' Aid Society and Laurel Club, the establishment of the Children's Home by the Woman's Auxiliary, the Sanitarium, College, and homes for the aged by the church, we may think—All is done; but not so. There are adverse social conditions that seem left for woman to discover and fulfill. Whose mission shall it be?

When we think of the hundreds of thousands of women in the world that are banded together for the moral uplift of humanity, and the accomplishing of which we can not deny, does it not make us feel that while "our days are vanishing as a tale that is told, and the sun of our years hastens toward its going down," that we will kindle our zeal at the altars of sacrifice, and enter into this larger service with a faith that is firm, a courage that is strong, and a love that is unbounded.

Another Zionist Plan.

The current convention of the Confederation of Jewish Farmers suggests another Zionist plan, quite different from but perhaps more practical and hopeful than that which is commonly called by that name. The Zionist scheme, which has interested many prominent and influential Jews and also enlisted the sympathetic attention of many non-Jews, involves the redemption of Palestine and the restoration of the Jewish people thereto; or, as an alternative, the settlement of the Jews in some other available country of their own. Theoretically and sentimentally, the scheme makes a strong appeal. Practically, it is seen to be beset with many and probably insuperable difficulties, not the least of which are inherent in the Jewish people themselves. Such an enterprise could scarcely be justified by success unless it included at least a majority of the Jews of the world, and the possibility of getting so many of them to engage in it seems to many thoughtful men too remote for serious consideration.

The suggestion of this convention is that the Jewish people of each country shall establish a Zion of their own where they are or wherever they are permitted to do so; particularly in the United States, where they are perfectly free and where it is to be found to-day a larger number of Jews than in any other country, excepting only Russia and Austria-Hungary. The idea is that instead of continuing in the condition to which they were forcibly reduced by their oppressors in the Middle Ages they shall resume the natural, self-sufficient mode of life which was common to their nation in the years of its independence, prosperity and glory. There can be no question that from the exodus to the captivity the Jews were chiefly and characteristically a pastoral and agricultural people. It was only when they were denied the right to own land or to till it that they perforce became tradesmen, herded in cities.

The customs and tastes of centuries were destroyed and forcibly replaced by others in years of persecution. It remains to be seen whether they can be restored by suasion and by appeals to advantage in a time of freedom. One of the great grievances and complaints of Jews in Russia is that they are pent within the pale and are denied the privilege of owning and tilling land. It would be strange if, when they escaped from that tyranny and those grievances by coming hither, they should elect voluntarily to remain in the same condition against which they protested there, and should voluntarily place themselves within a pale. It would be strange, too, if the example of many of their brethren here did not impress them and inspire them to follow it. For in various places, in New York and New Jersey and other States, agricultural colonies of Jews are enjoying much prosperity. Of course, such communities must be founded and judiciously cultivated. It would be foolish and disastrous to transplant a number of Jews from city to country who had never lived in the country before and who knew absolutely nothing about agriculture, and expect them unaided to become immediately prosperous farmers. But with a proper application of instruction and assistance the ghetto-dwelling Jew might be transformed into a wholesome lived farmer or gardener, and in that transformation a great problem both for him, and for his neighbors would be solved.—New York Daily Tribune.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA, December 12, 1911.

Saints' Herald and Saints of the Southern Nebraska District: As president of the Lincoln Branch, I wish to make a request of all who expect to be in attendance at the district conference and convention, to be held at this place January 19, 20, 21.

Please advise me at once that you are coming; that your husband or wife comes with you, and how many others of your family are coming; or, if you are coming alone. Please sign your first name, so we will not have to run the risk of making a bad guess as to whether it is Jennie or John.

It is our earnest desire to be ready to properly entertain all visitors at this conference in the best possible manner. We hope to comfortably locate all who may come, and very naturally those who honor this request will be most comfortably located.

The convention and conference will convene in the hall used by the Lincoln Branch for regular Sunday services. For the benefit of those who have never been there, I will tell you how to find it. It is number 209 South Tenth Street, just two blocks south of the post office; five blocks from the Burlington depot. The number is over the door on the street. The hall is upstairs. You will have no trouble in finding the place.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Lincoln Branch will serve meals at the hall. Dinner and supper, but not breakfast, free of all expense to visitors. We have a splendid dining room and kitchen available on the same floor in which the meetings will be held. This will save considerable time otherwise consumed going to and from meals, and I feel sure will be an enjoyable feature of the conference. If any of our up-State Saints have any surplus of produce, butter, or the like, and would care to donate, please send to me in time for delivery on convention day.

We are expecting a goodly number to attend, and hope all will go away comforted and rejoicing because of a peaceful and profitable meeting.

Editors Herald: Will you please correct the last verse in my paper of November 15, to read:

"I stand here in the assurance of a duty performed and with a feeling that I would rather stand condemned before every member of the faculty and before every student in Graceland than to stand condemned at that heavenly tribuna, where we must all answer for deeds done in the flesh."

I did not see the paper until this week or would have sent the correction earlier.

IRENE HOFFMAN.

NEWCASTLE, AUSTRALIA, October 29, 1911.

Dear Herald: I gave obedience to this grand and glorious gospel in the year 1897. Although I do not seem to have made much progress, I know it has been with myself. I have not been as earnest as I should have been. When I obeyed this work I was about nine years old, but I can remember going down into the waters of baptism and making that covenant with my heavenly Father who has cared for me and protected me from all dangers and has promised to be near me in my trials.

I can truly say now that I have never regretted the step I have taken. I feel very thankful to my Father that he led me out of darkness into the light of this glorious gospel. May we all think of that beautiful hymn: "Let us walk in the light of God." I can not but praise and thank God, for he blesses me more than I deserve, and blesses my brothers and sisters also. My desire is to attend the Lord's house and take hold of the privileges which are set before me and take up my cross and follow him who is our creator.

The HERALDS are full of good reading. I feel to rejoice more and more when I can take up a church paper and read its contents; I feel very much strengthened by them. Many times I have been low-spirited, and yet when I have gone to him in prayer he has raised me up by his loving hands.

How true the words of Paul: "For the good that I would I do not, but the evil which I would not, that I do." I find there a condition that when I would do good evil is present with me. How carefully we have to watch, lest we enter into temptation. Let us hold fast to that which is pure and good and strive to do God's will, that we may all receive that crown of life which is laid up for the faithful Saints.

REENIE DAVIS.

MOORHEAD, IOWA, December 8, 1911.

Saints' Herald: The writer of this missive retains an unshaken faith in the gospel of God, believing it to be vastly superior to any human plan or philosophy; and is pleased to know it has succeeded in withstanding the attacks of all agencies opposed to it.

Am interested in the contents of your columns as relate to the onward movement of the cause of Christ; and during the last few years have advocated the message in our home church at Magnolia, and spoke in its defense at camp meeting in September.

During summer months spoke at some other points in the district, and on the 29th of October left home for Sioux City, tarrying for a few weeks, lecturing and sermonizing on gospel themes to interested audiences.

Saints extended a cordial welcome, and testified to the blessing of the Lord attending the delivery of his word; upon leaving there, invitations were given for a return visit.

Came to this place November 30, and have been talking to good, attentive congregations, who express their appreciation of the efforts being made; for which we are thankful.

The Lord is good to all, and his word is precious; am grateful unto him for his kindness and compassionate mercy; for the love he manifests toward all who seek to serve him. I am assured he has not forgotten nor forsaken such as trust him for his grace; that he forgives the repentant, and sustains the weak, and is willing to encourage the reliant soul.

J. F. MCDOWELL.

News from the Jots Man.

The dedication of the Saints' chapel in the Columbus Branch, near Sherwin, Kansas, on Thanksgiving Day, November 30, was a decided success. The day was indeed ideal, the skies were clear and the sun shone brightly. The warm, balmy breeze stole softly o'er the wide Kansas plains.

Bro. W. S. Taylor still presides over the branch with dignity and fairness. To this old, battle-scarred veteran of the cross, and his numerous posterity, must be credited largely the preservation and spiritual success of the Columbus Branch. It was organized in 1870 by Bro. Taylor, with Elder Perry Cole as its first president; Curtis Randall, priest; George Stone, teacher, and R. M. Barrymore, deacon. Many noble Saints have been born into the kingdom here who have moved out under the inspiring influences of the angel's message to tell the wonderful story and assist in the establishment of other branches in this, the Sunflower State—then "Bleeding Kansas." But few of the early Saints remain who first settled and pioneered these mighty plains, before the sunflower grew in its arid soils. Bro. Randall and "Aunt Sally" only remain, besides the Taylor family—old and feeble in years and the sands of life fast running out—yet strong and mighty in redeeming grace and the faith of latter days.

To this little chapel situated on the northwest corner of Bro. William Kirk's farm, commanding a beautiful view of thousands of acres of fertile farms, where but a few years ago roamed the bison and deer, came Bishop Hilliard as a "substitute" to deliver the dedicatory sermon. The effort was good and well received by a church full of Saints and friends who had gathered to give thanks on the natal day for all the national and individual blessings received, and especially by the Saints for the gospel—for its influences, powers, and the graces that have made it possible for the erection and dedication of the ground and building of such a neat little country church—a hallowed place for Saints and friends to meet, now and in the years to come.

After the sermon the tables were spread with the rich viands of a bounteous land, the good sisters doing more than well in this part of the services. Everyone present who desired, received a "perfect fullness." The afternoon was spent in an old-fashioned neighborhood social visit, where old folks told their experiences and where the young folks "woo and win." Thus Thanksgiving Day of 1911 was very pleasantly spent indeed.

Bro. Taylor is fast sinking into the sear and yellow leaf of age, and is resting with his children, who, from early gospel training and honest gospel economy, are well provided for, and pleasantly situated in the regions round about. No man is more respected by Saint or sinner, and a long life of usefulness in church and state has endeared him to Kansas soil, and his many, many friends.

JOTS.

Indulge ye jots man for a moment to say that we left the sunny vales of Kansas and are now climbing the rocky hills of Arkansas—notorious for many things, besides some other things. In all my experiences of forty-one years preaching the gospel, this is the first and only branch that I have ever visited in which we did not greet your smiling face—a sudden change from such monotony may shake these Ozark hills, but you will please find inclosed subscriptions for the HERALD and Autumn Leaves. We are assured the world do move.

It will go without saying that when a Latter Day Saint is wrong he is the wrongest person in the world, and it would try the patience of a winged seraphim who treads the golden shores to successfully point him to the better way—yet we are cheerful and hopeful. If it were only the children in the gospel (beginners), who as a rule are willing and anxious to learn, it wouldn't be so bad. It's a real pleasure to instruct, educate, and guide such into the gospel's sunny ways; but the older ones, hardened by misdirected experience, and ripened by their own selfish assumptions, are the danger element of the church. Yet we have the spectacle of men, sometimes officers, scheming and plotting in outraging justice, the agents and means of making her temple a house of infamy. It ought to be and is a privilege to be a member or officer in the church. A privilege, however, liable to swift and permanent forfeiture if the man enjoying that privilege fails, not only in the letter of the word, but obviously in the spirit of his professed calling. The soundness of the fabric of the judiciary of the church, the dignity, validity, and vitality of their opinions, and the proper respect paid to those whose right it is to interpret the laws, is largely dependent upon the deportment and actions of the body as a whole.

We are at present domiciled with Bro. and Sr. D. L. Lewis, and enjoying their hospitality as well as enjoying the wildness and scenic expression of the Ozarks—the land of red apples and stony hills.

JOTS.

From a Sister in Love and Bondage.

I love all my brethren and desire to encourage them in any way that I can. We all have our failings, and many things to overcome. The Lord says that we must be tried in all things. I realize this to be a fact, but we often make mistakes, do things and say things that are not right in the sight of God, and cause the people of the world to talk and say we do not practice what we preach.

God showed me where I had done things that were not acceptable in his sight. There were some not easily remedied, but I rectified my mistakes, such as careless words to my brethren and friends. I asked their forgiveness. That seemed an easy task. He required one thing that was hard, and that was to go to a man in high standing, and confess a mistake. I prayed earnestly until the Lord gave me strength to do so. And now I praise the blessed Lord with a clear conscience, and receive his Spirit to lead me into all truth.

A SISTER IN LOVE.

A Spiritual Dream.

As part of a Sunday night series of sermons, and following the subjects, The early apostasy, and the Reformation, it was my lot to speak on last August 6 on the False restoration; involving the question of divine recognition of, and authority in the Christian churches of the present day. In my studies of the previous week I again came on the answer of the Lord to Joseph Smith's question as to which of the churches he should join, and where he was told to unite with none of them for they were all wrong; that their creeds were all an abomination in his sight, etc., etc.

As I was to stand before the Saints and proclaim God's truth on this vital matter, i. e., authority, I desired earnestly to receive a testimony from my heavenly Father for myself concerning the standing of the churches; and the following night vision was given me:

I dreamed I stood in the footpath, outside a large modern dwelling; near me stood the woman who resided there. There were other large places in the vicinity, the location of which struck me; they being situated low, on a ridge which sloped peculiarly with a two-sided slope, forming a large, half-basin like hollow. This slope ended abruptly, just a few feet below where we stood, with a steep precipice dropping almost perpendicularly.

Running at right angles below us and bounding this and the neighboring places, rushed a deep and strong stream about eighteen or twenty feet wide, bubbling and foaming past us. As it swept on it carried large pieces of the bank with it, undermining the foundations of the place. This was going on all the time. As I looked up at the ridge above us I was struck with the danger of the position to the houses, realizing that a storm and flood would sweep them down the ridge, over the precipice, into the stream. I pointed out this danger to the woman. She replied that the responsibility of their safety had received the necessary attention of those on whom it rested. I was astonished at such self-delusion, for no visible precaution had been taken that would lessen the danger and save the places.

At this moment a large piece of the foundation, perhaps fifteen or twenty feet long and five or six thick, was swept off the bank below us, caught, and was partly visible for a moment at a bend in the stream and was then swept out of view. The woman seemed quite indifferent to the conditions with which she was surrounded; she seemed satisfied, and with a feeling of sadness the dream ended.

Immediately I found myself on a long, level road which led to a city; it seemed to be at a part from which a tram car should start. I waited for some time at the inn or store for one to arrive. A feeling of loneliness being on me, I thought I would go out and look for the car, and what was my surprise that no traces of rails were visible. This struck me as being strange. The surroundings also looked odd. A moment later I was entering a large building which seemed long and comparatively narrow. There was a massive, dark, mahogany, or dark cedar staircase on the right side, which went up on an angle. Near the middle of the room was a large metal pot, about three or three and a half feet in height, and about two and a half feet in diameter at the top. The impression remains with me that it was an old seething pot, with short legs.

Two persons were standing, one on each side, opposite each other, preparing food in it. I had a passing glance at a lot of people in the room. The food in this iron pot was being mixed and boiled for these people.

A startling feature kept my eyes on the mixers and filled me with disgust, for from their fingers was constantly running a dirty, black, treacle-like filth into the pot. It stood out quite distinct from the natural color of their hands. I remonstrated at this abomination, the horror of which was so as to give quite a sickening recollection as I think of it now. There was no response, for on looking up I saw that while the hands to the elbows were still over the pot and mixing away and dropping in their filth all the time, the individuals themselves had become like hazy shadows.

My son, Sherman, who is a deacon in this church, stood near me. I pointed out the disgusting thing that was going on—then I awakened. The latter part of the dream made me wonder considerably.

On stepping into the stand to speak, desiring a text, I lifted up my heart in prayer. At once my thoughts were directed to the seventh chapter of Matthew, the last four verses and the first part of my dream. I was shown that the foundation of the Christian churches of to-day was not on the Everlasting Rock, and would not stand the testing times of flood and storms; and that pure doctrines, with authority from heaven, as in verses 28 and 29, could not be found with adulterated impurity and corruption as I had seen in the latter part of the dream.

To me this came with the power and testimony of the Spirit, and I pray that God will water the word spoken at that time that it may bring forth everlasting fruit.

I was to continue this subject on the following Sunday, and having an earnest desire to more clearly understand, especially the latter part of the dream, and to write up what was to me a spiritual testimony, I prayed that God would make it clear.

On the following Wednesday night I dreamed again that I stood on the long road looking for the tram rails, then my eyes were opened; I was years back, a long time back in those days, cars with rails were not in existence. Once more I passed through the door of the large building where I had stood before and noted among the crowd who were to be fed out of the seething pot, which stood there as before, some old-fashioned, oddly styled men, dressed with knee breeches, who must have lived a long time ago. I saw the two mixers again, with the filth on their hands, over the iron pot, and clearly understood the whole matter—they were priests, popes, or bishops in Roman ecclesiastical garb. While the hands remained mixing, I awakened and lay long hours thinking over the matter. I know for myself that the God of heaven still answers the prayers of his Saints and makes plain by dream and vision, through his Spirit, the truths we earnestly desire.

News From Missions

Illinois.

We are grateful to be able to say that the work in the Kewanee District is moving along nicely, although there is still room for improvement. Good help to the district has been afforded this year in that three missionaries have been putting in their whole time; namely, Elders E. J. Goodenough, O. E. Sade, and the writer; and all have been busily engaged in the work of advancing the blessed restored gospel. Some efforts on the part of each of us have been put forth to break some virgin ground, in territory where the gospel had not as yet sounded. We would be happy to report great success, but could not do that, with consistency, as some of the largest things that were in sight were hotel bills and hall rents. However, we still believe that good has been done, and when the good old summer shall return, we feel assured that efforts can be made upon the streets. I have done some of this line of work in the cities of Moline, Rock Island, and in Carbon-Cliffe, at the latter place, too, in the school yard which was kindly loaned by the trustees. Also had the assistance of some from the Methodist church people; one lady presided at the organ. Our only regrets now are, looking over the year's work, that we have not accomplished more; but we can feel some little good will result to the cause. Since last May I have labored in the following places: Moline, Rock Island, Carbon-Cliffe, Hampton, Rapids City, Port Bryon, Cordova, Savanna, Dahinda, Kewanee, Matherville, Millersburg, Buffalo Prairie, and Eliza, where I am at this writing, holding a series of meetings with splendid interest and good crowds, considering the busy time amongst the farmers, in husking their corn, some of which is still in the fields. Also we performed some work in the Eastern Iowa District, by request, in the cities of Davenport and Clinton.

My report so far this year, shows more sermons preached and more baptisms than any previous ministerial year's work, and the end is not yet. To-morrow we are to trouble the waters again, and there are here many fine people whom I am sure will yet obey the truth. The Gregenhorn family, with whom I am at present domiciled, are letting their friends and relations know of the true worth of this gospel, by placing in their hands the Book of Mormon, also tracts, and ere long the church will reap a harvest from such efforts. We have, been made happy to see others putting forth efforts that will count in the end.

I especially enjoyed myself while holding a series of meetings at Dahinda and Millersburg; at the former place four were baptized, while at the latter place no baptisms but a general good awakening by the wonderful outpouring of the Spirit of God.

After much careful meditation, our worthy young brother, Harley Cady, who has been called to the priesthood some time ago, was ordained to the office of teacher, and if he continues humble and faithful, he surely will prove not only an impetus, but a great help to the work in Millersburg. I have been treated kindly by all, both in and outside of the church, for which I do most assuredly feel to tender my thanks.

To mention names of some would perhaps do injustice to others, and so I will thank all for their extreme kindly consideration to my needs, which have been abundantly supplied. I am proud to be associated with such kind, warm-hearted people as I have met in this mission.

Our appreciation grows larger as we see the increasing good work of the church in providing homes for our aged, our sick and infirm, also our Children's Home,—a worthy institution. May God bless the efforts of those in charge, and the sisters, who have worked so nobly for what we now have, a place for the little lambs of the fold to be cared for and trained in the right way.

May our heavenly Father's work move on and up to grander heights, until the kingdom of God on earth blends with the family above.

Compliments of the season to all, including "ye Editors."

News From Branches

Omaha.

Our sacrament service and prayer meeting of last Sunday morning was a spiritual feast; the gift of prophecy was made manifest, and while more was in store for us we rejoice in the measure of God's Spirit that was made manifest.

Our Sunday school is steadily increasing, both in interest and numbers. There were eighty-seven present last Sunday. Next Sunday, with several special musical numbers, etc., we are going to hold a rally day; have programs printed which we will distribute in the neighborhood to get children around us interested, if not attending elsewhere at the same hour.

While we are growing, spiritually, in the branch, our Religion society is also growing in interest and all through we are encouraged; not satisfied by any means, but thankful and hopeful.

Our choir has joined in with the Walnut Hill (Omaha) Methodist choir in practicing for a Christmas cantata to be given in our church Sunday morning, December 24, and in their church Sunday evening of the same date. They are certainly showing a free and generous spirit toward us and we are trying to do our part.

The last of this month, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday respectively, the Fremont, Pottawattamie, and Northern Nebraska districts will hold Sunday school and Religion institute at our church, Twenty-fourth and Ohio Streets, and expect Pres. F. M. Smith and Bro. J. A. Gunsolley to be present.

DR. AND MRS. W. E. STORT.

1921 SOUTH ELEVENTH STREET.

Independence.

On last Sunday evening the choir gave extra musical numbers at the opening hour, and the solos, anthems, and organ offertory, skillfully executed by our talented associate organist, Bro. Paul Craig, were grand and inspiring.

Then followed a cordial introduction by Pres. F. M. Smith of Dr. F. W. Blackmar, professor of Kansas University, as the speaker of the evening. This gentleman, under the auspices of the Men's League, lectured before a large congregation on the subject of "The relation of the church to the community," and his expressed sentiments were well received, being in harmony with many lines of church service already taken up by us as a people. The learned lecturer spoke from the standpoint of sociology and not theology, and he desired to put forth some ideas that would increase our faith and hope. "The sciences have brought the church into new life." "Some churches," he said, "had gone to seed because they have failed to show a living, practical life. The religious man must be a part of the world, going everywhere to fill his mission as a religious man, and religion must enter into every social activity." But words and lack of space forbid us to enter into the full setting forth of the many avenues of activity or departments into which the professor led or accompanied the Saints present, a few of which are: Sanitation in schools, and the work of the mothers advanced by visiting them; woman's help as a factor in church government; the fellowship of the church in social life; doing good everywhere, and a large cooperation with the work of the State as to the development and education of the boys and girls.

On the 14th there was a pleasant annual house party at Bro. Ellis Short's, where, in company with Bro. Joseph and Bishop Kelley, about twenty of the old-time Saints gathered for social converse and enjoyment.

On the 7th and 8th inst., the zealous and faithful sisters of the Laurel Club put forth a crowning effort for the church's behalf by way of holding one of the finest and most extensive bazaars, from which they cleared in full the sum of $446.25.

But, as desirous and pleasing as were all these social experiences, nothing can take the place in the hearts of the Saints, of those spiritual feasts when they meet together to exchange inspiring and uplifting thoughts concerning the blessings received in this glorious latter day work.

The ever-directing spirit of revelation and prophecy, the helping, governing power manifested even for their temporal good, and the sweet, comforting office of the Holy Spirit outweigh all social pleasures and all that science or the higher education of the world can afford, when without its enlightenment.

At the preaching services on the 3d inst. the bishops of Independence and Lamoni—Brn. R. Bullard and J. Roberts occupied the morning and evening hours respectively, and to edification.

Among many uplifting thoughts expressed by Bro. Bullard, with a kindly, fatherly spirit, he referred to the burdens of the needy ones, and especially to the afflictions of our beloved prophet, and appealed to the Saints to live according to the commandments, and thus honor the cause of Christ. "Let the world go," said he, "with its pleasures and fashions, and let us stand in holy places and say, 'All these things will we do.'"

The afternoon's meeting was filled with the spirit of love and intelligence, and the evening hour's service with Bro. Roberts as speaker, was one of instruction and spiritual blessing. He explained very explicitly the law concerning the gathering, consecration, surplus and equality, and said, "The gospel as it has come to us is the power of salvation now, while we yield obedience to it."

Conference Minutes.

SOUTHERN NEBRASKA.—District conference convened with the Fairfield Branch July 23 and 24, 1911. Elder W. M. Self was chosen to preside; Margaret White secretary. Prayer services at 10 a. m., preaching at 11 a. m. by Edward Rannie, at 2:30 p. m. by R. O. Self, and at 7:30 p. m. by C. E. Blodgett. On Monday, at 10 a. m., the business session was called to order, Elder W. M. Self presiding; G. W. Johnson and Edward Rannie appointed committee on credentials. Reports were read from the following: Seventias: Walter M. Self, R. O. Self, C. H. Porter. Elders: Samuel Broliar, G. W. Johnson, H. A. Higgins, Edward Rannie, C. E. Blodgett, and G. T. Munsell. High priests: J. W. Waldsmith. Priests: G. Keller, James Croft. Deacons: C. K. Spear and Charles Nichols. A letter from the district president, Paul M. Hanson was read. Statistical reports from Blue River, Fairfield; Eustis, Lincoln, and Nebraska City were read and on motion adopted. The bishop's agent's report was read and the chair appointed C. E. Blodgett and Edward Rannie as committee on auditing. A communication from Elder J. W. Wight was read relative to combining Eastern Nebraska and Western Iowa reunions. It was moved and seconded that this district do not concur in the request of the missionary in charge in regard to the combining Eastern Nebraska with Western Iowa into a centralized and permanently located reunion. Motion carried. Report of the auditing committee read, finding the reports of the bishop's agent correct. A resolution prevailed that the reunion committee of the Southern Nebraska District and the president of the district confer and if it is found practicable to do so, to hold the reunion and the conference at the same place and time. The following officers were elected and sustained: President, W. M. Self; secretary, H. A. Higgins. Elder C. H. Porter was sustained as bishop's agent and historian. On motion the business session of the conference was changed from Monday to Saturday. On motion the conference was to adjourn at the close of the evening service to the call of the president in the month of January, 1912. The place determined for the conference was Lincoln, Nebraska. W. M. Self was the speaker at 7:30. On motion the conference adjourned. The conference of the Southern Nebraska District will be held with the Lincoln Branch, at Lincoln, Nebraska, January 20 and 21, 1912. H. A. Higgins, secretary.

LAMONI STAKE.—The thirty-second conference of the Lamoni Stake met at Hiteam, Iowa, November 4 and 5. Reports were read from the ministry in the stake, the local branches, the stake bishopric, the stake library board, the stake Sunday school and Religio conventions, and the quorums of elders, priests, and teachers of the stake. An appropriation of $8 was allowed for the work of the library board. The time and place of holding the next conference was left to the stake presidency. Four were baptized and confirmed. The work of the Woman's Auxiliary was presented by Sr. Letha Tilton in a meeting of mothers. The social purity work was presented by Prof. R. V. Hopkins of the general committee, and J. F. Garver, the local stake worker for the movement, in a special session held by the Sunday school and Religio convention, and quorum meetings were held by the elders and priests of the local stake quorums. The sessions were very spiritual from the first to the last, and as a whole the conference was pronounced by all as one of the best ever held in the stake. The preaching was by Elders R. S. Salyards, Joseph Roberts, and John Smith. C. I. Carpenter, acting secretary.

NORTHEASTERN MISSOURI.—The district conference convened at Higbee, Missouri, September 2, 1911. Elders Swen Swensen and F. T. Mussell presiding; William C. Chapman and W. B. Richards, secretaries. Branches reporting: Higbee, Bevier, Menefree. Elders reporting: Swen Swensen, F. T. Mussell, W. B. Richards, William Kelso, W. C. Chapman. Priest: W. T. Ramsey. Teacher: C. A. Brown. Graceland College.

NOTICE OF PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF GRACELAND COLLEGE, LAMONI, DECATUR COUNTY, IOWA, NOVEMBER 20, 1911.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College, to be held on the 11th day of March, A. D. 1912, at Lamoni, Iowa, the following amendments to the Articles of Incorporation of Graceland College will be presented and considered for adoption:

1st. Amend Article 6 by adding after the first paragraph: "The members of the said Board of Trustees shall hold office for a term of three years, unless removed for cause, or such election is to fill a vacancy; the successors to the present members of the board shall be elected as follows: Two in 1912, three in 1913, and two in 1914."

"The Board of Trustees shall have power to temporarily fill all vacancies occurring on said board, when the General Conference is not in session."

2d. Amend Article 8 by striking out the words, "Annually as soon after the election of new members as practicable, consistent with the best interests of the college work, meet at the principal place of business noted herein and shall."

And in lieu thereof, insert the following: "Meet annually on the 25th day of April, or if said day be a Sunday or holiday, then on the next succeeding day," and so that the first clause of said article shall read, "The Board of Trustees shall meet annually on the 25th day of April, or if said day be a Sunday or holiday, then on the next succeeding business day, and perform the duties and work devolving upon such officers as herein set forth."

3d. Amend Article 8 by striking out the words, "not enjoined upon Board of Trustees herein," at the close of said article.

4th. Amend Article 9, by striking out, "but a majority of said board shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business at any meeting," because of repetition.

5th. Amend Article 11 by striking out the words, "Collection . . . donations, contributions and stock as are reported to him by the treasurer and all disbursements and payments of money for expenses or any other purpose," and inserting after the word "sales" the words "purchase and donations," so that the said article when amended shall read: "Article 11. The secretary shall keep a true and accurate account of all the proceedings of the board, and perform such other duties as usually devolve upon the secretaries of similar boards; and shall keep a true account of all sales, purchases, and donations of real estate."

6th. Amend Article 14 by adding after the word "church" in line 2, the words "in trust"; and after the word "church" at the end of the first sentence, line 5, in General Conference Resolutions, the words, "for the use and benefit of Graceland College," so that the first sentence of said article when amended, shall read: "Article 14. The real property of this association shall be held by the said Reorganized Church in trust; and donations, gifts, and bequests of real property may be made to this institution by conveying directly to said church for the use and benefit of Graceland College."

7th. Also such further changes as may be necessary, of punctuation, spelling, and restoring omitted words, so as to correct the record now on file in the Recorder's office at Leon, Decatur County, Iowa.

 S. A. BURGESS, Secretary.

Died.

ANDERSON.—Near Ellston, Iowa, November 30, 1911. Elder Charles J. Anderson, born at Folkenberg, Sweden, October 29, 1825. In May, 1856, he accepted the gospel as it was preached by the elders from Utah. January, 1860, he was married to Anna C. Swenson; to this union were born one daughter and five sons; the daughter and eldest son have gone on before, while the faithful, aged consort, four sons, and eleven grandchildren are left to mourn; at the ripe old age of 86 years, 1 month, and 1 day, this steadfast Saint passed on, to be with the hopeful in the promises of the gospel. The same year of his marriage he removed to the Salt land; after a few years the true gospel came to him in a message of the Reorganization; carefully comparing the truth with the errors of Utahism, he gave obedience to the revival call from Amboy, Illinois, and was baptized at Malad City, Idaho, May 12, 1868, by Elder Robert Murdock, and was ordained an elder at Salt Lake City, Utah, February 17, 1869, by Elder Thomas Job. In 1874, with his family he came to Iowa, and located on the place where he lived until the time of his demise. He was ever faithful in his humble way to the advance of the work of God, and many of the elders were made welcome at his home. Funeral service at the old home, sermon by Elder Robert M. Elvin, from 1 Corinthians 15: 22. The body was taken to Lamoni, and laid to rest in Rose Hill Cemetery.

SMITH.—Elder Sherman I. Smith was born October 18, 1837, at Bainbridge, Ohio. Was baptized August 19, 1867, by T. W. Smith; ordained an elder July 8, 1868, by E. C. Briggs. Died at Hopkins, Michigan, November 25, 1911. Funeral services conducted by Elder E. K. Evans, of Grand Rapids, Michigan.

RICHARDS.—Sr. Mary L. Richards was born February 4, 1862. She died at the home of her parents, at Black Earth, Wisconsin, on November 30, Thanksgiving Day. She was first married to William Cooper, who passed to the other life several years ago. Of this union two children were born who have also passed to the other life. Later she was married to Frank Richards, and still later both united with the Reorganized Church. Her husband preceded her to the other shore in August, 1911. Sr. Richards leaves to mourn an aged father and mother, five brothers, and one sister; Sr. Emma Schumacher. The funeral services were conducted by Elder Charles H. Burr from the Congregational Church at Black Earth, and interment at the cemetery of the same place. The attendance was large and the floral contributions many and fine. Sr. Richards was a patient sufferer during many months of intense pain incident to that dreadful disease, cancer, but with all she never lost faith in God nor her confidence in the gospel of Jesus Christ.

TANNER.—James Moreford Tanner, born July 14, 1833, in Newberry, Berkshire, England; came with his parents while in his teens to America. In 1858 he was married to Miss Elizabeth Jones. There were eleven children born: five sons, six daughters; his wife and six of the children have preceded him in death. United with the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints August 29, 1869; was ordained teacher the same date; remained faithful until the end, which occurred November 13, 1911, at Bevier, Missouri, which has been his home for about twenty-five years; two sons, Joseph A., of Saint Louis, Ben E., of Bevier, Missouri, and three daughters, Emma Menshell of Bevier, Mary Woolcraft and Ruth Halvey, of Sand Coulee, Montana, and a number of grandchildren are left to mourn. Services in charge of F. T. Mussell; funeral sermon by William Lewis. Laid to rest by the side of his wife in the beautiful cemetery of Bevier.

A faithful brother is cut down,
A chosen son is gone,
To dwell with the righteous in Paradise
Till the resurrection morn.
Then reign with his Redeemer,

Upon the new and sanctified earth,
Throughout all eternity.

Notice to the Church.

Notice is hereby given that Apostle I. N. White has been officially released temporarily from ministerial duty. This action was taken after due consultation with the Physician to the Church, who informs us Bro. White's physical condition will not permit him longer to continue the duties he has so long and faithfully discharged.

Bro. J. F. Curtis will assume full charge of the field over which Brn. White and Curtis have had joint supervision. It is hoped that a much needed rest will enable Bro. White to sufficiently recuperate to resume his official duties in the near future.

Dear Brother: In answer to your letter I will say this about your flour:

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN: I have used GOOD HEALTH FLOUR for some time, ever since Nov. 1910, and I think it is fine. I think all Latter Day Saints ought to use this GOOD HEALTH FLOUR. It is so far ahead of the white flour than you can think. You can use it for so many different things. It makes the best bread, cake, muffins and pancakes. To my idea there is no other flour that can make pancakes and be as good as this. GOOD HEALTH FLOUR for porridge can not be beat.

Try eating GOOD HEALTH FLOUR, then go back on the white flour, and you will see the difference. I can with an honest heart recommend this GOOD HEALTH FLOUR to anyone, and especially to all Latter Day Saints.

Now my dear brother, if you can use this letter so it will be of any good to you, you may do so with my consent. Hoping that you will be successful in your work to get the Saints to use pure food. Yours in gospel bonds,

THE PREEMINENCE OF JESUS.

(Sermon by Elbert A. Smith at Lamoni, Iowa, reported by Estella Wight.)

God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds: who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high; being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. For unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son? And again, when he bringeth in the first begotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him. And of the angels he saith, Who maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire. But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: a scepter of righteousness is the scepter of thy kingdom. Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows. And, thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine own hands: they shall perish; but thou remainest: and they all shall wax old as doth a garment; and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed: but thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail. But to which of the angels said he at any time, Sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool? Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?

I have read the first chapter of Hebrews. For some reason I do not feel exactly in the mood for preaching this morning, but possibly this feeling will pass away; at least I am willing to make the effort and try. I remember some years ago when I was preaching in Burlington, Iowa, for the first time, about the second or third time I had ever preached; after I had finished, one of the good sisters said to me, "Bro. Smith, I did enjoy hearing you try to preach." I am sure that no one in the world realized more than I did how aptly spoken were her words. Possibly all preachers feel at times perhaps after they have just read the Sermon on the Mount, that all they can ever do will be to try to preach.

I desire to call your attention this morning to the subject of the preeminence of Jesus, as set forth in this first chapter of Hebrews.

TOLSTOI'S STORY.

It is generally conceded in the world that Jesus as a teacher is preeminent. But Count Tolstoi used to tell a story about the kind magician who saved a certain man from a malicious sorcerer who was seeking to destroy him. The magician saved him by changing him into a grain of millet. The sorcerer then immediately changed himself into a cock and was about to eat up the grain of millet, but the magician saved him again by pouring over the grain of millet an entire measure of grain, so that the cock could not eat it all and could not tell which particular grain he wished to swallow.

The lesson drawn by Tolstoi is that the world, actuated by the Devil, has poured over the teachings of Jesus so many man made philosophies that men can not tell where Jesus is. We find Christianity buried under Catholicism and Protestantism, sectarianism, Christian Science, Christian socialism, human philosophies, and ethical teachings, until it is difficult to tell where Jesus is.

Longfellow, in his day said:

"Lutheran, Popish, Calvinistic, all
These creeds and doctrines three
Extant are; but still the doubt Is, where Christianity may be."

And the problem has increased in perplexity since the time of Longfellow with the increase of the numbers of religious teachers who claim to teach Christianity. It may be that there is a great deal of good in the systems that we have mentioned: Catholicism, Protestantism, Christian Science, Christian socialism, and the others. There may be a great deal of good, just as there was in the grains of millet that were poured over the particular grain that had in it human life; but the trouble is that they claim, many of them, if not all of them, to be absolutely identical with the teachings of Jesus and to emanate from him, and the result is, the believer, or the would-be believer, is lost in confusion. He can not swallow them all, and he does not know which particular one he wants,—the one containing divine life.

But these people in teaching these things and claiming that they are representing Christ, and that all these ideas originated with him, are paying to him, of course, the highest compliment that they can pay by thus conceding that he is the greatest religious teacher and that all doctrines that claim the allegiance of the whole world should come through him.

STRIKING SCENES.

In human life there are certain experiences that stand out above all others. When we look back over the history of our own lives we recall certain scenes that impressed themselves upon our minds so prominently that we can never forget them. They come back to us in our dreams at night. We close our eyes and they come before us. In like manner there have been certain events that have occurred in the history of the race. We may look back over the history of the world and those scenes stand out above all others. The dawn of creation, the escape of Noah and his family from the flood, the crucifixion of Jesus Christ on Calvary; all these are scenes that stand out prominently in the history of the human race; so prominently that the human race has never forgotten them. We find in the traditions of nearly every nation or tribe the tradition of the creation, the flood, and the crucifixion.

But possibly there is no single scene in all the history of the world that is more prominent, more vital, more striking than that scene which occurred when Jesus, coming up out of the River Jordan, standing on its bank, was baptized with the Holy Spirit, and the voice was heard from the heavens saying, "This is my beloved Son."

HEAR YE HIM.

And so the Apostle Paul says that "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." And again in these last days, as we use the term to-day as given here, these words were reiterated with a little variation on the occasion when Joseph Smith was in doubt about what his duty was, and where Christianity was among all these various creeds, and went into the woods and prayed to God alone, and two personages appeared to him in vision, and one of them, pointing to the other, said, "This is my beloved Son, hear ye him."

That certainly was a prominent and important scene, and those words were striking words that ought to be pondered and considered to-day, in the midst of the many cries of lo here and lo there. We should earnestly seek that which Christ taught, and we should hear him.

In the past it has been the pride of Latter Day Saints that so many people have said, "We like to hear your preachers talk, because everything that they preach is found in the Bible." I hope that the day will never come when our ministers will be noted for teaching that which is contrary to the Bible, or casting any reflection upon the divinity of Christ or the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures that will lead people to go away from our meetings in doubt whether we believe that Christ is the Son of God, preeminent above all others, and that the Bible contains his inspired word.

"This is my beloved Son, hear ye him." Jesus, as we have already stated, is generally conceded by the world to be preeminent. Statesmen like Gladstone, warriors like Napoleon, and infidels like Ingersoll have conceded him a place above common humanity, as a character that could not be explained, and "an individual," as Ingersoll said, "worthy of the homage of our tears." And God himself has accorded him a preeminent place under the Father, or rather with him, and as stated in this chapter, at his right hand. And as one of our own poets has said regarding the sacrifice of Jesus:

"All the sacrifices offered
From the day of Abel down,
Forward look to this one proffered
On Golgotha's rugged crown.

"All the prayers and sacrifices
In the future yet to be,
Backward turn their weird faces
To the form upon this tree."

—David H. Smith.

Jesus came in the meridian of time. All the sacrifices previous to that time pointed forward to Jesus. All the prayers, all the sacrifices since his day have pointed backward to that man who hung upon the cross, and we are told the reason of this exaltation. What is it?

EXALTATION.

Exaltation is a part of the gospel economy. We have a certain people out in the West, as you are very well aware, who tell us a great deal about exaltation, and they believe that it is obtained through the pronouncing of certain ceremonies in the placing upon individuals of certain sealing, a mysterious sealing that will, in the great beyond, entitle them to pass beyond the gods and the angels to their exaltation.

But why was Jesus exalted? Why was he "anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows"? Why was he placed above the angels? Was it because he was the Son of God alone? We have confidence enough in the character of God to believe that had Jesus proven false to his trust he would have been rejected, cast out; but we are told here that the reason he was anointed was because he loved righteousness and hated iniquity. It was not the result of any mysterious rites or ceremonies; but that which he did and that which he was was the secret of his exaltation. That must be the secret of our exaltation and our blessing.

Yesterday one of the brethren said to me, "I have recently received a letter from a brother in the West who says that all his prayers, all his fasting are coming back to him now in the great blessing of power that he is enjoying in his ministerial work." And this brother said, "I have noticed this, that the men who live in harmony with God, the men who are good and true in their lives, they are the ones whom God is blessing with power."

It is the same with us that it was with Jesus. If we love righteousness, and hate iniquity, we shall be anointed with the oil of gladness above our fellows who do not love righteousness and hate iniquity.

In the Zion's Praises, hymn number 28, I believe it is, the sentiment occurs, "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord," then it goes on and says, "I'll say what you want me to say, dear Lord," and further, "I'll do what you want me to do," but the climax of it all is, "I'll be what you want me to be."

Now, that's what Jesus was: In all things he pleased the father because he went where the Father wanted him to go, he said what he wanted him to say, did what he wanted him to do, and was all that he wanted him to be; so that he could say to one of his disciples that if you have seen me, you have seen the Father. He not only taught that which was godly, but he carefully lived it, so that he became the demonstrator of what the Father wanted him to be.

I notice also the statement made in the scripture we have read, "But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever." And this is in harmony with the scripture that we find recorded in Isaiah, the 9th chapter, beginning with the 6th verse:

For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this.

THE GOSPEL EVERLASTING:

The gospel of Jesus Christ is everlasting. We talk about preaching the everlasting gospel. I wonder if we realize all that this term signifies. It means that his gospel is from the beginning and will continue unto the end. It met the needs of humanity in the days of Noah. It met the needs of humanity in the days of Jesus. It meets the needs of humanity to-day. We do not need to go into the world and seek anywhere for any other system that will save humanity, reform men, and make society that which it ought to be. This gospel meets the needs of individuals. In Matthew, the 11th chapter and 28th verse, he says:

Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light.

This meets the individual needs of the man who wants to find rest, and wants to find the place and the means by which he can labor to the greatest advantage. You may say there is a contradiction of terms,—find rest and yet labor. Well, do you not know that labor always follows rest, or should, and that rest only follows labor? And if Jesus did not believe that we should work, he never would have said, "Take my yoke upon you," because the yoke is a type of labor; but he presents the means, in this yoke, by which this labor may be made easy and this burden light, so that we can perform it as he would have us perform it.

And we believe that the gospel of Jesus Christ meets the needs of the world in a collective sense as well. This is an era when society is becoming very complicated and intensive, and it is very difficult for men to work together in harmony and in peace. The Doctrine and Covenants tells us that the day is coming when peace shall be taken from the world. That does not mean, necessarily, that nation will rise up against nation, though that will probably occur. It does not mean alone that England will be arrayed against Germany, and Germany against France, and Japan against the United States; but it means that peace will be taken from communities also, to the extent as predicted in the Book of Covenants, that the individual who will not take up his sword against his neighbor, not as a foreign foe, but against his neighbor, must needs flee to Zion.

Most of you have read, possibly, of the trial of the McNamara brothers in Los Angeles. You remember the destruction of the Times building, when twenty lives were lost and property destroyed, and know that now these two men have confessed that they dynamited the Times building and other institutions. Now, this is simply an indication of things that are going on that do not come to the surface very often. I do not believe that the prominent labor leaders would indorse the conduct of those men, though they will have to suffer the consequences of it to an extent. But both capital and labor must deal with a violent class of individuals, whose only idea in settling difficulties is an appeal to force, where the strongest man has the best argument. And though such men as Gompe's and Mitchell may be men of high ideals, they have under them men of very low ideals who stoop to violent demonstrations of this kind. And we may look for demonstrations of violence to come from capital and labor alike. We may put these McNamara brothers in prison, but we can not imprison the spirit that made them criminals, and the spirit that made them criminals and murderers will make other men criminals and murderers when they have what they consider provocation. But Jesus comes to us with the gospel plan of redemption. He says, "Ye must be born again," and no man, no matter how high his ideals may be, can build up a society that will be safe and invulnerable when he seeks to build it out of men whose present ideals and principles are low.

YE MUST BE BORN AGAIN.

"Ye must be born again." That was the message of Jesus. He gave the world the plan that would bring about this redemption; and so we believe that this gospel, which includes the golden rule, "Whatever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them," meets the need for organized society to-day. It meets the needs of organized society just as well as it does the needs of individuals.

We are familiar with the fact that nations, like individuals, are born, they grow for a certain period of time, then they begin to decay, and finally they die, and we say that it is natural for nations to do this, just as it is for men. But why do men die? Because of disobedience. Because of the disobedience of one man death came into the world, we are told. When man learns to obey all the laws of his nature and all the laws of God, he will no longer die. And when a nation or a community is born that is willing to keep all the laws of God and all the laws of nature, that nation will live for ever.

And so we are told that under the rule of Jesus there shall be a government that will never end. In the statement already read to you, "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever." The rule, the administration of Jesus Christ, will be never ending.

Now, in conclusion, let us briefly scan the two prominent ideas that have been brought out in our scripture reading.

Jesus is above his fellows first because he loved righteousness, and second because he hated iniquity. He loved that which is right. That principle is affirmative, and in announcing his ideas along that line he said, "Blessed are the pure in heart."

Jesus affirmed righteousness, but he did not stop there. Sometimes we meet people who believe in that which is good. They are naturally good themselves. They want to do right; they believe in that which is right, but they have not the moral courage to antagonize that which is wrong. They do not dare to challenge men and measures that are wrong; but we are told that Jesus did not stop here. He hated iniquity. He not only affirmed that which was right, but he denied that which was wrong.

He said to the Pharisees:

Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men; for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in. Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widow's houses, and for a pretense make a long prayer: therefore ye shall receive the greater punishment. Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made, ye make him two-fold more the child of hell than he was before, like unto yourselves.—Inspired Translation.

And so we find him not only affirming the right, but antagonizing and destroying the works of the Devil. For that reason he was anointed above his fellows.

The second prominent idea is, that his gospel and his rule will be everlasting, and the reason for that is that his government will be established with judgment and with justice. There will be no rotten foundation under his rule. It will not be founded on a wrong done to other individuals, but it will be established, maintained for ages and for ever under the rule of judgment and justice.

Now may God help and bless us that it may be our happy lot to be numbered with this Jesus, to share his exaltation and joy, and to have part in his everlasting government, is our earnest prayer.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Elder John W. Rushton sends us a report of an address delivered by Elder Charles A. Smurthwaite at the annual memorial services of the Order of Elks, in Ogden, Sunday, December 3. Bro. Rushton says: "Our brother was honored in being invited to share the time with the Rev. Walter R. Reese, of the Saint Paul's Episcopal Church, Salt Lake City. The speech, apart from its intrinsic merit, also had some very helpful instruction as to the idealism and essential truth of such benevolent movements."

Elder W. E. LaRue, pastor of the church in Brooklyn, New York, is engaged in a very spirited discussion with Mr. John D. Nutting. The discussion is being carried on through the columns of the Brooklyn Daily Eagle and grew out of a lecture delivered by Rev. Nutting on the subject of Mormonism. Rev. Nutting is in charge of a missionary movement that has been conducted in Utah for some time, with a view of converting the Mormons.

Why will you keep caring for what the world says? . . . You can have little idea of the comfort of freedom from it—it is bliss. Hoist your flag and abide by it!—General Gordon.

THE UNITED ORDER OF ENOCH.

Conversion to the pure principles of the doctrine of Christ and a full acceptance of the Golden Rule as a governing guide to our actions, are essential prerequisites in advancing the work of equality.

Righteousness, peace, brotherly love, unity, equality, and true holiness were the fruits, or graces, in ancient times of a people following out in their lives the just and equitable principles set forth in the unselfish plan of work contained in the United Order of Enoch. The world has never produced a plan or system that even approximately embodied the elements necessary to the conditions of unity and equality among the people. Such a standard of life is attained only by the acceptance of true and unselfish principles for the molding and development of the people in the earth life in moral and spiritual good. In fact, the very first step toward such hoped for condition as equality has never through man's wisdom been provided for, viz: the instilling and building of a character of right living and right doing in one's self, and a true regard for the rights and welfare of others, regardless of the circumstances or conditions under which he may be placed. In other words, the work of righteousness on the part of the individual which will fit him for association with such community must be first, and after this he may become stronger and move forward as he develops the power to resist and control the evil impulses, or temptations toward selfishness, greed, vanity, worldly vices, and unholy gain.

Let no one deceive himself by imagining that he can successfully inaugurate and carry out the work of equality among a people, the aims and desires of a majority of whom are "carnal, sensual, devilish"; or in the language of the apostle:

They profess that they know God; but in works they deny him, being abominable, and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate.—Titus 1: 16.

In the attainment and acquirement of a character of uprightness, goodness, faith, purity, truthfulness, and honesty, it must not only be developed and reflected by the people as a whole, but the individual character must be fitted and strengthened, and each thus purified and proven worthy of a place among "the peculiar people zealous of good works."

To be placed in such surroundings when not so fitted would be like the man who had gotten in to the wedding feast,—“without the wedding garment on.” But he was not commended for having climbed in, neither given the hand of fellowship and bade to remain. He had simply gotten into a place in which he had not fitted himself to dwell, and had to be taken and cast out among those with whom and for whom he had revealed and formed unholy alliance in sin. Was not this right, then, that he be cast out?

Every man must receive “according to his deeds.” “For there is no respect of persons with God.” (Romans 2: 11.) Men and women can only receive and occupy as they are fitted and prepared to do so. To bestow goods, or places of trust, where the parties have not lived so as to develop honest and virtuous lives, would be to waste and tear down a good work, not build up. And this is true, whether applied in the present life or in the future.

The lesson of the Christ in the parable of the wedding feast should be fully heeded by his people if they wish to be received by him when he shall come again. By our acts, good or bad, we are building our characters and placing upon us robes accordingly. To provide ourselves with the “wedding garment” we must perform the works of righteousness, —which is fulfilling the law of Christ in our lives. Without “true holiness no man can meet the Lord.” Our lives are fashioned by the law of life by which we live, and if we refuse to live by “the law of life in Christ Jesus,” then we must follow in the ways the rewards of which are “sin and death.” Hence Jesus taught and urged: “He that heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them I will liken him to a wise man,” etc. In our work, let us not prove ourselves “foolish,” and then expect the riches of Christ.

There is truth and wisdom in the statement: “We are architects of our own fortune.” And the results are felt here, and will be as fully in the hereafter.

The apostle taught the doctrine: “Prove your own selves.” This applies alike to all, rich and poor, old and young, each being held accountable according to his opportunities. Does some one want something which he has not been willing to live for? The thought or desire entertained by a person would exclude him from the association of a people who are upright in heart, who look not upon their own things with a spirit of selfishness, neither the things of others with covetous eyes.

ESSENTIAL CONDITIONS OF EQUALITY

must not be disregarded in adopting ways and means to bring about this just and desirable state, otherwise the labor must be in vain. There must be a building and rounding out of the better elements of life so as to blend in kindly, peaceful, and true brotherly association wherein are developed the attributes of faith, honesty, justice, tolerance, wisdom, forbearance, brotherly love, and holy spiritual ties as we enter upon and advance in the relationship of equality; and unless each is willing to labor, suffer, sacrifice, and in a holy warfare strive to fit himself, he can not dwell and inherit with those who do thus fit and prepare, for they, who will not abide the conditions and fashion themselves according to the law of equality and spiritual adornment in Christ the Lord, have prepared for them lower conditions, hence the divine suggestion of the "terrestrial" and "telestial" abodes upon the other side.

There is nothing more erroneous than the idea that equality may be reached simply by preaching the doctrine of "dividing up all around." The accomplishment of the work of grace is necessary before any division can be had. No one in this world is authorized to lay hold upon another's goods or wealth and divide the same up without the owner's consent. To do so would be in violation of both the law of God and the laws of the land. When Jesus was here one of his company said to him: "Master, speak to my brother that he divide the inheritance with me."

Jesus said unto him: "Man, who made me a judge, or a divider over you?" "And he said unto them, Take heed and beware of covetousness; for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." How different is the position of the greatest teacher known to the world to that of so many in this age who make pretense of following him. Jesus would not think of violating the inalienable rights of man by taking hold of other men's property and dividing it up without their consent. That might be the policy and work of a person who wanted something not his own, or something for nothing, but not of the children of light, who must follow the rule: "In all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." One moves men from the principle of "covetousness," of which Jesus said, "Beware." The other from the holy sentiment of righteousness and justice. There is no question where those whose desires are good will stand.

The essential conditions of equality and grace, having been as we trust fully accepted, and no man or woman looking to this righteous union with sinister motives, let him who will now put away the spirit of selfishness and greed, and adorn the holy principle of life and work laid down in Christ's law, "Every man seeking the interest of his neighbor, and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God," and we shall appreciably approach

The Articles of Association of the United Order of Enoch—
A Benevolent Society in the Interests of the Poor and Needy.

Its work is outlined in general terms as follows:

The United Order of Enoch is a helping and benevolent association, organized for the benefit of the poor and needy, dispensing its charities by furnishing equal opportunities to the needy, upright, and industrious in a financial, educational, and social way, with those who are more fortunate, and the supplying of stewardships and homes or inheritances to the worthy who may lack.

Article 1. Statement.

Articles of Association adopted by the undersigned (in accordance with due enactment and resolutions passed by the General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at its annual meeting held in Lamon, Iowa, April 6 to 21, A. D., 1909, authorizing further organization by the bishopric of said church of those who may desire to so associate themselves for purposes of transaction of business interests for the benefit of the poor and necessitous, and the general work of improvement and settlement of the worthy, who need homes and help.

Article 2. Affirmation.

Pursuant to instruction herein set forth, we [names omitted] being desirous of forming a corporation under the laws of the State of Missouri, and more particularly under the provisions of article 11, chapter 12, Revised Statutes 1899, providing for associations of a benevolent and educational character, do hereby associate ourselves for the purpose of becoming a body corporate for the benefit of the poor and industrious who need, and the transaction of business necessarily connected therewith as herein set forth.

Article 3. Object in outline.

The purpose of this corporation shall be to aid and assist the worthy needy and poor in obtaining employment and homes, help the sick and afflicted and unfortunate in times of need, promote temperance, morality and equality, and provide against the evils of selfishness, covetousness, anarchy, and crime of every description, and thus conserve, to a degree, the good of the community, and the good of the State, by a voluntary cooperation in the use, application, and distribution of the wealth, for the objects named, of those who may be members of the association, and who shall contribute for the purpose, and of the means which is gained by the association in its legitimate work and business, and also the application of that which may be voluntarily contributed or consecrated for these benevolent purposes by those who do not hold membership in the organization.

Article 4. Name and Term.

The name of this organization shall be the United Order of Enoch, and its chief or principal place of business shall be in the city of Independence, Jackson County, and State of Missouri, but supplemental organizations and places of business may be located in other counties and when necessary for the carrying out of its work in other States, organizations or places of business may, according to the provisions of the statutes of such States be established in the same; and the association shall continue for the period of ninety-nine years unless sooner dissolved by the voluntary concurrence of at least three fourths of its members, by a vote at a meeting of which at least sixty days' notice has been given in the usual way of such purpose prior to the meeting at which such vote of dissolution shall be taken.

Article 5. Nature and work.

This association shall have no capital stock divided into shares, it shall not be run for individual pecuniary profit, but for the objects herein set forth; the properties of the same shall not be individual, or held in severalty, but in common. The homes, or inheritances however which are provided for under the founding and management of the order, shall be individual, that is held in severalty, each person or family holding in fee simple unless otherwise arranged at the time of setting the same apart, or when making the final settlement. The object of the association not being communistic as that term is usually understood, but a benevolent, helping order.

Article 6. Special Statement of Work and Powers.

The purposes of the association are:

First, to provide the advantages of permanent employment and thereby permanent homes, for those found worthy, but who are unable to arrange for steady employment and who are without sufficient means to procure homes for themselves.

Second, to furnish educational advantages for the youth of both sexes when parties or parents are unable to do so themselves, either by rendering to the parties such assistance as will give to them equal opportunities in the public schools, or in providing for them advantages of the higher, or special institutions of learning.

To accomplish this work, it will be necessary to acquire by gift, purchase, device or other legal and just methods, real and personal property; also acquire lands suitable for carrying out the benevolent purpose and object set forth in these articles of association, and for suitable homes or inheritances, and when desirable to improve and convey the same; but the properties, accumulations or gains from all or any of such transactions shall be held and used in maintaining and carrying out the benevolent work herein provided for, and in no case to be given or used for the pecuniary profit or benefit of any person or persons, corporation or corporations, but solely for the aiding and maintaining of the proper stewardships of the needy, and of its members in the benevolent, beneficial and helping purposes herein set forth.

Article 7. Membership.

Membership in the order requires as a prerequisite a full compliance with the law of Christ, both as relates to duties known as spiritual, and those referred to under said law as temporal; that is, the precepts and ordinances of the gospel having been fulfilled through acceptance and obedience to the same as set out in the Holy Scriptures, also, the following specific duties set forth in the law of equality, to-wit:

A. To render a just and true account of the condition and business of, his or her stewardship annually, setting forth the amount, or value, with the loss or gain of the same for the period named, together with a faithful estimate of the necessities, and the amount required for repairs of stewardship, or the enlarging or extension of the same when proper, for the succeeding year.

B. Stated or annual settlement as provided under the law by turning into the treasury or storehouse any surplus or talents remaining after a due fulfillment of the law as set forth.

C. In case of a lack or shortage, after a faithful and attested performance of duty in his or her stewardship for a time, or a year, such steward to receive from said treasury or storehouse, such a proper and just supply as the law directs according to "his needs and wants, inasmuch as such wants are just."

D. That in all labor and association each and every one shall seek the interest or good of his neighbor, "Doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God."

E. In case of withdrawal, or transgression and expulsion, such person or persons shall retain that which has been set apart or deeded to him or her or them for a home or inheritance, but shall have no further claim upon the common treasury and shall not be entitled to any withdrawal, benefits or interest in the common fund or storehouse, whatever.

Article 8. Management.

A. The affairs of this corporation shall be under the supervision and management of a Board of Twelve Trustees to be selected by the members of the order from among their number, according to the rules and regulations of these articles and the by-laws of the association, who shall organize by the selection of a president, a secretary, and a treasurer, and perform any and all business necessary for the good of the order, a two thirds majority of said board thus constituted and voting as a unit, being necessary for the transaction of all business of the order at any meeting of the same, but a less number may adjourn from time to time.

The trustees may also appoint an executive committee to act in business matters when the board is not in session.

B. The members of the Board of Trustees shall be elected at the annual meeting of the members of the association to be held the first Monday in April of each year or at any adjourned meeting of the order held subsequent to the said first Monday in April, and shall hold their offices until their successors are chosen and qualified. Vacancies occurring in the board may be filled at any time by the unanimous action of a majority of the members of the board, properly constituted, being present and voting.

C. The Board of Trustees may adopt by-laws, not inconsistent with these articles and the Statutes of the State, as may be deemed necessary for the management of the affairs of the corporation and the carrying out of the work of the order.

D. The president, secretary and treasurer herein, shall perform the duties usual to such offices in similar associations in addition to the specific duties named herein providing such duties are not inconsistent with the rules of the association.

E. The officers of this order shall also make report of the work and condition of the same annually to the General Conference of the said Reorganized Church.

Article 9. Property, Rights and Conveyances.

This corporation shall have a seal, and all conveyances purchasing and conveying any estate, real, personal or mixed, for its use in carrying out the benevolent work herein set forth and shall hold and enjoy in its corporate capacity, all the property, real, personal or mixed which said society may now have or hereafter may acquire.

This corporation shall have a seal, and all conveyances of real estate shall be approved by the Board of Trustees of the order of association, and be signed and sealed by the president of the same. And such association may sue or be sued in its corporate name and all claims made against it shall be made in the corporate name and the individual or private property of the members shall in no case be held liable for the debts of the association.

Article 10. Dissolution and Distribution Thereunder.

It is hereby expressly provided and made a part of the conditions of this order, that in case of the dissolution, or abandonment of the work of the same, that the properties of the order, after satisfying all just debts of the same, shall be turned over to the Presiding Bishop and Trustee of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to be distributed to the poor and needy, according to the rules and regulations of said society for aiding the poor and needy.

Article 11. Trustees.

The names of the persons chosen by these incorporators to act as trustees until their successors shall have been legally chosen are as follows: F. M. Smith, Ellis Short, Joseph Mather, Rodrick May, G. E. Harrington, Elbert A. Smith, W. E. LaRue, I. N. White, A. H. Parsons, E. L. Kelley, George H. Hilliard, and Edwin A. Blakeslee; and the following persons have been chosen as officers by the said Board of Trustees: E. L. Kelley, president; F. M. Smith, secretary; Ellis Short, treasurer. Executive Committee, E. L. Kelley, F. M. Smith, Ellis Short, Joseph Mather, Roderick May.

In testimony whereof we, the above named incorporators, hereto set our hands at Independence, Missouri, this 12th day of January, A. D. 1910.

Duly signed by twenty-four persons.

BY-LAWS OF THE UNITED ORDER OF ENOCH.

Membership.

1st. Any person not a minor may by a majority vote of the Board of Trustees become a member of the United Order of Enoch, by subscribing to its rules and regulations as set out in the Articles of Incorporation of the order, having complied with the conditions therein named. But each candidate for membership must be recommended by at least three members of the order, and the name to be voted upon must be presented to the board at least one regular meeting previous to the meeting at which the vote was taken.

Special Meetings of Members.

2d. At any time it may be deemed necessary for the good of the order, the Board of Trustees may call a special meeting of the members, by giving due notice to each member of the time and place of said meeting, through some newspaper, published in Jackson County, Missouri, for at least two consecutive weeks, the last publication to be at least fifteen (15) days prior to the date of the meeting.

Rules of Meetings.

3d. At all meetings of the association, in the proceedings, the general rules of parliamentary practice shall apply, so far as applicable.

4th. The trustees shall hold regular monthly meetings, but may meet oftener on the call of the chairman or any three members.

Regular meetings shall be the afternoon of the first Tuesday of each month, at 2 o'clock.

Place of Board Meetings.

5th. The regular meetings of the trustees shall be held at the headquarters of the order, unless otherwise ordered by special vote of the trustees.

Certificates Required.

6th. Any person whether charter member or otherwise in order to be admitted to membership as per Article 1 of the by-laws of said association must obtain a certificate in writing showing full compliance with the law as set forth in Article 7 of the Constitution of the association.

Especial attention is called to the purposes of this philanthropic and benevolent institution, which are to help the destitute, the sick and afflicted; help persons to homes and employment who have burdens to carry that keep them back, although they are moral, sober, and industrious in their habits, and

In the matter of application of the United Order of Enoch for a pro forma decree of incorporation. April Term, 1910. 47804

And now on this 18th day of April, 1910, come E. L. Kelley as president, Frederick M. Smith as secretary, and Ellis Short as treasurer of the United Order of Enoch and submit to the Court the articles of agreement of said association, together with a petition praying for a pro forma decree of incorporation thereon, in the manner provided by law, and it appearing to the Court that said petition and articles of agreement have remained on file in the clerk's office of this court for at least three days since the same was first presented to the Court, and the Court having heard the report of Pierre R. Porter, Esq., heretofore appointed by the Court to examine said petition, and having duly examined said article of agreement and the testimony in said cause taken before the said Pierre R. Porter, Esq., and the Court being fully advised in the premises overrules the report of Pierre R. Porter, Amicus Curiae, and doth now conclude, adjudge and determine that such articles of agreement and the purposes of the association as therein expressed come properly within the purview of Article 11, Chapter 12 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri, 1899, and are not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of the United States or the State of Missouri.

Wherefore it is ordered, adjudged and decreed by the Court, that the petitioners and their associates, named in said articles, be, and they are hereby created a body politic and corporate by and under the name of the United Order of Enoch.

to bring about true equality upon lines and such immovable basis that the condition shall remain and prove an everlasting good to every faithful participant.

Persons who wish to be helpers in a cause founded and commanded in divine precept as well as in the laws by man, may well consider the plans and work of the United Order of Enoch, an institution where every dollar must be applied toward the help and uplift of the poor and necessitous.

The fact should not be overlooked either, that in seeking to unite with the order, that the object should not be personal interest or aggrandizement; there is a far higher and better purpose that should govern than that. Is it right to call ourselves Saints if we are unable to dismiss from our hearts the selfish and covetous desires? Everyone will answer, No. Then why can not we have a united, universal effort put forth on the part of the membership everywhere to place the "helping order" in position to perform its work, remembering the doctrine that he that remembers the poor lendeth to the Lord, and trust him and his work in the efforts we make in the work of redemption. Good, efficient help will never be more effective than now, and none are excusable who can and will not help.

Ever confident in the triumph of the Lord's work. Very respectfully submitted,

E. L. KELLEY.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, December 15, 1911.

You will hear this patriotism scorned as an impracticable theory, as the dream of a cloister, as the whim of a fool. But such was the folly of the Spartan Leonidas, staying, with his three hundred, the Persian horde, and teaching Greece the self-reliance that saved her. Such was the folly of the American Nathan Hale, gladly risking the seeming disgrace of his name, and grieving that he had but one life to give for his country. Such are the beacon lights of a pure patriotism that burn for ever in a man's memories, and answer each other through illuminated ages.—George William Curtis.

For I shall sing of the strong, silent-thinking work of nature, and of God interfused in earth and sky and sea controlling in impartial covenant the mighty mass. I shall sing how the whole universe is alive with harmony upon this side and upon that, and is moved by the motions of reason, one spirit indwelling in all its parts, shedding its dews upon the round world, swiftly speeding through all things and fashioning the body of things to breathing life.—Manlius.

Letter Department

CAMERON, MISSOURI, December 15, 1911.

Brother Editor: The following short, but very impressive dream was received October 18, 1911. "I was in a large assembly of the Saints. Bro. A. W. Head delivered the following: 'Hearken all ye my people; bring of your substance unto the storehouse of the Lord, so that the needy and worthy poor may be supplied and the gospel taken to the nations of the earth. Woe, woe unto you that have taken my name upon you, if the aged worthy of my church suffer for the necessary things of life, when there are means in your possessions.'

"While he was speaking the Spirit of the Lord increased in power and I had the assurance that it was the voice of inspiration to us, but I thought some doubted the message. I arose to speak and said, Whether you believe the message to be of the Lord or not, one thing is certain, if we withhold of our means and the aged, worthy poor suffer, woe, woe shall it be unto us!"

While meditating on the dream the thought came that while we may not know of any worthy poor of our number that are in need, there are doubtless some, we should do our duty along financial lines so that there might be sufficient in the storehouse for the bishopric to help them. Especially the aged, worthy poor that can not get out and toil as they once did. One might say, There is the Saints' Home for the aged. True, and it is a Godsend to many; but it must be supported. All can not get into the home, and unless we do our part they can not be cared for as they should, neither can the gospel be taken to the nations.

To those that are so fortunate as to have their own homes, and a way to make a livelihood, some of whom can get anything they need, have means to travel and live in luxury, may always have plenty, but remember to send that which justly belongs to the Lord to his storehouse. You might say that it has taken all you have made this year to make ends meet! But how have you lived? Have you not been extravagant with your money? Can you not see some that have made ends meet whose income was much less than yours, and they have a credit on the bishop's books? May we all try to send something to the storehouse, so the needy will be cared for and the gospel be sent to those in darkness.

Notice what is said of those who do their part for the poor and those who do not: "Blessed is he that considereth the poor, the Lord will preserve him in time of trouble."—Psalm 41: 1. "Whosoever stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry, but shall not be heard."—Proverbs 21: 13. "The righteous considereth the cause of the poor, but the wicked regardeth not to know it."—Proverbs 29: 7. "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord, and that which he hath given will be paid him again."—Proverbs 19: 12. This is a good investment, and the Lord is a good paymaster. "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments, and behold thou wilt remember the poor and consecrate of thy properties (not all of it) for their support, that which thou hast to impart into them, . . . and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me."—Book of Covenants 42: 8. "He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law; even his prayers shall be an abomination."—Proverbs 28: 9. "But whoso hath this world's goods and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth."—1 John 3: 16-18. "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their afflictions, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."—James 1: 27.

October 22 I visited the German Stewartville Branch. Preached seven times. This branch is fortunate in having so many young people that are alive in the work, who are setting an example to some of the aged by paying their tithing, etc. We made our abode at the homes of John Hovenga, Charles Hamann, and David Powell, all young and faithful in the work, which is truly encouraging.

On Sunday, the 29th, I preached at 11 a. m. at Pleasant Grove Branch. Owing to the rain and bad roads we postponed the meetings until some future time. Bro. and Sr. L. L. Babbit are still on deck and their home is always open to the missionaries. They are among the oldest of the Saints in this district. Bro. Stonewall Hines is the president of the branch, a worthy and coming young man. He needs help in caring for the branch; it is to be hoped that some good families of Saints will locate in that neighborhood, which is a good farming country; anyone wishing information write to C. P. Paul or Bro. Hines, Clarksdale, Missouri. Bro. Paul is bishop's agent of the Far West District.

Sunday, November 12, was the annual rally day for the Saints in Bevier, Missouri. By request of F. T. Mussell, president of the branch and district, I was present, preached during the week and over the following Sunday. J. A. Tanner was called from his field of labor (Chicago), to attend the funeral of his father. Bevier has been the home of the family for a number of years, and they are highly respected. Sunday evening, December 19, J. A. Tanner preached a very instructive sermon from the words, "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof is death." The Sisters' Aid Society are making a faithful effort to help pay off the debt of the church property. They meet twice a week in their sewing circle, and also take turn about in soliciting orders for spices, tea, coffee, and soap, etc., and the profits go into their treasury; and to save the expense of a janitor, they take turns about in keeping the house of the Lord in a neat and clean condition. May success attend their willing and faithful labors!

December 3 I met with the Saints at Kingston, county seat of Caldwell County, which is an inland town some eight miles from the nearest railway. I held six meetings; gave several blessings. To those wishing homes, or farms, in the "regions round about," in my judgment Caldwell County, especially near Kingston, has the cheapest improved farms in northwestern Missouri. The soil is rich and good, with few exceptions, and will produce corn, wheat, oats, rye, timothy, clover, and millet, and equal to any country for blue grass; plenty of fruit, timber, and, near Kingston, plenty of good building stone. Price of improved farms, from $50 to $85 per acre. The Saints have a good church building, and northeast five miles the Oakdale Branch have a neat building; seven miles northwest the Far West Branch also have a church. For information write E. M. Bryant or A. J. Seely, Kingston, Missouri. It would be a blessing to the Kingston Branch if several families should move into that vicinity, with some live elder, for those in charge are quite aged; they have stood the heat and burden of the day for many years, and will soon go to their reward.

December 8 we held forth at the Oakdale Branch, also Sunday. This branch, while not very large, is composed of good material, and is a credit to the church and community. Coleman Snider is in charge.

Crops, so far as I have seen, are fair. The long drought and extreme heat were very trying on vegetation. All have far more grain, vegetables, and fruit than they looked for last July. Corn from twenty-five to fifty bushels per acre, selling at fifty-five to sixty cents per bushel. Apples in parts very plentiful; potatoes scarce, $1 per bushel; wheat from twenty to thirty bushels per acre. Coleman Snider will cheerfully give anyone contemplating moving into that part valuable information, if they write him at Hamilton, Missouri, R. F. D.

I wish all the readers of this paper a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Your brother,

WILLIAM LEWIS.

SHABONA, MICHIGAN, December 10, 1911.

Dear Herald: We are living in perilous times, and should ever have our lamps trimmed and burning, for we know not what conflicts we may have to endure. There are many trials for me; I am striving to do my duty. To-day I was shown where I had omitted some things I should have done, and I hope to benefit by the lessons.

This morning, while on the way to church with my wife, I made the remark, as I had been visiting Bro. and Sr. Johnson, that I felt somewhat cast down, as if something would happen to make me sad. There was an appointment out for Bro. Henry Sheffer to preach, and as I shook hands with Bro. Sheffer, I felt that the Spirit of the Master was there. In opening the meeting for him I asked God to give him the spirit of his calling. Bro. Sheffer is a teacher, and as he arose he remarked that he might preach a gospel sermon, but he felt as though the prayer was inspired and he would talk along the line of his calling. Little did I think there was a lesson for me in what he was to say, but as he was teaching not only the Saints, but those who had not obeyed the gospel, it was revealed in power to me where I had neglected my duty; and I pray that I may not forget the lesson learned this day, for my duty was shown to me more plainly than I had ever known before.

I hope I may have strength to do my duty at all times. Let us as Saints strive to so order our lives that we may all meet as an unbroken family in the great beyond, and that our lives may be worthy of imitation.

Yours in gospel bonds,

B. F. PHETTEPLACE.

PURCELL, MISSOURI, December 10, 1911.

Dear Herald: I enjoy reading your pages very much. I have belonged to the Latter Day Saint Church for five years. I love this work very much and long to do something for its advancement. I feel so weak I often think there is nothing I can do. Let us be up and doing, for our time is so short under the present conditions, and our work is so great. Let us put aside every hindering cause and work together as a band of brothers and sisters, for the Spirit of the Lord has often warned us how great our loss if we do not do his will, and how grand our reward if we do.

When I read the prophecies delivered by the faithful Saints I am made to rejoice, and again it makes me feel sad to think so many of the Saints are heedless and soon forget them. Let us lay aside envy, jealousy, strife, and contention.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. LETITIA WARREN.

WILBURTON, OKLAHOMA, December 4, 1911.

Dear Herald: The work is progressing nicely in the Wilburton Branch. Bro. V. L. Lum is our president, and although young in the work, he is doing his part. The Religion is moving along and the young people are being taught the gospel principles.

Wilburton Branch has a membership of about two hundred and forty. This is a coal mining city of over four thousand inhabitants. Some good farming is also being commenced. This is the first year of the cotton gin. Bro. Wooten is manager and has a good business. The Saints have a good reputation, and there is no outside persecution. This place has been made known as a gathering place for the Saints and a stake of Zion. Property is tolerably cheap and at present this is a very good time to buy if any of the Saints are counting on changing location. I would assist in helping buy homes, either in town or country. I know of good farm land as low as five dollars an acre, with an absolute title. I will answer any questions concerning this place that I can, if anyone is interested and will write me.

We are going to have a nice entertainment and Christmas tree.

There has been some excellent work done here by the missionaries, especially during the reunion last summer, and good work was done upon the streets.

Ever praying for the upbuilding of Zion,

C. C. CHRISMAN.

SALEM, MISSOURI, December 19, 1911.

Dear Herald: We are isolated, but still strong in the faith. We take great comfort in reading the many letters in the HERALD and Ensign, as they are the only preachers we have. We have seen only two Saints since coming here, outside of our own family, but we are pleased to note that two other families are coming soon, one Bro. Peat. I understand they were to have come in October, but as yet I have not heard in regard to them. If they see this, will they drop me a card, and I will meet them at the depot. The other family will come in February. We are anxiously waiting for an elder to come and preach, as I believe there are good, honest souls here. We are trying to live a life that would be worthy of imitation.

In what district are we? We are one hundred and twenty-seven miles south and west of Saint Louis. If the one in charge will write me, I will see what can be done in the way of preaching next summer. One can preach on the streets, if nowhere else.

We are in the Ozarks of Missouri, a dry country. It is rough and stony with timber except as cleared for farms. Prairie farmers think this land will not produce. 1911 was a very dry year, but the farmers raised enough to do them and to spare. There are a number of small streams here, and this valley land is mostly free from stone, and very productive. Corn this year went from forty to sixty bushels an acre. Take it all in all, I don't see but what we get along as well here as in any other place. We have a number of families here from Iowa,—one from near Lamoni.

We have a nice little town of two thousand population. It is the county seat of Dent County. There are opportunities for those who want to embark in business. First, there is a good chance for a laundry. There is one all equipped for work, owned by a stock company; they will lease or sell at a sacrifice. Another opening is a bakery and restaurant combined. It can also be bought reasonably. A company are drilling for oil and feel very certain of finding it in paying quantities.

Love and best wishes to all the Saints,

BRO. AND SR. BOWEN.

The reading of a dozen books properly selected would give a man knowledge sufficient of history, of astronomy, of geology, of evolution, of philosophy, of physiology, and a knowledge of human thought.

Extract from Letter.

Miss Blanch A. Crandall, Langley, Washington: "You are certainly a welcome visitor to our home, and I hope that you are a welcome visitor to every one of our brothers' and sisters' homes. I have heard two prophecies since I have been in this work. They were fine. Something I never heard before, and I did enjoy them, as well as the testimony and prayer meetings which were held at Bro. A. L. Premo's and Bro. O. B. Plumb's, at Freeland, Washington. They are good Saints to be associated with. May God bless all his people everywhere."

News From Missions

North Dakota.

I essay the task of writing you of the work in North Dakota, and some of our experiences; not because we wish to make ourselves conspicuous, but to give you the benefit of the information of the progress of the work. Of course you could not expect too much from one with so short an experience, this being my second year in the missionary work, having labored last year in southwestern Kansas. I was appointed by the conference this spring to Saskatchewan, and later transferred to North Dakota.

I reported to Elder J. E. Wildermuth about May 1 at Fargo, he being the submissary in charge. He outlined work for me, and after spending Sunday there with the Saints, preaching for them once, leaving wife to care for some sick ones, I started out a stranger in a strange land; but one never feels a stranger to Latter Day Saints. I visited Enderlin, Berlin, Cannon Ball, Linton, Jamestown, Adrian, and Esmond; at the last place I organized a Sunday school. I preached at these places, sometimes to only a few and at other times to fairly good congregations. Sold books and took subscriptions to the papers.

From Esmond we went to the North Dakota reunion, and since we reported the reunion, so well heard from the pen of our honorable and esteemed Pres. F. M. Smith, and Apostle W. H. Kelley, I will pass it by saying we thoroughly enjoyed it, and as this was our first opportunity to become personally acquainted with these brethren, our confidence in the work was greatly increased, and we were blessed by listening to their counsel and advice, as well as that from others.

At the close of the reunion some of the brethren of Milroy moved the big tent to Dembigh, and Elder J. E. Wildermuth and I, with my wife as cook, commenced meetings and continued over two weeks, which we considered a very successful meeting, good attendance throughout.

We sold some books and took some subscriptions, feel sure that there will be some who for the first time hearing our message will later obey. There are no members of the church here, and it was the first time, so far as we could learn, that the true gospel was ever preached there. A number came with food, and one gave us money, so the expense was scarcely anything.

From there we moved the tent to Granville, but the prejudice was great; only a few came, though wife and I called at the houses and invited the people out. I also called on the two ministers of the town. The Methodist minister, after I told who I was, would not talk to me. The Congregationalist minister treated us very courteously, though he professed to be acquainted with our position, and said he could not see how we could profess to believe the Book of Mormon and not believe polygamy. After I quoted the second chapter of Jacob on that question, he changed the subject. After a week's effort here without apparent result, we put the tent away, as Bro. Wildermuth had to leave.

Wife and I went to Minot, where lives our pioneer missionary of North Dakota, William Sparling. After a visit of two days, leaving wife there, I went to Logan, where the reunion of North Dakota will be held next year. Spoke in a schoolhouse for two weeks with fair interest, and left a regular appointment for each Sunday, which Bro. William Murry, priest, who lives at Minot, has promised to take care of. A number here are about persuaded to obey. I bespeak a good time for those who are permitted to attend the reunion here next year, as also good to come to the Lord's work as a result.

My next stop was at Anamoose. Here lives Bro. J. C. McClelland, with his wife and three boys, who are as lights shining in a dark place. The Evangelical people were occupying the schoolhouse in a revival; and our appearance in the neighborhood stirred things up, they supposing that I had come to oppose them. I preached a few times in the home of Bro. A. M. Rife, and I baptized his good wife and blessed their three children. I made a new opening at Martin, six miles from Bro. McClelland's, and left with a promise to return to answer the attack of the Evangelical minister upon the cause. This was the first of September.

I proceeded south, stopping at Manfred, where lives the daughter of J. M. Smith, of the Seventy, but as the threshing had begun it was too busy a time to hold any meetings, so went on to Berlin. Here Sr. Young's husband owns a nice hall, which is free to the elders at any time. We held forth a week, but few came out. I went to Adrian, where we had some interest when we were there in June. We spoke once, visited, took subscriptions, and went to Sykeston, but everyone being busy, we spoke twice on Sunday to small audiences, then went back to Anamoose.

Here we commenced in the schoolhouse where the Evangelical minister had denounced us as a liar, and our teachings as from beneath. We went to their Sunday school October 8, and thought as their minister was away we would speak after Sunday school, but upon our entering, they all arose and went out, though I pleaded with them that I had not come to disturb them, and would withdraw if my presence was offensive to them. The answer I got was, "There is the schoolhouse. Go on and hold your meetings; we won't bother you." I spoke twenty-two times in the three weeks, and though most of the Evangelical members kept their word and did not come near, we had the best attendance of any series we ever held. Some nights there was scarcely standing room to be had. I lectured one night on the Book of Mormon, and at the close offered them for sale, selling twelve copies. Altogether I sold over twelve dollars' worth of books. Seed was sown and will surely bear fruit in time. Some expressed faith and expect to obey soon.

I went from there to Fort Rice, where Bro. A. Whiting baptized four this summer, and stirred things up, the people having found a Methodist preacher that would meet us in debate; so we have arrangements almost complete for the conflict.

We secured a Presbyterian church from the directors, but when we assembled for the meeting, were informed that the minister had objected, so we repaired to a private house and preached to a houseful. In a day or two I called to see the reverend gentleman, to learn his reason for objecting to our using the church. His answer was: "Because you are not in harmony with Jesus, and do not teach the Bible." Of course I denied the charge and preached him a little sermon, telling what it was to be in harmony with Jesus. When I got through, "Well, Mr. Page, if you are more nearly right than I am, I should be glad to find it out." I left him a tract. I visited the Saints and friends, tried to instruct them in their duty, and came on to this place, where we are going to try to inform the neighbors of Bro. Frank Stowell of our faith. He has recently come here, so this is a new place.

In summing up, with three missionaries, a fourth part of the time, between forty and fifty have been added to the church in this field this summer; many have heard the message as a witness; I have sold about fifty dollars' worth of our publications; Saints have been stirred to greater activity, and we feel that we have been blessed, and that the efforts put forth and experience should increase our usefulness to God and the church. We are glad we are in the work and are counted worthy to suffer for the cause of Christ, for we feel we have had our trials.

We close with best wishes to all the Israel of God, acknowledging the kindness and assistance rendered by the Saints and friends among whom we have been.

JAMES C. PAGE.

FLASHER, NORTH DAKOTA.

McPherson, Kansas.

I have been preaching south of Leoti, in Wichita County, Kansas. A few came to hear the gospel. J. Hoffman lives there. He baptized Lizze Napp Sunday, December 3. I baptized two of his children, Charles and Ruth, ages 13 and 15, when I was there last September. Sr. M. E. Turner and her son, W. H. Turner, live about sixteen miles south of Leoti, They would be glad to have any of the Saints passing through stop off to see them.

I preached at Alexander; a good many came out; John Teeters lives there; he is bishop's agent for the Northwestern Kansas District, and is getting along well in his gospel work. I preached on the 9th and 10th of December, at McCracken, in H. Kuffer's house. About thirty-five people out to hear the word. I have been preaching at McPherson in T. C. Turpen's house. I baptized his little girl Gracie, age nine years. They have nine children; they have Sunday school every Sunday (home class), four in the senior, and six in the primary class; the two classes are taught by Bro. and Sr. Turpen; it is just fine. They sent Sr. F. S. McNichols $8 as Christmas Offering. I have known them for thirty years or more. Bro. Turpen ought to be ordained a priest, and if faithful to that office, he will soon be ordained an elder. I hope the elders will stop and see them. I have been blessed while here with them. May the Lord bless them for their kindness to me, and the work they are doing for the Lord. If all the isolated Saints would have a home class, what a great help it would be to them and the church.

Crops were very poor in the northwestern part of Kansas this year. I think that the Northwestern District is in far better condition this year than it was last year. I will say to those in the northwestern district, let me know your wants and desires. I will gladly answer all calls in the way of preaching, etc. May the Lord bless his work, and help us all to keep his commandments. The elders will know the "Saints of God," for he said, "They will feed you and clothe you, and give you money to help his work on earth."

Address me at Holden, Missouri.

In bonds,

Saskatchewan.

The good work is still going forward in the northwestern part of Canada. We can not report many baptisms so far this conference year, but the good seed has been sown in places where the gospel has not been heard before.

New opening has been made, and the future looks bright and promising for an ingathering of the honest in heart. Had glad news from Germany recently; eight have been baptized there last summer. The local brethren have done well there.

By permission and advice of those who are in charge of the work here, I return to Iowa, Gallands Grove District, for the balance of the conference year. My address will be 20 South Eleventh Street, Kansas City, Kansas.

In gospel bonds,

Conference Minutes.

SPOKANE.—December 9 and 10, 1911, Spokane district conference convened in Saints' chapel, Elders Oscar Case and T. C. Kelley presiding, W. W. Fordham secretary, Oliver Turnbull assistant. Branches reporting: Columbia River 31, Sagle 50, Spokane 277; no report from Roslyn. Bishop's agent's report, on hand June 17, $187.54; receipts, $801.94; total, $989.48; paid out, $675.05; balance on hand, $314.43. Auditing committee reported account correct, and it was adopted. The following resolutions were adopted to govern the district. 1. That the officers of the district shall consist of president, vice president, secretary, and treasurer, to be elected annually. 2. The conferences of the district will convene as follows—on the second Saturday in June and December of each year. 3. All elders and priests laboring in the district are to report their labors in writing to the district conference, forwarding the same to the secretary prior to the convening of conferences. 4. That all branch presidents in the district shall send a report of the spiritual condition of their branches, indorsed by vote of the branch, to the conference, signed by president and secretary. 5. That all ordinations to elders within the district shall be approved by vote of the conference, except, as provided for in Doctrine and Covenants 17:16. 6. Each branch in the district shall send a statistical report made out on the official form provided, to the district secretary, not later than one week prior to conference, duly approved by branch and signed by president and secretary. 7. The secretary of the district shall send a notice to each branch president to be exhibited, or posted in the church, stating time and place of conference, such notice to be issued one month previous to the holding of said conference. The following delegates were chosen to General Conference, T. C. Kelley, Oliver Turnbull, Laura C. Duncan, O. L. Ferguson, J. E. Turnbow, N. Coleman, Mrs. N. Coleman, W. W. Fordham, L. W. Silver, George Johnson, Dora Smith, R. F. Butterworth, Mary Ferguson, Oscar Case, Clara Clark, Phoebe Turnbull. T. C. Kelley was elected vice president of district, W. W. Fordham, treasurer. A resolution to purchase a district tent prevailed, and M. D. Agens, V. L. Gunter, and R. McDole were named as committee by chair to solicit funds for tent. The district treasurer, W. W. Fordham, was requested to collect from branches and scattered members funds for district expenses. A recommendation from the Spokane Branch to ordain Samuel Wood to the office of elder was referred to the district president and missionary in charge. The preaching was by T. C. Kelley and Oscar Case. Adjourned to meet at Sagle, Idaho, the second Saturday in June. W. W. Fordham, secretary.

Conference Notice.

Conference of the Southeastern Illinois District will convene at Springerton, Illinois, on Saturday, at 10 o'clock a. m., January 6, 1912. The Sunday school association and Religion will meet on Friday evening, the 5th. Branch clerks please send reports to me at Xenia, in time, or bring them to the conference. Do not forget the assessment. A. H. Burroughs, secretary.

The Massachusetts district conference will convene at Providence, Rhode Island, February 3 and 4, 1912, at 3 p. m. Election of officers and delegates to General Conference is the special business. The bishop is expected to have a diagram of the new reunion grounds for the Saints to rent or lease lots from. Local historians and clerks will please send in their reports at an early date. All branches should be reported and delegate lists should be forwarded in time to make sure of your representation. All elders not conference appointees are required to report their labors. Address all communications to W. A. Sinclair, 166 Pearl Street, Winter Hill, Massachusetts.

Conference of the Northern Wisconsin District will convene with the Evergreen Branch, February 10, 11, 1912. Be sure to send your branch reports in time; also officers' reports. Send to the district president, A. L. Whiteaker, Valley Junction, Wisconsin, Box 34.

The Southwestern Oregon district conference will convene with the Myrtle Point Branch, Saturday, February 24, 1912, at 10 a. m. All come who can. Reports desired from each branch and district. Mrs. Charles McCracken, secretary, Myrtle Point, Oregon, box 42.

Convention Notices.

The Nodaway district Sunday school convention will be held at the union church near Bedison, Missouri, January 6, 7, 1912, to commence Saturday at 2 p. m. Alma Nelson, secretary.

Religio convention of the Northeastern Illinois District will convene at Sixty-sixth and Honore Streets, Chicago, Illinois, Friday, January 9, 1912, at 10.30 a. m. The election of officers will be one of the main features of the evening, so we would request the delegates and officers to make an effort to attend. Blanche Fairbanks, secretary, 1528 South Turner Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

The Idaho District Sunday school convention will convene at Weiser, Idaho, January 5, 1912. It is hoped that each school will be represented. M. J. Gilmore, secretary, Bliss, Idaho.

The Bishopric.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District: As it is drawing near to the close of the year, and as we have been financially blessed so that we have been able to cancel many of our obligations with our fellow men, ought we not to consider the oldest debt that stands against us; when we use all that the Lord has blessed us with for our selfish purposes, will we not be like those spoken of in Malachi 3: 8, 9? I sometimes wonder if it is not true that some of us could apply the parable in Luke 12: 15-21 to ourselves with profit.

In looking over the bishop's agent's book I can think of many names which should appear thereon, but which do not, and, as I will not to able, on account of poor health, to get over the district, I trust that each one will feel the need of sending in their tithes and offerings as the Lord has blessed us. Do not wait to get a larger amount, for so many times, before we reach that point, that which we have is used up.

I feel to thank the Saints in the district for their help in the past, and trust we may all put forward an extra effort the coming year.

May God's richest blessings be yours to enjoy is the wish of your brother, SAMUEL STROH, Bishop's Agent.

Manners affect for good or ill the daily happiness of every human being and the fortune and destiny of every tribe or nation. Their influence on human existence is profound and incessant. Good manners are founded on reason or common sense and good will. They put people at ease in social intercourse, welcome graciously the stranger and the friend, dismiss pleasantly the lingering visitor who does not know how to withdraw, express alert sympathy with others, and prompt to helpful cooperation with others. They enable people to dwell together in peace and concord; whereas bad manners cause friction, strife, and discord.—Dr. Eliot.

Happiness grows at our own firesides, and is not to be picked up in strangers' galleries.—Douglas Harrold.

Church Recorder's Notice.

TO THE MINISTRY.

Have you baptized anyone during the past year who was not recorded on a branch record? Look it up, and if so kindly report the names and all items of birth, baptism, and confirmation to me at once.

Have you blessed any children during the year? If so, look over your certificate book and see if you have sent in the duplicates, as per instructions. If not, send them in at once, so that my report may be full, and I may not be delayed in making it out by your failure.

TO DISTRICT CLERKS.

Are there any reports in your hands which should be sent to the general office? The following is a list of the districts from which one or more lots of reports are due. Look the list over and see if yours is there, and if so, send in your reports just as soon as you are through with them:

Alabama, Mobile, Northern California, Colorado, Idaho, Kewanee, Nauvoo, Northeastern Illinois, Southeastern Illinois, Southern Indiana, Eastern Iowa, Little Sioux, Northeastern Kansas, Spring River, Kentucky and Tennessee, Eastern Maine, Central Michigan, Eastern Michigan, Northern Michigan, Western Michigan, Clinton, Independence Stake, Nodaway, Saint Louis, Montana, Central Nebraska, Northern Nebraska, Southern Nebraska, Kirtland, Ohio, Central Texas, Southwestern Texas, Utah, Spokane, Manchester, Chatham, Toronto, Winnipeg, Western Wales.

Some of these districts are changing records, which is causing delay; some others are waiting for new records, which have been ordered, but I fear that some have just neglected to attend to their record work.

We expect you to hold the reports until you have them recorded, and take time to make such corrections as you can; then send them to us without further delay.

TO BRANCH CLERKS.

Did you answer that letter from your district clerk? If not, please look the matter up and make reply at once, so it can be entered on the district record and reported to us. This is the only way we have of correcting the general records.

You are expected to send reports to every conference of your district, and please don't make it on plain paper. For ten cents the Herald Publishing House will send you report blanks enough to last you a year, and by using them you will be sure to report the matter we need, and there will be much less chance for errors.

If you are not in an organized district, send your report direct to me at least once a year, so that you may be properly accounted for in the numerical standing of the church.

The indications are for a good year, so far as statistics are concerned, and we wish to have our report as complete as possible.

Your fellow servant,

C. I. CARPENTER, Church Recorder.

LAMONI, IOWA, December 20, 1911.

Important Notice.

Parties sending matter of any kind for use in the HERALD should address the same to the HERALD Editors. Associate Editor Elbert A. Smith has removed with his family to California because of his wife's health, and letters addressed to him will be forwarded. His temporary address is 936 Eleventh Street, San Bernardino, California, care George Wixom. We assume no responsibility for delay in the appearance of notices or other matter when addressed to any but the HERALD Editors or Herald Publishing House. Such should not be sent to personal addresses.

Died.

HARPER.—Bernice Willard Harper, daughter of Elder James and Mittie Harper, was born April 27, 1900; baptized by Elder T. C. Kelley, at McKenzie, Alabama, August, 1909; died October 20, 1911, of typhoid fever. Words of comfort were spoken in the Saints' church by Elder G. O. Sellers, in the presence of a large number of Saints and friends.

She was a good, obedient child. She was laid to rest in the Pleasant Hill Cemetery the day of her death, to await the resurrection of the just. We mourn, but not as those without hope.

JAQUES.—William Jaques was born December 12, 1844, at Warwickshire, England, and died on his sixty-seventh birthday, December 12, 1911. He came to this country in the year 1869, coming direct to Belleville, Illinois, at which place he has resided ever since. He united with the church during the year 1870, and has worked faithfully in church and Sunday school work. Funeral services from the family home, and were in charge of Russell Archibald, of Saint Louis.

CLEMENS.—Nellie McCumber was born in Tiskilwa, Illinois, March 22, 1882; and was married to Isaac Clemens in 1900. To this union four children were born. Two survive, Laura and Edna, ten and four years of age respectively, who with the father mourn the untimely death of their loved one. She also leaves father, mother, one brother and two sisters, and many friends. She obeyed the gospel in March, 1907, and has been a faithful Saint. She was mild and lovely and childlike, having faith in the ordinances, and was blessed by faith. Funeral from the house, five miles west of Maquoketa, and laid to rest in the Buckhorn Cemetery, there to await the resurrection of the just. Sermon by John Heide.

A Wonderful News Service.

Have you ever paused to think what a marvelous organization must be necessary to lay before you each day an accurate account of the happenings of yesterday in Europe, Asia, Africa, South America, Australia, the islands of the sea and the whole expanse of our own continent, all in a single newspaper? The intricate network of cables and telegraph lines, the complicated chain of news-gathering agencies stretching across continents and oceans, the innumerable reporters working daily for you under tropic suns and over arctic snows—have you ever felt the romantic thrill of it all in reading a great modern newspaper such as The Chicago Record-Herald? We mention this paper especially because of the completeness of its domestic and foreign news service. It has a correspondent in every town or city of importance in the United States, a veritable army of them in all. In addition it has the benefit of the foreign news service of the New York Herald, famous for its world-wide cable system and for the reliability of its foreign news; also that of the New York World and the New York Journal of Commerce, besides that of the great corporative news-gathering organization, the Associated Press. With such a vast and complete news service it is not strange that The Record-Herald so easily holds its own as one of the greatest newspapers in the world.

The "Century" for 1912.

Probably never before has the question of the character and life of the undergraduate in American colleges been more in the public mind. The Century has arranged with Clayton Sedgwick Cooper, author of "College Men and the Bible," for a series of papers discussing this subject authoritatively and broadly. Mr. Cooper has been traveling for ten years among the colleges of the United States and Canada, and has visited the chief educational institutions in all parts of Europe and Asia.

While Mr. Cooper has consulted largely with prominent educators and public men throughout the country, his facts and opinions are based almost entirely upon actual contact with students in lecture-rooms, fraternity houses, the athletic field and campus, in large public gatherings, and in thousands of personal interviews. It is perhaps through the latter channel, the intimate personal contact with the individual undergraduate, says Mr. Sedgwick, that one comes nearer to the real gist and trend of the college man's deeper sentiment.

The oft-mentioned difference between good manners and good breeding, namely, that the latter involves a long education and the acquisition of much knowledge and skill, whereas the former do not, is quite as important in democratic society as in aristocratic. Peasants, barbarians, and illiterate persons often exhibit some of the best elements of good manners, but their experience of life has not given them access to good breeding.—Dr. Eliot.

Who keeps one end in view makes all things sure.—Browning.

Selfishness, ignorance, stupidity and habitual inattention to the desires and claims of others are the chief causes of bad manners; and since these qualities are rather common among mankind and some admixture of them often exists in meritorious characters, bad manners are not uncommon.—Dr. Eliot.

PASTORAL.

It is not that I feel less weak, but Thou
 Wilt be my strength; it is not that I see Less sin; but more of pardoning love with Thee.
 And all-sufficient grace. Enough! And now
 All fluttering thought is stilled; I only rest,
 And feel that Thou are near, and know that I am blest.
 —F. R. Havergal.

Stand close to all, but lean on none,
 And if the crowd desert you,
 Stand just as fearlessly alone
 As if a throng begirt you.
 —W. S. Shurtleff.

A man must understand astronomy, which explains our place in the universe; geology, which explains the make-up of this globe; evolution, which describes the development of the animals and the plants; philosophy which is the history of man's thought, and history in its broad details. To understand these things is to have an education.—Selected.

Mine honor is my life; both grow in one;
 Take honor from me and my life is done.
 —King Richard III.

Stock Raisers Attention!

It will pay you to investigate the conditions pertaining to stock raising in the Big Horn Basin of Wyoming. There are 6,000,000 acres of pasture lands in this section. The natural adaptation of the climate and the products of the soil tend to the best development of animal life. The high altitude produces a strong-lunged, hardy, more vigorous breed of stock, more free from disease than in the lower altitudes. Plenty of alfalfa makes this an ideal hog country. There is no fear of cholera and the market for years will be at home. Plenty of grass, good water and mild winters also make dairying very profitable. There is no better opportunity anywhere for the stock raiser, and there is still some good, suitable land available at low figures.
